Whether, supposing a number of persons who have already entered Hyde-park to form themselves into a meeting for the discussion of political subjects, there is any legal authority to disperse such meeting by force, even though a general notice may have been given that meetings of that description will not be allowed.

OPINION.

1. We are of opinion that every person entering and remaining in the park must in law be taken to do so by the licence of the Crown or of those acting in the management of the park; that it is competent at any time to revoke this licence, or to annex to it a condition that those who avail themselves of it must not form, engage in, or attend meetings of a political character in the park, and that on this condition being broken the licence is at an end, and the person breaking it becomes a trespasser, and may, if he refuse to leave the park on notice or warning, be removed. It would, of course, be necessary to bring home to the knowledge of the person to be removed that a condition such as above supposed has been annexed to the general licence to enter the park. This might be done to a great extent by public notices in and about the park, though it is possible to suppose that, notwithstanding publication of notices, however extensive, individual cases might occur when, from inability to read or otherwise, actual knowledge of the condition would not be imputed, and in such cases it would be necessary to show an express warning to leave. But we are bound to state that, though the legal right of removal is such as we have described, we do not consider that in the case of any large assembly the right could practically be exercised with safety, or that such an assembly could be "dispersed by force," in the sense in which that term is ordinarily understood. The right of removal is a right to remove each separate individual as a trespasser, by putting him out of the park, using just so much force (and no more) as is necessary for that purpose. It is a separate right against each individual. The assembly (assuming it to be orderly) are not united in doing an illegal act, and there is no right to disperse them, or coerce them as a body of rioters or disorderly persons. It appears to us that it would not be practicable to remove each individual, or any considerable number of persons, and to prevent them returning; and it is also highly probable that the effort to remove any particular person or persons with the degree of force that would be justifiable would or might soon become confused by a resistance from bystanders, which would introduce into the operation elements of great difficulty and embarrassment. On the whole, we should answer the question proposed to us by saying that, in our opinion, there is not for any practical purpose a legal authority to disperse by force a meeting of the kind supposed, consisting of a large number of persons, and that whether notice has or has not been given beforehand.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

POWER OF CLERK TO COMPROMISE.—An agreement by an attorney's clerk by way of compromise made without authority, before the issuing of the writ, does not bind the client: (Duffy v. Hanson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 332. Willes, J.)

WRONGFUL DISMISSAL—EVIDENCE.—When the circumstances of an engagement and dismissal are all proved by written documents in evidence, the question becomes one for the decision of the court and not for the jury: (Morgan v. Savin, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 333. Willes, J.)

EXECUTOR—PRACTICE.—An executor who had not improperly kept back a sum was held not chargeable with interest: (Blogg v. Johnson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 306. Ch.)

PAYMENT INTO COURT IN EQUITY.—To justify an order for payment into court upon motion, the bill must clearly show that the money is the money of the plaintiff, and the answer must clearly admit the plaintiff's title; and where there was a denial of the plaintiff's title, and a denial that certain purchase money had been increased as alleged, the order for payment could not be supported: (Hagell v. Currie, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 307. Ch.)

ALTERNATIVE RELIEF.—It is wrong for a plaintiff to pray by his bill for relief against A., or, in the alternative, against B., if A. and B. are not interested in the subject-matter of the relief prayed for. Secus, if they are: (O'Gilvie v. Currie, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 309. Rolls.)

PLEADING IN EQUITY.—A plea was pleaded to the whole bill for an account of partnership dealings and transactions. The plea contained allegations to the effect that a partnership between the plaintiff and defendant had been dissolved by mutual consent; that all questions relating thereto had been agreed to be referred to arbitration; that arbitrators had been chosen by both parties, with a third referee in the event of disagreement; that this submission should be made a rule of the Court of Q. B., with all the usual powers to the arbitrators; that one of the referees had died, and another had been appointed; that the submission had been duly made a rule of court, but that no award had yet been made. Held, that this was not such a plea as constituted a bar to the plaintiff's suit for an account, and overruled accordingly: (Cooke v. Cooke, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 313. V. C. W.)

COSTS OF MANDAMUS.—The rule for the costs of a mandamus to justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal must be applied for within two terms after the hearing of the appeal in obedience to the writ: (Reg. v. The Justices of Kent, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 322. Q. B.)

MARRIED WOMAN—LOST ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.—If the certificate of acknowledgement of a deed by a married woman be lost, and therefore filing cannot take place, the court will not assist the parties by authorising the judge, before whom the deed was acknowledged, and whose memorandum of acknowledgement is in court, to make another certificate: (Ibid.)

ARBITRATION—FINALITY.—Where, by an agreement of reference, the parties covenanted and agreed to abide by the award of the arbitrator upon all points in difference between them, and eleven points were specifically referred, but the parties at the reference effected a settlement as to one of the eleven points, and withdrew it from the arbitrator's consideration: Held, that the award was not bad for want of finality, because it did not find in favour of either party on this point, inasmuch as the conduct of the parties amounted to an admission that it was no longer a point of difference: (Lawrence v. The Bristol and North Somerset Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 326. Ex.)

ATTORNEY'S ACTION UPON GUARANTEE FOR COSTS.—Where A. guarantees the payment to B. (an attorney) within six months of "all costs for business done for C., or which B. may thereafter do in reference to or arising out of the affairs of C." the delivery of a bill of such costs by B. to C. before the end of the six months is not a condition precedent to B.'s bringing an action on the guarantee against A.; and in such an action, therefore, an equitable plea, alleging the non-delivery of a bill of such costs by B. to C. before the end of the six months, and want of notice to the defendant, before the same period, of the amount of such costs, was held to be bad and no answer to the action: Semble, the defendant should, before the expiration of the six months, have applied to the equitable jurisdiction of the court for an order for the delivery of the plaintiff's bill of costs; (Reece v. Cox, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 327. Ex.)

CONTRIBUTORY.—B. applied for shares. They were allotted to him, but he withdrew his application before he received notice of the allotment. He was held not to be liable: (Ex parte Hebb, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 308. M. R.)

PROOF—SET-OFF—DEPOSIT.—B. and C., trustees, deposited trust-moneys in a banking company, at interest. The company was wound up. The liquidator refused to pay the dividend on the deposit, on the ground that, as B. was a contributory, and entitled in his own right to a life-interest in a portion of the trust-funds, the calls due from her might be set off against the dividend payable to both; the Court, however, held that no such right of set off existed, and ordered payment of the dividend: (Re The Imperial Mercantile Credit Association, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 315. V. C. S.)

RAILWAY LIABILITY FOR INJURY TO A CHILD.—B. carried her infant child, between three and four years old, as a passenger by a parliamentary train, taking a ticket for herself, but not for the child, who travelled with her and under her care. An accident occurring, the child was injured; an action was brought for damages: the jury negatived fraudulent misrepresentation by the mother of the child's age, and gave damages. The company was held to be liable, as having contracted to carry both mother and child: (Austin v. The Great Western Railway, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 320. Q. B.)

LIABILITY FOR ACTS OF MANAGER.—The company is liable for medical attendance on a servant of the company, by direction of the general manager: (Walker v. Great Western Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 327. Ex.)

LIABILITY OF RAILWAY FOR INJURY TO GOODS.—A silk dress, forming part of the wearing apparel of a railway passenger, is within the Carriers' Act. The plaintiff sued the defendants, a railway company, for the loss of his wife's luggage upon a journey from Redhill to Charing-cross. As to certain articles contained in the luggage, which consisted of the plaintiff's own clothes, the defendants pleaded that they were the company incorporated by a certain Act for making a railway from the London and Croydon Railway to Dover, to be called the South-Eastern Railway, and that the plaintiff's wife was a passenger to be carried upon the defendants' railway, which was the railway mentioned in the 131st section of the said Act from Redhill to London, and the articles in question were delivered to the defendants as the luggage of the plaintiff's wife, to be carried without extra charge upon the said railway with the plaintiff's wife as a passenger upon the said railway, within the meaning of the section, and were not articles of clothing of the plaintiff's wife within the meaning of the said section, and that they were lost while being carried on the said journey upon the said railway with the plaintiff's wife as such passenger as aforesaid. The 131st section of the Act mentioned in the plea provides that, without extra charge, it shall be lawful for every passenger travelling upon the said railway to take with him his articles of clothing, not exceeding a certain weight, and that the company should not be responsible for any articles carried upon the said railway with a passenger, except such passenger's articles of clothing not exceeding the prescribed weight. The journey from Redhill to London is performed partly upon the line constructed under the special Act upon which the plea was founded, and partly upon other lines not so constructed. No evidence was given to show at what part of the journey the loss took place: Held, that the plea was not proved. Quære, whether, in order that the section in question may apply, the whole journey must not be upon the line constructed under the special Act: (Flowers v. The South-Eastern Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 329. Ex.)

LIABILITIES OF MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION.—The rule is, that a mortgagee in possession must account, not only for the rents actually received, but for such as he might have received but for his wilful default. But then he must have known the fact that he was in possession only as mortgagee. B. entered into possession on a title of purchase, which was afterwards set aside, and he had received rents between possession taken and the decree setting aside the sale. It was held that he did not receive these rents in his character as mortgagee in possession: Parkinson v. Hanbury, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 243. H. of L.)

WILL—PRESUMPTION OF REVOCATION.—F. executed a will, whereby he bequeathed all he possessed to his daughter, and appointed her sole executrix. He kept the will, with other papers, in a chest of drawers in his room, and he spoke of it to his daughter three weeks before his decease. On his death the will was not forthcoming, but there were circumstances to justify the presumption that the son had previously searched the drawer and abstracted the instrument. The Court, not being satisfied that the will was not found on the testator's death, or that it was not in existence, granted probate of the draft from which it was engrossed. To support the legal presumption of revocation arising out of the absence of the will on the testator's death, it must be shown that it was not found after fair and genuine search, or that it was not in existence: (Finch v. Finch, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 268. Prob. Ct.)

WILL—GIFT OF REAL ESTATE.—B. purchased a leasehold house for the term of ninety-nine years at a groundrent, and afterwards bought the reversion, which was conveyed to a trustee (purposely to prevent a merger of the term) in trust for B., to be disposed of as he should direct. By his will he gave his wife all his personal estate. It was held that this did not pass the reversion in fee of the house, but only the term in it: Belaney v. Belaney, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 269. L. C.)

WILL—ESTATE FOR LIFE.—B. gave a fund upon trust to pay the dividends to C., the wife of D., for her life, and after her decease, if she should leave children, in trust for D. for life, and after his decease, among the children of C. and D.; but if C. should have no children who should acquire a vested interest in the fund, then after the decease of C. and D. to other persons absolutely. C. died without issue, leaving D. surviving. He was held to take an estate for life by implication: (Re Blake's Trusts, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 279. V. C. M.)

AGREEMENT FOR A LEASE.—In an agreement for a lease there is an implied covenant by the lessor that he has a good right and title to let: (Stranks v. St. John, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 283. C. P.)

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE RECORD OF TITLE ACT."

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

SIR,—I can readily imagine that when your correspondent, "Leguleius," began this subject in your columns, he "had no intention of engaging in controversy." Still less, I am sure, did he anticipate that his letter, so eulogistic of the "Record of Title," should be the means of exposing the faults and infirmities of the system which it was his purpose to commend to your professional readers. However, sir, he must have been fully aware that the correspondence in every respectable journal is subject to the principle, "audi alteram partem," and that in that column, at least, no one is allowed an immunity from contradiction. In his last letter he charges me with inconsistency in having (he says) attacked the system of registry of deeds in my paper, read at the Social Science Congress here in 1861, and being now zealous in its defence. In this your correspondent overstates his case. I am not, and never was, a partisan either for or against the registry of deeds. I made some suggestions, which I believed, whether rightly or wrongly, would, if adopted, have facilitated the transaction of the vast amount of business in the Registry Office, but I never found fault with the registry of deeds as a system. The improvements I suggested could not have been made without legislation, and therefore the heads of the office are in no way answerable for not acting upon my suggestions. On the other hand, I do not now assert that the system, as worked at present, is perfect, but I believe it much preferable to the Record of Title system, and my defence of it "hath this extent, no more."

As to the suppositious case which your correspondent puts, of a covenant to charge real estate, binding land purchased in Landed Estates' Court and conveyed by Parliamentary conveyance, I venture entirely to differ from him. I do not believe that any such covenant would bind property derived by Parliamentary title; but if he be right in his view of the law, then the error lies in counsel not directing searches from the time the purchaser came of age. But searches are not directed against purchasers from Landed Estates' Court further than the date of the sale, simply because no Act before the sale would affect the estate conveyed by the conveyance of the Court, which is good against all the world. If such covenants would bind land purchased in the Landed Estates' Court, then counsel are wrong not to direct searches accordingly. But this is a question between your correspondent and the Irish Bar, who are well able to defend themselves, and does not affect the discussion in which I am engaged with him, save that if he is right in his opinion it seems to me very questionable whether such covenants would not bind recorded land, in which case the indefeasibility of the Record is extinguished.

"Leguleius" says:—"Examples are valuable in this discussion," and thereupon exhibits a number of judgment searches, some with as many as 181 acts upon them, which, he says, it is necessary "carefully to peruse and tediously to scrutinize," in order to determine whether they affect the lands in relation to which they were directed. Now the present "discussion" has reference only to land purchased in the Incumbered or Landed Estates' Court, to which alone the Record of Title applies; and I am, therefore, at a loss to know for what purpose the searches for judgments were directed, as under the Act 13 and 14 Vic., cap. 29, no judgments affect property purchased since 15th July, 1850, unless registered as a mortgagee in the Registry of Deeds Office. So much for these "valuable examples."

Your correspondent, in his last letter, endeavours to qualify, if not to retract, the admissions of his preceding one, in which he acknowledged frankly the inadequacy of the Record of Title for property which is likely to be put in settlement. All can be made perfectly safe, it seems, according to his last letter, by the wonderful contrivance of entering the trustees on the record as owners, "without survivorship," and the tenant for life taking special care to have his own name entered as that of a person whose consent is required, or who must have notice before any sale can be effected. This is all very well for the tenants for life; but what about the poor remainderman, who may not have taken this precaution to prevent his estate being sold to some one else without his knowledge? Unfortunately, too, infants and minors cannot (unless some next friend interferes) take this prudent precaution against the rapidity of transfer and indefeasible action of the Record of Title, and which has ever been its greatest merits in the eyes of the promoters of the system.

As to the correction of the Record, I am quite at a loss, I confess, to understand your correspondent's argument. He says, in terms, that over the course of years in which the Incumbered Estates' Court existed, it never made any mistake; that there is every reason to expect the same infallibility in the "Record of Title," and yet that the power of amending the record is "fraught with safety." Surely when we speak of any plan being "fraught with safety" we mean that the absence of it would be fraught with danger. If there are no mistakes to be corrected, where is the danger? Yet he must contemplate some mistakes, for he adds, "There is a strong probability that if there be a mistake it will be discovered and rectified before mischief has been done." Now, I am at a loss to know what is the ground for this "probability." For my part, I believe the probability to be exactly the other way, and that every act in the record being of a conclusive character, the mistake will not be found out until it is too late to rectify it without injury to some one. The Incumbered Estates' Court has never, it is true, either exercised or claimed the power to rectify the errors in its conveyances, because such power is entirely inconsistent with their indefeasible character, and the power given to correct the errors in the Record of Title is equally inconsistent, indefeasibility being the very essence of that system. How do I know, if I purchase a recorded estate from a recorded owner, that, after I have paid my money for it, the Recorder of Titles may not find a mistake in the record, and correct it. Where, then, is the indefeasibility of my certificate, which, in the words of Lord Westbury, is to show "the exact state of my title?" The indefeasible record has proved fallible, and now it is to be corrected, and the correction will be indefeasible until it, too, is found to be wrong, and is corrected by this power to alter what is "fraught with safety" to the public.

Admitting your correspondent's assertion that one hundred duplicate conveyances having been taken out is evidence of that number of purchasers desiring to be recorded, then we must assume, for the same reason, that those who do not take out duplicate conveyances have no such desire, in which case it is quite plain that of the number of cases recorded only one hundred, or thereabouts, represent those who really desire to be so, and that the rest were caught in the trap, or, to adopt your correspondent's illustration, have been carried off in this indefeasible express train, at considerable risk, by accident. Although to "Leguleius" this may appear the very best thing that can happen to them, the purchasers themselves may not be quite of that opinion. An instance of this kind came under my notice lately. A gentleman of large property had purchased a small estate in the Landed Estates' Court which had been recorded, he not having resisted. Subsequently to being recorded he married in England, and the recorded lands, with a considerable amount of other property, was put into settlement, the deed being necessarily a very voluminous one. So far as the recorded estate went, the settlement had no operation, because it was not recorded, and how to record it was the question. The anomaly and inconvenience which was pointed out in the observations of the Incorporated Law Society actually arose in this case, for part of the settled property was under one law and part under another. The law advisers of the party interested under the settlement have, after much consideration, advised their client to take the only safe course under the circumstances—namely, to withdraw the lands out of the Record of Title and bring them under the ordinary law.

And now allow me to protest against the charge which your correspondent has made against the members of my profession, and which he repeats in his last letter—namely, that they purposely keep their clients in ignorance of the benefits and advantages of the Record of Title. I think the most prejudiced in favour of the system must admit that there are ample reasons to justify a solicitor in hesitating to advise his client to record, and yet, because the profession do not surrender their opinions as practical men to those of your correspondent, he charges them with a wilful suppression of facts from their clients. As to informing their clients of the nature of the Record of Title, I suppose, in many instances, they might as easily be informed of, and as readily understand, the nature of the differential calculus. No doubt it would be easy to describe, in general terms, what the promoters say of it; but it would be utterly impossible to explain to an unprofessional person the objections to the system. In such matters the public in general, who have confidence in their solicitors, will act on their advice, believing as they do that it is honestly given.

To meet my objection to keeping my client still a suitor in the Landed Estates' Court, as I maintain is done by recording his estate, "Leguleius" endeavours to prove an analogy between that step and enrolling a deed in Chancery, or examining a married woman separately in the Court of Common Pleas. I am really surprised at any one of your correspondent's intelligence and experience offering such an argument to your professional readers, all of whom must be perfectly aware that there is no analogy whatever in these proceedings to the recording of an estate. A deed once enrolled, you have never any occasion to come near the Court of Chancery again respecting it, nor is there anything to bring you back to the Court of Common Pleas after you have filed the acknowledgement of a married woman. Not so with the Record of Title. It is absolutely part of the Landed Estates' Court, and every difficulty in respect to any transactions with recorded land (and if the business increases there will be plenty of them), must be brought before the Judge of that Court for adjudication, for which purpose regular rules and orders have been made and published. My objection is not to the Landed Estates' Court. If I must be in Court, I would as soon be there as in any other Court, but what I do object to is being kept in Court at all.

Your correspondent does not seem happy in analogies, for the instance of an executor or administrator for his own protection publishing a statutory notice to creditors, has no analogy whatever to the case of an heir-at-law, or devizee being obliged to give notice before he can exercise ownership respecting a real estate to which he succeeds by descent or devize. As to the difficulty of showing that you are an heir-at-law, from not being able to prove the negative fact that there was no will, it is certainly a new one, and one which I do not believe real property lawyers have hitherto experienced; large estates in Ireland are constantly passing by descent to heirs-at-law, but I never heard of this fact embarrassing any one until your correspondent mentioned this extraordinary case of an heir-at-law, who cannot make title to his estate because no one will believe that his predecessor died intestate. I do not see, for my part, the "utility" of enabling the heir-at-law to have himself indefeasibly recorded to the absolute exclusion of a devizee deriving under a will which may be afterwards found, although such is the law in recorded estates. The Court of Probate may recall letters of administration, if a will turn up after they have been granted, and I see no reason why a different rule should prevail respecting real estate.

I am not aware that anything I have written in this discussion betrays such ignorance of the subject as to warrant the patronizing rebuke contained in your correspondent's last paragraph, but of this your readers will be better judges. I hope I am not in the habit of writing upon subjects of this kind without "investigation and inquiry," and that I have a sufficient acquaintance with the Record of Title system to be allowed to express an opinion upon it, without drawing down upon me the kind "recommendation" of your correspondent, to prejudiced persons. It may be that as he prophecies, before many years have elapsed conclusions resembling those which he has arrived at may be generally adopted, and that his Indefeasible Express Railway Train (to follow his own illustration), may have effectually driven the old slow-coach system of Registry of deeds off the real property road. Perhaps so; but it seems to me quite as probabie that when a few "dreadful accidents" have occurred on this indefeasible line, the public may decline to trust their property upon it, or that the danger of such casualties may occasion the formation of a Record of Title Accident Assurance Company, to provide compensation for the sufferers.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

HENRY T. DIX.

THE COURTS AND COURT PAPERS.

CONSOLIDATED NISI PRIUS COURT.

TRINITY TERM, 1867.

This Court will commence its Sittings on Tuesday the 28th day of May, and will sit continuously, or by adjournment, as occasion may require, until the end of Trinity Term.

The Honorable Mr. JUSTICE O'BRIEN will preside, and the Registrar appointed in pursuance of the 21st & 22nd Vic., Chap. 52, will attend as Registrar of the Court.

The Court will sit each day at Eleven o'Clock precisely, and every case will be struck out in which the Plaintiff's Attorney does not attend when called on, or is not ready to proceed.

ORDERED,

That no case shall be entered for trial unless a docket be lodged with the Registrar four clear days before the day for which notice of trial shall have been served, stating the names of the parties—in what capacity they sue and are sued—the general nature of the cause or causes of action and of defence and other pleadings, and the names of the Attorneys of the parties;—and all abstracts for trial shall be sealed and lodged with the Registrar the day before the same shall be called on; and in all cases wherein a confession or consent for judgment shall subsequently be given, the Plaintiff's Attorney shall immediately give notice to the Registrar that such cause will not proceed to trial.

All dockets of appeals must be entered with the Registrar two clear days before the day for which notice of hearing shall have been given, stating the names of the parties—the Attorneys—the nature of the decree, dismiss, or order appealed from—and from what Court the appeal is brought, the decree or dismiss must be in Court, as also a certificate of the appeal.

HENRY J. MONAHAN,
REGISTRAR,
Office Common Pleas.

GENERAL ORDER.

In relation to the Consolidated Nisi Prius Court.
18*th January*, 1862.

That no certificate of Counsel shall be requisite in order to enable Plaintiffs to have cases coming within the terms of the 237th Section of the Common Law Procedure Act (1853) tried in the Consolidated Nisi Prius Court for the future; and that, in addition to the cases specified in that Section, all cases may be tried in that Court which shall be ordered to be tried therein by any of the three Superior Courts of Common Law, or by any Judge of any of such Courts. Provided, however, that nothing in this order contained shall be deemed to interfere with the discretion of the Judge sitting in that Court to postpone the trial of any case to the After Sittings, on his being satisfied that it cannot be conveniently tried in the Consolidated Nisi Prius Court.

In the LANDED ESTATES' COURT, IRELAND.

COUNTY OF MEATH.

SALE,

On TUESDAY, the 4th day of JUNE, 1867.

In the Matter of the Estate of John Robert Taaffe, Esq., Owner and Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD, before the Honourable Judge Lynch, at the Landed Estates' Court, Inn's-quay, Dublin, on TUESDAY, the 4th day of JUNE, 1867, at Twelve o'clock, noon.

LOT No. 1.

Portion of the Lands of Farganstown, otherwise Ballyfargan, containing 111a. 1r. 4p. statute measure, situate in the Barony of Skreen, and County of Meath, held in fee, and producing a net rent of £199 14s. 8d.

LOT No. 2.

Another portion of the Lands of Farganstown, otherwise Ballyfargan, containing 223a. 3r. 5p. statute measure, situate in the Barony of Skreen, and County of Meath, held in fee, and producing a net rent of £382 6d. 3d.

LOT No. 3.

Part of the Lands of Ardmulchan, containing 505a. 2r. 9p. statute measure, situate in the Barony of Skreen, and County of Meath, held in fee. The greater portion of this Lot is in the owner's hands. The estimated annual value, after deducting tithe rent-charge, is £955 17s. 2d.

Dated this 27th day of March, 1867.

HENRY ROBERT GREENE, Chief Clerk.

WILLIAM FORD and JOHN DOHERTY, Solicitors having Carriage of Proceedings No. 62, Lower Dominick-street, Dublin.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Lands of Farganstown and Ardmulchan, in the County of Meath, are held in fee; they consist of arable and pasture land of the very best description, well fenced and watered, and accommodated with good farm roads. A considerable portion of these lands are in the owner's possession, and from their proximity to the town of Navan are most valuable as town parks.

On the Lands of Ardmulchan is the handsome residence of the owner, and more fully described in Lot No. 3.

These Lands are situate within two miles of the town of Navan, the principal market town of the county, in which there is a weekly meat and corn market, and monthly fairs for every description of stock.

The railway from Navan to Drogheda and Dublin passes through the lands, and the stations at Navan and Beauparc are within two miles at either side, by which the utmost facility is afforded for the transport of agricultural produce and stock either to the Dublin, Belfast, or to the English markets, by Drogheda.

LOT No. 1.—This Lot contains 111a. 1r. 4p. statute measure, and is that portion of the Lands of Farganstown which lies on the north-western side of the public road from Navan to Drogheda, and extends thence to the river Boyne, opposite to the handsome demesne of Blackcastle. The river skirts this Lot for a distance of about a mile, the salmon fishing of which is a most valuable addition to this portion of the property.

There is a valuable limestone quarry on the lands occupied by John Clarke.

A portion of this Lot is in the owner's possession, and owing to its proximity to the town of Navan is most valuable as town parks.

LOT No. 2.—This Lot contains 223a. 3r. 5p. statute measure, and is divided from Lot 1 by the public road from Navan to Drogheda.

It comprises the remaining portion of the Lands of Farganstown, the property of the owner.

This Lot is in the possession of a most respectable and independent class of tenantry, who pay their rents most punctually.

LOT No. 3.—This Lot contains 505a. 2r. 9p. statute measure, of the Lands of Ardmulchan, 321a. 1r. 25p. of which, including the demesne lands and mansion house, are in the possession of the owner. The house is beautifully situated in an elevated position overlooking the River Boyne, and directly opposite the picturesque ruins of the old Castle Dunmoe.

The demesne lands lie between the public road and the river. They are beautifully planted, and well wooded with a large quantity of valuable timber.

The gate-house and offices are most complete and substantial stone buildings. There is an enclosed yard, with stables, coach-house, steward's-house, cattle-sheds, and haggard, with a mill turned by water power.

The pleasure grounds run along the River Boyne, and command beautiful views of the adjoining picturesque scenery; the garden is tastefully laid out and well stocked with fruit trees; and the salmon fishing of the river, which extends along this portion of the estate, is most valuable.

Proposals for any of the above Lots will be received by the Solicitors having Carriage of the Sale, up to the 25th day of May, and submitted to the Judge for his approval.

Cause Petition under "The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850," section 15.

In the Matter of John Kane and Thomas Francis Brady, Executors of Thomas Frederick Morrell, deceased, Petitioners; Rose Baxter and Anne Morrough, Respondents.

I HEREBY require all Persons claiming to be Creditors, Pecuniary Legatees, or Next of Kin of Thomas Frederick Morrell, formerly of Lower Sackville-street, Dublin, Tailor, formerly of Lower Mount-street, in the City of Dublin, and late of Hotel Vanneau, Rue Vanneau, Paris, deceased, on or before the 2nd day of JULY next, to furnish, in writing, to Messrs. MAXWELL and WELDON, Solicitors for the Petitioners, No. 37, North Great George's-street, Dublin, the amount and particulars of their several demands (accompanied, in case of simple contract debts, by a statement of the consideration of such debts), in order that the Petitioners may, without any expense to them, prove in this matter such or so much of their demands as they shall think just, of the allowance or disallowance of which, or any part of same, said Creditors shall receive due notice. And all such Creditors whose demands shall be disallowed, either wholly or in part, shall, at the peril of costs, be at liberty to file charges in my Office, in respect of the claims or amounts so disallowed, within one fortnight after they shall respectively have received notice of such disallowance.

Dated this 16th day of May, 1867.

WM. BROOKE, Master in Chancery.

MAXWELL & WELDON, Solicitors for the Petitioners, No. 37, North Great George's-street, Dublin.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, JUNE 1, 1867.

IN our columns of to-day will be found the first Report of "The Digest of Law Commission." Some six months ago this Commission was appointed to inquire into the expediency of a Digest of law, and the best means of accomplishing that object, and of otherwise exhibiting the law, as embodied in judicial decisions, in a compendious and accessible form. We shall content ourselves here with merely directing the attention of every class of our readers to this masterly exposition of the objects of the Commission, the advantages to all classes of the community likely to flow from the formation of the proposed Digest, and the means by which the work is to be accomplished. Great results were, no doubt, expected from the collective wisdom and united exertions of the great men to whom this momentous task was entrusted; and it may now be safely asserted that this first result of their labours will be received with an amount of interest surpassing every expectation, not alone by the legislator, or those engaged in the administration and the study of the law, but by every intelligent member of the community. The questions with which the report deals are not questions of mere speculative interest, but of the highest practical importance. To attempt a summary of its contents would be simply waste of time, as it is itself the most succinct and the most lucid abstract that could possibly be given or desired.

The Digest, as contemplated by the Commissioners, would be a condensed summary of the law as it exists, arranged in systematic order, under appropriate titles and subdivisions, and divided into distinct articles or propositions, which would be supported by references to the sources of law whence they were severally derived, and might be illustrated by citations of the principal instances in which the rules stated had been discussed or applied. From this it will be readily seen that although such a Digest may never lead to the Codification of our laws, it fully merits the recommendations of the Commissioners, and ought to receive the immediate consideration of the Legislature.

The existence of conflicting systems of Law and Equity have been deemed by some sufficient reasons for regarding Codification as at present impracticable. We will not at present discuss this difficult question as to the fusion of Law and Equity; all we say is that we believe the contemplated Digest is the safest preparatory step to such legislative amendments as will effect the amalgamation of the two systems, if such should be deemed desirable, when legislators shall be in a better position to decide: and that the formation of a Digest will not prove in any case a useless expenditure of time and money.

In connexion with the subject of Codes, we may here remind our readers that the first of the French Codes, of which a projet was printed early in 1801, was sent to the different Courts of Justice for their remarks and suggestions. The remarks and suggestions were also printed, and the whole was then laid before the section of legislation of the Council of State. The various heads of the Code were successively discussed, and then laid before the tribunate, where some of the provisions met with considerable opposition. At length the Code passed both the tribunal and legislative body, and was promulgated in 1804, as the "Code Civil des Francais." When Napoleon became Emperor the name was changed to that of "Code Napoleon," by which it is still often designated, though it is now generally styled by its original name of "Code Civil."

So, also, the Code of Justinian was framed by ten Commissioners appointed by the Emperor in the year 528, to make a new collection of imperial constitutions. The instructions given to the Commissioners empowered them to omit unnecessary preambles, repetitions, contradictions, and obsolete matter; to express the laws to be derived from the sources above mentioned in brief language, and to place them under appropriate titles; to add to, take from, or vary the words of the old constitutions, when it might be necessary; but to retain the order of time in the several constitutions, by preserving dates, &c. Fourteen months after the date of the Commission, the Code was completed, and declared to be law under the title of the Justiniuneus Codex. We have thus briefly adverted to a few points in the history of those two great Codes, so as to be able better to judge whether a Code ought to be the object of our legislature in the first instance. The Times in a recent article, which we inserted in our last number, alluding to this subject, observes:—"Thus it has come about that above thirteen hundred years after the publication of the great Digest of the Roman Law by Justinian, and two generations after the publication of the French Code, since adopted by several European nations, when a great part of our own law has already been codified in the State of New York, and we have ourselves established an excellent Code in India, a Royal Commission has just been instructed 'to inquire into the expediency'—not of a Code, for that is still in the remote future, but—of a simple 'Digest of Law.'" Now, having regard to the vast field in which a Commission on our laws would have to work, as compared with the limited space to which the operations of the framers of the two great Codes referred to were confined, we think this Commission was wisely restricted to the consideration of a Digest of the law as it now exists, before it directed inquiry as to the production of a Code which, according to The Times itself, would require at least a grant of £40,000 a year, for a period of ten years. The Times, however, approves of the Digest now proposed, which can be perfected in half that time, and at half that cost, and advocates immediate action on the Report of the Commissioners.

CURRENT TOPICS.

We think the profession have no reason to be altogether dissatisfied with the proceedings in the House of Commons last Wednesday, when the Attorneys' Certificate Duty Bill came on for second reading. It was defeated for the time, not after a discussion on its merits, but by a common Parliamentary manœuvre. The opponents of the measure first endeavoured to shelve it by moving the adjournment of the debate. On a division this motion was promptly negatived by a majority of 41—the numbers being: for adjournment, 91; against it, 132. Seeing, then, that the friends of the Bill had mustered so strongly to support it, the device of speaking against time was resorted to, as by the rules of the House all business, however important, is suspended on Wednesday afternoons, directly the clock points to a quarter to six. Mr. Ayrton had thus an opportunity of illustrating at once his powers of loquacity and his puerility of argument, for in the course of his observations he gave as a "special reason" for not abolishing this obnoxious impost, that the concentration of the new London Courts of Justice would save half the time and half the trouble of attorneys. We may be dull, but we fail to perceive why Scotch, and Irish, and English country solicitors should continue to pay a tax of this nature in order that their London brethren may spend less money on cab hire, and gain more time to write their letters.

ADDRESS OF THE BAR TO THE RIGHT HON. FRANCIS BLACKBURNE, LATE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR OF IRELAND, AND HIS REPLY.

The following is a copy of the Address to Mr. Blackburne, mentioned in a former number of this Journal as having been approved of at a meeting of the Bar for presentation to him. In the hope that a formal delivery of it to him in person would have been possible, and that a reply might have been heard from his own lips, the presentation stood over since April; but the anxious expectation of the Bar in this respect has been disappointed. Owing to the continued illness of Mr.

Blackburne, he was obliged to transmit his reply in writing to the Bar. It is subjoined to the Address:—

"TO THE RIGHT HON. FRANCIS BLACKBURNE.

"SIR,—The Bar of Ireland desire, while they bid you farewell on the occasion of your retirement from the Bench, to express to you their feelings of respect and admiration for the great qualities which have distinguished you, and have reflected so much honor upon your profession.

"The history of your career, extending over more than sixty years, contains a record of which the Irish Bar are proud, and which is in many respects without a parallel.

"In your earlier years at the Bar those qualities which had won the great distinctions of your College course raised you to pre-eminence among rivals with whom few could have ventured to compete. Having reached the highest point of professional eminence, and proved yourself a sound lawyer and consummate advocate, public honors and public trust soon followed as the just recognition of your well-earned position.

"In the discharge of your duties as first Law Officer during times of difficulty your abilities were ever equal to the occasion, while your moderation and firmness have left an example worthy of imitation. You were then in succession Master of the Rolls, Lord Chief Justice, Lord High Chancellor, and Lord Justice of Appeal.

"In the history of this country no man ever filled so many high judicial offices and brought to the discharge of each such great and varied powers. Calm and impressive dignity, great grasp of mind, unequalled sagacity, and a rare faculty of clothing thought in clear and simple language conspicuously marked your administration of the law.

"Your uniform courtesy and kindness will be long remembered by us all, and you bear with you into your retirement the sincere good wishes of every member of the Irish Bar.

"Signed for the Bar of Ireland, in pursuance of a resolution unanimously adopted at a meeting held in the Law Library, Four Courts, Dublin, April 24th, 1867.

"ROBERT D. MECREDY, Father of the Bar."

REPLY.

"TO THE FATHER AND MEMBERS OF THE BAR OF IRELAND.

"It is with feelings of no ordinary character that I reply to your address—so kind, so touching, I would add, so affectionate; and it causes me no little difficulty to find words to give expression to them.

"It affords me the deepest gratification to receive from the Bar of Ireland such a recognition of my services, when I consider its worth, its learning, and its personal character.

"In your feeling address you allude to the several high offices which I have, from time to time, filled by favour of the Crown, and to the mode in which their attendant duties were performed.

"I can only say that in the discharge of those duties I felt that a sacred trust was committed to my keeping, and that a strict regard to the interests of justice, and to the welfare of our country, and perfect impartiality between man and man should be my guiding principle of action.

"In bidding you farewell, at the close of a long professional career, I cannot do so without, in the fullest measure, reciprocating the kindly sentiments which your address contains, and wishing you, my friends, a long enjoyment of life and happiness, and of success at the noble profession of which we are members.

"I had hoped to have had the great pleasure of being able to receive your address, but I deeply regret that, owing to my lengthened illness, I am unable to do so, and must, therefore, send to the Father of the Bar the reply which I should have so much wished to deliver in person.

"FRANCIS BLACKBURNE."

MEETING OF ATTORNEYS.

The following Requisition has been forwarded to us for publication. We commend the subject to which it relates to the attention of the Profession.

We, the undersigned, respectfully request a meeting of the Attorneys who practise in the Courts of Quarter Sessions in Ireland, at the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Four Courts, Dublin, on Friday next, the 7th day of June, instant, at twelve o'clock, noon, to take into consideration the present state of the laws relating to the recovery of debts by Civil Bill in Ireland, and to adopt such means as may be considered necessary to procure the amendment of such laws.

Solicitors' Rooms, Dublin, 1st June, 1867.

JOHN WALTER BOURKE, Hon. Sec. Cork Law Society.
JOSEPH WM. HOWARD, Hon. Sec. Waterford Law Society.
HUGH HYNDMAN, Hon. Sec. Northern Law Club.
GEO. ROCTOR, Hon. Sec. Londonderry Law Society.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY, MAY 29.

ATTORNEYS', ETC., CERTIFICATE DUTY BILL.

Mr. DENMAN moved the second reading of this bill.

Mr. HUNT said that in the absence of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who had not expected the adjourned debate on this Bill to be resumed to-day, he trusted the hon. and learned gentleman would not press his motion.

Mr. C. BENTINCK moved the adjournment of the debate.

The House divided—

For the adjournment 91
Against 132
Majority against the adjournment ... —41

Mr. AYRTON said that having moved the adjournment of the debate when the Bill was last under the notice of the House he might be permitted to express his regret that the House had decided upon resuming the consideration of a measure of so much importance only a few minutes before the usual hour of adjournment. It was very easy and agreeable, no doubt, for any individual member to propose to relieve a particular class from the payment of a tax, but it was the duty of the House to consider the interest of all classes of society. When this question was last before the House he had thought it their duty to leave the Chancellor of the Exchequer free and unfettered, in order that he might first state the financial proposals of the year. If he had pressed upon the notice of the right hon. gentleman any particular taxes which, above and before all others, had a claim upon his attention, it would have been the taxes on locomotion (hear). Why should they take 1s. a day from a poor cabman for the National Exchequer before they allowed him to drive his cab along the streets? Why should omnibuses and omnibus drivers pay a tax? If a man who kept a taxed cart for the purposes of his business met his wife on the road and gave her a ride, he was liable to be heavily taxed, if he were on bad terms with the tax-gatherer. The taxes on locomotion were, indeed, involved in extraordinary absurdity and perplexity. There was a special reason why the House should not at the present moment remit the certificate duty paid by attorneys. The National Exchequer would have to contribute something towards the new courts of justice. The concentration of these courts would enable the attorneys to perform various duties in less than half the time and at half the trouble they now involved, while no proposal was made to reduce their fees and remuneration.

Digitized by Google

A quarter to six o'clock having now arrived, the debate was, by the rules of the House, again adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY, MAY 30.

COURT OF CHANCERY (IRELAND) BILL.

The House went into Committee on this Bill.

Upon clause 28, in which it was proposed to insert words restricting future appointments to the offices of examiner and assistant clerk to the Receiver Master to officers retired upon full salary under the provisions of this Bill,

Sir P. O'BRIEN complained that the effect of the clause would be to withdraw from Master Fitzgibbon, a judge in equity of great eminence and popularity, a share of patronage secured to him by existing Acts of Parliament and by the terms of his patent of office.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND denied that any slight or discourtesy towards Master Fitzgibbon was intended by this clause. It was a mere Treasury regulation, having for its object to utilize the services of gentlemen whose present offices would be abolished by the Bill, and thereby to preserve a due economy of the public funds. The clause was identical with that of which notice had been given last year by the hon. member for Portarlington.

Mr. Serjeant ARMSTRONG said the learned judge felt much hurt at the proposed interference with his vested rights, especially as the slight courtesy of a communication upon the subject had not been paid. At the time when, with the full approval of the profession and the public, this office was pressed upon Master Fitzgibbon's acceptance, his professional income greatly exceeded his present salary.

Mr. HUNT said that he had addressen a letter to Master Fitzgibbon stating that the masters were not intrusted with the patronage for their private advantage, but simply because it was thought that they would be able to make the best selections. The question was simply whether they should utilize the existing force or adopt an arrangement which would entail an additional burden on the public purse.

A conversation then ensued, in the course of which Mr. CONOLLY, Mr. PIM, Mr. GREGORY, Mr. BRUEN, and Sir J. GRAY contended that the claims of Master Fitzgibbon ought not to be ignored, and that justice, in a matter in which the faith of Parliament was concerned, ought to be preferred to economy.

Mr. Serjeant ARMSTRONG moved the addition to the clause of the following words:—"Provided also that the vacancies occurring in the office of examiner or chief clerk to the present Receiver Master shall be filled up by the present Receiver Master as if this Act had not been passed."

The Committee divided, when there appeared :—

Progress was then reported.

LONGEST BILL OF THE SESSION.—The Lord Chancellor's Bill for repealing statutes which have become obsolete, spent, or superseded, weighs nearly 2 lbs., and fills 242 folio pages. This instalment of the expurgation of the statute-book extends from the 1st of William and Mary to the 10th of George III.

PUBLIC RECORDS (IRELAND) BILL.

A Bill to Provide for keeping safely the Public Records of Ireland. (Prepared and brought in by Lord Naas and Mr. Attorney-General for Ireland).

Whereas the Public Records in Ireland are in the keeping of several persons, and many in unfit buildings, and it is expedient to establish one Record Office and a better custody.

And whereas a large and commodious building has been erected at the Four Courts, Dublin, for the purpose: Be it therefore enacted, &c.

1. This Act to be cited as "The Public Records (Ireland) Act, 1867," and to

2. Extend to Ireland only.

3. The word "Records" shall mean all Rolls, Records Writs, Books, Proceedings, Decrees, Bills, Warrants, Accounts, Papers, and Documents whatsoever, of a public nature, belonging to her Majesty, or now deposited in any of the offices or places of custody hereinafter mentioned.

4. This Act shall commence on the day of 1867.

5. The Records belonging to her Majesty, that is to say,

All Records of Court of Chancery now deposited in the Rolls Office, and all other Records of same Court, which shall be twenty years old from the making thereof:

All Records of Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, Probate and Admiralty Courts, and of former Court of Prerogative, which shall be of like age from the making thereof :

All Records, Maps, Books, and Documents deposited in Custom House Buildings, Dublin :

All original Wills of which Probate granted not later than twenty years in all Courts throughout Ireland having testamentary jurisdiction :

All Bermingham Tower Plea, Pipe and other Rolls, Parliamentary Records, Records deposited in State Paper Department, except those not fifty years of age from the making thereof, and all other Records (other than appertaining to office of Ulster King of Arms) in Record Tower, Dublin Castle :

All Documents of any Courts, Commissions, or public offices which shall have ceased to exist, and are not comprehended under the foregoing denominations, shall, from the passing of this Act, be under the charge and superintendence of the Master of the Rolls, and shall be removed to Public Record Office as hereinafter provided. Until such removal persons now having care of such Records shall continue to have charge of them, subject to the orders of the Master of the Rolls concerning same.

6. The Lord Lieutenant in Council may order Records belonging to her Majesty deposited in any office other than hereinbefore mentioned, to be thenceforth under the charge of the Master of the Rolls ; and thereupon this Act shall extend to such Records, and to persons having custody of same.

7. After the Public Record Office shall be established, every office where Public Records, placed under superintendence of the Master of the Rolls, are deposited, shall, so long as such Records remain therein, be deemed a branch of the said Public Record Office.

8. All persons deriving emolument from the custody of Records, or from fees for searching or copying Records, whose office or emoluments shall be affected by this Act, may deliver to Master of the Rolls a statement in writing of the manner in which they may be thereby affected, and the Master of the Rolls may thereupon examine the parties and report such statements and examinations, with his opinion thereon, to the Lords of the Treasury, who may award compensation ; provided that account be taken of such compensation in any future appointment.

9. The Lord Lieutenant, with consent of the Treasury, shall appoint a fit person, duly qualified by his knowledge of Records, to be Deputy Keeper of the Records, and may remove the Deputy Keeper of the Records, and appoint another person in his room; he shall act as Chief Record Keeper under the Master of the Rolls, and shall superintend all persons employed in the Public Record Office.

10. The Lord Lieutenant, with consent of the Treasury, shall appoint a fit person, duly qualified by his knowledge of Records, to be Assistant Deputy Keeper of the Records, and with like consent, all such Clerks, Officers, and Servants as shall be necessary, the said Assistant Deputy Keeper of the Records to be removable at pleasure by the Lord Lieutenant, and the said Cerks, Officers, and Servants to be removable at pleasure by the Deputy Keeper of the Records, with the approval of the Lord Lieutenant: the Assistant Deputy Keeper of the Records, the Clerks, Officers, and Servants in the first instance to be appointed from among such persons entitled to compensation under this Act as the Lord Lieutenant shall judge competent and fit.

11. Pay of Deputy Keeper, Assistant Deputy Keeper of the Records, and other persons engaged in execution of Act, to be such annual salaries as Lord Lieutenant, with consent of Treasury, shall appoint.

12. State Papers of Chief Secretary's Office to be removed in the first instance to and remain in the Record Tower, Dublin Castle, subject to superintendence of Master of the Rolls; and whenever such Records shall be aged fifty years from the making thereof, such Records are to be removed to the Public Record Office.

13. Records in State Paper Department of the Record Tower to be kept there till arranged as Master of the Rolls shall direct.

14. Additional annual salary of £200 to Sir Bernard Burke, State Paper Department.

15. The Master of the Rolls shall, as soon as convenient, issue warrants to the several persons having care of Records, ordering such persons to allow them to be removed and deposited in Public Record Office; and every such warrant shall be kept in Record Office, and shall be a sufficient warrant for the removal of such Records: Provided that the Records in the State Paper Department shall not be removed until the Lord Lieutenant shall countersign the warrant for removal.

16. After the commencement of this Act the Records of the Chancery of Ireland, and of every Court or Public Office in Ireland, shall be deemed to be in the custody of the Master of the Rolls, and subject to the regulations hereby authorized to be made; and the Master of the Rolls shall, by warrant from time to time, appoint fit persons to attend all public offices in Ireland, and in his name to take charge of all other Records of which the charge is hereby vested in him; and the Chief Judge of the Court, or principal officer of the office to which same shall belong, upon sight of the warrant, shall give orders for the delivery of the Records; and as soon as the Records shall have been so delivered the same shall be deemed to be in the custody of the Master of the Rolls, and shall forthwith be removed to the Public Record Office; and the person receiving any Records shall deliver a schedule thereof, and a receipt for the same, to the Judge or Officer, and shall deliver a copy of such schedule to the Master of the Rolls: Provided,

1st. That no such warrant be issued by the Master of the Rolls unless countersigned by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland:

2nd. That every such warrant shall specify the Records to be delivered:

3rd. That such warrant shall not issue for removal of any Records belonging to Courts of Common Law, Court of Probate, Landed Estates' Court, or Court of Admiralty, unless the Records described be of the age of twenty years from the making thereof, or if under that age, unless the removal be requested by the Chief Judge of the Court:

4th. That if it appear to the Chief Judge of such Court conducive to the ends of justice that any Records belonging thereto should not be delivered into the custody of the Master of the Rolls at the end of twenty years, such Chief Judge may certify his opinion to the Master of the Rolls, and the Master of the Rolls, upon receiving such certificate under the hand of such Chief Judge, may, from year to year, but not longer, without a new certificate, abstain from issuing his warrant for removal of the Records mentioned:

5th. That such warrant shall not issue for removal of any State Papers unless the same be of the age of fifty years, and that the consent of the Lord Lieutenant shall have been previously obtained.

17. Legal validity of the Records after removal.

18. Master of the Rolls to make rules for the management of the office and the admission of persons using the Records, and to fix the amount of fees (if any), and for dispensing with fees in such cases as he shall think fit.

19. Seal of the Record Office to be provided.

20. The Master of the Rolls or Deputy Keeper of the Records may allow copies to be made of any Records, at the request and costs of any person desirous of procuring the same; and any copy so made shall be examined and certified as a true and authentic copy by the Deputy Keeper of the Records, or by the Assistant Deputy Keeper of the Records, and shall be sealed.

21. Such copies sealed with the seal of the Record Office, to be received in evidence.

22. Calendars, Indexes, and Records may be printed if the estimated expense thereof be voted by Parliament.

23. Copies of Records, printed as aforesaid, to be sold, save such as may be gratuitously presented to Public Offices or Institutions.

24. Power to purchase private Calendars, Catalogues, and Indexes for use of the Record Office.

25. Annual report to be made to Parliament by Deputy Keeper of the Records.

26. Certifying as true any false copies of Records to be a felony.

LEGAL APPOINTMENT.—Benjamin Whitney, Esq., has been appointed Clerk of the Crown for the County of Mayo.

DEATH OF SIR THOMAS PHILIPS.—The death is announced of Sir Thomas Philips, Q.C., of the Inner Temple. The deceased, who was born at Llanelly, Brecknockshire, in 1801, was formerly a Solicitor, and practised at Newport, Monmouthshire. In January, 1840, he received the honour of knighthood, free of expense, for his services as mayor of Newport, in contributing to the defeat of the body of Chartist insurgents who entered that town in November, 1839, on which occasion he was severely wounded, while engaged in the discharge of his magisterial duties. On being knighted, he ceased to practise as a Solicitor, and in due course was called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple.

The Right Hon. the ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR IRELAND entertained the following party at dinner at the Imperial Hotel, Cork, on the 25th ult., to celebrate her Majesty's Birthday:—The Right. Hon. the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, the Right Hon. Justice Keogh, the Right Hon. Justice George, Sir A. R. Warren, Bart., High Sheriff of the County of Cork; D. Leahy, Esq., High Sheriff of the City of Cork; the Solicitor-General; Serjeant Sir Colman O'Loghlen, Bart., M.P.; Mr. Serjeant Barry, M.P.; Captain Tonson Rye, foreman of the grand jury; Messrs. Exham, Q.C., Heron, Q.C., James S. Green, M. J. Barry, G. Waters, W. G. Channery, Robert Travers, J.P.; Mr. Monahan, Mr. Woodroofe, and Mr. George Chatterton, J.P.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.

Reported by WM. WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before WHITESIDE, C. J., MONAHAN, C. J., PIGOT, C. B., KEOGH, O'BRIEN, FITZGERALD, O'HAGAN, and GEORGE, J. J.; and FITZGERALD, HUGHES, and DEASY, B. B.

THE QUEEN v. MEANY.

April 17-18, May 18.—Treason Felony—Overt Act—Conspiracy—Venue.

Case reserved from the Commission Court at Green-street. The prisoner was indicted under the Treason Felony Act for compassing, within the county of the city of Dublin, to depose the Queen. A variety of overt acts were laid, amongst them conspiracies to levy war, and to incite foreigners to invade the realm. It was proved that the prisoner became a member of the Fenian conspiracy in the United States, and that that conspiracy was widely spread both in America and in Ireland. No act of the prisoner in Ireland was proved against him, but acts of co-conspirators in Dublin were given in evidence. The prisoner was convicted, and the Judges (HUGHES and FITZGERALD, B. B.) reserved for this Court the question of the propriety of admitting against the prisoner evidence of the acts of his co-conspirators within the venue.

O'Loghlen and Molloy for the prisoner.

The Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General for the Crown.

The COURT (PIGOT, C. B., O'BRIEN, O'HAGAN, J. J., and FITZGERALD, B., dissenting) held that the evidence was rightly received, and that the conviction should be affirmed.

THE QUEEN v. MULCAHY.

May 18, 21.—Writ of Error—Transcript of Record—Fees.

This was a motion to the Court to remit the fees payable by the defendant to the Clerk of the Crown for a transcript of the record. A writ of error from the judgment of this Court had been obtained, and the case was going to the House of Lords. A fee amounting to £60 was payable to the Clerk of the Crown for a transcript of the record, and this it was sought to have remitted, there being affidavits of the poverty of the defendant and of his inability to pay such a fee as was required. An order similar to that sought had been made by the Court in the case of The Queen v. Samuel Gray in 1844.

Butt, Q. C., and O'Loghlen for the defendant.

The Solicitor-General, on behalf of the Crown, opposed the motion.

The Court granted the order sought.

DE FREYNE v. FRENCH.

May 24.—Evidence before Taxing Officer—Right of the Party to get copies of Evidence and Documents.

In this, on taxation of the costs before the MASTER, very voluminous evidence was taken, and many lengthy documents put in evidence. The defendant wished to apply to the Court to have the taxation reviewed, and for this purpose wished to have copies of the evidence and documents.

The MASTER thought that he was not entitled to give copies without an order of the Court.

Kernan, Q.C., now moved that the taxing officer should be ordered to give to the defendant, at the defendant's cost, copies of all evidence taken, and of all documents put in evidence before him.

O'BRIEN, J.—What objection can there be to giving you copies? It is always done, if required, at the expense of the party asking for it. No order is necessary.

Sheriff—Writ sent by Post—Duty of Sheriff to return Writ—Attachment.

In this case a writ of Ca. Sa. had been sent by post to the late Sheriff of Mayo during his year of office. The Sheriff received and executed the writ, and the defendant paid the debt and costs to the Sub-sheriff, but he did not return the writ or pay over the money to the plaintiff.

Coates now moved for an order that the Sheriff should return the writ within two days, or that an attachment should issue against him.

The 120th General Order, 1856, only applies to the case of a writ being delivered to the Sheriff; here it was sent by post. So that we must apply to the Court.

BRADSHAW v. SHINE.

May 11.—Substitution of Service.

Motion to make absolute a conditional order obtained April 12, that service of the summons and plaint, and conditional order on Michael Shine, brother and agent of the defendant, be deemed good service. The plaintiff's affidavits stated that the plaintiff had been employed as solicitor for Mathew Shine, the defendant in some proceedings in the Probate Court, which were unsuccessful; that he had in February last, pursuant to the statute, furnished his costs, amounting to £144 14s.; that the defendant left his house at Roxboro' on the 25th of March, with the intention of permanently residing out of the jurisdiction of the Court; that plaintiff had been informed by William Gubbins, the landlord from whom defendant held his house at Roxboro', that he left the house in charge of a servant of defendant's brother, Michael (on whom the substituted service was to be effected), and left the keys with him, and that possession of the house had been offered to William Gubbins by Michael Shine, but had not been accepted; that Michael Shine paid his brother an annuity of £50 a year, in consideration of Mathew Shine allowing him to use and occupy certain lands which were held by Mathew Shine under a lease prohibiting alienation; and plaintiff believed that the house and lands at Roxboro' were in the possession of Michael Shine, and that he paid his brother the £50 a year as his agent or manager; that previously to his leaving the country the defendant gave plaintiff an order on his brother for £20, on account of the gale of the annuity, due March 25th, and that he sent that order to Michael Shine, who kept it for a fortnight, but did not pay it; that plaintiff was fully convinced that Michael Shine was his brother's agent, and was fully aware of where he was, and that any writ served on Michael would be forwarded to Mathew, whom he believed to be in Liverpool, but did not know his address there.

Michael Shine made an affidavit as cause, in which he stated that the house at Roxboro' never was in his possession as agent or otherwise of defendant; that he never had or sent the keys of that house to William Gubbins, but that he believed that the keys had been left with a workman, formerly in defendant's employment; that he paid the defendant £50 a year, but not as agent; that he refused to pay the order for £20, but that he did not keep the order more than a few days, and returned it before the defendant had left the country; that he was not the agent of his brother, nor ever had acted, nor was then acting for him in the management of his affairs; that defendant left the country with his family, on the 17th April, before the summons and plaint had been served on him, Michael Shine; that he sailed from Liverpool for Buenos Ayres, and that he, Michael Shine, did not know, and had no means of ascertaining his address, or intended address there.

The Court made the order absolute.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by John Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In Bankruptcy.

Before Miller, J.

Re An Arranging Trader.

May, 1867.—Ships' Registry Act—Incompleted Contract—Interest in Ship supplied with necessaries, for which an apparent owner of a part is sought to be made liable. Where a party is in treaty for the purchase of a part in a Ship, which ends in his becoming an apparent owner of a fourth in that Ship, but never has any beneficial interest in it, such party will not be held liable for necessaries supplied to that ship before he became part owner. To make a contract complete there must be mutuality, and both parties must distinctly agree upon the terms, which are to be the foundation of that contract.

This case came before the Court upon charge and discharge. The chargeants were the Messrs. Spriggs, merchants in Liverpool, who supplied the ship Fanny with necessaries. The liability was disputed on the ground that at the time the goods were supplied the dischargeant had no beneficial interest in the vessel.

Kernan, Q.C., appeared in support of the charge. Heron, Q.C., and Daniel were in support of the discharge. The facts appear in the judgment of Judge Miller.

Judge Miller.—My desire in this case would be to go as far as the facts and law could possibly admit in enabling the chargeants to recover the full amount in value of the goods honestly supplied for the benefit of the vessel in question, as against the owners of it whoever they might be. While if I looked alone to the case of either Stewart, who was an undoubted owner of a part (if not the whole) of the vessel, or the arranging Trader, the alleged owner of a part of that vessel, as spread upon the record before me, where I find, on the one hand, Stewart resorting to the expedient of antedating the bill of sale in the face of a correspondence which must have made the clumsiness of it transparent to any person; and, on the other hand, the arranging Trader (with equal recklessness in the face of the same correspondence, fully placed before him upon the charge), alleging, upon his oath, that the bill for £237 14s. 3d. was given for the accommodation of Stewart, which he must have known to have been untrue, there is much that is calculated to throw suspicion upon the case presented by either Stewart or the arranging Trader. But, notwithstanding, I fortunately have in this case documentary evidence, including a written correspondence (although not, perhaps, the whole of it), which will afford to me some security that I shall not be much misled by the allegations of either as regards the rights of third parties.

After the most careful consideration which I can give to it, the whole question in this case appears to me to be concluded, on the record before me, by the right understanding of the contract as evidenced upon the documents. Nothing is more important as regards all mercantile interests than that before legal liabilities should be attached to contracts, such contracts should be unambiguous and complete. You may spell out a contract from many documents, or from many shreds of many documents, but from whatever evidence the contract may be collected, such contract, when taken as a whole, should comprise within it all the elements which go to form a valid contract, and for that purpose be complete in itself.

The foundation of the claim of the chargeants rests mainly upon the fact whether there was such a contract between Stewart and the arranging Trader as to vest a beneficial ownership in the vessel, for which the goods were supplied, in the arranging Trader; and if so, whether the arranging Trader acquired any such beneficial ownership in that vessel prior to these goods being supplied by the chargeant, for which he claims a right to prove in this matter.

The treaty between Stewart and the arranging Trader about the vessel commenced upon the 8th of September, 1865, when Stewart wrote to the arranging trader, stating:—"If you wish I will go half with you in her purchase if the vessel can be obtained on reasonable terms." In a further portion of the same letter, after stating that she would be got for £900, he writes:—"I believe that I can get the payment—part cash and part bill—so that about £250 would be the cash each would want for the present.

That letter was followed by another from Stewart, dated September the 15th, in which he states:—"I have bought the Fanny to-day for £950, the lowest that would be taken;" (and further) "I shall be glad to hear from you as soon as possible, as I shall require to know my arrangements for cash matters. I can manage about £200 for you here, so if you do not care to provide more in money you could take a fourth share, and I can do this for you without asking any cash until the vessel earns it."

Thus far there was nothing but a proposal on the part of Stewart that the arranging Trader should take either a half share upon specified terms, namely, one-half of the purchase-money to be paid in cash, and the other half by the acceptance of the arranging Trader, or to take a fourth share, without the advance of any cash, in the brig "Fanny," which Stewart stated that he had already purchased.

The next letter which appears upon the evidence is a letter from the arranging Trader to Stewart, dated the 18th of September, 1865, in which he says:—"If you think well of it I will be able to take one half of the brig Fanny, same as the Royal William, and let both their earnings go together."

In that letter nothing is said as to the requirements, on the part of Stewart, that in the event of the arranging

Digitized by Google

Trader taking one half share in the vessel he (the Trader) must pay one half in cash, but contented himself with stating "that if Stewart thought well of it he would take one half share in the vessel."

Stewart perceiving that omission of an important portion of his proposal, wrote a further letter on September the 29th, stating:—"I should have replied to your last letter sooner, until seeing what arrangements I should make in paying for the Fanny."

(In a further portion) "I shall be very happy for you to take one half in her, and as I shall require to pay for her here on Tuesday I will want you to send me £235 in cash, and I enclose you my draft at three months for £237 14*s*. 3*d*., which please return accepted. This makes about a fourth bill and a fourth cash for you, which is as much as I can possibly manage. I have your bill, £200, to pay here on Monday, and when paid I shall be out of cash on your account between £300 and £400, and which the balance of freight and last voyage of Royal William and advance of freight will not square."

Thus far Stewart, as the sole purchaser of the vessel, would not accede to the arrangement of the arranging Trader becoming a purchaser in it, except upon very specific terms as to the payment or provision for the purchase money for that one half, and assigning reasons for these specific terms.

JUDGE MILLER having gone minutely into all the facts of the case, said that there was evidence sufficient in the case to show that there had not been a completed contract, and that the arranging trader had not any beneficial or other interest in the brig Fanny at the date at which the goods were supplied, and consequently that Stewart could not have acted as ship's husband of that vessel by the authority or for the benefit of the arranging Trader. I necessarily must disallow the claim of the Messrs. Spriggs, the chargeants; but inasmuch as the arranging Trader has not made this case by his discharge, but has further, in order to get out of what he apprehended would have been held to have been his contract, alleged that his acceptance for £237 14s. 3d. was for the accommodation of Stewart, which he must have known to have been altogether untrue, upon which he naturally supposed much would depend, I shall not give him any costs in this matter. I have the satisfaction, however, of feeling that I am not doing much injury to the Messrs. Spriggs, as upon the evidence of one member of the firm they had never heard of the arranging Trader in the transaction until the failure of Stewart in the month of May, 1866, and therefore could not have supplied the goods upon the personal security of the Trader.

Charge disallowed without costs.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Re SIMON MORAN.

May, 1867.—Remand for Seduction—Prison Allowance—Application under sec. 224.

Where an Insolvent is remanded for seduction, and there is an allowance to prisoners in the prison where the Insolvent is confined, the detaining creditor will not, under the 224 section, be called upon to pay the Insolvent anything.

The 224 section of the Irish Bankrupt and Insolvent Act provides that "where any prisoner, upon adjudication, shall be liable to further imprisonment at the suit of his creditors, or any of them, it shall be lawful at any time for the Court, on the application of such prisoner, to order the creditor, at whose suit he shall be imprisoned, to pay such sums or sum of money not exceeding four shillings a week in the whole, in such manner as the Court shall direct, and that on failure of payment thereof the Court shall order such prisoner to be forthwith discharged."

Coates, on the part of the insolvent, applied, under the foregoing section, for an order directing Hughes, the detaining creditor, to pay to the insolvent four shillings a week towards his support. His case was heard at the last October Sessions, when Mr. Levy was brought down to oppose him; and the chairman remanded him for two years. It appeared, upon the investigation of the case, that the insolvent was unable to pay for defending himself at the trial, and a verdict was, of course, had against him. He (Mr. Coates) did not want to go behind the verdict, or the remand, but he was prepared to show that the insolvent was in a state of destitution in the prison; his health was greatly impaired, and unless something was contributed to his support, it was probable death would be the result.

Levy for the detaining creditor.

JUDGE MILLER said in his opinion the application was wholly untenable. There was no precedent for an application like the present, where a man was remanded for two years for seduction, and in a prison where the usual prison allowance was given. The very fact of the remand and the cause of it were sufficient to take away any discretionary power given by the statute. It would be monstrous to call upon the detaining creditor to pay money towards the support of the insolvent.

Application refused.

ENGLAND.

THE DIGEST OF THE LAW.

The Commission on this subject have made the following "first" Report:—

"We, your Majesty's Commissioners appointed 'to inquire into the expediency of a Digest of law, and the best means of accomplishing that object, and of otherwise exhibiting in a compendious and accessible form the law as embodied in judicial decisions,' humbly submit to your Majesty this our first Report.

"1. By the term 'law,' as used in your Majesty's Commission, we understand the law of England, comprising the whole civil law, in whatever courts administered, the criminal law, the law relating to the constitution, jurisdiction, and procedure of courts (including the law of evidence), and constitutional law.

"In each of these divisions are comprised laws derived from three distinct sources.

"1. The first source is the common law, which consists of customs and principles handed down from remote times, and accepted from age to age, as furnishing rules of legal right.

"2. The second source is the statute law, which derives its authority from the Legislature.

"3. The third source is the law embodied in, and to a great extent created by, judicial decisions and dicta. These, indeed, as far as they have relation to the common law and statute law, are not so much a source of law as authoritative expositions of it; but, with respect to doctrines of equity and rules of procedure and evidence, they may often be regarded as an original source of law.

"That serious evils arise from the extent and variety of the materials from which the existing law has to be ascertained, must be obvious from the following considerations.

"The records of the common law are in general destitute of method, and exhibit the law only in a fragmentary form.

"The statute law is of great bulk. In the quarto edition in ordinary use, known as Ruffhead's, with its continuations, there are 45 volumes, although (particularly in the earlier period) a large quantity of matter is wholly omitted, or given in an abbreviated form, as having ceased to be in force. The contents of these volumes form one mass, without any systematic arrangement, the Acts being placed in merely chronological order, according to the date of enactment, in many cases the same Act containing provisions on heterogeneous subjects. A very large portion of what now stands printed at length has been repealed, or has expired, or otherwise ceased to be in force. There is no thorough severance of effective from non-effective enactments, nor does there exist in a complete form any authoritative index, or other guide by the aid of which they may be distinguished. Much, too, contributes to swell the statute-book, which is of a special or local character, and cannot be regarded as belonging to the general law of England.

"The judicial decisions and dicta are dispersed through upwards of 1,300 volumes, comprising, as we estimate, nearly 100,000 cases, exclusive of about 150 volumes of Irish Reports, which deal to a great extent with law common to England and Ireland. A large proportion of these cases are of no real value as sources or expositions of law at the present day. Many of them are obsolete; many have been made useless by subsequent statutes, by amendment of the law, repeal of the statutes on which the cases were decided, or otherwise; some have been reversed on appeal, or overruled in principle; some are inconsistent with or contradictory to others; many are limited to particular facts or special states of circumstances furnishing no general rule; and many do no more than put a meaning on mere singularities of expression in instruments (as wills, agreements, or local Acts of Parliament), or exhibit the application, in particular instances, of established rules of construction. A considerable number of the cases are reported many times over, in different publications, and there often exist (especially in earlier times) partial reports of the same case at different stages, involving much repetition. But all this matter remains encumbering the books of reports. The cases are not arranged on any system, and their number receives large yearly accessions, also necessarily destitute of order; so that the volumes constitute (to use the language of one of your Majesty's Commissioners) 'what can hardly be described, but may be denominated a great chaos of judicial legislation.'*

"At present the practitioner, in order to form an opinion on any point of law not of ordinary occurrence, is usually obliged to search out what rules of the common law, what statutes, and what judicial decisions bear upon the subject, and to endeavour to ascertain their combined effect. If, as frequently happens, the cases are numerous, this process is long and difficult; yet it must be performed by each practitioner for himself when the question arises, and in some cases after an interval of time it may have even to be repeated by the same person. Without treatises, which collect and comment on the law relating to particular subjects, it is difficult to conceive how the work of the legal profession and the administration of justice, which greatly depends on it, could be carried on; but however excellent such separate treatises may be, they do not give the aid and guidance that would be afforded by a complete exposition of the law in a uniform shape.

"A Digest, correctly framed, and revised from time to time, would go far to remedy the evils we have pointed out. It would bring the mass of the law within a moderate compass, and it would give order and method to the constituent parts.

"For a Digest (in the sense in which we understand the term to be used in your Majesty's Commission, and in which we use it in this Report) would be a condensed summary of the law as it exists, arranged in systematic order, under appropriate titles and sub-divisions, and divided into distinct articles or propositions, which would be supported by references to the sources of law whence they were severally derived, and might be illustrated by citations of the principal instances in which the rules stated had been discussed or applied.

"Such a Digest would, in our judgment, be highly beneficial.

"* Speech of the Lord Chancellor (Lord Westbury) on the Revision of the Law. House of Lords, June 12, 1863. Stevens and Norton. Page 8.

"It would be of especial value in the making, the administration, and the study of the law.

"When a necessity arises for legislation on any subject, one of the principal difficulties which those who are responsible for the framing of the measures have to encounter is to ascertain what is the existing law in all its bearings. The systematic exposition in the Digest of the law on the subject would enable the members of the Legislature generally, and not merely those who belong to the legal profession, to understand better the effect of the legislation proposed. And there would be this further benefit, that new laws, when made, would, on periodical revisions of the Digest, find their proper places in the system, and would not have to be sought for, as at present, in scattered enactments.

"The Digest would be of great use to every person engaged in the administration of the law. All those whose duties require them to decide legal questions in circumstances in which they have not access to large libraries or other ample sources of information would find in the Digest a ready and certain guide. Counsel advising would be spared much pains in searching for the law in indexes, reports, and text books; and judges would be greatly assisted as well in hearing cases as in preparing judgments.

"The Digest would be most advantageous in the study of the law; for it would put forth legal principles in a form in which they would be readily appreciated, contrasted, and committed to mind, and thus substitute the study of a system for the desultory contemplation of special subjects.

"It is not unreasonable to expect that this condensation and methodical arrangement of legal principles would have a salutary effect upon the law itself. It would give the ready means of considering, in connexion with one another, branches of the law which involve similar principles, though their subject matters may widely differ. It would thus bring to light analogies and differences, and, by inducing a more constant reference to general principles, in place of isolated decisions, have a tendency to beget the highest attributes of any legal system—simplicity and uniformity.

"The persons charged with the framing of the Digest might be also intrusted with the duty of pointing out, from time to time, the conflicts, anomalies, and doubts which in the course of their labours would appear. Thus the process of constructing the Digest would be conducive to valuable amendments of the law. Those amendments would be embodied in the Digest in their proper places.

"Moreover, such a Digest will be the best preparation for a Code, if at any future time codification of the law should be resolved on.

"But great as are the advantages to which we have referred as likely to flow from the formation of a Digest of law, the argument for it may, we think, be rested even on the higher ground of national duty. Your Majesty's subjects, in their relations towards each other, are expected to conform to the laws of the State, and are not held excused, on the plea of ignorance of the law, from the consequences of any wrongful act. It is in these laws that they must seek the provisions made for their liberty, for their privileges, for the protection of their persons and property, for their social wellbeing. It is, as we conceive, a duty of the State to take care that these laws shall, so far as is practicable, be exhibited in a form plain, compendious, and accessible, and calculated to bring home actual knowledge of the law to the greatest possible number of persons. The performance of this duty—a duty which other countries in ancient and modern times have held themselves bound to recognize and discharge—has, in this country, yet to be attempted.

"On these grounds we report to your Majesty our opinion that a Digest of law is expedient.

"II. Having arrived at this conclusion, we proceed to the consideration of the further enquiry which your Majesty has been pleased to entrust to us—namely, the best means of accomplishing a Digest of the law.

"It may be proper here to advert to what has recently been done in the State of New York. The laws of that State (as in other States also of the Union) rest generally, for their basis, on those of this country as they existed when the States declared their independence. Cases decided in our courts before that time are still regularly cited before

American tribunals, as they are in Westminster Hall; and, indeed, the reports of our courts, up to the present day, are largely cited and relied on in argument in American courts. The work which has been lately accomplished by the Commissioners for framing Codes for the State of New York is, in form, a series of Codes, laying down prospectively what the law is to be, two of which Codes have already received the sanction of the Legislature. But, as a preparatory step to the formation of these Codes, a complete collection, or what, after great examination, the Commissioners believed to be a complete collection, under appropriate heads, of the law on each subject, was formed by gentlemen employed for the purpose under the Commissioners.*

"We do not desire to conceal that the task of forming such a Digest as we contemplate would necessarily require a considerable expenditure of time and money, though we are strongly of opinion that the benefits that would result from it would amply compensate for any such expenditure.

"We think it clear that a work of this nature (regard being had especially to the importance of its carrying with it the greatest weight) could not be accomplished by private interprise, and that it must be executed by public authority and at the national expense.

"With respect to the means of accomplishing it we have considered various plans. Any plan, must, we think, involve the appointment of a Commission or body for executing or superintending the execution of the work. It is obvious that, whatever arrangement is adopted, a certain number of functionaries must be employed, at a high remuneration, in the capacity of Commissioners, assistant Commissioners, or secretaries, and that there must be a considerable expenditure on the services of members of the legal profession, employed from time to time in the preparation of the materials to be ultimately moulded into form by or under the immediate supervision of the Commission or responsible body.

"We are anxious to avoid any recommendation that would involve the necessity of immediate outlay on a large scale; and we, therefore, recommend that a portion of the Digest, sufficient in extent to be a fair specimen of the whole, should be, in the first instance, prepared before your Majesty's Government is committed to an expenditure which will be considerable, and which, when once begun, must continue for several years, if it is to be at all efficacious.

"We are not authorized, by the term of your Majesty's Commission, to undertake the execution or direction of such a work, but we are of opinion that it might be conveniently executed under our superintendence.

"If this should be your Majesty's pleasure, we humbly submit that the necessary powers should be conferred on us to enable us to carry this recommendation into effect, and that means should be furnished to us of employing adequate professional assistance for this purpose.

"In the progress of the work thus done light will be thrown on the question of the best organization of the body to be constituted for the completion of the Digest. A fair estimate will be formed of the time that will be required for the whole. Difficulties, not now foreseen in detail, will doubtless be encountered, and the best way to overcome them will be ascertained. The solution of questions which have already occurred to us will be attained, or at any rate promoted. Some of these questions are the following:—What is the best mode of dealing with statute law in the Digest? How should conflicting rules of law (if any) and doubts which have been authoritatively raised respecting particular cases or doctrines of law be treated? and what provision should be made on the important point of the nature and extent of the authority which the Digest should have in the courts, and how that authority can best be conferred on it?

"We propose, in this our first Report, to limit ourselves to the conclusions and recommendations we have now stated. The consideration of other questions arising from the terms of your Majesty's Commission, and a fuller treatment of some of the subjects here adverted to, we reserve for subsequent Reports.

"* Mr. David Dudley Field, to whose exertions the State of New York is mainly indebted for this important work, was so good as to attend one of our meetings, and to give us full information respecting the course which had been pursued.

"All which is humbly submitted to your Majesty's gracious consideration.

ADMIRALTY, DIVORCE, AND PROBATE COURT BILL.

(From The Times.)

The suitors in our Courts of Law and the public in general have reason to be satisfied that Lord Cranworth did not succeed in his opposition to the Lord Chancellor's Bill for constituting a Court of Admiralty, Probate, and Divorce, by the creation of two additional Judges. We are not prepared to say that the scheme of the Lord Chancellor is faultless, or that it will remove the necessity, which every day now increases, for strengthening the Common Law Courts by giving each of them a new Puisne Judge. But the Bill will, at least, allow one important department of the Law to be administered without delay and hindrance, and will give some relief to the over-worked Judges of Assize. It is, we think, only a beginning, and some of its provisions will have in future Sessions to be modified. But it is an important thing to make a beginning, and not an easy thing when, as is usually the case, the proposal of any one Law Lord is pretty sure to be met with a negative by some other of the number.

Our readers will be able to judge for themselves of the Ministerial scheme. Ten years ago the Probate and Divorce Courts were established, and a single Judge appointed to both. It was also enacted that on the office of Judge of the Admiralty becoming vacant the Judge of the Court of Probate should succeed; thus the three Courts would be united under the presidency of one Judge. This arrangement shows how little the Legislature understood the character of the change they were making. The establishment of the Divorce Court has been one of the greatest social revolutions of our time, and its importance, as measured by the number of suitors, is every day increasing. The causes in the Court of Probate are long, difficult, intricate, requiring patient hearing and mature consideration. Sometimes each of these Courts is detained for days by a single cause, the Probate Court especially being distinguished by its monster trials. The consequence is that the work has become far too much for a single man. These courts have been fortunate in the Judges who have presided in them. Sir C. Cresswell was a man not only of great learning but of a vigour, activity, and decision of judgment which enabled him to settle the practice of the new tribunals and to conduct the business with extraordinary success. Sir J. Wilde is making for himself an equal reputation. He is indeed, if anything, more prompt and energetic than his predecessor. But even before Sir C. Cresswell's death the work of the combined Courts taxed the strength of a single Judge, and now his successor may well contemplate the cause list with placid despair. The Lord Chancellor stated that there are at present 195 causes in arrear—30 in the Probate Court and 165 in the Divorce Court. By this time next year the number will probably have increased one-half. In short, there must be an additional Judge to aid in the work, or it must be left undone.

At the same time some provision must be made for the Admiralty Court. The present venerable Judge is said to be desirous of retiring, and to add the duties of that Court to those already performed by Sir J. Wilde would be manifestly absurd. Instead of appointing a new Judge exclusively for Admiralty business, the Lord Chancellor makes the reasonable proposal that the Admiralty jurisdiction shall be joined to those of Probate and Divorce, and that the Judges shall administer each of them in turn. He also proposes to create an additional Judge, and to raise the Chief of the combined Court to the rank of a Chief Justice. By this means not only would a full Court be formed for appeals, and the business transacted more regularly and satisfactorily than by the occasional help of a couple of Common Law Judges, but, as is thought, a Court and Bar would be constituted capable of treating with special knowledge questions which do not commonly come under the notice of Common Law practitioners. Whatever may be the value of this last consideration, we must admit that it is desirable to have more than one Judge conversant with such questions as would be brought before these combined Courts. The necessity, too, of strengthening the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is another argument in favour of the addition of one Judge to this branch of the Judicature. There need not be any fear that his time will be unemployed. If it prove that two Judges will be able to get through the business of the threefold Court during the greater part of the year, the third of them need not be idle a single day. The Privy Council is now notoriously short of Judges. A number of great judicial personages nominally belong to it, but their time is so fully employed in their own Courts that they cannot attend. Even the Lords Justices, who have hitherto been prominent members of it, will be compelled gradually to withdraw as Chancery appeals become more frequent. Thus against the establishment of this Civil Law Court, with its Chief Justice and its two Puisne Judges, we can see no valid argument. The work has to be done; it is proved that it cannot be done under the present arrangements, and to remedy the evil is the duty of the Legislature.

The part of the Chancellor's scheme which we think most open to criticism is that in which he proposes to send the Judges of this new Court on circuit—that is, to give them for a few weeks in the year a certain amount of Common Law work, civil and criminal, as an episode in their usual labours. It is easy to understand that this proposal should have met with objections among Common Lawyers who desire their own Courts to be strengthened by a direct addition of new Judges, and who do not look hopefully on this plan of borrowing. It certainly seems likely to produce inconvenience if the Judges who have tried causes in the country do not sit when those causes come on afterwards for discussion before the full Court, not to mention that the diversion of their attention to another branch of procedure during the greater part of the year may make them less conversant with the details of that which they would have to administer on circuit. We think it will be necessary in the end to make more Judges than our timid Law Reformers yet contemplate. We see nothing extravagant in the prospect of Lord Chelmsford's new Court co-existing with enlarged Common Law Courts; but we believe the relief that will be given to the latter by the present Bill will be so trifling that before another Session is past the question will be revised. The want of new Judges is not only felt on circuit—it delays and hinders business at all times of the year. Why there should be found people to speak of the "evil" of an increased number of Judges we cannot conceive. While population has increased, and every interest of the country has been magnified manifold; while the members of the Bar are nearly three times what they were in the memory of men not yet old, why should the number of the Judges remain fixed, as if there were something mysterious and ineffable about it? There need be no fear of the quality of the Judges deteriorating when an ever-increasing Bar gives more talent to choose from, and, in the opinion of those best qualified to judge, no economy in distribution or management will enable fifteen men to preside over all the legal business of this country. We accept the Chancellor's Bill, therefore, as but the precursor of a larger measure in some future Session, when, the evils of the present inadequate system having increased beyond endurance, the Lord Chancellor of the day will recognize that judicial establishments, like other institutions, must grow with the growth of nations.

THE LAW OF TREASON.

From The Times.

The recent proceedings of the Irish courts, and the fearful interest aroused by the question of life or death dependent upon them, have naturally turned attention to the existing law of high treason. Nothing is more curious than the history of this branch of our jurisprudence—nothing more illustrative of the fortuitous manner in which the English law has been created. Law reform seems somehow, in these latter days, to have gone out of fashion; but it is still worth while to point out the amount of amendment that is required before the provisions of English law can be brought into unison with common sense and sound reason. Before the reign of Edward III. treason was an offence of the vaguest possible nature. It is hardly too much to say that almost every offence against the law of a violent or public nature amounted, in the opinion of our old lawyers, to treason against the Crown. This license was first restricted in the reign of Edward III., but that statute was as much too narrow as the common law had been too wide. It restricted the offence in substance to attacks upon the life of the King, to violation of the principle of loyalty as distinguished from the principle of patriotism. The narrowness of this definition was widened by judicial construction, so that it has come to include offences not only against the person of the King, but against the civil government, and this extension of the law was formally added to the old definition of treason by an Act of Parliament passed in 1795, under the influence, no doubt, excited by the French Revolution. In 1848 the Treason-felony Act was passed, which, applying to the acts which under the statutes of 1795 were treason, convert them into felonies, punished at the utmost by penal servitude for life. So that we have existing at the same time in this country the Statute of Edward III., together with a forced judicial construction upon it; the Statute of 1795, which strives to reduce that construction to law, but cannot from the nature of the thing be identical with it; and the Statute of 1848, which, being identical in terms, differs from it in inflicting a milder punishment. But this is not all. There are many differences between the procedure in the case of treason and other crimes. The peremptory challenges allowed the prisoner to the number of thirty-five, the right to have a copy of the indictment and the names of the witnesses ten days before the trial, the requirement of two witnesses to prove the treason, are all safeguards the necessity and propriety of which have long ceased to exist. Every prisoner ought to have all the information that is necessary for the preparation of his defence, and no one ought to have more. Either, then, the law of treason requires too much, or the ordinary law requires too little. The difference between the two is indefensible. So with the number of witnesses. The modern theory of evidence is that the proof of a fact depends much more on the credibility than on the numbers of those who attest it. The time is long past when a trial for high treason was looked upon as a proceeding in which the prisoner was placed at any peculiar disadvantage, or liable to be crushed under the overpowering influence of the Crown; and this danger having become quite obsolete, any exceptional precaution against it must become obsolete also.

Then there is the sentence of treason, the most barbarous, the most grotesque, and the most impotent instrument that was ever devised by tyranny to terrify mankind into obedience. It seems incredible that until the year 1814 the law of this land should have been that every person convicted of treason should be hung, but not until he was dead; that he should be cut down alive, six turns of the rope being the usual period allowed; that his heart and bowels should be taken out and burnt before his face; that he should be beheaded and quartered, and his head and quarters exposed. The sentence now runs that the prisoner shall be hung till he is dead, that his head shall be stricken off, and his body quartered. The former was the sentence pronounced against Wallace, Sir Thomas More, Lord Essex, the Earl of Strafford, Lord Russell, Algernon Sidney, and the rebels of 1715 and 1745. A curious adjunct of it was the dispensing power of the Crown. It was the practice in the case of prisoners of superior rank for the King to pardon the criminal all the sentence except the beheading; and this practice is retained in modern days, it being usual to remit the quartering, though the beheading was retained in the cases of Brandreth, the Luddite leader, and the Cato-street conspirators.

Surely it is time that this barbarous anachronism should come to an end? So far from regarding them with greater detestation, and therefore requiring them to be punished with greater severity than other criminals, the feeling of the present day is peculiarly lenient to political offenders. It is probably not too much to say that the sentiment of mankind recoils from taking life, where life has not actually been taken. It may be that this feeling is carried too far, and that the attempt at a crime which in its success would involve much shedding of innocent blood is, in the eye of the moralist, at least as culpable as a single murder. But be this as it may, there is, at least, no doubt that no person desires a greater punishment for political offences than the forfeiture of life, and that any attempt to cast additional odium on a crime by making it the object of extra indignity or mutilation is as useless as it is barbarous. At the same time, to repeal altogether the old law of treason, which has played so conspicuous a part in history, might shock some prejudices. We do not suppose there are many who will argue in favour of these obsolete barbarities, like Sir Edward Coke, from such precedents as the hanging of Bigthan and Teresh, the chamberlains of King Ahasuerus; the drawing of Joab, or the disembowelling of Judas; but yet there might be difficulty in sweeping the law away altogether. What we would recommend, then, is to leave the law of treason in its present state, and to turn our attention solely to the law of treason-felony. A simple addition to the act, making treason-felony punishable with death, would effect all that is required. We should then have two complete systems, the old and the new—the latter for use, the former, if you please, for historical illustration; and, while adhering with all suitable reverence to the institutions of the Plantagenets and Tudors, we should be able to leave them to that repose which best suits their venerable antiquity. We should gain greatly by the change. The prisoner guilty of treason would be tried like any other culprit. No special technicalities would impede the course of justice, no arbitrary rule would obstruct the proofs. No barbarous and disgusting punishment would excite sympathy on behalf of a great criminal, or shock the feelings of a fastidious and sentimental age. It is seldom that so great an improvement can be made with so little trouble. Only strike out the words "transportation for life,"—a punishment already almost obsolete—and put instead "death," and the change is made. The principle upon which the body of a traitor is quartered would justify a reversal of all the humane legislation of all later times, and a return to the practice of torture or exposure, which the mildness of modern times repudiates. Let us put these relics of ancient barbarism into decent abeyance, and in this respect, at least, place a great gulf between ourselves and those who lived before us. Instead of striving to find punishments more dreadful than death, our ingenuity would be better directed in seeking some form of seclusion suited to the case of those whose offences have only just fallen short of the point at which that penalty should be inflicted. It is not fitting that such persons should be treated as mere temporary inmates of a prison. There would be more solemnity, more terror, and, perhaps, less inhumanity, were solitude, not solitary confinement, the immediate consequence of the sentence, and if the criminal were to disappear almost as completely from among his fellow-men as one already numbered with the dead.

(From The Solicitors' Journal).

We printed last week a long letter from a correspondent, complaining of the late decision of Vice-Chancellor Wood in Galloway v. The Mayor, &c., of the City of London, upon a question as to costs. The point is of much importance both to the public and the profession, and demands a notice in our columns.

The question before the Vice-Chancellor arose, it will be remembered, out of the following facts:—The solicitor to the city is paid by a fixed salary of £1,250 a year. He receives all fees, costs, &c., pays corresponding outgoings, and hands the balance to his employers, and, conversely, if the balance of such receipts and disbursements should be against them, the deficiency is made up to him. He is bound, moreover, to act for no other clients. The plaintiff in the above case filed a bill against the city, which was dismissed with costs; he now, upon the taxation of the defendants' costs, contended that, under the above circumstances, the defendants should, as against the plaintiff, be disallowed all costs except costs out of pocket, upon the ground that the arrangement between the city and their solicitor was one opposed to the enactments of the Attorneys and Solicitors' Acts, and to the general policy of the law. The Vice-Chancellor decided in favour of the defendants without hearing counsel in their behalf, saying that the fact of the solicitor's being bound to take no business from other clients was a sufficient answer to the defendants' contentions, and that the arrangement did not appear to him to be in opposition to the policy of the Act. Our correspondent finds fault with this decision; for our own part, although the question involves many considerations not easy to deal with, we do not see how the Vice-Chancellor could have decided otherwise.

The question may be viewed in two aspects; first, as affected by the Attorneys and Solicitors' Acts; and, second, with reference to the general policy of the law.

Now the Attorneys and Solicitors' Act (6 & 7 Vict., c. 73), especially the section 132, relied on for the plaintiff, was intended to prevent persons not properly qualified, by examination, admission, &c., to act as attorneys or solicitors, from undertaking the business of such officers of the Courts, and inasmuch as such persons might, and no doubt occasionally did, affect their purpose by acting through the agency of bona fide attorneys and solicitors, section 32 of the Act inflicted certain penalties upon any attorney or solicitor, knowingly acting, permitting his own name to be used, or generally doing anything to enable any unqualified person to practise in any respect as an attorney or solicitor. The object of this enactment, then, plainly was, to prevent the public from being damnified by their legal affairs being entrusted to the care of persons "unqualified," either as to education or character, for undertaking their conduct, and this will be more clearly seen if section 32 of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, be compared with section 11 of 22 Geo. II., c. 46, of which it is a substantial re-enactment. It is plain, then, that the case of an individual (it is immaterial whether corporate or otherwise), who agrees with a solicitor to act for him, and for no one else, at a fixed salary, does not involve the mischief at which the statute was aimed. The employer cannot be said to be virtually practising as a solicitor "to the great loss and prejudice of many of his Majesty's subjects, and the scandal of the profession of the law." If a speculator were to farm a solicitor's practice by the year, paying a fixed rental, and receiving the net profits, that would be a very different pair of shoes. It does not follow, however, that in no case can a layman properly receive an annual proportion of a solicitor's profits. Suppose a solicitor in good practice dies, leaving the goodwill of his business to his son, charged with an annual payment to his widow of one-third of the net profits, would our correspondent contend that, upon the taxation of a bill of costs of the son's, a party to the suit might claim to have disallowed such proportion of the profits on that bill as would go into the widow's pocket? And yet his argument would carry the contention so far.

Upon the second head, the general policy of the law, with regard to attorneys and solicitors, we are alive, as the reader will probably have gleaned from previous remarks of ours, to the objections which are to be advanced against "Salaried Solicitors," but we think, nevertheless, that the Vice-Chancellor rightly took into his consideration the fact that the City Solicitor is bound not to act for other clients.

Put in another form, the contention of the plaintiff in Galloway v. The Mayor, &c., of London, amounts to this, he says to the defendants, "I have filed a bill against you and failed, and I admit that I have thus rendered myself liable to reimburse you the charges to which I have put you—in technical words, to pay your costs. But I contend that I am only bound to pay you what my unsuccessful suit has actually cost you, and therefore since in consequence of your arrangement with your solicitor, you get your solicitor's work done cheaper than other people, the difference must remain in my pocket." In reply to this it is to be observed that such principles of natural equity are not, and could not well be, applied to the practical machinery of litigation, and in the second place it may be said that the arrangement which the defendant makes with his solicitor is nothing to the plaintiff. In Gordon v. Dalzell, 15 Beav. 351, Gordon employed Fraser, a writer to the signet, as his law agent in Scotland. Fraser employed Poole, an English solicitor, to act as Gordon's solicitor in matters pending in England, and this retainer was sanctioned by Gordon. While the taxation of Poole's bills of costs was pending, Gordon presented a petition, stating that he had discovered that by an illegal agreement with Fraser, Poole had agreed to allow Fraser half the profits made by him (Poole) out of Gordon's business, and praying that, on the taxation of costs, Poole might be allowed to receive only so much as he would have been entitled to receive had Fraser been in actual partnership with him, and that the profits which, under the agreement, Fraser was to receive, might be disallowed. The Master of the Rolls dismissed the petition with costs, saying that if the agreement between Poole and Fraser were legal, Gordon being no party to it could not profit by it; and, if illegal, there was no fraud on Gordon, because Poole could charge no more than he could be legally entitled to, if he had entered into agreement with Fraser. This case is not irrelevant to the one under discussion.

With respect to the second subject touched upon by our correspondent, and discussed in his second letter, which we print to-day:—It does not appear to us to be a matter of very much importance whether leases or conveyances are drawn by a vendor's or vendee's solicitor. We all know what the custom, or rather the etiquette, is in such cases, and it is quite as well to adhere to such a custom, but the origin of the custom appears to us to involve no very important principle. In the case of a public body, however, whose conveyancing is done by the year for a fixed salary, it is certainly to be regretted that such a body should endeavour, by binding those with whom they contract to employ their solicitor—to secure to themselves conveyancing profits.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY (ENGLAND).

(Before Mr. Commissioner WINSLOW.)

May 30.—IN RE J. O. LEVER.

Mr. J. Linklater appeared for the assignees; and Mr. Doria for a creditor.

Mr. John Orrel Lever, who was formerly M.P. for Galway, but who is now described as of 114, Cannon-street, general agent, came up for examination and discharge.

The bankrupt, in answer to Mr. Linklater stated that he had deposited with the Rev. Peter Daly a sum of £3,000 for the purpose of building a cotton mill, but he denied that Mr. Daly now owed him anything.

Mr. Doria, who appeared for Mr. Michael Morris, M.P., a judgment creditor for £580, the costs of an unsuccessful petition presented by the bankrupt against his return for Galway, asked for further accounts.

Mr. Commissioner Winslow inquired whether there was any chance of the estimated surplus of £47,971 being realized.

Mr. Linklater said the assignees had no such hope; at present a sum of about £300 only had been received.

The bankrupt insisted that his property was ample for payment of all claims upon him; he said that he was one of the greatest political victims in England, and no one knew that better than Mr. Edwards, the official assignee. (A laugh).

His Honour, after considerable discussion, directed the bankrupt to file additional accounts of his receipts and payments.

CIVIL SERVICE COLLEGE, LONDON.—A public meeting has been held at the Geological Museum, Jermyn-street, for the purpose of inaugurating a College which it is proposed to erect within a convenient distance from London for the education of the sons of Civil servants. The College is intended to supply a want very generally felt among the members of the Civil Service, who think the time has arrived when they should provide themselves with some distinctive educational institution, such as the army, the navy, and other professions already possess. The establishment of the Civil Service Commission and the adoption of a system of examination for appointments in the public service have given an educational status to the civil servants of the Crown, and rendered them more than ever anxious that their sons should be fitted by a good education for success in professional life, and qualified to compete successfully for junior appointments in the various public departments. The aim of the projected college will be to accomplish this object and afford the best possible education on the most reasonable terms. It is estimated that for a payment of £45 per annum for board and instruction, civil servants, many of whom receive but moderate incomes, would secure for their sons an education far superior to any which is obtainable elsewhere for so low a sum. Contributions towards the building fund are invited from other quarters besides the profession immediately concerned; but it is intended that the institution shall be self-supporting. The sons of gentlemen unconnected with the Civil Service are to be admitted to the college at a somewhat increased charge. It is calculated that the erection and furnishing of a suitable building, with accommodation for 500 scholars, would cost £40,000; but operations might be commenced as soon as funds have been raised for the construction of a building adapted for 200 scholars, and capable of future extension. The meeting called together in furtherance of this undertaking was well attended by members of the various public departments. Lord Russell presided, and was supported by Lord Granville, Lord Shaftesbury, the Bishop of Oxford, Mr. Milner Gibson, M.P., Mr. Cave, M.P., Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., Sir Roderick Murchison, Sir E. Ryan, and others. Letters of apology for non-attendance were received from the Duke of Marlborough, Lord Stanley, Lord J. Manners, Sir S. Northcote, and other members of the Legislature, official and unofficial, as well as from Sir Charles Trevelyan, who wrote strongly of the improvement which had taken place in the Civil Service since his first connexion with it, and which he thought found its crowning evidence in the work set on foot that day. The meeting was addressed by Lord Russell and the other leading noblemen and gentlemen present, who eloquently advocated the undertaking, and warmly eulogized the high honour, indefatigable industry, extensive information, and great practical ability of the permanent civil servants of the Crown. Lord Russell and Lord Granville especially bore emphatic testimony to the invaluable assistance afforded by those gentlemen to the responsible heads of their respective departments, to whom they very often furnished all the materials for guiding their judgment on public questions, and, without the excitement of Parliamentary debate or any of the rewards of Parliamentary distinction, enabled their chiefs to earn those rewards. A series of resolutions were unanimously adopted, affirming the expediency of establishing a school for the purposes already described, to be called the Civil Service College, and of which Lord Russell should be the President. Two lists of distinguished names, the one composed of the Vice-Presidents and the other of the provisional committee of the projected institution, were afterwards submitted to the meeting and accepted with acclamation; and the latter body was empowered to take all the requisite steps for collecting funds, and otherwise promoting the undertaking. A cordial expression of thanks to the noble chairman concluded the proceedings.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, JUNE 8, 1867.

A CASE of no ordinary importance with reference to the powers of the Landed Estates' Court to recall its conveyances, for the purpose of cancellation or amendment, has just been decided by the Court of Chancery Appeal. This decision, of which a note is given in our reports of this day, reverses two orders made by Judge Dobbs on the 23rd of November, 1866, and 30th of January, 1867. Since the celebrated case of Rorke v. Errington was decided on appeal by the House of Lords, the public and the legal profession in general have placed the most implicit faith in the security of the titles conferred by the Incumbered and Landed Estates' Courts. In that case Rorke held a lease of part of the estate sold, and the existence and validity of his lease was distinctly recognized in the rental prepared and issued by the Commissioners, and the proper notices were given in conformity with the rental. Errington became the purchaser of part of the estate, and in the conveyance to him there was, by mistake, introduced a description, accompanied by a map (also erroneously drawn) of the land conveyed, which was the land actually held under the lease to Rorke, but that lease itself was not mentioned. The House of Lords, affirming the decision of the Exchequer Chamber, held that under the 27th section of the Act the land must be taken to have passed by the conveyance, subject only to such leases "as were expressed therein," and that the 49th section rendered the conveyance conclusive as to all acts, consents, &c., required, having been duly performed and given (7th House of Lords' Cases 617). Both before and since Rorke v. Errington was decided, there have been decisions in the Incumbered and Landed Estates' Courts, and the dicta of eminent judges which have (to say the least) produced an impression amongst some of the Judges of those Courts that they had control over its conveyances so as to cancel or amend them in cases of mere mistake, unaccompanied by fraud or misconduct.

It is now highly satisfactory to the Judges of the Landed Estates' Court to have all doubts on this important subject removed by the decision of the Court of Appeal, and the public confidence in Parliamentary titles confirmed by the authority of the great Judges who now constitute that Court. We believe there can be no doubt that the decision is correct; but it would have lost none of its force had it been unaccompanied by observations which were certainly not calculated to add anything to the dignity either of the Court itself or the tribunal, whose decision it was reviewing.

The facts of the present case, so far as they are necessary to be stated, were shortly these:—On the 5th of July, 1866, certain household property in this city was set up for sale in two lots. A Mr. Redmond purchased Lot No. 1, of which he was lessee. A Mr. Wrenn purchased Lot No. 2, and obtained his conveyance on the 28th of July. It appeared that Mr. Redmond was also a sub-lessee of part of Lot 2; but his sub-lease was not set out on the rental, nor referred to in the conveyance to Mr. Wrenn, which described the premises as in the rental. Mr. Redmond believed that he had purchased all the premises of which he was tenant, and on discovering that portion of them were included in Mr. Wrenn's conveyance, he applied to Judge Dobbs for an order that the purchaser should bring in his conveyance to have it amended and the mistake rectified. It was admitted that the purchaser of Lot 2 was an utter stranger to the proceedings in the Court, and that there was no fraud or mistake on his part, and that the mistake, which undoubtedly occurred, was either the mistake of the Court, or of the party having the carriage of the sale.

There were two questions raised for the consideration of the Court of Appeal:—First, Whether the Landed Estates' Court had jurisdiction to recall and amend the conveyance; next, Whether, even assuming it had such jurisdiction, the Judge had not gone too far, when he called on the purchaser to convey the whole interest in the premises to Mr. Redmond, the sub-lessee.

The first question, with which alone we are concerned, turned upon the effect to be given to a conveyance executed by a Judge of the Landed Estates' Court, under the 61st and 85th sections of the 21 & 22 Vic., cap. 72; and the Court were of opinion that such a conveyance attracts the operation of the 61st section, and draws out of the owner and every other person in the community, the whole interest conveyed, and vests it in the purchaser, subject only to what is expressed on the face of the conveyance: that in aid of this section the 85th section declares that every conveyance executed as required by the statute, shall, for all purposes, be conclusive evidence that every application, proceeding, consent, and act whatsoever, which ought to have been made, given, and done previously to the execution of such conveyance, had been made, given, and done by the persons authorized to make, give, and do the same; that this was what was consummated on the 28th of July, 1866, when Mr. Wrenn obtained his conveyance from the Landed Estates' Court.

It was contended at the Bar that, by analogy to the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, the Landed Estates' Court had power to recall its conveyance for the purpose of rectifying an error. That under the 31st sec. of the 21 and 22 Vic., cap. 72, the Landed Estates' Court is invested with all the powers of a Court of Equity, and a plenary suit being unknown in that court, that the Judge could exercise this jurisdiction on a summary motion. In answer to this argument the Appeal Court held that there was no case to be found in which a Court of Equity had exercised this jurisdiction, where there was neither fraud or mutual mistake; that, besides, the 85th section ousted the jurisdiction of the Landed Estates' Court, as well as that of the Court of Chancery, and precluded the possibility of taking objection to anything, either in the conveyance or lying behind it. To meet this it was argued that the conveyance is conclusive only so long as it stands. To this argument the Lord Justice replied—"That is to say, the conveyance may be impeached by the allegation of those things, of the non-existence of which the conveyance itself is made conclusive."

In reversing the decision of the Court below, the Court of Appeal were of opinion that they were not interfering with any authority which was worthy of respect, and disclaimed paying the slightest attention to the cases cited as authorities in support of the order of Judge Dobbs, except the dictum of Judge Hargreave in re Collis. In that case, which is reported in 14 Ir. Chan. Rep., 411, the petitioners became the purchasers. The map to the conveyance included a plot of land alleged to have belonged to an adjoining owner, and an application was made to the Court to compel the purchasers to reconvey it. The Court held that as the circumstances of the case negatived the presumption of misconduct on the part of the purchasers or their solicitor, arising from mistake, it had no jurisdiction to direct a reconveyance. It appears that there had been an old and continued dispute about this piece of land between the adjoining proprietors, and the Judge says that he was not satisfied that any conveyance had been made in excess of the owner's title, and the circumstances of the case negatived misconduct on the part of the petitioners or their solicitor. In stating the principles to be collected from an unreported case (re Langley) used on the argument, Judge Hargreave thus enunciates the dictum referred to by the Appeal Court:—"That if by any fraud, negligence, or other misconduct of the party having the carriage of the sale, he procures the Court to sell and convey to him property which ought not to have been sold or conveyed, the Court has jurisdiction to compel him to reconvey if the property remains in his hands, and make good the loss by pecuniary compensation if the property has passed from him into the hands of a purchaser for value. And if it is made clear that a mistake has been made, the Court will presume misconduct, unless and until the contrary be proved."

In the present case it will be seen that the purchaser does not come within this rule. Mr. Wrenn was a total stranger, and irresponsible for any mistake that had been committed.

Another case referred to was "In re Vesey's Estate," which is reported ex relatione in 1st Ir. Jur., N. S. 66. In this case the lands sold comprised a field which had been held by the Ordnance Department under an agreement dated the 24th December, 1844, for one year, with a provision that at the expiration of the year they might hold the field for such further time as they might require it. This agreement was set out in terms on the rental. After the sale took place, the purchaser discovered a document, dated the 9th of December, 1854, by which a Receiver, who had been appointed over these lands, offered to let the field in question to the Ordnance Department for one year, ending the 22nd December, 1855. The purchaser informed the solicitor having the carriage of the sale of this document, and demanded to have the conveyance made to him discharged of any title of the Ordnance after the 22nd December, 1855, and then went before Mr. Commissioner Longfield to settle the deed, and showed him the proposal. The draft deed did not contain any allusion to the article of the 24th December, 1844, and the Commissioner altered the draft by stating that the tenancy of the Ordnance was for one year, which would determine on the 22nd December, 1855. On motion on behalf of the Secretary of War that the purchaser should bring in his deed to have it amended by stating the agreement of 1844, the Court held that it had power to recall the deed for the purpose of correcting any error in it occasioned by mistake, or fraud on the Court. Baron Richards, C.C., in giving judgment, says "that the Court had full jurisdiction to amend the conveyance in any matter arising from mistake or fraud."

This language would seem to give ground for the decision of Judge Dobbs, that in any matter arising from mistake the Court had jurisdiction to recall and amend its conveyance. However, on looking to the facts, the distinction between that case and the present is obvious. The mistake was occasioned by the act (not to say the misconduct) of the purchaser in suppressing the agreement of 1844. In the present case the purchaser was perfectly innocent of the mistake. The case of Lock and Ashe (4 Ir. Jur., 180), was also relied on. In that case certain lands had been sold in the Incumbered Estates' Court, and the tenant's interest was stated to be for the lives of three persons, all of whom were supposed to be dead; and in the rental this lot was described as being held by a tenant from year to year. A receiver had been appointed over the tenants' interest—and in fact two of the lives were still subsisting. The lands were sold discharged of the lease, and the purchaser applied at the Rolls to have the receiver discharged, which the late Master of the Rolls refused to do; and in giving judgment he observed:—"This is a most important case, and shows clearly the alarming power vested in that Court. Were I the Commissioner who sold this property I have little hesitation in saying that I would, under the circumstances, order the conveyance to be re-lodged, for the purpose of having the lease, which was lodged in Court for the purposes of the sale, and mentioned in the rental prepared for the sale, set out on the schedule to the conveyance." This opinion, coming from a Judge so eminent as the late Master of the Rolls, is entitled to some weight, and may have influenced the judgment of Judge Dobbs, if he had any doubt on the question upon the authority of the cases above referred to, and of other unreported cases to the same effect decided in the Incumbered Estates' Court. It is, however, satisfactory to have all doubt now removed by the Court of Appeal, and the public may still confidently rely on the security of a Parliamentary title. Petitioners, however, and other persons in privity with the proceedings, and their solicitors, must be cautious about knowingly doing any act likely to be productive of mistake; as, if they became purchasers, their conveyance is liable to be challenged upon the grounds, not merely of fraud or misconduct, but, as it would appear from the dictum of Judge Hargreave, on the grounds of a mistake, from which the Court will presume misconduct, unless the person making or causing such mistake can establish the contrary.

A LARGE and influential meeting of the Sessions Practitioners in Ireland was held yesterday, in the Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts. We give elsewhere a detailed report of the proceedings, which will, we trust, eventually lead to many desirable reforms of the practice and procedure of the County Courts of Ireland, the importance of which, to the public, cannot be too highly estimated. As many country practitioners must have been unable to attend the meeting, we will with pleasure give publicity to any suggestions they may wish to make on this important subject.

CURRENT TOPICS.

ATTORNEYS' CERTIFICATE DUTY.

In our report of Parliamentary proceedings will be found the result of the adjourned debate upon the second reading of this Bill.

An attempt was, of course, made by the supporters of the Government to get rid of any discussion upon the subject, and quietly to shelve the Bill by having recourse to those Parliamentary tactics of which we have had some remarkable instances lately.

Not having succeeded in this attempt, the second reading of the Bill was agreed to, but upon condition that the discussion on the principle of the Bill should take place on the motion for going into Committee.

The result of the divisions is exceedingly gratifying, taking place, as they did, in a thin house, and when many of the supporters of the Bill had left; and although the effect of the second reading being carried in the way it was, is merely to postpone the debate upon the Bill until Committee, we trust that on the 25th, for which day the Committee is fixed, the supporters of the measure will rally in sufficient numbers to insure its success. In the meantime, as the final struggle (for this Session at least) will then take place, no efforts should be spared to induce those who have promised support to attend on that occasion.

Messrs. ARTHUR MOLLOY and HENRY WATSON, of No. 18, Eustace-street, have been appointed Commissioners for taking affidavits for the Court of Chancery and Court of Probate in England, and the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster.

MEETING OF QUARTER SESSIONS ATTORNEYS.

A meeting of the quarter sessions practitioners of Ireland was held yesterday in the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, for the purpose of considering the present civil bill acts with a view to have same amended.

Amongst those present were—Messrs. William Martin, Solicitor, Donegal Grand Jury; G. Proctor, Sessional Crown Solicitor, Londonderry; John W. Bourke, Hon. Sec. Cork Law Society; J. F. Goodman, Meath; Denis Leonard, Banbridge; George Cochrane, Armagh; Cecil Moore, Crown Solicitor, Tyrone; Edward Lord, Sessional Crown Solicitor, Kildare; Edward M'Gauran, Cavan; John P. Saunders, Dublin; Thomas Turpin, Maryborough; Robert Burkitt, Wicklow; Thomas Craig, Portarlington; John Thomas Craig, Portarlington; John Rea, Belfast; John F. Cullinane, Sessional Crown Solicitor, Clare; Joseph Howard, Secretary Waterford Law Society.

On the motion of Mr. John W. Bourke, seconded by Mr. Howard, the chair was taken by JOHN T. HINDS, Esq.

Mr. George Proctor was requested to act as hon. secretary to the meeting.

Mr. Proctor, having read the advertisement convening the meeting, read a circular which he addressed, as secretary of the Londonderry Law Society, to the sessional crown solicitors of Ireland, informing them that a meeting of the attorneys and solicitors of the city and county of Londonderry, was held in the courthouse, Londonderry, on the 28th of March last, and that they adopted a resolution in reference to holding this meeting, and requesting them to give as much publicity as possible to the matter, so that the profession might be fully represented at it. Mr. Proctor read replies to those circulars which he received from practising solicitors in different parts of Ireland. He then referred to the meeting of attorneys and solicitors which was held in the courthouse, Londonderry, and said that at that meeting they had adopted a number of suggestions which they intended to submit to their brother practitioners, and to have printed for distribution throughout the profession in Ireland. Mr. Proctor here read the suggestions, which were submitted for consideration to the committee appointed for that purpose at this meeting. He complained that the remuneration for the services of practising solicitors in Ireland should be so small as compared with that allowed to solicitors practising in the English county courts. In England attorneys were paid £1 1s. for the same work for which an attorney in Ireland got 2s. 6d. Very lately in London a practitioner was hauled up for taking a fee of 2s. 6d., because it was deemed that his doing such a thing rendered him a disgrace to the profession. He read of this in one of the law journals, and the writer appeared to be entirely ignorant of the fact that if an attorney in Ireland took more than 2s. 6d. as his fee, on obtaining a decree under £10, he would be liable to be prosecuted. He thought that the profession in Ireland should be placed on the same footing as the profession in England as to fees and compensation for their labours.

Mr. John Walter Bourke, of Cork, said he was deputed by the Cork Law Society to attend this meeting, in order that they might give the present movement their most active co-operation. They had already received from several solicitors in the county Cork communications to the effect that they considered the several civil bill acts required amendment, and they were particularly glad that a matter so important to their profession should be taken in hand by a gentleman of such ability and experience as Mr. Proctor, of Londonderry (hear, hear). He thought that they should all feel indebted to Mr. Proctor, who had so actively and intelligently forwarded the movement. He (Mr. Bourke) had great pleasure in proposing the following resolution :—

"That the sessional practitioners of Ireland request the co-operation of the council of the Incorporated Law Society for the purpose of taking into consideration the suggestion in the form of a report which shall be hereafter prepared for the amendment of the Civil Bill Acts, and that the following committee, with power to add to their number, be requested to act in Dublin, on behalf of the civil bill practitioners of Ireland, to consider the amendments necessary in order to have an act of Parliament in conformity with our views taken up by the law officers of the crown and passed into law :—The chairman, Mr. J. T. Hinds; Mr. Charles Fitzgerald, Dublin; Mr. Proctor, Mr. Goodman, Mr. George Tyrrell, Mr. Turpin, Mr. Howard, Mr. Cecil Moore, Mr. Wm. Martin, Mr. Cullinane, Mr. Burkett, Mr. M'Govern, Mr. J. W. Bourke, Mr. John Barnett, and Mr. Proctor, hon. sec."

Mr. Howard, Secretary of the Waterford Law Society, seconded the resolution.

The Chairman, in putting the resolution, said that while they approved of the principle advocated in the suggestions adopted at the meeting of the members of their profession in Londonderry, it should not be understood that those suggestions were adopted by this meeting, because, while they should all feel under a sense of obligation to Mr. Proctor for what he had done in forwarding this movement, those suggestions as to enlarging the jurisdiction of the county courts for the trial of actions of slander, libel, and crim. con. were very important, and required matured consideration.

The resolution was then put and carried.

Mr. Goodman expressed his confidence in the success of this movement, which he knew met with the cordial approval of a great number of the chairmen of counties in Ireland, when this subject was lately discussed in the columns of the "IRISH LAW TIMES," several of the chairmen expressed to him their willingness to co-operate in procuring any desirable measure of reform. As a member of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, he could assure the meeting that the sessional practitioners might rely on the support of that society in all matters tending to the benefit of the Profession generally. Mr. Hinds had already brought a bill before the Incorporated Law Society, which went to the effect of giving equitable jurisdiction in case of partnership accounts to assistant barristers. That was a matter respecting which there was no difference of opinion. That bill was supported by the Incorporated Law Society, and Mr. Morris, who was Attorney-General at the time, undertook to get it passed through Parliament. The Londonderry Law Society was of opinion it was better not to go on with it without including in it some other changes. It was accordingly not pressed on. Any bill of the kind for the benefit of the Profession would be cordially supported by the Incorporated Law Society.

Mr. Cecil Moore complained that there should be any difference in the effect of a judgment of the superior courts and a civil bill decree; it was now agreed that the late Sheriffs' Act was a complete failure, and said that the consequence was that persons were obliged to resort to the superior courts in actions respecting the sale of growing crops, sales of interest in land, &c.

Mr. John Rea said he thought it would be well for the committee to consider whether it would not be advisable to have the County Courts Act in force in England extended to Ireland, and it should be done, he thought, unless there was absolute reason for not doing it. He did not find much difference between that part of Ireland in which he lived and any part of England, and, therefore, he did not see why there should be a system for Ireland different from the one in operation in England. An attorney in Ireland was just as liable to an action at the suit of his client as if he were resident in Scotland or in England. He said that sometimes a great deal of inconvenience was caused by the chairmen of counties being in a great hurry to get up to Dublin. There was a great amount of grumbling in consequence of this, although the public did not hear of it, because a practitioner had no means of bringing the matter before them unless he chose to make the chairman of his county an enemy for life. Chairmen in England on their appointment were obliged to retire from practice, and he was at a loss to understand why they should get a salary so much larger than chairmen in Ireland, because the barristers appointed to the office of chairman in Ireland were gentlemen of as high standing in their profession as any in England; but the chairmen of Ireland ought to receive larger salaries and be relieved from practice in the courts, otherwise they will be anxious to hurry through their business and return to Dublin.

Mr. Rea then remarked that this meeting truly represented the profession of attorneys and solicitors in Ireland, and he felt that he was only speaking of a matter of which they all had to complain when he said that they were often placed in an embarrassing position towards prisoners whom they were employed to defend, when, after having exhausted all the evidence in the case, they were not permitted to address the jury on behalf of their clients. Many prisoners who were sent for trial to the assizes were unable to pay the expenses of fees and briefs to counsel, and when the business of defending them fell on the solicitors they were not permitted to address the jury, and they were therefore deprived of the most important power of defence. Mr. Rea concluded by moving the following resolution :—

"That it be an instruction to the committee to take steps to procure for prisoners hereafter to be tried at assizes, who may insist upon having themselves defended by attorney only, the same privileges as if defended by counsel and attorney together."

Mr. Proctor seconded the resolution, and concurred in the observations made by Mr. Rea as to the power of defence of which prisoners were deprived by their attorneys not being permitted to address juries in their behalf. He mentioned some cases in which he himself found that it would have been of the utmost importance to his clients that he was permitted to address juries on their behalf.

The resolution was then carried.

Mr. Ellis made some observations in which he called on Irish members to support the movement for the abolition of the annual certificate duty.

Mr. Rea proposed the following resolution :—

"That we request the general practitioners of Ireland forthwith to convene local meetings of the profession in each county, borough, or division thereof, for the purpose of taking the most effective possible steps to support the Incorporated Law Society in their efforts to have the annual certificate duty abolished this year; and we request the practitioners to have regard to the fact that the bill, which has passed the second reading, will be lost or carried on the 25th June instant.

Mr. Cecil Moore seconded the resolution, which was adopted

Mr. John W. Bourke having been moved to the second chair, a vote of thanks was passed to the previous chairman, after which the proceedings terminated.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday, May 31.

ATTORNEYS' CERTIFICATE DUTY BILL.

On the resumption of the adjourned debate on the second reading of this Bill, moved by Mr. Denman,

Mr. Bentinck moved as an amendment that it be read a second time that day six months.

Mr. Denman said he should be a coward if he withdrew the Bill, which he believed to be a just one, because it had been insinuated that he was actuated by unworthy motives, as a member of the legal profession, in introducing it.

The House divided, when there appeared—

For the amendment, - - 41
Against it, - - - 48——7 Majority.

On the question that the Bill be read a second time,

Lord Galway moved the adjournment of the House.

The House divided, the numbers were—

For adjournment, - - 40
Against it, - - - 45——5 Majority.

Mr. Lowther moved that the debate do now adjourn.

After some discussion the motion was withdrawn, and the Bill was read a second time, on the understanding that its expediency might be discussed on the motion for going into Committee, which was fixed for Monday, June 3rd.

Monday, June 3.

Courts of Law Officers (Ireland) Bill.—Considered in Committee and reported; ordered to be printed as amended; recommitted for Monday, 17th June instant.

Attorneys' Certificate Duty Bill.—Committee deferred till Tuesday, 25th June instant.

COURT OF CHANCERY (IRELAND) BILL.

The House went into committee on this Bill.

On clause 42, as to the appointment of Masters' Registrars,

Mr. Cogan urged the postponement of the Bill. Several Irish members who had notices of amendments on the paper were engaged in public duty elsewhere.

The Attorney-General for Ireland was not aware of any public business in which Irish members were engaged elsewhere to prevent their attendance in the House; and he was sorry he could not accede to the proposal.

Mr. Cogan then moved that the Chairman report progress.

The Committee divided, and there voted—

For reporting progress, - 36
Against it, - - 103——67 Majority,

Clause 42 was agreed to with amendments.

On clause 196, viz. :—" It shall be lawful for the party or parties in any suit, who shall be ordered to invest any money in the purchase of stocks, funds, or annuities, transferable at the Bank of Ireland, or to transfer for sale, or otherwise, any of the said stocks, funds, or annuities, to employ any one of the licensed stockbrokers, being a member of the Stock Exchange in Dublin, to make such investment and transfer."

The Attorney-General for Ireland moved the omission of the clause, it being the opinion of the late Lord Chancellor of Ireland, the present Lord Chancellor, and the Master of the Rolls, that the existing practice, according to which six gentlemen acted as brokers for the transaction of business connected with the court, should be continued.

Mr. O'Beirne observed that at present parties ordered to invest placed their money at the Bank of Ireland in the name of one of the six stockbrokers, and had no security for it until it was transferred to the name of the Accountant-General.

After a brief discussion, in which Mr. Cogan, Sir R. Palmer, and Sir P. O'Brien took part,

Mr. Esmonde moved that the Chairman report progress.

The Committee divided, when there appeared—

For reporting progress, - 18
Against, - - - 89——71 Majority,

Sir P. O'Brien moved that the Chairman leave the chair.

The Committee divided, when there appeared—

For the motion, - - 14
Against, - - - 91——77 Majority,

After some further conversation,

Captain Stacpoole moved that the Chairman do report progress.

A lengthened and somewhat heated discussion ensued, several of the Irish Members on the Opposition benches persisting in their demands that the further progress of the measure should be postponed till after Whitsuntide—a view, however, which was not shared by Sir R. Palmer, Mr. Childers, Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Whalley, or other members on their own side of the House, who held that the objections raised involved no point of principle, and recommended that the particular stage should be agreed to, opportunity for discussion of all necessary points presenting itself hereafter upon the report.

At half-past one o'clock, however, the Committee divided on the motion to report progress. The numbers were—

For the motion, - - 12
Against it, - - - 80——68 Majority.

Digitized by Google

Mr. HERBERT moved that the Chairman leave the chair.

The Committee divided; the numbers were—

For the motion, - - 13
Against it, - - 80——67 Majority,

Mr. DE LA POER then moved that the Chairman report progress.

Mr. CHILDERS suggested that the clause should stand, and that when the report was brought up the Attorney-General for Ireland could move its omission, and those who objected to it could move accordingly.

This suggestion was acted on; the motion to report progress was withdrawn, the clause was agreed to, and the Bill passed through Committee.

NOTICE OF MOTION.—General Dunne—In Committee on Courts of Law Officers (Ireland) Bill—to move—"That every officer whose office is abolished, and who has a freehold interest therein, shall, in the event of his declining to accept another office, receive as compensation an annuity equal to his salary, if he has served 15 years or upwards; and equal to two-thirds of such salary, if he has not served 15 years."

ATTORNEYS', &c., CERTIFICATE DUTY BILL.

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [2nd April] "That the Bill be now read a second time:"—Question, again proposed:—Debate resumed:—Amendment proposed to leave out the word "now," and at the end of the Question to add the words "upon this day six months: —(Mr. Bentinck:)—Question put, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question:"—The House divided; Ayes 48, Noes 41.

THE STATUTES OF THE REALM.

An interesting lecture was delivered last week in the Metropolitan Hall, by John Norwood, Esq., M.A., T.C., entitled "Some Notes on the Statutes of the Realm."

The chair was occupied by

Mr. MACLEAN, T.C.

Having been introduced to the large audience,

Mr. Norwood, after a few preliminary remarks, proceeded to trace the history of the statutes of the realm. He said that although the researches of antiquaries disclose the existence in the times of Saxon rule of deliberative assemblies—the germs of our Parliamentary system—yet the most reliable authorities concur in dating the origin and growth of our English Legislature at 1236, when, in the reign of Henry III., the great national council, consisting of prelates, barons, and earls, was summoned to meet in consultation at Merton. Thenceforward such assemblies were frequent, convoked chiefly for the consideration of grants to the kings and votes of supply; and the question of money—"the sinews of war"—then provoked as now serious discussions, caused deep anxiety to monarchs and ministers, while the withholding of subsidies was a potent engine by which the nobles and prelates extorted charters from successive kings, and consolidated the liberties of England. The word "Parliament" is for the first time used by Matthew Paris in 1246, and in 1265 a Parliament was summoned in the king's name to meet in London, by Simon de Montford, who by some is set down as the originator of the House of Commons. The first official use of the word occurs in the preamble to the Statute of Westminster in 1275. He could not stop to examine the remarkable fruits of the legislative activity of the reign of the First Edward in the enactment of the statutes which Sir Edward Coke says may be justly styled "establishments" as being more "constant, standing, and durable laws than any passed since." "Never," says Sir Matthew Hale, "did the laws receive in any one age so great and sudden an adjustment." To counterbalance and overcome the almost preponderating influence of the clergy in the early Councils and Parliaments must have been a task of no ordinary difficulty, and one that required no small courage in the King and the temporal peers. By progressive steps the present frame of an Act of Parliament was arrived at, and in a Statute of Edward III.—the rough draught as it were of the modern enacting clause—was recognized as necessary to the concurrence of the three estates of the realm. The great men of the kingdom, seeing the power they possessed by the withholding of supplies, seized the opportunity of presenting petitions for redress of grievances as a sort of quid pro quo for the votes of money. Kings, pressed by circumstances and requiring funds, sooner or later had to yield, and returned answers confirming former charters and liberties, or granting new ones. In the beginning of the reign of Edward I. the practice commenced of entering petitions on the Parliament rolls, and adding thereto the King's answer, and from these afterwards the acts, by the advice of the judges and the king's council, were, after the dissolution of each Parliament, prepared and then entered on the statute rolls, and the tenure and nature of them prefixed to proclamation writs directed to the sheriffs and others, who were ordered to proclaim them as law in the several counties. It appeared, however, that sometimes advantage was taken to alter and even falsify the tenor of these acts, and, on complaint to that effect being made, it was enacted by the 8th of Henry IV., that some of the Commons should always be present at the engrossing of the Parliament roll. There being always considerable difficulty in framing the answers to the petitions, the further remedy was introduced or revived, about the end of the reign of Henry VI., of exhibiting bills in complete form, and thence this practice has obtained until the present day. The only difference between the modern bill and the act when completed is the relic of the old form of petition and answer contained in the words, "May it therefore please your Majesty," which is omitted from the document when a bill is passed. To each Act of Parliament is prefixed what is known as the preamble, which forms a short history of the reasons which have induced its enactment. "This rehearsal," says Coke, "is a good means to find out the meaning of the statute, and, as it were, a key to open the understanding thereof." These preambles are not only entertaining from their quaintness and phraseology, but highly instructive as affording contemporaneous sketches of the condition of the kingdom, and the habits, customs, sports, feelings, faults, and virtues of the people during upwards of six centuries. Sanctioned as they were by the highest authority, framed as they were by those most intimately acquainted with the transactions to which they refer, they form an inexhaustible mine of wealth for the historian and the antiquary, and themes for the meditation of the scholar, the statesman, and the philosopher. In these preambles and acts they traced the progress of the nation; its struggles for freedom; its successful resistance to despotism, whether regal or clerical; to tyranny, either aristocratic or democratic; and the gradual evolution and consolidation of that glorious constitution which has made England—

> "A land of settled government,
> A land of old and just renown,
> Where freedom broadens slowly down
> From precedent to precedent."

Modern acts of Parliament are divided into public general acts, of which the Judges are bound to take cognizance; and into private acts, which are subdivided into personal acts and local acts. Of local and personal acts some are declared to be public, and to be judicially noticed; and of the private acts, some are printed by the Queen's printer (and of those printed copies may be given in evidence), and some are not printed. In the olden time all the statutes of each Parliament had one preamble, and then followed the chapters; but now each statute is distinct and prefaced by its own preamble. The Statute Rolls before the commencement of the reign of Henry VIII. were sometimes in Latin and sometimes in French, but from that era they have been uniformly in English. There are but two instances in English history of Parliaments having been summoned otherwise than by the King—namely, the Convention of Parliament of 1660, called together by direction of the ordinance of the Long Parliament, and the Convention Parliament of 1688, convened under letters missive, signed by the Prince of Orange. It may well be imagined that the accumulated results of legislative labours form an enormous collection, and it would appear that there are over one million of acts of Parliament of various kinds on the statute book—occupying forty-three closely printed volumes—and if they were to add to them the number of bills brought in and rejected or dropped—those which the newspaper chroniclers term, at the close of each session, "murdered innocents"—the mind would almost fail to realize the vast extent of the legal accumulations. Parliament, like the elephant's trunk, was able to deal with the smallest as well as the greatest matters, as was seen by legislation with regard to pins in the time of Henry VIII. Housewives, and those who would rest easy in their beds, would find in the 2nd Henry VII., cap. 19, what stuff upholsterers should put in bolsters, feather beds, and pillows. The lecturer next quoted from acts designed to regulate the diet and costume of all classes, and which were passed from time to time during several centuries. In enacting these restrictive statutes, which appear so odd at the present day, our ancestors but followed the example of other countries and of the nations of antiquity. By the 5th of Edward IV., cap. 3, every Irishman dwelling amongst Englishmen in Dublin, Meath, and Kildare, was ordered to go in apparel like Englishmen, shave his beard above his mouth, and take an English surname. Statutes were also devised to regulate the wages of labourers and servants, the statement being put forward that much inconvenience had arisen from their refusing to work "without outrageous and excessive hire." By the 13th of Richard II., cap. 2, as to victuallers, "they shall have reasonable gains, according to the discretion and limitation of justices in sessions, and no more, upon pain of being grievously punished." Having dealt at considerable length with statutes, remarkable chiefly for their quaintness and the pictures of life which they embodied, the lecturer drew attention to an act passed in 1393, the 16th year of the reign of King Richard, containing a noble protest against the encroaching power of Rome, when kings, lords, and commons all professed the Roman Catholic faith. Having taken a rapid glance at the penal legislation in reference to Ireland, he said that he had passed in review the records and acts of the noblest assembly the world ever saw—the British Parliament—whose members have from age to age transmitted, like the torch bearers of the Attic games, to their successors the torch of freedom burning and undimmed; having guarded with untiring vigilance their sacred trust—the glorious Constitution in Church and State. In the sunshine of prosperity, in the dark and evil days of civil strife, amid the distraction of foreign war and the tumults of revolution, the Parliament of England kept faithful watch and ward over her liberties, and no invader's foot had trod her sacred soil—"that blessed isle, truth's consecrated residence, the seat impregnable of liberty and peace." To that august body the most enlightened nations of the world offer the highest tribute of their admiration. Its wise decrees have rendered Britain the asylum of the oppressed, the dread of tyrants, the safeguard of mankind. Its laws protect her industry, foster her commerce, and the power of its lightest resolutions are felt even to the ends of the earth, and protect the countless millions subject to her mild sway. Let them—citizens of no mean country—be worthy of their high privileges as British subjects, as the happy inheritors of a rich bequest of law and order; and let them endeavour to hand that inheritance unsullied and undiminished to posterity. Above all, let them be thankful, humbly grateful to the Giver of all good for the inestimable blessings they enjoyed under the liberal administration of their Constitutional Government of Queen, Lords, and Commons, and let them fervently pray, "that all things may be so ordered and settled by their endeavours, upon the best and surest foundation, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established amongst us for all generations." (Loud applause.)

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by EDMUND T. BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In Re WALSH'S ESTATE.

May 31, June 1, 3.—Landed Estates' Court—Jurisdiction—Amendment of Conveyance—Mistake.

This was an appeal from an order of Judge Dobbs, dated the 23rd of November, 1866, whereby he directed Francis Wrenn, the appellant, who was the purchaser of lot 2 in this matter, to reconvey to Philip Redmond, the purchaser of lot 1, a portion of the premises conveyed by the Court to the appellant, or, in the alternative, that in the event of the appellant declining to execute such reconveyance, the conveyance to him from the Landed Estates' Court should be recalled and cancelled.

It appeared that on the 5th of July, 1866, certain houses, situate in Wexford-street and Protestant-row, in the city of Dublin, and held under leases from the Corporation of Dublin, had been set up for sale in the Landed Estates' Court in two lots. Lot 1 was purchased by Philip Redmond, and lot 2 by the appellant. At the time of the sale Philip Redmond was tenant of lot 1 and a portion of lot 2, under a lease for a long term of years; but in the conveyance of lot 2, subsequently executed to the appellant, no mention was made of this sub-lease, and the entire of the premises were, by mistake (as it was alleged), included in the conveyance. Four months after the execution of this conveyance Philip Redmond discovered the mistake that had occurred, and having applied to Judge Dobbs to have it corrected, his Lordship made the order now appealed from.

Pilkington, Q.C., and Tottenham, for the appellant.

Flanagan, Q.C., and Loughnan, for the party having the carriage of the proceedings.

Henry Fitzgibbon for Philip Redmond.

The COURT reversed the decision of the Court below, with costs, holding that, in the absence of fraud on the part of the purchaser, the conveyance from the Landed Estates' Court was unimpeachable and irrevocable, and that that Court had no jurisdiction, by amendment or cancellation, to rectify any error which had arisen from the act of the Judge or the party having the carriage of the proceedings.

In re BURROWES' ESTATE.

June 1, 3.—Landed Estates' Court—Schedule of Incumbrances—Solicitor's Lien on Deeds and Documents—Bringing Deeds into Court subject to Solicitor's Lien for Costs.

Patrick Anna Smith, the appellant, having acted from 1854 until 1857 as solicitor, in various suits and proceedings, for Waldron Burrowes, the owner in this matter, had, in the course of their business, obtained possession, amongst other documents, of the title deeds of the lands included in the petition for sale, and held them subject to his lien for costs.

In 1858 the appellant ceased to act as solicitor for Waldron Burrowes. In February, 1860, the present petition for sale was filed by the owner, and on the 19th of October, 1860, the appellant lodged in the Landed Estates' Court the several title deeds and documents in his possession, the receipt from the officer of the Court expressing that this lodgement was made subject to the appellant's lien for costs.

Upon the settlement of the schedule of incumbrances the appellant claimed to be paid the amount of his costs out of the produce of the sale, in priority to all incumbrances created by the owner after the appellant had acquired his lien upon the title deeds for costs, but puisne to the incumbrances existing at that time. Judge Lynch, however, ruled that the appellant's claim should stand as the last incumbrance in the schedule, and from this ruling an appeal was now brought.

Lawless, Q.C., and William Anderson, for the appellant.

Flanagan, Q.C., and Patrick Martin, for a mortgagee whose mortgage was subsequent, in point of time, to the appellant's lien.

The COURT affirmed the decision of Judge Lynch, holding that, upon the lodgement of the deeds in the Landed Estates' Court, the appellant's lien was gone. Their Lordships, at the same time, expressed their regret that powers had not been conferred upon the Judges of the Landed Estates' Court to enable them to convert the passive lien of a solicitor upon deeds into an active lien on the funds arising from a sale.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

BARDEN v. MEAGHER.

April 22, May 14.—Will—Perpetual Annuity.

Martin Murphy being possessed of the lands of Oldtown for a long term of years, which he had underlet, and of other personal estate, made his will on the 12th of July, 1811, by which he bequeathed to his wife £20 a-year during her life out of his farm at Oldtown; and to his sister, Eleanor Kinsella, "£20 a-year during her natural life, for her own sole and absolute use, and after her death to give it to any one or more of her children she thinks fit, exempt from her husband, who shall have no power over it." He bequeathed similar annuities to his brothers and other sisters, and some pecuniary legacies, stating that he expected that when the present lease of Oldtown expired his interest therein would amount to the legacies bequeathed; and he directed that, if any of his brothers or sisters, or any other of the legatees should die without issue, lawfully begotten, their legacies or annuities should be given to any one or more of his brothers or sisters, or their children, if they themselves were not living, according to the will and direction of his executors.

Eleanor Kinsella by her will, bequeathed all her property to her only daughter, Catherine Dunne, and died n 1845. Catherine Dunne made her will in 1856, by which she left the annuity to Charlotte Taylor and Catherine Barden. The petition was filed by them for a receiver over the lands of Oldtown, which had become the property of the respondent Meagher, to raise the arrears of the annuity. The matter was referred to Master Fitzgibbon, under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act. The master dismissed the petition, on the ground that the annuity was not a perpetual annuity, and determined with the life of Catherine Dunne. The petitioner appealed.

Norman, Q.C., and Leech, for the appeal.

F. W. Walsh, Q.C., and Piers F. White, for the respondent.

May 14.—His HONOR reversed the Master's decision, holding that the annuity was perpetual.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMPANIES' ACT, 1862, AND THE ROYAL MARINE HOTEL COMPANY OF KINGSTOWN, LIMITED.

June 4.—Companies' Act, 1862—Leave to Distrain for Rent.

An application was made on behalf of the executors of John Brennan, landlord of the International Hotel, Bray, in the occupation of the Company, for leave to distrain for six months' rent of the hotel, which fell due on the 25th of March, 1867. An order was made for winding up the Company, and an official liquidator was appointed on the 25th of April, 1867. A bill of sale of the furniture in the hotel had, on the 27th of February, 1867, been made to Mr. Robert Gray, who was one of the directors of the Company. It appeared that on the 6th of April last, when the matter came before the Lord Chancellor, it had been stated in the presence of one of the executors of the landlord, and not contradicted, that the rent was settled, one of the directors having verbally undertaken that it should be paid. The bill of sale to Mr. Gray was impeached as a fraudulent preference.

Pilkington, Q.C., and Perry, in support of the application, relied on the 87th section of the Companies' Act, 1862, which provides that, "when an order has been made for winding up a Company under this Act, no suit, action, or other proceeding shall be proceeded with or commenced against the Company, except with the leave of the Court, and subject to such terms as the Court may impose." Wyley v. Exhall Mining Company, 33 Bear. 538.

Palles, Q.C., and P. Martin, for the official liquidator, relied on the 163rd section, which enacts that, "when any Company is being wound up by the Court, or subject to the supervision of the Court, any attachment, sequestration, distress, or execution put in force against the estate or effects of the Company, after the commencement of the winding-up, shall be void to all intents;" and cited In re Great Ship Company, 10 Jur. N. S., 722; In re Waterloo Insurance, 31 Beav., 589.

His HONOR was of opinion that he had jurisdiction to make the order sought for. He thought the 163rd section of the Act applied to cases in which leave had not been obtained under the 87th section; but under the circumstances of the case he refused to give leave to distrain.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.

THE QUEEN v. M'AFFERTY.

May 13, 14, 18.—High Treason—Evidence—Two Witnesses.

Case reserved from the Special Commission for the county of Dublin. The prisoner, an alien, was indicted for high treason. It appeared that he, with another, were arrested when endeavouring to land from a ship in the county of Dublin. Some time afterwards, on the 5th March, while he was in custody, an insurrectionary movement broke out in the county, which insurrectionary movement was proved to be connected with the Fenian conspiracy. The prisoner was proved to have been one of a directory which planned and directed this movement, which broke out simultaneously in Dublin and in other parts of the country. The first question for the Court was, whether evidence of the acts done in the course of the movement could be given against the prisoner, who was in custody when it took place. The Court unanimously held that the evidence was admissible.

The second question was, whether the rule, in cases of treason, requiring that there should be the evidence of two witnesses against the prisoner had been complied with. There was only one witness to connect him directly with the conspiracy, but several deposed to his presence and suspicious conduct at Chester on the occasion of an abortive attempt to seize the Castle and arsenal at that place; to his attempt, under equally suspicious circumstances, to land at Dublin; and to his having concealed on his person when arrested a ring, with an inscription, which connected him with the conspiracy.

The COURT (dissentiente, O'BRIEN, J.) gave judgment for the Crown upon this point also.

BOWEN v. MEEHAN.

May 28.—Ejectment—Motion for Security—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1860, s. 75.

This was a motion, in the course of an ejectment for overholding, for security under the 75th section of the Landlord and Tenant Act. Notice had been given to the principal defendant, but not to his assignees in insolvency, who were also defendants on the record.

J. B. Murphy, for the application, which was unopposed.

The COURT at first was inclined to consider that notice should have been given to all the defendants, but finally held that the application should be granted, the order not binding the parties who had not notice, and it being open to the plaintiff, if a defence should be filed, to come in and ask for judgment notwithstanding it.

Attorney for the plaintiff, Terence O'Reilly.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE DOBBS.

In the Matter of the Estate of the Trustees of MARY JENNINGS.

June 1.—Consolidation of Petitions—Carriage of Proceedings.

Byrne, in this case in which two petitions for sale had been filed, moved that the proceedings in the second matter might be stayed, and that the petitioner in the first matter might be at liberty to adopt the abstract of title prepared in the second matter. The petitioner in the second matter, the petition in which was prior in date to the other, was an incumbrancer upon the life estate in an undivided moiety of the lands in question. The petitioner in the first matter had been declared a salvage creditor upon the lands by the Court of Chancery, and by his petition sought for a sale of the absolute interest in both moieties. It was submitted that as this petitioner sought for a sale of the inheritance, he was entitled to carry the motion.

Digitized by Google

DOBBS, J., said that the converse of the motion made would have been the right one, viz., to consolidate the proceedings, and give the carriage of them to the petitioner in the second matter, who had done everything; that he would have felt inclined to stay the proceedings in the first matter until it should appear if the life estate were sufficient to satisfy the salvage demand; that it could not be contended that if a party got an order from the Court of Chancery entitling him to sell an estate, and when he came to obtain a sale, it appeared that another petition had been presented to sell another estate, the proceeds of which were adequate to pay his demand, the judge could not stay the proceedings upon the salvage creditor's petition; that he would stay the proceedings, in this instance, in the first matter, if the demand of Mr. Byrne's client were the only one, but as it appeared that the inheritance must be sold to satisfy other claims, the question was, who should have carriage of the proceedings; that he would, therefore, consolidate and give the carriage of them to the petitioner in the second matter, who had done everything properly up to the present time, while the other petitioner came in late and sought to take it from him.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Before JUDGE MILLER.

In Re MORRISSEY.

June 7, 1867.—Reckless Trading—Alleged making away with Property—Inability of Bankrupt to Account.

The bankrupt was a trader in Kilrush, and came up for final examination.

Kernan, Q C., was for the creditors, and Larkin for the bankrupt.

After hearing the evidence, Judge MILLER said it was one of those painful cases where he was obliged to act as judge and juror. There was alleged making away with property after the bankruptcy, about which there was contradictory evidence, but one thing was certain, that the bankrupt's account was far from being satisfactory; still Judge MILLER thought he ought not to adjourn the examination sine die, but he would suspend the granting of the certificate for twelve months from the present time.

THE GOVERNMENT BANKRUPTCY BILL.

From The Times.

To say that the House of Commons has gone into Committee on the Bankruptcy Bill is to say that a number of lawyers and commercial experts have addressed themselves to the question with more or less of zeal and dogmatism, that there were as many opinions as men, and that the listeners sat puzzled at finding doctors disagree so profoundly. Any successful Bankruptcy Law will be built up on the ruins of great reputations. The chief lawyers of the present age, men whose names represent to the world all that is rarest in learning and ability, have tried their hands at Bankruptcy, and their failure has been conspicuous. The last Act has only been in force for six years. It was devised by the most acute and experienced lawyer of the day, Sir Richard Bethell, and to pass it through Parliament was his first achievement as Lord Chancellor. Though some of its original provisions—as, for instance, that for the appointment of a Chief Judge—were negatived by Parliament, it was still in the main the work of the Chancellor, assisted by men who had had the greatest practical experience. Yet already last year a new Bill was brought in by the then Attorney-General, Sir Roundell Palmer, owing to the confessed inefficiency of the law as it now stands. A Committee of the House of Commons, after a long and patient investigation, has declared for a new system, and had passed a general condemnation on that which has been elaborated by the chief lawyers of the present century. Yet the Bill of Sir Roundell Palmer last year did not give satisfaction, and it was withdrawn not more on account of the tumults of the Session and the change of Government than of its own inherent defects. This year Parliament is invited to the consideration of a measure of great physical magnitude. It covers 105 pages, and consists of 479 clauses. The present Government, wishing to do the work thoroughly, has, through its Attorney-General, offered to the nation a complete code of Bankruptcy. The law is consolidated as well as amended. All that Sir John Rolt and his colleagues hold to be good in the existing Acts has been revised, expressed in more accurate language, and enriched by the incorporation of various judicial decisions. All that they believe to be faulty or unfitted to the requirements of the time has been eliminated, and replaced by matter which they think will be acceptable to Parliament and beneficial to the public. Of the care and industry bestowed on the work there can be no doubt, and we must confess that we look with satisfaction on the attempt to devise a complete and comprehensive measure, and not merely to patch and mend the existing law.

But, as will be seen from yesterday's debate, the Bill by no means receives the general approbation of the House, or of those members of it who judge for themselves of this great question. It would, indeed, be unfair to expect that it should pass without criticism. Everything connected with Bankruptcy is still the subject of the most diverse opinions. Indeed, there are not wanting people to ask why there should be any such thing as Bankruptcy at all, so far as it involves the release of a man from his legal liabilities. If A owes B a thousand pounds, why should the law provide that because A cannot pay it now he should be excused from paying it at all? That there should be such an interference with legal contracts, and such an obvious injustice to the creditor, can only be defended on the ground of some great gain to society, and there are many who deny that any such gain accrues. Between those who would simply leave the debtor and his creditor alone, the one to pay how he can, and the other to get his money how he can, and those who have built up the existing law, which is an ingenious system for enabling people to get rid of their debts in the easiest and most comfortable way, there is a large extent of debateable ground, and the line at which Parliament shall place the immunity of the debtor is one of the chief points to be considered. The Bill of last year proposed that a debtor should obtain a full discharge by paying 6s. 8d. in the pound, or if he failed to do this, then only at the end of six years. The present Bill raises the amount to 10s., getting rid of the six years' limitation, and making the bankrupt's after-acquired estate always liable for the remaining sum. Sir Roundell Palmer naturally defends his own proposal, and points out certain difficulties in the working of the present measure, as, for instance, that a new bankruptcy must be sometimes resorted to, the new creditors being paid first, and then the old ones. He thinks that the terms of the discharge, though apparently stricter than those proposed last year, will really be easier and will operate unequally. This is a matter for consideration among those practically conversant with the procedure; and we must say that our own sympathy is with whichever expedient shall prove the more efficient in checking the recklessness of the present race of debtors. Unless the difficulties of working are insurmountable, which we cannot see, the honest portion of the public will rather prefer the provision of the present Bill, which requires a larger percentage and makes the bankrupt's estate liable till it is paid.

A not less important matter is the machinery for distributing the assets. On this subject we must confess that, as far as we can appreciate the measure, it seems to retain too much of the cumbrousness and what was called in the debate the officialism which have always marred our Bankruptcy procedure. The criticisms of Mr. Moffatt were certainly not undeserved. It is strange that, though there exists within the limits of this island a Bankruptcy Law which gives satisfaction to a most intelligent and enterprising people, our English legislators still act as if they had to develop a measure out of their own theoretical conceptions. One would think that, if the Scotch machinery of distribution is satisfactory to Scotland, the best thing would be to imitate it as closely as possible in England. This, however, is only partially done even in the present Bill, and it is difficult to avoid believing that the expense of distributing the assets will be still much larger than if a more simple plan had been adopted. Our English lawyers are too much possessed with the notion that a Bankruptcy Court should be a great judicial tribunal, pronouncing not only on the respective rights of creditors, but on the prudence, the morality, and the honour of the debtor. These opinions have become ingrained in our jurists through the procedure under which they have grown up. But there are good reasons for believing that the best system of Bankruptcy procedure will be one which as much as possible ignores the debtor's merits or demerits, and contents itself with taking possession as quickly as possible of his assets and distributing them fairly among his creditors, or rather allowing the creditors to distribute them among themselves. Judges and Registrars, with their subordinate officials, may, by having allotted to them unnecessary powers and duties, increase the cost of procedure, while they defeat its main object—the assuring of a good dividend to the creditors.

For this reason, among others, we hope the House of Commons will not engraft on the Bill any process for the punishment of culpable debtors, or for the vindication of commercial morality by means of the Bankruptcy Court. The more this tribunal is kept to its legitimate duty of ascertaining and enforcing the creditors' rights, the more satisfactory will be its working. It is, no doubt, highly desirable that such commercial frauds as we have seen of late years should be punished, and that the attention of lawyers should be fully directed to the inquiry whether the criminal law might not be advantageously extended. But all this, we think, would be best kept clear of Bankruptcy, and allotted to the ordinary Courts. The question is analogous to that of the penal clauses in the present Bill, on which Sir Roundell Palmer spoke with so much cogency, showing the unsoundness of the principles on which they were based. The Bill will be all the more efficient if such extraneous elements are kept out of it.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

(Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, and WILLES and M. SMYTH, J.J.)

May 30.—Fray v. Owen.—In this case, the plaintiff, Miss Fray, now moved in person for a new trial, alleging misdirection,—that the verdict was against the evidence—and that important evidence had been discovered since the trial before the Lord Chief Justice last term. She complained that at the trial the Lord Chief Justice had intimidated her counsel, who was a very young man, but of whom she did not complain, and had prevented him thereby from giving in evidence certain documents essential to her proof.

The CHIEF JUSTICE said that Mr. Inderwick, her counsel, was not so very young, but was an able counsel, and not likely to be intimidated; and, for himself, he was not conscious of having done anything of the kind imputed to him.

Miss Fray then read her affidavit of fresh evidence, which stated that certain important documents had been discovered since the trial.

WILLES, J., said that the affidavit did not show that the fresh documents could not have been discovered by reasonable diligence before the trial, and unless that was the case the Court would not grant a new trial on the discovery of fresh evidence, otherwise there would be no end of litigation. With regard to the plaintiff's statement as to the intimidation of her counsel by the Lord Chief Justice, although he wished to speak with civility when speaking of a lady who was moving in person, he must say it was a pure impertinence. No one who knew the Lord Chief Justice would believe such an accusation regarding him without very good proof, and there was none. It was also a very gross attack on the independence of her counsel, Mr. Inderwick, who was not likely to be deterred from giving in evidence any document in his possession which could be of any use to her cause. The rule would, therefore, be refused.

The other judges concurred.

Miss Fray then asked for leave to appeal, which was also unanimously refused.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

WILL—PRECATORY TRUST.—C. bequeathed all of her property belonging to her husband, "hoping that he would leave it after his death to her son if he was worthy." In a subsequent part of her will the testatrix stated that "her reason for leaving all she had to dispose of to her husband, and in his entire power, was that her son was already certain of a handsome fortune, independently of his father's, and that she could not then feel any certainty what sort of character he might become, she therefore left it to her husband, in whose honour and parental affection she had the fullest confidence." She then proceeded to state that, "she perceived she had made one great omission, viz., that if her son died before her husband, though she left all of her property without reservation to her husband, to dispose of as he thought fit, yet, if her son left any children, she did not doubt it would go to them from him, knowing his steady principles and clear judgment of right and wrong, and his sense of justice." The husband subsequently died after making a will, by which he gave a life-estate in all he possessed to a second wife. The son survived his father. There was nothing in his conduct to disentitle him to the property left by his mother: Held, that the language of the testatrix did not create a valid precatory trust in favour of the son : (Eaton v. Watts, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 311. V. C. S.)

EXECUTORS—ADMINISTRATION—PRACTICE.—Two executors and trustees under a will which directed a general conversion, sold and realized a large amount, which was received by one by the direction of both. The one who undertook the sole management of the estate became bankrupt and a great loss occurred. A suit was instituted by summons in chambers, and under the common decree it was sought on summons to charge the non-acting executor and trustee with two surcharges on the ground of constructive receipt. The summons was dismissed with costs, on the ground that such a surcharge could not be made in such a form of suit: (Peterson v. Peterson, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 377. V.C. M.)

COUNTY COURT—NEW TRIAL.—Where a cause has been tried in a County Court by order of a judge of a Superior Court, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 108, s. 26, the time for moving for a new trial must be computed from the date of the trial, and not from the date of the filing of the certificate in the master's office: (Copcutt v. The Great Western Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 384. C. P.)

CONCURRENT ACTIONS.—Where actions for the same matter are depending both in England and Ireland, the plaintiff may be compelled to elect in which country he will proceed: (Alexander v. Adams, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 384. C. P.)

SEVERAL COUNTS—DAMAGES—COSTS.—A declaration contained three counts—for trespass, assault, and slander. Plea, not guilty. Verdict, 40s. It was held that the damages must be divided among the three counts. £1 19s. 11½d. was applied to the count for slander, and one farthing to each of the others: (Burton v. Low, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 385. C. P.)

SECURITY FOR COSTS.—Plaintiff in an action had executed a deed of inspectorship for the benefit of his creditors without assignment. Defendant applied to the court to order plaintiff to give security for costs, but the Court refused: (Smith v. Saunders, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 386. C. P.)

Digitized by Google

NEGLIGENCE—RECOVERY FOR.—In order to recover damages for non-sale owing to delay in carrying, there must have been an actual contract to buy for a price: (Hart v. Baxendale, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 290. Martin B.)

POWER TO AMEND PLEADINGS.—In an action for goods bargained and sold, where the defendant pleaded a set-off, the particulars of which had not been delivered till after joinder of issue; the judge considered that he had no power to allow the addition of a replication of the Statute of Limitations to the set-off: (Branker v. Crozier, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 391. Martin, B.)

PROBATE PRACTICE—ATTESTATION.—Attestation being requisite to the validity of a will or codicil, the due execution must be proved by one, at least, of the attesting witnesses, if they be living. It will not suffice to prove the execution by other witnesses who were present at the time, but did not attest the instrument: (Bowman v. Hodgson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 392. Prob.)

WHERE REPLEVIN LIES.—Replevin lies for goods improperly taken for poor-rates, even though an appeal against the poor-rate has been disallowed by a court of quarter sessions, acting within its jurisdiction: (Rymney Railway Company v. Price, 16 C. T. Rep. N. S. 394. Bail.)

ARBITRATION—FINALITY OF AWARD.—An award is not necessarily bad for want of finality or for inconsistency because the arbitrator has found for the plaintiff on one of the issues, in respect of which he has given no damages. It may be ground for moving to set aside the award at the instance of the plaintiff, but not by the defendant, for he cannot be prejudiced by the omission to award damages. Nor does an arbitrator exceed his jurisdiction when a cause and all matters in difference are referred to him, by making an award "in respect of matters in difference," which could not have been decided at the trial of the action, but might have arisen out of it: (Kerslake v. Cox, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 396. Bail.)

RE-SEALING WRIT.—A judge has no power to order the re-sealing of a writ which has once run out of date. If, of several re-sealings, one was made too late, all subsequent re-sealings are bad, though an attempt has been made to cure the original defect by a judge's order: (Fisher v. Cox, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 397. Bail.)

SET-OFF AND PAYMENT INTO COURT.—A defendant who pays money into court, in part satisfaction of the demand for which he is sued, and pleads set off as to the remainder, does not admit the debt so as to estop him from suing the plaintiff in respect of the set-off so pleaded: (Williams v. Stear, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 397. Bail.)

NOTICE OF TRIAL AFTER POSTPONEMENT.—It is not incumbent on a plaintiff to give fresh notice of trial when the cause has been made a remanet by order of court, obtained at the instance of the defendant. And though it has been otherwise held in some cases, there is no invariable rule of practice on the subject. It is a matter of judicial discretion: (Claudet v. Prince, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 397. Bail.)

ARBITRATION—EVIDENCE.—An award is not necessarily bad because the arbitrator has taken evidence in the absence of both the parties. And such an irregularity may be so treated by the disputants as to prevent them afterwards taking any objection to it: (Thomas v. Morris, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 398. Bail.)

WILL—VESTED INTEREST—HEIRLOOM.—A testator gave to trustees his plate and personal chattels which should be in his mansion-house, and estates at E., at his decease, in trust for the person or persons who for the time being should, under the limitations in any settlement of his said mansion-house, be in the actual possession of the same mansion-house, to the end that such plate and personal chattels might be considered as heirlooms, to go along and for ever be used and enjoyed with the same mansion-house, but, nevertheless, that the same chattels personal should not as to the effect or purpose of transmission vest absolutely in any person who, under any settlement, should become seised of or entitled to the said mansion-house for an estate of inheritance either in possession or reversion or otherwise, unless such person should attain the age of twenty-one years, or dying under that age should leave issue inheritable under the limitations in any settlement thereof. A tenant in tail male of the mansion-house and estates under the settlement died before attaining twenty-one, without issue, whereupon his personal representative claimed the above personal chattels as having been his property, so as to become vested in his personal representatives: Held, that the succeeding tenant in tail male was entitled to the plate and personal chattels, and bill dismissed with costs: (Countess of Harrington v. Earl of Harrington, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 348. V.C. M.)

IN ONE LOT.

The Lands of Patrickstown, containing 20a. 1r. 10p. statute measure, held in fee-simple; tenant valuation, £27.

Dated 23rd May, 1867.

J. E. MADDEN, per Chief Clerk.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the Landed Estates' Court, Inn's-quay, in the City of Dublin; or to JOHN THOMAS HINDS, Solicitor having Carriage of the Proceedings, No. 28, Westmoreland-street, Dublin.

In the LANDED ESTATES' COURT, IRELAND.

In the Matter of the Estate of Jane Sheehy, Widow, Administratrix of William Keays, deceased, Intestate. Owner and Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD BY PUBLIC AUCTION, in One Lot, before the Hon. Judge Dobbs, at the Landed Estates' Court, Inn's-quay, in the County of the City of Dublin, on FRIDAY, the 14th day of JUNE, 1867, at the hour of Twelve o'clock at noon, for the unexpired term of 17 years, the Plot of Strand or Ground with the Dwelling-house and Premises thereon, situate at Harbour-row, in the Town of Queenstown (formerly Cove), in the united Parish of Clonmel and Templerobin, Barony of Barrymore, and County of Cork, held under lease for the residue of the term of 20 years, 17 years being yet to come and unexpired, at the yearly head-rent of £9 4s. 7½d.

W. R. BURLEIGH, for Chief Clerk.

TOBIAS JOHN PURCELL, Solicitor having Carriage of Sale, No. 68, Middle Abbey-street, Dublin.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The House and Premises to be Sold in this matter for the unexpired term of 17 years, is in excellent order and repair, upwards of £130 having been expended thereon in permanent and lasting improvements, within a recent period. It is situate in one of the best and leading localities for business in the rising town of Queenstown, which is a market town and seaport, and an important naval station, and is within a few minutes' walk of the Queenstown Station on the Great Southern and Western Railway. The Dwelling-house is large and commodious, consisting of a first-class shop, with good frontage, and a number of airy and comfortable rooms and apartments, and the windows in the rere command a splendid view of the magnificent Harbour of Queenstown and the surrounding Islands and County for miles around, while the shop is in one of the best business parts of the town. The upper apartments would, in Summer time, be admirably adopted for lodgings.

Private offers will be received by the Solicitor having Carriage of Sale up to the 7th day of June next, and submitted to the Judge.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the Office of the Landed Estates' Court; to

A. H. ALLEN, Esq., Solicitor, Scott's-square, Queenstown, County Cork; or to

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, JUNE 15, 1867.

THE decision in re Burrowes' Estate, of which a note appears in our last number, is one of no common interest to solicitors. The Court of Appeal in Chancery, affirming the decision of Judge Lynch, has held that a Solicitor upon lodgment in the Landed Estates' Court of deeds, on which he had a lien for costs, loses his lien in priority to incumbrances created by the owner after the lien was acquired. The appellant had acted as solicitor in various suits and proceedings for Waldron Burrowes, the owner in the matter, from 1854 until 1857, and in the course of this business obtained possession of the title deeds of the lands ordered to be sold, and held them subject to his lien for costs.

In 1858 the appellant ceased to act as solicitor for Mr. Burrowes. In February, 1860, the petition was presented by the owner, and the usual notice was served by the solicitor of the owner on the appellant, calling on him to lodge the several title deeds and documents in his possession, which he lodged accordingly, and received a receipt from the officer of the court expressing that the lodgment was made subject to the appellant's lien for costs.

Upon the settlement of the schedule of incumbrances the appellant claimed to be paid the amount of his costs out of the proceeds of the sale, in priority to all incumbrances created by the owner after appellant had acquired the lien on the deeds, but puisne to the incumbrances existing at that time.

The Appeal Court has decided that the Landed Estates' Court had no power to convert the passive lien of a solicitor upon deeds into an active lien on the funds arising from a sale. From what we can learn, the Court of Appeal decided the question without the slightest hesitation, not even calling on the counsel against the appeal to argue the question.

In 1860 a somewhat similar question came before the Court of Appeal in re Bayly's Estate. In that case H., solicitor of B., held possession of the title deeds of B.'s estate, and claimed a lien thereon for antecedent costs. H. then presented a petition on behalf of B. for a sale of the estate in the Landed Estates' Court. An order for sale having been made, B. changed her solicitor; and a judge of the court made an order that H. should lodge the title deeds subject to lien. It was held by Judge Longfield, and by the Judges of the Court of Appeal, that H.'s lien upon the fund realized in the Landed Estates' Court was confined to his costs in that matter. (12 Ir. Chan. Rep. 315). At page 318, the Lord Chancellor says—"It is contended that the order of the Incumbered Estates' Court of 28th February, 1854, whereby Mr. Humphrey was ordered to lodge all the title deeds in court subject to lien, amounted to a new contract that this lien should be preserved; but we have before us a decision of the learned judge who made that order, and his own interpretation of it, showing what his intention was in making that order, from which it appears that no lien was intended to be given by it. If it was the intention of Mr. Humphrey to have made a contract to preserve his lien, he could have easily had a clause embodied in the order to the effect that his client should be liable to pay him his antecedent costs; but as he has not done so, we must give that interpretation to the order which it plainly bears." The Lord Justice of Appeal concurred in this opinion, holding that there was an absolute relinquishment of the lien; and that, unless there was a special contract to preserve it, it would be impossible to hold that it could be maintained.

That case differs from the present in this respect, that there were costs in the matter, payable to the solicitor, and the judge made the order in reference to the lien for these costs only. In Burrowes' case the words subject to lien can refer only to antecedent costs, as no costs were due in the matter. The owner calls on his former solicitor to lodge the deeds, which he does, expressly reserving his lien. Does not this amount to a contract within the meaning of the decision in re Bayly's Estate?

The Court of Appeal in the present case, as well as we can learn, were of opinion that the Landed Estates' Court had no power to make an order to preserve the lien on the deeds against the funds realized by the sale. The 20th order of the Landed Estates' Court (July, 1859) empowers the judge to "make such order as may be just as to the lien of any person lodging such deeds, muniments of title, or papers, or as to the payment of his costs of lodging the same."

The appellant in the present case lodged them on the notice, and there was no order made by the Court. The 20th order clearly contemplates an order to be made at the time of directing a lodgment of deeds, so that it is yet to be decided what meaning is to be given to the words "such order as may be just as to the lien, &c."

The remarks of Sir E. Sugden, L. C., in Blunden v. Desart (2 Dru. and War., 405), seem to have influenced the present decision. At page 418 he says—"The person entitled to the prior claim may come into a court of justice and enforce that claim, and may compel the production of deeds, in order to enable him to raise the amount of his incumbrance; and the solicitor, although he may have a right to retain them as against his client cannot have a right superior to that of his client; when, therefore, the deeds are produced, may not a third person derive a benefit from this production? and then the question is, can that benefit thus incidentally obtained, be taken away from him? I fear it will be found that the proposition that this benefit may be taken from such party cannot be maintained; unless a character could be given to the lien, which clearly does not belong to it, namely, the character of an incumbrance, the result of contract, the due priority of which might be insisted on. This would be treating the lien not as a mere right to withhold the possession of the deeds, but as a right to compel the payment of the solicitor's bill of costs; whereas the right is to withhold the deeds, to lock them up in his box, and to put the key in his pocket, until the client satisfies the amount of the demand. But if there be a superior claim, while he may say he will lock the box as against his client, he cannot do so against the prior incumbrancer; he must open the box, and take the deeds out, and then is not the benefit of the lien gone? The lien consists in the right to withhold the possession, and to say, I will hold the documents until I am paid my costs by my client; but the law says some one else is entitled to their production. This is very hard, no doubt, but the lien is in effect lost; for what the solicitor had was the legal possession of the deeds, and although he may retain them from his client he cannot resist a superior right to that possession."

Our space does not admit of further discussion of this case, but we shall advert to it again in our next Number, as it involves a question of serious importance to the profession.

INDEFEASIBLE TITLES.

In the Irish Chancery Appeal Court has been given a judgment of great importance. Are the titles granted by the Landed Estates' Court indefeasible? Two persons had bought premises divided into two equal lots, and, by an admitted mistake, a portion of the premises had been misdescribed as to the rental, by which a great wrong was done to one of the buyers. Nevertheless the Court of Appeal has held that he has no remedy.

This is the difficulty we have so often urged against the indefeasible title given by our own Land Registry office. Mistakes are inevitable. A cunning applicant might with ease include in his parcels property beyond his own proper boundaries, and still more readily easements that may be of incalculable value; his neighbour, absent, ill, indolent, poor, or busy, does not incur the cost and trouble of looking narrowly into the claim to see that nothing is cribbed from himself, and so the description passes conveying an indefeasible title, and there is no redress for the plundered. Such instances have occurred many times in Australia. Now we hear of one from Ireland. Soon we shall hear of them at home.—Law Times.

NOTICE OF BAR MEETING.

There will be a general meeting of the North-East Bar held at three o'clock on Tuesday next, June 18th, in the Admiralty Court. In the evening the Bar will, according to ancient usage, entertain the going Judges of Assize, Mr. Justice O'Hagan and Mr. Justice George, with other distinguished guests, at a banquet, in the hall of the King's Inns.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by EDMUND T. BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In Re BARNWELL'S ESTATE.

June 10.—Landed Estates' Court—Rental—Tithe Rent Charge—Compensation.

This was an appeal from an order of Judge Dobbs dated the 12th of March, 1867.

On the 14th of June, 1866, the lands and premises known as Causestown House and demesne, situate in the County of Meath, being part of the lands included in the petition for sale in this matter, were set up for sale in the Landed Estates' Court. In the rental, prepared for the purposes of the sale, these lands were described as being held under a Church lease, dated the 4th of November, 1865, for a term of twenty-one years; the bulk rental was stated to be £615 16s. 11d., the head rent and fines £49 5s. 2½d., and the "net rental" £566 11s 8½d. No mention, however, was made in the rental as to whether the lands were subject to tithe rent charge.

At this sale Mr. William Hopkins was declared the purchaser of the lands; and he afterwards paid the purchase money, in ignorance, as alleged, that the lands were subject to the payment of an annual sum of £13 2s. 10d. for tithe rent charge. Upon discovering this fact subsequently, Mr Hopkins applied to Judge Dobbs to refund him out of the purchase money the notarial value of the tithe rent charge, alleging that he had been misled by the frame of the rental. Judge Dobbs having refused to allow any compensation, Mr. Hopkins now appealed from his order.

Flanagan, Q.C., White, Q.C., and Price, for the appellant.

Sherlock, Q.C., and Woodlock, for the respondents.

The COURT affirmed the decision of Judge Dobbs, holding that in the absence of any statement to the contrary, the lands sold should be presumed to be sold subject to the payment of the tithe rent charge.

The summons and plaint complained that plaintiff carried on the business of a land agent, and was a barony cess collector, and that the defendant spoke and published of the plaintiff, in relation to his said business, and to his solvency and respectability as a land agent and otherwise, certain words, whereby the plaintiff was injured in his credit and reputation as a land agent and collector of barony cess, and otherwise. Averment of special damage.

Defendant moved to strike out the words and otherwise, as rendering the count embarrassing.

The COURT (dissentiente, Fitzgerald J.) held that the words and otherwise were embarrassing, and should be struck out, with liberty to plaintiff, if so advised, to add a count to the summons and plaint, defendant's costs to be costs in the cause.

May 29; June 8.—Lease for Life—Ignorance of fact—Amount Recoverable.

Special case. The defendant held certain lands from the plaintiff under a lease for lives, the last of which had gone to New Zealand. There being a rumour that the life had ceased on a particular day, some correspondence took place between the parties as to the fact, and the tenant paid the amount of his rent under circumstances which the Court held did not make the payment amount to a payment of rent as rent, so as to bind either party. Subsequently it appeared that the life had ceased, and the whole question for the Court was whether the rent reserved by the lease, or the actual profits made of the land by the tenant, was to be taken as the sum payable by him for the period during which he held the land after the lease had actually ceased. Both parties were admittedly ignorant of the life having dropped.

The Court decided that the actual profit was the sum payable.

CANNING v. SAVAGE.

May 9, 10; June 2, 3, 8.—Statute of Frauds—Special Contract barred by—Recovery on Common Counts—Amending Bill of Particulars at trial.

In this case a special jury of the County of Armagh had found a verdict for £460. The case came before the Court now on motion that, pursuant to leave reserved the verdict had for the plaintiff should be turned into a verdict for the defendant, or that there should be a new trial. The summons and plaint contained two special counts, and the common counts for work and labour, &c. The first special count stated in consideration that the plaintiff would negotiate for the defendant, the purchase of a certain estate at Rostrevor, in the County Down, for a less sum than £26,000, the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff the difference between the price of the estate and £26,000; it then averred that the plaintiff did negotiate the purchase for £25,500, and a performance of all conditions, and that the sum of £500 was not paid.

The second count was similar, except that for the sum of £26,000 and £25,500, it substituted £23,000 and £22,500 respectively.

The particulars applicable to the common counts were as follows:—1866, 30th April—Amount due on special agreement, within stated, £500.

Interest thereon since April 30th, ———.

To the common counts there were pleaded traverses. On the evidence the case for the plaintiff was, that the defendant had received the benefit of the work done, for which he had agreed to pay the plaintiff £500, and to give him a lease of part of the estate of which he negotiated the purchase. On this evidence it was objected by counsel for the defendant that, this being a contract relating to land, on account of the agreement to give a lease, the 4th sec. of the Statute of Frauds made it impossible for the plaintiff to enforce it, there being no memorandum in writing, and that the contract was one and indivisible; that the plaintiff could not get rid of the difficulty arising from the statute, by leaving out all reference to the lease in his special count. The Judge having allowed this objection, the plaintiff asked to be allowed to amend his particulars by excluding any reference to the special contract. The Judge allowed this to be done, counsel for the defendant objecting, and the particulars were altered to this shape.

"30 April, 1866.—The plaintiff, under the common counts, claims £500 compensation for his work and labour, and loss of time and trouble in negotiating the purchase of the Rostrevor estate for the defendant, the sale of which was completed on the above day." The case proceeded, and the plaintiff got a verdict for £460 on the counts for work and labour. The defendant's counsel insisted that, there being a special contract relating to the subject matter, though unenforceable, owing to the Statute of Frauds, the plaintiff could not recover on a quantum meruit; and the Judge, by consent, reserved leave to move to have the verdict changed into one for the defendant if the Court should be of that opinion. The plaintiff had given no sign of any intention to rescind the contract and abandon his claim to a lease previous to bringing his action.

Harrison, Q.C., Falkiner, Q.C., and M'Blaine, showed cause. The amendment was rightly made for the purpose of determining the real questions at issue between the parties. The special contract being bad under the statute, was out of the case, and we having performed the work, and the benefit of that work having been accepted by the defendant, the plaintiff is entitled to recover on a quantum meruit.

M'Donough, Q.C., Law, Q.C., and R. M'Donnell, to resist the cause shown. The contract is indivisible, and the plaintiff cannot bisect it and bring an action on that part of the special contract which is not bad under the Statute of Frauds, by omitting the agreement for a lease. Neither can he recover on a quantum meruit, there being an express contract relating to the subject matter, even though that contract cannot be enforced, owing to the statute—expressum fit cessare tacitum. At any rate he cannot do so without having rescinded the contract. When the defendant refused to fulfil the special contract, plaintiff had a right to treat that as a rescission by the defendant, and to rescind on his part also, and he could then sue on a quantum meruit under the common counts; but here he stood by his special contract to the last.

Falkiner, Q.C., in reply—The plaintiff's right to sue under the Common Counts in such a case as this, where he has entirely performed his side of the contract, does not depend on the doctrine of rescission, which applies where the contract is still partly unperformed; it depends on the promise implied by law from the performance of the work by the plaintiff, and acceptance of the benefit of that work by the defendant, where the facts from which the promise is to be implied do not themselves fall within the operation of the statute of frauds. Here the work being done with reference to the purchase of an estate does not bring the case within the statute—it was only the agreement for a lease of part of the estate that made even the special contract unenforceable.

The Court held first, that the amendment was rightly made; and secondly, that the special contract was indivisible, and the Statute of Frauds prevented the plaintiff from recovering on it; but that as the contract had been executed by the plaintiff, he could recover a quantum meruit under the Common Count.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by R. R. Kane, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Donohoe v. London and North Western Railway Company.

April 27.—Carriers—Unreasonable Delay.

This was an action against the defendant for delay in carrying cattle from Dublin to Sheffield.

The first paragraph of the writ of summons and plaint states a contract to carry by a steamer which left Dublin for Holyhead on the evening of Friday, Sept. 6, 1866, and that though the steamer started the cattle were not conveyed by her.

The second paragraph alleged a contract to deliver within a reasonable time, and that the defendants did not do so.

At the trial it was proved that the cattle were delivered on the 6th September to the defendants' agent in Dublin in time for the boat, but not sent; but that the reason they were not sent was that there was not room in the boat—that they were sent in a boat which left the next morning, and they arrived at Holyhead about mid-day—that they were detained there till 2.30 p.m. on the 8th. There was evidence that the reason they were delayed there was that there were not enough trucks at the station to convey them on. They arrived at Sheffield the next morning, considerably injured by the delay. The defendants' case was that they could not have sent forward a special cattle train sooner, having regard to the number of ordinary trains.

The Judge left the question to the jury whether there was any unreasonable delay either at Dublin or Holyhead. The jury found that there was no special contract to convey by the boat which left on the evening of the 6th; that there was no unreasonable delay in Dublin, but there was at Holyhead, and gave a verdict for the plaintiff, with £20 damages.

The Court (Pigot, C.B., Fitzgerald and Hughes, B.B.) discharged the order, holding that the Judge had left the proper question to the jury, and that the jury were warranted in their finding, as there was evidence that the delay was caused by the want of trucks, and not by any unavoidable impediment.

June 7.—Unfinished Paper—Security.

The deceased, in November, 1837, left this country for Madeira, and before going got from her sister-in-law some books to aid her to make a will. The deceased returned from abroad in 1838, and was, in 1839, placed in an asylum near Bristol, on account of mental imbecility, and she died there in 1866. On her death the medical gentleman in attendance found among her papers a testamentary paper in her handwriting, without a date, and not signed, which he at once sent to her sister-in-law. The paper contained several legacies to her relatives, and also to charities, but did not name any executors or residuary legatee. It began thus: "I, Jane Maria Gordon, do make this my last will and testament."

Dr. Ball, Q.C. (Crozier with him), applied on behalf of the sole next of kin of the deceased, either for administration with the paper annexed, or for administration as in case of intestacy, and cited Montefiore v. Montefiore, 2 Add. 358, Forbes v. Gordon, 3 Phillim, 628, 1 Wm.'s Exors. 66, Jarm. on Wills, 71.

Harrison, Q.C., appeared for some legatees named in the paper, and cited Huntingdon v. Huntingdon, 2 Phillim, 213.

KEATINGE, J.—There is no evidence to satisfy me that this paper was made before the 1st January, 1838. But in my opinion, even if made prior to the date, I consider it an unfinished paper—in fact, only a sketch of a will that may have been in contemplation. I therefore direct administration as in case of intestacy, it appearing that there are no debts, and till the applicant is sole next of kin, I do not require security.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOHN GRAY and HUGH GRAY, Owners and Petitioners.

Judgment Mortgage—Affidavit—Place of Abode of Co-plaintiff—Title of Cause.

This was an objection to the final schedule of incumbrances on the part of Charles Anderson, a puisne incumbrancer, on the ground that a judgment recovered by James and John Millikin against the owner had been improperly inserted on the schedule, the same not having been properly registered as a mortgage. It appeared that the affidavit registered at the Registry of Deeds Office, though setting out, in the usual way, the title of the cause in which the judgment had been recovered, which, of course, set out the residences of the plaintiffs, did not, in the farther part, specifically state the residence of the plaintiff John, but only that of the plaintiff James, the one who had made the affidavit, and it was insisted that the affidavit did not therefore comply with the requisites of Judgment Mortgage Act, by giving the "place of abode of the plaintiffs."

Gerald Fitzgibbon, for Mr. Charles Anderson, appeared in support of the objection.

James Monahan was heard on behalf of the Messrs. Millikin, the judgment creditors.

Judge LYNCH having taken time to consider, delivered judgment, stating that though at first much influenced by Mr. Fitzgibbon's ingenious argument, he had, on consideration, come to the conclusion that the statement of the abode of the plaintiff in the recital of the title of the cause was a sufficient compliance with the provision of the section, and that the registration was therefore good; but that, even if this had not been so, he would not have been sorry to meet a technical objection by a technical construction of the statute, and would have been disposed to hold that the statement of the residence of the party who had made the affidavit was sufficient, being all that was in terms required by the statute, which was the word "plaintiff" in the singular number.

May 27; June 4.—Compensation—Square Tax—25 Geo. III., c. 43.

This was an application on behalf of Travers Robert Blackley, jun., the purchaser of the house and premises No. 33, Rutland-square, West, in the City of Dublin, sold in this matter, for compensation in respect of a certain annual charge of £6 9s. 11¾d., to which the premises sold were liable, in addition to the outgoings set forth in the printed rental. The sum in question was leviable under the provisions of 25 Geo. III., c 43, "An Act for the completing and effectually lighting and watching of Rutland-square, and for the better support and maintenance of the Hospital, &c." The purchaser also claimed compensation, because all the windows in the front of the house were not of plate glass, as stated in the rental, but he admitted that he knew of this before the sale.

Twigg, for the petitioner, resisted the application.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 4.—Judge DOBBS delivered judgment, stating that the question was whether this sum of money was a tax or a charge; that the purchaser resided in Dublin, where many of the houses in the squares had peculiar taxes imposed on them; that the question was whether this was such a charge that the purchaser could be considered not to know anything of it, and that it arose under § 20 & 28 of 25 Geo. III., c. 43, the words in both of which sections were peculiar, the houses not being charged, but only chargeable and liable to the annual payment, &c. His Lordship said he did not think that this was a charge in the sense in which a Court of Equity understood the expression, and that the words in the 28th section showed it to be chargeable, not as lands are charged, but to be charged personally on the occupiers. The power given in that section on default of payment was to enter into the houses of the persons charged or chargeable, and levy the same by distress and sale. This sum was in the nature of a tax, and the purchaser ought to have made himself aware of its existence, and was not entitled to compensation. What made this more evident was that the purchaser got the benefit of it. The claim for compensation made on the other ground, that in respect of the windows, failed altogether.

IS THE BAR A TRADES UNION?

(From The Law Times.)

Some sharp fellow, writing to the Pall Mall Gazette, has started a suggestion, which has been eagerly seized by the advocates for the Trades Unions, that the professions, and more especially the Bar, are but trades unions under another name, being combinations to keep up the scale of fees by sending to Coventry, and otherwise persecuting, such of their members as accept lesser fees than those prescribed. At the first sight, and to those ignorant of the true intent and operation of the rules of professional etiquette, there does certainly appear to be sufficient resemblance to excuse the comparison and the pleasure with which it has been welcomed; but it is in appearance only. Very slight examination will suffice to show the difference between them.

The Trades Union is a combination, not merely to maintain a status, but to increase wages directly by demanding more money, and indirectly by lessening the hours of labour. It strives also for preservation of a strict equality among the members, by forbidding the exercise of superior abilities or greater industry for the advantage of such as possess those qualities. It enforces these principles, not merely by sending offenders to Coventry, but by menaces and personal injuries, and it seeks to impose its will upon employers by taking from them their workpeople.

The professional etiquette that prescribes the taking of certain fees has no resemblance to that described. Certain rules as to fees have existed from time immemorial, and these prescribe nothing more than the minimum fee that shall be accepted, and certain restraints in the manner in which business is to be sought. There is no combination of the members, after the manner of the unions; there are no rules and orders made from day to day, or even from year to year, which all are commanded to obey. Except in extreme cases, a barrister who breaks the rules as to "huggery" would be no otherwise punished than by a fine by the bar mess of a dozen of wine; he would not be cut in court, nor would any of his fellows refuse to take a brief with him. This last and severest punishment is reserved for personal offences, and is used only by individuals, not by the Bar as a body, and only where the offence was personal. Where, as in special retainers, higher fees are agreed to be required, the regulation is not adopted for the benefit of the recipient, but for the protection of the men among whom he comes, and whom he might displace by virtue of his age, name, fame, and standing, to the ruin of those who have been working their way upwards to a position. No man is prohibited from using to his own best advantage all his mental and bodily powers; his hours of work are not restricted, and no pressure is put upon the solicitors to raise the scale of fees under penalty of "a strike."

So it is with the solicitors. Where their fees are not regulated by statute, or by order of court, no practical means exist for compelling adhesion to a scale of fees, and it is so much in discretion that it would be impossible to say of any charge that it is so clearly less than it ought to be that the maker of it should be ostracised. The only specious parallel between the Trades Unions and the solicitors is in the limitation of the number of articled clerks. But this was not done with design to limit the number of solicitors, and so to increase the share of each in the law business of the country. It was prescribed by the Legislature in the interest of the articled clerks, and as some security that proper teaching should be given to them, which was supposed to be impracticable if greed of gain should tempt certain solicitors to take more articled clerks than their business or themselves would sufficiently instruct. This regulation was made in times before the introduction of an examination, and was then the only safeguard against a very probable abuse. Perhaps, if it were to be discussed now, a different course would be adopted.

The meaning and intent of the rules of bar etiquette are wholly misapprehended by the public, and imperfectly understood by the Bar, and we will take an early opportunity to attempt an explanation of them. In the meanwhile we give, as a useful contribution to the discussion on a topic of considerable professional interest, one of the communications which the controversy brought to our contemporary. It states both sides of the argument.

SIR,—The reply of "A Barrister" to a letter signed "A Journeyman Engineer" would be crushing did it contain what it professes to do—a full and true statement of the rules of the bar. To the parallel drawn by "A Journeyman Engineer," "A Barrister" retorts, not with arguments, but with facts known to him personally from a thirteen years' experience at the bar, and, as he insinuates, much misunderstood by the "Journeyman Engineer" and many other equally ignorant persons. Were the facts he brings forward correct, the deductions he draws might be legitimate, but I venture to say that they are as new to the majority of the members of the bar as they must have been to the "Engineer." With your permission, I will call attention to a few of the facts about which "A Barrister" appears to be more misinformed than the gentleman he attacks.

The rules of the bar are classified by "A Barrister" under three distinct heads. There are the rules which are sanctioned by (1) the general sentiment of the profession, (2) by the benchers of the Inns of Court, and (3) by the circuit courts.

With regard to the first sanction, the "general sentiment of the profession," he asserts that "any one who cares to do so may defy it with perfect impunity." It is hard to conceive what meaning he attaches to the expression "perfect impunity." If he means by it freedom from bodily injury, he is doubtless correct, but in no other sense. If a barrister defies and acts constantly against the general sentiment of his profession, his brother barristers will certainly not place an infernal machine beneath his seat in court, or fill his brief bag with grenades, or otherwise attempt to maim, lame, or murder him, but they will send him to a very strict Coventry, and refuse to eat, or drink, or talk, or even hold briefs with him. There have been, and there are now, barristers with whom the respectable members of the profession will not hold briefs. It would be invidious to mention names, but there is a well-known case in which a barrister made an unprofessional bargain, and for doing so he has been severely punished by the benchers of his inn, and is cut by the other members of the profession. Socially an offender against the general sentiment of the profession suffers as much as a man can suffer socially. He also suffers professionally. A man of the very highest talent might defy the general sentiment with something like impunity, but it is impossible for the ordinary barrister to do so and obtain respectable business. Low attorneys will employ low barristers, and both unfortunately exist; but attorneys of position have as much respect for the opinion of the bar as barristers themselves.

"A Barrister" then states that a "man might hug attorneys to the end of time, and defend prisoners at the Old Bailey for 6d. apiece as long as he pleased, without being interfered with by his inn." This savours more of a prophecy than of a fact. It is difficult to say what a man might do and not be interfered with, but my opinion is, that were such conduct brought before the benchers of any of the inns, the barrister who had been guilty of it would suffer severely, and in all probability be disbarred. It is very possible that there are some such "knobsticks" in the Profession, but were their practices found out, their professional existence would be shortened.

"A Barrister" further asserts that the circuit courts are purely social institutions. No doubt they are social institutions to a certain extent, but not purely. Practically they are the courts which guide and regulate the practice and proceedings of barristers on circuit. The direct sanction for enforcing the laws made by them is a social one—viz., exclusion from the society of the other members of the circuit; but it is a social one which, though it may not entirely destroy, considerably mars a barrister's professional prospects. "A Barrister" has been on circuit thirteen years, and has never known or heard of a case in which barristers have refused to hold briefs with a barrister who has been expelled from the circuit mess. This may be, but such cases exist at the present moment. The acts of the Bar might be as secret as some of those of the trade unions. They are not really, but with some of them "A Barrister" seems to have less acquaintance than "A Journeyman Engineer."

By way of climax "A Barrister" goes on to say that there is not a "single bar rule which either does prevent or is meant to prevent the most unrestricted competition between man and man for business." For what purpose, then, are the rules which forbid barristers to frequent public coffee rooms during circuit, to take less than a guinea fee, to go more than one circuit, and sometimes only certain sessions within that circuit, except to limit competition within what are considered proper bounds? What are they meant to prevent but a competition which is thought to be injurious to the profession generally?

Without entering upon the merits of the parallel drawn between the rules of the Bar and of the trade unions, I will conclude with two remarks upon the subject. If the members of the Bar rely to a very great extent upon social influence to enforce their rules, it must be remembered that with them this is a powerful weapon. On the side of their rules they have the judges, the benchers of the different inns, and the entire body of the profession, with the single exception of the "knobsticks;" and the social influence of these combined is very great. It is impossible to say the same of the trade unions. Then again the rules of the Bar have this discreet merit over those of the trade unions. They only fix a minimum and no maximum fee. Were the unionists to follow the example of the lawyers in this they would protect the ordinary workman against his employer, and at the same time would not limit the advantages to be earned by the more talented or more industrious artizan.—I am, &c.,

COUNTY COURTS REFORM.

The Lord Chancellor has introduced a Bill for removing some practical defects in the law of the County Courts. Jurisdiction has been always a troublesome question. Where did the cause of action arise, wholly or in part, was a constant theme for ingenious cavil. The Bill proposes to remove this difficulty by permitting the suitor to bring his action in any court where the cause of action or any part of it arose. Another provision allows judgment by default in certain cases where now, though the defendant does not deny the debt, the plaintiff is nevertheless compelled to prove it, often at considerable cost, which he is unable to recover from the defendant. The jurisdiction is to be extended to ejectment from premises of less annual value than £20. The concurrent jurisdiction where plaintiff and defendant dwell more than twenty miles apart is to be abolished. Actions are not to be maintainable for sums due on account of beer consumed on the premises. Would it not be well to extend this principle and to prohibit also the recovery of debts to tallymen, contracted by a wife, unless the assent of the husband be proved? All the County Court Judges concur in deprecating the tally system as most mischievous to the poor.

One of the best provisions of the Bill is that which requires plaintiffs in actions for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution to give security for costs; this will put an end to an abominable system practised by the lowest class of attorneys, who disgrace and discredit the Profession. It would be well to extend this to actions for libel and for injury by accident, which are also too often used as engines for extortion.—Law Times.

COUNCIL OF LAW REPORTING.

The following is a copy of a letter addressed by Sir Roundell Palmer to the Lord Chief Baron, and of a letter from the Treasurer of Sergeants'-Inn, in reference to that society sending representatives to the Council of Law Reporting in pursuance of the Bar scheme:—

"11, New-square, Lincoln's-Inn, May 11, 1867.

"MY LORD—Understanding that your Lordship has intimated your intention of moving, on the 1st day of Trinity Term, that Sergeants'-Inn do send two representatives to the Council of Law Reporting to act with the members already appointed to represent the several Inns of Court and the Incorporated Law Society, I beg to submit the following statement for the consideration of your Lordship and the other members of Sergeants'-Inn, in the hope that the society will be pleased to co-operate, and give their assistance to the Council in carrying out a useful reform, now recognised and appreciated by the profession. The society will remember that the scheme under which the Council is constituted emanated from a committee appointed by the Bar. The evils of the old system were—First, the multiplicity of the reports; there being no less than fourteen of the so-called authorized reports, the Law Journal, and four of the weekly series, which entailed both expense and labour upon those who had to administer and advise upon the law. Secondly—That the reports were brought out independently of one another, and without proper supervision, the consequence being that many cases that should never have been reported found their way into them, and it was not unusual to find four or five reports of the same case differing so materially from one another as to render the decision wholly worthless as an authority, and obliging the judge to disregard it altogether. These grave defects, felt by the Bar alike, it was the object of the scheme to remedy, and the Council have endeavoured, in spite of some opposition (the motives of which it is not for me to examine), to give effect to the wishes of the profession, and to carry out the scheme; and much practical good has already resulted from the introduction of the new system, for since that introduction the whole of the so-called authorized reports, with one exception, that of the Court of Queen's Bench, have ceased, so far as future cases are concerned, or have been placed under the supervision and control of the council. Two of the weekly series—viz., the 'New Reports' and the 'Jurist,' have also been discontinued, and reports that cost the profession upwards of £20 can now be had for a subscription of £5 5s. The scheme contemplated giving compensation to existing interests, and the council, with that view, have appointed old reporters on their staff. Although the 'Law Reports' have been in existence hardly two years, there are already nearly 4,000 subscribers, with every prospect of a greater increase. The council feel it to be of very great importance to have the co-operation of Sergeants'-Inn, the presence of whose representatives would consolidate their body, strengthen their hands in the control of those acting under them, and enable them also to be incorporated, by which the system may become a permanent institution. I venture, therefore, respectfully to express the hope that the Society of Sergeants'-Inn will give that co operation, and join with the other law societies in assisting the council to give a proper record of the Case Law of the country worthy of those high and eminent persons who have to administer it, and thereby confer a benefit, as well upon those who have to advise, as of the suitor whose interests are affected by that law.—I have the honour to be, your obedient and faithful servant, (Signed) "ROUNDELL PALMER, Chairman.

"The Right Hon. the Lord Chief Baron."

"1, Sergeants'-Inn, Chancery-lane, May 28, 1867.

"MY DEAR SIR—I have the satisfaction to inform you that, at our 'Green Cloth' last evening, the Lord Chief Baron's motion, that this society shall send two representatives to the 'Council of Law Reporting,' was, I may write, almost unanimously agreed to. Our representatives are, I have to inform you, Mr. Sergeant Hayes and Mr. Sergeant Pulling. Shou'd the council require further explication be pleased to address me as above.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER—THURSDAY.

SLADE v. SLADE.

The Slade Baronetcy case has at last reached the close of its first stage, but the Court of Exchequer, being equally divided, has pronounced no formal judgment. In accordance, however, with a well-known custom, the opinion of the junior Baron is understood to be withdrawn, and an appeal will doubtless be carried up to the House of Lords.

Mr. BARON PIGOTT, being the junior judge, first delivered his judgment. Having observed that the court had cast upon it in this case the duty both of judge and jury, he said the question was whether when Miss Mostyn married the late Sir Frederick William Slade in December, 1833, she was the wife of Carl von Kœrber by a valid marriage according to the Austrian law on the 6th of October, 1825. In his view that question involved not so much the doctrine of presumption as of the sufficiency of evidence, and he thought it safer to rest his judgment upon the evidence than upon presumption. The marriage of 1833 was said to to be invalid—first, because there had been no due publication of banns; secondly, that the priest who performed the ceremony was not competent to perform it. He assumed that, according to the Austrian law, the publication of banns was necessary, and that there must be six weeks' residence in the parish before publication. It could not be doubted that it was the intention of all the parties that the marriage should be valid, and not a mere sham. Von Kœrber would benefit by it socially and pecuniarily, and there were very peculiar reasons why both Mrs. Mostyn and her daughter should wish the marriage to be real and binding. It could not be supposed that the mother wished her daughter to live in adultery with Von Kœrber, or that the priests, Zerbi and Nagy, would knowingly have been guilty of any breach of duty. The conduct of all the parties concerned was strongly in favour of the due publication of the banns, and there was no reason to think that they were ignorant of the requirements to be fulfilled in the matter. He also thought that all the surrounding circumstances pointed in the direction of a due publication. The only living witness on this point was Lady Slade herself, and it was impossible not to see that, without any intention to speak untruly, her evidence was erroneous in some important particulars. Having examined at some length the evidence as to the question of residence, the learned baron said Lady Slade was contradicted by the "exhibits" to which he attached great weight, especially the certificate of Zerbi, addressed to Feld Superior Nagy, stating that there was no impediment, civil or canonical, to the marriage, and the copy of the registration of the marriage signed by Nagy, who performed the ceremony. He could not conceive that these two priests, who were entire strangers to both of the parties, would have incurred liability to punishment or suspension from office without any conceivable object, or from sheer indifference. Zerbi appeared to have been a most conscientious priest, but his certificate would not be true if the banns had not been duly published. Upon these grounds he thought the irresistible inference from the facts was that the publication of the banns, which was an essential element in the validity of the marriage, was not lost sight of, and that they were published in the proper manner. With regard to the second point—the competency of Feld Superior Nagy to perform the marriage ceremony—there was a direct conflict of evidence amongst the skilled witnesses as to the effect of the Austrian law on the subject, and the court must determine the question for themselves. His lordship then referred to the Austrian code, and said he came to the conclusion that Nagy was the "curator animarum" of the bridegroom, and was therefore competent to marry the parties, and showing that if he were not so, he could not help thinking that the marriage would have been questioned years ago. He had not arrived at this opinion without anxiety and regret, and should rather have desired that the acknowledged son of the late Sir Frederick Slade had been held to be his heir, but he was not able to regard the case in any other light than he would have done had there been children of the Kœrber-Mostyn marriage, and the question of the legitimacy had arisen. It was, therefore, with much regret that he pronounced his judgment upon both points in favour of the plaintiff.

Mr. BARON BRAMWELL, remarking that the question had to be decided entirely as a matter of fact, said it was clear both parties wanted to be married, and that there was no impediment to the marriage, and no opposition to it by parent or relation—on the contrary, Mrs. Mostyn approved of and gave her assent to their union. There was nothing clandestine, nothing hurried about the affair—everything was open and straightforward, the ceremony took place in a public church, in the presence of many persons, and it was preceded by a marriage contract, executed in a formal manner. Nevertheless, it was said that through some blunder or ignorance the parties, who clearly intended to be married, were not married. The defendant's case depended upon the evidence of his mother, Lady Slade, and even if her answers were all straightforward and uncontradicted in every respect, he did not think it proved that the banns had not been duly published. But the documents connected with the marriage contradicted her on most material points, and he felt he could not rely upon her evidence. In short, the conduct of all the parties was inconsistent with the case set up by the defendant, and with all the desires and wishes of the contracting parties. He was satisfied that the objection as to the banns failed in fact. The learned judge, next dealing with the second question, expressed his opinion that Nagy was competent to perform the marriage ceremony. For these reasons he thought that the objection to the validity of the first marriage had not been sustained; that it failed, in fact, and that, consequently, the second marriage was null and void; that the plaintiff had established that the late Sir Frederick Slade had left no issue male, and that he was therefore entitled to the judgment of the court.

Mr. BARON MARTIN went at great length over the evidence of Lady Slade with respect to the publication of the banns, and said he thought she had not only spoken the truth, but had been corroborated in a remarkable manner by the documents in the case. His sincere and firm belief was that the banns had not been published, and he thought that this fact was known to Nagy when he married the parties. That being so, an essential element, according to the Austrian law, to the validity of the marriage of 1825, was wanting. With respect to the competency of Nagy to perform the ceremony he expressed some doubt, but said he was of opinion that Zerbi, the priest of St. Babyla, had given him no delegation to perform it. Mr. Baron Martin speaking for himself alone, protested against a case of this kind being brought before a court of law again, observing that a jury was the legitimate tribunal to decide matters of fact, and that when judges of the superior courts had to determine them, they often took different views. He believed that why the decisions of juries upon facts were deemed satisfactory was because they gave no reasons for their conclusions (laughter). He was of opinion that defendant was entitled to the judgment of the court.

The LORD CHIEF BARON lastly delivered judgment. He was of opinion that the Milan marriage ought not to be assumed invalid until it had been adjudged to be void by a competent court of jurisdiction in Austria, and pointed out the difficulties which might arise if such a proposition were adhered to in the event of war breaking out between England and Austria, or a revolution taking place in the latter country. With respect to the publication of the banns, he thought that Lady Slade's evidence was not shaken in any material point, and that, looking at the dates, it was absolutely incredible that Zerbi could have been a party to their publication. He was also of opinion that by the Austrian law the due publication of banns was essential to the validity of a marriage. His lordship's judgment on the subject of the banns was very long and very elaborate, and dealt in an exhaustive manner with the whole of the facts and law applicable to it. The conclusion at which he arrived was, that there had been no publication of banns, and no dispensation for their non-publication. With respect to the competency of Nagy, he felt great difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that a Roman Catholic priest could, under any circumstances, be the parochus or curator animarum of a Protestant; but the evidence went to show that such had unquestionably been the practice in Austria. As to the parties to this suit, he said each of them was entitled to the respect, sympathy, and cordial commendation of the court for the upright and honourable course they had both adopted before and after the contest toward each other; and if he were permitted to express a wish beyond the limits of the case, that wish would have been that it should have, if possible, been brought to some just, fair, and amicable termination. He, however, had no choice but to say that, in his opinion, the defendant was entitled to the judgment of the court in his favour. As they were equally divided in opinion, the court would pronounce no judgment; but if the plaintiff desired it, with a view to an appeal, Mr. Baron Pigott would withdraw his judgment, and judgment would be given for defendant.

It was agreed between counsel that the plaintiff should say before the end of the term what course he would adopt.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

WILL—PRESUMPTION OF DEATH.—The burden of proof that a devisee died before the testator is upon those who set it up. In the absence of such proof the presumption will be that he outlived the testator. Therefore, where B., residuary legatee under a will, was last heard of as alive in 1854, and the testator died in 1860, and his residuary estate became divisible in 1867, his personal representatives were held to be entitled to the legacy, the presumption being that he survived the testator, but was dead in 1867: (Re Benham's Trusts, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 349. V.C. M.)

MORTGAGE OF COMMISSION IN THE ARMY—PRIORITIES.—Army agents become, on the sale of a commission, and after the purchase-money is in their hands, trustees of it from the moment at which the retirement of the vendor, and the appointment of another officer in his stead, is published in the Gazette; and where there are several incumbrancers on the purchase-money arising from the sale, the one who gives notice to the agents first after the time of the publication is entitled to priority over the rest. From the period at which the agents so become trustees of the fund, they hold it in trust, first, for the War-office; secondly, for those incumbrancers on it who have given notice of their claims since the time of publication in the Gazette, according to their priorities; and, thirdly, for incumbrancers who have given no notice of their claims: (Earl of Suffolk v. Cox, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 374. M.R.)

LEASE—COVENANT.—A lease contained a covenant that lessee should not, during the term, erect any new building or erection without the consent of the lessor. He erected a greenhouse and conservatory in a kitchen-garden without such consent, for which breach of the covenant the lessor brought an action of ejectment. The Court granted an injunction to restrain him: (Haigh v. Waterman, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 375. V. C. W.)

WILL—ACCUMULATIONS.—A testator bequeathed a sum of £2,000, the amount of a policy of insurance on his life, "and all bonuses and other sums of money now or hereafter to be added thereto," upon trust for his wife for life, and upon her death to apply the annual proceeds for maintenance and education "of such of his children as should for the time being be under the age of twenty-one years; and on his youngest child attaining the age of twenty-one years, if his wife should be then dead, and if not, then on her decease to pay and divide said principal sum of £2,000, and all bonuses and accumulations thereof, unto and amongst all his children then living, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead." The wife died in 1859. The youngest child attained her age of twenty-one in April, 1865. A sum of £644 13s. 8d. had accrued by way of dividends on the investment of the £2,000 and the bonuses on the policy: Held, that the interest and bonuses were divisible amongst such of the children as were for the time being under age until the youngest child attained her age of twenty-one: (Re Oram's Trusts, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 376. V. C. W.)

COSTS—FIXED SALARY.—An agreement with a solicitor to act exclusively for a corporation at a given salary per annum as their solicitor, is not against the policy of the Solicitors' Act (6 and 7 Vict., c. 73), s. 32: (Galloway v. The Corporation of London, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 407. V. C. W.)

DISCRETION OF TAXING MASTER.—The discretion exercised by a taxing master in allowing certain fees to counsel, and other similar charges, will not be interfered with unless fraud or gross negligence are alleged and proved: (Ibid.)

RAILWAY — REINVESTMENT — COSTS. — Where it was sought to reinvest a fund in court, a portion of which had been paid in as purchase-money of lands taken by the Crown, and two remaining portions, on account of lands taken by two railway companies, it was ordered that the costs, which were to be borne equally by the companies, should not be increased by reason of the fund exceeding the amounts paid into court by the companies: (Attorney-General v. Mayor and Corporation of Rochester, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 408. V. C. M.)

EQUITY PRACTICE — DEPOSITIONS. — Before notice of motion for decree was given, or replication filed, witnesses were subpœned by the plaintiff to attend before the examiner, notice of the appointment being served on the defendant, who, by counsel, attended and objected to the course pursued as irregular, inasmuch as issue was not found and evidence could not be taken ex parte, so as to make the depositions affidavits. It was held that the case fell within sect. 40 of 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, and a motion to take the depositions off the file for irregularity was refused with costs: (Coles v. Morris, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 408. V. C. M.)

UNREVERSED CONVICTION—MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.—The fact of there being no appeal from a conviction does not create a cause of action upon an unreversed conviction: Basebe v. Matthews, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 417. C. P.)

PRACTICE—HEARING "CASE STATED."—The court will not order a case stated under 20 and 21 Vict., c. 43, to be struck out because the intervention of days on which the offices of the court are closed has rendered it impossible for the appellant to transmit the case in time. Nor is it a condition precedent that the case shall be transmitted in the time limited by the Act. The words of the Act are directory, and the court may in its discretion refuse to deprive a suitor of his right of appeal, when he had done all in his power to comply with statutory requirements: (Re Mayor v. Harding, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 429. Bail.)

WHAT AMOUNTS TO ORAL DEFAMATION.—Saying to a policeman, "I give this man in charge for taking from me £45; take him into custody," was held not to amount to slander or to false imprisonment under the circumstances of the particular case: M'Clean v. Greening, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 433. Martin, B.)

DIVORCE—PRACTICE.—On a petition of alimony pendente lite by the wife, the husband is required by the ordinary practice of the court to furnish particulars of his income, but such rule or practice is not absolute. If the wife has a separate income sufficient to maintain her in the position to which she has been accustomed, the court will not be disposed to order the husband to furnish particulars of his income with a view to the allotment of alimony, more especially if the investigation into his circumstances would tend to the husband's detriment :(Blackburne v. Blackburne, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 435. Div.)

TRADING.—Paying workmen by charging them for tools and gunpowder for blasting does not constitute a trading.

The bankrupt also required iron troughs, &c., for the erection of certain buildings which his lease authorized him to raise, and having some spare iron he agreed with the builder he employed that it should be used about the building. This was held not to constitute trading to support an adjudication: (Re Cleland, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 403. Ch.)

THE ADMIRALTY JURISDICTION BILL.

The following is the petition which has been presented to the House of Commons, on behalf of a large number of members of the English Bar and special pleaders, in opposition to the proposition contained in the Lord Chancellor's Bill for conferring an extended jurisdiction upon the Court of Admiralty and the County Courts:—

"That your petitioners are informed that there is now before your honourable House a Bill having for its object the extension of the jurisdiction to the High Court of Admiralty, to all matters relating to marine insurance, and to all contracts and affairs connected with shipping generally.

"That your petitioners believe that it is highly inexpedient to deal with the subject of the jurisdiction and procedure of the Superior Courts by piecemeal."

"That there has been for some years a growing feeling on the part of the public and the legal profession in favour of a general reform of the jurisdiction and procedure of all the Superior Courts, which should confer upon all a general and uniform jurisdiction in the administration of the laws of the realm, furnishing them at the same time with various kinds of machinery applicable to the details of the various subject matters coming before them.

"That in our opinion the more general the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts is, and the less it is confined to special subjects, and limited modes of procedure, the more philosophically will the law be administered.

"That the existence of special jurisdictions with their own peculiar procedure, and technical rules and doctrines, whilst it probably tends to the cultivation of greater skill and dexterity in some points, undoubtedly tends at the same time to the creation of narrowness, uncertainty, and confusion in the law taken as a whole, and obstructs all progress towards a philosophical jurisprudence.

"That in order to deal in a satisfactory and permanent manner with the whole subject, it is desirable to have a full investigation before a Royal Commission.

Digitized by Google

"That the High Court of Admiralty is governed by principles and doctrines of Law, and by a mode of procedure and precedents, entirely different from those of the Superior Courts of Law, and has also a different court of ultimate appeal.

"That the present tribunals in which the law relating to mercantile affairs is administered by juries of experienced commercial men presided over by judges of the Superior Courts have gained the entire confidence of the mercantile community, and the respect of foreign jurists, as well for the soundness and uniformity of legal decisions as for the ease and elasticity with which they adapt themselves to the gradually changing usages and exigencies of mercantile affairs.

"That it is highly undesirable and retrograde to adopt any reform tending to perpetuate the special jurisdiction and doctrines and procedure of the High Court of Admiralty.

"That assuming the desirability of a further subdivision of the circuits, and of conferring upon local tribunals in seaport towns a more extensive jurisdiction in matters relating to shipping; assuming also the necessity for strengthening as well as economising the power of the judicial bench, a preferable course with a view to future reform would be to abolish the High Court of Admiralty, and to transfer its jurisdiction and all its powers to the existing courts of law, and to appoint additional judges to the Superior Courts of Law at Westminster.

"We therefore humbly petition your honourable House not to pass the said Bill."

The following is a petition signed by merchants and others interested in maritime questions which has yet to be presented to the House :—

"That your petitioners are informed that there is now before your honourable House a Bill having for its object the extension of the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty.

"That the 5th clause of the said Bill provides that, 'The High Court of Admiralty of England shall have jurisdiction over any claim arising on any charter-party, bill of lading, or other contract respecting the use or hire of any ship, or the carriage of goods therein as between the immediate parties to such contract, or as between the owner of the ship and any person claiming through or under any such party, and over any claim concerning any ship or goods relating to freight, insurance, demurrage, average (general or particular), or short delivery of or damage to cargo, and generally over any claim of a civil and maritime nature, relating to any ship, or to the goods carried therein.'

"That by the 9th clause it is provided that a like jurisdiction should be conferred upon the County Courts where the amount in dispute does not exceed £500.

"That there has been for some years a growing feeling on the part of the public and the legal profession in favour of a general reform of the jurisdiction and procedure of all the Superior Courts, which should confer upon all equal and uniform jurisdiction in the administration of the laws of the realm, and at the same time full powers to apply to the various classes of cases the particular process and machinery necessary and suitable to do complete justice between the parties.

"That the existence of special jurisdictions with their own peculiar procedure and technical rules and doctrines, whilst it probably tends to the cultivation of greater skill and dexterity in some points, undoubtedly tends at the same time to the creation of narrowness, uncertainty, and confusion in the law taken as a whole, and obstructs all progress towards a philosophical jurisprudence.

"That the High Court of Admiralty is governed by principles and doctrines of law, and by a mode of procedure and precedents entirely different from those of the Superior Courts of Law, and has also a different court of ultimate appeal.

"That whilst there is much that is valuable and worth preserving in the doctrines and process of the High Court of Admiralty, it is undesirable to deal with the reform of the jurisdiction and powers of the Superior Courts by piecemeal, and that in order to deal with the subject in a permanent and satisfactory manner it is desirable to have a full investigation before a Royal commission.

"That it would be desirable to investigate before such commission the best mode of simplifying the procedure and insuring the speedy and regular dispatch of business in the Superior Courts of Law, and of conferring upon these courts the useful parts of the powers and process of the High Court of Admiralty; and lastly, of conferring upon local courts in seaport towns further powers in matters connected with shipping.

"We, therefore, humbly petition your honourable House not to pass the said Bill."

THE RECORD OF TITLE ACT.

(Fourth Letter.)

A living philosopher has said, "whoever points out the rocks and shoals with which our course is beset, does us a service which may be all the greater because we are not terrified thereby into renouncing the voyage." Fair and well-reasoned criticism is especially admissible in the case of new legislation; for its dangers, if hasty and ill considered, may be considerable. But our gratitude to the timorous navigator will be vastly lessened if we find that he is uttering alarming warnings of rocks and shoals which only exist in his own imagination.

When we call to mind the fact that, with few exceptions, all past and present measures of law reform, however supported by reason or justified by experience, have been strenuously objected to by a proportion of the really well-informed in legal matters, we can hardly wonder that the public out of doors entertain a belief that the legal world has what the above quoted philosopher describes as "a professional interest in the expensiveness and unintelligibility of the law." Did I concur in this view, I should not further seek to occupy the columns of your valuable journal with the subject; but as I firmly believe that while the profession are not to any great extent acquainted with it, they are, for the most part, quite open to conviction, I am induced to prolong the correspondence. Little remains to be said on the points put forward by Mr. Dix. The well meant recommendation contained in my last letter that those who dislike the method of recording or perpetuating Parliamentary Titles should acquaint themselves with its details, has failed of effect so far as he is concerned. Were he as anxious to understand, as he is to find fault with, the system, he could hardly have used words conveying the idea that the Recorder of Titles has authority to correct any error which may be discovered on the Record. Under section 17 of the Act (28 & 29 Vic., c. 88) every amendment, or correction, must be made by direction of the Court. It is not to be expected that a judicial act of this importance should be done without ample notice to any person interested, or that the rights of any bona fide purchaser for value should be disregarded. Again, in the case quoted of a small portion of a large property being removed from the Record of Title, on the occasion of the whole being put in settlement, there is not a shadow of pretence for the statement of Mr. Dix, that this was the "only safe course" to take; for, as I have before shown, the property, although in settlement, might have been recorded in the names of the trustees. Nor is there any reason to doubt that the Court, on an application by any party interested under the settlement, would, whether the trustees were recorded or not, by stop-order, or in some other mode, take steps to prevent any improper dealing with the property by the limited owner. Mr. Dix might have been justified in saying that, under the circumstances, to record a small portion of a settled estate would be inconvenient, but he is not justified in stating that to do so would be unsafe. I might also complain of Mr. Dix's habit of taking some one illustration brought forward in support of a general maxim or proposition, and limiting his argument to it while ignoring the proposition which it supports, as though a rule might not be supported by examples varying in detail. Thus where he objected that publicity is required in certain cases before a transmission of real estate can be recorded, and in reply I referred him to the growing usage of advertising for claimants where there is a devolution of personal estate, he rejoins that the advertisement is of a different kind—forgetting that the point at issue is the publicity, and not the form, of an advertisement. Again, in reply to the imaginary grievance of a recorded owner being in the position of a suitor, merely because his acts are recorded by an officer who is under the control of a Court, I pointed to numerous dealings with property which are registered in Courts. Mr. Dix thereupon makes the discovery that an enrolment in Chancery, or in the C. P., is distinguishable; further, that it is unobjectionable, because once done it is done for ever. Here, again, he is wrong—for the law Reports contain numberless decisions as to the amending and vacating of these enrolments and other entries. But I may, with even greater justice, complain of Mr. Dix's attempt to put me in conflict, so to speak, with both branches of the profession. This rhetorical artifice will hardly succeed; for I have not in my former letters written one word implying any doubt either of the learning of the bar or of the honour of the solicitors, and I have the highest possible appreciation of both.*

So much for the objections of Mr. Dix; and perhaps I have considered them at unnecessary length, having regard to this fact, that they do not touch the essential and distinguishing merit of a Registry of Title. Difficulties will be met with (and overcome) in working out the system; but its great result of collecting together, under one folio, all the acts relating to one title remains unassailed. When the Incumbered Estates' Act was passed, there were objections precisely similar urged against it; Parliamentary title was, we were told, new-fangled and unsafe—existing systems (if a good deal amended) were sufficient—the "poor remaindermen" and the absentees would be injured. All this many of us will remember; but we have seen that with caution and with publicity the system has worked with remarkable freedom from error, and with great public advantage. The Record of Title may be described as its natural development rather than as anything new—for it is conducted on similar principles, and under similar control. If complications of title can be safely cleared off, it is reasonable to conclude that they can be safely prevented from arising. So long as the title is straightforward, the mechanism of the new office will suffice, without recourse to the Court. When something occurs which that mechanism is not adapted to deal with, or, in other words, when a difficulty begins to arise on the title, then, and not till then, there will be a reference to the Court which is familiar with all questions that can arise on titles, and can exercise all the powers of a Court of Equity in disposing of them. A very eminent London conveyancer, while discussing the various plans for registering titles, aptly compared this power of reference to the Court to a "safety valve." The Court is not, it is true, bound to decide every question that arises, but may, under section 11 of the Act, reserve any question by putting a "caveat" or a "qualification" on the Record. In this way the rights of absent and unrepresented persons will be saved. Under the present system a lender or purchaser will most probably be unaware of a flaw until it is too late. But whoever deals with a recorded owner, on the contrary, will have distinct notice, not only of the existence, but of the exact nature of any flaw or "qualification." His position is, therefore, assured. So far as experience of the system has gone, both in England and Ireland, a "qualification" is a very rare thing—absolute and unqualified, as well as indefeasible ownership existing in almost every instance.

Questions are frequently put as to (1) Custody of Deeds. (2) Practice of Conveyancing under the Record of Title Act. I shall proceed to explain both these points.

(1) The Original Conveyance from the Court is entered on the Record of Title, under section 8; but it is usual to have conveyances executed in duplicate. The extra expense of a duplicate conveyance does not, exclusive of the cost of a map, if any, exceed a few shillings, and in fact amounts to less than the expense of a Certificate of Title, inasmuch as the latter is not printed. The duplicate is duly stamped as such, and is retained by the purchaser, who must, however (sec. 19), produce it at the office whenever the estate is dealt with. Where no duplicate has been executed to him, the owner may at any time obtain from the office a sealed certificate, which is (Section 21) conclusive evidence of his title. If any instrument of title should be lost, an application to the Court on affidavit will be necessary before a new one can be obtained.

With regard to all subsequent deeds affecting the title, they should, immediately after their execution, be produced in the office, in order that an entry may be made on the Record. It is not required that the originals of all such deeds should be deposited in the office. If required, or likely to be required elsewhere, or if relating to other property, the proper course will be to have them executed in duplicate, or else to have a printed copy made for lodgment in lieu of the original. No memorial or abstract of any deed is required to be made by any person who brings in a deed to be entered on the Record. On production of the original instrument, a note of its date, contents, &c., is made by the officer, and entered on the Record. As far as recorded land is concerned it is absolutely useless to register any such deed in the Registry of Deeds. If the deed, however, relates to property not on the Record of Title, it will, of course, be proper to register it in the usual way.

(2) Some persons have supposed that all deeds affecting recorded estates must be in the extremely brief form appended to the Act. This is not the case, the forms being (like that appended to the Landed Estates' Court Act), apparently intended as suggestions or models suitable only for the simplest possible cases. Persons who prefer short deeds, and are transferring or charging fee simple estates, may use the forms, for they are effectual and sufficient. In any case of a charge or mortgage, however, it will be advisable to add a short covenant for repayment; and in the case of house property, a covenant to insure against fire may also with advantage be added. The use of the short forms appended to the Act is, it seems, optional; for any deed or instrument whatever, and in whatever form prepared, may be presented at the office; and if the officer is satisfied as to its due execution, he (after giving notice to the owner, unless the latter be represented by a solicitor) will proceed to enter it on the Record, under the proper folio. The officer is entitled to call for the fiat of a judge, if the instrument be not one which he considers properly receivable without such direction.

It seems that a very small proportion of the deeds hitherto executed have been executed at the office under sec. 27. The owners usually execute instruments at their own homes, or at least in their own localities, and in presence of their own solicitors. The solicitor who witnesses the deed endorses an affidavit of due execution, which is sworn in the usual manner, and the deed is sent up to the office (by registered letter or by hand) to be entered on the Record of Title. For obvious reasons these deeds usually relate to the recorded property only; and there is, therefore, no objection to their being permanently deposited in the office, as they can hardly be wanted elsewhere for any purpose. There have been instances of mortgagees insisting on the retention in their own hands of the original deed of charge, and in such case the deed of charge has been executed in duplicate. The deed of charge is, beyond doubt, of no greater legal value to its holder than the "certificate of charge" provided by sec. 18 of the Act; but the intention of the Act in this, as in other points, seems to be rather that the most simple and effectual methods of carrying out dealings should be provided, than that their use should be made compulsory. It was evidently not intended by the Legislature that the practice of conveyancing should be revolutionized; for the novelties in conveyancing, either as regards form or manner of completion, are optional. There is considerable latitude allowed in all such matters, while there is, on the other hand, the utmost strictness required as to the essential point of the whole system, viz.—that every act or dealing shall be recorded in the folio of the record allotted to the particular estate.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
LEGULEIUS.

* Mr. Dix is welcome to any amusement which the prospect of loss to others, caused by mistakes in the new system, may afford him; and he certainly deserves the appointment of solicitor to his projected Company (Limited) for assurance against them; perhaps he will accept a hint that the prospectus of his new Company might usefully be enlarged by assuring against other casual injuries which might befall owners of property, such as loss of title deeds, defaults of agents, &c.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

"Abstracts of Title: their Preparation and Examination, with Practical Notes on the consideration of the Title, to which are added Definitions of some of the principal Estates in Land." By THOS. TIGHE MECREDY, Solicitor. Dublin: Hodges, Smith and Co., Grafton street. 2s. 6d.

The above is the title of one of the most useful books connected with the real practice of the legal profession that has been published in Ireland for a considerable time. The preparation of an Abstract of Title by the Solicitor of a vendor or borrower, and the examination of that Abstract by the legal advisers of the purchaser or lender, are the frequent and possibly the most responsible duties of the profession, and in no ordinary degree they task its patience, industry, and acuteness. Until the appearance of Mr. Mecredy's book there was no work that presented (to use his own words), "in a compendious form for facility of reference, a general view, not only of the proper order and manner of preparing an Abstract and of examining it, but also of some of the considerations generally arising from such preparation and examination, and of the elementary learning bearing on the subject." The Bar, who, in the pages of Sugden and other great lawyers, whose works are always found in the public and private libraries of that branch of the profession, can find full instruction and ample directions to guide them in the perusal of Abstracts, will, we venture to think, read with pleasure and profit the third part of the present work, which is peculiarly conversant with their duties. The other branch of the profession, however, has by no means the same facilities as the Bar for referring to law books to assist it in the discharge of this important portion of its duty—it has long needed a book like the present, which, with great clearness, ease and conciseness, gives all the information that may be required in the preparation and perusal of Abstracts, and supplies valuable directions as to the mode in which those duties should be discharged, so as to secure the protection of all parties interested. The manual must, in its preparation, have occupied a great portion of Mr. Mecredy's leisure for a considerable period, as it evidences throughout the minute and anxious care with which he examined the law, the authorities, and the modern statutes bearing upon the subject, and guarded himself from omitting any essential details, or indeed anything that could tend to elucidate the subject. In a valuable appendix are contained the rules of Descent and a table of Distribution—subjects that require almost daily reference from the practitioner. We have no doubt that the work will be welcomed by both branches of the profession, and we confidently anticipate that it will materially increase the reputation of Mr. Mecredy. It is only due to the publishers to add that no book could have been brought out in better style, and at a cheaper price.

THE IRISH COURT OF EXCHEQUER AND THE TREASURY.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, ENGLAND.

(Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, Mr. Justice MELLOR, and Mr. Justice SHEE.)

The Queen v. The Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

LONDON, MONDAY, JUNE 10.—Mr. Raymond moved for Mr. Thomas Frederick Yeo, assistant in the Rules-office of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, for a rule calling upon the Lords Commisioners of the Treasury to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding them to give such directions as are required by law for paying to Mr. Yeo the sum of £109, being the arrears due to him of his salary of £550. The question in the case turned upon the construction of an Act of Parliament, under which a reconstruction of the Irish Common Law Courts was effected. In one of the schedules to the Act it was set forth that a Clerk of the Rules had been appointed at a salary of £600, an Assistant at £350, and an office clerk at a smaller salary. The last office was exercised by Mr. Yeo. By a provision in the Act the Lords Commissioners were allowed to increase the salaries of these officers upon certificate from the judges. The Lord Chief Baron (Pennefather) and Mr. Baron Greene certified to the Commissioners, in 1850, that the salaries were inadequate, and the Commissioners increased Mr. Yeo's salary to £300, and the assistant-clerks to £500. At that time Mr. Cooper was assistant, and Mr. Yeo was the junior, with the reversionary right of promotion, unless the judges of the court reported that such promotion should not take place. In August, 1854, the Lords Commissioners issued a Minute, in which they stated that, as regarded future appointments, the salary of the assistant-clerk of the Rules should be, not £500 a year, which Mr. Cooper was then receiving, but the reduced salary of £350, to be increased by £20 a year, to £500, at which it was to remain.

The Lord Chief Justice—That was to relate to future appointments.

Mr. Raymond—It was.

The Lord Chief Justice—Was the Minute founded upon any report of the judges?

Mr. Raymond—No, my lord. That is the point in the case. The Minute was made by the Commissioners of their own motion, and upon its validity the present case will in a great measure turn.

Mr Justice Mellor—The Minute reduces the salaries which had been increased by the report of the Barons of the Exchequer. The Barons recommended that Mr. Cooper's salary should be £600, but the Commissioners said no, we will give him £500.

Mr. Justice Shee—The salary was thus reduced without any report from the Judges.

Mr. Raymond—That is so. The statute clearly in this matter places the Judges between the Commissioners and the officials. In April, 1863, a certificate was forwarded to the Commissioners by the Lord Chief Baron and the other Barons respecting the Treasury minute, in which they stated that they still adhered to their opinion that the assistants' salaries should be £550, and the juniors £300.

Mr. Justice Mellor—It seems to me an important feature in the case that when the Treasury minute was made, the office was full.

Mr. Raymond—It is so, my lord; and it is also important that Mr. Yeo succeeded Mr. Cooper by seniority, as contemplated by the Act of Parliament. The Barons again say that the salary ought to be raised to £600. The Lords Commissioners of the Treasury thereupon directed that the Lord Chief Baron should be written to, to the effect that their certificate had been attentively considered, and that the allowance mentioned should be sanctioned during the tenure of office of the then official, but was not to be continued to his successor. The salary then became £550. Mr. Cooper retired from his office on the 16th of January, 1865, after forty-one years' service, receiving his full pension, and on the same day Mr. Yeo succeeded him, and naturally expected to receive the same salary. The Commissioners then sought to put their minute into effect, and in this state of things the Lord Chief Baron wrote to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, stating that he believed the salary was to be reduced, conveying his own and his learned brothers' strong opinion against the reduction, and adding that the Treasury minute was not founded upon any certificate from the judges. The minute proposed to reduce the salary of £550 to £350, which sum was to be increased by £20 per annum. The Chief Baron also stated that Mr. Yeo had succeeded to the office he held after twenty-five years' service, and submitted whether a right so acquired could be taken away by the minute in question.

Mr. Justice Mellor—Your contention is, that without the certificate of the Court the Commissioners have interfered to reduce the salaries, not being empowered by the statute, under the circumstances, to do so.

Mr. Raymond—That is so. When the salary was fixed at £550 in the manner contemplated by the statute, it was not competent for the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury—at all events, in the case of an officer succeeding by right of seniority—to reduce the salary without a fresh minute for the purpose, founded upon the judges' certificate.

Rule nisi granted.

COURT OF PROBATE.

In any cause in which the party whose duty it was, under the 50th General Rule, to deliver the issue, and has neglected to deliver same within the period specified in said rule, shall not deliver the same within an eight day notice under the 51st General Rule, on or before Tuesday the 18th inst.; and in any cause in which the party entitled under said 50th General Rule to apply to the Court for liberty to deliver the issue, and has not applied for same, shall not serve a notice for that purpose on or before said last mentioned day, the Judge will not, on the application of any such party, direct the cause to be heard before next term, unless the delay in not having delivered the issue, or in not having applied for liberty to do so, shall be satisfactorily accounted for by affidavit.

In any cause in which any of the parties now entitled under the 51st General Rule, to serve an eight day notice, or a notice of application for liberty to serve an eight day notice, shall serve same on or before Tuesday next, the 18th instant, the Judge will not, on the application of any such party, direct the cause to be heard before next term, unless the delay in not having served such notices shall be satisfactorily accounted for by affidavit.

(By Order) WILLIAM KEATINGE, C. R.

June 13, 1867.

COURT OF PROBATE, DUBLIN.—A return, just issued, gives the salaries of the judge and other officers of the Court of Probate in Dublin at £10,140; incidental expenses, £846; salaries of district registrars in Ireland, £2,000, and of their clerks, £805. Total, £11,791. On the other hand, the amount of fees received in Dublin was £9,243, and by the district registrars, £4,379. Total, £13,622. The largest contributory to this amount was Belfast, which yielded £1,868.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, JUNE 22, 1867.

UNTIL the decision, In re Burrowes' Estate, to which we adverted in our last number, is reported in extenso, we must, in a great measure, remain in the dark as to its exact effect, and the grounds on which the Judges of the Appeal Court have rested their judgments. There is, however, enough known to create considerable uneasiness and disappointment in the minds of solicitors who have lodged deeds, on which they had a lien for costs, either in pursuance of the usual preliminary notice, or of a special order of the Landed Estates' Court. The powers which were conferred on the Incumbered Estates' Court, and subsequently transferred to the present Court, were of a character so extensive and supreme, that every one obeyed the orders of those Courts in the fullest confidence that no injustice could possibly result from any omission or infirmity, either in the statutes which created them, or in the rules framed by the Judges for regulating their procedure.

In Burrowes' case there was no surplus coming to the owner, and, accordingly, the question did not there arise whether the lodgment of deeds subject to lien upon the requisition of the owner, who was the petitioner, amounted to such a contract as the Court could enforce against the surplus funds. Having regard to the strict meaning of the word "lien," as defined by legal writers, and so forcibly explained by Sir E. Sugden in the case of Blunden and Desart, we apprehend that the Landed Estates' Court has no power to enforce directly what was clearly contemplated by both parties, when the solicitor parted with his hold on the muniments of title for the benefit of the owner of the estate. Injustice might, however, be prevented in another way, the Court might have power to refuse to pay out the surplus to the owner until he discharged all costs for which the solicitor was entitled to retain the deeds. This is a question which still remains to be decided.

In the case we are now discussing the deeds were not lodged under a Special Order of the Court, so that, as we before intimated, it is yet to be seen what power the Landed Estates' Court has, under the 20th Order, to preserve a lien, either as against a surplus in the case of a solvent estate, or as against the claims of incumbrancers whose charges were created after the lien was acquired. The 20th Order empowers the Judge "to make such order as may be just as to the lien of any person lodging such deeds, muniments of title, or papers, or as to the payment of his costs of lodging the same." Does this Order enable the Court to give to a lien a nature and effect which it does not legally possess? Of course we are speaking only of a general retaining lien—the lien of a solicitor on the deeds, books, and papers of his client, for his costs, and not a lien arising from any express charge or contract: it has not the character of a pledge or mortgage, but is merely a right to withhold the deeds, books, and papers which have come into his possession as solicitor, and not a right to enforce his claim against the client. It is only commensurate with the right of the client, and is subject to the rights of third persons as against him. Hence a prior incumbrancer cannot be affected by it. The hold on the deeds is the lien. Can the Landed Estates' Court by an order, be it ever so special, declare that the relinquishment of this hold shall not operate to destroy the lien, that it shall not be a relinquishment of the hold. A prior incumbrancer, who presents a petition to raise his charge, can compel the lodgment of all deeds relating to his incumbrance, but once they are lodged, we fear the benefit extends to puisne incumbrancers, to the prejudice of the persons having the lien, and that no order of the Court can prevent this grievous injustice. Of course the Court will not compel the lodgment of any deeds or documents except such as are necessary for the title of the prior incumbrancer. At first sight, there might appear to be good grounds for contending, that the lien is not abandoned, but, if we may use the expression, transferred to the Court in trust for the person entitled to it. Once, however, the purchase is complete, the conveyance of the Court renders the title deeds of fee-simple estate of no use, and in the case of leasehold the purchaser becomes entitled to their possession, and thus the matter comes round to the same point again, and the question arises whether the passive lien on the deeds can be converted into an active lien on the proceeds of the sale.

What, then, is to be done in future by solicitors who shall be called on to lodge deeds on which they have a retaining lien? We would certainly advise anyone in such a case not to lodge them except upon an order of the Court. The Judges will do everything in their power to prevent injustice; and if no means can be devised to enable them to do so, the interference of the legislature must be sought without delay to remedy a state of things detrimental, not alone to solicitors, but to their clients, whose business is undertaken and conducted for them by men of respectability, on the faith of a security which is often the only one that can be obtained, a solicitor not being allowed to take a security by way of mortgage or otherwise for future costs.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE APPOINTED AT A GENERAL MEETING OF THE QUARTER SESSIONS' SOLICITORS OF IRELAND.

Held in the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, on 7th June, 18 7.

1. That a Bill be introduced into Parliament in the next session with a view to consolidate and amend the several Acts relating to the Civil Bill Courts in Ireland, to be entitled "The Irish County Courts Act, 1868."

2. That the present Civil Bill Act, "14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57," be adopted as the basis of the new Act, and incorporated therewith, subject to such amendments as may be deemed prudent.

3. That the portions of the 27 & 28 Vic., cap. 99, and 28 Vic., cap. 1, be incorporated with the new Act.

CHAIRMEN—APPOINTMENT—SALARIES—PENSIONS.

4. Adopt 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, secs. 1 to 9.

CLERKS OF PEACE.

5. Adopt 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, secs. 10 to 12.

ATTORNEYS.

6. That the 14th section be amended by giving the attorney an appeal to one of the Superior Courts sitting in Banquo, and that pending such appeal, the order of suspension shall not issue.

7. That two attorneys may appear and act for any plaintiff or defendant, and may legally charge and recover any sum which the clients agree to pay.

PROCESS SERVERS.

8. That the scale of fees payable to process servers under the 18th section, as amended by the 27 & 28 Vic., cap. 99, sec. 65, and schedule of fees, Part V., and that sections 15 to 12 of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, be adopted.

9. That the present salary of process servers be increased to £15.

10. That sections 20 to 34 of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, be referred to the special consideration of the professional gentlemen in Cork, &c.

ORDINARY JURISDICTION.

11. That the jurisdiction be enlarged so as to include actions for slander, breach of promise of marriage, and also all disputes and differences regarding partnership accounts where the sum claimed does not exceed £40, giving the Chairman full power to take accounts and strike a balance between partners, and to give a decree for any sum not exceeding £40, in case same be found due to the plaintiff.

12. That in any action for slander and breach of promise of marriage brought in the Superior Courts after the passing of this Act, where the plaintiff shall not recover a sum above £40, the plaintiff's costs be limited according to the amount recovered, as at present in actions of contract.

13. Where in any action the debt or demand claimed consists of a balance not exceeding £40, after an admitted set off of any debt or demand claimed or recoverable by the defendant from the plaintiff, the Court shall have jurisdiction to try such action.

14. That sections 36 to 40 of the 14 & 15 Vic., be adopted.

REPLEVINS.

15. That sections 41 to 48 of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, be adopted.

LEGACIES.

16. That jurisdiction on all legacies and distributive shares not exceeding £40, and annuities not exceeding £40 per annum, be given without regard to the amount of the assets of the testators or intestates, and whether charged on real or personal estate.

17. That sections 49 to 57 of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, and section 42 of the 27 & 28 Vic., cap. 99, be so modified as to carry out this view.

18. That all accounts to be filed by executors or administrators may be sworn before a Justice of the Peace of the county or town in which the parties reside.

Digitized by Google

19. That sections 58 to 64 of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, be adopted.

SERVICE OF PROCESS.

20. That sections 65, 66, 67, and 68 of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, be adopted.

21. That the 69 section of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, should be amended by adding a proviso that any person whose wife or children shall occupy a dwelling-house or farm belonging to the defendant in any county, city, or town, or carry on any business therein for the benefit of the defendant, shall be deemed to have a residence in said county.

22. The Chairman should have power to change the venue to any adjoining county where the case can be more conveniently or fairly tried.

EJECTMENT ON TITLE.

23. That the 79 section of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, be amended so as to give jurisdiction for recovery of possession of any lands held in fee, or lives renewable for ever, where the annual value of property sought to be recovered does not exceed £2 10s., and in all the other cases mentioned in this section, viz., for three lives without any power for renewal, or for a term not exceeding 61 years, or for a term from year to year; but when the rent did not exceed £40 to make a decree final, it should be registered under the provisions of the 89 section.

24. That the 82 section of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, be re-enacted.

25. That the 89, 90, and 91 sections of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, be re enacted.

26. That the 97, 98, and 99 sections of the 14 & 15 Vic., be re-enacted.

27. That the 100 section of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, be amended by enacting that the plaintiff or defendant, or his attorney, shall have power to require sheriff to summon a jury in all cases (except ejectments and replevins), on giving six days' notice to the sheriff. The number to be five, and the verdict to be unanimous. The successful party to pay the jury 5s., to be allowed in his costs.

28. That sections 97 to 103 of the 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, be re-enacted.

29. That the 104 section of the 14 and 15 Victoria, cap. 57, be repealed, and a section substituted in lieu thereof, enabling parties plaintiffs to obtain decrees in undefended cases in all actions of debt on filing affidavits of debt made by plaintiff, or his agent or manager, according to a form in schedule of the act. Such affidavit to be made before a Justice of the Peace of any county in Ireland.

30. That the 105 and 106 sections of the 14 and 15 Vic., cap. 57, be repealed, and that the 48 section of the 27 and 28 Vic., cap. 99, be re-enacted.

31. That a new section be framed giving interest to plaintiffs on the debt recovered by civil bill decrees, at the rate of 4 per cent.

EVIDENCE.

32. Amend 107 and 108 sections of 14 and 15 Vic., cap. 57, as follows:—

An office copy of any will, letters of administration, or schedule of assets, signed by the Registrar of the Court of Probate, or any district Registrar, or their clerks, should be sufficient evidence in all cases, without being sealed with the seal of the Court.

The ordinary certificate of the registration of judgments in the Superior Courts should be received as evidence, without taking out a copy of the judgment.

33. A certified copy of the entry in the book of the Clerk of the Peace, signed by the Clerk of the Peace, should be sufficient evidence of the decree or dismiss.

34. Re-enact sections 109 to 115 of 14 and 15 Vic., cap. 57, with some modifications.

35. Re-enact sections 116 to 118 as to arrest.

36. Repeal sections 119 to 124 of the 14 and 15 Vic., cap. 57.

37. Re enact the 125 and 126 sections 14 and 15 Victoria, cap. 57.

38. Re-enact sections 127 to 138 of the 14 and 15 Vic., cap. 57, as to appeals, except the 129, requiring the attorney to make an affidavit, which is to be repealed.

39. The appeal should be taken at any time during the sessions that the party presented his appeal.

40. Re-enact the 138 section of the 14 and 15 Vic., cap. 57, and 34 and 35 sections of the Sheriffs' Act.

41. The Committee refer it to the next public meeting to consider the propriety of repealing all the sections on renewals of decrees; but in the meantime suggest the following amendments:—

Affidavits for renewal of decrees without notice, and in all undefended cases, on notice to renew decrees, may be made before a Master Extraordinary or a Justice of the Peace of any county in Ireland.

Re-enact sections 139 to 144 of the 14 and 15 Vic., cap. 57, with the following amendments—that is to say, when a decree is renewed on notice no affidavit should be required to be filed.

The form of affidavit to be filed on renewing a decree without notice should be amended.

There should be a new form of decree when a decree is renewed on notice.

The recitals in the present form of notice to renew might be adopted in the decree.

EXECUTION OF DECREES.

42. Re-enact the 145 and 146 sections of the 14 and 15 Vic., cap. 57, enabling the plaintiff to nominate his own bailiffs to execute all decrees, whether for possession of land, or for goods or body, at his own peril.

43. Frame a new section requiring the Sheriff to execute any decree delivered to him by his own bailiffs within two months from the date of delivery, and at the expiration of that period to return the decree or the money.

44. A certificate of the sum due to be lodged with the decree, and evidence that the decree and certificate were delivered at the office of the Sub-Sheriff to himself personally, or any of his clerks, or posted to him in a prepaid letter, should be sufficient evidence of delivery.

45. Chairman to have power to fine the plaintiff's bailiffs or the Sheriff's bailiffs, for any negligence or misconduct, not exceeding £5.

46. Re enact sections 23 to 28 of the Sheriffs' Act, with same amendments.

47. Repeal 27 section of same act.

48. That tenancies from year to year and leases for years may be sold under a civil bill decree.

49. Frame a new section giving power to any Justice of the Peace, on being satisfied, on information in writing or by verbal statement, of any bailiff appointed to execute any decree or dismiss, that violence has been used, or that he has reasonable cause to believe that violence will be used in case he proceeds to execute the same, to order a sufficient number of constabulary to accompany the bailiff and protect him from personal violence.

50. Re-enact the 30 section of the Sheriffs' Act.

51. Re-enact the 43, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 56, 57, 61, and 62 of the Sheriffs' Act.

52. That all Under-Sheriffs make an affidavit, to be filed with the Clerk of the Peace, that they derive no profit, directly or indirectly, from Civil Bill business in the city.

53. In case of cross decrees the smaller sum to be set off against the larger, and a decree to issue for the balance; and in case both equal no decree to issue.

54. Either party should have the right to apply to the next Quarter Sessions, on notice of the application being served six days on the opposite party, for a new trial, or to set aside any proceedings or judgment, which application the Chairman should be empowered to hear and grant, or dismiss the application with costs.

55. Attorneys to have the right to charge to the client all costs necessarily incurred in any suit or proceeding, and not chargeable against the opposite party; and all such costs should be taxed by the Clerk of the Peace, subject to review by the Chairman.

56. Repeal all the sections of the Sheriffs' Act not saved by this report.

NORTH-EAST BAR.

The members of this circuit entertained the Right Hon. Justice O'Hagan, the Right Hon. Maziere Brady, the Hon. Judge Dobbs, Charles Teeling, Esq., &c., at dinner at the Salthill Hotel on Tuesday evening. Nearly forty members of the circuit sat down. The banquet was supplied in Mr. Perry's best style, and the wines were of the choicest vintages. The chair was occupied by James Gibson, Esq., and the vice-chair by David R. Pigot, Esq., Q.C., the town steward of the circuit. We understand that, at the annual meeting of this circuit, held on Monday in the Court of Admiralty, the members resolved that in future they would adopt Bar costume when on circuit.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by WM. WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

JONES v. M'GOVERN.

May 31, June 1.—Entering Verdict on some of several Counts—Malice—Libel.

Motion to show cause against a conditional order for a new trial. The action was brought to recover damages for a publication in "The Black List." The summons and plaint, as amended, contained five counts, the first three in libel, the fourth for a false and malicious representation that certain parties had recovered a judgment against the plaintiff, whereby he had suffered special damage; the fifth for a similar fasle and malicious representation made in writing in certain words and figures set out, whereby the plaintiff had suffered special damage. To these counts there were several defences and issues thereon.

At the trial the jury found for the plaintiff upon all the issues, and gave him £150 damages generally, and judgment for that amount was marked.

The questions principally argued upon the present motion were, first, whether evidence of express malice was necessary to support the counts for false representation, and whether there was such evidence; secondly, whether, supposing that such evidence was necessary, and did not exist, the plaintiff could now have the verdict entered for him upon the libel counts only, abandoning the others.

Macdonogh, Q.C., and Webb, with them Butt, Q.C., for the plaintiff.

Heron, Q.C., and Dowse, Q.C., with them Roper, for the defendant.

The COURT held unanimously that the plaintiff was entitled to have the verdict entered for him upon the libel counts, and that the postea and judgment should be amended accordingly. WHITESIDE, C.J., considered that if evidence of express malice was necessary, there was such evidence. O'BRIEN, J., did not consider that there was evidence of express malice. FITZGERALD, J., concurred with O'BRIEN, J., and expressed his strong disapproval of the introduction of the counts in false representation, which were unnecessary and unprecedented in their form as applied to the particular cause of action.

GIBBINGS v. O'DELL.

June 12.—Venue Motion—Omission of Averment that Defendant intends to examine Witnesses named.

This was a motion to change the venue from Dublin to Limerick. The action was for rent. The defendant's affidavit, in support of the motion, stated that the lands, for the rent of which the action was brought, were in the County Limerick, that the parties resided there, and it named several persons who were sworn to be material and necessary witnesses, who also resided in the County Limerick, Leech, for the plaintiff, resisted the motion on the ground of delay, and because the affidavit in support of the motion did not state, as had been held necessary in some previous decisions, that the defendant "intended to examine" the witnesses whose evidence he made the ground of his application.

O'HAGAN, J.—In this case the only question is whether, on the sole ground that the defendant does not state in his affidavit that he intends to examine the witnesses, whom he has sworn to be material and necessary, we are bound by authority to refuse the motion. We think that those cases may have been quite rightly decided on the facts then before the Court. Generally a motion of this kind has to be decided, on a balance of convenience on one side or the other, and when that is so, the absence of this averment may be a very proper ground of decision; but here there is no balance at all; the lands are in the County Limerick—the parties reside in the County Limerick—all the witnesses reside in the County Limerick—and it will only cause about three weeks' delay; perhaps as the after sittings are heavy not so much. Under these circumstances we do not think the omission of this averment is sufficient ground for refusing the motion.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by JOHN LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Before JUDGE BERWICK.

In Re M'PARLAND.

June, 1867.—Debtors to Estate—Consent of Parties to Settlement of Claims by the Court.

Where parties returned as debtors to a bankrupt's estate are summoned with a view to have an admission of the debts, and where some are denied, the Court will, with consent of he assignees and alleged debtors, appoint a day to try such tdisputed claims.

In this case the bankrupt was a baker, and returned several persons as debtors to his estate, who kept provision shops and sold bread. By permission of the Court the assignees summoned several of these debtors to admit the debts. Levy, instructed by Tinkler, examined them. Some of them denied that they owed any sum whatever, and, although they had not receipts, stated that they would be able to prove by witnesses that they paid what they owed, or, at all events, that nothing like the sums claimed were due. Levy said the assignees would be under the necessity of suing these parties, and of going to considerable expense, although there were no assets to pay the costs.

Judge BERWICK said, if the parties who were said to owe the debts, and the assignees assented, he would appoint a day and adjust the claims.

Levy said the assignees would consent to that arrangement, although it might be more satisfactory to have cases before a tribunal, where, if necessary, a jury might decide and save his Lordship so much trouble.

Judge BERWICK said he would undertake the task if the parties assented.

All parties having assented, his Lordship appointed a day for hearing and deciding all the disputed claims.

ENGLAND.

A brief and almost casual conversation in the House of Lords on Monday evening went to the root of one of the difficulties which perplex and encumber the proposed Bankruptcy legislation. The tendency of public opinion has set strongly in the direction of abolishing imprisonment for debt. It has been abolished for a quarter of a century in the case of debts under £20. In the Bankruptcy Act of 1862 provisions were made for its virtual abrogation in other cases, and in the Bills of both last year and this year its almost entire abolition in the case of debts to any amount has been proposed. Yet, strange to say, it has been resuscitated in the case of debts under £20 by means of machinery devised in statutes only a year or two later in date than those which first attacked the principle. The County Court Judge is entrusted with power, either in his original judgment or by subsequent summons, to inquire into the circumstances under which the debt was contracted, and if the debtor's conduct has been fraudulent the Judge may commit him for 40 days. Moreover, if the Judge is satisfied that he has means of paying, but will not pay, the like power of commitment may be exercised; and as it may be exercised time after time, the imprisonment may become of indefinite duration. But no such power is entrusted to courts of higher jurisdiction. And though the debtor to a small amount may be imprisoned till he has paid the uttermost farthing, having no power to escape by bankruptcy, the debtor to a large amount is not only free from gaol, but is entitled to liberate himself entirely from all his obligations by a surrender of his property in bankruptcy, even though it does not pay so much as a penny in the pound. This anomaly is hard to justify, and it is not wonderful to find that, though Lord Chelmsford defends it, Lord Cairns, the late Attorney-General and present Lord Justice, declares it to be indefensible. Yet, on the other hand, we must not leave out of view that the County Court Judges, in whom the discretion of imprisonment for small debts is reposed, are all but unanimously in favour of its exercise, and declare that but for its existence their tribunals might be shut up.

We need not, however, allow our minds to be much disturbed with this alternative. A court of law is not in itself an essential blessing, but only a means of obviating injustice; and if we can obviate the injustice otherwise, we may reconcile ourselves to the closing of the institution. And it is to be observed that the right to imprison a debtor is not inherent in the relation of a creditor. Credit, when not given on pledge of a security, is really a confidence based on opinion, but carrying no abstract right of punishment if the opinion proves to be ill-founded. The community may superadd the right of punishment if it thinks fit, but to do so is at its option, and cannot be demanded in any other name than that of public convenience. Now public convenience is evidently concerned in the punishment of fraud, when practised by a debtor, as well as when practised by a seller, for in both cases it implies a wilful deception, from which ordinary precaution would not secure the other party. But when the question comes to be one, not of fraud, but merely of refusal to pay what is due, what is then the nature of the demand that a promise shall be enforced by punishment? It is plainly that the State shall provide machinery for ensuring honourable conduct. This is not very reasonable, if no stronger reason can be supplied. The State might justly retort that the maxim in other transactions, Caveat emptor, should be applicable to cases of loan. The creditor should not lend without security, unless he feels certain of the morality of his debtor. He has no justification in calling on the public to build and maintain prisons only to enforce a morality which he was not compelled to put to such a test. Sensible of this weak point in the case, the advocates of imprisonment for small debts say that it is only resorted to in the case of obstinacy combined with ability to pay, and that it is useful in enabling the poor to tide over seasons of distress by the power of obtaining credit that must otherwise be refused. But there is something self-contradictory in these allegations. If a man has the ability to pay a small debt, he must in general have some little property which could be distrained upon for payment. If he has not he must be living in lodgings, and existing from hand to mouth on his wages, and by going to prison his wages and his means of payment are stopped together; so that the remedy is solely applicable as a threat to induce such a man to lay aside something out of his wages rather than go to prison. But ought credit to have been originally given to a man of such character and position? Would not the simpler legal remedy have been that which would have been applied at an earlier stage, by warning the creditor that if he trusted a man of such character he did it at his peril? Nor can it justly be said that distress would be enhanced in hard times by contraction of credit to such characters. Having, ex hypothesi, no property, they must always be of very doubtful credit, for they have no tie to any locality, and even the power to imprison after judgment may be easily evaded by removal to another district before judgment. Hence the bad security must be insured against by high interest, and this process is not the way to alleviate distress. On the other hand, the really honest, really industrious family does not need to have its honesty fortified by dread of imprisonment after it has again begun to accumulate some property; and it will find credit as cheap, according to the state of the times, without as with that suspended but needless power.

It seems, on the whole, clear that we must at least make one rule for all classes of society. It will never do to maintain a power in terrorem over the mechanic from which we absolve the master. If we make up our minds that property, and not the person should be the basis of credit and the means of payment, we must not apply to the poorer class a harsher treatment than we impose on the wealthier. Probably, as in other cases, the wisest course will be found to be that which least interposes law at all, and leaves most to the agreement of individuals. And, as we have seen, while a creditor may fairly ask us to give him his debtor's property, which has been virtually pledged to him, he has no right to ask us to give him his debtor's body, which the debtor has no power to pledge. Even the right of attaching wages or income before it is paid, which the law of Scotland gives in lieu of the right to imprison for small debts, has been found to lead to the gravest evils. The best remedy of all would be to shorten in every case the period of credit. Times of distress do not last for more than a few months, and one, or at most two years' credit would be ample to allow in the lowest as well as in the highest cases. Such a limitation of actions receives great opposition from those who make large profits out of current accounts. But that is a class to which neither rich nor poor owe any gratitude, and which there is no reason we should favour by keeping the courts open to them for an absurdly long period.

POOR DEBTORS.

(From the London Review).

It has been stated that ten thousand persons are annually imprisoned by the County Court Judges of England for contempt of Court. The contempt consists in the fact that they fail to pay the instalments of their debts which the Court has ordered them to pay. Thus, while we have been diminishing imprisonment for debt in one direction, we have been increasing it in another. Parliament has before it a Bill by which any one who has contracted a debt of £50, or several debts amounting to £100, shall, on becoming bankrupt, be released from liability for his debts, except as regards his future acquired property, which may be charged with them to the extent of one half. But debtors who have not had the courage, ability, or good fortune to plunge so deeply into indebtedness, must make up their minds either to pay, or to spend a considerable portion of their lives in prison. By the beautiful fiction of law that their incarceration is not the punishment of their impecuniosity, but of their contempt of court, the loss of liberty profits them nothing. Before every other Court, the length of time a man may have spent under lock and key, whether as a criminal or a debtor, is reckoned in his favour. But he who dares to insult a County Court Judge by not having his five shillings ready when it is wanted, derives no advantage from his imprisonment. When he has purged himself of his contempt, he has still to pay five shillings, with the addition of the costs of the order by which the Court vindicated its outraged honour. This is the law for the poor. The law for the rich is, as we all know, of a very different complexion. It removes the burden of indebtedness almost as easily as a man changes his clothes; and according to its present provisions, the quittance it gives the bankrupt is absolute and final: so that if a man fails for a hundred thousand pounds, though he may have beggared a score of families, he easily rids himself of his embarrassments. But if Silas Brown's wife has run him into debt with the tallyman for twenty shillings, Silas must smart for it in purse, or in purse and person too. And though he is sent to prison as a contemner of the dignity of the Court he is treated not only as a debtor, but as a fraudulent debtor. Insult is added to injury. This is grievously unjust. While we are boasting of the strides we have been taking in the amelioration of our law of creditor and debtor we have been sending ten thousand persons to gaol every year for not paying some paltry instalment of a few shillings, and have been subjecting them to the same gaol regulations as are applied to fraudulent debtors.

The County Court Judges, says the Solicitor-General, asserts that Parliament might as well abolish the County Courts Acts altogether as abolish this power of imprisoning "contumacious" debtors. This means, that ten thousand cases occur annually in the County Courts of debtors who can pay, and won't pay. They prefer imprisonment, even though they know that it will not cancel their debt, and that they will still have to pay, notwithstanding their incarceration. The rate of imprisonment is a day for every shilling. The County Court Judges ask us to believe that Silas Brown, being able to pay the instalment of five shillings, is a man of such peculiar tastes that he would rather suffer five days' imprisonment before paying it than pay it at once; and that ten thousand persons annually come before them of the same eccentric disposition. From this, if true, it would appear that after we get below a certain social stratum we come upon a class to whom imprisonment is an honour or a luxury, or a thing on some ground or other to be desired—imprisonment, be it observed, of a disgraceful character. Their understandings are so obtuse that they cannot see how much better it would be to pay the instalment and have done with it, than to lose a week's work, endure a week's imprisonment, and have to pay it after all. This is simply incredible. But supposing it to be true, why are we to have one law for the rich and another for the poor? Every year about 120,000 persons are summoned before the County Courts. Over this immense body of people the Judges exercise a jurisdiction which empowers them to send to gaol any one who makes default in his payments for forty days. They can inflict this penalty again and again as often as default is made. So that there is nothing to prevent a man being repeatedly imprisoned for the same sum of money. Such a law is barbarous. Where mercy is most needed we show it least. One ground on which we excuse the rich for running into debt is that they are tempted by their creditors to do so. But no West-end jeweller ever tempted a young Guardsman to get into his debt more pressingly than the wives of working men are tempted by hawkers of female ware. In truth, the case of poor debtors is in all respects similar to that of rich debtors, the amount of their indebtedness excepted. There is the same venturing beyond their means, the same longing for superfluities, the same fallacious hope of being ready when the day of reckoning comes. Why should there be any difference in the law affecting them? If it is safe to abolish imprisonment altogether in the case of persons whose debts are of greater amount than that over which the County Court has jurisdiction, what are the conditions which render it unsafe to abolish it in the case of those whose debts are of less amount? We place very little value on the opinion of the County Court Judges with regard to this question. Judges have always been the most stubborn opponents of law reform, and we have no reason to expect that the County Court Bench will show more wisdom in such matters than the sages of the Courts of Westminster. Their opinion is condemned by the fact that it advocates a system of imprisonment, which amounts to positive cruelty. A thief expiates his offence when he has undergone his term of punishment. But here is punishment and no expiation. Whether the Government Bankruptcy Bill offers a favourable opportunity for altering the law in this respect we do not pretend to determine. But there remains time enough yet before the session closes to pass a Bill which, pending fuller consideration of the whole subject, shall limit the power of imprisonment, and shall cancel the debt or the instalment for which it is suffered.

SLADE v. SLADE.

(From The Solicitors' Journal.)

The story of the Slade baronetcy will occupy a conspicuous position in any future "Book about Lawyers." We do not, however, now intend to weary our readers by recapitulating its singular and romantic details, but shall content ourselves to-day with directing their attention to one or two of the more prominent points in the case. The sole question in dispute between the parties, when disentangled from the vast mass of evidence laid before the Court, was the validity of a marriage celebrated at Milan in the year 1825, between Miss Barbara Mostyn, a Roman Catholic young lady, and Mr. Carl von Koerber, a Luthern officer in the Austrian army. Miss Mostyn had subsequently married the late Sir Frederic Slade in Mr. Von Koerber's lifetime, and this second marriage was of course worthless if the first marriage was good. Whether it was good or not depended chiefly on two considerations: first, the due publication of the banns, which are an essential portion of an Austrian marriage; and, secondly, on the competency of the priest who performed the ceremony.

It was admitted on the part of the plaintiff, General Slade, whose interest it was to sustain the Milanese marriage, and thus establish the illegitimacy of the defendant, Sir Alfred Slade, the eldest son of Sir Frederic, that the due publication of banns could not be proved, but it was contended that it should be presumed. The defendant acknowledged that in some cases the maxim "omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta" might properly be applied to eke out defective proof of a marriage, but it could not, he said, be applied here because the evidence of the witnesses, and particularly of his mother, showed that the banns could not by any possibility have been duly published before the wedding took place. The Court, therefore, could not make a presumption positively at variance with the evidence. Now if Lady Slade's evidence was accurate, the defendant's contention on this point was no doubt correct. For the due publication of banns, a six weeks' residence before marriage in the parish where they are published is required by the Austrian code. According to Lady Slade, she was living at the time of her marriage in the parish of St. Babyla, but she had not lived there for the required period. In this statement she was corroborated by other testimony, and the Chief Baron and Baron Martin regarded her version of the story as accurate. They accordingly held that there had been no due publication of banns in the parish of St. Babyla. Barons Bramwell and Pigott, on the other hand, were of opinion that there was not enough evidence in the case to rebut the presumption which would otherwise arise that all the preliminaries of the marriage had been duly complied with.

The second objection raised by the defendant was of a highly technical character. The parties were not married by the parish priest of St. Babyla, but by a military chaplain, named Nagy, to whom Miss Mostyn had been "dimitted" by that priest. The plaintiff argued that Nagy was competent to marry the parties in one of two ways. Conceding it to be the law of Austria that the only priest competent to marry two persons is the curator animarum of one or other of them, Nagy, it was said, was either the curator animarum of Koerber, because Koerber belonged to the military force at Milan; or he was the curator animarum of Miss Mostyn by virtue of the "dimission" of the priest of the parish where she resided. Both these positions were contested by the defendant. Nagy was not, he argued, the curator animarum of Koerber, because Koerber was a Protestant, and had no Romish priest standing in that relation to him; or even if he had, it was the military chaplain at Gratz, to which town he had been transferred before the period of his marriage, and not the chaplain at Milan. Again, Nagy was not the curator animarum of Miss Mostyn, because the "dimission" was quite a different thing from a "delegation" by the priest of St. Babyla of his authority to marry his parishioners. With regard to this second point, Barons Bramwell and Pigott considered that Nagy was competent, whilst the Chief Baron and Baron Martin expressed much doubt on the subject. It was, however, unnecessary for the two latter judges to decide the point either way, as they held the Milanese marriage to be invalid, on the ground of the non-publication of banns.

The result of this judgment is, that Sir Alfred Slade, the defendant, remains in possession of his father's property and title. Whether the case is to be fought à l'outrance appears at present uncertain, but it is, we believe, not improbable that the plaintiff will retire from further litigation.

We must add one word as to a remark which fell from Baron Martin at the close of his judgment, to the effect that such a case ought to have been submitted to the jury, and not to a court of law. The learned Baron appears to have forgotten that it must sooner or later have come before the Court. If there had been a trial in Somersetshire, neither party would have been satisfied with the verdict of a jury of country gentlemen, however intelligent, on knotty points of foreign law. There would certainly have been a motion for a new trial, and then the whole evidence must have been investigated by a court at Westminster. No public time, therefore would have been saved by a preliminary trial on the Western Circuit, whilst the already enormous cost of the suit would have been at least doubled.

Apart from its other aspects, the Slade case supplies a curious illustration of the occasional truth of the old saying which asserts that "possession is nine-tenths of the law"—a saying which, at the same time, is by no means universally correct as a matter of fact. The junior judge who tried the case being in favour of the party who is not in possession—the action taking the form of a motion for ejectment—willingly withdraws his own opinion, in order that there may be technical ground for a new trial, thereby giving the plaintiff, whose cause he upholds, a fresh chance. But supposing the opinion of the junior judge had gone the other way, the opinions of the whole four being at the same time equally divided, what would have been the issue? Would he have withdrawn his own judgment, not being legally obliged to do so, when his declining to withdraw it would have had the practical effect of leaving the party whom he held to be right in possession of the field, and thus have compelled the complete dropping of the action altogether? The question is by no means unimportant as a matter for practical consideration, and as a fresh proof of the astonishing anomalies of English law. The condition of the Austrian marriage law in Lombardy at the time of Miss Mostyn's first marriage was strange and anomalous enough. But what was it in comparison with an indefinite system which makes it a mere matter of etiquette whether or no a junior judge shall withdraw his judgment, or refuse to withdraw it, in a case in which the expenses of the suit must be enormous, and in which two courts of appeal may be successively called on to try the matter all over again?—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE STEAMSHIP GREAT EASTERN.

THE CLAIMS OF THE CREW.

The case of the Great Eastern, under arrest at Liverpool on several warrants, was opened in the Admiralty Court on Tuesday, on an important application, and resumed on Wednesday morning at the sitting of the Court. The seamen, numbering between 400 and 500, had instituted one suit for wages, and claimed damages for a wrongful dismissal. The petition filed on their behalf was objected to on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the question of damages against the limited company of the ship. The defendants applied to the Court to amend the petition, and the important point was discussed at some length. Mr. Butt appeared for the company, and Mr. Vernon Lushington (with whom was Mr. R. G. Williams) on the part of the seamen.

Mr. Butt said it was a suit for wages by 320 seamen of the Great Eastern steamship, which belonged to a limited company, and the motion would raise an important question of law. The petition alleged that the mariners were engaged to the end of June at certain wages, and that they were dismissed on the 1st of May last. An affidavit of a pitiable nature made on the part of the seamen had been put in, and which, he submitted, ought not to have been filed. There was no doubt the men were entitled to the wages earned, but the point was whether this court had jurisdiction to entertain a claim for compensation. It was said they had a lien on the ship—they had as to wages actually earned, but the measure of damages was a question for a jury, and not for this court.

His Lordship observed that matters were frequently referred to the registrars and merchants on questions of damages.

Mr. Butt submitted that the Court had no jurisdiction in this case beyond the wages already earned, and to which they were entitled. The affidavit stated that some of the men had been wandering about Liverpool, but all he could say was they might have been paid.

Mr. Vernon Lushington denied the latter remark, and on the present occasion proceeded to contend that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the question for the wrongful dismissal. They had been discharged just two months before the time agreed upon, and without the payment of one farthing to some 500 men.

His Lordship said the question was whether the Court would be permitted—he believed by its patent the power was given—to entertain the question as to damages.

Mr Vernon Lushington thought it was whether, if the Court exercised the power, the Court of Queen's Bench would grant a prohibition.

Dr. Lushington—That is the question.

Mr. Vernon Lushington contended that it would be a great hardship to drive some 400 men to bring separate actions for damages, when all could be decided in this court.

The case proceeded, and judgment was reserved.

CURIOUS CASE.—Melbourne has this month been treated to a new kind of trial, before (to us) a new sort of tribunal. The cause has attracted much public attention; rather, more, perhaps, than its intrinsic importance would seem to warrant. A Rev. Mr. Booth, a clergyman of the Church of England, has been a defendant before an ecclesiastical court here—constituted, of course, under our church Assembly Act—charged with the offences of brawling and cruelty in church. The leading facts, which occurred some months back, at Wangaratta, are as follows:—During morning service one Sunday, a dog, which had strayed into the church, was making himself obnoxious, and a movement was made towards putting him out. The dog objected, retreated into the pew in which the clergyman's wife was seated, and, it is said, snapped at and bit her. The clergyman, joining the other casual objectors, made a first capture of the animal, which, after biting his captor, was then in some way handed to or recaptured by one of the congregation. The latter was bearing the cur from the church, when the clergyman seized the dog and suddenly broke one of his legs. This, some of the witnesses stated, was a wilful act on the part of the clergyman, although done under the influence of passion. Cries of "Shame!" came from some of the onlookers, several of whom left the church. Immense excitement was got up at Wangaratta, some few persons striving to excuse the clergyman, but the great majority siding with the dog. Our Bishop, Dr. Perry, was memorialized to remove Mr. Booth from his incumbency, but as he had a wife and two children, and had for many years preserved an irreproachable character, the bishop expressed his reluctance to take so extreme a course for one transitory fit of passion. The malcontent portion of the congregation were disgusted, and remonstrances appeared in the columns of the newspapers, as the subject is one on which every correspondent can be edifying on cruelty, and on what is becoming or unbecoming in Christian ministers. The excitement was kept up; the subject was even discussed at a meeting of the Church Assembly, and in the Legislative Assembly itself; and at last the bishop authorized the trial of Mr. Booth before a court, consisting of Mr. James Wilberforce Stephen (a leading equity counsel, and chancellor of the diocese) and four assessors. The trial came off in Melbourne; the prosecutors and the clergyman were respectively represented by counsel, and had the dog been represented by counsel too, his interest and position could not have been more conscientiously consulted. The facts, as above narrated, were fully proved, and the defendant was honest enough to admit that the act was wilful, and he thought to extenuate his conduct by pleading the transport of passion into which, for the moment, he was betrayed. He hoped for a lenient view of his position, and expressly quoted and relied on the leading case of David, a great sinner in various very unpleasant ways, but who was yet forgiven. Notwithstanding this line of defence, the assessors brought in a finding of guilty both of brawling and cruelty, and the sentence was six months' suspension from duty. But there arose a renewal of the agitation out of doors. More letters appeared in the newspapers, more newspaper articles complained of the inadequacy of the punishment. The bishop replied by only one letter, which seemed to have operated on the assailants like a chilled shot. Without attempting to justify the offender, his lordship, among other embarrassing arguments, submits that those who are so severe on the man who in the heat of passion breaks a dog's leg take no account of the persons who in mere sport, and without the excuse of passion, think nothing of breaking a bird's wing. The bishop here brings us inter apices juris, that we should condemn so warmly the breaking of the dog's leg, and think so lightly, or rather think not at all, of the many thousands of broken wings, is, I suppose, to be set down to mere habit and education. Be this as it may, the bishop's letter seems to have closed the controversy, and not prematurely; for, of all the dogs I have ever met with, this particular Wangaratta dog has certainly had his day.—Times' Correspondent.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

SALE OF SHARES AFTER A WINDING-UP.—B., a stockbroker, was employed by C. to sell shares in a company which had been ordered to be wound up. After he had sold, C. declined to execute a transfer, and B. was compelled, according to the rules of the Stock Exchange, to procure other shares for the purchaser. To an action against C. for breach of the contract of employment to sell, C. pleaded that the sanction of the liquidator or of the court was necessary, and that it was not defendant's duty to apply for it. But it was held that, although the sanction must be obtained in order to render the transfer operative, the defendant must execute the deed valeat quantum: (Biederman v. Stone, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 415. C. P.)

CONTRIBUTORY—APPLICATION FOR SHARES—ACCEPTANCE BY COMPANY.—The promoter of a company, who was one of the directors, in July 1863, after incorporation, offered to P. that he should supply glass, &c., to the company, provided that he at once took, and paid the deposit upon, fifty shares; and undertook that he should not be called upon to pay more than the deposit and the sum payable on allotment, but that all calls to be made in respect of those shares should be credited as payment on account of goods, and that this agreement should be made a minute of the board at its first meeting. A few days later P. applied for fifty shares and paid the deposit. The shares were, however, never allotted, but P.'s name was entered on the register, although no information of such entry was ever in any manner given to him. In Nov. 1863, P. attended a board meeting, when the terms were discussed, and with some slight modification put into writing by P., and on the same day the board resolved that his tender should be accepted, and this was communicated to him. He, however, on the 21st Dec., wrote declining to carry out the arrangement, and that letter was in no way noticed until the following July, when the secretary demanded payment of a call made upon the fifty shares. This was not paid; the company got into difficulties, the hotel was not built, and no goods were ever supplied by P.: Held, that under these circumstances there was no concluded agreement between the company and P. which would be binding upon both parties: Held, further, that such an agreement as was set up was not intra vires of the directors, inasmuch as it would materially alter the position with respect to calls in which persons taking shares were intended by the Companies Act to be placed. Where a person has made an application for shares, accompanied by a payment of the required deposit, some notice of the acceptance by the company of that application is necessary in order to bind the applicant, and the mere entry of his name upon the company's register was held to be immaterial: (Pellatt's case, L. T. Rep. N. S. 442. L.JJ.)

SCI. FA.—EXECUTION AGAINST A SHAREHOLDER.—The Court will not refuse to issue a sci. fa. on a judgment against a company for the purpose of obtaining execution against a shareholder, on the ground that the judgment is erroneous on the face of it: (Williams v. The Sidmouth Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 425. Ex.)

TRANSFER OF SHARES AND STOCK—REGISTRATION.—Sec. 16 of the Companies Clauses Act enacts that no shareholder shall be entitled to transfer any shares after any call shall have been made in respect thereof until he shall have paid such call, nor until he shall have paid all calls for the time being due on every share held by him. This was held not to refer to the transfer of shares fully paid up, and that the company was bound to register the transfer of such shares, although the transferror was the holder of other shares in the company on which calls were due and unpaid: (Hubbersty v. The Manchester, &c., Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 425. Ex. Ch.)

RAILWAY—LANDS TAKEN—NOTICE—PRACTICE.—B. was lessee of land required by a railway held by him conjointly with other lands of like tenure, and subject to a power against alienation without lessor's consent. The company gave the required notice to B. and took possession, but they refused to complete the purchase without the consent of the lessor. This was held not to be necessary, and specific performance was decreed: (Slipper v. Tottenham, &c., Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 446. M.R.)

DETINUE OF BANKRUPT'S POLICY OF INSURANCE.—A policy of insurance on the life of a bankrupt was handed over as a further security for a debt to a creditor, and subsequently, but before bankruptcy, the bankrupt signed a bought-note of the policy for the sum due. No notice was given to the insurance office, and at the examination the bankrupt swore that he had sold the policy. In an action by the assignees against the creditors for detention of the policy, it was held that the plaintiffs were entitled, on the ground that the facts of the case were distinguishable from those in Gibson v. Overbury, 7 M. & W. 555. That case decided that when the policy is deposited as a lien only, the assignees are not entitled to it, because there is no question of disputed ownership: (Green v. Ingham, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 455. C. P.)

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE RECORD OF TITLE ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

SIR,—At the risk of wearying the patience of your readers, which I fear has been already heavily taxed by this correspondence, I am induced to offer a few observations in reply to the "fourth letter" of "Leguleius," appearing in your last number, not indeed, as it seems to me, that there is much to answer, for he has left the objections I have made almost untouched.

He says that the Recorder of Title has no power to alter the Record save under the direction of the Court, and that a judicial act of this importance will be done with ample notice, and having due regard to the rights of any bona fide purchaser for value. Unfortunately the kind of error which is likely to occur, usually affects two innocent parties, one of whom must suffer, no matter what decision the Court may come to. Such a case is that upon which the judgment of the Court of Appeal has lately been pronounced (In Re Walsh's estate), in which two purchasers, both deriving their title from the Landed Estates' Court, were the contending parties, each relying on the strength of his Parliamentary Title. I think the judgment in that case establishes beyond question what I contended for in my last letter, namely, that indefeasibility and a power to correct are totally inconsistent with each other.

Your correspondent says that there is "not a shadow of pretence" for my statement that the "only safe course" open, in the case mentioned in my last letter was to withdraw the property in question from the Record of Title. On this point any of your professional readers, who have read the correspondence, will be able to form their own opinions. If they consider that "stop orders," recording in the names of trustees without right of survivorship, caveats and these other contrivances to protect the public from the indefeasible action of the Record of Title system, are perfectly safe, then, of course, I am wrong; but I have very little doubt that the most experienced of your readers will approve of the course advised by the counsel consulted upon the case in question, namely, to withdraw the property from the Record.

"Leguleius" complains of my treatment of his illustrations. It may be my stupidity, but I have always been under the impression that if an illustration is used in argument in an analogical way, it should have such a connexion or resemblance to the subject illustrated as would justify the use of it as an analogy. Now this is precisely what seems to me to be the want in your correspondent's illustrations. My objection to the public notices in the paper was not merely to their publicity, but that an heir-at-law or devisee should be obstructed in the enjoyment of his property by being obliged, although no one questioned his title, to publish these notices, and otherwise satisfy the Landed Estates' Court that he was entitled to possession of it, a proceeding hitherto unknown in the law of real estate. To justify this proceeding your correspondent gives as an illustration the case of an executor who, to protect himself against claims of creditors and next of kin, publishes a notice in the newspaper under the 22 & 23 Vic., cap. 35. I am, I confess, at a loss to discover the analogy here, save that both parties publish notices in a newspaper, an analogy which would hold good with any other advertisement in the same columns. If your correspondent will use illustrations of this kind, he need not blame me if I observe upon their total want of analogy.

With regard to the friendly hint he gives me about enlarging the scope of "The Record of Title Accident Assurance Company," by adding such casual injuries as might befall owners by the "default of agents" (by which I understand him to mean solicitors), I would beg to remind him that solicitors are personally answerable to the extent of all they possess, for default or neglect in their professional duties. Unfortunately, however, the public have no such redress against the Recorder of Title, who may commit any number of blunders (and with the greatest respect allow me to say I do not believe him to be infallible) with the most perfect impunity, as by the 53rd section of the Record of Title Act it is enacted that "The judge shall not, nor shall the officer, or any person acting under the authority of either of them, be liable to any action, suit, or proceeding for or in respect of any act or matter bona fide done or omitted in the exercise or supposed exercise of the powers of this Act."

That there was a probability of accidents occurring in the rapid but indefeasible proceedings of the Record of Title system, is, I think, abundantly evident from the fact of the promoters taking care to insert this clause in their Act, which protects the officers, from the highest to the lowest, against the consequences of their own mistakes, and leaves the damage to fall on the unhappy recorded owner or incumbrancer, as the case may be.

Your correspondent in his letter compares me to a "timorous navigator." Perhaps the illustration is true. I do not certainly feel justified in being such an adventurous one as to launch my client's estate upon that dangerous and unknown ocean, the Record of Title system, notwithstanding the encouraging language of your correspondent, and the heroic spirit of the "living philosopher," with a quotation from whom he begins his last letter. Perhaps "Leguleius" has heard the story (and it seems to me appropriate to his illustration) of a certain Irish pilot, who, with more confidence than experience, undertook to guide a ship through a very dangerous channel, alleging that he "knew every rock in it." He had scarcely spoken these words when the ship struck with a violent shock, upon which he coolly added, "There's one of them." It may be on account of my fears as a "timorous navigator," but I apprehend that such will be the experimental method in which many adventurous owners will learn the navigation of that unexplored ocean, the Record of Title system.

I remain, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
HENRY T. DIX.

33. What is the meaning of the principle, that equity acts in personam.
34. Will equity relieve against acts performed under mistaken notions of law or of fact?

A DISTINGUISHED LAW STUDENT.

It is particularly gratifying to find that the post of distinction at the recent general examination of students of the Inns of Court, held in Lincoln's Inn Hall. was won by a young Irishman, Mr. Thomas de Courcy Atkins, of Killarney. The collegiate career of this young gentleman has been a remarkable one. In 1865 he attained the "Exhibition" in equity, and the following year in common law. A first class certificate of honour was awarded to him at Michaelmas in the same year, and now he has carried off from a host of competitors, including Oxford classmen and Cambridge wranglers, the studentship of fifty guineas per annum, which continues for a period of three years. We are happy to perceive that, in presenting him with this handsome prize, Sir Laurence Peel, the treasurer and senior bencher of the Middle Temple, and one of the judges of the Privy Council, spoke of our clever young countryman as "the most distinguished student they ever had." Such honours are now-a-days rarely won, and having been won in so distinguished and creditable a manner, are well deserving of public notice.—Freeman's Journal.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS IN THE IRISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH—WESTMINSTER, JUNE 18.

(Before the Lord Chief Justice and Justices Mellor and Shee.)

Yeo v. the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

In this case a conditional order for a mandamus was obtained a few days ago calling upon the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to show cause why they should not give the necessary directions for payment to Mr. Yeo of a certain sum of money, being the arrears of salary claimed by him.

When the case was called on,

The Solicitor-General said—In this case I appear for the Lords of the Treasury to consent to the rule nisi being made absolute.

The Lord Chief Justice—You do not show cause?

The Solicitor-General—No, my lord. There is an important question at issue, which must be argued. It turns upon the construction of the particular section of the statute referred to (7 and 8 Vic., cap. 107) by my learned friend, Mr. Raymond, when moving for the rule. The Lords Commissioners do not, therefore, show cause.

Mr. Raymond appeared for Mr. Yeo.

The conditional order for the issuing of a writ of mandamus was made absolute.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

LOT 1.
COUNTY OF KILKENNY.

This Lot, consisting of the Lands of Ballyogan partly adjoins the River Barrow; and there is frequent and cheap communication by the Barrow Navigation Company's Boats, between Waterford and Dublin, and the intermediate towns; an excellent road from Graigue to the flourishing town of New Ross passes through the Lands.

The Lands are capable of being much increased in value by drainage; the tenants are solvent and respectable, and pay their rents punctually.

LOTS 2 TO 6.
TOWN OF CARLOW.

These Lots consist of well secured profit rents, arising out of Houses and Premises situate in Tullow-street, Tullow-gate, Dublin-street, Bridewell-lane, Brown-street, Charlotte-street, and Montgomery-street, in the Town of Carlow.

LOT 7.
QUEEN'S COUNTY.

This Lot consists of the Lands of Bocka. A considerable sum has been recently expended by the Owner on this Lot, in making roads, drains &c., and the Lands are capable of further improvement. The shooting of the mountains is valuable.

LOT 8.
QUEEN'S COUNTY.

The Lands of Graigue, known as Wallfield, and portion of the Town of Graigue, the entire of which is held only by two tenants, who are respectable and pay their rents regularly.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, JUNE 29, 1867.

IT is to be hoped that, with the introduction of the new Chancery and Common Law Bills, a new system of transacting the business of the several Courts will be inaugurated, and that many irregularities and abuses which exist at present, and are productive of inconvenience to the Bench, and both branches of the profession, will pass away for ever with the old regime.

It would be a problem of hopeless difficulty to determine, to the satisfaction of all concerned, to whom principally the causes of the many prevailing irregularities and abuses are to be attributed; but we must protest against the unfair and usual habit of throwing the censure and responsibility on the heads of the Solicitors and Attorneys, in almost every instance, where anything goes astray. "Quicquid delirant reges plectuntur Achivi," may be stated as the almost invariable rule in such cases. It may, however, be said that there was an exception to this rule in the late indignant manifesto, which the Lord Chancellor caused to be borne on the wings of the Press to the remotest corner of his jurisdiction. His Lordship, it will be said, administered his censure on both branches of the profession without favour or affection. No one knows better than his Lordship that in cases of a similar nature to that of which he complained, the fault most frequently lies with the Bar, and not with the Solicitors, and if he intended to make them equally objects of his animadversion we have no complaint to make. The remedy for correcting this state of things lies, not with the Bench, but the Solicitors themselves. If, in the seven cases out of the twelve in the list for the day, the fault really lay with Counsel retained for the petitioners, it is not surprising that every Solicitor, on whom so grave a censure was pronounced, should feel deeply aggrieved. The unlucky five at the end of the list, who came in for the heaviest share of the denunciation, have the greatest cause of complaint. So far from being culpable, it was only reasonable for them to suppose that they need not be in punctual attendance at the sitting of the Court. It is, therefore, no matter for surprise that they felt more keenly than the seven defaulters that preceded them, the remarks of the Chancellor. Like schoolboys who have committed some offence outside the jurisdiction of the pedagogue, and are by him kindly recommended to the attention of their parents and guardians for special chastisement, the solicitors of the High Court of Chancery in Ireland are for the future to be specially mentioned in official despatches to their clients.

In order to extend to suitors in general the benefit of the new scheme, it might be suggested by some speculative reformer, that an index of the names of all transgressors should be established, and placed within the reach of all inquirers, at a small charge. In course of time we might expect an "Equity Black List," with all the benefits likely to flow from a salutary publication of the kind.

But, in sober truth, it must be conceded that, no matter where the fault lay, the Chancellor had good grounds for complaining that the Court was trifled with to an extent not to be tolerated; and every well-wisher of the legal profession must deprecate the recurrence of what took place on the occasion to which we allude. What has occurred will, we trust, lead to results satisfactory to practitioners, and promote a degree of certainty and regularity in conducting the business of the Court, which at present is most desirable.

The threat of the Chancellor may have been made in the warmth of the moment, and the intention so positively announced may never be carried into effect. For our own part, we must confess a desire to see the experiment tried on the first opportunity; and if any Solicitor, who may be reported to his client as guilty of gross negligence, shall not be able to vindicate his conduct before a jury, in the name of all that is just, let him be punished, and make adequate compensation in damages for any injury he has occasioned. If, on the other hand, the blame imputed to him is fairly attributable to others—be they Judges, or their immediate officials, or Barristers-at-law, whether humble or eminent—the sooner the subject is thoroughly ventilated, and matters placed in their true light before the public, the better it will be, not alone for the individual Solicitor concerned, but for every one having any interest in the matter.

We urge these few remarks on the attention of the Solicitors, in the hope that they will, in future, take up a manly and independent position, and protest against the practice now prevailing of visiting them, in every instance, with the blame and responsibility of every miscarriage and default, no matter how innocent in fact they may be.

It will be seen, from an announcement in our columns, that Belfast is to be favoured this year with a visit from the Social Science Association, and from the distinguished reputation of the Presidents of the different sections, we may rest assured that the questions under discussion will receive the fullest elucidation. Amongst the subjects to be discussed are some in which the Profession are highly interested, and we confidently anticipate that its members in Belfast, and those who visit that city on the occasion, will avail themselves of the opportunity thus to be afforded them of interchanging opinions with some of the highest functionaries of the law, who are connected with the Association.

The sections of the first division, under the presidency of the Right Hon. Justice O'Hagan, are exclusively legal, and the subjects under the head of "Municipal Law" in Section B, cannot fail to elicit a full discussion, viz.:—"On what points should the laws and procedure of England and Ireland be assimilated?" There is no doubt, that on many points, particularly in the laws relating to bankruptcy and imprisonment for debt, this country would have much to gain from an assimilation, and the opinion of the Profession is generally strong in its favour. The Profession is not quite so unanimous in favour of another point under the same section, viz., "How far is it desirable to further centralize or localize the administration of justice?" We have examples how extreme centralization works on the Continent, and they certainly do not prepossess us in favour of the system. In the second division, of which Thomas Andrews, M.D., F.R.S., is President, the Association proposes to consider whether the National or Denominational system of Education is best suited to the circumstances of Ireland. But it is in the questions comprised under the fourth division, over which Sir Robert Kane, F.R.S., presides, that the legal and general public will be most interested, as these questions have all, during this session, been brought before the Houses of Parliament. The first is "What Legislative or other measures can be adopted to improve the relations between landlord and tenant in Ireland?" and the second is "What are the economic results of the continuous emigration from Ireland?" The fate that attended the bills brought in by members of both Liberal and Conservative Governments, to amend the law on these subjects, forbids us to hope that any very definite proposals will be agreed to; but from the well-known ability and practical statesmanship of the President of the Association, Lord Dufferin, who has shown himself so thoroughly master of this difficult and delicate question by his late letters to The Times, and from the reputation and long experience of Sir Robert Kane in dealing with the Economy and Trade of Ireland, it is certain that all that can be urged on both sides will be said, and the English visitors, and members of the Social Science Association will be able to judge for themselves what are the comparative merits of the custom rather than law which secures to the Ulster tenant the enjoyment of that envied privilege quoted by so many of our countrymen, as the source of the prosperity of the north of Ireland.

An unusual but not uninteresting suit is now pending in a Court comparatively unknown to the general body of Solicitors. The tribunal to which we refer is the Provincial Court of Dublin, and the suit, that of Mills v. Craig, appointed to be heard before it on Tuesday, the 9th proximo. The Provincial Court of Dublin may be said to represent the late Consistorial Court, and is presided over by Dr. Battersby, its "Official, Principal, Chancellor, and Judge," and its jurisdiction is governed by the Ecclesiastical Courts and Registries Act (Ireland), 1864 (27 and 28 Vic., cap. 54), whilst its procedure is guided by "The Rules and Orders" thereunder approved of by the Lord Lieutenant in Council on the 16th September, 1865.

In the case in question, "The office of the Judge" is "promoted by the Rev. Thos. Mills, clk., A.M., petitioner, against the Rev. Herbert Tudor Craig respondent;" and the prayer of the petition, which is in a suit of intrusion, seeks a citation to the respondent, requiring his answer to the facts alleged, and this citation has been granted by the Archbishop.

The suit brought by the Rev. Mr. Mills may be said to be one to restrain the Rev. Mr. Craig from performing certain spiritual offices, or celebrating Divine service within the parish of St. Jude, of which the petitioner is the incumbent. The ministrations complained of as invasions of the petitioner's rights in his incumbency are the officiations of the respondent under pretence of an authority from the Secretary for War, to the office of Military Chaplain of Richmond Barracks, which is stated to be within the limits of St. Jude's; and the petitioner also complains of the respondent doing other acts within the parish, such as visiting the sick, administering the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper, and preparing for Confirmation, without the consent of the Archbishop or the licence of the incumbent.

It is manifestly apparent that the suit is brought to ascertain the limits of the duties of a military or garrison chaplain, appointed as such; and as the "answer" has not yet been filed, we will at present do no more than take the opportunity to draw the attention of our readers to the varied and extensive jurisdiction and easily acquired practice of the Provincial Court of Dublin—a Court which, by sec. 53 of the Act alluded to, is open to all branches of the legal profession.

Our readers will see, on reference to our Parliamentary reports, that the "Attorneys' Certificate Duty Bill" passed through Committee, without alteration, on Tuesday night. Mr. Walpole intimated, however, that the motion for the third reading would meet with opposition from the Government. Another strenuous and united effort will therefore be necessary on the part of the supporters of the measure, and, despite even of Ministerial hostility, we may be able to announce next week a triumphant result.

SOCIAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION.

The eleventh annual meeting of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science will be held in Belfast, from the 18th to the 25th of September, 1867. President—The Right Hon. Lord Dufferin and Clandeboye. President of the council—The Right Hon. Lord Brougham. General secretary—George Woodyatt Hastings. Foreign secretary—John Westlake.

The following are the special questions chosen by the standing committees of the several departments for discussion at the meeting:—

I.—JURISPRUDENCE AND AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

President—The Right Hon. Justice O'Hagan.

Section A.—International Law.

1.—Is it desirable that there should be an International currency? and, if so, on what basis? 2.—Is it desirable to establish a general system of arbitration? and, if so, on what principle should it be organized?

Section B.—Municipal Law.

1.—On what points should the laws and procedure of England and Ireland be assimilated? 2.—Is it desirable to establish a Court of Criminal Appeal on the facts? and if so, on what plan? 3.—How far is it desirable to further centralize or localize the administration of justice?

Section C.—Repression of Crime.

President—The Right Hon. the Master of the Rolls.

1.—What better measures can be adopted for the repression of crimes of violence against the person? 2.—How can the organization of our police be improved with a view to the more effectual repression of crime.

II.—EDUCATION.

President—Thomas Andrews, M.D., F.R.S.

1.—Is the "National" or "denominational" system of education best suited to the circumstances of Ireland? 2.—What are the best means for improving the status of teachers, and for securing for the public sufficient guarantees for the efficiency of their teaching? 3.—What is the best method for educating the idiotic and imbecile? and ought the State to subsidize educational establishments for such persons?

III.—PUBLIC HEALTH.

President—Sir James Y. Simpson, Bart.

1.—What measures are necessary to secure efficiency and uniformity in the working of the sanitary laws throughout the kingdom? 2.—In what respects do the registration systems of England, Ireland, and Scotland, need improvement? and is it desirable that they should be assimilated? 3.—In what form and to what extent is it desirable that the public should provide means for the recreation of the working classes?

IV.—ECONOMY AND TRADE.

President—Sir Robert Kane, F.R.S.

Section A.

1.—What legislative or other measures can be adopted to improve the relations between landlord and tenant in Ireland? 2.—What are the economic results of the continuous emigration from Ireland? 3.—Should the Local Government Acts be extended to Ireland.

Section B.

1.—Can any measures be taken to develop and extend the manufactures of Ireland? 2.—What action, if any, ought the Government to take with regard to railways? 3.—How may the extension of the Irish fisheries be best promoted?

The days not devoted to special questions will be reserved for voluntary papers.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.—Tuesday afternoon, in the Members' Tea Room of the House of Commons, a large body of the Excise branch of the Civil Service waited upon members of the House of Commons, to urge upon their consideration the many disadvantages their class suffer, and, among other things, the great advantage which would accrue to the public service and to the revenue if the three branches of the Customs—namely, Stamps, Taxes, and Excise—were consolidated. Among the members present were Baron Rothschild, Mr. Serjeant King, Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. Horsfall, Mr. George S. Smyth, Lord Curzon, Mr. John Candlish, Mr. P. A. Taylor, Sir John Gray, Mr. Bass, and many others. While the deputation were explaining, through Mr. Meikle, Mr. Steel, and other spokesmen, the various points for the consideration of the members, showing that the excise officers have heavy responsibilities and duties, at comparatively low salaries, many of the members were called away to the House. The deputation proceeded to urge that there would be great advantage in combining such offices as the collection of the excise and the collection of the assessed taxes, for now the two offices were carried out separately in cases where one officer could perform both duties, and the members who remained agreed that a case for inquiry had been made out, and urged the deputation to draw up their statements concisely, so that attention might be given to the various points. The deputation thanked the members and withdrew. This branch of the Civil servants, whose case was reported a few weeks since in The Times, is holding a day-to-day conference at Exeter-hall.

THE BAR OF SCOTLAND.—The Edinburgh Courant says a meeting of the Faculty of Advocates was to be held on Friday for the purpose of considering the following resolution to be moved by the Dean:—"That the Faculty are of opinion that the Bar of Scotland should be put on the same footing as regards the appointment of Queen's Counsel as the Bar of England and of Ireland, and direct the Dean and his council to communicate this resolution to her Majesty's Government."

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

FRENCH v. DE HAESSELEE.

May 14.—Practice—Substitution on Decree.

The petition was filed by a holder of a bill of exchange of the respondent, the Baroness of Haesselee, a married woman, to recover the amount out of certain lands in Ireland, settled to her separate use. The respondent resided abroad, and her agent, who was in receipt of the rents, when applied to refused to give her address. Neither the respondent nor her agent had any residence in Ireland.

Vereker moved to substitute service on the land agent, and the Court made a conditional order.

May 10.—Practice—Discharge of Ward of Court—Usual Reference Dispensed with.

E. F. Litton moved a petition that a minor should be discharged from the wardship of the Court, and asked for an order, without the usual reference to enquire whether anything was due for maintenance or costs. The petition stated that nothing was due for maintenance or costs. The annual income of the minor was not more than £31. The Court discharged the minor without a reference.

SHANNON v. BELLEW.

June 11.—Sale by Auction—Puffer—Leave to a Party to Bid.

This was a mortgage suit, and a decree was made for a sale of the mortgaged property. The sale took place by auction before Mr. Littledale, one of the conditions of sale being that the highest bidder should be the purchaser, with the approval of the Master. Mr. Powell was declared the purchaser for £500. All the biddings beyond £300 were made by a Mr. Reardon, who was clerk of the solicitor for the mortgagees, and who admittedly bid on their behalf without having obtained the leave of the Court. An application was made before the Master to whom the cause was referred, under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act, to set aside the sale. The Master refused the motion, and the purchaser appealed.

The motion was put on two grounds—1st, that Reardon was a puffer; 2ndly, that he bid for the mortgagees without the leave of the Court.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was of opinion that even if Reardon was a puffer, the practice in sales under the Court was that one puffer does not invalidate a sale. But he held that Reardon was not a puffer—that term applying to a person who bids at an auction but does not intend, and is not bound to complete the purchase; and that the objection that the leave of the Court was not obtained was an irregularity which the purchaser could not take advantage of, and the motion was refused with costs.

HARVEY v. BUCHANAN AND OTHERS.

June 23.—Motion for New Trial—When Refused.

Dr. Ball, Q.C., for some of the defendants, moved for a conditional order for a new trial of the issue. The issue was in respect of two alleged wills, made by John Norris, dated respectively the 12th and 13th October, 1866, each in favour of the plaintiff, but the second nominated executors, which the first omitted to do.

The case was at trial for several days before the Court and a special jury. The deceased, it appeared, had been subject to eccentricities, and even to delusions, on some matters, but they did not appear to exist at the time of the making of the alleged wills.

The testator was entitled to freehold estates of the annual value of £700, besides considerable personal assets.

He died a bachelor, and his next of kin were cousins, of whom the plaintiff was one. He died on the evening of the 13th October 1866; the last will having been made on the morning of that day. A draft of a will, in the handwriting of the testator, made several years before, and in favour of a brother of the plaintiff, but who had gone abroad, and had not been heard of for many years, was given in evidence by the plaintiff, to show testamentary intention in favour of his family.

The testator had, amongst other oddities, a peculiar aversion to doctors, and in fact died, as was proved, from want of proper attention in that respect. A letter was also proved, in the deceased's handwriting, written on the 11th of October, 1866, to the plaintiff, urging him to come over and take care of the deceased and all his property, as he had the best right to it. Several medical gentlemen were examined for the defendants, who deposed, from a post mortem examination of the body of the deceased, that he must have been delirious and under delusions for three or four weeks previous to his death. He had a severe anthrax on his back, that had been entirely neglected, and the deceased took little nourishment, but lived entirely on milk, or weak tea, and vegetable diet, and was greatly emaciated; and he also lived an excluded life, not associating with his friends or relatives.

On the trial the learned Judge charged the jury strongly in favour of the defendants, and against the validity of the wills; but at the same time left the question to the jury for their exclusive consideration on the evidence.

The jury found a verdict establishing both the wills, as together containing the last will of the testator; and the Judge, therefore, made a decree to that effect, awarding to the defendants their costs out of the estate. Counsel argued that from the nature of the property, being inheritable, and from the difficulties of the case, the verdict was not satisfactory, and ought not to bind the inheritor; and cited Boyce v. Rossborough, 6 H. L. C. 45; Tatham v. Wright, 2 R. & M. 16, in support of his argument.

KEATINGE, J.—I am afraid that I charged the jury too favourably for you, but the question was especially a jury question, and I am not at all prepared to say that I am dissatisfied with the verdict. I was very much struck by the unquestioned fact of a draft of a will being proved in the handwriting of the deceased in favour of a brother of the plaintiff, in addition to the other evidence given by documents, and by parol for the plaintiff. No doubt the conduct of the plaintiff was disgraceful in not taking proper care of the deceased, when he was sent for; and I visited him, so far as I could, with a penalty for his misconduct, by ordering him to pay the costs of the defendants; but as the question was a fair jury question, I will make no rule on the present motion.

No rule.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before DOBBS, J.

Estate of JOHN S. KIRWAN.

June 19.—Compensation—County Road.

Ormsby, Q.C., for Mr. Armstrong, the purchaser of Lot No. 4 of the lands sold in this matter, applied that compensation might be given to him under the following circumstances:—It appeared by this affidavit that Mr. Armstrong was the purchaser of the lot in question for £1,625, and that he was a trustee for his son; that on the map connected with the rental there was marked upon the lands a county road; that previously to the sale he visited the lands, but his attention was principally directed to that portion of them which was under cultivation; that, relying upon the rental, he believed there was a county road over the lands, and that three or four months after the sale he learned that no such road existed, or had been presented for. Mr. Armstrong's son, in the affidavit made by him, claimed such a sum as would be sufficient to construct the road, and stated that there was merely a lane. An affidavit made by one of the tenants stated that there was no road leading into these lands from the adjoining lands, and that the tenants had to convey their stock by boats upon the Shannon. Another tenant stated in his affidavit that the road through the lands was never a county road, and that it would require a sum of about £130 to make a good farm road.

DOBBS, J., without calling on the counsel who opposed the motion, said that if the purchaser had not got his conveyance he would have felt inclined to discharge him from his purchase, but it would be difficult to give him compensation; that the existence of a road or a right of way over lands was generally regarded as lessening their value rather than the reverse; that what was marked on the map was a road not leading from one extremity of the lands to the other, but, in fact, leading nowhere, and therefore it would not be an advantage to the purchaser to have such a road; that it was a principle acted on in this Court, that if there was a right of way over lands sold in it, and the purchaser had visited them before the sale, he could not afterwards allege that he did not know of its existence; that this case was the converse of that one; that the purchaser in this case must have seen what sort of a road did run over the lands, as the only houses on them were in a cluster near to it; that the Court could not make a road for him, and it would be impossible to say what would be compensation for the want of it; but the Court could not give the purchaser compensation since he had visited the lands before the sale.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by JOHN LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Before BERWICK, J.

June, 1867.—Re the Bagnalstown and Wexford Railway Co., ex parte Smith and Others.

Railway Company made Bankrupt—Sale of Undertaking — Railway Mortgages — Statutable Mortgage — Priority of Mortgages created by Directors under the Special Act—Lands on which a Railway is Constructed—Validity of Bonds and Mortgages of a Railway Co.

Where a Railway Co. is made bankrupt, and an Act of Parliament is obtained to enable the Assignees in bankruptcy to sell the undertaking, and a sale accordingly takes place, and the proceeds are brought into Court and claimed by two classes of Mortgage Creditors—first, those having mortgages granted by the Company under their Special Act, and the borrowing powers contained therein; secondly, those having statutable mortgages, registered under the Judgment Mortgages Act, and declared by the Court of Appeal to be well charged upon the lands of the Company, the mortgages created by the Company in pursuance of their powers will be entitled to payment in priority out of the und in Court, the proceeds of the sale of such undertaking.

The word undertaking is an ambiguous one, and where it occurs it must be decided by the context; but the sale of a railway as an undertaking means the lands on which it is constructed, as well as the whole line, with its tolls, &c. There cannot be a sale of the land on which a railway is constructed without the sale of the entire undertaking.

Debentures, bonds, and mortgages issued by a Railway Company, and regularly entered in their books according to the provisions of their Act, must be presumed to be valid, and no question can be raised respecting them.

This case came before the Court upon charge and discharge. The charge was filed by J. Smith, solicitor, on the part of several mortgagees and bondholders of the company, and the discharge was filed by Messrs. Smith and Bagnal, contractors for making the line, to whom a simple contract debt was due, on foot of which they obtained a judgment which was registered as a statutable mortgage.

Palles, Q.C., and P. Martin, were for the parties filing the charge; Kernan, Q.C., J. T. Ball, Q.C., and Falkiner, Q.C., were for Messrs. Bagnal and Smith. T. White was for Captain Lefroy, a bondholder. The facts appear in the judgment of Judge BERWICK.

Judge BERWICK said—At the close of the arguments in this case I expressed a very decided opinion upon the points raised, but as a great number of authorities were referred to which I wished to examine, I deferred giving my final judgment until I could do so, and the result has been to confirm my original views; and as it may be of importance to the parties, I now state, as distinctly as I can, the grounds of my opinion. In this case Mr. John Smith, a mortgage-creditor of this company, has filed a charge on behalf of himself and several other mortgagees, specified in a schedule to his charge, claiming to be entitled to a first charge on the funds now remaining in Court arising from the sale of the railway. To this charge Mr. John Joseph Bagnal has filed a discharge, setting forth his title to a judgment obtained against the company on the 11th May, 1863, and registered as a statutable mortgage, against the lands of which the company were then seized, and which, by the judgment of this Court, confirmed by the Court of Appeal, was declared well charged on the lands of the company, specified in the affidavit on which his judgment was registered, and he thereby impeaches these mortgages on the ground therein stated, and claims a paramount charge on the funds in Court, or at least on such part thereof as represents the lands upon which his judgment is made a specific charge. He sets forth, besides, certain specified grounds on which he disputes the amount claimed on some of these mortgages; but this part of the case was not gone into, inasmuch as it was conceded that if he could not displace the mortgages generally and establish his priority to all, either against the whole fund, or at least such part as represented the value of the lands, the fund in Court would be exhausted by these mortgages, against which no such particular ground of objection existed. All the mortgages referred to in the charge were, with one exception, issued in the year 1859, and bore date on or after the 2nd of August, 1859; they were all in the same form, sealed with the common seal of the company, duly attested and registered as mortgages in the office of the company by its secretary on the respective days of their dates, and purported to be executed in pursuance of the several Acts under which the company was incorporated, and to grant and assign to the mortgagees, in consideration of the sum then paid to the company, "the undertaking known as the Bagnalstown and Wexford Railway; and all future calls, and tolls, and sums of money arising by virtue of said Acts, and all the estate, right, title, and interest of the Company in the same." As a matter of fact all these mortgages were granted, and duly registered in the books of the company long before the registration of Mr. Bagnal's judgment. The general ground on which these mortgages were impeached by Mr. Bagnal was that they were not granted in pursuance of the powers contained in the Act of incorporation, and were therefore invalid. By the 7th section of the 17 and 18 Victoria (the original Act of incorporation), the company was empowered, as soon as the whole capital of the company was subscribed for, and one-half actually paid up, to borrow any sum not exceeding £90,000, and to mortgage and assure all future calls, and also the railway undertaking, and the works, lands, &c., of the company connected therewith, and all other property of which the company might be seized for securing repayment. By the 19 and 20 Victoria, cap. 88, passed on the 14th July, 1856, reciting the powers so given to the company to raise £90,000 by mortgage, and that the whole of the capital had not been subscribed for, and the company were unable to obtain the funds necessary to execute their undertaking unless additional facilities were afforded to enable them to raise a portion of the monies necessary for the purpose, the powers so given by the former Act to borrow on mortgage to the extent of £90,000, were modified by enabling the company, when and so soon as the first division of the line was completed and opened for public traffic, to raise by mortgage such portion of the £90,000, not exceeding one-third of such amount, as should be certified by the Board of Trade to have been actually expended on executing that portion of their undertaking; and the mortgagees were empowered to enforce the principal and interest in the same manner as if the mortgage had been made under the powers of the first recited Act. By the 22 and 23 Victoria, cap. 36, passed on the first of August 1859, reciting that the first division of the railway had been completed and opened for public traffic, and that the company had not borrowed any money on mortgage or bond, and that the powers given by the last recited Act for borrowing money for the purposes of the undertaking had been found insufficient; the power of the company to raise money by mortgage was extended to £35,000, of which they were empowered to raise, so soon as the first division of the line was completed and opened for public traffic, a portion not exceeding one-half of the amount to be certified by the Board of Trade as actually expended on that part of the undertaking. It was conceded that the first portion of the line was completed and opened for traffic on the 20th of October, 1858, before the execution of any of the mortgages in question, and that the amount certified by the Board of Trade to have been expended thereon was more than double the amount of all the mortgages mentioned in the charge, and the whole monies raised thereon did not exceed £21,510. It was, however, contended, on the part of Mr. Bagnal, that the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act of 1845 was incorporated with, and formed part of, the Acts of this company, and that it was by the 38 section of that Act required that the determination of the amount of money to be borrowed on mortgage shall be exercised only at a general meeting of the company, and that no sufficient general meeting was held to authorize the raising of the money included in any of these mortgages. In answer to this objection a number of cases were cited, on the part of the mortgagees, to show that, as a general principle, a departure from the formalities required by the Act of incorporation does not affect the validity of contracts under the seal of the company, affixed in due form, inasmuch as corporations are bound by their act under their corporate seals; and I was called upon to adopt this principle in this case.

His Lordship, after most fully reviewing all the facts of the case, and referring to the authorities cited, said:—In my opinion the mortgagees specified in the schedule to the charge have established their prior claim to the fund now to be distributed, to the extent of the sums found to be due on foot of their mortgages. The case of Mr. Bagnal is a very hard one. He was the contractor who was engaged in making the railway of which the mortgagees derive, in part, the advantage, and I will not give any costs against him of this argument. Of course, the mortgagees must have their costs against the fund, but only one set of costs, as all the mortgagees agreed to join in this proceeding.

HOUSE OF LORDS—JUNE 20.

The noble and learned lords present were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth, and Lord Colonsay.

LONGWORTH OR YELVERTON v. LONGWORTH.

In this case, in which it was understood that the appellant would appear on her own behalf, an application was made to postpone the hearing for a few days, on account of the illness of the lady.

The case comes before their lordships upon a very curious point. The question whether a marriage had taken place between the parties having been determined by their lordships in the previous appeal adversely to Miss Longworth, or as she still claims to be, Mrs. Yelverton, she applied to the Court of Session in Scotland to refer the matter to the oath of the respondent, the Hon. Major Yelverton. The Court of Session having refused her application, the present appeal was brought.

The Lord Chancellor said it was difficult to determine what course their lordships ought to adopt under the circumstances, seeing that time after time the case has been put off at the instance of the appellant.

Mr. Anderson, who appeared on behalf of the respondent, stated that the learned counsel who was to appear for the appellant had been telegraphed for to come to London this morning, but had not yet arrived. He had no objection to the case standing over for a day or two.

The Lord Chancellor said their lordships had understood that the lady was going to argue her case in person. If she was to be represented by counsel the hearing need not be postponed on account of her ill health. However, under the circumstances, it would be better to fix this day week for the case to come on peremptorily, unless an application were made on behalf of the appellant in the course of the day for the case to be taken earlier.

No application having been made during the day, the case stands fixed for Thursday next.

THURSDAY.

The noble and learned lords present this morning were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth, Lord Westbury, and Lord Colonsay.

This case, which has been so long litigated in various courts in England, Scotland, and Ireland, came before the House of Lords this morning upon a very curious point. The question of a marriage between the parties as established by evidence having been decided by their Lordships in the previous appeal adversely to Miss Longworth, or, as she still claims to be, Mrs. Yelverton, she applied to the Court of Session in Scotland to refer the matter to the oath of the respondent, the Hon. Major Yelverton. The origin of probation by oath under the Scotch law may be traced to the Roman law, and, indeed, is traced by Stair to more authoritative sources, and its competency in certain cases is fully admitted by the law of Scotland. It is an appeal to the conscience of the adversary, chiefly resorted to as a last resource, when ordinary proof has failed in establishing a fact important to the just decision of the question at issue.

It is a singular fact that in scarcely any instance has a Court been unanimous in rejecting the claims of the appellant.

Owing to its having transpired that the appellant would argue her case in person, the bar of the House was crowded, a considerable number of ladies and members of the Bar being present.

The appellant addressed their Lordships in a firm, clear voice, which became loud and impassioned when she adverted to the unfortunate position in which she was placed by the conflicting decisions that had been given on her case. When the case was called on the appellant said that her counsel was detained in Edinburgh upon important business, and would be unable to argue the case on her behalf. She therefore proposed to argue the case herself. She then proceeded to read passages from her printed case and the judgments of the Court below. In commenting upon the judgment of the Lord President, she said she failed to discover any prominent reason advanced by that learned judge why a general rule of law should be stayed on this occasion save the one so forcibly put by his Lordship—namely, "that Mrs. Forbes would not like it were she asked;" but even, with his vast learning, he admitted that he knew no precedent for such a question being put. It would surely be the advent of a curious state of matrimonial arrangements if the second wife were permitted to raise her hand and bar the investigation of a prior marriage; yet, if the argument of the learned judge was good for anything, it was good for that. "But," said his Lordship, "she has the last judgment in her favour," did that reason meet the case? If so, upon the same ground, it should have been equally competent for the first wife, when possessed of a judgment, in her favour, to have raised her hand and have stopped further proceedings. "But," said his Lordship, "Mrs. Forbes was married in a church in facie ecclesiae, and we must support this particular form of religious ceremony." "Oh! my Lords," said the appellant upon this point, "I should like to see a little less specialistic ritualism, and a little more religious adherence to the immutable and everlasting law of God. That Major Yelverton at two different altars, in two different churches, but in presence of the one God solemnly vowed himself, and took two different women to love and cherish till death did them part all within the short space of a twelvemonth, has been proved beyond yea or nay; but one was in Scotland, the other in Ireland; one was a Catholic and the other was a Protestant altar; that was the only tangible difference. We Catholics are not Fire Worshippers, or followers of Vishnu; we are Christians, and adore the same Christ Saviour, and desire to following his teaching in respect to being the wife of one husband. Is not this ligitation as irksome to the one lady as to the other? Is the expense not as great to the unfortunate lady dragged into this cause by Major Yelverton—for I have to state distinctly that this is purely Major Yelverton's action—that there was no action pending against him when this was instituted, and no proceedings have been raised against him for five years; that he was offered the withdrawal of any further demands, or claims, or litigation, after the Irish trial, but he has chosen to pursue this most revolting and disgraceful of actions to the feelings and honour of a lady—an action which is a disgrace to the statute-book of a civilized land. True that your Lordships with the delicacy of Christian gentlemen, did not grant the full solatium prayed for by the respondent. True that your Lordships put your veto upon the revolting and barbarous spectacle of a lady being fined, prosecuted, and despoiled of her substance and her just earnings for the only reason that she maintained before God and man the assertion and proof of her untarnished honour, because she refused to sully her breath of life by owning, even under the dastardly torture of a £50 penalty, she was other than a virtuous wife. This appeal to your Lordship's House would not have taken place had the respondent not refused to depone on oath, when, if his conscience would have allowed him to depone negatively, it must have been conclusive; nor does it seem more pertinent to advance the delicate sensitiveness of a man's feelings whose reckless want of it brought down upon him in the Dublin court the bitter hisses of his fellow-countrymen." For seven long years had her claims been bandied about in various courts in the three kingdoms; they had been submitted to 18 judges, and handled by nearly a hundred lawyers without any unanimous decision being arrived at. "It is not my intention," continued the appellant, "to trespass upon the time of your Lordships by a recital of my bitter wrongs and unprecedented sufferings for years, but when the Scotch judges devote arguments to the pleading in misericordia for Major Yelverton, and exercise the discretion of the Court in his behalf, it gives me the right to plead before this Court, the highest tribunal of equity, that the Scotch judges had done well to be just before they were generous, that they had done well to remember the outraged, unprotected stranger standing at their bar for the measure of justice, waiting for several long years in the agonizing alternations of hope and despair—one moment pronounced to be a lawful wife and the next degraded to the lowest depth to which a woman can fall when guilty. Reft of home, of husband, and of honour, cast ruthlessly on the cold and blighting world, desolate yet undaunted, she has been drifted a pauper before your Lordships."

At this stage of the proceedings the further hearing of the case was adjourned, the presence of the Lord Chancellor being required elsewhere on important public business.

The Attorney-General and Mr. Anderson appeared for the respondent.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

COURT OF CHANCERY BILL (IRELAND).

On the 21st instant, in the House of Commons, on the motion that this bill be read a third time, Mr. O'Beirne moved that the bill be re-committed. He stated his regret that the course which the right hon. gentleman the Attorney-General for Ireland had adopted in the conduct of this measure left him (Mr. O'Beirne) no alternative, if the many important amendments which had been put upon the paper with reference to this bill were to be considered. In moving that the bill be re-committed he had no desire whatever to offer any obstruction to its becoming law; he merely desired to give the hon. and learned member for Clare the opportunity of explaining the nature and importance of the amendments of which he had given notice —an opportunity which, by the proceeding of the Attorney-General, had been hitherto denied him. The conduct of this bill from its introduction to this moment was, he would venture to say, of a most unusual character. There was a disregard of all professional and parliamentary courtesy. The right hon. gentleman had no doubt acted quite within his right, and had suited his own convenience also, but at the sacrifice of all consideration either for the hon. and learned members of his own profession, or of the hon. members who took an interest in the measure, and whose only desire was that if it became law it should be as free from blemish as it could be made by descussion in that house (hear, hear). He (Mr. O'Beirne) had stated that a most unusual course had been adopted by the right hon. gentleman. He would now state the facts upon which he relied in proof of that charge, and he believed the house would agree with him that the bill had been forced on without that care to which a measure of such serious import to the Irish public as well as to the practice of the court so largely entitled it. On the 22nd of February last the right hon. gentleman introduced the bill, and on the 14th March it was read a second time. No opposition whatever was offered to its principles, but it was considered faulty in detail, and several amendments seemed to be required. The next stage was taken on the 22nd of March, when, at a very late hour, it was discussed in committee. On the 4th of April it was again under consideration, the law officers of her Majesty's late Government having taken part in the discusion. To suit his personal convenience he (Mr. O'B.) presumed the right hon. gentleman fixed May 10th for the next stage of the bill. The special commission, in consequence of lamentable occurences in Ireland which it was unnecessary to recall to the house, had commenced its labours soon after the 4th of April, at which the right hon. gentleman found it necessary to be present. But what next occurs. On the 10th of May, the commission being then in full sitting in Dublin, and five of the hon. and learned members who had amendments on the paper being engaged in the discharge of their duties at that commission, an attempt was made to force the bill forward. That attempt being resisted by hon. members sitting on his (Mr. O'B.'s) side of the house, it was not until the right hon. gentleman the member for South Lancashire interfered, and was supported in his interference by the Chancellor of the Exchequer as leader of the house, that the Attorney-General yielded an unwilling assent to postpone the bill. In doing so he stated that postponement was unnecessary, as the principal featues of the bill had passed through committee, and that no material question remained to be discussed. But the house would, no doubt, be surprised to hear that when the right hon. gentleman made that statement there were no less than 58 notices of amendments on the paper, of which 32 stood in his (the Attorney-General's) own name (hear, hear). Well, he gave way, and in three weeks afterwards he returned to his work, and in defiance of all efforts to obtain fair consideration for the contested clauses, the bill was carried almost through on Monday, the 3rd. Three days after, all the legal members being still absent, occurred that remarkable struggle, when, after five divisions, the right hon. gentleman found it not alone expedient but necessary to yield upon the point most pressed upon him by hon. members, and to abandon his resolution to perpetuate the unjust monopoly which had so long existed with reference to the exclusion of the general body of the stockbrokers from Chancery, and the clause by which that monopoly was abolished, and which although introduced by himself into the draft of the bill as originally presented to the house, he had attempted to strike out, and it now is his desire to pass the bill through its last stage. He (Mr. O'Beirne) hoped the house would not approve of such proceedings—the measure is one of the vast importance. There are questions of much moment still to be discussed in connexion with it. One of them refers to taking viva-voce evidence in Chancery proceedings and many others. The right hon. gentleman was not entitled to the consideration of the house, as he had shown so little consideration himself to others. He (Mr. O'Beirne) hadbeen informed that the right hon. gentleman had been engaged in one of the Dublin law courts on a particular day in May in conjunction with an hon. and learned member who was deeply interested in this bill, and had left Dublin on that very evening without giving the slightest intimation to that hon. and learned member of his intention to be in his place in this house the next evening. The house, he (Mr. O'B.) felt satisfied, would not approve of such means being adopted to carry through any measure, much less such a measure as this (a laugh). Hon. members opposite might laugh, but he (Mr. O'B.) would tell them that if hereafter they were unfortunate enough to fall within the grasp of the Irish Court of Chancery they might be taught to feel that they had but lightly estimated the serious nature of the law they were enacting. and might find that some more concession at the right time would have saved much cost and great injustice. The resistance which bills upon this subject had hitherto met with in this house by the right hon. gentleman, who was now the Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, ought to be fresh in the memory of hon. gentlemen opposite. No doubt the measures opposed were then introduced by the Liberal Government, and the resistance came from the Opposition. Every possible means were adopted, and for four sessions successfully adopted. In the year 1864 the Government bill was defeated. In 1865 the Government bill was also defeated, and two bills which were introduced by Mr. Whiteside and Mr. George on their own account, were defeated also. In the session of 1866 the Government bill was again defeated, and now it is reserved for the right hon. gentleman to carry his bill through if he can do so. He (Mr. O'B.) stated in the commenceenmt of his remarks that he had no desire to obstruct the bill (oh! oh!) He repeated that statement, notwithstanding the exclamations of hon. members opposite. He merely desired that a crude, ill-considered, and very insufficient measure should not pass merely to secure the personal objects of any one (hear, hear). He had submitted to the house the grounds upon which he had moved that the bill be recommitted. He hoped the house would agree with him in thinking there were good reasons for stopping the bill until it had been more fully discussed, and that the right hon. gentleman would be instructed to reconsider the amendments which he had so entirely disregarded. He (Mr. O'B.) had now only to move the motion of which he had given notice, that the bill be re-committed (hear, hear).

Mr. Childers stated that he had supported the Government in their various attempts to carry the bill through the several stages, and therefore he now considered he was justified in urging the right hon. gentleman to accede to the recommital of the bill. He would support his hon. friend the member for Cashel on the motion he had made.

Mr. Vance protested against any delay, and urged the Government to proceed with the bill.

Mr. Lawson explained that he was quite aware that the hon. member for Clare took a deep interest in the bill, that his professional duties prevented him from being in his place, and that he believed if the bill was re-committed it could be materially improved.

The Attorney-General for Ireland refused to accede to the motion, and repeated the statement often before made that the bill required no alteration, and added that the member for Clare, might have been in his place if he pleased.

After some further discussion the motion to recommit the the bill was negatived without a division, and the bill passed the third reading.

TUESDAY, JUNE 25.

ATTORNEYS', ETC., CERTIFICATE DUTY BILL.

Mr. DENMAN moved that the House go into committee on this Bill. He said the attorneys were taxed in this wise—that they had to pay £80 upon entrance into the profession—a £25 stamp upon their articles—income-tax—and the annual tax which it was the object of this Bill to abolish altogether. Every member of the House connected with the law had at one time or another voted in favour of the object of the Bill. He contended that the tax in all of the licenses was an exceptional and unfair tax, and he was not sure that licenses at all were expedient media of taxation. The tax had been paid for the present year, and therefore its removal could not interfere with the Chancellor of the Exchequer's arrangements. It was only £80,000 or £90,000 in all, and its removal would hardly be felt upon the gross revenue, in only reducing the surplus from £240,000 to £150,000. He answered the various objections that were urged against the proposal to repeal this tax, and trusted that the Government would be induced to think that there was no longer any reason for staving off this measure of justice by any of the stock arguments that had hitherto been used against it.

The House then went into committee, when the various clauses passed without discussion or amendment.

Mr. WALPOLE said that his right hon. friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who had been in the House until just now, had no particular amendment to insert, and therefore did not oppose any of the clauses; but the hon. and learned gentleman must not suppose that the Bill would pass unchallenged upon the third reading.

Mr. DENMAN said the understanding he had was that the discussion would take place on going into committee.

Mr. WALPOLE said that the only understanding he knew of was that there was to be a discussion at a further stage.

The Bill then passed through committee.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26.

ADMIRALTY COURT (IRELAND BILL).—The Attorney-General for Ireland brought in a Bill to extend the jurisdiction to alter and amend the procedure and practice, and to regulate the establishment of the High Court of Admiralty in Ireland.

THURSDAY, JUNE 27.

THE COURTS OF LAW OFFICERS (IRELAND) (RE-COMMITTED) BILL

Was considered in Committee. The majority of the clauses were agreed to, and the remainder postponed, after which the Committee reported progress.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

CLERK OF THE PEACE—DISMISSAL BY QUARTER SESSIONS FOR MISCONDUCT.—The quarter sessions ordered that a lump sum of £169 16s. 6d., the costs of their attorney in and about some litigation, should be paid, and thereupon it was the duty of the clerk of the peace to have entered and recorded such order, and have reported the same to the county treasurer for payment. That functionary, however, believing that he ought to have the items of the bill of costs, wrote to the chairman of the quarter sessions upon the subject, stating his objections to recording the order. In reply he was told that the order was regular, and he was to record. He thereupon again wrote, stating that, for the reasons given in his former letter, he should consider that he was acting contrary to his duty if he recorded the order, and therefore he must decline to do so, but would report to the court. He accordingly reported to the next sessions his reasons for refusing to record the order, and for holding it to be illegal. After some discussion, the chairman said to the clerk of the peace, "I understand you still refuse to enter the order?" to which he replied, "Yes." After this the matter was referred to the finance committee, to take what steps they thought proper. Proceedings were then taken against him under the 1 Will. & M. c. 21, s. 6, for a misdemeanour in his office, in contumaciously refusing to record the order. The case was heard in due form, and in the result the clerk of the peace was dismissed from his office, and subsequently Mr. Russell was appointed thereto. Upon a rule for a quo warranto information against Mr. Russell for exercising the office: Held, by Cockburn, C. J. and Shee, J. (Blackburn, J. dissentiente), that there was no such refusal on the part of the clerk of the peace as amounted to misdemeaning himself in his office within the meaning of the 1 Will. & M. c. 21, s. 6: (Reg. v. Russell, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 478. Q.B.)

MUSIC AND DANCING LICENCE.—25 Geo. II., c. 26, s. 2, enacts that "any house, room, garden, or other place kept for public dancing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind, without a licence had for that purpose, shall be deemed a disorderly house or place," and every person having such house or room, garden, or other place without such licence as aforesaid, shall forfeit the sum of £100 to such person as will sue for the same. Where a room above the bar of a public-house was used for music or dancing every night, although no payment was required, and there was no public invitation, the keeper of the house was held to be liable to the penalty: (Frailing v. Messenger, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 494. C. P.)

THE LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

The last meeting for the Session of the Law Students' Debating Society was held on Monday evening, 24th inst., R. Dowse, Esq., Q.C., in the Chair, when the result of the ballot was made known, and the following gentlemen were declared Officers of the Society for the ensuing year:—Mr. C. H. Teeling, Auditor; Mr. A. G. Meldon, Secretary; and Mr. C. Boughey, Treasurer.

THE STATISTICAL SOCIETY.

The last meeting of this society for the session was held on Monday evening, at 35, Molesworth-street, James Haughton Esq., V.P., in the chair.

THE JURY SYSTEM—

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT FOR DUBLIN AND COUNTY.

Mr. Monroe, honorary secretary, read a paper by Mr. J. Lowry Whittle, on the "Laws with regard to the Constitution of Juries in Ireland." It was notorious to all in any degree familiar with their courts that common juries were made up of a class of professional jurors, men who lounged about the courts, to some of whom the miserable fee of a common juror—namely, 1s. 9d.—was not a matter of indifference. The same circumstances and motives affected even some of those who acted as special jurors. Many of the jurors to whom he referred were not qualified for the function entrusted to them. They had been qualified, but had not been struck off the list when they ceased to be qualified. The bill before Parliament, which was itself an evidence that some improvement in the jury system was necessary, proposed an annual revision of the jurors' lists before the chairman or revising barrister, upon the analogy of the revision of electoral lists; but, although this might do good, there was no provision in the bill which might not become an empty form. Increased remuneration would not have any material effect in filling the jury boxes with responsible people. He submitted that the most effectual way of reform was to increase the supply of jurors, and that not by lowering the qualification, but by the abolition of exemptions. All professional gentlemen were at present exempted; all bank clerks and clerks in large commercial establishments were practically exempted. These would be a most suitable class to fill up the common juries. The only ground of exemption which he deemed legitimate was that of the judicial class. Another way of adding to the panels would be by a lodger franchise. He thought the possession of 100*l*. per annum income should qualify. As the class of jurors would be greatly increased by the abolition of exemptions, they might with advantage introduce the Scotch plan of having a "special" element in every common jury. The jury bill now before Parliament, although a valuable recognition of the deficiencies of the system, would not supply an adequate remedy. It would not secure the necessary number of qualified persons without aggravating the hardships of those jurors who at present did the duty.

Mr. Constantine Molloy read a paper on a "Central Criminal Court for the County and the City of Dublin." Previous to the year 1729 all serious offences, such as treasons or felonies, committed in either the city or county of Dublin were triable only at the bar of the Court of Queen's Bench in term time, or under a special commission. To obviate the inconvenience entailed by this a statute was passed in 1729, by which it was enacted that commissioners to be appointed under any Commission of Oyer and Terminer, or of jail delivery, should be empowered to meet and deliver the jails of the counties. The Commission Court at Green-street, which was a Court of Oyer and Terminer, sat six times each year, and its sessions were held under district commissioners for the county and the city. The commissioners were the same persons, with the exception that the Lord Mayor was named in that for the city. The summoning of two panels of jurors were productive of much inconvenience and additional trouble to jurors. It had the effect of virtually doubling their duties, for the duties on either panel would be amply sufficient for the discharge of all duties which both panels had to perform. The recent special commissions of 1865 and 1867 showed a further inconvenience that arose from having two separate commissions. Very many persons were summoned as jurors who were not qualified. Residence must always form an essential part of the juror's qualification. In 1865 the prisoners were tried under the special commission for the city, and several jurors were disqualified by want of residence. On the trial of Luby forty three jurors were disqualified, and about the same number on each of the subsequent trials, and the vast majority of those so disqualified were possessed of property within the city more than sufficient to qualify them. At the special commissions of this year the prisoners were tried under that for the county, and it so happened that a large number of the jurors who were disqualified for non-residence at the city commission of 1865, were summoned as county jurors, but a good proportion of them were again disqualified on the ground that though they possessed the qualification of residence their limited tenure disqualified them. Again, if the trial of an offence committed within the county lasted beyond a day the jury could not be sent to a hotel; but it was unnecessary to keep them imprisoned in the court house during the whole of the trial. During the last special commission many of the trials lasted several days, during which it was necessary to keep the jurors within the court house, because if they happened to go outside the court house even for the shortest distance, they would pass into another county, and there would be a mis-trial, whereas if it had been a city jury they could, at night, have been sent to some hotel. The hardships thus entailed in the case of a protracted trial loudly called for amendment. This and the other inconveniencies would be obviated by the establishment of a central Criminal Court for both City and County. There was a president for such a court in London.

The Chairman remarked that loss of time and inconvenience would be obviated if a plan were adopted in the courts here similar to that in use in England, by which jurors, after having attended for a certain time after the sitting of a court, could liberate themselves from further delay upon signing their names in a book.

Professor Houston, Mr. O'Malley, Mr. Munroe, Mr. Norwood, Mr. Littledale, Mr. Daly, Mr. Taylor, and other gentlemen took part in an interesting discussion on the papers read. Some of the speakers complained strongly of the present jury system, by which persons who were obliged to resort to law to obtain their rights were treated to the same old familiar faces, who lounged about the courts very much for the small remuneration to which jurors were entitled. In the course of the discussion Mr. Molloy strongly urged that the jury system in England, that of summoning jurors by rotation, should be extended to Ireland, the result of which would be a better class of jurors than those who now attended the courts.

COURT OF CHANCERY—SATURDAY.

In the Matter of Richard W. Joynt seeking to be appointed Master Extraordinary.—Walter Bourke, Q.C., instructed by Robert Paget Bourke, solicitor, moved that Mr. Joynt, the proprietor of the Tyrawley Herald, be appointed Master Extraordinary of this Court. Counsel moved on the affidavit of Mr. Joynt, and upon the usual certificates, which, he stated, were signed by Colonel Gore, the lieutenant of the county Sligo, and by a number of deputy lieutenants, magistrates, by clergmen of all denominations, and by the members of the Connaught Bar. The Lord Chancellor said he had looked into the certificates, which were most respectably signed. His lordship made the appointment moved for.

PROVINCIAL COURT—June 25th.

(Before Judge Battersby.)

The office of Judge promoted by the Rev. Thomas Mills, A.M., v the Rev. Herbert Tudor Craig, A.B.

This is a suit of intrusion, brought by the Rev. Mr. Mills, who is incumbent and perpetual curate of St. Jude's parish, to restrain the respondent from exercising spiritual functions as chaplain of the forces in Richmond Barracks. The allegation of the petition is that the barracks are within the parish of St. Jude, and that the respondent has not been licensed by the Archbishop of Dublin, or permitted by the petitioner to officiate therein. The respondent officiates by virtue of a letter from the Secretary at War.

Dr. Elrington (instructed by the Queen's proctor), on behalf of the respondent, applied for an extension of the time to plead. The papers had been laid before the Queen's Advocate, whose opinion had not yet been obtained.

Mr. Samuels opposed the application, on behalf of Mr. Mills, and applied, upon a registrar's certificate, that no answer had been filed for an order to set the case down for hearing on default.

After some discussion, Judge Battersby appointed that day fortnight for the hearing of the cause, with liberty to the respondent to file an answer in the meantime; each party to be at liberty to make such application for the further postponement of the suit as they saw fit.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

LOT 1.
COUNTY OF KILKENNY.

This Lot, consisting of the Lands of Ballyogan, partly adjoins the River Barrow; and there is frequent and cheap communication by the Barrow Navigation Company's Boats, between Waterford and Dublin, and the intermediate towns; an exeellent road from Graigue to the flourishing town of New Ross passes through the Lands.

The Lands are capable of being much increased in value by drainage; the tenants are solvent and respectable, and pay their rents punctually.

LOTS 2 TO 6.
TOWN OF CARLOW.

These Lots consist of well secured profit rents, arising out of Houses and Premises situate in Tullow-street, Tullow-gate, Dublin-street, Bridewell-lane, Brown-street, Charlotte-street, and Montgomery-street, in the Town of Carlow.

LOT 7.

QUEEN'S COUNTY.

This Lot consists of the Lands of Bocka. A considerable sum has been recently expended by the Owner on this Lot, in making roads, drains, &c., and the Lands are capable of further improvement. The shooting of the mountains is valuable.

LOT 8.

QUEEN'S COUNTY.

The Lands of Graigue, known as Wallfield, and portion of the Town of Graigue, the entire of which is held only by two tenants, who are respectable and pay their rents regularly.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the Landed Estates' Court, Dublin; to

JAMES YOUNG, Esq., the Owner, Maryborough, Queen's County; to

Messrs. DURDIN, Solicitors, 16, Westland-row, Dublin; to

JAMES R. WHITELAW, Esq., Solicitor, 43, Dame-street, Dublin; or to ALFRED H. MIDDLETON, Solicitor having Carriage of Proceedings, 26, Eustace-street, Dublin.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, JULY 6, 1867.

IN Numbers 6 and 7 of this Journal we have published a summary of the provisions of the Draft Bill to amend the Constitution, Practice, and Procedure of the Court of Chancery in Ireland.

The Bill has just become law without undergoing any alteration of importance in its passage through committee; and it now only remains to frame Orders for regulating the practice of the Court. The Act just passed had for its paramount object the assimilation of the law and practice in both countries, and it has effected that object so far, that no material difference will in future exist between the English and Irish systems. For this reason there will, we apprehend, be little or no difficulty in framing the necessary Orders, as it will be simply a matter of adopting, and not adapting, the existing English Orders.

The Vice-Chancellor is to take office about the middle of August, and will, no doubt, at once vigorously commence operations, so as to have the machinery of the Court in good working order before his attention is engrossed by the actual discharge of his new judicial functions.

A complete and well digested collection of Orders will be accepted, as an especial boon, by both branches of the profession, as tending to save their time and facilitate their duties. Nothing could be more perplexing to the practitioner than the present condition of the Chancery Rules, contained, as they are, in so many successive General Orders, and Master's Orders, made at so many different times—many of them conflicting with each other—some wholly obsolete—others retaining a semi-vitality; and all forming together a collection which defies every attempt to reduce them to anything like order or consistency. It has been remarked that the practice has been altered and amended on no less than "sixty different occasions since the new code of General Orders of 1843; so that it is not to be wondered at that the young practitioner at least should find his duties in the Chancery Courts surrounded by many difficulties and perplexities."

It will take a year or upwards to dispose of the suits now pending before the Masters, and during that period we must endeavour to live patiently under the old style, until it gradually dies out, and three of the present Masters are released by the Chancellor from the onerous duties which, by assiduous attention, great ability and integrity, they have for so many years discharged so much to the satisfaction both of suitors and practitioners.

Although there is no ground to apprehend that the retiring Masters will be in any indecent haste to be released, the coming legal year will be a busy one for both branches of the legal profession. It will, of course, be necessary to put on high pressure for the purpose of winding up all matters now remaining undisposed of in the offices, and little time will be left available for becoming familiar with the new law and practice, under which all new suits are to be conducted.

As a matter of necessity, the Receiver Master is to be retained, and the difficult and unsettled practice relating to Receivers, which has been altered or amended at twenty different times since the year 1843, is still left as a thorn in the side of barristers and solicitors.

Until the new orders are promulgated it may be deemed premature to direct particular attention to the new law and practice; but, as before intimated, the difference between the English and Irish systems cannot by possibility be considerable, and we will, from time to time, in future numbers, endeavour to impart to our readers such information as will be useful to them, when they come to the discharge of business under the new act, which is so soon to come into operation.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE YELVERTON CASE.

YELVERTON (OR LONGWORTH) v. YELVERTON.

The hearing of this case was resumed in the House of Lords on Friday morning.

The appellant resumed her argument on Friday morning by reading extracts from the judgments in the court below. In commenting upon that of Lord Curriehill she contended that the decision of the House of Lords in the first appeal was not final in favour of Mrs. Forbes, as it did not bar the present appellant from establishing her Irish marriage before an Irish Consistorial Court, neither did it assoilzie Major Yelverton from the judgment debt which Mr. Thelwell held against him for necessaries supplied to his wife, Theresa Yelverton. It did not avail him, exiled from his own country, on that account to set at defiance that country's laws. A full court judgment of one country could not be set aside or rendered futile by a side wind from another country, whose laws it neither knew nor recognized, such judgment having been based upon different and more complete evidence. By that judgment she had been pronounced by a jury and a judge, whose decision was confirmed by the full Court, to be the lawful wife of Major Yelverton. That judgment might be brought before their Lordships, and under the more positive and conclusive evidence they might see fit to confirm the unanimous decision of the Irish judges. Where then was the force of Mrs. Forbes's marriage, which Lord Curriehill was pleased to treat as a solemn marriage in facie ecclesiæ, so solemn, imposing, and religious that he thought it should not be molested by a prior poor, paltry de presenti marriage? She had not expected the cry of "Church, Church," from Scotch Law Lords, who regarded marriage as a mere contract, not as a sacrament. She ventured to believe that none of those who joined in the cry had been married in a church themselves. But if religious solemnities and sacramental observances were to take precedence in Scotch law, why had its interpreters failed to notice what was now on record in favour of the appellant—an equally solemn marriage in facie ecclesiæ at Rostrevor? What were the facts of Mrs. Forbes's marriage with Major Yelverton? On the 25th of June the appellant arrived at Leith; she came to meet him, her husband, and was met by him. She had quitted the affectionate care of her sister, Madame Lefevre, though still in a feeble state of health, because Major Yelverton had informed her that unless he could have about £2,000 immediately he was a ruined man. She came with the wifely hope of saving him by the sacrifice of a portion of her own property. She had known of his pecuniary difficulties, and attributed his present wretchedness to a crisis having arisen, but she had no warning that could lead her to a doubt of his faithfulness to her, no warning of the nature of the storm cloud about to burst over her lonely deserted head, no glimmering of the vortex of misery which was to engulph her in its dark fold for many weary years. He left her, alleging an appointment that evening, and promising to return to take her to a more suitable home. At 11 o'clock that same evening Mrs. Forbes went to Dean Ramsay to ask him to marry her to Major Yelverton the next morning early. Major Yelverton had informed her of the arrival of his first wife, and she asked to be married not in his own church in Prince's-street, with all publicity and solemnity as supposed by Lord Curriehill, but in a small out of the way chapel in the fishing hamlet of Newhaven, a couple of miles from Edinburgh. Had it been in England that marriage would have been illegal, or at least voidable, for Mrs. Forbes was not married in her own parish. Upon that very point Sir Marcus Slade had seemingly lost his baronetcy. Both marriages were alike private, the dispensing of banns being sought for in both instances. Both were celebrated by duly qualified ministers, in secluded country churches, in order to avoid observation; neither were proclaimed by ringing of bells, by breakfasts, or bridesmaids, and neither were announced in the public newspapers. She defied the keenest casuist to draw any distinction on this point between them, and yet the Scotch Law Lords had assigned the publicity of the second marriage as a reason for refusing to allow the law to take its usual course. Such were the solemnities of Mrs. Forbes's marriage arranged over night at 11, and performed the next morning at 10—hasty, to say the least of them, doubtless owing to Major Yelverton's announcing the arrival of the first wife, whom Mrs. Forbes acknowledged he had told her about prior to the marriage during their short acquaintance of five weeks. This circumstance, coupled with the circumstance of the rumours of his first marriage, which reached her, left her complete innocence open to considerable doubt. If a second marriage were to be introduced as an estoppel to the full and complete proving of the first it would be holding out an escape for bigamists in Scotland by making the first wife the helpless victim of the husband's crime. Mrs. Forbes enjoyed the undisputed possession of the legal status of a wife only for 48 hours, when she was solemnly informed by her own clergyman, Dean Ramsay, that Major Yelverton was claimed as husband by another lady, and the marriage certificate was produced. If his lordship meant that for seven years, in spite of adverse judgments to the effect that she was not his wife, Mrs. Forbes had chosen to live with Major Yelverton and become the mother of several children, on such a proceeding she had no remark to make; but she denied that in law, in justice, or in common decency, it was a reason why her interests should be upheld, and she was equally persuaded that Lord Curriehill had inadvertently everlooked some of those circumstances when he pleaded so feelingly the interests of that lady. His lordship had said that the laws of this country which forbade polygamy did not permit a man to have two legal wives simultaneously. That might be true, but a man was permitted to have them alternately if he contrived it well, and the law seemed to assist him in that. Some matrimonial suits had lasted 12, others 15 or 30 years, during which period a man, if he had gone through a marriage ceremony with two ladies, might legally change from one to the other. Lord Curriehill suggested that it was barely possible Major Yelverton would admit an oath in the affirmative, but, peradventure, he might, and this was a contingency the court were bound to prevent. Did his lordship forget that he had given it as his deliberate and conscientious opinion that marriage according to law and fact had taken place between Major Yelverton and Miss Longworth? Was he afraid that what he believed to be the truth should be confirmed by the defendant, and thereby injure the innocent third party? Was he afraid that the unfortunate Major Yelverton, with bigamy behind him and perjury before him, placed once more on his oath in the presence of his Maker, might speak the truth, might assert his manhood, and redeem his soul by bearing down with one fell swoop the gigantic lie which it had cost him his fortune and his fame to build up in seven yerrs? Such things had been. Scottish law lords had seen it more than once, trials had been won, appeals had been gained, evidence and documents had been duly weighed and judgments passed, and wrong had still prevailed. The oath had been tendered to the triumphant party, who had shrunk aghast and refused to blast his soul, and preferred to resign all his unholy gains. Should not, therefore, Major Yelverton be allowed to be put upon his oath, because that "still small voice" might make itself heard amid the din of fierce passions which had relentlessly heaped misery, poverty, odium, heart-breaking sorrow upon the unoffending head of one of the most truthful, devoted, and loving of helpmates? "I am pleading," said the appellant, "for nothing before this hon. House but my right to the truth—my right to challenge the respondent to this ordeal of truth, and am I to be refused because, peradventure, he might speak it? I am not pleading for something as yet unheard of—vague and hopeless. What I am pleading for is a law which, as admitted by the judges, is one of the oldest and most firmly established in Scotland. The facts I am seeking to bring to light have already been sworn to. Yes, my lords, sworn to by the respondent himself, and are on record, not in these volumes unfortunately, but in the Irish Court, and in every journal in that country. This is no vague dream of an excited fancy wrought to frenzy by its sufferings. I appeal to every honest heart in Great Britain, and ask if Major Yelverton did not marry Theresa Longworth." The appellant then proceeded to read at length the judgment of Lord Deas, who pronounced in her favour, and concluded by a lengthened address at half-past 1 o'clock by praying of their lordships to consider her case mercifully as far as was consistent with strict justice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday, July 2.

ATTORNEYS, ETC, CERTIFICATE DUTY BILL.

Mr. Denman moved the third reading of this Bill.

Mr. Hunt opposed the motion. The Bill attempted to deal with license duties in a piecemeal manner. The certificate duty was at present £9 for attorneys in London, and £6 for those in the country. Till 1853 it was £12 and £8. For the first two years after their admission attorneys had only to pay one-half the duty. The impost did not seem to keep gentlemen from going to the profession, for there were at present 13,475 attorneys on the roll. His hon. and learned friend did not touch the license duties paid by pawnbrokers and auctioneers, nor the license duty paid by certificated conveyancers. The loss to the revenue of the duty which his hon. and learned friend sought to abolish would amount to £100,000 a year. He begged to move, as an amendment, that the Bill be read a third time that day three months (hear, hear).

Mr. Fawcett said that very great pressure was put upon hon. members to support this Bill. He thought the House ought to resist pressure coming from such a class of gentlemen as attorneys; and if for no other reason, he should give the Bill his decided hostility.

Mr. Denman had frequently answered the objections to the Bill, which, he repeated, were unfounded.

Lord Elcho had received from attorneys in his constituency letters requesting him to support the Bill. The answer he had made was that he considered the question to be one for the Government, and that as long as the Government thought it necessary to support this tax, he would support them in doing so (hear, hear).

Order for Third Reading read; Motion made and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read the third time:"—

Amendment proposed, to leave out the word "now," and at the end of the Question to add the words "upon this day three months:"—(Mr. Hunt:)—Question put, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question:—The House divided: Ayes 66, Noes, 87.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

O'SHAUGHNESSY v. LYNCH.

May 14.—Practice—Title of Petition—Substitution of Service—Chancery Regulation Act, s. 15.

The petition was entitled under the Court of Chancery Regulation Act, 1850, s. 15. It was set down for a summary order under the 15th section. But the Lord Chancellor refused to make a summary order, and directed notice of it to be served.

Lynch moved to amend the petition by omitting the words "sec. 15."

The MASTER of the ROLLS said that the petition was irregularly entitled, but it was better to make no change in it unless the Lord Chancellor had required it to be amended.

May 28.—Lynch moved to substitute service of the notice of the cause petition, on an affidavit which stated that the petition was filed for the purpose of dissolving the partnership of a ship, purchased jointly by the petitioner and the respondent. That Patrick Lynch, who was the sole manager of the partnership, business, and transactions, had been absent from Ireland for six months in South America; that he had been for several years, and still was the proprietor and owner of the George Hotel, in the city of Limerick, and that his wife, Frances Lynch, had managed the said hotel, and conducted the business thereof as the agent of and for the said Patrick Lynch since and during his absence from this country, and that she still continued to manage said hotel, and conduct the business of same as such agent as aforesaid, that the deponent believed that she was in communication with the said Patrick Lynch, and that the share of the petitioner's purchase money of the ship had been remitted to the respondent, Patrick Lynch, through the hands of his wife, Frances Lynch, by his desire. Counsel sought to substitute service by serving the wife, Frances Lynch, with notice of the cause petition, and cited Hope v. Hope, 4 D. M. & G. 341.

No rule.

Solicitor for the petitioner, John O'Donnell.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by WM. WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

NOLAN v. SHEA.

June 15.—Particulars of Slander granted after Plea Pleaded.

Wm. Anderson, on behalf of the defendant, moved that the plaintiff should be directed to give particulars of the time and place of uttering the slander for which the action was brought. The defendant had pleaded a traverse of the speaking of the slander. There was an affidavit by him, stating that he had no recollection of the slanderous words; that he believed he did not use them, and that he could not safely go to trial without knowing the occasion on which it was alleged he had uttered them. The Court at first was disposed to consider that, as the defendant had pleaded, the motion could not be granted, but finally made the order, the plaintiff not appearing to oppose the motion.

QUIN v. QUIN.

May 13.—Change of Venue—Delay.

S. Y. Johnstone, for the defendant, moved to change the venue from the County of the City of Dublin to the County of Tyrone. The action was for £63, and it appeared from defendant's affidavit that all his witnesses resided in or near Omagh, and that he was unable to bear the expense of taking them to Dublin.

Dowse, Q.C., with him S. N. Fay, for plaintiff. The defence was filed on the 13th of February last, before the Spring Assizes. A replication was filed and notice of trial served on the 2nd of May. The defendant returned the issues approved of on the 7th. Plaintiff's subpœnas were issued and served on the 9th. The defendant's notice of motion was only served on the 9th. As the case was in the list for the after sittings to commence on the 14th,

The COURT held that the defendant was too late in making the application now, after so long a delay.

Notice refused with costs.

Attorney for plaintiff, Chas. M'Crossan.

Attorney for defendant, Cecil Moore.

ELLEN BRENNAN v. FRANCE.

May 30.—Security for Costs—Affidavit of Merits.

This was an action for seduction of the plaintiff's daughter Jane.

E. Gibson, for defendant, moved to compel plaintiff to give security for costs. Defendant, by his affidavit in support of the motion, "admitted that he had intercourse with Jane Brennan in the plaint mentioned, but that said Jane Brennan at the time of said intercourse resided, and still resided, in Ireland, and rendered no service whatever to the plaintiff."

Harkan and Butt, Q.C., objected that this was not such an affidavit of merits as would suffice in the Exchequer. For all that appeared from defendant's affidavit Jane Brennan might have been only temporarily resident in Ireland, and still in her mother's service.

FITZGERALD, B.—We have never held that the affidavit of merits should be as full as a special plea.

The COURT granted the motion.

Attorney for plaintiff, J. W. Ramsay.

Attorney for defendant, Henry Ebbs.

CRAWFORD v. CINNAMEND.

May 29 & 30.—Action for Negligence against an Attorney—Bankruptcy—Right of Assignee.

To an action against an attorney for negligence in marking a judgment against one F. for too large a sum, and issuing execution thereon, whereby the plaintiff became liable to an action by F., and further alleging that F. brought said action and obtained a verdict and judgment against plaintiff, and plaintiff incurred expenses in defending said action, and was so injured in his credit as a trader that he was adjudicated a bankrupt. Defendant pleaded first that the alleged causes of action were vested in plaintiff's assignees by reason of his bankruptcy; and secondly that the judgment against F. for the sum for which the defendant issued execution was still in full force and validity. Plaintiff demurred to both defences.

T. White and Carleton, Q.C., in support of the demurrer.

Porter, Kisbey, and Falkner, Q.C., contra.

overruled the demurrer to the first defence, but allowed that to the second.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Reported by W. R. MILLER, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-law.

In the Goods of JAMES BALL, deceased.

June 17.—Will—Execution by a Line—Held Invalid.

Dr. Miller, on behalf of Thomas Carey and James Murphy, the executors named in the alleged will of the said James Ball, deceased, applied for liberty to get probate of said will. The will was dated the 28th April, 1867, and was entirely in favour of the testator's wife. The two executors and another person named Richard Murphy were the attesting witnesses, and they all deposed to the capacity of the deceased at the time of giving instructions for, and of the execution of the will, and that the execution took place as follows, viz.: The deceased, after he had heard the will read, and having approved of it, the same having been written by Carey, took hold of a pen, and tried to make his mark, and touched the will with the pen, and drew a line on said will after the name of the witness Richard Murphy (who was a marksman), and deceased said, "All is right," after which the witnesses attested said will, Carey having signed the names of his co-attesting witnesses, who put their marks thereto.

The deceased was illiterate, and the assets were trifling, not more than £125 in value.

(Goods of Bryce 2 Curt. 325, Baker v. Dening, 8 Ad. & Ell. 94).

KEATINGE, J.—It appears that two of the witnesses signed by a regular mark, and I cannot understand why the deceased should only sign by a line. I am not satisfied on the affidavit, that the transaction was bona fide, and I therefore make no rule on the motion, it appearing to me that the document is not a valid will.

No rule.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Coram LYNCH, J.

Sir J. J. FITZGERALD's Estate.

June 27.—Right of Remainderman to compel Rents collected after the death of the Tenant for life to be applied towards payment of the interest on charges affecting the inheritance created by such tenant for life.

This case came on upon an objection to the schedule of incumbrances by Lady Fitzgerald, the guardian, ad litem, of the owner, a minor. The petitioners, who were the trustees of the Scottish Provincial Assurance Company, claimed to be paid interest on a sum of £2,000 from 11th December, 1860, under the following circumstances:—

By marriage settlement of January 23rd, 1845, the lands of Sir J. J. Fitzgerald were settled to himself for life, and, subject to a jointure to his wife, to his first and other sons in tail; and by the same settlement a power was given to Sir J. J. Fitzgerald to raise £2,000 for his own purposes by mortgage of the estate.

In 1860 Sir J. J. Fitzgerald borrowed £8,000 from the Standard Insurance Company, and to secure its repayment he executed the power given to him, and by deed of December 11th, 1860, gave the company a mortgage of his life estate in his lands, with other securities, and effected an insurance on his life. In November, 1862, the petitioners agreed to take an assignment of these securities, and to advance to Sir J. J. Fitzgerald a further sum of £2,500; and a deed of November 22, 1862, to which Sir J. J. Fitzgerald was a party, was executed. This deed contained a recital, "whereas £8,000 is still due, but all interest has been paid up to the date hereof, as the Standard Insurance Company doth hereby testify." Sir J. J. Fitzgerald died on the 27th April, 1864, and two letters were written by Mr. Casey, the petitioners' solicitor, to Lady Fitzgerald, his widow and executrix, and a consent entered into under which Lady Fitzgerald collected from the tenants £382 6s. 5d., being the rents due respectively in November, 1863, and May, 1864. This sum was paid by her to the Scottish Provincial Company. It was now contended that, interest being only due to them from the time of the assignment by the Standard Insurance Company, the apportioned part of the second gale ought to be appropriated to the payment of such interest, in which case none would remain due.

Finch White, Q.C., for Lady Fitzgerald, who was guardian of her son, a minor, as well as executrix of her late husband, cited Mountcashel v. Kilworth, (7 Ir. Chan. R. 12 Ir. Chan. R.); Fitzmaurice v. Murphy (8 Ir. Chan. R.); In re White (7 Ir. Chan. R. 61).

The tenant for life is bound to keep down the interest on a charge on the inheritance which he has power to create, and the tenant in tail can enforce this right by a suit against the mortgagees of the tenant for life. The petitioners could not have received these rents except through the guardian of the minor, and they took them subject to the same equities as if they had instituted a suit.

Flanagan, Q.C., and Wheeler, for the petitioners, contended that other clauses in the deed of November, 1862, showed that the recital relied on did not mean what was contended for. As to the other question, the common law of the land applies, and the petitioners had a right to appropriate this money to the payment of principal or interest as they pleased. They received this proportion of the half-year's rent from Lady Fitzgerald, quâ executrix.

Finch White, Q.C., replied.

LYNCH, J.—I think it was the duty of this lady, when making this payment, to take care of the rights of the minor. She made a general payment. The very circumstance relied on by the petitioners as to the character in which the money was received—executrix and guardian—was notice to them. They would make her commit a breach of duty in respect to its application. I think, with regard to the apportioned part of the rents coming to the tenant for life, it must be applied, in the first instance, to keep down the interest. On the other point—the construction of the deed of 1862—I am quite clear.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Before MILLER, J.

Re THOMAS WEEKES.

July 3.—Contracting Debt without necessity—Pledging the Property Purchased.

The insolvent was opposed on the part of Mr. Crichton, a watchmaker, from whom the insolvent purchased a watch, and from whom he obtained cash for a twenty pound bill. It appeared that the insolvent went to Mr. Crichton, and purchased a watch for twelve pounds, which, he said, he intended as a present for his son; and whilst the watch was taken on approbation, he induced Mr. Crichton to give him cash for a twenty pound bill, which was afterwards renewed, but never paid. It was discovered that the watch had been pawned, and the insolvent having been processed for the amount, was compelled to pay it under the pressure of a decree.

Judge MILLER said he considered the case a very bad one, and persons who pursued such a course as the insolvent had done would never get a free discharge at his hands. If the insolvent's accounts were true, he made no profit by his trade as a tobacconist from 1863 to 1867; and in the meantime he incurs a debt for a gold watch to make a present to his son. That watch is afterwards sent to the pawnbroker's, and the insolvent makes the purchase of the watch the foundation of another transaction by which Crichton loses twenty pounds. Purchasing a gold watch under such circumstances was contracting a debt without necessity, and although he was compelled to pay for it under the pressure of a decree, he left his creditor to pay the twenty pound bill, for which he got cash on the ground of having purchased the watch. The Court considered this a fraudulent case, and would remand the insolvent for twelve months at the suit of Mr. Crichton.

QUARTER SESSIONS' CASES.

COUNTY WESTMEATH—MOATE.

Before JOHN O'HAGAN, Esq., Q.C., Chairman.

CLARKE v. DALY.

April 4; June 27.—Payment by Receiver—Right of Action—Evidence—Certified Copies of Official Documents—Proof of Order in Chancery.

The Civil Bill in this case was brought to recover £40, "portion of the sum of £65 15s. paid by the plaintiff for the use of the defendant for half a year's rent of the lands of Lissoy, due by the said defendant in a certain cause of William Roberts and others, petitioners, Andrew Murray and others, respondents, lately depending in the Court of Chancery in Ireland, and which said sum was charged against and paid by the plaintiff as receiver in the said cause, in the month of May, 1863."

It appeared that the defendant Thomas Daly had been a tenant from year to year of part of the lands of Lissoy, over which the plaintiff James Clarke was appointed receiver in the cause of Roberts v. Murray. These lands were sold in the Landed Estates' Court in 1860; and at the time of the sale half a year's rent was due by the defendant, which the plaintiff, on passing his final account as receiver in 1863, was compelled to pay in order to obtain his discharge. The plaintiff now sought to recover from the defendant £40 of the money so paid, abandoning the excess. In support of the plaintiff's case an office copy of the order appointing the plaintiff receiver, duly certified to be a true copy, as described by the 14 & 15 Vic., c. 57, s. 107, was given in evidence. Office copies of the receiver's accounts, in which the sum was charged against him, and of the order directing him to account, were also produced, but the latter, although signed by the proper officers, were not on the face of them expressed to be true copies.

Bewley, for the defendant, submitted:—1. That the payment of the rent by the plaintiff was made to cover his own default in not having collected it in proper time, and that the action did not lie against the defendant. 2. That as the rent had accrued due in 1860, the payment by the plaintiff, although within six years, could not prevent the operation of the statute of limitations. 3. That the order directing the plaintiff to account and the final account were not admissible in evidence without producing attested copies of the cause petition, and answering affidavit in the cause. 4. That the copies of the final accounts and the order directing the receiver to account were not admissible in evidence, inasmuch as they were not certified to be true copies within the meaning of the 14 & 15 Vic., c. 57, s. 107, or the 14 & 15 Vic., c. 99, s. 14. No indictment could be maintained under the 15th section of the latter Act against an officer for wilfully certifying a document as being a true copy, knowing the same not to be a true copy, when the copy was merely signed by him without any allegation of its being a true copy.

Montgomery, for the plaintiff, contra. The payment of the rent to the landlord by the plaintiff, who was the proper officer to receive the rent, might have been pleaded in an action by the landlord against the tenant for the same rent; and, if so, the present action is maintainable. This payment having been made within six years, if the action lies, no question can be raised as to the statute of limitations. Under the provisions of the 14 & 15 Vic., c. 57, s. 107, attested copies of the cause petition and answering affidavit are unnecessary in the present proceeding. As to the copies of the final account and order, they are in the only form of certified copies given by the officers of the Court of Chancery.

June 27.—The CHAIRMAN dismissed the case on the merits, being of opinion that the payment of the rent by the plaintiff gave him no right of action against the defendant. With regard to the other questions in the case, his Worship stated that if it had been necessary to decide them he would have held that the final account and order were inadmissible without giving in evidence attested copies of the cause petition and answer. As to what constituted "a certified copy" he would not express any opinion.

ENGLAND.

THE TICHBORNE BARONETCY.

It has already been made known that a bill has been filed in the Court of Chancery by the claimant of the Tichborne inheritance. The following extracts from this document will throw some additional light upon the mystery of the Tichborne succession, as well as present a more consecutive story of the adventures of the Australian claimant to the titles and estates of the Tichborne family than has yet been made public. The bill sets forth that the plaintiff resided with his parents at Paris from his birth until 1845, when he was brought over to this country and placed at Stonyhurst College, in Lancashire, where he received his English education. In July, 1849, he was appointed cornet in the 6th Dragoon Guards, which regiment he joined in the following October, at Dublin, and remained on duty, excepting temporary leave of absence, until January, 1853. In February, 1853, he retired from the regiment. During his vacations from college and leave of absence he usually resided, until he left this country to travel in foreign parts, with his uncle, Sir E. Doughty, at Tichborne Park, and was in the habit of shooting over the Tichborne estates, and hunting in that neighbourhood, and he gave up much time to field sports and the management of horses. He left his regiment with the object of travelling for some years in distant parts, and in the first instance he determined to proceed to South America. In March, 1853, he took passage on board a ship bound for Valparaiso, where he arrived in due course, and from that time until April, 1854, he travelled from place to place in various parts of South America. In April, 1854, the ship Bella, of Liverpool, Captain Birkett, master, was at Rio de Janeiro, and learning that she was shortly to leave for New York, the plaintiff took his passage for that city. The Bella left Rio on the 20th of April, 1854, her crew consisting of seventeen persons, the plaintiff being the only passenger. All went well until the fourth day after their departure from Rio, when they were far out of sight of land, and on the morning of that day the mate reported to the captain that the vessel had sprung a leak, and all hands were instantly set to work the pumps, and every effort made to save the ship, but without effect; and the captain shortly afterwards announced that all on board must take to the boats. The Bella carried a long-boat on deck and two smaller boats, one of which was slung to the davits on each quarter. One of these small boats was stove in and rendered useless, but the crew succeeded in safely lowering the long-boat and the larger of the two small ones. The plaintiff and eight of the crew got into the second boat, and the captain and the rest of the crew got into the long-boat, and immediately pushed off from the Bella, which soon afterwards sank. The captain, who had the ship's charts, ordered that the second boat should keep in sight of the long-boat, which she did for two days; but, in the night of the second day, a high wind and storm came on, and the boats were soon out of sight of each other, and the long-boat was not again seen. The man in command of the second boat determined to let her drift with the wind, and on the fourth day after the Bella had sunk they descried a ship in the distance, and a red flannel shirt was attached to an oar and hoisted as a signal. Ultimately, a signal was made in reply, and the crew rowed to the ship, and the plaintiff and the whole of the crew of the second boat were thus saved, after they had been three days and nights at sea in an open boat. The plaintiff was in a very exhausted state, and was for some time seriously ill on board the ship which saved him; but he was landed at Melbourne about July, 1854, having nothing but the clothes he wore, and no means whatever for his support. On the first day after the plaintiff landed, the captain of the ship which saved him took him to an office believed to be the Custom-house, and had a conversation there with some person as to what should be done with the plaintiff, but nothing was arranged except that the plaintiff should sleep on board that night, which he did. Before returning to the ship, the captain and plaintiff together called at an office, and made inquiries as to how he could get a passage to England, but without any useful result. On the day after he landed plaintiff was strolling about the town, and went into a yard, called Row's yard, in Burke-street, where a large number of horses were being sold. Mr. William Foster, an extensive stockkeeper of Gippsland, spoke to him, and, after ascertaining that he was a good rider, offered to take the plaintiff to Gippsland, where there were good hunting and shooting. The plaintiff accepted such offer, and, for family reasons, assumed the name of Thomas Castro, and was known in Australia by that name until shortly prior to his return to England. The plaintiff immediately afterwards left Melbourne with Mr. Foster, and proceeded to his residence at Boisdale, on the Avon River, nearly 300 miles from Melbourne, where he remained about 19 months. Mr. Foster then gave him charge of the Dargo station in the Australian Alps, about 115 miles further inland, where he remained about 18 months, and then returned to Boisdale, and stayed there about three months. The plaintiff then further traces his career until his settlement in Wagga-Wagga; where the bill states, on the 29th of January, 1865, he intermarried with Maryanne Bryant. The plaintiff and his wife are both Roman Catholics, but being then desirous of concealing his real name, and which he could not have done if married by a priest of the Church of Rome, the marriage was solemnized by the Rev. F. J. Burnside, a minister of the Wesleyan congregation. About 1858, a sailor, whose name was unknown to the plaintiff, solicited alms at Tichborne Park, and represented that he had come from Australia. The plaintiff's mother had a conversation with the sailor, and made inquiries as to whether he had ever heard of the Bella, or of any of her crew having been saved, and he replied that he had heard, when in Australia, of some of the crew of a ship which was thought was the Bella, having been picked up at sea. The plaintiff's father, to whom the sailor's statement was announced, expressed the opinion that it was not worth attention, and no further notice was taken of it in his lifetime, save that the plaintiff's mother frequently referred to it; and, when the marriage between her younger son and the Honourable Teresa Mary Josephine Arundell was in contemplation, she stated that she had a sensation that the plaintiff was still living. After the death of his father, and in 1863, the plaintiff's mother caused advertisements for the plaintiff, in the English, French, and Spanish languages, to be inserted in the Times, and subsequently communicated with Mr. Cubitt, of the Missing Friends' Office, Sydney, and he caused advertisements to be inserted in various newspapers published at Melbourne, Sydney, and elsewhere, announcing the death of the plaintiff's father, and giving a description of the plaintiff, and offering a reward for his discovery. Ultimately, towards the end of 1865, the plaintiff for the first time learned of his father's death, and in the early part of January, 1866, he sent a letter to his mother, informing her that he had at last made up his mind to face the sea once more, and requesting that money might be sent out to him to return. She received such letter, and in reply sent him a letter urging his immediate return, and she subsequently remitted a draft for £400 to defray the expense of the voyage. In the year 1866 the plaintiff made arrangements to return home with his wife and child, without awaiting the receipt of that draft, which reached Australia after he had left, and it has since returned to plaintiff's mother, through the post. On the 9th of July, 1866, the plaintiff again went through the ceremony of marriage with his wife under his proper name, at the Roman Catholic Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Goulbourn, New South Wales, according to the rites of the Church of Rome. There have been issue of the said marriage two children—namely, Teresa Mary Agnes, who was born at Wagga-Wagga, on the 18th March, 1866, and Robert Joseph Doughty Tichborne, who was born at Croydon on the 20th March, 1867. Whilst remaining at Sydney, previous to his embarkation for England, the plaintiff accidentally met a person named Guilfoyle, who was for many years in the employ of plaintiff's uncle, Sir Edward Doughty, and who, as well as his wife, knew the plaintiff before he left England in 1853; and upon seeing him they recognised him as the eldest son of Sir James Francis Doughty Tichborne. The plaintiff also met at Sydney Andrew Bogle, to whom the plaintiff was well known before he left England, and he also recognised plaintiff, and, at his own request, accompanied him to England. In September, 1866, the plaintiff, his wife, and child embarked at Sydney, on board the Rakaia, bound for Panama, and, having arrived there, proceeded across the Isthmus, to Aspinwall, and from thence, by way of New York, to England, and arrived on the 25th of December, 1866, at the Victoria Docks. The bill then proceeds to relate evidence in favour of the plaintiff's identity, and states that he stayed for a few days at the Clarendon Hotel, at Gravesend, and on or about the 5th January, 1867, Mr. Vincent Gosford, accompanied by Mr. Plowden, a distant relative of the plaintiff, and Mr. Cullington of the firm of Messrs. Slaughter and Cullington, solicitors for several of the defendants, visited Gravesend, and saw the plaintiff. On Tuesday, the 8th of January, Mr. Gosford again called, and had a protracted interview with the plaintiff, and accompanied him in the train to London. They discussed various matters relating to the Tichborne and Doughty families. Mr. Gosford has had another interview with the plaintiff, who recalled various facts which occurred previous to the plaintiff leaving England, some of which were only known to him and Mr. Gosford, who admitted that some of them had escaped his recollection until they were recalled to his memory by the plaintiff. As soon as practicable after his arrival in England, he proceeded to Paris, where his mother was then residing, and had an interview with her, when she at once recognised the plaintiff as her first-born son. On his return from Paris, the plaintiff took the earliest opportunity of visiting Tichborne Park and its neighbourhood, and has since had various interviews with many of his old friends and others, and he has been identified by many—among others by Mr. Hopkins; also by his cousins, Mrs. Radclyffe and Mr.

Biddulph. Mr. Hopkins, shortly after his interview with the plaintiff in February last, wrote letters to Lord Arundell, Danby Seymour, Esq., M.P., and Mr. Cullington, informing them in positive terms, that he recognised the plaintiff as the eldest son of the late Sir F. D. Tichborne, and that there was not the slightest doubt of his identity.

HOW TO DEAL WITH THE TRADES' UNIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

PICKETING—RATTENING—MURDER. They follow in logical sequence. Admit the right of a trades union to dictate to workmen what they shall do or not do in the exercise of their abilities, and to masters in what manner they shall conduct their business, and how many apprentices they shall take, and the conclusion is inevitable. There is an object to be attained at any price; by fair means if possible, by foul means if necessary. If picketing will not prevail, the rattening must be tried; if rattening fails, then gunpowder and the bullet. The necessity is said to contemplate, but the laws of the union must be enforced at any price. Such is the course of argument through which Sheffield unions have marched to murder. It is contended by the advocates for trades unions that all are not to be judged by the conduct of the unions in Sheffield. True. We hope and believe that no other union has yet gone so far as to enforce its decrees by the bullet or the shell. Doubtless, the members of most of them would indignantly, and with perfect sincerity, protest their abhorrence of the crimes confessed at Sheffield. But the grave question for themselves and for the public is, whether the very principles upon which trades unions are based, and the objects for which they are established, do not conduce, stealthily and slowly, perhaps, but yet certainly, to the results reported from one of the largest and most flourishing of our manufacturing towns? There is nothing in the character of the locality to induce the supposition that its artisans are more barbarous, brutal, and ignorant than their fellow-workmen in other districts. They have, in fact, but carried to the logical result the principles for which they are associated. They are formed expressly to fetter the liberty of the individual workman, by imposing upon him rules dictated by his fellows. If those rules are not obeyed implicitly, the very purpose for which the union exists is frustrated. Having no legal power of constraint, they can control only by self-framed, extra-legal penalties, either moral or physical. They send the disobedient member "to Coventry." If that process fails, they attack his pocket. They filch from him his tools and working gear, and so mulct him of wages. If that does not succeed, they endeavour to crush by the infliction of physical pain; they blow out his eyes by gun-powder placed under the wheel at which he works where the sparks fly from the metal; they blow up his house by an infernal machine; finally, if these punishments fail, in the last resort, with much pain and reluctance, but without remorse or consciousness of crime, they shoot him.

The confession of Broadhead, the secretary to the union, by whom the assassins were hired and paid, reveals the manner in which trades unionism, as it exists, is liable at any time and anywhere to issue in acts of violence. He was not at all conscience stricken; he was not even conscious that he had committed a crime; there was not the slightest expression of remorse as for a great wrong done. Manifestly he was convinced that he had a moral right to punish with death a man who would not submit to the laws of the union; he was sorry for his victim's fate; he regretted that such a step should have been necessary, but it was necessary to the salvation of the union, and therefore the punishment of death was decreed. This is no exaggeration, but the obvious meaning of his own language and conduct, which we cite from the verbatim report in the Times. "He (the murdered man), was doing great harm to the union, by setting all the rules at defiance and introducing such a large number of apprentices. I thought he would ruin the trade and bring ruin upon all of us. After the first shooting I had begun to dismiss the thing from my mind, when on my visiting the Eagle Works, Hallam came up to me and said, 'What about Linley? He can be done for £15.' I paused, for it came upon me as an unpleasant subject. Something was said about the mischief, and I then said I would consider of it. I left him. On consideration, I felt that for the salvation of the union it was necessary something should be done. With great pain I assented to this."

Mr. Overend: Why?

Mark the answer.

"Because I felt the necessity of doing something, or the union would be destroyed, as there was no legal defence for the union. I looked upon the thing as an absolute necessity. Linley had a wheel full of apprentices."

Mr. Overend: And was your only reason for consenting to the shooting of this poor man the fact that he had six apprentices?—Yes, I knew if it was allowed to go on others would do the same, and the trades would be ruined.

Again he said, "I employed Hallam and Crookes to blow up Wheatman and Smith."

Mr. Overend: Why?—"Because they had introduced machinery for grinding straight saws."

Again: "I have employed men to ratten in hundreds of cases during my twenty years' secretaryship. All the rattening in which I have been concerned has been done for the benefit of the trade. Other trades unions have adopted the same system."

Hence it is clear that Sheffield is only an instance of the system carried to its logical results. The unions cannot accomplish the objects of their existence unless they can control the entire body of workmen. This control they can exercise only by intimidation; and if obedience can be in no other manner secured, violence is the ultima ratio.

If so it be, the conclusion is inevitable. Trades unions, as at present constituted, and with their present objects, cannot co-exist with social law and order. They must be greatly modified and legalized, or they must be suppressed. The problem for social philosophers, no less than for Parliament, to solve will be, how best to deal with them.

It is a formidable fact, to be noticed incidentally, that the outrages at Sheffield are not the work of ignorant men. Broadhead stated emphatically that "in the admission of members ability is rather considered than character. There have been ticket-of-leave men members." Thus the panacea of education, so popular with unreflecting persons, does not offer the hope of a remedy for this terrible social malady.

Is there, then, a cure, and in what direction is it to be sought?

Suppression is impossible. By attempting it we should merely substitute conspiracy for union. Prudence prescribes the regulation by the law of that which the law cannot prevent. The obvious remedy is to legalize the trade unions, giving them power to make rules for their own regulation, and the assistance of the law to enforce those rules, the just condition of this recognition being that the rules should not be antagonistic to the well-being of the community, or to individual liberty. To this end, those rules should be submitted for approval to a competent officer of state, in the first instance, and then to Parliament. Any departure from those rules, or any secret combination or regulation, express or understood, other than is apparent upon the sanctioned and registered rules, to subject the society to suppression, and all concerned in the evasion to severe penalties.

This might be the general scheme of such a law. The details will require careful consideration; but they should be framed in a generous spirit, imposing as little restraint, and giving as much power to the associated workmen as may be compatible with liberty protected by law.

NEWSPAPER PRESS FUND.

On Saturday evening the anniversary festival of this institution was held at Willis's Rooms, London, under the chairmanship of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P. There was a numerous and distinguished company, including the Right Hon. Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, Sir B. L. Guinness, M.P.; the Right Hon. W. B. Monsell, M.P.; Mr. Maguire, M.P.; Mr. O'Beirne, M.P.; Mr. Osborne Stock, M.P.; Mr. Hepworth Dixon, Mr. Shirley Brooks, Mr. Anthony Trollope, Mr. Edmond Yates. A number of ladies were also present. The usual loyal and patriotic toasts having been proposed and responded to,

The Chairman, in proposing "Success to the Newspaper Press Fund," said :—I cannot but congratulate you very cordially, and not you only, but the country at large, upon the satisfactory progress which is now being made through Parliament by a bill intended to alter, and in my opinion to bring much nearer to a standard of reason and of justice the law of libel in this country in its bearing upon the proceedings of the press. (Cheers). I say advisedly in its bearings upon the proceedings of the press rather than upon the interests of the press, because I am quite sure that whatever adverse bearing that law may have had upon the interests of the press has been in reality—though perhaps striking those interests in the front rank and in the first place—has had in reality an adverse bearing upon the interests of the public at large. The interests of the public at large are essentially bound up with those of the press. We live in times when the newspaper is a great social, political, and moral power, one so great that it cannot be overlooked by any of those who would comprehend the character of their country or the nature of those processes by which the action of a mighty nation is directed. (Cheers.) While the newspaper has thus become a power in the land, those who are connected with the management of newspapers, those who supply daily or weekly to the public the food which they derive from them, have become a body so important to us all, that we may well say that they are entitled not less than others to the name and to the dignity of a profession. (Hear, hear.) They are persons engaged in supplying from day to day one of those primary wants of society without which it is hardly too much to say society, as we comprehend and understand it, could not exist. (Cheers.) The purpose of this institution is to recognize those ties of duty, charity, and brotherhood which bind together the members of this profession, and also to give an opportunity to others beyond its strictly defined limits for manifesting their interest in its welfare, and in both points of view to encourage it. (Cheers.) This is a profession fed from time to time by the ardent and unsparing efforts of our youth for the discharge of duties, to which I believe no man, except in the perfection of both mental and physical faculties, is really equal; it is a profession beyond which be hopes to pass. Many of those who belonged to it have risen to the highest places of society, of literature, and of the State. The press, which was formerly the privilege of the educated class, has become the patrimony of the people. (Loud cheers.) The law, the Government, the proceedings of the Legislature, make their daily appeal through the daily newspapers to the mind and understanding of every member of the community: they weave new ties of interest and affection between the private individual and the public authority under which he lives. They give a new cement to society, and to the venerated institutions of the country. (Loud cheers.) I think you have been told on former occasions from this place that the press would be invaluable were it only for the beneficial processes which it applies to the utterances of the members, I believe, of both Houses of Parliament—(laughter)—during the brief intermediate period that elapses between the time they leave the speakers and the time they meet the eyes of the readers. (Hear, hear.) I think it is our duty, therefore, to acknowledge the debt we owe to the press. (Hear, hear.) But, besides that debt, there is another obligation which we owe, not to the reporters, but to the writers for the newspapers, and I frankly confess that without them I do not know how we should get on. (Cheers.) I think that their encouragement and enconiums are of very great value to us; they cheer us in the hour of need and of difficulty; but I assure you that I for one, and I believe all who have similar experience will join me in saying this, set far higher value upon their criticisms and upon their censures; for no man is ever injured by criticism or by censure. (Hear, hear.) I am afraid that were it not for the honest and truthful censures of the press, each of us would be apt to spend his existence in a paradise of fools; to go on hugging more and more his own errors and defects, exaggerating his imperfections, avoiding the means by which excellence is to be obtained, and failing in efficiency in the service of his country. (Cheers.) It is not for me to pretend to a minute or accurate acquaintance with the moral tone of the newspaper press since the time it first became a great power in this country; but the knowledge of it that I do possess impresses me with a deep conviction that the newspaper press has become more upright, more candid, more regardful of the sanctities of private life and personal character—more careful to avoid whatever could raise a blush or stain the mind or conscience, exactly in proportion as it has become more popular and more broad. (Cheers.) Therefore, in recognizing the existence of this great power, of this new power, among us, let us give it hearty welcome. (Cheers.) I ask you now to testify to your share in that feeling, by drinking with me a bumper toast to the prosperity of "The Newspaper Press Fund." (Loud cheering.)

CROSSED CHEQUES.

Crossing a cheque is generally considered to have simply the negative effect of a warning to the banker on whom it is drawn not to pay it, unless at his peril, otherwise than on presentation through a banker. But, according to a recent judgment of Mr. Justice Mellor, at Nisi Prius, in Stringfield v. Lanezzari, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 361, the "and Co." written on a cheque has a positive effect of which we think the commercial public may not be sufficiently aware. Hence it is desirable to give the case some prominence, that it may not escape the general view among those which are mere food for the lawyers. The cheque in question was drawn in the defendant's favour, and paid by him to the plaintiffs, who duly paid it in to their bankers; but the bankers were not sufficiently diligent in presenting it. The defendant's point was, their unreasonable delay. But Mr. Justice Mellor held that the point did not arise; the crossing of a cheque was a direction on the part of the person who gave it to pay it only through a banker, and if you paid it into a banker within a reasonable time, you had done all in your power to comply with the directions of the giver of the cheque to you. You had then done your part, and the rest remained with the banker.

A crossed cheque, therefore, will differ from one that is not crossed, not only in the restriction as to the character of the person by whom it must be presented, but in the relief which is afforded to the person paying it into his bankers, from responsibility for the negligence of the bankers. In the absence of this decision, it might, we think, have been supposed that the direction implied by the crossing meant to indicate the character only of the person to present the cheque, and not that, if it were paid to a banker, the question of his agency should be precluded. We confess that we are unable fully to appreciate the force of this doctrine. There can be no doubt that, practically, crossing a cheque is intended to be a safeguard against its falling into improper hands. Beyond this, any operation attributed to the practice will, if we mistake not, be a surprise on men of business. It will not be the first surprise in the matter. After the practice had been in general use for a long period, it was decided to be inefficacious at law, and obtained the sanction of an Act of Parliament. A similar remedy will be necessary if payment by a crossed cheque, at a time when there are assets to meet it, can be frustrated to the payee's loss by delay of the payee's banker to present it before the assets are gone. But perhaps the law of Stringfield v. Lanezzari may be open to reconsideration.—Law Times.

"A debtor of the Second Class" writes to the Times attacking the English county courts. The burden of his complaint is that "they are becoming more and more a means of extortion on behalf of the least respectable of petty tradesmen, to enforce immediate payment of sums which in a great majority of instances are not due to them at all."

A case tried last month before Mr. Justice Mellor has excited some surprise in consequence of the supposed ruling of the learned judge upon the subject of crossed cheques. We allude to the case of Stringfiel v. Lanezzari, in which it appeared on the evidence that the defendants had paid the plaintiffs a cheque crossed "& Co.," that the plaintiff had duly paid it in to their bankers, and that the bankers had not used proper diligence in presenting it. The defendant's counsel in the course of the case, submitted that due diligence had not been used in presenting the cheque, and the learned judge is reported to have ruled that the point did not arise, that the crossing of a cheque was a direction on the part of the person who gave it to pay it only through a banker, and if paid into a banker within a reasonable time, all in the power of the recipient had been done to comply with the directions of the giver, and the rest remained with the banker. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

We confess to some surprise at this construction of the rights and liabilities attaching to crossed cheques. The case in question is nowhere very clearly reported, and we can hardly think that the learned judge intended to lay down that in every case, a person by giving a crossed cheque to his creditor is to be taken to absolve him from the duty of seeing to its due presentment and from the consequences of the neglect of such duty by his agent. That the banker is the agent for his customer, is, we suppose, undoubted. In ordinary cases of contract a principal cannot escape from the consequences entailed upon him by the negligence of his agent, and in what way does the contract of agency between a customer and his banker differ from them.

Of course there may be cases in which the express terms of the contract, or the usual course of dealing between the parties, afford evidence that the debtor, in paying over a crossed cheque to his creditor, intends that he shall be bound only to see that it is duly paid in to his bankers, and not that his bankers duly presented it for payment. It is possible that this was so in the case in question, and that the learned judge only intended his remarks to apply to the particular circumstances before him, and not to be taken as a precise statement of the law.—Solicitors' Journal.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE—DAYS OF GRACE.

Mr. J. H. Grain, notary public, has put forth some useful suggestions with regard to bills of exchange—namely, that days of grace should be abolished, that bills falling due on Sundays or holidays should be paid on the day after instead of the day prior to maturity, and that for noting or protesting bills and notes, instead of the notarial demand for payment being necessary on the day of maturity, a demand on the following day should be sufficient. Mr. Grain supports these recommendations by cogent remarks, and it is surprising that the changes recommended have not long ago been adopted. Not only is the system of days of grace an anachronism in the present age of business, but it leads to difficulties, and is also inconsistent with the practice of a majority of the leading commercial nations. As regards the proposal for paying bills due on Sundays or holidays on the subsequent instead of the previous day, the chief advantage in the case of Sundays would be that it would throw the work at the banking houses on to Mondays instead of Saturdays, when the general desire is to close at an early hour, while at the same time it would be more consistent with convenience and justice that payment should not be demanded in anticipation—a consideration especially applicable in cases where special holidays are appointed on public occasions. The proposal that the notarial presentation of dishonoured bills should take place on the following day instead of the same evening is founded on some considerations of convenience, but is of less importance than the other recommendations.

LAW REPORTING.—The report of the Council for Law Reporting for the year ending December 31, 1866, has just been published, and a more satisfactory document has never been presented by any body to their members. The society started into existence about the middle of the year 1865, at which time there were in existence 14 distinct sets of contemporary reports, published at an annual cost of little less than £40. Of these 14 series 12 or 13 are either superseded or merged in the council's own reports, published at an annual cost of 5 guineas. With one or two exceptions all the authorized reporters have voluntarily accepted office under the council. With regard to the financial part of the matter, the facts are equally favourable. The subscriptions for the year ending November, 1866, have enabled the council (taking credit for the stock on hand), to pay all the reporters their salaries in full, to add to the series (at no further cost to the subscribers) an authorized edition of the statutes, and a weekly summary of all the points of law decided in all the superior courts. There really seems little more to be desired, but we would suggest to the profession whether the value of these their own reports would not be much enhanced by awarding to them the privilege of exclusive citation. The report contains a well merited tribute to Sir Fitzroy Kelly, for his valuable aid in the important reform in the practice of law reporting.—Morning Herald.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

POOR LAW—IRREMOVABILITY—WIFE LIVING APART FROM HUSBAND.—B., the husband of the pauper, before his marriage with her was house-surgeon at a lunatic asylum, in the parish of Norwood, where he resided. After marriage he continued to reside there at the asylum, upon duty. His Sundays were allowed to himself, but on other days he only left the asylum with leave. He took lodgings for his wife and family in St. Pancras, where they lived several years, and where he visited them from Saturday night till Monday morning. Being discharged from the asylum, he remained with his family for a week, when he was apprehended on a criminal charge. The wife becoming chargeable, she was held, under these circumstances, not to have acquired a status of irremovability in the parish of St. Pancras, by reason of the alleged residence of the husband: (Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Norwood, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 484. Q. B.)

FALSE WEIGHT—SALE OF BREAD—THE DECISION IN Jones v. Huxtable, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 381.—In a similar case it was held that the enactment of sect. 4 of 6 & 7 Will. IV., c. 37, that all bread sold beyond the limits of the metropolis shall be sold by weight, requires that the bread shall not only be sold as of a certain weight, but should be actually weighed before being sold. But it was left in doubt whether the weighing must be at the time of sale: (Williams v. Deggan, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 492. Q. B.)

CAB-OWNERS AND DRIVERS.—A driver who hires a cab from its proprietor by the day does not stand in such relationship to him that he is deprived of his remedy by action for personal injuries sustained by him by reason of the proprietor hiring out to him a horse not fit and safe to drive. Nor is notice of action in such a case necessary under 16 & 17 Vic., c. 86, s. 17: (Gibbons v. Standon, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 497. Byles, J.)

NECESSARIES SUPPLIED TO WIFE.—The test whereby to judge whether things supplied to an infant wife before marriage were necessaries, is the real and not the apparent or assumed position which the husband may hold or take upon himself: (Stacy v. Firth and Wife, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 498. Lush, J.)

CHANCERY PRACTICE.—Where the justice of the case required it, the addition of co-plaintiffs to a suit was allowed to be made at the hearing of it: (Maughan v. Blake, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 513. Rolls.)

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

The Fusion of Law and Equity. By ARTHUR HOUSTON, LL.D. London: Henry Sweet, 3, Chancery-lane. Dublin: William M'Gee, Nassau-street. 1867.

THE above subject, which has for many years been a theme of controversy amongst law reformers, is ably treated in the brochure before us by a member of the Irish Bar. It is rather a puzzling question to answer, when put by a client or other unprofessional person, "What is the difference between Law and Equity?" The popular estimate of the latter principle seems to be that it represents justice, as contradistinguished from Law, which, in the public mind, seems to be a very different thing. The best and most concise definition of Equity, it appears to us, is that of Grotius, viz., "The correction of that wherein the law, in consequence of its universality, is deficient." The question discussed by our author is, whether the distinction which has hitherto been observed in the administration of these two principles cannot, with advantage, be obliterated and both combined in one tribunal, as is done in the United States of America. There can be no doubt that the current of legal public opinion is flowing strongly in that direction. We have all seen (some with regret) the partial obliteration of the strong line of demarcation which divided Law and Equity. The introduction of viva voce evidence and trial by jury (21 & 22 Vic., cap. 27) into Chancery, and the sanction of equitable defences at law, are both movements towards amalgamation.

We should be very sorry, however, to say that this progress towards fusion is conclusive evidence of its wisdom and expediency. It does not take a very long professional experience to find instances of mistaken legislation in the administration of the law. At this moment two Bills are before Parliament to undo what was done in this country under the name of legal Reform 17 years ago. "The Chancery Regulation Act," which was introduced, according to its preamble, to "regulate" and "improve" the proceedings in the Court of Chancery, is about to be repealed, having been found a total failure, and after 17 years wasted in bungling through its anomalies and confusion we are to return to "Bill and answer" again, and a regular system of pleading. The same failure followed the Law Reform inaugurated about the same time, by "The Common Law Procedure Act," and here again we are to return to declarations and pleas as formerly. We do not, therefore, conclude that because there has been a tendency to the fusion of Law and Equity in our modern legislation, that therefore it is a movement in the right direction. It is quite possible that experience may, in the course of time, lead public opinion back again, and that Law and Equity may become more separate than ever.

Doctor Houston admits that the principles of Equity could never have been completely developed into a perfect system if they had not been administered by separate equity tribunals, but he seems to consider that having through that separate administration become perfected into a positive code, it can now be safely combined with law, and be administered with the same certainty and rule. We differ from him entirely in this conclusion. We believe the principles of Equity to have, so to speak, an exceptional birth, and to arise from the special and unusual character of the circumstances which elicit them. Various as these circumstances are the principles which they elicit, so that it is impossible to say when the code of Equity will be perfected. Every day new complications are giving rise to new Equities, of the most delicate character, as different as possible from the clearly defined questions of law, which engage legal tribunals, and requiring a totally different class of mind and education to unravel them. True it is that Equity Lawyers sometimes make good Common Law Judges, although they as frequently fail to do so, but how rarely do we see a Common Law Lawyer make a good Equity Judge.

Entertaining this opinion we cannot avoid looking with some concern to the increase of Equity jurisdiction given (and proposed to be still further extended) to the Civil Bill Courts. Apart from the inefficiency of the machinery for the carrying out of what (if the Equity is fully administered) are, in fact, small Chancery suits, we think the appeal on points of Equity to a Common Law Judge is exceedingly objectionable and unsatisfactory. It may be said that the expense of the Court of Chancery amounts to a denial of justice in very small cases, such as will now come before the Civil Bill Courts, but surely it would be better, by some modification of the suit "in forma pauperis," and reduction of the Court fees to meet the necessities of such cases.

While we admire the ability with which Dr. Houston discusses this very important subject, and strongly recommend his pamphlet to the consideration of those of our readers who feel interested in the question, we confess that we do not agree with his conclusions, and have therefore candidly so stated.

ADVERTISEMENT TO CREDITORS, LEGATEES, AND INCUMBRANCERS.

Cause Petition under "The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850," section 15.

In the Matter of
Rupell Patterson and William Parker, Executors of John Parker, deceased, Petitioners;

Thomas Hugh, Henry Parker, and Bridget Parker, Respondents.

I HEREBY require all Persons claiming to be Creditors or General Legatees of John Parker, late of Silverbridge, in the County of Armagh, Esquire, deceased, on or before the 4th day of AUGUST next, to furnish, in writing, to RUPELL PATTESON, of Dundalk, in the County of Louth; or to WILLIAM PARKER, of Newry, in the County of Down, Executors of said John Parker; or to JOSEPH DICKIE, their Solicitor, the amount and particulars of their several demands (accompanied, in case of simple contract debts, by a statement of the consideration of such debts), in order that the Petitioner may, without any expense to them, prove in this matter such or so much of their demands as he shall think just, of the allowance or disallowance of which, or any part of same, said Creditors shall receive due notice. And all such Creditors whose demands shall be disallowed, either wholly or in part, shall, at the peril of costs, be at liberty to file charges in my Office, in respect of the claims or amounts so disallowed, within one fortnight after they shall respectively have received notice of such disallowance.

I also require all persons having Claims affecting the Chattels real of the said John Parker, to file same at my Chambers, Inn's-quay, in the City of Dublin, on or before the 4th day of AUGUST, 1867, in order that same may be proceeded on, and proved according to the General Orders of the 19th May, 1857.

Dated this 4th day of July, 1867.

J. J. MURPHY, Master in Chancery.

JOSEPH DICKIE, Solicitor for the Petitioners, No. 30, South Frederick-street, Dublin; and Dundalk.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, JULY 13, 1867.

THE Report of the Committee appointed at the late meeting of the Quarter Sessions Solicitors, which we published in our number of the 22nd June last, has been fully considered by the Practitioners throughout Ireland during the past Sessions, and, as far as we can learn, has, in its main features, been approved of by them. The report contains many valuable suggestions and shadows out a variety of amendments in the practice and procedure of the Civil Bill Courts, with regard to the desirability and even necessity for most of which there can be no second opinion. We propose to discuss occasionally, before the adjourned meeting is held, some of the intended changes.

The first paragraph of the Report suggests that the Bill to be introduced to consolidate and amend the several Acts relating to these Courts should be entitled "The Irish County Courts Act." We think the Bill should go further than it does in the direction indicated by its title, and modify somewhat the constitution of the Courts themselves.

Public opinion is not, perhaps, as yet ripe for the change which will, we believe, eventually be made, that is, to assimilate these Courts entirely to the County Courts of England, and to divide the country into certain districts, which need not necessarily coincide with the various counties, and to appoint a Judge to each district, who should receive a salary sufficient to enable him to devote his time exclusively to his duties as such Judge, and that the Courts should sit, not quarterly, as at present, but at such short intervals as the state of business in each district might require.

In the meantime, it would be most desirable at once to separate the civil side of the Quarter Sessions Court altogether from the criminal; the Courts should be styled "County Courts," and the presiding barrister should have the rank and title of "Judge," instead of being, as now, simply the "Chairman" of a Bench of Magistrates; this would add considerably to his dignity in the eyes of the generality of the suitors who frequent these Courts. At present the Chairman disposes of the criminal business with the assistance of the other Justices who may be in attendance; and immediately thereupon, without any adjournment or public intimation that the constitution of the Court has been, in fact, changed, proceeds to dispose of the civil business. The first case called on may be one in which the Magistrate sitting next the Chairman is a suitor, but he still retains his seat, and still—to his ignorant opponent in the suit—appears to form part of the tribunal that is about to pronounce a decision in the case; a change in this respect would not only relieve the Chairman from the embarrassment in which he is sometimes placed by a brother Justice attempting to converse with him upon a case in which he may be interested actually at hearing, but would prevent any suspicion of partiality arising in the mind of the humble suitor.

One of the most important improvements suggested in the procedure of the Civil Bill Courts is (to our view) that which deals with the method of proving a plaintiff's demand in an undefended case. Whenever a summons and plaint, to recover a debt of a very small amount, comes under the notice of a Judge of one of the Superior Courts, the Attorney issuing it is censured by the Judge, in almost every instance, most unjustly. The fact is, the plaintiff insists on proceeding in the Superior Courts, owing to the trouble and expense he must necessarily undergo to establish his claim by Civil Bill. He, or some witness on his behalf, must attend personally on a particular day to prove the debt, and if he be obliged to come from England, Scotland, or a distant part of Ireland, this involves a serious outlay of time and money to recover, perhaps, a few pounds, from a defendant whose solvency may be very questionable. The suggestion with respect to this, in the Report, is that plaintiffs should be enabled to obtain decrees in undefended cases, in all actions of debt, on filing affidavits of debt made by plaintiff or his agent, &c., such affidavits to be made before a Justice of the Peace in Ireland. A difficulty in the practical working of this suggestion would be that the plaintiff's attorney never knows whether the case will be defended or not until immediately before the commencement of the Sessions, and altogether too late to enable him to have the plaintiff or his witnesses in attendance, if they live at a distance. A better plan would, we think, be, that in all actions of debt, where the plaintiff's claim is for a liquidated demand, he should be at liberty, upon issuing his process, to file an affidavit of debt (to be made before a Justice of the Peace in Great Britain or Ireland) in the office of the Clerk of the Peace, and thereupon to cause defendant to be served, not only with the process, but also with a copy of the affidavit, and a notice informing him that a decree would issue unless notice of defendant's intention to defend the case were given to plaintiff's attorney a certain number of days before the commencement of the Sessions.

In connexion with the foregoing we may remark that the present rule as to costs in the Superior Courts often works great injustice to the holder of a Bill of Exchange for a small amount; should such holder sue a party to the Bill in the Superior Courts he gets a judgment in fourteen days, and if the amount of his Bill be £20 can issue execution for his debt and costs, but if the Bill only amount to £19 10s., all must be done at his own expense, as he can recover no costs. If the Bill fall due immediately after Sessions, he must wait three months before procuring a decree upon it, which may then be quite valueless; it was to obviate such delay as this that the recent "Bills of Exchange Act" was passed; and it would be just either that the rule depriving a plaintiff of all costs, where he recovers less than £20 in an action of contract, should not be extended to Bills of Exchange, or else that a provision should be made in the proposed County Courts Act, enabling the holder of a Bill for a sum under £20 to obtain a decree upon it during the interval between Sessions, on lodging with the Clerk of the Peace the Bill and an affidavit of debt, and serving defendant with a process; the decree to issue (upon proof of personal service) unless defendant within fourteen days file an affidavit stating that he has a good defence.

A Meeting of the Profession will be held in the Solicitor's Hall, Four Courts, on Monday next, the 15th inst., at Three o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of presenting an address to Mr. Orpin, President of the Incorporated Law Society, on the occasion of inaugurating his portrait, painted at the desire of his professional brethren.

THE ATTORNEYS' CERTIFICATE DUTY.

The Bill for abolishing this tax has been thrown out by a majority of twenty-one in a House of 153 members. The reason for opposition alleged by several of those members who voted against it was, that great pressure had been put upon them by attorneys among their constituents. We should be glad to know whether this is invariably a reason for opposing a Bill? By pressure of course we understand a fair amount of urgent representation, and not threats of opposition at future elections. And this being our apprehension, we would ask whether in nearly every case where the personal interests of a large body of men are involved, urgent representations are not made to members? Take the malt-tax for instance. Are we to suppose that the county constituencies are entirely passive when the question is pending? Yet we never find among the reasons assigned for opposition that pressure has been exercised. Very possibly attorneys know better than most people how to secure attention from members of the House of Commons; but is it to be that because they take the most effectual means of attaining the abolition of an oppressive tax, the tax is not to be abolished? We are not disposed to complain very bitterly of the result of the division, inasmuch as we believe the duty will be repealed in time. But we do complain that it should be said that the attorneys have caused by their conduct the rejection of a measure which they assisted in the only manner in their power. And we are certainly surprised that members should be led to avow that their objection to be subjected to direct personal influence was the main reason why they voted against the Bill.—Law Times.

ADMIRALTY COURT (IRELAND) BILL.

A Bill to Extend the Jurisdiction, alter and amend the Procedure and Practice, and to Regulate the Establishment of the Court of Admiralty in Ireland. (Prepared and brought in by Mr. Attorney-General and Lord Naas.)

The following is an abstract of the clauses of this Bill:—

PRELIMINARY.

1. This act may be cited as "The Court of Admiralty (Ireland) Act, 1867."
2. Interpretation of terms.
3. Except with respect to the appointment of officers, in which respect this Act shall take effect from its passing, this act shall take effect from and immediately after the second day of November, 1867.
4. After the commencement of Act, the first, second, and third sections of the act passed by the Parliament in Ireland, of the 23rd and 24th George the Third, chapter 14, and so much of the first section of the act of the second and third King William the Fourth, chapter 116, as relates to the salary of the Judge of the Admiralty in Ireland, and the 14th section of the Probate and Letters of Administration Act (Ireland), 1857. shall be repealed.
5. After the commencement of this act, the present judge, registrar (if any), marshal and seal keeper of the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland shall cease to hold their respective offices.

PART I.—COURT AND OFFICES.

6. There shall be one judge and one registrar of court.
7. Her Majesty, &c., may, from time to time, by letters patent, appoint a person, being or having been an advocate of the Court of Admiralty of Ireland, or a barrister of not less than fifteen years' standing, to be such judge; to hold office during good behaviour; and the same judge shall have full power and authority to hear and determine all manner of civil, maritime, and other causes to the jurisdiction of the said court now belonging, and shall also have such jurisdiction as is hereinafter by this act given to the said Court of Admiralty.
8. Every judge before acting shall take an oath prescribed.
9. The judge shall not sit in Parliament, nor practice as an advocate or barrister.
10. The Lord Lieutenant may appoint the registrar and marshal.
11. The registrar shall attend the Court of Appeal in Chancery.
12. The officers shall not execute their duties by deputy, except in cases of illness, &c.
13. No officer of the court shall practise therein.
14. Power of judge to appoint chief clerk to registrar and other clerks.
15. Appointment of train-bearer, crier, tipstaff, and servants by the judge.
16. The salaries of the judge and officers of the said Court of Admiralty shall be as follow—namely, of the judge, pounds a-year; of the registrar, pounds a-year; of the marshal, pounds a-year; besides such travelling and other expenses necessarily incurred in the execution of his duty as the judge, with the approval of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, shall allow; of the chief clerk in the registrar's office, and the clerk of the said court, and of the crier, tipstaff, and servants of the said court, such salaries respectively as the judge, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, shall appoint.
17. Retiring pension may be granted to judge after fifteen years' service, or in case of infirmity.
18. In case the present Judge of the Court of Admiralty be not appointed to the office of judge of the said court under this act, he shall be entitled to receive, by way of compensation, during his life an annuity equal to his salary at the commencement of this act; such annuity payable out of Consolidated Fund; and, in case any other person who shall cease by the provisions of this act to hold any office in the said court be not appointed to some office of not less emolument under this Act, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to grant such person such special annual allowance, and in such manner as by the 7th section of "The Superannuation Act, 1859," is provided in case of persons whose offices have been abolished.
19. Any officer of the said Court of Admiralty who shall resign his office shall be entitled to receive such superannuation allowance as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall think proper to direct; and in ascertaining and awarding the amount of such superannuation allowance the said Commissioners shall take into consideration the whole period during which any such person shall have been permanently employed in the said office or in any other public office, and shall proceed according to the principles laid down by the Superannuation Act, 1859.
20. The salary of the judge of the said Court of Admiralty, and any retiring annuity granted to a judge of the said court under this act, shall be payable out of the Consolidated Fund; and the salaries of all officers or servants of the said court, and any superannuation allowance which may be granted to any such officer or servant under the act, shall be paid out of such funds as Parliament shall, from time to time, provide for that purpose.
21. The salaries to be paid quarterly.
22. The Court of Admiralty shall be a court of record for all intents and purposes.
23. No action shall lie against the judge of the said Court of Admiralty for error in judgment, and the judge shall be entitled to all privileges and protection which by law appertain to the judges of the superior courts of common law in the exercise of their several jurisdictions.
24. The judge may appoint a surrogate.
25. The surrogate or deputy to be appointed by the judge as aforesaid shall be paid such remuneration as the judge, with the approbation of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, shall allow, provided that the same shall not exceed in any one year the sum of one hundred pounds.
26. Judge may, with the consent of the Commissioners of the Treasury, from time to time appoint a competent writer of shorthand to attend the Court; and any person so appointed shall hold office during the pleasure of the said judge, and shall be paid such annual salary as the Commissioners of the Treasury, on the recommendation of the judge, shall appoint; and there shall be charged, as part of the costs in any cause in the said court, such fees for copies of the minutes of any evidence taken down by such shorthand-writer during the progress of such cause as shall be appointed by general orders, and sanctioned by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury; and there shall be one such copy made in every cause for the use of the Court, and certified as true and correct by such shorthand-writer, and filed as a record of the Court, and the fees payable therefor shall be charged as court fees, and be paid for by such party in the first instance, and in such manner as shall be directed by general orders, and shall be deemed to be part of such party's costs in the cause.
27. Barristers-at law, attorneys at-law, and solicitors shall be at liberty to practise in High Court of Admiralty.
28. Wm. Russell Kelly, lately admitted a proctor, and the four apprentices to proctors, therein named, to be admitted within six months after commencement of act, as solicitors and attorneys without any payment, &c.

GORE v. O'GRADY.

June 7, 8; July 9.—Injunction—Waste—Bog—Cutting Turf for Sale—Renewable Leasehold Conversion Act.

This was an appeal from a decretal order of Lord Chancellor Blackburne, dated the 22nd of January, 1867 (vide ante, p. 5). The cause petition in this case was filed by Colonel Knox Gore to restrain the respondent Richard O'Grady, his workmen, labourers, and servants, from cutting, or permitting to be cut, any turf for the purposes of sale on the lands of Carrowkenibly, in the county of Mayo. These lands, which were described as containing "310 acres profitable land, together with the great bog containing 633 acres," were demised, in 1782, by Sir Richard Steele to Edward Moore for three lives renewable for ever, and this lease was converted into a fee-farm grant in 1854, under the provisions of the Renewable Leasehold Conversion Act. The estate of the grantor was now vested in the respondent Colonel Knox Gore, and that of the grantee in the appellant; and the latter had for some years been in the habit of cutting turf for sale on the bog in question, and claimed the right to do so from an alleged uninterrupted user since the date of the original lease of 1782, and also from the legal operation of the fee-farm grant of 1854. It appeared that a bill had been filed in 1849 to restrain the then tenant of these lands and his under-tenants from committing similar wastes, and that a conditional order for an injunction was made absolute in March, 1850, no cause having been shown against it. On the part of the appellant, however, it was alleged that the principal tenant was resident out of the jurisdiction of the Court at the time of these proceedings, and was never served with any notice of them; and that notwithstanding the injunction order the practice of cutting turf for sale had continued without cessation.

The COURT affirmed the decision of Lord Chancellor Blackburne, holding that there was not evidence of any uninterrupted and undisturbed user of the bog in the manner claimed, and being of opinion that the fee-farm grant did not enlarge in any way the rights of the tenant with respect to the cutting of turf.

ROLLS COURT.

KELLY v. FRENCH.

Ecclesiastical Lease — Renewal Fine — Purchase in Landed Estates' Court.

On the 11th of February, 1828, a sub-lease of lands, held under the See of Elphin, was made by Charles Simpson to Denis Kelly, for 21 years, at a rent of £153 11s. 3d. The lease contained a toties quoties covenant by the lessor to grant a renewal, reserving any additional or increased fines that should be demanded by the Bishop. By the custom of the see an annual renewal fine of £36 10s. 9d. was payable for the lands to the Bishop. This fine was always paid by Charles Simpson and those representing him. The reversion in fee became vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The persons entitled to Charles Simpson's interest granted a renewal to the representatives of Denis Kelly on the 9th of August, 1847. The lease of the 11th of February, 1828, was recited in this renewal, which purported to be made in pursuance of the covenant contained in that lease, but the covenant for renewal was a covenant to renew, reserving and paying any additional or renewed fines. The rent reserved was £150 18s. 2d. The difference between that and the rent reserved by the lease of 1828 was the tithe rent-charge which had been deducted from the original rent. In 1862 Charles Simpson's interest was sold in the Landed Estates' Court, and conveyed to the respondent, Arthur French, subject to the lease of 1847, which was stated in the rental to contain a covenant for renewal on payment of any additional or renewed fines. The purchaser obtained a perpetuity grant from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and insisted that in the perpetuity grant from him to the representatives of the sub-tenant, he was entitled to add the annual renewal fine to the rent reserved by the lease of 1847. The petition, which was presented under the 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 37, and 6 & 7 Wm. IV., c. 99, prayed that it might be declared by the Court that the respondent, Arthur French, was bound to convey the said lands to the petitioner, subject to the annual rent of £150 18s. 2d. only, and for a reference to settle the conveyance pursuant to such declaration.

The MASTER of the ROLLS held that the purchaser took subject to the covenant in the lease of 1847 only, but on the construction of that covenant, that he was not entitled to the annual fine in addition to the covenant.

June 4.—Trustee Relief Act—Lunatic—Dividends of Fund.

The amount of two legacies had been lodged by the executors of the will under the Trustee Relief Act. The legatee entitled to them was of weak mind, though not found a lunatic, and was an inmate of an asylum in England. She presented a petition by her next friend, who also resided in England, praying that the dividends might be paid to the next friend, she undertaking to apply them for the maintenance, clothing, or otherwise for the benefit of the petitioner.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said that he would not make the order to pay the dividends to a person out of the jurisdiction, and not amenable to the Court.

A written undertaking was afterwards procured from a gentleman residing within the jurisdiction to apply the dividends as stated in the prayer of the petition; and his Honor made an order for payment of the dividends to him, and directed by the order that he should account to the Court by affidavit every three years.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Kelly v. Fleming.

June 15.—Action for Rent—Set Off—Landlord and Tenant Act, s. 21.

This case came on upon a report from the Master, to whom it had been referred, setting out the facts for the decision of the Court. The action was one for rent upon a demise from the plaintiff to the defendant, dated the 2nd May, 1861, at a rent of £40 a year. The summons and plaint claimed £100 for two years and a half rent. The defendant paid £15 into Court, and pleaded to the rest of the claim a set-off for seven half-yearly gales of rent paid to the head landlord of the premises. The facts appeared to be as follow :—

Andrew Miller, being entitled to certain lands of Killiney, which he held for a term of 99 years from the 25th March, 1791, on the 29th September, 1794, made a lease of a portion of the lands to Garrett Neil for 70 years, at a rent of £6 16s. 6d., late Irish currency.

In 1806 Garrett Neil demised a portion of the portion which he so held to John Seaton for 54 years, at a rent of £2 5s. 6d. The interest in that lease became vested in a person named Dowling.

On the 7th December, 1809, Garrett Neil made another lease of another portion of the lands which he held to William Mackenzie, for 55 years, at a rent of £11 7s. 6d. That lease also vested in Dowling.

In 1806 Andrew Miller demised another portion of the premises to John Sherwood, for a term of 61 years from the 25th March, 1806.

On the 27th November, 1809, the representatives of Sherwood subdemised the portion of land included in the lease of 1806 to Garrett Neil for 55 years, at a rent of £14 a year; and on the 10th February, 1830, Garrett Neill made a lease to Dowling for twenty-four years and six months.

On the 28th January, 1858, a deed was executed between the representatives of Andrew Miller and William Dowling, by which, in consideration of £50 the representatives of Miller demised to Dowling the three portions of the lands for a term of 33 years from the 25th March, 1857, at a rent of £17 0s. 7d. That demise was for the entire residue of the term which Miller or his representatives had in the lands. The first payment of rent was to be made on the 25th March next ensuing the date of the deed, and the deed contained a clause expressing that it was made subject, and without prejudice, to the three leases made by Andrew Miller.

By his will, dated the 18th April, 1859, Dowling bequeathed his interest to Kelly, the plaintiff. Fleming, the defendant, was an under-tenant to Kelly, and actions having been brought by the representatives of Miller against Fleming, as the party in occupation, for the rent reserved by the deed of 1858, the defendant paid that rent, and thus arose the claim of set-off. No demand under the deed of 1858 was ever made by the representatives of Miller for that rent upon Kelly.

The question was, whether, under this state of facts, Fleming had a right, under the 21st section of the Landlord and Tenant Act, or otherwise, to pay the rent demanded under the deed of 1858, and set it off against the claim of his immediate landlord, Kelly.

June 4.—Ejectment—Lost Lease—Verdict against Evidence—Newly discovered Evidence.

Ejectment on the title. The case was heard before Monahan, C.J., at the Carlow Spring Assizes, 1866. The plaintiff's case was that the defendant held as tenant from year to year, and that the tenancy was determined by notice to quit. The defendant relied on a lease made to her late husband's father, in 1796, by the plaintiff's ancestor, Patrick Hickey the elder, for the life of his son, Patrick Hickey the younger, who was said to be still alive. The lease of 1796 was lost or destroyed, and the only one who had seen it was the defendant, who said she had not read it. Patrick Hickey the younger, went to America in 1827, and was not heard of from that time till 1865, when a letter was received, purporting to be from him, and which was proved at the trial, by comparison with the handwriting of the signature of a lease made by Patrick Hickey the younger, shortly before he went to America. The jury found for the defendant. An affidavit was afterwards received by the plaintiff from America stating that the Patrick Hickey who lived at the address in America, mentioned in the letter, was a much younger man than the Patrick Hickey, the cestui que vie, could be.

The Court (Fitzgerald, Hughes, and Deasy, B.B.) discharged the order, holding that the Lord Chief Justice had properly directed the jury, and that even if the balance of evidence was in favour of the plaintiff, still as the action was one of ejectment, and his rights were not concluded by the verdict, they would not give a new trial.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY and INSOLVENCY.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Reported by J. Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Miller, J.

In Re J. A. Mons, an Insolvent.

July 10.—Officers in Public Departments having fixed Incomes—Allocation Orders.

In this case the insolvent holds a public appointment worth about £450 a year, and having been arrested for debt he was obliged to file his petition and schedule. On coming up to be heard it appeared that his debts amounted to £2,576, some of which were secured, and he consented that an order should be made allocating £200 a year out of his salary towards the payment of the debts. There was a reference to the chief clerk to ascertain the amount of the debts, and the report of the chief clerk found that the debts of creditors entitled to dividend amounted only to £1,212. Upon foot of the allocation order an arrear of £156 13s. 4d. had accrued, and a conditional order was obtained, calling on the insolvent to show cause why he should not pay that sum into Court. In reply he served notice that he would show cause why he should not be called upon to bring in the arrears, and that the sum allocated should be reduced. A cross motion had been served on the part of the assignees, that as the pay of the insolvent had been increased since the allocation of £200 a year was made, the sum allocated should be increased in proportion.

Levy now moved, on the part of the insolvent. When the allocation order of £200 a year was made it was upon the assumption that the debts amounted to £2,578, but the chief clerk found that they did not amount to half that sum. The insolvent had paid £166 into Court, and to one of the large creditors a sum of £34, so that his liabilities were brought down to one thousand pounds in round numbers. Under these circumstances it was reasonable that the allocation should be reduced in proportion, and that the insolvent should not be called upon to pay up the arrears.

Kernan, Q.C., said the insolvent's application should be refused with costs. Instead of reducing the allocation there was a notice to increase it. The insolvent had not shown any cause whatever why he should not bring in the arrears due, or why the allocation should be reduced. He kept back the fact that his salary had been increased since the allocation order had been made, and he did not swear that he had sustained any loss calculated to diminish his means of payment. He alleged that he paid several creditors outside the allocation order, which he had no right to do. On the whole, the application was most unwarrantable, and although the creditors would not press to have the allocation increased, they would press for the arrears to be brought in.

Judge MILLER said that counsel for the insolvent had put forward his case upon the ground that the debts to which a dividend would be applicable were only about half what they appeared to be on the schedule, and that therefore the allocation order ought to be reduced. That was not the question for the Court; the question was the ability of the insolvent to pay, and it was not denied that he had a good and certain income, which was paid to the day. He (Judge Miller) would take that opportunity of announcing to all those public officers who had fixed incomes, that if they did not live within their means, and that they should come before the Court, they would never get a free discharge at his hands. Their case differed from that of people subject to the vicissitudes of trades and professions, which at one time might be prosperous, and at another unproductive and insufficient to meet even the most necessary expenses. When misfortune overtook such people there should be commiseration for them; but people with fixed incomes, who did not live within their means, should receive no favour at his hands. He would make absolute the order for paying up the arrears, which should be paid within a month, and he would refuse the motion with costs.

In Re JAMES WILLIAM KAVANAGH.

Allocation Order—Warrant for Contempt in Disobeying Order for Payment of Money—Arrest on a Sunday.

In this case the insolvent, who holds an appointment at a salary of £200 a year in the Catholic University, was discharged upon an undertaking to allocate £50 a year towards the payment of his debts. Having allowed this allocation to run in arrear, and it appearing that he was concealing himself, an order to substitute service was obtained, and ultimately an attachment was issued against him for not performing his undertaking, and he was arrested on a Sunday on his way to Church.

John M'Mahon, in the absence of Heron, Q.C., who was with him, now moved that the insolvent be discharged. The warrant was illegal. He had not been personally served with the order, and no attachment could issue without personal service of the order.

Judge MILLER.—There was an order to substitute, and the insolvent afterwards appeared in Court by his attorney. The real point in the case is the arrest on a Sunday. Then on that point the law was clear. The 7 Wm. III., ch. 17, s. 7, points out the offences for which a person may be arrested on Sunday, but the present was a mere money order, and an arrest under it was clearly illegal. The Judge cited The King v Myers, 1 Term Reports, 266; Wade v. Wood, 1 C. B., 462; Alfred Edgenton's Case, 20 E. & B.

Levy, as amicus curiæ, submitted that the 215th section of the Act showed that the insolvent was clearly entitled to be discharged. It should govern the case.

Kernan, Q.C., said that arrests for contempt in not paying money orders of the Court of Chancery were frequently made on Sundays, and their validity was never questioned. In the case of Walsh and Jordan, reported in Smith and Batty's reports, and referred to in Mr. Levy's book, it was decided that an attachment issuing from the Insolvent Court could be executed on Sunday. However, he would advise his client to consent to Mr. Kavanagh's discharge, upon an undertaking that there would be no action brought.

Judge MILLER.—I don't think there is much to apprehend on that ground—the whole point is, was the arrest legal on a Sunday? My recollection of the practice of the Court of Chancery is that attachments for non-payment of money could be executed on Sunday.

Heron, Q.C., said there could be no compromise or settlement of the matter, they should have the decision of the Court. Since the arrest detainers had been laid on, and if it were decided that the first arrest was illegal, any detainer subsequently laid on could not prevail. There was no doubt that the arrest on a Sunday for any contempt in the non-payment of money was illegal; the 218th section of the present Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act showed that any money contempt was a debt from which the party could be discharged by the Act, and an arrest for it was an arrest for debt, and clearly could not be made on a Sunday.

Judge MILLER said he had no difficulty in the case: it was by the 215th section an arrest for a debt, and could not be made on a Sunday. He would direct the insolvent to be discharged, simply on the ground of having been arrested on a Sunday. He would impose no terms on him; but he should be well advised before he brought an action for the arrest and imprisonment. The insolvent was ordered to be discharged.

THE YELVERTON CASE.

APPEAL TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

The noble and learned lords present this morning were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth, and Lord Colonsay. Lord Westbury was again absent this morning.

YELVERTON (OR LONGWORTH) v. YELVERTON.

The Appellant read the following reply:—The arguments which are capable of being advanced on both sides are already so fully before this House I feel that there is not much to be said by way of reply. It is but little that I can say, but, so far as I can understand, very little is necessary to be said. All that is really material is already in print before your lordships, and for an answer to all the arguments for the respondent that were not founded on mistakes I refer to the opinions of the judges of the Court of Session, and in particular to the opinion of Lord Deas. Their opinions are adverse to the respondent's argument on all points except the point of discretion, and his counsel have been driven, in substance, to argue that all the judges in the court below were wrong in their interpretation of the law of Scotland respecting reference to oath, but that three of them were right in their discretion in relieving Major Yelverton from the objection to come and swear as to the facts relating to his marriage with me. They say the Court of Session law is bad, but that its discretion is good. I say the reverse I say their discretion is the thing that is bad, and I further say that if judges err in four or five points of law with which they have been familiar all their days it is not to be presumed that they will not err in a question of discretion that has come before them for the first time; for it is the duty of judges to administer the law, and not to fetter legal principles by considerations of expediency and discretion. The rule of law for the application of which I contend has been settled for a century at least, and is acted on every day in all the civil courts of Scotland. The rule is, that a reference to oath of the whole cause is competent any time before extract. The counsel for the respondent at the outset admitted the rule, and then straightway proceeded to deny it. They say that it rests on three old cases, and that it was practically abolished by the 11th George IV., and 1st William IV., chap. 69, sec. 36. The three cases are referred to, and commented on in the ap. case, p. 10, Dalziel v. Richmond, Gray v. Leny, M'Innes v. Moore, Pennycook v. Grante and Gunton. I have been informed that there have been many other cases of declaration of marriage besides these—three or four—in which this kind of evidence was allowed; and to this matter I appeal to the intimate acquaintance with Scotch practice of one of your lordships. There have been several cases where judicial declarations even, emitted not on oath, were used as evidence. The sole evidence in the well-known case of Kennedy v. M'Dowall was a deposition of Colonel M'Dowall either on oath of reference or judicially. He made three different statements, denying that marriage was mentioned in the first two, and admitting a conditional promise of marriage in the last. It is certain that a reference to oath in a declaration of marriage was never refused before, and that is a peculiar fact as to the practice of the law. On each of these three cases I have a small mistake on the part of the respondent to correct. Dalziel was said to settle only, that after general evidence the oath of a party could be resorted to; but surely that implies that reference to oath was competent where there had been no general evidence attempted. Gray v. Leny was said not to have been opposed; but that is a mistake, for the commission refused to sustain the oath, apparently on the ground that the woman was a person of bad character much less than the man, and this decision, arrived at, no doubt, in the exercise of their discretion, was reversed by the Court of Session. It is said that in Pennycook v Grante and Gunton, the oath was only admitted along with other evidence, but that also is an error. The oath was the only evidence. It was open to all the objections that are pleadable in this case, and to the additional objection that it was not admitted in the declaration of marriage, but in a different action. It was, no doubt, admitted prior to the second marriage; but if the second marriage had been a proper legal bar to its emission, it ought to have been equally a bar to its use as evidence. If it be incompetent to take an oath after a second marriage, it is equally incompetent to use one which had been previously taken. The object of the 11th George IV. and 1st William IV., c. 69, secs. 33 to 36, was to merge the Consistorial Court in the Court of Session, and to preserve the old rules of the Consistorial Court as to giving decree only after evidence, and not on the admissions of parties. It never was the practice of the Consistorial Court to give decree of divorce, and the like, in absence. Collusion was always guarded against by the rule requiring that the case should be proved by evidence other than mere admission or record. In Jolly v. M'Gregor, of which Mr. Anderson talked as if there had been no evidence except the admission of parties, there was a very long proof. There was some evidence of admissions of a marriage ceremony on the part of Mrs. Jolly. That evidence was not held to be incompetent, but it was disbelieved. But what are the admissions of parties? What they say in presence of the clergyman and witnesses at a regular marriage are nothing more than admissions. They may be called the contract, but they are only evidence of it. But leaving them aside, would the speech of a new-made husband, returning thanks for the toast of himself and his new-made wife, not be evidence by way of admission of a contract of marriage? In all Scotch irregular marriages the evidence is and must be either the oral or written admissions of parties. For example, the whole evidence in the Breadalbane case is of the nature of admissions, and the same holds in all cases of habit and repute. If Mr. Anderson's doctrine be right, no Scotch marriage, regular or irregular, was ever competently proved. It is to be hoped that it cannot be successfully denied that by the law of Scotland reference to oath is competent any time before extract. There are two facts in the present cause, and two only, that are alleged to take it out of the common rule: (1) there has been an appeal to the House of Lords, and a judgment by that House of the merits as then were disclosed by prout de jure evidence; (2) there has been a second marriage on the part of the gentleman who objects to the oath of reference, and he says that to depone may involve him in a confession of bigamy, and may cause prejudice to the lady with whom he has committed bigamy. No distinction has been suggested—not to say established—between a final judgment of this House and any other court administering the law of Scotland; and it is impossible to meet assertions of distinctions when there are none that can be put into words, much less presented to the scrutiny of reason, except by counter-assertions. If there be a distinction it has to be established, and established on principles not patent to ordinary common sense and reason; for this House, when deciding on the evidence before it, could not foresee, and is not understood having professed to foresee what would be the effect of a deposition emitted by Major Yelverton on oath—that being a kind of evidence not before it, not yet in existence, and the substance of it being even now a matter of very great uncertainty. This House decided on the printed evidence according to its light, or rather according to its darkness (for what was held was that there was not clear and sufficient proof of a marriage); but to decide as to Major Yelverton's oath and its contents would have required not the light of evidence, but at least the light of prophecy. Hitherto this House has not laid claim to the possession of any such light. When it does so, it will probably be found to possess it by virtue of its containing within itself the ornaments of another profession than that of law. The cases of Reid v. Hope and Robinson v. Robinson are said to establish that a reference to oath after judgment of the House of Lords is incompetent. I submit that they establish the contrary, if they establish anything at all. The first was decided on the ground that the House of Lords might have decided it, on the grounds of the intention of the testator to discharge the debt and give the legacy in addition; the second was decided on the ground that there had been a previous reference to oath on which nothing had been done. It appears, therefore, that these cases were both decided on special grounds, which they would not have been had the general ground, that reference after appeal to the House of Lords is incompetent, been sound in law. What took place at the tendering of the minute of reference has been misrepresented. The minute was tendered before the judgment of this was applied, as appears from The Jurist, page 326 (read). It was admitted at the time, both on the Bench and at the Bar, that applying the judgment made no difference, so long as it was not extracted. Your lordship on the woolsack asked, "when the conclusiveness of the judgment of this House began," and the answer was not very direct or explicit, because it was erroneous. The short and only correct answer is, that the conclusiveness of a judgment begins when it is extracted. Every judge in the court below recognises this, and the principle may be concealed, but no principle of Scotch law is more certain. The Attorney-General said that the proper time to refer was after the Lord Ordinary's hostile judgment. That is just precisely the position of the case at this moment, for the judgment of the Lord Ordinary has been returned to by the direction of this House. The judgment is no doubt slightly altered in my favour, but it is the judgment of the Lord Ordinary nevertheless. If it acquired any new quality distinguishing it from other final judgments of Scotch Courts it would be desirable to know what that new quality is. As yet it is a matter of mystery which has never been expressed in human speech. 2. There are two short answers to the objection that Major Yelverton may be led to confess himself guilty of bigamy. The first answer is, that he cannot be asked anything about his second marriage, which was the transaction that involved bigamy; and the second answer is, that, if asked any question a true answer to which would be a confession of a crime, he can exercise the usual privilege of witnesses, and decline to answer that question and all such questions. That a witness may be asked about questions which may criminate himself is no ground of objection to the competency of examining him—no ground for his refusing to step into the witness-box; but the necessity of self-crimination is a good ground for his declining to answer. His declinature to answer might have civil effects against him, but silence can never produce criminal consequences against any one. All criminals in Scotland are asked questions about their guilt before being committed for trial, and their statements form what is called a declaration, and is used as evidence against them; but they may decline to answer, and those who are sufficiently knowing to decline, and their refusal to answer is not evidence against them. The interest of a second wife, assumed to be an innocent third party, is no good ground for doing injustice to a first wife, or innocent first party. To sustain this plea for Major Yelverton would be to allow him to benefit by his own wrong. As to Mrs. Forbes, I deny, in the first place, that her good faith, or bona fides, would make any difference; and, in the second, I undertake to prove her want of bona fides—I undertake to prove that at the time she married Major Yelverton she knew of my existence, and that I claimed to be the wife of Major Yelverton. It has been said that to allow the oath of a husband to displace a second marriage, or a regular marriage, would be to introduce a new peril into the law of Scotland. What is the new peril? It has been settled, at least, since the case of Dalrymple, that a private regular marriage may displace a public regular marriage, so there is no new peril in that. The peril then assumes a new aspect merely as to evidence. Surely the peril is a slight one to trust to the oath of a party—the proof of a fact which it is his interest to deny. But it is suggested that there may be collusion. There may be collusion in all consistorial cases, especially in cases of divorce. There never would be a divorce if the mere vague dread of collusion were to shut out evidence. The possibility of collusion is not a reason for denying justice when there is no collusion. Every judge has a duty to watch for and defeat collusion when it appears in special instances, but is an undefined fear of collusion to shut the door of consistorial courts? Collusion in marriage cases is almost unknown. It need not excite any fear of a general character. It is, no doubt, easy to imagine cases of collusion, of a husband swearing what is false to get rid of his wife, or declining to answer. But who ever heard of a case established by collusion being conclusive against any one? Again, is collusion by writ not quite as easy as by oath? If a husband is to displace a regular marriage by collusive means, it is quite as easy to write and antedate a few letters acknowledging the marriage relation as to emit an oath to that effect. Even in the Dalrymple case there was a possibility of collusion. The evidence in that case was a written promise of marriage and a written declaration of marriage de presenti. Was it not perfectly possible to fabricate these in order to displace the marriage with Miss Laura Manners? And in the present case, if Major Yelverton intended by collusive means to displace Mrs. Forbes, how easy it would have been to have given the appellant a writing under his hand which would have proved that marriage which she has as yet failed to prove? I do not deny the possibility of collusion. I do not dispute that there should be a discretion on the part of judges to prevent abuse of the forms of law. But surely the time to defeat collusion is when it displays itself in a concrete form, the time to exercise discretion is when there is some plain, clear reason to exercise it. If judges have so much discretion before sustaining a reference to oath, they have surely some discretion after the oath has been emitted. If the deposition consists of palpable lies they can surely disregard it, in the exercise of their discretion. If it consists of probable lies, if it raises the suspicion of collusion, would it be beyond their discretion to order investigation? Let Major Yelverton's deposition be taken. If it indicate a desire to prove false to Mrs. Forbes let it be disregarded, or let her come into the process to prove its falsehood and protect her own interest. All this talk about discretion proceeds on three false assumptions—1. On the false assumption that discretion does not exist after the reference is sustained; 2. On the false assumption that Major Yelverton is in collusion with me; and 3. On the false assumption that a judgment obtained by fraud and collusion would be conclusive against Mrs. Forbes, when in point of law it would be entirely null. At the previous judgment of the House, although the reference to oath was asked to be provided for, the matter was not argued, and it was not decided. The only one of your lordships who said a word was Lord Westbury, and he said that this House "would make an order for or against further proceedings." What was asked was, that there should be a reservation as to reference to oath; but that was unnecessary, if the law itself reserved the right up to the time of extract, which was the view of the law taken by all the judges in the Court of Session. In cases of bankruptcy, when the oath has been included, the principle on which that was done was that the bankrupt had himself ceased to be a party to the cause. It was not because of the interest of the creditors, but because he himself had no interest. In the case of the £20,000 lottery ticket this is clear, because the oath was admitted as to the £15,000 which the creditors did not have a right to, but included as to the rest to which they did have a right If Major Yelverton had himself ceased to have an interest in this action these cases would be in point, but as he still has the true interest they are quite beside the point, though the judicial opinions are valuable for other purposes than those for which they were cited on the other side. Mr. Anderson says that a deposition in a reference to oath is not evidence. If not, what is it? What is that is given on oath if not evidence? All the writers on Scotch law treat it as evidence. They treat it as evidence, and as something more than evidence. It has the effect of evidence, though it be not true against the party referring, but if it be plainly false, it has not been settled that it would have that effect against any other party. The other side have denied that there can be a competent reference to oath in a declaration of marriage; if so, it is strange that no writer on the law of Scotland knew of this doctrine. All the Scotch writers on the law of marriage say that marriage can be proved by writ and by oath of party, and they further say that promise of marriage cannot be completely proved except by the writ or oath of the promiser; that is to say, cannot be completely proved except by evidence which Mr. Anderson asserts to be incompetent. If Mr. Anderson be right, all the lawyers in Scotland have been wrong, at least since Lord Bradfield, the greatest Scotch judge of his time, who decided Dalziel v. Richmond. It may be, my lords, that this process to which I cling as bringing about the long-wished-for goal, the end of this wearying strife, is but the frail plank which brings me up for a moment only to sink beneath me, and leave me a prey to the boisterous waves of life, alone, unprotected. It may be that, instead of giving me the relief I seek, it is but the renewal of strife; but my heart and soul is vowed to live or perish in the truth, and, until it is recognised, the light of heaven cannot shine for me, or the lap of earth cradle me in its sweetness. "Yet, I will not argue against Heaven's decree, nor bate one jot of heart or hope, but still bear up and steer right onward." I have made my last appeal to your lordships, but my prayer will ever be—"Judica me, Deus, et discerne causam meam de gente non sancta; ab homine iniquo et doloso erue me." Lord Camden is said to have described the law of discretion as the law of tyrants; and it is certainly a word much oftener in the mouths of despots than of judges, who decide not according to convenience, but according to justice. Why should the discretion of any court shut up the avenues of justice against me? I say that to do so is not in accordance with the law or the Constitution of this country. It is impossible to understand a Court saying that the truth is certain not to be reached in that way, and we will not allow it to be attempted. Can that be said here? Does Major Yelverton plead that "the truth is not in me," therefore it is useless to seek for it by putting me on oath? If he can swear that he never married me why should he not do it? And if he cannot swear this, why should anybody's discretion deprive me of that evidence, and so deprive of justice? If Major Yelverton, after this seven years' litigation, were to admit on oath facts inferring marriage with me, can any human being who knows the history of both of us believe that his admissions in my favour would be untrue in point of fact? There may be some who would disbelieve his statements to a contrary effect, but I make bold to affirm that no rational man or woman would disbelieve admissions on his part, if these admissions were to prove my marriage with him which he has denied so long. Every consideration that departs from the settled rule of law breaks down. It has been said that this litigation has lasted nine years, and that nine years is long enough for a litigation. I have good reason to be tired of its length and of its many anxieties. Not a few of the best years of my life have been spent in it, have been what some of the proper votaries of happiness may think wasted in it. But I have sought for justice, and for justice alone do I beg to protest against being debarred from the pursuit of justice, simply because I have not been so fortunate as to reach it in nine years. I have seen it to be my duty to do what I have done, and I feel that I should be false to my conscientious convictions if, because of any considerations of expediency, or convenience, or selfish comfort of body or of mind, I should desist, so long as effort is possible, to strive after what I know to be truth and justice, as certainly as I can ever know anything in this dark world of life and time. If the right shall not prevail in the end, the fault will not be mine.

The appellant having come to a portion of the manuscript which she could not decipher, handed it to Mr. Anderson, and asked him if he could make it out.

Mr. Anderson said that the writing was quite illegible.

The Lord Chancellor remarked that her counsel must write a very bad hand, and called upon Mr. Campbell Smith to read the remainder of the reply himself, but cautioned him to confine himself within the four corners of the written reply.

Mr. Campbell Smith then proceeded to read the remainder of the appellant's reply, while the appellant herself took his seat, and, exhausted with her labours, having spoken for upwards of three hours, leaned her head upon the desk behind the bar.

At the conclusion of the legal argument,

The Lord Chancellor—I do not know whether the appellant would wish to address the House further. We consider this as merely Mr. Smith reading for you what he had previously prepared for you. If you have anything further to address to the House we shall be happy to hear you.

After consulting for a few minutes with her counsel,

The Appellant said—If your lordships would be good enough to adjourn for a short time, I should be in a better position to proceed with my case.

The Lord Chancellor—You have something more you wish to read to us?

The Appellant—Yes, my lord.

The Lord Chancellor—Very well, it is near our usual time for adjourning. We usually adjourn for a quarter of an hour, but we will now adjourn for half an hour in order to give you time to prepare yourself.

The House then adjourned for half an hour.

On the House reassembling,

The Appellant proceeded to say—This unfortunate case, my lords, has brought to light and developed the hideous proportions, the anomalous state of the marriage laws of the three kingdoms—a purely civil contract in Scotland, it is a tyrannical, fanatical, religious one in Ireland. Has a man professed himself a Protestant by going to church and sacrilegiously receiving the Holy Sacrament for the first time in his life, he can then possess himself, with all the formalities and religious ceremonies prescribed by law, of the person and property of any Catholic lady his evil eye may have fallen upon, and then turn her adrift to ignominy, poverty, and shame by setting up his Protestantism, by setting up his religion, forsooth, as the cloak and shield of the vilest of crime—the mockery of his God on His consecrated altar—the defiance of His laws in his very temple—the worse than murder of his helpless victim. Such, however, my lords, is the existing law of Ireland, framed in the dark hour of religious persecution, remaining on the statute-book as a snare only for the innocent. I quite object to the attempt made by my learned friends on the opposite side to change the defender in this case—to substitute Mrs. Forbes for Major Yelverton. We hear no more of his rights, of justice to be done him; he has ceased even to demand the solatium for the wound inflicted on his feelings in the shape of consecutive £50 penalties. This balm of Gilead was not applied, but you are asked now to prescribe for Mrs. Forbes equally at the expense of the appellant. Major Yelverton, in the prayer of his petition, demands, much in the style of Dick Turpin, "Your honour or your purse." If you say you are a wife, pay for it; pay me, or I can cast you into prison; pay me, because I persuaded you that a Scotch marriage in a private room was binding in that land; pay me, because yielding to your scrupulous nature, I took you before a priest of the Most High to sanction in the sight of Heaven our union; because with my own hand I took the helm and steered the frail bark which bore us over the bright Bay of Rostrevor to the lonely church of Killowen. I declare now I had no intention of marrying you. I am a Protestant now, and I have taken the Sacrament and disclaim you. I bring an action against you, by which, if you dare to utter a word to the contrary, I can fine and starve you to death in prison, and put you to shame. My lords, it required a bold heart to withstand this. It required the conscientiousness of truth not to bow before such impending ruin. But, "although all the fiends from heaven that fell" had pealed the threat in her ears, she had not yielded; her cheek might blanch and her woman's nature quail, but the quivering lip shall speak the truth until the solemn hand of Death shall lay them still. True, that in the little parlour at Mrs. Gamble's there were none present to note the vows save the guardian angel that registered them in heaven; yet I challenge the defender in the presence of his Maker to deny that he took her as his wife. And such, my lords, I humbly submit, is the law of Scotland. This dire struggle for mere existence was spared her by the merciful consideration of your lordships in refusing the solatium damages and penalties forming a portion of the action. Your lordships render this putting to silence innoxious; it became nugatory and futile; for your lordships must be aware that it would be hopeless to put a woman to silence except by the ancient practice of the bridal, or the present singular method of first starving her to death. But what I am coming to is this, that I submit to your lordships that the almost obsolete suit for jactitation—the English translation of it—is not such an action, even in its full vigour, as should bind all the world, and settle irrevocably and unassailably the status of individuals, of families, and of society. It is not such an action carrying a judgment which would entitle a peer to take his seat on these benches. I think this noble House would scrutinise closely the title of a man which hung upon the ignoble suit of jactitation, or putting to silence of a supposed wife. The Duchess of Kingstown was a prominent instance of of this, for she was arraigned at this very bar for bigamy—what though she held a judgment of jactitation, or putting to silence, in her favour, she was convicted by her peers of bigamy, and only escaped branding in those days because, I believe, in her right of peeress she could not be branded as a punishment. Setting aside for a moment the individual rights of a poor woman, there is a wider question to be settled, which concerns society at large, which concerns this noble House in particular, for in the future a peerage will be at stake—a cornet nobly worn, such as grace the brows of your lordships—that the evidence which I am now pleading to have admitted will then be unattainable. Major Yelverton will be no more. "O'er the world which folds his grave let them rave;" but his secret will be for ever locked therein, and years of litigation must necessarily ensue, and the rightful heir to Barry Yelverton, one of Nature's noblemen, as of Royal Letters Patent, may or may not be able to establish his right. In the Townshend Peerage, if I am rightly informed, your lordships exercised your prerogative and initiated proceedings prior to the death of the only man who knew the facts, the Marquis of Townshend, which, had he died silent, would never have been truly ascertained, but the right of the peerage would have been questioned at his death, and to spare this litigation your lordships took the steps mentioned. This, then, is my argument, that evidence now available should be taken when in time, not commit to a future generation the legacy of a lawsuit, to which they certainly were innocent parties. It is argued to your lordships, and cases are cited to prove that you are sticking at a regular subsisting marriage. Now, Mrs. Forbes's marriage has not subsisted any more than the appellant's; they have alternated one with the other from 1861 to 1865. Mrs. Forbes had no subsisting marriage, the judgment in both courts, Irish and Scotch, being against her marriage. In 1857, Major Yelverton married Theresa Longworth, first according to the law of Scotland as declared by the full Scotch Court, and again in Ireland in facie ecclesia, and here we have the first subsisting marriage; for, my lords, whatever may have been the fluctuation and vicissitude since—is until a marriage is held void, it is to be held legal. Then, in 1858, we have the marriage of Major Yelverton to Mrs. Forbes, which, for the sake of argument merely, we will admit, casts a doubt upon the first marriage; but it would not, under these circumstances, be regarded as a bona fide established marriage. In 1859, the case of bigamy brought by the Procurator Fiscal was withdrawn. But this withdrawal of a criminal charge did not fix either one marriage or the other. In 1860, in an action brought against Major Yelverton by the Messrs. Grant and Gask, he admitted his liability by paying the demands and expenses in court. In 1861, a jury found a legal marriage between Major Yelverton and Theresa Yelverton. In 1862, the Lord Ordinary Ardmillan gave an interlocutor, by which he ordained that Theresa Longworth should be put to silence there anent, pay a solatium to Major Yelverton to soothe his wounded feelings, pay the expenses of this action for putting her to silence, and be fined £50 for every new offence of talking. Subsequently, in the same year, in Ireland, the full Court confimed the finding of the jury. In 1862, the High Court of Session reversed the interlocutor of Lord Ardmillan, and declared Major Yelverton and Theresa Longworth legally married persons according to the law of Scotland. In 1865, your lordships reversed this interlocutor, not finding sufficient evidence to instruct a marriage; but you refused to grant either expenses, solatium, or penalties. I humbly submit, my lords, that upon these facts it is a cruelty and injustice to ask your lordships to cut short further proceedings, and arrest a fact so all-important, so vital to the truth, on the lips of the defender; for, my lords, though labouring under the fear of wearying the kind attention of your lordships, I must repeat that if Major Yelverton had not exchanged marriage consent with Theresa Yelverton in the parlour of her respectable friend, Mrs. Gamble, is it not the simplest thing in the world for him to swear he did not. If the last great judgment day were revealed in all its awful majesty to the poor appellant this moment, she could swear he did. If he did, my lords, I am persuaded—nay, I am positive—your lordships will not allow him to escape upon a mere technical pretext—a mere formality. You will uphold the honour and equity of this House. You will uphold that truth and justice are the guiding stars of the laws of the British Empire. I am not certain that the Court of Session in their judgment (though it seemed to me hard at the time) did not reserve this special duty to your lordships. They had given their opinion, and it differed from your lordships. They declined to interfere with your lordships' judgment, but they return to you the case with the means in your power to ascertain if a marriage could or could not be proved in Scotland, and they leave it to your lordships graciously to examine the question for yourselves, and, at your lordships' bidding, will undertake the matter of reference to oath. For your lordships, sitting as the highest tribunal of appeal, are not, as assumed by my learned friend, therefore, arbitrary and absolute, so that a case having once been adjudicated upon, right or wrong, it can never again appear under a different aspect or point of law. In the case of Campbell v. Cochrane your lordships used your powers to grant a proof refused by the lower court. Your lordships have never arrogated any such privilege. As stated by Lord Eldon, your lordships constitute the supreme court, but, I humbly believe, supreme also in justice and equity. In the Dalrymple case, the defender, Dalrymple, was examined, and his evidence or statement, though sealed up, was looked at by Sir W. Scott and used against him In the Divorce and Matrimonial Court of England the parties to the suit can be examined. In the Slade case, the other day, the lady, or party to the marriage, was examined; also in the Dundonald peerage, simply because, my lords, the parties to the fact are often the only persons with whom rests the knowledge; and justice cannot be done until that knowledge is brought to light. Your lordships' adverse judgment was based upon the want of it, upon the inadequacy of the proof, principally of letters produced from the possession of the defender and Mrs. Forbes; the many foolish ones were given, and the few wise ones withheld; the chaff briskly winnowed to the public and your lordships, but the wheat had been artfully filched and hidden away. The words used by your lordships in your judgment are—"We find that the respondent has failed to instruct a marriage, her rights then, however, are . . . and one cannot be sustained without the other." If this point of justice were refused her position would be untenable—bound to a man by the law and religion of his own country, yet that man pronounced free by a dictum of the House of Lords, given in a Scotch suit, where their powers were confined to the Scoth marriage in dispute, and where the jurisdiction did not extend over the Irish marriage. for whether it might or might not be. But the Act of Parliament 19 Geo. II., is a point not to be decided by a Scotch court. Your lordships settled that the jurisdiction of a Scotch court did not extend to foreign marriages, where no sufficient domicile could be established, as in the case of Robins v. De Pontes, and more recently of Pitt v. Pitt. Shall it go forth to the world that an English lady, who, for seven of the best years of her life, has devoted her fortune, her energies, and every means at her disposal to ascertain the simple fact whether she was married or single, that, through the exercise of a discretionary power of the Court, she is to be left for another seven years, and that. if borne down by weight of woe and hope too long deferred, hope of peace, my lords, and some surely happier destiny than this, nature should succumb, another generation of lawyers, and another generation of litigants, must still break their hearts and vex their souls in the Yelverton case? The Court below are agreed that I should have a right to the reference to oath, except for some particular circumstance which they suppose to exist; and is it not the proudest boast that every Englishman, however lonely and poor, has a free-born right to justice, and it is exemplified in this very instance, that, poor and helpless woman as I am, I am still allowed to stand at this bar, and your lordships deign me your most benignant attention. And had I the inspired tongue to lay my manifold and complicated wrongs clearly before your lordships, you certainly would redress them—you would do me the justice to at least probe the truth to the bottom where you have the power. The Court in Ireland did me justice, and for twelve days investigated every fact and circumstance. The Scotch Court also took infinite pains to apply their peculiar law to this peculiar case. Shall this, then, be the first time that justice has been refused, for the sole object of putting an end to a litigation? That would not be a British principle, but something alien. Justice has never been refused to an Englishman unless he has proved himself unworthy of his rights and of his country. It has been urged upon your lordships several times, and the question has been raised—What is to become of Mrs. Forbes in case Major Yelverton depones affirmative? I believe I could solve that problem. I have already stated that there is no fear for Major Yelverton of punishment for bigamy; but if there remains the slightest doubt upon his mind as to any danger from this source, he has it in his own power to secure himself most effectually against any attempt to inflict the punishment of bigamy upon him. He has only to reveal his hiding-place, and accept the service of citation into the Divorce Court, or if he object to the jurisdiction of an English court, being an Irishman, I will apply for a citation from your lordships, as representative peers of Ireland, having jurisdiction over that kingdom. Then, my lords, freed from all marriage with the appellant by this the only mode of dissolving the double marriage in different countries, he could then marry Mrs. Forbes, and give her the status so urgently pleaded for her, without any risk of its being disputed by posterity. Then he might safely walk abroad in open day, "his lovely Thais by his side;" for "none but the brave, none but the brave deserve the fair."

At the conclusion of the appellant's address,

Their lordships consulted for a short time, after which

The Lord Chancellor said—The House will take time to consider its decision in this case.

The further consideration was therefore adjourned sine die.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, July 8.

COURTS OF LAW OFFICERS (IRELAND) BILL.

The consideration of this bill in committee was resumed.

On clause 35,

Mr. VANCE proposed, in line 28, to leave out "judges of the court," and insert "Chief Justice or Chief Baron, as the case may be." His object was that the chief judges of the court shall have the appointment of the superior officers, as was the case in England.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND said that the only object he had in view was to secure the appointment of efficient officers, and that could be best done by leaving the matter to all the judges, every one of whom was as much interested in having proper officers appointed as the chief judge.

Sir C. O'LOGHLEN would rather give patronage to the Government than to judges; but if it were conferred on the judges there should be a practicable system of exercising it.

Lord NAAS defended the proposal of the bill.

Mr. CHILDERS said that the patronage, if left to four, would be exercised without responsibility.

Mr. HENLEY concurred in this view.

Mr. SYNAN asked on what principle the patronage was to be exercised if the four judges differed in opinion?

Mr. VANCE having replied,

The committee divided, with the following result:—

For the amendment,	35
Against it,	88
Majority against,	—53

The clause was then agreed to.

On clause 37,

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND moved an amendment to the effect that officers who had served twenty-five years, and whose services were no longer required in the same capacity, should be required to serve in some other suitable position, and that if they refused to do so they should not be allowed to retire on full pay.

Agreed to.

Some other clauses were agreed to, and the committee reported progress.

JULY 11.

BANKRUPTCY BILL (ENGLAND).

The order of the day for going into committee on this Bill having been read,

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL took occasion to say that when a question was put to him a week ago as to whether the Government intended to proceed with the Bill in the present Session he had some hope, though not a very sanguine one, that something might be done in the direction proposed even before the recess. Looking, however, at the position in which the public business now stood, he frankly admitted that it would be, in his opinion, impossible to go on with a Bill which contained 479 clauses, and to pass which it would be necessary at this period of the Session to ask the House to sit de die in diem. (Hear, hear.) He was of that opinion, notwithstanding that the general provisions of the Bill had been received with very general assent throughout the country, and that he believed it would not be found expedient to introduce into it any very great alterations. The measure, at the same time, ought, no doubt, to receive full and fair discussion, and he did not think, therefore, that he should be justified in pressing it forward under present circumstances. He trusted, he might add, that the care and labour which had been expended on the measure would not be wholly thrown away. The criticisms upon it which had reached him from all quarters, especially from the Chambers of Commerce, were upon the whole extremely favourable; the only adverse criticism, indeed, being contained in the statement that it was impossible to tell whether it was a debtors' or a creditors' Bill. That was, however, he thought, the highest compliment which could be paid it, for it was a Bill which had been framed in the interest of the whole community, and not of any particular class. In conclusion, he had only to say that he hoped to be able at the earliest possible moment next session to introduce another Bill of substantially the same character, which would lead to the satisfactory settlement of a long vexed question. (Hear, hear.) He begged to move that the order for going into committee on the Bill be discharged.

Mr. LEEMAN thanked the hon. and learned gentleman for taking the course which he had adopted, inasmuch as the House was thereby secured from much inconvenience. He would suggest that before the measure was re-introduced it should, as far as possible, be divested of the cumbrous machinery with which, as it now stood, the arrangements with creditors were surrounded.

Mr. NORWOOD also thanked the hon. and learned gentleman for the great attention which he had paid to the subject, and the courtesy which he had manifested in dealing with it. (Hear, hear.) The withdrawal of so important a Bill might occasion some disappointment in the country; but at the present advanced period of the Session it could not, he thought, with advantage be proceeded with.

The order for going into committee on the Bill was then discharged, as were also the orders for going into committee on the Judgment Debtors' Bill, and the Bankruptcy Acts Repeal Bill.

THE COURTS OF LAW OFFICERS' (IRELAND) BILL passed through committee, with the addition of some new clauses.

ENGLAND.

DISFRANCHISEMENT OF THE SOLICITORS.

A vote of the House has imported into the Reform Bill a provision disfranchising all agents, canvassers, and other persons paid for their services at elections. This is no novelty. It was the law some years ago; it was fairly tried and failed, and the prohibition was repealed. Strong objections were made to the exclusion, and it was easily evaded by the simple process of employing a son, or nephew. Earnest endeavours were made to omit the word "agents," it being rightly contended that solicitors were too costly to be employed in large numbers; but the House has a virtuous fit of hostility to bribery, and the committee resolved to retain the exclusion. The case of canvassers and messengers is very different. They can be, and in practice are, employed extensively for no real purpose or use, but merely as another form of bribery. The payment of messengers has been grievously abused, and although ingenuity will find means of evasion, this will be attended with some risk, and the practice will be checked though not destroyed. At all events, the prohibition will be a good reason for resistance by candidates to this form of corruption. But the solicitors, who are to be disfranchised for the performance of their professional duties, hold quite a different position, and the arguments that weigh so strongly against the rest, are not applicable to them. They should at once petition against the insult that has been put upon them, and use their personal influence with their members individually to aid the petition with their votes. A general election is near, and the request will be prudently complied with.—Law Times.

SHAREHOLDERS IN RAILWAY COMPANIES.

No little anxiety appears to have been occasioned by some recent proceedings at Westminster taken by creditors against shareholders of railway companies, an alarm which must, we think, be due to a misapprehension of the duties and liabilities of shareholders, and we desire to point out to the shareholding public the reasons for our conclusion.

The 36th section of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which is the groundwork of these proceedings, empowers a creditor of any company, in whose private Act that General Act is incorporated, to levy execution against any shareholder, and so raise the amount due if an execution against the property of the company has first been issued, and has failed to produce the desired result.

The first point to be observed is that shareholders in companies which are able to pay their way need lie under no fear of execution being issued against them, for they cannot be touched until the company has been proved to be insolvent. But more than this, the clause in question specially provides that the execution shall only be issued against shareholders to the extent of their shares in the capital of the company not then paid up, and the liability of shareholders in railway companies (which is as clearly a limited liability as that of shareholders in companies under the Act of 1862) is not in anywise interfered with, nor can a shareholder who has once paid up the nominal amount of his shares in full, be thus, or in any other manner, called upon to make any further payment. But the clause provides still further protection. No execution is to issue against a shareholder except on an order of the Court, made upon notice to him, and every shareholder therefore must have an opportunity before execution issued, of arguing his case, and of resisting the claim against him as fully as if he were a defendant in an ordinary action at law. The notice which he must receive would give him an opportunity of applying to the Court of Chancery for an injunction, if the claim, though indefensible at law, were contrary to the rules of equity, and in one of the cases which has occurred within the last few months an injunction was granted by the Vice-Chancellor, Sir William Page Wood, to restrain proceedings against a shareholder who had taken shares on the terms of their being treated as fully paid up. It is to be observed, too, that if by any such proceedings a shareholder is made to pay any sum beyond the amount due from him in respect of calls, the 37th section provides that he shall forthwith be reimbursed such additional sums by the directors out of the funds of the company, so that not only cannot he be made to pay more than the nominal value of his shares, but if the sum recovered is more than the amount called up he is a creditor of the company for the difference.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

MINES—RIGHT OF LORD OF MANOR.—Where the property in the surface of land is in another person the lord of the manor, having the right to minerals, may not so work a mine as to destroy that surface: (Wakefield v. The Duke of Buccleuch, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 475. V. C. M.)

COMPOSITION-DEEDS—SECT. 192 B. A. 1861.—This section does not sanction deeds which are tainted with fraud, or such as are entered into otherwise than with a bona fide view to the benefit of the creditors assenting and non-assenting alike. The statutory power given to a majority to bind a minority must be exercised fairly: (Ex-parte Cowen, re Cowen, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 469. Chan.)

Where a composition-deed duly executed by the bare requisite majority of the creditors, intimate friends of the debtor, providing a composition much below that which the assets would have sufficed to pay, and it was believed, by some at least of those so executing, that they should be paid in full, or receive payments ultra the composition, a non-assenting creditor was allowed to issue execution, the deed notwithstanding: (Ibid.)

RAILWAY—PURCHASE OF LAND.—Where a decree for specific performance of a contract for sale had been obtained by a vendor against a railway company, which afterwards became insolvent, he was held to be entitled to a declaration of lien for his unpaid purchase-money: (Heriot v. The London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 473. V.C.S.)

LIABILITIES OF RAILWAYS.—A railway company is not liable for personal injuries to passengers caused by the breaking down of a carriage through a hidden defect in the manufacture of the tire of a wheel not discoverable by the usual and reasonable mode of examination: (Redhead v. The Midland Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 485 Q. B.)

CONTRIBUTORY.—The manager of a company had subscribed the memorandum of association for forty shares. By an agreement sanctioned by the articles, he was to have 250 paid-up shares as soon as the company received £5,000 in respect of shares. When the company had received less than £1,500, 150 shares were allotted to him. This was held not to release him from his obligations upon the forty shares for which he had executed the memorandum: (Re Bennet, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 475. V.C.W.)

SOLICITOR AND CLIENT.—A firm of country solicitors intrusted W., one of their partners, with the management of their business in London. In the course of this branch of the business certain persons, for the purposes of investment, advanced moneys to W., which were misapplied by him and lost. Subsequently all of the members of the firm, with the exception of G., became insolvent. G. afterwards died, and on his estate being administered, a claim for the first time was made against him in respect of the moneys misapplied by W.: Held, that the claim was good as against G.'s estate: (Sawyer v. Goodwin, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 514. V.C.S.)

TRANSFER OF SHARES.—Company B. agreed to take shares in company C., and they were allotted to D., a nominee of the company, in trust to be afterwards transferred, and a deed of transfer was prepared in blank so far as regarded the names of the transferees and the number of the shares. D., however, refused to execute it unless the name of the company as transferee was inserted, which was done. Then D. executed, and the numbers of the shares were inserted, after which the deed was duly registered; but before this was done a petition was presented for winding-up company C. Company B. was held to be liable as a contributory to company C.; (Re Barned's Banking Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 514. M. R.)

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

MAGHERAFELT, 28*th June*, 1867.

DEAR SIR,—I beg to call your attention to the present state of the law of attachment. Until lately I was under the impression that the judges of the superior courts could fine a witness in £100 for not attending when duly served with a subpœna, and payment or tender of a proper viaticum. In a case in which I have been lately concerned, I found that this was all fiction, and that, after I had obtained an attachment at a cost of £39, the fees to the Marshal of the Court would come to near £40, to lodge the witness in gaol. No other person would be allowed to execute the attachment. This state of the law should now be brought under the notice of the Attorney-General, and a clause inserted in the new Bill to enable the Judge to fine the witness unless cause shown in a specified time.

Yours,
J. GLOVER.

[We are compelled to hold over until next week the letter of our correspondent Mr. Lowe.]

THE COURTS AND COURT PAPERS.

THE PROVINCIAL COURT OF DUBLIN.

(Before Judge Battersby.)

The Rev. Thomas Mills, A.M., petitioner; the Rev. Herbert Tudor Craig, A.B., respondent.

The petitioner in this cause is the incumbent and perpetual curate of the parish of St. Jude, and the respondent is military chaplain to the chapel in connexion with Richmond Barracks, situate within the parish of the petitioner, and to which he had been lately appointed by the Secretary of State for War. The petition alleged that during the last three or four years the respondent, under pretence of authority derived from an appointment of the then Secretary of State for War to the office of military chaplain to Richmond Barracks, in a building called the military chapel attached to the barracks, officiated on Sundays and other days, performing Divine service according to the usage of the Established Church, from the Book of Common Prayer, to congregations composed of soldiers, and also preached and lectured explanatory of Scriptural doctrines; and that he visited the sick, solemnized marriage, and administered the sacraments. The petitioner had frequently protested against this invasion of his rights by the military chaplain; that he had offered to make provision for doing the duties himself; and that, further, the respondent had no license from the Archbishop of Dublin for officiating in his diocese. In conclusion, the petitioner prayed that the respondent be cited to appear in that court to answer the allegations of the petition, and that he be admonished to refrain for the future from preaching or officiating in the manner complained of.

Counsel for the petitioner, Mr. Samuel Walker, instructed by Mr. Arthur Samuels, proctor; for the respondent, Dr. Elrington, instructed by Mr. Hamerton, Queen's proctor.

Dr. Elrington stated that this cause had been set down for hearing on Tuesday, the 9th of July, and he now moved that the time for answering the allegations in the petition be extended for one week longer from that date, inasmuch as from the number of documents in connexion with the case, and the novelty and difficulty of the question arising in it, it was found impossible for the respondent to file his answer within the time specified by the order of the 25th June last.

Mr. Walker opposed the application for postponement, on the ground that it would cause still further delay. The judge who would try the case would be going on circuit next week, and if it were not brought before him at once there was a probability that it would not then be heard until the next November term. Great inconvenience would arise to his client in consequence of such delay, but if Dr. Elrington would undertake not to put anything into their pleading that would cause a further postponement, or that would throw them into next term, he would consent to an extension of the time.

Dr. Elrington said he would agree to the proposition if the present motion for a postponement were granted.

After some conversation—

The Court ordered, the parties consenting, that the respondent be at liberty to file his answer on or before Thursday next, the 11th inst., he undertaking to file said answer, and furnish a copy thereof same day to the petitioner; and that the petitioner be at liberty to set down the case for hearing on any day after Thursday next, giving one day's previous notice to the respondent, who was to pay the costs of the motion.

The case stands adjourned accordingly.

Cause Petition under "The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850," section 15.

In the Matter of
Rupell Patterson and William Parker, Executors of John Parker, deceased, Petitioners;
Thomas Hugh, Henry Parker, and Bridget Parker, Respondents.

I HEREBY require all Persons claiming to be Creditors or General Legatees of John Parker, late of Silverbridge, in the County of Armagh, Esquire, deceased, on or before the 4th day of AUGUST next, to furnish, in writing, to RUPELL PATTESON, of Dundalk, in the County of Louth; or to WILLIAM PARKER, of Newry, in the County of Down, Executors of said John Parker; or to JOSEPH DICKIE, their Solicitor, the amount and particulars of their several demands (accompanied, in case of simple contract debts, by a statement of the consideration of such debts), in order that the Petitioner may, without any expense to them, prove in this matter such or so much of their demands as he shall think just, of the allowance or disallowance of which, or any part of same, said Creditors shall receive due notice. And all such Creditors whose demands shall be disallowed, either wholly or in part, shall, at the peril of costs, be at liberty to file charges in my Office, in respect of the claims or amounts so disallowed, within one fortnight after they shall respectively have received notice of such disallowance.

I also require all persons having Claims affecting the Chattels real of the said John Parker, to file same at my Chambers, Inn's-quay, in the City of Dublin, on or before the 4th day of AUGUST, 1867, in order that same may be proceeded on, and proved according to the General Orders of the 19th May, 1857.

Dated this 4th day of July, 1867.

J. J. MURPHY, Master in Chancery.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, JULY 20, 1867.

IT must be admitted that, during the present Session, Ireland has received a considerable share of the attention of the Legislature. From the Irish Chancery Regulation Act, down to the Dogs' Regulation Act, no measure of reform seemed too great or too insignificant for the special consideration of the collective wisdom of our representatives. It seems, however, that the Attorneys and Solicitors alone have failed to make their complaints heard, and to enlist the favourable attention of the faithful Commons, for the redress of a state of things under which they feel themselves so seriously aggrieved.

In matters of purely legal reform, the process of assimilation has been carried out to an extent, and with a rapidity, which is perfectly astounding. The Chancery Bill will come into operation in November. The Common Law Bill is deferred but for a short time, and the new Admiralty Bill is passing rapidly through Committee. This Admiralty Bill, of which we have given an abstract in our last and present numbers, is, so far as we can see, an embodiment of the several existing English statutes regulating the procedure and practice of the English Court of Admiralty, mutatis mutandis. The present Judge of the Court and official staff have been unceremoniously sent adrift by the 5th section of the Act. There is, to be sure, a subsequent provision, that in case the present Judge be not appointed to the office of Judge of the new Court, he shall be entitled to receive, by way of compensation, during his life, an annuity equal to his salary at the commencement of this Act.

All Barristers-at-Law, and all Attorneys-at-Law, and Solicitors, will be entitled to practise in all matters and causes whatever in the new Court. If the new Act opens as wide and profitable a field for the profession in general, as the Probate Act did, there will be no ground for complaint, unless, indeed, on the part of the six Proctors, whose fees and emoluments may be damaged beyond the power of a lump sum of money, or an annual payment for life, to console them for their loss.

It is gratifying now to find that the scheme formerly conceived of amalgamating the two Courts, as provided for in the Probate Act of 1857, and compelling the Judge of the Probate Court to do duty over the dead to-day, and go to sea to-morrow, has now been wholly abandoned; and the present eminent Judge of that Court will be still allowed to bestow the undivided attention of his acute mind on the difficult and all-important questions with which his jurisdiction is conversant.

The Sessional Attorneys too, in certain districts, will have a fresh and important accession to their duties; the Chairmen of Quarter Sessions and the Recorders of Borough Courts being invested with jurisdiction in Admiralty causes, as they shall be specially appointed for that purpose by the Lord Lieutenant. Remuneration will be given to Recorders and Chairmen for the additional duties which may be thus thrown upon them.

Part II. regulates the jurisdiction of the Court, and, subject to the provisions of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," and "The Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1862," it will have power to decide upon all claims whatsoever relating to salvage, and to enforce the payment thereof, whether the service, in respect of which salvage is claimed, was performed on the high seas or within the body of any country, or partly in one place and partly in another; and whether the wreck is found at sea or cast upon the land, or partly in the sea and partly on land. There is a like jurisdiction in respect of all claims and demands in the nature of towage, and damage received or done by any ship, and claims for the building, equipping, and repairing of any ship. So, also, questions as to necessaries and of ownership, and claims for wages will come within the jurisdiction of the new Court, with increased powers for enforcing the orders of the Court. There are other important powers conferred by this statute in different matters, which the law, as it hitherto existed in this country, was not adequate to entertain, so as fully to satisfy the requirements of justice.

Whaley v. Massereene and others, or now correctly known as Whaley v. Carlisle and others, was called on in the House of Lords on Tuesday, when the Lord Chancellor delivered judgment, in which the other learned Law Lords present concurred We refer our readers to the report which appears in another column. We allude to this cause, as it is one that has long been in litigation. It is an action of Quare Impedit, brought by Richard William Whaley against the late Lord Massereene and others, to try the right of the plaintiff to the advowson of the Rectory of the Church of Killead, county Antrim, to which the plaintiff claimed to be entitled. The first trial of the case took place before Baron Hughes, at the Summer Assizes for the county Antrim, in 1861. Since then, however, the case has been litigated, and passed from the Common Pleas to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, and finally to the House of Lords, where judgment has just been given.

The Lord Chancellor, however, as the report states, "severely animadverted on the repeated trials after error was brought, notice of which, he was of opinion, should have operated as a stet processus." The action of Quare Impedit is of very ancient origin, and is one of the very few forms of action not abolished by the Common Law Procedure Act. And we believe the case now before us is the only "Quare Impedit" that has occupied the attention of the Court of Common Pleas for a very great number of years. It would, however, appear that a defect exists in the administration of the law of error when issues in fact and issues in law have been decided, and judgments obtained in the court below, in one party being permitted to obtain an order for a new trial, when the other party has an appeal on a writ of error to the House of Lords, actually pending as to the judgment obtained on the issues in law. The proceedings in this case appear the more remarkable, as no less than three or four new trials were actually permitted, and the verdicts in each set aside in their turn, new writs of venire de novo being granted, pending proceedings in error in the House of Lords, on one of the early judgments, the Lord Chancellor, when delivering judgment, distinctly stating that the proceedings in error in the House of Lords should have had the effect of a stet processus to the proceedings in the court below. The state of the law which allows of this abuse should be attended to when the Bill to amend the Practice and Procedure of the Courts of Common Law in Ireland, is again introduced before Parliament, and, if necessary, such clauses added as will have the effect of preventing a repetition of such a case as Whaley v. Carlisle.

The Courts of Law Officers' Bill (Ireland) has passed through its several stages in the House of Commons, and will, possibly, ere the next week is gone, have become law. Taking the measure in its entirety, we believe it will prove a fair one, and calculated to very much benefit those gentlemen who may be selected to form the new establishments of the Common Law and Equity Courts. It is whispered that the Bill is likely to meet with opposition in the Lords. But if such be the case, we presume it can only be to the Patronage Clauses that any hostility is to be shown. The Chiefs of the Common Law Courts look to have the sole patronage, while the Bill confers on the several Benches the power of appointment when future vacancies shall occur in the junior clerkships. The Puisne Judges seek to have the clause confirmed which empowers them, in common with their Chiefs, to make appointments, and so far it has been supported, backed by the influence of the Attorney-General. We conceive that vesting the patronage in the four Judges of each Court is attended with safety, and that it will ensure to the public useful and competent servants. We would, however, suggest that the system of competitive examination should be extended to the establishments of the Courts of Common Law and Equity in Ireland; and that each Judge should have the power of nominating a candidate whenever a vacancy shall occur in the junior clerkships of any Court The Chief Judge might be given the privilege of two nominations, and by that means five competitors would be named, and he who best stood the test should be appointed; thereby assuring to the public and the profession a competent and properly educated official, and at the same time, one in whom the Judges could repose every confidence.

The Bill introduced by the Attorney-General to Amend the Pleading, Practice, and Procedure of the Courts of Common Law in Ireland, was withdrawn on Monday evening last. It had received the second reading in the House of Commons, and stood for Committee; but the order of the day was discharged, and another year must now elapse before the Common Law Practice of this country is assimilated to that of England. It is, perhaps, well on the whole that such is the case, as the change in the Equity Practice, and the creation of a Vice-Chancellor's Court, effected by the "Chancery Act, 1867," will give the profession ample occupation in mastering its details, so that when the Bill relating to the practice of the Law Courts becomes law, which it most probably will next Session, both branches of the profession will be prepared to give its clauses that undivided attention which a voluminous measure of the kind requires.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

A meeting of attorneys and solicitors was held on Monday last in the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, for the purpose of presenting an address to Mr. Orpen, President of the Incorporated Law Society, upon the occasion of inaugurating his portrait. The Chair was occupied by Mr. ARTHUR BARLOW, Vice-President.

Although a more inconvenient time could scarcely have been selected for the meeting, and although no notice of the intention to hold it had been given to the Profession, save an intimation in the morning papers, published on Saturday, we were glad to find that many were enabled to be present.

We are confident that had a notification of the proposed meeting been given in due time to the Profession at large, or even to the subscribers to the testimonial, there are very few who would not, at any personal inconvenience, have attended to do honour to one so thoroughly and universally esteemed as Mr. Orpen.

Amongst those present were:

Messrs. Macrory, P. Joseph Kelly, Foley, Merrick, W. P. Fletcher, A. Collum, S. Walker, W. J. Cooper, Robert Johnston, Wm. D'Alton, Bond, Wm. Johnston, W. W. Dwyer, Palles, Weldon, Ponclue, Lord, G. D. Fottrell, R. Macnamara, Geoghegan, Morrogh, Beamish, Reeves, Daly, Roche, J. E. O'Ferrall, L. Mooney, H. T. Dix, &c.

The portrait was unveiled shortly after three o'clock by Messrs. Gibson and Roche, members of the committee. It is hung at the upper end of the hall, immediately behind the president's chair, and between the portraits of the late Mr. Goddard and the late Mr. Meade, former presidents of the society. The picture, which was executed by Mr. Catterson Smith, R.H.A., is one of his finest efforts in portrait painting. The frame is handsomely gilt, and is the work of Mr. Cranfield, of Grafton-street.

Mr. Goddard (Secretary), read letters of apology from the Lord Mayor and Mr. Alexander D. Kennedy, both of whom were unable to be present.

Mr. Barlow then read the address, which was as follows:—

Sir—Your professional brethren being desirous of expressing their feelings of respect for your public character, and esteem for your private worth, and of showing their appreciation of your untiring exertions on all occasions during the many years you have filled the distinguished and honourable office of President of the Society, to advance the interests of their profession, and elevate its status; and your brethren being at the same time anxious to preserve amongst them a life-like resemblance of your person, so dear to all, they engaged an eminent artist to paint your portrait. To inaugurate that picture and place it in their hall, amongst those of your predecessors, they have now met. Small though this tribute be in comparison with the sentiments of which it is the symbol, they feel assured you will accept it in the spirit in which it is proffered by them. They earnestly hope that you may be long spared to preside over their body, esteemed, respected, and honoured by all, and a bright example to the future members of their profession.

Mr. Orpen returned the following reply:—Gentlemen, it is with no ordinary feelings that I have received the address which you, on behalf of the members of our profession, have presented to me. That I have acquired the friendship and esteem of my professional brethren is to me a source of the greatest pleasure. You have kindly alluded to my endeavours, while filling the office of President of the Incorporated Law Society, to advance the interests of our profession, and to place it in that social position which it is entitled to hold; but all such endeavours on my part would have been unavailing if I had not been so efficiently aided by the vice-presidents and council of our society and other members of our body. We have now, after a struggle during several years, succeeded in obtaining self-government for our profession, and we have established a system of literary and professional education, which I trust will tend to cultivate the minds and expand the intellects of those young gentlemen who seek to become attorneys. I acknowledge with gratitude the honour you have conferred upon me in placing my portrait in your hall amongst those of my lamented predecessors. You express a hope that I may be long spared to preside over your body. This I cannot, at this very advanced period of my life, expect, but while permitted to do so it shall always be my anxious desire to promote the true interests of our profession and to assert its social rights.

The proceedings then terminated.

ADMIRALTY COURT (IRELAND) BILL.

A Bill to Extend the Jurisdiction, alter and amend the Procedure and Practice, and to Regulate the Establishment of the Court of Admiralty in Ireland. (Prepared and brought in by Mr. Attorney-General and Lord Naas).

The following is an abstract of the clauses of this Bill.

PART II.—JURISDICTION OF THE COURT.

29. Subject to the provisions of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," and "The Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1862," the Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction to decide upon all claims whatsoever relating to salvage, and to enforce the payment thereof, whether the service in respect of which salvage is claimed were performed upon the high seas or within the body of any county, or partly in the one place and partly in the other, and whether the wreck is found at sea or cast upon the land, or partly in the sea and partly on the land.

30. Court shall have jurisdiction to decide all claims and demands in the nature of towage, and to enforce the payment thereof, whether such towage was performed within the body of a county or upon the high seas.

31. Court shall have jurisdiction over any claims for damage received or done by any ship, whether within the body of a county or not.

32. Court shall have jurisdiction over any claim for the building, equipping, or repairing of any ship.

33. Court shall have jurisdiction over any claim for necessaries supplied to any ship elsewhere than in the port to which the ship belongs.

34. Court shall have jurisdiction to decide all questions arising between the co-owners or any of them touching the title or the ownership, possession, employment, and earnings of any ship registered at any port in Ireland, or any share thereof, and may settle all accounts outstanding and unsettled between the parties in relation thereto, and may direct the said ship or any share thereof to be sold, &c.

35. Court shall have jurisdiction over any claim by a seaman of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship, and also over any claim by the master of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship, and for disbursements made by him on account of the ship.

36. Court shall have jurisdiction over any claim in respect of any mortgage duly registered according to the provisions of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," whether the ship or the proceeds thereof be under arrest of the said Court or not.

37. Court shall have the same powers over any British ship, or any share therein, as are conferred upon the High Court of Chancery in Ireland by the sixty-second, sixty-third, sixty-fourth, and sixty-fifth sections of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854."

38. Court shall have the same powers as are conferred upon the High Court of Chancery in Ireland by the ninth part of the "Merchant Shipping Act, 1854."

39. Court shall have jurisdiction over any claim arising on any charter party, bill of lading, or other contract respecting the use or hire of any ship, or the carriage of goods therein, as between the immediate parties to such contract, or as between the owner of the ship and any person claiming through or under any such party, and over any claim relating to freight, insurance, demurrage, &c., and generally over any claim of a civil and maritime nature relating to any ship or the goods carried therein.

40. Where agreement for a reference for adjustment of losses and expenses in respect of general average entered into, any party to the agreement may file an attested copy.

41. On filing such agreement the court in which it is filed shall have jurisdiction to entertain any application of any party to the agreement, or of the referee thereunder, respecting the execution of any of the provisions of the agreement, or respecting any of the rights, &c., of the parties thereto, or any of them; and on any such application, as far as appears to the Court requisite for disposing of such application, but not further or otherwise, the Court may proceed and direct and authorise proceedings with respect to the issuing of processes and summoning and examination of witnesses, and in other respects, as if suit of Admiralty cause had been regularly instituted in the Court, and may make orders concerning the subject of the application and costs of it as seem just; and every such order shall have the effect and consequence of an order of the Court in a suit or admiralty cause regularly instituted.

42. The jurisdiction conferred by this act may be exercised either by proceedings in rem or by proceedings in personam.

43. General orders shall be from time to time made under this act for the purposes in this act directed, and for regulating the practice and procedure of the High Court of Admiralty, and of the local courts, and the forms of writs, warrants, summonses, processes, and proceedings therein or issuing therefrom, and the duties of the judges and officers thereof, and the fees to be taken therein.

44. General orders under this act shall be made by the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Judge of the Court of Admiralty, and as far as they relate to fees, or receipt and expenditure of and accounting for money, with the approval of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

45. The Judge of the Court of Admiralty shall have all such powers as are possessed by any of the superior courts of common law in Ireland, or any judge thereof, to compel either party in any cause or matter to answer interrogatories, and to enforce the production, inspection, and delivery of copies of any document in his possession or power.

46. Gaolers to receive prisoners committed by Court of Admiralty.

47. Prisoners in contempt may be discharged.

48. The judge and registrar to have same power as to arbitration as judges and masters at common law.

49. The Registrar of the Court of Admiralty shall have the same powers under the fifteenth section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, as are by the said section conferred on the Masters of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench in England and Ireland.

50. The registrar to have power to administer oaths.

51. Limitation of maritime liens.

52. The party at whose instance any property is arrested under a warrant of the High Court of Admiralty shall be liable to be condemned in all costs and expenses occasioned thereby, and in damages for the detention of the property, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the Court that he could not, without such arrest, have obtained bail or other security, or had otherwise good and sufficient reason for having caused the issue and execution of the warrant of arrest.

PART III.—PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

1.—PAYMENT OF MONEY INTO COURT, ETC.

53. Money payable into court to be lodged in the Bank of Ireland.

2.—EVIDENCE.

54. The rules of evidence observed in the courts of common law shall be observed in the trial of all matters and facts in the Court of Admiralty.

55. In any cause depending in the court, the court may summon before it and examine, or cause to be examined, witnesses by word of mouth; and either before or after examination, by deposition or before a commissioner, as hereafter mentioned; and notes of such evidence shall be taken down in writing by the judge or registrar, or by such other person or persons, and in such manner as the judge of the said court shall direct.

56. Evidence may be taken viva voce before a commissioner.

57. The attendance of witnesses and the production of books, &c., may be compelled by subpœna.

58. The Judge of Admiralty may appoint solicitors, &c., to administer oaths, &c.

59. The fiat or document by which any such commissioner shall be appointed shall bear a stamp of one pound, and it shall not be necessary that any such appointment shall be published in the Dublin Gazette.

60. Personal answers may be taken without a commission.

61. All answers, affidavits, &c., may be taken in Ireland before any commissioner appointed as aforesaid, or before any commissioner to administer oaths in Chancery.

62. Answers, affidavits, &c., how to be sworn and taken out of Ireland.

63. Penalties for false swearing.

64. Penalty for forging signature or seal of judge, &c., empowered to administer oaths under this act.

65. Power of judge to issue commissions as heretofore, to administer oaths, &c.

3.—ISSUES AND NEW TRIALS.

66. In any contested cause depending in said court, the court shall have power to direct a trial by jury of any issue on any question of fact, and the substance and form of such issue or issues shall be specified by the judge at the time of directing the same; and if the parties differ in drawing such issue or issues, it shall be referred to the judge to settle the same, and such trial shall be held before the judge himself, or before some judge of assize at Nisi Prius.

67. Costs of issues in discretion of court.

68. Power to direct new trials.

69. The granting or refusing to grant an issue, or a new trial of any such issue, may be matter of appeal to the Court of Appeal in Chancery in Ireland.

70. The record of the issue to be lodged with the registrar.

71. Any party in court may apply for an order for inspection by jurors.

72. Any party in a cause may call on any other party, by notice in writing, to admit any document, saving all just exceptions; and in case of refusal or neglect, the costs of proving the document shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the cause may be, unless at the trial the judge shall testify that the refusal to admit was reasonable.

73. Power of the court, when personal service of citation has not been effected, to order parties to proceed.

74. The service, in any part of the United Kingdom, of any writ of subpœna ad testificandum or subpœna duces tecum, issued under seal of the Court of Admiralty, shall be as effectual as if the same had been served in Ireland.

75. Decrees and orders of the Court of Admiralty to have the effect of judgments at common law.

4.—OTHER BRANCHES OF PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

76. As to claims to goods taken in execution.

77. As to the hearing of causes and cross causes.

5.—ASSESSORS.

78. List of assessors.

PART IV.—JURISDICTION OF LOCAL COURTS.

79. The local courts shall, in the cases following, have all the like civil and maritime jurisdiction (with all powers and authorities relative thereto) as for the time being belongs to the Court of Admiralty (otherwise than by way of appeal)—that is to say,

(1.) Where the amount or value of the money or thing in dispute does not exceed two hundred pounds.

(2.) Where the amount or value of the money or thing in dispute exceeds two hundred pounds, but the parties agree by a memorandum signed by them, or by their attorneys or agents, that a local court or courts specified in the memorandum shall have jurisdiction.

(3.) Where this act provides for the retention or prosecution of a cause in a local court.

A cause in which jurisdiction is by this act given to the local courts is in this act referred to as an Admiralty cause

80. Subject to general orders, proceedings in an Admiralty cause in a local court shall be commenced as follows :—

(1.) In the local court within the jurisdiction whereof the ship or goods to which the cause relates is or are at the commencement of the proceedings.

(2.) If the foregoing rule is not applicable, then in the local court in the district whereof an action should or might be commenced under the ordinary jurisdiction of the court.

(3.) In any case in the local court, or one of the local courts, which the parties by a memorandum signed by them, or by their attorneys or agents, agree shall have jurisdiction.

81. The court, on motion by any party to an Admiralty cause pending in a local court, may, if he thinks fit (with or without service and hearing of a summons to the other party, as he thinks fit), transfer the cause to the Court of Admiralty, on such terms (if any) as to security for costs or other things as the court thinks fit.

82. Transfer by order of county court.

83. Transfer to other local court or Court of Admiralty.

84. Costs of proceedings in Court of Admiralty.

85. Powers and authorities of judges of local courts.

86. The marshal, &c., to act for local courts.

87. A scale of costs and charges in Admiralty causes in the local courts shall be prescribed by general order.

88. For the execution of any decree or order of a local court in an Admiralty cause the court may order, and the Clerk of the Peace on such order may issue, and any officer of the said court may execute, any writ or warrant of arrest, possession, or execution, or other process.

89. Appointment of special courts of quarter sessions for Admiralty jurisdiction.

90. The recorders of the boroughs of Cork and Belfast shall respectively be paid, as remuneration for additional duty, by virtue of this act, such annual or other sum as the Lord Lieutenant, with consent of the Commissioners of the Treasury, shall think fit, out of money provided by Parliament.

91. When, under any such Order in Council as aforesaid, jurisdiction in Admiralty causes shall be given to any recorder of a borough or chairman of a county, such recorder or chairman shall be paid as remuneration such annual or other sum as the Lord Lieutenant, with consent of the Commissioners of the Treasury, shall think fit, out of money provided by Parliament.

92. Appeal from County Court to the Court of Admiralty.

93. Time for appeal from County Court.

94. Agreement not to appeal.

95. Appeal to the Court of Delegates abolished.

96. Appeal given to Court of Appeal in Chancery and Privy Council.

97. Powers and jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal.

98. Power to the Court of Appeal in Chancery to make rules.

99. Power to the Court of Appeal in Chancery to call in nautical assessors.

100. Evidence in the Court of Appeal in Chancery may be taken viva voce, or upon written depositions.

101. Court of Appeal in Chancery may order any particular witness to be examined, and as to any particular facts, and may remit the cause for rehearing.

102. Witnesses to be examined on oath, and to be liable to punishment for perjury.

103. Court of Appeal in Chancery may direct an issue to try any fact.

104. Court of Appeal in Chancery may direct depositions to be read at trial of the issue.

105. May make such orders as to admission of evidence as are made by Court of Chancery.

106. And may direct new trials of issues.

107. Powers, &c., of 13 Geo. III., c. 63, and 1 Wm. IV, c. 22, to examination of witnesses extended to Court in Chancery.

108. Costs to be in the discretion of Court of Appeal in Chancery.

109. Attendance of witnesses and production of papers may be enforced by subpœna.

110. The Privy Council empowered to determine appeals under this act.

111. Bail given in the Court of Admiralty good in the Court of Appeal.

112. Certified notes of evidence may be admitted on Appeal.

113. Notes of evidence on appeals to Court of Appeal in Chancery to be certified to the Privy Council.

114. Appeal from an order, &c., of the court made on an appeal to it.

115. Costs of appeal.

116. Limit of time for all appeals from Court of Admiralty.

117. The Lord Chancellor may, with consent of the Treasury, vary, alter, or abolish fees.

118. From commencement of act, judge, registrar, &c., not to receive fees on their own account.

119. From commencement of act, fees to be collected by stamps.

120. Such fees to be stamp duties.

121. Stamps to be impressed or adhesive, as the Treasury shall direct.

122. The Treasury, with concurrence of judge, may make rules regulating the use of stamps and cancellation of adhesive stamps.

123. No document to be received or used unless stamped.

124. Officers guilty of fraud or wilful neglect in relation to stamps liable to be dismissed.

125. Compensation to the Registrar of the Court of Delegates.

126. Compensation to proctors.

127. Compensation to proctors in partnership.

128. Except, as is hereinbefore expressly provided, the several retiring pensions and compensations granted by this act shall be paid by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury out of such funds as may be provided by Parliament for that purpose.

129. This act shall apply to Ireland only.

THE HABITS OF NEWLY-MADE JUDGES.

The Pall Mall Gazette, in an article entitled "Judges and Counsel," has commented upon the habits which are apt to characterize the initiatory proceedings of a newly-made judge, and its remarks are for the most part very sensible. The main argument of the article is directed against judges who take the business out of the hands of counsel. "It is hardly to be expected," says the Gazette, "that the man who has passed twenty or more years in making his fortune out of his wits, his plausibility and his confidence can, at a moment's notice, be translated into the calm judicial being who is the ideal of a dispenser of justice. The force of habit is strong, and if the new judge ever and anon forgets his real position, and takes to interrogating and cross-interrogating witnesses, and conducting one side instead of deciding on the whole of a case, it is not to be wondered at. At the same time the evils of such a course of proceeding are so great that they must be checked at the outset." We entirely concur in these observations. Within our own recent experience we have seen a chief take the case completely out of the hands of counsel, and as effectively talk the case on one side out of court, as if he had gagged counsel and turned them out of doors. But we do not concur in the importance of "checking" this system, simply because the system cures itself. A little time is all that is required. The new judge learns the quiet judicial habits of his colleagues, and rapidly acquires the dignified ease with which they discharge their judicial duties. The inconvenience is only temporary, and we are not quite sure that it is not useful as an occasional corrective of the overweening confidence of counsel of long standing.

Collaterally our contemporary speaks of the advisability of having, were it possible, an intermediate state. This is obviously impossible, and we are not at all clear that any intermediate training would be of use. A barrister of standing has numerous judicial functions to discharge before he gets to the Bench. He sits as arbitrator, and his award is final if good in point of law. He is entrusted, moreover, in ordinary cases in court with a large discretion, and is frequently called upon to exercise considerable moral courage. All these things prepare him for the fulfilment of judicial duties, and the evil effects of a career of advocacy are soon mitigated by the growth of the higher judicial acultics.—Law Times.

NOTES OF CASES.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by Edmond T. Bewley, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

M'Cormick v. Grogan.

June 28, 29; July 9.—Will—Letter accompanying—Trust—Discretionary Power of Trustee.

This was an appeal from a decretal order of Lord Chancellor Blackburne, dated the 26th of November, 1866, whereby it was declared that a certain letter written by the late Mr. Abraham Walter Craig to the respondent, Mr. William Grogan, and enclosed in the same envelope with Mr. Craig's will, was binding on Mr. Grogan, and was an effectual declaration of trust of the property therein mentioned; and that the annuity of £10 per annum, directed by the said letter to be paid to the petitioner, James M'Cormick, was well charged on the real freehold and personal estate of the said testator.

It appeared that on the day of Mr. Craig's death, he sent for Mr. Grogan, who was an intimate friend of his, and informed him that he had made a will, leaving all to him, and that a letter would be found with the will in the testator's desk. By this will all the testator's property was left absolutely to Mr. Grogan. The letter accompanying the will was addressed to Mr. Grogan; and by it the testator, after stating that to prevent litigation and quarrelling, he had thought it best to invest the whole of his property in Mr. Grogan's hand, knowing that he would carry out the testator's intentions to the best of his ability, proceeded to make a number of pecuniary gifts (including an annuity of £10 per annum to James M'Cormick), and stated that after arranging for the due payment of these in whatever manner Mr. Grogan thought best, he wished the remainder of his property to go to Mr. Grogan and the testator's brothers in equal proportions. The letter also contained a statement that the testator did not wish Mr. Grogan to act strictly to these instructions, but left it entirely to his own good judgment to do as he thought the testator would do, if living, and as the parties were deserving; adding that, as it was not the testator's wish that Mr. Grogan should say anything about this document, no fault could be found with him, by any of the parties, if he should not act in strict accordance with it. There were also other expressions in the letter showing that a very large discretion was given to Mr. Grogan

Ball, Q.C., May, Q.C., Harrison, Q.C., and Porter, for the appellant.

Sullivan, Q.C., Law, Q.C., and Bruce, for the respondent.

The Court reversed the decision of Lord Chancellor Blackburne, holding that under the provisions of the letter there was no trust in favour of James M'Cormick that could be enforced in a Court of Equity.

Solicitors for the appellant, L'Estrange and Brett.

Solicitors for the respondent, Buckley and Smith.

Kelly v. French.

June 5.—In re the Poor Law Commissioners of Ireland in relation to the Ballinrobe Union Workhouse, and the Acts 7, Geo. IV., c. 74; and 1 & 2 Vic., c. 56.

In 1845 the Poor Law Commissioners took the site of the Ballinrobe Union Workhouse, and lodged the purchase money in Court under the 7 Geo. IV., c. 74 (Prison's Act), the parties then entitled to the lands being tenants for life. A petition was now presented by Mr. C. H. Knox, who was entitled to the money absolutely, to draw it out of Court. It also prayed that the Poor Law Commissioners should pay the costs of the petition. The 7 Geo. IV., c. 74, did not provide expressly for the payment of the costs, but the 32nd section empowered the Court to order distribution of the money, or payment of the dividends, "and to make such other order in the premises as to the Court shall seem meet."

W. C. King, for the petitioner, contended that he was entitled to the costs on the authority of Ex parte Marshall in re the Great Western Railway Company (4 Railw. Ca. 58); In re the North Midland Railway Company (5 Railw. Ca. 700).

Monahan, for the Poor Law Commissioners, contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to give the costs.

The Master of the Rolls made an order giving the costs to the petitioners.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by Wm. Woodlock, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Hibbert v. Cunningham.

June 17, 29.—Bill of Exchange—Trust Deed under English Bankruptcy Act, 1861.

This was a motion to show cause against a conditional order to change the verdict had for the plaintiff into a verdict for the defendant, pursuant to leave reserved.

The action was brought by indorsee against drawer upon a bill of exchange drawn by the defendant upon one Smart, and indorsed to the plaintiff. The defence raised, by amendment upon the trial, was upon equitable grounds, that by a deed of the 7th August, 1865, made under the provisions of the English Bankruptcy Act of 1861, between Smart, of the first part, John Corry and others, of the second part, and several creditors of Smart, of the third part. All the property of Smart was conveyed to the parties of the second part upon trust, to sell and distribute the proceeds amongst the creditors. This deed contained a proviso that the creditors should be at liberty to sue sureties. The bill was not due until the 13th September, 1865, and was therefore current at the date of the deed. Hibbert had realized nothing under it. For the defendant it was argued that he was a surety only for Smart, the principal debtor, and that the effect of the deed was to discharge him from his liability.

Palles, Q.C., and Byrne, for the plaintiff.

William M. Johnson, for the defendant.

The Court discharged the conditional order.

In the Matter of the Estate of James Birch Kennedy and his Trustees, Owners and Petitioners.

June 13, 15; July 8.—Bankers' Act—33 Geo. II., c. 14 (Ir.)—Meaning of Banker within the Bankers' Act—Meaning of Creditor.

The contention in this case was between the trustees of a deed of 27th August, 1866, to which three-fifths of the creditors of J. B. Kennedy were parties, and Messrs. Brunker and Peebles, Q.C., who claimed to be paid the entire amount due to them in priority to the general creditors of Kennedy. Their joint demand was for £700 on foot of a judgment obtained by them as trustees of Mr. Kennedy's marriage settlement, and registered as a mortgage against the lands sold in this matter; and Mr. Peebles further claimed £700, such sum having been advanced by him to Kennedy in May, 1859, upon the deposit of the title deed of the lands of Clarwarrahan, with a verbal agreement, and without any contemporaneous writing. It was alleged that a few days afterwards Kennedy, at the request of Peebles, gave him a memorandum in his own handwriting, and signed by him, acknowledging the loan of £700.

Digitized by Google

Vivâ voce evidence was given as to the nature of the business carried on by Kennedy, and a number of affidavits upon this part of the case was read to the Court during the argument.

Rogers, Q.C., and Kernan, Q.C., with them Martin, for the trustees, contended—1. That the Bankers' Act, 33 Geo. II., c. 14, was still in operation; 2. That Kennedy was a banker within the meaning of that statute, although the bank he kept was one of discount and deposit only, and not a bank of issue, and therefore, 3. That both the judgment mortgage and the equitable mortgage were void, as against his general creditors, since neither of these debts was secured by deed or conveyance registered as required by the Bankers' Act, and the bond on which the judgment was obtained was not registered within the time required by the said Acts; 4. That the affidavit made to register the judgment as a mortgage was defective in several respects; 5. That the equitable mortgage was void for want of registry; 6. That the Bank of Ireland and Royal Bank were creditors of Kennedy, although their advances to him had been made on bills of exchange, the acceptances of third parties, and only endorsed by him.

Hemphill, Q.C., and Lawson, Q.C., with them M'Kenna, for Brunker and Peebles, contended—1. That the 33 Geo. II., c. 14, must be considered to be repealed, as appeared by the language of Lord St. Leonards in O'Flaherty v. M'Dowell, H. of L.; 2. That Kennedy was not a banker within its meaning; 3. That in Guinness's case cited on the other side, in which Master Litton had decided that the party was a banker, Guinness paid £30 a year, the banker's licence, and if he did not issue notes, he might have done so; 4. That the regime of common sense regarding flaws in affidavits made to register judgments as mortgages, had been restored by the recent decision in the House of Lords, not yet reported in the authorized reports; 5. That the equitable mortgage was created by the mere deposit, the subsequent memorandum forming no part of it, and therefore that registration was unnecessary or impossible; 6. That in any case the trustees had no locus standi, as the Bank of Ireland and the Royal Bank were not entitled to be reckoned as creditors of Kennedy, in which case the deed of 27th August, 1866, had not been executed by three-fifths of such creditors.

July 8.—Dobbs, J., delivered his judgment at considerable length, holding that the 33 Geo. II., c. 14, had not been repealed, and that Kennedy was a banker within its meaning, the distinction between banks of issue and banks which were not of issue being implicitly taken in the Irish Bankers' Act. Neither this judgment mortgage nor this equitable mortgage was a security within the excepting clause of the 33 Geo. II., c. 14. If the acceptances discounted by the two banks for Kennedy had been paid at the time of the execution of the deed, these banks would not have been creditors of Kennedy; but they were creditors. He should therefore decide in favour of the trustees, who should have their costs of the objection, but not as against Messrs. Brunker and Peebles.

In the Matter of the Estate of H. T. Woodward, Owner and Petitioner.

July 15.—Cause against Absolute Order for Sale—Outstanding Mortgage.

S. Walker appeared on a motion in this case to make absolute the order for sale. The cause intended to have been shown against it was a mortgage of the estate in question, dated August, 1866, by one of the provisions in which the mortgagee was not to be required to take repayment of his loan within five years. It had been agreed between the mortgagee and the petitioner that no cause should be shown, the Court making an order that a sufficient sum should be retained out of the purchase-money to answer the mortgagee's claim for interest.

Dobbs, J., said that no order was necessary, as the Court would do this as of course.

Ormsby, Q.C., for the mortgagee, to show that he was entitled to the costs of the motion, cited cases decided in the Court of Chancery, in some of which a subsequent mortgagee was not allowed to redeem a prior one, and referred to a case before Dobbs, J., in the L. E. Court.

Dobbs, J., said that he had no recollection of the case before himself referred to in argument, but the circumstances of it must have been different. The cases decided in the Court of Chancery rested on a different foundation, and were entirely over-ridden, as regarded the L. E. Court, by two sections of the L. E. Act. The existence of such a mortgage was no cause against making absolute the order for sale, and he would not give the mortgagee the costs of the motion. He would make the order absolute with costs, if the owner and petitioner asked for costs, but, as he did not, he would make it absolute without costs.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Reported by J. Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Miller, J.

In re Richard Hare Home.

July 17.—Opposition by Creditor charging exorbitant interest for money—High interest is Primâ Facie evidence of embarrassment.

The Insolvent was an officer in the army, and had been opposed by several creditors. The case had been adjourned with a view to an arrangement, and on coming before the Court again, it was announced that all the oppositions had been withdrawn but one, namely that of a creditor named Harrington, who had advanced the Insolvent money at a very large rate of interest, and when he knew he was in embarrassed circumstances.

Kernan, Q.C., and Frazer, appeared for the Insolvent.

Beaty was for creditors.

Judge Miller, upon hearing that all the oppositions had been withdrawn, except that of Harrington, said when the case was last before the Court he had heard all the facts relating to the insolvent's transactions with Mr. Harrington, and felt it was not a case in which the Court would be justified in remanding the insolvent on the grounds of the opposition of the money-lender. The Insolvent had gone to the opposing creditor when in embarrassed circumstances—in fact, the high rate he consented to pay for money was, at least, primâ facie evidence of that fact. To all intents and purposes he appeared as an embarrassed man, and as such opened negociations with the creditor, who then opposed him. The creditor dealt with him as one plainly in needy and embarrassed circumstances. That was clear from the fact that in the first instance he refused to lend the money he required without some reference or security, whereupon the insolvent brought a friend to him to use pressure with a view to induce him to give the money; but the opposing creditor was not satisfied with the recommendation of that friend, and he went to the manager of the National Bank, and having learned from him that the insolvent was, as far as he knew, a person safe to deal with, he then lent him the money at a rate of interest which was evidence sufficient to show the needy circumstances he was in. The creditor should now abide by the consequences. He did not charge the insolvent five or six per cent., or any per centage that might be reasonable, but he charged such a per centage as made him, as it were, an insurer against the risk he knew he was running; and as the creditor thought proper to run the risk, he should now abide by it. The insolvent was discharged.

Attorney for the insolvent, Macnally.

RULES FOR CROWN SOLICITORS AND SESSIONAL CROWN SOLICITORS.

The Attorney-General having read and considered the several instructions, rules and directions which, from time to time, have been given by his predecessors in office to the several Crown Solicitors and Sessional Crown Solicitors in Ireland, and finding that several of the same were at variance with others, and that many had become obsolete, and being of opinion that it would tend to the better conduct of the Crown prosecutions, and assist the persons engaged in the management of them, to have the several rules relating to the same revised, arranged and numbered, and having caused this to be done, directs that for the future the rules hereinafter set forth shall be followed by the several Crown Solicitors and Sessional Crown Solicitors in Ireland in the conduct of the Crown cases in which they may be employed, in substitution for any rules and directions now in use on the same subjects.

CROWN SOLICITORS.

1. The several Clerks of the Crown shall, within four days after they shall have received same from the Clerks of Petty Sessions, transmit copies of all informations to the Crown Solicitors of their respective counties; and it shall be the duty of the several Crown Solicitors forthwith to submit them to the Attorney-General for his directions, unless such informations shall have been received so short a time before the commencement of the assizes as not to allow of sending them to the Attorney-General, in which cases the informations shall be laid immediately before the Senior Crown Counsel for the county in which the offence is alleged to have been committed for his directions, of which the Crown Solicitor shall at once inform the Attorney-General, stating the dates and reasons of this course being adopted.

2. In all cases in which the Attorney-General shall direct a prosecution at the assizes, save for high treason and treason-felony, the Crown Solicitor shall cause the indictment to be prepared by the junior permanent Crown Counsel for the place in which the accused is to be tried; and previously to the sending up of any indictment to the Grand Jury, shall lay a case with a copy of the indictment before the senior permanent Crown Counsel for the same place, for his opinion as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the indictment, and for his general advice as to the conduct of the case, and, except in cases of magnitude and difficulty, no larger fee than one guinea shall be paid to counsel either on the indictment or case, and when any such larger fee shall be paid, the Crown Solicitor shall state this specially in his return. In all cases of high treason and treason-felony the special directions of the Attorney-General shall be obtained as to the course of proceeding and the counsel to be employed.

3. In ordinary cases, save as hereinafter provided, the permanent Crown Counsel only shall be employed on the part of the Crown when one Court is sitting for criminal business; but when both Courts in any assize town shall be engaged in criminal business at the same time, the two senior supernumerary Crown Counsel shall be employed for the Crown, and the Crown Solicitor shall arrange, if possible, that one permanent and one supernumerary Counsel shall act for the Crown in each court; but this arrangement may be varied in any particular case by the senior Crown Counsel. In all cases of homicide, and in other cases of difficulty or importance, or where many witnesses are to be examined, the Crown Solicitor shall, if time permit, obtain the directions of the Attorney-General before the assizes as to the counsel to be employed, and in the absence of any such direction may employ one, or, in very special cases, two of the supernumerary Crown Counsel. The Crown Solicitor may, in all important and difficult cases, on the written direction of the senior Crown Counsel, have, previous to the trial, a consultation of the Counsel engaged for the Crown in any such case.

4. The Attorney-General expects that every Counsel employed for the Crown will give his undivided attention to each case, and that if he is likely to be engaged in the Civil Court when any Crown case is to be tried, he will decline to accept such Crown brief, and that if, after having taken such brief, he finds that he cannot attend in the Crown Court, he will return his brief to the Crown Solicitor, who shall give same to some other of the Crown Counsel in the town; and in every case where any Crown Counsel shall absent himself from a Crown case in which he holds a brief, the fact shall be specially stated by the Crown Solicitor in his return to the Attorney-General.

5. Where Crown briefs are sent to one of her Majesty's Sergeants (which is only to be done when he attends in an assize town), it is expected by the Attorney-General that in all serious cases, when required by the Crown Solicitor, such Sergeant will give the Crown the full benefit of his assistance in the conduct of the same; and when the services of a Sergeant can be secured, the Crown Solicitor will dispense with the services of one of the supernumerary Crown Counsel, who would otherwise be employed under Rule 3.

6. When prisoners are put upon trial in different places for crimes springing from a common cause or plot, or connected with the same conspiracy, or provable by the same evidence, it is expected by the Attorney-General that Counsel employed for the Crown in any of such places will not act for the defence in any other of such places, and if any departure from this rule take place it shall be reported by the Crown Solicitor to the Attorney-General.

7. In ordinary cases, no higher fees shall be given to the Crown Counsel than three guineas to the senior and two guineas to the junior; but in cases of magnitude and difficulty the Crown Solicitor shall be at liberty to give such larger fees as he shall consider reasonable; and in all cases where the trial shall not conclude in one day, each of the Counsel for the Crown shall be entitled to a fee of two guineas as a refresher; but in every case where either increased fees or refreshers are paid, same shall be specially reported to the Attorney-General.

8. In all cases in which it is practicable the Crown Solicitor shall, at latest, on the first day of the assizes for each town, deliver to the Counsel to be employed in each case his brief, which shall contain a copy or full abstract of the indictment, copies of the informations and examinations of the several witnesses, and such observations upon the case as the Crown Solicitor may think it necessary to make.

9. The Clerks of the Crown for the several counties shall procure from the Sheriff and furnish to the respective Crown Solicitors, four days at the least before the day appointed for the commencement of each assizes, a true list of the jury summoned; and for the purpose of daily exercising the right of the Crown to direct jurors to stand by, and, if need be, to challenge for cause, the Crown Solicitor shall make due inquiries in reference to the persons summoned, and when in any case he shall have sufficient reason to believe that any person coming to be sworn as a juror is open to challenge for affinity to the person on trial, partiality, bodily or mental infirmity rendering him unfit to serve as a juror, or other sufficient ground on which a challenge, if made, could be sustained, he shall direct such juror to stand by; and he shall also, in the exercise of a due discretion, direct to stand by all such persons as he shall have reason to believe are likely to be hindered from giving an impartial verdict, by favour towards the accused, fear of the consequences to their persons, property, or trade, or other improper motive, although same may not amount to a legal ground of challenge, or may not admit of legal proof; and in the discharge of this duty the Crown Solicitors will not interfere unless the circumstances of the case require it, and will then act with due care and caution, but also with promptness and decision, and, if time permit, should consult the leading Crown Counsel in the case. In all cases of peculiar local excitement in any particular town or district of the county, it will be prudent, if the panel permit, to set aside all persons returned from such locality; and in all cases every vintner, publican, retailer of spirituous or malt liquors, shall, as a matter of course, be ordered to stand by.

10. Crown Solicitors may, in proper cases—with the previous opprobation, in writing, of the Attorney-General in each case—have copies of the indictments and informations printed for the trial, and charge the expense of same in their accounts.

11. Within one fortnight from the termination of the circuit or commission, the respective Crown Solicitors shall send to the Attorney-General full and accurate returns of the several cases in which the prosecutions have been carried on by the Crown, and the result of such prosecutions, and these returns shall be under the following headings:—

"RETURNS OF PROSECUTIONS for the County of at the Assizes [or Commission].

"No. on brief.

"Name of person charged.

"Nature of the offence as stated in the informations, and when sworn.

"When copies of the informations were received by the Crown Solicitor.

"When case first submitted to the Attorney-General or other Crown Counsel.

"Nature of the directions thereon, name of counsel directing, and when given.

"Offence as laid in indictment.

"Whether bills found or ignored.

"Bench warrant, if issued, and when.

"Name of supernumerary or extra Counsel (if any employed).

"Result, showing the acquittal, or conviction and sentence, of each person, and if no trial and verdict, why.

"Statement of any special circumstances.

(Signed) "Crown Solicitor for said

12. The Crown Solicitor shall not, in any case, without the direction, in writing, of the Attorney-General, undertake or consent that the Crown shall be at the expense of defending prisoners; but in cases in which any person is put upon trial for murder, and the Court shall have assigned counsel or attorney to the prisoner, the Crown Solicitor will bring the circumstances before the Attorney-General, and take his directions as to whether and what sum shall be allowed, and in no case will the costs of more than one counsel for all the prisoners be allowed. Cases of high treason will be dealt with by special minute of the Attorney-General.

13. On the motions for the discharge of prisoners on bail, briefs for the Crown shall be given to the Law Adviser to the Castle, and if he shall be unable to attend, then to the Attorney-General's counsel. In any case of special importance briefs may be sent to both. All applications for writs of habeas corpus to produce a prisoner for trial or as a witness at assizes, shall be made by the Law Adviser, or, in his absence, by the counsel of the Attorney-General, upon instructions from the Crown Solicitor for the county or city where the prisoner's attendance is required; and a like course shall be adopted in applications for writs of habeas corpus to bring up prisoners to Dublin for the purpose of having sentences amended or altered.

SESSIONAL CROWN SOLICITORS.

14. The Sessional Crown Solicitors shall prosecute for the Crown at the several Quarter Sessions in their respective counties in all criminal cases, and they shall not act in the prosecution or defence of any civil bill which may be in any way connected with the prosecutions which they are to conduct for the Crown.

15. So soon as the Sessional Crown Solicitor shall have received from the clerk of any petty sessions in his county copies of informations in any case returned for trial at the Quarter Sessions, it shall be his duty to read and note the same; and if any question of difficulty arises on the same, or if any case is returned for trial at the Quarter Sessions which he thinks would more properly be tried at the assizes, he is to communicate with the Crown Solicitor for the county, in order that he may, if necessary, take the opinion of the Attorney-General upon the case.

16. In cases in which any Sessional Crown Solicitor shall consider it necessary to enforce the attendance of witnesses who have been bound over to prosecute, he may cause Crown summonses to be taken out; and when any bill of indictment has been found at Quarter Sessions against persons not amenable, he may procure bench warrants against such parties, and he shall charge such fees as he shall pay for such matters in next account.

17. The expense of taking out copies of indictments can only be allowed to be charged for by Sessional Crown Solicitors in special cases, in which the chairman of sessions shall certify it was necessary for the proper carrying on of the prosecution that such copies should have been taken out by the solicitor.

18. Medical witnesses should only be summoned to attend Quarter Sessions in cases in which their testimony is necessary to sustain the prosecution, and they should not, in any case, be summoned to attend at Petty Sessions without the previous sanction of the Crown Solicitor in writing.

19. When a medical witness is summoned to attend at sessions in the town in which he resides, the usual fee of one guinea only is to be paid; but when he is summoned to attend in any other town he is to be paid one guinea for every day he is necessarily kept from home, besides his actual travelling expenses and hotel charges, such hotel charges not to exceed fifteen shillings per day.

20. The following cases shall not be tried at Quarter Sessions, and when any such are returned for trial there it shall be the duty of the Sessional Crown Solicitor to apply to the Chairman of Sessions to order that the case be sent for trial at the next assizes, and the witnesses bound over to attend and give evidence there, viz.—treason, murder, treason-felony, rape, perjury, assaults with intent to murder, party processions, election riots, and all offences of a political and insurrectionary character.

21. Within one fortnight from the termination of the Quarter Sessions in each county, the Sessional Crown Solicitor shall furnish to the Crown Solicitor for said county, for the purpose of being at once forwarded by him to the Attorney-General, a tabular list of the several prosecutions at such sessions, and the result, and which return shall be under the following headings:—

COUNTY OF QUARTER SESSIONS.

"A RETURN OF PROSECUTIONS conducted by the Sessional Crown Prosecutor at the day of 186

"A. B.,

"Sessional Crown Solicitor.

"No. of case.

"Name of person charged.

"Nature of the offence as stated in the informations, and when sworn.

"Offence as laid in the indictment.

"Whether Bills found or ignored.

"Warrants, if issued, and when.

"Result, showing acquittal, or conviction and sentence, of each person, and if no verdict or trial, why.

"Statement of any special circumstances."

22. All accounts from Sessional Crown Solicitors shall be furnished to the Crown Solicitors of their respective counties quarterly—that is to say, ending the 31st day of March, the 30th day of June, the 30th day of September, and the 31st day of December in every year; and all expenses incurred in the quarter must be included in each account, and cannot be allowed if charged for in any later account, except under special circumstances, to be approved by the Attorney-General.

23. Sessional Crown Solicitors in each county, when required by the Crown Solicitor conducting the prosecutions for the Crown at the assizes for such county, will be expected to furnish him with such local information as is in their power both as regards jurors and any other matters on which the Crown Solicitor may find it necessary to require their assistance in any prosecution by the Crown at the assizes; and the Sessional Crown Solicitors shall also attend at the revision of the Lists of Jurors of their respective counties, and assist in such revision; and such services are to be considered as part of the ordinary duty of the Sessional Crown Solicitors, and not entitling them to make any separate charge in relation thereto.

24. Whenever any Sessional Crown Solicitor finds it necessary that a writ of habeas corpus should be obtained to bring up a person in custody, in order to be examined as a witness, or stand his trial for any offence, or to appear in court by reason of a change being necessary either in the record or sentence, he shall in all such cases send up full particulars to the Chief or Under-Secretary, in order that directions may be given to the Crown and Treasury solicitor to have the proper application made for the writ.

CROWN SOLICITORS AND SESSIONAL CROWN SOLICITORS.

25. Every Crown Solicitor and Sessional Crown Solicitor shall attend at the assizes, commission, or sessions where he prosecutes for the Crown, and discharge his duties there in person, and in no case, save of a casualty occurring during the assizes, commission, or sessions, or so shortly before as to render an application to the Attorney-General impracticable, shall he discharge such duties by substitute or deputy without the permission in writing of the Attorney-General previously obtained for the special occasion, on an application in writing stating the grounds of such application; and such permission will not be granted, except in cases of actual and temporary incapacity to attend.

26. Crown Solicitors, or Sessional Crown Solicitors, shall not act as attorneys or agents at any registration of Parliamentary electors, or at any revision of any Burgess Roll, nor act, directly or indirectly, as agents at or in preparation for any election on behalf of any candidate for the representation in Parliament of their respective counties, or any borough or town within same, nor shall they act as attorneys for any person charged before a coroner's inquest, or at any Petty Sessions, with any indictable offence, except by the express direction of the Attorney-General, or the Chief or Under-Secretary for Ireland.

27. Before undertaking any "special duty," a Crown Solicitor, or Sessional Crown Solicitor, shall obtain authority for undertaking same in writing, either from the Attorney-General, or the Chief or Under Secretary; unless the case is one of such urgency as not to allow time for applying for such authority, and in such case he shall report the circumstance as soon as possible afterwards, and apply for authority to charge the allowances for special duty—viz., two guineas a day, with travelling charges and other actual payments, except hotel expenses; and the authority for undertaking or charging for such special duty must accompany any application for payment, or allowance for the same. HOUSE OF LORDS—JULY 16.

CARLISLE AND ANOTHER v. WHALEY.

(Appeal from the Irish Court of Common Pleas.)

Mr. Mellish, Q.C., and Mr. Cohen, appeared for plaintiffs in error. Attorney—Mr. Showbridge. Mr. Prentice, Q.C., and Mr. Hume Williams appeared for defendant in error. Attorneys—Mr. P. B. Markey, London; Mr. E. Hudson, Dublin.

The Lord Chancellor having read the pleadings, gave judgment for the appellant: First, on the ground that, by the Irish Common Law Procedure Act, special demurrers were abolished; and though the plea was bad on special demurrer, yet, that being good in substance, judgment should be given accordingly. He held that the judgment of the court below on the second plea was wrong, and should be reversed. On the third plea, which alleged the due registration of the deed under which the plaintiffs claimed, and its admissibility in evidence, for the purpose of defence, registration not having been effected till after the commencement of the action, but before the plea pleaded, his lordship was of opinion that such registration was good, and held that the bill of exceptions ought not to have been admitted. He advised the judgment of the court below to be reversed.

Lords Cranworth and Colonsay concurred.

The Lord Chancellor severely animadverted on the repeated trials after error was brought, notice of which, he was of opinion, should have operated as a stet processus.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT—TUESDAY.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. WOOD.)

TICHBORNE v. MOSTYN—TICHBORNE v. TICHBORNE.

In Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood's Court on Tuesday, Mr. Giffard, Q.C. (with whom was Mr. Locock Webb), applied on behalf of the plaintiff in the suit, Tichborne v. Tichborne, and Tichborne v. Mostyn, for leave to serve notice of motion for the next seal for the attendance of the printers and publishers of the Pall Mall Gazette, the Times, the Morning Post, and four Hampshire newspapers, to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt in having published, with comments calculated to damage the plaintiff's case, an abstract of the affidavits filed in this cause on behalf of the plaintiff, but not yet brought before the court. The offending statement appeared in the first instance in the Pall Mall Gazette of Saturday, and was published as an extract therefrom in the Times of Monday, and in other papers.

The Vice-Chancellor gave leave to serve notice of motion, and at the same time observed that he had been urgently requested by the writers of some anonymous letters to read certain papers, and, among others, his attention had been specially invited to a tale in All the Year Round, where he was told that he would find this case illustrated. He might add that he had not followed the advice of the correspondents; in fact, he made a point of never reading the discussion of a case in a newspaper.

THURSDAY.

This case came before the Court upon a motion on behalf of the plaintiff, who claims to be Sir Roger Charles Doughty Tichborne, eldest son of Sir James Francis Tichborne and 11th baronet, that the publishers and printers of the Pall-mall Gazette, The Times, the Morning Advertiser, the Morning Post, and three Hampshire newspapers should show cause why they should not be committed for contempt of Court in publishing an abstract of the affidavits put in on behalf of the plaintiff (but not as yet before the Court) with comments calculated to prejudice the plaintiff's case.

In The Times of Monday last there appeared an article, headed "Tichborne v. Tichborne," taken, with acknowledgement, from the Pall-mall Gazette of Saturday. This article contained a statement of the story told by the claimant of his life and adventures from his leaving England in 1853, until his return in December, 1866, and attention was called not only to the affidavit of Lady Tichborne and others who have identified the claimant as the genuine Sir Roger, but also to the absence of affidavits from persons who might have been expected to have come forward and recognized him. The passages which were principally complained of were the following:—

"We have not space to enter into detail as to the statements of the 34 persons whose affidavits follow those of the claimant and Lady Tichborne. Many of them are important enough if the deponents can endure cross-examination in the witness box, many are obviously false, absurd, and worthless, being those of persons who never having seen the claimant before he left England, are, nevertheless convinced that he is the person he claims to be. One is made by a blind man who once heard Mr. Roger Tichborne speak before he left England in 1853, and having heard the claimant speak in 1867, is convinced of his identity because he has a 'Tichborne' voice."

The article, after mentioning the evidence of Major Heywood, late of the Carbineers, and of two or three persons formerly non-commissioned officers, privates, and servants in that regiment, all of whom stated their conviction that the claimant is identical with Cornet Tichborne, formerly of the Carbineers, proceeded thus :—

"No single member of either the Tichborne or Seymour families, nor any of the numerous officers with whom he served in the Carbineers, with the single exception of Major Heywood, have made any affidavit of their belief in the claimant's identity."

The article, after pointing out various sources of identification open to the claimant, concluded thus :—

"We happen to know as a fact that Mr. Danby Seymour, M.P., the claimant's uncle, Mr. M'Evoy, M.P., and Major Phillips, formerly of the Carbineers, his brother officers, his aunt, Mrs. Nagle, and his cousins, Mrs. John Townley and Mrs. Radcliffe, have had interviews with him; but as we do not find any affidavits from them in corroboration of his identity among the documents included in the volume now before us, we presume that they failed to recognize in the claimant their long-lost relative."

Mr. Giffard, Q.C., Mr. Bruce, Q.C., and Mr. Locock Webb, in support of the motion against the publisher of the Pall-mall Gazette, contended that the comments contained in the article in question were calculated to prejudice the mind of the Court and the verdict of the jury. Even if they did not bring about this result they might deter persons who would otherwise be disposed to do so from coming forward to give evidence, when the case which they were prepared to support was held up by anticipation as worthless and absurd, and their own testimony denounced as false. An actual committal was not pressed for, but such an order at least ought to be made as would effectually prevent a repetition of this grave offence and contempt of Court.

Sir R. Palmer, for the publisher of the Pall-mall Gazette, contended that the article in question had nothing in common with those which were held in the cases referred to in support of the motion to amount to a contempt of Court. In his own individual opinion any such publication of affidavits intended to be brought before the Court in a pending suit would have been better abstained from; but what did this article amount to? It was a perfectly fair abstract of the affidavits made without any extenuation, exaggeration, malice, or error. It assumed the truth of the plaintiff's statement, and was in reality calculated to assist his case and produce an impression in his favour out of doors. The points which were unfavourable to the plaintiff's case and the difficulties in his way were supported by anticipation in a way that he, as one of the counsels for the defendants would have preferred left to himself to have made at the hearing of the cause. The plaintiff's solicitor might, for aught they knew, have himself put these affidavits in circulation. He had already placed an advertisement in The Times, in January last, in reference to the case. It was the constant practice of newspapers to make comments upon cases which excited public attention pending their decision, and in the very important proceedings in the Overend, Gurney case, before Vice-Chancellor Malins, no one had thought of interfering with the articles that were constantly appearing. The plaintiff sought in substance to restrain publication of a statement of his own rights.

Mr. Speed followed on the same side.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR had no hesitation in saying that there had been a gross contempt of Court committed in this case. From the time of Lord Hardwicke this Court had acted upon the rule which was laid down by that eminent Judge in the case against the publishers of the St. James's Evening Post and the Champion newspapers in these words :—

"Nothing is more incumbent upon Courts of Justice than to preserve their proceedings from being misrepresented; nor is there anything of more pernicious consequences than to prejudice the minds of the public against persons concerned as parties in causes before the cause is finally heard. It has always been my opinion, as well as the opinion of those who have sat here before me, that such a proceeding ought to be discountenanced."—(2 Atk., 469).

That such an attempt had been made, and made in a most offensive manner, he had not the slightest doubt. The author of the article in question had pronounced his opinion upon the documents before him with a clear and decided bias, and with all that boldness in which persons under the screen of the anonymous, and who had no responsibility cast upon them, thought themselves entitled to indulge. Those who had responsibility cast upon them, and especially that Court, before whom the case was now pending, were bound to protect every suitor from such an attempt to pervert the course of justice, and especially to affect the minds of persons who might be otherwise ready to give evidence in the case, but would hesitate in coming forward when they found that they would expose themselves to criticisms of this kind. The article in question was obviously the work of a gentleman of education and information, and, adopting the words of Lord Langdale in Littler v. Thompson (2 Beavan), he felt surprised that a gentleman of education and science should think that he was serving the cause of truth and justice by taking a set of documents which have not even been submitted to the Judge who has to try the cause, and in making comments upon them, the bias of which was manifested by the concluding sentence—"We happen to know," &c. The writer must, of course, have been in communication with some of those parties who might, from not having made affidavits, be presumed not to be favourable to the claimant's case, and some clue to the source from which this article emanated was thus afforded. He disregarded altogether the suggestion that the article was furnished by the plaintiff's own advisers, and when it was urged that neither the plaintiff nor his solicitor had denied this charge he answered, Qui s'excuse s'accuse. Why should the plaintiff have defended himself against any such charge which was not even suggested by any affidavit on the other side? It was said, however—and he was astonished at the confidence with which it was said—that this was a fair and unbiased comment, and did not err against those rules which have been laid down as to fair comments on matters of public notoriety. Those rules, however, did not extend to comments on matters still pending, which were not yet decided, and had not as yet been even brought before the Court. In such a case, which was the one with which we now had to deal, the Court would fail greatly in the administration of justice if it allowed any such comments to be made.

The article in question was unquestionably a very able argument addressed to the public in opposition to the view put forward by the plaintiff. He did not accuse the writer of incompetency. Far from it. Every turn of the case was with great ingenuity presented in the most unfavourable way to the plaintiff. The bias was most obvious, and the comments passed the terms of any legitimate comment, even if comment could legitimately be made upon proceedings pending, but not yet actually before the Court. They manifestly tended to direct and sway the minds of the judge and jury by whom the case would ultimately have to be determined, and in his opinion it was plain and manifest that there had been a most improper attempt at interference with the administration of justice. He reserved, however, saying what was to be done until he had heard the other cases.

Mr Giffard, Q.C., then proceeded with the motions against the other papers.

Mr. Roxburgh, Q.C., and Mr. A. G. Marten, for The Times and the Morning Advertiser, submitted that they had merely republished from the Pall-mall Gazette, without any comments of their own, the article in question, acknowledging the source from which it had been taken.

Mr. Kay, Q.C., for the printer of the Morning Post (in which paper a leading article on the case appeared about a week back), was instructed to make a most humble apology to the Court if, by any inadvertence, he had been guilty of a contempt of Court. It was submitted, however, that nothing of the sort had been done, and that, at any rate, the printer was not the person responsible.

Mr. Shebbeare, for the Southampton Times, submitted that the article in that paper contained a mere resumé of the plaintiff's own evidence, without one word of unfavourable comment, and he could only suppose that the article had not been read by the plaintiff's advisers, or the motion would not have been pressed.

Mr. W. W. Cooper appeared for the Hampshire Chronicle, the editor of which paper stated that a print of the plaintiff's affidavits had been handed to the editor by a gentleman of Winchester who had made an affidavit in favour of the plaintiff, and was one of his intimate friends and most active local supporters.

Mr J. Napier Higgins, for the editor of the Hampshire Independent, asked for time to meet the case raised against his client.

Sir R. Palmer, Q.C., at this stage of the proceedings, stated that as soon as the proprietor of the Pall-mall Gazette had been informed of his Honour's opinion, he had at once desired to make his humble submission and apology to the Court.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR expressed his satisfaction at the statement, and observed that after this submission the ends of justice would be met by making the Pall mall Gazette, which was the most serious case, pay the costs of the motion. With regard to The Times and the Morning Advertiser there would be no order, each side paying their own costs. In the case of the article in the Morning Post, which went beyond a mere reprint of the affidavits, the printer must (as in the case of the Pall-mall Gazette) pay the costs of this motion, and as to the printer being made responsible for the contents of the paper he would, no doubt, be indemnified, and there was ample precedent for the course, among other instances in the prosecution of Mr. Woodfall, the printer, arising out of the proceedings in reference to Junius's letters. The cases of the Hampshire papers would all stand over.

TERMS OF IMPRISONMENT.

Consecutive and cumulative sentences of imprisonment, and the right of justices to inflict such sentences, have been often called in question; but never until the decision of Paine's case, 16 W. R. 742, in the Court of Queen's Bench, has an authoritative judicial opinion been given on the subject. And strangely enough, although the statute which regulates the passing of such sentences by the judges at assizes is almost in the same words as the 25th section of Jervis's Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 43), which applies to convictions before justices, the point appears to have been brought now for the first time before a court, and it has been, we venture to say, well established once and for all that it is in accordance with statutory enactments for justices of the peace to inflict consecutive terms of imprisonment.

In Paine's case an application was made to the Court of Queen's Bench for a habeas corpus to discharge the applicant out of custody on a sentence of imprisonment passed by the magistrates at Maidstone. He had been convicted under the 5 Geo. IV., c. 85. s. 4, of a certain offence for which the statute says the magistrates may commit him to the House of Correction for any period not exceeding three months, and he was accordingly sentenced to three months' imprisonment. He was then again charged (being still at the bar) with another similar offence against the same statute, and pleaded guilty thereto, upon which he was again sentenced to the same punishment of imprisonment for three months, to commence from the expiration of the first sentence; and there were two other similar convictions and similar sentences, making four convictions and twelve months' imprisonment. The first period of three months expired, and this application was made to test the legality of the subsequent sentences.

The whole case appears to have turned upon the construction of the 25th section of Jervis's Act, "That where a justice shall adjudge the defendant to be imprisoned, and he shall then be in prison undergoing imprisonment upon a conviction for any other offence, the warrant for the subsequent offence shall be delivered to the goaler, and it shall be lawful for the justices to order that the imprisonment for the subsequent offence shall commence at the expiration of the imprisonment to which the defendant shall have been previously sentenced."

As the Lord Chief Justice remarked in delivering judgment dismissing the application, "by some degree of technical and professional straining the words are capable of the interpretation that the imprisonment commences from the moment that the prisoner is convicted and sentenced;" but it is scarcely necessary to strain words to prove such a position. When a defendant is convicted, he is not released without having undergone the penalty, and he is, therefore, from that moment, not only constructively, but actually, a prisoner. It is a much nicer point to ascertain whether the words of the statute contemplated convictions for more than one offence at the same session of justices; but if we look at the universal practice existing at the time of the passing of Jervis's Act, which prevailed at assizes and at the Central Criminal Court, and the similarity of the wording of this section to that of the 10th section of 7 & 8 Geo. IV., c. 23, there can be little doubt that the intention was to give justices the same powers as are exercised in such cases by the judges. And, moreover, the common sense view of the matter renders it absurd that it should be possible for a man to be convicted of two or more desperate assaults at the same time, and that all his sentences should begin and expire concurrently, just as if a man could live two or more lives at once. Nothing would in the present day go farther towards encouraging such offences, for instance as have recently been but too common in the streets of London, than the knowledge that when once an assault on a policeman had been committed, the perpetrator of the outrage might "run amuck" and assault as many more as he pleased without suffering any greater punishment than the maximum term of imprisonment awarded to such an offence.—Solicitors' Journal.

A curious example of the perversion of a salutary enactment has been afforded in the case of Barraclough v. Greenhough, which lately came before the Exchequer Chamber, and which is reported in the Weekly Reporter It will be remembered that formerly, in all cases where a will concerning lands had to be proved, it was necessary to produce the original will, as the probate was not evidence. But by section 64 of the Probate Court Act (20 & 21 Vict., c. 77) it was provided that in any action where, according to the existing law, it would be necessary to produce and prove an original will in order to establish a devise of real estate, it should be lawful for the party intending to establish in proof such devise to give to the opposite party ten days' notice that he intended at the trial to give in evidence as proof of the devise the probate of the will; and in every such case such probate should be "sufficient evidence of such will, and of its validity and contents," notwithstanding the same might not have been proved in solemn form, unless the party receiving such notice should, within four days after receipt, give notice that he disputed the validity of such devise.

In an ejectment which came on for trial at the Leeds Summer Assizes of last year, the plaintiff claimed under the heir-at law and the defendant relied on a devise. The plaintiff came prepared to dispute the validity of this devise, on the ground of undue influence, and both parties had brought many witnesses at considerable expense to the assize town. The defendant's attorney had served upon the plaintiff personally notice of intention to give the probate in evidence as proof of the devise. The plaintiff, who was an ignorant woman, kept the notice several days, so that her attorney was prevented giving notice in due time that the plaintiff disputed "the validity of the devise." The defendant's counsel, at the trial, admitted the plaintiff's title under the heir-at-law, and relied on the devise, in proof of which he put in the probate in common form, and proved the service of the statutory notice. He contended that as the plaintiff's counter-notice had not been served in due time the probate was conclusive. Mr. Justice Mellor, after consulting Mr. Justice Montague Smith, adopted this opinion, and non-suited the plaintiff.

We have not space to enter into a full discussion here of the question thus arising, and we must content ourselves with saying, with all respect, that the opinion of these two learned judges appears contrary to common sense. We are bound, however, to assume that a ruling which was upheld by the Court of Queen's Bench admits of stronger arguments in its favour than we are able to discover. In the absence of authority to the contrary we should have said that, although the statute makes the probate "sufficient evidence" of the will it does not make it conclusive. Indeed, we should have regarded the decision as not only unsound, but as inflicting very great hardship on the plaintiff, who had come prepared with witnesses to enter into the question of undue influence. The remark has been made before that judges show a tendency to nonsuit plaintiffs in heavy cases towards the end of the summer assizes. Certainly it is not uncommon to hear of a nonsuit in August set aside in November.

The Exchequer Chamber has unanimously decided that the probate was not conclusive, and the Court seemed inclined to hold that the notice ought to have been served upon the plaintiff's attorney and not personally; and thus there will be a new trial. This is rather a costly remedy for a mistake in what might have been thought a simple matter.—Solicitors' Journal.

At Bow-street Mr. William Gill, barrister, appeared to a summons charging him with having obtained £2,000 from Miss Mary Dodd by false pretences. Mr. G. Lewis opened the case as one of great hardship against his client. The complainant deposed that she was tempted from her home at Edinburgh, in 1858, when she was 17 years of age, and induced to live in London with the defendant, by whom she had a child. By his advice she commenced a suit in Chancery against her own brother, and three months after the termination of the suit in 1861 she became entitled to £2,000, which sum she was induced to invest in a Cornish quarry which the defendant had represented as his own free and unencumbered property. He agreed to give her £400 a year interest, and a portion of this had been paid to her. She had lived with him at different times and places, but for nearly two years past she had been without any regular home, at times reduced almost to starvation. It was only lately she discovered that there was a mortgage on the quarry of £2,000, and that the defendant had never had any ownership in it except as a trustee. She could not recover a farthing of the interest due or of the capital, and was now supported entirely by the charity of friends. The defendant cross-examined Miss Dodd as to her age and habits, and, having elicited from her a denial that she was informed of the mortgage on the quarry, he produced a letter in the handwriting of the complainant, in which she expressly consented to the arrangement as to £400 interest, in consequence of the quarry being encumbered, as alleged, by a banker's claim of £2,000 upon it. Mr. Vaughan examined the letter, and said if it was really written by Miss Dodd it was an answer to the summons. The complainant admitted that she wrote the letter, but it was at the express dictation of the defendant, who always advised her to write and sign the documents, and she had often done so without being conscious of their purport. Mr. Lewis reminded the Court that there was no allusion to the encumbrance on the quarry in the deed produced by which defendant agreed to settle the £400 interest upon her. Mr. Vaughan repeated that he had no alternative in the face of that letter than to dismiss he summons.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

TAXATION.—An agent had taken an agreement in his own name and denied his agency, and his principal had established the agency by a suit. The property in respect of which the agency was established was not worth £1,000: Held, that the costs of the suit ought to be taxed on the higher scale, as the suit did not come within any of the cases specified in the regulations made by the court: Stamford v. Dawson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 516. V. C. W.)

ACTION ON IRISH JUDGMENT.—Declaration on a judgment in the Court of Ex. in Ireland. Plea, that the defendant was never served with any writ of summons, nor had any notice of the action. Replication, that the court, under the provisions of an Act of Parliament in that behalf, and upon an affidavit of the plaintiff's attorney, made an order directing that the personal service of the writ of summons and plaint in the action on defendant's attorney, and the transmission of copies thereof, and of the said order in a registered letter to the defendant, addressed to his place of business in London, should be deemed good service of the said writ upon the defendant, unless cause was shown to the contrary in six days after service of the rule making the order on the defendant's attorney and such transmission by post as aforesaid, and that such service and transmission were effected as directed by the said court, and that the rule of court making the order was made absolute. Rejoinders, that the order of the court was obtained on the strength of the affidavit of the plaintiff's attorney, which said affidavit was untrue, and that the plaintiff never had any right of action against the defendant in respect of the cause of action in respect of which the said judgment was obtained: Held, that the rejoinders were bad, and that the replication was good. Per Bramwell, B.—The repugnancy to "natural justice" in respect of which a foreign judgment is impeachable in an action thereon, is a repugnancy to natural justice in reference to the conduct or mode of procedure of the foreign court, and not in reference to the merits of the action: (Crawley v. Isaacs, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 529. Ex.)

LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS—GUARANTEE.—The directors of a company gave to the banker of the company a guarantee worded thus: "We hereby severally acknowledge ourselves responsible to the bank for the sum of," &c. The money thus guaranteed was given by the directors as compensation to certain directors of another bank which had been amalgamated with theirs, for not being appointed members of the amalgamated board, and it was the intention of all the parties that each guarantor should be liable only for his share of the whole sum. B. and two others paid their shares, and the secretary struck their names from the document. On an action against the other directors for the balance, it was held that the alteration thus made had destroyed the validity of the guarantee: (Bank of Hindustan v. Smith, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 518. C. P.)

RAILWAY — OBSTRUCTING A PUBLIC-HOUSE — LANDS CLAUSES ACT.—R. was lessee of a public-house situated in a street, the approaches to which were temporarily and partially obstructed by a railway then in course of construction. The obstruction continued for twenty months, and caused a loss of custom to R.'s house, but did not affect the structure itself of the house and premises: Held (affirming the judgment of the Ex. Ch.), that (1) no action would lie at common law for such temporary obstruction, because it was not an injury to any one individual more than to the rest of the public; (2) that R. had no right to compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 68: (Ricket v. Metropolitan Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 542. H. of L.)

WILL—ATTESTATION.—B. produced a holograph will in the presence of two persons, to whom she expressly stated its nature, and asked them to witness it. They did not see her write anything on it at the time, nor could they say whether or not her signature, which alone appeared in the attestation clause, was there when she subscribed it. This was held to be sufficient: (Re Huckvale, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 434. Prob. Ct.)

SUCCESSION DUTY—TRUST FOR SALE UNDER A WILL.—Trustees for sale under a will entered into a contract with a purchaser, and paid legacy duty on the purchase-money, and afterwards vested the property in the person to whom the land was devised, whereby he became the proper party to convey. The contention was, that succession duty and not legacy duty ought to have been paid: Held (affirming the decision of the M. R.), that a certificate from the Inland Revenue Office that legacy duty was paid, was sufficient to discharge the land, and that the purchaser could require no further evidence on the subject: (Earl Howe v. Earl of Lichfield, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 436. L.C.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.—B. and C. had equal moieties in certain land. They mutually contracted to buy or sell one to the other his interest. At the time of that contract B. had conditionally agreed to sell the whole of the property to D. for a larger sum than the originally estimated value of his one half of it. B. and C. were held not to be partners in this increased amount to be paid for the whole property, and B. was entitled to specific performance of the contract by C.: (Cartwright v. Insole, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 445. M. R.)

PAROL AGREEMENT FOR LEASE—PART PERFORMANCE.—R. took four houses and land of J., it being agreed by J. to grant a lease for forty years at £185 a year, and R. agreeing to erect certain buildings within three years. This agreement being embodied in a short memorandum, a more extended agreement in a legal form was drawn up by J.'s solicitor, but neither document was ever executed. R remained in possession for twenty five years, and erected some of the buildings, not being able to erect the remainder owing to J. failing to give possession of the requisite land. R. having regularly paid the rent, and there being documentary evidence to show that J. considered that R. was in possession on the terms of the unsigned agreement, on a bill filed by R. for specific performance of the contract to grant the lease, decree made without costs: (Reddin v. Jarman, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 449. V. C. M.

WILL—JOINT TENANCY OR TENANCY IN COMMON.—B. gave certain real estate to trustees to raise £4,000, without words of inheritance, and, subject thereto, to his eldest son C. for his special use. He gave the residue of his estate, after certain payments, to his two sons C. and D., to be held or divided equally at their pleasure. They were held to take, as to the special gifts, for life, and as to the residue, as tenants in common: (Oakley v. Wood, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 450. V. C. M.)

SOLICITOR AND CLIENT—COSTS.—Where the same solicitors appear for different parties in the same suit, the costs of only one attendance in chambers can be allowed; but the costs of separate briefs to counsel and of business done out of chambers will be allowed: (Brown v. Gallatly, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 553. V. C. S.)

PRIVILEGE OF THE BAR.—An attorney cannot consent to a verdict; counsel must be instructed; (London Engineering, &c., Company v. Cowan, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 573. Byles, J.)

BILL OF SALE—FRAUDULENT PREFERENCE.—C. executed a bill of sale to secure advances of goods to the amount of £60, and three days after its execution made an assignment of all his property for the benefit of his creditors. Held, that the giving of the bill of sale was not a fraudulent preference on the part of C., and that the bill of sale was valid, although C. knew, at the time he gave it, that he was in difficulties: (Curties v. Jacobs, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 574. Lush, J.)

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, JULY 27, 1867.

THE Court of Chancery Appeal gave judgment on Wednesday in the important case of Beecher v. Downing. It was an appeal from a decree of ex-Chancellor Blackburne, made in favour of the petitioner. The petition was presented for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that the respondent, Mr. T. M'Carthy Downing, of Skibbereen, should be held to be a trustee for the petitioner, Mr. Edward George Beecher, of certain property purchased by the respondent in the Incumbered Estates' Court, in the year 1854. It appeared that a Mr. Edward B. Beecher became entitled (amongst others) to the lands in question, as tenant for life, subject to a jointure for his mother, and portions for his sisters, with remainder to the petitioner for life, and, after his death, to his first and other sons in tail male. It was alleged that Mr. E. B. Beecher was a person of improvident habits; and, having become embarrassed in his circumstances, neglected to pay his mother her jointure, or his sisters the interest on their charges. In 1850, one of his sisters presented a petition in the Incumbered Estates' Court for a sale of the lands, and the respondent acted as her solicitor, and had the carriage of the proceedings. In February, 1851, the order for sale was made absolute, although opposed by Mr. E. B. Beecher. In the same year Mrs. Beecher took proceedings in Chancery to raise the arrears of her jointure, and the respondent acted as her solicitor. A receiver was appointed in October, 1851, and it was stated the respondent also acted as solicitor for the receiver. Mr. E. B. Beecher's solicitor was, as alleged, a Mr. Francis M. Murphy, whose business was transacted in Dublin by Mr. John Conroy. The petitioner charged that soon after the order for sale was made absolute in the Incumbered Estates' Court, Mr. E. B. Beecher quarrelled with Mr. Murphy, who, in consequence, ceased to act as his solicitor: and that about this period the respondent became the solicitor of Mr. E. B. Beecher: that in an action brought by Mr. Murphy against Mr. Beecher, to recover certain costs incurred in opposing the sale in the Incumbered Estates' Court, the respondent took defence for Mr. E. B. Beecher, and induced Mr. Murphy to take Mr. Beecher's bond for the amount, undertaking that it should be paid out of the produce of sale: that the respondent also acted for Mr. Beecher in effecting the sale of his house and farm to a Mr. Spring in the month of March, 1854. On the 5th of May, 1854, the lands were advertised for sale in the Incumbered Estates' Court, and an agreement was entered into between the respondent and Beecher for a private sale of certain lots to the respondent for the sum of £7,100: and it was alleged that, on the 24th of April, 1854, a notice was served by the respondent on the solicitors of all parties concerned that he would submit an offer of £7,100, for six of the lots, to Judge Hargreave: that this notice did not state that this offer was to be made by the respondent, or on his behalf.

It appeared that the offer was, in fact, made by a Mr. Alexander M'Carthy, and accepted by the late Judge Hargreave, and an entry was made in the Court-book that Mr. A. M'Carthy was accepted as purchaser in trust for the respondent. The six lots were then withdrawn, and duly conveyed by the Court to the respondent. The petitioner charged that shortly before the sale to the respondent, E. B. Beecher came to Dublin, and was, during his stay, the daily guest and companion of the respondent, and that in progress of their intercourse a secret bargain was come to, which resulted in the offer of the respondent being made to, and accepted by, the Court. It was also charged, that in order to obtain the aid and sanction of Mr. Beecher large sums of money were given to him by the respondent "in consideration of his services," and Mr. Beecher left this country for America, where he died. The petition charged that by the contrivances of the respondent a sum of at least £2,500 was lost to the persons entitled in remainder, and prayed a declaration that the sale was made collusively, and in violation of the trust reposed in respondent as solicitor having the carriage of the sale.

The respondent, in his answer, denied he acted for Mr. Beecher as his legal adviser in any matter connected with the sale. That the lots referred to were first valued at £8,000, and afterwards at £7,500, which the respondent alleged he refused to give. That after some treaty on the subject Mr. Beecher, having consulted with his friends, agreed to accept £7,100. That all parties and the Court knew that Mr. A. M'Carthy was a trustee for the respondent, and there was no concealment in the matter.

The Lord Chancellor in giving judgment said that in his opinion—

"The respondent would have discharged himself by proving that, irrespective of his character as a solicitor, being in a fiduciary position, he gave the full value of the property, and that he never entered into a secret treaty to defraud a helpless remainder-man, a widow, and woman. However, the respondent went at length into all the allegations in the position, and denied all the charges brought against him. He denied that he was on terms of intimacy with Edward B. Beecher, who only came to his office on business occasionally, and said he did not know that he was of improvident habits, but was aware that his property was incumbered. When he came to deal with the charges of acting as the confidential adviser of Edward B. Beecher, he was most anxious to keep foremost his allegation that Mr. Conroy acted for him as attorney. Now, he (the Lord Chancellor) believed that Beecher either had no attorney at all, or that, to some extent, Mr. Downing had acted for him. The respondent explicitly denied that he was anxious for Beecher's departure for America; and said that so far as the question of money was concerned he never gave him more than £20 in consideration of the impoverished condition in which he represented himself to be. He added, that the sale being made privately was to prevent knowledge of it getting abroad, so that Beecher might not be arrested. His lordship expressed his opinion that the purchase money paid for the property was the outside price of its value at the time of the sale, and the only increase in value which had since taken place was by the falling in of a life. With respect to the purchase itself, however, and the circumstances by which it was surrounded, a different question arose. On this point the evidence of Mr. Alexander M'Carthy was of vital importance, and should have been obtained by the respondent. The statement that he was not on friendly terms at present with the respondent, and that he did not volunteer to give evidence was no excuse for his not being produced. It was a most unaccountable thing also, that most important documents connected with the transaction were not forthcoming. So far, however, as actual fraud was concerned, he was bound in charity as he felt bound in law, to acquit the respondent from any charge of that kind. If the petitioner thought he could contradict the case made by the respondent, it was his duty to counterplead. He had not done so, and the case was now for the Court on the pleadings as they stood, and the evidence given by the respondent as to the value of the property. His opinion, as he had before stated, was that Mr. Downing had established that he gave full value for his purchase; and he also was of opinion that the charge of his having entered into a secret treaty had not been sustained." The Lord Chancellor having further reviewed the facts of the case, said the Court had come to the conclusion that the petition should be dismissed with costs, but reserving to the petitioner the opportunity of making a new case by establishing a fresh petition certain equities which it was contended at the bar he had.

The Lord Justice of Appeal expressed his concurrence in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, and observed "that the charges of fraud and collusion brought by the petitioner against Mr. Downing, had not only not been sustained, but appeared to be purely imaginative and illusive."

The appeal was accordingly allowed, the petition being dismissed with costs.

The judgments of the Court occupied nearly five hours in their delivery, and the case was admitted to be one of considerable difficulty, having regard to the conflicting allegations, on both sides. We are sincerely glad, for the sake of the profession, that Mr. Downing has now successfully vindicated his character from the charges of fraud, which were so directly preferred against him, at the same time we can well conceive that upon a question of fact Lord Chancellor Blackburne might have conscientiously arrived at the conclusion he did; and that, Mr. Downing being the solicitor having the carriage of the proceedings, and clothed at the time with a fiduciary character, the case thus came within the well-established doctrines of Courts of Equity, upon a question of trust, or constructive fraud.

We published in our last number an article from the Solicitors' Journal commenting on a case of Barraclough v. Greenhough, as affording a curious example of the perversion of the section of the English Probate Court Act, which enacts that a Probate may (on service of certain notices) be given in evidence to establish a devise of real estate.

A point (which affords an equally curious example of careless legislation) was raised sometime since in one of our Quarter Sessions' Courts, upon the corresponding section of the Irish Probate Act, viz., that in a Civil Bill Ejectment the Probate of a will cannot be offered in evidence of a devise affecting real estate. It did not become necessary to decide the point in the case in which it was raised, but we believe the objection to be a good one; and the result is, that in a proceeding in the Civil Bill Courts, and in these Courts alone, there is now no other means of proving a devise affecting real estate than by the production of the original will, and this result is produced by enactments intended to have the very opposite effect.

The 68th section of the Probate Act (20 & 21 Vic., c. 79) enacts that "in any Action at Law or Suit in Equity where, according to the existing Law, it would be necessary to produce and prove an original will in order to establish a devise or other testamentary disposition of or affecting real estate, it shall be lawful for the party intending to establish in proof such devise, &c., on giving notice, &c., to give in evidence as proof of the devise the Probate of said will, or a copy thereof, stamped with any Seal of the Court of Probate."

Now, independently of the question whether a Civil Bill Ejectment can be considered as included in the words Action at Law or Suit in Equity, this section is inoperative, as it only refers to cases where, according to the existing Law, it would be necessary to produce and prove an original will, and so is not applicable to any proceeding by Civil Bill, as in any such proceeding it was not necessary to produce and prove the original will, it being provided by the 108th section of the Civil Bill Act, 14th & 15th Vic., c. 57 (which has not been repealed or amended by the Probate Act), that "in any proceeding an office copy of any original will, &c., lodged in any Ecclesiastical Court in Ireland which shall appear by such copy to have been duly proved, and probate, &c., granted, shall, upon proof of the signature of the proper officer of such Ecclesiastical Court, certifying the same to be a true copy, &c., be admitted as primâ facie evidence of the contents of such will, &c., without the production of the original will." This section is also now quite inoperative, as there is no such officer of any Ecclesiastical Court, and the officers of the Probate Court will not give the certificate required by that section; a copy of the will stamped with the Seal of the Court of Probate being by the Probate Act substituted for a certified copy. We recommend this matter to the consideration of the Committee who are at present occupied in preparing amendments to the Civil Bill code.

At the commencement of the present vacation, lists of the intended sittings of the judges of the Common Law Courts to hear chamber motions were published with more than the usual formality, the name of the judge who would sit on each chamber motion day being given. On Tuesday last the Hall was filled by numbers anxiously expecting the arrival of a judge, as it was positively stated there was one in town; but no judge appeared. On yesterday the number of those who were in attendance, many having motions of a very pressing nature to be heard, was largely increased; and the expressions of vexation and disappointment which were uttered upon every side when again no judge appeared, seemed certainly excusable. We are confident there is good reason for these repeated disappointments, but they would be less grievous if the profession had not been induced to believe that such arrangements had been made as would have prevented them.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, July 22.

COURTS OF LAW OFFICERS (IRELAND) BILL.

On the motion that this bill be read a third time,

Sir C. O'Loghlen asked what had been done with respect to a memorial praying the Treasury to increase the salary of the Taxing Masters of the Common Law Courts of Ireland.

The Attorney-General for Ireland said the returns called for in the case showed that the business of the office annually decreased, so that it was thought improper to make the increase asked for.

Mr. Murphy pointed out that the returns of business done were inaccurate, because only those cases in which duty or taxation was paid were returned.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

Thursday, July 25.

PETTY SESSIONS CLERKS IN IRELAND.

In reply to General Dunne,

Lord Naas said he had no objection to the return for which his hon. and gallant friend intended to move, of the remuneration assigned to each Petty Sessions clerk in Ireland in connexion with the administration of the Act for the licensing of dogs in that country. The remuneration given this year, however, was only of a temporary character and by way of experiment. The Government must not be held pledged to give the same amount in future; but the whole question would be considered during the recess.

THE ADMIRALTY COURT (IRELAND) BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of this Bill in Committee.

On the postponed clause, 16, in which it was proposed by the Government to fill up the blank by fixing the salary of the Judge of the Court under the Bill at £1,200 a-year.

Sir C. O'Loghlen moved as an amendment that the amount should be fixed at £2,000, observing that the new Judge would have very extensive jurisdiction, and that

Digitized by Google

£1,200 a-year was not a sufficient sum to give him in the shape of salary.

After a short discussion, the Committee decided that the salary should be fixed at £1,200 a-year.

On clause 18,

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND moved to insert the words fixing the superannuation allowance of the present Judge at £500 a-year.

Sir C. O'LOGHLEN proposed that it should be £800, observing that the present Judge had discharged the duties of the office at a very inadequate salary for 11 years, and had been 24 years in the public service.

Mr. HUNT opposed the amendment. The proposition amounted to this—that the officer should be relieved of his duties and receive as a superannuation £300 a-year more than his original salary. (A laugh.)

Mr. M'LAREN thought it a monstrous proposition.

Mr. MAGUIRE, Sir P. O'BRIEN, and Mr. PIM supported the amendment.

Mr. CHILDERS thought the subject should be left in the hands of the Government.

The amendment was negatived, and the clause ordered to stand part of the Bill.

The other postponed clauses were agreed to.

The House resumed.

RATES ON UNOCCUPIED FURNISHED HOUSES.

The following is a copy of a letter issued by the Poor Law Commissioners, showing the liability of the owners of furnished unoccupied houses for the payment of rates assessed upon them. The subject is one of much importance :—

"SIR—The Commissioners for Administering the Laws for Relief of the Poor in Ireland desire to inform the Board of Guardians that a judgment has been given in the Court of Exchequer Chamber, on the question of the liability of a house which is furnished for letting, but which is not actually occupied, to be rated to the poor rate. The question has very frequently arisen at boards of guardians, who have from time to time applied to the Commissioners on the subject, and the Commissioners have in all such cases advised, on the authority of eminent counsel, that the premises were rateable. The point was recently argued in the Court of Queen's Bench, in a case which arose in the city of Dublin, under the 62nd section of the Dublin Collection of Rates Act (12 and 13 Vic., chap. 91), which corresponds in its terms with the 12th section of the 25 and 26 Vic., c. 83, and the decision of the Court was adverse to the rating; but this decision having been brought, by appeal, into the Court of Exchequer Chamber, the Court ruled that the owner of a furnished house is liable to be rated in respect of the house, even though it remained unlet, and unoccupied by a tenant. The case in which this decision was given was Staunton v. Powell, and is reported in the Irish Reports, Common Law Series, Part IV., published in the month of June last."

BILL TO ALTER THE SUPERANNUATION ALLOWANCES OF THE DUBLIN METROPOLITAN POLICE.

A bill "to Amend the Laws Regulating the Superannuation Allowance of the Dublin Metropolitan Police," which was lately brought into the House of Commons by Lord Naas, the Attorney-General for Ireland, and Mr. Hunt, was printed to-day (July 20th), and its provisions will be found of some interest. The preamble sets forth that by an act passed in the 10th and 11th years of the reign of her present Majesty, cap. 100, regulations were made for the granting of superannuation allowances to members of the Dublin Metropolitan Police, and that, as it is expedient to alter and amend those regulations, this act has been introduced.

Clause 1 repeals, from and after the passing of this act, so much of the recited act as provides for the payment of a contribution in aid of the funds applicable to the support of the said Dublin Metropolitan Police equal to 2 per cent. per annum on the salary or pay of the several parties mentioned therein, but provides that such repeal shall not be held to destroy, or in any manner lessen, the rights of such parties as shall have so contributed to the benefit of the scale of superannuation.

Clause 2 authorizes the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland, under the conditions afterwards mentioned, to direct that any superintendent-inspectors, acting-inspector, sergeant, acting-sergeant, or constable of the Dublin Metropolitan Police, appointed to the force after the passing of this act, may be superannuated and receive a gratuity or yearly pension not exceeding the proportion of his salary stated in the following scale :—

1. A gratuity of one month's pay for each year's services after five years and less than fifteen years.
2. On completion of fifteen years' service an annual pension of fifteen-fiftieths of the pay, and an increase of one-fiftieth for each successive year up to thirty years' service completed.
3. After thirty years' service, or after the person to be superannuated has attained the age of sixty years, the pension to be equal to thirty-fiftieths of the pay, or a larger proportion in cases of extraordinary merit or good conduct.
4. For injuries received at any time in the actual performance of duty, a pension for life to be granted of an amount in proportion to the injury received, but not exceeding the full pay—the grounds of disability to be carefully investigated and fully set forth in the authority granting the pension. But no such pension, retiring allowance, or gratuity is to be granted in any case to any person except on the certificate of the surgeon of the force, or such other competent medical officer or officers as the Lord Lieutenant shall name for the purpose, that such person is from mental or bodily incapacity unable to perform his duty any longer, and the certificate of one of the Commissioners of the Dublin Metropolitan Police that he has served with diligence and fidelity. Any member of the force who shall have attained the age of sixty years or upwards may, upon his petition, be superannuated without such medical certificate.

Clause 3, after setting forth that it is expedient that the present members of the Dublin Metropolitan Police establishment should continue to be entitled to receive retiring allowances calculated upon the scale of superannuation and rates of pay to which they were entitled before the passing of this act—provides that the provisions of the recited act shall apply to the members of the said Dublin Metropolitan Police establishment appointed before the passing of this act, as fully and effectually as if this act had not been passed.

Clause 4 provides that any pension or retiring allowance shall be granted to members of the force appointed after the passing of this act only upon the condition that it becomes forfeited, and may be withdrawn by the Lord Lieutenant in any of the following cases :—

1. On conviction of the grantee for any indictable offence.
2. On his knowingly associating with suspected persons, thieves, or other offenders.
3. On his refusing to give information and assistance to the police whenever in his power for the detection and apprehension of criminals, and for the suppression of any disturbance of the public peace.
4. If he enter into or continue to carry on any business, occupation, or employment which, in the opinion of the Lord Lieutenant, shall be disgraceful or injurious to the public, or in which he shall make use of the fact of his former employment in the police force in a manner which the Lord Lieutenant considers to be discreditable and improper.

And nothing herein contained is to entitle any member of the Dublin Metropolitan Police absolutely to any superannuation allowance, nor prevent him from being dismissed or discharged for misconduct or other sufficient cause without superannuation allowance.

The Right Hon. the Attorney-General has appointed John George Gibbon, Esq., of the Leinster Bar, to be his counsel, in place of Edward Spencer Dix, Esq., appointed a Divisional Justice of Dublin.

The French bill for the abolition of imprisonment for debt having been passed on Thursday last, the debtors confined in Clichy had an illumination at the prison the same evening.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In the Matter of GILLMAN'S Trusts and the Trustee Relief Act.

May 14, 1867.—Trustee Relief Act—Minor—Guardian ad litem.

A petition was presented, under the Trustee Relief Act, praying that a sum of £490 7s. stock, might be transferred to the petitioners, or that it might be referred to the Master, to inquire who was entitled thereto, and to allocate the same accordingly. Henry Bennett Gillman, a minor, claimed to be entitled to a portion of the said stock. He resided within the jurisdiction.

Webb moved to appoint a guardian ad litem to the said minor. He cited Re the trusts of Ward's will, 2 Gif. 122; In re Barrington, 27 Beav., 272.

The MASTER of the ROLLS made an order for the appointment of the minor's mother, who had no interest conflicting with that of the minor, as guardian ad litem.

Solicitor for the petition, Thomas R. Wright.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Reported by W. R. MILLER, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-Law

In the Goods of JOHN NORRIS, deceased.

July 13.—Practice as to Lodging Caveats.

A Caveat lodged by a Solicitor for certain next of kin of the deceased, who were abroad, but lodged on the same day on which a Conditional Order for a new trial respecting the validity of the will of the deceased had been refused, and lodged under the directions of the Solicitor who acted on the trial for the Defendants, was set aside with costs, the same to be paid by the Solicitor who lodged the Caveat.

Dr. Miller moved, on behalf of Robert Harvey, the residuary legatee and executor named in the will of John Norris, the deceased in this matter, to set aside the caveat lodged on behalf of certain persons resident in America, who were some of the next of kin of the said deceased, or to require the proxy or retainer of the persons authorizing such caveat to be produced.

A suit was pending in the Court, in which Robert Harvey was the plaintiff, and Andrew Buchanan and several others, next of kin of the deceased, were defendants, and in which the issue was as to the validity of the testamentary papers executed by the deceased, dated respectively the 12th and 13th days of October, 1866, and in the former of which the said Robert Harvey was named residuary legatee, and in the latter also sole executor. The persons for whom the caveat had been now lodged had not been cited to see proceedings, as their residences or even existence were unknown to the said Robert Harvey or his advisers. All other next of kin and heirs-at-law had been duly cited and made parties to the cause, which came on for trial early in the month of June last, before a special jury, who, after several days' hearing, found a verdict that the two paper writings of the dates already mentioned, were together the last will and testament of the said deceased.

A decree was then made by the learned Judge of the Court, establishing the said two paper writings as the last will and testament of the said deceased. A motion was then made in due time on the part of the defendants in the cause for a conditional order for a new trial, whereupon, on the 21st day of June last, the learned Judge made no rule on the motion. On the same day a caveat was lodged by a Solicitor, under the directions of the Solicitor who had acted for the defendants, for several persons who were by the caveat stated to be resident in America, and to be some of the next of kin of the deceased. The Solicitor for the defendants, in an affidavit made by him to resist the motion, admitted that he was, before the trial, in privity and communication with persons who were acting in this country for, and were near connexions of the parties abroad.

Counsel for the applicant submitted that either the proxy or retainer authorizing the caveat to be lodged should be produced, and that if not produced the caveat should, according to the practice of the Prerogative Court, be dismissed with costs (Cormack v. Rourke, Milw. 578), or that the caveat should be set aside as having been entered, in fact, by the same Solicitor who conducted the defence, and who had, before the hearing, instructions to act for the parties who had thus become caveators.

The stamp duty and all necessary fees had been paid, and all the papers lodged when this caveat was discovered.

Mr. Twigg, for the caveators, objected to the motion. These persons had not been cited by Robert Harvey, and were in no way bound by the verdict or judgment in the cause referred to, and were entitled to require that the person seeking to establish the will should do so in solemn form of law.

KEATINGE, J.—There is nothing that the Court is bound to watch more carefully than that of lodging caveats, which may be made the means of great oppression; and in this case it is plain that the Solicitor who acted for the defendants in the suit was in privity with the parties abroad, who were in the same interest precisely with the defendants. I must, therefore, set aside this caveat; and as the caveators are abroad, I direct that the costs of the application be paid to the applicant by the Solicitor who lodged the caveat.

Solicitor for the applicant, Dickie.
Solicitor for the caveators, Twigg.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Before JUDGE MILLER.

In re DANIEL ARDREY.

July 25, 1867.—Bringing an Unfounded Action—Mistaken Identity.

The insolvent was opposed by Clay, solicitor, on the part of a creditor named M'Cluskey, on the ground of having brought an unfounded action. It appeared that the insolvent commenced an action for assault and slander against Mr. M'Cluskey, and upon that gentleman receiving an attorney's letter he instructed his solicitor, Mr. Clay, to reply by saying that he never saw the insolvent at all, that he never had anything whatever to do with him, and that there must have been some mistake in the matter, and requested that he would come and see Mr. M'Cluskey and identify him if he could; he, however, took no notice of these letters, but went on with the action. On the trial Ardrey persevered in stating that M'Cluskey was the person who assaulted him; but it was satisfactorily proved that he was not in Dublin at all on the night or day when the assault took place, that in fact he was at that time in Killarney; and there was a verdict for the defendant, the costs of which constituted his present debt, which, under the circumstances, was alleged to be fradulently contracted.

O'Driscoll for the insolvent submitted that even if his client was mistaken as to the identity of the man, yet having been grossly assaulted by some person—two of his fingers broken and other injuries done him—it was clear that he brought the action bonâ fide and there was no ground for remand.

JUDGE MILLER said that the insolvent ought to have replied to the attorney's letter, that he should have gone and inquired into the facts, and when he ascertained how they were he would not have gone on with the action. The Court remanded the insolvent for twelve months.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

In re A. B., AN ARRANGING TRADER.

July 26.—Attorneys' Apprentices and Conducting Clerks.

An attorney's apprentice was proceeding to move a matter in Bankruptcy, when Judge Miller called attention to the 372nd section of the Irish Bankrupt and Insolvent Act, which conferred the important privilege of allowing attorneys to act as advocates in matters of bankruptcy and insolvency, without employing counsel, but the attorney so acting should be the attorney on record, or to the matter. A most important decision was made on that point last week in London, where the conducting clerk to the attorney on record was an attorney himself, and still he would not be permitted to address the Court. The case was ex-parte Broadhouse, and appeared in the Times. Now he (Judge Miller) was determined to uphold the statute, and he could not permit the apprentice or conducting clerk of the attorney on record, even if that clerk was an attorney himself, to act as an advocate in that Court. It was right that the profession should be aware of this.

CIRCUIT CASES.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.

SUMMER ASSIZES, 1867.

Reported by W. GRIFFIN, Barrister-at-Law.

ENNIS, July 16.

MORONY, Appellant; SULLIVAN, Respondent.

In this case the Civil Bill was in the form directed by sec. 116 of the 14 & 15 Vic., c. 57, calling upon the defendant to show cause why execution of arrest should not issue against his person in respect of an affirmance of a dismiss for £2 17s. for costs and witnesses' expenses. The respondent had been defendant in a previous Civil Bill brought by the appellant, which had been dismissed, and the dismiss affirmed on appeal. The respondent finding the appellant had no goods off which to levy his costs, brought the present Civil Bill, and the Chairman granted execution against the person under the 116 & 117 secs. From this order there was an appeal, which now came before FITZGERALD, J.

For the respondent it was argued that the power of appeal was by the 117th sec. expressly withheld in cases under the 116th sec., and that the judge could not entertain any appeal in such a case.

For the appellant it was urged that the new Civil Bill Act, 28 & 29 Vic., c. 99, gave an appeal from all "decrees" under "this" Act (sec. 34) that decree included dismiss (sec. 1), and that as the old and new Civil Bill Acts are to be read as one Act (sec. 54), a dismiss under the old Act was a decree under the new within the 34th sec. Besides this proceeding does not apply to costs at all.

FITZGERALD, J.—On the assumption that this is a process within the 116 & 117 secs. of the C. B. Act, I am clearly of opinion that there would be no appeal from the decision of the Chairman. But there is another question to be considered; this process is based upon a dismiss, and it appears to me that a proceeding of this kind cannot be supported on a dismiss. It never was the intention of the legislature that the powers under the 116th sec. should be put in force for the recovery of costs. The word plaintiff, in the 117th sec., might possibly mean the plaintiff in the process under that and the preceding sec.; but the words in the 116th sec. are:—"when a plaintiff having obtained a decree shall not have recovered," &c. That clearly cannot include the case of a defendant who had obtained a dismiss, and the Chairman having made an order without jurisdiction, that order must be reversed; but I will reverse it without prejudice, so that the respondent's original affirmance may not be interfered with.

Attorney for appellant, J. F. Cullinan.

Attorney for respondent, C. B. Molony.

ENGLAND.

SOLICITORS' PARTNERSHIP LIABILITY.

The theoretical advocates for a code of English law who do not read the current reports can scarcely be aware of the difficulty of the undertaking. Perhaps they would reason that the greater the difficulty the greater the advantage. If there is diversity of decision or opinion among judges and text writers on principles, or if main points lie unsettled, inviting contention, let the oracle, when it is decided what the oracle shall be, lay down the law, so that at least the great thoroughfares of it may become broad and straight, although the ramifying passages may still remain a little intricate. The principle of partnership liability has been among the vexed questions. It made Waugh v. Carver a leading case seventy or eighty years ago, and, notwithstanding this leading case, it took Cox v. Hickman to the House of Lords in 1860. In Waugh v. Carver, 2 Sm. L. C., the Lord Chief Justice (Eyre) held that he who took a moiety of the profits indefinitely should, by operation of law, be made liable to losses if losses arose; upon the principle that by taking a part of the profits he took from the creditors a part of that fund which was the proper security to them for payments. But in Cox v. Hickman, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 185, on the question whether creditors under an old business, parties to a deed of arrangement, were liable as partners on bills accepted by the trustees constituted by the deed to carry on a new business formed out of the old one, and to pay those creditors from the profits—on which question the Judges of the Court of Exchequer had been equally divided, and there was the same difference of opinion between the Judges who advised the House of Lords—the Lord Chancellor (Campbell) was of opinion that the creditors could only be liable on the supposition that the person who wrote the acceptance on the bills of exchange was their mandatory for that purpose, and that they had not, by executing the deed, so authorized the trustees as their agents. Lord Wensleydale put the principle of partnership liability very distinctly. If two agreed that they should carry on a trade and share the profits of it, each was a principal and each an agent for the other, and each was bound by the other's contracts in carrying on the trade, as much as a single principal would be by the act of an agent who was to give the whole of the profits to his employer. Hence it became the test of liability of one for the contract of another, that he was to receive the whole or a part of the profits arising from that contract by virtue of the agreement made at the time of the employment. He believed that was the true principle of partnership liability. Perhaps the maxim, "ought to bear the loss," often stated in the earlier cases, as Waugh v. Carver, was only the consequence, not the cause, why a man was made liable as a partner.

Agency, then, according to the judgment of the House of Lords, is the cause of partnership liability; taking the profits is a test of agency; and bearing the loss a consequence of the agency. But Stuart, V.C., in Sawyer v. Goodwin, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 623, considered that, in questions of liability, to rest the relation of partners upon the principle of agency might, perhaps, not be a very perfect mode of describing the principle upon which that liability depended; but, as far as it went, it was accurate enough. The case before him was where a firm of solicitors were employed by a client to negotiate an advance for him on mortgage, and the partner who conducted the transaction furnished to the mortgagee's solicitor an abstract which suppressed prior mortgages known to the partner; on the title made by which abstract the mortgage was completed. One of the partners died worth considerable property, and afterwards the persons interested in the mortgage claimed to be indemnified out of his estate for the loss occasioned by the suppression. Against the claim it was argued that the deceased partner was innocent of the fraud, and that, if fraud were imputed against the partner who acted in the mortgage, relief must be against him personally. But the Vice-Chancellor put the matter on the footing of profit. It was not, he said, suggested that the profit to be derived from the making out and delivery ef the abstract was for the separate benefit of the partner, or that it was to be applied in any other way except as ordinary partnership profits. Although the mortgage was created through the agency of the partner in London, where he had the sole management of the business of the firm, the Vice Chancellor thought it was impossible, upon the "well-understood principles" of the law of partnership, to say that it was not a partnership transaction, and that the partners one and all were not liable for the breach of professional duty which had been committed. To say, as the Vice-Chancellor said, that the view taken by the House of Lords of the foundation of partnership liability was not a perfect mode of describing the principle on which the liability depended, was, in fact, to imply that there was some other foundation, which could only be participation of profit. But, as we have seen, such participation was not regarded by the House of Lords as fundamental or causative, but as a test of the existence of the foundation or cause.

The profit principle is scarcely consistent with the important distinction between the cases where money is left in the hands of one of a firm of solicitors generally for investment, and where it is left for an investment then in contemplation. Thus in Harman v. Johnson, 2 Ell. & Bl. 67, Wightman, J., thought that in the absence of evidence that the firm acted generally as scriveners, the mere effect of their being solicitors would not make one partner liable for the act of another, unless upon evidence that the money was deposited in order to be invested in the particular mortgage. Solicitors might, in the opinion also of Crompton, J., often become liable for non-investment by their partners, where the partnership was in the habit of carrying on business on what might be called a general commission, but they did not necessarily act under such a general commission. They might, however, as incidental to their business as solicitors, receive money for the purpose of laying it out upon a certain mortgage, so as to be liable on the transaction.

This distinction was the ground of the decision in the earlier case of Blair v. Bromley, 2 Ph. 354, and in the latter cases of Bourdillon v. Roche, 6 W. R. 618, and Eager v. Barnes, 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 408. In the first case, on a representation by one of a firm of solicitors to trustees that he had an available mortgage, the trustees furnished him with money for the purpose of the investment, which, however, was never made, while the contrary was represented to the clients. Lord Cottenham held that the other partner was liable, for the duty of laying out the money was in the ordinary course of the business of the firm. What, asked Lord Cottenham, was the nature of the liability which arose from the misrepresentation? Merely a guarantee that the parties whose interest might be affected by the misrepresentation should be placed in the same situation as if the fact were true. The misrepresentation was probably made for a fraudulent purpose; but the consequence was a mere civil liability; and as one partner might certainly bind another as to any matter within the limits of their joint business, so he might by an act which, though not constituting a contract by itself, was in equity considered as having all the consequences of one. Eager v. Barnes was a similar case, similarly decided by Lord Romilly. But in Bourdillon v. Roche, where the solicitors of trustees, who had been employed in making an investment for them on mortgage, received the interest, and afterwards, acting for the trustees in a sale of the property by the mortgager, received the mortgage money, which was left in their hands, the partner who attended to the business of this sale was held not to be liable on a fraudulent misrepresentation, made subsequently to the trustees by the other partner, that the firm had made a new investment of the money on another mortgage recommended by him. The receipt of the money in this case by the firm was not in view of that particular mortgage, but for the purpose of investment generally, and therefore not within the scope of a solicitor's business.

If the theory of partnership liability is agency, the liability of one of the partners for the fraud of the other cannot be regarded as settled by decision any more than, we should submit, it is settled by principle. In the Mercantile Law the author, learned not by courtesy, remarks, with his caution, that "the principal has been thought to be responsible, not merely for the negligence, but for the deliberate fraud of his agent committed in the execution of his employment, though without the principal's authority; as, for instance, by selling false jewels for true ones;" and he quotes the reason given by Lord Holt, that some one must be the loser, and he who confides in the deceiver ought, rather than a stranger, to be such loser. But in the Exchequer, in Udell v. Atherton, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 797, on a sale by an agent of a log of mahogany represented by him as sound, with a fraudulent concealment of a defect and an action of deceit brought against the principal, the court was equally divided; Pollock, C.B., and Wilde, B., holding that the principal was liable; but Martin and Bramwell, BB., the contrary. Bramwell, B., looked on the fraud as no part of the sale; no part of the contract—it was collateral to it; and thought that Lord Holt's reason affected the purchaser more than the principal. He reviewed all the authorities, ending with Wilde v. Gibson in the House of Lords. In like manner Martin, B., argued that the agent was not authorized to make the misrepresentation respecting the state of the log; and all that the principal did was to authorize him to sell it honestly. No doubt the principal afforded the occasion on which the fraudulent misrepresentation was made, but he did nothing more.

Besides the opportunity of misappropriation by a member of a solicitor's firm as to mortgage money, cases have occurred of a like danger relating to money in court. Thus, in Brydges v. Branfill, 12 Sim. 369, on a sale of estates under the direction of the court, the tenant for life obtained an order for payment out of part of it to him by fraud, to which the member of the firm who acted for him in the suit was privy. The Vice-Chancellor decreed all the members of the firm liable. Upon "general principles," with respect to liability, he could not distinguish the innocent members from the peccant members. They were all of them solicitors and officers of the court, and the court could not regard any division of labour as among themselves, but must look upon the act of the partnership towards the court as the act of all and every of them. The safety of the public required this. Todd v. Studholme, 3 K. & J. 324, was a case of the same descriptiou.

The doctrine of partnership in fraud falls with peculiar hardship on solicitors, owing to the confidential relation subsisting between a partner and the client, whose business is attended to by him, and the largeness, in many instances, of the interests involved.

It is a standing tribute to the profession that, holding as they do men's fortunes and good names in their hands, they habitually deal with both as faithful stewards, and that an unjust steward in the law is seldom found. In one sense their interest in ascertaining the true bounds of partnership liability is small, but in another it is great. Notwithstanding, then, the cases above noticed supporting the doctrine of liability for a partner's fraud, we venture to think that when partnership liability is rested on agency, as after Cox v. Hickman, and in the interest of jurisprudence, it should be rested, considerable doubt arises whether the foundation of all those cases is not sapped. The operation of law which would attach on an innocent person liability for the moral fraud of another, because those persons have agreed to share between them the profits of business, meaning, of course, honest business, and because the fraud is committed in the business, is repugnant to reason as well as to morals. Fraud is in its nature personal. There can be no technical participation in it. It is altogether out of the region of partnership.

Digitized by Google

OUR JUDICIAL SYSTEM.—No. I.

There are few topics (if we except Parliamentary Reform, perhaps none) to which public attention has been of late so eagerly or so ignorantly directed, as the reform of our judicial system. Commencing with the scheme, now happily abandoned, of simply adding an extra judge to each of the superior courts of common law, and bringing forward in turn almost every possible proposition except that which seems to us obviously the right one, the Government have for many months been vainly endeavouring to discover, and the opposition lawyers as vainly endeavouring to suggest, some possible scheme for facilitating the administration of justice. The united efforts of all the "big wigs" in and out of Parliament have culminated in the production of three measures, all of which will, we presume, in due time, receive the royal assent; of which it is not perhaps too much to say that two are positively prejudicial, and the three at any rate of very doubtful benefit.

The proposed alterations in the Court of Chancery reproduce or exaggerate two of the most serious defects in the old system, viz., the entrusting of judicial functions to subordinates, and the appeals to a single judge.

There are, we take it, three cardinal defects in our present system of Chancery practice, no one of which is in the least alleviated by the proposed changes, whilst the accumulation of arrears in chambers and in the appellate court are to be removed simply by deteriorating the quality of the tribunal in each case;—

"Et propter vitam, vivendi perdere causas."

The public desire rapid justice, and it is proposed to make it rapid by making it less trustworthy than at present. The absurdity of endeavouring to meet the want of judicial power in Chancery—the fact that there are more questions of law arising there than the judges can decide on the present system by an increase in the staff of clerks, has been ably exposed by our contemporary the Saturday Review, in an article which forcibly points that the inevitable result of the measure will be to reproduce the old system of masters, without indeed the delay which used to take place in the masters' offices, but with all the other evils of that essentially vicious system aggravated and intensified.

The vice in the proposed alteration in the constitution of the Court of Appeal, though different, is not less grave; we scarcely know any system more calculated to produce uncertainty—more sure to bring the administration of justice, if not the law itself, into contempt, than the practice of appeals from one judge to one judge, except in the cases where there is a manifest and necessary difference in the status and qualifications of the judges in question. An appeal from a county court judge to a Vice-Chancellor, or to a single Common Law judge is unobjectionable, because there is a presumption, from the mere relative position of the judges, that the appellate court is the stronger; but in an appeal from a Vice-Chancellor to the Lord Chancellor or to a single Lord Justice (apart from any consideration of the personnel of the judges who, for the time being, may fill these offices), there is no such presumption, because the qualifications of the judges are identical, the difference in their status is purely official; for example, and we purposely avoid all reference to any present occupant of the bench, what weight would have been attached to a judgment of Lord Truro or Lord Campbell reversing a judgment of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, or of the late Lord Justice Turner when Vice-Chancellor? And yet, whether this has or not in effect happened, there is no improbability in the suggestion. It is matter of notoriety that the question which of two particular judges should be the one entitled to reverse the decrees of the other has depended more than once, and that at no distant period, not on any question of their relative judicial fitness, but simply on the greater or less weight which a particular nobleman had in the Cabinet. An appeal court, consisting of a single Lord Justice (which is now proposed as a remedy for the arrears in the appeal court), is, in three important particulars, the very worst court of appeal which would be created; rivalling in all its defects the old abolished appellate jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench, and differing from that system only for the worse.

There are, we take it, three qualifications necessary for a good Court of Appeal. First—The judges should be of the highest class. Secondly—They should be as numerous as possible. Thirdly—The constitution of the court should be as varied as is consistent with due attention to the other two requisites. The existing Court of Appeal in Chancery possesses the first requisite only, and, relatively speaking, does not possess even that, the judges of that court not being selected from any higher class than the judges of first instance. Indeed, as these latter are, and ought to be, themselves of the very first class, it would be simply impossible that any such difference should exist.*

We have said that there are three grave defects in our present Chancery system—by these we mean:—first, the large extent to which judicial functions are exercised by "deputy judges," i. e., the chief clerks; secondly, the small number of judges (one or two as the case may be) who sit to decide important questions of law; thirdly, the constitution of the Court of Appeal.

All these evils might, we think, be greatly mitigated, if not removed, by the adoption of a sounder system, to which we have never heard any sounder objection urged than that it is "new;" an objection not, we think, entitled to any very great weight.

In order to this, however, it is essential that the proposed Civil Law court should not be constituted, and we think that there are good reasons why it should not. True, it contains some elements of good, and if the present system of exclusive and divided jurisdiction is to be continued, it supplies perhaps the readiest means of stopping the gap at present felt in the ranks of the common law judges. But, then, this very exclusive jurisdiction is itself an evil, as it tends to beget narrow and exclusive views of particular branches of the law, and moreover bandies the suitor about from court to court, to the great prejudice of the interests of justice, and in complete opposition to that "fusion" for which all men appear to long, though none seem to know how it is to be attained. Besides, this court, if constituted, would perpetuate an unnatural division and not less unnatural conjunction. The only true ground for distinct jurisdiction is, as has been well pointed out by Mr. Arthur Houston, a difference of procedure; and the proposed court will, if constituted, have jurisdiction over a variety of subjects requiring very different procedure, while it will withdraw those subjects from the cognizance of the courts whose procedure is strictly fitted to them respectively; and all this for no better reason than that the old-abolished ecclesiastical courts had managed, in the general scramble of jurisdiction in the seventeenth century, to keep exclusive hold upon these particular classes of cases.

The proceedings in matrimonial cases are almost exclusively issues of fact or simple questions of law between two parties, and the judgments in such cases are simple, and capable of being reduced to a few unvarying forms, and no administrative process (properly so called) is ever required; that is to say, the proceedings are essentially analogous to those of an ordinary action at law. The probate proceedings, on the other hand, are also exclusively administrative, and disputed issues of fact are comparatively few, the vast majority of questions of doubt being decided by the judge on motion; that is to say, the proceedings are very analogous to those of a suit in equity of the simpler sort, and require no machinery not already to be found in the Court of Chancery.

* We speak, of course, of the constitution of the court. We desire to repeat that we do not refer, directly or indirectly, to the personnel of the Bench as at present constituted.

The proceedings in Admiralty are of a mixed class ; and while we think that the majority of collision suits are fitter for the determination of a jury of seamen than for any other tribunal, there are various administration questions of different kinds, which require a machinery not now to be found in a court of common law. It would perhaps be best to leave the present commonest jurisdiction, simply transferring the general jurisdiction of the Court to the Court of Equity, but empowering the Common Law Courts to entertain proceedings in rem against the ship in any case where an action can now be maintained against the owner. By this scheme we place three judges at the disposal of the country—for it is clear that on the present system it will require not less than three judges to do the work—and, having regard to the division of jurisdiction already mentioned we propose to allot two of these to the Equity Bench, one to that of Common Law.

We should propose, in the next place, to abolish the Court of Appeal altogether. We quite agree with Sir Roundell Palmer that intermediate courts of appeal are, provided always that the Court of first instance is well constituted, a mistake, and that—from this qualification—the sooner we get rid of them, both at law and in equity, the better. The Lords Justices, thus rendered functi officio, we propose to replace by two vice-chancellors (subject, of course, to any rights of the existing judges) but without any corresponding increase in the number of courts or chambers or clerks.

Lastly, we would abolish the London Court of Bankruptcy, transferring its jurisdiction to the Court of Chancery, and substituting for the three commissioners (subject to existing rights) two vice-chancellors.

We could thus have, when the proposed changes were completed, ten equity judges besides the Lord Chancellor, whose united cost to the country would not exceed that of the judges whom they are intended to replace.

The question how to employ these judges, together with the corresponding amendments of the common law system, must be reserved for a future number.—Solicitors' Journal.

A NEW EDITION OF THE STATUTE BOOK.

A Bill repealing, wholly or in part, some 1,300 acts of Parliament, has just passed swiftly, and almost without remark, through both Houses, and received the Royal assent on Monday last. Such a fact as this is, to the lawyer of the old school, nothing less than a terrible portent. It is true, he says, that all these condemned acts are alleged to be obsolete; but is this really the case, and how is one to be sure of it? A single stone can hardly be displaced, in the complicated structure of English law, without dislocating some portion of it which we would willingly leave untouched. It is still less likely, he argues, that 1,300 blocks can in one operation be pulled out of different parts of the building, without causing its utter ruin; which indeed becomes a certainty when we remember that the operation just performed is but the last of a series, the effect of which has been to withdraw more than 3,000 pieces from the fabric of our jurisprudence. To the majority, however, of the legal profession, and probably to all persons who take the trouble to reflect upon the matter, this operation is one of the greatest legal reforms which have ever been effected in England; and, being strongly of this way of thinking ourselves, we propose to state briefly what it is that has just been accomplished, and in what manner the results thus obtained may be turned to the best advantage.

Acts of Parliament are at present classed practically under two heads—1, "Public General;" 2, "Public Local and Personal, and Private." The first are what are generally known as "the Statutes," and occupy usually from forty-five to eighty-five volumes, according to the size and completeness of the edition. The second kind extend to about 400 folio volumes, and are to be found in a collected form only in very large public libraries. The distinction between the two classes of statutes is entirely arbitrary, depending merely upon the fact that those composing Class I. were introduced into Parliament at the public expense, and those in Class II at the expense of private persons or bodies. It happens, however, that this merely arbitrary distinction coincides, though not very accurately, with one that is most essential. While Class II., with very few exceptions, contains only statutes which alter the rights of definite individuals, Class I. comprises nearly all those which affect the whole population, and thus deserve a place in the general body of law.

It is not very important that acts of the second class should be arranged in any sort of order, or should be made easily accessible as a whole. The general public is no more concerned with them than with the title-deeds of individual proprietors, or the charters of particular corporations, which are in many respects very similar in their nature to private Acts of Parliament. It is enough if each person has in his own possession such documents of this nature as may affect himself, and can produce them whenever it may be necessary. It is far otherwise with the so-called "Public General" statutes which are comprised in Class I. They contain rules with which it is as necessary that every citizen should be acquainted as with the maxims of the common law. It is therefore highly desirable that these statutes should be well arranged and clearly expressed, that such of them as are repealed should be easily distinguishable from such as remain in force, and that they should be published in as cheap and convenient a form as possible; and this not only that the people at large may have a chance of acquiring some acquaintance with the laws which they are expected to know and to obey, but also that the Legislature may be enabled to discover readily what is the actual state of things which it is from time to time called upon to alter or amend.

Now it is well known that the existing collections of so-called Public General statutes are as far as possible from fulfilling these requirements. In the first place, the volumes in which they are contained preserve dead law as well as living. Acts long ago repealed are in no way distinguishable from those which are in full force, and many which are wholly inapplicable to the present state of society are, or rather were but a few weeks since, still nominally operative. To these causes is mainly due the intolerable bulk of our Statute-book. Indeed their mischievous effect was perceived even as early as the time of Edward VI., who says that he could wish that, when time should serve, "the superfluous and tedious statutes were brought into one sum together, and made more plain and short, to the intent that men might better understand them." The evil became, however, far more serious in later times, as may be readily inferred from the fact that in an edition of the statutes from Henry III. to 21 & 22 Victoria, in forty-one volumes, no less than twenty-three volumes are filled with Acts passed subsequently to the Union; and of the 6,887 Acts comprised in these twenty-three volumes, 3,523 are no longer in operation.

Measures have, however, at length been taken to remedy this state of things. Lord Cranworth, in 1854, obtained the appointment of the Statute Law Commission, under whose direction a careful register was made of all repealed statutes; but this register left untouched a vast number of acts which, though unrepealed, were practically obsolete. That these have been carefully catalogued and then expressly repealed is due to Lord Westbury. In 1860, as Attorney-General, he announced that Mr. Reilly and Mr. Wood had been engaged to carry out the work, and their labours have resulted in three "expurgation Acts," as they are called, by which, as before mentioned, about three thousand obsolete enactments have been swept out of the Statute book. Lord Westbury, in introducing the measure, stated that it was undertaken with a view to a revised and greatly abbreviated edition of the statutes; and Lord Chelmsford has accordingly, in moving the second reading of the final expurgation Act, announced that such an edition may be expected at no very distant date. It is to be comprised in six or seven volumes, and is to be accompanied by a complete classified index. The subsequent annual volumes of the statutes are to be provided with similar indices. Such an edition would no doubt prove a very great boon both to the profession and the public. It would contain all the living statute law, weeded of all that is obsolete and dead, and would certainly not extend beyond ten volumes. The proposed indices would also be of the greatest service. But when we have said this, we have said all that can be said of the superiority of the new edition over those which now exist. The new edition will contain no dead law, and will be comprised in a comparatively small compass; but still greater improvements are within our reach.

In the first place, the present would be a favourable opportunity for the adoption of a more rational system of classifying the statutes than that which now prevails. The cardinal distinction ought evidently to be between those which impose general rules of conduct, and those which only affect the rights of definite individuals. These classes should be called "Public" and "Private" respectively, and the accidental circumstance of the mode in which acts are introduced into Parliament should no longer be allowed to determine the class to which they are to be assigned. To the "Private" class should be relegated all those acts which, though really of "local and personal" character, are now, because they happen to be passed at the public expense, classed as "Public General." How little they answer to such a description will appear from a few instances culled from the so-called Public General statutes of last Session. One of these exempts Mr. Forsyth from such penal consequences as he may have incurred by sitting as a member of Parliament while holding a certain place of profit under the Crown. Several others confirm, and embody at great length, certain provisional orders, such as an order of the Home Secretary enabling the West Hove Improvement Commissioners, acting under their private Act, to effect minute improvements in the streets of that pleasant suburb of Brighton. After this rectification of frontier between the "Public" and "Private" statutes, it would be desirable that the two collections should be issued, as usual, every year; but the Statute-book about to be published by Government should be far from comprising all even of the statutes which are distinctly of a public character. Two kinds of really public acts are passed every year which are quite unsuited for a place in a permanent body of law—namely, those which are of annual recurrence, such as the Mutiny and Supply Acts, and those which are passed for a definite purpose, and whose operation is exhausted when that purpose is accomplished, such as acts to dower a princess, or to enable the Government to build a new National Gallery. If all the acts to which we have objected as unsuitable were omitted from the revised edition, it would contain none but true general laws, but it would still contain many laws which are of little use to the English lawyer, because they operate exclusively in India, the Colonies, Ireland, or Scotland. What is required is not one collection of the heterogeneous laws by which these widely different localities are governed, but distinct collections of the statutes affecting the various kingdoms and dependencies which are subject to the British Crown. Perhaps the most convenient arrangement would be the following:—The first and most important collection would contain only statutes operative in England; the second, only those operative in Scotland; the third, those operative in Ireland; while the fourth would contain all those which relate to India, the Colonies, and the Slave-trade.

To sum up what has been advanced, the annual volumes of statutes should for the future be distinguished as Public and Private; and the line between the two classes should be drawn in accordance with a logical principle. The revised edition about to be issued by the Government should be relieved, not only, as is already proposed, of all dead laws, but also of all which are not really of a general nature, and of all which, from their limited effect, may be described as "annual acts," or as mere "legislative warrants." The residuum should be divided into four separate works, which might be distinguished as the "English," the "Scotch," the "Irish," and the "Imperial" statutes respectively. An edition compiled upon these principles would be much less bulky and much more convenient than that announced by the Government, nor need it occupy more than two or three months longer in preparation. Such an edition would also be a step in the direction of a statute code; into which statute law, expressed as it already is in distinct propositions, might be with very little difficulty converted, without waiting for the application of a similar process to the common law. For the first step towards such a code must be the selection of such statutes as are fitted for a place in it—in other words, statutes which are not only still in force, but are also of a really general and permanent character.

The scheme of the Government is apparently to arrange the new edition in a merely chronological order; and this would probably, in the first instance, be the best plan. Much time would, at any rate, be lost if the measure were now delayed till a really philosophical system of arrangement had been devised, and till the acts and fragments of acts had been distributed according to such a system. What the profession and the public require, and what they ought to have in their hands a year hence, is a perfectly complete edition, in about three volumes, of all the general and permanent statutes operative in England which are now in force.—Saturday Review.

THE LAW OF COMPENSATION FOR INJURIOUS AFFECTION UNDER THE RAILWAY AND LANDS CLAUSES ACTS.

The judgments delivered in the House of Lords in the important case of Rickets v. The Metropolitan Railway, are reported in a recent number of the Weekly Reporter (15 W. R. 937). We, therefore, take this opportunity of commenting upon the law of "injurious affection," of which this case is the most important development, at a time when it is probably being studied by our readers. We share the regret which Lord Westbury so pathetically expresses at the state in which the law was left by the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber, and also that which he no doubt felt not less acutely, but which modesty prevented him from expressing, that in the result, his opinion in the matter should have been overruled. We cannot, however, say that we should have been glad to see his judgment entirely adopted by the House of Lords. It would have been most unfortunate that the rule that an injurious affection in the statute means an injury for which, but for the Act of Parliament making it lawful, an action would have lain, should have been entirely and unreservedly abrogated. This rule has been laid down on the highest authority, is constantly acted on, and is taken as the test in many other doubtful claims for compensation besides that for trade profits. In all of these the law would have been unsettled, if the reasons given by Lord Westbury for reversing this judgment had been adopted by the House. Whether that rule might not, with advantage, have been modified so as to go merely to this extent—that in cases where there would have been no remedy, either by action or other proceeding, no compensation was meant to be given—and thus, to preserve the present rule, excluding claims for compensation for mere amenities—is an important, and perhaps doubtful, question. To abrogate the rule entirely would, we think, not only have been unnecessary for the purpose of deciding Rickets' case in his favour, but would have interfered with a right decision in other cases. It seems to us that, without going as far as Lord Westbury did, there were ample grounds for reversing the decision of the majority of the judges in the Exchequer Chamber, and for establishing—as the Lord Chancellor as well as Sir William Erle was so anxious to do—a precise and definite rule. This, owing to Lord Westbury's differing in opinion, and some difficulties which arise from the Lord Chancellor and Lord Cranworth not entirely agreeing, has not, we think, been done; but, as the failure calls peremptorily for the interference of the Legislature, we can scarcely say we regret it.

Perhaps the most noticeable point in the judgments is, that Chamberlain's case, 11 W. R. 472, is upheld, and on the ground of distinction pointed out by Erle, C.J., in delivering the judgment in Rickets' case in the Exchequer Chamber. This is that in Chamberlain's case the frontage was altered, so that, instead of fronting an important street, the houses were made to front a kind of back alley. In fact the road was the same as before, but it was blocked up at the end by the railway, so as to cease to be a thoroughfare for carriages, and was only a thoroughfare for foot-passengers by their going up some steps opposite the houses and so on to the substituted road, which crossed the railway by a bridge. There it was admitted that it was a natural and immediate consequence of the alteration that the property would be less valuable for business purposes, and that the owner might be compensated for this expected future loss of profit. In Rickets' case the street immediately in front of the house was left the same as before, but, owing to an obstruction at the end of the street, over which people had to pass by a bridge, the traffic along it was found, after the event, to be actually as much altered as if it had been converted into a back alley. Here it is said—True the people do not come; but, as they might do so, their not coming is not the natural and immediate consequence of what the company have done: so that here, although the loss had actually happened, and was not merely expected as in the other case, it is held that no compensation can be claimed.

It is a natural and direct consequence that few persons will pass along a street in consequence of its being blocked up by an embankment, over which there is no outlet, though there is one by some steps at the side; yet it is a remote and indirect consequence that few persons do pass when the obstruction consists of a hoarding with a foot bridge over it. This is the distinction which it was so distressing to Lord Westbury to be told that the Judges of the Common Pleas and Exchequer had failed to understand.

We are not surprised at his feelings, but we must confess to a greater obtuseness than that attributed to the learned judges in question. They only failed to find out the distinction, we fail to see it when it is pointed out.

Of course there might happen to be a difference made by the statute between an obstruction by the temporary and by the permanent works, but the only one suggested is that pointed out by Lord Westbury, which makes the claim stronger and not weaker in the case of the temporary works. It ought also to be remembered that in order to arrive at this startling result the Lord Chancellor was compelled to overrule Wilkes's case, 2 Bing. N. C. 281, which has been law since 1835, where an action was actually maintained for this very class of damage. That case has never been objected to, except in these cases of compensation, where the point incidentally arises. It has been the law in this country for more than thirty years; it has been quoted with approval in America, and is stated in Sedgwick on Damages to lay down what is now the law in the American courts. The objection to this case is founded entirely on the doctrine of remoteness of damage, a doctrine unsatisfactory in many of its applications, especially to actions of tort, and in none more so than in this. For it must be remembered that in the question whether an action is maintainable for the obstruction of a highway there is no question of the existence of the right or wrong involved. It is merely a question of the appropriate remedy for enforcing the right and redressing the wrong. If the damage sustained is common to all the Queen's subjects, then it is the business of any one who complains to proceed by indictment, and get the obstruction removed for the benefit of others as well as himself. If, however, he has sustained some particular damage, he may sue to recover it. Surely if the value of a man's property to let or to sell is diminished, that is damage particular to him and not common to all the Queen's subjects, for which, therefore, he ought to be allowed to bring an action. And if he does not happen to want to let or sell his property, but occupies it himself in its less valuable state, making less profit out of it than he would have done but for the obstruction, the damage he has sustained is quite as much peculiar to himself and as little shared by the rest of the Queen's subjects. Nor does the damage seem to be at all more remote in the one case than in the other. We think that all persons who are in the habit of referring to the cases quoted in judgments which they read, or who are acquainted with the particular cases here referred to, will be somewhat surprised at the prominence given by the Lord Chancellor and Lord Cranworth to the case of The King v. The London Dock Company, 5 A. & E. 163. That case was not only, as they both incidentally remark, decided upon a statute differently worded from the Railway Clauses Act, but the decision was expressly founded on that form of expression which constitutes the most important difference. The Dock Act contemplated that what was authorized to be done would not cause damage, but provided that if, contrary to expectation, damage was done, compensation should be paid. This, said the Court, shows that there was to be no compensation for such damage as must necessarily be done, and must have been foreseen. The Railway Clauses Act, on the other hand, contemplates that damage will be done, directs that as little as possible shall be done, and says that what is done is to be paid for. The Lord Chancellor says that in The King v. The London Docks it was held that the consequential damage was too remote to be the subject of an action. In fact, any one who reads the end of the judgment will see that just the contrary was held, viz., that the consequence was so direct and immediate as to be necessarily legalized by the Act of Parliament.

We think, therefore, that it would have been much more satisfactory if the House of Lords had decided that Rickets might have maintained an action for the injury and depreciation in value of his property, and that on this ground he was entitled to compensation. We say depreciation in value, for we see no difference between temporary depreciation by temporary works and permanent depreciation by permanent works. One is a diminution of value let, the other of value to sell.

It will be noticed that, while the Lord Chancellor says that Rickets could not have maintained an action at all, Lord Cranworth only says that if he could, it would not have been for an injury to his property, but to himself as occupier. There may, therefore, yet be some uncertainty whether Wilkes's case (ubi sup) is overruled.

We think we have said enough about this case to justify our proposition that the interference of the Legislature is peremptorily called for, in order to put this branch of the law in a more satisfactory condition. We must defer to another occasion our observations on the nature and extent of the interference called for.—Solicitors' Journal.

LORD JUSTICE TURNER.

We record with much regret the death of Sir George James Turner, the senior Lord Justice of Appeal, which took place at his residence in London on the night of Tuesday, the 9th inst. His illness was of but short duration, and at first excited no alarm among his friends until very shortly before his decease. Until ten days before his death he continued to perform his duties in court. Subsequently the affection assumed the character of bronchitis, which, before Sunday, the 7th, developed into congestion of the lungs. On that day, though seriously ill, there was no anticipation of immediate danger, and Lord Chelmsford was admitted to his chamber to see him, although he was forbidden to converse. From that moment he appears gradually to have sunk until Tuesday night, when Lady Turner, who was absent, returned only to find that his death had taken place an hour previously to her arrival.

Sir George James Turner, born on the 5th February, 1798, was the youngest but one of the twelve children of the Rev. Richard Turner, B.D., Incumbent of Great Yarmouth, by his second wife Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Rede, Esq. The family of Turner were settled, for many generations, at Keningham, in Norfolk; one of them, Francis Turner, born in 1662, and bred to the law, settled at Yarmouth, and became town clerk of that place; was a person of great literary attainments, and was the intimate friend of the poet Crabbe, by whose son, in the preface to his edition of the poet's works, he is spoken of in the highest terms of commendation.

On the mother's side Sir George Turner was descended from Sir Robert Naunton, Secretary of State to James I., and author of Fragmenta Regalia, and from his wife Mary, grand-daughter of Sir Edward Coke, Lord Chief Justice of England, through whose wife Bridget, the daughter of John Paston, Esq., Sir George Turner was also descended from the ancient Norfolk family of that name, and from William Paston, Judge of the Common Pleas temp. Henry VI.

Sir George Turner was educated at Charterhouse, of which foundation he was a governor at the time of his death. He was a member of Pembroke College, Cambridge, of which his uncle, Dr. Joseph Turner, Dean of Norwich, and formerly the tutor of William Pitt, was then the master. In 1819 he took his degree as eighth wrangler, and afterwards became a fellow of his College. His name having been entered at Lincoln's-inn, he became a pupil of the late Lord Cottenham, and was called to the bar in 1821. Shortly after he edited a volume of Chancery Reports in conjunction with the late James Russell, Esq., Q.C. In May, 1840, he became a Q.C. simultaneously with Mr. Bethell, now Lord Westbury, who was two years his junior. In July, 1847, he was elected M.P. for Coventry, and retained his seat until April, 1851, when he was appointed Vice-Chancellor, soon after which he received the honour of knighthood, and was made a Privy Councillor. In January, 1853, he was appointed one of the Lord Justices of Appeal, in succession to Lord Cranworth, who became Chancellor.

Digitized by Google

Besides being a governor of the Charterhouse, he was a Bencher of Lincoln's-inn and a Fellow of the Royal Society, and had received the honorary degree of D.C.L. of the University of Oxford.

As a member of the House of Commons, Sir George Turner introduced and carried the measure known as Sir George Turner's Act, which, with other minor improvements upon the cumbrous practice of that day, enabled the Court of Chancery to decide, upon a special case, questions in which the parties were agreed upon the facts. To him also in a great degree, as a member of the Chancery Commission, are due many of the great improvements in the practice of the court which were effected in 1852; and he may be said to have been the father of the present chamber practice in Chancery.

He married, in 1823, Louisa, the daughter of Edward Jones, Esq., of Brackiey, in Northamptonshire, by whom he had six sons and three daughters, who, with Lady Turner, all survive him.

As a judge Sir George Turner cannot be better described than in the words which Lord Chelmsford addressed to the Bar on Wednesday morning:—"The unvarying kindness and courtesy which he showed to every one, his devoted and patient attention to every case brought before him, and the anxious care with which he worked out his judgments, which were always full and satisfactory, will never be forgotten; and I am sure that there is hardly anyone connected with the Court of Chancery who does not feel that he has almost lost a personal friend in that most amiable and estimable man, and upright and conscientious judge."

When we call to mind the remarks he made respecting Sir James Lewis Knight Bruce, his late colleague, whom he survived but a few months, of the perfect harmony existing between them during the long period they had sat together, we cannot but attribute this to the great personal qualities possessed in so eminent a degree by the judge whose loss we now mourn.

It may not be inopportune to add that an elder brother of Sir George Turner, namely, Mr. Francis Turner, who died in 1864, also contained considerable eminence as a conveyancer, and was a Bencher of the Inner Temple; and another brother, Mr. C. R. Turner, has for many years been a Master of the Court of Queen's Bench.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

DIVORCE PRACTICE.—The fact that a husband's safety is not endangered by the wife's cruelty, including acts of personal violence, is no bar to his obtaining relief in judicial separation. In such a case the court will look, in the interest of the wife herself as well as the husband, to the danger of his being provoked to retaliate, and will not, by refusing to interfere, drive the husband to the necessity of meeting force by force: (Forth v. Forth, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 574. Div.)

SYMBOLIC DELIVERY.—The Court of Ex. Ch. has affirmed the well-known decision of the C. P. in Meyerstein v. Barber. Martin B. said: The 11 Vict., c. 18, s. 5, provides that till the lien for freight is disposed of the wharfinger shall not give up the goods. There are two symbols of the goods, the bill of lading and the wharfinger's certificate, and until the certificate is given the bill of lading gives the goods as far as they can be given, and any one who had the bill of lading endorsed to him would be entitled to hold the goods against any person claiming under Abraham. I think that the judgment of the Court of C.P. was perfectly right: (16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 570.)

CONTRACT FOR COTTON TO ARRIVE.—By a contract for the purchase of cotton to arrive, guaranteed equal to sample, it was agreed that should the quality prove inferior to the sample, an allowance should be made. The bulk turned out to be composed of a different kind of cotton from that in the sample, and was of no use to the buyer for the purposes he had bought it: Held (affirming the decision of the Court of C.P.), that the buyer was justified in repudiating the contract: (Azemar v. Casella, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 371. Ex. Ch.)

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ACTS OF BAILIFFS.—An execution was issued at the suit of A. The bailiff broke and entered the house and took away the goods of another person than the execution-debtor. The owner of the house and goods, Mrs. J., gave notice to the bailiff that they did not belong to the execution-debtor, and the bailiff communicated this to A. A.'s attorney wrote in reply to the bailiff:—"My client has handed me yours of the 8th inst. She thinks Mrs. J.'s claim has no foundation, but declines to give you any instructions. You will please to do what is right in the matter:" Held, that this did not render A. liable for the wrongful acts of the bailiff: (Jones v. Smith, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 609. Byles, J.)

EQUITABLE PLEADING.—To a declaration containing indebitatus counts, a plea to the following effect was held good: that after the accruing of the claim, the defendant, by and with the authority, and at the request of the plaintiffs, delivered to certain persons his promissory note, whereby he promised to pay, &c., and the said note was made, delivered, accepted, and renewed by the said persons with the authority of the plaintiffs, on account of the claim therein pleaded to, and the said persons thenceforth have been and still are holders of the said note, and entitled thereto, and to the amount thereof. Replication on equitable grounds that the said persons were and are trustees of and for the plaintiffs, of which the defendant had notice, and the said note was and is still due and unpaid; (The National Savings Bank Association v. Tranah, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 592. C. P.)

COUNT IN SLANDER.—The following count (special damage, be it observed, being alleged) was held good. It stated that the plaintiff was a gamekeeper, and was used to be in that capacity employed by the occupiers of land in the neighbourhood of a certain wood; that many of the said occupiers were accustomed to hunt foxes for recreation, and it was considered to be a very improper act to destroy foxes in the said neighbourhood, and a person destroying them would be looked upon by them with disfavour, and would not be employed; that the plaintiff was always employed as gamekeeper on the terms that he should not kill foxes; that the plaintiff had been employed as gamekeeper on the terms aforesaid by one of the said occupiers of land, and had to perform his calling in the said wood, but not to kill foxes there, and it would have been a gross breach of his duty as gamekeeper had he killed foxes there; of all which premises the defendant had notice; yet that the defendant falsely and maliciously spoke and published of the plaintiff as such gamekeeper that he had trapped three foxes in the said wood, meaning thereby that the plaintiff, whilst so employed as aforesaid, in breach of his duty, killed and destroyed three foxes in the said wood, whereby the plaintiff was greatly injured in his credit, reputation, and circumstances, and in his business of a gamekeeper, and divers of the said occupiers of lands (naming them) ceased to employ him as gamekeeper, and his profits as a gamekeeper were diminished: it would have been good without the allegation of special damage, for, although the words used were not of themselves without more shown prima facie actionable, yet the averments in the declaration, with respect to the nature of the plaintiff's business, sufficiently showed that the words used were spoken in reference to the plaintiff's business, and were such as to be prejudicial to him therein: (Foulger v. Newcombe, 16 L. T. Rep N. S. 595. Ex.)

EQUITY PRACTICE—SUITS BY DEBENTURE-HOLDERS.—It a suit instituted by a debenture-holder against a railway company, it was ordered that the proceedings in another suit commenced by an earlier debenture-holder against the company were to be stayed, and that the plaintiff, in that suit should be allowed to prove his claim under the decree made in the suit of the second debenture-holder. The Court subsequently refused with costs an application on the part of the first debenture-holder to discharge the order.

WRONGFUL DISMISSAL—JUSTIFICATION.—A traveller to a distillery company, was bound by the terms of his agreement to remit immediately all sums collected. He sold some of the company's wines to a brothel-keeper, and neglected to remit immediately, sums of money collected by him: Held, that either circumstance was sufficient to justify his dismissal without a notice: (Blenkarn v. Hodges' Distillery Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 608. Byles, J.)

COMPANY'S SERVANT—RESPONSIBILITY.—A quarrel having arisen on the premises of a railway company between a servant of the company and a number of persons, amongst whom was A.; the company's servant gave A. into custody on a charge of assaulting and obstructing him in the discharge of his duty. In an action brought by A. against the company for assault and false imprisonment: Held, that the company could not be made responsible for this act of their servant: (Lumsden v. The London and South-Western Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 609. Bramwell, B.)

WRONGFUL DISTRESS—POSSESSION.—Where the plaintiff had assigned her interest in the premises before the date of the distress, but still remained upon the premises (the person to whom her interest was assigned not having entered), it was held that she was there merely as the agent of such other person, and that she therefore could not maintain an action for distress: (Nash v. Lucas, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 610. Lush, J.)

PROBATE PRACTICE—ADMINISTRATION.—The court granted a child born within six months of the marriage administration of the goods of her deceased father. The marriage of the parties is the criterion adopted by the law, in cases of ante-nuptial generation, for ascertaining the actual parentage of the child. For this purpose it will not examine when gestation began, looking only to the recognition of it by the husband in the subsequent act of marriage: (Turnock v. Turnock, 16 L, T. Rep. N. S. 611. Prob.)

LEGITIMACY DECLARATION ACT.—The Legitimacy Declaration Act is an enabling statute, to enable persons to prove their legitimacy. The court, therefore, refused to allow a suit to be instituted on behalf of an infant, where the real object was to establish not the legitimacy, but the illegitimacy of such infant: (Re Chaplin, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 612. Div. & M.)

ACTION FOR CALLS.—To a declaration for calls the defendant pleaded that he was induced to become the holder of the shares by the fraud of the plaintiffs, and that the defendant never after he had notice of the said fraud recognized any rights or liabilities in him as a shareholder, and had never received, and would not receive, any benefit whatever from the said shares, and within a reasonable time after he had notice of the said fraud, and before he had received any benefit from or in respect of the said shares or any of them, he (the defendant) repudiated and disclaimed the said shares, and all title thereto, and all liabilities in respect thereof, and gave notice of his repudiation and disclaimer thereof to the plaintiff, and it was held a good plea: (Bwlch-y-Plwm Lead Mining Company v. Baynes, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 597. Ex.)

COMPULSORY WINDING-UP—RIGHTS OF CREDITORS.—A company passed a resolution for a voluntary winding up under supervision. The liquidator called up all the remaining unpaid capital, but declared no dividend, the only excuse given by him being that the company was prosecuting a claim against their manager. On a petition by creditors, whose debt amounted to three-fourths of the whole debts, and which had remained unpaid for a year and a half: Held, that they were entitled to an order for a compulsory winding-up: (Re Manchester Queensland Cotton Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 583. V.C.W.)

BANKRUPT CONTRIBUTORY—SET-OFF.—D. was a contributory of a company, and liable for calls upon his shares. The company was indebted to him. He executed an assignment to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. The trustees claimed the right of setting-off the calls against the debt which the company owed him: Held affirming the decision of Mr. Commissioner Winslow, that they were entitled to the set-off claimed. The case was not governed by Grissell's case (14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 443), for there the contributory was not bankrupt, and the question was accordingly one for the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, under the Companies Act, 1862; but in the case of bankruptcy the rules of that jurisdiction apply, and under the 171st section of the Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Act, 1849, the right of set-off exists: (Ex-parte Cooper, re Duckworth, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 580. Ch.)

LIABILITIES OF LEGAL PARTNERSHIP.—W., one of a firm of solicitors, fraudulently concealed from a mortgagee that a certain estate belonging to a client was incumbered. All the members of the firm except G. became insolvent. G.'s estate was held liable for the tort of W.: (Sawyer v. Goodwin, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 622. V. C. S.)

DISTRESS ON HIGHWAY.—Part of a highway near a house was paved for a cart-stand, and it was held that the landlord of the house might seize a cart standing on the paved ground as a distress for rent: (Gillingham v. Gwyer, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 640. Lush, J.)

SOVEREIGN STATE.—ACTION BY.—The United States is a Sovereign State, and as its form of government is republican, the State itself stands in the position of a foreign monarch suing in England, who sues not in his representative but individual character, for in all relations with foreign governments, the public property of his country is assumed to be vested in him. If discovery were required the State would be bound to name some person to give it: (The United States of America v. Wagner, 16 L. T. Rep. N.S. 646. Ch.)

FISHERY.—A custom to claim a licence to fish on payment of a fee is bad, because it admits that the claimant cannot lawfully fish without the leave of the owner of the fishery, and that the enjoyment is at the will of the owner and not as of right: (Mills v. The Mayor, &c., of Colchester, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 626. C. P.)

ASSAULT—MANSLAUGHTER.—A previous summary conviction for an assault is not a bar to an indictment for manslaughter founded on the same facts: (Reg. v. Morris, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 636. Cr. Cas. Res.)

WHAT IS AN INTEREST IN LAND?—An umpire, appointed under the 27th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, found by his award that a railway company had in and by the execution of their works occasioned a diminution of light to the premises of the claimant under that Act, and that the said premises were consequently rendered less convenient and suitable for the purposes and requirements of the trade or business of a wool warehouse keeper, carried on therein by the claimant, than they otherwise would have been; the damages were assessed at £656, and the umpire also found that notwithstanding this diminution of light the saleable value of the claimant's interest in the said premises was not diminished, and that, except the damage to the trade, the claimant would not sustain any damage to the premises: Held, in action upon this award by the claimant against the railway company, that these damages were awarded for injury to an interest in land within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act: Held, also, that an omission to attempt to settle the claim by a single arbitrator was no objection to the umpire's award under the 25th section: (Eagle v. Charing Cross Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 593. C. P.)

CONSTRUCTION OF WILL.—A testatrix gave to trustees £1,000 Stock in an assurance company to receive the dividends and increase, and after paying an annuity, the remainder to be laid out in Consols to accumulate during the annuitant's life, and on her death, the accumulations with the £1,000, to be equally divided between all the children of W. L. as they should attain his or her age of twenty-one years, with a gift of the residue to W. L.: Held, that the gift of the children was contingent, and that those only who were born when the eldest attained twenty-one, and attained twenty-one, could take: (Locke v. Lamb, 16 L. T. Rep., N. S. 616. V.C. M.)

WHITEHALL, JULY 18.—The Queen has been pleased by letters patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom to appoint Sir John Rolt, Knt., to be a Judge of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, in the room of the Right Hon. Sir George James Turner, Knt., deceased.—London Gazette.

THE SLADE BARONETCY.

The Slade Baronetcy case has been compromised. General Slade abandons all claims to the titles and estates, receiving from his nephew, the present inheritor, £28,000, and the amount of costs for which he had become liable in connexion with the recent extensive litigation.

NEW LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.

The Times announces that Sir Robert Phillimore has accepted the office of Judge of the Admiralty, but objects to the rumoured appointment of Dr. Deane as his successor in the office of Queen's Advocate, and urges the Government not to postpone substantial claims either to personal favour or party interests.

THE NEW JUDGE OF THE ADMIRALTY COURT.—Sir Robert John Phillimore, Q.C., who has been appointed Judge of the Court of Admiralty in the room of the Right Hon. Dr. Lushington, who has resigned, is a son of Dr. Joseph Phillimore, formerly Chancellor of the dioceses of Worcester, Oxford, and Bristol, Commissioner of the India Board, and M.P. for St. Mawes and Newport. He was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated in 1831, and took a second-class Prize in classics—among those who came out in honours at the time being Mr. W. E. Gladstone, M.P., Professor F. D. Maurice, the late Lord Herbert, and Mr. Prideaux, Q.C. In 1841 he was called to the Bar by the Middle Temple, and he was for many years a distinguished advocate in Doctors'-commons, where he was admitted as D.C.L. in 1839. In 1843 he entered the House of Commons as member for the borough of Tavistock, and retained his seat until 1847. He has held the post of Queen's Advocate since 1862, and is Judge of the Cinque Ports and Chancellor of the dioceses of Oxford, Salisbury, and Chichester. Sir Robert was married in 1844, to Charlotte, daughter of Mr. John Denison, of Ossington-hall, Newark, a sister of the Right Hon. John Evelyn Denison, M.P. (Speaker of the House of Commons), Sir William Denison, K.C.B., and the late Bishop of Salisbury.

LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANIES.

An influential deputation, representing companies whose nominal share capital exceed £20,000,000, waited on the Vice-President of the Board of Trade, on Tuesday, to urge him to proceed with the bill for amending the acts relating to limited liability companies, in accordance with the report of the committee. Mr. Cave promised that the bill for that purpose, which had been prepared, should be in the hands of members at latest on Friday, and that he would move the second reading on the first day he could find convenient.

Considerable interest has been excited in Bengal by the death of the Hon. Sumlonath Pundit, the only native yet found worthy of a seat on the bench of an Indian High Court. The deceased judge was of Cashmere origin; his family never intermarried with Bengalees, and he kept aloof from all Bengalee usages. He began life on £24 a year as a clerk, and then went to the native bar.

Judgment in the appeal of Longworth v. Yelverton will be given in the Lords on Tuesday next.

It is rumoured that the Prince of Wales will next year preside at the Press Fund dinner.

ACTION BY ADMINISTRATOR FOR TESTATOR'S SALARY.—A contract for work to be personally done by the party contracting is rescinded or determined, so far as regards the future only, by his death before its completion: but a right of action for salary in respect of services performed, which had vested in the party before his death is not thereby divested, and the administrator may sue: (Stubbs v. The Holywell Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 631. Ex.)

YEARLY HIRING.—Where a clerk is hired at a certain sum per "annum" simply, the hiring is a hiring for a year, and, in absence of a custom to the contrary, he cannot be discharged before the end of the year: (Foxall v. The International Land credit Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 637. Byles, J.

PROBATE PRACTICE.—DISCOVERY.—Where, in a testamentary suit, the real question at issue was the capacity of the testator, the Court refused an application, made on behalf of the next of kin, for the production of all papers in the handwriting of the deceased, and in the possession of the executors, the application being in substance for a discovery, and not merely for the production of scripts. Semble, that the Court of Probate has the power of discovery, but it will not exercise the power in the absence of any rule on the subject: (Peacock v. Lowe, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 641. Prob.)

No. 27.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 3, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

In a case in the Court of Bankruptcy, which is reported in our Notes of Cases last week, Judge Miller made an announcement of considerable importance to the attorneys practising in that Court. By the 372nd section of the Irish Bankrupt and Insolvent Act an attorney may appear, act, and plead in any proceeding in the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency, without being required to employ counsel; but the Judge held that the attorney so acting as an advocate should be the attorney on record, and that he could not delegate that duty to his apprentice or conducting clerk, even if that clerk was an attorney himself. The Judge referred to an English case of In re Broadhouse, decided by the Lords Justices on appeal from an order of the Commissioner of the Birmingham Bankruptcy Court, a full report of which we publish in our present number. The circumstances of that case are very peculiar, and the order of the Commissioner, refusing to hear Mr. Dale, even when retained by the bankrupt, made, as it was, immediately after the order in the former case appealed from, would (had it been made by a Chairman of a County here) have been deemed worthy of comment. We have no doubt, however, that Judge Miller is quite right in his expressed determination to uphold the statute. Cairns, L. J., in his judgment observes :—"The object of this rule was that the Court should have before it one of its own responsible officers, and, on the other hand, that the person appearing should be a person in privity with the particular suitor before the Court, and unless this chain of connexion existed the object of the Court in requiring the attendance of a solicitor was not fulfilled."

We quite agree with the foregoing observations of the learned Lord Justice, but at the same time we cannot but feel that in some cases the strictness of a rule of this kind might, with benefit to the suitors and the profession, be relaxed.

In all contentious business where an advocate is required, we have no hesitation in saying that nothing can be more improper than according permission to a clerk or other unqualified person to discuss questions of law or fact upon equal terms with professional gentlemen. Statements may be made or language used unscrupulously, and the business of the Court might be paralysed and disturbed by unseemly squabbles, which could never arise from the contentions of its responsible officers. No one is more desirous of upholding a high order of professional morality and practice in his Court than Judge Miller, and we are sure the Attorneys practising there are desirous of co-operating heartily with him in this most laudable object. There is, however, a class of routine business which, to men of arge practice, it would be a hardship to compel them to transact in person, and which, without injury to the interests of the suitors, the judge might permit to be performed by a clerk. We refer to motions of course, and other non-contentious business involving merely statements to the court, for the accuracy of which the attorney, in whose employment the clerk making the application is, should be responsible. This responsibility could be assured by a system of registration, similar to that at present existing in the Landed Estates' Court. If the Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency would make some arrangement of this kind, we feel assured that a troublesome question, which has long been a source of disturbance in this Court, would be for ever put an end to, in a manner satisfactory to all the practitioners. It is not the first time that the right of clerks to be heard in the Court has been debated. Judge Lynch, when presiding, has repeatedly stated that he would not be astute on his own part to recognize the person addressing him as disqualified by reason of his being a clerk; but that if the objection was made he would at once yield to it. This of course left to practitioners the unpleasant and invidious duty of objecting to the clerk, probably of a friend or respectable professional brother, and, consequently, it was only in rare cases that the objection was made. Some attorneys have objected that a system of registration would give clerks a status and recognition they have not yet received in the court. When regulated within proper bounds we think a recognition of this kind decidedly beneficial. Leave the duties of the advocate, and those involving the higher branches of professional skill, to the attorney. The client and the Court are entitled to this; we are sure, however, that the routine business to which we have alluded might, with convenience and advantage, be discharged by a properly qualified and respectable clerk, and thus the Judge of the Court might settle a long pending vexata quæstio in a manner satisfactory to the practitioners and the public, and without injustice to anyone.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

COUNTY COURTS ACTS AMENDMENT BILL—ENGLAND.

On clause 5, Mr. Ayrton asked whether the provisions contained in it were to apply to the Westminster Courts only, and not to other courts where high rates of costs were in vogue.

The Attorney-General said it would be necessary to make very extensive inquiries in order to ascertain in what courts the higher scale of costs prevailed, so that it was thought expedient to confine the operations of this Bill to the London Courts.

The clause was agreed to, as also was clause 6.

On clause 7, Mr. Newdegate remarked that the whole purpose of the Bill was to increase the jurisdiction of County Courts. If they went on increasing the jurisdiction and labours of the officers of these courts, it was only fair to increase their salaries and retiring allowances.

Sir R. Palmer said it was of great importance that no encouragement should be given to the idea that as often as Parliament found it necessary to adjust and enlarge the jurisdiction of these courts an addition was to be made to the salary of these officers. It ought to be generally understood that gentlemen who accepted these offices were bound to perform the duties which Parliament might impose upon them. While he desired that they should be fairly remunerated, he protested against making every measure which gave them new jurisdiction an occasion to increase their salaries.

After a few words from Mr. Newdegate,

The Attorney-General said that the registrars gave up the whole of their time to the performance of their functions, but he agreed with his hon. and learned friend that if Parliament thought fit to increase their duties it was hardly fair to come to that House and claim additional salary. Fresh duties were constantly imposed upon the judges of the Superior Courts, but no claim for additional salary was ever made by them. At the same time additional duties had been thrown upon the registrars, and the subject had been brought under his consideration in consequence of an application made by them. Under the Act of Parliament a discretionary power was given to the Lord Chancellor, and it was only fair that when additional duties were thrown upon the registrars they should have an additional salary if it were thought right by the Lord Chancellor to give it to them.

The clause was agreed to.

On clause 9, Mr. Ayrton objected to the clause because it restricted the right of the people to obtain justice in the Superior Courts, and compelled them to resort to the County Courts.

Sir C. O'Loghlen thought the clause one of the best in the whole Bill. It gave only a permissive power to the judge to order security for costs.

The Attorney-General was of opinion that the clause would be found a useful provision. It was a common practice in respect to the offences named in the clause for an attorney to bring an action for the plaintiff, and the defendant was mulcted in a considerable sum of money, as the plaintiff, in many a case, was unable to pay the costs. The judge might be trusted not to make the order for security, if he saw that there was reasonable cause for action.

Mr. Ayrton asked whether the Attorney-General would consent to introduce into the clause words signifying that security for costs should not be required in case the judge was satisfied that the cause was a proper one to be tried in a superior court of law.

The Attorney-General consented to the introduction of the words, and the clause so amended was agreed to.

Clauses 11 to 23 inclusive were agreed to. Clauses 24, 25, and 26 were postponed. Clauses 27 and 28 were agreed to. Clause 29 was negatived.

On clause 30, Mr. Monk said that this clause proposed to abolish the power of County Courts to imprison for debt. He thought such an alteration in the law would operate very hardly upon the poor, who would be unable to obtain credit if it were effected.

The Attorney-General said the hon. gentleman had entirely misunderstood the effect of the clause, which did not abolish the power of the County Courts to imprison for debt.

The clause was then agreed to, as was clause 31. Clause 32 was postponed. Clause 33 was agreed to, when progress was reported and the House resumed.

Tuesday, July 30.

COURTS OF LAW AND EQUITY (ENGLAND).

Sir R. Palmer asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government was prepared to advise her Majesty to issue a commission of inquiry into the operation and effect of the present constitution of the superior courts of law and equity in England (including the Courts of Exchequer Chamber and of Appeal in Chancery), and the Courts of Admiralty and of Probate and Divorce respectively, and into the operation and effect of the present separation and division of jurisdictions between the said several courts, and also into the operation and effect of the present arrangements for holding and transacting the business of the Assizes throughout England and Wales, and of the present divisions of the legal year into terms and otherwise; and generally into the operation and effect of the existing laws and arrangements for distributing and transacting the judicial business of the said courts respectively, as well in open court as at chambers, with a view to ascertain whether any and what changes and improvements, either by uniting and consolidating the said courts, or any of them; or by extending or altering their several jurisdictions, or assigning any matters or causes now within their respective cognizance to any other jurisdiction, or by increasing or reducing the number of judges in the said courts, or any of them, or empowering one or more judges in any of the said courts to transact any kind of business now transacted by a greater number; or by any new arrangement of the divisions of the legal year; or by altering the mode in which the business of the said courts, or any of them, or of the assizes, or any part thereof, was now distributed or conducted; or otherwise, might be advantageously made, so as to provide for the more speedy, economical, and satisfactory despatch of the judicial business now transacted by the same courts, and at the Assizes respectively."

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that the Government had considered the subject to which the question referred, and it was their opinion that it would be expedient to issue a Commission for the purpose indicated.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by J. Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Before Judge Miller.

Re Nicholas Neagle.

July 31.—Carrying on a Fictitious Business—Contracting Debt by causing a party employed as Collector to lodge Money as Security—Exorbitant Interest for Money.

The insolvent was opposed by two parties; first, the detaining creditor, a person named Rossney, whom the insolvent had employed as a collector of debts; secondly, a Mrs. Reid, who claimed to be a creditor for a sum of three pounds, which she alleged she gave the insolvent to register a bill of sale, and which he omitted to do. This lady was not returned on the schedule; and Levy, who appeared for the insolvent, objected to any opposition being heard until the creditor proved her debt.

Judge Miller, after hearing the evidence, admitted Mrs. Reid as a creditor for three pounds.

It appeared that the insolvent attempted to establish what he called a "Mutual Negotiation and Discount Office." In the prospectus which he issued he stated that interest on deposits would be allowed at 7½ per cent., that depositors lodging ten shillings would be entitled to borrow a pound, depositors of ten pounds to borrow twenty, and depositors of twenty and upwards to borrow double the amount deposited. Deposits received in pence, shillings, or pounds, as circumstances might permit, and children making small deposits to be entitled to a loan on the security of their parents or other responsible parties.

In addition to this Deposit and Discount office, the insolvent had what he called a "Mutual Self-Collection Agency Office," where he undertook to collect the debts due to merchants and traders, and others to whom money might be due in various parts of the country; he had also a registry for clerks and servants seeking employment.

O'Brien, instructed by P. J. Kelly, opposed on the part of Mrs. Reid, who had been admitted a creditor for three pounds, his object being to get up a bill of exchange, and a bill of sale which were given as a security for the loan of forty pounds, and which were to be given back on payment of the money; the money was in Mr. Kelly's hands, but, before paying it over to Mrs Reid, it was necessary to give back to the parties the bill of sale and the bill of exchange. The money advanced by Mrs. Reid was forty pounds for three months, and for this it appears that she got a sum of twelve pounds.

T. H. Treacy opposed on the part of the detaining creditor, Mr. William Rossney, who, having left the constabulary force on getting married, was attracted by one of the insolvent's advertisements for a collector for his establishment. The insolvent stated that he would require solvent security for two hundred pounds, and, when that was obtained, he would give Rossney employment as collector at one pound five shillings a week. Rossney stated, that in order to get the security, he had to go to Limerick, at considerable expense. He ultimately obtained the security of Mr. Robert Corbett, stock broker, for one hundred pounds, and then the insolvent required that twenty pounds in cash should be lodged in addition. This having been done, Rossney was duly appointed collector, and a number of bills handed to him for collection; he found that most of them had the statute of limitations against them, and when he went to look for the debtors he could not find them; the few whom he did find denied owing anything, or alleged that they had taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and therefore set Neagle at defiance, and Rossney was therefore unable to collect anything. He was nine weeks in the employment, five of which he was paid for. He then left, sued Neagle, and having obtained a decree against him, put him in prison.

Levy, for the insolvent, contended that the debt was an ordinary debt, which existed because the speculation of the insolvent had failed. When he found the speculation was a failure, he did what an honest man ought to do, he gave instructions to his attorney to sell a small property he had to raise money to enable him to pay Rossney his twenty pounds.

Egan, solicitor, having been sworn, stated that such was the fact.

Judge Miller, in giving judgment, said he had given the whole case a most attentive hearing; it occupied the Court a long time, but not longer than it merited. If there had been no creditor opposing but Mrs. Reid, who contrived to get twelve pounds for the loan of forty for a few months, he would not think of remanding the insolvent at her suit; where exorbitant interest was charged for money the party charging it should abide the consequences; but it appeared in the present case that Mrs. Reid, the creditor, was to be paid back her money. The case of Rossney was of a far different character, and the mode in which the debt was contracted was most fraudulent. The whole of the business in which Neagle was engaged was fictitious; it had no vitality or truth in it. The Mutual Association Bank was carried on, if the prospectus was to be believed, by "O'Carroll, Neagle, and Son," whereas there was no one there but Neagle himself. His name was Nicholas O'Carroll Neagle; he dropped the christian name Nicholas, and said the firm consisted of O'Carroll, Neagle, and Son, the son being in America. It was clearly evident that it was a fictitious firm, and a fictitious business, and that Rossney was induced to lodge his money in the belief that the business was honest and bonâ fide. It was therefore a debt contracted by false pretences. Neagle had admitted, when the case was last before the Court, that he had on one occasion been convicted of obtaining money under false pretences; and if he had been criminally prosecuted in the present case, there could be little doubt as to what the result would be. The defence made for him was the only defence that could be made, if it were real—namely, that he was about to sell some property he had to pay the unfortunate creditor his twenty pounds. Some arrangement of this kind might be made still, for Rossney might be said to be the only creditor he had. Then, upon the ground of the debt having been fraudulently contracted, the Court would remand the insolvent for twelve months at the suit of Rossney.

Solicitor for the insolvent, Rynd.

Solicitor for Rossney, Treacy.

Solicitor for Mrs. Reid, P. J. Kelly.

CIRCUIT CASES.

HOME CIRCUIT.

Queen's County Summer Assizes.

Before Whiteside, C.J.

Moore, Appellant; The Attorney-General, Respondent.

July 26.—Civil Bill under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 116, s. 168—Road Contractor—Recognizance—Breach of Contract—Damages.

The civil bill in this case was brought by the Attorney-General on behalf of the Crown on a recognizance entered into by Moore the appellant, in the sum of £99, conditioned for the performance of a contract to remove a hill and fill up a hollow upon one of the roads in this county.

Digitized by Google

It appeared from the evidence that, under the terms of the contract, the work was to be completed before the 1st of January, 1866, and that it had not been finished until June, 1867, shortly before the present civil bill was brought. The Chairman had made a decree against Moore for £10, and from this decision Moore now appealed.

Mr. Townsend, the County Surveyor, was examined on behalf of the plaintiff, and stated that in consequence of the non-performance of the contract by the defendant, the road at this point had been impassable from November, 1866, to February, 1867, and great inconvenience to the public had been thereby occasioned.

Evidence was given in support of the appellant's case to show that the work had ultimately been well finished, and that, although a portion of the road could not for some time be traversed by heavy carts, all vehicles could avoid this spot by making a détour of about 60 or 100 perches. It appeared also that the amount of the contract was £49 10s., and that £20 of this had been advanced to the appellant under the provisions of the 128th section of the 6 & 7 Wm. IV., c. 116, and that the residue was still unpaid.

S. Walker, on behalf of the appellant.

The penalty mentioned in the recognizance is not in the nature of liquidated damages, and although, as there has been a breach of contract, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree, the damages should be merely nominal, as no evidence has been given of any pecuniary loss. No evidence of any actual damage has been offered, and the case of The Attorney-General, appellant, Wilson, respondent (1 Cr. & Dix, C. C. 447), is a clear authority that this is necessary in order to sustain the plaintiff's case. Mr. Townsend has, no doubt, stated that the public were inconvenienced by the delay, but no person who was in the habit of using the road has been produced in support of this assertion. If the county had been compelled to get some other contractor to complete the work at an increased rate, then the plaintiff would have been entitled to substantial damages. Admittedly the work was now well done, and as a sum of £29 10s. was still due to the appellant on foot of the contract, the Grand Jury have power to withhold payment of that if they consider that the delay had been really injurious.

J. A. Byrne, contra.—Substantial damages may be recovered in many cases of breach of contract where no actual pecuniary damage can be shown. Thus, in Rolin v. Steward (14 C. B. 595), which was an action for dishonouring the plaintiff's cheque, the plaintiff was held entitled to recover large and ample damages, although no loss or injury was proved.—Chitty on Contracts, p. 789. Here the County Surveyor has given evidence of the impassable state of the road, resulting from the defendant's breach of contract; and no more satisfactory proof of actual injury and damage could be given. It may be difficult, perhaps, to estimate the proper amount of the damages, but where the Chairman has exercised his discretion in measuring the amount, the Court will not interfere with his decision. Gillespie v. Croker (15 Ir. Ch. Rep. 182).

WHITESIDE, C.J.—The breach of contract being admitted in this case, the only question is the measure of damages. Now, while it is quite clear—as established in the case of The Attorney-General, appellant, Wilson, respondent—that some evidence must be given to show that damage has been sustained, it is not necessary that this should be done by producing a witness to prove that he has suffered actual pecuniary loss. The evidence of Mr. Townsend, the County Surveyor, appears to me fully to warrant a decree for substantial damages, but at the same time the justice of the case will be met by reducing the amount of the decree to £5.

NORTH-EAST CIRCUIT.

DUNDALK, July 16.

Before O'HAGAN, J.

MURPHY, Appellant; KIERNAN, Respondent.

Jurisdiction—Question of Title.

In this case there had been a decree below for £27, and from this decree Murphy, the defendant below, appealed.

Monroe, for appellant.

M'Blain, LL.D., for respondent.

The facts were as follows:—

Kiernan was the owner of a house in the town of Dundalk, which he claimed to hold in fee-simple. The house was put up for sale by auction, and there was amongst the conditions of sale, a condition to the following effect:—"The vendor has been in the occupation of the premises for 22 years, during which time he has paid no rent for it; it was also in the possession of the vendor's father and grandfather for a long space of time. A statutory declaration in accordance with these facts will be furnished to the purchaser, and must be accepted by him as conclusive evidence of the vendor's title."

Murphy became the purchaser of the house at the auction for £127, and some time afterwards discovered that there was in existence a lease of the premises in question, dated the 25th of January, 1810, and made to an ancestor of the vendor; the term of years, however, for which and the rent at which the premises had been demised, were both obliterated.

Under these circumstances Murphy refused to complete, and in consequence of his refusal the premises were put up again and re-sold for £100. The civil bill was then brought for the balance (£27), and the defence sought to be raised was that a question of title was involved, and the jurisdiction of the Court consequently ousted. It was also insisted upon that the vendor had shown mala fides in not disclosing the fact of the existence of the lease. It was, however, proved that the auctioneer had said at the auction:—"There is a lease, but we do not sell under it."

O'HAGAN, J., in giving judgment, said:—"If the fact had been that a lease had been suppressed, that would have been fatal to the plaintiff's case, but that is not so here. If it is at all probable that a question of title may arise in a case, the Chairman or Judge should not entertain it; but there is no question of title here; it is a question of contract—the plaintiff, in effect, contracted to sell, and Murphy to take such title as the former possessed.

Decree affirmed.

Bailee—Notice.

The civil bill in this case was brought to recover £11, the value of a cow which was alleged by the appellant to have been lost by the respondent's carelessness, and there had been a dismiss below.

Munroe appeared for the appellant, and Mulholland for the respondent.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

The respondent was the owner of a yard in the town of Ballybay, and on fair days used to take cattle into this yard, and keep them during the fair at the charge of 1d. per head. On the morning of the 19th of January, 1867 (being a fair day) the appellant's son took a cow to the yard and delivered it over to the charge of respondent's yard-man. Upon his return in a few hours afterwards he found that the yard-man was not at the yard, and that the cow had disappeared. The respondent gave in evidence the following notice, which was proved to have been hung up close adjoining the gate of the yard on the day in question, but at a height of 8 or 9 feet from the ground:—"The proprietor of this yard will not hold himself responsible for any loss occurring to cattle from exchange or otherwise; parties putting in cattle do so at their own risk." The appellant and his son swore, however, that they had not seen this notice.

George, J., said that it was clear that the loss was occasioned by the negligence of respondent's servant, and that, primâ facie, respondent was liable, being, as a bailee for hire, bound to use ordinary care, which the learned Judge held had not been used. The learned Judge further held that the notice did not relieve respondent from this liability, as it had not been brought home to the knowledge of plaintiff.

Kerry Summer Assizes, 1867.

Before Fitzgerald, J.

Butler, Appellant, Leahy, Respondent.

In this case the appellant had processed the respondent for injury done to his farm by the respondent having entered and dug for gravel, &c.

The respondent, who was a road contractor, justified under an order of magistrates, purporting to be made by virtue of the 162nd section of the 6 and 7 Wm. IV., c. 116.

The order was as follows:—

"Whereas the complainant hath this day proved to the satisfaction of the Justices assembled at Petty Sessions in Milltown on this day, that the most convenient place for obtaining materials for repairing the road between Drummavalla and Ahare, of which he is contractor, is on the land of Coolroe, in the occupation of the defendant, and that the defendant has prevented him of doing so, it is ordered by the Court that the complainant obtain an order to enter said lands for said purpose.

"I, therefore, the undersigned Justice, hereby authorize E. Leahy and his assistants to enter upon any part of said lands, not being a deerpark, bleach-green, orchard, walled garden, haggard-yard, plantation, walk, lawn, or avenue to a mansion house; and to dig for, raise, and carry away, in or out of same, any gravel, sand, stones, or other material wanted for the making, repairing, or preserving said road, making satisfaction for the damage thereby done, as shall be assessed by the householders.

"Given under my hand this 31st day of December.

"Ed. Rae."

The Chairman had dismissed the process.

J. C. Neligan, for the appellant. This order is bad. "An order of magistrates, as well as a conviction, must show upon the face of it that the magistrates who made it did so in the exercise of lawful authority within their jurisdiction." Fitzpatrick v. Byrne, 13 Ir. C. L. 32. Here the order does not show that it was proved to the satisfaction of the Justices that the material "cannot conveniently be obtained elsewhere;" it only says that they were satisfied it was the most convenient place—the most convenient place, of course, to the contractor is the field adjoining the part of the road he is repairing; but there might be a piece of waste ground at some little distance, from which it could be conveniently procured.

[Fitzgerald, J.—It does not appear on the order that the Justice who signed the order was one of the Justices who was satisfied this was a convenient place; and on the Act it is clear that the Justice who makes the order must be himself satisfied that the gravel cannot conveniently be obtained elsewhere.]

Nor does the order show that the respondent is a contractor under the grand jury for a presented road at all; as far as appears from it he might be a contractor with a private individual.

W. Murphy in support of the order.

Fitzgerald, J.—An entry to take materials under this section is made in the exercise of a very arbitrary power, and the requisite conditions must be strictly complied with. The jurisdiction ought to appear on the face of the order. Mr. Neligan's argument is unanswerable. The order is clearly bad, and affords no justification to the defendant.

Dismiss reversed; decree for two pounds.

Fagan v. Mangan.

This was a process in ejectment. The plaintiff claimed as devisee under the will of defendant's previous landlord.

J. M. Magee, for plaintiff.

Woods, for the defendant, objected that the notice to quit had been served prior to the date of the probate of the will.

The Chairman over-ruled the objection.

Frazer v. Williams.

This was a process in replevin. The plaintiff held under a yearly tenancy to the defendant. Notice of distress stated the distress as made for six months' rent, at 1s. 9d. per week, from the 6th October, 1866, £2 2s.

M'Clellan, for the plaintiff, maintained that this was an irregular notice, as it implied a weekly tenancy, and did not state when the sum claimed accrued due.

Morris, for the defendant.

The Chairman ruled that the notice was invalid. See Davis v. Jackson, Ir. Circ. R. 384.

HOUSE OF LORDS, July 30.

LONGWORTH (OR YELVERTON) v. YELVERTON.

The noble and learned Lords present this morning were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth, Lord Westbury, and Lord Colonsay.

The facts have been so often and so recently before the public that it is not necessary to do more than state that the question as to the marriage in Ireland was decided by the Irish Courts in favour of the present appellant, and that the question as to the Scotch marriage was decided by the Courts of Scotland also in her favour, but that this latter decision was reversed upon appeal to their Lordships. The appellant then resorted to an ancient form of Scotch law, and petitioned the Court of Session to have the question of the Scotch marriage referred to the oath of the respondent, but their Lordships by a majority dismissed the application on the ground that the matter being within their discretion, and considering that the judgment of the House of Lords had been pronounced declaring that no marriage had taken place between the parties, that the respondent, if bound to answer, might be compelled to criminate himself by confessing that he had been guilty of bigamy, and that the interests of Mrs. Forbes, who, as a third party, was not represented in the proceedings, would be affected, it would not be right to grant the reference to oath, even if they had the power to do so in a case in which the question of marriage or no marriage was involved. Against that decision the appellant brought the present appeal: and she argued the case on her own behalf some few weeks since.

Their Lordships, at the sitting of the House at half-past 10 o'clock, delivered judgment as follows:—

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is an appeal from an interlocutor of the First Division of the Court of Session refusing to sustain a reference to the oath of the respondent upon a minute of reference tendered by the appellant for that purpose, and finding the appellant liable to the respondent in the expenses incurred by him since the 12th of December, 1864, the date of lodging the minute of reference to oath. The proceedings which had taken place in the cause (which was a conjoint action of declarator of marriage and putting to silence) before the proposed reference to oath must be shortly recalled to your Lordships' attention. The two actions having been conjoined and debated before the Lord Ordinary, his lordship, on the 3rd of July, 1862, issued an interlocutor finding that in the action of declarator of marriage the appellant had not instructed that she was the wife of the respondent, and assoilzied the respondent from the conclusions of the action and in the action of declarator of freedom and putting to silence declaring against the appellant, conform to the conclusions of the said action. The appellant presented to the First Division of the Court of Session a reclaiming note against the above judgment of the Lord Ordinary, and on the 19th of December, 1862, the Lords pronounced an interlocutor recalling the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, and in the action of declarator of marriage finding that the appellant had instructed that she was the wife of the respondent, and in the action of declarator of freedom and putting to silence assoilzieing the appellant from the conclusion of the said action. This interlocutor was brought by appeal to this House, and after long argument at the bar your Lordships ordered that the interlocutor complained of be reversed, and declared that the Inner House (First Division) of the Court of Session ought to have refused the reclaiming note of the present appellant against the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary of the 3rd of July, 1862, and to have adhered to the said interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, save as to damages and expenses, and further ordered "that the cause be remitted back to the Court of Session in Scotland, to do therein as shall be just and consistent with this declaration, direction, and judgment." The respondent presented the usual petition to the Court to apply the judgment, which was opposed on the part of the appellant, for whom a note was lodged praying the Court to supersede consideration of the petition in the meantime, and craving leave to put in a condescendence of res noviter veniens ad notitiam. The proposed condescendence alleged that since the judgment of this House the pursuer was informed that Major Yelverton, the respondent, when on a visit to his deceased brother, the Hon. Frederick Yelverton, in the presence of Sarah Mallins, who was at the time attending the brother as a sick nurse, acknowledged and admitted that he had married the appellant in Scotland, and renewed his marriage vows in Ireland; that Sarah Mallins died in the Meath Hospital, and when she was in a dying state, and attended by the Rev. Edward George Campbell, informed him what had passed between the two brothers, and Mr. Campbell communicated it to the appellant. The Court of the First Division, after argument, pronounced an interlocutor on the 10th of December, 1864, by which they refused the desire of the appellant's note, and applied the judgment of this House. After this interlocutor a minute of reference to oath was tendered on behalf of the appellant, which minute was in the following terms:—"The pursuer in the said declarator of marriage hereby refers the whole cause to the oath of the defender, the said William Charles Yelverton;" and a petition was presented praying the Court to sustain the minute of reference to oath. The Court of the First Division, on the 10th of March, 1865, pronounced the interlocutor appealed from. Against this interlocutor and a subsequent one approving of the auditor's report on the account of the expenses this appeal is brought. It must be taken as a settled rule of law in Scotland that there may be a reference to the oath of a party at any time between the closing of the record and the extracting of the decree, although every other mode of proof has been previously tried and has failed. If the reference to oath is made originally, there can be no subsequent trial, because, as Lord Stair says, 4. 44. 2., "the party to whose oath of verity a point is referred may refuse to swear till the adverse party not only renounce all other methods of proof, but depose that he knows of none, and particularly that he is possessed of no probative writing by which he may make good his plea." But, however strange it may appear to those who are unaccustomed to the practice of the Scotch Courts, that a party having attempted to prove a case by testimony, and having failed, should be allowed, almost at the last moment, even after final judgment, to resort to a new method of proceeding of which he had his choice from the first, yet such being the law we are bound not to question but to administer it. The reason why this reference to oath is allowed at so late a stage of the proceedings seems to be that until judgment is extracted the cause is still in court. This being so there can be no difference in principle between the case where a judgment is final in the Scotch Courts because not appealed from, and a final judgment of this House, which equally requires extract before execution can issue. It was argued for the respondent that the appeal from the interlocutor having brought away the whole record, the cause is as much out of court as it is after extract. But this is not correct. Pending the appeal, the record was taken away from the court, and all proceedings upon it were suspended; but upon the judgment of the House being pronounced it was ordered "that the cause be, and is hereby remitted back to the Court of Session, to do therein as shall be just and consistent with this declaration, direction, and judgment." So that after the judgment of the House the record was sent back to the Court of Session, and was exactly in the same position as if a final judgment had been pronounced by that Court, which was either unappealable or unappealed from, and the cause remains in the Court until extract. I think, therefore, that the appellant's reference to oath was competent in respect of the time at which the minute was tendered. But it was contended on the part of the respondent that a reference to oath is inadmissible in a case of declarator of marriage, and especially where, as in this case, the interests of third persons are concerned. With respect to the competency of a reference to oath in a declarator of marriage, I am strongly of opinion that, whatever may have been the practice formerly, since the statute 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV., chap. 69, such a proceeding is incompetent. The 33rd section of this Act enacts, "that all actions of declarator of marriage," and other enumerated consistorial actions, "shall be competent to be brought and insisted upon only before the Court of Session." And by the 36th section, "no decree or judgment in favour of the pursuer shall be pronounced in any of the consistorial actions therein before enumerated until the grounds of action shall be substantiated by sufficient evidence." In the case of "Muirhead v. Muirhead," 8 Dunlop, p. 786, which was an action of separation a mensa et thoro, brought by a wife on the ground of ill usage, the husband admitted on the record conduct which in the opinion of the Lord Ordinary was sufficient to justify the conclusions of the action. Upon the case coming before the Court upon a verbal report by the Lord Ordinary for instructions, Lord Mackenzie said, and the rest of the Court concurred, "I read the words 'sufficient evidence' as meaning sufficient evidence independent of the admissions of the party. I think the Act meant entirely to exclude admissions, and requires extrinsic evidence. Now, it is quite clear that an admission upon the record can never be regarded as evidence, but the Court could not have meant to say that if proof had been led in the case admissions proved to have been made by the husband that he had ill-used his wife would not have been evidence, and might not have been sufficient evidence. But an oath upon reference is not evidence at all. As my noble and learned friend Lord Colonsay said in this case in the Court of Session, "A reference to oath is not what we are accustomed to regard as testimony proper. It is neither parol nor documentary evidence. An oath taken upon a reference is not the examination of a witness. It is what is technically called oath of party." And again, "It is not to be taken in connexion with documentary or parol evidence that has been adduced. It may be hostile to all other evidence. It is to be judged by itself; and the question for the Court to determine, upon an oath emitted under a reference, is not what upon the aspect of the whole cause appears to be the truth of the matter, but it is, what has the party sworn?" As a party by referring to the oath of his adversary renounces all other species of proof, and as the "oath emitted under a reference" is not evidence, a decree pronounced in a declarator of marriage, founded upon this mode of proceeding, would be a violation of the express words of the statute, as the grounds of the action would not have been substantiated by "sufficient evidence." A reference to oath, therefore, cannot, in my opinion, be competent in this description of action. But supposing a reference to oath to be admissible in an action of declarator of marriage it ought not to be permitted in any case where the rights and interests of third persons would be prejudiced by a decree founded upon an oath affirmative of the reference. That would be the necessary consequence of such a decree in the present case. It appears upon the record that after the time of the alleged marriage with the appellant the respondent was married in June, 1858, in Edinburgh, to Mrs. Forbes, the widow of Professor Forbes. A decree, therefore, establishing the validity of the marriage of the appellant and the respondent must necessarily deprive Mrs. Forbes of the status which she acquired by her marriage with the respondent; and this consequence would be the result of what is called a "transaction" or "judicial contract" between persons engaged in a litigation to which she is no party. It was said, however, by the appellant that the reference to oath could not prejudice Mrs. Forbes, because the oath affects the parties to the transaction only; and that no judgment on it could be res judicata against her, being res inter alias acta. It is quite true that the oath of verity would not affect third persons; but there may be cases in which it must of necessity prejudice, if not conclude, the rights of strangers to the proceeding. In such cases the reference to oath is not admissible, for, as was said by Lord Moncreiff, in "Adam v. Maclachlan," 9 D. 560, "the general case of reference to the oath of party is where the party referring and the party referred to stand with opposed interests on the matter referred, and where no other interest is involved." Upon this point I may borrow the language of Lord Stowell in "Dalrymple v. Dalrymple," where he says, "the lady of the second marriage is not here made a party to the suit. She might have been so in point of form if she had chosen to intervene. In substance she is, for her marriage is distinctly pleaded and proved, and is as much, therefore, under the eye and under the attention and under the protection of the Court as if she were formally a party to the question respecting the validity of this marriage, which is in effect to decide upon the validity of her own. For I take it to be a position beyond the reach of all argument and contradiction, that if the first marriage be legally good, the second marriage must be legally bad." If upon the oath of reference in this case a decree were made, establishing the marriage of the appellant and respondent, there can be no doubt that it would be binding upon Mrs. Forbes. It would be a judgment in rem, which has been defined to be "an adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular subject matter by a tribunal having competent authority for that purpose" (2, Smith's Leading Cases, 439); and the characteristic quality of a judgment in rem is that it furnishes in general conclusive proof of the facts adjudicated, and is binding on all persons whomsoever. If the reference to oath were to be admitted in this case, Mrs. Forbes might be deprived of her status as a wife by a decree made behind her back, and which she would never afterwards be able to question. But there is a further objection to the reference to oath in this case—that the answer to it in the affirmative (an answer which the appellant must be taken by her reference to expect to receive) necessarily involves an admission by the respondent of criminality. If the respondent were to admit the alleged marriage between himself and the appellant, he must confess that he has been guilty of bigamy. And this necessary effect of an affirmative answer plainly appears upon the record, where the marriage of the respondent with Mrs. Forbes at a date subsequent to the time of his alleged marriage with the appellant is pleaded. The appellant says in her printed case, "There are cases in which a reference to oath was refused on the ground that a party should not be compelled to swear in suam turpitudinem." But all these cases were prior in date to the Act 1st Wm. IV., chap. 37, the ninth section of which abolished infamy as a ground of incompetency of a witness. The Act 15th and 16th of Victoria, chap. 27, further removes all impediments to the admissibility of the evidence of persons convicted of crime. In the present state of the law of evidence it is obvious that in the case of "Rogers," 2 S. 444, M'Eacharn, 3 S. 9, and "Thomson," 7 S. 32, the parties who were not obliged to swear in suam turpitudinem would now be competent and compellable witnesses in similar cases, with the option of declining to answer any question that might criminate themselves. Such is the argument of the appellant upon this point, which leaves out of view one very important consideration. It is true that the party in a case of reference to oath may refuse to answer, if thereby he would criminate himself. But then the effect is that he is taken to have confessed the facts which are referred to his oath, and exactly the same benefit results to the party making the reference as if he had obtained an affirmative answer. In the present case, therefore, the respondent, if he answered affirmatively, would have admitted himself to have been guilty of bigamy; or, if he had refused to answer, Mrs. Forbes would have been conclusively deprived of all the rights which she had acquired by her marriage with the respondent. All the preceding objections to the reference to oath in the present case naturally lead to the conclusion at which I have arrived—that the Court of Session was right in refusing to sustain the reference. There can be no doubt that a reference to oath is not the absolute right of a party, but that it is in the equitable discretion of the Court to admit or to refuse. Lord Moncreiff, in the case of "Patterson v. Robertson," said:—"I could not, perhaps, go quite so far as Lord Congleton did in the case of 'Robertson,' though in that approved by Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst, that the reference to oath is in our law a mere appeal to the equitable discretion of the Court; but I agree so far that, though regarding it as a legal right to appeal by motion to the Court to that mode of proof as an ultimate remedium, it may still be in the discretion of the Court to allow it, under the circumstances of any particular case." Now, assuming that there may be a reference to oath in an action of declarator of marriage, yet where, as in this case, the interests of a third person are affected, and may be irrevocably sound, and where the effect of the reference may be either to compel the confession of a crime or to conclude the rights of another by a refusal to answer, I think that the Court of Session were perfectly justified in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion in refusing to sustain the reference to oath in this case, and that their interlocutors ought to be affirmed.

Lord CRANWORTH said his noble and learned friend on the woolsack had communicated to him the outline of the opinion he intended to pronounce in moving the judgment of the House, and concurring, as he did, in the whole of the judgment, he did not think that he was called upon to trouble the House with many observations. He wished it, however, to be understood that though his noble and learned friend had referred to the statute of George IV. and William IV., which transferred the consistorial jurisdiction of Scotland to the Court of Session, as being in some respects the foundation of his judgment, he thought that while that statute might confirm the view of the judgment, yet that, independently of it, he could not believe that in such a case as this it could be the law of Scotland that there should be a reference to oath, because, as he took it, the principle on which reference was allowed was so clearly stated by Lord Moncreiff in the case quoted by his noble and learned friend that he should be content to rest his judgment on that authority, even if the statute had not existed. The words used by Lord Moncreiff were, "The general case of reference to the oath or party is where the party referring and the party referred to stand with opposed interests on the matter referred, and where no other interest is involved." Where such was the case there was, perhaps, no absurdity, so to say, even at the very last moment of time, in allowing a reference to the oath of a party. But the moment they got beyond that—the moment they got to cases in which the interests of third parties were involved, it appeared to him to be a sort of proposition that could not be sustained, that such could be the law of Scotland or of any civilized country. He admitted that there was a case referred to in which the reference was admitted in a consistorial case, but there was no case in which the doctrine was affirmed by that House, and he could not admit that that was a principle that could be recognized and acted upon in those cases in which it involved the rights of third parties, as certainly was the case here. Even if there had been no marriage with Mrs. Forbes, he very much doubted whether in a question of status there could be such a reference, because the interests of third parties were necessarily involved. When the person was a married woman the interests of all the creditors who had trusted her must be involved. Therefore he thought the general principle excluded it in all cases. But, even if that were not so, the last observations of his noble and learned friend were quite satisfactory, namely, that it was not the absolute right of any party, but a right which the Court might or might not exercise in its discretion; and it would be a highly improper exercise to exercise it in this case.

Lord WESTBURY said it was not his intention to give any vote upon the question. He was compelled to be absent during part of the argument, and, as some reference had been made to that absence, he might say it was involuntary, being constrained by a severe domestic affliction. He had, however, the advantage of hearing the whole of the appellant's address, and if he had felt that there was any reasonable ground for believing that this appeal could be sustained, he should have struggled very much to compel himself to attend during the rest of the argument. But he was obliged to say he felt that after that argument there was no ground on which from the impression he then received this judgment ought not to be affirmed. He would not, however, give that in the form of a judicial opinion. He said these few words merely as an explanation of his reasons for having failed to attend the whole of the argument.

Lord COLONSAY said that, after the expression of opinion which had now been made the case was practically decided, and would therefore not be in any way affected by the conclusion at which he had arrived. He thought it, however, incumbent upon him in a case of such vast importance to the law of Scotland to express the opinion he entertained upon the case. When the case was presented to the Court below the novelty of a proposition of a reference to oath in such a case appeared to him so great that he suggested after a full oral argument that the case should be re-argued, and after hearing the case twice fully argued the Court below came to the conclusion that it would be improper for them to exercise the discretion they possessed in favour of referring the case to the oath of the respondent. From that decision he saw no reason by what had been urged in that House to differ. He fully concurred in the judgment of the noble and learned lord that the appeal should be dismissed.

The appeal was then dismissed.

COURT OF CHANCERY (ENGLAND).

LORDS JUSTICES.

July 22.—Re Broadhouse; Ex parte Dale.—This was an appeal from two orders of Mr. Commissioner Sanders, of the Birmingham Bankruptcy Court, committing Mr. Dale to prison for refusing to be sworn, and directing him to pay costs.

Mr. Dale is a solicitor employed as clerk to Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, & Lewis, of Walsall. He was summoned to appear in the Birmingham Bankruptcy Court on the 27th May last, in the matter of the bankruptcy of Mr. Broadhouse, and to produce a deed of which he (Mr. Dale) is an attesting witness. He had produced the deed and given evidence before one of the Registrars of the Court. Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, & Lewis permitted him to attend, but instructed him to apply for his expenses before giving his evidence. The Commissioner admitted that Mr. Dale was entitled to his expenses, but the solicitors on whose behalf he had been summoned refused to pay. The Commissioner nevertheless required him to be sworn. In consequence of his refusal a warrant was made out for his committal, and he was detained in the custody of one of the officials of the court. Messrs. Duignan & Co., being informed by telegraph of what had happened, advised him to submit under protest, which he did accordingly. An order to pay the costs was first made upon Messrs. Duignan & Co., but subsequently upon Mr. Dale himself. The only sum paid to him for his second attendance was 5s.

Kay, Q.C., and Knight, for Mr. Dale, said that in addition to travelling expenses and subsistence money, he was entitled to between two and three guineas. They characterized the conduct of the Commissioner, in committing him without hearing an explanation, as most improper. It was the invariable practice of Commissioners in Bankruptcy to give witnesses an opportunity of raising questions of this character by way of appeal.

De Gex, Q.C., and Napier Higgins, for the respondent, contended that Mr. Dale was not entitled to anything more than the travelling expenses. Although a solicitor, he appeared in the character of a solicitor's clerk only. The second attendance was rendered necessary by his own default.

CAIRNS, L.J., said that by a little reflection on both sides the necessity of submitting the case to the Court might have been avoided. He thought, however, that Mr. Dale was entitled to something for subsistence money, and that he was quite right in standing upon his strict rights. The order appealed against must be discharged.

ROLT, L.J., was of the same opinion. He thought the Commissioner was not right in committing Mr. Dale, or in ordering him to pay the costs.

Both orders were, therefore, discharged, but without costs.

July 23.—Re Broadhouse.—This was an appeal by the bankrupt himself in the same case. The case came before the Commissioner on June 6. Mr. Dale appeared for the bankrupt to oppose the adjudication. The Commissioner, however, refused to hear him, on the ground that he appeared as a clerk. The bankrupt in person requested the Commissioner to hear Mr. Dale, but the Commissioner persisted in his refusal, dismissed the bankrupt's application, and confirmed the adjudication of bankruptcy. On these grounds the bankrupt appealed.

Kay, Q.C., and Knight, for the appellant.

De Gex, Q.C., and Napier Higgins, for the respondents.

CAIRNS, L.J., said it was clear that Mr. Dale went in the first instance before the Commissioner, and claimed to be heard—not as solicitor to Mr. Broadhouse, but as clerk and representative of Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, & Lewis, who were Mr. Broadhouse's solicitors. The Commissioner was not bound to hear Mr. Dale as clerk and representative of Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, & Lewis, even although Mr Dale was himself a solicitor of the court. A solicitor was entitled to appear only as the solicitor of a particular client. The main object of the Court in allowing and being anxious to favour the appearance of solicitors as representing other persons was that the Court should in each case have before it one of its own officers, who, on the one hand, was under an obligation to the Court, as an officer of the Court, and, on the other hand, was under an obligation as the person representing the suitor; and unless that connexion was maintained and kept complete, the object of the Court in having the assistance of and allowing the work of solicitors to be performed would be entirely defeated. So long as Mr. Dale claimed to be heard not as solicitor of Broadhouse, but as clerk of Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, & Lewis, who were the solicitors of Broadhouse—so long was the Commissioner justified in refusing to hear him. There was no foundation for the argument that Mr. Dale was appearing there doing "agency" business in the ordinary technical sense in which that term was understood among solicitors. He clearly was not doing agency business for Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, & Lewis. He was the agent of Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, & Lewis in one sense—in the legal sense in which a servant was the agent of his master, or a clerk was the agent of his employers—but not in the technical sense in which that term was used when solicitors acted in the manner referred to. But when the Commissioner refused to hear Mr. Dale as clerk of Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, & Lewis, and when the bankrupt begged that Mr. Dale might be heard, then it would have been well if the Commissioner had clearly informed the bankrupt of the position in which he stood, by saying, "If you continue to look to Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, & Lewis as your solicitors, Mr. Dale cannot be heard as their representative in the capacity of clerk; you, therefore, must have a solicitor, or speak for yourself, or take the consequences." Then the bankrupt might, if he pleased, have chosen Mr. Dale as his solicitor, and Mr. Dale would have been entitled to be heard as a solicitor of the Court. The matter should go back to the Commissioner in order that the bankrupt might be heard.

ROLT, L.J., said it was not intended that the clerk of a solicitor should be permitted to appear and plead in Courts of Bankruptcy. But it was said that the practice as to agents would allow the clerk of a solicitor, being himself a solicitor, to appear and act as an agent. That argument could not be maintained, because Mr. Dale was unquestionably not the agent of Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, & Lewis in the technical sense in which the term was understood by the profession. There remained the question, what order should have been made under the circumstances? The bankrupt at the end of the examination said, "I am the bankrupt, and I wish Mr. Dale to be heard;" and after that he said, "I have engaged Mr. Dale, he has the whole matter in hand, I wish him to be heard before you." It was impossible to hold, after that, that the order made by the Commissioner was the right order under the circumstances. Instead of confirming the adjudication the Commissioner should have given the bankrupt complete information as to the consequences of his adhering to the course he was taking, or the case might have been adjourned a day, the Commissioner saying to the bankrupt, "In the meantime you had better consider whether you will not appear by some other person. The Court is quite willing to give you an opportunity of being heard, but you must be heard according to the rules and practice of the Court." To say instead, "We confirm the adjudication, and there is an end of the matter," was rather hard upon the bankrupt. Therefore, the order should be discharged, but the case did not appear to be one for costs.

NEW CHANCERY ACT.—The Act to make further provision for the despatch of business in the Court of Appeal in Chancery, which was passed on Thursday, was only issued yesterday, and the first sittings were held that day under the new statute, when Lord Cairns, as Lord Justice, sat in his own court, and Lord Justice Rolt in the Lord Chancellor's Court. The Court of Appeal in Chancery was constituted by the 14th and 15th of Victoria, cap. 83, and the present Act is to be read with the recited Act as one. It declares that all the jurisdiction, powers, and authorities, except as mentioned, may be exercised either by both of the Judges appointed under the former Act then sitting together, or by either of the Judges when sitting separately, or by the Lord Chancellor when sitting with the said judges, or either of them, provided that no decree made on the hearing of a cause or on further consideration is to be reheard before the Judges when sitting separately. It is also provided that the Lord Chancellor shall and may, while sitting alone, exercise all the powers he might have exercised if this Act had not been passed. The Lord Chancellor is to appoint the sittings under the new statute, and yesterday the Lords Justices sat separately for the first time.

THE YELVERTON CASE.

The long litigation in the Yelverton case was on 30th ult. brought to a close by the judgment of the House of Lords, which dismissed Miss Longworth's second appeal, and declared that the Court of Session was justified in not allowing the matter to be reopened by a proceeding which, even if lawful, was inexpedient and perhaps unjust. The judgment will not have for the general public the interest of that former one, in which all the circumstances of the case, and even the private correspondence of the parties, were scanned by the most acute legal intellects of the time, and in which the high authority of Lords Brougham and Westbury was found opposed to the decision of a majority of the Law Lords. The second appeal was on a most technical question, and it has been decided on grounds which, though quite clear and intelligible even to the non-legal mind, do not involve the merits of Major Yelverton or the wrongs of his deserted companion. It will be remembered that in the various and protracted suits by which Miss Longworth sought to assert her alleged rights victory at first seemed to incline to her side. An action was brought in Ireland, and after an animated and somewhat dramatic trial, a verdict was given in favour of the legality of the Irish marriage. In Scotland proceedings were taken by each of the parties—by Major Yelverton to have it declared that the lady was not his wife, and by her to establish the validity of her Scottish marriage. As the two actions involved substantially the same questions of fact, they were conjoined, and the Lord Ordinary, in July, 1862, found that Miss Longworth had failed to prove a marriage, and decided accordingly for Major Yelverton in both actions. This decision was, however, reversed by a majority of the Judges of the First Division in the ensuing December, and Miss Longworth might hope that her status as a wife was legally established. But there still remained the appeal to the House of Lords, and after the usual delays the whole question was argued at extraordinary length before this supreme tribunal. On the 28th July, 1864, their Lordships delivered judgment, and the difficulty of the case may be understood from the difference of opinion which was disclosed. The Lord Chancellor, Lord Westbury, and Lord Brougham, whose written judgment, however, was not received in his absence, were for affirming the judgment of the Court below. Lords Chelmsford, Wensleydale, and Kingsdown were of the contrary opinion, and considered that the Scottish Court had wrongfully decided in favour of Miss Longworth. These being the majority, in consequence of the exclusion of Lord Brougham's judgment, the judgment was reversed, and the respondent declared not to be legally married to the appellant.

The blow was a heavy one; but a woman, when her mind is concentrated on one idea, often pursues it with a surpassing perseverance and fortitude. Miss Longworth's passion was to be declared the legal wife of Major Yelverton, and this object, which, after what had passed, would seem to have been almost valueless, she would not forego as long as any expedient remained to be tried. She was advised that, according to ancient Scottish usage, one of the parties to a suit may refer the cause to the oath of the other, even though the party thus tendering the reference is unable to adduce proof of the facts alleged. The law on the subject may be gathered sufficiently for a general comprehension of it from the Lord Chancellor's judgment; we need only state here that there seems to be no doubt such a right of claiming a reference to oath exists, but that in the opinion of the House of Lords, as just pronounced, the reference ought only to be made when the Court shall deem it conducive to the ends of justice. In this case the Lord Chancellor decided against the appellant—firstly, on the ground that such a reference to the oath of a party should only be allowed where the party referring and the party referred to stand with opposed interests on the matter referred, and where no other interest is involved. In the present case it was not so. inasmuch as the interests of Mrs. Forbes, whom Major Yelverton had married, were clearly involved. As the Lord Chancellor said, "If the reference to oath were admitted in this case, Mrs. Forbes might be deprived of her status as a wife by a decree made behind her back which she would never afterwards be able to question." A second objection to the reference is that "the answer to it in the affirmative—an answer which the appellant must be taken by her reference to expect to receive—necessarily involves an admission by the respondent of criminality," since if he were to admit the alleged marriage between himself and the appellant he must confess that he has been guilty of bigamy. Though, too, a party in a case of reference to oath may refuse to answer, the effect would be that he would be taken to have confessed the facts, and exactly the same benefit would accrue to the party making the reference as if an affirmative answer had been obtained. "In the present case, therefore, the respondent, if he had answered affirmatively, would have admitted himself to have been guilty of bigamy; or, if he had refused to answer, Mrs. Forbes would have been conclusively deprived of all the rights which she had acquired by her marriage with the respondent." The Lord Chancellor also held that in the case of a declaration of marriage the competency of a reference to oath had been taken away by statute, so that accumulated reasons existed for affirming the judgment of the Court below. The other Lords concurred in these opinions, and the appeal was dismissed.

So ends the long contest between Major Yelverton and his unfortunate companion. Whatever may have been her imprudences or her errors, it is impossible not to feel regret for a woman of education and of no small ability whose life has been so wrecked. To recall the circumstances of her connexion with Major Yelverton can serve no useful purpose; but the people, and particularly the influential men, of Scotland and Ireland cannot too attentively consider those parts of her history which testify to the absurdity of the marriage laws in their respective countries. It requires no argument to prove that a state of the law ought not to exist under which, with an immense mass of evidence and a long correspondence before them, two Law Lords can differ from three as to the fact whether a man was or was not married to a woman. We may add, indeed, it is a disgrace to civilization that letters and gossip should be evidence at all of so momentous a contract. In giving judgment in 1864 Lord Wensleydale expressed his regret that in the nineteenth century the most important relation of life should depend on the loose recollection of witnesses, and "sometimes on the meaning of an amatory expression in impassioned letters." Every one out of Scotland will concur in this opinion, and it is to be hoped that some day the subject will be considered without prejudice and national bigotry north of the Tweed. Scarcely a month passes in which there are not attempts at imposition and extortion, the direct consequences of a law which allows an illicit connexion to merge into a legal marriage by imperceptible gradations, or to be converted into it by some incautious word or act. In the Breadalbane case it has been doubtful for a generation how an earldom and a vast estate would descend, and now the question has been decided confessedly on presumption. In the Yelverton case the position not only of the parties but of her who is now decided to be the real wife of Major Yelverton has been left in doubt for years; and if Miss Longworth had borne a child, and had not herself prosecuted her claim, the litigation might have been deferred till all who are now living had passed away. To make the marriage laws of the three kingdoms identical, and consistent with reason and justice, would be one of the most worthy achievements of a great statesman.—The Times.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

RATEABILITY OF GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS.—In the first case the appellants are the chief constable of the county of C. and the inspector of police, and the occupiers of buildings and offices provided for the purposes of the county constabulary, which was established under stat. 2 & 3 Vict., c. 93. The buildings in question were erected under stat. 3 & 4 Vict., c. 88, and in addition to the necessary domestic accommodation of the appellants, who are required, as a condition of their appointment, to reside upon the premises, comprise rooms used as a place of deposit for records, police stores, cells, magistrates room, a room for stamping weights and measures, &c. The county police are annually inspected by a Government officer, who reports as to their efficiency. If the report be satisfactory, a grant is made by the Government in aid of the police rate. but the grant is not compulsory, and may be withheld if the Government think proper to do so. In the second case the justices of the county of L. were assessed as the occupiers of the Castle of L. The Castle was formerly a portion of the Duchy of Lancaster, was subsequently united to the Crown, and has since formed part of the Crown property. It is used by the justices (in whose custody it is, and who appoint a person at a salary to take care of it) for the purposes of the assizes, quarter sessions, and for keeping the county records, and also for holding the sheriff's court, the county court, for meetings of the turnpike road commissioners, the highway board of the district, sittings of the revising barristers, and other similar purposes: Held, that in both cases the premises were exempt from rateability as being occupied for the service of the Crown, and therefore not within 43 Eliz., c. 2, s. 1: (Reg. v. St. Martin's, Leicester, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 625. Q. B.)

MORTGAGE PRIORITY—NEGLIGENCE.—B. contracted for the purchase of an advowson. He then executed an indenture charging property already in mortgage in fee to C., and the advowson with £2,500 to C. with a covenant to convey the advowson as soon as the purchase should be completed. This was done, and then B. borrowed £1,000 from D., giving him a charge on the advowson, with power of sale and deposit of the deeds, without notice of C.'s charge. C. never got a conveyance of the advowson nor deposit of the deeds. On a bill for foreclosure by his representatives, it was held that he must be postponed to D.: (Layard v. Maud, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 618. V. C. M.)

LIABILITIES OF RAILWAYS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.—B. being at a station, and wishing to cross the line, where there was no footpath, and which was unlighted, while doing so, fell into a hole and dislocated his shoulder. The company were held not to be bound to light the line at a place where there was no recognized footpath: (Paddock v. The North Eastern Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 649. Bramwell, B.)

POWER OF A COMPANY TO ACCEPT BILLS.—The Companies' Act 1862 does not give to companies incorporated under it, as an incident of their incorporation, the power of accepting bills of exchange or issuing negotiable instruments, but it leaves it to the memorandum and articles of association to confer or withhold such a power. The P. Railways Company was incorporated under the Act, and by its memorandum its main objects were stated, and it was provided that the company might do whatsoever they, from time to time, should think incidental or conductive thereto: Held, that under this provision the power of accepting bills or issuing negotiable instruments was conferred. The articles of association provided that the board of directors should have the general conduct of the company's business, and especially the doing of all things, and the making and performing of all contracts, which in their judgment were necessary and proper for carrying into effect the object mentioned in the memorandum: Held, that under this provision the power above referred to was delegated to the directors, although there was no mention, eo nomine, of bills of exchange, &c. The order of Malins, V. C. was affirmed; but as it had proceeded solely upon the ground that the Companies Act of itself conferred the power, the appeal, though dismissed, was dismissed without costs. Although when the bills were given there was no debt due from the acceptors to the drawers, a judgment recovered upon the bills by bona fide holders for value without notice is one which this court will not set aside: (Re The Peruvian Railways Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 644. L. JJ.)

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 28.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

THE Amendments made in the House of Lords to the "Courts of Law Officers Bill" are of such a nature as may probably shelve the Bill for the present Session, as it is not likely they will be accepted by the Commons. The first amendment, moved by Lord Cranworth, vests the appointment to the office of Master and Clerk of the Rules in the Chief Judge of each Court instead of, as at present, in the Lord Lieutenant. It appears that an amendment of exactly the same nature, made by the House of Lords when Lord Lyndhurst was Chancellor, and supported by him (as the present amendment is by the present Lord Chancellor), was rejected by the Commons. The other amendment is also conversant with patronage alone, and gives the appointment of the other officers in each Court to the Chief Judge thereof, instead of to the Judges in common. An attempt was made to introduce this provision into the Bill when passing through the Commons, but failed. The arguments in favour of both amendments are the same, viz., that they are consistent with the practice in England, and have been recommended by the Royal Commission; many, however, are of opinion, that the appointment to the office of Master of the Common Law Courts should continue as at present vested in the Crown. The duties of the office are of vast importance, being judicial as well as ministerial in their character, and not, as in the case of Clerks of the Rules, bringing the Masters into immediate contact with the Judges. There does not therefore appear to be any good grounds for the argument that it is desirable to shift the responsibility, as to the qualification and conduct of those officers, from the Executive to the Judges.

THE recent angry encounter between Chief Justice Bovill and Mr. James, Q.C., the Attorney-General for the Duchy of Lancaster, however much to be deplored, will lead to a full discussion of a subject with which every member of the community is deeply concerned. In giving greater publicity to those unpleasant scenes we disclaim anything like a feeling of satisfaction arising from the fact that England is not wholly free from displays which, if they had occurred in Ireland, would have been designated as peculiarly "Irish brawls." Now, considering the different temperaments of the two races, and the existence in this country of certain disturbing elements which enter largely into the discussion of public topics, it might be fairly expected that exhibitions of temper and angry encounters, even in Courts of Justice, would be of more frequent occurrence here than at the other side of the Channel. But this is a subject which we are not now going to discuss. It does not appear, from the reports of the English papers, on whose side the fault lay. It would seem, however, that the judge appeared to Mr. James to be usurping the functions of the advocate. If this be the fact the determined spirit assumed by counsel redounds highly to his credit; and we hope, if any similar attempt shall be made in Ireland, the Bar will not be found inferior in like manly and independent resistance to any encroachments on the part of the Bench. Such unseemly passages between Bench and Bar must be regretted, as calculated to throw a slur on the administration of justice, which ought not only to be pure but above all suspicion. However, it is of vastly higher importance, that when they do occur, they should be publicly discussed, and that just reprobation should fall on the right person, let him be the most eminent member of the Bench or the Bar.

IN this country, as well as in England, questions of considerable moment have arisen, and have been the subject of discussion in the Courts of Equity, with regard to the powers of a quasi tenant in tail, holding pur auter vie, to make a valid disposition of the estate.

Estates held under this tenure are very general in this country as well as in England, and it is of importance that the law on the subject of their transfer and disposition by will should be clearly understood; the main question of interest is, whether a quasi tenant in tail of an estate held pur auter vie, whether in possession or in remainder, can by his will pass the whole estate; or, in other words, whether he can, by his will, bar the quasi estate tail in remainder after his estate.

This subject has for many years occupied the attention of the judges. So long since as the year 1737, in a case of Norton v. Frecker (1 Atk., 523), Lord Hardwicke, Ch., said that it was determined in the House of Lords, even in the year 1712, in a case of Wastneys v. Chappel (1 Bro. P. C. 457) that "in respect to estates granted in fee, determinable on lives, a Person may take by way of remainder, as a special occupant; but that as such an estate tail is not within the statute de donis, nor barrable properly by a recovery as an estate tail, any limitations depending thereupon are entirely in the power of the first taker in tail, and may be destroyed by any conveyance, or even articles in equity;" and he adds that such was decided in Grafton v. Euston, in 1723, in which he was counsel; and to the like effect is the judgment, in the year 1741, of the same learned judge, in Forster v. Forster (2 Atk., 259), where he held that the limitations which in the case of an inheritance would create an estate tail, would, in the case of a freehold, give the party the whole interest, so as to empower him to dispose of it. Again, in the case of Saltern v. Saltern (2 Atk., 376), the same judge remarks that "when there is a devise of a lease for years to a man, and if he die without issue, remainder over, there is no doubt but that the whole interest vests in the first taker; otherwise, if it had been a lease for lives, for there the first taker had a power over it only during his own life to have disposed of it, but if he makes no use of that power, immediately upon his death it vests in the remainder man who takes as a special occupant."

On the other hand, Lord Redesdale, in Campbell v. Sandys (1 S. & L., 294), differed with that doctrine, and said that no decision warranted it, and he referred to Blake v. Blake (3 P. W., 10 N. 1), where it was considered that a will could not have such an operation; and that has been followed in Ireland by the case of Lessee of Hopkins v. Ramage (1 Batty, 365), where it was held that a quasi tenant in tail cannot bar by a testamentary disposition the quasi entail and remainders.

The point has, in more moderntimes, received great consideration, especially at the hands of Lord St. Leonards, when Lord Chancellor of Ireland. In the case of Allen v. Allen (2 Dr. & W., 307), the law on this subject is fully gone into—and there it was held that a tenant quasi in tail of an estate held pur auter vie, if in possession, may, by act inter vivos, deal with the entail as if no settlement existed; but that a quasi tenant in tail in remainder cannot, without the concurrence of the tenant for life, defeat the subsequent remainders. In that case the Chancellor says:—"A quasi tenant in tail in remainder has, strictly speaking, no estate; he has a mere expectancy of filling up, by special occupancy, the vacancy upon the death of the tenant for life, which, if there were no special occupant, would be the subject of general occupancy"—and with great clearness he examined and observed upon all the cases on the subject, and his decision was, that a quasi tenant in tail in possession may, by alienation, even before issue born, by an act inter vivos, defeat the settlement—but that he could not do so by his will; and accordingly, in page 327, his Lordship says:—"A quasi tenant in tail in possession has complete power over the estate to bar the entail and the remainders over; he may, by any act inter vivos, deal with the estate precisely as if there had never been any settlement. No technicalities are required. He need not declare his intention of barring the quasi entail. It is sufficient if he do any act which would vest in him a new or different estate," and he refers to a number of cases to sustain his position. But in page 332, he considers the case of a quasi tenant in tail in remainder, and he there considered that the concurrence of the tenant for life was essential to enable the quasi tenant in tail in remainder to bar the subsequent limitations.

This appears to be the rational and legal view of the matter—viz., that by any disposition taking effect inter vivos, a quasi tenant in tail in possession has full disposition of the estate; but that a tenant in tail in remainder of such an estate must have the concurrence of the tenant for life; and to that extent the dicta of Lord Hardwicke, which are equivocal and indefinite, may be satisfied.

In fact, an estate pur auter vie is, in a legal sense, inferior in degree to that for one's own life (Co. Litt., 41, a); and therefore a grant by a tenant pur auter vie generally, without words of limitation, is construed as a grant for the life of the grantor only, and a devise can have no greater effect (see Co. Litt., 41, b; and also see Crozier v. Crozier, 3 D. & W., 373).

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In re ADRIEN'S Trusts and the Trustee Relief Act.

May 14, 1867.—Trustee Relief Act—Minor Legatees Wards of Court—Guardian—Payment of Dividends.

Bridget Darling, by her will, bequeathed a sum of £800 to her executors and trustees, upon trust, to invest the same, and to apply the interest thereof, for the support, maintenance, and education of her grandson, John Joseph Adrien, until he should attain the age of 21 years, and, upon his attaining that age, to pay and transfer the said sum to him. The testatrix also bequeathed a sum of £400 to her said trustees and executors, upon trust, to invest it, and apply the interest for the maintenance, support, and education of her granddaughter, Anne Mary Adrien, until she should attain the age of 21, or marry under that age, and on her attaining that age, or marrying under that age, to transfer the same to her. The testatrix died in December, 1866, and the executors lodged the amount of the said legacies in Court under the Trustee Relief Act.

A petition was presented on behalf of the legatees by Eliza Mary Adrien, their mother and next friend, which stated that their father was dead, that they were of the ages of eight and six years, that their mother had no means, except a pension of £50 a year, and they had only a pension of £12 a year each, and praying that their mother might be appointed guardian of the persons and fortune of the said minors, and that the dividends of the sums lodged in Court, which had been invested in stock, might be paid to her for their support, maintenance, and education.

Jordan, for the petitioners, cited In the matter of the trusts of Hodges' will (3 K. & J. 213), to show that the minor petitioners had become wards of Court, by the lodgment of the amount of the legacies bequeathed to them, under the Trustee Relief Act.

The MASTER of the ROLLS made the order according to the prayer of the petition, the mother undertaking to apply the dividends to the maintenance and support of the minors.

M'CARTHY v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE SOUTH DUBLIN UNION.

July 5, 9.—Corporation—Poor Law—Medical Charities Act.

Heron, Q.C., with him O'Moore and Keogh, on behalf of the plaintiff, showed cause against a conditional order to set aside the verdict had for the plaintiff, or to enter a verdict for the defendant. The action was brought for work and labour done by the plaintiff as apothecary at the Meath-street Dispensary. The defence was a traverse of the work and labour. The plaintiff was an apothecary, and one of the four appointed under the Medical Charities Act for the South Dublin Union by the Dispensary Committee of that district. On the approach of the cholera last year the Dispensary Committee met, and passed a resolution that each of the four apothecaries should be in readiness at all times, both by day and by night, to furnish medicine to applicants. On the 16th October a resolution was passed by the Board of Guardians ordering extra remuneration to the four apothecaries, at the rate of one guinea a week each, for the time during which the extra duties imposed on them by reason of the prevalence of cholera should continue, and three payments were made to the plaintiff. The present action was brought by him to recover the remainder of the sum alleged by him to be due for these services. It was proved that he had performed his duties faithfully, but the Guardians resisted the claim on the grounds, first, that they, as distinguished from the Dispensary Committee, had not contracted with the plaintiff at all; 2ndly, that they, as a corporation, could not be bound by a contract unless it was made under their seal; 3rdly, that in order to make the extra remuneration enforceable it should have been sanctioned by the Poor Law Commissioners, and that that had not been shown to be done.

Shaw, Q.C., appeared for the defendants.

O'BRIEN, J., and GEORGE, J., held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

FITZGERALD, J., dissented.

Cause shown allowed, with costs.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before LYNCH, J.

In re the Estate of J. DE BURGH LYNCH.

June 13.—Compensation.—Fixture.

Gerald Fitzgibbon applied on behalf of James Campbell, the purchaser of Lot No. 3 of the premises sold in this matter, that £20 might be given him as compensation under the following circumstances:—

Mr. Campbell's affidavit stated that the premises in question were advertised to be sold on the 20th of March, 1866; that he was desirous of purchasing Lot No. 3, being a store in Galway; that previously to the sale he inspected the place and saw there a valuable iron safe, which had been erected and was permanently embedded in the premises; that he bid £75, which was the highest offer, and which was not approved of; that on the 19th of March, 1867, the premises were again set up for sale, when he bid £100, and offered to pay in addition £36 10s. 6d., being the amount of rent which had accrued due in the meantime; that this offer was brought before the Court, and he was declared the purchaser; that he lodged the purchase-money, and again inspected the premises, when he discovered that the safe had been removed, and a portion of the wall torn down; that he was informed that it had been removed by Mr. De Burgh Lynch, one of the owners; that he was impressed with the belief that the safe was still there, and would not have made the last offer if he had known it was not.

The attention of the solicitor having carriage was called to this, and he says, in a letter to us, "If you think you are entitled to compensation I will not oppose your application." We presume that the safe was removed before the sale, but without doubt, it was not removed before the publication of the rental, and it was part of the premises put up for sale. The principles relating to specifice performance are the same in this Court as in the Court of Chancery.—Fry on Specific Performance.

Nolan, for the solicitor having carriage. This estate is insolvent, and, therefore, the creditors are the parties who will suffer if this motion be granted. An iron safe is not necessarily a fixture. Trade fixtures are removable.—Chitty on Contracts, 332. It was said damage was done to the wall, but compensation is not claimed for that damage. We knew nothing of this removal, and would not have sanctioned it. If waste were being committed, it is not clear, but that the proper remedy would be to apply for an injunction against the parties committing it.

Gerald Fitzgibbon replied.

Lynch, J.—I think this is a case in which it is reasonable to give compensation. The removal of the safe took place after the rental was published, and the premises were inspected. It was an existing thing when the rental was prepared, and when the premises were inspected, and the purchaser swears that he was deceived, and would not have bid as he did if he had known of its removal. It is not clear to me that it is not a fixture. It was so firmly attached that the freehold was considerably injured by taking it away. Allowing compensation, I will give time to ascertain whether the sum asked for is reasonable.

[It was then arranged to take £13 to cover the damage, and costs of the application.]

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by J. Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Judge Miller.

In re James Byrne, a Bankrupt.

August 2nd.—Conduct as a Trader—Pledging Goods bought from wholesale Merchants—Giving a full account—Suspension of Certificate.

The bankrupt was a grocer and spirit dealer in Thomas-street, in this city, and now came up for final examination. Levy, instructed by Meldon, was for the assignees, and objected to the passing of the examination, or at all events to his obtaining a certificate for a very lengthened period. The case had been previously before the Court, when the bankrupt was examined touching his conduct generally as a trader, but particularly as regarded his dealings with a bill-discounter and money-lender. The money-lender was examined on a previous day, and from his examination it appeared that interest at the rate of at least thirty per cent. was charged for advances, the lender having besides, teas and wines deposited with him fully sufficient to cover the money so advanced. The bankrupt was directed to furnish an account of the goods lodged with the money-lender, and the date of lodgment, and the following account was rendered:—June 5, 1856, Bought four chests of tea; June 7, transferred; March 16, tea and sherry bought; March 24, transferred; 14th June, three chests of tea bought; June 16, transferred; July 20, three quarter casks of sherry bought; July 24, transferred; October 12, one chest of tea bought; same day transferred; November 7, nine packages of tea bought; transferred on the 11th; November 24, six packages of tea bought; December 18, transferred; November 27, six packages bought; November 29, transferred; January 21, 1867, four quarter casks of port wine bought; transferred on the 11th of February; March 14, eight chests of tea bought; transferred on the 11th of April; January 18, two chests of tea bought; transferred on the 31st.

The money raised on the goods thus pledged amounted to about £260, and the rate of interest paid was something about thirty per cent.; as a natural result failure and bankruptcy followed. Levy now, on the part of the creditors, called on the Court either to adjourn the examination sine die, or postpone the granting of the certificate for a very lengthened period.

Stewart, for the bankrupt, said his Lordship was bound to pass the examination, as the man had given a full account, but he admitted that some stay might be put on the certificate.

Judge Miller said he would pass the examination, but he would be guilty of a gross violation of his duty if he allowed such a case to pass without punishment, and he was at a loss to know how he could adequately punish him. The case was a disgrace to the trade of Dublin, and if such a system were allowed to exist, the Bankrupt Court might as well be shut up, and the wholesale merchants might as well close their places of business. Here was a man buying their goods, and pawning them with a usurer, in the vain hope of keeping up trade by money thus raised. His attorney said that having got into the usurer's hands he could not get out of them; but instead of going to such persons he should have appealed at once to the merciful and liberal provisions of the bankrupt law. He would suspend the certificate for two years.

CIRCUIT CASES.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.

Reported by William Griffin, Esq., Barrister-at-law

Cork Summer Assizes, 1867.

Dalton, Appellant; Barlow, Respondent.

Ejectment for non-payment of Rent—Set-off—L. & T. Act.

Ejectment for non-payment of rent. The defendant sought to set-off a debt due to him by the plaintiff, and so defend the ejectment by showing that there was not a year's rent due.

Murphy, Q.C., and W. M. Johnson, for the defendant. The 48th sec. of the Landlord and Tenant Act (23 & 24 Vic., c. 154) enables the tenant to set-off against the landlord's claim any just debts due to him by the landlord. This must apply to ejectment, otherwise the section was unnecessary.

O'Brien for the plaintiff. The set-off cannot be relied on in an action of ejectment. The 54th sec. of the Landlord and Tenant Act, which regulates ejectments for non-payment of rent, entitles the landlord to a decree when there is a year's rent due "after all just and fair allowances." The language of the 85th sec., providing for ejectments in the case of cottier tenancies, shows that the legislature did not mean to include "debts" from the landlord to the tenant under these words. That action requires one gale of rent to be due "over and above all just credits and allowances, and any valid set-off." "Claims and demands" in the 48th sec. refers to actions for the recovery of the rent, covenant, &c. Sec. 48 is amongst the sections regulating actions for the recovery of rent, and the first section of the Act which is conversant with ejectments is the 52nd. The rent cannot be recovered at all in an action of ejectment in the Civil Bill Court. Mr. Justice Fitzgerald is stated to have been of opinion, that a set-off could not be relied on in ejectment for non-payment of rent (De Moleyns, L. O. G. 199, n).

Keogh, J.—I have no doubt in this case. I am clearly of opinion the set-off is not admissible to defend the ejectment.

ENGLAND.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday, Aug. 5.

The Chancellor took his seat at five o'clock.

Courts of Law Officers (Ireland) Bill.

Their lordships went into committee on this bill.

Lord Cranworth rose to move the insertion of a clause. In England each law court appointed its own officers, and Lord Coke three centuries ago laid it down as one of the characteristic advantages of the English courts of law that the officers of the courts were appointed by the heads of the court, who were responsible for their conduct. In Ireland the practice was, and had been, different. Early in the reign of George IV. a revision took place in the Irish courts, under which the Master in the courts and one other officer were to be selected, not by the heads of the court, but by the Lord Lieutenant. That was an extraordinary provision, which would not have been tolerated for a moment in England. In the 7th and 8th of Victoria, when Lord Lyndhurst was Chancellor, further inquiry was made, and a bill was introduced regulating the Irish courts. That bill, which first passed through the other house, made no alteration in regard to the appointment of the Master and the other officer by the Crown. Lord Campbell, when the bill reached their lordships' house, pointed out the anomaly that the selection of these officers should be any other than a judicial selection. Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst entirely concurred, and a clause was introduced giving the appointment to the Chief Justices of the courts. The House of Commons thought, however, that such a clause would rob the Castle of a certain degree of patronage which it ought to possess. When the bill came back to their lordships' house Lord Lyndhurst, to his great honour, adhered to the clause, and went into the lobby against the Government of which he was a member. The Government, however, obtained a majority, and the clause was struck out. A Royal Commission was not long since issued to inquire into the state of affairs in the different Courts of Common Law and Equity in this country and in Ireland. That commission unanimously recommended that in Ireland, as in England, the appointment of chief officers to the courts should be vested in the judges of those courts, and he was surprised to find that in this bill, for no possible object, except that of bestowing patronage on the Lord Lieutenant, it was proposed to continue the old system. The noble and learned lord concluded by proposing a clause providing that vacancies in the office of Master or of Clerk to the Rules in any of the superior courts of common law should be filled up by the judge of such court.

The Lord Chancellor found himself in the same position that Lord Lyndhurst occupied in 1844, in being compelled to support the amendment of his noble and learned friend. It was most unreasonable to vest in the Irish Government the appointments of these officers. The bill professed to be founded on the report of the commissioners, and he could not conceive any reason for disregarding their recommendation in this respect. The present arrangement was one which ought never to have existed.

The Earl of Kimberley could see no reason for vesting this patronage in the Irish Executive. It was more important, even in Ireland than in England, that these officers should have no connexion with the Government.

Lord Cranworth's clause was then agreed to.

Lord Cairns proposed an amendment providing that the junior officers in each court should be appointed by the Chief Judge thereof, instead of by the Judges in common. This proposal was consistent with the practice in England, and with the report of the commissioners, and it would avoid divided responsibility.

The Lord Chancellor supported the amendment, which was agreed to, and the bill passed through commit.ee.

Thursday, Aug. 8.

The Courts of Law Officers (Ireland) Bill was (amongst others) read a third time, and passed.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

The Manchester Guardian reports an extraordinary altercation between Chief Justice Bovill and Mr. E. James, in the assize court. In the course of a case Mr. Jones called for some papers from the gentleman instructing the other side, and they were handed, through Mr. Jones, to the Judge. While his lordship was examining them, Mr. James said that he should like to be informed what was going on, and complained that the Judge was conducting the case differently to the usual custom of the court. He said he thought the papers produced should be read, so that both sides might hear what they related to. The Judge replied that a large mass of papers had been produced, and before they were read he preferred to see them. If it had not been the practice for the court to exercise that preference he would introduce it. Mr. James said that such a course would be exceedingly inconvenient to the bar. The Judge said he should adopt his own course. Mr. James said he had never known such a course taken before. The matter then dropped for a time, but was soon after again referred to.

Mr. James said he had been forty years at the bar, and had never seen such a course adopted. He regretted that his lordship had introduced a plan so inconvenient to the bar.

The Judge—I have never heard such an objection raised before—that a series of delivery notes should be handed in, and that any one should object to the judge looking at them, and should require them to be read by the officer of the court.

Mr. James—Before that is done I wish to see them myself, that they are properly produced.

The Judge—That was not your objection.

Mr. James—My objection was that your interposition prevents the counsel from conducting their case in the way they have been accustomed.

The Judge—Mr. Jones was conducting his own case. It does not prevent your going on.

Mr. James—It does prevent me going on, and I am entitled to say that it prevents other counsel also.

The Judge (to Mr. Jones)—Does it prevent you?

Mr. Jones—No, your lordship.

The Judge—When you are prevented or interfered with I will hear your objection. As the case goes on I propose to look at the papers, and assist the jury and the court. Mr. Jones was not interrupted, and I shall not permit you to interrupt me.

Mr. James—Of course I am bound to yield to the court.

The Judge—And it is only because you are bound that you yield the slightest deference to the court. I am sorry to say it.

Mr. James—We should get on much better if your lordship permitted us to go on our own way.

The Judge—Mr. Jones is conducting his case. Do you wish these papers to be read by the officers of the court?

Mr. James did not reply.

The Judge—That is the deference you pay to the court This is not the first time I have had occasion——

Mr. James—Really this is most distressing.

The Judge—I asked you in terms loud enough for any gentleman to hear if you wished these papers to be read.

Mr. James—Your lordship is the only gentleman on the bench who makes these remarks. There must be some cause——

The Judge—I spoke in terms loud enough to be heard. I asked if the Attorney General wished these papers to be read.

Mr. James—I do not wish them to be read.

The cause was then gone on with.

During the progress of a trial, also at Manchester, some days after, another squabble, which appears to have been enjoyed by a crowded court, is thus reported:—

Mr. James, the Attorney-General, differed with the Chief Justice as to the terms of a question put to a witness by one of the jurors.

As the discussion was proceeding,

The Chief Justice suddenly stopped it, and, addressing the Attorney-General, said—I must beg you will not contradict me so peremptorily.

The Attorney-General—My lord, I did not. I said I must insist on the rights of the Bar, and I will have them.

The Chief Justice—You shall have the rights of the Bar, and of clients, to the fullest possible extent; but you must respect the position of the judge who presides.

The Attorney-General—I respect your position undoubtedly.

The Chief Justice—I very much regret to hear the leader of the Bar make use of such remarks, conveyed in such terms, and in such a manner.

The Attorney-General—I am sorry there should be occasion for it.

LIMITED COMPANIES' FINANCIAL POWERS.

From The Law Times.

The creatures of the Act of 1862, like their betters, which have been dignified with Acts passed for their special benefit, struggle to save themselves by all the devices that render financial engineering famous. Amalgamation, reconstruction, preference dividends, consolidation of shares, splitting of shares, and all protean shapes of joint-stock existence, are tried, so that sweet existence be only prolonged, and Minos and Rhadamanthus of the dread chambers of Lincoln's inn for a time avoided. No wonder, then, that in the general effort men's minds are carried away from the fundamental provisions of the constitution of limited companies. Yet those provisions are very stringent, and the power to change the foundation is jealously confined. Even Lord Westbury, in Hutton v. The Scarborough Cliff Hotel Company (12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 290), did not guard his language sufficiently when he said that "any company may modify its memorandum of association if authorized to do so by the regulations" (meaning those of the articles of association), "as originally framed, or as altered by special resolution." Some such want of precision, probably, led to that assumption of power by the Financial Corporation, which recently brought Holme's, Pritchard's, and other cases of its shareholders before the Lords Justices (16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 684) on appeal from the Master of the Rolls.

The case before Lord Westbury was one of an attempted creation of preference shares in the Hotel Company, against which Kindersley, V. C., had granted an injunction; and Lord Westbury, in refusing to discharge the Vice-Chancellor's order, while he considered such a creation to be contrary to the memorandum of association of the company, would not say conclusively whether it could not be done by a special resolution altering the articles of association. The memorandum, he observed, directed that the capital should be divided into a certain number of shares of a certain amount each, which showed that these shares were necessarily inter se equal, and of equal rights and privileges. It is to such an inexact view of the relation between the articles and the memorandum that we desire to draw attention. If that relation had been fully perceived, one can scarcely imagine how the difficulty in Re The Financial Corporation should have arisen.

The nominal capital of the Financial Corporation was £30,000, in shares of £100 each, subject, according to the memorandum of association, to be increased or modified; then the articles provided that the board of directors might either reduce the nominal value of the shares, by dividing them into a greater number, or consolidate them into shares of a larger nominal value. After 15,000 shares of £100 had been issued, the board reduced the shares to £20 each, so that for each of the 15,000 (£5 paid) five new shares (£1 paid) were given in exchange. The list forwarded to the registrar of companies was of the £20 shares, but he refused to receive it; nevertheless, the company treated the conversion as valid. Now the relation between the memorandum and the articles of association is clearly defined by the 12th section of the Act. First, in a company limited by shares, there are five things to be contained in the memorandum. The name, the registered office, the objects, the limit of liability, and "the amount of capital with which the company proposes to be registered divided into shares of a certain fixed amount." The fixed amount, be it remarked, is express and clear. The conditions in the memorandum may be so far modified by the company "as to increase its capital, by the issue of new shares of such amount as it thinks expedient, or to consolidate and divide its capital into shares of larger amount than its existing shares, or to convert its paid-up shares into stock;" but otherwise, except as to a change of name, which is provided for by a subsequent section, "no alteration shall be made by any company in the conditions contained in its memorandum of association." As to the capital, then, there can only be three changes at all, increase of it by issue of new shares of any amount, consolidation of shares, and conversion into stock. In these three particulars, too, the allowed modifications must, by the 15th section, be made under authority of the articles of association as originally framed, or as altered by a "special" resolution. There resides, therefore, no power whatever in a company, whether by its memorandum or by its articles, original or altered, to make any other than the three specified changes in its capital; and the capital itself must, in the memorandum of association, be divided into shares of a certain fixed amount. Consequently it is directly contrary to the Act to say in the memorandum, as was said by the corporation, that the amount shall be subject to be increased or modified, or anything of the kind. If this expression was used by the corporation with a view to some power to be given by the articles, then "modified" could not possibly mean reduced, since the 12th section, while it permits consolidation into shares of larger amount, forbids any other alteration of the shares.

We dwell on these fundamental provisions of the Act, because we judge from many cases which come before the courts that there is an impression that a company may mould its capital almost as it pleases, either by authority conferred by its articles, as originally made, or as varied by a special resolution; whereas in truth the company's powers are restricted, as we have seen, within narrow and well-defined bounds. The policy of not permitting shares to be reduced in amount was explained by Lord Cairns in the recent case which we have mentioned. Consolidation, he remarked, was an incident to which the company was subject; a subdivision of shares on the other hand, if valid at all, must be valid to whatever extent it might be carried, and thus creditors of the company might, upon a winding-up, be left, and left without any previous notice given them by Act of Parliament, with the unpaid capital of the company scattered through such a number of hands that the sum recoverable from each would not pay for the trouble and expense of collection. Regard to the rights of creditors has also, no doubt, influenced the Legislature not to give limited companies any power to reduce their capital. It is plain from what appears above, that they have no such power; yet in this very case of The Contract Corporation there was a provision in the articles that the board might "reduce the nominal amount of the capital for the time being."

In a general way, the justice of this policy may be admitted; but we think it must also be admitted that the total inability of a limited company to reduce its capital, be it by diminishing the amount of the shares or their number, is not consistent with that liberty of action which should in some shape or other be reserved to all commercial bodies. In one shape it may be contended that the liberty does exist indirectly; but this very indirectness is a clumsy absurdity. Thus, a company may, if it wishes to reduce its capital, wind itself up voluntarily, cease to exist, and in the same moment rise again, by means of a transfer under the 161st section, of all its property through the liquidators to a new company formed under a slight change of name, but in all other respects the same, in consideration of shares in the new company—La compagnie est morte, vive la compagnie. Such winding up involves theoretically payment and satisfaction of all the company's liabilities; but in fact, we suppose, they are seldom paid or satisfied when a company is so reconstructed. Probably an arrangement is made with them. Why, then, should not power be given to limited companies to reduce their capital with the consent of their creditors, or of a binding majority of them? If the creditors would be content, why should Parliament be discontent?

Here is an instance of what was very lately noticed in this journal, the inexpedient way in which Parliament interposes between the partnerships called companies and their creditors. We doubted whether all that the cumbrous machinery of registration can effect might not as well be done by some regulations applicable to the counting-house of the associate traders. It is usual to talk about the public having an opportunity of informing itself of this and that particular by means of a registry. But the public as a public cares nothing about nineteen companies out of twenty that are established. A trader's public are his customers and his creditors, or, so far as concerns the purpose we are now considering, his creditors only. What appears to be wanted is a code of law to be operative immediately between a limited trader or limited body of traders—for there seems to be no difference in principle between the two cases—and the creditors, just as the common or other law of partnership operates in commerce where there is no limit of liability. The statutory apparatus, which at the present moment is entangling everybody and obstructing the courts, is meant for the protection of the creditor; but it seems never to have occurred to the Legislature that, while by the Bankruptcy Act of 1861 they treated the creditor as a full grown man who must look out for himself; by the Companies Act of 1862 he is still kept a child, who must run in a statutory go-cart. If a creditor of a company should require information on the points revealed at the registry of companies, he can very well ask the company for the information in the counting-house before he risks anything. If he does not want the information, then it is of no use to him in either place. The delusion is, that somehow or other creditors are protected because there is an official repository of particulars by Act of Parliament. But all these matters might, for any useful purpose, be just as well kept on the desk with the company's account-books. If a company failed to keep them there ready for inspection, the simple consequence would be that any one who wished to inspect them would refuse to trust the company. Laissez faire. An Act of a dozen or half-a-dozen sections might do the business. There would be no occasion even to make twenty things misdemeanours for which no one ever thinks of prosecuting. Misdemeanour to protect credit is a proved failure. From beginning to end it has turned out a mistake to suppose that credit can be kept in a sound or safe state by statutory mechanism. Caveat creditor. Worship in temples set up by Parliament in the shape of Companies Acts is the superstition of the day. The priests are the financiers, who, like the augurs of old, laugh in each others' faces when they meet. There is one other class which gathers some offerings from the devotees—a fact, proving with what disinterestedness the subject is here treated by us—the lawyers.

THE BAR AND TRADES' UNIONS.

The question whether the Bar is a Trades' Union is one frequently asked. It is also a question to which replies are given with a good deal of hasty dogmatism and ignorance. It is constantly said by artisans and their friends that the learned professions are, under very dignified names, essentially societies in restraint of trade; and from this assertion the inference is drawn that no objection can be brought against a trade society which cannot with equal force be brought against the Bar. On the other hand lawyers who know that there is a great deal of fallacy in the comparison drawn between the laws of the Bar and the rules of Trades' Unions are often ready to assert that the supposed resemblance is perfectly fanciful; that the career of a lawyer is a perfectly open career, ruled by no other laws than the principles of free trade. Between zealots for Trades' Unions and zealots for professional dignity, the public is likely not to learn the truth. It may not indeed, of itself, be of great consequence whether the Bar does or does not in some degree resemble the associations formed by workmen. For to a candid mind it would appear that neither the likeness nor want of likeness between learned professions and trade societies greatly advances the argument either for or against the latter. But it is always worth while to clear away popular misconceptions; and since there really are points both of likeness and of dissimilarity between the Bar and a Trades' Union, it may be of some service to persons who wish to know the truth, to point out distinctly wherein the similarity and the dissimilarity consists.

In the first place the profession of the law is like a trade under the rule of a guild, in that it is a close or protected profession. No man, for example, can be called without a delay of at least three years, and the payment of somewhere between £100 and £120. The whole arrangements, further, of circuit, as well as other arrangements which might be mentioned, add considerably to what may be termed the natural expense of the Bar; and thus, though poor men often in spite of difficulties rise to eminence as lawyers, there is, nevertheless, a real and effective barrier raised against the pressure into the Bar of any large number of persons who can be fairly called poor. It is, of course, extremely hard to estimate the extent to which existing barristers gain by this system of protection. That they are protected is indubitable.

The Bar is in the second place like a Trades' Union, in that it restrains the freedom of its members. That this is so is indeed occasionally disputed, but a little reflection will show any candid person the truth of the assertion. There are many courses of action open to an honest tradesman in pursuit of his business which are not open even to an unscrupulous barrister. Thus no barrister can advertise his merits, can enter into partnership with an attorney, can pay an attorney a commission on business, or can, at least avowedly, take less than what has been called the regulation fee, that is, speaking generally, a fee of one guinea. These restrictions on individual freedom are some of them obviously wise, and all of them defensible; but they are restrictions upon individual liberty quite as certainly as are rules which prevent the member of a trade from taking more than a given number of apprentices, or from working more than a given number of hours.

The Bar, again, resembles a Trades' Union, in that it supports rules which are meant to check, and to some degree do check competition amongst its members. Of such a character are regulations against a change of circuit or sessions, and laws which confine a barrister's activity to a particular circuit. Moreover, the system of enforced division of labour, under which head may be included the distinction mantained between ibarristers and pleaders, restrains competition. The distinction between attorneys and barristers may itself be considered under the head either of a protective arrangement, or of a hindrance to competition amongst the members of what is in a wide sense of the term the same profession.

Another feature in which the Bar resembles a Union is that it maintains its rules by bringing to bear on individuals the pressure of professional feeling. It is, indeed, possible greatly to overestimate the force of this pressure. Whatever other penalties a barrister might incur by defying the opinion of his profession, he certainly would not be "rattened." Not only life and limb, but wig and gown would be perfectly safe, whatever the bad opinion held of him by his circuit. But, on the other hand, if it is possible to exaggerate, it is equally possible greatly to underrate the force by which the laws of the Bar are maintained. A barrister, it has been said, if not quite accurately yet with substantial truth, may break every rule of legal etiquette if only he is prepared to leave the circuit mess. This is true. The error is to treat expulsion from the circuit mess as though it were a light penalty. A man of an unsocial turn might not greatly regret losing the doubtful wit of circuit courts. But any one who was expelled from the mess would find that he had lost far more than the opportunity of associating with the members of his profession. He would almost certainly experience great difficulty in the successful pursuit of his professional career. In all professions, and at the Bar, perhaps, more than others, success is, to a great extent, dependent upon the goodwill of one's associates. A man who had defied the opinion of his circuit would find that he had lost all the goodwill of those with whom his business necessarily brought him into contact. He would be very lucky if he did not suffer from their ill-will. He would, at any rate, incur all the disadvantages—and professionally they are enormous—of being under a social ban. No doubt he might find some compensation in neglecting the rules by which other barristers are bound, but the compensation would be dearly purchased. He might gain some low business from some low attorneys, but such attorneys are not always very punctual in their payments; and the man who, having defied all the rules of the Bar, relies on his unscrupulosity to gain him doubtful business, may no doubt extend his practice, but will rarely become a Queen's Counsel, and will never become a judge.

It is, of course, true that the rules of the Bar are extremely vague and changeable. Thus, at one time, it was considered a breach of etiquette for a barrister to lodge at an hotel whilst on circuit. Now on some circuits the rule has entirely broken down; on others, it is of very doubtful validity. The same remark applies to some of the regulations as to the social relations between barristers and attorneys when on circuit. It is further true that no one can tell whether, in any given case, a severe penalty, such as expulsion from the mess, would actually be enforced for the breach of a universally acknowledged Bar rule; but it must be remembered that the mere chance of incurring a severe penalty is often sufficient to deter from the breach of a law, if that law be supported by general approval.

Still, if the Bar is marked by traits common to Trade Societies, it is in some important respects utterly unlike any Union. The main points of disimilarity arse as follows:—

The Bar enforces its laws wholly, or almost wholly, by the power of professional opinion. This power is exerted openly, and in the face of day. If the Bar is a guild it is a guild of no secret laws. Again, though the Bar does aim, though not very effectively, at keeping up a minimum of wages, it makes no attempt whatever to fix a maximum. A successful barrister may take, and in practice does take, any fee, however large, which his client thinks it worth while to pay. Hence, whatever other evils the laws of the Bar produce—and they produce some considerable evils—they do not produce the special evil of placing a limit upon the reward attainable by individual genius.

The main point, however, in which the Bar differs from any Trades' Union is that it occupies a public, or, so to speak, official position. A barrister has peculiar legal rights, and suffers from peculiar legal disabilities. The law, on the one hand, protects him from the competition of persons not called to the Bar, and also gives him the anomalous privilege of not being sued for incompetence in the management of his business. On the other hand, he is legally incapacitated from entering into a contract for his services as a lawyer. In other words he cannot sue for his fees. From these circumstances, the rules of the Bar have a double character. They are in part simple trade rules for the real or supposed benefit of the guild; but they are also rules for the real or supposed benefit of the public. Whether these rules are, on the whole, really for the benefit either of the Bar or of the public is an important question well worth consideration; but as long as the Bar is in a sense an official body, its rules rest on a different basis from the laws of a trade and may be defended on grounds not available in defence of the rules of a Union.—The Chronicle.

JUDGES AND COUNSEL.

(From the Pall Mall Gazette.)

The remarks we made some short time ago upon the relative position of judges and counsel were conspicuously illustrated by an altercation reported to have taken place last week in a large manufacturing town in the North. Unfortunately, such altercations have been far from rare during the present year. Hitherto, though of frequent occurrence, they have not been noticed in the press. The reporters for the papers at Westminster and Guildhall are themselves members of the bar, and, as such, are very properly impressed with the idea that whatever little squabbles they may witness between the judges and the members of their profession, it is a mistake to expose the foul linen to a washing in public. Though publicity is the safeguard of our courts, and the press a most valuable organ in exposing, and thereby restraining, the errors of judges, to note every little squabble or display of temper on the part of the bench or the bar would serve no purpose except that of pampering the craving appetite for something sensational. At the same time it is not improbable that had more notice been taken of the scenes now so familiar to members of the profession, and to all frequenters of one of the courts of common law, the altercation we have mentioned would never have occurred. Apparently one person who appears to be ignorant of their occurrence, or at least not to understand their significance, is the judge himself, and this could scarcely have been the case had they been commented on by the press. When a certain Queen's Counsel informed his lordship that his interposition prevented counsel conducting cases in the way they were accustomed to, his lordship by his answer evidently showed that his impression was that no counsel felt the grievance except the one who made the complaint. It is to be feared that his appeal to the counsel on the other side is not a satisfactory mode of acquiring correct information. As might have been expected, the learned gentleman had the presence of mind to acquiesce immediately, and the ingenuousness to confess that his lordship's interference materially aided him and saved him trouble. This confession must have been very satisfactory to his client. To secure the aid not only of an eminent leading counsel, but also of a judge who a short time since was himself a most skilful advocate, is a piece of good luck not calculated upon by the generality of suitors at the present day. In what may very properly be termed the dark ages of the profession—in the time of the Stuarts—such aid was not unfrequently obtained by obsequiousness to the bench. Lord Guildford when at the bar was a most consummate sycophant, and used to win his cases by the most servile submissiveness to the judges. Of Maynard it is related that he would sacrifice a poor client to a judge's error, so that having pleased the judge by his apparent acquiescence he would secure his aid in the interests of some more powerful client. Such mean tricks would now simply defeat themselves, for our judges are fortunately of far too high a class to be influenced by such personal motives. Nevertheless, even now it is always a matter of importance for counsel, and especially for junior counsel, to stand well by the judges. A judge in his own court is for the time all-powerful, and it is only natural that counsel in the interests of their clients should endeavour to secure his good opinion. One consequence is that it does not follow that because they do not openly object to the conduct of a judge, they therefore approve it. The reverse is frequently the case. They do disapprove, but they endeavour not to show it. With regard to the judge in question, we venture to say that there is scarcely a barrister who has conducted a cause before him who has not complained of his lordship's interruptions. If his lordship is not aware of the fact, it is for the reasons we have mentioned. That much irritation should be felt is only natural. We will not now refer to former cases, but only to the one which is said to have occurred last week. Of the particular merits or demerits of this individual fracas it is impossible for any one to judge except those who were present in court. In such cases as much depends upon the tone, manner, and gesture as upon the words which are uttered. It reads like an Irish brawl. Strong assertions and equally strong counter-assertions, unenlivened by one grain of wit or one single good mot, make up the whole affair. The asseveration of a judge that if a certain thing were not the practice of the court he would introduce it as an assertion of the "I can and I will" doctrine of irresponsible power which is only comic because it is harmless; while the reference of counsel to the "gentleman on the bench" must have sounded oddly in the ears of those accustomed to the language ordinarily addressed to her Majesty's judges. But the burden of the grievance was the judge's interference in the conduct of the case; and there can be no possible doubt that such interference is a great annoyance to counsel, and inflicts serious injustice upon all parties concerned. Bacon's dictum that "an over-speaking judge is no well-tuned cymbal," is as true now as it was in his day, and it would serve well for a phylactery for judicial personages. For the conduct of a case is a matter of peculiar nicety. The outside public may think that a great orator is necessarily a good barrister, but an attorney in good practice knows that far above eloquence or wit, or even learning, is to be ranked discretion in the management of a case. An action is a battle, and the leading counsel on either side are the generals, and in the marshalling of their facts, the production of evidence, and in the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, all depends upon the manner in which they present their case to the jury. To interrupt them and take the conduct of the case out of their hands is to upset and discourage all their plans. In cross-examination this is especially so. A good cross examiner frequently asks a question with apparently no bearing on the case, and by so doing leads a witness on step by step to say what he requires. One answer suggests another question, and the essence of the whole process is for the witness to be left alone in the hands of the cross-examining counsel. If the examination is to be interrupted every time the judge wants to satisfy his own mind upon some particular point, the whole sequence of question and answer is spoilt, and cross-examination rendered entirely nugatory. When it is over, the judge has his time to ask any question he desires without interfering with counsel on either side.

It is sincerely to be hoped that such scenes as those to which we have alluded will not occur again. At the bar, the judge to whom we have referred had a high reputation, and was as much and as justly valued for his social qualities as for his legal ability. Of the Queen's Counsel who has held his own before him it may be said with truth that no member of the profession could possibly possess a higher character for integrity and straightforwardness of purpose than he does. Of his ability it is enough to say that by it alone he has risen to his present position, and that is more than can be said of all successful members of the profession. It is, indeed, a pity when such men fall out, and especially when they do so in an open court of justice. For the comfort of all concerned, and for the public interest, it is desirable that a good understanding and friendly feeling should subsist between judges and counsel. It should be the aim of every judge to be able to say in like circumstances what Sir William Erle said to the crowd of barristers who had assembled to do him honour upon his retirement from the bench. One of his greatest consolations he told them, with convincing earnestness, was the conviction he felt that he carried with him the respect and friendship of those members of his former profession who had practised before him.

AN AMERICAN LAWYER IN ENGLAND.*

By being in London one learns something about the administration of justice and the course of law reform which would seldom or never come to the knowledge of an American lawyer at home. But it is, after all, matter of surprise how very little of that which it is most important to know in regard to English jurisprudence may not be fully understood by a careful study of the reports, and a diligent reading of the law journals, and the elementary treatises. And the very little that we do come more fully to understand by a closer inspection, or to understand differently, perhaps, from what we otherwise should, cannot be regarded as altogether of unmixed good.

For instance, one cannot feel quite the same veneration for the wisdom of a decision in the British court of last resort, that august tribunal, the House of Lords, after carefully watching the course of a trial there, that he would from merely reading and reflecting upon the subject. One naturally reflects upon a subject of that character with some reference to the vastness of the interests at stake, and comes to regard the character of the court which gives them their final shape and destination, as important and weighty somewhat in proportion to the vastness or the insignificance of those interests in themselves. And men themselves, while sitting in the seat of justice, evoke greater and nobler powers of reflection, discrimination, and judgment, as the demands for the exercise of such powers rise. Hence we very naturally expect the weight and dignity of the English House of Lords to rise above that of all other judicial tribunals, in proportion as the vastness and variety of the questions finally determined by it are higher and greater than those of almost any other court. But when we come to view it with the naked eye of sense, we feel greatly in danger of losing the ordinary standard of weight and measurement. To an American it has very much the appearance of a trial before a committee of the legislature, with even less form and ceremony, if possible. It is true that lookers-on approach with something more of reserve. They meet more public men and more subordinate officers, and at first blush there is more of authority and solemnity in the going forward of the hearing. But this, so far as any undue reserve is concerned, is rather apparent than real. For the moment one breaks through the crust of this official reserve, he finds himself accepted in the fullest and most cordial manner, and thereafter really treated with more watchfulness of attention, and less of official hauteur than almost anywhere else; so that all one needs, in such cases, is the proper introduction to secure the fullest and most considerate attention; or, if he choose to float along with the mass of spectators, and to conform to the mere outward conventionality, which is by far the readiest and most successful mode of finding out the exterior of judicial procedure everywhere, there will not be the slightest obstacle to standing all day in the purlieus of an English court of justice, or sitting indeed, if one can only find room—and a chair or seat to sit upon.

[After describing the architecture, &c., of the House of Lords in terms of high encomium, the writer proceeds :—]

At the time I watched an argument there for a few minutes, the present Attorney-General, Sir John Rolt, was discussing a Scottish appeal in his usual quiet manner through an opening towards the law lords, which seemed very like a window. The presiding law lord on that occasion was the twice Lord Chancellor, Cranworth, a name almost as familiar as any other in America. The Lord Chancellor, Chelmsford, for some reason was not able to sit that day. My Lord Cranworth was supported on his right by Lord Westbury, the late Lord Chancellor . . . There was every reason to feel that the case was receiving a very patient examination both by Court and counsel. The papers were very voluminous, all being in print, and bound in volumes, and referred to by counsel by the page, when the law lords would very deliberately turn to the place, and after listening to the suggestions of counsel, suggest their own difficulties or doubts and obtain such relief as might be in the power of the advocate to give.

There is one feature in all English courts, so far as we have observed, which is worthy of all commendation; and it is one which we do not always witness in the American courts to the same extent. We mean the entire absence of all apparent anxiety to bend the decision to meet any preconceived theory, either of politics, religion or morals, or even of philosophy. In other words, it is a seeming indifference to the present popular sentiment. We say the present popular sentiment, because we do not intend to intimate that a judge, any more than any other man, should attempt to educate himself up to the point of absolute indifference to a wise, far-seeing, and just public opinion; or that he can, if he would, feel entirely indifferent to that just boon of a good name and fame, which is the inevitable concomitant of worthy actions worthily performed. All we mean is, that a judge as we well as any other public man, or private man indeed, who in all that he says, and all that he does, is measuring himself and his conduct by the low standard of present public opinion, is not likely to accomplish any very heroic deed, or to initiate any very permanent or valuable reforms, either in legislation or general jurisprudence. We can comprehend well enough that even this low standard of judicial action is not the very lowest. There are still many lower depths unexplored we trust, as yet, by any American judicial officer of high grade, and which, unfortunately for the credit of the mother country, and fortunately for the warning of her offspring, have figured but too prominently at different periods in English history. We feel entirely sensible that even a judge, who struggles all his life to keep in with popular sentiment, must be regarded as an amiable and kind hearted man, if nothing more. We certainly could not regard such a man as in any sense a bad man. He could not be classed either with Jeffries or Scroggs, and certainly not with Lord Bacon or his more recent imitators.

* From the American Law Register, an article contributed by the Hon. Isaac F. Redfield, late Chief Justice of Vermont.

But one must be either very short-sighted or very timid who cannot rise above such a standard. A judge who feels that his highest and noblest aims are centered in making himself a reputation, either present or future, is certainly not worthy of the very highest degree of public confidence. One may, indeed, act from far lower and base motives. He may be a mere blind partisan; he may have espoused certain theories of philosophy, or politics, or religion, with such intense zeal, that he will in the end be in danger of becoming morbid upon the subject, and, with the best intentions, he may become incapable of seeing any good, or any rights, out of that particular line of thought which he may have espoused. And we conceive it possible for a very well-meaning judge, and one of large capacity, originally, and of very considerable attainments, to become so perverted by partisanship as to be really incapable of viewing any subject, except through a false or perverted medium. There is no doubt great danger, in periods of great political or partisan heat, that in regard to questions affecting large and fundamental interests in governmental and social relations, something of this kind may sometimes occur, even in discussions and decisions before or by the gravest judicial tribunals. We do not know that such things are likely to occur in the American judicial tribunals of last resort, in regard to the vast and almost illimitable public interests now so much in agitation. We hope it is not so; and that there is no danger in that direction. Some things have occurred, within the last few years, especially in the decisions of the national tribunal of last resort, tending very strongly to show that there is really no danger of this character, and that those, if any such there be, who believe, or affect to believe, that the judicial tribunals of the country should be subordinated to the voice of the numerical popular majority, are not likely to find support or countenance in the conduct of the judges themselves. We hope this may be so. We believe it will prove so. . . We know that the legislative power of a nation is almost supreme, and that it may seem for a time quite irresistible. But the formative power of a wise, and able, and an upright court of last resort, in a quiet and impressive manner, wields a force ten times as powerful as it is possible for any legislative power to put forth, and one that is ten thousand times more efficient either for good or for evil. Those men, if any such there be, who desire to break the power, or check the independence of that conservative and life-giving tribunal, in the sustaining of law and order, and of every other interest dear to the true patriot, if they are at all aware of what they ask, and of the awful consequences of obtaining a full answer to their prayer, should be held up to the public indignation and scorn as the basest and vilest traitors to their country; such men, if they really comprehend what it is that they ask, should be classed among the wickedst of the fomentors of the late rebellion. But we do not suppose it possible for any man at all capable of estimating the awful consequences of breaking down the legitimate power of a pure and independent judiciary in a free country, to be base and degraded enough to desire any such thing.

But, to return from this partial digression, it is certainly a very pleasant sight to sit in an English court, and witness the entire absence of all rivalry, not only between the Court and the Bar, but apparently between the different members of the bar. Court and counsel alike seem to feel that every other consideration must be laid aside except that of reaching the absolute justice of the case. In this pursuit there is observable a quietness in the course of the arguments of counsel, and especially in the conversational discussions between the Court and the counsel, which cannot fail far more effectually to enable each to see the other's views, difficulties and doubts, than if the same were had in a spirit of controversy and opposition, and with a disposition occasionally apparent in our own country, to show the spectators the superiority of the Bench over the Bar. Nothing could more effectually belittle the Court, without in the same degree elevating the Bar. A truly great judge is never jealous of any one, and least of all of his bar, which is his brightest crown, the very jewels of his judicial life.

But this communication will be in danger of too great extension. The most important decision made in the English courts within the last few months, is that in the case of Gardiner v. The London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, 15 Weekly Reporter 325, by the Lords Justices in the Court of Chancery appeal, near the last of January. By this case it was determined that railway debentures in England, which are a mortgage of the "undertaking" in terms, do not create any specific lien upon any portion of the property itself belonging to the company, but only a right to receive the net earnings of the works, which includes all the rolling stock and fixtures as incidents until the last is paid. But in the meantime the undertaking, which is but another name for all the works with all its incidents and accessories, remains under the management and control of the officers of the corporation itself, or of trustees appointed by the parties, the Courts refusing to assume the responsibility of placing the road, or the "undertaking," as it is called in the Act creating the debentures, under the management of its own officers. This is a very important decision, and the cool, careful, and well-reasoned opinion of the present Lord Justice Cairns, who has since been promoted, at the early age of less than fifty, to the House of Lords, by special patent, will repay patient perusal and study, and may possibly lead to very important modifications of the present views in America in regard to the rights created by railway mortgages and preferred stocks. . . .

We were present a few days since in the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, during the argument and the summing up of the Court to the jury, in the important cause of White v. White and Field. . . . . We were especially and favourably impressed with the quiet conversational tone of the leading counsel, Sir Robert Collier, late Solicitor-General, and Dr. Spinks, Q.C., and the especial fairness and freedom from all parade or attempt at oratorical effect of the charge given to the jury by the learned judge, Sir J. P. Wilde. We noticed with special gratification that the English judges address the jury sitting, the jury also remaining in the same position. We have long regarded this as the only mode in which a case could be fairly presented to a jury by the Court, and practised it during most of our own long period of service in that capacity, but we believe this is rather an exceptional mode of proceeding in the American courts, and as far as we know, as a general rule, is confined to New Hampshire,* where the change occurred, at an early day; by the embarrassment of one of their ablest Chief Justices, the late Jeremiah Smith, in delivering his first charge to the jury, which proceeded so far as to compel the judge to resume his seat and to request the jury to do the same, when he continued his charge in a very able and satisfactory manner, never after attempting to address the jury standing. and this precedent thus accidentally introduced soon became general in that state, and has so continued ever since. It also exists in some portions of Vermont, but not universally. But on the occasion to which we refer, the learned judge continued his instructions to the jury for more than an hour in the most quiet and conversational mode.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

BANKRUPTCY OF "VOLUNTARY" SETTLER.—M., by a voluntary deed, assigned a reversionary interest to trustees upon trusts for his wife and children. The trustees never executed the settlement. After the reversion fell in, M. was adjudicated a bankrupt. No notice of the settlement was given to the trustees until after the bankruptcy, when they declined the trusts: Held, that the reversionary interest was within M.'s "order and disposition," and passed to his assignees in bankruptcy: (Hnesley v. Wills, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 582. V.C.W.)

* An editorial note of the American Law Register suggests that the writer is here mistaken, and that the habit of standing while charging the jury is peculiar and local to the New England courts, even if it obtain in all of those. The note proceeds:—"We have the authority of a distinguished ex-judge of the Supreme Court of New Jersey for saying that when he was a junior at the bar, it was the general custom for the judge to rise in addressing the grand jury, but even that has since fallen into disuse. The only occasion upon which a Pennsylvania judge stands is while pronouncing sentence of death, and we think the undignified novelty of the judge's rising to charge a jury would be resented alike by the bench and bar of that state, as savouring far too much of advocacy rather than judicial serenity."

"ISSUE, CHILD OR CHILDREN."—Devise of land, &c. to S. B. for life, and to trustees, and from and after the decease of S. B., to preserve contingent remainders to "all and every the issue, child, or children, of the body of the said S. B. lawfully to be begotten, in such shares and proportions, manner, and form, as he the said S. B. at any time during his life" or by will "shall limit or appoint, give or devise the said premises, and in default of such issue," to J. B., W. B., and J. B., sons of the testator, and to their respective heirs and assigns for ever, to take as tenants in common: Held, that S. B. was entitled to an estate for life only; that the words "issue, child, or children" must be taken to have been used in the sense of "children" and to be words of purchase, and therefore that the children of S. B., upon their father's death, were entitled to take distributively in fee, by implication from the power of appointment: (Bradley v. Cartwright, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 587. C. P.)

LOCKE KING'S ACT—ESTATE IN SCOTLAND—ELECTION.—A domiciled Englishman, by a testamentary disposition in the Scotch form, gave certain real estate in Scotland, and by a subsequent will in the English form, after referring to the Scotch disposition, and declaring that the trusts of his present will should not affect the Scotch estate, nor should put to his election any person who should claim both under the trust disposition and the will, gave the residue of his estate upon trust for sale and payment of debts and legacies. By the trust disposition the testator's widow was to have the rents of the Scotch estate and thereout to maintain the children; and by the will certain benefits were given to the children, and there was also a trust for maintenance. Subsequently to the date of the will the testator executed a heritable bond, charging the Scotch estate with the money thus raised. He also subsequently purchased another estate in Scotland, of which he made no disposition: Held, that the testator's domicile being English, the law of England governed the construction of the will, even when it affected the Scotch estate, and that a contrary intention (under Locke King's Act) having been disclosed, the heritable bond must be paid out of the residuary estate: Held, also, that the heir-at-law was not put to his election as to the Scotch estate purchased subsequently to the date of the will; and that the trust for maintenance in the will was in addition to that made by the trust disposition: (Maxwell v. Hyslop, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 660. V. C. Malins.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—LEASE—RESERVATION OF THE FREE RUNNING OF WATER AND SOIL.—A reservation in a lease of the free running of water and soil from any other buildings and lands contiguous to the demised premises, in and through the sewers and watercourses within, through, or under the said demised premises, applies only to water naturally falling or arising on or naturally falling or arising elsewhere and coming to the contiguous lands, and to such matters as are the product of the ordinary use of the land for habitation, such as night-soil and sewage, and does not give a right to discharge through such sewers the refuse matter from tanpits on contiguous land, erected and worked subsequently to the date of the lease: (Chadwick and another v. Marsden, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 666. Ex.)

AGREEMENT FOR LEASE OF FISHERY—RESCINDED FOR MISTAKE—MAXIM OF IGNORANTIA JURIS.—E. the owner of a fishery called the B. fishery took by mistake a lease of the same for three years from P., who was a trustee for other parties. The settlement under which E. claimed had conveyed the lands of B., and all other estates of inheritance and hereditaments of which J. was then seized; and J. had previously obtained a conveyance of and was seized in "the lands of B. and the salmon fisheries in the rivers." J. had applied for an Act of Parliament to improve certain parts of the river, and as he died while the Bill was being passed, the name of H. his heir-at law, as the owner, was inserted in the Bill which recited in effect that H. was a trustee, though H. represented himself to be owner in fee, and hence the mistake: Held, that the fishery passed under the words "estate of inheritance:" Held, further, that E. was entitled to have the lease rescinded on the ground of mistake, subject to a lien in favour of H., for expenditure on improvements. The maxim "Ignorantia juris haud excusat" extends only to general law, but not to private rights of ownership, which are matters of fact. Per L. Westbury: (Cooper v. Phibbs, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 678. H. of L.)

The decision in Tetley v. Wanless (reported in the court below, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 255) has been affirmed in the Ex. Ch.: (16 L. T. Rep. N. S 601.)

PARTNER IN TWO FIRMS.—B., the bankrupt, was a banker in Devonshire, and formed a partnership with M. and P. as Indian merchants in London. B. was to bring in capital as it might be required to a stated amount, he covenanting with M. and P. jointly and severally to do so. It was also agreed that B. should accept bills for M. and Co., at a fixed commission, and that M. and Co. should negotiate the bills, keeping B. in funds to meet them. B. became bankrupt, and M. and P. executed creditors' deeds, Claims were then carried in against B.'s estate (1) for an alleged balance of account due from B. to M. and Co.; (2) for an alleged deficiency of the capital covenanted to be brought by B. into the firm of M. and Co.; and (3) in respect of some bills alleged to be held by M. and Co. as security for a loan to B. It was held (affirming the decision of the commissioner) (1), that the transaction was a dealing by B. for the convenience of the general partnership, and not a dealing between two distinct trades; (2) that the firm could not prove against one of its members for a debt due to it while the state of the partnership accounts remained unascertained; and (3) that the evidence did not render B. liable to M. and Co. upon bills, but showed that they were remitted to M. and Co. for collection only. The appeal of M. was accordingly dismissed with costs: (Ex parte Maude, 16 L .T. Rep. N. S. 577. Chan.)

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

Ireland before the Union; with Extracts from the Unpublished Diary of John Scott, LL.D., Earl of Clonmell, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, 1774–1798. A Sequel to the Sham Squire and the Informers of 1798. By WM. J. FITZPATRICK, J.P., Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. W. B. Kelly, Dublin; J. C. Hotten, London.

Mr. Fitzpatrick has already established a reputation as an industrious and honest biographer; but in this book he extends the scope of his work to an interesting history of the social and political state of Ireland before the Union; and there cannot be a better proof of the value the public set on the work than the fact that the first edition was sold almost as soon as published, and a second edition has already been published.

Amongst the numerous dramatis personæ that Mr. Fitzpatrick introduces to his readers as acting on the stage of Irish public life before the Union, none played more prominent parts than Lord Chief Justice Clonmell and Mr. Higgins, commonly called the Sham Squire. The latter personage is well known to the reading public through Mr. Fitzpatrick's last volume, and to which the present forms a sequel, but it is in the life and sayings of the former that we, as lawyers, are chiefly interested. Our author derives his information about Lord Clonmell from every available source, but chiefly from an unpublished diary of the Lord Chief Justice, which, judging from the extracts presented, is highly interesting, and makes us wish to read more of it. In it we find Lord Clonmell's view of the state of Ireland, and his acute remarks on the various hypocrisies that his contemporaries were enacting. Not the least interesting part is his account of the line of conduct necessary to success as a lawyer (page 27-28, sec. ed.) Mr. Fitzpatrick has ransacked the Records of the Rolls Office, and has brought to light, and published, as an appendix to the present work, a bill filed in 1797, charging the Chief Justice with such a number of offences against the law which he was appointed to administer, as would now excite a great sensation, not only amongst the members of the bar but also the general public. In conclusion we have only to remark that Mr. Fitzpatrick has very considerably increased his second edition, and has produced a work which gives the reader a very complete, though not flattering, view of Irish society at the end of the last century.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 29.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 17, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

THE Halls of the Four Courts have now thoroughly assumed their long-vacation aspect. A very short time since they were thronged with a vast concourse of professional men representing the pent-up business of three weeks, vainly waiting for a judge to discharge them. Then there was a late sitting of the Chancery Appeal Court, and a still later sitting of the Lord Chancellor, causing the unusual phenomenon of busy barristers in full array in the sultry month of August. But things have now regained their normal state, and the stillness is rendered the more intense by the dismal footfall of the summer-lawyer, who attends the sittings of the Vacation-Master, or of the Judges of the Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts. The latter, we fear, are destined to enjoy, less than ever, during this recess, an unbroken rest from their ungrateful labours. In their melancholy records will be written the sad history of recent events in all their disastrous reality. It is to be remarked, too, that the same causes which have swelled the business of these latter Courts, have produced a sensible decline in the business of the other Courts, both of Law and Equity. But this decline will cease with the causes which have produced it. To be sure, we have heard men, in the spirit of a certain noble Lord, animated with an inveterate hatred of our Irish legal establishments, express themselves in a tone of pious congratulation on the advent of an Irish legal millenium. But on fair and careful examination it will be found, that there was no real ground for their congratulations, and that they were prejudiced, or superficial observers. Experience tells us, that an increase in the legitimate business of our Courts keeps pace with the advancing prosperity of the country; and it will be found that any decline or falling off which has taken place, has been due, and ought to be attributed to purely exceptional causes; and once they are removed by continuing tranquillity, and a gradual reassurance of the public mind, the usual dealings of men will be resumed, things will flow in their proper channels; and, as a matter of necessity—to put it on no higher grounds—our legal prospects will brighten with the revival of general public prosperity.

The coming legal year, unless we are greatly deceived, will prove a very busy one for Equity practitioners, and we hope to see early indications of our expectations in this respect being realized in the fruits of the opening Term. There is nothing to prevent this, unless it be the fact that some seem deterred from setting at once vigorously to work under a new system of things—the law and practice by which all new business will be regulated, being wholly unknown in this country. But the same law has been in operation in England for many years, and the practice is now well established; and assuming, as we think we may safely do, that the General Orders to be framed in Ireland shall be identical with the Orders now existing in England, there will be no excuse for solicitors not making themselves sufficiently familiar with the practice, so as not to feel any difficulty in bringing new business into Court without hesitation or delay. We intend publishing in this Journal the new Chancery Act, and a simple and concise Commentary on the Practice, in the form of short articles, which we trust will be found useful, and supply a want, until a more full and elaborate work on the subject shall appear. It is also intended, as soon as the new Rules are promulgated, to publish, in a collected form, the Act, Rules, and Commentary, with an Index and Table of Contents.

As we anticipated, the first of the Lords' amendments to the Court of Law Officers' Bill has not been accepted by the Commons. With regard to the important office of Master we believe it is much better that the existing arrangement should not be departed from; the other amendment has been agreed to.

HOUSE OF LORDS, AUG. 9.

ADMIRALTY COURT (IRELAND) BILL.

On the motion for going into committee on this Bill,

The Marquis of CLANRICARDE presented a petition from the Judge of the Admiralty Court in Ireland against the fifth clause of the Bill removing him from his office, and moved for a correspondence between the Irish Government and the Lord Chancellor of Ireland relating to that Judge.

The Lord CHANCELLOR said that inquiry had been made, no such correspondence could be found, and the belief was that no such correspondence existed.

The House then went into committee. On clause 4,

Lord CRANWORTH said that this gentleman, the Judge of the Admiralty Court, held office under an Act of Parliament which made him irremovable except upon an address from both Houses of Parliament. His tenure was, therefore, the same as that of the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench; yet, for the first time in the annals of English history, the enactment which fixed his tenure on this footing was to be repealed by this clause, in order that he might be immediately removed. Now, it might be that this gentleman was an unfit person to discharge the duties. In that case it would be proper to say so, but the Judge defied anybody to show this. There had been a constitutional safeguard against the removal of Judges, and it was now proposed to take it away. He had stated the case, and he appealed to their lordships to consider whether they ought not to pause in what they were doing.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said when his noble and learned friend spoke to him on this matter he stated that he felt placed in a position of the greatest embarrassment, because he was desirous of sparing the feelings of the gentleman who was involved. He believed there was no such correspondence as the noble Marquis alluded to in reference to the conduct of this gentleman with regard to a will and acquitting him of any impropriety, nor indeed was there in the minds of those who had considered this subject any suspicion in regard to this gentleman. He quite admitted that this was an exceptional case, and it might perhaps be the first in which it had been necessary to act in the way proposed by this Bill. The late Government introduced a Bill upon this very subject, and there was in it a clause with respect to this gentleman which was much more offensive than the clause of this Bill, for it actually removed him by name from office. This clause provided that in case the gentleman should not be reappointed, he was to retire upon his full salary, which was, as far as he was concerned, a little improvement in the way of dealing with him. He took upon himself the responsibility of saying it was absolutely necessary the gentleman should be removed, or it was impossible the Bill could be allowed to pass. The Bill would introduce great improvements into the Court of Admiralty, extend its jurisdiction, and bring within its cognizance matters connected with the common law, of which this gentleman had had no experience; therefore he would not be competent to perform the enlarged duties which would be thrown upon the Judge. There was a little mistake about this gentleman having given up a large practice to accept the office of Judge, because he gave up the position of stipendiary magistrate at £600 a year for that of Judge of the Admiralty Court at £500 a year, making a sacrifice for an advance of position. However distressing it might be to him it was absolutely necessary he should take upon himself the responsibility of dealing with the question in the manner proposed by the Bill, and it was done in the least offensive manner, because the gentleman was to retire upon his full salary. Let it not be understood he held out any hope that the gentleman would be reappointed, for there was no intention of reappointing him. It was considered that this was a better way of dealing with him than that proposed by the late Government. He was most anxious to avoid saying anything which might hurt the feelings of this gentleman, but he must insist on the clause being retained in the Bill, or the Bill being given up altogether.

The Marquis of CLANRICARDE said that if there were no correspondence, that made the case of this gentleman much stronger, because it showed the Irish Government had not been consulted on the question whether he ought to be removed or not. Both he and his predecessor in the office of stipendiary magistrate had had private practice, and clearly he would not have given up this office and practice for an office with less salary but that he believed he had got a place for life. He relied upon the Acts of Parliament, and the Act of Settlement, which, extending to Ireland, placed Judges on the same footing that they occupied in England, and he believed that he could not be removed. This was a constitutional point of the highest importance. If the objectionable clause of the Bill were agreed to, it would be a precedent for introducing into any Bill to amend the practice, procedure, and jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench a similar clause removing Judges. The course proposed was totally at variance with all previous practice, and its adoption in this case would have the worst possible effect in Ireland. In all other respects the Bill was an excellent one. In the report of the Commission which inquired into the Court of Admiralty it was distinctly stated that the office of Judge was a patent office, and that the Judge could not be removed, except upon an address to the two Houses of Parliament, and there was a precedent in the case of Sir John Barrington, who, in 1829, was removed from this judgeship for malversation of suitors' money. If this gentleman was incompetent, as was alleged, the matter could have been settled by private arrangement. There was one aspect of the case which was not a good one, and that was that this gentleman was to be pensioned at his full salary, and that another gentleman was to be appointed at £1,000 a year. At all events, the change, if necessary, ought to be made in a more regular manner. The gentleman was not aware of this Bill until it was actually read a first time in this House. The Bill of the late Government was a very different measure. By it the Court was to be united with the Court of Probate, and one judgeship was to have been done away with; and the removal of this gentleman in that manner would have been a constitutional mode of proceeding. He had no alternative but to move the omission of so much of the fifth clause as related to this matter.

Lord CRANWORTH put it to his noble and learned friend (the Lord Chancellor) whether he would really insist upon this strong measure. This gentleman might be removed in a proper manner if there were a good reason; but he could not imagine why the security for the independence of Judges should be sacrificed. At any time this would be an extraordinary proceeding, and it was especially so in the last days of the Session, when there were few except the members of the Government in attendance. He put it to his noble and learned friend whether the course proposed was a proper one. The reference to the Bill of the late Government was an argument ad hominem, but his "withers are unwrung," for he never heard of such a Bill.

Lord ROMILLY was understood to support the clause, and to assume that the gentleman to whom it referred had been guilty of no misconduct, but that his removal was contemplated entirely, because it was believed that he would not be equal to the performance of the new duties.

Lord CRANWORTH said that since he had last spoken he had received, he presumed from the gentleman to whom this matter referred, a card, on which was written, "I demand an inquiry into my conduct."

The LORD CHANCELLOR maintained that the course contemplated in this Bill was a much preferable one to that which had been contemplated by the Bill of the late Government. It certainly was the impression that this gentleman would not be equal to the new duties, although he might be and no doubt was fully competent for those at present assigned him.

The Marquis of CLANRICARDE said that, whether the course proposed were right or wrong, there could be no doubt that by the repeal which was now proposed the security for the independence of the Irish Judges was struck at. Such a thing would not, he would venture to say, be attempted in England.

Their lordships divided, with the following result:—

For the clause	25
Against	5
Majority in favour of the clause .	—20

The clause was therefore agreed to.

The remaining clauses were agreed to, and the Bill passed through committee.

TUESDAY, AUG. 13.

The BILL was read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF LORDS—APPEALS.

(Before the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth, and Lord Colonsay.)

Oakes, appellant, v. Turquand and another, respondents—first and second appeals; Peek (the younger), appellant, v. Turquand and another, respondents—first and second appeals; in the matter of Overend, Gurney, and Co. (Limited).

Wednesday morning having been fixed for the delivering of judgment in these cases of appeals from two orders of Vice-Chancellor Malins, the bar of the House of Lords was much crowded by persons interested in the cases.

The appellants, whose names had been returned on the register of shareholders in Overend, Gurney, and Co., moved before Vice-Chancellor Malins that their names should be struck off the register, on the ground that they had been induced to take their shares upon the fraudulent representations contained in the prospectus of the company. The learned Vice-Chancellor made an order in the cases, from which the present appeals were made.

The LORD CHANCELLOR first delivered judgment, and dwelt at length on the condition of the old company when the prospectus of the new company of Overend, Gurney, and Co. was issued. The prospectus was headed "Overend Gurney, and Co.," printed in large characters. The capital was stated at £5,000,000, in 100,000 shares of £50 each, of which it was stated not more than £15 would be called up. Now, there could be no doubt that everything which was stated in the prospectus was true; but the objection to it was, not that it did not state the truth as far as it went, but that it concealed most material facts which the public ought to have known, and this gave to the truth the character of falsehood. It had been said that if the truth were known the old company would have been ruined, but the only answer to that was that no new company ought to have been formed, because the prospectus induced people to join the company by a concealment of facts. Advances had for years been made by the old company upon securities of an uncertain nature, the firm was actually losing £500,000 a-year, and an immense amount of the returned assets was not and could not be realized. Under all these circumstances, there could be no doubt the prospectus of the company was of a fraudulent character. Could any one suppose that if, at the time the prospectus was issued, the business of the company was brought into the market, the public having a real knowledge of the facts, it would have realized 1s.? At the same time he believed that the directors honestly and conscientiously believed that, if additional capital were procured, the company would succeed; but as the experiment was to be made with other people's money, they were bound to let the real state of affairs of the company be known. Now, the real question was whether the Companies' Act of 1862 made it competent for the appellant to defend himself from his liability by showing that he was induced by fraud to become a shareholder to the extent of 100 shares. An agreement induced by fraud could not be said to be a binding agreement, but the appellant had become a member of the company, and as, when the order for winding-up was made, his name was found upon the register, it could not be said that he was not then a member of the company. He thought that persons who took shares in companies were bound to make themselves acquainted with the memorandum of association, and with the business in which the companies were established. If they failed to do so, and the objects of the companies were extended beyond those stated in the prospectus, which could be easily ascertained, then those persons ought to be held bound by their shares. Having quoted a number of authorities, including Lord Cairns, in support of his views, his lordship said that in the conclusion at which he arrived he relied upon the words of the act, and he could not help remarking upon the singular state of things which would result from the appellant being relieved from his responsibility. It would be this—that in the winding-up of this company the only contributories to the debts of the company would be the directors and those unfortunate people who purchased their shares in the market. All these remarks applied with greater force to the case of the appellant Peek, and his opinion was, that the decree of Vice-Chancellor Malins ought to be affirmed. The appeal should therefore be dismissed with costs, each appellant to pay his own proportion of them.

Lord CRANWORTH concurred in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, and said he wished, for the sake of the honour of the great mercantile community of the city of London, he could say that the prospectus of the company was not a fraudulent one. It contained not only a suppressio veri, but also a suggestio falsi. Still the appellant should have made himself acquainted with the real state of affairs, and he should be held liable for his shares.

Lord COLONSAY concurred in the judgments of their lordships. He denounced the fraudulent character of the prospectus of the company, but held that the appellants did agree to become members of the company, and must be held liable for the amount of their shares.

The effect of the unanimous judgment of their lordships is that the appellants are held as contributories for the amount of their respective shares.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, AUG. 13.

THE COURTS OF LAW OFFICERS (IRELAND) BILL.

The house proceeded to consider the Lords' amendments to this bill.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for Ireland moved that the house disagree to the Lords' amendment, which inserted the following new clause:—

When and so often as any vacancy happens in the office of master or clerk of the rules in any of the said Superior Courts of Common Law by the death, resignation, or removal of the person holding such office, the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Common Pleas respectively as to vacancies occurring in those courts respectively, and the Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer as to vacancies occurring in that court, shall appoint some duly qualified person to supply the place of the person so dying, resigning, or being removed.

The bill, as it went up from this house to the Lords, did not deal with patronage at all. The offices in question had long been patent offices, the appointment to which had been vested in the crown. An act passed in 1844 substituting the office of master for that of prothonotory, expressly provided that the right of appointment should still remain vested in the Crown. In the other house, Lord Lyndhurst proposed an amendment similar to the present, and it was carried. The Commons, however, disagreed, and the other house, on further consideration, did not insist on their amendment. This bill was founded on the report of a commission (hear, hear), which, although it dealt with patronage, made a proposal very different from that embodied in this amendment, and was not unanimous in its recommendation. No inconvenience could arise from the omission of the clause introduced in the House of Lords. He moved that the house do disagree with clause A.

Mr. LAWSON opposed the motion. The amendment had been moved by Lord Cranworth and supported by the Lord Chancellor and Lord Cairns. It had also been recommended by the commissioners.

Sir C. O'LOGHLEN also opposed the motion.

Mr. HENLEY thought they ought to defer to the authority of the commissioners.

The house divided, when the numbers were—

For the motion, - - -	33
Against, - - - - - -	25
Majority for the motion, - -	—8

The motion for disagreeing with the Lords' amendments was therefore carried.

Mr. G. MORRIS moved that the house do disagree with the Lords' amendment, which transferred the power of appointment of the junior officers from the full court to a single judge.

Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY supported the Lords' amendment on the ground that it was better to place the power of appointing these officers in the hands of the chief judge rather than that there should be a sort of canvass of the judges every time it became necessary to appoint.

Mr. SULLIVAN took the same view as the hon. and learned member.

Mr. G. MORRIS then withdrew his motion, and the amendment was agreed to.

NOTES OF CASES.

Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by Edward S. Trevor, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In the Matter of Shuter's Trust and the Trustee Acts, 1850, 1852.

June 17.—Trustee Acts—Appointment of a new Trustee in the place of a Trustee declining to act.

By a deed dated the 10th of April, 1861, Hugh Halliday assigned to Edward Litton Holmes lands in the county of Tyrone upon certain trusts. The deed contained no power to appoint new trustees. E. L. Holmes was appointed trustee without his consent or approval, and he refused to act. A petition was presented for the appointment of a new trustee under the Trustee Acts, 1850, 1852.

W. Boyd, for the petitioner, cited Re Robinson's will, 11 W. R. 1035.

The Master of the Rolls, after taking time to consider, made an order for the appointment of a new trustee.

Solicitors for the petitioner, Anderson and Lee.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Reported by W. Griffin, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Naghten v. Kelly.

April 15.—Embarrassing Replication—Distress.

The third count of the summons and plaint complained that the defendant broke and entered the rooms of the plaintiff, and broke open the doors of the said rooms, and took and carried away the goods of the plaintiff, and disposed of the same to the defendant's own use.

The fourth count complained that the defendant converted to his own use, and wrongfully deprived the plaintiff of the use and possession of his goods, &c.

The defendant, to the third count, pleaded "that the said plaintiff, being tenant to the defendant of a certain messuage, at a weekly rent of 2s. a week, a sum of 12s. for six weeks' rent of said premises was due to the defendant, and in arrear on the 7th November, 1866, and thereupon the said defendant did, on the 7th November, 1866 (the outer door of said messuage being open) enter upon said messuage and did take, seize, and distrain the said goods and chattels of the said plaintiff in said count mentioned, the same then being on said premises, as for a distress for rent so due and in arrear; and for the purpose of making said distress, necessarily and peaceably opened the inner doors of said messuage and premises, and which aforesaid entry, so made for the purpose aforesaid, is the breaking and entering in said count mentioned, and which said taking, seizing, and distraining of said goods is the seizing, taking, and carrying away and disposing to defendant's use in said count mentioned.

The plea to the fourth count justified the taking of the plaintiff's goods under the same distress.

M'Dermott had, on a previous day, obtained leave from B. Hughes, in the Consolidated Chamber, to reply and demur; but as he had only the common affidavit, the leave was only to reply by way of traverse. The replication filed was that the defendant had not "distrained the goods and chattels," as alleged.

The case now came before the Court on motion to set aside the replication.

Coates, in support of the motion. This replication raises precisely the question raised by their demurrer, and it also raises a question of fact—a plea raising an issue of law, as well as of fact, is embarrassing.

M'Dermott, in support of the replication. The replication only traverses a mixed allegation of law and fact, which is allowable. Stephens' Pleading, 167. Baron Hughes's order did not allow any allegation of new matter, only a replication by way of traverse.

Monahan, C. J.—This replication is embarrassing. If it relies on mere compliance with the requirements of the 8 and 9 Vic., c. 111, it should be more specific. Plaintiff may reply that no notice was served, &c. The defence to be good must involve an allegation of such compliance, and any matter of fact necessarily implied may be traversed, and such replication will be a traverse and not allegation of new matter.

Attorney for defendant, W. Bloomfield.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. Field Johnston, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Lynch, J.

In re Casey's Estate.

June 20.—Foreshore "Gurges."

Blood Smyth in this case contended that the right to the foreshore passed to the owner of the adjoining lands. The word "gurgites" occurred in the ancient grant through which the title was derived, and this word passed the foreshore, as appeared from its use in Virgil's Æneid:—

"Apparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto."

Another passage in the Æneid, Book II, was more applicable, and showed that "gurges" meant the foreshore. The word "manor" alone would pass the shore, 3 Ex., 413, Malcolmson v. O'Dea (10 H. of L.) He also relied on acts of ownership over the place in question from the end of the last century, and was willing to take an issue to be tried before a jury.

Hunter appeared for the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and contended that "gurges" did not pass the foreshore. The acts of ownership relied on were of a trifling character, but if an attempt had been made to prevent persons from disembarking from boats, the Crown would soon have interfered.

It was directed that the Crown should file a specific objection.

In the Matter of the Estate of Richard Thomas Bunbury and Richard Simon Bunbury, Owners and Petitioners.

July 20. — Compensation. — Mines, Minerals, and Royalties.

This was an application, upon the allocation of the funds in this matter, on behalf of the purchaser of the lands sold, Mr. Robert Edward Ward, that a sufficient part of the sum of £18,000, the purchase money, lodged by him in Court, might be set apart to meet his claim for compensation in respect of the exceptions of mines, minerals, and royalties inserted in the draft conveyance of said lands to him, and which exceptions were not mentioned or set out on the rental under which he purchased said lands, and the value of which exceptions he had not had time to ascertain by examination and opinions of competent parties, or whether same were excepted from the leases and fee-farm grants of the tenants on the estate.

The lands in question, which were the lands of Leggagowar, in the Barony of Castlereagh Upper, and County of Down, contained 1,140a. 2r. 28p., and were sold on July 2nd. The draft conveyance was furnished to the solicitor having carriage on July 15th, and on July 18th returned by him amended by excepting out of it "mines, minerals, and royalties," in the same manner as they were excepted out of a conveyance of the said lands made by an indenture dated 30th day of April, 1706.

Palles, Q.C., and E. F. Litton, in support of the application.

Finch White, Q C., contra.

The following authorities were cited:—

Dart on V. & P. 91; Graham v. Oliver (3 Beavan, 128); Smithson v. Powell (20 L. T., 105).

Lynch, J.—I agree with the principle propounded, that the Court, more than any other class of vendors, is bound to carry out sales to their completion. And if, as in this case, there has been a mistake in the representation of the property, this Court is bound to do full justice to the party who purchased on the faith of that representation. The question here is, how this is to be done? It is impossible I can do otherwise than say to the purchaser—"There is here a mistake to which, perhaps, the endorsement on the deed of 1706 led. If you are dissatisfied with your purchase, I will give you back all the purchase money and all costs." If he will not do this, but asks for compensation, the case is one in which I can have no measure of damages to apply to it.

Solicitor for the purchaser, Samuel Black.

Solicitor having carriage, James Lane.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by J. Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Judge Miller.

In re Heally.

Aug. 9. Expenses of Witnesses—Removal of Goods.

The bankrupt was a grocer and shopkeeper in Tullow, county Carlow, and the meeting was for the examination of witnesses.

C. Meldon was of counsel with the assignees, and examined several witnesses, who swore that several quantities of goods had been removed to various places or given in payment of debts due to several creditors. One of the witnesses did business for the bankrupt, and when examined seemed very reluctant in giving his evidence, and then applied for his expenses.

His Lordship said that witnesses who had anything to do in the removal of the goods of a bankrupt, and did not give every information respecting them—in fact, who did not assist in the recovery of them, as far as they could, should have no expenses; the witness had already got a viaticum which could not be taken back from him; if he had not got it, the Court would not give him anything.

Solicitor to the bankruptcy, Dalton.

CIRCUIT CASES.

CONNAUGHT CIRCUIT.

Leitrim Assizes.

Reported by Oliver J. Burke, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before O'Brien, J.

Reynolds v. Costello.

July 16.—Bar Privilege.

This was an action of ejectment brought by the plaintiff, a person in very humble life, to recover five acres of land.

Montgomery, attorney for the plaintiff, applied for liberty to examine as a witness the plaintiff, who was in such miserable circumstances that he could not even make out counsel's fee.

T. W. Whyte, as senior member of the junior bar, objected to any attorney either opening the pleadings or examining witnesses. The bar, as a body, never sought to invade the privileges of the other profession, and it was the ancient and undoubted privilege of the bar to address the court, to open pleadings, and to examine witnesses both in the Superior Courts in Dublin and in the Courts of Assize on circuit. Even in the Crown Courts on circuit attorneys are not allowed to address a jury.

M'Dermot said he was counsel in this action for the defendant, and he submitted that an attorney could not conduct this case. [O'Brien, J., inquired what was to prevent the plaintiff examining his own witnesses himself, and could he not give his evidence without the aid of any professional adviser whatever?] Clearly he could, had he issued his own plaint, but it appeared that not only had he employed an attorney to do so, but the summons and plaint was signed by counsel, and he did not sue in forma pauperis—that being so he must now appear by counsel.

His Lordship said that while he was clearly of opinion that an attorney could neither open pleadings nor address the Court or Jury, he did not see how he could prevent the plaintiff conducting his own case, and examining his own witnesses. The attorney could not be permitted to take any part in the case other than making such suggestions to his clients, as presented themselves to his mind. He (the learned Judge) had spoken to his brother Judge on the circuit, Chief Justice Monahan, on the subject, and he also concurred in this view. It was stated that owing to the plaintiff's poverty he was unable to procure a fee for counsel, and by a most proper rule of the Connaught Bar—a rule which his Lordship would be most happy to see adopted on all the other circuits in Ireland—no counsel could take a brief on circuit unless the fee were paid with his brief. He, however, could not exclude a client from advocating his own case—a practice which he should be sorry, indeed, for their own sakes, that suitors would have recourse to. Mrs. Yelverton had, in her case, lately at hearing in the House of Lords, addressed the highest Court in the land herself; that, however, was quite a different thing from permitting an attorney to address the Court. The client might do so, but the attorney could not.

The trial then proceeded, the plaintiff acting as his own witness and advocate.

Sligo Assizes.

Before O'Brien, J.

In the Matter of John M'Donough, Coroner of the County of Sligo.

July 18.—Coroner's Inquests—Fees—Grand Jury— 9 and 10 Vict., ch. 37, ss. 22 and 24.

Harkan, of counsel, applied on behalf of John M'Donough, one of the coroners of the county of Sligo, to the Judge to direct the Grand Jury to present payments for nine inquests which were held by the said coroner, upon the requisition of the constabulary of the county, and which he, the said coroner, had considered it was fit and proper to hold.

It appeared from reference to the 22nd section of the 9th and 10th Victoria, ch. 37, that when any dead body should be found, or in case of sudden death, or of death attended with suspicious circumstances, the constabulary were bound to give immediate notice thereof to the coroner of the district, together with such information as came to their knowledge with regard to the said death, and thereupon the coroner, if he should deem it necessary, upon such information, was bound to hold an inquest, and to comply, in every other respect, with the requisites of that Act of Parliament. Counsel also referred to the 24th section, which provides that the inquest was to be held upon the belief of the coroner as to the necessity for holding such inquest. The learned counsel contended that if the coroner, bona fide, believed that it was necessary to hold an inquest; upon such statement before the Grand Jury, then they were bound to present the usual fees provided by Act of Parliament for holding inquests, and that it was not upon their own belief of the necessity of holding an inquest that such presentment should be made, but what they had to consider was whether they were of opinion that the coroner (at the time of holding such inquest) bona fide believed that it was necessary to hold same.

O'BRIEN, J., upon reading the sections of the Act of Parliament above mentioned, considered that the interpretation of counsel was the true interpretation of the Act, and his Lordship accordingly directed the Grand Jury to reconsider those several cases which they had previously refused; and he told them that if, upon the whole, they were of opinion that the coroner, bona fide, believed (not that they believed) that it was necessary to hold such inquests, they were bound to present for same.

The Grand Jury accordingly presented, having first inquired in manner directed by the learned Judge.

INSURANCE.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE

LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND,

Was held within the HEAD OFFICE AT EDINBURGH, on WEDNESDAY, 31st JULY, 1867—
Sir ARCHIBALD HOPE, of Craighall and Pinkie, Bart., in the Chair.

THE Report by the Directors for the Year ending 5th April, 1867, with Statements of the position and progress of the Institution, and the Accounts certified by the Auditor in terms of the Act of Parliament, were submitted. The Report congratulated the Meeting on the continued satisfactory progress of the Institution. The following are the principal details:—

The PROPOSALS FOR NEW ASSURANCES during the year were ... ... 1,762 for £890,894
Of which the TRANSACTIONS were ... ... 1,403 for £668,386
LIFE ANNUITIES were purchased for ... ... Per Annum £850
The DEATHS among the Assured were ... ... 191 for £95,760
This Sum is under deduction of Sums Re-Assured.
The DEATHS among the Annuitants were Seventeen, relieving the Funds of Claims for Per Annum £693
The Gross ANNUAL INCOME from Premiums and Interest on Investments at 5th April, without taking into account Reductions of Premiums, is £261,852
The NET ANNUAL INCOME, after Reductions of Premiums, is £225,630
The ACCUMULATED FUND at 5th April was £1,106,053

The INVESTIGATION of the contingent Assets and Liabilities in Class A has been made as at the date of the last Balance. The whole of the necessary calculations have been checked by Professor Kelland, who has been the Auditor of this department on all previous occasions, and it is scarcely necessary to state that every care has been taken in the computations not to draw upon any part whatever of future Profits. The results of the investigation have been entirely satisfactory, and the Directors are justified in not only maintaining abatements at the rates that have been allowed from the Premiums for some years past, but in increasing these to 30 per cent. for the oldest Class of the Second Series of Policy-holders. The First Series, who still number about one half of the Policy-holders at present participating in Profits, will continue to receive the large Abatement of 37½ per cent., and the latest participating Policy-holders will be allowed an Abatement at the rate of 25 per cent. from their Premiums. The Directors have accordingly now to declare that the following Abatements will be made from the Premiums for the year ending 5th April, 1868, on Policies entitled to participate in the Profits in Class A, viz.:—

On Policies effected on or before 5th April, 1855, a Reduction or Abatement of 37½ per cent.
On Policies effected from 6th April, 1855, to 5th April. 1856, an Abatement of 30 per cent.
On Policies effected from 6th April, 1856, to 5th April, 1862, an Abatement of 25 per cent.

The Quinquennial Investigation and Division of Profits in Class B, as at 5th December, 1865, were reported at last Annual Meeting. The number of Policy-holders in this Class is steadily increasing. All the Branches have been conducted most satisfactorily by the several Boards and Officers in charge of them.

THE PROGRESS OF THE INSTITUTION HAS BEEN AS FOLLOWS:—

THE NEW ASSURANCES EFFECTED.				THE ACCUMULATED FUND.

The Chairman, Professor Kelland, Mr. Wood, the Auditor, and other Gentlemen, addressed the Meeting in congratulatory terms as to the position of the Association, and the benefits it has conferred on all interested in it. The Report was then unanimously approved of by the Meeting, and the vacancies in the Directorate were filled up, as recommended in the Report.

Thanks were voted to the Directors and Officers at Edinburgh and at the Branches, to the Agents of the Association, and to the Chairman for his conduct in the chair, and the Meeting separated.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 30.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. / By Post, 7d.

Now that we actually have a Vice-Chancellor, it may not be deemed premature, or impertinent, to inquire whether there has been any thought about providing a Court suitable to the dignity of a Judge, who has such high and important interests committed to his care, and affording to the legal public proper accommodation for the due and regular discharge of business.

We confess ourselves in favour of "pomp and circumstance," believing that, so far from engendering a feeling of ridicule or contempt, they almost invariably inspire the very opposite feelings, and promote order and decency, and so facilitate the despatch of the public business. The very idea of the Masters' Offices being reproduced on a larger scale is enough to make one shudder—Judge, practitioners, clerks, suitors, huddled together in one indiscriminate mass. Yet who that has had to pass a great portion of his life in those "chambers of horrors," called Masters' Offices, can feel surprised, that the Masters, although in the vast majority of cases which came before them, they were invested with all the powers of the Lord High Chancellor of Ireland, were unable to enforce that degree of regularity and decorum with which the proceedings ought to have been conducted. The most important business of the country was transacted in the Masters' Offices, and will now be transferred to the Vice-Chancellor and his staff. We therefore expect that, from the first, there will be proper accommodation for the regular and decent discharge of business, and that first impressions will be favourable, and augur well for the success of the new system of things.

THE LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.

THE late Attorney-General, Hedges Eyre Chatterton, Esq., has been appointed Vice-Chancellor of Ireland, under the recent Chancery Act. We have no hesitation in saying that the appointment is one which must meet the entire approval of the public and the legal professions. Mr. Chatterton was called to the Bar in 1843, after a distinguished collegiate career, and long before his promotion to the office of Solicitor-General had earned a high reputation at the Irish Bar, and was acknowledged as one of the first of our Chancery Lawyers. As an advocate he was zealous and temperate, forcible and clear in argument, and ready in reply, while in chamber practice his opinion was always that of a sound lawyer, perfectly simple and explicit, and free from all those refinements of special pleading which so often lead the suitor into hopeless litigation. No man at the profession had a higher character for rectitude and honour, or was more popular with his professional brethren, and the solicitors of the Court.

We have lately been informed, on reliable authority, that in England, too, no Attorney-General for Ireland ever acquired a higher reputation than Mr. Chatterton, both in the House and at the Irish Office, for that prompt and efficient mode of doing business which our English friends are disposed to imagine is only to be found on their side of the Channel.

Although we have been often disappointed in the judicial character of men who have been eminent at the Bar, we feel that in the various qualities we have mentioned, we have some security for Mr. Chatterton's efficient discharge of the very important and responsible duties with which he has been entrusted by the Crown—duties which, from their novelty (at least in this country), will require not only learning, ability, and experience as a lawyer, but also a practical business capacity, to grapple with the difficulties and regulate the practice of a new system. We shall be much surprised if he does not make an able and efficient Judge, and prove a valuable acquisition to the already brilliant Chancery Bench of Ireland.

THE rapid promotion of Mr. Warren and his appointment to the first place at the Irish Bar, has given universal satisfaction. So great was the confidence placed in his ability and learning, that on his appointment as Solicitor-General, although the sphere to which he was transferred was comparatively new to him, the public felt that he was fully competent efficiently to discharge the very arduous duties which at that critical period were certain to devolve upon him. Not only have those anticipations been fully realized, but his brief tenure of office has given an earnest that there is no one at the Bar more competent satisfactorily to discharge the duties of his new appointment. In a few days the distinguished honour of representing the University in Parliament will open to Mr. Warren a career in which we believe the qualities of his mind are eminently calculated to insure success. Although Mr. Warren had always entertained and strongly expressed a disinclination to enter Parliament; and although many of the electors of Trinity College declared that the interests of the University required that the system of electing the first law officer of the Crown as her representative should be discontinued, and that they would no longer be content with a "fleeting Member," yet Mr. Warren's qualifications were felt to be sufficient to overcome all objections, and a requisition was presented to him, calling upon him to allow himself to be put in nomination, so influentially signed as to induce Mr. Warren to yield. We believe the University has acted wisely in this, and that she could not have placed her interests in abler or more faithful hands.

Mr. Samuel Ferguson, Q.C., of the North East Bar, has been appointed to the important post of Deputy Keeper of the Records, created under recent Acts of Parliament. He was called to the Bar in the year 1838, and to the Inner Bar in the year 1859, during the Chancellorship of Sir Joseph Napier. In 1866, on the death of Sir Thomas Staples, he was promoted by the late Government to the office of Crown Prosecutor for the County of Armagh.

The fact of his having been the recipient of favours from opposite administrations, is the most convincing proof that the present appointment has been made solely from a regard for merit and peculiar suitableness for the position.

Mr. Ferguson has been fortunate enough to gain, what few men, especially in Ireland, have gained before,—a distinguished reputation for legal as well as literary attainments. His peculiar love for antiquarian research will render a task, which would be drudgery to other men, comparatively easy and agreeable to him; and we expect to see the very order and elegance, for which his style, both of speaking and writing, was so remarkable, manifested even in the arrangements of the department which he is now called on to organize.

In short, it may be safely said that his appointment will afford satisfaction, not alone to a large circle of private and professional friends, by whom he is so highly and deservedly esteemed, but to every member of the community who desires to see merit made the passport to preferment.

HOUSE OF LORDS, Aug. 16.

COURTS OF LAW OFFICERS (IRELAND) BILL.

On the order of the day for considering the reasons put forward by the House of Commons for disagreeing to one of the amendments made by the House of Lords in this Bill, that for transferring the appointment of particular officers from the Government of the day to the chief Judges of the different courts,

Lord Cranworth at some length proceeded to vindicate the alteration made by their lordships at his instance in the bill—an alteration which would have had the effect of assimilating the Irish to the English practice, and would have been in conformity with the opinions of Lord Lyndhurst and Lord Campbell, and with the recommendations of the English and Irish Law Commission. His attention was called to the fact that no provision was made in the Bill for putting the chief Judges in Ireland in the same position as those in England with respect to the appointment of officers in the courts. He moved a clause vesting the appointment in the chief Judge of each court. That clause passed their lordships' House without objection, but the Commons rejected it; and one of the reasons they assigned for the rejection was that the clause was an interference with an ancient prerogative of the Crown in Ireland, no allegation having been made by any one that the said prerogative had been exercised improperly. A similar reason might be assigned for the preservation of any piece of patronage enjoyed by the Government. There were other reasons assigned, but he thought that none of them were better founded than the one to which he had just alluded. At this period of the session legislation practically depended on the Government, and it was useless for an independent member of either House to attempt to carry anything which the Government opposed. The noble and learned lord concluded by moving that their lordships should insist upon their amendment.

The Lord Chancellor fully agreed with the opinions which the noble and learned lord had expressed, and deeply regretted that the Commons should have thought fit to reject the clause. The clause had been supported in that House, not by the lawyers alone, but by noble lords formerly connected with the Government of Ireland, among whom were Lord Clarendon and the Earl of Kimberley, both ex-Lord Lieutenants of that country. Had it not been so late in the session, he should, following the example of his distinguished predecessor Lord Lyndhurst, have advised their lordships to insist upon the amendment they had made. Such a course would, however, now involve the defeat of the measure, which was generally of so advantageous a nature that, though he felt very strongly on the point, he did not feel justified in taking a course which would result in deciding the fate of the Bill. He was anxious, therefore, to explain the reason, and the only reason, why he could not support the motion of his noble and learned friend.

Their Lordships divided, with the following result:—

For the Commons' amendment,	11
Against,	7
Majority in favour of the amendment,	4

The amendment was therefore agreed to.

Their Lordships adjourned at twenty minutes to eight o'clock.

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

Prorogation of Parliament—Wednesday, August 21.

The Lord Chancellor read Her Majesty's speech, as follows:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,—I am happy to be enabled to release you from the labours of a long and more than usually eventful session, and to offer you my acknow ledgements for the successful diligence with which you have applied yourselves to your Parliamentary duties.

"My relations with foreign countries continue on a friendly footing.

"At the commencement of the present year great fears were entertained that differences would arise between France and Prussia which might lead to a war, of which it was impossible to foresee the ultimate result. Happily the advice tendered by my Government and by those of the neutral States, aided by the moderation of the two Powers chiefly interested, sufficed to avert the threatened calamity, and I trust that no grounds at present exist for apprehending any disturbance of the general peace.

"The communications which I have made to the reigning Monarch of Abyssinia, with a view to obtain the release of the British subjects whom he detains in his dominions, have, I regret to say, thus far proved ineffectual. I have, therefore, found it necessary to address to him a peremptory demand for their immediate liberation, and to take measures for supporting that demand should it ultimately be found necessary to resort to force.

"The treasonable conspiracy in Ireland, to which I have before called your attention, broke out in the early part of the present year in a futile attempt at insurrection. That it was suppressed almost without bloodshed is due not more to the discipline and valour of my troops and to the admirable conduct of the police than to the general loyalty of the population and the absence of any token of sympathy with the insurgents on the part of any considerable portion of my subjects. I rejoice that the supremacy of the law was vindicated without imposing on me the painful necessity of sacrificing a single life.

"The Bill for the Abolition of certain Local Exemptions from Taxation enabled me to avail myself of a liberal concession made in anticipation by the Emperor of the French, whereby several taxes were removed which pressed heavily upon British shipping.

"I have concluded a postal convention with the United States of America, whereby the rate of postage between the two countries will be diminished by one-half; and further arrangements are in progress for increasing the intercourse between this country and the Continent of North America. The Act for the Union of the British North American Provinces is the final accomplishment of a scheme long contemplated, whereby those colonies, now combined in one dominion, may be expected to gain not only additional strength for the purpose of defence against external aggression, but may be united among themselves by fresh ties of mutual interest, and attached to the mother country by the only bonds which can effectually secure such important dependencies—those of loyalty to the Crown and attachment to British connexion.

"GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,—I thank you for the liberal supplies which you have voted for the public service.

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—I have had great satisfaction in giving my assent to a Bill for Amending the Representation of the People in Parliament. I earnestly trust that the extensive and liberal measure which you have passed may effect the durable settlement of a question which has long engaged public attention, and that the large number of my subjects who will be for the first time admitted to the exercise of the elective franchise may, in discharge of the duties thereby devolving upon them, prove themselves worthy of the confidence which Parliament has reposed in them. It is gratifying to me to find that the lengthened consideration which you have necessarily given to this important question has not prevented your entering on many subjects to which your attention was directed at the commencement of the session, and particularly to such as have immediate reference to the well-being of the industrial classes.

"I have had especial pleasure in giving my assent to bills for extending to various trades, with such modifications as have been found necessary, the provisions of the Factory Act, the success of which has proved the possibility of extending effectual protection to the labour of women and children, with a due consideration for the interests of the trades immediately concerned. I confidently anticipate, from the operation of the present acts, the same improvement in the physical, social, and moral condition of the working classes which has been found to accompany the application of the acts to those trades to which they have been hitherto confined.

"The restraints alleged to be imposed on workmen and their employers by Trades' Unions and other associations appeared to me to call for inquiry, and the revelations derived from the examinations before the commission, to which you gave your legislative sanction, have disclosed a state of things which will deserve your most earnest attention.

"The administration of the Poor Laws, which generally has conferred great benefit on the community, and especially on the poor themselves, requires constant supervision, and I have readily consented to a bill which, applied to the metropolis alone, will tend to equalize the pressure of taxation and improve the treatment of the sick poor, whose condition will be greatly benefited by your well-considered legislation.

"The Bill for the Regulation of the Merchant Shipping contains important provisions calculated to add to the health and comfort of those engaged in the mercantile marine.

"These and other valuable amendments of the law have been the result of your labours during the present session, and in returning to your own homes you carry with you the gratifying consciousness that your time and pains have not been misapplied, and that they have resulted in a series of measures which, I hope and earnestly pray, may contribute to the welfare of the country, and the contentment and happiness of my people."

The Lord Chancellor then declared Parliament prorogued until Wednesday, the 6th of November.

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.

At three o'clock on Thursday, before the Lord Chancellor, at his house in Merrion-square, Mr. Chatterton was sworn in as Vice-Chancellor of Ireland, and Mr. Warren as Attorney-General for Ireland, by Mr. Ralph Cusack, the Clerk of the Crown and Hanaper.

J. F. Elrington, Esq., LLD., has been appointed to the Crown Prosecutorship at Armagh, made vacant by the promotion of Samuel Ferguson, Esq., Q.C., LL.D., to the new office of Deputy Keeper of the Records. The appointment was made by the late Attorney-General before his advancement to the Bench.

The Attorney-General has appointed Mr. T. Pakenham Law to be his counsel, and Mr. John Orpin to be his clerk.

We understand that one of the most valuable appointments under the new Bill—that next to Mr. Ferguson in the Records Office—has been conferred on J. T. Gilbert, Esq., whose reputation as author of the History of Dublin and other valuable works is well known.

WHITEHALL, AUG. 17.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, appointing the Right Hon. Sir Robert Joseph Phillimore, Knt., D.C.L., to be Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England, in the room of the Right Hon. Stephen Lushington, D.C.L., resigned.—London Gazette.

THE NEW LAW ON THE PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.—On Friday the Act of Parliament to simplify the forms of prorogation during the recess was issued. The Queen is now empowered to issue a proclamation, which is to be deemed a full and sufficient notice to all persons, and Parliament is to stand prorogued to the day mentioned, notwithstanding any former law, usage, or practice to the contrary. The new law is not to apply to a prorogation at the close of a session, but will be enforced at the next prorogation after the forthcoming ceremony, when the Royal Speech is delivered.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

Reported by WM. WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

KEANEY v TOTTENHAM.

June 13, 14; July 1.—New Trial—Pleading—New Assignment—Issues.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Common Pleas. The action was one of trespass, brought by the plaintiff, Rose Keaney, against the defendants, Arthur Tottenham and Phelim M'Gowan. The summons and plaint contained one paragraph complaining that the defendants assaulted and beat the plaintiff, and gave her into the custody of a policeman, and caused her to be imprisoned in a police barrack, to the plaintiff's damage £200. The defendant Tottenham pleaded, first, that he did not commit the trespasses in the plaint mentioned, or any of them, as alleged; second, that he was a Justice of the Peace, that the alleged trespasses were committed by him in the execution of his office as such justice, and that more than six months had elapsed between the committal of the acts complained of and the commencement of the action thirdly, a similar plea, averring want of notice of the action. The defendant M'Gowan pleaded a traverse of the trespasses. The issues were:—1st. Whether the defendants, or either of them, committed the trespasses in the plaint complained of, or any of them, as alleged. 2nd. Whether the said alleged trespasses, or any of them, were committed by the defendant, Tottenham, in the execution of his office as Justice of the Peace, as alleged.

It appeared that the plaintiff held a house and some ground from the defendant Tottenham. That the defendant M'Gowan was Tottenham's bailiff. That by directions of Tottenham some interference with the plaintiff's premises took place, which was carried out by M'Gowan. That the interference was resisted by the plaintiff, and that a struggle ensued, in the course of which M'Gowan beat the plaintiff, and gave her into custody, who took her before Mr. Tottenham, as a magistrate, by whom she was committed to bridewell. Notice was served by the plaintiff that the trespasses of which she complained were the trespasses prior to any proceeding before the defendant as a Justice of the Peace.

The case was tried at the Spring Assizes of 1865 for the County of Tyrone, before Hayes, J. His Lordship directed the jury to leave out of consideration everything that happened after the assault by M'Gowan, and that if they believed that that assault took place they should find for the plaintiff. Counsel for the defendant Tottenham called on his Lordship to direct the jury that if they believed that the defendant Tottenham, as a Justice of the Peace, committed the plaintiff to prison, the plaintiff not having new assigned, they should find for the defendant Tottenham. The Judge refused so to direct, and the jury found, first, that the defendants assaulted and beat the plaintiff; secondly, that none of the trespasses were committed by Tottenham in the execution of his office as a Justice of the Peace, and they found for the plaintiff with £50 damages. A conditional order for a new trial having been obtained by the defendant, it was made absolute by the Court of Common Pleas, and the plaintiff now appealed, the question being whether, under the circumstances, it was necessary for the plaintiff to have new assigned.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Judge MILLER.

In re SIMON CARROLL, a Bankrupt

Aug. 13.—Composition after Bankruptcy—Omitting Creditor from Schedule.

The 149th section of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act provides that any bankrupt at any time after adjudication may call a meeting of his creditors whereof, and of the purport whereof, ten days' notice shall be given in the Dublin Gazette; and if the bankrupt or his friends shall make an offer of composition, and three-fifths in number and value of the creditors assembled at such meeting, or by an agent authorized in writing, shall agree to accept the same, another meeting for the purpose of deciding upon such offer shall be appointed to be holden, whereof such notice shall be given as aforesaid, and notice of the composition to be offered shall be delivered to each creditor, or left at his last place of business, or last usual place of abode, or transmitted to him by post, ten days before such meeting; and if three-fifths in number and value of the creditors then present, or represented by agents, shall agree to such composition, the other creditors shall be bound by it, &c. The 150th section provides that a second meeting shall be called to confirm what was done at the first, notice to be given to every creditor of the holding of such meeting, &c. In the present case the meetings were regularly held pursuant to the statute, and every creditor but one got notice; this creditor got no notice, nor was his name returned in the bankrupt's schedule. A composition of seven shillings in the pound was agreed to by all the other creditors, and one-half of it paid; and the bankrupt was going on in business, with a certainty of paying the other instalment, when the omitted creditor applied to him to be paid his debt in full. In answer to this application the bankrupt said that the omission was a mere oversight, that it was an old debt that had been forgotten, and that he was ready to pay the composition which all the other creditors had accepted, but the omitted creditor would not agree to this; and Mr. Larkin now came in upon motion, detailing these facts, and asking for an order to have the bankruptcy proceeded with, and the estate realized, unless his client was paid in full.

Levy, for the bankrupt, submitted that the Court had an equitable jurisdiction over all its proceedings, which was always exercised for the protection of suitors and the benefit of creditors. The Court had no power to direct the omitted creditor to be paid in full, and it ought not allow the bankruptcy to be proceeded with, for if that were done the creditors would get nothing more than they had got—the payment of the composition depended chiefly on the man's exertions in his trade; and if the present assets were to be realized they would do no more than pay the costs, and he would ask the Court to make no rule on the application, or to postpone it for a month until the bankrupt would try to make some arrangement. He would be able to show that the omission was a mere oversight, and that he had no improper motive whatever in omitting the creditor.

Judge MILLER said, although it might be a hardship on the trader, who most probably intended nothing wrong by the omission of the debt, and although it might act injuriously to other creditors to have the bankruptcy proceeded with, it was a case where he had no discretionary power. Every Court had no doubt jurisdiction over its own proceedings, but no jurisdiction could be exercised in contravention of the Act of Parliament. The statute directed notice to be served on every creditor; here was a creditor omitted who got no notice of the intended composition, and that creditor then came in and asked the Court for an order to have the estate realized, and he thought he had no power to refuse it if the creditor insisted on it. At the same time it might be prudent, on the part of the creditor, to give some time to make an arrangement. His Lordship made the order, and, with consent of the creditor, not to be acted on for ten days.

CIRCUIT CASES.

NORTH-EAST CIRCUIT.

LONDONDERRY SUMMER ASSIZES, 1867.

Before HUGHES, B.

A presentment for £17 for malicious injury, under the 135th sec. of the Grand Jury Act, was traversed on the ground that no application had been lodged with the Secretary of the Grand Jury or High Constable of the Barony, as required by the section. A notice was served on the High Constable of the Barony, which, it was contended, stated substantially the matters which the section requires to be stated in the application.

For the traverse it was argued that the section requires both an application and a notice, and that the notice served could not be made to answer the twofold purpose, and that a presentment should be based on an application which was in such cases the record of the Court. It was further contended for the traverse that the High Constable was not bound under the 14th section to forward to the Secretary of the Grand Jury a notice, but that he was bound to forward an application, and that no application having been lodged with him, the case did not come before the Presentment Sessions of the Grand Jury.

Baron HUGHES held that inasmuch as the notice stated substantially all that was required by the application, the want of the application was not fatal, and fiated the presentment.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.

CORK SUMMER ASSIZES.

Reported by WILLIAM GRIFFIN, Esq., Barrister-at-law

Before FITZGERALD, J.

CHANDER v. HAYES.

Motion to stay Execution in Ejectment after Compromise.

The action in this case was one of ejectment on the title, and had been tried in Limerick, and by a compromise a verdict was taken for a portion only of the premises sought to be recovered. The present motion was made in Cork before Fitzgerald, J., who had tried the case on behalf of the defendant, who was mortgagee of the premises. It sought to obtain a stay of execution until the 6th November next, to enable defendant to apply to set aside the verdict.

Murphy, Q.C., who now appeared in support of the motion referred to defendant's affidavit, which stated that he is mortgagee of the premises. That B. M'Nulty is mortgagor, and entitled to the equity of redemption, and to an account of the profits, and without his sanction defendant cannot dispose of the premises; that defendant is also grantee of the premises under a conveyance from the L. E. Court. That defendant was not present at the trial, and had not been in Ireland since the commencement of the action. That defendant instructed Mr. Murdock Green to defend the ejectment, and in nowise authorized Green and Co., or any counsel or any person whatsoever to enter into any compromise touching the premises or the ejectment proceedings. That to his great surprise he has been informed a compromise has been entered into by counsel, instructed by Green, on said trial. That he gave no sanction to the compromise, and on hearing of the same, repudiated, and does repudiate it, and denies the right of counsel or any other person to compromise said action without his authority; and he submits it is not binding and should be set aside, and that the possession should not be disturbed until the 6th November, to give defendant an opportunity of applying to the Court to set aside the compromise and for a new trial, and B. T. M'Nulty also objects and refuses to be bound by the compromise.

Sergeant Barry, Q.C., and Joshua Clarke, Q.C., to resist the motion.

FITZGERALD, J.—This case is in the Common Pleas, and the application to me now is, as Judge of Assize, to restrain execution. The case was tried before me in Limerick, and, with full knowledge of all the facts, I refuse the motion with costs. This is a most unfounded application.

CUNNINGHAM'S PRESENTMENT.

Malicious Injuries—Posting.

In this presentment, which was for compensation for malicious injury, the damages had been directed by the Grand Jury to be levied off a particular parish. The notices had been posted for the police in "the nearest" police barrack, which, however, was not situated in the parish off which the compensation was to be levied.

FITZGERALD, J., refused to fiat the presentment, as he did not consider the posting sufficient.

DISFRANCHISEMENT OF AGENTS.

We had hoped that the Lords would have rescued the Profession from the unmerited insult inflicted upon them by the House of Commons by disfranchising all solicitors whose professional services are retained at an election. The clause was based on the assumption that solicitors habitually vote for any party that will employ them, and that the vote is the object of the retainer—in plain terms, that they sell their franchise for a fee. Members of Parliament ought to have known that such an assumption is wholly false and unfounded. The solicitors are not for sale either in boroughs or counties. They have principles, and they belong to parties, like other men; but their knowledge of law, their aptitude for business, and their necessarily extensive local information, peculiarly adapt them to be election agents, and they are retained exclusively with reference to their services, and not to their votes. If the retainer was the purchase of a vote it would be a very costly one, and the same money might be used much more profitably. Why, then, are they to be disfranchised? The object of the exclusion of agents was to prevent bribery under colour of employment. Notoriously messengers were engaged in multitudes, for no other purpose than, under name of employment, to put money in their pockets, and so buy their votes without liability to the penalties for bribery. It was right to prevent this to some extent by forbidding persons so employed to vote, and thus to destroy the motive for sham engagements. But it is quite otherwise with professional agents. They cannot be dispensed with. An election could not be conducted without their assistance, and they are so costly, that no candidate would employ more of them than necessity compelled. To exact that they shall not vote is an insult for which the parties to it should be called to account by those whom they have insulted. It is too late to repair the wrong now, but we trust the solicitors will not rest until this undeserved stigma shall have been removed from them.—Law Times.

The following letter appears in The Solicitors' Journal:—

LEGAL ETIQUETTE.

SIR,—A writer in the Fortnightly Review, Mr. Dicey, a barrister, and, I believe, a large contributor to the periodical literature of the day, dealing with the question how far legal etiquette contributes to or impedes the public and private advantage of both branches of the legal profession, draws the following conclusions, unfavourable to its continuance:—

1. It excludes solicitors from the prizes of professional eminence, while there is no other profession pursued by persons in the position of gentlemen which offers no public prizes as a reward for eminence.

2. It tends to lessen the rapidity with which any given barrister can obtain a reward for his labours, and hence, in most cases these rewards come late in life.

3. It makes eminence at the bar depend on connexion.

With regard to the first and second of these conclusions I have nothing to say at present, having formed no fixed opinion on the subject, and I therefore leave your readers to form their own opinion of their soundness. Only I would say that, constituted as the professions are at present, it seems to me that it would be a very dangerous experiment to open to solicitors the prizes which are now open to barristers, for the obvious reason that their previous training does not fit them for the discharge of the higher judicial functions as it does in the case of barristers. I must, moreover, remark that the position in society in which his affluence places the prosperous attorney, seems no small prize to place before the young solicitor who aspires to eminence. With regard to the third conclusion, there is no doubt considerable force in the remark that success at the bar depends on connexion. It seems to me, however, that this is only partly true. Connexion at starting, and during the early part of a barrister's career, undoubtedly gives the person who possesses it an enormous advantage over him who does not. And, of course, the position acquired by a barrister in the early part of his career generally affects his permanent position in the profession. This is, no doubt, sufficiently disheartening to those who start without professional connexion in the great race for forensic eminence. However, it is gratifying to reflect that some—perhaps the majority—of the most distinguished men at the bar, and on the bench, were without professional connexion at starting. With regard to the manner in which Mr. Dicey proposes to cure the evil, viz., by adopting the American system, or by allowing barristers to take instructions direct from the litigant, I think the former would place a very large class of junior barristers at a still greater disadvantage than the "unconnected" labour under at present; for if the American system were introduced, those who possess capital at starting would, of course, at once eclipse those who do not.

The other alternative presents some formidable objections into which time does not now permit me to enter, and it is so generally distasteful to the bar itself that it is out of the question.

A BARRISTER.

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS.

It was hardly possible that the late Irish State Trials could fail to produce a crop of important decisions upon the law of conspiracy. The basis of all the indictments was the existence of one of the most gigantic and widespread conspiracies the world has ever seen, and when we add to this that the prisoners had the benefit of some of the most ingenious advocates of the Irish Bar, and that the learned judges who presided at the several trials were possessed of a genuine and conscientious desire to reserve for a higher tribunal the consideration of every point which appeared to admit of any discussion, we are not surprised to find the Superior Courts in Ireland frequently engaged in settling the law applicable to such cases.

Although a contrary course would not have affected the fate of any of the prisoners except one (Meany's case), we cannot help thinking that the highly extensible law of conspiracy has been considerably enlarged or widened by the late dicta and new decisions of the Irish Bench, and we therefore propose to consider the principal cases which have lately been before the Superior Courts in Ireland on appeal from the various commission courts for the trial of persons connected with the Fenian conspiracy.

The first case of importance which came before a Court of Appeal was that of Thomas Clarke Luby, the first person tried at the first special court for the trial of the Fenian prisoners. The principal question submitted to the Court involved the validity not only of all the convictions for Fenianism then obtained, but of many other convictions recorded in various volumes of the State trials; for, although a verbal distinction was attempted to be taken between the indictment in those cases and in Luby's case, it was hardly tenable, and the argument must be pushed all the way. The point was this—that it is a bad overt act of the treasonable compassing to allege that the prisoner "conspired, combined, confederated, and agreed" to do certain treasonable acts. It was argued that conspiracy is not necessarily an act, nor is an allegation of a conspiracy an allegation of a fact, any more than in a declaration in assumpsit a statement of an actual promise to pay which need not be proved; it is a mere legal inference which might arise upon various states of facts proved, and the prisoner is not thereby informed what is to be proved against him, as the statute intends. But the Court of Queen's Bench rightly held, on writ of error brought, that the allegation of a conspiracy may be the allegation of an act done, and requires to be so proved. They seem to have contented themselves with merely referring to the long roll of precedents; but the only ground on which we can escape a clear evasion of the statute is the plain and common-sense answer that conspiracy is proveable as an act, and when laid as an overt act, it is to be taken as the allegation of a personal act, and not as a legal inference. It will be the duty of the judge who tries the case, however, to see that it is proved as a personal act done within the venue by the defendant

This position, however, appears to be disturbed considerably by the cases of Reg. v. McCafferty, 15 W. R. 1025, and Reg. v. Meany, 15 W. R. 1082, and if the judgment of the majority in those cases contains a correct exposition of the law of conspiracy, the safeguards of the statute seem certainly very much weaker where a treasonable conspiracy is proved than in other cases of treason. It is now possible, and, indeed, it is now the practice, in all indictments for Fenianism, whether as treason-felony or high treason, to lay, as overt acts of the treason, every levying of war and act of treason done by any members of the conspiracy in Ireland or elsewhere. For instance, an informer swears that a given individual attended a Fenian meeting, or was sworn in as a member of the conspiracy. Instantly the accused may be indicted for compassing the death of the Queen; and the indictment may lay as overt acts—the acts intended by the statute to be so specified as to inform him of the evidence about to be given against him—the various outbreaks which have lately occurred all over the country, of which he may have known nothing except from the newspapers. The legality of such a course we shall consider presently, but we desire to remark, at all events, that it does not appear to carry out the spirit of the statute.

McCafferty's case was this. The defendant was proved to have been an active member of the Fenian conspiracy prior to his arrest. He was arrested on the 25th February, and a rising took place in Dublin on the 5th March, while he was in confinement. The judges held that he was liable for the rising of the 5th March just as though he himself had taken part in it, the acts of his co-conspirators, done in furtherance of the design of the conspiracy, being in law his acts.

Now the law on the subject, as laid down in the authorities, is quite clear as to the responsibility of co-conspirators for one another's acts. The act of one co-conspirator, done in pursuance of the common design, is no doubt in law taken to be the act of all. But for what purpose? For the purpose, we are inclined to think with Pigot, C.B. (McCafferty's case, 15 W. R. 1025), of fixing a guilty intent on the conspiracy, and of defining the guilt of belonging to the conspiracy, which is the offence. Every criminal act done by certain members of a conspiracy, although done in furtherance of a common design, is not a new crime done by each individual of the remaining members, but is an additional proof of the guilty design of the whole company. When, therefore, the act of conspiracy itself is laid as an overt act in an indictment against one conspirator, there is no necessity, nor is it proper, we submit, to lay as his personal acts all the acts of guilt done by the various members of the conspiracy from time to time.

It might be said, however, that there can be no harm in laying these as overt acts, because to prove them you must first prove a conspiracy, and that being laid as an overt act, when it is proved the offence is proved, and the remaining overt acts are superfluous either one way or other. But without admitting this as a reason for inserting them in the indictment, it will be seen that the effect of such a course has been to abolish the law of venue in connexion with indictments for this offence.

In Meany's case it was held sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction that the defendant was a member of a conspiracy ramifying into the venue, although he had joined that conspiracy out of the venue, and had never been within the venue from the time of his becoming a member of the conspiracy till after his arrest. The overt acts laid there were all conspiracies for various treasonable purposes. No other act was alleged. It was held that to conspire in America was to conspire in the venue, because some of the conspirators were within the venue, and an overt act done within the venue manifested a compassing within the venue. Some difficulty existed in the fact that in proving the overt act of conspiracy the Crown were assuming the conspiracy already proved—were proving a conspiracy by a conspiracy—were proving an act done by deputy without proving the existence of a deputation. But if overt acts of levying war in the venue as laid against McCafferty had been laid against Meany, there would have been no difficulty, as, according to the doctrine of McCafferty's case, the conspiracy might have been proved anywhere out of the venue, and the acts done by co-conspirators in the venue would at once have been proveable.

We do think, then, with all respect, that the Irish courts have gone too far in laying down the broad rule that a conspirator is liable for the acts of all members of the conspiracy in exactly the same degree, and in every respect as if they were done by his own hand. And further, as we already pointed out, the only intelligible ground on which conspiracy can be laid as an overt act is—that it is proveable as a personal act done within the venue. That was a good reason for deciding Mulcahy's case as it was decided. But in Meany's case that rule has been departed from, and an overt act of conspiracy within the venue is held to be sustained by proof of the defendant's connexion in America with a conspiracy which ramified into the venue. The personal act is disregarded, and the legal inference takes its place.

It may be said that there is little or no difference between supposing each individual of the conspiracy personally guilty of committing the acts done by the others, and holding him guilty of being a member of a conspiracy having such crime as its object. But we have shown that in one case the difference was sufficient to overturn completely the law of venue, and there probably will arise further novel complications. In addition to this it must be remarked that it does not add to our respect for the administration of justice to know that a tailor or a shoemaker, whose acts in complicity with the conspiracy do not extend beyond swearing an oath upon a Prayer-book—may be, and actually is, charged in the indictment with the very same overt acts which are laid against those arch traitors who have been leading the various attempts at insurrection against the Government of the country.—Solicitors' Journal.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From The Law Times.)

Enlargement of Time to Amend in Equity.—Where a specified time is fixed by the orders of the court to take a certain step, and it appears in evidence that unless that time is enlarged the step cannot be taken, and the party cannot have the advantage of it by reason of his residing out of the jurisdiction, the court, in the exercise of its general inherent discretion, will enlarge the time: (Crossley v. Dorning, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 698. V. C. M.)

Will—Construction of Devise.—B. devised land to his wife for life, and after her decease "I give and bequeath the same to my daughter M., wife of A. R., to her and her children for ever." M. was held to take an estate tail, although she was enceinte at B.'s death, for the devise must be construed to mean such an estate as she could hold to her and her children for ever; and that "children" must be here a word of limitation and not of purchase: (Roper v. Roper, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 700. C. P.)

Equity Procedure.—The United States filed a bill against an English agent of the Confederate States for discovery and payment of moneys. It was pleaded that the plaintiffs had instituted proceedings under an Act of Congress for forfeiture of property of the defendant in Alabama, and that discovery would expose him to forfeiture of such property unless plaintiffs waived their claim to him: It was held a bar to the discovery and relief sought: (United States v. McRae, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 691. V. C. W.)

Maintenance of Infant—Father's Ability.—Two sums of £10,000 each were vested in trustees, one under a settlement, and the other under a codicil to a will, on certain trusts for the wife and husband and children, with a power to the husband and wife jointly during their lives, by any deed, &c., to be by them, or the survivor of them, sealed, &c., to appoint the whole or any part of their dividends for the maintenance of the children. And it was declared that the trustees should and might apply the income, or a competent part, for maintenance as they thought proper. The husband survived the wife, and filed a bill to determine whether he was entitled to apply the income of the trust-funds for the maintenance of his children without reference to his ability: Held, that he was, and that there was a trust for maintenance, and not a mere power: (Newton v. Curzon, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 697. V. C. W.)

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of "The Irish Law Times."

Sir,—Will you or any of your correspondents be good enough to state whether there is any and what method of effecting the compulsory apportionment of tithe-rent charge in Ireland between the several owners of land, which is subject to one entire rent charge, so as to be binding on the landowner and the tithe owner.

Yours obediently,

9th August, 1867. V. W.

[We do not believe that there is any distinction in this respect between a tithe-rent charge and an ordinary rent. The owner of an entire rent issuing out of lands cannot be compelled to apportion that rent amongst several holders.—Ed. I.L.T.]

ADVERTISEMENT TO CREDITORS AND LEGATEES.

Cause Petition under "The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850," section 15.

In the Matter of Elizabeth Georgina Wharton, and Jane Julia Anne Wilme Wharton, minors, by James Henry Wharton, their Guardian and next friend, Petitioners; Esther Jane Wharton, Sarah Elizabeth Coulter, and John Gibbons, and by Amendment, George Henry Wharton, Respondents.

I HEREBY require all persons claiming to be Creditors or Pecuniary Legatees of John Lee Wharton, late of 53, York-street, in the City of Dublin, deceased, on or before the 5th day of SEPTEMBER next, to furnish, in writing, to JAMES HENRY WHARTON, of 27, Upper Merrion-street, in the City of Dublin; or to FLETCHER WILME, of 29, Lower Ormond-quay, in said city, his Solicitor, the amount and particulars of their several demands (accompanied, in case of simple contract debts, by a statement of the consideration of such debts), in order that the Petitioner may, without any expense to them, prove in this matter such or so much of their demands as he shall think just, of the allowance or disallowance of which, or any part of same, said Creditors shall receive due Notice. And all such Creditors, whose demands shall be disallowed, either wholly or in part, shall, at the peril of costs, be at liberty to file charges in my Office, in respect of the claims or amounts so disallowed, within one fortnight after they shall respectively have received notice of such disallowance.

Dated this 5th day of August, 1867.

J. J. MURPHY, Master in Chancery.

FLETCHER WILME, Solicitor for the Petitioner, No. 29, Lower Ormond-quay.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY & INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

In the Matter of Edward Soulsby, a Bankrupt.

PURSUANT to the Order of the said Court, the Official Assignee in this Matter, will receive Tenders for the purchase of the Interest of the said Bankrupt and of his Assignees, in the House, Premises, and Offices, now known as Old Brighton, situate on the road leading from Dublin to Monkstown and Kingstown, in the Parish of Monkstown, Half Barony of Rathdown, and County of Dublin, held under lease dated the 14th day of September, 1838, for the term of 89 years, from the 25th day of March, 1838, at the rent of £21 per annum, payable half-yearly.

Dated this 19th day of August, 1867.

JOHN FRANCIS TEELING, Assistant Registrar.

JEHU MATHEWS, Solicitor.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The said premises were conveyed by the Landed Estates' Court, on the 21st day of July, 1862, to the Bankrupt, who has expended a considerable sum on their improvement.

They are within a few minutes' walk of the Salthill and Seapoint Stations of the Dublin and Kingstown Railway, and, being situate in the salubrious and fashionable neighbourhood of Monkstown, they are well worth the attention of intending purchasers.

It will be observed that the rent is merely nominal.

For further particulars apply to LUCIUS H. DEERING, Esq., Official Assignee, No. 33, Upper Ormond-quay, Dublin.

JEHU MATHEWS, Solicitor, Agent to the Bankruptcy and Assignees, No. 12, Lower Dominick-street, Dublin.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY & INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

In the Matter of Thomas Pettigrew, of No. 1, Saint Andrew-street, in the City of Dublin, Printer and Bookbinder, a Bankrupt.

THE Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency will sit at the said Court, Four Courts, Dublin, on FRIDAY, the 30th day of AUGUST, 1867, at the hour of Eleven o'clock in the forenoon, for the Admission and Proof of Debts, and the Final Examination of the Bankrupt in this Matter.

Whereupon, if no prosecution shall have been directed by the Court, nor any charge of fraud entered on the proceedings, nor any objection to the signing of the Bankrupt's Certificate be entered in the Court, such Certificate will be forthwith prepared by the Chief Registrar, and signed by the Judge.

All Creditors are required to send to the Office of the Official Assignee, the affidavit of debt, or precise particulars of their claims, specifying any securities held by them, two days at least before said sitting; and of which sitting all persons concerned are to Take Notice.

Dated this 20th day of August, 1867.

HUGH DOYLE, Deputy Assistant Registrar.

JOHN FORSYTHE, Agent to the Bankruptcy, No. 20, Eustace-street, Dublin.

LUCIUS H. DEERING, Official Assignee, No. 33, Upper Ormond-quay, Dublin.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

In the Goods of John Farren, late of Booterstown, in the County of Dublin, deceased.

TAKE NOTICE that pursuant to the Act of Parliament passed in the 22nd and 23rd years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chap. 35, sec. 29, intituled, "An Act to Further Amend the Law of Property, and to Relieve Trustees," all persons claiming to be Next of Kin or Creditors of, or having any debts, claims, or demands upon or against the Estate or Assets of the above-named John Farren, deceased—who died on or about the 15th day of November, 1866, at Booterstown, in the County of Dublin, aforesaid, and of whose Estate Letters of Administration as of a person dying intestate were granted by the Principal Registry of Her Majesty's Court of Probate in Dublin, on the 4th day of July, 1867, to John Flanagan, of Beamore, in the County of Meath, Farmer, a lawful second cousin, and one of the Next of Kin of the said deceased—are hereby required to furnish, in writing, the particulars of their respective claims, debts, or demands, to the said JOHN FLANAGAN, or to me, JOHN THOMAS HINDS, No. 28, Westmoreland-street, Dublin, his Solicitor, on or before the 1st day of NOVEMBER, 1867. And Take Notice, that after the said 1st day of November next, the said John Flanagan will proceed to distribute the Assets of the said deceased amongst the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims, debts, and demands of which he shall then have had due Notice. And Take Notice, that the said Administrator will not, after the said 1st day of November next, be liable for the Assets, or any part thereof, so distributed to any person of whose claims he shall not then have had Notice.

Dated this 25th day of July, 1867.

JOHN THOMAS HINDS, Solicitor for said Administrator, 28, Westmoreland-street, Dublin.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 31.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 31, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

THE "Court of Chancery Ireland Act, 1867," will come into operation on the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1867, except as to Part I. (relating to the appointment of a Vice-Chancellor), which, with clause 176 (relating to the framing of General Rules and Orders), took effect from the first day of August, 1867.

Part I. commences with the 4th Section, and ends with the 26th Section of the Act.

The 4th Section creates the power to appoint a Vice-Chancellor, "to be Judge-Assistant to the Lord Chancellor in the discharge of the judicial functions of his office, such additional Judge to be called the Vice-Chancellor of Ireland."

The 6th Section relates to the Jurisdiction and Powers of the Vice-Chancellor, and enables him to hear and determine—firstly, all suits depending in the Court of Chancery as a Court of Equity; secondly, all suits incident to any ministerial office of the Court of Chancery; thirdly, all suits which shall have been, or shall be, submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court, or of the Lord Chancellor, by the special authority of any Act of Parliament. The jurisdiction in all such suits is to be exercised as the Court shall, from time to time, by any General Order, direct. The same Section enacts that all Decrees, Orders, and Acts of the Vice-Chancellor, shall be deemed or taken to be Decrees, Orders, and Acts of the Court of Chancery, or of such incident jurisdiction, or under such special authority, and shall have the same force and validity, and be executed accordingly, subject to be afterwards reversed or altered, in like manner as if they were Decrees, Orders, or Acts of the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls; and that no such Decree or Order shall be enrolled until the same shall be signed by the Lord Chancellor.

The 7th Section provides that the Vice-Chancellor shall sit for the Lord Chancellor whenever he shall require him so to do.

The 11th Section regulates the appointment of Chief Clerks, and gives power to the Master of the Rolls, and the Vice-Chancellor for the time being, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor, to appoint one Chief Clerk each, to be attached to the Court of each of those Judges, for the purpose of assisting them in business not of a judicial character.

By the 13th Section the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor are empowered to appoint two Junior Clerks, to assist the Chief Clerk of each Court, subject to the provisions of the 43rd Section.

Under the 25th Section the Lord Chancellor, if he considers that the business of his Court renders it expedient, can, with the assent of the Commissioners of the Treasury, appoint one Chief Clerk and two Junior Clerks, to be attached to his Court.

And the 26th Section gives the Chancellor, with the consent of the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellor, subject to the approbation of the Commissioners of the Treasury, power to appoint an additional Chief Clerk, or additional Junior Clerks, to the Master of the Rolls, and the Vice-Chancellor, or to either of them.

Part II. begins with the 27th Section, and ends with the 51st.

The 27th Section abolishes the office of Master in Ordinary, except the office of Receiving Master, which is to be maintained for the performance of certain special duties which are regulated by the 49th, 50th, and 51st Sections, but reserving to the several Masters whose offices are abolished, all the powers conferred on them by any Act of Parliament, or otherwise vested in them, until they are released by the Lord Chancellor, under the provisions of the 29th Section.

The 31st Section, with the view of expeditiously winding up all pending suits, confers powers on the Masters to summon parties, or their solicitors, and to give such directions, and make such orders, as they may think necessary for the purpose of settling and winding up pending suits; such order to be subject to be discharged or varied by the Lord Chancellor, upon application made for that purpose.

The Lord Chancellor also has power, under the 32nd Section, upon Masters' Report or Certificate, to make orders for the prosecution or final disposal of any suit, and for the payment of the costs thereof, including any costs occasioned by the conduct of any of the parties, which prevented the Masters from finally disposing of them.

The 41st Section provides for the appointment of a second Assistant Registrar to the Court.

THE last barrier of legal monopoly has been at length removed, and all the Courts of Justice in this country are now open to the practice of each branch of the legal profession. On the 20th of August instant, the Royal assent was given to a Bill, which will be henceforth known as "The Court of Admiralty (Ireland) Act, 1867." To the ability and skill, the energy and perseverance, of the first and present Vice-Chancellor of Ireland, are the thanks of the legal professions, as well as of the mercantile and maritime communities, pre-eminently due, for this completion of law reform in Ireland. The Vice-Chancellor of Ireland has been long and well known as a leading advocate of the Admiralty Court. He was conversant with its law, familiar with its practice, conscious of its defects. He knew its vast jurisdiction—its right to try cases arising in every sea, involving ships of every flag. He was not ignorant of the frequent attempts from time to time made to legislate for that court, and place it on a proper footing—attempts that from various reasons proved unsuccessful; and it was left for him to end his career at the Bar, and to commence it on the Bench, with the conciousness of having introduced, and vigorously and successfully carried, a measure for the re-constitution of the Court, in which, perhaps, it may be said he made his first step towards the high and honourable position he now so deservedly holds.

The Act being now law, we may ask our readers, or most of them, what they know of this terra incognita, if such a term can be applied to a Court of Admiralty. Its existence is well known, and by those who have to do with maritime questions, its exclusiveness also. But this latter is now happily all done away with, for by a section in the Act it is provided that "all barristers and all attorneys-at-law, and solicitors, shall, from and after the time when this Act shall come into operation, be entitled to practise as barristers, attorneys, and solicitors, in all matters and causes whatsoever, in the said Court of Admiralty."

The jurisdiction of the Court is now clearly defined. It is in cases of salvage, towage, damage, building or repairing ships, necessaries, ownership, mortgages, and wages—a jurisdiction amply extensive to secure a lucrative practice to solicitors having any maritime or mercantile connexion. Of course the practice of the newly-made tribunal is yet, and, doubtless, for a short time will be, unknown; but the aspiring practitioner in the Court as now constituted may be reminded that MacLachlan, or Dowdeswell, on The Merchant Shipping Act, and Pritchard's Digest, would well repay the outlay on their cost.

As the jurisdiction of the Court will, as to its law, be mainly administered under the provisions of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," and its amended Acts, now for some years in force, it is necessary, in starting this comparatively new Court, that a Judge should be selected who, acquainted with the law in question, would be thus enabled to give confidence to the new practitioners. This, we are happy to be enabled to state, has been done to general satisfaction, as the appointment to the new judgeship has been conferred on Dr. Townsend, Q.C., an advocate of extensive practice in the Admiralty Court, and it is gratifying to know, therefore, that the new tribunal will be presided over by a lawyer intimately conversant with the law of shipping and nautical questions.

THE NEW JUDGE OF THE ADMIRALTY COURT.

QUITE a number of legal appointments, both in England as well as in this country, have fallen to the lot of, and been given away by, the present Government. In Ireland two Chancellors, a Judge of Appeal, a Chief Justice, a Master of the Rolls, a Vice-Chancellor, and two puisne Judgeships have been appointed by Lord Derby's Government. The Landed Estates' Court and the Court of Bankruptcy have each also obtained a new Judge; and the mutations of the respective offices of Attorney and Solicitor-General have been more rapid than we can remember occurring in a similar period of time to that which has elapsed since the formation of the present Government, some thirteen months ago. All these appointments were praised or blamed, as the case might be; but we do not think that, perhaps, with the exception of the learned Lord Justice of Appeal, any were received with such unanimous approbation as the one we to-day announce, namely, that of John Fitzhenry Townsend, as Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland.

The newly-made Judge was called to the Bar in Trinity Term, 1834, after which he joined the Munster Circuit. In 1847, having previously obtained the degree of LL.D. in Trinity College, he was admitted an advocate of the Admiralty Court, then presided over by Dr. Stock. Immediately after his admission Dr. Townsend obtained a large share of the practice, and soon became a leading advocate of the Court, a position he has to the present successfully kept; indeed there were few cases tried in that period of twenty years in which he did not hold a brief. In 1863, when a Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into the constitution, &c., of the Irish Court of Admiralty, and which contained the names of Judges Fitzgerald and Longfield, the present Judge O'Hagan, then Attorney-General, Sir Robert Phillimore, now Judge of the English Court of Admiralty, and other legal celebrities, the Commissioners selected Dr. Townsend to prepare a statement for their information as to the difference in practice and procedure between the Courts of the two countries, and the able statement drawn up by him may be deemed the basis on which evidence was subsequently taken by the Commissioners, and may be said also to be the groundwork of the recent legislation.

Dr. Townsend is widely known as a mercantile and maritime lawyer of great soundness and experience, as well as possessing great nautical knowledge; and in selecting him from the ranks of the advocates of the Court the authorities have rightly followed the precedent in the case of the sister Court in Doctors' Commons, where Sir Robert Phillimore, an advocate of it, was recently selected to succeed Dr. Lushington, one of the ablest Judges that ever presided in any maritime Court.

THE NEW SOLICITOR-GENERAL.

THE office of Solicitor-General for Ireland, rendered vacant by the promotion of Mr. Warren, has been conferred on Mr. Michael Harrison, Q.C., of the North-East Circuit. Mr. Harrison has for some years held a deservedly high position in his profession, and is much esteemed by his brethren. He was called to the Bar in Trinity Term, 1840, after a distinguished collegiate career in our national University. He very quickly got into large practice, and was soon looked upon as a "rising" man. In February, 1863, he was made a Queen's Counsel. From that time he has been one of the leaders on his circuit, and has also enjoyed extensive business in our Courts in Dublin. In the matter of the Queen's University and the Supplemental Charter, Mr. Harrison was retained by the graduates, and argued the case on their behalf with great ability. He is a sound lawyer, courteous, and painstaking, and we entertain no doubt but that the important duties of the high office to which he has been appointed will be satisfactorily and efficiently discharged.

JUSTICE IN AMERICA.

If an example is wanted of the disastrous consequences of electing judges by universal suffrage we have only to refer to New York. There not only judges, but all the officers concerned in the judiciary, are chosen by popular election. The North American Review has given an account of the working of this system. The cause of the debasement of the judges is the patronage placed in their hands by the great increase in the number of referable causes. The referee suffers it to be understood that he is "open to offers" from the parties seeking a decision, and sometimes he manages to pocket 50 dollars or 100 dollars a day as his fee. Receiverships are also offices of profit to the judges. A public journal of respectable character recently asserted that upon the settlement of a certain receiver's accounts the judge demanded half his fees, which amounted to some 10,000 dols. Besides taking money as bribes the New York judges will hear counsel ex parte, out of court. The North American Review says:—"It very naturally follows that the judge who will do this is often utterly indifferent to the argument in open court; and it also follows, in not a few cases, that he pledges his decision beforehand. We have known extensive stock speculations to be conducted on the faith of decisions thus promised, and it is not to be wondered at if the judge was strongly suspected of having an interest, as he certainly had a friend, in the speculation." The reviewer gives a "portrait" of one of the judges. He sometimes cuts short a case before it is fairly stated. "You can go on," he will say to the lawyer who is pleading before him, "all day if you like; but I have decided this case, and I never take back a decision," He indulges considerably in coarse language or profane jokes while on the Bench. Once he said in open court "that William Cullen Bryant was the most notorious liar in the United States." On another occasion he referred to the President (Lincoln) and the Secretary of War as "those villains down there." He is greatly under the influence of certain lawyers who are supposed to share their fees with him. One Judge (not now on the Bench) before whom an assault case was brought, was asked during the progress of the trial to go with the prisoner and his counsel to dinner. He accepted the offer, and found a bill for £100 under his plate. He was "astonished," but he literally "pocketed the affront" and decided in favour of the accused. Another Judge accepted £500 in return for a decision. "Within a much more recent period," says the reviewer, "a man was indicted for a series of enormous frauds, by which he had made himself wealthy. The indictment was quashed for some informality, and he openly boasted that he knew how to manage the drawing of future grand juries so as to secure himself against any renewal of the indictment—a boast which the failure of all subsequent attempts to indict him seems to justify. We are assured, on the most respectable authority, that the judge received 10,000 dollars for his decision." If the guilty person be wealthy and the accused poor, there is very little chance of justice being done. When a person gets "into trouble" his jailer, or some friend, recommends him to trust his defence to one or other of a certain set of lawyers. From Lamirande, the French cashier, these harpies extorted 20,000 dollars, and bribed his jailers with part of the plunder to let him escape. Servant girls are stripped of all they possess, and during the war thousands of men were liberated from prison on condition that they would enlist in the army, the judge, lawyer, and prison officials receiving the bounty money, amounting to 600 dollars, or even 1,500 dollars for each person. And all this, the reviewer implies, is little to the revelations which might be made.

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF A JUDGE.

In South Australia proceedings for the removal of Mr. Justice Boothby have now been taken under the Act 22 George III, which authorizes governors of colonies in executive council to effect such removal in cases of misbehaviour or neglect of duty. The charges brought against him are as follows:—1. Conduct and language contumacious and disrespectful to the Court of Appeals, and obstructive to the said court in the performance of its duties. 2. Perverse refusal to recognize the authority of Parliament, and to administer the laws of the province. 3. Expressions on the bench disparaging and insulting to the Legislature, the Government, and the institutions of the province, and language and behaviour on the bench calculated to bring the administration of justice into contempt. 4. Language on the bench offensive and irritating to the other Judges, and public denial of their authority. 5. Allowing private and personal feeling to interfere with the fair and impartial administration of justice." In addition to these there is a further charge against his Honor "of having assumed a position inconsistent with the equal administration of justice, and which in certain events would put a stop to the exercise of the functions of the Supreme Court—such charge being contained in a letter from their Honors the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Gwynne to his Excellency the Governor."

CIRCUIT CASES.

Reported by W. GRIFFIN, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.

CORK SUMMER ASSIZES.

Before KEOGH, J.

SHEEHAN, Appellant; M'DONALD, Respondent.

Amendment of Ejectment Process.

This was an action of ejectment for non-payment of rent. The ejectment process described the defendant as tenant from year to year. The defendant had set up a lease below, but had no witness who could identify the premises in this lease as being those in the ejectment. Decree was obtained below. It being now shown that there was a lease of the premises in question, Johnson, for the plaintiff, applied to have the process amended by describing the defendant as holding under a lease at the same rent.

O'Reardon contra.

KEOGH, J., made the amendment on the terms of the plaintiff paying all the costs, both of the appeal and in the court below.

Attorney for plaintiff, Honohan.

Attorney for defendant, Jullian.

O'BRIEN, Appellant; CLOHANE, Respondent.

Ejectment on Notice to Quit—Insolvency of Plaintiff.

In this case the landlord had been insolvent some years before, but his assignees had never taken any step with regard to his interest in the property, the subject of the ejectment, which was not returned on his schedule.

O'Brien, for the defendant, objected that the interest in this property, whatever it was, passed to the assignees, 20 and 21 Vic., c. 60, sec. 268, and that as they were not parties to the ejectment, it could not be maintained.

Wm. Johnson, for the plaintiff. The insolvent can maintain this ejectment, as the assignees have never elected to take his interest. It has been decided on the English Act which corresponds—12 and 13 Vic., c. 106—that the insolvent is liable until the assignee elect: Copeland and Stephens, 1 B. & A., 593; Woodfall (1863), 216.

O'Brien.—The insolvent's liability on covenants in leases depends on the 271st section, and does not govern this case.

CONNAUGHT CIRCUIT.

LEITRIM ASSIZES.

Reported by OLIVER J. BURKE, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before MONAHAN, C.J.

July 16.—Grand Jury—Unappropriated Balance in Treasurer's Hands—Motion to apply same in Payment of Barony Cess Collector's Fees—No Rule on the Motion.

M'Dermott, of counsel, applied to his Lordship on behalf of the barony cess collectors of the county Leitrim, for an order that the treasurer of the county be at liberty to pay out of any available funds he might then have in his hands the poundage fees due to said cess collectors, which had been presented for at the present Assizes. Hitherto the custom had been to levy the amount presented for, and to pay it to the cess collectors at the ensuing or following Assizes. Counsel relied upon orders of a similar nature made at two last successive Assizes for the county of Roscommon by Keogh and Christian, J.J.

MONAHAN, C.J., was free to confess that he did not see his way to making such an order as that now sought to be made, in the absence of any section of the Grand Jury Act empowering him to do so. His Lordship would not now make any order on the motion.

JULY 22ND—ROSCOMMON.

M'Dermott said that he had an application similar to that which he had already made in Leitrim, on behalf of the Roscommon barony cess collectors. Counsel, as in the Leitrim application, relied upon the orders already made by other Judges on this circuit.

MONAHAN, C.J.—This is an application exactly similar to the one made the other day at the Leitrim Assizes in Carrick-on-Shannon; and on considering the case I do not think I have any jurisdiction to make the order sought for, inasmuch as any funds in the hands of the treasurer have been levied for other specific purposes, and if there be any balance in the treasurer's hands that balance was levied for the purposes specified in the levy, and for none other. No doubt a larger sum had been estimated than was absolutely required, but how can that unappropriated sum be now applied in the manner in which counsel seeks to apply it? Besides, the order sought for was not mandatory, it was a mere permissive one, contingent on the treasurer's having any unappropriated balance in his hands; the treasurer might not have any surplus worth talking about in his hands at all, and, if he had not, of what use would this order be? In that case I do not see that it would have any operation whatever. I shall not, therefore, make any order in this case: by adopting this course I shall not disturb the orders made by previous Judges on this circuit. In fact I shall not interfere in the matter at all, and say no rule on the motion. My adopting this course will not interfere with the Grand Jury's action in the matter.

The matter was subsequently brought before the Grand Jury, who thereupon passed a resolution directing the treasurer to appropriate the funds then remaining in his hands in the manner sought for by the above motion. This course the Grand Jury took, inasmuch as the learned Chief Justice had declined to interfere in the matter, or to disturb the orders made at former Assizes by other Judges.

ENGLAND.

ABOLITION OF IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT IN FRANCE.

A law, dated July 22, 1867, has just been promulgated in France, by which imprisonment is abolished in commercial and civil cases, and is reserved for criminal and police offences. The change was not adopted without strong opposition both in the Corps Législatif and in the Senate; and the result has been a thorough discussion of the question. It may be useful to note some of the arguments adduced on either side, and to combine them with a few significant figures, not generally known.

From the time of St. Louis protests were every now and then raised against imprisonment for debt; but the principle was still firmly rooted when the Revolution broke out. It is hard to say whether "the principles of '89" would have exercised any influence in the matter without the anarchy of 1793. It was not till the 9th of March, 1793, that imprisonment for debt was abolished. But it was re-established by the law of 15 Germinal in the year VI. (April 5, 1798), with new rigours; for anarchy had caused so many disorders, and the misery of the times had made the relations between debtor and creditor so uncertain, that recourse was had to all possible means of restoring order and regularity to business. Since then the law has been several times altered with the view of modifying its severity. In 1848 it was temporarily suspended by the provisional Government, by a decree of the 9th of March; but it was not till the present year that imprisonment for debt was abolished by a regular, and, it is to be hoped, definitive law.

In the year VI. the French Legislature considered arrest for debt as a punishment, and this is expressly stated in the 3rd article of the law of Germinal. This point of view has been maintained also by the authors of the Civil Code. One of them, in the exposé des motifs to the chapter on personal arrest, characterizes it by saying: "C'est le premier degré des peines nécessaires pour maintenir l'ordre public." In 1832, when the law was modified, the idea of punishment was dropped, and imprisonment was said to be a means of coercion, to overcome "la mauvaise volonté de celui qui chercherait à cacher son avoir." M. Mallet Butini, of Geneva, defines the imprisonment as a torture "pour arracher au malheureux qui la subit . . . . . le remboursement de ce qu'il ne peut pas payer." To call it torture is, of course, to condemn it. And it deserves condemnation, for it is unjust in confounding those who cannot with those who will not pay. Moreover, it gives one man, for a small sum, an almost unlimited power over the liberty of another. Again, it very rarely ends in the creditor being paid, and this naturally, inasmuch as it deprives a man of the opportunity of getting money, except, indeed, when his family is tortured into making a sacrifice on his behalf. In most cases the whole family suffers without being able to effect a release, and thus the innocent are punished with the guilty, if indeed any one is guilty. The exposé des motifs of the law of 1867 finds additional arguments to show the injustice of imprisonment for debt, which might extend over five years. There is less risk, it says, in committing a murder through carelessness than in making an imprudent loan, less danger in setting up a brothel than in opening a house of business; it is better to be guilty of libel, of armed rebellion, of a breach of trust, or even, in most cases, of swindling or robbery, than to endorse a bill thoughtlessly; and, lastly, there is less risk in failing for a million than in deferring the payment of a business debt for 6,000 fr., two years' imprisonment being inflicted in one case and three in the other.

The Government accumulates still further arguments against the system. Facts prove that the number of debtors imprisoned diminishes in times of distress, and increases when business is flourishing. In the year 1862, out of 1,794 debtors of both sexes imprisoned in France, 664 owed less than 500 fr., 333 owed between 500 and 1,000 fr., and only 265 owed more than 5,000 fr. If we take the debtors' prison in Paris, out of 5,924 persons imprisoned for debt in ten years, 2,778 owed less than 1,000 fr., 1,224 owed between 1,000 fr. and 2,000 fr. Again, out of 1,486 persons released from prison in the whole of France, in 1862, 407 had paid, and in Paris, out of 6,577 releases obtained in ten years, 545 prisoners only had paid in full, and 3,149 prisoners were discharged, owing to creditors failing to provide them with board; for in France the creditor had to pay formerly 30 fr. and more recently 40 fr. a month, in advance, for the keep of his debtor. It has been remarked with justice that if imprisonment produces such small results, the fear of it is not likely to do more. So that the practice does not act as a deterrent

There is one point in French legislation which exhibits more than any other the abuses arising from imprisonment for debt, and that is the marriage contract. In the interest of the wife the law allows a partition of property, and the property of the wife cannot be seized for the debts of the husband. There is also the régime dotal, which is a sort of partition of property, with this difference, that in the case of the partition of property the wife is mistress of the interest of her property, while the husband disposes freely of the interest of his wife's dowry, which is fixed once for all in the marriage contract, and can neither be increased nor diminished, except in a small number of cases, one of which is that the wife can alienate her dowry to deliver her husband from a debtor's prison. Now it has been observed that in the provinces where régime dotal is most usual, imprisonment for debt is facilitated, and the protective intentions of the law made illusory. The exposé des motifs of the new law speaks of cases in which husbands, with or without the consent of their wives, have caused themselves to be arrested by a sham creditor, in reality an accomplice, in order to effect a sale of the dowry property. It also says that men have been imprisoned by creditors who had criminal designs upon their wives.

These reasons, however, and many more added to them, did not suffice to convince the Chamber. The Committee nominated to inquire into the scheme determined upon its rejection, and, it must be admitted, advanced some arguments which were at least plausible. In the first place, it pointed out that the Government could hardly brand imprisonment for debt as illegitimate, while it maintained imprisonment on account of fines and costs in criminal and police cases. To the charge of injustice in visiting imprudence and misfortune with the same penalties as perversity and bad faith, it was answered that the accusation has no foundation in civil cases, in which this punishment is confined to acts accompanied by false pretences or serious culpability, and its application is often left to the discretion of the magistrate. With regard to commercial transactions, the Commission asks whether that be called an unjust law which in an interest of a higher order—that of the public credit—binds the debtor rigorously to fulfil his engagements. But, as we have seen, the real question is whether the fear of a prison can produce money from an empty purse. The Report also attacks the comparisons made in the exposé des motifs, quoted above, between the possible duration of confinement for debt and imprisonment for certain serious offences. It declares them to be exaggerated, and reminds the Government that a man may easily get out of prison, either, in a civil case, by surrendering his property, or in a commercial case, by declaring himself a bankrupt. It forgets, however, that the debtor has not an absolute right of surrendering his property, for the surrender may be refused: and, as for a declaration of bankruptcy, it is a remedy which would often be worse than the disease. Lastly, the Report declares that cases of exorbitant and disgraceful speculation, resulting from the law of imprisonment for debt, are exceptional, and too rare to need to be dwelt on.

After arguing thus against the exposé des motifs, the Report proceeds to maintain that execution on the body is of use in civil cases by preventing a good deal of mischief, and necessary in commercial cases, because, as Napoleon I. said, "It is impossible to confound the engagements of traders with those of other citizens. A trader who contracts a debt binds himself not only to pay the amount, but to pay it at a precise time, which must not be postponed under any pretence whatever. The obligations of private persons have not this character of precision. . . . Imprisonment is therefore necessary in commercial cases to ensure punctuality of payment." M. Troplong, at present President both of the Senate and of the Cour de Cassation, also declares imprisonment to be indispensable in commerce, because "the credit of a merchant is associated with the credit of twenty other merchants, who will all be compromised by his failure." He is, accordingly, of opinion that commercial credit requires a law of public safety, to enable it to stand unembarrassed and unshaken.

To this and to similar arguments it has been answered that no one, when he gives a merchant credit, takes into account the possibility of imprisoning him in case of non-payment, but rather, if anything, that of having him made a bankrupt. But a declaration of bankruptcy saves a man from prison. By an adjudication of bankruptcy a merchant is dispossessed of all his property; and this is all that the creditor can reasonably demand. It ought to be added, that no real man of business will open an account with a man of whose solvency he is not well assured; and the idea of arresting him has no influence in the transaction. It is not the honourable trader who resorts to imprisonment; the registers show that nearly all arrests are made at the suit of money-lenders, small bill discounters, and the like, and in the case of men whose social position is at stake, or of small manufacturers, or poor working people, who have no resource but their labour. This was the opinion given by the President of the Tribunal de Commerce at Paris.

The new law was violently opposed in the Corps Législatif, and gave occasion to a phenomenon rare in the parliamentary annals of France; for the Government was frequently supported by the Opposition, and opposed by its habitual supporters. Nevertheless the law passed. In the Senate it met with fresh difficulties. The Report of the Committee decided, it is true, in favour of the law, but it dwelt rather upon those arguments against than for it. Some eminent magistrates spoke against it with an energy which must have astonished the echos of the Senate House. At last the measure was passed by 53 votes to 46—a thing unheard of in an assembly which is habitually unanimous. M. Troplong did not vote; but we have already stated the opinion he has given in his writings. Now that the measure has become law, some of its opponents have made up their minds to find it liberal and reasonable; and it is not probable that any mischievous results will follow from it. Commercial honesty is protected by the experience of reward rather than by the fear of punishment.—The Chronicle.

REAL PROPERTY VERSUS PERSONAL.

There is probably no subject in discussing which people are more apt to confound how with why than law, and especially English law. Legal arguments are necessarily founded more often on authority than on reason; and our legal system is the result of many centuries of continuous growth. Thus a habit is fostered among lawyers, whose business it is to administer the law as it stands, of merely considering what the law is, and how it has come to be so, and not troubling themselves to inquire into its rational basis. The fundamental distinction between real and personal property is a case strongly in point. There may undoubtedly be reason in laying down different rules for regulating property in different things, according to their nature, that the ownership of land, for instance, should be transferred in one manner, the ownership of a cargo of goods in another, and that property in money should change hands in a manner different from either. But it is hard indeed to give a reason why a house held for sixty years should be a totally different kind of property from a house held for life. Historically there is no difficulty in accounting for it at all; the distinction between real and personal property dates from the very commencement of English law, and has given rise to a very large proportion of the anomalies and complications which disfigure our legal system. That it could not be abolished at once without affecting more mischief than good we very readily admit; social convenience is more important than legal symmetry. The average citizen, knowing next to nothing of the law, finds that the purchase of real property is far more costly and troublesome than any other kind of investment. Being surrounded by a social system in which landowners are very powerful, and possess great practical privileges, and knowing that the tenure of real property is a mysterious subject somehow mixed up with the Feudal system, and the whole history of the Middle Ages, he takes it for granted, with the reticence of a man of business slow to confess ignorance, that the interminable parchments and heavy lawyers' bills are parts of the immutable order of things, and is only inclined to value the more highly a possession so difficult of acquisition. Real property law is a subject extensive and complicated enough to engross a man's whole attention; and consequently lawyers whose thoughts are mainly directed to commercial matters and forensic practice, though they have a general acquaintance with the law of real property, can seldom be masters of it. They know by experience that there is no end to the subtle distinctions which may be deduced from it, and to the unexpected ways in which it controls the interpretation of statutes. Few men are equal to the Herculean task of discerning every point in which the law of real property and the law of contract (to use that phrase in a very wide sense) may cross one another, in connexion with any one subject of legislation; and even if the man who draws an important bill conquers this difficulty his work is exposed, in and out of Parliament, to the opposition of critics of all kinds, critics purely ignorant, critics blind to all but party feeling, and, worst of all, critics who thoroughly understand one-half of the subject, and one-half only. It is no wonder that law officers, under these circumstances, shrink from introducing great measures of law reform, or that when they do so, they leave untouched or even emphasize the anomalous distinctions between real and personal property, preferring rather to bear those ills they have than fly to others that they know not of.

To enumerate all the subjects in respect of which this distinction operates to cause injustice, or at least to create confusion, would be to pass in review the whole law of England, but a few of them may with advantage be cursorily mentioned. If there is a subject matter in which equal justice ought to be specially studied in legislation, in which the way ought to be carefully pointed out and smoothed to individual citizens by the operation of the law, it is the subject of inheritance. Yet the rules of succession ab intestato to real and personal property respectively are so opposite that both cannot possibly be just. We do not propose at present to discuss the merits of either, but it is obvious at once that the rule which gives the eldest son all if the intestate's property be land, and that which gives all the children equal shares if it be money, cannot both be founded on principles of abstract justice. Most of the practical hardships which arise under the law of wills may be traced to the same source, for the framers of the Act of 1837, while they assimilated the two kinds of property in several important respects, had not the courage or the power to complete their task. Again there are few practical grievances worse than the unequal pressure of rates, especially poor-rates. Much of the actual inequality arises of course from the fact that the ancient districts, which were charged with the duty of rating themselves separately, have many of them changed their character, and really ceased to be separate units. But the assumption at the bottom of all is, that land is the only property substantial enough to be rated: and though specific statutes have subjected to rating other things than the mere surface of the soil, such as coal mines, yet this is only a fragmentary remedy. A somewhat nearer approach to justice is practically attained; but the principle, totally out of place in our present social condition, is left uncorrected. Again, to take the case of the parliamentary franchise, what possible reason can there be why a freehold worth forty shillings should confer a vote, and a leasehold, for however long a period, must be worth five times that sum to obtain for its possessor the same privilege? It is true that the one estate is permanent, and the other is not; but though this affects the price at which either can be purchased, it makes no difference in the yearly value to the possessor, on which consideration alone the vote is made to depend. The difficulties which beset the transfer of land arise quite as much from the confusion and collision between realty and personalty as from the intricacies of the real-property law itself. One sort of mortgage is real estate, and passes to the heir-at-law of the mortgagee; another sort is personal, and passes to his executors. The same trust estate often comprises both kinds of property, and it may easily happen that when a long-continuing trust is finally disposed of, two or three different people may be legal owners of different parts, without possessing the smallest beneficial interest. When an estate is sold by an embarrassed proprietor, it is so expensive to give purchasers a properly perfect title that the owner gains much less relief from the sacrifice than he ought: and one-half of this at least might be saved, were it not for the different legal incidents attending on encumbrances different in form, but not in real effect. The same difficulties impede the operation of Lord Westbury's Land Transfer Act, almost the only measure which tends theoretically to the abolition of that distinction of which we have been speaking, though its practical utility has hitherto not been great. Such are a few among the many anomalies which we owe to the feudal system, and to the gradual and accidental manner in which the edifice of English law has been built up. That the same process of slow growth has produced many advantages to the nation is unquestionable; and it is equally certain that the law, complicated as it is, is administered with perfect integrity and independence. But the existence of so much practical good need not blind us to the imperfections of theory; the sun does not shine the brighter because of the spots upon its surface. Meanwhile it is discouraging to see Parliament neglect every opportunity of incidentally removing anomalies. During the session which is now virtually over the electoral franchise has been remodelled, but the absurd distinctions between freehold and leasehold property remain untouched: an Act, most important in the principle which it implicitly recognizes, has considerably shifted the burden of rates in London, but there has been no attempt to clear away any anomalies except those which were starving the East End. No one has ventured to revive the proposition for making succession ab intestato the same to realty as to personalty, which failed last year. All that has been done, even remotely tending to improvement, is the appointment of a Royal Commission, which has reported what every one knew already. If practical steps follow this report, and a Digest of the Law, and ultimately a code, be prepared, we shall have made a slight advance. To have it compendiously and clearly stated what the law is, before proceeding to consider what it ought to be, is, no doubt, necessary, but it ought to be only the first step. The two things must be jealously kept apart, for no form of codification would be accepted, if there was any suspicion that the compilers of the code were really introducing new legislation; but there is no reason why they should not be carried on simultaneously. Probably the last enemy to justice and simplicity which law reformers will venture directly to assail will be the division between real and personal property; but it will perish some day, and every piece of statutory legislation ought to bring us nearer to that desirable consummation.—(Abridged from The Spectator.)

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

JURISDICTION OVER ATTORNEYS.—The court will not exercise its summary jurisdiction over an attorney simply because he has, from improper motives, given information which might be used against a former client. There must be actual misconduct qua attorney, by the adverse use of information, while the relation of attorney and client is still subsisting, or by the betrayal of secrets relating to the client's business, obtained by the attorney while acting in a confidential capacity, and acquired also in consequence of his so acting. The test for determining whether the court has or has not jurisdiction is, whether, if the attorney had been called as a witness, the court would or would not have held him justified in refusing to answer on the ground of privilege: (Re Cutts, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 715. Bail.)

RESIDUARY ESTATE—RULE AS TO PAYMENT OF DEBTS AND LEGACIES OUT OF CAPITAL OR INCOME.—Portions of a fund constituting the residuary personal estate of a testator were set apart by his executors to meet contingent legacies payable on certain infants attaining their respective ages of twenty-one: Held. that the tenant for life of the general residue was entitled to the income derivable from those portions of the testator's residuary estate so set apart until such capital, or portions of it, were wanted for the payment of those contingent legacies, in case they should become payable: Held, also, that the tenant for life was not entitled to the income which might have been derived from what was clearly necessary for the payment of debts and legacies out of the capital of the residue: (Allhusen v. Whittell, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 695. V. C. W.)

DIVIDENDS ON SHARES.—Dividends in certain bank shares were reported to be due on the 25th June, but not to be payable until the 15th July and 15th January following. The owner died on the 31st December. The dividends payable in January were held to form part of her general residuary estate: (De Gendre v. Kent, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 694. V. C. W.)

ACCEPTANCE OF BILLS BY LIQUIDATORS.—Where there are several liquidators, the acceptance of a bill on the part of the company must be signed by two or more of them, unless at the time of their appointment it be determined that the acceptance of one shall be sufficient: (Re The London and Mediterranean Bank, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 631. V. C. S.)

CONTRIBUTORY—CLAIM—COMPROMISE.—In the voluntary winding-up of a company a claim was made, which was opposed, and the liquidator took out a summons to have it adjudicated upon by the court, to which the claimant consented. Evidence having been gone into, the liquidator was advised to effect a compromise, and terms were agreed upon, subject to the approval by extraordinary resolution (under sect. 159) on the part of the shareholders. A meeting was accordingly summoned, and although the compromise was objected to by some of the shareholders, it was adopted. Further proceedings being threatened by the dissentients, another summons was taken out by the liquidator to show cause why the agreement should not be carried out, and upon its being adjourned into court the M. R. declined to make any order, thinking that the court was bound, before giving its sanction, to satisfy itself that the compromise was advantageous to the company, and that he had not sufficient materials to enable him to decide whether it was. The claimant appealed: Held, that as by the original summons the question was before the court when the meeting was held, the compromise could not be carried into effect without its sanction: and that being so, that the court was not limited to the mere duty of seeing whether the approval of the company had been duly obtained, but was bound to satisfy itself that the agreement was a proper one; but, in the face of the resolution of approval, the onus of showing the impropriety of the compromise was shifted to the dissentients. Per Rolt, L. J.: Under the 138th section a contributory was not entitled to have the whole question reopened, and the propriety of the compromise determined, as if the company was being wound-up by the court, and as if the company had not in meeting approved of the compromise: (Re The Lama Coal Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 726. L. J. J.)

PAUPER DECLARATION FILED.

August 26.

Anderson, George—a prisoner in the Four Courts Marshalsea—detained by William John Kelly, a creditor.

THE NEW LAW ON IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT IN FRANCE.—The Civil Tribunal of the Seine has just been called upon to decide the first case which has come before it under the new act abolishing imprisonment for debt. Three men, named Carpentier, Grellet, and Guerin, had been condemned, the first and last in 1862, and Grellet in 1865, for fraud and embezzlement on the Northern Railway Company, and to make restitution. They now applied to be set at liberty, as the new law has a retrospective action, and enacts that, even when imprisonment is maintained for debts resulting from the reparation for a crime or misdemeanour, such imprisonment shall not exceed two years. The court, considering that their case came within the meaning of the act, ordered them to be immediately set at liberty, notwithstanding that notice of appeal against the decision was given.—Galignani.

LEGAL APPOINTMENT.—Mr. Augustine Henry Barton, at present secretary to the Right Hon. Judge Keatinge, has been appointed registrar of the Court of Admiralty, as reconstituted by the Act passed during the last session. Mr. Barton's appointment will meet with general approval.

PATRICK AND PETER.—A curious incident occurred on Tuesday in the House of Lords during the progress of the Breadalbane Peerage case. Mr. Anderson, Q.C., in alluding to one of the persons whose name had been mentioned, called him Captain Patrick Campbell. The Lord Chancellor said the captain's name was not Patrick, but Peter. Mr. Anderson said they were convertible terms. The Chancellor: "What! are St. Patrick and St. Peter the same?" Mr. Anderson: "Yes, the names are the same." Lord Colonsay informed the Lord Chancellor that the learned counsel was right. In Scotland Patrick was Peter and Peter was Patrick. The Lord Chancellor said it certainly was information to him.

The Queen has conferred the honour of knighthood upon Mr. John I. Mantell, of the Middle Temple, late Chief Justice of her Majesty's Settlements on the Gambia. Sir John Mantell has served his country with distinction for 27 years on the West Coast of Africa, 20 years as chief justice, and seven years previously as law officer of the crown.

A London solicitor writes to the Times, pointing out that the Companies' Act comes into force on the 1st prox., which is on a Sunday.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 32.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

THE CHANCERY (IRELAND) ACT, 1867.

(30 and 31 Vict., cap. 44.)

THE objects of the Act are threefold:—

1st. To alter the Constitution and amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, with a view of establishing uniformity of Practice and Procedure in the Courts of Chancery in England and Ireland.

2nd. To make provision for the receipt of fees of the Court of Chancery in Ireland by Stamps.

3rd. To give increased power over funds in that Court, the dividends of which have not been dealt with for a certain period.

The Act consists of five parts, which deal with its proposed objects in detail:—

Part I. relating to the Appointment of a Vice-Chancellor.

Part II. to the Abolition of the Office of Master in Ordinary.

Part III. to Procedure and Practice.

Part IV. to Stamps and Fees.

Part V. to Miscellaneous Matters.

We have already briefly adverted to the changes in the Constitution of the Court to be effected by Parts I. and II., of which the result may be shortly stated as follows:—The Abolition of the Masters in Ordinary, except the Receiver Master, who is to be retained for the discharge of the special duties relating to Receivers, the Auditing of Accounts, and Inquiries in Lunacy. The temporary retention of the existing Masters, who are to have all their former powers, in addition to certain special powers, to enable them to wind up expeditiously the business now pending before them under existing references. The Appointment of a Vice-Chancellor and a staff of Chief and Junior Clerks, by which a new system is established, under which all future Equity business is to be disposed of by the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Justice of Appeal, the Master of the Rolls, one Vice-Chancellor, and the Receiver Master; the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellor having each one Chief and two Assistant Clerks attached to their Courts; and the Lord Chancellor, if expedient, having the power to appoint one Chief and two Junior Clerks to be attached to his own Court, and additional Chief or Junior Clerks to the Master of the Rolls, and to the Vice-Chancellor.

Part III., relating to Procedure and Practice, begins with the 52nd Section, and ends with the 177th.

Before entering on the consideration of this, the most important portion of the Act, it may not be immaterial to remark, that there are at the present moment existing in Ireland two different systems of Equity Practice and Procedure, viz., the system which prevailed at the time of the passing of the "Chancery Regulation Act (1850)," and the system introduced by that Act. For although the mode of procedure so introduced did, in fact, supersede the old practice, such an effect was never intended, for the 1st Section of the Act leaves it optional to suitors to proceed by Bill or Information, and the 2nd and 3rd Sections give the Court the power, where suits have been instituted by Cause Petition, either in the exercise of its own discretion or upon the application of any party interested in the subject matter of the suit, to direct that the suit shall be prosecuted in the ordinary way by way of Bill or Information.

But the Court in the case of Glascock v. Ross (1st Ir. Ch. Rep., 55), intimated, that it was desirable that all cases should, in the first instance, be commenced under the new system of Petition and Answer, and that it should be left to the Court itself to direct further or other proceedings; and the costs being in the discretion of the Court, the result was, that the Proceedings by Bill or Information have never been resorted to, except in continuation of suits instituted under the old system, and practically, this jurisdiction has fallen into disuse. But strictly speaking, the Act of this year, while it will abolish the provisions of the Chancery Regulation Act of 1850, will merely alter or reform the old system of Equity Practice and Procedure. Before the passing of the Regulation Act the practice in England and Ireland was similar.

In the preliminary observations to the statements of Messrs. Barber and Jellett, who were appointed by the Commissioners to draw up statements of the course of the Courts of Equity in the two countries, the following passage occurs:—"On proceeding to draw up a concise statement of such parts of the Practice and Procedure of the Superior Courts of Equity as are peculiar to England, and of such parts as are peculiar to Ireland, we found that the Practice and Procedure of the two countries, originally similar, had, by the effect of modern legislation, become almost entirely different." And the Commissioners, in their first Report, state that the differences in Equity are of recent origin, and have been caused by separate attempts at carrying out Chancery Reform in each of the two countries: and that in England some of the chief measures of Chancery Reform originated with the Report of the Commissioners which inquired into the Practice of the Court of Chancery in England in 1825-26. The Report of that Commission was followed by the General Orders of 1828 and 1830, during the Chancellorship of Lord Lyndhurst. Under the Act of 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 94, extending and confirming the power of the Lord Chancellor, with the advice of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor, to make rules for regulating the Practice of the Court, General Orders were made in 1833, 1841, and 1845, during the Chancellorships of Lord Brougham, Lord Cottenham, and Lord Lyndhurst respectively. In Ireland there was no Commission of Inquiry corresponding to the English Commission of 1825-26, but in 1834, by statute 4 & 5 Wm. IV., c. 78, a power of regulating the Practice of the Irish Court of Chancery by General Orders (similar to the power given in England in the preceding year by 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 94) was conferred on the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls in Ireland. Under this statute, and prior to the Irish Chancery Regulation Act of 1850, General Orders were made in 1834 and in 1843, during the Chancellorships of Lord Plunkett and Lord St. Leonards respectively. The tendency of the General Orders of both Lord Plunkett and Lord St. Leonards was to introduce into Ireland Reforms similar to those already introduced by the previous General Orders, above referred to, into England, so that the present diversity of Equity Practice and Procedure between England and Ireland did not exist to any great extent prior to 1850. In that year the Irish Chancery Regulation Act was introduced without any previous Commission of Inquiry, and its provisions effected very extensive changes in the system theretofore existing in Ireland. At the close of the year 1850 another Commission was appointed to inquire into the Process, Practice, and System of Pleading of the Court of Chancery in England, and other matters relating to that Court. The Commission continued its inquiries until August, 1854, and during its proceedings made three Reports. Upon these Reports very important changes were introduced into the Court of Chancery in England, such as the abolition of the Office of Master, and the making permanent provision for a third Vice-Chancellor, and for the appointment of Chief Clerks to the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor, in lieu of the Masters. Upon the Reports of this Commission other important statutes were founded, the provisions of which were not extended to Ireland.

THE MASTERSHIP OF THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

THIS appointment, formerly held by Master Hitchcock, has been conferred upon JAMES CORRY LOWRY, Esq., Q.C. of the North-West Circuit. The learned gentleman was called to the Bar in 1837. He is much esteemed by his friends for his personal qualities, and has won the respect of his professional brethren by an honourable and consistent career. We have no doubt he will most suitably fill the position which he has been called on to occupy. The salary of the office, as fixed by the Act passed in the late session, is £1,200 a year.

LORD BROUGHAM.—The Carlisle Journal, reporting Lord Brougham's arrival at Brougham Hall, says:—"His lordship appeared to be in a very feeble condition, considerably more so than on his visit last year, and it seemed to require all his exertions, with the assistance of his valet, to get out of the carriage. Having descended to the platform, he sat down in a chair until the train passed on, his only inquiry being as to the state of the weather, and he was then carried across the line on another chair brought for the purpose. With the assistance of his valet he walked the short distance to his carriage, which was in waiting for him, and having been assisted inside, he was driven to Brougham Hall. We are informed that his lordship was in as good health as could be expected, but he was suffering from the fatigue occasioned by his journey from London. Lord Brougham will attain his ninetieth year on the 18th of September inst."

THE INTELLIGENT JURYMAN.—We often hear of the humours of the bench and the bar, but the jests of the jury box, if only collated, would be quite as amusing. The other day, in the Supreme Court here, a civil case was on trial. The suit was important, the lawyers laboured, and a full day was occupied. The jury were faithful and attentive, and one Prussian juryman, of Bismarckian face, was observed to be specially sagacious and interested. At length, the case being argued, the jury retired, but soon sent back the message that one of their number could not speak a word of English, much less understand one. It was the intelligent juryman, who had sat with the rapt expression of fidelity and interest all through the day, who had been the special object to which the counsel on both sides addressed their pleas, and who only revealed his misfortune when, being asked for his opinion in the jury room, he confessed he did not verstehen.—New York Times.

TITHES.—A case of a curious nature has just been through all the law courts. Some years ago, some land belonging to a layman was exempted from paying tithe, as it was non-producing. Lately, however, hops were grown on it—the tithe on hop land is £1 an acre—and the tithe was demanded, and refused. An action was taken to recover it, and the Court of Queen's Bench ruled in favour of the plaintiff; the defendant appealed, and the Exchequer Chamber reversed the decision; whereupon the plaintiff appealed, and the House of Lords have reversed the decision of the Exchequer Chamber.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

SKELTON v. FLANAGAN.

June 1, 6.—Power—Appointment—Mortgage—Fraud in Power.

By a marriage settlement dated the 30th of October, 1809, the lands of Seatown, in the county of Louth, were settled to the use of Hamilton Skelton for life, and subject thereto, and to a jointure of £165 a year, to Mrs. Skelton, to the use of such of the children of the intended marriage, in such shares and proportions, and for such estate and estates, and subject to such sum or sums of money as provision for the other children, the issue of the marriage, as he should by deed or will appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the use of such of the children as should attain the age of twenty-one years, and their heirs as tenants in common.

There was issue of the marriage, the petitioner, John Skelton, and six daughers, who, in 1854, had all attained their age, except Harriett Victoria, who afterwards married Patrick Hynes.

Hamilton Skelton was indebted to John Flanagan, who had obtained a receiver over his life estate, and on the 2nd of March, 1853, he entered into an agreement with Flanagan, that he, his wife, and all his children, should join in granting a mortgage of the lands of Seatown to Flanagan, who consented that the receiver should be discharged.

In pursuance of that agreement, by a deed of appointment of the 13th of May, 1854, H. Skelton appointed the lands of Seatown to the petitioner, subject to certain charges in favour of the other children, and, on the 31st of May, 1854, H. Skelton, his wife, and all their children, except Harriett Victoria, joined in a mortgage of the lands to Flanagan.

A petition for a sale was filed in the Landed Estates' Court in 1862. A conditional order for a sale having been made, cause was shown against it and disallowed, without prejudice to any steps which might be taken in Chancery to set aside the mortgage. The original petition in this matter was filed in April, 1863, praying that the mortgage of the 31st of May, 1863, might be set aside as fraudulent and void. The cause came on to be heard before the late Master of the Rolls, on the 15th of December, 1863, when the charges of actual fraud having failed, the petitioners were allowed to amend the petition by praying that the appointment of the 13th of May, 1854, might be set aside as a fraud on the power. The respondent Flanagan appealed from the order of the Master of the Rolls, which the Court of Appeal affirmed. After the amendment of the petition, Mrs. Hynes, one of the respondents, died without issue, and administration was taken to her by her husband, P. Hynes. Her father, H. Skelton, was her heir-at-law. Both were respondents in the suit, which was not revived either by suggestion or petition of revivor.

Sullivan, Q.C., Walsh, Q.C., and Gamble, for the petitioner.

Lawson, Q.C., Harrison, Q.C., and M'Blain, for the respondent.

The MASTER of the ROLLS held that there being no evidence of fraud or undue parental influence, the mere fact that the appointment was solely for the father's benefit was not sufficient to avoid it. He was also of opinion that the suit had become defective on the death of Mrs. Hynes, and should have been revived by suggestion, and he dismissed the petition with costs.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In the Matter of the Estate of the Rev. J. N. H. THOMAS and Others, Owners; Ex parte FRANCES MEYLER, Spinster, Petitioner.

June 14, 17.—Title by Estoppel—Effect of Proceedings in an Administration Suit in the Court of Chancery to bind the Landed Estates' Court.

By marriage settlement of 16th November, 1810, executed on the marriage of Lodge Hall and Elizabeth Woodcock, a sum of money, subsequently increased to £1,300, was transferred to Samuel Woodcock, brother of Elizabeth Woodcock, upon the trusts contained therein.

By marriage settlement of 1st September, 1837, executed upon the marriage of the said Samuel Woodcock and Sarah Thomas, certain lands, the estate of the said Woodcock, were conveyed to a trustee, upon trust, to the use of Woodcock for life, then as to one moiety to the use of his wife for life, then to the use of the issue of the marriage, and failing such issue, to the use of the Rev. J. N. H. Thomas (who was the brother of the said Sarah Thomas and the owner in this matter), his heirs and assigns.

Samuel Woodcock converted the sum of £1,300 to his own purposes, in violation of the trust of the indenture of 16th November, 1810, and on the 16th November, 1853, Lodge Hall and his son, William Henry Hall, filed a cause petition against him in the Court of Chancery, and by an order made by the Lord Chancellor on the 4th March, 1854, it was declared that there was due by Woodcock to the petitioners the sum of £1,644 8s. 7d. on foot of said trust fund. New trustees were also subsequently appointed in his room. The decretal order was registered under 13 and 14 Vic., c. 29, against the estate of the said Samuel Woodcock, including the moiety ultimately limited to Thomas.

Woodcock having died without issue, the new trustees and Wm. H. Hall filed a petition against the widow of Woodcock, the trustee of the indenture of 1st September, 1837, and Thomas, praying to have Woodcock's assets administered; and by an order made by Master Litton, to whom the matter was referred, dated 27th July, 1857, it was declared that the sum of £1,864 7s. 4d. (due for principal and interest on foot of the order of 4th March, 1854), was charged upon the moiety in the lands ultimately limited to Thomas.

During part of the progress of the matter before the Master, Thomas was resident out of the jurisdiction of the Court, but on the 5th September, 1859, he was personally served with a notice (pursuant to the 30th general order, 31st July, 1851), in order to bind him in the proceedings in said matter. Upon subsequent proceedings in said matter, Thomas, by his solicitor, attended, and he did not appeal against the decretal order of the 27th July, 1857. The Master subsequently ordered that the sale of the lands should be effected in the Landed Estates' Court.

On the 23rd of January, 1860, the petitioners (the new trustees) presented their petition to the Landed Estates' Court, praying for a sale, amongst others, of the reversion in the moiety of the lands expectant on the determination of the life estate of Woodcock's widow therein, and an absolute order for sale was made on the 6th of February, 1860.

Digitized by Google

Pursuant to an order made by the late Judge Hargreave, to whom the petition was referred, an application on behalf of the petitioners was made for an order that the reversion in the moiety should be sold discharged from all right or title of Thomas thereto, upon which an order was made on the 5th and 7th of June, 1860, refusing the motion, and directing the petition and order for sale to be varied by expunging therefrom the said reversion, the Court being of opinion that the limitation to Thomas was valid.

Woodcock's widow having died, and Thomas' estate having become an estate in possession, the same was sold in this matter, and the new trustees appointed in Woodcock's room appeared as No. 5 upon the schedule of incumbrances, claiming the balance of the sum of £1,644 8s. 7d., with interest, under the decretal order of the 4th March, 1854, and under the decretal order of the 27th July, 1857. Objections to the claim were taken by the infant children of Thomas (whose title to the lands was derived through their father) by their next friend, and also by the general solicitor of the Court of Chancery for minors and guardian ad litem of the infants. The objection of the solicitor for minors alleged, amongst other things—1. Thatneither Thomas nor the infants were bound by the decree in the administration suit. 2. That the decree of the 4th of March, 1854, was incapable of being registered as a mortgage under 13 and 14 Vic., c. 29. 3. That the affidavit made to register the decree was defective.

Ormsby (with him Gamble), for the claimants, contended that their main reliance was on the decree made in the administration suit; that Thomas was a party to that suit, and ought to have made a special application for liberty to appear and defend his rights, or else to have appealed against the decretal order; that the Judges of the Landed Estates' Court were bound by a final decree made by the Court of Chancery: In re Lanange (11 Ir. Ch. R. 19).

Lawless, Q.C., for the general solicitor for minors, contended that as the decree of 4th March, 1854, did not direct any sum of money to be paid to the petitioners, but into Court, it was incapable of being registered as a mortgage under 13 and 14 Vic., c. 29; that the affidavit to register it contained no sum for costs, and was therefore defective; that there was no evidence to show that Woodcock was in such embarrassed circumstances in 1837 as would invalidate the marriage settlement of that date; that in serving Thomas with notice in the administration suit the parties should have proceeded under the 50th order of 1857; that Thomas was not bound to go to the Court of Chancery to have the decretal order set aside when every subsequent step was to be taken in the Landed Estates' Court; that the Landed Estates' Court was not bound by a decree made by the Court of Chancery, if erroneous. In re Kelly (9 Ir. Ch. R.); Cookney v. Anderson (1 De Gex. Jones and Smith, 365); Lynch v. Skerrett, 5 Ir. Ex. R 494); Fitzgerald's Estates (11 Ir. Ch. R. 278), 3 and 4 Vic., c. 105, sec. 27.

Fetherston H, on the same side, contended that the decision of Hargreave, J., was a decision of a Court of competent jurisdiction upon the question now being argued, from which the other side might have appealed. Upon the point of notice he would quote from Gamble's Chancery Orders, pp. 305, 306, which recalled to his mind the lines of the poet—

> "Keen were his pangs, but keener far to feel,
> He nursed the pinion which impelled the steel."

By the 20th section of the Chancery Regulation Act, Ireland, 1850, the service should be the same as that of a letter missive. As to the decree of 4th March and its incapability of affecting the estate, he referred to the authorities collected in Blackham's Chancery Practice, pp. 229 and 239.

Harris, for the next friend of the minors, contended that the decree of 1854 was made behind the back of Thomas, and that the order made by Master Litton showed on the face of it that his attention had not been called to any circumstance showing that the ultimate remainder to Thomas was part of Woodcock's assets.

Gamble replied.

June 17.

LYNCH, J., delivered a written judgment of considerable length, stating that after the Landed Estates' Court had decided that it could not sell Thomas' estate as a remainder, it could not be argued that it could sell it when it became an estate in possession: that titles arising out of estoppel on parties by proceedings in the Court of Chancery would be dangerous titles to acknowledge in the Landed Estates' Court: that the Court of Chancery had power to cure the errors in its proceedings; but if the Landed Estates' Court sold an estate in error the error became incurable, and that he never would, unless coerced by higher authority, sell one man's estate to pay the debts of another, because the former lapsed the opportunity of making his case in the Court of Chancery, and suffered his estate, by inference only, to be declared the assets of a stranger; that, therefore, if the claimants were before him as petitioners to sell, he would be bound, by Judge Hargreave's decision, to dismiss their petition; but they were there as claimants upon the assets acquired by the sale of the estate; that he assented to the proposition that the Landed Estates' Court was bound by a decree of the Court of Chancery, but that there was no decree in this case; that Thomas' estate was liable to this debt; that if a plenary suit existed wherein there was a decree that Thomas' estate was liable to this debt, he (Lynch, J.) might be bound by it; but that in a mere administration suit, in which no relief was sought in respect of this estate so limited to Thomas, to hold conclusively that his estate was bound as being assets of Woodcock, would be a stretching of the principle of obligation beyond reason: that at the time when the decretal order was made in the administration suit, Thomas was a respondent named, but not served with notice, and that afterwards he was served with a notice, but not by any order directing such service, and that no judicial order was ever made consequent on such service; that a plain distinction undoubtedly existed between a petition for sale and the case of a claimant on the schedule, as a refusal to sell gave no decision as to right, and this consideration might weaken the force of Judge Hargreave's decision. However, in this case Judge Hargreave had recorded the grounds of his decision.

Solicitor having carriage of the proceedings, and solicitor for the claimants No. 5, John Mallett Williamson.

CIRCUIT CASES.

NORTH-EAST CIRCUIT.

JULY 22ND, 1867—ARMAGH.

Before O'HAGAN, J.

BURNS v. THE ULSTER RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway Company—Passenger—Reasonable Condition.

This was one of a number of cases arising out of the same occurrence. The plaintiff was a dealer in the habit of attending the cattle fair at Killylea. The 25th January last was a fair day, and Burns took a ticket for Killylea on that morning at Belfast, and proceeded thence by the 7 a.m. train. This train did not on ordinary days go beyond Armagh, but on fair days it brought passengers on to Killylea, according to the following announcement in the company's time table:—

	A.M.	A.M.	A.M.
"Belfast, - -	—	7 0*	8 5
Portadown, arr.	—	7 50	* The 7 a.m. train from Belfast runs to Killylea and Glasslough on fair days."
Portadown, dep.	—	8 0
Armagh, - -	6 0	—
Killylea, - -	6 18	—

This train generally arrives at Killylea at 9 o'clock, according to the usual practice, but no hour of arrival was mentioned in the time tables. On the 25th January, however, it did not arrive at Killylea until 12·20, when the fair was over. Burns arrived at Armagh about 8·30, but there was no train to take him on for nearly three hours. The process was for the damages occasioned by the company's alleged breach of contract in not bringing plaintiff on in time. The defence was that the company were not bound by the time tables to send on the train to Killylea in time for the fair; that there was but one line of rails from Armagh to Killylea; that on this occasion the 6·10 a.m, goods train from Clones did not arrive in time at Armagh to enable the passenger train for Killylea to be sent on. It appeared that this goods train was late at Tynan station, next beyond Killylea, on the road from Armagh, and after leaving this station the driver, fearing a collision with the train from Armagh, put back to Tynan, as there was a telegraph station there and none at Killylea. The station-master had meanwhile telegraphed that the goods train was gone. The result was that the trains were kept waiting on each other. Plaintiff further relied on the following statement on the cover of the company's time table:—

"ULSTER RAILWAY TIME TABLE.

"Showing the time at which the trains are expected to depart from, and arrive at, the several stations. But their departure from, or arrival at, the times stated is not guaranteed, nor does the company hold itself responsible for delay of any train, or non starting of any particular train from any station, or any consequences arising from either cause. In cases where any of the company's trains mentioned in time table do not start, or fail to arrive, any passenger who has taken a ticket shall, on application by him to the ticket-clerk, receive back his money for such portion of the distance as he shall not be carried."

Harrison, Q.C., and Porter, for the defendants, referred to Taylor v. Great Northern Railway Company, L. R. 1 C. P. 385; Hurst v. Great Western Railway Company, 19 C. B. N. S. 310. [O'HAGAN, J.—Do you admit that you were bound, by the statement in the table, to bring the plaintiff in time for the fair?] No; the statement in the table only amounts to a representation that there was generally a train at that time: F 4 Lord v. Midland Railway Company, L. HARTY v. COMISKEY.

July 23.—Civil Bill Procedure—Recognizance—Bond.

This was a process for £7. The defendant did not appear below, and the Chairman gave a decree for the amount claimed. Defendant appealed.

Porter, for the plaintiff, objected that the defendant had not entered into a bond as required by sec. 128 of the Civil Bill Act: "Any person who shall think himself aggrieved by such decree of such Assistant Barrister, and shall not have entered into such recognizance as aforesaid, may deposit the money decreed against him and the costs thereof in the hands of the Sheriff, and enter into a bond of £5 to the adverse party, such bond to be free from stamp duty, conditioned to perform and abide the decree of the next coming judge of assize of such county, and on his so doing, &c." The defendant had entered into a recognizance according to the form provided under the preceding section, but that section did not apply to a case like the present, where the party appealing had not appeared below. Kaye, R. and Weir, for Allen, now applied to the Court for the costs incurred in preparing to support the presentment.

Boyd contended that no traverse having been entered pursuant to the leave obtained, the Court had no jurisdiction under the section to grant the application.

ENGLAND.

THE OLD SYSTEM AT NISI PRIUS AND THE NEW.

Much has been written lately about the function of the judge in the trial of cases at Nisi Prius, and the extent to which he ought to interfere in the examination of witnesses, and other details of the trial. These discussions have been suggested by one or two recent "scenes," as they are commonly called, anglice, quarrels, between judge and advocate; and therefore, not unnaturally, the whole matter has been treated as if it concerned only the idiosyncracies of particular judges or advocates, and as if those idiosyncracies were the sole cause of certain modern practices which most of the writers have united in condemning. If we thought the subject had no other interest than this we should not meddle with it. But in our judgment the matter is one of far wider importance, and deserves to be treated far more comprehensively. The details which have been so much discussed are, in fact, only symptoms of a revolution which has long been in progress in the whole system of conducting trials at Nisi Prius.

The normal system of trying causes at Nisi Prius, as it is described in all the books, and recognized in countless Acts of Parliament and elsewhere, is a complete system, founded on a definite theory, and perfectly harmonious in all its parts. Cases are tried before a double tribunal, a judge and a jury, the one to decide issues of law, the other to decide questions of fact. In questions of law the jury have no right to interfere, with questions of fact the judge has nothing to do, except to keep order in court while the jury are trying them. In determining what issues of fact shall be brought before the jury, the judge has no voice; the parties may, by their pleadings, raise what questions they please, and in what form they please; what they choose to raise the judge cannot keep from the jury, what they have not raised the judge cannot originate. And when the case comes for trial it is for the parties, represented by their counsel, to decide how they shall present their case to the jury who are to try it, what facts shall be told, what witnesses called, and what kept back, what points insisted on, and what abandoned. The judge sits in the ring as a mere referee to see that both parties fight fair. It is true that he may have incidentally to decide questions of law as they arise from time to time, and to exercise the power of the Court in granting or refusing applications to his discretion, applications to amend the pleadings, to adjourn the trial, to re-call witnesses, and the like. It is true, too, that, when the case is closed he will have to recapitulate the evidence to the jury, and, in order that he may do so correctly, he is at liberty to put such questions to the witnesses as seem necessary to him. But otherwise he is as much a stranger to the trial as any spectator in the Court. In harmony with this are two characteristic features of our system of procedure—the cross-examination of witnesses, and our strict rules of evidence. Witnesses are cross-examined, not by the judge, or to satisfy the mind of the judge, but by the hostile counsel from instructions of which the judge knows nothing, and for purposes which the judge may never understand, the object of the whole being to produce an impression on the minds of the jury. So as to our peculiar and strict rules of evidence, their necessity, as every authority states it, arises from this very method. The issues having to be decided by an unskilled tribunal, and the control of the cause being in the hands, not of an impartial judge, but of the parties themselves, it is absolutely necessary to define, with minute accuracy, what they may bring before the jury, and what they may not. The judge enforces these rules, but he has no discretion whatever as to what shall be admitted and what shall not.

There can be no question that such is in theory the mode of trying issues of fact according to the law of England. It is plain that, owing to the constant appeals to him in his judicial capacity to decide points incidentally arising, the judge could never be anything like a cypher in court. And, apart from his strictly official authority, the influence of a wise and able man in such a position both with counsel and jury must, of course, be immense. But we believe that until lately the two fundamental principles, that the jury alone are judges of fact, and that the parties alone have the control and conduct of the cause, were very generally observed. Judges and counsel alike were scrupulous in sifting law from fact, and assigning each to the proper jurisdiction. The judge habitually abstained from taking any part in the case except such as belonged to him as judge of the law, and referee in the contest. And causes were ordinarily tried out in due form, addresses to the jury, examination, cross-examination, summing up, and verdict following one another in the regular and unbroken sequence contemplated by law. And this is an admirable mode of trial; indeed, we believe that in the long run it is the only system by which justice can be done before such a tribunal. The tribunal being one wholly untrained in judicial inquiry, this system provides that the case in court shall be conducted by men who thoroughly know the case behind and know what it is desirable to bring forward and what it is not, and who are chosen for their special skill in presenting facts to the minds of a jury; and thus it secures a thorough investigation of the case. Moreover, it peculiarly guards the dignity of the judge. The judge reigns, but does not rule; he is first in dignity but not first in power; he presides over the inquiry but has no voice in its result. This is a somewhat delicate position when filled by a man of energy, and in the presence of zealous counsel who have nothing but the verdict of the jury in view; and it is obvious that a strict adherence to the order of proceedings, and a strict observance by each party—judge, jury, and counsel—of the province which theoretically belongs to each, is the surest way to avoid any collision or misunderstanding between them.

But this regular and formal mode of trying out cases has one drawback—it is not always the quickest mode. Counsel may waste time by tedious speeches, or needless elaboration of evidence, or vague fishing cross-examination; the judge may often see a short cut over a stile much shorter than the high road, some mode of getting at the facts quicker than the regular one, some way of disposing of the case without trying it out; and the one object in all our Courts now is to save time. They are burdened with arrears, the judges are pushing a Sisyphus' load up hill. There are, of course, differences between judges. They, like other men, are not all equal in self control, in patience, in temper, in discretion, and some have shown themselves grievously deficient in these qualities. But the main cause of the great change which has taken place is the desire to get through the work as quickly as possible. The result is that, instead of cases being for the most part tried out in all form, like a game of chess, as they once were in England, and as they still generally are in Ireland, it is not one case in ten that is tried at all; they are forced to a compromise, or a reference, or something to drive them out of Court. If a case is tried, it is commonly tried in a rough and ready fashion, the one object is to get the two stories known and the facts on the judge's notes as fast as possible, regularly—irregularly—anyhow. As for the solemn order of procedure, the sifting of law from fact, and distinguishing the functions of the judge, jury, and counsel in the old-fashioned way, there is no time for all that. Cross-examination, which, to be of any real use, must be slow, cautious, tentative, must win, if at all, not by assault, but by the patient and covert labour of the engineer, and must therefore occupy time, is being practically abandoned.

No one familiar with Nisi Prius trials will think that we have exaggerated the change which has taken place and is still going on in the conduct of business.

We believe this to be a most serious evil, for we hold that cases before a judge and jury can only be fairly tried in the old strict fashion, all parties adhering to their several functions. But we are not much inclined to blame judges or counsel for the pass that things have come to; they have only acted on the belief that it is better to settle many cases somehow than a few cases well. The remedy must come from the Legislature. In the first place, whether by adding to the number of judges, or by redistributing their work, or both, more judges for Nisi Prius must be provided. In the second place, trial before a jury is by far the slowest of all possible modes of trial, and is by no means in all cases the most suitable. It would be an enormous saving of time, and in the opinion of many a great improvement also in the administration of justice, if many cases now tried before judge and jury were tried before a judge alone. Instead of, as now, trial by jury being in all cases the rule, with only a power to try before a judge by consent, it may well be questioned whether, in many large classes of cases, the trial should not be before a judge, unless either party specially applied for a jury. This system works admirably in the Divorce Court, and in the county courts. At any rate it would be a less evil to change the tribunal at once, than, as at present, to retain the tribunal and abandon the procedure which can alone make that tribunal a safe one.—Solicitors' Journal.

SINGULAR ACTION AGAINST THE SHERIFF OF SURREY.—A singular action for trespass and false imprisonment was brought, at the Croydon Assizes, against the High Sheriff of the county of Surrey. The plaintiff, Mr. May, was summoned to serve on the Grand Jury. He did not serve, and was fined £5, for which he was arrested and lodged in Horsemonger-lane Gaol; and it was alleged that the officers had behaved with great brutality, thrusting the plaintiff into a cab without his hat and boots, which were afterwards handed to him through the window by his wife. The contention was that the sheriff's officers ought to have distrained the goods, and not taken the person of the plaintiff. It was replied that the plaintiff, on being apprehended, told the officers he had no goods, and the jury returned a verdict for defendant.

Promotion at the Criminal Bar.—The disposal of the two recently vacant police magistracies in London in favour of gentlemen whose names were seldom or never heard of in connexion with the administration of the criminal law suggests remark. Why do we so rarely hear of celebrated Old Bailey barristers being promoted to anything? At the civil bar the usual course of progression of a successful man is to a silk gown and to the Bench. To a criminal lawyer a silk gown is the object of no ambition, but it does not at all follow that an office carrying with it a certain amount of dignity and a settled stipend would not be highly acceptable to a great many men at the criminal bar who are thoroughly versed in the law and procedure of criminal tribunals. And this being so, we cannot regard with satisfaction the appointment of men whose competency no one disputes, but whose principal recommendation is that they have been of service to the party in office. The criminal law is a branch of our jurisprudence which is growing in importance, and some prospect of ultimate reward ought to be held out to those members of the Bar who are willing to devote to it the best energies of their lives.—Law Times.

The New Queen's Advocate.—Dr. Travers Twiss, Q.C., who has been nominated by the Earl of Derby to the post of Queen's Advocate, vacant by the appointment of Sir Robert Phillimore to the office of Judge of the Admiralty and Dean of the Court of Arches, is a son of the late Rev. Robert Twiss, LL.D., of Pembroke College, Cambridge, and Trevallyn, Denbighshire. He was educated at University College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1830, taking a first class in mathematics and a second class in classics. He subsequently became Fellow and tutor of his college. From 1835 to 1840 he was one of the public examiners in classics and mathematics, and amongst those who were "passed" by him in honours were many gentlemen who have risen to distinction in Church and State. From 1842 to 1847 Dr. Travers Twiss was Professor of Political Economy in the University of Oxford, and from 1852 to 1855 Professor of International Law in King's College, London. This appointment he resigned on being appointed Regius Professor of Civil Law in the University of Oxford. In 1840 he was called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn, and was subsequently admitted an advocate in Doctors' Commons. In 1849 he was appointed commissary-general of the city and diocese of Canterbury, and in 1852 vicar-general of the province. In 1858, on the advancement of Dr. Lushington to the office of the Court of Appeal of his province, Dr. Twiss was appointed by the bishop chancellor of the diocese of London. On the transfer of the testamentary and matrimonial jurisdiction from the Ecclesiastical to the Civil Courts, Dr. Twiss was created a Queen's Counsel, and was elected a bencher of Lincoln's Inn. He is the author of several valuable works on international law. Since his appointment as vicar-general Dr. Twiss has rendered great assistance to the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, and has scarcely ever been absent an hour from the sittings of the Upper House. The new Queen's Advocate will, according to custom, receive the honour of knighthood.

Story of a Negro Jury.—In Texas, in several of the civil courts, cases have been tried before juries composed wholly of negroes. The intelligence of these juries may be judged by an anecdote. A negro in Bexar had committed an assault on a brother freedman. The offender was arrested and brought before a justice of the peace, who summoned a jury of six (as by municipal law he was permitted to do) to try the case. The testimony having been given, the jury was requested, under instruction, to "find a verdict according to the evidence." After an absence of an hour the foreman returned and said, "Mr. Court—We be lukked up de chimnbly and ebbry in crack and under the floah, and, by gowy, we can't find nodin' lukks like a wordick." Explanations ensued and Sambo retired. In a few minutes the foreman returned and asked, "Lukk heah, Mr. Court, isn't I de foreman of this jury?" The court replied in the affirmative. "Well, den, I told dem cusses so, and dat dey must gree as I said, and dey wont do it? Mussn't dey do it, Mr. Court?" At last the counsel in the cause were sent to the jury to explain the circumstances and a "wordick" was ultimately obtained.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

Railway—Contract with Landowner—Legality of Agreement for Personal Compensation for withholding Opposition—"Ultra Vires."—By articles of agreement under seal, between defendants of the one part and plaintiff of the other part, after reciting that the plaintiff was the owner of a certain estate, and that the defendants had given notice of their intention to apply, in the then session of Parliament, for an Act enabling them to construct a certain extension line of railway in the said agreement described, and that, inasmuch as the line of the said railway would pass through the plaintiff's said estate in such manner as to intersect and damage the same, the plaintiff had intimated to the defendants his intention to oppose the passing of the said bill, but had agreed to withhold his said intended opposition upon the terms therein-after contained. It was (inter alia) agreed between plaintiff and defendants, 1st, that in the event of the said bill being passed into an Act during the then session of Parliament, the defendants would construct the said line of railway so as to enter and pass through the said estate of the plaintiff, within certain specified limits; and 2ndly, in the like event, the defendants would purchase from the plaintiff, at the price of £2,000, certain land of his required for the construction of such railway; and 3rdly, in the like event, the defendants would, in addition to the said sum of £2,000, and within three calendar months next after the passing of the said bill, pay to the plaintiff the further sum of £2,000, as and for a personal compensation for the annoyance, disturbance, and inconvenience, damage, loss, and injury which he had sustained, and might or would sustain in respect of the "sporting and preservation of game upon his said estate, by or in consequence of the construction of the said intended railway, and of the Parliamentary or other surveys, and other works connected therewith and incidental thereto;" and by the last clause of the said agreement it was provided that the agreement should be void if the defendants failed to obtain the said Act in the then present session of Parliament: Held by the majority of the Court of Ex. Ch. (Keating, Mellor, M. Smith, and Lush, J.J.) reversing the decision of the Court of Ex. below (Willes and Blackburn, J.J., dissentientibus) that the £2,000 for personal compensation being made payable to the plaintiff absolutely, whether his land was taken or not, and notwithstanding that the damage and inconvenience may never be done or suffered, the covenant in question provides for a misappropriation of the funds of the company to a purpose not authorized, and by implication prohibited, by their Act of incorporation, and is therefore ultra vires, and so cannot be made the foundation of an action. The Eastern Counties Railway Company v. Hawkes, 5 H. L. Cas., 331; 24 L. J. 601, Ch., discussed and distinguished.—Per Willes and Blackburn, J. J. (on the authority of that case). Such a contract is not forbidden by the Act of incorporation, and is not illegal or ultra vires, a statutory corporation being fully capable of binding itself by any contract under its common seal, except where the statute by which it is created or regulated expressly, or by necessary implication, prohibits such contract.—And per Blackburn, J. (Willes, J., dubitante). Though the contract be legal against the company, a shareholder not acquiescing in the promotion of the bill, and the making of the contract by the directors, might perhaps have a right in equity to have it set aside: (Taylor v. The Chichester and Midhurst Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 703. Ex. Ch.)

Covenant in Composition-deed.—By a deed of composition the debtor covenanted with all his creditors to pay them a composition of 12s. in the pound upon their debts by instalments; and further, "so soon as the deed should be delivered to him, signed and sealed by the said several creditors," to give to each of them, the said several creditors, his promissory notes or acceptances for the instalments of the composition, signed or endorsed by two sureties: Held, that the effect of the covenant was, that if the promissory notes and acceptances were given at all, they should be given to all creditors, without distinction, and therefore there was no inequality and the deed was good (dissentiente Martin, B.): (Peel v. Webster, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 598. Ex.)

BANKRUPTCY NO BAR TO CLAIM UNDER INDEMNITY.—Defendant covenanted with plaintiff to keep him harmless and indemnified from and against all calls that might at any time or times be made upon certain shares in a mining company, worked on the cost-book principle, which had previously been transferred by the defendant into the name of the plaintiff for the better securing a sum of money, and also from and against all charges, liabilities, and costs, attaching to the said shares. Defendant became bankrupt: Held, upon action brought upon this covenant for charges and costs paid by the plaintiff in respect of these shares, that defendant's bankruptcy was no bar to the claims; that the plaintiff was not a surety under the 173rd section of the B. L. C. A., 1849, nor were these liabilities upon a contingency under the 178th section: (Bettelcy v. Skinsby, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 701. C. P.)

PROCESS IN OUTLAWRY.—Proceedings in outlawry are not process against the person or property of a debtor who has executed a deed under 24 & 25 Vict., c. 134, s. 192, within the meaning of sect. 198 of that statute. And the Court of Q. B. will entertain and decide questions arising on such deed, and will not send them to be determined by the Court of Bankruptcy: (Purkin v. Ernest, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 713. Bail.)

TRUST-FUND EMPLOYED IN TRADE.—A trust fund which the settlor authorizes the trustees to employ in a trading concern becomes part of the capital embarked to which the creditors of the firm have priority of resort as against all claims on behalf of the cestuis que trustent: (Ex parte Edmonds, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 718. Bank.)

TAXATION—TRUSTEE.—Where a cestui que trust successfully taxes the bill of costs of the trustee's solicitor, the master will be allowed to exercise a certain discretion as to particular items, and the fact of the business being trust business will not be disregarded: (Re Brown, a Solicitor, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 729. Rolls.)

COSTS OF CONVEYANCE.—The costs of a conveyance within the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 82, do not include costs of a collateral agreement which forms no part of the conveyance: (Re Leitch and Kewney, Solicitors, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 729. Rolls.)

EQUITY PRACTICE—MORTGAGE.—Where, in a foreclosure suit, a defendant, a subsequent incumbrancer, is held to have priority, by reason of the possession of deeds, in case the plaintiff (the first mortgagee) elects not to redeem him, the bill will be dismissed against him only, and as against the subsequent incumbrancers, defendants, there will be the usual foreclosure decree. Costs as between the plaintiff and mortgagor to be a charge on the estate, but not as between the plaintiff and the other mortgagees: (Layard v. Maud, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 738. V. C. M.)

DISMISSAL OF BILL WITH COSTS.—Where a bill is dismissed with costs, and there is evidence that the defendant intends to proceed with the subject-matter to Australia, the court will order payment of such subject-matter into court, and direct a stay of all proceedings at law and in equity pending the appeal. The plaintiff to appeal within a time limited; costs reserved: (Webster v. Robinson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 738. V. C. M.)

BANKRUPTCY EXPENSES.—As an illustration of the way in which the English Bankruptcy Court absorbs the assets of estates placed under its jurisdiction, a correspondent of The Times forwards the account of an estate which was at first expected to realize 10s. in the £1, and on which the creditors finally received 5½d. The sums collected amounted to £229, and of this £135 was disbursed for "solicitors' bills," and £41 for other charges, leaving £53 for division among the creditors.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.—The Brussels journals state that a bill is being prepared there to abolish imprisonment for debt.

For rentals and further particulars apply to the Landed Estates' Court; to

SAMUEL BRUCE, Solicitor, 24, Dame-street, Dublin, and Donegall-place, Belfast; or to MACRORY and CO., Solicitors having carriage of Sale, 48, Rutland square, Dublin, and Ulster Chambers, Belfast.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

Lot 1—Comprises Part of the Lands of Rath Lower, which is situate about 12 miles north-east from the town of Dundalk, and is nearly equally distant from the town of Newry. It is within 1½ miles of Carlingford, a seaport and market town. The Lands are of good quality, and set at very moderate rents to respectable tenants.

Lot 2—Comprises Part of the Townland of Ballagan, situated about two miles east of Rath Lower (Lot 1). This is a very good Farm, and the occupying tenants are very respectable and solvent.

Lot 3—Comprises Part of the Lands of Fanghart Upper, together with Part of the Lands of Plaister, upon which stands the Mansion-house and Offices known as "Thistle," which is handsomely situated, with neat Garden and Pleasure Grounds. The Lands comprising this Lot are of good quality, well fenced and watered, and divided into nicely shaped fields. This Lot adjoins the demesne of Mountpleasant (portion of Lot 4) on the north side, and is occupied by respectable and solvent tenants.

Lot 4—The Mansion-house and Offices of Mountpleasant (forming part of this lot), are delightfully situated with picturesque lands and wooded boundaries, handsome pleasure grounds, ornamented with the choicest flowers, plants, and trees. The kitchen gardens, &c., which comprises about 14 acres statute measure, contain an excellent selection of fruit trees and flowers (home and exotic), with vineries and forcing houses, all of modern construction, and got up regardless of expense. The demesne is neatly walled in, and rivulets of clear spring water flow through it in different parts. The water to the mansion-house and gardens is supplied by conduits acting from hydraulic pressure.

The mansion-house is situated about two miles north of the town of Dundalk, to the east of the public road leading to Newry, from which it is approached by an avenue about half a mile in length. The principal avenue leading from the Ballymascanlan road is of equal length, and forms a most beautiful carriage drive. The Mountpleasant Station of the Dublin and Belfast Junction Railway is about a mile distant from the house, and the Mountpleasant and Ballymascanlan Post-offices about three-quarters of a mile respectively.

The Spinning and Scutching Mills (which are very valuable) are situated on this lot, in connexion with which is a gas factory, having connexions for lighting the mansion-house and offices of Mountpleasant. There are also valuable stone and lime quarries and kilns on this lot.

The demesne lands are of good quality, rich and fertile, and the farm-yard and buildings attached thereto are very extensive and permanent. The town of Dundalk is a rising seaport, having steam communication with Liverpool three or four times weekly, and railway communication with Dublin, Belfast, and all the north-west of Ireland, several times daily. Large markets are held in that town on every Monday in each week.

The lands are of good quality, and the tenants are respectable and punctual in the payments of their rents.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 33.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

THOUGH we do not put much faith in the results of amateur legislation, yet as the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science is to hold its first meeting for this year, on the 18th inst., in Belfast, we avail ourselves of the opportunity to suggest two important branches of the law relating to the United Kingdom in general, which are urgently in need of improval, and which we regret should have been omitted from the programme of the Association.

The first is the present state of the laws relating to marriage, which is allowed on all hands to be a disgrace to our Statute Book. During last Session we had numerous instances of the incongruity and uncertainty of decisions on that most social subject. The Yelverton case has dragged its weary length along to what we hope will prove its final end; and the lady who was declared by an Irish court to be the wife of Major Yelverton, has, by the ultimate verdict of the House of Lords, been adjudged to have no claim to that title. Nor have there been wanting instances in which the possession of immense property has been imperilled from the unsettled condition of our marriage law. The details of the Breadalbane Peerage case are fresh in the minds of most of our readers, and consequently we need not repeat them, but it is monstrous that the succession to the noblest title and most extensive estates in Scotland should depend on the opinion of the Law Lords as to whether the issue of a certain couple who cohabited during the lifetime of the lady's husband, and who did not go through the formal and public ceremony of marriage on his decease, were legitimate, without any well-admitted principles to guide the decision. In fact the law, as it now stands, offers every facility in the one country to the arts of the practised seducer, and in the other to those of the designing woman. But all the public time which these and many other similar cases have taken up will not have been spent in vain, if by their means Parliament can be induced to pass some law which, while granting perfect freedom of action to the tenderest religious susceptibility, will yet insure that similarity and publicity so necessary to establish legitimacy.

The next subject to which we would call the attention of the learned members of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, is that of the Trades' Unions. It is now admitted that their case must be legislatively prescribed for, we can no longer ignore their existence, and it is much wiser policy to be guided by the signs of the times and to try to direct that current which we can no longer safely dam up. We have already made a small beginning by the establishment of Conseils des Prud'hommes, as they are called in France; but these will not prove sufficient or satisfactory either for masters or men, for the simple reason that they are little better than voluntary associations, and can only adjudicate on such differences between masters and workmen as may be submitted to them by mutual consent. Nor have they been as efficient as was expected in France, where strikes are almost as frequent as in England. The Act referred to, is not to extend to domestic servants or agricultural labourers, and is to be cited as "The Councils of Conciliation Act, 1867." The Trades' Union Commission has removed the place of its labours to Manchester, where horrible disclosures are being made similar to those that excited such intense indignation before the Commission that sat in Sheffield, and the result seems to be to fill the public mind more and more with terror and disgust at a system which it does not comprehend, and with which it cannot sympathize. Mr. Hume's Commission succeeded in repealing the Combination Laws, and thereby took away half the workmen's grievances; let us hope that this present Commission may eventuate in an addition to the Statutes which will do an equal amount of good, and render even-handed justice to all.

We do not think, therefore, that the members of the Association, numbering, as they do, men who have experience in legal, scientific, and manufacturing affairs, can better employ their time in the interests of the public, than by discussing amongst themselves those very important subjects.

THE Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867, embodies the provisions of several English Statutes and General Orders. The 15 and 16 Vic., cap. 80, entitled, "An Act to Abolish the Office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and to make provision for the more speedy and efficient despatch of business in the said Court," came into operation on the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1852. The 15 and 16 Vic., cap. 86, entitled, "An Act to Amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the High Court of Chancery;" and the 15 and 16 Vic., cap. 87, entitled, "An Act for the Relief of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," took effect about the same time, nearly two years after the passing of the Irish Chancery Regulation Act (13 and 14 Vic., cap. 89). The provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Statute 16 and 17 Vic., c. 98, with reference to funds, the dividends of which have not been dealt with for 15 years, are by the new Act extended, mutatis mutandis, to the Court of Chancery in Ireland; as are also the provisions of the 15 and 16 Vic., c. 86, s. 22; 16 and 17 Vic., c. 78; and 18 and 19 Vic., c. 42, with regard to the taking of affidavits for the Court of Chancery in Ireland.

Digitized by Google

By Section 52 (Part III.) the Chancery Regulation Act is repealed down to Section 33, except so far as may be necessary for supporting, continuing, or prosecuting suits begun before the first day of next Term. The remaining sections unrepealed relate to the appointment of a Secretary by the Master of the Rolls, and to salaries of Secretaries, Masters, Clerks, and Examiners.

Section 53 of the new Act enacts that the Deputy Keeper of the Rolls shall receive and file a printed Bill of Complaint in lieu of an engrossment. This section corresponds with the 1st Section of the 15 and 16 Vic., c. 86.

Section 54 abolishes the old Writ of Subpœna to appear and answer a Bill of Complaint, and Section 55 directs that in lieu of serving the Defendant with a Writ of Subpœna that he shall be served with a printed Bill, previously stamped with a proper stamp, indicating the filing and the date of filing, with an endorsement calling on him, within eight days after the service of the Bill, to cause an appearance to be entered for him, at the office of the Clerk of Appearances and Writs, and informing him that if he fails to comply with the directions in the endorsement, he will be liable to be arrested and imprisoned. The filing of a printed Bill and the service of it on the defendant so stamped and endorsed will have the same effect as the service of a Writ of Subpœna now has.

In certain cases, where the Bill prays a Writ of Injunction or a Writ of Ne exeat regno, written copies of Bills may be filed and served in the same manner as a printed copy, but the plaintiff, or his Solicitor, must undertake to file a printed copy within fourteen days.

Section 61 enacts that every Bill of Complaint shall contain, as concisely as may be, a narrative of the material facts, matters, and circumstances upon which the plaintiff relies, such narrative to be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively, and each paragraph to contain, as nearly as may be, a separate and distinct statement or allegation; and the Bill is to pray for specific and general relief, but is not to contain any interrogatories for the examination of the defendant. This statement and prayer form the substance and essence of every Bill. A Bill as usually framed before the passing of the English Amendment Act in England, and heretofore in Ireland, consisted of nine parts.

I. The address to the person or persons holding the Great Seal.

II. The names and addresses of the parties complainant.

III. The statement of the plaintiff's case, commonly called the stating part.

IV. The charge that the defendant unlawfully confederated with others to deprive the plaintiff of his right.

V. The allegation that the defendants intend to set up a particular defence which the plaintiff anticipates, by stating matters in reply to such defence. This was termed the charging part, as the plaintiff's allegations were generally introduced by way of charge instead of statement.

VI. The statement that the plaintiff has no remedy without the assistance of a Court of Equity, which was termed the averment of jurisdiction.

VII. The interrogating part, in which the stating and charging part were converted into interrogatories, for the purpose of eliciting, from the defendant, a discovery upon oath of the truth or falsehood of the matters stated and charged.

VIII. The prayer for relief.

IX. The prayer that process might issue requiring the defendant to appear and answer, and in certain cases praying for a Writ of Injunction, or a Writ of Ne exeat regno; see Burroughs and Gresson on Equity Pleading, and Daniel's Chancery Practice, 4th Ed., Vol. I., p. 331. A bill now usually consists of parts 1, 2, 3, and 8, and part 9, when circumstances require it.

THE HON. JUDGE BERWICK.

WE are happy to learn that Judge Berwick, who has returned to town, and who will sit in Bankruptcy next Tuesday, has derived great benefit from his Continental trip. The rest and relaxation, so needful to all active-minded workers, have had their natural restorative effects. The learned Judge will continue to preside in Court each week until November, when vacation ends, and when the usual sittings by both Judges will be resumed.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE MILLER.

Re THE PATENT PEAT COMPANY (LIMITED).

August, 1867.—Mortgagee's Fixtures attached to the Soil and Freehold—Sale under Execution—Reputed Ownership—The Landlord and Tenant Act of 1861—A Railway or Tramway is a Fixture.

This case came before the Court upon the charge of Mr. Wright as a mortgagee of the premises of the Patent Peat Company; and a discharge filed by Mr. Fleming, a purchaser.

Kernan, Q.C., was for the mortgagee.

Henderson was for the purchaser under an execution against the Company.

MILLER, J.—This case comes before the Court on the charge of T. F. Wright, claiming as a mortgagee of the "Patent Peat Company, Limited," and the discharge of B P. Fleming, claiming as a purchaser under certain executions issued against the same Peat Company.

The subject matter of claim on either side consists of—

1st. 40,000 kishes of turf valued, on the one hand, at 5s., and on the other, at 1s. per kish, purchased by Fleming for £10.

2nd. Derrick crane.

3rd. Drilling machine.

4th. The tramway or railway over the demised lands leading from the Peat Works to the Canal.

The charge states that by a lease of the 24th of October, 1862, the lands and bog of Derrylea and Aughrim were demised to Charles Hodgson for 99 years.

That Charles Hodgson erected on the demised premises certain works and manufactures for the purpose of manufacturing fuel from peat.

That by an indenture of the 21st of April, 1864, between Charles Hodgson of the first part, Henry Hodgson of the second part, Octavius O'Brien and Wm. Anderson of the third part, the Patent Peat Company of the fourth part, the said Charles and Henry Hodgson assigned the demised premises, with the buildings, erections, fixtures, and improvements, then erected, together with the plant, machinery, machines, engines, tools, boilers, materials, and premises used in the manufacture of fuel from peat, to the "Peat Company," for the residue of the term for which the lease of 1862 had been granted.

That the Patent Peat Company laid out large sums of money in erecting engines, machinery, and works, for the manufacture of peat fuel, and in making railways or tramways upon the demised premises.

That by a deed of mortgage of the 12th of April, 1865, between the Peat Company of the first part, Henry Hodgson, Charles Hodgson, and Octavius O'Brien, of the second part, Thomas Frederick Wright of the third part, the Peat Company demised to Wright the premises demised by the lease of 1862, with all buildings, erections, fixtures, and improvements thereon or to be thereafter erected, standing, or made, on the said premises, together with all the plant, machinery, machines, engines, tramways, rails, tools, boilers, materials, and premises, which had been used and employed by the said Company, their workmen and servants, for the business and manufacture of fuel, &c.

That Henry Hodgson, Charles Hodgson, and Octavius O'Brien, by the direction of the Peat Company, demised to Wright the premises demised by the lease of the 13th of July, 1864, together with the rail or tramway laid down thereon, for the full term for which they had been demised, less by six months.

That all the articles (which I have enumerated, except the turf) were included in and conveyed by the mortgage of the 12th of April, 1865, to Wright, as a trustee for Henry Hodgson, and were firmly fixed and attached to the ground and soil of the demised premises.

The discharge of Fleming in substance puts the mortgagee upon proof that the matters claimed by the charge were firmly fixed and attached to the ground and soil of the demised premises, and were fixtures incapable of being sold under the execution in the discharge stated, and relies upon his title to such articles as a purchaser under such executions.

His Lordship said he would first dispose of the question raised with regard to the turf. It was urged by counsel on the part of the mortgagee that the Peat Company, at the time the turf was manufactured, were tenants at will to the mortgagee, and therefore came within the operation of the 29th section, 24 Vic., chap. 154, and were thereby, as such tenants at will, rendered incapable of manufacturing turf for sale. He did not understand how the mortgagor could be tenant at will to the mortgagee. But the question more immediately for my consideration is, did such a tenancy exist between the mortgagee and mortgagor, under the mortgage of 1865, as came within the 29th section of the 23rd and 24th Vict., chap. 154? and I am clearly of opinion that no such tenancy existed, as by that section it is provided, "Where any lease or demise shall be made on or after the 1st of January, 1861, of lands containing turf bog unreclaimed and unprofitable for agriculture, it shall be lawful for the tenant, unless by the said lease it be specially provided to the contrary, to cut, &c."

Without reading more of the section, it was clear that the lease contemplated by it was a formal lease in writing, and not such a tenancy or relation as existed between a mortgagor and mortgagee, and he (Judge Miller) could not attach any weight to that point.

As regards what property constitutes a fixture, it may be taken as a general rule, that if the goods or property are so affixed as not to be moveable without injury to the freehold, they should pass to the mortgagee. But the novel, and indeed the important point of the case was, whether a Railway or Tramway embedded in the soil was a fixture to which the mortgagee was entitled. He (Judge MILLER) thought it was. As the mortgagee had claimed more than he was entitled to, the Court would leave each party to pay his own costs.

Re HUGH BECK.

September, 1867.—Final Examination of Bankrupt—Duty of Trade Assignee—Necessity for most rigid Inquiry where Books are not accurately kept, and where two Schedules have been filed contradictory of each other—an Adjournment sine die under the 140th section ought to be confined to the purpose of compelling discovery as to the property of the Bankrupt, and ample time will be given for that purpose.

This case came originally before the Court under a petition for arrangement presented by the trader; and in 1st Irish Law Times, page 29, an important decision will be found by Judge Berwick, which was to the effect that although an arranging trader may have an overwhelming majority of creditors to sanction his proposal, yet, if it is ascertained that gross injustice has been done to one particular creditor, the case will be turned into bankruptcy, and the creditor who so opposed will get his costs. On the case being turned into bankruptcy a new schedule and new accounts were filed.

Heron, Q.C., and Charles Meldon, instructed by J. D. Meldon and Son, appeared for the assignees in bankruptcy, ultimately the final examination was adjourned sine die, with liberty to apply to have it opened.

Kernan, Q.C., instructed by Irvine, on the part of the bankrupt, obtained liberty to proceed with the examination. The assignees still expressed their dissatisfaction, and contended that the examination ought to be again adjourned sine die, or that if passed, and that the case ultimately became one of conduct merely, that the certificate ought to be suspended for the longest period the law would permit.

Judge MILLER, in pronouncing judgment, said—In consequence of what has passed before me connected with this case, I feel bound to state in the outset that, in my opinion, there has not been any investigation into the circumstances of this case beyond what such circumstances and the commonest interests of the trading community imperatively demanded, and that the necessity for such close investigation must be altogether attributed to the acts of the bankrupt himself, as well before as since the date of his bankruptcy. And I will further add, that it was the plain duty of the trade assignee, who had undertaken that responsible office, not only to have promoted such investigation, but also, as the consequence of such investigation, to have brought before the court on the proper occasion the matters which, in his judgment, forced him in his official capacity to oppose the passing of the final examination of the bankrupt, and which I do not hesitate to say called for the deliberate consideration and decision of the court. And I will further add, that I shall always hold in respect the man who devotes his time and professional knowledge fairly to the discharge of the duties of an unpaid, and often thankless office, such as that of trade assignee, which is assumed largely for the interests of others, and which must, otherwise, fall under the necessarily more formal management of the agent to the commission and of the official assignee. I must here express my astonishment that a case of the nature of the present could have proceeded from the immediate vicinity of Belfast, where establishments which embrace transactions of equal magnitude with that in which the bankrupt was engaged, were not confined to the bankrupt himself, or even to a few persons; but where such establishments are numerous, and the mode of conducting them is reduced to a code perfectly well recognised by all who could lay any claim to the name or character of either extensive manufacturers or merchants, and is made the almost daily subject of discussion on the Exchange, in which it appears that the bankrupt, who held himself out to the trading community for several years as an extensive manufacturer and merchant, had not kept books properly posted or balanced, which constitutes the very foundation of all honest mercantile dealings; but, further, that such books, when produced, contain, in some instances, double entries, and also further entries made in red ink therein since the date when this case came into this court, to the extent of several thousand pounds, and in which it further appears that such books as I have described had been kept for a considerable period previous to the bankruptcy by a book-keeper who admitted upon his last examination, and so lately as on the 30th of the last month, that he had received moneys which he had never entered, and added, that he was glad of the opportunity of stating, in his own defence, that although he filled the office of book-keeper to such an establishment, "he had a good deal of travelling to do as well as book-keeping," and who further deposed to the fact that the cash book went through the form of being balanced (I believe he said) every fortnight, and from which he was forced to admit some cash receipts had been omitted. and therefore such balances must have been in many cases purely fictitious. It is difficult to understand how an establishment of that magnitude and conducted in that manner, could end in anything else than bankruptcy, and when the bankrupt found himself compelled from the state of his affairs to resort to this court for protection, he was, from the improper condition of his books, such as I have described, forced as a first step to call in the aid of professional accountants—although the same book-keeper continued and was then in his employment—for the purpose of having such a document placed before his creditors and upon the files of this court as would entitle him to that protection; and the bankrupt accordingly, on the 7th November, 1866, placed a schedule upon the files of this court purporting to be a full statement of his affairs, and annexed affidavit to that schedule pledging his oath in terms as follows:—"That he had carefully (I repeat the word carefully) read and examined the within schedule and balance sheet, and on each of which pages he subscribed his name, and that so much thereof as related to his own acts and deeds was true, and that so much thereof as related to the acts and deeds of any other person he believed to be true." Upon that schedule, thus verified, he obtained the protection of this court, and yet so lately as the 6th of July, 1867, the bankrupt placed upon the files of this court a fresh schedule to which an affidavit similar in terms to that which I have already stated was of necessity annexed, and which latter schedule was in many very essential particulars, and to the extent of many thousand pounds, at variance with the former schedule filed by him; and the official assignee, before whom these accounts went for the purpose of investigation and vouching, by his last report, which bears date so lately as the 24th of July, 1867, states to me "that the bankrupt disowned the former schedule to which he had thus pledged his oath altogether, and that on subsequent deliberate investigations of the books and accounts, he (the bankrupt) had found the former schedules wrong in many essential respects." It must be observed, as a fact bearing upon the questions now under consideration, that the second schedule, of so late a date as the 6th of July, 1867, discloses for the first time several transactions, as to one of which, with others, an examination was held before this court still more lately, on the 8th of August last (I refer to a transaction of the transfer of wine, pending the proceedings in this court, to a creditor named M'Kebbins), upon which occasion the bankrupt admitted that the persons who had supplied that wine remained still unpaid, and, notwithstanding, had not been placed even upon the new schedule. And it must be further particularly observed, that as the result of that examination, had so lately as the 8th of August, property of considerable amount in value, has since that date, and within a very recent period, been restored for the benefit of the general creditors. With these general remarks, which circumstances known to all engaged in this case have forced me to make in the very outset, I will now deal with this case in rather more detail. This case came before the court on the 29th of August last, on the application of the bankrupt, for the single purpose of obtaining liberty to pass his final examination. There can be no doubt that an authority was by the 140th section of the Bankrupt Act, to which reference has been made, "vested in me either at the time originally appointed for the last examination of the bankrupt, or at any enlargement or adjournment thereof to adjourn such examination sine die." But I will unequivocally declare as my understanding of the proper exercise of such a power as given by that section, "that it should be confined to the purpose of compelling discovery as to the property of the bankrupt, or the more full and effectual realization of the assets of the bankrupt.

The learned Judge concluded by saying that this application is, at all events, premature, and that the final examination of the bankrupt should not pass now, or even for a considerable period; but while I make that announcement I would declare it as my opinion that when the assignee, with the means of information which he has at his disposal, is of opinion that no further assets can be realised out of the estate, he should, in the common interests of all creditors, close a profitless investigation, and impeach the conduct of the bankrupt in the only legitimate manner pointed out by the Act of Parliament, by filing objections to the passing of his certificate. As a reference has been made to a document which has been termed a "round robin," the particulars of which I declined to hear, I will only say, that the trade assignee who was formally selected by the creditor to fill that office would have forgotten what was due to his office, to himself, and to the court if he had paid the slightest attention to any such document emanating from any section of the creditors. My intention is not to hear this question re-opened sooner than the first sitting day in Hilary Term, and I will embody that intention in whatever form I can best meet the object of the parties.

ENGLAND.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

One of the innocents that fell in the massacre at the end of the session was the bill for increasing the number of judges by two, which would, of course, have involved a certain amount of alteration in the present arrangement of the circuits. The bill, however, fell not ingloriously, inasmuch as it was announced that a Commission was to be issued to inquire into the whole subject, and recommend such changes as might be required. We hope that the Commissioners will take an adequate view of the subject, and will try to make a good job for once and for all, instead of merely cobbling and patching arrangements which have been thoroughly outgrown by the progress of events. As we have suggested long since, and have shown in detail on several occasions, the best and simplest bit of patchwork that can be devised would consist in adding two new judges to the existing list, cutting the old Northern circuit into an Eastern and a Western division, and reviving the old Midland circuit with the addition of assize at Birmingham; but this would be a mere device, though probably a useful one, and other devices which might be suggested for the rearrangement of the circuits with the present staff of judges would only amount to cutting off one end of a blanket to stitch it on to the other end. To alter a circuit inflicts extreme inconvenience and in many cases most serious loss on all the barristers who attend it. It is a matter of indifference to the public at large, and it cannot possibly affect the work of the judges so long as fourteen of them have to try all the causes and all the serious crimes throughout the whole country twice a year. The truth is that a thorough revision of our present judicial arrangements, from the highest to the lowest, is a matter of urgent practical importance, and that it would be no very difficult matter to frame a comprehensive scheme which would amply repay any outlay of trouble or money which it would involve.

We will try to suggest a few points as to objects which such a scheme should embrace, and the manner in which they might be attained. The work to be done may be divided into ordinary jurisdiction and appellate jurisdiction. These consist of civil and criminal jurisdiction. The civil jurisdiction is either legal, equitable, or civil in the sense of being founded on the Roman law, as is the case with Admiralty, probate, and part of the matrimonial business. The criminal jurisdiction is either preparatory or final. From historical causes sufficiently well known to every one who is interested in such subjects, this business has come to be distributed amongst the various judges who transact it in a manner almost incredibly singular and intricate. The more the matter is observed the more will the total want of any sort of principle in any of our arrangements be brought to light.

There are two supreme courts of appeal, between which the appellate business is divided according to the place in which it arises; but in subordinate courts of appeal the division of business depends on the subject matter. The appellate jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Justices, and the Court of Exchequer Chamber is exercised over equitable and legal matters respectively; but the question whether a case is to come before the House of Lords or the Privy Council is not decided by its being legal or equitable, but by its having arisen at home or in the colonies. If it is an ecclesiastical case, the strangest result takes place. An Irish ecclesiastical case goes to the House of Lords, but a case from England or the colonies goes to the Privy Council. Not only is the appellate jurisdiction thus intricate and divided, but the original jurisdiction proceeds upon totally different principles in different cases. In the case of judges of the superior courts, civil and criminal jurisdiction are united in the same judge, but when they sit as criminal judges their jurisdiction is local. The courts of equity are restricted to equitable questions, but are locally unrestricted. The courts of quarter session have a local criminal jurisdiction and what may be called an administrative jurisdiction, but no civil jurisdiction. The county courts have every sort of civil jurisdiction, legal and equitable, but it is strictly local, and they have no criminal jurisdiction. The police courts and courts of petty session are exclusively local and criminal. Admirers of variety have thus an opportunity of comparing in our judicial institutions the effects of every sort of system. We have judges restricted to one subject, judges expected to know any subject, judges whose jurisdiction is local, judges whose jurisdiction is general; courts of appeal for special localities, courts of appeal for special classes of cases; paid judges and unpaid judges; courts of which the members are fixed, courts of which the members fluctuate, and other varieties too numerous to mention. Might it not be well to try to put all this experience to some profitable use, and to devise out of all these many varieties a general, coherent, and permanent system; especially as our courts exhibit one other most important variety, namely, that the most important of them are most absurdly overworked, whilst others which might be highly important are left with hardly anything to do because they give their time (when they do give it) for nothing, except honour and glory?

It would of course be presumptuous to propound such a scheme as one which had the least chance of being carried, but fancy sketches have their uses, inasmuch as they suggest the sort of alterations which might be made if we had to deal with a tabula rasa, not only as to institutions, but as to expense.

If the speedy and rational administration of justice were the only matter to be considered in reference to the organization of courts of justice, it is no very difficult thing to see what should be done. It is obviously desirable, both for the sake of economy, and in order to preserve as much unity as possible in different branches of the law, to have as few courts and as few judges as possible, and this implies that in a nation like this there should be a certain number of superior courts, taking cognizance of causes of all sorts, and kept in correspondence with each other by the operation of one supreme court of appeal. This is practically the case with colonial courts, which in most cases adjudicate upon all sorts of questions, legal, equitable, Admiralty cases, matrimonial cases, criminal trials, &c., subject only to an appeal in matters of importance to the Privy Council. The natural course, if we had to start afresh, would be to introduce this state of things into England, to have four or five superior courts at places of great importance; for instance, at Liverpool, Leeds, Birmingham, Bristol, and perhaps Norwich and Swansea, which should exercise within certain local limits all the powers of the superior courts of Law, Equity, Admiralty, and Probate, just as the supreme court of a colony does. The judges of these courts might go circuit in their respective districts, so as to familiarize the people at large with the administration of justice, as at present. In term time and in the sittings after term they would dispose of such of the various matters arising in their own districts as are now put upon the new trial paper, the special paper, and the Crown paper in the courts at Westminster Hall, and of the more important part of the nisi prius business. On circuit they would try such matters as are now tried on the civil and criminal side at the assizes. The result of this would be that a smaller number of judges would be required in London than at present, though of course the capital and the home counties would always be the most important part of the country in a judicial as well as in other points of view. Their great function, however, would be that they, together with a certain number of other eminent persons, might form a general court of appeal, not only from the other English superior courts, but also from the courts in the Colonies. The advantages of this arrangement were powerfully set forth, and the necessity of some arrangement of the kind was put, in our judgment, beyond all doubt, by a speech made early in the last session by Sir Roundell Palmer. Strong grasp of all the principles of the subject entitles all that he says on the broader points of the subject to the most respectful attention, though his ignorance of the practical working of the common law courts would make him as dangerous a councillor in mere practical patchwork. Of course all manner of adjustments would be required before such a plan as we have thus slightly indicated could be brought into anything approaching to fitness for practical use, and when it was brought into shape there must be a great change in all the common ways of thinking and feeling before it would meet with anything like serious discussion; for it must be owned that it would shock a good many associations, and would perhaps be injurious to some existing interests, whilst the questions of expense and patronage would, of course, oppose most formidable objections to its reception. Though these reasons are conclusive against its practical success, they do not in any way interfere with the question of its theoretical advantages. The establishment of such courts would do away with arrears, it would give ample time for the full settlement of the many questions which are at present slurred over or thrown on one side by reason of the choked condition of the courts. It would relieve London from a mass of judicial business which is at present brought to it from every part of the country at an enormous expense, and without the slightest corresponding advantage. It may appear at first sight as if it would injure the prestige of the bench and the bar by diffusing them over the country instead of concentrating them in London, but this we believe to be a mistake. The bar at large would gain by the greater division of business which would arise upon the establishment of new courts, and a large local bar in a provincial capital could hardly fail to be at once a respectable and an influential body. There are twenty-seven such courts in France, but the bar of Paris is certainly neither uninfluential nor undignified. The judges would be the greatest gainers of all; for they would gain some reasonable degree of rest and leisure, and time to follow the noblest of all pursuits in a spirit more worthy of it than any one can attain who has, as our fifteen judges have at present, to work all day long, and every day in the week, for perhaps forty-three or forty-four weeks in the year.—Pall Mall Gazette.

POST OFFICE LAW.

The justice, if not the legality, of a decision by Sir Thomas Henry, prohibiting the carrying on by a company of the business of carriers of letters within the London district, has been very much discussed and questioned. As at present advised, we do not think that the legal validity of the decision could be successfully impugned, inasmuch as what the letter-carrying company seeks to do is to set up an opposition post-office. It will be remembered by those versed in the history of the Revenue that this was not the first time that the attempt had been made. Attorney-General Prideaux was chairman of a committee in 1642 for considering what rates should be set upon inland letters, and he was afterwards appointed postmaster by an ordinance of both the Houses. His emoluments were very considerable after the establishment of the weekly conveyance of letters, and the Common Council of London endeavoured to erect another post-office in opposition to his, till checked by a resolution of the House of Commons, declaring that the office of postmaster is and ought to be in the sole power and disposal of the Parliament. If, therefore, the Post-office be regarded strictly as a source of revenue, and not merely as an institution adapted to promote the convenience of the nation, it is difficult to see how a company can establish a system of letter delivery without infringing the rights of the Crown as established by Parliament. If, on the other hand, public convenience alone is to be consulted, the formation of independent companies for delivering circulars and addresses within a small radius should be encouraged. The revenue from the Post-office is, however, steadily increasing, we believe, and it is hardly likely that the Court of Queen's Bench would mitigate the rigour of the law in favour of a scheme for stopping that increase and assuring a diminution; and the public would not wish, we conceive, to be burdened with another fraction on the income-tax to make up for any loss of revenue so accruing.—Law Times.

THE PRIVILEGES OF THE POST-OFFICE.

The Standard observes that, whether Sir Thomas Henry's decision on the recent circular delivery case be or be not good law, it seems likely enough in many instances to involve considerable hardship. Her Majesty's Post office is a "protected" institution, to which a monopoly of the country's letter-carrying trade has been granted, and by which, as the profit of such monopoly, a very large and constantly increasing amount is annually contributed to the national revenue. Persons violating its privilege are rendered liable to a penalty of £5 for each letter delivered, or to one of £100 per week if their offences become habitual. As regards letters pure and simple, no one wishes to interfere with this; but when the statute was passed delivering thousands of circulars by post was a thing undreamt of. Year by year we have been getting more into the habit of sending and receiving printed communications in almost indefinite numbers, while every legislative lightening of the "taxes on knowledge," and every improved mechanical appliance which has come into use in the art of typography, has tended to increase the ever-augmenting number of these printed missives. To post a candidate's address to the constituents of a metropolitan borough involves an outlay of from eighty to a hundred and fifty pounds. Hitherto it has been common enough to send these things from house to house by hand, even if they were previously put into an envelope and addressed letter fashion, from prudent desire to propitiate the £10 householders' respect for appearances. Henceforth, however, this cannot be done, at least if Sir Thomas Henry's decision is to be interpreted strictly and applied universally.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

Probate Practice.—Where a will was limited to property in Chili, the Court refused probate to the executor named therein. It would seem, however, that the grant would be made if the property reached this country, and probate were necessary to obtain possession of it: (In the Goods of G. T. Cood, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 746. Prob.)

Mortgage — Misrepresentation — Liabilities of Trustees.—B. being embarrassed, consulted her solicitor as to the best means of raising money to pay her creditors.

Digitized by Google

He suggested that certain leaseholds which had been voluntarily settled by her upon trust for the benefit of herself and her infant children might be treated as if they belonged to her absolutely and mortgaged. The trustees of the settlement, however, refused to comply with this arrangement, but eventually consented to retire from the trust, and to the appointment of new trustees. The mortgage was then effected, the new trustees giving their consent on the understanding that the mortgage should be confirmed by B.'s children on coming of age. The existence of the settlement was concealed from the mortgagee at the date of the transaction, and on discovering it he took no immediate steps for the recovery of his money; but subsequently, on the children coming of age, and refusing to confirm the mortgage, he filed a bill (nine years after the discovery) against B., her solicitor, and the old and new trustees, praying for a declaration that all and each were liable to make good the money he had advanced: Held, that all of the defendants were liable to repay him his principal, interest, and costs: (Clark v. Hoskins, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 730. V. C. S.)

WIFE'S REVERSIONARY INTEREST—DIVORCE.—By a post-nuptial settlement in 1842, a reversionary interest of the wife was settled upon trust for the wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, remainder to the children, and in default of children in trust for the survivor of husband and wife. There never was any issue, and by a decree of the Divorce Court in 1862 the marriage was dissolved. In April, 1865, the reversion fell in, and the divorced wife became a co-plaintiff in a suit for the distribution of the fund. She died in Nov., 1865: Held, that her executors were entitled to her share against an assignee for value of the husband, as his right jure mariti was determined by the divorce: (Wilkinson v. Gibson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 763. V. C. W.)

FAILURE TO PERFORM CONTRACT FROM ACCIDENT.—Where a person contracts to do work on the premises of another, to be paid for on completion, the law will not imply any absolute promise or warranty on the part of the employer that the premises shall at all events continue fit to receive the work; and, therefore, if, while the work is in progress, the premises are destroyed by inevitable accident, and without fault on either side, it is a misfortune equally affecting both parties, and excusing both from the further performance of the contract, but giving a right of action to neither: (Appleby v. Myers, 16 T.L. Rep. N. S. 669. Ex. Ch.)

POOR-RATE — BENEFICIAL OCCUPATION. — Within the precincts of the City of Lincoln there is a commonable pasture, called Holmes-Common, the soil of which is vested in the corporation of the city as lords of the manor, over which the resident freemen only have always enjoyed, by prescription, a right of depasturing two heads of cattle each. The corporation, now the town council, derived no advantage whatever from the common, but were actual losers by the expense to which they were put in appointing and paying a common-warden to protect the stocking of the common and the maintenance of the fences. The mayor, aldermen, and citizens having been assessed to the poor-rate as the occupiers of such common: Held, that as there was no beneficial occupation, they were not liable to be rated: (Corporation of Lincoln v. The Overseers of Holmes-Common, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 739. Q. B.)

PRACTICE — FOREIGN CONTRIBUTORIES — SERVICE.—A company carried on business in London and Paris, having many shareholders resident in France. On its being wound-up, and a call made, notice of such call is sufficiently served on the French shareholders by letter sent by the post: (Re The General International Agency Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 725. L. J. J.)

BANKRUPTCY OF FEME COVERT.—A feme covert, on her own petition, in which she stated herself to be a widow, was adjudicated bankrupt, and she was afterwards indicted for concealment and embezzlement of her property with intent to defraud her creditors (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 221, par. 3), and two other persons were also indicted with aiding her. The examinations and answers of the three defendants in bankruptcy were given in evidence in support of the prosecution. No caution was given to them by the commissioner on such examination, and they did not object to answer on the ground that their answers might tend to criminate them: Held, that although the wife was adjudicated a bankrupt, the property belonged to her husband, and that the property was not proved as laid in the indictment. Quære: 1. Whether a married woman can be made a bankrupt. 2. Whether the Gazette is conclusive evidence of bankruptcy against a married woman adjudicated bankrupt after the lapse of the time mentioned, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 106, s. 233: (Reg v. Mary Robinson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 605. Cr. Cas. Res.)

BANKING COMPANY—SALE OF SECURITIES.—Messrs. H. and Co. drew bills upon, and they were excepted by, the N. Z. Banking Company, with whom at the same time other securities were deposited to meet the bills of maturity. The N. Z. Company discounted the bills with the H. C. and J. Company, who then became the holders of them. Messrs. H. and Co. became bankrupt; the bills were dishonoured, and the two banks were ordered to be wound-up. The securities in the hands of the N. Z. bank were sold. On a summons by the official liquidator of the H. C. and J. Bank for payment of the proceeds of the sale of the securities to them as the holders of the bills, it was held, that the proceeds could not be transferred, but must be earmarked and retained till the result of the account between the parties was fully ascertained: (Re The New Zealand Banking Corporation, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 654. Ch.)

A deed to the following effect was held bad: it contained a covenant by the creditors, each in respect of his own acts only to indemnify the debtor against any sums of money, costs, charges, or expenses in, about, or relating to any bill of exchange, or note, or other security which he might have given them, the said creditors respectively, for or on account of their said several debts respectively. The plea averred that no such bills, notes, or securities had been given to any of the said creditors other than certain creditors who had, before registration of the deed, assented in writing to, and executed the same: (Oldis v. Armston, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 601.)

RIGHTS OF TRUSTEES UNDER DEEDS.—The 197th section of the B. A. 1861 gives to trustees under a deed the same rights as are given to assignees under a bankruptcy by the 129th section of the B. L. C. A. 1849. Trustees under a deed of arrangement for the benefit of creditors of a sum of stock standing in the name of the debtor at the date of the deed, are entitled to a transfer of the stock into their own names without taking out letters of administration to the debtor, since deceased. The latter part of the 128th section of the B. L. C. A. 1849, directing dividends upon stock to be paid to the official assignee, is inconsistent with the provisions of the B. A. 1861, and therefore repealed: (Ex parte Eddison, re Price, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 613. Bank.)

COSTS.—POWER OF COURT.—There is no discretion given to the court by the second proviso in section 86 of the B. L. C. A 1849, (12 & 13 Vict., c. 86), in the matter of an application by the defendant for his costs of suit in a case where the plaintiff in the action has recovered a less sum than the amount sworn to in his affidavit of debt, filed on taking out a trader-debtor summons against the defendant, under section 78 of the same statute; and the court, on its being "made to appear, to their satisfaction," that the plaintiff had no "reasonable or probable cause" for making such affidavit in such amount, are bound to make an order allowing the defendant such costs as aforesaid: (Falconer v. Mackenzie, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 630. Ex.)

COMPOSITION-DEED—EQUALITY.—A composition-deed under section 102 of the B. A. 1861, expressed to be made "between the several persons whose names and seals are subscribed, &c., in the schedule, being respectively, either individually or in co-partnership with others, creditors of the debtor, on behalf of themselves and all and every other the creditors of the said debtor of the first part, and the said debtor of the second part," by which deed, after reciting that the debtor was indebted "to the said several persons parties thereto of the first part in the sum set opposite their names in the said schedule, and also to certain other persons in divers sums of money," the said debtor covenanted "with his said creditors" to pay a composition to "all and every the creditors of the said debtor, whether they executed the said deed or not," at the expiration of one calendar month after complete registration thereof; and in consideration of such payment they "the said several persons parties thereto of the first part, for themselves and their respective partners," thereby released the said debtor from all actions, debts, claims, and demands, &c., was held good on the ground that the true intent of the parties was that the whole body of creditors should be included, whether assenting or non-assenting: (Isaacs v. Green, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 633. Ex.)

EXECUTION AN ACT OF BANKRUPTCY.—A judgment creditor who has seized and sold his debtor's property under an execution, may afterwards set up the execution as an act of bankruptcy in support of a petition for adjudication: (Re T. H. Smith, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 643. Bank.)

B. A. 1861, s. 153.— This section applies only to cases of adjudication of bankruptcy, and not to deeds of arrangement between debtors and their creditors; but it does apply to deeds in the form of Schedule D. under the Act, when duly registered. According to the Lord Chancellor, the section applies only to cases in which a bankrupt admits his breach of contract, but requires the amount of damages to be proved: (Re Thompson v. Fryer, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 650. Chan.)

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES.—The Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction to assess damages for breach of contract by bankrupt, before executing a deed of composition. There is no appeal, from a finding of the Court of Bankruptcy on the subject of unliquidated damages

EQUITY PROCEDURE —The vacation judge has jurisdiction over every court immediately upon the rising for the vacation of the judge of that court: (Re The Bank of Hindoostan, China, and Japan, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 790. V. C. M.)

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

Lot 1—Comprises Part of the Lands of Rath Lower, which is situate about 12 miles north-east from the town of Dundalk, and is nearly equally distant from the town of Newry. It is within 1¼ miles of Carlingford, a seaport and market town. The Lands are of good quality, and set at very moderate rents to respectable tenants.

Lot 2—Comprises Part of the Townland of Ballagan, situated about two miles east of Rath Lower (Lot 1). This is a very good Farm, and the occupying tenants are very respectable and solvent.

Lot 3—Comprises Part of the Lands of Fanghart Upper, together with Part of the Lands of Plaister, upon which stands the Mansion-house and Offices known as "Thistle," which is handsomely situated, with neat Garden and Pleasure Grounds. The Lands comprising this Lot are of good quality, well fenced and watered, and divided into nicely shaped fields This Lot adjoins the demesne of Mountpleasant (portion of Lot 4) on the north side, and is occupied by respectable and solvent tenants.

Lot 4—The Mansion-house and Offices of Mountpleasant (forming part of this lot), are delightfully situated with picturesque lands and wooded boundaries, handsome pleasure grounds, ornamented with the choicest flowers, plants, and trees. The kitchen gardens, &c., which comprises about 14 acres statute measure, contain an excellent selection of fruit trees and flowers (home and exotic), with vineries and forcing houses, all of modern construction, and got up regardless of expense. The demesne is neatly walled in, and rivulets of clear spring water flow through it in different parts. The water to the mansion-house and gardens is supplied by conduits acting from hydraulic pressure.

The mansion-house is situated about two miles north of the town of Dundalk, to the east of the public road leading to Newry, from which it is approached by an avenue about half a mile in length. The principal avenue leading from the Ballymascanlan road is of equal length, and forms a most beautiful carriage drive. The Mountpleasant Station of the Dublin and Belfast Junction Railway is about a mile distant from the house, and the Mountpleasant and Ballymascanlan Post-offices about three-quarters of a mile respectively.

The Spinning and Scutching Mills (which are very valuable) are situated on this lot, in connexion with which is a gas factory, having connexions for lighting the mansion-house and offices of Mountpleasant. There are also valuable stone and lime quarries and kilns on this lot.

The demesne lands are of good quality, rich and fertile, and the farm-yard and buildings attached thereto are very extensive and permanent. The town of Dundalk is a rising seaport, having steam communication with Liverpool three or four times weekly, and railway communication with Dublin, Belfast, and all the north-west of Ireland, several times daily. Large markets are held in that town on every Monday in each week.

The lands are of good quality, and the tenants are respectable and punctual in the payments of their rents.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 34.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

On the 22nd of last March we had to announce the retirement of the Right Hon. Francis Blackburne from the high office of Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and express our regret for the causes that compelled him to that step. It is now our sad duty to chronicle the death of that good man, great lawyer, and true patriot. Courtesy, and respect for the departed, in all cases would induce us to say, de mortuis nil nisi bonum; but the influence of no such conventional maxim is required to make us acknowledge the worth of him who has departed from among us. A history of his public life would occupy a volume. He lived and worked during what was, perhaps, the most critical period of Ireland's history—the years immediately following the Union; and notwithstaning the temptations which those stirring and troubled times must have held out to a man of his ability, to his credit be it written, he never became a mere partisan lawyer. From the beginning to the end of his career, the law was his sole mistress; he never wooed the uncertain wind of political intrigue, or parliamentary influence, to waft him to any appointment; nor did he make the votes of a constituency the stepping stone to the Bench. In consequence, he was entrusted by the successive Governments of Lord Melbourne and of Sir Robert Peel, with the post of Attorney-General; and in 1856, when the high office of Lord Justice of Appeal was created, Mr. Blackburne was appointed to it by Lord Palmerston, solely for the reason that he was admittedly the most competent man to discharge its duties, and in spite of the fact that he had never supported Lord Palmerston's Government. Again, in 1830, when Mr. Blackburne was directed by the Wellesley Government to inquire into the cause and progress of the riots in the North of Ireland, so great was the confidence reposed in him that his appointment was considered by the Liberal party as a proof of the honest intentions of the Government towards them.

Mr. Blackburne was born at Footstown, in the county of Meath, in 1782—that year so famous in the annals of Ireland for the inauguration of our independent legislature. In 1798 he entered Trinity College, Dublin, and obtained, in 1802, First Scholarship in Classics. He graduated the next year as gold medallist. During his College course, Mr. Blackburne was a distinguished member of the old Historical Society, in which he gained medals for oratory and history. In 1805 he was called, and chose the Home Circuit. His success was not so great at first as to give any expectation of his ultimate eminence; and that res angusta domi which withheld from him the advantage of studying under a special pleader or conveyancer, may have been the reason why he did not take silk until 1822, seventeen years after his entrance into the profession; but from this period his advancement was as rapid as his deserts were great. He was appointed third sergeant-at-law in 1826, and second sergeant on the resignation of Mr. Lefroy, in 1830. In the same year he also became Attorney-General of the Whigs, when the office was, in truth, no sinecure, for then commenced the agitation for Repeal. In the next year commenced the Tithe Agitation, and it became Mr. Blackburne's duty to prosecute, at Kilkenny, some unfortunate men charged with the murder of certain police and a process-server, at Carrickshock. Though true bills were found against thirteen persons, only one, Kennedy by name, was tried at that Assizes, and when he was acquitted on the first indictment after a long contest between Blackburne and O'Connell, the Attorney-General stated, in reference to the second indictment, that as the defendant had been acquitted on the charge of murder, he would never put a person in jeopardy twice for the same transaction. At this time there happened an event in Mr. Blackburne's career which, if the report given of it be true, is very illustrative of his character, and would go far to explain his popularity with the Government and with his colleagues. On the death of Mr. Justice Jebb a vacancy on the Bench occurred, which, according to the usual practice, Mr. Blackburne should have filled, yet, although the vacant seat had been offered to him, it is said that, at the subsequent request of Lords Wellesley and Melbourne, and for the convenience of the Government, he yielded up his rights as Attorney-General, and allowed Mr. Crampton, the Solicitor-General to be appointed in his stead. Sir Robert Peel succeeded Lord Melbourne in power, and retained the Attorney-General in his office, a most unusual occurrence, referred to above. It was in 1842, on the death of Sir Michael O'Loghlen, that Mr. Blackburne, at last bade adieu to the struggles and victories of the Bar and took his seat on the Bench as Master of the Rolls, and, in 1846, he was appointed Lord Chief Justice of Ireland; in 1852 he held the Great Seal of Ireland, and in 1856 he was appointed by Lord Palmerston to the newly created office of Lord Justice of Appeal. On the accession of the present Government to power he again accepted the Great Seal and held it until March last, when ill-health compelled him to resign.

Such is a short sketch of the public life of one who worked for sixty-two years, and in that period filled more offices than any other lawyer on record. Nor while he discharged his legal and judicial functions did he neglect those appertaining to his position as a statesman, since he was associated with the present Lord Derby (then Mr. Stanley), in preparing the Tithe Rent Charge and the Church Temporalities Acts. His advice was frequently asked by the Government during the troublous times through which we have lately passed, and as often acted upon. He never was an advocate for stern measures, his voice being always heard on the side of moderation and mercy. It should not be unrecorded that he was Vice-Chancellor of the University of Dublin up to the time of his death. While at the Bar the chief characteristic of his style was brevity; in cross-examination he was very skilful, never using that overpowering loudness of tone and violence of language, which sometimes succeed in breaking down a dishonest witness. Mr. Blackburne rather used his dexterity in leading on a witness, by cautiously and calmly putting questions calculated to commit him, and bringing him from point to point to the statement at which he wished to arrive. As Law Officer for the Crown he did his duty conscientiously, but never erred on the side of severity. On the bench he was all that could be desired as an Equity and Common Law Judge; his decisions were clear and logical, and his judgments calm, dignified, and excelling in the quality of discrimination. In truth, he was a representative of a class of lawyers who were famous, and of whom but one remains—and he is of even older standing than the late Lord Chancellor, we mean Ex-Chief Justice Lefroy.

The Right Hon. Francis Blackburne died in Rathfarnham Castle, near Dublin, surrounded by a circle of lamenting friends attracted by the high accomplishments and kindliness of feeling which he ever displayed in private life; regretted by the occupants of the Bench who long looked upon him as its brightest light, and by the members of the Bar for the solicitude he continually showed for their interests and well-being, not less than by the other branch of the profession by whom he deserves to be remembered as the chief agent in instituting the examinations for Attornies' Apprentices.

ALL suits in Equity, after the first day of next Michaelmas Term, must be commenced by Bill. An original Bill is said to be in the nature of a declaration at Common Law. It is in form a petition to the Lord Chancellor. It must be signed by counsel, and should be drawn, or perused, by him before signed. A note should be appended stating the address of the plaintiff's solicitor, or of the plaintiff himself, where he sues in person. It must be intituled between the parties, plaintiff and defendant, and repeat at the end the names of the defendants as defendants to the Bill. If the defendants, or any of them, are merely formal parties, the words, "to be bound upon service of a copy of the Bill," should be added; and if out of the jurisdiction, there should be a statement to that effect.

The Bill need not be verified; but in certain cases, e.g., in suits to perpetuate testimony, interpleader suits, &c., it must be accompanied by an affidavit, to be filed with it.

If the suit is instituted on behalf of the Crown, or of those who partake of its prerogative, or whose rights are under its particular protection—as the objects of a public charity—the matter of complaint is offered to the Court by way of Information by the Attorney-General. But an Information differs very little from a Bill, except in the style, and the practice applicable to both may be considered as identical.

A mode of procedure, by way of Special Case, is introduced by the new Act, in certain cases coming within the provisions of the 111th section, where persons interested in any question cognizable in the Court of Chancery as to the construction of any Act of Parliament, will, deed, or other instrument in writing, or any clause, matter, or thing, therein contained, or as to the title to any real or personal estate, contracted to be sold, or otherwise dealt with, or as to the parties to, or the form of, any deed or instrument for carrying any such contract into effect, or as to any other matter falling within the original jurisdiction of the Court as a Court of Equity, or made subject to the jurisdiction or authority of the Court, by any Statute (not being one of the Statutes relating to bankrupts), and including amongst such persons all lunatics, married women, and infants, shall concur in stating such question in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court. In cases of this description the parties interested can conveniently submit a case, and speedily obtain a judicial decision upon any point of law arising from admitted facts. This form of application was introduced in England by the 13th and 14th Vic., c. 35, ss. 1-18. The 11th and 27th sections of the Chancery Regulation Act, 1850, created a somewhat similar jurisdiction, and authorized the presenting of a petition in two cases, in neither of which a Bill could be sustained, the one for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the Court upon a special case, or state of facts, and the other for the purpose of obtaining partial relief.—(Vide 21 G.O., May, 1857.)

The manner in which lunatics, married women, and infants, are to concur in stating a special case is regulated by sections 112, 113, 114, 115, and 116.

The special case is to be entitled as a Cause between some, or one, of the parties interested as plaintiffs or plaintiff, and the others, or other, of them as defendants.

Again, by section 145, and following sections, down to section 154, a cheap and expeditious mode of administering the estate of deceased persons is established. In these cases proceedings are commenced by summons, which may be at once obtained at the Chambers of the Master of the Rolls, or Vice-Chancellor, without any formal proceeding or application to the Court itself, and an order in the form set out in Schedule B to the Act, may be made by the Court, or a Judge, on the hearing of such summons, to administer the estate.

Besides these different methods of originating applications to the Court, there are several forms of proceedings under Acts of Parliament passed for special purposes of relief, as for the appointment of new trustees under the Railway Acts, the Renewable Leasehold Act, and many others.—(Vide Reilly on Summary Petition.)

We have, then, the following different methods of originating applications to the Court of Chancery :—

1st.—By Bill, in suits on behalf of a subject.

2nd.—By Information, in suits on behalf of the Crown, or of those who partake of its prerogatives, or whose rights are under its particular protection.

3rd.—By Special Case, under the Act where parties interested concur in stating a case for the opinion of the Court.

4th.—By Summons, in administration cases.

5th.—By Petitions, under particular Acts of Parliament.

ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.

ADDRESS ON JURISPRUDENCE AND AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

By the RIGHT HON. MR. JUSTICE O'HAGAN.

Not without reason has the association which I have the honour to address placed the science of jurisprudence foremost amongst the great subjects of social interest. Whether we regard the foundations on which it is established, the faculties which it exercises, the knowledge it exacts, or the influence it wields in the affairs of life and the intercourse of nations, we shall not wonder that it was described by one of the wisest of men as "the pride of the human intellect, which, with all its defects, redundancies, and errors, is the collected reason of ages, combining the principles of original justice with the infinite variety of human concerns." Having dwelt at some length on this subject, his lordship said:—We cannot expect that jurisprudence should command more than a comparatively moderate attention, save from those whose special avocations, legal or political, put them in close connexion with it, at this time of hot and bustling progress, when it is so hard to keep up with the march of discovery and the perennial growth of a multitudinous literature. We shall not again see, what Fortescue describes, the thronging of 2,000 filii nobiles—the children of the gentle-folks of England—to the Inns of Court and Chancery, to be indoctrinated in a knowledge of the laws, as a part of their common education; but we may suggest to the student who would be more than a mere workman at the Bar, and rise to the proper level of his order, that he will find in cultivation, a knowledge of the general principles which underlie all legislation, and of the great system which still, more than all others, protects the interests and regulates the action of civilized men throughout the world, a needful aid towards the true appreciation of the law he designs to practice, and may be called to administer. Great English judges have pointed to the connexion of the law of England with the Roman Jurisprudence. Lord Holt (12 Mod. 482) speaks of it in a solemn judgement; and we are informed by Bishop Burnet that "Lord Hale often said the true grounds and reasons of law were so well determined in the (Roman) digest, that a man could never understand law as a science so well as by seeking it there; and, therefore, lamented much that it was so little studied in England." That, although it was worsted in the contest with the common law, left its mark deeply on English thought and the English judicature. Lord Bacon says, somewhere, "Our laws are as mixed as our language;" and, undoubtedly, during the Roman occupation of Britain, for nearly five hundred years, the native views of justice and its administration were interfused much with those of the invaders. And, when the composite system came afterwards to be shaped and expanded, the early masters of it—Fleta and Glanville, and eminently Bracton, the great legal classic of England—were versed in the Roman system, and drew from it many a doctrine and many a form of thought and speech. The early judges got much of their wisdom there, and their decisions, so inspired, became part of the common law. The old inimical systems ran thus into each other, and became indistinguishable in the stream of legal tradition and judicial resolution, as it moved downward, with ever-gathering volume, from century to century. Still more clearly and directly the Roman code operated on the action of the courts of equity and admiralty, the ecclesiastical courts, and the courts-martial, and in all of these knowledge of it could not be dispensed with by a practitioner who valued the accomplishments becoming his position. Therefore, because of its connexion with the laws of his own land, the study of the Jurisprudence of Rome, which is, with modifications, the jurisprudence of mankind, should be full of interest to the English and the Irish student. It was so to Lord Mansfield. He admired the civil law, as "a venerable monument of ancient wisdom;" and his wide acquaintance with it and with the modes of thought and action it had made common in other countries, freeing him from superstitious reverence for the rigidity of the system he so well administered, supplied impulse and direction for the salutary legal revolution which rendered memorable his long and luminous career. But, more than this, and beyond our need of the knowledge to be derived from it, as to the sources and doctrines of our ancient laws, the study of the Roman code—although it is not free from some shortcomings and imperfections in definition, arrangement, and erroneous principle—is commended to us as that of the most perfect scheme of jurisprudence which the mind of man has ever devised. It was the creation of Imperial power; and our political rights and liberties have another origin and other guarantees; but, regarding it as a system of civil law, the greatest thinkers of the modern world have exhausted all forms of eulogy in describing its excellence. St. Augustine says that "Providence made use of the Roman people to subdue the universe and govern it the better by their laws after their empire had been destroyed." Fortescue speaks of the civil law as exalted by fame throughout the earth, above all other laws—"Super humanas cunctas leges alias fama per orbem extollit gloriosa. Bacon describes it as "a fitting and most sacred temple dedicated to justice—"Proprium et sanctissimum templum justitiæ consecratum." The Chancellor D'Aguesseau adopts the idea of the great Bishop of Hippo, declaring that "the grand destinies of Rome are not yet accomplished; she reigns throughout the world by her reason, after having ceased to reign by her authority"—Non ratione imperii sed imperio rationis—and Gibbon calls it "the fair and everlasting monument" of the Emperor whose name it bears. His lordship then said—The time is coming fast when the body of our law must be digested and reduced to the proportions of a simple and manageable code. The work which was done for Rome when Tribonian and his fellows digested such a code from the chaotic mass of judgments and ordinances, which is said to have burthened many camels—the work which Bacon was willing to undertake for England, in the midst of his mighty labours—for which Romilly pleaded with persuasive eloquence—of which all thoughtful men have long appreciated the importance, whilst they have felt the difficulty—that work, I repeat, by some means, and in some fashion, must at last be done. Its beginnings are in progress and its completion is assured. What has been accomplished so well in New York for the English law, cannot be incapable of imitation and extension in the country which produced it. We have already consolidated our criminal legislation, and the success of the experiment must urge to further effort in the same direction. And if this be so, and if an imminent duty of the time may prove to be, the digest or the codification of our statute and reports, it behoves those on whom that duty may be cast to look behind them and around them, and see what has been accomplished in other times and countries, that they may be guided to avoid mistakes, and obtain encouragement and wise direction for the worthy completion of their appointed task. They will find that what remains to be achieved for us has been effected for most other countries. They will find in Bavaria the oldest of the recent codes; in Prussia, the Landrecht, which Savigny holds in the highest estimation; in Austria, the Gesetzbuch, originated by the genius of Maria Theresa; in Russia, the Zakonow, the corpus juris of that great empire, containing, we are told, a digest of the most extended body of laws existing in the world, framed by continuing commissions under successive sovereigns; and, in France, the Code Napoleon, not very complete and too hastily prepared, but the purest, perhaps the only unstained, glory of the wonderful man, whose boast was that he would go down to posterity with that code in his hand. They will see that all these various systems have derived their animating principles of equity and order largely from the Roman precedents; and that, even as to the last, though it rose from the chaos of the Revolution, it owed to the training and traditions of the French Bar, in the great days of the parliaments, when the study of the civil law was essential, not only to the advocate but to all candidates for high public office, the shape and substance which it ultimately took through the learned toil of Cambaceres and Tronchet, and Napoleon's keen intuition and energetic will. If the business of the digest or the code is to be fitly done for us, the ancient jurisprudence and its emanations throughout modern Europe must not be unknown to those who undertake it. They will need practical acquaintance with the system they undertake to improve; but they must also understand the science of law, and be trained to apply it, by familiarity with its great creations. But, further still, the knowledge of these things may be, in the coming time, of value and significance in other ways. We live in a period of transition. Many old things are vanishing away. We have seen political changes which cannot be barren of great results for evil or for good. Of these results we have no sure pre-vision; no man can pretend to have it. But we may look confidently forward, sustained and heartened by the teachings of the past, in which we have so often seen gloomy anticipations falsified, and unreal terrors turned to hope and joy.

> "The future hides in it
> Good hap and sorrow•
> Still we go thorow:
> Nought that abides in it
> Daunting us, Onward!"

The question as to the assimilation of the laws of England and Ireland is, I observe, with great propriety, submitted to our attention. I cordially approve the application of the principle, whenever it can be made, in fair consistency with local needs and feelings We should not assimilate merely for the purpose of assimilation; but it is very desirable that we should interchange good laws, and make our entire system of judicature as uniform and homogeneous as may be reasonably possible. With a view to this desirable result, I mean to point to some noteworthy portions of our legal system, which belong to us peculiarly, and in which, to some extent, we have outrun the legislation of England. The formation of a general register of deeds and assurances has, for several centuries, occupied the attention of English statesmen and lawyers. Its great necessity was recognized by Parliament so long ago as the year 1535 (27th H. VIII, c. 6), and again during the Chancellorship of Lord Bacon, in 1617, by the issue of letters-patent; but nothing came of the attempts, abortively made, at both those periods. In 1703 a register was provided, by statute, for the county of York; and, in 1708, a similar statute gave its register to the county of Middlesex. No further provision of the kind was made for England. The seventeenth century passed. The want continued to be acknowledged. Lord Hale, and others of high authority, recognised and lamented it; but nothing was done. In 1815 and 1816, Sir Samuel Romilly and Sergeant Onslow tried, severally, to induce the House of Commons to approve of bills for a general registration; and both failed to carry their measures beyond a second reading. Repeated commissions have since given solemn consideration to the subject, and produced elaborate reports. Repeated attempts were made, in the Houses of Lords and Commons, by Lord Campbell, Lord Cranworth, Mr. William Broughham and others, to pass into law various schemes which had high approval. But they were one and all defeated; and to this hour England remains without any general register of conveyances. Now, it is very remarkable that Ireland has possessed such a register since the sixth year of Queen Anne. It was established by an Act of the Irish Parliament, passed in that year, "to secure purchasers and prevent forgeries and fraudulent gifts, &c.," which provided for that object by authorizing the registry of deeds, and giving a subsequent conveyance, if registered, priority over a prior conveyance, if unregistered. The act directed the formation of a full official staff, and prescribed minutely the formalities needful to be observed for validating the registry. From the date of this statute until the present time it has been in full and effective operation, modified by various intermediate acts, but unchanged in its essential character; and, upon the whole, working well and satisfactorily for the security of purchasers and the prevention of frauds. Some amendments in the system are required, and would have been accomplished three years ago, but for difficulties with the Treasury. They have been considered in an elaborate report by Mr. Lane, Q.C., and an able paper by Colonel Roberts, and they can be easily carried into effect. A bill for the purpose was prepared under my direction when I was Attorney-General, and was carried to a second reading, but no further. I trust the changes it designed may be soon effected. They are of great and pressing necessity in Ireland. I am not here, however, concerned with the details of the scheme, or its prospective changes. I desire only to point to our registry office as an Irish institution, which has supplied to us for a century and a half, a social want keenly felt for three hundred years in England, and still existing there; and to invite to it and its machinery the consideration of those who have intelligent interest in the matter, and may profit in the work of assimilation, by our long experience. We are not yet in a condition to judge how far the registration and record of title system which were introduced in the House of Commons, for England, by

Lord Cairns in 1859, and for Ireland, by myself, in July, 1864, in bills which have since substantially become law, may hereafter affect the operation and necessity of a registration of assurances. The Irish measure applies only to cases in which the Landed Estates' Court has given a parliamentary title, and does not extend to ordinary transactions of purchase and incumbrance. By and bye, I trust that its operation may be enlarged, so as to assist, still better, in making the transfer of land simple, cheap, and easy. I agree with Mr. Mill in holding this to be "one of the greatest economical improvements which could be bestowed on a country"—and especially, I will add, on a country like Ireland, which so eminently needs the creation of a small independent proprietary—an industrious middle class—with a settled interest in the soil, attaching them to the maintenance of our laws and institutions. I am glad to be able to say that, although the Irish Act has been scarcely twelve months in real working order, and in spite of the peculiar difficulties, professional and other, which at first obstruct endeavours to simplify and cheapen legal procedure, no less than two hundred and twelve properties have already been completely registered under it, the value which, determined by the amount of the purchase-money, is £657,074. This seems, in a high degree, satisfactory and encouraging; and the importance of the fact will justify the small digression which has enabled me to mention it, in connexion with the registration of assurances. If, in the course of time, it be found possible to substitute for registration a universal and complete record of title, so much the better; but the question of that substitution is very difficult, and must be long postponed. I do not stay to discuss it; and, in the meantime, our system has its value for use in Ireland, and for example elsewhere. Another legal institution in which the Parliament of Ireland anticipated English progress, and which has still some special qualities, perhaps inviting imitation, is that of our county courts. The proceeding by English—afterwards civil—bill for the recovery of small debts existed in Ireland from an early period. It was originally entertained by the Judges of Assize, and was regulated by various statutes, from the reign of George I. downwards. In the year 1796 the Irish Parliament by an Act (36 Geo. III.;) after reciting, that "it would contribute much to the ease of the poor, whose causes principally were tried by civil bills, and who were frequently brought far from their homes and unavoidably kept for many days at the assizes, as parties or witnesses on such civil bills, and sometimes at an expense exceeding the sum in contest, if there should be more frequent opportunities of hearing and determining causes by civil bill, within the several counties of this kingdom," created the office of assistant-barrister, providing that he should be a lawyer of a certain standing, appointed to aid and advise the justice at quarter sessions, and, at the same time, to hold a civil court, of which he was constituted the sole judge, with a specified jurisdiction in cases of tort and contract. The Sessions Court, so arranged, worked well and became popular. The assistant barrister soon assumed the leading position in the despatch of Crown business, which his training and knowledge qualified him to hold; and he is now made by statute the permanent chairman of the justices. His jurisdiction as civil judge has been greatly extended, and a large proportion of the legal controversies of the country come before his tribunal. Thus, in the Irish Civil Bill Court, the English county courts found a model, existing for full half a century before they were established, and operating with an efficiency which they have fully emulated. The old local jurisdictions of England had become effete and generally useless for public purposes; and the county courts took their place in the year 1846. It is remarkable that in the civil bill procedure of Ireland we find the germ of that fusion of law and equity, towards the consummation of which we are daily advancing. The Civil Bill Court is a court of equity for the defendant; and was so long before the statute permitted the pleading of equitable pleas in the superior law courts, or armed them with the powers of injunction, mandamus, and compulsory accounting, which enables the suitor, sometimes with great advantage, to dispense with the intervention of a proceeding in Chancery. We are destined, I have no doubt, to witness more and more that consolidation of jurisdictions with which our Scottish brethren are familiar; and which the experience of the American tribunals seems to assure us may be safely adventured here for the more speedy and economical decision of causes, and the removal from us of the reproach that in the same country, with the same subject matter, separate courts are required to deal on different, and sometimes conflicting, principles. I would add the expression of my opinion, that the equitable jurisdiction which belongs to the judge of the English court should be given, within proper limits, to the Irish Chairman of Quarter Sessions. It will be well and wisely used, and in many cases it will prevent the defeat of justice, which the impossibility of a poor man's access to the Court of Chancery sometimes makes inevitable. The supreme law of social safety is the warrant, as it should be the bounding measure, of the infliction of punishment by man on man. That infliction is not designed to compensate for individual wrong, or satisfy individual vengeance. The "lex talionis" of the Hebrews is obsolete; and we hold in horror the "vendetta" of the South. We punish crime, only that we may prevent the repetition of it, and work the amendment of the criminal. Vindictive justice does not belong to human law. It cannot penetrate the depths of the soul, and gauge the worth of human actions by reaching their hidden springs in the tangled motives and the various trainings which make men what they are. It must be guided, in its conflict with fraud and violence, by a regard for the results to the community which requires protection, and to the offender who needs reform. Another Irish institution I cannot pass without a word in this hurried reference to those which peculiarly belong to us. The calamity which swept myriads of our people from the earth in 1847 and 1848, while it filled the country with mourning and desolation, was made by that Providence which draws the "soul of goodness" from evil things, fruitful of vast results. It precipitated the progress of events, compelled statesmanship to action through the teaching of a terrible necessity, and aided in securing commercial freedom of the empire and the world. In that great achievement Ireland aided, although to herself its immediate consequences—affecting rudely a diseased society and a demoralized land system—were in no way beneficial. She strove for true principles and the cause of universal progress, and not for profit to herself

"Vos non vobis mellificatis, apes!"

That was one great collateral result of the dread Irish famine. Another was the establishment of the Incumbered Estates' Court, which wrought essential public good at the expense of much individual loss and suffering; removed an insolvent proprietary, with which true national progress was incompatible; and prepared the way for a sounder state of things. That temporary tribunal has grown into permanence, with extended powers, and continues to confer upon us many benefits—cheapening conveyances, facilitating the disposal of estates, and making titles clear and indefeasible; and so, in connexion with the recording scheme of which I have already spoken, preparing for a gradual distribution of landed property more largely amongst the occupants of the soil, which will yet conduce, with other influences, to give settled order, industrial energy, and a hopeful future to the Irish people. Something has been done in the same direction in England. Lord Cairns endeavoured, in 1859, to establish for her, also, a Landed Estates' Court, but his bill was not passed, and subsequent legislation has not reached the point at which he aimed. It seems desirable that the success of the Irish experiment should secure its effective repetition. England, also, needs the disencumbring of embarrassed properties, the clearing of complicated titles, the relief of the land from the feudal fetters and the ponderous conveyancing which impede its free transfer. And she, as well as Ireland, will find safety and profit in a change, which, healthily diffusing small estates amongst multitudes of honest purchasers, may, more or less, antagonize the growing tendency to excessive territorial accumulation in few hands, and close the widening chasm which separates unbounded wealth from toil and poverty, with possible results of serious interest to the thoughtful student of the history of the fall of empires. I have left myself no space to speak of one of the most remarkable of our special institutions—the Irish Convict system. Nor is this needful. It has gained the applause of Europe, and finds continually larger and more cordial acceptance in England. Its great principles of individualised discipline during imprisonment, progressive reformation through the varying stages of it, and protective supervision at its close, are working everywhere the best results. And I am glad to find that the Irish refuge for fallen women finds itself reproduced in the great English towns. I shall say no more of assimilation in this respect, especially as the subject will be more fit considered in another section; but, feeling strongly the importance of the subject, I would repeat the statement of an opinion which I uttered before at our Dublin meeting—that the entire of our prison arrangements should be conducted on the same principle and controlled by the same authority. The reasons for amalgamating the county and the convict systems are patent in the increased economy, efficiency, and completeness which the amalgamation would certainly afford; and we are encouraged to attempt it promptly by the wonderful diminution of offences, which is a fortunate characteristic of our social state. Our gaols are comparatively empty. We may easily bring them under one central government, and so approach a solution of a much vexed problem. The circumstances of Ireland were especially favourable for the great experiment of the convict system. They are no less favourable for testing the possibility and discovering the means of establishing a general uniformity in prison discipline. His Lordship, in referring to the Brehon code, said—To the study of that ancient system which, for so many ages held sway in Ireland, some of us, children of the soil, will be attracted, as by "ancestral voices" from the buried past. And for all the learned of Europe who have interest in the history of jurisprudence and the archæology of law, it must be the subject of intelligent curiosity and careful investigation. I can say no more of it here; but, having said so much, I should be untrue to my own feelings and convictions if I did not seize the occasion to add the expression of my great regret that an end has been put to the study of the Irish language in those hospitable halls which are opening to receive us. You will find in them the amplest appliances for scientific and literary teaching; but, amongst their accomplished professors, there is not one to give instruction in the ancient tongue, which is still sounding with melodious sweetness and expressive power amongst the glens and mountains of the fair county in which we are assembled. There is not one to help in training future O'Currys and O'Donovans; so that the remnants of our old literature, scattered in mouldering manuscripts through the libraries of Europe—from Copenhagen to the Vatican—may be saved from destruction, as these Brehon laws have been, and made available for the honour of Ireland, and the benefit of the world. When the Queen's Colleges were established, each of them had a small endowment for a professorship of Irish. In two of them that endowment has been diverted to other purposes, and the professorships are abolished. As to the third the same course is contemplated. The time was strangely chosen for such a questionable act when Englishmen, like Matthew Arnold and Professor Morley, are labouring with generous enthusiasm, to assert the dignity and celebrate the achievements of the Celtic race; when Germany produces an unmatched Irish Grammar, and continental scholars, recognising the wisdom of Leibnitz, who urged the cultivation of the Irish language—Linguæ Hibernicæ—for the general purposes of European literature, found in the pursuit of Celtic studies, the necessary and efficient means of advancing ethnological and philological inquiry. Irishmen have been too justly reproached as "incuriosi suorum;" but that reproach would not have found confirmation in a change so needless, so injurious, so little in harmony with the spirit of a self-respecting people, and the tendency of cultivated thought throughout the world. I trust that the publication of the Brehon Laws, and the attention it must attract to Celtic literature and jurisprudence, may contribute to make plain, and undo quickly, the mischief of this retrogressive step. One necessary word before I close. I have stated my approval of the principle of assimilation, when applied on certain conditions and within certain limits; and I have sought to show that Ireland has some special institutions which should be held in view for the purpose of its application to other portions of the United Kingdom. But by assimilation I do not mean absorption. I do not regard identity of laws as involving unity of administration. I confess my intolerance of schemes which have been advocated, even by Irishmen, for imperializing our Irish tribunals; attracting our Bar to English courts; disposing of great Irish causes there; leaving to us narrow jurisdictions and a debased profession; and making the capital of England the legal metropolis of Ireland also. If results like these were to follow assimilation of the legal systems of the two countries, I should lament it as a grave calamity. Ireland, and Scotland too, have suffered enough from the action of excessive centralization. They both endure many of the inevitable evils of a provincial state. They both have plain interest in resisting the further progress of those evils; and they can best resist it by maintaining such local institutions as may counteract the tendency of the elements of national life to withdraw themselves from the extremities of the empire and gather at the centre of power and wealth, where success is worth the trouble of achievement, and merit is sure to seek distinction and reward. We may labour, in all proper cases, to assimilate the laws of the three kingdoms, giving for that purpose from every district what light and help we can reciprocally furnish; but we should maintain for all the integrity of their independent judicatures, in the assurance that they will not less enjoy the benefits of a common code, if it do not aim to subordinate any one to any other of them, or unduly exalt a part, at the expense of exhaustion and depression to the rest. On this matter I can speak freely, as I speak without personal interest. In my position, men bid farewell, not always joyously, to hope and fortune, and my warning counsel has no taint of self-seeking or any indirectness when I say, that for Ireland, at least, it is essential to maintain a high judiciary and an educated Bar, if she would preserve anything of the informed opinion, the productive energy, and the public spirit, without which a people stagnates and sinks into contempt.

ENGLAND.

LIMITED LIABILITY.

One of the most useful of the measures of practical legislation due to Lord Derby's Government is the new Limited Liability Act, which came into operation at the beginning of September. By rather a curious coincidence the Bill was read a second time in the House of Peers on the evening of the day on which the law-lords pronounced the celebrated judgment in the matter of Overend, Gurney and Co., Limited. The coincidence was curious, because while their judgment had undoubtedly the effect of further depressing both the holders of shares and shares themselves, the passing of the new Act must have precisely an opposite tendency. The Government has established a claim to the gratitude of the commercial and monetary worlds, by the energy and firmness with which it carried through Parliament at the close of an eventful Session this measure of financial relief. Shares in Limited Companies—on the supposition, of course, that these have a sound basis and are properly administered—need no longer remain unsaleable, because their holders are liable for a large amount of unpaid capital. The Act permits, on terms just to creditors, the reduction of the nominal capital of a company, an operation which could formerly be effected only by a costly and troublesome process of liquidation and reconstruction. A company may have been—many have been—started in perfect good faith with too large a nominal capital, and it may be in flourishing circumstances, while owing to the liability for unpaid calls its shares are virtually unsaleable. One of the witnesses examined before the Select Committee of the House of Commons last Session cited the case of a prosperous bank which had been in successful operation for four or five years, but the shares of which are almost entirely unmarketable; because while they had been fixed at £100, the directors found that a call of £20 or £30 per share yielded sufficient capital for the requirements of the business. The liability for the balance, however, frightens away purchasers, and in the case of a bank, the voluntary liquidation, allowed by the old law with a view to reconstruction and the reduction of the capital, would obviously be fatal to the credit of the concern. All that justice requires before allowing a reduction of capital is that the rights of creditors should be safeguarded, and this is amply provided for by the Act, the operation of which, before many months have elapsed, will very considerably enhance, no doubt, the value of the shares of all sound Limited Companies and rescue them from their present inanimate condition. Another excellent provision of the Act, framed with the same view of making shares more marketable and more available as securities, allows a company to arrange with a shareholder for the payment in full of the nominal amount of his shares. When this is done, the Act authorizes the company to issue to the holder share-warrants, transferable to bearer, which will be easily negotiable or available as a security. If the Act had done nothing more than strengthen and relieve share property by these permissive provisions, it would deserve to be hailed as a boon by the commercial and investing community.

A great deal more, however, is done, or permitted to be done, by the measure which is modestly entitled, "An Act to Amend the Companies' Act, 1862." Omitting minor provisions, useful but less interesting, we come at once to the chief remaining achievement of the Act—the permission which it bestows on present and future Limited Companies to adopt the French system of partnership en commandite. Strange to say, when the Limited Liability system was imported from France into this country, what was best in the French working of the system was rejected by our legislation. Though Lord Romilly, in his examination before the Select Committee of the House of Commons, pleaded a scarcely excusable ignorance of the fact, yet the French had Limited Companies very much like our own at present in all but one essential respect, namely, the mode in which they were allowed to be originated. In France a Government inquiry had to be made into the objects, status, and constitution of each projected company; and a Government authorization was required before it could be legally formed and commence operations. In obedience to the then fashionable philosophy of Free Trade at any price, we, however, rushed into the other extreme; and at last, by that famous sample of "Liberal" legislation, the Companies' Act of 1862, Parliamentary sanction was given to a state of things under which seven "roughs," sitting over their beer at a public-house could, by assuming a liability for a farthing each, and going through some easy formalities, constitute themselves a corporation in perpetuity with power to hold lands and prey upon the public to an extent only limited by its credulity! While discarding all the safeguards prescribed by the French law in the formation of ordinary Limited Companies, our legislators at the same time, with curious infelicity, neglected to sanction much the most desirable and promising application of the Limited principle—that which had been made so successfully under the French system of partnerships en commandite. In the working of this system the ordinary shareholders, who supply the bulk of the capital, are liable only for the amount of their shares; but the managers or managing directors (gérants) are responsible to their last farthing, and have, therefore, every motive to administer the affairs of the concern with prudence and care:—here, in fact, is combined what is best in the unlimited and in the limited principles. A few years ago a partial application of the commandite principle was sanctioned by an Act which does not seem to be very much known, and which permitted capitalists to lend money to a person in business and to share the profits, while they were liable only for the amount lent. But it was reserved for the Act of last Session to introduce into this country the commandite-system in its integrity. With the present week any Limited Company, to be formed or already formed, is authorized so to constitute or reconstitute itself that the liability of its directors, or managers, or managing director shall be unlimited; the liability of the ordinary shareholders remaining limited as before. It is needless to point out what new confidence in Limited Companies will accrue, and what new strength will be given, with the adoption of the commandite principle, in all cases where the directors or managers are men of weight or reputation. Much, of course, depends on the extent to which the principle is adopted; but as want of confidence is the malady from which the Limited system is at present suffering, it is reasonable to suppose that an extensive application of the remedy sanctioned by the Act of last Session will be attempted; and, probably, a beneficent revolution may thus be effected in the whole of that section of Joint Stock enterprise which is based on the Limited Liability of ordinary shareholders.—The Imperial Review.

RECORDERS.

Why should the offenders of a county be judged by their own landlords, while a small town county pays some £40 to a barrister to come down and make a gaol delivery? It may happen that the Chairman of County Sessions is a good lawyer, while the Recorder of some borough has been appointed by favouritism, and knows nothing. But the chairman is more likely to be a worthy squire, a zealous agriculturist, an admirable silent member, and a perfect gentleman. He forms his opinion of cases from their merits. We have heard of one who summed up a case as follows:—"Gentlemen of the jury, the prosecutor states that the prisoner stole his watch; the prisoner says that she was living with the prosecutor, and that he gave it to her. It is for you to decide which of these accounts is the true one. If you think the prisoner is not guilty, you will acquit her; if you believe the prosecutor's story, you will convict her; but I can only say, I don't believe a word of it." Of course the jury came to the same conclusion. Under the circumstances, this was probably justice. It was not law.

We do not pretend that Recorders are infallible, but at all events they have gone through some professional training. If their numbers were diminished, their sphere enlarged, and their salaries increased, they would become more prominent and more open to criticism; their posts would be competed for by better men, and they would furnish a sort of preparatory school for the judicial bench. At present there are a great many Recorders of small boroughs, who sit four days in the year and receive a salary of £40. The first Recorder in the kingdom, both in merit and emolument, is the Recorder of London, with a salary of £3,000 a year, and the reputation of being the best criminal judge in England. Manchester, we believe, pays its Recorder £800, and Liverpool, £525; the other large towns scarcely rise above £300; and one borough returns its Recorder's salary as "£2 2s., paid by the Mayor out of his own pocket." There seems no reason why Recorder should exist in all boroughs, or why they should be confined to boroughs. If no other change is made in the system of sessions, the Chairman of the county sessions might be replaced by a paid lawyer, whatever title was conferred upon him. But as the same judge holds assizes for city and county, why should not the Recorder of a borough sit in two courts, and transact the whole business of the district? Some such arrangement, we believe, exists in Ireland. The chairman of quarter sessions receives a salary, and the sessions have a civil jurisdiction. If such a system was introduced in England many of the present objections would be answered. The county courts have not given satisfaction, and the wish that is ascribed to the Lord Chancellor of transferring more business to them is an aggravation of the old complaint. Yet the business increases so fast that it is not enough to hold three assizes in the year at the most important places, and the London lists are full enough already, without being swelled by contributions from the country. Moreover, the expense of bringing up witnesses to London, or of keeping them in the assize towns from the commission day till the close, is a heavy tax on suitors, and might be avoided. One reason why the county courts are insufficient is, the best men will not debar themselves from the hope of future advancement by settling down on £1,500 a year. But a recorder need not be contented with what he has attained already, and is neither tempted to shirk his duties nor to confine himself to to their execution. His post brings him business, if he had none before, and if he does that business well he becomes known to a still wider circle.—Spectator.

The Lords and Commons — Amended Forms of Procedure.—Several amendments were recently made in the forms of procedure regulating the communications between the two Houses. The Lords always used to send messages by the Masters-in-chancery, their attendants, and on special occasions by their assistants, the judges of the superior courts. The arrival of these messages necessarily caused an interruption to the debate. When the member then speaking had resumed his seat, the sergeant-at-arms went to the table and announced "a message from the Lords." The Speaker had to put the question that the messengers be called in, and then they marched up to the table with three obeisances, and read the messages or delivered the bills. They then returned with the same ceremonial. Now messages and bills are brought down from the Lords by Sir J. Lefevre, the Clerk of the Parliaments, in his wig and gown. When he is seen at the bar, Sir D. Le Marchant, Chief Clerk of the House of Commons, leaves his place at the table, and takes the bills or message. Bills are sent from the Upper to the Lower House in the same way, with the exception of the Appropriation Bill, which is always taken by the Speaker himself. Until within the last two or three years the Lords would receive no bill or message unless it was brought by a deputation of eight members. A standing order of the Lords loftily declares:—"We never send to the Lower House by any members of our own;" and adds, "But the Lower House never send unto us any but of their own body." These cumbrous formalities were swept away, and with them went the ordinary conference for receiving the reasons for disagreeing to the amendments, such reasons being quite as conveniently brought up by the Chief Clerk or the Clerk of the Parliaments.

The Bench and Bar at Hong Kong.—The "scenes" in court between judge and counsel on the Northern Circuit, upon which we commented a few weeks ago, undignified as they were, will yet bear favourable comparison with an incident which is reported by the Hong Kong papers received by the last mail. Mr. Pollard, Q.C., a barrister who has practised in China for the last twenty years, was conducting a civil action in the Supreme Court at Hong Kong, before the Hon. J. Smale, Chief Justice of he colony, and some reference being made to a Chinaman in the service of the plaintiffs in the case, the Chief Justice said that as the man was a servant of the plaintiffs they should have produced him, to which Mr. Pollard, the plaintiffs' counsel, replied, "You cannot produce him like a piece of paper; let him be subpœned in the usual way." The judge rejoined that if the witness were not produced, he would "take that into account" in his direction to the jury, upon which Mr. Pollard exclaimed, "I will put only those witnesses in the box which I, as counsel for the plaintiffs, may see fit. I may make a mistake, but I will not be dictated to or talked down by any one as to what I am to do." The Chief Justice, after declaring that the language which Mr. Pollard was in the habit of using was most disrespectful to the court, left the bench, but shortly afterwards returned and asked Mr. Pollard if he apologized. After a good deal of altercation between the judge and the barrister, the case was adjourned "indefinitely," his Lordship declaring that he must have an apology from Mr. Pollard before the trial could go on. The litigants, however, preferred submitting their differences to arbitration to waiting for the restoration of a good understanding between judge and counsel. Two days afterwards (on June 29) another "scene" took place, and the Chief Justice announced that he would give his decision on the matter on July 2, when he pronounced Mr. Pollard guilty of grave contempt of court, fined him 200 dollars, and suspended him from practice for a fortnight, or until the fine was paid. His Lordship read his judgment, which was of considerable length, from a MS., occasionally, however, interrupting the thread of his argument to remark upon the deportment of the offending counsel. Once Mr. Pollard smiled, on which the Chief Justice remarked, "This is very amusing, Mr. Pollard, but it is law." Shortly afterwards he suddenly exclaimed, "I am astonished at your staring, Mr. Pollard." "It was a stare of astonishment, my Lord," remarked the learned counsel. "Stare on, Mr. Pollard," said the Chief Justice; "this is a subject for staring." At another passage in his address his Lordship paused, and looking at the contumacious barrister, said, emphatically, "Mr. Pollard, your eyes are opened very wide." "And with cause, my Lord," replied Mr. Pollard. His Lordship pronounced Mr. Pollard to have been guilty of six contempts, which consisted briefly of one "pointed and curt answer," with an "apparent" purpose of raising a laugh against the Chief Justice; two "tones and manners," with "inferences;" one "imputation, the converse of what had occurred;" one avowal of a desire not to be "aggressive;" and one "tone" "inferring" that Mr. Pollard had more respect for the bench—i.e., for the wooden chair—than he had for its occupant. At the conclusion of the Chief Justice's address Mr. Pollard endeavoured to speak, but his Lordship declined to hear him, and advised him to appeal to the Privy Council, or to bring the matter before the Benchers of the Inn of Court of which he was a member. Popular sympathy in the colony appears to be strongly in favour of the offending barrister, and the fine imposed upon him has been raised by subscription in small sums and presented to him with an address.—Pall-Mall Gazette.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

Commission to examine Witnesses—Variance between Judge's Order and Commission.—A judge's order, directing the issuing of a commission for the examination of witnesses abroad, under 1 Will. 4, c. 22, contained a clause that the depositions should be signed by the witness or witnesses. There was no such clause in the commission, which nevertheless complied with the requirements of sect. 4 of the statute as to the time, place, and manner of the examination. The depositions were not signed by the witnesses, but were nevertheless admitted in evidence upon the trial. Their admission was held to be proper, the order of the judge as to the signature of the witnesses being directory only, and the non observance thereof not calculated to work injustice to the defendant: (Hodges v. Cobb, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 792. Q. B.)

Probate Practice.—Where a foreign grant was made to the widow of the testator as "executrix according to the tenor," but who, according to the English law of wills, had no claim to the character, the Court, in the exercise of the power vested in it by the 73rd section of the Probate Act, followed the grant, but made it to the applicant, not as executrix according to the tenor, but as the person who had been clothed with the duty and power of executrix by the court of the domicile of the deceased: (In the Goods of G. Earl, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 799. Prob.)

False Imprisonment and Malicious Prosecution.—In an action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, the counsel for the defendant, when summing up, is justified in discussing the question of probable damages, because, if the trial result in a verdict for the plaintiff, the question becomes one of damages merely: (Tulley v. Corrie, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 796. Cockburn, C. J.)

Pleading.—Where a plea is in accordance with the construction put upon a statute by the presiding judge, and leave is given to move the court in banco, it is not necessary to amend the plea by inserting the exact words of the statute. (Ibid.)

Marriage-Settlement.—A marriage-settlement contained a covenant to settle any property which should come to or devolve upon the intended wife, or her husband in her right, "at any time or times after the solemnization of the said intended marriage and during the continuance thereof." At the date of the settlement the intended wife was entitled to a reversionary interest in personalty, subject to the life-interest of her mother. The wife died before the tenant for life, leaving the husband surviving: Held (following Graffley v. Humpage, 1 Beav. 46, and 3 Jur. 322, on appeal), that the wife's reversionary interest was bound by the covenant: (Rose v. Cornish, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 786. V. C. W.)

ALTERATION IN ARTICLES — VARIATION BETWEEN PROSPECTUS AND MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATION.—SHAREHOLDERS—ACQUIESCENCE BY DELAY.—After the memorandum of association of a company was executed by the seven original subscribers it was taken to the office of the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies for registration. Some words in the memorandum, the effect of which was to make the objects for which the company was established very extensive, were objected to by the registrar, who refused to register the memorandum unless those words were struck out. The solicitor's clerk who brought the memorandum for registration thereupon struck out with a pen the words in question, and the memorandum so altered was then and there registered, and the registrar gave a certificate of the registration: Held, that the way in which this alteration was made, and the receiving for registration the memorandum so altered, was in the very highest degree censurable, and that, so far as the original parties to the document were concerned, the alteration so made entirely neutralized and annihilated the original execution of the document. But, inasmuch as the 18th section of the Companies Act, 1862, makes the registrar's certificate of the incorporation of a company conclusive evidence that all the requisitions of the Act in respect of registration have been complied with, a person who applied for and obtained shares in the company after its incorporation could not escape from liability as a contributory upon the ground that the company was not duly constituted. A person who applies for shares in a company formed under the Act of 1862 ought, if a memorandum and articles of association are in existence, to look at them before he applies for shares, and if those documents are not in existence at the time of his application, he ought, at the very latest, when he receives his allotment of shares, to satisfy himself that there is nothing in the memorandum or articles to which he desires to object. If he does not do this he will be held bound by the contents of the memorandum and articles, even although he were in fact ignorant of those contents. Therefore, where the prospectus of a company stated that copies of the memorandum and articles of association could be seen at the office of the solicitors of the company, P., who applied for shares on the 27th June, 1865 (the day on which the company was registered), received an allotment on the 18th July, 1865, received a dividend on his shares in Feb., 1866, and took out a summons to have his name removed from the register of shareholders of the company in Jan., 1867, upon the ground of a material variation between the memorandum of association and the prospectus, on the faith of which he applied for his shares, was held to be too late in his application, although he swore that he was, until Dec., 1866 (more than six months after an order had been made to wind-up the company) ignorant of the variation of which he complained: (Re Barned's Banking Company, Peel's case, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 780. Cairns, L. J.)

MISMANAGEMENT BY DIRECTORS.—Directors alleged to have mismanaged the affairs of the company were on a voluntary winding-up appointed official liquidators. The Court refused to entertain the question of their mismanagement in dealing with the winding-up matters, the proper course being for the shareholders to file a bill against them: (Re The London Bank of Scotland, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 783. M. R.)

PRACTICE—OLD AND NEW COMPANY—LIST OF CONTRIBUTORIES.—A company, conducted on the cost-book principle, was registered as a limited company under the Act of 1856. In 1864 an order was made to wind-up the company, and liquidators were appointed. A creditor of the old and new company then took out a summons for an order directing the liquidators to settle the lists of the old and new contributories, and to make a call on the old ones for payment of his debt. The old contributories were not before the court at the hearing of the summons: Held, that the liquidators could only be ordered to settle the list of contributories as asked; the creditors indemnifying the liquidators against costs, and leave being reserved to the old contributories to show cause against the call: (Bleckly's case, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 784. M. R.)

CONTRIBUTORY — APPLICATION FOR SHARES — ALLOTMENT.—G. applied for and paid a deposit on shares in the B. company. Five months afterwards he wrote to the manager of the company requesting to be informed whether any shares had been allotted to him, and was answered that his case would be inquired into. He heard nothing further till two months later, when the company was wound-up, and his name placed on the list of contributories. It appeared that shortly after the date of his application shares had been allotted to him, and his name entered in the register: Held, that, inasmuch as he had received no notice of the allotment, he was entitled to have his name struck out of the list of contributories: (Ex parte Gunn, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 784. V. C. S.)

COMPANY LAW AND THE B. A. 1861.—A contributory to a company had executed a deed of arrangement under the 192nd section of the B. A. 1861, and it contained a covenant on his part to pay his debts within two years. The majority of the creditors assented to this arrangement, and the instrument was held to be not a mere letter of licence, but a valid deed within the meaning of the Act: (Re The Richmond Hill Hotel Company, King's case, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 785. V. C. W.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.—A trader being indebted to the defendant, gave his acceptance to the defendant for the amount of the debt. Three days before it fell due, in consideration of defendant's advancing him money to take it up, he entered into an agreement to execute a mortgage of his goods, chattels, and stock-in-trade as a security for the advance, and for any future advances that might be made. The acceptance, which had been deposited by the defendant with his bankers for collection, was paid by him with the money mentioned in the agreement as having been advanced. A further advance was made, and a bill of sale was subsequently executed by the trader, conveying all his property to the defendant in pursuance of the prior agreement to secure the two advances. The trader was afterwards adjudicated bankrupt, upon the petition of the plaintiff, the creditors' assignee. The date of the agreement was more than twelve months, but the date of the bill of sale was less than twelve months, before the adjudication: Held, in an action for conversion of the goods included in the bill of sale by the defendant, that the bill of sale must be referred back to, and treated as though executed at the date of the agreement, and the agreement not being fraudulent, and being more than twelve months before the adjudication, the bill of sale was not void, as being fraudulent, or an act of bankruptcy, and the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to recover: (Mercer v. Peterson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 792. Ex.)

DEVISE—MORTMAIN.—B. devised his real estate in trust for his widow for life, and after her death to sell same, and out of the proceeds to appropriate the sum of £6,000, of which £3,000 was to be given to certain legatees. C. purchased the reversionary interest in those legacies, and by her will bequeathed her personal estate to charitable purposes. At her death she was also entitled to £250 for rent or royalties for working a mine. The widow of B. was still living. The bequest of the £3,000 was held to be in fact a devise of an interest in land, and void under the Statute of Mortmain, and the £250 was held to be pure personalty: (Brook v. Badley, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 762. M. R.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION.—A will directed that in default of appointment, &c., certain legacies should go "to the next personal representatives of such of the legatees so dying aforesaid." The nearest of kin were held to be entitled upon such default happening, and not the executors and administrators: Stockdale v. Nicholson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 767. V. C. M.)

MORTGAGE BY HUSBAND OF WIFE'S INTEREST IN REDEEMED LAND-TAX.—A testator, in the lifetime of his wife, by deed-poll, according to the form prescribed by the Land Tax Acts, and duly registered, professed to assign a sum of yearly land-tax, which had been created by a redemption of that tax for a considerable sum on estates in Somersetshire, as a mortgage for £3,100, reserving the equity of redemption to himself. The mortgage was subsequently paid off, and duly transferred, to secure another advance of £3,000. Out of the land-tax the trustees paid the interest on the first mortgage, and part of the interest on the second. The property had been originally devised and bequeathed to the wife for her separate use, and she now claimed, in respect of her right to such separate estate, the amount of the said mortgage, and a proportionate sum of the second, as having been improperly paid by the trustees of the husband out of the personal estate: Held, that the first mortgage was a simple mortgage, and did not affect the wife's interest in the land-tax redemption-money: Held also, that the land-tax was the property of the wife subject to the payment of the mortgage-debt: (Pigott v. Pigott, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 766. V. C. W.)

EQUITY PRACTICE—BILL NOT BONA FIDE.—The plaintiff having lost money by speculations in the shares of a company, consulted with his solicitor and other persons as to filing a bill to impeach, on the ground of fraud, certain alleged transactions of the company and its managing director, he being not at that time a holder of any shares, he bought five only three days before his bill was filed, long before which it was prepared, and he bought them for the purpose of enabling himself to file a bill. The bill was then filed seeking to set aside the transaction. Before they had put in a sufficient answer the defendants moved to take the bill off the file, on the ground, first, of the plaintiff's conduct; secondly, that his interest in the subject-matter was too small to sustain a bill; and thirdly, that by subsequent resolutions of the company it was being wound-up, and the subject-matter at an end: Held, that until a sufficient answer was put in, it could not be assumed that the charges of fraud were groundless, and that the plaintiff's conduct was not such as to deprive him of all right in the suit: secondly, as his bill was filed on behalf of himself and all other shareholders, the objection on account of the amount of his interest could not be sustained; and thirdly, that as the winding-up proceedings were subsequent to the institution of the suit, and were, so far as they were then contemplated, impeached by the bill, the motion must be refused with costs: (Seaton v. Grant, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 758. Ch.)

EQUITY PRACTICE—EVIDENCE.—Before notice of motion for decree or replication filed, a witness was subpœned by the plaintiff to attend before the examiner. On the day appointed for the examination, the defendant, by counsel, attended, and before the witness had been sworn, objected to the course pursued as irregular in the then stage of the cause, and at his request the witness refused to be examined. The plaintiff subsequently filed replication, and then having obtained an order at the Rolls, set down the objection of the witness to be heard as a demurrer, and in that form the question came before the court to be argued: Held, that the objection taken on the part of the defendant was good: Held, also, that the plaintiff was not entitled to treat the refusal of the witness to be examined as a demurrer, but that his proper course was to have applied at chambers or in court for an order that the examination should be proceeded with: (Rendle v. The Metropolitan and Provincial Bank, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 764. V. C. S.)

DIVORCE PRACTICE—WIFE'S STATEMENT.—Semble, that the statement of a wife as to the last time she had connexion with her husband is inadmissible as evidence against her in a suit by the husband for the dissolution of marriage on the ground of her adultery; such statement falling within the rule which excludes the evidence of husband and wife as to non-access: (Inglis v. Inglis, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 775. Div. & M.)

PRACTICE—FORM OF LEAVE RESERVED.—Notwithstanding that the form of leave reserved by the judge at the trial is to enter a nonsuit, the court above will, if it deems that course to be best fitted to doing justice between the parties, direct the verdict to be entered for the defendant on one issue, leaving the plaintiff in the undisturbed possession of the verdict found for him on another and substantial issue in the action: (Winterbottom v. Earl of Derby, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 771. Ex.)

HIGHWAY—EVIDENCE OF USER.—Evidence was given of acts of user extending over a period of seventy years, but it also appeared that during that time, and for seventy years previously, the farm over which the way in question passed had been under lease. The judge was held rightly to have directed the jury that they might, if they pleased, presume that the way had been dedicated to the public by the defendant's ancestor before the commencement of the first lease in 1725: (Winterbottom v. The Earl of Derby, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 771. Ex.)

BAD JUDGES.

The qualifications of a good Judge are so high that we cannot be surprised at their rarity, and when we remember the way in which many Judges are selected, we can hardly complain that there are such flagrant examples of unfitness. As we observed last week, the Borough Recorders are sometimes jobbed into their places, and even when fairly chosen they are not appointed by those who can test their capacity. In the Superior Courts a seat on the Bench is the reward of political service. The Bar has had too good an opportunity of judging the wisdom of rapid promotions from advocacy in opposition to the cushen of a Chief Justice. But though such extreme instances are rare, the general course of advancement has been faulty, and if instead of fifteen Judges we are to have twenty, it is to be feared that an increase in the number of appointments will cause the multiplication of jobberies. When people talk of the higher standard of judicial capacity which prevailed in their youth, they forget that while the work was not so multifarious the Judges were fewer. The Government had not so many places to give away, and of course the claims of the real chiefs of the profession could not be disregarded. Add a junior judge to each Court, and you have posts which are not so conspicuous, but which are extremely serviceable. A man must have done something for the party to be made a Chief Justice. Two or three contested elections are enough for a puisne. Yet, while the chances are in favour of the first being a man of eminence, and great lawyers are often keen politicians, the man who merely stands for places is apt to be a mediocrity. One can point to judges of this kind, unfortunately, and it is not right that judges should be made to be pointed at. There is no reason why a man should not be a good lawyer because he has strong opinions on Reform. But we have no right to assume that he is a good lawyer because he has such opinions, and, of the two, his legal qualifications are more important than his political ones. The assumption to which we object is quite different, and does not follow logically from that we have been considering. Even if a man's politics enable you to judge of his law, and the strength of his mind as it is displayed on some points is a promise of general capacity, there is nothing to show that one who is willing to spend money for his party, is either a political thinker or a fit subject for professional advancement. We know something about a man who has borne the burden and heat of the day. One who comes in at the eleventh hour with a cheque-book in his pocket, or after beginning to work has been put out into the market-place, as only fit to stand there and idle, does not deserve the penny.—Spectator.

ANECDOTES OF IMPRISONED DEBTORS.—The French journals are giving anecdotes of the now closed debtors' prison at Clichy. We translate the following:—"If you entered into a conversation with some of the old guardians of this house of detention, you would hear them speak with respect, amongst other noble prisoners of all lands, of the great foreign lord who spent two louis every day for his dinner, which was brought to him from the Cafe de Paris. He remained a prisoner four months, although he was in a position to pay his debts and obtain his liberty; but it was his fancy to stay where he was. Another inmate (this was an Englishman) had sworn, though immensely rich, that he would never pay his creditor. The creditor, on his part, declared that he would keep him in Clichy as long as he could; and he kept him there eight years. The carriage of the English millionaire might be seen every day in the Bois de Boulogne and the Champs Elysees, as if the proprietor were taking his accustomed airing therein. He gave positive orders with regard to this singular proceeding. At his death a special clause was found in his will peremptorily forbidding his heirs to pay the creditor who had made him a prisoner for eight years. The case was different with M. V——, a geometrician and mechanician, who ruined himself in endeavouring to discover perpetual motion. This debtor thought only of the means of gaining his liberty, and practised the following ruse to accomplish his purpose:— Being aware that his detaining creditor, who had retired into the country, took in only one journal, which he always read from beginning to end, the debtor caused to be inserted in it a formal notice of his death in the debtors' prison, whereupon the creditor neglected to pay the necessary periodical contribution to his maintenance in 'durance vile,' and in half an hour afterwards the debtor was a free man."

We at this side of the water are likely to rival you in our law appointments. There are good grounds for believing that vacancies will occur in the Court of Exchequer by the resignation of Barons Martin and Channell. The former, an Irishman, discharged the most onerous duties on the Home circuit during the recent assizes. I may mention, that in one town, Croydon, besides criminal business, Mr. Baron Martin and Mr. Justice Blackburn tried and disposed of 189 causes, 59 of which have special juries. At the close of the assizes the learned Baron suffered from extreme exhaustion, and gave manifest indications of overwork. Mr. Baron Martin is a native of the north of Ireland, he has served his full judicial period, and has long been regarded as one of the best judges for nisi prius cases. A genial kindheartedness, a quick practical common sense, a natural love for fair play, a thorough contempt of trick, and a perfect acquaintance with human nature, which certain authorities consider as unwritten common law. These qualities have been and are this learned judge's characteristics, combined with a ready power of analysis, and a manly desire under all circumstances to do what was right as well as what the law permitted and required, invested Mr. Baron Martin with as high a personal reputation as any judge can ever hope to obtain. Irishmen have reason to be proud of the success of their fellow-countrymen, and it is well they be informed of an opinion universally entertained. In the event of these vacancies, Mr. Brett, Q.C., M.P., will be certain to succeed to a judicial seat, for which he is eminently fitted. Rumour assigns the other vacancy to Mr. Mellish, Q.C., generally regarded as one of our most profound black letter lawyers.—London Correspondent of Irish Times.

WHAT IS A LEGAL MONTH?

The Irish Government have issued the following circular, addressed to Magistrates and Petty Sessions Clerks:—
"Dublin Castle, 9th September, 1867.

"GENTLEMEN—I am directed by the Lord Lieutenant to inform you that a question as to the meaning of the word 'month,' in the committal of a prisoner, having been submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown, with reference to the Act 13 Vic., cap. 21, which declared that in acts passed after the commencement of that act, the word 'month' should be taken to mean calendar month, unless words were added showing lunar months to be intended; and also with reference to the 44th sec. of the 14th and 15th Vic., cap. 93, the law officers have given the following opinion:—"The word month means lunar month, unless interpreted to mean calendar month by a statute, or by the context of the document in which the word month is used. We do not think that the statutes referred to interpret the word month, when used in a committal, to mean anything else than a lunar month.' I am, therefore, to request that, in order to prevent any future mistake or doubt, you will cause the word 'calendar' to be inserted in every sentence and committal comprising a month or months, and that you will give directions to your clerk accordingly.—I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,
"THOMAS A. LARCOM."

The Lord Lieutenant has been pleased to approve of the appointment of Sir John Arnott to be a Deputy-Lieutenant for the county of Cork, in the room of David Leopold Lewis, Esq., deceased.

It is understood that the Reform League and the Working Men's Society are determined to make a desperate effort to get some of their friends into Parliament for the metropolitan boroughs at the next general election. There seems to be no doubt that the advanced Reformers in Lambeth will support Mr. Beales; and Mr. George Potter is said to be making some way among the working classes of Marylebone, with a view to the representation of that borough. Mr. Baxter Langley will go to Greenwich; Mr. Bradlaugh, it is said, to the Tower Hamlets. Mr. Perfitt, who unsuccessfully contested Finsbury some time ago, is said to be willing to stand again. Colonel Dickson is spoken of for Westminster.—Pall-Mall Gazette.

Personating a Juryman.—At the Central Criminal Court, London, Mr. Avory, the Clerk of Arraigns, called the attention of the Recorder (Mr. Russell Gurney) to a matter of great importance. A juror, named Frederick Lee, of 37, Brownlow-street, Drury lane, had been summoned to serve in the present sessions, and his (Mr. Avory's) attention was called to doubt whether a person who represented himself as Frederick Lee was really that person. Accordingly he went to the jury-box and inquired whether any one of the name of Frederick Lee was there, and in reply a gentleman in the back seat said that was his name. Subsequently he made inquiries, and the result had been that he had again taxed that gentleman with not being Frederick Lee, and he had avowed that that was so. He (Mr. Avory) might add that Lee on being summoned said he would send his foreman. The representative juryman was in court and confessed that his name was William Cuss. The Recorder fined him £5, and the real Lee £100, adding that it would be considered whether further steps should not be taken to indict them for conspiracy.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 35.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.}

A DISTINGUISHED and learned judge, in speaking at the President's dinner, in connexion with the Belfast meeting of the Social Science Congress, gave utterance to a sentiment which most sensible people will admit to have held. He said, "I thought it was more or less a matter of talk—more or less a matter of exhibition—more or less an arena or a platform on which people came to perform, without real results to society." He found reason to change his opinion ; and we must confess to having undergone a similar conversion. There were many eloquent and profound papers read before the various sections by men with world-wide reputation for learning in their particular subjects; while in the Jurisprudence Department, in which we are especially interested, there were two Addresses delivered, which for eloquence, profound thought, and long experience in the subjects discussed, might vie with any read in the other departments, and would, of themselves, be sufficient to exonerate the Association from the unfavourable opinion held of it by those unacquainted with its merits. We refer to the address delivered by the Right Hon. Mr. Justice O'Hagan, on "Jurisprudence and the Amendment of the Law," and that on "Repression of Crime," spoken by the Master of the Rolls. And here we may congratulate the profession on the interest they displayed, and the very active part they took in the discussions of the Association, a course which we ventured to recommend in a former article as likely to be of service to the cause of judicial reform. There were interesting papers read in the section under Judge O'Hagan's presidency, which will be found at length in another part of the paper, but it would take more space than is available to give even a slight sketch of the principles enunciated in each; we shall, therefore, at the present, confine ourselves to a few remarks on the subjects of the more important matters discussed. The opening address, on "Jurisprudence and the Amendment of the Laws" was worthy of its learned author's reputation, and he defined Jurisprudence not unreasonably as "the pride of the human intellect, which, with all its defects, redundancies, and errors, is the collected reason of ages, combining the principles of original justice with the infinite variety of human concerns." He next pointed out how strong is the connexion of the law of England with the Roman Jurisprudence, and recommended the study of the latter to all who wished to acquire a thorough knowledge of the former, quoting the celebrated saying of the Chancellor D'Aguessean "the grand destinies of Rome are not yet accomplished; she reigns throughout the world by her reason, after having ceased to reign by her authority"—non ratione imperii sed imperio rationis. Closely connected with the study of the Roman law is the question of making a digest of our own law, and reducing it to a manageable code, since it is from the principles of equity laid down by Tribonian and his colleagues that the modern systems have been adapted. There are some notable instances of success in the work of codification, such as the Code Napoleon, and those in use in British India and New York, and the various countries of the European Continent, chiefly imitated from the Roman Code, mutatis mutandis.

Now that the all-engrossing subject of Reform is practically disposed of, we hope that this will be taken up, and the work, which all the great lawyers of the country from Bacon down to Brougham, have declared necessary, will be performed. A committee, numbering among its members Lords Cranworth, Westbury, and Cairns, and many of the lesser lights of the law, has been appointed, to inquire into the expediency of a Digest of Law, and the best means of accomplishing that object, and in their first report, made last May, they stated that, in their opinion, "a digest correctly framed, and revised from time to time, would go far to remedy the evils we have pointed out. It would bring the mass of the law within a moderate compass, and it would give order and method to the constituent parts. This Digest would be a condensed summary of the law as it exists, arranged in systematic order, under appropriate titles and subdivisions, and divided into distinct articles or propositions, which would be supported by references to the sources of law whence they are severally derived, and might be illustrated by citations of the principal instances in which the rules had been discussed or applied." But we fear that parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus, is as true now as when Horace wrote it.

The learned Judge next directed his attention to the assimilation of the laws of England and Ireland, a principle which undoubtedly ought to be carried out, but it does not appear, on consideration, as might at first be imagined, that all the benefits would accrue to Ireland, as there are some points on which England would gain. We are particularly fortunate in our system of Registry of Deeds, while England remains without any general register of conveyances. The principle of the English County Courts has been adopted from our Civil Bill Courts, and the method and practice of our convict system have gained its acceptance in England and on the Continent of Europe.

The President, in concluding his address, cautions his hearers to observe the distinction between assimilation and absorbtion, and we quote his words, which are important as coming from such an authority. "I do not regard identity of laws as involving unity of administration; I confess my intolerance of schemes which have been advocated even by Irishmen, for imperializing our Irish Tribunals; attracting our Bar to English Courts; disposing of great Irish causes there; leaving to us narrow jurisdictions and a debased profession; and making the capital of England the legal metropolis of Ireland also."

We shall reserve our remarks on the Right Hon. J. E. Walshe's address on Repression of Crime, and the papers on the Jury System, till next week.

AMONGST the more thoughtful papers which were read and discussed in the Sections of the Social Science Congress, there was none, perhaps, of greater importance than that of Mr. James Heron on the Law of Bankruptcy in Ireland. This subject may not have for the general community an interest equal to some others, such as those of Education or of Health; and yet the principles and rules which regulate the transactions between debtor and creditor must more or less concern every one, and will certainly exercise no immaterial influence, for good or evil, upon the advancing prosperity of the country. For many of the readers of this journal, however, it is unnecessary to do more, in order to engage their attention, than to refer them to the valuable and suggestive paper in which the topic is fully treated.

Into the discussion of the suggestions which the paper contains we do not purpose just now to enter. We content ourselves with briefly repeating some of the remarks to which its reading gave rise. One member, who agreed with it in most points, doubted the propriety of introducing arrangement Deeds into Ireland as being likely to encourage fraud, but thought the suggestion to introduce the Scotch system of allowing creditors to realize and administer the debtor's estate themselves, was simply the principle of common sense. Another member agreed that the right course with regard to fraudulent debtors was to punish them criminally. Others remarked on the necessity for local administration, for amending the machinery by which the law is wrought, for dealing with chattels and real property in the same way, and for assimilating the commercial code of England and Ireland. It was also stated that the Belfast Chamber of Commerce had petitioned for the extension to Ireland of the proposed English Bankruptcy Bill, but had always been told that the Bill must be passed for England first; it was hoped, however, that steps would be taken to have a Bankruptcy Law for Ireland introduced next year. Lastly, the Report of the Council in reference to the business of the week, alluded to the paper as one in which the writer expressed opinions in accordance with the views so often enunciated in the Association, and affirmed that it was a matter of the deepest interest to the mercantile community that the estates of insolvent debtors should be administered by a committee of creditors, and not by the Court.

Although not intending, as we have said, to comment at present on the legislative changes recommended, we cannot close without emphasizing the judgment unanimously arrived at by the members of the Section, that in this respect at least the law of England and Ireland should be one and the same. Surely the principles of commercial morality, the obligations incurred in money dealings, the rights and duties of creditors and debtors, should not be differently regarded at different sides of St. George's Channel. Are not the interests of the trading and non-trading public here as much concerned in a good enactment on this subject as those of their English customers or dealers, and should not identity of interest dictate identity of laws? Is it just to inflict penalties differing in degree and kind for the commission of the same offence; and if six years ago it was advisable virtually to abolish, in England, imprisonment for debt, can it be statesmanlike or politic to continue the process in Ireland? We, therefore, quite concur in the suggestion that Government should not allow another year to pass without correcting this anomaly; and—as our contemporary, the Saturday Review, considers that, in the general desire of political parties to avoid the discussion next session of party politics, the subject of Bankruptcy law would be a "very nice one" to occupy our law-makers—we sincerely trust that the case of Ireland may not be forgotten, but that the obsolete principles and antiquated procedure of our mercantile law may be modified, and made uniform with that of the rest of the United Kingdom.

GENERALLY speaking, all persons who are interested in the subject-matter of the litigation should be parties to the bill either as plaintiffs or defendants; but the strict rule has been considerably modified by the 66th section of the Act, and no objection can be taken for want of parties in any case to which the rules set forth in that section extend. It may, however, be still necessary or convenient for a plaintiff, in some cases, to make defendants to a bill persons from whom no account or other direct relief is sought. In such cases, as before stated, the bill merely prays that they may, upon being served with a copy of the bill, be bound by the proceedings in the cause.

In England the plaintiff determines the particular branch of the Court to which the suit is to be attached, and the bill is marked accordingly; but the Lord Chancellor has the power of transferring the causes as he may think fit.

When a defendant (not being an infant or a person of weak or unsound mind) who is duly served either within or without the jurisdiction, fails to appear within the time limited for appearance, the plaintiff may, as of course, when the service is within the jurisdiction, and he takes that step within three weeks after the time for appearance has expired, and in other cases with leave of the Court obtained on special application, enter an appearance for the defendant. The object of the entry of an appearance for the defendant by the plaintiff is to limit the time within which a demurrer may be filed to the bill, which runs from the entry of the appearance, and to provide for taking the bill pro confesso against the defendant.

Within twelve days after the appearance entered by or for him, the defendant may demur to the bill. There are various grounds upon which a demurrer may be filed. When founded on substantial grounds a demurrer frequently determines the suit with great advantage to the parties, both as to expedition and expense. When founded on a technical objection it is seldom attended with any result but additional costs and delay, for, if allowed on a technical objection, it is allowed with liberty to amend. The subject having been brought under the consideration of the commissioners, they recommended that demurrers should be allowed, but only for the substantial grounds of want of equity or multifariousness.

If the bill states a case for relief, but the defendant has a short simple defence, he may raise the defence by means of a plea—e.g., the Statute of Limitations, or a release, &c. Demurrers and pleas must be signed by counsel. A plea, unless it is founded upon matters of record, is verified by the defendant. In reference to a plea two questions arise—viz., (1) whether it is a sufficient answer in law? and (2) whether it is true in fact? The first question is disposed of by setting the plea down for argument before the Court; when the Court decides whether, assuming the truth of the plea, it is or not an answer to the case made by the bill. In the former case it is allowed, in the latter overruled. Technically the allowance of a plea only determines its sufficiency in law, and leaves the question of its truth to be litigated by the parties going into evidence upon the short point raised by the plea. In most cases, however, upon a plea being allowed, the bill is out of Court, for the plea having been put in on oath, or being capable of proof by record, it is almost invariably true. If, therefore, the plea is, in law, an answer to the plaintiff's case, it is generally useless for the plaintiff to continue the litigation. When a plea is overruled, the order overruling it commonly directs the plea to stand as an answer to the bill, with liberty for the plaintiff to call for a fuller answer as to any matter which may not be sufficiently met by the plea.—(See Mr. Barber's Statement, tit. plea.)

If the defendant neither demurs nor pleads to the whole bill, or does so unsuccessfully, the suit proceeds in the usual course, and the defendant puts in an answer. By the 63rd section the defendant is not called on or required to put in any answer to a bill, unless interrogatories are filed, and a copy of them delivered to him, or his solicitor, within a limited time. But where the plaintiff does not require the defendant to answer, the latter may put in a voluntary answer, which is sworn and filed like a compulsory answer. An answer, the draft of which must be signed by counsel, does not, at the commencement or in the body of it, appear to be made on oath. It is, however, verified in the same manner as cause petitions under the Chancery Regulation Act (1850). The answer filed may be either printed or written. Any schedules annexed to the answer must be filed with it, whether the answer actually filed is printed or not. Printed copies are made of the answer for the use of the parties to the suit, omitting the schedules. The plaintiff obtains a written copy of the schedules from the office.

Thus, it will be perceived, the defence of the defendant, if he has a valid one, must fall within one of the three following heads:—

1st. The defence by demurrer, by which the defendant says—"admitting, for the sake of argument, that your statements are true, you have no case for relief in equity."

2nd. By plea, stating some fact omitted in the bill affording a defence.

3rd. By answer, meeting in detail—by denial, explanation, or otherwise—the statements contained in the bill.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE MILLER.

Re FLEMING AND HENNESSY.

August, 1867.—Misrepresentation of Bankrupts as to their circumstances.

Where Bankrupts make an untrue representation as to their position and circumstances, and where goods are offered to be returned when a part of them was sold at the time, although no credit was given on the faith of the representations made, and although no particular stipulation was made as to the mode of payment when the goods were sold, the Court, in order to uphold commercial integrity and truth, will suspend the certificate for twelve months.

The bankrupts were traders in Sligo, and after the case having been adjourned, they came before the Court for final examination. Kernan, Q.C., appeared for them. Larkin, Solicitor, was for creditors who opposed the granting of an immediate certificate. The facts fully appear in the important judgment of Judge Miller.

JUDGE MILLER said: I have given my very best consideration to this case, as being one of that painful character in which the bankrupts appear to have carried on their trade for a considerable period, up to the 12th of April last (1867), with unblemished characters as traders, and to have kept, if not the customary, at least reliable books.

The condition of the bankrupts on the 12th of April, 1867, was, they were obliged to apply to Mr. M'Swiney, of M'Swiney, Delany, and Company, for his introduction in order to obtain a further renewal of a bill of small amount which had been previously renewed at one month's date. When that application was made to Mr. M'Swiney, he, as was natural, questioned them as to their position; in reply to which one of the bankrupts read a list of their bills outstanding from a piece of paper he had with him, and stated his stock to be £2,500. Whatever that statement to Mr. M'Swiney as to their stock may have been, it appears to have been made after stock had been taken in the month previous to the 12th of April, but that such stock list is not forthcoming, by reason, as is alleged by the bankrupts, of the circumstance that it had been taken in sheets in a rough form and not correctly totted. If I take the evidence of Mr. M'Swiney, his belief in which was manifested by his having acted on it, I have it clearly established before me that a misrepresentation of the value of his stock, as being on the 12th of April, £2,500, was made to Mr. M'Swiney, and borne out by the schedule of the bankrupts in the arrangement matter, verified by the bankrupts on the 15th of May, after stock had been taken, which commenced on the 11th of May. The whole stock, including the goods obtained in Glasgow, of the value of between £800 and £900, and the Dublin goods, of the value of £100, is represented as being altogether £2,659 5s. 8d., as to which I need scarcely advert to the evidence of the professional accountants, which does not, in my mind, and under the circumstances of this case, afford any sufficient or reliable explanation. The first explanation offered is the broad allegation that Mr. M'Swiney was mistaken, and that the bankrupts in their representation to Mr. M'Swiney included in the £2,500 the value of the business premises. I could not for a moment accept that explanation, when I have established before me the fact that Mr. M'Swiney was himself perfectly aware of the house property, and had himself a charge of £500 upon it; or as against the positive swearing of Mr. M'Swiney, that he questioned the bankrupts on the subject, not as a matter on which he had no personal interest, but upon which he was asked by the bankrupts to act, and pledge his reputation as a commercial man, in order to obtain a renewal of their bills then current. The next explanation offered as to the misrepresentation was that no goods had been supplied in consequence, or upon the faith of it. But even assuming such to have been the case, I would not have it understood that an explanation of that nature would clear away, however it might palliate in degree, so serious an offence as an intentional misrepresentation on the part of a trader, as regarded his position and property, when made in the course of his trade dealings, for whatever special purpose such a misrepresentation may have been made. But the bankrupt himself states that after the interview with Mr. M'Swiney he went to Glasgow, and that he told him he was going. And the bankrupt, under the circumstances, and in the condition I have described, entered the Glasgow market, and in the latter end of April purchased goods of the value of between £800 and £900; and I am unable to understand the value of a portion of the evidence urged on the part of the bankrupt, namely, as to accidental meetings with agents or principals of the Glasgow houses, and pressure of sales on their part, when I find it was not a first or second transaction with Anderson and Co., one of the Glasgow firms, and I must assume that all wholesale dealers are equally anxious, and will resort to all legitimate means in order to effect sales to persons whom they believe to be honest and solvent purchasers. However, when the goods were purchased from Anderson and Co., no cash payments were made, nor was any arrangement made in Glasgow as to the manner in which payment was to be secured, but the bankrupts allege that the security usually given was a bill at five months. And it appears that before any arrangement was made as to the mode of payment for the goods, a reference was required from the bankrupts by Anderson, and although I specifically called for an explanation as to what led to that reference, I am even now left in the dark as to what led to a demand by Anderson for a reference, unless it was in consequence of some statement made in Glasgow by the bankrupts. And upon the 6th of May, and after a reference had been obtained by Anderson and Co, when the most important arrangement, namely, as to the manner of providing for payment remained incomplete, the bankrupt wrote the letter of the 6th of May to Anderson and Co., as follows:—"In reply to yours of Saturday we think it very unbusinesslike to look for a reference after the goods are in our warehouse." There is not reference to any importunity on the part of Anderson and Co., or to any circumstance peculiar to the sale, but simply to the fact that the goods were in their warehouse. The letter then goes on to state "that in order to satisfy your mind we refer you to the house of M'Swiney, Delany, and Co., Dublin." And I am asked by the bankrupts, after that reference given on the 6th of May, to believe that M'Swiney was mistaken as to the representation made by the bankrupts on the 12th of April, upon which I have already observed. I can only say that after the evidence of Mr. M'Swiney, and where the bankrupts themselves, upon the 6th of May, nominating Mr. M'Swiney as their referee, I could not without the clearest evidence, and I have nothing of the kind, listen to any such suggestion as to want of recollection, as regards the contents of a letter so specific in its terms as almost to preclude the possibility of any mistake. It is as follows:—10th May, 1867, M'Swiney to Anderson.—"We beg to state in reply to your letter of yesterday, that we have known Messrs. Fleming and Hennessy for some years, that we have confidence in their integrity, and have no reason to doubt the statement recently submitted to us, namely, that their stock amounted to £2,500, and their liabilities to £1,000, leaving a margin of £1,500 to their credit. The lease of their premises, the interest in which is valued at £500, is deposited in our hands to cover that amount, being the purchase money." It would be difficult to conceive a more specific letter as to the information required, or a more palpable misrepresentation as to the real condition or position of the parties founded upon information given by the bankrupts themselves. But the letter of the 6th of May goes on further to say, "and if you do not find that letter pleasing you can have back the parcel, which is untouched, and which will be forwarded to you on receipt of your reply." Now it appeared upon the evidence of the bankrupts themselves, that a portion of Anderson's goods had been sold, which was a direct falsification of the statement in that letter, or was a violation of their undertaking that the goods should remain untouched until the receipt of the reply of Anderson. But the letter of the 6th of May concludes thus:—"But allow me to say you need not be in the least alarmed about same; if the reference is satisfactory you can draw on us at five months from the 1st of May." I cannot come to any other conclusion than that the letter of the 6th of May, containing, upon their own confession, a misrepresentation of a very essential fact, was written with the express object of obtaining the five months credit, which, upon the evidence of the bankrupts, was usually accorded to solvent traders. If I looked to the letter of the 6th of May alone, and the circumstances connected with it, irrespective of the other very gross features of this case, I cannot, in the language of the certificate, say that, having regard to the conduct of the bankrupts, they are entitled to their certificate, without an utter disregard of the commonest principles which should be observed between mercantile men, and I must suspend the certificate in this case for twelve months.

I must add that in my opinion the trading community are very much indebted to the Glasgow merchants for the course pursued by them in this case, and that if other merchants would pursue the same course, the mercantile atmosphere would very soon in such respects be purified.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.

Address on the Repression of Crime.

By the Right Hon. J. E. Walshe, Master of the Rolls.

The inquiries to which this section of the Association devotes itself assume the existence of a class of criminals to be dealt with. The "repression of crime," in its widest sense, might include a very extensive field, but our peculiar investigations are confined to questions which arise only where crimes are likely to be committed. The means hitherto chiefly applied are primitive laws—relying on the deterrent effect of punishment and the education of criminals with a view to their reformation. This latter object is now regarded as all important; but a century—nay, half a century ago—it was scarcely thought of, except as a field for the exercise of private benevolence, and was generally regarded as wholly outside the province of the State. Among the nations of antiquity, the prevention of crime was rested on two broad devices, incapacitating the criminal from doing mischief, by consigning him to death or banishment, or else, in cases not requiring so severe a remedy, the deterrent effect of punishment. The Romans—the only civilized people of antiquity whose institutions have had any appreciable influence on the formation of the laws of modern nations—had not before them the same problem as we have. The equivalent for the classes which supply our criminals were with them found principally among their slaves or subjects not enjoying the privileges of citizenship, in whom their criminal code scarcely recognized any claim to justice. In the codes of mediæval Europe we cannot, of course, expect to find any philosophic regard to principle; they naturally rested on the same dominant and obvious ideas which, through more modern and civilized ages, long continued to be the basis of the laws of punishment. The deterrent element of punishment applied to a criminal, besides preventing him from repeating his offence by making him feel pain as its consequence, aims at preventing others by making the punishment what is called "exemplary." The interest of the subject now consists much in its bearing on the great question of capital punishment, in reference to which we know its importance. How changed are our views since the middle of the last century! Of the 160 offences which were capital in England, and the 115 which were capital in France eighty years ago, each country now practically retains the penalty of death for murder only, and even in that—the most favourable case for its infliction—its propriety is not unchallenged. One principal cause of the failure of punishment as a deterrent is its uncertainty. It has been roughly estimated that of the crimes committed and the criminals engaged in them more than six-sevenths escape undetected or punished. But the mere failure to detect a crime counteracts the deterrent effect of laws far less than the greater evil which our courts continually exhibit: a crime detected and exposed, yet unpunished. Every such case operates as a direct incentive to criminals, just as witnessing a successful gambler is a powerful temptation to play; our Courts become counter reformatories. It is vain for the most grave or the most eloquent of Judges to attempt to counteract the effect of such scenes by any warning or admonition. Speaking of the extent to which confessions should be used he said—Would it not be better that the tendency of prisoners to confess should be left wholly unchecked, and that all self-accusing statements should be receivable in evidence; hearing the objections now commonly made to them as objections to their weight only, and not to their legal admissibility? I have no doubt that if it should appear that a statement was obtained by improper means, likely to affect its truth, a jury would be quite competent to judge of it, and by no means disinclined to disregard it. I may mention one practice which appears to me exceedingly objectionable—the rewarding of officers, directly or indirectly, according to the number of convictions obtained on their evidence. I shall perhaps be pardoned for referring to another instance in which our criminal law appears to me to treat the guilty with an over-refined delicacy. Notorious offenders are a class whose existence is undoubted by the police, but ignored by the law. Why should not a man who is supposed to have committed several offences of the same kind be tried for them together? If he has been in several successive employments, in all of which his employer was robbed, though never robbed before or since, the inference must be that the accused committed the thefts which always happened where he was, and never when he was not there. This becomes stronger with each successive instance; yet in all the more grave offences called "felonies" each charge must be tried wholly by itself, and a profound silence be observed as to the others. The practised thief must be treated as if never before suspected. This rule does not apply to misdemeanours, and has been relaxed by the statutes which allow three cases of larceny or embezzlement against the same prisoner, committed within six months, to be comprised in one indictment. That a limitation should be fixed as to the period within which the offences should be committed is reasonable, though "six months" seems a short one; but what is the reason for requiring that the property should be the property of the same person, or that no more than three repetitions of the crime should be investigated? If a lodger and the landlord in the same house are robbed, or a man is employed in collecting debts for several employers whose moneys are embezzled, the diversity of the ownership of the property rather increases the probability of the identity of the criminal. It is unreasonable that the commission of twenty peculations should expose the rogue to no more risk than the three to which the prosecutor is confined, and that a privilege should be accorded to the more heinous offenders who commit felonies which is denied to the less guilty, who commit only misdemeanours. There are minor technical difficulties which still embarrass criminal trials, notwithstanding the numbers that have been removed; such, for example, as the rules relating to venue and amendments. I think we are, in considering such matters, apt to forget the circumstances under which our criminal law has grown into a system. It was at one time most unjust to the accused, and shockingly bloody. Judges endeavoured to counteract the effects of a system at once unfair and cruel, by strained but merciful applications of legal doctrines. But it is not reasonable to apply in favour of a prisoner allowed professional assistance, who may examine his witnesses on oath, and is tried under a humane and merciful code, considerations adapted to a procedure in which he was denied the right of advocacy or calling sworn evidence, and to a code of most terrific severity. Speaking of the influence of Reformatory treatment, he said :—To shut up together ascertained guilt and suspected innocence, hardened crime and youthful weakness, shocks by its injustice. It converted the prison into a school for moral corruption. But when such obvious evils, and the common abuses incident to institutions without proper control were removed, the more difficult questions which engage us now began to develope themselves. Among the first was that concerning the relative merits of associated discipline and solitary discipline. The result has been the adoption, in our Government prisons, of a system combining both. This system, which has now met with general approval, not only among ourselves, but also from distinguished foreign jurists, rests on a theory simple and consistent. It is based on the proposition that reclaimable criminals relapse into crime from want of moral strength and self-control sufficient to meet influences to which they are exposed when released from prison ; and it aims at supplying this want by a gradual process of discipline, accompanied by successive trials of the prisoners' strength against temptation. The discipline begins with separate, not strictly solitary, confinement, which both operates as a very severe punishment, and, by its psychological effects in most instances, predisposes the mind to receive better impressions. The prisoner, from this, passes to the stages of associated labour in prison, arranged progressively, each being less irksome and less subject to restraint than the preceding. The convict's conduct in each stage is tested by daily marks, according to which his advancement is retarded or accelerated ; and if the tests of his improvement are satisfactory, he is able to obtain his discharge or license before the expiration of the period of his original sentence, according to a uniform scale, varying in proportion to that period. When at length a license is obtained and the convict is allowed to go abroad among his fellow-men, and endeavour to take his place as an honest citizen, he is not left wholly to himself, and for the remainder of the period of his original sentence he must report himself to the police. He must, and, what is more important, knows that he must be again arrested and imprisoned to undergo that sentence, if even, at this last moment, he shows signs of relapsing. His connexion with the police is, however, of the slightest character, and wholly different from the French system of "surveillance," which, far from reducing, rather increases the difficulties in the way of becoming an honest citizen. It has been proposed by some—I believe it was originally suggested in France—to employ convicts in unwholesome or repulsive works as a punishment. I have been informed that in Dublin—I know not how far it is the case elsewhere—the proprietors of manufactories where there is unhealthy or disagreeable work to be performed, for which it is difficult to procure other hands, largely employ discharged convicts, who willingly undertake such work as opening the door to an honest livelihood by free labour to contractors, according to the American system, which seems for many reasons objectionable. The present scale of diet in our Irish prisons is probably too low ; but it was adopted because it had become a practice to commit crimes in order to get from the poorhouse into prison, for the sake of an improved dietary. I was struck by an observation of Mr. Runden Hill, in a paper read in 1864, condemning a practice at public works, by which convict labourers were provided with shelter while it was raining, although free labourers employed at the same works were exposed to it and continued to work under all weathers. It is a most pernicious overflow of good nature to surround convict discipline with luxuries such as an honest freeman cannot obtain. The Reformatory system in its integrity is applied only to persons undergoing severe sentences. Minor punishments are carried out in our county and local jails, of which there are, I believe, in England and Wales 143, in Scotland 44, and in Ireland 42, besides bridewells. The vast majority of sentences undergone in them are for very short terms,* in which Reformatory discipline could not be attempted. But when the term exceeds twelve months, or even six, though it may be impossible to apply the process of reformation suitable to an imprisonment for five or seven years, still, I trust, we shall find that some more of the advantages accorded to worse criminals may be extended to these less guilty prisoners. By the statute of last August a very great improvement has been made in our local jails by abolishing the power of sending lunatics to them, under a practice which, I believe, was peculiar to Ireland. For such unhappy beings a jail is a totally unfit abode, and their presence seriously interfered with proper discipline. Yet the daily average number of them in custody in our Irish jails, during the year 1866 exceeded 400. Owing in a great measure to the exertions of members of this Association, considerable attention has been recently directed to the reclamation of female culprits. Women, as a general rule, are less prone to crime than men. The proportion among our criminals is generally about one-third females and two-thirds males. In towns where there are peculiar temptations to female degradation—generally seaports—the proportion is different. In Liverpool, for example, occasionally the female criminals are more numerous than the males. But all prison experience seems to show that the reclamation of female is more difficult than that of male prisoners. "Refuges" correspond in their case in a great degree to "intermediate prisons." And the last few years mark an epoch in the history of female reformation by the establishment of the "Carlisle Memorial Refuge." The efforts to promote juvenile reformation have been already signally successful. I see no reason to doubt the estimate made by a member of this Association, that 70 per cent. of those who passed through reformatories become industrious and honest. There was the most surprising reduction of commitments to prison within ten years of their establishment ; and, though the rate of progression may not now be so rapid as marked by this test, there is no reason to doubt the continued success of the system. Referring to Ireland only, I observe by the returns that there was but one juvenile under 16 sentenced to penal servitude in 1865, and only one last year ; and the entire number convicted in Ireland at Assizes and Sessions in the last year was but 59, of whom 18 were charged with misdemeanours only. I believe the almost uniform result of the statistics of crime would show—as has been done frequently in special instances—that Reformatories and other cognate institutions, ragged schools, and industrial schools, have a most marked influence in reducing the number of criminals. This at once brings before the mind another social problem which is now in course of solution ; and, though not directly connected with punishment, appears a sort of corollary to the propositions established in the case of Reformatories. How far should the State interpose in dealing with children who have not committed actual crime, but who, for the vice or neglect of those about them are likely to fall into criminal courses ? How far is the State justified in interfering with parental authority, and the natural relations of society, merely in the hope of making better citizens? The nation has decided to a certain extent upon this vital question. The Industrial Schools Act of 1866 is framed so as to have a close correspondence with the Reformatory Act of the same session. Both owe much of their usefulness to our Association. The Industrial Schools Act is perpetual, so that the principle at least is now authoritatively adopted. The further question has been discussed whether the imprisonment of young children as a punishment merely, should not be wholly abolished? The general theory of our law favours their irresponsibility. If a child is naturally so perverse and wicked that, without being educated in, or compelled to practise crime, he will do so, he seems rather a fit subject for an asylum for mental disease than for a prison; and if his misdeeds are the consequence of training or compulsion, it is unjust to punish him without giving him an opportunity of escaping from the irresistible influences which he of himself could not avoid. There is, and probably always will be, much difficulty in the way of Reformatories and industrial schools in enforcing payment from parents for their children—and there is the risk of affording advantages greater than the industrious and well-conducted poor can obtain. It would be a grievous injustice that the commission of crime by the young, or the neglect of plain moral duties by the adult, should open a door to worldly advancement which is closed to the innocent child and moral parent. In this faint outline of the progress of opinion respecting the treatment of the criminal classes, I have spoken of punishment in the two aspects in which it can be practically applied—deterring and reforming. I do not, however, hold the theory advanced by many, that the sole justification for judicial punishment rests on its adaptability to these purposes. I think the idea of retribution should not be disregarded in any criminal code. I mean by "retribution" the infliction of pain as a consequence of guilt, irrespective of making satisfaction to the party injured. The emotion of resentment—deliberate resentment, as it has been called by moralists, to distinguish it from passion or revenge—is a part of our human nature, and given to us for some purpose. The expression in reference to one who has committed a crime, that he "deserves to be punished," involves a truth which our moral perceptions compel us to recognize, and which means more than that the person spoken of "requires to be improved." It seems part of the scheme of Providence that guilt should deserve pain, and that man should be the means of inflicting that pain on his fellow man in cases involving their mutual relations. The question is not barren of practical consequences. If the theory which denies the right of inflicting pain for its own sake as an act of justice be carried to its legitimate consequences, the enormity of the crime should have no effect on the amount of the punishment. Indeed, on this theory, it is hard to see why the infliction of pain, in some form or other, should be the means invariably employed with criminals.

* Of 24,334 sentences passed in Ireland in 1855, 20,349 (or nearly 84 per cent.) are for terms less than a mouth ; and of these, 7,999 (or more than three-eighths) are for forty-eight or twenty-four hours. In sentences of this class, all that is or can be aimed at is to deter, by giving the offender a salutary warning from the pain of the punishment : 102 exceeded the term of twelve months, and 365 were for periods between twelve and six months.

LAW OF BANKRUPTCY IN IRELAND.

James Heron, Esq., J.P., read a paper on "The Law of Bankruptcy in Ireland, with Suggestions for its Amendment." Mr. Heron commenced by referring to the frequency with which the general subject of bankruptcy had been brought before the society, and to the endeavours made in Parliament to amend and consolidate the law. In Ireland the system of administration was utterly inadequate to the commercial wants of the country. In view of the legislative changes which cannot be much longer postponed, and as one entirely free from any professional bias, and not without some experience of the practical working of the present system, he ventured to offer a few suggestions towards the amendment of this important branch of our commercial jurisprudence. The bankrupt laws had in recent times been greatly modified in accordance with the better opinion of the age, so that the danger we now incur is, that in the excess of sympathy for the unfortunate, the opposite scheme may be realized, and fraud and bad faith may escape just exposure and punishment. The delay and expense attending the administration of the Bankrupt law made many so disgusted with the whole system that the expediency of such a law at all had been often called in question, and a desire expressed for a return to > "The good old plan,

> That he may take who has the power,
> And he may keep who can."

The number of enactments upon bankruptcy, and the contrariety of decision in the courts of law and equity, are causes of great embarrassment and fruitful sources of litigation. Lawyers proverbially make bad legislators, and it has been too much the practice of Parliament to hand over this subject to members of the legal profession, who are sure to surround it with so many complicated clauses and forms as to make the law unworkable from the weight of its own machinery. He dwelt on the want of uniformity between the Bankrupt law in England and in Ireland, which is frequently both vexatious and embarrassing. The objects of the Bankrupt law were happily expressed in a few words by Lord Russell when introducing the Bill of 1859—"To obtain as quickly as possible a full explanation and revelation of the affairs of a Bankrupt, and having ascertained what property he possessed, to divide that property amongst his creditors." We, therefore, want a law which will enable the creditors cheaply, quickly, and efficiently to realize and divide a Bankrupt's estate, one which will encourage and not deter the debtor when in a state of insolvency to surrender his property, and which will provide a competent court where all matters in dispute may be investigated and adjudicated upon with convenience and economy. It was scarcely necessary for him to say that the Bankrupt law now in force in Ireland does not fulfil these conditions. It is notorious that a debtor's estate, estimated to yield under proper management 10s. in the pound, often tumbles down under the manipulation of the present system to something like 2s. 6d., or even less; and in one celebrated case, which called forth public comment at the time, the accounts show seven and sixpence, whilst the dividend out of the court was only 5¼d. in the pound. The result is that merchants, rather than waste their time and money in Bankruptcy proceedings, often submit to unpaid settlements, and are thus led to encourage a practice prejudicial to commercial morality. Our neighbours in Scotland, with their usual acuteness, manage that sort of business much better than is done in either England or Ireland; and he was disposed to borrow from their system of sequestration some suggestions which he considered would be a vast improvement on the present system.

First. He would make a thorough separation of the administrative from the judicial department of Bankruptcy procedure. He would limit the Court to the administration of the law, and would place the realization of the estate under the immediate and exclusive control of the creditors themselves. No one will contend that a gentleman sitting, as at present, in his office in Dublin, can direct the sale of merchandise or call in debts at Belfast so well as a person conversant with the business and resident on the spot. At the first meeting after adjudication the creditors should appoint a committee to act as trustees in realizing and distributing the estate. This committee would have large powers, and be responsible to the Court for the proper administration of the estate. They should be fairly remunerated for their services. The Court should be at all times accessible for instruction and advice. He would abolish the distinction which now exists between trader and non-trader, and likewise do away with imprisonment for debt, except when the debtor was about to leave the country. The office of official assignee might also be abolished, as the business would be better done by a local clerk or accountant, as in Scotland. There is no good reason why the Chairman of a county, or the Recorder in a town like Belfast, should not have jurisdiction in Bankruptcy, and thus save the mercantile community from the present waste of time and money attending the court in Dublin. He would approve of the clause in the English Act of 1861, which enables a debtor to execute a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors, which, if assented to by a majority in number, and by three-fourths in value within twenty-eight days after its erection, can be adjusted to have all the effects of an adjudication in Bankruptcy. He would alter the present vicious system of voting by creditors holding bills of exchange by permitting them to rank only for the net instead of the gross amount of their claim. He complained that the practice now pursued of striking dividends, not upon the sum originally due by the bankrupt, but on the amount due after deducting collateral payments, was unfair in principle, and should be altered. He thought the provision in the English Act, which provides that the proceeds of all executions, if followed by an adjudication in Bankruptcy within fourteen days of the sale, shall pass to the assignee, was a most important one for checking fraudulent preferences, and should, therefore, be extended to Ireland. A serious grievance still exists in our Irish law, and which was rectified, as regards England, by the Act of 1861. A creditor having a claim on two or more Bankrupt firms, where one and the same person is a partner in each, is compelled in Ireland to claim on one estate only, while in England, under precisely similar circumstances, he can rank on each estate. The distinction kept up between land and chattels requires modification and amendment. He objected to the novel provision introduced into the Bankruptcy Bill last session in the House of Commons. It provided that where a Bankrupt's estate pays ten shillings in the pound, he shall be absolutely free, but where the estate paid less, his future earnings shall be liable to make good that amount of dividend. He thought this provision was inequitable towards the debtor, and would have a bad effect in practice. If a man is made a bankrupt, his business and property pass by the action of the law to his creditors, and if you take from him all he has in common fairness, you ought to relieve him from his debts. This is only equitable—on the one side a full, complete, and honest surrender of the property for a full and complete discharge on the other. If a debtor in difficulties has not this full discharge as an encouragement for a timely surrender of all his property, you give encouragement for delay, concealment, and every kind of commercial immorality. Credit is a voluntary act; if the debtor fails in honesty punish him through the agency of the public prosecutor as you would any other criminal offence; but if he fails in means, through any misfortune which he could not help, then I consider he ought not to be punished. Do not, therefore, substitute for the existing high moral obligation that of a mere legal compulsion which a man may easily evade by a resort to trickery and fraud. He purposely dwelt on this new principle in Bankruptcy, because it was pressed by some leading members of Parliament; and, so far he was aware, it had not been endorsed by any of our chambers of commerce or approved of by our merchants generally. He concluded an excellent paper by stating that he had embraced the present opportunity of bringing this subject before the society, not with the object of intruding his own views, but with the confident expectation that the question would elicit the expression of opinion from others in this great mercantile town, who, like himself, were free of professional bias—men who were so much better qualified by experience and ability to offer suggestions for the improvement of so important a part of our commercial jurisprudence.

Proposals for the purchase of the foregoing will be received by the Solicitor having Carriage of the Sale, up to the 21st day of October next, and submitted to the Judge for his approval.

Dated this 5th day of July, 1867.

GEORGE T. HOPKINS, Chief Clerk.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the LANDED ESTATES' COURT, Dublin; to Messrs. JOSEPH & H. T. LOVEGROVE, Solicitors, Gloucester;
Messrs. HARRISONS, Solicitors, 5, Walbrook, London;
Messrs. EWBANK & PARTINGTON, Solicitors, 7, South-square, Gray's-Inn, London;
Messrs. GALLOWAY & CONNOR, Solicitors, 55, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin;

WILLIAM SULLIVAN, Solicitor, 8, Inn's-quay, Dublin; or to M'CARTHY DOWNING, Solicitor having Carriage of the Sale, Skibbereen, County of Cork; and 8, Inn's-quay, Dublin.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Estate affords a good opportunity for a large investment, having regard both to the value of the Lands and to the very valuable Mines and Slate Quarries thereon.

The Lands adjoin each other, and are situate about one mile from the Village of Ballydehob, and three from that of Skull, on both of which Fairs and Markets are held. They are about eight miles from the important Town of Skibbereen, to which the railway in course of construction from the Town of Bandon is now opened to Dunmanway, being half the distance.

All the Tenancies on the Estate (except that on the Ballycummisk Mine) are from year to year.

There is a large handsome residence on the Lands of Cappaghglass, known as Rossbrin Manor, occupied by the family of the present owner for the past Twelve years. It is finely situate, facing Filemuck Harbour, commanding an extensive sea view.

Reports as to the valuable copper mines on the estate have been made under orders of the Court—one by Mr. English, in the year 1853, and another by Mr. Lisabe, in the year 1865. Both will be found in the printed rentals for sale.

Large sums have been expended by the present owner within the past ten years in the purchase of machinery now at the said mines, and generally in connexion therewith.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES,

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 36.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

In the last number of the IRISH LAW TIMES we laid before our readers the subject of the Right Hon. Judge O'Hagan's address on "Jurisprudence and the Amendment of the Law," delivered at Belfast before the Association for the Promotion of Social Science. We shall now proceed to offer some remarks on the address delivered by the Master of the Rolls before the same assembly. He chose for his subject "The Repression of Crime," and showed, from the independent manner in which he treated it, that he did not consider it necessary to confine himself to mere platitudes and truisms; but, for that very reason, he found that the favour with which some of his proposals were received was not by any means unanimous. He did not investigate the repression of crime in the widest sense that the term is capable of conveying, but only those questions which arise where crimes are likely to be committed. The means hitherto in use are the deterrent effect of punishment, and the education of criminals, with a view to their reformation. To these two aspects of punishment—deterring and reforming—the Master of the Rolls would add a third—the idea of retribution, which he defines as the infliction of pain as a consequeace of guilt, irrespective of making satisfaction to the party injured; and he goes on to say that if the theory which denies the right of inflicting pain for its own sake, as an act of justice, be carried to its legitimate consequences, the enormity of the crime should have no effect on the amount of the punishment. Indeed, on this theory, it is hard to see why the infliction of pain, in some form or other, should be the means invariably employed with criminals. This is a difficulty from which it is not easy for the opponents of his theory to escape, but yet which their instinctive ideas of what is just and fit will not allow them to adopt.

It is calculated that of the crimes committed, and the criminals engaged in them, more than six-sevenths escape undetected or unpunished; and in some respects to remedy this undoubtedly great misfortune to society, Judge Walshe asks, would it not be better that the tendency of prisoners to make a confession of their guilt, at the moment of capture, should be encouraged instead of being restrained, and that all self-accusing statements should be received in evidence, hearing the objections now commonly made to them as objections to their weight only, and not to their legal admissibility; and he argues that at no time is a guilty person so likely to state the truth as in the first surprise of detection—"it is the first step to repentance." The safeguards which protect our prisoners now, and which the public so jealously guard, were first allowed to protect them against rude and sanguinary laws; but since we have greatly mitigated the severity of the punishment, and ameliorated the condition of the prisoner in confinement, it is right that we should, on the other hand, protect the interests of society. Plausible, however, as this seems, we do not think the suggestions of the Master of the Rolls could be carried into effect with beneficial results, for our criminal trials, as well as popular notions of fairness and justice, are based on the principle of requiring no man to commit himself; the opposite principle of encouraging confessions, or even receiving them would, we humbly submit, be a retrograde step in civilization, and would not only lead us to the system of interrogation, little short of torture, practised in some parts of the Continent of Europe, but would open up an unlimited field to the misdirected energy of officers in inducing confessions, and would lead to false ones made through timidity or nervousness, or volunteered from some calculation of advantage.

The next point discussed in the address is one which is continually brought before such societies, and no adequate solution has yet been proposed; but the Master of the Rolls has thrown out some suggestions which might well be adopted by our legislators in treating of the important question as to what is to be done with that class of society who are known to live by crime, and who subsist by depredation on their fellows, as birds or beasts of prey do. The guardians of the peace could at any time, in our large towns, by one fell swoop, seize on such characters, and restore security to the neighbourhood kept in terror by their misdeeds; and although this summary procedure would amount to a continual suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act, which is not to be thought of, yet it is time to determine whether the collective interests of the community should not weigh down the individual interests of the all-but-convicted criminal.

Another subject touched upon was that of the Reformatories. Speaking of their influence, he said, "To shut up together ascertained guilt and suspected innocence, hardened crime and youthful weakness, shocks by its injustice. It converted the prison into a school for moral corruption; but when such obvious evils, and the common abuses incident to institutions without proper control were removed, the more difficult questions which engage us now began to develope themselves. Among the first was that concerning the relative merits of associated and solitary discipline. The result has been the adoption in our prisons of a system combining both." He then went on to explain the various distinctions between the working of the reformatories in Ireland and other countries; but this part of his address requires less comment, since no one has ventured to doubt the soundness of the principles on which the Irish Reformatory system is based; but their consideration brings before our mind another problem now to be solved. How far should the State interpose in dealing with children who have not committed actual crime, but who from the vice and neglect of those about them are likely to fall into criminal courses? The nation has decided to a certain extent, and the Industrial Schools' Act, 1866, is framed to correspond with the Reformatory Act of the same session; both are probably due to the exertions of members of the Social Science Association; and for the reforms in our social system the Association is entitled to our gratitude. There are these difficulties, however, in managing Reformatories and Industrial Schools, the enforcing payment from parents for their children—thereby approaching the principle of compulsory education—and the danger of giving greater advantages to young criminals than the children of the industrious and honest poor can obtain.

ON Tuesday last there came into operation an Act of Parliament which materially alters the official constitution of the Courts of Law in this country. Some such measure has for many years past been promised, and has come at last. Whether the present Act will prove one of useful legal reform remains to be seen; for although carried through Parliament by the late Attorney-General—now the Vice-Chancellor of Ireland—the bill was not of his own creation, but emanated from the Treasury authorities. Certainly we must say that its most ardent admirers, if there are such, cannot reproach the framers of the bill with extravagance when meting out the amount of remuneration annually to be enjoyed by those gentlemen forming the new establishments. The favourite system of the Treasury of dividing subordinate officers into grades, defined as "First," "Second," and "Third Class" clerkships, has now for the first time been introduced into the establishments of the Irish Courts of Law. To such a system we do not object, but, on the contrary, highly approve of such a classification, as not only useful but correct in all Government departments, as it will simplify the task of that statesman who may happily carry out the project of placing the Civil Service of the State on a common and permanent footing, by means of a universal classification of ranks, the several grades of which should receive a uniform salary, according to their position, whether serving in Ireland or Great Britain. But here it may not be amiss to inquire why there should be a difference existing in the salaries of the officers of the new Consolidated Chancery Department and their brethren of the Law Courts; such however is the case, and is enacted by the measure we are now discussing. This anomaly is worthy of notice, for we cannot conceive why any such distinction as this should exist between gentlemen serving under the same roof, enjoying the same rank, and performing analogous duties. But while calling attention to this mistake in the Act, we do not consider the officers of the Chancery, Record, and Writ Office, more than adequately paid, especially when contrasting them with the officers of other departments of the public service in this country. For the Court of Chancery and the Superior Courts of Common Law are unquestionably the departments that rank highest in Ireland. On the officers of the several Courts devolves the responsibility of investigating all the preliminary proceedings in suits and causes, before they ultimately appear in Court, so that somewhat more than the ordinary mental capacity that is popularly supposed to be possessed by government clerks is necessary to those who are employed in the Equity and Law Offices. Mere labour, such as the mechanical routine of the Post Office, Customs, or other ordinary departments, not excepting "The Castle," will not be the lot of the gentleman who finds himself nominated to the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer; a few months may prove him a good and attentive officer, but it takes years to make him an experienced one. It is of daily occurrence for some new question of office or court practice to arise, which it behoves the officers to be acquainted with, or else applications to the Court will be made, involving expense, trouble, and delay. Very frequently the officer is applied to by both attorneys and counsel as to what should be done, and occasionally, also, his experience assists the Court. Under such circumstances where it is necessary for the public safety, that competent and well-trained officials should be retained in all our legal establishments, we conceive it to be short-sighted policy on the part of the Lords of the Treasury to create equality in rank, but with a difference in pay.

Pending the return of the Lord Chancellor, nothing has been finally done towards selecting that part of the staff (not nominated by the Act) for the new Record and Writ Office of the Court of Chancery.

The Common Law Judges have, however, performed their duty, and the three Superior Courts of Common Law are now working under the new régime created by the 30 and 31 Vic., cap. 129. Ten officers (instead of fourteen as formerly), inclusive of the Master and Clerk of the Rules, now perform the duties incident to each of the Common Law Courts, the Queen's Bench excepted, where the duties of the Crown side are administered by the Clerk of the Crown and two assistants.

Next session we are promised a "Bill to Regulate the Practice and Procedure of the Courts of Common Law in Ireland." Would it not, under the circumstances, have been more prudent to have postponed passing the "Courts of Law Officers Act (Ireland)" until the Procedure Bill had become law? When the practice is altered it is more than probable that it will become necessary to again reorganize the official constitution of the three Courts, to meet the requirements of the Act passed to assimilate the Procedure and Practice of the two countries; if so, we trust that the authorities will see the wisdom of assimilating the position of all grades of law officers in this country to that enjoyed by their English brethren.

LEGAL APPOINTMENT.

Abraham Thomas Chatterton, Esq., Solicitor, has been appointed Chief Clerk to the Right Honourable the Vice Chancellor of Ireland. The salary of the office is £800 per annum, to be increased by £25 a-year until it shall amount to £1,000.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMISSION.

We are glad to see that the Commission for Inquiring into the Administration of Justice has at last been issued. The great thing to be hoped is, that they will have spirit enough to propose reforms really adequate to the occasion. If the present state of things be analyzed it will be found to have been constructed by degrees out of three heterogeneous systems; that which, pace Mr. Freeman, must, for fault of a better name, be called the Anglo-Saxon system, the system or systems which the Norman or Angevine kings bequeathed to their successors, and the system which has been called into existence by the county court legislation of our own times. Of the Anglo-Saxon system it is unnecessary to say more than that it was local, and that the fact that it was supposed to provide, and probably did provide, in very early times for the local administration of justice in matters of minor importance accounts for the comparatively slight provision which was made for the same purpose by the early kings of England. Their system was the great Aula Regia, the ancestor of the courts at Westminster, the Courts of Assize, and the Court of Chancery amongst other things. The justices in eyre (in itinere), said to have been originally appointed, or at least systematized, by Henry II., were the local representatives of the Aula Regia, and the direct ancestors of our present courts of assize. The extreme dignity with which they are surrounded to the present day, the infrequency of their circuits, and the smallness of their number may all no doubt be explained by the fact that their duties were originally not merely judicial but administrative. They were, as any one may see who turns to their Commission given at length in Bracton, local representatives of the Crown, bound by their office to inquire into and report upon all matters affecting the Royal prerogative and the Royal revenue, which was in those days composed to a very great extent of minute local profits which required careful detailed supervision. The administration of justice in particular cases of importance was only one of their functions, though no doubt a most important one. It would be difficult and not very profitable to trace the steps by which this function became substantially their only one, and by which they and the courts at Westminster, of which they became by degrees the local representatives, superseded the old Anglo-Saxon system of county courts and sheriffs tourns, and were modelled into the curious system with which we are all familiar, under which fifteen judges administer justice to a population of upwards of 20,000,000 people—a state of things probably unparalleled in any other part of the world. It is enough to say that such was the result. Exceptions excepted, the courts at Westminster and the assizes, their local representatives, became practically the only general system for the administration of civil and criminal justice in England and Wales. The exceptions, however, were highly important. In the first place, the courts of quarter sessions administered, as they still administer, a good deal of the less important criminal justice of the country. In the next place, charters were granted to various towns, and in some instances to populous manors, under which a vast number of inferior courts, both civil and criminal, were called into existence; and, in the third place, large and most important branches of jurisdiction were never exercised at all by the courts of Westminster, but were confided to other great officers of the Crown, especially to the Chancellor and the Lord High Admiral. This state of things, with various changes and fortunes which it is needless to refer to, continued till our own times, when systematic law reform first began to be cultivated. Those who turned their attention to the subject naturally perceived at once that the courts of assize were not founded with a view to litigation on matters of small importance, and that they had rendered such litigation ruinously expensive and dilatory by engrossing it to themselves. They also saw that the local courts established by charter or otherwise were not only a very imperfect substitute for a general system, but that their forms of procedure were in many cases modelled on those of the superior courts which were far too elaborate for cases of small amount. The system of county courts which has now been in operation for nearly thirty years, and which has been continually growing in importance, was intended to supply this defect. This is sufficient to show what is the nature of the problem which the Commission has to solve. It is nothing less than to weld into one coherent harmonious system the complicated whole at present formed by these courts. The sketch just given will enable us to specify shortly a few of the principal gaps in the system, and to show how the existence of such gaps is a necessary consequence of the history of the system itself. Incidentally this will show at what point reforms are required, and what should be their nature. The first great gap in the system is the separation of law and equity, the origin of which is obvious enough. It has arisen from dividing the courts according to the subject matter of which they were to take cognizance, and not locally. The result of this has been that they have by degrees produced different systems of law, proceeding upon principles in many respects radically different and even conflicting. The evil is too obstinate and deeply seated to be removed except by degrees, but it can be set right to some extent by reversing the policy which originally produced it. Whenever it is possible, fuse into one not the law, but the court which administers the law. Probably this would not be practicable in the case of the superior courts in London, but it is already done in the county courts, and there is no reason why, if a new general court of appeal were established, that consolidation which has been already effected at the bottom should not take place at the top of the scale. This would be a very long step in the right direction, and it involves, as the first task of the Commission, the making of suggestions for a new general court of appeal.—Pall Mall Gazette.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

STRATTON v. MURPHY.

1867—May 10, 11; June 3.—New Lease—Graft—Insolvency—Purchase for Valuable Consideration without Notice—Pleading.

By a marriage settlement dated the 14th of February, 1823, certain property was vested in trustees to the use of Samuel Ferguson Stratton for life; remainder to his wife, Alice Phillis Stratton, for life; remainder to the children of the marriage, subject to a power of appointment to the husband and wife, or the survivor, and to leasing powers to them for three lives, or 31 years. Part of the property put in settlement was a sum of £500, which was invested in 1824, in the purchase of a house in William-street, Dublin, which was held under a lease of the 8th of April, 1801, for 200 years, at the rent of £63. S. F. Stratton died in 1836, leaving the petitioner, Emma Stratton, and two other children, and his wife, A. P. Stratton, surviving him. On the 1st of February, 1838, A. P. Stratton, in consideration of a sum of money, made a lease to James Birkett for 31 years, at the yearly rent of £73 10s., and contemporaneously with the lease she executed a bond for £100, the condition of which was that within three months after the first of her children should attain the age of twenty-one, she would procure to be made out a good title and conveyance to Birkett of the entire interest under the lease of 1801. On the 2nd of April, 1842, Birkett assigned the lease and bond of 1838 to the respondent, Michael Murphy, who went into possession. Murphy entered into an agreement with the respondent, Edgar Bredin, who was entitled to the reversion and rent reserved by the lease of 1801, to reduce the rent from £63 to £42, and, to carry out that agreement, a year's rent was allowed to accrue, and an ejectment was brought in December, 1854, by which the premises were evicted. On the 14th of July, 1855, Bredin granted a lease to Murphy for 100 years at the reduced rent of £42, and on the 15th of September, 1855, Murphy assigned his interest in that lease to Thomas Bewly and William Hogg for £300, and they, in 1862, assigned it to Thomas Pim. The petitioner, Emma Stratton, became an insolvent in 1865, and afterwards, in the same year, her mother, A. P. Stratton, exercised the power of appointment contained in the settlement of 1823 in her favour. The petition was filed by her against Michael Murphy, Edgar Bredin, Thomas Bewly, William Hogg, and Thomas Pim. It prayed that the eviction of the premises might be declared to be fraudulent and void, and that the lease of the 8th of April, 1801, should be deemed to be still subsisting, or that the lease of the 14th of July, 1855, should be deemed a graft on it, and subject to the trusts of the settlement of the 14th of February, 1823. The respondent, Thomas Pim, did not file any affidavit, but he appeared by counsel at the hearing, and set up the defence of a purchase for valuable consideration without notice.

Butt, Q.C., Harris, Q.C., and O'Driscoll, for the petitioner.

Lawless, Q.C., and G. Fitzgibbon, for the respondent Murphy.

Purcell, Q.C., and Kaye, for Thomas Pim.

E. Gibson for Bredin.

J. Harris for the trustees of the settlement.

The MASTER of the ROLLS held that the lease of 1855 was a graft on the lease of 1801, and subject to the trusts of the settlement; that the petitioner's interest did not vest in her assignee in insolvency, and that the respondent, Thomas Pim, could not avail himself of the defence of a purchase for valuable consideration without notice at the hearing, without raising it by an affidavit in answer.

Solicitor for the petitioner, T. A. W. Hodges.
Solicitor for Murphy, D. and T. Fitzgerald.
Solicitor for Thomas Pim, Molloy and Watson.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Coram LYNCH, J.

In the Matter of the Estate of THOMAS WOGAN BROWNE, Owner; ARTHUR FFRENCH, Petitioner.

June 26; July 27.—Title by Estoppel—Effect of Proceedings in the Court of Chancery to bind the Landed Estates' Court.

This case came on upon the argument of an objection to the schedule of incumbrances taken by the owner of the incumbrance No. 58, who claimed to be paid in priority to the owner of the incumbrance No. 56. The latter incumbrance was stated to be a judgment obtained in the Court of Queen's Bench on the 19th August, 1844, and No. 58 was described as a judgment obtained in the same court on the same day. Admittedly, however, the incumbrance No. 56 was misstated, and ought to have been described as a judgment obtained in the Court of Common Pleas on the 26th August; but it was contended that no claim existed on foot of the incumbrance No. 58, by reason of the omission by the party interested in it to bring it under the notice of the Court of Chancery, in a cause petition matter of Patrickson v. Browne. Concurrent but not dependent proceedings had gone on in the Landed Estates' Court and the Court of Chancery. The latter court did not decree any sale in furtherance of the rights declared by it, but the former court, on a petition for a sale, sold the lands, and was now administering the proceeds. In the proceedings in Patrickson v. Browne the primary charge (to which this judgment placed as No. 58 was collateral) was proved and declared; the collateral charge was not proved or noticed, and had the estate been sufficient to be affected by the primary charge, would not have been heard of: but the primary charge failed.

Flanagan, Q.C., for the owner of the incumbrance No. 58.

Rodgers, Q.C., for the petitioner, who was owner of the incumbrance No. 56.

They cited Graves v Davies (15 Ir. Ch. R. 204); Montefiore v. Brown (7 H. of L. 241); Gurney v. L. Oranmore (5 Ir. Ch. R. 470); In re Lanauze (11 Ir. Ch. R. 19); Abbott v. Stratten (3 Jones & La Touche, 603).

LYNCH, J., delivered a written judgment, stating that he greatly disliked the admission in the Landed Estates' Court of estoppels created by procedure in the Court of Chancery: that the former court acted with too much of finality to shut out the truth on such grounds; that if the Court of Chancery ruled a question brought before it by the suitors there, he would act upon its decision; but when the case was put on the ground that by reason of the proceedings in that court the parties were too late to show the truth, he was unwilling to allow such an estoppel to bind him; that he was not prepared to finally decide as a precedent what he would do in a case where an order of the Court of Chancery existed, made during the pendency of proceedings in the Landed Estates' Court, and made manifestly without having had before it the full information that was necessarily obtained in the latter court by its procedure, for he was not prepared to say that in such circumstances he would adopt the proceedings of the Court of Chancery as conclusive, or hold even that he was obliged to put the parties to the expense of an equity proceeding to set right a plain mistake, and for this reason, amongst others, that he was not prepared to say that if the case came back to him with a ruling of the Court of Chancery that relief could not, by its procedure, be given to the party, he would act on such ruling in contravention of plain, admitted rights. Disclaiming, therefore, that the present decision was any decision as to the obligation on the Landed Estates' Court of proceedings in the Court of Chancery independently adopted and carried on, he would, in this case, follow a precedent of Judge Hargreave in the same matter, and would hold over the question until there was an opportunity to apply to the Court of Chancery in respect of this claim. The decision by Judge Hargreave was not a ruling on the point before him (LYNCH, J.), but it was sufficiently analogous to make it safer for him (LYNCH, J.) to rule now in the same way. But he wished it to be understood that in making this ruling he by no means declared that he would pay out this money to No. 56, and declare nothing due to No. 58, if the decision in the Court of Chancery merely was that the laches of the parties disentitled them to have this claim considered in the Court of Chancery. The parties should, within one fortnight, apply to the Court of Chancery to have their rights in respect of this judgment, as a collateral security, adjudicated on.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAW AND PRACTICE RELATING TO CIVIL BILLS.

The following is an abstract of a valuable paper read by HUGH HYNDMAN, Esq., LL.B., Solicitor, on "The Amendment of the Law and Practice Relating to Civil Bills and the Inferior Courts of Record in Ireland."

Mr. Hyndman reviewed the law and practice of the Civil Bill Courts in Ireland, and stated as follows the difference of the English County Courts' law and practice :—

The English County Courts are presided over by Judges, as they are styled, appointed by the Chancellor, and precluded from practising in their profession ; and the duties which, in this country, are performed by the Clerks of the Peace and Sheriffs, are there executed respectively by Registrars and High Bailiffs appointed by the Judges, and attached to the Courts.

But the English County Courts have no jurisdiction in cases of seduction, nor can they decide claims in any action in which the title to hereditaments, or to any toll, fair, market, or franchise shall incidentally come in question, unless by consent in writing of the parties. And they have no jurisdiction in actions in which the validity of any devise, bequest, or limitation under a will or settlement may be disputed ; nor, as yet, in Admiralty causes, although a bill having that object in view was introduced into Parliament during last session, but was not proceeded with.

On the other hand, they possess powers not given to the Civil Bill Courts in Ireland in several important and extensive classes of cases.

The County Courts have authority to try all actions (other than for crim. con.) which may be brought in the Superior Courts of Common Law, if the parties sign a written memorandum agreeing to such trial ; and they are, by the English Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, empowered to adjudicate upon matters in Bankruptcy, where the bankrupt has resided or carried on business within the district of the Court for the six months immediately preceding the filing of the petition for adjudication, and to allow the certificate of conformity to a bankrupt, and to superintend and control arrangements between petitioning trader debtors and their creditors, and to order the prosecution of a bankrupt for offences against the Bankrupt Laws, and to commit persons disobeying the requirements of the Court ; and the act provides for the appointment of official assignees to be attached to the County Courts, and enacts that the several Courts, acting on petitions in Bankruptcy, should be auxiliary to each other for proof of debts and examination of witnesses upon oath. And the provisions of the summary procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, by which a plaintiff is enabled to procure immediate execution upon foot of a bill of exchange or promissory note, unless the defendant obtain leave within twelve days from service of plaint to defend the action, have been extended to the County Courts. And in addition to the three foregoing powers, jurisdiction in Equity has been conferred upon these Courts by the Act of the 28th and 29th Vic., cap. 99, in the following cases, where the property, estate, fund, money, encumbrance, lien, stock, and credits involved do not in the aggregate exceed £500 in amount or value ; namely :—

1st. In all suits by creditors, legatees (whether specific, pecuniary, or residuary), devisees (whether in trust or otherwise), heirs at law, or next of kin, against or for an account or administration of real or personal or real and personal property.

2ndly. In all suits for the execution of trusts.

3rdly. In all suits for foreclosure or redemption, or for enforcing any charge or lien.

4thly. In all suits for specific performance, or for delivering up or cancelling any agreement for sale or purchase.

5thly. In all proceedings under the Trustee Relief Acts, or under the Trustee Acts, or under any of such Acts.

6thly. In all proceedings relating to the maintenance or advancement of infants.

7thly. In all suits for the dissolution or winding up of any partnership ; and 8thly. In all proceedings for orders in the nature of injunction where same are necessary for granting relief in any matter in which jurisdiction is given by this Act to the County Courts, or for the stay of proceedings at law to recover any debt provable under a decree for the administration of an estate made by the court to which application for order to stay proceedings is made.

The County Courts in England are held in each court town, once at least in every calendar month.

The suit is commenced by the entry of a plaint by the Registrar in a book kept for the purpose, upon which a summons, stating the substance of the action, is issued under the seal of the court. Except in cases coming under the recently conferred equity jurisdiction, when he is permitted no exercise of discretion, the Registrar may issue the summons against a defendant residing out of his jurisdiction. And it may be issued in the district where one of the defendants reside, or, by leave of the court, where one has dwelt within six months previously, or where the cause of action arose.

But the Judge may change the venue in any cause which can, in his judgment, be more conveniently or fairly tried elsewhere, or if he be himself an interested party.

The defendant is not allowed to set up in defence a set-off or a claim of infancy or coverture, or any statute of limitations or discharge in Bankruptcy or Insolvency, without plaintiff's consent, unless he has given notice thereof to the Registrar, who must communicate same to the plaintiff; and where the claim is for a liquidated demand exceeding £5, the plaintiff may require the defendant to give notice of his intention to defend, on pain of judgment by default.

Proof of service out of the district, or in the absence of the bailiff, may be made by affidavit.

The Judge alone, as in the Civil Bill Courts, determines all questions, unless where a jury is empannelled ; but where the amount claimed exceeds £5, either of the parties may claim a jury, and when it is under £5 the Judge may admit a jury on application of one of the parties and deposit of its fees.

Judgments cannot be made payable by instalments where the debt exceeds £20 without the consent of the creditor. Where cross judgments have been given execution is only to be issued for the balance due out of the larger sum. The warrant for execution is issued by the Registrar and executed by the High Bailiff. Executions appear to be issued by the County Courts only against the goods and chattels of the debtor; but where the judgment remains unsatisfied, the debtor may be summoned before the court and committed for fraud or wilful default; and such summons may issue out of the court which granted the judgment, although the debtor is not residing or carrying on business within its district.

He then mentioned some points of Superior Court jurisdiction affecting the Inferior Courts, and stated some of the principal recommendations in the report of the committee appointed at the recent meeting of Quarter Sessions' practitioners in Dublin.

He considered that the jurisdiction of the Civil Bill Court ought to be extended to cases of breach of promise of marriage, with power to the Court to examine on oath all the parties to the action; and also to actions for criminal conversation.

He considered (but with some hesitation) that civil jurisdiction in slander and libel should be given, but that in any case the damages should not exceed £5, and jurisdiction in Bankruptcy ought to be given to the Quarter Sessions, for receiving proof of debt and oral testimony; and that the jurisdiction in equity conferred upon the English Courts by the Act of 28th and 29th Vict., cap. 99, should be extended to the Civil Bill Courts in Ireland; and also, with the consent of the parties, the power to try actions beyond their jurisdiction.

He considered that the English practice as to the issue and service of the processes of the Court, and as to the venue, and also as to the notice of intention to defend and the nature of the defence in cases of disability, ought to be adopted in Ireland. He condemned the present system of execution in Ireland, the limited term for which a decree remains in force, the necessity for its frequent renewal, and the difficulties attending renewal by notice rendering it completely unavailable in many instances, and vitiating the whole jurisdiction of the courts, so much so that notwithstanding the penalty for proceeding in the Superior Courts for a sum under £20, attorneys invariably advise recourse to the Superior Courts, where there is a suspicion as to the value of the civil bill decree. He illustrated the pressure of the rule as to costs in the Superior Courts where the debt in contract did not amount to £20; in cases of bills of exchange, the summary procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, 1861, not extending to the Civil Bill Courts, as the corresponding English statute did, to the County Courts; and he claimed that in those cases the existing law as to costs should be modified unless the provisions of the Act were made available in the Civil Bill Courts.

He considered it might prove beneficial to suitors in the Irish Civil Bill Courts if the English provisions for removing County Court causes into the Superior Courts were extended to them; and if the power of removing civil bill decrees by certiorari into the Superior Courts in Ireland were enlarged, but the objection to that course was the expense.

It might be vain to urge amendment in Ireland beyond assimilation with the law and practice in England, but he suggested a cheap and simple means of converting the civil bill decree into a judgment that would carry interest, would operate as a charge in equity on lands, would enable the Sheriff to seize and sell chattels real, and might be registered as a mortgage, with its ordinary priority, or upon which government stock and securities in public companies could be charged, or a debt in the hands of a garnishee attached; or when the decree was under the proposed equitable jurisdiction, of giving it the force and effect of a decree of the Court of Chancery. These objects he proposed to accomplish by a registry of the decree, under certain restrictions, in the office established under the 7th and 8th Vic., cap. 90, or according to the prescribed practice of the Court of Chancery.

The policy of our Constitution, according to Blackstone, and the principle advocated by Bentham, was to bring justice to every man's door; and the intention of the Legislature in founding the Civil Bill Courts was to protect the humble suitor from expensive proceedings; but that policy was dormant, and the local courts were insufficient if the humble trader was denied the remedies accorded to the merchant prince, or the property of the knave who confines himself to small dealings, were less amenable to the adjudication of the law than that of the large purchaser whose word was as gold.

THE JURY SYSTEM.

Mr. O'Hagan, Q.C., read a paper "On the Amendment of the Jury System in Ireland." After adverting to the Bill of the past session, dealing with the qualification of jurors, and the absolute necessity which existed for legislation upon that subject, inasmuch as jurors qualified according to the existing law were fast disappearing, Mr. O'Hagan said his object was to call attention to other defects in the existing law which called loudly for a remedy. Foremost among these, he said, was the absolute discretion entrusted to the sheriff of selecting jury panels. He traced this power to the early common law, when the sheriff was chosen by popular election, and when the jury were not merely taken from the body of the county, but from the very neighbourhood where the fact took place, and were rather in the nature of witnesses than impartial judges. At present the sheriff has an uncontrolled choice, which in practice is not exercised by himself or the sub-sheriff, but by some unknown subordinate in the sheriff's office who has thus an absolute discretion in the selection of those who decide upon men's lives, liberties, and properties. Mr. O'Hagan spoke of the unsatisfactory nature of this arrangement, and the distrust which it awakens. As to the legal means of impeaching a panel by challenges to the array, it was wholly nugatory from impossibility of proof, no matter how suspicious the case. He also referred to the common experience that the same men, and those by no means the fittest, were perpetually returned to serve, and to the growing discontent of the public with this system. He proposed to abolish altogether the power of arbitrary selection in the sheriff, and to have the panels selected by lot from the jurors' book. In support of this view he referred to the New York Code and Code Napoleon, and to former Bills introduced into Parliament. He said that it may sometimes be urged in sustainment of the present system that in criminal cases, especially of a political character, the sheriffs should have a discretion for the purpose of excluding those whose prejudices might lead them to refuse to convict, however clear the evidence. This was one mischievous principle, and, historically speaking, the evil of more mischief than could be well expressed. The true means of excluding from the box any one not likely to do justice was by the exercise and the right of challenge, which he proposed to give in definite and equal number to prosecutor and prisoner, and to extend to misdemeanours as well as felonies, it being observed that when a man for some statutable misdemeanour may be subjected to penal servitude for life, he should have that right of challenge which is given to persons accused of the larceny of sixpence. He gave the history of the right of peremptory challenge in Crown cases, which was abolished by an early statute, but restored in substance by a decision of the judges, who held that, although the prosecutor could not stoutly challenge, he might bid jurors "stand by" and not be sworn, if a full jury could be procured without them; and the result was that the panel was first selected by an officer substantially appointed by Government, and next, that the prosecutor had a really unlimited power of challenge. Mr. O'Hagan advocated a proper remuneration to jurors for their time and expenses, and the abolition of the absurb system of keeping of juries without food or other refreshment, and thus starving them into returning a verdict. He said in conclusion, that much had been finely and eloquently said in praise of trial by jury, to all of which he cordially subscribed, but in this, as in other cases, the corruption of the best might prove the worst, and there was nothing which more interested the community than to remove blots and imperfections from a system which in the ideal is so admirable.

Mr. Whittle read Serjeant Pulling's paper "On the English Jury System." Trial by jury, which was one of the most ancient features of the English Constitution, had the advantage of enlisting the affections of every class, both of those who had to administer and those who had to call on the aid of the law, or submit to its decrees. He had some suggestions to make, the proposed object of them being to keep in proper order the system now in operation, so that its true principles might be uniformly adhered to, and the practice accorded with the theory that all good citizens should take their own share as jurymen in the dispensing of justice. The practice at present was to throw the powers and duties of jurymen on a narrow and inferior class of men, instead of on the whole community, or on those of it who were capable of performing their duties satisfactorily. Hardly one in 100 in the population serve as jurymen, and the larger part who do serve are not of the proper character. It had been shown that a Grand Jury who had called themselves merchants were found to be for the greater part coal and spirit merchants—a good many of them of questionable character—and that on the petty juries were to be found men serving who had themselves been in the dock as criminals. He would propose that the legal qualification of jurymen should be altered, and that instead of the honorary test at present existing some more liberal test should be had, so as to include, in addition to those already serving, others who were exempted. Street lists should be made out, revised and compiled as the Parliamentary lists are—that there be a roll of service kept—and that there be a rotary service, so that all persons who were marked for juries would take their proper share of the work. Let all persons connected with the marking out of the lists be adequately remunerated, and a penalty inflicted on those who neglect their duty. Every man called to attend as a juryman should be remunerated, and those who did not should be punished. He submitted these suggestions so that a healthy action should be restored to the system of trial by jury, and with the view of increasing the number of those who serve as jurors, and the lessening of the burden on other individuals.

Mr. G. R. Tennent read a paper on "Distinctive Features of the system of Jury Trial in Scotland, as compared with that adopted in England and Ireland." Jury trial in civil causes was unknown to the law of Scotland, at least in modern times, until introduced by statute in 1815. From its institution in 1815 down to 1830 the Jury Court was independent of, and separate from, the Court of Session; but in 1830 the two courts were united. The whole arrangements were borrowed from England, the number of the jury being twelve, and unanimity being required. But subsequently this has been modified, so that after three hours' deliberation, the verdict of nine jurymen can competently be taken. Any question of fact which emerges in a litigation may be (in the discretion of the Court) tried by a jury. But the following classes of cases are specially appropriated to this mode of trial, viz.:—Claims for damages in respect of injuries done to the person; libel or defamation; injury to personal or real estate when the title is not in question; breach of promise of marriage, seduction or adultery, and for delinquency or quasi delinquency, for nuisances, and for reduction (the cancellation) of deeds on the ground of incapacity in the granter; actions against shipmasters and public carriers, on policies of insurance, charter parties, bills of lading, and the wages of seamen, &c. Common jurors must have real estate of the yearly value of £5, or personalty to the extent of £200. Special jurors must pay cess on real estate of £100 of valued rent, or be occupiers of houses at a yearly rental of £30. The exceptions as to age and professions are similar to what holds in England. Special juries can only be had by leave of the Court, and are rarely resorted to. The number of jurors is not less than thirty-six nor more than fifty. The parties alternately strike out names till the list is reduced to twenty, who are cited to attend—such jury consisting of two-thirds common and one-third special jurors. Each party, irrespective of challenge for special cause, is entitled to four peremptory challenges; and where there are several defendants, they are collectively entitled to four challenges. Payment of jurors practically is £1, if the trial does not exceed one day, and £2 if it is continued for a longer period. But, of consent, the daily fee of £1 is sometimes extended to each day's sitting. The procedure is similar to that followed in England; but unanimity of the jury is not required after the expiry of three hours' deliberation. The expenses of jury trial are much greater in Scotland than in any other part of the Kingdom, and are never less on an average than £300 a side. There can be no question that trial by jury is extremely unpopular, and great, and perhaps uncalled for, sacrifices are made to avoid it. The tendency now is to dispense with it as much as possible. And indeed, except as regards actions for libel or slander, and injuries to the person, there is a general desire to avoid it. During the last judicial year of our Supreme Court, the number of causes set down for jury trial did not exceed sixty-two, and of these it is estimated that not more than one-half actually went to trial. It is to be regretted that the strict common law sometimes over rides the equity; and that when an equity question is not so pleaded, it may actually be sent to trial, as in the case of any matter of common law. A striking illustration of this is to be found in the case of "Urquhart v. Bonnar," where a pure question of equity was actually submitted to three separate juries, who all gave the same verdict—the jury maintaining the equity; the Judges, to some extent, the common law—while the value of the subject-matter of the contest did not exceed £200. Miscarriages such as these, no doubt, have materially aided in creating a repugnance to jury trial in civil procedure. The qualification of jurors in criminal cases is the same as in civil proceedings as regards common juries, but criminal juries receive no remuneration. If the prisoner pleads guilty, his plea must be signed by himself or his counsel. The prosecutor, however, cannot be compelled to receive such a plea, but may proceed to lead evidence before a jury after it has been recorded. When the plea is not guilty, the jury are at once balloted and sworn. The verdict may be pronounced by a majority of the jury when they are not unanimous; and, as is well known, when guilt is not clearly established, the middle course may be taken of returning "not proven," supposed to be derived from the non liquet of the Roman law. There is no appeal from the judgment of the Court of Justiciary, either as to fact or law, but the Court of Session has an incidental criminal jurisdiction as to forgery or falsehood committed in any cause before it, and the sentence therein can be appealed to the House of Lords. The system of criminal jury procedure may be regarded as very efficient. On the one hand, the prosecutor is unfettered by technicalities—those "iron rules" which are too often mistaken for "golden precepts;" and on the other, great care is taken that no oppression shall be exercised towards the accused. The native vigour of the law of Scotland is generally sufficient to meet any new description of crime which may arise without the support of statutory aid. It is preeminently an elastic system. The efficiency of the system is demonstrated by the Parliamentary returns. Proportion of convictions to committals in 1865 was 32·07 per cent., and in 1866, 30 per cent.; and of acquittals to convictions, 1865, 8 per cent.; 1866, 9·65.

The Chairman, in summing up the debate, said the points were serious, and he wished to say something on them, as his silence might be taken as consent to opinions which had been ably advocated in a discussion which did credit to every gentleman engaged in it. Nothing in the world could be more important. The question as to how to get a good jury was considerably more important than a great many matters of dispute about theoretic questions to which their attention was sometimes confined. There was one thing about it on which they were all agreed—that was, that the existing system greatly requires amendment. The wise and sagacious suggestions which had been made in the course of that discussion were worthy of the attention of Parliament itself. He did not in the least agree with the observation of his friend Mr. Baggot, for whose opinions he had the highest respect, that a man once acquitted should be tried again. The present law with regard to that point was a humane law and a wise law, and he would not alter it. He agreed with one of the speakers that in some cases the substitution of the deliberations of a jury for that of a magistrate who could give six or nine months, was not to be desired, and he would rather contract than extend the operation in that respect. Mr. Tennant read an admirable paper showing certain things in the Scotch system we ought to avoid, and several things worthy of imitation. A man's guilt on a former occasion, it was his (Judge O'Hagan's) opinion, should in no instance be mixed up in a new charge, which should be judged on its own merits alone. With regard to unanimity of juries, it was better to maintain the ancient system. He had great experience for a multitude of years, and he had seen no evil coming from it. Out of many instances he could name against it he would give one which took place in the County Monaghan. Two men were tried for murder. It was expected they would be hanged. The jury differed. They were tried again, amd again the jury differed. They were again tried and in the third case the jury also differed; and in every case a majority was for hanging the men. In the meantime, new evidence came to light, and three other men were put on trial, when it was proved that the first two men could not have been connected with the murder at all; and these three men were convicted, to the entire satisfaction of the county, and every man hanged. If the Scotch system had been then existing in Ireland, these innocent men would have gone to their long account. Cases like that made him slow to interfere with a system sanctified by the use of ages. With regard to the payment of juries he was doubtful. Behind the mere question of payment of juries, there was the great question of what they were to do in all public things—whether or not men are to make small sacrifices to do public duty. It was a serious thing, to say the least of it; and he would hesitate a good deal before he would adopt the course of paying juries. The Grand Jury question, which had been alluded to, was not really a very important question. He did not think the operation of the Grand Jury, in adjudicating upon a case before it went to the petty jury, after that case had already been heard before a magistrate, was injurious, and that sometimes it was very useful, and he thought it was in negative quantities. And as to the change of venue, as one of the solutions of the difficulty with reference to the unanimity of jurors, he doubted extremely whether that would entirely answer the case. It had been forgotten that the Court of Queen's Bench, at that moment, had the power of changing the venue in a proper case, and he thought that answered the difficulties.

LAW AS TO THE PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Mr. HASTINGS, general secretary, gave a brief sketch of the history of the law upon this subject. There were two systems—the Roman and the Teutonic—the former invariably left some rights over her property to the wife; but the latter handed over absolutely the property of the wife to the husband. In return, however, she had certain privileges; for instance, she had a right to a dowry of a third of every acre of her husband's land; and as land in the feudal ages was the only real property, there was no hardship to the woman in this rule. The law in this respect, however, still remained the same; and gradually it had come to be that the husband had the most absolute control over the property of his wife. This had, no doubt, been so far modified by the action of the Court of Equity; but practically the law was that every shilling belonging to the woman became the property of the man on his marriage. This, however, had the effect of making one law for the rich and another for the poor, as only ladies with a considerable amount of property could have a marriage settlement. In the cases of working women who may have saved, say £50 or £100 before her marriage, there was no protection. Her husband could do with her money as he liked; and very often he did not make a very good use of it. Not only so, but he might continue afterwards spending her weekly wages as he thought proper. This was a monstrous injury which should not be allowed to continue; and they should try to have the law so altered that the woman should have as complete a control over her property after as before marriage. It had been argued that this would create a division of interest in families; but if they were so very much afraid of dividing their interests let them insist upon the whole property of the man being handed over to the woman on marriage, and in nine cases out of ten it would be better disposed of than at present.

Mr. FALKINER, Q.C., read a paper "On the Rule of Evidence excluding the Testimony of Witnesses, especially that of Married Persons, in certain cases, and of the Parties to Action for Breach of Promise." After describing and illustrating the untenable grounds on which the principle rested, and the great injustice and inconsistencies that followed the attempt of applying it as a general rule, Mr. Falkiner traced the course of legislation in this century by which, under the auspices of Lord Denman and Lord Brougham, the principle has been subverted as a rule of general application. He showed that the remnants now existing have become exceptions, and that the burden of proving their wisdom has therefore shifted. They were, he said, permitted to remain, not because the statesmen and jurists who had assailed the present rule thought there was substantial ground for the retention, but they had been thrown as medicated cakes to the Cerberus who stood growling at the gates of the Paradise of common sense. The cases of excluding witnesses on the ground of interest still existing he stated to be four—1. Parties to actions for breach of promise of marriage; 2. Married persons in criminal proceedings brought against either of them; 3. Married persons and parties to the suit in proceedings instituted for adultery; 4. Criminals. The last he did not then intend to deal with, as it required a substantive and separate treatment. The three other cases he considered, showing by several examples and illustrations that all the reasons which had existed for the abrogation of the general rule were in full force for that of their exceptions. The rule, as applied to cases of alleged conjugal infidelity, he illustrated by reference to the drama of "Othello," showing that the flood of tragedy let loose by the jealous husband in that play originated in his refusal to listen to the testimony of Desdemona, Cassio, and Emilia; in which course, whilst driven by passion and misconception, he was virtually acting on the present rule of English law under discussion. The action of breach of promise was also illustrated by several instances taken from the speaker's professional experience, but chiefly by the leading cause of "Bardell v. Pickwick," in which, had the plaintiff and defendant been submitted to examination and cross-examination, the learned gentleman asked the audience to conclude that Mr. Pickwick would have had his verdict, and the speculation of those friends of humanity, Dodson and Fogg, would have failed.

A paper "On the Law of Bankruptcy," by Mr. GEORGE PERRY, Barrister-at-law, was read by the Secretary of the Section. He compared the English and Irish Bankruptcy laws, and made several suggestions as to improving the laws, making a quicker return of the Bankrupt's assets, and to have a more complete system of punishing dishonest Bankrupts—a punishment which, at present, was impossible. He suggested that, in certain cases, the dishonest Bankrupt should be punished by refusing to allow him to pass his final examination; and, in cases of greater dishonesty or extravagance, aud gambling trade, such other punishment should be added to the refusal of certificate as would prevent the Bankrupt from again beginning to trade.

ENGLAND.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—PRACTICE—EVIDENCE.—A new and curious question has been decided by the Privy Council. A prisoner was tried in Australia. The jury, not agreeing, were discharged, and a new trial had. At the second trial with the prisoner's consent, and to shorten the proceedings, the witnesses were sworn, and their evidence given at the first trial was read from the judge's notes, liberty being given, both to the prosecution and to the prisoner, to examine and cross-examine them. It was held that this was an irregularity not to be cured even by the prisoner's consent. In the same case it was also held, that there was no power in any court to grant a new trial in cases of felony, Reg. v. Scaife, 17 Q. B., 238, notwithstanding; and also that an appeal lies to the Privy Council from the judgments of the colonial courts in criminal cases: (Reg. v. Bertrand, 16 L. T- Rep. N. S. 752. Priv. Co.)

LIABILITY OF SECRETARY.—Before the incorporation of a limited company, the defendant acting as secretary, pro tem. for the provisional directors, gave an order for an advertisement, signing himself "secretary pro tem." No authority for this from the promoters was proved. He was held to be personally liable: (Hopcroft v. Parker, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 561. C. P.)

Misrepresentations in the Prospectus—Liabilities of Shareholders.—A prospectus of the company was issued in June, 1865, which stated that the company had contracted for valuable mining claims, some of which were in full operation, and making large daily returns; that great success had attended all operations in the district; and that the vendor had amassed a large fortune during the past eighteen months. Upon the faith of this prospectus S. took 100 shares. The directors then deputed two of the board to ascertain the real position of affairs, and they reported that the claims so bought were almost valueless, and that they had purchased other property in the same neighbourhood on very advantageous terms The directors on the 30th Dec. forwarded that report to the shareholders, promising to send them a further report, which was expected soon to arrive. On the 19th Jan., 1866, that further report was issued, and it stated that there had long been great deception in New York as to mines in that district; that these had been detected, and the speculators had addressed themselves to England: that the aforesaid claims were of such worthless mines; and that the property was on a hill where all works had been abandoned months before. S. then took proceedings to have his name removed from the list of contributories (a winding-up order having been made); and it was held that the representations in the prospectus were of such materiality that, as they were utterly untrue, the name could not be retained, and this, although the memorandum of association authorized the company to acquire and work other mines in the district than those contracted for at the establishment of the company. The fact that the directors themselves acted bona fide, and were deceived into believing that the statements in the prospectus were true, would make no difference, as they had taken it upon themselves to declare the statements it contained true as matters of fact. The test of the materiality of such representations is the influence which they may be held to have exercised in the conclusion of the contract to take shares. Per Cairns, L. J.: In the case of companies incorporated under the Act of 1862, there is no contract whatever between a creditor of the company and a member of it; the contract is between the creditor and the company; the interest, therefore, of creditors would not affect the consideration, for in dealing with such companies they must be prepared to undertake the risk that, in order to induce persons to become members, such representations may have been made as will entitle them to have their names removed: (Re The Reese River Silver Mining Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 549. L. J. J.)

Liability of Carriers of Passengers.—Latent defects in the manufacture of carriages used by carriers of passengers will not render the carriers liable to an action for an accident resulting from such a defect. Negligence must in all cases be proved, and no negligence could be alleged by reason that something was discovered which was not discoverable by ordinary means. This was the view of Lush and Mellor, J.J. Blackburn, J. dissented from this view, but not without doubting his own conclusion, considering that there was an absolute obligation upon the carrier at his peril to supply a vehicle reasonably sufficient for the purpose or be responsible for any damage resulting from a defect: (Renhead v. The Midland Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 485. Q. B.)

The "Lumber Room" at the Treasury.—It is understood that a searching investigation will shortly be made in order to ascertain the actual contents of what is called the "Lumber Room" in the Solicitors' Department of the Treasury. Besides title deeds, which have been smouldering there for years, a large quantity of valuable property found upon persons who have died in the streets, or whose bodies have not been identified, is also stowed away in this "depository.' It is proposed that the various articles should be advertised, and that then, after a certain time, they should be dealt with in the same manner as unclaimed goods are now disposed of by the Commissioners of Police—namely, by a sale by auction. It is thought that publicity will lead to identification in many cases.—Globe.

THE COURTS AND COURT PAPERS.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—Crown Side.

NOTICE.

On and after the 1st of October, 1867, the payment of fees in money on the Crown side of the Court of Queen's Bench is to be discontinued, and the several documents, on account of which fees were formerly payable, are to be impressed with a stamp-duty equal in amount to the fees formerly payable on account of such documents; and in the case of fees payable by entry, requisitions, stamped with the proper amount of duty, must be delivered to the proper officer.—30th and 31st Vic., c. 129, s. 48.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO CORONERS.—The 9th and 10th Victoria, cap. 37, enacts that a coroner may absent himself from his district for 28 days in the year. And it further enacts that any two magistrates are empowered to hold inquests in the absence of either or of both coroners, and according to the 44th section of same act, "To summon such jurors and such medical and other witnesses, to attend such inquests, and to administer all necessary oaths, and to give such orders and directions, and to impose such fines for neglect or refusal in like manner as any coroner is empowered to do under the provisions of this Act."

For Mines and Minerals, see Rental.

Also the Fee-simple of all Mines and Minerals and Slate Quarries to be found in and upon the Lands of English Island, Ardagh East, Lisllnane, otherwise Reavillen, Castlehaven, Flea Island, Horse Island, and Blackrock; Farrandeligan, Glasheenaulin, Lickowen, Gortacrossig, Toehead, North Reen, South Reen, Cooragurteen, Gurteenroe, Derryconnell, Clashmore, Cappaghnacallee, Stoake, Ballycummisk, Rossbrin, Cappaghglass, Filemuck, Horse Island, otherwise Island of Mullen, Lackareagh, and Raheenroe, situate respectively in the Baronies of East and West Carbery, and County of Cork.

Proposals for the purchase of the foregoing will be received by the Solicitor having Carriage of the Sale, up to the 21st day of October next, and submitted to the Judge for his approval.

Dated this 5th day of July, 1867.

GEORGE T. HOPKINS, Chief Clerk.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the LANDED ESTATES' COURT, Dublin; to Messrs. JOSEPH & H. T. LOVEGROVE, Solicitors, Gloucester;
Messrs. HARRISONS, Solicitors, 5, Walbrook, London;
Messrs. EWBANK & PARTINGTON, Solicitors, 7, South-square, Gray's-Inn, London;
Messrs. GALLOWAY & CONNOR, Solicitors, 55, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin;
Messrs. HALLOWES & HAMILTON, 34, Westland-row, Dublin;
WILLIAM SULLIVAN, Solicitor, 8, Inn's-quay, Dublin; or to
M'CARTHY DOWNING, Solicitor having Carriage of the Sale, Skibbereen, County of Cork; and 8, Inn's-quay, Dublin.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Estate affords a good opportunity for a large investment, having regard both to the value of the Lands and to the very valuable Mines and Slate Quarries thereon.

The Lands adjoin each other, and are situate about one mile from the Village of Ballydehob, and three from that of Skull, on both of which Fairs and Markets are held. They are about eight miles from the important Town of Skibbereen, to which the railway in course of construction from the Town of Bandon is now opened to Dunmanway, being half the distance.

All the Tenancies on the Estate (except that on the Ballycummisk Mine) are from year to year.

There is a large handsome residence on the Lands of Cappaghglass, known as Rossbrin Manor, occupied by the family of the present owner for the past Twelve years. It is finely situate, facing Filemuck Harbour, commanding an extensive sea view.

Reports as to the valuable copper mines on the estate have been made under orders of the Court—one by Mr. English, in the year 1853, and another by Mr. Lisabe, in the year 1865. Both will be found in the printed rentals for sale.

Large sums have been expended by the present owner within the past ten years in the purchase of machinery now at the said mines, and generally in connexion therewith.

In the LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

COUNTY OF CORK.

In the Matter of the Estate of Richard C. D. Oliver, Owner and Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD, before the Honourable Judge Lynch, at the Landed Estates' Court, Dublin, on TUESDAY, the 12th day of NOVEMBER, 1867, at the hour of 12 o'clock noon, the several Lands and Premises situate in the Barony of Fermoy, and County of Cork, in THREE LOTS.

LOT 1.—Part of the Lands of Castletownroche, called Raghard, containing 134a. 3r. 28p. statute measure, held for ever, subject to the yearly fee-farm rent of £88 8s. 5½d., and tithe rent-charge of £8 10s. 2½d., producing a net rental of £32 5s. 6d. per annum.

LOT 2.—Part of said Lands of Castletownroche, containing 650a. 3r. 25p. statute measure, held, for the residue of the term of 966 years, under lease dated the 19th January, 1774, subject to the yearly rent of £387 3s. 10d., and tithe rent-charge £45 15s. 11d., producing a net rental of £409 5s. 10d. per annum.

LOT 3.—Part of said Lands of Castletownroche, with several Houses and Premises in the Town of Castletownroche, held under same lease, to be sold indemnified from head rent by Lot 2, and producing a net rental of £41 4s. 3d.

LOT 4.—Part of the Lands of Ballydoyle, otherwise Rockwood, situate in said Barony and County, held under lease, dated 6th August, 1829, for three lives, and three years after the death of the survivor, at the yearly rent of £13 2s., including the Plantation of valuable Timber thereon. This Lot is in owner's possession, and the Timber is valued at £490.

Dated this 27th day of July, 1867.

H. R. GREENE, Chief Clerk.

The following is the Summary of Mr. S. M. HUSSEY'S Valuation of Lots 1, 2, and 3, made pursuant to the Order of the Court, dated 11th May, 1867:—

LOT 1, - - - - - -	£186	10	0
LOT 2, - - - - - -	883	17	0
LOT 3, - - - - - -	273	0	0

Lot 4 is situated within seven miles of Fermoy; the Lands are planted with valuable Timber, consisting of Oak, Ash, Larch, Scotch Alder, and Elm; the principal part was planted upwards of thirty years ago. Two of the lives in the lease, respectively aged forty-five and forty-seven years, are still in being, and a term of three years after the death of the survivor will remain to enable the purchaser to cut down and dispose of all timber remaining on the Lands undisposed of.

Lot 2 will be sold subject to the entire head rent reserved by lease of 19th January, 1774, and tithe rent-charge, in indemnification of the residue of the Lands liable thereto; and Lot 3 will be sold subject to said head rent and tithe rent-charge, but indemnified against the same by Lot 2.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the LANDED ESTATES' COURT, Inn's-quay, Dublin;
JAMES LANE, Solicitor having Carriage of the Sale, 26, South Mall, Cork; and 33, North Great George's-street, Dublin; and
Messrs. WEST & FITZSIMONS, Solicitors, 33, North Great George's-street, Dublin.

In the LANDED ESTATES' COURT, IRELAND.

KING'S COUNTY.

In the Matter of the Estate of The Trustees of Mrs. Mary Jennings, Owners; Patrick Fannin, Petitioner; And of the Estate of The Trustees of Mrs. Mary Jennings, and Richard John Jennings, Owners; Joseph Casimir O'Meagher, Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD, before the Honourable Judge Dobbs, at the Landed Estates' Court, in the City of Dublin, on FRIDAY, the 15th day of NOVEMBER, 1867, that part of the Lands of Derreen, called the Cottage Division, containing 154 acres and 30 perches statute measure, situate in the Upper Half Barony of Phillipstown, and King's County, held under lease for lives renewable for ever, subject to an annual head rent of £43 10s. sterling, and two annuities set forth in the rental, and producing a profit rent of £98 10s. 4d.

Dated this 18th day of July, 1867.

GEORGE T. HOPKINS, Chief Clerk.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

These Lands are situate within three miles of Portarlington, an important market town, and a principal station on the Great Southern and Western Railway, and on the high road from thence to Tullamore.

They are of a superior quality, suitable for grazing or tillage purposes, and are let to comfortable and solvent tenants, who have for the most part interests in their holdings.

The purchaser will be entitled to cut turf for his own consumption on the neighbouring bog of Moweenagagh.

The Portarlington and Tullamore Railway runs through the southern portion of this property.

For Rentals and further particulars apply to

J. CASIMIR O'MEAGHER, Esq., 33, Upper Sackville-street;

J. MARA, Esq., Solicitor, Portarlington; at the REGISTRAR'S OFFICE, Landed Estates' Court, Dublin; or to

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

No. 37.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1867. {Single Copy, 6d. By Post, 7d.

THE Constitution of England has been praised so often, and for so long, by statesmen, philosophers, and poets, and its institutions, "slowly broadening down from precedent to precedent," have been quoted by so many as the ultimate result of perfect legislation, that it is strange, notwithstanding all that has been said in their favour, how little is known of the origin and progress of these institutions, even by people engaged all their lives in the practice of the law. That protection to our liberties which foreigners most envy, is the Jury system. Its history is lost in the dim shade of antiquity, and it is even doubtful whether we owe it to the strong spirit of justice prevalent in our Teutonic ancestors, or to the judicial turn of character grafted on the originally barbarous Norman, by contact with the comparatively civilized races then inhabiting France. We propose then, for the present, to give a short historical sketch of the Jury system in England, and afterwards, if circumstances permit, to discuss its more modern development, its present working, and what seem to be its special failings in execution, with the remedies commonly proposed for them.

Some few years ago, it would have been superfluous to attempt a defence of the Jury system; but now—unfortunately, we think, for the best interests of justice—a fashion has arisen, even among lawyers and legislators, of sneering at the decisions of jurors, and plans are frequently proposed for transferring the duties of jurymen to the occupants of the Bench, at least in civil cases. But there are so many advantages to be derived by society from the system, that we think it ought to be as universally adopted as possible. The advantages also re-act on the jurors themselves, and we doubt if there is a more potent method of training the faculties of the adult than that supplied by the Jury system. In the words of M. De Tocqueville "It is a school into which each juror enters to be instructed in his legal rights, where he engages in daily communication with the most accomplished and enlightened of the upper classes, where the laws are taught him in a practical manner, and are brought down to the level of his apprehension by the efforts of the advocates, the instruction of the judge, and the very passions of the parties in the cause." It spreads among all classes a respect for the decisions of the law; it teaches them the practice of equitable dealing. It clothes every citizen with a kind of magisterial office, and forces men to occupy themselves with something else than their own affairs, and thus combats that individual selfishness which is, as it were, the rust of the community.

It is unquestionably in criminal charges that the value of trial by jury is most apparent; but the prevalence of that mode of trial in civil causes also, so far as they involve disputes of fact, is of inestimable advantage to the community. Nor is it by any means certain that the errors of judgment committed by jurymen are so frequent or so outrageous as the antagonists of the system would have us believe. Twelve men conversant with life (as Curran describes them) and practised in the feelings which mark the common and necessary intercourse between man and man, are generally able to judge well between truth and falsehood, and are, perhaps, better qualified to come to a correct and unbiassed conclusion about disputed facts than most individual men, no matter how refined or sharpened their intellects may be by education or habit.

It would be impossible, within the space at our disposal, to discuss the vexed question of when the introduction of the Jury system took place, though we hope to be able to show that there is not so much discrepancy between the conflicting accounts as the upholders of each consider; they disagree more in the meaning they attach to the terms than in the facts themselves. If we mean by a jury twelve men taken from the general body of private citizens, with no possibility of its being known beforehand who they will be, who are sworn to give a true verdict, not according to their own knowledge of the transaction, but according to the evidence which others lay before them on a distinct question of fact, who act under the presidency of a professional judge, from whom they must take directions in matters of law, and who must act according to their findings in matters of fact, then, indeed, we shall not find the system in practice until a comparatively recent date—not for two centuries after King John's reign, when the general principle was first enunciated in the Magna Charta by these words, nullus liber homo capiatur, vel imprisonetur, aut exulet, aut aliquo alio modo destruatur NISI PER LEGALE JUDICIUM PARIUM SUORUM. But if we mean by trial by jury the principle that a man's guiltiness or innocence of a criminal charge should be determined by a free and independent body of his fellow-citizens, and not by officers appointed by the Government for the purpose, we shall find the principle working among and acknowledged by our Saxon ancestors on their settlement in England. The great difference between modern jurors and those who represented them in ancient trials is that what formed the primary qualification for the duty of the latter, namely, a personal knowledge of the circumstances of the case, is now the greatest disqualification; in a word, jurors were formerly witnesses, nor was the practice of summoning witnesses, who had no other interference in the management of the trial, perfectly established till the fifteenth century, as we learn by the celebrated treatise De Laudibus Legum Angliæ, written by Fortescue, Chancellor to Henry VI.

Those who contend for the greatest antiquity of the system agree with Stiernhook in ascribing the invention of the Jury to Regner, King of Sweden and Denmark, a contemporary of the English King, Egbert; as a matter of course, the credit of the invention has also been given to Alfred; but, indeed, it requires great imaginative faculty to connect the Saxon system of trial with what we have been accustomed to consider as the attributes of the Jury. According to the Anglo-Saxon custom, the criminal was tried before the Hundred or County Court (from which an appeal lay to the King in Council), in it all the land-owners of the county had a right to sit, with the bishop and sheriff, for presidents; the accused might be tried either by compurgation or by ordeal—the latter method was only resorted to when he could not obtain compurgators; by the former method he might clear himself by his own oath, together with that of a number of compurgators, to whom the system of Frank-pledge, as it was called by the Normans, and by the Saxons, Friburg, gave ample opportunities of judging of the accused's guilt or innocence; but, they are thus seen to be rather witnesses to character than the prototypes of the modern jurymen; nor did the Thanes who formed the Committee of the Court, and who found the verdict, present a much nearer resemblance, except the accident of their being generally twelve in number.

The effect of the compurgators' oaths was not estimated even by their knowledge of the case, or their character or number, but simply by their position in the social scale. The oath of a Thane in a court of justice being worth those of twelve Ceorls, and that of an Ealdorman the oath of six Thanes. It is impossible to imagine any regulation more calculated to defeat the end of justice than this, as, in consequence, the fountains of justice were corrupted at their source, and not only the Ceorls and Ealdormen, but even the King himself, were sometimes influenced by bribes.

If it be admitted, then, that the principle of trial by jury cannot be derived from the Saxon customs, or any of earlier date, we have to consider whether it was introduced by the Normans into England, or brought by them from England into Normandy. Both theories have eminent supporters, but the weight of evidence would go to prove the latter, viz., that it was introduced into Normandy itself from England, whilst the English Kings were still Dukes of the former country, and that it was developed out of the different judicial customs existing in England by Henry II. and his justiciaries. The decision between these theories depends on whether the book called the Grand Coûtumier is believed to describe Anglo-Norman or purely Norman customs. The author gives a description of a trial in a criminal case; in it twenty-four men were summoned from the neighbourhood where the crime was committed; these were sworn (jurati) to deliver a true judgment (veredictum); none were to be called who were known friends or enemies of either party. The criminal had also the privilege of challenging for lawful cause, and the presiding Judge then recorded the verdict of the jurors, in which twenty were required to agree. This trial by jury was at last firmly established in England by the appointment of the Judges in Eyre (in itinere), since they held Courts where there was no assembly of local numbers, and in which the Judges formed the Courts, and delivered judgment; but they did not themselves determine on the question of fact as to guilt or innocence—that was arrived at in one of three ways, by event of ordeal, appeal to battle, or the true saying of twelve sworn men, summoned from the immediate neighbourhood. This latter was the first trial by jury, properly so called, and gradually superseded the other methods of determining guilt or innocence.

Trial by compurgation was abolished by the Normans soon after the Conquest, from its evident inaptitude to the oustoms of the time as well as the facilities it presented for corruption and perjury; and trial by ordeal was prohibited throughout the Christian world by proclamation of the Lateran Council in 1215, the same year that trial by jury was established in England by the words of the great Charter quoted above.

The custom of trial by battle remained prevalent for a long time from its peculiar suitability to the chivalrous and warlike spirit of the age, nor was it formally abolished in England till 1818.

NOTES OF CASES.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

BROWNE v. RAINSFORD.

May 16, 17, 27; June 10.—Will—Construction—"Survivor or Survivors" construed in their ordinary meaning.

William Rainsford made his will on the 20th of Feb., 1817, and thereby devised to trustees all his estate and interest in houses, lands, tenements, and hereditaments in the county and city of Dublin, in trust, to pay his wife an annuity of £200, and subject thereto, in further trust, to pay the rents, issues, and profits thereof to and amongst his six daughters, Elizabeth, Anna Maria, Eleanor, Matilda, Charlotte, and Sophia, equally, share and share alike, same to be paid to them as and when they should respectively attain the age of 21 years, or days of marriage, whichever should first happen, and to continue for and during their respective lives; "and in case any of my said children shall die without leaving any child or children, then as to the share or shares of her or them so dying, in trust, to pay the same to the survivors or survivor of them, to be equally divided between them, if more than one, and if but one to pay the whole to her." Provided that the trustees should pay the daughters their respective shares to and for their sole and separate use; and in case any of his daughters should have any child or children living at their respective deaths, it should be lawful for such of his said daughters to dispose "of their property hereby devised to her to and among her said child or children," as she might by deed or will appoint; "and in case all my said daughters shall die without leaving any child or children as aforesaid, then in trust for my said wife." And he left to his six children, after bequeathing certain legacies, all his other personal property, interest in houses, lands, &c., or any other income or property of any description, as tenants in common. In case he should have any other child or children born after his will, he directed them to have an equal share with his other children; and he gave and devised all the rest, residue, and remainder of his property, real and personal, to his six daughters and whatever other child or children he might have, equally.

The testator died in 1818, leaving his six daughters surviving him. Sophia and Matilda died under age, unmarried, and without issue. Charlotte married, and died, leaving children whose interests the petitioners represented. Anna Maria married, and died, leaving issue the respondent, Maria Catherine Smith. Elizabeth died in 1861, unmarried, and without issue. Eleanor, called in the proceedings in this case, Ellen Louisa, was the sole survivor of the daughters.

The petition was filed to carry the trusts of the will into execution, and to obtain the declaration of the Court as to the rights of the parties. The principal question raised and the only question decided at the hearing was as to the share of Elizabeth—whether it should be equally divided between the petitioners, Maria C. Smith and Ellen Louisa Rainsford, or whether the entire went to the last as the survivor of the six daughters.

The Solicitor-General, Jellett, Q.C., and the Hon. D. R. Plunket, for the petitioners.

Lawson, Q.C., Sullivan, Q.C., Lawless, Q.C., Neligan, and Gamble, for the respondents.

The MASTER of the ROLLS decided that the words "survivors or survivor" should be read in their ordinary meaning of "longest liver," and consequently that Ellen Louisa Rainsford took Elizabeth's share for her life.

Solicitors for the petitioners, Orpen, Sons, and Sweeny.

Solicitor for the respondents, W. H. Peyton.

OATHS.

A paper was read on this subject by Mr. Edward Gardner, solicitor, Downpatrick, which evoked considerable discussion. The paper first dealt with oaths of office—a class of oaths which, Mr. Gardner seemed to think, the growing intelligence of the times can no longer tolerate, and which the recommendations of a recent Commission would tend to abolish at a very early day. He contended that they were thoroughly inefficacious. "They never," he said, "stop the unworthy at the threshold, and the worthy do not require them to quicken their sense of duty. There are two sanctions, or motives, for the observance of these oaths—that of interest, and that of religion. If an enlightened self-interest does not prompt to honesty, it is questionable if the religious sanction will. The oath does not generate a conscience." This notice, however, must be confined to oaths taken in courts of justice. In dealing with this class, Mr. Gardner secured the concurrence of the many gentlemen, English, Irish, and Scotch, who discussed his paper, in a condemnation of the absurd anomaly of our law, which excludes from the witness box persons who profess disbelief. A case brought by a man called Maden, in an English county court, was instanced, where his wife, who was his only witness, was not allowed to be sworn because she stated she did not believe in a God. "Had she lied, and professed belief, her evidence must have been received. Truth is what a court of justice desires; the exclusion of the honest infidel will not secure it, and the dishonest will not hesitate to profess the necessary qualifications for giving evidence." Mr. Justice O'Hagan, as president of the department, in commenting on this point, said—"The examination on the voir-dire made the oath itself be based on a statement which was not given under the sanction of an oath. We have the naked statement as the foundation or groundwork for a sworn superstructure, which was a manifest absurdity." On the further question—Whether all oaths might not be entirely done away with?—the affirmative of which was the ultimate object of Mr. Gardner's paper, he was not so fortunate as to secure a similar unanimity of opinion. But notwithstanding the novelty of the doctrine propounded, there were some of the speakers who agreed with him in questioning their utility. To bring his views on this subject prominently forward, we must give them at some length. Stripped of the legal sanction, or penalty for perjury, which Mr. Gardner would still maintain, oaths in a court of justice are very similar to oaths of office. "It is every one's real interest to speak the truth, and should any motive induce one to swerve from it, the oath has no charm to prevent if conscience be dead to the sacred character of truth itself. A lie is a lie on the street or on 'Change as much as in a court of justice. If we exalt truth in the one place, of necessity its position in the other is altered, and it becomes a less crime to tell your neighbour such a lie as may enrich you and impoverish him than to swear falsely to some insignificant fact in a court of justice. Yet a lie has been told in the presence of God as deliberately in the one case as in the other; but truth has received in a court of justice a fictitious importance, and the tendency outside is not to stamp a lie with the severe condemnation which it really merits. The interests of truth generally have been overlooked, and the result desired is not obtained. Oaths can be only justified on grounds of expediency—it must be shown that the religious sanction is of avail where conscience would be otherwise insufficient, and that our lives and properties are really protected by the notions which people are supposed to entertain upon being put through the oath formula. It is our common experience that the religious sanction of the oath does not deter a dishonest witness, though the penalty for perjury frequently does. It is the regard for truth itself which secures reliable evidence in our tribunals. This receives additional corroboration by resort to negative proof; for instance we are informed that judges in countries where mendacity is the normal condition of the people, are puzzled to discover the real facts of cases brought before them. The opinions of some eminent jurists having been quoted, the paper went on to show that jurors decide on the credibility of facts alone, irrespective of the consideration that they have been sworn to. The oath is prejudicial to truth, and cannot be justified on grounds of expediency. There is hardly a sin against society that is not referable to a disregard of truth. Were the securing of truth the aim of legislation, the end of all laws would be attained—that men should live happily together."

The majority of the speakers on this part of the paper were inclined to think that there is a class in the community who are affected in some way or other by the oath, and from whom truth could not otherwise be secured. The subject is one of considerable importance, and much good must result from its discussion. No doubt Mr. Gardner will give the expediency argument, as we may call it, his consideration, and be prepared, on some other occasion, to put forward his views on that point with greater force and more persuasion.

ENGLAND.

SOCIAL SCIENCE AND ASSURANCE REGISTRIES.

The contrast drawn by Mr. Justice O'Hagan at Belfast between England and Ireland as to registration of deeds and instruments will not be gainsaid as matter of fact. But when this difference between the two parts of the kingdom is pointed to by him with a view to the desirable result of assimilating their legal systems by the interchange of good laws, many will refuse to acknowledge the justice or expediency of such a treatment of the subject. It is true that here, as Mr. Justice O'Hagan says, Ireland "has outrun the legislation of England;" but whether she has outrun it to a profitable end or not is the main question.

We are not altogether without experience of such registers on this side of the channel, and the latest opinion, or suggestion of an opinion, on the estimation in which the system in the two English register counties is held may be found in Mr. Greenwood's recent report to the Home Office on the somewhat notorious Middlesex registry. The question of its continued existence he leaves for the Legislature; but the strongest standing testimony against the supposed advantages of the system he considers to be, that, after a trial of 160 years, it has not been adopted universally, or at all events in other suburban counties.

The history presented by Mr. Justice O'Hagan of legislation, proposed and attempted, to establish a register of assurances throughout England, is at first sight favourable to a conclusion that the measure would be beneficial, but, when pursued to the end, raises a strong presumption in the contrary direction. We are reminded that for centuries the subject has occupied the attention of English statesmen and lawyers; that its necessity was recognized by Parliament so long ago as the year 1535 (27 Hen. VIII., c. 6), and again during the Chancellorship of Lord Bacon, in 1617, by the issue of letters patent, but abortively; that Lord Hale, and others of high authority, recognized and lamented the failure. Then, in 1815 and 1816, the efforts and ill success are noticed of Sir Samuel Romilly and Sergeant Onslow, when they tried to induce the House of Commons to approve of Bills for a general registration; also the solemn consideration of the subject and elaborate reports of numerous Commissions, followed by repeated attempts in both Houses by Lord Campbell, Lord Cranworth, and others, to pass into law various schemes which had high approval, but all which were defeated. To this hour England remains without any general register of conveyances.

But between the time of these attempts and the present there has been an intervening period of ten years, during which discussion of law reform has been systematic and active, not only in the Lords and Commons, but in the very society in which the learned president of the department of jurisprudence and amendment of the law delivered his oration; and, during the same period, an increasing number of legal publications has afforded enlarged opportunity for bringing forward or advocating plans for the improvement of conveyancing. The legal societies, too, in London and the provinces, have grown in number and strength. Yet, save in such addresses as this at Belfast, which touch many subjects but go to the bottom of none, no hint of the desirableness of continuing the three centuries' struggle for a general register is heard. There must at least be some reason for this; and we should have thought it incumbent on social science to deal with reasons.

Let us make one or two additions to the president's historical review. Shortly after the time at which he has left it unfinished, a commission, including Mr. Walpole, Mr. Joseph Napier, Sir Alexander Cockburn, Sir Richard Bethell, Mr. Lowe, Mr. W. D. Lewis, Mr. Robert Wilson, and Mr. W. S. Cookson, entered fully into the subject, with the benefit of all the work and argument of their long train of predecessors. What was the result of their deliberations? They admitted that a register of assurances would remedy the evils of suppression of documentary evidence of title, and guard against the ordinary accidents to which deeds and instruments are subject, and so far be beneficial; but they thought that the technicalities and anomalies of the law of real property would be confirmed rather than lessened or relieved by such a register. They offered seven distinct objections to it: 1, the bulk, which would have to be searched and examined on every transaction; 2, the cost, which would be an additional burden on land transfer; 3, increased complication arising from the omission to register instruments in particular cases; 4, risk of unnecessary and uncalled-for disclosure; 5, enhanced difficulty of obtaining loans by a deposit of deeds; 6, diminution of the security of possessory titles; 7, difficulty of classification of deeds or titles for the purpose of furnishing the requisite indexes to a register, and affording the necessary facilities for search. Although from time to time the best brains in the country, as in the case of the late Mr. Duval, have been studiously applied to the last point, the commissioners were not satisfied that any mode had been or could be devised sufficiently free from complication. As to the Middlesex and Yorkshire registers, they consider them signally defective in not presenting at one view all the documentary evidence which a party investigating a title might have occasion to use. There was no guide to the searches to be made on a scale, except a previous investigation of the documents which might happen to be included in the vendor's abstract of title, and from which the names of former grantors or owners were ascertained, and these searches must be repeated in new names, as new light was from time to time thrown on the title; whereas a register of deeds ought itself to furnish consecutive information of the dealings with the land which had taken place, when once a reference to the proper head of the index had been obtained.

The opinions of the Commissioners of 1857 on the kind of register which had so long occupied men's minds was adopted by Lord Cairns in 1859, when he introduced his Land Bills, and have been since generally accepted in this country. It can then scarcely be considered a reproach to England that in this respect she has been outrun by Ireland, nor ought this want of assimilation in their laws to be a source of regret or uneasiness. To enter more fully into the question now would be out of place. If fraud and suppression or loss of documents were the rule or the common characteristics of conveyancing, the case would be different; but in the present state of such business, great weight has always appeared to us due to the argument, that it is a false principle to make the convenience of men in the great bulk of their transactions subservient to burdensome measures intended to be safeguards in casual and exceptional instances.—Law Times.

THE PUBLIC RECORDS.

The Deputy-Keeper of the Public Records, Mr. T. Duffus Hardy, gives in his 28th annual report an interesting account of the progress made during the year 1866 in the classification and calendaring of the valuable State papers and other documents under his care. It appears that the distinction formerly drawn between literary and legal applicants has been abolished, and that all persons, whatever their objects may be, can inspect and copy the public records gratuitously. The photozincographic operations at the Ordnance Survey Office at Southampton were continued during the year, under the superintendence of Mr. William Basevi Sanders, the second part of the English series having been published in the course of the summer. The third part will comprise documents of the reigns of Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth. Mr. Sanders has selected for photozincography a number of curious documents relating to State prisoners in the Tower of London. Among them are the warrant for the commitment of Sir Henry Vane, July 7, 1660; the warrant for the commitment of the regicides, Colonel Martin, Colonel Downes, Colonel Lilbourne, and others, August 15, 1660; a Secretary of State's order to "put Dr. Heyden into the dungeon this night, that wee may see what effect this will have upon him towards his confession," January 24, 1866–7; an order under the Royal sign manual to suffer the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury to have access unto the Lord Stafford "to confer with him upon certaine matters in which Wee have given him Our commands," January 21, 1678–9; writ for the delivery of Algernon Sydney to the Sheriff of London, on the 17th of December, 1683, for execution—the writ specifies that he is to be dragged through the city of London to the gallows of Tyburn, and recites all the details of a sentence for high treason, the Sheriff's receipt being attached, witnessed by Sir George Jeffreys, Chief Justice of the King's Bench; an order under the Royal sign manual, signed with a trembling hand, for the commitment of the Duke of Monmouth's children, July 9, 1685; warrant for the delivery of the body of James, Duke of Monmouth to the Sheriff of London, on the 15th of July, between the hours of 9 and 11 in the forenoon, for execution on Tower-hill, July 13, 1685; the King's order to allow the Duke of Monmouth and Lord Grey to have each a servant; that the Bishop of Ely is to acquaint the Duke of Monmouth "that he is to dy to-morrow," and that he may see his children, 14th July, 1685; the King's order for the Duchess of Monmouth to have access to the Duke either this day "or to morrow morning," 14th July, 1685; the King's order to permit the Duchess of Monmouth "to dispose of the body of her daughter, that is now dead in the Tower, as shee shall think fitt," 12th of August, 1685; an order for the commitment as "safe" prisoner, of George, Lord Jeffreys, 12th December, 1688; an Order in Council to permit Mr. Laurence Braddon, who wrote several works respecting the mysterious and of the Earl of Essex "to see and viewe ye chamber in the Tower of London where the late Earl of Essex was found dead," 24th January, 1688–9; an order under the Queen's sign manual to deliver the body of George, late Lord Jeffreys, to his relations, and permit them to carry it out of the Tower "in a private and decent manner" for burial, 30th September, 1692; and the Speaker's order for the commitment of Mr. Secretary Walpole, for corruption in receiving 500 guineas, and a note for 500 more, on account of two contracts for forage for the troops in North Britain, January 17, 1711–12.

Mr. Prendergast and Rev. Dr. Russell, the commissioners appointed to select for transcription the Irish official documents now among the Carte papers in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, prosecuted their labours during the year with much zeal and discretion, having examined 23 volumes, containing upwards of 10,000 documents, ranging in date from October, 1649 to 1689, a period full of events of the utmost importance in the history of Ireland. The papers selected for transcription amount to between 2,500 and 2,600 in number. On the value and importance of these papers, the commissioners remark that, as they proceed in their researches they are the more confirmed in the belief that it is to this great collection of papers that the statesman and student must principally have recourse in order to form an adequate conception of the events which have most materially influenced the latter period of Irish history.

Of the papers selected by the commissioners, transcripts of 1,157 documents have been made in duplicate in 16 volumes, and deposited in the Public Record Office, one copy to be preserved there and the other to be kept in such place in Dublin as may be selected for its deposit. The calendar of the Carew papers, which likewise contain highly valuable materials for the elucidation of Irish history, has been continued by the Rev. J. S. Brewer and Mr. William Bullen. It will thus be seen that her Majesty's Government has not been unmindful of the claims of Ireland to have the materials for its history made public.

As the important historical documents in Rymer's "Fœdera" are comparatively unknown to scholars, in consequence of the scanty and almost useless indexes to the various editions, the Rev. E. Cobham Brewer, LL.D., has been engaged, at the suggestion of the Master of the Rolls, to draw up a syllabus, or catalogue raisonné, of the contents of the entire work. Various other catalogues and calendars calculated to facilitate the labours of literary inquirers, were also in course of preparation; and during the year nine volumes were published of the "Chronicles and Memorials of Great Britain and Ireland during the Middle Ages," making a total of 75 volumes. It is satisfactory to learn that the public demand for these publications continued to increase, 17,014 having been sold up to the end of the year. The fees received at the office in respect of searches, authenticated copies, and attendances amounted to only £628 12s. 10d. The decrease in this item, however, is simply owing to the fact that all fees were abolished after the 26th of May, 1866.—Times.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

LIABILITIES OF RAILWAYS.—The defendants' railway crossed, on a level near to the station, an occupation road, where there was a public way for foot passengers. On each side of the railway there were gates across the carriage way, which were kept locked, and a swing gate for foot passengers. The swing gate was so arranged that when opened it closed of itself, and there was an apparatus communicating with a lever in a signal-box a short distance off, by which, when the lever was pushed forward, a ring dropped on to the gate so as to fasten it, and it was usually fastened in this way when trains were approaching. A person standing at the gate could see only about twenty yards up the line; when he got on to the up line he could see about 300 yards; and when on the six-foot way about 500 yards in the same direction. The deceased, who was in the habit of crossing the line daily, came up to the gate, and the ring was then up and the gate free, but a coal-train was standing on the line across the road. As soon as the coal train was gone the deceased, who was deaf, proceeded to cross the line without looking to the right or left, and while he was crossing the up line and the six-foot way, three persons called out to him to warn him of the approach of a train on the down line; he did not, however, appear to hear them, but walked straight on, and was knocked down by the train and killed: Held, that the accident was caused by the negligence of the deceased; that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the company; and that the fact of the ring being up, being only the omission to use a precaution, which the company were not bound to use, could not be considered as an invitation to the public to come on the line, or be made the foundation of a right of action: (Skelton v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 563. C. P.)

AUTHORITY TO PLEDGE GOODS.—B. was employed at a salary to carry on his father's business during his illness, and for that purpose to draw cheques on his father's bankers and to accept bills. Requiring money to carry on the business, he deposited goods with C. for money advanced by him. The father became bankrupt, and in an action by his assignees against C. for the goods so deposited, it was held to have been within the scope of B.'s authority to pledge the goods for such a purpose, and so the jury found: (Dickson v. Dobree, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 831. Bramwell, B.)

LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS.—Defendants, directors of a company, gave to a bank a promissory note, signed by themselves as directors, but running "we promise to pay," without any further indication in the body of the note. This was held to pledge the personal liability of the makers, and an equitable plea, alleging the form to be a mistake, and the intention to have been only to make the company responsible was not proved, where the payer maintained that he always intended to secure their personal liability: (Courtuld v. Saunders, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 562. C. P.)

THE COURTS AND COURT PAPERS.

SUPERIOR COURTS OF COMMON LAW.

CONSOLIDATED CHAMBER SITTINGS.

A Judge will sit in Chamber on the 22nd and 25th inst., to hear motions for the three Superior Courts of Common Law.

CONSOLIDATED NISI PRIUS COURT.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1867.

This Court will commence its Sittings on Monday, the 4th day of November, and will sit continuously, or by Adjournment, as occasion may require, until the end of Michaelmas Term.

The Right Honourable Judge Keogh will preside, and the Registrar appointed in pursuance of the 21st & 22nd Vic., chap. 52, will attend as Registrar of the Court.

The Court will sit each day at Eleven o'clock precisely, and every Case will be struck out in which the Plaintiff's Attorney does not attend when called on, or is not ready to proceed.

ORDERED,

That no case shall be entered for trial unless a docket be lodged with the Registrar four clear days before the day for which notice of trial shall have been served, stating the names of the parties—in what capacity they sue and are sued—the general nature of the cause or causes of action and of defence and other pleadings, and the names of the attorneys of the parties;—and all abstracts for trial shall be sealed and lodged with the Registrar the day before the same shall be called on; and in all cases wherein a confession or consent for judgment shall subsequently be given, the plaintiff's attorney shall immediately give notice to the Registrar that such cause will not proceed to trial.

All dockets of appeals must be entered with the Registrar two clear days before the day for which notice of hearing shall have been given, stating the names of the parties—the attorneys—the nature of the decree, dismiss, or order appealed from—and from what Court the appeal is brought, the decree or dismiss must be in Court, as also a certificate of the appeal.

HENRY J. MONAHAN, Registrar,
Office, Common Pleas.

GENERAL ORDER

IN RELATION TO THE CONSOLIDATED NISI PRIUS COURT,
18th January, 1862.

That no certificate of counsel shall be requisite in order to enable plaintiffs to have cases coming within the terms of the 237th section of the Common Law Procedure Act (1853) tried in the Consolidated Nisi Prius Court for the future; and that, in addition to the cases specified in that section, all cases may be tried in that Court which shall be ordered to be tried therein by any of the three Superior Courts of Common Law, or by any Judge of any such Courts. Provided, however, that nothing in this order contained shall be deemed to interfere with the discretion of the Judge sitting in that Court to postpone the trial of any case to the After Sittings, on his being satisfied that it cannot be conveniently tried in the Consolidated Nisi Prius Court.

For Mines and Minerals, see Rental.

Also the Fee-simple of all Mines and Minerals and Slate Quarries to be found in and upon the Lands of English Island, Ardagh East, Lisilnane, otherwise Reavillen, Castlehaven, Flea Island, Horse Island, and Blackrock; Farrandeligan, Glasheenaulin, Lickowen, Gortacrossig, Toehead, North Reen, South Reen, Cooragurteen, Gurteenroe, Derryconnell, Clashmore, Cappaghnacallee, Stoake, Ballycummisk, Rossbrin, Cappaghglass, Filemuck, Horse Island, otherwise Island of Mullen, Lackareagh, and Raheenroe, situate respectively in the Baronies of East and West Carbery, and County of Cork.

Proposals for the purchase of the foregoing will be received by the Solicitor having Carriage of the Sale, up to the 21st day of October next, and submitted to the Judge for his approval.

Dated this 5th day of July, 1867.

GEORGE T. HOPKINS, Chief Clerk.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the LANDED ESTATES' COURT, Dublin; to Messrs. JOSEPH & H. T. LOVEGROVE, Solicitors, Gloucester;
Messrs. HARRISONS, Solicitors, 5, Walbrook, London;
Messrs. EWBANK & PARTINGTON, Solicitors, 7, South-square, Gray's-Inn, London;
Messrs. GALLOWAY & CONNOR, Solicitors, 55, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin;
Messrs. HALLOWES & HAMILTON, 34, Westland-row, Dublin;
WILLIAM SULLIVAN, Solicitor, 8, Inn's-quay, Dublin; or to
M'CARTHY DOWNING, Solicitor having Carriage of the Sale, Skibbereen, County of Cork; and 8, Inn's-quay, Dublin.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Estate affords a good opportunity for a large investment, having regard both to the value of the Lands and to the very valuable Mines and Slate Quarries thereon.

The Lands adjoin each other, and are situate about one mile from the Village of Ballydehob, and three from that of Skull, on both of which Fairs and Markets are held. They are about eight miles from the important Town of Skibbereen, to which the railway in course of construction from the Town of Bandon is now opened to Dunmanway, being half the distance.

All the Tenancies on the Estate (except that on the Ballycummisk Mine) are from year to year.

There is a large handsome residence on the Lands of Cappaghglass known as Rossbrin Manor, occupied by the family of the present owner for the past Twelve years. It is finely situate, facing Filemuck Harbour, commanding an extensive sea view.

Reports as to the valuable copper mines on the estate have been made under orders of the Court—one by Mr. English, in the year 1853, and another by Mr. Lisabe, in the year 1865. Both will be found in the printed rentals for sale.

Large sums have been expended by the present owner within the past ten years in the purchase of machinery now at the said mines, and generally in connexion therewith.

In the LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

COUNTY OF CORK.

In the Matter of the Estate of
Richard C. D. Oliver, Owner and Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD, before the Honourable Judge Lynch, at the Landed Estates' Court, Dublin, on TUESDAY, the 12th day of NOVEMBER, 1867, at the hour of 12 o'clock noon, the several Lands and Premises situate in the Barony of Fermoy, and County of Cork, in Three Lots.

LOT 1.—Part of the Lands of Castletownroche, called Raghard, containing 134a. 3r. 28p. statute measure, held for ever, subject to the yearly fee-farm rent of £88 8s. 5½d., and tithe rent-charge of £8 10s. 2½d., producing a net rental of £32 5s. 6d. per annum.

LOT 2.—Part of said Lands of Castletownroche, containing 650a. 3r. 25p. statute measure, held, for the residue of the term of 966 years, under lease dated the 19th January, 1774, subject to the yearly rent of £387 3s. 10d., and tithe rent-charge £45 15s. 11d., producing a net rental of £409 5s. 10d. per annum.

LOT 3.—Part of said Lands of Castletownroche, with several Houses and Premises in the Town of Castletownroche, held under same lease, to be sold indemnified from head rent by Lot 2, and producing a net rental of £41 4s. 3d.

LOT 4.—Part of the Lands of Ballydoyle, otherwise Rockwood, situate in said Barony and County, held under lease, dated 6th August, 1829, for three lives, and three years after the death of the survivor, at the yearly rent of £13 2s., including the Plantation of valuable Timber thereon. This Lot is in owner's possession, and the Timber is valued at £490.

Dated this 27th day of July, 1867.

H. R. GREENE, Chief Clerk.

The following is the Summary of Mr. S. M. Hussey's Valuation of Lots 1, 2, and 3, made pursuant to the Order of the Court, dated 11th May, 1867:—

Lot 1, - - - - - -	£186 10 0
Lot 2, - - - - - -	883 17 0
Lot 3, - - - - - -	273 0 0

Lot 4 is situated within seven miles of Fermoy; the Lands are planted with valuable Timber, consisting of Oak, Ash, Larch, Scotch Alder, and Elm; the principal part was planted upwards of thirty years ago. Two of the lives in the lease, respectively aged forty-five and forty-seven years, are still in being, and a term of three years after the death of the survivor will remain to enable the purchaser to cut down and dispose of all timber remaining on the Lands undisposed of.

Lot 2 will be sold subject to the entire head rent reserved by lease of 19th January, 1774, and tithe rent-charge, in indemnification of the residue of the Lands liable thereto; and Lot 3 will be sold subject to said head rent and tithe rent-charge, but indemnified against the same by Lot 2.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the LANDED ESTATES' COURT, Inn's-quay, Dublin;
JAMES LANE, Solicitor having Carriage of the Sale, 26, South Mall, Cork; and 33, North Great George's-street, Dublin; and Messrs. WEST & FITZSIMONS, Solicitors, 33, North Great George's-street, Dublin.
