No. 38.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. {By Post. 7d.

THE County Court Practitioners being now assembled at Quarter Sessions throughout Ireland, we desire to call their attention to the Report of the Committee published in June last, with a view to the amendment of the Civil Bill Acts; and as the adjourned meeting is to be held in November next, it would be desirable to ascertain the opinion of the Profession on the many important amendments proposed. The Committee did not think it practicable, at present, to effect so great a change as the complete assimilation of our County Court practice to that of England, and therefore (wisely, we think) were content to recommend such amendment as seemed to them of pressing necessity. In a former article we discussed some of the most important changes proposed, and wish now to call attention to some of the others.

The Report suggests that ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Bill Courts should be enlarged, so as to include, in the first place, actions for slander. In this recommendation we concur, inasmuch as, if it would effect no other good, it would (coupled with their proposal as to the costs of such actions in the superior courts), prove a serious check to the many paltry cases of this nature which at present, in every after sittings, appear in the Nisi Prius list, and reflect no small discredit on professional gentlemen engaged for the plaintiff. Next, that the jurisdiction should include actions for breach of promise of marriage. This, also, we think desirable; for, so long as a pecuniary compensation is considered a recompense for wounded feelings, there is no reason why the means of obtaining it should not be placed within the reach of a suitor of humble, as well as of more exalted rank. But the most practical and important enlargement of this jurisdiction is that relating to partnership accounts; and with respect to this we do not concur in the recommendation of the Committee, which is, that the Chairmain should have jurisdiction in cases where the sum claimed does not exceed £40. The limit of the jurisdiction should, in such cases, be regulated, not by the amount claimed by the plaintiff, but by the amount of assets involved in the partnership. This is so in England, and the proposal of the Committee, while it would meet with the most strenuous opposition, would also fail to effect the very object which renders the proposed change desirable. It is quite possible that although thousands of pounds have been engaged in a partnership concern, and the transactions have been of such a varied and extensive nature as to render it extremely inconvenient to throw the investigation of them upon the necessarily imperfect machinery of the County Court; yet that the balance claimed by either parties might not exceed £40. While, on the other hand, in the very cases in which the want of jurisdiction is felt, viz., when the partnership assets do not exceed one or two hundred pounds, the balance claimed on either side might be more than the proposed limit of the jurisdiction. For these reasons we adhere to the views put forward by us in an early number, in which we laid before the Profession the draft of a Bill to confer jurisdiction in such cases.

The subject next in importance with which the Report deals is that of the execution of Civil Bill Decrees. With respect to this there is much diversity of opinion; the Report proposes simply a return to the old system, enabling the plaintiff to nominate his own bailiffs at his own peril. This proposal appears to have been made simply because it was generally felt that there could scarcely be a more unsatisfactory system than that at present in force. If, however, a return is to be made to the old method, it should be limited, we think, to decrees for small amounts, and much of the evil of that system would be obviated by an arrangement which does not appear (although beset by some difficulties) by any means impracticable—that is, to appoint, at a small salary, bailiffs for each barony, who should be under the control of the chairman, and from among whom alone the plaintiff might select his special bailiff.

The Report contains many other valuable suggestions, and the Profession will merit the thanks of the public if they succeed next session in procuring a wise measure of legislative reform in the County Courts, the business of which is every day increasing in importance.

The Right Honorable the Lord Chancellor has returned to town from Fort Augustus, Scotland.

Professor Webb, F.T.C.D., LL.D., Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed Professor of Civil Law in the University of Dublin, in place of the late Dr. Anster, LL.D.

James A. Kift, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed Reader to the High Court of Admiralty.

The Registrarship to Mr. Baron Hughes is vacant through the death of Edward Trevor Hughes, Esq., Solicitor.

The announcement of the death of Michael Murphy, Esq., lately one of the Official Assignees of the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency, will be received with regret by very many amongst our readers, both of the legal and commercial public. He died at his residence in Donnybrook, yesterday morning, in the 56th year of his age. Some months since we noticed his retirement, by reason of ill-health, which has just proved fatal. Seldom has an official won more general regard, or will be more kindly remembered than the deceased. The interment is to take place at nine o'clock on Monday morning.

JURISPRUDENCE.

The following paper, "On the Rule of Evidence, excluding the Testimony of the Accused," was read by J. LOWRY WHITTLE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law :—

Certainty is essential to give effect to any criminal code in the repression of crime. If it once comes to this that the criminal can calculate his chances of escape as bearing a large ratio to his chances of conviction, the repressive effect of the code is diminished in a much larger ratio. This uncertainty in criminal trials has become so great in England as to call forth frequent complaints. The explanation of all this is, I believe, to be found rather in the incomplete nature of reforms in criminal law, then in the superior craft of modern criminals. Though our law was careful to throw every safeguard round personal liberty and jealously provided against political abuse of legal authority, it was mercilessly severe in its dealing with the convicted criminals. This, of course, was not peculiar to our English criminal law. Like all other codes of a more primitive character, as it was inartificial in its procedure, it was savage in its punishment. Now our people are characteristically diffident of change, and this barbarous system was preserved longer among us than among other equally civilized communities, and, consequently, there grew up a system of artificial obstruction to the administration of our criminal code, which system had gone on for nearly a hundred years when Romilly entered upon his labours of law reform in 1810. From that time down to the passing of the consolidation acts of the 24th and 25th Victoria, we have had a series of reforms in our criminal law which have swept away all the barbarous punishments of old times. Some efforts have also been made to simplify the system of pleading in criminal cases, and no doubt these simplifications have swept away many of the contrivances for the escape of prisoners, but the general system was too deep-rooted to be got rid of at once, and though our criminal code is now one of the mildest in existence, it has undergone no remodelling with a view to remove all these artificial checks on the administration of justice. We, every day, feel how defective our procedure is in punishing crime. I shall devote this paper to noticing what I consider one of our great difficulties in detecting guilt, and bringing home guilt to the criminal, and a difficulty, I believe, clearly traceable to that tendency to which I have already referred, the disposition to nullify in practice a code which was revolting from its savagery. Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere is a common law maxim, which we have the authority of Taylor for saying, has grown to its present importance within the last century. It is quite true that it was only at the close of the previous century that our judicial system attained its present independence and character, but that also is the period at which the judges began to temper the severity of our penal code by legal subtlety. Accordingly anything like an examination of the prisoner as a witness on the trial has been precluded by our law.

In the examinations before the magistrate, preliminary to a committal for trial, it is the duty of the magistrate to ask the prisoner if he wishes to make any statement, and to take down his answer; this examination of the accused may be given in evidence on the trial of the prisoner if all the formalities, prescribed by our law, have been complied with, but these are numerous and often trivial. The examination must not be taken on oath, and even the carelessness of the clerk using a form of deposition, beginning with the words on oath has excluded the prisoner's examination. The law, moreover, since the judges declared against torture in 1628, has been most careful to guard against any improper influence operating on the prisoner's mind to induce him to answer to this examination. He must be warned that it will be used against him; he must not be tampered with, by any person in authority, to induce him to confess. Everything is directed to provide that the prisoner's statements be made deliberately and with the full consciousness of their effect. Yet, what in the case of other witnesses is considered the very best means of engaging the witness's serious attention to what he is about, of reminding him that he is speaking in a court of justice, and not engaged in a casual conversation, is not only omitted but forbidden. If an oath is administered the prisoner's examination cannot be read. The illogical position assumed by the law amounts to this: it first excludes the prisoner from giving evidence because he is not a reliable witness on the ground of interest. The injustice of utterly closing the prisoner's mouth, and of sending a man to the gallows, without allowing him to make any statement if he so desired, being most manifest, the law allows him to be called on for his own account of the transaction. But as this account cannot be given in the way any other witness would speak in a court of justice, a new danger arises. The statement may be loose and unconnected, and so capable of misrepresentation. It may be more of a conversation than an examination. The law endeavours to protect the prisoner from being misled into criminating himself; in fact endeavours by every kind of technicality to prevent the prisoner's natural right to speak for himself from falling into the abuse to which the exclusion of the prisoner from the witness box exposed him, and the result is, in the words of an eminent jurist, "the shutting up of one of our most valuable sources of justice and truth."

In this we differ not only from France but from Scotland. In Scotland the prisoner is subjected, in private, to a regular cross-examination, and the result may or may not be produced at the trial, according to the pleasure of the prosecuting counsel. At the trial our system prevails, and the prisoner's mouth is closed. In France the interrogation of the accused is one of the most important preliminary steps previous to the actual trial. There, as in Scotland, it is taken in private, and the statement of the examination is one of the documents before the Court, a part of the Record, as it were. But further, at the trial the accused is examined, or rather cross-examined, by the judge as to any fact that arises in the evidence. He is, so to speak, under examination the whole time, that examination being interrupted occasionally for the testimony of other witnesses. I rather refer to the French and Scotch systems, as showing how unreasonable the jurists of those countries regarded it to shut up the mouths of the accused, than as affording illustrations of systems perfect in this respect. In many respects I consider the Scotch system worse than our own, and the French is very defective in detail. I would venture to urge that the whole difficulty may be settled by eradicating from our criminal law, as it has been already eradicated from our civil law, the principle of excluding evidence on account of interest. Let the prisoner be made a witness like any other witness, and at once we sweep away all the technicalities about personal examinations and confessions. The only point in which I think the prisoner put into the witness box should be treated as different from an ordinary witness is, that there ought to be no cross-examination as to general credit. Under the head of cross-examination as to general credit it is not uncommon to drag in all sorts of charges against a witness which may or may not be true, but which cannot be examined into by the Court. Such a system would expose a prisoner to be questioned as to a previous conviction, a matter which the law very properly withdraws from the jury altogether till the first charge is disposed of. Such an exception is clearly necessary, but it is, moreover, perfectly harmless, for the mere fact that the prisoner is charged with a criminal offence is as strong an impeachment of his credit as could well be urged. With this exception an ordinary cross-examination of the prisoner might be allowed.

The reasons urged against this charge are of the most opposite and heterogeneous description. It is said the timidity of innocence will excite suspicion, the craft of the hardened criminal will gain credence for his plausible tale. All this is true to a certain extent; but, on the other hand, will not the very artlessness of innocence bring conviction to a jury where the adroitness of counsel would have been quite unavailing. Mr. Greaves, writing lately on a different subject, tells an anecdote of a man whom he defended on the charge of murdering a poacher. The case against him was a very strong one. He had been at an inn with his gun a short time before the body was discovered, and had left saying he was going to his own land in search of poachers. The murdered man was found on his land, close under a hay-rick, with his head smashed in, and his dog beside him, and around were the fragments of the prisoner's gun. The prisoner's story briefed to counsel was that when crossing a stile in the dark on to his own land he was set on by the dog; that he tried to fire his gun at the dog, but it burst in his hand. He then took up the stock to defend himself with, and beat the dog furiously in the dark, and it retreated under the hay-rick under which the dead man was found, the prisoner still striking at it. His counsel thought this a hopeless tale, but his trial took place before the act allowing prisoner's counsel to address the jury, and so the prisoner was directed to tell his own story. He did this in so artless a manner, says Mr. Greaves, that the jury were convinced of its truth, and acquitted him. Mr. Greaves seems to concur completely in the verdict of the jury. One may venture to think that had the prisoner not been obliged to state his own case to the jury, and had he not had the opportunity of giving his own evidence, had he made this case merely by the mouth of counsel, that he would hardly have found evidence. As far as the innocent are concerned the opportunity of stating the facts to the jury would be a great boon. In further illustration of this we may recollect the case of Eugenie Plummer, where a gentleman was tried and convicted on her evidence. He afterwards prosecuted her for perjury, was examined himself, and she was convicted.

The plan suggested has another great advantage. It gets rid of the besetting sin of the French system, the examination by the judge. The mischief resulting from the cross-examination of the prisoner by the judge has been often pointed out. Its effect upon the prisoner is not, however, its worst feature. It presents the prisoner to the public as a man contending before a tribunal already convinced of his guilt. Moreover, it deprives the examination of that check which is essential to conducting such examination with decorum. The judge cannot at once perform, with efficiency, the function of examiner and moderator of the examination. It has been generally assumed that the mischief to the general administration of justice, incident to allowing the judge to worry the prisoner, was so great that the present system ought to be maintained, but all this argument contains the fallacy that this judicial examination was the only practical method of allowing the prisoner to be examined. Again, it is said every man is assumed to be innocent till he is proved guilty, and the prosecutor should not be allowed, by a fishing examination, to make out his case, or some other case against the prisoner. This objection might, I think, safely be recognized so far that the prosecutor should never be at liberty to call the prisoner till the Grand Jury have found a bill against him. If a prima facie case sufficient to support a bill has been made, then the prisoner might be called on to answer on oath. This could only happen before a jury and a competent tribunal, and then there would be every guarantee that the examination was conducted fairly towards the prisoner. The secret examination of the prisoner is one of the great defects in the Scotch and French systems. The fact that the questions are put to elicit conviction by the examining magistrate or the prosecutor is another. In an open Court, with the examination conducted by the prisoner's solicitor or counsel, none of these objections could apply. No examination of the prisoner should be permitted unless in the presence of his attorney or counsel, nor until after the attorney or counsel had put such questions as he thought fit, subject to the approval of the Court. This would apply to the examination in the Police Court. Suppose the case on for trial, the prisoner would tell his story there also; if he mended his hand since his previous examination he could be examined as to that. His testimony would thus be given, subject to the ordinary laws which govern evidence, and such a statement, so protected, would surely be most favourable to innocence.

But it is said every man would be called on to go into the witness box, and if he refused to answer the questions he would be condemned; and we are told of instances of men who, to save their brothers or their wives, or other kindred, have gone through trials for offences which they knew other people to be guilty of. These instances are just the abuses that are favoured by the present system. If in these instances those men had been called on to give their evidence like other witnesses, to tell the truth and the whole truth, they probably would have done so, but they were accused, and took advantage of the law closing their mouths to shirk a public duty in helping to bring the offenders to justice. If the prisoner was, however, brought on the table, and declined to speak, it would, no doubt, be a very strong presumption against him, but it would probably point the officers of justice to some concealed motive like that mentioned in the instances I have referred to, and they might thus be helped to the truth. I do not believe that there is any danger of this change in any form producing the scenes so often described and complained of in France. We are never likely to forget that it is the duty of the Court not to convict the prisoner, but to elicit the truth. Merlin, in his repertoire of French law, explains this system as having for its object the obtaining, from the very lips of the accused, the avowal of his crime. He evidently regards the accused and the criminal as convertible terms. This is the spirit that has led to the abuse of this plan in France where a sounder view of the position of the accused has never prevailed. The leaving it to the parties to produce the evidence of the prisoner disposes of a great part of this danger, and gets us over the chief difficulty urged against this reform. As to the large number of instances of false and mistaken self-criminative statements in such cases, if the prisoner has not pleaded guilty he would naturally be examined by the prosecutor, and it would be the business of his counsel to cross-examine him as to his confession. The admission of the prisoner in such cases is always before the jury in one form or another, and has an enormous influence on their minds, whereas if the prisoner was subjected to a cross-examination in support of the hypothesis that he was misstating the facts, there would be a much better chance of the jury giving full consideration to the element of possible doubt existing in the case. This is only one of the points in which, I think, our criminal reform should be rendered more complete. Whatever we do for the future in this department of legislation, it is time now to recollect that our efforts should be directed to render our criminal system more effective and certain in its operation.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

CRAWFORD v. CRAWFORD.

June 15; July 2, 1867.—Solicitor—Agent—Trust—Statute of Limitations.

Mr. Samuel Law Crawford was from the year 1847 until his death, which occurred in 1861, Solicitor for the Londonderry and Coleraine Railway Company, and was employed by them to negotiate for the purchase of land for the purposes of the railway. Sums of money were from time to time remitted to him for the purpose of settling claims for compensation. Mr. Crawford applied the moneys as directed, and entered the sums received and the application of them in separate debtor and creditor accounts in his ledger. One sum of £428, received in 1854, was entered as received by him in the ledger, but did not appear to have been applied or returned by him. In 1856 he recovered a judgment against the company for a large amount of costs, and after his death an account was settled between the company and his administrator, on which a balance of £6,243 8s. 0d. was found due by the company on foot of the judgment and other bills of costs. The balance was paid by debentures of the railway. The suit was instituted for the administration of Mr. Crawford's assets in 1865. On the 23rd of April, 1866, the company filed a charge for the £428 which was unaccounted for. The Master disallowed the claim as barred by the Statute of Limitations. The company appealed from his decision.

Pallas, Q.C., Falkiner, Q.C., and E. F. Litton for the company.

F. W. Walsh, Q.C., D. M'Causland, Q.C., and J. P. Hamilton, for the petitioner.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was of opinion that even at law the Statute of Limitations did not apply, as no demand of the money was proved to have been made, nor had the application of it been countermanded by the company in Mr. Crawford's lifetime; but his Honor held that there was a trust as to the money, which prevented the bar of the Statute of Limitations in a Court of Equity, and that he could not presume, in the absence of proof, that the claim was included in the settled account. The Master's order was reversed.

Solicitor for the petitioner, George T. Kinder.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Coram, LYNCH, J.

In re ALLEN'S ESTATE.

June, July.—Notice to Assignee of Mortgage—Security of prior Equitable Mortgage of the same Mortgage—Security by reason of his omission to get into his possession the Mortgage Deed.

This case came on upon argument of an objection to the schedule of incumbrances taken by Mr. Nunn, who claimed, as equitable mortgagee of a mortgage security, dated 9th July, 1859, and affecting the estate sold in this matter, to be paid in priority to the petitioners, who were assignees of the same mortgage debt and security under a deed of date subsequent to the creation of the equitable mortgage.

Mr. Nunn's claim was founded on a deposit of the mortgage deed on the contract shown by two letters, one of the mortgagor, the other of the mortgagee, and both acknowledging the contract on which the lodgment was made. This deposit and contract took effect on the 20th January, 1864. The petitioners claimed under a deed of assignment of 2nd June, 1864, registered on 7th June, 1864. It was stated for the petitioners (though this fact was not verified by them) that at the time when the assignment was made, Lindsay Hall, who appeared on the registry search to be owner of the mortgage of 9th July, 1859, represented himself to be such owner, and said he "had said mortgage at his residence in the country, and would forthwith procure it and hand it over to petitioners." The petitioners, however, took no steps to obtain possession of it. It was now contended that this omission on their part was constructive notice of the prior equitable mortgage.

LYNCH, J., delivered a written judgment, holding that the conduct of the petitioners in not inquiring after the custody of the mortgage deed, and not obtaining possession of it, was constructive notice of the prior equitable mortgage; that to deal with a mortgagee without getting the mortgage security was the greatest negligence that could be committed in respect of such a transaction; that if there was any obligation on the parties to get the deed, its non-fulfilment, so far from being excused by what happened, was made worse; that the present case was much stronger than that of a dealing with a property of which the title deeds were only evidence; that though the dissatisfaction so often expressed at admitting the rule regarding notice affecting registered conveyances was intelligible, still the rule was an established rule, and was not confined to the case of actual notice, that is, notice, in fact, brought home to personal knowledge in the party dealing; that gross negligence was, in effect, a connivance at fraud, by leaving so much room for its commission, which ordinary care would prevent, and therefore, in furtherance of the detection of fraud, the duty of ordinary care was cast on a party dealing as a purchaser, and that this duty was neglected when a dealing took place as to the assignment of a mortgage, without inquiry as to the custody of the mortgage deed; that judgment must be given in favour of Mr. Nunn's equitable charge to the extent of the sum due on foot of it.

Coram, LYNCH, J.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOSEPH THOMAS FULLER, Owner; LUKE CLARKE HUGHES, Petitioner.

July 17.—Right of Turbary.

This was an objection by Miss Thomasina Henderson to the final notice to tenants in this matter. Miss Henderson's affidavit stated that she objected, inasmuch as the notice did not set out her right to cut turf on the bog of Curraghboy or Woodfield; that she claimed a prescriptive right to cut turf for the use of Springfield House on said bog to the extent of 56 yards; that she was seised as of freehold, for lives renewable for ever, of said lands of Springfield, and that, as long as her memory extended, she and those under whom she derived had been in the habit of cutting turf for the use of the house of Springfield, on the part of said bog marked on an ordnance map, and that she and they had done this as of right, and not by permission from any person as appurtenant to said messuage and farm of Springfield.

Patrick Baslick, in an affidavit made by him, stated that he resided within half a mile from the lands of Curraghboy or Woodfield, the lands for sale in this matter, and the bog attached to said lands, and had always resided within a short distance of said lands; that Miss Henderson and her predecessors cut turf on the part of the bog marked on the ordnance map for the use of the house of Springfield, as of right and not by permission; that on several occasions for upwards of forty years, by the directions of Miss Henderson and her predecessors, he assisted in the cutting of turf on said bog for the use of said house, and was never prevented.

Beytagh in support of the objection.

Meares Kelly, for the petitioner, suggested that the affidavits ought to be more precise. The Court was selling only a life estate in these lands, and this claim, if allowed, would bind the inheritance. The owner was out of the country, and the petitioner did not know how the matter stood.

LYNCH, J., said that his ruling would not make the claim affect the inheritance. He would make a declaration that the estate in the lands should be sold subject to this right to cut turf. The costs of the objection should be allowed.

Solicitor for Miss Henderson, Whitney.

ENGLAND.

PRISONERS AT THE BAR.

The prisoners charged with participating in the Fenian outrage at Manchester were brought handcuffed to the bar of the police-court for examination, and so kept there during its progress. Mr. Ernest Jones, who defended some of them, peremptorily demanded the removal of the handcuffs, and on refusal by the stipendiary and other magistrates upon the bench, threw up his brief and left the court.

Was he right in this?

Undoubtedly the incident was unusual, if not unprecedented, in modern times. It is the invariable practice to place the prisoner at the bar, whether for examination or trial, with full freedom of limb; and even in the cases where he has committed or attempted to commit an assault upon the judge by throwing at him any missile at hand, or upon the gaoler, warder, or person having him in custody, we remember no instance in which resort has been had to handcuffs or other instruments of bodily restraint save the strong arms of the attendants. The custom clearly is as contended for by Mr. Jones, and is so commendable an one that neither judge nor justices would depart from it but under circumstances of most urgent necessity.

But Mr. Jones seemed to assert that it was something more than a custom—that it was a right with which an unconvicted prisoner is invested to stand in the dock as a freeman, because the law presumes a man to be innocent until his guilt is proved. This was the only argument advanced by Mr. Jones in support of his assertion; but it will not bear examination.

If a defendant has a right to freedom of limb in the dock because he is presumed to be innocent, that right for that reason could not be limited to the moment of his standing at the bar of a criminal court; it would extend to the whole time from capture to conviction. To handcuff him while in the custody of the police, or in conveyance to or from the prison and the court, would be no less an invasion of that right. But even Mr. Jones could not dispute either the right or the propriety of instruments of restraint either before or after the appearance of the prisoner in court. Thus considered, it is plain that the removal of fetters during examination or trial is a custom of courtesy only, and not a right, and is designed to relieve the prisoner, so far as it is practicable, for all that might enlist prejudice against him or unduly disturb his own self-possession. But, being only a custom and not a right, handcuffs being used before and after the hearing, because such a precaution is deemed to be a necessary security against escape or rescue, it is manifestly only a question of propriety whether the restraint, used without objection up to the moment of appearance in court, should then be continued or removed. In practice, the irons have always been removed, because the circumstances have permitted it to be done with safety. But on this occasion (and it is gratifying to think that it was without precedent), the authorities who were responsible for the safe custody of the prisoners and the peace of the country were of opinion that the prisoners could not be left free of limb without imminent risk of an escape or rescue. How could there be other than danger, seeing that the very charge against them was a rescue accomplished by armed force in the streets of Manchester.

There being then an obvious necessity for the precaution, that necessity overruled the custom, and the magistrates rightly refused to hazard the defeat of justice by granting that which is a courtesy and not a right.

And, the magistrates, acting within their jurisdiction, Mr. Jones was clearly wrong in throwing up his brief. Had they acted illegally, his duty might have been otherwise; but as they were within the scope of their authority, and he could question only the propriety, and not the legality, of their decision, Mr. Ernest Jones erred professionally in abandoning his clients.—Law Times.

TITLE RECORD (IRELAND).

Record of title business has been more brisk in Ireland than in England. The Irish Title Act came into operation in November, 1865, and by July, 1867, 200 parliamentary titles were fully registered. The system in Ireland had this advantage over the Land Registry in Lincoln's-inn-Fields, that it started from the Landed Estates Court. By the Act of 1865, a person, on obtaining a conveyance or declaration of title from that court, is enabled to have it entered in the record, whereupon the estate becomes a "recorded estate;" after which, as under the English Act of 1862, every transfer must be recorded, and the recorded owner for the time being has an indefeasible title, no entry being liable to be called in question against a purchaser, for value by reason of any irregularity or informality therein, or in the proceedings previous to the making thereof. Here the later Act is an improvement on the earlier, as it affords a better indemnity; for the English Act does not provide against irregularity or informality in the entry itself, but only in the previous proceedings—an omission much to be regretted. In England the registrations of title in the first year or two were insignificant in number, and according to the return made in 1866, the total number from the beginning was not more than 114. What it may be up to the present time we do not know, for Lord Chelmsford, who used to stir up the office every year while he was in opposition, has left it in peace since he took his seat as Chancellor. The value of the estates held under the 200 recorded titles in Ireland, is set down at £564,049.

The arrangements respecting fees in the Land Court are favourable to the recording of titles. There is no fee payable on recording a conveyance immediately after its execution by the court; but if an interval is allowed to elapse, then, during 1867 or within a year from the execution of the conveyance, the fee is only 5s. where the value is £1,000 or under, and 2s. 6d. for every additional £500 of value; after 1857, if a year be allowed to elapse after the conveyance, the fee will be 10s. for £100. The whole expense of recording a conveyance now executed by the court, is not great, inasmuch as, including solicitors' fees, it varies from 10s. to £1 15s. 6d.; but in the case of a title formerly granted by the court, it varies from £5 to £18, according to the nature of the estate, changes in the tenancies, and other matters.—Law Times.

DEATH OF LORD KINGSDOWN.—Lord Kingsdown died on Monday night at his seat, Torrehill, in Kent. He was born in London on the 11th of February, 1793, his family name being Pemberton. He descended on his father's side from a family in Warrington, and on his mother's from a branch of the family of Leigh, to whose vast possessions near Wigan he eventually succeeded. He was at no public school, at no university, and he began his legal career in a solicitor's office. Yet his scholarship was correct, and his taste for classica literature constant and unabated. He read for the Bar in the chambers of his maternal uncle, Mr. Cooke, and in 1816 Mr. Pemberton was called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of Lincoln's-inn. In 1829 he received a silk gown, and for many years he stood at the head of the Bar, in his own court, the Rolls. In 1841, upon the formation of Sir R. Peel's administration, he accepted the office of Attorney-General to the Prince of Wales. In January, 1843, the death of his aged and eccentric kinsman, Sir Robert Leigh, placed Mr. Pemberton in possession of a life interest in the Wigan estates, amounting to about £17,000 a year. He retired from the Bar, was sworn of the Privy Council as Chancellor of the Duchy of Cornwall, and shortly afterwards entered upon his judicial duties as a member of the Judicial Committee of that body. These duties he continued to perform for twenty years with unremitting diligence, but entirely without emolument, and with no outward recognition of his services except the peerage, which was first offered to him by Lord John Russell in 1853, and eventually conferred on him by Lord Derby in 1858. During the greater part of his career at the Bar Mr. Pemberton sat in the House of Commons, in the Conservative interest, for the borough of Rye, and afterwards for the borough of Ripon. In 1858, upon the formation of Lord Derby's administration, the Great Seal was offered to Mr. Pemberton Leigh (as he was then called), but it was refused. The cases of "Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter," of "Liddell v. Westerton," "Long v. Bishop of Cape Town," and "Essays and Reviews," were decided by committees of the Privy Council, in which Lord Kingsdown took an active part, and they were decided in entire conformity with his views. Lord Kingsdown was never married; his title, therefore, is extinct. Of his property the larger part reverts to a descendant of Sir Robert Leigh; the remainder passes to the brother and nephews of the late peer. The Sun observes:—"The predominant quality of Lord Kingsdown's character was a fastidious refinement, which removed him altogether from the common pursuits of fame and power. 'No breath of popularity,' as he once expressed it, 'ever touched his sail.' But, if he was sensitive to the shortcomings and imperfections of others, he was not less exacting in all that concerned himself. Nothing satisfied him in his own productions short of the highest perfection which he was able to attain. Many of his judgments were written several times over; all were revised with elaborate minuteness. In 1858, when the Great Seal was offered him, he had already quitted the Court of Chancery for fifteen years, and, strange as it may seem, we suspect that the reason which mainly determined his refusal was a distrust of his ability to perform the duties of the Chancellor after so long an interval in a manner entirely adequate to his conception of their importance. Perhaps it is fortunate for the world that all men are not equally scrupulous or conscientious."

Another Law Lord Wanted.—The Globe says:—The death of Lord Kingsdown naturally leads to a renewed consideration of the strength of the Supreme Court of Appeal. The judicial committee is now nominally constituted of eight law lords; but advanced age precludes Lords Brougham, St. Leonards, and Wensleydale from discharging their legal functions. There remain, therefore, but Lord Chelmsford, Cranworth, Westbury, Cairns, and Colonsay, to transact the appellate business, including the appeals from Scotland; but practically it is found to devolve upon two of that body—a result which is often regarded, though it may be without cause, with some concern.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

Joint Speculation.—The plaintiffs and four other firms of merchants, by a written memorandum, which was signed by them all, and stated that the plaintiffs had ordered their agents to contract for 1,200 tons of sugar, agreed that they should have "one-fifth interest each;" that as the bills would be drawn on the plaintiffs they should have a power of sale; that "the various parties interested agreed to pay their shares of the marginal draughts; and finally, that "the purchaser should be at the risk of the undersigned in the proportion of one-fifth each." The cargo arrived, but the result was a heavy loss, and two of the firms became unable to meet their engagements: Held, that this was a joint mercantile adventure on the part of all five firms, and that the deficiency arising from the failure of two of them was a loss which must be borne equally by the three solvent firms, and not by the plaintiffs alone: (McInroy v. Hargrove, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 509. Chan.)

Will under a Power—Feme Covert.—A feme covert made a will under a power, survived her husband, and subsequently died a widow, without having republished it. The Court granted general administration with the will annexed to her executor on the consent of all the next of kin except one, who was absent in New Zealand, but required the administrator to give justifying security: (Re Thorild, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 853. Prob. Court.)

Contributory.—The articles of association incorporated table A. of the Companies Act 1862. The directors issued shares to shareholders in lieu of those originally held by them, but did not observe the provisions of table A. B. received a dividend on the new shares, and was ignorant that they bad been illegally issued. He was nevertheless held not to be liable as a contributory in respect of such new shares: (Sewell's case, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 836. M. R.)

B. A. 1861, ss. 192, 197, 198—Composition-Deed—Execution—Undertaking by Attorney to Pay.—The plaintiffs commenced an action under the Bills of Exchange Act against the defendant on the 15th Jan., and notwithstanding that he received notice on the 25th of the same month that the defendant had executed a composition-deed under sect. 199 of the B. A. 1861, and that it was about to be registered, he proceeded to sign judgment in default, and issued execution, on the 29th, under which the sheriff entered and levied on the 30th, and issued handbills fixing the sale of the goods for the 1st Feb. On the 31st Jan. notice was given to the bailiff in possession that the deed was about to be immediately registered, but he refused to withdraw except upon an undertaking by the defendant's attorneys to pay debt and costs, and upon that being given to him, at 7.30 p.m. of the 31st Jan., he withdrew. It turned out that the deed, which contained a release of all "claims and demands" of creditors, was in fact registered at 2 p.m. of that same day. The defendant's attorneys subsequently paid the amount of debt, costs, and poundage to the sheriff's officer under protest, and the sheriff paid the amount into Court under an interpleader order, and the defendant having moved to have the money paid out of court to himself, it was Held, that as the plaintiffs could only claim the money in question on the ground of its representing the proceeds of an execution, for the purposes of which there were at the time the undertaking was given no goods of the defendant available, by reason of the prior registration of the deed of composition; therefore the defendant was entitled to have the money paid out of court to him: (Milner v. Rawlins, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 829. Ex.)

Codicil.—B. wrote certain legacies on three separate sheets of paper. He signed each sheet in the presence of witnesses, but they subscribed only the first. The second and third sheets were held to be insufficiently attested: (Re Pearse, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S 853. Prob. Court.)

Mercantile Law Amendment Act, s. 1—Knowledge of Assignor, when Knowledge of the Assignee.—On a writ of fi. fa. being issued against B. he assigned his property to trustees for the benefit of creditors without their knowledge or consent. The knowledge of the assignor was nevertheless held to be knowledge of the assignee within s. 1 of 19 and 20 Vict. c. 97: (Hobson v. Thellusson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 837. Q. B.)

Stamp—Partnership—Conveyance of Share to Continuing Partner.—On the dissolution of a partnership the retiring partner conveyed his share of the partnership property to the continuing partners. The instrument was held to be liable to ad valorem duty on the whole consideration therein expressed: (Philips v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 839. Ex.)

FRAUDULENT PREFERENCE—EVIDENCE.—B., in June, 1866, borrowed £350 from defendant on a promissory note, and at the same time deposited with the defendant as security an agreement to transfer fifteen scrip certificates in a limited company. By the articles of association shares in the company were not transferable till the month of Jan., 1867. On the 14th Jan., 1867, B. handed over the scrip to defendant, and on the next day he (B.) stopped payment. In an action by the assignee of B. and D. against the defendant for fraudulent preference and conversion: Held, that as the handing over of the scrip in Jan. 1867, was merely a carrying out of the agreement made in June, 1866, this was not a fraudulent preference. Held, also, that a witness cannot have the proceedings in another court put into his hands for the purpose of refreshing his memory as to the matters on which he is giving evidence: (Halliday v. Holgate, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 18. Nisi Prius.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATE TAIL.—A testator gave real estate to trustees upon trust for his grandson (the plaintiff) for life, and directed that the trustees, until the plaintiff should attain twenty-five, should receive the rents, and after certain deductions, should pay them in their discretion, to the separate use of his (the testator's) daughter and her children. And upon his grandson's attaining twenty-five should put him into possession of the property, and any surplus rents, and immediately after his demise he gave the same property to the heirs of the body of his said grandson lawfully issuing, and for default of such issue over in somewhat similar terms to the other children of his daughter, with an ultimate limitation to his (the testator's) father's right heirs. There was then a gift of other property somewhat in the same terms to the other grandchildren, excluding the plaintiff: Held, that the plaintiff took an equitable estate in tail: (Denman v. Jones, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 787. V. C. M.)

OBSTRUCTION OF VIEW—NUISANCE—LEASE—POWER TO DIVERT A ROADWAY.—The plaintiff was the lessee of a piece of land belonging to the Regent's Canal Company, including a roadway, and by the lease the company reserved a right to divert the road for the purpose of extending their lay-bye or basin. The Imperial Gas Company afterwards bought the land leased to the plaintiff and other land belonging to the canal company, including the lay-bye. The gas company wished to build a new gasometer, and attempted to enter into some arrangement with the plaintiff for diverting the roadway, in order to obtain more room. The plaintiff objected, and the gas company afterwards announced their intention of enlarging the lay-bye, and, for that purpose, of altering the road. The plaintiff filed his bill to restrain them, but Kindersley, V. C., dismissed the bill with costs. The erection of a building obstructing the view of business premises, but without obstructing light and air, cannot be made the subject of an injunction: Held (affirming the decision of Kindersley, V. C.), that where a lessor had power under the lease to alter a road if he made a certain other alteration, he had power at any time to make the alteration and divert the road, although he might have made the alteration for the purpose of entitling himself to divert the road, and that in this respect a covenant in a deed differed from a power conferred by Act of Parliament: (Butt v. Imperial Gas Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 820. L. C.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION.—B. gave certain parts of his real and personal estate to trustees for the benefit of his daughter, and if she should die under twenty-one or afterwards, without leaving any child or children, then over. His words were held to be equivalent to "never having had any child or children:" (White v. Hill, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 826. V. C. W.)

COVENANT TO SETTLE AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY.—An infant feme sole, being entitled to property under a will if she attained twenty-one, married, and by the settlement made immediately previously to such marriage, the intended husband covenanted with the trustees that all the estate, property, and effects, real and personal, which he and his intended wife, or either in her right, should at any time during the coverture become seised or possessed of, or entitled to at law or in equity, of the value of £200 and upwards, under any gift, devise, or bequest, or by descent, representation, or any other means whatsoever, should be settled, and that they should do all necessary acts, &c.: Held, that the contingent interest, to which the intended wife was entitled, was within the covenant: (Re Worsley's Trusts, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 826. V. C. M.)

LEGAL POSTINGS:

LANDED ESTATES' COURT, IRELAND.

COUNTY OF DONEGAL.

In the Matter of the Estate of John George Laird, Owner; Ex-parte Samuel Donnell, Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD BY PUBLIC AUCTION, before the Hon. Judge Lynch, at the Landed Estates' Court, Inn's-quay, Dublin, on TUESDAY, the 5th day of NOVEMBER, 1867, in One Lot. Dwelling-houses and Premises, situate in the Town of Ballybofey, in the Barony of Raphoe, and County of Donegal, held under two leases for lives renewable for ever, and producing a net profit rent of £84 13s. 4d. per annum.

Dated this 26th day of June, 1867.

H. R. GREENE, Chief Clerk.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Dwelling-houses and Premises to be sold, are situate on the south side of the Street of Ballybofey, in the Barony of Raphoe, and County of Donegal, held under lease dated 18th March, 1778, for lives renewable for ever. A fee-farm grant of said lease will be executed to the purchaser. The rent payable thereunder is £11 1s. 8d. sterling, and 6d. in the £ Receiver's fees

The other portion of the premises to be sold, are held under lease, dated 20th September, 1853, for lives renewable for ever, subject to the yearly rent of £10 10s. sterling.

The premises are situate in the best and most central part of the thriving Town of Ballybofey, and well circumstanced for any kind of business on an extensive scale, and within ten minutes' walk of the Fin Valley Railway.

One of the four tenements is occupied as a bank, by the Northern Banking Company, and is three stories high. The other three houses are also three stories high, and have good shops in an excellent situation for any business; all the premises are in good order, and will not require a shilling outlay.

The value of property in Ballybofey is gradually increasing since the railway was opened in that locality.

Ballybofey is one of the most promising towns of the kind in all the County, having the advantage of good markets for sale of agricultural produce, which is abundant in that locality, therefore the property for sale is a most eligible investment.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 39.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

IN a former number we treated of the history of the jury as regards its origin, and we found that the principle of trying a man by the country, whether by ordeal, battle, or compurgation, was one definitely admitted, so early as the Anglo-Saxon times; but we saw how very little resemblance this system could be made to bear, even by its most strenuous advocates, to our modern system of trial by jury; and we may consider the practice adopted by Henry II. as the intermediate state between the system which we have now, by the help of long experience and guidance of reason, and the development of the principles of justice so well elaborated. The history of juries would include an account of all the more important legal-constitutional liberties which the awakening of the spirit of freedom, and the renaissance of learning—caused by the political confusion consequent upon the termination of the middle ages, and the foundation of the modern system of polity in Europe—have gained for the people of England. It would include an account of the contest between the Crown and the nobles under the Tudor sovereigns; the contest between the king and the nobles on the one side, and the commons on the other, under the Stuarts; and finally, the contests which have been going on since the Revolution, in the different ranks of society, for perfect equality in the eye of the law, which has been long admitted in theory, but only lately admitted in practice. Even to give a list of the causes célèbres which have for the last 600 years been the turning points on which our judicial system of trial by jury has been hinged, and which may each be said to have added one more precedent for the great principle quoted in our last number from King John's Charter, "that every man by the English law has a right to be tried by a jury of his equals," be he peer or peasant, would be so tedious as to be uninteresting, and so long as to be impossible in execution. We shall, therefore, take up the history of trial by jury at the point where we left off in our former article, and note only such important cases in its progress from infancy to maturity as seem to be most necessary to explain its modern development.

At first then, even where trial by jury was legally established as one of the ways in which a case might be settled, it was by no means compulsory on the prosecutor, or appellant, as he was formerly called, to adopt that method. In suits for the recovery of property, the nation became gradually accustomed to see the jurisdiction of the freeholders transferred to a smaller number of sworn men, well acquainted with the facts of the case; and it was in this state when Henry II. introduced the assise of novel disseisin. This gave the alternative to the tenant, in a suit for the recovery of land, to put himself on the assise if he did not wish to risk the combat—that is, he might be tried by four knights, summoned by the sheriff, and twelve more selected by them, forming the sixteen sworn recognitors by whose verdict the case might be determined. This assise of novel disseisin was always held in the King's Court, or that of the judges in eyre, and not before the County or Hundred Court. The proceedings are explained at great length by Glanville, justiciary to Henry II. Equally important changes were effected in criminal processes about the same time. Henry II. abolished the ancient privilege of compurgation by the oaths of friends—the means of so much perjury; and the Church, in the fourth Lateran Council, held 1215, abolished all kinds of ordeal, such as chewing consecrated bread, and handling hot irons, as mentioned in our former article; and thus trial by jury in criminal cases became common, though no one could be compelled to plead, or, in other words, the inquest must be of defendant's own choice.

If any one declined the inquest, however, he was remanded to prison, and treated with such severity that it was called peine forte et dure. At this time the jury were not empanelled to examine into the credibility of the evidence; the question was not discussed and argued before them; they, the jury, were the witnesses themselves, and the verdict of the jury was substantially the examination of these witnesses who, of their own knowledge and without the aid of other testimony, afforded their evidence respecting the facts in question to the best of their belief. "In its primitive form, therefore, a trial by jury was only a trial by witnesses; and jurymen were distinguished from any other witnesses only by customs which imposed upon them the obligation of an oath and regulated their number, and which prescribed their rank and defined the territorial qualifications from whence they obtained their degree and their influence in society."—(Palgrave's Commonwealth).

There is some difficulty about determining the time when the evidence of those persons was admitted who knew the circumstances and cause of action, but were not summoned on the jury by reason of want of some of the necessary qualifications, as a verdict was generally rendered without hearing any other testimony in court than that of the parties themselves, fortified, if necessary, by written documents; and hence the knights of the grand assise were often called recognitors. Thus, in the words of Palgrave, "where a charter was pleaded, the witnesses named in the attesting clause of the instrument, and who had been present in the folkmoot, the shire, or the manor court, where the seal was affixed by the donor, were included in the panel; and where a grant had been made by parol, the witnesses were sought out by the sheriff and returned upon the jury." But soon many cases occurred which required further evidence than that of common notoriety, and these could not always be managed by swearing upon the panel such witnesses as might instruct their fellow jurors, as, for instance, when the only persons acquainted with the matter in dispute were not possessed of the necessary qualifications, or were women or villeins, it is evident that such cases must soon have led to the distinction of jurors from witnesses. In criminal cases we know that witnesses for the defendant were not allowed to be sworn till the reign of Mary, as the verdict was most often determined by the previous fame of the accused. But even with these drawbacks the trial by jury was soon esteemed a privilege for which accused persons were willing to pay, as we learn from the curious chronicle of Jocelyn de Brakeloude, where we are told an accused person paid the sum of one mark in order to have an inquest, or trial by jury, instead of trial by combat; which also shows that the former had not yet become a matter of right. Later we find from Glanville, justiciary to Henry II., in a criminal process, that a woman could be a witness only where her husband had been murdered, or her person assaulted; and in cases of secret murder only the kindred of the murdered person could be heard, and in the case of open murder the prosecutor must have been actually present. In trials before the justiciaries, however, from the nature of the construction of their court, witnesses must always have been necessary. A plan sometimes adopted, instead of calling witnesses distinct from the jurors, was to afforce the jury; that is, to reject those unacquainted with the matter in dispute, and to fill their place with better informed witnesses until twelve men were found who agreed in the same verdict; though it is by no means certain that unanimity was required till the time of Edward III., but twelve always, as in the present grand jury, must concur. In the Law Review there is an interesting account of 20 Ed. III., in which Chief-Justice Thorpe was reproved for taking a verdict from eleven jurors. It is in the same year that we first find witnesses summoned to assist in a trial without having any voice in the verdict, which, as has been well said, "forms the connecting link between the ancient and modern jury," and caused jurors, from being the mere recipients and depositories of knowledge, to exercise the more intellectual faculty of forming conclusions from testimony.

THE Commissioners appointed by Government to inquire into the state of Railways in Ireland hold their meetings at Victoria-street, Westminster. As yet they have merely arranged the preliminary inquiries, and the classification of the different branches of the subject under their consideration. The two remedies proposed for the improvement of the present depressed state of railway property in Ireland are—that the Government should purchase all the railways; or that Government should advance money to the companies at low rates of interest. As to which of these plans is most sound in design the public are not agreed. The first seems contrary to the maxims of political economy, and the latter appears certainly expedient. There is no doubt that in the relapse after the violent political discussion in the last session of Parliament general Irish subjects will receive a thorough investigation in the next, which is to commence in November, so that the report of the Irish Railway Committee will be looked for with some anxiety. The following is a list of the gentlemen composing the Committee:—Chairman, Sir Alexander Young Spearman, Bart., a celebrated political economist, and Secretary and Comptroller-General of the Reduction of the National Debt Office; Mr. John Mulholland, an extensive linen merchant, of Belfast; Mr. John Fowler, C.E., an eminent London engineer; Mr. Seymour Clarke, manager of the Great Northern Railway, of England; Mr. Christopher Johnstone, late manager of the Caledonian Railway. The Secretary is Mr. William Neilson Hancock, LL.D., and Superintendent of Judicial and Criminal Statistics, &c.

There has been some disappointment expressed that the railway interest of Ireland was not more largely represented; but we may rest assured, from the reputations of the several gentlemen who were appointed, on mercantile and railway subjects, that their report will embody, in a tangible form, what may be most expedient and desirable, not for any particular section of the community but for the kingdom at large.

We would call the attention of the profession to a meeting which is to be held in the Solicitors' Hall, on the 21st of next month, for the purpose of considering the present Civil Bill Acts, with a view to have the same amended. It will be remembered that a meeting was held for the same purpose last June, and was very influentially attended, Mr. Hinds being in the chair, and Mr. Proctor acting as hon. secretary. We publish an official announcement of the proposed meeting in our present number.

COURT FOR THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF IRELAND.

The question, "Where is the Vice-Chancellor to hold his Sittings?" is being answered by the Board of Works, who are busily engaged in altering and refitting some of the apartments of the new Public Record Building, in order to serve the purposes of his Lordship's Court, until more suitable accommodation shall be provided. The principal room, which is forty-six feet long by twenty-six feet wide, will be arranged as a miniature court, with a canopied dais at one end, and seats rising in tiers at the other. Two side doorways have been opened; the one, facing Church-street, by which the Judge will gain access to his chamber; the other, fronting the court-yard, will admit the public to those parts of the building reserved for the uses of the new Record Department. The entrance to the Court will be through the front door of the building that looks towards Morgan-place. These altered arrangements are to be completed, and the place made ready for occupation, by the first week of Michaelmas Term, which commences on Saturday next.

The Commission of Oyer and Terminer was opened yesterday, in the Court-house, Green-street, by the Lord Chief Baron and Mr. Justice Morris, the latter taking the place of Mr. Justice Keogh. The Lord Chief Baron delivered a long and eloquent address to the Grand Jury. True bills for treason-felony were found against twenty-eight Fenian prisoners.

The Special Commission opens to-day in Manchester for the trial of the prisoners charged with being concerned in the murder of Brett. Mr. Justice Blackburn and Mr. Justice Mellor, senior puisne Judges of the Queen's Bench, will sit.

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.

John Norwood, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and Randal W. M'Donnell, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, have been appointed legal assessors to the Mayor of Belfast (David Taylor, Esq.), in the revision of the municipal burgess roll of that borough.

Pelham J. Mayne, Esq., solicitor, has been appointed Clerk of the Peace for the county of the town of Drogheda, in the place of the late William Magee, Esq. Mr. Mayne's long and extensive professional experience, and straightforward, honourable character, justify the Government in the selection they have made.

THE NEW ADMIRALTY COURT.

The New Admiralty Court, as constituted under the Act of last Session, will commence its sittings on the 4th November. The present judge (Judge Kelly) retires on full pay, and will be succeeded by Judge Townsend. Mr. Barton is the Registrar, Mr. Moore the Chief Clerk, and Mr. Anderson the Marshal.

A curious question in regard to the liability of railway companies for goods lost on a through journey, came before the Chairman of the County of Sligo at the Quarter Sessions just held at Sligo. The Midland Great Western Railway Company was sued for the value of certain articles abstracted from a trunk belonging to a passenger proceeding from Sligo to Liverpool, on a through ticket granted by the Midland Company. It appeared that the passenger, on arriving at the Broadstone Terminus, hired a car, and had herself and her luggage conveyed to Westland-row station. The Chairman decided that this circumstance broke the chain of the liability of the company, and accordingly dismissed the case on its merits, remarking that the plaintiff, on her arrival at the Broadstone, should have called on the company to convey herself and her luggage to Westland row.

The Use of Handcuffs.—On Tuesday at the Manchester County Court Joseph Smith, a lurryman, sought to recover damages from Serjeant Brears and Police-constable Beach, for having arrested and handcuffed him in June last. The police stopped Smith in the streets, handcuffed him, and marched him off to prison on the charge of improperly working a horse, for which he was fined by the magistrates. For the defence, it was urged that he was violent, and had to be handcuffed. The judge said, that although the use of handcuffs was to be deprecated, yet he did not see how he could give the complainant a verdict unless there was evidence to show that the police had put them on out of mere wantonness. He therefore gave a verdict for the defendants.

Butler in tail; remainder to the said Edmond O. Butler in tail. And he devised his Meath estates, subject to a jointure and legacies in trust for his sister, the Hon. Catherine Butler, for life; remainder to the trustees of the College of Maynooth. The testator died in May, 1801, without issue, leaving the Hon. Catherine Butler his heiress-at-law. Shortly after his death a suit was instituted by her against the trustees of Maynooth College, impeaching the will of Lord Dunboyne, on the ground that he was a relapsed Papist. A compromise was entered into, but in consequence of delay in procuring an Act of Parliament for the purpose, was not completed during the life of Catherine Butler. She made her will on the 1st of April, 1805, by which she devised all her "real estates, lands, and tenements in the County of Tipperary" to her son, the said Morrogh O. Butler, for life; remainder to his first and other sons in tail; remainder to the use of the said Pierce O. Butler in tail; remainder to her right heirs; and she devised all her "real estates in the County of Meath" to the said Pierce O. Butler in tail, subject to £10,000 to Morrogh O. Butler; remainder to her own right heirs. Catherine Butler died in April, 1807, having no real estates, save those which she claimed as the heiress of Lord Dunboyne. The compromise of the suit with the trustees of Maynooth College was carried out by a deed of the 29th of April, 1809. Pierce O. Butler entered into possession of the Meath estate, and remained in possession of it until his death in 1812. Lady Dunboyne died in 1860. The petition was filed to raise the two legacies of £500, which were charged on the Tipperary estates by the will of Lord Dunboyne, and to which the petitioners traced title. The petition was referred to Master Murphy, under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act, and he, by a decretal order of the 13th of February, 1867, declared the legacies well charged on the Tipperary estate, and ordered a sale of a part of the lands. The respondent, who was the owner of that estate, appealed.

Sherlock, Q.C., Sullivan, Q.C., and S. W. Flanagan, Q.C., for the appeal.

Rogers, Q.C., and J. P. Hamilton, in support of the order.

The MASTER of the ROLLS held that the will of Catherine Butler raised a case of election against Pierce O. Butler, and that having taken the Meath estate under that will, he or the petitioners claiming under him could not claim the legacy bequeathed to him by Lord Dunboyne's will, and reversed the Master's order to that extent.

Solicitor for the petitioners, Pierce Power.

Solicitors for the respondents, Kernan and Treacy.

REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS.

The History of Irish Periodical Literature, from the End of the 17th to the Middle of the 19th Century. Its Origin, Progress, and Results; with Notices of Remarkable Persons connected with the Press in Ireland during the past Century. By RICHARD ROBERT MADDEN, M.R.I.A., &c. London: T. C. Newby, Publisher. Dublin: Hodges & Smith. Two vols., 8vo.

"Let me but write the ballads of a nation," said the old sage, "and I care not who makes their laws." And, substituting the word newspaper for ballads, much more truly might this aphorism be now-a-days applied to express the extent of the influence possessed by the "fourth estate" in the nineteenth century. The volumes now before us form a very valuable, as well as interesting, compendium of this heretofore neglected and yet most important department of Irish history. Dr. Madden's qualifications for undertaking this work are well known, and have been evinced in many well known works. The first newspaper published in Ireland was "The Dublin News-Letter," printed at the "Leather Bottle," in Skinner's-row, in 1685. This paper was printed on a single leaf of small folio size, and was addressed to the public in the form of a letter. The history of the many strange epochs which periodical literature has passed through in Ireland, from that humble origin, to the present day, is not a little strange and eventful, and for an account of it we must refer our readers to Dr. Madden's pages, where they will find many a quaint scene and remarkable personage brought up again from the forgotten past, and painted with all the freshness of a contemporaneous chronicle. How difficult must it have been for the editor of one of the early papers described by Dr. Madden to have "made up" his paper, with the statutes of Edward I. and Richard II. against "devisers of false news and of horrible and false lies" hanging over his head, with the promise that "if this be done by book, rhyme, letter, or writing, the person so offending shall have his right hand cut off." Some of the extracts given in the second volume present a very extraordinary picture of Dublin life in the middle of the last century. Thus in the Evening Post of May 5th, 1733, we read:—"On Tuesday there was a great battle between the people of the Right Hon. the Earl of Meath Liberty, and those of his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, wherein several were wounded on both sides." Higgins, the "Sham Squire," and his protector and ally, Lord Clonmell, appear frequently in the pages of the Dublin Journals of that time. Of the latter we are reminded by a characteristic anecdote. In 1797, when the late Lord Cloncurry, then on his way to London, to keep his terms in the Temple, called to take leave of his kinsman, Lord Clonmell, "the old Chief Justice," conscious, apparently, of his career drawing to an end, said to young Lawless, "my dear Val. I have been a fortunate man in life, I am a Chief Justice and an Earl, but believe me I would rather be beginning the world as a young sweep."

We heartily recommend Dr. Madden's work to the perusal of our readers who are interested in the inner life of the nation during the period treated of in these volumes.

SOLICITORS AS BARRISTERS.

We shall not now enter upon a discussion of the merits of the question, but we will offer one or two of the most pertinent observations which occur to us. The first is, that this restless spirit of ambition on the part of a few solicitors will grow in proportion as they become more highly educated. And we must necessarily add that this is an argument against making the solicitors' preliminary examination too "stiff." If none but men competent to act as counsel enter the profession, who will perform the drudgery of the law? One or two cases have come under our own notice, where men have distinguished themselves at the University and the Incorporated Law Society. A. determines to go on to the Bar, although a handsome income would reward him if he became an attorney and settled in the country. B. has settled in the provinces; but his craving for a higher professional sphere is very obvious by the anxious hold of London life which he retains by means of correspondence public and private. Again, suppose the merger of classes took place, and a solicitor became eminent as an advocate. Would he still work up the facts of every case in his own office? It would be physically impossible. He would become a barrister of the existing species, and leave the drudgery of preparing briefs to less capable men. Therefore, let Mr. Shaen and Mr. Bulmer become barristers; but do not let the higher branch be merged in the lower for the sake of the few men in the lower who feel capable of performing the functions of the higher.

And lastly, it must be remembered that, apart from the work performed by counsel, there is ample occupation to be found in an attorney's office calling for the exercise of high intellectual qualifications.—Law Times.

MINOR OFFENCES.

The number of persons summarily convicted in England for offences cognizable before justices appears so enormous—in the year ending at Michaelmas, 1866, 339,091, 286,290 males and 52,801 females—that it will be well to explain the nature of the charges against them. If we look at mere numbers, two great classes of offences took the lead, as usual, in 1866; 75,159 persons (14,363 of them women) were convicted of being drunk, or drunk and disorderly, so misconducting themselves as to get into the hands of the police; and 57,908 persons were convicted of assaults—2,513 of aggravated assaults on women and children, and no less than 11,382 of assaults on or resistance of peace officers. These two items account for a number greatly exceeding a third of the total; the rest will be more conveniently classed according in some degree to the gravity of the offences. 25,478 persons were summarily convicted of stealing or attempting to steal, the larcenies being of a class which, under the Criminal Justice Act, the Juvenile Offenders' Act, or otherwise, are cognizable by justices without indictment; 14,599 persons were convicted of maliciously destroying or damaging property, and 13,292 were convicted under the Police Acts for unlawful possession of goods and various misdemeanours, the latter number including 89 constables convicted of neglecting their duty; 15,457 persons were convicted under the Vagrant Acts—4,414 of them women punished as prostitutes, 4,884 other persons being convicted for begging, and 2,747 for being found in circumstances implying an intention to commit felony. 7,557 of the convictions are distinguished only as being for offences relating to servants, apprentices, or masters; 3,547 were for cruelty to animals, 8,507 for breaches of the peace or want of sureties, 9,063 convictions were for offences against the game laws, the great majority for trespassing in the daytime in pursuit of game, and 707 under the Poaching Act of 1862. We have come now to offences which have often less of a criminal character. 27,939 convictions were for offences against the Ways Acts, the highways, turnpikes, watermen's, railways, and stage and hackney carriages Acts; 24,607 for offences against local Acts and borough by-laws; 10,388 against Public-house Acts (6,633 being convictions of beershop keepers); 500 for offences against the Factory Acts; 67 against the Chimney-sweepers' Act; 809 against Fishery Acts; 3,488 against the Refreshment Houses Act; 415 against the Lord's Day Act; 4,387 against the Weights and Measures Act; 2,547 against the Mutiny Acts; 2,051 against the Mercantile Marine Act; 6,035 against the Poor Law Acts—viz., 2,852 for deserting or neglecting to support a family, and 3,183 for disorderly conduct in the workhouse; 755 against the Public Health Acts; 766 against the Smoke Acts; 21 against the Sewers Act; 3,026 against the Nuisances Removal Acts; 636 against the Common Lodging-houses Acts; 357 for selling unsound food; 836 for other sanitary offences; 788 for offences against the Pawnbroker's Act, the majority being cases of unlawful pledging; 1,157 for offences against the excise and other revenue laws; 3,501 for disobeying affiliation orders. 13,448 other offences not classed, complete the list of 339,091 summary convictions, to be added to the 14,254 convictions on indictment for more serious offences. Thus, the convictions on indictment in England in the year amounted to 7 per 10,000 of the population; and the summary convictions for the minor offences above described were 160 per 10,000 of population. The number of summary convictions increases, but the increase is in that class of them which are punished by fine, and are not regarded as requiring a sentence of imprisonment.

The question whether the gamekeeper of the lord of a manor can seize and take a gun from a poacher on the manor has been raised in the Keswick county court. An action was brought by William Valentine against William Cape and Abraham Starkey to recover the value of a gun taken from the plaintiff by the defendants, who were acting as gamekeepers to Lord Leconfield, within the manor of Braithwaite and Coledale. The facts were not disputed, and the entire question rested upon the construction to be put upon the 13th section of the Game Act, which is as follows:—"That any lord of a manor may appoint one or more persons as gamekeeper or gamekeepers to preserve or kill the game within such manor, and to authorize such gamekeeper or gamekeepers to seize and take for the use of such lord all such dogs, nets, and other engines and instruments for the taking and killing of game as shall be used within the said limits by any person not authorized to kill game for want of a game certificate." The word gun is omitted from that section, but it was contended on behalf of the defendants that gun was included in the words "other engines or instruments." The judge, Mr. T. H. Ingham, in delivering judgment, said the point was one which had never before been raised in the law courts. Among the learned commentators on the game laws he found great perplexity and difference of opinion upon the point; but having reviewed former statutes, he said it appeared quite clear to him that in all cases where the Legislature intended to include gun, that word has always been specifically introduced. But the most conclusive fact of all to his mind that the Legislature purposely left out the word gun in the 13th sec. of 1 and 2 Wm. IV., c. 32, was the language of a subsequent section in this very Act, namely, sec. 23, where it is enacted, "that if any person shall use any dog, gun, net, or other engine or instrument, for the purpose of searching for, or killing or taking game, &c., shall forfeit, &c." Here each and every word of the 13th sec. was used, but adding the word gun. In the face of this language, was it not a most violent conclusion to say that the 13th sec. includes all which the 23rd sec. includes? If it were contended that the words of the 13th sec. include gun, would not the Legislature have used the same language in the 23rd sec.? He had come clearly to the opinion that the Legislature never meant to give the power of seizing a gun under the 13th sec. of the Game Act, and even if it did, he felt bound to adhere to the well-known principle of not extending penal Acts in the least degree beyond their express language, and therefore his verdict would be for the plaintiff.—Pall Mall Gazette.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

WILL—THELLUSON ACT.—B. bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees, upon trust that they should invest the same in Government or real securities, and apply the interest thereof, or as much as might be necessary, towards the maintenance of his son for life. And upon further trust to lay out and invest any surplus which might from time to time remain of and from the said interest, dividends, and proceeds, after such application as aforesaid, and to treat and consider such surplus in all respects as part of his (the testator's) personal estate and effects. The son, who was a lunatic, survived the testator more than thirty years, and during his life the trustees, after providing for his maintenance out of the income of the property, had invested and accumulated the surplus. On his death a question arose as to whether such investment was an accumulation within the Thelluson Act: Held, that, inasmuch as it had been directed by the testator himself it came within the Act, and that all accumulations beyond twenty-one years from the testator's death must be treated as property undisposed of. B. bequeathed a moiety of the residue of his personal estate to S., accompanied with a direction that, in the event of his becoming entitled to it, certain "debts and sums of money then due to the testator from him, and the interest thereon, should be a charge upon and deducted from his share of the residue." Held, on S. becoming entitled to the property more than thirty years after the death of the testator, that the penalty alone on certain bonds in which he was indebted to the testator was to be deducted from his share of the residue : (Matthews v. Keble, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 832. V. C. S.)

PRACTICE—JUDGMENT-CREDITOR.—A petition to wind-up was presented after action brought, but before judgment, and the creditors having no notice of the petition, signed judgment, issued execution, and seized before the order to wind-up was made. The Court, under the power given by sect. 87, refused a motion for an injunction to restrain execution : (Re Bastow and Co. 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 788. V. C. M.)

CONTRIBUTORY — MISREPRESENTATION. — The shareholders in a company formed under the Companies Act 1862 are liable, on the winding-up of such company, as contributories to the payment of creditors of the company, although they may have been induced to subscribe for or to purchase the shares they ohld by false and fraudulent misrepresentations in the prospectus or in the memorandum or articles of association. Aliter, in a case between the company and a shareholder seeking to be relieved from his contract, or where the company is suing the shareholders for calls. The decision in the case of Reese River Mining Company, ex parte Smith, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 549, questioned and commented upon : (Oakes v. Turquand, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 808. H. of L.)

CHANCERY PRACTICE—ORDER OF DIVORCE COURT.—Where the Divorce Court has made an absolute order for dissolution of marriage, and an order for permanent alimony, and the late husband is dissipating his property, or putting it out of his power, the Court will grant an injunction, and appoint a receiver to protect it for the benefit of the former wife : (Sidney v. Sidney, 17 L. T. Rep. N S. 9. V. C. M.)

INQUISITION BEFORE SHERIFF — COMPENSATION FOR SEVERANCE—RAILWAY CLAUSES ACT, ss. 68, 69.—Land of the plaintiff was intersected and severed by the line of a railway company, and access to a portion of it cut off. The land at the time of the severance and inquisition was agricultural land, but was favourably situated for building purposes. The jury at the inquisition to assess compensation were directed by the sheriff that if they valued the land as building land they ought to assess the damage for severance on the principle that all access was cut off: Held, that inasmuch as under ss. 68 and 69 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act accommodation works could only be ordered by the justices with reference to the present uses of the land, the direction was right : (Reg. v. Brown, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 827. Q. B.)

ADVERSE WITNESS—HOW HE MAY BE EXAMINED.—A witness called on behalf of the plaintiff gave evidence quite different from the proof in the brief of plaintiff's counsel, and from the heads of evidence as taken down in writing by plaintiff's attorney, and alleged to have been read over by him to the witness. The witness was considered sufficiently adverse, within the meaning of sect. 22 of the C. L. P. A., 1854, to be examined as to his previous statements to the plaintiff's attorney ; and the Judge allowed the witness to be asked whether he did not say the several things stated in the paper containing the heads of his evidence as taken down by plaintiff's attorney, but refused permission to examine the witness from the paper "as a statement in writing" made by him within sect. 24 of the C. L. P. A., 1854 : (Amstell v. Alexander, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 830. Bramwell, B.)

WRIT OF MANDAMUS.—Certain trustees had power by statute had power to improve the navigation of the river W., and they made weirs, locks, and clows thereon. By the act all persons whose lands were injured by reason of the navigation were entitled to compensation. E., whose lands adjoined the river, issued a mandamus, alleging that the trustees had the management of the weirs and clows, and did not raise the clows high enough, and in consequence of the overflow of water E. was injured by reason of the navigation, The return denied that the damage was by reason of the navigation. Held, affirming the judgment of the Ex. Ch.), that the writ after verdict must be taken sufficiently to allege that the not raising the clows by the trustees caused the damage to E. : Semble, if such a writ had been objected to before verdict it must have been quashed for defect in the allegations : (Lord Delamere v. The Queen, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1.)

CONTEMPT OF COURT.—Where the writer of an article in a newspaper made comments, calculated to prejudice the plaintiff's case, on affidavits filed on behalf of the plaintiff, but not yet before the court, on an application to commit the publisher for contempt, the Court held that the publisher had been guilty of gross contempt of court, but on an ample apology being made by him, considered it sufficient to make him pay the costs of the application. The rules which have been laid down by the court as to fair comments on matters of public interest do not extend to matters waiting for argument and decision : (Tichborne v. Mostyn, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 5. V. C. W.)

SHAREHOLDER—MISREPRESENTATION IN PROSPECTUS—SUPPRESSIO VERI.—The articles of association provided that the promoter was to receive £1,500. He was the owner of the property, which the company was to buy of him for £6,250, and which he had recently purchased for £1,500. The prospectus stated the capital to be £25,000, in 5,000 shares, and that a guaranteed dividend of not less than 15 per cent. for the first five years, and all profits above 20 per cent. would be carried to the account of the company. The guarantee was only the personal one of the promoter. The plaintiff, who took shares on faith of the prospectus, was held to be entitled to be removed from the register, on the ground of misrepresentation, and it was also held that the difference between the £1,500 and the £6,250 must be deemed to be promotion money, and not warranted by the articles : (Kent v. The Freehold Land, &c., Company, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 77. V.C.W.)

BILL OF LADING—FOREIGN COIN CARRIED AS CARGO AND LOST.—Where a ship at Melbourne bound for New York received on freight a quantity of sovereigns and gave a usual bill of lading therefor, but failed on her arrival to deliver them to the indorsee of the bill of lading : Held that in fixing the amount of damages, the bill of lading was to be treated not as a contract to pay money, but to carry and deliver goods. That the value of the sovereigns was not to be fixed by a statute which fixed its computation for ordinary transactions, but by their actual value in the currency of the country : That the clause in the bill of lading fixing the freight at so many pounds sterling was a promise to pay money, and in calculating the freight the pound sterling must be taken at its legal value : (The Patrick Henry, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 76, Un. St. Adm. Ct.)

REVERSION—LIFE-ESTATE—MORTGAGE.—The plaintiff was entitled to a life-estate in moneys and funds, which had arisen from the sale of certain settled estates. This life-estate was subject to two jointure rentcharges, one of £1,000, in favour of C., and another of £500; and also to mortgages to the amount of £23,000. Being under great pressure for want of money, plaintiff applied to the defendant, a money lender, for a loan of £1,000, which was advanced, and the plaintiff executed an indenture whereby, in consideration of that advance, he covenanted for payment within three months after the death of C. of the sum of £3,300, and interest thereon at the rate of £1 per cent., per annum, and he covenanted to insure his life for £3,500. And in the indenture was a proviso that if the plaintiff should pay the defendant £1,500 before the 15th Aug., 1865, and all the interest, premiums, and costs up to that date, then the defendant would re-assign. On the 8th Jan., 1865, the defendant also signed a memorandum whereby, in consideration of £400 then due, he agreed that the £400 and interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per month, should be tacked to the previous mortgage. The bill asked that, on payment to the defendant of such sums as the court should consider him entitled to for principal and interest, he might be decreed to re-assign the life-estate. The M. R. considered that this was the sale of a reversion at an inadequate value, and ordered the assignment to be cancelled and the property to be re-conveyed on payment of principal and interest at 5 per cent.: Held, reversing the decision of the M. R., that a life-estate, merely because it was subject to charges for lives and to mortgages, could not be considered a reversion; it was only an estate which would be increased on the deaths of certain persons: held further, that, although £5 per cent. per month was an excessive rate of interest, still, as the plaintiff was of full age, and knew what he was doing, the defendant was entitled to insist upon his agreement: (Webster v. Cook, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 821. L.C.)

One of the four tenements is occupied as a bank, by the Northern Banking Company, and is three stories high. The other three houses are also three stories high, and have good shops in an excellent situation for any business; all the premises are in good order, and will not require a shilling outlay.

The value of property in Ballybofey is gradually increasing since the railway was opened in that locality.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 40.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

IN our last number we arrived at that point in the history of the jury system in England where the jurors had ceased to be necessarily the witnesses or recognitors of the case they were to try, and when witnesses were summoned to assist the jurors in coming to a verdict, though without having power to influence that verdict We also saw that though the trial by jury was established by the law of the land as the indubitable right of every citizen, still it was not always to be obtained, and there are numerous instances on record in the old chronicles and the statutes of the Norman, and even the Plantagenet and Lancastrian Sovereigns, where both the parties to a trial, but most frequently in the case of the defendants, were willing to pay for that privilege.

As might be expected also, this institution did not escape the attack of those sovereigns whose power, from one cause or another, was greater than usual, or whose nature made them tyrannical and jealous of anything which seemed to make their subjects in any way independent of them; and thus we find that in Queen Elizabeth's reign many attempts, frequently successful, were made to bring juries under the power and management of the legislative officers of the Crown. And, until a much later period, they were fined for their verdicts when they were not of such a kind as pleased the Government; sometimes they were intimidated by the influence of the Star Chamber, and very often, indeed, the point which is not yet altogether settled, was raised—as to their right to return a general verdict, especially in the matters of manslaughter and murder, and libel.

The illegal and arbitrary jurisdiction of the Council of the Star Chamber continued, in despite of several positive statutes against it, through all the duration of the Plantagenet dynasty to deprive the subject, in many criminal charges, of the privilege of trial by his peers; and this jurisdiction, exercised more vigorously, was the principal grievance of English subjects under the Tudors, and, though it did not exactly pass sentence in capital charges, yet, by intimidating jurors, it could always procure conviction, which it could not legally pronounce; and in evidence of this we may be allowed to quote a paragraph from Sir Thomas Smith's Commonwealth of England, book 3:—"If the jury do pronounce not guilty upon the prisoner, against whom manifest witness is brought in, the prisoner escapeth, but the twelve are not only rebuked by the judges, but also threatened of punishment, and many times commanded to appear in the Star Chamber, or before the Privy Council, for the matter. But this threatening chanceth oftener than the execution thereof; and the twelve answer in the most gentle words, they did it according to their consciences, and pray the judge to be good unto them, and so it passeth away for the most part. Yet I have seen in my time that an inquest for pronouncing one not guilty of treason, contrary to such evidence as was brought in, were not only imprisoned for a space, but a large fine set upon their heads, which they were fain to pay; another inquest for acquitting another, besides paying a fine, were put to open ignominy and shame. But these doings were even then accounted of many tyrannical and contrary to the liberty and custom of the realm of England."

Smith probably alludes to the case of Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, who was acquitted by a jury in the reign of Queen Mary—the jury were committed to prison for their verdict, and four of them who acknowledged their crime were released, but the rest attempted to justify themselves before the Council of the Star Chamber, and were sentenced to pay a fine of one thousand marks each. The 26th of Henry VIII., cap. 4, even enacts that if a Welsh jury should acquit a prisoner contrary to direct evidence, the judge may bind them to appear before the President and Council of the Welsh marches. There was also a case decided in Queen Elizabeth's reign, that against Stubbe, the lawyer, for publishing a pamphlet against the Queen's intended marriage with the Duke of Anjou, for which Stubbe was condemned to have his right hand cut off. It is said that when the penalty was inflicted, taking off his hat with his left, he exclaimed, "Long live Queen Elizabeth;" and Hallam, noted for his critical acumen and judicial impartiality, states that this pamphlet was very far from being what some have ignorantly or unjustly called it, a virulent libel, but is written in a sensible manner and with unfeigned loyalty and affection towards the Queen. We cannot wonder, however, at any verdict that could be returned by a jury, when we consider the means the Government had for securing it. The sheriff returned a panel, either according to express directions, of which there are proofs, or to what he judged himself of the Crown's intention and interest. If the verdict had gone against the prosecution in a matter of moment, the jurors must have been prepared to appear before the Council of the Star Chamber, and thus we see that the control of this entirely arbitrary tribunal rendered powerless all minor jurisdictions. Instances of the kind mentioned above were not of very frequent occurrence, but they happened sufficiently often to keep jurors in awe. There was a very flagrant case in point, just after the Restoration, when two judges, Hyde and Keeling, exercised and revived an arbitrary power which had fallen into disuse during the Commonwealth; it was, when a grand jury having found a bill for manslaughter instead of murder, against the direction of Judge Keeling, they were summoned before the Court of King's Bench and dismissed with a reprimand instead of fine; this proceeding attracted the notice of the House of Commons, who passed some resolutions against Keeling for illegal and arbitrary proceedings in his office, and also resolved that he should be brought to trial; but he appeared at the bar of the House, and extenuated and excused his offence so much that the House, after resolving that the practice of fining or imprisoning jurors is illegal, came to a second resolution to proceed no further against him.—(Journal of the House of Commons for 16th October, 1867, quoted by Hallam, in his Const. Hist.).

But more decisive means were afterwards taken to render abortive the precedents which some of the judges tried to establish; for, in two cases where the fines imposed upon jurors had been estreated into the Exchequer, Chief Baron Hall stayed process, and it was afterwards resolved by all the judges, except one, that it was against the law to fine a jury for giving a verdict contrary to the Court's direction. Yet, notwithstanding this determination, in 1670, on a trial of the celebrated Quaker, Penn, and Mead, at the Old Bailey, before the Recorder of London, on an indictment for an unlawful assembly, a juryman named Bushel who deserves the imperishable gratitude of his countrymen, was determined, and encouraged his fellow jurors, to be firm against all the threats of the Court, and acquitted the prisoners. The Recorder set a fine of forty marks on each of the jurors for perverseness and contumacy. Bushel refused to pay the fine, and the Recorder committed him to prison. He sued out a writ of Habeas Corpus from the Court of Common Pleas, and on a return being made to it that he had, as a juror, acquitted Penn and Mead contra plenam et manifestam evidentiam the subject was elaborately discussed; and Chief Justice Vaughan pronounced the return inefficient, and the fine and imprisonment illegal. From that time the invaluable doctrine that a jury, in the discharge of their duty, are responsible only to God and their consciences, has never been shaken or impeached. Erskine, in his famous speech for the Dean of St. Asaph, observed that the country was almost as much indebted to Bushel for his conduct in resisting the fine as to Hampden for resisting ship-money. In earlier times when the jurors were also witnesses, they were liable to be punished by a writ of Attaint if a second jury, consisting of twenty-four, found them guilty of giving a false verdict. The punishment in such a case was that the jurors should be deprived of all their property, be imprisoned, and become for ever infamous; and that the plaintiff should be restored to all he had lost by reason of the unjust verdict. This proceeding had become obsolete in the reign of Elizabeth, though not formally abolished till the 5th George IV. (Blackstone 3, p. 433).

In comparatively modern times the question arose as to the province of a jury in trying cases for libel. The judges and lawyers for the most part maintained that the province of the jury was only to determine the fact of publication, and also whether the libel meant what it was alleged in the indictment to mean, not whether such meaning were criminal or innocent—a question of law which the Court only was competent to decide. That the jury might acquit at their pleasure was undeniable, but it was asserted that they would do so in violation of their oaths and duty if they should reject the opinion of the judge by whom they were to be guided as to the general law. Others of great authority in the science of jurisprudence, and the majority of the general public, thinking that this would throw the liberty of the press into the hands of the judges, maintain that the jury had a strict right to take the whole matter into their consideration, and determine the defendant's criminality or innocence according to the nature and circumstances of the publication. This point was finally settled by Mr. Fox's Libel Bill in 1792, "which declares the right of the jury to find a general verdict upon the whole matter; and, though from causes easy to explain it is not drawn in the most intelligible and consistent manner, was certainly designed to turn the defendant's intention—as it might be laudable or innocent, seditious or malignant—into a matter of fact for their inquiry and decision."—(Hallam.)

A few weeks ago it was our sad task to pay a tribute to the memory of one of Ireland's greatest lawyers, and we now have another great man to regret. Lord Rosse, although not a lawyer, was one of the most prominent men of the day in science, and reflected the highest credit on his country, his loss then must be severely felt by the nation at large. His discoveries, and his zeal in the study of astronomy, are too well known to the world to require us to dilate upon them; and that he did not neglect the duties of his position, in considering what was necessary for the welfare of his countrymen, his late publications on the Land Question testify. The Right Hon. William, Earl of Rosse in the Irish Peerage, was born at York, in 1800. He was the eldest son of that Sir Lawrence Parsons, Bart, afterwards second Earl of Rosse, who took so prominent a part in the Irish House of Commons, in opposing the Legislative Union with Great Britain. Lord Rosse was educated first at Trinity College, Dublin, and afterwards proceeded to Oxford, where he graduated in the First Class in Science; thus giving an early intimation of his eminent success in that study in after life. The earldom was created in 1806, and Lord Rosse was one of our representative Peers since 1845. The posts of dignity which he held are a sufficient proof of the value set upon his character as a man, his integrity as a true patriot, and his discoveries in the world of science. He was President of the Royal Society of London; Chancellor of the University of Dublin, in which honour he succeeded the late Primate Beresford; Senior Member of the Senate of the Queen's University in Ireland; one of the Visitors of Maynooth College; Vice-President of the Statistical Society; Doctor of Laws of the University of Cambridge; Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of King's County; Colonel of Militia; and Knight of the Order of St. Patrick. He was also named a Knight of the Legion of Honour by the Emperor of the French, in 1855. Lord Rosse was a Conservative in politics, but never allowed himself to become a mere partisan; he represented the King's County in Parliament from 1821 to 1834, and was an excellent landlord. He is succeeded by his son, Lord Oxmantown, who is twenty-seven years of age, and who graduated in Trinity College, Dublin, in 1864.

This being the first day of Michaelmas Term, the Courts of Chancery and Law resume their sittings with the usual formalities, but with no prospect of a larger share of work than that which they have had to do for the last couple of years. Nor can we expect for some time, at least, an increase in the amount of general business.

On this day the new Chancery Act—that is, the Practice and Procedure part of it—comes into force, and a system of practice will be introduced entirely different from that to which we have been accustomed. As yet the General Orders required by the Act have not appeared, and consequently more than the skeleton of the new system is not known; and, no doubt, considerable difficulty will be found, as was the case in 1850, in deciding what course to pursue in cases too pressing to await the appearance of the Orders. Many books of practice are promised, and will appear immediately after the Orders, but until their appearance the English books must guide the practitioner, while the general business of the Court will probably be rather increased by the new practice; it yet remains a most difficult point as to whether that increase will be an advantage to the legal professions; indeed, there can be little doubt that the business of the Bar will be much diminished, more particularly if counsel are not to appear before the Chief Clerk in cases coming within his jurisdiction. The measure, however, seems to be looked upon with great favour by the profession, and there can now be little doubt that the Act of 1850 was one which had not the effect which its supporters expected, namely, the administering of justice at a cheap rate.

CONSOLIDATED CHAMBER.

Reported by J. L. WHITTLE, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Coram, O'BRIEN, J.

25th Oct., 1867.—The Queen at the prosecution of J. Ramsay.

W. O'Brien moved for a conditional order for a Habeas Corpus, or for a writ of certiorari in this matter, or for both. The prosecution was—custody under an order of committal of the 30th May. A warrant against the prisoner was issued on Sunday, the 19th May, dated that day; on that the prisoner was arrested, and an order was made on that day committing him to prison, and a warrant of committal made out. Subsequently another warrant was issued on the 30th of May, but that was also founded on the order of the 19th May, and so was equally bad. A writ of Habeas Corpus might not suffice, as it would be necessary to bring up the whole proceedings.

O'BRIEN, J.—Take a conditional order for both, and if cause is shown it can then be determined which shall issue first.

Noonan, attorney.

CLARK v. MARSH AND ANOTHER.

Munroe, for defendant, moved that the plaintiff, residing at Glasgow, be compelled to give security for costs.

Falkiner, Q.C., for plaintiff, relied on the following undertaking endorsed by the plaintiff:—"I hereby, as attorney for and on behalf of the defendants within named, accept service of the within plaint, and admit that same has been, this 3rd day of Oct., 1867, served upon them, and I undertake to appear and file a defence thereto within the usual time on their behalf.

"WILLIAM E. BATWELL."

He contended that the motion was in violation of that undertaking to file a defence within the usual time.

Munroe in reply.

O'BRIEN, J., granted the application.

Attorney for plaintiff, Samuel Black.

Attorney for defendant, W. E. Batwell.

CIVIL BILL COURT.

(Before CHARLES KELLY, Esq., Q.C.)

CASEY and COX v. "THE MIDLAND G. W. RAILWAY."

Canal Company—Liability—Decision, &c.

This was an action brought by the plaintiffs, who are farmers resident in the County of Longford, against the defendants, as proprietors of the "Royal Canal," by reason of the negligence of their servants in not taking proper care of same, whereby plaintiffs' fields were flooded with water in the present year, and by said water remaining on their lands they have sustained considerable loss.

M'Dermott, on the part of the Company, contended that they were not bound to keep in repair the boundaries of said Canal (near which the source of the damage arose); that the fields so flooded and injury consequent thereon, was not from the negligence of the Company's servants. If such a case were decided against them, it would cast a grave responsibility on them, and in support of his defence cited several Acts of Parliament to bear on the subject.

His WORSHIP having expressed his opinion on the case, decided that the Company's servants should at once go and examine the place where it was alleged this mishap occurred, and put same in repair; and on proof of same at next Sessions would grant a dismiss, without liberty of bringing an action for subsequent damages.

For plaintiffs, John Wilson and L. Fleming, S.C.P., Longford.

For defendant, M'Dermott, instructed by C. Reynolds.

When the business of the Court of Admiralty, under its ancient and, we might say, obsolete practice, was terminated at the last sitting of the outgoing Judge on Friday, Dr. Todd, Q.C., the senior Advocate present, addressing Judge Kelly, said—Before your Lordship retires I wish to say a few words. The new Act of Parliament comes into operation to-morrow, and as this is the last time you will sit on that Bench, I desire, on behalf of the Advocates in the habit of practising before your Lordship, to express our sense of the great courtesy and kindness with which you have always attended to what fell from them. We have also to express our opinion of the ability and diligence with which your Lordship has discharged the duties of an office, sometimes extremely onerous, and always, I should say, very much underrated—not by the public, but by those who ought to be better acquainted with your Lordship and your services. It is owing chiefly to your Lordship's ability and your diligence in the discharge of your duties that this court has risen to the high position it at present enjoys in the mercantile opinion of this kingdom. I think it will be gratifying to your Lordship to know that I have the authority of my friend who succeeds your Lordship to say that he fully concurs in the sentiments I have already expressed towards your Lordship on your retirement into private life.

Mr. Hamerton, Queen's Proctor, said—My Lord, in the absence of Mr. Anderson, the senior Proctor, I have only to state that I cannot add one word to what Dr. Todd has said.

Judge Kelly, who appeared deeply moved, said—This address comes on me somewhat by surprise. I had intended, as I expected, to retire with the same quietude with which my retirement was effected. I could almost have wished to be spared this parting with old friends. I fully appreciate the kindness of your address, Dr. Todd. It is gratifying to me to find amongst the present attendance of the court some who are not always here, and who seem to pay me a compliment by coming just now. It would be more than affectation in me not to say that I part from this scene of my duty with great regret. I might add—it is but natural—and natural because it is true—that I have a right to feel indignant at the mode in which my retirement has been effected, and the almost merciless manner in which I have been treated. With that I am done. I only say that those who know me well will feel that this expression, whether expected or not, is a natural one. I thank the Advocates, and I thank the Proctors in thus parting from the place where the most important part of my life has been spent. I wish you all every happiness.

We understand that the incoming Judge, Dr. Townsend, Q.C., will be sworn into office before the Right Honourable the Lord Chancellor on Monday next, the 4th instant.

KING'S INNS—MICHAELMAS TERM 1867.

At the general examination of students held before the Benchers at the Hall of the King's Inns, on Friday and Saturday, 25th and 26th October, 1867, the Legal Education Committee awarded to James Fagan Rochfort, Esq., B. A., London University, a first prize of 10 guineas; to James Orr, Esq., B.A., Cambridge, a second prize of 5 guineas; and to Ulick Ralph Burke, Esq., A.B., T.C.D., a certificate of having satisfactorily passed the general examination.

THE CERTIFICATE DUTY OF ATTORNEYS IN IRELAND.—A meeting of the solicitors practising in Belfast has been held in their room in the County Courthouse, for the purpose of considering the propriety of abolishing the certificate duty at present imposed on attorneys in Ireland. The chair was occupied by Mr. Alexander O'Rorke. Several resolutions were proposed and seconded recommending that every effort should be made to have the certificate duty abolished.

Mr. Augustus Henry Ward, merchant, of Wisbeach, was brought before the Cambridge magistrates on the charge of assaulting in a railway carriage a young lady named Lucy Williams, 14½ years of age, who was on her way from Norwich to school at St. John's-wood. The assault consisted in having attempted to pull the young lady on his knee and kissing her several times against her will. The magistrates considered the case proved, and sentenced Mr. Ward to pay £5 and expenses, or undergo two months' hard labour. A case was granted for the court above.

Ex-parte Samuel Donnell, Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD BY PUBLIC AUCTION, before the Hon. Judge Lynch, at the Landed Estates' Court, Inn's-quay, Dublin, on TUESDAY, the 5th day of NOVEMBER, 1867, in One Lot. DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Dwelling-houses and Premises to be sold, are situate on the south side of the Street of Ballybofey, in the Barony of Raphoe, and County of Donegal, held under lease dated 18th March, 1778, for lives renewable for ever. A fee-farm grant of said lease will be executed to the purchaser. The rent payable thereunder is £11 1s. 8d. sterling, and 6d. in the £ Receiver's fees.

The other portion of the premises to be sold, are held under lease, dated 20th September, 1853, for lives renewable for ever, subject to the yearly rent of £10 10s. sterling.

The premises are situate in the best and most central part of the thriving Town of Ballybofey, and well circumstanced for any kind of business on an extensive scale, and within ten minutes' walk of the Fin Valley Railway.

One of the four tenements is occupied as a bank, by the Northern Banking Company, and is three stories high. The other three houses are also three stories high, and have good shops in an excellent situation for any business; all the premises are in good order, and will not require a shilling outlay.

The value of property in Ballybofey is gradually increasing since the railway was opened in that locality.

Ballybofey is one of the most promising towns of the kind in all the County, having the advantage of good markets for sale of agricultural produce, which is abundant in that locality, therefore the property for sale is a most eligible investment.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 41.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.}

IN the assize, as instituted by Henry II., it was necessary that twelve jurors should agree in order to determine the question of disseisin, but this unanimity was not then secured by any process which tended to make the agreement compulsory. The system of afforcement explained in a former article, only arranged that a sufficient number should be added to the panel until twelve were at last found to agree in the same conclusion, and this became the verdict of the assize.

The discussion as to why twelve should be the number is not altogether relevant to the question of unanimity, but it may not be out of place to remark that the number of jurors was a mere question of degree, and must depend very much upon the state of society, the intelligence of the jurors, &c. The number would, at first, naturally be in proportion to the magnitude of the question at issue—that is, at the time when the jurors were witnesses. The law required two witnesses at least, and sometimes more, to establish a fact; five witnesses were necessary to prove payment of a debt secured by a written instrument. Twelve, however, seems to have been a favourite number amongst all tribes in the early ages of civilization. Amongst the Anglo-Saxons twelve lahmen administered the law, the number of compurgators was twelve, and this number prevailed on the Continent, so that in England long habit caused it to be considered as the proper number to establish the credibility of a person or a fact. Another theory states that "the jury was made to consist of twelve from analogy with the number of the prophets, the number of the apostles. . . . . . And as the judges were twelve anciently to try and determine matters of law, and always when there is any waging law there must be twelve to swear in it, and also as for matters of state there were formerly twelve councillors of state."

It is recorded, however, that formerly when eleven of the jurors agreed, their verdict was taken, and the other juror committed to prison. There is a case in point of the time of Henry III. noticed by Forsyth, where, in an issue upon a writ of right, eleven of the jury found for one party, and judgment was given according to the verdict of the eleven, quia prædicti undecim concorditer et præcise dicunt; but in the reign of Edward III. it was finally decided that the verdict of less than twelve was invalid, except where, as it sometimes happens even now, a verdict from less than twelve was taken by both parties, and by the same Act, 41 Assis., 11, it was ordered that the judge of assize ought to carry the jury about with him in a cart until they agreed. According to the "Mirror," quoted in The Law Review, Vol. II., indeed, an unanimous verdict by a jury of twelve was essential to a conviction in the time of King Alfred; it also states that King Alfred was much in the habit of hanging unjust judges, and executed no fewer than forty-four in one year. Amongst others, we find, that he hanged Cadmine, because that the latter judged Hackwy to death without the consent of all the jurors, whereas, he stood on the jury of twelve men, and because the three would have saved him against the nine. Cadmine removed the three, and put others upon the jury, upon Hackwy, but not himself.

Amongst the means adopted for bringing a refractory juror to agree in the verdict, was the law which provided that they should not eat nor drink after they are sworn till they gave their verdict, without the assent and licence of the judge; and "that is ordained by the law for eschewing divers inconveniences that might follow thereupon, and that especially, if they should eat or drink, at the costs of the parties, and therefore if they do contrary it may be laid in arrest of the judgment; but with the assent of the justices they may both eat and drink, as if any of the jurors fall sick before they be agreed of their verdict, so sore that he may not commune of the verdict, then, by the assent of the justices, he may have meat and drink, and also such other things as be necessary for him, and his fellows, also at their own costs, or at the indifferent costs of the parties, if they so agree, or by the assent of the justices, may both eat and drink."—The Doctor and Student, written in the reign of Henry VIII.

This law is now fortunately altered, for it is only after the judge has summed up, and the jury are considering their verdict, that they are prohibited from having "meat, drink, or fire, candle-light only excepted." The reason for the alteration is of course that trials are now prolonged for days and sometimes weeks, an event which could not have happened in the simpler cases, and less complicated system of jurisprudence of former days. It has been suggested, however, that the reason for forbidding the jury from eating and drinking after being empanelled was lest they should thereby become incapable of performing their duties, through over indulgence. The rule that the jurors should be kept sine cibo et potu, dates at least from the time of Edward I. The custom of keeping those upon whose verdict people were waiting, without food, seems to have been widely extended, for among the Lombards we are told that even the judges were to decide cases fasting, ut judices jejuni causas audiant et decernant. We are reminded also by Blackstone that, by a decree of the Golden Bull of the German Empire, if, after the Congress was opened, the electors delayed the election of a king of the Romans for thirty days, they were to be fed only with bread and water until the election was made.

We have exhausted all the space at our disposal in inquiring into the origin of the custom of requiring unanimity in juries, and we shall, in our next number, consider whether the custom, or law as it is now, be for the advantage of society—or whether, since the formation and functions of the jury are different from what they were, the laws regulating its decisions might not also be changed with benefit to the commonwealth.

THE Vice-Chancellor sat on yesterday, to dispose of a number of petitions, which had been lodged as 15th section petitions since the 15th of July, when the new Chancery Act passed. There were two questions for the consideration of the Court—first, whether such petitions could still be referred under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act; second, whether, if there was no power to refer them, they should be treated as general cause petitions, or should be abandoned, and proceedings taken by summons under the new Chancery Act. On these questions, the 39th, 52nd, and 175th sections of the new Act were referred to. The 39th section enacts that no reference shall be made to any of the Masters in Ordinary except in suits pending at the passing of the Act, or in suits in which, from some previous reference made in some other suit connected with it, the Court thought it expedient to make such reference; and except in cases to be referred under the Act to the Receiver Master. The same section also provided that all the Masters, until released, should prosecute all business which, on the first day of the present Term, should be pending before them; and also all the references which should be made under Decrees Decretal, or other orders of the Court in suits commenced before the first day of this Term. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the references in the concluding part of the section were confined to orders, by which suits might be sent, under a general reference, for a report, in which he was to act ministerially, and did not extend to 15th section cases. That the 52nd section had plenty to operate on besides, and was intended to save petitions already pending, so as to prevent such proceedings coming to an end. That the words of the 75th section should be read with the words of the 39th section, and subject to the exception in the 39th section. And if there was any doubt on the question, his Lordship thought it safer not to make an order which might prove abortive. Accordingly, most of the petitions were ordered to be proceeded with as general cause petitions; and in some, in which no question of construction or other difficulty arose, proceedings by summons were directed; the question of costs of proceedings already taken being reserved for consideration, the Court being of opinion that they could be allowed in proceedings under the new Act.

THE Honourable Judge Townsend has signified his intention of sitting in the Admiralty Court, for the first time, on Monday next, at eleven o'clock, for the disposal of business.

WE would call the attention of the profession to a report of a very important case in the Court of Common Pleas, reported in our notes of cases.

NEW BENCHER.—Michael Harrison, Esq , Q.C, Solicitor-General, was unanimously elected a Bencher of the Society of King's Inns at a Meeting of the Benchers, held last Saturday.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by Edmond T. Bewley, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

O'Connell v. O'Callaghan.

November 6.—Practice—Court of Appeal—Lodging Petition of Appeal or Answer after proper time lapsed.

Leslie, on behalf of the respondent O'Callaghan, applied for liberty to lodge the answer to the petition of appeal in this case, which had not been lodged, owing to a fatality. Counsel also applied that a cross appeal from the order of the Master of the Rolls might be received, although not brought within the statutable period.

O'Riordan, contra.

The Court allowed the answer to be lodged, but refused the rest of the motion, being of opinion that under the 11th Section of the Chancery Appeal Court (Ireland) Act, 1856, the application for leave to lodge the cross appeal should be made to the Court of Chancery.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Perry v. Perry.

November 8.—Chancery Regulation Act (Ireland) 1850, s. 15—Reference to Master—Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867, ss. 39, 52, 175—Jurisdiction.

This was a cause petition to administer the assets of the late John Perry, and was filed on the 30th of October, 1867

Bewley now moved that the petition should be referred to one of the Masters of the Court, under the 15th section of the Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act. Although the earlier portion of the 39th section of the Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867, might appear expressly to enact that no such reference could be made unless the suit were instituted before the passing of the Act. The proviso contained in a subsequent part of the same section enabled the Master to prosecute references under decrees or orders in all suits commenced before the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1867. By the 52nd Section of the same Act, the 15th Section of the Chancery Regulation (Ireland) Act, 1850, was repealed, "except in so far as may be necessary for the purpose of supporting, continuing, or prosecuting any suit or proceeding begun before" the 1st day of Michaelmas Term, 1867; and it was therefore competent for the Court to make the reference sought. But the 175th section of the Act was still clearer and more precise in its language, and it enacts that, "notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, all suits which on the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1867, shall be pending in the said Court, and all suits commenced before the last mentioned day, which shall after that day be continued or prosecuted in the same manner, and according to the same practice, as if this Act had not passed."

The Vice-Chancellor said that although the language of the Act was not free from doubt, he was of opinion that the Court had not jurisdiction to make a reference in this case under the 15th section of the Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act. The proviso in the 39th section of the recent Act appeared to him to apply to references made under a decree or order in a plenary suit, and not to references in which the entire matter of the cause petition was deferred to the master in a judicial capacity. No doubt, the words of the 175th section of the Act were very large, but they must be taken in connexion with the 39th section, and read as subject to the restrictions which it imposed. The petition should, therefore, be set down as a General Cause Petition.

Solicitors, Taylor, Mackey, and Mortimer.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by Wm. Woodlock, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Lang v. Eakin.

November 5.—Costs—Taxation—Submission to Arbitration—Parties living within the same Civil Bill Jurisdiction.

Motion for an order that the Taxing Master should review his taxation of plaintiff's costs, and disallow the whole of such costs.

The action was brought for breach of covenant in an indenture of apprenticeship. The matter was, by consent (which was made a rule of Court), referred to arbitration, and in the consent it was provided that judgment should be marked for such sum as the arbitrators should award, together with such costs as thereinafter mentioned, "with costs only in case of their finding being for the defendant; that the costs of the action, consent, and award, and making same respectively rules of Court, should abide the result of the award; that the plaintiff should be entitled thereto if the award should be in favour of the plaintiff for any sum of money, and that the defendant should be entitled thereto if the award should be in favour of the defendant."

The arbitrators awarded that a sum of £15 should be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff, as damages, in respect of the subject matter of the action, and the award was made a rule of Court.

The parties lived within the same civil bill jurisdiction.

The Taxing Master allowed the plaintiff full costs.

Mills, for the defendant, in support of the motion.

Palles, Q.C., and Dames, for the plaintiff.

The Court refused the motion with costs, holding that on the construction of the submission, the parties had contracted themselves out of the operation of the 97th Section of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1856, and that the question as to the scale on which the costs were to be taxed did not arise on the frame of the notice of motion.

Attorney for the defendant, John Swanzy.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Reported by William Griffin, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Re O'Shaughnessy.

November 7.—Application to be admitted an Attorney—Service not Served under Articles dispensed with—Examination of Persons wishing to be admitted as Attorneys who have served their Time before the passing of 29 & 30 Vic. c. 84.

The applicant had been bound in the year 1853, and had served five years under his articles, with the exception of four terms—Easter Term, 1855, Michaelmas, 1856, Hilary, 1857, and Easter, 1857—which absence he accounted for as arising from illness, pecuniary embarrassments, and having to attend to some business matters connected with property in the country; and he stated that, with the exception of these four terms, he had attended from the time of his being bound in 1853 until the present Term. That there had been an unfavourable issue to some law proceedings in which his family were concerned, and a trustee had made default, and he was prevented by pecuniary inabilities from paying the stamp duty when bound, but he had paid the stamp duty with interest, and the penalty in May of the present year, and had obtained an order from Morris, J. for the enrolment of his indentures nunc pro tunc.

In 1863 his name appeared as a solicitor in Thom's Directory, and it so continued in 1864, and 1865, and 1866, and until 1867, when it was changed to law agent. The applicant, as to this, stated that at this time, when his name so appeared, he had expected to get the money necessary for payment of the stamp duty and penalty, but that he did not know he would have to pay interest, which amounted to £36, which latter sum he was unable to obtain, and that his friends believing that he would succeed in getting the money which he had gone to Limerick to raise on some property there, had, in his absence and without his knowledge or authority, inserted his name in the Directory as a solicitor, and that he never knew of it until the end of 1866, when he pointed out the mistake and told the manager of the Directory that he was not a law agent or solicitor, and desired to have himself put down as Esq.

M'Dermott, with him Sergeant Barry, in support of the application.

The Court have power and have frequently exercised it to dispense with service for the full term of five years, ex-parte Grady, and this gentleman has served 14 years. The 48th Sec. of the Attorneys' and Solicitors' Act (29 & 30 Vic. c. 84) leaves the Court the same power that they exercised under the old Act. 13 & 14 Geo. III. c. 31, s. 9.

Barlow, on behalf of the Law Society—The case was not fairly brought before Mr. Justice Morris, when the order for enrolment was obtained ex-parte. It is necessary that at time of being bound an apprentice should have a reasonable hope of being able to pay the duty, and the courts are very strict about the proper number of terms being served under the articles, unless a very strong case is made. This gentleman's explanations of his inability to pay the duty, and of his hope of being able to do so at the time he was bound, and about his name being inserted in the Directory as a solicitor, are unsatisfactory. He does not make out a case entitling him to call upon the Court to dispense with the regular rules. He referred to Ex-parte Smith, 1 El. and El., 928; Ex-parte Belk, 2 H and C.; Ex-parte Jones, 14 C.B., N.S.; Ex-parte Edwards, 10 Eng. Jurist, N.S., 17—Court have no jurisdiction under present Act.

MONAHAN, C.J.—In this case we have no doubt that we have jurisdiction, and no doubt as to expressing it. As to the enrolment we cannot entertain any such question as to that end. If the order for enrolment was improperly made, which I do not think it was, it is open to question, if persons choose to expose themselves to the danger of having costs given against them. This gentleman has failed to serve four of the terms under his articles; he has stated the peculiar circumstances under which he was unable to do so, and in lieu of those four terms, he has served, though not strictly under articles, fourteen years. In our opinion he has served enough to make up for the deficiency, unless some misconduct on his part can be shown. The only matter alleged against him is that as to his name in the Directory, but he states that he never acted as a solicitor, or except as apprentice to his master, and that this mistake occurred without his knowledge, and that as soon as he discovered it he went to get it corrected. We think, therefore, that this is a case in which we should exercise our jurisdiction in dispensing with the deficiency in service under the articles. It was a case, however, which the Law Society was quite right in having fully brought before the notice of the Court.

Barlow then submitted to the Court that the applicant, under the provisions of the 29 & 30 Vic., c. 84, was bound to pass an examination previous to admission. This point was allowed to stand for argument until the following day.

Nov. 8th.—A full report of the argument, and of the judgment, will be given in our next number. The Court directed the applicant to be examined in the practice of the Courts, &c., by the examiners of the Law Society, the motion to stand over.

STEVENSON v. THE LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Nov. 5.—Substitution of Service—Agency.

The plaintiff was a passenger from Londonderry to Birmingham via Belfast and Fleetwood, and the action was for a trunk lost upon the journey. The first count averred that the defendants were carriers from Londonderry to Birmingham, and that plaintiff and his luggage were received by the defendants to be carried from Londonderry to Birmingham. The second count averred that the defendants were carriers from Fleetwood to Birmingham, and that they received the plaintiff and his luggage to be carried from Fleetwood to Birmingham. The plaintiff stated in his affidavit that the plaintiff took a through ticket from Londonderry to Birmingham at the office of the Northern Counties Railway Company at Londonderry, and that on the back of the ticket was printed—"This ticket, so far as regards any distance beyond the limit of the line of the Londonderry and Coleraine Railway Company, is issued by them as agents only for other companies, and they will not be responsible for the safe carriage of any passenger, or of any articles accompanying such passenger, beyond the said limit;" that though the name of the Londonderry and Coleraine Company appeared on the ticket, that the ticket was, in fact, issued by the Northern Counties Railway Company, who work the Londonderry and Coleraine Railway, which company have no office in Ireland, and that the contract was made in the city of Londonderry with the Northern Counties Railway Company, who represented themselves to be agents of the defendants, and were such agents as plaintiff believes. It was denied in the affidavit filed to resist the motion that the Northern Counties Railway had authority to contract, or were agents for the defendants, or that the defendants had any office or agent in Londonderry, or that the defendants were carriers from Londonderry to Birmingham. It was further stated by the plaintiff that on the journey from Fleetwood to Birmingham he from time to time showed his ticket to the officers of the defendants who required to see it, and recognized it as the ticket by virtue of which plaintiff was travelling, and finally took it up from him at Birmingham; and that the luggage was lost between Fleetwood and Birmingham.

Defendants had an agent in Dublin.

Holmes, in support of the motion, urged that the contract was entered into by defendants' agents within the jurisdiction.

Sergeant Armstrong and Boyd, contra, argued that the agency of the Northern Counties Railway was denied, and that the Railway Company with whom the contract was entered into at Londonderry were the sole parties liable.

The COURT considered that as the ticket stated that the first company only contracted as agents beyond their own line, and that ticket had been recognized by the defendants, the order for substitution should be made absolute.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Reported by W. R. Miller, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-Law.

November 5.—Administration Bond.

Harris, Q.C., moved on behalf of the administrator of the goods of the deceased, to make absolute a conditional order to put an administration bond in suit as against the surety, the grant having been limited, and having expired. Proceedings had been taken by the administrator against the limited administrator at law, and a judgment and execution had issued against him, but he had left the country, and the execution was fruitless. A reference had been made at law by consent to the officer of the court to ascertain the amount due by the limited administrator, and great delay had occurred in respect to it.

Dr. Ball, Q.C., and Gibson, contra. The reference was not binding on the surety. The reference by consent amounted to giving the principal time, and so discharged the surety (Rees v. Barrington, 2 Ves. Jr. 540.)

Keatinge, J.—I must disallow the cause shown. I consider that there was no indulgence given, but, on the contrary, that there was an active prosecution of the party's rights.

Cause disallowed with costs.

Probate Duty.

Concannon, for Mr. Barrett, an executor in the will of the deceased, dated the 2nd November, 1846, applied for probate. He swore that the assetts were under £5, but added that proceedings were pending in Chancery with the view of making him a trustee for the next of kin of the deceased, as to a lease which Barrett had obtained of premises from which the deceased had been ejected for non-payment of rent.

Keatinge, J.—A probate stamped with a stamp for £5 would be useless for the purposes required in Chancery. It must be stamped with a stamp adequate to cover the property.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. Field Johnston, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Coram Dobbs, J.

In the Matter of the Estate of Eleanor Graham Nolan, Dillon Graham Nolan, and Robert Nolan, Owners and Petitioners.

July 24.—Declaration of Title—Construction of Will—Charge upon Real Estate.

This was a motion on behalf of the owners and petitioners to disallow an objection filed on behalf of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland, and that the Declaration of Title, as settled, should be signed.

J. E. Nolan, the former owner of the estates, the subject of this petition, from whom the petitioners derived their title, made his will, which was proved on the 13th of July, 1802, and which contained the following clauses:—"I bequeath my whole entire property and estates to John Bern, merchant in Strokestown, and to Richard Plunkett, Esq., of Arkeeran, both in the county of Roscommon, as trustees to this my last will and testament, to carry into effect the several intentions of this my last will and testament. It is my will that my executors and trustees will meet in as few days as possible, and after public notice to my creditors, appoint a day in order to take an inventory of the several debts due and demands of every kind whatsoever, and that they will then inquire into the yearly value of my property in lands or houses, as also the value of my personal property, and on same being done I will and direct that so much as may be found necessary of said properties to discharge the several debts and demands, may be advertised to be sold at as short a day as possible consistent with circumstances. I will and bequeath to my brother Robert the sum of £800, to be levied out of the properties in manner already mentioned. I order that the sum of forty pounds per year be paid out of my landed property, and subject to drive for the same to my trustees, to be laid out for the support and maintenance, in the most comfortable manner, of Elinor M'Guire, of Cloonalis, spinster, during her said Elinor's natural life. I order the sum of £30 sterling for the poor of the united parishes of Killcooley, Killocker, and Ogulls. I order the sum of £5 a year for ever for the poor of said union, said sum to run up so as to make a fund in the different years of scarcity that may occur, and in such years said fund to be distributed amongst the poor of said parishes." The will contained some further legacies and annuities, in which no mention was made of the testator's real estate; it also contained a devise of the residue of his landed property, but no bequest of the residue of his personalty, and it appointed three executors, who were different from the trustees. A codicil to the will contained these words:—"My brother Kelly Nolan is not to get possession of my estates, &c., till all the creditors are fully paid off."

The Commissioners submitted that this will contained an express trust, and they objected to the declaration of title being settled and signed unless subject to the said yearly sum of £5, late currency, and also to the accumulations of said annual sum from the death of testator to the present time.

Walsh, Q.C. (with him Reeves), for the owners and petitioners. The words of the will show that the testator was well aware of the distinction between real and personal estate. Davis v. Gardiner (2 Peere Wms. 137); Greville v. Browne (7 H. of L. 689); Nessen v. Gretton (2 Younge & Collier, 222); Hunt v. Bateman (10 Ir. Eq. R. 360); Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests v. Wybrants (2 Jones & La Touche, 182); 2 Jarman on Wills, p. 571.

Thomas Lefroy, Q.C., and James S. Green, for the Commissioners. The realty and personalty are thrown into a common fund. If there be a doubt upon the question, the Court can refuse to give the declaration of title asked for, otherwise it will preclude the parties from again raising the question.

Reeves, in reply.—This question belongs to that class of questions upon which this Court is continually exercising its jurisdiction.

Dobbs, J.—There is nothing in the argument that my decision against the objection of the Commissioners would preclude them from ever again raising the question, and that, therefore, I should hesitate before so deciding; because, as has been observed by the counsel for Mr. Nolan, the same objection would apply to all similar cases, and power has been given to this Court to decide all the questions that may arise concerning the various rights to property brought into this Court for sale. Enormous powers certainly have been given to the Court. But these parties are in no worse position than in any other case, since they can appeal from my decision to the Court of Appeal, and to the House of Lords.

I have no very great doubt as to the construction of this will, because, to my mind, the meaning of several parts of it appears quite plain, while that of one or two portions is doubtful. But the former are sufficient to determine its construction.

Digitized by Google

The testator begins by bequeathing his "whole entire property and estates" to the trustees. These words must include everything he had. Then come words of doubtful meaning—"to carry into effect the several intentions of this my last will and testament," which may be read in connexion with the words going before, or as beginning the next sentence. No doubt, these trustees were appointed for the express purpose of carrying into effect the trusts of the will, for in the absence of an express trust the claim of the Commissioners would be barred by the Statute of Limitations. But, whether these words belong to the one sentence or the other, they do not add to the force of the former gift to the trustees. It was argued that the words, "the several intentions," occurring in this clause, show that the payments directed by the testator were charged on both his realty and personalty, whereas the intentions must be gathered from the subsequent parts of the will, and, if from them it can be collected that a particular annuity was intended to be charged on the personalty only, then the trustees, as trustees of the real estate, would have no duty in connexion with it. I must, therefore, consider the other parts of the will, in order to discover whether this annuity is charged on the lands, or only given out of the personal estate. All through the will the testator carefully distinguishes between realty and personalty. He charges some payments on one, and some on the other, and some on both. He directs his executors and trustees to meet and appoint a day, in order to take an inventory of his debts, and inquire into the yearly value of his property in lands, as also the value of his personal property, and directs that so much as may be found necessary of said properties to discharge the several debts and demands, may be advertised to be sold. He then proceeds to give a number of annuities and legacies, and carefully distinguishes the way in which they are to be charged. First, he leaves to his brother the sum of £800, "to be levied out of the properties in manner already mentioned." He then gives an annuity of £40, which he directs to be "paid out of my landed property." He then gives a number of legacies and annuities, among which is the one in question, and in speaking of them says nothing about his real estate. He begins by giving a legacy which is charged on both realty and personalty. The second bequest is charged on the realty only, and, in making those which follow, the testator says nothing about his real estate. Therefore, it appears clear to me that, so far as this part of the will is concerned, this annuity of £5 is a gift out of the personalty only. The testator devises the residue of his landed property to his brother Kelly Nolan for life, &c., but makes no bequest of the residue of his personalty. The reason of the decision in Greville v. Browne shows that that decision does not apply to this case, because the ground of it was that in that case the two funds, real and personal, were mixed up together, and here the gift of the residue is of the real estate alone. This objection must be overruled, and as it has been made at the end of a period of sixty-five years, it must be overruled with costs.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE BERWICK.

In re PETTIGREW.

October, 1867.—Arrangement after Bankruptcy—Disputed Debts—Charge and Discharge—The proper way to bring Disputed Claims before the Court.

The bankrupt was a printer having several Government contracts, and he came in under the arrangement clauses, but the case was subsequently turned into bankruptcy, in consequence, as was stated, of the difficulty of dealing with a money-lender, who charged an enormous rate of interest for money advanced to the bankrupt.

Kernan, Q.C., for the bankrupt, stated that it was now proposed to pay the creditors in full, the terms of the arrangement being that the estate should remain vested in two trustees, who should carry out certain contracts now in hands, and subsequently divide the proceeds until all be paid, the bankrupt to be allowed £2 a week for superintending the work, and in the event of the contracts not paying, the trustees to be at liberty to call a meeting of creditors, and to have the bankruptcy proceeded with; but he had no doubt the arrangement would be carried. The bankrupt had been in the hands of a money-lender, who charged him about five hundred per cent. for the advances he made. The creditors came forward and advanced a sum of money to make a compromise with that gentleman, and now that the trader was out of his hands, he (Counsel) had no doubt that the contracts would be performed, and that all the creditors would be paid in full as was proposed.

Levy, for two creditors returned on the schedule as disputed, one for £750 and the other for £250, did not oppose the arrangement, as it was an offer to pay in full; but inasmuch as the claims of his clients were disputed, in point of fact altogether denied, he would ask leave to file a charge, the bankrupt to file a discharge so as to have the claims of the parties ascertained.

JUDGE BERWICK said he believed that was the proper way to bring disputed claims before the Court.

Kernan, on the part of the bankrupt, saw no objection.

Leave given to file a charge, the bankrupt to discharge it.

Final Examination—Building Contract—Claim put forward on the part of Bankrupt.

This was an adjourned meeting for final examination of the bankrupt, who was a builder and contractor at Kanturk. A question was raised as to whether in connexion with the building of the Roman Catholic Church at Kanturk any sum was due. It was alleged by Rev. Dr. O'Regan that the particular works in relation to which the claim was made were included in a general contract, and that the bankrupt had been in fact overpaid so as to be a debtor of Dr. O'Regan.

Kernan, Q.C., appeared for the assignees, and Heron, Q.C., for Rev. Dr. O'Regan.

JUDGE BERWICK called attention to the fact that in the schedule the bankrupt stated that having found there would be no special payment for the particular works in question, he had compensated himself by leaving an unfinished equivalent in the building.

Evidence was taken as to the matter in dispute, consisting of the testimony of the bankrupt and Mr. Hurley, the architect.

The bankrupt also alleged that his plant had been detained by the Rev. Dr. O'Regan, but on the other hand it was represented that the bankrupt had abandoned his work, leaving it unfinished, and that the Rev. Dr. O'Regan had been obliged to retain the plant for finishing the building.

JUDGE BERWICK, after hearing the evidence, declared his opinion that there was no foundation whatever for the claim put forward for the bankrupt, and that he had acted improperly in putting it forward as he had; a very unfounded and impudent imputation of forgery had been made by an insinuation that a signature of the bankrupt himself to one of the drawings was not such, but had been taken by a tracing for the purpose of getting rid of his demand. On examining the document itself, independent of the rest of the evidence, he (Judge Berwick) had no doubt whatever that the bankrupt really did put his name to it, and he was fortified in that opinion by its having turned out that the ground suggested by the bankrupt to enable him to say that it was a forgery, had been explained in a manner so clear and distinct as to leave no doubt of the matter. With respect to the plant, the Rev. Dr. O'Regan was perfectly right in keeping it under the circumstances. Taking into account the relative assets and liabilities of the bankrupt, and the fact that he had kept no books, the passing of his final examination should be suspended for four months.

CIRCUIT CASES.

ROSCOMMON SUMMER ASSIZES.

Reported by Oliver J. Burke, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before O'Brien, J.

Thomas Mulhare v. The Midland Great Western (of Ireland) Railway Company.

July 23; October 1.—The Lessees of the Haulage of a Line of Railway are bound to keep the Drains connected with said Line in Order.

This was an appeal, taken by the defendants, from a decree pronounced by Francis William Brady, Esq., Q.C., Chairman of the County of Roscommon, at the Quarter Sessions of Castlerea, in April, 1867, whereby the learned chairman awarded a sum of £15 damages to the plaintiff.

The action was brought for damages sustained by reason of said defendants not keeping a certain drain, which was cut through plaintiff's lands for the purpose of carrying off the water, clean and properly scoured, whereby said plaintiff's lands became flooded, and his crops much injured.

The Midland Great Western Company, the defendants, asserted that they were not liable at all to keep this drain clean, inasmuch as they were merely haulers of the line which belongs to the Great Northern and Western (of Ireland) Railway Company, and which is constructed between Westport and Athlone, where it meets the defendants' line. That defendants being mere haulers they were not bound to maintain any works in connexion with said line.

The plaintiff insisted that defendants must be held to be the proprietors liable in this action.

Concannon, LL.D., for the plaintiff, submitted that the Midland Company were the proprietors for the time being of the line over which they were such haulers. The word "company" in the 21st Section of the 3 & 4 Vict., c. 97, being an Act for regulating railways, and in the 21st Section of the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 55, also an Act for the regulation of railways, is defined to mean the proprietors, for the time being, of any railway. Clearly, then, the Midlands were the proprietors for the time then being within the contemplation of those Acts, and are therefore liable.

Carleton, Q.C., with Roper, appeared for the defendants. The Midland Great Western Company cannot be held liable for the injury sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the drains being permitted to be choked up. That Company was not bound to keep the drains cleaned; all they had to do with the line was with the haulage, and no more. The Great Northern and Western Company were the proprietors; they made the drain, and against them the plaintiff, if he had any right of action, should, perhaps, have proceeded.

The Great Northern Company were incorporated by their Special Act (20 & 21 Vic., c. 84, sec. 4). That Act enabled them to make their railway from Athlone to Castlerea, and by a subsequent Special Act (23 Vic., c. 45) they were empowered to extend their line to Castlebar. With those Special Acts are incorporated several Public Acts, amongst which are the 8th and 9th Vic., c. 20 (The Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845). By the 3rd section of this last mentioned Act, "The expression 'company' shall mean the company or party which shall be authorized by the Special Act to construct the railway." Now, the company who were so authorized were the Great Northern and Western. The 48th section of same Act thus proceeds—"And with respect to works for the accommodation of lands adjoining the railway, be it enacted as follows:—The Company shall make, and at all times thereafter maintain, the following works for the accommodation of the owner and occupier of lands adjoining the railways, that is to say . . . All necessary . . . drains or other passages, either over or under the side of the railway, of such dimensions as will be sufficient at all times to convey the water as clearly from the lands lying near or affecting the railway as before the making of the railway." The Midland were merely haulers over the Great Northern and Western line, and they were empowered in that behalf by the 46th and 47th section of the 20th and 21st Vic., chap. 84. "It shall be lawful for the Company"—the Great Northern Company—"and the Midland Company to enter into and make such contracts for and with reference to the working of the traffic by this Act authorized, or any part thereof, with the engines and carriages of the Midland Company, and for the interchange and forwarding of traffic passing to and fro from the railways of the Midland Company, and also with reference to the rates, tolls, and charges to be charged by and between the said companies, or for or in respect of any traffic;" to execute all deeds and contracts to carry out same. And during that contract, the very next section—the 47th—authorizes that both the Midland and Great Northern and Western Company merely "for the purpose of calculating the tolls therein, be deemed one continuousline." But no legislation has fastened mere haulers with the duty of scouring drains, which is the manifest duty of the owners and proprietors of the line.

1st Oct.—His Lordship affirmed the decree with costs.

BARRISTERS AND SOLICITORS.

The social distinctions which divided attorneys and the long robe have almost entirely disappeared. Each branch of the profession has its black sheep and uncouth members, whose personal failings and demerits it would be absurd to regard as the qualities of their respective orders; each branch comprises men who neither by culture, nor tone, nor aspiration, merit the sadly misused epithet "gentle." But the best and truly representative members of both branches belong by birth, education, and associations to exactly the same class. Like the wearers of the long robe, our solicitors are, for the most part, the sons of gentlemen, and receive a liberal education before they begin to study for their profession. In boyhood they learn Greek in our public schools, and in a considerable and rapidly increasing proportion of cases, they take degrees at Oxford and Cambridge (and Dublin), before they become articled clerks. It often happens that when two brothers select the law for their vocation, the one puts his name on the books of the Temple and the other enters a solicitor's office; but it never enters the brain of either that he has taken a more or less dignified course than his brother. It is true that the one brother may rise to be a peer, whilst the other cannot do more than make money and get a seat in the House of Commons; and this difference between the eminent successes open to lawyers of the two branches secures for the bar a brighter éclat and wider respect than attorneys possess as a professional fraternity, but the more brilliant prestige of the higher order exercises no appreciable influence on the estimation in which individuals are held. At a time when our most eminent judges have brothers or other near relatives solicitors; when solicitors occupy places of power and respect in every social grade; and when their children are received in every circle of polite life just as readily and cordially as the children of barristers, it may be very confidently asserted that they have lived down their calumniators. —Jeaffreson's Book about Lawyers.

Metcalf, Michael, detained by John Queely. Tincler, solr. for creditor.

DEATH OF SIR M. R. SAUSSE.—We regret to announce the death of Sir Matthew Richard Sausse, which took place at Killarney House, the residence of Lord Castlerosse, where deceased was on a visit. Sir M. Sausse was Chairman of the county of Wexford previous to his being appointed to the Chief Justiceship of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, a post which he filled from 1855 up to last year. Returning home in 1866, he married the Hon. Charlotte Fraser, the youngest daughter of Lord Lovat. Sir Matthew Sausse was in the fifty-eighth year of his age.

The correspondent of the Northern Daily Express, writing on Monday night, says:—"Every arrangement has been made for the departure of Lord Brougham to-day (Tuesday) for his chateau at Cannes, in the south of France. Dr. Michael Taylor, of Penrith, will accompany the venerable lord part of the journey, which will be made at very easy stages, and prolonged over several days, so as not to fatigue his lordship. Lord Brougham, though exceedingly frail, enjoys surprising health."

The legal profession has learnt with more regret than surprise the news of the death of Mr. Edward James, M.P. for Manchester, and leader of the Northern Circuit, which took place a few days ago in Switzerland, where the learned gentleman had been for some time residing in search of the health which had of late sadly suffered under his arduous labours. It had been for a year or two evident that Mr. James hardly possessed sufficient constitutional strength to bear the fatigue of Parliamentary, superadded to forensic, duties. He had, before the present year, betaken himself to the bracing air of Switzerland, in the hope of obtaining restored vigour, but his more intimate friends had been for some little time aware that his trust even in that pure climate was deceptive. His demise vacates two or three legal offices as well as a seat for Manchester. He was Attorney-General for the County Palatine, Lancaster, as well as Judge of the "Court of Passage," a local tribunal at Liverpool. He was a Liberal in politics, but it may be remembered that his election for Manchester in 1865 was mainly secured by a large body of Conservatives voting for him, in order to defeat the Radical candidate, Mr. Jacob Bright. Of course, of his successor not a rumour has as yet been uttered.—London Correspondent of Saunders' News-Letter.

Lot 1—Comprises Part of the Lands of Rath Lower, which is situate about 12 miles north-east from the town of Dundalk, and is nearly equally distant from the town of Newry. It is within 1½ miles of Carlingford, a seaport and market town. The Lands are of good quality, and set at very moderate rents to respectable tenants.

Lot 2—Comprises Part of the Townland of Ballagan, situated about two miles east of Rath Lower (Lot 1). This is a very good Farm, and the occupying tenants are very respectable and solvent.

Lot 3—Comprises Part of the Lands of Fanghart Upper, together with Part of the Lands of Plaister, upon which stands the Mansion-house and Offices known as "Thistle," which is handsomely situated, with neat Garden and Pleasure Grounds. The Lands comprising this Lot are of good quality, well fenced and watered, and divided into nicely shaped fields. This Lot adjoins the demesne of Mountpleasant (portion of Lot 4) on the north side, and is occupied by respectable and solvent tenants.

Lot 4—The Mansion-house and Offices of Mountpleasant (forming part of this lot), are delightfully situated with picturesque lands and wooded boundaries, handsome pleasure grounds, ornamented with the choicest flowers, plants, and trees. The kitchen gardens, &c., which comprises about 14 acres statute measure, contain an excellent selection of fruit trees and flowers (home and exotic), with vineries and forcing houses, all of modern construction, and got up regardless of expense. The demesne is neatly walled in, and rivulets of clear spring water flow through it in different parts. The water to the mansion-house and gardens is supplied by conduits acting from hydraulic pressure.

The mansion-house is situated about two miles north of the town of Dundalk, to the east of the public road leading to Newry, from which it is approached by an avenue about half a mile in length. The principal avenue leading from the Ballymascanlan road is of equal length, and forms a most beautiful carriage drive. The Mountpleasant Station of the Dublin and Belfast Junction Railway is about a mile distant from the house, and the Mountpleasant and Ballymascanlan Post-offices about three-quarters of a mile respectively.

The Spinning and Scutching Mills (which are very valuable) are situated on this lot, in connexion with which is a gas factory, having connexions for lighting the mansion-house and offices of Mountpleasant. There are also valuable stone and lime quarries and kilns on this lot.

The demesne lands are of good quality, rich and fertile, and the farm-yard and buildings attached thereto are very extensive and permanent. The town of Dundalk is a rising seaport, having steam communication with Liverpool three or four times weekly, and railway communication with Dublin, Belfast, and all the north-west of Ireland, several times daily. Large markets are held in that town on every Monday in each week.

The lands are of good quality, and the tenants are respectable and punctual in the payments of their rents.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 42.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

THE Chancery Appeal Court has been sitting almost continuously since the beginning of Term, and there is still business to be disposed of. It would be absurd to deny the fact, that hitherto this Court has not held the highest place in the estimation of the legal public. Since the Court was constituted (January, 1857) there have been, from time to time, various grounds for dissatisfaction. Litigants from the Incumbered Estates' Court were the first to complain. Whether justly or not, they felt dissatisfied that the decision of the three Commissioners (all most eminent lawyers) should be reversed by the Chancellor and Lord Justice of the day. The next complaint arose in cases of appeal from the decision of the Lord Chancellor; where, if the Lord Chancellor, as often happened, upheld his former decision, it remained unreversed, even although the Lord Justice of Appeal dissented. This state of things, however, was first corrected during the Chancellorship of Sir Joseph Napier, by calling in a Common Law Judge to assist in cases of appeal from the Lord Chancellor, and that practice has since been adhered to. All these causes combined affected injuriously the reputation of the Court of Appeal, and the result soon became visible in the perceptible decrease of appeal business. Suitors in small cases were not encouraged to incur the risk of further costs, and cases involving any considerable amount of property were taken directly to the House of Lords. Once an institution of any kind has been condemned, it is always a difficult task to turn the current of public opinion. But, notwithstanding this adverse state of things, it was hopefully asserted that if any two Judges that could be named were capable of regaining for the Court of Appeal the lost confidence of the public, those Judges were the present Lord Chancellor and Lord Justice of Appeal.

We have now had a fair trial, and, judging not alone from the increasing business of the Court, but from the expressed opinions of both branches of the profession, these hopeful predictions have been fulfilled, and there is already a manifest reassurance of the public mind. Suitors of every class can now have their cases carefully considered, and decided upon by two of the greatest judges in the land, and it will, we apprehend, be seldom found necessary to seek the aid of the ultimate Court of Appeal, unless, indeed, in cases where the Irish Court is coerced by some former decision, binding on it, but which the House of Lords would be free to disregard or overrule.

While the Chancellor is engaged in the Appeal Court the Vice-Chancellor is hearing general cause petitions; and it is expected that all the old business will be nearly disposed of before any suits are ripe for hearing under the new practice. This will be satisfactory, no doubt, to old suitors; but it is useless to attempt to conceal the universal feeling of discontent occasioned by the unaccountable delay in issuing the new orders.

The new Chancery Act, as our readers are aware, effects a complete assimilation between the Irish and English practice and procedure. The 176th section, which provides for the framing of General Orders, took effect on the first day of August last, and it expressly directs that they should be framed with a view to uniformity between the equity systems of both countries. Having regard to these facts, conjecture was at a loss to account for the delay in the publication of the new orders, except on the grounds that the existing rules and orders were under consideration, with a view to their total abrogation. This surmise, however, proved to be incorrect, for the new orders were found to be a transcript, mutatis mutandis, of the English orders, with a tack at the end, that all the existing rules and orders were to remain in force, except so far as they were contrary to, or inconsistent with, the new. It will be remembered that the English orders were consolidated in February, 1860, and all the prior orders were abrogated, except a few which were expressly preserved; and, we think, the same course might have been followed here, and practitioners relieved from that confusion which has prevailed for the last seventeen years. However, this can be remedied in course of time, and practitioners will be safe in following the new orders. There is nothing now to prevent the immediate prosecution of new suits. Solicitors have simply to send instructions, as heretofore, to counsel, who prepares and signs the draft Bill. The next step is to have the Bill printed. Fees will be allowed to solicitors for attending on the printer, and for correcting proofs. The number of copies required to be printed will depend, in a great measure, on the number of defendants, each defendant being entitled to receive from the plaintiff ten copies on payment of one halfpenny a folio. A copy is then filed, and a stamped copy taken out for service. The Clerk of the Records and Writs marks the Bill with the name of the Judge to whose Court it is to be attached. All succeeding steps will, of course, be taken under the direction of counsel.

IN our last number we discussed the question as to when unanimity was first required in a jury, and from what analogy it was derived. We have proposed to ourselves, in this present article, to discuss another, but far more difficult question, which, however, is a necessary logical and chronological sequence to the former, viz.—the propriety and expediency of requiring unanimity in juries. Several very great authorities have declared against it; but we must confess that we do not think the opponents of the present system of requiring unanimity have sufficiently made out their case to justify us in changing a principle which, as we showed in our last number, has grown with the growth of the British Constitution, and which, in the main, has been found to work well in spite of some errors, which, perhaps, are not so much to be attributed to any organic defect in the principle, as to some temporary flaw in the formation of the particular jury.

Mr. Hallam, whom we had occasion to quote before, says—"From this principle (speaking of the trial of facts by the country), except as to that preposterous relic of barbarism, the requirement of unanimity, may we never swerve. May we never be compelled in wish to swerve by a contempt of their oaths in jurors, and a disregard of the just limits of their trust." This is a severe judgment against the policy of the system of requiring unanimity in juries, and it is a matter of regret that the learned author did not produce facts and reasons to justify such a sweeping condemnation. A Royal Commission sat in 1830 to report on the Courts of Common Law, which considered this subject very fully, and the result of their inquiry was certainly also very unfavourable to the system in question. We shall venture to extract from their report some of the reasons urged for their verdict

"It is essential to the validity of a verdict that the jury should be unanimous; and regularly they are not allowed to be discharged (unless by consent of the parties) until such unanimous verdict has been returned. It is difficult to defend the wisdom or justice of the latter principle. It seems absurd that the rights of a party, in questions of a doubtful and complicated nature, should depend upon his being able to satisfy twelve persons that one particular state of facts is the true one. As it is notorious that upon such questions a body of men so numerous are often found to differ irreconcilably in their views, it is obvious that the necessity of returning, in every case, a verdict, and an unanimous one, before they separate, must frequently lead to improper compromise among the jurors of their respective opinions." There is reason also to apprehend that when any of them happen to be actuated by partial motives it must tend to produce a corrupt verdict. Indeed no one can have been much conversant with courts of justice without having frequently heard the remark (where the verdict has been very long in suspense) that one of the contending parties has a friend on the jury. But to this it may be answered, that the necessity for unanimity carries with it one most important advantage. In the event of any difference of opinion, it secures a discussion. It is not possible to poll the jury at once, and so without further trouble to come to a conclusion. Any one dissentient person can compel the other eleven to reconsider their opinion. In answer to this argument it has been said that after a certain period of time, sufficiently long for the purpose of ample discussion, the jury, if still in disagreement, should not be excused from the necessity of giving a verdict, and it was proposed in the same report of the Commission upon the Courts of Common Law mentioned above, that the jury should not be kept in deliberation longer than twelve hours, unless at the end of that period they unanimously concur to apply for further time, which in that case should be granted, and that at the expiration of twelve hours or of such prolonged time for deliberation, if any nine of them concur in giving a verdict, such verdict should be entered on record, and should entitle the party in whose favour it is given to judgment; and in failure of such concurrence the cause should be made a remanet. These are certainly very cogent arguments against our present system, and the Commissioners are supported by the expressed opinions of Professor Christian in his Notes to Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England, where he states, as his opinion, that the unanimity of twelve men, so repugnant to all experience of human conduct, passions, and understandings, could hardly, in any age, have been introduced into practice by a deliberate act of the legislature; such are the opinions of eminent men on the subject, and it is also to be admitted that the unanimity produced is sometimes only apparent, and is purchased at the sacrifice of truth; this will be seen when we consider the circumstances under which the jury have to come to their verdict.

The jury consist of twelve men probably meeting for the first time in the jury box, and have to agree in the same conclusion, notwithstanding the intricacy of the case and the number of apparently trustworthy and respectable witnesses on one side, who will make statements directly contradicting the apparently equally trustworthy evidence given on the other side, and from this arises the wonder that all should be expected to agree in the same result, especially when we consider that in addition to contradictory evidence the jury have to listen to all the arguments which can be produced by the counsel on either side, and it must be admitted, in consequence, that verdicts are often the result of a surrender or compromise of individual opinion. There is much, however, to be said in favour of retaining our present system which we shall endeavour to explain in our next number, as well as consider the practice of other countries on the question of unanimity.

For the first time in this kingdom, the uniform oath in pursuance of the Act passed last session, was taken by the gentlemen called to the Bar last Saturday.

"Sir,—We think it important to call the attention of the incorporated Society of the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland, and through it of the profession generally, to some of the provisions of an Act of last session—30th & 31st Vic., cap. 54—for the Amendment of the Law of Charitable Donations and Bequests in Ireland; which came into operation on the 15th of July last.

"It does not appear to be as generally known as would be desirable, that, under the 4th section of that Act—"Before any suit, petition, or other proceeding (not being an application in any suit or matter actually [i.e. July 15, 1867] pending) for obtaining any relief, order, or direction, concerning or relating to any charity, or the estate, funds, property, or income thereof shall be commenced," &c., &c.—notice in writing thereof shall be given to these Commissioners.

"It may also be important that Solicitors should be aware of the directions in the 19th section, which make it imperative on executors, under heavy penalties in case of default, to publish, within three months after obtaining probate, once in the Dublin Gazette, and three times in a local paper, every charitable bequest in the will.

"We have the honour to enclose herewith a form of notice to executors from this office, in which you will observe we request to be furnished with copies of the newspapers, so that executors may have their compliance with the statute duly recorded, if they wish, and so protect themselves from inconvenience hereafter.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

PEYTON v. O'BRIEN.

Saturday, Nov. 9.—Practice—Cause Petition—Consent—Time to file additional Affidavits.

Dames moved ex parte to make a consent a rule of Court in a cause petition matter. The affidavit in answer was filed on the 8th of October, 1867. The consent was that the petitioner should have until the 30th of November to file affidavits in reply, and that the respondent should have three weeks to file further or additional affidavits in reply to any matter alleged in such further or additional affidavits filed on behalf of the petitioner.

The MASTER of the ROLLS made the order sought.

N. Peyton, Solicitor for the petitioner.

Monday, Nov. 11.—Practice—Death of Respondent—Proceedings without Personal Representative.

The respondent, James Henry Laurence, had a vested interest in the trust fund, the subject matter of the suit. J. H. Laurence died on the 15th of July, 1867. No probate or letters of administration to him were obtained. His mother, who was a respondent, would be entitled to his interest in the trust fund if he died intestate.

H. Fitzgibbon moved for an order that the cause might proceed in the absence of any person representing the estate of the respondent, James Henry Laurence, deceased, or that a person named in the notice of motion might be appointed to represent such estate, for the purposes of this cause, under the 18th order of 1857. In support of the application he referred to the practice in England under the 44th section of the Chancery Amendment Act, which was substantially the same as the 18th order, and cited Dan. Ch. Pr. 197 Gibson v. Welly, 21 Beav. 620; Chaffers v. Headlam (3 Hare Ap. 46); Fox v. Taylor (22 L. T. N. S. Ch. 911.)

The MASTER of the ROLLS made no rule on the motion, considering that the order sought was not necessary.

Solicitors for the petitioner, West and Fitzsimons.

Nov. 7, 8.—MATTHEW, in error, v. TUTE.

Error from the Court of Common Pleas.

The action was for breaking and entering the house of the plaintiff (defendant in error). The defendant (the plaintiff in error) pleaded that he was a Sub-Inspector of Constabulary; that the powers and privileges of the Excise Police had been transferred to the Constabulary; that from certain information which came to his knowledge he had reasonable and probable cause to suspect and believe that illicit spirits were concealed in the plaintiff's dwelling-house; that so believing, he caused one Michael Murphy to make an information before a magistrate, upon which the magistrate granted a warrant to John M'Curdy, a head constable of police, to enter plaintiff's house to search for illicit spirits, and that by virtue of such warrant the said M'Curdy, defendant, and certain police constables, entered plaintiff's house to search for illicit spirits, and did so search.

The defendant also pleaded that the venue in the action was the county of Dublin, and that under the Acts relating to the Excise it should have been laid where the acts were done, namely, in the county of Cavan.

To both these defences the plaintiff demurred, and the Court of Common Pleas gave judgment for the plaintiff. Error thereon.

Counsel for the plaintiff in error, Sergeant Armstrong and Hamill.

Counsel for the defendant in error, Palles, Q.C., and Harkan.

The COURT gave judgment for the defendant in error, sustaining the judgment of the Common Pleas, holding unanimously, that by the Common Law Procedure Act the venue was transitory; and also, that under s. 17 of the 1 & 2 Wm. IV., c. 55, the search warrant should have been given to the very constable who made the information on which it was grounded. The majority also expressed an opinion that the section did not apply to spirits in a complete and finished state, but only to materials for distilling, and spirits in a process of distillation.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Reported by WILLIAM GRIFFIN, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Re O'SHAUGHNESSY.

November. 8.—Liability to Examination previous to Admission as an Attorney.

This case, which stood over from the previous day, now came on for argument as to the applicant's liability to examination under the 29 and 30 Vic., c. 84. The facts appeared in the IRISH LAW TIMES of November 9.

M'Dermott for the applicant.—The whole of the Act contemplates only the examination of persons who have had the opportunity of taking advantage during their apprenticeship of the lectures, &c., which have been provided of late years for the education of solicitors and attorneys, and the examination which is based upon those lectures is a very severe one, embracing real property law, &c., and it would be most unreasonable to require the applicant, who was bound long before any such system of instruction was in existence, to pass the examination. The sections of the Act which regulates the matter are the 19th and following sections, and the language of those sections show they do not apply to such a case as the present. By the 19th sec. the Lord Chancellor shall make regulations for the examination, &c., "of all persons hereafter becoming bound," so in the 20th. By the rules made under the authority of the Act, no person can present himself for examination without the certificate of the professor (rules 14 and 26), unless they came under the 28th rule (which is permissive) by having attended the lectures at the time of the passing of the Act "prescribed for attorneys' and solicitors' apprentices." There were no such lectures when the applicant served his time, and such a case as his is not contemplated by the Act at all. He is quite willing to pass such an examination as persons were liable to previous to admission at the time he completed his apprenticeship. That is the kind of examination he should be subjected to if the 21st section applies.

Barlow, on the part of the Law Society, I have to begin by stating that, with reference to this particular instance, they are quite ready to adopt any suggestion from the Court, but that now as a right is asserted to exemption from examination, it is necessary for them to draw the attention of the Court to what they consider to be the state of the law. The matter depends on the statute, and on the rules which were made by the chief judges under the authority of that statute. The 4th Section enacts that "no person, save as hereinafter provided, shall be capable of being admitted" unless he shall have been "examined in the manner hereinafter directed." It is clear, therefore, that the applicant must pass some examination. "Save as herein provided" refers to graduates of universities, &c., who come within the 7th and 9th Sections. The 19th and 20th Sections do not apply, but the 21st does; the Council do not contend he is to pass the same examination as persons who are now apprenticing, but that he is to pass a legal examination, an inquiry into his fitness and capacity in matters of business usually transacted. Section 21 and 22. These matters are to be inquired into by such ways and means as the Chief Justice, the Chief Baron, and the Lord Chancellor, and the Master of the Rolls, or any three or more of them, shall see fit, Section 21, and those means have been pointed out and ascertained by the rules made in pursuance of that authority, and which rules appoint a board of examiners, Rule 9.

Monaghan, C. J.—The conclusion we have come to in this case is, that on the true construction of the act all persons are required to pass an examination previous to admission, whether they have completed their time of service before the passing of the act, or are in process of serving it. Then, we think, on consideration of the rules, that they are sufficient so far as a board of examiners is concerned; but as to the kind of examination that a person under such circumstances as the present applicant should undergo, we are clearly of opinion that it should be something very different from that which apprentices who have attended the lectures, and had the advantages of the present system, are required to pass. This gentleman, therefore, must pass an examination unless an application under the 48th section, which gives us a general dispensing power to be relieved from the necessity of so doing, is made. We do not think he has made any such case at present, but we are quite prepared to hear such an application on a proper case being made. What we propose doing is to allow this motion to stand, with permission to this gentleman, in the meantime, to present himself for examination, which examination should be directed to the practical details of his profession.

Smith v. Connell.

May 9th.—Ejectment—Renewing Habere.

Plaintiff got possession, under writ of habere, Aug., 1866. In November following the defendant retook possession by force. Plaintiff took out summonses and processes against him, but from the violence of the defendant, or the collusion of the process-server, never succeeded in getting defendant served. He now applied for a renewal of the writ.

Webb, for the plaintiff, urged that the circumstances justified such a course.

Fitzgerald and Hughes, B.B., refused the application.

Bell v. Bell.

17th June.—Practice—No Proceedings for Year and Day.

No defence was filed to plaint, and a year and a day elapsed from the filing of the plaint without either party taking any step in the cause. Plaintiff then proceeded to mark judgment, but was required by the officer to take a side bar rule, as prescribed by the 17 G. O., when, "after defence filed and before final judgment, this period has elapsed." Under 43 section C. L. P. Act defendant could not now file any defence, and applied to set aside the side bar rule as irregular.

S. Y. Johnston, in support of the motion.

A. G. Richey, contra.

Per Curiam—Pigot, C.B.; Fitzgerald and Hughes, B.B.—No rule in the motion. Costs costs in the cause.

Attorney for plaintiff, R. Eames.

Attorney for defendant, Cecil Moore.

Hoban v. Munro—No. 1.

Nov. 4th and 11th.—Interpleader—Barring Claim.

Plaintiff issued a writ of fi. fa., and under it the Sheriff of Galway seized certain goods. Before sale a notice was served on Sheriff, signed by an English firm of Solicitors, claiming the goods as the property of Robert Collum, under a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors, registered under the English Bankruptcy Act since the seizure. Sheriff obtained a summoning order. In July Mr. Baron Hughes in Chamber refused to compel parties to interplead, and gave costs against the Sheriff.

Jordan, for Sheriff, now asked to reverse or vary this order.

Beytagh, for the plaintiff, contended that there was nothing in Collum's claim to justify the Sheriff in hesitating to proceed.

Fitzgerald, B., asked if Collum would take an issue now.

Martin, for Collum, now (Nov. 11) refused to take an issue.

Fitzgerald, B.—Let Collum's claim be barred, and the Sheriff to abide his own costs, Collum to pay costs of other parties.

Attorney for Sheriff, Ed. M. Duffy.

Attorney for plaintiff, Thos. D. O'Ferrall.

Attorney for Collum, Archibald Collum.

Hoban v. Munro—No. 2.

Nov. 6th and 13th.—Interpleader—Security for Costs.

This was a motion to vary an order of Mr. Baron Deasy directing an interpleader issue in relation to property seized under a writ of fi. fa. in the same judgment mentioned in last case. The claimant, Collum, resided in England, and plaintiff, who had been made defendant in the issue, now sought to compel him to give security for costs.

Jas. Robinson, for plaintiff.

P. Martin, for claimant.

Fitzgerald and Hughes, B.B., ordered the claimant to give security for costs within one week.

Slevin v. Manders.

Nov. 4th.—Practice—Setting aside Demurrer.

Plaintiff demurred to defendant's plea in July, but neglected to lodge books within subsequent six days, pursuant to 50 G. O., 1854. He then applied to the Court for leave to file the demurrer, but there was no affidavit, and the motion was refused. On 26th Oct. he filed the same demurrer over again.

P. Keogh, for defendant, now moved to set this aside.

J. A. Byrne, contra.

FITZGERALD and HUGHES, B.B., granted the motion.

Nov. 4th.—Irregular return to Writ of Fi. fa.

Sheriff returned to writ of fi. fa. that defendant had no goods except in a house to which no admittance. Plaintiff moved to set return aside as defective and irregular, and requiring to be informed what goods defendant had in the bailiwick.

Shekleton. — The return is clearly bad for not stating " that at the time of the delivery of the writ, &c."

Munroe.—The plaintiff does not refer to this irregularity in his notice, and cannot rely on it.

FITZGERALD and DEASY, B.B., set the return aside.

Attorney for plaintiff, R. Fitton.

Attorney for Sheriff, Michael Verdon.

M'DONNELL v. FEENY.

FITZGERALD and DEASY, B B., allowed the demurrer.

Attorney for plaintiff, Edw. O'Loughlin.

Attorney for defendant, Jos. Burke.

MAPE v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Nov. 12.—Practice—Public Company—Substitution of Service.

Plaintiff obtained substitution of service under the 34th section of the C. L. P. Act. He also inserted advertisements as required by 33rd section. The taxing officer refused to allow the costs of these. On appeal the Court affirmed this decision, holding that the 33rd section applied to corporations mentioned in that section.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Reported by W. R. MILLER, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-Law.

MITCHELL v. MITCHELL.

Nov. 14.—Time for Moving to Fix the Mode of Trial.

Kaye had obtained a conditional order from the Court on this day to substitute service of a citation on several absent defendants on another defendant who had duly appeared, and with whom, as alleged, the absent parties were in communication. The citation was issued by the executors in the will of the deceased, to see his will proved specially, and the time for showing cause to the conditional order was limited to six days after service—a motion to fix the mode of trial was in the list.

Plunkett appeared for the defendants, and did not object.

KEATINGE, J., considered that, as the absent parties might, after service, come in and plead, the pending motion should stand over until the six days allowed for showing cause had expired, in accordance with the practice in England, which he intended to follow. I therefore adjourn the motion until Saturday week.

Order accordingly.

Goods of PATTON.

November 15.—Priority of Application for Grant.

Dr. Miller, for Alcorn, a creditor, applied for administration.

There were two sons, the only next of kin; one was abroad, and the other renounced in Alcorn's favour, who also had the consent of three-fourths of the creditors, and he was prepared with ample security.

Mr. M'Causland, for Noble, another creditor, relied on the fact of an earlier application in the office by him for a grant.

KEATINGE, J.—That rule only prevails as between next of kin, and does not apply as to creditors. I consider Alcorn entitled to a grant during the absence of the son who is abroad. Each party to get costs.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Before Judge BERWICK.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

November, 1867.—Practice—Petitions in Bankruptcy by Traders against themselves—Arrangements.

Judge BERWICK said he thought it right to make some observations for the information of Solicitors for traders coming before the Court in a hurried manner with petitions for adjudication against themselves and for protection in arrangement cases. It was very much the custom to come in, in a hurried manner, for liberty to list cases and have them heard the same day, before the Court could possibly look into them. He alluded particularly to traders presenting petitions to make themselves bankrupts, where no possible good could result to creditors, and where the only person getting anything was the Solicitor, who got the costs of the bankruptcy. There was a case of that kind recently brought before him in a hurry, in which he granted the adjudication, but if he had had time to consider what the case was he would not have done so. It was a case that should not have been brought into that Court at all. For the future the Solicitor should take out the meeting in the usual way, have it listed, and have attested copies of the documents ready. Unless that were done, the Court would neither grant adjudication upon a trader's own petition, or protection in any arrangement case.

Proceedings in Chancery pending Bankruptcy.

The bankrupt in this case was a banker in Dame-street, and the case was on the list for final examination.

Oldham, Solicitor, said that certain proceedings were going on in the Court of Chancery for the purpose of realizing assets not only for specialty creditors but for the creditors generally, and the usual practice was to allow the examination to stand until such proceedings should be terminated.

Larkin, for the assignees, said there was a fair prospect of decisions being made that would bring in assets.

Judge MILLER then let the final examination stand until the result of the Chancery proceedings be known, in the mean time no delay to take place.

Composition outside of Court—Fraudulent Bankruptcy.

The bankrupt was a silk mercer and draper in Grafton-street, who had absconded. It appeared that a very few days before he stopped payment he got large quantities of goods from various wholesale houses in Dublin and London, and immediately after their delivery they had been removed, as was alleged, to prevent a party who had a claim for rent which the bankrupt disputed, from seizing on them. Several meetings took place for the examination of witnesses, with a view to trace the property, when it appeared that the wife and mother-in-law of the bankrupt had much to do with it, but they kept out of the way and could not be served with the summons of the Court. In the mean time, in order to stop all proceedings, the friends of the bankrupt came forward and offered a composition of ten shillings in the pound, which the creditors agreed to take. Upon this fact being announced to Judge Miller, he said that it was very much against his inclination to listen to any compromise or composition outside the Court, until the witnesses who were evading service of the summons of the Court were brought up and examined. He thought it was a case where the assertion of commercial integrity was of more importance than a money payment.

The case was adjourned.

REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS.

The Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict., cap. 44), with The General Rules and Orders, Tables of Fees, and a General Index. Dublin. Hodges, Smith and Co., Grafton-street, Booksellers to the Hon. Society of King's Inns, 1867.

The passing of the Chancery Act was the signal for a number of books relating to the Act to be advertised, and this is the second of them which has appeared; the first was only a reprint of the Act, but this is of quite a different character. We have been favoured with proof sheets of this work, which is dated from the Registrar's Chambers, Court of Chancery, and we willingly acknowledge that the work of editing is done in a manner which exhibits the ability and the extensive learning of the registrars, Dr. Ferguson and Mr. Drury. There are ample notes appended to each page of both Act and Rules calling attention to, and pointing out the analogy of, the English practice in every case, which cannot fail to be extremely useful to the practitioner. There is also a complete index giving a reference to each page and section of the book; and a preface which should rather have been called an introduction to the practice, since it contains an elaborately drawn up abstract of the bill under each head treated in it. The following is the history of the Act given in the first lines of the preface:—"The Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867, had its origin in the report of a commission, comprising many of the most eminent members of the Bench and Bar of Ireland. They recommended that the diversities of practice between the Courts of Chancery in England and in Ireland, introduced by Lord Romilly's Act, 'The Chancery Regulation Act, 1850,' should cease, and that an uniformity of practice and procedure between the two courts should be established. Accordingly this has been carried out by the adoption of the provisions of the Masters in Chancery Abolition Act (15 & 16 Vict., c. 80), the Improvement of Jurisdiction of Equity Act (15 & 16 Vict., c. 86), and the Act to Diminish the Delay and Expense of Proceedings in the High Court of Chancery in England (13 and 14 Vict., c. 35), called Sir George Turner's Act. This plan of uniformity and assimilation is further enforced by the directions of the Judges, contained in section 176, that in making General Orders, regard shall be had to establishing and preserving, as far as may be, uniformity of practice and procedure in the Courts of Chancery in England and Ireland." Whoever shall have read this introduction by the editors will have a complete resumé of the principles of the Act; and, as there is no work specially authorized by the Court on the subject, we venture to predict that the one under review will be held in the highest esteem when it becomes known, since it is in every way worthy of the gentlemen who are concerned in its production.

THE NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.

We are glad to see that Mr. Henry T. Dix promises to the profession that his book on the Practice of the Court of Chancery will be published in a few days. No guide to the new practice has as yet appeared, and we have no doubt that the issue of Mr. Dix's book will be hailed with satisfaction by those who are as yet afraid to trust themselves upon this terra incognita. Mr. Dix's book, if it fulfills the expectations entertained of it, will be peculiarly valuable to solicitors. It will be essentially a book of practice, commenting upon all the proceedings, from filing the bill onward in their order, and pointing out the various steps to be taken in the progress of the suit. The Act itself and General Orders will be given in full, annotated with the English Act and Orders. In addition, Mr. Dix purposes to give copious notes of English decisions on points of practice, and numerous forms and precedents. Should this design be carefully and fully carried out, his promised book will not only add largely to Mr. Dix's reputation, but will prove a serviceable boon to his professional brethren.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"UNANIMITY IN JURIES."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

12th November, 1867.

SIR,—The perusal of those leading articles in THE IRISH LAW TIMES which have of late elaborately examined the Title of the British Juror, from his creation to his existing status, a devolution of many centuries, irresistibly forces on legal minds the question of reform in our Jury system, if it is to retain popular respect; and to many, well informed enough to form a judgment, it does appear useless to deal with minor abuses, while a leading infirmity sets all amendment at naught; but while pointing out a few of the salient evils of the unanimous verdict system, the advocates of a verdict by a majority must be deaf to the epithets freely applied to them, as "Scoffers of the Palladium," &c., "Great Alfred's handywork," &c.,

Digitized by Google

"Safeguard of the Briton," &c., "Last plank of the Constitution," &c., which forbid inquiry as to the working of a tribunal so bespattered by the laudation of ages.

Ignoring such obstacles, let us inquire how far this justly-venerated system has kept pace with national requirement, enlightened by your antiquarian researches, which prove that, at its infant stage, unanimity was not the fundamental element, but was the growth of time and usage, which later time may question and modify.

Clearly, then, the demand for a unanimous verdict is in its nature exceptional, and fails of support from first principles; for the human family yields to the majority on all save this department of legal questions, and rightly considers the opinion of the majority the fittest substitute for Divine infallibility in human affairs. A majority rules all popular assemblies, all private discussions, the Houses of Parliament, the inquest by Grand Jury, the equity and law Judges, in their ordinary and in their appellate sittings, with the entire realm of Scotland, whose people are not usually found deficient in prudential management of their affairs, national or individual.

Bearing this in mind, observe what passes at our Nisi Prius Sittings, in view of the premium offered the advocate for creating a dissentient Juror. Instead of devoting attention to the facts or the law exclusively, as the basis of the verdict, you have a searching scrutiny into the antecedents of each man on the panel for his special infirmity, or bias, or crotchet (and most men have such), and when this latent weakness is discovered, if you observe Counsel handling the boxed and sworn subjects of his legitimate ingenuity, much of his relevancy will be lost to you without that clue which a hint of briefed personal history may supply.

Again, taking up the statistics of each Term List, legal men find a class of records disposed of by what is known as a compromise between that which the majority feel to be right, yet, apprehensive of a not uncommon miscarriage of justice, yield to the prejudiced or eccentric views of a small majority, firmly dissentient, and they (the majority) thus only save a new trial, which may be ruinous to one or both litigants.

True, there have been some rare instances of the minority of Jurors proving right; and strange would it be were no such cases discoverable in the legal history of centuries of Jury Trials; but can the occurrence of one instance in many years overbear the frequent and disastrous instances of miscarriage, delay, and expense, we find resulting from this requirement of unanimity becoming more absurd as intelligence advances, and the affairs of our social fabric become more complicated.

If I read aright that history of our Juror which THE IRISH LAW TIMES has just completed, the innovation to which modern convenience in this country points, is not forbidden, but is sanctioned by ancient wisdom, and by an experience which cannot be claimed for any tribunal now surviving the wrecks which jurisprudence has left along the highway of legislation. There comes no utterance "down the corridors of time," deterring us from a reverential resuscitation of this venerable institution, it would rather seem that Verulam, Selden, or even Great Alfred, its reputed parent, would counsel wise and cautious adaptation in the functions of that marvellous amalgam of legislative sagacity, the English Constitution.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

GEORGE WM. SHANNON.

[The series of articles on the Jury system is not yet completed. The contributor has entered upon the subject, mentioned in the above letter, of unanimity in Juries this week, and proposes discussing it at greater length in the next Number.—ED. I. L. T. and S. J.]

QUIT-RENTS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

November 13, 1867.

SIR,—Could you, or any of your learned readers, kindly inform me and the public generally, upon what grounds the Crown can legally refuse to allow a deduction for poor-rate from Crown or Quit-rent? The only information the Quit-rent authorities vouchsafe to give me is, that the law officers of the Crown (of some former period) in England and Ireland, have given it as their opinion that such deduction cannot be made, but they refuse to disclose the grounds upon which that opinion has been founded. In a public question of this kind it cannot be satisfactory that the grounds for the opinion should be withheld; and such a course raises the suspicion that perhaps the opinion is not well founded. Quit-rent certainly comes within the definition of "rent," under the Poor Law Acts. If it is relied upon that the grants and patents from the Crown reserve the quit-rent "free and clear above all other impositions," I can only say that the same clauses in private grants have not been held to operate against the Poor Law Acts. In any case it would be right that the law upon the subject should be clearly known.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A SUBSCRIBER.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

This Estate is situate within one and two miles from Newry, and is bounded on the West and North by the Newry River and Mr. M'George's demesne. From its proximity to the town of Newry, the Estate may be considered as forming town parks; and from the accommodation afforded by railway and canal for the transit of merchandize, &c., property in the vicinity of Newry is daily increasing in value.

Proposals for the purchase by private contract of the whole or any of the Lots will be received by the Solicitor having the Carriage of the Sale up to the 30th day of November, 1867, and, if approved of by the owner, will be submitted to the Court for approval.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 43.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

In a former number, commenting on the new Chancery Act, we stated the several classes of defence. If the defendant considers that the case made by bill is not such as to entitle the plaintiff to any assistance from the Court, the form of defence is by demurrer. The Commissioners, in their report, recommended the abolition of demurrers, both in England and Ireland, except for want of Equity, or multifariousness. This recommendation, however, was disregarded, and a clause in the draft bill, providing for their abolition, was struck out in Committee.

In the works on pleading, a classification of demurrers is attempted, and they are reduced to nine classes:—(1.) That the subject of a suit is not within the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity. (2.) That some other Court of Equity has the proper jurisdiction. (3.) That the plaintiff is not entitled to sue by reason of some personal disability. (4.) That he has no interest in the subject, or no title to institute a suit concerning it. (5.) That he has no right to call on the defendant concerning the subject of the suit. (6.) That the defendant has not that interest in the subject which can make him liable to the claims of the plaintiff. (7.) That for some reason, founded on the substance of the case, the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief he prays. (8.) The deficiency of the bill to answer the purposes of complete justice. (9.) The impropriety of confounding distinct subjects in the same bill, or of unnecessarily multiplying suits. (Vide Milford's Pleading.)

Of these, the first is termed a demurrer for want of equity; the eighth, for want of parties; and the first part of the ninth for multifariousness; and they are the kinds most commonly met with.

A defendant may demur alone to any bill within twelve days after his appearance, but not afterwards without special leave of the Court. If, however, he wishes to demur to a portion only of the bill, and to plead to, or answer the remainder, he has (if an answer be required of him) twenty-eight days from the service of the interrogatories upon him, within which time he may so demur, plead, or answer, not demurring alone; and by 64th order, if not required to answer, he may put in such demurrer, plea, or answer (not demurring alone), at any time within fourteen days after the expiration of the time within which he might have been served with the interrogatories, had there been any, that is to say, at any time within thirty days after the service of the copy of the bill upon him.

All demurrers must be signed by counsel, but do not require the oath or signature of the defendant. When a demurrer comes on for hearing, the defendant may raise any objection to the bill which could have been taken by demurrer, although that objection has not been specifically pointed out; this is called demurring ore tenus, but the 47th order directs that when any grounds are urged in the argument beyond the grounds expressed in the demurrer, and the grounds so expressed are disallowed, the defendant shall pay the same costs as if the demurrer was overruled, although the grounds of demurrer so newly urged might be allowed. Demurrers ore tenus were sometimes allowed at the hearing of a cause petition under the Chancery Regulation Act where no answer had been filed by the respondent. They often came by complete surprise on the petitioner, and their abolition was recommended in the answers to the queries put by the Commissioners to the Incorporated Society of Attorneys and Solicitors.

If the plaintiff considers the defendant's objection good, he will amend the bill, if it is capable of being amended, on payment of certain costs to the defendant. But if he considers the objection groundless, he will set down the demurrer for argument within fourteen days after due notice of the filing (55th Ord.) More will be said on the subject of amendment in our next number.

IN considering the advisability of requiring juries to be unanimous in their verdicts we last week gave the arguments which are usually adduced against the system, and quoted the words of some of the most eminent jurists on the question, which would seem to settle the point. We also last week published a letter from a correspondent in which it was pointed out that the demand for a unanimous verdict is in its nature exceptional, and fails of support from first principles. The first point is decidedly established, but the last is not quite so clear, for if it be admitted that the defendant in any case, criminal or otherwise, is to have the benefit of any doubt which may arise in the mind of the jury trying the case as to his guilt, it is clear that he ought not to be convicted by any but the unanimous verdict of the jury; for if the verdict be not unanimous it must presumably be from the circumstance that all the jury are not sufficiently convinced of his guilt. It, of course, may happen, and, perhaps, it often does happen, that some member or members of a jury decide at once upon the verdict they will give from other reasons than the merits of the case, and a person undoubtedly guilty may thereby escape the conviction he deserves; but the law cannot suppose that men will give verdicts contrary to the oaths that they have taken to decide cases according to the evidence; and it has also been well remarked on a kindred subject that it is better for ten guilty men to escape than that one innocent man should be punished. It is well known, of course, that in all legislative and most administrative bodies the decision of a majority is binding on the whole; but there is a feeling growing into importance of late years which has indeed long been discussed as a philosophical theory and proposed as a philosophical improvement in the management of human affairs, that the opinion of a minority should be respected and considered. This was first put into practice in England in the sections of the late Representation of the People Act referring to what have been, without much regard to propriety, called three-cornered boroughs. Now the principle of requiring unanimity in juries is essentially an allowance made in consideration of the decision of the minority, for if we suppose that three out of a jury of twelve are thoroughly convinced of the innocence of a prisoner, it is an undoubted principle that their conviction is entitled to carry weight in the decision of the whole. And how is that weight to be allowed? It is clear that the evidence of the man's guilt has not been perfectly satisfactory to all the jurors, and that a doubt of his guilt rests in some of their minds; and it is this doubt which we maintain the prisoner ought to get the advantage of, for we cannot consider the case, as probable or at all to be legislated for that these three jurymen are holding out against the opinion of their fellows from any interested motive, or for any other than conscientious reasons, otherwise we should be able to put no trust whatever in the decision of any jury, and what has been called the palladium of our Constitution must, on the supposition that the members of a jury are corruptible, be considered more in the light of that ill-fated horse which, when brought within the walls of Troy, caused the destruction of the too-trusting citizens, who had brought it into their sanctuary under the belief that its influence would be divine, and that its presence would bring protection.

It has been suggested, however, that a sort of secondary punishment should be inflicted when the jury are not unanimous, varying in its degree according to the strength of the minority, but if we have read English law aright, we believe that such a system is as repugnant to the principles of the English constitution as it would be impossible to recommend it to the innate feelings of moral right implanted in our hearts. If a jury are perfectly satisfied that the evidence in any case is such as to leave no doubt upon their minds of the guilt of the accused, then the verdict of guilty should be declared, and the punishment allotted to the crime by law inflicted, unless it were thought advisable that the prerogative of mercy should be applied from reasons and motives that could not be considered by, and which did not come within the province of the jury; but if any doubt rests in the minds of any of the jury, there ought to be no verdict of guilty returned.

This system, however, of graduating the punishment to the opinion of the majority of the jury was tried on the Continent of Europe, and in France, at least, was not found satisfactory. The principle of punishment pro modo probationum was enacted in France in 1670, and judges were ordered to pronounce a sentence of less severity when the evidence was not satisfactory, but the consequences of the enactment were lamentable. In the Theorie du Jury of M. Oudat (quoted from Mr. Forsythe) a case is mentioned where three persons were condemned to death by the Parliament of Dijon, in 1782, for a robbery, attended with violence. The Court of Appeal (Chambre de la Tournelle) at Paris thought that the proofs were stronger against one man than against the others, and he was executed, but the others were sentenced to the galleys. In the following year their innocence was completely established by the confession of the real perpetrators of the crime. This case, if properly considered, shows perfectly what a fallacy lies hid in the apparently fair principle of graduating the punishment to the evidence; and we have merely to consider whether, when it was admitted that the evidence was apparently defective in the case of the two men, it should have been acted upon at all.

In Germany also, the source of almost all modern philosophical jurisprudence, and the country where some of our most accomplished jurists received their legal education, before the late reforms, this erroneous principle still holds sway, and we quote the words of Feuerbach on the subject, who says that in Bavaria the theory has been adopted of extraordinary punishments on the failure of complete legal proof, so that a man of whom it is admitted that he has not been convicted according to law (nay, perhaps that he is innocent, but involved in suspicion, owing to unhappy accident or the malice of his enemies), must undergo a part, at all events, of the sentence, too little if he is guilty, but far too great if he is innocent. Nay, a further and more dangerous step has been taken; and where strong presumptions exist against the accused the liability is made itself an offence.

A MEETING of the Quarter Sessions Solicitors of Ireland was held (pursuant to adjournment) in the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, on Thursday last, for the purpose of taking into consideration the proposed amendments of the Civil Bill Acts. Mr. J. F. Goodman in the Chair, Mr. Proctor acting as Secretary. Very many of the Counties throughout Ireland were represented, and Reports from the Sessions Bars of Antrim, Down, and Tipperary, containing important suggestions and amendments were read. Mr. Bottomley, Sub-Sheriff of Antrim, suggested that any alterations proposed in the existing law, relating to the execution of decrees, &c., should be submitted to the Sheriffs for their consideration; this proposition was at once acceded to. The report of the Committee appointed in June last having been very carefully considered, and altered in many important particulars, in accordance with the views expressed by the local Law Societies, the meeting adjourned to Wednesday, the 27th inst. The Report, as amended, will be found in our Supplement.

IT is with the deepest regret we have to announce in our obituary notice of to-day the death of Charles W. D'E. Orpen, Esq., one of the newly-appointed District Judges of Jamaica, and second son of Richard J. T. Orpen, Esq., the respected President of the Incorporated Law Society. He left this country in July last, for Jamaica, and had barely entered upon the discharge of his judicial duties when he was attacked by the fever of the country, to which he succumbed on the 10th of October, at an early age. He was called to the bar in Easter Term, 1856. Few men have ever enjoyed a higher reputation for every good and estimable quality, and his lamented death has excited a feeling of the most sincere regret amongst a large circle of friends by whom he was highly and deservedly esteemed.

THE ADMIRALTY COURT.

WE are in a position to state that the New Rules, for the guidance of the profession in the practice of this Court, will come into operation on Wednesday next, the 27th instant. The Rules, with a complete schednle of forms and fees, will, as we are informed, be immediately published by the Government Printer.

BANQUET TO THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL.—On Thursday evening, the members of the North-East Bar gave a banquet to Mr. Harrison, on occasion of his promotion to the office of Solicitor-General by Her Majesty's Government. The banquet took place in the Ancient Concert Rooms. Mr. Thomas M'Donnell, Q.C., Father of the Circuit, occupied the chair. Mr. Arthur Jackson and Mr. Wm. Druce officiated as croupiers. On the right of the chairman were the guest of the evening and Mr. Joy, Q.C., and on the left Mr. James Gibson. About sixty members of the circuit—all, we believe, who were in town—were present, and the most cordial feeling was manifested towards the guest of the evening. After dinner, the chairman gave the toast of "The Queen," and subsequently the health of the guest of the evening. In doing so, he expressed the great pleasure which all the members of the circuit felt at the promotion of Mr. Harrison to the office under the Crown to which he had been appointed, and referred to his great popularity amongst the members of the circuit, from the time at which he first joined it, eighteen years ago. The toast was received with much enthusiasm. Mr. Harrison having replied in appropriate terms, the health of the Father of the Circuit was proposed by Mr. Druce, and was warmly received. Various other toasts were given, and the company separated at a late hour, after spending a most agreeable evening.

The Right Hon. Judge Keatinge has appointed Gerald Fitzgerald, Esq., solicitor, a Notary Public for Limerick, in the room of Patrick Lynch, Esq., deceased.

LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.—The opening meeting of the sixteenth session of the society will be held in the Lecture Hall, King's Inns, Henrietta street, on Monday evening, the 25th inst., when the Auditor, Mr. Charles H. Teeling, will deliver the inaugural address. The chair will be taken at eight o'clock, by the President, the Right Hon. Maziere Brady, P.C., and resolutions will be proposed by the Solicitor-General, Mr. Sergeant Armstrong, Q.C., M.P.; Richard Dowse, Esq., Q.C.; and Theobald Purcell, Esq., Q.C.

THE CITY SESSIONS.—On Monday, the Right Hon. the Recorder attended at the Court-house, Green-street, and formally adjourned the City Sessions until Tuesday, the 26th inst., as the arrangements of the court had been somewhat disturbed by the recent gas explosion in one of the rooms. Workmen are at present engaged in repairing the injuries caused by the explosion.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to grant to James H. E. Butler, late Record Assistant of the Court of Common Pleas in Ireland, only surviving son of the Hon. St. John Butler, and grandson of the late James Lord Baron Dunboyne, her royal licence and authority, bearing date at St. James's, 4th November, 1867, that he may take and henceforth use the surname of Arcedeckne in addition to and before the surname of Butler, and bear the arms of Butler and Arcedeckne quarterly, in consequence of his being (through his late mother, Anne Maria, only child of Walter Arcedeckne Burke, Esq., of Gortnamona, Co. Galway) heir general and representative of the ancient family of Arcedeckne, of Gortnamona aforesaid.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by EDMOND T. BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

CRAWFORD v. CRAWFORD.

Nov. 12, 13, 14.—Solicitor—Agent—Trust—Statute of Limitations.

This was an appeal from an order of the Master of the Rolls, dated the 2nd of July, 1867.

Mr. Samuel Law Crawford was, for many years prior to his death, solicitor to the Londonderry and Coleraine Railway Company, and was, amongst other matters, employed by them to negotiate for the purchase of land for the purposes of their railway. Large sums of money were accordingly, from time to time, remitted to him by the Company, accompanied by directions to apply them in payment of certain specific claims for compensation. The receipt and application of these moneys were duly entered by Mr. Crawford in separate debtor and creditor accounts in his ledger. In 1856, Mr. Crawford recovered a judgment against the Company for costs due to him; and after his death, which occurred in 1861, an account was settled between the Company and his administrator, on which a balance of £6,243 8s. was found due by the Company, on foot of the judgment, and other bills of costs, and was paid by debentures of the Company. In 1865 the present suit was instituted for the administration of the assets of Mr. Crawford, and on the 23rd of April, 1866, a charge was filed by the Company, claiming a sum of £428, which had been remitted to Mr. Crawford in 1854, for the purchase of lands, and which, it was alleged, had not been accounted for by him at the time of his death. The Master disallowed the claim, as barred by the Statute of Limitations, but on an appeal to the Master of the Rolls, the decision of the Master was reversed. From this order of the Master of the Rolls an appeal was now brought.

Walsh, Q.C., and M'Causland, Q.C., for the appellants.

Palles, Q.C., and Falkiner, Q.C. (with them Litton), for the respondents.

The COURT reversed the decision of the Master of the Rolls, being of opinion that the claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Solicitor for the appellants, Geo. T. Kinder.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

WEBB v. HEWATT.

Nov. 11.—Practice—Abated Suit—Revivor Amendment.

This matter became abated by the death of the sole petitioner, William Webb. After the service of the notice of the following motion, an application was made ex parte for leave to file a petition of revivor, on which the usual order was made.

Twigg, on behalf of Arthur Webb, the administrator of the said William Webb, moved, on notice, that he might be at liberty to revive, and also that the cause petition might be amended by adding parties.

Rogers, Q.C., for the respondent, objected that the motion was irregular. After the expiration of the eight days for showing cause, mentioned in the order giving leave to file the petition of revivor, the cause might be revived by side bar rule, and no order for amendment could be made in a suit totally abated.

HIS HONOUR made no rule on the motion, and gave to the respondent the costs of appearing on the motion as costs in the cause.

Solicitor for the petitioner, Arthur Webb.

Solicitor for the respondent, John Murray.

FERGUSON v. KENYON.

Nov. 7, 13.—Practice—Affidavit sworn before a magistrate in India—Certificate from Home Office.

Jackson moved (Nov. 7) that the affidavit of service of notice of the cause petition might be received by the officer, who had declined to file it. The affidavit was sworn before a police magistrate at Bombay, and counsel relied on the 81st sec. of the Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867—which was retrospective, Bateman v. Cook (3 D.M. & G. 35)—as requiring the Court to take judicial notice of the signature of the magistrate.

The motion stood over for some evidence that the person before whom the affidavit was made was a magistrate, and the case was again mentioned (Nov. 13), when a certificate was produced from the Home Office, stating that the gentleman was senior police magistrate at Bombay, and authorised to administer oaths.

HIS HONOUR directed the officer to receive the affidavit, without any verification of the signature of the magistrate.

Solicitors for the petitioner, Crawford and Lockhart.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by WM. WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

CROOKE v. LORD POWERSCOURT.

November 11.—Embarrassing Pleading—Action for False Representation.

This was a motion to set aside the seventh paragraph of the summons and plaint as embarrassing. The paragraph was for that the defendant, by falsely representing that he had power to demise certain lands free from any right of way, induced the plaintiff to take the premises and spend money on them; averment, that the defendant had not power to demise the premises free from any right of way, as they were subject to a right of way: Damage. There was no averment that the representation was false to the knowledge of the defendant.

Counsel for the defendant in support of the motion, Sullivan, Q.C., Jellett, Q.C., and Monahan.

Counsel for the plaintiff, contra, Sergeant Armstrong, Palles, Q.C., and Boyd.

The COURT gave the plaintiff liberty to amend within four days. If no amendment within that time the paragraph to be set aside.

Attorney for the plaintiff, Donnelly.

Attorney for the defendant, Reeves.

SILK v. ARMSTRONG.

November 16.—Misdescription of Plaintiff's residence—Setting aside Summons and Plaint—Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act.

This was an application on behalf of the defendant to set aside the summons and plaint, on the ground of misdescription of the plaintiff's residence.

The action was brought under the Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act to recover the sum of £11. The plaintiff was described as living at 16, Grantham-street, in the City of Dublin, the defendant as living at Clontarf, in the County of Dublin. The defendant having discovered that the plaintiff resided not in the City, but at Mountpleasant-avenue in the County of Dublin, served a notice upon him, calling upon him to amend the description of his residence in the summons and plaint. This the plaintiff declined to do, whereupon the present motion was made, the defendant, with a view to the costs, not wishing to have it appear on the record that he and the plaintiff resided within different civil bill jurisdictions. The evidence as to the plaintiff's residence was conflicting, but Fitzgerald, J., held that it showed that he resided in the County.

MacDermott, for the defendant, in support of the motion.

S. Walker, contra.

FITZGERALD, J., ordered that the plaintiff should amend his summons and plaint, by truly stating his residence, defendant's time for applying for liberty to appear and defend to run from the period at which the amendment should be made. Defendant to have his costs of the motion.

Attorneys for the plaintiff, Casey and Clay.

Attorney for the defendant, D. J. Bergin.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by J. L. WHITTLE, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

LITTLE v. THWAIT.

May 10th.—Application to pay out Money lodged in Court, Plaintiff being Pauper and Imbecile.

The defendant had lodged the sum of £100, with £6 6s. interest, in Court, and the plaintiff's brother, James Little, now sought to have this sum paid out to him on the ground that plaintiff was imbecile, without any adequate means of support, and had been for four years past a burden to applicant. The motion was resisted by John Little, another brother, who denied the alleged allegations as to plaintiff's poverty.

Irvine, for James Little. This Court will exercise the same jurisdiction which Courts of Equity exercise in the case of minors.

Carson, for John Little. The Court has no jurisdiction to pay out the principal to third parties.

The Court ordered the interest and £10 of the principal to be paid to Joseph Alexander, he and James Little undertaking to apply it to the use of the plaintiff, and further, the sum of £8 10s. to be paid to Alexander for the costs of action and motion.

Attorney for James Little, Joseph Alexander.

Attorney for John Little, Archibald Collum.

GREENE v. LECKEY.

May 29 and 30, and July 1.—Error in fact—One of several Defendants, an infant, appearing by Attorney.

This was an action of ejectment brought in the year 1851. Parliamentary appearances, under the Process and Practice Act, were entered for defendants, and judgment was recovered by default. Some of defendants were infants at the time of the appearance being entered and judgment being recovered. In 1865 defendants brought error in fact, and assigned for error that they had appeared by attorney and not by guardian. The heir and executor of the original plaintiff joined in error and pleaded in substance that the ejectment was for non-payment of rent, and that more than one year's rent was due; that every person in possession of the lands had been served with the ejectment; that the minors were not in possession of any part of the lands; had not any interest in them; were not necessary parties, but had nevertheless been served; that no defence had been taken by any of the parties, and judgment was recovered by default; the lessor put into possession of the lands, and had remained in possession until his death; and that the present defendants in error had been in possession from that time. To this plea the defendants demurred.

Dowse, Q.C. and Byrne in support of demurrer.

Macdonagh Q C. and F. L. Dames, in support of the plea.

PIGOT, C. B., held that the appearance of an infant defendant by attorney and not by guardian was error in fact and vitiated the judgment, and that the judgment must accordingly be reversed as to all the defendants in the action. The plea too is bad. It contains only averments of matter of fact which would have been available as a defence to the original action.

Attorneys for plaintiff, Fletcher and Meade.

Attorney for defendants, Thomas Johnston.

June 27.—Practice—Administering Interrogatories.

Plaintiff applied in an action of ejectment for leave to administer interrogatories. The motion was grounded on an affidavit made by plaintiff's son and his solicitor, from which it appeared that plaintiff was, and always had been, residing in England, and was of very advanced years; that his son had always managed his Irish estates.

Falkiner, in support of the motion.

Dix.—These are not unavoidable circumstances within the meaning of the 57th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1856.

O'HAGAN, J. held he had no jurisdiction to act upon this affidavit.

Attorneys, David M'Killop and Alex. Caruth.

BELFAST WATER COMPANY v. GIRDWOOD.

July 9.—Practice—Jury under Old System.

The plaintiffs applied for a jury under the old system, on the grounds that the notoriety of the proceedings and the interest created by statements inserted in local newspapers, and the material interest of the mill owners who generally acted on the special jury of the County Antrim, would render it impossible for plaintiffs to have a fair trial under the present system.

Joy, Q.C., and Sullivan, Q.C., in support of the motion.

Ferguson, Q.C., Harrison, Q.C., Falkiner, Q.C., and Lefroy, for the defendant.

GEORGE, J., refused to comply with the application, as there was no political or religious feelings connected with the case, and it was not shown that a jury under the old system would secure a fairer trial.

Attorney for plaintiffs, Cassidy.

Attorney for defendant, Black.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Nov. 18.—Manager named in Will.

W. M. Johnston, on behalf of Mrs. Quin, the widow of the deceased, for administration, with the contents of the will annexed of the deceased, as contained in a copy of the same. The deceased died on the 11th April, 1863, having made a will on the 2nd April, 1863, by which he left all his property equally between his said widow and his daughter Julia, and in the said will he named his said widow "manager of all." The deceased had left another daughter for whom he had provided on her marriage, and also a son who had long since emigrated to Australia and not since been heard of. Soon after the testator's death the widow gave the original will of the deceased to Mr. Eugene O'Mara, a solicitor, for the purpose of having it proved, and the latter then gave the widow a copy of it in his handwriting, which was sworn to be a true copy. Mr. O'Mara was accidentally killed, and his papers were all destroyed after his death, and the original will of the deceased could not be found, and had not been proved; as to the widow being executrix according to the tenor, the Goods of Jones (2 Sw. and Tr. 155), were cited. The daughter Julia consented to the motion.

KEATINGE, J.—It is unnecessary to decide that point now, as I require the widow to renounce, and take administration with the contents of the will annexed, as contained in the copy, she giving justifying security for the assets, save as to her own one-third share and that of her daughter Julia. Order accordingly.

OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS—NOVEMBER 19th.

The winter session of Parliament was opened on Tuesday by Royal Commission. The last occasion upon which Parliament assembled in the winter was in 1857, when the monetary crisis rendered the meeting of the Legislature indispensable.

The Royal Commissioners, the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Marlborough, the Earl of Malmesbury, the Earl of Tankerville, and the Earl of Cadogan, entered the House at two o'clock, and took their seats upon a bench in front of the throne. Colonel Clifford, the Yeoman Usher of the Black Rod, was at once directed to summons the attendance of the Speaker and members of the House of Commons, and soon afterwards, the Royal Commission having been read, the Lord Chancellor read the Queen's speech, as follows:—

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

In again applying to you for your advice and assistance, I regret that I have found it necessary to call for your attendance at an unusual and, probably to many of you, inconvenient season. The Sovereign of Abyssinia, in violation of all international law, continues to hold in captivity several of my subjects, some of whom have been especially accredited to him by myself; and his persistent disregard of friendly representations has left me no alternative but that of making a peremptory demand for the liberation of my subjects, and supporting it by an adequate force. I have accordingly directed an expedition to be sent for that purpose alone, and I confidently rely upon the support and co-operation of my Parliament in my endeavour at once to relieve their countrymen from an unjust imprisonment, and to vindicate the honour of my Crown. I have directed that papers on the subject shall be forthwith laid before you.

I receive from all Foreign Powers assurances of friendly feelings, and I see no reason to apprehend the disturbance of the general peace of Europe.

A band of Italian volunteers, without authority from their own Sovereign, having invaded the Papal territory, and threatened Rome itself, the Emperor of the French felt himself called upon to despatch an expedition for the protection of the Sovereign and his dominions. That object having been accomplished, and the defeat and dispersion of the volunteers having relieved the Papal territory from the danger of external invasion, I trust that his Imperial Majesty will find himself enabled, by an early withdrawal of his troops, to remove any possible ground of misunderstanding between his Majesty's Government and that of the King of Italy.

The treasonable conspiracy commonly known as Fenianism, baffled and repressed in Ireland, has assumed in England the form of organised violence and assassination. These outrages require to be vigorously put down, and I rely for their effectual suppression upon the firm administration of the law, and the loyalty of the great mass of my subjects.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,

The estimates for the ensuing year are in the course of preparation, and will in due time be laid before you. They will be framed with a view to economy and to the necessary requirements of the public service.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

As a necessary sequel to the legislation of the last session, bills will be laid before you for amending the representation of the people in Scotland and Ireland.

I have reason to believe that the Commissioners appointed to inquire into and report upon the boundaries of existing boroughs, as well as of the proposed divisions of counties and newly franchised boroughs have made considerable progress in their inquiries, and no time will be lost after the receipt of their report in laying before you their recommendations for your consideration and decision. A bill will also be presented to you for the more effectual prevention of bribery and corruption at elections. The Public School Bill, which has already been more than once submitted to Parliament, will again be laid before you.

The general question of the taxation of the people requires your most anxious attention, and I have no doubt you will approach the subject with a full appreciation both of its vital importance and its acknowledged difficulties.

Measures will be submitted to you during the present session for amending and consolidating the various Acts relating to the Mercantile Marine.

The exemption which the country has now for some time enjoyed from the cattle plague, affords a favourable opportunity for considering such permanent enactments as may relieve the home trade from vexatious restrictions and facilitate the introduction, under due regulation, of foreign cattle for home consumption.

Measures for the amendment of the law, which have been deferred under the pressure of more urgent business, will be submitted for your consideration.

Other questions apparently calling for legislative action have been referred to members whose reports, as they shall be received, shall, without delay, be laid before Parliament.

It is my earnest prayer that all your deliberations may be so guided as to conduce to the general contentment and happiness of my people.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

LIABILITIES OF TRUSTEES.—S. by his will gave all his property to trustees (M. and R.) upon trust to sell and convert, and after payment of debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses, and certain gifts to his wife, gave the residue to his children for life, and then to their issue, with substitutionary clauses; and there was a power to the trustees, at their discretion, to advance the whole or any part of the shares of the testator's children to set them up in business. The wife only survived her husband for three years, and for fifteen years matters remained in statu quo, the children constantly applying for an advance to set them up in business, which was refused by M., who was a solicitor, R., a farmer, taking little or no part. The grandchildren, through their solicitors, then applied to M. for information as to their interest in the estate; but he partly professed ignorance, and no satisfactory information being obtained from him or his agents, a common administration suit was instituted; the bill, being greatly lengthened subsequently by amendment, stating the exercise of the power of advancement in the will by M. to the children, now old people, after bill filed. The suit continued for three years in the most hostile manner, and came to a hearing: Held, that the conduct of M. was unjustifiable, and he and R. ordered to restore the moneys advanced, and pay all the costs (except £200, as the sum requisite for a common administration suit) by a day specified. Semble, where trustees act under the direction of the court, and behave honestly and fairly, furnish proper accounts, &c., the court will protect and support them even in the case of mistakes, provided they are innocent ones; but if they act when a difficulty arises without submitting the question to the court they will be liable to the costs of the investigation. Where trustees show a bias in favour of a particular party or class of persons, do not come forward with proper accounts, or obstruct the investigation of the trust, and otherwise behave improperly, they are liable to restore the fund if lost, and to pay the whole costs, except such as are fairly payable in a common administration suit, the amount of which will be fixed by the judge at the hearing, without a reference: (Talbot v. Marsfield, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 78. V. C. M.)

COMPOSITION DEED AFTER INSPECTORSHIP-DEED.—To an action upon a promissory-note, the defendant pleaded a deed of composition under the 192nd section of the B. A. 1861, by which the 1st clause provided that a previously executed deed of inspectorship between the same parties should cease and be void, and the subsequent clauses provided for the deposit with the inspectors of the same composition within a month, in lieu thereof. The plaintiff assented to neither deed, and the defendant paid to the inspectors a part of the composition in money, and part in bills: Held, that a plea setting out the composition-deed and referring to the inspectorship-deed was good, and that the payment of the composition need not necessarily be in cash: (Emptage v. M'Culloch, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 67. C. P.)

EXPENSES OF OBTAINING LOCAL ACT OF PARLIAMENT.—In an action for work bestowed and money spent in obtaining a Railway Act, in which it was provided that the expenses incident to the passing of the Act should be paid by the company, the company pleaded that they had not raised or received, nor had been able to raise or receive, any money which they might apply to the payment of such expenses: Held, upon demurrer, that, by the 65th section of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, this plea was no answer to the action: (Manning v. London, Worcester, and South Wales Railway Company, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 68. C. P.)

VOLUNTARY — WINDING-UP — LIQUIDATORS. — On a voluntary winding-up, subject to the supervision of the court, the judge in chambers has power, under sect. 141, to remove all or any of the liquidators on due cause shown: (Re The Marseilles Extension Railway Company, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 61. V. C. M.)

SALE BY AUCTION—DESCRIPTION.—Where property is put up for sale by auction, the description of it must be such as to be comprehensible by any person of ordinary understanding. The mere mention of the property being held under a lease, when in fact it is only part of such property, the other part being subject to a reserved rent, is not sufficient to give notice of the contents of the lease, or that it relates to other property. A bill filed for specific performance against the purchaser under such a description dismissed with costs: (Sheard v. Venables, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 10. V. C. M.)

LIABILITY OF RAILWAY COMPANIES FOR TORT OF SERVANT.—A servant of a railway company arrested a passenger for not paying the fare of a horse which had been granted free transit by the company. The arrest was held not to be within the powers conferred on railway companies by ss. 103 and 104 of 8 Vict., c. 20, consequently the defendants were not liable for the act of the servant: (Poulton v. The London and South-Western Railway Company, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 11. Q. B.)

WHAT IS A PARTNERSHIP GUARANTEE BY ATTORNEYS.—S., being desirous to assign a lease which he had deposited with the plaintiff to secure advances, employed the defendants, who were in partnership as attorneys, to get the lease from the plaintiffs. T., one of the defendants, accordingly arranged with the plaintiffs that they should give up the lease on receiving from him the following undertaking, signed by him in the name of the firm: "We undertake, in consideration of your handing to us the deeds and papers in your possession relating to the Rose and Crown Inn at Hounslow, so as to enable us to complete the assignment of the lease of such property, to pay you the sum of £200 on the day after the completion of the assignment of such lease, and the further sum of £250 on or before the 3rd Sept. next." The other defendant was not aware that this undertaking was given, but the whole transaction was entered in the books of the firm, and the purchase-money was paid into the partnership account: Held, in an action on the undertaking, that this was not a bare guarantee for the debt of a third person, but an undertaking to appropriate money so to be received by the firm in the ordinary course of the partnership business, and that it was therefore binding on the firm: (The Alliance Bank v. Tucker, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 13. C. P.)

WHAT IS A TESTAMENTARY PAPER?—R. executed an instrument in the presence of two witnesses. In form it was an agreement for a lease; but it also contained a provision for the appropriation of the rents and the proceeds of the sale of the land after his death: Held, not to be testamentary, inasmuch as it was not dependent on his death for consummation, but took effect immediately, and was not revocable: (In the Goods of George Robinson, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 19. Prob.)

METROPOLIS LOCAL MANAGEMENT—BUILDING—AGREEMENT.—Lady H., being the owner in fee of certain land in Kensington, entered into an agreement with a builder by which he agreed to build certain houses on the land, and to lay out and keep up an ornamental square for the private use of the occupiers of the houses. By the terms of the agreement a lease was to be granted to the builder of each house on its completion, and a lease of the square with the last house, but there was a proviso that the builder should take no interest in any house or land till a lease of it was granted. The builder laid out the square, and built a portion of the houses, of which he received leases, together with grants to the occupiers of the houses of rights of walking in the square; and Lady H. afterwards sold the reversions of the houses then completed. The respondents having paved a road adjoining the square: Held, that Lady H. was the owner of the square within the meaning of the 18 & 19 Vict., c. 120, s. 250, by which the "owner" is defined to be the person for the time being receiving the rack-rents, or who would receive the same if the land were let at a rack-rent, and that she was therefore liable, under the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 102, s. 77, to contribute towards the cost of paving the road adjoining the square: (Lady Holland v. The Vestry of Kensington, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 73. Q. B.)

MORTGAGE — REPUTED OWNERSHIP — FIXTURES. — A mortgagee of freehold or leasehold property with fixtures thereon, although they are trade fixtures removable by the tenant, will pass the property with fixtures to the mortgagee, and take such property out of the class of goods and chattels within the operation of the Bills of Sales Act, and also out of the order and disposition clause in the Bankruptcy Act, and therefore as giving to such a mortgagee a title to retain such property as against assignees in bankruptcy, where fixtures are not removable without injury to the freehold, that are properly fixtures, even although as between landlord and tenant they might be removable during the tenancy. A tramway or railway is a fixture that is not removable: (The Patent Peat Company, 17 L. T. Rep N. S. 69. Ireland.)

In the Matter of the Estate of Mary Agnes O'Connell Jackson, William Henry Jackson, Wm. Bartholomew Gannon, and of L. H. Deering, and Charles Henry James, Owners;

The Trustees of the Second Equitable Permanent Benefit Building Society at Liverpool, Petitioners.

TO BE SOLD BY AUCTION, in One Lot, before the Honourable Judge Dobbs, at the Landed Estates' Court, in the City of Dublin, on FRIDAY, the 17th day of JANUARY, 1868, at Twelve o'clock noon, part of the Lands of Old Merrion, containing 2 roods and 23 perches, with the Nine Dwelling Houses erected thereon, held under lease dated the 30th day of October, 1858, for the term of 80 years, subject to the yearly rent of £66 sterling.

Dated this 11th day of November, 1867.

GEORGE T. HOPKINS, Chief Clerk.

The Premises consist of the seven houses known as Merrion Parade, of Llandaff House and Herbert Lodge, on the road from Dublin to Blackrock.

They are within five minutes walk of the Booterstown Station on the Dublin and Kingstown Railway. Only four of the houses are at present let. These lettings were made by the Court of Chancery, and, estimating the rental at a less sum than was heretofore paid for the premises under lettings made by the owner, it shows a profit rent of £162 per annum. Within a short distance of the city; close to the shore, with every facility for travelling by road or rail; the advantage of sea bathing, and commanding beautiful views; a respectable class of tenants can be easily had for the premises. Llandaff House contains a spacious Drawing-room, two Parlours, three or four bed-rooms, Pantry, Kitchen, and W.C., and is well suited for a respectable family.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the Landed Estates' Court: and to

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 44.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1867. (Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

HAVING considered the defence by demurrer in our last number, we now proceed briefly to consider the other classes of defence—and first of pleas. The principal grounds of pleas are distributed into twelve classes, as to the nature of which, and the rules respecting them, we must refer to Beames on Pleas, and Lord Redesdale's Treatise.

As a simple instance of a plea, we will suppose a bill filed for the purpose of setting aside a deed, as having been fraudulently obtained; the plaintiff's bill may set forth facts amounting to a case of fraud, and the statements, so far as they go, may be accurate; but the bill may have suppressed all notice of some other facts affording a defence; as, for instance, a compromise founded on valuable consideration, and entered into subsequently to the fraud. In this case the defence would be by plea; the defendant pleading that, subsequently to the alleged fraud the plaintiff compromised the matter (See Haynes' Outlines of Equity, 71.)

It may be sufficient to observe generally of pleas that they consist of short allegations of fact, the insertion of which in the bill would have made it demurrable.

Pleas are not favoured in a Court of Equity, and the Commissioners, in their first report, were of opinion that pleas should not be introduced into Ireland. But their recommendation in this respect was disregarded, as in the case of demurrers, and a clause for the total abolition of pleas introduced into the bill was rejected in committee.

It will be found, however, in practice, that it will be seldom convenient or advisable to resort to a defence by plea. The defence is generally anticipated by the bill, and the bill, in fact, is made to combine what in common law language would be a declaration, an imaginary plea by the defendant, and a replication by the plaintiff. The difficulty, in most cases, of raising a defence by a plea simply, without answering all the facts and circumstances relied on in the bill, is so great that the defence by answer is usually adopted (Haynes, 73), and there are now very few cases, indeed, in which a plea is more useful than an answer.

Pleas must be signed by counsel, and verified by the defendant, except in certain cases—e.g., where the plea is of matter of record (See Ords. 49 & 50). Pleas are to be filed in the Record and Writ Office, and set down for argument in fourteen days after notice of filing.

The general inutility of pleas will be more fully seen by considering their object and principle, and by referring to the equivalents substituted for them in modern practice; and we would recommend our readers not to waste their time on the subject of pleas, as it is a species of learning the most difficult, and the most useless, in the art of pleading.

We now come to the ordinary course of defence, viz., an answer.

The plaintiff having filed, and served interrogatories, the defendant is compelled to put in an answer within twenty-eight days from the delivery to him, or his solicitor, of a copy of the interrogatories which he is required to answer. This time is frequently extended by special order (Ord. 62). Interrogatories for examination of the defendant are to be printed, and filed within eight days after the time limited for the defendant's appearance, whether he appears or not (see 41st Order). The word limited is important, as in case the defendant should be dilatory in entering an appearance, the plaintiff might be under the impression that the time ran from the defendant's actual appearance, and allow the eight days limited to elapse, and then be obliged to apply specially to the Court for leave to file interrogatories.

An answer commonly contains not only a discovery respecting the matters inquired after by the interrogatories, but also a statement of such matters as the defendant considers material for his defence, and is divided into paragraphs, and numbered consecutively (Ch. Act, 1867, s. 65).

In case no interrogatories have been delivered to him, the defendant need not put in any answer unless he pleases; as if his defence depends on the simple denial of one or more of the facts set out in the bill, no answer is necessary, the 85th section of the Act enacting that his silence shall be equivalent to a traverse of the plaintiff's case. But if his defence depends on other, or independent facts, he will put in a voluntary answer, which is sworn, filed, and printed in the same manner as a compulsory answer. The answer is signed at foot by counsel; then come the schedules (if any), and at the end of all the signature of the defendant and the jurat. Answers are usually drawn in the first person, and are sworn in the same manner as affidavits.

THE present is essentially an age of examinations, and though we do not approve of the plan that all magistrates should be elected by competitive examination, as Chinese mandarins are, still we think that in those professions which have already instituted compulsory examinations for those wishing admission to their ranks in accordance with the spirit of the age, we see a marked improvement in the general character of the new members over those who entered the professions under the old régime. The consideration of those professions in which examinations have been instituted as a necessary preliminary to entrance, and the undoubtedly successful result to the members and the public, leads us to the question whether the profession of the bar should any longer be open to men without a preliminary examination in at least subjects strictly connected with the practice of their profession. To no other profession that we know of are men admitted without having previously shown themselves in some degree fitted for the performance of its duties. In the army, navy, and the church, there are examinations more or less strict, according to the exigencies of the time, and the number of candidates applying for admission into their ranks, and now it is impossible to obtain even an inferior appointment in the Civil Service of the State without showing ample qualifications. It is true that many men are called to the bar who have no intention of practising—but the majority of these men hope to get some appointment for which their supposed knowledge of law is their only qualification. At a meeting of the Incorporated Law Society, held in the Four Courts, on Tuesday, one of the speakers is reported to have said that if the barristers had to pass the same examination previous to being called that attorney's apprentices have to pass before being sworn in, there would be fewer wigs to be seen in the Four Courts. This expression cannot, and, of course, was not meant to, be taken in its literal meaning, because it is impossible to believe that if such an examination were necessary to be passed before any one could hope to attain the rank and position of a barrister, that any of the men who venture on such a profession, where the greatest industry and respectable abilities are necessary to win moderate success, would be found to fail. But it really becomes a question of great importance, and well worth discussion, whether, when we see the system of compulsory examination working so well in other professions, we should not have similar examinations made compulsory on candidate barristers. There are many reasons now why circumstances are changed from the time when the present system was established, the most obvious of which is that formerly and down to a comparatively late period every man going to the bar first received a proper preliminary education, and in England nearly always took his degree at one of the two Universities, which was a sufficient guarantee that his general attainments in knowledge were such as would support the character and reputation for learning and the position in society which members of the bar have ever held in these countries, and in the second place men very rarely indeed chose the bar as a profession who did not belong to the upper classes of society, and who did not possess a competence, to whom in fact the rank of barrister was no advancement in social position, but now these circumstances are very much changed, and therefore we think that a corresponding change ought to be made in the system of legal education and admission to the bar. It may be, and often has been stated that it only concerns the individual barrister himself, whether he possesses sufficient legal knowledge to discharge the duties of his position, as no man can expect business at the bar who has not first shown himself able to do it; but the same might be said of a doctor with equal justice, and no one would seriously maintain that he ought to be allowed the privilege of practising at his profession until he had so frightened possible patients by the ill results of his practice that no one would consult him. The most extended principles of Free Trade would not require any such practice, and its wildest advocates would admit the truth of the proverb that circumstances alter cases. The institution of examinations, both preliminary and final, for attorneys, which have been so excellent, and which have arrived at such a high standard in the course of the few years they have been established, therefore makes us think it possible that before many years elapse, unless the benchers take some means to remedy it, the relative position of the two branches of the legal profession will be much altered. At present an attorney before being sworn in has to pass a searching preliminary examination in Latin, English, History, Arithmetic, Bookkeeping, &c. He has to attend lectures in prescribed books, and has to pass a final examination of a very serious character in law and the practice of the Courts. Whereas the only part of the programme that applies to students for the bar is the necessity of attending lectures which leaves it entirely optional with the student whether he shall attend to them, or merely, to use a Gallicism, assist at them. It is not easy, within the limits of a newspaper article, to point out what ought to be done to remedy this apparent defect in the system of legal education. The Education Committee of the Benchers of the King's Inn in Ireland have already made some advance in the paths of improvement in instituting the general examinations, by passing which students shall be eligible to be called to the bar without qualifying by attendance on lectures, as it is certain that a man who passes the examination, even without credit, will know very much more of his business than he who only attends the lectures without passing the examination. The Education Committee have also approved of the following rules, adopted by the Benchers in 1864:—"That to the student whose name shall appear first on the list at the general examination there shall be awarded a prize of ten guineas, and he shall also be entitled, if so recommended by the members of the Education Committee attending at such an examination, to be execused from keeping two of the Terms in Ireland, and which would be otherwise required for his admission to the Bar; and that to the student whose name shall appear second on the list there shall be awarded a prize of five guineas, and he shall also be entitled, if so recommended by the members of the Education Committee attending at such examination, to be excused from keeping one of the Terms in Ireland, and which otherwise would be required for his admission to the bar." In addition to these rules we would suggest the course that has been adopted by the other professions—viz., to hold a preliminary examination in general education, from which University men should not be exempt, and, before call, to make an examination in the principles of Civil, Feudal, and Roman Law compulsory. We would also suggest that there should be law scholarships instituted at the Inns in Ireland such as there are in London and at the English Universities; as even the first prize of ten guineas is disproportionately small when compared with the time necessary to read the prescribed course, and the remission of the two Terms is, in most instances, a doubtful benefit.

We print to-day the Resolutions on the subject of Bankruptcy Law Amendment, agreed to by the associated Delegates from upwards of forty different Chambers of Commerce. So important an expression of the opinions of the mercantile community will greatly strengthen the Government in their efforts to legislate on this difficult matter, more especially as those opinions are for the most part concurred in by the general public. We are glad to see that in the proposed reforms Ireland has not been forgotten.

A Meeting of Solicitors will be held on Tuesday next, the 3rd December, at 12 o'clock, in the Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, for the purpose of finally considering the suggestions offered for amending the Civil Bill Acts, and making arrangements for proceeding with the contemplated Bill for effecting the necessary amendments, as the Laws for Recovery of Small Debts in Ireland are defective and unsatisfactory to the public.

THE ADMIRALTY COURT.

We have now before us the Rules, Orders, and Regulations of the Court of Admiralty, as approved of by the Lord Chancellor, and (as relates to fees, receipts, and expenditure) by the Treasury. These rules, and the forms appended, seem to have been prepared with much care and precision, as might have been expected from their framer, the Judge of the Court; whilst the fees (as in schedule) provided for the practitioners, appear to be fair and remunerative. The rules, &c., came into force on the 27th inst., in so far as relates to causes instituted on and after that day; and we mean, from time to time, to draw attention to their provisions.

Before closing this notice, we would call the attention of our provincial subscribers and readers to that portion of the Act that refers to Commissioners for administering oaths, and taking bail for the Court in future. By the 56th section of the Act, all answers, affidavits, declarations, &c., in matters, suits, or proceedings in the Court, are to be sworn before "Commissioners to administer oaths in Admiralty" (whom the Judge is empowered to appoint under the 53rd section), or before Commissioners to administer oaths in Chancery, and as there is nothing in the Act interfering with the rights of the existing "Commissioners for taking affidavits in the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland," the question has been mooted whether the latter can continue to exercise the authority delegated to them before the present Act. So doubtful has the solving of this question become, that many of the old Commissioners have sought, at expense, for new Commissions. These have, in every instance, been granted by the Judge, in cases where the applicant was a practising solicitor. The fees payable to Commissioners are £1 1s. on each bail-bond perfected, and one shilling and sixpence on each affidavit, &c.

SOLICITORS' AND ATTORNEYS' INCORPORATED SOCIETY.

The usual half-yearly meeting of the members of the above society was held yesterday afternoon, in the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts.

Mr. A. BARLOW, Vice-President, presided.

There were present:—Messrs. Matthew Anderson, Edward Love Alma, George Beamish, Joseph Burke, George Bernard, George L. Cathcart, Wm. J. Cooper, John Connor, Wm. K. Clay, Simon Creagh, Graves C. Colles, Henry Thomas Dix, Wm. D'Alton, John T. Duckett, Arthur Ellis, George D. Fottrell, Edward Greene Foley, William Findlater, William Fitzsimons, John F. Goodman, John E. Hughes, John F. Harkan, John T. Hinds, Wm. Hayes, Emor Harte, Wm. M. Jones, Patrick J. Kelly, Alex. D. Kennedy, Robert C. Lee, Robert Lyle, Wm. F. Littledale, R. J. T. Macrory, Arthur Molloy, Edward M'Gauran, John H. Nunn, Thomas F. O'Connell, John E. O'Ferrall, Terence O'Reilly, Robert Ponclue, Wm. Read, Edward Reeves (Vice-President), Robert Reeves, Wm. Roche, Thomas K. Roche, John Read, Richard Scott, Edward T. Stapleton, John Vincent, James Worrall, H. J. P. West, John M. Williamson.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, said:—I cannot take my place in this chair, which should be filled by Mr. Orpen, without expressing the great regret all who hear me entertain at the deep affliction which has fallen upon him in the loss of his dearly and deservedly beloved son. All who knew the late Charles Orpen loved and regarded him, and I am sure that all here will sympathize with the deep affliction which has fallen upon our respected Chairman and his family.

The Secretary then read the half yearly report, and its adoption was moved and seconded.

Mr. Hinds (having been requested to address the meeting) said they were now at the close of the first year during which the council sat under the new bill, and it was but due to the profession outside to say a word or two as to how it had worked. The society had elected the council on the broadest basis—universal suffrage, annual election, and vote by ballot. He did not think any gentleman, however broad might be his views, could wish for a wider representation than that basis gave, and it was highly creditable to the profession at large, that upon that enlarged basis, they had elected as careful, cautious, and (he used the word in its highest sense) conservative a council as could be got together. No complaints had been made during the year, and they had a respectable balance to their credit. Out of the balance they had voted £100 towards their library, and he hoped that further grants would be made for the same object until they had a library worthy of the profession. Some gentlemen might think that the council did not go fast enough, but he assured them that speed would be increased as much as was consistent with safety. He went on to contrast the past with the present position of the profession, and said it would not be too much to declare that the men to whom they were most indebted for the satisfactory progress which had been made were not the speech-makers. In a few years their's would be the best educated branch of the legal profession in Ireland, and, with a good substantial fund at their disposal, he looked forward to a still further improvement in their condition.

Mr. Mecredy referred to the abolition of the certificate Duty, which, he said, could only be affected by vigorous and unanimous action. They had received aid in this work during the past year from their provincial brethren, and he hoped that next year the aid would be redoubled, so that they might commence the struggle early in the session. No doubt the bill was "choked" off last time by a "dodge" of the Government; but they hoped for a better result next time. He might mention as a fact of some interest that the society now possessed a corporate seal under the Act of Parliament.

Mr. Ellis said he wished to draw attention to their position with respect to the building in which they were assembled, and was proceeding to enter into details respecting the subject, when

Mr. Hinds put it to Mr. Ellis whether, in the present state of the matter, it would not be injudicious to discuss it.

Mr. Goodman and Mr. Dix also contended that any allusion to the subject was out of order.

Mr. Ellis said it was not his intention to say anything that would commit the council and the profession. His only object was to put them in possession of facts in connection with the subject of which they were previously ignorant.

Mr. Hinds said he had appealed to his friend's discretion not to introduce the matter, but as he found that was useless, he would call upon the chairman to rule the point.

The Chairman said he thought it would be inconvenient to discuss the matter further.

Mr. Ellis bowed to the chairman's decision, and the resolution was adopted.

The ballot for the Council for the ensuing year was then fixed to take place on Monday next. The following gentlemen were appointed scrutineers:—Henry Stewart Watson, Stephen R. Fetherston H., Thomas K. Roche, W. W. Dwyer, and J. Worrall.

Mr. Worrall drew the attention of the meeting to the difficulty experienced by the members of the profession in drawing money out of the Court of Chancery, which contrasted unfavourably with the mode pursued in the Landed Estates' Court. He believed that if the matter were brought under the attention of the Lord Chancellor, he would not allow the abuse to continue.

Several gentlemen expressed their concurrence.

The proceedings were brought to a close with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

THE LIBEL BILL.—Sir Colman O'Loghlen's bill on the law of libel, which has been printed, is identical in its provisions with that introduced last year.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Wm. Murray, Esq., A.M., barrister-at-law, to the office of Reader in his court, in place of Henry Darley, Esq., resigned.

The Lord Chief Justice Boville distributed, on Tuesday evening, to the Inns of Court Volunteers, the prizes won during the year. Several of the other judges were present.

MASONIC PRESENTATION.—A bust of the Hon. Judge Townsend, Deputy Grand Master for Ireland, is now being executed at the instance of a few of his friends and admirers in Dublin and throughout the country. The model, which has been cast by a talented resident Italian artist, presents an excellent likeness of Judge Townsend. The material from which the bust is being cut is the best Carrara Marble. The committee purpose to present it, when completed, to the Dublin Grand Lodge, for erection in a suitable position in the new Masonic Hall, now in course of erection in Molesworth-street.

NOTES OF CASES.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

IRISH NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, AND THE RAILWAY CO.'S ACT, 1867.

In re MAURICE SALAMAN.

Nov. 26.—Railway Companies' Act, 1867—Scheme of Arrangement—Injunction.

A motion was made on behalf of the Irish North Western Railway Company that Maurice Salaman might be restrained from proceeding with the action pending in the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, in which he was plaintiff, and the Irish North Western Railway Company were defendants, on such terms as the Court should think fit.

No bills on petition was filed or presented. The motion was grounded on an affidavit filed under the foregoing title, which stated that Maurice Salaman was a mortgagee of the Company for £500, which became due on the 30th of September, 1867, and was still unpaid; and that he had commenced an action in the Court of Exchequer for the recovery of the amount of the said mortgage; that there was due only £2 15s. for interest; that the Company had on the 18th of November, 1867, filed in the Court of Chancery in Ireland, where the principal office of the Company is situated, a scheme of arrangement between the Company and their creditors, and a declaration in writing that the Company were unable to meet their engagements with their creditors, under the Railways Companies' Acts, 1857; that notice of the scheme had been published on the 19th of November, 1867, in the Dublin Gazette. The affidavit also stated the amount of the mortgage of the Company to be £300,000; that the revenues of the Company for several years was sufficient, after meeting the working expenses and other proper outgoings in respect of the undertaking, to enable the Company to pay the interest due on the mortgages, but without any dividend to the preference shareholders; and that the traffic of the undertaking was gradually and yearly increasing, and that the Directors had confidence that if the mortgage holders would accept debenture stock in the undertaking in exchange for their mortgages, the holders of that stock would in two or three years be enabled to sell such stock in the market at, if not above, par.

Sullivan Q.C. (with him E. F. Litton) for the motion, relied on the 6th and 7th sections of the Railway Companies' Acts, 1867 (30 & 31 Vic., c. 127).

Beytagh, for the Company.

30 & 31 Vic., c. 127, s. 6, enacts that "where a Company are unable to meet their engagements with their creditors, the directors may preface a scheme of arrangement between the Company and their creditors (with or without provisions for settling and defining any rights of shareholders of the Company as among themselves, and for raising, if necessary, additional share and loan capital, or either of them), and may file the same in the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland, according to the situation of the principal office of the Company, with a declaration in writing under the common seal of the Company, to the effect that the Company are unable to meet their engagements with their creditors, and with an affidavit of the truth of such declaration made by the chairman of the board of directors, and by the other directors or the major part in number of them, to the best of their respective judgment and belief."

"After the filing of the scheme, the Court may, on the application of the company on summons, or noticed in a summary way, restrain any action against the company in such terms as the Court thinks fit" (7th sec.)

The MASTER of the ROLLS granted an injunction to restrain the proceedings at law, the Company undertaking to bring in £500 within a fortnight.

(Before O'HAGAN, J., and MORRIS, J.)

M'SWEENY v. AHERN.

Nov. 2, 1867.—Leave to Reply—Notice.

To an action for rent by a mesne landlord the defendant had pleaded a payment of rent to the head landlord. Motion for leave to reply.

The COURT having asked whether notice had been given,

Waters said there was a rule in the Common Pleas requiring notice, and the replications he sought to plead were merely that the payment which was relied on was voluntary, and made after an action for another gale of rent then due had been brought in the Queen's Bench, and that there could be no necessity for giving notice to the defendant of a motion for leave to reply, matters of so simple a character, and of which the defendant was perfectly well aware.

The Officer of the Court stated that there was a rule in the Queen's Bench requiring notice, but there had been no settled practice in the Common Pleas.

The COURT heard the motion, and gave the leave to reply, but intimated an opinion that where the replications would raise serious questions, a motion for leave to reply should be on notice.

O'SULLIVAN v. DUBLIN AND WICKLOW RAILWAY CO.

Nov. 6.—Half Costs—Cause of Action disconnected with Contract.

Motion to review taxation. Summons and plaint contained counts against the defendants as carriers, and also counts in detinue, and trover. The defendants had received goods to be carried from Dublin to Enniscorthy, and the plaintiff some time afterwards directed the goods, which remained at the company's stores at Enniscorthy, to be brought back to Dublin, where they were eventually sold to pay storage expenses. The defendants gave a list of the goods so sold, and for the value of which they gave credit to the plaintiff, who, however, brought an action, and having proved more goods were given to the company than they had so accounted for, obtained a verdict for £17, which was entered up upon all of the counts.

The Master only allowed half costs, being of opinion that that was all the plaintiff was entitled to under the 243rd Section of the Chancery Procedure Act.

Digitized by Google

Keogh moved that the Master be directed to review his taxation, and allow full costs in the trover and detinue counts, on which the plaintiff had obtained a verdict, which were counts purely in tort.

P. White against the motion.

MONAHAN, C.J.—The question is, the goods having been delivered to be safely carried, even if there had been nothing in the summons and plaint but the count in trover, whether the case is one disconnected with contract, though it appears, in fact, that breach of the contract really constituted the foundation of the action. When the cause of action has its origin and foundation in a contract, which has been violated, we are of opinion that no matter what the form of pleading may be, the cause of action is not one disconnected with contract within the 243rd sec.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

MANBOURQUET v. WYSE.

May 7, 8, July 1.—Foreign Judgment—Judgment recovered against Absent Party—Demurrer and Replication to the same Plea—Effect of Replication in supplying omissions or defects in the Plea.

This was an action upon a judgment of the Tribunal of Commerce of the Seine, for 17,252 francs 48 centimes. The defendant pleaded in substance that, at the time of the commencement of the suit, and thence down to its termination, he was absent from France, and that he was not summoned to appear in, and had no knowledge or notice of any of the proceedings.

The plaintiff demurred to the defence, and also replied that the defendant was for a long time before the commencement of the suit resident in France, and there became indebted to the plaintiff, who was a French subject, and that by the French law, when a defendant is absent from the jurisdiction, a copy of the process in the action is served upon the Procureur Imperial, and another posted upon the door of the tribunal, and that then if the defendant make default the plaintiff may proceed to judgment; that the defendant after the accrual of the cause of action left France, and at the commencement of the suit had no domicile or known place of abode in France, that the plaintiff instituted a suit against the defendant, and pursued the procedure before stated, that default was made by the defendant and judgment recovered, and that the judgment was a valid and binding one by the law of France.

To this replication the defendant demurred.

J. P. Hamilton and Jellett, Q.C., in support of the demurrer to the defence and of the replication.

Byrne and Dowse, Q.C., in support of the defence and of the demurrer to the replication.

The COURT (PIGOT C.B., FITZGERALD and HUGHES, B.B.) held (July 1) that the defence was bad as, consistently with its averments, the defendant might have been a French subject, might have been resident then in France, or have had property there when the cause of action accrued, or might through an agent have been served with process.

FITZGERALD and HUGHES, B.B., also held that the replication did not show a procedure so contrary to natural justice as that the judgment recovered by means of it could not be sued on here, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

PIGOT, C.B., held that the plaintiff having alleged certain grounds of jurisdiction in his replication impliedly excluded all others, that these were not sufficient, and that the plaintiff having thus shown that he had no cause of action, judgment ought to be for the defendant.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

AT the general half-yearly meeting of the Society of the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland (incorporated by Royal Charter), held at the Solicitors' Hall, on Tuesday, the 26th of November, 1867,

ARTHUR BARLOW, Esq., Vice-President, in the chair, the following report of the Council was read by the secretary and adopted by the meeting:—

The Council, in submitting to the society their annual statement of proceedings think it right, in the first instance, to refer to such subjects as were alluded to in the report of last year, but which had not then been concluded; and next, to notice the other matters which subsequently came before them.

CERTIFICATE DUTY BILL.

Acting in concert with the London Incorporated Law Society, your Council introduced a bill last session for the reduction, to a nominal amount, of the duty upon the attorneys' annual certificates.

The bill was read a first time on the 26th of February last, and the second reading came on on the 2nd April, when a motion for an adjournment was made on the grounds that the Chancellor of the Exchequer intended to introduce his budget on the following day, when he gave the supporters of the measure to understand that the subject should be considered. On a division the motion for an adjournment was carried by a majority of 1, the numbers being 101 for and 100 against it, several of the supporters of the bill having voted in the majority on the understanding that the subject would be considered in the forthcoming budget.

Your Council, however, regret to say, that notwithstanding the implied arrangement the Chancellor of the Exchequer made no allusion to the subject in his financial statement, but having succeeded in postponing the further stages of the bill to an advanced period of the session, when the Government, through the absence of members, have virtually the control of the House, the result was the usual one as against all measures introduced by private members.

The adjourned debate came on on the 31st May, when, notwithstanding the strenuous opposition of the Government, the second reading (which is usually understood as the decisive stage) was carried by a majority of 7.

The bill came to a third reading on the 2nd of July, and the Government having the advantage of a thin house succeeded, on a division, in defeating the bill.

Your Council sent a deputation of their body to London prior to each stage of the measure, who, in concert with deputations from the several provincial law societies of Cork, Belfast, Waterford, and Derry, used their utmost exertions to procure the passing of this measure, which, but for the strenuous opposition of the Government, would, they believe, have been successful. They feel deeply grateful to the Honourable George Denman, who kindly undertook the carriage of the bill, and to a large majority of the Irish members for their unceasing exertions in supporting it; and they trust the justice of the cause, coupled with renewed exertions on the part of every solicitor in the United Kingdom, will eventually ensure the success of the measure.

COURT OF CHANCERY (IRELAND) BILL.

30 and 31 Vic., cap. 44.

During the past Session of Parliament "a Bill to Amend the Constitution, Practice, and Procedure of the Court of Chancery in Ireland," was brought in by the then Attorney and Solicitor-General for Ireland, and having been carefully examined by your Council, they feel it their duty to suggest certain amendments therein, some of which were adopted. This Bill has since become law, and they trust it may be found to answer the purpose for which it was framed, and that the assimilation of practice may be conducive to the interests of suitors. When the General Orders under this Act were in course of preparation, your Council applied, through the Lord Chancellor's Secretary, to be allowed to see the Draft of the Orders, and of the Schedule of Fees, before they were finally approved of; they were, however, informed that his Lordship was unable to comply with their request—that a copy of the proposed New Chancery Orders should be furnished to them, but that a copy of the proposed Table of Fees should be sent to them when prepared; they regret, however, to have to state that, although the Solicitors' fees are to be paid from the 2nd November inst., according to the new schedule, they have recently been informed that it has not yet been prepared.

CHANCERY TAXING OFFICE.

Your Council feel that they can point alike with confidence and pleasure to the success which has attended their efforts to procure redress of the grievances complained of in former reports, as having so long existed in almost every branch of this department, and although the appointment of Mr. Gibson to the office of Taxing Master has necessarily deprived your Council of the assistance and benefit derived during his long association with them, and his large and varied professional experience, still they cannot but feel that his loss from amongst their number will result in a gain to the profession and the suitors of the Court.

COURTS OF LAW OFFICERS' (IRELAND) BILL.

30 and 31 Vic., c. 129.

"A Bill to Alter and Regulate the Official Establishment of the High Court of Chancery and of the Superior Courts of Common Law in Ireland," was prepared and brought in during the last Session by the then Attorney-General for Ireland and Lord Naas, and your Council carefully examined same, and prepared some suggestions which were transmitted to the Attorney-General. This Bill has since become law.

COMMON LAW COURTS' (IRELAND) BILL.

A "Bill to amend the Pleading, Practice, and Procedure of the Courts of Common Law in Ireland," having been brought in during the last session of Parliament by the then Attorney and Solicitor-General for Ireland, your Council prepared observations and suggestions for amendments which they considered necessary to be made therein, and transmitted same to the Attorney and Solicitor-General, together with observations made by them upon Bill introduced in previous session. This Bill was, however, subsequently withdrawn.

ADMIRALTY COURT (IRELAND) BILL.

30 and 31 Vic., cap. 114.

During the past session of Parliament a "Bill to extend the Jurisdiction, alter and amend the Procedure and Practice, and to regulate the Establishment of the Court of Admiralty in Ireland," was prepared and brought in by the then Attorney-General for Ireland and Lord Naas, and has since become law. The 25th Section of this Act provides, that all Attorneys at Law and Solicitors shall, from and after the time when the Act shall come into operation, be entitled to practise as Attorneys and Solicitors respectively in all matters and causes whatsoever in the Court of Admiralty, and shall exercise the same rights and privileges of practising in that Court as Proctors now have and enjoy. The new rules and orders under this Act are now in print.

EDUCATION OF APPRENTICES.

At the Preliminary Examination held for last Hilary Term, eighteen candidates attended (eight of whom had been postponed from the previous Michaelmas Term). Eleven were allowed the examination, the remaining seven were postponed. The candidate first in order of merit was permitted to compete at the November examination for the Society's Prize. At the Final Examination in same Term, four candidates attended: three were allowed the examination, the remaining candidate was postponed; and the Court of Examiners awarded special Certificates of Merit upon equal marks to Messrs. Gerald F. Barry and Thomas Kelly.

At the preliminary examination held for Easter Term eighteen candidates, four of whom had been previously postponed, attended. Eleven were allowed the examination and seven postponed. The Court of Examiners decided that the candidate first in order of merit should be allowed to compete for the prize at the special examination in November; but with respect to the other applicants, their answering was not so good as it had been on former occasions, and those whose answering in Latin would have qualified them to be allowed to compete for a prize were so deficient in their papers as to prevent their being recommended for that purpose.

At the final examination in same Term six candidates attended. Five were allowed the examination, and one who had been previously postponed was again postponed; the Court of Examiners considered him improved, but not sufficiently to entitle him to pass on that occaaion. Mr. Ambrose Plunkett, one of the five candidates who passed, was awarded a silver medal. Of the other candidates—Messrs. George C. Stapleton, William Irwin, and John R. Lloyd—were awarded special certificates of merit.

At the preliminary examination for Trinity Term, twenty candidates attended (seven of whom were postponed from Easter Term), eleven were allowed the examination, the remaining nine were postponed. One of the candidates was permitted to compete for the Society's prize. At the final evamination eleven candidates were examined, ten of whom were allowed the examination, the remaining candidate was postponed. The Court of Examiners awarded a gold medal to Mr. Thomas A. O'Hea for superior answering, a silver medal to Mr. Thomas Greer Carson, and special certificates of merit were awarded to Messrs. Owen, P. Neary, and Nicholas Waters Keller.

At the preliminary examination held for Michaelmas Term, twenty-eight candidates attended; seventeen were allowed the examination, of whom the first three received permission to compete for the Society's prize in November, 1868. Eleven candidates were postponed for deficient answering.

At the final examination six candidates were examined; all were allowed the examination. The Court of Examiners awarded a gold medal for superior answering to Mr. Richard Davoren, silver medals to Messrs. Edward N. Blood and Thomas J. Furlong, and special certificates of merit to Messrs. Thomas C. Franks and Henry G. Cooper.

At the examination for the Society's prize, held for Michaelmas Term, three candidates attended, and the Court of Examiners awarded the gold medal and ten pounds to Mr. David M. Fitzgerald. But they did not consider the answering of the candidate who was next in order of merit sufficiently good to entitle him to obtain the Society's second prize.

ASSOCIATED CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE.

On Tuesday last a conference of the members of this Association was opened at the Westminster Palace Hotel. Mr. Sampson Lloyd, of Birmingham, presided, and there were present representatives of upwards of forty of the principal cities and towns in the kingdom.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, explained that the object of the present meeting was to give timely notice to Parliament with respect to the questions they intended to discuss. The meeting would not supersede their annual conference in February, although, no doubt, it would lessen the business on that occasion.

BANKRUPTCY LAW REFORM.

Resolutions on this subject were introduced by the representatives of Birmingham, Leeds, and Macclesfield, and were, after some discussion, amalgamated in the following form :—

That a thorough reform of the English Law of Bankruptcy is urgently needed, with a view both to the more speedy and economical realization and distribution of the estate, and to the repression of fraud.

That in the opinion of this association the provisions of the Scottish Law of Bankruptcy (19 and 20 Vic., c. 79) have proved eminently successful in accomplishing these objects, and that, in any measure for the reform of the law of bankruptcy, these provisions should be copied as closely as possible. This association would, therefore, strongly urge upon her Majesty's Ministers the necessity of preparing a bill for the above purpose, and of bringing the same before Parliament immediately after its assembling; and further, that every exertion should be made to get the same passed into law during the next session.

That, in framing such a bill, it be strongly recommended by the Association that it should contain provisions to enable the creditors themselves, or persons appointed by them, to realize and distribute the assets of bankrupts, with as little interference on the part of officials or Bankruptcy Courts as possible; but giving to the Courts jurisdiction in all cases where the bankrupt or any creditor may deem himself aggrieved or injured.

That it is desirable that the law of bankruptcy be divided into two bills; one providing for the Civil part and the other for the Criminal part of the law.

That it is also desirable that provision be made for the winding-up and distribution of estates of deceased Insolvents in bankruptcy.

That the Bankruptcy Laws' Amendment Bill, which was withdrawn at the close of last session of Parliament, should be re-introduced at the earliest practicable period of the next session; and, that to secure the bill being so re-introduced, a deputation from the Association do immediately wait upon the law officers of the Crown.

Mr. MURPHY thought it desirable that the deputation should be instructed to impress upon the Government the necessity of extending to Ireland what was sought for England in the resolution, and introduced a motion to that effect.

The addition suggested was adopted, and embodied in the resolution.

The meeting then proceeded to the discussion of other topics.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 45.] SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.}

CHANCERY ACT, 1867.

IF the defendant's answer does not afford a full discovery respecting the matters inquired after by the interrogatories, the plaintiff is entitled, within a time fixed for that purpose (six weeks), to except to the answer for insufficiency. The objection is taken by filing the exceptions (the draft to be signed by Counsel) in the office of the Clerk of the Records and Writs, and giving notice of the filing to the defendant. If defendant is advised that his answer is insufficient in the points excepted to, he submits to answer, and serves notice of his submission on the plaintiff. Defendant has fourteen days from the date of the submission to put in his further answer. If defendant serves no notice of submission, the exceptions are set down for argument, and the Court decides whether the answer is or is not sufficient in the points excepted to. If the answer is held insufficient, a time is generally fixed for the defendant to put in a further answer; if the exceptions are overruled, the answer will be deemed sufficient from the date of the order. The second answer may be excepted to in like manner. After a third answer has been held insufficient, the Court may order the defendant to be examined orally upon the interrogatories, and to stand committed until he shall make the required discovery.

We will consider hereafter the subject of amendments, the times and rules relating to them, and further interrogatories upon the amended bill.

When the pleadings are complete, there are three modes of bringing the cause to a hearing:—

(I.) By setting the cause down on bill and answer.

(II.) By giving notice of motion for a decree.

(III.) By replication.

As to the first—if the plaintiff thinks that, even admitting the answer to be true, and abandoning any part of his bill not admitted by the answer, he is still entitled to the relief he requires, he may adopt the first mode. This course was often pursued in the case of friendly suits, where a decision was sought upon a particular state of facts. But since special cases were introduced in 1850, by the late Lord Justice Turner, it has been more usual, in such cases, to adopt the second mode. As to moving for a decree, see 68th section of the Act and Ords. 91, 92, 94, and Morgan's Chancery Ords., 165. We will more conveniently consider this, and the third mode, when we approach the subject of evidence.

Before proceeding further, it may be useful to give a brief summary of the procedure in an ordinary suit down to a decree.

1. A suit is begun by Bill, addressed to the Chancellor, signed by counsel, giving in a notice at foot the name and address of the solicitor, contains a narrative of the material facts, divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively, and a prayer for specific and general relief (sec. 61); names of defendants at foot. Draft bill is signed by counsel, and is to be printed on paper and in type, directed by the 5th order. Solicitor allowed fee of 2d. per folio for correcting proofs. Printed copy filed at the office of the Clerk of Records and Writs, who marks the name of the Court to which it is to be attached, the initial letter of the plaintiff's name, number of bill, and date of filing. The name and address of solicitor is to be endorsed. In pressing cases written copy of bill may be filed (S. 58, and Ords. 7 and 8.)

Parties.—All persons interested in the subject matter of a suit with respect to its object are necessary parties to a suit. See Act, sec. 66, as to modification of this rule.

Service.—Copy stamped by the Clerk of the Records and Writs with endorsement (Sec. 55, Ord. 6) to be served personally on each defendant, or by leaving the copy with some servant or member of his family at his dwelling house or usual place of abode (Ord. 25). Service generally dispensed with on defendant's solicitor giving undertaking to appear. As to substitution of service and service out of the jurisdiction (see Ords. 26 and 30).

Each defendant may require from plaintiff any number, not exceeding ten, of printed copies of the bill, on payment at the rate of one halfpenny the folio (Ord. 10).

Digitized by Google

Appearance.—The writ endorsed on bill commands an appearance within eight days. This writ in place of the old subpœna, s. 55. If defendant having been served neglects to appear, the plaintiff may within three weeks from the time of service enter an appearance for him; and the object and effect of this is, to limit the time within which a demurrer may be filed to a bill, which runs from the entry of an appearance (twelve days), and as a preliminary step to taking the bill pro confesso (Ord. 28). The plaintiff must produce to the Clerk of the Records and Writs an affidavit of due service on the defendant within the jurisdiction of the bill, with its endorsement and date of service. Plaintiff must take this step within three weeks from date of service. After that time a special order is required. Plaintiff, instead of entering an appearance, may, by order of the Court, issue an attachment for want of appearance. If defendant is out of the jurisdiction, plaintiff must obtain leave of the Court to enter an appearance for him.

Demurrer.—Defendant may demur within twelve days after appearance, entered by or for him.

Demurrer must be signed by counsel, engrossed on parchment, and filed at the Record and Writ Office, by defendant's solicitor, who on the same day gives notice to the plaintiff's solicitor of its having been filed.

If defendant wishes to demur to part of bill, and to plead or answer the remainder, he has (if an answer has been required from him) twenty-eight days from the service of the interrogatories, and if no answer required, he may put in such demurrer, plea, or answer (not demurring alone) at any time within fourteen days after the expiration of the time within which he might have been served with interrogatories, had there been any, i.e., within thirty days after service of the copy of the bill.

As to setting down demurrers, see 55th Ord. If demurrer (being to the whole bill) is allowed, the suit is at an end as to the demurring defendant: if overruled, or leave is given to amend the bill, the suit proceeds, and defendant puts in an answer, if he has been served with interrogatories, unless he is in a position to put in a plea. A demurrer must rely only on facts stated in the bill, otherwise it will be what is termed a speaking demurrer, and be overruled.

Plea.—If defendant has a short, simple defence to the bill, e.g., the statute of limitations, he may raise the defence by a plea. Plea is to be signed by counsel; engrossed on parchment, and filed at the Record and Writ Office within twenty-eight days from the service of interrogatories, or within fourteen days after the expiration of the time within which he might have been served with interrogatories, i.e., thirty days after service of bill, on oath of defendant except where it is a plea of matter of record (Ords. 49 & 50).

Unless the plaintiff takes issue on the truth of the plea by serving notice undertaking to reply, he must set it down for hearing within fourteen days. If he neither undertakes to reply, nor sets down the plea, nor serves an order for leave to amend within that time, the effect is the same as if the plea had been allowed on argument.

Interrogatories.—They follow the bill paragraph by paragraph, and contain the same allegations in the form of questions: they state the Court, names of the parties, nature of the document itself, questions numbered consecutively, signature of counsel, and a note stating which interrogatories each defendant is required to answer. They are printed and filed in the Office of the Records and Writs within eight days from the appearance, or sixteen days from the service of the bill. Plaintiff's solicitor makes a copy of such of the interrogatories as each defendant is required to answer, and takes it to the office: it is there compared, and if correct, is sealed by the Clerk, and served on defendant's solicitor. (To be continued).

ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS OF IRELAND.

A meeting of the attorneys and solicitors was on Tuesday held, pursuant to advertisement, in the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Four Courts,

ARCHIBALD COLLUM, Esq., in the chair.

George Proctor, Esq., was requested to act as secretary to the meeting. Mr. Proctor stated the object of the meeting was for the purpose of finally considering the suggestions offered for amending the Civil Bill Acts, and making arrangements for proceeding with the contemplated Bill for effecting the necessary amendments. It was, he said, admitted everywhere and by every person who had any outstanding debts to recover that the present laws were defective, and that it amounted almost to an impossibility in many cases to realize small debts in Ireland. Since the passing of what was popularly called "The Sheriff's Act," it was still more so, and the public were desirous of having that Act repealed, and the people looked forward to the quarter sessions attorneys as being the fittest body of legal practitioners to state what amendments and alterations should be made in the Civil Bill Code. He had given the matter much consideration, and since June, 1866, he had been gleaning information on the subject from every county in Ireland and from the practitioners at every sessions bar in the kingdom. There was but one opinion on the subject, namely, that the Civil Bills Acts greatly needed amendment, and that a more effective mode for recovering small debts in Ireland than the laws now in force afforded was much required. The attorneys practising at sessions had several meetings both in that hall and in their respective counties, and, except in detail as to the remedies to be provided, they were unanimous in the necessity for alteration. Much trouble had been taken and expense incurred to ascertain the true state of public feeling on the subject; and now the time for giving legal effect to their labours had arrived. In some parts of the country the merchants and commercial men were thinking the attorneys were too slow in their movements regarding this great and important matter—important, he said, because whatever lessened the power of a creditor to recover his debts from those who owed them, took away from the credit of the country, and tended to destroy commercial credit, which was the life and soul of national prosperity. In the town of Coleraine, he understood, the merchants were about to hold a public meeting and petition Parliament for a change in these laws, and he hoped the example of the Coleraine people would be followed by the inhabitants of every town in Ireland. He now submitted the amended printed report of the committee, and left the matter in the hands of the gentlemen present. He would add that the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, who is a member of the profession, came to the hall this morning and informed him (Mr. Proctor) that he had carefully read the report of the committee on the intended amendments, and that it had his approval in all its parts. He desired him (Mr. Proctor) to inform the gentlemen present that another pressing appointment required his attendance elsewhere, otherwise he would have attended this meeting, and aid by his presence and advice, in every way he could, to further the object which they had in view.

A series of resolutions, approving of the report of the committee, and adopting the amendments suggested, as published in the Irish Law Times and Solicitors' Journal, was passed.

A deputation, consisting of the Lord Mayor, John Thomas Hinds, John F. Goodman, George Bolton, and George Proctor, Esqrs., with power to add to their number, was appointed to wait on the Right Hon. the Attorney-General to bring the matter under his notice, and to request that he will prepare the bill for carrying the amendments required into law.

The meeting was then adjourned.

SOLICITORS' BUILDINGS.

The Benchers of the Honourable Society of Kings' Inns having, in the month of June last, stated that they were prepared to grant a lease to this Society of the apartments at the Four Courts, in possession of the Society, at a nominal rent; such lease to contain a covenant, on the part of the lessees, to keep the apartments in proper order and repair, upon the terms of the Society, undertaking to pay all charges thereon, then paid by the Benchers, but the particulars or amount of which charges were not mentioned. Your Council, in reply, expressed their disappointment at this very limited proposition, and their expectation that a much more liberal offer would have been made to them, and asked for much larger accommodation than that offered, to which the Benchers replied that they must decline to comply with the request so made, and repeated the former offer.

Your Council thought it best not to accept this offer, and nothing further has been done relative thereto. But they recommend to their successors that this subject shall be considered by them at their earliest convenience, with a view to obtaining a satisfactory settlement of all matters depending between this Profession and the Benchers.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITOR'S JOURNAL.

In the month of February last a weekly journal, bearing the above designation, was published under the sanction of your Council, having for its object the establishment of a newspaper entirely devoted to matters of interest to the legal profession generally. The want of such a publication had long been felt, and its value speedily became apparent in the character of its articles and the accuracy of its details. The proprietors of this journal have stated their intention to publish an index of all postings therein, which will greatly facilitate reference. Your Council, feeling that it would be an advantage to have some one publication in which all legal postings might be found, forwarded memorials to the Judges of the Landed Estates' Court, and of the Bankrupt and Insolvent Court, as well as to the Masters in Chancery, seeking to have a general order made that all such postings should be inserted, once at least, in this journal, but it was not thought desirable to make such an order.

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.

MASTER OF THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

A vacancy having occurred during the month of April last, in the office of Master of the Court of Exchequer, and your Council having heard that a Barrister was about to be appointed thereto, they immediately presented a memorial to His Excellency the Marquis of Abercorn, Lord Lieutenant, expressing the extreme dissatisfaction of their Profession with the manner in which their rights had been disregarded by successive Governments in the almost exclusive appointment of Barristers to Ministerial Offices, connected with the Legal Department in Ireland, which had been formerly held by Attorneys and Solicitors, and praying that His Excellency when making such appointments in future would be pleased to consider the rights of this Profession to offices legitimately belonging to them, and that he would appoint a Member of their Profession to the then vacant office of Master of the Court of Exchequer, in answer to which memorial His Excellency was pleased to intimate through General Sir Thomas Larcom that he would not fail to give full consideration to the circumstances therein set forth, notwithstanding which assurance a Barrister has since been appointed to fill that office. In the month of September last your Council having learned that a vacancy was likely to occur in the office of Master of the Court of Queen's Bench, presented a further memorial to the Lord Lieutenant, enclosing a copy of that previously sent in by them upon this subject, and again respectfully urged upon His Excellency's attention in the strongest manner the claims of this Profession to that and similar appointments, in answer to which memorial, however, the Chief Secretary for Ireland wrote merely acknowledging receipt of their communication.

BARRISTERS PRACTISING WITHOUT INTERVENTION OF ATTORNEYS.

Your Council have seen with regret that during the past year some Members of the Bar have attended at Magistrates and Police Courts, and insisted upon practising in those Courts without the intervention of Attorneys, and your Council consider such a practice unfair to this Profession, injurious to the Public, and so unworthy of the Bar as to require some expression of feeling from that body.

ORPEN TESTIMONIAL.

Your Council now refer with pleasure to the inauguration of the handsome portrait of the worthy President of this Society, Mr. Orpen, who has for so many years given his best attention to every matter calculated to raise the social position of this Profession, and to advance its best interests.

For this purpose a subscription was set on foot to procure his portrait for the Society. It was painted by an eminent artist, Mr. Catterson Smith, R.H.A., and is now placed in the Solicitors' Hall, where we trust it will long be preserved as a memorial of the sterling worth of him whose features it so faithfully represents. For address and answer see Appendix A.

RETIREMENT OF THE HON. EDMUND HAYES, LATE THIRD JUSTICE OF HER MAJESTY'S COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Upon the occasion of the retirement of the late Mr. Justice Hayes from the Bench on account of declining health, your Council thought it right to offer him a testimony of the respect so justly entertained by this Profession for his character, professional and judicial, and accordingly presented him with an address, which, with his answer, will be found in the Appendix to this Report.—See Appendix B.

RETIREMENT OF THE HONOURABLE JUDGE LONGFIELD.

The retirement of Judge Longfield from the office Judge of the Landed Estates' Court, which he had so long filled, was deemed a fitting occasion to present him with an address expressive of the deep sense entertained by this Profession, of the uniform courtesy and attention which they had at all times received from him.—For address and answer see Appendix C.

RETIREMENT OF THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE FRANCIS BLACKBURNE, EX-LORD CHANCELLOR OF IRELAND.

The retirement of the late Right Honourable Francis Blackburne from the office of Lord High Chancellor of Ireland, was deemed by your Council a fitting occasion to present him with an address, expressive of esteem for himself, and admiration of his high judicial character.—For address and answer see Appendix D.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In the Matter of the COMPANIES' ACT, 1862, and the OULA MINING COMPANY, LIMITED.

Ex parte WHITCROFT.

Nov. 21.—Companies' Act, 1862—Winding up.

The Oula Lead and Copper Mining Company, Limited, was formed in 1865. The memorandum of association was dated the 21st of September, 1865. The nominal capital of the Company was £25,000, divided into 25,000 shares of £1. The Company was registered under the Companies' Act, 1862, but never carried on business. The petitioner had applied for 200 shares, for which he had paid £25 into the National Bank as a deposit. No shares having been allotted, he brought an action at law against the Company for the sum so paid, and recovered a judgment for that sum and costs, amounting to £72 2s. 10d., on which he sued out a fieri facias. The petition in this matter prayed that the said Company might be wound up under the Companies' Act, 1862.

Robertson moved for an order to wind up the Company, relying on the 79th section of the Companies' Act, 1862.

Carton appeared for the creditors of the Company.

The MASTER of the ROLLS made the order. His Honour said that general orders, similar to the orders in England under the Companies' Act, 1862, were in course of preparation. This case would come before him at Chambers.

Solicitor for the petitioner, T. W. Hardman.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by WM. BARLOW, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

GETTY v. ELLIOTT.

Nov. 28.—Commission to Cross-examine Witness abroad.

The cause petition in this case sought to impeach a deed executed by the petitioner's father to the respondent's father, which conveyed to the respondent's father the interest in a reversionary lease, dated 30th of April, 1830.

The petition was set down to be heard in Trinity Term, 1867. After it had been set down the respondent obtained an order that the petitioner should be cross-examined in person at the hearing, and a day was fixed for the hearing. Before that day arrived the petitioner was attacked by an illness which rendered it impossible for him to attend, and the hearing was postponed until this Term.

From the affidavit of the petitioner's solicitor it appeared that the petitioner had, ever since the attack, continued in delicate health; that in August he was ordered to Wiesbaden; that he still continues there; that ill health prevents him returning to this country; and that, from the serious nature of the illness, it might be some time before the petitioner could attend at the hearing.

A certificate, dated 10th Nov., 1867, of Dr. Muller, a physician in Wiesbaden, stated that the petitioner must be kept for some months quite free from excitement, and that it would be dangerous for him to travel.

The respondent's solicitor stated in his affidavit that it would be essential to the respondent's case, and of most material importance, to have a general cross-examination of the petitioner, and a minute investigation in his presence of his books, and of his own entries therein, and respecting the times when, or circumstances under, which the entries had been made which refer to the delivery of the title deeds to him or his solicitor, and other matters.

Sullivan, Q.C., with him Jackson, moved for a commission to take the cross-examination of the petitioner at Wiesbaden, and relied on the physician's certificate, and the case of Druitt v. Druitt, 6 I. C. R., 171.

Hugh Law, Q.C., and J. F. Walker, contended that the respondent should not be deprived of the right of cross-examining the petitioner in court, when the books and entries would be at hand, and that in any event this motion should not be granted at present, as the petitioner's illness appeared to be of a temporary nature only, and that therefore the hearing might be further postponed until the spring of 1868, with a view to secure the petitioner's attendance when his health improved.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I am quite aware of the great utility of a cross-examination of a witness whose demeanour is likely to be of importance before the Court; but I do not see, from what it appears, that Mr. Getty was an actor in this transaction to such an extent that justice cannot be done by ordering the cross-examination to be taken before a commissioner. I shall therefore grant the motion, and add a direction that this cause shall not be heard before the 1st of February, 1868; and that this order shall not be availed of by the petitioner then unless he shall satisfy the Court, when the cause comes on for hearing, that he is in such a state of health as to make it impossible for him to come to Ireland.

TRENCH'S TRUSTS.

Dec. 2, 1867.—Verification of Petition.

Roper moved for the appointment, under the Trustee Acts, of new trustees of a marriage settlement, the original trustees having died.

[The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Who verifies this petition?]

The Solicitor. The parties interested are living in different parts of England.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In any case of this nature in which the petition is not verified by the parties themselves I will not make an order without a reference, unless the written consent of the parties to the order sought is produced.

The case was ordered to stand over until the consent could be procured.

Solicitor for the petitioners, Roper.

RICHARDSON v. GRUBB.

Nov. 12, Dec. 3, 1867.—Petition by Trustee to be discharged from the Trusts—Caprice—Costs.

In 1852, on the marriage of Augustus Grubb, one of the respondents, the petitioner and John Gossett Hill were appointed trustees under the settlement, which empowered the husband and wife to appoint a new trustee in lieu of any one who should "die, or be desirous to be discharged, or refuse or decline or become incapable to act in the trusts."

The trust property consisted of £2,000, and of fee-simple lands, of which the husband was made tenant for life. The trusts were "to permit and suffer the said Augustus Grubb and his assignees during the term of his natural life, to take and receive to his own use the yearly interest arising and payable out of the said sum of £2,000 sterling, or the yearly produce thereof, if invested in lands as thereinafter mentioned, together with the yearly rent and profits arising out of" the settled lands.

The lands have not been dealt with in any way so as to render the trusts more onerous, and the £2,000 remains invested in Government £3 per Cent. Consols, in the names of the trustees, and the dividends are paid to the husband through a banker.

The petition stated that Augustus Grubb, having prevailed with the trustees to procure that the title deeds relating to the settled lands should be forwarded by his father's executors to Messrs. Duckett and Gordon, solicitors, possessed himself of them without the petitioner's knowledge or sanction, and refused to surrender them; that the petitioner is in delicate health, which renders it necessary to avoid all excitement; that he became desirous of being discharged from the trusts; and that on the 14th August, 1865, and on other subsequent occasions, he caused applications to be made to Augustus Grubb to appoint a new trustee. Prayer—That the petitioner be discharged from the trusts; and that Augustus Grubb should be ordered to hand to the trustees the title deeds and documents relating to the settled property.

From affidavits made by two physicians, it appeared that the petitioner has been for many years in delicate health, and extremely nervous, and that mental anxiety would be injurious to him.

From the answering affidavit it appeared that, so far from the statement in the petition being true, the deeds relating to the settled property had been handed to A. Grubb by his father when the settlement was executed; and A. Grubb, as tenant for life, claimed a right to the custody of these deeds; that several unsuccessful applications to persons to assume the trusteeship in the petitioner's place had been made before the petition was filed; that since then, in Feb., 1867, a Mr. Haughton living in Rugby had consented to act; and it was alleged that the petitioner's desire to be discharged sprang from pique at being refused the deeds.

Messrs. Ball, Q.C., Ormsby, Q.C., and Kaye, for the petitioner, contended that there were good and sufficient grounds for his being discharged, and that his costs should be paid by A. Grubb or out of the estate. They cited Gardiner v. Downes, 22 Beav., 395; Travis v. Illingworth, 2 Dr. and Sm., 344.

F. Walshe, Q.C., C. Shaw, Q.C., and Gordon, for the respondents, contended that, on the facts, it appeared that the petitioner's desire to be discharged arose only from caprice, and that therefore he should be ordered to pay all the costs of the suit, and of appointing a new trustee:—Courtenay v. Courtenay, 3 Jon. and L., 519; Coventry v. Coventry, 1 Kean, 758; Greenwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav., 581; Porter v. Watts, 16 Jur., 757; Re Woodburn's Will, 1 De Gex and Jon., 333.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The rule of equity as to the payment of costs in such cases is perfectly settled. Whenever a trustee has any reasonable cause for desiring to be removed, he is entitled to be reimbursed his expenses either out of the trust fund or by the cestui que trust; but when a trustee, without any reasonable cause, takes proceedings to be discharged from his trusts, all the costs must fall upon himself. In this case, however, the tenant for life has not dealt with the trust property so as to complicate its position or involve the trustees in duties and liabilities never contemplated when they became trustees, and which they could not reasonably have been expected to perform. The condition of the trust property remains substantially unaltered, and the tenant for life has not been guilty of any misconduct. The only ground upon which the petitioner can claim costs is that of failing health, rendering him incapable of attending to the duties, or making it inconvenient for him to do so. But here there are not any active duties which the trustees can be called upon to perform at present. The tenant for life is entitled to manage the estates, and the dividends of the £2,000 are paid through a banker without any annoyance or trouble to the trustees. The petitioner's desire to be removed seems to arise from a mere whim, and therefore, though entitled to be removed from his trusteeship, he must pay the costs of the proceedings to appoint a new trustee, and as the petitioner made against Mr. Grubb allegations which have not been sustained, and which Mr. Grubb was justified in answering, the petitioner must also pay Mr. Grubb's costs.

Practice—Jurisdiction—Further Interrogatories.

This was an action for libel in writing letters to the plaintiff's superior, in consequence of which plaintiff had been dismissed from his employment. Plaintiff had already obtained leave to administer interrogatories to defendant as to this letter, but had not obtained from defendant's answer the information which he sought. He now applied to deliver further interrogatories.

Macnamara, contra, contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to administer further interrogatories, that the answers might criminate defendant, and the Court ought not to allow such interrogatories to be delivered.

COURT OF PROBATE.

In the Goods of PATRICK SULLIVAN, deceased.

November 20.—Administration Bond—Assignment of—Breach of—Appeal from Order refusing Assignment—Liability of Sureties for Money Received in Life of Deceased by the Principal.

Dr. Miller (W. O'Brien with him) moved on behalf of Mrs. Maria Sullivan the widow of the deceased, for an order that the administration bond, executed on the 22nd June, 1855, by the deceased and two sureties, in the penal sum of £2,400, might be assigned by the Registrar to the applicant, to be put in suit as against the sureties.

The deceased died on the 21st March, 1855, having been in partnership with his brother James, as victuallers, in Cork, and he left a widow and four minor children.

James, the brother of the deceased, as curator of the minors, on the 25th June, 1855, obtained a grant of administration limited during the minority of the eldest minor, and the bond in question was executed by him and two sureties, named Buckley and Daly, to the Bishop of Cork and his successors.

The condition was to make a perfect and true inventory of the goods of the deceased, which had or should come to his hands, or into those of any other persons for him, and exhibit the same in the Registry before the 31st December next, and the same goods would well and truly administer, according to law, and make a true account of his administration before the 30th June, 1856, and the rest of the goods would deliver and pay to such person as the Judge should appoint, and if a will should appear and be exhibited, then to bring in the administration to be cancelled.

James Sullivan, as administrator, took possession of the several farms of the deceased, and of all his goods, and of all the partnership estate and effects.

The devastavit alleged was, that James Sullivan converted to his own use the entire of the deceased's exclusive goods, and all the partnership property, and never gave any account, and several particular sums of money were specified that he received for rent of the deceased's lands, and applied same to his own use.

On 28th May, 1863, the widow filed a cause petition in Chancery, to make James Sullivan account for the moneys so received by him; and on the 21st December, 1866, the Master, by his final order, found that £1,200 was due by James Sullivan on said several accounts, to the estate of the deceased, and directed him to pay the same within one month, but he failed to do so, and the Master directed the present application.

Buckley and Daly filed affidavits in answer to the application, relying on the imbecility of James Sullivan's mind, in order to explain how the £1,200 came to be found due.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Coram LYNCH, J.

In the Matter of the Estate of GEORGE CASHEL, and GEORGE CASHEL, the younger, Owners and Petitioners.

Nov. 6.—Attachment for Resistance offered to Ordnance Surveyor.

This was a motion that a conditional order for the attachment of several persons residing upon the lands of Shallee White, in the Barony of Owney, and County of Tipperary, and dated the 15th of June, might be made absolute.

The affidavit of John Sullivan, the surveyor, made in support of the motion, stated that pursuant to an order in this matter, dated the 4th December, 1866, he, on the 12th of March last, proceeded to the lands of Shallee White for the purpose of making a survey of the same; that a large body of men assembled to obstruct him, and that seeing that personal violence was intended towards himself, he retired without effecting the survey; that on the 22nd of May last he again proceeded to the said lands accompanied by a force of constabulary; that a crowd of persons again assembled to prevent the survey being made; that several persons attempted to assault him (the surveyor), and also the boy who carried the chain; that the chain was broken into fragments; that, under the protection of the constabulary, the surveyor was only able to perambulate the boundary of said lands, but was not able to effect a tenement survey thereof. The affidavit then particularized as amongst the crowd the persons now sought to be attached. The statements regarding the violence offered on the 22nd of May were corroborated by affidavits made by Patrick Gleeson, who attended to point out the boundaries, and Michael Powell, a resident on the lands; and the menacing attitude of the crowd was also deposed to in an affidavit made by George Cashel, one of the owners and petitioners in this matter.

Affidavits made, as cause against the order being made absolute, by Michael Gleeson, Michael Quirke, and others of those sought to be attached, claimed for the deponents the ownership of the lands of Shallee White, which consisted partly of small farms, and partly of common. They alleged that the lands of Shallee were distinct from those of Shallee White; that when, in March, Michael Gleeson asked the surveyor by what authority he came there to survey the lands, he replied that it was by Mr. Cashel's orders; that the surveyor never stated that he was acting under the orders of the Landed Estates' Court, or of any other court; that on the 22nd May, when George Cashel accompanied the surveyor, Michael Gleeson demanded from the former any order or authority under which he came, and that he refused to produce any; that he stated that he got authority from a middleman, the late Mr. Molony; that Michael Gleeson tried to prevent Cashel from having the lands surveyed, but without resorting to violence, when the parties were knocked down and badly used by the constabulary; that Michael Gleeson was never, before the conditional order for the attachment, served with any notice or order from the Landed Estates' Court, or any other court. The affidavits denied that on either of the two occasions the parties sought to be attached assaulted the surveyor.

An ejectment on the title had been brought against the same parties for the recovery of these lands, but at the trial the jury could not agree to a verdict.

E. Gibson, in support of the motion.

[LYNCH, J.—There is no statement from beginning to end of these affidavits that it was ever communicated to these parties that the suryeyor and his party were acting under the orders of the Court.]

LYNCH, J.—In this case I will make no rule on the motion. I do not wish to give a decision in favour of either party. An act, which common sense dictates, is omitted to be done. There are affidavits stating that resistance was offered to the surveyor, and that he was directed to get assistance. He got it, and on another occasion he and his party proceeded to the lands; and do they then state that they went under the orders of the Court? There has not been bona fides on either side. There is no evidence that these parties were ever told that an order of the Court had been made directing a survey. It is said they had knowledge of the fact, which brings them into contempt. Their affidavits state the contrary distinctly. I am asked to infer that they had knowledge. I do not like to say whether I believe these affidavits or not. I will make no rule on the motion.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE MILLER.

In re LUNHAM, a bankrupt.

November, 1867—Charge and Discharge—Deposit of Title Deed—Equitable and Legal Mortgage on Letter of Deposit—Description of Premises—Jurisdiction of the Court.

The bankrupt was a provision merchant in Tralee, and had considerable dealings with the National Bank there, and obtained several advances of money for the purposes of his trade, to secure which he lodged with them the title deed of his premises, accompanied by a deposit note stating the purpose for which the deed was deposited. A deed of mortgage was also executed to the bank by the bankrupt about the same time, and the case now came before the court upon a charge, and supplemental charge filed by the bank, and a discharge by the assignees.

Judge MILLER said the question raised was in substance whether a letter of deposit of title deed and deed of mortgage contemporaneously executed by the bankrupt to the National Bank as security for cash advanced by them, comprised a particular part of the bankrupt's premises called the "Ice-house Field," in which he carried on the business of curing pork. The field in question was held by the bankrupt in perpetuity under a proposal made to Mr. De Moleyns in 1846, and accepted by him, as the bankrupt had deposed, at a yearly rent of £10, which was subsequently abated. No mention of this occurred in the bankrupt's agreement to execute the deed of mortgage. The description "upper store" was relied upon by the bank as including the premises in question, but was not to be found in the agreement of 1860, and the bankrupt stated that the Ice-house Field, by which name the premises in question were known, was a different and distinct description. The next ground relied on by the bank was that the bankrupt had agreed to give them the security of all his business premises, and that he never communicated to them that the lease of the 24th March, 1840, the only one he deposited with them, did not comprise all his business premises. The bankrupt alleged that it was not mentioned in the treaty for the advances that he should mortgage all his premises. The bankrupt also stated that when asked for the lease of the "upper store" by Mr. Power, the manager of the bank, he gave it to him, but he never said it comprehended the Ice-house Field, or led the bank to believe that it comprised all his premises. With regard to the further ground relied on by the bank that the ice-house and curing-house were essential parts of the concern, this was met by the allegation of the bankrupt that for eighteen years before the building of the ice-house he had carried on his business in the upper store. Then it was contended that the language of the mortgage deed was so comprehensive as to include the holding in question. But in his judgment it could not have had any such effect. It had been said that the officer of the bank dealt with the bankrupt on the assumption that all the premises were given as a security, but it did not appear that the bank manager had made inquiries as to what the particular premises were upon which he was to have his mortgage security. It would appear that he blindly relied on his knowledge of the town. It was contended that the Bankrupt Court had power, under the 19th and 24th sections of the Bankrupt Act, to reform the deed and agreement of 1860 by introducing into them the premises in question. He (Judge Miller) asked had there been any instance of the court exercising such a jurisdiction, and he was told that no similar case had ever arisen. He believed he had not such a jurisdiction, but it was unnecessary for him to decide that question, for it was pretty clear that even if he possessed it there were no materials laid before him which would warrant him in exercising it. Under the circumstances of the case, while he allowed the general charge filed by the bank as against the premises comprised in their mortgage, about which no question had been raised—and on this branch of the case they should have their costs—yet as he believed they had failed to prove their charge against the Ice-house Field he would disallow it, but without costs, as he did not think that the conduct of the bankrupt in the transaction had been candid.

IN INSOLVENCY.

In re ELLEN WALKER, an insolvent.

Practice—Appointment of Assignee—Party in Contempt.

This was a meeting to appoint an assignee. It appeared that the insolvent had been arrested on a ca. sa., and sent to prison, and the detaining creditor, according to the practice of the court, having obtained an order upon her to file a schedule, the estate vested in the usual way. The creditor then took out a meeting for the appointment of an assignee with a view to make inquiries after property.

Levy, for the insolvent, applied that the appointment should be postponed until an opportunity should be had to set the judgment aside on the ground that there was no debt due to the detaining creditor.

Judge MILLER said he could hear no application on the part of the insolvent, or of any suitor who was in contempt. The insolvent had been directed to file a schedule, but she disregarded the order, and he could not hear any application on her behalf.

The Solicitor for the detaining creditor said it was a mistake to say there was no debt due, or that the judgment had been improperly obtained; in fact, there had been a trial and a verdict.

Judge MILLER said that even if that were not the case he would not entertain any application from a party in contempt.

An assignee was appointed.

Bill of Sale—Making away with Property.

Rosenthal, solicitor, appeared for a Birmingham creditor, from whom the insolvent purchased goods on credit immediately after executing a bill of sale of a great portion of his property.

Judge MILLER said it was in vain for insolvents to hope to pass through that court who did anything calculated to prevent all creditors from getting a rateable distribution of the property amongst them. He would suggest that the case should be adjourned with a view to have the property which passed under the bill of sale brought in. He would, however, hear the case, if the parties wished, and deal with it as he thought it deserved.

The case was adjourned.

Mortgage immediately before Insolvency.

The insolvent had been a furniture broker in Liffey-street, and formerly carried on business rather extensively. It appeared that she went to America to look after property supposed to have been left by her son, who died there. She left another son to carry on the business in Liffey-street, to whom she executed a mortgage of houses and lands at Kilmainham. She was opposed for making away with property at the time she contracted the debt.

Judge MILLER said the same observations he made in the previous case were applicable in the present one. He would again repeat that wherever he found property conveyed away, mortgaged, or removed, shortly before the failure of a bankrupt or insolvent he would draw the inference, unless the contrary appeared in evidence, that it was done in contemplation of bankruptcy or insolvency, and the parties should be punished accordingly. He would suggest that the present case should be adjourned, and that the insolvent's son bring in the mortgaged property.

Levy, for the insolvent, mentioned that the son had advanced money which went to pay creditors.

The case was adjourned for a fortnight.

Representations made as to the Insolvent's means of paying debts contracted, and obtaining forbearance, although these representations are untrue, are no ground of remand, if the Insolvent believed he would have the means of payment.

The insolvent was a farmer in the county Meath. He was opposed by Kernan, Q.C., on the part of the Hibernian Bank, on the ground of his having made false representations with regard to the amount of a fund in the Court of Chancery, to which he said he was entitled in an administration suit, and which would be sufficient to pay all his debts.

Goodman, solicitor, opposed on his own behalf on the same grounds.

Kernan stated that the bank had cashed bills for the insolvent exceeding in amount one hundred pounds, on the representation that he was entitled to a much larger sum on foot of an administration suit, and that he would pay them what he owed out of it. Now the fund was there, or it was not. If it were not there, he contracted the debt and obtained forbearance by false representations; if it were there, and that he got it, and did not pay the debt out of it, he was guilty of great fraud. So that whether it was there or not he ought to be punished.

Levy, for the insolvent. There was a fund in the Court of Chancery, but it was much less than the insolvent believed it to be. All he really got was twelve pounds, and he offered the bank £10.

The insolvent was examined, and swore that he believed a large sum would be coming to him, but all he got was twelve pounds.

Judge MILLER said it did not appear that the man knew the statement he made to be untrue. Perhaps he ought to have taken more trouble to ascertain the fact; but the court did not see in this any ground of remand.

The insolvent was discharged.

REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS.

The New Practice in Chancery under the Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867, and the General Orders, with Forms, Schedule of Fees, References to the analogous English Enactments and Rules, a Collection of Precedents, Table of Contents, and General Index, etc., etc. By MARK S. O'SHAUGHNESSY, Barrister-at-Law. Dublin: W. B. Kelly, 8, Grafton-street, 1867.

To Mr. O'Shaughnessy, certainly, must be conceded the merit of having been the first to produce the new Chancery Act, with an Index. It was impossible for him to have published his present work at an earlier period, owing to the delay in the promulgation of the General Orders. Mr. O'Shaughnessy, of course, has had the advantage of the work already published, with a similar design. The index is full and satisfactory, and the compiler seems to have spared himself no pains in his effort to give the professions a guide to the new practice. A table is given, exhibiting the sources from which the Irish Act and rules are derived, and a reference is thus facilitated to the English books of practice. Precedents of forms most likely to be frequently required are to be found in the present edition, with head lines so printed as to show the matter contained in each page.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

MISREPRESENTATION IN PROSPECTUS—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT BY ALLOTTEE OF SHARES.—The company, under another name, in 1863, were conveying the intercolonial mails under contracts with the Government of New Zealand. In December, 1863, the company entered into a contract with W., the Colonial Postmaster-General of New Zealand, and who professed to be acting for the Government of New Zealand, for the establishment of a steam-packet service between New Zealand and Great Britain viâ Panama. At the time of this contract both W. and the company bonâ fide believed that W. was acting within the scope of his authority in making the contract. The New Zealand Government afterwards refused to recognize the contract entered into by W., on the ground that he had no authority to make it. In the meantime, and in consequence of the contract, the directors of the company, acting under powers contained in their articles of association, had convened a meeting, at which it was resolved that the name of the company should be changed, and that new shares should be issued for the purpose of increasing their amount of capital. The directors then issued the following notice: "The directors give notice that they are prepared to receive applications for the new shares, the issue of which was authorized by the special general meeting, in order to enable the company to perform the contract recently entered into with the Government of New Zealand for a monthly mail service between Sydney, New Zealand, and Panama, in correspondence with the R. W. I. mail steamers." K. applied for and obtained an allotment of shares, on which he paid the deposit and two calls, subsequent to which the contract was repudiated by the New Zealand Government. W. not having been authorized, in fact, to make it. K. thereupon claimed to rescind the contract, upon the ground that he had been misled by the prospectus: Held, that an innocent misepresentation does not authorize the rescission of a contract unless it involves a complete difference in substance between the thing bargained for and obtained, and thereby constitutes a failure of consideration, and that in the absence of fraud the company were entitled to judgment: (Lord Kennedy v. The Panama, &c., Company, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 62. C. P.)

FORFEITURE OF SHARES.—The articles of association contained no provision as to a quorum of directors. At a meeting of only two of the six directors some shares were declared to be forfeited for unpaid calls. The forfeiture was held to be valid: (Re Tavistock Ironworks Company, 16 L. T. Bep. N. S. 824. M. R.)

BANKRUPTCY LAW REFORM.—A deputation, which had been appointed at the meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, waited upon the Attorney-General for England at the Exchequer Chambers last week, to present him with resolutions which had been passed, to the effect that it was most desirable the Government should bring in a Bankruptcy Bill for England and Ireland similar in its provisions to that of Scotland. Mr. Norwood, M.P., introduced the deputation, and Mr. Lloyd explained the objects which they sought. The Attorney-General said that the Government had under their consideration a bill for the amendment of the Bankruptcy Law.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 46.] SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.}

THE Incorporated Law Society has held its usual half-yearly meeting, and the report there adopted was published in the LAW TIMES. The Report of the Council considered each subject of interest to the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland which had presented itself during the previous six months—the different Acts that had been passed during the last Session, relating exclusively to the legal profession, and the various Bills, both those in anticipation and those in progress through the Houses of Parliament, as well as matters of more particular interest, such as the education of apprentices—and the statements of their Report were highly satisfactory to the profession, and a conclusive proof of the vast benefits derived by the solicitors throughout Ireland from the exertions of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society in reference to every matter touching the affairs of the profession at large. There were one or two matters touched on in the Report which unfortunately have not resulted so favourably for the interest of the profession as could have been wished. The Certificate Duty Bill, notwithstanding the exertions of the Hon. George Denman, who undertook its carriage through the House of Commons, was thrown out on the third reading, from the reason, as stated in the Report, that the Bill came on for third reading on the 2nd of July, and the Government having the advantage of a thin house, succeeded, on a division, in defeating the Bill. The unjustness of the Certificate Duty has already been proved satisfactorily to the profession and the public, so that it is unnecessary for us to enlarge upon it now, suffice it to say that the profession are aware of the truth of the maxim l'union fait la force, and that we do not despair of their being successful in their next effort to carry the Bill through Parliament, provided that every one interested through the United Kingdom will use his utmost exertion for the purpose. There is another matter referred to in the Report as pending between the Benchers of the Honourable Society of King's Inns and the Incorporated Law Society, with reference to the Solicitors' Buildings, which, we trust, may be soon settled to the satisfaction of both parties.

The next subject mentioned in the Report, is THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, which was commenced in February last, under the sanction of the Incorporated Law Society, having for its object the establishment of a newspaper entirely devoted to matters of interest to both branches of the legal profession in Ireland; and the proprietors and managers of this publication cannot but feel flattered at the complimentary reference made to it in the Report, and at the very large amount of support and encouragement which it has received, not only from the legal profession, including the Bench, the Bar, and the Solicitors of Ireland, but also from the mercantile public and contemporary press. In England and Scotland the legal profession has long had its own organs to discuss, and recommend any projects which appeared necessary or useful, for the advantage of its members, and not a few of the minor abuses in the practice of the law which come more under the notice of the practising barristers and solicitors than of the Houses of Parliament, have been remedied from the discussion received in the columns of the legal papers. The other learned professions in Ireland had already mediums for communicating the opinions of their several members on interesting subjects to each other, and a feeling was expressed by many members of both branches of the legal profession, that the most influential body of men in Ireland, as the lawyers undoubtedly are, should no longer be without such a publication, especially at the present time "when new powers and privileges of vast extent and importance have been, by a recent legislative enactment, conferred on the representatives of the general body of attorneys and solicitors of this country." In the first number of this Journal the managers published the plan they purposed to adopt in carrying it on—viz., to supply early and authentic information, obtained from the most authentic official sources, as to the particulars and progress of the various matters pending in the several courts and offices, besides the earliest intimation of any circumstance connected with such proceedings which may be of general interest and importance. And this information is not intended to be limited to a mere list of names and cases, as an arrangement has been effected under the sanction of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland, with the gentlemen of the Bar now engaged in reporting for that body in the several courts of law and equity, by which the subscribers to this journal will be furnished with short notes of current decisions in the shape of weekly notes, which will be found by both branches of the profession to form a most useful supplement to the Irish Law Reports. . . . In each number will also be given, so far as same may have been fixed for the ensuing week, the business of the Courts, especially of the Landed Estates' Courts and the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency. How thoroughly this plan has been worked out, and how well the exertions of the proprietors of this paper have been appreciated, are proved by the interest which is already felt in its publication, and the support granted to it by the legal profession, as well as by the extensive circulation which it has already acquired.

Leading articles have been furnished at various times by eminent members of the Bar, and by solicitors on points of practice coming within the range of their functions. Various questions relating to the Civil Bill Courts, the Record of Title, and to the working of the Acts lately introduced, have been discussed, and the "Notes of Cases" are carefully revised for each weekly publication. The following are the words of the Report of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society in reference to the IRISH LAW TIMES:—"The want of such a publication had long been felt, and its value speedily became apparent in the character of its articles and the accuracy of its details. The proprietors of this journal have stated their intention to publish an index of all postings therein, which will greatly facilitate reference. Your Council, feeling that it would be an advantage to have some one publication in which all legal postings might be found, forwarded memorials to the Judges of the Landed Estates' Court, and of the Bankrupt and Insolvent Court, as well as to the Masters in Chancery, seeking to have a general order made that all such postings should be inserted, once at least, in this journal;" and the judges have expressed their willingness to sanction the insertion of all postings which may be asked for by solicitors in this paper. Perhaps the most successful result of the autonomy of the solicitors is evidenced in the high standard of education which is called for, and already attained, at the examinations, preliminary and final, of apprentices; we have already treated of the subject, and shown what important advantages, to the apprentices themselves, and the public, who are necessarily interested in the efficiency of their legal advisers, have resulted from the institution of these examinations, and the excellent manner in which the system has been carried out.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS.

An adjourned meeting of the Incorporated Society of Attorneys and Solicitors was held on Tuesday in the Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, to receive the announcement of the result of the ballot for members of the council for the ensuing year. The chair was occupied by Mr. BARLOW, Vice-President.

The following gentlemen were present:—

William J. Cooper, Thomas Crozier, Arthur C. Crookshank, George Crozier, William Croker, Henry Thomas Dix, William W. Dwyer, Robert Eames, George D. Fottrell, Wm. Fitzsimons, John F. Goodman, Joseph Galloway, John T. Hinds, Arthur Molloy, Henry S. Mecredy, Wm. Read, Edward Reeves, Vice President; William Roche, Richard Scott, George William Shannon, Robert Sheil, Patrick Taaffe, George Twibill, H. J. P. West, and John M. Williamson.

The secretary, Mr. Goddard, stated that the following gentlemen had been elected:—

Richard J. T. Orpen, Arthur Barlow, William Roche, George Beamish, Robert J. T. Macrory, Edward Reeves, William Read, John H. Nunn, Graves C. Collis, Henry Thomas Dix, William Findlater, Vesey Daly, Matthew Anderson, John F. Goodman, Arthur Molloy, John T. Hinds, David Fitzgerald, Henry A. Dillon, John M. Williamson, Edward T. Stapleton, Henry J. P. West, Edward G. Foley, Edward L. Alma, William J. Cooper, Thomas T. Mecredy, Arthur Ellis, Sydenham Davis, Thos. Geoghegan, Charles Kernan, Thomas Crozier, Patrick J. Kelly.

The following gentlemen were also elected as supernumeraries to fill vacancies which may occur during the year:—

Richard O. Armstrong, Keith Hallowes, Samuel F. Adair, Frederick Sutton, Croker Barrington, Robert Eames, Edward De Moleyns, Archibald H. Goddard, Benjamin Whitney, John M. Cantwell.

Mr. Shannon called attention to the fact that the present system of voting was such as to insure the re-election every year of the same members, and observed that though the gentlemen who composed the council were in every respect qualified to fill the position, the principle was a bad one; and it would conduce more to the interests of their profession if new blood were infused into the council each year (hear, hear). He therefore gave notice that at the next half-yearly meeting he would bring forward the following motion:—"We are of opinion that the present system of electing the 31 members of the council of the Law Society is not satisfactory, as in practice it continues the same individuals from year to year; and we are of opinion that each voter should be limited to 21 members of the outgoing council, with 10 members of the Law Society, so that the incoming council shall consist of 21 members of the old council having the highest number of votes, with 10 new members having the highest number of votes."

Mr. Reeves was then called to the second chair, and a vote of thanks having been passed to Mr. Barlow, the proceedings terminated.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

PERCY v. PERCY.

Nov. 30; Dec. 3.—Practice—Cause Petition—Guardian ad litem for minor Respondent—Jurisdiction of Master under the Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850.

The cause petition in this matter was filed before the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1867, when the Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867, came into operation. One of the parties, respondent, was a minor, and an application was made to Master Litton, under the 8th section of the Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850, for the appointment of a guardian ad litem. Master Litton having a doubt as to his jurisdiction to appoint a guardian, consulted Master Murphy, who was of opinion that the Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850, having been repealed from the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1867, the Masters had no longer power to appoint a guardian ad litem. Master Brooke, who was also consulted by Master Litton, was of the contrary opinion. Under these circumstances the Masters requested that His Honour's opinion should be asked.

Bewley accordingly now mentioned the matter.

Dec. 4.—His HONOUR said that he had considered the question on which his opinion had been asked, and he was clearly of opinion with Master Brooke that the Masters had jurisdiction to appoint guardians ad litem for minor respondents, in suits commenced by cause petition before the first day of last Michaelmas Term. The 175th section of the Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867, appeared to him to remove all difficulty. He had had an opportunity of consulting the Lord Chancellor on the subject, and his Lordship concurred with him.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by WM. BARLOW, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

FITZGERALD v. LONERGAN.

Dec. 6th.—Injunction to restrain Transfer of Shares of Administrator.

Gibson, on behalf of the plaintiffs, moved, under the Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867, sec. 170, to restrain the Provincial Bank of Ireland, and the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company respectively, from permitting the transfer of certain shares, which had belonged to an intestate, John Vincent Lonergan, whose administrator the defendant, Stephen Lonergan, is.

One of the plaintiffs, wife of the other, was sister of the intestate, and claimed a distributive share of the intestate's property. It was stated in the affidavit that the intestate died in July, 1864, and that the defendant, having obtained letters of administration, caused the shares in question, with others, to be transferred into his own name; that unsuccessful attempts had been made to procure payment of their distributive share to the plaintiffs or their trustees; that on the 19th Nov., 1867, the defendant sold all his furniture in his house at Clonmel; and the affidavit charged that he was about to leave Ireland with all the available assets of the intestate, without accounting for, or making any payment on account of them.

An administration summons against the defendant had been taken out.

Counsel contended that the order sought should be absolute in the first instance.

His HONOUR granted an absolute order, and directed that it should be served on the defendant personally within two days.

Solicitor for the petitioners, George Bolton.

BLAKE v. BLAKE.

Nov. 16.—Security for Costs—Ejectment on the Title.

Oliver Burke (with him Blake, Q.C.), for the defendant served, applied for security for costs, the plaintiff residing out of the jurisdiction. The action was one of ejectment on the title.

Crampton, for the plaintiff, opposed the motion. The summons and plaint was served in March, and it was contended that the motion now came too late, and should have been made before the time for pleading had expired. It appeared, however, that the writ had not been filed until July, and that notice of the filing had been served not on the defendant personally, but upon his solicitor, who, however, was not his attorney on the record, no defence having been filed.

The COURT granted the motion.

Attorney for the plaintiff, Matthew Brown.

Attorney for the defendant, E. Stapleton.

Before the FULL COURT.

THE QUEEN AT THE PROSECUTION OF THE IRISH SOCIETY v. THE BOARD OF WORKS.

Nov. 21, 25.—Prohibition—Fishery—Oyster and Mussel Fishery (Ireland) Act, 1866.

Notice to show cause against a conditional order for a prohibition to prevent the defendants from granting a license to fish for oysters in Lough Foyle. The Commissioners of Public Works had held an inquiry under the Oyster and Mussel Fishery (Ireland) Act, 1866; and the Irish Society had obtained a conditional order for restraining them from granting a license, upon the grounds that they, the Irish Society, had a several fishery for oysters in the locus in quo. As to this there was conflicting evidence; and the Commissioners relied on the fact that by the Act an appeal was given to the Privy Council, as a ground why the prohibition should not go.

Joy, Q.C., May, Q.C., and Dames, for the Board of Works.

Sullivan, Q.C., and M'Causland, Q.C., for the Irish Society.

The COURT, deciding nothing as to the several fishery, made the order absolute.

Solicitor for the Board of Works, A. E. M'Clintock.

Solicitor for the Irish Society, Hugh Lane.

THE QUEEN v. RAMSAY.

Nov. 25.—Warrant—Conviction—Habeas Corpus—Proceedings upon a Sunday.

Motion to make absolute an order for a Habeas Corpus to the Sheriff of the County of Cork to bring up the body of the prisoner, who was confined in the gaol of that county. The informations under which the prisoner had been arrested, the warrant for his arrest, his trial, conviction, and sentence, the warrant of commitment and the commitment itself, which was, that in default of finding sureties for good behaviour, he should be imprisoned for twelve months, all took place upon a Sunday.

Serjeant Barry and O'Brien, for the prisoner.

Macdonagh, Q.C., and Leslie, Q.C., contra.

The COURT made the order absolute, and the prisoner was subsequently brought up and discharged.

Attorney for the prisoner, F. Noonan.

Attorney for the prosecutor, T. Wright.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Reported by W. GRIFFIN, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Coram MONAHAN, C.J., and O'HAGAN, J.

MAGUIRE v. O'CONNOR.

Nov. 7.—Taxation of Costs between Attorney and Client when paid under consent by a third party submitting to a verdict.

This was a motion involving, amongst other matters, a question as to the amount of costs due by the plaintiff to his attorney in the case of Maguire v. O'Connor, in which the defendaut had submitted to a verdict, and paid costs between attorney and client.

The plaintiff's attorney alleged that he was entitled, as against his client, to a larger sum for costs in that action than Master Colles had taxed against the defendant under the consent for judgment, as Master Colles in such a case should not tax certain costs when they were to be paid by a third party, though he would if they were to be paid by the client.

Master COLLES having been referred to, said he had taxed the costs upon an intermediate scale, that is, intermediate between party and party, and that which he would allow if taxing the costs of the attorney against his own client. The principle of the intermediate scale which he applied to such taxation when the costs were to be paid by a third party was, that a client may wish things to be done which put his attorney to a great deal of unnecessary expense and trouble, but which the client may insist upon having done, which accordingly it was quite right he should pay for; but when a third party was to pay costs between attorney and client he did not tax them.

MONAHAN, C.J.—The costs having been taxed against the defendant in Maguire and O'Connor, on the principle explained by Master Colles, which seems quite right, must now go back to be taxed again as between Mr. Maguire and his attorney.

For support of motion, Burke, Q.C., and Levy.

Attorney, J. H. Ramsay.

Against motion, P. Keogh.

Attorney, Hunter.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by R. R. KANE, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

KELLY v. FALLS.

Nov. 4.—Abuse of Process—Action brought in Contravention of a Judge's Order — Staying Proceedings on Motion.

A judgment in ejectment for non-payment of rent was recovered by one Black against one Francis Kelly, on the 20th May, 1867. The habere was not issued until the 14th June. Francis Kelly abandoned the premises in July, and his brother, Peter Kelly, took possession, claiming an interest in the lands, and put in some goods. The habere was, however, executed upon the 27th August, and Kelly's goods removed. On September 20th, Peter moved before Morris, J., in Chamber, that the judgment and habere might be set aside, as he had an interest in the lands, and had not been served. By consent an order was made upon the motion that Peter Kelly should be put into possession of the lands, he "undertaking not to bring any action." He afterwards brought an action against the present defendant, who was Black's attorney in the ejectment, for the conversion and detention of the goods which were removed from the premises in the execution of the habere.

The defendant now moved to have this action stayed, as being an abuse of the process of the Court, and brought in disregard of the order of Morris, J. The defendant's affidavit set out the facts as above, and stated his belief that the plaintiff had got back his goods.

Dowse, Q.C., and Byrne, in support of the motion.

P. Keogh, for the plaintiff contra.

The COURT (FITZGERALD and DEASY, B.B.) granted the motion with costs, holding that the order referred to any action arising out of the transaction, and protected Black's attorney as well as himself.

E. H. Hunter, plaintiff's attorney.

H. Falls, defendant in person.

GARROD v. SMYTH.

Nov. 8.—Practice—Security for Costs—Particulars within the knowledge of Defendant—Sufficiency of Affidavit.

Motion for security for costs. The action was for goods sold and delivered. The affidavit of the defendant, in support of the motion, stated that he had a good defence upon the merits, except as to a small amount which he was willing to bring into Court, because he was entitled to credit for empty casks when returned, and for freight which he had paid; but that he could not tell how much those credits amounted to without further particulars from the plaintiff, and that he had served a notice of motion for the further particulars.

P. Keogh, in support of the motion.

Hamill, for the plaintiff contra.

DEASY, B., refused the motion on the ground that the settled practice of the Exchequer required the nature of the defence to be stated with sufficient certainty to show that there was really a question to be tried, and that here the defendant said that he could not tell how much of the plaintiff's claim he had a defence to until he got from the plaintiff particulars, which were more within his own knowledge than within that of the plaintiff.

C. Pickering & Son, attorneys for the plaintiff.

W. Moorhead, attorney for the defendant.

CONSOLIDATED CHAMBER.

Reported by J. L. WHITTLE, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

MURPHY v. RYAN.

Practice—Pleading.

This was an action by the plaintiff, as trustee of a public company, a previous action against the same defendant and for the same cause of action had been brought by another trustee, and a rule to discontinue entered on the 4th January. The writ in this second action was issued on the 7th January. The costs of the first action were not paid till the 25th January, when the rule to discontinue took effect. Defendant, in April, obtained, on two different occasions, on ex parte application to the Court, extensions of time to plead, and finally pleaded another action pending at the time of the issuing of the writ.

Vereker now moved to set aside this plea, as it should have gone on to state that first action was now pending.

P. Keogh, in support of the plea. [KEOGH, J.—Did you tell the Court, when you got time to plead, that you intended to plead a dilatory plea?] I was not the counsel who obtained leave to plead, and know nothing about it.

KEOGH, J.—The defendant's attorney must have been in Court. I should have seen that the Court received intimation of this purpose. Without deciding on the form of the plea, I shall set it aside with costs. Costs not to be recoverable by defendant's attorney against his client.

Attorney for plaintiff, W. M. M'Cay.
Attorney for defendant, Edward H. Hunter.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S CHAMBER.

DYER v. DYER.

Practice—As to Affidavits in support of Administrator's Summonses.

This was an administration summons issued by a legatee requiring the executor to account.

Campion, counsel for plaintiff, stated the case, and was about to open an affidavit in support, when Dix, solicitor, objected, on behalf of the defendant, to the affidavit being read, inasmuch as no notice of it had been served, and relied on the 216th General Order, which directs that "the party intending to use any affidavit on any proceeding in Chambers shall give notice to the other parties concerning his intention in that behalf," and contended that notice of the affidavit might have been served with the copy summons, and that such was the usual practice in England.

Campion stated that the plaintiff's solicitor believed, from inquiries he had made in the office of the court, that such notice was not necessary, and relied on the form of the order for administration contained in schedule to the statute as showing that no affidavit of facts was necessary.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR held that under the 216th Order notice was absolutely necessary, and refused to allow the affidavit to be read, but said that he would assume that the plaintiff was entitled, as stated in summons, to require an account of the personal estate from the defendant in the absence of any cause shown to the contrary.

Dix was about to read an affidavit filed as cause, when Campion objected, the affidavit having been only filed on the previous day.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR therefore granted an adjournment of the case till next Term, giving the plaintiff a week to file further affidavits, and the defendant one week to reply to it.

Solicitor for plaintiff, Mathew Parker.
Solicitor for defendant, Thomas C. Butler.

RICHARD TOPHAM, for Chief Clerk.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

This Estate is situate within one and two miles from Newry, and is bounded on the West and North by the Newry River and Mr. M'George's demesne. The Western portion is of park-like beauty and richness, and there is a quantity of game and quail on the Estate, which is seldom found in such a populous neighbourhood.

From its proximity to the town of Newry, the Estate may be considered as forming town parks; and from the accommodation afforded by railway and canal for the transit of merchandize, &c, property in the vicinity of Newry is daily increasing in value.

Proposals for the purchase by private contract of the whole or any of the Lots will be received by the Solicitor having the Carriage of the Sale up to the 30th day of November, 1867, and, if approved of by the owner, will be submitted to the Court for approval.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 47.] SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

IN the New Buildings, at the Four Courts, recently erected for the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency, and in which offices have been assigned to the Taxing Masters of the Court of Chancery, a fire was discovered, yesterday morning, in Master Gibson's office. The alarm having been given, assistance was speedily obtained, and the fire was soon got under, but not before these offices had been burnt to a shell, while Master Litton's, which are immediately beneath, and the General Office in Bankruptcy, which is underneath the latter, narrowly escaped destruction, and are not a little damaged by the falling water with which it was necessary to flood the upper story. Of course, the books and documents which these apartments contained are either destroyed or greatly injured by the combined action of fire and water, and in one instance a bagful of papers and important title deeds, left by a Solicitor for safety in Master Gibson's office, have been wholly lost.

There will, doubtless, be strict inquiry as to the origin of this occurrence, and if a culpable neglect of duty appear to have been the cause of the affair, an example will, we suppose, be made of the offender. But the public have a right to ask, why it is that a vast fire-proof receptacle, which has been built at great public expense, which the Board of Works completed about a year ago, and which Parliament, by an Act passed last session, has provided with sufficient official machinery, is still unoccupied? The "Public Records Act, 1867," passed on the 12th August last, has since that day been in full force, but up to this time no removal of any Records has, we believe, been even begun. With whom does the blame of this delay rest, and how long is it to last? Long ago we duly announced the appointment of certain well selected gentlemen who are to constitute the staff of the new establishment, but where do they locate themselves, and why is not the "large and commodious building" by this time tenanted? It cannot be that the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, who is now the legal custodian of all Public Records in Ireland, hesitates to exercise the authority with which he is invested, and to issue his warrants for the removal of such Records, directed to the different persons who now temporarily hold them under his charge and superintendence. It is, we are informed, the Commissioners of the Treasury who stop the way, and whose "circumlocution office" arrangements move with a dilatory dignity that may prove, privately as well as publicly, most expensive in the end This matter, however, is one of so pressing an importance that we think "my Lords" ought to be at once addressed upon the subject; and we are sure that in vigilant care of their clients' interests, and of their own, the solicitors will be discharging a public duty in urging strongly upon the authorities the necessity for immediate action.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON, in his late Message to the Congress of the United States, touches upon some points relative to England which have two bearings—a political and a legal one. With the former we have nothing to do; but we think it advisable to call the attention of our readers to the legal bearings of the statements in question.

The first is that no arrangement has yet been arrived at for the settlement of the claims for the depredations of the Alabama and similar vessels upon the commerce of the United States. The President declares that he felt it his duty to decline a proposition made by Her Majesty's Government, because, as he states, it has hitherto been accompanied by reservations and limitations which he felt to be incompatible with the rights, interests, and honour of the United States. But, he goes on to say, it is not to be apprehended that Great Britain will persist in her refusal to satisfy these claims, which involve the sacred principles of non-intervention—a principle henceforth not more important to the United States than to all other commercial nations. Such is one of the points touched on by the President, which has, ever since the occurrences referred to took place, occupied the attention of the respective Foreign Secretaries who have been in office, and their legal advisers, and is now, we believe, in a fair course for settlement, since the feelings excited on both sides of the Atlantic have had time to cool down, and the principles of international law have taken the place in the discussion formerly occupied by the sympathetic appeals of the partisan.*

But there is another clause in the Message which is of much graver import, inasmuch as its consequences will be more lasting, and the principle sought to be maintained is one almost entirely the growth of present circumstances, and which does not claim the prestige of antiquity for its support, but which rather commends itself to the majority of its supporters by its novelty, and by the obvious facility which it presents to the European nations to escape from a certain dilemma into which their members have been led by the unexpected magnitude that emigration to the United States of America, from almost all the over-peopled or poorer countries of Europe, has assumed. The difficulty simply is this—that Europeans who have become citizens of the United States owe a double allegiance, to the government of the United States and to the government of the country in which they were born. This complication has not hitherto occasioned much difficulty, but now, from the vast improvement in steam navigation, which makes the relative position of the two continents so different from what it was fifty years ago, it is necessary, in the interests of civilization, for all the governments concerned to take some means to solve the difficulty. It is not to be supposed that this can be done by one nation passing a law for its own subjects, and then demanding that all other nati_ns should recognize it; as well might the inhabitants of the State of Maine demand that, as they have enacted that spirits shall not be sold in their state, except under certain restrictions, therefore the same restrictions should be considered binding in others states, or a state which has substituted secondary for capital punishment require that no executions should be permitted elsewhere. President Johnson is not accused of being an irrational man, nor are American lawyers usually said to be deficient in legal acumen, therefore we are certain they never thought of their words being taken to mean, as some have supposed they meant, that the laws of nations, as they are at present recognized, should bend to a decree of the American Congress. The words of the message are as follows:—"The annexation of many small German States to Prussia, and the re-organization of that country under a new and liberal Constitution, have induced me to renew the efforts to obtain a just and prompt settlement of the long-vexed question concerning the claims of foreign States for military service from their subjects naturalized in the United States." From which it will be seen that the immediate occasion of the question being raised is, that naturalized Americans of German origin are held liable to military service in their native country in the event of their temporarily returning within its jurisdiction. A German settling in the United States, or in England or any other country, cannot revisit his old home without becoming liable to military conscription, and this is the special grievance which the President recommends to the attention of Congress. The grievance, however, is felt in many other places, notably in London, where very many Germans are settled, who, from the close commercial connexion between the Continent of Europe and England, have often occasion to travel in Germany, and must either pay a heavy "smart," or serve the necessary time in the landwehr. Further on in the message we read:—"In connexion with this subject the attention of Congress is respectfully called to a singular and embarrassing conflict of laws. The Executive Department of this Government has hitherto uniformly held, as it now holds, that naturalization, in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the United States, absolves the recipient from his native allegiance. The Courts of Great Britain hold that allegiance to the British Crown is indefeasible, and is not absolved by our laws of naturalization. British Judges cite the Courts and law authorities of the United States in support of the theory against the position held by the Executive authority of the United States. This conflict perplexes the public mind concerning the rights of naturalized citizens, and impairs national authority abroad. I called attention to this subject in my last annual Message, and now again respectfully appeal to Congress to declare the national will unmistakably upon this important question." We know it has been stated to be one of the most universally acknowledged maxims of English law, that native allegiance is indefeasible and not to be absolved by any

* Serving in foreign States which is generally inconsistent with allegiance to one's natural prince, was at one time punished by stat. 3, Jac. 1, c. 4, which made it felony for any person to go out of the Realm to serve a foreign Prince, without having first taken the oath of allegiance. This statute was extended and amended by subsequent acts, which have since been repealed. The statute now in force is the Foreign Enlistment Act, 59 Geo. III., c. 69, which makes the entering into the aid of a foreign Prince or people, in any warlike capacity whatever, or going abroad with that intent, or attempting to get others to do so, without the Royal licence, a misdemeanour, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both. The same statute imposes a penalty of £50 on masters of ships and owners assisting in the committal of this offence; while persons fitting out armed vessels, to aid the military operations of any foreign powers, without licence from the Crown, or aiding the warlike equipment of vessels of foreign States, are guilty of a misdemeanour, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.—Blackstone, Bk. iv., cap. 7.

laws of naturalization, but we also know it to be true as the poet sings:—

> "That through the ages one increasing purpose runs,
> And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

We think it would not be difficult to show that to the strangers and others who suffer inconvenience from its action, the present law must seem irrational. "Once a British subject always a British subject," is undoubtedly the law of England, and as a man may become a British subject in very peculiar and numerous ways which are not recognized by any other country, the consequences are sometimes strange. A man is a British subject if he happens to be born within the limits of the United Kingdom; a man is also a British subject, in the eye of the law, if his father, or grandfather by the father's side, was a native born British subject, and from the same premises it might be argued that if a French-woman, on a visit to England, happens to give birth to a child, two generations of that child's descendants would be British subjects, though none of them ever touched British soil. They are really French in all respects; but if any one of them were found bearing arms in a war against England he would be legally liable to be tried and hanged for treason. Of course this would be simply absurd, and the Government would never press the theory of the law to its practical conclusions. But for that very reason it would appear at least judicious to formally repeal the law. It is true the President is not so logical as he might be when he recommends Congress to declare the national will unmistakably upon a question which he had just before described as a singular and embarrassing conflict of laws, for the national will of a single community can have no authority on a point of international jurisprudence. It is evident the question can only be settled by an International Congress which would not be unprecedented, as the laws relating to privateers, for instance, have been already modified. It would, we think, be advantageous to Great Britain to have the question solved for the sake of the vast numbers of foreigners who annually become naturalized British subjects. And we must remember that all foreigners temporarily residing in England owe temporary allegiance to the English law; and whether Americans, Germans, or Japanese, are liable to the penalties inflicted by English law for crimes committed in England, the only difference being that they may claim to be tried by a mixed jury, half English and half foreigners.*

THE RECENT LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.

The vacant Chairmanship of the County of Galway has been filled by the appointment thereto of Mr. Robert Longfield, Q.C., late Law Adviser, Dublin Castle.

This is an appointment which will, doubtless, give satisfaction both to the profession and the public. Mr. Longfield's long experience in the office, the duties of which he so satisfactorily discharged, his sound and practical common sense, and his admitted high reputation as a well-read lawyer, eminently qualifying him for the discharge of the duties, daily increasing in importance, of the post which he has accepted.

The appointment of Mr. Charles Shaw, Q.C., to the office vacated by Mr. Longfield has not met with such universal approval. That it should have done so could not fairly have been expected. The friends and supporters of the disappointed candidates, of course, are thoroughly dissatisfied, and we must confess that there is, at least, one among them who, all must admit, had the very strongest claims, both professionally and practically, upon the Government, and to whose appointment there could not have been urged, in any respect, the slightest shadow of an objection. Apart, however, from this consideration, we must congratulate the Government (and we feel confident that his rivals for the office would join us in doing so) on having secured the services of one whose reputation at the Bar stands so deservedly high, as does that of Mr. Shaw. Called to the Bar in 1840, Mr. Shaw has ever since continued to maintain the prestige gained for his name by the distinguished services of his brother, the Recorder. He has for very many years acted as one of the Revising Barristers for the City of Dublin, where his decisions have met with the most unqualified approval on all sides, and where the loss of his long experience will be much felt, unless the Government appoint to the office some one thoroughly acquainted with the working of the Registry Acts.

We feel confident that Mr. Shaw's calm logical powers, his learning, ability, and earnest zeal, will enable him to discharge, with advantage to the public interest, the important duties of the responsible post which he has been called upon to fill.

* The law holds that there is an implied, original, and virtual allegiance, owing from every subject to his sovereign, antecedently to any express promise; and although the subject never swore any faith or allegiance in form. For as the King, by the very descent of the crown, is fully invested with all the rights and bound to all the duties of sovereignty, before his coronation, so the subject is bound to his Prince by an intrinsic allegiance, before the superinduction of those outward bonds of oath, homage, and fealty.

Allegiance is consequently distinguished into two species, the one natural, the other local; the former being also perpetual, the latter temporary. Natural allegiance is such as is due from all men born within the sovereign's dominions immediately upon their birth; it cannot be forfeited, cancelled, or altered by any change of time, place, or circumstance, nor by anything but the united concurrence of the legislature.

Local allegiance is such as is due from an alien, or stranger born, for so long time as he continues within the Queen's dominions and protection; and it ceases the instant such stranger transfers himself from this kingdom to another. For as the Prince affords his protection to an alien only during his residence in this realm, the allegiance of an alien is confined to the duration of his residence, and to the dominions of the empire.—Blackstone, Bk. i., cap. 10.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by WM. BARLOW, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

SHEPPARD v. MURPHY.

Nov. 22nd, 25th; Dec. 15th.—Specific Performance—Privity of Contract—Principal and Agent.

On the 21st April, 1866, L. & Co., stockbrokers in London, by direction of the respondent's brother, bought for the respondent, on the Exchange, one hundred shares in Overend, Gurney, and Co. (Limited), for the next sitting day, the 27th of April, and also purchased for him one hundred and fifty shares in the Credit Foucier and Mobilier of England (Limited). On the day of the purchase a bought note was handed to the respondent's brother. The shares were bought from Mr. Kennedy, who was a dealer in shares, and a member of the London Stock Exchange. L. & Co. were paid for the shares on the 25th of April, and directed to continue them (which they did) to the 15th of May. The bank stopped payment on the 10th of May. On the 24th of May the petitioner sold on the Exchange thirty-four shares in Overend, Gurney, and Co., and the name of the respondent was then "passed" to him as that of the transferee of those shares. The petitioner thereupon executed to the respondent transfer deeds of the shares, handed the deeds, with the scrip certificates, to L. and Co., and was paid the price. The respondent refused to receive or execute these deeds of transfer. The petitioner's name, therefore, remained on the books of the company as that of the legal owner of the shares, and he, having afterwards been obliged as such to pay the call, filed this petition for specific performance of the contract of the 21st of April, for repayment of the amount of the call, and for indemnity against future calls.

Lawson, Q.C., May, Q.C. and Dames, for the petitioner, contended that the purchasers of the shares are bound by the rules of the Stock Exchange: Sutton v. Tatham, 10 Ad. and El. 27; Bayliffe v. Butterworth, 1 Exch. Rep. 425; and impliedly authorize their brokers to do every act of detail necessary for completing the purchase: Bayley v. Wilkins, 7 C. B. 886. The relation of vendor and vendee exists between the petitioner and the respondent: Paine v. Hutchinson, Law Rep., 3 Eg., 257; Robins v. Edwards, 15 W. Rep. 1,065; Evans v. Wood, 15 W. Rep. 476; W. Notes (1867), p. 256; so that the petitioner is entitled to enforce specific performance. That the bank stopped payment before the adjourned settling day does not release the respondent: Biedernian v. Stone, Law Rep., 2 Law, C. P., 504; Chapman v. Shepherd, Law Rep., 2 Law, C. P., 229; Taylor v. Stray, 2 C. B., N. S., 175; 26 L. J., N. S., C. P., 288; Stray v. Russell, 1 El. and El., 888, 916. The buyer's name need not be disclosed at the date of the contract: Wynne v. Price, 3 De Gex and Smale, 310. The petitioner, legal owner of the shares, is entitled to enforce specific performance against his cestui que trust: Phene v. Gillan, 5 Hare, 1. The deterioration in value of the shares does not release the buyer: Hitchcock v. Giddings, 4 Price, 135.

The Attorney-General, Palles, Q.C., and Jackson, for the respondent, contended that the petitioner was not a party to the contract of the 21st of April, which he sought to enforce, and that Kennedy, in making that contract, and until the 24th of May, was a principal himself, not an agent for the petitioner, who, therefore, cannot maintain this suit: Humphrey v. Lucas, 2 Car. and Kir., 152; Wilson v. Tumman, 6 M. and Gr, 236; Ch. Cont. (6th ed.), 200. The Court will not enforce part of a contract: Gervais v. Edwards, 2 Dr. and War. 80; so that this suit cannot be maintained as it concerns itself with only thirty-four shares, whereas the contract was an entire contract for 100 shares. The respondent's brokers are the proper persons to sue him: Chapman v. Shepherd, Law Rep., 2 Law, C. P., 229; Biederman v. Stone, Law Rep., 2 Law, C. P., 504; Paine v. Hutchinson, Law Rep., 3 Eq., 227. The case of Evans v. Wood, 15 W. Rep., 476, only proves that Kennedy might sue. The Court will not exercise its discretion by enforcing a contract to buy shares in a company which is in process of dissolution: Sheffield Gas Company v. Harrison, 17 Beav., 294; Hawkins v. Maltby, Law Rep., 4 Eq., 572; Emmerson's case, Law Rep., 2 Eq., 231; Law Rep., 1 Ch. Ap., 433; Bermingham v. Sheridan, 33 Beav., 660. The right to sue the respondent was not transferred to the petitioner: Dixon v. Bovill, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas., 1.

Dames, in reply, cited Story Og., par. 170, 172; Beaufort v. Taylor, 9 Jur., 813; Smethurst v. Taylor, 12 Mee. and W. 545; Ch. Cont. (7th ed.), 197; Wilkinson v. Lloyd, 7 Q. B., 27; Ward and Henry's case, Law Rep., 2 Ch. Ap., 431; Head's case, Law Rep., 3 Eq., 84; Ward and Garfit's case, Law Rep., 4 Eq., 189.

[HIS HONOUR, on a subsequent day, referred the counsel to Musgrave and Hart's case, W. Notes (1867), p. 274.]

Dec. 15th.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR dismissed the petition, with costs, there being no privity of contract between the petitioner and the respondent, when the contract of the 21st of April was made, Kennedy being a principal therein, not an agent.

Solicitors for the petitioner, Newtons and Armstrong.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by WM. WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

THE QUEEN v. NAGLE.

November 25th, 26th.—Criminal Law—Bail.

This was an application to admit a prisoner to bail. It appeared that he had been arrested in the county of Waterford on the 1st June. On the 23rd September and the 12th October informations were sworn against him, and he was committed for trial, and was indicted for treason-felony at the Commission Court in Green-street, in October. He was not, however, then arraigned, and it appearing that he was a natural-born citizen of the United States, the Attorney-General stated that for that reason his trial should take place in Sligo, that being the only venue in which personal acts done by the prisoner himself could be proved. The trial was accordingly postponed. The summer assizes in Sligo had taken place not very long after the prisoner's arrest. At one of his examinations before the magistrates he had stated that he was an American citizen. On his arrest he had given a false name.

There was an affidavit stating that the prisoner's health was suffering from protracted confinement.

Heron, Q.C., and Molloy, for the prisoner, relied chiefly upon the delay which had taken place in the prisoner's trial, insisting that he could, if it was necessary, have been tried at the last Sligo Assizes, and that the Crown was in default in postponing the trial.

The Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General (with them T. P. Law), for the Crown, submitted that the informations had not been made till long after the Sligo assizes, and that it was not until the sitting of the Commission at Green-street that it was ascertained that the prisoner was an alien.

The COURT refused the motion, holding that the Crown had not been in default, and also that no sufficient case of danger to the prisoner's life, from confinement, had been made out.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

STRANGE v. KELLY.

Nov. 8.—Evidence under Traverse of Goods sold and delivered.

Application for a conditional order for a new trial on behalf of the defendant. The case had been tried in the Consolidated Nisi Prius Court before Morris, J. It was an action for work and labour by an attorney, and the only defence pleaded was a traverse. Under the traverse, Counsel for the defendant sought at the trial to give in evidence an agreement by which the plaintiff was only to be paid in the event of a certain fund being realized. The Judge refused to allow the evidence, and a new trial was now sought on the ground of such evidence having been improperly rejected.

M'Kenna.—This case is governed by Boakes v. M'Craken in this Court (6 Ir. C. S. R. 259).

The plaintiff was bound to prove a simple unconditional request to do the work, and evidence to show that the request was only conditional should have been admitted.

The COURT referred to the case of Leach v. Palmer (11 Ir. Jur. N.S. 259, C.P.) as governing the present case. There, under a traverse of goods bargained and sold, and goods sold and delivered, the defendant was not allowed to give evidence of an unexpired credit.

Conditional order refused.

CALLAGHAN v. O'SULLIVAN.

Nov. 12.—Pleading held not Prolix or Embarrassing—False Imprisonment and Malicious Prosecution.

Motion on behalf of the plaintiff to set aside the second defence to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd counts of the summons and plaint as embarrassing and prolix, and unnecessarily pleading matters of evidence, and tendering immaterial issues.

The first and second counts were for false imprisonment, and the third for malicious prosecution. The second defence which was pleaded to all three was as follows :—" That before the committing of any of the grievances complained of, the plaintiff and two other men, his associates (all theretofore unknown to the defendant), accosted the defendant in one of the public streets of Dublin, at and after midnight, and then entered into friendly conversation with him (they respectively having the outward appearance of respectable gentlemen), and they shortly afterwards induced the plaintiff to accompany them to an adjoining tavern, and they having there partaken of some refreshments, they there and then demanded of the defendant money for a further supply of refreshments, and upon failing to obtain any money from the defendant, they pressed around the defendant's person, and assailed him with such threats, abusive language, and uproar, as usually emanate from persons only of dissolute and dishonest habits and character, and they so continued until the defendant was obliged to struggle against them, and he, in fact, forced his way from among them, out of the said tavern, into the public street, whither they closely followed the defendant and surrounded him, and pushed, and dragged him, against his will, along and out of the said street, and compelled him to enter with them into a certain house of ill-fame of the lowest description in the said city, with the inmates whereof they respectively were familiarly acquainted, and there they renewed their former demand for money from the defendant, and failing to obtain it, they raised a vehement uproar against him within the said house, and excited certain of the said inmates to assail and beat him, which they did with abominable curses, abusive language, and fearful threats of personal violence (the plaintiff all that time aiding and concurring in the conduct aforesaid), and the defendant having, with great difficulty, succeeded in escaping from them out of the said house into an adjoining lane, the plaintiff and his said two associates pursued the defendant into the said lane, and then and there laid hold of the defendant, and endeavoured, by force, to strip him of the coat which he then wore, whereupon the defendant, with struggling and great difficulty, made his way out of their hands into the public main street, into which the said lane opened, and they pursued him into the said public street, and there pressed around him and pushed and dragged him about with uproar and violence, and in the midst of the said proceedings, in the said public street, the hat of the defendant was forcibly snatched from the defendant's head by some person or persons, who feloniously stole and carried away the same, whereupon immediately the plaintiff and his said two associates withdrew from the defendant and ran away together, at full speed, along and out of the said street; and the defendant then saw them so running away, and then saw that one of them, while running away, had in his hands a certain hat, which the defendant then verily believed to be the said hat of the defendant, and the defendant never afterwards saw his said hat, or ascertained further than as aforesaid what became of it; and that at the time when his hat was so snatched from his head, the plaintiff and his associates were pressing around him; and defendant at that time, and thenceforth until the discharge from custody, hereinafter mentioned, did verily believe that no person, other than the plaintiff and his two associates, was at that time at all near the defendant, or within reach of his said hat, and that at the time, and thenceforth, &c., the defendant did verily and bona fide believe, and continued so to believe, that the plaintiff and his said two associates did feloniously steal and carry away his (the defendant's) said hat in the said public street, &c."

The defence then proceeded to state that after they had ran away, he complained to a police constable, and had certain conversations with the bystanders who (as defendant well knew) were well acquainted with the persons and characters of the said three persons respectively, and said persons did, in the defendant's presence and hearing, assure the said policeman of the truth of defendant's complaint, and communicated to him the names and descriptions of those who had committed the said felony, they being, in fact, the plaintiff and his said two associates, and defendant made a charge at the police office against them, and that next day they were brought up under the charge, and the charge was dismissed; and that defendant acted perfectly bona fide and without malice, and with the object of obtaining justice, and verily believing, for the reasons aforesaid, that the charge was true, and having, for the reasons aforesaid, reasonable and probable cause for so believing and so acting as aforesaid.

Waters, in support of motion. This pleading is prolix and scandalous. The charge was dismissed, as the plaintiffs proved they were not there at all. It pleads evidence which he would be entitled to use at the trial, but which should not be opened out on the files of the Court. Even as a matter of evidence he could not give the conversation which occurred after the parties had run away. The plea should have begun with stating the transaction in the street, omitting all their previous allegations as to what occurred in the public house, &c. At any rate it clearly must be set aside as pleaded to the third count, which is for malicious prosecution. The plea to such a count need not set out the circumstances which afford reasonable and probable cause; it need only say that he acted bona fide, and without malice, and had reasonable and probable cause.

Phillips.—If I did not set out all these matters I could not give them in evidence, and the plea on the face of it should show facts sufficient, if true, to give reasonable and probable cause. So far from being unnecessary I was afraid that, even with all these facts set out, my learned friend would demur. The conversations, after parties ran away, were before the arrest, and formed part of the defendant's reason for believing as he did. If the matters alleged were totally disconnected with the charge, and could not contribute to his belief, I admit they could be inadmissable, but here they are directly calculated to contribute to it. He referred to the precedent of such a plea as in 3rd Chitty, 5th Edition, to Burn's Justice, Vol. 1., title Arrest, under head of suspicion, and Mure v. Kaye, 4 Taunt., 35.

COURT.—We are of opinion that so far as the plea is pleaded to the counts for false imprisonment, to which it would be necessary to plead the facts constituting the probable ground, this plea should not be set aside. It is necessary to state that a felony has been committed; it is also necessary to state, as facts, the facts which constitute the reasonable grounds for suspecting the plaintiff of having committed it. It is said that the plea should not have set out the allegations about the parties being in the public house, &c., but it is not merely that they were there, but what occurred there, which he states as facts, rendering it probable the plaintiffs would commit felony, and I entertain very serious doubts whether, if these statements had been omitted, plaintiff could have gone into them in evidence; especially when they are facts imputing misconduct to the plaintiff, of which, if about to be relied on, he might argue notice should have been given him in the plea.

As pleaded to the third count, the plea must be set aside; inasmuch as the plaintiff succeeds in part of his motion and fails in another, the parties should bear their own costs, or the costs be plaintiff's and defendant's costs in the cause.

Nov. 11, 21.—Contract to Pay Differences between the Prices at which Shares were Bought, and at which they were Sold—Wagering Contract.

Demurrer.—The writ of summons and plaint stated that in consideration that the plaintiffs, as stockbrokers for the defendant, would buy and sell stock and shares for the defendant as and when the defendant should direct, and on the terms that in case the prices for which the stock and shares should be sold by the plaintiffs for the defendant should be greater than the prices for which they should be bought by the plaintiffs for the defendant, the plaintiffs should pay to the defendant the difference between the said prices less their commission and charges. The defendant undertook and agreed, in case the prices for which the said stock and shares should be sold by the plaintiff, for the defendant, should be less than the price for which they should be bought for the defendant by the plaintiffs, he would pay to the plaintiffs the difference between the said prices, together with their commission and charges; and averred that in consideration and pursuance of such agreement and undertaking the plaintiffs bought and sold for the defendant at his request, and as and when he directed certain shares and stocks, and that the prices for which the said shares and stocks were sold for were prices less than those for which they were bought, and that the differences, together with the plaintiff's commission and charges, amounted to a large sum; but the defendant, though requested to pay the said sum, did not pay the same. Defence as to the differences between the prices at which the shares were bought, and at which they were sold, that the plaintiffs never made any payment for the defendant on account of, or otherwise satisfied the differences or any part thereof. Demurrer.

Monroe and Falkiner, Q.C., in support of the demurrer, contended that the defence was no answer to the action; payment was not necessary, as this was an express promise to pay the differences.

M'Mahon and Macdonagh, Q.C., in support of the defence, contended that either this was a contract of indemnity, in which case the plaintiffs could not maintain the action unless he had paid, or if an express provision, it was a wagering contract within the 8 & 9 Vic., c 109, sec. 18, and could not be enforced.

The COURT (FITZGERALD and DEASY, B.B.) held the contract upon the plaint to be a wagering contract within the 8 & 9 Vic., c. 109, sec. 18.

In re the Estate of EMILY FRANCIS and OTHERS, Owners, v. THOMAS LAMBERT, Petitioner.

June 19.—Judgment—Mortgage—Averments in Affidavit respecting Defendant's Residence—Description of Plaintiff.

In this case the owners, and also the petitioner, objected to the validity of the registration of a judgment obtained by Mr. John Thomas Hinds against the late Mr. Arthur Francis, and registered as a mortgage against a portion of the lands sold in the matter. It was objected that the affidavit, made to register this judgment, was defective by reason of the improper description in it of the residence of the said Arthur Francis. The title of the affidavit described the defendant as "Arthur Francis, of Ashbrook-terrace, in the County of Dublin, Esquire;" and, in the body of it, there was the statement that "the usual place of abode of the said Arthur Francis, at the time of entering the said judgment, was, and still is, at Ashbrook-terrace, in the County of Dublin, aforesaid." In a subsequent part of the affidavit, it was stated that the said Arthur Francis was seized and possessed, &c., of premises situate in the parish of St. Nicholas Without, and County of the City of Dublin, consisting of the houses and premises known as Nos. 4, 5, 6, and 7, Ashbrook-terrace." An objection was also taken to the description of the plaintiff in the affidavit, which was as follows:—"Deponent saith that the name of the deponent, John Thomas Hinds, the plaintiff in the said cause, and in the title hereof, and who recovered the said judgment, was, at the time of entering the said judgment, and still is, the proper name of deponent." Mr. Hinds, in an affidavit made to resist the objections, stated "that Ashbrook-terrace is in the parish of St. Nicholas Without, and in the County of the City of Dublin, and that Dublin is a County of a City, and that there is no second Ashbrook-terrace in the County of the City of Dublin."

DOBBS, J., said that he had had many of these questions before him, and many of them had been taken to the Court of Appeal; that he never could understand the reason of one-half of the decisions made with respect to these judgment mortgages, and he determined to abide by this rule, that he never would hold an affidavit invalid, upon technical grounds of this nature, unless the party objecting was able to show a decided case in which exactly the same objection had prevailed, that there would be force in the objection respecting Ashbrook-terrace, if it had not been admitted there was only one Ashbrook-terrace either in the County or the City of Dublin; that no person could be misled by the description; that upon the other point, he had some doubts, it being absolutely necessary, according to the authorities that there should be in the affidavit a distinct averment as to the names of both plaintiff and defendant; that no case had been cited going so far as to invalidate the registry of an affidavit for the reason alleged against this part of this affidavit, and he would not hold it to be badly registered; that the word "of" governed the whole sentence, and it could be made out from it, in strict grammatical English, that the name of the plaintiff was the name of the deponent, and, if so, the name of the deponent must be the name of the plaintiff.

In re The Estate of the Trustees of the Will of ROBERT HILL, deceased, Owners; SAMUEL HILL, Petitioner.

Nov. 28.—Staying of Proceedings—Payment of Incumbrance.

This was a motion on behalf of the owners, and of persons having a reversionary interest in the lands ordered to be sold in this matter, that upon a lodgment by the owners in this Court of the amount due to the petitioner for principal and interest in respect of his demand, and a sufficient sum to cover his taxed costs, the petitioner might be directed to execute to the owners, or to the persons having the reversionary interest, an assignment of his judgment mortgage, the same to stand as a security for the annual interest, during the petitioner's life, and of so much of the principal money due to him as should be advanced by the persons having the reversionary interest over and above the personal assets of Robert Hill, or that the petitioner be directed to take such steps as to the Court should seem fit to indemnify the persons having the reversionary interest against the payment of the portion of the interest during the petitioner's life, which the petitioner was himself liable to pay, and that, in the meantime, upon such lodgment, further proceedings in this matter should be stayed.

Robert Hill, being owner in fee of the lands ordered to be sold in this matter, by his will devised them to Samuel Hill for life, remainder to his two nephews in fee. At the time of the testator's death Samuel Hill was the owner of a judgment mortgage which affected the inheritance, and upon foot of this incumbrance he soon afterwards presented a petition in the Landed Estates' Court for a sale of the fee-simple estate in the lands. The order for sale had been made absolute.

Falkiner, Q.C., in support of the motion. It is a well-established principle that a Court of Equity, upon payment of a charge and costs, will compel an assignment of such charge by the creditor, and will also stay the proceedings to a sale.

Randal M'Donnell, for the petitioner. The contention on the part of the remaindermen would be well grounded if the tenant for life and the creditor were not, as in this instance, the same person. Through this circumstance the creditor has two valuable advantages which he would not otherwise possess, and for which this notice of motion offers him no equivalent. 1. He can have a sale of the life estate along with the estate in remainder, and therefore he can have the former sold at a smaller cost than if sold alone, inasmuch as the costs of sale will be borne rateably by the life estate and by the estate in remainder. 2. He can prevent any one else from selling his life estate without his consent, as there is no other incumbrancer. It is not just to the petitioner to deprive him of these advantages, without giving him an equivalent, especially since they flow from the testator's gift, from which the remaindermen, who claim under the same title, have no right to derogate.

LYNCH, J.—I cannot recognize these equities, or let them interfere with those of the remaindermen. I will direct the life estate and the estate in remainder to be valued, and that the remaindermen pay to the tenant for life so much of the debt as should be set opposite to the estate in remainder, together with his costs. The petitioner, however, was entitled to appear and oppose the motion, and must have his costs of doing so paid with the other costs.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Re JOHN DALTON.

December, 1867.—Bill of Sale—Obtaining Bail Rule—Lodging in Court Proceeds of Property sold under a Bill of Sale after the Assignees got Possession.

The insolvent had dealings with a factor named Kappock, and, having become indebted to him, he assigned to him, under a bill of sale, nearly all his property, consisting of horses, carts, and farming utensils. Kappock took possession of the property, and soon after the insolvent was arrested and put into prison. After the imprisonment Kappock sold the property by auction, and when the insolvent applied for a bail rule, Bloomfield, solicitor, attended for a creditor named Joyce, and objected to the bail passing, unless the proceeds of the auction were brought in, and lodged in court. The 339 section provides that where any insolvent shall have executed any warrant of attorney to confess judgment, or shall have given any cognovit actionem or bill of sale, whether for a valuable consideration or otherwise, no person shall, after the commencement of the imprisonment of such prisoner, avail himself of any execution issued upon any judgment obtained, or to be obtained upon such warrant of attorney, either by seizure or sale of the property of such prisoner, or any part thereof. Upon looking at this section, the Court directed the money in the hands of Kappock's auctioneer to be brought in, and lodged in court before a bail rule would issue. The insolvent now came up to be discharged, and Kernan, Q.C., applied, on the part of Kappock, to have the money given back to the auctioneer—it was wholly irregular to call upon Kappock's auctioneer to lodge the money which was absolutely his own—he had taken possession of the assigned property ten days before the insolvent was imprisoned—it was his absolutely; and although the 339 section might give a right to the assignees to bring an action if they thought proper, it gave no right whatever to the Court to direct the money to be brought in, and lodged, and if it were not returned, Kappock would bring an action against Mr. Dillon, the auctioneer, and make him pay it over again.

JUDGE MILLER said he believed it was the practice where there was a sale after the imprisonment of the insolvent, not to grant a bail rule until after the proceeds were brought into court. However, as Mr. Bloomfield, for the detaining creditor, offered no opposition, he would direct the money to be paid back, and would discharge the insolvent.

In re AN ARRANGING TRADER.

December 19, 1867.—Practice—Security for Payment of Composition.

In this case a composition was proposed, and certain parties entered into an undertaking to pay some of the instalments, which undertaking was filed in Court according to the usual practice. The sureties having failed to pay in pursuance of the undertaking,

Perry applied for an attachment against the party for not carrying out the undertaking.

Judge MILLER said it was a mistake to suppose that the Court had power to compel sureties, either by attachment or otherwise, to pay the amount of the instalments which they had undertaken to pay. It was a contract, not between the Court and the sureties, but between the sureties and the creditors of the arranging trader. The Court, therefore, could not interfere, but must leave the creditors to their remedy against the parties who had made themselves liable.

Re SHAW & Co.

December, 1867.—Petition for Adjudication by Trader against himself after the execution of a Trust Deed—Arrangement after Bankruptcy.

The bankrupts were wine merchants in Belfast, and assigned all their property in trust for the benefit of creditors, but the trustees did not take possession of the property, and allowed it to remain in the order and disposition of the traders who came in and obtained an adjudication upon their own petition.

Oldham, solicitor for creditors, contended that the bankruptcy was null and void; the schedule to the statute stated that the bankrupt should show the court that he had property to the amount of fifty pounds at least ready to be given up to the court.

Lynch said that cause might have been shown against the adjudication; that was not done, and now the bankruptcy should stand; besides, the bankrupt was about to enter into an arrangement under the 149 section, to which the creditors would assent; it was therefore for their advantage that the bankruptcy should stand. The adjudication was allowed to remain undisturbed.

FIRE AT THE FOUR COURTS.

Great excitement was occasioned yesterday morning by the announcement that the north-eastern wing of the Four Courts was on fire, and that a large quantity of valuable documents had been consumed. At twenty-five minutes past seven o'clock Mr. James Reid and Mr. Matthew Kennedy, and Police-constable 20 D, observed smoke breaking from the new buildings at the north-eastern angle, near the recently erected Bankrupt Court. They proceeded at once to Winetavern-street and gave the alarm to the Fire Brigade. In the meantime Mordon, foreman carpenter of the Board of Works, got the men employed on the premises together, and by means of water obtained with much difficulty, owing to the volumes of pungent smoke issuing from burning papers, they succeeded in keeping the flames in check until the Fire Brigade, under the direction of Captain Ingram, came up, at 7.50 a.m. No time was lost in getting the steam and No. 3 engines to work, with water supplied under the direction of Mr. Crofton. It was found that the fire had originated in the office of Master Gibson, at the fire-place, and had extended into the Chancery General Taxing Office, and through the flooring into Master Litton's office. After much hard work the flames were got under at twenty minutes past eight o'clock, and were finally extinguished soon after, but not until all the furniture in the three apartments, as well as a vast quantity of valuable documents, were destroyed. Large numbers of important papers, &c., were rescued from the flames, but we fear great loss has been sustained. A brief bag filled with title deeds, left yesterday by a gentieman, has been consumed, and nothing remains of it or its contents but the calcined iron framework, lock, and clasp. The real cause of the fire has not been clearly ascertained, but it is supposed that the care-taker, in raking out the grate in Master Gibson's office on Thursday evening, permitted some of the red cinders to fall under the hearth rug, and the fire having ignited some of the turf sods, of which the partitions of the office were lined, led to the burning which we hope will turn out not to have been attended with the disastrous consequences that is now supposed. Master Coffey's office and the rooms adjoining escaped uninjured. A large number of the police, under the direction of Mr. Superintendent Howe and Inspector Hoxey, was present during the fire.

(From the Law Times.)

MODERN LAW-MAKING.

The Statute-book, it has often been said, is a disgrace to the law of England, and there can be no doubt that there are many Acts of Parliament which are a disgrace even to that statute-book. This state of things may unquestionably be attributed in a great degree to the slovenly and piecemeal system of legislation which we so persistently pursue. Instead, when a law is found to require alteration or amendment, of repealing it entirely, and of re-enacting that portion of it which it is desired to retain, together with the new provisions which are intended to effect the required alteration or amendment, we allow the old law to remain almost, if not entirely, as it stood before, repealing only some part of it, or it may be even no part of it at all, and then add new provisions to the old, which, except so far as they may repeal, or may be inconsistent with the tenor of the latter, are directed to be construed as one with them. The amount of utterly useless matter which is thus accumulated, and the amount of confusion, vexation, inconvenience, and expense which is thus occasioned, are too well-known to every lawyer, and indeed, to most of the public at large, to need any lengthened comments. It is not, however, to our system of legislation alone, bad as it undoubtedly is, that this state of things is to be attributed. The carelessness, and even the ignorance, of the draftsmen to whom the drawing the Bills is entrusted, as well as of those persons whose duty it is to correct and revise them during their passage through Parliament, have to bear by no means a small share of the blame. That such a state of things should have been so long allowed to continue, is certainly nothing short of disgraceful. That the evil of which we speak is not imaginary, and that it demands an early and an effective remedy, a glance at the volume of statutes for the present year, which fully maintains the reputation gained by its predecessors, will readily show. Let us turn in the first place to the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 121, which the Act itself declares is to be cited for all purposes as "The Annual Turnpike Acts Continuance Act, 1867." Looking at this title any person would at once conclude, and, we think, most reasonably so, that the Act was one which only made provision for the further continuance of certain Acts relating to turnpike roads, which Acts, but for its being passed to continue their operation, would shortly expire. He would not, we imagine, expect to find that the Act not only continues certain turnpike Acts, but also makes several important amendments in the law relating to turnpike trusts. This is, however, in reality the case, for, on turning to the second part of the Act, we find such provisions as the following, that "no trustee or commissioner of any turnpike road shall be liable to any penalty or forfeiture by reason of his being a proprietor or holder of a share in any gas company or water company which contracts with the trustees or commissioners of such turnpike roads for the supply of gas or water for the purposes of such road or of the toll-houses thereon;" that "the trustees or commissioners of a turnpike road, which shall hereafter become an ordinary highway, shall, as soon as may be after the expiration of their trusts, distribute the balance of any moneys remaining in their hands amongst the parishes upon which will fall the liability to repair the roads of such trust, in proportion to the mileage of such roads in each parish, or, if such road shall be situated in any highway district or highway districts, then the trustees shall pay over such balance to the treasurer or treasurers of such highway district or highway districts, in proportion to the mileage of such road in each such highway district, to be distributed in manner aforesaid;" and that, "from and after the passing of the Act, no driver of any waggon or cart of any kind shall be liable to any penalty for riding upon such carriage in any turnpike road, provided such driver shall not ride upon the shafts of such carriage, but shall carefully drive such carriage by means of reins held in his hands, such reins being attached to every horse drawing the same;" together with other provisions relating to any excess by ratepayers to the accounts of the trust, where the repairs are borne by the parish, and to the auditing of the accounts in certain cases. The likelihood of such provisions as these being overlooked when contained in such an Act, and under such a title, is obvious, and there cannot be any doubt that they ought properly to have been formed into a separate Act, with a title which should clearly indicate their nature, a thing which the title at the head of the Act in question does not do, although it differs somewhat by making mention of "further provisions," from the "short title" prescribed in its last section. Let us turn again to The County Courts Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 142). The 9th section of that Act provides that the jurisdiction given by the 28 & 29 Vict c. 99 (The County Courts Equitable Jurisdiction Act), so far as relates to cases coming within the fourth head of the 1st section of that Act, may, from and after the passing of the first mentioned Act, be exercised in all suits for specific performance of, or for the reforming, delivering up, or cancelling of any agreement for the sale, purchase, or lease of any property where, in the case of sale or purchase, the purchase money, or, in the case of a lease, the value of the property, shall not exceed £500. The 33rd section of the Act, however, declares that "the several enactments specified in schedule (C) to this Act annexed are hereby repealed," and on referring to schedule (C) we find among the enactments there enumerated the 28 & 29 Vict. c. 99, which is declared to be repealed as regards the fourth head of suits and matters mentioned in the first section; the very portion of the Act, the operation of which is extended by the 9th section of the same Act, so that the Legislature is made to extend the operation of a certain provision in one part of an Act, and to repeal the very provision so extended in another.

Again, by the 36th section of the same Act it is declared that the Act shall come into operation on the 1st January, next, the section being, no doubt, intended to apply to the whole of the Act; but, notwithstanding this, in several sections (see secs. 5, 9, 28) words referring to the time of the passing of the Act have been allowed to remain, thus giving rise to the question whether those sections are already in force or whether they will not be so until the time prescribed by the 36th section. Take also Lord St. Leonard's Act for amending the Law of Auctions of Estates (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48). The 3rd section of the Act contains a somewhat elaborate definition of the term "agent," but on searching for that term in the Act, it will be found that it does not even once occur in it.

Take, again the Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102). Amongst other blunders, it will be found that the 43rd section of that Act makes certain provisions as to polling at a contested election of a "member or members" for the University of London, although the 24th section expressly provides that in all future Parliaments that University shall return one member; and that in the 61st section the word month is defined to mean calendar month, although the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4, which is an Act to shorten the language commonly used in Acts of Parliament declares that, in all Acts passed after the date of its commencement the word month shall have that meaning, unless words are added expressly showing lunar month to have been intended. We will not, however, multiply examples. Those which we have given from this one volume of statutes will not only sufficiently show the nature of the evil of which we have been speaking, but also make it clear that it is quite time that it should be effectually removed. Until this is done the labours of the Law Digest Commissioners, and of those who may be appointed under them, will, to a great extent be rendered useless, as the statute book will be continually introducing confusion where they are endeavouring to establish order, and continually adding new matter to the pile of rubbish which it will be their great object to clear away. It may, no doubt, be said that the present state of things produces work for the lawyers; and this, to some extent, is perhaps true enough; but a vast amount of the confusion and doubt, which now arises from Legislative enactments is as perplexing and injurious to the lawyer as it is to any member of the general public; and we feel sure that no lawyer who rightly appreciates the character and position of his profession, would desire that the evil which we have here noticed should be allowed to continue, for the mere reason that some additional amount of litigation may be caused by its existence. No human care or foresight can render an Act of Parliament so perfect that no question can arise under it, or in connexion with it; and were the evils in question to be at once swept away, we do not believe that the Legal Profession would be at all injuriously affected by the change, but that it would, in common with the public at large, derive a substantial benefit.

WHAT IS A SIGNATURE?

The question, "What is a signature?" is one which, since the decision given by the Court of Common Pleas the other day in the case of Bennett v. Brumfitt, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 213, may well be asked, but to which that decision renders it by no means easy to find an answer. The case alluded to was an appeal from the decision of the revising barrister for the borough of Liverpool. It appeared that the name of Frederick Caple, who was on the list of voters for that borough, had, together with the names of more than a hundred other persons, been objected to; and that the notice of objection bore the name of William Brumfitt at the foot of it as the objector.

It also appeared that the usual signature of the objector had been engraved in fac simile on a stamp, and that the objector himself had by his own hand impressed this stamp upon the notice of objection. It was contended on the part of the voter that this was not a sufficient signature within the meaning of the 17th section of the Registration Act (6 Vict., c. 18), which enacts that "every notice of objection shall be signed by the person objecting." The revising barrister, however, ruled that it was, but stated a case for the opinion of the court, and the court held that his decision was correct, on the ground that the mode of signature adopted would have been sufficient under the Statute of Frauds and under the Wills Act, and affirmed it, with costs.

This is certainly a most startling decision; and the words of Chief Justice Bovill, in delivering his judgment, are no less startling. "The signature," said the learned Judge, "in every case was made, not by the hand alone, but by some instrument. It was written either with a pen, a pencil, or a brush, and he could see no distinction between using a stamp by the personal hand of the maker of the signature and using a pen, or a pencil, or a paint brush. If written with a pencil, it could not be contended not to be his signature, and so if written with a paint brush. It was the act of the party, and to his (the Chief Justice's) mind was his signature." This idea of a signature is undoubtedly novel. We have always understood, and most other persons have, we imagine, done the same, that a signature meant the name of a person written and subscribed by himself. Cases have, no doubt, occurred in which the affixing a person's name to a document by other means than his actual handwriting has been held to be a sufficient signing to satisfy the terms of a statute, and as such the Statute of Frauds, or the Wills Act, under the former of which a printed name even has been held to be a sufficient signature, if recognized by or brought home to the party as having been printed by his authority: (Sanderson v. Jackson, 2 B. & P. 238; Schneider v. Norris, 2 M. & S. 286.) It should, however, be carefully borne in mind that these Acts were passed with objects very different from that which the Legislature had in view in passing the Registration Act, and that they are not therefore to be construed in precisely the same way, although the terms made use of in them may sometimes be identical, the intention of the Legislature being, in construing a statute, the principal thing to which effect is to be given. The impropriety of construing one statute by the light of another, upon an entirely different subject cannot be doubted, and was strongly remarked upon with regard to the Registration and Reform Acts, by Maule, J., in the case of Dewhurst v. Fielder, 7 M. & G. 182, where it was sought to be shown by a reference to the cases decided under the Tenement Acts (59 Geo. III., c. 50; 6 Geo. IV., c. 57), that two distinct buildings might be joined together in order to constitute a right to be registered as a borough voter under the 2 Will. IV., c. 45, s. 27. In that case the learned Judge whose name has just been mentioned, in delivering his judgment said: "I think we should not in these appeals involve ourselves with the decisions on settlement cases. We ought to be spared discussion upon the Tenements Acts, which are not at all upon the same subject as the Reform and Registration Acts. The same reasons are, therefore, not applicable in the construction of them. In the present case the plain words of the Act ought to prevail." If cases decided under the Tenements Acts could not with propriety be referred to for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the Registration and Reform Acts, we certainly entirely fail to see how cases decided under the Statute of Frauds and the Wills Act could be referred to for the purpose of construing that portion of the section of the statute the meaning of which was involved in the case which we are now considering. The object of the Statute of Frauds was "to prevent matters of importance from resting on the frail testimony of memory alone." Such being the object of that statute, some indulgence has undoubtedly been shown in the construction which has from time to time been put upon its requirements with respect to the signing of documents—certainty with respect to the terms of a transaction, and not so much the signature of the document containing them, being regarded as the principal aim of the Legislature. A still greater indulgence has been shown with respect to the requirements of the Wills Act as to the signing of wills. But this has arisen from the disfavour with which the law regards intestacy. Neither the cases under the former nor the cases under the latter of these statutes appear to us to be at all analogous to the present. The object of the provision of the 17th section of the Registration Act requiring a notice of objection to be signed by the objector was clearly to prevent, as far as possible, frivolous objections, by affording the person objected to every opportunity of identifying the objector, one means of doing which would, of course, be the seeing his handwriting. But it appears to us that the decision of the court in this case is eminently calculated to foster the very mischief which it was the great aim of the statute to prevent. For, if the stamping the objector's name on a notice of objection by means of a stamp engraved in fac simile is a good signature, it must undoubtedly follow, for the reason given as the basis of tho judgment, that the printing the name would be sufficient. How easily voters may be most wantonly harrassed if such is the case it does not require any second sight to see. It has long since been decided that a notice of objection must be signed in the handwriting of the person objecting, and that the signing his name by another person, although done in his presence, and by his direction, is not sufficient: (Toms v. Cuming, 7 M. & G. 88; Lutw. 200.) The words of Maule, J., in delivering his judgment in the case referred to, are so forcible, and make the object and meaning of the statute so clear, that we cannot refrain from quoting them. "That the signature," he says, "required by the 17th section of the statute 6 Vict., c. 18, is a signature by the hand of the party objecting is, I think, deducible both from the words of that section and from the object and intention of the statute. The form prescribed by sect. 17 shows that the name and place of abode of the objector are to be at the bottom of the notice, and the section itself says that 'the notice of objection shall be signed by the person objecting.' That, I apprehend, does not mean some one different from the objector but the objector himself. The provision that the notice shall be signed by the party objecting requires something more than giving the true name of the objector at the foot of the notice. Then, if the intention of the statute is considered, the reason for such a provision is self-apparent. Cases would otherwise frequently happen in which a great number of notices of objection might be sent by post, and all the persons so objected to would be bound to attend the court and defend their votes, but would find nobody to support the objections. Then, when they came to look for the objector, it might turn out that the party whose name was at the bottom of the notice never authorized it to be placed there. It was the object of the statute to prevent such occurrences, and, therefore, the notice of objection must be signed by the hand of the person objecting." So Erle, J.: "Particular care," he says, "seems to have been taken in the statute to express the intention of the Legislature that the signature to a notice of objection shall be in the handwriting of the objector. That appears from the terms used in the 7th as well as in the 17th section." If the evils so clearly pointed out by Mr. Justice Maule would so frequently occur, and be so great, were the signature to the notice of objection permitted to be made by an authorized agent instead of by the objector himself, it cannot, we think, be doubted that they will be equally frequent and equally great if that signature is permitted to be made by a stamp, even though it be a fac simile, as there is no peculiar efficacy in the employment of the objector's hand unless the peculiarities of his handwriting are thereby made apparent. This, even a fac simile stamp, would not do, as nothing is more variable than handwriting, and that which may pretty well represent a person's handwriting at one time will not do so at another. If the decision in this case of Bennett v. Brumfitt is right, it would seem that the ancient rule of giving to all the words of a statute their plain and ordinary meaning, unless such a construction would lead to absurdity or injustice, can no longer be applied with any degree of safety as to the result, and that words which have, from their origin, meant one thing, must now be understood to mean quite another—that signing must be taken to mean not writing your name only, but printing it, or stamping it, or lithographing it, or even painting it with a paint brush, and handwriting to mean a fac simile of handwriting or any other representation of it which a man's fancy may lead him to adopt.

The decision is one which, we do not hesitate to say, appears to us to be calculated to work the greatest mischief, not merely with respect to the operation of the particular statute under which it was given, but also generally. As it is not, however, rendered so far final and conclusive by the 6 Vict., c. 18, s. 66, as to prevent the same point from being again raised (Roberts v. Percival, 34 L. J. 84, C. P.; 18 C. B., N. S., 36), we hope that the court will be afforded another opportunity of considering it, and that a construction more in accordance with the object of the statute will then be placed upon the enactment in question.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

PROBATE PRACTICE.—Before a plea that the testator did not intend the alleged testamentary instrument to operate as his will can be put on the record, leave must first be obtained from the judge; but it is not necessary to furnish particulars under such plea: Harrison v. Kirby, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 152. Prob.)

PRACTICE—INTEREST ON DEBTS.—An order was made on Nov. 11, 1862, allowing interest on simple contract debts from the date of the winding-up order. This has since been held to be invalid, not being authorized by the Companies Act. But it is not the less a matter of justice, and ought to be sanctioned by the Legislature. Why was it overlooked by Mr. Walker's committee, and in the Amendment Act of last session? (Re The Herefordshire Banking Company, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 58. M. R.)

COLLEGE LEASE OF A MANOR—RIGHT TO FORFEITURES—COPYHOLDS.—A college demised "all lands, quit rents, waifs, and other appurtenances, and all rights and privileges, profits, emoluments, and appurtenances in respect of the game (except all courts and perquisites of courts, fines, amerciaments, escheats, and all profits, &c., growing and arising by virtue of the privileges of the college): Held, that in enfranchising the copyholds, that part of the money representing "forfeitures" belonged to the college, as included in exception in the lease: (Ex parte Deane, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 100. V. C. M.)

WILL—FOFEITURE—BANKRUPTCY.—B. gave property to trustees to be divided into as many equal parts as he had sons and daughters, upon trust, as to the daughters' shares, to pay the income to them for life, and to their husbands if they survived them, "until he should become bankrupt or" insolvent; and on his decease or bankruptcy or insolvency, then to the children. There was an only daughter who predeceased her husband, leaving one child, and he, as member of a firm, executed an inspectorship-deed, which was registered under the B.A. 1861: It was held not to create a forfeiture, such deed not being within the terms of the devise: (Montefiore v. Enthoven, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 114. V. C. Malins.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—RECTIFICATION OF CONVEYANCE.—The court will rectify a conveyance of lands where a clear case of mistake on the part of the vendor is made out, but will give to the other party the option of giving up the purchase or taking the conveyance intended by the vendor: (Harris v. Pepperell, 17, L. T. Rep. N. S. 191. M. R.)

THE LAW DIGEST COMMISSION.

(Press and St. James's Chronicle.)

The letter recently issued by this body has, at all events, the merit of being an excellent preparative. There are, in all probability, few subjects on which so many unsubstantial expectations are placed as on the proposed legal digest. The non-legal part of the nation seem hopeful in a very close proportion to their ignorance of the subject. The most popular idea seems to be that at some time or other the whole mass of English law will be codified in a form that will leave all duties plain, all rights easily ascertainable, and all the lawyers without employment. Nor is this vagueness at all wonderful, if the extreme elasticity of the term under discussion be considered. "Digest" may mean almost anything. Blackstone's "Commentaries" are a digest. So is the "Cabinet Lawyer," or "Smith's Manual," "Petersdorf's Abridgment" in six volumes, "Viner's Abridgment" in twenty, the "Institutes" of Justinian, and the "Corpus Juris" are all digests of one sort or another. Probably the proposed arrangement of our laws will be very much larger than the largest of those mentioned. If it is to be a work of judicial and binding authority, and not a mere aid to practitioners and students, it must be a formidable library in itself. It can only be of use to clients by simplifying the work of the lawyers. It may cheapen law as improved machinery cheapens manufactures, by giving a better or more reliable article for the purchase-money. But though that will be all, it is so very much less than what is expected that some little disenchantment has become desirable. And it is not the fault of the Digest Commissioners if they have not, at all events, rendered the public that service. Their latest announcement is, from beginning to end, emphatically tentative. They now propose to prepare what they call "specimen digests." Each of these is to be prepared by one or more barristers; but before any gentleman can enter on this duty he must give a "specimen" of his own capacity. He must send in by next Hilary Term a general summary in an analytical form of the law, either of "Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes, Bank Notes, and Cheques," of "Mortgage and Lien," or of "Rights of Way, Water, and other Easements and Servitudes." If this preliminary experiment should give satisfaction he will then become qualified to assist at what may be called the substantial experiment. As the time allowed for the introductory effect is only two months, and as to do satisfactorily in that time the thing required is simply impossible, the proposal suggests very powerfully the difficulties under which the commissioners must be labouring. It would be unfair to suspect them of only affecting to throw open certain important functions to general competition. Their expedient is much more probably that of men who do not know when, or where, or how to begin. A great mistake is made by those who imagine that because Roman law was codified in three years, English law can be settled in the same manner. Roman law was systematic almost from the beginning. Justinian's achievement was founded partly on the code of Theodosius, which itself was founded on earlier codes, and partly on the writings of the jurists—a body for whom we have no equivalent. The earlier compilations had been varied and departed from — just as Justinian's work began to be improved upon immediately after its completion; but still there was the scaffolding of a system on which to build anew. English law, though containing many importations, from a more scientific method is, on the whole, a spontaneous production. Whether it has worked better or worse than its rivals is a question on which many people differ. The opinion of English lawyers, who, if they may be prejudiced, are also experienced, is, that our system will bear comparison with any. That point, however, is no longer at issue. It has been decided that English law shall be "digested," or "codified," or whatever may be the best term to express, being brought into a form which shall contain all legal rules, however derived, with no contradictions and as few doubts as possible. This being the case, it is as well to remember that our corpus juris is a body without form—"a shape that shape has none." The Commissioners have no old lines on which to build, and the obvious hesitation with which they are feeling their way shows their difficulty. This revelation will no doubt depress those who, though pretty well aware that our jurisprudence is like the heap of flax which the Princess had to spin into thread before morning, expect a commission to play the part of Rumplestiltskin. But caution promises more than pretension, and caution in persons from whom miracles are expected can hardly be displayed early enough to prevent disappointment.

THE PROPORTION OF FEMALE CRIME.—In the gravest cases of crime France shows 17 per cent. female, and 18 per cent. male criminals. An interval of forty years of observation since 1825 has made no change in this fundamental relation; and the same mean, 17 per cent., has likewise been confirmed in Baden. In England and Prussia, on the other hand, the per centage is considerably to the disadvantage of women as compared with that in France. In America, the latest tables, ending September, 1866, show an enormous preponderance in favour of women under the heading of every crime. Crimes against the person, as murder and bodily injuries, have their source most frequently in passion; those against property, as fraud and robbery, more frequently in motives of self-interest. In the gravest class of crime, that directed against the person, the number diminishes to 15 per cent. Of the special acts in this category, half are cases of infanticide and similar cases in which women are usually concerned. In London this crime alone is rated at 1,200 yearly. Leaving infanticide out of the question, the sum total of cases of manslaughter and murder gives to women only 13 per cent. Some specialties under this head show a higher per centage, as murder of father or husband, 25; poisoning, 43. But if we take into consideration that women, in the performance of their domestic duties, and in the preparation of food, have twenty times more opportunity of administering poison than men, the proportion of 43 per cent. is by no means striking. Moreover the women who preside over their own hearths or cook for others, having the elementary substances at their disposal, comparatively seldom abuse the power entrusted to them. The figure 20 gives the per-centage for arson among women. The criminal statistics likewise contradict many traditional opinions unfavourable to women. In the Middle Ages female testimony in the Courts was considered untrustworthy. We find, however, that of 100 cases of false witness, only 25 belong to women. In 1,000 cases of injury or slander, a similar number of petty larceny, of vagrancy, of fraud, and of assault, we find the relative numbers of female offenders as follows:—276, 270, 226, 202, 122. Again, for religious transgressions and contempt of court, the figures are 1[illegible]3 and 95 in 1,000 cases. The latest returns from America supply a confirmation almost point for point, and are upon the whole even more favourable to women. In a total of 805 crimes against the person, only 98 are by females; in a total of 2,035 crimes against property, 278 are by females; in a total of 3,467 crimes against public order and decency, 900 are by females. Under debt we find 59 cases of men, and not one of the other sex; under malicious mischief, 49 males and six females.—The Chronicle.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RESIDENT MAGISTRATES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL."

SIR,—The question—who are the best qualified persons for the office of resident magistrates—is one of peculiar importance to the legal profession, and, indeed, to the general public. I therefore trust that you will allow the subject to be ventilated in the IRISH LAW TIMES, as that paper has now established itself as the acknowledged mouthpiece of the lawyers in Ireland. It appears to me that a plan which has been discussed lately, of making Justices of the Peace Resident Magistrates, will not conduce to the public advantage, as, in addition to the extensive knowledge of law requisite, I think there should always be at least one magistrate on the Bench who is not connected with the locality and its population by interest and sympathy.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

A SUBSCRIBER.

[We intend treating the subject of Resident Magistrates editorially in an early number, and meanwhile we shall be happy to open our columns to any discussion relating to the legal interests of Ireland, but we are obliged from press of matter to curtail our correspondent's letter on the present occasion.—ED. I. L. T. AND S. J.]

REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS.

The New Chancery Practice, under the Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867 (30*th* & 31*st Vic., cap.* 44), containing Practical Directions and Information respecting the various Proceedings in a Chancery Suit, and the Statute and General Orders fully annotated with the English Act and Orders, together with numerous Forms and Precedents, and a Chancery Time Table. By HENRY T. DIX, Esq., Solicitor. Dublin: King, Publisher and Law Stationer, 36, Upper Ormond-quay. 1867.

IN a former number we expressed our hope that Mr. Dix's work on the New Chancery Practice would be given to the profession with as little delay as possible: it has now appeared, and we must say more than fulfils the expectations which were entertained of it. Mr. Dix gives in the smallest possible compass, consistently with clearness, an accurate statement of the practice and procedure of the Court of Chancery, under the new Act and Orders. The object of the Act and Orders being to effect a complete assimilation between the equity systems of both countries, practitioners were under the impression that all the English books of practice would be at once available for their guidance, but no one in anything like full business could hope to be able (from the ponderous volumes on the English practice) at once to sketch out for himself an outline of the points of practice and procedure which are necessary to be constantly borne in mind. "Mr. Ayckbourne's Chancery Practice" is the only English work we know which would have been at all likely to meet the requirements of the professions in this respect. It would be idle for us to give a full analysis of Mr. Dix's book, as it must be in the hands of every member of the profession who desires to become practically familiar with the new system. The object of the book is best expressed in the words of the author:—"In the following pages I have endeavoured to supply all necessary information respecting the various steps in a Chancery suit under the new system, referring to the Statute and General Orders which govern such proceedings, and to decisions which have settled the practice of the court in England on the points in connexion with which they are quoted. In the appendix I have given the statute with the sections of the corresponding English Acts noted in the margin, and also a copy of the recent General Orders similarly noted with respect to the English Orders. The appendix also contains a number of forms and precedents which I trust will prove useful to my professional brethren, and a Chancery time table which I think they will find convenient for reference."

Mr. Dix wished for greater leisure to accomplish this design, but yielding to a desire to meet the immediate want, which was generally felt, of some guide to the new procedure, we are glad to say was induced no longer to defer the publication of his most valuable little volume. The portion of the work eminently useful to solicitors is that part which is devoted to the consideration of proceedings in chamber, as to which, up to the present time, every one seems to have been utterly in the dark. Mr. Dix has brought to the performance of this difficult task the great advantage of an experience gained by personal attendance in the Chief Clerk's and other offices of the Court of Chancery in England. He has also had the benefit of much valuable information from Mr. Biddle of the English Rolls Office, whose services are eminently perceptible in the last edition of "Daniel's Chancery Practice." Mr. Dix, fully alive to the requirements of his professional brethren, has added (arranged in the order of proceedings in a suit), a table, showing the time within which each successive step must be taken; these, with a copious and carefully prepared index, form a volume which reflects great credit upon the research, the skill, and accuracy of its author.

UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE.

The election of a Chancellor of the University of Dublin, in the room of the late Earl of Rosse, took place yesterday, in the Examination Hall of Trinity College. The Vice-Chancellor, Sir Joseph Napier, Bart., presided, and opened the proceedings by stating the object of their assembling. The learned gentleman enumerated the many distinguished qualities which had marked those who had been Chancellors of the University, and none more than the late lamented Earl of Rosse. He said there were now three noblemen in nomination, Lord Rosse (son of the late Chancellor), Lord Monck, and Lord Cairns. After some remarks by Mr. Galbraith, F.T.C.D., the voting was proceeded with, the result of which gave Lord Cairns 35 votes, Lord Rosse 1, and Lord Monck 0.

The Vice-Chancellor then declared Lord Justice Cairns duly elected Chancellor of the University.

(Before Judge BATTERSBY.)

MILLS v. CRAIG.

This was a suit at the instance of the Rev. Thomas Mills, incumbent of the parish of St. Jude, to restrain the Rev. H. T. Craig from officiating in the chapel of Richmond Barracks without his permission.

Dr Stoddart stated the case on behalf of the petitioner. On the 29th October, 1861, he was duly licensed as incumbent, and perpetual curate of St. Jude's, and still holds that position. About eight years previous to the commencement of the present suit a chapel was built in Richmond Barracks. This chapel being within the parish of St. Jude's no clergyman was entitled to perform religious offices in it without his (petitioner's) consent. Notwithstanding this, on several days in the present year the respondent, by virtue of his office as military chaplain, officiated, and still does officiate, had prayers to soldiers and their wives, and to others of the petitioner's parishioners. Respondent also visits the sick, administers the Sacrament, and prepares for confirmation. The respondent, besides, not only performs these offices for soldiers but for others of the parishioners of the petitioner, for he causes a bell to be rung to summon people to Divine service, and otherwise invites the attendance of parishioners of the petitioners. The respondent pleaded that he was a military chaplain. He was gazetted on the 19th January, and ordered to go to Dublin, and, in accordance with such order, respondent did so. He was accordingly bound to perform Divine service for the soldiers committed to his charge. He is not aware whether any of petitioner's congregation attended the chapel in Richmond Barracks, but he never used any means to induce them to do so, and those that had attended, if any, did so voluntarily, and it was not in the power of respondent to prevent them.

Mr. Stoddart submitted that according to the general rule of law respondent had no right to interfere with any of petitioner's parishioners. He quoted an opinion from "Burn's Ecclesiastical Law," which supported his views. There is no general principle of ecclesiastical law more firmly established than that it is not competent for any other clergyman to officiate in any church within the limits of an incumbent's parish without his permission. He (counsel) intended to produce witnesses to prove that the respondent had induced parishioners of St. Jude's to attend his chapel at Richmond Barracks; and it was a remarkable fact that in only three or four cases in Ireland did any person deprive the incumbent, whoever he might be, of his right to act as chaplain to the forces stationed in his parish.

Dr. Ball, Q.C., opened the case of the Rev. Mr. Craig, who, he said, had been appointed army chaplain under a commission signed by the Secretary of State for War, and by virtue of that commission he was bound to obey his superior officer as to the duties imposed on him as such chaplain.

The Rev. Mr- Craig was examined by Dr. Todd.—He deposed that he had received his commission as an army chaplain, that he had acted in that capacity at Aldershot, and that he came over to this country in the beginning of this year, and reported himself to the Assistant Adjutant-General, from whom he receives his instructions as to his duties. He was asked whether he had ever induced any of the parishioners of St. Jude's to attend Divine service at the church attached to Richmond Barracks, and he stated that he never did so, and that he always informed the wives of soldiers that resided outside the barracks that he had no power to administer religious rites to them. He stated that he had never heard the bell rung for Divine service in the barrack church, and that, though the door of the church was open there was a sergeant always stationed outside who would prevent the general public from entering.

Dr. Todd and Mr. Elrington addressed the Court on the part of the Rev. Mr. Craig, and Mr. Walker replied generally for the petitioner.

Judge BATTERSBY said as the case was an important one he would take time to look over the various authorities cited at both sides, and that he would not give judgment until after Christmas.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 48.] SATURDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

A case of the utmost importance to newspaper proprietors and the public generally, who take an interest in reading the accounts of the debates in Parliament, was settled last week. It was one of those questions which would have been immediately settled by the provisions of the Bill to amend the Law of Libel, prepared and brought in, the first session of this year, by Sir Colman O'Loghlen and Mr. Baines, had that bill not suffered the fate of other murdered innocents, and been postponed to the consideration of the all-important Representation of the Peoples Acts.

It seems strange that the debates in Parliament should have been public for so long, and yet no case had ever occurred until the 20th inst., in which the privilege of the press, to publish these debates, was fully established, yet such was the fact.

The case was an action for libel, in the Court of Queen's Bench, London, before the Lord Chief Justice and a special jury. The plaintiff, Mr. Peter Rigby Wason, is a barrister and an ex-member of Parliament, and the defendant was Mr. Walter, one of the proprietors of the Times. The declaration contained three counts, the first stated that Earl Russell had, at the request of the plaintiff, presented to the House of Lords a petition praying for a committee of inquiry into certain charges against Sir Fitzroy Kelly, and that the defendant printed and published in The Times newspaper a debate in the House of Lords on that petition, containing libellous matter concerning the plaintiff. The second count set forth an article in The Times newspaper of the 13th day of February, referring to the petition and debate, and also containing libellous matter concerning the plaintiff. The third count set forth another article in the Times, dated the 16th day of April, also con taining libellous matter concerning the plaintiff.

Mr. Wason conducted his own case, and laid the damages at £1,000. The circumstances are briefly these:—Some thirty-two years ago, in 1835, the Lord Chief Baron, then Mr. Kelly, contested the borough of Ipswich with Mr. Wason, and was returned; but a petition was presented against his return. On the hearing of that petition Mr. Kelly's leading counsel was absent, and he himself took his place and made a speech to the committee, in the course of which Mr. Wason alleged that Mr. Kelly pledged his honour as a gentleman to the truth of that which he knew to be false in stating that he knew of a certain Pilgrim against whom a charge of bribery, as agent, had been proved. This charge Mr. Kelly indignantly denied, and according to the fashion of the time, sent a challenge to Mr. Wason, who not only cautiously declined it, but also put himself under the protection of the Courts. In the course of time the member for Ipswich became Solicitor-General, and then Attorney-General; but no attempt was made to show that he was unfit to hold these important posts, as he certainly would have been, had Mr. Wason's accusations been true. When, however, after the lapse of thirty years, he was raised to the bench as Chief Baron of the Exchequer, his old opponent broke the long silence publicly charged him once more with having told a deliberate lie, and, in a petition to the House of Lords, prayed that he should be relieved from his judicial position. As might have been expected, not only was the petition rejected, but the conduct of the petitioner indignantly denounced. Lord Russell, who presented the petition, said that he did not believe the charges. The Lord Chancellor, by documentary evidence, refuted one by one the statements of Mr. Wason; and it has been said, "assailed the accuser in such terms as members of the Upper House seldom think it necessary to employ." Lord St. Leonards used similar language, and finally Mr. Wason confessed that he had made a mistake in the charge.

In spite of the repulse which he met in the House of Lords, he next endeavoured to obtain a criminal information against the proprietor of The Times for publishing what he considered a libel on his character. The application was refused, and Mr. Wason then brought the case before the Court of Queen's Bench, claiming £1,000 damages.

Mr. Wason conducted his own case, and read a very long speech from printed slips. In the course of it he made many very strange charges against public men of exalted position and irreproachable character. He could not, he said, disguise from himself the powerful antagonists who were arrayed against him, the late Premier of England, Earl Russell, the present Premier, Earl Derby, the Lord High Chancellor, the Lord Chief Baron, Lord St. Leonards, and Mr. Delane, editor of The Times. To that formidable list was to be added one yet more to be dreaded, namely, that subtle influence which was the invariable accompaniment of those in high station. He relied for victory on truth alone. Owing, he said, to a most unjust feature of the present law of libel, he had been compelled to name Mr. Walter as defendant; but they would not hear one word from him against that gentleman's conduct. He was nominally defendant, as one of the registered proprietors of The Times. Had the law been different, the action would ha·e been brought, not against Mr. Walter, but against the editor, who had been guilty of such base conduct, but who, by the present law, was permitted to skulk unobserved, sheltered by the anonymous "We." Mr. Wason went on at great length to comment upon the speeches of the noble lords named, and the articles commenting on them. Several statements made by the Lord Chancellor he characterized as false and as worthy of the noble and learned lord's reputation as an Old Bailey lawyer. In the speech of Lord St. Leonards he pointed out what he termed six falsehoods, and the statement of Earl Russell, to the effect that the Lord Chancellor had completely vindicated the character of Sir Fitzroy Kelly, he characterized as being as great a falsehood as was ever uttered in any society. He then commented upon the leading articles of which he complained, which, he said, misquoted thespeec hes reported in The Times. The articles contained falsehoods and calumnies, and misquotations, he said, were moral forgeries. The reading of the plaintiff's statement occupied about six hours.

The Lord Chief Justice, in his charge, the length of which alone prevents us from publishing in extenso, said: The case divides itself into two branches. The plaintiff complains in his declaration of two distinct grounds of action. He says, in the first place, the defendant has been guilty of libel by reason of his publishing a debate in the House of Lords, which debate arose on a petition presented by himself, and in which, as he alleges, statements were made and expressions used of a calumnious and libellous character towards him by the noble lords who took part in the discussion; and his ground of action is that, although these charges being made by noble peers in their places in Parliament might be privileged, as soon as those statements and observations were published they were beyond the privilege which attached to them in the mouths of the speakers, and became the subject matter of an action for libel. In the second place, the plaintiff complained that the Times newspaper, printed and published, in reference to the subject matter of the debate, a certain article which imputed to him falsehood and calumny, and which was in itself libellous. In the third count he says that, in an article which was written in reference to a charge that he had made against the Times at the police court, observations and charges were made and repeated which were libellous. In the first place I will deal with the matter of the complaint which arises upon the publication of the debate in the House of Lords. We must take it to be an undisputed fact that the report in the Times of the speeches delivered upon the occasion in question in the House of Lords was a faithful and accurate report. No evidence to the contrary was adduced on the part of the plaintiff; but, on the other hand, no admission was made of the accuracy of the report, and he threw, therefore, upon the defendant, the necessity of proving it. You have heard the evidence of the reporters who attended in the House of Lords on that occasion. They have pledged their oaths as to the accuracy of the report, and it would be impossible, therefore, to entertain the shadow of a doubt that the report was bona fide and truthful. That being so, gentlemen, I am prepared to direct you that, in point of law, it was a privileged publication, and one that is not the subject of an action.

The question presents itself now for adjudication in a plain and simplè form. Dicta may possibly be found in the books which may have a different tendency to the opinion I have expressed; but I think that, with the larger and more enlightened views relative to the law of libel which have gradually developed themselves in our days, the time has come when the proposition in the shape I have enunciated it may be stated. Not that there is an absence of authority in favour of the view to which I refer. In the case to which the learned Attorney-General has referred, that of Davis v. Duncan, I find Mr. Justice Wrightman saying this, "Prima facie, it is actionable to publish a repetition of what is injurious to another unless justified by truth or by its being a fair report of what has been said in a public judicial proceeding not ex parte, or it may be in Parliament. The only foundation of the exception is the superior benefit of the publicity of judicial proceedings which counterbalances the injury to individuals, although that may be great; and so it is in Parliamentary proceedings." Again in the case of the Queen v. Wright, which was argued in the last year of last century, and in which a criminal information was sought against a publisher for publishing a report of a debate in the House of Commons reflecting upon the character of an individual, Mr. Justice Laurence, in delivering judgment, said, "Although the publication of such proceedings may be to the disadvantage of the particular individual concerned, yet it is of vast importance to the public that the proceedings of courts of justice should be universally known. The general advantage to the country in having those proceedings made public more than counterbalances the inconvenience to private persons whose conduct may be the subject of such proceedings. The same reason also apply to proceedings in Parliament. It is of advantage to the public, and even to the legislative body, that true accounts of their proceedings should be generally circulated, and they would be deprived of that advantage if no person could publish those proceedings without being subject to be punished as a libeller." Well, gentlemen, the same principle which has been again and again held to apply to the publication of proceedings in the courts of justice appears to apply with equal, if not greater, force to the publication of proceedings in the Houses of Parliament.

His lordship also read the leading articles which were set out in the declaration, and said that when a man presented a petition with a view of hurling from a high position—the object, perhaps, of a high position—an eminent individual, it might reasonably be expected that the utmost care would have been taken as to the accuracy of the charges preferred. That care not having been taken, it was for the jury to say whether an article which pronounced the petition to be libellous, and the petitioner to have been actuated by malignant motives, exceeded the legitimate bounds of fair criticism. If they held that it did not, then the defendant was entitled to their verdict. If, on the other hand, they were of opinion that the criticism was not fair and temperate and honest, then they should hold that it was not privileged, and they should find for the plaintiff. They should bear in mind, in considering the articles complained of, that it was of the highest importance that, in treating of the conduct of public men, public writers should be held to the necessity of dealing with the subject fairly, impartially, and conscientiously. On the other hand, it was of the last importance that the press should have the fullest opportunity of discussing the actions and character of public men—of men who put themselves forward in public in reference to matters in which the community are interested.

The jury, without leaving the box, returned a verdict for the defendant on all the counts, but before they did so Mr. Wason handed in an exception to the charge, to the effect that the publication of reports of the proceeding in the Houses of Parliament was not privileged, even if such reports were fair and truthful. Such is an account of a trial, the results of which to the liberty of the press, can not be over-estimated as in it we have the first positive authoritative dictum ever laid down that reports of debates in the Houses of Parliament, provided they be full and faithful, are privileged. It has been said that the publication of evidence given before a Committee of the House of Commons is not privileged; but it must be remembered that such evidence is taken for the instruction and use of members of the House, and does not stand upon the same footing as debates which take place openly in Parliament.

Mr. Wason, in effect, claimed the right to say that the Lord Chief Baron had pledged his honour for what he knew to be untrue, and when the press accompanied the charge with the refutation, he took an action against the proprietor of The Times for libel; such is the absurd conclusion to which his argument leads when plainly stated, but the spirit of the age has decided that reporters will never again be obliged to resort to Dr. Johnson's ruse of reporting, or rather re-composing, the speeches of the members of the House of Commons, and publishing them under the most appropriate noms de plume he could find amongst the partizans of the various sides that engaged in the last struggle for liberty in Republican Rome.

An important Ecclesiastical suit has been pending for some months, before Judge Battersby, in the Provincial Court of Dublin. It was instituted by the Rev. Thomas Mills, incumbent of the parish of St. Jude's, to restrain the respondent, the Rev. Herbert Tudor Craig, military chaplain, from officiating in the Chapel attached to the Richmond Barracks, which are situated within the limits of the petitioner's parish, as the celebration of divine service, and other ministrations, performed by Mr. Craig, are an infringement or invasion of the petitioner's rights, and as the respondent was not legally authorized to perform said duties, or to administer the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper, or prepare persons for confirmation, without the consent of the Archbishop, or the licence of the incumbent. The respondent, in reply, submitted, that having been appointed an army chaplain, under a commission signed by the Secretary of State for War, he was bound to obey his superior officer as to the duties imposed on him as such chaplain. The cause came on for hearing on the 16th of the present month, and was adjourned to the 19th, when it closed. The Judge reserved judgment. On Tuesday last the Court delivered judgment (which will be found in another column), in favour of the petitioner, condemning the respondent in the costs of the suit, the judge, however, stating that the suit was "instituted to restrain for the future, not to punish for the past."

In the course of the judgment, his Lordship said the question in issue came to a narrow point. "Whether her Majesty could lawfully enable as many clergymen as she pleased to officiate in the parishes of other clergymen against their will, and whether such a power had been exercised by the commission now in evidence? It was admitted that it was not competent for any clergyman to enter a parish without the leave of the incumbents, but it was argued that the Sovereign might set aside all the rights of beneficed clergymen." Having referred to the common law on the subject, the learned Judge said "it would be found that the prerogative now claimed was at variance with the common law which has always carefully preserved the parochial system, being one of the most useful arrangements ever made for the maintenance of discipline in the Church," and he showed that "the Queen cannot dispense with the common law authority." The cause not having been finally disposed of, we for the present refrain from comment, as a question of much moment is involved both to the Crown and beneficed clergymen. The respondent, or rather the Secretary of State for War, has appealed from the decision of the Judge; the appeal lies to the High Court of Delegates, by petition to the Lord Chancellor, who appoints a Court of five members, consisting of three Puisne Judges and two other members, who need not necessarily be barristers. Previously to the Chancellorship of Sir E. Sugden (Lord St. Leonards) it was customary to nominate two of the Masters in Chancery to preside with the Puisne Judges. In conclusion, we may state for the information of our readers, that the chief functions of the High Court of Delegates have been swept away by recent enactments, and that as a Court it has virtually ceased to exist, save and except as to the appellate jurisdiction it exercises with regard to the Provincial Courts of Dublin and Armagh.

THE case of Harris v. Bagot, which has occupied the attention of the Court of Common Pleas for the last fourteen days, has at length terminated without the jury being able to agree to a verdict. The plaintiff was a Mr. Lewis Harris, the holder of two bills, one dated the 15th May, and the other the 6th of August, 1866, each payable three months after date, the one for £300, and the other for a sum of £200. The Lord Chief Justice in his charge, which was lengthened and lucid, said that the only question the jury had to try was whether those bills had been accepted by the authority of Mr. John Lloyd Bagot, as it was an admitted fact that the acceptances had not been written by his hand. There was a very able bar engaged on both sides, and the case received every attention from the court and jury. The jury retired for two hours, and when they returned the foreman announced that they could not agree to a verdict in the case. His Lordship discharged the jury, and said he did not wonder at the difficulty they experienced in deciding the points at issue.

THE Council of Legal Education have published their intention of accepting the Cambridge Law Tripos as a qualification for the Bar, which is, no doubt, a wise decision; but a gentleman signing himself "Oxford Law" has written to the London papers arguing and with justice that the Law and Modern History (Honour) School of Oxford should be put on the same footing as its Cambridge analogue—and this opens up the question whether the University law examinations should not, in every case where a sufficiently high standing is required, qualify a man for call without putting him to the further trouble and expense of keeping terms at an Inn of Court where, whatever other advantages he may derive, it is generally admitted that he does not learn much of law. Should this principle be adopted it would act as an inducement to men to go through a University, and thus obtain for themselves that knowledge of general, as well as legal, literature, to ensure which it has been proposed to institute compulsory examinations for candidates for call to the Bar.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In the Matter of the IRISH NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, AND THE RAILWAY COMPANIES' ACT, 1867.

In re MAURICE SALAMAN.

Nov. 26.—Railway Companies' Act, 1867—Scheme of Arrangement—Injunction.

A motion was made on behalf of the Irish North-Western Railway Company that Maurice Salaman might be restrained from proceeding with the action pending in the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, in which he was plaintiff, and the Irish North Western Railway Company were defendants, on such terms as the Court should think fit.

No bill or petition was filed or presented. The motion was grounded on an affidavit filed under the foregoing title, which stated that Maurice Salaman was a mortgagee of the Company for £500, which became due on the 30th of September, 1867, and was still unpaid; and that he had commenced an action in the Court of Exchequer for the recovery of the amount of the said mortgage; that there was due only £2 15s. for interest; that the Company had on the 18th of November, 1867, filed in the Court of Chancery in Ireland, where the principal office of the Company is situated, a scheme of arrangement between the Company and their creditors, and a declaration in writing that the Company were unable to meet their engagements with their creditors, under the Railways Companies' Act, 1857; that notice of the scheme had been published on the 19th of November, 1867, in the Dublin Gazette. The affidavit also stated the amount of the mortgages of the Company to be £300,000; that the income of the Company for several years was sufficient, after meeting the working expenses and other proper outgoings in respect of the undertaking, to enable the Company to pay the interest due on the mortgages, but without any dividend to the preference shareholders; and that the traffic of the undertaking was gradually and yearly increasing, and that the Directors had confidence that if the mortgage holders would accept debenture stock in the undertaking in exchange for their mortgages, the holders of that stock would in two or three years be enabled to sell such stock in the market at, if not above, par.

Sullivan, Q.C. (with him E. F. Litton), for the motion, relied on the 6th and 7th sections of the Railway Companies' Acts, 1867 (30 & 31 Vic., c. 27).*

Begtagh, for the Company,

The MASTER of the ROLLS granted an injunction to restrain the proceedings at law, the Company undertaking to bring in £500 within a fortnight.

Solicitor for the Company, Boyd.

Solicitor for M. Salaman, Madden.

* 30 & 31 Vic., c. 127, s. 6, enacts that "when a Company are unable to meet their engagements with their creditors, the directors may prepare a scheme of arrangement between the Company and their creditors (with or without provisions for settling and defining any rights of shareholders of the Company as among themselves, and for raising, if necessary, additional share and loan capital, or either of them), and may file the same in the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland, according to the situation of the principal office of the Company, with a declaration in writing under the common seal of the Company, to the effect that the Company are unable to meet their engagements with their creditors, and with an affidavit of the truth of such declaration made by the chairman of the board of directors, and by the other directors, or the major part in number of them, to the best of their respective judgment and belief."

Sec. 7:—"After the filing of the scheme, the Court may, on the application of the company on summons, or notice in a summary way restrain any action against the company in such terms as the Court thinks fit."

BEAMISH v. FARMER.

Nov. 7th, 8th, 22nd, 1867.—Annuity—Judgment—Collateral Decree for Arrears—Interest.

Robert William Phaire, being tenant for life of certain lands, granted thereout an annuity of £810 7s. 10d. to Archdeacon Agar in consideration of £4,000. The life estate, a judgment, and two policies of assurance, were assigned to a trustee to secure the payment of the annuity. A further policy on the life of the grantor was effected, which it was agreed should be kept up out of the annuity, and a judgment for £4,000 was entered up against the grantor. The deed contained a redemption clause providing for the re-assignment of the policies, judgments, and annuity. The annuity fell into arrear, and Archdeacon Agar filed a cause-petition and obtained a receiver over the lands, and by a decree of the 5th of November, 1853, the sum of £1,222 2s. 7½d. was declared to be due on foot of the annuity, and that sum was declared to be well charged on the lands. R. W. Phaire died in 1863, and this suit was instituted in 1865 for the administration of his real and personal assets. The administrator of Archdeacon Agar filed a charge claiming against the assets of R. W. Phaire interest on the sum of £1,222 2s. 7½d., and a further arrear of the annuity. The Master disallowed the claim for interest, and this was an appeal from his order.

The MASTER of the ROLLS decided that no interest was payable on the arrears of the annuity, or on the sum declared to be due by the decree, or on the sums advanced to pay the premiums of the policies of insurance.

Sullivan, Q.C., Shaw, Q.C., and G. Fitzgibbon, for the appellant.

Solicitor for the petitioner, G. Bernard.

In the Matter of the 11th and 12th Vic., c. 68, and the Trusts of the Will of SARAH BOYD.

Dec. 10th, 1867.—Trustee Relief Act—Costs of Trustees.

Faloon moved for an order directing payment of the dividends of a fund lodged under the Trustee Relief Act, and at the same time asked for the costs of the trustees, who had not deducted their costs when lodging the fund.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said that he would communicate with the Taxing Masters as to the sum which should be allowed to Trustees for the costs of lodging funds under the Trustee Relief Act. And on a subsequent day his Honour said that the Taxing Masters thought that £8 would be a reasonable sum in ordinary cases. In future, except under very special circumstances, he should allow no more than that sum.

COURT FOR CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Reported by WM. WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

THE QUEEN v. TOOLE.

Nov. 25, 27.—Treasure Trove—Property—Inquisition—Office found.

This was a case reserved from the Commission Court for the County and City of Dublin. The defendant was indicted for that he found under ground silver treasure, hidden of ancient time, and of which the owners could not be found; and the indictment averred that the Queen was entitled to the treasure, and that the defendant did unlawfully and knowingly conceal the finding.

It was proved that the prisoner found a number of old coins hidden in ground where he was digging, and that he disposed of several of them to a jeweller. The rest were found in his possession.

No evidence of any inquisition before the Coroner, or of office found as to the title of the Queen was given, nor was there any averment of such inquisition, or of office found in the indictment.

The prisoner was convicted, and a case was reserved, submitting to the Court two questions—1st, whether the indictment was sufficient without referring to, or stating, any inquisition before the Coroner, or office found as to the title of the Queen; 2ndly, whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain the indictment, without referring to, or stating, any inquisition before the coroner, or office found as to the title of the Queen.

The Solicitor-General and James Murphy, Q.C., for the Crown.

J. A. Curran, for the defendant.

The COURT affirmed the conviction, holding that it was not necessary to show any inquisition, or office found.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE LYNCH.

In re the Estate of G. FRENCH, Owner and Petitioner.

Nov. 29.—Transfer of Carriage—Solicitor's Costs—Lien

This was a motion that the carriage of the sale might be transferred from Mr. Eames to Mr. Dillon, upon the owner's undertaking to pay Mr. Eames his costs. The owner had appointed Mr. Eames to be his solicitor, and directed that he should have the carriage of the sale.

Sherlock, Q.C., in support of the motion. Mr. Eames has no right to any further security for his costs than the lien on the title deeds which he now has, and which will be preserved to him.

Randal M'Donnell, for Mr. Eames. The practice of this Court is to give to a solicitor, from whom the carriage of the proceedings is taken, his costs when taxed. He is therefore entitled, in this case, to refuse either the owner's undertaking or the security of his lien, and to require payment. If his lien is to be his security, he will not have now the same security as he had before, since it was in his power, while having the carriage of the proceedings, to realize his lien quickly by diligence. He may now have to wait for the payment of his costs by reason of the delay of a solicitor over whom he has no control.

LYNCH, J.—I am told by the officer that the practice of the Court is not as stated by the counsel for Mr. Eames. He must be left to his lien. As, however, the notice of motion did not offer him this, but only the owner's undertaking, I will give him his costs of this motion.

In re the Estate of WILLIAM ALLEN and Others, Owners; RICHARD VERNON and Another, Petitioners.

June, July.—Assignment of Mortgage Security—Omission to obtain Mortgage Deed—Laches—Notice—Postponement of Registered Deed.

This was an objection to the schedule of incumbrances taken by Mr. Nunn, whose demand was founded upon an equitable mortgage, by deposit of a mortgage security, dated 9th of July, 1859, and affecting the estate sold in this matter. He claimed to be paid in priority to the petitioners, who were assignees of the same mortgage debt and security under a registered deed, of date subsequent to the creation of the equitable mortgage, the petitioners, upon the occasion of such assignment, not having obtained possession of the mortgage deed. The facts will be found stated in the judgment.

Tarleton, for Mr. Nunn.

Lawless, Q.C., and O'Driscoll, for the petitioners.

They cited Dryden v. Frost (3 M. & Cr. 670); Peto v. Hammond (30 Beav. 495); Hewitt v. Loosemore (9 Hare, 449); Wormald v. Maitland (35 L. I. Ch. 69); In re Rooke's Estate (13 Ir. Ch. R. 273, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 442); Wyatt v. Barwell (19 Ves. 435); Jolland v. Stanbridge (3 Ves. 478).

July.—Judge LYNCH delivered a written judgment, stating that Mr. Nunn founded his title as an equitable mortgagee of this mortgage security, by deposit of the mortgage deed on the contract shown by two letters—one of the mortgagor, the other of the mortgagee, and both acknowledging the contract on which the lodgement was made; that this deposit and contract took effect on the 20th January, 1864; that the petitioners claimed to be assignees of this mortgage debt and securities by deed of 2nd June, 1864, registered on the 7th June, 1864; that Mr. Nunn raised the question of the petitioners by omitting to obtain possession of the deed, as to which they made no sufficient inquiry, and for the non-delivery of which no sufficient reason was assigned. must not be deemed to have been guilty of such gross neglect that their claim should be postponed to his; that it was alleged by the petitioners that Lindsay Hall, who appeared on the registry search to be the owner of the mortgage, represented himself to be such owner, and said he "had said mortgage at his residence in the country, and would forthwith procure it and hand it over to petitioners;" that there was no doubt that the equitable mortgage to Mr. Nunn was valid and effectual to create the charge, and the mortgage security was itself the evidence of the charge—and, in fact, constituted the charge; and that to deal with a mortgage without seeing or obtaining possession of the instrument creating it, was the greatest negligence that could be committed in respect of such a transaction; that if there was any obligation on the petitioners to get the deed, its non-fulfilment, so far from being excused by what happened, was made worse; that by dispensing, in effect, with the production of the deed, they enabled a gross fraud to be committed; that Wormald v. Maitland was a distinct authority for the doctrine that the leaving out title deeds, without inquiry for them, is gross laches, and amounts to constructive notice; that the present case was much stronger than that of a dealing with a property, the title to which was merely evidenced by the deeds not delivered; that the dissatisfaction so often expressed to extending this doctrine as to notice to register conveyances, was intelligible, but still the rule was established, nor was the doctrine confined to actual notice to the party dealing, or his agent; that, in furtherance of the detection of fraud, the duty of ordinary care was cast on a party dealing as a purchaser.

Mr. Nunn's equitable charge should therefore have priority.

THE IRISH GRAND JURY SYSTEM.

An opinion has for some time been growing of the uselessness of Grand Juries as a portion of the machinery of criminal justice. In truth, now, when the preliminary investigation has grown to be so public, and, in important cases, so careful and searching a procedure, it is not easy to see the advantage of interposing another tribunal, which, hearing one side only, and hearing it in secret and perfunctorily, is to determine whether the accused is to undergo an actual trial. Into this controversy we are not about to enter, but we propose to call attention to certain functions discharged by Grand Juries in Ireland, which make the question as to their abolition a widely different one in that country from what it is in England.

It is not generally understood here to how large an extent not only the administration of the county, but the power of taxation, is in Ireland entrusted to the Grand Jury. An idea of it may be formed from the fact that the amount levied by Grand Jury presentments exceeds a million sterling annually. The making and repair of roads and bridges, the maintenance of fever hospitals, infirmaries, and other public charities, the cost of gaols and court-houses, with a great deal of the expense of the police and of the administration of justice in general, fall to the province of the Grand Jury to determine upon, and are defrayed by assessment upon the county at large, or upon those divisions of the county termed baronies. An Irish county is, in fact, a much more organized and better administered section of the kingdom than an English one. How it came to be so it is not difficult to discover. Mainly it has been because the parish, to which the common law committed so much, and which perhaps has not worked to perfection even in England, was found in Ireland to be wholly unworkable

In Ireland, as in England, the proper keeping of the highways was the duty either of individuals, bound to it by reason of tenure, or of the parish. There was an attempt in the reign of James the First to make the parochial organization effective for the repair of roads and bridges. By one of Chichester's Acts of 1812 the constables and churchwardens of the parish were directed to call together the parishioners in Easter week, who were to appoint surveyors of highways; and thereupon the parishioners were bound in rotation to send wains and carts with materials, and to provide sufficient labour, for the repair of the highways. When we revert to the state of Ireland at the beginning of the seventeenth century, and remember that the religion of five out of six Irish parishioners was proscribed by law, that scarcely a third of them understood the English tongue, that the number who possessed wains or carts was limited in the extreme, and that it was a time of new plantations, extirpation of the natives, and sweeping Acts, it is not easy to suppress a smile at this churchwarden enactment. It was one of that long series of English laws imported ready-made into Ireland of which the seventeenth century was neither to see the last nor worst examples. Be this as it may, there is no doubt that when the parish neglected its duty in these respects, it was the constitutional province of the Grand Jury to present such non-feasance as a misdemeanour. Further by common law they could not go. But an Act of Charles the First, after directing justices of assize and justices at sessions to inquire into the non-repair of roads and bridges, and to present the persons or bodies politic chargeable therewith, goes on to declare that, whenever it cannot be certainly proved what persons or bodies were liable, the work shall be done by the inhabitants of the county or barony; and power was given to the justices of assize and the justices at quarter sessions, with the assent of the Grand Jury, to tax the inhabitants of the county or barony for the necessary expenses. This power fell into disuse at quarter sessions, and was afterwards taken away from them by statute; but it was by degrees extended, confirmed, and regulated, as regards Grand Juries at assizes, until it came to be of the comprehensive character mentioned above. The Grand Jury system in Ireland has defects, two defects especially of a fundamental character; but, not to speak of the great improvement in moral tone, and the control of public opinion, the legislature has taken considerable pains to guard against such abuses as once existed.

The present mode of procedure is this. Some time before the assizes there are held in every barony throughout the county what are termed presentment sessions, consisting of the justices of peace of the district, and of a certain number of the wealthiest cess-payers associated with them. Before these sessions all applications for works to be performed within the county must, in the first instance, be brought. These applications are examined by the county surveyor, an officer who has the superintendence of the public works throughout the county, and who is appointed, not by any county authority, but by the Lord Lieutenant. In case of no application being made by an individual for any necessary works, it is the duty of the surveyor himself to apply. The presentment sessions of each barony determine upon things to be done within the barony; but works proposed to be charged on the county at large are decided upon at the sessions of the central barony where the county court house is situated. As to the latter class of works, the associated cess-payers have no voice, but the justices only. The works being decided on, the surveyor prepares specifications and forms of tender for the execution of them; and at an adjourned sessions the tenders are opened and the lowest chosen. The secretary of the Grand Jury thereupon makes schedules of all the applications, with the decision of the presentment sessions upon them; and the county treasurer sums up the entire expense requisite for the execution of the works, and applots the amount to be assessed from the respective baronies. Two or three days before the Assizes the Grand Jury assemble for fiscal business; and before them come all applications for works, the decision of the presentment sessions with respect to them. the specifications and tenders, and the treasurer's budget. This business they transact in open Court, free from the obligation of secresy which in other matters binds grand juries. They either present or refuse to present the matters sent to them by the lower house of the presentment sessions. And any cess-payer may, if he pleases, try the legality or utility of any proposed work by a traverse, which is tried by a petty jury. All such as the Grand Jury approve of, and as either are untraversed or succeed upon the traverse, come before the judge for his fiat, on receiving which they become law, and the supplies are levied accordingly. If a Grand Jury should be perverse enough to refuse to make or repair a road when necessary, the Lord Lieutenant has power, on a memorial of the cess-payers, to get it done through the Board of Works.

In the main this system works well, and it is certainly far better in principle than the English plan of giving power to the parish or quarter sessions. The county surveyor, appointed by and responsible to the central government, is a highly useful official. Certainly the roads in Ireland bear, as a general rule, excellent testimony to the care that is taken of them, and may, on the whole, bear comparison with those of any other country.

Of the two blots upon the system, the first is, the absence of any genuine representation of the cess-payers amongst the tax-imposing body. The Grand Jury are selected arbitrarily by the sheriff, who is himself appointed by the Government, on the nominatian of the judges. The Presentment Sessions are composed of magistrates appointed by the Lord Chancellor, on the nomination of the lieutenant of the county and of a few associated cess payers, who are themselves selected by the Grand Jury. The county representation is thus purely aristocratic, with hardly a leaven of the popular element. In noting this defect, so alien to the fundamental notions of the English law, we are by no means expressing a desire to see a democratic county regime. No one of experience can doubt that, in proportion as men's minds are widened by wealth, education, and acquaintance with the world, they appreciate the ultimate advantages to be derived from a present outlay; and that the instinct of the less opulent class is always to restrict immediate taxation, no matter how profitable in the end. It is extremely doubtful whether, if the making of the roads in Ireland had been confided to a senate of tenant farmers, they would now have been as good as they are. Conceding so much as matter of degree, it is plain that the total refusal of practical power to those upon whom the entire burden falls, is altogether unjustifiable. It is, indeed, one of those things which bring home to the mass of Irishmen how little they have to do with the Government which rules them. An obvious reform would be to equalize the number of associated cess-payers with that of the justices of Presentment Sessions, and to make the former elected by the body of the cess-payers of the barony.

But the second defect is even more indefensible. The entire tax is levied from the occupiers, that is from the tenants, without any contribution whatever on the part of the landlords, whose estates benefit so largely by the expenditure. It is idle to say in defence of this that the cess is ultimately paid by the landlord, who would exact a larger rent if the tenant were not subject to this imposition. It may be true in theory that, if rent is defined to be the ultimate surplus arising from the produce of land after bearing all the expenses of cultivation, then all taxation is in the end paid out of rent; but if this be so, the proper application would seem to be that the whole of the county cess should fall upon the landlord, since it is plainly good policy to make the ostensible and the real paymasters identical. We do not, however, go so far. All we say is, that to the tenant, whose rent seems to him high enough in all conscience already, it must appear the extreme of hardship and injustice to be compelled to pay the whole of a tax by which his landlord benefits as much as or more than himself, and which is assessed upon him by a jury of landlords without voice of his own in the matter. Here, also, an obvious and equitable reform suggests itself, namely, to follow the precedent of the poor laws, ank to make the cess payable one half by the landlord and one half by the tenant. The equity of this arrangement no one now dreams of disputing in the former case, nor would anyone do so in the latter; and we are glad to perceive that a Bill to effect this object has been brought into the House of Commons during the present session.—The Chronicle.

BUSINESS IN THE ENGLISH COUNTY COURTS.

Mr. Falconer, County Court Judge of the Swansea and South Wales Circuit, has recently published, in a statistical form, a return of the number of miles travelled, the cost of his travelling fare, the number of days which his court sat during the eleven months of the present year, together with the number of plaints, the amount sued for, and other interesting statistical information, since the year 1852. From this return we find that his honour travels 330½ miles per month, having during the eleven months of the present year travelled no less than 3,635½ miles. The cost of travelling these 330 miles per month is only £3 4s. 8d. His honour sits 18 days per month, in addition to the time occupied in travelling. From the year 1852 to 1866 (both inclusive) the total number of plaints entered in his honour's court is 256,264, the total amount sued for being £647,912. The number of plaints entered for amounts above £20 has been 3,978, and the number of jury cases 272. He has travelled upwards of 63,000 miles on circuit.

This is tolerably hard work. What will it become after the 1st of next January?

PROVINCIAL COURT—Dec. 23rd.

(Before Judge Battersby.)

The Rev. Thomas Mills, Incumbent ef St. Jude's, v. The Rev. Herbert Tudor Craig, Chaplain of Richmond Barracks.

Judge Battersby delivered judgment in this case. It was a suit, he said, instituted to restrain the Rev. Mr. Craig from officiating or celebrating Divine service, or preaching in a chapel within the Richmond Barracks, or otherwise, without the assent of the Rev. Thomas Mills, incumbent of St. Jude's parish, within which Richmond Barracks are situated. The petition stated in substance that the respondent, under the pretence of authority from the Secretary at War, did officiate in a public building called the "Military Chapel," in the parish of St. Jude, by reading publicly the morning prayers to a congregation composed of soldiers and their wives, and others of the parishioners of the petitioner, and officiated otherwise, as set out in the petition; that the petitioner has been always ready and willing to discharge all the duties of the clergyman of Richmond Barracks, and that the respondent has no license from the Archbishop of Dublin. The answer of the respondent asserted that he is a priest in holy orders of the United Church; that by a commission bearing date in January, 1864, he was appointed by her Majesty to the chaplains' department of the British army, and commanded to follow such orders as he shall receive from his superior officers; that on reporting himself in Dublin he was ordered to perform all the duties the subject of the suit, and that he never performed them outside the barracks; that he does not know who the congregations were, but that he could not exclude them; that the chapel is not within the parish of St. Jude, but is extra-parochial, and is not an interference with the parochial administration; that even if the chapel was in the parish of St. Jude, yet he, having been appointed by the Crown, is entitled to perform Divine service therein without being subject to any ecclesiastical censure, and that the performance of the several duties are enjoined by the terms of his commission. His lordship summarised the evidence given in the case. The respondent deposed that he never officiated ministerially outside the barracks, and that to his knowledge he did not see any persons but soldiers in the chapel. It was contended for the respondent that the petitioner was not incumbent of St. Jude's so as to enable him to maintain the suit, and that her Majesty might, by virtue of her prerogative, appoint a chaplain, giving him right to perform Divine service anywhere that any clergyman can perform. The question, he said, came to the narrow point, whether her Majesty could lawfully enable as many clergymen as she pleased to officiate in the parishes of other clergymen against their will, and whether such a power had been exercised by the commission now in evidence. It was admitted that it was not competent for any clergyman to enter a parish without the leave of the incumbents; but it was argued that the Sovereign might set aside all the rights of beneficed clergymen. Having referred to the common law on the subject, he said it would be found that the prerogative now claimed was at variance with the common law, which has always carefully preserved the parochial system, being one of the most useful arrangements ever made for the maintenance of discipline in the Church; and he showed that "the Queen cannot dispense with the common law authority." As regarded the statutes, they from time to time sustained the common law of the Church, as above stated. In Ireland it had been held that if the Lord Lieutenant appointed a chaplain to a lunatic asylum, he cannot officiate without the consent of the incumbent. There was no evidence of the origin of the commissions alleged in this case, and of the practice under them; and from anything that appeared, Mr. Craig's commission might have been the first issued. It was stated by Dr. Studdert, who was usually well informed on such matters, that out of 47 military chaplains 37 are parochial clergymen. However that might be, there was no trace in the law books of such a case as the present. No law had been found to sustain this case; but, on the contrary, the whole tenor of the canon law, the common law, and the statute law was against it. The present case had this peculiarity, that if the rights, as claimed, existed, "military chaplains" were clergymen of the Church of England, and not subject to any ecclesiastical superior, or to any restraint, as to doctrine or principles unless such restraint was to be administered by an official called the "Chaplain-General," or by court martial; and, if this were so, they superseded all Church discipline heretofore existing. The respondent had the order of his superior officer, and was justified in what he did, though he acted illegally; but nothing had been adduced to show that the superior officer could issue such an order; and this suit was instituted to restrain in future, not to punish for the past. The decree would be that the Rev. Herbert Tudor Craig be admonished and inhibited to abstain from performing Divine service, or preaching, &c., in the building in Richmond Barracks mentioned in the petition, or elsewhere in the parish of St. Jude, without the consent of the Rev. Thomas Mills and the licence of the Archbishop of Dublin; and that the respondent should pay the costs of the suit to the petitioner.

Mr. Hamerton intimated that an appeal would be lodged on the part of the respondent.

Counsel for the petitioner—Dr. Studdert and Mr. Samuel Walker, instructed by Mr. A. Samuels. Counsel for respondent—Dr. Ball, Q.C., Dr. Elrington, and Dr. Todd, instructed by Mr. Hamerton, Queen's Proctor.

FICTITIOUS ATTORNEYS.

One of the greatest grievances under which the legal profession labours is that whereby clerks and agents are enabled to carry on business under the name of an attorney professionally defunct. In the Court of Exchequer a few days since a certain attorney was inquired for in a most particular manner by counsel, the individual who appeared as conducting the case stating that his principal was at the Bloomsbury County Court, and that he, the witness, was his articled clerk. This witness was a bald-headed person, and gave his evidence in a manner which, in the opinion of every one in court, seriously damaged the case of his client. We do not say that the attorney in question does not exist, but we take the suspicions raised in this instance to point to an actual state of things which demands the strict surveillance of the Incorporated Law Society. We have, indeed, known a case where an unqualified person has carried on business under the name of an attorney who long since ceased to practise. Hereby an injustice is done to the public and to the profession.—Law Times.

Law versus Literature.—The Daily Telegraph contains the following item of Irish news:—"Rumour has it that an application will be made to the Irish Master of the Rolls to grant an injunction to restrain the sale of a recent work containing the too free publication of the private diary of Lord Chief Justice Clonmell. It is not generally known the Master of the Rolls is the author of "Ireland Sixty Years Ago," and it will be curious to see if any esprit de corps will influence his decision in dealing with Mr. Fitzpatrick's kindred volume, "Ireland before the Union." The case is novel, and may excite some interest. In 1840 an injunction was on the point of being granted against the Bishop of Llandaff's publication of Lord Derby's letters, when he succumbed; and the precedent chiefly quoted on that occasion was Pope v. Curl, decided by Lord Hardwicke in 1741. In 1774 an injunction was granted to the executors of Lord Chesterfield with the object of suppressing a volume of his letters sold to Dodsley, the bookseller. In 1813 Lord Eldon, in Gee v. Pritchard, declared "that he is not to interfere because certain MSS. are written in confidence, or because the publication of them may wound the feelings of the plaintiffs, but simply and wholly as a question of property."

Revising Barrister of Dublin.—It is stated that Mr. Charles Shaw, Q.C., will not at present resign the office of Revising Barrister. There is no further business in connexion with the office to be done until September next.

The Law Adviser.—An unsuccessful attempt having been made to disparage the appointment of Mr. Charles Shaw, Q.C., on the ground of personal qualifications, it is now alleged that he is a connexion or relative of Lord Mayo, and owes his appointment to that circumstance. We are enabled to state that there is no foundation for the allegation. Lord Mayo is not in any way connected with Mr. Shaw.—Daily Express.

Sir Richard Mayne.—Sir Richard Mayne, the Chief Commissioner of London Police, is now 71 years of age, and has been chief commissioner of police since the establishment of the force in 1820—nearly 40 years.

Judgment was given on Saturday by the Lords Justices in an appeal of great interest to the London hospitals. Lord Henry Seymour left about £60,000 to the "hospices" of Paris and London; and a question was raised whether hospitals were included, or whether the term was confined to charitable institutions, excluding institutions for bodily illness. The Master of the Rolls confined the term to charitable places, and excluded ordinary hospitals; but that decision has been reversed by the Lords Justices, and the hospitals will partake in the benefits of the legacy.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 49.] SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, 1868. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

IN the middle of August last a number of Acts were passed through the Houses of Parliament, which, as they were only social in their influence, did not receive such publicity from the press as they would have obtained had any political or legal interest been at question, but they, nevertheless, have occasioned a considerable revolution in the position of the class to which they specially refer; and these Acts, form what most people—including even capitalists and employers of labour, who, at first sight, would appear to be injured by their working—admit to be a just infringement on the principles of free trade, and the maxim that every capitalist should be allowed to buy labour at the lowest price and under the conditions most advantageous to himself, and that every possessor of that labour-power should be allowed to sell his labour at the highest terms, and under what he considers the most advantageous conditions for himself.

There were several Acts passed at the time we refer to, which would have the apparent effect of interfering with the rights of individuals, but the one we intend considering in the present article is cap. 103 of 30 & 31 Vic., 1867, entitled "An Act for the extension of the Factory Acts," which came into operation on the first day of this year. The extension was double, inasmuch as the powers of the existing Act were extended to numerous trades not included under the former Act, and the Act for the "Extension of the Factory Acts" is made to apply to the whole of the United Kingdom.

The provisions of the Act are not very intelligible, from the use of technical language and reference to trade usages, which are nowhere accurately defined, but principally from the fact that the new Act refers to a number of other Acts with which we in Ireland are not familiar. The definition states that the Factory Acts shall in this Act mean the fourth and fifth sections of the "Factory Acts Extension Act, 1864," relating to sanitary measures and special rules, and such provisions as are now in force of the following Acts:—An Act passed in 4 Wm. IV., cap. 103, entitled "An Act to Regulate the Labour of Children and Young Persons in the Mills and Factories in the United Kingdom," cited as "The Factory Act, 1833;" an Act passed 7 Vic., cap 15, entitled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Labour in Factories," cited as "The Factory Act, 1844;" an Act passed 14 Vic., cap. 54, entitled also "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Labour in Factories, cited as "The Factory Act, 1850;" an Act passed 17 Vic., cap. 104, entitled "An Act further to Regulate the Employment of Children in Factories," cited as "The Factory Act, 1853;" and finally, "The Factory Act, 1856."

The most important parts of those Acts are the clauses with regard to limitation in the employment of women, children, and young persons. Under the old Factory Acts a child is defined to be a person under eight years of age, and a young person is any one under eighteen years of age. The same provision applies under the new Act to the employment of young persons and of women—that is to say, all women and all boys between thirteen and eighteen years of age are subject to certain restrictions; all children—that is, all persons between eight and thirteen years of age, are subject to certain other restrictions; and no person under eight years of age is to be employed. Women and young persons—that is to say, boys between thirteen and eighteen years of age, are allowed to work what is called full time, but not overtime. Full time is sixty hours per week.

With regard to the employment of children the rules are more complicated, as children work as half-timers—that is, in two relays each day, or on alternate days; and there are clauses directing that children must be sent to school for a certain number of hours each day.

Factories included in the Act are placed under double inspection, viz.:—

First—By inspectors or sub-inspectors, who shall be furnished with such certificates of appointment as the Secretary of State may direct; and on applying for admission to any factory every inspector or sub-inspector shall, if required, produce to the occupiers his certificate; and it is enacted by this statute that every person who forges or counterfeits any such certificate, or falsely pretends to be an inspector or sub-inspector of factories, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and be liable to be imprisoned for any period not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour.

The other inspection is by a certifying surgeon, who is employed in every district to attend at the factories for the purpose of giving such certificates as are required. Should any difficulty arise as to the remuneration of the certifying surgeon, the question is to be referred to the inspector of factories, who, on an appeal being made by the manufacturer, has the power to fix the rate of fees, not going beyond a certain maximum, and also the time for visits.

The word factory is defined in general terms by clause 7 of the Act to mean any premises, whether adjoining or separate, in the same occupation, situate in the same city, town, parish, or place, and constituting one trade establishment, in, on, or within the precincts of which fifty or more persons are employed in any manufacturing process; and the following are the works not under the old Factory Acts which come under the new statute:—blast furnaces, all copper mills, all bar-iron works, all iron, copper, and brass foundries, every place where any metal is cast, any place where mechanical power is used in the manufacture of any article of metal, or in the manufacture of india-rubber or gutta-percha; and all places, whether mechanical power is used or not, such as paper works, glass works, tobacco works, letter-press printing, and book-binding works, and all places, whether carrying on special trades or not, from the clause of the Act mentioned above, where more than fifty persons are employed.

In the schedules there are many modifications, temporary and permanent. The most important is that, although the age of a child is defined by the Factory Acts to be between eight and thirteen years of age, persons of eleven years of age may be employed as young persons during the first six calendar months ensuing the first day of January, 1868. And there are also certain modifications which the Secretary of State may make, without Act of Parliament, on its being shown that such modifications are desirable, from the customs or exigencies of any trade.

The general effects of the Factory Act in England have been that while families were at first worse off from the forced idleness of some of their members, they were eventually benefited by the healthier frames which the children acquired thereby, and the moral character and intelligence of the people have equally improved from the teaching which is supplied them in the regulated intervals of labour. Nor have the results been less beneficial to the employers, although they strongly opposed the Factory Acts at their first introduction in 1833, and their extension in 1844. But this involves a politico-economic question, which is not within our province to discuss.

Of course where there are so many inducements to unnatural parents, and to selfish employers, to break the rule laid down by law for the employment of young persons and children, the conditions of the Act have not always been observed, and the consequence is that these breaches form a fruitful source of litigation.

In the Report of the Inspectors of Factories for the half-year ending 30th April, 1867, the number of informations sworn, amounted to 246, and the number of convictions amounted to 171, the penalties inflicted ranging from 10s. to £10, while the amount of costs ranges from 10s. to £4 10s., the prosecutions, in some few instances, being against parents for allowing their children to be employed more than the lawful time each day; in other instances for neglecting to send them to school.

With regard to the definition of technical terms, the following extract from a decision may be useful as well as interesting:—

The question turned upon a correct definition of the word "twisting," and whether it was a process of "winding and throwing;" and Captain May, the Sub-Inspector of the district, took the wisest method to obtain a correct definition of this term, by raising a friendly issue between himself and a twister, before the local magistrates; and by producing practical manufacturers, both twisters and throwers, to define their trade terms. After a very able argument by Captain May and as able a defence by Mr. Allen, a solicitor, the magistrates adjourned their decision to the following week, on which day it was given, in the presence of the parties as follows:—

Mr. Gaunt, one of the two magistrates present, said:—

"I had hoped this case could have been decided at the sessions, for I was not anxious the decision should rest upon our judgment. My brother magistrate and myself were of the same opinion upon the case after the evidence had been given on Wednesday; but I was anxious to see if I could not get a little further light upon the matter. We are of the same opinion now. These two gentlemen, Mr. May and Mr. Allen, seem to have agreed upon the question we have to adjudicate upon. This boy Keales has been employed in the forenoon and afternoon of the same day; and that prima facie is wrong. But there is an exception, according to the Act of Parliament, in the case of throwing; and the question was that the defendants would be convicted under the Act, unless it were shown that they came within the exception clause of the Act. That, we have to decide upon the evidence. Now, there is a maxim in our law with which I am and you are well acquainted, cuique in suâ arte, credendum est, which, in plain English, means that every man is to be believed from the knowledge he has of his own trade. I apply that maxim in the present case. Mr. Davenport has given evidence as to his own profession as a throwster. I believe him in his evidence as to his own art; and I don't think in point of law we can take any evidence as to the definition in dictionaries."

Mr. Allen—"The Lord Chief Justice of England does not hold that opinion, sir."

Mr. Gaunt—"Well, that is my opinion; I mean the evidence of the dictionaries is not to be taken or considered anything in comparison with the evidence of people who are engaged solely in a branch of trade. The compilers of dictionaries, not having a practical knowledge of the trade upon which they give a definition, may err."

Last week we adverted to the case of Mills v. Craig, and abstained from all comment on the judgment of the Court, the respondent having appealed from that decision; but while the cause remains sub judice we may fairly inquire into the question of the Ecclesiastical Prerogative claimed by the Crown of appointing army chaplains, and whether the sovereign, as head of the Established Church, when commissioning military chaplains, has the power and privilege of directing (through her subordinate military authorities) those chaplains to enter any parish and invade the rights, and infringe upon the functions, of the incumbent, by ministering to the spiritual necessities of the military forces quartered within the said parish or parishes. In the first place, we shall trace, from the time of the Reformation in England, the ecclesiastical power arrogated by or conferred on our English sovereigns; for although many attempts were made by our kings, previous to that important epoch in English history, to curb the jurisdiction and privileges exercised by the ecclesiastical powers, no substantial advantages ever accrued to the Crown previous to the reign of Henry VIII. We shall, therefore, pass by the various ordinances of the Canon Law before the Reformation, as during the reigns of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, synods were held in London, which finally resulted in the framing of ecclesiastical canons, which, having been submitted to, and having received the approval of Elizabeth, passed the Great Seal of England, and were then transmitted to the provinces of Canterbury and York, to be promulgated as the Canon Law of England. In November, 1534, Parliament conferred on Henry VIII. the title of Only Supreme Head on Earth of the Church, as they had already vested him with the real power belonging to it, and that power was cemented by the 25 Hen., cap. 19, which provided that no canon laws were to be received in England which were in opposition to the laws of the realm, or likely to damage the King's prerogative.

On the death of Henry the ecclesiastical rights which he had obtained were confirmed to his successor, Edward VI., but during the reign of Mary this portion of the Royal prerogative was allowed, or rather, from the difficulty of repealing it, permitted to remain in abeyance. On the accession of Elizabeth to the throne the prerogative was not only revived, but strengthened by the Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity (1559), and these enactments have remained in force ever since, now a period of 308 years, and were only partially repealed during the past session of Parliament by the Oaths of Office Act (30 and 31 Vic., cap. 75). The Act of Supremacy, while it restored all ecclesiastical jurisdiction to the Crown, empowered the Queen to execute it by commission appointed under the Great Seal, in such manner and at such times as she should direct (Hallam Hist. Eng., Vol. i., p. 201). This authority under which several commissions sat from time to time, eventuated in the creation of the High Commission Court, a tribunal which had power, amongst others, to deprive all beneficed persons holding any doctrine contrary to the "Thirty-nine Articles." With the Court of Star-Chamber perished that of the High Commission Court, a younger birth of tyranny, but perhaps even more hateful, from the peculiar irritation of the times. It had stretched its authority beyond the tenor of the Act of Elizabeth, whereby it had been created, and which limits its competence to the correction of ecclesiastical offences, according to the known boundaries of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, assuming a right not only to imprison, but to fine the laity, which was generally reckoned illegal. The statute (16 Car. I., cap. 11), repealing that of Elizabeth, under which this High Commission existed, proceeds to take away from the Ecclesiastical Courts all power of inflicting temporal penalties in terms so large, and, doubtless, not inadvertently employed, as to render their jurisdiction nugatory. This part of the Act was repealed after the Restoration; and like the other measures of that time, with little care to prevent the recurrence of those abuses which had provoked its enactment.—(Hallam Hist. Eng., Vol. ii., pp. 98, 99). James the First appears to have jealously clung to the ecclesiastical privileges conferred on his predecessors, but an attempt was made early in his reign to encroach on that prerogative, for James's Parliaments were not so obsequious, they ventured to lift up their eyes and consider the prerogative, they saw a large province of government possessed by the King alone, and never communicated with the Parliament; they therefore deemed it absolutely necessary to circumscribe this branch of the Royal prerogative, and accordingly in the preceding session they passed a bill against the establishment of any ecclesiastical canon without the consent of Parliament, but the House of Lords, as is usual, defended the barriers of the Throne, and rejected the bill.—(Hume Hist. Eng., Vol. vi., pp. 44, 45). We next come to the period of the Revolution, and to the Declaration of Rights presented to the Prince of Orange by the Marquis of Halifax, as Speaker of the Lords. After reciting the various illegal acts committed by the late King, it states "that the pretended power of dispensing with laws by regal authority, as it hath been assumed of late, is illegal; that the commission for creating the late court of commissioners for ecclesiastical causes, and all other commissions and courts of like nature, are illegal and pernicious." This declaration was, some months afterwards, confirmed by a regular act of the legislature in the bill of rights.

In future numbers we shall continue the discussion of this question as it is a subject which has now become of much public interest.

CHANCERY ACT, 1867.

Documents.—Under the old practice the plaintiff, as a matter of course, interrogated the defendant respecting the documents in his possession or power. This practice is still not unfrequently followed; but, the discovery as to documents is commonly obtained from the defendant by summary proceeding at chamber, as follows:—

The plaintiff takes out a summons and obtains thereunder an order that the defendant do, within a given time, make an affidavit as to the documents in his possession or power, and directing him to produce, for the inspection of the plaintiff, such of the documents admitted to be in his possession, as he does not, by the affidavit, object to procedure. If the defendant, by his affidavit, objects to produce any of the documents admitted to be in his possession, and the plaintiff is advised that the objections are untenable, he applies again, by summoning the defendant at chambers for production of such documents, and in such case the summons is generally adjourned to be argued before the Court (vide Mr. Barber's statement). If the plaintiff considers the affidavit evasive or insufficient, he applies by summons at chambers, that the defendant may make a further affidavit, and an order to that effect is accordingly made, if in the opinion of the Judge, either at chambers or in Court, upon the summons being adjourned into Court, the affidavit is insufficient. This summary procedure may be resorted to by the plaintiff as soon as the defendant has appeared, and may be prosecuted whether the defendant has or has not been required to answer; and if required to answer whether he has or has not been interrogated as to documents.

When the interrogatory filed for the examination of the defendant in answer to the bill includes an interrogatory as to documents, and such interrogatory has been fully answered, the practice is to apply at chambers for production upon the admissions in the answer.

Answer.—The plaintiff having filed and served interrogatories, the defendant is compelled to put in an answer within a time limited by the orders of the Court, which is frequently extended by special order. The answer, the draft of which must be signed by counsel, does not at the commencement or in the body of it appear to be made on oath. It is, however, sworn in the same manner as an affidavit, except that the oath actually administered is of a qualified kind, i.e., the person answering swears that what is contained in the answer, so far as concerns his own act and deed, is true to his own knowledge, and so far as relates to the acts and deeds of other persons is believed by him to be true. The answer so sworn is filed in the Office of the Clerk of Record and Writs. Any schedules annexed to the answer must be filed with it.

If the plaintiff does not file interrogatories, the defendant's advisers have to consider whether he shall put in a voluntary answer or not. If his defence depends upon the simple negation of some one or more of the facts alleged by the bill, no answer is requisite, since his mere silence is, for the purposes of pleading, equivalent to a transverse by him of the case made by the bill. If, on the other hand, the defendant's case mainly depends upon independent facts not disclosed by the bill, it is often advisable for him to put in a voluntary answer, which he must do within a limited time. A voluntary answer is sworn and filed like a compulsory answer, and printed in like manner. It is not, however, liable to exception for insufficiency.

The defendant's answer, compulsory or voluntary, as the case may be, having been put in, or no answer having been required, and the time for putting in a voluntary answer having expired, the plaintiff has to determine whether he can safely carry the cause to a hearing upon the pleadings as they then stand. The answer of the defendant may show, or the plaintiff may have otherwise ascertained that the bill contains errors of statement calling for rectification, or that a defence has been or may be set up capable of being neutralized or weakened by the statement of material facts hitherto unnoticed. In these and other cases it frequently becomes advisable for the plaintiff to amend his bill.

Exceptions.—An answer commonly contains not only a discovery as to the matters inquired after by the interrogatories but also the defendant's statements of matters of defence. If plaintiff considers the answers insufficient he excepts. Exceptions, which must be settled and signed by counsel, specify the particular interrogatories or parts of interrogatories which are considered insufficient, and unless the defendant within the time prescribed by the order submits to answer as to the points excepted to, the exceptions are set down for argument before the Court. If the answer is held insufficient the same course is pursued. If a third answer is held insufficient, the defendant must put in a further answer. If the second answer is deemed insufficient the same course is pursued. If a third answer is held insufficient, the Court will order the defendant to be examined orally, and order him to stand committed until he shall have perfectly answered the interrogatories (vide Mr. Barber's statement).

THE final examination for candidates seeking admission as Attorneys will be held in the Solicitors' Hall on Saturday next, the 11th instant; and on the following Tuesday the Court of Examiners will promulgate their decision at Half-past Two o'clock. Candidates may attend personally, but it is not compulsory on them to be present.

THE SALE OF REVERSIONS.—One of the statutes passed in the recent sitting of Parliament, and which was issued on Wednesday week, was to amend the law relating to sales of reversions as administered in the courts of equity. No purchase bona fide made, and without fraud or unfair dealing, of any reversionary interest in real or personal estate, is to be hereafter opened or set aside merely on the ground of undervalue. The word "purchase" in the Act is, remarks the Law Journal, to include every kind of contract, conveyance, or assignment under or by which any beneficial interest in any kind of property may be acquired. The Act is to come into operation on the 1st day of January, 1868, and is not to apply to any purchase concerning which any suit shall be then depending.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

WEST v. LAWDAY.

Nov. 9; Dec. 4, 1867.—Will—Charge of Debts—Residuary Devise not Specific.

St. John Mason was seised under a lease for lives renewable for ever of Ballydowny, West Cleny, Farranaspig, and Groyne. In 1840 he granted a lease of Groyne for lives renewable for ever. He made his will, dated the 16th of March, 1858, by which, after reciting that he was possessed of a lease for lives renewable for ever of certain lands, which said lands were denominated Ballydowny, Cleny, and Farranaspig, he required that the aforesaid lands should, as soon as possible after his decease, be sold in the Incumbered Estates' Court, and, after payment of all his just debts, be equally divided between James West and Susanna Lawday, as tenants in common and not as joint tenants. He specified the debts affecting those lands, bequeathed legacies, and appointed the said James West residuary legatee of all his real and personal estate and effects. The testator died shortly after the date of his will, and this suit was one for the administration of his real and personal estate, and to have the rights of his devisees ascertained and declared. Master Brooke, to whom it was referred under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act, declared that the lands of Groyne did not pass under the specific devise, but passed under the residuary clause to James West. The Master's order was reversed by the late Master of the Rolls,* and by the Court of Appeal,† but affirmed by the House of Lords,‡ and the matter was remitted back to the Court of Chancery here. On taking the account it turned out that the personal estate amounted to £3 15s. only, and the question arose how the debts and legacies of the testator were to be paid, whether they were to be borne rateably by the four denominations or to be paid by the lands of Groyne exclusively. The Master decided that they were to be paid out of the lands of Groyne, and the petitioner, James West, appealed from his order.

Sullivan, Q.C., and W. Hickson, were counsel for the appellant, James West.

Lawson, Q.C., and R. W. Shekleton, for the respondent, Susanna Lawday.

The MASTER of the ROLLS held that the devise of Ballydowny, Cleny, and Farranaspig, was not a direct devise for payment of the debts, but a devise to J. West and S. Lawday, charged with the debts; that a residuary devise was, since the Statute of Wills, 1 Vic., c. 26, no longer specific, and consequently that the lands of Groyne should be applied in payment of the debts in exoneration of the other lands; and he affirmed the Master's order.

Solicitors for the petitioners, Francis H. Downing and Son.

Solicitor for the respondent, T. W. Bond.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by WM. BARLOW, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

LESLIE AND OTHERS v. CROMMELIN.

Dec. 4, 5, 6, and 9, 1867.—Specific Performance—Tenant for Life with Leasing Powers—Compensation.

The respondent is tenant for life, with leasing powers, of estates and hereditaments, including the fisheries of Lough Neagh and the River Bann, which fisheries were demised in 1811 for 61 years. This lease is still outstanding, but will expire on the 1st of May, 1872. The petitioners, as trustees for the Bann Fishing Club, obtained, in November, 1862, a sub-lease of the fishery in part of the Bann. This sub-lease was for the term of five years, at a yearly rent of £60. On the 24th of September, 1863, the respondent agreed, at a personal interview, to grant to the petitioners, as such trustees, a lease (to commence at the expiration of the lease of 1811), of the said fishery for three lives or 31 years, at a yearly rent of £60. Subsequently the respondent was advised by counsel that his leasing power did not enable him to grant a lease for longer than his own life. Thereupon the respondent refused to complete his agreement, but offered to grant a lease for his own life. The petitioners declined to accept such a lease, without receiving compensation for the difference in value between the lease which the respondent had originally promised to grant, and one for his own life; and required him to fulfil his original agreement. The respondent refused to execute a lease in excess of his power, or to give compensation. After protracted negotiations the petitioners filed this petition, which prayed for specific performance of the original agreement; or that the respondent, if his leasing power does not enable him to grant a lease for the full term agreed upon, should execute a lease for such other term as he legally could, and should compensate the petitioners for the difference in value between such lease and one for the stipulated term, and for all damage and loss occasioned to the petitioners in relation to the premises.

The respondent, by his answer, alleged, in substance, that the promise to grant the lease for three lives or 31 years, at a yearly rent of £60, had been obtained by misrepresentation, fraud, at an undervalue, and by pressure; and submitted that he should not be directed to execute a lease in excess of his leasing power; that the lease sought was a reversionary lease; and that, at all events, he should not be decreed to make compensation.

It is not material to report this case except upon the point of compensation.

The Solicitor-General, Sullivan, Q.C., and Jackson were for the petitioners.

The petitioners are entitled to compensation under the 21 & 22 Vic., c. 27; Hindley v. Emery, Law Rep., 1 Eq. 52; Ferguson v. Wilson, Law Rep., 2 Ch. Ap., 77. In the case of Ely v. Wilkin (not reported), in this country, the late Lord Chancellor exercised this jurisdiction.

Lawson, Q.C., Hugh Law, Q.C., and Bruce, for the respondent, insisted that the Court should enforce the contract so far as the respondent had power to fulfil it, and refuse to give compensation also, or should refuse to enforce any part of the contract, and leave the petitioners to sue at law for breach of contract, and in that action obtain full compensation for the breach of the entire contract. They cited Durell v. Pritchard, Law Rep., 1 Ch. Ap., 244; Sykes v. Wilde, 4 B. & Sm., 421; Locke v. Furze, Law Rep., C.P., 444; Harnett v. Yielding, 2 Sch. & Lef., 549.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, having decided that the agreement had not been obtained by misrepresentation, fraud, improper pressure, or at a gross undervalue, and that it was not one for a reversionary lease, proceeded to consider what relief should be given to the petitioners. It was argued for the respondent that the court will not specifically enforce, in part, an agreement for a lease which cannot be enforced to its full extent. But Harnett v. Yielding has not been cited upon to that extent, and in Dyas v. Cruise, 8 I. E. R., 407, it is stated that Harnett v. Yielding should not be followed to that extent. It is a clear law now that where a tenant for life is unable to give a lease for the whole term which he had promised, he must grant one to the full extent authorized by his leasing power, if the proposed lessee is willing to accept such a lease; and the lessee will be compensated for any loss sustained by reason of the agreement not being carried out to its full extent; no reason exists why I should deprive the petitioners of that right. I must, therefore, decree specific performance of the contract, so far as it is possible for the respondent, having regard to his estate in the hereditaments, to perform it specifically, and I shall declare the petitioners entitled to compensation for the difference, if any, in value between the term, which the respondent agreed to grant, and that which his leasing power enables him to give. Considering that the respondent made against the petitioners charges, for which there was no justification, of gross actual fraud, I must decree that he shall pay the costs of this suit.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law

Before DOBBS, J.

In re the Estate of WEIR JOHNSTONE and WIFE, Owners and Petitioners.

July 9th, 1867.—Construction of Will—Meaning of "Surviving Sister."

This was an application on behalf of the owners and petitioners that the Court should declare that under the will of Major-General James Armstrong, dated 27th October, 1853, upon the death of J. A. Wray, his then three surviving sisters became entitled to the lands of Faughrea (sought to be sold in this matter), in equal shares; and that Mrs. Humphrey, otherwise Bessy Wray, a sister, then deceased, did not become entitled to any share in said lands.

The question arose upon the construction to be put on the following clauses in Major-General Armstrong's will:—"To my grand nephew and godson, John Alexander Wray, I bequeath the farm of Upper Faughrea, which, however, is to be subject to the sum of £1,400 sterling, for the use and benefit of his sisters, as follows, &c. In the event of the above-named John Alexander Wray dying without legal issue, then and in that case the land or farm of Upper Faughrea, or rents thereof, shall go share and share alike amongst his surviving sisters; and in like manner should any of the above-named Maggy, Bessy, Mary Mable, Henrietta, or Adelaide Wray die before marriage, or attain the age of 21 years, then and in that case her portion is to go to her surviving sisters, share and share alike."

J. A. Wray died without issue, and at the time of his death three of his sisters were living, one whom was the female petitioner. Another of the sisters of J. A. Wray, Bessy Wray, otherwise Humphrey, married and died in the lifetime of her brother.

Judge DOBBS, considering that the representatives of Mrs. Humphrey were entitled to one-fourth of the land under the will, approved of the title in the petitioners only to one-fourth.

Flanagan, Q.C., and H. Fitzgibbon, for the owners and petitioners.

Shaw, Q.C., and Byrne, for the trustees of Mr. Humphrey. They cited Buckle v. Fawcett (4 H., 536); Haddely v. Adams (22 B., 271); Cripps v. Wolcott (4 Mad., 11); Re Gregson's Trusts (2 De G. F. and S., 428); Young v. Robertson (4 Mag., 314); Olney v. Betts (3 Drewry).

DOBBS, J.—Upon this will the principles of construction are clear; the difficulty is only in their application. The testator left this farm to J. A. Wray, and in the event of his dying without issue, then it was to go share and share alike amongst his surviving sisters. If the words of the will stopped there, the sisters of J. A. Wray, living at his death, would be the parties to take. But the difficulty arises from the words which follow. What meaning is to be given to the word "surviving?" On one side it is said the meaning is to be the same as if the following words were not there. But to put upon it that construction the words that follow must be altered in their meaning, and should run thus:—"In like manner, should any of the survivors of the above-named, &c., die, &c." The other construction to be given is this:—In case the brother died without issue, the farm is to go amongst his surviving sisters, the word "surviving" to be interpreted by the following words. If the only words to be construed were the latter ones, it is clear that the period for ascertaining who was a surviving sister would be when she attained her twenty-first birth-day, or married; and I am of opinion that the words "surviving sisters" in the latter clause define the meaning to be attached to them in the former—i.e., a sister twenty-one years of age, or married, becomes a surviving sister in the latter clause, and in the former. If that construction be correct, when Mrs. Humphrey outlived her marriage, her interest became an ascertained interest.

July 13th.—Irish Bankrupt and Insolvent Act, 1857—Arrangement Clauses—Petition by Creditor for Sale of Arranging Debtor's Estate.

This was a motion to make absolute the conditional order for sale. The petitioner had recovered three judgments against the owner of the following dates:—28th Nov., 1866; 28th Nov., 1866; and 8th Jan., 1867; and respectively registered same as mortgages against the owner's estate on 1st Dec., 1866; 1st Dec., 1866; and 9th Jan., 1867. The latest in date of these judgments was obtained upon foot of a bill of exchange accepted by the owner on the 3rd August, 1866, and payable in four months. On the 26th November, 1866, the owner obtained an order from the Court of Bankruptcy under the arrangement clauses protecting his person and property from process until 7th Dec., or further order, of which order the petitioner had notice. On the 11th January the owner's proposal was confirmed by the Court. Subsequently to this the petitioner presented his petition for sale in the Landed Estates' Court.

judgments and that recovered on the 3rd and registered the 9th January. Was the petitioner, in the month of November, a creditor in respect of the four months' bill of exchange, within the meaning of the Act? In a much stronger case (in re Kennedy's Estate, reported supra, p. 442) he (Judge Dobbs) had recently held that a party in such a position was a creditor. His lordship referred to section 252. Any person who had given credit was a creditor: a party who was interested in the assets was a creditor, although he might not be in a position to take proceedings against his debtor. The meaning of the decision in in re Kennedy's Estate (17 Ir. Ch. R., 104) was, that when an arrangement in the Court of Bankruptcy was pending, which might or might not be carried into effect, the Landed Estates' Court ought not to sell the estate of the debtor. The present application was premature. The motion to make absolute the order should be refused with costs. The petition would not be dismissed, and the conditional order would stand.

[The production of the order granting protection having been insisted on by the counsel for the petitioner, it was at length produced, and, upon inspection, it was conceded by the counsel for the owner that it did not extend beyond the 7th December.]

Judge DOBBS said that he would not make the order for sale absolute at present, and that the costs of the motion should be reserved until further order.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Judge BERWICK.

Re SHAW & Co.

December, 1867.—Petition for Adjudication by Trader against Himself—Trust Deed—Annulling Adjudication.

This case is reported at page 17, IRISH LAW TIMES, and the conclusion then come to was, that the adjudication upon the trader's own petition should be allowed to stand, with a view to carry out a composition after bankruptcy, and to allow a trust deed that had been executed to stand; but it was found that this could not be legally done, and Lynch now made an application to the Court to annul the adjudication had upon the creditor's own petition, and allow a new petition to be filed at the suit of a creditor who was no party to the trust deed.

It was decided that where a trader presented his own petition, after executing a trust deed, by which all his property had been assigned for the benefit of creditors, and his trade stopped, that property could not be administered under the bankruptcy, inasmuch as there was no relation back, and the trust deed remained undisturbed, whereas if the petition for adjudication had been by a creditor the trust deed would be set aside. Ex parte Pearse, 22 L. T., 160; Stephenson v. Newenham, 13 C. B., 285; Ex parte Philpot, 1 De Gex Reports, 346.

JUDGE BERWICK.—Why should not the trust deed be set aside in one adjudication as well as the other?

Lynch, the cases cited show that where the bankrupt obtains adjudication on his own petition, that adjudication will not disturb a trust deed. The declaration of insolvency that had been filed when the trader presented his own petition, could stand as the act of bankruptcy, and what he wanted the Court to do, was to annul the former adjudication and permit a creditor not a party to the deed to present a new petition.

JUDGE BERWICK, after having looked into the authorities, granted the application.

THE CONFINEMENT OF CRIMINAL LUNATICS.

The following circular has been addressed to the magistrates throughout Ireland:—

Dublin Castle, 30th Dec., 1867.

GENTLEMEN,

1. I am directed by the Lord Lieutenant to request your special attention to the 9th and 10th sections of Act passed last session (30 & 31 Vic., c. 118), altering the law relating to the custody of dangerous lunatics and dangerous idiots in Ireland, the principal provisions of which are as follows:—

2. The 9th section abolishes, from and after the 1st January, 1868, the committal of dangerous lunatics or idiots to gaols, and substitutes their removal, under a warrant by two justices, to the district lunatic asylum.

3. The person brought before the two justices must be proved, to their satisfaction, to have been "discovered and apprehended under circumstances denoting a derangement of mind, and a purpose of committing some crime for which, if committed, such person would be liable to be indicted."

4. The justices are to call to their assistance the medical officer, or, if there be more than one, the nearest available medical officer, of the dispensary district in which they shall be at the time; and if there shall not be any such medical officer available, then the nearest available medical officer of any neighbouring dispensary district, who shall examine such person without fee or reward.

5. If the medical officer certifies that the person is a dangerous lunatic or dangerous idiot, the justices may, by warrant under their hands and seals, direct that the person be taken to the district lunatic asylum.

6. Any relation or friend may take the lunatic or idiot under his care and protection, if he shall enter into sufficient recognizance for his or her peaceable behaviour or safe custody, before two justices of the peace, the chairman of quarter sessions of the county, or a judge of one of the superior courts.

7. The words quoted from the Act in paragraph 3 are identical with those in the 10th section of 8 & 9 Vict., cap. 107; and as instances have occurred of committals being made under that Act, where there was no evidence of a purpose of committing any indictable offence, I am to urge the importance of strict observance of this as well as the other directions of the present Act. It is possible that the applications to magistrates for warrants may be numerous, but as each institution is constructed for only a limited number of patients, care should be taken that the power of committal to a district lunatic asylum should only be exercised in respect of persons who, in the opinion of the magistrates, would be likely, if left at large, to commit acts of violence and crime.—I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant, MAYO.

CAUTION TO SHERIFFS' OFFICERS.

At the civil bill quarter sessions, held Dec. 31, before Echlin Molyneux, Esq., Q.C., a farmer named Michl. Meighan sued Thomas Rothwell, Esq., High Sheriff of Meath, for £10, for loss alleged to be sustained by reason of defendant's servants, as bailiffs, entering upon his lands, and extorting an illegal sum of money at the suit of one James Kealey.

The evidence of Meighan went to show that in July last a sheriff's bailiff, named Michael Mathews, jun., went upon his lands to execute a decree for £6 14s. 1d. Defendant (Meighan) then paid him £3 on account. After giving him the £3, they both went to a public house, and drank together for several hours. Ten days afterwards the bailiff again went to the farm with an assistant, and demanded £7 12s. 6d., on a threat of selling his horse and pigs instanter. Meighan paid him the amount demanded, which, with the £3, was considerably over the lawful amount and the bailiff's fees.

The bailiff was examined, and confessed that he had got drunk with Meighan, whom he suspected of taking £2 out of his pocket.

Mr. Forde, on the part of the plaintiff, read the section of the Act regulating the conduct of sheriffs' bailiffs, which imposed a penalty, not exceeding £20, for extorting or taking any excessive sum on a decree.

Mr. Hinds, for the defendant, contended that the sheriff was not liable in this case for the acts of the bailiff.

The Chairman said that he should dismiss the decree as against the High Sheriff. In reference to the transaction on the part of the bailiff, he did not believe that Meighan had taken the £2 from him of which he spoke; but Meighan, in a great measure, had brought the consequences on himself, by going to carouse with the bailiff. There was two ways of dealing with the bailiff, one of which was to dismiss him, and the other to fine him £2. He would adopt the latter course.

NATIONAL AND LEGAL OBITUARY FOR 1867.

The close of the year naturally induces us to look around and mark the vacancies that death has caused; and when men of elevated rank, distinguished ability, or acknowledged genius, are passing from amongst us, and leaving to us the memory of their worth or failings, it becomes not only a wholesome study, but a duty, to bestow some thoughtfulness and regard upon the lives and deaths of persons who held eminence in society, and were placed by genius or destiny prominently before mankind. It cannot, therefore, be uninteresting to glance at an obituary including such names as Rosse, Blackburne, and Dargan. It is remarkable that the University of Dublin has been deprived of its three principal members—namely, the Chancellor, the Vice-Chancellor, and the Provost. The list comprises:—

Thomas, eighth Earl of Carnwath, son in-law to Henry Grattan, aged seventy years.

Robert, fourth Earl of Kingston, an imbecile for some years prior to his death, aged sixty-nine years.

Robert, fifth Earl of Mayo, a Representative Peer, aged seventy years.

William, third Earl of Rosse, K.P., a Representative Peer, Chancellor of the University of Dublin, Lord Lieutenant of the King's County, Colonel of the King's County Militia, and ex President of the Royal Society; one of whom Ireland had just reason to be proud; his transcendent eminence as a mathematician and his world-wide fame as an astronomer were fully equalled by the numerous virtues with which he adorned his exalted position—aged sixty seven years.

Lord Dunkellin (eldest son of Ulick, first Marquis of Clanricarde), M.P. for the county of Galway, and late Lieutenant-Colonel Coldstream Guards, aged forty years.

William, sixth Viscount Barrington, aged seventy-three years.

Margaret, second Baroness Keith, in her own right (Comtesse de Flahault)—aged seventy nine years.

Lord Ronald Hamilton—son of his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant—at the early age of eighteen years.

Lord Hubert Butler, Cornet 9th Lancers, aged nineteen years.

The Right Rev. William Higgin, D.D., Bishop of Derry and Raphoe 1853-67, previously Bishop of Limerick. This justly-esteemed prelate greatly assisted in the restoration and improvement of the Cathedral of Derry; aged seventy-four years.

The Right Hon. Francis Blackburne, twice Lord High Chancellor of Ireland (1852, 1866), Vice-Chancellor of the University of Dublin. This pre-eminently distinguished lawyer filled with credit the numerous offices of Serjeant-at-Law, Attorney-General, Master of the Rolls, Lord Chief Justice, Lord Justice of Appeal, and Lord Chancellor—"a great man has passed away from us; one whose honour was as unsullied as his genius, learning, and eloquence were distinguished"—aged eighty five years.

The Hon. Edmund Hayes, Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench (1859-66)—"an upright and estimable judge"—aged sixty-two years.

The Hon. George Handcock, Grand Secretary to the Freemasons of Ireland, and Vice-President of the Royal Dublin Society; formerly Captain Antrim Militia; a most respected and valuable member of very many commercial and charitable boards in the city of Dubliu, aged sixty-five years.

Sir James George Dalton Fitzgerald, ninth Baronet, of Castle Ishen, county of Cork, aged thirty-six years.

The Rev. Sir William Isaac Macartney, second Baronet, of Lish, county Armagh, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years.

Sir Morgan George Crofton, third Baronet, of Mohill House, county of Leitrim, aged seventy-eight years.

The Hon. and Rev. Sir Christopher Dillon Bellew, second Baronet, of Mountbellew, county of Galway, a priest of the Society of Jesus, aged forty-nine years.

Sir Arthur Charles Magenis, G.C.B., late British Minister at various European Courts, aged sixty-five years.

Sir Anthony George Perrier, C.B., of Cork, British Consul at Brest, aged seventy-four years.

Sir Matthew Richard Sausse, late Chief Justice of Bombay, aged fifty-eight years.

The Rev. Richard MacDonnell, D.D., LL.D., Provost Trinity College, Dublin; closing a brilliant University career at the advanced age of eighty years.

John Anster, LL.D., Regius Professor of Civil Law in the University of Dublin; a scholar and poet of a very high order, and justly celebrated for his faithful and elegant translation of Goethe's Faust, aged sixty-eight years.

George Richard Barry, Esq., M.P. for the county of Cork, aged forty-one years.

William Dargan, Esq., D.L., the patriotic originator of the Dublin Industrial Exhibition of 1853, which eventuated in the Irish National Gallery. "In him Ireland has lost one of her foremost men; industry one of her ablest chiefs; the sons of toil, one of their best instructors and examples"—aged sixty-eight years.

Francis Codd, Esq., Secretary to the Chamber of Commerce. The demise of this gentleman has left a blank in the commercial world that cannot easily be filled up—aged fifty-nine years.

John D'Alton, Esq., M.R.I.A., for very many years a writer upon, and assiduous searcher of, Irish historical antiquities, aged seventy-eight years.

Maxwell Hamilton, Esq., Crown Solicitor for the North

East Circuit, and Solicitor to the Dublin Metropolitan Police, aged sixty-five years.

Robert Hitchcock, Esq., late Master of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland. Mr. Hitchcock was instrumental in preparing the bill which eventually passed into law in 1844 for the regulation of the official establishments of the Superior Courts of Common Law, aged sixty-five.

The Hon. Henry Sugden, eldest son of Lord St. Leonards; for many years joint Registrar of the Court of Chancery—aged fifty-five.

Michael Murphy, Esq., one of the Official Assignees of the Court of Bankruptcy; seldom has an official won more general esteem, or will be remembered with more kindly regard than the late official assignee.

George Wyse, Esq., late one of the Divisional Magistrates of the Metropolitan Police District of Dublin, aged seventy-four.

Charles W. D. E. Orpen, Esq., one of the new-appointed District Judges of Jamaica, second son of the respected President of the Incorporated Law Society.

Wm. Westropp Brereton, Esq., Q.C., Chairman of the Quarter Sessions Bench of Galway; he was always popular, both as an advocate and in his judicial capacity.

Alleged Liability of Editors.—Our readers will remember that an action for libel was tried at the last Gloucestershire Assizes, in which Mr. Edward Burges, then clerk of the Improvement Committee, was the plaintiff, and Mr. Peter Stewart Macliver, the proprietor of the Western Daily Press, the defendant. The action arose out of some letters which appeared in the defendant's paper under the signature of "Ex-Councillor," and which in the opinion of the plaintiff contained libellous imputations upon his character. The jury found for the plaintiff, with £25 damages. Prior to, as well as at, and subsequent to, the trial, the defendant assumed that "Ex-Councillor" was a bona fide correspondent; he denied that any imputation was made on the character of Mr. Burges; but he asserted that if Mr. Burges chose to conceive that any such imputations were made, he (the defendant) would throw his shield as publisher over the real or supposed correspondent, and take the responsibility upon himself in vindication of the privileges of the press, and in the interests of the ratepayers of Bristol. Although the verdict was adverse to the defendant, his magnanimous conduct did not, of course, escape recognition. A committee was formed for the purpose of presenting Mr. Macliver with a testimonial; subscriptions were said to be coming in from all quarters; but although some months have now elapsed, no public intimation, so far as we are aware, has yet appeared as to the shape the testimonial is to take, or whether the subscription list is yet finally closed. While the action "Burges v. Macliver" was pending, some few papers, at a distance, adopting the tone assumed by the defendant, published sympathetic articles, which were duly transferred to the columns of the Daily Press. It so happened that one of these papers—the Somerset County Gazette—became involved about the same time in an action for libel, the plaintiff in which was a Mr. Chorley, who was also an attorney. The Taunton newspaper proprietor, following the example of his Bristol brother, published his view of the plaintiff's case; and in the belief that it might not prejudicially affect the verdict in the action Burges v Macliver, Mr. Hepburn, who at that time was one of the editorial staff of the Daily Press, transferred to that paper the article from the Somerset County Gazette. Shortly after its appearance Mr. Macliver was served with a writ at the suit of Mr. Chorley, and not only was an apology promptly made, but Mr. Hepburn voluntarily wrote to Mr. Chorley stating that the article in question had been given out by him, in the absence of his employer, as a mere article of news, without the slightest knowledge either of Mr. Chorley or of the proprietor of the Somerset County Gazette, and therefore without animus on one side or the other. The proceedings against the proprietor of the Daily Press were not finally abandoned, however, till Monday, the 2nd inst., on which day there again appeared an apology in a prominent part of the paper, and on that very same day, when Mr. Macliver had obtained absolution, a writ, at the suit of Mr. Chorley, was served on Mr. Hepburn, who had in the meantime quitted his engagement on the Daily Press.

The Jury System.—Some days ago it was our duty to point to the practical failure of the legal tribunals in cases of intricacy, in Dublin, and to the reproach thus cast upon the system of trial by jury. Men will cease to seek decision of their differences in a court of justice if it continues to show itself powerless to determine between them, and can do no more than inflict upon both parties to the suit an enormous fine in the shape of fees to lawyers for an abortive result. Another minor scandal to the jury system which seems also to require notice is the open discussion by jurymen themselves, in the morning journal, of matters that belong to the privacy of their deliberations—as, for instance, whether this or that proposition were for A. or B., or held aloof from any opinion. The dignity of justice is not promoted by such forgetfulness of the responsibilities of the juror's position.—Dublin Evening Mail.

A Canadian Juryman.—The Hamilton (C.W.) Times says that at the Stratford assizes a few days since an important case was on trial which occupied the attention of the court with the hearing of the prosecution until evening. The jury was then dismissed with the usual caution until the following morning, when the defence was to have been proceeded with; but on the jury being recalled, one of the number was found to be absent. Diligent inquiry was made for the delinquent, and it was finally ascertained at the hotel where he had sojourned that he had taken his departure in the morning for home, to be present at an agricultural fair, leaving word that his mind was already satisfied concerning the case in question, and that he should return in the evening after the evidence for the defence had been received in time to join the remainder of the jury in rendering a verdict. The delinquent on the next day made his appearance in court, when Judge Draper, pronouncing the conduct of the juryman the most flagrant contempt of court that had ever come under his observation, imposed upon him a fine of 100 dols.

The Law Respecting Explosive Compounds.—At the present moment it is desirable that everybody—Fenians or otherwise—should clearly understand that the police have summary powers of seizing and destroying these deadly agents. An Act of Parliament, passed in 1860, prohibits any person, not being a dealer or manufacturer, from keeping more than fifty pounds of gunpowder in any building or place within two miles of any town. If more is kept, the overplus is liable to be forfeited, and the person keeping it is subjected to a penalty of 2s. for every pound beyond the quantity allowed. The same act prohibits, under severe penalties, the possession, in an unlicensed place, of more than one ounce of "fulminating mercury or other preparation or composition of equally explosive power" in a dry state, or more than eight ounces mixed with 25 per cent. of water. Justices of the peace have authority to direct the seizure and removal of such substances as gunpowder kept in unlawful quantities. These regulations are of course wholly independent of the law respecting the possession of such goods with a criminal intention. Where explosives are employed for the malicious destruction of any building, and when the life of any person is thus endangered, the offender is liable to penal servitude for life. The mere keeping of explosive compounds for a felonious purpose is punishable by two years' imprisonment.

On Tuesday two bailiffs presented a warrant at the shop of Mr. Carr, the biscuit manufacturer, at Carlisle, authorizing them to seize two sacks of meal for payment of certain church tithes due to the Rev. Mr. Petitt, but which Mr. Carr, being a Quaker, refused on conscientious grounds to pay. The meal was afterwards sold by auction at the Market Cross.

ABOLITION OF THE TITLE OF AN ANCIENT CITY COURT.—On Tuesday the title of the London Sheriff's Court, which has existed for many years, ceased, and the processes issued in future will bear the title of the "City of London Court." The Sheriff's Court of London traced its descent from the Court of Conscience, first established in the city in the 9th of Henry VIII. Although the title of the court is altered, the especial privileges hitherto enjoyed by the Sheriff's Court are believed not to be destroyed, though the name of the court, which has existed for so many years, has been abolished.

"HONOURABLE" SENATORS.—The United States Senate has voted to omit henceforth the title of "honourable," which has always been affixed to the name of each senator in the journals and in the official papers of that body.

The Louisiana Convention has recommended that the present system of laws in that State should be revoked, and that the common law of England should be adopted.

PROPERTY FOR SALE.

TO BE SOLD, BY PRIVATE CONTRACT, the following well-circumstanced Property, held in Fee, and subject to merely nominal Head Rents, situate in the Barony of Raphoe, and County of Donegal:—

Denominations	Contents Ordnance Survey			Tenants' Rents			Head Rents and Tithe			Profit Rent
	A.	R.	P. Statute	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
No. 1. Lands of Carrickbrack	134	2	24	82	18	0	5	4	4	77	13	8
No. 2. Lands of Cooleyalinn and Demesne - -	50	1	0	82	10	2	6	4	9	76	5	5
No. 3. House and Lands of Castlefin, and Tenements in the Town of Castlefin -	91	1	2	388	10	11	10	8	5	378	2	6

This Property lies in one of the best cultivated and most peaceable Districts in the North of Ireland. It is moderately let, and the tenants have, most of them, substantial interests in their holdings.

No. 1 is only two miles distant from the Market Town of Raphoe, and is in the hands of two Tenants only, who hold by Lease for their own lives respectively. Nos. 2 and 3 are on the Line of the Finn Valley Railway, and within five miles of Strabane. No. 2 is in the occupation of three Tenants, two of whom hold by Lease. No. 3 comprises the Town of Castlefin, and Town Parks and Lands in its vicinity. Many of the Tenants on it hold by Lease, and several in Perpetuity.

Castlefin, where there is a Station of the above Railway, is a Fair and Market Town, and until lately, was the seat of a considerable Manufacture of Cotton Fabrics, which could easily be revived, as the buildings are well adapted for the purpose, and skilled labour is still abundant in the neighbourhood. There is in the immediate vicinity of the Town a comfortable Residence, with suitable Garden and Grounds.

The above will be Sold together, or in Lots, as may be agreed on.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the undersigned, who is authorized to receive proposals for the purchase up to the 1ST DAY OF FEBRUARY next.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 50.] SATURDAY, JANUARY 11, 1868. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

THE year which has just closed has left its mark in the legal history of Ireland, and has been eventful in many ways. Some of our most eminent lawyers, Judges and practising Barristers, have departed from the scene of their labours, and though others have sprung to the front equally competent to discharge their duties, yet the new men cannot entirely fill the place, in our consideration, that those we have lost so long held. It is not our intention to go through the list, which is unfortunately too long, nor to enter into an account of the labours and successes of the dead, as that has been done already in the columns of the IRISH LAW TIMES; but our readers will not easily forget the distinguished reputation of the Right Hon. Francis Blackburne, though for some time he had withdrawn from public life and the duties of office, and was enjoying a well-earned lettered ease. Those whose practice brought them into the Court of Queen's Bench, or those who met him in private life, will long cherish the memory of the Hon. Edmund Hayes, who well deserved the title of "an upright and estimable Judge." Secluded scholars as well as busy lawyers owe a debt of gratitude to Dr. Anster; the former for his faithful and elegant translation of Gœthe's Faust, the grandest poem of modern days, and the latter for his long-continued labours as Professor of Civil Law in the University of Dublin. Nor was John D'Alton less distinguished as a scholar, though in another sphere, and there are few who have explored, with such diligence and success, the fruitful mine of Irish antiquities. D'Alton is equally remarkable for his historical and his antiquarian labours. Many others have passed away during the year, whose services, if less notable, were not less useful to their country, and whose loss we must lament.

But as if in compensation for the loss of her lawyers, Ireland has been presented with an unusual number of laws for her present and future welfare. To simply enumerate them all would take more space than is available in a single article; nor is it necessary, since the subscribers to the IRISH LAW TIMES have been presented with a complete set of the Acts of last Session which relate to Ireland, set out in full, with schedules, &c., and those relating to England and Scotland which are of general interest; as, for instance, the Representation of the People Act further to amend the laws relating to the representation of the people in England and Wales, or, as it is familiarly called, the "Reform Act."

We shall, therefore, only glance at those which are of the greatest importance to the profession, premising that on the whole the innovations are decided improvements, though there are undoubtedly details about some which may be improved by experience. Two bills, however, were shelved last Session, the passing of which as early as possible will be a matter of very great importance to the public in general, and to the legal profession in Ireland. One was the bill to amend the law of libel introduced by Sir Colman O'Loghlen, in which all the reading and speaking public are interested, but particularly those persons connected with the Press, both as proprietors and editors of newspapers, and which, if it had become law, would have settled the case lately brought against Mr. Walters, one of the proprietors of the Times—a case discussed at the time in these columns. The other was a Bill to amend the Common Law Procedure of Ireland; its object was to assimilate the practice of the Irish with that of the English Courts, which would be, to a great extent, reverting to the former practice of the Irish Courts.

Undoubtedly the most important Act, relating to the profession, passed last year, was "The Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867." The main features and provisions of this Act have been already treated at great length in these columns, and we need not, therefore, further revert to them. The rules and orders thereunder are now in force, but the list of fees (except those relating to stamps) is not yet published. Nor have the former been drawn up in the spirit of those laid down for the practice of the Court of Chancery in England, to the extent that is desired, especially when we remember that an assimilation of the equity practice in both countries was one of the principal objects to be attained. We anticipate that some further General Orders will yet be required for the more perfect working of the Act.

The next most important Act of the Session was that "To extend the Jurisdiction, alter, and amend the Procedure and Practice, and to regulate the establishment of the Court of Admiralty in Ireland." Its provisions have also been discussed at length, but the most important clause to the profession, generally, is that stated in section 25, Part I., by which it is enacted, that all Barristers-at-Law, Attorneys-at-Law, and Solicitors, are to be at liberty to practise in the High Court of Admiralty, special provisions being made by sections 120, 121, 122, 123, for providing fit compensation to the Registrar of the Court of Delegates, and to Proctors for the loss of their exclusive privileges.

We should not omit to mention Cap. IV. which is an Act to open the Professorships of Anatomy and Chirurgery, Chemistry, and Botany, in the University of Dublin, to all persons, irrespective of their creed, and to amend the Act 40 Geo. III., c. 84 (I), nor cap. LXII., which is an Act to abolish a certain Declaration, commonly called the Declaration against Transubstantiation, and to render it unnecessary to take, make, or subscribe the same as a qualification for the exercise or enjoyment of any civil office, franchise, or right. This last Act applies to Great Britain as well as to Ireland.

IN our last number we discussed the ecclesiastical prerogative of the Crown, and traced the privileges conferred by successive Parliaments on the sovereigns down to the period of the accession of William and Mary, and the passing of the Bill of Rights. That enactment would seem, to some extent, to have limited the Royal power in dealing absolutely with Church Government, but according to Hallam—"Except in the article of the dispensing prerogative we cannot say on comparing the Bill of Rights with what is proved to be the law of statutes, or generally esteemed to be such on the authority of our best writers, that it took away any legal power of the Crown or enlarged the limits of popular and parliamentary privilege." Lord Coke before he had learned the bolder tone of his declining years, lays it down that no Act of Parliament can bind the King from any prerogative which is inseparable from his person, but this high and dangerous prerogative was subject to several limitations, which none but the grosser flattery of monarchy could deny, and it was agreed among lawyers that the King could not dispense with the common law.—(Hallam Hist. Eng., Vol. iii., pp. 60, 61.)

An Act of the Irish Parliament provides that the sovereigns of the realm ought to enjoy the stile, majesty, power, preheminence, jurisdiction, prerogative, and authority of Kings and Queens of the same, and that the Sovereign is entitled in Ireland to all privileges, prerogatives, and preheminences-royal—(Ir. Stat. 4 Wm. and Mary, cap. 1, ss. 1 and 2), and a further Act of the Irish legislature confirmed to George the First the same powers and privileges.

We have now traced, historically, from the reign of Henry the Eighth to the accession of the present dynasty, the supremacy of the British Sovereign as head of the Established Church of Great Britain and Ireland.

The next division of the subject, which can be very briefly considered, is the creation of chaplains to minister to the spiritual wants of the army, for although the present organization does not date very far back, we yet find that in the olden time such functionaries were deemed necessary to the welfare of our troops, that every regiment enrolled had its chaplain, even before the time when the nucleus of the present standing army was formed in the reign of Charles the Second; for our present purpose it is quite unnecessary to dwell on the privileges conferred by the Crown on regimental chaplains in those days, for inasmuch as corps were hastily embodied, and as hastily disbanded, were either on the march to some scene of action, or merely encamped or billetted temporarily, the question of their being domiciled as parishioners could hardly have occurred.

The first permanent regiments embodied which exist to the present day, and form the premier regiments of the regular army of the state, or perhaps, more correctly speaking, the household troops of the Crown, were General Monck's regiment of Coldstream Guards, one regiment of horse, and one formed from the troops brought from Dunkirk; these corps then constituted the army of the British empire, and in 1662 only amounted in all to some 5,000 men, a force small even in those days, but the standing army, though it has now attained to large and formidable proportions, is yet, when compared with those of other nations, particularly of the Continent of Europe, small. But although small when compared with others, the British army forms a large institution in the State, some seventy thousand men being required permanenty for the home garrisons of the British Islands, not counting those which garrison our Colonial possessions in conjunction with local forces. Such a large community must surely require some special machinery to care for its religious necessities, and it would appear that clergymen who were conversant with the habits and customs of soldiers, were those who were socially best fitted to minister to their wants. By this passing expression of opinion as to what we consider the requirements of a special class of men, we do not wish to offer any judgment as to what the state of the law is on the subject, for that has to be decided by a high and competent tribunal. What we do mean to convey is that no matter how the case of Mills v. Craig may be finally decided, army chaplains are a necessity and must be provided, even if it be, as in the case of the navy, statutably. The maritime branch of Her Majesty's forces is amply provided for by the 22 Geo. II., cap. 33, s. 2, which enacts—"That all commanders, captains, and officers in or belonging to any of His Majesty's ships or vessels of war shall cause the public worship of Almighty God according to the Liturgy of the Church of England, established by law, to be solemnly, orderly, and reverently performed in their respective ships, and shall take care that all prayers and preaching by the Chaplains in Holy Orders of the respective ships be performed diligently, and that the Lord's Day be observed according to law."

If, however, there should be any legislation required to legalize the appointment of army chaplains, care should be taken to amply protect the vested rights of all beneficed clergymen to the emoluments arising from fees or otherwise within their respective parishes; that right being protected we can hardly think that any clergyman will object to receive aid in the cure of souls within his parish.

In our next article on this subject we shall consider the position of the Sovereign as head of two of the great establishments of the State—the Church and the Army; for although Parliament annually controls the power of the Crown over the army by passing the Mutiny Act, yet the Royal prerogative in matters of church government is not limited, unless the decision of the learned Judge of the Provincial Court of Dublin be upheld by the High Court of Delegates, that "The Queen cannot dispense with the Common Law Authority."

A NOTICE has been posted in the offices of the Clerks of the Rules of the Common Law Courts, drawing the attention of the profession to the 129th General Order, framed under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act (1854). The Rule referred to is as follows:—"All requisitions for Rules and Orders, obtained in any of said Courts, shall be lodged with the Clerk of the Rules on the day of obtaining such Rule or Order." Now such a rule is not only too stringent, but, we say, is impracticable, and it should at once be relaxed and a new one substituted, giving a reasonable time, say two or three days, to the attorney getting the order, to lodge in the proper office the duty payable thereon. Hitherto it has been the practice in the Rules Offices to receive requisitions on orders pronounced by the Common Law Courts, or by Judges in Chamber, up to the last day of the Term in which the order was made. Such, however, has been what we may term a practice of courtesy on behalf of the officers who carry out the important business and onerous duties devolving on the Rules department; but while these officers, in proper cases, allow the profession all the latitude in their power, they are obliged to obey the mandatory wording of an order such as the 129th. The Judges have power and authority to alter and amend the old rules, or make new General Orders for carrying out the Common Law Procedure Act. We, therefore, trust that the matter may speedily be brought to their notice, with a view of either abrogating or amending what may prove a vexatious regulation.

SHAREHOLDERS AND THE INCOME-TAX.—We understand it has just been settled by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, after much deliberation and correspondence, that a shareholder in several joint-stock companies may claim to be assessed separately for income-tax in all or any of them, in order that he may deduct the losses sustained in one from the profits made in another.

The supreme Court of the United States has just decided that it is not the business of Congress to settle rights under treaties, except purely political rights; that work falling to the judiciary.

WILLIAMS v. MAYNE.

Nov. 23, 25; Dec. 4, 1867.—Married Woman—Reversionary Interest in Personalty—Election.

By a settlement executed on the marriage of Joseph St. Clair Mayne and Rachel Bernard, a sum of £1,000, vested in trustees, was declared to be held by them, in trust, to pay the interest to Rachel for life, and after her death, in trust, for all or any of the children of the marriage, as the husband should appoint, and in default of appointment, equally. There was issue of the marriage, the petitioner, Rachel Williams, and three sons. Joseph St. C. Mayne, by his will appointed to the petitioner and two of the sons one shilling each, and the remainder of the £1,000 to the third son, James Arthur Mayne, and Joseph St. C. Mayne, jun., his grandson. The latter not being an object of the power £500 of the fund remained unappointed, and became divisible, subject to the life interest of Rachel Mayne, between the petitioner and the two other sons. The testator bequeathed the interest of £400 to the petitioner for her separate use. He died in 1863, and this suit was for the administration of his assets, and was referred to Master Litton, under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act. The Master, by an order of the 16th of August, 1867, declared that inasmuch as the petitioner was a married woman, living apart from her husband, she could not make any valid or binding election between the bequest to her under her father's will, and her reversionary interest in the trust fund under the settlement, and that, until the petitioner could elect, the dividends on the legacy should be impounded, that is, until the death either of Rachel Mayne or the petitioner's husband, and if her husband survived, until he should consent to her obtaining same when competent to make such election. The petitioner appealed from the order.

THE IMPERIAL MERCANTILE CREDIT ASSOCIATION (LIMITED) v. THE NEWRY AND ARMAGH RAILWAY COMPANY, and THE JOINT-STOCK DISCOUNT COMPANY (LIMITED).

Dec. 10, 11, 21, 1867.—

The petitioners are holders of statutable bonds issued by the Newry and Armagh Railway Company, pursuant to their borrowing powers. The Newry and Armagh Railway Company have also issued Lloyd's bonds, to a large amount, in excess of their borrowing powers, which have been exercised to their full extent. Some of the holders of these (Lloyd's) bonds, obtained judgment thereon, and converted their judgments into judgment mortgages. The respondents, the Joint-Stock Discount Company, holding such mortgages as securities for £22,803 19s. 5d., obtained a receiver over the rents, tolls, fares, and other profits of the Newry and Armagh Railway Company.

The receipts of the Newry and Armagh Railway Company are insufficient, after paying their working expenses, to defray the interest on all their debts, and all the shares have been fully paid up. The petitioners submitted that the statutable mortgages obtained by the holders of Lloyd's bonds, were puisne to the statutable bonds held by the petitioners, who prayed declarations that their bonds are valid and binding on the Newry and Armagh Railway Company; that the bondholders are entitled to a special lien for the amounts of their bonds; and that these sums are a lien upon, and are well charged on and payable out of the tolls, fares, and other property and effects of the Newry and Armagh Railway Company, and its undertaking in priority to the Joint-Stock Discount Company, and to all creditors of, and incumbrancers on the tolls, fares, and other property and effects thereof. The petitioners also prayed that the receiver obtained by the Joint-Stock Discount Company, should be extended to this matter, and directed to apply, after defraying the working expenses, the balances in paying the interest due to the bondholders in priority over the Joint-Stock Discount Company.

The respondents submitted that the Lloyd's bonds were not puisne to the demands of the petitioners.

Walshe, Q.C., Palles, Q C., and George Foley, for the petitioners, contended that under the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act, s. 44, and the Acts of the Newry and Armagh Railway Company, the petitioners were entitled to a special lien on the tolls, or other property or effects of the Railway Company; that the petitioners need not proceed at law, and recover judgment, and issue execution before suing in a Court of Equity; and that the only legal remedies available were practically worthless, as the tolls could not be seized under an execution by fi. fa., and a proceeding under the garnishee clauses would be impracticable. They cited Russell v. The East Anglian Railway Company, 3 MacN. and Gor., 125; Ames v. The Trustees of the Birkenhead Docks, 20 Beav., 332; Neate v. The Duke of Marlborough, 3 Myl. and Cr., 407; Law v. The Indisputable London Life Insurance Company, 1 Kaye and John, 223; Bowen v. The Brecon Railway Company, Law Rep. 3 Eq., 541; Gardner v. The London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, (No. 1.) Law Rep., 2 Ch. Ap., 201; Dumville v. Ashbrooke, 3 Russ., 98, note: Hammond v. Messenger, 9 Sim., 327; Taylor v. Salmon, 4 Myl. and Cr., 134; Furness v. The Caterham Railway Company, 27 Beav., 358; Mellish v. Brooks, 3 Beav., 22.

The Attorney-General, Lawless, Q C., and Martin, for the Joint Stock Discount Company, maintained that the petitioners had not any lien on the tolls or property or other effects of the railway company; that they were not entitled to any priority over the holders of judgment mortgages; and that, before proceeding in equity, they must sue at law and issue execution. They relied on Russell v. the East Anglian Railway Company, 3 MacN. and Gor., 125; Gardner v. the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company (No. 1), Law Rep., 2 Ch. Ap., 216; Bowen v. the Brecon Railway Company, Law Rep., 3 Eq., 541; Ames v. the Trustees of the Birkenhead Docks, 20 Beav., 332; Furness v. the Caterham Railway Company, 25 Beav., 614; Evans v. Coventry, 8 De Gex, MacN. and Gor., 835; in re Bagnalstown Railway Company, 10 I. Jur., N. S., 156, 253; Perkins v. the Deptford Pier Company, 13 Sim., 277; Godfrey v. Tucker, 33 Beav., 280.

as to the property and effects of the Newry and Armagh Railway Company, so far as the words property and effects mean "goods and chattels;" that there cannot be permitted any such interruption or stoppage of the traffic as would result if creditors went into possession of the lands of the railway company; that creditors, whether by bond or mortgage, who had advanced their money on the faith of the undertaking of the railway company, and of its tolls and fruits, should have a prior charge over the general creditors on the undertaking which their own moneys had largely contributed to produce; that the statutable bondholders had equitable charges on the tolls, and a right to a receiver over the tolls and traffic receipts, as the legal remedy under the garnishee clauses, would be attended with great public and private inconvenience, and since the bondholder who realized his debt at law would be compelled to hold it in trust for all the bondholders; and that it was not necessary for the petitioners to obtain judgment at law before suing in equity. But his Honour refused to decide at present the relative priorities of the petitioners and the Joint Stock Discount Company.

Decree:—That the statutable bonds are good equitable charges on the tolls and traffic receipts, but not on the company's chattels; that the receiver be extended to pay the bondholders out of the tolls and traffic receipts and for an account. The petitioners and the Joint Stock Discount Company were respectively declared entitled to their costs of this suit, with their respective demands.

Hodgins v. Poe.

Nov. 15.—Warrant of Committal invalid as not naming the Defendants in the body of the Warrant though named in the margin.

This was an action for false imprisonment, the defendant in which was a magistrate of the County Tipperary; the plaintiff with two other persons, on the evening of Sunday, January 8th, 1865, took possession of seats in the church at Nenagh, which had been allotted to other parties; on being required to leave by the churchwardens, they refused; there was some disturbance, and the service was interrupted; the defendant, by the aid of some policemen, who were in church, arrested the plaintiff and his two associates, who were taken to the police-barrack, where the defendant afterwards, in the same evening, attended, and informations were taken charging them with having disturbed the congregation. Bail was proposed, but the bail-bonds not having been completed, the matter ended by the defendant signing a warrant of committal, and the defendant justified this committal under the 14th sec. of the 6th Geo. I., c. 5, which authorizes a magistrate in case of any person willingly and of purpose maliciously, &c., disturbing a congregation, on proof before him by two or more sufficient witnesses, to require the parties to find two sureties, and "in default of such sureties," to commit him to prison until the next Quarter Sessions. The warrant, under which the plaintiffs were committed, was in the following words:—

Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vic., c. 93.

Form E. B. (Warrant to Commit or Detain), for Trial.

Petty Sessions District of Nenagh, Co. Tipperary.

James Jocelyn Poe, one of the Churchwardens of the Parish of Nenagh, Complainant;
William King, Robt. Hodgins, and John Smith, Defendants.

WHEREAS a complaint was made on the 8th of January, 1865, on the oath of two credible witnesses, that the defendants did, on this day, at Nenagh, in said County, disquiet and disturb a congregation assembled for public worship in St. Mary's Church, in the town and parish of Nenagh as aforesaid.

This is to command you, to whom this Warrant is addressed, to lodge the said   of Nenagh, in the gaol of Nenagh, in the said County of Tipperary, there to be imprisoned by the Keeper of said Gaol, as follows, until they shall find two sureties to be bound by recognizances in the penal sums £50 late Irish currency, being equivalent to the sum of £46 3s. 10d. British currency, to appear and take trial at the next General or Quarter Sessions for the said County, for the said offence.

And for this the present Warrant shall be a sufficient authority.

HENRY H. POE,
Justice of said County.

To Head-Constable James Long, of Nenagh.
8th January, 1865.

At the trial the plaintiff recovered £5 damages for the arrest and imprisonment previous to the warrant of committal, and the plaintiff contending that the warrant was invalid, as not containing, in the body of it, the names of the persons to be committed under it, leave was reserved for the plaintiff to move to increase the verdict by £5, if the Judge should have directed the jury that the warrant was invalid, and the commitment illegal.

The Court of Exchequer having decided in favour of the plaintiff, the defendant appealed, and the case now came on before the Court of Exchequer Chamber.

Macdonogh, Q.C., Ryan, Q.C., and Gibson, for the defendant. The names of the plaintiff and the other parties arrested are virtually inserted in the warrant, as their names occur in the margin as defendants, and then the body directs "that whereas the defendants did, &c., the said   should be lodged in gaol." Besides this is not a committal on final conviction, or to be construed with the same strictness.

Dowse, Q.C., and Lover, for the defendant. There is no such distinction as is contended for between committals on final conviction and other committals. The cases show that in cases of misdemeanour the warrants must accurately specify the names of the parties to be arrested under it; the omission of, or a mistake in even the christian name, will invalidate it. Here it is consistent with the warrant that one of the three defendants, it might be the plaintiff here, had found bail, and that it was only the two others who were to be committed under the warrant. If the magistrate had only followed the directions in the margin of the form given in the Petty Sessions Act, he would have inserted the names of the parties.

Nov. 19.—The Court unanimously confirmed the decision of the Court of Exchequer that the warrant was invalid.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

The following important case has not yet appeared in the regular reports:—

Reported by VALENTINE J. COPPINGER, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

ARCHBOLD v. LORD HOWTH.

Nov. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, and 21, 1865; and Jan. 29, 1866.—Statute of Frauds—Practice—Pleading—Specific Performance of Agreement for a Lease—Part Performance—Action at Law for fraudulent concealment of an equitable right—Non-liability of principal for the fraud of an agent, although the principal has reaped the benefit of it—Fraud—Statute of Limitations.

This action was tried before Chief Justice Monahan at the sittings after Hilary Term, 1865, and the case now came before the Court upon motion to show cause against a conditional order for a new trial upon the grounds of misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence. The writ of summons and plaint contained six paragraphs, upon four of which the jury, under the direction of the learned Judge, found for the defendant, and which were immaterial for the purposes of this motion. The jury, however, found for the plaintiff upon the first and fourth paragraphs, and assessed the damages upon both at a lump sum of £1,000. The first paragraph declared upon an agreement for a lease alleged to have been entered into between the defendant and the plaintiff on the 30th Nov., 1857, and claimed damages for the breach thereof; and the fourth paragraph complained that the defendant, in order to prevent the defendant from taking proceedings to enforce the aforesaid agreement, fraudulently concealed from the plaintiff the existence of the said agreement, and thereby prevented him from enforcing it.

It was proved at the trial that in November, 1857, the following document was sent to the plaintiff from the office of the Messrs. Stewart and Kincaid, Lord Howth's agents:—

6, Leinster-street, 25th Nov., 1857.

DEAR SIR,—We have recently made a revision of the rents of Lord Howth's estate, and after full consideration and consultation with his Lordship, we are desired to make a general change in the rents of the yearly tenants, and of those holdings, the leases of which have recently expired, by adding twenty per cent. to the present rents, and at these new rents his Lordship has consented to give the tenants leases for twenty-one years. A notice therefore to that effect will be sent to you from this office, and an agreement for you to sign.

We are, dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,
STEWART & KINCAID,
Per H. F. H.

To Christopher Archbold, Tyrrellstown.

On the 30th November one of the bailiffs on the estate came to Archbold and produced a formal written agreement for him to sign, and upon the plaintiff's refusing to sign it, saying that he knew it was to raise the rent, the bailiff told him that he would get a lease. Thereupon he did sign it. This bailiff then took the agreement to Messrs. Stewart and Kincaid's office, and Archbold, who had never read it, paid the increased rent reserved by it for several years. This document was produced at the trial; it was in the terms indicated by the letter of the 25th Nov., 1857, and had never been signed by the defendant, or by any one on his behalf. In March, 1861, a notice to quit was served upon the plaintiff, and he, having forgotten the existence of the agreement, allowed judgment to go by default, and some time afterwards the habere was executed. Soon afterwards the lands were let to a new tenant at an increased rent of £40 per annum. Mr. H. F. Hamilton, the person in the Messrs. Stewart and Kincaid's office, who had written the letter of the 25th Nov., 1857, and whose duty it was to look after that portion of Lord Howth's property upon which Archbold's holding was situated, was the person who carried out the ejectment proceedings, and had, all the time of doing so, a perfect recollection of the existence of the agreement of 1857, but did not remind Archbold of it. Neither Lord Howth nor the Messrs. Stewart and Kincaid themselves had recollected it. In July, 1863, Archbold found the letter of the 25th November, 1857, on the top of an old clock, and his recollection having been renewed by it, consulted his solicitor, Mr. Cantwell. The present action was the result.

Armstrong, Serjeant, Whiteside, Q.C., and J[illegible], Q.C., for the plaintiff.

Macdonogh, Q.C., Butt, Q.C., and Monahan, for the defendant.

The argument of the case lasted six days, and in January, 1866, the judgment was delivered.

The COURT were of opinion that the defendant was entitled to a verdict upon the first count, inasmuch as there was no sufficient agreement in writing signed by the party to be charged, to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds, and that the damages having been assessed upon the two counts in a bulk sum a new trial must be granted.

They were also of opinion that the defendant was entitled to a verdict upon the fourth count, because no fraudulent concealment had been proved, inasmuch as there was no duty cast upon Hamilton to disclose the flaws of his employer's case to his legal antagonist (Horsfall v. Thomas, 1 H. and C., 100); and Chief Justice Monahan and O'Hagan, J., were of opinion that even if there had been, his employer would not be liable for it (Udell v. Atherton, 7 H. and N., 172).

They were also of opinion that the defendant should succeed upon the fourth count, upon the ground that although the payment of the increased rent under the agreement constituted such an act of part performance as would have entitled the plaintiff to a specific performance of the parol promise of a lease (Wills v. Stradling, 3 Ves., 378; Dowall v. Dew, 1 You. and Coll. 345; Nunn v. Fabian, Law Rep., 1 Ch. App., 35), the contract specifically pointed at in the pleadings having been a written contract of the 30th November, 1857, and no such contract having been proved, a material averment of the fourth count had not been sustained.

They were also of opinion that if the action had been sustainable in other respects, there was no reason why an action at law could not be maintained for a fraudulent concealment of an equitable right to a specific performance.

Chief Justice Monahan had at the trial directed the jury that the Statute of Limitations had not run against the plaintiff's right of action, although six years and one month had elapsed from the date of the contract declared upon before the bringing of the action, inasmuch as the contract being an executory one, the statute did not begin to run until a reasonable time for the fulfilment of it had passed. Although the defendant's counsel strongly quarrelled with this ruling, none of the judges in the court above expressed their dissent.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. Field Johnston, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Dobbs, J.

Assignees of Bermingham.

July 3.—Practice—Petition for Sale of Lands not in Possession of Owner—Stay of Proceedings.

Donnelly was described upon the schedule accompanying the final notice to tenants in this matter, as overholding tenant of 42a. 3r. 28p. of the lands ordered to be sold. Donnelly took an objection to the notice by which he claimed to be owner in fee of such portion by virtue of a possession, in his father and himself, for 30 years without payment of rent. It appeared that a receiver had been appointed by the Court of Chancery over a portion of the lands, but that he was never in possession of the rents and profits of this particular portion. Affidavits were read in support of the objection.

John Harris, for the objection.

Concannon and Beytagh, contra.

They cited Wrixon v. Vize (3 Dr. and War.); In re Muskerry (9 Ir. Ch. R., 94); S. C. on Appeal (9 Ir. Ch. R. 99).

Dobbs, J.—It is the settled practice of this Court, and there never was any other practice, that this is not a Court to try ejectments on title, and that it will never sell an estate where the owner or some person in privity with him, is not in receipt of the rents and profits. If, upon examining the abstract of title, or at any other stage of the proceedings, it is discovered that any portion of the lands is not in the possession of the owner, it is struck out of the order for sale. The proceedings in this case show how necessary it is to abide by that rule. It turns out that, as to 42 acres of these lands, another person is in receipt of the rents and profits, and has been so for 30 years without paying rent. It is necessary, before the Court can proceed to a sale of that portion, that the owner shall recover the actual possession. Until he does, the Court will not sell. I will allow this objection, and stay all proceedings as to these 42 acres until further order. If the owner can recover possession, and the facts show that there is a nice question to be tried upon an ejectment, he can come back to this Court, and apply for a sale, but the Court will not try an ejectment. I will allow the objection with costs against the estate. In Wrixon v. Vize the receiver went into possession; in this case the receiver never went into possession. Whether the incumbrancer was bound to know that the receiver did not get possession is another question, and I will not give the costs of the objection against the incumbrancer.

COURT of BANKRUPTCY and INSOLVENCY.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Reported by J. Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Judge Berwick.

In re Hopkins.

Jan., 1868.—Making away with Property pending Law Proceedings—Reference to Chief Clerk.

The bankrupt was opposed by J. A. Curran on the part of a Mr. Walsh. It appeared that Walsh, the opposing creditor, had himself taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act about a year previously, when he was opposed by Hopkins on various grounds, particularly for making away with houses of which he was the owner, Walsh being at the time what is called a house jobber. Pending the insolvency of Walsh, he went on some business to a house of Hopkins' that Walsh had assigned him, when Hopkins made a charge of robbery against him, and had him arrested by the police. The case was tried before the Recorder, when Walsh was acquitted, and the charge pronounced groundless. Walsh then brought an action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution against Hopkins, which was tried at the last Naas assizes, when Walsh got a verdict for £75 damages, and his costs amounted to upwards of £60.

Curran stated that there never was a case where retributive justice was more apparent. Hopkins, by some means or other, got Walsh to assign to him a valuable house for almost nothing, leaving Walsh liable for a considerable head rent, which he was unable to pay, and he was driven to that court, where Hopkins opposed him with the most virulent pertinacity. Walsh, however, was discharged, and now the tables were turned, and he opposed Hopkins, not with any revengeful feeling, but with a view to get at property which Hopkins had made away with, pending the action between himself and Walsh. Upon looking at the schedule his lordship would see that neither the money received by Hopkins, nor the property he had, was accounted for.

Judge Berwick said the schedule was unsatisfactory, and there was no doubt property had been assigned by the insolvent pending the litigation with Walsh. He would refer it to the Chief Clerk to vouch the schedule and report on its truth generally.

Solicitor for the insolvent, Rynd.

To the Editor of the Irish Law Times.

Sir,—Can you or any of your readers inform me whether there are any barristers or solicitors in Dublin who undertake to prepare (grind) attorney's apprentices for the final examination. It would be a great advantage if some one would undertake to do so, for it would prove an excellent introduction for junior lawyers who could devote two or three evenings every week to that very useful object.—Your obedient servant,

SPECIAL JURIES IN CAPITAL CASES.

The following paper on the desirableness of having special juries in capital cases was read at the last meeting of the Law Amendment Branch of the Social Science Association, by Mr. George Harris, F.S.A., Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy, Manchester:—The extensive discussion which has recently taken place before this society on the general subject of juries, during which the various questions which arise relative to this highly valued and time-honoured institution have been fully debated, appears to me to render the present time peculiarly appropriate to bring before it the subject of the present paper, and to obtain the opinion of the members upon the very important point submitted to their consideration. Rather more than ten years ago I had the honour of bringing this subject before the society, in a paper "On the Constitution of Juries in Criminal Cases," which was read at a meeting on the 25th day of May, 1857, and which was printed at length in the Law Amendment Journal of the 4th June, 1857. In that paper I endeavoured to trace the origin of trial by jury, and to give an outline of the history of this institution from the earliest times. I remarked that the general condition of society and civilization in this country was so essentially different at the early period when trial by jury was first established, to what it is at the present day, that it would at first sight appear difficult to imagine how an institution adapted to our civil exigencies in the one case could be fitted for the other also. The greater simplicity of the proceedings in courts of justice during an earlier state of society was also more favourable to the trial by jury, so far as respects the ability of each member of the jury completely to comprehend the evidence, and its precise bearing on the trial, than is frequently now found to be the case. Moreover at the period of our history when juries were first brought into use, the different members of society in general were probably much more upon an equality in respect of intelligence and education than they now are Science having then made but little progress, but few questions of a scientific character could be raised to puzzle the minds of those by whom such questions had to be determined. Indeed, the simple character of the facts then adduced before the court, and the equally simple mode of discussing and dealing with them, were highly advantageous to the efficiency of trial by jury.. But although the matters at that period to be determined by juries were much simpler than they now are, yet it appears on the other hand that less efforts are made in the present day to secure the intelligence and education required in a jury, by raising the qualification for such an office, than was formerly resorted to. By the statute of Westminster the Second, passed in the thirteenth year of Edward I., it was enacted that no man should be put on juries who had not some freehold of the value of 20s. a-year within the county, or 40s. out of the county. This qualification was raised to 40s. in counties by the statute 21, Edward I. Subsequent to this a statute was passed, that of Henry V., which appears to have been expressly intended to secure the intelligence and responsibility of juries by requiring a property qualification. With this view it enacted that no person should be a juror in capital trials, as also in certain other cases, unless he had lands of the annual value of 40s., and if he had not that qualification he might be challenged by either party. We must here bear in mind that regarding the change in the value of money, a qualification of 40s. a-year in the time of Edward I. and Henry V. would be equal to £24 a year at the present day. At this early period, therefore, in the history of the trial by jury, we find fully recognized the principle for which I am contending this evening, that in capital cases such a qualification should be required of jurymen as will ensure a class of men being selected who may be presumed to possess the requisite amount of intelligence required for so arduous and so responsible a duty. By the statute of George IV. for regulating the qualification of jurymen, £10 a year in freehold and £20 in leasehold, or being rated to the poor at £20 a year, or occupying a house containing 15 windows, are sufficient to qualify a person for serving on a jury for the trial of any offence whatever. It is here moreover to be observed, that of late years numerous exemptions have been allowed by statute to certain persons from serving on juries, extending to professional men generally, and which contribute in a very essential manner to lower the comparative standard of intelligence possessed by juries in modern times below what was formerly the case. Privileges of this class did not serve to excuse any persons from serving upon juries at the earlier periods alluded to, in consequence of which the whole intelligence of the country, with the exception of the clergy, was enlisted in the service of juries. At the present day, on the other hand, juries in criminal cases, including those which are capital, and indeed common juries generally, are composed mainly of tenant-farmers, and of tradesmen of the middle and inferior classes. In the former paper alluded to I mentioned several cases within my own knowledge, where it was evident that the jury were wholly incompetent, from want of the requisite intelligence, to deal with the evidence brought before them. Indeed, in order to deal with and analyse evidence, and to draw correct conclusions therefrom, a certain amount of intelligence is of course necessary. This is more particularly the case where the evidence is of a scientific character, as in trials for murder by poison, and in those where the evidence is mainly or wholly circumstantial. The incompetence of common juries to deal with difficult and scientific cases, and to arbitrate upon those where important interests are at stake, is fully recognized by the practice of having special juries in all cases where the evidence relating to property is very complicated, or the amount to be decided is very large. It is surely a monstrous inconsistency that upon a trial in which the issues of life and death are involved, a special jury is not allowed. It is a remarkable circumstance indeed, and is recorded by Bracton (Lib. 3, cap. 18), that although all other kinds of murder might formerly be tried by a jury, yet murder by poison was excepted. As I suggested in my former paper, two modes appear available for affording a remedy for the defect in the administration of justice which I have pointed out. The first of these is to follow the course which has already been satisfactorily adopted in civil cases, and to have a special jury in all capital cases, and in other cases as well, where, owing to peculiar circumstances, such as the complicated and scientific nature of the evidence, or the supposed existence of popular prejudice, it appears peculiarly requisite, composed of men of superior education, who would be less likely to be biased than are men of the rank of those who at present constitute common juries, and who would from their education and intelligence be fully qualified to deal with the evidence before them. Another plan, which appears in many respects to be preferable to the preceding one, is to abolish the privileges of exemption from serving on juries in favour of professional men, in cases where capital offences are to be tried; and to obtain a jury for such a purpose composed of professional men of different kinds, barristers, clergymen, physicians, attorneys, surgeons, and others, who, from their habits and education, are of all other persons best fitted to sift and to deal with questions of evidence of this nature. A few lawyers and a few medical men on such a jury appear to be equally desirable, and a mixed body of professional men, embracing as wide a range as possible, seems to me to form the best tribunal in such a case. It appears to me that after taking a survey of the rise and progress of juries, the proposal here submitted, so far from being an innovation, is in reality an effort to restore the trial by jury to its original efficiency, when the juries empannelled represented fairly the general intelligence of the nation, and when no difference in regard to either station or property enabled persons to claim exemptions from serving on juries in criminal cases, whether capital or of minor importance. Objections may, of course, be very fairly raised against the proposal which I have made. It may be urged that in cases of difficulty it is the duty of the judge to assist the jury, and to point out to them the correct course to be pursued. But surely in this case the judge is superseding the functions of the jury, who, in all cases of fact, ought to decide for themselves; and this would be a most dangerous principle to sanction in the administration of our laws. Besides, if the judge is to direct the decision of the jury with regard to important matters of fact, which it is peculiarly their province to determine, what becomes of that very important principle that the jury stand as the protectors of the prisoner against any supposed arbitrary inclination on the part of the judge? It may be also said that a special jury would not so fairly, as does a common jury, represent the class of men to which the prisoner belongs, and might be supposed to be prejudiced against him; or, at any rate, not so fully to sympathize with him as does a common jury. If this argument is deemed to be of importance, the difficulty might be obviated by having half the jury of the common class, and half of the special class; or perhaps the ends of justice might be answered by allowing the prisoner, in all capital cases, to demand to be tried by a special jury of either of the classes which I have proposed. Few who are experienced in the proceedings of criminal courts, will, I think, be disposed to assert that the present system is a satisfactory one; and I have no hesitation in contending that the proposal which I have made, so far from being an innovation on the principle of trial by jury, is but in reality the abolition of the innovations which have been introduced, and the only mode of restoring the system to its original principle and its real efficiency. The sole issue to be determined is, whether common juries, as now constituted, are efficient to dispose of complicated cases where scientific evidence is adduced; and whether, as they are acknowledged unfit to determine questions where a large amount of property is involved, they are, nevertheless, fully qualified to determine cases where the life of the prisoner is at stake; and whether a jury constituted of persons of a certain amount of education and intelligence would not form a more adequate and satisfactory tribunal than that which now exists for the trial of all cases where the punishment is capital.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

CONSTRUCTION OF WILL—FORGIVEN DEBT.—A testatrix, after giving various sums to trustees on certain trusts for her children and grandchildren, directed the sale and conversion of her real and personal estate, the proceeds to go to her children as tenants in common, and she declared that her son H., for reasons stated, should receive £1,000 less than what one-fifth of her "entire estate and property when she died would amount to." This by a codicil she reduced to £500, and also gave to her son-in-law, who owed her a debt on bond, all sums owing by him to her: Held, that the gift of the "entire estate and property" excluded debts and legacies, and that the forgiveness of the debt did not constitute a legacy: (Higgins v. Smith, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 29. V. C. M.)

WILL—DOUBLE PORTION.—The question whether a portion is double or not is one of intention, and the presumption against double portions is founded on this, that the testator or settlor considered himself by the second portion to be satisfying the first pro tanto. The presumption is more easily made when the will precedes than when it follows the settlement. Great differences in the substance of the settlement tend to show that the one portion was not intended to be in satisfaction of the other. B. having two daughters, C. and P., covenanted on C.'s marriage to pay her trustees £10,000, but there was no settlement on P.'s marriage. By his will B. gave the residue, after payment of his debts, in equal moieties to the two daughters, the limitations in the will being very different from those in the marriage settlement of C.: Held (reversing the decree of the Lords Justices), that the gift by will was no satisfaction of the covenant in C.'s settlement, and she was entitled to her moiety of the residue after deducting the £10,000 from the assets: (Chichester v. Coventry, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 35. H. of L.)

PROBATE PRACTICE—PARTIES UNKNOWN.—The executors and legatees named in a will could not be found. The estate was also insolvent, and the competency of the testator was likewise questionable. The court, under these circumstances, refused to grant simple administration to a creditor, but made a grant with the will annexed: (Hanson v. Shepherd, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 123. Prob.)

ADMINISTRATION—GRANT IN ERROR.—A., an intestate, married his deceased wife's sister. On his death she obtained letters of administration to his personal estate and effects, and died leaving part of the estate unadministered. The court revoked the grant so made in error, and decreed administration to the natural and lawful daughters and next of kin of the deceased: (In the Goods of Wells, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 123. Prob.)

SUBSTITUTED EXECUTOR.—Where, "failing A.," B. was substituted executor, the court held that the condition of substitution was satisfied by A.'s refusal to act, and granted probate to B. on the renunciation of A.: (In the Goods of Colquhoun, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 123. Prob.)

TAXATION OF BILL OF COSTS AFTER PAYMENT.—If a person not chargeable with a solicitor's bill of costs thinks fit to pay it, it is open to him to do so, and if he does so, he shall be entitled to have the bill taxed as the party charged able with it might have done. The stat. 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, does not point out the special circumstances which shall authorize the court to direct taxation after payment of a bill of costs; but in a case where, at the last moment, reasonable facility for taxation has been asked for and refused, and the bill appears to show substantial ground for taxation, the court will direct such a taxation notwithstanding payment. It is no answer to such a case to show that the party paying the bill has been chargeable with great delay in the business, and has only at the last moment required a very hasty settlement. In cases where, although resistance to a just claim to a taxation has failed, it was yet not absolutely frivolous, it is the proper course to allow the costs of an application to tax to abide the result of the taxation: (Re Newmans, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 128. Chan.)

PETITION TO WIND UP.—The mere fact that moneys or paid up shares are given to persons to become directors, is not ground for a winding-up order: (Re The Bwlch y Plwm Company, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 235. M. R.)

EQUITY PRACTICE—AMENDMENT—COSTS.—The plaintiff, by his original bill, sought to set aside a deed, on the ground of fraud. After answer was filed, he amended his bill by striking out from it all the previous allegations of fraud, and prayed to be allowed to take a benefit under the deed. The Court ordered him to pay the costs of the original bill: (Kernot v. Critchley, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 134. V. C. S.)

NEXT FRIEND—INSOLVENCY.—Where the next friend of a married woman, plaintiff in a suit, had become insolvent, though the defendant, with a notice of such insolvency, had put in a voluntary answer stating his own bankruptcy, proceedings in the suit were ordered to be stayed until the married woman could give security for costs, or obtain an order to sue in forma pauperis: (Macann v. Borradaile, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 135. V. C. W.)

MERE MATTER OF ACCOUNT.—By sect. 3 of the C. L. P. A. 1852 it is enacted that "if it be made to appear at any time after the issuing of the writ to the satisfaction of the court or a judge, upon the application of either party, that the matter in dispute consists wholly or in part of matters of mere account, which cannot conveniently be tried in the ordinary way," such court or judge may order such matter to be referred (inter alia) to an officer of the court. The plaintiff sued the defendant for work and labour as an auctioneer, and before plea the defendant applied to a judge for an order to refer the matter to one of the masters upon an affidavit which stated "that the matter in dispute in this action consists of mere matter of account, which cannot be conveniently tried in the ordinary way," which order, though opposed by the plaintiff, was accordingly made. Upon a subsequent application by the plaintiff to set aside such order, upon the ground that an action for "work and labour" was not within the operation of the above clause, and that it would be competent to the defendant to set up a defence of non-ability: Held that such action is within the operation of the clause, and that if when before the master the defendant sets up any other matter of defence, then it will be the proper time for the plaintiff to apply to rescind the order: (Clarke v. Ware, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 148. Q.B.)

CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST.—B. adopted C., and C. expressed an intention handsomely to provide for her. B. then invested £1,800 on mortgage in the name of D., telling him both by letter and orally that it was for C.'s benefit, which was confirmed by an entry in B.'s diary; and on the counterfoil of the cheque. This was held to be a sufficient constructive declaration of trust in favour of C., and that on her death her personal representative was entitled: (Re Cane's Trust, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 112. V. C. Malins.)

WATERFORD LAW SOCIETY.—John O'Brien, Esq., solicitor, President of the Waterford Law Society, entertained the Chairman of the Quarter Sessions, B. C. Lloyd, Esq., Q.C., and the members of the society to a sumptuous dinner at his residence, King-street, on Tuesday evening last.

THE LAW OF NATURALIZATION.—A proposed reform in French military law in its bearing upon foreigners is discussed by the Paris correspondent of the Herald:—"The effect of this new law, which Marshal Niel tells us is 'under consideration,' may be briefly stated. I will take a striking instance. The present Earl Granville was born in France. Supposing his lordship to have a son born in France also, he would be compelled, according to the letter of the law, to serve personally in the French army, or find a substitute. I have taken this hypothetical case to make the operation of the contemplated law as plain as possible. But take the case of Brown, Jones, or Robinson. Let us suppose Jones to be born in France, to be settled and married there, and have children. Well, according to the measure under consideration, his sons, when they reach their 20th year, will be 'drawn' for the conscription, and if they do not appear when summoned they will be treated as deserters. They will no longer be free to marry without producing a certificate that they have 'satisfied the requirements of the law on recruitment,' and, in short, they will be liable to all the drawbacks which attend the proud position of a citoyen Français.

SCOTCH ACCOUNTANTS.—The Times recommends the formation in London of an association on the model of the Edinburgh Institute of Accountants, and says it would do more to promote the cause of financial morality than all the attempts ever likely to be made through the agency of the Court of Bankruptcy.

AN AUDIT OF RAILWAY ACCOUNTS BY THE STATE.—A railway panic, though not so acute as a banking panic (says the Economist), "is likely to be much more lasting. People must put their money somewhere; they have given up the habit of keeping it at home; they cannot resume that habit, for they would not think it safe there, nor like to submit to the change in every sort of pecuniary practice which would follow. Accordingly, if people take their money to-day from one bank, they will lend it to-morrow to another bank, and so in a little while after the worst panic the world resumes its course. But no such now necessary habit compels men to invest in railway shares or to lend to railway companies; the railway discredit may last for years, though banking discredit soon passes over. Unless, therefore, some competent and independent authority intervene, the railway panic will not pass away of itself; and on many lines it will tend even to be worse than it now is. What the effect of a Government audit would be upon the value of railway property must, of course, depend on the nature of the results which that audit ascertained; but in many cases we do not doubt that it would be favourable, for the present discredit is diffused and great; and, at all events, there would be some uniformity of account, some basis for sure discussion, some possibility of effectual argument, which now there is not."

THE YELVERTON CASE.—The Edinburgh correspondent of the Daily Telegraph writes—"Mrs. Yelverton has raised a new action in the Court of Session here, for the purpose of quashing or setting aside the judgments in the former long litigations in the Scotch Courts and House of Lords. The ground on which it is sought to set aside these judgments is that the Scotch courts had no jurisdiction to pronounce them. Major Yelverton never at any time had a Scotch domicile. He was an Irishman by birth, and he never lost his Irish domicile. There is an abundance of law already settled to the effect that in cases of divorce the Scotch courts have no jurisdiction over persons domiciled in England or in Ireland. There is the old case of Lolly, in the beginning of the century, who was defended by Brougham, and sent to the hulks for fourteen years for bigamy, in accordance with the opinions of the twelve judges of England, because, on the faith of a Scotch divorce, he had married again in England. And there have been many cases since. One of the last of them related to the marriage of John Shaw, a Scotch advocate, who had married an English lady. The same lady had eloped at sixteen and been married, but, met at the church door after the ceremony by her friends, she was prevented from ever living with the man, whom she afterwards followed to Scotland, and divorced. It had been held in England that this Scotch divorce was of no avail, and that Mrs. Shaw's children by her Scotch husband could not succeed to a provision left to her 'lawful children' by a relative. There are many cases. But then divorce is not declaration of marriage. It does not yet appear that there is any difference as to jurisdiction in the various consistorial cases, and that in all the jurisdiction depends upon domicile. But no doubt some distinctions will be discovered. After the judgment of the House of Lords in regard to the reference to oath, nothing is impossible, if it be necessary to repel the claims of Mrs. Theresa Yelverton. Of course, the new suit will excite various comments, and it may lead to some adjustment of the competing claims to jurisdiction of the English, Scotch, and Irish Courts."

A SCENE IN COURT.

At the Antrim Quarter Sessions, on Saturday, before J. H. Otway, Esq., Q.C., Chairman of the County, William Hughes was indicted for having, on the 27th November last, at Randalstown, assaulted Patrick Delany, a sheriff's officer, and rescued from his possession a number of articles.

The case having been heard, the jury retired. After about twenty minutes' consultation they returned into court, and the foreman handed to the clerk the issue paper containing the verdict.

Clerk of the Court—Gentlemen, you say that William Hughes is not guilty of rescuing goods, and not guilty of common assault?

Foreman—Yes.

His Worship (with surprise)—What's that you say?

Foreman—There were discrepancies in the evidence which——

His Worship—Tut, tut, nonsense! You may retire. Stop! (Opening a large law book). I don't know how to deal with that verdict. It is a perverse verdict.

[The jury were then moving as if to leave the box].

His Worship (with much emphasis)—Don't go away, gentlemen. (To the Foreman)—What new matter came before your consideration after you retired that made you return that verdict? Did you consider all the evidence?

Foreman—Yes, we did.

His Worship—Well?

Foreman—When we looked at the evidence given before the magistrates, and the evidence submitted yesterday by the man Delany, we found that discrepancies existed.

His Worship—Did you consider Cassidy's evidence?

Foreman—Yes, we did.

His Worship—I have power, when I find a jury have, through mistaking the evidence or partiality, returned a verdict repugnant to justice, to order the jury to retire again and reconsider the verdict, and to amend it. That is my constitutional privilege and power. I do not know whether I shall exercise that power or not. It is certainly a very great stretch of authority in the court. There is no question at all of my right—no question of my power. At the same time I think I will not exercise my power in this case. I will allow you to go, gentlemen. I will allow the verdict you have returned to be recorded, but I may tell you I never received a verdict from a jury in my life with which I was so thoroughly dissatisfied. (To the accused)—Stand up, sir! The jury—I can hardly call them so—the twelve men who were sworn to try your case have acquitted you. I do not believe a more guilty man ever stood in the dock than you. However, I will take the verdict—a verdict which may have done more to hinder the administration of justice in this court, and limit the value of its jurisdiction than any verdict that was ever given. I have told you I will take the verdict, believing you, notwithstanding that the jury have acquitted you, as guilty a man as ever stood in that dock, and also fearing that the result of this case may be more prejudicial to the very men who have thought fit to acquit you. You are discharged. I believe the verdict to be partial, perverse, and repugnant to justice. (To the jury)—Go away, gentlemen, you certainly never shall be a jury again, if I can help it.

The jury then left the box, apparently crest-fallen by the force of his worship's remarks.

His Worship said he would communicate with the Attorney-General regarding the manner in which Mr. Robinson, the Clerk of Petty Sessions, had performed his duty.

PARISH REGISTERS.—There are 20,000 parish registers in England, all of which are exposed to uncertain guardianship. There is not one, perhaps, without some peculiar illustration of life and manners in it, besides proof of birth, marriage, or death. A suggestion has been made, from which some good may arise, that transcripts of the entries, and a general index shall be printed down to 1837, when the present system of registration came into force. For purposes of genealogy or heirship this would be of great use, and Parliament might sanction a worse work. One sample of the way in which the old registers were kept is to be seen in the case of a country clergyman, who, being applied to with reference to a genealogical matter, cut out of his register every entry of the name mentioned by the applicant, and despatched the fragments by post to London.—Athenæum.

LORD JUSTICE SIR J. ROLT is seriously ill, having had a paralytic seizure, affecting his left side, but not his memory, from the effects of which his return to the Bench must be delayed for a considerable time.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

The following correspondence has just taken place :

Petty Sessions, Tralee, December 16, 1867.

Robert M'Cowen, complainant ; Timothy Slattery, defendant.

SIR—I have the honour to state for the information of his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant that a summons (a copy of which I enclose) came before this court to recover £3 0s. 0d. for hire and wages alleged to be due by the defendant for work and labour given in hiring out to him a threshing machine worked by steam, the property of the complainant.

The magistrates made no rule in the case, not being satisfied that it came clearly within the provisions of the 14 and 15 Vic., Cap. 92, Sec. 16. The words of the section, although comprehensive, limit the right to sue by summons to "an apprentice, artificer, labourer, servant, or other person ;" and the claim for hire or wages shall be "for any day's work or labour done or performed by task, job, or contract, or for the hire of any horse, ass, mule, bullock, or other animal for draught, or of any cart, dray, car, plough, harrow, or vehicle drawn by any such animal for the purpose of any labouring work." The exceptions follow :

It appeared to the magistrates that it was at least doubtful that a man hiring out a threshing machine worked by steam came within the meaning of, or could reasonably be supposed to be covered by the words in the Section "other person," especially when he did not personally attend the working of the machine, nor assist in performing any part of the work done.

It seems clear that an artificer working by machinery, such as a tailor, or sempstress using a sewing machine, or such like, can recover by summons for work and labour. But it is respectfully requested, that the opinion of the Law Adviser may be taken as to whether a man hiring out a threshing machine, worked by steam, can sue otherwise than by process either in this Court for a sum under £2 or at the Quarter Sessions if for a sum over £2.—I have the honour to remain, sir, your obedient servant,

GERARD O'CONNOR.

Major General Sir Thomas A. Larcom, K.C.B.

Dublin Castle, 19th December, 1867.

GENTLEMEN—I am directed by the Lord Lieutenant to acquaint you that your letter of the 16th instant, relative to the case of Robert M'Cowen against Timothy Slattery, having been referred to the Law Adviser, he states that he concurs with the opinion formed by you as to the operation and construction of the 16 Section of the Act 14 and 15 Vic., Cap. 92.—I am, Gentlemen, your obedient Servant,

THOMAS LARCOM.

The Magistrates at Petty Sessions, Tralee.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 51.] SATURDAY, JANUARY 18, 1868. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

SIR RICHARD J. THEODORE ORPEN.

It is with the most sincere pleasure that we announce to our readers that the Lord Lieutenant has been graciously pleased to confer upon the esteemed President of the Incorporated Law Society the honour of Knighthood. We venture to assert that there is not a Solicitor in Ireland who has the interests of his Profession at heart, who will not feel grateful at the compliment which has been thus paid to the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland in the person of their respected President. To a gentleman of his property and position it is needless to say that the title conferred upon him gives no social elevation, and that he was as much respected before as after the distinction was bestowed; but acting, as he has ever done, with a regard for the highest interests of his Profession, he most willingly, we are assured, accepted the proffered honour, as a compliment to the Profession of which he is the most distinguished member.

When we look at the position which the Profession in Ireland holds at the present time, we feel that there is, on many accounts, much cause for congratulation. In the first place, there is the advantage which it has acquired by the educational tests, by which a double defence is erected against the intrusion into it of illiterate and ignorant persons—a preliminary examination to keep out the uneducated, and a final examination to exclude the unqualified. If the standard of these examinations is kept up, as we trust it will be, we have no doubt that, with the substantial encouragement offered by the Council of the Law Society to superior answering, the educational status of the Profession will in time be materially improved.

The Profession is no longer governed by another society composed of those who could not be expected to have its best interests at heart, but is self-governing, and regulates the examinations for admission to its own rank, as every profession should.

If we are asked to whom we are to attribute these results, we have no hesitation in replying that we owe them to the Council of the Law Society, who have laboured for years to effect these reforms, and to whose energy and perseverance we are indebted for them. It is therefore most appropriate that the compliment which his Excellency has been pleased to pay to the Profession should have been paid to the head of that Council, the President of the Incorporated Law Society. No member of the Council has been more zealous and devoted to the interests of the Profession than SIR RICHARD ORPEN. In every movement for its benefit and improvement the Profession has had the advantage of his counsel and experience, as well as the weight of that high professional character which makes him as much respected by those above him as by his equals.

Upon every ground, therefore, his high social and professional standing, his personal character as an educated gentleman, and the general esteem and regard entertained for him by his professional brethren, we consider the honour conferred in the present instance has been most judiciously and deservedly bestowed.

THE public expectation is general that a Judge should be very well acquainted with the law he is called upon to administer. It is also thought not unbecoming in him to bring to the discharge of these functions, at least, the semblance of decorum. We willingly confess that Judges, as a rule, answer the public requirement in both respects. It speaks well for those who hold the legal patronage of the country in their hands; it is a clear proof that they exercise it wisely and impartially. And the exercise of this patronage must be very difficult when we recollect that it may happen that the best man to appoint, regarded as a lawyer, is not always most suitable in other respects.

The meaning of this observation must, of course, be apparent to every reader of the IRISH LAW TIMES. No one ever heard of Mr. F. W. Brady as a very distinguished lawyer; however he was appointed to a County Court, and we believe that his good fortune would not have stopped there but for an expression of public feeling. When one of the Masterships in Chancery became vacant some years ago, the then Lord Chancellor promoted him from the County Court to the vacant office. The Press expressed the opinions of the Bar and the public on this preferment of a comparatively junior lawyer over Mr. Fitzgibbon, one of the ablest lawyers in Ireland. In consequence the appointment was cancelled, and Mr. Fitzgibbon received the Mastership.

It would seem that on the last Sessions' Circuit Mr. Brady has offended the entire Quarter Sessions Bar, and given to the local press a subject for original articles. Not only in his demeanour was Mr. Brady striking, but he caused astonishment by his views on criminal law.

We think it is a pity that the first attempt to bring the common law within the domain of speculative philosophy should have been made on the western side of the Channel. Those who are prejudiced against the people of this island may be inclined to think that the chairman was only ruling in accordance with their instincts, which are said to be in opposition to the law. Be that as it may, the people do not seem to be satisfied with these arbitrary rulings, for the juries find directly against them. As an instance, the Queen v. Edward, Michael, Thomas, John, and Pat Henry, who were indicted "for that they on the 15th September last, near Athlone, did assault and do grievous bodily injury to Pat Salmon and John Hughes." It was proved that the prosecutors—Salmon and Hughes—began the attack. There was also a cross case, in which Salmon and Hughes would be the traversers.

The Chairman, in his charge to the jury, laid it down as law that nothing can justify one man in striking another, not even in self-defence. Mr. Curran, junior, for the prisoners, objected to the ruling.

Chairman.—"I will hear no more in the presence of the jury; I've heard quite enough now."

Mr. Curran.—"Let the jury retire." The jury having withdrawn, "he said the law was perfectly clear that a man was allowed to use sufficient force to protect himself from an assault. His clients, the Henrys, were only doing this, and that, therefore, they were entitled to an acquittal. A number of independent witnesses proved that Salmon and Hughes had attacked the Henrys, and that they only repelled the attack."

The jury having been called out, his Worship said that "he had made a mistake; that it appeared from the authorities that a man could defend himself—that is, resist another who might assail him; but that nothing, as he said before, could justify him in striking the assailant; that it would be, in fact, an assault in both."

Mr. Curran objected again, and after some warm and undignified altercation as before, the jury were obliged to retire a second time.

The authorities are in favour of a man using strength enough to defend himself. It is true, that when a man uses more strength than is necessary in self-defence—even from the moment he passes the boundary between enough and too much—theoretically he is guilty of an assault. But then the ablest judges very properly say that it is impossible to estimate the exact amount of strength necessary for self protection, even if a man were perfectly cool; and, a fortiori, when a man is provoked by an unwarrantable attack. If a man has no way to defend himself but by striking his adversary, he has a right to do so; nay, more, a man can anticipate the assailant by striking him beforehand for it is an assault the moment the adversary's hand is raised to strike.

The jury having been called out, Mr. Brady said "You will bear in mind, gentlemen, in addition to what I have said before, that a man can even strike another in self defence; but that is only, gentlemen, when he [illegible] he is in danger of death." A Juror—"It is all right your worship, we here find them 'not guilty.'"

It must astonish our readers that any lawyer could speak in this manner. It is melancholy to reflect what a failure of justice would result in this case were it not for the firmness of the advocate. There have been mistakes made before in the same court upon the most elementary questions; and what is chiefly objectionable they have been pressed forward as if the judge were wholly irresponsible. There is a class of cases that can be decided in any way the Chairman thinks proper without any higher judge being able to review them after. In the innumerable small amounts sued for—cases arising out of the sale of cattle with warranty, small debts, &c.; cases, in a word, under £20—the chairman has absolute power. He may dismiss them, even though the plaintiff proves his case, and there is no remedy. For the Chairman—as we have seen him do—refusing to dismiss upon the merits precludes the plaintiff from an appeal, and the case being under £20 he cannot have a jury, so that if the plaintiff wishes to bring the case on again he must bring it before the same person who has already declared against him. We would not have mentioned this only we have reason to believe that there have been complaints on the subject. Those scenes in which the bench and the bar are brought into angry collision only lower the character of both. The people cannot have much respect for the majesty of the law when they hear that solemn and dignified personage, who is its high priest and who holds its oracles in his heart, make an attack upon jurors, witnesses, and advocates, indiscriminately.

Resolutions adopted by the Sessions' Bar of the Co. Roscommon will be found elsewhere in our columns.

The recent Quarter Sessions have produced some remarkable cases, of which the public have been already made aware. We have in another article alluded to the circumstances already which have rendered the Roscommon Quarter Sessions notorious, arising from a misunderstanding between the Chairman and the practising barristers and solicitors of his Court; but at the Graigue Quarter Sessions another scene occurred, the actors in which were the Chairman and the gentlemen forming the Grand Jury. As the affair has already made considerable noise, and the details have been widely published, it is unnecessary for us now to repeat them in extenso; but the following are the simple facts briefly stated:—After the Chairman, Mr. Joshua Clarke, Q.C., had offered the usual congratulations to the Grand Jury on the satisfactory state of the calendar, he proceeded to bring under their notice the fact which has since excited so much attention, viz., that he was informed by a gentleman occupying a very high position, that on a former occasion when presiding at Sessions, the opinions expressed by the Grand Jurors in the discussion of certain bills were disclosed by one of the jurors after they had been discharged. If such occurred, it was a very serious offence, and a grave violation of the duty of, and the oath administered to, each Grand Juror. The oath taken by the members forming the Grand Jury is to the effect that they will not disclose the counsels of her Majesty the Queen, of their fellow-jurors, or their own. Any one violating that oath, by making public what had passed in the Grand Jury Room would be guilty of perjury, and the Chairman proceeded to say that he did not know the name of the person implicated in the present instance, or he would take means to prevent him ever committing the same offence again. It appeared from the statement of the Foreman of the Jury that the public had free access to the room in which the jury held their deliberations, and from this circumstance it would appear that they were not entirely aware of the necessity, both legal and moral, of keeping their counsels private and undivulged; but we think that the caution which was given them by the Chairman, and the exposition of the law thus drawn forth, will be highly useful to all who are liable to serve on juries, or to be concerned in the management of cases to be tried by juries. The frequent letters which appeared in the morning papers, both of Dublin and London, from solicitor, plaintiff, and defendant, in an important action lately tried in Dublin, concerning the relative number of the jury who were in favour of a verdict for the plaintiff, or for the defendant, and the painful effect these letters, containing positive statements "from the lips of one of the jury," created in the minds of all who sufficiently ppreciate, the sacredness of the deliberations in the jury-box, cannot fail to be fresh in the memories of our readers, and therefore we think the public and the legal profession are indebted to Mr. Clarke for his remarks to the Grand Jury at Graigue.

Very influentially attended meetings have been held at Coleraine and Magherafelt, to consider the defective state of the laws for the recovery of small debts in Ireland, with a view to have the same altered and amended by legislative enactment, as necessity requires. The resolutions passed will be found elsewhere in the present number of The Irish Law Times; they were moved and seconded by gentlemen who thoroughly understood the working and defects of the present law for the recovery of small debts, and, therefore, were perfectly competent to suggest means for its amendment. The principal improvements suggested at the meetings were—a reduction in the amount of a debt for which a man might be arrested; that magistrates should have authority to issue warrants for arrest; that Chairmen of Quarter Sessions should have power to adjudicate in cases where the sum sought to be recovered exceeded £40.

There is no doubt that these amendments are loudly called for by the exigencies of the public requirements, as well as by the almost unanimous voice of the profession.

The object of all law should be to serve the public interest, but the experience which we have now had of the working of the Sheriffs' Act (27 & 28 Vict., cap. 99), show that some of the clauses—as, for instance, in sections 4-10, whereby it is enacted that the sheriff alone shall execute decrees, and which allow him two months to make a return, and make him irresponsible after six months—afford dishonest debtors an opportunity to make away with their property, and thereby avoid the action of the decree. Numerous instances of this practice were mentioned by the solicitors who spoke at both the meetings in Coleraine, and every practitioner will be able to supply instances of the kind from his own experience.

We are glad to hear that it is proposed to get up meetings throughout Ireland, for the purpose of agitating and discussing the proposed amendments in this law, and we would impress upon our readers the necessity of bringing the matter before their respective representatives in the House of Commons, in order to secure their co-operation at the approaching session, which they should the more readily grant, as all the trading classes are interested in the amendments sought to be obtained by the profession; for, as it was happily stated by Mr Ellis, any defect in the law that gave a debtor an opportunity of avoiding the payment of his just and legitimate debt, tended to lessen the confidence that one merchant should have in another with whom he did business, and it circumscribed credit, and lessened or injured trade, because "confidence was credit, and credit was capital."

HILARY TERM, 1868, was inaugurated on Saturday last, when "the several Courts of Law and Equity were opened with the usual formalities." All the Equity Judges were present in the three Courts now forming the Chancery establishment, and eleven of the Common Law Judges presided in their respective Courts. We have no legal changes to record during the brief period covered by the Michaelmas vacation. The Nisi Prius after sittings occupied the attention of the "Chiefs" of the Common Pleas and Exchequer up to Christmas, and even after; the Common Pleas being occupied with the sensational cause of Harris v. Baggot, which was adjourned over Christmas, and then resumed, as our readers are aware, to end where it had begun. The Chief Baron also had but a brief respite from his labours, which were resumed before the present term commenced.

The changes occasioned in the official constitution of the Courts of Chancery and Common Law by the legislation of the past year have now been thoroughly carried out, and appear to be working well for the public, and with satisfaction to the profession.

The new Record Depository, however, has not received that consideration from the authorities which so important a public department deserves; but feeble efforts having been made hitherto in getting together a staff such as will be required to meet the necessities of the Legal Profession and the public, as well as thoroughly competent to comprehend the nature of, and the duties incident to, the multifarious documents which in a short time must be concentrated therein from the Record Rooms inside the walls of the Four Courts, in addition to the vast number which will flow in from the Castle, Custom House, Probate Court, and other isolated depositories.

As yet there is no appearance of any building being either erected for or converted to the permanent use of the Vice-Chancellor's Court, and that of his staff; the present temporary Court being the vestibule of the new Record Buildings.

The newly constituted Court of Admiralty is steadily settling down into working order; as the learned Judge affords every assistance to the practitioners in his Court.

Mr. Baron Hughes, we regret to say, is still unable to resume his duties on the Exchequer Bench, and continues at Nice for the benefit of his health. Rumours prevailed in the "Hall" on Saturday that the learned Baron was about to resign, and that the Attorney-General would be elevated to the Bench before he had an opportunity of displaying his oratorical powers in the House of Commons. These reports are, we believe, for the present premature, as it is expected that Baron Hughes will be sufficiently recovered to resume his judicial duties by the beginning of Easter Term.

The Benchers were occupied for a considerable time last Saturday in considering the circumstances connected with the bill transactions of Mr. Sidney, Q.C., as disclosed in the Common Pleas during the recent trial of Harris v. Baggot. We believe some difference of opinion existed as to what course should be adopted by them pending the case being again tried at the next after sittings; nothing definite, however, resulted from the meeting further than a resolution requesting the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas to furnish a copy of his notes of Mr. Sidney's evidence on the trial, and that the latter gentleman should be called upon to offer such explanation as he may think proper, and that the subject should be more fully considered at a future meeting, to be held about the 28th inst. We understand that the record of Harris v. Baggot will probably appear in the list for the next after-sittings; but it is also rumoured that there will be an application to the Court to change the venue to some of the neighbouring counties, or to have a Special Jury struck under the old system to try the case. If this should prove true there will probably be nothing done by the Benchers before Easter Term, as it is unlikely that they will take any final action in the matter until the case has been disposed of by a jury.

A GENERAL MEETING of the Profession of Attorneys and Solicitors will be held to-day, at Two o'clock, in the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, for the purpose of adopting an address to Her Majesty the Queen, expressing their strong condemnation of the Fenian conspiracy, and the determination of the Members of the Profession to give every aid in their power to the Government in crushing it out.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE LORD LIEUTENANT has been pleased to accept the invitation of the Benchers to a Public Banquet, to be held on Thursday next, the 23rd inst., at the King's Inns. We trust that the Profession of the Attorneys and Solicitors will be fully represented on the occasion.

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.

LEGAL CHANGES IN ENGLAND.

Early in the week the Advertiser stated it was generally reported that Sir J. Rolt had placed in the hands of the Government his resignation as one of the Lords Justices. Sir Fitzroy Kelly, according to current rumour, will be Lord Cairns's colleague, Mr. Attorney General Karslake becoming Chief Baron of the Exchequer, Mr. Selwyn to succeed as Attorney-General, and for the Solicitor Generalship the names of Mr. Brett, M.P., and Mr. Huddlestone were mentioned. It would appear, however, that there is no stronger foundation than mere rumour for these reported changes.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Will you kindly permit me to call the attention of the Incorporated Law Society and Solicitors to the absence of a debating society for attorneys' apprentices. One of them myself, and knowing their general impressions on this matter, I can say that they are very anxious to have such a society established, and are only kept from forming one by individual unwillingness to attract attention by taking the lead in the matter. I would suggest that some of the Law Society's officers break the ice when the apprentices are assembled for lecture on Monday next. Once launched we can manage our boat with the best.

I remain, Sir, yours, &c.
AN APPRENTICE.

NOTES OF CASES.

Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

COURT OF CHANCERY.

Reported by Wm. Woodlock, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Peyton v. M'Morrow.

Jan. 11, 1868. Practice—Affidavits.

H. MacDermott, for infant respondents, applied for liberty to file affidavits in answer to the replying affidavit of the petitioner, notwithstanding that the cause had been set down for hearing.

Lawson, Q.C., opposed the motion, upon the ground that the affidavits were such as ought to have been filed as evidence with the respondents' answering affidavits, and were not in reply to any new matter contained in the petitioner's replying affidavit.

The Lord Chancellor allowed the affidavits to be filed at the respondents' peril, stating that he would make them pay the costs of such portions of the affidavits as were properly evidence in support of the answer, and not a reply to new matter introduced by the petitioner.

Solicitor for the petitioner, Peyton.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by Edward S. Trevor, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In the Matter of the 11 & 12 Vic., c. 68, and the Trusts of the Legacy bequeathed by the Will of George Godfrey to Eliza Godfrey.

1867. Nov. 17; Dec. 4.—Married Woman — Personal Annuity — Assignment by Husband and Wife ineffectual.

George Godfrey, by a codicil to his will, dated the 18th of December, 1821, left an annuity of £30 to Margaret Murdock, for life, payable in certain proportions by the legatees named in his will. The proportion of the annuity payable by Eliza Godfrey (whose legacy was lodged under the Trustee Relief Act to the credit of this matter) was £13 16s. 11d., and by an order of the 24th of February, 1852, it was ordered that same should be paid annually out of the dividends of the sum of £1,343 stock, lodged in this matter, to Margaret Murdock, and the residue of the dividends to Eliza Godfrey. Eliza Godfrey died in 1867, and on her death the petitioner became entitled to the fund in Court. Margaret Murdock was a married woman, and the petitioners entered into an agreement with her and her husband to assign the annuity to them in consideration of £120, which agreement was carried out by a deed of the 26th of June, 1867, whereby Mr. and Mrs. Murdock assigned the annuity to the petitioners, and released the fund in Court. The petition prayed for a transfer of the fund in Court to the petitioners.

W. D. Andrews, for the petitioners.

The Master of the Rolls refused to transfer the whole fund, and retained a sum of £150 in Court, to meet the annuity, in case Margaret Murdock should survive her husband.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by Wm. Barlow, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

The Scottish Amicable Life Assurance Society v. James Fuller.

Dec. 19, 1867.—Policy—Action by Assignee—Injunction—30 & 31 Vic., c. 144.

Motion for an injunction to restrain the defendant from prosecuting further an action to recover from the plaintiffs the amount of a policy of insurance assigned to the defendant, who sued, in his own name, under the 30 & 31 Vic., c. 144, s. 1.

The bill stated that James Whelan, on the 8th of November, 1866, insured his life in the office of the plaintiffs for £500; three days later, assigned the policy to the defendant for £16 10s. 10d.; and died on the 7th of March, 1867. The bill disclosed a case of fraud in the inception of the contract, and prayed a declaration that the defendant is not now entitled in equity to the moneys secured by the policy; that the policy should be delivered up to be cancelled; and an injunction.

Lawson, Q.C., and Monahan, for the plaintiffs, contended that the question, whether the defendant had the "right in equity to receive, and the right to give an effectual discharge" to the company for the amount of the policy, should be decided in a Court of Equity. The C. L. P. Act (Ir.) 1856, s. 85, has not ousted the jurisdiction of this Court to interfere by injunction in such a case: Gompertz v. Pooley, 4 Drew, 448.

Flanagan, Q C., and O'Driscoll, for the defendant, contended that the question could be more conveniently tried at law, as the case disclosed by the bill was, if true, a perfect answer to the action, and any equitable question could be raised by an equitable defence. This Court will not exercise its concurrent jurisdiction, unless the bill prays for some relief beyond what a court of law could grant: Clarke v. Manning, 7 Beav., 162; Thiedemann v. Goldschmidt, 1 De Gex, Fish and Jon., 4.

The Vice-Chancellor refused to grant the injunction, saying that the facts stated in the bill disclosed, if true, a complete defence to the action, and that the plaintiffs could avail themselves of these facts as well at law as in equity. The assignee does not obtain, under the recent statute, any better title than he would have had, if he had, before that Act passed, sued in his assignor's name. To adopt the argument urged on behalf of the plaintiffs would be to neutralize the Act, for if the assignee must establish his equitable right in a Court of Equity before he proceeds at law, it would be necessary to grant an injunction to restrain every action in which the Company impeached the policy on the ground of fraud.

Leslie v. Hogan and Others.

Jan. 16, 1867.—Service on Parties—Practice—Striking out Cause.

Sullivan, Q.C. (with Jordan), stated the petition in this case.

F. Walshe, Q.C., and Byrne were for the respondents. On opening their case it appeared that three of the respondents, against whom process was prayed, had not been served. The cause was set down (apparently by some miscarriage on the part of the officer) without any affidavit of service on these three respondents, and it was alleged at the bar that two of these three are in America, and that the third is dead.

The Vice-Chancellor struck the cause out.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Reported by VAL. C. COPPINGER, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

The following case has not yet appeared in the regular reports:—

LEVINGSTON v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE LURGAN UNION.

April 24; May 1, 1867.—Action against Poor Law Guardians in their Corporate Capacity—1 & 2 Vict., c. 56—Orders of Poor Law Commissioners—Order of Guardians—Practice—Demurrer Books.

This case came before the Court upon demurrer to two special defences pleaded by the defendants. The writ of summons and plaint contained two counts, both of which substantially complained that the plaintiff, who is a linen manufacturer, was entitled to the use of a certain stream for the purposes of his manufacture, and that the defendants polluted it and deprived him of the use of it, by discharging into the stream, above his establishment, the sewage of the Workhouse. The defendants, among other defences, pleaded, first, that the Poor Law Commissioners had, in pursuance of the statute in that behalf, duly issued a general order, directing them if and whenever there should arise any defect in the drainage of the Workhouse, prejudicial to the health of the inmates, forthwith to remedy it, and that such a defect had arisen, and that the only way of remedying it was by doing what was complained of, and that they accordingly did so; and, secondly, that in pursuance of the powers given them by the 1 & 2 Vic., c. 56, they duly made an order directing one Robert M'Connell to do the acts complained of, that, save by the making of the said order, they did not do, or cause to be done, the acts complained of, and that said order had not been quashed, and was still in full force.

To these two defences the plaintiff demurred, and the case now came on for argument.

Counsel for the plaintiff, Harrison, Q.C., and Meade.

Counsel for the defendants, Law, Q.C., and Munroe.

The COURT were of opinion that the two defences were unsustainable, because the order of the Poor Law Commissioners was not intended to prejudice the rights of third parties, and if it had been, it would have been ultra vires and void, and because the order made by the Guardians themselves was also ultra vires. They were, however, of opinion that judgment should be given for the defendants upon the whole record, inasmuch as no such action could be maintained against the Guardians in their corporate capacity, as there was no corporate property which could be properly applied in payment of the plaintiff's demand, if judgment were given for him (Coe v. Wise, 5 Best and Smith, p. 440), and that the 1 & 2 Vic., c. 56, s. 94, substantially declares that the rates shall not be either directly or indirectly applied to the payment of such a demand; which they would be, either if a special rate were struck for the purpose, or if the goods vested in the Guardians in their corporate capacity, were seized and sold, for then they should be supplied from the rates. They were also of opinion that the mere fact that the defendants' counsel had, for the first time, during the course of the argument, turned round upon the summons and plaint, and rested their arguments against it upon grounds which had not been noted upon the the Demurrer Books, did not deprive them of the benefit of their objections, and would, at the utmost, have entitled the plaintiff to a postponement of the argument, if his counsel had applied for it, on the grounds of surprise.

MONAHAN, C.J., intimated an opinion that the plaintiff had a remedy against the Guardians in their individual capacity (Richardson v. Corcoran, 7 Ir. Com. Law Rep., 72). Judgment for the defendants.

Attorney for the plaintiff, Thomas Carleton.

Attorney for the defendants, George Hazlett.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE LYNCH.

In re the Estate of the TRUSTEES of KEAN, Owners and Petitioners.

Feb. 22, 25.—Construction of Will—Lapsed Legacies.

The testatrix, Mrs. Kean, by her will dated 20th April, 1854, directed her trustees "to set apart and appropriate the sum of £3,000 sterling, to be held by the trustees or trustee for the time being of this my will in trust, for the six daughters, now living, of the Rev. Thomas Digges LaTouche, in equal shares as tenants in common." A proviso followed, that if any of the six daughters should die under 21 years of age, and without having been married, her share should be held in trust for the survivors, and be divided amongst them, if more than one, in equal shares as tenants in common.

The same testatrix, by a codicil to her will, dated 7th August, 1858, directed her trustees to pay to E. D. LaTouche, H. D. LaTouche, and G. D. LaTouche, £1,000 equally, to be divided between them, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and that the dividends, interest, and annual income of the said sum of £1,000 should be held and enjoyed by them, and the survivors of them, in equal shares and proportions during their joint lives, and by the survivor of them during her life, and that the trustees should stand possessed of said sum upon trust to pay the dividends, &c., accordingly, "and after the decease of the survivor of them, the said E. D. LaTouche, H. D. LaTouche, and G. D. LaTouche, upon trust for their respective executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely."

Grace Digges LaTouche, one of the six daughters of the Rev. Thomas Digges LaTouche, died in the life-time of the testatrix, unmarried, and having attained the age of 34 years.

Henrietta Digges LaTouche, one of the legatees mentioned in the codicil, died in the life-time of the testatrix.

Norman, Q.C., for the surviving sisters of Grace Digges LaTouche, who claimed to be entitled to her share of the legacy of £3,000; also for the surviving sisters of Henrietta Digges LaTouche, who claimed to be entitled to her share of the legacy of £1,000.

Leech, for the owners and petitioners, and residuary legatees, contra.

Feb. 25.—Judge LYNCH delivered judgment, disallowing the claims of the surviving sisters, and holding that the legacies to Grace Digges LaTouche and Henrietta Digges LaTouche had both lapsed, but that the surviving sisters of Henrietta Digges LaTouche, and the survivor of the surviving sisters, were entitled during their lives to the interest or dividends of the legacy given to their deceased sister.

Solicitor having carriage, Robert Maddock.

In re the Estate of JOHN S. KIRWAN.

July 9.—Arrears of Interest upon Mortgage Debt due by Husband, payable to the separate use of the Wife.

The trustees of the settlement executed upon the marriage of Lady Victoria Kirwan with the owner in this matter, in February, 1860, advanced to her husband, upon the security of a mortgage of his landed estates, £7,775 7s. 8d., being a portion of trust funds settled to her separate use. In 1863 the owner presented a petition for the sale of his estate in the Landed Estates' Court. A claim was now made on behalf of Lady Victoria Kirwan, that she should be paid the arrears of interest due upon the mortgage debt. Her affidavit, made to ground the application, stated that she had never authorized her husband to retain such interest; that she had on several occasions pressed upon her trustees the necessity of taking steps for procuring payment of such interest out of the produce of the sale of her husband's lands, and that she had incurred debts to a considerable amount for necessaries. It was admitted that Lady Victoria had been living with her husband during the years for which she claimed interest.

Sullivan, Q.C., (with him Flanagan, Q.C.), for Lady Victoria Kirwan, cited In re Colclough's Estate (8 Ir. Ch. R., 330); Corbally v. Grainger (4 Ir. Ch. R., 173); Edgeworth v. Edgeworth (16 Ir. Ch. R., 348); Lady Victoria Kirwan could not have done more than she did to obtain her interest.

F. White, Q.C., contra, cited Arthur v. Arthur (11 Ir. Eq. R. 511); Thrapp v. Harman (3 Mylne and Keen, 513); Rowley v. Unwin (2 Kay and Johnson, 138). No express authority was necessary that the husband should collect the rents. Lady Victoria might have obtained the appointment of a receiver. She is not entitled to more than one year's interest, ending with February, 1867, when she made her claim.

Flanagan, Q.C., replied. The claim for interest had reference back to the time when the petition was filed. The petition is to be considered a petition presented on Lady Victoria's behalf as well as on that of other incumbrancers. It cannot be argued that her husband was supporting Lady Victoria during all the time, when her affidavit states that she incurred debts for necessaries. She could not have filed a substantive petition after her husband had filed his petition for a sale.

Dobbs, J.—In all these cases of settlement to the separate use of a wife, if it is merely to her separate use, the meaning is that the wife has a power to appoint, generally, the money or the land. Where the settlement is to her separate use, without power of anticipation, that merely alters the nature of the power given to her, and it is then limited to a power to appoint from half-year to half-year, the interest or dividends. The principle upon which only one year's arrears of interest are allowed, when the wife has lived with her husband, is, that she must be taken to have appointed the interest, from time to time, to her husband, by the act of living with him. This gentleman has remained in possession, and this lady has acquiesced in his doing so. To hold thus is not at variance with the decision in In re Colclough's Estate, or the doctrine that a petition in this Court is presented on behalf of all parties interested. The presumption is that Lady Victoria did so exercise her power. It is said that she could do nothing to obtain her interest, but she could have required her trustees to make a claim, or she could have filed a claim. I see nothing to bring this case within the exceptions to the rule, and therefore I can only allow one year's interest.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by J. Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Judge Miller.

In re Dawson Tate & Co., Bankrupts.

Jan., 1868.—Mortgage to secure an antecedent debt and for future advances—Fraudulent preference—Machinery, fixed and movable—Registry of Mortgage Deed.

The bankrupts were linen manufacturers at Portadown, and the question at issue, which came before the Court upon charge and discharge, was the validity of a mortgage executed by the bankrupts to Messrs. Shaw, of Belfast, and disputed by the assignees, for whom Purcell, Q.C., and Munroe appeared; Kernan, Q.C., was for the mortgagees.

Judge Miller, in giving judgment, said the charge was filed by Messrs. Shaw, of Belfast, and the discharge filed by the assignees of the bankrupts, Dawson Tate, senior, and Dawson Tate, jun. In June, 1866, the bankrupts had executed to Messrs. Shaw, a mortgage of their factory to secure £5,000, which included nearly £2,000 then due; the remainder to be advanced to enable the mortgagees to proceed with the erection of a new mill and machinery, which they required. Under that mortgage the Messrs. Shaw claimed not only the premises, but the looms and machinery erected thereon. It was alleged by the assignees that it was fraudulent and void against them, because it was in effect an absolute conveyance of all the bankrupts' property to secure an antecedent debt, as well as for future advances. If any balance had been due at the date of the mortgage, it would be a question whether, according to the terms of that mortgage, it could be held to be secured. But it had been deposed to by the Messrs. Shaw, and their book-keeper, that no portion of the £1,800 due to Messrs. Shaw at the time the mortgage was executed, was now due, or claimed. The claim made under the charge was said to be for advances, all made since the execution of the mortgage. The next ground of impeachment was that the mortgage was not registered, but was kept secret, in consequence of which the bankrupts obtained credit from other persons who were now to remain unpaid, whilst the holders of the secret deed were to get all. It was charged that the Messrs. Shaw designedly postponed registering their mortgage, and in fact it was not registered until two days before the act of Bankruptcy, on which the adjudication was founded. That might seem a very proper ground of complaint on the part of creditors who had no mortgage, or any special security, but the result of his (Judge Miller's) observations was, that it was an almost general practice with traders who had not the command of capital, to deposit their title deeds with banks as equitable mortgages, to secure advances on the strength of which they hoped to struggle through and increase their trade, so that when a crash came there was little or nothing for general creditors, and, as in the present case, the premises which they believed to belong to the bankrupts were in other hands. He suggested to the wholesale merchants and others who give large credit, to consider whether they ought not to ask for legislation, making it compulsory to register all mortgages within a specified time, as in the case of bills of sale, so that the existence of such mortgages could be made known to all creditors. In the absence of such legislation he should only deal with the case according to the law as it stood. It was sworn by the Messrs. Shaw that they had dealings with the bankrupts since 1862, and had such faith in their solvency that they were willing all through to give them credit up to £2,000, and did give them credit to nearly that amount without any security; moreover they would not have asked for security were it not that the Tates had asked for additional credit. Then the mortgage was executed, and they said if they had any doubt of the solvency of the bankrupts they would have registered it. They further stated that the bankrupts told them they were paying for the erection of additional buildings and new machinery; and as to the charge of keeping the instrument secret, they denied it altogether, and referred to the evidence of Mr. Richardson and other persons whom they informed of its existence. It appeared by the evidence of Messrs. Shaw that a month before the bankruptcy, they advanced £920, and two days before the stoppage they made a further advance of £144. Another ground of objection was that the mortgage was against public policy, and the policy of the bankrupt law. That was a very general statement, but the Court found no evidence to sustain it; or that the mortgage was executed with intent to defeat or delay creditors, and that consequently it was an act of bankruptcy; if it were, the deed of course would be overreached, and the claim of the assignees should prevail, if it were within the period of six months; but in the present case that limit was exceeded, and the execution of the deed could not be the foundation for an adjudication in bankruptcy. His Lordship then referred to that part of the evidence which related to the machinery. His Lordship held that all the looms that were nailed down or bolted into the floor of the mill premises were fixtures, which passed to the mortgagees, and not goods and chattels to which the assignees would be entitled, as in the order and disposition of the bankrupts at the time of the bankruptcy. He held that three or four looms that were not fastened down but were made steady by their own weight, passed to the assignees. He declared the Messrs. Shaw, as having proved their charge, entitled to their costs.

BANKRUPTCY LAW REFORM.

BELFAST CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

On Wednesday last the usual half-yearly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held at the Commercial Buildings, Belfast. From the report which was submitted to the meeting, and which, perhaps, too pithily treated the subjects alluded to, we extract the following paragraph relating to the amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy and Insolvency in Ireland. We also append the remarks thereon, made in the course of the subsequent discussion:—

"BANKRUPTCY.

"The Bankrupt law of this country has frequently formed the subject of consideration of your Council, by reason of constantly recurring complaints by the merchants and traders in the North of Ireland of the waste and ruin of estates under the present process of the bankruptcy law in Ireland. Your Council, believing that a Bill similar in principle throughout to that introduced for England, would suit admirably for Ireland, and it being desirable also that the law and practice upon such a subject as bankruptcy should as far as possible be made identical in both countries, memorialized the Attorney-General for Ireland, praying that he would introduce a Bill for the administration of the law of bankruptcy in Ireland, following the precedent of the said English Bill mutatis mutandis."

Mr. LYTLE.—The next topic introduced in this report is the bankruptcy laws, and it is unnecessary for me to occupy your time in speaking upon the subject, inasmuch as we trust that our wishes will be realized, and that the Attorney-General will comply with the prayer of the memorial that has been addressed to him, and, simultaneously with the introduction of the Bill which is promised for England, introduce one on a similar basis for this country. There can be only one opinion as to the necessity for such a measure, and I hope the next Session of Parliament will not be allowed to close without such a Bill being passed for Ireland.

Mr. LINDSAY spoke of the present system of procedure as remarkable for its expensiveness, and being merely a conduit by which unworthy traders manage to escape their obligations to their creditor. He wished, however, that the Council would give them more information as to the measures of amendment which they had agreed to propose.

Mr. M'CAUSLAND—In reference to bankruptcy reform, I may remind the Chamber that, in 1866 and 1867, we memorialized the Attorney-General for England, but this year we have memorialized the Attorney-General for Ireland. Mr. Lanyon has kindly offered to urge this matter, and I trust in the coming Session we may see a Bill for reform of the Bankruptcy Laws of Ireland pass.

Mr. LANYON, M.P.—With reference to the Bankruptcy Laws, referred to by Mr. M'Causland and Mr. Lindsay, it is not generally known that these laws were very minutely considered, indeed, by all the Chambers of Commerce throughout England, and in this country also. I do not know that there is a single Chamber that has not had this matter under review. I was present at a meeting in London of delegates from all the Chambers of Commerce, and from your body amongst the rest, at which the provisions of the new Bill were most fully considered. The Bill, in conformity with the suggestions of the different bodies represented, was brought in by the present Government during the last Session. In consequence of the great difficulty of getting any Bill through the House last Session except the one—(laughter)—the new Bankruptcy Bill had to be withdrawn. I applied—as I thought it my duty to do so, knowing the great interest which this Chamber felt in the matter—to the Attorney-General to know if the provisions of the Bill would be made to apply to Ireland as well as to England, and he stated to me that the two Bills could not exactly be the same, but that, immediately upon the passing of the Bill for England, a separate Bill, founded upon it, and modified to meet the requirements of the Irish law, would be brought before the House. I have in my possession here a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce to present to the Irish Attorney-General, and this I hope to do to-morrow in Dublin, and I think you shall not have any reason to complain of an absence of urging on my part.—(Hear, hear.)

SESSIONS BAR, COUNTY ROSCOMMON.

At a Meeting, held on the 10th January, 1868, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

No. 1. Resolved—That in consequence of the chairman having at the late sessions of Strokestown stated that in future he would not permit two attorneys to act together for the same client in any civil bill proceeding, alleging as his reason that "the time had now arrived for adopting this course, as there were plenty of barristers attending the court," we, in the interests of the public and our profession, protest against what we conceive to be an arbitrary and illegal rule, unfair towards the suitors, and an unjust attempt to interfere with their, and our, long established rights.

No. 2. Resolved—That we pledge ourselves to resist so uncalled for an effort (undisguisedly avowed by the Chairman), to give exclusive priority and business to barristers in opposition to the rights of our profession, in a court peculiarly an attorney's one, and that we shall adopt every legitimate means to defeat such an object.

GRAIGUE QUARTER SESSIONS.

Before the Chairman for the Queen's County, JOSEPH CLARKE, Esq., and a Special Jury, January 13th.

THOMAS O'MEARA, M.D., v. THE PATRIOTIC INSURANCE CO.

This was an action for £25, loss sustained by plaintiff in consequence of the destruction by fire of a shed and some household property, alleged to be insured by the Patriotic Insurance Company.

R. Malcomson appeared for plaintiff; and T. C. Butler for the defence.

From the statement of plaintiff's case by Mr. Malcomson, it appeared that about sixteen years ago he insured his house, household furniture, coach-house, stable, horses, &c., with the Patriotic Insurance Company, and in the year 1861 increased the insurance. Plaintiff had workmen employed in his house, and as the flooring required to be repaired he had a quantity of oil cloth and matting, a portion of the insured property, valued at about £15, removed to an out-house or shed. A fire subsequently broke out in this shed, which was used as a stand for a hay rick, and the oil cloth, shed, and some straw were destroyed, the estimated value of the property so destroyed being £25, the amount sought in the present action. This claim, however, was resisted by the insurance company upon the ground that, according to the wording of the policy, they were only liable for furniture destroyed by fire in the dwelling-house, and that the out-office, where the fire occurred, was not included in the insured premises, the out-offices mentioned in the policy being particularized as coach-house and stable. Mr. Malcomson contended at considerable length that the removal of a portion of the insured property from the dwelling-house to an out-office did not relieve the insurance company from the responsibility, and he contended that according to the wording of the policy they should be held liable for the value of the shed destroyed by fire.

At the close of plaintiff's case,

His Worship said the only question for the jury in the case would be the value of the property destroyed, as the real question in the case was one entirely of law—namely, the construction to be placed upon the wording of the policy. He was clearly of opinion that according to the policy plaintiff could not recover for the oil cloth, as the insurance company were only liable for the furniture within the house; and this appeared to be reasonable enough, as insurance companies, when making their rates of insurance, naturally supposed that very great care would be taken to guard against fire in a dwelling-house, but the same care might not be taken of an out-house. Upon the other point he was of opinion that the company was liable for the loss of the out house, as the wording of the policy was sufficiently wide to allow of its being included. He thought, however, in a case of this kind, that a company should act liberally.

Mr. Butler repudiated a statement made by Mr. Malcomson to the effect that defendant had raised the merest technical objections to the process with the view of defeating the claim, the fact being that the technical objections were raised solely by him (Mr. Butler), and his clients had nothing whatever to say to their being raised. As to the out-office, he submitted that it could not be included in the insured premises described as out-offices, as the 9th Geo. IV., chap. 13, an Act regulating insurances, required that every distinct building should be separately insured in the policy of insurance, and the only premises named in this case as out-offices were the coach-house and stable.

His Worship was of opinion that under this Act of Parliament the company was not liable for the shed.

Whilst the case was at hearing a mutual agreement was entered into, at the suggestion of his Worship, by which the case was dismissed upon the merits, defendants undertaking to allow plaintiff £20 for the loss sustained by the fire.

THE RECOVERY OF SMALL DEBTS IN IRELAND.

At a recent Public Meeting of the inhabitants of Coleraine and neighbourhood, which was held in the Town Hall, Stewart Hunter, Esq, Chairman of the Town Commissioners, presiding—the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

Proposed by John M'Farland, Esq., solicitor, and seconded by William Warke, Esq., wine merchant, and

Resolved—"That in our opinion the Laws for the recovery of Small Debts in Ireland are defective and unsatisfactory, and require immediate remedy and amendment."

Proposed by Robert K. Knox, Esq, solicitor, and seconded by John Huey, Esq., grain merchant, and

Resolved—"That the Act 27th and 28th Victoria, chapter 99, commonly called the 'Sheriff's Act,' instead of being a useful Statute, has rendered the recovery of Small Debts in Ireland still more difficult, and therefore ought to be amended."

Proposed by George Proctor, Esq., Sessional Crown Solicitor for the City and County of Londonderry, and seconded by Alexander Crawford, Esq., ironmonger, and

Resolved—"That the Act, taking away the power of arresting the body of a defendant for amounts not exceeding Ten Pounds, has enabled many persons to defraud their creditors, and therefore the power of imprisonment for small debts ought to be restored to the Statute-Book."

Proposed by Edward Gribbon, Esq., linen manufacturer, and seconded by William Ellis, Esq., grocer, and

Resolved—"That the power of a judge to issue a fiat against an absconding debtor on proper affidavit and writ issued, should be extended to a magistrate acting upon a like affidavit and upon a similar or the usual and ordinary process of law."

Proposed by Thomas G. Carson, Esq., solicitor, and seconded by Hugh H. Birch, Esq., woollen-draper, and

Resolved—"That, besides the present mode of executing decrees through the Sheriff, the plaintiff should be enabled, at his option, to nominate and appoint his own bailiffs for the execution of all decrees; said bailiffs to be authorized and empowered by the Sheriff to execute such decrees at the plaintiff's peril, and that any justice of the peace be empowered, on the statement of any bailiff appointed to execute any decree or dismiss, that he apprehends any violence in the execution of the same, to order the assistance of the constabulary."

Proposed by Daniel Taylor, Esq., J.P., merchant, and seconded by John Lusk, Esq., merchant, and

Resolved—"That the Chairman of Quarter Sessions ought to be empowered to adjudicate upon, and grant decrees to the extent of, but not exceeding One Hundred Pounds sterling, in all actions for debt; and that decrees should bear interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum, from the date of issue till the time of payment; and that everything seizable under a writ of execution, ought to be seizable under a civil bill decree, and that in all undefended cases for hearing at the Quarter Sessions it should be lawful for a plaintiff to obtain a decree by filing with the Clerk of the Peace, through his attorney, an affidavit of debt made by himself, his manager, or known agent, before a Justice of the Peace, a Master Extraordinary of the Court of Chancery, or a Commissioner of any of Her Majesty's Superior Courts of Common Law in Great Britain or Ireland."

Proposed by Drummond Grant, Esq., woollen-draper, and seconded by J. S. Anderson, Esq., woollen-draper, and

Resolved—"That a petition to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland be forwarded from Coleraine, praying his Excellency to have a bill brought into Parliament to remedy and amend the existing grievances in this matter, and that when such bill shall be introduced, a second petition to the House of Commons be forwarded, praying it to pass such measure, and that all other towns and districts in Ireland be requested, and are hereby invited to co operate with the people of Coleraine in obtaining the contemplated change of law, and to extend the present movement for that purpose."

Proposed by William Ellis, Esq, merchant, seconded by Thomas G. Carson, Esq., solicitor, and

Resolved—"That the best thanks of the meeting are due, and are hereby tendered to George Proctor, Esq., for the exertions he has put forth to have the law affecting the recovery of small debts in Ireland amended."

Proposed by John M'Farland, Esq., solicitor, seconded by R. K. Knox, Esq., and

Resolved—"That Stewart Hunter, Esq., do now leave the chair, that Sir Hervey Bruce, Bart., take the same."

STEWART HUNTER, Chairman.
J. A. MACLELLAN, Hon. Sec.

AMENDMENT OF THE CIVIL BILL ACTS.

PUBLIC MEETING IN MAGHERAFELT.

On Wednesday a public meeting was held in the Court House for "the purpose of considering the present defective state of the law in respect of the recovery of debts and the execution of civil bill decrees in Ireland, and also of memorialising the Government for the amendment of the same." R. P. Dawson, Esq., M.P., D.L., J.P., occupied the chair.

Mr. John Hill moved the first resolution—"That the Statutes, known as the Civil Bill Acts in Ireland, are defective, and require to be consolidated and amended." He believed the present state of the law was satisfactory to no one; its operations were most oppressive, and that, too, on those least able to bear it. (Hear, hear).

Mr. Thomas G. Carson seconded the resolution.

The Chairman put the motion, when it was passed unanimously.

Mr. Glover then moved the second resolution, which was as follows:—"That the report of the solicitors practising at Quarter Sessions in Ireland, as adopted at their meeting on 21st November, 1867, is worthy of the careful consideration of her Majesty's Government, and should, in our opinion, be embodied in any Act of Parliament prepared by them for the amendment of the Civil Bill Acts in Ireland." He felt great pleasure in bringing the resolution before them, as he believed if its provisions were carried into effect great benefits would result to the country. The report was originally prepared by some very able gentlemen, and submitted to three meetings of solicitors practising at Quarter Sessions Courts in Ireland, and, after suggestions from different quarters, the present amended report was produced. Mr. Glover here referred to the several suggestions contained in the report, and showed how that, if carried out, they would be attended with great advantages. He then went on to refer to a number of other changes mentioned in the report, including the remuneration of process servers, jurisdiction as to slander, legacies, serving of process, venue, ejectment on title, the summoning of witnesses, undefended cases, renewal and execution of decrees. He also read the schedule of fees payable to attorneys, and went on at great length to advocate their adoption. [The report is contained in the supplement to the IRISH LAW TIMES of November 23, 1867.]

Mr. Babington—I think the Clerk of the Peace is underpaid by that schedule.

Mr. Glover—Well, he is improved to some extent.

Mr. Babington—I think 20s. is a very moderate sum for the Sheriff for attending in person.

Mr. Glover—He'll be satisfied with that.

The Chairman—I think the fees to the attorneys are very moderate.

Mr. James Morrow seconded the motion. He thought there was great necessity for a change in the execution of decrees. He himself had some cases, and sent a decree lately to the sheriff, and, on asking the officer why it was not executed, he told him he had not time, as he was much engaged in serving processes. The decree was there still, and he had written to the Sheriff, but got no answer.

Mr. Babington—Stop ; that is an accusation against the Sheriff.

The motion was put, and passed unanimously.

Mr. Proctor then moved that the Act of the 27th and 28th Victoria, cap. 99, known as the Sheriff's Act, should be repealed early in the coming Session of Parliament. He had great pleasure in attending the meeting that was honoured by the presence of their Parliamentary representative. He had attended a meeting lately in Coleraine for a similar purpose, at which Sir Hervey Bruce had presided, and he was glad to see gentlemen of their position coming out in such a manner.

The Chairman—We are only doing our duty.

Mr. Proctor then said there was a necessity for a change in the law. As early as 1866 it was found in that county that the Sheriff's Act did not work well, and the Incorporated Law Society, whose secretary he had the honour of being, had ascertained that the Act was useless. He thought from the experience of these gentlemen, none of them could doubt that a change was absolutely required as to the mode of executing civil bill decrees. A deputation waited on the Attorney-General, asking him to bring in a bill for the purpose of altering this Act. He intended to do so, but was anxious to know the mind of the people of Ireland about it. However, the one he intends to bring in is similar in its provisions to the 6th and 7th Wm. IV., cap. 75, sec. 41-43. Mr. Proctor thought this would not work well. For himself, he would prefer the Constabulary would be appointed to execute decrees.

Mr. James M'Kendrie seconded the motion, which was passed unanimously.

Mr. Glover moved "that a memorial from the County of Londonderry be forwarded to his Excellency, praying him to have a bill introduced into Parliament early next Session for the amendment and consolidation of all the Civil Bill Acts, and for the better execution of decrees in Ireland."

Mr. James Marks seconded the motion, which was unanimously agreed to.

On the motion of Colonel Conyngham, seconded by Mr Spotswood, a cordial vote of thanks was passed to Mr Dawson for his dignified conduct in the chair.

The Chairman having briefly thanked the meeting, and expressed his determination to forward the suggestions contained in the report by every means in his power,

The proceedings terminated.

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 52.] SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1868. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

THE present Number of the IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL completes the first year of its existence; and on reviewing its steady progress during the past twelve months, the Proprietors feel that they have achieved a far greater success, and received even a more substantial meed of support from both branches of the legal profession, than they could at first have reasonably expected. The Proprietors did not resolve on the apparently hazardous step of embarking in the publication of a legal newspaper to be devoted entirely to the interest of the lawyers of Ireland, without serious consideration. They took counsel with many gentlemen who were eminent in their different branches, and who, from long experience, knew perfectly the feelings of the members at large on the subject; and from every side the Proprietors received the same favourable answer. "Certainly, such a paper is required—the legal profession form the most influential body in Ireland—they possess the most intelligence and influence, and, undoubtedly, any paper started to advocate their interests cannot fail to be well supported." Such were the opinions and advice given before its publication; nor have these prognostications, tried by the severe experience of a first year, proved otherwise than true. Therefore the Proprietors feel that they may congratulate themselves on the amount of support they have received, and they owe their best thanks to those to whom they are indebted for that support.

They claim to have, as the phrase is, supplied a want which was long felt, but which no one had hitherto attempted to fill up in so complete a manner. The Bankrupt Calendar and the Jurist had both expired before the IRISH LAW TIMES made its first appearance; therefore, the field was perfectly clear; but this paper has done far more than merely fill the place formerly occupied by the Calendar and the Jurist, inasmuch as, in addition to what they contained, it publishes notes of all the important cases in which points of law are decided, supplied by the same gentlemen who report for the Irish Law Reports. The list of Court Papers, too, have been drawn up each week with the greatest care; and finally, those matters that most concern the interests of the Profession have been discussed in its columns, in articles furnished by gentlemen thoroughly conversant with the subjects. The different Acts passed during the year received a full investigation, as well as those Bills which it was proposed to introduce.

The repeal of the Certificate Duty has been urged at considerable length in these columns, and we trust Mr. Denman's efforts may be soon successful, as we are certain they must be, if the Profession will only impress on their representatives throughout the country the injustice of the Duty. The amendment of the Civil Bill Acts, and of the County Court practice generally, have been treated of in the fullest manner, and the columns of this paper were thrown open to two gentlemen who very ably discussed the merits of the Record of Title Act. Finally, each subscriber has obtained a complete set of the Public and General Statutes of 30 & 31 Vic., relating to Ireland, and the more important of those relating to the United Kingdom, which cannot fail to be useful to those who desire to be thoroughly posted in the latest changes in the law, and who wish to have these statutes in a convenient form, and easy of reference.

The Proprietors of the IRISH LAW TIMES, therefore, in looking back cannot accuse themselves of having failed to execute their engagements, undertaken at starting; whilst they have made arrangements and alterations in some of the departments of the paper which will enable them to work it with greater energy, and to introduce amendments which their own experience and the suggestions of their friends teach them it requires.

AT length we should seem to be approaching the solution of the long debated, puzzling problem of Bankruptcy Law Reform. So far as one, and that, too, by no means the less important, half of the community is concerned, a thoroughly discussed and well-considered measure has been agreed to, and the necessity for its immediate conversion into law, as well for Ireland as for England, is now being earnestly pressed upon the Government. In this movement there are united between forty and fifty Chambers of Commerce, English and Irish, representing all the chief centres of manufacturing industry, mercantile enterprise, and local trade in both countries. And, indeed, this universal activity is not to be wondered at when we remember that it is in relation to matters in which the interests of business men, contradistinguished from those of other sections of the public, are primarily and most intimately involved; while the general unanimity as to the alterations and amendments required may be simply attributed to the fact that men usually understand their own wants, and know their own business best. Moreover, all essays at legislation on this subject hitherto have been for the most part initiated by lawyers. Some of our most able men, eminent both as lawmakers and lawyers, have devoted thought, and propounded theories, and devised plans in order finally to settle the matter—with what success let the fate of Lord Westbury's elaborate Statute be at once a witness and a warning. The truth, we confess, appears to us to be that trade transactions, and their wrongs and remedies, will by the lawyer ever be regarded ab extra. It is well that we should also have the opinions and the suggestions of the men practically acquainted with such transactions, and who considers them ab intra. It is but fair then that our mercantile friends should now in turn expound their views, and try their hands upon remedial reform.

Some such sentiments appear to be entertained by the Government, for in the letter (which we print to-day) addressed to SIR CHARLES LANYON by the ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR IRELAND, he promises a Bill for this country immediately after Easter. We rejoice to find that it will be a measure assimilating the law in both countries, and we hope that it may be possible to introduce and pass an enactment of the kind before the end of the present Session.

A General Meeting of the Profession of Attorneys and Solicitors was held in the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, last Saturday, for the purpose of adopting an Address to the Queen. The meeting was very largely attended by gentlemen representing every shade of politics, who all agreed in the object before them, viz., to offer an Address of loyalty to the Queen in the present disturbed state of the country, a course which has been adopted frequently in England, but which it remains for the Solicitors to inaugurate in Ireland.

One gentleman, indeed, moved an amendment to the resolution, objecting to what he considered the quasi political character of the meeting, but it was sufficiently evident that he had mistaken the true design of the assembly, from the fact that no one seconded his amendment, and from the disavowal that his sentiments met with from those who spoke after him. Mr. Cooper rightly represented the feelings of his brethren when he said, "All shades of political opinion are represented among us, but there is nothing of politics in this."

We agree, indeed, with Mr. Fottrell, that it would have been highly injudicious to have connected the general expression of loyalty uttered by the Profession with the expression of any of the peculiar sentiments of the different political parties in Ireland; but no such intention was held, we are certain, by the gentlemen who were concerned in drawing up the address, or by those who had attended the meeting, which it must be remembered represented the whole body of Solicitors in Ireland. The address appears to us to have been most judiciously worded, and to have completely answered the purposes intended; and we congratulate the legal profession upon having set an example which we are certain other professional bodies throughout the country will be ready to follow.

THE banquet given by the Benchers of the Honourable Society of the King's Inns to the Lord Lieutenant on Thursday evening, is deserving of something more than a mere passing notice. In England, where public bodies are numerous and opulent, complimentary banquets are of every day occurrence, and have come to be regarded as part of the regular institutions of the country. Such, however, is not the case in Ireland; public bodies are few, and seldom flourishing, and not at all likely to agree upon a man, or an occasion worthy of public celebration; and consequently festive demonstrations in honour of eminent personages, are "like angels' visits, few and far between."

In this state of things, the tribute of respect which has just been paid to our Viceroy, must have been gratifying in the highest degree.

The success of the entertainment of Thursday evening, can best be estimated from the fact, that there was not a single vacant seat throughout the length and breadth of the spacious hall; and as for disappointed applicants for tickets, we are told their name was legion. The toast (the only one of the evening), "Her Majesty the Queen," was received with an amount of enthusiasm seldom, if ever before, exhibited, and which was, no doubt, intended to convey to the Marquis of Abercorn an emphatic expression of respect for him as an individual, as well as a trusty representative of Royalty, at a period the most critical in the chequered history of this country. Such assurances of confidence, emanating from a body of men, such as were there assembled—the most enlightened in the community—must have a salutary effect, more especially when it has been found necessary to suspend the Constitution throughout the land. In this, as in every other respect, the result has been highly satisfactory, and creditable to all concerned.

LAST week we called the attention of our readers to meetings held at Coleraine and Magherafelt, for the purpose of agitating for the amendment of the Civil Bill and Sheriffs' Acts. This week another meeting, for the same purpose, was held in Belfast, the chief features about all being the unanimity that prevailed amongst the lawyers that spoke on the subject, in the opinion that the law respecting the recovery of small debts does require amendment; and the fact that a number of commercial men attended, and also gave their evidence in favour of an alteration. We publish the report elsewhere. The resolutions passed are in substance much the same as those arrived at in the other meetings, and therefore it is scarcely necessary to enter again into the details of the question. Mr. Dinnen, in a very able speech, explained the objects of the meeting, and discussed at length the amendments desired.

A GENERAL MEETING of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association will be held to-day in the Solicitors' Hall, at two o'clock. We need not say that the objects of this society are worthy of all praise; we trust therefore that success will reward the laudable efforts of those who are endeavouring to collect funds whereby they may be enabled in some measure to alleviate the destitution that so often accompanies and intensifies the pangs of sorrow, which, without the addition of poverty, are already more than many can bear. Many professional brethren are yearly snatched away from amongst us by death, ere they are enabled to make any provision for those dear ones left to lament not only the loss of a husband or an affectionate parent, but to taste the bitter fruits of poverty and destitution. To guard as much as possible against the relatives of deceased professional brethren being reduced to want, the Solicitors' Benevolent Association was formed, and not only this, but every other institution of a kindred nature, should be supported with cheerful liberality. There are great numbers of the profession who cannot attend the meeting to-day, though most willing to be present, from professional engagements. There are, however, other practitioners who reside in the country, and on them we would most seriously wish to impress the necessity of endeavouring to assist in upholding the institution by subscribing liberally to its support.

SEVEN gentlemen were called to the Bar on Monday last, and the Lord Chancellor on that occasion addressing Mr. Rochford, B.A., London University, said that in consequence of his distinguished answering at the late examination he should take precedence over the other gentlemen called. In our publication of the 11th instant we gave in full the names of those gentlemen whose memorials were to be laid before the Benchers on the 18th inst., all of whom were called on Monday, the 20th inst.

CIVIL, CANON, AND COMMON LAW.

WE publish the following comparison of the effect of the civil and common law, on the same cases, from a paper on the Civil, Canon, and Common Law, which appeared in the University Magazine for this month. The paper in question is evidently written by one who is master of the subject, though from the small space at his command the heads of the subject only are glanced at, and they not exhaustively treated; it is to be regretted that the writer did not devote an entire article to each branch, Civil, Canon, and Common Law, and thus make a trilogy, each paper individually independent, but all three tending to show the unity of action of the law, and the interdependence of its branches.

By the civil law illegitimate children became legitimate if their parents happened to marry; by the common law they remained bastards and could not become heirs. This principle of the civil law was adopted by the canonists, who struggled but ineffectually to engraft it on the common law. By the civil law, however, bastards could not claim even a maintenance from father or mother; and in that it was more severe against them than the common law.

A slave who had been manumitted, and afterwards had become ungrateful to his former owner, might be reclaimed and captured, but by the common law of England a slave once made free was free for ever.

The civil law both fettered and freed the actions of woman. According to its enactments, a woman could not be a witness to a will—could not be surety for another—could not be tutela or guardian for any but her own children—could not hold any office; but, on the other hand it provided that she might buy and sell independently of any consent of her husband, so that, as a necessary consequence, neither husband nor wife was responsible for the other's debts or contracts. But the common law respected the sanctity of matrimony; and by regarding man and wife as one flesh was more in keeping with the dictates of nature, and the laws of God, and did more towards preserving the security of the social foundation.

In the civil law a marriage might be dissolved through adultery; or if either party lost liberty, which might happen through fraudulent conspiracy to be sold as a slave, for the purpose of sharing the purchase money. It was not an uncommon custom for a freeman to sell himself as a slave, share the purchase money, and claim his liberty, which was not affected by the contract; or liberty might be lost by the law of diminutio capitis. A member of a family was degraded for some crime, and as every family was supposed to consist of a certain number of heads, the degradation of a member was therefore the loss of a head—diminutio capitis. Marriage, however, by the common law, could only be dissolved in cases of adultery.

The civil law gave the father a right of property in the acquisitions of his son, and it was so in England in the time of Henry I., but it was afterwards altered.

Under the civil law, a tutor or guardian was provided for a minor's person, and a curator for his estate, and such guardianship was intrusted to the next in blood, that is, to the person who, if the orphan died, would inherit the estate. The common law fully appreciated the folly of such an arrangement and the evils to which it would give rise, and stigmatized it by a well known maxim that to hand over the minor to the tender mercies of the next heir-at-law, was, as it were, to intrust a lamb to the wolf to be devoured—" quasi agnum lupo committere ad devorandum."

In the civil law there was no notion of trial by jury, but in the common law courts that mode was adopted, taken beyond question from the Saxon customs.

In civil actions amongst the Saxons, the plaintiff procured the best evidence he could, and if satisfactory the case was decided upon it. In the event of an assertion being made unsupported by testimony on either side, the party making such assertion was put on his oath, and not only so, but had to bring forward a certain number of respectable people to swear as to his character for truthfulness. These were called compurgators. But they had also a custom of choosing twelve strangers in addition to the compurgators to try a case, and these were the same for all ranks, for a royal thane, for a landowner, for a ceorl. They were selected in addition to the twelve compurgators, with this difference, that the compurgators were for the purpose of swearing to the veracity of the person, and the twelve strangers for the purpose of a fair and impartial investigation. The law was thus worded—

"If a king's thane deny a charge, let him take twelve of his kindred and twelve strangers, and if he fail let him pay for his breach of law twelve half marcs. If a landowner deny a charge let as many of his class and as many strangers be taken as for a royal thane, and if he fail let him pay six half marcs. If a ceorl, let as many of his class, and as many strangers be taken for him as for the others, and if he fail let him pay twelve oræ for his breach of law."

BUTLER v. MILLER.

January 15, 16.—Setting aside Sale—Undervalue.

This was an appeal from a decree made by the Master of the Rolls, setting aside, with costs, a sale of certain lands made by the petitioner to the respondent, on the grounds of undervalue, and of unfair advantage having been taken of the petitioner by the respondent in the transaction. The question between the parties turned altogether upon the evidence, which was voluminous and complicated.

Sullivan, Q.C., Lawless, Q.C., and E. M. Kelly, were for the petitioner.

F. W. Walsh, Q.C., and Carton, were for the respondent.

The LORD CHANCELLOR gave judgment, upholding the view taken by the Master of the Rolls. The Lord Justice of Appeal dissented. Accordingly the decree below was affirmed, save as to the costs; and the Court being of opinion that groundless charges were made in the petition, and unnecessary matters introduced, each party was left to abide his own costs.

Re DAUNT, a Lunatic.

January 18.—Form of Commission.

Mark S. O'Shaughnessy applied to have the order in this case varied by having the commission sped in Cork instead of in Dublin, on the ground of the illness of the alleged lunatic, who could not, without risk, be removed from the former place, where he resided It was also sought to have the commission directed to both the Commissioners in Lunacy, "or either of them," so as to have it sped before one only.

The LORD CHANCELLOR at first doubted whether he could make the latter branch of the order sought, but it appeared that the ordinary form of commission was as asked for, and that in country cases it was very usual to have the inquiry held before one commissioner only. The order was therefore made.

Solicitor, R. B. Julian.

Re HARLEY, a Lunatic; Ex parte HARE.

January 18.—Lunacy—Allowance to Child of Lunatic out of Estate.

Edward Gibson, on behalf of one of the daughters of the lunatic, applied for such sum of money as the Lord Chancellor should think fit to supply the applicant's pressing necessities. Applicant was a married woman, in a very delicate state of health; her husband had been in the employment of Government, but had lost his situation without any fault of his, and all that they had to live upon was £1 a week, allowed by his parents. The yearly income of lunatic's property was about £179 a year, out of which allowances were made amounting to £125. The applicant had been allowed £36 a year until her marriage.

Shekleton, for the committee of the lunatic, stated that £10 had been offered to the applicant, and that the estate could not afford more.

The LORD CHANCELLOR made an order for payment of £10, the applicant to abide her own costs.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

KANE v. KANE.

Nov. 6, 12.—Practice—Subpœna—Contempt—Attachment.

This was an appeal from an order of Master Brooke, made on the 29th of June, 1867, whereby he ordered that, on service of the order, the respondent, Anne Kane, should attend at eleven o'clock on the 1st of November, 1867, to be examined personally in this matter; and he further ordered that in default of her so doing, an attachment should forthwith issue against her without further order. Anne Kane was administratrix with the will annexed of Thomas Kane, and the petition was filed for the administration of his personal estate, and referred to Master Brooke under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act. The accounts had been taken and vouched, and the Master had made a decretal order on the 12th of November, 1866, which was appealed from, and reversed. On the matter coming again before him, the Master, on the 12th of May, 1867, gave leave to to the petitioner to file a further charage; and directed a witness, of the name of Thomas Flynn, to be examined before him. The charge was filed and the witness examined. On the 19th of June, 1867, the Master made an order that the respondent should attend on the following Saturday (June 22nd), for cross-examination. This order was made in the presence of counsel and solicitor for the respondent. A copy of it, or of the notes of the order was served on the respondent with a subpœna, at foot of which, according to the usual practice in the office, the name and registered residence of the solicitor issuing it was written. The respondent did not attend on the 22nd of June; a medical certificate excusing her non-attendance was produced, and the order appealed from was made on the 29th of June, on notice by the petitioner.

It was contended, on behalf of the respondent, that the Master had not jurisdiction, at that stage of the suit, to order a party who had not filed a discharge, to be examined; that the subpœna did not comply with the 30th General Order of 1843, which requires the names or firm, and registered place of business of the solicitor to be endorsed on the subpœna; and that the order was irregular in ordering an attachment to issue against a party who had not been, or adjudged to have been, guilty of any contempt.

The MASTER of the ROLLS refused the motion with costs.

Counsel for the respondents, Sherlock, Q.C., and E. M. Kelly; solicitor, Gunning.

Counsel for the petitioner, Exham, Q.C., and James Murphy, Q.C.; solicitor, R. Mecredy.

Falkiner, Q.C., and M'Kenna, in support of the plea. There is no difference between the present plea and the one suggested, that the defendant "did not contract and agree as alleged;" the evidence admissible under either is the same.

The COURT held, that as this plea was a departure from the ordinary form, and the word "promised" might raise some question at the trial as to whether under it any defence would not be open that would have been open under the general issue. The defence should be amended.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE MILLER.

In re PATRICK HICKIE, an Insolvent.

January, 1868.—Barrister giving receipt for fees without receiving them, and afterwards suing for them; obtaining a decree, and then opposing the Attorney's discharge as an insolvent; suing on bill in name of party having no interest in the suit—Attorney making affidavit that the debt is due to such party.

The insolvent, who was an attorney, was opposed by two creditors: Mr. O'Moore, Barrister-at-law, at whose suit Hickie was arrested under a civil bill decree; and Mr. Talty, of the firm of Talty, Murphy, and Company, who cashed a bill for him for £16.

Mr. O'Moore's complaint was that having been counsel for Hickie in a certain cause, he gave Hickie a receipt for the fees, which Hickie subsequently received, but omitted to pay.

Levy appeared for Hickie.

Judge MILLER said he regretted that any member of of the bar should come forward and declare that he signed a receipt for fees which were not in fact paid to him, and thus allow the taxing officer to be deceived. He thought it was highly improper, and if Mr. O'Moore made the statement on oath, he, Judge Miller, would have the evidence taken down and handed to the Benchers for their consideration.

Mr. O'Moore said it was well known that many highly respectable members of the Bar, men who are now judges, did so where there was a fund in court, out of which the attorney should be paid his costs, upon the honourable understanding that when he received the money he would pay the fees; if it were otherwise every attorney in the profession should be possessed of an amount of capital, which, he was sorry to say, many of them could not command. If there was no money in court it would be an improper thing to do, but in the present case the money was in court.

Judge MILLER said he never knew of such a practice to exist, and most certainly if the opposition were gone into, he would have the evidence reported, and laid before the Benchers.

Mr. O'Moore said, after the opinion his Lordship had given, he would not persevere in the opposition.

Dodd stated that Mr. Talty, his client, gave Hickie cash for a bill for £16 7s. Hickie afterwards sued the acceptor for the amount of the bill, in the name of a Mr. Barber, who was no party to it at all, and having recovered the amount, kept the money. In meeting the judgment it was necessary to make an affidavit that the debt was due to Mr. Barber, the plaintiff in the suit; and Hickie actually made the affidavit to enable him to get the money from the defendant. When Talty found how he had been defrauded he sued Hickie on the original bill, which never left his possession, Hickie having merely got a copy of it.

Mr. Talty was examined and sustained the case made by his solicitor. Upon cross-examination he admitted that he knew Hickie was suing in the name of Barber; that he declined to sue in his own name, and that he gave Hickie a sum of £1 6s. to purchase stamps, and mark the judgment. Hickie paid him a debt from which he was discharged under a former insolvent.

Judge MILLER said, as regarded the insolvent, he thought the case a very bad one. Mr. Barber had nothing whatever to do with the bill. Talty refused to make an affidavit that the debt was due to Barber, and then the insolvent made the affidavit himself, recovered the amount of the judgment, and kept it himself. Judge MILLER'S present impression was that he would forward the affidavit made by Hickie to the Attorney-General.

Hickie said he did not think he was doing anything wrong; he looked upon Barber as the trustee of Talty, and it was in that light he made the affidavit; but whether right or wrong, Talty knew everything that was doing as well as himself.

His LORDSHIP adjourned the case.

The Secretary, Mr. John H. Goddard, having read the notice convening the meeting,

Digitized by Google

The Chairman said :—Gentlemen,—You have heard the notice read on which this very large meeting has been called. It is, therefore, unnecessary for me to enter into details of the object of our assembling here to-day, except to say that the meeting has been formed for the purpose of expressing our detestation of the Fenian conspiracy, which has done, and is at present doing so much mischief and injury to the country, retarding its progress, deteriorating its prosperity, and doing a great deal of harm in every possible way. (Hear, hear.) That is the object of our meeting, and to adopt an address to her Majesty expressive of our condemnation of that dangerous and wicked conspiracy. A form of address has been prepared which the Secretary will read for you, and it will then be proposed for your approval.

Mr. Arthur Barlow moved the first resolution :—

"That an address be adopted expressive of our abhorrence and detestation of Fenianism, and our determination to support in every legitimate way in our power the efforts of her Majesty and her Government to suppress and exterminate this wicked and foolish conspiracy."

He said they all knew what Fenianism meant, and the misery it had brought on the country. He need say no more upon that subject, but simply move the resolution.

Mr. William Roche.—I feel great pleasure in seconding the resolution proposed by my friend, Mr. Barlow, because I feel that the importation of Fenianism into this country has had the effect of paralysing its trade, and has injuriously affected its prosperity to a degree incalculable. It has been the cause of mischief and evil to a vast extent, and has inflicted much misery and injury upon the families of the deluded men who have listened to the advice of those who would lead them into the net—those adventurers who have neither character nor property to lose. (Hear, hear.) And I am persuaded that all here present will gladly aid the authorities by every constitutional means in suppressing this wicked conspiracy and averting the misery it must, if not put down, bring upon the country and the rest of the unfortunate dupes who take part in it (hear, hear); and that we will, with one accord, call upon the authorities to suppress, as I have already said, by every constitutional means, this wicked, foolish, and dangerous organization. (Hear.)

Mr. George D. Fottrell said :—Mr. Chairman,—I beg leave to move an amendment to this resolution. I believe this meeting is altogether unnecessary, and the purpose for which it is assembled entirely foreign to the objects of our society. I conceive we are a non-political body, while we yield to none in loyalty, and, I suppose, our loyalty is unsuspected. I confess I do not like this quasi political movement. Of course, I will be bound by the opinion of the meeting, but my feeling is very strong against this protestation of our fealty to the Crown, when it is unquestioned and unimpeached. I would, therefore, move this amendment—

"That the attorneys and solicitors of Ireland, although yielding to none in loyalty to her Majesty, and in abhorrence of any attempt to injure her Crown or dignity, conceive it uncalled for to travel out of their ordinary functions in adopting the course suggested by the notice of the 15th January, signed by the Secretary of the Incorporated Society."

There was no seconder, consequently the amendment fell to the ground.

The original resolution was then put, and carried.

The Secretary then read the following address :—

"To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

"The dutiful and loyal address of the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland.

"MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN,—

"We, the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland, humbly approach your Majesty, to tender to your Majesty the warmest expression of our loyalty and attachment to your Majesty's Throne and person.

"In the exercise and performance of our professional duties and avocations, we have had every opportunity of observing the moral and material condition of our country, and for some years past we had the satisfaction of knowing that, as compared with former years, there was an almost entire absence of agrarian and other kindred crimes, which had injuriously affected a growing prosperity, the natural result of industry and peace.

"We deeply regret to say that the growth of this prosperity has been of late years interrupted by the existence of an organized conspiracy called Fenianism.

"We are, however, happy to be able to state that this wild and insane conspiracy is not universal in this country; that there are many districts in which we believe it does not exist, and that it has had no support or sympathy from the educated, the respectable, or the industrious of our fellow-countrymen. At the same time we believe there is no part of the country that is not, at least indirectly, suffering from its blighting influence.

"We therefore humbly beg to convey to your Majesty the expression of our entire and earnest condemnation of the Fenian conspiracy, and to assure your Majesty of our determination to support your Majesty's Government by every means in our power, in all such constitutional measures as may be deemed most expedient for utterly exterminating this senseless, cruel, and baneful conspiracy.

"We humbly but fervently pray that your Majesty may enjoy a long and prosperous reign, and have the happiness of seeing all your Majesty's subjects in this country loyal, peaceable, and prosperous."

Mr. Reeves—Mr. Chairman, the second resolution has been intrusted to me to move. It is as follows :—

"That the address just read be adopted and signed by the chairman on behalf of the meeting."

I cannot add anything to what Mr. Roche has said on the subject of this treasonable movement. In England numerous towns and corporations have drawn up and forwarded addresses of this nature to her Majesty. I believe we are the first in Ireland, and it is a matter of satisfaction to think that we are the first. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. William J. Cooper.—Mr. Reeves has moved that the address now read be approved of, adopted, and signed by the Chairman on behalf of the meeting. I stand up to second that. It is unnecessary, I am sure, to say anything upon the subject, for this is one of the largest meetings of the profession I have ever seen in this hall, and there is but one voice raised in opposition to the course that has this day been taken. I believe all the gentlemen here are unanimous on the subject, save one. You heard the address read. It was very carefully prepared by those whom the Incorporated Law Society elected to represent them. I cannot for a moment admit that there is anything political in it whatsoever. I cannot stand by and hear it stated that the course we are adopting is a political one. The Fenian conspiracy is a conspiracy against the settlement of property in this country, in the protection of which we are all engaged. (Hear, hear.) It is the principal part of our business to look after the property of clients; and to maintain and uphold, as far as lies in us, the Constitution under which that property is enjoyed, ought not to be considered for a moment as a question of politics. We admit our principles are various: you may be of one opinion and I may be of another. All shades of political opinion are represented amongst us, but there is nothing of politics in this. The conspiracy we are met to express our abhorrence of is an organization against the established settlement of property in this country, aiming at and looking to confiscation and the destruction of life and property. I simply came here to express my detestation of it, and our unanimous resolve to support her Majesty and the Government of the country in dealing with it—exterminating it is, I believe, the best word to use—and employing such measures as they may think advisable to promote the prosperity of the country (hear, hear), and remedying the evil results already brought about by this Fenian conspiracy, which has frightened capital away out of the country, and is making absentees, so that it is impossible Ireland can be prosperous. A great deal has been done in my lifetime to remove disabilities that heretofore existed, and to put everybody on the same footing. I hope we shall continue in the state of progress, to which end it is necessary to put down Fenianism. I have, therefore, great pleasure in seconding the resolution. (Hear, hear.)

The resolution was then put, and carried unanimously.

Mr. Macrory moved Mr. Barlow to the second chair, and moved that the marked thanks of the meeting be given to Sir Richard Orpen for his conduct in the chair. Everyone would rejoice at the well deserved honour recently conferred upon him.

Mr. A. Ellis seconded the motion, and congratulated the meeting on the unanimity which had marked their proceedings.

The motion having been carried unanimously,

Sir Richard Orpen thanked the meeting, and expressed his readiness to do at all times whatever might be deemed useful to the profession.

The proceedings then terminated.

(Applause.) I ask you to drink it with all the honours.

The toast was received in the most enthusiastic manner, and for several minutes the cheers rang through the hall.

Shortly after nine o'clock his Excellency withdrew.

The arrangements for the dinner were carried out in a style never before equalled in the Bencher's Hall, and its success was due in a great measure to Messrs. De Moleyns, Q.C., and Shaw, Q.C., who took charge of the proceedings, and were assisted by Mr. D. O'Hanlon.

IRISH BANKRUPTCY LAW REFROM.

The President of the Belfast Chamber of Commerce, Sir Edward Coey, D.L., has received the following important letters on the subject of a Bill to amend the Irish Bankrupt Laws, which he has requested us to publish:—

"BELFAST, 22*d Jan.*, 1868.

"My dear Sir Edward,—I had a very satisfactory conference with the Attorney-General last week, on the subject of the memorial from the Chamber of Commerce in reference to an amendment of the Bankrupt Laws for Ireland. He has since written to me on the subject. I enclose you his letter, which I think promises as much as we could expect.—Yours, faithfully,

"CHARLES LANYON."

"CHIEF SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
"DUBLIN CASTLE, 18*th Jan.*, 1868.

"Dear Sir Charles,—I have read the memorial of the Belfast Chamber of Commerce which you handed me yesterday. I concur in the opinion that the law of Bankruptcy in Ireland requires amendment, and that it is desirable to assimilate the law upon the subject in England and Ireland. Until the English Bill shall have made some progress, it would not be useful to commence any Irish legislatation, but I propose, in case the English Bill shall have made fair progress at Easter, to place the Bill in the hands of our Irish draftsman to prepare a similar Bill for Ireland, mutatis mutandis.—Faithfully yours,

"ROBERT R. WARREN."

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL BILL AND SHERIFFS' ACTS.

PUBLIC MEETING IN THE TOWN HALL, BELFAST.

On Thursday, in pursuance of a requisition addressed to the Mayor by a large number of the inhabitants, a meeting was held in the Town Hall for the purpose of considering the present Civil Bill and Sheriffs' Acts, with a view to their amendment. The attendance was large. The Mayor, (Samuel M'Causland, Esq.) presided. There were also present:— Samuel Gelston, J.P.; J. M. Higginson, J.P.; John Dinnen, Peter Keegan, J.P.; Alderman R. Lindsay, J.P.; J. B. Kennedy, Alderman William Bell, Lucas Waring, James Boyle, D. O'Rorke Dickie, James M'Lean, jun., William M'Combe, James Harper, Peter Macaulay, J. K. M'Causland, Thomas Corbett, James Robie, Joseph G. Bigger, John Dysart, William Woods, William Dobbin, John Gass, Thomas Shaw, and William Ireland.

Mr. John Dinnen said—In the absence of Mr. O'Rorke, who was in Dublin, and the other senior members practising at Quarter Sessions, he had been unexpectedly called upon to open the proceedings, which he would do by reading the first resolution, as follows:—

"That we consider the laws for the recovery of smail debts in Ireland are defective and unsatisfactory, and requires immediate remedy and amendment."

This resolution was so explicit in its terms that they could not fail to understand it, and therefore little argument would be required from him to explain its meaning. He would point out a few of the alterations suggested, and which, he thought, it would be desirable for the commercial community to have carried out. He might mention that the Incorporated Law Society had taken the matter up, and came to certain resolutions recommending changes in the law; and so far as he was concerned he heartily adopted the course they had pursued. He might also mention that the Attorney-General was anxious for an amendment of the law, but before making any change he wished to ascertain public opinion on the subject, and if public opinion should be in favour of an amendment of the law he would at once bring in a public measure in order to have a remedy applied. He would first refer to the jurisdiction of the county courts. Parties had the privilege of proceeding to the amount of £10, but they were limited to certain causes of action. It had been considered judicious by gentlemen who had given this matter a great deal of attention that other actions should be embraced in the jurisdiction, so that parties should not be put to the heavy expense of having small matters investigated in the superior courts. It was proposed that partnership accounts should be investigated to a certain amount in the county courts, that the chairman should have jurisdiction up to £50 instead of only to £40 in ordinary debt cases as at present, and also to actions for slander, libel, and breach of promise of marriage, should be put within the jurisdiction of the chairman, where the damages sought did not exceed £40. He was of opinion with many of his brethren, that a creditor should be held entitled to reserve interest on his money for the period intervening between granting of the decree and its execution—hence it was proposed that five per cent. should be charged till the amount was paid. Under the present law the sheriff had two months to make a return to a decree put into his hands, but there was no penalty for not making the return. The return may be made or some evasive reply given, the creditor being unable to find out what in reality had been done with the decree. Mr. Dinnen concluded by urging the importance of the amendments suggested.

Mr. James Harper seconded this motion, which was adopted.

Alderman Robert Lindsay, J.P., proposed the next resolution, as follows:—Resolved—"That the Act 27th and 28th Victoria, chapter 99, commonly called the 'Sheriffs' Act,' instead of facilitating, had rendered the recovery of small debts in Ireland still more difficult, and ought to be amended, by enabling the plaintiff, at his discretion, to nominate and appoint his own bailiffs for the execution of decrees, at his own peril, such bailiffs to be authorized and empowered by the chairman or sheriff of the county, as the legislature may decide."

Mr. Gelston, J.P., seconded the resolution.

Mr. J. K. M'Causland said before they took action in this matter they should see whether it was the law or only the administration of it that was wrong. He believed there were other reasons for the non-execution of decrees than those referred to by previous speakers. Their real reason, he believed, was that they were put into the hands of a careless and drunken class of men who were quite careless whether they got the money or not. The remuneration paid to bailiffs was 2s. 6d. per day for the time they are employed, and he did not think they could get a proper class of men to do the work for that fee. He had prepared a resolution on the subject which he would read to them, but he would not press it as an amendment. The resolution was as follows:—"That in order to facilitate the recovery of small debts in Ireland by the prompt execution of civil bill decrees, it is advisable to amend the Act 27th and 28th Victoria, chapter 99, by enacting that the sub-sheriff shall be placed on a permanent staff of the county in the same manner as the clerks of the crown, peace, &c., and that the sub-sheriff be enabled to pay to the bailiffs an annual salary in addition to certain legal fees, and that the said bailiffs be required to give security for the due fulfilment of their duties."

The Mayor then put the original motion to the meeting, and it was carried unanimously.

Alderman Bell moved—"That the power of a judge to issue a fiat against an absconding debtor, on proper affidavit and writ issued, should be extended to a magistrate, acting upon a like affidavit, when the debt is over the sum of £10, and attachment against the goods when under that sum."

Mr. James Robie, Inspector of Stubb's mercantile offices for Ireland and Scotland, seconded the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. Wm. Dobbin moved and Mr. Bigger seconded the motion—"That the jurisdiction of the chairman of the quarter sessions ought to be extended to £50 in all actions for debt; and that decrees should bear interest of five per cent. from the date of issue till the time of payment; and that everything seizable under a writ of execution ought to be seizable under a civil bill decree; and that in all undefended cases at quarter sessions, decrees may be granted by filing with the clerk of the peace, or registrar, an affidavit of the debt made before a magistrate, commissioner of affidavits, or the clerk of the peace."

On the motion of Mr. John Dysart, seconded by Mr. Wm. M'Neill, it was resolved—"That the chairman of quarter sessions be requested by a deputation, comprising the professional gentlemen practising at the court, Mr. Peter Keegan, and Alderman Lindsay, to fix cases for a certain day, to prevent individual inconvenience; and further, that his worship be requested to direct the issue of the decrees at the termination of the sessions."

On the motion of Mr. Higginson, J.P., seconded by Mr. Harper, solicitor, it was agreed—"That a petition be forwarded to the Lord Lieutenant, praying his Excellency to cause the law officers of the crown to introduce a bill into Parliament for the remedy and amendment of the existing defects in the civil bill acts, and embodying the foregoing resolutions."

Mr. Harper supported the motion in a speech containing many instances of the necessity of the reform proposed.

The resolution was passed unanimously.

On the motion of Mr. T. H. Brown, seconded by Mr. J. B. Kennedy, the Mayor left the chair, and Mr. Higginson was called thereto.

A cordial vote of thanks was then passed to the Mayor, on the motion of Mr. Brown, seconded by Mr. Samuel Andrews.

This closed the proceedings.

NATURALIZATION.

At the weekly meeting of the Jurisprudence Department of the Society for the Promotion of Social Science, a paper was read by Mr. John Westlake, "On Naturalization and Expatriation, or a Change of Nationality." After a discussion, in which Mr. Moseley, Mr. V. Harcourt, and Mr. C. Anstey joined,

The Chairman, the Right Hon. Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, D.C.L., Dean of Arches, &c., said:—A subject so impoctant must sooner or later be pressed upon the attention of our Government and the Government of the United States, and probably must be pressed upon the attention of every civilized Government. If I entered the room with a strong conviction of the necessity for some definite change, and of the difficulty of effecting it, both these convictions are strengthened. The matter requires most ample discussion, and is to be viewed from many different positions, I entirely agree that the true international law is that when a foreigner enters the dominions of another State he is in all respects to be amenable to the laws of that State. But the real difficulty is to say when one of our subjects definitely leaves us, for no one can say that a person travelling abroad for his pleasure has definitely left the country. Such a person ought to travel with the protection of his own country, but that does not extend, of course, to his violation of the municipal law of the foreign country at all. But he should not be placed in a worse position than the citizen of the foreign country guilty of a similar offence; he should have fair play. I should be sorry to countenance the idea that when a citizen left England he ceased to have any care over him, or that he ceased to have any claim upon the State. I think that the domicile itself would not be a discreet or sufficient test of the expatriation of a person, for many circumstances may occur to protract it, constraining him to remain abroad. Though the domicile might be an element, it could not be the only criterion of expatriation. (Hear, hear.) The rule of law to be introduced must be one on which the two States—the one he left and the one to which he has gone—must agree. Very early during the civil war in America was forced upon our attention the absolute necessity of coming to some definite resolution that should be adhered to as to the circumstances in which the British Government should extend protection to British subjects in America, or refuse it; and we were all agreed that it could not be demanded as a matter of right by a subject of Great Britain, who had by his own acts incorporated himself in America by domicile, by the purchase of land, or by the establishment of a manufactory; or had exercised the privilege of voting, or taken the steps necessary to make himself a citizen of the United States. We thought we had a right to say that he had made his option, and never would have called upon us for assistance if circumstances did not make it convenient for him to do so, meaning all the time to remain in America when the war was over, and only desiring to evade the duties of a citizen of the country to which he belonged. The American Government seemed to acquiesce in that opinion, and declared that every British subject who had entered the American States, but had not formally become a citizen, should have the option to remain or not remain in the country. With regard to the competence of a country to punish for a crime committed against it in another country, I am inclined to agree with Mr. Harcourt. It is a monstrous thing that any technical rule of venue should prevent justice being done and criminals being properly tried for an offence, committed in this country perhaps, but the execution of which was concocted in another; but I am not prepared to say if the criminal, being a foreigner, was accused of a crime against a third State, that this country ought to administer criminal justice in regard to him. That, I think, would be stretching the doctrine much further than would be desired. Another absurdity is, that if a civil injury be done abroad to an English subject by a foreigner he may recover damages here for an act done, for instance, in Naples, because the action is civil and not criminal. I don't see why any crime committed against an English subject abroad should not be tried in this country, if the criminal be in this country. Where a conspiracy is formed abroad against this country, the conspirator, if a British subject, ought to be tried here; and if he be a foreigner, I don't see why he should find refuge in the State he tried to injure. It would be stretching the law of hospitality very far to say that he should not be punished in this country.

The discussion was then adjourned to Monday, the 27th inst.

LOCAL CIVIL COURTS.—A Parliamentary return gives an account of 30 English local courts of civil jurisdiction, and shows that their salaries and expenses amounted to £13,508 in the financial year 1865-6. The expenditure of the Sheriffs' Court of the City of London is returned as £5,040, wholly paid out of fees of court; the judge's salary £900, and the registrar's £500. The Lord Mayor's Court (of London) was maintained at a cost of £3,165, without including any part of the salaries of the Recorder and Common Serjeant, who sit as judges. The fees of this court are paid to the Corporation, and the Corporation provides the funds for the expenditure. It is stated that if a deputy other than the Common Serjeant sits for the Recorder such deputy judge in every case of assessment of compensation for property taken by railway companies, &c., takes from the railway company a fee of 20 guineas; these fees amounted to £147 in the year 1865-6. In the Liverpool Court of Passage also the court fees are paid to the borough fund, and the expense of maintaining the court is paid out of that fund; the expenses amounted to £1,200 in the year, including the assessor's salary of £500. The expenses of the Manchester Court of Record for the trial of civil actions was £1,706 in the year, which was paid out of fees; the salary of the recorder and judge is £300. The fees received at the Salford (hundred) Court of Record in the year amounted to £1,130; the expenses, £476, were first paid, and the balance of £654 was divided into three parts—one for the steward of the hundred, one for the judge, and one for the registrar and deputy steward. Among the minor courts are the Provost Court of Exeter, the "Peculiar Court of the Honour of Knaresborough," the Chancellor's Court Oxford, the Southwark Court of Record, the Ramsey Court of Pleas, created by grant of Henry VIII., and various manor courts.

THE JAMAICA COURTS-MARTIAL.—Mr. J. S. Williams, barrister-at-law and Judge-Advocate, who generously volunteered, without expectation of remuneration (as those accused were not in circumstances to meet the heavy outlay) to defend the officers of the army against whom serious charges were preferred for acts alleged to have been done by them during the rebellion of October, 1865, has had his efficient services recognized by the War-office. A present of 700 guineas has been made him. We may remark that we believe it is the practice of the War-office to pay the legal bill when officers charged with serious crimes before a court-martial are acquitted. In this instance Mr. Williams generously refused to make out a bill, and it being left to the War-office what, if anything, should be awarded, the above amount was sent him. The following correspondence on the subject has passed between his Excellency the Major-General commanding and the Judge-Advocate:—"Head-quarters, Jamaica, Nov. 27, 1867.—My dear sir, —I feel more than ordinary pleasure in transmitting for your information copy of a letter from the Secretary of State for War, and at the same time take leave to express the sincere sentiments of my esteem for the personal services so generously and ably afforded by you as counsel in the trials by court-martial of the officers in question.—Believe me to remain, my dear sir, yours very faithfully, L. SMYTH O'CONNER, Major-General Commanding the Forces. Joseph Stone Williams, Esq., Advocate-General."—"War-office, 29th October, 1867. Sir,—With reference to your letters of the 4th July and and 16th August last, I am directed by the Secretary of State for War to acquaint you that he has approved of the sum of 700 guineas (case of Ensign Cullen, £315; case of Staff Assistant-Surgeon Morris, £420), being allowed to Mr. Advocate-General Williams, for acting as counsel in the trials by court-martial of Ensign Cullen, 1st West India Regiment, and Staff Assistant-Surgeon Morris, and that the same may be paid by the military accountant at the station under your command, and charged in his accounts. I have, &c., (signed) Edward Lugard. The General Officer, Commanding the Troops, Jamaica. True copy. T. E. O'CONNOR, A.M.S."

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

From The Law Times.

REFERENCE—MASTER'S TAXATION.—An action consisting of several cross claims was referred to an arbitrator, who awarded some of the matters in dispute in favour of the plaintiff, but adjudged him on the whole to pay £40 to the defendant. As by the submission the costs of the cause and the reference were to abide the event, the master on taxation decided that the costs of the reference as well as of the cause must be paid by plaintiff. But on application to the court he was ordered to review his taxation, there being no such event of the reference in favour of the plaintiff as to exempt him from payment of the defendant's share of the reference: (Dunhill v. Moore, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 148. C. P.)

LEGACIES—INTEREST.—On the marriage of Mrs. L. with her third husband a settlement was executed whereby her property comprised in the first schedule was made subject to certain trusts, and that comprised in the second schedule was settled, as to two-thirds, subject to her appointment by deed or will. This latter property had come to her through her first husband, who had derived it from his father, whose estate was the subject of litigation from 1833 to 1863, when the rights of the parties were finally determined. Mrs. L. died in 1844, and by her will in execution of the power under her settlement, appointed the property in the second schedule to L., her husband, upon trust that "so soon as proceedings in law and equity should be terminated and the same should come into possession, he should pay, assign, transfer, and set over certain sums of stock according to four appointments by deed which she had previously executed: (2) to pay to each of her brothers and sisters the sum of £2,000:" Held, that the direction was not the general one to pay a legacy, but was a direction by way of trust to distribute a trust-fund upon a particular event occurring, which event did not take place until the final decision in 1863; and consequently that interest upon the legacies did not become payable until that date: (Lord v. Lord, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 105. L. J. J.)

NUISANCE.—Where a well is supplied with water by percolation, though the owner has no property in the water until it is collected in his well, the occupier of an adjoining property will be restrained from so using a cesspool therein as to pollute the water coming through his property and supplying the well: (Womersley v. Church, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 190. M. R.)

POWER OF APPOINTMENT.—The testator left property upon trust for such person as A. after twenty-five, and not before, should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such appointment, in trust for her children. A. married when twenty-three, and by her marriage-settlement covenanted that, in the event of attaining twenty-five she would exercise the power by appointing to the trusts of the settlement. A. died after attaining twenty-five, but without having executed any appointment: Held, that the covenant in the settlement operated as a valid execution of the power: (Johnson v. Touchet, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 191. V. C. S.)

NUISANCE—BRICK-BURNING.—A nuisance against which this court will grant an injunction must be a material injury to property, or to the comfort of the existence of those who dwell in the neighbourhood. The defendant having taken lands adjoining the residence, lake, and grounds of the plaintiff, made preparations for burning bricks upon them. He commenced burning one clamp at a distance of 1,447 feet from the plaintiff's house, and 422 feet from the lake, upon the margin of which lake was a cottage occupied by a person in the plaintiff's employment. The plaintiff obtained an ex parte injunction, upon which the fire was at once extinguished, and nothing further was ever done, though it was admittedly the defendant's intention to burn bricks. Held (reversing the decision of Stuart, V.C.), that the actual facts did not amount to a nuisance; and that as to future injury there was not sufficient, having regard to the proximity of the clamp, nor to the estimated degree of damage, nor upon the circumstances generally, to warrant this injunction of the court. There is nothing to compel the court to take judicial notice that a brick-clamp at a distance of 140 yards from another person's property is a nuisance, and each case must depend upon its own circumstances. Observations generally upon prospective injunctions. Semble, that in such cases the recovery of a verdict at law does not necessarily entitle the plaintiff to an injunction; but the fact that there is legally and technically a nuisance must be considered, together with the amount of damage, and the duration of the nuisance complained of: (Luscombe v. Steer, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 229. Rolt, L.J.)

NOTICE TO QUIT—MORTGAGE.—A notice to quit was signed by mortgagee after mortgage of the reversion. A clause in the mortgage deed provided that, if the interest was duly paid by the mortgagor, the principal was not to be called in until a period after the date of the notice. The notice given by the mortgagees was held to be sufficient: (Burton v. Dickenson, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 264. Blackburn, J.)

WHAT IS A MINE?—WILL.—B. bequeathed to his wife all "shares in mines" of which he should die possessed. At the date of both will and death he had shares in a slate company, but none in mines. The slate mine was by the company worked at first in open shafts, but for some years by underground mining. Slate works are rated to the poor-rates, but mines are not. These slate works were held to come under the definition of a mine, and the shares to pass by the will: (Duchess Dowager of Cleveland v. Meyrick, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 238. V. C. M.)

PRACTICE.—The liquidators under a voluntary winding-up sued B. at law, but failed, and B. having obtained an order for costs proceeded to levy them. The liquidators obtained an injunction ex parte to restrain the levy, on the ground that under sect. 163 costs cannot be recovered against them. But the Court held that this section was modified by sect. 87, which empowers the Court to prescribe terms in which proceedings shall be taken, and that this being in fact an action by the creditors the defendant was entitled to recover his costs: (Re Lerick 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 237. V. C. S.)

LIBEL—PAYMENT INTO COURT—DAMAGES.—To an action for libel in a newspaper, the defendant pleaded under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 96, s. 2, that the publication of the libel was without actual malice and without gross negligence, the insertion of a full apology and payment into court of £5 as amends. The judge at the trial directed the jury if they did not think the plea proved, to assess the damages irrespectively of the amount paid into court. They found for the plaintiff, with 20s. damages; and the direction to the jury was held to be right: (Jones v. Mackie, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 151. Ex.)

ALIMONY PENDENTE LITE.—On a petition by the wife for judicial separation, the court refused to allot alimony pendente lite, she being at the time in service, and having, in addition to her board, £14 a year wages: (George v. George, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 152. Div. & Mat.)

French Newspapers and the "Corps Legislatif."—Not fewer than nineteen advocates of the Paris Bar, and among them M. Berryer, M. Jules Favre, M. Tenard, and others of the foremost rank, have signed a consultation on the subject of the prosecutions instituted against the majority of the Paris newspapers, for having in their comments on the discussions of the Corps Legislatif transgressed the decree which forbids any other account of the proceedings in the Legislature than that furnished officially to the journals. The conclusion of the lawyers is that the decree in question can only be considered violated when "a writer has placed himself in textual contradiction to the official report;" that newspapers which reproduce the official report ought to be completely free as to the manner in which they comment on or relate what has taken place in the Corps Legislatif; that, nevertheless, the right of discussing a debate is not legally subjected to the publication of the official report of it; and that a newspaper article cannot be considered as having the character of a report unless it takes a form which assimilates it more or less to the minute of the sitting. If these conditions be not admitted, the advocates add, the right of discussion cannot be said to exist; all reflections, even the most legitimate, on contemporary events, will be proscribed; the country will be obliged to assist, mute and impassable, at the most exciting debates, and at the discussion of its dearest interests; and the influence of the nation on the Chamber, and of the Chamber on the nation, will be subjected to the arbitrary power of the Government, which can make noise or silence as it pleases. And all this, they declare, will be contrary to the dignity of the national representatives and to the fundamental principles of public law.—Paris Correspondent of the Globe.

A Policeman Fined for Voting at a Municipal Election.—At Derby, on Monday, Mr. Thomas Adair, a defeated candidate at the last Becket Ward municipal election at Derby, brought an action against Wm. Hill, one of the inspectors of the Derby borough police, for having voted. The judge ordered the defendant to pay a fine of £10, but without costs. Eleven other policemen voted at the same time and place, but it was understood they would not be proceeded against, plaintiff only wishing to show that the police have no right to vote.

The Cork Police.—The Northern Whig has been informed that the police system of the city of Cork is about to be reconstructed on the model of the present Belfast police force.

Liability of Presidents of Military Messes.—A case has been decided lately at Dundalk in which the law relating to the liability of military messes was distinctly declared. A bread contractor brought an action against the mess of the 10th Hussars for bread supplied to the messman for use of the mess. The magistrate read the 41st of the Queen's Regulations, which enacted that the mess were not liable for debts contracted by their servants; but the regulation also declares it to be the duty of the president of the mess to inform the tradesmen of the state of the law.

Lord Brougham.—Deplorable accounts have been received at Paris from Cannes respecting Lord Brougham. He is represented to have lost the power of speech; he can only feebly articulate, and he has been deprived of the use of his limbs. At the same time, his fine robust intellect survives his physical ruin, save at rare intervals, when it is manifest that his mind is wandering. The noble and learned lord was born on the 19th of September, 1778, just two years after the Declaration of American Independence.

Irishmen in England.—The Wellington of the police, before whom the English Inspector Whittle shakes in his shoes, is an Irishman; the active head of the Admiralty and the Secretary of War the same; three judges of the superior courts of law are Irishmen; more than half the leading barristers are Irishmen; the eminent lawyer presiding at the Court of Appeal in Chancery is an Irishman; four, at least, of our best living generals are Irishmen; and the leading lawyer in the House of Lords is of the same country.

And whereas it is expedient to remove the said Disability, and to open the said Professorships to all duly qualified Persons, and otherwise to amend the said Act:

Removal of Disabilities in respect of certain Professorships in Dublin University.

1. That from and after the passing of this Act the said Professorships of Anatomy and Chirurgery, Chemistry and Botany, in the University of Dublin, shall be open to persons of all Nations, and that Candidates for the said Professorships or for the Professorships on the Foundation of Sir Patrick Dun shall not be subject to any Disability on account of Religion, or Want of a Medical Degree from any University.

Delivery of Clinical Lectures.

3. From and after the passing of this Act the said University Professors of Chemistry and of Botany shall cease to deliver the Clinical Lectures required by the said Act of the Fortieth Year of King George the Third, and instead thereof such Lectures shall be delivered by the Professor of Surgery in Trinity College, and the University Anatomist; and the Professor of Surgery and University Anatomist shall be respectively entitled to the Fees payable heretofore to the said University Professors of Chemistry and Botany: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall affect the Rights of the present University Professor of Chemistry in the event of his electing to deliver such Lectures during his Tenure of such professorship.

Power to appoint a Clinical Lecturer.

4. In case any of the King's Professors, or University Anatomist, shall neglect to attend the said Hospital, or deliver Clinical Lectures, as required by the said Act, it shall be lawful for the President and Fellows of the King and Queen's College of Physicians, in the case of the King's Professors, and for the Provost (or in his Absence the Vice Provost) and Senior Fellows of Trinity College, Dublin, in the Case of the University Professors and University Anatomist, to dispense with his delivering such Lectures; and in such Case it shall be lawful for the said President and Fellows of the said King and Queen's College of Physicians, and for the Provost (or in his Absence the Vice Provost) and Senior Fellows of Trinity College, Dublin, respectively, to appoint a Physician or Surgeon to attend the said Hospital and deliver the Clinical Lectures in the Place of such Professor so neglecting to lecture; and the Physician or Surgeon so appointed shall be entitled to receive and be paid the Fees to which the Professor so neglecting to attend the said Hospital and deliver such Lectures would have been entitled.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the Duties and Drawbacks on Sugar. [5th April 1867.]

CAP. XI.

An Act to facilitate the Recovery of Arrears of Alimony in certain Cases under Decrees and Orders of the Provincial and Diocesan Courts in Ireland. [12th April 1867.]

WHEREAS Difficulties have been found to exist in enforcing Decrees and Orders for Payment of Alimony in Causes pending in the Provincial and Diocesan Courts in Ireland, acting under the Provisions of the Ecclesiastical Courts and Registries Act, Ireland, 1864, in Cases where the Respondent or other the Person or Persons liable to pay the same cannot be served personally with such Decrees or Orders, or when a personal Demand of such Arrears cannot be made upon such Person or Persons, and it is expedient to make Provision to enable such Courts to enforce said Decrees and Orders without such Personal Service or Demand in manner herein-after appearing:

Be it enacted: . . .

Where personal Service of Decree is unavailing, the Court may make an Order for substituted Service.

1. In every Case in which, either before or after the passing of this Act, any Decree or Order shall have been pronounced or made in any Cause or Matter pending before any such Provincial or Diocesan Court, or in which such Provincial or Diocesan Court shall, under the said recited Act, have Jurisdiction, directing the Payment of an annual Sum by way of Alimony by any Person, or any Sum of Money as and for the Arrears of Alimony theretofore decreed or ordered to be paid, and it shall be made to appear to the Satisfaction of the Court by Affidavit, upon Application of the Person entitled to such Payment, that all due Efforts have been made for the Purpose of effecting personal Service upon the Person liable to such Payment of such Decree or Order, or for the Purpose of personally demanding from such Person the Payment of any Sum or Sums due under such Decree or Order, and that notwithstanding all due Diligence such Efforts to effect personal Service or Demand have been unavailing, either by reason of the Absence of the Person so sought to be served, or from other Causes not within the Control of the Person entitled to the Benefit of such Order or Decree, it shall be lawful for the Court to make an Order for the Substitution of the Service of such Decree or Order, or of a Demand of the Payment of such Sum or Sums of Money as aforesaid, as to the Court shall seem just and expedient.

Court may order Advertisements touching Enforcement of Decree where no substituted Service can be had.

2. In all Cases coming within the First Section of this Act, when the several Matters required to be proved to the Satisfaction of the Court before making any Order for substituted Service shall have been proved, and it shall further be made to appear by Affidavit that there is no Person upon whom such substituted Service can properly be had, it shall be lawful for the Court to order, in lieu of such substituted Service, that Advertisements shall be had in Two or more of the public Newspapers touching the Enforcement of such Decree or Order in such Form and subject to such Conditions in all respects as the Court shall direct.

Decree to be as effectual as personal Service.

3. After any such substituted Service or Advertisements, as in the preceding Section of this Act authorized, shall have taken place, such Decree or Order may be enforced in all respects as fully and effectually as if the same had been personally served upon the Person liable to the Payment of the Monies due under such Decree or Order, and as if a personal Demand had been made of such Monies from the Person liable to the Payment thereof.
