Of the illustrations bound with this work, the portraits of Rev. Mr. Hancock, Col. Munroe, and the author were furnished by their respective descendants; and those of Theodore Parker, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Follen, and Rev. Mr. Stetson, by their numerous friends resident in the vicinity. The views of dwelling-houses, including the Lexington House, were, except as stated below, supplied by their present or late owners; and those of public buildings by citizens' subscriptions.

In the exercise of the powers given to them, the Committee have inserted the following illustrations at the town's expense, viz.: a lithographic portrait of Jonathan Harrington; wood engravings of the Clarke House, the old Munroe Tavern, the Monument, the proposed Monument, and the Battle Scene on the 19th of April; diagrams of Lexington Common, and the Old North Bridge at Concord, with their surroundings as they were in 1775; and fac similes of the autographs of twenty-nine men whose names are affixed to public documents which are a part of the History. It was thought that nothing ought to be omitted from the book, which could serve to explain, or invest with additional interest, the events narrated.

After a considerable progress had been made in the printing, the author apprised us that the amount of matter prepared by him would probably exceed, in print, the number of pages he had contemplated; but that he could not materially abridge the History without departing from his original plan, and impairing the symmetry and completeness of the work. Much interesting matter on the subject of slavery has been omitted. But we found that the great length of the manuscript was principally due to the minuteness with which the author had told the story of the nineteenth of April, 1775, and set forth the causes and consequences of the events recited. The citizens of Lexington will not need to be convinced, that on no account should such a narrative be abridged in the annals of such a town.

LEXINGTON, JUNE, 1868.

P R E F A C E .

IN preparing the following History, I have labored under the embarrassments felt by every one who undertakes to compile the annals of a town, arising from the meagre and imperfect character of municipal records. This is particularly true of the records of births, deaths, and marriages. There is scarcely a family whose genealogy can be accurately traced, in our public archives, through two generations. There will be omissions of births and deaths, or a minute so brief that it is next to impossible to determine whether the child born belongs to this family or that; or whether the person who died is the father or the son in the particular family, or whether he belongs to this family or another of the same surname. So of the entry of many marriages,—there is nothing to determine whether the parties belong to the town where the marriage is recorded or not.

It is the fortune of those who compile our local histories, and especially if they deal with the genealogy of families, to rest under the imputation of being inaccurate; when the fault is in the record, or in the absence of all record, rather than in the compiler. In fact any person who undertakes to write a local history from the records of the town alone, would confer no favor upon the public, unless it be to show how defective those records are. It is well understood by all those who have had experience, that the labor of gleaning from the town or city books, constitutes but a small portion of the actual labor to be performed. While gleaning from the records, the compiler's work is before him; but when he goes elsewhere to supply defects or explain what is recorded, he enters an unexplored field, and many fruitless days must be spent in search of the needed information. And it is not till he has had experience, that he learns where and how to direct his inquiries, and to separate facts from fiction.

In some of our towns, a portion of the records are lost. Lexington town records are continuous from the first. There is, however, one serious defect in the list of marriages. In past times the records of deaths and marriages were generally kept by the clergymen. Rev. Mr. Hancock, who was a clergyman in Lexington more than half a century, was very full and accurate in his entries. And while we have his lists of deaths and baptisms from 1698 to the time of his death, we have no account of his marriages till 1750. He must have kept a full record from the first, which is destroyed or lost. This has proved a great embarrassment in preparing the genealogy, though many of these defects have been supplied from other sources.

There is also a general defect in records, arising from the brevity of the entries. When an event is recent, and the details are fresh in the memory of the people, a concise memorandum may apparently answer the purpose. But when the event is forgotten, such a brief entry becomes almost useless. All records should be self-explaining; so that they can be understood at any future day. Another defect arises from the fact that reports of Committees, appointed to obtain the facts in a given case, are not recorded. The record may say that the report is accepted and "placed on file." But in the country towns, where they have no permanent place to deposit their papers, such reports are soon lost or destroyed.

I do not apply these remarks to Lexington in particular, for I find her records better than those of some other towns. But in examining town records in various places, I have found the defects which I have stated; and fidelity to the cause of history has prompted me to make these statements, in the hope that the evil, which every historian has experienced, may be avoided. Records are not made for the day or year in which they are written, but for posterity. An important historic fact may turn on a single line in the record of an obscure town. A name or a date, may enable a writer of biography, or a genealogist, to give a connected narrative, which would be broken or disjointed, if the name or date were omitted in the record. It is an easy thing, in entering the birth or baptism of a child, to give the name of the parent; or in recording the death of a person, to give the age; or in recording a marriage, to state the residence of the parties, or the parents of the bride. A little care in adding these particular items, would materially increase the value of our records. And in regard to the reports of Committees, they should be entered in a book kept for that purpose, and be preserved.

An embarrassment peculiar to the preparation of this History, has arisen from the fact, that for half a century after the first settlement of what is now Lexington, no records were kept within the place. This territory being a part of Cambridge, when an event worthy of notice occurred therein, it passed unrecorded, or if it were recorded at Cambridge, there is nothing to show whether it occurred at Old Cambridge, or at "Cambridge Farms." If Lexington had been a separate, independent settlement, she would have had a common centre, and records of her own from the first. The fact that Cambridge Farms were thus isolated, and that there was no common centre around which the settlers could cluster, induced those who were coming into the territory, to locate near some permanent settlement, that they might enjoy the advantages of intercourse and association with the surrounding towns. And hence the first settlements were generally near the borders of Cambridge, Watertown, Woburn or Concord. This circumstance would naturally tend to postpone a central organization; and even after such an organization was effected, their old associations would partially continue, and their marriages and baptisms would to some extent be entered in the border towns. These things have tended to make the early history of the town more meagre than it otherwise would have been.

But these embarrassments I have labored to overcome by consulting the records of the neighboring towns, and having recourse to the published town Histories, and the Genealogies of other families. The files of the Probate Office, the State Archives and the County Records have enabled me to supply many defects. In the Revolutionary history I have been materially aided by the American Archives and Frothingham's Siege of Boston. I have endeavored to give a full and impartial history of the town, and an ample Genealogy of the families. How far I have succeeded, I leave the public to judge.

It only remains for me to make my acknowledgments to those who have kindly favored me with facilities for information. My thanks are due to many individuals within the town, who have furnished me old family papers from which much intelligence has been derived. Among those, I will mention Col. Philip Russell, William Chandler, Esq., Messrs. Charles Tidd, Elias Smith, David Harrington, Bowen Harrington, Jonas Gammell, and the late Dea. Mulliken. Nor should I omit the kindness of Miss Mary Merriam, who has ever manifested a strong desire to render all possible aid; and who has furnished valuable books and papers bearing upon the subject of the history. Many other persons have readily supplied facts relative to the Genealogy of their respective families. I must also make my acknowledgments to Mr. Charles Brown for the loan of a list of deaths, covering a period of nearly forty years, kept by his father, from which many defects in our record of deaths have been supplied. A similar acknowledgment is due to Mrs. H. Pierce, for a list of deaths kept by the venerable Jonathan Harrington, nearly up to the time of his decease.

My thanks are due to Albert W. Bryant, Esq., the accommodating Town Clerk, for a free use of the books and papers in his custody, to the Librarians of Harvard College, of the State Library, and of the Boston Athenæum, for facilities rendered in consulting authorities. Nor should I neglect to mention the kindness of Francis Brown, Esq., of Boston, in lending me a large quantity of valuable papers left by his uncle, Edmund Munroe of Boston, which have been of great service; or the readiness with which Henry Clarke, Esq., of Boston, granted me the use of several volumes of the Diary of his honored father, Rev. Jonas Clarke, kept in an interleaved Almanac, which have proved of great value.

HISTORY OF LEXINGTON.

CHAPTER I.

FROM THE FIRST SETTLEMENT TO THE INCORPORATION AS A TOWN.

The Origin of Towns, and Value of Town-Meetings — Character of the early Settlers of the Province — Puritan Colonies compared with Others — History of Lexington involved in that of Cambridge — The People desire an Increase of Territory — Removal of Rev. Mr. Hooker and his Flock — Shawshine granted to Cambridge — Settlement of Cambridge Farms — Incorporated as a Precinct — Erection of a Meeting-House — The Subscribers' Names — The First Tax Bill — Ministerial Land Purchased — Mr. Estabrook called as their Minister — A House built for Mr. Estabrook — Mr. Estabrook's Ordination and Death — Mr. Hancock settled — Additional Seats in the Meeting provided — Ammunition and School Money asked for — The Common purchased — The Precinct petition to be made a Town — Voted to build a new Meeting-House — Hardships and Privations of the First Settlers — The Prominence of the Religious Idea — Military Titles and Military Men.

THE object of history is to present a picture of the past, so that we may be stimulated to imitate the virtues and shun the vices of those who have gone before us. But as the events which engage our attention are, in a great degree, the results of human actions, we can never understand the philosophy of history without ascertaining the characters and the motives of the principal actors in the scenes narrated.

As we shall speak of the value and importance of the history of towns, it may be desirable to understand the rise of these little municipalities, which had their origin in Massachusetts; and which have extended, with some modifications, over a large section of our country. Towns, in the present acceptation of the term, were not established at once, but grew up gradually, out of the wants of the people. As the Charter vested all power in the General Court, these plantations or towns could have no powers, except what were expressly granted them by the Court. The Puritans came to this country to enjoy religious privileges, and hence they would naturally settle compactly, so that they could easily convene for public worship, and also be able to support their schools. As all the land was owned by the Colony, no individual or company could lawfully hold any portion of it, except by a grant from the General Court. Such grants were freely made to companies, and were denominated plantations, or townships. They were described by boundaries more or less specific, and were generally designated by some name.

But these towns had no powers beyond that of holding lands, on certain specific conditions, which usually included that of supporting a minister, and maintaining public worship. As the labors and duties of the General Court multiplied, they soon found it necessary, or at least convenient, to devolve certain duties upon the towns. And, as might be expected, situated as they were, in a wilderness, surrounded by savages on whose friendship they could hardly rely, they first required these townships to do something for self-defence. As early as 1630, the General Court made it the duty of the towns to see that all their able-bodied men were supplied with fire-arms; and where any person, by reason of poverty, could not supply himself, arms were to be furnished by the towns. In 1634, towns were required to maintain a watch of two men by night, and also to provide, at their own expense, a place for the safe-keeping of arms and ammunition; and to see that all taxes were properly apportioned on the people. They were also empowered, when applied to, either by the employer or the employee, to fix the wages of labor. In 1635, towns were required to provide standard weights and measures; and, the year following, they were empowered to decide upon the location of houses within their respective limits, and to make certain by-laws in relation to their own affairs, subject to the revision of the Court, and to elect certain officers, such as constables and surveyors of high-ways. In 1637, towns were authorized to restrain swine from running at large within their limits, and to nominate to the Court suitable persons to sell wine and strong water. In 1639, they were empowered to erect posts, in some public place, on which the intentions of marriage might be lawfully posted, in case they had no public lecture; and were required to make returns to the Court of all the births, deaths, and marriages. The office of Selectman, which became one of the most important in the towns, grew up like the towns themselves, from small beginnings. In 1639 it was provided by the Court that towns might choose two or three men to lay out highways; in 1642 they were spoken of as "selected townsmen," and as men selected to manage the prudential affairs; and in 1647 as "selectmen." In 1641, the selectmen of towns were fully authorized to lay out town ways and erect town bounds; and in 1646, towns were required to report to the General Court the names of all idle and unprofitable persons within the same, and to perambulate their town lines once in three years.

In this way the General Court, from time to time, as the case seemed to require, enlarged the duties and privileges of towns, and provided, somewhat in detail, for the number and duties of town officers. The manner in which they should hold their elections, has been fully defined by statute. Towns are made municipal corporations, subject to the laws of the State; and as their duties, obligations and liabilities, as well as their rights and privileges, are the result of long experience, we might naturally conclude that such municipalities are founded in wisdom, and adapted to the wants of the people. And so indeed they have proved. In all our past history, in peace and in war, we have found these organizations exactly suited to the condition, wants and genius of our people. In addition to all the municipal duties and privileges, the towns had all the duties and prerogatives of parishes. The one, in a good degree, included the other. Towns were, in the absence of other provisions, parishes, though parishes were not always towns. The duties devolved upon towns, and the powers exercised by town officers, especially by the "townsmen," or selectmen, were greater in the early days of our history than they are at present.

History, to be instructive, must not only narrate events, but state the causes which produced them. Our stock of wisdom is not materially increased by being told that an event transpired; but when we are made acquainted with the causes which brought it about, we have acquired valuable information; and, from this knowledge of the past, we can reason with tolerable certainty to the future. History, therefore, is valuable very much as it presents the manners and customs of the people, the spirit of the age, the principles which prevailed, and the antecedents of events. The nearer the historian comes to the people, the source of all power, the more likely he will be to give us the true philosophy of history. Town histories, which are in demand at this day, are valuable for this very reason. They treat of events comparatively unimportant; but in gleaning these minute facts, the writer comes near the actors, and walks, as it were, in the midst of society in the age in which the incidents occurred; and so imbibes their sentiments, and becomes familiar with the character of the people, the motives and springs of action which were in play, and the genius of the age of which he writes.

Primary assemblies, from whose records the town historian must of necessity obtain much of his information, exhibit the real condition and wants of the people more perfectly than any other. As the character of an individual can be best learned by observing his private walks, and noting his daily conduct, so the genius and spirit, the virtues and infirmities of a people are best learned by the transactions of small bodies of men in their primary meetings. It is there that their true characters stand out in full view. The history which reveals the actions and feelings of a town, furnishes more reliable information than can be obtained from the history of a State. A town meeting is a surer exponent of the will of the people, than a legislative assembly, whether State or National.

In a free country like ours, the wants and wishes of the masses, their deep yearnings, and the great throbbings of the public heart, will show themselves in primary assemblies, long before they are perceived in State Legislatures or in Congress; and when towns speak in unison, their voice must ultimately be heard and heeded by the State. As all reforms begin with the people, knowing what towns have done, we can judge what the State must do.

Town meetings in the early days of our history, were more important than they are at the present day. They were then the great forum where every great question was discussed and settled. Town meetings were regarded as all-important by our fathers. Every thing they held dear as Christians or as citizens, was freely discussed and passed upon in these meetings. The building of meeting-houses, the settling of ministers, and even the seating of the congregation, and the leading of the singers, were subjects on which the towns acted. The ordinary powers of towns at this day, such as the building school-houses, and providing for schools, the laying out and maintaining highways, and the support of the poor, were exercised by our fathers. But they went much farther. The raising and equipping of military companies, at times, were exercised by towns. Nor did their jurisdiction stop here. Every political question, however broad, whether it related to the town, province, or nation, was deemed by them a proper theme for town action; and our town records abound with reports of committees and resolutions passed, which are fraught with wisdom and patriotism.

The American Revolution was inaugurated in these primary assemblies; and the history of that great political movement may be read in the resolutions and acts of the New England towns. It was in these meetings that the great questions were debated, the first steps taken, and the solemn pledges given. It was there that the masses of the people were instructed, their rights defined, and their duties pointed out. It was there that the fires of patriotism were kindled, and the public heart warmed, and the people prepared for the great crisis which was before them. The importance of these primary gatherings at that day, can hardly be overrated.

In the darkest days of the period immediately preceding the breaking out of hostilities, when the Royal Governor had prorogued the Legislature, and refused to order a new election, thus leaving us without a government; when an armed force occupied the town of Boston to overawe the patriots, and the people had no organized medium of communication with each other—that master-spirit of liberty, SAMUEL ADAMS, who did more than any other man to organize the Revolution, called upon the good people of Boston to assemble in town meeting to consult upon all they held dear as citizens. It was in a Boston town meeting that Committees of Correspondence were suggested and organized; and it was in pursuance of this proposed organization, that the towns throughout the Province held their public meetings, at which Committees of Correspondence were chosen, patriotic resolutions passed, and mutual pledges interchanged, which produced unity of action, created and embodied public sentiment, and so prepared the people for the impending struggle.

No one instrument contributed more to warm the patriot heart or nerve the patriot arm, than these primary meetings of the people. Their effect was felt and acknowledged, not only in the Massachusetts, but in the other Colonies. The influence they exerted was so great and controlling, that the British ministry became alarmed, and Parliament passed a solemn Act forbidding all town meetings throughout the Province, except the Annual Meeting for the choice of town officers. But such was the devotion of the people to these primary meetings, that in the interior they paid no regard to the law, and, in the larger towns, near the headquarters of the Royal Governor, they evaded it by adjourning the Annual Meeting from time to time, so that they might be prepared, almost any day, to hold a legal meeting to deliberate upon public affairs, and adopt measures for the public safety. Regarding the privilege of assembling for deliberation all-important, our fathers actually made the prohibition of town meetings, one of the prominent charges against Great Britain, and urged it among other inflictions as a reason for resorting to arms. If there is any one thing which has given Faneuil Hall its notoriety, and secured to it the glorious appellation of "The Cradle of Liberty," it is the fact that within its walls the patriots of Boston held their town meetings, and adopted measures which roused the American people, and shook the kingdom of Great Britain to its very centre.

The organization of townships has exerted a controlling influence upon the New England character. In these little democracies the people meet together on the ground of perfect equality, to transact their own business in their own way. The town meetings serve as schools in which the multitudes are trained for the discharge of higher duties in the county, State, and nation. Most of our public men who have filled and adorned the high places in the State and nation, have received some of their first lessons in the mode of doing business, in our primary meetings, and in the offices to which our town organizations have given rise. Let no one, then, despise these little gatherings of the people, which have been fraught with so many blessings.

The town historian, therefore, in wading through the records of these meetings, cannot fail to perceive the feelings of the people, and drink in the spirit of the age at its fountain. Next to the fire-side, which we are hardly at liberty to invade, the primary meetings of the people give us the clearest insight into the motives, wants and feelings of the masses of men. Municipal records furnish a sure index to the character of a town and its principal inhabitants. If the people are peaceable, orderly, and law-abiding, these characteristics may be discovered on the local record; and if the contrary traits pervade the community, the fact can be discovered by the careful observer. The town record is a sort of mirror which reflects the moral and political features of the people; and whoever visits this picture-gallery, and studies the paintings carefully, will be able to delineate the features of the whole group.

Town histories, if faithfully written, will give us the best pictures of real life, and the best insight into the characters of men. They also serve to collect scattered and perishing materials, which would otherwise be lost. And by hearing the traditions of the elderly people, the local historian will glean information which the more public annalist could not obtain; and by standing side by side with the narrator, he can sift this valuable, though sometimes uncertain species of evidence, and so elicit facts which may prove of great importance. Even in cases where the municipal historian finds no facts of importance, he has rendered a public service by showing that the field is barren, and so saving others from a fruitless search. He has also, as a general thing, more time to trace effects to their remote causes, and so present a more faithful view of the connection between the past and the present, than the general historian can do.

The history of every people or nation bears the impress not only of the master minds of that generation, but of the characteristics of the first founders of the State. Every Colony which springs up in any part of the world, will, for many generations reflect in a greater or less degree the character of the original emigrants. Young communities, like young persons, are peculiarly susceptible of impressions, and early influences brought to bear upon them, are likely to mould their characters, and fashion, in no small degree, their institutions. It becomes important, then, in every history, to recur to the origin of the community whose annals are presented, that we may see, in a proper light, the character of the events recorded, and the causes from which they spring.

Though towns are small communities, the same principles will apply to them. The object of a town history is not merely to collect and preserve a record of the events which have transpired from time to time, but to glance even at the remote causes, present the character of the inhabitants, and the spirit of the age in which they lived. All our early New England towns were settled by the Puritans — a class of men of marked characters, decided opinions, and fixed purposes. The trying ordeal of persecution through which they had passed in Great Britain, had developed the sterner qualities of their characters, and prepared them for the arduous task of subduing a wilderness and converting it into a fruitful field. They were men inured to hardships, and, being trained in the school of adversity, were prepared to do and to dare. Imbibing the spirit of the Reformation, they had learned to examine and judge for themselves. The Catholic bigotry of Mary, and the Protestant intolerance of Elizabeth, served to confirm their faith, increase their zeal, and purify their morals. Nor was the political state of the kingdom less adapted to the development of their political principles. They had seen the same tyranny in the State, that they had witnessed in the Church; and Monarchy and Episcopacy were equally abhorrent to their feelings. In fact the union of Church and State, brought the intolerance of the one to bear upon them through the enactments of the other, so that the Puritans were the victims of both civil and religious persecution. This twofold trial implanted in their minds a strong aversion to the Established Church and the hereditary monarchy of their native land. Rather than submit to the intolerance of the one, or the oppression of the other, they voluntarily exiled themselves from the land of their birth, the ties of kindred and the endearments of home, to seek a peaceful resting-place in an inhospitable wilderness. The same fortitude which brought them to this country, would not degenerate under the trials and privations they were called to suffer after their arrival.

And though the persecutions they endured in the land of their birth, and the difficulties they encountered in the land of their adoption, would naturally give them a stern, inflexible character, there was behind all this experience, a firm, unwavering faith in the righteousness of their cause, which gave a definiteness of object, and a persistence of purpose, which nothing could shake. The great idea with them was the religious idea. They came to this country that they might worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. And, though they were not political adventurers, seeking a retreat from the old world in order to build up a mighty empire in the new, yet their own good sense taught them that they could hardly erect religious institutions without a civil government to protect them. But, whatever might have been their original speculations, when they were called to view the subject practically, they soon saw that a church and a commonwealth were so essential to each other, that they could not enjoy the one unmolested without the protecting arm of the other. They accordingly had incorporated into their Charter a provision authorizing them "to make laws and ordinances for the good and welfare of said company, and for the government and ordering of the said lands and plantation, and the people inhabiting and to inhabit the same, as to them, from time to time, shall be thought meet, so as such laws and ordinances be not repugnant to the laws and statutes of the realm of England."

The free and undisturbed worship of God, which was the primary object which brought them to these shores, was soon associated with free civil institutions; so that we may say, in fact, that their great object was to establish a holy religion which should bring its solemn sanctions to bear upon the Commonwealth; and a free Commonwealth, based upon the broad principles of religion—a Commonwealth where Christ should be the acknowledged Head of the Church, and his Gospel the fundamental law of the realm. In all their labors and efforts, this was the great object at which they aimed. In prosperity, this was the end of their rejoicing, and in adversity, this was their main support. A colony more orderly and moral, more devout and self-sacrificing, never settled in any part of the globe. With an object at once grand and glorious before them, and with a trust in Divine Providence, which subdued both doubt and fear, they were prepared to meet any trial, encounter any obstacle, and endure any suffering, which beset their path. Such was the object of our Puritan fathers, and such the steadfastness with which they pursued their end.

We do not, however, ascribe immaculate purity to them, or maintain that they were free from infirmities or faults. They were men of like passions with others; and because they were in advance of the age in which they lived, we must not look for absolute perfection, and expect that, because they abounded in the cardinal virtues, they would be free from every defect of character. Their defects were such as grow out of the excess of virtuous principles. Their religion was of a rigid and austere type, and the strength of their faith hardly permitted them to tolerate a dissent from their creed. They were imbued with the spirit of the age; and the persecutions through which they had passed in their native country, had the effect upon them that persecutions generally have, to confirm their faith rather than increase their charity. Though they had dissented from the Church of Rome, and could not admit the infallibility of the Roman Pontiff, such was the strength of their faith that they cherished the persuasion that sincere Christians would not be permitted to wander materially from the true faith. With such sentiments and feelings, they would naturally look upon heretics as willfully blind, and as enemies, not only of the great object they had in view, but of the cause of Him to whom they had consecrated themselves. This conviction would, of course, lead them to guard, with jealous care, the creed they professed, and to visit with their displeasure, those who dissented from their faith, or preached what they regarded as "another gospel."

They lived under what may be denominated the Monarchy of Religion. Their familiarity with the Jewish Scriptures, in which the Almighty is presented in the stern character of a Ruler or a Judge, more frequently than in the milder character of a Father, naturally inclined them to dwell upon the sterner attributes of the Deity, and draw moral instruction from divine sovereignty rather than from divine compassion, and to elevate the attribute of justice at the expense of that of mercy. But they have the apology that if they erred in this respect, they erred with the age in which they lived, and reflected in a milder form the severe features of religion, as it was then understood. We may smile at their austerities, and censure their intolerance, but if we had lived in that age of the world, we should, undoubtedly, have imbibed their spirit. They were strict, and rigid, and, if you please, superstitious; but these defects of character were only the vigorous growth of that abiding faith and trust in the providence of God, which was requisite to fit them for the great and glorious enterprise in which they had embarked. And while we cannot justify their persecution of the Baptists and Quakers, and other dissenting sects which arose among them, there are circumstances which go to extenuate these faults. They came to the country that they might enjoy their religion in peace. For this object they had encountered trials and dangers; to this end they had labored and toiled, and submitted to every privation. And after they had, by great personal sacrifices, established religious institutions according to their own notions of right, and hoped to enjoy, unmolested, the free and full advantages of unity of faith, and simplicity and order in worship, they found their quiet molested by what they regarded as intruders and disturbers of the peace. It was not on account of their religious tenets alone, that the Puritans banished them from their jurisdiction. These sects manifested their contempt for civil authority, and a portion of them opposed even defensive war, which the Puritans deemed essential to their very existence, situated as they were among hostile Indian tribes. This led our fathers to believe that the safety of the State would be endangered by the presence of these men, who were active in their efforts to disseminate their views. These facts, though they do not justify, certainly go far to extenuate the course of the Puritans; and while our sympathy for the persecuted naturally leads us to espouse their cause, we should not shut our eyes to the provocations which were frequently offered to the severe treatment they received.

Viewed impartially, there is much in the Puritan character to admire. Their unwavering trust in Divine Providence, their self-sacrificing spirit, their inflexible integrity, their devotion to civil and religious freedom, founded on broad principles, and regulated by law, their desire to educate the rising generation, so that they might become good citizens and exemplary Christians, their zeal in the great enterprise in which they were engaged, their readiness to endure privations and to face dangers, and their persevering fortitude under all circumstances — these, and qualities such as these, must commend them to the respect and admiration of mankind. Men more genial in their manners or pliant in their character, more yielding in their dispositions or easy in their virtue, with a faith less firm, or a will less persistent, may be more agreeable and popular in fashionable circles, and their society may be more eagerly sought in ordinary times, but in days of painful anxiety and peril, we instinctively seek counsel of men of confirmed faith and inflexible principles, and flee for support and protection to men of persistent purpose and unconquerable will. So our stern Puritan ancestors belong to the very class of men on which the community will always lean in an emergency.

The Puritans were raised up by Providence to accomplish a great work, and to mark an important era in the world's progress; and the stern qualities which they possessed, were the necessary qualifications to fit them for the task assigned them. Had they been a mild and timorous race, gentle and yielding in their manners, wavering in their faith, and compromising in their principles; or had they been a mere band of adventurers, seeking their fortunes, or a few lords with a set of serfs in their train, they could never have accomplished the herculean task of subduing the hostile savage tribes, clearing up dense forests, and covering the country with prosperous towns and thriving villages. And what is more important to us and to the country, they could never have built up those civil, literary and religious institutions, which have been the pride of this country and the admiration of the civilized world.

To the Puritans we are indebted for most of the blessings we enjoy. The impress of their principles is seen and felt in every thing around us. The moral and religious tone of the New England people, their sense of justice and love of order, and their devotion to liberty and the rights of men, are but the reflex of ancestral virtues. We are hardly aware of the numerous ways in which Puritan principles have affected our characters, and shaped our destiny as a people. Their modes of faith, their habits of industry, their reverence for law and order, the equality between man and man, — all these have had their influence upon us, and have tended to make us the energetic and persevering, the thrifty and prosperous people we are. Many of our institutions have grown as of necessity from their religious notions. Their love of public worship induced them to settle near each other, so that they could conveniently assemble together and enjoy church privileges. This enabled them to erect meeting houses and support schools, which could not have been done if the population had been sparse. This, also, gave rise to that system of town organization, which is one of the distinctive features of the Puritan settlements, and which has done more to improve and elevate the people than any other political institution. By assembling together in town meetings, where all freemen met on a level, and where every subject, whether secular or religious, was freely discussed, the whole people were made acquainted with each other, learned the policy of the community, and the mode of transacting public business. Here they provided for the support of public worship, for the maintenance of their schools, for the laying out of their highways, supporting their poor, and regulating their internal police. Here, too, were discussed those great principles of civil and political rights which have made us an independent and prosperous nation.

If we were to compare the Puritan Colonies with those settled by a different class of people, we should see at once the effects of Puritan principles. The Colonists who settled in Virginia possessed many natural advantages over the Colonists who settled in Massachusetts. Their climate was more mild and genial, and their soil more productive than ours. Their facilities for commerce and manufactures and agriculture were incomparably greater than those presented to the Massachusetts Colony. And yet the Puritan Colony has been more prosperous than that at Jamestown. In wealth, in learning, in social order, in every thing which goes to make a people truly great, the Colonies settled by the Puritans are decidedly in advance of any others.

Compare the first settlers of Virginia with those of Massachusetts, and the future destiny of the two Colonies will be foreshadowed. The first settlers in Virginia were mostly mere adventurers, who came to the country to retrieve a ruined fortune and return; those in Massachusetts were sober, prudent men, who came here to remain. The former came without families, and so enjoyed none of the chastening endearments of home; the latter brought their wives and children with them, which sanctified their humble dwellings. The one class were, to a great extent, men of idle habits, desperate fortunes, and dissolute characters, too proud to labor, but insolent in demanding their full share of the products of others' toil; while the other class were men of moderate means, but of sober, industrious habits, ready to perform their share of labor, endure their proportion of hardships, and to subsist upon the fruits of their own industry. The Jamestown Colony did not profess any particular regard for religion; while the Colony of Massachusetts made it their bond of union — their solace and support. The former were separated in interest and feeling; the latter were united as a band of brothers. The settlement in Virginia commenced with a distinction of castes — master and servant, lord and serf, the bond and the free, were early recognized as permanent classes; but among the Puritans of Massachusetts such distinctions were ignored. This difference has given marked characteristics to the two States. Hence, in the one, we hear the vain boasts of having descended from one of the privileged class — one of the "first families;" while in the other, all are willing to be recognized as descendants from the humble and hardy Puritan stock.

The relation of master and slave has not only exerted an unfavorable influence upon the morals of the Colony, by making the master haughty and tyrannical, and the slave cringing and servile; but has exerted a baneful influence upon its institutions. Large plantations and a scattered population grow almost necessarily out of that relation, and thus the support of churches and schools is to a great extent rendered impracticable; and the same cause deprives them of the town organization, which has done so much to improve the character and increase the prosperity of New England.

The difference in the two Colonies, growing, in a great measure, out of their religious faith, may be seen in the state of education in each. Massachusetts early established her glorious system of free schools, while Virginia has not, to this day, provided for the education of her whole population. In every thing relating to moral improvement, Massachusetts has been immeasurably in advance of her more southern rival. As early as 1647, Massachusetts, by express statute, required her towns to support schools, while in Virginia, Berkeley, her Governor, as late as 1671, sixty-four years after their first settlement, thanked God that there were neither schools nor printing presses in the Colony, and hoped there would be none for a century to come.

Massachusetts, in 1638, established her University, which was ninety years earlier than any similar institution was created in Virginia. It is also worthy of notice that the first printing press in our own State was set up in 1638, being ninety years earlier than any press in Virginia. The first five issues from the press at Cambridge are so suggestive, that I cannot refrain from naming them in the order of their appearance: The Freeman's Oath, An Almanac, A Psalm Book, A Catechism, A Body of their Laws, entitled a "Body of Liberties." Here we have a portraiture of our Puritan Fathers — a kind of pictorial representation of their thoughts and feelings — their manners and customs. Their Bibles, which they brought with them from England, were, of course, first read; then the Freeman's oath must be taken; then the Almanac consulted to learn the signs of the times; then they were prepared to join in Psalms of Praise, and to teach their children the Catechism; and, after that, they were prepared to study their Body of Liberties, and when they learned their rights, they were ready to assert them in any presence, and to defend them at any hazard whoever might be the aggressor.

We have dwelt longer upon this subject than might at first view appear necessary in a Town History; but, as our Towns are constituent parts of the State, and the source from which the State itself must derive its history, it seemed important to inquire into the character of the men who first settled our townships, and whose acts we are to record, and also to ascertain the general causes which led to our system of town organization. As in courts of justice the character of an act is determined somewhat by the reputation of the actor, so in history in order to judge accurately of the character of a transaction, we should know the parties to enable us to ascertain the motives which led to the transaction. And besides, as institutions are but the embodiment of thoughts and principles, we can understand the nature of our institutions better by becoming conversant with the men who established them — their character, feelings and principles being a sort of cotemporaneous construction of their true meaning. Besides, gratitude to their memory will fully justify us, who are enjoying the fruit of their labor, in passing their many virtues in review. And it is presumed that no one now upon the stage, whose lineage can be traced to the Puritans or Pilgrims, will blush to own such an ancestry.

The early history of the Town of LEXINGTON is included in that of Cambridge, of which it was originally a part. Until its incorporation as a town, in 1713, it was known by the name of Cambridge North Precinct, or more generally by the popular designation of "Cambridge Farms." In like manner Cambridge itself was originally included in, or more properly known by the name of "the Newe Towne," or Newton. It appears to have been the original intention of the General Court to make "the Newe Towne" the Capital of the Colony, and measures were adopted to encourage settlements there; but, some misunderstanding arising with the Governor, and the Newe Towne being, as was alleged, too far from the sea, the Court were induced to select Boston as the seat of Government. It would seem, from the imperfect records of that day, that the territory now included in Charlestown, Somerville, Medford, Winchester, Woburn, and Burlington on the one hand, and Watertown, a portion of Belmont, Waltham, and Weston on the other, was granted before the Newe Towne was created; so that her extension was limited on two sides, at least, and by Boston and Roxbury on the third — her territory lying between the towns above mentioned. But, though the Newe Towne contained a large territory, and the nearest settlements were Boston, Charlestown, Roxbury, and Watertown, like most settlers in a new country, the inhabitants appear to have had a great thirst for land, and they soon began to complain that their limits were too circumscribed. Several disputes arose between them and their neighboring settlements, about their boundaries, and between them and the General Court respecting their limits. It was maintained by Rev. Mr. Hooker in behalf of himself and his flock, then resident in the Newe Towne, that they were actually suffering for the want of room; that it was impolitic to have settlements as near each other as Charlestown, Newe Towne and Watertown; and that, unless their borders were extended, they should be compelled to leave the place, that they might enjoy ample territory and so be able to grow and thrive as a Christian church.

As early as 1634, only three years after the first settlement of the place, they alleged that "the number of inhabitants had become disproportionate to the township." They complained that "they were straitened for want of land, especially meadow, and desired leave of the Council to look out either for enlargement or removal." Their territory, probably, extended at that time nearly to the easterly line of the present town of Lexington. In the meantime the General Court adopted every reasonable means to satisfy their wants. At their session, held on the 25th of September, the General Court adopted the following orders: "It is ordered, with the consent of Watertown, that the meadow on this syde Watertown weire, contayning about thirty acres, be the same more or less, and now vsed by the inhabitants of Newe Towne, shall belong to said inhabitants of Newe Towne to injoy to them and their heirs forever."

"Also it is ordered, that the ground aboute Muddy Ryver [now Brookline] belonging to Boston, vsed by the inhabitants thereof, shall hereafter belonge to Newe Towne; the wood and timber thereof, growinge or to be growinge to be reserved to the inhabitants of Boston; provided, and it is the meaning of this Court, that if Mr. Hooker, and the congregation now settled here, shall remove hence, that then the aforesaid meadow grounds shall return to Watertown, and the grounds at Muddy Ryver to Boston."

But, notwithstanding these grants, and the further enlargement of the boundaries of Newe Towne, so as to "extend eight miles into the country, from their Meeting House,"¹ in 1636, about one hundred of the inhabitants of Cambridge, consisting of the principal part of Rev. Mr. Hooker's church and congregation, which came there in 1632, removed "through a hideous and trackless wilderness to Connecticut, and commenced a settlement at Hartford."² This Colony consisted of men, women, and children, including Mr. Hooker and Mr. Stone, their pastor and teacher; and, being entirely unacquainted with the way, and having no guide but a compass, they passed over hills and through swamps, and thus rendered their journey through the wilderness more protracted, tedious, and trying to them than it otherwise would have been. They drove their cattle, to the number of about one hundred and sixty, with them, and subsisted mainly upon the milk of their flock. They had on their journey, at least, no reason to complain of "being straitened for the want of land, especially meadow." Their journey was long and trying. Mrs. Hooker, the wife of the pastor, was so feeble that she had to be carried upon a litter; and having but few comforts, and being compelled to make the ground their bed, and the sky their covering, they must have suffered severely. But their strong religious feeling, mingled, perhaps, with a little worldly enterprise; their desire to build up a flourishing church, and, at the same time to possess themselves of a large tract of land, sustained and supported them.

The removal of so many persons from Newe Towne was a matter of deep regret not only to the people of the place, but to the Colony. The General Court took every reasonable step to retain them; but being unable to satisfy the desires of these adventurous people, they at last gave their consent for their removal, on condition that they should consider themselves within the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts Colony, and hold themselves subject to her laws.³

But, though Mr. Hooker and his flock had departed, and the boundary of the town had been enlarged, those who remained still regarded their limits as too circumscribed, and manifested a desire to emigrate. The thirst for landed possessions so peculiar to the first settlers in every country, appears to have infected our pious ancestors. They were enduring the hardships incident to a new settlement, and undoubtedly looked with anxiety to a time when they might, in some degree, rest from their severe toil, and have the consolation that when they should be called home, they could leave their children in a condition more favorable than that in which they commenced life. But, that the small settlement at Newe Towne was not particularly pressed for room, will appear from the fact that the township at that time included what is now Newton, Brighton, a part of Brookline, West Cambridge, one half of Lexington, and a portion of Belmont — a territory sufficiently large, one would suppose, to contain and support a few hundred inhabitants.

In 1636, the General Court contemplated the erection of a public school at Newton, and appropriated four hundred pounds for that purpose; this laid the foundation of the University. In 1638, Rev. John Harvard, of Charlestown, endowed this school with about eight hundred pounds. Thus endowed, the school was exalted to a college, and assumed the name of its principal benefactor; and the General Court, in compliment to the college, and in memory of the place where many of their fathers received their education, passed, in 1638, the following order: "That Newe Towne shall henceforward be called Cambridge."¹

To heal the dissatisfaction which existed among the people, and to prevent any further emigration from the place, the General Court had taken measures to extinguish the Indian title within the boundaries of Cambridge, and had instituted inquiries concerning other unappropriated territory, with a view of annex-

¹The present village of Cambridge appears to have been designed as a fortified camp rather than a town. It contained only about one thousand acres, and was to have been inclosed by a ditch and stockade. In 1632, the Court ordered "that £60 be levied out of the several plantations toward the making of a pallysadoe about the Newe Towne." The fosse which was then dug about the place, says Dr. Holmes, in his history of Cambridge, is, in some places, visible to this day.

ing it to New Towne. In 1636, a committee was appointed to view the Shawshine country, and report whether it be fit for a plantation. In 1641, the Court passed the following order: "Shawshine is granted to Cambridge, provided they make it a village, to have ten families there settled within three years; otherwise the Court to dispose of it."

The Shawshine country being rather vague in its extent, and the character of the country being but little known, a committee was appointed to examine the premises, and report to the Court. As their report, made in 1642, casts some light upon this subject, and fixes in some degree the territorial limits of Cambridge in that quarter, we will give it entire:

"Wee, whose names are undeſcribed, being appointed to viewe Shawshine, and to take notice of what fitness it was of, for a village, and according to our apprehensions make return to the Court, we therefore manifest thus much: that for quantity, it is sufficient, but for quality in our apprehensions, no way fit, the upland being very barren, and very little meadow there abouts, nor any good timber almost fit for any use. We went, after we came to Shawshine house, by estimation, some 14 or 16 miles at the least by compass; from Shawshine house wee began to go downe the ryver 4 or 5 miles near east, then wee left that point, and went neere upon north, came to the Concord Ryver, a little below the falls, about one mile or near; then wee went up the ryver some 5 miles, untill wee came to a place called the Two Brethren; and from thence it is about two miles and a half to Shawshine, and the most part of all the good land is given out already; more land there is at the north side of the house, between the side of Concord line and the head of Cambridge line, but littell meadow, and the upland of little worth; and this is that wee can say herein.

SIMON WILLARD,
EDWARD CONVERS."

This Report, being rather unfavorable as to the character of the country, the Court enlarged their grant to Cambridge, and gave them further time to effect a settlement. The grant was in these words: "All the land lying upon the Shawshine River, and between that and Concord River, and between that and the Merrimack River, not formerly granted by this Court, are granted to Cambridge, so as they erect a village there within 5 years, and so as it shall not extend to prejudice Charlestowne village, or the village of Cochitawis^t, nor farms formerly granted to the now Governor of 1,200 acres, and to Thomas Dudley, Esq., 1,500 acres, and 3,000 acres to Mrs. Winthrop; and Mr. Flint, and Mr. Stephen Winthrop are to set out their heade line toward Concord.”

This liberal grant was made in 1642, but no permanent settlement being made, the church in 1644 was about to remove to Muttakeese (now Yarmouth?) where a settlement had recently been commenced. To counteract this movement, the General Court, in 1644, passed the following order: “Shawshine is granted to Cambridge without any condition of making a village there; and the land between them and Concord is granted them, all save what is formerly granted to the military Company, provided the church present continue at Cambridge.”¹

This grant of Shawshine, like most of the grants at that day, was very indefinite, so far as limits are concerned; it is impossible to say, with precision, what was included. It is generally admitted that the Shawshine grant extended to the Merrimack River. It is sufficient to our purpose to know that it included all the town of Billerica, the greater portion of Bedford, and all that part of Lexington north of the eight-mile line. Billerica was incorporated in 1655 into a town by the consent of Cambridge. It was at that time a large territory, bounded on Cambridge Farms, Chelmsford, Andover, Woburn and Concord.

It is difficult to determine, with precision, the date of the first settlements at Cambridge Farms, as the territory was included in Cambridge; and the records of any event in that town, do not generally specify in what part of the town it occurred. Had Lexington been an independent community, with records of its own, many dates could have been fixed, which are now left to conjecture. This part of the town appears to have been regarded as the wood lots and the hay fields of Cambridge. We have seen already, a complaint that they had a deficiency of meadows. Such land at that time was held in high estimation, as it was generally free from wood,¹ and in a condition for mowing fields without the labor of clearing. The people could therefore avail themselves at once of the grass from the meadows, and thus support their herds of cattle, much earlier and more easily than if they were compelled to clear dense forests and subdue the soil. Lexington, at that period, had a considerable share of open land, and hence it was sought by those who resided in the old town. The consequence was that the first lands taken up were held in a good degree by non-residents.

As early as 1642, Herbert Pelham, Richard Champney, Edward Goffee, John Bridge, Edward Collins, John Russell, Golden Moore, Edward Winship, Richard Park, John Betts, and Thomas Danforth were proprietors of land within this township. It is probable that most of them, instead of removing to their lands, continued their residence in Cambridge proper, or in some of the settlements near Boston. Most of these gentlemen were among the early and prominent settlers of Cambridge, and were largely engaged in land speculations, not only in Cambridge Farms, but elsewhere. Such men would not be very likely to remove from comfortable homes in Cambridge to a new settlement, where they would be subjected to many privations and hardships.

Nor is it easy to determine where their lands were situated. The Proprietors' Records cast but little light upon the subject. Where A is bounded upon B, and B upon A, we are simply informed that these lands were contiguous, without knowing the locality of either. Occasionally we find an item bearing upon the location of some of the lots. In 1642, we find a grant to Herbert Pelham: "At the further side of Vine Brook, one house and 600 acres of land; Concord line north, John Bridge west." The same record the same year contains the following entry in favor of Edward Goffee: "By Vine Brook, 600 acres of land, more or less. Herbert Pelham and John Bridge on the north." Under date of January 15, 1645, we have an entry which not only shows to whom the grant was made, but also the indefinite character of the description or boundary, so common at that day. "According to a former act of the townsmen in the year 1643, as appears unto us by their acknowledgment under their hands, it is now also ratified by these presents, a grant unto John Bridge, sen., of twenty acres of ploughed land on this side of Vine Brook eastward, near unto the place where his stacks of hay did stand, in lieu of his lot in the neck, viz., unbroken land only with timber and wood."

It is impossible to state when the first settlement was made at the Farms. As this part of Cambridge was used to obtain hay, it is most likely that the first residents spent only a portion of the year here, and, like fashionable gentlemen at this day, had both a summer and a winter residence. But, be this as it may, it appears that Pelham's grant, in 1642, had a house standing upon it, and that John Bridge had stacks of hay upon his land near Vine Brook, prior to 1645. These lands must have been situated in the southwesterly part of the town near the source of Vine Brook, and were probably among the first lands settled. There is one peculiarity in relation to the settlement of this township, viz., the earliest settlers were generally located near the respective borders of the town, as we shall have occasion to show hereafter. This probably arose from the fact that it was an appendage to another town. Had it been an independent, original grant, some central point would have been selected, around which the population would cluster. Then they would have had their own records, and any act of an individual would have been set down as a part of the history of the place. But as it is, we have to look to the Records of Cambridge, and are unable to say whether they resided at the Farms or in Cambridge proper.

Without pretending to state the exact order or the date of their settlement, we can safely say that the Bridges, Winships, Cutlers, Fiskes, Stones, Bowmans, Merriams, Russells, Wellingtons, Munroes, Tidds, Reeds, Whitmores and Smiths were among the earliest settlers and the most numerous families. We will endeavor to give the general location of these and the other early families. To begin with those who settled on or near what is now the line of West Cambridge:¹ Edward Winship was one of the original owners of land within the present limits of Lexington, though he probably never lived within the township. He owned a large tract bordering upon West Cambridge line, extending from near the main street or Concord road, as it is called in the old Records, north of Gilboa, including the lands now occupied by Oliver Winship, one of his descendants, and also Mount Ephraim, which took its name from his eldest son, Ephraim, who resided near it. Edward Winship, or Lieut. Winship, as he was generally called, erected a saw mill on what was then denominated Mill Brook, on or near the site of the present fur factory. This was undoubtedly the first mill set up within the township. At what time it was erected, we are not able to say; probably as early as 1650. Lieut. Winship, according to the custom of that day, kept his property in his own hands during life, and left it by will in 1688, to his sons Ephraim, Edward, Samuel, and Joseph. The greater part of this property remained in the Winship family for several generations. They were large landholders, and were prominent among the early settlers. Nor were their possessions confined to the northern side of the Concord road; they owned land on the hill on the south side.

Francis Whitmore was an early settler in Lexington, and must have resided on the southerly side of Main street, below Cutler's Tavern, near the present line between Lexington and West Cambridge. The act constituting Cambridge Farms a legal Precinct, refers to the residence of Francis Whitmore in describing the boundary line as "running on the southerly side of Francis Whitmore's house towards the town of Cambridge." Mr. Whitmore married a daughter of Richard Parke, one of the first proprietors of lands at the Farms, about 1648, and probably came to the place soon after his marriage. He became a large land-holder in Cambridge and the neighboring towns. He died in 1685, and his son Samuel succeeded him on his place.

¹The tract of territory which till recently has been known as West Cambridge, was a part of Cambridge till 1807, when it was erected into a town. Its Indian name was Menotomy, and it was afterwards known as the West Precinct. In 1867, the inhabitants petitioned the Legislature for a change of the name of their town, and it was changed to Arlington. Wherever in this work the name of West Cambridge appears, the reader will substitute Arlington.

Southwesterly of Francis Whitmore, and near the present Arlington and Belmont lines, was the Bowman family. Nathaniel Bowman, of Watertown, purchased land of Edward Goffee, in Cambridge Farms, to which he removed. He died in 1682, leaving his real estate to his son Francis, by will, dated 1679. Francis died in 1687, leaving, among other children, Francis and Joseph, who became very prominent men in Lexington. They resided on or near Watertown street, in the neighborhood of the present residence of the Lawrences.

Southwesterly of the Bowmans were the Wellingtons, the descendants of Roger Wellington of Watertown, though they did not come to town till a later period. A portion of the original farm is in possession of the Wellingtons at the present day.

Farther to the west were the Smiths, who came to Lexington from Watertown and Waltham, then a part of Watertown. They were in possession of a large portion of the southerly part of the town, where many of their descendants reside at the present day. They were not, however, among the earliest settlers at the Farms.

Westerly of the Smiths, on lands now partly in Lexington and partly in Lincoln, were the Abbots, who came from Andover, the Stones, who came from Cambridge, and the Merriams, who came from Concord. Northerly of these and nearer the centre of the town, were the Bridges, who came from Cambridge, and were among the very first permanent residents in the place. There were also living in the southwesterly part of the township at a later period, John Parker, Daniel White, Thomas Hastings, John Palfrey, Benjamin Stearnes, George Adams, Daniel Hoar, Judah Clark, Thomas Nelson, and Nathaniel Whittemore. Still more northwesterly, on what was then Concord line, James Cutler, the ancestor of those of that name in Lexington, settled as early perhaps as 1648, and consequently was among the very earliest settlers. He took up his abode on what is now known as Wood street, on or near the spot where William Hartwell now resides.

In the northerly part of the town, on Bedford street, and on land still in possession of his descendants of the same name, William Reed from Woburn settled about 1685. He was a large landholder, and had numerous descendants. He and his son William became prominent in the town. Northwesterly of the Reeds, on the other side of Tophet Swamp, so called, Thomas Kendall, probably from Woburn, settled at an early day. On Bedford street, at or near the late residence of James Pierce, originally from Watertown, resided as early as 1694, John Lawrence. He was the ancestor of the Groton family of Lawrences, of whom Amos and Abbott were prominent members. Northwesterly of this, and on what is now known as the Page Place in Bedford, Joseph Fassett, for many years a prominent citizen of Lexington, resided as early as 1700. Jonathan Trask was a resident in Lexington at a period somewhat later. He lived on the northerly side of the meadow westerly of Bedford street. He was one of the largest farmers in the town. In the neighborhood of Lawrence and Fassett, Nathaniel Dunkley resided; and William Grimes had his abode northwesterly of John Lawrence, and near the present line of Burlington.

The northerly part of the town bordering upon Woburn, now Burlington, was first settled by the Lockes, who came from Woburn; their houses were on the Woburn side of the line. Thomas Blodgett, from Woburn, came to Lexington about 1690, and settled on Adams street, near the Gibbs Place. Between the Blodgetts and the centre of the town, were William Carly, John Johnson, and John Harrington, who was the ancestor of one branch of the numerous family of the name of Harrington.

The Tidds, who came from Woburn, settled in Lexington about 1680. They were at one time quite a numerous family, and lived where Mr. Charles Tidd now resides. The residence of Mr. Nathan Chandler was originally a Tidd place. In the same neighborhood Mr. Joseph Simond settled about 1681. He was also from Woburn, and, marrying into the Tidd family, located himself near his father-in-law, on the place now owned and occupied by Mr. Charles Johnson.

Further to the east, on what is now Woburn street, William Munroe, the ancestor of the numerous family of that name in Lexington and vicinity, settled at an early day near Woburn line. He became a large land-holder, and six of his sons settled around him. As the Munroes were of Scotch descent, they gave the name of their fatherland to that section of the town, which has retained the name of Scotland to the present day. He probably came to Lexington about 1670. In the same neighborhood, but nearer the centre of the town, the Russells, who came early from Cambridge, fixed their abode. They were also large land-holders, and owned several tracts of land on the easterly side of what was then familiarly known as Mill Brook. Col. Phillip Russell resides upon land long in possession of his ancestors of the same name.

The Fiskes, a somewhat numerous family, were among the first settlers at the Farms.. They were located on East street near the residence of the late Joseph Fiske. One branch of the family fixed its residence on the place now occupied by Joseph F. Simonds, on Hancock street. Some of the family subsequently settled on the Concord road, and hence the name of "Fiske Hill."

Having drawn this general outline, and spoken of the families who resided in the out parts of the town, it will be expected that we fill up the picture, and give the names of the families who resided in the centre. We have already intimated that the first settlers resided near the boundaries of the town, when there were no inhabitants in what is now regarded as the village. As their families increased, and the idea of becoming a separate parish was agitated, they would naturally turn their minds to some central point for a village. This would, as a matter of course, induce some of the sons of the first settlers to seek lands near the proposed village for their abode. There were also some families coming into town which would naturally desire the same central location. This contributed to the increase of population in the village. Among those who came into town and settled in the centre, was Benjamin Muzzy, probably from Malden, who bought his farm in 1693. He came to the precinct about that time, and took up his habitation on the place which Rufus Merriam now occupies. He was the ancestor of all the Lexington men of that name. A few years later, John Mason from Watertown settled on the Main street near the old Munroe tavern, and hence the name of "Mason's Hollow."

There is no plan of the township with the lots laid down, and hence it is impossible to state the exact location of the early families. The description given above will serve as a general guide, and other incidents and facts disclosed in the sequel will cast further light upon the subject.

The growth of the settlement was at first slow. A large share of the land being held by speculators, they would naturally retain it in their hands with the hope of an advance in price. The unsettled state of our relations with the Indians, would doubtless deter many from leaving the older settlements, where they felt perfectly secure, and settling in a more exposed township. It is true that the place was never disturbed by the incursions of the savages, yet the fact that during Philip's War, they burnt Sudbury, and Groton, and Andover, and Chelmsford, must have spread terror and dismay through this settlement, at least so far as to check its increase. But after that desolating struggle had terminated by the death of Philip in 1676, the people had rest; and this, as well as other new settlements, received some accessions. In 1682, the number of the families at the Farms amounted to about thirty, and the number of souls to about one hundred and eighty. Several of these families had come to the place within two or three years.

But in addition to the unavoidable privations of a new settlement, they were destitute of what was considered by our pious fathers, one of the indispensable prerequisites to the growth and prosperity of the place. They had no ministry among them, and so had no convenient opportunity of enjoying the ordinances of the Gospel, without traveling from five to ten miles. With this state of things they could not long be contented. Johnson, in his "Wonder-Working Providence," has justly said of our fathers, "It is as unnatural for a right New England man to live without an able ministry, as for a smith to work his iron without fire." Actuated by such feelings as are here implied, in October, 1682, the people petition the General Court to be set off as a distinct parish. This petition was signed by James Cutler, Matthew Bridge, Jr., David Fiske, Sen., Samuel Stone, Sen., Francis Whitmore, John Tidd, Ephraim Winship, and John Winter, in behalf of themselves and the inhabitants of the Farms. The people of Cambridge zealously opposed the separation, and the prayer of the petitioners was not granted.

The application, however, was renewed in 1684, when the Court appointed a Committee to inquire into the merits of the case; and if they were satisfied that the prayer ought to be granted, to report a suitable boundary for the parish. The Committee, after due investigation, reported favorably to the petitioners; but the opposition of Cambridge again prevailed, and the report of the Committee was defeated. Conscious of the rectitude of their intentions, and the justice of their cause, they renewed their petition in 1691; when the Court, in view of the inconvenience under which they labored, and of the growth of the settlement, granted their request, as will be seen by an entry upon their Journal under date of December 15, 1691.

“Upon reading the petition of the farmers within the precinct and bounds of the town of Cambridge towards Concord, therein setting forth their distance, (the nearest of them living about five miles) from Cambridge Meeting House, their place of worship, praying that according to a former application by them several years since made unto this Court, for the advantage of themselves, families, and property; they may have this Court’s favor and license in order to the calling of a fit minister for dispensing the Gospel among them; also that they may become a distinct village for the end proposed in their said petition; the Selectmen of Cambridge having had a copy of said petition sent them with a notification of the time for their being heard thereupon this day, and accordingly attending :

“After a full hearing and consideration of what was offered by both parties, it is granted and ordered by this Court, that the Petitioners be and they hereby are permitted and allowed to invite and settle an able and orthodox minister, for the dispensing of the Gospel among them, and that all the inhabitants living within the line formerly stated by a Committee of this Court, A. D. 1684, ‘beginning at the first mentioned water or swampy place over which is a kind of bridge in the way, on the south side of Francis Whitmore’s house towards the town of Cambridge aforesaid, across the neck of land lying between Woburn line and that of Watertown side, upon a southwest and northeast course,' do pay unto the minister's maintenance there, and are hereby empowered annually to choose three or five meet persons to assess their inhabitants for the support and maintenance of their minister; as also a constable or collector to gather the same, by warrant from said assessors. The said farmers not being hereby discharged from paying their proportion as formerly unto all public charges in the town, except what refers to the ministry, so long as they maintain an able minister among themselves."

In the description of the boundary of the Precinct only one line is mentioned; the other portions bordering on Watertown, Woburn, Concord and Billerica, rendered a description of those lines unnecessary. The order conferring corporate powers upon the people of the Farms, constituted them a Precinct and gave them authority to manage their parochial affairs; but in all other respects they remained a part of Cambridge as before.

Being incorporated December, 1691, the people assembled for the first time under the act, on the 22d of April, 1692, and made choice of David Fiske, Sen., as Clerk, "to write the votes of the inhabitants of the place, and to keep a record of them." This was the first corporate act of the farmers, and here their records commence. Before this date, all we know of the people of Cambridge Farms, is gleaned from the Cambridge records, and other records and papers found in the hands of individuals. At their first meeting, April 22d, after organizing by the choice of a clerk, they proceeded to carry out the object for which they had sought corporate powers, viz. that of obtaining a stated ministry—by voting "That Mr. Benjamin Estabrook shall be the man that should be invited to preach to them, by a clear voat, and that he shall be spoken to to preach to us, a year from the first of May, 1692; and that Samuel Stone, Sen., and David Fiske, Sen., should speak to him to come and preach to us as aforesaid."

"Voted, That we will give him forty pounds for a year, half in money, viz., twenty pounds, and twenty pounds in other pay at money prise, and that it should be for his salary, and to supply for his entertainments."

Previous to this meeting and probably immediately after obtaining their act of incorporation in December, 1691, an effort was made to erect a meeting house in the Precinct, and a subscription was set on foot to obtain funds for that purpose. This subscription is preserved, and is the oldest paper upon our records; and it becomes exceedingly valuable, as it bears the names of the principal inhabitants, and shows the interest they felt in the cause of religious institutions. This paper, which we shall give entire, is valuable in several respects. It not only contains the names of the inhabitants, but is generally a fair relative valuation of the property which each one possessed; for it should be remembered that at that day and for such an object, the people generally contributed according to their means. I shall have occasion to refer to this list frequently in the sequel.

DAVID FISKE,
SAMUEL STONE,
EPHRAIM WINSHIP, } Assessors.

These two papers, the subscription for the meeting house, and the first tax bill for the support of their minister, are both valuable, as they contain the names of all the male inhabitants, and show us who were the largest holders of real estate at the incorporation of the precinct. The tax bill contains a full list of the ratable inhabitants, while the subscription, though it does not bear the name of every citizen, contains the names of some who were not resident in the place, but felt an interest in the prosperity of the settlement. There is also a remarkable coincidence between the tax and the subscription, which speaks well for the liberality of the inhabitants. On the subscription, David Fiske, Sen., Samuel Stone, Sen., Matthew Bridge, Sen., Ephraim Winship, Joseph Simonds and William Munroe, stand the six highest, and on the tax bill the same gentlemen maintain their relative position. In fact, the two papers show that each one was willing to bear his share of the burdens of supporting religious institutions, whether they were imposed by a tax or left to his voluntary offering, — a fact which, we fear, would put many members of religious societies at this day to the blush.

The last tax bill spread out upon the record is in 1696, and bears the names of about a dozen tax payers not found on the list three years before. This increase consists of several young men who had arrived at a taxable age, and several others who had come into town. Among the latter were Ebenezer Whitney, Ebenezer Nutting, Daniel White, Joseph Grant, John Wilson, James Wilson and John Lawrence. I have been thus particular in giving the names of the tax payers, because it fixes the residence of individuals, and gives, proximately, the population at that period.

Being organized as a parish, the people took measures to secure to themselves the great object for which they had sought corporate powers, the enjoyment of a Gospel ministry. The meeting house contemplated by the subscription of which we have spoken, was erected early in the year 1692. It was located at the junction of the Concord and Bedford roads, near where the hay scales now stand. Having engaged Mr. Estabrook to preach for them one year and provided a house of worship, they looked forward to a continued ministry and its permanent support. At their second parish meeting, held March 1, 1692-3, after choosing their appropriate officers, they adopted the following measure, the effect of which is felt to this day : —

"It was voted that a pece of land shall be bought for the ministry, and payd for by the inhabitants by a rate."

"David Fiske, Sen., Samuel Stone, Sen., Ephraim Winship, Benjamin Muzzy, William Munroe and John Teed shall treat with the town of Cambridge to by or obtain a pece of land for our ministry."

At a meeting on the 24th of the same month, "It was voted that we will empower the men chosen to treat with the selectmen of Cambridge, and their committee, about the purchasing of the land about the casey, and to make a full agreement with them, either to buy the whole of said land, or a part of it, which they may see fit, for our ministry; and that we engage to stand to what these men shall agree unto, and that we will bear every man their proportion of money for the purchasing said land." The men chosen as aforesaid were David Fiske, Sen., Samuel Stone, Sen., John Teed, Ephraim Winship, Benjamin Muzzy, William Munroe, Sen., William Reed and Francis Bowman,—the two last being added to the former committee. These men met the selectmen of Cambridge, and bought all the common land aforesaid, viz., "that on the east side of the casey by measure for 10 shillings per acre, 12 acres, 6 pounds; and the rest of the common land on the other side, and on the south side of Vine Brook meadow, for 12 pounds in money." This was done April 28, 1693, as appears under the hand of the town clerk of Cambridge, Jonathan Renington. A rate was made for the payment of this money upon all the inhabitants.

This was the foundation of the Ministerial Fund, which has proved, as such funds generally do, a source of evil as well as good.

After adopting measures for the support of the ministry, the people were desirous of having a settled minister. Mr. Estabrook had been employed only by the year, and, being gratified with his labors, they were anxious that the tenure of the relation should be rendered more permanent; and hence, at their meeting March 24, 1692-3, they adopted the following hearty and sincere vote, though rather equivocally expressed: "At a meeting of the inhabitants it was voted, that wee will give Mr. Benjamin Estabrook a call to settle with us, our minister for time to come, till God's providence otherwise dispose of him."

To show the sincerity of the invitation, and their high appreciation of him as a man and as their spiritual guide, it was voted at a subsequent meeting, "that wee will build a house for Mr. Estabrook upon his own land, 42 feet long and 18 feet wide, 14 feet studs, and a cellar under one of the rooms; and engage to pay every man his proportion to the building and finishing the same; and we give power to the selectmen to levy the charge upon every man in our precinct."

When this house was finished, it was presented to him on the following liberal and manly terms: "Voted, that the house built for Mr. Benjamin Estabrook should be delivered to him freely without any obligation, but his settling with us, and his taking of us with us, and abiding with us." This house was situated on the easterly bank of Vine brook, between Main street and the railroad.

Having given Mr. Estabrook a call to the permanent work of the ministry among them, they recommended the formation of a church, and adopted measures for his ordination. But while they were preparing for the settlement of a minister, they did not overlook the house in which he was to hold forth, and where they were to attend upon his teaching. The meeting house erected in 1692, appears not to have been finished in the inside. But with the increase of their means, and the prospect of a settled minister, they were desirous of "setting their house in order." At a meeting held, March 26, 1695, they adopted a vote replete with care and gallantry, showing that they were alive to every good work, and not behind the times in all improvements save in orthography. "It was voted that the meeting house shal first be repayered, and that the bodey of seats shal be driven back, and that there shal be a table set up before the body of seats, the whol length of the body seats; and that the meeting house shall be scelled up with pine boards, and handsom seats for women be made on each side the meeting house, raised to convenient height, of which that on the east side next the door shal be for Mrs. Estabrook."

It was also voted "that the galary shall be enlarged, and thre seats made on each side galary, and four seats in the front galary, all made and well finished;" and "Samuel Winship, Jonathan Poulter, Samuel Stone, west, Joseph Teed and Benjamin Muzzy" were entrusted with the execution of the work.

Having provided a house for Mr. Estabrook, and for the refitting of the meeting house, they made further provision for his maintenance — the sum heretofore offered being deemed inadequate. It was voted, "1. That for the next three years to com, we will give Mr. Estabrook, for his salary, forty-five pounds, per year, to be paid him half in money; the other half, if it be not paid in money, that what it is, shall be paid him at money prise. Also that there shall be one contribution every quarter of the year, the above-said three years, and what is then given shall be paid to Mr. Estabrook, besides the above-named forty-five pounds.

"2. It was voted that after the aforesaid three years are out, the four quarterly contributions shall cease, and for the future we will pay him for his salary fifty-six pounds per year, in and as money, he continuing to preach with us, and take offis with us.

"3. It was also voted that the selectmen or assessors and constable for the time being, being chosen from year to year, shall stand engaged for the payment of the aforesaid salary, and shall clear up their accounts with the minister within the year, and that what is paid, that is not money, shall be brought to the minister's house by the persons voted their proportion to pay, and the account brought in by them to the constable."

These terms being acceptable to Mr. Estabrook, the 21st of October, 1696, was fixed upon for his ordination, and the selectmen and John Merriam were directed "to provide what is necessary for the entertainment of the Magestral Ministers and Messengers of the Church that day."

Mr. Estabrook was accordingly ordained, October 21, 1696, agreeably to the arrangement. Thus was perfected the great purpose for which they had for years been laboring. They built them a house of worship; they had gathered a Christian church; and to give life and vitality to the institutions of religion in their midst, and especially to render their gospel privileges permanent, they had a tried and faithful pastor settled over them, according to the usages of the churches. No doubt they regarded this as an important era in their history, and looked forward with fond anticipation to years of Christian edification and prosperity. But alas, how uncertain are human anticipations! How fleeting are our visions of bliss! On the 22d of July, 1697, after a ministry of only nine months, Mr. Estabrook was removed from his earthly labors to the great regret of his little flock.

Soon after the death of Mr. Estabrook, the attention of the society was directed to Mr. John Hancock, son of Nathaniel Hancock, of Cambridge. On the 7th of November, 1697, the parish made choice of him to preach for them till the May following as a candidate for settlement. He complied with their request, and subsequently received a call for a permanent settlement—which he accepted; and on the 2d of November, 1698, he was publicly ordained as their pastor. They agreed to give him eighty pounds as a settlement, and to pay him the same salary they had given his predecessor, Rev. Mr. Estabrook.

Having settled their minister on terms acceptable to the parties, the attention of the people was again called to their house of worship, and to the accommodation of the worshippers. It seems that liberty had been given to Captain William Reed, "to make a sette for his wife in y^e Meeting House, on y^e men's side in the hindermost seate, five foote of the east end of it, and so up to the stayers against it, for y^e use forementioned." The erection of this seat by Capt. Reed induced others to make a similar application, and at a meeting held March 6, 1698-9, "Liberty was granted to Robert Merriam, Joseph Stone, Jonathan Poulter, John Munroe and Thomas Merriam to byeld a seat for their wives, on the within back side of the Meeting House, from Goodwife Reed's to the women's stayers."

But these individual efforts failed to meet the public wants, and the parish itself took the matter in hand. At a meeting, Sept. 6, 1700, "It was then agreed that they would build tow upper galleries, and put it in the hands of the Assessors and Committee to doe the work decently and well, and to agree with the workmen for the price of it; this Committee is to be understood that Committee that was chosen at the last publique Meeting in June."

Though the people at the Farms had asked simply to be incorporated as a parish, and gave their first attention and care to the church, they did not entirely overlook the affairs of state. Feeling that they were in danger from sudden incursions of the Indians, and that their distance from the village of Cambridge, where the arms and ammunition were deposited, rendered them nearly useless to them in case of a sudden attack, they directed "Capt. William Reed, Lieutenant Thomas Cutler, and Ensign Simonds, to petition the town of Cambridge, that that part of the public stock of ammunition for the town which is supposed to belong to our share, may be kept in the parish; and it was also voted that those three gentlemen should take care for and provide a place to keep it in."

Nor did the good people of the parish overlook the wants of the rising generation. "It was also agreed and voted, that the town [of Cambridge] be requested to allow six pounds out of the town's rate for the encouragement of a school in the precinct." Neither did they confine their care to mere intellectual culture such as would be taught in the schools. They saw the importance of moral and religious culture, and felt it their duty to watch over the morals of the children and youth; and hence at a meeting held January 28, 1700, "It was voted that Joseph Locke, John Lawrence, John Mason and Jonathan Poulter be requested to take some prudent care that the children and youth may not play at meeting, and thereby profane the Lord's Day." And while they were desirous that their children should be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and so become ornaments of his church, and reflect honor upon the religion they professed, they had a just appreciation of the temporal wants of him whom they had chosen as their spiritual guide, and upon whose labors they must depend, in a great degree, in accomplishing that desirable and all-important end. Hence it was "voted that the Rev. Mr. Hancock's salary should be advanced to sixty pounds, payable as before, and the quarterly contributions to continue till further order." It was also voted that Mr. Hancock be allowed to take timber from the parish land to repair his buildings and fences, and wood sufficient to supply his fires.

The meeting house erected in 1692, stood at the junction of the Concord and Bedford roads, near the present hay scales, and was upon land included within the highways; the land which now constitutes the Common being private property. Seeing the propriety of securing a plot near the meeting house for a public common, at a meeting held in April, 1711, it was agreed by the inhabitants of the precinct to buy the land about the meeting house, of Mr. Benjamin Muzzy, and to do it by subscription. A paper was accordingly drawn up and circulated, and the following names and sums were obtained :

This subscription fell a trifle short of the purchase money, which was sixteen pounds, and was undoubtedly made up by individuals. The deed given by Mr. Muzzy, bearing date June 14, 1711, acknowledges the receipt of sixteen pounds, paid by "the inhabitants of that most northerly part and precinct of Cambridge commonly called Cambridge Farms, towards Concord," and grants "to the said inhabitants and their successors forever, a certain parcel of land, by estimation one acre and a half, more or less, lying and being situate in Cambridge Farms, nigh the meeting house, and is bounded northerly by the said Muzzy as the fence now stands, and elsewhere by highways; to have and to hold said land with all the timber, stones, trees, wood and underwood, herbage and messuage, with all and singular, the profits, privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging."

This land, though bought by individuals of the parish, appears to have been dedicated to public use. In January, 1713, they voted to locate their meeting house upon this land, so that, when the parish became a town, and the town as successor of the parish came into possession of this property, they took it subject to the right of the parish to occupy such portion of it as might be necessary for a meeting house, and the necessary appurtenances to the same. Consequently, the parish continued this use of a portion of the common more than a century, and abandoned that use in 1846, since which time the whole property has been in the possession of the town, which now holds it by a clear and indisputable title; and the Revolutionary associations which cluster around this spot, render it one of the consecrated battle-fields of our country, which will be remembered and honored as long as freedom has a votary, or heroic deeds command the admiration of mankind.

Being merely a precinct, the people had no legal power to provide themselves with schools or roads, or even to select their own local town officers; and being eight miles from Cambridge, and having an interest in many respects different from that of the central village, it is natural to suppose that they would desire to set up for themselves, that they might the better supply their own wants, and manage their own affairs in their own way. At a meeting held October 28, 1712, they chose a committee to confer with the town of Cambridge and to petition the General Court to erect them into a town.

This committee subsequently received a renewed expression of the same sentiments, and were by their constituents clothed with full powers to make such an arrangement with the people of Cambridge as they might deem expedient and equitable between the parties. In virtue of this authority they made an arrangement with the parent town for a separation, the new town becoming obligated to support in part what was denominated the "great bridge" over Charles river in Cambridge, of which we shall speak more particularly hereafter.

While the people at the Farms were aspiring at the independence of a town, and taking active measures to secure that end, they kept a steadfast eye upon those religious institutions on which their prosperity as a parish or a town must mainly depend. They therefore resolved to build them a meeting house more capacious in its dimensions, and one which would meet the wants of the growing population of the place. At a meeting held January 9, 1713, they voted to build a new meeting house on the plan of the one at Concord, — the house to be fifty feet long, forty feet wide, and twenty feet studs, with one tier of galleries, — to be located upon the land recently bought of Benjamin Muzzy. A committee, consisting of Capt. William Reed, Quarter-master Samuel Stone, Sergeant John Munroe, Mr. Thomas Merriam and Mr. Thomas Blodgett, was chosen to carry the measure into effect.

This meeting house, the second erected in the place, was situated in the rear of the former, and nearly half way between the hay scales and the liberty pole. This house stood till it was superseded by another, built 1793, which was placed twenty feet in the rear of its predecessor. The house here proposed to be built was the one standing on the common at the opening of the Revolution.

Having arrived at a period when the corporate character of the place was to be changed, and the precinct was to be merged in the town, we may well pause and reflect upon the scenes through which the infant settlement had passed, the difficulties and dangers they had encountered, and the progress they had made. We have seen that for about a half a century they had no organization of their own, no centre of attraction around which to gather; but were like a distant colony, doomed to provide for themselves, and yet under the control of the home government. They were deprived of the advantages of schooling for their children, and, in a great degree, of the privileges of gospel institutions. In a word, they were citizens of Cambridge, governed by Cambridge regulations, subjected to Cambridge restrictions and taxed to maintain Cambridge institutions, and, at the same time, were so remote as to be deprived, in a great degree, of Cambridge privileges. Not, however, that the town of Cambridge was severe or exacting, or intended to be oppressive upon those who dwelt upon her remote territory. But, from the necessity of the case, they were deprived of many privileges enjoyed in more central localities, and exposed to many hardships from which their more favored townsmen were exempt.

Their isolated position and dependence upon a remote settlement, deprived them of those motives to build up institutions of their own, which are so essential to the growth and prosperity of any community. These circumstances were unfavorable to the increase of population, and so kept them longer in a state of comparative destitution. Living, as we do, in these days of prosperity, we can hardly realize the trials and privations of the first settlers. We can picture to ourselves the hardships encountered in the distant western wilderness, and the sufferings in unexplored regions of our country; but can hardly realize that here—in the midst of a thriving population, in the centre of plenty and luxury, where agriculture pours forth all her stores, manufactures supply all the necessaries, and commerce all the luxuries, of life—there could ever have been want and destitution, dangers and sufferings. But so it was. This section was once new, once the abode of savages and wild beasts, and our fathers who first explored these hills and dales, cleared dense forests and subdued a rugged soil, had to encounter the same toils and dangers, and submit to the trials and privations which fall to the lot of those who now penetrate the wilds of Nebraska and Oregon.

There is a kind of poetry in the descriptions of frontier adventure and wilderness life. We are animated by tales of dangers encountered and difficulties overcome, of clearing dense forests, and making the wilderness rejoice and blossom as the rose. But after all, those who pass through these scenes know that there are tangible hardships and sober realities in the toils and privations, the dangers and sufferings, of a frontier life. To be exiled from the abodes of civilization, to be cut off from the comforts and enjoyments of a settled country, to roam with beasts of prey joint tenants of the forest, to dwell in rude habitations, and be doomed to incessant toil to obtain a coarse and scanty subsistence, — may be made attractive in a romance, or pleasing in song; but when they are brought home to the experience of men, they are found to be evils to be avoided rather than blessings to be desired.

It is true that the settlers at Cambridge Farms were not very far distant from the settlements at Cambridge and Watertown; but these towns at that day were not what they are at present; and these neighboring settlements, though they might, under some circumstances, afford protection, could not impart plenty, or relieve the daily pressing wants of the inhabitants. A grandchild of one of the early settlers in this place says: "The old patriarch has often related with tears in his eyes the poverty and destitution experienced, the hardships borne, and the trials endured by the first inhabitants of the place. Their dwellings were small and rude, — the same room serving the various purposes of kitchen and parlor, dining-room and bedroom, storehouse and workshop. Their furniture was of the most primitive kind; blocks or forms made of split logs furnished their seats, wooden spoons, made with a knife, enabled them to eat their bread and milk, or bean porridge, out of rude bowls or troughs, cut with an axe from blocks of wood."

With such accommodations, and with comforts corresponding, their condition was not calculated to excite envy or stimulate pride, but rather to excite commiseration in others and the most untiring industry and rigid frugality in themselves. They subsisted upon simple food, clothed themselves with coarse fabrics of their own production, and were sheltered by rude and inconvenient huts. But by persevering efforts, by almost incessant labor, they contrived to subsist, and, in most cases, to rear large families, a blessing somewhat peculiar to new settlements.

Though the history of the place from its first settlement to its incorporation as a town presents no thrilling incidents or events of much magnitude, yet the ordinary routine of business and the developments of institutions furnish us with a true picture of New England character, and the manners and customs of the age. We have seen that the first great object of the people was to rear religious institutions. Attached as they were to schools, and anxious as they were for roads, and inclined as they were to military defence, we have seen that their first object was to erect a meeting house and call a minister, that they might bring the sanctions of religion to bear upon the community, and so give permanency and tone to all other institutions. This prominence of the religious idea, this elevating of divine accountability above every other consideration, this exaltation of public worship over all other duties, displays what may be denominated the New England conviction that God is our strength and our refuge, and that communities, as well as individuals, must draw their sustenance from this life-giving fountain.

Another prominent idea of that age, which exhibits itself in the history of this and every New England community, is the importance of the military arm to the safety of both Church and State. We see this in the prominence they gave to military titles. Not only do their records speak of captains and subalterns, but even the warrant officers are honored with their appropriate designations; and a mere glance at the records will show that these military offices were generally filled by the most substantial men in the place. If a committee is wanted to discharge some of the most important duties, it is generally composed of Captain A. and Lieutenant B. and Sergeant C. or Corporal D. Such men were selected for these important civil services, not because they had military titles, but because they were the prominent men in the place, and owed their military title to the fact that they were prominent men. The conviction that in giving us a being, the Almighty had granted the right of self-defence, or more properly, imposed the duty of self-preservation, led them to keep up a military organization. Knowing that communities had the same right of self-preservation as individuals, they availed themselves of their corporate power to provide for the common defence; and knowing the importance of this trust, they selected their wisest and most reliable men to fill all military offices. They brought the sanctions of religion to bear upon every department of the civil service, and made every office in the State uphold the institutions of religion; and hence the office of captain and deacon were equally important, and were often held by the same person; and to be a tithingman was as honorable as to be a selectman or a magistrate.

CHAPTER II.

FROM THE INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN TO THE CLOSE OF THE FRENCH WARS.

The Town Incorporated — Its first Organization — Weights and Measures provided — Roads laid out — Meeting House seated — Ebenezer Hancock settled as Colleague with his Father — Duty of Tythingmen at Church — The North and South Side — Representatives to serve for Six Shillings per Day — Death of Rev. John Hancock — Rev. Mr. Clark settled — Lincoln incorporated into a Town, taking off a Portion of Lexington — Representatives shall pay to the Town all they receive over Three Shillings per Day — Isaac Stone gives the Town a Bell — French Wars — Expedition to Cuba — To Louisburg — Number of Soldiers furnished — Warning out of Town.

RESIDING at a distance from the old parish, and possessing nothing but parochial powers, the inhabitants of the precinct petitioned the General Court to be incorporated as a town, that they might enjoy the full powers of a municipal corporation. Their petition received a favorable answer, and the Court adopted an Order which received the royal sanction on the 20th of March, 1712. As this Order was passed before the change of style, the 20th of March, 1712, would correspond with the 31st of March, 1713, in our mode of reckoning. As this Order is the organic law of the town of Lexington, it seems proper to give it in full.

“Whereas, upwards of twenty years since, the inhabitants or farmers dwelling on a certain tract of land within the township of Cambridge, in the county of Middlesex, being remote from the body of the town toward Concord, obtained leave of the General Court, with the approbation of the town, to be a hamlet or separate Precinct, and were set off by a line, viz., Beginning at the first run of water or swampy place, and which is a kind of a bridge in the way or road, on the southerly side of Francis Whitmore's house towards the town of Cambridge aforesaid, across the neck of land between Woburn line and that of Watertown side, upon a southwest and northeast course, commonly called the North Precinct, and being now increased, have obtained the consent of the town, and made application to this Court to be made a separate and distinct town upon such terms as they and the town of Cambridge have agreed upon, that is to say, that the said northern part when made into a township, shall bear such part of the two-thirds of the charge of the great bridge over Charles river in Cambridge, as shall be according to their proportion with the town of Cambridge annually in the Province tax, and they shall annually pay to the Treasurer of the town of Cambridge their part of the charges aforesaid; and such other articles as the town and the precinct have already agreed upon by their committees,— “Ordered, That the aforesaid tract of land, known by the name of the North Precinct, in Cambridge, be henceforth made a separate and distinct Town, by the name of LEXINGTON, upon the articles and terms already agreed upon with the town of Cambridge, and the inhabitants of the said town of Lexington be entitled to have, exercise and enjoy, all such immunities, powers, and privileges, as other towns of this Province have and do by law use, exercise, and enjoy.

“And the constable of said precinct is hereby directed and empowered to notify and summon the inhabitants duly qualified for votes to assemble and meet together for the choosing of town officers.”

Immediately after the passage of this Order, or as it was in fact, Act of Incorporation, the inhabitants of Lexington assembled to organize by the choice of town officers. As this election shows who the leading men were at that period, and to whom the people of the new town were willing to intrust the management of their municipal affairs, it is well to give a list of the town officers.

MATTHEW BRIDGE, Capt. WILLIAM REED, Lieut. FRANCIS BOWMAN, Ensign JOSEPH SIMONDS, Deacon JOHN MERRIAM,—Selectmen.

MATTHEW BRIDGE,—Town Clerk.

JAMES WILSON, JOHN MASON,—Constables.

FRANCIS BOWMAN, WILLIAM MUNROE, SAMUEL STEARNS,—Assessors.

JOSEPH TIDD,—Sealer of Weights and Measures.

Lieut. THOMAS CUTLER, THOMAS BLODGETT, SAMUEL WHITMORE,—Tythingmen.

This being a new era in the history of this people—their corporate powers as a town extending beyond what they had before enjoyed—it is natural to suppose that they would enter at once upon the exercise of those powers, the want of which they had seriously felt under their parish charter. Accordingly we find the selectmen, the fathers of the town — a board which at that day exercised more extended powers than they do at the present time — taking active measures to build up all necessary town institutions.

“Lexington, April 6, 1713:—Att a selectmen’s meeting, it was then agreed that they would build a Pound, and that it should be four lengths of rails one way, and thre the other; and gathe five foot wide; and that it should stand at the end of Dea. Merriam’s stable, and by Sergeante Munroe’s stone wall.

“2. That they would erect a payer of Stocks.¹

“3. That they would provide the Town with weights and measures.”

Having provided for the restraint of all unruly beings, whether bipeds or quadrupeds, by erecting stocks and building a pound, the people hastened to provide that religious instruction which was designed to supersede the one and render the other almost unnecessary.

“At a publique meeting att Lexington, April y^e 20th, 1713, orderly warned and assembled, to grant four hundred and sixteen pounds money² to the Committee for building the Meeting House — this was unanimously voted in the affirmative.”

¹ Stocks were regarded in those days, as an institution which no town could dispense with. In fact, they were required by law, and towns were frequently fined for not erecting and maintaining them. They were constructed of plank or timbers attached by a hinge or something of that sort, at one end, and so arranged that they could be opened and closed at pleasure. The edges of the plank or timbers, where they came together, were so cut or rounded out, as to admit the wrists, ankles, and sometimes necks of the culprits, when the stocks were opened; and when they were closed, the individuals put therein were held fast by the arm, leg, or neck, and sometimes by all at the same time, during the pleasure of the authorities; for when they were closed and locked, it was impossible for the individual to extricate himself. These stocks were sometimes located in public squares, and sometimes near or in the meeting house. In some cases they were placed under the stairs leading to the galleries in their churches. In fact, being the prison where the Tythingmen confined the unruly, they were regarded as a necessary appendage to the meeting house — as important in good society as a “sounding board” over the pulpit, or a “horse block” near the house. These stocks were maintained in the towns and in the counties, and were used as places of restraint, and as instruments of punishment. They are frequently denominated “bilboes,” in the early records.

² The currency at that day was undergoing a depreciation. It stood, in 1713, about twelve per cent. below par; so that the sum granted for the meeting house was in fact about three hundred sixty-six pounds, which would build a very respectable house at that period.

The subject of public or high ways, so important to every settlement, early attracted the attention of the town. Up to the time of their incorporation as a town, they had no jurisdiction over this subject. Certain roads had been laid out by Colonial and County authority, and the proprietors of lands had generally made liberal provision for roads between their ranges of land; but these had been generally disregarded by the subsequent owners, who had inclosed these reservations within their lots; and besides, it must be perfectly obvious that no system of public ways could be adopted in advance, which would meet the wants of subsequent settlers. This whole matter would naturally be one of the first subjects to call for the interposition of the town authorities; and it appears from their records that it received early attention, — records which show that the former times were not materially different from these, and that the remedies efficient at that day might well be resorted to at this: —

“Lexington, March y^e 1st, 1713-4. — Att a meeting of the selectmen, discourse being on foot concerning highways that were enclosed by sundry persons, and a warrant was procured from a justice of the peace by the selectmen to open some of them, then Capt. William Reed being present, did say that for the peace and quietness of the town, he would give a highway for Thomas Kendall, and the neighborhood westerly of him, through his own land easterly into the town road or highway, where it might be convenient, for the acknowledgment of those highways that he hath already enclosed; and also that he would hang a gate upon the highway that leads to the clay ground, which is the town's interest.”

John Harrington, Joseph Tidd, John Lawrence, James Wilson, Thomas Mead, Nathaniel Dunklee, Joseph Fassett, Philip Burdoe and others came forward and admitted that they had inclosed certain highways, which they would open, or pay a consideration to the town.

“June 28, 1714. — At a meeting of the selectmen, it was agreed that John Muzzy should have their approbation to keep a publique house for entertainment, and his father (Benjamin Muzzy) did engage before the selectmen to accommodate his son John, with stable room, hay, and pasturing, so far as he stood in need for the support of strangers.”

This was probably the first public house duly opened in the town, and was situated at or near the present residence of Mr. Rufus Merriam, on the easterly side of the Common.

The inhabitants, by their officers, embraced an early opportunity to define and fix the boundaries of the township. Committees were appointed to meet those from other towns to establish the lines and erect suitable bounds. They also took measures to provide a school house for the improvement of the rising generation; so that the learning obtained in the school might prepare the young to comprehend the teachings from the pulpit, and the instruction from the sacred desk might guide and sanctify the lessons of the school room.

But another duty, and one of no ordinary character, devolved upon the town. They had caused a new meeting house to be erected; but how was it to be occupied? All were expected to meet within its walls; but who should take the highest seat? This was a question of great moment and of considerable delicacy,—a question which proved a source of great trouble in many towns at that day. The “seating of the meeting house” was frequently pregnant with more animosity than the building of it. It was, to say the least, regarded as a grave question, and one to be managed with great wisdom and prudence. Consequently, the subject was generally referred to a large committee of the most judicious men, that full justice might be done to all; and lest the committee themselves should, from personal interest or vanity, place themselves too high, or, from extreme diffidence and modesty, too low, in the scale of dignity, some towns took the precaution to appoint a second committee to assign seats for the first. It would be amusing to look at the records of different parishes to see the instructions given to their committees on this subject. One record which I have before me, instructs the committee “to dignify and seat the meeting house, according to the personal and real estate, and having reference to age and honor.” Another parish record has this entry: “Chose a committee to seat the meeting house, and instructed them to give men their dignity in their sitting in proportion to their minister’s rate they pay, allowing one poll to a rate, making such allowance for age as they shall think proper, except where they are tenants, and in these cases to act the best of their judgment.”

Nearly akin to these instructions were those given by the inhabitants of Lexington to their committee, chosen October 6, 1714, to seat their new house. Ensign Joseph Bowman,

Dea. John Merriam, Capt. William Reed, William Munroe and Thomas Mead were chosen for the purpose, and were instructed to take the following elements into the account, viz. : —

- “ 1. It was voted that they should have respect to age.
- “ 2. That they should have respect to real and personal estate, so far as referred to the meeting house.
- “ 3. To have respect to but one head in a family.
- “ 4. And also they are to place the children where they may be inspected.”

As a difference of opinion might arise in relation to the relative “dignity” of the respective seats, some committees, to remove all doubt, graded the dignity of the different seats as first, second, &c. It may also be important to state that some towns imposed a fine upon any one who should occupy any other seat than the one assigned him. We may think our fathers rather fastidious on this subject, and a little jealous of their “dignity”; but it ought to be remembered that in those days the seats were all common property, and as it was desirable to have families sit together, and to have a permanent seat to which they might repair whenever they came to meeting, there was a convenience, at least, in having some regulation or assignment of the seats. And while we see, or think we see, a little vanity in this case, it may be well to inquire whether there is not some of the same feeling exhibited in our churches at the present day? Is there not a little rivalry manifested whenever there is a sale of pews in a church? The highest seat in the synagogue has not, we apprehend, lost all its charms in our own time; and if it be said that those who buy the best pews in our churches in these days pay the highest price for them, this only shows that our fathers, who were seated according to their tax, could put in the same plea.

The people at that day were alive to every interest of the town, and showed themselves ready to make every effort and bear all reasonable burdens for the well-being of the community. “At a meeting of the inhabitants of Lexington, May 12, 1725, it was voted that the Rev. Mr. Hancock’s salary should be increased to eighty-five pounds.” — “Voted that a rate of fifty pounds be made to defray the public charge in the town this ensuing year.” In 1725, Rev. Mr. Hancock represented to the town that his salary was not sufficient to support himself and family. This probably arose, in some degree at least, from the depreciation of the currency, which at that period had fallen about fifty per cent. The town, seeing the justice of his claim, voted him twenty pounds as a gratuity.

Our fathers were peculiarly watchful of the morals of the community, and were ready, at all times, not only to do good, but to prevent evil, in their corporate capacity. When men were found idle and dissipated, they were ready to take the matter in hand, and as far as practicable to reform them, or at least prevent the spread of the evil. An entry in the selectmen's records, March 29, 1731, shows the manner in which such affairs were treated at that period:—

“Whereas there is a complaint made to the selectmen against Chris. Mashen, Jr., that he is very base, and threatens his parents, and lives idle, and neglects to provide for his family, but rather destroys what they have, by selling household stuff and his clothes, and spending the money for drink, wherefore the selectmen have appointed Mr. Stephen Winship, one of the selectmen, to take care, and proceed with him, as the law directs.”

This kind of discipline was found to work well in the days of our ancestors, and it becomes a serious question whether a little of this paternal watchfulness would not prove beneficial at the present day. Our fathers adopted the maxim that “to be idle was to be vicious,” and consequently they enjoined industry as one of the cardinal virtues.

I have already spoken of the difficult task of “seating the meeting house,” to the satisfaction of the people. Changes of families and of the house itself, seem to have rendered it necessary that this work should be performed periodically. In 1731, the delicate task of “seating the meeting house” was again performed by a committee, and seats were assigned to one hundred and six heads of families.

Having repaired and rescated the meeting house, and made provision, from time to time, for the support of the Rev. Mr. Hancock, according to his wants, the people were disposed to relieve him of a portion of the burdens of his office, by employing a co-laborer with him. Accordingly, at a meeting held Nov. 2, 1733, they gave a call to Mr. Ebenezer Hancock, a son of their reverend pastor, a young man highly esteemed among them, to settle as a colleague with his father, on the following conditions, viz.

“ 1. Three hundred pounds for settlement to be paid to Mr. Ebenezer Hancock, as soon as his father is deceased, and if he decease before that time, his heirs shall not care for it.

“ 2 To give Mr. Hancock and his son Ebenezer, two hundred pounds a year for two years,—he keeping the school as this past year now running. The two hundred pounds a year to begin as soon as he enters into the work of the ministry, but the school to begin for two years next May.

“ 3. Quitting the ministerial land, the town to find him wood.

“ 4. Two hundred pounds a year without the school to Mr. Hancock and his son, during Mr. Hancock's life, and one hundred and thirty pounds a year after his decease, while he continues in the ministry with them.

“ 5. The vote to call him to office, put to vote whether the inhabitants of the Town will choose Mr. Ebenezer Hancock, and give him a call to the Pastoral office in this town, upon the aforementioned conditions and considerations, which vote was brought in by papers, and it passed in the affirmative by a very great majority.”

This call was accepted by Mr. Hancock, with a modification which the town readily agreed to, that in case he should die before his father, the three hundred pounds settlement should be paid to his wife and children, if he should have any. The preliminaries being settled, the ordination took place, January 2, 1734.

Towns and parishes were so united, and their duties in many respects so similar, that it is difficult to draw the line between the civil and ecclesiastical history of the place. I have confined to the latter such events as related to the religious condition of the church, and the relations between them and their pastor;—leaving what was performed in town meetings in the department of civil history.

Many of the officers of the town and of the parish at that day, exercised powers and performed duties unknown and unacknowledged at this day. The tythingman, and the office, which are now extinct, were then regarded as of the first moment. Instances almost without number, could be cited in which some of the leading men of the town were elected to that office. In many respects the tythingman was regarded with more honor, and his office with more sanctity, than that of selectman—an office then held in much higher repute than at present. When we consider that they were a species of general police officer, being conservators of the peace, and also that they had the general care of the children and youth on the Lord's day, and especially at or near the house of worship, it is no wonder that the most sober and discreet men were generally selected for that office. A few extracts from the records will show the importance in which that office was held.

“ At a meeting held May 22, 1738,

“ Voted, To repair the Meeting House.”

“ Voted, That y^e two hinde seats in y^e lower gallery, front and side, are appointed for y^e boys, to sit in on Sabbath days; all under sixteen years old, and a Tythingman to sit near them each Sabbath to take care of them, to take their turns; and if any above sixteen years are disorderly, they shall be ordered into said seats.”

“ Voted, That a Tythingman should be desired to attend on Sabbath day noons to keep y^e boys in order in y^e Meeting House.”

All the duties of tythingmen were regarded as important, and hence they entered upon the discharge of their official functions with more than ordinary formality. We accordingly find the act of qualifying a tythingman recorded with almost royal pomp and ceremony.

“ Joshua Simonds and Daniel Brown personally appeared before y^e worshipfull Justice Bowman, May y^e 12th, 1735, and made oath to y^e office of tythingman for y^e year ensuing.”

Towns like larger communities sometimes become profligate in their expenditures. This tends to arouse the feelings of the people, and they are then inclined to run into the other extreme. Sometimes a rivalry between candidates for office will induce them to bid upon each other, in which case the people at first will generally select the man who will serve at the lowest price. But in a short time, they learn that cheapening the office, naturally fills it with cheap officers, and then they will fall back upon the former price. It seems by the records of Lexington, that there was a rivalry between the Bowmans in the south part of the town, and the Reeds in the north. In fact, the county road leading from Cambridge to Concord and passing through the centre of the town, divided it into two nearly equal divisions.

The records are full of this distinction of "North Side" and "South Side." A constable, for instance, was chosen one for the "North Side" and one for the "South Side." The Valuations and the Tax bills were made out for these sides respectively. All this would naturally tend to divide the people into geographical parties. Add to this the rivalry between two leading and influential families, the one situated in one division of the town, and the other in the other, would of course increase this feeling.

Consequently we find the Bowmans and the Reeds pitted against each other in most of the important elections. And this division was so equal that one would prevail one year, and the other the next. Bowman and Reed, and Reed and Bowman, appear on the record almost in regular succession. This division between the different sections of the town — the Bowmans against the Reeds — the House of York against the House of Lancaster, would naturally lead to some management, if not between the rival candidates, at least between their friends. Third parties in such cases will occasionally step in, and take the prize from both the contending parties. Something of this kind, if I have not misapprehended the spirit of the record, occurred in some instances in the town of Lexington. The offices contested seem to have been those of Moderator, First Selectman, and Representative, especially the latter. Probably the contest for Representative gave rise to the following vote, passed at the May meeting, 1739.

“ Voted, That y^e person who shall be chosen to represent y^e town at y^e Great and General Court, shall immediately engage to serve y^e town as Representative at y^e above said Court, for six shillings a day; which person then chosen, viz., Mr. Joseph Fassett, accepted y^e choice upon y^e above said vote.”

This serving as a representative at a reduced price, appears to have given Mr. Fassett a peculiar popularity; for the next year he was chosen moderator, first selectman and representative; and thus, for a short period, he threw Joseph Bowman, Esq., and Captain William Reed, into the shade. But popularity founded on such a basis proved in this case, as it generally does, of short duration; for after three years he was dropped, and then Captain Reed was elected several years in succession to represent the town.

A representative in those days must have been an officer of more dignity than at present, if we are to judge by the manner in which it was heralded forth by our fathers. The article in the warrant for 1739 for the choice of representative reads as follows: "To elect and depute one or more persons to serve for and represent them at or in a great and general court or assembly, appointed to be convened and held and kept for his Magisty's service at the court house in Boston."

In 1740, the people of Lexington were called to mourn the loss of their junior pastor, when he had just completed the sixth year of his ministry. As there was a general feeling of satisfaction when he was called to share with his venerable father the labors of his profession and the affections of his people, so there was a unanimous feeling of regret that the father was so soon deprived of the aid and support of his affectionate son, and the parish of their devoted minister. Rev. Ebenezer Hancock was highly respected and esteemed by the people, and his loss was severely felt.

In 1729, a small portion of the territory of Lexington had been set off to form the town of Bedford, and in 1744, sundry inhabitants of Concord, Weston and the westerly part of Lexington petitioned the General Court to be erected into a precinct; but the town chose Joseph Bowman, Esq., Captain William Reed and Deacon John Stone to oppose the prayer of the petition, which they did effectually at that time.

On the 6th of December, 1752, the people of Lexington were deprived of their beloved and venerable pastor, Rev. John Hancock, who had with great ability and faithfulness ministered to them for more than fifty-three years. As we shall speak of the character of Rev. Mr. Hancock more particularly under the head of the ecclesiastical history of the town, we will simply say here that his services were justly appreciated by his people, who sincerely deplored his sudden death. They had long witnessed his growing infirmities, or perhaps more properly, his increasing years, and had taken the precaution for several years to choose a committee to supply the pulpit in case of the inability of Mr. Hancock to discharge his wonted duties. But that committee had no occasion to look abroad for a supply; for their venerated pastor was able to perform every duty of his sacred office to the very day of his death. The people had also manifested their attachment to him, and their regard for his welfare, by adding to his salary, from year to year, so at least as to make up for the depreciation of the currency; and when he was called hence by a sudden dispensation of Providence, they manifested their respect for his memory and sympathy for his family, by convening the town and adopting the following votes:—

“At a meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants, regularly assembled on December 7, 1752, —

“Then made choice of Deacon Brown, moderator.

“1. Voted, Two Hundred Pounds old tenor for a decent burial of our Reverend and Beloved Pastor, Mr. John Hancock.

“2. Chose Mr. Daniel Tidd, Mr. Benjamin Smith, Lieutenant Ebenezer Fiske, a Committee to go down and provide things for said funeral.

“3. Voted, That said Committee should give Madam Hancock and her children the offer of the Town Grant for the funeral, if they see cause to take up with it, and they provide said funeral.

“4. Voted, To choose a Committee to provide at Madam Hancock's house, and assist there at the funeral, viz.: Mr. Joseph Bridge, Mr. Joseph Tidd, Mr. Thaddeus Bowman, Mr. John Hoar, and Mr. Joseph Loring.

“Voted, That Mr. Samuel Bridge should provide five hundred bricks, in order to brick said grave.”

The Committee appointed to provide for the funeral of Mr. Hancock presented a bill to the town of £219, which was readily allowed. I will state one item of their bill, as it casts light upon the manners and customs of that period: “Granted an order to pay Mr. Jacob Hurd £4.01.01, it being in full for six rings for y^o Bearers of our Reverend and Beloved Pastor, Mr. John Hancock.”

After the death of Mr. Hancock, the town chose a committee, consisting of Deacon Joseph Brown, Deacon John Stone, William Reed, Esq., Captain Benjamin Reed and Mr. Isaac Bowman, to provide for the pulpit till others should be chosen; and they instructed said committee “to make diligente inquire after a gentleman suitable to settele.”

After hearing Mr. Stearns, Mr. Barnes and Mr. Putnam a few Sabbaths each, the town voted, April 8, 1754, "to keep a day of fasting and prayer on the 25th of the above said April, in preparation for a choice."

The church and society, in June, 1754, invited Mr. Aaron Putnam, who, in consequence of the want of unanimity in the call, declined the invitation.

After receiving the negative answer from Mr. Putnam, Mr. Willard, Mr. Minot and Mr. Clarke were employed a few Sabbaths each; when, on the 19th day of May, 1755, the inhabitants were called together to see if they would concur with the church in giving Mr. Jonas Clarke an invitation to become their minister. The result is thus stated in the record: —

"Y^e Congregation concurred so far as they brought in 51 yeas; but there were 16 nays.

"Then the Town voted, £133.06.8 settlement for Mr. Clarke in case he settled with us as our Pastor,—the one half of s^d sum to be paid in six months after his ordination,—the other moiety, eighteen months after his ordination.

"Also voted eighty Pounds to be his yearly salary for to support him in y^e work of y^e ministry in this Town.

"Voted, That the said Mr. Clarke, in case he takes up, and is settled as our pastor, shall forever as such, quit all manner of claim, title or interest in or unto any part of y^e Ministerial land in this Town."

After some further negotiation in relation to granting him a number of cords of wood, in addition to the eighty pounds, offered as his annual salary, the church and congregation agreed to vote together on the question of giving him a call, and on counting the yeas and nays it was found that seventy had voted in the affirmative and only three in the negative. The town also voted to furnish Mr. Clarke twenty cords of wood annually, in addition to his salary.

The preliminaries being thus settled, the 5th of November, 1755, was agreed upon for the ordination, and the churches in Cambridge, Newton, Medford, Sherburn, Watertown, Lincoln, Weston, and Waltham, were invited to assist in the ordination. To use the language of Mr. Clarke himself, "The Elders and Messengers of most of said churches appearing in the morning, and having chosen the Rev. Mr. John Cotton, Moderator, they proceeded, earnestly imploring the divine Blessing, unto Ordination. The Rev. Mr. Lawrence beginning the solemnity with prayer; the Rev. Mr. Appleton preached, the Rev. Mr. Cotton gave the Charge, and the Rev. Mr. Cook the Right Hand of Fellowship."

Thus was the town of Lexington, after being destitute of a settled minister nearly three years, blessed with a pastor, whose subsequent labors and character showed that he was a pastor indeed, guiding his people safely both in temporal and spiritual things, during his life, and leaving a name which will be fondly cherished by every patriot and every Christian. The name and services of Rev. Jonas Clarke are so interwoven with the history of Lexington, that we shall have occasion frequently to allude to him hereafter.

In 1734, John Flint and others residing in the southeasterly part of Concord, in the southwesterly part of Lexington, and in the part of Weston adjoining, petitioned the General Court to be set off from these towns respectively, and be incorporated as a town or precinct. This was successfully resisted at the time; but the petition was renewed the following year. Lexington chose a committee consisting of Francis Bowman, John Mason, and Joseph Brown, to oppose the prayer of the petitioners. In their remonstrance, dated September 10, 1735, they allege that many within the territory were opposed to the petition, that some who had signed the petition were "very unqualified persons," that most of the petitioners from Lexington constantly attended church there, that they had voted to settle Rev. Ebenezer Hancock, and ought to remain and help pay him, that the roads were being improved, and that they were well accommodated as they were. The remonstrants prevailed again, as they had the preceding year.

But in 1744, a similar petition found favor with the Court, and a precinct was created, granting, however, the privilege to several persons within the territory, to be exempt from its operation, if they should so elect. In 1753, Chambers Russell, Esq., and others within the territory, were chosen a committee to petition the Legislature to be incorporated as a town. Capt. William Reed and Deacon Stone appeared for the town of Lexington to oppose the petition, but without success. On the 19th of April, 1754, the town was incorporated by the name of Lincoln. The name was given by Chambers Russell, Esq., after Lincolnshire, England, the residence of his ancestors.

The creation of this town reduced the territory and population of Lexington, and so impeded its growth. I find no accurate description of the line or the amount of territory taken from Lexington on the public records. But Josiah Parker, one of the assessors of Lexington for that year, and who from his long experience in that office, was well qualified to judge, and whose intimate acquaintance with the premises and the whole subject enabled him to know the facts, has left under his own hand the following important document in the archives of the State.

LEXINGTON, May 27, 1754.

The following is an account of that part of the town of Lexington, which has lately been taken from us, and now makes a part of a new township known by the name of Lincoln.

The whole number of acres in Lexington was,	11,000
Out of which is taken,	974
The number of polls was,	215
Out of which is taken,	14
The Valuation of said town was,	£ 6,000
Out of which is taken,	£ 372 4s.
Lexington's Province tax in 1753 was,	£ 55 10s.
Of which those taken paid,	£ 3 5s. 6d.

What is taken off of Lexington is computed to be about one-sixteenth part of said town; as to the number of acres it is about one-eleventh part.

JOSIAH PARKER,
Assessor.

The line of Lexington formerly included the places where Mr. Gregory Stone, Mr. Leonard Hoar, Mr. Nelson, and several others of Lincoln now reside.

In 1756, there was a warm controversy relative to a choice of Representative. The selectmen were arraigned before the General Court, charged with improper conduct in managing the town meeting. The selectmen vindicated their course, and the whole affair ended in calling another meeting, and electing a Representative.

There are many little incidents occurring in a community, and many things which find their way upon public records of but little moment in themselves, which nevertheless show the spirit of the times, the feelings of the people, and the motives by which individuals and bodies of men are actuated. Of this character are the following :

At a meeting of the freeholders, May 7, 1756,

“ Benjamin Reed, Esq., paid to Mr. James Stone, Town Treasurer, y^e sum of £5 4. 0. it being y^e wages, he received for y^e time he did not actually attend the General Court last year.”

At a meeting of the selectmen, June 28, 1755,

“ The Selectmen appointed Mr. Cornelius Mead to see that brute creatures that dye of any distemper, be buried according to a law of the Province.”

At a meeting of the inhabitants of Lexington, held March 7, 1757, the following note was handed to the Moderator.

“ To the Inhabitants of the Town of Lexington, “ Gentlemen,—Y^e Public expenses in general, and those of this Town in particular, being at present not small, if you will accept of the sum of six pounds, thirteen shillings and fourpence, of my salary for the present year, you will greatly oblige, Gentlemen, your sincere friend and hearty well-wisher,

“ JONAS CLARKE.”

At a town meeting held May 14, 1757,

“ Voted, That whoever shall be chosen to represent y^e Town at y^e Great and General Court this year, shall return into the Town Treasury, all y^e money that shall be made up in y^e General Court's list for the representative, above three shillings a day for attending at y^e Great and General Court; and except y^e person chosen doth promise to return said money as aforesaid, the Town to proceed to y^e choice of another.”

This vote was repeated several years in succession, and such was the patriotism of the age, that men enough were found willing to serve their country at that reduced rate.

About the time of the settlement of Mr. Clarke, the town appointed a committee to repair their meeting house; and as one improvement naturally makes way for another, they were impressed with the idea that their bell was not sufficiently large to bring in a congregation, commensurate with the capacity of the house. This feeling prevailing, at a town meeting held June 15, 1761,

“Mr. Isaac Stone came into said Meeting and gave the Town a Bell to be for the Town’s use forever — which Bell was there, and weighed Four Hundred and Sixty Three pounds — for which the Moderator in the name of the Town, returned him thanks.”

“Then Voted, To hang y^e Bell on y^e top of y^e Hill upon y^e south side of Lieut. James Munroe’s house. A Committee was chosen to erect a convenient building on y^e aforesaid Hill to hang y^e Bell on.

“Voted, To take timber from the ministerial land for said building.”

It appears that the town took a deep interest in this liberal gift of Mr. Stone, and resolved to use it in a manner calculated to fill the eye, and please the ear, as far as practicable; for at an adjournment of the meeting two days after, they “Voted, To case the Bell free with white pine boards.

“Voted, To cover y^e roof with pitch pine and shingle it.

“Voted, To leave it to y^e Committee, to let out y^e Bell free by y^e great, or by y^e day as they think best.”

The following year the committee rendered their account for building this “Bell free,” which amounted to £ 21 12s. 10½d.

But the attention of the people to the new bell and the “Bell free,” did not, it appears, render them unmindful of the meeting-house itself; for at a town meeting held March 14, 1763, they voted “to couliour y^e Meeting House att y^e back of y^e Pulpit the same couliour the Pulpit is coulioured.”

In speaking of the pulpit and preacher, we should not forget the school house and the school master. They are kindred institutions, and cannot safely be dissevered. Up to 1714 the schools were kept in private houses, but at that time a school house was erected in the centre of the town, and schools were established in the out-parts of the town, kept generally by females. As it is proposed to treat of the public schools of the town in a separate chapter, I will only say here, that our fathers, ever true to the great cause of education, have made suitable provision in all portions of their history to educate the rising generation. In this town from year to year, money has been appropriated to be expended under committees appointed for the purpose, so that the children and youth might be fitted for usefulness. In fact it

In 1748, there were three Lexington men in the service; in 1754, four; in 1755, there were twenty-three; in 1756, twenty-four; in 1757, thirty-three; in 1758, nine; in 1759, six; in 1760, forty; in 1761, five, and in 1762, twenty-eight. The rolls of the service are imperfect at best. Some of them are lost, and others are so dilapidated that many of the names are illegible. Besides, many of the rolls do not give the name of the town where the soldier resided. Under these circumstances it is impossible to give a full list of those who were in the service. The true number must have been greater than stated above. Enough however is known to justify the statement that Lexington was not behind her sister towns in responding to the calls of the country. In fact few, if any towns, numbering only about six hundred inhabitants, and remote from the scene of danger, sent forth a larger number of men.

The effects of these exhausting wars must have been great upon every town in the Province. Nothing retards the growth of population like war. Of the soldiers called into service, those who fall in battle make but a small part of those lost to their respective towns. Many fall a prey to disease, and many more to the vices of the camp and the habits of roving and idleness, and so never return to their respective towns. Besides, the soldiers in the field generally belong to the producing class, so far as population is concerned. Many young men return comparatively poor, and so are not in a condition to support a family; consequently if they marry at all, marry late in life. I mention these things to account for the fact that the population of Lexington was nearly stationary, during the French and the Revolutionary wars.

There are many things in the manners and customs of those days which appear singular to us. The system of "Warning out of town," is among them. The General Court had authorized towns to take this precaution, to prevent strangers from becoming a town charge as paupers. The practical working of this system was this: when any family or single person, even to a domestic in a family, came into town, the head of the family, or person owning the premises, was required to give notice to the selectmen of the names and numbers of the new comers, the place whence they came, the date of their coming into town, and their pecuniary condition. If the selectmen thought there was danger of their becoming a public charge, they caused them to be warned to leave the town, and to have a caution, as it was termed, entered with the Court of Sessions. This matter appears on our records as early as 1714, when "Capt. Joseph Estabrook was authorized to request the Honorable Court of Sessions in June next, to enter cautions against Daniel Cutting and wife, Sarah Cook, and Johanna Snow, that they might not be burthensome to Lexington." In 1722, Daniel Roff with his family were ordered to depart out of Lexington. We will add a few specimens of these notices.

"LEXINGTON, Jan. 6, 1761.

"To the Selectmen. Gentlemen: These are to inform you that on the 19th of December last past, I took widow Elizabeth Sampson, as a house-keeper, from Harvard, that being her last place of residence; she being under good circumstances.

"John Bridge."

"To the Selectmen of the Town of Lexington.

"Gent: These are to inform you that I have received into my house to reside with me, Abigail Stone, on or about y^e 12th of May. Her last place of residence, Woburn. Her circumstances I believe are low.

"James Robbins."

"May 29, 1762."

"At December Court, 1760, Caution was entered against Edmand Dix, Hannah Stockbridge, Ann Hodge, and Hannah Ross, as the law directs."

"Widow Abigail Whittemore informs that on the 26th day of December, 1755, she took into her house as inmates her son-in-law, Nathaniel Whittemore, with his wife and child, under poor circumstances. They came from Lincoln. She informed, Jan. 5, 1756."

"At a meeting of the Selectmen, Aug. 27, 1744, Allowed Constable Daniel Brown, 3 shillings for warning Richard Hutchinson out of town.

"Also ordered the Clerk to draw a warrant and give it to the Constable to warn Archabal Mackintosh and his family, forthwith to depart out of Lexington."

These examples, which are taken promiscuously from the records, show the manner in which business was done at that time, and the general supervision which the authorities took of public, or as some might say, private affairs. It seems by the examples that a gentleman could not hire a man to live with him, or a girl to work in his family, or allow a tenant to occupy his house, or a house under his care, without giving notice thereof to the selectmen. And it is worthy of remark that these notices have been given of the incoming of certain individuals, who have afterwards become some of the most respectable and influential men in the town. Some of the young women whose ingress into town was thus publicly heralded, won the hearts of some of the permanent residents, and became the mothers of some of Lexington's most honored citizens. And when the calls of our country required the services of her patriotic sons, several of the very men who had been "warned out of town," were among the first to obey the call. Whether these measures were wise or unwise, I will not attempt to decide; but will venture the remark, that such regulations would not cheerfully be acquiesced in at the present day.

The ground on which this rigid policy was justified, was that the town might be apprised of immigration into the township, so that they might warn them out, and thereby prevent their becoming a charge as paupers in case they should need assistance. This rule was so strictly adhered to, that persons having servants come to live with them were compelled, either to send them out of town, or give bonds that they should never become a town charge. I will mention one case which may serve as a specimen: In 1769, William Reed had a negro servant named Pompey, and he gave a bond to the town in the sum of fifty pounds. Having the instrument before me, I will cite its terms:—

"The Condition of this obligation is such, that if the above Bounded William Reed, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, shall from time to time, and at all times forever hereafter, saue y^e town of Lexington harmless, from any charge arising for the support or maintenance of his negro man servant, named Pompey; then this obligation to be void and of none effect. But if otherwise, to stand and remain in full force and vertue.

"Signed, WM. REED."

"In the Presence of

"Benj. Brown.

"Thad. Brown."

There is one important fact which should be stated in connection with this practice of giving notice of the arrival of strangers, and of warning them out of town through fear of their becoming a public charge: it was more benevolent and humane than a practice sometimes adopted after this regulation became obsolete. Many cases have, since that period, occurred where poor persons, coming into a town, have been fitted out with a small supply of food on condition that they should go on to another town; and sometimes they have been taken, without any conditions or assent, and carried in the night time and set down within the limits of another town. Such practices savor of inhumanity, and show that our fathers had not, at that day, learned the true system of providing almshouses for the support and comfort of the poor and unfortunate.

During the period under review in this chapter, active measures were adopted to improve the roads for the accommodation of the public travel, and to provide better means for the education of the rising generation.

We may smile at the follies of the past, and think our fathers inhuman and illiterate, but we should remember the spirit of the age; and, when we compare them with the mass of the people at that time on the Eastern continent, we shall find them in advance of the age in which they lived; and I fear that if they were compared with the present generation, and all things taken into the account, we should find no great cause for self-exaltation. If we should point to our public charities, as evidence of our moral advance, I fear they might safely confront us with their patient industry, their prudent economy, and strict integrity. If we should charge them with being too strict in the observance of religious rites, they might with equal justice charge us with being too lax; if they believed too much, we believe too little; if they were too rigid, we are too pliant; if they were inclined to ascribe ordinary events to the immediate hand of God, many at the present day are inclined to ascribe all events to the laws of brute matter, and thereby exclude God from the universe. If they had their ghosts and hobgoblins, we have our spiritual rappings; and if they had those among them who held intercourse with familiar spirits who would lie and deceive, we have mediums who hold communication with spirits in the "lower circles," who play "tricks upon travellers," and sport with the credulity of the people.

Our faults and infirmities may assume different forms from those of our forefathers, but for downright folly and extravagance, for the neglect of privileges and opportunities, I fear that in the eye of Infinite Wisdom we shall appear nearly on a level with them. They were imperfect, and we lack perfection. Appetites and passions, lusts for wealth and dominion, exist in every age. Our fathers were not free from them; but if they thirsted for broad acres, and seemed desirous of adding farm to farm, that the surface of the earth might be theirs, we, not content to float upon the surface, desire to dive into the bowels of the earth, that all its hidden treasures may be ours. They were not our equals in reckless speculation.

But comparisons being generally odious and unprofitable, true wisdom requires us to improve the present, rather than censure the past; and if we have arisen above the follies of our fathers, it is because they, as pioneers, prepared the way for us, and so enabled us to stand on vantage ground.

CHAPTER III.

CIVIL HISTORY FROM 1763 TO 1775.

The Natural Expectations of the Colonists — The Stamp Act — Instructions to the Representative — Declaration of Rights, and Resolutions — Endorsement of the Doings of Boston — Committee of Correspondence chosen — The Stamp Act repealed — The Importation of Tea — Resolutions in Opposition to the Importation and Use of the Tea — Measures of Preparation for the Last Appeal — A Pledge that they would support their Resolutions with their Fortunes and their Lives — The Certainty of a Conflict.

THE bloody contest with the French and Indians was over. Canada was conquered; and the domain of North America was secured to Protestant England. The stern Puritans, who had served so heroically, and we may add prayerfully, in the cause, and who had given success to the arms of Great Britain, were filled with rejoicing. They had proved their devotion to the crown, and had contributed largely to the extension of His Majesty's possessions in North America; and, by so doing, had secured to themselves the great blessing of enjoying undisturbed the freedom of Congregational worship. They also flattered themselves, that the king they had served, the country whose interest they had promoted, and the ministry whose administration they had contributed to make illustrious, would gratefully remember the services rendered, and treat their faithful colonists, not only with justice, but with generosity. They expected, and had a right to expect, that, as they had shared with the mother country the dangers and the burdens of these protracted struggles, they should at least be left in peace, to recover from their exhaustion by their own industry and frugality.

In this general expectation the good people of Lexington participated. They had experienced the dangers, encountered the hardships, and felt the exhaustion of the war; and they needed repose. Lexington according to her population had furnished a large number of men. Her citizens who had rendered distinguished service to their king and country, had returned to their homes and families, to engage in their industrial pursuits, to render their families more comfortable, and to retrieve their ruined fortunes; and by their manly exertion and strict frugality, to bear their share of the taxes incident to the war, and at the same time contribute to the maintenance of civil and religious institutions in their native town. Industry revived in the place, and the people were exerting themselves to improve their highways, and increase the facilities for the education of their children, and thus promote the prosperity of the town. But these dreams of peace and prosperity were disturbed by intimations that the ministry they had served with so much fidelity, and in whose cause they had cheerfully made such sacrifices, instead of requiting these favors with kindness, were meditating a system of unjust exaction and servitude, greater than anything to which the colonists had ever before been subjected.

In fact, while the colonists were freely pouring out their blood and treasure in support of the crown, and His Majesty's possessions in America, the ministry were meditating a plan by which the colonists should not only support their own government, but contribute to the maintenance of that power which had oppressed them. This was to be done by enlarging the prerogatives of the home government at the expense of the colonial charters. These contemplated encroachments were looked upon by the people of Massachusetts with peculiar jealousy, and by none more than by the people of Lexington. They had served the king with fidelity, and they claimed justice at his hands. Their proximity to the town of Boston, against which British tyranny seemed, from the first, to be mainly directed, made them alive to everything which tended to impair the prosperity of their principal market. Besides there were causes operating within the town itself, which served to keep up a high tone of patriotic feeling. The men who had fought as faithful English subjects in defence of English institutions, and also to acquire a larger domain for the crown, felt that they were entitled to the rights of English subjects. They had paid too dearly for their homes and firesides, to be willing to have them invaded by the nation they had served. The military experience they had had, and the knowledge of arms they had acquired, gave them confidence in their own strength, so that they were not to be intimidated by any threat of enforcing oppressive laws at the point of the bayonet.

There was another general cause in operation in the colonies to make the people jealous of their rights, and awake to the spirit of liberty. The clergy in those days exercised a controlling influence in their respective parishes. In most of the country towns the minister was the only educated man in the place, and consequently was consulted on all great questions, more frequently than any other individual. And as the great theme of that day was that of religious freedom, the clergy were almost uniformly found on the side of liberty. They knew that religious and civil rights were so nearly allied, that they must stand or fall together. They had taught the necessity of resisting oppression, during the French war. The voice of the clergy at that period was on the side of defending our rights at every hazard. "An injured and oppressed people, whose destruction and overthrow is aimed at by unreasonable men, ought, surely, to stand upon their defence, and not tamely submit to their incursions and violence."¹ Such was the feeling of that day. It pervaded the whole community in a greater or less degree. But in no town was this doctrine inculcated with more force or fidelity than in Lexington. Their clergyman, the Rev. Jonas Clarke, was a man of decided ability, who was capable of comprehending the whole subject in all its bearings, of showing the intimate connection between civil and religious liberty, and of enforcing the high and important duty of fidelity to God, by maintaining the liberties of the people. He not only sympathized with his brethren generally on these subjects, and acted in harmony with them in inculcating the duty of patriotism; but in everything pertaining to human rights, and the sacred obligation to maintain them, he was one who took the lead. Understanding the whole subject perfectly, and having a controlling influence in his own parish, he had brought the people up to a high state of enlightened patriotism. No man better understood the civil rights of the colonists than the Rev. Mr. Clarke, and no man was more successful in infusing his feelings into the great body of the people around him. Under these circumstances, it would be strange if the people of Lexington were not fully alive to the encroachments of the mother country, and ready at all times to maintain their own rights.

In March, 1765, the first of a series of measures for taxing the colonies passed the British Parliament, and soon after received the sanction of the crown. This roused the just indignation of the American people.

On the 21st of October, 1765, a town meeting was held in Lexington, to see what Instructions the town would give in relation to the Stamp Act. The subject was referred to the selectmen, consisting of James Stone, Thaddeus Bowman, Robert Harrington, Benjamin Brown, and Samuel Stone, Jr., for their consideration, who being duly prepared, submitted at once a draft of Instructions. It is but justice to the memory of Mr. Clarke to say that this paper, as well as several other able papers recorded in our town book, were from his pen. The committee who reported them, though undoubtedly sensible and patriotic men, laid no claim to that finished scholarship which characterizes this and the other papers to which reference is made. There is internal evidence of their authorship, and it has ever been conceded that they were written by Mr. Clarke; and as further evidence of the fact, I have now before me the original draft of one of these papers in Mr. Clarke's own handwriting. The instructions are so fraught with wisdom, so patriotic in their doctrines, and reflect so fully the sentiments of the people of the town who adopted them unanimously, that I will give them in full.

“ To William Reed, Esq. the present Representative of Lexington : —

“ SIR, — We have looked upon men as beings naturally free. And it is a truth which the history of ages, and the common experience of mankind have fully confirmed, that a people can never be divested of these invaluable rights and liberties, which are necessary to the happiness of individuals, to the well-being of communities, or to a well regulated state; but by their own negligence, imprudence, timidity or rashness. They are seldom lost, but when foolishly forfeited or tamely resigned.

“ And therefore, when we consider the invaluable rights and liberties we now possess, the firmness and resolution of our fathers, for the support and preservation of them for us, and how much we owe to ourselves and to posterity, we cannot but look upon it as an unpardonable neglect, any longer to delay expressing how deeply we are concerned in some measures adopted by the late ministry, and how much we fear from some acts lately passed in the British Parliament, which appear to us not only distressing to the trade and commerce of this Province, but subversive of several of our most invaluable, internal rights, as well as privileges; and from which we apprehend the most fatal consequences.

“What of all most alarms us, is an Act commonly called the Stamp Act; the full execution of which we apprehend would divest us of our most inestimable charter rights and privileges, rob us of our character as free and natural subjects, and of almost everything we ought, as a people, to hold dear.

“Admitting there was no dispute, as to the right of Parliament to impose such an Act upon us, yet we cannot forebear complaining of it in itself considered, as unequal and unjust, and a yoke too heavy for us to bear. And that not only as it falls heaviest upon the poor, the widow and the fatherless, and the orphan; not only as it will embarrass the trade and business of this infant country, and so prevent remittances to England; but more especially as the duties and penalties imposed by it, are numerous, and so high that it will quickly drain the country of the little cash remaining in it, strip multitudes of their property, and reduce them to poverty; and in a short time render it utterly impossible for the people to subsist under it; and what will be the consequences of this to our friends in Great Britain, as well as to ourselves, is easily seen.¹

“But we humbly conceive this Act to be directly repugnant to those rights and privileges granted us in our Charter, which we always hold sacred, as confirmed to us by the Royal word and seal, and as frequently recognized by our Sovereign and the Parliament of Great Britain, wherein it is expressly granted to us and to our children, that we shall have and enjoy all liberties and immunities of free and natural subjects, within any of his Majesty’s Dominions, to all intents, constructions, and purposes, as if we were every one of us born in his Majesty’s realm of England. And further that the full power and authority to impose and levy proportionable and reasonable taxes, upon the estates and persons of all the inhabitants within the Province, for the support and defence of his Majesty’s Government, are granted to the General Court or Assembly thereof.

“But by this Act a tax, yea a heavy tax, is imposed, not only without and beside the authority of said General Court, in which this power, which has never been forfeited nor given up, is said to be fully and exclusively lodged, but also in direct opposition to an essential right or privilege of free and natural subjects of Great Britain, who look upon it as their darling and constitutional right never to be taxed but by their own consent, in person or by their Representatives.

“It is vain to pretend (as has been pretended) that we are virtually or in any just sense, represented in Parliament; when it is well known that so far from this, our humble Petitions and decent Remonstrances, prepared and sent home by the Representative body of this people, were not admitted a hearing in Parliament, even at the time when those measures and acts from which we apprehend so much, were depending in the Hon. House of Commons; — a hardship which greatly adds to the grievance, and seems to intimate, that we have but too little to hope in consequence of the most humble and dutiful steps.

“However, this is not all. By this Act we are most deeply affected, as hereby we are debarred of being tried by juries in case of any breach, or supposed breach of it — a right which until now, we have held in common with our brethren in England — a right which under Providence has been the great barrier of justice, the support of liberty and property in Great Britain and America — a right which is the glory of the British Government.

“The Great Charter of England, commonly called Magna Charta, happily provided for all free and natural subjects of the realm of England, that no amercement shall be assessed but by the oath of honest and lawful men of the vicinage, and that no freeman shall be taken or imprisoned or disseized of his freehold or liberties, or free customs, nor passed upon, nor condemned, but by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land; but instead of this most important right, such is the extension of power given by this Act to Courts of Admiralty, that all offences against it may be heard and tried and determined in said courts, to the entire subversion of this important right, confirmed to us by the Great Charter and our own.

“This we apprehend will open a door to numberless evils which time only can discover; at least it will oftentimes oblige us to risk our fortunes, our liberties and characters, upon the judgment of one, and perhaps a stranger, or perhaps that which is worse. This will subject us entirely to the mercy of avaricious informers, who may at pleasure summon us from one part of the Province to the other upon suspicion of the least offence, and thus bring upon innocent persons a sort of necessity of pleading guilty by paying the penalty, to avoid a greater expense. And this being the state of things, what will then be necessary but a weak or wicked person for a judge; and from natural and free-born subjects, we shall quickly become the most abject slaves — wholly cut off from our last resource — hope of redress!

“These, sir, being the real sentiments of us, the freeholders and other inhabitants of the town, of this Act, as in its nature and effects considered, you cannot be surprised to find us greatly alarmed and deeply affected. And therefore, at the same time that we are firmly resolved in all possible ways to express our filial duty and loyalty to our Sovereign, and a due veneration for both Houses of Parliament; we do also as concerned for ourselves, our posterity and country, entreat and enjoin it upon you, that so far from encouraging, aiding or assenting in the execution of this Act, you do rather endeavor as far as consistent with allegiance and duty to our rightful Sovereign, to promote such measures as on the contrary, may tend to preserve us in the enjoyment of the invaluable rights and liberties we at present possess, at least till we hear the result of the measures already taken for general redress.

“In the meantime, we earnestly recommend to you, the most calm, decent and dispassionate measures, for our open, explicit and resolute assertion and vindication of our charter rights and liberties; and that the same be so entered upon record, that the world may see, and future generations know, that the present both knew and valued the rights they enjoyed; and did not tamely resign them for chains and slavery. We shall only add, that the best economy of the public money is at all times necessary, and never more so than at present, when public debts are heavy, and the people’s burdens great and likely to increase.

“We take it for granted, therefore, that you will carefully avoid all unaccustomed and unconstitutional grants, which will not only add to the present burden, but make such precedents as will be attended with consequences which may prove greatly to the disadvantage of the public.”

Instructions such as these, read in open town meeting, and discussed and adopted by a unanimous vote of the inhabitants, would do much towards creating a just appreciation of their rights as subjects, and of the duties they owed, not only to their Sovereign, but to themselves. A people thus instructed, and trained in the school of stern religious principles, would be found ready for almost any emergency. Consequently when the town of Boston, to manifest their opposition to the oppressive acts of the ministry, resolved that they would not import or use certain articles on which these duties were laid, the inhabitants of Lexington at a meeting held Dec. 28, 1767, “Voted unanimously, to concur with the town of Boston, respecting importing and using foreign commodities, as mentioned in their votes, passed at their meeting on the 28th day of October, 1767.”

Nothing of moment occurred in the municipal affairs of the town during the period under review. Roads were repaired, schools were supported, the poor were provided for, and the paramount subject, the maintenance of public worship, received its due share of attention. But the subject which pressed upon them most heavily during this period, was the oppression of the mother country. Not however, that the measures of the British ministry did bear directly and immediately upon them with any distressing hardship at that time. But our patriotic forefathers viewed all such subjects on a broad and disinterested scale; they looked at the principle involved in the measures; and they knew full well that a trifling tax upon stamped paper or upon tea, would serve as an entering wedge to a system of taxation which must reduce the colonies to a state of absolute dependence, if not complete vassalage; and patriotism prompted, nay, religion required, that they should oppose the first attempt to trample upon their rights. These feelings were general among the people, and nowhere were they entertained with more ardor than in the parish over which Mr. Clarke presided; and consequently the people here let no opportunity pass unimproved, which bore upon the great subject of human rights.

On the 21st day of September, 1768, the inhabitants of Lexington assembled in town meeting legally warned, "To take into their serious consideration the distressed state of the Province at the present day, and to pass any vote relative thereto." After due consideration, they made choice of Isaac Bowman, Esq., William Reed, Esq., and Dea. James Stone, "to prepare reasons for our present conduct;" who subsequently reported the following Declarations and Resolves.

"Whereas it is the first principle in civil society, founded in nature and reason, that no law of the society can be binding on any individual without his consent, given by himself in person, or by his Representative of his own free election; and whereas in and by an Act of the British Parliament, passed in the first year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary of glorious and blessed memory, entitled an Act declaring the rights and liberties of the subjects, and settling the succession of the crown, — the Preamble of which Act is in these words, viz.

"Whereas the late King James the Second, by the assistance of diverse evil Councillors, Judges, and Ministers employed by him, did endeavor to subvert and extirpate the Protestant Religion, and the laws and liberties of the kingdom: It is expressly among other things, declared, that the levying of money for the use of the crown by pretence of prerogative, without grant of Parliament for a longer time, or in other manner than the same is granted, is illegal."

"And whereas in the third year of the same King William and Queen Mary, their Majesties were graciously pleased by their Royal Charter, to give and grant to the inhabitants of this his Majesty's Province, all the territory therein described, to be holden in free and common soccage, and also to ordain and grant to the said inhabitants certain rights, liberties, and privileges therein expressly mentioned, among which it is granted, established, and ordained, that all and every, the subjects of them, their heirs, and successors which shall go to inhabit within said Province and territory, and every of their children which shall happen to be born there, and on the seas in going thither or returning from thence, shall have and enjoy all the liberties and immunities of free and natural subjects, within any of the Dominions of them, their heirs and successors, to all intents, purposes, and constructions, whatever, as if they and every of them were born within the realm of England.

“ And whereas by the aforesaid Act of Parliament, made in the first year of the said King William and Queen Mary, all and singular, the premises contained therein, are claimed, demanded, and insisted on as the undoubted rights and liberties born within the realm: And whereas the freeholders and other inhabitants of this town in said Charter mentioned, do hold all the rights and liberties therein contained, to be sacred and inviolable; at the same time publicly and solemnly acknowledging their firm and unshaken allegiance to their alone rightful Sovereign King George the Third, the lawful successor of the said King William and Queen Mary to the British throne:

“ Therefore, Resolved, That the freeholders and other inhabitants of the town of Lexington, will at the utmost peril of their lives and fortunes, take all legal and constitutional measures to defend and maintain the person, family, crown and dignity of our said Sovereign Lord, George the Third, and all and singular, the rights, liberties, privileges and immunities granted in said royal charter, as well as those which are declared to be belonging to us as British subjects, by birthright, as all others therein specially mentioned.

“ And whereas by the said royal Charter, it is specially granted to the Great and General Court or Assembly therein constituted, to impose and levy proportionable and reasonable assessments, rates, and taxes, upon the estates and persons of all and every, the proprietors and inhabitants of the said Province or territory, for the service of the King in the necessary defence and support of his government of the Province, and the protection and preservation of his subjects therein:

“ Therefore Voted, As the opinion of this town, that levying money within this Province for the use and service of the crown in any other manner than the same is granted by the Great and General Court or Assembly of this Province, is in violation of the said royal Charter; and the same is in violation of the undoubted, natural rights of subjects, declared in the aforesaid Act of Parliament, freely to give and grant their own money for the service of the crown, with their own consent in person, or by Representatives of their own free election.

“ And whereas in the aforesaid Act of Parliament, it is declared that the raising and keeping a standing army within the kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with the consent of Parliament, is against law; it is the opinion of this town that the said Declaration is founded in the indefeasible rights of the subjects to be consulted, and to give their free consent in person or by Representative, of their own free election, to the raising and keeping a standing army among them. And the inhabitants of this town being free subjects, have the same rights derived from nature, and confirmed by the British Constitution, as well as by the royal Charter; and therefore, the raising or keeping a standing army without their consent in person or by Representatives of their own free election, would be an infringement of their natural, constitutional, and charter rights; and the employment of such an army for the enforcing of laws made without the consent of the people in person or by their Representatives, would be a grievance."

The foregoing Report being several times distinctly read, and considered by the town, the question was put whether the same shall be accepted and recorded, and passed unanimously in the affirmative.

The following vote was also unanimously passed.

"Whereas by an Act of Parliament of the first of King William and Queen Mary, it is declared, that for the redress of all grievances and for amending, strengthening, and preserving the laws, Parliament ought to be held frequently; and inasmuch as it is the opinion of this town, that the people of this Province labor under many grievances, which unless speedily redressed, threaten the total destruction of our invaluable, natural, constitutional and charter rights; and furthermore, as his Excellency the Governor, at the request of the town of Boston, has declared himself unable to call a General Court, which is the Assembly of the States of this Province for the redress of grievances:

"Voted, That this town will now make choice of some suitable person to join with such as are or may be appointed and sent from the several other towns in this Province, to consult and advise what may be best for the public good at this critical juncture.

"Then made choice of William Reed, Esq.

"Also voted, To keep a day of prayer on the occasion, and left it to the Rev. Mr. Clarke to appoint the time."

These sentiments published in open town meeting, and sanctified by a day of fasting and prayer, would of course govern the conduct of a sincere and conscientious people. No wonder therefore, we find them in 1769, ready to make what at the present day would in some families be considered a great sacrifice; by voting "Not to use any tea or snuff, nor keep them, nor suffer them to be used in our families, till the duties are taken off."

In 1772, a measure was on foot to make the Supreme Judges independent of the people, by granting them a salary directly by Parliament, thus taking from the people the only hold they had upon those officers — that of withholding supplies. This measure was no sooner talked of, than the alarm was given.

“ At a meeting of the inhabitants of Lexington, held Dec. 31, 1772, the following Resolves were passed.

“ 1. That it is the natural right and indisputable duty of every man, and consequently of every society or body of men, to consult their own safety, and to take measures for the preservation of their own liberty and property, without which life itself can scarcely be deemed worth possessing.

“ 2. That the security of life, liberty and property to a people, is and ought always to be considered, as the great end of all government, and is acknowledged to be the professed end of the happy Constitution of the British Government in particular.

“ 3. That when through imperfections, necessarily attendant upon the wisest systems of which fallible men are capable, or through the designs of wicked or crafty men in places of power and trust, any laws or acts of government are found to be obnoxious or oppressive to the subject, it is wisely provided and established by Magna Charta, the petition of Rights and other Statutes of England, that not only Counties, Cities, and Corporations, but also Towns and individuals, may consult and adopt measures for redress by petition, remonstrance or other ways, as occasion and the emergency of affairs may require.

“ 4. That the inhabitants of this town and Province by the Royal Charter (a sacred compact between them and the crown) being vested with all the rights and privileges of Englishmen, and British subjects, have the indisputable right, both as a people and as individuals, to judge for themselves when laws or measures of government are obnoxious or oppressive, and to consult upon, and adopt the best measures in their power for redress when oppressed.

“ 5. And therefore, That as the inhabitants of this town look upon themselves, in common with their brethren and fellow subjects through the Province, to be greatly injured and oppressed in various instances, by measures of Government lately adopted, especially by the proposed measure of making the judges dependent upon the crown alone for their support, they cannot but judge it their inalienable right and a duty they owe to themselves and posterity, as a town as well as individuals, to take these matters into serious consideration, freely to express their sentiments concerning them, and consult measures for redress.

“ Then voted that a committee of seven be chosen to report to the town at an adjournment of this meeting, a draft of Instructions for their Representative, also of such further Votes and Resolves, as they may think best to recommend to the town. — Then made choice of William Reed, Esq., Isaac Bowman, Esq., Capt. Thaddeus Bowman, Dea. Benjamin Brown, Mr. Samuel Bridge, Dea. Joseph Loring, and Mr. Joseph Simonds.”

At an adjourned meeting held Jan. 5, 1772, this committee submitted the following document, fraught with the wisdom and patriotism of their pious and devoted pastor, which was unanimously adopted :

“ To Mr. Jonas Stone, Representative of the Town of Lexington :

“ Sir : It is not to call in question your capacity, disposition, or fidelity, of which we have given the fullest evidence in the choice we have made of you to represent us in the General Court of this Province, but in exercising our right of instructing our Representatives, to open our minds freely to you upon matters which appear to us interesting to ourselves, to the Province, and to posterity, and to strengthen and confirm you in measures, which, we trust, your own judgment would have suggested, as necessary and important to our common safety and prosperity, though we had been silent.

“ Our worthy ancestors, after many struggles with their enemies in the face of every danger, and at the expense of much treasure and blood, secured to themselves and transmitted to us, their posterity, a fair and rich inheritance, not only of a pleasant and fertile land, but also of invaluable rights and privileges both as men and Christians, as stated in the Royal Charter of the Province, and secured to us by the faith of the British Crown and Kingdom. As we hold due allegiance to our rightful Sovereign King George III., and are ready with our lives and fortunes to support his just and constitutional government, so we look upon ourselves as bound by the most sacred ties, to the utmost of our power, to maintain and defend ourselves in our charter rights and privileges, and as a sacred trust committed to us, to transmit them inviolate to succeeding generations.

“ It is the general voice, at least of the more thinking and judicious among us, that our charter rights and liberties are in danger, are infringed, and upon the most careful, mature, and serious consideration of them, as stated in our Charter, and comparing them with Acts of the British Parliament, and measures adopted by the British Court, Ministry and Government, relating to this and other American Colonies, some of which have been carried into execution among us ; we are clearly of opinion that they have been for some time past, and are at present, greatly infringed and violated hereby in various instances, and these measures have been gone into from time to time by the Honorable Council and House of Representatives of the Province for relief and redress ; yet so far from being successful, our grievances seem to increase and be more and more intolerable every day.

“ The unhappy and distressing effects of the measures referred to, are too many to admit, and too well known and felt to require a particular mention. But we cannot forbear observing the glowing contrast which in some instances is to be seen, between our Charter and the Resolves and Acts of the British Parliament, and measures of administration, adopted by the British Court, respecting the people of this, as well as other Colonies.

“The Charter grants to our General Court full power and authority from time to time to make, ordain and establish all manner of reasonable laws, &c., and that such laws, &c., not being disallowed by the King within three years, shall continue in full force until the expiration thereof, or until repealed by the same authority. But the British Parliament have resolved, that they have a right to make laws, binding upon the Colonies in all cases whatsoever; so that whenever they please to carry this resolve into execution, they may by another resolve passed into an Act, by one powerful stroke vacate our Charter, and in a moment dash all our laws out of existence, or bury them together in one common ruin. By the Charter, the right of taxing the people is lodged in the General Court of the Province, and we think exclusively. But by the late revenue Acts, which have been, with so many ensigns of power and terror, in open violations of the laws and liberties of this people, put into execution by the Commissioners of the Customs, this right is clearly infringed, and the power put into and exercised by other hands.

“By the Charter, we are vested with all the rights and liberties of British subjects, one of which we know is in Magna Charta declared to be that of trial by jury, and that no freeman shall be disseized of his freehold, liberties, &c., but by the lawful judgment of his peers, &c. But such is the provision made in the revenue Act, and such the exercise of the power of courts of admiralty, that men may be disseized of their liberty, and carried from one part of the country to the other, and be tried and sentenced by one judge, for any, even the smallest breach of this Act, whether real or supposed. Though the Charter provides for the erecting of judicatories for the hearing and trying all manner of offences, as well criminal and capital as civil; yet if we are rightly informed, a late Act of Parliament provides, and directs in some cases, that persons may be seized and carried to England for trial, and that for life. Should this be the truth, where is the right of freemen — where the boasted liberty of English subjects?

“The Charter represents the Governor of this Province, as Captain General, and as having full power and authority in all military and warlike affairs, and of himself to appoint all military officers, to erect forts and commit them to the custody of such person or persons as to him shall seem meet. But can it be said that this is the truth in fact, when the Governor himself declares, that he has no authority over those who have custody of the most important fortress, and where garrisons are changed, and officers appointed, not only not by the Governor, but without his knowledge or consent. — Whether this is the state of Castle William, the principal fortress of this Province, appears to us to be a question not unworthy the serious attention, and most critical inquiry of the Great and General Court.

“The Charter not only vests the General Court with the right of imposing taxes, but also points out the ends for which taxes are to be raised — one of which is the support of the government, justly supposing that necessary connection between the governing and governed, and that mutual dependence which preserves a due balance between them, which in all well regulated States has been found to have the happiest tendency to promote good government on the one hand, and cheerful obedience on the other. But not enough that the right of taxation is violated, but the right of determining the merit and services of those that are employed in government, must be yielded too. Thus with respect to the first officers among us, the only remaining interest whereby persons in the service of the public were induced to be faithful in their trust to the people, is dissolved, and being entirely dependent upon the crown for both place and support, it becomes their interest, at least in many cases, to be unfaithful and partial in their administration with regard to the people. And considering the imperfections of human nature, it is scarcely possible it should be otherwise, even though the best of men were in authority. For interest will have its influence to blind the eyes, and pervert the judgment of the wisest and most upright.

We have been certified in form, that this is the case with the gentlemen in the chief seat of Government, and at the head of the Province, and from the best information we are able to obtain, we have but too much reason to fear, that the same has taken place with respect to a number of others in places of trust and power, of no small importance to the well being of this people. Particularly we have reason to think this to be the fact with respect to the Judges of the Supreme Court, the highest court of justice in the Province — the court upon the decisions and determinations of which, all our interests respecting property, liberty or life, do chiefly and ultimately depend; and what adds to the indignity of this measure is, that it is to be carried into effect, as we have just reason to suppose, at our expense, at the same time that it is against our consent. Thus the plan of oppression is begun, and so far carried on, that if our enemies are still successful, and no means can be found to put a stop to their career, no measures contrived for a restoration of our affairs to a constitutional course, as pointed out in our Charter; we have just reason to fear that the eyes of the head of the Government being blinded, the sources of justice poisoned, and hands of the administration bribed with interest, the system of slavery will soon be complete. These things are of so interesting a nature, so deeply affecting, and so big with the ruin of all our rights and liberties, both civil and religious, that we readily acknowledge that we cannot so much as transiently view them without a mixture of horror, indignation, and grief.

“But this is not all. Our Charter knows no such thing as instructions to Government; and yet what have not instructions done to distress this people; and if in addition to these, it should be found upon the inquiry of the guardians of the Province in General Court assembled, (and they have a right to inquire,) that the law has not in all instances had its course, or that at any time, measures have been successful to stay justice from offenders, it seems as if it was time to be alarmed, and provide for our own safety, or else tamely to bow to the yoke and forever hereafter be silent. Whether this representation be just, is submitted and must be left to time and facts to discover. But that these among other things, are worthy our most serious attention, as subjects of inquiry and deep interest, cannot be disputed.

“ And therefore to you, Sir, whom we have chosen to represent us in the Great and General Court of Inquest for this Province, we do most earnestly recommend it, that you use your utmost influence, that these as well as all other matters in which the rights and liberties of this people are concerned, are impartially inquired into, and dispassionately considered by the General Assembly, and that measures be pursued by Petition to the throne, or otherwise, as the Court in their great wisdom shall see meet, for a radical and lasting redress. That thus, whether successful or not, succeeding generations might know that we understood our rights and liberties, and were neither afraid nor ashamed to assert and maintain them; and that we ourselves may have at least this consolation in our chains, that it was not through our neglect that this people were enslaved.

“ WILLIAM REED, Per Order.”

At the same meeting the town took into consideration a communication from the town of Boston on the same general subject, and “ Voted, That this Town entirely concur with them in their sentiments, both as to the nature of our rights, and the high infractions of them by the late measures of Government; and with pleasure embrace this opportunity to express the great sense they have of the vigilance and patriotic spirit they and our brethren in many other towns, have discovered upon this and various occasions, for the preservation of our rights.

“ Voted, also, That this town has a right to correspond with other towns upon matters of common concern; and that a Committee be accordingly chosen to transmit the proceeding of this meeting to the Gentlemen of the Committee of Correspondence in Boston; and further, to correspond with them as well as the Committee of other towns, upon matters of common concern, as occasion may require.”

The town then proceeded and chose the following named gentlemen, as their Committee of Correspondence: Capt. Thaddeus Bowman, Dea. Jonas Stone, Ensign Robert Harrington, Dea. Benjamin Brown, and Dea. Joseph Loring.

The opposition to the Stamp Act was such that Parliament was induced to repeal it, which they did in 1766. But this was a change rather than an abandonment of their policy. They repealed an act which they saw that they could not enforce, for the purpose of adopting other measures which they deemed more artful and seductive, and hence more likely to bring the colonists to their feet. The sequel will show their measures, and the manner in which they were met by the people of America.

In December, 1773, the inhabitants were called together to consider the state of public affairs, and especially the subject of the Tea, sent over by the East India Company; when the whole subject was referred to the Committee of Correspondence, who subsequently submitted the following Report, which was unanimously adopted:

“That from intelligence transmitted by the Committee of Correspondence in the Town of Boston, to the Committee of Correspondence for this place, and by them communicated to the town, it appears that the enemies of the rights and liberties of America, greatly disappointed in the success of the Revenue Act, are seeking to avail themselves of a new, and if possible, yet more detestable measure to distress, enslave, and destroy us. Not enough that a tax was laid upon teas, which should be imported by us, for the sole purpose of raising a revenue to support task masters, pensioners, &c., in idleness and luxury; but by a late Act of Parliament, to appease the wrath of the East India Company, whose trade to America had been greatly clogged by the operation of the Revenue Acts, provision is made for said Company to export their Teas to America free, and discharged from the payment of all duties and customs in England, but liable to all the same rules, regulations, penalties and forfeitures in America, as are provided by the revenue Act, as much as if the above mentioned Act had never been passed.

“Not to say anything of the gross partiality herein discovered in favor of the East India Company, and to the injury and oppression of Americans, we are alarmed at the masterly effort of iniquitous policy, as it has the most gloomy effect upon the trade of these Colonies, and gives an opening to the East India Company, or others under the covert of an Act of Parliament, for the unrighteous purpose of raising and securing a revenue to the crown out of the purses of industrious Americans, to monopolize one branch after another, until in the process of time, the whole trade will be in their hands, and by their consignees, factors, &c., they will be the sole merchants of America.

“And further, we are more especially alarmed, as by these crafty measures, the revenue Act is to be established, and the rights and liberties of Americans forever sapped and destroyed. These appear to us to be sacrifices we must make; and these are the costly pledges that must be given into the hands of the oppressor. The moment we receive this detested article, the tribute will be established upon us. For nothing short of this will ever fill the mouth of the oppressor, or gorge the insatiate appetite of lust and ambition. Once admit this subtle, wicked ministerial plan to take place — once permit this tea, thus imposed upon us by the East India Company, to be landed, received and vended, by their consignees, factors, &c., the badge of our slavery is fixed, the foundation of ruin is surely laid, and unless a wise and powerful God, by some unforeseen revolution in Providence, shall prevent, we shall soon be obliged to bid farewell to the once flourishing trade of America, and an everlasting adieu to those glorious rights and liberties, for which our worthy ancestors so earnestly prayed, so bravely fought, so freely bled!

“This being the light in which we view these measures of administration in their nature and tendency, we cannot but be alarmed, especially when we see our danger so great, — our ruin so nearly effected: — the ship with the detested tribute Tea in the harbor, and the persons appointed to receive and sell the same, unnaturally refusing to resign their appointment, though by carrying it into effect, they should procure their country's ruin. As therefore we should be wanting to ourselves, to our country and posterity, to be silent upon such an occasion as this, and as we have no reason to expect that God, the Supreme Disposer of all things, will work miracles for us, while we neglect ourselves, we do with the greatest seriousness and sincerity, come into the following

RESOLVES.

“1. That as the Revenue Act, and the Act allowing the East India Company to export Teas into the Colonies subject to duties, with all the measures of the Ministry and Administration, whether by secret craft or open violence to carry said Acts into effect, appear to us to be a direct violation of our charter rights and liberties; we are determined to the utmost of our power in every rational way, upon this and all proper occasions to oppose them, and use our most vigilant and resolute endeavors to prevent their taking place among us.

“2. That we will not be concerned either directly or indirectly in landing, receiving, buying or selling, or even using any of the Teas sent out by the East India Company, or that shall be imported subject to a duty imposed by Act of Parliament, for the purpose of raising a revenue in America.

“3. That all such persons as shall directly or indirectly aid and assist in landing, receiving, buying, selling or using the Teas sent by the East India Company, or imported by others subject to a duty, for the purpose of a revenue, shall be deemed and treated by us as enemies of their country.

“4. That the conduct of Richard Clarke and son, the Governor's two sons Thomas and Elisha Hutchinson, and other consignees, in refusing to resign their appointment as factors, or vendue masters for the East India Company, when repeatedly requested by the town of Boston, has justly rendered them obnoxious to their fellow citizens, to the inhabitants of this town, and to the people of the Province, and America in general; and as upon this occasion they have discovered, not only want of due affection for their native country, but also from selfish views, (as we think,) a strange disposition to accelerate its ruin — we cannot but consider them as objects of our just resentment, indignation, and contempt.

“5. That, as it has been basely insinuated, that the measures taken to prevent the reception of the East India Company’s Teas, are the effect of a scheme of the merchants to advance their own interest, it is the opinion of this town, that the suggestion is false and malicious, and designed at the same time to deceive and delude the people into a compliance with measures of their enemies, and to prevent the good effect of the honest and patriotic endeavors of so valuable and powerful part of the community to rescue the trade and liberties of their country from impending destruction.

“6. That as with gratitude to our brethren in Boston, and other towns, we do express our satisfaction in the measures they have taken, and the struggles they have made upon this, as well as many other occasions, for the liberties of their country and America; we are ready and resolved to concur with them in every rational measure that may be necessary for the preservation or recovery of our rights and liberties as Englishmen and Christians; and we trust in God, that should the state of our affairs require it, we shall be ready to sacrifice our estates and every thing dear in life, yea, and life itself, in support of the common cause.”

The above Resolves being passed, a motion was made that to them another should be added; accordingly it was resolved, without a dissenting voice:

“That if any head of a family in this Town, or any person shall from this time forward, and until the duty be taken off, purchase any Tea, or sell or consume any Tea in their families, such person shall be looked upon as an enemy to this town, and to this country, and shall by this town be treated with neglect and contempt.”

At a meeting of the inhabitants of Lexington, duly warned, on the 26th of September, 1774, Dea. Stone was chosen to represent the town in the General Court. A committee, consisting of Capt. Bowman, Dea. Brown, and Lieut. Edmund Munroe, was chosen to prepare Instructions, who reported the following draft, which was adopted:

“The alarming situation of our public affairs being so distressing as at present, and our Council being chosen by a mandamus from the King, whose authority as a Council we cannot own, nor consent to, —

“We, therefore, the inhabitants of the town of Lexington, being assembled at the Meeting House in said Town, on Monday the 26th day of September instant, to make choice of a Representative, and having made choice of Dea. Stone as our Representative, we, putting the fullest confidence in your integrity and ability, do instruct you, Sir, in the following manner — to use your utmost influence at the Great and General Court, that nothing there be transacted as a Court, under the new Council, or in conformity with any of the late Acts of Parliament.”

At the same meeting they chose Dea. Stone a delegate to the Provincial Congress. Having repeatedly denounced the acts of the Ministry and Parliament, as acts of oppression, designed to rob the people of the Colonies of every right which they held dear; and having pledged their fortunes and their lives, should the occasion require, in defence of the great principles of liberty, like men who knew what they said, and said what they meant, the inhabitants of the town made preparation for the last resort of oppressed subjects. Consequently, at meetings held in November and December, they voted “to provide a suitable quantity of flints,” — “to bring two pieces of cannon from Watertown and mount them,” — “to provide a pair of drums for the use of the military company in Town,” — “to provide bayonets at the town’s cost for one third of the training soldiers,” — “to have the militia and alarm list meet for a view of their arms,” &c. And that these votes should not prove a mere dead letter, committees were chosen to carry them into effect.

Besides, as the Provincial Congress had recommended to the people to put themselves in a state of defence by organizing military companies, to be armed and equipped, and to be ready to march at the shortest notice, it was voted by the inhabitants of Lexington, that they would carry out these recommendations, and committees were appointed for that purpose. As the Congress had also chosen Henry Gardner, Esq., of Stow, to be Receiver General of all province taxes which should be collected, and requested the several towns to pay their respective portions of the taxes, when collected, over to him, instead of paying them over to Harrison Gray, Esq., His Majesty’s Receiver General; the people directed their collectors to pay the province tax, when collected, over to Henry Gardner, Esq., and assured them by solemn vote, that the town would see them harmless for so doing. These “awful notes of preparation” showed that the people were prepared for any emergency, and firmly resolved to maintain their rights by the sword, if remonstrance and entreaty should prove ineffectual. We do not claim for the town of Lexington any exclusive honor in this respect. But we do say, that no town, under all the circumstances, is deserving of more praise. No town was more ready to resolve, and no town backed up her declarations with more promptitude, or made greater sacrifices in the cause than the town of Lexington. Her population was small, being only about seven hundred, and her means were limited; but like the woman in Scripture, "she did what she could" in the cause of the colonies—the cause of freedom.

I have been thus particular in presenting the acts and doings of the inhabitants of Lexington, preparatory to the opening of hostilities; for, after all, we are to contemplate the American Revolution, not so much in the strife upon the ensanguined field, as in the cool deliberation, and the firm resolve which characterized our people at the period immediately preceding the open rupture. I have been thus particular in order to present to the public those valuable state papers, written by the Rev. Jonas Clarke, which prepared our people, not only for the contest, but for the just appreciations of rational and constitutional liberty. It is an easy thing in times of excitement to arouse the passions of men, and nerve their arms for battle—to teach their hands to war and their fingers to fight.' But to instil into their minds the great principles of civil and religious liberty, and make them realize their duty as citizens, is a more difficult task. But this has been done in a clear and able manner, in the documents above cited. So fully and so clearly are the grievances under which our fathers labored, and the causes which gave rise to the American Revolution set forth, that if all other records were destroyed, and all recollections blotted from the memory, the faithful historian could, from the Instructions given to the Representatives of Lexington, and the other papers found in our Records, emanating from the pen of Mr. Clarke, trace the developments of oppression from year to year, and state the true causes of that mighty struggle.

With the master mind of this pious divine, operating upon and almost controlling the people of his charge, and with the military discipline to which some thirty of the citizens of Lexington had been subjected in their service in the French war, we can easily account for the firm and manly resistance made by them on the 19th of April, 1775. It was not mere military ardor, thirsting for renown on the field of battle — it was not that spirit of adventure which frequently leads to deeds of noble daring in the face of an enemy — nor was it a thirst of conquest for the hope of gain, that animated the breasts of the citizens of Lexington on that memorable day. No, it was the higher and holier aspirations of patriotism that fired their bosoms, and led them into the face of danger; it was a love of liberty, guided by reason and sanctified by religion, that gave them firmness, and made them steadfast and immovable in the cause they had espoused. They knew in whom they trusted, and the charge they had to keep; they knew that they stood the defenders of human rights — the protectors of their wives and children. And though the odds were fearfully against them, they looked to that Power to whom their devoted pastor had so often pointed them, and had confidence that the justice of their cause would bring down the sustaining aid of the "Lord of Sabaoth."

As the feelings and sentiments which prevailed among the people of Lexington, pervaded the whole community on the opening of the year 1775, an open rupture was a mere question of time. With such haughty pretensions as were put forth by the Ministry and Parliament of Great Britain on the one side, and the calm but resolute determination of the colonists to enjoy the rights and maintain the privileges of British subjects on the other, it was certain that this controversy could not end in words. There was too much pride on the one hand, and too much principle on the other, to justify the belief that England would abandon her policy, or the colonists their rights. To the eye of the enlightened statesman, the Revolution had already commenced, and the great battle of freedom was being fought. The resolve had been taken, and the armor had been burnished. The magazine had been prepared, the train laid, and the match ignited; and whenever by design or by accident, the fuse should come in contact with the powder, the explosion must take place.

Those, therefore, who contemplate the Revolution as commencing on the 19th of April, 1775, must look at effects rather than at causes; and suffer their minds to rest upon the outward and visible, rather than penetrate the great moral causes operating by fixed and certain laws, which had been developing themselves for more than a century. The rash act of Pitcairn at Lexington Common, was by no means the cause of the Revolution. It was merely the accidental occurrence which opened the drama at that time and place. The tragedy had been written, the great parts assigned, and the grand result penned by the recording angel, and if the first act had not been opened at Lexington and Concord, it must have transpired on some other field. Otis and Adams opened the battle of the Revolution, long before the bayonet was fixed, or the sword drawn. Clarke's Instructions to our Representatives did as much to make the patriots stand firm on the Common in the very face of a superior force, as did the stern command of the gallant Parker.

Nor does this view of the subject lessen the praise due to the patriot band, which rallied in freedom's cause on the 19th of April. On the contrary, it adds greatly to their honor, and reflects imperishable lustre upon their names. It shows that they acted, not from passion, but from principle, and fought not to conquer, but to defend — not to despoil a foe, but to establish for themselves and for their posterity a government of laws, which would mete out to every citizen his rights and his privileges, and secure them in their enjoyment. The colonies had outgrown their minority, and, by an irresistible instinct of our nature, felt that they had a right to set up for themselves. The freedom of thought and of speech which had been so long enjoyed in America, had prepared the people for freedom, and that precious boon must be enjoyed. They were no sticklers for forms. They were sober, peaceable, and law-abiding, and had no desire to break off their connection with the mother country, if they could be treated with parental regard. But as the matter then stood, a separation was inevitable. The irrepressible conflict had commenced, and the work must go on to its completion. The day of debate, must now give place to a day of action; and any attempt at a peaceable adjustment would be merely a temporary adjournment of the open rupture.

CHAPTER IV.

CAUSES OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

The State of Feeling towards the Mother Country — Allegiance to the Crown — Massachusetts the First to deny the Right of Parliament to legislate for us — Massachusetts Charter annulled — Andros appointed Governor, with Despotie Powers — Andros imprisoned — A new Charter granted — Writs of Assistance issued — Otis opposed them — Admiralty Jurisdiction extended — The Stamp Act passed — Stamp Officer hung in Effigy — General Congress at New York — Stamp Act repealed — A Ship-of-War sent to Boston — Gov. Bernard dissolved the General Court — Refuses to Order a New Election — A Convention assembles in Boston — Two Regiments sent to Boston — The People refuse to furnish them Quarters or Rations — Bernard recalled, and Hutchinson appointed Governor — The Boston Massacre — Hutchinson removes the Troops to the Castle — Boston laid under Martial Law — Committees of Correspondence organized — The Tea destroyed — Massachusetts the First to deny the Power of Parliament, and the First to baffle the Ministry.

In the preceding chapter, the state of feeling in the town of Lexington, up to the commencement of the revolutionary struggle, and the measures there adopted, have been presented. We have seen in the instructions to their representatives the great doctrines of freedom and good government plainly foreshadowed, and the causes which led to the Revolution, strongly set forth in general terms. In this chapter it is proposed to state these causes on a broader scale, and to trace, from time to time, the developments of oppression on the one hand, and of the spirit of freedom on the other. By this view, broader in its territorial application, we shall see that the aspirations and the throbs which swelled the bosoms of the citizens of Lexington, beat in unison with the pulsations throughout the province.

Springing from a stock proverbial for its loyalty, our fathers were not inclined to revolt from the mother country. On the contrary, they were proud of their ancestry, and claimed nothing but the rights of English subjects. The Reformation in the sixteenth century, by establishing the right of private judgment, had clothed man with individuality, and taught him to think and judge for himself; and while the consciousness of personal accountability had in a degree wrought out spiritual emancipation, the contests growing out of the absurd prerogatives of the crown of England, had prepared the many for political freedom. The most intelligent among the people of Great Britain regarded the infallibility of the Pope in spiritual, and the infallibility of the King in temporal things, as equally absurd. The seeds of civil and religious liberty had in this manner been sown broadcast throughout the realm, and though some had fallen by the wayside, and some in stony places, others had fallen on good ground, and were promising a future harvest. Those who emigrated to these shores were deeply imbued with the spirit of liberty, both civil and religious. They had felt the exactions of the state, and the persecutions of the church in their own country, and rather than submit to these evils, they chose to encounter the perils and privations of a life in a wilderness, surrounded by savage foes.

But though they had fled from persecution in their native land, they did not design to throw off their allegiance to their rightful sovereign. The first settlers of New England, before they left the Mayflower, declared that they came to this wilderness to promote "the glory of God, the advancement of the Christian faith, and the honor of their king and country." And after they had landed upon these shores, they cherished a fond recollection of the land of their birth. Their memories recurred to the scene of their childhood, and brought up anew all the endearing associations of early life. They remembered with filial gratitude the parents who had reared them, and the friends they had left behind; and next to the spot which was endeared to them by their trials, their dangers, and their sufferings, their warmest benisons rested upon their native isle. But being separated from the parent country by the broad expanse of ocean, they knew that they must rely mainly upon themselves. Realizing that they held their fortunes in their own hands, they naturally felt that they had a right to manage their own affairs in their own way. Holding the country by the double right of charter and of purchase, they could not divest themselves of the conviction that the lands they had cleared and the huts they had erected were theirs by no ordinary title. Having set up civil and religious institutions for themselves, they had a growing attachment for the work of their own hands, and felt that their wishes should be consulted in everything which related to the colonies. Claiming by their Charter, not only their possessions, but all the rights and immunities of Englishmen,—while they acknowledged their allegiance to the Crown, they maintained that they had full powers of legislation: and hence they denied all right in Parliament to impose taxes upon them without their consent.

As the controversy growing in part out of taxation, gave rise to the Revolution, of which the events of the 19th April were the commencement; and as the resistance of our fathers to the Acts of Parliament is sometimes appealed to, to justify resistance to our laws at the present day,—it is important to a just understanding of the issue then, and of our duty now, that the facts be distinctly stated, and the exact issue be kept in view. The precise question was this: Has the British Parliament, in which the colonies have no representation, a right by the colonial Charters and by the English Constitution, to tax the colonies for the support of the Home Government, or to modify their Charters, without the consent of the colonists? Great Britain claimed this right, and rested it upon the supremacy of Parliament. The colonies, they said, were of their own planting; and being a part of the British empire, were subject to all the laws of the realm; and that Parliament, being supreme, “had a right to legislate for them in all cases whatsoever.” On the other hand, it was maintained by the colonists, that on leaving Great Britain with a Charter from the crown, they brought with them to this country, all the rights and immunities of English subjects; that on the great principles of natural rights, recognized and secured by the English constitution, all private property was sacred, and hence that all taxes must be granted by the people themselves, or by representatives chosen by them; that those natural and constitutional rights were not only inherent in the colonists, but were also secured to them in their Charters, which were sacred compacts that no power on earth could rightfully infringe; that by the fundamental law of the empire, taxation and representation were inseparably united, and as the colonies were not, and from the nature of the case, could not be represented in the British Parliament, so Parliament had no right to impose taxes upon them, especially for the maintenance of the Government at home. It was moreover contended that their Charters gave them full powers of legislation, and that they had exercised those powers from the first, with the full knowledge and acquiescence of the British Government. They also declared their willingness at all times, to grant by their own Legislatures, all moneys which they should deem necessary for the support of their own government, and also to defend His Majesty's Colonies in America against the enemies of their king and country. Such was the precise issue made at that time.

The Colony of Massachusetts may justly claim the honor of being the first to put forth this doctrine. As early as 1634, attempts were made to vacate the Charter of the Colony, rather for non-conformity in religious matters than any thing else, and the people of Massachusetts distinctly intimated that they had full powers of themselves to make all needful laws for their own preservation. But in 1646, Parliament having asserted full powers over the colonies, the General Court of Massachusetts protested against the doctrine, as one calculated to bring them into a state of vassalage. In a memorial to Parliament they say, "We have not admitted appeals to your authority, being assured that they cannot stand with the liberty and power granted to us by our Charter, and would be destructive of all government." In the same spirit, Winslow, the agent of Massachusetts in England, publicly denied the jurisdiction of Parliament over the colonies. "If the Parliament of England," said he, "should impose laws upon us, having no burgesses in the House of Commons, we should lose the liberties and freedom of Englishmen indeed." Thus did Massachusetts, within the first quarter of a century after the first settlement of New England, assert the power of the colonies, and deny the right of Parliament to legislate for them, on the ground that they were not represented in that body—a doctrine on which the colonies finally united, and resisted the acts of the parent country.

The arbitrary claims of Great Britain being persisted in, Massachusetts declared in 1661 that, under God and their Charter, they had a right to choose their own officers, to exercise "all power and authority, legislative, executive, and judicial, to defend themselves by force of arms against every aggressor, and to reject, as an infringement of their rights, any parliamentary or royal imposition prejudicial to the country, and contrary to any just act of colonial legislation."

To punish Massachusetts for her bold and independent opposition to the claims of the King and Parliament, a quo warranto was issued in 1683, to annul her Charter; the King at the same time making a public declaration that pardon would be extended to the colonists, in case they would consent to certain modifications of the Charter. On the receipt of this intelligence in Massachusetts, a general consternation at first prevailed. They knew that many cities in England had been compelled to surrender their charters, and submit to the King and Parliament. The Governor and assistants were persuaded that it was hopeless to resist, and recommended that agents be sent to England "to receive His Majesty's command." This recommendation was sent to the representatives of the people, who returned it with this laconic endorsement "The Deputies consent not, but adhere to their former bills." The Charter, however, was annulled, and the Colony was left to the tender mercy of the corrupt court of Charles II.

The revocation of the Charter was followed by the introduction of a despotism, more grievous than anything before known in Massachusetts. Sir Edmund Andros, who had been appointed Governor of New England, arrived in Boston, in 1686, empowered by the new sovereign, James II., to appoint and remove his own council, and with their consent to exercise all powers of legislation, to make laws, lay taxes, control the militia, and to sustain his authority by force. To carry out this arbitrary and despotic system of government, he resolved that no printing presses should be tolerated in the country, and that the people should not be permitted to assemble in town meetings to deliberate upon public affairs. Under his corrupt administration, public schools were neglected, religious institutions were impaired, and the personal rights of the citizens were either disregarded or basely trampled upon. But a despotism like this was not long to be endured. Those who had denied the power of the King and Parliament, would not long submit to the imposition of taxes by a subordinate magistrate. And while his monarch was preparing the way for his own overthrow in Great Britain, Andros was laying the foundation for his overthrow in the colonies. When the news reached Boston in the spring of 1689, that James II. had fled his country, and that the Prince of Orange had ascended the throne, the people were determined to imitate the example of their British brethren, and rid themselves of their tyrant. Andros attempted to sustain himself by force; but the people were too sensible of their rights, and of his weakness, to submit. They seized the sheriff, the military commander, and, at last, the Governor himself, and committed them to prison. The whole town of Boston was in arms, and, actuated by what they declared to be their sense of duty to their God and country, completely overthrew the government of Andros. While the people of Great Britain were rejoicing in the expulsion of the Stuarts, the people of New England were sounding their peans for the overthrow of a subordinate tyrant.

The Charter of the Colony of Massachusetts, which was annulled in 1685, was restored by William and Mary in 1691, with several limitations; the crown claiming the right to appoint the Governor, who should have a negative upon the Legislature. The Council, however, were to be chosen by the Legislature. Though this Charter did not restore to the people all the rights and privileges which they had formerly enjoyed, taken in connection with the arbitrary government of Andros, it contained some important provisions. The people of New England, from the first, were in the habit of transacting all kinds of business in their town meetings. In those little democracies, they not only acted upon their municipal affairs, but had been accustomed to discuss all public questions, and devise measures for the good of the Colony. These meetings had been suspended by Andros, who, judging correctly, considered them the great means of creating and keeping alive a thirst for independence. Though the first Charter did not in terms authorize the holding of such meetings for such purposes, it gave powers which almost necessarily implied it. But no such meetings were forbidden during the period which intervened between the annulling of the first Charter, and its restoration; the Act of William and Mary revived these customs, and gave the royal construction in favor of what may be denominated the political rights of towns. This construction of the rights of the people will appear more important in the subsequent part of this narrative. Under this modified Charter, the General Court were to provide for the support of the Government, and the payment of its officers; and to make these officers responsible to the people, they claimed the right of fixing their salaries annually, instead of establishing them by standing laws. This course involved the Colony in a controversy with the crown, which was renewed from time to time, for nearly forty years, when Governor Belcher prevailed upon the crown to accept the annual grant; and so the controversy subsided, leaving the Colony victor in the field.

During the war between England and France for the conquest of Canada, the controversy between the former and her colonies was in a great measure suspended; though the attempts of Great Britain to quarter her troops upon the people, without the consent of their legislatures, kept them alive to a sense of their rights, and of the injustice of the parent country. But after the close of the war with France in 1763, the British Government turned their attention to the colonies, and attempted by various means to bring them to subjection. One measure was to make the judges dependent upon the crown alone; thus making the judiciary the mere creature of the king, and a fit instrument by which to oppress the colonies, and so bring them to submission. This roused the indignation of the people, who plainly saw a settled purpose in Great Britain to reduce them to a state of vassalage.

But the darling policy of the Administration was to raise a revenue from the colonies. Various propositions were presented for some new and direct enactment, which would bear upon the colonies, and do something to supply the British treasury. It was, however, thought best to revive and enforce some general existing law regulating trade, rather than adopt a special provision for America. An effort was consequently made to carry out this plan, and, to render it effectual, it was thought necessary to clothe the officers of the customs with full power and authority to call to their aid all the executive and judicial officers in the Colony. As Boston was the great mart of trade, and Massachusetts the most perverse Colony, it was deemed advisable to try the experiment there. In 1761, the officers of the customs applied to Hutchinson, who had been raised to the chief justiceship in Massachusetts, for "Writs of Assistance," to enable them to collect the duties upon various imported articles. The application was resisted, and the case argued before the whole court. Jeremiah Gridley appeared for the crown, and argued the necessity and legality of the writ; but when he had closed, James Otis, a man of ardent feeling, exalted patriotism, and thrilling eloquence, stepped forth in behalf of the colonists. "I am determined," said he, "to sacrifice estate, ease, health, applause, and even life itself, to the sacred calls of my country, in opposition to a kind of power, the exercise of which cost one king of England his head, and another his throne." He then proceeded to point out the illegality and oppressive character of such a writ. He denounced it, "as the worst instrument of arbitrary power, the most destructive of English liberty and the fundamental principles of law." "No Act of Parliament," said he, "can establish such a writ; an Act of Parliament against the Constitution is void."

The powerful and eloquent appeal of Otis awakened a feeling which had been slumbering in the breasts of the patriots of the colonies, and prepared the people for more active and efficient efforts in the cause of freedom. John Adams, who was present and listened to the argument and eloquence of Otis, declared "that from that time, he could never read the Acts of trade without anger, nor any section of them without a curse." The Court after some delay and consulting the English ministry, granted the writ, which greatly heightened public feeling, and prepared the people for more decisive measures. But the great cause of discontent was the enforcing of the Acts of trade by the Courts of Admiralty — courts entirely independent of the colonies, and depending upon the crown alone — courts in which all cases were decided without the intervention of a jury, and where the pleasure of the ministry was the paramount law.

While the public mind in the colonies was thus agitated, and fears were entertained for the safety of their rights, the Board of Trade recommended, in 1763, the passage of an Act, requiring all the legal instruments in the colonies, including notes, receipts, orders, certificates, &c., to be written on stamped paper, upon which a duty should be imposed — the agents of the colonies in England partially assenting to the measure. On the arrival of this intelligence in America, the people of Boston and the Legislature of Massachusetts, ever alive to the rights of freemen, in their instructions to their agent in London, remonstrated against the threatened measure; declaring, "that the silence of the Province should have been imputed to any cause, even to despair, rather than be construed into a tacit cession of their rights, or an acknowledgment of a right in the Parliament of Great Britain to impose duties and taxes upon a people, who are not represented in the House of Commons." In the same instructions, they endorse the doctrine of Otis, "that the imposition of taxes, whether on trade or on lands, on houses or ships, on real or personal, on fixed or floating property in the colonies, is absolutely irreconcilable with the rights of the colonists, as British subjects or as men."

In 1765, the worst fears of the colonies were realized in the passage of the Stamp Act, and the adoption of other measures, designed to support the absolute supremacy of Parliament over them. And to insure the execution of these odious and oppressive acts, not only all the civil officers in the Colony were put in requisition, but the whole naval and military force, which was to be increased in America, was to aid in the support of these arbitrary measures; and to render the pill more bitter, the people here were required to support the troops which were sent over to oppress them. And to render the tyranny absolute, all cases arising under these acts were to be decided in Courts of Admiralty, without the intervention of a jury, by a single judge, created by the crown, whose sole support was to be drawn from his share of the profits of his own condemnations.

Massachusetts took the alarm. Her people saw in this series of measures, a fixed and determined plan to reduce them to subjection, and to bring them to the foot of the throne. Governor Bernard, in his message to the Legislature, assured them that it was the duty and interest of the Colony to submit, for the law "would now be prosecuted to its utmost completion;" but the representatives of the people addressed letters to the other colonies, inviting them to choose delegates to meet in a General Congress at New York, to consult together on the affairs of the colonies. In the meantime the Stamp Act arrived in Boston, and Oliver, naturally odious to the people, was announced as the officer who was to receive and dispose of the stamps. The Act was universally condemned in Boston, "as arbitrary, unconstitutional, and a breach of the Charter." Oliver, the stamp officer, was hung in effigy. Hutchinson, the Chief Justice, ordered the sheriff to remove the image, but the people insisted that it should remain through the day. Governor Bernard summoned his Council, but a majority of them refused to interfere. The next evening, the image was taken down, placed upon a bier, carried down State street, directly by the Council Chamber, the multitude shouting at the top of their voices, "Liberty, Property, and no Stamps." They then proceeded to Kilby street, where they demolished a frame, which it was said Oliver was erecting for a stamp office, and with the fragments of the frame made "a funeral pyre for the effigy in front of his house on Fort Hill." A few evenings after, the mob assembled near the old State House, seized and burnt the records of the Admiralty Court, and afterwards assaulted the house of the Comptroller of Customs, and of the Chief Justice, who had rendered himself extremely odious to the people. The demonstration was so strong that Oliver was induced to resign his office, and the stamps were left in the hands of the Governor. Never had the feelings of the people of Boston and vicinity been wrought up to such a pitch; for though the sober part of the community condemned the assault upon the house of the Comptroller and of the Chief Justice, they were willing to have such a manifestation of public sentiment as should render the execution of the oppressive law impracticable. The press and the pulpit spoke out in language not to be misunderstood. The patriotic Mayhew preached to a large audience from the text — "I would that they were even cut off, which trouble you; for, brethren, ye have been called to liberty;" in which he set forth the importance of civil and religious freedom, and the duty of the people to maintain their just rights by all suitable means.

The General Congress which convened at New York, put forth a declaration of sentiments, dwelling mainly upon the inherent right of trial by jury, in opposition to the extension of Admiralty jurisdiction; and the right of exemption from taxation, except through their respective colonial legislatures. This doctrine being avowed by a General Congress, tended directly to unite the different colonies, and so prepare them for the great struggle which was approaching. On the very day of the adjournment of Congress, the Legislature which first proposed that assembly, convened at Boston, and in reply to Governor Bernard, asserted a doctrine in relation to the power of Parliament, from which the Colony never receded. "The Charter of the Province," they declare, "invests the General Assembly with the power of making laws for its internal government and taxation; that there are certain original, inherent rights belonging to the people, of which Parliament cannot divest them; among these is the right of representation in the body which exercises the power of taxation; that there is a necessity that the subjects in America should exercise this power within themselves, for they are not represented in Parliament, and such a representation is deemed impracticable."

While these doctrines were advocated in Massachusetts by James Otis, Samuel Adams, and their associates, and in several of the other colonies by some of their purest patriots and wisest statesmen, they also found able advocates in Great Britain. Pitt, Barre, Burke, and others connected with the government, pleaded the cause of liberty in the British Parliament, with such distinguished ability and force of argument, that the ministry, fearing the strength of the opposition at home, and the resistance of their subjects in America, consented to the repeal of the Stamp Act. Thus was Great Britain completely foiled in her first attempt at raising a revenue in her colonies, to sustain her burdened treasury. The repeal of the Stamp Act produced a general rejoicing in the colonies. The Legislature of Massachusetts passed an Act remunerating those who had suffered in the destruction of their property in attempting to execute the Stamp Act. But with characteristic wisdom, they were careful to state in the bill itself, that the sufferers had no just claim, and that the relief was granted of "their own good will," and not from deference to any "requisition made upon them."

In the meantime the ministry were devising measures of taxation in the shape of duties upon imports into the colonies. In the debates upon the Stamp Act, a distinction had been taken between internal and external taxation. It was maintained by the opponents of the Stamp Act, that it related to the internal trade of the colonies, and was a proper subject to be regulated by local law. The ministry thought to avoid this objection by imposing a duty upon imports, which related to foreign commerce — to the general subject of trade. But the colonists were not disposed to acquiesce in any such distinction. Seeing the new attempt of Parliament to subject them to taxation, the people of Boston in town meeting assembled, resolved that they would not import British manufactures or other merchandise on which duties were imposed. The Legislature of Massachusetts, led on by that distinguished and far-seeing patriot, Samuel Adams, forwarded instructions to their agent in Great Britain, to be communicated to the ministry, in which they embodied their fixed and unchangeable opinions. They renewed their former declarations, that Parliament had no right to tax the colonies; and they further declared that the creation of new crown officers, and the sending of a standing army to be quartered upon the people, were in fact introducing an absolute government into the colony, which would lead to the most dangerous consequences; for they add significantly, "the laws of God and nature are invariable." They also addressed a circular to the other colonies, setting forth their common grievances, and asking their coöperation in all such measures as may be found necessary for the maintenance of their rights as freemen.

Governor Bernard, with all his professions, was a deadly enemy to the Colony. For while he was pretending to be friendly to the people, and was assuring them of his coöperation and aid in all their efforts to obtain their rights, he was writing to the ministry, representing the Colony in a state of rebellion, and urging upon them the necessity of sending over a naval and military force to reduce them to subjection. In May, 1768, the Romney, a ship-of-war, arrived in Boston harbor from Halifax, being sent at the suggestion of Bernard, and at the request of the Commissioners of Customs, to awe the Bostonians into submission. To strengthen his crew, and to show his entire disregard of the feelings of the people, and the rights of the colonists, the commander forcibly and insolently impressed New England seamen to serve on board his ship. He also seized a merchant ship belonging to John Hancock, and anchored her under the guns of his vessel. This created intense feeling among the inhabitants. A town meeting was called, and a committee of twenty-one was chosen to wait upon the Governor, and present an address to the citizens, in which they claimed for the Colony the sole power of taxation. At the same time they condemned in strong terms, the practice of impressment, and demanded the removal of the Romney from the harbor. The town also declared and put on record, their irrevocable determination to assert and maintain their dear and invaluable rights and liberties, at the utmost hazard of their fortunes and their lives. At the same time, they expressed their readiness to maintain loyalty and submission to Great Britain in all things necessary to the preservation of the whole empire.

In the midst of this excitement, Governor Bernard laid before the Legislature a letter from the British ministry, calling upon them to rescind their Resolutions denying the power of Parliament to tax the colonies; and also to recall their Circular addressed to the other colonies, asking their coöperation and support in defence of their just rights. This presented a more direct and important issue than had ever before been made. Here was an express requisition made upon the Legislature, and it must be met at once. Under the guidance of Samuel Adams, who was ever ready to meet any emergency, an answer was returned to Lord Hillsborough, justifying the course of the Legislature, and refusing to retrace their steps. This bold and independent measure was sustained by the House with great unanimity, there being but seventeen against the measure, and ninety-two in its favor. When the Governor was informed by a message from the House, that they had refused to rescind, and had affirmed their former doings, trembling with fear, he first prorogued, and then dissolved the assembly.

Massachusetts was now without a Legislature. The people had no intention to begin a rebellion — they intended to act only on the defensive. They knew their rights, and were determined to maintain them at every hazard; but, at the same time, they intended to act with prudence. Massachusetts had not only the consciousness that she was in the right, but that she had the sympathy, and in an emergency, should have the aid and support of her sister colonies.

In the autumn of 1768, hearing that three regiments of troops were to be sent to Boston to reduce them to a state of subjection, and the Legislature having been dissolved by the Governor, the people requested him to order a new election. On hearing of the refusal of Bernard to call a new Legislature, the people of Boston repaired to Faneuil Hall, that cradle of American Liberty, and resolved, "That the inhabitants of Boston will at the utmost peril of their lives and fortunes, maintain and defend their rights, liberties, privileges and immunities; and that money cannot be granted, nor a standing army kept up in the Province, but by their own free consent." They also unanimously requested the selectmen to wait upon the clergymen of the town, and request them to set apart the following Tuesday as a day of fasting and prayer. The request was cheerfully complied with, and the day was kept in a solemn manner. In this way the sacred sanctions of religion were brought to bear upon the civil policy of our fathers, and hence they asserted their rights, not simply as patriots who owed a debt to their country, but as Christians who were under obligations to their God.

Shortly after, a Convention of the Province assembled at Boston to consult upon the public safety. One of their first acts was to petition the Governor to summon a constitutional Legislature, to prevent the encroachments of the military upon the civil power. The Governor not only refused to receive their petition, but admonished the Convention to separate, as they should "repent of their rashness." The Convention, however, continued in session six days, and repeated the protest of the Colony against taxation by Parliament, and against a standing army quartered among them. There were many in the Province, and foremost among them was Samuel Adams, who saw that a collision of arms was inevitable. But it was desirable to unite all the people in the Colony, and also to secure the sympathy and assistance of the other colonies. The cause was one, and all had a common interest in the result ; and so all must be induced, if possible, to act together. To secure this, it was essential that wise and discreet measures should be adopted. On this ground, prudence and a strict adherence to law, were strongly enjoined. Adams, though firm as a rock, and fearless in the hour of danger, was at all times cool and collected, and knew when to arouse, and when to soothe public feeling. Patriotism with him was a religious sentiment ; and though he had a zeal of God, it was always according to knowledge. He knew that it would be madness for the citizens of Boston to provoke an encounter with the King's troops, which were about to be landed among them ; but he knew that by holding the military to a strict legal account, and keeping it subordinate to the civil power, the force would be of but little utility to the crown ; and would, in fact, do but little towards enforcing the arbitrary commands of the treacherous Governor.

A few days after the adjournment of the Convention, a squadron from Halifax, with two regiments of troops and a company of artillery on board, arrived in the harbor of Boston. The selectmen being called upon to provide quarters for the troops, taking the advantage of an Act of Parliament, refused to grant them "till the barracks were full," at Castle William. The Governor's Council also insisted upon this provision of law, and refused to furnish quarters. They also refused to provide supplies of provisions and fuel without the consent of the Legislature, which had been dissolved by the Governor himself. Thus was the treacherous Bernard caught in his own toils. He was greatly perplexed in providing for the troops he had secretly called for ; to send them down to the Castle, as Fort Independence was then called, would be removing them too far from the point where he wished to station them, that they might awe the people into submission. Great efforts had been made, both in England and in this country, to have Otis, Adams, and other leading patriots, sent to Great Britain to be tried for their lives. But after all the endeavors of the corrupt and deceitful Bernard, and the administration at home, it was decided by the law officers of the crown, that their acts did not constitute treason, the only crime which by the statute would justify their being brought to England for trial.

The people of Boston were encouraged to persevere in their resolution not to import dutiable articles. Many of the towns in the Province adopted resolutions, assuring the citizens of the metropolis that they would aid them in carrying out that policy. The people of Lexington as we have already seen, declared in 1769, that they would drink no more tea till the unconstitutional revenue Act should be repealed. Such assurances from every quarter gave the people of Boston great courage, and induced them to persevere. Boston being the seat of oppression, was of course the first to complain — the first to speak out — the first to act. And they performed their part nobly. But at the same time, it should be understood that the patriots of Charlestown, of Roxbury, of Cambridge, of Salem, and we may add of the towns generally, counselled with the patriots of Boston, and whatever was done at Boston, was sustained by the people in the interior. The people in the country followed the town of Boston, not merely because Boston had acted, but because she had acted on the general policy, and carried out the great principles to which all the people, both in the town and in the country, had assented.

In 1769, Bernard being notified of his recall, convened the newly chosen Legislature, that they might appropriate his salary before he left. But the Legislature, true to the interests of freedom, even before electing a Clerk or a Speaker, complained to the Governor that "the armament by sea and land in the port and at the gates of the city, during the session of the Assembly," was an indignity to the Legislature. Bernard in reply declared that he had no authority over his Majesty's troops; whereupon they declare by way of rejoinder, that a standing army, uncontrollable by the civil authority of the Province, was dangerous to liberty and inconsistent with the spirit of a free constitution. The Governor however adjourned the Legislature to Cambridge, that they need not be overawed by the presence of the troops; and his great object being to obtain his salary, he urged the appropriation upon the House; but that body instead of granting it, directly refused, and petitioned the crown for his removal from the government. They also affirmed their former doctrine in relation to taxation, and declared that "the establishment of a standing army in the Colony in time of peace, without the consent of the Legislature, was an invasion of the natural and chartered rights of the people."

The treacherous Bernard was succeeded by the more treacherous Hutchinson; and the affairs of the Colony were not at all improved by the change. The ministry had so far yielded to the colonies as to remove the tax upon tea; but the concessions came too late. The people plainly saw that paying the duty upon one article, would be surrendering the great principle for which they had contended; and they boldly declared that they would resist the payment of taxes in any form. On the 18th of October, 1769, the town of Boston published an "Appeal to the World," in which they say, "A legal Meeting in the Town of Boston is an Assembly where a noble freedom of speech is ever expected and maintained; where men think as they please, and speak as they think. Such an Assembly has ever been the dread, and often, the scourge of Tyrants. Our Rights are invaded by the Revenue Acts; therefore, till they are all repealed, and the troops recalled, the cause of our just complaints cannot be removed." Still the people of Boston were disposed to abide by all laws constitutionally made; for while they had no disposition to encounter the troops stationed in their midst, they were careful to have every officer and soldier, who should invade the rights of the citizen, or trample upon the civil authority, brought before the magistrate. In this way, they rendered the troops comparatively harmless, and as burdensome to the crown as they were to the people.

The troops so stationed, became weary of a life of inactivity, and, like soldiers generally in that situation, assumed important airs towards the citizens. Small bodies of them would go through the town at night creating disturbances, and insulting the people who were abroad in the streets. On the evening of the 2d of March, 1770, a number of British soldiers having collected in State street, insulted some of the citizens who were passing, which soon drew together a considerable concourse of people. Preston, a British captain, who was officer of the day, soon appeared with a file of men with fixed bayonets, and their muskets loaded. Preston ordered them to fire upon the citizens, which they did, killing three men, and wounding several others. The excitement was fearful. The bells rang in all the churches.

The town drums beat. "To arms! to arms," was the cry. The people were excited almost to madness at the sight of their slaughtered brethren. At eleven the next day, a town meeting was opened at Faneuil Hall with a prayer by Rev. Mr. Cooper. Samuel Adams and fourteen others were chosen a committee to wait upon the Governor, and, in the name of the town, demand the removal of the troops. The Governor after considerable hesitation consented to remove one regiment to the Castle; but decided to retain the rest in the town. Faneuil Hall being insufficient to contain the multitude which had assembled, the meeting was adjourned to the Old South Church. The committee which had waited upon Hutchinson, came in with their report of the interview, and pronounced the answer of the Governor unsatisfactory.

The town after due deliberation raised a new committee, composed of Adams, Hancock, Warren, and other prominent citizens, to bear to the Governor their final message. Samuel Adams, always manly and dignified, would at times rise even above himself, and speak with a majesty and authority which would excite admiration and command obedience. Here was a proper occasion for him to appear as he was, truly great. Hutchinson had exerted himself to the utmost to have Adams sent to England as a traitor to be tried for his life; and at this important juncture the patriot and the courtier stood face to face. "It is the unanimous opinion of the meeting," said Adams to the Governor, "that your reply to the vote of the inhabitants in the morning is unsatisfactory; nothing less will satisfy them than a total and immediate removal of all the troops." Hutchinson hesitated, repeating his former statement, that he had no power to remove them. "If you have power," rejoined Adams, "to remove one regiment, you have power to remove both. It is at your peril, if you do not. The meeting is composed of three thousand people. They are become very impatient. A thousand men are already arrived from the neighborhood, and the country is in general motion. Night is approaching; an immediate answer is expected." Hutchinson hesitated, trembled, and finally quailed before the master-spirit of this patriot band, and consented to withdraw the troops from the town, and quarter them at the Castle. On the return of the committee with the intelligence, the meeting dispersed; but not until they had provided a strong military watch of their own, to be on duty till the regiments should leave the town whose peace and safety they had disturbed.

The Governor was mortified and chagrined, at finding himself foiled in his plan, and his military force checked and controlled by the civil authority. The government at home, sharing in this mortification, strove to raise the military above the civil power by placing the proscribed town of Boston under martial law. The Governor, in consequence of this step, resigned the Castle to the military commander at Boston. This new act of arbitrary power on the part of the King and Council, tended to hasten the rupture which the wisest statesmen had long seen to be merely a question of time.

Up to the commencement of 1772, Boston had acted without any special concert with other towns in the Province. Resolutions had been adopted, and the leading patriots in Boston had counselled with kindred spirits in other towns; but there had been no organized channel of communication. But as the weight of British vengeance seemed to be concentrating upon Boston alone, many of her patriotic citizens were filled with apprehension, bordering upon despair. And well might they hesitate, if not tremble. They saw their town subjected to martial law, and their trade threatened with destruction; the King and Parliament, drawing the cords of oppression tighter and tighter around them. And while these accumulating evils seemed to be gathering, as if to burst upon their devoted heads, they saw some of the other colonies faltering and even giving in a partial adherence to the demands of their common oppressor. Boston had become comparatively quiet, and the fires of patriotism seemed to be dying out. John Adams had retired from the service of the people; Hancock faltered; Cushing, Phillips, Church, and others who had been active before, hesitated or declined active service in the patriot cause. But there was one man among them who knew not despondency; one who was reared up for the crisis, and who like all truly great men, was sure to rise with the occasion. Samuel Adams stood firm at his post. Seeing the crisis approaching, he was resolved to meet it. He saw in prospect the independence of the colonies, and knowing that great events could be brought about only by active and well concerted means, he conceived the plan of opening a correspondence with all the towns in the Province; and by an organized system of town and county committees to form a sort of government by which the energies of the Colony might be directed, and so be prepared for any exigency which might arise. And though his plan at first was but feebly seconded in Boston, and some who had been active before, refused to act on the committee; in a short time there came a response from the country, which infused new life into the people, confirming the wavering, and gaining new advocates for the cause of popular rights.

When the Legislature assembled in January, 1773, these responses from the towns were laid before them. The popular voice thus expressed, the firmness manifested, and the determination evinced by the people themselves in their primary meetings, strengthened the hands of the Assembly, and rekindled in their breasts those fires of patriotism, which were never more to expire. The Governor in his message to the two Houses, with the design of either bringing them to submission, or into a more direct conflict with the parent government, called upon them either to admit or disprove the supremacy of Parliament. The House, by its champion, Samuel Adams, took up the Governor's message, and in an able and artful manner, showed that, from the premises laid down by the Governor in that document, the power of Parliament could not be supreme over the colonies. Encouraged by the almost unanimous voice of the whole Province, and strengthened by the noble and patriotic response from Virginia, the leading patriots of Massachusetts saw that the issue was fairly made, and that a rupture between the colonies and Great Britain was inevitable, and that nothing but union and firmness were necessary to insure independence. Their future measures, therefore, must look to this result.

While these things were occurring, the feelings of the people of Massachusetts were further exasperated by the publication of sundry letters written by Governor Hutchinson to the ministry in England, urging the adoption of the most arbitrary and oppressive measures against the Colony. By this development, what had been suspected before, was now more than confirmed.

It appeared that the Governor had been guilty of the greatest hypocrisy and treachery, urging Great Britain to oppress the people over which he was ruling; while to them he was making the most solemn protestations of friendship, and assuring them that he was doing everything in his power to lessen their burdens and secure their rights.

The East India Company, anticipating a profitable market in America, had purchased a large amount of tea, and to prevent a heavy loss, they prevailed upon the Council to allow them to ship it to America free of duty in England. The ministry probably thought that this would afford a good opportunity to test the principle, and obtain a concession from the colonists. A large quantity of tea was shipped to America. Three cargoes were destined to Boston. In the meantime, the Committee of Correspondence had succeeded in enlisting the sympathy of most of the towns in the Province; and had obtained the assurance from the other colonies, that they would resist this new imposition, and would not suffer the tea to be landed. The amount of duty was small, but, as the payment of it would recognize the right of Parliament to tax them, they could not consistently with their oft repeated declarations, submit.

Besides the leading statesmen were fully sensible that an open rupture must inevitably take place at no very distant day; and they did not intend that any act of concession should be cited against them, when the eventful period should arrive. They chose rather to meet the oppressor at the threshold, and admonish him of the danger of his measures, before it was too late. It was for Massachusetts in this case, as in all others, to take the lead. The people knew that the tea ships were on their passage, and that the Governor himself in the name of his sons, was among the consignees. A large assembly convened at the "Liberty Tree," where the consignees had been requested to meet the people. Adams, Hancock, and other distinguished patriots, were present, but the consignees failed to appear.

A committee was chosen to wait upon them at their warehouses, and request them not to land the tea, but to return it to England in the same vessels in which it had been shipped. The consignees without hesitation refused to hearken to their request. A town meeting was called, and a similar request made in the name of the town. In the meantime one of the ships arrived in the harbor, the owner of which promised the Committee of Correspondence, that the entry of the ship should be delayed for several days. The citizens of Boston held a meeting the next morning, which was the largest ever known in the town. Adams, Hancock, Warren, and other prominent men were present, and took part in the proceedings. It was voted unanimously, that the tea should not be landed, but should be sent back without the payment of the duty. The owners of this ship and others which were soon expected, finally agreed that they would not enter the tea, but would return it, agreeably to the request of the citizens. Meantime the people of Boston were receiving assurances of coöperation from all parts of the Province. Cambridge, Charlestown, Roxbury, Dorchester, and many other towns in the immediate vicinity, acted with them through their committees. Towns more remote assured them of their aid. "We trust in God," wrote the people of Lexington, "that should the state of our affairs require it, we shall be ready to sacrifice our estates and everything dear in life, yea, and life itself, in support of the common cause." Such was the pledge given; and nobly was it redeemed.

The other two ships had arrived, and the twenty days had nearly elapsed, within which they must enter at the custom house or obtain a clearance. The Governor had stationed an armed ship in the channel below, and had caused the guns at the Castle to be loaded, to prevent the departure of the ships without his permission,—which he had resolved not to grant. On the 16th of December, 1773, the people of Boston, with at least two thousand men from the country, assembled at the Old South Church, and resolved that the tea should not be landed. The meeting continued in session till after dark, when the final report came that the Governor had resolved that the vessels should not pass the Castle, till the tea had been discharged. Whereupon Samuel Adams rose in great dignity and said, "This meeting can do nothing more to save the country." In a moment a shout was heard at the door; the war-whoop resounded; a party of forty or fifty men, disguised as Indians, passed by the door; and encouraged by the presence of Adams, Hancock, and others at the meeting, repaired to the wharf, where the ships were lying, and having posted sentinels to keep off intruders, took possession of the vessels, and in about three hours the whole quantity on board, some three hundred and fifty chests of tea, was emptied into the dock, without any injury being done to the rest of the cargo. The work being accomplished, the party went quietly to their respective homes. John Adams, in a letter written the next day, playfully said, "All things were conducted with great order, decency, and a perfect submission to government." The destruction of the tea produced a general rejoicing throughout the colonies. The act was hailed with great exultation everywhere, and served to bind the people together more closely than anything which had occurred.

In one of the popular ballads of the day, the destruction of the tea is thus graphically described :

“ Quick as thought the ships were boarded,
Hatches burst, and chests displayed ;
Axes, hammers, help afforded ;
What a glorious crash they made ! ”

The Legislature of Massachusetts took active measures to sustain the dignity and maintain the rights of the Province. Provision had been made in Great Britain for paying the judges of the Supreme Court by the crown. Knowing the tendency and design of this measure were to destroy the independence of the judiciary, and make it subservient to the king, the Legislature protested against it, and requested the judges to decline the corrupting donation, and at the same time voted them liberal salaries from the colonial treasury. Four of the judges yielded to the request of the Legislature ; but Oliver, the Chief Justice, refused. Whereupon the House found a bill of impeachment against him, and declared him suspended from office, till the issue could be tried by the Council.

The course pursued by Massachusetts from the first, had rendered her the special object of British displeasure ; and the destruction of the tea at Boston, filled up the measure of her iniquity in the estimation of the king and Parliament ; and this Province was marked as the victim on which to pour out the vials of their wrath. And well did she merit this preëminence.

She was the first to assert the rights of the colonies, and the boldest in proclaiming them to the world. She was the most steadfast in her determination to resist British encroachments, and the most active in her efforts to unite the colonies in the great cause of human freedom. Other colonies had taken high and patriotic grounds; and if some of them had, at some particular juncture, stepped a little in advance of Massachusetts, they were soon seen falling in her rear; and if they did not temporarily forsake her, they thought they had performed their whole duty, when they had resolved to follow where the Puritan Province should lead.

Freedom, with Massachusetts, was not a passion, but a principle — a deep religious conviction, which was not to be stifled by king or Parliament. Her people regarded civil government as a divine institution; and their zeal for civil and for religious liberty being kindled at the same altar, they could no more desert the state than the church. With no disposition to invade the prerogatives of Great Britain, they were determined to maintain their own rights unimpaired. With such views and principles, resistance to British encroachment would follow as a matter of course. The people felt that they were acting under great responsibility — that they were acting, not for themselves alone, but also for posterity. They knew the insidious arts of despotism in stealing away one right after another, and they chose to repel the first aggression. Whether the tax were great or small, they regarded the encroachment as equally palpable; and they esteemed it to be their duty to resist the threepenny tax on tea, rather than entail vassalage upon their children and their children's children. They disdained all freedom which they held at the mercy of foreign masters. Besides, their enlightened statesmanship, as well as their religious faith, taught them that this western continent was a field opened by the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, for the spread of civil and religious freedom, and that at no distant day it must be independent of the old world. Consequently when other colonies of less faith faltered, Massachusetts, animated by the zeal and faith of a pious ministry, warmed by the patriotism of the eloquent Otis, and guided and sustained by the wisdom and unflinching integrity of the far-seeing and incorruptible Adams, was ever ready to assert the rights of the colonies, and to adopt such measures as were best calculated to sustain the sacred cause of freedom.

That Massachusetts stood first in what they denominated rebellious Provinces, the records of Parliament abundantly show. On the 7th of March, 1774, the Earl of Dartmouth laid before the House of Lords a great variety of papers in relation to the conduct of the American colonies with reference to the duty on tea. These papers were referred to a committee consisting of about fifty members, who at once selected Massachusetts as the head and front of the offending, not only with reference to the destruction of the tea, but also in relation to the whole subject of taxation, and the power of Parliament. In an elaborate report submitted to the House of Lords by the Earl of Buckinghamshire, April 20, 1774, they say, "that they have attentively read and considered the several papers relative to the proceedings of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, in opposition to the sovereignty of his Majesty in his Parliament of Great Britain, and have carefully inspected the journals of the House from the 1st of January, 1764, to the present time." They then proceed to give a detailed account of the doings of this Colony for the period of ten years—showing that Massachusetts had, during that period, not only denied the right of Parliament to tax the colonies, but had uniformly thrown every obstacle in the way of collecting a revenue in America—overawing the officers of the crown, and compelling them to resign; refusing to quarter troops sent over to enforce the laws, and even denying the right of sending troops into the Province in times of peace, without their consent; asserting for themselves an exemption from the laws of Parliament, and also claiming for themselves the right to legislate in all cases whatsoever. And while they had in this manner denied the power of Parliament, and resisted the execution of the laws, they had taken active measures to draw the other colonies into the same rebellious policy; and that the destruction of the tea in the harbor of Boston was the crowning act of their insubordination and hostility to the British government.

Lord North in introducing the Boston Port Bill, gives Massachusetts the preëminence in disloyalty, by saying, "Boston had ever been the ringleader in all riots, and had at all times shown a desire of seeing the laws of Great Britain attempted in vain in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay. That the act of the mob in destroying the tea, and the other proceedings, belonged to the acts of the public meeting; and that though the other colonies were peaceable and well inclined towards the trade of this country, and the tea would have been landed at New York without opposition; yet when the news came from Boston that the tea was destroyed, Governor Tryon thought it would be prudent to send the tea back to England. Boston alone was to blame for having set the example; therefore Boston ought to be the principal object of our attention for punishment."

Thus, Massachusetts justly claims the merit, if merit it be, in being first and foremost in pleading the cause of freedom in opposition to the demands of despotic power, and in adopting measures which led to the independence of these States. The fact that she was singled out by the British Government as the object of what they denominated parental chastisement, shows that she was regarded as the most forward of the colonies of Great Britain in resisting their acts. From this time forth Massachusetts was made to feel the special vengeance of an oppressive administration.

As the British ministry was pleased to give Massachusetts the credit of being first and foremost in her opposition to their measures, so we are willing to accept the honor. What the corrupt ministry of George the Third was pleased to brand with dishonor, Massachusetts regards as patriotism, and glories in, as her most praiseworthy deeds, and is willing to submit the decision of this question to the impartial verdict of the world. That verdict has already been rendered. And while the proud court of king George has been pronounced cruel and oppressive, the Colony of Massachusetts Bay has been lauded for her patriotism, and extolled for her firm devotion to the great cause of freedom and equal rights.

CHAPTER V.

GOVERNOR GAGE'S ADMINISTRATION.

Passage of the Boston Port Bill—Gage appointed Governor—His Instructions from Dartmouth—Gage arrives in Boston—The Bill goes into Operation—Bells tolled, and a Day of Fasting and Prayer appointed—Boston holds a Town Meeting—Two Other Bills passed by Parliament transferring Appointments to the Crown, and changing Fundamentally our Charter—Four Counties meet in Convention—Resolutions adopted—Officers appointed by the Crown compelled to resign, and Jurors refuse to be sworn—Middlesex Convention's Address—Gage forbids the Holding of Public Meetings—Seizes Public Powder at Charlestown and fortifies Boston Neck—Gage calls a General Court—Call revoked—A Provincial Congress organized at Salem, and adjourned to Concord—The Provincial Congress recommend an Organization of the Militia, appoint General Officers, and Committees of Supplies, and Safety—Delegates to the Continental Congress—Provincial Congress appoint a day of Fasting and Prayer—Worcester and Concord selected as Depots for Military Stores.

THE steady and undeviating opposition of the Province of Massachusetts to the oppressive acts of the ministry and Parliament, and the wisdom by which all their measures had been made abortive, naturally rendered that corrupt court impatient to crush the Colony at a blow. They only waited for a convenient opportunity. The destruction of the tea filled up the measure of colonial iniquity, in the estimation of the ministry; and the mighty power of a mighty nation was to be concentrated upon the town of Boston. Lord North brought forward his bill for closing the port. It was hurried through both houses of Parliament, and received the royal assent on the 31st of March, 1774. This Act, which has generally been denominated the "Boston Port Bill," fell particularly hard upon the people of Boston and Charlestown. As it was the great mart of commerce in New England, and a large share of the people depended in one form or another upon the trade of the place, for employment,—closing the port, and so annihilating all commerce, spread consternation among thousands of the inhabitants. But the Act had passed, to take effect on the first of June; and Thomas Gage, who was appointed Captain General and Governor of Massachusetts, was intrusted with its execution.

The situation of the people of Boston, and indeed of the Colony, was peculiarly trying. The concentrated power and energy of a mighty nation, was to be put forth to crush out the warmest aspirations for liberty which had been fondly cherished for years. To submit to the cruel demands of their oppressors, was to abandon all their former hopes, and to falsify their solemn pledges, and by thus degrading themselves, to become slaves. On the other hand, what would resistance avail? How could a mere handful of unarmed and undisciplined men prevail against the mighty power of England? To a people less firm and conscientious, such a dilemma would have been awful — dividing their councils, distracting the people, and rendering the whole community a confused rabble. But the good people of Boston and of Massachusetts were not to be seduced by flattery, nor intimidated by a show of power. They had plighted their faith, and their mutual pledges were to be redeemed. They awaited the event with unwavering fortitude, resolved at the same time to ward off the blow as best they might.

Gage being appointed to the command, the Earl of Dartmouth, in his letter of instructions, under date of April 9th, informed him that "the sovereignty of the king in his Parliament over the colonies, required a full and absolute submission," and that "his command over the king's troops," and his employing those troops with effect, "would in all probability secure the execution of the law, and sustain his Majesty's dignity." Gage landed in Boston on the 17th of May, and was received by the people and the Legislature with all the attention, and with every demonstration due to his station. He undoubtedly flattered himself, that he should be able in a short time to bring the people to submission; for two days after his arrival, he wrote to Lord Dartmouth, "that the Port Bill has staggered the most presumptuous." Still he thought it prudent to call for additional troops, which were forwarded in the course of the summer and early autumn, so that he wrote that he was able "to form a force of nearly three thousand men, exclusive of the regiment to defend the Castle."

The Boston Port Bill went into operation on the first of June, without any opposition on the part of the people. Still the tolling of bells, fasting and prayer, and the exhibition of emblems of mourning, proclaimed a deep religious feeling more dangerous to the peace of the Governor, and the success of his measures, than any display of military force could have been. Amid this state of gloom the people were not inactive. On the 13th of May, the very day on which Gen. Gage arrived in the harbor, the people of Boston met at Faneuil Hall, chose Samuel Adams moderator, and adopted a vote inviting all the other colonies "to come into a joint resolution to stop all importations from Great Britain, till the Act for blocking up the harbor of Boston be repealed." At an adjournment of this meeting on the 31st, they resolved, "that the impolicy, injustice, inhumanity, and cruelty of the Boston Port Bill, exceed our powers of expression; we therefore leave it to the just censures of others, and appeal to God and the world."

Samuel Adams, writing to Arthur Lee, then in London, under date of April 4th, says, "the acts of Great Britain will produce the entire separation and independence of the colonies," and that "it requires but a small share of the gift of discernment, for any one to foresee that Providence will erect a mighty empire in America." But while this great leader in the Province saw that a collision was inevitable, and that the result must be glorious to the colonies, with that prudence characteristic of the truly great, he recommended wise moderation. In a letter to Lee, May 18th, 1774, he says, "Our business is to find means to evade the malignant design of the Boston Port Bill. Calmness, courage, and unanimity prevail in Boston. While they are resolved not tamely to submit, they will, by refraining from acts of violence, avoid the snare that they discover to be laid for them, by posting regiments so near them."

But it was not the Boston Port Bill alone, that General Gage was to carry into effect. The British Parliament had passed two other Acts, quite as objectionable as the Port Bill — Acts which robbed the people of many of their rights, and substantially nullified their Charter. One was entitled "an Act for better regulating the government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay," and provided that the counsellors, which had been chosen annually by the General Court, should be appointed by the king, and be removable at his pleasure; that the judges, sheriffs, and other civil officers, should be appointed by the Governor; that all jurors which had been chosen by the people, should be selected by the sheriffs;—thus making the whole judicial department dependent upon the crown, and subservient to his will. The same Act provided that no town meetings, except the annual meetings for the choice of town officers in March or May, should be holden without the consent of the Governor. The other Act provided that any person charged with any capital offence, committed while acting “as a magistrate for the suppression of riots, or in the support of the laws of revenue, or acting in his duty as an officer of revenue,” might, at the pleasure of the Governor, be removed to any other colony, or to Great Britain for trial.

These Acts formed a system of oppression hardly to be endured by a people born to the enjoyment of constitutional liberty. Up to this period, the question had been mainly one of taxation; but now almost every right was impaired, and every privilege taken away. The great principles of the English Constitution and the American Charters, were wantonly violated. These Acts not only shut up the harbor of Boston, and thereby destroyed the trade of the town, bringing bankruptey and ruin upon men of business, and extreme suffering upon the laboring poor; but they virtually destroyed the impartial administration of justice, and practically annulled that great prerogative of the citizen — trial by jury. Another grand prerogative of the citizens of Massachusetts was grossly trampled in the dust. From the very first, the people of New England had been accustomed to assemble together in their town meetings, and there discuss all measures which related to their temporal and spiritual interests. Such meetings were by implication granted in their first Charter, and were clearly established by usage and enjoyed by the whole people; and when the despotic Andros attempted to abridge this right, the people resisted the encroachment, as an attack upon one of their dearest privileges.

The last named Acts were received by Gen. Gage on the 6th of August, 1774, and he lost no time in attempting to carry them into effect. Most of his counsellors accepted their appointments; the courts convened under this new authority, and the sheriffs summoned their jurors. But the people in the meantime were not idle. The town committees, the organization of which was, as we have already seen, devised by Samuel Adams, constituted a sort of government to which the people looked for advice and protection. A meeting of delegates from the town committees of the counties of Suffolk, Essex, Middlesex and Worcester, met at Faneuil Hall and deliberated upon the state of the Province. They pronounced the new measures of Parliament "a complete system of tyranny," robbing the people of the most essential rights of British subjects, and resolved that all officers accepting appointments under these oppressive acts, ought to be regarded as traitors to the Colony; that a Provincial Congress ought to be held, and that the action of the courts in the meantime ought to be suspended. Such suggestions were readily adopted by the people. The judges in attempting to hold a court in Berkshire county, were driven from the bench, and jurors selected by the sheriff in the county of Suffolk, refused to be sworn. The counsellors who had been appointed by the king, were compelled to resign, or seek safety in Boston.

On the 30th of August a convention was held at Concord, consisting of delegates from every town and district of Middlesex county, to deliberate upon the state of the Province. Being aware of the critical condition of affairs, they say in their Address, "The question now is, whether by a submission to some of the late Acts of Parliament, we are contented to be the most abject slaves, and entail that slavery upon posterity after us; or by a manly, joint, and virtuous opposition, assert and support our freedom. Life and death, or what is more, freedom or slavery, are, in a peculiar sense, now before us; and the choice and success, under God, depend greatly upon ourselves." They resolved that the late Acts of Parliament are unconstitutional, and that no officers appointed under them ought to be obeyed, and conclude by saying—"no danger shall affright, no difficulties shall intimidate us; and if in support of our rights, we are called upon to encounter death, we are yet undaunted, sensible that he can never die too soon, who lays down his life in support of the laws and liberties of his country." Such was the patriotic ground taken by the freemen of Middlesex — such the ennobling sentiments they would instill into the bosom of every American. Nor was this an empty boast. Their conduct at Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill, showed that they were true to their professions. To Middlesex county belongs the honor of holding the first convention, and taking the lead in making a perfect organization against the arbitrary power and oppressive policy of the British ministry. With a promptness worthy of all praise every town and district responded to the call.

General Gage kept a watchful eye upon these proceedings; and regarding these public meetings as among the most dangerous means of rallying the people in opposition to his authority, was determined to suppress them. Notices were issued for a meeting in Salem to choose delegates to a county convention. General Gage issued a proclamation forbidding the people "at their utmost peril from attending any meeting not warranted by law." He also sent a detachment of troops to disperse the meeting, but on their arrival the people had dispatched their business and adjourned. Failing in his attempts to prevent such meetings, and hearing that the people were taking public measures to perfect themselves in military discipline, the Governor resolved to deprive them of all means of defence, and sent out a detachment and seized all the powder in the public magazine at Charlestown. But fortunately for the cause, the towns had withdrawn their respective stock, and consequently none was left but what belonged to the Province — which was only a small quantity. About this time General Gage commenced fortifying Boston Neck, as the isthmus connecting Boston with the main land was generally called. This added greatly to the excitement which already existed. It was regarded as a warlike demonstration, and showed the people a determination on the part of the Governor to enforce the odious laws at the point of the bayonet.

Yet the people had no disposition to provoke a contest with the king's troops. They chose rather to take peaceable measures to prevent the execution of the laws. Nor were they wanting in devices of this kind. The odious laws having been passed for the express purpose of depriving them of their just rights, they felt authorized to defeat them by any lawful means. They were his Majesty's loyal subjects, and were ready to do anything to promote the interest of the empire and honor of the crown; but they must be treated as English subjects. They had too much respect for the English Constitution, and the great principles of English liberty, to see them trampled upon by a heartless ministry, or their lawless subordinates. When they obstructed the operation of the courts, or the performance of duties by certain newly appointed officers, it was only on the ground that these officers were appointed in contravention of their Charter and the English Constitution. If they organized military companies, it was only to perfect themselves in the art of war, that they might be better qualified to defend themselves against the king's enemies, and so be enabled to maintain their rights as Englishmen. These measures so annoyed General Gage, that he made them the special subjects of remark in his communications with the ministry. In a letter to the Earl of Dartmouth, August 27th, 1774, he says, "It is agreed that popular fury was never greater in this Province than at present; it has taken its rise from the old source at Boston, though it has appeared first at a distance. These demagogues trust their safety in the long forbearance of the Government, and an assurance that they cannot be punished. They chicaned, elude, openly violate, or passively resist the laws, as opportunity serves; and opposition to authority is of so long standing that it has become habitual." And under date of September 2d, he says, "With regard to the clause in the new law relative to town meetings, so many elusions are discovered under various pretensions of adjournments, electing to vacant offices, people assembling peaceably upon their own affairs without notification; and withal no penalty; that no person I have advised with, can tell what to do with it. At a distance they go on as usual. Civil government is near its end. Nothing can be done but by forcible means." Under date of September 20th, he writes, "The country people are exercising in arms, and getting magazines of arms and ammunition in the country, and such artillery as they can procure, good and bad. They talk of fixing a plan of government of their own; and it is somewhat surprising that so many of the other Provinces interest themselves so much in behalf of this."

On the 1st of September, 1774, Governor Gage issued writs convening the General Court at Salem on the 5th of October. In many cases the towns in choosing their representatives had instructed them to use all peaceable means to oppose the late Acts of Parliament. The people of Lexington instructed their representative, to "use his utmost influence that nothing be transacted as a court under the new council, or in conformity to any of the late Acts of Parliament." In the meantime there had been several important county conventions, which denounced the Acts of Parliament as severe, oppressive, and unconstitutional, 'designed to strip us of our inalienable rights and dearest privileges,' and pointed out various modes of redress. The Suffolk resolutions declared, "That no obedience is due from this Province to either or any part of these Acts;" that officers who accept appointments under them should be considered "as obstinate and incorrigible enemies to this Colony," and they recommend that all collectors of taxes withhold the money from the royal treasurer, and hold it subject to the direction of the proposed Provincial Congress, which they recommend being called. The Essex resolutions pronounced all officers and private persons who attempt to carry out the Acts which violate the Charter of the Province, "unnatural and malignant enemies," declared that town meetings "ought to be called agreeably to the laws of the Province," and that, "if the despotism and violence of our enemies should finally reduce us to the sad necessity, we undaunted, are ready to appeal to the last resort of states." The Plymouth resolutions declare, "That it is a duty every man and body of men owes to posterity, as well as to God and our country, to oppose with all our power, the execution of these unjust and oppressive Acts," and they recommended to the inhabitants of the Province "never to submit to them in any instance whatever." The Worcester resolutions recommended to the towns to instruct their representatives, chosen to meet at Salem, "absolutely to refuse to be sworn," except by some officer "appointed according to the Charter of the Province." They also recommended to the several towns to appoint military officers, and to provide themselves with arms and ammunition, against any emergency that may arise.

Such is a specimen of the resolutions of the several counties.

They all recommend a Provincial Congress, and some recommend that the members chosen to meet at Salem, resolve themselves into such a Congress. They also recommended military preparation; and while they discouraged and denounced any attack upon the king's troops, they more than intimated that they would resist by force of arms, rather than be converted into slaves. They also declared in favor of holding town meetings to deliberate upon the affairs of the Province, and recommended that no money be paid into the treasury of the Province organized under the late Acts of Parliament. The conventions and their doings coming to the knowledge of Governor Gage, he issued a proclamation on the 28th of September, adjourning without day the General Court, which he had summoned to meet at Salem, October the 5th. The reasons assigned for this unusual and arbitrary course were, that many tumults and disorders had taken place since he called the meeting, and that "the extraordinary resolves which had been passed in many counties, and the instructions given by the town of Boston and some other towns, to their representatives," rendered it "highly inexpedient that a Great and General Court should be convened," at that time.

But as the proclamation was issued only a few days before the time of meeting, many of the members had already left home, and were on their way to Salem, before they heard of the high-handed measure of the Governor. In obedience to the summons and a preconcerted arrangement, nearly one hundred members met at Salem on the 5th of October; and after waiting one day to see if the Governor or any public officer would appear to administer the oath of office, on the 6th they resolved themselves into a Provincial Congress, and chose John Hancock, chairman, and Benjamin Lincoln, clerk. After this temporary organization, they voted to adjourn to the 11th inst., to meet at the court house at Concord, that being the time and place designated by several of the counties for holding a Provincial Congress, before the meeting of the General Court at Salem had been ordered by the Governor.

After a session of three days at Concord, the Congress adjourned to Cambridge, where their sittings were continued from the 17th of October to the 10th of December. During this session, they adopted a system of measures to put the Province in a state of preparation and defence. Though they deprecated hostilities with Great Britain, and had not "the most distant design of attacking, annoying, or molesting his Majesty's troops," they were not insensible to the fact that these troops were brought into the Province to reduce the people to a state of subjection to unjust and arbitrary laws, which would render them the mere vassals of a corrupt foreign ministry. To guard against an evil which they deemed greater than death itself, they adopted a plan of organizing, arming, and calling out the militia, in case of emergency. This plan provided among other things, that all able-bodied men should be enrolled, and that these companies should immediately assemble, and elect their proper officers; that these officers, when elected, should assemble as soon as may be, and elect field officers; that the field officers should enlist at least one quarter of the men enrolled, and form them into companies of at least fifty men, each man to be armed and equipped, and held in readiness to march on the shortest notice. These were what were denominated minute men. In addition to the platoon and field officers, they provided for general officers and designated their rank. To meet the expenses which might arise from the employment of the militia, and to procure such arms and military stores as might be necessary, they chose a committee of supplies, consisting of David Cheever of Charlestown, Mr. Gill, Col. Lee, Mr. Greenleaf and Col. Lincoln; and to carry out this part of the plan more effectually, they elected Henry Gardner, Esq., of Stow, as Treasurer and Receiver General, and directed that all taxes that had been granted, and all moneys in the hands of collectors, should be paid over to this new treasurer, instead of being paid into the royal treasury. They also created what they denominated a "Committee of Safety," consisting of John Hancock, Dr. Warren, Dr. Church, Mr. Devens, Capt. White, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Quincy, Mr. Watson and Col. Orne, and clothed them with large discretionary powers; and among them, the power of calling out the militia in such numbers and at such times and places, as they might deem expedient. The Congress subsequently selected Jedediah Preble, (who declined the appointment,) Artemas Ward, Seth Pomeroy, John Thomas, William Heath, as General officers to command the troops in case they were called out.

After adopting this general plan, and selecting the appropriate officers to carry it into effect, the Provincial Congress prepared and published an Address "to the freeholders and other inhabitants of the towns and districts of Massachusetts Bay," in which they say, "You are placed by Providence in the post of honor, because it is the post of danger; and while struggling for the noblest of objects, the liberties of your country, the happiness of posterity, and the rights of human nature, the eyes, not only of North America and the whole British empire, but of all Europe, are upon you. Let us therefore be altogether solicitous that no disorderly behavior, nothing unbecoming our characters as Americans, as citizens, and as Christians, be justly chargeable to us." They also prepared an Address to the clergy, in which they recommend "to the ministers of the Gospel in the several towns, and other places in this Colony, that they assist us in avoiding that dreadful slavery, with which we are now threatened, by advising the people of their several congregations, as they wish their prosperity, to abide by, and strictly adhere to, the resolutions of the Continental Congress, as the most peaceable and probable methods of preventing confusion and bloodshed." Before closing their labors, the Provincial Congress made choice of John Hancock, Thomas Cushing, Samuel Adams, John Adams, and Robert Treat Paine, to represent this Province in the next Continental Congress.

While these things were occurring in Massachusetts, the Continental Congress was holding a session in Philadelphia. This patriotic body was composed of delegates from twelve Provinces; Massachusetts being represented at that time by Thomas Cushing, Samuel Adams, John Adams, and Robert Treat Paine. They approved the measures and endorsed the doctrines put forth by the county conventions, and the Provincial Congress of Massachusetts. They also recommended an agreement, and entered into a covenant, not to import or consume British merchandise or manufactures. They likewise adopted a Petition to the king, an Address to the people of Great Britain, and to the inhabitants of the Colonies, and another to the people of Canada. But while this Congress were truly firm and independent, and were resolved to support the rights of the Colonies ; and while they approved of the manly and noble stand taken by the people of Massachusetts, they knew the strong temptation they were under to commit some overt act of war against the king's troops ; and hence they recommended to the people of Massachusetts, "to submit to a suspension of the administration of justice, where it could not be procured in a legal and peaceable manner, under the rules of their present Charter and the laws of the Colony." They also recommended to the people of Boston, "to conduct themselves peaceably towards Governor Gage, and his Majesty's troops stationed there, as far as can possibly be consistent with their immediate safety, and the security of the town ; avoiding and discountenancing every violation of his Majesty's property, or any insult to his troops ; and that they peaceably and firmly persevere in the line they are now conducting, on the defensive." Such were the measures adopted — and such the policy recommended by the patriots who composed the Continental Congress : — a body of men concerning whom Lord Chatham said in the British Parliament, "I must declare and avow, that for solidity of reasoning, force of sagacity, and wisdom of conclusion, under such a complication of difficult circumstances, no nation or body of men, can stand in preference to the General Congress at Philadelphia. It must be obvious to your Lordships, that all attempts to impose servitude upon such men, must be vain — must be futile."

While these decided measures were being adopted by the people in the Colony, and while every county, and almost every town in Massachusetts, was, in its humble way, resounding with notes of preparation, the tories and the British officials were ridiculing the idea of attempting to withstand his Majesty's troops. A British officer, writing from Boston, November 3, 1774, says, "The Resolutions of Congress are only thrown out as a bugbear to intimidate the merchants of Boston, and frighten the ministry into a repeal of the late Acts. The faction in Boston is now very low. Believe me, all ranks of the people are heartily tired of disorder and confusion ; as soon as the determination of Great Britain to dispose of their resolves and petitions is known, all will be very quiet." Another British officer writing from Boston, November 22d, to a friend in London, says,

"As to what you hear of their taking arms to resist the force of England, it is mere bullying, and will go no further than words; whenever it comes to blows, he that can run the fastest, will think himself best off. Believe me, any two regiments here ought to be decimated, if they did not beat in the field the whole force of Massachusetts Province; for though they are numerous, they are but a mere mob, without order or discipline, and are very awkward at handling their arms." Writing home to Scotland from Boston, December 26th, an officer in the king's service declares, "Our army is in high spirits, and at present this town is pretty quiet. I make no doubt things will wear a new face here, especially when your sentiments of the ministry's firmness are authenticated." While letters from Boston were representing the Americans as cowards, Colonel Grant declared in the House of Commons, February 2d, 1775, "that he had served in America, and knew the Americans well; was certain they would not fight. They would never dare to face an English army, and did not possess any of the qualifications necessary to make a good soldier."

Though certain officers in the British army at Boston, attempted to call in question the courage of the Americans, and to ridicule the idea of their resorting to arms, General Gage viewed the proceedings of the Provincial Congress with some degree of apprehension; especially their recommendation for the organization of the militia. Consequently on the 10th of November, 1774, he issued a proclamation in which he denounced these measures as having "a most dangerous tendency to ensnare his Majesty's subjects, the inhabitants of this Province, and draw them into perjuries, riots, seditions, treason and rebellion;" and he exhorts and commands, in his Majesty's name, "all his liege subjects," not to comply "in any degree with the resolves, recommendations, directions, and regulations," of the Provincial Congress, "as they regard his Majesty's highest displeasure, and would avoid the pains and penalties of the law."

The Governor, however, felt himself strengthened and supported by the fact that at the meeting of Parliament, November 29th, the king, in his speech from the throne, assured them of "his firm and steadfast resolution to withstand every attempt to weaken or impair the supreme authority of Parliament over the colonies ;” and that the Lords and Commons had, by a large majority, sustained the crown. The Governor was also instructed by Lord Dartmouth, under dates of December 10, 1774, and January 4, 1775, to carry out his Majesty’s pleasure, and to use his utmost endeavors to prevent the appointment of delegates to the Continental Congress, to be holden in May, 1775. The Governor, in response to these instructions, assures his lordship that the firm stand taken by the king and Parliament “has cast a damp upon the faction,” and he begins to hope that “they will fall on some means to pay for the tea” they had destroyed.

But while Gage was flattering himself with the hope, that the action of Parliament would awe the colonies into submission, the fires of patriotism were burning brighter and brighter in the bosoms of all true Americans. The several towns and districts in the Province had elected their delegates to the second Provincial Congress, and on the 1st day of February, 1775, they assembled at Cambridge, and organized for the dispatch of business. On the 9th, they elected Hon. John Hancock, Dr. Joseph Warren, Dr. Benj. Church, Jr., Mr. Richard Devens, Capt. Benjamin White, Col. Joseph Palmer, Mr. Abraham Watson, Col. Azor Orne, Mr. John Pigeon, Col. William Heath and Mr. Jabez Fisher, a Committee of Safety, to continue in power till the further order of this or some other Congress or House of Representatives of the Province. They also “empowered and directed” them, when they should think it expedient, “to alarm, muster, and cause to be assembled with the utmost expedition, and completely armed and accoutred, and supplied with provisions sufficient for their support in their march to the place of rendezvous, such and so many of the militia of this Province, as they shall judge necessary for the end and purpose of opposing” the execution of the late Acts of Parliament, designed to annul the Charter, and enslave the people of the Province. And they earnestly recommended to all officers and soldiers of the militia, to obey the calls of this committee, “and to pay the strictest obedience thereto, as they regard the liberties and lives of themselves, and the people of the Province.”

At the same time, they had appointed, as before stated, general officers to command the troops called out by the Committee of Safety. They also published a patriotic and spirited Address to the Inhabitants of Massachusetts, which commences and closes as follows: "Friends and Fellow Sufferers:—When a people, entitled to that freedom which your ancestors have nobly preserved as the richest inheritance of their children, are invaded by the hand of oppression, and trampled on by the merciless feet of tyranny, resistance is so far from being criminal, that it becomes the Christian and social duty of each individual. Your conduct hitherto under the severest trials, has been worthy of you as men and Christians, and notwithstanding the pains that have been taken by your enemies, to inculcate the doctrine of non-resistance and passive obedience, and by every art to delude and terrify you, the whole continent of America has this day come to rejoice in your firmness. We trust you will still continue steadfast, and having regard to the dignity of your characters as freemen, and those generous sentiments resulting from your natural and political connections, you will never submit your necks to the galling yoke of despotism prepared for you; but with a proper sense of your dependence on God, nobly defend those rights which Heaven gave, and no man ought to take from you."

Having dispatched their business, and appointed Thursday, the sixteenth day of March, as a day of fasting and prayer to the Sovereign Ruler of nations, the Provincial Congress adjourned on the 16th of February, to meet at Concord on the 22d of March.

The Committee of Safety and the Committee of Supplies, held meetings almost daily between the sessions of the Congress, and adopted the most active and efficient measures to put the Colony in a state of defence. That there might be more harmony and efficiency, they generally met together. They directed sub-committees to procure cannon and small arms, powder and ball, and military stores such as provisions, tents, entrenching tools, and whatever would be required in case troops were called into the field. The journal of their proceedings shows at once their energy and their poverty—their strong devotion to the cause of liberty, and the destitution of the Colony in almost everything necessary to carry on a war, in case they were driven to the necessity of taking up arms in defence of their rights. They selected Worcester and Concord, as the depots of such arms and stores as they could obtain. But their journal shows greater preparation than was actually made. The cannon and other stores ordered, could not in many cases be obtained. But everything in the Colony went to show that a rupture was expected, and that stout hearts and strong hands were relied upon to supply the defects of munitions of war; and that the patriots trusted in the justice of their cause, and the overruling providence of God to bring them off conquerors and more than conquerors, should their oppressors take the field against them.

As the object of this chapter has been to state the real question at issue, and to show the various steps by which the collision was brought about, we have brought the account down to the first of March, 1775, being about the period when General Gage commenced operations in the field. We have seen that the controversy originated in the question of taxation; Great Britain claiming the right to legislate for the colonies "in all cases whatsoever," and consequently to impose such taxes upon them as the king and Parliament might think fit; and the colonies insisting that by their charters and the great principles of Magna Charta, they, having all the rights, immunities and prerogatives of Englishmen, could not be taxed without their consent; that taxation without representation was oppressive, and that all laws to raise a revenue in America, without the consent of the people, were in direct contravention of the English Constitution and the colonial charters; and so were unconstitutional and void. The British Government, finding themselves unable to meet this issue in the field of debate, and knowing that the united voice of the people in the colonies was sustained by many of their ablest statesmen at home, resolved to change the issue by altering the American charters, so as to give Great Britain, if not civil, at least military control over the colonies. The Charter of Massachusetts was at first taken away, and subsequently restored with important changes, greatly increasing the power of the crown, and consequently reducing that of the colonists. But though this modified Charter was in fact forced upon the colonists, the ministry were not disposed to abide by it, but actually took the liberty of infringing its provisions, whenever they were found to stand in the way of their unjust and oppressive measures. They not only trampled upon the rights of the Colony, as a body politic and corporate, but they invaded the private rights of individuals in points relating, not only to property, but to liberty and life, by controlling the courts of justice, depriving the people of the right of trial by jury, and the privilege of meeting together peaceably to deliberate upon their own affairs. These unconstitutional and oppressive measures—this system of tyranny, deliberately adopted and persistently adhered to, for the express purpose of reducing the colonies to a state of abject and degrading servitude, they attempted to enforce at the point of the bayonet.

It was not simply a question of taxation or no taxation, but a question of freedom or slavery, that the people were called upon to decide;—not merely a question whether they should be taxed to feed their oppressors, but whether they should submit to evils far greater, and enormities more to be dreaded, because more personal in their character;—whether they should have their property torn from them in mock trials by judges taken from among their oppressors, and by juries packed by corrupt crown officers—whether their lives should be put in jeopardy by being torn from their families, and transported beyond the seas to be tried for pretended offences. This was the issue forced upon the people at that day. Our patriot fathers were not rebels in the common acceptance of that term. They did not revolt against the mother country, or refuse to obey laws constitutionally made, and designing to apply to all his Majesty's subjects. No; they simply refused to acquiesce in a system of measures applying to themselves alone, and adopted for the avowed purpose of depriving them of the rights of British subjects, and of bringing them trembling to the foot of the throne.

Nor was this noble stand taken by our fathers, till all other means had failed. Petition and entreaty had been resorted to, but repeated petitions had been answered only by repeated injuries; and it was not till all hope of redress had failed, that they took the last resolve to stand by their rights at the hazard of their lives. And even then, they resolved not to be the aggressors. If blood must flow, its stain should not be upon their hands ; if human life must be sacrificed, they would be the first victims. Though they believed their cause to be just, they would not forfeit the approbation of the God of battles, by any hasty or rash act of their own. Though they were preparing for the defence of their rights, at every sacrifice and every hazard, and were resolved, if need be, to submit the decision to the arbitrament of arms, they were nevertheless determined that the first overt act should not be chargeable upon them. Pursuant to this deliberate resolution, it was not till they were attacked — not until they saw their brethren deliberately shot down by their side, that they unsheathed the sword, and committed their cause to the Lord of Sabaoth.

On their part the approaching struggle was to be a religious war in the highest and best sense of the term. Not that they entered upon it in any sectarian spirit, or prosecuted it to sustain a party. They believed that they were the children of God, whose care extended over all their interests, whether civil or religious ; that he had regard for their rights as citizens, as well as for their privileges as Christians, and that they were bound to preserve both by every means in their power. The motives which led their fathers to this country, the difficulties and dangers through which they had passed, the sustaining hand of God which had been visible in their whole history, led them to believe that they had a special trust committed to them, which they must discharge with fidelity ; that they were placed as sentinels to guard the sacred cause of civil and religious liberty, and must stand at their post, and transmit the blessing to those that were to come after them. It is a libel upon the character of our fathers, to say that they involved the country in all the horrors of war, rather than pay a petty tax upon stamped paper and tea. They had motives higher, purer, and holier, than that of avoiding the payment of an insignificant tax. They planted themselves upon the great principles of human rights — of fealty to their country, and fidelity to their God. They felt that they had personal rights which they were bound to defend — a duty they owed to posterity, which they were under a sacred obligation to discharge — a devotion to the Most High, which it were treason to disregard. Such were the motives and the convictions of our patriot sires. They fought not to conquer, but to defend; not to humble a foe, but to build up a commonwealth on the great principles of equal rights. To these duties they were prompted by the dictates of patriotism, and the teachings of the Word of Life.

NOTE.—An event worthy of notice occurred within the period covered by this chapter, which is stated here, so as not to interrupt the chain of events which were tending to an open rupture with the mother country. On the 22d of May, 1773, Rev. Mr. Clarke's house was entered by a burglar, who carried off a silver tankard and other articles of plate. Levi Ames was subsequently arrested, and the articles found in his possession. He was arraigned and found guilty. He confessed his guilt, and as burglary in the night time was at that day a capital offence, he was executed, October 20th, 1773. Mr. Clarke visited him in prison, and prayed with him, after his conviction. The stolen articles were restored to Mr. Clarke.

CHAPTER VI.

THE BATTLE OF LEXINGTON.

The Policy of General Gage — His Expedition to Concord — Attack upon the Americans at Lexington — The Gathering of the Militia — The Skirmish at Concord — Destruction of Military Stores there — The Retreat of the British Troops — Reinforcement under Lord Percy.

WE now come to the most eventful period in the history of Lexington, and indeed of our country. We have seen in the preceding chapters the causes which led to the Revolution, and the steps by which the great conflict of opinions was developed. We have witnessed the acts of oppression on the one side, and the firm and manly opposition on the other. We have felt the ground-swell of public sentiment, and heard the busy notes of preparation. We have seen that the town of Lexington had contributed its full share to the patriotic tide, and was measurably prepared for the issue.

In this chapter we are to contemplate the opening scene of our Revolutionary struggle, so fraught with the great subject of human rights. In days gone by, when brute force was the measure of human greatness, and when most questions were decided by the arbitrament of arms, the historian had little else to do than to record in letters of blood, the march of hostile armies, the encounter upon the ensanguined field, the shouts of the victors and the groans of the dying. Historians have been too much inclined to dwell upon the outward and visible, and to content themselves with recording the results, without stopping to inquire into the causes which produced them. But the intelligent public, at this day, are hardly satisfied with such narratives. They wish to know the antecedents as well as the consequents. By presenting events in this consecutive manner — by holding up to the public view the remote and the proximate causes, as well as the events themselves and their immediate and remote effects, the true philosophy of history is inculcated, and the relative character and importance of events are made to appear. By reading histories of this character, we may profit by the records of the past, and learn wisdom from those who have gone before us.

In this way we may learn that mighty contests often arise from causes apparently trivial, and that events of no seeming magnitude in themselves, may contain the germ of some great convulsion whose effects may extend to distant nations, and be felt through succeeding generations. In this way we may discern the nature of events and the true character of the principal actors therein. An act seemingly indifferent or apparently brutal, may by its causes and the motives which actuated those by whose agency it is brought about, become a praiseworthy deed; and acts which might of themselves elicit shouts of applause, may appear in a very different light, when viewed in connection with the causes which produced them, and the principles which moved the actors therein. It is due to our patriot fathers that their acts and doings should be viewed in the concrete, and that all the circumstances by which they were surrounded, should be carefully weighed by those who enjoy the fruit of their trials and sufferings.

If the importance of a battle depended upon the number of the troops engaged, or upon the military science displayed in the operation, the Battle of Lexington would dwindle into comparative insignificance. The events of the 19th of April, 1775, are not characterized by any remarkable exhibition of military skill, or by those combined desperate deeds of daring, which excite admiration and render a military expedition remarkable. There were no dangerous defiles to be passed at every hazard, in the face of disciplined troops — no strong batteries to be stormed — no commanding positions on which depended the fortunes of the day, to be carried at the point of the bayonet. Nor were there any of those desperate encounters between veterans, well armed and equipped, and led on by brave and experienced commanders, of which we have so many accounts in history. There was true bravery — but it was the firm principle of patriotic valor, unaided by military skill — the uprising of a people poorly armed, in defence of their dearest rights.

The Battle of Lexington, in its commencement, was little more than a cowardly and brutal attack of some eight hundred veteran troops upon fifty or sixty peaceable citizens. The whole movement of General Gage was simply a secret expedition of a well appointed corps to destroy a few unguarded military stores—a march through a country of unoffending citizens, where there were no troops to oppose his progress. It was not an expedition into an enemy's country in time of war; but a sort of excursion party in times of peace, sent out by the acknowledged Governor of the Province, some twenty miles into the country. And yet the fate of two mighty empires hung upon the conduct of this party. Their excursion was among men who knew their rights, and knowing dared maintain them. If their march was peaceable, and the rights of the people were respected, they had nothing to fear from the inhabitants. But if they should invade the rights of the citizens by destroying their property or ruthlessly entering their dwellings; and especially if their march should be marked by violence and massacre, it would in all probability cause a wound never to be healed. And yet this party, with a haughty disregard of the rights of the inhabitants, wantonly commenced a system of pillage and massacre, as though it were a mere holiday pastime; and thus brought on a collision, the effects of which were not only felt in both hemispheres at that day, but may yet extend to unborn ages.

The pages of the world's history present us with many sanguinary battles, and even decided and brilliant victories which were attended with no particular results. The battle of the Pyramids in Egypt, and of Buena Vista in Mexico, are of this description. Nor is it obvious to the most careful observer at the present day, what principles, moral or political, were involved in those bloody and terrible conflicts, or were settled by their results. The desperate struggle in the Crimea, which ended in the partial fall of Sebastopol, where the mighty energies of the three great powers of the world were put forth, and where blood and treasure were poured out like water, decided nothing, except that the advance in military science gives neither party any advantage, where both avail themselves of the latest improvements.

But with the affair of the 19th of April, the case was widely different. It involved the enfeebling of one empire, and the creation of another. It was a conflict of opinions rather than of arms. It was a war of conflicting principles which had divided the public mind for centuries,—it was a stern debate upon the ensanguined field of the great question of human rights against arbitrary and despotic power—of the privileges of the many against the prerogatives of the few. But though the collision on that memorable day was the opening scene of the Revolutionary drama, it was by no means the moving cause of that eventful struggle. We must look to causes more remote than the marching of the British troops from Boston, and to questions more momentous than the possession of a few rusty cannon at Concord, if we would comprehend the issue decided by the American Revolution. Nor are the effects of that day's adventure to be confined to the precipitate and ignominious flight of the British army, and their arrival under the cover of their ships at Charlestown. No; the events of that day, by inspiring confidence and securing union on the one side, and by creating distrust on the other, insured to America the blessing of independence, and gave an impulse to the cause of liberty which has cheered many a heart on both continents, and may yet contribute to the emancipation of the world.

The spring of 1775 opened with every indication that the crisis was rapidly approaching, and that General Gage had resolved to make some decisive demonstration in the field. Parliament had signified its determination to sustain the ministry in bringing the colonies to a state of subjection. The Earl of Dartmouth had suggested to General Gage the propriety of disarming the colonists;¹ and though General Gage had in November, 1774, intimated that true wisdom would require the employment of twenty thousand troops,² yet in January, 1775, he had written to his Lordship that matters looked more favorable, and that it was the general opinion, that "If a respectable force is seen in the field, and the most obnoxious of the leaders are seized, and a pardon proclaimed for all others, government will come off victorious, with less opposition than was expected a few months ago.”¹ General Gage was also aware that there was a growing dissatisfaction in the ministry with the course he was pursuing. His policy was deemed inefficient, and his inactivity was complained of.² He knew, moreover, that additional troops were to be sent to Boston, and that Generals Howe, Clinton and Burgoyne were to join, and probably in the end supersede him. Such facts and considerations would naturally prompt him to action. He was probably further encouraged by certain demonstrations, in favor of the royal cause, made at Marshfield and several other places.

Knowing that some cannon and other military stores had been collected at Salem, he sent, on the 25th of February, a detachment of his troops to seize or destroy them. But the people, anticipating his design, raised the drawbridge leading to the part of the town where they were deposited, and so prevented their falling into his hands.³ Meditating the destruction of the military stores which the Committees of Safety and Supplies had been collecting at Worcester and Concord, General Gage sent officers in disguise to sketch the topography of the country, and ascertain the feelings and preparation of the people. Under date of February 22, Captain Brown of the Fifty-second Regiment and Ensign D’Berniere of the Tenth, were directed to make this reconnoissance, with instructions not only to note the roads, distances, heights, passes, rivers, and the like, but to “notice the situation of the towns and villages, their churches and churchyards, whether they are advantageous spots to take post in, and capable of being rendered defensible.”⁴ These officers in disguise visited Worcester by way of Sudbury, Framingham and Marlborough, and subsequently, viz., on the 20th of March, visited Concord by way of Sudbury, and returned through Lexington; and on their return, reported the result of their exploration to General Gage.⁵

In the meantime there were many indications that the British officers, stationed at Boston, were becoming weary of those “piping times of peace,” and were desirous of bringing on a collision with the people. On the anniversary of the Boston Massacre, Dr. Warren delivered the Oration at the Old South Church, and Samuel Adams presided. A large number of British officers were present, and attempted to break up the meeting by cries of fire, hissing, and other disorderly conduct.¹ On the 8th, Thomas Ditson, Jr., a citizen of Billerica, being in Boston, was seized by a party of the king's troops, on the vain pretence of having urged one of their soldiers to desert; and without any trial or examination, was taken to their guard-house, and kept a prisoner till the next day, when he was stripped, tarred and feathered, and placed upon a truck, and drawn through some of the principal streets, attended by forty or fifty soldiers of the Forty-seventh Regiment with arms and fixed bayonets, led on by Colonel Nesbit of that regiment, the music at the same time playing Yankee Doodle by way of derision.² On the 16th of March, which was observed as a day of fasting and prayer in obedience to the recommendation of the Provincial Congress, several congregations in Boston were annoyed by a party of the Fourth Regiment. They pitched their tents near one of the churches, and during the service greatly disturbed the worshippers, by their drums, fifes and other noises. Colonel Madison was present with them a part of the time. On the 17th, in the evening, Colonel Hancock's house, near the Common, was attacked by a party of British officers, who cut and hacked the fence in front of the house, and otherwise behaved very abusively, breaking windows, and insulting almost every person they met. On the 18th, the guard at the Neck seized 13,425 musket cartridges with balls, and about three hundred pounds of musket balls, the property of private persons, which the General refused to give up to the owners. They also abused the teamster, pricking him with their bayonets, and assaulted the Providence stage, breaking the windows, and insulting the passengers. On the 19th, a party of officers and soldiers again insulted Colonel Hancock, entering upon his premises, and refusing to retire, boasting that his house, stable, and other property would soon be theirs, when they should use it as they pleased.³ Though these aggressions were of a private character, and related to the rights of individuals, they served to irritate the people, and showed at the same time a haughtiness on the part of the British officers, which would naturally lead to a collision with the inhabitants.

While General Gage was employed in making preparation for excursions into the country to destroy the military stores, which the provincials had collected together, the patriotic inhabitants were not inactive. The second Provincial Congress, which held its first session at Cambridge, had adjourned on the 16th of February, to meet at Concord on the 22d of March. On coming together at that time, and being fully impressed with the critical state of public affairs, they adopted the most efficient means in their power to meet the crisis, which they knew could not be far distant. They adopted a code of Rules and Articles for the regulation of the army of the Province, elected committees from the several counties, to see that the recommendations of Congress were fully carried out, and renewed their recommendation for exercising and drilling the militia. Having received certain intelligence that large reinforcements were on their way to Boston, they sent delegates to New Hampshire, Connecticut and Rhode Island, to apprise them of the common danger, and if possible enlist them in the common cause. They assured their sister colonies, "that we are determined to take effectual measures for our security and defence by raising an army;" and requested them "to coöperate with us by furnishing their respective quotas for the general defence." They also voted to raise six companies of artillery, to be organized, disciplined, and be in "constant readiness to enter the service of the Colony," whenever it should become necessary. And as they appealed to Heaven for the justice of their cause, and trusted in the God of battles to carry them successfully through the contest, which they feared was approaching, they appointed a day of fasting and prayer; and on the 15th of April, adjourned to meet on the 10th of May, unless sooner called together on an emergency by a committee which they had designated for that purpose.¹

In the meantime the Committees of Safety and of Supplies, which generally met together, were in session almost daily, using the most efficient means in their power to put the Province in a proper state of defence. On the 14th of March, being in session at the house of Captain Stedman, in Cambridge, and anticipating some movement on the part of General Gage, they voted "That watches be kept constantly at places where the Provincial magazines are kept." They also requested the Committees of Charlestown, Cambridge, and Roxbury, "to procure at least two men for a watch every night, to be placed in each of these towns, and that the said members be in readiness to send couriers forward to the towns where the magazines are placed, when sallies are made from the army by night." Pursuant to this request, on the day following, the committees directed Colonel Barrett of Concord, "to engage a sufficient number of faithful men to guard the colony magazines in that town, and to keep a suitable number of teams in constant readiness by day and by night, on the shortest notice to remove the stores; and also to provide couriers to alarm the neighboring towns, on receiving any information of any movement of the king's troops." The committees were in session at Concord on the 17th of April, and adjourned to meet at Menotomy, now Arlington, at Witherby's tavern the next day.¹

Preparatory to any attempt to make a descent upon Worcester or Concord, for the purpose of destroying the military stores, General Gage sent out detachments of his troops into the neighboring towns, probably with the design of exercising his men, and of habituating the inhabitants to these excursions, so that no apprehension might be felt in case the troops should be seen leaving Boston. On the 30th of March, the first brigade under Lord Percy, marched out to Jamaica Plains, in Roxbury. They were narrowly watched by the people, who collected in large numbers; but as they were without artillery or baggage, it was inferred that their excursion was but a short one; and as they did not interfere with the inhabitants, they were permitted to pass without molestation. They did, however, commit depredations upon private property by throwing down a considerable quantity of stone wall.² Whether this was done as wanton mischief, or whether they thought that these walls would afford a rampart for the militia in case they should attempt an expedition in that direction, it is impossible to say.

The day of debate had now passed, and the day of action, open, efficient action, had come. Active efforts were now making in all parts of the Province. Not only were the Committees of Safety and of Supplies adopting efficient measures, but almost every town was resounding with "awful notes of preparation." The towns were furnishing arms and munitions of war to the utmost extent of their ability. The minute-men and the alarm-lists, as they were called, composed of the aged and of the young, were out almost daily for exercise and drill. A deep feeling pervaded the whole community. The people felt the awful responsibility which rested upon them. They knew that to resist the king's troops would be treason, which they might be called upon to expiate upon the gallows; but to submit to the arbitrary and unjust requisitions of Great Britain, would be courting a chain, and entailing slavery upon themselves and their children. But fearful as was the crisis, they did not falter. The resolve had been taken with due consideration, and by it they were determined to stand. The weight of responsibility which rested upon them, only gave them firmness, and more strongly bound them to one another and to the common cause. The aged inspired the young, and the young animated the aged; the wife urged the husband to the discharge of his duty, and the husband promised protection to the wife; mothers gave up their sons, and sisters their brothers to the great cause of freedom. All classes seemed to vie with each other in their efforts for the common cause. The feeling which pervaded the community was one of the purest patriotism, sanctified and hallowed on the altar of religion. Their sense of justice and of right, their regard for the welfare of their children, their love for their country, and their devotion to their God, prompted them to action, and inspired them with confidence in their ultimate success.

No class in the community contributed more to produce this state of feeling, and to animate and sustain the people as the danger approached, than the pious and patriotic clergy of New England. Their appeals were ardent and touching. They recurred to the causes which had brought us to this country, and recounted the instances in which our fathers had been brought out of a wilderness of dangers, and through scenes of blood; and pointed to that Canaan of rest which awaited us, if we would put our trust in the Lord, and rely upon his outstretched arm. They taught their people that the Gospel was a self-sacrificing system, that patriotism was a Christian duty, and that he who refused to suffer for his country in such a holy cause, was false to Him who died that we might live. And among those who animated and encouraged the people, and thus kindled the fires of patriotism upon the altars of religion, none was more active or successful than the distinguished and pious priest, who ministered to the people of Lexington. His intimacy with Adams and Hancock made him minutely acquainted with the affairs of the Colony, his clear and far-reaching perception enabled him to judge with great accuracy, and his noble and manly independence gave him a controlling influence over the minds of men. "Mr. Clarke was a man of high rank in his profession—a man of practical piety, a learned theologian, a person of general reading, a writer perspicuous, correct, and pointed, beyond the standard of the day, and a most intelligent, resolute and ardent champion of the popular cause. He was connected by marriage with the family of John Hancock. To this circumstance no doubt may properly be ascribed some portion of his interest in the political movements of the day; while on the mind of Hancock an intimacy with Mr. Clarke was calculated to have a strong and salutary influence."¹

Mr. Clarke took a broad and enlightened view of the duties and obligations of the citizen. With him patriotism was a virtue of religious growth. In his estimation, love to God involved a love of country, and devotion to religion implied devotion to the state. Describing the true patriot, he says, "Inspired with the principles of piety, governed by the laws of God, encouraged and supported with motives of religion, such men in the court or in the field, in peace and in war, in private and in public stations, look with a generous contempt, a sacred abhorrence upon every advantage they might make to themselves at the expense of their virtue. ness of society — of mankind. The frowns of the great, and the flatteries of the vulgar are equally despised; the greatest trials are cheerfully endured, the most self-denying services are with pleasure engaged in, in the cause of God. In honor to God they wait upon the king, in devotion to him they serve their country, and for the glory of his name stand ready cheerfully to submit to every hardship, firmly to face every danger, and for the support of his cause, and the defence of the liberties and lives of his people, freely to make their own a sacrifice, and shed their dearest blood.”¹

Such were the sentiments of Mr. Clarke, uttered seven years before hostilities commenced; and they had become more deeply seated, and had taken a more active form as the crisis approached. Such sentiments and feelings had extended in a good degree throughout all the colonies, — though in Massachusetts they had well nigh ripened into action. The town of Lexington, as we have already seen, had from the first taken a deep and lively interest in the controversy between the parent country and the colonies, and had made every effort to prepare her sons for any emergency which might arise. In 1774, she had “voted to increase the town’s stock of ammunition,” “to encourage military discipline, and to put themselves in a posture of defence against their enemies;” she had voted to supply the “training soldiers” with bayonets, and had distributed at the expense of the town, arms and ammunition to the “training band” and “alarm list” of her citizens. Such was the liberality of the town to her patriotic sons, who in the day of trial stood firmly by the cause of freedom, and nobly “showed that they were worth their breeding.”²

² As a specimen of the spirit which prevailed at that day, we subjoin the following :

“At a meeting of the people of the Alarm List of the third Company in Danvers, held in said Danvers, the 6th of March, 1775, for the purpose of electing officers for said Alarm List Company, Rev. Benj. Balch, Chairman; said people unanimously made choice of Dea. Edmund Putnam for Captain; Rev. Benj. Balch for Lieutenant, and Mr. Tarrant Putnam for Ensign. The said gentlemen being present, declared their acceptance.”—American Archives, Vol. ii. p. 37.

This fact is well worthy of a town, which, though distant, nobly joined the affair of the 19th of April, 1775.

The second Provincial Congress, of which John Hancock was President, and Samuel Adams one of its most distinguished members, having closed its session at Concord on the 15th of April, these champions of freedom, instead of returning to Boston, had taken up their abode with Rev. Jonas Clarke at Lexington. This they were induced to do in consequence of the impression which had become quite prevalent, that General Gage had meditated their seizure. It was well known that Hutchinson, the predecessor of General Gage, had used his influence to have Adams arrested and sent to England to be tried for treason ; and the subsequent course of Adams had been still more offensive to the royal Governor. General Gage had, by his proclamation of November, 1774, pronounced the Provincial Congress over which Hancock had presided, "an unlawful assembly, tending utterly to subvert" government, and to lead directly "to sedition, treason, and rebellion," and had held up "the pains and penalties of the law," to prevent their reassembling, or their measures from being carried into effect. There was reason, therefore, to apprehend that these distinguished patriots, after attending another session of this unlawful assembly, and adopting measures still more odious to his Majesty's Government, would not be safe in Boston ; abounding as it did, at that time, with a large number of inveterate tories from all parts of the Province, who were constantly urging the Governor on to deeds of violence and desperation. This impression was strengthened by various other causes. Gordon, the historian, informs us, that an intercepted letter from Mr. Mauduit to Commissioner Hollowell, brought over by a vessel from England, which arrived here on the 2d of April, contained distinct intimations, that some of the leading patriots were to be seized and sent to England as traitors. A letter from London, under date of February 24th, 1775, contained this passage : "those Lords who advised the king to declare you rebels, and to apprehend Messrs. Hancock and Adams, have gone so far as to say, that Chatham shall fall a sacrifice to their designs."¹ Another letter from London says, "Orders are certainly sent to seize particular persons."² Another letter subsequently received, declares that "the administration on Friday received advices from General Gage to the 18th of March, wherein he acknowledges the receipt of the king's orders to apprehend Messrs. Cushing, Adams, Hancock, &c., and send them over to England to be tried; but the second orders which were to hang them in Boston, the General had not received."¹ General Gage, as we have already seen, in his letter to Dartmouth, of the 18th of January, had suggested the propriety of seizing "the most obnoxious leaders," and offering pardon to all others; and his Proclamation of the 12th of June, 1775, offering "his Majesty's most gracious pardon to all persons who shall forthwith lay down their arms, and return to the duties of peaceable subjects, excepting only from the benefits of such pardon, Samuel Adams and John Hancock, whose offences are of too flagitious a nature to admit of any other consideration than that of condign punishment;" shows that such a measure was premeditated. Lord Dartmouth, in his letter to General Gage, under date of April 15th, expressly declares that the seizure of the most obnoxious leaders "is already provided for."² These facts prove most conclusively, that one object of the stealthy movement of the British officers on the evening of the 18th of April, was to seize these illustrious patriots, that they might suffer the full penalty of treason. This fact was admitted at the time, and has since been acknowledged by foreign,³ as well as by American writers.⁴

Everything indicated that the crisis was at hand, and a fearful one it was for Massachusetts. General Gage had received a small accession to his forces, which now amounted to about four ⁴ Shattuck, in his history of Concord, declares that one object of this expedition was "to apprehend Hancock, Adams, Barrett, and other distinguished patriots."—p. 101. We have no disposition to detract from the merits of Colonel Barrett. He was undoubtedly a brave and efficient officer, and a true patriot; but we are not aware that he stood so prominent as to be known across the Atlantic, and to be ranked with Adams and Hancock. After a pretty thorough examination of authorities, we have found nothing that could, even by implication, include him in the list of the proscribed patriots. He certainly was not exempted from pardon in Gage's proclamation.

The designs of the British, and the belief of the day, are clearly embodied in a tory ballad of that period—more remarkable for truth than for poetry, we imagine.

"As for their king, that John Hancock,
And Adams, if they're taken,
Their heads for signs shall hang up high,
Upon the hill, called Beacon."

thousand men, well armed and equipped, and, under the most perfect discipline, could be brought into the field at any moment. Large reinforcements were on their way from Europe, and Boston was the place of their destination. On the side of the Province there was no organized army; not a single company in the field to oppose the march of the king's troops. The whole Province was in a state of comparative disorder. General Gage, by dissolving the Legislature, had left Massachusetts without any lawful government. The Provincial Congress, a body almost self-constituted, assumed to act as a sort of Legislature, and the Committees of Safety and of Supplies were exercising a kind of Executive power. And though these bodies, under all the circumstances of the case, acted with great wisdom and efficiency, so far as they were concerned, they had no power to enforce their measures, and no adequate means in their hands to procure the necessary troops or munitions of war. Though the Provincial Congress had, as early as October, 1774, recommended the purchase of arms and ammunition to the amount of £20,800, their Treasurer, on the 25th of April, 1775, reported that only about £5,000 had come into his hands.¹ The poverty of the people and the dearth of military stores within the Province, are manifest from the journals of those bodies. Most of the arms in the hands of the people, were their old hunting guns, without bayonets; and hence votes were passed by Congress earnestly recommending the purchase and manufacture of that essential appendage of the musket. The manufacture of saltpetre was also urged upon the people, that they might be able to supply the great demand for powder. The towns were earnestly called upon to furnish as far as possible, a certain quantity of bayonets, powder and "firelocks."

The records show the great difficulties under which the Committee of Supplies labored. Many of their votes indicated the strait to which they were driven.² They were directed to "endeavor to procure" such and such articles. The supply of military stores and of provisions, indicated their destitution both in the implements and the sinews of war. The Committee of Supplies were directed to "endeavor to procure" 200 spades, 150 iron shovels, 150 pickaxes, 1000 six-quart iron pots, 200 bill-hooks, 1000 wooden mess-bowls, 1 tenon-saw, 200 axes, 50 wheelbarrows, and a suitable supply of wooden spoons; also 355 barrels of pork, 700 barrels of flour, 300 bushels of beans, and 20 tierces of rice. Limited as were these amounts, and active as were the endeavors of the Committee, these amounts could not be fully obtained. They also obtained as many field-pieces as they could, but so limited was the supply, that certain officers were directed, if possible, to borrow of those who possessed them, that the men might be instructed in their use. With such comparative destitution, and with a population of only about three hundred thousand, without any organized government, and almost without money or credit, Massachusetts dared with a small number of undisciplined and half-armed militia, to withstand the mighty energy of Great Britain, lately victorious on both continents over the most powerful nations of the earth. But great as was the disparity, the patriots stood firm. Animated by the justice of their cause, and sustained by a lively faith in an over-ruling Providence, they were determined to do their duty, and trust the issue to Him "who bringeth the princes to nothing, and taketh up the isles as a very little thing."

General Gage having obtained all needed information relative to the topography of the country, planned a secret expedition to Concord, for the purpose of destroying the military stores there deposited. On the 15th of April, on the pretence of teaching the grenadiers and light infantry some new discipline or evolutions, he detached about eight hundred of them from the main body, and marched them to another part of the town. At night the boats of the transport ships, which had been hauled up for repairs, were launched and moored under the sterns of the men-of-war, lying in the river. But the object of this movement was suspected by the watchful patriots; and Dr. Warren, ever upon the alert, immediately caused information to be communicated to his friends in the neighboring towns; and a messenger was dispatched to Hancock and Adams at Lexington. This timely notice enabled the Committee of Safety, of which Hancock was chairman, to adopt the precautionary measure on the 17th and 18th, of having a portion of the cannon and stores at Concord, removed to Sudbury, Stow, and Groton; and another portion secreted in different places within the town.

On Tuesday, the 18th of April, Gen. Gage detailed a number of his officers, and sent them out of town with instructions to post themselves on the several roads leading from Boston, to prevent, if possible, all intelligence of his intended expedition that night from reaching the country. To prevent suspicion a part of them left Boston in the morning, and dined that day in Cambridge. Late in the afternoon, they proceeded leisurely on horseback towards Lexington and Concord. The Committees of Safety and Supplies had been in session that day at Wetherby's tavern at Menotomy, now Arlington; and as they had not completed their business, had adjourned over to nine o'clock the next morning. Mr. Gerry, afterwards Vice President of the United States, and Colonels Orne and Lee, remained there to spend the night. Mr. Richard Devens and Mr. Abraham Watson started in a chaise for Charlestown; but meeting a number of British officers on horseback, they returned to inform their friends at Wetherby's and remained there till the officers had passed, when they returned to Charlestown. Mr. Gerry lost no time in sending an express to Hancock and Adams, that "eight or nine officers were out, suspected of some evil design." The messenger took a by-path and arrived safely at Lexington.¹ But a verbal message had already communicated to the people of Lexington the fact that these officers were on the road.

"Solomon Brown of Lexington, who had been to market at Boston on the 18th, returned late in the afternoon, and informed Col. Munroe, then the orderly sergeant of the militia company, that he had seen nine British officers, dressed in blue greatcoats, passing leisurely up the road, sometimes before and sometimes behind him, armed, as he discovered by the occasional blowing aside of their greatcoats. Munroe suspecting their intention was to seize Hancock and Adams, immediately collected a guard of eight men, well armed and equipped, and placed them, himself at their head, at the house of Mr. Clarke, which was about a quarter of a mile from the main road leading to Concord. Small parties of British officers in the spring of that year, had frequently been seen making excursions into the country, early in the day, and returning before evening. But the unusually late hour of their passing up at this time, excited the attention of our citizens, and drew together at an early hour in the evening, about thirty of the militia, well armed, and ready for any emergency to which the critical and alarming state of things might suddenly call them. It had been currently reported that the British had threatened that Hancock and Adams should not stay at Lexington; and it was generally believed to be the object of these officers who had passed up, to return secretly at a late hour in the night and seize them, and carry them to Boston. After some consultation, it was concluded by those present to send three of their number, Sanderson, Brown, and Loring, towards Concord to watch the British officers, and endeavor to ascertain and give information of their movements. In the borders of Lincoln the whole three men were taken prisoners by the British officers, who were paraded across the road.”¹

Soon after Mr. Devens had arrived at Charlestown, he received intelligence that the British troops in Boston were in motion, and were preparing to leave the town on some secret expedition. A signal had previously been agreed upon. If the British attempted an expedition by the Neck, two lanterns were to be hung out from the steeple of the Old North Church, and if by water, one. Devens, an ardent patriot, and an active member of the Committee of Safety, kept his eye upon the Church; the lantern soon conveyed the tidings that the troops were leaving Boston, by crossing the river. Believing that Concord was the place of their destination, and fearing for the safety of his friends at Menotomy and Lexington, he immediately prepared to dispatch messengers with the intelligence.

General Gage in the meantime supposed that his movement was unobserved, and that his expedition was known only to himself and the few officers to whom he had committed the secret. Stedman, the English historian, who accompanied Percy in this expedition, informs us that Gage sent for Percy that evening about nine o'clock, and communicated to him the contemplated expedition, and congratulated himself upon his success in keeping it from the patriots. But as Percy was crossing the Common a short time after, he saw a group of citizens assembled; and mingling with them, he found the subject of this expedition to Concord was freely spoken of and well understood; whereupon he hastened back to Gage's quarters, and gave him the information.¹ Mortified at the intelligence, and to prevent its further spread, he immediately issued orders that no one should be permitted to leave Boston.

But it was too late. The intelligence had gone forth from the Old North Church with the rapidity of light; and Dr. Warren had a few minutes before dispatched Paul Revere and William Dawes into the country to give the information, and alarm the people. A little before eleven o'clock, Revere crossed the river in his own boat, close to the Somerset man-of-war, unobserved, and landed at Charlestown, where he had an interview with Mr. Devens, who informed him that ten British officers, well armed and mounted, were upon the road. A fleet horse was obtained of Deacon Larkin, and Revere started on his perilous mission about eleven o'clock. Soon after passing Charlestown neck, he fell in with two British officers who attempted to arrest him; but turning his horse back towards Charlestown, he gained the Medford road, and owing to the fleetness of his horse, he escaped from his pursuers, one of whom in attempting to cut him off, rode into a clay-pit.

Relieved from such troublesome company, Revere passed through Medford to Menotomy, alarming the people by the way, and arrived safely at Lexington, where he found Rev. Mr. Clarke's house guarded by sergeant Munroe and eight men. This was a little past midnight; and on requesting to be admitted to Mr. Clarke's house, he was told by the sergeant that the family had just retired, and had requested that they might not be disturbed by any noise about the house. "Noise," exclaimed Revere, "You'll have noise enough before long. The regulars are coming out." He was then permitted to pass. On knocking at the door, Mr. Clarke opened a window, and inquired who was there. Revere without answering the question, said he wished to see Mr. Hancock. Mr. Clarke, ever deliberate and watchful, was intimating that he did not like to admit strangers to his house at that time of night, without knowing who they were, and the character of their business; when Hancock, who had retired to rest, but not to sleep, recognizing Revere's voice, cried out, "Come in, Revere, we are not afraid of you." Shortly after, Dawes, who came out through Roxbury, arrived. They both brought the intelligence that "a large body of troops, supposed to be a brigade of twelve or fifteen hundred men, were embarked in boats at Boston, and gone over to Lechmere's Point in Cambridge; and it was suspected that they were ordered to seize and destroy the stores belonging to the Colony at Concord."¹

After refreshing themselves at Lexington, Revere and Dawes, not knowing the fate of the three men who had been sent up the road from Lexington, set off for Concord to alarm the people. Soon after, they were overtaken by Dr. Prescott, a young gentleman of Concord, who had been spending the evening at Lexington. Being an ardent whig, Prescott entered heartily into their design, and they proceeded towards Concord, alarming the people on the road. Before reaching Brooks's tavern at the Concord line, they were suddenly met by a party of British officers, armed and mounted, who immediately surrounded and captured Revere, who was in advance of his companions. Prescott, being a little in the rear, eluded them, and leaping a stone wall, made his escape, and arrived safely in Concord, where he gave the alarm. The same officers had already taken Sanderson, Brown and Loring of Lexington, and had them then in custody. These prisoners were all subjected to a rigid examination. Presenting their pistols, the officers threatened to blow out the brains of their captives, if they did not give true answers to their questions. They interrogated the Lexington men relative to Hancock and Adams, and inquired where they could be found. They also questioned Revere, who at first gave them rather evasive answers; but finding himself in their keeping, and seeing no way of escape, he said to them firmly, "Gentlemen, you have missed your aim." One of the officers said, "What aim?" Revere replied, "I came out from Boston an hour after your troops left, and if I had not known that messengers had been sent out to give information to the country, and have had time enough to carry it fifty miles, I would have ventured one shot from you, before I would have suffered you to stop me." Startled at this, they pushed their inquiries further, when, on hearing the sound of a distant bell, one of the Lexington prisoners said to them, "The bell's ringing — the town's alarmed — and you are all dead men." These declarations frightened the British officers, who, after a brief consultation aside, started on their return towards Lexington. They kept possession of their prisoners till they came within about one hundred rods of the meeting-house, when taking Revere's horse from him, and cutting the girths of the saddles, and the bridles of the other prisoners, the officers left them, and rode off at full speed towards Boston. This was about three o'clock on the morning of the 19th.¹

While these things were occurring on the road towards Concord, the alarm spread rapidly throughout Lexington, and the minute-men were summoned to assemble at their usual place of parade on the Common. At two o'clock on the morning of the 19th, Captain John Parker caused the roll of his company to be called, and ordered every man to load his gun with powder and ball. After remaining some time upon parade, one of the messengers who had been sent towards Boston, returned and reported that he could hear nothing of the regulars, as the

"The Ride of Paul Revere" has been made classic by the poem, "Tales of a Wayside Inn," by Longfellow. We have heard of poetic license, but have always understood that this sort of latitude was to be confined to modes of expression and to the regions of the imagination, and should not extend to historic facts. This distinction Longfellow has not been careful to observe. He says of Revere:

"It was two by the village clock,
When he came to the bridge in Concord town."

Now the plain truth, as stated by Revere himself, and by all other authorities, is that he did not even enter the township of Concord, or approach within several miles of Concord bridge. When poets pervert plain matters of history, to give speed to their Pegasus, they should be restrained, as Revere was in his midnight ride.

British troops were then generally called. This created the impression that the movement of the troops at Boston was a mere feint on the part of General Gage, to call off public attention from some expedition he was about to undertake in some other direction. The evening being cool, the company was dismissed, with orders to assemble again at the beat of the drum. Some who resided in the immediate neighborhood, repaired to their own homes, but the greater part of them went to Buckman's tavern, near the place of parade.¹

It may aid the reader in understanding what is to follow, to give a brief description of the village, and of the localities where the principal events occurred. Lexington is about twelve miles north-west of Boston, and six miles south-east of Concord. The immediate village at that time did not contain more than eight or ten houses. "The road from Boston divides near the centre of the village. The branch leading to Concord passes to the left, and that to Bedford to the right of the meeting-house, forming two sides of a triangular green or common, on the south-easterly corner of which stood the meeting-house, facing directly down the road leading to Boston. The road is straight for about one hundred rods below the meeting-house, and nearly level. The common is a pleasant level green, containing about two acres, surrounded by trees, having on the left a gently rising knoll, where the present monument now stands."² On the right of the meeting-house, nearly opposite, and separated from the common by the road leading to Bedford, stood Buckman's tavern. The house is still standing, and is owned by the Merriams; and its perforated clapboards are living witnesses of the attack of a ruthless foe. On the north side of the green, in the rear of the meeting-house, at about twenty rods, were two dwelling houses, one the site of the present house owned and occupied by Mr. James Gould, and the other the old house now standing and owned by Mr. Bowen Harrington. These houses, with their out-buildings, and one or two shops, formed the northerly boundary of the common. North of this is a belt of low swampy ground, extending without interruption for a considerable distance, from the north-east to the south-west. The present Bedford road not then having been constructed, the travel to Bedford passed by the house of the Rev. Mr. Clarke, on what is now known as Hancock street. There were also houses on the Concord road southerly of the common — the one where Mr. John Hudson now resides, then occupied by ——— Monroe. The accompanying diagram will show more fully the localities of the events of that day, and the house where Adams and Hancock were staying.

The apprehension which was felt for the safety of Hancock and Adams, was increased by the report of Sanderson, Revere, and others just escaped from the British officers, who had held them as prisoners. Their inquiries where these distinguished patriots could be found, left no doubt in the minds of the people of Lexington, that one object of the expedition was to seize them. The friends of Adams and Hancock advised them to leave their present lodgings, and repair to a place of greater safety. At first they objected. Hancock declared that "it should never be said of him, that he turned his back upon the British." But they were told that their preservation was of the utmost consequence to the interest of the Colony, and to the great cause of freedom; and as they were unarmed, they could do but little towards opposing the king's troops. They at last consented, though with great reluctance, to leave the scene of danger, and the patriot priest whose hospitality they had shared, and whose sacred benedictions rested upon their heads. It was decided that they should repair to Burlington. But being unwilling to retire at once to a distant place, where they should be beyond the reach of the earliest intelligence, and having a strong desire to witness with their own senses whatever might occur, they at first retired to the hill south-east of Mr. Clarke's house, which was then covered with wood, where they remained concealed till after the British had taken up their line of march for Concord, when they repaired to the house of a Mr. Reed, in the borders of Burlington. Here they remained a short time, when they were induced to retire further from the scene of danger; and they were conducted to the house of Madam Jones, widow of Rev. Thomas Jones, and of Rev. Mr. Marrett, in Burlington.¹

Dorothy Quiney, true to the instincts of patriotism and her attachments to Hancock, to whom she was engaged, and whom she married in September of that year, accompanied him on that perilous occasion. It was at this place, in the wood near Mr. Clarke's house, that the venerable Adams, on hearing the firing of the British troops, made that memorable exclamation, "What a glorious morning for America is this!"

Far-sighted patriot! He was not insensible to the horrors of war. His patriotic soul was fully alive to the agonies of the dying, and the lamentations of the widow and the orphan. But in his prophetic vision, he looked beyond the events of that gloomy morning, to that brighter day which would dawn upon America. He was fully sensible that in politics as in religion, "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church;" and that the first guns that were fired, were but the signal for the general rising of the people, which must result in the independence of the colonies. Though a dark cloud overshadowed his beloved country, he plainly saw that its gilded margin betokened a brighter sky, and pointed to the bow of promise. Such prospects filled him with rapture, and drew from him that cheering, patriotic exclamation.

While these British officers were playing their part on the road towards Concord, the British troops were on their march to the place of their destination. Colonel Smith, at the head of about eight hundred grenadiers, infantry and marines, the flower of the British army, embarked about ten o'clock in the boats of the ships of war. They landed at Phipps's farm in Cambridge, near where the present court-house stands, just as the moon was rising; and to prevent discovery, took an unfrequented path across the marshes to the old road leading from Charlestown to Menotomy. This subjected them to considerable delay and inconvenience, as the path was untrodden, and they were compelled in some cases to wade through the water. Being on a secret expedition, their march was silent and noiseless. Gerry, Orne, and Lee, having been apprised of their approach, rose from their beds at Menotomy, to witness their stealthy midnight march. The front of the column passed the house without annoying any one; but as they proceeded a sergeant's guard was detached to search the house. Gerry, Orne, and Lee, considering themselves in immediate danger, though but partly dressed, escaped from the house to the neighboring fields, where they remained till the overflowing scourge had passed by.¹ The soldiers searched the house; they entered into the chambers where they had been sleeping, but their intended victims had departed.²

Colonel Smith had not marched far before he found that the country was alarmed. Though General Gage had used the utmost secrecy in preparing for the expedition, and his own movements had been cautious and stealthy; though no martial airs had animated his troops, and their march was silent as the grave to which many of them were hastening, he found that the news of his expedition had preceded him. The light from the Old North Church in Boston, had drawn forth a chime from the bells of the country churches, and the firing of alarm guns in every direction showed that the faithful heralds, sent out by the patriots, had performed their duty; and if they had not prepared his way before him, they had prepared the people to give him a warm if not cordial reception. Fearing that the country was rising to oppose his progress, he detached six companies of light infantry, under the command of Major Pitcairn, with orders to press forward and secure the bridges at Concord. At the same time, Colonel Smith dispatched a messenger to General Gage for a reënforcement. Soon after, the officers who had been sent forward the preceding night, returned with very exaggerated statements of the numbers of the militia which were collecting—representing that there were five hundred assembled at Lexington, and that they were constantly coming in from every quarter. The representation so alarmed Pitcairn, that when he had arrived near Lexington Common, he halted till the grenadiers came in sight, that he might be supported in case he should be attacked by an overwhelming force.¹

¹ Smith, in his West Cambridge Address, says, "Gerry in his perturbation, being on the point of opening the front door in their faces, the landlord cried out to him, 'For God's sake don't open that door!' and led them to the back part of the house, whence they escaped into the cornfield, before the officer had posted his guards about the doors. There was nothing to conceal them from view in the broad field but the corn-stubble which had been left the previous fall a foot or two high, and that was but little protection in the bright moonlight. Gerry stumbled and fell, and called out to his friend, 'Stop, Orne; stop for me, till I can get up; I have hurt myself!' This suggested the idea, and they all threw themselves flat on the ground, and, concealed by the stubble, remained there, half-clothed, as they left their chamber, till the troops passed on. Colonel Lee never recovered from the effects of that midnight exposure; he died in less than a month from that night."

"The march of the British," says Phinney, "was silent and rapid. One of the messengers sent by our people to ascertain if they were coming, was surprised before he was aware of their approach, and taken prisoner in Cambridge.² Thus they continued their march undiscovered, taking and detaining as prisoners every person they met with on the road, till they had arrived within a mile and a half of Lexington meeting-house. In order to secure persons traveling upon the road, they would send two soldiers at a considerable distance in advance of the main body, with orders to secrete themselves, one on each side of the road, and when any one approached, they would allow him to pass them, so as to get between them and the troops, and then rise and close upon him. In this way they had taken a number of our men, who had been sent to get information of their approach. Thaddeus Bowman, the last one sent on this business, was riding pretty rapidly down the road, and had proceeded about a mile and a half, when his horse became suddenly frightened, stopped, and refused to go forward. In a moment he discovered the cause. Two British soldiers were perceived just ahead, sitting on opposite sides of the way, close to the fence. It was then daylight. While Bowman was unsuccessfully endeavoring by all the means of whip and spur to urge his horse forward, not conceiving of their plan to entrap him, he caught a glimpse of the main body of the British troops, then about twenty rods off. He instantly turned his horse and rode with all possible speed to the meeting-house, and gave Captain Parker the first certain intelligence of the approach of the king's troops. About the same time that Bowman discovered them, a flanking party made prisoner of Benjamin Wellington, who was within about ten rods of the main road, on his way to join the company at the Common. They took his arms from him, and on his promise to return home, he was released. Wellington, however, took a cross route to the meeting-house, and reached there soon after Bowman. There was no longer any doubt that the regulars were coming.”¹

It was now about half-past four in the morning. Captain Parker immediately ordered the alarm guns to be fired, and the drum to beat to arms. Sergeant William Munroe was directed to form the company, which he did with the utmost dispatch, in two ranks, a few rods north of the meeting-house. Fifty or sixty of the militia had formed, or rather were forming, while there were some thirty spectators near by, a few of whom had arms. But what was to be done! What could this little devoted band do in the face of what they then believed to be twelve or fifteen hundred veteran troops? To attack them would, in a military point of view, be the height of madness; to stand their ground in case they were attacked by such overwhelming numbers, would be exposing themselves to certain destruction without any justifiable motive. Captain Parker and his men not only knew their danger, but they knew the great responsibility which rested upon them. They stood there not merely as soldiers, but as citizens, nay, almost as statesmen, having the destiny of the country in their hands. Their conduct on that occasion might affect, for weal or for woe, thousands that were to come after them. The patriots in the other colonies had expressed a fear, lest the people of Massachusetts, goaded on by oppression, might indiscreetly commit some overt act, and so involve the country prematurely in a civil war. The Continental Congress had recommended to the people of this Colony, to avoid a collision with the king's troops, and in all cases to act only on the defensive.² Hancock and Adams had recommended prudent measures; and though they foresaw that a conflict of arms was approaching, they were extremely anxious that when war should come, we could say with truth that the colonists were not the aggressors. Captain Parker, in his intercourse with Parson Clarke, had learned that patriotism was consistent with prudence; and that his duty to his country and to his God, required him to act only on the defensive. To have been the assailant under such circumstances, would have been unworthy of him as a military commander and as a patriotic citizen, and would justly have exposed him to the censure of a court-martial, and the displeasure of every intelligent friend of the popular cause. Knowing his duty as a soldier, and feeling the full weight of his responsibility as a citizen, Captain Parker ordered his men "not to fire unless they were fired upon."

At a short distance from the parade ground, the British officers, hearing the beat of the American drum, and regarding it as a challenge, ordered the column to halt and prime and load; when they moved forward in double quick time directly upon the Americans, as they were forming. Some of Captain Parker's men, unused to such trying scenes, and knowing their inability to resist successfully, for a moment faltered; Parker commanded every man to stand his ground till he should order him to leave it, and added that he would cause the first man to be shot down who should attempt to leave his post.¹ At this moment the British rushed forward with a shout, led on by Major Pitcairn, who exclaimed, "Disperse, ye rebels; lay down your arms and disperse!" The Americans did not obey; whereupon he repeated the exclamation with an oath, rushed forward, discharged his pistol and commanded his men to fire. A few guns were discharged; but as no execution was done, the Americans, supposing that they were loaded only with powder, stood their ground, but did not return the fire. The command to fire was repeated, and a general discharge from the front rank followed with fatal effect. The Americans, seeing some of their numbers killed and wounded, hesitated no longer as to their right to resist, and several of them immediately returned the fire of the British. Jonas Parker, John Munroe, and Ebenezer Munroe, Jr., and some others, fired before leaving the line. Captain Parker, seeing several of his men fall, and the British rushing upon his little band from both sides of the meeting-house, as if to surround them, ordered his men to disperse. They did so; but as the British continued firing, several of the Americans returned the fire after leaving the field.²

The firing on the part of the Americans, and also on the part of the British, after the first two rounds, was scattering and irregular. As Major Pitcairn led the van, the responsibility of the first firing rests solely upon him. From the best information that can be obtained, it is not probable that Colonel Smith was upon the ground, until after or at the moment of the fatal volley. Most of the accounts, and especially the British, which are the best authority on the question as to who was then in command, ascribe it to Pitcairn. As the light infantry, which were put under the Major, were sent forward in advance of the grenadiers, and as the grenadiers under Smith did not join the column of infantry, until the delay of the latter near the Common, the sole direction of the firing must have devolved upon Pitcairn in the first instance. It is probable that Smith, who was not far from the Common, hearing the first discharge, rode forward, and arrived about the time the fatal volley was fired by the command of the Major. Smith may have been upon the Common before the scattering fire ceased, but was not at the commencement of the firing.¹

The depositions taken in 1775, and subsequently, during the life-time of those who were actors in the scenes of that day, have preserved many interesting facts relative to the firmness, heroism, and noble daring of individuals on that occasion. Jedediah Munroe was wounded in the morning; but nothing daunted by the dangers he had encountered and the wound he had received, instead of quitting the field, he marched with his company towards Concord to meet the enemy, and fell a victim to his patriotism and bravery in the afternoon.² On the first fire of the British in the morning, John Munroe, seeing no one fall, said coolly to his namesake, Ebenezer Munroe, Jr., that they had fired nothing but powder. On the second discharge, Ebenezer replied, 'They have fired something besides powder now, for I am wounded in the arm.' He then discharged his gun at the British, receiving two balls from them in return — one of which grazed his cheek, the other passed between his arm and his body, leaving its mark in his garment. John Munroe, after firing in the line, retreated a few rods, when he turned about, loaded his gun with two balls, and discharged it at his pursuers; the strength of the charge carrying away about a foot of the muzzle of his gun. William Tidd, the second in command of the company, when retreating from the Common, was pursued by an officer, supposed to be Pitcairn, on horseback, up the Bedford road some thirty or forty rods, with repeated cries of "Stop, or you are a dead man." Tidd turned from the road into the lot, where he made a stand, and discharged his gun at his pursuers, who in turn sought safety in flight. John Tidd remained upon the field so long, that as he was leaving the Common a British officer upon horseback rushed upon him and struck him down with his cutlass; and while he remained senseless from the effects of the blow upon the head, they despoiled him of his arms, taking away his gun, cartridge-box and powder-horn. This furnishes pretty good proof that he did not run on the first approach of the enemy.¹

Joshua Simonds, with three others, had, on the approach of the British, gone into the church to obtain a supply of powder. They had succeeded in getting two quarter casks from the upper loft into the gallery, when the British reached the meeting-house. Two of them, Caleb Harrington and Joseph Comee, resolved at every hazard to escape from the house and join the company. Harrington was killed in the attempt at the west end of the meeting-house. Comee, finding himself cut off from the company, ran under a shower of balls, one of which struck him in the arm, to the Munroe house, (where Mr. John Hudson now resides,) and passing through the house made his escape at the back door. The third secreted himself in the opposite gallery, while Simonds loaded and cocked his gun, and laying down, placed the muzzle upon the open cask of powder, determined to blow up the British, if they should enter the gallery, choosing to destroy his own life rather than fall into their hands. "History, Roman history," says Everett, "does not furnish an example of bravery that outshines that of Jonas Parker. A truer heart did not bleed at Thermopylae. He was next door neighbor of Mr. Clarke, and had evidently imbibed a double portion of his lofty spirit. Parker was often heard to say, that be the consequences what they might, and let others do what they pleased, he would never run from the enemy. He was as good as his word ; — better. Having loaded his musket, he placed his hat, containing his ammunition, on the ground between his feet, in readiness for the second charge. At the second fire from the enemy, he was wounded, and sunk upon his knees ; and in this condition discharged his gun. While loading it again upon his knees, and striving in the agonies of death to redeem his pledge, he was transfixed by a bayonet, and thus died on the spot where he first stood and fell.”¹

In addition to Jonas Parker, whose death was thus remarkable, Isaac Muzzy, Robert Munroe, and Jonathan Harrington, were killed on or near the Common, where the company was paraded. Robert Munroe, who thus fell a sacrifice to the lawless oppression of Great Britain, had, on a former occasion, periled his life in her defence — having served in the French war, and been standard-bearer at the capture of Louisburg in 1758. “Harrington’s was a cruel fate. He fell in front of his own house, on the north of the Common. His wife at the window saw him fall, and then start up, the blood gushing from his breast. He stretched out his hands towards her, as if for assistance, and fell again. Rising once more on his hands and knees, he crawled towards his dwelling. She ran to meet him at the door, but it was to see him expire.”² Samuel Hadley and John Brown were killed after they left the Common, and Caleb Harrington in attempting to escape from the meeting-house. Asahel Porter, of Woburn, was not under arms. He had been captured on the road by the British that morning on their approach to Lexington ; and in attempting to make his escape, about the time the firing commenced, was shot down a few rods from the Common.³

³ Phinney’s History and Deposition appended, and MS. Statement of Levi Harrington. The number killed that morning was eight, viz : Jonas Parker, Robert Munroe, Isaac Muzzy, Jonathan Harrington, Caleb Harrington, Samuel Hadley and John Brown of Lexington, and Asahel Porter of Woburn. Three other Lexington men were killed and one wounded in the afternoon.

In addition to the killed, nine, viz: Ebenezer Munroe, Jr., John Tidd, John Robbins, Solomon Pierce, Joseph Comee, Thomas Winship, Nathaniel Farmer, Jedediah Munroe, and a colored man called Prince, were wounded in the morning, and Francis Brown in the afternoon. Jedediah Munroe, who was wounded in the morning, was killed in the afternoon. Several of the above received severe wounds.¹

Of Captain Parker's gallant company, seven were killed, and nine wounded on or near the Common, being a quarter part of the whole number assembled. This furnishes the most striking proof of their bravery, and the firmness with which they withstood the British fire. The history of the most sanguinary battles, though continued for hours, rarely furnishes a per centage of loss equal to this. At the celebrated battle of Austerlitz, where the combined forces of Russia and Austria were so signally defeated and cut to pieces by Napoleon, the loss of the allies was only fifteen per cent; while here it was twenty-five. Brave and patriotic band! How shall we do justice to your names and your memories! When a dark cloud overshadowed our country, and many a stout heart shrunk back in dismay, you boldly stood forth in defence of our rights, and offered yourselves a living sacrifice on the altar of freedom. Your firmness inspired the patriots throughout the colonies — your blood cemented the union of the States. To you we are indebted, in no small degree, for the manifold blessings we now enjoy. A grateful country remembers your deeds of noble daring, and will transmit your names to the latest posterity.

The British suffered but little from the fire of the Americans.

¹ Farmer received a ball in his right arm, which fractured the bone, and disabled him for a long time: several pieces of bone were taken from his arm months afterwards. The Legislature made him a grant of £15 15s. for loss of labor and for surgical attendance. Comee was wounded in the left arm, and received a grant of £12 7s. Tidd, of whose wound in the head we have already spoken, was rewarded for his bravery and suffering by a grant of £4 10s. Ebenezer Munroe, Jr., was wounded in the arm, and remembered by a grant of £4. Francis Brown, who was wounded in the afternoon, received a ball in his cheek, which went nearly through his neck, where it lodged and was extracted on the back of his neck, the year following. He received £12 2s. from the Legislature. Notwithstanding this severe wound, he lived fifteen or twenty years, and in 1776 commanded the Lexington company. Nor must we forget the black man, Prince; he entered the Continental service, and served under Captain Edmund Munroe, in Colonel Bigelow's regiment.

BATTLE SCENE ON LEXINGTON COMMON.

One man of the tenth regiment was wounded in the leg, and another in the hand. Major Pitcairn's horse was struck in two places.¹ When Munroe and others fired from the line, the British were so enveloped in smoke by the volley they had just fired, as to make them invisible to the Americans. This is undoubtedly one cause why more of their shots did not take effect. Some of the militia retreated up the Bedford road, but most of them across the swamp to the rising ground north-west of the Common. As soon as the Lexington company had dispersed, and the firing had ceased, the British troops drew up on the Common, fired a volley, and gave three cheers in token of their victory! They then took up their line of march for Concord, the next village, about six miles distant, where they arrived without further opposition. The tarry of the British at Lexington was short, the whole period occupying not more than twenty or twenty-five minutes. Most of Captain Parker's company, who had withdrawn to no considerable distance, returned to the Common immediately after the British had left for Concord, and made prisoners of six of the regulars who were in the rear of the detachment. It was supposed that they had wandered from the main-body for the purposes of plunder, or had gone into some of the houses on the road to obtain some refreshment, and were thus left behind. These prisoners were disarmed, put under guard, and conducted to Woburn precinct, now Burlington, and from thence were sent to Chelmsford.² There was another prisoner taken shortly after, on the road near the old Viles tavern, not far from the Lincoln line. These were the first prisoners made in the Revolution.

The report of the bloody transaction at Lexington spread as on the wings of the wind, and the fact that the regulars had fired upon and killed several citizens, was known not only in the neighboring towns, but to the distance of forty or fifty miles, in the course of the forenoon.³ The people immediately flew to arms; and half-formed companies, and single individuals, were seen moving rapidly to the scene of action. The intelligence that the British were on their way for Concord, had reached that place between one and two o'clock in the morning. Dr. Prescott, whose escape from the British officers has already been related, had given the alarm. The village bell and the alarm guns awoke the people from their slumbers. The Committee of Safety, the military officers, and the prominent citizens, held a hasty consultation. Rev. Mr. Emerson, their patriotic priest, was with them. The militia and minute-men were assembled, and expresses were sent towards Lexington to ascertain the approach of the king's troops. In the meantime the patriotic Colonel Barrett, to whose care had been committed the military stores in that place, was actively employed in removing them to places of safety. Some were secreted in the woods, and some under rubbish about the buildings, as opportunity would permit, or ingenuity suggest.

³ As a specimen of the speed with which the information of the events of that morning was circulated, and the effect it produced upon the public mind, we will give an extract from Lincoln's History of Worcester. "Before noon, on the 19th of April, an express came to the town, shouting as he passed

Concord is about eighteen miles from Boston. The village is situated on low, level ground, and is completely commanded by the hills on either side. Between these hills on the north-westerly and westerly side of the village, flows the Concord river in a serpentine channel with a sluggish current, approaching in some places within fifty rods of the houses, though generally at a greater distance. Across this stream in 1775, there were two bridges, known as the North and South bridges. The North bridge was some two hundred rods from the meeting-house. The west bank of the river at that place consists of low, wet ground, which is generally overflowed in the spring freshets.

through the streets at full speed, 'To arms! to arms! the war has begun!' His white horse, bloody with spurring, and dripping with sweat, fell exhausted by the church. Another was instantly produced, and the tidings went on. The bell rung out the alarm, the cannon were fired, and messengers sent to every part of the town to collect the soldiery. As the news spread, the implements of husbandry were thrown by in the field, and the citizens left their homes with no longer delay than to seize their arms. In a short time the minute-men were paraded on the green, under Captain Timothy Bigelow; after fervent prayer by the Rev. Mr. Maccarty, they took up their line of march. They were soon followed by as many of the train-bands as could be gathered under Captain Benjamin Flagg." This shows the spirit of the times; and as Worcester, at least thirty miles distant from Lexington, received the tidings of the attack before noon, it shows the rapidity with which the alarm on that day was given.

From the bridge the road was a causeway leading westerly over the low ground towards Acton. The road from the hill where the Americans assembled after leaving the village, ran southerly till it met this causeway leading to the bridge at an acute angle. This bridge across the river was discontinued in 1793; the abutments and causeway, however, are still to be seen. The North bridge led to Colonel Barrett's, which was about two miles from the centre of the town. The road from Lexington enters Concord from the south-east, and runs along nearly a mile upon level land close to the foot of a hill which rises abruptly from thirty to fifty feet above the road, and terminates at the north-easterly part of the square. The top forms a plain which overlooks and commands the village. The liberty-pole stood upon the northerly part of this ridge of high land. "The town," says D' Berniere, the spy sent out by General Gage, "is large, and contains a church, jail, and court-house; but the houses are not close together, but in little groups."

Reuben Brown, one of the messengers sent forth from Concord to obtain information, returned with the intelligence that the British had fired upon the Americans at Lexington, and were on their way to Concord. This was soon after confirmed, with the additional intelligence, that some half-dozen of the Americans had been killed.¹ The militia and minute-men of Concord

¹ John Hoar, and seven others of Lincoln, on the 23d of April, 1775, testify that on the 19th of April they "were assembled at Concord in the morning of that day in consequence of information received that a brigade of regular troops were on their march to Concord, who had killed six men at Lexington; about an hour afterwards we saw them approaching," &c. Captain Nathan Barrett, Lieutenants Jonathan Farrar, Joseph Butler, and Francis Wheeler, and Ensign John Barrett, and eleven others, all of Concord, testify on the same day as follows: "On Wednesday, the 19th instant, about an hour after sunrise, we assembled on the hill near the meeting-house in Concord, in consequence of information that a number of regular troops had killed six of our countrymen at Lexington, and were on their march to Concord; and about an hour after we saw them approaching to the number, as we imagined, of about twelve hundred." As these troops assembled at Concord "About an hour before the British arrived," and had at that time received information that the regulars had fired upon and killed six of their countrymen at Lexington, it is manifest that this information had been forwarded with the utmost dispatch, and hence must have been known to all the militia and minute-men before the firing at the North bridge.

There is strong internal evidence in the depositions, that the intelligence of the slaughter of Captain Parker's men was early communicated to the citizens assembled on the Green near the meeting-house. They were soon joined by a portion of the military from Lincoln, which had turned out on the alarming intelligence from Lexington of the slaughter of their countrymen. The gallant Captain William Smith had brought on his minute-men, and Captain Samuel Farrar, with equal promptness, was there with his militia company. It was determined at first to go out and meet the enemy, and some companies marched down the Lexington road, till they saw the British approaching within about two miles of the village. Captain Minot remained in the village, and took a position on the hill near the liberty-pole. The companies which had marched down the road soon returned, and reported that the British were three or four times their number. The whole party then wisely fell back to an eminence about eighty rods from the meeting-house, where they formed in two battalions.¹ Here they were joined by Colonel Barrett, the senior officer on the occasion, who had previously been engaged in removing and secreting the military stores. In the meantime the British appeared in full view at the distance of a quarter of a mile, marching at a rapid rate. There was but little time for deliberation. Some were in favor of standing their ground and resisting the British troops, in case they should attack them. But and to the military at Concord. The deponents had information that six of their countrymen were slain, which shows that the tidings must have been forwarded immediately, before the whole number had been ascertained. Timothy Minot, Jr., of Concord, testified that after he heard of the regulars firing upon the Lexington men, he thought it his duty to secure his family; and after securing them, to use his own language, "sometime after that, returning towards his dwelling, and finding that the bridge was guarded by the regular troops," stood as a spectator and saw the Americans march down to the bridge where the firing commenced." The only authority we can find that even implies that the Americans at the North bridge did not know of the slaughter at Lexington, is that of Mr. Emerson, and his language may naturally be interpreted to imply nothing more than that they had not learned all the particulars, though they had heard of the main fact. Such an interpretation of his language will make it harmonize with that of Captain Barrett and sixteen other citizens of Concord. None can take an impartial view of the evidence without being satisfied that the Lexington slaughter was known to the Americans before a gun was fired at Concord. "That such a fact, so perfectly known to hundreds at Lexington about sunrise, on a day when so many were literally running from town to town, should not have traveled six miles in about five hours, cannot be believed."—Adams's Address.

more prudent counsels prevailed, and Colonel Barrett ordered the militia under his command, to retire over the North bridge to a commanding eminence about three-fourths of a mile from the meeting-house, there to watch the movements of the enemy and wait for reënforcements.¹

The British troops marched into Concord in two columns; one in the main road, and the other north of the road on the hill from which the Americans had just retired. Colonel Smith, with the grenadiers, marines, and a portion of the light-infantry, remained in the centre of the town, while Captain Parsons, with six light companies, consisting however of only about two hundred men, was detailed to secure the North bridge, and destroy the stores supposed to be deposited in that part of the town. Pursuant to orders, Captain Parsons posted Captain Laurie with about one hundred men at the bridge, while he proceeded with the remainder, under the guidance of Ensign D' Berniere, who had visited Concord about a month before, to the house of Colonel Barrett, in pursuit of military stores. Captain Pole, with a small detachment, was sent to the South bridge for a similar purpose.² These bridges were important in a military point of view, as they furnished the only approach to the town from the west and north-west, at this season of the year, when the water is usually high.

In the meantime the Americans, assembled on the hill near the North bridge, were receiving accessions to their numbers from Carlisle, from Chelmsford, from Westford, from Littleton and Acton, and from other towns in that neighborhood. As the militia and minute-men repaired to the scene of action with the utmost haste on the first receipt of the intelligence of the approach of the British, the companies generally were not full at this early hour. About four hundred and fifty however had arrived.³ They were formed in line by Joseph Hosmer of Concord, who acted as adjutant on the occasion. As the men arrived they took their places in their respective companies. The gallant Captain Davis, with his Acton minute-men, came upon the field after the line was partly formed, and took his appropriate place — the one which he had occupied a short time before at a muster — on the left of the Concord minute companies, commanded by Captains Brown and Miles, both of whom were his seniors.¹ From their position on the hill the Americans had a full view, not only of the British troops at the bridge, but also of those near the meeting-house, who were seeking for and destroying military stores. Seeing several fires set by the troops under Colonel Smith, they became alarmed for the fate of the village. A consultation of the officers present and of prominent citizens was held, which resulted in a resolution to pass the bridge, and march to the centre of the town.²

The Americans were at this time about four times as numerous as the British at the bridge; but the latter were vastly superior in discipline, and in the quality of their arms. Besides, the British had a veteran force of at least five hundred men in the village, on which they could fall back in case of necessity; and being posted at the bridge which the Americans could approach only by a narrow causeway, they had greatly the advantage of position. Knowing that the British had fired upon the militia at Lexington, and killed several men, the Americans had every reason to believe that they would dispute the passage of the bridge; and knowing that the front of the column upon the causeway leading directly to the bridge, would be greatly exposed to their fire in case of resistance, it required no ordinary firmness to occupy that position. Who then should head the column? What company should occupy that post of honor and of danger? It of right belonged to the Concord companies; their position on the right of the line would, under ordinary circumstances, give them that post. A consultation of the officers and others was had, at which the subject was considered. We have no full report of what took place there. William Parkman of Concord, who was present acting as one of the vigilance committee, said that Major Buttrick requested one of the Concord companies to meet the British at the bridge, but the Captain replied that he had rather not. Captain Davis of Acton, promptly accepted the honor, dangerous as was the position.³ Captain William Smith of Lincoln, also offered his services to lead the column to the bridge.¹ That there was some feeling exhibited on this occasion, and that some of the officers had declined the post of danger, is manifest from the course pursued by the gallant Davis, who, in returning to his company from this consultation, said with emotion and firmness, "I have n't a man in my company that 's afraid to go," and ordering his men to follow him, wheeled them out of the line, and placed them at the head of the column, under the guidance of Major Buttrick.² Colonel Barrett gave orders to pass the bridge, but not to fire unless fired upon by the king's troops. He designated Major John Buttrick to execute this order. Lieutenant Colonel Robinson, of Westford, volunteered to accompany him. On their march Major Buttrick requested him to act as his superior, but he generously declined.³

It was nearly ten o'clock when the Americans, about three hundred strong,⁴ commenced their march for the river, the Acton company in front, led by the gallant Davis. Captains Brown, Miles, Smith and others fell into line with their companies.

¹ Mass. Archives,—“Lincoln, November, 1776. This may certify that Captain William Smith of Lincoln, in the county of Middlesex, appeared on Concord parade early in the morning of the 19th of April, 1775, with his company of minute-men; was ordered to leave his horse by a field-officer, and take his post on an adjacent hill—the British troops possessing the North bridge. He voluntarily offered with his company, to endeavor to dislodge them, leaving his horse at the tavern; by which means, on their retreat, the horse, &c., were carried off with one of their wounded men.—John Buttrick, Major.”

This important fact was brought before the public for the first time, we believe, by Frothingham in his Siege of Boston.

² Smith's Deposition, appended to Adams's Address. Pierpont, in a Poem delivered at Acton, October 29th, 1851, on the celebration of the completion of the monument erected to the honor of Davis, Hosmer, and Hayward, thus describes this consultation :

“But who shall head the column? Who shall dare
Beard first the lion, leaping from his lair?
The chiefs in consultation ask, ‘Which corps
Of these, who never faced a foe before,
Will stand those veterans’ fire? Which will not quail
At yonder bayonets, and the leaden hail
That lies behind them? Davis, are there ten
Of your command—of Acton’s minute men—
Who will not waver—will not quit their place,
When meeting yonder bull-dogs face to face?’
‘Ten, do you ask me, Buttrick, Robinson,
Ten of my minute men that will not run?
Say but the word—march with me down this hill,
And you shall see, there is not one that will.’
Nor was there one that did.”

⁴ Deposition of 1775.

Their positions, however, are not exactly known.¹ They marched in double ranks. The British guard of about one hundred in number, under Captain Laurie, were then on the west side of the river. On seeing the Americans approach, they recrossed the bridge, formed in order of battle, and began to take up the planks. Major Buttrick in a loud voice remonstrated against this, and ordered his men to hasten their march. When they arrived within a few rods of the bridge, they were fired upon by the British. The first guns, only two or three in number, did no execution, the balls, probably by design, striking the water. These were followed by a few other shots, one of which wounded Luther Blanchard, a fifer in the Acton company. These were succeeded by a volley, by which Captain Davis and Abner Hosmer, of the same company, were killed. On seeing this, Major Buttrick exclaimed: "Fire, fellow soldiers; for God's sake, fire!" This order was instantly obeyed, killing one and wounding several of the enemy. The British immediately retreated in great haste and confusion towards the village, and were soon met by a reinforcement; when the whole fell back upon the main body, near the meeting-house. The Americans pursued them over the bridge, where one of the wounded British soldiers was cruelly killed by a hatchet, as he was struggling to rise from the ground.² Part of the Americans turned off to the left, and ascended a hill east of the main road, while another portion returned to the high grounds, carrying with them the remains of Davis and Hosmer. Military order was now broken up, and the Americans improved the time in taking refreshments. In the mean time, the detachment which had been sent to Colonel Barrett's to destroy the munitions of war, returning, re-passed the bridge where the skirmish had taken place, and joined the main body under Colonel Smith, without molestation. The localities here referred to, and the movement of the troops, will be better understood by reference to the accompanying diagram.

² This barbarous deed gave rise to the charge made by the British that the Americans scalped the wounded and cut off their ears. The act was committed by a rash young man, acting from the impulse of the moment, who regretted it to his dying day. It was condemned by all parties at the time, and has never been justified by any one. It was an act of an individual, without orders from any in authority.

The Americans, whose numbers were now considerably increased, ought, it has been said, to have intercepted this detachment at the bridge; but as no declaration of war had taken place, there must have been some hesitancy on the part of the officers as to the wisdom or propriety of such an attempt. Such a step might have exposed the women and children to the grossest outrages, and the village itself to destruction. The conduct of the British in the afternoon shows that such apprehensions, if they were entertained, were well founded. Besides, the Provincial troops were unused to strict discipline, and it would have been difficult to rally them, and bring them into the field to act with such efficiency at a single point, as to intercept a hundred veteran soldiers; and every military man knows that it would have been next to impossible for three hundred militia, without discipline and poorly armed, to capture such a force before they could have been relieved by Colonel Smith, who had six or seven hundred men at his command, and who must have been on the alert for the safety of Captain Parsons' detachment. On the whole it was undoubtedly wise that no such attempt was made by Colonel Barrett; though it must have been a great mistake to permit the militia and minute men to disperse at that critical moment, as they were allowed to do, on the poor plea that they wanted their breakfast.

The British met with but partial success in their destruction of military stores. The delay produced by the affair at Lexington, and the consequent caution which Colonel Smith afterwards observed, gave the people at Concord a better opportunity than they would otherwise have had to secure them; which they so wisely improved, by scattering and secreting them, that most of them escaped destruction. Little or no success crowned the efforts of the detachment, sent to the South bridge. The party sent to Colonel Barrett's were a little more successful. They burnt a number of gun carriages and other implements of war. In the centre of the town, they knocked off the trunnions of three iron twenty-four pounders, burnt a number of gun carriages, threw a quantity of balls into the mill-pond, broke open some sixty barrels of flour, and destroyed a small quantity of wooden bowls and spoons. They also cut down the liberty-pole, and set the court-house on fire, which however was extinguished by the exertion and address of the patriotic Mrs. Moulton. Gordon sums up the total destruction as follows: "They disabled three twenty-four pounders, destroying their carriages, wheels and limbers; sixteen wheels for brass three pounders; two carriages with wheels for two four pounders; about one hundred weight of balls, which they threw into the river and wells, and about sixty barrels of flour, one-half of which was afterwards saved.”¹ After the firing at the North bridge, the British fell back to the village, where they were soon joined by the detachments under Captain Parsons and Captain Pole, who had been sent out to destroy the military stores. Here the whole body of the king's troops remained nearly two hours unmolested; a delay not easily accounted for, unless Colonel Smith was in expectation of a reinforcement—a delay which nearly cost him the loss of his whole detachment. In the meantime the country was alarmed, and the militia and minute-men were pressing to the scene of action. The farmer left his plough in the furrow, the mechanic threw down his tools, and neither returned to his house, save to seize his musket and his powder horn, that he might be prepared to defend his own and his country's rights. The intelligence which went forth from Lexington in the morning, had like an electric fire spread rapidly in every direction, and produced a shock of righteous indignation, which brought men from every quarter, and prepared them for vigorous action; and the scenes which had occurred at the North bridge at Concord, strengthened their hands and their hearts, and rendered them desperate.

About noon the British commenced their retreat. They left the village in the same order in which they entered it—the main body in the road, and a strong flanking party upon the hill to protect their left. For the first mile they were unmolested; but when they arrived at Merriam's corner, they encountered a party of minute-men from Reading, under Major Brooks, afterwards Governor of the Commonwealth; Colonel William Thompson with a body of militia from Billerica and the vicinity coming up about the same time. The Provincials on the high grounds near the North bridge, seeing the British leaving the village, went across the "great field," so called, to the Bedford road, and arrived in time to support the troops brought up by Brooks and Thompson. Here may be said to have commenced the battle of the 19th of April. At Lexington Common and at Concord North bridge, but few guns had been fired by the Americans; and though ten Americans had fallen, only one of the king's troops had been killed by the return fire. But now all restraint seems to have been removed, and every true patriot felt at full liberty to fire without the bidding of any superior. Rev. Edmund Foster, then a young man and a private in the Reading company, gives a graphic account of what occurred at this point. "A little before we came to Merriam's hill, we discovered the enemy's flank guard of about eighty or a hundred men, who, on the retreat from Concord, kept the height of land, the main body being in the road. The British troops and the Americans, at that time, were equally distant from Merriam's corner. About twenty rods short of that place the Americans made a halt. The British marched down the hill with very slow but steady step, without music or a word being spoken that could be heard. Silence reigned on both sides. As soon as the British had gained the main road, and passed a small bridge near the corner, they faced about suddenly and fired a volley of musketry upon us. They overshot; and no one to my knowledge was injured by the fire. The fire was immediately returned by the Americans, and two British soldiers fell dead at a little distance from each other in the road near the brook. The battle now began and was carried on with little or no military discipline or order on the part of the Americans, during the remainder of the day. Each sought his own place and opportunity to attack and annoy the enemy from behind trees, rocks, fences and buildings as seemed most convenient."¹

A little above, near Hardy's Hill, the Sudbury company, led by Captain Cudworth, came up and attacked them with vigor. There was also a severe skirmish below Brooks's tavern on the old road north of the school house. "We saw a wood at a distance," says Mr. Foster, "which appeared to lie on or near the road where the enemy must pass. Many leaped over the walls and made for that wood. We arrived just in time to meet the enemy. There was on the opposite side of the road, a young growth of wood filled with Americans. The enemy were now completely between two fires, renewed and briskly kept up. They ordered out a flank guard on the left to dislodge the Americans from their posts behind the trees; but they only became better marks to be shot at." A short but sharp contest ensued in which the enemy received more deadly injury than at any other place from Concord to Charlestown.

From the bridge below Brooks's, the woody defiles extended a considerable distance; in passing which the British suffered severely. The character of the country obstructed their flanking parties; and as the retreat was now approaching a rout, and their flanks were outflanked by the Americans, they were called in,—thus exposing their main body to the direct fire of those who lined the woody borders of the road. Here they were met by a large body of men from Woburn, who, fired by patriotism, had rallied in defence of the common cause. Loammi Baldwin, afterwards Colonel Baldwin, was one of that body. In Lincoln also, Captain Parker, who had collected most of his men, came up with his company, and taking a position in the fields, poured into the retreating enemy a galling and destructive fire as they passed. Nor ceased the efforts of this gallant band with a single discharge. They joined in the pursuit, determined to avenge the outrage of the morning; and their loss in the afternoon in killed and wounded is conclusive evidence that they did not shun the post of danger. In no part of the retreat were the British more sorely pressed than in passing through Lincoln. Their loss was severe. Eight of their slain were buried in Lincoln grave-yard. The loss of the Americans was comparatively light; though Captain Jonathan Wilson, of Bedford, Nathaniel Wyman, of Billerica, and Daniel Thompson, of Woburn, fell in this part of the field.

The retreat here became a rout, the British making little resistance other than what could be made in their rapid flight. As they entered the town of Lexington, however, they made one more desperate effort to check the pursuers, and restore order in their broken ranks. Near the old Viles tavern, on the border of the town, they threw a detachment upon a high bluff on the north side of the road, to hold the Americans in check, till they could form their fugitives on Fiske Hill, about a hundred rods below. But the Americans by this time had acquired so much confidence in their own prowess, that they vigorously attacked the detachment on the bluff, and drove them from their commanding position.

In the meantime Colonel Smith was attempting to rally his men on Fiske Hill, or at least to restore something like order among his fugitives. De Berniere, who was with the detachment acting as their guide, informs us that after other efforts had failed, the officers placed themselves in front, and threatened every man with instant death, who should leave the line. This desperate expedient partly succeeded, and many of the troops formed under a galling fire. An officer mounted on a fine, spirited horse, with a drawn sword in his hand, was seen actively engaged in rallying the fugitives, directing their movements, and attempting to restore order. A party of the Provincials having passed through the woods, concealed themselves behind a pile of rails near where the British were attempting to form, and poured into their half-formed ranks a deadly volley. The officer was unhorsed, and his affrighted animal leaping the wall, ran directly to those who had relieved him of his rider, and was taken by them. Colonel Smith was here severely wounded in the leg. This unexpected attack upon their flank, the flight of the detachment driven from the bluff, and the hot pursuit of the Provincials, destroyed the last hope of the king's troops, who fled in the utmost confusion.¹

At the foot of Fiske Hill on the easterly side, near the present residence of Mr. Dudley, a personal contest took place between Mr. James Hayward, of Acton, and a British soldier. The latter had stopped at the well to obtain a draught of water, and as the ardent Hayward, who was in front in the pursuit, approached, the Briton drew up his gun, and exclaimed, "You are a dead man!" "And so are you," returned the youthful Hayward. They both fired, and both fell—the former dead, the latter mortally wounded. He died the next day.¹

The British were again attacked with great vigor and fatal effect in a wood near the old poor-house in Lexington. Their ammunition began to fail, and the troops were so oppressed with thirst and fatigue, as to be almost unfit for service. Their flight was so rapid that their killed were left where they fell. Their wounded which they attempted to take with them, created great embarrassment, and many were left behind. The troops broke, and disregarding all order, each one looked out for himself alone. This was the condition of the British when they passed Lexington Common, on which they had shown such a haughty demeanor, and so much martial pride some eight or nine hours before. They were fatigued, dispirited, and almost exhausted; and nothing but the timely arrival of Lord Percy with a reënforcement saved the detachment from utter ruin.

The British accounts admit that the condition of Colonel Smith was perilous in the extreme, when Percy joined him. Mahon, an English historian, says of Smith's detachment, "Their utter destruction would have ensued, had not General Gage sent forward that morning another detachment under Lord Percy to support them."² All accounts agree that the day was unusually warm for that season of the year, and so hotly were the British troops pressed on their retreat, that they were well-nigh exhausted. Stedman, the British historian who attended Percy in this expedition, not only admits that "the British were driven before the Americans like sheep," but he says that when they arrived within the hollow square formed by Percy's brigade to receive them, "They were obliged to lie down upon the ground, their tongues hanging out of their mouths, like those of dogs after a chase."³

It has already been stated that Colonel Smith on his way to Lexington from Boston, became alarmed, and sent a messenger to General Gage for a reënforcement. His message was received early in the morning, and about nine o'clock Gage dispatched three regiments of infantry, and two divisions of marines with two field-pieces, under Lord Percy, to support him. Percy marched out through Roxbury to the tune of Yankee Doodle.¹ To prevent or impede his march, the selectmen of Cambridge caused the planks of the old bridge, over which he was obliged to pass, to be taken up; but instead of removing them to any distance, they were unwisely left upon the causeway on the Cambridge side of the river. Hence Percy found no difficulty in replacing them so as to enable his troops to cross. But a convoy of provisions under a sergeant's guard was detained, until it was out of the protection of the main body, and measures were taken to cut it off, which was effectually done in Menotomy. Gordon the historian, who visited the scene of action immediately after the events occurred, ascribes the leadership in this movement to

¹ As the tune of "Yankee Doodle," was employed by the British in derision, at the commencement of the Revolution, it may be desirable to learn something of its origin and character. Strictly speaking, it is not to be classed with our national airs; yet it is played so often, is so associated with our national life, and so entwined with our free institutions, that no liberty-loving American is willing to discard it. Though its faults may be obvious, they are all pardonable. Cynics may snarl, and wits may satirize it, but the people take it to their bosoms. The lovers of scientific music may denounce it, as low and vulgar, and unworthy of a refined and delicate taste; but the truly democratic reply is "the sovereign people do not so understand it." They love the gay old tune, and will not give it up. They hail it as one of our free institutions, and are ready to stand by it. And the singular fact, that it has no acknowledged words, only gives it a versatility, which adapts it to every subject, and fits it for all occasions. The poetry in which it naturally flows, can be composed by almost every rhymester, and the tune luxuriates as freely in low doggerel, as in the sublime stanzas of our greatest poets. It is equally at home in

"Jove on high Olympus sat,
And awed the world with thunder;"

Or in

"Yankee Doodle came to town, Riding on a pony;"

and it is never embarrassed in whatever dress it appears. It is also adapted to all occasions, and can with equal grace and propriety, cheer on the brave, or lampoon the laggard. In fact,

"Yankee Doodle's all the run,
With every theme uniting;
'Tis fit for marching, frolic, fun,
And just the thing for fighting."

Rev. Elias Nason, a distinguished antiquary, in a Lecture on National Music, fraught with instruction and humor, says of Yankee Doodle:

"The tune you know is a 'Daughter of the Regiment,' coming to us by adoption. Its parentage is involved in obscurity; many cities, as in the case of Homer, claiming it. Some consider it an old vintage song of France; the Spaniards think their voices have echoed to its notes in early days; the Magyars with

Rev. Dr. Payson, of Chelsea, while others ascribe it to one David Lamson, a half-breed Indian. Probably both statements are founded in fact. It is admitted that a courier came from Old Cambridge, who informed the people of West Cambridge that these supplies were on the way and urged them to intercept them; and that the people rallied, and made Lamson their leader at that place, while Payson might have been the instigator, and an active leader at some other point. A few of the citizens of West Cambridge assembled, and under the leadership of Lamson, took a position behind a bank wall of earth and stone, and when the convoy made its appearance near the meeting-house in that parish, they demanded a surrender, which being refused, they discharged

Louis Kossuth, recognize in it one of their old national dances. England entertains some shadowy tradition of it, both before and during the times of Cromwell; and the Dutchman claims it, as a low country song of tithes and Bonnyclabber, giving the original words —

‘Yanke didel, doodal, down,
Didel, dudel, lanter;
Yanke viver, vover, vown,
Buttermilk and tanther (tithes).’

“But whatever may have been the origin, this ‘Daughter of the Regiment,’ so far as I can learn, first appeared in America, on the banks of the Hudson in June, 1755, and was introduced into the American camp by one roguish Dr. Richard Shuckburg of the British Army, in this amusing way. Our Colonial companies, under Governor Shirley, encamped on the left of the British, meanly disciplined and poorly clad, and marching after music quite two centuries old, increased of course the ridicule of their well equipped and fashionable transatlantic brethren. To keep the sport along, this mischievous Dr. Shuckburg, wit, surgeon and fiddler as he was, tells the Americans that the music is too ancient, and that he will get up a tune in the modern style — and so he gave them ‘Yankee Doodle.’ The American soldiers called it ‘mighty fine.’ It struck a strong chord in the American heart, and was heard immediately, and nothing else was heard, throughout the camp and throughout the Colonies.

“This tune became our battle-march, through the Revolution; and though the British gave it to us in June, 1755, we gave it back to them with compound interest in June, 1775, at Bunker Hill; and we baptized the bantling, which they gave us in derision, in the blood of heroes, placed upon it the name of FREEDOM, rocked it in Faneuil Hall, and took it home to dwell with us forever! ‘Independence now and forever’ rings through every note of it, and one never feels half so much like ’76 itself, as when he hears it rolling. Hence the leaders of the Rebellion, after the pitiful policy of European kings, descend to the mean expedient of ostracising our national songs, in order to keep their wicked cause in countenance with the people. Yankee Doodle must be silenced before our brave old flag can be cut down; so long as its old rolisome notes roll out, the stars and stripes must and will float over us.”

a volley killing several of the horses. The affrighted drivers and the guard made their escape as best they could. The wagons were taken possession of by the citizens, and were removed to a place of safety. It is said that six of the men attached to the teams were afterwards taken prisoners.¹

Percy met the fugitives some half a mile below Lexington Common about two o'clock. One of his field pieces was placed on a bluff or mound near the present site of the town hall, which has since been levelled for the erection of the building and the repairs of the highways; and the other upon the high ground above the Munroe tavern and back of the residence of the late Dea. Nathaniel Mulliken. By this accession to the British force, and by the presence of the artillery, the Americans were, for a short period, kept in check. Shots were fired from the field-pieces in every direction where any Provincials could be discovered. Several shots were thrown into the village—one of which passed through the meeting-house, and out at the pulpit window. The ball lodged in the back part of the Common; it was preserved

¹ Smith's West Cambridge Address. After stating that six of these grenadiers surrendered to "an old woman digging dandelions," Mr. Smith says, "So to West Cambridge belongs the honor of making the first capture of provisions and stores, and also of prisoners, in the American Revolution." Granting the marvellous achievement of the old lady, which some may be disposed to question, the truth of history compels us to say, that he must have been misled in supposing that these were the first prisoners taken that day. Percy did not leave Boston till about nine o'clock that morning, and coming out over the Neck, through Roxbury and Brighton, could not have reached West Cambridge before about the middle of the day; as he did not reach the Munroe tavern in Lexington, till nearly two o'clock. His baggage was in his rear and was detained so long at the bridge, or by other misfortunes, as to be separated from the troops. It must have been twelve or one o'clock before they could have reached the centre of West Cambridge. Now, it is a well authenticated fact, that several British soldiers who fell in the rear of their main body, were captured at Lexington, soon after the British left for Concord, which must have been as early as seven or eight o'clock that morning. See depositions of Wm. Monroe, John Monroe, Ebenezer Munroe, and James Reed of Burlington, to whose house the prisoners were sent. These deponents were all actors in the scene of that morning and knew what they related.

Gordon, who wrote a History of the Revolution, whose means of information were good, gives the following account of what happened at West Cambridge. "Before Percy's baggage reached the place, a few Americans, headed by Rev. Mr. Payson of Chelsea, who till then had been extremely moderate, attacked a party of twelve soldiers carrying stores to the retreating troops, killed one and wounded several, made the whole prisoners, and gained possession of their arms and stores without any loss to themselves." Vol. i. p. 313.

for some time, when it was passed over to Harvard College, and by some neglect it was taken away, and as far as we know is lost. Another ball was ploughed up some years after, on the farm owned and occupied by the late Benjamin Fiske, Esq., on Lowell street.

There must have been many cases of extreme bravery, of wise caution, of great exertion and of cruel suffering, which occurred that day. Nor is the glory due to the men alone. The women and children performed and endured their full share of labor and of suffering. We would joyfully give some instances of rare courage or personal foresight; but the moment you go beyond the record you have such floods of traditionary lore, some probable and some improbable, that you cannot distinguish fact from fiction; and we had rather omit some incidents tolerably well authenticated, than to falsify history by inserting the extravagant accounts of some credulous persons, who to magnify the worth of a family, or the honor of the town, would swell mole hills into mountains.

We will state, however, what is true in general, that after the British had passed on to Concord, there was great apprehension for the safety of families; and many who resided on the line of the great road, left their houses in dismay, and fled to distant neighbors, or in some cases to the woods, taking with them some valuables from their houses; — and what is still more trying, in some cases mothers with their babes but a few days old, and the sick and infirm, who had been confined to their beds, were hurried away to places of safety.

During this respite the harrassed troops were enabled to rest themselves, and, by entering the houses in the immediate neighborhood and seizing whatever they could lay their hands upon, to obtain some refreshment. But after pillaging the houses, not only of what their hunger and thirst required, but of such articles of clothing, &c., as they could comfortably carry away, they wantonly destroyed the furniture and other property in and about the buildings; and to complete their works of vandalism, they set fire to several buildings which were entirely consumed. Joseph Loring who resided on the place directly opposite the present town house, had his house and barn, valued at £350, laid in ashes, and other property to the amount of £570 was wantonly destroyed. Lydia Mulliken had her house and shop, valued at £128, and other property to the amount of £303, destroyed. Joshua Bond lost his dwelling house and shop, and other property valued at £189 16s. 7*d.* William Munroe lost in household furniture, goods in retail shop, &c., destroyed, £203 11s. 9*d.* The whole amount of property in Lexington thus ruthlessly destroyed, was valued at the time at £1,761 2s. 3*d.*¹

The conduct of the king's troops, after they were met by Percy, was marked by a vandalism totally unworthy the character of a soldier. In addition to a wanton destruction of property, they practiced a system of personal insult, treachery and murder, which reflects disgrace and infamy upon the commanders and the men. A party entered the Munroe tavern, and helping themselves, or rather compelling the inmates of the house to help them to whatever they wanted, they treacherously and with ruthlessness shot down John Raymond, an infirm man residing in the family, only because he, becoming alarmed at their roughness and brutal conduct, was about leaving the house to seek a place of greater safety. The brutality here commenced, was continued throughout the remainder of their retreat.

As the events, crowded into the memorable 19th of April, were numerous as well as important, and are naturally divided by the change of commanders, which took place in Lexington, we will, like the fugitives of Smith's command, rest for a short time, and commence our next chapter with the flight of Lord Percy.

PERCY, as senior officer, assumed the command. He had now under him a force of about eighteen hundred well disciplined troops, and two pieces of artillery — a force four times as large as that of the Americans. But still he manifested no disposition to attack the rebels as he denominated them, or to drive back the undisciplined citizens, which hung upon his rear, and flanked him at every convenient point. Though he left Boston in the morning with as stout a heart as that of his namesake of Northumberland, immortalized in the ballad of "Chevy-Chase," and though his force was superior to that of his prototype, he had no disposition to "spend his dearest blood," in a contest with the rebels; but took warning by the fate of his predecessor, and giving over his hunt in woods of old Middlesex, made the best of his way to his headquarters at Boston.

After the weary fugitives of Smith's command were rested and refreshed, Percy commenced his retreat. His field-pieces, which at first kept the Provincials at a distance, soon lost their terror; and the same undisciplined force which had proved such a scourge to Smith and Pitcairn, hung upon his rear, and assailed him on his right and left from the trees, and rocks, and fences, and rendered his movement rather a flight than a retreat. Some of the Americans who had pursued the British from Concord, gave over the chase from time to time on the route; and, at Lexington, after seeing that Smith was supported by a thousand fresh troops and two pieces of artillery, and deeming a further pursuit unavailing, others returned to their homes. The larger portion, however, remained, and being joined by others, united in the pursuit.

It was nearly three o'clock when Percy commenced his retreat. Up to this time there had been no general officer who assumed the command of the Americans. General Heath who had been appointed by the Provincial Congress one of the general officers, to command the militia and the minute-men, in case they were called out, had an interview with the Committee of Safety that morning: after which he repaired to Watertown, where he collected a small body of the militia, which he ordered to move to Cambridge, to take up the planks and make a barricade of them at the Great Bridge, so as to intercept the British, if they attempted to return to Boston by way of Roxbury and the Neck. Having given this order, Heath, accompanied by Dr. Warren, passed by a cross road to the scene of action, and arrived at Lexington just before Percy took up his line of march, or rather commenced his flight. Heath collected the scattered Provincials, and put them in as good order as the nature of the case would permit, and pressed closely upon Percy's rear. For the first two miles nothing of special moment occurred; but on descending from the high lands, at the "foot of the rocks" upon the plain in West Cambridge, the fire became brisk. The topography of the country, the locality of the population in other towns, and the direction of the roads, would naturally bring together a considerable accession to the Provincial force at this point. Not only from Cambridge, but from Roxbury and Dorchester, and Brookline and Needham, and Watertown, and Dedham, on the one hand, did the militia and minute-men rally and move to West Cambridge; but they came in freely from Medford, and Charlestown, and Lynn, on the other. Thus strengthened, the Americans made a more formidable resistance here than at any point below Lexington. Here too the youthful Foster brought up his gallant company of minute-men from Danvers, which marched in advance of the Essex regiment, and arrived after a rapid march of sixteen miles in four hours, in time to meet the common enemy. The company consisted of one hundred men, and had about ten days before elected Gideon Foster, a brave and ardent young man of twenty-six years of age, as their captain.¹ Arriving at West Cambridge, and being as he says, "unused to the artifices of war," he posted a part of his men near the road to intercept the main body of the British. They took post in a walled inclosure, and made a breastwork of bundles of shingles; others placed themselves behind trees on the side of the hill west of the meeting-house, where they awaited the arrival of the king's troops. But while the main body of the British came down the road, they had thrown forward a large guard, which had flanked and came up in rear of the Danvers men, who found themselves between two fires. In this critical situation they suffered severely — having seven killed and several wounded.

This accumulation of fresh troops in front of the retreating regulars, together with the force which hung upon their rear, made their position uncomfortable, and induced them to assume a more warlike attitude than they had done before. They drew up their men temporarily in order of battle, and in a few instances had recourse to their field-pieces. But this more formal array on their part, was met by a more perfect organization on the part of the Provincials. General Heath assumed the control, and as far as practicable reduced the discordant elements to order; and the ardent and intrepid Warren by word and deed, by active effort in places of the greatest danger, rallied and inspired the men. As at Bunker Hill in June following, so here, he seemed to rise with the occasion, and take new courage as obstacles presented and as dangers pressed. He was seen everywhere, animating the men and directing their movement.¹ But the British were too anxious to gain the cover of their ships, and the Provincials were too ardent in their pursuit to admit of anything like a formal battle.

But there was brisk skirmishing; and bold attacks of small bands, and instances of individual courage occurred at different points. Here General Warren had his temple grazed by a musket-ball, which carried away a pin from his earlock.² Here Samuel Whittemore was shot and bayoneted and left for dead. Here Dr. Eliphalet Downer in a single combat with a British soldier, killed him with his bayonet.³

Up to the time of the arrival of Percy with his reënforcement, the British troops had, in the main, abstained from pillage, and had confined themselves mostly to the destruction of military stores. But we have already seen that before leaving Lexington, they commenced a system, not merely of plunder but of barbarity — wantonly destroying private property, and butchering the aged and defenceless. If this was not actually ordered, it was permitted by Percy. And this policy, commenced at Lexington, was continued through the remainder of the day. At West Cambridge their course was marked by pillage, and by a wanton destruction of private property. Nor was their barbarity confined to the destruction of property. They attacked and ruthlessly butchered the old and infirm, the weak and defenceless. Even women and children were the subjects of their brutal rage. Furniture was destroyed, houses were set on fire, women and children driven from their homes, and peaceable citizens mur-

¹ The conduct of Warren on this occasion was a subject of general commendation, and probably secured to him the appointment of major-general, which he soon afterwards received. In a poem, published in Boston, 1781, Warren's conduct at West Cambridge is thus described :

“From rank to rank the daring warrior flies,
And bids the thunder of the battle rise;
Sudden arrangements of his troops are made,
And sudden movements round the plain displayed.
Columbia's Genius in her polished shield
Gleams bright and dreadful o'er the hostile field;
Her ardent troops enraptured with the sight,
With shock resistless forec the dubious fight.
Britons astonished, tremble at the sight
And, all confused, precipitate their flight.”

dered and mangled in cold blood. Jason Russell, an invalid and non-combatant, was cruelly murdered in his own house. Jabez Wyman and Jason Winship, two aged citizens unarmed, who came to Cooper's tavern simply to inquire the news, "were most barbarously and inhumanly murdered by the British, being stabbed through in many places, their heads mauled, skulls broken, and their brains dashed out on the floors and walls of the house."¹ The house of Deacon Joseph Adams was rudely entered, and his sick wife driven from her bed, and her young children exposed to the flames of their burning dwelling. We give these facts in the language of Mrs. Adams: "Divers of the king's troops entered our house by bursting open the door, and three of the soldiers broke into the room in which I was confined to my bed, being scarcely able to walk from the bed to the fire, not having been to my chamber door from being delivered in child-bed to that time. One of the soldiers immediately opened my curtain with his bayonet fixed, pointing the same at my breast. I immediately cried out, 'For the Lord's sake, do not kill me;' he replied, 'Damn you.' One that stood near said, 'We will not hurt the woman, if she will go out of the house, but we will surely burn it.' I immediately arose, threw a blanket over me, and crawled into a corn-house near the door, with my infant in my arms, where I remained until they were gone. They immediately set the house on fire, in which I had left five children; but the fire was happily extinguished, when the house was in the utmost danger of being utterly consumed."²

Before setting fire to the house, they robbed it of all the valuables which they could carry away — not sparing the communion service of the church, which was kept by Deacon Adams. Various houses were entered, and similar outrages committed.³ These enormities tended to exasperate the Americans and make them more zealous in the pursuit. "Indignation and outraged humanity struggled on the one hand; veteran discipline and desperation on the other."⁴

⁴ Everett's Address.

The loss to the Americans and to the British within the limits of West Cambridge was considerable. One British officer was left wounded at a house near the present railroad station. The approaching night and the constant accessions to the Provincials admonished Percy to hasten his retreat.

The British took the road which winds round Prospect Hill.¹ When they entered this part of Charlestown their situation became nearly as critical as was Smith's, when he arrived at Lexington and took shelter under the protection of Percy's

¹ Colonel Aspinwall, of Brookline, has kindly furnished the following incidents which he has heard from those who were actors in the scene.

"On the 19th of April, 1775, the militia of Brookline marched towards Lexington across the fields as a crow flies. My father, Dr. William Aspinwall, and my maternal grandfather, Isaac Gardner, one of his majesty's Justices of the Peace, went with the rest. Red was in those days a common color for coats, and appearing at the rendezvous, Dr. Aspinwall had on a coat of that color, but being told that he might be shot for an enemy by his own friends, he thought it best to put on another of a different hue. When the Brookline men reached West Cambridge, the British troops were resting at Lexington, and they endeavored to get within musket range of the British pickets, at least to see them when they came. An irregular fire took place; but when the British began to move towards Boston, the militia scattered, some to a distance, and others to various covers to harass the retreating enemy.

"Mr. Gardner with a few others posted themselves behind some casks near Watson's corner. While they were intently watching the approaching column, the British flank guard came upon their rear, and shot and bayoneted the whole party. Mr. Gardner was pierced by balls and bayonets in twelve places.

"Dr. Aspinwall, in the meantime, had regained the college road, where he found a detachment of six or seven score of men under Captain Gridly, drawn up in line across the road. He suggested to the captain, that the enemy would not take the college road, but go directly towards Charlestown as the shortest course; and if they did come down the road, his company could not stop them. Finding, however, that his remonstrances were unheeded, the doctor mounted the wall just as the head of the British column crossed the northern extremity of the road, and crying out, 'There they go! Now boys, whoever wants to do any good, follow me,' pushed on with about half the detachment, and a number of his Brookline neighbors, and getting within musket shot, he continued to fire with deliberate aim as fast as he could load. In reloading, however, he found it best to shelter himself behind a tree or whatever protection he could find, against the fire of his own party in the rear. On one of the momentary halts, his neighbor, Ebenezer Davis, passing him, pointing out the body of a British soldier, cried out, 'Doctor, that man's arms are yours, for you brought him down.' But the doctor thought himself better employed in endeavoring to get another shot as quick as possible.

"After the pursuit was ended, he learned the fate of Mr. Gardner, sought out the body, and had it conveyed home to his bereaved widow, and her eight young children."

brigade. "The large number of wounded," says Frothingham, "proved a distressing obstruction to their progress, while they had but a few rounds of ammunition left. Their field-pieces had lost their terror. The main body of the Provincials hung closely on their rear; a strong force was advancing upon them from Roxbury, Dorchester and Milton; while Colonel Pickering with the Essex militia, seven hundred strong, threatened to cut off their retreat to Charlestown. Near Prospect Hill the fire again became sharp, and the British again had recourse to their field-pieces. James Miller of Charlestown, was killed here. Along its base Lord Percy, it is stated, received the hottest fire he had during his retreat. General Gage, about sunset, might have beheld his harrassed troops almost on the run, coming down the old Cambridge road to Charlestown Neck, anxious to get under the protection of the guns of the ships of war. The minutemen closely followed, but when they reached the Charlestown Common, General Heath ordered them to stop the pursuit."¹

On arriving at Charlestown the British troops offered no indignities to the inhabitants. The town had been the scene of great excitement through the day, and on the approach of the retreating army at sunset, the inhabitants were naturally filled with apprehension, and many had left the place. But the officers assured them that, if they returned to their houses, they would not be molested. The main body of Percy's troops occupied Bunker Hill, and some additional troops were sent over from Boston. Sentinels were placed about the town and the night passed off quietly.

Thus ended a day of great anxiety and peril to his majesty's troops. They had left Boston with high hopes and expectations — regarding the expedition as a sort of pleasure excursion. But the day had proved one of fatigue, of toil, and of danger. Twice during their adventure they had been in a perilous situation. Colonel Smith's command had barely escaped destruction in their march from Concord by taking refuge under the guns of Percy's brigade, whose timely arrival alone saved them.

¹ Siege of Boston. In this excellent work, Mr. Frothingham has well nigh exhausted all the material which relates to the battle of Lexington; so that we have, in most cases, after much research been compelled to rest mainly upon the facts and authorities he has already presented.

Nearly the same was true of Percy's command on arriving at Charlestown. If he had been but a trifle later he would inevitably have been cut off by the Essex regiment, and the troops from Dorchester, Milton and other places. The protection of the guns of the ships of war was as grateful to Percy, as was the protection of his own guns to the fugitives of Smith and Pitcairn.

The sufferings of the king's troops, especially those under Smith, which left Boston on the evening of the 18th, must have been very severe. To march forty miles in half that number of hours, is of itself no ordinary trial of human endurance, for soldiers laden with their arms, and such other appendages as are necessary for troops, even when reduced to light marching order. But this severe march was performed under the most embarrassing circumstances, — a portion of it in the night, across lots and marshes, and other portions of it under a galling fire in flank and rear — now pressing through a narrow gorge, and now thrown out as a flank guard to clear the woods and drive the Provincials from their hiding places behind trees, rocks and fences. Nor were the ordinary trappings of war their only incumbrance. To bear off their wounded comrades must have greatly increased their burden, and impeded their march. The heat of the day, the haste which attended some portion of the movement, the loss of sleep and rest, the great difficulty of satisfying their hunger or slaking their thirst — these, and embarrassments such as these, must have rendered their march exhausting, and made their sufferings extreme.

But to the officers in command, and to all filled with that lordly pride which characterized the haughty Britons at that period, the flight of their troops must have been peculiarly humiliating. They had boasted of their ability to put whole regiments of Yankees to flight with a handful of British troops; and of marching in triumph through the country with a single regiment. To such men the shameless flight of British regulars, well disciplined and completely armed, before one-half their number of the Provincials, without discipline or organization and poorly armed, must have been mortifying—especially to Lord Percy and the officers in immediate command; and to General Gage and his advisers, the result of this expedition must have cast "ominous conjectures o'er the whole success" of subduing the rebellious Province. And had not the British ministry been fated to be blind, they would have seen in this day's adventure, the result of a contest with such a people, determined to be free.

The actual loss to the British in this expedition was seventy-three killed, one hundred and seventy-four wounded, and twenty-six missing — the greater part of whom were taken prisoners. Of the whole loss, eighteen were commissioned officers, and two hundred and fifty non-commissioned officers and men. Lieutenant Hall, wounded at the North bridge, was taken prisoner on the retreat, and died the next day. His remains were delivered to General Gage. Lieutenant Gould, also wounded at the bridge, was subsequently taken prisoner, and was exchanged, May 28th, for Josiah Breed, of Lynn. "He had a fortune of £1,900 a year, and is said to have offered £2,000 for his ransom."¹ The prisoners taken by us were treated with great humanity, and General Gage was notified that his own surgeons, if he desired it, might attend upon the wounded.

The loss of the Americans was forty-nine killed, thirty-nine wounded, and five missing. Several lists of the killed and wounded have been published — the fullest of which, found in the 'Siege of Boston,' we here insert :

It will be seen by the above list that Lexington suffered more severely than any other town. Though her population was much less than that of Concord, or Cambridge, her loss in killed and wounded was more than one-third greater than both of those towns together. In Concord no one was killed, and in Cambridge of the six killed, three of them at least were non-combatants of West Cambridge. Next to Lexington, Danvers suffered the most severely, having seven killed and two wounded. The number of killed and wounded is no sure evidence of the bravery of these companies; but it does afford strong presumptive evidence of the position of the troops relative to the posts of danger. And as the men on that day acted on their own responsibility, or under their local commanders, the number of casualties furnishes some proof of the zeal and bravery of the men, and the efforts of the different towns on the occasion.

Some regrets were expressed at the time that the Provincials did not pursue Percy farther, and attempt to prevent his entering Charlestown. Bitter complaints were made against Colonel Pickering for his delay in bringing up the Essex regiment. It is not our province to pass sentence upon Colonel Pickering, or to intimate that he was at fault in that case. If he could have been earlier upon the ground, and could have joined the militia some miles above Charlestown, it would have been well, and might have been the means of cutting off Percy's retreat. But it is perhaps a mercy that the Essex troops did not arrive in season to attack him at the Neck. This would in all probability have brought on a general engagement, for which the Provincials were not prepared; and as Gage could easily have reënforced Percy, and the ships in Charles River could participate in such a battle, the fortune of the day would doubtless have turned against us. Besides there were fears that if we pursued the British into Charlestown, they might lay the town in ashes, and so subject our friends to the calamity of being turned houseless into the street. The wanton barbarity they had practiced in Lexington and West Cambridge that day, would naturally create an apprehension for the safety of Charlestown, if we should attempt to follow the British within the Peninsula. Such considerations probably occurred to General Heath, and he prudently gave over the pursuit.

The events of the 19th of April produced a profound sensation throughout the country. They aroused the people to arms, and gave a new impulse to the cause of freedom. This opening scene of the American Revolution foreshadowed the character and result of the great drama, and the moral it would teach mankind. It showed that the Americans were alive to a sense of their rights, and ready to rally at their country's call; and that though they were at that time without organization or discipline, and but poorly armed, they possessed every requisite for soldiers, and with a little drill and discipline would be equal to any emergency. In fact, that day established their reputation for energy and fortitude, for sagacity and courage, and should have taught their British brethren that the subjugation of such a people was impossible. Up to this period the people acted under a species of embarrassment, but now the restraint was removed. England had been the aggressor; she had shed the blood of her subjects in America; she had wantonly commenced a war for the subjugation of her colonists ; and they now felt themselves absolved from all allegiance. England had appealed to the arbitrament of war, and the colonists were ready to try the case in that stern tribunal. And the experience of the 19th of April had given them confidence in themselves. They had seen the disciplined veterans of Great Britain put to an ignominious rout by half their number of bold and determined citizens ; and relying upon the justice of their cause, and trusting in the great Disposer of events ; to whom the appeal had been made, they were ready to abide the issue.

But while that day's sun in its setting cast a halo of glory around the American cause, and there was a general rejoicing wherever the result was known, there were those who blended tears with their rejoicings, and sighed over the hapless victims of oppression — the willing sacrifices offered on freedom's altar. In Lexington alone, ten of her sturdy citizens, whose bosoms swelled with patriotic ardor in the early dawn of that memorable day, were lying cold in the embrace of death before the evening shades had lulled the world to silence and repose. They slept in peace. But who can describe the anguish which wrung the heart of the lone widow or the orphan child at the sudden bereavement of a husband or a father ! or tell the grief of the sad mother who is weeping the loss of a beloved son ! Truly there was lamentation and mourning. The tenderest ties of nature had been broken, and hearts that were made to feel, were bleeding in anguish. But in the bitterness of their anguish they had one consolation — the deceased fell at the post of duty — fell a sacrifice, a willing sacrifice, to the cause of liberty. Such reflections cheered and gladdened many a heart, which had otherwise been desponding. Such reflections are the support and comfort of many a patriotic mother and wife, whose grief would otherwise be almost insupportable. Nor is this a vain consolation. Patriotism is a Christian virtue ; and he who from a sense of duty lays down his life for his country, acts in humble imitation of Him "who died that we might live."

The anniversary of the 19th of April was appropriately noticed in Lexington for several years. In 1776, Rev. Jonas Clark delivered a patriotic sermon in commemoration of the day ; to which was appended a narrative of the battle of Lexington. The discourse was published, with the appendix, which furnishes us with one of the most valuable and reliable sketches of the events of that day. The next anniversary Rev. Samuel Cook, of Cambridge, preached the sermon. In 1778, the discourse was delivered by Rev. Jacob Cushing, of Waltham; in 1779, by Rev. Samuel Woodward, of Weston; in 1780, by Rev. Isaac Morrell, of Wilmington; in 1781, by Rev. Henry Cummings, of Billerica; in 1782, by Rev. Phillips Payson, of Chelsea; in 1783, by Rev. Zabdiel Adams, of Lunenburg. These discourses were all published, and they furnish a good specimen of the spirit of the times, and show the independent and patriotic spirit of the clergy of that day; and so by contrast rebuke that timid and craven spirit, manifested by some of the occupants of the pulpit at this day, who dare not allude to public affairs, lest some of their hearers should accuse them of preaching politics. But thanks to the clergy of New England, they have generally on great occasions, been found true to freedom. Not only in the days of the Revolution, but during the late slave-holders' Rebellion, they have spoken out freely, and thrown their influence on the side of truth and righteousness.

The events of the 19th of April, 1775, produced a deep personal feeling in Lexington. The loss of ten of her citizens carried mourning into many families. But the feeling of gratitude and veneration for the heroic dead had a tendency to assuage their grief, and produce a conviction that something should be done to perpetuate the fame of these martyrs of liberty, and to hand their names down to after generations. Such feelings led to the erection of a Monument to their memories, which was completed in 1799.

But the people of Lexington, knowing that the event to be commemorated was national in its character, and that those who fell offered themselves on the altar of their country, very properly asked the State to assume paternity of the Monument. On the petition of Joseph Simonds, the General Court in 1797, passed the following Resolve: "That there be allowed and paid out of the Public Treasury, to the Selectmen of Lexington, the sum of Two hundred dollars for the purpose of erecting in said town a Monument of stone, on which shall be engraved the names of the eight men, inhabitants of Lexington, who were slain on the morning of the 19th of April, 1775, by a party of British troops, together with such other inscription as in the judgment of said Selectmen, and the approbation of the Governor and Council, shall be calculated to preserve to posterity a record of the first effort made by the people of America for the establishment of their freedom and independence. The said Monument to be erected on the ground where the said citizens were slain, and the Monument so erected shall be deemed and taken to be a Public Monument, and entitled to the protection of the law in such cases made and provided."

The sum thus appropriated having been found insufficient, the fact was made known to the Legislature; and in 1798, "On the petition of the town of Lexington, praying for an additional grant to enable them to erect a Monument, commemorative of the battle of Lexington on the 19th of April, 1775:

"Resolved, That there be allowed and paid out of the Public Treasury, the sum of Two hundred dollars, to the Selectmen of the town of Lexington, to enable them to erect and complete the Monument aforesaid, and His Excellency, the Governor, is requested to issue his warrant for the same."

It seems that our fathers had not embraced that refined theory of political ethics, which affirms that the true spirit of patriotism is impaired by the erection of visible memorials in honor of noble deeds. Transcendentalism had not impaired their sober sense. They knew that, though men had an intellectual and moral nature, they were at the same time so constituted that most of their impressions were received through the senses; and that thousands are actually moved by visible objects, who could scarcely be reached through any other medium; and that the enlightened patriot who perceives the intellectual and the moral, will not despise the visible which strengthens his impressions, and concentrates all his powers upon the object of his contemplation.

The inscription upon the Monument was furnished by the patriot priest, and breathes that devotion to the cause of America, that love of freedom and the rights of mankind, for which he was distinguished. Nor does he, in his devotion to the cause, overlook the brave men who so nobly offered themselves on the altar of their country; nor the ruling hand of the great Disposer of events, who makes the wrath of men praise him, and the folly and madness of tyrants subserve the cause of human freedom.

THE LEXINGTON MONUMENT.

The following is the inscription upon the Monument :

Sacred to the Liberty and the Rights of Mankind!!!
 The Freedom and Independence of America,
 Sealed and defended with the Blood of her Sons.

This Monument is erected
 By the inhabitants of Lexington,
 Under the patronage and at the expence of
 The Commonwealth of Massachusetts,
 To the memory of their Fellow Citizens,
 Ensign Robert Munroe, and Messrs. Jonas Parker,
Samuel Hadley, Jonathan Harrington, junr.,
Isaac Muzzy, Caleb Harrington and John Brown,
 Of Lexington, and Asahel Porter, of Woburn,
 Who fell on this Field, the First Victims to the Sword of British Tyranny and Oppression,
 On the morning of the ever memorable
 Nineteenth of April, An. Dom. 1775.

The Die was cast!!!

The Blood of these Martyrs
 In the cause of God and their country
 Was the Cement of the Union of these States, then Colonies, and gave the spring to the Spirit, Firmness
 And Resolution of their Fellow Citizens.

They rose as one Man to revenge their Brethren's Blood, and at the Point of the Sword, to assert and Defend their native Rights.

They nobly dar'd to be free!!

The contest was long, bloody and affecting.
 Righteous Heaven approved the solemn appeal, Victory crowned their arms : and
 The Peace, Liberty, and Independence of the United States of America was their Glorious Reward.

Though this Monument was respectable in its day, and reflected honor upon the State and the town, every one must allow that it falls beneath the taste of the present age, and is not at all commensurate with the event it was designed to commemorate. The opening scene of the American Revolution is one of the most important events in the history of the world. The patriotic rising of the people, the cool and undaunted spirit of the citizens, the momentous questions involved in the issue, and the lasting consequences resulting from the Revolution inaugurated on the 19th of April, 1775, give to the day and the place an importance which can hardly be overrated.

THE CONTEMPLATED MONUMENT.

Revolution. To ensure the success of the enterprise, they have already obtained a charter as a body corporate, and have organized an Association co-extensive with the Union. They have, in the next place, procured the design of a Monument, by Mr. Hammatt Billings, a distinguished native artist, which, with great success, embodies the spirit of the day which it is intended to commemorate; not doing homage to any one individual — for no individual is entitled to the honors of that day — but symbolizing the entire class of men, who were the actors in that great scene. It is the figure of a MINUTE-MAN, who, leaving his accustomed labors, and seizing his musket, his ball-pouch, and his powder-horn, has hastened to confront the disciplined battalions of arbitrary power. Such were the men of the 19th of April, 1775; such the men who fell that day on Lexington Green; and in whose honor the Statue will stand as an abiding memorial of their sacrifice and a monument to their heroism. It is to be of bronze and of colossal size; elevated upon a lofty pedestal of granite, handsomely wrought, with niches for the insertion of appropriate relievos, emblematic of the events of the day; the whole to be of a magnitude and in a style of execution worthy of the great event, creditable to American art, and in harmony with the national feeling.

“Such, fellow citizens, is the work which it is proposed to erect in commemoration of the 19th of April, 1775, and in grateful remembrance of those who laid down their lives on the morning of the American Revolution. For an enterprise conceived in a spirit of comprehensive patriotism, and commemorative of an event in which the whole country has an equal interest, we confidently rely upon the sympathy of our brethren throughout the United States. Every citizen of the Union has an equal share in the benefits of the great system of self-government which received its solemn inauguration that day, and we would fain enlist the co-operation of every citizen, in the execution of the work. The blood shed at Lexington on the 19th of April, 1775, was the signal which, from Maine to Georgia, called the Continent to arms. May we not hope that, not merely from the old thirteen, but from the younger States descended from them, in the rising West, a voice of encouragement will reach us in this great work of commemoration! The venerable name of Lexington has been given to twenty cities and towns, in different States of the Union. Will not the same patriotic sentiment which has thus planted the memory of the honored spot in the very soil of every portion of the land, induce our fellow citizens throughout the country to unite with us, in rearing a lasting Monument to the event, which has clothed that name with its wide-spread honors, and made it a household word throughout America, for all time?”

erected by the aid of the Bunker Hill Monument Association, which contributed $1,500 for the purpose. In 1825 the corner stone was laid, with great ceremony — Hon. Edward Everett delivering the Address.

In 1827, Rev. Dr. Ripley and others published a "History of the Fight at Concord" — claiming the principal honors for that town.

In Danvers, on Monday, April 20, 1835, the corner stone was laid of a Monument in memory of their citizens who fell on the 19th of April at West Cambridge. General Gideon Foster one of the survivors of the gallant band which met the enemy with so much alacrity, and who commanded the company on that day, made an address at the site of the Monument, in which he recounted some of the events of the day, the numbers of the company, and the rapidity with which they marched to the scene of danger. General Foster at that time was eighty-six years of age. A procession was formed and moved to the church, where an address was delivered by Hon. Daniel P. King. The addresses and proceedings of the day were published.

In West Cambridge a Monument was erected in 1848 over the remains of twelve of the patriots slain on the 19th of April. The names of the three who belonged to West Cambridge were: Jason Russell, Jason Winship, and Jabez Wyman. The twelve were buried in one common grave. Their remains were disinterred and placed in a stone vault, now under the Monument, April 22, 1848. This is a simple granite obelisk, nineteen feet in height, inclosed by a neat iron fence. It was erected by the voluntary contributions of the citizens of West Cambridge.

In 1851, the citizens of Acton petitioned the Legislature for an appropriation, to aid them in their laudable effort to erect a Monument to the memory of the gallant Davis and his brave townsmen who fell in defence of freedom on the 19th of April. The petition met with a favorable response, and a Resolve was passed appropriating the sum of two thousand dollars for this object, providing the citizens of said town shall raise the sum of five hundred dollars for the same purpose. This condition was complied with, and the Monument was erected, and its completion celebrated October 29, 1851. It having been erected by the patronage and under the guidance of the State, George S.

Boutwell, then Governor of the Commonwealth, delivered the address.

As the county of Middlesex was the first to declare her readiness to resist the encroachments of Great Britain by the sword, and as she had the proud preëminence of shedding the first blood in the sacred cause of freedom, so she is justly entitled to the highest honors, and may fairly be entitled to the appellation of the MONUMENTAL COUNTY. The towering obelisk on Bunker Hill, which looks down in an awful frown upon British vandalism, and in pious veneration upon American valor; the modest shaft at West Cambridge, which bespeaks alike the barbarity of the retreating foe, and the heroic gathering of the friends of freedom, ready to do and suffer in her cause; the humble Monument at Lexington, proclaiming the undaunted firmness of the minutemen, and the cowardly spirit of the invaders of their rights; the unpretending spire at Concord, which marks the spot where British blood atoned for British rashness, and where disciplined troops fled before the untaught prowess of the gallant yeomanry; and the more lofty and imposing column at Acton, reflecting the honors of the heroic dead, whose patriotism prompted them to defend other homes than their own; these, fair Middlesex, these memorials of departed worth and self-devotion, are all upon thy soil; and they proclaim to the world the truth of thy famous Resolution, "That he can never die too soon, who lays down his life in support of the laws and liberties of his country."

There is a remarkable coincidence between the 19th of April, 1775, and the 19th of April, 1861. On the former day the patriotic citizens of Middlesex met the ruthless bands of freedom's foes, and sanctified the day and the cause of liberty by becoming the first victims in the struggle which made us an independent nation; and on the latter day the citizens of Middlesex, true to the spirit of their fathers, met a lawless horde of slavery's minions, and fell the first martyrs in that desperate struggle, which has placed our independence on the most enduring basis. In 1775, the brave sons of Middlesex were the first in the field, when they saw their liberty in danger, and in 1861, though far from the scene of action, they were the first in the field, when they saw the Capital of the nation in danger. The blood shed at Lexington in 1775, and the blood shed in Baltimore in 1861, were alike offerings in freedom's cause; and the victims in both cases should be held in lasting remembrance, by the friends of freedom throughout the world, and their names should be handed down from generation to generation; that thousands yet unborn, may be taught to lisp the names of LADD and WHITNEY, together with the names of MUNROE and others who fell on the first named day, and whose noble daring has long adorned our country's history.

Well may Middlesex be proud of her gallant and self-sacrificing sons! They have marched at the first call, and nobly have shown, 'that they were worth their breeding.' And well has the city of Lowell erected a Monument in honor of LUTHER CRAWFORD LADD and A. O. WHITNEY.

This adds another Monument to the list, and renders the designation of Monumental County more clearly appropriate.

As there has been an attempt to magnify the importance of the events which occurred at Concord, and thereby rob Lexington of its due share of the honors of that day, by asserting that the first resistance to the king's troops was made at the North bridge in Concord, and that no shots were returned by Captain Parker's men at Lexington in the morning of that day; we deem it an act of simple justice to Lexington and to the truth of history, to present the facts as they exist; and this we shall do without that spirit of crimination and recrimination which has heretofore marked this controversy.

No fact connected with the events of the 19th of April is better sustained by evidence than that of the firmness and bravery of Captain Parker's company, and that of their returning the fire on the morning of that day. In his "History of the Fight at Concord," Ripley, an authority not at all partial to the claims of Lexington, says, "The military company under Captain Parker were prompt, patriotic and courageous to admiration. That a single company should parade in an opposing attitude, directly in the face of nearly a thousand of the picked troops of Great Britain, places their courage and firmness beyond all controversy. Some may think they were not so wise in council, as fearless in danger — not so prudent in action, as zealous in patriotism." Shattuck in his "History of Concord" says, "The inhabitants of Lexington deserve great credit for the stand they took in the morning, and the part they acted during the day. That her militia were slain with arms in their hands, is an important fact, and highly honorable to their patriotism and valor." These admissions, from the chief advocates of the claims of Concord, ill accord with the insinuation implied in conceding that "some very few of the militia, being in a state of high excitement and confusion, after the British had gone on their way, did fire off their guns," &c.¹

The fact that there were twenty killed and wounded, on that day, belonging to a company of about one hundred, is conclusive evidence that they did not shun posts of danger. Not only on and near the Common in the morning, but during the day, the promptness and valor of this company were seen and acknowledged. They met the enemy in Lincoln on their return from Concord, and fearlessly joined in the hot pursuit, having three killed and one wounded in the afternoon—a greater loss than was sustained by most of the towns during the whole day. Including those killed and wounded in the morning, Lexington suffered more severely than any other town, losing more than one-sixth of her entire company, a proportion greater than that experienced on most of the sanguinary battle-fields. All contemporaneous and other authority, shows the firmness and self-devotion of this gallant company, and establishes the fact that the fire was returned on the morning of that eventful day.

John Munroe, who was a member of the company, and on the field at the time, testifies that, on parading the company in the very face of the British troops which were marching rapidly upon them, "Captain Parker gave orders for every man to stand his ground until he should order them to leave." Joseph Underwood, then of Woburn, who was present at the time, testifies "that he stood near Captain Parker, when the regulars came up, and is confident that he did not order his men to disperse, till the British troops had fired upon them the second time." He also testifies that on the rapid approach of the British, some proposed to quit the field; but Captain Parker gave orders for every man to stand his ground, and said he "would order the first man shot that offered to leave his post." Robert Douglas, then of Woburn, testifies to the same fact. John Munroe testifies that he fired once before he left the field, and once after he had retreated about ten rods; that Ebenezer Munroe fired before leaving the field, and is confident that Jonas Parker and some others did the same. Ebenezer Munroe says in his deposition, "After the first fire I received a wound in my arm, and then as I turned to run, I discharged my gun into the main body of the enemy. As I fired, my face being turned towards them, one ball cut off a part of my earlock, which was then pinned up. Another ball passed between my arm and my body, and just marked my clothes. As we retreated, one of our company, Benjamin Sampson, I believe, turned his piece and fired." William Munroe says, that he is confident that some of the company fired before they left the field, and that he saw a man firing from Buckman's house. William Tidd and Nathan Munroe testify that they fired at the British, after they left the Common. Amos Locke testifies that Ebenezer Locke took aim and fired at the Britons. Solomon Brown and another were seen to fire at the British, one from the rear of the house, and one from the front door of Buckman's; and the ball holes near the door which are still to be seen, show that the fire was recognized and returned by the British. The Rev. Mr. Gordon who was upon the ground a few days after the affair took place, for the express purpose of learning the facts in the case, that he might write a history of the transaction to send to England, says that James Brown told him that he fired, and that several others did the same. The British account, published at the time, declared that one man of the Tenth regiment was wounded, and that Major Pitcairn's horse was struck in two places. The testimony of Elijah Sanderson and Abijah Harrington, that they saw blood in the road where the British column was standing at the time of the firing, goes far to confirm the statement that the Americans returned the fire, and that their shots took effect.

Nor are any of these facts contradicted by the depositions taken a few days after the events occurred. The British account, published at the time, represented that the Americans were the aggressors, and that the king's troops acted only on the defensive. The Provincial Congress ordered these depositions to be taken for the purpose of refuting this statement, by showing that the British troops were the aggressors, and thereby acquitting Captain Parker of the charge of rashness, and of having commenced a civil war in disregard of the urgent advice of the Continental and Provincial Congresses. They would naturally, therefore, select the best evidence they could for that purpose. "Besides," as Major Phinney justly remarks, "the principle of law that a person is not bound to state any facts in evidence, which might tend to criminate himself, was as well known at that day as at the present. The struggle had just commenced, and the issue was quite doubtful. It could not have been expected of those who had taken an active part in the affair at Lexington, that they would voluntarily disclose facts which might, in all probability, as they then considered, expose them to the British halter."

Still these depositions taken under such peculiar circumstances, not only do not contradict, but go directly to confirm the fact that the fire was returned by the Americans. Elijah Sanderson, of Lexington, in his deposition, given on the 25th of April, 1775, says "The Lexington company did not fire a gun, before the regulars discharged on them." John Robbins, of Lexington, says, "We received a very heavy and close fire from them. Captain Parker's men, I believe, had not then fired a gun." Benjamin Tidd, of Lexington, and Joseph Abbott, of Lincoln, say, "The regulars fired a few guns, which we took to be pistols, and then they fired a volley or two, before any guns were fired by the Lexington company." Nathaniel Mulliken and thirty-three others, of Lexington, say, "Not a gun was fired by any person in our company on the regulars, to our knowledge, before they fired on us." Nathaniel Parkhurst and thirteen others, of Lexington, say, "The regulars fired on the company, before a gun was fired by the company on them." Timothy Smith, of Lexington, says, "I saw the regular troops fire upon the Lexington company, before the latter fired a gun." William Draper, of Colerain, who happened to be present at the time says, "The regular troops fired before any of Captain Parker's company fired."

These depositions which were taken a few days after the event occurred, and which are very carefully worded, plainly imply that the Americans did return the fire. By saying that Captain Parker's men did not fire before they were fired upon, the impression is distinctly given that they did fire after. The British official account, and the account given by General Gage in his letter to Governor Trumbull, both state that the Americans fired first, and the British periodicals of that day repeat the statement; but the evidence is conclusive that this was not the case. The evidence is also conclusive that the Americans did return the fire. Not only the depositions we have cited, but the accounts of that day which are entitled to the highest consideration, confirm the position that though the Americans did not fire first, they did return the fire of the king's troops. On the 12th of June, 1775, General Gage issued a Proclamation, offering a pardon to all the rebels, as he called them, who had taken up arms against his majesty's authority, except Samuel Adams and John Hancock, in which he recounted the events at Lexington. This Proclamation was taken up in the Provincial Congress, then in session, and referred to a committee of which Dr. Warren was chairman, and John Hancock, Col. Palmer, Mr. Seaver, and Dr. Taylor were members. This committee submitted a counter statement or Proclamation, which was adopted by the Congress on the 16th day of June. In that document we have the following clear and explicit statement. "When the British troops arrived at Lexington meeting-house, they fired upon a small number of the inhabitants, and cruelly murdered eight men. The fire was returned by some of the survivors, but their number was too inconsiderable to annoy the regular troops." Lincoln's Journals of the Provincial Congress, p. 345.

As this statement was drawn up by Dr. Warren some six weeks after the event had taken place, when there had been full and ample time to have the first impulse of feeling subside, so that all the facts could be ascertained, and all the evidence weighed coolly and dispassionately; and as the Provincial Congress, composed of delegates from all the towns in the Province, including those in the vicinity of the scene of action, adopted and endorsed this statement, we have every reason to give it the fullest credit, and to regard it as absolutely conclusive in the case. We might with safety rest the whole matter here; but as efforts have been made to show that the first resistance to the British troops was made at Concord, we will subjoin a few other authorities.

Rev. Mr. Clarke, in a Narrative of the Events of the 19th of April, appended to his anniversary sermon, delivered April 19, 1776, says, "So far from firing first upon the king's troops, upon the most careful inquiry it appears that but very few of our people fired at all; and even they did not fire till, after being fired upon by the troops, they were wounded themselves or saw others killed or wounded by them; and looking upon it as next to impossible for them to escape," &c. This statement of Mr. Clarke, who was near the scene of action, shows that the fire was returned, and at the same time that Captain Parker's men acted with prudence, and did not wantonly commence the attack. De Berniere, a British officer who was in the detachment, says in his narrative, "Pitcairn came up immediately, and cried out to the rebels to throw down their arms and disperse, which they did not do; he called out the second time, but to no purpose." This is a clear refutation of a statement which has sometimes been made, that Captain Parker's men dispersed as soon as they saw the British troops approach. That Captain Parker did, with great prudence and propriety, order his men to disperse, is readily admitted; but Joseph Underwood says in his deposition, "I stood near Captain Parker, when the regulars came up, and am confident he did not order his men to disperse, till the British troops had fired upon us the second time." Dr. John Warren in his MS. Diary, as cited by Frothingham, says under date of April 19, 1775: "Some dispersed, but a few remained in a military position." Gordon also says, "A few continued in a military position. Individuals finding they were fired upon though dispersing, had spirit enough to stop and return the fire."

Foreign historians who could have no motive to misrepresent the facts in the case, have all given their testimony to the firmness of the Americans, and to the fact that the fire was returned. Botta, in his "History of the War of Independence," says, "The English appeared, and Major Pitcairn cried in a loud voice, 'Disperse, rebels, lay down your arms and disperse.' The Provincials did not obey, upon which he sprung from the ranks, discharged his pistol, and brandishing his sword, ordered his soldiers to fire. The Provincials retreated; the English continuing to fire, the former faced about and returned it."—Vol. i. p. 181.

Graham, an English historian, in his valuable "History of North America," says of Pitcairn's command to disperse, "This order, which they refused to obey, was followed by a discharge from the British troops, whose fire, huzza, and rapid advance compelled their handful of adversaries to an instant flight. The fire continued after the dispersion, and the fugitives stopped, rallied, and returned the fire."—Vol. iv. p. 373. In Winterbotham's "View of the United States," we find the following: "Individuals finding they were fired upon though dispersing, returned the fire."—Vol. i. p. 473. "Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopædia," gives this account of the transaction: "Pitcairn rode towards them, calling out, 'Disperse, ye rebels, throw down your arms, and disperse.' The order was not immediately obeyed. Major Pitcairn advanced a little farther, fired his pistol and flourished his sword, while his men began to fire with a shout. Several Americans fell; the rest dispersed, but the firing on them was continued, and on observing this, some of the retreating Colonists returned the fire."—Vol. ciii. p. 125. Taylor says of the Americans, "This company, not instantly obeying the order to throw down their arms and disperse, were fired upon, and eight of their number killed."—Manual of History, p. 760. It is useless to multiply English authorities. They all admit that the Provincials fired upon the king's troops. Those writers who rely upon Gage's official account, declare that the Americans fired first, and those who examine the subject more thoroughly, admit that the British fired first, and that the fire was returned by the Americans.

Bancroft, our own historian, says, "Pitcairn cried out, 'Disperse, ye villains, ye rebels, disperse; lay down your arms; why don't you lay down your arms and disperse!' The main body of the countrymen stood motionless in the ranks, witnesses against aggression; too few to resist, too brave to fly. The order to fire was instantly followed, first by a few guns, which did no execution, and then by a heavy, close, and deadly discharge. Parker ordered his men to disperse. Then and not till then, did a few of them, on their own impulse, return the British fire." Speaking of Jonas Parker, he says, "A wound brought him on his knees. Having discharged his gun, he was preparing to load it again, when as sound a heart as ever throbbed for freedom, was stilled by a bayonet."

Lendrum in his "History of the American Revolution," gives this truthful account of the transaction at Lexington on the morning of the 19th; "Major Pitcairn who led the advanced corps, rode up to them, and called out, 'Disperse, you rebels, throw down your arms and disperse.' The Americans still continued in a body, on which he advanced nearer, discharged his pistol, and ordered his soldiers to fire. This was done with a huzza. A dispersion of the militia was the consequence, but the firing of the regulars was nevertheless continued. Individuals finding they were fired upon, though dispersing, returned the fire."— Revised Edition, vol. i, p. 91.

Ramsay, the justly distinguished American historian, tells us that after Pitcairn ordered the Americans to disperse, "They continued in a body, on which he advanced nearer, discharged his pistol, and ordered his soldiers to fire. Individuals finding they were fired upon, though dispersing, returned the fire."— History of the United States, vol. ii. p. 14. Hannah Adams, in her "History of New England," gives the same account. Holmes, in his "American Annals," gives us a similar account. "The firing," says he, "continued after the dispersion, and the fugitives stopped and returned the fire." In the "Encyclopædia Americana," we have this testimony: "The English commander having commanded the Americans to disperse, ordered his men to fire. Several Americans were killed and wounded, and the company dispersed, several of the militia discharging their muskets as they retreated." Lossing says, "As the patriots did not instantly obey the command to lay down their arms, Pitcairn wheeled his horse, and waving his sword, gave orders to press forward and surround the militia. Pitcairn then drew his pistol and discharged it, at the same moment giving the word Fire. A general discharge of musketry ensued. Four of the patriots were killed and the remainder dispersed. Finding themselves fired upon, while retreating, several of them halted and returned the shots, and then secured themselves behind stone walls and buildings. Three British soldiers and Pitcairn's horse were wounded."— Pictorial Field Book of the Revolution, p. 524.

But it has frequently been said that there was no "organized opposition" at Lexington. I am rather at a loss to understand what is meant by organized opposition. That Captain Parker's company was an organized company, as much as any in the field that day, admits of no doubt. His men were called together by his command, paraded under his order, and were expressly forbidden to leave the field without his order. It is abundantly proved that he ordered them to load their guns with powder and ball, and to form in warlike array in the very face of the British troops, and they refused to throw down their arms and disperse, when commanded so to do by the rash leader of the king's detachment. This of itself was organized opposition to the king's authority, and such opposition as would have been regarded as treason by the British Government at that day. The very writers who deny that there was any organized resistance at Lexington in the morning, furnish evidence that Parker's company came upon parade, armed and prepared for resistance, if it should become necessary. Sylvanus Wood testifies that as he was about to form his men on the field, "Parker says to them, 'Every man of you who is equipped follow me, and those of you who are not equipped, go into the meeting-house, and furnish yourselves from the magazine, and immediately join the company.'" Robert Douglas testifies that he formed with Captain Parker's company on the Common, near the road that leads to Bedford; "There we were commanded to load our guns. Some of the company observed, 'There were so few of us, it would be folly to stand here.' Captain Parker replied, 'The first man who offers to run shall be shot down.'" ¹ This certainly looks like organization and strict discipline.

It is readily admitted that Captain Parker when he ordered his men to load their guns, gave order "not to fire, unless they were first fired upon," ² and this was the same order which Colonel Barrett gave at the North bridge at Concord, several hours after, though it was known at that time that the British had commenced the attack at Lexington, and had killed several men. ³ This command in both cases was prudent and wise under the circumstances; and especially so in the morning, before any blood had been shed. But in both cases the command not to "fire unless they were first fired upon" implied a permission, if not a command, to fire in case they were attacked. Another thing going to show that there was organized resistance at Lexington in the morning, is the fact that several prisoners were taken in Lexington, before the British had reached Concord. There might have been no express command to return the fire at Lexington. But as the members of this company were citizens as well as soldiers, and as the whole subject had long been discussed in every circle, they all felt at perfect liberty to act on the defensive: so that the firing of the king's troops removed all restraint, and was a sort of command to every man to defend himself as best he might. It was on this principle that the Americans acted during the retreat from Concord to Charlestown; but no one will assert that there was no military resistance in the afternoon, because the Provincials fired in most cases without any express orders, and performed many deeds of noble daring on their own responsibility, without being led to the attack by a commanding officer.

Nor is it true that the first British blood was shed at Concord. The evidence is conclusive that one if not two British soldiers were wounded at Lexington in the morning. It is true that no one was killed; and even at the North Bridge at Concord, which has been claimed as the first battle-field of the Revolution, only one man was killed by the return fire, the other being killed with a hatchet after he was wounded, and left on the field by the British in their hasty retreat. It would be unsafe to infer that there could have been no resistance at Lexington in the morning, because no one was killed. Many a man goes through a succession of desperate battles unhurt. The number of killed in any encounter of arms depends in a great degree upon the doctrine of chances; and none have greater need of pleading this doctrine of chances than those who maintain that Concord was the place where the first resistance was made to the king's troops. All accounts agree that no one belonging to Concord was killed on that day, though their population and militia were double those of Lexington, and according to their own statements, not more than four or five were wounded.¹ It would be rather ungenerous to infer that no citizen of Concord occupied a post of danger during that day, because no one happened to be slain.

I will not revive the controversy which has unhappily existed between citizens of the different towns along the line traversed by the British troops on that memorable day. There was something peculiar in each case, and as the people were called upon to act at once and without premeditation, it is remarkable that they acted as wisely as they did. If war had actually existed, it would have been imprudent in Captain Parker to have drawn up his men in open field in front of a force ten times as great as his own. But at that time war had not been declared, and General Gage had assured the people at sundry times, that they should not be molested by his troops, so long as they refrained from acts of violence. Captain Parker therefore could not have anticipated the attack which was made upon his company. The state of the times fully justified him in calling his men together; and as a precautionary measure, he ordered them to load their pieces, so as to be prepared to defend themselves in case they were attacked. Being upon the field and being fired on as they were, common prudence, and even true courage required that he should immediately retire from before such a superior force. If he had led them off in order, they would have been much more exposed to the enemy's fire, than they were by fleeing in every direction. The order to disperse was, under the circumstances, the wisest and the best that could have been given. The firing of his men was spontaneous; and just what would naturally occur among men of true courage and patriotism, unused to strict discipline, and exasperated by the unprovoked slaughter of their brethren. No citizen of Lexington—no intelligent patriot could, under the circumstances, have desired a different course of action on the part of Captain Parker and the brave men under his command.

But when the British arrived at Concord, the Americans were much better prepared to receive them. They had heard of the slaughter of their countrymen in the morning, and hence the embarrassment arising from commencing the attack, was in some degree removed. Their force was also much greater, and hence they were better qualified to defend themselves. The stay of the British was much longer, and hence the people could act with more deliberation. But on the other hand, there was a new source of embarrassment. Detachments of troops had been sent to different sections of the town, and were in the act of entering houses in search of military stores, and were demanding refreshments of the families. To attack the British troops under these circumstances, might expose their homes and families to destruction. If, therefore, we find the Concord minute-men and militia less ready for an attack upon the king's troops, less zealous in the field, and more disposed to leave the ranks than the men from the other towns, who had come to Concord that morning, we can easily account for it, without distrusting their courage or impugning their patriotism. The deposition of Dr. Timothy Minott, jr., reveals a state of feeling which must have existed at Concord to a considerable extent. He says, "After I had heard of the regular troops' firing upon the Lexington men, and fearing that hostilities might be commenced at Concord, I thought it my incumbent duty to secure my family." This duty occupied him so long that he arrived at the North bridge only in season to be spectator of the firing there. Nothing is more natural, under the circumstances, than for the father and the husband to over-ride the soldier, and make the wife and the children the first object of his care. This, undoubtedly, was the case in some degree at Concord on the morning of the 19th of April; and if some may think that it detracts from the merits of the soldier, others with reasons satisfactory to themselves, may think that it adds to the worth of the man.

The bravery and self-devotion of Captain Davis and his gallant Acton company, warmly commend themselves to every true and noble heart. But at the same time it is but just to say, that his command was better situated, than were the companies of Concord, for bold and efficient action in the field. The wives and children of the former were remote from the scene of action, and could be best defended by meeting and repulsing the enemy there and then. But an attack and even a repulse of the enemy at the North bridge, might, to the citizens of Concord, be but the prelude to the firing of their dwellings, and the destruction of their families. The honors of the 19th of April are too great to be engrossed by any one individual, or to be monopolized by a single town. As the cause was one, so are the honors to be distributed among all who acted together that day. When Concord talks of her old North bridge, she should remember that the spot is consecrated by the blood of Davis and Hosmer shed under the guidance of Barrett and Buttrick; and when Arlington points to the field where patriots struggled and where heroes fell, she must remember that the victims of Danvers were offered upon her altar. And if Lexington in the twilight of the morning was doomed to "tread the wine-press alone," it was only because the attack was so sudden that others could not arrive to share the glories with her. Concord, and Lincoln, and Lexington, and Cambridge, and Charlestown — towns through which the British passed that day—must be content to divide their honors with Acton, and Stow, and Sudbury, and Framingham, and Billerica, and Chelmsford, and Bedford, and Reading, and Woburn, and Medford, and Watertown, and Dedham, and Roxbury, and Needham, and Brookline, and Newton, and Beverly, and Salem, and Danvers, and Lynn, and even with other towns, whose gallant minute-men promptly rushed toward the scene of action, and were prevented only by distance from sharing in the dangers of the day.

The events of the 19th of April are far too momentous to be confined to a township, limited to a colony, or circumscribed by a continent. They are an important link in a vast chain of causes whose effects have been and are still being felt in the remotest part of the civilized world. They grew out of a system of oppression, and were but the natural upheaving of the human breast in its sighs for freedom. They were the beginning of a revolution founded in human nature; and the work they commenced must go on. Kings may denounce, and courts may condemn it; but the cause itself must prosper. Liberty will rise and reign when thrones shall have crumbled to dust.

CHAPTER VIII.

EFFECTS OF THE BATTLE OF LEXINGTON.

The Idea of Independence of Slow Growth — Was entertained by the Leading Statesmen in 1774 — The Movement at Lexington and Concord in Obedience to the Policy of the Committee of Safety — Its Effect upon the Colonies — Intelligence sent to Great Britain — Its Effects there.

WE have seen the gradual developments of the oppressive policy of Great Britain which led to the American Revolution, and the measures adopted by the Colonies to resist those usurpations. We recur to this subject only for the purpose of inquiring into the intent of the Colonies in their opposition, and whether they actually aimed at independence. Every proficient in the philosophy of the human mind, and every attentive reader of history will readily admit, that a fixed and permanent public opinion is of slow growth; and when this sentiment is directly repugnant to the sentiment which has before prevailed, it frequently has its origin in some startling event, or crying evil. And how great soever the evil may be, the first effort generally is, not to eradicate but to reform it, regarding it only as an abuse of something intrinsically valuable. But to oppose the evil with success, to awaken the public to its enormity, the strongest ground is taken in opposition; and principles are laid down, which when fully carried out, will not only reform the abuse, but eradicate the thing abused.

This principle may be seen in the controversy between the Colonies and the mother country. Our patriot fathers had in the first instance no idea of a separation from the British empire. They had established governments here, which were comparatively free, and while the royal governors and officers appointed by the crown, conformed substantially to their wishes, the Colonists were perfectly content to remain subject to Great Britain. Absolute independence was not at first aspired at or hardly dreamed of. But when Great Britain boldly asserted the right of Parliament to legislate for the Colonies "in all cases whatsoever," and this right was firmly denied by the Colonists, an issue was made, which if carried to a final decision, must end in the utter subjugation, or the absolute independence of the Colonies. This must have been seen by the intelligent men on both sides; but mutually hoping and believing that the other would yield something, they both flattered themselves that the controversy would be settled, without being carried to extremes.

The absolute independence of the Colonies was undoubtedly an idea of slow growth, especially in some minds. The proverbial loyalty of Britons, their attachment to British institutions, contributed to drive from their minds the thought of an entire separation from the parent country, and led them to appeal to the justice and humanity of Great Britain. But when their repeated petitions were answered only by repeated injuries, they began to balance in their minds the painful and uncertain struggle of a revolution, and the disgraceful submission to unconstitutional and arbitrary exactions. That men of different temperaments should come to different conclusions was to be expected; and that those who saw that resistance must come, should differ as to the time and manner of making the demonstration, is much more natural.

But in this they were all agreed — that persuasion and supplication should first be tried, and that resistance to the laws should not be resorted to till all milder means had failed. Before the breaking out of hostilities, the intelligent men of the country must have seen to what things were tending, and that a collision of arms was inevitable; and that a war once begun must end in our independence or subjugation.

The master minds in Massachusetts, from their intimate acquaintance with public affairs, must have perceived, after the action of Parliament, in May, 1774, that a reconciliation was out of the question. The Regulating Act, as it was generally denominated, and the "Act for the more impartial administration of justice in the Province," which virtually repealed the Charter of Massachusetts, and established a despotism; connected as they were with the shutting up of the Port of Boston, and taking military possession of the town, presented the alternative of submitting to unlawful and oppressive measures, or defending their rights at the point of the bayonet. The stern principles of the Puritans, developed, tried, and purified as they had been, by ten years' controversy with the British Ministry, in defence of what they held most dear, led them at once to decide this question. Unconditional submission was not to be tolerated, and resistance became a mere question of manner and of time.

Samuel Adams and Joseph Hawley, the controlling minds in Eastern and Western Massachusetts, foresaw the result, and employed all their powers to prepare the people for the crisis. Their zeal, however, was strictly according to knowledge. Being sensible that Massachusetts could not contend single-handed and alone with the gigantic power of Great Britain, their great object was to enlist the other Colonies in the cause. Knowing that any hasty or premature step on the part of this Colony might repel their distant brethren who felt less keenly the iron heel of oppression, they counselled moderation and forbearance; but at the same time they labored to the utmost to put the Colony in the best state of defence, that it might be prepared for the crisis which they foresaw was approaching.

Some persons appear to have regarded the events of April 19, 1775, as merely accidental, producing an open rupture, which a little prudence might have avoided; and to suppose that up to that time, the controversy might have been settled, as our fathers had not aspired at independence. Our own distinguished historian seems to be of this opinion. Speaking of the people as late as May, 1774, he says, "They were rushing towards revolution, and they knew it not."¹ Again speaking of the Suffolk Convention of that day, he says, "Thus far, they had not discovered that independence was really the desire of their own hearts."² Such ignorance of the real state of affairs at that period, might perhaps be ascribed to some men in the community, but could not with any propriety be attributed to Samuel Adams and Dr. Warren—the very men who got up and guided that Convention. As evidence that the people of the Colonies did not aspire at independence as late as October, 1774, our historian reverts to the fact that the Continental Congress in their Address to the king, say, "We ask but for peace, liberty and safety. Your royal authority over us, and our connection with Great Britain, we shall always support and maintain." He then adds, "But the best evidence of their sincerity is found in the measure (non-importation) which they recommended. Had independence been their object, they would have strained every nerve to increase their exports, and fill the country in return with manufactures and munitions which they required."¹

We admit that Congress in true diplomatic style, speak of their attachment to the person of the king, and devotion to the parent country; but this was in an address in which they recount all their grievances, which they declare to be "too severe to be any longer tolerable," and which they entreat the crown to remove. Nor can we see any evidence that they did not desire independence in their recommendation of non-intercourse, because a free importation such as is suggested, would subject them to those very impost duties, which were the primary cause of their dissatisfaction. Nor was this address to the king adopted until after they had resolved "That this Congress approve of the opposition of the inhabitants of Massachusetts-Bay to the execution of the late Acts of Parliament; and if the same shall be attempted to be carried into execution by force, in such a case, all America ought to support them in their opposition."

The same Congress in their Declaration of Rights, laid down principles which, if adhered to, must of necessity bring them into collision with Great Britain, unless she retraced her steps by repealing her obnoxious Acts, and withdrawing her troops from the Colonies. Resolutions passed unanimously declared in substance that taxes could not be imposed upon them, or troops quartered among them without their consent; that they held their rights by the English Constitution and their Charters, and that America cannot submit to an invasion of her rights.

The leading men, especially in Massachusetts, where the development of tyranny was the most perfect, were fully sensible during the year 1774, that an open rupture would ensue; though, from prudential considerations, they did not make this public avowal. They knew that the first collision in arms would be the signal for a war, which must eventuate in the absolute independence, or the utter subjugation of the Colonies. Knowing that Massachusetts was marked as the first victim, and that this Colony, unaided and alone, could not hope for success in a contest with one of the mightiest powers of the earth, their first effort was to enlist the other Colonies in the cause. Consequently they bore and forbore, knowing that the other Colonies which had in a less degree felt the weight of British oppression, were not equally prepared with themselves to make an appeal to the God of battles. Their great object was to impress their brethren in the other Colonies with the important fact, that Massachusetts was suffering in the cause of American freedom, and that the blow aimed at the patriotic town of Boston, was, in truth, aimed at Massachusetts, and through her at the other Colonies; and they assured their brethren elsewhere, that this Colony would act with prudence and moderation, so that the other Colonies which had the same interest at stake with themselves, should not be involved in any new difficulties through their rashness.

This policy is manifest from the correspondence of that day. When the inhabitants of Boston were reduced to the greatest distress by the operation of the Boston Port Bill, and the people at a distance with a liberal hand contributed to their necessities, the voice which went out from Boston in grateful acknowledgments, breathed this wise, cautious and patriotic spirit: 'We are greatly distressed; but we rejoice that we are suffering in a common cause; and while we are thus sustained by your sympathy and munificence, we are resolved to stand firm in defence of those rights which are the common inheritance of all the American Colonies.' But in the midst of these assurances, the idea is frequently presented, that war must ultimately ensue, unless their grievances were redressed.

Writing to the Committee of Preston, Conn., under date of August 24, 1774, Dr. Warren says, "If non-intercourse with Great Britain should fail, and we should be obliged to seek redress in the way you hint (by arms), we flatter ourselves that we shall act like men, and merit the approbation of all America." On the 27th, to the Committee of Norwich, he says, "If this should fail, we must have recourse to the last resort."

Samuel Adams, whose foresight enabled him to perceive the inevitable issue of the contest, with characteristic caution, says, in writing to the Committee of Westmoreland, Va., in March, 1775: "The people of Boston bear repeated insults of the grossest kind, not from want of the feelings of just resentment, or spirit enough to make ample returns, but from principles of sound policy and reason. Put your enemy in the wrong, and keep him so, is a wise maxim in politics as well as in war. They had rather forego the gratification of revenging affronts and indignities, than prejudice that all-important cause which they have so much at heart, by precipitating a crisis. When they are pushed by clear necessity for the defence of their liberties to the trial of arms, I trust in God, they will convince their friends and their enemies of their military skill and valor. . . . They are daily preparing for it."

Such intimations, cautiously expressed, show in the clearest manner the expectations of those patriots; and when they were writing more privately to particular friends, they expressed their convictions more fully. Dr. Warren, in a letter to Josiah Quincy, Jr., Esq., then in London, dated Nov. 21, 1774, employs this language: "It is the united voice of America to preserve their freedom or lose their lives in defence of it. Their resolutions are not the effects of inconsiderate rashness, but the sound result of sober inquiry and deliberation. I am convinced that the true spirit of liberty was never so universally diffused through all ranks and orders of people in any country on the face of the earth, as it now is through all North America." In a letter to Arthur Lee, then in London, dated Feb. 20, 1775, he says: "It is truly astonishing that the administration should have a doubt of the resolution of the Americans to make the last appeal, rather than submit to wear the yoke prepared for their necks." Again under date of April 3, 1775, he says: "America must and will be free. The contest may be severe, the end will be glorious. But we mean not to make that appeal, until we can be justified in doing it in the sight of God and man."

Nor was Warren alone in entertaining these views. Samuel Adams had long seen the result of this misunderstanding, and in writing to Arthur Lee, our agent at London, on the 14th of February, 1775, he says: "Our safety depends upon our being in readiness for the extreme event. Of this the people here are thoroughly sensible; and from the preparations they are making, I trust in God that they will defend their liberties with dignity." This ardent patriot was so devoted to liberty, that he said in the fullness of his heart, "I would advise persisting in our struggle for liberty, though it were revealed from heaven, that nine hundred and ninety-nine were to perish, and only one of a thousand survive and retain his liberty. One such freeman must possess more virtue, and enjoy more happiness than a thousand slaves; and let him propagate his like and transmit to them what he had so nobly preserved." With such views and feelings, it is no wonder that Samuel Adams could exclaim on the morning of the 19th of April, 1775, on hearing the discharge of British muskets, "What a glorious morning is this for America!"

Joseph Hawley, of Northampton, the leading patriot in the Western part of the State, in the summer of 1774, wrote — "We must fight; we must fight, if we cannot otherwise rid ourselves of British taxation. Fight we must finally, unless Britain retreats." When Patrick Henry read the prophetic words of Hawley, "WE MUST FIGHT," calling God to witness, he exclaimed, "I am of that man's mind."

Public bodies of men as well as individuals gave unmistakable evidence that they foresaw the result. The Middlesex Convention, as we have already seen, as early as August, 1774, declared in sentiment that God and the world would justify resistance, and he could not die too soon who laid down his life for his country. The first Provincial Congress of Massachusetts did more than express an opinion that public resistance would be made to the king's troops. They took the most decisive measures in their power to be prepared for that event. They provided arms and military stores, recommended the organizing and training of the militia — measures which looked directly to a resistance of the Acts of Parliament, and a conflict with the king's troops. And to give force and efficiency to these measures, they created a Committee of Safety, and clothed them with full Executive power, giving them express authority to call out the militia and minute-men for the defence of life, liberty and property, whenever the case should require it, and elected general officers to command the troops that might be called out.

Such were the opinions expressed, the resolutions adopted, and the measures taken by the people of this Province, long before the 19th of April, 1775. It was not the battle of Lexington that gave rise to the Revolution. The real causes were deeper and more remote than the marching of the king's troops from Boston. Nor was the breaking out of the Revolution in any proper sense adventitious. It was accidental that it occurred on that particular day, and at that particular place, and under those particular circumstances. But the oppressive Acts of Parliament, and the firm and determined spirit of resistance on the part of the colonists, were sure to lead to a collision; and if it had not occurred at that time and place, it would at some other. The same spirit which actuated the people of Lexington, filled the whole community; and all who took arms that day only obeyed the public voice, and carried into effect what had been resolved upon by the Provincial Congress, and by almost every town in the Province. When Captain Parker at Lexington, and Major Buttrick at Concord, ordered their men "to load their pieces, but not to fire, unless they were fired upon," they obeyed the orders of the Committee of Safety, just as truly as though that Committee had been upon the field, and given the command in person. Though the men who appeared in arms on that day acted in one sense on their own responsibility, they nevertheless acted in obedience to a firmly fixed public sentiment, which surrounded every man like the atmosphere, and which exerted a controlling influence in every part of the Province. But those who were the first actors in the opening scene of that eventful drama, in all probability had influences more direct, and orders more immediate than the controlling sentiment above alluded to. Hancock, the Chairman of the Committee of Safety, had been stopping some days in Lexington. The Provincial Congress of which he was President, which had been sitting at Concord, adjourned on the 15th; the Committee of Safety, were in session at Concord on the 17th, and he returned to Lexington, as was his custom, the same evening, where he was in consultation with that ardent patriot Rev. Jonas Clarke, and with Samuel Adams, who was also stopping at Mr. Clarke's house. They were there during the 18th; and in consequence of the fact that several British officers had passed up the road towards Concord late in the afternoon, apprehension was felt for the safety of Hancock and Adams, whose arrest had been publicly rumored. Fearing that these officers intended to return late at night, and seize Hancock and Adams, Captain Parker detailed a portion of his company to guard Mr. Clarke's house, where they were lodging. The movement of the British troops from Boston was communicated to Hancock and Adams by messengers sent by Dr. Warren, who arrived at Lexington at twelve o'clock at night; whereupon Captain Parker called his company together. About two o'clock they met and the roll was called on the Common, within hailing distance of Hancock's lodgings.

Under these circumstances it is morally certain that Captain Parker came into direct contact with Hancock, and unquestionably took his advice or orders, as to the course he should pursue. This is the more obvious from the well established fact that at first Hancock resolved to join the company, and it was not until after much persuasion from Mr. Adams that he desisted. In matters of detail the gallant Parker acted on his own responsibility, but on the subject of general policy, he must have known the wishes, designs, and as it were the orders of the Committee of Safety, which was the only commander-in-chief then recognized by the military.

The same is undoubtedly true of the operations at Concord. Colonel Barrett was a member of the Provincial Congress which had been in session at Concord as late as the 15th, and must have known perfectly the policy of that body: and the Committee of Safety on the 17th, voted that Colonel Barrett be desired to raise a company of artillery. The communication of this vote, and the precautions taken to secure the military stores intrusted to Colonel Barrett, would bring him into close connection with the Committee of Safety; and hence his course would be guided by the policy they had adopted. The acts of that day, which have often been regarded as the result of mere accident, were in fact the carrying out of a policy dictated and enjoined by the only commander-in-chief known and recognized by the people.

The history of the world does not present a more grand and imposing spectacle than that of the rising of the people on the 19th of April, 1775. It was not a restless population, gathered by blind impulse, without a definite motive or design; not a hired soldiery, organized by some bold and daring leader, to avenge some personal wrong, or to embark in some mad scheme of conquest, in which the perils they bore would be repaid by plunder; nor was it a people goaded to desperation, or reduced to the last stages of despair by the iron heel of despotism, making their last mighty effort to throw off the yoke they could no longer endure; but it was a cool, voluntary rising of a sedate and orderly, an intelligent and conscientious people who knew their rights and "knowing, dared maintain them" — a people bred to the right of private judgment, and the equality of men; and who, seeing in their religious creed the great principles of civil, as well as religious liberty, were determined to defend them whenever invaded, or whoever might be the aggressor. It was the spontaneous rising of a people who felt that they were set for the defence of American liberty, and were ready to offer their bodies a living sacrifice in the cause. They realized that they were acting, not for themselves alone, but for those who should come after them, and that they should be false to their great mission, if they should tamely surrender rights which God in his providence held out to them and their posterity. They knew that the promptings of their own hearts were in perfect accordance with the sentiments of the Provincial Congress, and that the only acknowledged Executive would approve their acts.

They had no thirst for military glory; nor did they rally under any invincible chieftain whose presence inspired courage, and whose previous success gave assurance of victory. Neither could they rely on that perfection of discipline, and those improvements in the implements of war which insure success on the ensanguined field. In all these respects, they knew that the advantage was greatly on the side of the oppressor. But their faith in the righteousness of their cause nerved their arms, and their trust in the Lord of hosts gave them confidence. They felt that they had a solemn duty to perform, and they must do it — a sacred trust to keep, and they must be faithful, whatever might be the immediate consequences.

The tidings of the battle of Lexington spread with great rapidity, and brought upon the ground troops from the distance of twenty miles. Others much more remote left their homes on the receipt of the news and marched towards the scene of action. A considerable force was assembled at Cambridge, Charlestown, and other places in the immediate vicinity of Boston, on the evening of that day. General Heath, who joined the Americans at Lexington, took command of the troops, and continued the superior officer till the afternoon of the 20th, when he was superseded by General Ward. "At the first council of war on the 20th," says Frothingham, "there were present Generals Ward, Heath and Thomas; Colonels Bridge, Frye, James Prescott, William Prescott, Bullard and Barrett; and Lieutenant-Colonels Spaulding, Nixon, Whitney, Mansfield and Wheelock." They were soon joined by General Putnam, and Colonel Stark.

Expresses were sent forth in every direction, and considering the state of the roads at that day, it is remarkable that intelligence could have reached distant places in so short a time; especially as there could have been no arrangement beforehand. The intelligence reached Newburyport at 12, M., on the 19th, and Portsmouth, N. H., early on the morning of the 20th. The tidings of Lexington Battle reached Worcester before noon on the 19th; Newport, R. I., on the 20th; Fairfield, Conn., at 8 o'clock, A. M., on the 22d; New York at 12, M., on the 23d; Philadelphia at 12, M., on the 26th; Baltimore at 10, A. M., on the 27th; Frederick, Va., at 4, P. M., on the 30th; Beaufort, N. C., on the 6th of May; Wilmington on the 8th, and Savannah, Ga., on the 10th.

The cautious and prudent policy pursued by the patriots of Massachusetts, had in a good degree enlisted the sympathy of the other Colonies; so that on hearing of the outrage at Lexington, they were prepared at once to embark in her cause. New Hampshire, Connecticut and Rhode Island, already trained in the school of Adams and Hancock, rushed to arms on hearing of the attack of the king's troops, and under their respective commanders appeared in the vicinity of Boston, ready to encounter the common enemy, if he attempted another excursion into the country. Other and more distant Colonies which had hesitated before, responded to the calls of patriotism. The blood spilt at Lexington and Concord, like that of the righteous Abel, cried from the ground for redress.

New York, which had been held back by her Assembly, which had as late as February, 1775, refused to elect delegates to the General Congress, was aroused by the slaughter of her countrymen; and the people, rising superior to the Royal Assembly, pledged themselves to the cause of freedom. New Jersey, whose position had been rather doubtful, was now willing to risk life and fortune in support of Massachusetts, and to abide the decision of the Continental Congress. Pennsylvania, whose distracted councils had been a subject of great anxiety to the friends of liberty throughout the Colonies, caught the fire, and though a portion of her people clung to the delusive hope of a reconciliation with Great Britain, the voice of her patriots was distinct for resistance, and thousands agreed "to associate together for the purpose of defending with arms their lives, property and liberty." Little Delaware was not behind the larger Colonies in her devotion to freedom. Maryland felt the impulse, but leaned a little to the side of reconciliation in the first instance.

The cry from Lexington met a hearty response from the Old Dominion; and the patriotic ardor of Patrick Henry, and the cool dispassion of James Madison, regarded the blow struck in Massachusetts, as a hostile attack upon every Colony, and a sufficient cause for reprisals. To these sentiments the people of Virginia gave their cordial assent.

Nor did the Colonies more remote feel indifferent to the events which had occurred. On the very night after receiving the news, the patriots of Charleston, South Carolina, took possession of the royal arsenal, and distributed twelve hundred stands of arms that the citizens might be in a condition to defend their rights. The Provincial Congress of that gallant State, adopted measures preparatory to the contest, and declared themselves "ready to sacrifice their lives and fortunes to secure their freedom and safety." Such was the zeal and enthusiasm of the people of that Colony that General Gage declared, "that the people of Charleston were as mad as they are here in Boston."

The infant Colony of Georgia was not behind her sister Colonies. On the receipt of the intelligence of the attack of the king's troops, the gallant people of Savannah broke open the royal magazine and appropriated to their own use over five hundred pounds of powder. And though the people of that Colony were few in numbers, and were surrounded by powerful tribes of hostile savages, they sent supplies to Boston in token of their approbation of their gallantry and patriotism in standing firm in defence of the rights of the Colonies.

Thus did the battle of Lexington awaken the sympathy of the Colonists, and in a good degree unite them in one common cause. Thousands who had been fondly brooding over the delusive idea of a reconciliation, now saw that entreaty was fruitless, and that they must submit unconditionally or vindicate their rights by the sword. And though the timid feared and the prudent hesitated; though the men in power clung to the places which gave them their living, and those who aspired at place were unwilling to impair their prospects of preferment, the leading patriots of the country, and the great mass of the people, were ready for the last appeal, and saw safety only in a triumph in the field.

Not only did the cities and the large towns manifest their indignation at the barbarity of the British troops, but the people in the rural districts where the love of liberty is always strong, vied with the more populous places, in showing their readiness to peril all in freedom's sacred cause. Wherever the fact of open resistance was known, the people showed that they were ready to flock to the standard of freedom, and prosper or perish in her cause. Not only in the log-huts beyond the mountains, but farther in the wilderness, where no huts had been erected, did the echoes of freedom resound. The hardy hunters of Kentucky, wandering in the beautiful valley of the Elkhorn, on the reception of the news, celebrated the victory, and in honor of the birthplace of American liberty, gave to the place of their encampment the name of LEXINGTON — a name which it bears to the present day.

Nor did the thrilling appeal die on their shores. The sound crossed the Atlantic; and while the deluded Ministry were dreaming over the subjugation of the rebellious Province of Massachusetts Bay, they were startled from their slumbers by intelligence that His Majesty's veteran troops in America had been baffled, routed, and driven like sheep by the undisciplined rebels, whom they had been taught to regard as braggarts, and despise as cowards.

The patriots of Massachusetts deemed it important to obtain a reliable account of the events of the 19th of April; accordingly on the 22d of April, the Provincial Congress, being in session at Watertown, "Ordered that Mr. Gerry, Colonel Cushing, Colonel Barrett, Captain Stone, Dr. Taylor, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Freeman, Mr. Watson, and Esquire Dix, be a Committee to take depositions in perpetuam, from which a full account of the transactions of the troops, under General Gage, in their route to and from Concord, &c., on Wednesday last, may be collected, to be sent to England by the first ship from Salem." On the day following, Dr. Church, Mr. Gerry and Mr. Cushing, were appointed a Committee "to draw up a narrative of the Massacre." The Committee on depositions held sessions the 23d and 25th of April, at Concord and Lexington, and took a large number of affidavits. On the day following, the President, Dr. Taylor, Mr. Freeman, Mr. H. Gardner and Colonel Stone, were appointed to prepare a letter to our agent in London, Dr. Franklin. The Committee reported the same day the draught of a letter, urging our agent in England to cause the depositions and the Address to the inhabitants of Great Britain, giving an account of the events of the 19th of April, "to be immediately printed and dispersed through every town in England, and especially to be communicated to the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Council of the City of London, that they may take such order thereon as they may think proper."

In the Address to the inhabitants of Great Britain, after giving a brief account of the march of the king's troops, they say :

"To give a particular account of the ravages of the troops, as they retreated from Concord to Charlestown, would be very difficult, if not impracticable. Let it suffice to say, that a great number of houses on the road were plundered and rendered unfit for use; several were burnt; women, in childbed, were driven by the soldiery, naked into the streets; old men peaceably in their houses, were shot dead, and such scenes exhibited as would disgrace the annals of the uncivilized nations.

"These, brethren, are the marks of Ministerial vengeance against this Colony, for refusing, with her sister Colonies, submission to slavery; but they have not detached us from our royal sovereign. We profess to be his loyal and dutiful subjects, and so hardly dealt with as we have been, are still ready with our lives and fortunes to defend his person, family, crown and dignity.¹ Nevertheless to the persecution and tyranny of his cruel

¹ It may appear singular that they should express such devotion to the crown, while they express their abhorrence of slavery, and determination to be free. This is explained partly by the popular language of monarchy, and partly by

Ministry, we will not tamely submit. Appealing to Heaven for the justice of our cause, we determine to die or be free."

The Committee of Safety was directed to forward the papers to England at the earliest practicable moment. - They agreed with the Hon. Richard Derby, of Salem, to fit out a vessel as a packet. The order to Captain Derby was as follows :

"In the Committee of Safety, April 27, 1775. Resolved, That Captain Derby be directed, and he hereby is directed, to make for Dublin or any other good port in Ireland, and from thence to cross to Scotland or England, and hasten to London. This direction is given, that so he may escape all enemies that may be in the chops of the channel, to stop the communication of the Provincial intelligence to the agent. He will, forthwith, deliver his papers to the agent on reaching London.

"J. WARREN, Chairman.

"P. S. — You are to keep this order a profound secret from every person on earth."

Captain Derby with these documents, and with copies of the Salem Gazette, which contained an account of the battle, arrived in London on the 29th of May. On the day following, the Address was printed and circulated, giving the first intelligence of the battle of Lexington to the people of Great Britain. The Ministry were astounded. They had fondly anticipated that the recent measures of Parliament, and the increase of the king's troops in Boston, would bring the rebels to submission ; that the

the general views they had always maintained. The popular language of monarchy is, that the king can do no wrong. If a wrong is done, it is charged upon the Ministry ; and the king by changing his ministers, removed the evil. Our fathers from courtsey and from policy, in addressing the inhabitants of Great Britain, would adopt the respectful language of the empire.

They would also be inclined to employ this courtly language, from the views they had from the first maintained. Their theory had always been, that they held their charter by a grant from the crown ; and that to the crown alone they owed allegiance. From the very first, they denied the power of Parliament. Their argument was, that Parliament has power over, or rather can legislate for its constituents ; but that the American Colonies, not being represented in Parliament, were never subject to its laws. So that in their Address to the people of England, they but carried out the previous doctrine, that they owed allegiance to the crown, while they denied the power of Parliament, and detested the oppression of the Ministry. This view of the subject casts light upon the Declaration of Independence, which is a renunciation of allegiance, not to Parliament, which they never admitted, but to the king whose authority they had allowed.

first display of the royal regiments in arms would frighten the "rude rabble" in Massachusetts, and put to flight all the undisciplined stragglers they could bring into the field. What then must have been their astonishment, what their mortification, on hearing that the veteran troops of England had been put to an inglorious flight, by the sudden rising of the country people without leaders; and that the army in which they had reposed so much confidence, and which was to awe America into submission, had been driven to their entrenchments, and were closely besieged in the limited peninsula of Boston! The effect produced by the intelligence is thus described in a letter from London, dated June 1, 1775: "This great city was agitated to its centre. The friends of America rejoiced at the noble victory of the Bostonians, and its enemies were abashed at their courage. The news flew rapidly, and soon caught the ear of the unwise and deluded king. The Administration were alarmed at the unexpected success of the Provincials, and were at a loss what lies to fabricate, which would destroy the force of the gratifications which accompanied the intelligence. Runners were sent to every part of the city, who were authorized to deny the authenticity of the facts; and so distressed was the Government that they officially requested a suspension of belief, until dispatches were received from General Gage."

Having no intelligence from General Gage, the Ministry issued the following card:

"Secretary of State's Office, Whitehall, May 30, 1775.

"A report having been spread, and an account having been printed and published of a skirmish between some of the people in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, and a detachment of His Majesty's troops, it is proper to inform the public that no advices have as yet been received in the American department of any such event.

"There is reason to believe that there are dispatches from General Gage on board the Sukey, Captain Brown, which, though she sailed four days before the vessel that brought the printed account, is not yet arrived."

On the appearance of this card Arthur Lee immediately issued the following note:

"To the Public.

"As a doubt of the authenticity of the account from Salem, touching an engagement between the king's troops and the Provincials in Massachusetts

Bay, may arise from a paragraph in the Gazette of this evening, I desire to inform all those who wish to see the original affidavits which confirm that account, that they are deposited at the Mansion House with the Right Honorable Lord Mayor for their inspection.

“ARTHUR LEE,

“Agent for the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay.”

General Gage's dispatches arrived in London on the 10th of June, which, instead of allaying rather increased the excitement. For though his account differed from the American account as to the commencement of hostilities, in all other respects the two accounts substantially agreed. He virtually admitted that the expedition was a failure, and that the flower of his army, consisting of nearly two thousand men, had been harrassed, and actually driven fifteen miles with a loss of nearly three hundred in killed, wounded, and missing.

The account of the Ministry covering General Gage's dispatch was severely criticized in Great Britain. One writer says: “When the news of the massacre first arrived, the pensioned writer of the Gazette entreated the public ‘to suspend their judgment, as the Government had received no tidings of the matter.’ The public have suspended their judgment, and the humane part of mankind have wished that the fatal tale related by Captain Derby, might prove altogether fictitious. To the great grief of every thinking man, this is not the case. We are now in possession of both accounts.” After comparing them and showing that they agree in all important particulars, the writer adds: “The public have but to ponder on the melancholy truths thus attested by the Government. The sword of civil war is drawn, and if there is truth in heaven, the king's troops unsheathed it. Will the English nation much longer suffer their fellow subjects to be slaughtered? It is a shameful fallacy to talk of the supremacy of Parliament. It is the despotism of the crown, and the slavery of the people, which the Ministry aim at. For refusing these attempts, and for that only, the Americans have been inhumanly murdered by the king's troops. Englishmen, weigh these things with deliberation; make the case your own. If the massacre of brethren will not make you open your eyes, they deserve to be forever shut against your welfare.”

Another writer, alluding to the British account of the affair after Percy had joined Smith, says :

“The Gazette tells us dryly that ‘the rebels were for a time dispersed.’ They were so dispersed, however, that as soon as the troops resumed their march (not their flight), they began again to fire upon them, and continued it during the whole fifteen miles’ march, ‘by which means several hundred were killed and wounded.’ If this was not a flight, and if Percy’s activity was not in running away, I should be glad to know where were the flanking parties of this army on its march, with all this light infantry? Would any commanding officer suffer such an enemy to continue killing and wounding his troops from stone walls and houses, if it was not a defeat and flight? I think that when the military lend themselves to fight against the freedom of their fellow subjects, they deserve to be both disgraced and defeated.

“Take then the whole of this account as it stands, and to what does it amount, but that General Gage’s army, having marched out of Boston in the night, was attacked by the militia, hastily assembled without a leader, and was driven back with the loss of sixty-five killed and one hundred and eighty wounded, and twenty-eight taken prisoners — making in all two hundred and seventy-three. In fact, this superiority does not arise from any difference between the English and the Americans, but from the one contending in the cause of tyranny, and the other in that of liberty. It has never entered into the hearts of these wretched Ministers and their tools, to feel or conceive the enthusiasm and valor which so good and noble a cause inspires.”

There was, at the opening of the Revolution, a large class in Great Britain whose sympathies were in favor of America. Even the king’s own brother, the weak but amiable Duke of Gloucester, is said to have had strong feelings in favor of the Colonies. Soon after the news of the collision at Lexington reached England, he took a tour in France; and at a public dinner, given in honor of the Duke, there was present a young Frenchman, not then eighteen years of age; he listened with avidity to the story of the uprising of the people of New England. And from that time America had a true friend in the person of Lafayette.¹

Several officers in the British army declined serving against their American brethren and threw up their commissions. Lord North, who at that day was here regarded as the implacable foe of America, but who was in fact averse to many of the measures of Parliament, on the breaking out of hostilities desired to retire from the Ministry; but the king would neither accept his resignation, nor relent towards America. The French Minister at the Court of England, who looked with peculiar interest into the affairs of the Colonies, wrote to his own Court: "The Americans display in their conduct, and even in their errors, more thought than enthusiasm, for they have shown in succession that they know how to argue, to negotiate, and to fight. All England is in a position from which she never can extricate herself. Either all rules are false, or the Americans will never again consent to become her subjects."

On the 24th of June, the citizens of London voted an Address to the king, desiring him to consider the situation of his subjects in England, "who had nothing to expect from America but gazettes of blood, and mutual lists of slaughtered fellow-subjects." And they prayed for a dissolution of Parliament, and a dismissal forever of the present Ministry.

The society for Constitutional Information raised one hundred pounds, "to be applied to the relief of the widows, orphans, and aged parents of our beloved American fellow-subjects, who faithful to the character of Englishmen, preferring death to slavery, were for that reason only, inhumanly murdered by the king's troops at Lexington and Concord."

Thus did the events of the 19th of April, 1775, excite a thrilling interest on both sides of the Atlantic. In America they aroused the patriotism of every Colony, and united them in the great cause of human freedom. And in Europe the effect was equally great. It brought matters to an issue in the British Parliament, and taught the stupid and obstinate king and his lordly flatterers, that neither Acts of Parliament, nor Orders in Council, nor Edicts from the Throne, could compel the submission of the colonists to the arbitrary acts of the Ministry. They saw that their only hope of success lay in the sword, which they had already drawn; and while they had the madness to believe that they should be able to subdue their Colonies, their formidable and sagacious rival, France, plainly saw that independence was the ultimate portion of the oppressed Colonies in America.

CHAPTER IX.

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT TO THE CLOSE OF THE REVOLUTION.

Captain Parker's Company called to Cambridge, on the 6th of May and the 17th of June — Quota of Men furnished by Lexington — Prices of Labor and Other Articles — Confederation — Attempts to form a State Constitution — Objections to the First Constitution — Ratified the Second Constitution with Proposed Amendments — Depreciation of the Currency — Efforts to raise the Quota of Men for the Army — Instructions of Representative relative to the Return of the Tories — People devoted to Law and Order.

THE events of the 19th of April, 1775, had spread a gloom over the town of Lexington. The loss of ten of her citizens on that eventful day, and the fact that ten more were wounded, some of them severely, brought the horrors of war to their own doors. But their patriotism did not falter. They were not only willing to bear their own grief, but to do what they could to relieve the poor of Boston and Charlestown, who were driven from their homes into the adjacent country. Consequently a committee was chosen to assist the Selectmen "in taking care of the poor or suffering people that may come from the towns of Charlestown and Boston to this place." Nor was the gallant company of Captain Parker, which had suffered so severely on the 19th of April, to be driven from the field by the losses they had experienced, or by any new dangers which should arise.

On the 6th of May, in consequence of an alarm at Cambridge, Captain Parker with a detachment of forty-five of his company, repaired to the head-quarters of the army, where they remained several days, guarding the lines to prevent any further excursions of the king's troops into the country. And on the memorable 17th of June, of that year, when a portion of our militia were engaged with the enemy on Bunker Hill, the gallant Parker with sixty-one of his company, responded to freedom's call, and repaired to Cambridge; but they were deprived of the honor of participating in that struggle, by being kept at Cambridge from an apprehension that the British might cross the river in their boats, and attack the American camp while so many of our troops were engaged at Charlestown.

The fact that this company was so prompt at every call of duty, may be accounted for in part from the strict rules and regulations they adopted as early as 1773. The following is a paper in the handwriting of Edmund Munroe, containing the Rules and Regulations of the Lexington company of minute-men, under which they acted in 1775, found among the papers of the late Edmund Munroe of Boston.

“We, whose names are hereto subscribed, having agreed to associate ourselves together to improve ourselves in the art of Military, do agree and bind ourselves to the following rules, viz :

“1. To choose a Captain, Lieutenant and Ensign once a year.

“2. To choose Sergeants and a Clerk once a year.

“3. To meet in order for discipline four times a year.

“4. We agree that every one of us absent, when the Roll is called, being duly warned, shall pay a fine of eight pence, unless a good excuse can be given to the satisfaction of the Company for his absence.

“5. That any person of the Company that shall interrupt the Captain or Commanding Officer, while under arms, by talking, laughing or any indecent behavior, shall pay a fine of three shillings.

“6. That if any person of the Company shall interrupt the clerk, when calling the Roll, or not answering when they are called, shall pay a fine of two shillings.

“7. That none shall enlist into said Company, if under age, without the consent of their parents or master.

“8. That if any refuse to pay a fine, when properly demanded, they shall be dismissed from the Company, forthwith.

“9. That any person desiring to be admitted into said Company, or dismissed therefrom, shall have a vote of the Company for the same.

“10. That all fines recovered of delinquents shall be applied to the sole use of the Company — paying the Clerk a reasonable sum for collecting the same.

“11. That the Captain, failing of his duty in not calling the Company together four times a year, and disciplining them three hours at each meeting, shall pay a fine of four shillings, unless he can give a reasonable excuse for the same to the satisfaction of the Company.”

Such sound and wholesome rules, voluntarily adopted in times of peace, would hardly fail to make prompt and efficient soldiers in time of war.

During the winter of 1775-6, the town of Lexington, in response to a call from the Provincial Congress, furnished a large supply of wood and a quantity of hay for the army stationed at Winter Hill.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of Lexington, held March 18, 1776, the following persons were chosen a Committee of Correspondence and Safety, agreeably to a Resolve of the General Court:—Deacon Jonas Stone, Captain John Bridge, Lieutenant Edmund Munroe, Lieutenant Joseph Simonds, and Lieutenant Francis Bowman.

At a meeting, called for the purpose, May 23, 1776, it was "Voted, That if Congress should, for the safety of these Colonies, proclaim them independent of Great Britain, we stand ready with our lives and fortunes to support them in that measure." By pledges like these, coming from almost every town and Colony, Congress was emboldened to put forth that immortal Declaration which marks an era in our history.

Lexington having pledged herself to devote life and fortune to the cause of Independence, met the numerous calls made upon her with fidelity. In the first campaign of 8-months' men in 1775, she furnished 20 men; in the second campaign of the 12-months' men, she furnished 19 men; in the campaign to Ticonderoga in 1776, she furnished 28 men; to White Plains the same year, 13 men, and to the Jerseys, 21 men. In the following year she sent 22 men; besides these she furnished her full quota to the Continental army in the first instance, and among those who enlisted in 1780, for three years or during the war, Lexington furnished about 30. We have in this place passed over those who served from two to six months at Cambridge, and Dorchester, and Providence, because these will be treated of more fully in another chapter.

In July, 1776, the town voted the sum of £1 6s. 8d. as an additional bounty to every non-commissioned officer and private, who should enlist from the town in the expedition to Canada.

In the unsettled state of things at the commencement of the Revolution, it was all-important that public sentiment should be known, and that those who were intrusted with the management of public affairs, should have some assurance that the people would stand by and sustain them in the bold measures which the crisis seemed to demand. Being sensible that our public men, whose position would expose them to the vengeance of Great Britain in case of the failure of our cause, took upon themselves a vast responsibility, the people in every part of the Province were willing to encourage their rulers, and assured them in advance that they would share with them the labors and the dangers involved in the contest. By putting their names to solemn instruments, by covenanting with each other in a public manner, that they would resist the measures and the military forces of the common enemy of the Colonies and share the common fate of their brethren, a few patriotic citizens could do much to encourage their rulers, and to confirm the wavering in their own neighborhood. The sturdy inhabitants of Lexington were willing to put their names to such an instrument, though it might prove their death-warrant.

The following instrument, signed by some of the leading citizens, declaring "before God and the world," that they would be true to the cause of liberty, and to each other, does honor to the character and patriotism of our fathers, and may be regarded as their Declaration of Independence. The instrument was found among the papers of Captain Edmund Munroe, who fell at Monmouth in 1778. The spirit of the document and the original signatures of so many of Lexington's patriotic sons, render it worthy of preservation;—we give, as a curiosity, a fac-simile of their signatures.

" Colony of Massachusetts Bay, 1776.

"We, the subscribers, do each of us severally for ourselves, profess, testify and declare before God and the world, that we verily believe that the war, resistance and opposition in which the United American Colonies are now engaged against the fleets and armies of Great Britain, is, on the part of the said Colonies, just and necessary. And we do hereby severally promise, covenant, and engage to and with every person of this Colony, who has or shall subscribe this declaration, or another of the same tenor and words, that we will not, during the said war, directly or indirectly, in any ways, aid, abet, or assist any of the naval or land forces of the king of Great Britain, or any employed by him, or supply them with any kind of provisions, military or naval stores, or hold any correspondence with, or communicate any intelligence to any of the officers, soldiers or marines belonging to the said army or navy, or enlist or procure any others to enlist into the land or sea service of Great Britain, or take up or bear arms against this or either of the United Colonies, or undertake to pilot any of the vessels belonging to the said navy, or in any other way aid or assist them. But, on the contrary, according to our best power and abilities, will defend by arms the United American Colonies, and every part thereof, against every hostile attempt of the fleets and armies in the service of Great Britain, or any of them, according to the requirements and directions of the laws of this Colony, that now are, or may hereafter be provided for the regulation of the militia thereof.

But while the Colony of Massachusetts Bay was actively engaged in the war of the Revolution, and was shedding her blood freely on almost every battle-field in the country, she felt, in a serious manner, the want of a more efficient Government ; and hence the General Court submitted to the towns the question, whether they should be empowered to form a Constitution of Government. When this subject was brought before the inhabitants of Lexington, they chose a committee, who, at an adjourned meeting, held October 21, 1776, submitted the following able and patriotic report, which was adopted unanimously :

“ That always desirous of being impressed with the fullest sentiments of the wisdom, integrity and fidelity of so respectable a body as the Honorable House of Representatives of the State in the high department assigned them by their constituents, it is with the most peculiar anxiety, we feel ourselves obliged in faithfulness to ourselves and posterity, to withhold a cheerful compliance with any resolve or proposal of theirs, as we are constrained to do upon the question before us, by the following considerations, which to us, at least, appear interesting and important.

“ 1. It appears to us that as all government originates from the people; and the great end of government is their peace, safety and happiness; so it is with the people at large, or where that is impracticable, by their Representatives freely and equally elected and empowered for that purpose, to form and agree on a Constitution of government, which being considered and approved by the body of the people, may be enacted, ratified and established.

“ 2. That the present House of Representatives were not elected for the purpose of agreeing upon, and enacting a Constitution of government for this State; neither had their constituents the least intimation of anything of this kind in the precepts upon which they were elected; and therefore, their proposing themselves to the people, and asking their consent as constituents for this service, appears to us to be a clog to that freedom of election, which ought always to be exercised by a free people in matters of this importance, more especially in an affair of such lasting concernment as this.

“ 3. That no provision is made in the Resolve for those towns which have not chosen so many Representatives as they have a right to send, to choose others to complete their number upon this important occasion; by which it may happen, not through the neglect of the people, but for want of opportunity, the representation may be unequal.

“ 4. That in case we do not see our way clear to consent as proposed in the question before us, it does not appear that any provision is made in the Resolve for our having any voice at all in the matter, as our Representative will not be considered as empowered by his constituents for this purpose.

“ 5. That it is greatly to be feared, if the proposal in the Resolve is complied with by the people of this State, upon this most important occasion, it will be pleaded as an established precedent in all future time, for the decency and propriety of persons offering themselves candidates for the election of the people to offices of trust and importance — a practice which hath always been held by the judicious and virtuous, as dangerous to the liberties of the people, and a practice by which corrupt and designing men in every age have too often availed themselves of places of power and authority, to the great disadvantage of those who elected them, if not to the gross violation of their most sacred rights.

“6. Lastly, that though the Resolves give us to expect a publication of the proposed form of government for the perusal of the inhabitants, before the ratification of the same; yet it does not appear clear from thence that there is any just provision made for the inhabitants as towns, to express their approbation or the contrary, in order to such ratification.

“For these obvious reasons therefore, we cannot see our way clear to comply with the proposal of the Honorable House of Representatives in the question before us.

“Voted and Resolved, That as our former Constitution (the Charter) is at an end, and a new Constitution of government, as soon as may be, is absolutely necessary, if not to the being, yet to the well-being of the State, and as the present General Court are considered as the eyes of the people, and the guardians as well as watchmen of the State; it be most earnestly recommended to our worthy Representative, and he hereby is instructed to use his utmost endeavors and influence, that, either by precepts for a new assembly, empowered for this purpose, or by special notification for the choice of persons for the express purpose of forming a new Constitution, or in any other way which their wisdom may direct, consistent with the liberties of the people, measures may be taken to give the people an opportunity to carry this matter into effect; and as soon as may be consistent with the exigency of the public affairs, freely to give their votes for such persons as they judge will best serve the public, themselves, and posterity, in the commencement of a work of so great importance to the present and all succeeding generations.”

No one can read this document without seeing the patriotism and prudence of the writer and those who adopted this report. They were patriots, jealous of their rights, and determined to guard them, not only against the encroachments of a foreign foe, but also against all ambitious and designing men, that might spring up among themselves. The patriot priest was too well versed in the history of the past to suffer any dangerous practice to grow into precedent, and thereby jeopard in any degree the rights and liberties of the people.

In March, 1777, when the duties imposed upon these officers were arduous and responsible, in consequence of the peculiar situation of affairs, Daniel Harrington, Josiah Smith, Thomas Parker, Joshua Reed, and Philip Russell, were chosen Selectmen, and Dea. Benj. Brown, John Parkhurst, Captain Francis Brown, Daniel Harrington and Amos Muzzy were chosen Committee of Correspondence, Inspection and Safety.

At the same meeting a Committee was chosen "to compute the cost of a suitable and decent Monument to set over the grave of our brethren in this town who fell the first victims to British Tyranny on the morning of the 19th of April, 1775, and to make a Report at May Meeting."

During the year 1777, the attention of the town was directed to the subject of raising its quotas of men for the different campaigns, and especially to the cost of the campaigns, and also to what was more difficult than raising men, viz., providing means to pay them. They also chose Deacon Jonas Stone, Representative, and gave him full power to act in the formation of a State Constitution.

The Continental Congress, having formed Articles for the Confederation of the States, submitted them to the States, and the States to the people. At a meeting held January 5, 1778, a committee was chosen to consider and report upon the subject. At the adjourned meeting, held on the 12th of January, they reported that the Representative be instructed to vote for the ratification of those Articles; at the same time they express a strong desire that there may be some amendment adopted by which alterations may be proposed to them by the people.

In the midst of the trials and sufferings which naturally fell upon the brave and patriotic men who were fighting the battles of their country, they had from time to time some testimonials, showing that they were not forgotten by their brethren who were at home. At a meeting of the inhabitants of the town, March 10, 1778, they passed the following vote: "That our brethren of this town in the Continental army be forthwith supplied, each of them, with one good pair of shoes, made of neat's leather, one good pair of stockings, and a good shirt made of cotton and linen, to be given to them free of charge, and paid for by the town."

We have already seen that an effort was being made to form a Constitution of Government, for the safety and well-being of the State; and that the people of Lexington had empowered their Representative to act on the subject. A Constitution was formed and submitted to the people. In Lexington the subject was referred to a committee of their most prominent citizens, — the result of which was to draw from the Rev. Mr. Clarke another of his valuable papers on the subject of civil government, which may be read with profit at the present day.

“ The freemen of the Town of Lexington, having upon mature consideration voted that they do not approve of the Constitution and form of government, sent out by the late Honorable Convention, cannot look upon it as improper to suggest some reasons why they could not cheerfully accept of said Constitution and form of government, as calculated to answer the important ends proposed.

“ Accordingly, it may be observed that it appears to us that in emerging from a state of nature into a state of well-regulated society, mankind give up some of their natural rights in order that others of greater importance to their well-being, safety and happiness, both as societies and individuals, might be the better enjoyed, secured and defended. That a civil Constitution or form of government is of the nature of a most sacred covenant or contract entered into by the individuals which form the society, for which such Constitution or form of government is intended, whereby they mutually and solemnly engage to support and defend each other in the enjoyment of those rights which they mean to retain. That the main and great end of establishing any Constitution or form of government among a people or in society, is to maintain, secure and defend those natural rights inviolate. And, consequently, that it is of the highest importance, both to the public peace and utility, and to the safety and security of individuals, that said rights intended to be retained, at least those that are fundamental to the well-being of society and the liberty and safety of individuals, should be in the most explicit terms declared. And that not only that Government and persons in authority might know their stated limits and bounds, but also that subjects and all members of such society might know when their rights and liberties are infringed or violated, and have some known and established standard, to which they might, with becoming confidence, appeal for the redress of grievances and oppressions, whether real or supposed; and we most readily acknowledge that the total omission of a Declaration of Rights of this kind, is no small objection to the Constitution before us.

“ Next to a Declaration of Rights, it is humbly conceived that equality of representation is of the greatest importance to the preservation of the liberties of the subject, and the peace and safety of society. But we cannot think that the provision made in this form of government is adequate to this purpose. And we are of opinion that it is not without ground to be feared that through the imperfections of mankind in some future times, small towns may become an easy prey to the corrupt influence of designing men to the no small danger of the public tranquillity, as well as to the liberties of the people; as hath been frequently, and notoriously the fact in England and many other states.

“ A Rotation in the members in the Supreme Council of a nation, and the Legislative Body of a State, even where such are elective, hath been frequently suggested and earnestly recommended by the best writers on polity and government, and is by practice and experience found to be a powerful check to the arts and schemes of ambitious and designing men, and as a means under Providence of prolonging the liberty, safety and tranquillity of such States and Commonwealths as have adopted it. Of this the Commonwealth of Rome was a striking instance, where no citizen could be legally elected to the Consulship, which was the office of the Supreme Magistrate, but once in ten years. And we could have wished that the example of the Honorable Congress in the Articles of Confederation had been adopted in this matter; and that no citizen of this State had been eligible to the office of Supreme Magistrate, or as a member of the General Court, more than two years in five, three years in seven, or at least for some limited time.

“ We have complained of it in times past under the Charter, and still look upon it as of dangerous tendency, to have the Legislative and Executive powers blended in the same persons. And the wise and judicious in all ages have spoken of it as a very great grievance to have in the Supreme Council or Legislative body of a State, placemen and pensioners, or which amounts to almost the same thing, persons who hold lucrative posts in the gift of the Court, or are dependent thereupon for their offices and salaries and perquisites annexed thereto. And we cannot persuade ourselves that the provision made in this Constitution would be an adequate remedy.

“ Canvassing for elections, corrupt influence, and open bribery, have had their most baleful effects to the subversion of liberty, and the destruction of good government in free States, and that in all ages. And yet we cannot find anything in this Constitution to give the least check to practices of this kind.

“ We could have wished that the inestimable right of trial by jury had been more explicitly defined.

“ We do not find any sufficient provision for any alteration or amendment of this Constitution but by the General Court, or by instructions of our Representatives. Whereas it appears to us at least, of the highest importance that a door should be left open for the people to move in this matter, and a way explicitly pointed out, wherein they might legally and constitutionally propose such, and effect any such alterations or amendments, in any future time, as might appear to them advantageous or necessary; and the rather, as this might give satisfaction to the people, and be a happy means under Providence of preventing popular commotions, mobs, bloodshed, and civil war, which too frequently have been the consequences of the want of such an opening, which they might have legally and constitutionally improved.

“ These in general, are a sketch of the reasons that have induced us to withhold our approbation of the Constitution and form of government, transmitted to us by the late Honorable Convention.

“ Wherefore as the late General Court have explicitly recommended to the several towns in this State to instruct their Representatives upon this subject; the Representative of this town is accordingly hereby instructed and directed to lay the proceedings of said town hereupon, with these reasons why this Constitution was not approved, before the General Court. And in case the establishment of this Constitution and form of government should be acted upon in said General Court, to give his vote against it.

“If this form of Government should not be established, and we have some grounds to believe that it will not, and it should be proposed in Court to form another, we would say that notwithstanding this town instructed and empowered their Representative for this purpose last year, and notwithstanding we earnestly hope to have a good Constitution in due time established in the State, yet for various reasons which to us at least appear of weight, we could wish to have it waived for the present; not only because the form of government we are now under, as it hath done, so it may still answer all purposes of government; but also because it may interrupt the deliberations of the Court upon affairs of more immediate concernment to the well being, and perhaps to the very existence of the State, which may demand all their time and all their attention; but especially because our brethren absent in the war, and foremost in trials and danger in the great contest in which we are engaged, may think themselves not well treated in being deprived of having a voice in so interesting an affair.

“The Representative of this town is therefore, for these reasons and others, hereby further instructed to use his influence to have the matter waived at least for the present. But in case the Court should determine to have the matter further attempted at present, the Representative is further instructed to use his influence that it may be done by a Convention freely chosen by the people for that purpose and that only.”

We give these papers in full, because they show the immediate relation which at that time existed between the representative and his constituents, and because we think that both representatives and the people might profit by the just views expressed in these instructions, written by a sound divine and practical statesman at that day.

In 1778, the burdens of the war pressed more heavily upon the people than they had done before. The depreciation of the currency, and the corresponding increase of prices, augmented the embarrassment. Besides, soldiers who had served, returned home without pay. If the towns paid them, it must greatly increase their taxes, and so exhaust their means; and if they neglected to pay those who had served, it would discourage enlistments, and so render it difficult for towns to fill their quotas. Lexington like all other towns felt this embarrassment. But she resolved to be true to those who had been in the field. Accordingly, May, 1778, she appropriated £2,001 14s., to pay her troops up to that time. But more men were required, and in September of that year the town voted, "That the men who shall engage to march on the present alarm, shall be entitled to receive from the town £15 per month including the Court's pay."

It would seem from the face of the record, that ample provision was made to pay for the past expenditures, and to provide for the future expenses of the war. But in Lexington, as in all other towns at that time, the people were ready to vote taxes, but were unable to pay them. The high price of all the necessaries of life, and the ruinous state of the currency, rendered it almost impossible to obtain money on any consideration. They did all they could, and that was but little. There were but few who had money, and those who had, would not lend it, except at exorbitant rates; and the raisers of produce partook of the same spirit. Prices were so fluctuating, and the currency was so deranged, that Congress suggested the propriety of some action on the subject; and in Massachusetts a Convention assembled at Concord, for the purpose of considering the matter, and fixing a system of prices. Lexington participated in the movement, and chose Matthew Mead, Thaddeus Parker, and Joel Viles, as delegates. The Convention met in July, and fixed a scale of prices for goods, wares, and merchandise, and also for articles of produce and the wages of labor. The town expressed its hearty concurrence in the measures recommended by the Convention, and chose a committee to fix a scale of prices, and report the same to the town, at an adjourned meeting. These prices, being an important part of the history of the times, and showing the causes of the embarrassments of the people, we deem it a duty to insert.

West India rum, £6 9s. per gall.; New England rum, £4 16s. per gall.; Molasses, £4 15s. per gall.; Coffee, 18s. per lb.; Brown sugar, from 11s. to 14s. per lb.; Chocolate, 24s. per lb.; Bohea tea, £5 15s. per lb.; Cotton wool, 37s. 6d. per lb.; German steel, 36s. per lb.; Salt, best quality, £10 10s. per bush.; Indian corn, £4 4s. per bush.; Rye, £5 10s. per bush.; Wheat, £8 10s. per bush.; Beef from 3s. to 4s. 6d. per lb.; Mutton, Lamb, and Veal, 4s.; Butter, 12s.; Cheese, 6s.; Milk, 1s.

6*d.* per quart; English hay, 30*s.* per cwt.; Barley and Malt, £4 per bush.; Beans, 4*s.* 10*d.* per bush; Cider, £5 10*s.* per bbl.; Sheep's wool, 21*s.*, and Flax 12*s.* per lb.; Mugs, 30*s.* per doz.; Milk pans, 12*s.* per doz.; Yard wide tow cloth, 24*s.* and cotton cloth, 36*s.* per yd.; Sole leather, 20*s.* per lb.; Upper leather in the same proportion; Men's shoes, £6, and women's £4 10*s.*; Making shoes and finding wax and thread, 48*s.*; Shoeing horse and steeled, 90*s.*, plain, 66*s.*; Setting a single shoe, 5*s.*; New axe, £6, laying one, £3 12*s.*; Spinning a double skein linen, 4*s.* 6*d.*; Weaving tow cloth one yard wide, 4*s.*, and cotton, 4*s.* 6*d.*; Woolen cloth, one ell wide, 6*s.*; Best felt hats, £4; Best saddles, £60, common do., £40; Good yarn hose for men, 66*s.*; All wool cloth, common dye, £4 10*s.* per yard; Teaming under 30 miles, 18*s.* per mile; Carpenter's or mason's work, 60*s.* per day; Common labor, 36*s.* to 48*s.*; Oxen per day, 24*s.*; Horses per mile, 3*s.*; West India flip per mug, 15*s.*, New England do., 12*s.*; Extra good dinner, 20*s.*, and common, 12*s.*; Best supper and breakfast, 15*s.*, and common, 12*s.*; Lodging, 4*s.*

The town voted to have the Committee of Safety proceed with all persons, according to the Resolve of the Convention, that should demand, take, or give more for any article than the rates set down in the schedule. These prices appear to be much higher than they really were, owing to the depreciated currency, which was at that time worth about one-sixth of the value of coin. But even with that allowance, men at the present day would hardly be willing to work in the summer season for thirty-five cents per day, and pay ninety-three cents per pound for Bohea tea.

The embarrassments felt by the people at that day, were of the most trying character, and when we consider that these trials grew out of their devotion to the cause of freedom, and that they suffered not for themselves alone, but for us their descendants, we should not only overlook any faults we may discover in the course they pursued, but should render a tribute to their memories for their zeal and devotion in the great work in which they were so nobly engaged.

In 1779, the people were called upon to elect a delegate to a Convention to form a Constitution, and the inhabitants of Lexington, with great wisdom and propriety, selected the Rev. Mr. Clarke, who, though modest and unpretending, had a good share of influence in that body. He was on several important committees, where his good sense and ripened wisdom were of great service.

The delegates thus elected, framed a Constitution, and submitted it to the people for their ratification or rejection. The inhabitants of Lexington voted to adopt most of its provisions; they however qualified their approval by proposing sundry amendments, all of which showed how jealous they were of their rights, and how careful they were to secure the great principles of popular equality, and to recognize religion as the basis of all good government.

We will give one of the amendments proposed, with the reasons for the same, as set forth by the committee appointed to consider the subject. In the frame of Government they proposed to add the word "Protestant" to the term "Christian Religion" in the oath of office, and supported that amendment as follows :

"As to the word Protestant, we conceive it to be a word which took its rise from the pious, noble, and truly heroic stand which Luther and the first Reformers, with the reformed Churches in Europe, made against the Errors, Superstition and Hierarchy of the Pope and Church of Rome, and the Oppression, Persecution and Tyranny of Charles the Fifth, Emperor of Germany in the beginning of the 15th century; and more immediately from the Solemn Protest made and entered into by the Electors and Deputies of nineteen States and imperial Cities of Germany, against the unjust and impious Decrees of the Diet of the Empire, for suppressing the glorious Reformation on the 19th of April, 1529. On that account they were distinguished by the name of Protestants. A Term by which the reformed Churches of all Denominations in Europe and America, if not throughout the world, have ever since been known. A Term which our venerable Ancestors brought with them, when they came into this country, and held in a manner sacred, as expressive of their Characters as professors of the pure Religion of Jesus Christ, in opposition to the blasphemous Absurdities of the Church of Rome; and a Term which by long use hath been, and still is technically expressive of the true Religion of the Gospel, as justly distinguished from Popery. We therefore wish to have the expressive word inserted in the Constitution in those places we have pointed out, — to guard against introducing persons into offices of trust and places of power in the government of this State, whose Religion itself leads them to hold principles, and avow practices inimical to Liberty, subversive of Government, and dangerous to the State."

The town proposed several other amendments, all of which looked to the protection of the subject, and showed how jealous the people were of their rights.

The limited means of the people, the depreciation of paper money, and the numerous calls upon the town to furnish men and supply beef for the army, rendered the case exceedingly embarrassing. The town meetings which were very frequently held, show the great difficulty under which the inhabitants labored. To indicate the depreciation of money, and the consequent loss which must have been realized by the holders of the paper issued, it is only necessary to state the fact that in 1781, the town instructed their collectors to receive of those who were in arrears for their taxes one dollar of the new emission for forty of the old. And on the year following the selectmen settled with Benjamin Wellington, allowing him eighty for one, as the difference between silver and paper money.

Such a depreciation in the circulating medium would at any time produce great derangement in business, destroy confidence, and bring about a state of confusion in the transactions of life. And when we consider that this took place in the midst of the exhausting war of the Revolution, we are surprised that our fathers sustained themselves as well as they did.

As this element of depreciation in the paper currency at that day was interwoven with almost every transaction, public and private, it becomes important that we should understand the origin of these paper issues, and the cause of their depreciation. As this subject of the currency affected very materially the enlistment of soldiers in this and other towns, we take the liberty of making an extract from the history of Marlborough, where the subject was treated with some detail.¹

"The unsuccessful expedition against Canada in 1690, involved the Province in a heavy debt. To meet this demand bills of credit were issued for one year. These were punctually redeemed till 1704, when the expenses of calamitous wars induced the General Court to defer the payment, first for two years, and afterwards for a longer term. About 1714, the subject of the currency attracted considerable attention. Some were for returning to a specie currency; others were for a land bank; and others were for the Province loaning its credit to the towns, and thence in small sums to the inhabitants on interest. This latter scheme prevailed, and £50,000 were issued, and passed over to the towns in proportion to their share of the public tax. The sums thus apportioned to the towns, were committed to trustees appointed by them, to be loaned out in small sums to individuals, who were to repay it at stated times with interest, and this interest was to be appropriated to defray the public expenses.

“But these bills were constantly undergoing a depreciation. In 1702, an ounce of silver would buy of these bills 6*s.* 10*d.*; in 1705, 7*s.*; in 1713, 8*s.*; in 1716, 9*s.* 3*d.*; in 1717, 12*s.*; in 1722, 14*s.*; in 1728, 18*s.*; in 1730, 20*s.*; in 1737, 26*s.*; in 1741, 28*s.*; and in 1749, 60*s.*

“Another scheme was projected to support a paper currency by silver coin, viz.—A loan of £60,000 to be deposited with the towns as in the other case, but to be repaid in specie. To extinguish this paper currency, which had become exceedingly oppressive, the home government interposed, and Parliament, knowing that this paper had been issued to carry on the wars of Great Britain against the French and Indians, passed an Act for reimbursing the Colonies in specie. The General Court provided by law for the rate at which these bills of credit should be redeemed; and fixed it at about one-fifth less than their lowest current value; that is, at fifty shillings for an ounce of silver which was valued at 6*s.* 8*d.*, or an English crown. This was the origin of the ‘Old Tenor’ reckoning—fifty shillings of paper equal to an ounce of silver, or 6*s.* 8*d.*

“As the design of this law was the abolition of the paper currency, and as the grant of Parliament was insufficient to redeem the whole mass of paper that the Province had issued, the remainder was liquidated by a tax of £75,000, payable in bills, at the above rate of fifty shillings in bills for 6*s.* 8*d.* in specie. All future debts after March 31, 1750, it was enacted, should be understood to be contracted on the specie basis of 6*s.* 8*d.* per ounce of silver. This was the origin of what has been known as ‘Lawful Money;’ three ounces of silver being equal to £1, or 20*s.*

“This restored the currency to a metallic basis, and to a uniform permanent value. Having passed this crisis of depreciation, the people enjoyed a sound and uniform circulating medium for more than twenty years. But the breaking out of hostilities with the mother country, imposed a new obligation upon the Province. War had commenced; and means must be supplied to carry it on. Consequently the Provincial Congress in May, 1775, empowered the Treasurer to borrow one hundred thousand pounds lawful money, secured by notes of the Province at six per cent, and made payable June 1, 1777. They also desired the other Colonies to give currency to such securities. At the same time, they commended this subject to the consideration of the Continental Congress.

“The Treasurer was required to issue no notes of a less denomination than £4; but it was found necessary to meet the wants of the army to have notes of a less denomination; and the Provisional Congress empowered the Treasurer to issue notes of six, nine, ten, twelve, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, eighteen and twenty shillings — this emission not to exceed £26,000. Almost simultaneously with these issues by the State, Continental bills were issued by the General Government. For the first year these bills circulated freely, and were readily exchanged for cash.

“But the continued issue of such bills by the State and the nation, and the fact that they had no specie to redeem them; the dubious prospect of the result of the war, and the general exhaustion of the community, tended to depreciate their value. Add to this the British officers, and the adherents of the royal cause in the midst of us, took every opportunity, and had recourse to every means, to impair the value of this paper. They represented, and with too much truth, that the Continental Congress had no means by which to redeem their bills; and with great injustice, asserted that they never intended to provide for their redemption. Under the influence of these causes, this paper money gradually depreciated in value, till it required about seventy-five pounds in paper to procure one in specie. Such a reduction in the value of the circulating medium, wrought great injustice, especially to those who subsisted on a salary, or labored for stated pay fixed beforehand. Many clergymen found by sad experience, that the salary which at their settlement was deemed sufficient, would hardly save them from starvation; and the poor soldiers who enlisted at government pay for three years, found their wages hardly worth receiving, as will be seen by the following scale of depreciation.

A Table showing the Depreciation of Paper Money, from January 1, 1777, to January 1, 1781, inclusive; in which the value of £1, or 20 shillings in paper, will be seen for each month during the whole period.

"The above scale of depreciation will enable us, at any period during these years, to estimate the worth in specie of paper money then in circulation.

"It may not be amiss to state, that what was so embarrassing in Massachusetts, was still more so in all the States south of the Potomac, where little or nothing was done to sustain the credit of the country; and that Massachusetts did more during the whole period of the Revolution in men and money than any other State. By an official Report from the Treasury Department at Washington, made in 1790, it appears that the amount of money, including paper reduced to its specie value, which had been received from, and paid to the several States by the

States.	Paid to State.	Received from State.
New Hampshire	$ 440,974	$ 466,554
Massachusetts	1,245,737	3,167,020
Rhode Island.....	1,028,511	310,395
Connecticut	1,016,273	1,607,259
New York.....	822,803	1,545,889
New Jersey	336,729	512,916
Pennsylvania	2,087,276	2,629,410
Delaware.....	63,817	208,878
Maryland	609,617	945,537
Virginia	482,881	1,965,811
North Carolina	788,031	219,835
South Carolina.....	1,014,808	499,325
Georgia	679,412	122,744

"Thus it will be seen, that while Massachusetts paid into the Continental Treasury during the Revolution $1,921,283 more than she received back, the five States of Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, paid only $178,503 more than they received; so that Massachusetts in fact contributed a balance towards the support of the war more than ten times as great as these five States united."

If Massachusetts received from the General Government a large sum, it was because she furnished more soldiers than any other State, except Pennsylvania. As compared with Virginia, Massachusetts, with half the population of the Old Dominion, furnished nearly three times as many soldiers. Divide the whole number of men in the service by seven, the length in years of the war, and it would give Massachusetts an average for each year of 9,701, and Virginia only 3,953.

No wonder under circumstances like these, that towns found it difficult to fill their quotas. No wonder that soldiers who had enlisted for three years, on a pay founded upon a silver basis, were unwilling to reënlist, when they found that their pay by the depreciation of the currency, had become nearly valueless. With hostile fleets upon our coasts, and hostile armies upon our soil; with a feeble army poorly fed and clothed, whose term of service was about to expire; and with crippled resources and a currency nearly worthless, so as not to command recruits, no wonder the towns felt themselves greatly embarrassed. Lexington in common with other towns had to strain every nerve, and put forth her best energies. It was not the want of patriotism, but the want of an adequate compensation, that led the young to hesitate to enter the service. It was not the want of generosity, but the want of means, that prevented the good people of Lexington offering such a compensation as would induce men to enlist at once. But the records show that they did exert themselves, in a becoming manner; and if they failed in part in doing what seemed to be right and proper, it is due to them to say, that they succeeded in a great degree under circumstances which would have overwhelmed almost any other people.

The burdens under which the people of the town labored, and the efforts they made to discharge their obligations, and fill their quotas of men for the army, will readily be seen in the following extracts from the town Records.

“June 26, 1780. Voted, That the sum of £14,000 be raised to hire the men required of this town for the army.”

“July 16, 1780. Voted, That £6,000 be granted to purchase the beef required of this town for the army.”

Dec. 4, 1780, the Assessors reported to the Selectmen

“That they had assessed the war tax of June and July, of £28,091 4s. 8d.; also the beef tax of £6,036 5s. 5d.; also the town tax of £2,010 5s. 5d.”

“Dec. 19, 1780. Voted, That £6,000 be raised to purchase the remainder of the beef for the army.”

“Jan. 7, 1781. Voted the sum of £27,000 to enable the Committee to hire men for the town's quota of the Continental army.”

“Voted to raise £12,000 to pay the 6 months' and the 3 months' men, hired by the Committee last summer to reënforce the army.”

“Feb. 20, 1781. Voted, That the town will give the men who shall engage for the army, each fifteen head of cattle for their services upon the following conditions, viz. If they serve one year, they shall receive yearling cattle, if two years, then cattle of two years old, if three years, then they shall receive cattle of three years old.”

These votes speak for themselves. And the record further shows, that the people exerted themselves to the utmost to carry these votes into effect. At their meetings, which in some cases were held weekly, they appointed committee upon committee — one to obtain the men, one to borrow money, one to aid the Collectors in collecting the taxes, one to obtain the beef for the army, and another to report upon the best means to be adopted to further the great end. With the increase of the obstacles, they renewed their efforts. One led on by hope and another confiding in despair — each and every one exerted their best energies to sustain the cause of their common country — the cause of human rights.

While we pity the poor soldiers, who, from the depreciation of the currency, found their pay an inadequate compensation for their arduous services, and admire the patriotism displayed in their righteous cause, we must admit that as a whole the people did what they could to alleviate their sufferings and those of their families at home. We therefore look back with profound admiration upon the zeal and self-sacrifice of that day. And when we consider the awful price our fathers paid for freedom, we cannot, and ought not to withhold our execration of the traitors who have recently attempted to destroy these blessed institutions — the fruits of our fathers' toils and sufferings. The history of the world does not furnish an instance of a rebellion so unprovoked and causeless, so unjustifiable and base, as that of the slaveholders in their recent attempt to overthrow our institutions.

After a great expenditure of blood and treasure — after trials, sufferings and privations, such as are unknown, and consequently unappreciated by us their descendants, our fathers were at last blessed with liberty and independence. But they came out of the struggle, exhausted in their resources, and embarrassed by new and perplexing difficulties. Poverty, disorder approaching anarchy, and a complication of new and difficult political questions, stared them in the face. As the country had been carried through the eventful struggle of the Revolution by the voice and efficient support of the primary assemblies, so now, after the treaty of peace, it was deemed important that the small towns should speak out. Lexington, which had been free to express her opinion before and during the Revolution, was willing to look any new difficulty in the face. Parson Clarke had a realizing sense of the condition of the country, and of the necessity of wise and prudent counsels; and hence in 1783, he spoke through a Committee of citizens in Instructions to Benjamin Brown, Esq., the Representative to the General Court.

“ Sir :—Having given the strongest evidence of our esteem and confidence in electing you to represent this Town in the General Court of this Commonwealth, it is not to call in question either your Capacity, Disposition or Fidelity, that we assume the right of Instructing our Representative; but rather to assure you of that hearty concurrence and support which you may be certain to meet with from your constituents, in those measures for the public good which your own wisdom, prudence and love of Liberty and your Country, would naturally suggest at such a time as this.

“ It is true under God, by the Wisdom, Firmness, Patriotism and Bravery of the people of this, and the United States of America, we have been happily carried through a contest, in which all we held dear as a free people was at stake, and in less time and at less expense of Blood and Treasure than the most sanguine expectations of the most discerning and judicious among us promised, and effected a Revolution great in itself, and glorious in the eyes of the astonished World!

“ Much however remains yet to be done, to perfect the work; and perhaps there never was a time, not even in the height of the contest, or depth of our distress, when Attention, Firmness, Penetration, Wisdom and Integrity were more necessary than the present. This year appears to us to be a most interesting, critical, and important period; and upon the course taken, and measures adopted and pursued at this period, the establishment of our Rights and Liberties, as freemen, free and sovereign States, and an independent Nation, as well as the Blessing of Peace upon a permanent basis, will in a great measure depend.

“ Among other important concerns which may engage your attention, we beg leave to recommend the following, as what appears to us to demand the most critical notice, and serious consideration:—the case of those persons who in the late contest with Britain have left their country, and joined the Enemy. By the Articles in the Provisional Treaty of Preliminaries for a Peace between the United States and Great Britain, it is expressly agreed, ‘that Congress shall earnestly recommend to the Legislatures of the respective States,’ that persons of the above described character, ‘shall have free liberty to go to any part or parts of the thirteen United States, and therein remain twelve months unmolested in their endeavors to obtain the restoration of their estates, rights, &c.’

“ While we sincerely wish that the faith of the nation, solemnly plighted by the Plenipotentiaries of the United States, might be realized and regarded with the most sacred attention, we also wish that the freedom, independence and sovereignty of the States respectively, might not be forgotten.

“ The words of the Treaty evidently suppose, that when Congress, in compliance with the stipulations in favor of persons of the above described character, ‘have earnestly recommended the matter to the Legislatures of the several States,' the Right of decision remains entirely and absolutely with them. The States severally are submitted to as the sole judges, and upon their determination their fate must rest — from them there is no appeal.

“Not to mention the hard names and opprobrious characters of Conspirators, Traitors and Rebels, nor to lay any stress upon the question who among them are most or least deserving — there is one thing in which they are all alike, and without exception in the same predicament; and this suggests a rule, and points out a line of conduct for these States, which appears to us obvious, rational, just and necessary — and a rule equally applicable to all persons of the above characters. They have left the society — they have left the country by which they held their property — by which they were protected in, and to which they owed, Liberty, Property and Life; and they have joined the Enemy, and put themselves, not only into their power, but also under their protection. By this one act, without any coloring or aggravation, it appears to us, they have forfeited all claim to privilege, property or protection in the society, State, or States they have left. The estate or property they have heretofore held, under the protection of the society or State to which they belonged, of course reverts to the State, and reason and common sense, the Laws of Nature and of Nations concur to pronounce them, one and all, ALIENS from the COMMONWEALTH.

“This alone, we humbly conceive, is an argument both clear and conclusive against their return to us, and the protection of their estates; and at the same time points out a line of conduct both just and necessary — and is no more than putting a sanction upon their own choice.

“Many other arguments might be fairly urged against their return, and their admission as citizens of the States they have left; as that they have by leaving and joining the enemy, weakened our cause and strengthened the enemy, and have sought and done what was in their power to subjugate us to the British yoke: That it is both unnatural and unjust, that such persons should share in the privileges which they have to their utmost endeavored to destroy: That if they should be restored, and their estates returned to them, they will be very dangerous to the peace of society, and the liberties of this country: And we may add, that as to the idea of admitting some and rejecting others, it is easy to see that wisdom would be puzzled to draw the line, and determine when and where to stop.

“We would further recommend to you to use your endeavors to procure a more thorough inquiry into the state of the Public Debt, both State and Continental; that the public accounts may be adjusted and properly arranged. To restore and establish the credit of State Notes and Securities, and fund for punctual payment of the interest of them.

“We also wish that every proper measure may be taken to promote economy in all grants, and in all disposals of public money, and at the same time that merit be duly noticed and rewarded, and the public faith be preserved, where solemnly plighted, and the most watchful care be taken that all unnecessary expenditures, in pensions or otherwise, may be prevented.

“ We would suggest to you the importance, in a free government, of the encouragement of Literature in all branches of science and useful knowledge, and particularly of the University of Cambridge, and Public Schools and Seminaries of Learning; — and as the General Court is the great Inquest of the Commonwealth, to promote an inquiry into the causes of the too general neglect and contempt of the law for Grammar Schools in the several Towns.

“ In all your proceedings, we trust we need not urge that a sacred regard to the Rights of the Community, an excellent Constitution, and the Articles of the Confederation of the United States of America, is at all times both becoming and necessary.”

We have seen the efforts made by the people of Lexington to carry on the war, but we have found them true to the cause in which they were engaged. Particularly have we seen them inculcating the soundest principles of constitutional liberty. The experience of the world has shown that it is easier to throw off the yoke of foreign oppression, than it is to establish a system of civil government, adapted to the wants of a free people. But in this Commonwealth, the people in the very midst of a revolution framed a Constitution of government remarkable for its wisdom; and we have the pleasure of seeing that the people of Lexington were alive to the subject, and active in establishing a government which has proved a blessing to the community.

Nor were the people of Lexington behind the rest of the community in their efforts to establish a government of laws. Reared up under the wise counsel of a prudent statesman, they were never disturbed by tories, nor by those wild visionaries who think that liberty consists in throwing off all restraint. The people, as a body, were peaceable and law-abiding, and equally ready to resist tyrants or to sustain rulers duly elected in conformity to the laws of the land. They were devotees of liberty, but it was liberty regulated by law. They were warm advocates for a well regulated freedom, exempt from tyranny on the one hand, and licentiousness on the other.

CHAPTER X.

FROM THE PEACE OF 1783 TO THE YEAR 1830.

Population in 1783 — Embarrassment of the People — Shays' Rebellion — Instruction to Representatives — A New Meeting House erected — Jay's Treaty — Death of Mr. Clarke — Settlement of Mr. Williams — Resolutions on National Affairs — Green's Oration — Mr. Williams dismissed — The Great Bridge rebuilt — The Fourth of July celebrated — Reception of Lafayette — Phinney's Address — His History of Lexington Battle — Adams's Letter in Defence of Acton — Stetson's Oration.

THOUGH the war of the Revolution had been a period of trial and anxiety to the people of the Commonwealth, the period which followed the war was in many respects quite as trying. The heavy debt of the nation, State and towns, incurred during the seven years' war, and the embarrassments of individuals arising from the same cause and from the depreciation of paper money, produced a depression of business and a state of monetary affairs bordering upon bankruptcy. From this general embarrassment, Lexington was not exempt.

Up to this time the people had been subjects of Great Britain, or involved in a contest with that country; but thenceforward they were freemen. But there were causes which operated against the increase of population. A considerable number who had served in the army, from the town, did not return to Lexington to become permanent citizens; and others who had resided in town during the war, owing to the depressed state of business and pecuniary embarrassments, left the place to seek their fortunes elsewhere. These causes served to keep the population nearly stationary for a considerable period.

The Town Records for some years present nothing of special interest. The burden of the Town Meetings was to obtain means to discharge the debts contracted during the war. The year 1786 was memorable for what has generally been denominated, "Shays' Rebellion." The pecuniary embarrassment of which we have spoken, and the heavy taxes which were necessarily imposed, gave color to the plea that unnecessary burdens were imposed upon the people. On the 22d of August a convention of delegates from fifty towns in the county of Hampshire met at Hatfield, and adopted measures looking to the resistance of the laws. A large number of men assembled at Northampton, took possession of the Court House, and prevented the sitting of the Court. The Governor issued a proclamation, calling upon all officers and citizens to suppress such treasonable proceedings, but to little or no purpose. At Worcester and Concord the Courts were interrupted. The Legislature passed several acts relieving the people as far as was practicable. But the insurgents, headed by DANIEL SHAYS, who had been a Captain in the Continental Army, to the number of about three hundred, marched to Springfield in December, and took possession of the Court House, and so prevented the sitting of the Court at that place. To meet this emergency, four thousand troops were ordered out for thirty days, unless sooner discharged. Of this force, eight hundred were from the county of Middlesex. They were put under the command of General Lincoln. Though the insurgents appeared in martial array at Worcester, Springfield, and several other places, there was never any direct collision between the troops and the insurgents, though a few shots were fired, and three or four of the insurgents were killed. Shays was driven from Springfield, and his force was soon dispersed at Petersham, where one hundred and fifty were taken prisoners, which terminated the rebellion.¹ The precipitate flight of Shays on the appearance of General Lincoln's troops at Petersham, gave rise to much ridicule, and many sallies of wit. In one of the doggerel ballads of the day, his flight is thus characterized :

"When he came to the river of Styx,
Where Charon kept the Ferry;
He called for a speedy passage o'er,
For he durst no longer tarry."

¹ Daniel Shays was born in Hopkinton, 1747. After his rebellion was crushed, he fled to Vermont, and afterwards moved to Sparta, N. Y., where he died September 29, 1825, aged eighty-four. He was a pensioner of the United States.

Though the scene of this rebellion was not laid in Lexington, the inhabitants of this town did not refrain altogether from a participation in the affair. In response to an Address from the town of Boston, touching the subject of this insurrection, the people of Lexington, in town meeting assembled, October 16, 1786, expressed their condemnation of all such lawless proceedings, and promised their co-operation in all suitable measures to put down the rebellion, and sustain the honor and authority of the Government.

Captain William Munroe, with a body of men, marched towards the scene of action; but the flight of Shays rendered any further movement unnecessary, and he returned.

On the tenth of March, 1787, the General Court appointed a Commission, empowered, on certain conditions, to receive the submission of the insurgents. About eight hundred came in and submitted themselves, and were not further proceeded against. Fourteen were tried and convicted. They were severally sentenced to death, and some were even brought to the place of execution; but they were all ultimately pardoned.

While the State was thus embarrassed by its debts, and the people were borne down with pecuniary burdens, the citizens of Lexington freely expressed their sentiments in instructions to their Representative, which show the points of discussion before the public.

At a meeting held March 28, 1787, their Representative was instructed, 'to adhere strictly to the Constitution, to oppose the emission of any paper money, to restore public credit, to oppose the removal of the seat of government from Boston, to urge the imposition of impost duties on foreign articles, and to urge that heavy penalties be imposed upon those who exact excessive interest on money loaned.'

December 10, 1787, Benjamin Brown, Esq., was chosen a delegate to the State Convention to ratify the Constitution of the United States.

At a meeting held April 4, 1791, Rev. Jonas Clarke, Benjamin Brown, Esq., and Captain Joseph Simonds were elected a committee to present a memorial to Congress asking them to erect a monument over the remains of those persons who were slain on the 19th of April, 1775.

In 1792, great excitement prevailed in town in consequence of the prevalence of that dangerous and loathsome disease, the small pox.

In 1793, the subject of building a new meeting-house began to be agitated. At a meeting held March 11, 1793, it was "voted unanimously to build a New Meeting-House, and to set it in the most convenient place, near the present Meeting-House."

His Excellency Governor Hancock, learning that the people of Lexington, for whom he always manifested a strong attachment, were about to build a new meeting-house, generously placed a hundred dollars at their disposal to aid them in the enterprise; for which he received "the thanks of said inhabitants, for this fresh instance of his friendship and affection to the town, in which the memory of his pious ancestors is still held in veneration, and the name of HANCOCK will ever be precious."

May 23, 1793, the town voted to build a new meeting-house, and to have two porches and a tower to the proposed house. Thus far the town proceeded with great unanimity. They all wanted a new meeting-house. They all desired it to be located on the Common. But when they came to minor points, as is usual on such subjects, a difference of opinion arose. Town meeting after town meeting was held, to decide whether the house should be set a few feet more or less from the old meeting-house; whether it should "face due south," or "down the great road;" whether there should be one porch or two; or whether it should be painted "pea-green" or some other color.

But these questions were finally adjusted by voting to set the house "twenty feet back of the sills of the old house," and that it should "face half-way between south and south-east." But it does not appear that these differences obstructed the march of improvement; for in anticipation of a new house, they positively directed their committee to provide those indispensable appendages of a meeting-house, horse-blocks. Smile not at the rustic manners of our fathers; for you must know that in those days the ladies rode to meeting on horseback behind their husbands or brothers, and were much more punctual in attendance than people are at the present day, with handsome carriages to ride in. In those days a pillion was a necessary part of a young lady's outfit, and many a belle has been seen riding to a ball behind her intended, upon a pillion of her own furnishing. And at church, how could a lady mount her horse, behind her gentleman, unless she had a horse-block to ascend? These horse-blocks may be considered almost in the light of an institution; and a sounding-board over the pulpit and a horse-block near the house, were almost as important as the house itself.

The house being finished was dedicated on the 15th of January, 1795. About the same time, the pews were sold at auction. The size of the house appears not to be a matter of record. The number of pews below was fifty-four, and the number in the gallery was twenty-four. The aggregate sale amounted to $5,887. Besides these pews, there were seats in the body of the house; and a seat reserved for the negroes.

This meeting-house was situated on the south-easterly end of the Common, near the present liberty pole.

When the Treaty of Amity, Commerce and Navigation between the United States and Great Britain, commonly called Jay's Treaty, was made known to the American people, it met with decided opposition. On the 13th of August, 1795, the inhabitants of Lexington met in town meeting for the purpose of considering that treaty. When the treaty was read, it was referred to a Committee, of which Rev. Jonas Clarke was Chairman. This drew from Mr. Clarke an able paper, in which he condemns the treaty, and shows the impolicy of many of its provisions. As the subject has long since passed by, and as our space is limited, we reluctantly exclude it from our pages. We will however say, that it fully sustains the character of its author for ability and watchful devotion to what he believed to be the true interest of his country, and his paper was unanimously adopted by the town. Nor was Lexington alone in opposing that treaty. It drew from many of our soundest men severe condemnation. It was assailed by argument and by wit — in prose and in verse. One scribbler vents his spleen thus :

“ Grenville and Pitt with Jonney Jay,
Have fairly bargained us away.”

In the misunderstanding between France and the United States in 1797 and 1798, Congress had under consideration the subject of arming merchant vessels, that they might defend themselves against French depredations. The inhabitants of Lexington in town meeting assembled, adopted a memorial to Congress, expressing their apprehension that such a measure would be fraught with danger; that it would be committing the peace of the nation into the hands of any and every master or commander of a vessel, so armed and commissioned; who, through ignorance, prejudice, resentment or design, might commit acts of hostility, and so involve the nation in war, in contravention of the Constitution, which makes Congress the sole judge of the propriety of declaring war, after a full consideration of the subject.

This memorial is the last paper, found upon the town records, prepared by their faithful pastor and enlightened statesman, Mr. Clarke. Few towns are able to furnish from their records, papers so numerous, elaborate, and able as Lexington; and if she has whereof to boast, nothing, save the heroic part she acted on the 19th of April, 1775, can stand in preference to the able state papers which emanated from her village clergyman.

The nineteenth century opens upon Lexington with a population of 1,006, being sixty-five more than in 1790. Nothing of importance occurred in the town for some years. Having recovered in a good degree from the pecuniary embarrassments growing out of the Revolution, the people became more liberal in their appropriations for schools, highways, and other objects, which mark the progress of civilization. In 1805, the town experienced a severe loss in the death of their devoted and distinguished pastor, Rev. Jonas Clarke. They manifested their regret, and respect for his memory by bearing the expense of his funeral, and caring for his family after his decease. Mr. Clarke died, November 15, 1805, being in the seventy-fifth year of his age, and in the fifty-first year of his ministry.¹

In October, 1807, the church, acting separately from the town, as was then the custom in all the Congregational churches, voted to call Mr. Avery Williams, and submitted their action to the town, which voted unanimously to concur with the church. The town voted to offer him a salary of seven hundred dollars, and one thousand dollars as a settlement, — he relinquishing all claim upon the ministerial lands and fund. Mr. Williams accepted the call, and was ordained, December 30, 1807. The town made ample provision for the occasion, as appears by the fact that they paid Amos Muzzy, Jr., $139.78 for entertaining the Council.

On the 4th of July, 1809, the people of Lexington celebrated the Thirty-third Anniversary of our Independence. Benjamin Greene, Esq., delivered an oration, in which he made the following allusion to the town of Lexington and her martyred citizens :

“If there ever was a time when it might be more than ordinarily the duty of posterity to recount the wonderful achievements, and to call to mind the insurmountable fortitude and perseverance of their ancestors; and if there ever was a place peculiarly appropriate to this important purpose, surely this is the time, this is the place. For here the thunders of British oppression, which had been accumulating for years, like the fulminating bolt from the dark and condensed tempest, burst its barriers, disgoring its direful effects upon the innocent victims of its cruel and relentless rage; and here the soil of freedom was first moistened with the blood of her sons.

“That frail monument shall moulder to the dust, and be mingled with the corporeal of those whose names it is designed to perpetuate. But their names shall be remembered and repeated by the last of freedom's race. By their blood they have consecrated this place; and on the wings of their fame have they borne the name of LEXINGTON through every region of the globe.”

The health of Rev. Mr. Williams declining, and a journey South failing to restore him, the town, after supplying the pulpit for several months at their own expense, in September, 1815, came into an agreement with Mr. Williams, by which his connection with the parish should terminate — they paying him six hundred dollars.

The subject of the “Great Bridge” between the towns of Cambridge and Brighton, which had annoyed the people of Lexington for about a century, and which required of them an annual tax for repairs, appeared in 1815 in a form more oppressive. The bridge was rebuilt at a cost of $1,727, of which Lexington was required to pay $356.64 — a tax sufficiently oppressive when it is considered that few if any of the inhabitants of the town ever passed over it.

During the war of 1812 with Great Britain, party politics ran high in the State. Lexington was strongly Republican. In 1814, the 4th of July was celebrated in the town with great show and parade. By eleven o'clock, four or five thousand people had assembled. A procession was formed, which moved to the meeting-house, escorted by a detachment of Colonel Loring's Fourth Regiment. The services at the church were as follows: Prayer, by Rev. Edmund Foster; reading of the Declaration of Independence, by Gen. Joseph B. Varnum; Oration, by Hon. Timothy Fuller. The assembly was honored by the presence of Gen. Henry Dearborn, and several other officers of the army under his command. The presence of Hon. Elbridge Gerry, Vice President of the United States, added to the interest of the occasion. Gen. Varnum presided at the table. That the ladies might participate in the festivities of the occasion, a spacious marquee was erected on the Green, and a social tea party was formed. At least a thousand persons partook of the bounties of the table. In the evening a splendid ball was given in the marquee, which was tastefully fitted up for the purpose.

Many distinguished men of the Republican party, among whom were Hon. Judge Dana, Hon. Benjamin Austin, Hon. George Blake, and Hon. William Eustis, honored the occasion by their presence. It was truly a proud day for Lexington. The Orator of the day alludes to Lexington in this thrilling strain: "This glorious spot, the hallowed scene of this day's devotion; this happy, favored spot, beheld the first precious, ruddy drops, shed to redeem our country. Yonder sacred pedestal, the faint emblem of our gratitude, declares the names of the first victims of British injustice. But long after that shall have crumbled to dust, the faithful page of history, the hearts of a grateful people shall engrave the deeds, and transmit the glorious record to remotest ages."

But Lexington did not confine her support of the government and of the war in which we were engaged, to mere words. She made provision for the soldiers who might volunteer, or be called out by the national or State government, voting them five dollars bounty, and a sum which would make up their pay to sixteen dollars a month, including the amount offered by the General Government.

In 1821, in order to keep up with the times, and make a little more noise in the world, the town voted to exchange their church bell for a larger one.

As Lafayette, the distinguished Frenchman, who had served us so faithfully in our Revolution, and by military and civil talents had contributed so much towards the establishment of our Independence, had consented to become the guest of a grateful country during his sojourn in America; and as he would probably desire to visit all the places memorable in the great patriotic struggle in which he had so nobly participated, it was natural to suppose that he would delight to visit the spot which was distinguished as the birth-place of American Liberty. And the good people of Lexington, true to the spirit of their fathers, extended to the hero and sage a cordial invitation to visit the place, and receive the congratulations of the admiring throng. To enable the whole people to participate as far as possible in paying a tribute of gratitude and heartfelt admiration, the subject was laid before the inhabitants in town meeting assembled. On the 30th of August, 1824, it was “Voted, That the Board of Selectmen, together with Messrs. Abijah Harrington, John Muzzey, Elias Phinney, James Brown, Samuel Downing and Christopher Reed, be a Committee to make arrangements to give General Lafayette a suitable reception in this place.

“Voted, That the Committee be authorized to draw upon the Town Treasurer for any sum of money that may be necessary to defray the expense of the preparation to receive the General.”

This vote of the town, giving their Committee the power to draw from the Treasury without limitation, shows the state of feeling which pervaded the country at that time. Lafayette was the guest of the nation, and the entire people were disposed to show him the greatest possible respect. The recollection of his patriotic and valuable services in the field, and the no less valuable services in procuring aid from the French government, endeared him to every American; and wherever he went he was hailed with joy and admiration. His tour through the country was rapid, and was marked everywhere by the most heartfelt demonstrations of gratitude and admiration. Cavalcades moved forward to meet him, cannon announced his approach, bells rang out their merry peals of congratulation and welcome, triumphant arches were thrown across the streets on which he was to pass, flags tastefully entwined, or thrown openly to the breeze, testified to the universal joy which the community felt. Never did a conqueror, returning from his victorious exploits, receive such heartfelt adulation. The pageantry attending the tour of monarchs through their dominions, escorted and protected by their hireling bands of armed men, of which history furnishes many examples, are mere empty show, ostentatious parade, or feigned adulation, at which the heart sickens, when compared with the sincere and voluntary homage paid to this illustrious man, by every friend of liberty throughout the land.

On the 2d of September, 1824, Lafayette honored Lexington with his presence. Attended by his voluntary suite, he left Boston for our peaceful village. At the line of the town he was received by a troop of horse, and a cavalcade of citizens, who escorted him to the Common. Here was a beautiful arch of evergreen and flowers, with a motto, — "Welcome, Friend of America, to the Birthplace of American Liberty." The Common was tastefully decorated with flags, and a large concourse of people had assembled to do honor to one who had done so much for our country. Among those thus assembled, were the children from the schools, and fourteen of the gallant men who had participated in the battle of the 19th of April, 1775. After entering the Common, under the arch before mentioned, the procession moved to the Monument, where the following patriotic and eloquent speech of welcome, was delivered by Major Elias Phinney, of Lexington :

General:— In behalf of the Committee of Arrangements and the Inhabitants of Lexington, allow me to tender you the assurance of their most respectful and cordial welcome to this town. Impressed with a sense of the important services you have rendered this country, they meet you on this occasion, and upon this memorable spot, with hearts swelling with every emotion which a generous love for your exalted character, and a grateful remembrance of the distinguished lustre of your deeds can inspire.

"On this hallowed ground, consecrated by the blood of the first martyrs to liberty, was kindled that flame which roused the nation to arms, and conducted them through peril and blood to a glorious Independence. Here a small band of patriots hurled the first signal of defiance to a host in arms, and taught the enemies of their country the appalling truth, that Americans dared to die in defence of their rights.

“These hardy and virtuous yeomanry of the country offer you the sincere tribute of their warmest affections. Among them your presence has awakened emotions too powerful for utterance. With the name of Lafayette is associated every comfort which sweetens the fruit of their toil, every charm which crowns the altar of domestic happiness. Under the shadow of that glorious fabric, which your hands have assisted in rearing, they repose in peace and security.

“Permit me, Sir, in common with grateful millions, to express our earnest solicitations that a life which has for so many years been steadfastly devoted to the cause of national liberty — which has so long encountered, without dismay, the frowns of arbitrary power, may be preserved for many years to come, a blessing and an honor to mankind; and when you, Sir, and your brave associates in the war of the Revolution, shall have ceased from your earthly labors, instead of the fathers, may their children rise up to bless your memory, and emulate your virtues.”

The General, with great sensibility, expressed his warmest thanks for the flattering attention he had received from the people of Lexington, and the satisfaction and pleasure he felt in standing upon the soil consecrated by the blood of patriots to the glorious cause of freedom throughout the world; and the high gratification he experienced in beholding the surviving remnant of that heroic band, which here inaugurated that resistance to tyrants, which is obedience to God.

After these ceremonies were over, the General was introduced to fourteen of the Spartan band who had rallied under the gallant Parker, on the memorable 19th of April, half a century before, to assert the rights of freemen in the face of a haughty foe. After exchanging cordial greetings with the citizens assembled on the Green, they partook of a collation prepared for the occasion. Every thing went off agreeably, and the day will long be remembered by those who were present.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of Lexington, held December 13, 1824, a committee was appointed, consisting of Hon. Nathan Chandler, Rev. Charles Briggs, Elias Phinney, Amos Muzzy, Abijah Harrington, Benjamin O. Wellington, Charles Reed, John Muzzy, and Francis Bowman, Jr., Esquires, to collect and present to the public a statement of such facts relative to the affair at Lexington on the morning of the 19th of April, 1775, as may be supported by undoubted testimony, and which may be calculated to place the transactions of that day, before the public, in their true light.

This measure was adopted in consequence of publications which claimed for Concord the leading honors of the 19th of April, 1775. These writers claimed that "at Concord the first blood was shed between the British and the armed Americans," and "that the first forcible resistance" was made at the North Bridge in Concord. Elias Phinney, Esq., acting for the committee, of which he was a member, prepared and published in 1825, a succinct and well digested history of the events of that day, so far at least as Lexington was concerned, — showing conclusively that the first blood on both sides was shed at Lexington, and that though the British at Lexington as at Concord fired first, several of Captain Parker's men returned the fire. These statements were fully substantiated by the affidavits of several persons who were present and acting on that occasion. The pamphlet of Major Phinney, written with ability and candor, went far towards settling that controversy. The lists of the casualties of that day decide most conclusively who were at posts of danger, and who were in the forefront of the battle. While Lexington with a single company had ten killed and ten wounded, Concord with two companies had no one killed and only four or five wounded, and one of them a citizen pursuing his ordinary occupation.

Concord, rather unfortunately for her fame, subsequently engaged in a controversy with Acton, relative to the events of that day. Josiah Adams, Esq., a native of Acton, delivered a Centennial Address in his native town in 1835, in which he defended Captain Davis, who fell gallantly leading the column to the Bridge occupied by the British troops; and in doing this he called in question the claims of Concord, relative to the honors of the day. This defence of Captain Davis gave offence to the citizens of Concord, and a controversy ensued which drew from Mr. Adams a spicy letter to Lemuel Shattuck, Esq., the author of the History of Concord, in which he showed conclusively that to Captain Davis and his Acton company belonged the principal honor of the affair at the North Bridge.¹

¹ Mr. Adams, in his publications, maintains with great force that on the hill where the Provincials were assembled, the Concord companies both ranked the Acton company; that they were paraded on the right near the road leading to the Bridge; that both seniority of rank, and position on the field, would

In 1825, the citizens of Lexington celebrated the Fourth of July in a becoming manner. Rev. Caleb Stetson delivered the Oration, which was replete with patriotic sentiments. After paying a general tribute to the heroic, self-sacrificing spirit of our fathers who achieved our independence, the speaker alludes to Lexington in the following peroration: "But there are local associations coming home to our hearts, awakening an intense and absorbing interest. We can never forget that in this village, in the little band that stood in fearless array with the gallant Parker, the spirit of resistance to British oppression was first roused to action. Here was shed that blood in which the Declaration of Independence was written."

Alluding to those who fell on the 19th of April, he said: "Their memory is the legacy of mankind. It will descend with power and pathos to the bosoms of distant posterity. Yonder Monument is but an inadequate and perishing memorial of their glory — but the seal of immortality is already stamped upon it. We carry forward our vision through the shadowy range of coming generations, and see it grow brighter and brighter in the dimness of the distance. And it shall live in every heart that beats in freedom's cause, when the mausoleums of departed greatness, and the monuments of pride and power shall have mouldered to oblivion."

naturally devolve upon the Concord companies the duty of leading the column down the narrow causeway to the Bridge; but that in fact Captain Davis, occupying a central position in the line, wheeled his company out of the line, and marched in front of the Concord companies, and at the head of the column, to dislodge the British from the Bridge; and that this must have been done with the approbation of Major Buttrick, who commanded at the time. He also asserts that on the retreat of the British from Concord, the Acton men joined in the pursuit, and followed them as far at least as Lexington, where one of their number was killed; but that there is not the least evidence, that the Concord companies ever left their own town during that day; that the assertion that the first forcible resistance was made at Concord is untrue; that there was forcible resistance at Lexington several hours before; and that the resistance at Concord was made by the Acton and not by the Concord men. He also confutes the assertion that when they marched down to the Bridge and returned the British fire, they had not heard that the enemy had fired upon Captain Parker's men at Lexington several hours before. Any one who wishes to understand the transaction at Concord, and to honor those to whom honor is due, will do well to read the publications of Mr. Adams.

CHAPTER XI.

FROM THE YEAR 1830 TO 1867.

The Nineteenth of April celebrated by the Town — The Remains of the Martyrs of 1775 removed — Controversy relative to the Ministerial Fund — The Town Hall — Kossuth visits Lexington — Death of Jonathan Harrington — Breaking out of the Rebellion — Lexington sends her Quota of Men — Bounty to the Soldiers.

No one day in the annals of Lexington, save the 19th of April, 1775, stands out so prominent as April 20, 1835. On that day, the remains of the heroes who fell on Lexington Green, in 1775, which had been interred in the grave-yard, were removed and deposited in a vault, prepared for the purpose, near the base of the Monument, with appropriate ceremonies, which will long be remembered. On the 28th of April, the year preceding, at a legal town meeting, it was “ Voted unanimously, To have the remains of those who were killed by the British, on the morning of the 19th of April, 1775, removed and re-entombed near the Monument, (with the consent of their surviving relations.)”

“ Voted, To choose a Committee to carry the foregoing vote into effect.”

The following gentlemen were chosen, viz :

ELIAS PHINNEY, Esq., Chairman .	CHARLES REED, Esq.
Gen. SAMUEL CHANDLER,	WILLIAM CHANDLER, Esq.
Maj. B. O. WELLINGTON,	AMBROSE MORRELL, Esq.
BENJAMIN MUZZY, Esq.	Col. PHILIP RUSSELL.

The Committee, impressed with the solemnity and importance of the subject, wisely selected the Anniversary of their fall, as the day to remove their remains ; and as the event was one of historic and national importance, with equal wisdom, chose one of the nation's most distinguished orators, Hon. Edward Everett, to deliver an Address on the occasion. The names of the persons whose remains were inclosed in the sarcophagus were, Jonas Parker, Robert Munroe, Samuel Hadley, Jonathan Harrington, Jr., Isaac Muzzy, Caleb Harrington, and John Brown. These persons belonged to Lexington and were killed in the morning. Three other citizens of Lexington were killed on the return of the British in the afternoon, viz., Jedediah Munroe, John Raymond, and Nathaniel Wyman.

The bodies of the seven individuals belonging to Lexington were, at the time of their death, inclosed in long wooden boxes, made of rough boards, and buried in one common grave, in the burying-ground, separate and apart from all other graves. A few days prior to the celebration, their remains were disinterred under the direction of the Committee, placed in a wooden coffin, which was inclosed in lead and made air-tight, and the whole in a mahogany sarcophagus, on the sides and ends of which were eight urns, bearing the names and emblematical of the individuals whose remains were contained therein. A deposit was made in the sarcophagus of a thick leaden box, hermetically sealed, containing the following articles, viz. :—A copy of the History of the Battle of Lexington, by Elias Phinney, Esq., a sketch of the exercises and orders of the day, a copy of the Bunker Hill Aurora, and a copy of the Concord Whig; the names of the President of the United States, of the Lieutenant Acting Governor of Massachusetts, and the clergymen of Lexington. To receive the sarcophagus, a tomb had been prepared in the rear of the foundation of the Monument.

Salutes and minute guns were fired at intervals, during the morning, and flags raised in honor of the occasion, were waving at half mast until the close of the funeral services. At an early hour the village was filled with visitors to the number of several thousands, notwithstanding the unpropitious state of the weather. Public and private houses were thrown open and filled with visitors.

The procession was formed at 11 o'clock, near the Monument House, and moved under a military escort, consisting of the Lexington Artillery and a volunteer company of light infantry, commanded respectively by Capt. J. F. LeBarron and Capt. Billings Smith. The procession moved to the burying ground, where they received the sarcophagus, the band performing appropriate music during the ceremony. On arriving at the church, the military opened to the right and left, the sarcophagus was placed in the broad aisle, and the procession entered. The pulpit was occupied by the Chaplain and the Reverend Clergy. In front of the pulpit a platform had been raised for the orator; and on each side of him on the platform were seated the survivors of Capt. Parker's company, viz.: Dr. Joseph Fiske, Daniel Mason, Benjamin Locke, William Munroe, Jonathan Harrington, Ebenezer Simonds, Jonathan Loring, John Hosmer, Isaac Durant, Josiah Reed. Solomon Brown and Ebenezer Parker were absent, one living at a great distance, and the other on account of the infirmities of age. The galleries were occupied exclusively by the ladies. Notwithstanding the unpromising state of the weather, the preceding evening and that morning, the church was filled to overflowing, as well as the platform which had been erected round the church, and the windows, were also filled with hearers.

After an appropriate prayer by Rev. James Walker, Hon. Edward Everett delivered an Address, which was listened to in breathless silence for two entire hours. We shall attempt no synopsis of this Address. Nothing short of the whole could give an adequate idea of its power and beauty. It is enough to say that it has been given to the public, and is one of the happiest efforts of that distinguished orator, whose words have electrified the country, and whose life even to the last, has been devoted to the great cause of American Independence.

We cannot, however, dismiss this masterly Address without saying that Mr. Everett gave a succinct statement of the causes of the American Revolution, passed a justly merited eulogy upon John Hancock and Samuel Adams, commended the able and patriotic efforts of Rev. Jonas Clarke, noticed the preparations made in Lexington to meet the crisis; and of the events which occurred on the Common on the 19th of April, 1775, said: "Another volley aimed with fatal precision, succeeds. Several dropped, killed and wounded. Capt. Parker now felt the necessity of directing his men to disperse; but it was not till several of them had returned the British fire, and some of them more than once, that this handful of brave men were driven from the field."

After the close of the exercises at the church, the procession again formed, and moving around the inclosed battle ground to the Monument, the sarcophagus was placed within the iron railing in a tomb of stone masonry, prepared to receive it. Three volleys of musketry were then fired over the grave, and the procession moved on to the pavillion erected near the Monument House, where a collation was prepared.

Elias Phinney, Esq., Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, presided at the table. On each side of the President were the invited guests, including Lieutenant Governor Armstrong and Aids, Orator and Chaplains, Daniel Webster, Judge Story, President Quincy, Attorney General Austin, Adjutant General Dearborn, and others.

The sentiments given on the occasion were responded to by the distinguished guests, who passed the highest eulogiums upon Lexington and her brave minute-men.

Lexington had been blessed in her historic association, and in every department of her history. This had been particularly true of her parochial affairs. It is a lamentable fact that the spiritual concerns of a community, which should teach them forbearance and charity, have in many, very many instances, been the cause of more disputes and heart-burnings, and have produced more rancor and bitterness than almost anything else. Lexington, as we have seen, had been an exception to this too general rule for almost a century and a half.

But alas for human nature! offences will come. As soon as Lexington became a parish, the people took measures to create a parsonage or ministerial fund, which should secure to them the means of supporting, or rather aid them in supporting the Gospel ministry. They purchased a quantity of land, and set it apart for that purpose. The original cost of the land was but about $67, which was raised by a tax upon the parish. This land, or the avails of it, have been cherished with great fondness, and managed with extreme care and fidelity. In 1817, an Act was obtained, incorporating certain persons as Trustees of the Ministerial Fund, whose accounts were audited annually by the town. This fund in 1830, amounted to the sum of $16,600, besides a quantity of land unsold.

So long as the people were of one heart and one mind, this fund proved a blessing to the parish—if indeed it be a blessing to any religious society to be relieved from all contributions for the support of religious institutions. It is a principle of our nature to value things somewhat in proportion to the labor and cost of obtaining them; and this applies to institutions as well as to tangible things. There is generally a more healthy, active religious feeling in societies which sustain themselves by their annual contributions, than in those societies which lean upon funds for support. We are far from believing that parish funds, in all cases, are a curse. When societies are feeble, a parish fund would prove a blessing while it aids them to support the institutions of religion, without paralyzing their own efforts. It is with parishes as with individuals, those are the most prosperous which have made personal efforts, and cultivated the virtue of self-reliance.

In 1830 a portion of those who had worshiped at the church of the old parish, formed themselves into a Baptist society, and subsequently a second Congregational society and a Universalist society were formed in the East Village.

In 1833 an article was inserted in the Warrant for March meeting, which gave embodiment to the feeling which prevailed in the eastern section of the town. "To see if the town will move the old meeting-house, or build a new one in some central place, where there can be land procured to build out-buildings; or build one in the eastern section of the town, and settle a minister as colleague with Mr. Briggs, to supply preaching in both houses." The same article was inserted in the Warrant for a meeting in August of that year; and though these Articles were voted down by decided majorities, the opposition were not discouraged or disheartened. In October, 1834, they procured the insertion of an Article in the Warrant for a town meeting,— "To see whether the town will petition the Legislature, either to repeal the Act incorporating the Trustees of the Ministerial Fund, or to so modify the same that the equal rights to aid from profits resulting therefrom, may be secured to all the inhabitants of said town, agreeably to the intention of its ancient founders." This Article was voted down, 120 to 64.

At a meeting, June 1, 1835, an Article was inserted in the Warrant,—“To see if the town will authorize the Trustees of the Ministerial Fund to pay to a Committee chosen for that purpose, one half of the income of said fund towards the support of a Congregational minister to preach to that part of the First Congregational society who worship in the East Village.” This Article discloses the fact that those worshipping in the East Village still claim to be members of the old society and vote in their meetings. The town refused to act upon the Article.

This contest went on for years, and town meeting after town meeting was called for the express purpose of obtaining a portion of this fund. Not only those who resided in the East Village, but the Baptists and Universalists, who had formed societies, claimed a share of the fund; and in order to be more successful, they all retained their membership in the old parish.

From ill health, Rev. Mr. Briggs resigned his office as pastor, and Rev. Mr. Swett was invited to take his place. But this only gave a new opportunity for the disaffected to renew their demand for a portion of the fund. It would be tiresome to go through all the details of this strife. But one thing is certain, viz. that the income of the fund was the prize sought. Like the eager heirs of a large estate, they were willing to sacrifice the harmony of the community and the very object of all preaching, in a scramble for the means to pay the preacher.

As was natural, the opposing parties, though they had no common sympathy for each other, would unite against the stronger party, and paralyze their efforts. The old society could not hold a meeting, or settle a minister, or transact their ordinary parish business, without encountering the opposition of those who in a practical point of view, had no sympathy with the society, being alienated either by doctrinal sentiments or sectional feelings from the parish. In 1845 all parties became weary of the strife and came to a mutual understanding, by which the income of the fund should be divided between the different religious societies on the basis of the taxable property held by the members of each society respectively.

Now that the contest is over, and the fund divided on a wise basis, and most of those who took the lead in that unfortunate struggle have passed off the stage, we can look upon this matter impartially, and hence learn wisdom from the foibles of those who have gone before us. The character of the town has suffered by this bitter controversy, the effects of which have hardly yet passed away. And here Lexington does not stand alone. Almost every town which has had any considerable fund, has experienced a like contest and alienation of feeling growing out of it.

On the legal rights of the case there is no room for doubt. All such funds are the property, not of the town, but of the parish. The law of Massachusetts, as expounded by the Courts, is clear. Every original township was a parish, and the two organizations, the Municipal and the Parochial, co-existed. When a bequest was made to the town, or when the town created a fund for the support of the minister, the property vested in the parish — the town being nothing but Trustee for the parish. But the case of the Lexington Fund was still stronger. The land which formed the basis of this fund was bought and paid for by the parish, nearly twenty years before the town had a being. Consequently it belonged to the parish by as good a title as is known to the law. When, therefore, a person ceased to be a member of the parish, he ceased to be a joint owner of the fund. By leaving the parish he relinquished all right in and control over this parish property. While he remained in the parish he would have a right to vote; but being a member of a corporation, he must submit to the voice of the majority. If, therefore, those people who had formed themselves into a Baptist Society, or a Universalist Society, or who worshiped at the East Village, had left the old parish, they could have no legal claim upon the fund. But if they still belonged to the old parish, they were legally bound by a vote of the majority. So that at no time during this controversy, were any of their legal rights infringed.

But they claimed that they had an equitable right to their share of the fund. This certainly deserves consideration. But on what was such a claim founded? On the original intent of those who created the fund? They designed it for the support of the ministry in their parish, and not in other rival societies which would tend to break down the parish for which they were providing. Did they base their claim in equity on the fact that they were members of the parish, and should have their share of the profits of the Fund? If they were members of the parish, they were bound in law and equity to abide by the voice of the majority. Did those at the East Village claim a portion of the fund on the ground that they lived at a great distance from the meeting-house? It is a notorious fact that at the time the fund was created, and the meeting-house built on the Common, there was a greater proportion of the inhabitants at the extreme eastern and other out-parts of the township, as compared with the centre, than there was when they were urging their plea.

Besides, all pleas of right imply corresponding obligations and duties. Suppose the parish had been in debt for their meeting-house, or for the past salaries of their ministers, would these discontented persons have been willing to be taxed to pay that indebtedness? I apprehend that under that state of things, they would have regarded it as an act of injustice to call upon them to help pay the old debt, contracted it may be, before they were born, and would have shown their unwillingness by leaving the society. And further, was it acting on principles of moral equity to retain their legal membership, that they might be able to vote themselves a portion of this fund, when in fact, they were members of other societies, which they were laboring to build up at the expense of the old parish? The facts in the case show that those who had formed rival societies, had no claim in law or equity to any portion of the fund.

At the same time the old parish were unwise in resisting the application as long as they did. A little sober reflection should have taught them that the peace and harmony of the town was worth more in a civil, social, and religious point of view, than a few hundred dollars of the Ministerial Fund. They should have seen earlier than they did, that a determined minority would be likely to succeed in the end; and that it was a safe and wise policy to soothe rather than exasperate an opposition; and that it was wiser to bestow cheerfully than wait and be compelled to yield reluctantly. And had they not brooded over this fund so long, and cherished it with so much fondness, they might have seen that the tendency of a large fund was to paralyze rather than quicken religious feeling — the great object for which the Christian ministry was instituted. They acted discreetly at last in consenting to a division, and the only pity is, that it was not done at an earlier day.

Now that the whole thing is past, and the effects are known, no doubt all parties can see the errors into which they were betrayed; and are now ready to admit that the peace of the community is of more true worth, and the reputation of the town is more valuable, than the income of any ordinary fund, though it may be denominated Ministerial. Experience must have taught all parties, that a large fund to support the ministry will not increase the interest and religious engagedness of a society, and that any portion of such a fund, obtained by strife, will not insure permanency to the societies which receive it.

We would gladly have passed over this unfortunate page in the history of this otherwise peaceful town. But the impartial historian should record the unpleasant events which occur, as well as those which are more agreeable. It is from this presentation of light and shade that the spirit of the age may be seen, and the true character of individuals or communities may be known.

The Act of the Legislature, in 1845, providing for a distribution of the income of the Ministerial fund, was accepted by the town by a unanimous vote, March 31, 1845. Thus an end was put to that unpleasant and unprofitable controversy, and at the same time the subject was removed from the consideration of the town, and delivered over to the parishes.

When that remarkable man, Louis Kossuth, former Governor of Hungary, fled from his country to escape the barbarity of Austria, and visited the United States, he was invited by the Governor of Massachusetts, at the request of the Legislature, to visit our Capital and become the guest of the State. He complied with the invitation, and during his sojourn in the State, visited most of the principal cities and towns, where he was received and welcomed by thousands of the inhabitants. Being an exile from his native land, and an ardent lover of free institutions, he would naturally desire to visit the birth-place of American Liberty. He was invited to Lexington. On the 11th of May, 1852, he left Boston, and taking West Cambridge in his route, he was escorted by the horsemen of that and the neighboring towns, to the boundary of Lexington, where he was received by the Lexington Committee and a large cavalcade. The procession then moved to Lexington Common, where a rostrum had been erected near the Monument, and appropriately decorated. All sides of the Common were hung with flags, tastefully arranged; at the entrance was the inscription — "WELCOME TO THE BIRTH-PLACE OF AMERICAN LIBERTY." A large concourse of people had assembled at the Green, and the school children were arranged along the walk, who greeted Kossuth as he passed.

On reaching the platform, Kossuth was introduced by Col. Isaac H. Wright to Hon. Charles Hudson, Chairman of the Lexington Committee, who addressed him as follows:

"GOVERNOR KOSSUTH, — As the organ of the citizens of Lexington, I bid you a cordial welcome to this quiet and peaceful village. We are assembled here this morning to pay our honors and to tender our sympathy to one who in other lands, has so nobly vindicated the rights of man against the encroachments of arbitrary and despotic power. Your advocacy of human rights, your devotion to the best interests of your beloved country, your labors for her welfare, and your suffering in her behalf, justly commend you to the friends of free institutions throughout the world. We rejoice in this opportunity of tendering to you our unfeigned regard, and to your bleeding country our kindest sympathy.

"We welcome you to this consecrated spot, on which was shed the first blood in that glorious struggle which made us a free and prosperous people, and gave us a name among the nations of the earth. But these blessings were dearly bought. This Green has been trampled by a foreign foe. Here our fathers met their oppressors, and this unpretending stone tells the sad story of their fate. In yonder humble dwelling,¹ our domestic exiles, the proscribed Hancock and Adams, sought a retreat, and, like the heroes in Grecian story, consulted the patriot priest on the safety of the Commonwealth.

"But a brighter day has dawned upon our country; and some of the sainted patriots who passed through those struggles, through that wilderness of dangers, and that Red sea of blood, are here to-day to partake of the blessings of this Canaan of rest.

"So may it be with your beloved country! Though a dark cloud overshadows her, its gilded margin betokens a brighter sky, and points to the bow of promise. Your country must ultimately be free. Austria and Russia may combine against her, but their efforts cannot prosper. Let these tyrants rely upon their fortresses and their armies — let their legions come up like the locusts of Egypt; but their trust is vain.

‘Jove shakes the feeble props of human trust,
And towers and armies levels with the dust.’

“I again welcome you to the birth-place of American liberty, and to all the hallowed associations which cluster around this place. I welcome you to the hearts of this people.”

Kossuth in his reply, speaking of those who fell on Lexington Common, on the 19th of April, 1775, said :

“It is their sacrificed blood with which is written the preface of your nation’s history. Their death was and ever will be the first bloody revelation of America’s destiny, and Lexington the opening scene of a revolution, that is destined to change the character of human governments, and the condition of the human race.”¹

After Kossuth had finished his remarks, he was introduced to Jonathan Harrington and Amariah Preston, both soldiers of the Revolution, and each of them ninety-four years of age, and to many others of our citizens, when he visited the old Clarke house, and moved on to Concord, where he had another public reception, made a speech, and returned to Boston the same day.

On the 26th of March, 1854, Jonathan Harrington, the last survivor of the battle of Lexington, closed his earthly career, aged 95 years, 8 months, and 18 days. At his funeral a large concourse of people assembled, a military procession was formed, and the greatest respect was shown to the memory of one, who in his early youth had sounded the shrill notes of liberty in the ears of foreign oppressors, and had lived to witness the happy fruits of that Revolution, in the opening scene of which he had participated.¹

As we are to enter upon that part of our history which connects us with a mighty struggle to sustain our institutions, it is due the truth of history to state the cause of this gigantic rebellion. It is well known that immediately after the Revolution, the subject of African slavery was agitated in the country; and though our high-minded and patriotic statesmen, North and South, regarded the institution as corrupt and degrading to our national character, they fondly believed that the odious system would soon cease in the Republic. And having dedicated all the territory owned by the United States to freedom by the ordinance of 1787, our fathers adopted our Constitution recognizing slavery as an existing fact. Such, however, was their aversion to the system, that they would not suffer the word slave or slavery to be inserted in the Constitution — declaring that they believed that in a short time slavery would cease; and they would not suffer the great charter of our Liberty to be polluted by a term which might render it the scoff of the nations of the earth.

But the acquisition of Louisiana, and the culture of cotton which sprang up, changed the whole aspect of this question. The States of Maryland, Virginia, and Kentucky, which had regarded slavery as a pecuniary burden, now found that breeding slaves for the Southern market, became profitable; and instead of following up their oft declared resolution of blotting out the foul stain from their escutcheon, they became wedded to an institution which filled their coffers, and joined with the Gulf States in attempting to extend slavery. As that corrupt system impeded their growth in wealth and population, the South saw that they should lose that control over the destiny of the nation, which they had been able to exert from the foundation of the Government; and to counteract this tendency, they, by the aid of their northern allies, annexed Texas to increase the slaveholding territory; and for the same object, they involved the country in an unnecessary war with Mexico. And after obtaining the ill-fated compromises of 1850, they, aided by their northern followers, succeeded in repealing the Missouri Compromise, that slavery might be extended into Kansas, Nebraska, and the whole north-western territory. These measures all designed, not only to sustain, but to extend slavery, opened the eyes of the free States, and gave rise to the Republican party, and so increased their strength that they were enabled to elect their President.

When the result of this election was known, the southern aspirants, without waiting for the development of President Lincoln's policy, resolved to overthrow the Government which they saw they could no longer control. The policy of the out-going Administration seemed to favor their design. Large quantities of arms and munitions of war had been removed from our northern forts and arsenals, and deposited in the southern States. Our ships of war were mostly dismantled or sent to foreign stations. The leaders at the south availed themselves of these advantages, and strove to set up a slaveholding confederacy on the ruins of our free Republic. One of their number, a leading South Carolinian, declared publicly that the dissolution of the Union was the object at which he had been aiming for twenty years. And Mr. Stevens, the Vice President of the boasted, but short-lived Confederacy, boldly declared that their object was to establish a confederacy whose corner stone should be slavery. His words are: — "The new Constitution has put at rest forever, all agitating questions relating to our peculiar institution. African slavery, as it exists among us, is the proper status of the negro in our form of civilization. Our new government is founded, its corner stone rests upon the great truth that the negro is not equal to the white man; that slavery is his natural and normal condition." Such, in brief, was the object of the rebels, and such the cause of their revolt. And the history of the world does not furnish a more causeless, unjustifiable, or wicked rebellion. It was conceived in a vain ambition, commenced in the basest perfidy, and prosecuted with savage cruelty. Such will be the verdict of posterity. The object of the leaders of the rebellion was to raise themselves to power by building up a slaveholding oligarchy, as oppressive to the mass of the white population as to the black.

Many of the heroes of the Revolution had lived to see the fruit of their toils and sacrifices, in the prosperity of their country. They had seen the nation in her rapid march of improvement and civilization, occupying a proud position among the nations of the earth — teaching the votaries of freedom throughout the civilized world, that liberty was conducive to national prosperity and greatness. But these sainted patriots had passed off the stage, leaving a people enjoying greater blessings than had ever before fallen to the lot of any nation; and we, their descendants, born to this rich inheritance, had almost forgotten the sacrifices with which this vast patrimony was purchased.

The present generation considered their freedom secure. They saw the nation moving forward with gigantic strides, and our flag respected in every part of the habitable earth; and knowing we had nothing to fear from any foreign power, and deeming the Union of the States perpetual, they had suffered the idea of military defence to pass almost into oblivion. They had heard the threats of dissolving the Union, but they regarded them as the idle vaunting of the reckless few, scarcely worthy of a moment's consideration. And when they saw a few factious leaders of a restless and disappointed minority, quitting their seats in Congress for no other conceivable reason, than that they were out-voted at the polls, they could not believe that they would dare to raise a parricidal hand against the country which bore them. Such was the confidence of the great mass of the people in the permanence of the Union, and the love of country which prevailed even at the South, that they could hardly dream of taking up arms against their southern brethren; fondly believing that decrees of secession, like paper blockades, would prove perfectly harmless in the end. And it was not till the air reverberated with the thunders of the artillery opened upon Fort Sumter, that the mass of our people realized that there was any occasion for buckling on their armor in defence of their rights. The same telegram which brought the news of the fall of Sumter, was freighted with a call for seventy-five thousand men. Unprepared as they were, the call met a hearty response from the people, which showed that the fire of patriotism, which had been buried among the cares and bustle of business, had not expired. An impulse like that which went out from Lexington in 1775, seized the public heart, and the whole community resolved that our glorious Union should be sustained at every hazard.

Towns vied with each other in their efforts to send men into the field; and the young men were ready to enroll themselves for the defence of their country. As might be expected in any sudden emergency, when all that we hold dear seemed to be at stake, some of the efforts made in pure patriotism, were not wisely considered, and hence partially failed of their object. But the spectacle was truly grand; and one which should have taught the rebels the hopelessness of their cause, and the nations of Europe the strength and permanence of our institutions. To see a people bred to the arts of peace, and actively engaged in business pursuits, start up as one man, and devote all their energies to the preservation of the Union, is a spectacle truly sublime — showing that the present generation are worthy of their patriotic sires, and that the love of liberty which glowed in the breast of our fathers, was not quenched in the bosoms of their sons. This rising of the people displayed in striking contrast, the baseness of the slavery-loving rebels of the South, and the noble spirit of the free sons of the North.

Fort Sumter was attacked on the 12th of April, and taken possession of on the 14th. On the 15th of April, 1861, the President issued his proclamation, calling for troops. Several regiments in Massachusetts responded at once to the call. Though Lexington, like most of the country towns, had no organized company, several of our young men volunteered and enlisted in companies out of town which were under marching orders. An effort was made to raise a company in Lexington; but there being no manufacturing or other business to retain the young men in the place, it was found difficult to obtain a full company in the town, and hence they united with a neighboring town, in the hope of gathering a full company. While this effort was being made, a town meeting was held, at which it was unanimously voted to appropriate the sum of four thousand dollars to aid the cause; and a large Committee was chosen to disburse the same, as far as might be necessary, to encourage enlistments, and supply the wants of the families of those who should enter the service, for the period of three months — that being the only term then required. But immediately after this appropriation, and before the company was full, the President announced that no more three months' men would be accepted; but that all volunteers must enlist for three years. In the meantime the State Legislature assembled and passed an Act confirming contracts already made by towns in aid of enlistments, and virtually prohibiting such appropriations in future. This changed the whole state of affairs; and the company nearly filled, not choosing to offer themselves for a three years' service, the Committee felt constrained to confine their expenditures to the amount already contracted for. The sum actually expended for clothing, drill-officers, and supplying the families of the soldiers in service, amounted to about six hundred dollars; and the Committee in their Report submitted to the town, and recorded upon the town book, say:—"In view of the whole subject, the Committee believe that the money by them disbursed, has, under the peculiar and exciting state of things under which they have been called to act, been expended in such a manner as to aid the great cause we all have at heart, by contributing to the comfort of the gallant men who have entered the service, and of the families they have left behind them."

Under the novel state of things which existed at the breaking out of the Rebellion, and with the patriotic enthusiasm of the people, it is not strange that errors were committed, and unwise expenditures made in very many cases; but the town records of Lexington show, that while she had patriotism enough to make a generous appropriation to encourage men to enter the service, and to provide for the comfort of them and their families, she had at the same time wisdom and prudence sufficient to guide her emotions, and to expend no more than seemed to be conducive to those ends.

While some of our neighboring towns, at the commencement of the war, expended thousands of dollars in a way which they themselves at a later period, saw to be fruitless, Lexington can look back upon her early expenditures with a conviction that they were judicious, and that the balance of the appropriation was more wisely and usefully applied at a later period, than it could have been during the first six months of the war.

But the efforts of the town and the liberality of her citizens did not stop here. On the 2d of July, 1862, the people were called together, "To see what measures the town will adopt in relation to furnishing the town's quota of soldiers, under the call of the President of the United States."

The people having convened, the following preamble and vote were adopted :

" Whereas, the present alarming state of the country requires that large reinforcements should be sent forth without delay, to sustain our gallant soldiers now in the field, and to put down the existing unrighteous rebellion; and as the devoted President of the United States, in the discharge of his official duty, has made an appeal to the patriotism of the people, and the Governor of the Commonwealth, prompt to every such appeal, has designated the quotas of men required of every town: — And whereas the Town of Lexington was the first to seal her devotion to freedom and equal rights, in 1775, and the blood of her slaughtered citizens cries to us from the ground, to sustain the cause in which they offered themselves a living sacrifice; and as every citizen is under the most sacred obligations to bear his share, if not of the perils, yet of the burdens and sacrifices of this righteous contest, and is bound to encourage, support, and sustain those who obey their country's call, and manfully enroll themselves in defence of our dearest rights and privileges; — It is therefore, in open Town-meeting legally called for the purpose,

" Voted unanimously, That a bounty of one hundred dollars be offered to each and every patriotic soldier who will volunteer into the service of the United States, for the period of three years, unless sooner discharged, to fill the quota of twenty men required of this town."

Under the above vote twenty men, the town's full quota, were enlisted, and the sum of two thousand dollars was paid to the soldiers.

Soon after, a call was made by the President for nine months' men, and the quota of Lexington was thirty-one. The town, at a meeting called for the purpose, on the 29th of August, voted a bounty of two hundred dollars. This quota was promptly filled by enlisting thirty-two men, — five of them for three years. Under this vote the town expended six thousand two hundred dollars.

At a subsequent meeting, the town made ample provision for the support of the soldiers' families beyond what was allowed by the State, and requested the Assessors to abate the poll tax of all soldiers in the service.

In addition to the sum granted by the town from time to time to pay the bounty for recruits, individuals subject to military duty, and others not subject to such duty, contributed freely to the same object. All such sums, however, were reimbursed by the town, so that the cost of procuring soldiers, except some incidental expenses, was ultimately paid by the town. Hammon Reed, Esq., Chairman of the Selectmen, in his report in 1866, states the amount paid by the town for procuring soldiers during the rebellion, exclusive of the expenses of town officers, at $25,692. To this amount may safely be added for the sum paid to the families of soldiers, beyond what was reimbursed by the State, and for other incidental expenses, $1,500 — making the gross sum of $27,192. The Selectmen also state that the town had furnished, including re-enlistments, two hundred and forty-four soldiers, being nine more than the town's quota.

In addition to this there were two organized sewing societies working for the hospitals, which sent forward a large amount of clothing and stores for the benefit of the sick and wounded. Lexington also furnished one hospital nurse,¹ whose services were scarcely surpassed by any of that class of self-sacrificing ladies, who submitted to every hardship, and encountered every danger, to relieve the sufferings of the patriotic defenders of our free institutions. As much true moral courage was required to brave disease in the hospitals, as bullets in the field. Lexington furnished two hundred and forty-four soldiers and seamen, being nine more than her quota, and we believe that none of them brought any dishonor upon the town. And though Lexington at the commencement of the rebellion had no military company, and consequently her citizens could commence with no military prestige, yet their record was creditable to themselves and the place they represented. Two² of our citizens entered the service as Captains; one³ as second Lieutenant, and became a Lieutenant Colonel; one⁴ as a private and became Assistant-Adjutant General with the rank of Captain; one⁵ who went out a non-commissioned officer rose to be Major and Commissary of Subsistence; one⁶ who went out as a private rose to the rank of Captain and Major by brevet; and one¹ who went out as a private rose to the rank of Quartermaster. Several others became warrant officers while in service.

Such in brief is the military record of Lexington during the slaveholders' rebellion — and of this record no intelligent citizen need to be ashamed. Lexington has been true to herself, and true to the great principles of civil liberty. She has contributed her share to sustain those institutions which resulted from the American Revolution, the opening scene of which was performed within her limits by her own citizens.

When the late unholy rebellion was substantially brought to a close by the capture of the rebel armies, and the people of the free States were filled with rejoicing at the glorious event, the nation was suddenly thrown into a state of consternation by the tidings of the assassination of our excellent President, who had, with so much wisdom and patriotism, conducted us successfully through the war; and as soon as the first feeling of surprise had subsided, the emblems of rejoicing were displaced by the insignia of mourning. The flags which were thrown to the breeze in honor of our victories, were lowered half-mast as a token of the nation's grief; and the loud huzzas that were echoing through the air gave place to sighs and lamentations; and the thousand bells which were resounding in joy and gladness, ceased their merry peals, that they might toll in unison with the sad laments of the people. Everywhere throughout the free States, a solemn silence reigned, and the whole community felt that the country had met with an irreparable loss. All parties, with one accord, were ready to testify to the worth of the departed statesman, and to do honor to his memory.

The 19th of April, a day dear to every citizen of Lexington, was set apart for the funeral solemnities at Washington; and the people throughout the country were invited to observe the day in some appropriate manner. The people of Lexington assembled at the church of the first parish, which was suitably draped with the insignia of mourning, and appropriate services were performed in the presence of a large and sympathizing assembly. Rev. L. J. Livermore, assisted by Rev. Mr. Savage, conducted the devotional exercises; Rev. William T. Stowe delivered an appropriate address; Charles Hudson, from acquaintance with the deceased, spoke of his personal character and moral worth; and further remarks were made by Rev. Caleb Stetson. The occasion was one of peculiar interest, and the assembly retired with a full sense of the nation's loss.

We cannot close this part of our history without recognizing the hand of God in the trying scenes through which we have passed. Not only the result of the rebellion, but the means employed, show an over-ruling Providence. Slavery, the foul blot upon our national character, had become so interwoven into the texture of southern society, and had so far demoralized the southern heart, that nothing but some great convulsion in the social system could wipe out the stain. Under God this crying evil has been the great instrument of eradicating itself. Slavery, by hardening the heart of the masters, and filling them with a haughty, vain ambition, led them to attempt the overthrow of our free institutions, that they might raise themselves to power, and rule with despotic sway over a confederacy whose corner stone was African servitude. This wicked attempt to degrade and debase four millions of God's creatures — this treacherous effort to overthrow the Government they had sworn to support, and on whose bounty many of them had fattened, showed that the measure of their iniquity was full, and that they were ripe for an overthrow. They waged a cruel war that they might extend and perpetuate slavery, and thereby keep themselves in power. But, short-sighted mortals! your vain attempts to attain an unholy end by treacherous means, have proved your ruin! He that rules in the armies of heaven has overruled your ambition for good, and made your attempt to sustain slavery the means of its overthrow!

Whoever reads the history of this rebellion aright, will see an all-wise Providence restraining the ambitious designs of unprincipled men, and turning their base instrumentalities against them. Their bloody massacre at Fort Pillow, by which they fondly hoped to dissuade the blacks from entering the army — their more than savage cruelty at Belle Isle and Andersonville, by which they hoped to thin the ranks of the Union armies by starving their prisoners to death, or so reducing them to skeletons, that they would be unfit for service if exchanged, only aroused the indignation of the lovers of our free institutions, and called our brave men to the field. Yes, the innocent blood wickedly shed at Fort Pillow, cried from the ground against them; and the feeble moans of our starving prisoners in those wretched pens, under the very eyes of the rebel government, were heard on high, and drew down the withering frowns of the Righteous Ruler of the universe.

On the other hand the Lord raised up a man to guide the nation through this fiery trial, and bring this war to a happy termination. In ABRAHAM LINCOLN we had the statesman, the patriot, and the Christian ruler, that the crisis demanded — a man of the people, who knew their wants, feelings, and sentiments, and who was ready at all times to carry out their views, agreeably to the genius and spirit of our admirable form of government. Had he been a modern Cæsar, or a second Cromwell, guided by his own personal ambition, we might have had more sanguinary battles, and perhaps more brilliant victories. But we should have had a divided North, and probably we should have found it more difficult to dispose of our Chief, after the war was over, than we did to dispose of the rebels while the war was raging. Or had he been a narrow, conceited man, who obstinately disregarded the popular will, and vainly supposed that he showed his greatness by denouncing and attempting to baffle the co-ordinate branches of the government, we might have been at the present day in the midst of a desperate struggle, the scorn and jest of the civilized world.

But, by the mercy of God, we were blessed with a truly republican President, who knew the nature of our institutions, and fully realized that he must obey the public will. While he felt it his duty to lead and direct public opinion, as far as practicable, he was fully sensible that any attempt to resist it, or to go far in advance of it, would be fruitless. This fact is fully sustained by his course in relation to the abolition of slavery. He knew the antagonism between freedom and slavery; he knew that when the exigency should arise, he had the power by the law of nations, to proclaim the slaves free. But as the whole matter lay in his discretion, he did not think it wise to take this step till the public mind was educated up to this point; so that when such a measure should be adopted, it would be fully sustained both at home and abroad. He consequently apprised the public in advance, that at the expiration of one hundred days, unless the rebels should lay down their arms and submit to the laws of the Union, he should, in virtue of the war power, proclaim "liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to those that were bound."

By this prudent delay, this educating the people up to his position, he was able to issue that immortal Emancipation Proclamation, with the approbation of the community. In this manner he brought about this mighty change without any convulsion in the public mind. This great fountain of iniquity was broken up without producing a ripple upon the surface of public sentiment. In taking this bold and important step, he carefully studied public opinion and the indications of divine Providence. On being urged by an ardent friend in the early part of the war to abolish slavery, he made this characteristic reply: "I have considered this subject prayerfully, and find that while you and I have been in a hurry to abolish slavery, the Lord is not; and I think it wise to wait his time."

President Lincoln acted so wisely, and so in accordance with the spirit of our institutions, that we have, in a manner, the endorsement of the Supreme Ruler upon our form of government. If we were asked, who put down the rebellion, we could answer in the very language of the Preamble of the Constitution, "We, the people of the United States." The people have put down the rebellion agreeably to the genius of our government, by the agent of our own choice, the heaven-appointed Lincoln. Nor does this detract from the worth of the man or the value of his services. On the contrary, it shows that his talents, his integrity, his abiding trust in an over-ruling Providence, exactly fitted him for the crisis, and so enabled him to work out a mighty deliverance for his people.

The American people with one accord have denominated GEORGE WASHINGTON, the "Father of his Country," and admiring nations have confirmed the designation. And the future historian, when he narrates the events of the late rebellion, will place ABRAHAM LINCOLN in the same galaxy of illustrious men with Washington; and as the former is the acknowledged "FATHER," so the latter will be the admitted "SAVIOR OF HIS COUNTRY." The names of Washington and Lincoln will go down to posterity, and their memories will be cherished by every lover of freedom and equal rights. Washington, in pure patriotism, and with Christian fortitude, labored to resist the encroachments of foreign tyrants, and to build up free institutions in his native land; Lincoln, with like patriotism and fortitude, labored to repel the assaults of domestic traitors, and to defend these institutions, so that the land of his birth might enjoy the blessings of perpetual and universal freedom. And though Lincoln, by the order of Providence, had no opportunity to participate in the important work of organizing our civil institutions, he enjoyed the privilege of blotting out the only foul stain which deformed the work of our fathers. Lincoln's Proclamation of Emancipation, which burst the bands of slavery, and set four millions of human beings free, reflects the highest honor upon his character, and will mark an epoch in the world's history as important as that of Magna Charta or the Declaration of Independence.

CHAPTER XII.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, FROM 1692 TO THE DEATH OF MR. HANCOCK.

The Incorporation of the Precinct — The Establishment of the Gospel Ministry — The Gathering of a Church, and the Ordination of their First Minister — The Death of Mr. Estabrook, and the Settlement of Mr. Hancock — Settlement and Death of his Son Ebenezer — The Services, Character and Death of Mr. Hancock — His Publications.

As our fathers came to this country to establish a religious commonwealth, and to set up institutions founded on the great principle of accountability to God, no history of their settlement can be perfect or complete, which does not treat of their ecclesiastical affairs. These are so intimately connected with their civil and political history, that it is difficult in some cases to say where the one ends and the other begins. By the early laws of this Province, every tract of territory which was erected into a town, was by the same act constituted a parish. Standing in this double relation, most of the parochial business was transacted in town meetings. It was generally in the town meetings that votes were passed for building meeting-houses, settling ministers, and providing for their support. These measures are so nearly associated with the municipal affairs of the towns, and the same individuals being voters both in the town and the parish, that we shall not attempt to draw any distinct line of separation between the parochial and the municipal. Under the head of "ecclesiastical history," we shall not treat of those public acts performed in town meetings, such as building and repairing houses of worship, but rather present the spiritual condition of the people, the character of their religious teachers, and the acts pertaining to the church, as an organization distinct from that of the parish.

For about forty years after the first settlements were made in what now constitutes Lexington, the people were destitute of a minister, whom they could call their own. The territory belonging to Cambridge, and most of the settlers being from that town, and many of them being members of the church in that place, they would naturally adhere to the old society, until the demand for a separate organization should become pressing. It appears also that the people of Cambridge proper were anxious that those who had removed to the "Farms," should continue their relationship with the parent church. But as the inconvenience to the settlers was great, they desired to establish a ministry of their own, and to manage their own affairs as they pleased. As early as 1682, James Cutler, Matthew Bridge, Jr., David Fiske, Sen., Samuel Stone, Sen., Francis Whitmore, John Tidd, Ephraim Winship, and John Winter, some of the leading and responsible citizens of the Farms, petitioned the General Court for an Act constituting them a distinct parish. This step was taken, not from any hostility to the old society or church, but from the great inconvenience of going from five to ten miles to attend public worship. The great unwillingness on the part of Cambridge to have this secession from their church, defeated, or rather postponed the measure for about ten years. In 1691, it was ordered by the General Court "That the petitioners be permitted and allowed to invite and settle an able and orthodox minister for the dispensing of the Gospel among them."

Immediately after obtaining an Act of incorporation as a precinct, measures were adopted to carry into effect the object they had in view. A subscription was at once started for the erection of a house of worship; and early in the season of 1692, the edifice was erected. On the 22d of April, 1692, Mr. Benjamin Estabrook, who had probably preached for them some portion of the preceding year, was invited to continue his labors with them till May, 1693, and provision was made for his support. Small as were their numbers, and limited as were their means, they resolved to place themselves in a position, where they should be able in future to give a liberal support to those who should become their spiritual guides. In April, 1693, they purchased of the town of Cambridge, for this purpose, "twelve acres of common land on the east side of the causeway, and the rest of the common land on the other side, and on the south side of Vine Brook Meadow." This land was subsequently surveyed, and was found to contain one hundred and forty-eight acres. Though this purchase cost the parish at first but eighteen pounds, it laid the foundation for a ministerial fund, which has proved amply sufficient to support a minister. This land was purchased by the parish, and paid for by a tax upon all within the precinct.

When Mr. Estabrook's year expired, the people gladly reëngaged him; and such was their attachment to him that in the summer of 1694, they built and gave him a house on condition of his becoming their pastor and continuing with them.¹ Their pecuniary embarrassments however were such that they made but slow progress in preparation for his permanent settlement. In April, 1696, they made their final proposition; and on the third of June following, Mr. Estabrook gave an affirmative answer to their call. His answer is recorded with so much simplicity, that we will transcribe it. "Mr. Estabrook was sent for to declare to the people, whether he did accept of the call of the inhabitants of this place, and whether he would abide with us to be our settled minister. His answer was, 'Yes, he would.' It was asked him how long. He answered, that so far as he knew, so long as he lived, it should not be his fault if he did not; he had no intent to leave us; and if he did leave us, he would repay the money expended for the building of his house."

The call being accepted, and the day for the ordination fixed, it was agreed that a church should be organized at the same time. A committee was appointed to make arrangements for the ordination, and to "provide what is necessary for the entertainment of the magistral ministers and messengers of the church that day."

Neither the church nor the parish records give us any information concerning the council, or the services on the occasion. But Judge Sewall, who was then present as one of the honored magistrates to take cognizance of the establishment of a new church, has the following in his manuscript Journal.—"October

¹ This house was 42 feet by 18. It stood a few rods east of Vine Brook.

21, 1696. A church is gathered at Cambridge, North Farms; no relations made, but a Cov^t. signed and voted by 10 brethren dismissed from y^e churches of Cambridge, Watertown, Woburn, and Concord, for the work. Being declared to be a church, they chose Mr. Benjamin Estabrook y^r Pastor, who had made a good Sermon from Jer. 3. 15. Mr. Estabrook the Father managed this, having prayed excellently: Mr. Willard gave y^e Charge; Mr. Fox the Right Hand of Fellowship. Sung part of y^e 48th from y^e 9th v. to the end, — O God, our thoughts. — Mr. Stone and Mr. Fiske thanked me for my assistance there. Cambridge was sent to; they had no Teaching officer; they sent Elder Clark, Hastings, Remington.”¹

The church which was gathered on that occasion, adopted a covenant founded on the broad principles of the Gospel, and avoiding those controverted doctrines which have often divided the churches.

This covenant was signed by the pastor elect, and by David Fiske, Sen., Samuel Stone, Sen., John Russell, Israel Mead, Thomas Cutler, Sen., David Fiske, Jr., Samuel Whitmore, William Reed, John Merriam, Samuel Stone, Jr., and Thomas Merriam.

The church was further organized by electing John Merriam and Samuel Stone deacons. There was also added to the church during the nine months of Mr. Estabrook's ministry, by recommendations from other churches, the following persons: Seaborn Fiske, wife of David Fiske, Sen., Sarah Stone, wife of Samuel Stone, Sen., Elizabeth Russell, wife of John Russell, Elizabeth Winship, wife of Ephraim Winship, severally from the church of Cambridge; Sarah Merriam widow, Sarah Fiske, wife of David Fiske, Jr., Dorcas Stone, wife of Samuel Stone, Jr., Mary Merriam, wife of John Merriam, severally from the church of Concord; and Abigail Reed, wife of Capt. William Reed from the church of Woburn. There were also admitted on their own profession during Mr. Estabrook's labors, Joseph Simonds and his wife Mary, Matthew Bridge and his wife Abigail, Jonathan Poulter and his wife Elizabeth, Philip Russell, Joseph Stone, Mary Winship, Abigail Cutler, wife of Lieut.

¹ For this, and several other important facts connected with the history of the church, we are indebted to Rev. Samuell Sewall of Burlington.

Thomas Cutler, Mary Johnson, wife of John Johnson, and Ruth Locke, wife of Samuel Locke.

Thus a church of thirty-three members was gathered in about nine months from the settlement of their first minister. This of itself shows the success with which his labors were blessed. The relation between Mr. Estabrook and his people was a happy one, and promised to be productive of much good. He had been with them several years before his settlement, and hence knew them well, and was known of them. The relation of pastor and people, at all times solemn and endearing, had in this case a peculiar interest, having all the ardor of the first love. He was their first pastor, and they his first flock. It was the union of kindred hearts, given in early life; and the happy fruits of this union show that the attachment had been mutual, and that the confidence on either hand had not been misplaced. Both parties were undoubtedly congratulating themselves on this new relation, and anticipating years of happiness and prosperity. But how delusive sometimes are human hopes! He whose wisdom is unsearchable, and whose ways are past finding out, saw fit to sunder these ties. On the 22d of July, 1697, when he had completed only nine months of his ministry, he was called from his earthly labors. Thus was a young and confiding parish deprived of their first minister, and a young, devoted minister, torn from the people of his choice!

Rev. Benjamin Estabrook was son of Rev. Joseph Estabrook, of Concord, who came to this country in 1660, and entered Harvard College, where he was graduated in 1664. He settled in Concord in 1667, where he remained till his death, in 1711, which was in the seventy-first year of his age and the forty-fourth of his ministry. Benjamin Estabrook was born February 24, 1671,¹ was graduated at Harvard, 1690, and commenced preaching in Lexington in 1692. In November, 1693, he married Abigail Willard, daughter of Rev. Samuel Willard, then of the Old South Church in Boston. Mr. Estabrook was highly esteemed by his people, and left the reputation of a pious and devoted servant of the Lord. Though he was only twenty-six years of age, when called hence, he had already established a reputation which gave promise of distinction in his profession. He was buried in Lexington, and his tombstone bears this inscription :

HERE LIES INTERRED THE REMAINS OF
 MR. BENJAMIN ESTABROOK,
 LATE AND FIRST PASTOR OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN THIS PLACE;
 SON TO THE REV. MR. JOSEPH ESTABROOK,
 PASTOR OF THE CHURCH IN CONCORD;
 WHO DEPARTED FROM US TO CHRIST,
 JULY 22, A. D. 1697,

 VIRTUS ANTEIT ANNOS.

Immediately on the death of Mr. Estabrook, measures were adopted to obtain a candidate for settlement. A meeting was called November 27th, "to consider the procuring of some help in the ministry: Then there was made choyce of Mr. John Hancock to preach with us till May followinge, in order to further settlement. It was also agreed that Mr. Hancock should have eighteen shillings a weeke, and bare his own charges till May."

Mr. Hancock commenced preaching at Cambridge Farms, December 12, 1697, and in February following, "It was voted by the majore part of y^e people that were present, that Mr. Hancock should bee further invited to continue with us for a settlement, and Dea. Samuel Stone and Lt. David Fiske were made choyce of by y^e companye to traatte with Mr. Hancock about his settelling with us."

It seems that the committee chosen to "traatte" with Mr. Hancock, were successful in their preliminaries at least; for in March, 1698, says the record, "The sallerrye that was formerlye granted to y^e Reverend Mr. Benjamin Estabrook, was a second time granted and confermed to Rev. Mr. John Hancock."

"It was alsoe voted that they will give the Rev. Mr. John Hancock four score pounds in moneye towards his settlement, y^e one-half in y^e yeare 1698, and y^e other half in yeare 1699."

The preliminaries being settled, the church by "a unanimuse votte" proposed "to prosede to the ordination of Mr. Hancock, in convenient time," and the congregation on the 6th of September, 1698, "votted without the church on the affirmative, — very fully — at a full mettinge."

The second day of November, 1698, was agreed upon for the ordination, and provision was made by the parish for the entertainment of the council. The further proceedings on the occasion we will give in the language of the church records, written by Mr. Hancock himself.

"Five churches were sent unto to carry on the work of said day, viz: the South Church of Christ in Boston, the churches of Christ in Cambridge, Newtown, Concord and Woburn, — the elders and messengers appeared, and in the morning, Mr. Willard being moderator, they proceeded, having made way for it, and earnestly exploring Heaven's blessing on the affairs of the day, unto ordination. Rev. Mr. Willard giving the charge, and Rev. Mr. Joseph Estabrook, the right hand of fellowship; — the elders of the other churches assisted by laying on of hands."

Mr. Hancock being thus settled over the church and society at Cambridge North Precinct, continued their pastor till his death in 1752, having had a peaceful and prosperous ministry of fifty-four years. Rev. John Hancock was son of Nathaniel Hancock of Cambridge, (now Newton.) He was born December, 1671, entered Harvard College in 1685, where he was graduated in 1689. He was ordained, as we have already stated, November 2, 1698. He married Elizabeth Clark, daughter of Rev. Thomas Clark, of Chelmsford, by whom he had five children — three sons and two daughters.

Ebenezer, son of Rev. John Hancock, of Lexington, was born December 7, 1710. He was graduated at Harvard, 1728, and prepared himself for the ministry. He was a young man of great promise; and received a unanimous invitation to settle at Sherborn, as successor to Rev. Mr. Baker. But the people of Lexington, fully impressed with his meek, unostentatious piety, and pleased with his easy manners and popular eloquence, gave him an earnest invitation to settle with them, as colleague with his father. Ebenezer did not long hesitate between these calls. The desire to aid his father in his declining years, induced him to accept the invitation of Lexington. The 2d day of January, 1734, was fixed upon by the parties, and on that day Rev. Ebenezer Hancock was solemnly set apart as a co-labörer with his father in the ministry of Christ. Seven churches were invited to take part in the ordination, viz: the church of Christ in Weston, the two churches of Watertown, and the churches of Newton, Cambridge, Medford and Bedford. Rev. Mr. Hancock, the father, preached the sermon, and gave the charge, and the Rev. Mr. Williams, of Weston, the right hand of fellowship.

Though the son engaged ardently in the work of the ministry, for the two-fold purpose of promoting the cause of his divine Master, and of lightening the burden of his devoted and pious father, then upon the shady side of sixty-three, he did not live long to sustain his hoary hairs. Rev. Ebenezer Hancock died January 28, 1740, when he had just completed the sixth year of his ministry. He died greatly beloved and universally lamented, in the thirty-first year of his age. He was never married.

Of the two daughters of Rev. John Hancock, we will simply say that Eliza, born February 5, 1705, married Rev. Jonathan Bowman, of Dorchester; and Lucy, born April 20, 1713, married Rev. Nicholas Barnes, of Bedford.¹

Though Mr. Hancock was distinguished in his family, he was more distinguished for his own personal merit. He was very eminent in his day for wisdom, piety, and fidelity in the cause of his divine Master; and for a happy talent at preventing discord, and healing animosities among his people. And from a great respect for his age, services, gravity and dignified deportment, he was long honored with the appellation of Bishop. For nearly thirty years he was the senior minister in this part of the county of Middlesex; had for many years presided in most of the councils for ordination within its bounds; and had given the solemn charge to twenty-one ministers, the last of whom was the late Dr. Cushing of Waltham, at their induction into office. He had the reputation of being a peace-maker; and his advice and fatherly counsel were frequently sought by the neighboring churches, and to them his decision was generally the end of strife.

He was remarkable for his industry and devotion to his profession. He was early in the morning in his study, and early in the week at his preparations for the Sabbath. In this way he was always apparently at leisure, and ready to receive and entertain all those whom his social habits called to his house. By being systematic and studious, he was always master of his own time; and by being always industrious, he was apparently always at leisure. His success in his profession is evidence of his fidelity. During his ministry, there were four hundred and forty-five added to the church by profession, and thirty-two by letters of dismission and recommendation from other churches; one hundred and eighty owned the covenant, and one thousand six hundred and thirty-seven were baptized.

Mr. Hancock was what might be denominated Calvinistic in his theology; and yet his grasp of mind and acquaintance with the world, and his great good sense, made him liberal and charitable to others. While his own mind was made up, and his own opinions formed, he was willing that others should adopt the same manly course, and judge for themselves.

In his sermon at the ordination of his son at Braintree, he says, "Where there is so much work to be done, and work of such importance, it calls for diligence and fidelity. It is God's work, and must not be done negligently; it is the soul's work, and must not be done slightly; it is a great work, and of eternal consequences, and must be done faithfully. Unfaithfulness in the minister is more unpardonable than in another man, for hereby the cause of Christ, and the souls of men are betrayed. Who would make an unfaithful person a ruler over his goods? Let ministers learn their dependence both for assistance and success. The power that can furnish you unto this work, and give you success, is from above. 'Tis not from men, but from God. Men may pray over you, and put their hands upon you, and bless you in the name of the Lord; but they cannot bestow the gift of the Holy Spirit upon you. They can confer orders, but they cannot convey grace."

This extract shows the tone and spirit of his preaching, when young men are set apart for the ministry. We will give a specimen of his bold and manly preaching before the rulers of the Colony. It is from a public lecture delivered before the authorities. "I will speak unto great men, about what? Not about matters of state, but of religion. Not about their farms or their merchandise, but about their souls. Not about such things as are merely temporal, but about things which are spiritual and eternal. Great men are a part of a minister's charge, and must be addressed at proper seasons, and on proper occasions. The ministers of Christ are to take heed to all their flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made them overseers; and the great men in some congregations, make up a considerable part of the flock. It is the greatest pride and vanity that can be, for any to think themselves too great to be spoken to, about the duties they are to perform, or about their sins and their faults, that they may amend them. However, ministers must speak to them in the name of the Lord, whether they will hear or forbear." "Great men are not always good; it would be well, it would be happy for all states and governments, if they were. Indeed, they ought to be good, yea, to be the best of men; yet many times they are the worst — scourges of the world, and plagues of mankind."

There is another trait in Mr. Hancock's character, which must not be passed over without notice. He was highly social; not merely fond of society, but had a vein of humor or wit in which he would often indulge. This pleasant, facetious disposition, rendered his society interesting to the young, and so gave him a hold upon their affections, which few ministers ever enjoyed.

Many anecdotes are related of Mr. Hancock, showing his facetiousness, and the great control he had over his people even in temporal affairs. Two neighbors could not agree upon the division line between their lands — each claimed more land than the other would yield. The dispute rose high, and a law suit was threatened. Mr. Hancock, hearing of the dispute, called the parties together, took them upon the ground, and asked them to make their statements. When they had concluded, he took a stake and stuck it into the ground, and said, "there, neighbor A., your land comes to this stake; and neighbor B., don't you encroach upon your neighbor beyond that point." It is only necessary to say that this was the end of the strife. Such was the confidence reposed in him, and such the influence which he exerted over them, that his decisions were acquiesced in, though sometimes made without invitation or all the forms of law.

It was customary in some of the early churches to have elders, as assistants to their pastors, in some of their duties, and sometimes they officiated as teachers. There happened to be two members of Mr. Hancock's church who had an inclination to fill such an office, and called upon Mr. Hancock to confer with him upon the subject. They stated to him that his labors were arduous, and he somewhat in years, and they thought it might be some relief to him to have two elders chosen. Mr. Hancock told them that he thought well of the subject; but expressed some doubt whether any persons could be found who would accept the position. To relieve his mind on that point, they modestly hinted that they might be induced to accept the place to relieve him. "Well," said Mr. Hancock, "I should be very glad to have elders chosen, and should rejoice to have such gentlemen as you are fill those positions. I suppose you know the duty of such officers?" "No," replied one of the gentlemen, "we do not; but we know that you understand the whole matter, and could easily inform us." "Well," said Mr. Hancock, "the duties of elders have never heretofore been very well defined in the church, but latterly they have settled down to this—the younger elder is to brush down, and harness the pastor's horse, when he wishes to ride out; and the elder elder is to accompany the pastor, when he goes out of town, and pay his expenses. I should like very well to have such officers chosen." The gentlemen being taken somewhat by surprise, let the subject subside, and made no further effort for the choice of elders.

One of his brethren in the ministry, who knew him well, thus speaks of this turn of mind.¹

"That facetious temper and turn of wit which were natural to him, and which some people of a different make might think abounded, he made a very good use of in general, and it served to scatter the clouds of melancholy that hung upon some people's spirits, and to stir up a pleasant cheerfulness within them. He did thereby soften men's tempers, and correct their ill humors, and bring the fretful, the angry, and the revengeful, into a calm, peaceable, and forgiving frame. As you have had the reputation of being a peaceable people, I believe you will readily grant that it has been very much owing to the pleasant, prudent, and pacific counsels of your deceased pastor."

Mr. Hancock had great wisdom and sagacity in managing the affairs of his parish. Though he was a close student, and a good biblical scholar, he did not confine his study to books alone. He mingled with his people, and so learned not only their wants, but their habits and turn of mind—the secret springs of action by which they were moved, and so was enabled to guide, and in a manner control them. Mr. Appleton bears testimony to this in the following passage :

“He was eminently fitted for this place in its infant state, when you were few in numbers, and needed a man of such wisdom and prudence to advise and assist you in your outward and civil, as well as spiritual concerns. And I believe it will be allowed that but few people have had so great help, benefit and comfort of a minister in all respects, as this people have had in Mr. Hancock. Few ministers have been so much concerned in the various affairs of their people, as he was in yours; and yet I never heard him taxed of being in the least a faulty busybody in other men’s matters; for you yourselves were so sensible of his wisdom, and the goodness of his capacity, and readiness to direct and advise you, that as I have understood, you seldom or never engaged in any important or difficult affair without consulting him upon it.”

The wisdom of Mr. Hancock is perhaps in nothing more conspicuous than in the manner in which he met and controlled the great movement of his day, which was denominated new-lightism. Nothing had occurred to awaken the church or to call forth its energies for a long period, and most of the clergy had fallen into a state of stupor. This condition of things excited the attention, and aroused the energies of such men as Whitefield, and their new-light, as it was called, spread rapidly on both sides of the Atlantic. Many of our churches were excited, distracted, and rent asunder. Many of our clergymen, waking up from their slumbers, and seeing a little more interest manifested in matters of religion, fancied that the Gospel was about to be lost in the blind frenzy of the age; and they declared a war of extermination against this new movement. Others caught the fire, and without stopping to inquire whether it were a true or a false zeal, plunged into the whirlpool, and suffered themselves to be carried in every direction by its blind eddies. The church at Concord was severed in twain, that of Medford was greatly agitated; and others were more or less disturbed by this new order of things. Councils were called, books were written, and all the artillery of the church militant was put in requisition to oppose the spread of what some deemed a dangerous heresy.

But in the midst of this commotion Mr. Hancock moved steadily forward, being aware that the religious as well as the natural world would have its seasons of refreshing as well as of drought; and that what was looked upon as the work of the enemy, was but the natural result of the apathy into which the churches had fallen. Instead, therefore, of opposing this spirit of awakening in his society, he availed himself of it, gave it the right direction, and added many to his church. He was fully aware that these seasons of peculiar religious interest would come, and had, as early as 1728, added nearly eighty to his church in a single year. So, in 1741, and 1742, in the midst of this new-light movement, he made about the same accession to his church, and that without any foreign aid, or unnatural effort. While some of the neighboring clergy were attempting to smother this religious feeling, and thereby stifle the sincere aspirations of pious souls, and others were fanning the flame, and thereby converting it into a wild and dangerous conflagration, Mr. Hancock, with truly enlightened zeal, was guiding this spirit of inquiry and feeling of devotion, and thereby aiding the cause of true religion.

Not, however, that Mr. Hancock was wanting in manly independence. He knew and realized, that the pulpit had its rights, and that to secure these rights, he must recognize the rights of the pews. His intimate acquaintance with his people, his minute knowledge of their wants, their feelings, their infirmities, and even their prejudices, enabled him so to approach every subject of interest, as to obtain a candid hearing, and impress a salutary lesson upon his hearers. He did not dwell in the musty past, nor in the misty future. He was a man of the present; ready however to study the past that he might obtain knowledge to guide him in the future. He was conservative, and at the same time progressive; desirous of bringing about a reformation, by implanting gospel principles in the heart. He was more emulous of being a faithful minister than a noted reformer—fully realizing the oft forgotten truth, that no reformation is abiding which flows not from Christian principle. With these views and with that great good sense obtained by an intimate acquaintance with human infirmities, he availed himself of all the real advantages of the Whitefield movement, without producing any of those convulsions which disturbed many parishes, and alienated those of the same household.

We have already seen that Ebenezer Hancock, who was settled as a colleague to relieve his father, died after about six years' labor. His father, at the death of the son, was nearly seventy years of age, yet he continued for more than ten years to discharge the arduous duties of his office up to the Sunday before his death. And it was remarked by his cotemporaries, that he spoke with nearly the same firmness and vigor at the age of eighty, that he did at the age of forty. But the firmest constitution must yield; the most devoted laborer must cease from his toil. We cannot better describe his sudden and unexpected death, than by copying from the title page of two discourses delivered at Lexington the Sabbath after his funeral, by Rev. Mr. Appleton, of Cambridge: — "Going to bed as well as usual, the night after the 5th of December, (1752,) and awaking some time after midnight with great pain in his stomach, died in a few minutes, in the eighty-second year of his age, and the fifty-fourth of his ministry."

One thing which stands out prominently on the church records of that day, is the discipline of the church, evinced by the public confessions, which were made before the church and congregation. That these confessions were not always effectual, appears from the fact that some of the members were arraigned the second time for the same offence.

We have already seen that John Merriam and Samuel Stone were chosen deacons at the organization of the church, in 1696. Deacon Stone died 1703, and Samuel Stone, Jr., was elected in his place, in 1715. In the year following, Joseph Estabrook, a brother of their first minister, Rev. Benjamin Estabrook, was chosen deacon. In 1727, on the death of Deacon Merriam, Joseph Brown was chosen to fill his place. In 1733, Deacon Joseph Estabrook died, and the church made choice of John Laughton, who, in 1744, was dismissed to the church in Harvard; and Joseph Estabrook, son of deacon Joseph, was chosen in his stead. He died, 1740. In 1743, John Stone and Joseph Loring were chosen to that office. The former died in 1762, and the latter in 1746.

Rev. Mr. Hancock not only performed all the duties in his own parish, but was often called to the neighboring towns, when they were without a settled pastor, to administer the ordinances to the destitute churches. In November, 1705, he was called to Groton, where he administered the Supper, and baptized twenty-four persons. Subsequently he baptized nineteen more in that town. The same year he administered the ordinance to sixteen persons in Chelmsford; and during his ministry he baptized about fifty other persons in the neighboring towns, a list of which he preserved.

Mr. Hancock appears to have been very accurate and careful in keeping a record of all his acts and doings; but unfortunately the records of his marriages before 1750, are lost — a loss which is severely felt in preparing the genealogies of many of the early families of Lexington.

Though Mr. Hancock preached on many public occasions, his only printed discourses are the following: 1. A sermon at the general election, 1722 — text, Luke, xxii. 25. 2. A sermon at the ordination of his son John, in Braintree, 1726 — text, Luke, xxiv. 49. 3. A sermon at the ordination of his son Ebenezer, in Lexington, 1734 — text, 2 Cor., i. 24. 4. A sermon at the public lecture in Boston, November 21, 1734, before his Excellency the Governor and the General Court — text, Jer., v. 5. 5. A sermon at the ordination of Rev. Timothy Harrington, in Lancaster, November 16, 1748 — text, 1 Cor., ix. 19.

CHAPTER XIII.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, FROM THE SETTLEMENT TO THE DEATH OF MR. CLARKE.

The Call and Settlement of Rev. Jonas Clarke—Introduction of Tate and Brady's Version of the Psalms—Mr. Clarke's Death and Character.

THE loss of such a pastor as Rev. Mr. Hancock, was duly realized by his devoted people. They not only showed their respect for his memory, but they decided promptly and with great wisdom, that they could best subserve the great cause to which he had devoted his long and active life, by embracing the first reasonable opportunity of settling another man. Consequently, at a meeting held May 18, 1753, they not only chose a committee to supply the pulpit, but instructed them to "make diligent inquiry after a suitable gentleman to settle."

Realizing the importance of the subject, and remembering the teaching of their late pastor, that God would by his providence guide those who meekly called upon him for aid, before making the selection they appointed a day of "fasting and prayer," and invited the clergymen of the neighboring towns to meet with them on the occasion, to enlighten them by their wisdom, and aid them by their prayers.

On the 19th of May, 1755, the town concurred with the church and extended a call to Mr. Jonas Clarke to become their pastor—offering him a salary of eighty pounds and twenty cords of wood, and one hundred and thirty-three pounds as a settlement. The call being accepted, the ordination took place on the 5th of November, 1755.

Between the death of Mr. Hancock and the settlement of Mr. Clarke, a period of about three years, six were admitted to the church by letters of dismission from other churches, four owned the covenant, and fifty-six were baptized. Two members were in the meantime dismissed to other churches.

After the labors of a public servant as able and faithful as Rev. Mr. Hancock, and one who was so highly esteemed by his people, and respected by the community at large, they could hardly expect to find a man who would come fully up to the same standard. And yet Mr. Clarke entered upon the work of the ministry, and succeeded in meeting public expectation, so that in a few years he gained the entire confidence of his people, and acquired a reputation in the community, such as but few clergymen ever enjoy. He soon exhibited powers which were not to be circumscribed by the periphery of a parish, or confined to the ordinary routine of professional duties.

After the settlement of Mr. Clarke, the cause of religion received a new impulse, twenty-seven being admitted to the church during the first year of his ministry.

At a meeting of the church, April 20, 1756, it was voted unanimously to choose two deacons, and James Brown and Joseph Loring were elected.

The affairs of the church went on prosperously under Mr. Clarke, and nothing worthy of note occurred till 1766, when the church was convened to elect a deacon, and Jonas Stone was chosen. At the same time there was read a petition of twenty-four members to know the minds of the brethren relative to the introduction of Tate and Brady's version of the Psalms, together with a select number of Dr. Watts's Scriptural Hymns, to be sung in public, instead of the New England version of Psalms then in use. "After some debate upon the matter, the church voted to refer the consideration of said petition to Thursday, October 2d, next ensuing, — to which time the meeting was then adjourned."

"At a meeting of the church in Lexington, by adjournment, October 2d, 1766, admitted Jonas Stone, by a letter of dismission from the church of Christ in Rutland. Considered the petition above mentioned, as read in the church meeting September 4, 1766, and voted to introduce Brady and Tate's version of the Psalms, together with a collection of Dr. Watts's Scriptural Hymns, to be sung in public, instead of the New England version of the Psalms that has been in use among us."

The church voted by yeas and nays, and upon sorting and counting the votes, it appeared that there was a majority of three to one.

“Voted also to elect some person to set the Psalm or tune, and lead in the singing for six Sabbaths next ensuing upon trial or liking, as a further attempt for regular and religious improvement in that part of divine worship.”

“The brethren then brought in their votes, from which it appeared that Robert Harrington, Jr., was unanimously chosen to this service.”

The change of hymn books in a religious society is frequently the cause of no little dissension and difficulty; and what is true of the book itself, is more strikingly true of anything which relates to the singing. Those who are blessed with a delicate ear for music, are said to be naturally sensitive in their feelings; and while they abhor anything like discord in their musical performances, they do not always banish it from the choir. But the society in Lexington, under Mr. Clarke, appears to have been free from all difficulty of this kind. They seem to have been sensible that an improvement could be made by dropping the New England version of the Psalms, and introducing the version of Tate and Brady, with selections from Watts. A slight comparison of these versions would show at once that they were influenced both by sound judgment and good taste.

The New England version was prepared in 1640, by the leading divines of New England; among whom Rev. John Eliot, Rev. Richard Mather, and Rev. Mr. Weld, were the most prominent in this work. When the several portions were versified, the whole was committed to Rev. Henry Dunster, President of Harvard College, and Richard Lyon, of Cambridge. The work reflects no great honor upon them as poets.

This version was used generally by the New England churches up to about the time of which we are speaking. The earliest version used in the English churches, and also in the American churches, was that of Sternhold and Hopkins, which is said to be a very literal rendering of the text, but as an elegant versification is far, very far, from being what good taste would require. This perhaps led to the New England version, which was scarcely an improvement upon its English predecessor. There are stanzas and even whole psalms in both that are actually barbarous, if not ridiculous. And hence we can pardon the English wit, who thus lampooned one of these versions :

" Sternhold and Hopkins had great qualms,
 When they translated David's Psalms,
 To make our souls full glad :
 But had it been poor David's fate,
 To hear us sing, or them translate,
 By Jove, 'twould've made him mad."

No wonder the thorough education of Mr. Clarke, and the good sense of his flock, made them desirous of getting rid of the old version, and of introducing one which would edify their souls without wounding their senses or corrupting their taste. But it seems that they were not satisfied with merely changing their psalm books. They elected a person "to set the Psalm or tune, and lead in the singing, as a further attempt for regular and religious improvement in that part of divine worship."

Probably up to that time they had had what is generally denominated congregational singing, in which the whole assembly took part. The practice long prevailed in our New England churches of what was called "lining the hymn ;" that is, reading one or two lines and then singing them, and so on through the whole hymn. This labor was generally performed by one of the deacons, and hence it obtained the popular designation of "deaconing the hymn." The introduction of the present mode of singing in a choir, and of reading the hymn from the desk, was in many cases a very delicate subject, and one which gave great offence, especially to the deacons, who considered their prerogative invaded. This practice of reading a psalm or hymn by the line as they sung, probably originated in the scarcity of psalm books ; and the same practice prevails now, and for the same reason, in some parts of our country. The Sunday service in the capitol at Washington has been carried on in this manner until recently.

A good anecdote, bearing upon this point, is related of the facetious Pierpont Edwards, of Connecticut, of whom it has been said that "he was of godly stock, but of devious inclination." In Connecticut, where their parishes were formerly all territorial, and where there were two and even three in a township, and some of them feeble; the good people in one of these small parishes agreed to build a meeting-house. They erected it, and partially covered it with boards; but owing to their limited means, and a dissatisfaction growing out of its location, they were unable to do more. The building in this situation stood exposed to the weather, till it became so dilapidated that "the rain descended and the winds blew and beat upon that house and it fell." By this time their old feud had subsided, and they resolved to build another church. The timber was collected and framed, and on the appointed day the building was erected. After the raising was over, the people collected in a group to sing a psalm, appropriate to all raisings, but particularly so at the raising of a church. Having no psalm book at hand, they looked around for some one who would be able without a book to repeat the appropriate psalm, and young Edwards, who happened to be present, was selected for that duty. He consented to perform that service, and repeated in a clear and distinct voice the first two lines —

"Except the Lord doth build the house,
The workmen toil in vain."

After singing these lines with becoming emotion, what was their confusion when they heard this wicked wight utter as the remaining lines of the stanza —

"Except the Lord doth shingle it,
'Twill tumble down again."

But nothing like this, it is presumed, ever occurred in the town of Lexington. The change of psalm books and the mode of singing was adopted without difficulty, and Mr. Clarke was so well pleased with the change that he entered in his diary — "October 19, 1766, began to sing the new version of psalms, and Dr. Watts's hymns." But the introduction of singing by the choir, and singing from the new psalm book, did not do away the practice of lining the psalm. This continued some fifteen years longer.

In November, 1781, the church voted to dispense with reading the hymns by line in public worship, and chose Captain Daniel Harrington to lead the singing. In October, 1787, John Bridge and Nathan Reed were chosen deacons.

Mr. Clarke died November 15, 1805, in the seventy-fifth year of his age, and the fifty-first of his ministry. He was born December 11, 1730, and was graduated at Harvard, 1752.¹ During his ministry, three hundred and sixty-five were added to the church by profession, and ten by letters from other churches. Sixty-nine owned the covenant, and one thousand and sixty-nine were baptized.

Few towns have been blessed with more distinguished clergymen than Lexington, in the persons of Mr. Hancock and Mr. Clarke. They were both eminent for talents, for piety, for fidelity — for everything which could recommend the preacher or the pastor, the citizen or the man. And hence both were greatly esteemed by their people, and respected by the public at large. The aggregate length of their ministry was one hundred and four years. The influence of each of these clergymen was great, not only in the town, but in the community around them. It is not too much to say that Lexington owes its standing and character more to these eminent divines, than to any other men who ever resided within her borders. A history of Lexington, without the mention of Mr. Hancock and Mr. Clarke, would be as defective as a history of the Jewish Dispensation without the mention of Moses, or a history of the American Revolution without the mention of Washington.

Mr. Clarke, was distinguished himself and in his family, as will be seen in the Appendix. His influence was felt in his parish and in the Colony. We have seen his devotion to the affairs of state; but this did not lead to a neglect of parochial duties. There were no jars or difficulties in his church or society; everything went on smoothly, to the satisfaction of all concerned. Nor did this quiet arise from indifference, or inattention to the spiritual wants of his people. No minister was more faithful, or preached the Gospel with more fidelity. The additions to his church show that he preached with earnestness and power. The fact that under his guidance the young men in his society formed themselves into an association for religious improvement and edification, is the best commentary upon his religious influence. This society he cherished with special care, as he regarded it a safeguard to the young, and a nursery of the church.

Mr. Clarke had a just appreciation of the ministerial office, as will appear from an extract from his sermon delivered at the ordination of Mr. Josiah Bridge, in East Sudbury, November 4, 1761. Addressing the candidate, he said :

“ Dear Sir, as you now present yourself before God and his people, to take part of this ministry, we trust you do it, not as the horse rushes into the battle, without consideration, but as the result of the most serious, solemn, and prayerful deliberation. The office you take upon yourself is high and responsible, the work you are engaged in is great and arduous, the charge you are to receive important and solemn, and the account you must render of your stewardship at the last day, awfully strict and impartial. To magnify your office, to be faithful in your work, and to keep the charge you are to receive of the Lord, will therefore be your constant care and most ardent endeavor, as you desire to lift up your head and give up your account with joy in the day of Christ. Your sacred regard for the glory of God, and the honor of Christ, will excite you to make his Word and his Gospel the sole standard of your faith and practice — ‘ a light to your feet, and a lamp to your path.’ And jealous of the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free, and willing that your brethren should freely enjoy the same, you will, we trust, never dishonor yourself, disgrace the ministry, or displease your Lord by receiving or imposing the schemes of fallible men, however great or good, as a rule of faith and practice.”

In doctrine, Mr. Clarke held the views which were generally prevalent at that day ; but he held them in meekness and charity. He was a pious and practical, rather than a denunciatory and controversial preacher. And he strove more ardently to make men follow the meek and lowly Jesus, than to array themselves under this or that leader. As a pastor he was faithful and devoted, as a Christian he was meek and resigned, bearing affliction, of which he had a full share, with a patience and fortitude rarely excelled, firmly believing that the chastenings of the Lord were ordered in wisdom. As a man he was justly esteemed by all who knew him. Blessed with a social nature, and being attached to the people of his charge, he kept up an intimate and familiar intercourse with them, and was ever a welcome visitor at their houses. The old and the young were always pleased with his society ; for, to the dignity of the clergyman, which he never laid aside, he added the familiarity of a friend and the conviviality of a companion. His journal, which he kept upon an interleaved almanac, shows that his house was a place of resort for the young and old of his parish, and for the clergymen and distinguished persons from abroad. His journal also shows his method in business, and his careful attention to the most minute affairs. The daily state of the weather, the occurrence of remarkable events, the visitors who called upon him, the journeys he or any of his family performed, the visiting of the schools, the catechising of the children, the deaths in his parish and of distinguished individuals out of his parish, are all carefully noted. Nor did the more domestic affairs escape his attention — the ploughing of his ground, the gathering of his harvest — even the bringing in of his cabbages and squashes, the killing of a calf or a pig, and other matters pertaining to his household affairs, are set down — all going to show that while he was religiously devoted to his charge as a pastor, and to his country as a citizen, he did not neglect minor matters, or suffer the smallest interest to languish in his hands.

He was a man of method and of industry. As a farmer, by care and good management he was able on a small salary to rear up a large family, cultivate his land, and to leave unincumbered at his death a farm of sixty acres. Nor did his devotion to worldly affairs lead him to neglect his religious duties. Rev. William Ware, a family connection of Mr. Clarke, informs us that he had seen a manuscript sermon of Mr. Clarke's, numbered 2,179, which would make an average of fifty-six sermons a year during his whole ministry at Lexington. When it is considered that his sermons would occupy a full hour in their delivery, fifty-six original sermons in a year must require great labor both of body and of mind. He also published several discourses.¹

His personal appearance was naturally dignified and commanding, and this was heightened in the desk by his clerical costume of gown, cassock, and bands, and a wig of immense dimensions and of snowy whiteness. He was also characterized by a neatness so extreme as to serve as a constant rebuke to the want of this graceful virtue in his people. His eloquence was of a commanding character. His voice was powerful and agreeable, and when excited by his subject, which was frequently the case, it extended beyond the bounds of the meeting-house, and could be distinctly heard by those in the immediate neighborhood.

But Mr. Clarke, though eminent as a divine, was something more than is usually implied in that designation. To his knowledge of the Scriptures and whatever else is generally supposed to appertain to the clerical profession, he added a knowledge of men, in their individual and in their associated capacity, and had broad and correct views of civil polity; so that he might be denominated a statesman as well as a divine. But though he was distinguished in both these relations, he did not put these characters on and off at pleasure, assuming the one at one time, and the other at another. In him the divine and the statesman were coexistent — dwelling together in perfect harmony, prompting at all times to deeds politically religious and religiously political. Consequently he did not sink the statesman when he acted the divine, nor the divine when he acted the statesman. His theology did not begin and end in certain abstract speculations upon the divine government in the narrow and restricted sense of that term. He knew that the Almighty Ruler of the universe, not only performed in his will in the armies of heaven, but among the inhabitants of the earth; and that the great principles of the divine governments should be studied in their relations to civil society. He fully realized that man was created for society, and that many of his duties and obligations grew out of the relations which society imposed. Consequently, he viewed the study of human government as an important part of an enlightened theological education.

In addition to his other labors, he wrote numerous state papers, of which we have spoken elsewhere.

Entertaining these views, he never put off the character of the clergyman, but brought the solemn sanctions of religion to bear upon all purposes of state. With him, patriotism was not a blind attachment to one's own country, but a religious obligation to the land in which we live. On this principle, he animated our fathers to stand by the interests of the Colonies, as one of their highest duties. Regarding all true government as growing out of the great plan of the Almighty, and believing that form of government best, which approached nearest to the divine standard, he was one of the most ardent and active friends of liberty; and did more perhaps than any clergyman in this vicinity to prepare the public mind for that sanguinary struggle which gave us a place among the nations of the earth. He was an intimate friend of Samuel Adams and John Hancock, and a fellow laborer with them in the cause of liberty. To his house they frequently repaired, where they always met with a most cordial welcome, and drew the fire of patriotism from the sacred altar of religion. His counsels are known to have had a great, and perhaps a controlling influence upon John Hancock, at a time when he was supposed to be in doubt relative to his duty.

Mr. Clarke's character for patriotism was so well understood, that all the ardent friends of liberty used to frequent his house; and they never left uninstructed, or unwarned with truly religious, patriotic ardor. His patriotism being engrafted upon the holy principles of his religion, it was modest and unobtrusive, but as firm and as abiding as the source whence it drew its nourishment. However dark the dispensation, or gloomy the prospect, he was always cheered with the hope — nay, animated with the conviction, that if we were faithful to the trust committed to our care, we should ultimately triumph. And though he was a man of peace, and would sacrifice everything but principle to preserve a filial regard for the mother country, when he witnessed her wanton encroachments upon our just rights, and her determination to reduce us to a state of vassalage, he believed that it was our religious duty to raise the standard of revolt, and resist the attacks of the oppressor.

That Mr. Clarke had just and enlightened views of the science of human government, and an ardent devotion to the great cause of justice and equal rights, will be seen by the following extracts from his Election sermon, preached before His Excellency Governor Hancock and the Honorable Legislature, in 1781.

“ Were there no civil government, laws, or magistracy, for the preservation of peace, the guard of liberty, the protection of property and the defence of life, it is easy to see, and without the spirit of prophecy to predict, what the event must be; that anarchy, confusion and blood, slaughter, waste and destruction would soon take place in the earth. The weak would be devoured by the strong, the innocent, like righteous Abel, would become an easy prey to the vicious, abandoned, and ambitious; and the longest sword must quickly determine the fate of mankind. Hence it appears, I had almost said to demonstration, that under God the supreme ruler, this wise institution of civil government, this richest of temporal blessings to mankind, takes its rise from necessity.

“ It is true common reason teaches the propriety, convenience points out the advantages, and all the social affections concur to urge the importance of civil government. But they would be at least a feeble safeguard to the peace and order of society, and would never have availed to establish government over the lawless lusts of vicious, aspiring, or bloodthirsty men. It is necessity — necessity alone which combines men in society, and gives rise to civil government. This necessity, in a great measure at least, is founded in, and takes rise from the lust, corruptions, and vices of mankind.

“ ’Tis not indeed pretended that any one man or number of men have any natural right of superiority, or inherent claim of dominion or governmental authority over any other man or body of men. All men by nature are free and equal, and independent in this matter. It is in compact, and in compact alone, that all just government is founded. The first steps in entering into society, and towards the establishment of civil government among a people, is the forming, agreeing to, and ratifying an original compact for the regulation of the state — describing and determining the mode, departments, and powers of the government, and the rights, privileges and duties of the subjects. This must be done by the whole body of the people, or by leaders, or delegates of their choice. This right of the people, whether emerging from a state of nature, or the yoke of oppression, is an unalienable right. It cannot be disposed of or given up by a people, even though ever so much inclined to sell or sacrifice their birthright in this matter.

“ While the social compact exists, the whole state and its members are bound by it; and a sacred regard ought to be paid to it. No man, party, order, or body of men in the state have any right, power, or authority to alter, change, or violate the social compact. Nor can any change, amendment, or alteration be introduced but by common consent. It remains, however, with the community, state or nation, as a public, political body, at any time, at pleasure, to change, alter, or totally dissolve the constitution, and return to a state of nature, or to form a new government as to them may seem meet. These principles being admitted, it is evident that no man or body of men, however great or good — no nation, kingdom or power on earth, hath any right to make or impose a constitution of government upon a free people.

“ Equality and independence are the just claim — the indefeasible birth-right of men. In a state of nature, as individuals, in society, as states or nations, nothing short of these ever did or ever will satisfy a man or a people truly free — truly brave. When opportunity offers, and power is given, it is beyond dispute the duty of the subjected nation to assert its native liberty, to shake off the foreign yoke, and maintain its equality and independence among the nations.

“ The principles of reason, the laws of nature, and the rules of justice and equity, give men a right to select their form of government. Even God himself, the supreme ruler of the world, whose government is absolute and uncontrollable, hath ever paid a sacred attention to this important right — hath ever patronized this interesting claim in the sons of men. The only constitution of civil government that can plead its origin as direct from heaven, is the theocracy of the Hebrews; but even this form of government, though dictated by infinite wisdom, and written by the finger of God, was laid before the people for their consideration, and was ratified, introduced, and established by common consent.

“ A series of oppressive measures and lawless claims of arbitrary power, adopted and pursued by the Court of Great Britain in open violation of the most sacred chartered rights, aroused the spirit of liberty in the free-born sons of America to the highest pitch. And no other alternative being left them but the sword or slavery, these Colonies hesitated not a moment, but unitedly declared their choice of the former — greatly dared to be free! The important die was cast — and the glorious era of liberty commenced. To Heaven the appeal was made; and by Heaven the claim was sustained. That God who sitteth upon the throne of his holiness, the Governor among the nations, the patron of the injured and oppressed, hath pleaded our cause and maintained our right to freedom, equality, and independence; and given us a name among the nations of the earth.

“ To rouse our attention, and to give a spring to the noblest exertion, may we not realize the greatness of the cause, and attend to the voice of our brethren's blood, who have nobly fought and bled in its defence? O, my fathers and brethren, all, all is yet at stake. All may yet be lost, if we rise not as one man to the noble cause. How inglorious must it be to fail at the last! Where then the pleasing scenes of liberty and independence! where the glorious foundations of safety and freedom which our civil constitution has laid! They vanish — they are gone — they are lost, lost forever.

“But can this be the event? Shall this be the fatal end, the shameful issue of all the glorious exertions that have been made, of all the bitter sufferings that have been endured, of all the precious blood that hath been shed? Is this possible? Can it be? Forbid it, righteous Heaven! Forbid it, O my country! America rises indignant at the slavish thought. Her free-born sons are not so lost to the sentiments of liberty, the love of country, or the feelings of humanity, as to breathe the most distant idea of such a disgraceful end of this glorious contest. Nor can they ever be so debased as to retain a wish to survive the loss of liberty, or their country's independence. Much less to stand the tame spectators of the sacrifices that (in such a case) must and will be made of the noble patriots, wise counsellors, faithful rulers, brave commanders and illustrious heroes — and in fine of the best friends and the best blood of America, by the axe or halter, to satiate the rage, and glut the vengeance of a British conqueror! Or perhaps, that which is still more affecting and degrading, to be doomed to waste away the remains of a wretched life in poverty, chains, slavery, or a cruel imprisonment.”

These extracts from a discourse delivered while the war of the Revolution was still raging — extracts, “which those who look at, will think too long, but those who read, will think too short” — clearly show that Mr. Clarke fully understood the nature of human government, and rightly appreciated the prerogatives of rulers, and the rights and duties of the people. He was also fully aware that these rights and privileges must be guarded with care and watchfulness; that freemen must not only know their rights, but must be ready at all times to assert and maintain them, if necessary, even by the sword. Instead therefore of condemning war in all cases, and under all circumstances, he would rather sanctify it, and bring all military operations under the control of high religious principle. He had no sympathy for the display of mere brute force, but knew the worth of that true valor which struck for human rights — for liberty — for God.

In a discourse delivered before the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, in 1768, he presents his views with great clearness and force.

“Valor, or true fortitude, is that virtue by which men are enabled to preserve presence of mind, to possess themselves fully, think clearly, judge wisely, and act with calmness, firmness and resolution in times of great confusion and tumult, in the midst of the most pressing dangers and perplexing distresses. A virtue which excites to the noblest actions, stimulates to the boldest enterprises which reason dictates, judgment directs, or duty calls them to engage in. True valor is, therefore, to be considered as a moral virtue, having reason for its foundation, and religion for its encouragement and support. And where courage, valor, or fortitude has reason for its basis, and is encouraged, cultivated and supported by the principles of religion, it becomes a virtue of the highest rank, and prompts to the most heroic undertakings. And when properly employed in a cause worthy of attention, it enables men with a calmness and composure of mind to face the greatest dangers, to stand the severest shocks, to meet undaunted and serene the charge of the most formidable enemy, and all the horrors of war. The want of fortitude is always attended with disgrace and reproach, frequently with shameful defeat, and sometimes with total destruction. But inspired with this virtue, a man may engage the boldest rival in arms, and perform the most glorious exploits."

The various resolutions and instructions given to the Representatives of the town from time to time, which are found upon the town records, and of which mention has been made, are all the handy work of Rev. Jonas Clarke.

The faithful historian will always delight to do justice to modest, retiring merit, and to bring before the public a name which has slept in the musty records of the past. Considering his education in a profession somewhat removed from politics, his early settlement in a small country village, the scarcity of books at that period, and his habitual devotion to his parochial, and even domestic duties, it is remarkable that he should be so thoroughly versed in everything relating to affairs of state, and the rights and duties of men under what was then scarcely known to the world, a representative, constitutional government. When we reflect upon this in all its bearings, and find him, even when a young man, so ripe in the wisdom of statesmanship, we can say of him as Canterbury said of his new sovereign:—

"Never was such a sudden scholar made;
 Nor never youthful inexperience
 So soon did loose its seat, as in this man.
 Hear him but reason in divinity,
 And, all admiring, with an inward wish
 You would desire this man were made a prelate.
 Hear him debate of Commonwealth affairs,
 And you would say — it hath been all his study.
 Turn him to any course of policy,
 The Gordian knot of it, he will unloose Familiar as his gaiter."

As Mr. Hancock and Mr. Clarke were both distinguished in their profession, and each of them labored in the vineyard of their Lord half a century, with eminent success, and each died greatly lamented by the people of the place; and as the characters of these eminent divines are not sufficiently known by the people of this generation, it is thought that some light may be cast upon the character of each by drawing a parallel between them. But, in the first place, we should clearly understand in what points they agree. No two clergymen out of Boston filled a larger space in the public mind, in their respective generations, than Mr. Hancock and Mr. Clarke. They were both men of distinguished talents, and ardent piety; of great industry and method in business,¹ and being well acquainted with the wants of their people, they were eminently successful in their calling.

In theology, their sentiments were very similar, each taking a practical view of the religion they taught. They knew that the Gospel, though a scheme of salvation into which the angels desire to look, was adapted to the wants of men, and that the earth was the field in which to train men for the skies. Knowing that religion was designed to fit men to dwell together harmoniously in heaven, they both strove to induce them to live peaceably on earth, as the best preparation for their ultimate abode. But while they both labored to make their people benevolent, kind and peaceable as men and as citizens, they were not insensible to the higher aspirations and the immortal destiny of the human soul. Hence they labored to raise men above mere earthly things. In one word, though they taught a pure morality, they did not rest in morality alone; but added thereto an active, ardent piety. Another leading characteristic in both of these servants of the Lord, was that of independence. Though kind and conciliatory, they were both open and frank in the declaration of their views, and their preaching was characterized by a boldness which plainly indicated that they preached not the pleasing words of man's wisdom, but the sublime truths of the Gospel which God had committed to them, and which they would proclaim, whether men would hear or forbear.

Agreeing in so many particulars, and conforming so exactly to each other, and to the divine standard of a Christian minister, we can find few traits of character on which to institute a parallel. But yet it is believed that there are some points on which they differed, and the exact character of each will be best shown by the contrast. Though remarkable for their social qualities, in their intercourse with their fellow-men, Mr. Hancock had more pleasantry, and Mr. Clarke more dignity; and while the former would more frequently unbend himself and indulge in playful wit or humor, the latter would always come down to familiar companionship, but would never put off the character of the clergyman. This difference arose probably more from the temperament of the two men, than from any real differences of sentiment. Of Mr. Hancock, it may be said that he had more art — more of what may be called management, than Mr. Clarke; though in him it never degenerated into low cunning or craft. He was minutely acquainted with all the temporal affairs of his people, and here he exerted his influence to a very great extent, and generally, it is believed, for their best good. Mr. Hancock and Mr. Clarke were well acquainted with men and things; but the former knew more of men in their individual character, and the latter in their associated condition. And hence the one was the best calculated to rear up a feeble parish in a new settlement, and the other to guide a rising State. Of intellectual power,—that creative energy of mind which originates and combines, which meets present emergencies and provides for future contingencies, the preference must be given to Mr. Clarke. If Mr. Hancock's vision was more microscopic, Mr. Clarke's extended over a broader field; so that the exact observation of the one, was more than compensated by the broader survey of the other. Mr. Hancock could meet the wants of the present, Mr. Clarke could anticipate those of the future.

The training of Mr. Hancock's powers was on a scale more limited than that of Mr. Clarke's. The former circumscribed his powers to the wants of his parish, and the interests of the churches around him, where he exerted an almost unbounded sway ; while the latter entered upon a broader field, and brought his energies to bear upon the affairs of states and the destinies of nations ; and if his influence was not as controlling in his particular sphere as his predecessor's was in his, it was only because the field was broader, and the rivals more numerous and distinguished. Mr. Hancock's sphere of labor being more circumscribed, and the themes of his contemplation being more common, his reputation will be less lasting than that of Mr. Clarke, who has left his impress upon subjects which will ever engage the popular mind.

But it is unprofitable to pursue this parallel, and point out differences discoverable in these great and good men ; each of whom filled with fidelity the sphere in which he was placed. And as they were perhaps equally successful in the common field, that of the Christian minister, it may be true that if their circumstances had been reversed, we should see as many of the characteristics of a statesman in Mr. Hancock, as were so eminently displayed by his distinguished successor.

The remains of Mr. Hancock and Mr. Clarke, with their wives and several members of their families, were deposited in the same tomb in the Lexington graveyard, and one common stone marks their resting place.

AFTER the death of Mr. Clarke, and before the settlement of his successor, a period of about two years, the church records are quite meagre. In August, 1807, Mr. Avery Williams was first heard as a candidate, and on the 8th of October, he received a unanimous invitation to become their pastor. He accepted the call, and was ordained December 30, 1807. Rev. Dr. Kendall, of Weston, preached the sermon; Rev. Mr. Marrett, of Burlington, made the consecrating prayer, and Rev. Dr. Cushing, of Waltham, gave the charge.

His health failing him, by the advice of his physician Mr. Williams spent a winter at the South, but obtained no permanent relief. The parish supplied the pulpit during his absence and inability to preach. But when it became apparent that his pastoral labors were at an end, by an arrangement with the parish, his connection with them terminated in September, 1815.¹ His ministry was a successful one.

On the 31st of March, 1813, Mr. Williams preached a century sermon, which was published. This discourse is well written, and does credit to the author. It is a succinct and well digested sketch of the early settlement of the place. He pays a just tribute to the memories of his predecessors in the ministry, Mr. Hancock and Mr. Clarke. The sermon shows careful research, sound judgment, and good taste, and reflects great credit upon Mr. Williams as a gentleman of accuracy and talents. Such discourses are a valuable contribution to history.

In 1819, both church and society extended an invitation to Mr. Charles Briggs to become their pastor. The invitation being accepted, the 28th of April, 1819, was agreed upon as the time for the ordination. Rev. Dr. Richmond preached the sermon, and Rev. Dr. Kirkland made the consecrating prayer.

There was nothing of special moment which occurred during Mr. Briggs's ministry. The church records, kept by him, are not only meagre, but loose, and compare poorly with those of his predecessors. The records of his marriages, and of the deaths in the parish, are so imperfect as to be of but little value.

Mr. Briggs was graduated at Harvard in 1815, and his first and only settlement was at Lexington. His ministry extended over a period of more than sixteen years, and was on the whole a successful one, though his health was delicate, and at times he was scarcely able to attend to his ordinary duties. Nevertheless, he retained the affections of the people, who expressed their sympathy by several gratuities, in consequence of his sickness and feeble health. In 1827, the town voted him five hundred dollars, to be paid out of the Ministerial Fund; and in 1835, they voted to give him two hundred dollars in addition to his salary. During this year, his health continuing feeble, Mr. Briggs requested that his connection with the parish be dissolved, which was granted. The feelings of the town towards him, on the sundering of their relations, were fully expressed in the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:—

“Resolved, That the First Congregational Society, in Lexington, exceedingly regret that the health of the Reverend Charles Briggs is such as to render it imprudent for him, with a just regard to himself and family, to fulfill all the duties appertaining to his ministerial office; that his labors among them hitherto will long be remembered with gratitude and affection; that his talents and ministerial character eminently entitle him to their highest respect; that his discreet and conciliatory deportment has been a strong bond of union to this Society; and that they most deeply sympathize with him and his family in his present precarious state of health.”

It is due to Mr. Briggs to say, that the last years of his ministry in Lexington, were rendered embarrassing by the unprofitable controversy growing out of the Ministerial Fund. Though he managed prudently, his labors must have been greatly neutralized by the unhappy state of feeling which pervaded the community. His neglect to give the information, though more than once requested, deprives us of the pleasure of giving a genealogy of his family.

After the termination of Mr. Briggs's ministry, the parish remained in an unsettled condition for a series of years. The unhappy contest for the possession of the Fund contributed greatly to this divided state of affairs.

About a year after Mr. Briggs left the society, Mr. William G. Swett was invited to become their pastor, with a salary of seven hundred dollars. He accepted the call, and was ordained July 13, 1836. He was son of Colonel Samuel Swett, and graduated at Harvard College, 1828. He was subsequently settled in Lynn. He married Charlotte B. Phinney, daughter of Elias Phinney, Esq., of Lexington. On January 15, 1839, his relations with the society were dissolved at his own request. During his ministry, the controversy relative to the Fund must have made his position unpleasant. His salary of seven hundred dollars being deemed insufficient, two hundred dollars was subsequently added, showing a kind feeling towards him personally.

After Rev. Mr. Swett left the parish, they continued in a broken state for some time. That disturbing element, the Fund, kept the town in commotion; and in this distracted state of affairs, it was difficult to find any man who would settle with them. The pulpit was supplied from time to time by such preachers as they could obtain. Rev. George M. Rice supplied for a period. Rev. Mr. Knapp, by temporary engagements, supplied the desk several months; and after that, Rev. S. B. Cruft was employed a year or more.

After the close of Mr. Cruft's brief ministry, Rev. Samuel J. May supplied the desk about six months. He saw the distracted state of the town, and set himself at work to heal these disorders; and it is due to him to say that, by his energetic labors, and conciliatory spirit, he did more towards bringing about an amicable adjustment of the bitter controversy about the Fund, than any other man ; for which he received the thanks of the town.

In 1845, after the Legislature had provided for the division of the Ministerial Fund between the different societies, the first parish, which, up to that period had transacted their business under a town warrant, organized as a parish, under a warrant issued by William Chandler, justice of the peace.

At a meeting, June 30, 1845, the parish voted unanimously to invite Rev. Jason Whitman to become their pastor, on a salary of nine hundred dollars. Mr. Whitman accepted the invitation, and July 30, 1845, was agreed upon for his installation. Mr. Whitman had previously been settled at Saco, and at Portland, Maine.

Immediately after the settlement of Mr. Whitman, the society voted to reconstruct their meeting-house ; and at a meeting held February 9, 1846, William Chandler, Sullivan Burbank, J. Simonds Parker, William Locke, Isaac Parker, Isaac N. Damon, and Joseph Davis, were appointed a committee to carry that vote into effect. The committee contracted with Mr. S. B. Temple, to remodel the house ; and when it was substantially completed, viz. December 17, 1846, the house took fire and was entirely consumed. Being thus deprived of a place of worship, the Baptist society generously offered the use of their house every Sunday morning, till the first parish could provide some place for themselves ; which offer was thankfully accepted. The house not being insured, and the work on the old house being in the nature of repairs, the loss fell entirely upon the society.

Being thus deprived of a house of worship, the society, at a meeting held February 15, 1847, voted to erect a new meeting-house, at a cost not exceeding eight thousand dollars, and chose a committee to carry the vote into effect. The house was completed, and dedicated, February 28, 1848. The pews were appraised and sold at public auction for a sum sufficient to pay for the house.

Though Mr. Whitman was settled over the society under very flattering circumstances, unforeseen causes disturbed the peace and prosperity of the parish. The loss of their old house by fire, interrupted in some degree his ministry, and the division of the people relative to the location of the new house, would naturally impair the harmony of the society; and though no objection was raised against him, the success of his ministry must have been somewhat impeded by these untoward circumstances. Being in Maine, to attend the funeral of a brother-in-law, he was taken suddenly ill, and died a few weeks before the completion of the new meeting-house.

The parish records contain the following brief notice of the event: "The Rev. Jason Whitman died, January 25th, 1848, at Portland, Maine. He was buried from the Baptist meeting-house, on Saturday the 28th."

Mr. Whitman was highly esteemed by his people; and as a testimonial of their regard for him and his family, the parish, at their meeting, March 13, 1848, voted, "That the salary of our highly esteemed friend and minister, Rev. Jason Whitman, deceased, be continued up to the first day of May next, and be paid to Mrs. Whitman, widow of the deceased, as a token of the high esteem of the society for him and his family, and for his unceasing labors to promote the cause of religion, education, and every good work, while he was permitted to remain among the living."

Mr. Whitman was a man of feeble constitution, and yet he performed a vast amount of labor. He was born in Bridgewater, April 30, 1799,¹ was graduated at Harvard University, 1825. He was settled over a small society in Saco, Maine, where he married, March, 1832, Mary Fairfield. The society in Saco being unable to give him a suitable support, he left, and took the general agency of the American Unitarian Association. A new Unitarian society being formed in Portland, Maine, Mr. Whitman was induced to take charge of it, where, by his almost incessant labor, his health gave way, and he was advised to seek a warmer clime. He went to Savannah, Georgia, where his health was soon so improved, that he entered upon his labors in that city and vicinity; but seeing that the South was no place to preach with the freedom to which he was accustomed, or to educate his children, he returned to Portland, in 1842, with invigorated health, where he remained till 1845, when he received a unanimous invitation to settle in Lexington. Accepting the call, he was installed, July 30, 1845.

Mr. Whitman was ardently devoted to his profession, and the moral reforms of the day; and never spared himself when there was a field of labor before him. In addition to his weekly preparations for the pulpit, he wrote for the periodical and weekly press. He also published, An Address on Temperance; A Sermon on the Two Natures of Christ; A Sermon on Regeneration; A Sermon on Missionary Efforts; Home Preparation for School — delivered before the American Institute; A Fourth of July Address; A Memoir of Rev. Edward H. Edes, of Kennebunk; A Memoir of his brother, Bernard Whitman, of Waltham; A Memoir of his father, Deacon John Whitman, of East Bridgewater; Young Lady's Aid — a course of lectures before the young ladies of Portland; Young Man's Assistant — a course of lectures to the young men of Portland; A Volume of Sermons on the Lord's Prayer; A Sermon at the Ordination of Rev. C. H. A. Dall; and a number of religious tracts.

Mr. Whitman was a man of modest, unaffected piety, firm and decided in his religious opinions; and yet far removed from a narrow sectarian spirit. By the simplicity of his manners, by his liberal and benevolent disposition and good sense, he always secured the respect and esteem of the community in which he lived. His writings are characterized by strength and directness, guided by practical wisdom, and expressed with great clearness. His preaching was earnest and direct, practical and persuasive, and rather conversational than declamatory in manner.

In his first discourse at Lexington, after his installation, he gave his new parish a statement of his views and principles — from which we cite the following: —

“People sometimes seem to feel, that, as the minister receives his support from them, it is to them that he owes his first allegiance, and that his great object should be to satisfy them. Upon this point, my views are different. I feel that my first allegiance is due to God and to Christ; I believe that I am accountable to God for what I say; I regard Jesus Christ as the sanctified and sent of the Father, and his instructions as authorized disclosures of God's will. He is my master in matters of religion; to his authority I reverently bow. Whatever his instructions may require me to proclaim as God's truth, woe be to me if I refrain from preaching it, through fear of man. Thus far my allegiance to God and Christ extends. Beyond this I may and I ought to consult the wishes and feelings of the people with regard to the time and mode of presenting even Christian truths and sentiments."

Concerning the popular movements of the day, he said:—

"The spiritual prosperity and religious growth of a society, will be promoted by frequent social religious conference, and by a deep and active interest in missionary movements.

"On the subject of Temperance, I am, and for years have been, pledged to total abstinence from the use of all intoxicating drinks as a beverage. I have, in years past, taken an active part in efforts to remove the evils of intemperance from the community.

"Upon the subject of Slavery I would say, that, having spent several months at the South, I entertain a very deep abhorrence of the system, as based upon injustice and supported by wrong, and as fraught with evils of the most appalling character to the slave and to the master, and I know not but as much to the one as to the other."

The loss of their newly refitted meeting-house was a sore calamity to the parish; and though they voted to borrow the money necessary to pay the contractor, by a delay, or neglect on the part of the Committee, who had obtained the money on their own notes, the matter was suffered to remain unsettled till a considerable portion of the claim against the parish became outlawed, and the whole loss would have fallen upon the Committee, had not individuals contributed freely to relieve them of this onerous burden.

After the death of Mr. Whitman, the society heard several preachers, and on the 19th of March, 1849, gave Mr. Fiske Barrett,¹ then in the Divinity School at Cambridge, a unanimous invitation to become their pastor. Mr. Barrett accepted the invitation, to take effect after the close of his theological course. He was ordained September 5, 1849. Mr. Barrett having tendered his resignation as pastor, the society, at a meeting held June 14, 1852, voted to accept it. His ministry was short and terminated by his own request.

After being destitute of a settled minister for two years, the society extended an invitation to Mr. Nahor A. Staples, a graduate from the Theological School at Meadville, Pennsylvania, to become their pastor, with a salary of one thousand two hundred dollars. Mr. Staples accepting the invitation, September 20, 1854, was fixed on for the ordination. After laboring with the parish about two years and two months, Mr. Staples requested to be dismissed, that he might take the pastoral charge of a new society being formed in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. The society at a meeting held November 10, 1856, “ Voted, That we accept the communication of Rev. N. A. Staples, and accede to his wishes as therein expressed, and that his connection be dissolved on the last Sabbath of this month.

“ Voted, That the Parish Committee transmit to Rev. N. A. Staples a copy of the above vote, together with an expression of the regret of the Society at the separation, and their earnest prayers for his future prosperity and happiness.”

During Mr. Staples's ministry the society was prosperous, and thirty members were added to the church. Mr. Staples was a young man of more than ordinary talents; he was active and indefatigable in his labors, fervent in his eloquence, and had his life been spared, would have become one of the leading clergymen of the denomination. He died February 5, 1864, in Brooklyn, New York, where he had been settled.¹

The society after the close of Mr. Staples's ministry was destitute of a settled minister about a year, when an invitation was given to Rev. Leonard J. Livermore to become their pastor. He accepted the invitation, and was installed, October 4, 1857. Mr. Livermore remained with the society nine years, when he asked a dismissal. At a meeting of the parish called for that purpose, September 3, 1866, they acceded to his request, expressing at the same time their sincere regret at the separation. They also, by a public vote, bore testimony to the value of his labors, “by which the church had been increased, and the society relieved of a heavy pecuniary burden,” and expressed their high appreciation of his fidelity, self-sacrificing spirit, and purity of character.

At the last communion service, held on the first Sunday of November, 1866, the church expressed their regard for Rev. Mr. Livermore, and their regret at his departure, by adopting by a unanimous vote a testimonial, from which the following are extracts :

“ We cannot consistently with our own feelings, or in justice to him, permit this opportunity to pass without some expression of our attachment to him, our appreciation of his Christian character, and our regret at the separation. We therefore take pleasure in saying, as we can in truth and sincerity, that we highly appreciate the industry and fidelity, the zeal and disinterestedness, with which he has discharged all his duties as pastor of this church and society, during the nine years he has labored with us."

After enumerating the fundamental doctrines he had inculcated, they add :

"And we rejoice to say that he has taught these doctrines, not only by precept, but by example, adding to the full force of his teaching a consistent Christian character; that we have witnessed with high satisfaction, his benevolence and liberality, his kindness to the poor and unfortunate, his Christian sympathy for the sick and afflicted, his respect for the aged, his devotion to the rising generation, his faithful efforts, by word and deed, to promote the temporal and spiritual welfare of the church and society, and in general, his readiness to join in any good work to improve the condition and elevate the Christian character of the community."

As a farther testimonial of their attachment to him, and their regret at his leaving them, two hundred and twenty-nine of his late parishioners, male and female, presented him a briefly written expression of their personal regard and esteem under their own signatures respectively, accompanied by a service of silver plate, as a Christmas gift.

During Mr. Livermore's ministry fifty persons were admitted to the church, and a number of children were baptized. It is due to him to say, that though his salary was insufficient to support his family, no member of the parish or town was more liberal or ready to contribute to every public object which presented itself. And among the subjects which engaged his attention, we cannot in justice omit to mention his successful effort to extinguish a heavy claim against the parish, arising from the loss by fire of their meeting-house in 1846.

Two distinct efforts had been made, and a considerable sum had been raised to relieve the committee, who, by the lapse of time, had lost their legal claim upon the parish; and yet forty-five hundred dollars were unpaid. When all further efforts were relinquished, Mr. Livermore took the matter in hand, and by his own liberality and effort, succeeded in raising twenty-five hundred and forty-one dollars for the relief of the committee, who relinquished all further claim. It is due to fact to say, that of this sum, Mrs. Cary, widow of the late William Cary, of Brooklyn, New York, who has a summer residence in Lexington, her native town, gave one thousand dollars.

During the rebellion, Mr. Livermore preached two sermons which were published at the request of his hearers — both of which were fraught with an enlightened and patriotic devotion to the cause of liberty and our free institutions. The first was delivered August 6, 1863, on the National Thanksgiving, for the successes which had attended our arms. We can hardly find a paragraph which does not breathe an ardent devotion to country, and a firm belief that the Ruler of nations is carrying us forward to a higher and more glorious destiny. We will make one or two citations from the discourse.

“There has never been a time since the war began, so dark or disastrous as to justify despondency, or regret that the nation chose to fight rather than submit to falsehood and treachery; but rather there has always been reason to feel that we were working out the will of God and our own redemption.

“God works through agents. He makes the heart of the nation throb with his own detestation of pride, perjury, robbery, cruelty, lust, anarchy and treason, the seven deadly sins of the enemies of our national life. He uses the strong right arm of the nation to smite the blows of his heavy retribution. He uses the folly of the foolish, and the passions of the violent, like irritating medicines, to do good in a diseased body politic; but it is a far grander and more obvious truth, that he uses the whole force of man’s just and generous sentiments, of man’s sincerity, self-sacrifice, patriotism and courage, to build up the solid pillars and walls of his kingdom of right and mercy.”

The other discourse of Mr. Livermore, delivered September 11, 1864, was entitled, “Perseverance in the War, the Interest and Duty of the Nation.” The title of the discourse shows its design, and the following extracts will show its spirit.

“With those who cry out for peace, because they are at heart friends of the traitors, and who are ready to put arms into the hands of their partisans here to inaugurate civil war in the now peaceful North, I have no shadow of sympathy. A class more worthy of the detestation of all good people I do not know in the wide world. They are baser than the rebels themselves, as much as disguised and renegade traitors are worse than open foes. With those who are chiefly moved to their outcry for peace by the dread of pecuniary loss, I have not much sympathy. I never learned to admire Esau, who sold his birthright for a mess of pottage; and there is certainly no more reason to admire those who would chaffer with malignant traitors in arms, and take the steps which go straight to the destruction of our glorious heritage, and the shameful extinction of our national unity, to save their dividends or escape their share of the cost of saving the nation. There can be nothing but eternal dishonor, and the just judgment of God, awaiting us, if the love of money or the fear of its loss controls our settlement of such questions as those involved in this war."

"Bad as the war is, a wretched, dishonorable peace would be worse. It would, I truly believe, be a sin against God, and a crime against man to hold any parley with these enemies of all that is good, except on the terms constantly held out to them, by our Government; submission to the authority of the nation, and the reference of all disputed points to the proper legal tribunals, after peace is re-established."

Mr. Livermore came to Lexington from Clinton, where he had labored in the ministry six years—having previously been settled in East Boston, where he remained the same length of time. While in Lexington, he was on the school committee during the greater part of his ministry, and had the principal charge of the schools. He was a native of Milford, New Hampshire.¹

Rev. Henry Westcott² succeeded Mr. Livermore as pastor of the society in Lexington, and was installed June 26, 1867. He had previously been settled in Barre, and had subsequently preached a year at West Dedham. He was a native of Warwick, Rhode Island.

THE SECOND CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY. — The origin of this society being a little peculiar, it is not easy to say when it first had a real existence. It seems by its records that it was duly incorporated according to law, April 18, 1845; though it had an organization ten or twelve years before, and had supported public worship for about ten years, a portion of the time, at least. They had also, under the designation of the Christian Association, erected a meeting-house, and disposed of their pews. And though they were probably a legal body before the action taken April 18, 1845, it was at that time that they organized as proprietors of the meeting-house, rather than as a poll parish. A considerable portion of the records of this society is comprised in the details of the doings of the town, in relation to a division of the Ministerial Fund; but as that matter has been treated of in another place, it need not be repeated here.

THE "FOLLEN CHURCH," AND RESIDENCE OF THE LATE DR. FOLLEN.

As far as appears from the record, which is very meagre, Rev. Charles Follen was employed a portion of the time from 1835 to 1840. In the meantime, Ralph W. Emerson, J. S. Dwight, and others, labored with the society temporarily.

In 1835, the subject of erecting a meeting-house began to be seriously agitated, and a subscription for that object was started. In 1839, the Association reëngaged Dr. Follen for six months, and active measures were adopted to erect a meeting-house; which being completed, the 15th of January, 1840, was appointed for its dedication, and Dr. Follen, as a matter of course, was designated to preach the dedication sermon. In the language of the society record:—

“Dr. Follen was obliged to visit New York previous to the dedication, and made the necessary arrangements with his brethren in the ministry to assist him in the ceremonies. The Doctor, wife and child, with S. L. Lathrop and lady, who were to assist in the choir at the dedication, left for New York. Soon after their arrival Mrs. Follen was taken ill, and continued so for weeks. On the 3d of January, he wrote to the committee, requesting that the dedication might be put off for one week, if it could be done without inconvenience to the society, but expressed his willingness, if the committee thought best, to come without his wife, and return again for her. The committee, on consultation, thought that as all the arrangements had been made and published, and the pews were advertised to be sold the same day, it would be detrimental to the Association to postpone the dedication, and a letter to that effect was written to Dr. Follen. We expected Dr. Follen; but the evening before the dedication, the committee met the clergy who had been invited, and it was agreed that Rev. Mr. Pierpont should preach, in case Dr. Follen did not arrive in season. The Doctor not arriving, Mr. Pierpont preached the sermon.

“Thus the house was dedicated January 15, 1840. On the 16th, news reached Boston of the loss of the steamboat Lexington by fire, and that nearly all the passengers and crew had perished, and among them Rev. Dr. Follen, our beloved and much respected pastor. The news cast a gloom over the whole town and country. To the people of his flock it was peculiarly trying. They had a meeting, and agreed to invite Rev. Mr. Stetson, of Medford, to preach a sermon on the melancholy occasion, who, in the spirit of Christian friendship, though at short notice, consented. After the services were over, the people voted that a committee be chosen to communicate to Mrs. Follen, the feelings of respect they entertained for her late husband, and to tender her their Christian sympathy under her severe affliction.”

The foregoing account, abridged from the parish records, tells the sad fate of a worthy and distinguished Christian minister and philanthropist.

Charles Follen was born in Germany, September 4, 1796, and was educated at the University of Giessen. His devotion to the great principles of liberty, and his strict adherence to justice and morality, even before he had finished his studies, made him somewhat unpopular with the less scrupulous young men with whom he was associated, and excited some suspicion in the faculty, who were deeply imbued with monarchical principles. And after he had finished his course, read law, and became a professor, his lectures were found to be too liberal to suit the taste of the Holy Alliance, which, at that time, assumed to control the destinies of Europe. He was arrested on frivolous pretences, and made to feel the weight of arbitrary and despotic power; so that common prudence induced him to leave his own country. He first visited France, but the unsettled state of things there induced him to seek a more congenial retreat in Switzerland, at that time the freest nation on the Continent.

In Switzerland, he was called to a professorship in the Evangelical Council of Education of the Canton of the Grisons, where his liberal views of Christian doctrines soon became objectionable, and he left, carrying with him a certificate that his "luminous lectures and kind treatment of his pupils had secured their respect, attachment and confidence, in the highest degree." The University of Basle, learning that Dr. Follen was at liberty, appointed him as a public lecturer at the University, where he taught the natural, civil, and ecclesiastical law, besides some branches of metaphysics, viz. logic, the philosophy of the mind in its application to religion, morals, legislation, and the fine arts.

At Basle, for a period, he dwelt in peace and contentment, being left to the full enjoyment of his religious and political sentiments. Young men, from various parts, flocked to the University, and all seemed to be prosperous. But while he and the literary friends by whom he was surrounded were rejoicing in their political and religious liberty, the tyrants of Europe were alarmed, when they heard that in Switzerland, the only free state on the continent, had been erected a new temple of freedom. Prussia forbid her young men visiting the University; and the Holy Alliance, allied for the unholy purpose of suppressing freedom, resolved to break up an institution which they regarded as hostile to their policy. Prussia, Austria, and Russia, demanded of the government of Basle, that Dr. Follen and another liberal professor in the University, should be given up to the tribunal of inquisition established near Berlin.

Switzerland was averse to yielding to the arbitrary demands of these tyrants; but fearing the power of this combination, at last yielded to their haughty request. Dr. Follen was advised by his friends to leave the country; but he insisted upon a trial there. But failing in this, and being compelled to leave to avoid an arrest, he sent to the government the following note:—

“Whereas the Republic of Switzerland, which has protected so many fugitive princes, noble men, and priests, would not protect him, who like themselves is a Republican, he is compelled to take refuge in the great asylum of liberty, the United States of America. His false accusers he summons before the tribunal of God and public opinion. Laws he has never violated. But the heinous crime of having loved his country, has rendered him guilty to such a degree, that he feels quite unworthy to be pardoned by the Holy Alliance.”

He asked a testimonial from the University, which was readily granted, stating that he had always demeaned himself as a good and peaceable citizen, and had secured the confidence of his associates.

Dr. Follen left Basle secretly for Paris, and from France took passage for America, in company with his friend Dr. Beck, and arrived safely in New York. In the autumn of 1825, he was appointed teacher of German in Harvard University, and took up his abode in Cambridge. His labors thus far had been mostly devoted to the subject of ethics, as connected with civil government and the rights of man. But his teaching on these subjects was always based upon the broad principles of Christianity. Feeling more and more the importance of the teachings of Christ, he resolved to enter the ministry; and after studying theology with Dr. Channing, he commenced preaching. Retaining his connection with the College, and being promoted to a professorship which engrossed a good share of his time and attention, he was hardly in a condition to take the pastoral charge of a parish; and hence his clerical labors were not confined to any one locality.

About this time the anti-slavery cause was attracting considerable attention, and Dr. Follen, deeply imbued with the love of freedom, at once espoused it. This step did not meet the approbation of the cautious and conservative government of the University, which permitted his professorship to expire. Being thus cut off from the pecuniary support of the College, he was thrown upon his other limited resources, and was compelled to seek employment as best he could, to support himself and family. He conceived the idea of establishing a literary institution in Boston; but the friends of Harvard could hardly be expected to encourage it; and it was given up. About this time he was invited to preach at East Lexington, and assist them in building up a society in that village. We have seen with what success he had commenced his work, and what prospect was opened to him and to his devoted people, when by a mysterious providence his earthly labors were brought to speedy termination.

Dr. Follen was no ordinary man. Whether we view him intellectually or morally, we must place him above the ordinary level of our public men. The high and honorable positions he has occupied both in Europe and America, the estimation in which he was held by the gifted men in our community, and the able writings he has left, bear ample testimony to his talents. His mind was of the German cast, and strongly imbued with the great principles of civil and religious freedom. Though kind and conciliatory, he was conscientious, firm and self-sacrificing, ever ready to follow his honest convictions, regardless alike of his own individual interest or the frowns of others. As a reformer he was in advance of his age; and if in any case he was a little impracticable, it arose from honest convictions of truth, stimulated perhaps by the experience he had had on both sides of the Atlantic. He was literally a friend of humanity; and his honest sympathy was ever extended to the oppressed and down-trodden. In private life, he was meek and gentle, ardently attached to his family and friends, and ever ready to make any sacrifice for their benefit. In a word, for natural and acquired abilities, for conscientious firmness, for an ardent love of liberty and the rights of man, for sympathy for the poor, afflicted and down-trodden, he had few equals and no superiors.

Rev. Theodore H. Dorr, having received and accepted a call, was publicly installed pastor of the church and society, July 2, 1845. Mr. Dorr continued his pastoral relations with the parish for four years, when he asked a dismissal on the ground that they were not able to give him a reasonable support. He closed his labors with them, August 1, 1849.¹

On the 7th of November, 1849, Mr. William F. Bridge was ordained pastor of the society. In 1852, Rev. Mr. Bridge tendered his resignation, and his connection was dissolved. He was a son of Josiah and Eunice (Morse) Bridge, of Lancaster, and grandson of Rev. Josiah Bridge, who was born in Lexington, 1739, and settled at East Sudbury, now Wayland. William F. Bridge was born February 15, 1821, graduated at Harvard College, 1846. In settling at Lexington he in a manner came back to the old parental hearthstone.² After leaving Lexington, he was settled at Dublin, N. H.

Mr. Bridge was their last settled minister. After the close of his ministry, Rev. E. P. Crafts, Rev. Caleb Stetson and others, were employed temporarily. About the commencement of 1863, the Second Congregational Society and the Universalist made an arrangement by which the two societies were to unite for the support of public worship, the desk to be supplied by the joint action of their respective committees. After acting together about two years, they petitioned the Legislature to be united. Their prayer was granted, and by an Act passed March 30, 1865, they were made one corporation, by the name of "THE CHURCH OF THE REDEEMER."

The Act of the Legislature uniting the two parishes, being accepted by them respectively, they at once organized under their charter, disposed of the House formerly occupied by the Universalist Society, and made thorough repairs, and an enlargement of the House formerly occupied by the Second Congregational Society. Before the legal union, they had employed Rev. William T. Stowe as their preacher, and he being highly acceptable to them, has been continued as pastor of the new organization. Mr. Stowe came to Lexington from Brattleboro', Vermont, where he had been preaching to the Universalist Society.³

THE BAPTIST SOCIETY.—The origin of this society is thus given by one of their pastors. For more than half a century there have been a greater or less number of Baptist professors in Lexington; in 1781, most of them became connected with a Baptist church formed in West Cambridge. But little interest was manifested till 1817, when several united with churches in other towns. In 1824, the ordinance of baptism by immersion, was first administered in Lexington. In 1830, meetings were commenced in town. In 1833, Rev. T. P. Ropes removed to the place, and performed the duties of pastor. During the same year their meeting-house was erected, and a church constituted, consisting of twenty-one members. In January, 1835, Rev. O. A. Dodge, having previously received and accepted a call, was publicly ordained and set over the society. Under his ministry the society was prosperous, and a considerable accession was made to the church. Mr. Dodge died, May 18, 1840. The church records contain this tribute to his memory. "To a mind naturally shrewd, penetrating, and highly cultivated, he added a warm-hearted piety and an unwavering activity. Beloved by the church and respected by all, he died universally lamented."

After the death of Mr. Dodge, Mr. C. M. Bowers accepted a call, and was ordained, Sept. 9, 1841. Some dissension arising in the society, in February 1846, Rev. Mr. Bowers resigned his pastoral care, and was succeeded by Rev. Ira Leland, who commenced his labors for the parish in the autumn of 1847. Mr. Leland's connection with the society continued ten years, when it closed at his own request. He was a faithful pastor, and a valuable citizen, having for several years the principal charge of the schools in the town. Before the settlement of Mr. Dodge, and at several intervals between their settled ministers, Rev. T. P. Ropes had supplied their pulpit. Since the close of Mr. Leland's ministry they have had no permanent pastor, Rev. Mr. Clark and Rev. Mr. Savage laboring with the parish, each for a short time only.

THE FIRST UNIVERSALIST SOCIETY.—It appears from their Records, that the constitution or by-laws of this society, were adopted, April 20, 1845. But it is obvious that they had a partial organization at an earlier period, and had for years supported public worship, at least a portion of the time. Their meeting-house was erected as early as 1840. Rev. James M. Usher commenced preaching for them before their meeting-house was erected, and continued their pastor about five years. Since leaving Lexington he has been engaged in business in Boston as a bookseller and publisher. His residence has been in Medford. He has been considerably in public life, and has occupied a seat in the State Senate several years.

After Mr. Usher closed his labors with the society, Rev. C. H. Webster became their pastor, and remained with them about two years. He was succeeded by Rev. W. B. Randolph, whose ministry lasted about three years. In 1849, Rev. J. A. Cooledge was settled over the society, and remained with them about four years.¹ Since 1853, they have had no settled pastor. The parish being feeble, their house has been closed the greater part of the time for the last ten years. Some four years ago this society united with the Unitarian society in the East Village, and employed preachers of each sect, till they agreed upon Rev. Mr. Stowe. Being united upon him and finding themselves more nearly allied in doctrinal views than they had formerly imagined, these societies took the wise step of giving up their former organizations, and becoming one body, and securing the labors of Rev. Mr. Stowe, as we have already seen.

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.—The Roman Catholics have had occasional meetings in Lexington for several years. When the Unitarian and Universalist societies in the East Village united, they sold the meeting-house formerly owned by the Universalists, which was purchased by the Roman Catholics, and they maintain services there a portion of the time.

THE ORTHODOX MEETING HOUSE.—The Calvinistic Congregationalists have no organization in Lexington. The churches of that faith, in the neighboring towns, have recently purchased the old Academy building, and fitted it up for a meeting-house; but as yet it has not been opened for public worship.

EDUCATION.

Interest felt in Education — A School-House built, and Schools established — Grammar School — Sometimes a Moving School — Second School-House built — An Academy established in Lexington — The First Normal School located there — Increased Interest in Education — High School established — Present Condition of the Schools — Dr. Lewis's Female Seminary.

IT is worthy of observation, that the love of country and the love of learning, were always regarded by our fathers as kindred affections, — originating in the same general cause, and seeking the same great end. They regarded these affections as the offspring of religion, and the fruits of an active faith; and they urged a good education, and literary and scientific attainments, as among the most efficient means of securing piety to God and good will to his creatures. In their earliest efforts to set up schools and endow the University, they recognized the service of God as the great end to be promoted. In relation to these institutions, they say, "We cannot but acknowledge the great goodness of God towards his people in this wilderness, in raising up schools of learning, and especially the College, from which there hath sprung many instruments, both in church and state; and we feel that we should show ourselves ungrateful to God, or unfaithful to posterity, if so good a seminary of knowledge and virtue should fall to the ground through any neglect of ours."¹ And in establishing the common school system in 1647, they, in language expressive of their distinctive theological tenets, say, "It being one chief project of Satan to keep men from the knowledge of the Scriptures, as in former times keeping them in unknown tongues, so in these latter times by persuading from the use of tongues, that so at least the true sense and meaning of the original might be clouded and corrupted by false glosses of deceivers; to the end that learning may not be buried in the graves of our fathers, in church and commonwealth, the Lord assisting our endeavors. It is therefore ordered by this Court and the authority thereof, — that every township within this jurisdiction, after the Lord hath increased them to the number of fifty householders, shall thence forthwith appoint one within their towns, to teach all such children as shall resort to him to write and read.”¹

The early inhabitants of Lexington appear to have had a realizing sense of the importance of learning, and of the necessity of establishing schools, as the best means of obtaining it. While united with Cambridge, they petitioned the town to grant a certain sum which they might apply to the support of schools in their midst; and when, by an Act of the General Court, they were clothed with power to raise money themselves for schooling, they were not backward in the good cause. In 1714, the year after the town was incorporated, they voted to erect a school house, and provided that it should be “twenty-eight foot long, twenty foot wide, and eight or nine foot stud.” This house was situated near the Monument, on the Common. In 1715, they voted to open a free grammar school, and devoted fifteen pounds for its support. At a meeting, May 14, 1716, the following vote was passed, which shows that the schoolmaster, at that time, must have been abroad.

“Voted, That all scollers that came to school to pai two pens per week for reeding, and 3 pens per week for righting and siphering; and what that amounts to at the year's end, so much of the fifteen pounds to be deducted, and stopt in the Town Treasury whilest the next year.”

Captain Joseph Estabrook was employed as a teacher, and continued his school five months, for which fifteen pounds were paid him from the town treasury. By this time the principle seems to have been settled, that a man's school should be kept five months in the year. But although this furnished a pretty good opportunity for the larger scholars, the people could not but perceive that there were wants which this arrangement did not meet. The smaller children in the distant parts of the township could not be accommodated by a school kept in the centre. To remove this difficulty, it was agreed by the selectmen, at a meeting held July 21, 1717, "That Clerk Lawrance's wife, and Ephraim Winship's wife, keep schools from the day of the date hereof, until the last of October next following; and if they have not scholars sufficient in number to amount to five shillings a week, at 3 pence a scholar a week, during the term above said, then y^e Town to make up what shall be wanting of the five shillings a week."

The next year, they voted "to set up four more schools in other parts of the Town, as conveniently placed as may be, to accommodate the children in said parts; said schools to be regulated by the same rule as they were the last year."

From this time, the system of supporting the schools so as to meet the wants of the people, may be considered as permanently established. The changes which were made from time to time, were designed to make the system more efficient and useful, and to extend rather than curtail the privileges of schooling. And the town was careful to employ instructors of character. The male teachers, when selected from town, were from the most substantial citizens, and the female teachers were the wives and daughters of some of the first families.

In 1728, the town employed Mr. Ebenezer Hancock, son of their reverend pastor, to teach the grammar school through the year. Mr. Hancock was a graduate of Harvard, and appears to have been a favorite with the people. Subsequently, when he was settled as a colleague with his father, it was with the understanding that he should continue his school.

In 1714, the first school house was built, and was situated on the Common. Here the grammar school was usually kept. But as it generally happens in such cases, the people at the out-parts of the town complained that the benefits of the school were not equally enjoyed by all the families in the place. To meet this objection, the grammar school was converted into what was denominated a "moving school," and was kept in different parts of the town in rotation. But this being attended with inconveniences, other expedients were adopted. At one time it was provided that all who lived within a certain distance of the school house on the Common, should furnish all the fuel necessary for the school free of expense; while those who lived more remote should be exempted altogether. But still there was a lurking disposition to complain of inequality, — forgetting the fact that, though the inhabitants of the village enjoy greater privileges than those who live remote from the centre, they have to pay for those privileges.* For one acre of land in a village is often valued in the assessment list, ten times as high as an acre of the same intrinsic worth, situated remote from the centre.

The school house in the centre becoming somewhat dilapidated, a new house was erected in its stead in 1761. It was twenty feet square, and six and a half feet between the floors, and cost £42. During the Revolution, there was no particular change in the schools. The grammar school in the school house, was kept nine or ten months each year, and was furnished with teachers competent to instruct in every branch necessary to be taught. At the same time schools, generally taught by females, were supported in the different sections of the town.

After a contest of one or two years on the subject, the town voted in 1795 to build three school houses, and chose a committee to select sites. In 1796, it was "Voted, To raise $333.33, for schooling the children the present year. Voted, To take $100 out of the above sum for women's schools." Some feeling was excited not favorable to the harmony of the schools, by the inhabitants in the part of the town known as Scotland, persistently demanding as their share of the school grant, a sum in proportion to the tax they paid.

In 1799, the town appropriated $333.33 for the support of men's schools, and $166.67 for women's schools. In 1800, the school grant was raised to $500, and the committee chosen to employ teachers, were directed to employ none unless they are qualified according to the provisions of law. In 1804, the town took a decided step towards improving the condition of their schools. They made the usual grant of $500 for schooling, and appropriated $1,000 to build three additional school houses, and to remove two others, so as to accommodate all parts of the town. Of the three new houses, one was to be located in the centre of the town, one in Scotland, so called, and one in Smith's End, so called.

Having supplied themselves with school houses, the town wisely decided that a larger sum of money should be appropriated to support these invaluable institutions. Accordingly, in 1806, the school appropriation was increased to eight hundred dollars, six hundred dollars of which was to be expended for schools taught by males, and two hundred dollars for schools taught by females. This arrangement relative to the appropriation and the division of the money was continued for several years.

In 1819, the town appropriated nine hundred dollars for the support of their schools, being an increase of one hundred dollars over past appropriations.

At the May meeting in 1821, a committee, consisting of Amos Muzzy, Jr., Ambrose Morrell, Isaac Reed, Joseph Underwood, Jr., John Hastings, and Charles Reed, who had been chosen at a previous meeting, submitted a detailed Report to the town on the general subject of the schools, which the town accepted. The Report was able, and well considered; and to the honor of the committee it should be stated, that the changes they recommended in the school system, were, six years after, substantially adopted by the Legislature, for the government of the schools in the Commonwealth.

In 1827, the Legislature passed a general law regulating the schools throughout the State, and requiring towns to choose a General Committee to superintend and manage them. This law made quite a change in the condition of the schools in some towns. But as Lexington had adopted the same system, substantially, several years before, the change here was not immediately perceptible. There was however an increased interest manifest on the subject of common school education. Two school houses were built in 1830, and the other houses were repaired. The school appropriation also was increased to one thousand-dollars.

In 1837, the school appropriation was increased to fourteen hundred dollars; and the town voted to erect two new school houses, — one in each village, — said houses to be two stories high, so as to accommodate two schools.

The subject of Common School Education in Lexington, as in almost every other town in the Commonwealth, was in a manner neglected; or in other words, our district schools did not meet the wants of the people. There were men in every town, who were in favor of bringing them to a higher standard. But the mass of the voters, mistaking their true interest, were unwilling to increase the appropriation for their support. One fatal error had been imbibed by a portion of the people, viz. that the common schools were designed for the common people alone; and that those who wished to give their children suitable advantages, must send them to select schools. They also feared that their children would be corrupted in their manners and morals, by associating with the children of the masses. Some of this class were willing to raise money for the support of the district schools; but they would not suffer their children to attend them, but sent them to private schools and academies. By this means they were able to give their children a better education than their neighbors could give theirs. But this was a mistaken and short-sighted policy. In the first place, it was contrary to the spirit of our free institutions, which open the door of improvement to all alike, that the poor man's son might have equal advantages with the son of his more wealthy neighbor.

This withdrawing children from the common schools, tended to degrade and keep down the standard of education in them. Those wealthy or influential families, which patronized private schools and academies, would, as a matter of course, feel less interest in the common schools than they would have done, if their own children had been in them; and their example would also have an influence upon others; and so tend to reduce in the community the estimate of these little democratic institutions, which should be the pride and boast of our country. Moreover, an injury rather than a benefit was done to the children educated in these select schools; for they came from them more ignorant of human nature, than they would have been, if they had mixed with the masses, and seen more of the rough side of that world in which they were destined to live. Their private education would naturally induce them to look down upon those who were educated in the town schools, with whom they must associate in after life, and upon whom they must in a great degree depend for support in almost any business in which they might be engaged.

This state of things did not apply particularly to Lexington, but to the Commonwealth at large. But while these academies were increasing, and a comparatively small part of the rising generation were obtaining a better education than before, the common schools were either declining, or suffered to remain stationary. This state of things created an alarm in the public mind, and the philanthropist and the statesman sought to call public attention to the importance of raising the standard of the town schools, so as to meet the wants of the people. And after years of effort, this important reform was commenced, and has so far progressed that academics have, to a great extent, been superseded by public schools open to all classes of our population.

In 1821, a number of Lexington gentlemen, feeling the want of a higher standard of education than the town schools afforded, established an academy within the town. A commodious house was erected for the purpose, and a school was opened in 1822, under the charge of Mr. Caleb Stetson, who had just graduated from Cambridge. And though the school was small at its opening, under the successful instruction of Mr. Stetson, it became a flourishing institution, numbering from seventy-five to eighty-five pupils. He remained as principal of the academy, till the autumn of 1825, when he was succeeded by Mr. William P. Huntington. In a few years this school began to languish, and was finally given up.

While the academy was in active operation, and, viewed from that standpoint, the cause of education would seem to be progressing, the condition of the district schools was by no means flattering, — less so undoubtedly in consequence of the existence of the academy. Nor was this peculiar to this town. The same cause had produced the same effect in every part of the Commonwealth. A few years later, when specific returns were made from every town of the condition of their schools, the fact became apparent, that in those towns where academics and select schools were maintained, the district schools were more or less neglected, and were in point of support below the schools in towns where no such academics existed.

It should not, however, be inferred from these facts, that academics were useless, or that parents did wrong in all cases, in sending their children to select schools. Academics were valuable as intermediate institutions between the common schools and the colleges, and were necessary to fit scholars to enter the colleges. Nor were parents at fault in all cases, in taking their children from district schools. Every intelligent parent desires to give his children a good education ; and for this purpose, and for the good of all classes, he should use his influence to improve the condition of the public schools, where his own children and the children of those around him, may have opportunities for an education. But if he fails in bringing the town schools up to a proper standard, or if he wishes to have his children pursue studies not taught in the town schools, or taught only imperfectly, then it is right, and it becomes his duty to send them where they could enjoy these opportunities.

The law of 1827, requiring a town committee, was the first step in the improvement of our schools. But the measure which has done more for the cause of common school education than any other, was the creation of a State Board of Education in 1837. Three years previous, a school fund was created ; and although the sum to be divided among the schools was a mere pittance, the subsequent laws made it a condition precedent to receiving its share of this fund, that the town's committee should make a return to the Secretary of State, of the number of scholars in their respective towns, the number attending school, the amount of money raised, and the general condition of the schools.

This was the first time in the history of the Commonwealth, that the true condition of the schools was known to the public. After the Board of Education was created, the Secretary, by carefully prepared tables, presented to every town in the State the condition of the schools in every other town, so that all could see the standing of his own town as compared with every other. The abstract of the Reports of different committees, showed the improvements that were adopted in different parts of the State ; and the Reports of the Secretary of the Board soon excited a general interest throughout the Commonwealth ; and the creation of Normal schools for the education of teachers, gave an impulse to the cause of common school education, which has placed Massachusetts ahead of any of her sister States. In this general improvement, Lexington has participated. We have seen that in 1837, her school appropriation was carried from one thousand up to fourteen hundred dollars, and that two new school houses were erected, and so constructed as to admit of a grading of the schools.

Soon after the Board was established, Hon. Edmund Dwight, of Boston, generously offered the sum of ten thousand dollars, on condition that the Commonwealth would appropriate the same amount, to be expended under the direction of the Board, in qualifying teachers for common schools. The Board resolved to establish two Normal schools, one in the easterly, and the other in the westerly part of the State; and to enable them to continue these schools for the period of three years, so that the experiment might be fully tried, they required the people of the place where the schools should be located, to furnish the necessary buildings, and a certain amount of funds, to procure a library and apparatus. And though the applications for the school were numerous, Lexington was deemed by the Board to be the most favorable place, and one of the schools was here established. This was the first Normal school in the country. The school was put in operation under the care of Mr. Cyrus Pierce, an able and experienced teacher, who continued his connection with the school three years, when he retired, and was succeeded by Rev. S. J. May. Shortly after, the school was removed to Newton — simply on local and sectarian grounds. The school was a decided success, and the experiment tried here has given rise to four Normal schools, which send out annually several hundred teachers, well qualified to instruct in all the rudiments of a good English education.

The effect of these schools, and the other measures of the Board of Education, has been felt in every part of the State. In Lexington, from 1837 to 1846, the appropriation remained at fourteen hundred dollars. In the year following, one hundred dollars was added, and in 1848 it was increased to two thousand five hundred dollars. In 1851, after a considerable effort, the town voted to build two new school houses, on the most improved plan; one in the centre and the other in the south district. This was the signal for new and improved houses in every section of the town; so that we have now in each district good and commodious houses, with the modern improvements.

Feeling that the district schools did not fully meet the wants of the rising generation, in 1854 the subject of a High School was brought before the town, and a Committee, consisting of Ira Leland, Charles Hudson, Jonas Gammell, Andrew Wellington, Samuel A. Houghton, Charles Tidd, and Hugh Graham, was chosen to consider the subject, and report at the next meeting. The Committee recommended that a high school be established, and that five hundred dollars be added to the school appropriation, carrying it up to three thousand dollars. This report being accepted by the town, and the addition to the appropriation made, the School Committee put the school in operation. The next year the appropriation was raised from three thousand dollars to three thousand seven hundred dollars, devoting one thousand dollars to the support of the high school.

There was considerable opposition to the high school, when it was first established; but it has so commended itself to the good sense of the people, and its effects upon the district schools have been such, that the people generally now regard this school, not only as a permanent institution, but one which has proved a blessing to the community. It has afforded an opportunity to every parent to give his children a good education at a much less expense than it could have been obtained in any other way; and what is more and better, some parents of limited means have been enabled to give their children such an education as has fitted them for teachers, or qualified them for other positions in life; which they never could have given them if this high school had not been established. As an economical arrangement, such a school should be continued. Besides, the maintenance of a high school redounds to the honor of a town, and tends to increase the value of property. The town of Lexington has no manufactures to draw population within her borders. Her growth must, to all appearances, depend upon those who are seeking pleasant country residences, and the first question asked by that class more especially is, "What is the condition of your schools?" If they find that our schools are poor, they will look elsewhere for a residence; but if they find that we have good schools, they might be induced to settle among us.

Fears were entertained by some that the establishment of a high school would operate to the injury of the district schools. But it has been found to produce the opposite effect. A new incentive to effort is thrown into the districts, to qualify their pupils for the high school. A high school also enables the committee to make a more perfect classification of the pupils and so affords another great advantage to the cause of education.

The time has arrived when the people demand greater opportunities for an education than the common primary or grammar schools afford, and every statesman and philanthropist must see the wisdom and benevolence of supplying this want by the maintenance of schools of a higher grade, open alike to the rich and the poor, where all the youth can meet on one common level, and where there is no distinction but that which merit originates. Our colleges are institutions which should be highly prized — institutions which are demanded by the wants of the community. But at the same time, we know that they are beyond the reach of a vast majority of the young. Not one in a thousand of our population ever enters a college as a student. But a high school meets the wants of the whole people, and the children in a town may enter within its walls and enjoy its privileges, without money and without price. Nowhere, no, not even in the house of worship, is there such perfect equality — such an elevation of the poor to an equal level with the rich, as in the free schools. And the farther this can be extended, the higher in the walks of science this equality can be carried, the better for the community at large, and for every class which compose it.

To indicate the growth of interest felt in the public schools, the following statement of the annual appropriations for schools from 1830 to 1867 is given.

1831	1,000	1844	1,400	1857	3,800

DR. LEWIS'S LATE FEMALE SEMINARY.

the Secretary of the Board of Education, it will be seen that Lexington takes a high rank among her sister towns. In the Report of the Secretary of the Board for 1865, showing the amount expended per head upon all the scholars between the ages of five and fifteen years, it is seen that Lexington stands No. 17, in a list of 334 cities and towns, and that she actually expends $8.49 on each scholar; while more than half of the towns in the State, expended less than half of that sum. The same Report shows that in the County, consisting of 52 cities and towns, Lexington stands No. 7. In the Report of the Board for 1866, Lexington stands No. 11 in the list, having expended $10.88 upon each scholar, and in the County of Middlesex, she stands No. 5.

From the above exhibit, it appears that Lexington will compare favorably with the towns around her.

In connection with the subject of education in Lexington, the school for young ladies, established by Dr. Dio Lewis, merits a brief notice. This school has some characteristics which distinguish it from the ordinary female seminaries. Physical development receives a large share of attention. In addition to the usual branches taught in schools for young ladies, the new system of gymnastics, of which Dr. Lewis is the author, is here introduced, and made a part of the daily routine. These gymnastic exercises are so adapted to the anatomy or physical structure of the human frame, and are so various in their kinds, that every limb and every muscle is brought into exercise — giving strength and tone to the whole body. The effect of this training is obvious in the fact that many a young lady, of slender frame and delicate complexion when she enters the school, leaves, at the close of the year, with that physical development and glow of health so essential in those who are to become the mothers of the next generation.

The same general principle is recognized in all the instruction of the school, by so distributing the branches and exercises as to bring out the latent and neglected powers of each pupil. For instance, in the dramatic exercises, which are made somewhat prominent, the self-reliant young lady is to personate the mild and gentle character, and the bashful and timid girl to represent a character more bold and daring. In this way, a full and properly developed character is aimed at in all the instruction, and flattering results have been attained. The discipline of the school is paternal, and great care and watchfulness are extended over the morals and health of the pupils. By such a system of training and discipline, the school has acquired a high reputation, and is favorably known through the country. This is apparent from the fact that its increasing patrons are distributed, not only over New England, but throughout the Middle and Western States.

In the spring of 1864, Dr. Lewis, well and extensively known as a Physical Educator, purchased the Lexington House, which was erected for a Hotel, and fitted it up for a school for young ladies. Having engaged Theodore D. Weld, for many years Principal of the Eagleswood School, in New Jersey, and other experienced teachers, he opened his school with twenty pupils. During the term it was increased to thirty-two. During the next year the number increased to one hundred and two, and the third year the number reached one hundred and forty-four.

On the 7th of September, 1867, when the house had been refitted and important improvements made, to receive a larger number of pupils, the building took fire and was entirely consumed. The loss of this noble edifice was deeply felt, not only by the citizens of Lexington, who regarded it as a great calamity, but by the friends of Physical Education in distant parts of the country. It is gratifying to learn, that Dr. Lewis intends to erect a building, on or near the same site, which will accommodate an equal number of scholars, and be better adapted to the purposes of the school than the former building.

Dr. Lewis is justly entitled to the gratitude of the community for his new system of Gymnastics, — a system which has been introduced into so many schools in this country and in Europe, and has called public attention to the subject of physical training, and so laid a foundation for the education of the whole man.

It may also be said, in this connection, that Dr. Lewis has established a hospital or "movement cure" in the village, where he has a considerable number of patients under his peculiar mode of treatment, which, it is believed, has proved quite successful.

CHAPTER XVI.

MILITARY AFFAIRS.

No Records of the Military — Officers are mentioned — Men who served in the French and Indian Wars — List of Captain Parker's Company — At Cambridge in May and June, 1775 — Men who served in the Revolution — Artillery Company — The Late Rebellion — Men in the Service.

WE have no means of giving a full and accurate history of the military organizations which have existed in the town from its first settlement. In fact, the only record, or intimation of one, consists in the titles given to certain individuals from time to time in our Records. Before 1700, we find the title of Captain given to William Reed; in 1712, to Joseph Estabrook; and in 1717, to Joseph Bowman.

Without pretending to give a full catalogue of the officers, or stating them in the exact order of time, we find the title of Captain given by the Records to Samuel Stone, Benjamin Reed, and William Reed, between the years 1740 and 1750, and in 1761 Benjamin Reed is denominated Major, which shows that he had been promoted; and soon after Thaddeus Bowman is honored with the title of Captain. This brings us up to the commencement of the Revolution. And it is worthy of special notice that the military men of that day were the leading men of the town. No one has borne the title of Captain, whose name has not been found on the Board of Selectmen, or Assessors, or on some of the most important Committees. Even the honor of Lieutenant was enjoyed by Ebenezer Fiske, Ensign by Robert Harrington, and Quarter Master by John Bridge, who were, in their day, some of the most popular and distinguished men of the town.

The citizens of Lexington, during her whole history, have participated largely in the service of the field in times of war. In the early Indian wars several men from Cambridge Farms were engaged; but as what is now Lexington, was then a part of Cambridge, we have no full or distinct account of that service. But in later periods, we find Lexington men scattered through almost every Massachusetts corps. Though the rolls are very imperfect, and in many instances there is nothing to designate the place from which the soldiers came, we have been enabled to collect the following imperfect lists.

In 1725, we find the names of the following men from Lexington :

Captain Blanchard.	John Pierce.	Samuel Lawrence.
Corporal John White.	Thomas Stearns.	Nathaniel Kendall.

In 1740, in the West India service :

Gideon Powers.	Joshua Winship, Jr.	Nathan Munroe.
	Ezekiel Kendall.

In 1745, at the capture of Louisburg, there must have been some men from Lexington, but as no rolls are preserved, we cannot give their names.

In 1754, we find the names of the following persons :

Sergeant William Munroe.	John Fiske.
Corporal Ephraim Fletcher.	Joseph Locke.

In 1755, the war with the French and Indians assuming a more decided character, a large force from Massachusetts was called out. Some acted under General Winslow at the eastward, and others in the neighborhood of Lake Champlain. The imperfect rolls show that Lexington furnished twenty-one men, and probably more.

Captain William Reed.	Amos Simonds.
Sergeant William Munroe.	John Pierce.
Benjamin Edgell.	Joseph Locke.
Jonas Munroe, Jr.	William Merriam.
Josiah Stone.	William Blodgett.
Nehemiah Estabrook.	Joseph Munroe, Jr.
Ebenezer Winship.	Simon Newton.
Benjamin Munroe.	Isaac Winship.
Abraham Scott.	David Fiske.
Francis Teel.	David Foster.
James Bridge.

In 1756, the war with the French and their Indian allies continuing unabated, new levies of troops were made, and Lexington, never backward in such a cause, furnished the following soldiers :

Sergeant Robert Wilson.	Reuben Raymond.
Henry Harrington, Jr.	Robert Wilson, Jr.
Joseph Locke.	Samuel Chaffin.
Benjamin Bridge.	Uriah Holt.
Samuel Jones.	John Stockwell.
Nathaniel Piper.	John Pierce.
Samuel Nevens.	Hugh Maxwell.
Nathaniel Walker.	Barnabas Wilson.
Benjamin Locke.	Thomas Perry.
Benjamin Whitecomb.	Abel Whitecomb.
Zachariah Parker.	Nathaniel Parker.
Giles Bennett.	Benjamin Locke.

In 1757, another call was made for men, a considerable portion of whom were marched to the relief of Fort William-Henry. The following is a partial list of Lexington men :

Sergeant Samuel Chaffin.	Jonathan Fessenden.
Roger Wellington.	Giles Bennett.
Jonas Munroe.	Robert Wilson.
Samuel Jones.	Jonathan Ingersol.
John Bridge.	Benjamin Edgell.
David Munroe.	Josiah Blodgett.
Thaddeus Munroe.	Nathaniel Ingersol.
John Munroe.	Phineas Blodgett.
Benjamin Muzzy.	John White.
Silas Merriam.	Joseph Russell.
Benjamin Merriam.	Edward Winship.
Simeon Eames.	Abraham Scott.
Alexander W. Dole.	James Winship.
Benjamin Farley.	James Munroe.
John Clapham.	Josiah Blodgett.
Robert Moore.	Edmund Munroe.

In 1758, Lexington had the following men in the service :

Ensign Robert Munroe.	Edmund Munroe.
Jeremiah Bridge.	Thomas Robbins.
Thomas Robinson.	James Munroe.
Henry Harrington.	Israel Underwood.
Joseph Fassett.	Andrew Munroe.

In 1759, Lexington furnished :

James Winship.	Andrew Munroe.
Henry Harrington.	James Munroe.
Israel Underwood.	James Merriam.
Thomas Robbins.

The fall of Quebec in 1759, did not immediately produce the submission of Canada. The following year called for more Provincial troops, and Lexington had a large number of men in the field. From dilapidated rolls the following names have been gleaned :

Captain John Clapham.	Robert Fiske.
Ensign Abraham Munroe.	James Merriam.
Sergeant Joseph Locke.	Nathan Chandler.
Corporal David Munroe.	Benjamin Dudley.
Samuel Raymond.	William Dix.
James Mann.	Edmund Dix.
James Winship.	Abner Scott.
Joseph Reed.	Freeborn Hill.
Aaron Wood.	John Jarvis.
Alexander McDowell.	Isaac Trask.
Ebenezer Blodgett.	Thaddeus Call.
Boston Draper.	Jeremiah Harrington.
David Barnard.	Arthur McMullen.
Andrew Munroe.	John White.
Thomas Blodgett.	Thomas Perry.
Amos Locke, Jr.

Though the French were in a great measure subdued on the northern frontier, the treaty of peace not having been concluded, a considerable portion of the troops were retained in the field in 1762, particularly to watch the Indians. The following men from Lexington were in the service :

Ensign Abraham Scott.	Thomas Perry.
John Jarvis.	Joseph Mason.
Freeborn Hill.	Silas Merriam.
Israel Trask.	Thaddeus Pierce.
Thomas Call.	John Smith
Jeremiah Harrington.	Robert Munroe.
Robert Herbert.	Stephen Munroe.
William Dix.	Josiah Munroe.
Edmund Dix.	Jonas Perry.
John Godding.	Isaiah Trask.
Thomas Godding.	John Wood.
Thomas Robbins.

The foregoing is an imperfect list of the men who served in the French and Indian wars from 1755 to 1763; and it reflects no discredit upon the town. Her Munroes, and Merriams, and Winships were found on every battle-field — at Louisburg, Quebec, Crown Point, Ticonderoga, Fort William-Henry, and wherever a foe was to be encountered, or a daring deed to be performed. Some of the Lexington men were attached to the famous corps known as “Rogers’s Rangers,” — a corps in which Stark served his military apprenticeship; — a corps whose name was expressive of the life they led — ranging through the wilderness, seeking their wary savage foe by day or by night, in silent glens, or secret ambush; — a corps whose winter quarters were in tedious marchings amid drifted snows, frozen lakes, and ice-clad hills, — relying sometimes upon snow shoes, and sometimes upon skates for locomotion, — and carrying their only arsenal and commissariat in their packs. In such a corps were some of the hardy sons of Lexington trained — they, knowing that their lives were in their own hands, and that their escape from the tomahawk and scalping knife, the tortures of the faggot, or ignominious slavery, depended entirely upon their own severe trials, perpetual watchings, and determined courage.

Edmund Munroe, of Lexington, was at one time attached to Rogers’s Rangers, where he acted as an orderly sergeant, and also as adjutant of the regiment. In a small memorandum book, kept by him at Lake George, in August and September, 1758,¹ there are some notices of the events of the day, and a few things of interest. Under date of August 28, 1758, is the following:

“The troops to fire a Rejoicing. — Firing this evening for the success of his Majesty’s arms for the taking of Louisburg. The regiments to be under arms, and line the breastwork at six o’clock, — the firing to begin with twenty-one guns from the Royal Artillery, and then proceed from the right of the 27th Regiment round the line, and to finish with the left of Colonel Bagley’s Regiment. This to be repeated till the whole have fired three rounds. The commanding officers of regiments to order a review of their men at twelve o’clock.”

But it seems that the Rangers, a separate corps, were on that joyful occasion to act another part. Under same date, we have the following :

"The Rangers to be under arms at six o'clock this evening, to illuminate the rejoicing for the success of his Majesty's army at Louisburg, at which time Major Rogers to give to his Ranging Companies, as a token of his dependence on their Loyalty and Bravery, a Barrell of Wine treat, to congratulate this good news to them, and the good behavior of the four Companies of Rangers at Louisburg, which has won to the corps a universal, national character."

In 1761, Edmund Munroe was promoted to a Lieutenantcy, by Governor Barnard, and in March, 1762, he was commissioned as Adjutant of Colonel Richard Saltonstall's Regiment, and continued in the service till the peace of 1763.

The more recent war of the Revolution, and the great interest we had at stake in the late Rebellion, have thrown the French war in a great measure into the shade. Few people at the present time realize the toils, the sufferings, and the sacrifices made by the Colony at that time to sustain the cause, and strengthen the arm of the mother country, which was shortly after raised to crush the patriotic colonists. From 1755 to 1763, the Colony of Massachusetts performed an amount of military service almost unparalleled. Minot, the historian, says, that in the year 1757, one third part of the effective men in the Colony, were in some way or other in the field. The patriotic devotion of the Colony, and the zeal with which our brave soldiers served Great Britain, should have excited her gratitude, and induced her to respect our rights.

We have no full record of the military organization in Lexington at the commencement of the Revolution. In 1770, the officers of the Lexington Company were Thaddeus Bowman, Captain; Jonathan Smith, Lieutenant; and Robert Harrington, Ensign. These officers probably considered themselves superseded or discharged, after Governor Gage virtually abdicated government here by refusing to convene the Legislature. The organization of companies of minute-men by the order of the Provincial Congress in 1774, appears to have been entirely outside of the old military organization. The Company which appeared on the Common in 1775, did not owe its organization to any law of the Legislature ; and it is probable that Captain Parker and his subalterns had no commissions, except that of the vote of the Company, and the approbation of the Committee of Safety. This Company comprised the principal men of the place, and probably constituted the only actual organization in town at the time. John Parker was at that time forty-six years of age, and must have been a man who commanded the confidence of the people. There were in town at that period, Lieutenant Edmund Munroe, and Ensign Robert Munroe, both of whom had held commissions in the French War — besides twenty-five or thirty more who had seen service ; and the fact that John Parker was selected to command that Company, and that these officers and soldiers were willing to volunteer and serve under him, shows that he was a man of more than ordinary character, and one to be trusted in any emergency. And the result showed that this confidence was not misplaced. The important part acted by this Company on the 19th of April and subsequently, justly entitles them to a place in the historic page.

SEVENTEENTH CAMPAIGN, AT PROVIDENCE, SIX MONTHS.

Benjamin Brown.	Benjamin Danforth.	Simon Winship.
Joseph Reed.	Jesse Crosby.	John Tidd.
	John Williams.

The following names are found upon the roll as Lexington men, and certified to by our Selectmen in 1782.

SIX MONTHS' MEN IN 1780.

William Dimond.	Ezra Merriam.	Philip Davis.
Abraham Merriam.	James Robinson.	Henry Harrington.
Joseph Merriam.	Silas Merriam.	Richard Winship.
Joseph Foot.	Cato Tuder.	Samuel Crafts.
	Prince Estabrook.

There are other names, which we cannot classify at all, nor tell at what time, or for what period they served.

Daniel Simonds.	Jonas Underwood.	Christopher Mann.
Silas Burdoo.	Nathan Brown.	Matthew Farrington.
Benjamin Sampson.	Stephen Munroe.	Nicholas Duren.

It will be seen, that in the foregoing lists, the same name in some cases appears more than once. This arises from the fact that the same person was out in different campaigns; and if some of the names here given should be repeated in the following list of those who served in the Continental line, the same explanation will apply — they served in the militia either before or after their service in the regular army. But, after all, the lists are imperfect, as many of the rolls are destroyed.

As far as the amounts for the service are carried out, we have followed the Report of the Committee; but as they stopped short of the close of the war, and did not include those who were called out suddenly to meet an emergency, like Captain Brown's Company, which went to Rhode Island, we have inserted their names, and others which we found upon the rolls.

The following is the list of the three years' men, as far as we can collect them from the dilapidated rolls. Those whose names are marked with a star (*) enlisted in 1780, for three years, or during the war.

Men who enlisted in Lexington for three years, or during the war, and served in the Continental Line.

Thaddeus Harrington.

Several on the foregoing list are known to have been colored men, and some of them slaves — among whom are Samuel Crafts, Pomp Blackman, Jupiter Tree, Prince Estabrook, Pomp Fiske, Cato Tudor, John Tingle, and perhaps others. But notwithstanding the color of their skin, they were deemed worthy to fight side by side with white men to achieve our Independence. And it is due to our fathers to say, that when slaves enlisted into the service, they were generally permitted to take their freedom if they desired it.

It should also be remarked, that some of the foregoing list had served in the other and shorter campaigns, before entering the Continental Line; and that some who are enrolled among the first three years' men, continued in the service by re-enlistment, though their names appear but once.

When we consider that Lexington was at the commencement of the Revolution a small town of only about seven hundred inhabitants, no one can pronounce her backward in supplying men to prosecute to success, a war which was so gloriously commenced within her borders.

And in addition to the men who were duly enrolled for the service, there was another voluntary organization, known as "the Alarm List," composed of those who were too infirm, too old or too young to be subject to military duty in the field. These men stood ready to turn out on any sudden emergency. Such organizations existed in almost every town throughout the Province, and in many cases included the clergymen of the parishes, who had not in those days embraced that sickly sentimentalism, that war in all cases was contrary to the Gospel, and could not innocently be resorted to under any circumstances—a doctrine which has received a stern rebuke by the late slaveholders' rebellion. Men of reflection have become satisfied that a nation, like an individual, is by the laws of nature—the laws of God, clothed with the right of self-preservation; and when its existence is threatened, it is bound by a religious obligation to sustain its being at every hazard, and by all the fair means that God and nature have put in its power. War is to be dreaded, and prevented as far as practicable; but like the amputating knife, is allowable to save the life of the body politic. And though war in itself is a great calamity, and leaves many evils in its train, the history of the world shows that some of the grandest steps in civilization have grown out of the wars which at the time were regarded as great calamities. The fact is, God is the God of nations as well as of individuals, and he punishes the one as well as the other for their sins. As the Amorites of old were driven out of Canaan for their iniquities, so nations at the present day often feel the chastening of the Almighty in consequence of their sins. Dealing with men as free moral agents, God bears long with them, but when they become hardened in their sins—when the measure of their iniquity is full, he permits the awful scourge of war to do its strange work.

What else in the course of nature could have humbled the mad ambition of the South, but the mighty struggle through which we have recently passed! What else could have brought to a speedy termination that system of slavery which had interwoven itself into the fibres of southern society, polluting the very fountain of social morality, of political rectitude, and religious faith! When the lordly masters, prompted by ambition, failed in their attempt to spread their corrupt and corrupting institution through our broad domain, they vainly sought to overthrow the fair fabric of freedom, and establish upon its ruins an inglorious empire, resting upon human servitude as its chief corner-stone! A purpose so base and inhuman, so repugnant to the spirit of the age, and so at variance with the laws of God, could not fail to draw down upon the devoted heads of these impious rebels, the sore displeasure of Him who has made of one blood all the nations of the earth. And what instrument of punishment was more suitable than the sword which they had wickedly drawn! And what consequence could be more just and appropriate than the complete overthrow of the very institution they vainly attempted to extend and perpetuate! Surely the righteous Sovereign of the Universe overrules the base designs of the unrighteous, and teaches the enemies of human freedom, that their unholy schemes shall not prosper.

This signal overthrow of the institution of slavery by the very means employed to sustain and extend it—this converting of the mad ambition and base passions which slavery has produced in the masters, into instruments for the liberation of the slave, will teach the aspirants after power, that their base machinations to build up an oligarchy on the ruins of free institutions, must prove abortive; and that the magnitude of their preparations, and the vastness of their appliances will only augment the greatness of their fall.

“ Oh sons of earth, in vain ye strive to rise,
By mountains piled on mountains to the skies!
Heaven still with laughter the vain toil surveys,
And buries madmen in the heaps they raise.”

It is difficult to tell what the military organization of the town of Lexington was during the Revolution. In 1779, there were two military companies; for the town at a public meeting voted that the interest of the cause required that the two existing companies be united in one. Immediately after the close of the war, there was an important change in military organizations. The people had seen the importance of a military force; and the State adopted measures accordingly to make the militia more efficient.

In Lexington, an Artillery Company was formed. The record of its organization is probably lost. It appears by the town Records, that at a meeting held December 16, 1784, the town voted, "That the Artillery Company now forming have liberty to erect an Artillery House on that part of the Common, where the Belfry formerly stood." This record, unimportant in other respects, fixes with a good degree of certainty, the period when that company was formed. Our prescribed limits will not permit us to pursue its history.

The militia organizations were kept up in Massachusetts till about 1825, when the military spirit began to wane. Some were afraid of the expense; others thought the whole thing unnecessary. Pretended philanthropists ridiculed military parades, and some pious and shortsighted clergymen would supersede war by forming Peace Societies, and restrain the grasping ambition of the nations, by holding Peace Conventions, and passing abstract Resolutions. Such views and feelings tended to bring the military into disrepute, and our militia system was practically given up. In the cities and large towns there were a few volunteer companies; and this was all the organization which in fact existed at the commencement of the recent rebellion.

But the late struggle through which we have passed, has, we hope, convinced the reflecting, that resolutions are less protective in an hour of danger than batteries, and that rebels have less dread of Peace Conventions than of well appointed armies. When we consider the important services rendered by the few organized regiments of Massachusetts, by appearing promptly at Washington, when that city was threatened, we must see the wisdom of military preparation; and if our law-makers are wise, they will see to it, that a partial organization at least, be kept up, until the States lately in rebellion show more humility than they do at present, and manifest a spirit more in accordance with the known will of the people. Moral suasion has great power; but it is rendered more efficient when it is known that there is a military arm which will sustain it in an exigency.

During the rebellion, Lexington, as we have seen, was not behind her neighboring towns. She furnished more than her quota of men. The following is a list of men, with their rank and term of service, as reported by the Selectmen in 1866.

Officers, Soldiers and Seamen, of the Town of Lexington, who have been in the Service of the United States, since the Commencement of the Rebellion.

CHAPTER XVII.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.

List of Selectmen — School Committees — Assessors — Town Clerks — Treasurers — Committees of Correspondence — Representatives — Senators — Justices of the Peace — College Graduates.

It may be gratifying to us to know who have enjoyed the confidence of the people from time to time, and who have filled the principal places of honor and trust in the town. It is proposed to give a list of the Selectmen, School Committees, Assessors, Clerks, and Treasurers. Also to give the names of the Representatives, Senators, and Justices of the Peace, as far as the same can be ascertained. Such lists not only show who were the prominent men at different periods, but they show the views and habits of the people in relation to rotation in office. And if it should appear that our fathers fell into one extreme, it may appear that we have fallen into the other. We will give the list from the incorporation of the town to the present day.

List of Selectmen, from the Incorporation of the Town to the present day, together with the years they served; arranged in the order in which they first entered upon their office.

It will be seen that the above numbers do not include every year. In the vacant years the town was not represented. The five last named Representatives were chosen by the District, consisting of Lexington, Bedford, and Burlington, and the last year, of Carlisle also. These towns furnish the Representatives somewhat in rotation, and only the Lexington men are inserted here.

Senators and Councillors.

Nathan Chandler, 1825-28.

Samuel Chandler, 1839.

When Nathan Chandler was chosen, the Senators and Councillors were chosen as one body, and the Legislature selected nine from that body as Councillors. Mr. Chandler was several times selected for that purpose.

Delegates.

JONAS STONE was Delegate to the First Provincial Congress, 1774, and the Second and Third, 1775.

Rev. JONAS CLARKE was Delegate to the Convention which formed the Constitution in 1779; BENJAMIN BROWN, a Delegate to the Convention which ratified the Constitution of the United States, 1788.

NATHAN CHANDLER was a Delegate to the Convention to Revise the Constitution in 1820; and JOEL VILES in the Convention to Revise the Constitution in 1853.

List of Graduates of Colleges from the Town of Lexington.

JOHN HANCOCK was graduated at Harvard College in 1719; was Librarian of that institution from 1723 to 1726; ordained over the North Church in Braintree, November 2, 1728, and died May 7, 1744, aged 41. He was the oldest son of Rev. John Hancock, of Lexington, and the father of the celebrated John Hancock, of the Revolution, who was President of the † Those marked with an obelisk (†) received their first commissions for other places at an earlier date, and were renewed for Lexington at the dates mentioned above. Charles Hudson's commission was for all the counties of the Commonwealth.

Continental Congress, and the first Governor of Massachusetts under the Constitution.

JONATHAN BOWMAN graduated at Harvard College in 1724; studied theology, and was ordained at Dorchester, November 5, 1729; died May 30, 1775. He was son of Joseph Bowman, Esq., who died in 1752.

EBENEZER HANCOCK graduated at Harvard College in 1728. He was the third son of Rev. John Hancock, of Lexington. He was ordained colleague with his father, in Lexington, January 2, 1734, and died January 28, 1740, aged 29 years.

EDMUND BOWMAN graduated at Harvard College in 1728. He was a merchant at Portsmouth, N. H. He was brother of Jonathan mentioned above. He died 1745.

THADDEUS MASON graduated at Harvard College in 1728. He was Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas of Middlesex, and died May 1, 1802, aged 95 years.

PHILEMON ROBBINS graduated at Harvard College in 1729; was ordained at Branford, Conn. He had two sons who were liberally educated clergymen, Chandler, (Yale, 1756,) and Ammi Ruhamah, (Yale, 1760,) the former had three sons who were graduates at Harvard College. He died 1781.

JOSIAH BROWN graduated at Harvard College in 1735; was a preacher at Lancaster, Mass., and died March 4, 1774. He was son of Joseph Brown, the first of the Lexington Browns.

MATTHEW BRIDGE graduated at Harvard College in 1741; was ordained at Framingham, February 19, 1746, and died September 3, 1775, aged 55 years. He was Chaplain to the Army at Cambridge at the breaking out of the Revolution, and contracted the disease of the camp, of which he died in a short time after leaving the army. He was a son of Matthew.

NATHANIEL TRASK graduated at Harvard College in 1742; was ordained at Epping, N. H., and died in 1789, aged 67 years.

NATHANIEL ROBBINS graduated at Harvard College in 1747; was ordained at Milton, February 13, 1751, and died May 19, 1795, aged 69 years.

JONAS MERRIAM graduated at Harvard College in 1753; was ordained at Newton, Mass., March 22, 1758, and died August 13, 1780, aged 50 years.

JOSIAH BRIDGE graduated at Harvard College in 1758; was ordained at East Sudbury, (now Wayland,) November 4, 1761, and died June 19, 1801, aged 62 years.

SAMUEL FISKE graduated at Harvard College in 1759; was an Episcopal clergyman in South Carolina, where he died in 1777.

MICAH LAWRENCE graduated at Harvard College in 1759; was ordained at Winchester, N. H., November 14, 1764, and died January, 1794, aged 55 years.

EPHRAIM WOOLSON graduated at Harvard College in 1760; was a physician at Hanover, N. H., and died January, 1802, aged 61 years.

JOSEPH BROWN graduated at Harvard College in 1763; was ordained at Winchendon, May 24, 1769, and died in 1810.

AMOS WINDSHIP graduated at Harvard College as A. B. in 1771; A. M. in 1790; M. B. in 1790; M. D. in 1811, and was a corresponding member of the London Medical Society. He died in 1811.

BENJAMIN MUZZY graduated at Harvard College in 1774. He sailed from Boston, September, 1777, in the privateer Hero Revenge, during the Revolution, as a Chaplain, and was lost at sea the same year.

ISAAC REED graduated at Harvard College in 1780; was a trader in Littleton, and died December 5, 1789, aged 35 years.

EBENEZER BOWMAN graduated at Harvard College in 1782; was an Attorney at Law of considerable distinction at Wilkesbarre, Penn., and died in 1829.

JOSEPH ESTABROOK graduated at Harvard College in 1782; was ordained at Athol, November 21, 1787, and died April 30, 1830, aged 81 years.

NATHAN UNDERWOOD graduated at Harvard College in 1788; was ordained at Harwich, November 21, 1792, and died in 1841.

SAMUEL CHANDLER graduated at Harvard College in 1790; was ordained at Eliot, N. H., October 27, 1792, and died in 1829.

JOSEPH DENNIE graduated at Harvard College in 1790. In 1796, he commenced a series of Articles in the Farmer's Museum, published in Walpole, N. H., entitled "Lay Sermons," which continued from time to time for several years. They were extensively copied, and were read with eagerness in all parts of the country. He also instituted and edited the "Portfolio," a literary publication of high merit, at Philadelphia. He died January 7, 1812. He was a scholar of fine literary taste, and has been denominated the American Addison.

DANIEL MARRETT graduated at Harvard College in 1790; was ordained at Standish, Me., September 21, 1796, and died in 1836.

WILLIAM MUZZY graduated at Harvard College in 1793; was ordained at Sullivan, N. H., February 7, 1798, and died at Lexington in 1835.

ABIEL CHANDLER graduated at Harvard College in 1798, and died February 11, 1799.

LEXINGTON is a Post town in the County of Middlesex, situated in latitude $42^{\circ} 26' 50''$ North, and in longitude $71^{\circ} 13' 55''$ West. It is about eleven miles west-northwest from Boston, about six miles easterly from Concord, and about fifteen miles southeast by south from Lowell. It has Winchester, Woburn, and Burlington, on the northeast; Bedford, and Burlington, on the north; Lincoln, on the west; Waltham, on the southwest, and Arlington, on the southeast. The township, like most of those in the neighborhood, is somewhat irregular in its shape, and contains about 19 square miles, or 12,160 acres. It is generally more elevated than any adjoining town, unless it be Lincoln, and hence the water from Lexington runs in almost every direction. As it is the water-shed, the streams are small, and they find their way to the ocean through the Shawshine, Mystic, and Charles Rivers. The water power in the town is inconsiderable, and what there is, is remote from the centre. There is at present but one mill in the town, that being in the easterly part, at the outlet of the Great Meadow, so called; on or near the site of this mill, was erected the first mill in the township, probably as early as 1650. It was then owned by Edward Winship, of Cambridge, and was given by his Will to his son Edward, and remained more than a century in the family. There is another and more valuable privilege on Vine Brook, near the boundary of Burlington, though it is at present unimproved.

The township is generally uneven, furnishing a pleasant variety of hill and dale. Though the surface is frequently broken, the soil for the most part is productive. The rock formation, through a great part of the township, is a species of greenstone; and though it often crops out of the ground, the rock is so irregular, and the sides so precipitous, that the soil is deep, and often capable of cultivation up to the very face of the ledge. The presence of this rock indicates a hard, but at the same time a warm and productive soil, well adapted to grass and fruit trees.

There are many good farms in the town, and their value is greatly enhanced by the peat swamps, which are found in almost every neighborhood. These swamps, when properly drained, constitute some of the most valuable land for cultivation, and at the same time serve to fertilize the rest of the farm. The material taken from the ditches is extensively used as a manure, and will of itself pay the labor of draining. Lexington, as a whole, may be considered a first class agricultural town, and has been somewhat distinguished for its hay, fruits, and other agricultural productions; but more particularly for its milk dairies, which send to market 350,000 gallons of milk annually.

The village of Lexington is pleasantly situated on land comparatively level; and though it is elevated more than two hundred feet above tide water, being surrounded by hills more or less distant, and having meadows on either hand, it has the appearance of being rather low. It is eleven miles from Boston, five miles from Waltham, Woburn, and Bedford, and four miles from Burlington, and Lincoln. In the centre of the village is the Common, a triangular plot of ground, situated at the junction, and lying between the roads leading to Concord and to Bedford. It contains about two acres, and is nearly level, with the exception of a gentle swell rising some five or six feet in a circular form, on the southerly side, on which is situated the Monument, erected to the memory of the first revolutionary martyrs. The borders of the Common are skirted by rows of elm, ash, and other ornamental trees; some of which have braved the blasts of a hundred winters, while others are blushing into youthful beauty. This Green is consecrated by the first blood of the Revolution; and the sacred associations which cluster around the spot, render it a place of considerable resort; and many a passer-by pauses to contemplate the scene which renders it classic.

The village extends nearly a mile on the main road; and, embracing as it does the settlements on Hancock, Bedford, Muzzey, and Waltham streets, comprises about one hundred and twenty houses and shops, and contains nearly eight hundred inhabitants.

THE LEXINGTON RAILWAY STATION.

The terminus of the Lexington and Arlington Railroad is near the centre of the village, and has a commodious station-house situated about six rods from the street, so as not to impede or endanger the travel on the highway. The approach to the station is by a broad, circular driveway, leaving a crescent lawn of about one third of an acre between the depot and the street. Though the depot is not particularly elegant, it is a neat and well proportioned building, and is so situated as to increase rather than impair the beauty of the place.

Passing on the road towards Boston, as you leave the centre village, the houses grow more sparse for about three fourths of a mile, when they become more frequent; and you soon find yourself in the midst of another village more than half as populous as the centre. Both villages are adorned with ornamental shade trees, which extend to every part; and in several places on the main street, huge and venerable elms attract the notice of the traveler. The character of the soil is such, that both villages are, in a remarkable degree, free from those pests of many country villages — mud and dust.

Though Lexington has no elevations which would justify the appellation of mountains, yet there are within her limits a great number of hills, which command extensive prospects, and present fine landscape views. These elevations are generally more or less abrupt, showing fragments of greenstone in their more precipitous sides, and having their summits crowned with the same kind of rock in a more smoothed and flattened form.

In the centre of the town, within five or six rods of the Common from which it is separated by the street, rises 'BELFRY HILL,' so called, from the fact that a structure was formerly erected on this hill, in which the church bell was hung. This elevation, which is nearly hidden from the street by the houses and shade trees, is about forty feet above the Common, and standing in a bend of the road, presents a good view of the village, and of the roads approaching it on every side. On this elevation it is proposed to erect the contemplated Monument, commemorative of the opening scene of the American Revolution. The summit of this hill presents a level surface of rock, which seems formed by nature for the base of such a structure; and when one or two houses standing on the street are removed, and the whole ground opened to the Common, the beauty of the place would be greatly increased. Through the liberality of the heirs of the late William H. Cary, Esq., of Brooklyn, N. Y., this hill has been purchased, and is generously tendered to the Monument Association. If this Monument should be erected according to a design which has been adopted, as it would commemorate one of the greatest events in our history, so it would be one of the most attractive monuments in the country.

the village, is elevated seventy or eighty feet above Main street, and affords a good view of the central part of the town. The village from this eminence presents a fine appearance. The lofty elms and other ornamental trees, which skirt the streets and shade the dwellings, give to the village an aspect peculiarly rural; and when the trees are in full foliage the prospect is one of great beauty, exhibiting in one view neat, commodious, and even stately dwellings, embowered in shady groves, with fertile fields and wooded hills in the back ground.

HANCOCK HEIGHT. About one hundred and twenty rods northeasterly of Merriam's Hill, and forming a part of the same swell of land, rises abruptly one of the most conspicuous elevations in the town. The altitude of this hill is greater than any other in the township, except the highest portions of the range between Monument and Lincoln streets; and, rising from a lower level, and standing out isolated and alone, on the margin of the valley of Vine Brook, with an elevation of about one hundred and seventy-five feet above it, this hill has a grand and imposing appearance, and affords a magnificent prospect. Standing on its summit, you have almost the whole northern and eastern part of the town in full view. At the base, and almost under your feet, is spread out the valley of Vine Brook, showing its broad meadows, here in a high state of cultivation, and there covered with a growth of oak and maple, while on the other side is the village in its leafy beauty. Beyond, you have the plains waving with grass or grain, hill-sides adorned with orchards, or crowned with forests, — the whole dotted over with farm houses and barns to show the presence of industry and thrift. Here, too, you behold the streamlets meandering through the meadows, the roads winding among the hills, together with the school houses and the churches, showing that the mind and the heart, no less than the face of the earth, are designed for cultivation and improvement.

Nor is the prospect confined to the township. The villages of Burlington and Woburn, with the high grounds beyond, bound your prospect on the northeast. On the east you have the hills in Winchester, Mount Gilboa, and other high lands in Arlington in view; and between these, a part of Somerville, the towering shaft on Bunker Hill, and a portion of the city of Boston may be seen, reflecting the rays of the rising or setting sun. To the southeast, the eye takes in the Blue Hills in Milton, the elevated lands in Newton, Prospect Hill in Waltham, and the high grounds in Weston. Towards the west and northwest the prospect is still more extensive. Passing over the village of Bedford, the high lands of Westford, Groton and the intermediate towns, the eye rests upon the lofty Wachusett in Princeton, the first land which meets the eye of the mariner as he approaches the coast. Farther to the north, you behold the Watatick in Ashby, and the hills in New Ipswich; and still farther, in the State of New Hampshire, the grand Monadnock, with brow half seen, and half concealed in clouds, fixes and bounds the view.

This hill is nearly devoid of wood, having only a few stunted pines and cedars upon it. But it has one feature which is somewhat characteristic of a mountain, — a pond of lasting water upon its side, about twenty feet below its summit, containing from one to two acres. The whole of this hill has been purchased by Francis B. Hayes, Esq., of Boston, who has constructed a road nearly to its summit, cleared out the pond, and greatly improved the ground around it, thereby rendering this eminence more accessible and attractive. This hill had acquired the insignificant name of Granny Hill, but the inhabitants in town meeting assembled, in November, 1867, gave it the more worthy name of "Hancock Height," in honor of their first permanent minister, and his grandson, Hon. John Hancock, of Revolutionary memory, whose association with, and regard for the town, are well known and recognized.

DAVIS'S HILL, situated about half a mile northwesterly from the Common, is a fine elevation of land, rising about one hundred and forty feet above the meadow which lies at its southeasterly base. This hill is less abrupt and broken than Hancock Height, having in many parts a tolerably good soil, which has been cultivated nearly to its summit. This elevation, like the others in the neighborhood, overlooks the village, and affords much the same prospect toward the north and west as the one last mentioned. This range of high land continues to the southwest, and though it has several depressions, it rises, after passing the road to Concord, to an elevation greater than any land in the town. The highest parts are covered with a good growth of wood.

FISKE HILL, situated on the road to Concord, about a mile and a third from the village, is elevated at least one hundred feet above the valley with which it is surrounded, and furnishes an extensive view to the north, west, and south. The old road over which the British passed in their expedition to Concord in 1775, wound its way up the sides of this hill, and passed the ridge not far below its highest elevation. Near the summit of this hill, Colonel Smith attempted to rally his flying troops, and make a stand against his pursuers. But his efforts were fruitless. His troops were soon put to flight, and he was severely wounded.

There are several hills of considerable elevation in the southerly part of the town, near the old Concord turnpike, which command views more or less extensive. One on the farm of Mr. Webster Smith, known as the Phinney Place, furnishes a prospect from northwest to southeast of seventy or eighty miles, from the Blue Hills in Milton to the mountains in New Hampshire.

LORING'S HILL, about half a mile southerly from the centre of the town, rises somewhat abruptly from the meadows which skirt Vine Brook, to the height of about one hundred and fifty feet. It is covered with wood; and the underbrush having been removed, it affords a delightful ramble for those who seek the cooling shade, to meditate upon the beauties of nature. An Observatory has been erected on the hill, from which a fine view is presented in every direction.

There is a range of high lands on the southerly side of the great road leading to Boston, commencing a little southeasterly of the Town Hall, which, though interrupted by several depressions, extends into Arlington. The swell above the old Munroe Tavern is considerably elevated, and overlooks the village and a large portion of the town. It was on the northern declivity of this hill, that Lord Percy placed one of his field pieces on the 19th of April, 1775; and from this spot threw his shot in every direction, where he could discover any of the Americans assembling, — one of which perforated the meeting house on the Common. The elevated portions of this range, southwest-erly of the Roman Catholic church, command a prospect of great extent and rare beauty. Not only the northeasterly portion of the town, but the village of Medford with its numerous dwellings and public buildings, are displayed to view. Nor rests the prospect here; the city of Lynn, and the dark blue ocean beyond, whitened by the sails of the hardy fishermen and the enterprising merchants, give variety and grandeur to the scene.

MOUNT INDEPENDENCE, near the East Village, rises abruptly about one hundred and thirty feet above the main street. It is nearly opposite the church, and commands a full view of the village, and the high lands on the opposite side of the broad meadows which spread out on each side of Mill Brook. But while Main street, on which are situated the principal houses in the village, lies at the foot of this eminence, and the eye of the beholder on the summit can observe every movement in the village, a more distant prospect attracts the attention; and in the openings among the hills in Arlington, the growing village of Medford rises in full view. The prospect from this hill is truly delightful, and the people in that part of the town have shown their good sense in giving it a name worthy of its character, and the town where it is situated. On the 4th of July, 1824, a piece of ordnance was presented by a citizen of the village, for the use of the inhabitants; and the name of "Mount Independence" was given to this hill, under the folds of the Stars and Stripes, and amid the roar of cannon and the huzzas of the citizens. It was near the foot of this hill, that the British on the morning of the 19th of April, 1775, committed one of their first acts of aggression, by disarming one of the Lexington Militia, (Mr. Benjamin Wellington,) who was on his way to join his fellow townsmen in arms at the Common.

Farther to the south, this elevated range rises still higher, with a more extended prospect, particularly to the south and east, enabling the eye to take in the villages of Newton, and the great extent of beautiful country intervening. At the lower end of the East Village, this range is considerably depressed, but soon rises again as it approaches the line of Arlington, giving a good view toward the north.

There is one peculiarity common to almost every elevation in town. We have seen that the rock formation was greenstone, which generally cropped out upon the sides of these hills. The feature to which we now refer is, that on or near their summits are masses of greenstone quite unlike, in form and appearance, what is found on their sides. While the latter are rough and angular, the rock upon the summit is more compact and smooth, having the upper surface flattened, as though it had been ground off by some immense power. This appearance of the rock is ascribed by geologists to the glaciers which, during what is denominated the "drift period," passed over this portion of the country, and by their enormous weight ground down the tops of these rocky elevations, carrying away the loose and broken fragments, and leaving the solid summits flattened and comparatively smooth.

Such is the topography of Lexington, and it may with truth be said, that few towns within thirty miles of Boston contain so much to attract the attention, please the eye, and gratify the taste, so far as natural scenery is concerned. Though it is within half an hour's ride of the city, it is as rural, as quiet, and apparently as retired, as though it were fifty miles in the interior. Though the village is well settled, having more than a hundred dwelling houses within half a mile of the Common, five minutes' ride in almost any direction brings you into scenery entirely rural, and leads you to fancy yourself far in the country. Having no manufactures in the town, there is but little of that floating population found in many of our towns. The inhabitants being mostly farmers, or gentlemen doing business in Boston, we have less of tumult and commotion than most places in the vicinity—the only bustle being a few minutes in each day on the departure and arrival of the cars.

Being an elevated township, the water is pure and the air salubrious; and hence Lexington in all periods of her history has been regarded as one of the most healthy places in the vicinity. This fact is so well known and acknowledged, that invalids from the city frequently resort here for the improvement of their health. The topography of the country, the rural scenery, the orderly quiet of the place, and the purity of the atmosphere, render Lexington a desirable place of residence.

The sanitary character of the town may be seen in the longevity of its inhabitants. In 1776, among the recorded deaths were one person aged 88 years, one aged 84, three aged 83, and two aged 79. Between 1779 and 1790 inclusive, there were one aged 96, one aged 95, one aged 93, two aged 92, three aged 90, one aged 88, and four aged 85. Nor was this longevity confined to the last century. In 1819, there were among the recorded deaths, one person aged 99, one aged 94½, and two aged 94; and in 1822, two aged 92. In the Church Records of 1835 is the following entry: "Deaths during the preceding fifteen years, three hundred and twenty-one. Over 80 years of age, forty; over 90, ten; 95, one; 99, one.

In 1854, there died in Lexington persons of the following ages: one of 80, one of 87, one of 90, one of 92, and one of 95; in 1855, one of 86, one of 88; in 1856, one of 93, one of 81, one of 80; in 1858, one of 82, one of 83, one of 88, and one of 91; in 1860, one of 82, one of 83, and one of 88; in 1861, two of 80, one of 81, one of 86, and one of 92; in 1862, one of 85, and two of 86; in 1863, one of 83, and one of 87; in 1864, one of 83, and one of 87; in 1865, one of 80, one of 82, and two of 84; in 1866, two of 80, one of 91, and one of 93. One other case deserves mention. Mary Sanderson, great-grand-daughter of William Munroe, the original emigrant, died October 15, 1852, aged 104 years and 5 days. By the State Census just published, it appears that Lexington, in 1865, with a population of 2,220, had the following number of persons of the ages there specified: Between the ages of sixty and seventy, 127; between seventy and eighty, 83; between eighty and ninety, 32; between ninety and one hundred, 3.

¹ It may be interesting to some to state the occasion for the change from Old to New Style. The Julian Year consisted of three hundred and sixty-five days and six hours — making the year too long by about eleven minutes. In 1582, Pope Gregory XIII attempted to reform the Calendar. From the time of the Council of Nice to the time of Gregory, this excess of eleven minutes amounted to ten days. In order to obviate this error, it was ordained that the year 1582 should consist of only three hundred and sixty-five days, and that ten days, between the 4th and 14th of October, should be thrown out of the Calendar for that year; and also to prevent any further irregularity, that no year commencing a century should be leap-year, excepting each four hundredth year; whereby three days are abated every four hundred years, that being nearly equal to eleven minutes for every year during that period, leaving an error of only one day in five thousand two hundred years.

Sutton, who bore the title of LORD LEXINGTON. The family of Lexington, of which Sir Robert was, in the female line, the representative, was of considerable antiquity and note in England. Robert Sutton, Baron de Lexington, lived in the time of Henry III. and died June 4, 1250, without issue. John de Lexington, a younger brother of Robert, was four times appointed Keeper of the Seal by the King. Another brother, Henry de Lexington, was Bishop of Lincoln in 1254. With this generation the line of Lexington became extinct. But a sister, Alice, married Roland de Sutton, from whom descended Robert, Lord Lexington. His father was made Baron of Lexington by Charles I. and died 1688. Robert was his only son, and sustained several important offices, the duties of which he discharged with ability and honor. In 1698, he was appointed Envoy Extraordinary to the Imperial Court of Vienna, where he remained till the peace of Ryswick, when he returned to England, and was appointed one of the Lords of the Bedchamber. He was, in 1712, selected to conduct the negotiations with Spain. He died in 1723.

When the Precinct of North Cambridge was incorporated as a town in 1713, Lord Lexington was in the very height of his popularity, and his name was familiar among all who stood near the throne. A custom is said to have prevailed in Massachusetts in those days, when a town was incorporated, to pass the Order or Act, and send it to the Governor with a blank for the name

The Calendar before the days of Gregory was called the Julian, after Julius Cæsar, who regulated it, and has since the change been commonly denominated Old Style, and the Calendar of Gregory has been denominated New Style. Though the New Style was at once adopted in Romish countries, such was the prejudice of Great Britain to the Romanists, that it was not adopted by her or in her Colonies till 1752. Previous to that year, two methods of beginning the year prevailed in England; the ecclesiastical and legal year beginning on the 25th of March, and the historical year on the 1st of January. The change of Style adopted by England in 1752, fixed the 1st of January as the commencement of the year, and abolished the distinction between the legal and historical year.

This difference in the commencement of the respective years, led to a system of double dating from the 1st of January to the 25th of March — thus: January 10, 1724-5 or 1724 $\frac{4}{5}$, the 4 denoting the ecclesiastical, and the 5 the historical year. From 1582 to 1699 the difference in the Styles was ten days; from 1700 to 1800, eleven days; and since 1800, twelve days. In changing Old to New Style, care should be taken not to confound the centuries. Many mistakes have arisen from not regarding the century in which the event occurred.

to be filled by him. Joseph Dudley was at that time Governor of the Province, and the fame of Lord Lexington would naturally suggest his name to any Chief Magistrate as a suitable one for the town. But there is another reason why Governor Dudley should wish to do honor to the popular English negotiator, viz. they were distant relatives; the Dudleys being of the Sutton family, and taking the surname of Dudley from the Barony of that name. So that the name of Lexington given to this town, would, if given by the Legislature, be a compliment to the Governor, and if given by the Governor himself, would be a compliment to his friend and relative.

But little thought they when they were honoring a British Lord, by giving his name to this township, that LEXINGTON was to become a watchword for freemen throughout British America. It has been stated elsewhere that the deeds of the 19th of April so warmed the hearts of the hardy hunters in the wilds of Kentucky, that they baptized their camp by the name of Lexington. The veneration for this town, and for the associations which cluster around it, has been such, that the authorities of remote States have recurred to the opening scene of the Revolution, and have given to a portion of their territory the name of our own beloved town. Hence, we have twenty-two counties, cities, and towns by the name of Lexington, scattered over every section of our wide, extended country, including the Pacific States — a fact of which the inhabitants of old Lexington have just reason to be proud.

The Public Buildings are not remarkable for their size or beauty. The number of churches in the town is five, — three in the Centre, and two in the East Village. The church of the First parish, situated on Elm Avenue, which separates it from the Common, is a neat edifice, sixty-eight feet long by fifty-four feet wide, with a vestibule twenty-two by twenty-eight feet. The steeple is about one hundred and thirty feet high, and its architectural proportions have generally been admired by critics in such matters. The view on the opposite page, taken from the Common, with the dwelling of Mr. Bowen Harrington on the right, and that of Mr. S. W. Robinson on the left, with the trees and monument in front, shows the church and its surroundings to good advantage.

CHURCH OF THE FIRST PARISH.

The Follen Church, as it is frequently called, from Dr. Follen, who furnished the design, situated in the East Village, is a singular structure. It is an octagon in form, and had a steeple of lattice-work, presenting an appearance rather peculiar, but not unpleasant to the eye. This house has recently been remodelled, and the lattice steeple superseded. The three remaining churches are rather small, though respectable in their appearance. The School Houses in the town are all comparatively new, having been erected within the last eighteen years, and contain the improvements of modern houses. The house recently erected in the East Village is a good specimen of architecture.

The Town Hall, situated partly between the two villages, for the purpose of accommodating both, but in fact accommodating neither, is a structure of rather fantastic appearance, having some elements of architectural beauty, but is on the whole poorly adapted to the purpose for which it was erected. It has one large and commodious Hall, but the rest of the building is so constructed as to be of but little use. The site is a pleasant one, and the cost of the building was enough to have insured better accommodations than it now affords.

The dwelling houses in the town are generally good, and are for the most part kept well painted, and in a good state of repair. The largest and most attractive house was that owned by Dr. Dio Lewis, situated on Main street, in the centre of the town. It was erected for a Hotel, and for a number of years was well filled with boarders. It was a three story building, having two extensive wings, and was surmounted by a cupola. In 1864, it was purchased by Dr. Lewis, and fitted up for a school for young ladies. The buildings and grounds were greatly improved, and everything was done by the owner to make the place attractive. But on the 7th of September, 1867, it was burned down, to the great regret of the inhabitants.

There are several private residences in the village which would naturally attract the attention of a stranger, as they add materially to the appearance of the place. The house owned and occupied by Mr. David W. Muzzey, some twenty rods easterly of Dr. Lewis's establishment, surrounded as it is by an extensive and beautiful lawn, makes a fine appearance.

As you approach the Common from the southeast, on your right, three or four rods from the street, a large and commanding dwelling house, whose general appearance and style of architecture betoken age, meets your eye. It is the old Buckman Tavern of the Revolution. Here many of Captain Parker's men congregated on the evening of the 18th of April, 1775; and here several of the wounded British soldiers were conveyed on the afternoon of the 19th. To this house a few soldiers fled when driven from the Common, and here they returned the British fire, a recognition of which by the foe is attested by the perforated clapboards still visible on the house.

THE MERRIAM HOUSE.

This place was long occupied as a tavern, and here was located the first Post Office in the town. The place is now owned and occupied by the heirs of Rufus Merriam, and though the house has stood for a long period, it is in a good state of preservation, and makes an imposing appearance.

Passing up Hancock Street, the residence of the late General Samuel Chandler would at once attract the attention of a stranger.

LATE RESIDENCE OF MR. CHARLES O. WHITMORE.

It is a large commodious house with a tower about fifty feet high, situated eight or ten rods from the street, on elevated ground, and commands a fine prospect. It is one of the handsomest sites in the village. Its approach from the street is by a circular driveway, bordered by a hedge of arbor-vitæ, which partially hides the building as you enter from the street, and so produces a pleasant effect as you approach the house.

The cottage of Mr. James Sumner, nearly opposite the Chandler Place, though irregular, and a little fantastic in its appearance, is a neat and attractive dwelling, displaying fine taste, and is calculated to arrest the attention of a passer-by.

A few rods from General Chandler's, on the same side of the street, is situated the largest and most attractive dwelling house in the town. It was owned, and the grounds beautified and adorned by Charles O. Whitmore, Esq., of Boston, who occupied the place as a summer residence for several years. He sold it to Edward Lawrence, Esq., of Charlestown, who now makes it his summer residence. He has made further improvements upon the place. The grounds are handsomely laid out in driveways and paths, and ornamented with groves of forest trees. In the rear of the house are a fine garden with fruit trees and flowers, a convenient stable and carriage house, with grass plats and a water pool, and whatever is pleasing to the sight and gratifying to the taste. There is also an elevation covered by a growth of pines, which affords a pleasant rural retreat.

On the opposite side of the street, a few rods above the house of Mr. Lawrence, is the residence of the late John Muzzey, now owned and occupied by Mr. Charles A. Fowle. It is situated on a point of land nearly level with the street, extending a few rods into the more depressed ground, and connected in the rear with a narrow ridge of land which our friends at the West would call an "oak opening," which makes a pleasant summer arbor. The house is tastefully constructed, and the grounds, though somewhat circumscribed, are handsomely laid out; and the venerable and stately elms standing by the roadside, give the whole a fine appearance.

Nearly opposite the last mentioned estate, we have the summer residence of Francis B. Hayes, Esq., of Boston. It is situated a few rods from the street, on elevated ground, and enjoys an extensive prospect. Not only the northern part of the town, but the distant Wachusett, the grand Monadnock, and a long range of the hills of New Hampshire, are in full view. A site thus elevated secures "the cooling western breeze," and so recommends the place to those who wish to inhale the air of the mountains. The grounds are laid out in good taste, and fine hedges around the yards give to the premises a rural charm not often surpassed. The house is finished in modern style, with a French roof and cupola; and when the trees which have been planted upon the premises are grown, the place will be one of beauty and attraction. Mr. Hayes has an extensive farm, of some three hundred acres; that portion of it which lies near the dwelling, is highly cultivated and planted with fruit trees.

About a third of a mile from the Common, on the Bedford road, is a neat dwelling, situated six or eight rods from the highway, with pleasant ground on every side; and, as it overlooks the broad cultivated meadow between Bedford and Hancock Streets, it furnishes a wide survey of thrifty agriculture, and at the same time affords a handsome seat of quiet retirement, though within a few minutes' walk of the village. The place is owned and occupied by Mr. George H. Everson.

The prospect of most of the houses near the village has been greatly improved within the last thirty years, by the clearing up of the swamps which skirted it on either side. Formerly a wide belt of birch and maple partially inclosed the settlement—adding nothing to its appearance, save when the variegated leaves of autumn gave a temporary charm. But now these same meadows, with their rude tangled wild-wood, have given place to cultivated fields and grassy lawns, which spread out like a miniature prairie, to regale the sense and reward the labor of the husbandman.

The dwellings above described, with several other neat and pleasant houses upon Hancock street, render it what may be denominated the "Court End" of the village.

But we cannot dismiss this neighborhood, without calling attention to a dwelling somewhat antiquated in appearance, reminding us of other days, and awakening at once pious and patriotic emotions, and inspiring us with grateful recollections of those who have labored to promote the glory of God and the welfare of their country—a dwelling about which cluster more sacred memories than around any other in the town. We allude, of course, to the old Hancock or Clarke House. A part of this house was erected by Rev. John Hancock immediately after his settlement in 1698, and some thirty-five years after, his son Moses, a successful merchant in Boston, caused a front of a larger size to be erected for his honored father, the first permanent minister of Lexington. This house is still standing, showing the original building and the addition, as seen in the accompanying engraving. Here the venerable Hancock resided till his death, in 1755. Here his grandson, John Hancock, who was afterwards President of the Continental Congress, and Governor of the Commonwealth, and who was a son of Rev. John Hancock of Braintree, spent several years of his boyhood after the death of his father. On the decease of Rev. Mr. Hancock the elder, the Rev. Jonas Clarke succeeded him in the parish, and in the occupancy of this house. Mr. Clarke, being in College with John Hancock the third, early contracted an acquaintance with him, and marrying a grand-daughter of Rev. Mr. Hancock the elder, and of course cousin to his college acquaintance, an intimacy grew up between Mr. Clarke and Mr. Hancock. Nothing is more natural, than that John Hancock should frequently visit the home of his boyhood, and his old acquaintance, and now cousin, in the very house where he had received the instruction of his grandfather, and around which his youthful affections clustered. And as the controversy with the mother country opened, and Mr. Clarke took a deep and lively interest in the subject, Mr. Hancock found a new bond of attachment; hence the great intimacy between these two friends and patriots.

It was in this now venerable and antiquated dwelling, that the Rev. Mr. Clarke prepared those pious sermons, and those patriotic papers, which taught his people their duty to their God, to themselves, and to their country. It was in this house that Samuel Adams, John Hancock, and Dr. Warren often conferred together on grave matters of State. It was here that Adams and Hancock repaired to escape the contemplated arrest of Governor Gage. It was here that these two patriots lodged on the night of the 18th of April, 1775, when the first intelligence of the march of the British reached Lexington; and it was from this house that they departed when the British troops arrived. Here, too, the pious priest and patriot spent his days, and expired after a long life of usefulness. Well then, may the people of Lexington, and of places remote, cherish a fond and reverential regard for this sacred place, endeared to them by so many associations.

In the western part of the village, there are several houses of a neat and comfortable appearance ; and among these the pleasant cottage of Mr. George W. Robinson, and the dwelling of Mr. John C. Blasdell deserve special mention. The former is situated forty or fifty rods from Monument Street, on land a little elevated, in the midst of a productive farm, with an extensive lawn of reclaimed meadow in front, having a private road connecting it with the street at two points. The latter is a handsome mansion, standing some forty rods from the road, with which it is connected by a winding driveway. The grounds, which are separated from the street by a fine hedge of double spruce, are tastefully laid out and ornamented with trees and shrubbery. In the rear of the house the ground rises to a plat of table land, covered with an open grove of forest trees, in the midst of which is a pool of never failing water. Mr. Blasdell has also upon his premises an extensive conservatory, where grapes, shrubs, and flowers are cultivated. These houses and their surroundings furnish a delightful landscape view. With a belt of level and highly cultivated meadow in the foreground, the beautiful hill-side adorned with forest and fruit trees and presenting the houses and grounds above mentioned, the whole resting against a large circular swell of woodland as a back-ground,—the painter would have an excellent view for the exercise of his art.

About a mile westerly from the Common, at the junction of Monument and School Streets, is the late residence of Mr. Joshua B. Fowle. The house and out-buildings are capacious, and of modern style ; and standing upon an elevated site, with a fine lawn around and an extensive prospect in the distance—the place may justly be regarded as a desirable one for any gentleman's residence.

The house of Mr. A. W. Crowningshield, at the junction of School and Lincoln Streets, is a fine building, two stories high, with a cupola, from which you overlook his well cultivated farm.

The summer residence of Mrs. William Cary, of Brooklyn, N. Y., situated on Shade Street, is one of the most rural and commanding of any in the town. The house, being a refit of the old mansion, is not remarkable for its size, but is fitted up in good taste, and looks out on every side upon the rich and productive farm. Though the land is comparatively level, the house is situated nearly on the summit of a high swell of land which commands an extensive prospect to the west. This valuable and highly improved farm was generously tendered by Mrs. Cary to the State, for a site of the Agricultural College.

Near the junction of Spring Street and Concord Avenue is the residence of Mr. Webster Smith. The house was built by the late Elias Phinney, Esq., and is a handsome mansion. Situated some eight or ten rods from the street, with a fine lawn in front, and rich grass land spreading out in the rear, this situation combines neatness and good taste, with the appearance of agricultural retirement and thrift.

The old homestead of Peter Wellington and his late brother, Major B. O. Wellington, on Concord Avenue, shaded by an open grove of ornamental trees, would impress the traveler with the very idea of rural enjoyment.

There are several houses in the East Village which add to the appearance of the place. The house owned by Maurice O'Connell, Esq., overlooking a great part of the village, the dwellings of Mr. O. H. Dana, and of Mr. Charles Brown, and the mansion house near the church, would naturally attract the notice of any one coming into the place.

The farm house of Mr. Nathaniel Pierce, with its spacious yard, and the house lately occupied by Judge Redfield, standing on elevated ground, would not escape the notice of a stranger.

The residence of Mr. Charles Nunn, situated near the junction, on the rising land between Main and Middle Streets, is worthy of special notice. The elegance and good taste displayed in the buildings and grounds, the natural beauty of the site, and the fine prospect it commands, render it one of the most desirable situations in the place.

The house of Mr. William A. Tower, midway between the two villages, is a stately building. Situated on the high land south of Main Street, it makes a fine appearance, and its cupola commands a prospect of great extent, variety, and beauty.

Though considerably elevated above the road, the house is approached by a circular driveway of easy ascent. The land about the buildings is comparatively level, having however a gentle depression, affording a fine pool of lasting water near the mansion. A view of the premises, taken on the high grounds near the edifice, affords a scene of the most pleasing combination of nature and art; showing at once elegant buildings, native and artificial forests, and a beautiful pool of water. This dwelling, with all its surroundings, has no superior in the township; and any admirer of natural scenery would find his taste fully gratified by such a location.

The house near the Town Hall, owned and occupied by Mr. W. E. Russell, is a commodious and desirable one, and its location is among the best in the village.

There is another dwelling, which, from its retired position and rather romantic history, deserves notice. It is situated on the western declivity of Loring's Hill, and is hidden from view except on the west, where it looks out upon a pleasant prospect, both immediate and remote. Its secluded situation, and the range of open wood with which it is nearly surrounded, make it a desirable place to retire from public view, and commune with nature in shady groves. The house was built by a stranger in town by the name of Lord, who, after the whole was finished according to his taste, visited New York, and for certain obliquity of conduct, found a steady home in the penitentiary instead of his secluded house in Lexington. The premises have changed hands frequently, and the place is now owned and occupied by Mr. Henry Fowle, of Boston, as a summer residence.

The house of Mr. George Munroe, the dwelling of the late Reuben Reed, and the house on the Marshall Locke place, on Lowell Street, furnish examples of fine residences upon productive farms—showing that the calling of the agriculturalist is not repugnant to elegance and good taste.

These are among the largest and most striking dwellings in town. But the boast of Lexington is not that she abounds in princely mansions, but that the mass of her houses are neat and in good repair; and in this respect she will compare favorably with any of her sister towns. Most of our farmers and mechanics have comfortable houses in a good condition, giving evidence of comfort, taste, and thrift. And though some of these show a somewhat ancient origin, they at the same time bear witness that they have been fondly cherished and carefully preserved, so as to afford to the third and fourth generations a rural and pleasant home. In fact, the venerable old houses which are found on some of our farms are calculated to excite a lively interest, and carry us back to scenes of rural simplicity, when the wants of the people were few and easily supplied; when nature had its full play, and the enjoyments of life were real, and unadulterated with the false glosses of art.

RESIDENCE OF MR. CHARLES TIDD.

The dwelling of Mr. Charles Tidd is one of this description. Erected by his great-grand-father, it has stood at least one hundred and seventy-five years; and while its architecture forms a connecting link between the past and the present, and the venerable elm speaks of other days, the present good condition of the dwelling, and the farm with which it is surrounded, shows a just appreciation of ancestral labor and filial care, and that rural comfort may be enjoyed in houses which have come down from past generations.

In contrast with the above dwelling, is the elegant cottage of Mr. Luke C. Childs, near the East Village. Situated on a rise of ground, about one hundred and twenty rods from Main Street, with orchards and highly cultivated lands in front, and Mount Ephraim in the back ground, it makes a fine appearance, and shows that agriculture and taste may easily combine. To the lovers of rural scenery there is a charm in locations like this. Nor are the advantages merely imaginary. There is an exemption from the noise and bustle of business, and from the dust of the street; and every farmer knows the advantages of having his buildings near the centre of his improved land.

RESIDENCE OF MR. LUKE C. CHILDS.

As a specimen of the common village dwellings, the houses of Mr. Warren Duren, and Mr. Charles Hudson are given below; and while they lay no claim to any special elegance, they serve as convenient and comfortable homes. The former is situated at the junction of Hancock and Adams Streets, and marks the boundary of the village proper in that direction. The house stands on grounds elevated above the street, and hence shows to good advantage. It has the refreshing air from the distant high lands which separate the waters which flow into the Connecticut on the one hand, and the Merrimack on the other; and enjoys the pleasing prospect of the setting sun gilding the summits of the mountain peaks.

RESIDENCE OF MR. WARREN DUREN.

Situations like the above, representing the middle classes in society, are the best exponents of the prosperity of a town. As the real wealth of a nation consists in the productiveness of its labor, so the prosperity of a town depends more upon the working classes, than upon retired capitalists. It is not upon millionaires that any place can safely rest for its prosperity and growth. However liberal such capitalists may be, their benefactions amount to a mere trifle, when compared with the annual production of the laboring, business portions of the community. The more equally property is distributed, or which is nearly the same thing, the more uniformly industry and frugality are practiced by its inhabitants, the greater will be the prosperity of any place. Not, however, that wealth is to be despised, or that none are to be regarded as laborers but those who work with their own hands. Every man is a laborer who pursues any lawful calling which contributes to the prosperity of society.

RESIDENCE OF MR. CHARLES HUDSON.

Lexington, in the commercial sense of the term, has no rich men among her citizens ; on the contrary, wealth is more equally distributed in this town than in most others in the vicinity. And as the dwellings are, as a general thing, an index to the condition of the people, we might naturally expect to find most of the houses of a medium class, representing the farmers, the mechanics, and the business men of the place.

The house of Mr. Hudson has no special attractions, save that of location. Situated opposite the Common, it looks out upon that consecrated spot, and enjoys a full view of the churches, the Monument, and their surroundings.

It will be interesting to witness the growth of the town through every period of its history from the first settlement to the present day. It will be seen by the following tables, that its progress has not been rapid. In 1754, a portion of the territory and population was taken from Lexington to form the town of Lincoln. The French and Revolutionary wars which followed, kept the population nearly stationary for thirty or forty years.

As Lexington was a part of Cambridge till 1713, we have no records of her population till after that period. Nor have we any authentic census till 1790. But from a careful analysis of all the documents which bear upon the subject, and a full consideration of scattering tax bills, number of polls, the effects of Philip's, the French, and the Revolutionary wars, the known emigration and immigration from and to the township, the change of the town lines, and the general laws of population, we can safely estimate the population of Lexington for each decennial period; and though the numbers may not be perfectly accurate, they are a close approximation, sufficiently near for all practical purposes.

The following table will show the population at the commencement of each decade :

Year.	Population.	Year.	Population.	Year.	Population.

The valuation of the town is more uncertain than its population. The mode of valuing property, and the fluctuating character of the currency, make it almost impossible for the first one hundred years, to give any just and connected view of the growth of the town in wealth. Up to 1693, there was no valuation or tax separate from that of Cambridge. The first tax bill for the minister's salary in 1693, shows the relative wealth of the different individuals, but furnishes no data for the valuation of the precinct. By presenting in a tabular form the polls and valuations at different periods, we are enabled to form some idea of the growth of the place. Though it must be borne in mind, that the basis of polls, and of the valuations, differed somewhat in different periods.

The fidelity of history requires that something should be said on the subject of Slavery. This evil was introduced into the country before the planting of the Massachusetts Colony; and though our laws were hostile to the institution, yet the love of gain prompted its gradual introduction into the Colony, till our seaports, and all the towns near the coast, had more or less slaves. Dr. Belknap informs us, that rum distilled in Massachusetts was one fruitful source of the slave trade; that vessels engaged in that base traffic generally carried out a cargo of our rum.

Lexington did not escape the contamination of this evil. In 1735, it appears from the town valuation, that there were twenty slaves in the town, held by the following persons, viz: Francis Bowman, Esq., held two; Deacon Samuel Stone, one; Captain Joseph Bowman, one; John Overing, two; Francis Bowman, Jr., one; John Bridge, one; Nehemiah Abbott, one; Joseph Merriam, one; Ebenezer Fiske, one; Isaac Stone, two; Thomas Cutler, one; Edward Winship, one; Jonathan Harrington, one; Joseph Simonds, one; John Muzzy, one; Samuel Locke, one; and Samuel Green, one. In 1744, the number was eighteen, and they were owned singly by different persons, except Francis Bowman, Joseph Bowman, and Amos Muzzy, who had two each. This number gradually diminished, till in 1775, there were but five slaves in the town, — owned respectively by Ebenezer Fiske, Samuel Bridge, Robert Harrington, William Tidd, and Benjamin Estabrook. Though slaves to some extent were held in Lexington, they were in most cases kept as house servants. Not more than one family, that we are aware of, ever engaged in the traffic of slaves. One who did engage in this trade was subjected to an inconvenience attendant upon owning property in man. In 1727, Benjamin ——, of Lexington, offered a reward for a runaway, whom he describes thus: "He speaks very good English, is about twenty-six years of age, had no hat on, but had a horse lock about one of his legs; and was lately the property of John Muzzy, of Mendon."

Though Slavery existed in Massachusetts, it was exempt from many of the evils which were connected with it in the Southern States. The slaves were generally taken into the families, and were treated like the other servants. They also enjoyed the same religious privileges as the whites. They had seats in the meeting houses; they owned the covenant, had their children baptized, were admitted to the churches, and sat down at the same communion table with their masters. Lexington Records contain full evidence of the enjoyment of these rights. By the Laws of Massachusetts, slaves were capable of holding property, had free access to our Courts, and whenever they sued for their liberty, it was granted either by the Court or by the jury. Slavery in Massachusetts was never hereditary by law. There never was a time when our Courts would not have given freedom to the children of slaves.

These facts show that Slavery existed here in a modified form; and Massachusetts was one of the first States to blot it out entirely, which was done by her Constitution in 1780. Though these facts do not justify, they extenuate the conduct of our fathers, and should teach us to judge them by the practice and spirit of the age in which they lived.

Lexington, from its geographical position, has been pretty thoroughly cut up by roads. Before railroads diverted the travel, there were three great thoroughfares from Boston into the country, running through the entire length of the town: — The Concord turnpike through the southern, the Middlesex turnpike through the northern, and the old Concord road through the central part of the town. These, with the roads to Bedford, Lincoln, Weston, Waltham, Watertown, Woburn, and Burlington, brought a large amount of travel through the place. Stages were run daily, and large teams from the northern part of the State, and from New Hampshire and Vermont, to and from Boston, could be seen upon the roads almost any hour in the day.

But the introduction of railroads has diverted all the long travel from the town; and were it not for the increased local travel, our roads would be left almost desolate. Seeing this diversion of travel, the people of the town felt the necessity of doing something to prevent the population, as well as travel, from leaving the place. Railroads being the order of the day, that mode of communication seemed to be the only thing which would keep Lexington within the list of prosperous towns, and connect her with the commercial metropolis. One of her most enterprising citizens, Benjamin Muzzey, Esq., took the matter in hand, and by his zeal and perseverance, he was enabled by the aid of others, and the liberality of our citizens, to build a railroad connecting Lexington with Boston. This road has been a blessing to the town, and the people owe a debt of gratitude to the memory of him by whose zeal and energy this has been obtained.

Lexington, considering her territory, has a large extent of roads to support. The aggregate length of her roads is about sixty-five miles — making at least three hundred acres devoted to public ways. The town is not particularly burdened with bridges, having only two or three of any magnitude. But the greatest grievance which the town has ever suffered, has been the support of the "Great Bridge," so called, between the city of Cambridge and the town of Brighton. After paying tribute to the town of Cambridge about a century and a half, in 1859, by the effort of the Chairman of the Selectmen, an Act was obtained from the Legislature, exempting the town from any further support of a bridge eight miles distant from them, and one over which they rarely, if ever traveled.

Lexington is almost entirely destitute of manufactures. In the easterly part of the town, the dressing of furs has been carried on to some extent; but at the present time that has nearly ceased. Mr. Patrick Mitchell, in the East Village, has a small establishment for currying and dressing leather. Mr. Alonzo Goddard carries on the manufacture of tin and sheet-iron ware, but he does little more than supply his own townsmen. Mr. Patrick Lynam manufactures a few manilla and other mats, but the quantity is inconsiderable.

There are two establishments in Lexington for manufacturing Peat into a compact and portable fuel. The process consists in grinding the material taken from the swamp in its wet condition, removing the roots or fibrous portions, and then pressing it into a solid compact form, thereby expressing the water, and then drying it in the sun. In this way a very good fuel is produced. It burns readily, and is clean to handle, though it has an odor which is rather unpleasant. Whether this preparation can be made profitable, remains to be seen. Lexington, with its extensive meadows of excellent peat, is a favorable place to try the experiment.

There has recently been discovered in Lexington an extensive mine of Paint, which bids fair to prove a valuable article. The existence of the material has long been known, and some of it has been removed to make walks in gardens &c.; but no one ever thought that it had the properties of paint, till Bowen Harrington, Esq., caused it to be subjected to a chemical and practical test within the past year. The mine has been purchased, and a Company organized. The paint has been prepared and offered in the market, and meets with a ready sale. Experienced painters and decorators have tested it, and assert that it is superior to any pigment in the market. In its natural state, it is a hard material, of a buff or yellowish hue, and when it is calcined it becomes a reddish brown. Both in its raw or calcined state it forms, when ground, an exceedingly fine powder, and mixes readily with oil, and can be used for common outside painting, or by mixing with other paints, forms a variety of beautiful tints. It dries readily, and forms a smooth and glossy surface, resembling a coat of varnish.

Dr. Hayes, the well known State Assayer, has tested this paint, and gives the following analysis :

The mineral taken from various points afforded the following results in 100 parts :

Moisture in undried powder,	5.35
Silica,	58.40
Alumina,	18.30
Oxide of Iron,	11.80
Oxide of Manganese,	4.20
Magnesia and Lime,	1.82

Dr. Hayes adds : " As pigments, they do not require half as much oil as the heavy ochres, while they give a large increase of volume, and the durability inferred from the composition must make the paint very valuable. There was not any substance present of a perishable kind. The basis compound, from its enduring nature, confers great value upon this pigment. In mixing with oil, a partial combination takes place, which produces an elastic and mechanically excellent paint like white lead."

If this paint should prove as durable as its friends anticipate, it will become highly valuable to the Company and to the public.

Names of the Town Streets.

MAIN STREET.—Beginning with the Great Road at Arlington line, thence to Hay Scales near the Common.

MONUMENT STREET.—From said Hay Scales to Lincoln line.

CONCORD AVENUE.—The Old Concord Turnpike, from Arlington to Lincoln line.

BOW STREET.—The road crossing the railroad, and near L. C. Childs's.

OAK STREET.—From Main Street, and by the Billings Smith Place.

PLEASANT STREET.—From Main Street, and by the house of Francis Wellington, to Concord Avenue, near the house of Peter Wellington.

WATERTOWN STREET.—From Pleasant Street, by the Phineas Lawrence Place.

VALLEY STREET.—From Watertown Street, by the Bowman Place, to Arlington line.

WALNUT STREET.—From Concord Avenue, by the Joel Smith Place.

MIDDLE STREET.—From Bryant's Corner, to Lincoln Street, near the Old Stone Place.

WALTHAM STREET.—From Main Street, opposite the Lexington House, to Waltham line.

BLOSSOM STREET.—From Waltham Street to Concord Avenue, by the house of Elias Smith.

PINE STREET.—From Middle Street to Oliver and William B. Smith's, by the Galen Allen Place.

H STREET.—From Waltham Street to Pine Street, near the Galen Allen Place.

SPRING STREET.—From Middle Street, opposite Walter Wellington's, to Waltham line, by the Phinney Place.

WESTON STREET.—From Middle Street, opposite the Old Stone Place, to Lincoln line, passing near the Tufts Place, and near to Thomas H. Rhoades's.

SHADE STREET.—From Weston Street, by Mrs. William H. Carey's house, to Thomas Cutler's.

MUZZEY STREET.—From Main Street, opposite the Depot, to Forest Street.

FOREST STREET.—From Waltham Street to Muzzey Street.

LINCOLN STREET.—From Monument Street, by the house of A. W. Crowningshield, to Lincoln line.

SCHOOL STREET.—From Monument Street, by the West-District School-house, to Middle Street.

WOOD STREET.—From Monument Street, by William Hartwell's, to Bedford line.

CEDAR STREET.—From Monument Street, by the Alms-house, to the Isaac Muzzey Place.

HILL STREET.—From Cedar Street, by the Alms-house, to Bedford Street.

ELM AVENUE.—From Monument Street to Bedford Street, northwest of the Common.

BEDFORD STREET.—From the Hay Scales, by Joshua Simonds's, to Bedford line.

HANCOCK STREET.—From Bedford Street, by William Chandler's and North District School-house to Bedford Street.

CROSS STREET.—From Hancock Street to Bedford Street, by Benjamin Gleason's.

BURLINGTON STREET.—From Hancock Street, near C. W. Johnson's, by Angier's, to Burlington line.

GROVE STREET.—From Burlington Street, by Daniel Cummings's, to Bedford line.

ADAMS STREET.—From Hancock Street, near Warren Duren's, to Burlington line.

EAST STREET.—From Adams Street, by George Locke's, to Woburn line.

LOWELL STREET —The "Old Middlesex Turnpike."

NORTH STREET.—From Lowell Street, near the Hammon Locke Place, and by the houses of William Locke and James Williams, to Burlington line.

And North Street is to continue from the Hammon Locke Place, northeasterly towards Mr. Blanchard's, to Town line.

WOBURN STREET.—From Main Street, near the house of Mrs. Lucy Turner, to Woburn line.

MAPLE STREET.—From Main Street, near Nathaniel Pierce's, to Nathan Fessenden, Jr's.

VINE STREET.—From Woburn Street, by Cornelius McMahan's, over the hill.

MARRETT STREET.—From School Street, near A. W. Crowningshield's, to Monument Street, near the old Viles Tavern Place.

Making, in all, Thirty-eight Streets and Avenues.

LEXINGTON FAMILIES.

INTRODUCTION.

IN the following notices of the Lexington families, I have been desirous to give a full genealogy of those who settled in the town early, or who have resided long in the place. Most of the families which have come into Lexington within the last twenty or thirty years, have little or no record on our town books; and hence it is impossible to give any connected view of them from our records. In such cases I have applied to the families personally or by circular, to furnish a complete record; and wherever such a record has been procured, it has been used in this volume. But many, I regret to say, have supplied no such lists. This fact is mentioned, to show that the fullest opportunity has been given to every family, to provide the means which would enable me to give them a place in this Register. It would be impossible for me to take up every modern family, and follow them through the records of the respective places where they and their ancestors may have resided, and give their genealogy. A life-time would be insufficient for such a Herculean task; especially when we consider the changing character of our population at the present day. I regret the absence of many families from this list, but the fault is not mine.

My plan has been to begin as far back as my means of information would allow, and to trace the line of descent to the family or individual who came to Lexington; and while he or they remained in town, I have endeavored to embrace in the list every member of the family. When any individual or family have left town, I have dropped their genealogy; though I have noted all important historical events, connected with the individual or family, known to me, as far as they fell within the scope of this sketch.

While I have endeavored to be accurate, I have not the vanity to suppose that I have avoided all errors. Every one who has had any experience in labors of this kind, knows that errors are unavoidable. The neglect of parents in having the births, deaths, and marriages in their respective families recorded, renders it impossible in many cases, to collect from the town records a correct list of a family. And this difficulty is increased by the recurrence of the same name in the different branches of a family. Where there are two or three Williams, or Johns, or Samuels, or Sarabs, or Marys, or Abigails of the same surname, and the record gives the birth, death, or marriage of a person of that name, without giving the name of the parent or the age of the individual, it is difficult, and sometimes impossible, from the record, to decide which of the individuals is intended. In all such cases I have had recourse to other evidence, and have generally satisfied myself on this subject.

Genealogists know what allowances to make. But in this case as in almost all others, those are the most difficult to please, who know the least of the embarrassments in this kind of labor. Every genealogist must make up his mind in advance that his work will be branded as unreliable, by those who have neglected to give accurate information, or have been remiss in having their children recorded.

I regret that the accounts given of some families are so meagre and imperfect; but the defect is chargeable to the record. What I have given is the fruit of much labor, study, and anxiety. I have carefully examined the records of Lexington, and most of the neighboring towns, the published genealogies of numerous families, and also the records of the Probate office and the office of the Register of Deeds for the county. From these sources I have supplied, in numerous cases, the defects of the town records, and have even supplied the record of whole families, not found upon the town records at all.

The following explanations will enable the reader to understand the genealogical tables:

ABBREVIATIONS.—b. stands for born; bap. for baptized; m. for married; unm. for unmarried; d. for died; dau. for daughter or daughters; wid. for widow; r. for resides or resided; ad. for admitted; o. c. for owned the Covenant; ch. for church; chil. for children. I have also abbreviated many of the towns to which frequent reference is made, as Lex. for Lexington; Camb. for Cambridge; Wo. for Woburn; Wat. for Watertown; Con. for Concord; Walt. for Waltham; Bed. for Bedford, &c. All towns mentioned will be considered as being within this State, unless another State is mentioned; or the case is so clear as to exclude doubt, as Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, &c.

In the following tables, the parents' names are given in full, and are printed in SMALL CAPITALS; the children's Christian name alone is given, and is printed in italics. Children are separated from their parents by a short line, thus: —. And different families, or branches of the same families, are separated from each other by a line across the page, thus :

The right hand figure on the left margin of the page, denotes the number of persons consecutively from the first named to the last of the family of that name. The first male mentioned under each general head or new family, is set down as 1, and his children as 2, 3, 4, &c., and so on consecutively through every branch of the family; and the number set against any person is considered as his number, and no one is ever brought forward again but in connection with that number. Whenever the children are first named in the series, the number of the father is brought down against them, and placed at the left hand, separated by a hyphen, thus: 1-2 or 12-41, as the case may be—the left hand figure denoting the father, and the right hand figures the children—the father's number being understood as applying to each of his children. Whenever an obelisk (†) is prefixed to a name, it denotes that the person will be taken up again; and the place where he is thus treated of may be found by following down the left margin of the page, till you find his number standing in the second place to the left of the marginal line, and the number of his father one place to the left of that, expressed thus: 1-2- or 12-41-. The numbers, of course, will vary with the position of the person in the table.

That the above explanation may be fully understood, I will illustrate it by its application to a particular family in this Register. Take the SMITH FAMILY, as an example.

John Smith, being the ancestor of the family, stands as No. 1. Against this number his personal history is given. He is separated from his children by a short rule or line. His number (1) is brought down against the name of his first child, John, who is numbered 2. The other children are numbered in succession—Francis, 3, Daniel, 4, and Thomas, 5. It is understood that the number of the parent stands against the name or number of each of the children. By inspecting the table, it will be seen that an obelisk is prefixed to the name of Thomas, No. 5. This denotes that he will be brought forward again. To find the place where he will be further treated of, follow down the left hand of the page till you find the number of the father (1) and the number of the son (5) standing together thus: 1-5-. Thomas's number (5) is brought down against his children, whose consecutive numbers are 6 to 14, inclusive. Here again you find the obelisk against the names of Thomas, John, and Joseph, denoting that each of them will be further considered where their respective numbers, and that of their fathers, are found in the margin. Take the first named in this family, viz. Thomas, whose number is 8. He will be found in the table where his number is placed in the margin, standing at the right hand of the number of his father (5) thus: 5-8-. Against the number of Thomas (8) will be found the numbers of his children, from 15 to 20, inclusive. In this family, Thomas, Joseph, and Benjamin have the mark prefixed to their names, showing that they will be brought forward again and their families given. Take Joseph as an example, whose number is 19. Further along in the margin, you will find 8, the number of the father, and 19, the number of Joseph; there you will find his personal history, and below, against his number (19), you will find his children, numbered from 31 to 40, inclusive. Several of the sons are marked with an obelisk, showing that more will be said of them where their respective numbers are found in the margin associated with 19, the number of their father. Take Hezekiah, numbered 33. By following down the margin, we find 19-33- where Hezekiah is taken up as a father, and his history, and the names of his children, are given. From his children, who are marked for further consideration, we will select Joseph, whose number is 66. Following the direction already given, we find 33-66- in the margin, where a notice of him and his children will be found. If we should select Billings, numbered 140, and look for his appropriate place where his father's number (66) and his own (140) are found in the margin, we should find among his children, Billings, our present fellow-citizen, standing as number 204.

By following these directions, the reader can easily trace the Smiths or any other family. This can be done backward as well as forward. Take, for example, Elias Smith, who married Harriet Hastings. His number is 152, which stands against 87, the number of his father, Josiah. By following back the consecutive numbers, you find that 87 is the son of 40 of the same name; and 40 is the son of 19, which is the number of Joseph, the father; and 19 is the son of 8; and 8 the son of 5; and 5 the son of 2; and 2 the son of 1, the original ancestor.

In this way any family can easily be traced in the following register. It will be seen that each division of a family separated by a long rule or line, presents at once three generations—the grandfather, the father, and the children—the first by number, and the last two by name.

I have been thus particular, because people frequently complain that they cannot understand the arrangement of genealogists, or trace the connection between the different branches or members of a family. The plan I have adopted is partly original, and is, I believe, more simple than any plan in use; and if it be followed, will enable any person to trace the connection between the members of any family which is presented in a tabular form.

GENEALOGICAL REGISTER.

THE ABBOT FAMILY.

ADOPTING the alphabetical order, we must place the Abbots at the head of the Lexington Families. They were not among the earliest settlers, nor were they very numerous, but for a time held a very respectable position among the people of the place. By the aid of the Abbot Genealogy, we are enabled to present a connected line of descent from the original emigrant.

Though this family was quite numerous, consisting of eleven children, by the early death or removal from town of the sons, the name soon disappeared.

THE BOWMAN FAMILY.

1 NATHANIEL BOWMAN, of Watertown, was the progenitor of those of that name who settled at Cambridge Farms. Mr. Bowman was one of the early proprietors of Wat.—his name being on the records in 1636-7. He removed early to Cambridge Farms, and settled on lands purchased of Edward Goffe, situated in the southeasterly part of the town, near Arlington line. His wife, Anna, probably died first, as no mention is made of her in his will. He d. Jan. 21, 1682. His will bears date Oct. 21, 1679, and was proved Apr. 4, 1682. He gives to his son Francis the farm on which he lived,—Francis to pay Nathaniel £25, and in case he should die without issue, it was to revert to the children of Francis. His real estate was inventoried as follows: House and 10 acres of land, £120; 20 acres of meadow, £50; 70 acres of upland unimproved, £70. His children, as far as known, were as follows:

- 1- 2 †Francis, admitted freeman, 1652.
 3 Mary, buried Jan. 1, 1638. 4 Joanna, buried Nov. 20, 1638.
 5 Dorcas, buried Feb. 6, 1639, aged 7 days.
 6 Nathaniel, b. Mar. 6, 1641; probably d. in Lex. 1694; was taxed 1693, but not in 1694.

 15 Samuel, b. Aug. 14, 1679. He resided in Cambridge, where he was Dea. He m. first, Nov. 2, 1700, Rebecca Andrews, who d. Nov. 18, 1713, and he m. second, Deborah ———. He had 14 children.

2-9- FRANCIS BOWMAN, m. first, June 26, 1684, Lydia, dau. of Dea. Samuel and Sarah Stone of Camb., second, Ruth, dau. of Rev. Samuel Angier. By a will, dated 1744, he directed his wife Ruth "to take as her own proper estate forever three of my negro servants, viz. Battiss, Philliss, and Pompy, so named. Also I give to my granddaughter, Ruth Bowman, full power at my decease to take my negro boy Domini to be her own forever,—she paying her brother Francis £20 old tenor at the time of receiving Domini." He mentions in his will, wife Ruth, son Isaac, and dau. Mary Morse, Lydia Simonds, and Sarah Russell. Francis Bowman was among the most prominent men in the township, filling from time to time every office in the gift of the people. In 1693 he was on the committee to purchase land for the support of the ministry, and was on the first board of selectmen and assessors under the town organization, to which posts he was frequently re-elected. He also represented the town in the General Court, 1720, '22, '26, '27, '32, '33. He was also one of the Royal Magistrates first appointed in 1720. He appears to have been much respected; for in "seating the meeting house" he was one of the three who were permitted to sit at the table; and his wife was "plaste in y^e fore seatt in y^e body of seats."

- 9-16 Francis, b. about 1685. 17. Mary, b. —; m. ——— Morse.

He was an ensign of a company of fifty men from that small town, who marched to Boston on the report of the attack upon the company at Lex. on the 19th of April. He soon after joined the army, and commanded a battalion at the Battle of Bennington, and the other battles which resulted in the capture of Burgoyne. Maj. Bowman was not only a leading man in the town of New Braintree, but his family uniting the blood of the Bowmans and Munroes of Lex. became one of the most influential in that part of Worcester County. His daughters intermarried with the Delanos, Woods, Fields, &c., in New Braintree and the neighboring towns. His son Joseph, b. Sept. 10, 1771, represented the town of New Braintree in the General Court fourteen years, between 1807 and 1839. He was a Senator from the County of Worcester in 1828 and 1829, and was a member of the Governor's Council in 1832, '33, and '34. He was also President of the Hampshire Manufacturer's Bank, chosen annually for twenty-one consecutive years. Few men retained the confidence of the public as long as did Hon. Joseph Bowman.
- Isaac Bowman, another son of Maj. Joseph Bowman, moved to Wilkesbarre, Penn., about 1795, where he soon acquired the confidence of the people, was chosen General, and promoted to other offices of power and trust.

- 58 Sybil, b. Aug. 2, 1764; d. Dec. 2, 1765.
- 13-37- WILLIAM BOWMAN m. May 5, 1753, Mary Reed, of Lex. Previous to his marriage he resided in Narraganset No. 2, (now Westminster,) in which settlement his father had an interest. He was dismissed from the ch. of Lex. and recommended to that of Narraganset, Sept. 26, 1742. We find in a pamphlet history of Westminster, published in 1832, the following well authenticated anecdote of William Bowman.*
- “ In 1748, William Bowman, from Lexington, who had been in the township five or six years, and who garrisoned, if not resided, with Capt. Hoar, was mowing one day in the field, some distance from Hoar's fort, when he discovered some Indians in the adjacent woods. They had placed themselves in such a position as to cut him off from his fort; and no doubt felt sure of their victim. Bowman very adroitly concealed his agitation, and, as though he had made no discovery, kept at work, but moving at the same time in a direction from the fort and his insidious foe, until he had gained the declivity of a hill, when he dropped his scythe, and made for Grave's fort in another part of the town about two miles distant, with such speed as to elude the grasp of his fleet-footed pursuers. Bowman soon after this occurrence left the place, having no desire, it would seem, to continue his hand with adversaries trained to every art of guile, and every method of cruelty and torture.”
- After leaving Westminster, he returned to Lexington, and married as before stated. He at last moved to West Cambridge. He d. Oct. 12, 1793, aged 78 years. His wife d. Oct. 27, 1802, aged 76.

THE BRADSHAW FAMILY.

The name of Bradshaw is but rarely found on the Lex. records. Those of that name probably came from Camb. or Med. where the Bradshaws were somewhat numerous.

ABRAHAM BRADSHAW, by wife Abigail, had Abigail, b. Feb. 14, 1749; Jonathan, b. July 19, 1751; Susanna, b. Ap. 26, 1759.

THE BRIDGE FAMILY.

The Bridges, who were among the earliest settlers in what now comprises the town of Lexington, were the descendants of Deacon John Bridge of Camb. He came from Essex County, England, in what was called Hooker's Company, and settled in Camb. in 1632. Hooker and a great part of his company, as we have already seen, removed to Conn. and commenced the settlement of Hartford; but Mr. Bridge remained, and connected himself with Mr. Shepherd's church — of which he was for many years a leading member and officer. He was ad. a freeman in 1634. He was an influential and prominent man, not only in the church, but in the town and in the Colony. He filled almost every office of honor and profit within the gift of his fellow citizens. He represented them in the General Court in 1637, '38, '39, and '41, and served them as selectman eleven years from 1635 to 1652. He was also often employed by the General Court to lay out lands, serve on committees, and perform other important duties. He was a large landholder, not only in Camb. but in other parts of the Colony. He was one of the first to whom lands were granted at the "Farms," as this part of Camb. was then called. As early as 1643, he had a lot granted him on Vine Brook in Lex. and this lot was described as bounding upon his other and earlier improved lands.

He had a daughter Sarah, b. Feb. 16, 1649, who probably died in early infancy. His son Thomas d. 1656. The inventory of his estate was dated Dec. 1, 1656, and was returned by his father Jan. 10, 1657. Thomas left a widow, Dorcas, and a daughter of the same name. His wid. m. Jan. 3, 1666, Daniel Champney, of Camb. The will of John Bridge, proved Oct. 3, 1665, mentions his wife Elizabeth, his son Matthew, daughter-in-law Dorcas, and sister Betts. His wife, it is said, had previously been the wife of Roger Bancroft, and of Martin Saunders; and after the decease of Dea. Bridge, she had a fourth husband, Edward Taylor, of Boston. She was living in 1683.

There can be no question but that the Bridges of Lex. may with certainty trace their pedigree to

1 DEA. JOHN BRIDGE, of Cambridge. who d. Apr. 1665.

MATTHEW BRIDGE, son of John Bridge, was a lad when he came to this country. In 1643, eleven years after he came to the Colony, he was a member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Co. About the same time, viz. 1643 or 4, he m. Anna Danforth, dau. of Nicholas Danforth, formerly of Framingham, Suffolk, England. He d. Apr. 28, 1700; and she survived him about four years, and d. Dec. 2, 1704. We have no means of knowing the exact time when Matthew Bridge took up his abode at Cambridge Farms; but as his father owned lands on Vine Brook, within the territory, and these lands were cultivated, so far at least as to cut the grass, as early as 1643, it is probable that he removed to the place soon after. He was in the place at the organization of the Parish in 1692, and had previously subscribed towards the erection of a meeting-house. He was a large landholder; and in the first parish tax in 1693, he stood higher on the list than any other man except Samuel Stone, Sen. William Munroe, Sen. and Benjamin Muzzy. Though quite advanced in life, he was appointed on a committee to wait upon Mr. Hancock, and make the necessary arrangements for his ordination in 1698. As a mark of distinction, he was seated at the table in the meeting-house by the order of the Parish.

His will, dated and proved in 1738, mentions sons Matthew, John and Samuel, and daughters, Abigail Whitney, Elizabeth and Martha. He was either b. in Camb. Farms, or came here in early infancy. He was a soldier in the Narragansett war, and served in the ill-fated Canada expedition from July to Nov. 21, 1690. He was a subscriber for the first meeting-house in Lex. 1692, and was clerk of the precinct eight or ten consecutive years. He enjoyed in a great degree the confidence of his townsmen, who conferred upon him with a liberal hand their temporary honors. He was chosen, at their first organization as a town, first selectman, treasurer, and clerk — to which offices he was reëlected on the following year. He served many years as Treasurer, and filled almost every town office from time to time. He was also a prominent member of the church to which he was admitted Dec. 7, 1718.

THE BRIGHAM FAMILY.

There has been a family of the name of Brigham in Lexington, the extinction of which is so remarkable as to deserve notice.

AARON BRIGHAM b. 1785, son of Ithamar Brigham, of Marlboro', m. 1808, Comfort Valentine, by whom he had three children, Catharine, William, and Sophia. Catharine was an invalid, and for years could not dress herself, or get off from her bed without help. Her father, after doing business in Boston, and acquiring a comfortable property, purchased a small farm, and came to Lex. in 1853, hoping that the country air might prove beneficial to his feeble daughter. Mr. and Mrs. Brigham were very domestic, and seemed to make the comfort of their invalid daughter the great object of their care; and the daughter often expressed the hope that she should not survive her parents. Though Mr. Brigham enjoyed good health for a man of his years, he was taken down with a fever, and d. Oct. 3, 1863, aged 78 years. His wife d. suddenly Dec. 19, 1863, aged 80 years; and Catharine, the invalid daughter, as if she had nothing on earth to live for, d. Dec. 29th of the same year, aged 54 years. Thus, in less than three months, the whole family in Lex. became extinct.

WILLIAM BRIGHAM b. Mar. 27, 1805, came to Lex. about 1830. He m. Aug. 4, 1835, Abby Ann Muzzey, dau. of Rev. William and Anna Muzzey. He is a dea. of the Unitarian church, and takes a lively interest in religious affairs. They have but one child, Laura Muzzey, b. July 20, 1836.

Dea. Brigham is a son of Elijah and Mary (Gleason) Brigham, of Sudbury, who had a family of eleven children. Elijah was born Oct. 13, 1776, and was a direct descendant from John Brigham, the second son of Thomas who came to this country in 1635, in the ship Susan & Ellyn, and settled in Wat.

THE BROWN FAMILY.

The name of Brown is so common, that in tracing the line of family descent, we are in great danger of confounding one person with another, and of becoming bewildered among the William Browns and John Browns, as we should be if we fell into the labyrinths of the John Smiths. But being favored by the labors of one of the family, I have been materially aided in giving a connected view of the Lex. Browns. The original ancestor of this family, who came to this country, was

- 1 JOHN BROWN, who was baptized at Hawkedon, Eng. Oct. 11, 1601. He was son of John, an elder brother of Richard Brown; he arrived in New England in the ship Lion, Sept. 16, 1632, and settled in Wat. He was ad. freeman in 1634, and d. June, 1636, aged 36. By his wife Dorothy, he had three children, one of whom must have been born abroad.

- 1- 2 †John, b. in England, 1631. 3 Hannah, b. Sept. 8, 1634.
 4 Mary, b. Mar. 24, 1636.

- 1-2- JOHN BROWN, m. Apr. 24, 1655, Esther, or as it is sometimes written, Hester Makepeace, of Boston. They had eleven children—the first four of whom were born in Camb. and the remaining seven in Marlborough, to which place he had removed. He sold out his place in Marl. to Thomas Rice, and removed to Falmouth, and from thence to Wat. His Will, dated at Wat. Nov. 20, 1697, in which he is designated as "late of Falmouth," mentions his wife Hester; sons John, Thomas, Daniel, and Joseph; dau. Deborah Meacham; sons-in-law John Gustin, John Adams, Thomas Darby, and John Hartshorne.
- 2- 5 Joseph, b. Feb. 8, 1656; killed by a cart Sept. 24, 1671.
 6 Elizabeth, b. Mar. 26, 1657. 7 Sarah, b. July 8, 1661.
 8 Mary, b. Dec. 19, 1662. 9 John, b. Nov. 27, 1664.
 10 Hester, b. and d. 1667. 10½ Ruth, b. Dec. 8, 1668.
 11 Thomas, b. 1669. 12 Daniel, b. 1671.
 13 Deborah, b. 1673; m. — Meacham.
 14 Abigail, b. 1675.
 15 †Joseph, b. 1677; d. Jan. 11, 1764, aged 86.
- 2-15- JOSEPH BROWN m. in Wat. Nov. 15, 1699, Ruhamah Wellington, dau. of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Sweetman) Wellington, of that place. He probably settled at Wat. Farms, (now Weston,) as he sold a place there in 1709, soon after which he removed to Lex. On the 31st of May, 1713, he and his wife were ad. to the ch. in Lex. and a few weeks after one of their children was baptized. He was a prominent member of the ch. and was chosen dea. in 1727, which office he held till his death in 1764. His services were also appreciated in the town. While in Wat. he was constable, selectman, and town clerk; and after he came to Lex. he was called to fill similar offices, being assessor, and selectman. He d. in Lex. Jan. 11, 1764, aged 86. She d.  River, and gave his name to the place, viz., Brownville.
 46 Solomon, b. Jan 15, 1757. He was not only one of the heroes of the 19th of Apr. 1775, but he commenced his patriotie labors the day preceeding. He was the first who brought the intelligence into Lex. that a number of British officers were on their way from Boston; and when they had passed above Lex. he was one who volunteered to follow them and watch their movements. He was taken prisoner and detained several hours on the evening of the 18th, which of course prepared his mind for the events of the following day. Subsequently he removed to Vt.

THE BUCKMAN FAMILY.

Though the Buckmans were somewhat connected with the history of Lexington in 1775, they were not among the early settlers. When they came to Lex. I have not ascertained with certainty. John Buckman was in the town, and was chosen to the office of hog constable in 1740, which might imply that he had just settled in the world, and the date of the birth of his first child rather confirms us in that opinion. From what place he came, I am not able to say; but as the Buckmans, or Bucknams, as the name was at first generally spelled, were very numerous in Malden, it is highly probable that the Lex. Buckmans originated there.

1 JOHN BUCKMAN m. 1739, Mary Fiske, dau. of Dr. Robert. They were ad. to the ch. in Lex. May 15, 1745. He d. Feb. 17, 1763, aged 51; she d. Feb. 10, 1768, in the 48th year of her age.

- 1- 2 Mary, b. Dec. 27, 1740; m. Feb. 16, 1764, Francis Brown.
 3 †John, b. Apr. 2, 1745; m. July 21, 1768, Ruth Stone.
 4 Sarah, b. Jan. 3, 1748; m. June 12, 1766, Jonas Stone.
 5 Elizabeth, b. Jan. 11, 1753. 6 Ruth, b. Dec. 30, 1755.

1-3- JOHN BUCKMAN, m. July 21, 1768, Ruth Stone, dau. of Samuel and Jane Stone. He resided in the house now occupied by Rufus Merriam, which he kept as a public house. It was here that Capt. Parker, and his patriotic men assembled on the evening of the 18th of April, 1775; and from this house they issued on the approach of the British the next morning. Shots were fired from this house upon the British, after they had attacked the Americans upon the Common, and some of the clapboards to this day give evidence that the fire was returned. John Buckman stands enrolled as a member of Capt. Parker's company. He had but one child by his first wife, who d. Sept. 8, 1778, aged 33. He m. as a second wife, Sept. 28, 1784, Sarah Weld, who d. Nov. 16, 1801, aged 43. He d. Dec. 21, 1792, aged 48.

 8 Sarah, b. Feb. 19, 1785. 9 John, b. May 7, 1787.
 10 Henry, b. Aug. 6, 1788. 11 Polly, b. Apr. 19, 1790.

There were several other Buckmans mentioned in our records at an earlier date than those mentioned above; but it is doubtful whether they resided here permanently. We will give the record as we find it.

Paul Buckman, bap. Apr. 26, 1734.

Benjamin, son of Joseph Buckman, bap. June 12, 1737.

Jacob Buckman, m Elizabeth Munroe, Jan. 1, 1787. They had Bowen, b. Apr. 19, 1788; and Dennis and Willis, twins, b. May 13, 1794.

THE BURBANK FAMILY.

Col. Burbank came to Lexington in 1801. His father, Samuel Burbank, had two wives, by whom he had twelve children. His first wife died; and he married Eunice Kendall, of Sherborn. She was a daughter of Benjamin Kendall of that town, who originated in Lex. being a son of Thomas Kendall, who resided in this town. Samuel Burbank was a soldier of the Revolution. He was a Lieutenant at the Battle of Bunker Hill. He afterwards commanded a company which marched to Rhode Island, where he served under General Sullivan, for whom his oldest son was named. After the birth of Sullivan, he moved from Holliston to Fitchburg, and subsequently to Cavendish, Vt. where he died. Daniel, one of his sons, was killed accidentally at a military muster in Westminster.

- 1 SULLIVAN BURBANK, the oldest son of Samuel and Eunice (Kendall) Burbank, was b. in Holliston, Oct. 8, 1776, and m. 1803, Betsey, dau. of James Brown, of Lex. He came to Lex. 1801, and opened a store in the village. In 1812 he received a commission as Lieutenant of infantry in the United States service. He acted at first as a recruiting officer in Lex. and Boston; but marched in August to Plattsburg, and on the winter following was again detailed on the recruiting service. In April, 1813, he marched with about one hundred recruits first to Greenbush, N. Y., and then to Sackett's Harbor; and arrived at that post just in season to assist in repelling the attack of Sir George Provost, on the 29th of May. Remaining at Sackett's Harbor during the summer, he moved with the army under Gen. Wilkinson down the St. Lawrence in November, 1813, and was in the action at Cristler's Fields on the 11th of that month, and went into winter quarters at French Mills. Early in the spring, he returned to Sackett's Harbor, and thence to Buffalo. On the 3d of July, 1814, he crossed with the troops into Canada, was in the battle of Chippeway on the 5th of that month, and at the more sanguinary battle of Niagara on the 25th. Being in Col. Miller's regiment, he was one of the gallant spirits who stormed the enemy's battery, which commanded the field, and thus turned the fortunes of that desperate struggle. In this charge, rendered memorable by the noble daring of the regiment, and the modesty of Col. Miller, who, when asked if he could silence that battery, meekly replied, "I will try, Sir," Capt. Burbank received a severe wound in the shoulder. For his bravery and good conduct in that action, Capt. B. received the brevet rank of Major.

On the reduction of the army in 1815, consequent upon the termination of the war, Brevt. Maj. Burbank was retained in the service, a Captain in the 5th Regiment of infantry. On the peace establishment, Maj. B. has served at almost every part on the frontier from the St. Lawrence to the Sabine. He was stationed first at Detroit, then at Fort Gratiot at the outlet of Lake Huron, then at Fort Snelling at the junction of the Minnesota and Mississippi, under the gallant Colonel in honor of whom the Post was named. He was then detached to Fort Armstrong, (Rock Island,) where he had the command about four years. In 1828, he was stationed at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., thence he was given the command at Fort Mackinaw. About this time he was promoted to the rank of Major in the 7th Regiment, and ordered to Fort Gibson, Arkansas; thence to Fort Towson on the Red River; thence to Fort Jessup, La., and thence again to Fort Gibson. At this time he was promoted to the rank of Lieut. Col. and ordered to Fort Winnebago, near Portage City, Wis. After this Col. Burbank was ordered to New York to act as general superintendent of the recruiting service for the army. Feeling the infirmities of age, Col. Burbank, in 1839, resigned his commission, and being honorably discharged, he retired to private life. He was highly respected as a man and a citizen. He represented the town of Lex. in the General Court in 1846, and 1847. He died Sept. 30, 1862, aged 86. She d. Mar., 1860, aged 77.

Rachel Carly, an insane woman, had a guardian, and was taken care of by the town. She d. Sept. 11, 1725. Sarah Carly m. Oct. 28, 1714, Richard Arms.

THE CHANDLER FAMILY.

The Chandlers, though a prominent family in Lexington for the last century, were not among the early settlers of the town. They came here from Con. about 1757. An impression has prevailed in the family that they descended from John Chandler, one of the early proprietors of Con.; but I am satisfied that this is not the fact.

The Chandlers who came to Lex. were from a different stock. Shattuck, in his valuable history of the town of Concord, tells us that the Chandlers of that town were the descendants of Roger Chandler, who was one of a co. most of whom were from Plymouth, which had a grant of land in Con. in 1658; that Roger Chandler was employed by Dolor Davis to build a house there. Dolor Davis was originally from the Plymouth Colony, and represented Barnstable in the General Court of that colony. He afterward came to Cambridge, and was one of the original proprietors of Groton. Dolor Davis was the ancestor of a large number of Davises, among whom was the late Governor Davis of Worcester.

Who Roger Chandler was I cannot state with certainty. We find in the early records of Plymouth Colony the names of Dolor Davis, Roger Chandler, John Chandler, Edmund Chandler, and Samuel Chandler. The latter was in 1637 warned to appear before the court, to answer for the heinous crime of "shooting off three guns in the night tyme, as if it were an alarm." These Chandlers had grants of land in and about Duxbury, where that name has been common. Roger must have d. before 1665, as the Court of that year made a grant of land to his children. "he being deceased." The Roger who settled in Con. was undoubtedly a son of some of these Chandlers, and most likely of Roger, of Plymouth; and he probably came to Con. with Dolor Davis, the old friend of his father.

But be this as it may, the Con. records clearly show that Roger was the ancestor of the Con. Chandlers, and that the Lex. Chandlers were a branch of the same stock. They were considerably numerous, and were highly respected in Con.

1 ROGER CHANDLER was one of a company of twenty persons, mostly from Plymouth, which had a grant of land in Con. in 1658. He m. in 1671, Mary Simonds, of Con. He d. 1717; and she d. 1728. They left several children. In his will, dated 1705, and proved 1717, he speaks of Samuel as his only son, and of his daughter Mary Heald, Abigail Brown, and of his youngest dau. Hepzibah Jones.

1-2 Mary, b. Mar. 3, 1672; m. John Heald, of Con.

3 †Samuel, b. Mar. 3, 1673; m. 1695, Dorcas Buss.

6 Hepzibah, b. —; m. first, — Jones, second, Joseph Fletcher.

1-3- SAMUEL CHANDLER m. Dec. 11, 1695, Dorcas Buss. He d. 1745. His will, proved that year, mentions sons Samuel, James, and Joseph, and dau. Mary, Huldah, and Rebecca. He was engaged in the land speculation so common at that day,—being one of the petitioners, in 1726, for the large tract lying between Turkey Hill (now Lunenburg) and Rutland. He was also one of the proprietors of the town of Grafton. He was town treasurer from 1723 to 1727, and representative from 1729 to 1736.

3-7 Elizabeth, b. Apr. 6, 1696; d. Oct. 18, 1720, unm.

13 Rebecca, b. Dec. 2, 1711; m. — Davis.

14 James, b. Aug. 28, 1714. He m. first, in 1737, Mary Flagg; she d. and he m. second, in 1756, Mary Whittaker, of Carlisle; she d., and he m. third, in 1765, Mary Melvin. Among his children were James, Joseph, and Jonathan. James settled in New Ipswich, N. H., where he became a prominent citizen, and for thirty years was a deacon of the church. His descendants settled in different parts of the country. His son Roger settled in New Ipswich, and was the father of Rev. Seth Chandler, of Shirley. Joseph was for many years a dea. of the Con. ch., and a prominent citizen in the place. He represented the town from 1799 to 1808. He d. Jan. 19, 1813, of a cancer, aged 64.

3-10- SAMUEL CHANDLER m. Dinah — about 1730. His will, proved Nov. 17, 1754, mentions wife Dinah, sons Samuel, Jonas, Nathan, and Daniel, and dau. Elizabeth and Mary. Son John appointed executor.

JOHN CHANDLER, m. July 12, 1757, Beulah Merriam, dau. of Joseph and Mary (Brewer) Merriam, of Lex., who was b. Aug. 2, 1730. The Chandlers spoken of above were all of Con. John probably resided in that part of Con. which was included in Lincoln, when it was erected into a town in 1754, as his marriage is recorded as of Lin. He came to Lex. and erected a house on the present Lincoln st., near his father-in-law's, where he spent his days. He held a commission under Gov. Bernard as "Cornet of His Majesty's Blue Troop." His sword, holsters, and a part of his commission are preserved by the family, and were in the hands of his grandson, the late Samuel Chandler. Though he held a commission under the royal governor, he was not false to his native colony. He belonged to the Spartan band headed by Capt. Parker in 1775. He was a prominent man in town for a long period, and filled many offices. He was one of the board of selectmen in the eventful period of the Revolution, was a member of the committee of correspondence, and filled other responsible stations. He was many years treasurer of the Ministerial Fund, which he managed with great wisdom and fidelity. He d. Nov. 22, 1810, aged 79, and she d. Feb. 9, 1813, aged 83. He was ad. to the ch. 1758.

JOHN CHANDLER, m. Jan. 12, 1786, Peggy Mack, of Salem, at which place he was residing at the time; but the year following they removed to Lex. They were ad. to the ch. Jan. 9, 1791. He d. Oct. 19, 1804, aged 46; she d. Apr. 27, 1853, aged 87. He was a member of Capt. Parker's company, and was on the Common on the 19th of April. He was also in a detachment of the co. which were called to Cambridge on the 10th of May, and in another detachment which marched to Cambridge on the 17th of June, 1775. In 1779, John Chandler, Jr., Joseph Loring, and Burdoo, a colored man from Lex., entered the marine service under Commodore Tucker. Being on the southern coast, they were included in the capitulation of Charleston, S. C., by Gen. Lincoln, in 1780, and were confined as prisoners of war until they were exchanged. After enduring severe sufferings from confinement and want of provisions, they were exchanged, and Chandler and Loring, without money, and almost without clothing, wended their way as best they could to their native home, depending upon the charity of the people, and reached Lex. in a destitute and wretched condition, after having been absent about one year. Such severe trials, though hardly known to the present generation, were common in those days, and show the price our fathers paid for freedom. Such sacrifices on their part should inspire their descendants with true patriotism.

After the close of the war, he was actively engaged in the militia; was elected captain in 1790, and promoted to the office of major in 1796. He was one of the selectmen in 1796, '97, '98.

He was ardently devoted to the military, was chosen Captain when he was 23, and rose to the rank of Lieut. Col. and obtained his discharge when he was only 28 — a thing uncommon, especially at that period. He had but one child, viz. Sarah Chandler, b. Feb. 27, 1816, who is now living. His wid. d. Dec. 1863, aged 77 years.
- 23-30- DANIEL CHANDLER, m. May 19, 1817, Susanna Downing, dau. of Samuel and Susanna (Brown) Downing. He entered the U. S. service as an ensign in Mar. 1812, and on the breaking out of the war of 1812, marched in August to the frontier in Col. Tuttle's regiment; wintered in 1812-13 at French Mills, and was at Plattsburg in 1813. While on a hunting excursion he was severely wounded by the accidental discharge of a gun, and being unable to perform active duty, he was detailed on the recruiting service till 1814, when he returned to the frontier. On the return of peace he resigned his commission, and returned to Mass. While attached to the army he was promoted to a Lieutenantcy. He was five years superintendent of the Farm School on Thompson's Island in the harbor of Boston; and was afterwards appointed superintendent of the House of Industry, and also of the House of Reformation in the city of Boston. He erected the house in Lex. where J. C. Blasdel now resides, and was about to move into it, when he was attacked by the ship fever, and d. June 16, 1847, aged 59. His wid. d. He has served in California and in divers positions through the rebellion.

SAMUEL CHANDLER, m. Oct. 29, 1818, Lydia Muzzey, dau. of Amos and Lydia (Boutelle) Muzzey. She d. Aug. 12, 1830, and he m. Sept. 11, 1834, Abigail Muzzey, sister to his first wife. She d. April 24, 1840. He had 5 children by his first wife, and 3 by his last. Having rather a hereditary taste for military matters, he entered the service of the United States as an Ensign in 1814, and repaired to the cantonment at Pittsfield; from thence he was detailed to conduct a body of British prisoners to Canada on exchange, and returned to Pittsfield. Soon after, the troops at that place were ordered to the Niagara frontier and arrived at Buffalo the latter part of July, the day before the battle of Lundy's Lane. But though this corps were not upon the lines in season to take part with the gallant Scott, Porter, and Ripley, on the field of Bridgewater, they were in season to pass through another fiery ordeal more trying than any single battle however sanguinary. They were ordered to Fort Erie, which was early in August besieged by the British under General Drummond, and kept in a close state of investment about two months. During this period there were two desperate battles in which Lieut. Chandler participated — an assault by Drummond upon the Fort on the 15th of August, and a sortie from the Fort on the 17th of September, which induced Drummond to raise the siege. The severity of the engagements may be understood from the fact that the American loss was returned at 595, and that of the enemy about 1700, including nearly 400 taken prisoners. After some slight skirmishes on the Niagara frontier, the army were ordered to proceed by forced marches to Sackett's Harbor, from an apprehension that that post might be attacked by the enemy. On the return of peace, Lieut. Chandler was discharged, after a short but active and trying campaign, in which for five months in succession he and others never slept but with their clothes on. Though he held a commission as Lieut., during the greater part of the campaign he had the command of a co., and during his term of service was promoted from a 3d to 1st Lieut. He was subsequently Major General in the Militia, and held the office of Sheriff of the County ten years. He also represented the County in the Senate of the State, and held the office of Justice of the Peace and Trial Justice. He was many years an active member of the Middlesex Agricultural Society. He d. July 20, 1867, in his 72d year.

- 34-54 John L., b. Oct. 6, 1820; m. Abby M. Kimball, dau. of Porter Kimball, of Fitchburg. He resides at Memphis. He was in Mo. at the breaking out of the rebellion, when he entered the service, where he continued till the troops were discharged. He commenced as Lieut., was in several severe battles, and for gallantry was advanced from time to time, till he reached the rank of Lieut. Col. He was on Fremont's staff, and afterwards Provost Marshal at Little Rock, Ark.

- 56 Almira M., b. Feb. 12, 1824.
- 57 Amos M., b. Dec. 21, 1825; d. Aug. 11, 1836.
- 58 Joseph, b. July 29, 1829; m. Oct. 27, 1865, Eleanor Ball.
- 59 Henry L., b. Oct. 31, 1835. He went to Calcutta, where he spent some 8 years. Was there during the rebellion against British authority.
- 60 Samuel E., b. Sept. 2, 1837; m. 1864, Laura J. Alley.
- 61 Edward T., b. Feb. 28, 1840.

Joseph, Samuel, and Edward, were in the service of the U. S. in the late rebellion. Joseph was taken prisoner at the 2d Bull Run battle. Samuel was wounded and taken prisoner at the 1st Bull Run battle, and was carried to Richmond, where he was confined about 6 mo. He reënlisted into the 12th Reg., was made Quartermaster Sergeant, and was discharged to accept the office of 1st Lieut. in the 7th Mo. Cavalry, and served as Adjutant. He should have been mentioned among the Lex. promotions in p. 308.

WILLIAM CHANDLER, m. Oct. 17, 1813, Elizabeth Harrington, dau. of Nathan and Elizabeth (Phelps) Harrington, of Woburn. Though Nathan Harrington resided within the bounds of Woburn, he was of the Lex. family, and his associations were with the Lex. people. She d. Sept. 30, 1847, aged 59, and he m. June 15, 1848, Mrs. Mary La Bart, of Lowell. She was a Munroe of the Lex. stock, and a granddau. of John Munroe. With a sort of family instinct he enlisted into the Rifle company, and in 1826 became the commander of that co. He has filled almost every office in the gift of the town, having been selectman, and many years assessor. He has represented the town in the Legislature, and has been for many years one of the principal magistrates in the place.

NATHAN CHANDLER, m. Dec. 7, 1821, Maria H. Mead, dau. of Josiah Meade. He resides on the old Tidd place on Hancock st. where his grandfather Tidd resided. He has no children. True to the spirit of the family, he was somewhat devoted to the military, having been captain of the Rifle company.

THE CHILD OR CHILDS FAMILY.

The family of this name have been very numerous in Watertown, Waltham, and several other neighboring towns; but none of them were permanently in Lex. till about the middle of the last century. Abijah Child appears to have been the first who permanently located in the place. He came from Walt. about the time of his marriage in 1763, and was a descendant of one of the early settlers of Wat., of which Walt. was then a part. Joseph Child, of Wat., m. July 3, 1654, Sarah Platts, by whom he had several children, among whom was Joseph, b. June 6, 1659. Joseph Child was a carpenter by trade, and m. Sept. 23, 1680, Sarah Norcross. She dying, he m. July 25, 1705, Ruth Maddock. He had eight children, four sons and four dau. His youngest son, Isaac, m. July 2, 1729, Eunice Pierce. She d. Sept 19, 1793; he d. Feb. 7, 1789. They had eight children, five sons and three dau. Their fifth son, Abijah, settled in the south part of Lex.

1 ABIJAH CHILD m. Oct. 27, 1763, Sarah Cutler, dau. of Benj. and Mary Cutler, of Lex. The record of the marriage speaks of them as "both of Lex.," by which we infer that he came here, a young man, before he married. He and his wife were ad. to the ch. Oct. 14, 1764. Mr. Child was a respectable citizen, and filled several town offices. They had seven children, and were called to pass through a scene of affliction which rarely falls to the lot of parents. Six of their children were taken from them by death in the short space of twelve days. These children were interred in the old grave yard, and one long stone tells the sad tale of human mortality and parental affliction, well calculated to produce sober reflection and awaken sympathetic emotions in every parental breast. He d. Aug. 30, 1808; she d. Mar. 3, 1812; he in his seventy-first, and she in her seventy-eighth year.

 3 Eunice, b. May 15, 1766; d. Aug. 23, 1778.
 4 Abijah, b. Aug. 1, 1767; d. Aug. 29, 1778.
 5 Abigail, b. June 18, 1771; d. Aug. 29, 1778.
 6 Benjamin, b. Nov. 16, 1773; d. Aug. 24, 1778.
 7 Moses, b. Sept. 1, 1776; d. Aug. 19, 1778.
 8 Isaac, b. Oct. 11, 1777; d. Nov. 20, 1811.

This branch of the family became extinct.

There have been Childs in town since that period, who belong to the same original family. Some of them have spelt their name with an s, Childs, but they are without doubt from the same stock. As in the preceding family, Joseph Childs, of Wat., by wife Sarah Platts, had Joseph, b. 1659, who m. 1680, Sarah Norcross, and had Joseph, b. June 21, 1685. He m. Mary Thatcher, and had, among other children, Jonathan, b. July 3, 1714, who by his wife Elizabeth had five children. Joseph, his youngest son, b. Dec. 1761, m. Oct. 3, 1782, Lucy Parminster. Moses, son of Joseph and Lucy, b. June 13, 1787, m. Aug. 5, 1810, Mary B., dau. of Thomas and Mary (Ball) Williams, of Marlborough, b. Apr. 4, 1786. Thomas Williams was a direct descendant from Abraham Williams, one of the proprietors of Marl. Moses Childs d. Feb. 14, 1811, and his wife Sept. 21, 1807, each aged 51.

- 1 LUKE CARTER CHILDS, a son of Moses and Mary, was b. Mar. 16, 1811. He had one sister, Elizabeth W., b. Dec. 22, 1812. He m. Dec. 10, 1835, Rebecca A. Hale. He did business in Boston several years, and came to Lex. in 1849, and settled upon a farm. He built a neat rural cottage in a central part of his farm, which presents a fine appearance from the street.
- 1-2 Caroline R., b. Dec. 3, 1836; d. Feb. 21, 1838.
 3 Henry M., b. May 17, 1839; d. Nov. 16, 1844.
 4 Ellen R., b. Oct. 17, 1841; d. Sept. 14, 1849.
 5 Mary E., b. Sept. 19, 1843.
 6 Edward H., b. Apr. 23, 1846; d. Sept. 12, 1849.
 7 Frank C., b. Apr. 21, 1849.

There is still another Lex. family of the same name, and from the same parent stock. AUGUSTUS CHILDS, son of Isaac and Betsey Childs, of Walt., was b. Oct. 9, 1818; m. Mar. 9, 1854, Eliza Ann Blodgett, dau. of Charles and Eliza Blodgett. She d. May 20, 1865, and he m. May 10, 1867, Mary Cunningham. He had by first wife, Charles A., b. Jan. 21, 1855; d. Oct. 18, 1861. Carlton A., b. May 20, 1865.

THE CLAFLIN FAMILY.

The name of CLAFLIN scarcely appears on the records of Lex., and yet it seems that there was at an early day a family of that name in the place. Antipas Clafin and Sarah, his wife, were ad. to the ch. July 31, 1709; and the town records show that they had the following issue.

- 1-2 Sarah, b. Nov. 1, 1706. 3 Robert, b. Mar. 13, 1708.
 4 Noah, b. Apr. 12, 1710. 5 Nehemiah, b. Sept. 28, 1713.

THE CLARKE FAMILY.

We have had occasion to speak frequently of the Rev. Mr. Clarke, the devoted priest and ardent patriot, whose life and services are interwoven with the history of Lexington. We will now present a genealogical view of the family. His ancestors were respectable, and possessed those stern qualities which form the basis of the New England character, to which we are indebted for much that is valuable in society, even at the present day.

- 1 HUGH CLARKE, the ancestor of Rev. Jonas, came to this country early, and settled in Wat., where he had three children. He afterwards moved to Rox. He was admitted a freeman May 30, 1660, and was a member of the An. and Hon. Artillery Co. 1666. He d. in Rox. July 20, 1693. His wife, Elizabeth, d. 1692.
- 1-2 †John, b. in Wat. Oct., 1641.
 3 Uriah, b. June 5, 1644; was made freeman in 1685, and d. in Framingham, Feb. 24, 1725.
 4 Elizabeth, b. June 31, 1648; m. Joseph Buckminster, of Rox.
- 1-2- JOHN CLARKE resided first in Rox. and afterwards moved to Newton. He probably had three wives, though the name of the first

I am unable to give. He m. second, Lydia Buckminster in 1680, and m. third, Elizabeth Norman in 1684.

- 2- 5 †John, of Newton, m. 1697, Ann Pierce, of Dorchester.
- 6 William, b. June 20, 1686; d. 1737.
- 7 Ann, b. 1688; m. Apr. 24, 1712, John Billings, of Con.
- 8 Martha, b. 1690. 8½ Esther, b. 1692.
- 9 Hannah, b. 1693. 9½ Moses, b. 1695.

2-5- JOHN CLARKE m. Ann Pierce, of Dorchester, in 1697.

- 5-10 Mary, b. 1698.
- 11 John, b. Sept. 22, 1700; d. in Walt. May 31, 1773.
- 12 †Thomas, b. 1704; m. 1728, Mary Brown; d. at Hopkinton, June 30, 1775.
- 13 Isaac, b. 1707; m. first, Experience Wilson; moved to Hop., had a second wife and numerous children.
- 14 Atherton, m. Patience ———; settled in Hop. and had children.

5-12- THOMAS CLARKE m. 1728, Mary Bowen, b. Dec. 1704. He d. at Hop. 1775, to which place he and his two brothers had removed. He was a captain when that office gave distinction and commanded respect.

- 12-15 Peter, b. 1729.
- 16 †Jonas, b. Dec. 14, 1730; grad. H. C. 1752; settled at Lex.
- 17 Thomas, b. June 8, 1732.
- 18 Pennel, b. Mar. 18, 1734; d. 1736.
- 19 Mary, b. 1736; d. same year. 20 Mary, b. Oct. 11, 1737.
- 21 Pennel, b. July 5, 1739; d. 1742.
- 22 Sarah, b. and d. 1742.

12-16- JONAS CLARKE m. Sept. 21, 1757, Lucy Bowes. She was a dau. of Rev. Nicholas Bowes, of Bed. Her mother was Lucy Hancock, dau. of Rev. John Hancock, of Lex. Mr. Clarke was ordained at Lex. Nov. 5, 1755. In taking charge of the church and society in Lex. he became the immediate successor of his grandfather on the side of his wife. He d. Nov. 15, 1805, in the seventy-fifth year of his age, and the fifty-first of his ministry. She d. Apr. 27, 1789.

We have spoken so fully of the life and services of Rev. Jonas Clarke in the civil and ecclesiastical history of the town, that it is unnecessary to extend a notice of him in this place. He had a family of twelve children, several of whom were distinguished in themselves and descendants, as will be seen by the following brief sketch.

- 16-23 Thomas, b. July 6, and d. Nov. 13, 1758.
- 24 Thomas, b. Sept. 27, 1759; he moved from Lex. to Boston, and engaged in trade. He m. Sally Conant. In 1809 he was chosen town clerk, and continued in that office thirteen years. In 1822, Boston was converted into a city, and Mr. Clarke was chosen Clerk of the Common Council, an office which he held till his death, which happened in 1832. He held the two offices of town clerk and clerk of the common council twenty-three consecutive years, and died in office, in the seventy-third year of his age. The President of the common council, at a meeting of that board, June 1, 1832, announced the death of Thomas Clarke, Esq., and paid the following tribute to his memory: "His private virtues and his long-trying and faithful public services are too well known and too highly appreciated by you to require any eulogium from me. He - has gone down to the grave in the fullness of years, and his memory is honored by the universal respect of his fellow-citizens."

In 1834, he returned to Boston, where he is now living in his 89th year. Mr. Clarke long held a commission as Justice and Notary. He has had but two children, both of whom are now living. Henry Grafton was born May 14, 1814. He studied medicine, and resides in Boston, occupying a good position in his profession. Jonas Bowen, b. Jan. 16, 1816, was grad. at Dartmouth, 1839. He entered the ministry, was first settled in Conn.; but his health failing him, he returned to Massachusetts, and was settled in Swampscot.

From this glance at the subject, it will be seen that but few families can boast of distinction such as has fallen to the lot of Rev. Jonas Clarke's.

OTHER PERSONS BY THE NAME OF CLARKE.

There were several persons by the name of Clarke in the town at different times, whose lineage we have not ascertained. In 1725, the selectmen laid out a "way for the accommodation of the farms that Daniel Hoar and Judah Clarke live on." In the earliest tax bill now extant, 1729, we find Judah Clarke and Judah Clarke, Jr., taxed, the former having two houses, and the latter one. They lived in a part of the town now included in Lin.

We will give what our records contain in relation to the Clarkes, without attempting to classify them.

Mary Clarke, of James and Jerusha, b. July 19, 1733.

Ruth Clarke, admitted to the ch. by a recommendation from the Pastor of Rowley, Nov, 7, 1725.

Mary Clarke, ad. to the ch. Feb. 8, 1728.

 6 Elizabeth, bap. Feb. 1706. 7 Abigail, bap. Oct. 26, 1707.

1-3- DAVID COMEE m. Ruhama Brown? We have found no record of the marriage, but presume it was about 1719, from the birth of their first child, and from the other significant fact, that he was, in 1720, called to the responsible office of looking after the swine — a custom long prevailing of giving this honor to a newly married man. She was ad. to the ch. Aug. 14, 1720, and d. 1730. He m. second, Sarah ———, by whom he had most of his children. The record of the family is not perfect. It seems that they buried at least two children in early infancy, one in 1720, and one in 1730. Whether they were some which are mentioned below is not perfectly clear. Sarah, his second wife, was ad. to the ch. May 28, 1738.

- 3-8 David, b. July 30, 1719; d. 1720. 9 John, bap. Sept. 26, 1725.

 8 Ruth, b. Sept. 23, 1714.

CROSBY, is a name which appears a few times upon our records; but there appears to have been no permanent family of that name in Lex.

Sampson Crosby, son of Sampson and Lucy, b. June 5, 1761.
Joel, " " " " " " " " b. Feb. 9, 1763.
 George Adams and Elizabeth Crosby, both of Lex. m. Nov. 18, 1762.
 Ephraim Cook, Camb. and Hannah Crosby, of Lex. m. Jan. 20, 1778.

They may have belonged to the Crosby family living in Bedford. Some of the name have been in town temporarily at later periods.

THE CROWNINSHIELD FAMILY.

- 1 ABRAHAM W. CROWNINSHIELD, son of William and Sarah (Plumer) Crowninshield, was b. in Portland, Dec. 16, 1801. He m. Nov. 9, 1823, Sarah Byles Peters, b. in Portland, July 16, 1804. They settled in Charlestown, where their children were born. He was engaged in the furniture and upholstery business. In 1846 he came to Lex. and purchased a small farm, still continuing his business at Charlestown some years. He has filled the office of assessor several years, and has represented the district in the General Court.
- 1- 2 Sarah, b. Aug. 28, 1824; d. Sept. 20, 1824.
- 3 Caleb S., b. Nov. 17, 1825; m. Jan. 1, 1862, Julia H. Christy. They r. in Brighton.
- 4 Mary P., b. Feb. 3, 1828; m. Sept. 3, 1850, William H. H. Reed, of Lex. They have had several children, some of whom they have buried. They r. in Charlestown.

- 8 Sarah C., b. Apr. 23, 1839; m. June 20, 1865, Henry M. Loring, of Charlestown.

THE CUTLER FAMILY.

The Cutlers, always somewhat numerous in Lex., were among the earliest settlers in the place. They came to Lex. from Wat., and were the descendants of James Cutler. There is a tradition in the family, and English records, if they do not confirm, rather favor the position, that Sir Gervase Cutler, who married a daughter of the Duke of Bridgewater, was the ancestor of the Cutlers who came to America.

1 But be this as it may, we feel assured that as early as 1635, JAMES CUTLER was in Wat., and was an original grantee of land in the northerly part of Wat., on the road to Belmont, and in 1649, James Cutler and Nathaniel Bowman purchased of Edward Goffe 200 acres of land in Cambridge, adjoining Rock-meadow, near the Wat. line. In 1651, he sold his share to Bowman for £39. This was probably the land on which Bowman settled, near the present line of Arlington. It is probable that Cutler, and perhaps Bowman, moved from Wat. about this date. Cutler settled at Camb. Farms, near Concord, now Bed., line. A part of this farm was owned till recently by the wid. of John and heirs of Leonard Cutler. His house was situated in the lot back of the present house,—the door step and appearances of the cellar still remain. This must have been one of the first houses erected in the precinct.

He was b. about 1606, and probably married before he came to this country. His wife, Anna, was buried Sept. 30, 1644; and he m. second, Mar. 9, 1645, Mary King, wid. of Thomas King, of Wat., who d. Dec. 7, 1654. He m. third, Phebe Page, dau. of John, about 1662. He d. May 17, 1694, aged about 88. His will, dated Nov. 24, 1684, presented by his sons John and Thomas, and proved Aug. 20, 1694, mentions children James, Thomas, John, John Collar, Richard Park's wife, John Parmenter's wife, Sarah Wait, Mary Johnson, Hannah Winter, Joanna Russell (Philip's wife), Jemima, Samuel, and Phebe. "This list includes two children of my wife, formerly wife of Thomas King, one of whom was Mary Johnson." (The Mary here alluded to was b. Feb. 2, 1643, and was m. Oct. 19, 1659, to John Johnson.)

- 1-2 †James, b. Nov. 6, 1635; m. June 15, 1665, Lydia Wright.

He was a subscriber for the erection of the first meeting house, in 1692, and was chosen one of the assessors in 1694; and in 1700, when the parish performed what was formerly considered a very important duty, that of "seating the meeting house," David Russell, John Mason, and Thomas Cutler, "were plast in y^e second seat in y^e front gallereye." He was a valuable and honored citizen, and was often employed in town business,—was an assessor, constable, and selectman. He was also honored in the public records with the title of lieutenant, no mean designation at that day. He d. July 13, 1722.

- 7-22 Abigail, b. Oct. 31, 1674.
 23 Thomas, b. Jan. 19, 1678; probably the Thomas who had a son James, bap. Mar. 17, 1706.
 24 Mary, b. Mar. 15, 1681; m. about 1698, William Munroe, Jr., of Lex.
 25 Hannah, b. May 7, 1683; d. Feb. 25, 1704.

 28 †Benjamin, b. in Lex. July 4, and bap. in Wat. Oct. 3, 1697.

1-12- JOHN CUTLER m. Jan. 1, 1694, Mary Stearns, dau. of Isaac and Sarah (Beers) Stearns, who was b. Oct. 8, 1663. He owned the covenant Nov. 1, 1702, when four of his children were baptized. He was in the place, and was taxed in 1693 for the purchase of the ministerial land, and was assigned a place "in y^e front gallerye," in 1700, when they seated the meeting house. He must have resided on what is now Weston street, over the brook, on the southerly side of the old Concord turnpike. As early as 1714, John Merriam and Matthew Bridge were appointed a committee to lay a road to accommodate Nathaniel Stone, Joseph Stone, Robert Merriam, and John Cutler; and the description of the road leaves no doubt of the general situation of John Cutler's residence. It ran from Nathaniel Stone's house by various bounds to the "great rock," thence across the brook to Cutler's house. He d. Sept. 21, 1714; she d. Feb. 24, 1733.

- 93-111- CURTIS CUTLER was grad. at H. C., 1829, studied theology, and was settled in Gardner, Oct. 30, 1833; m. May 19, 1835, Clarissa W. Morrell, dau. of Ambrose Morrell, Lex. He left Gardner, 1839, and was installed at Peterboro', N. H., Jan. 30, 1840, as colleague with Abiel Abbot, D. D. In 1848, he left Peterboro' and moved to Lex. In 1850, in consequence of a bronchial affection, he gave up his profession, and engaged in mercantile pursuits with the firm of Wm. Underwood & Co., Boston. In 1855, he represented the town in the General Court, and in the autumn of that year moved to Camb. To him we are indebted for much of the information concerning this family.
- 111-143 Sarah M., born in Gardner, Apr. 14, 1838.

- It has been difficult in some cases to distinguish the name from that of Cutter, which is found in a few instances upon the Lex. records. There are several other families mentioned on Lex. records, but probably they resided there only temporarily.

THE CUTTER FAMILY.

RICHARD CUTTER, of Cambridge, ad. freeman, June 2, 1641; d. June 18, 1693, aged about 72. He had two wives, by whom he had fourteen children, among whom was NATHANIEL, b. Dec. 11, 1663.

He m. Oct. 8, 1688, Mary Fillebrown. She d. May 14, 1713, and he married Elizabeth. He had seven children, among whom was JOHN CUTTER, bap. Apr. 23, 1704. What time he came into Lex. we are not able to say. His name is found on our first tax bill extant, viz., 1729. His name continues on the tax bill till 1747, when we find the name of wid. Cutter. He probably d. 1747. He m. Rachel —, and had several children. Among them were Abigail, b. Aug. 15, 1735, and Benjamin, b. Apr. 24, 1738.

THE DAMON FAMILY.

There have been a few persons of this name in town from time to time, but no permanent residents till recently.

JOHN DAMON, b. in England, 1621, came to this country from Reading, Eng., and settled in Reading, Mass., where he was dea. of the ch. and where he d. Apr. 8, 1708. He had six children. Samuel, his son, b. June 23, 1656, m. Mary —, who d. Nov. 29, 1727, aged 71, and he d. June 12, 1724, aged 68. They had nine children. Ebenezer, son of Saml. b. Aug. 9, 1686; m. Elizabeth —, and had seven children. David, son of Ebenezer, b. Mar. 2, 1710; m. Apr. 7, 1731, Esther Gowing, and had ten children. Benjamin, son of David, b. June 6, 1759; m. Dec. 13, 1782, Anar Pratt. He settled in Ashby, where he d. Sept. 24, 1832, aged 73; she d. Oct. 14, 1838, aged 84. They had eight children. Isaac, second son of Benj., b. Mar. 31, 1785; m. Lucy Houghton, who d. and he m. Ruth Shattuck. He d. Apr. 1848, aged 63. He had three children by his first wife, who d. Apr. 20, 1826.

- 1 ISAAC NEWTON DAMON, the oldest child of Isaac, b. in Ashby, Dec. 14, 1812; m. Lucy K. Wright, dau. of Isaac Wright, b. Dec. 27, 1817. He came to Lex. in 1836, where he has since resided. He has filled the office of selectman, treasurer, &c., is a justice of the peace, and an assistant assessor in the internal revenue service.

1- 2 Iusanna Phelps, b. Sept. 28, 1843.

3 Myron Bates, b. June 27, 1854.

4 Florence Maria, b. Apr. 28, 1856.

DANFORTH.—DANFORTH is a name which appears occasionally on Lex. records. In 1738 we find this record,—“Amos Merriam and Hannah Danforth, both of Lex., were joined in marriage.” There were Danforths in Camb. and in Bil. at an early day, and some from these families probably came to Lex. for a short time. In 1774, Benjamin Danforth, wife, and three children, among them Benjamin, Jr., came to Lex. from Bedford. As their names appear upon the tax bill up to 1785, and then disappear, it is probable that they left town about that time.

THE DAVIS FAMILY.

JOSEPH DAVIS, son of Thomas Davis of Holden, and Lattice his wife, was b. May 5, 1794, and m. May 31, 1823, Betsey G. Babcock, dau. of Amos and Betsey (Gardner) Babcock, of Princeton; b. Oct. 18, 1799. His father was a soldier in the Revolution, and was in the battles of Bunker Hill, Bennington, White Plains, &c. Joseph resided in Princeton, where he kept a public house. In 1833 he moved to Lex. and resumed his occupation as an inn-holder, which he continued about ten years. Most of his children were b. in Princeton. He was several years one of the overseers of the poor in Lex.

THE DUNKLEE FAMILY.

The name of Dunklee appears on the town and church records as early as 1701. We cannot give a connected view of this family; though it appears that Nathaniel Dunklee and wife were received into the church by a letter of dismission from the church at Watertown, Aug. 25, 1705. Mr. Dunklee appears to have been an ardent man — a great saint and a great sinner. He in his weakness violated the eighth commandment by taking the property of others; but then he made a public confession which would throw the penitential psalms of the king of Israel nearly into the shade. He confesses his repeated thefts, and that he has no cause to complain of those who brought him to justice, — declaring that when the righteous smite him, it shall be a kindness to him, promises to give glory to God by confession and reformation, and hopes that his great sins may be the means of preserving himself and all others from temptation. On a confession thus full and penitent, thus submissive and prayerful, he was of course restored to his standing in the church, which he appears to have regarded as the very gate of heaven. The reader will join with us in the hope that he was never afterward “led into temptation.”

We are not quite sure, but presume that the following are the children and descendants of NATHANIEL DUNKLEE, and Mary his wife.

- 1- 2 David, bap. Sept. 21, 1701. 3 Elnathan, bap. Apr. 11, 1703.
- 4 Jonathan, bap. Jan. 7, 1705. 5 Hannah, bap. May 8, 1707.
- 6 †Hezekiah, bap. Nov. 21, 1708.
- 7 Robert, bap. Apr. 9, 1710, and ad. to the ch. Jan. 7, 1728.

1 6- HEZEKIAH DUNKLEE m. Nov. 17, 1734, Damaris Wilson. He probably left town about the first of 1743, as his wife at that time was dismissed to the ch. at Billerica.

- 2- 8 Hezekiah, b. Sept. 17, 1735. 9 Nathaniel, b. Feb. 23, 1737.
- 10 Damaris, b. Mar. 16, 1739.

THE DUPEE FAMILY.

THE DUREN FAMILY.

JOHN DUREN, or Durant, as the family formerly spelt the name, was in Billerica at an early day, and m. Susanna Dutton, Nov. 16, 1670. They had at least four children, two of each sex. He d. in prison in Camb. Oct. 27, 1692, a victim of the witchcraft delusion. John, the eldest son of John, was b. July 31, 1672; m. Aug. 10, 1695, Elizabeth Jaquith. He d. Feb. 25, 1757, aged 85. They had eight children. Abraham, the youngest son of John, was b. Apr. 1, 1709; m. May 20, 1736, Rachel Manning. They had nine children b. in Billerica where they resided. Abraham, the eldest son of Abraham, b. Oct. 4, 1737; m. Nov. 1, 1764, Lydia Gould, of Chelmsford. He d. Nov. 6, 1776. An anecdote is told of his wife which shows the energy of the woman, and the spirit of the times. On the 18th of April, 1775, her husband being in feeble health, she mounted their horse, and with her panniers set out for market at Boston, a distance of twenty miles or more; and having accomplished her business at Boston, returned as far as Arlington, and stopped for the night. While she was there, she saw the British troops pass on their way to Lex. and Con. The next morning she started for home, and stopping at Lex. she went into the meeting-house to see the slaughtered men killed by the British a few hours before. Such were the women of the Revolution.—Abraham and Lydia had four children. Abraham, the youngest child, was b. Sept. 16, 1776; m. Oct. 25, 1801, Mary Russell, dau. of Jesse Russell, of Wo., where he settled. He d. Oct. 14, 1822, and she d. May 28, 1864. The neighborhood where he resided bears the name of Durenville, in honor of him. He had five children. Samuel R., b. May 29, 1803; m. Sybil Spaulding and Ann Searl. He d. Oct. 6, 1862; Lydia, b. Dec. 13, 1805; m. Joseph Kendall; Warren, b. Apr. 14, 1809; he has been twice married; William, b. June 5, 1813; m. Feb. 4, 1845, Rebecca A. Locke; Abraham, b. Nov. 21, 1815; m. Apr. 5, 1842, Prudence Simonds.

WARREN DUREN, the second son of Abraham mentioned above, m. June 2, 1833, Mary Ann Marrett, dau. of Rev. Daniel and Mary (Muzzy) Marrett, of Standish, Me. She d. Oct. 4, 1839, and he m. Oct. 18, 1848, Mary Chandler, dau. of William Chandler, Esq., of Lex. He had one child by his first wife, viz. Caroline Augusta, b. Oct. 25, 1835, and d. May 13, 1852, aged 17 years. He moved to Lex. Sept. 1850. He has served several times on the board of overseers of the poor.

THE ESTABROOK FAMILY.

Though the Estabrooks were not among the first settlers of Lexington, they came here quite early, and became prominent, both in the church and in the town. Lexington's first minister, and two of her early deacons, bore that name. The Estabrooks appear to have been a ministerial family. Their ancestor, Rev. Joseph Estabrook, came from England in 1660, with two brothers, one of whom settled in Con., and the other in Swanzey. Joseph entered H. C., where he was graduated in 1664, and was settled in Con. in 1667, as colleague with Rev. Mr. Buckley, where he continued till his death, which happened in 1711.

1 REV. JOSEPH ESTABROOK had four sons, as follows:

- 1- 2 †Joseph, b. 1669; d. in Lex. Sept. 23, 1733.
 3 †Benjamin, b. Feb. 24, 1671; d. in Lex. July 22, 1697.
 4 Samuel, b. 1674; was grad. at H. C. 1696, and settled as a clergyman in Canterbury, Connecticut, where he d. in 1727.
 5 †Daniel, b. Feb. 14, 1676; d. at Sudbury, 1735.

JOSEPH ESTABROOK m. first, Dec. 31, 1689, Millicent Woodis, or Woodhouse, dau. of Henry Woodhouse, of Con. She d. Mar. 30, 1692, and he m. second, Aug. 25, 1793, wid. Hannah Loring, of Hingham. He first settled in Hingham, where he and his wife united with the ch. from which they were dismissed to the ch. in Lex. in 1710. He was an active and influential member of the Lex. ch. and represented it on many public occasions. He was elected dea. in 1716, and remained in that office till his death, Sept. 23, 1733. He was highly respected as a townsman, and filled almost every office within their gift. He commanded a military company, and filled the office of town clerk, treasurer, assessor, selectman, and representative to the General Court. He was a man of more than ordinary education for that day, was often employed as a surveyor, and was engaged to teach the first man's school in the town. I cannot state the precise time when he removed to Lex., but as he bought two hundred acres of land in the precinct in 1693, and was elected to office in 1696, it is probable that he came into the place between those periods. He bought his farm of Edward Pelham, then of R. I., and it is described in the deed as being bounded northeasterly by the Cook farm, and southwesterly by the Concord road, till it comes to Vine Brook. This included the places now occupied by Mrs. L. Turner, extending to the brook in front, and back to or beyond the place owned by Mr. Hayes under the hill.

- 2- 6 †Joseph, b. Oct. 10, 1690; d. Aug. 19, 1740.
 7 †John, b. July 28, 1694; m. Oct. 27, 1720, Prudence Harrington.
 8 Solomon, b. Dec. 22, 1696; d. July 7, 1697.
 9 Hannah, b. Mar. 2, 1698; m. May 23, 1717, Joseph Frost.
 10 Millicent, b. Mar. 21, 1699. 11 Elijah, b. Aug. 25, 1703.

BENJAMIN ESTABROOK was grad. at H. C. 1690, and was settled over the first church at Cambridge Farms, (now Lex.,) Oct. 6, 1696. But his ministry was of short duration. On the 22d of July, 1697, he was removed from his earthly labors by death, after a ministry of only nine months. He m. Nov. 29, 1693, Abigail Willard, dau. of Rev. We cannot close this table without doing justice to PRINCE ESTABROOK, a black man in the family of Benjamin Estabrook. He was among the patriots of the Revolution on the Common on the 19th of April, 1775, when he was wounded; we find his name among the soldiers in almost every campaign during the war. He, though a slave, fought the battles of freedom.

THE FAIRFIELD FAMILY.

About 1733, there was a family of Fairfields came to Lex. probably from Wenham, as Walter, Judith, and Remember were dismissed from the ch. in that place, to Lex., where they were ad. Aug. 4, 1734. On the same day, Rebecca, probably dau. of Walter and Judith, was bap. Walter, probably son of the same, was bap. Jan. 18, 1736, and Mary, Nov. 9, 1740.

There appears to have been more than one family of the name, as Stephen, and Hannah his wife, were ad. to the ch., he in 1734, and she in 1737. We have also the record of two of their children, Judith, b. May 30, 1736, and Rebecca, b. Dec. 26, 1738. I also find Moses of Daniel, bap. in 1738. Walter and Daniel were taxed in Lex. 1735, '36, and '37. In 1743, Walter, Judith, and Mary, and Stephen and Hannah, were dismissed from the Lex. ch. to the ch. at Cold Spring. They probably had left town before that time, as the name had disappeared from the tax bills.

THE FARLEY FAMILY.

The Farleys were never numerous in Lexington. George Farley settled in Roxbury, removed early to Woburn, and from thence to Billerica, before 1656, and d. there Dec. 27, 1693. He had a number of children, some of whom settled in Billerica, where the name has been quite common, as it has also been in Hollis, N. H. It is highly probable that the Lexington Farleys were from the same stock. The following imperfect sketch is all that our records furnish.

John Farley, son of John and Mary, b. Oct. 31, 1714.

Hannah Farley, dau. of Benjamin and Joanna, b. Jan. 31, 1757.

Sarah Farley, " " " " " b. Sept. 28, 1761.

Samuel Hasselton, Hollis, N. H., m. Molly Farley, of Lex., June 2, 1761.

Israel Putnam, of Bedford, m. Rebecca Farley, of Lex., Jan. 5, 1763.

Benjamin Farley, of Lex. was in the French war in 1757.

THE FARMER FAMILY.

EDWARD FARMER, son of John Farmer, of Ansley, Warwickshire, Eng., came to this country as early as 1672, and settled in Billerica, where he d. May 27, 1727, aged 87. Mary his wife d. Mar. 26, 1719, aged 78.

The name appears on Lex. records about 1748, when Nathaniel Farmer was taxed.

- 1 NATHANIEL FARMER m. May 28, 1755, Hannah Fessenden, dau. of Thomas and Hannah (Prentice) Fessenden. He was a member of Capt. Parker's company, and like a true patriot was on the ground on the 19th of Apr. 1775. He received a severe wound on the morning of that memorable day. A ball struck his right arm, and so fractured the bone, that he was disabled for a long time;—pieces of bone were extracted from the arm several months afterwards. The Legislature made him a grant of £15 15s. for loss of labor and expense of surgical attendance.

1-2 †John, b. July 18, 1757; m. Mar. 27, 1783, Lucy Reed.

3 Hannah, b. Jan. 28, 1760; m. May 6, 1777, Jacob Kilburn, of Lancaster.

4 Isaac, b. Oct. 8, 1762; d. young.

5 Ruth, b. Aug. 15, 1765. 6 Abigail, b. Nov. 6, 1768.

7 Sally, } twins; b. Dec. 19, 1771; } m. Feb. 12, 1794, Samuel

8 Rebecca, } [Pierce, of Groton.

9 Thomas Shattuck, bap. Sept. 10, 1775.

10 Isaac, b. Dec. 31, 1779.

1-2- JOHN FARMER m. Mar. 27, 1783, Lucy Reed, of Camb. He was a soldier in the war of the Revolution from the town of Lexington.

THE FASSETT FAMILY.

The Fassetts came to this country from Scotland. John Fassett was made freeman in 1654. Nathaniel Fassett was taxed in Concord in 1666. There were one or more families of this name in Billerica at an early day. It is probable that the Lex. Fassetts descended either from the family in Con. or Bil., as they resided near the corner of these towns—their residence being at what is known as the Page place, in Bed., which was formerly a part of Lex. The Fassetts were never numerous in Lex., though one individual was at one time prominent and influential.

- 1 JOSEPH FASSETT, and his wife Mary, were in Lex. in 1701, having made their peace with the church at that time. In 1708, he was chosen one of the assessors in the precinct, and in 1714, one of the assessors in the town. Subsequently he became quite popular, filling various offices. He was one of the assessors nine years, filled the office of selectman about as long, and for several years represented the town in the General Court. We find no record of any children of theirs except Joseph, who was born Dec. 6, 1701. Joseph Fassett, and his wife Mary, both died about 1753 or 4. She was dau. of William Munroe, the ancestor of the Lex. Munroes.
- 1-2- JOSEPH FASSETT m. Amity ———, about 1726. He d. Aug. 14, 1755, and she m. June 15, 1756, John Page, of Bed. In his will, dated 1755, he mentions wife Amity, sons Joseph, John, and Jonathan, and dau. Sarah and Amity Newton. He filled several town offices.
- 2- 3 Joseph, b. Jan. 18, 1727; d. same day.
 4 Mary, b. Aug. 18, 1729; d. Oct. 12, same year.
 5 †Joseph, b. Mar. 21, 1730; m. Dorothy Pollard, of Bed.
 6 Amity, b. Feb. 1, 1732; m. Nov. 14, 1754, Simon Newton, of Bed.
 7 Mary, b. May 9, 1736. 8 John, b. Dec. 7, 1739.
 9 Jonathan, b. Mar. 15, 1742. 10 Sarah, bap. Jan. 22, 1744.
- 2-5- JOSEPH FASSETT m. May 6, 1756, Dorothy Pollard, of Bedford. He was a lieut., and d. at the Lake in the French war, Sept. 16, 1758, aged 29 years. She m. Feb. 21, 1760, Ebenezer Page, of Bedford, son of her father-in-law.
- 5-11 Joseph, b. Apr. 10, 1757. 12 Calley, b. June 21, 1758.

THE FESSENDEN FAMILY.

The Fessenden were probably not in the precinct, till about the time it was erected into a town, in 1713; though they were in old Cambridge much earlier. John Fessenden came from Kent Co., Eng., and settled in Cambridge about 1635. He was ad. a freeman in 1641. He was a member of the ch., and was selectman in 1656, '61, '63, and '65. He d. Jan. 13, 1666, leaving no children. His wife Jane d. Jan. 13, 1682, aged 80. His relative, Nicholas Fessenden, came over from England at his request, it is said, and inherited his estate, which was very considerable for that day. Nicholas is supposed to have been a nephew of John.

- 1 NICHOLAS FESSENDEN m. Margaret Cheney. He was b. in England about 1650. He resided in Cambridge, where he had a numerous family, and d. Feb. 24, 1719, in his 69th year. She d. Dec. 10, 1717, in her 62d year.

He resided in Camb., had a family of eleven children, the youngest of whom, Thomas, was bap. July 15, 1739, grad. at H. C. 1758, was ordained at Walpole, N. H., 1767. He m. Elizabeth Kendall, and had a numerous family, the eldest of whom was well known in this community. Thomas G. Fessenden grad. at Dart. C. 1796; he was a lawyer, a wit, and a poet, whose writings left a sting behind. He was author of a satirical poem entitled, "Terrible Tractoration," which in its day made many laugh, and a few wince. He was distinguished as an agriculturalist, and edited for some years "The New England Farmer." He d. in Boston.

Through another branch of the family of William Fessenden, (No. 11 in this table,) descended G. Samuel Fessenden, an eminent lawyer of Portland, Me., who has represented his district in Congress, and who was father of Hon. William Pitt Fessenden, the distinguished senator in Congress from Maine at this time.

- 12 Joseph, b. ———; m. Mindwell Oldham, Dec. 6, 1733?

THE FISKE FAMILY.

"There was," says Bond, in his history of Watertown, "a considerable number of early immigrants of the name of Fiske, who settled in Massachusetts; and there is good reason to believe that they were all descendants of Robert and Sibil (Gold) Fiske, who lived at Broad Gates, Loxfield, near Framingham, county Suffolk, Eng."

- 1 DAVID FISKE, probably came over to America in 1636, and settled in Wat. where he was admitted freeman, Mar. 1637. He was selectman in Wat. 1640, and '43. His will, dated Sept. 10, 1660, and proved Jan. 22, 1662, mentions no wife, but one dau. Fitch, and one son David, "sole executor and residuary legatee, giving him his house, lands, cattle and chattels." Aug. 6, 1673, his son sold his homestead and two other lots of land in Wat. to John Cooledge.

- 1- 2 DAVID FISKE b. 1624. He was a "planter," and was ad. freeman, May 26, 1647; he settled either at first, or soon after, at Camb. Farms, in which place he became a prominent citizen. He m. first, Lydia Cooper, perhaps step-dau. of Dea. Gregory Stone, by whom he had three children. He m. second, Seaborn Wilson, dau. of William Wilson, of Boston. He d. Feb. 14, 1710. His will, dated Jan. 22, 1708, and proved Dec. 20, 1711, mentions, wife Seaborn, son Nicholas Wyeth, my dau. being dead, children David, Elizabeth, and Abigail, cousin Samuel Stone, son of Dea. Samuel Stone. Inventory of his estate, £405 17s. 6d. Oct. 16, 1676, he and wife Seaborn, sold Samuel Page, one hundred and forty-nine acres in Wat. granted to his father David Fiske. David Fiske, or David Fiske, Sen., as he was designated in our early records, was not only one of the first settlers, but became one of the most prominent and useful men in the precinct. He headed the subscription for a meeting-house in 1692, and on the organization of the parish the year after, he was chosen clerk, and one of the selectmen or assessors. He was also chosen chairman of a committee to purchase of the town of Camb. a lot of land for the support of the ministry. These and similar offices he frequently held under the parish. He was also a member of the ch. organized 1696, and his wife immediately after removed her relation from the ch. in Camb. to the ch. gathered in the precinct. He not only served his fellow-citizens in a civil and religious, but also in a military capacity, as appears by the prefix Lieut. which is often in the records connected with his name. He was also often employed by the colony as a surveyor. He resided on Hancock st. near the present residence of Joseph F. Simonds.

A handsome monument was erected in 1856, by Benj. Fiske, Esq., with this inscription: "In memory of DAVID FISKE, who died Feb. 14, 1710, and his descendants."

- 2-5- DAVID FISKE m. Sarah ———, who d. April 22, 1729, aged 75.
 He d. Oct. 23, 1729. David Fiske, like his father, was a subscriber to the first meeting-house in 1692, and, like his father, was ready to sustain the institutions of religion, and was elected to the dignified office of tythingman.
- 5-10 David, b. Jan. 5, 1675; m. Elizabeth ———.

 17 †Ebenezer, b. Sept. 12, 1692; m. ———.
- 5-11- JONATHAN FISKE m. Abigail ———. His name first appears upon the Lex. parish records in 1707, when Corp'l Jonathan Fiske was chosen one of the assessors. He was also a subscriber for the purchase of the Common in 1711; though the ch. records show that his dau. Abigail was bap. in 1704, when he o. c. He and his wife Abigail united with the ch. Oct. 24, 1708. He had a family of fourteen children, five of whom were born in Lex. and the rest in Sud-bury, to which place he removed about 1713, where he was a deacon.
 He and his wife were dismissed to the Sudbury ch. in 1718. His will, dated Nov. 13, 1742, mentions wife Abigail, five sons and seven dau., two of his children probably having died before that period.
- 11-18 Abigail, bap. July 23, 1704; m. Samuel Parris.

- 5-12- ROBERT FISKE m. May 27, 1718, Mary Stimpson, of Reading.
 In 1711, he was a subscriber for the purchase of the Common. He was ad. to the ch. 1736. His residence was on Hancock st. at or near the spot where Joseph F. Simonds now resides. Here his father David lived before him; and hence this must have been one of the first settled places in the township. The present, which is probably the second house on this spot, was erected in 1732. Robert Fiske was a physician, and probably the first of the profession in the place.

His wife survived him a few years, and d. Feb. 11, 1757. He d. April 18, 1753. The inventory sheds light upon the manners and customs of the age. Among other things, we find the following: "Hat and wig, 100s. Arms — yellow stock gun, £8 10s.; little gun, £5; carbine, 50s.; brass pistols, 50s.; rapier and belt, 12s.; three staves, 20s.; two cans and two piggens, 15s.; one loom, quill wheel and warping bars, 50s.; two pair of snow shoes, 30s. Books — General Practice of Physic, 30s.; English Dispensatory or Synopsis of Medicine, 30s. The Structure and Condition of Bones, 15s." By these items, it will be seen that the doctor was quite as well armed for the art of war as for the art of healing.

- 12-32 Mary, b. Feb. 8, 1719; d. same day.
 33 Mary, b. March 16, 1720; m. John Buckman, and lived in Lex.
 34 †Robert, b. Jan. 23, 1722; m. Betty ———.
 35 Lydia, b. June 23, 1724; m. James Wilson, of Bedford.
 36 †Joseph, b. Oct. 18, 1726; m. Hepsibah Raymond.
 37 Ruth, b. Nov. 15, 1729; m. ——— Farmer.
 38 John, b. Nov. 8, 1731. He studied medicine, but it is doubtful whether he practiced to any extent. We find no account of his marriage, or children, or death. He was of Lex. in 1757, when Joseph Fiske, and John Fiske, physicians, heirs of Dr. Robert Fiske, sold land to Jonas Parker. John Fiske, of Lex. was in the French and Indian war, 1754.
 39 Jonathan, b. March 20, 1734; m. Sept. 4, 1755, Abigail Locke, of Woburn. She was dau. of William and Jemima (Russell) Locke, who resided near the line of Lexington. We find no account of Jonathan Fiske, or family. He was of Lex. in 1752, when for a consideration he relinquished his right to his mother's thirds.
 40 †David, b. March 8, 1737; m. Elizabeth Blodgett.

5-17- EBENEZER FISKE m. Dec. 4, 1718, Grace Harrington, of Wat., by whom he had a child, which d. Aug. 25, 1721, and she d. four days after, aged 26. He m. second, Bethia Muzzy, dau. of Benj. and Sarah Muzzy. She d. Nov. 19, 1774, aged 74; and he d. Dec. 19, 1775. The monumental base in the Lex. old yard, has the honorable prefix of Lieut. to the name of Ebenezer Fiske. He appears to have been popular in his day, having been called to fill many offices in the town. He was selectman ten years between 1739 and 1758. He resided on the road to Concord, a little more than a mile from the Common, at the easterly side of a large swell of land, which from his residence and ownership has taken the name of "Fiske Hill." It was at this house that the gallant Hayward, of Acton, met a British soldier coming from the well, between whom shots were exchanged, with fatal effect on both sides.

- 17-41 Sarah, bap. Nov. 24, 1723.
 42 Ebenezer, b. March 5, 1826. He was a physician, and settled at Epping, N. H.
 43 Bethia, b. Aug. 1, 1729; m. ——— Oliver, of Boston.
 44 Elizabeth, b. May 7, 1731; m. ——— Ellis.
 45 Jane, b. May 2, 1733; m. Josiah Hadley.
 46 Anna, b. July 29, 1735; m. Oct. 24, 1754, Oliver Barrett, of Con. She was grandmother of the late Rev. Dr. Barrett, of Boston, and Rev. Fiske Barrett, once settled at Lexington.
 47 Benjamin, b. May 4, 1737; d. young.
 48 Samuel, b. Oct. 5, 1739. He grad. at H. C. 1759, and was an Episcopal clergyman in South Carolina. He d. 1777.
 49 †Benjamin, b. Aug. 10, 1742; d. Feb. 1, 1785.

- 12-34- ROBERT FISKE m. Betty —. She d. Dec. 14, 1770. There is no record of his death; but as he was in Lex. in 1764, and she was a wid. in 1767, he must have d. between those periods. In 1767 wid. Betty Fiske bought eighty acres of land in Lex. bounded easterly on Wo. line, and westerly by land of Lemuel Simonds. Her will, dated Dec. 4, 1770, and proved Sept., 1771, mentions sons Robert, John, and David, and dau. Betty and Ruth. The record of this family is very defective. Robert Fiske, like his father, was a physician by profession, and appears to have led rather a wandering life. In 1760 he was in the French war, in 1757 he was in Wo., and in 1764, he came to Lex., when we find this entry, "Dr. Fiske and family came last from Woburn."
- 34-50 Robert, b. 1756. 51 †David, b. Nov. 23 1760.
52 Ruth, b. Oct. 30, 1765. 53 John. 54 Betty.

He was a physician, and successor to his father, who d. about the time he commenced practice. He administered upon his father's estate, and resided in the same house. He probably had other children besides those named below, as the imperfect records speak of the death of at least one of his infant children.
- 36-55 †Joseph, b. Dec. 25, 1752; d. Sept. 25, 1837, aged 85.
56 Ruth, b. April 20, 1758; m. May 7, 1795, John —.
57 Hepzibah, b. June 22, 1765; m. John Le Baron and went to Lit.
- 12-40- DAVID FISKE m. June 22, 1760, Elizabeth Blodgett. He was a weaver, and, to distinguish him from others of the same name, he was called "Weaver David." He was famous as a hunter. Though the wild game was not very plenty in his day, he contributed greatly to thin off the deer, bears, &c. He ran down and killed a stately buck on the hill over which the Burlington road ran, and hence it has taken the name of "Buck's Hill." He has left no record of his family; though from tradition, and intimations in the records, he must have had at least three children. He d. July 20, 1815.
- 40-58 Betsey, b. —; m. April 14, 1788, Joseph Webber. They had Joseph, b. Feb. 19, 1789, Susanna, b. July 9, 1791, and moved to Bedford.

GLEASON. — There have been from time to time persons in town by the name of GLEASON, but no permanent family till recently. George Gleason came to Lexington from Holden in 1753. Jonas Gleason m. April 30, 1771, Ruth Bacon, both of Lex. In 1772, Jonas was ad. to the ch., and his dau. Ruth bap. In 1795, he was dismissed to the ch. of Bedford. In 1776, Benjamin Gleason was taxed both for personal and real estate. There are two families of Gleasons in town at the present time, but the records do not furnish a connected list of the families, and no list being furnished us we are obliged to omit them.

THE GODDARD FAMILY.

- 1 EDWARD GODDARD was a wealthy farmer in Norfolk, England.
- 1- 2 WILLIAM GODDARD, the seventh son of Edward, m. Elizabeth Miles, dau. of Benj. Miles. They resided in London, where they had six children, three of whom d. young. He and his wife, with their three remaining children, William, Joseph, and Robert, came to N. E. in 1665, and settled in Watertown, where he was made freeman in 1677, and ad. to the ch. in 1688, and d. Oct. 6, 1691. She d. Feb. 8, 1698. He must have been a man of more than ordinary education, for he was employed by the town to "teach such children as were sent to him to learn the rules of the Latin tongue." They had five children b. in Watertown, two of whom d. young.
- 2- 3 EDWARD GODDARD, the youngest child of William, was b. in Watertown, March 24, 1675; m. June, 1697, Susanna Stone. He was a schoolmaster, and taught successively in Watertown, Boston, and Framingham. He was a prominent man, and filled almost every place of honor and profit in the town of Framingham, where he took up his final residence; and the period during which he filled the different offices, furnishes the best evidence of his ability and fidelity. He was town clerk eighteen years, selectman ten years, town treasurer two years, representative eight years, and a member of the executive council three years. He was also a justice of the peace, and the captain of a company of horse. He d. Feb. 9, 1754, aged 79. They had nine children.

3-4 DAVID GODDARD, the third son of Edward, b. Sept. 26, 1706, grad. at H. C. 1731. He studied theology and settled at Leicester, June 30, 1769. He m. Aug. 19, 1736, Mercy Stone, of Watertown. She d. THE GREEN FAMILY.

- 1 This name has never been common in Lexington. SAMUEL GREEN m. Esther —. They probably came from Wo., where the Greens were numerous; and his wife was ad. to the ch. in Lex. Aug. 24, 1724, by a letter of dismission from the ch. in Wo. They came to Lex. about 1718, as their first child was bap. in Lex. that year. He held some subordinate town office in 1724. There is but little known of this family. They probably resided near the middle of the town, as he was employed in 1720 to ring the bell, sweep the meeting house, and keep the key. He d. Aug. 10, 1759, aged 63.
- 1-2 Esther, b. Sept. 7, 1718; m. Sept. 26, 1734, when she was only 16, Amos Muzzy. He d. June 26, 1752, and she m. May 4, 1758, Thomas Prentice, Esq., of Newton, who d. March 3, 1760.

- 6 Benjamin, b. Dec. 2, 1732; probably went to Waltham and m. 1756, Martha Brown, and in 1770 m. Eunice Smith. This may have been the Benjamin Green who d. in Lex. Oct. 26, 1822.
- 1-4 SAMUEL GREEN m. April 3, 1750, Kezia Smith. There is little or nothing known of this family.
- 4-7 Samuel, bap. Aug. 16, 1752; perhaps the Samuel Green who was dismissed to the ch. in Charlemont, March 28, 1779.

There were other Greens in Lex. from time to time, but whether they were connections of the Samuel Green family, I have no means of knowing.

Thomas Green came to Lex. from Camb. 1782.

William Green and family came from Wo. 1792.

Lucy Clark Green d. in Lex. Oct. 28, 1793.

Benjamin Green was taxed in Lex. in 1784 and 1785, and subsequently as a non-resident.

Isaac Green, of Lex., m. Sept. 5, 1778, Eleanor Tufts of Medford.

THE GREENLEAF FAMILY.

The Greenleaf family of Lex. probably descended from Edmund Greenleaf of Newbury, who settled there 1635. He had a son, Stephen, who m. Sarah Kent, and had among other children Stephen, who m. Elizabeth Gerrish in 1676. They had a large family, and among them Stephen, b. Oct. 21, 1690. This Stephen was probably the Stephen Greenleaf of Medford, who m. Mary, and had six children. Gardiner, their first child, b. Jan. 9, 1726, m. Jan. 21, 1748, Catharine Thompson. He d. Nov. 21, 1808.

- 1 JONATHAN GREENLEAF, the fourth child of Gardiner, b. June 9, 1754, m. May 5, 1778, Joanna Manning.

- 1- 2 Jonathan, b. Feb. 16, 1784.
 3 Jocanna, b. Dec. 28, 1786; m. Amos Locke of Lex.
 4 William, b. Oct. 7, 1788.
 5 †Thomas, b. Aug. 1, 1791; m. Oct. 2, 1822, Phebe Reed.
 6 Mary M., b. Dec. 28, 1792; d. unm. aged 17.

 8 Sarah, b. Oct. 25, 1797; m. — Upson.

1-5- THOMAS GREENLEAF m. Oct. 2, 1822, Phebe Reed, dau. of Joshua and Susanna (Leathers) Reed. He d. Sept. 29, 1862, aged 70. He resided in Lex.

- 5- 9 William, b. Oct. 25, 1825; m. Esther Horton of Gorham, Me.
 10 Thomas, b. Dec. 17, 1826.
 11 Mary, b. Sept. 12, 1830; d. May 17, 1848.

THE GRIMES FAMILY.

There were Grimeses in Lex. at the time the town was incorporated. The earliest record of any of the name is June 28, 1713, when Jonathan Grimes was bap., but the name of the parents is not given, nor have I ascertained from what place they came. George Grimes d. in Lex. July 28, 1716, aged 76. He could hardly have been the father of Jonathan. I am inclined to believe that William is the ancestor of the Lex. family. It is most likely he had other children, but I will set down the family as follows:

- 1 WILLIAM GRIMES m. Mary, who was ad. to the ch. June 30, 1717. He d. June 1, 1719, aged 43. His gravestone is in the old yard in Lexington.

- 1- 2 †William, b. 1706. 3 Mary, b. —.
 4 Jonathan, bap. June 28, 1713. 5 Joseph, bap. Aug. 21, 1715.
 6 Elizabeth, bap. June 30, 1717. 7 Ruth, bap. May 13, 1719.

1-2- WILLIAM GRIMES m. Bethia —. He d. Dec. 3, 1766, aged 60, and she d. March 15, 1772, aged 49.

- 2- 8 †William, b. Sept. 19, 1744; m. Jan. 21, 1766, Abigail Reed.
 9 Joseph, b. Oct. 22, 1746; d. March 26, 1750.
 10 John, bap. Dec. 25, 1748; d. March 28, 1750.
 11 Mary, bap. July 28, 1751; m. Sept. 18, 1770, Samuel Ditson of Bil.
 12 Sarah, bap. Aug. 14, 1753.

2 8- WILLIAM GRIMES m. Jan. 21, 1766, Abigail Reed, dau. of William and Abigail (Stone) Reed, b. Sept. 22, 1744. They were ad. to the ch. Nov. 8, 1767. He was a member of Capt. Parker's company, was on the Common on the 19th of April, 1775, and was also in a detachment of that company called to Camb. May 10 and June 17 of the same year. He also did other service in the revolutionary war. He resided in the north part of the town, near where Mr. Cummings now resides, on Grove Street, which place still retains the name of its original owner and occupant. They were dismissed to the ch. at Littleton, Jan. 20, 1793, to which place they had removed.

- 8-13 William, b. May 22, 1768. 14 Nabby, bap. June 24, 1770.
 15 Nathan, bap. Dec. 20, 1772.

THE GROVER FAMILY.

John and Antipas Grover came to Lexington from Grafton in 1789. The family have not been numerous, but remain in town to the present time. John and Antipas are believed to be brothers. Their father's name is said to be Benjamin, and hence we shall set

1 down as the head of the family BENJAMIN GROVER, probably of Grafton.

1-2- JOHN GROVER m. Aug. 12, 1790, Polly Pierce. He resided in the part of the town commonly known as Scotland. She was b. Oct. 12, 1770, and d. Oct. 15, 1854, aged 74.

2- 3 John, b. April, 1792. He m. Sarah Merriam, of Bedford. They resided a few years in Lexington, where they had three children born, viz. Mary Ann, Edward, and John; they then moved to Boston, where he died.

4 Nathaniel, b. June 4, 1794. He went to Boston, m. Katharine Biscoe, of Charlestown. They now reside in Chelsea.

5 William, b. Oct. 17, 1796; m. Oct. 13, 1829, Lucy Harrington, and second, Oct. 8, 1834, Maria Fessenden, dau. of Nathan Fessenden. They reside on Lowell street, near Woburn street. They have the following children.

5- 6 William Henry, b. April 21, 1837.

7 Caroline M., b. Sept. 6, 1838. She is a teacher in Boston.

8 Charles A., b. March 24, 1841.

9 Mary Jane, b. Aug. 29, 1843; d. June 25, 1847.

10 Alice Jane, b. Feb. 17, 1846.

ANTIPAS GROVER m. May 27, 1794, Sarah Pierce. They lived on Lowell street near where George Munroe now resides. They had one child born in Lexington, as seen by the record — Nathan Grover b. Jan. 1, 1795. They buried an infant Feb. 4, 1796. They moved to Fitzwilliam, N. H.

THE HADLEY FAMILY.

The Hadleys, or Headleys, as the name is sometimes spelt in our records, first appear about 1740; from what place they came we have not ascertained. The records of the family are very imperfect, and tradition but poorly supplies the defect.

1 THOMAS HADLEY m. April 15, 1741, Ruth Lawrence, dau. of Samuel and Elizabeth Lawrence. He d. July 15, 1788, in his 75th year, hence must have been born 1712. She d. May 26, 1819, at the advanced age of 94. He was a member of the gallant band who appeared under Capt. Parker in 1775. He was probably a son of Benjamin and Mehitable Hadley, of Groton, b. Aug. 11, 1712.

1- 2 Elizabeth, b. May 11, 1742; d. April 18, 1832, unm. aged 90.

3 Thomas, b. July 3, 1744; d. in early infancy.

4 †Samuel, b. July 9, 1746; killed on the Common, April 19, 1775.

5 Ruth, b. May 15, 1749; d. in infancy.

6 Ebenezer, b. May 5, 1751; m. May 11, 1779, Phebe Winship.

7 †Thomas, b. July 8, 1754.

8 †Benjamin, b. July 25, 1756.

9 Ruth, b. June 1, 1759; m. Nov. 30, 1780, James Fowle, of Camb.

10 †Simon, b. July 26, 1761; m. Jan. 27, 1791, Olive Porter, of Bed.

- 11 Sarah, b. Nov. 26, 1764; m. April 26, 1784, David Fiske, 3d.
 12 Mary, b. May 20, 1767; d. in Boston, unm.
 13 John, b. Aug. 6, 1770; d. in Cambridge.

- 1-4- SAMUEL HADLEY m. Betty Jones. He was of the number who died for freedom on the first morning of the Revolution, and whose memory is embalmed in the hearts of his countrymen. After his death his widow m. again.
- 4-14 Lucy, bap. April 22, 1772.
 16 Samuel, bap. May 8, 1774.

- 1-7- THOMAS HADLEY m. Sept. 16, 1773, Alice Newton, of Bedford. She united with the ch. in Lexington, July 16, 1778. In September of the same year, three of their children, Amity, Alice, and Calley, were baptized. He probably d. about 1784, and she m. Feb. 21, 1785, Samuel Merriam, of Bedford. The record of the marriage has this addendum: "Said Alice Hadley married in a borrowed suit of cloathes." We find no record of the birth of his children; but find the marriage of Thomas Statson, of Boston, and Amity Hadley, of Lexington, Feb. 26, 1792, who was probably his daughter. The singularity of her wedding suit probably arose from a notion which formerly prevailed, that if a man married a wife, and had no property with her, he could not be held responsible for any of her debts. Hence he took her without even the clothing she had on.

- 1-8- BENJAMIN HADLEY m. Lucy Dean, of Wilmington. He was a member of that patriot band commanded by Capt. Parker in 1775.
- 8-17 Benjamin, b. ———. He went to Charlestown, m. Martha Ireland, and d. 1852.
 18 Samuel, b. March 30, 1785; d. in the army, 1813.
 19 John, b. Aug. 10, 1788; m. Jan. 1, 1822, Susan Harrington.
 20 Thomas, b. ———; m. Thankful Whitney, went to N. Y.
 21 Jonas, b. ———; m. Mary Ann Whitney.
 22 Martha, b. ———; m. Joseph Littlefield, lived at Somerville.
 23 Lucy, b. ———; m. Joseph Miller, lives at Sandwich.
 24 Eliza, b. ———; d. Aug. 1857, unm. in Lexington.

As we have no record of this family, they may not be arranged in chronological order.

- 1-10- SIMON HADLEY m. Jan. 27, 1791, Olive Porter, of Bedford. Previous to his marriage, we find this entry upon the town record: "Betsey Hadley, dau. of Simeon Hadley and Betty Locke, born April 11, 1784"; from which we infer that he may have had two wives, and that Olive Porter was his second wife.

There are several families of Hadleys in town at the present day, but the imperfect records, and the want of the necessary information in the families on this subject, prevent a proper classification, or a connection of them with the Hadleys mentioned above. The following is all that has been obtained.

SEWELL HADLEY, thought to be the son of Samuel, m. Lovina Hall, of West Camb. She d. May 14, 1841, aged 39. They had the following children, viz. Lovina, b. Aug. 31, 1819; m. Dec. 25, 1844, George Stearns; Sewell Thomas, b. —; Benjamin, b. Apr. 12, 1828; Mary Ann, twin with Benjamin.

SEWELL THOMAS HADLEY m. Nov. 30, 1846, Millicent A. D. Lakin, dau. of Samuel. They have had Charles S., b. Sept. 22, 1850; d. Jan. 7, 1855; Avery T., b. May 25, 1853; Millicent A., b. Aug. 28, 1855; Adelle C., b. Jan. 12, 1858; Florence E., b. Jan. 3, 1861; L. Evelyn, b. July 22, 1863.

THE HALL FAMILY.

AMMI HALL, son of Ebenezer Hall of West Camb., b. Jan. 16, 1798; m. April 21, 1834, Eliza Crandall of Salem. He came to Lex. when a young man, and d. here April 10, 1867, aged 70 years. They have had but one child, Eliza A., b. Jan. 25, 1835.

THE HAM FAMILY.

WILLIAM HAM, b. at Grampond, County of Cornwall, Eng., Nov. 21, 1818. He came to this country in 1837, and settled in Charlestown, where he remained till 1855. In 1856, he settled in Lex. Though he left old Eng. in 1837, the remembrance of early acquaintance induced him to revisit his native country, and take Mary Grose as a wife. They were m. Jan. 21, 1846. They have had six children. William F., b. Aug. 2, 1846; he has served three years in the U. S. army; Walter T., b. July 17, 1848; Lucy Ann, b. Feb. 21, 1850; Joseph F., b. Feb. 14, 1853; Mary P., b. April 11, 1855, d. April 15, 1865; Jane T., b. Sept. 11, 1857.

THE HANCOCK FAMILY.

Though we have had occasion to speak of Rev. John Hancock, the second minister of Lex., and of several members of that family, I will, in accordance with the plan I have adopted, give a connected view of the family.

1 NATHANIEL HANCOCK was in Camb. as early as 1635. He m. Jane, and had a large family of children. His oldest child may have been born before he came to this country. He d. 1652.

C. 1670, settled in Chelmsford, 1677, d. Dec. 7, 1704. His wife, Mary, d. Dec. 2, 1700, and Mr. Clark m. Elizabeth Whiting of Billerica. Mr. Hancock probably resided in that part of Camb. which is now Newton. In the church record kept by Rev. Mr. Hancock, we find this entry. "Oct. 16, 1698. I was received into full communion with the church of Christ in this place (Lexington) by virtue of a letter of dismissal from the ch. of Christ in Newtowne." He was ordained at Lex. Nov. 2, 1698. He d. Dec. 5, 1752, in the eighty-first year of his age, and in the fifty-fifth of his ministry. His wife d. Feb. 13, 1760. I have had occasion to speak of Bishop Hancock, as he was familiarly called, in all the relations of life, and have done it so fully that it is entirely unnecessary to add anything more in this place. His remains rest in a tomb in Lex. with those of his wife and son Ebenezer, together with those of his successor, Rev. Jonas Clarke, and his family.
- 14-22 †John, b. June 1, 1702; m. Mrs. Mary H. Thaxter.

He was a divine of more than ordinary ability, and, though he d. young, had arisen to distinction in his profession, and so gave weight to the character and celebrity of the name.

- 22-33 †John, b. Jan. 23, 1737; m. 1775, Dorothy Quincy.
 34 Ebenezer, b. Nov. 26, 1741; m. Eliza Lowell.
 35 Mary, b. ———; m. Richard Perkins, and d. 1779.

14-23-

THOMAS HANCOCK m. Nov. 5, 1730, Lydia Henchman. He was a merchant in Boston, was eminently successful, and accumulated a large fortune. He d. 1764, without issue, and gave the great mass of his property to John, his nephew, a son of his brother John of Braintree, deceased. He built a house in Lexington for his honored father about 1735, which afterward became the property and residence of Rev. Jonas Clarke, his father's successor. The house is now standing, and is revered for its age and associations.

JOHN HANCOCK m. at Fairfield, Conn., Sept. 4, 1775, Dorothy Quincy, dau. of Edmund Quincy of Boston. The relations which John Hancock sustained to the town of Lex.—the birthplace of his father, and the residence of some of his near relations and esteemed friends; the place where he had spent some seven years of his boyhood, and where he was boarding temporarily at the opening of the Revolutionary drama—will justify us in going a little beyond our ordinary course, and noticing somewhat in detail the character and services of this Revolutionary patriot. John Hancock was left an orphan by the death of his father, when he was but seven years of age. His education was intrusted to the care of his relatives, and he spent the greater portion of his boyhood with his grandfather in Lex. He was graduated at Harvard College in 1754. He entered the store or counting house of his uncle Thomas as a clerk, where he acquired a knowledge of business, and learned the importance of commerce to the colony. He made such proficiency in business, that in 1760 he was sent abroad to look after the affairs of the house; and was in England, and present at the funeral of George II., and at the coronation of George III.,—pageants not uncongential to his taste. Soon after his return to this country, and about the time that the oppressive policy of the British ministry began to develop itself, he came into possession of the princely fortune left him by his uncle. It is well known that great efforts were made by the Royalists to engage him on the side of the mother country. Standing, as he did, almost at the head of the merchants of Boston, it was a great object to enlist him in the Royal cause. The safety of his large property, the flattering offers of promotion and place, would naturally have their influence on a young man of Hancock's taste and temperament, coming at once into possession of such an estate; and it was at one time suspected that he was inclined to join the royal party. But happily for him and for America, there were other influences which were brought to bear upon him. That stern and inflexible patriot, Samuel Adams, who in a manner held the fortunes of the colony in his hand, contributed in no small degree to the wise choice which Hancock made. There was another influence, more silent but more controlling, which contributed to the formation of his character.

Rev. Jonas Clarke of Lexington, his old college acquaintance, had married a cousin of Hancock's. Mr. Clarke was then residing in the house erected by Thomas Hancock of Boston for a residence of his venerable father. In this mansion young Hancock had spent a portion of his early life. All these circumstances would naturally draw him to Lexington. And it is well known that there was a peculiar intimacy between him and Mr. Clarke, whose devotion to the interests of the Colony was well known and acknowledged. The dignity of character, the urbanity of manners, and the commanding talents of the patriotic priest, must have impressed the mind of the pliant and generous young merchant. And those who know the character and talents and patriotic devotion to the cause of liberty of Mr. Clarke, will not doubt that his influence upon his nephew must have been great and controlling, and all in the right direction.

Under such influences John Hancock chose the better part, and devoted himself and his all to the cause of his country. Having made his choice, no man in the community was more decided, and no man had more at stake. With his large property in the town of Boston at the mercy of the enemy, he declared himself perfectly willing, if it was thought the best policy, to lay the place in ashes. At a meeting of the "North End Caucus," an association of patriots of which he was a member, the question of the best mode of expelling the regulars from Boston being under discussion, he exclaimed, "Burn Boston, and make John Hancock a beggar, if the public good requires it." In a letter to Washington, dated Dec. 22, 1775, informing him that Congress had authorized him to attack the British in the town of Boston, if he thought it expedient, Hancock employs this patriotic language,—“I heartily wish it, though personally I may be the greatest sufferer.” No one can doubt the patriotism of John Hancock. He came in direct contact with Royal authority, and was ever found true and reliable. The manner in which he was treated by the crown officers shows that they regarded him as hopelessly lost to their cause. He was elected a representative from Boston, and also a member of the Council, but was rejected and spurned by the royal prerogative. In 1767 Gov. Bernard sent him a lieutenant's commission, but he tore it in pieces in presence of the citizens. He was captain of the cadets, the Governor's body guard, and was removed by Gage. He also received several personal indignities from the British troops stationed in Boston before the breaking out of hostilities. The fact that he was coupled with Samuel Adams in the proclamation of Gage immediately after the battle of Lexington, and proscribed as beyond the pale of executive clemency, shows the light in which he was viewed by the minions of power.

In 1774, John Hancock was selected as the orator to deliver the address on the anniversary of the Boston massacre, and the bold, independent manner in which he spoke of the rights of the people, gave great offence to the friends of Parliament. John Adams, who was present, says of this performance, "the composition, the pronouncement, the action, all exceeded the expectations of everybody. They exceeded even mine, which were very considerable." In the same year John Hancock was elected to represent the town of Boston at a General Court, which was called at Salem. And although Gage subsequently to the election issued a proclamation excusing their attendance, many of the representatives assembled, and after waiting one day, they organized themselves into a convention, and elected John Hancock chairman; and when the same body resolved themselves into a Provincial Congress, they organized by choosing John Hancock President, and adjourned to Concord. During the session measures were adopted looking directly to open resistance, and no one of that band of patriots was more firm and decided than he who presided over their deliberations. He was elected chairman of the Committee of Safety, and also of the committee to take into consideration the state of the Province — the two most important committees. During the same Congress he was chosen a delegate to the Continental Congress, which met at Philadelphia, May 10, 1775. Having taken a seat in that august body, he found that his fame had preceded him, for on the third day of the session he was chosen unanimously to succeed Peyton Randolph, as President. He was President of Congress in 1776, and when the Declaration of Independence was first circulated among the members of that body, it bore the name of John Hancock alone, as President of the Congress, he being the first to affix his name to an instrument which would have proved the death-warrant of the signers, if the cause of the Colonies had not succeeded; and it is said that the bold and striking characteristics of his signature served to inspire confidence and confirm the doubtful. He resigned his station as President in October, 1777, owing to ill-health.

In 1780, John Hancock was elected a member of the Convention which framed the State Constitution, and was the first Governor of Massachusetts after its adoption, to which office he was several times reelected. As a man and a public servant, he was noted for his benevolence and hospitality — spending his money freely to entertain distinguished guests, or to relieve the distresses of the poor and unfortunate.

Gov. Hancock was elected a delegate to the State Convention on the adoption of the Federal Constitution, and was made President of that body. For a time it was exceedingly doubtful whether the Constitution would be ratified or rejected. Hancock favored the scheme of adopting it, and at the same time proposing certain amendments to obviate the objections which had been made to it. This plan was adopted, and the Constitution was ratified by a small majority. It was thought at the time that without his influence it would have been lost. On taking the question he said, "I should have considered it one of the most distressing misfortunes of my life to be deprived of giving my aid and support to a system which, if amended, as I feel assured it will be, according to your proposals, cannot fail to give the people of the United States a greater degree of political freedom, and eventually as much national dignity as falls to the lot of any nation on earth. The question now before you is such as no nation on earth, without the limits of America, has ever had the privilege of deciding." Thus are we in a manner indebted to John Hancock for the blessed Constitution under which we live, and which has fully verified his prediction.

The public mind has been somewhat divided in its estimate of the talents of John Hancock, and of the importance of his public services. In point of ability he held a highly respectable rank. His talents were of a popular and showy, rather than of a profound character. Though he had not the far-reaching sagacity of Samuel Adams, or the logical acumen of Joseph Hawley or John Adams, or the active, stirring energy of Warren, yet he filled a place among the patriots of that day which no other man could fill, and exerted an influence highly beneficial to the great cause of freedom — operating in commercial circles where the motive of interest strongly tended to the royal cause. He may have been vain, but vanity can be pardoned when it can justly boast of making so great a sacrifice for the benefit of coming generations. He may have been ambitious; but his ambition was of a public character. He desired promotion that he might further a good cause — he sought place that he might dispense his liberal fortune, and show that the hospitalities and even the graces and refinements of life were not of necessity confined to princes, and that those "who wore soft raiment are not" always, "in kings' houses." Whatever blemishes of character a fastidious criticism may discover in John Hancock, we are satisfied that but few men, in this or any other country, can point to acts more noble, and to sacrifices more disinterested than those which appear in his character; and few men ever gave greater evidence of active devotion to their country's welfare.

And when we say that in point of talent and influence he fell below Samuel Adams, we only say of him what would be true of any other man of that day; for in reference to talents in the broadest sense of that term, Samuel Adams had no equal. Others may have been more learned, or may have excelled him in some particulars; but in his knowledge of the science of human government, and of the great principles of rational liberty — in his knowledge of men and the springs of action in the human heart, he certainly had no superior. And when we consider that this knowledge was ever under the control of that lofty patriotism, that unconquerable fidelity to principle, that calm and indomitable will for which he was always distinguished, we can truly say of him that he was the founder of civil liberty in Massachusetts — in New England — in America. The author of the "Life of Samuel Adams," has shown that he was second to no man among us; and his memory will be cherished as long as civil liberty has an enlightened devotee.

John Hancock resided in Boston, in what was then regarded as a princely mansion on Beacon street, fronting upon, and overlooking the Common. The house stood till 1863, when it was taken down. An effort had been made by the State to purchase the property and preserve the mansion for the residence of the successive Governors of the Commonwealth; that they might show their respect for the illustrious patriot who first graced and adorned it; and that his disinterested patriotism might warm the breast of those who might be called to fill the high office first filled and adorned by JOHN HANCOCK.

Mr. Hancock always cherished a fond recollection of Lexington, as the birth-place of his father, the residence of his grandfather, and the place where he spent the playful portion of his boyhood. He also revered it as the place where he took counsel with Rev. Jonas Clarke on matters of awful moment; and the place where under his own direction the patriotic men of Lexington stood firmly before the invaders of their rights. This attachment to Lexington he manifested by gifts to the church and society.

We have said before, that John Hancock m. September 4, 1775, Dorothy Quiney of Boston, dau. of Edmund Quiney. He d. Oct. 8, 1793, aged 56. She m. July 28, 1796, James Scott, the master of a London packet, formerly in the employ of her first husband. She outlived Capt. Scott many years, and retained her faculties to the last. She was a lady of superior education and accomplishments, and was gifted with wonderful powers of conversation. She was one of the first persons sought by Lafayette, when he visited this country in 1824. "Those who witnessed this hearty interview, speak of it with admiration. The once youthful chevalier and the unrivalled belle met, as if only a summer had passed since they had enjoyed social interviews in the perils of the Revolution." She d. Feb. 3, 1830, aged 83 years.

33-36 Lydia, b. and d. in Philadelphia, 1776.

37 John George Washington, b. 1778, and was killed at Milton, when skating on the ice, Jan. 27, 1787. Thus the family of John Hancock became extinct.

THE HARRINGTON FAMILY.

The name of Harrington is found in almost every town in New England; and it is probable that most, if not all of them, descended from or at least were relatives of Robert Harrington of Watertown, who was in that town as early as 1642. He had a numerous family, who were widely dispersed. He came from England where many of his children were born.

1 GEORGE HARRINGTON, from whom our Lexington Harrington descended, was probably a son or brother of Robert. He m. Susanna ———, and had, as was common in those days, a large family of thirteen children. He resided in Watertown. Two of his grandchildren settled in Lexington.

ABIJAH HARRINGTON m. April 21, 1784, Polly Raymond. She d. Feb. 27, 1822, and he m. Dec. 14, 1823, Mary Locke, wid. of Asa B. Locke. He d. without issue, Dec. 31, 1852, aged 91. Though Abijah Harrington was too young (being but 13 years of age) to take part in the events of the memorable 19th of April, 1775, he was attracted by the march of the king's troops, and came to the Common immediately after their departure for Concord, and saw in the road where the British troops stood at the time of the firing, a quantity of blood upon the ground, and so is a good witness that the fire of the British was returned, and with effect, by the Americans. See Deposition appended to Phinney's History.

JONATHAN HARRINGTON m. Nov. 14, 1782, Sally Banks. She d. July 28, 1847, aged 85. Though a lad of only 16 years of age, he was a fifer in that phalanx of freemen which appeared on Lexington Common on the 19th of April, 1775. He lived to a great age, and related almost to the time of his death, the leading events of that day. He said he was aroused early that morning by a cry from his mother—"Jonathan, get up, the regulars are coming, and something must be done." He arose and repaired to the place of parade, and was with the company on the approach of the British. "SOMETHING MUST BE DONE," exclaimed the patriotic mother. And something was done on that memorable day. The shrill notes of that stripling's fife, not only warmed the bosoms of the gallant band on Lexington Common, but enkindled a fire extinguished only by the acknowledgment of our Independence. Something was done. The firm resistance to the British on that occasion inspired every patriotic bosom, and called the people to arms. Something was done which taught the haughty oppressors that freemen in defence of their homes and firesides, their wives and little ones, were not to be intimidated by veteran troops, though led on by rash and daring commanders. Something was done which has given to Lexington a name which will be remembered as long as the spirit of liberty finds a resting place in the human breast.

Jonathan Harrington was one of the youngest defenders of his country's rights on the opening of the Revolutionary drama, and one of the last, if not the very last of the survivors of that opening scene, who lived to partake of the blessings of freedom and to witness the growing greatness of his country. Mr. Harrington lived to a great age, and was treated with much respect and attention by the whole community. At the age of ninety-one he attended the 75th anniversary of the 19th of April, celebrated at Concord. The writer of this waited upon him to give him an invitation to attend the celebration, and give a sentiment. At first he thought he should not be able; but a recurrence to the events of the day to be commemorated, soon roused the energy of the venerable patriarch, and with a countenance lighted up with patriotism, he consented to attend. And when he was asked to give a sentiment, he gave from the fullness of his heart a sentiment, which he was requested to commit to paper, that it might be presented at Concord in his own handwriting. The next day he forwarded the following:

"THE 19TH OF APRIL, 1775. — All who remember that day will support the Constitution of the United States."

After living to the advanced age of 95 years, 8 months, and 18 days, the venerable patriot died, March 27, 1854. The death of the last survivor of the battle of Lexington, produced a marked sensation in the whole community. The Governor ordered out two companies, the Davis Guards of Acton, and the Concord Artillery, to do escort duty at his interment. And such was the public feeling, that General Jones invited his brigade to be present on the occasion, which invitation was promptly responded to by the corps. Several other companies not belonging to the brigade volunteered — all anxious to show their regard to the memory of one who had come down from a generation of patriots, and had stood the sole representative of the first battle of freedom in America. The Governor, the Lieut. Governor and the Honorable Council, and a great part of the Legislature, which was then in session, honored the event by their presence. The Masonic fraternity, of which he was a member, attended with their regalia; and a large concourse of people from the neighboring towns filled Lexington to overflowing. The spectacle was truly imposing.

The procession was formed by Gen. Samuel Chandler of Lexington, who acted as chief marshal on the occasion. The military moved in the following order:

First Regiment of Artillery, Lieut. Col. Gibbs, consisting of three companies.

Fourth Regiment of Light Infantry, Col. J. D. Green, consisting of four companies.

Fifth Regiment of Light Infantry, Col. B. F. Butler, consisting of four companies.

And three volunteer companies.

From the Common they moved down Main street to the Town Hall, where they received the body guard, the Concord Artillery, Captain Culbertson, and the Davis Guards, Captain Holden; Hiram Lodge of West Cambridge, and the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, with the body of the deceased, attended by the pall-bearers and relatives, and followed by the chief marshal, chaplain, and the committee of arrangements, consisting of some of the principal citizens of the town. These were followed by Governor Washburn and suit, Lieut. Governor Plunkett, and the Council, members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, officers of the militia, citizens of Concord and citizens generally.

From this point, it being almost the identical spot at which Lord Percy received the British fugitives in their flight from Concord on the 19th of April, 1775, the procession moved up Main street by the Common to the church, where solemn religious services were performed, and an appropriate address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Randall, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. After the services at the church were concluded, the remains were removed to the old burying-ground in the rear of the church, and deposited in the family tomb. The Masonic burial service was read at the tomb by Grand Master Randall of the Grand Lodge, and a volley was fired over the grave by the Concord Artillery and the Davis Guards. This closed the funeral solemnities of the day.

The history of the world furnishes no case more striking or sublime than this! Thousands of persons of all ages and conditions in life, flock together from one common impulse, and with one general feeling! What motive actuated the vast concourse and brought them to Lexington at that time? The season of the year was uninviting, the traveling bad, and the day inclement; and everything external would seem to forbid any gathering of the people in large numbers in the open air, — but still they came. And for what purpose? Not to obtain any direct advantage personal to themselves — not to witness any feat of art, listen to any distinguished orator, or partake of a sumptuous feast — not to behold any distinguished lord or prince from a foreign country, or any celebrated statesman from our own — not to greet a living friend surrounded with wealth and splendor, or to follow in the funeral train of a deceased President or high officer - of state. No—they came to worship at the shrine of Liberty—to show their respect to the memory of a humble and unpretending individual, who had stood for years the sole representative of that body of freemen who rallied for their country on the 19th of April, 1775.

THE HASTINGS FAMILY.

The name Hastings is of Danish origin. In the early days of the British kingdom, the Danes made frequent incursions into that part of Britain bordering on the North Sea. In one of these incursions Hastings, a Danish chief, made himself formidable to Alfred the Great, by landing a large body of men upon the coast. He took possession of a portion of Sussex; and the castle and seaport were held by his family, when William the Conqueror landed in England; and they held it from the crown for many generations.

Several of the name of Hastings were raised to a peerage. Sir Henry and George Hastings, grandsons of the Earl of Huntingdon, had sons who became Puritans, and were obliged by persecution to leave their native land, and find homes in the new world. As early as 1634, Thomas Hastings and wife, and soon after, John and his family, came to New England, but no one of the family came to Lexington till about 1720.

- 1 THOMAS HASTINGS, aged 29, and his wife Susanna, aged 24, embarked at Ipswich, England, April 10, 1634, in the Elizabeth, William Andrews, master, for New England, and settled in Watertown, where he was admitted freeman, May 6, 1635. He was selectman from 1638 to 1643, and from 1650 to 1671; clerk three years, and representative in 1671. He also held the office of deacon. His wife Susanna died Feb. 2, 1650, and he married April, 1651, Margaret Cheney, dau. of William and Martha Cheney of Roxbury. She was the mother of all his children. He died 1685, aged 80. In his will, dated March 12, 1685, and proved Sept. 7, 1685, he gave his son Thomas only £5, saying, "I have been at great expense to bring him up a scholar, and I have given him above threescore pounds to begin the world with." To his sons John, Joseph, Benjamin, Nathaniel, and Samuel, and to his daughter Hepzibah Bond, he gave £40 each, and to Hannah £3. Between 1652 and 1666, he had eight children.

The old homestead of the Hastings, having passed out of the family, Mr. Cary purchased it, and fitted it up for a summer residence, where he and his wife passed the warm season of the year. The site is truly rural, as will be seen by the engraving. During his life he had caused the farm to be greatly improved, and had expressed an intention of making a tender of this place to the State, if they would establish an Agricultural school upon the premises; but dying suddenly he had made no will. His widow and his heirs however, knowing his wishes, have generously made the tender, and have also with great liberality made several other liberal grants in conformity with the intentions of Mr. Cary, as expressed in his lifetime.

The immediate and multiplied connections of the Hastings family with the CARYS, will justify a brief notice of the latter. JONATHAN CARY of Boston, b. 1768, m. first, Jemima Green of Groton. THE HOBBS FAMILY.

JOSIAH HOBBS, the emigrant ancestor of the family of that name in New England, came to this country in 1671, in the ship Arabella, Sprague, master, in July. He resided in Boston till 1690, when he removed to Camb. Farms. He m. in 1683, and had a son, Josiah, b. in Boston 1684. After 1690, he resided in Lex., (except for a short period, when he was in the westerly part of Wo.) till his death, which happened May 30, 1741, aged 92 years. He was a subscriber for the meeting house in 1692, and was taxed for the support of the minister the year following. Aug. 1699, he and his wife, Tabitha, were ad. to the ch. In September of the same year Josiah, Tabitha, and Mary, three of their children, were bap. In Oct. 1700, Matthew and Susanna were bap. The record of this family is very imperfect. They may have had other children. Most of the children d. in infancy, or before marriage.

1 JOSIAH HOBBS m., and resided in Lexington till about 1714. In 1713 he was chosen to "take care of y^e swine." About this time he removed to Boston, where he resided many years, and late in life moved with his family to Weston, where the name has been common down to the present day. The Hobbsses in Worcester county are descendants from this stock. Josiah Hobbs was married before he left Lex., and had several children bap.

- 1- 2 Ebenezer, bap. Jan. 8, 1709; his father owning the covenant.
 3 Elizabeth, bap. March 23, 1712; her mother, Mary, making due confession to the church.
 4 Tabitha, bap. April 13, 1712.

This name is generally spelled Hubbs in Lex. records.

THE HOLMES FAMILY.

1 DR. HOWLAND HOLMES and his wife came to Lex. from W. Camb. in the autumn of 1851. He is a son of Howland Holmes of Bridgewater, and grandson of Elias, and great grandson of Elisha Holmes of Plymouth. He was b. Jan. 16, 1815, and m. Aug. 28, 1849, Maria, dau. of William Cotting of West Camb., b. Mar. 3, 1818. He grad. at H. C. in 1843, and at the Mass. Medical School in 1848, and became a member of the Mass. Medical Society the same year. Before graduating from the medical school, he spent a portion of 1846 and 1847 traveling in Europe, but mostly in studying in the hospitals at Paris and London. He has served several years on the school committee in West Camb. and in Lex. He holds a commission of justice of the peace.

- 1- 2 Mary Eddy, b. in West Camb. Aug. 14, 1850; d. next day.

 5 Sarah Eddy, b. Sept. 15, 1855.
 6 Charlotte Bronte, b. April 20, 1857; d. Feb. 25, 1865.

THE HOUGHTON FAMILY.

LEVI HOUGHTON, of Lancaster, b. 1736, m. Susan Richardson of that town. He d. 1818, aged 82; she d. 1814. Levi was probably a descendant of John Houghton, or his cousin Ralph, who settled in Lan. about 1652. Levi, by his wife, Susan, had seven children.

They resided at one time in Worcester. Levi, one of their sons, b. in Wor. about 1772, m. Elizabeth Stearns of Lunenburg about 1803, where he resided. He d. Jan. 27, 1865, aged 93; she d. 1828, aged 47. He was twice married after the death of his first wife, by whom he had his children, nine in number.

- 1 SAMUEL A. HOUGHTON, son of Levi and Elizabeth, b. Jan. 4, 1807, m. Sept. 3, 1834, Martha W. Haywood of Townsend. They resided in Boston till March, 1839, when they removed to Lex.
- 1-2 Elizabeth Stearns, b. June 14, 1835; m. Jan. 19, 1858, Ralph W. Shattuck of West Cambridge.
- 3 Melinda W., b. Aug. 31, 1840; m. Aug. 20, 1861, Thomas Everett Cutler.
- 4 Henry M., b. Sept. 22, 1842. 5 Clara G., b. Dec. 27, 1845.

THE HOVEY FAMILY.

DANIEL HOVEY and Rebecca, his wife, came to this country and settled in Ipswich 1637. They had nine children; Joseph, their fifth son, b. about 1652, m. Hannah Pratt and settled in Hadley. They had five children. John, b. 1684, m. first, Abbia Watson of Camb. Their family consisted of six children. Their oldest son, John, b. 1707, m. Elizabeth Muzzy, dau. of John Muzzy of Lex. He grad. H. C. 1725, was a clergyman, d. 1773. He m. second, Susanna Lovett. Ebenezer, the fourth son of John and Abbia, b. 1714, m. Elizabeth Mason of Wat. They had but one child, Thomas, b. at Newton, Aug. 14, 1740; m. Elizabeth Brown, dau. of Dea. Josiah Brown. They had fifteen children; all but one lived to grow up. Ebenezer, their fourth son, b. June 8, 1769, m. Sally Greenwood, dau. of Nathaniel Greenwood of Brighton. He d. May 5, 1831, and she d. June 27, 1863. They had twelve children,—thus sustaining the fruitfulness of the family.

- 1 THOMAS G. HOVEY, their fifth son, b. Jan. 23, 1816, m. Nov. 3, 1841, Ann Maria Hoping of Camb., b. Nov. 13, 1822.

- 7 Stilman Southwick, b. April 15, 1850.
- 8 Frank Pierce, b. Dec. 3, 1852.

Mr. Hovey resided in Cambridge till about 1850, where his first five children were b., when he came to Lex., where the last two were born.

THE HUDSON FAMILY.

The Hudsons were among the early settlers of New England. William, Francis, and Ralph, were in and about Boston before 1636, and were among the prominent citizens. But it is doubtful whether the Lancaster Hudsons were from either of these families.

- 1 DANIEL HUDSON came to this country about 1639. He was in Wat. 1640, and settled in Lancaster, 1665, where he purchased a town right for £40. His wife's name was Johanna, by whom he had eleven children. One of his daughters m. Abraham Joslin. When the Indians attacked Lancaster in 1675, Joslin and his family took refuge in the garrison house of Rev. Mr. Rolandson. After a most vigorous defence, the house was set on fire, when the only alternative left was to perish in the flames or fall into the hands of the merciless foe. Joslin was killed while defending the inmates of the house; but his wife and daughter were taken captive, with Mrs. Rolandson, carried away and barbarously murdered in the wilderness. The fate of his daughter Anna but prefigured that of her parents; for in 1697, Daniel Hudson and his wife, one daughter, and two children of his son Nathaniel, were killed by the Indians in their incursion into that ill-fated town. His oldest son Daniel m. and settled in Bridgewater, and his son William soon followed him.

- 1- 2 NATHANIEL HUDSON, another son of Daniel, appears to have been rather migratory, for he is at one time in Lancaster and at another in Billerica. He m. Rebecca Rugg. We have found no record of his children, except that three of them, viz. Seth, Nathaniel, and Abigail, were bap. in Lexington, April 22, 1705. This was probably when he was residing in Billerica; for he deeded a lot of land in Lincoln to a Mr. Buss, about that time, and signed himself as of Billerica. He is also believed to be the father of John, who with Seth and Nathaniel settled in Marlborough.
- 2- 3 JOHN HUDSON, b. 1713, m. Eliz. Mc Allister of Northborough. She d. May 16, 1786, aged 66, and he m. March 28, 1787, Bethia Wood, who survived him. He d. in Berlin, Aug. 6, 1799, aged 86. He resided first in Marlborough, and afterwards in Berlin. There is one peculiarity in the whole family. They seem to have had a taste for a military life. Few families of the same number have furnished as many soldiers for the old French and Indian wars, and the Revolutionary war, as the Hudsons. And in searching for their genealogy, the army rolls will furnish as much information as the parish registers. John Hudson and two of his sons were in the service in the French war, and he and his eight sons were in the service during some period of the Revolutionary war.
- 3- 4 Elisha, b. ———; m. Oct. 4, 1770, Susanna Brigham of Marlborough. He was in the French war in 1756, '58, and '60. He was also in the Revolutionary army. After the war he removed to Canada, where he d.
- 5 Elijah, b. ———; m. Hannah Goodnow. He was in the French war in 1758, and '59; and also in the Revolution.
- 6 Miriam, b. 1746; m. Jonas Babcock of Northborough, where she d.
- 7 Moses, b. Jan. 4, 1749. He was five years in the Revolutionary army; d. unm.
- 8 Aaron, b. Aug. 24, 1750. He was in the Lexington alarm, 1775.
- 9 Hannah, b. July 20, 1752; d. in Berlin, unm.
- 10 Ebenezer, b. May 16, 1755; d. in the Revolutionary army.
- 11 John, b. May 9, 1757; moved to Oxford; was three years in the Continental army.
- 12 Charles, h. ———, 1759; he was a three years' man in the Continental service, and when his time was about expiring, he was accidentally killed by our own men. Two scouting parties met in the night-time, and mistaking each other for the enemy, they fired, and killed him, and another man.
- 13 †Stephen, b. June 12, 1761; he was three years in the Continental service.
- 14 Elizabeth, b. ———; m. Nov. 18, 1779, Levi Fay of Marlborough.
- 3-13- STEPHEN HUDSON m. Feb. 10, 1791, Louisa Williams, dau. of Larkin and Anna (Warren) Williams. He d. March 21, 1827, aged

H. Bufford & Co. Lith. Boston

Charles Hudson

68, and she d. Oct. 7, 1837, aged 70. He enlisted into the Continental army at the age of 16, and after the expiration of his three years, he entered on board a privateer, which crossed the Atlantic, and cruised on the coast of Great Britain, Spain, and Portugal, and returned to the United States about the time peace was concluded. After the war was over he enlisted for a Western campaign against the Indians; but some reverses at the West induced a change of policy, and the company to which he belonged proceeded no farther than West Point, where they remained till their term of service expired. While in the army and on board of the privateer he was in several severe actions. While the army was in the Jerseys, he and others volunteered to scour the country around Philadelphia, to cut off the supplies which the British were drawing from the people. While in that service they were captured, carried into Philadelphia, and thrown into prison, where for several months, in the heat of summer, they suffered extremely from the closeness of their confinement, the want of provision, and the wanton cruelty of the guard. The "Philadelphia Jail," and the "Jersey Prison-ship," will stand as lasting monuments of British cruelty and American suffering, nearly approaching the barbarity and suffering at Andersonville. When these prisoners were exchanged, they were so feeble and emaciated that they were scarcely able to walk, and yet they were turned out without money, without rations, and almost without clothing, to beg their way to their respective regiments. He resided in Marlboro', where his children were born.

- 13-15 Nancy, b. July 8, 1791; d. unm. Sept. 30, 1853, aged 62.
 16 Elizabeth, b. Aug. 28, 1793; m. Sept. 5, 1814, Thomas Cooledge. She had ten children, and d. Feb. 25, 1835, aged 42.
 17 †Charles, b. Nov. 14, 1795; he has been twice married.
 18 Louisa, b. May 3, 1798; m. Joseph Shurtleff. She survived her husband, and d. June 17, 1825.

CHARLES HUDSON m. July 21, 1825, Ann Rider of Shrewsbury, dau. of John and Mercy (Brigham) Rider, b. July 4, 1806. She d. Sept. 19, 1829, aged 23 years; and he m. May 14, 1830, Martha B. Rider, sister of his first wife. He studied theology and was settled in Westminster, where he resided twenty-five years. He represented the town four years in the House of Representatives, the county of Worcester six years in the Senate, and three years in the Executive Council, and the District eight years in Congress. On leaving Congress he was appointed Naval Officer in the Boston Custom House, a place he held four years. He was also eight years a member of the Board of Education, and four years an Assessor of Internal Revenue for the Sixth Collection District of Mass. He has also filled other public stations. He has published several books and tracts on theological and other subjects. Among his publications is a History of Marlboro', his native town. He is a member of several Historical Societies. In 1849, he removed from Westminster to Lexington, where he now resides. His children were born in Westminster.

- 17-19 Harriet Williams, b. Aug. 18, 1827; d. July 26, 1828.
 20 Harriet Ann, b. Sept. 13, 1829; m. Sept. 4, 1854, Henry M. Smith. They reside in Chicago, Ill., where he is editor of a daily paper.
 21 Martha B., b. April 10, 1832; d. April 25, 1832.
 22 Charles Henry, b. July 10, 1833; grad. a civil engineer at the Lawrence Scientific School, Harvard University, 1855. He went West

- in 1855, where he has been engaged in his profession. He m. Jan. 1, 1862, Frances H. Nichols of Boston. They reside at Burlington, Iowa.
- 23 John Williams, b. July 10, 1836; m. March 25, 1865, Sophia W. Mellen, dau. of Hon. Edward and Sophia (Whitney) Mellen of Wayland. He grad. H. C. 1856, taught a high school, read law, and is in practice in Boston. In the late Rebellion, he served with 35th Regt. Mass. Vols. in the Army of the Potomac, and in Kentucky, Mississippi and East Tennessee. He was lieut. col. of his regiment. He has held several town offices.
- 24 Mary Elizabeth, b. March 31, 1839.

There has been another family of Hudsons in Lexington, who came from Boston, and probably were the descendants of William or Francis, who were in Boston or its immediate vicinity at the first planting of the colony.

- 1 JOSEPH HUDSON m. Dec. 24, 1764, Sarah White. She d. and he m. second, 1782, Elizabeth Brown. She d. in Boston, June, 1820. He had Joseph, b. June 15, 1770; William, b. in Cohasset, June 15, 1775; Benjamin, b. Feb. 27, 1783; John, b. March 19, 1786.
- 1- 2 JOHN HUDSON, the last named son of Joseph, m. March, 1808, Lucy Crocker. She d. Aug. 1837, and he m. April 19, 1838, Alice Frost. She d. Nov. 7, 1867. He is living in his 81st year. He came to Lexington in 1843.

 5 Mary, b. March 14, 1815; d. March 22, 1816.
 6 John, b. Nov. 22, 1818; d. May 22, 1840.
 7 William, b. March 17, 1822; m. Oct. 19, 1845, Lucretia Fiske, dau. of Samuel and Ardelia L. (Tufts) Fiske, b. July 12, 1825. He resided first in Lex. and then in Worcester. He entered the service in 1861, served under Burnside in North Carolina, was attached to the signal corps, and d. of disease Aug. 20, 1862. He left two children, John A., b. Dec. 26, 1846; William F., b. Oct. 3, 1848.

THE HUFFMASTER FAMILY.

ISAAC HUFFMASTER, son of Andrew and Abigail Huffmaster, b. in Wo. July 13, 1793. He came to Lex. in 1827, and m. Dec. 1827, Frances Wier, b. in Medford, Sept. 27, 1801. He d. Nov. 21, 1865, aged 72. They had three children,—Frances Maria, b. July 9, 1829; m. April 11, 1854, A. Leonard Jewell of Walt. She d. Jan. 9, 1860, leaving one child, Frank, b. Dec. 30, 1859. Mr. Jewell was killed by the falling of a staging, June 26, 1867. Isaac, b. June 23, 1832, d. Oct. 6, 1832; Isaac, b. Aug. 19, 1838.

THE HUNT FAMILY.

ISAAC HUNT was one of the assessors in 1711, and a subscriber for the purchase of the Common. His record is so meagre that we cannot trace him. The following are probably his children: Thomas, bap. April, 1701; Mary, bap. Sept. 5, 1703; Henry, d. Nov. 1717; Ebenezer, bap. April 16, 1708; Samuel, bap. June 27, 1710; John, bap. March 9, 1712.

INGERSOLL.—JONATHAN INGERSOLL came to reside in Lexington in 1755 from Holliston. In 1757, Jonathan and Nathaniel Ingersoll were in the French war as soldiers from Lex. Hannah Ingersoll was ad. to the ch. in Lex. Oct. 14, 1759. Dorcas Ingersoll was bap. Oct. 21, 1859.

THE JENNISON FAMILY.

JOSIAH JENNISON, b. Jan. 22, 1730, was the son of Nathaniel Jennison of Weston, who m. Oct. 23, 1729, Abigail Mead, dau. of Hopestill and Elizabeth Mead. She d. and he m. Feb. 12, 1756, Mary Tidd, dau. of Joseph and Dorothy (Stickney) Tidd of Lex., b. Jan. 7, 1732. They were admitted to the ch. Nov. 13, 1757. They had eight children, Mary, bap. Nov. 13, 1757, d. young; Betsey, bap. Nov. 13, 1757, ad. to the ch. April 5, 1777; Josiah, bap. Sept. 9, 1759; Mary, bap. Nov. 1, 1761; Nathan, bap. Oct. 28, 1764; John, bap. Oct. 30, 1768; William, bap. Sept. 2, 1770.

THE JOHNSON FAMILY.

The Lexington records open with the name of four Johnsons, John, William, Thomas, and Obadiah, all of adult age, tax payers, and hence residents. The Johnsons were so numerous among the early emigrants, that it is impossible to trace them with accuracy. JOHN JOHNSON of Wo., probably a son of Capt. Edward, m. April 28, 1657, Bethia Reed, and had among other children John, b. Jan. 24, 1658; William, b. Sept. 29, 1662; Obadiah, b. June 15, 1664. These were probably the Johnsons found at Camb. Farms. John, William, and Thomas were subscribers for the meeting house, 1692, and John, William, and Obadiah were taxed in 1693. John and William are continued on the tax list 1695 and 1696.

JOHN JOHNSON had a wife, and probably children, at that time. Mary, his wife, was ad. to the ch. before 1698, and on April 9, 1699, Mary, Prudence, and Rebecca were bap., and on the next Sabbath Sarah and Esther were bap. On the 4th of May, 1699, Mary was bap., and on the 10th of Sept., 1704, Abigail was bap. From these fragmentary records it is not possible to classify the families, and the following records of deaths at that period increases the perplexity; Thomas Johnson, d. Dec. 4, 1690; Mary Johnson, d. July 16, 1691; Mary Johnson, sen., d. Dec. 29, 1694; John Johnson, d. March 8, 1698; Sarah Johnson, d. July 1, 1708. Some of these were probably the children of John.

John Johnson was one of the parish assessors in 1712, and the year following he was consulted relative to a road to pass through his land, and in 1715 he was paid for the land so taken. He must have resided in the northerly part of the town, in the neighborhood of the Lockes and the Blodgetts.

The Lancaster records give the marriage of William Johnson and Ruth Rugg, both of Lexington, Feb. 11, 1725; and the Lex. records contain the following: "William Johnson, son of William and Ruth Johnson, b. April 2, 1725." After this there is no mention of the name for more than half a century.

MUNSON JOHNSON came from Wo. to Lex. in 1795, and David Johnson in 1797. They were brothers, and sons of Francis Johnson of Wo., who was son of Francis, of the same town. Munson m. Betsey Munroe, dau. of Nathan. They had two children b. in Lex., Charlotte and Adelia.

DAVID JOHNSON m. Feb. 2, 1804, Philena Munroe, dau. of John. They had no issue. He d. Oct. 26, 1860, aged 80 years and 5 months. She is living, in her 86th year. He took an active part in the militia, and rose to the rank of major.

There was another branch of Francis Johnson's family which settled in Lexington.

- 1 THOMAS JOHNSON, son of Frederick, and grandson of Francis, came to Lex. the latter part of the last century, to learn a trade of Seth Reed, and m. Sept. 1811, Mary Dudley, dau. of Nathan and Sarah Dudley. He d. July 1, 1830, aged 45; she d. Dec. 3, 1862, aged 70. He left four dau., all of whom m. and have resided in Lex.
- 1-2 Mary D., b. Nov. 11, 1812; m. Jan. 16, 1836, Cotesworth P. Wheeler. They have had Mary Henrietta, b. July 22, 1838, d. July 9, 1866; Clara Ellen, b. Oct. 14, 1840; Theodora Elizabeth, b. Oct. 4, 1844. He d. May 14, 1866.
- 3 Sarah Maria, b. April 22, 1816; m. Feb. 13, 1840, James Sumner.
- 4 Emily, b. July 27, 1818; m. May 30, 1850, William E. Cogswell, and had one son, Willie, b. Jan. 15, 1853, and d. Sept. 7, 1853. He d. Feb. 12, 1860, aged 40.
- 5 Susan Sprague, b. July 4, 1824; m. Dec. 30, 1846, David A. Tuttle.

There has been another family of Johnsons in Lex., the pedigree of which we have not been able to trace.

- 1 JOHN JOHNSON m. Nov. 12, 1810, Eunice Pierce of Weston. He d. June 1, 1856, aged 76. He was son of Obadiah Johnson, who m. Sarah Loring, dau. of John Loring. Tradition says that he had John and Sarah. Who Obadiah Johnson was, whence he came, and whither he went, we have not been able to ascertain. John lived and d. on East street, near Lowell street.
- 1-2 Elbridge, b. April 11, 1811; d. April 12, 1811.
- 3 John E., b. Sept. 11, 1812; d. June 27, 1826.
- 4 Susan A., b. April 17, 1815; m. April 2, 1831, Horatio Brown.
- 5 Thomas S., b. Oct. 3, 1817; m. Aug. 15, 1844, Margaret Sweney of Charlestown, where he d. 1858.
- 6 Nancy A., b. Aug. 28, 1820; d. Oct. 20, 1822.
- 7 Ann M., b. March 23, 1823; m. Aug. 30, 1843, Abel Jones of Acton.
- 8 Sarah J., b. March 13, 1825; m. June 11, 1842, Alfred Laws of Westford.
- 9 Almira, b. Ap. 30, 1827; m. Ap. 19, 1850, Wyman Skilton of Bur.
- 10 John H., b. Sept. 18, 1830.
- 11 Andrew, b. Feb. 11, 1833; m. Oct. 19, 1866, Sarah Cheney of Orange.

There is still another family of the name. CHARLES W. JOHNSON, b. in Wayland, June 5, 1805, m. April 12, 1832, Martha S. Miles of Con. He moved to Lex. in 1848. They have four children; Charles E., b. Nov. 12, 1833; m. Nov. 29, 1859, Kitty M. Hadlock; Joseph M., b. Aug. 10, 1835; Martha M., b. July 18, 1838, m. June 19, 1863, Albert F. Nurse; William R., b. Mar. 2, 1842.

THE KENDALL FAMILY.

Though the Kendalls have never been numerous in Lex., there was one family in town about the time of its incorporation. They came from Wo., where Francis Kendall was, as early as 1640, and was made freeman 1647. He m. Dec. 24, 1644, Mary Tidd of that town, and had John, b. 1646, Thomas, b. 1648, Samuel, b. 1659, besides several daughters. Francis Kendall was the ancestor of most of the Kendalls in Massachusetts, and indeed of New England. His son Thomas, m. Ruth, and had among other children Thomas, b. May 19, 1677. He was the first of the name in Lex.

- 1 THOMAS KENDALL probably m. March 30, 1796, Abigail Broughton of Wo. as his first wife, and about 1701, m. second, Sarah, dau. of Rev. Thomas Cheever of Chelsea. She d. in Framingham, May 2, 1761, aged 75. They probably came to Lex. about 1710. In 1713, in the quaint language of the record, "discourse being on foot concerning highways, Capt. William Reed offered to give for the peace and quiet of the town," a highway for Thomas Kendall and the neighborhood westerly of him, through his land to the town road. From this time there was a long, bitter controversy about Thomas Kendall's road, which was settled by Mr. Kendall's giving a bond to the town in 1730, binding himself and his heirs to save the town harmless from all expense in maintaining the road forever. It is difficult to fix the exact locality of the residence of Mr. Kendall, but it would seem that he resided south and west of the great meadow, near the brook running into the same, and probably near what is now known as the Thorning Place.

Thomas Kendall and his wife were ad. to the ch. in Lex. 1728. He was constable in 1718, and filled several other subordinate town offices. In 1745, he and his wife were dismissed to the ch. in Framingham, to which place they had removed. Their first four children were born in Wo., and the rest in Lexington.

- 1-2 Sarah, b. Sept. 7, 1702.
 3 Thomas, b. July 30, 1704. He was ad. to the ch. in Lex. 1726.
 4 Abigail, b. Aug. 10, 1706; ad. to the ch. in Lex. Nov. 29, 1724.
 5 Benjamin, b. Feb. 25, 1708. He went to Sherb., where he m. Jan. 24, 1733, Kezia Leland, and had a family in that place.
 6 Joshua, b. Aug. 7, 1713; m. 1745, Sarah Dewing of Natick, and resided in Framingham.
 7 Ezekiel, b. Dec. 21, 1715. 8 Elizabeth, b. March 4, 1718.
 9 Ruth, b. June 13, 1720. 10 Jane, b. Nov. 14, 1722.
 11 Elijah, } b. Jan. 30, 1725; } m. May 24, 1750, Jemima Smith, Sud.
 12 Elisha, } } probably d. young.

There were other Kendalls in Lex. at a somewhat early day, probably relatives of Thomas. Eleazer, of Eleazer and Hannah Kendall, bap. April 2, 1714; William, bap. May 6, 1716, ad. to ch. Oct. 16, 1737. Daniel Fiske of Walt. m. April 7, 1763, Sarah Kendall of Lexington.

OLIVER W. KENDALL was son of Capt. Oliver and Lucy Kendall of Ashby. He was b. Sept. 17, 1805; m. Feb. 8, 1831, Mary, dau. of Paul and Elizabeth Gates of Ashby, b. May 13, 1807. They came to Lex. immediately after their marriage. He has filled the office of constable about twenty years. They have two children; Frank O., b. Jan. 18, 1834; m. Jan. 15, 1860, Estelle Ditson of Boston. They r. in Marlborough. He was in service nine months in the late rebellion. Mary Elizabeth, b. Sept. 4, 1836; m. March 27, 1862, Charles Hervey Bennett. He d. July 8, 1864.

KIBBE.—In 1710, SHEREBRIAH KIBBE and Elizabeth Kibbe, probably his wife, were ad. to the ch. in Lex. From what place they came, we have not learned. He subscribed, in 1711, for the purchase of the Common, and in 1713 was appointed sealer of leather. The following is found upon the church records: Seth Kibbe, bap. Feb. 17, 1711; Sarah Kibbe, bap. April 23, 1713; Sept. 9, 1722, bap. Samuel, Ebenezer, Elizabeth, and Mary Kibbe,—all of whom owned the covenant but Ebenezer. Esther Stone, dau. of Sherebriah Kibbe, and Hannah Kibbe, were also bap.

THE LAUGHTON FAMILY.

John Laughton, and his wife Sarah, came to Lex. from Reading about 1720. The first mention of them is the baptism of their dau. Hannah, Nov. 6, 1720. They were ad. to the ch. in Lex. from the church of Reading, Jan. 24, 1723. He resided on Monument street, at or near the place recently occupied by Samuel A. Houghton. In 1733, John Laughton was chosen deacon, and became a prominent man both in the church and in the town. In 1722, he was chosen one of the assessors, and filled that office nine years. He was also one of the selectmen in 1738. July 1, 1744, he and his wife and his son Jeremiah were dismissed to the ch. at Harvard, to which place they had removed a short time before. They had four children bap. in Lex. — Hannah, b. Oct. 30, 1720; Jeremiah, b. July, 1723, d. soon after birth; Jeremiah, b. Aug. 4, 1725, moved to Harvard; Hepzibah, bap. July 27, 1735, m. Feb. 9, 1758, Edward Winship.

There were other Laughtons in Lex. about that period. THOMAS LAUGHTON, and his wife Abigail, were in town, and had two children bap. viz. Sarah, bap. Dec. 10, 1735, and Thomas, Nov. 15, 1737. Thomas, the father, was ad. to the ch. April 14, 1728. He may have been a brother of Dea. John. Both left town about the same time.

THE LAWRENCE FAMILY.

Though the Lawrences were not among the earliest settlers in Lex., the name appears on our records as early as 1693; and for a considerable period they were among the prominent citizens. They were the descendants of JOHN LAWRENCE, an early settler in Wat. This family dates back to the early period of 1190. It commenced with Sir Robert Lawrence, who was present at the seige of Acre, 1191. The immediate descendants of Sir Robert married into the family of Washington, and thus the name of Lawrence was continued in the family down to the grandfather of Gen. Washington. The grandson of Sir Robert m. Matilda, dau. of John de Washington.

1 JOHN LAWRENCE was probably in Wat. as early as 1635, as his eldest child was born there March 14, 1636. He was admitted free-man April 17, 1637. He had two wives, and fifteen children. By his first wife, Elizabeth, he had thirteen, and by his last, Susanna Batchelder, he had two. The history of this family is very obscure, but little being known of the children except their names.

There has been another family of Lawrences in town more recently, which originated from Wat., but it is thought by those well informed, that there was no relationship between them. John Lawrence and George Lawrence were both early settlers in Wat. Bond, in his genealogies of Watertown, says, "The will of John Lawrence furnishes no reason for supposing that he and George were nearly related. All the families of this name in Wat., Walt., and Weston, after the removal of John and his family to Groton, appear to be descendants from George.

The preceding families descended from John, and the following families from George.

THE LORING FAMILY.

Dea. Thomas Loring and his wife Jane (Newton), came to this country 1635, and settled in Hingham. They were from Axminster, Devonshire, Eng. His son John, b. in Eng. Dec. 22, 1630, m. 1657, Mary Baker of Hing., by whom he had several children. Joseph, his second son, was b. March 10, 1660. His descendants I give below, so far as they relate to Lex.

- 1 JOSEPH LORING of Hingham m. Oct. 25, 1683, Hannah Leavitt. He d. Feb. 19, 1692, and she m. Aug. 25, 1693, Joseph Estabrook, then of Hingham, but afterwards of Lex., where he became a very prominent man. He d. Sept. 23, 1733, and she d. Oct. 25, 1728.
- 1-2 †Joseph, b. Sept. 29, 1684. He settled in Lexington.
3 Nehemiah, b. June 27, 1686.
4 Joshua, b. Sept. 21, 1688. He came to Lex. with his brother Joseph, was ad. to the ch. in 1708, and dismissed to the First Church in Boston, June 8, 1712.
5 Submit, b. Aug. 11, 1691; d. Jan. 8, 1740, unm. Mr. Hancock, in his church record, under date of Jan. 4, 1740, makes this entry: "Submit Loring I baptized after meeting at Mr. Loring's house, and this is the first I ever baptized in private. She was very sick."
- 1-2- JOSEPH LORING m. Lydia Fiske, dau. of David Fiske of Camb. Farms, b. May 17, 1685. He probably came to Lex. from Hingham about 1706. He bought ninety acres of land in Camb. Farms, in 1706, of John Poulter. The deed designates Joseph Loring as "of Hingham." In 1711, he was one of the subscribers for the purchase of the Common. He and his wife Lydia were ad. to the ch. July 4, 1708; and of course they were m. before that time. He was chosen one of the deacons in 1743, and d. July 4, 1746, aged 63. She d. Oct. 4, 1758. He was a valuable citizen; was constable in 1714, and town treasurer in 1725 and 1726.

- 2- 6 Lydia, bap. June 21, 1711; m. June 11, 1731, John Mason.
- 7 †Joseph, bap. Aug. 21, 1713; m. Kezia Gove.
- 8 Sarah, bap. July 17, 1715; m. Dec. 2, 1736, Thaddeus Bowman.
- 9 John, bap. Aug. 11, 1717; d. Dec. 13, 1717.
- 10 Hannah, bap. Sept. 20, 1719; m. March 22, 1735, Samuel Winship.

2-7- JOSEPH LORING m. Jan. 1, 1736, Kezia Gove. He d. Sept. 13, 1787, aged 74, and she d. Sept. 16, 1789, aged 75. He was chosen dea. May 20, 1756, and held that office thirty-one years. He was often employed on important committees in the town. He resided on Main street, on the place opposite the Town Hall. His house was pillaged and destroyed by the British on the 19th of April, 1775. The account made out by Deacon Loring at the time, shows the amount of his suffering, and the wantonness of the enemy. He sets down his loss as follows:

A large mansion house and barn seventy feet long, and a corn barn, all burnt,	£ 330 00
Household goods and furniture, viz., eight good feather beds and bedding; a large quantity of pewter and brass ware; three cases of drawers; two mahogany tables, with furniture for eight rooms,	230 00
All the wearing apparel of my family, consisting of nine persons,	60 00
All my husbandry tools and utensils, with a cider mill and press, with five tons of hay and two calves,	72 00
About two hundred rods of stone wall thrown down,	5 00
Specie,	3 00
	£ 720 00

N. B. The above-mentioned buildings were the first that were destroyed in the town, and were near the ground where the brigade commanded by Lord Percy met the detachment retreating under Lt.-Col. Smith. It does not appear that any of the militia were in or near these buildings, neither could they in any way either oppose or retard the British troops in their operations; therefore the destruction must be considered as brutal, barbarous, and wanton.

JOSEPH LORING.

- 7-13 John, b. June 28, 1742; m. June 8, 1765, Elizabeth Howe of Con.
- 14 Lydia, b. Aug. 27, 1745; m. Nov. 26, 1776, Capt. Wm. Chambers, of N. H.

JONATHAN LORING m. Rhoda —. She d. Oct. 22, 1809, and he m. Feb. 13, 1812, Mrs. Hannah Danforth of Lex. He was a member of the gallant band commanded by Capt. Parker, and was upon the Common on the 19th of April. He was also with the detachment which marched to Camb. on the 6th of May, and also on the day of the battle on Bunker's Hill. He was also at Cambridge two months in the campaign of 1776. He not only performed his duty after the war had commenced, but he performed an important duty introductory to the affairs of the 19th of April. On the evening of the 18th, when it was known that certain British officers had gone up toward Concord, Jonathan Loring and two others volunteered to go up and watch their movements. He was taken prisoner and kept several hours, till on the return of these officers he was set at liberty near Lexington Common, about daylight in the morning. This family acted a conspicuous part on that memorable occasion. The church plate was kept at the house of Dea. Loring, and fearing that the British soldiers in their vandalism might destroy it, Lydia Loring, a sister of Jonathan, took the precaution to secrete it under some brush not far from the house, and so prevented it from being destroyed or carried off with the rest of the property of the family. He moved with his family to Mason, N. H.

JOHN MASON m. Oct. 18, 1699, Elizabeth Spring, dau. of Lieut. John and Hannah Spring of Wat. He came to Lex. about the time of his marriage. In seating the meeting house in 1699, "John Mason was plast in y^e second seat in y^e front gallereye." He and his wife were ad. to the eh. Dec. 19, 1708. He was one of the assessors in 1702, and a subscriber for the purchase of the Common in 1711, and was constable in 1714. He was town clerk 1729, '31, '34, '35, and '36, and selectman about the same period. His name upon the record is also dignified by the title of Ensign. He lived on the Main street, a little below the old Munroe Tavern, and hence the name of "Mason's Hollow."

THE MEAD FAMILY.

There is considerable difficulty in tracing the Meads. The first of the name appear to be migratory, and are found in different places. Savage informs us, that Gabriel Mead of Dorchester was made a freeman in 1638, and d. 1666, aged 79; that his will mentions several daughters, and that he had a son, Israel, b. 1639, who lived in Wat., moved to Dedham, and perhaps to Wo. Israel, probably son of the preceding, is sometimes spoken of as of Wo., and sometimes as of Camb., but it is undoubtedly the same person, and from him the Lexington Meads in part descended.

- 1 ISRAEL MEAD, sometimes of Camb., m. Feb. 26, 1669, Mary Hall, dau. of widow Mary Hall. He was appointed in Camb. in 1683, “viewer of wood.” Whether he resided at that time in the old town or at the Farms, we are unable to say; but in 1693, when the North precinct was organized, he must have been within its territory, as he was taxed for ministerial land purchased at that time. The same tax bill bears the name of his son, Thomas Mead. Israel Mead was one of the original members of the ch. organized 1696, and Thomas was ad. 1699, and his wife, Hasaniah, was admitted in August of the same year. During the same season two of Thomas's children, Hannah and Sarah, were bap. The record of Israel's wife's death is among the first of the obituaries on the parish records, being Sept. 1, 1692. Israel was one of the committee to seat the gallery of the meeting house in 1700. He d. Sept. 6, 1714. His will, dated April 2, 1713, and proved Sept. 20, 1714, mentions particularly sons Thomas, John, Stephen, and Ebenezer, and dau. Margaret Locke, Mary, and Ruth. He also makes a bequest to four grandchildren,—the oldest child of Thomas, John, Stephen, and Margaret Locke. He also remembers his faithful spiritual teacher. “I give to Mr. John Hancock, the reverend pastor of the church of Christ in Lexington, twenty shillings.”

- 1-2 †Thomas, b. about 1670.
 3 †John, b. about 1672.
 4 Hannah, b. about 1674; d. Jan. 28, 1702.
 5 Margaret, b. Jan. 20, 1676; m. Joseph Locke, as his second wife.
 6 †Stephen, b. about 1679; lived and d. in Concord.
 7 Mary, b. Feb. 10, 1682.
 8 Ruth, b. Aug. 10, 1684; probably d. Nov. 3, 1726, unm.
 9 Ebenezer, b. May 11, 1686.

1-2- THOMAS MEAD m. Hasaniah —. He was in the North precinct in 1693, and he and his wife were ad. to the ch. in 1699. In 1700, when they “seated the meeting house,” he had a seat assigned him in the “front side galery.” He was constable in 1704 and in 1714. It is doubtful whether any of his sons, except Israel and Cornelius, lived permanently in Lex., as we do not find their names upon the tax bills extant.

- 2-10 Hannah, bap. May 8, 1699; d. 1723.
 11 Sarah, bap. May 8, 1699.
 12 Thomas, bap. Sept. 1700; probably went to Littleton.
 13 Jonathan, bap. Sept. 6, 1702.
 14 †Israel, bap. Aug. 16, 1704; m. Sarah —.
 15 †Samuel, bap. May 3, 1706; went to Harvard.
 16 Mary, bap. March 3, 1709. 17 James, bap. April 8, 1711.
 18 †Cornelius, bap. June 3, 1714; m. Hannah Hadley.

1-3- JOHN MEAD m. Rebecca —. He probably moved to Weston. He owned the covenant in Lex. Feb. 23, 1707, when “John Mead, the first-born of John,” was baptized. Rebecca was admitted to the ch. July 31, 1709. He probably left town soon after the birth of his children named below, as his name is not found upon the tax bill in 1729.

- 3-19 John, bap. Feb. 23, 1707. 20 Joseph, bap. Feb. 13, 1709.
 21 Lydia, b. April 7, 1714. 22 Israel, b. Aug. 27, 1716.
 23 Rebecca, b. March 1, 1719. 24 Hannah, b. Aug. 13, 1721.

1-6- STEPHEN MEAD. The Lex. records give no information of him or his family. By the Probate records I learn that in 1717, Thomas Mead (No. 2 in this table) was appointed guardian of Joseph Mead, the only child of his brother Stephen, late of Concord; and in 1734, Joseph Mead of Bedford settled with his uncle Thomas, his late guardian.

- 2-14- ISRAEL MEAD m. Sarah —. She d. June 22, 1745, aged 37, and he m. Mary Robbins, Feb. 21, 1751. He was ad. to the ch. March 28, 1742.
- 14-25 Sarah, b. Aug. 14, 1732; m. Dec. 26, 1753, Nathan Pierce.
26 Hannah, b. Jan. 3, 1734.
27 John, b. June 2, 1745. 28 Mary, bap. Sept. 17, 1747.
- 2-15- SAMUEL MEAD was ad. to the ch. 1742, and dismissed to the ch. in Harvard, July 1, 1744, where he resided and had a family. Samuel, one of his sons, grad. H. C. 1787, studied divinity, and settled at Alstead, N. H. He d. 1822. William O. Mead of Belmont, a broker in Boston, is a son of Rev. Samuel.
- 2-18- CORNELIUS MEAD m. Oct. 15, 1751, Hannah Hadley. He d. 1759, and his wid. administered upon his estate.
- 18-29 Sarah, b. Sept. 20, 1753; m. Nov. 11, 1779, Thomas Jones of Con.
30 Abner, b. Dec. 15, 1754. He served in the Revolutionary war.
31 Benoni, b. May 1, 1756; d. Aug. 4, 1766.
32 Susanna, b. Jan. 26, 1758.

There is another branch of the Mead family, which should be kept distinct, though it is believed that they were all of the same original stock.

- 1 DAVID MEAD of Camb., perhaps son of Gabriel, m. at Wat. Sept. 24, 1675, Hannah Warren, and had David, Hannah, John, and probably Hopedill, and other children. David admitted freeman 1683.
- 1- 2 Hannah, b. Sept. 1676.
3 †David, b. 1678; m. Feb. 5, 1708, Hannah Smith of Wat., where he settled.
4 †Hopedill, b. 1681; m. Aug. 22, 1707, Elizabeth Hastings.
5 John, b. 1685. 6 Sarah, b. 1688. 7 Susanna, b. 1690.
- 1-3- DAVID MEAD m. Feb. 5, 1708, Hannah Smith, dau. of Joseph and Hannah (Tidd) Smith. He settled in Watertown, (which then included Waltham,) probably near the line of Lex. In the record of a public meeting in Lex. Feb. 23, 1712, is this entry,—“ David Mead of Watertown did request that he, paying twenty shillings, might be interested in the meeting house for himself and family. Voted in the affirmative ” She united with the ch. in Lex. June 22, 1718, and in October of that year their first four children were bap. She d. in childbed, Oct. 4, 1723. He d. in Walt. Feb. 25, 1767, aged 89.
- 3- 8 Lydia, b. Dec. 1, 1710.
9 Moses, b. Oct. 21, 1712; ad. to the ch. 1742.
10 †Joshua, b. Nov. 9, 1715; m. March 24, 1750, Lucy Parker.
11 †Matthew, b. Aug. 9, 1717; m. Martha Danforth.
12 Susanna, b. Aug. 1, 1719; m. Dec. 14, 1738, Jacob Bigelow, Walt.
13 Hopedill, b. Sept. 7, 1721; m. March 13, 1750, Sarah Pierce, Walt.
14 David, b. Sept. 23, 1723; m. Oct. 16, 1747, Mary Bond, settled in Linc. He and his wife were ad. to the ch. in Lex. June 19, 1748, and dismissed to Linc. April 26, 1767.

- 1-4- HOPESTILL MEAD m. Aug. 22, 1707, Elizabeth Hastings. He d. Aug. 9, 1750, aged 69. In his will, dated Aug. 7, 1750, and proved Sept. 24, 1750, he mentions wife Elizabeth, kinsman Benjamin Hastings, dau. Abigail Jennison, grandson Josiah Jennison. He makes Joshua Mead of Waltham, whom he designates as his kinsman, executor of his will. As he mentions no child but Abigail, and looks among his kinsmen for heirs, it is probable that he had no other child living at that time. Though he probably lived within the limits of Waltham, his associations were with Lex., and he attended church here. He was ad. to the ch. in Lex. Sept. 12, 1742, and was dismissed to Waltham, Sept. 1, 1750.
- 4-15 Abigail, bap. Aug. 30, 1713; m. Oct. 23, 1729, Nathaniel Jennison.
- 3-10- JOSHUA MEAD m. March 24, 1750, Lucy Parker, dau. of Andrew and Sarah (Whitney) Parker, b. April 4, 1731. They were ad. to the ch. Dec. 8, 1751. Though Joshua Mead united with the ch. in Lex., and a part of his children were bap. here, he resided within the limits of Waltham.
- 10-16 Lucy, bap. Jan. 19, 1752; d. December of the same year.
 17 Mary, b. May 1, 1753; m. Dec. 3, 1772, Abraham Whitney.
 18 Moses, b. Dec. 2, 1754; m. May 22, 1777, Lizzy Viles. He was in the Revolutionary war.
 19 Lydia, b. May 17, 1756; m. June 1, 1775, Joseph Adams of Newton.
 20 Elijah, b. Sept. 30, 1758; m. Abigail ——.
 21 Jacob, b. Oct. 30, 1760; d. 1816.
- 3-11- MATTHEW MEAD m. Jan. 23, 1754, Martha Danforth of Billerica. He was ad. to the ch. 1742, and d. April 1, 1796, aged 78; she d. Aug. 8, 1792, aged 63. He resided near the town hall, where Mr. Russell now resides. His house was ransacked by the British, April 19, 1775. He was frequently elected to office, as constable, school committee, and tythingman.
- 11-22 Ward, b. Dec. 16, 1755.
 23 Martha, b. Aug. 10, 1756; d. young.
 24 Rhoda, bap. July 9, 1758; m. Sept. 13, 1786, Philemon Munroe, as his second wife.
 25 †Levi, bap. Aug. 14, 1759; m. Betsey Converse.
 26 †Josiah, b. Oct. 18, 1761; m. Sally Locke.
 27 Elias, bap. May 29, 1763; d. June 1, 1765.
- 11-25- LEVI MEAD m. Betsey Converse of Bed. They were ad. to the ch. May 30, 1784. He served in the war of the Revolution, and was, in 1796, a captain in the militia. He moved with his family, about 1801, to Chesterfield, N. H.
- 25-28 Levi, bap. Aug. 8, 1784. 29 Joseph, b. ———; d. young.
 30 James, b. Oct. 26, 1788. 31 Bradley, bap. Oct. 18, 1792.
 32 Larkin, bap. Oct. 18, 1795. 33 Elias, bap. March 17, 1799.
 34 Marshall, b. in Chesterfield, N. H.
 35 Betsey, b. in Chesterfield, N. H.
- 11-26- JOSIAH MEAD m. May 12, 1789, Sally Locke, dau. of Joseph and Sarah (Baldwin) Locke, b. May 27, 1766. He d. July 5, 1829, aged 68; she d. Sept. 2, 1839, aged 73. He was a trader in the town, and occupied the place where Mr. Saville now trades.

- 26-36 Clarissa, b. June 10, 1790; m. Nov. 30, 1815, Nathaniel Harrington. She d. 1866.
- 37 Maria Howard, b. June 12, 1792; m. Dec. 7, 1821, Nathan Chandler.
- 38 She is living in Lex. in her 76th year.
- 39 Sally, bap. April 13, 1794; d. in infancy.
- 40 Martha J., b. June 6, 1797; m. Feb. 1, 1824, Nathan Harrington.
- 41 She d. June 26, 1835, leaving two children.
- Sally*, bap. Feb. 22, 1801; m. Oct. 11, 1821, James Hastings of Linc. They are both living in Lex.
- Franklin*, bap. Aug. 23, 1803; d. Oct. 1805.

The name of Mead has become extinct in Lex. In the early records the name is often spelled with an s, Meads, though in later years the s has been dropped.

THE MERRIAM FAMILY.

The Merriams were very numerous in Lexington during the first seventy-five years of her history. They came from England, and settled in Concord, where they were among the prominent families. Shattuck, in his history of Concord, tells the old story, which he thinks may be true in this case, of three brothers coming over together, Robert, George, and Joseph. Robert was town clerk in Con. for a long period, and also a representative. He d. without issue, Feb. 15, 1681. George m. and had a family; but Joseph was the ancestor of the Concord families. The descendants of Joseph constituted the Lexington Merriams. The imperfect records render it impossible to trace this family with entire accuracy.

The Merriams from this stock became numerous in several towns in Worcester county, and in other parts of the State.

- 1 JOSEPH MERRIAM took the freeman's oath, March 14, 1638. He d. Jan. 1, 1641. We have found no mention of his wife's name, and no full record of his children.
- 1-2 †Joseph, b. —, 1630; m. July 12, 1653, Sarah Stone.
- 3 William, b. —; m. Sarah — and moved to Lynn.
- 4 †John, b. —, 1639; m. Mary Cooper.
- 5 Sarah, b. —; m. Oct. 14, 1658, William Hall.
- 1-2- JOSEPH MERRIAM m. July 12, 1653, Sarah Stone, dau. of Dea. Gregory. He took the freeman's oath, May 22, 1651, and d. April 20, 1677, aged 47. His tombstone is the oldest one in Concord. His wife survived him nearly thirty years, and d. Ap. 5, 1704, aged 71.
- 2-6 Sarah, b. Aug. 2, 1654; m. Samuel Fletcher.
- 7 Lydia, b. Aug. 3, 1656; d. Dec. 29, 1690, unm.
- 8 †Joseph, b. May 25, 1658; d. May 31, 1727, in Lexington.
- 9 Elizabeth, b. May 20, 1660; m. Isaac Wood.
- 10 †John, b. May 30, 1662; d. 1736.
- 11 Mary, b. June 4, 1664; m. Isaac Stearns.
- 12 †Robert, b. Dec. 17, 1667; d. Feb. 11, 1717, in Lex.
- 13 †Thomas, b. 1672; m. Mary Haywood of Concord.
- 14 Ruth, b. —; m. Nathaniel Stone.
- 15 David, b. —; d. 1744, at Townsend.
- 1-4- JOHN MERRIAM m. Oct. 21, 1663, Mary Cooper at Concord. He was made freeman, May 12, 1675. She d. March 5, 1731, aged 85; he d. Feb. 2, 1704, aged 65.

- 4-16 John, b. Sept. 3, 1666.
 17 Anna, b. Sept. 7, 1669; m. Aug. 9, 1692, Daniel Brooks.
 18 Nathaniel, b. Dec. 10, 1672. 19 Joseph, b. Aug. 20, 1677.
 20 Samuel, b. July 25, 1681.
 21 Ebenezer, b. ———; m. Nov. 8, 1711, Elizabeth Brooks.
 22 Sarah, b. ———; m. Edward Wheeler.
- 2-8- JOSEPH MERRIAM m. Charity —. Like his brothers, he was early at Cambridge Farms, and was a subscriber to the first meeting house in 1692, and in the following year was assessed in the first tax bill of the precinct; and hence was a resident there at the time. He was not called so frequently to places of honor and trust, as some of his kinsmen, though he was elected to the dignified office of tythingman, which in that day was conferred upon none but the most respectable citizens. He d. May 31, 1727.
- 8-23 Ruth, bap. Nov. 6, 1698; d. April 20, 1749, unm.
 24 Joseph, bap. 1717; d. 1747.
- 2-10- JOHN MERRIAM m. 1688, Mary Wheeler of Con. What time he came to Camb. Farms, does not appear, but probably about the time of his marriage. His name is borne upon our earliest records, being a subscriber for the meeting house in 1692. He was one of the original members of the church in 1696, and was chosen deacon at that time. He became one of the most prominent men in the parish and in the town. He frequently represented the church in ecclesiastical councils. He was chosen an assessor in 1700 and 1711, under the parish organization; and when the precinct was erected into a town, he was elected one of the selectmen,—an office to which he was often re-elected. He enjoyed, in a great degree, the confidence of his fellow citizens. He resided in the southwesterly part of the town. The record of his family is very imperfect; there being no account of any children from 1689 to 1701, though it is probable they had children during that period. He d. May 21, 1727; she d. Dec. 26, 1747, aged 75.
- 10-25 Mary, b. Feb. 6, 1689.
 26 †Benjamin, bap. Jan. 1701; m. Mary —.
 27 †Jonas, bap. Jan. 12, 1704; m. Abigail Locke, Oct. 3, 1728.
 28 Ebenezer, bap. May 30, 1706; he moved to Oxford about 1729.
 29 Joshua, bap. Feb. 22, 1708.
 30 William, b. Sept. 1712; d. June 21, 1735.
 31 †Amos, bap. July 25, 1715; m. Nov. 9, 1738, Hannah Danforth.
- 2-12- ROBERT MERRIAM m. Abigail —. He was a subscriber for the meeting house in Lex. in 1692; but probably was not a permanent resident, as he was not taxed in 1693 or 1696. In 1700, he was one of the assessors, and in 1711 was one of the subscribers for the purchase of the Common. He and his wife were ad. to the ch. in 1698. He d. Feb. 11, 1717, and she d. June 16, 1717.
- 12-32 †Joseph, b. May 3, 1697; m. Mary Bruce of Weston.
 33 Abigail, b. Oct. 3, 1699.
 34 Hannah, b. April 16, 1701; m. John Bruce, Oct. 9, 1718.
 35 Robert, b. July 15, 1703; d. 1713.
 36 Jonathan, b. July 25, 1705; d. Feb. 20, 1738.
 37 Hezekiah, b. May 30, 1707.
 38 Sarah, bap. July 2, 1710; d. July 8, 1713.
 39 Mary, b. Dec. 11, 1712.
 40 Sarah, bap. July 2, 1716; m. Isaac Allen of Weston, 1739.

- 2-13- THOMAS MERRIAM m. Dec. 23, 1696, Mary Haywood of Concord. The record of his marriage speaks of him as of Cambridge; but Lex. at that time was a part of Camb., and as he was one of the original members of the church formed in 1696, he was probably residing here at the time of his marriage. His wife was dismissed from Con. to the ch. in Lex. in 1698. Thomas Merriam and others were permitted to "build a seat for their wives on the back side of the meeting house, from goodwife Reed's seat to the woman's stayers." He was a constable in 1716, and a selectman, 1718, '22, '25. He d. Aug. 16, 1738, aged 66, and she d. Sept. 29, 1756, aged 81. The early Merriams all resided in the southwest part of the town.
- 13-41 †Thomas, bap. April 21, 1700; m. Tabitha Stone.
 42 Lydia, bap. Aug. 1, 1703; m. Nathaniel Eaton, and r. in Reading.
 43 †Nathaniel, bap. Dec. 9, 1705; m. Esther Muzzy, dau. of Benjamin Muzzy.
 44 Simon, bap. Nov. 28, 1708; d. Feb. 8, 1747.
 45 David, bap. Sept. 2, 1711; d. Dec. 15, 1743, in Townsend.
 46 Isaac, bap. July 11, 1714; m. and had two children, one of whom d. 1740. He d. Sept. 1741.

THE MUNROE FAMILY.

The Munroes, who acted a conspicuous part on the 19th of April, 1775, and were among the first settlers in Lexington, and who have from time to time filled some of the principal offices in the town, were of Scotch descent; though it is said that they came to Scotland from Ireland at a remote period. Dr. Doddridge, in his Life of Col. Gardner, has given an interesting account of the ancient family of Munroes, (of whom the Lexington Munroes were descendants,) from which account this notice is mostly taken.

The family of Munroes of Fowlis is among the most ancient and honorable families in the north of Scotland, and has generally been remarkable for a brave, martial, and patriotic spirit. They have intermarried with many of the best families and nobility in the North of Scotland; and, what is more to their honor, they were among the very first in those parts, who embraced the Reformation, which they zealously supported.

According to Buchanan, it was in the beginning of the eleventh century, and about the time of the conquest of England, when Malcolm, the second of that name, King of Scots, first distributed, or as it was expressed, few-ed out, or fee-ed, the lands in Scotland to the principal families, on account of their eminent services in his battles with the Danes. According to tradition, it was on that occasion that the country between the Borough of Dingwall and the waters of Alness in the shire of Ross, was given to Donald Munroe. A part of these lands were afterwards by the King erected into a Barony, called the Barony of Fowlis. Some of the Munroes were lords of this barony from its first erection; but we shall commence with them about the time they became Protestants.

George Munroe, IX Baron of Fowlis in a direct line from the above-mentioned Donald, the first Baron, was slain at the memorable battle of Bannockburn, fought by Robert Bruce of Scotland against Edward II, of England, in 1314. And George, X Baron of Fowlis, son of the former, was also slain, with a great many other of his name, at the battle of Hollydon Hill, near Berwick, where the Scots were defeated, July 22, 1333. Robert Munroe, XVII Baron of Fowlis, was slain at the battle of Pinkie, near Edinburgh, with many of his name, when the Scots were again defeated, in 1547. The first Protestant of this family was Robert Munroe, XVIII Baron of Fowlis, son of the last-mentioned, who came to the assistance of Mary, Queen of Scots, when she was involved in trouble at Inverness. He d. in 1588, and was succeeded by his son, Robert, XIX Baron of Fowlis, who d. the same year with his father. The next Baron was his brother Hector Munroe, who d. 1603.

Robert Munroe, son of Hector, was the XXI Baron. He flourished at the time that Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden was engaged in a Protestant war with Ferdinand II, in defence of the civil and religious liberties of Germany. The Baron, moved with pity and patriotism, joined Adolphus, with a great many of his clan of the same name, where they gained great distinction as soldiers. Robert became so eminent, that he was made colonel of two regiments, one of foot and the other of horse, at the same time. He d. of a wound received in crossing the Danube, in 1633. He was succeeded by Sir Henry Munroe, XXII Baron of Fowlis, the next male heir of the family, who was also a colonel in the same service, and upon crossing over into Britain, he was created a Baronet, in 1633. He d. at Hamburg two years after. His son, Sir Hector Munroe, was the XXIII Baron of Fowlis, and d. without issue 1651. Sir Robert Munroe, XXIV Baron of Fowlis, being the next of kin, succeeded him.

Up to this time there were three generals, eight colonels, five lieutenant-colonels, eleven majors, and above thirty captains of the name of Munroe, besides a great number of subalterns,—all of the same original stock; the descendants of Donald Munroe. Some of the family were for a long period in considerable military command in Sweden and many parts of Germany, and even in India.

General Robert Munroe, uncle to Sir Robert, the XXIV Baron, was in 1641, appointed by Charles II, major-general of the Scotch forces that were sent to Ireland to suppress the rebellion there. In 1644, at the head of 14,000 of the Scotch and English Protestants, he fought and defeated 22,000 of the Irish in Ulster. In 1645, he was surprised and taken prisoner by Col. Monk, and d. soon after. The general was succeeded in command by his nephew, Sir George Munroe, who had served under him in Ireland. He was made major-general by Charles II, and had a body of troops under him at Kendall, when James, Duke of Hamilton, was defeated by Cromwell at Lancaster in 1648. Upon this defeat, Sir George returned to Scotland, and defeated the Earl of Argyle. He afterwards went to Holland and joined his master, Charles II, at whose restoration he was made lieutenant-general, and commander-in-chief in Scotland.

Sir John Munroe, XXV Baron of Fowlis, succeeded his father, Sir Robert, in 1668. He was a member of the Estates of Scotland at the Revolution, and a zealous promoter of that happy event. He was also a zealous Presbyterian, and being remarkable for size and corpulency, he was nick-named “the Presbyterian mortar piece.” He suffered both by fines and imprisonment for his devotion to the cause of religion, and d. 1696. Sir Robert Munroe, who succeeded his father in the barony as the XXVI of the family, was a pious and benevolent man, much beloved by the people. His son, Sir Robert, the XXVII Baron, succeeded him in 1729. He went early from the university to the camp, where he served seven years in Flanders, being for some time captain of the Royal Scots. On his return to England he was elected to Parliament, where he continued thirty years. He was greatly distinguished, like others of the family, for his military services. In 1715, he with his clan, in conjunction with the Earl of Sunderland, kept the Earl of Seaforth with a much larger force from joining the Rebel camp for near two months. Being made Governor of Inverness, Sir Robert kept four hundred men of his clan and name regularly paid and disciplined, and so rendered important service to his country.

He afterwards greatly distinguished himself at the battle of Fontenoy. He had obtained leave of His Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland, to adopt his own mode of warfare, and employ his own regiment where and how he pleased. He was early in the field, and at every point of danger; and wherever the Munroe regiment moved, victory followed its banner. He would march near the enemy, and when the French were about to fire, he would order his men to throw themselves upon the ground, and receive their fire; and as soon as they drew the enemy's fire, he would order them to spring up and rush upon the foe, reserving their own fire till they had nearly closed with them, so that every shot would tell with dreadful effect. These attacks were repeated with the most marked success several times during the day, to the admiration of the whole army. It was observable that when he commanded his whole regiment to drop to the ground, he himself stood upright, exposed to the whole fire of the enemy. On being questioned afterwards, why he did this, he replied that though he could throw himself down as readily as younger and leaner men, his great bulk and corpulency would not suffer him to rise sufficiently early to rush upon the enemy with his men; and the commander would not allow himself to be behind his men in such an emergency.

For his distinguished services at Fontenoy his Majesty was pleased to appoint him to succeed Gen. Ponsonby, who was slain that day in command of his troops. They were afterwards ordered to Scotland, and in the battle of Falkirk, being on one of the wings with his new regiment, they shamefully left their brave commander with five or six of his officers, to be cut to pieces by the enemy. According to the account of the rebels themselves, Sir Robert defended himself against six of them, and killed two of their number, but a seventh coming up, shot him through the body. At this fatal moment his brother, Doctor Munroe, who was near at hand, rushed to the rescue, and was slain near his brother. Doctor Munroe was not only a man of great bravery, but was highly distinguished in his profession, and much respected as a man. Scarcely less distinguished was another brother, Capt. George Munroe. He enjoyed the advantages of a liberal education, but turned his attention mainly to the profession of arms. He was in many engagements, in which he displayed great gallantry, and in one was severely wounded. He however recovered, and afterwards fell by the hands of a cowardly assassin.

"Thus," said the correspondent of Dr. Doddridge, "died these three worthy men, to the irreparable loss of their country; all of them remarkable for a brave spirit, full of love to their native land, and of distinguished zeal for religion and liberty; faithful in their promises, steadfast in their friendship, abundant in their charity to the poor and distressed; moderate in their resentments, and easy to be reconciled; and especially remarkable for their great and entire love to each other, so that one soul seemed, as it were, to actuate all the three."

Though we have brought this sketch down to 1746, we must go back about a century, to trace the history of the Munroes who came to America. The date of their emigration to this country is uncertain. Their history here, like that of many of the early settlers in this country, is handed down to us by tradition, and not by full and reliable records. As near as we can learn, they came to America about 1650. Being a young man without a family, and destitute of property, the name of the first emigrant, WILLIAM MUNROE, does not appear upon the public records till some time afterwards.

It is highly probable that the Munroes who settled in New England were prisoners of war taken by Cromwell, and sold as slaves or apprentices, as the term was. The custom was this: these prisoners were sold in England to shippers for a small sum, who sent them to this country, where they were sold into service of from three to ten years, to pay the first purchase, the cost of the passage, and such profits as the dealers in flesh and blood might be able to make. The Munroes were probably some of those who were taken at the battle of Worcester, where Cromwell was victorious. In 1651, a cargo of prisoners was consigned to Thomas Kemble of Boston. The list of prisoners contains the names of four Munrows, as the name was there spelled, viz., Robert, John, Hugh, and another whose first name is obliterated. This is supposed to be William, the ancestor of the Lex. Munroes. One of this number settled at Bristol, then in this State, but now in Rhode Island. The Munroes of Bristol were relatives of those of Lex., but how near it is impossible to say with certainty.

There is a tradition in the family that William Munroe was sold or bound out to a farmer by the name of Winship, who resided in that part of Cambridge called Menotomy (now Arlington), and that when his indentures expired, and he set up for himself, he went farther back into the woods, and procured a tract of land within the present limits of Lex., on a section now known by the name of Scotland, in honor of the native place of the first settler.

The name on the Lex. records in the first instances was spelt Munro or Munroe; but in a few years the first syllable was dropped, and many of the family spelled their name Roe. In fact, for a time Roe and Munroe seem to have been used interchangeably, so that we find such entries as this: "bap. Mary Roe, daughter of William Munroe." Ultimately a better fashion prevailed, and the present orthography was adopted.

The record of the Munroes is extremely defective; the early settlers of that name being less given to letters than to arms.

1 WILLIAM MUNROE, the ancestor of all the Munroes of Lex. and this vicinity, was born in Scotland in 1625, and descended from the Munroe clan in Scotland, of which we have already spoken. He came to America in 1652, and consequently was at that time twenty-seven years of age. The first mention of him which I find in the Cambridge records is in 1657, when "Thomas Rose and William Row" were fined for not having rings in the nose of their swine. If he was sold as an apprentice when he was first brought over, his apprenticeship must have been rather a short one for those days, for he must have been his own man in 1657. He settled at Cambridge Farms about 1660, in the northeasterly part of the town, bordering on Woburn. His house was near the Wo. line, on what is now Woburn street, not far from the present residence of Hugh Graham.

Several of his sons lived with or not far from him at first; and it was said by Mrs. Sanderson, his great-granddaughter, who d. 1853, aged 104 years, that his old house looked like a rope-walk, so many additions had been made to it to accommodate his sons, as they settled in life. By adopting the custom of the Scottish clans, he in a manner confined the Munroes together, and made them for some time, as it were, a distinct people. A considerable portion of their original possessions still remain in the Munroe family.

Though he came to the country under unfavorable circumstances, and set up for himself rather late in life, he appears to have been quite successful in his worldly affairs, and to have been blessed with a large, prosperous family. He was made freeman in 1690. He was in the parish at its first organization, and was one of the committee to purchase a tract of land for the support of the ministry, with David Fiske, sen., Samuel Stone, sen., Ephraim Winship, Benjamin Muzzy, and John Tidd. In the subscription for building the meeting house, William Munroe's name is found, and his subscription of £2 shows that in public spirit and in pœnniary means he was among the first seven in the parish, and the subsequent tax bills, from 1693 to 1696, show that in point of taxable property he stood among the first half dozen men in the parish; thus showing conclusively that he was a man of enterprise and force of character. In 1694, he was one of the selectmen of Cambridge, of which Lex. was then a part; and subsequently his name appears in connection with several other important offices in the parish. He was ad. to the ch. in Lex. Feb. 1, 1699. He was three times married, though I have not been able to find the record of the marriages, or learn the family name of his first two wives. He was probably forty years old when he married, and still he reared a family of thirteen children. He m. about 1665, Martha —, by whom he had four children, and second, Mary —, about 1672, by whom he had nine children. His second wife, Mary, d. Aug. 1692, aged 41, consequently she must have been twenty-six years younger than her husband. He m. third, Mrs.

Elizabeth Wyer, wid. of Edward Wyer of Charlestown. She d. Dec. 14, 1715, aged 79, and he d. Jan. 27, 1717, at the advanced age of ninety-two. Though he married his last wife when he was well stricken in years, he must have married for love and not for money, for in the papers connected with the settlement of his estate, we find an inventory of the property which belonged to her, consisting of one bed, one bolster, one pillow, one chest, one warming pan, one pair of tongs, and one pewter platter.

His will, dated Nov. 14, 1716, mentions sons John, William, George, Daniel, Joseph, and Benjamin, and dau. Eleanor Burgess, to whom he gave the sole use of his house, Martha Comee, Hannah Pierce, Elizabeth Rugg, and Mary Fassett.

- 3 Martha, b. Nov. 2, 1667; m. Jan. 21, 1688, John Comee of Con. He came to Lex., where he lived and reared a family of children. She d. April 13, 1729, aged 62.
- 4 †William, b. Oct. 10, 1669; m. Mary Cutler.
- 5 †George, b. ———; m. Sarah ———.
- 6 †Daniel, b. Aug. 12, 1673; m. Dority ———.
- 7 Hannah, b. ———; m. Dec. 21, 1692, Joseph Pierce, whose first wife was Ruth Holland, and whose third wife was Beriah, wid. of Daniel Child; by Hannah he had eight children.
- 8 Elizabeth, b. ———; m. Thomas Rugg, by whom she had eleven children born between 1691 and 1714.
- 9 Mary, b. June 24, 1678; m. about 1700, Joseph Fassett. They lived on what is called the Page Place, now in Bedford, but then in Lexington.
- 10 David, b. Oct. 6, 1680; not mentioned in his father's will.
- 11 Eleanor, b. Feb. 24, 1683; m. Aug. 21, 1707, William Burgess of Charlestown. She had four children, whose births are recorded in Lexington.
- 12 Sarah, b. March 18, 1685; m. George Blanchard, about 1707.
- 13 †Joseph, b. Aug. 16, 1687; m. Elizabeth ———.
- 14 †Benjamin, b. Aug. 16, 1690; was twice married.

JOHN MUNROE m. Hannah ———. He was ad. to the ch. Feb. 1, 1699, together with his father, and sisters Martha Comee, Elizabeth Rugg, and Hannah Pierce. He was a subscriber for the meeting house in 1692, and was taxed for the purchase of the ministerial land in 1693. He was one of the assessors in 1699, 1714, and 1720; was constable in 1700, selectman in 1718 '19, and '26, and treasurer 1718, '19, and '20. He d. Sept. 14, 1753, aged 87; she d. April 14, 1716, aged 42. He was employed many years to ring the bell and to sweep out the meeting house, which shows that he did not consider it derogatory to perform any honest labor. He also illustrated the truth of the old ballad, that "there are sweepers in high life as well as in low"; for in addition to sweeping the meeting house, he filled most of the important offices in the town.

In consequence of the number of the Munroes, and the repetition of the names William and John and George and Mary and Sarah and Hannah, we find it very difficult in some cases to trace the families. This difficulty was felt by themselves and their contemporaries, and consequently, when speaking of the individuals, they had recourse to certain other designations. A specimen of this is embodied in the following not very elegant couplet, preserved by one of the descendants.

"Lieutenant John and Ensign Roe, Sergeant George and Corporal Joe."

It will be seen by these titles that the family, true to their instincts, were given to the military, and that John was honored with the office of Lieutenant. We also learn that John Munroe and others had nine hundred acres of land granted to them in 1735, for services rendered in the Indian fight at Lamprey River, June 6, 1690.

- 2-15 ✓ John, bap. 1699; probably m. Rachel —.
- 16 ✓ Hannah, bap. 1699; d. April 14, 1716.

- 5-39- ROBERT MUNROE m. July 28, 1737, Anne Stone, dau. of John and Mary (Reed) Stone. He was a soldier in the French war, was the standard bearer at the taking of Louisburg, in 1758, and was also in the service in 1762. Having served the colonies against the French and Indians, we might naturally suppose that he would be true to the family instinct, and to the calls of patriotism in defending the colonies against any other foe. And so he was. Being the ensign of Parker's gallant co., he was on the Common on the 19th of April, 1775, and stood manfully at his post; and fell, one of the first victims of British oppression, on the very field where he was posted by his gallant commander. He was in the 64th year of his age at the time of his death.
- 39-132 Ebenezer, b. Feb. 5, 1737; d. June 25, 1740.

- 136 †John, b. June 15, 1748; m. Dec. 3, 1772, Rebecca Wellington.
- 5-40- SAMUEL MUNROE m. Abigail ——. There is no record of his family except Jonathan; but there are indications on the records of his having other children. I set down the following as the most probable. He was in the service five months at Ticonderoga, in 1776, and three months at Dorchester, the same year. He probably moved to Townsend, about 1780.
- 40-137 John, b. ——. 138 Jonathan, b. July 15, 1759.

- 41-141 Andrew, b. March 13, 1764.
 142 Ishmael, b. Oct. 9, 1766, after the death of his father. This was the second posthumous child his mother had,—one by each husband. He m. Feb. 27, 1794, Elizabeth Skilton, both of Woburn.
- 6-44- JEDEDIAH MUNROE m. Abigail Loring, dau. of Joseph and Lydia (Fiske) Loring. She was a twin with Mary, and a sister of Dea. Joseph Loring. He was a member of Capt. Parker's co., and rallied with his townsmen in defence of freedom on the 19th of April, 1775. He was wounded in the morning; but his devotion to the cause was too deep-seated to be quenched by the first flow of blood. He marched with the co. toward Con. to meet the British on their retreat, and was killed in the afternoon, aged 54.
- 44-143 Daniel, b. Sept. 29, 1744; m. Abigail Parker of Roxbury, where he lived and died.
 144 Jedediah, b. ———; m. Sarah Parker, and lived in Boston.
 145 Solomon, b. ———; m. and lived in Boston.
 146 †Joseph, bap. Dec. 4, 1757; m. July 22, 1783, Rhoda Leath of Woburn.

- 6-47- JOHN MUNROE m. Dec. 23, 1747, Anna Kendall of Wo. He marched to the relief of Fort William-Henry, 1757. He was a member of Capt. Parker's company, and took part in the affairs on the 19th of April, marched to Cambridge with the company on the day of the battle of Bunker Hill, and was in the campaign, in 1776, in the Jerseys. They were ad. to the ch. in Lexington on confession, in 1757. He probably resided in Wo. a portion of his life.
- 47-151 Anna, b. Nov. 18, 1759. 152 Sarah, bap. July 21, 1767.
 153 John, bap. July 21, 1767. 154 Lydia, bap. July 22, 1767.
- 13-48- JOSEPH MUNROE m. Hannah ——. He was in the French war, 1755. He moved to Concord, and resided in that part of the town which was set off to form the town of Carlisle, and was one of the members of the ch. organized there in 1781. He had a family of six children, b. between 1742 and 1755, who settled in Carlisle and Acton; except Joseph, who settled as a physician at Hillsboro', N. H., and d. Feb. 24, 1798.
- 19-72- WILLIAM MUNROE d. 1755, aged 25 years, probably unm. His will, dated April 4, 1755, and proved Oct. 13, 1755, mentions brother-in-law Adam Caldwell of Bedford, and sisters Bridget and Hannah. He was a sergeant in the French war, in 1754 and 1755.
- 22-82- JOHN MUNROE m. April 13, 1762, Lydia Bemis of Weston, dau. of John and Hannah Bemis. He was a member of the Lex. company in 1775. The record of his family is extremely defective. We find the mention of only one child, though he may have had more. He marched to Cambridge on the 17th of June, 1775.

- 82-155 Lydia, bap. May 17, 1767; m. Jan. 16, 1783, Jonathan Page of Lincoln. He afterwards resided in Charlestown, where he kept a tavern of some note. He rose to the rank of colonel in the militia; and during the war of 1812 was stationed in Boston Harbor, and superintended the erection of some of the fortifications.
- 22-83- STEPHEN MUNROE m. July 8, 1766, Nancy Perry of Wo. He was in the French war, 1762, was in the battle of Lex. 1775, and marched to Camb. on the 17th of June, at the time of the battle of Bunker Hill. He perhaps resided for a time in Wo.; also in the State of Maine. He d. July 30, 1826, aged 87.
- 83-156 Nancy, b. ———; m. ——— Caldwell of Woburn.
 157 Stephen, b. ———; r. in Concord.
 158 Joanna, b. ———; m. Daniel Russell.
 159 James, b. ———; he was feeble-minded. He was an inmate of the almshouse, and disappeared mysteriously, leading to the suspicion that he might have been murdered. Human bones were found in the woods some twelve months afterwards, supposed to be his. The mystery was never revealed.
- 22-86- EBENEZER MUNROE m. May 10, 1781, Lucy Simonds of Wo. He was a member of the Lex. minute men, and ready on the 19th of April to do battle in freedom's cause. He was wounded in the elbow in the morning, but mounted his horse and rode from town to town, alarming the people and rousing them to action, until quite exhausted by the loss of blood. He claimed to have fired the first gun on the American side. That he did return the fire is abundantly proved by the testimony of others. His own account is as follows: "After the first fire (of the regulars) I received a wound in my arm; as I turned to run, I discharged my gun into the main body of the enemy. Another ball passed between my arm and my body, and just marked my clothes; one ball cut off a part of my ear locks, which were pinned up. The balls flew so thick, I thought there was no chance of escape, and that I might as well fire my gun, as stand still and do nothing." Deposition taken April 2, 1825. Ebenezer Munroe performed other duties in the Revolution, being one of the number who joined in the campaign in the Jerseys in 1776.
- He moved to Ashburnham soon after the close of the war, where he was a lieutenant and a respectable citizen. He d. at Ashburnham 1825, and his wid. m. John Adams as his second wife. Ebenezer Munroe was half-brother to Mr. Adams's first wife. Mr. Adams spent his youth in West Camb., went to Ashburnham previous to the Revolution, lived there till he was nearly 100, when he went to live with a son in Penn., and d. 1849, aged 104 years, 1 mo., 5 days. He retained his faculties to the last, and is said to have made a pair of shoes the day he was 104.

- 24-91- JOSIAH MUNROE m. Nov. 16, 1768, Susan Fitch of Bed. He was in the French war in 1762. He also served three months in the Jerseys, in 1776. He then entered the Continental Line, and served two and a half years. After the close of the war he drew land in what was afterward Ohio. He settled in Marietta in that State, where he was for a time post-master. He had at least one child b. in Lex. viz., Susanna, bap. Nov. 10, 1771. They had another dau. and a son b. in Bedford, before he moved to Ohio.

24-92-

NATHAN MUNROE m. Oct. 3, 1769, Elizabeth Harrington, dau. of Henry and Sarah (Laughton) Harrington, b. Sept. 17, 1750. He was a member of Parker's minute men, and took part in the battle of Lex. in 1775. He resided on Monument street, where Mr. John Hudson now resides. His house received several balls, which were taken out subsequently, when the house was repaired. She d. Dec. 24, 1812.

EDMUND MUNROE m. Aug. 31, 1768, Rebecca Harrington, dau. of Jonathan and Abigail Harrington, b. Feb. 17, 1751. She was sister to Jonathan Harrington, who d. 1854, the last survivor of the battle of Lex. Edmund Munroe was distinguished as a military man. Entering the Provincial service at an early age, he was promoted to an ensign in a corps of rangers commanded by Maj. Rogers, which performed signal service in the French war. In 1761, he was acting adjutant in Col. Hoar's regiment at Crown Point. In 1762, he received a commission from Gov. Bernard, as a lieutenant in His Majesty's service, and continued with the troops at Crown Point, Ticonderoga, and vicinity, till the peace of 1763. His kinsmen Robert and Abraham were officers in the same service with him. He not only served in the French and Indian war, but being enrolled in the company of Lex. minute men, he met the enemy on the 19th of April, and shared in the dangers of that day. But his devotion to the cause of the colony did not permit him to cease from effort when the oppressors were driven from his native village. Having served under Rogers and Hoar, the companions and co-laborers with Wolf and Barre and Putnam, he was not willing to confine his efforts to a limited field. As early as August, 1776, we find him on his way to meet the British on the same fields where he had toiled with them in subduing the French and Indians. He was commissioned as lieutenant on the 12th of July, 1776, in Capt. Miles's co. and Col. Reed's regiment. On the 16th of the same month he was appointed quartermaster and destined to the northern frontier. In a letter addressed to his wife, dated Charlestown, N. H., Aug. 5, 1776, he says, "I have been used very well by the field officers of the regiment. We shall march from this place for Ticonderoga this day."

On the first of January following, he received his commission as captain in Col. Bigelow's regiment. He was with the Northern army under Gates, at Stillwater, Saratoga, and Bennington; and so distinguished himself that after the capture of Burgoyne he was presented by his superior officers with a pair of candle-sticks,—a part of the traveling equipage or tent ornaments of Gen. Burgoyne.

The capture of Burgoyne transferred the seat of war to the Middle States; and Capt. Munroe repaired to the Jerseys, and joined the army under Washington, where, on the 28th of June, 1778, he was slain on the field of Freehold, commonly called the Battle of Monmouth. The same cannon ball which deprived the country of the services of the gallant captain, killed George Munroe, his kinsman, and maimed for life Joseph Cox of Lexington, who was a wheelwright by trade, and worked at that business in Roxbury, in 1790. He wore a wooden leg.

The Burgoyne candlesticks of which we have spoken, together with a sword, a curious beaded Indian powder horn, several bead belts, pistols, &c., used by Capt. Munroe in the French war, were left by his widow, in 1834, to her son Edmund.

When Capt. Munroe entered upon the command of a co. in the Continental line, he had in his co. fifteen men from Lex., viz., Nehemiah Estabrook, David Fiske, Pomp Blackman, Samuel Crafts, Jupiter Tree, Thaddeus Munroe, Amos Russell, George Munroe, Joseph Cox, David Simonds, Ebenezer Hadley, James Fowle, Thomas Hadley, Levi Mead, and Seth Read.

Among these original papers left in the family is the oath of office, bearing the signature of Capt. Munroe, and that of the Baron de Kalb. We will give this document entire, with a fac-simile of their hands.

I, Edmund Munroe, Captain in Col. Bigelow's regiment, do acknowledge the United States of America to be Free, Independent, and Sovereign States, and declare that the people thereof owe no allegiance to George, the Third, King of Great Britain; and I renounce and abjure any allegiance or obedience to him; and I do swear that I will to the utmost of my power support, maintain, and defend the said United States against the said King George the Third, his heirs and successors, and his or their abettors, assistants, and adherents; and will serve the said United States in the office of Captain, which I now hold, with fidelity, according to the best of my ability, skill, and understanding.

Edm. Munroe Capt

Sworn to, Camp at Valley Forge, May 18, 1778. }

*The Baron de Kalb
Mar G^l*

Capt. Munroe was deliberately brave, without enthusiasm. Some of his letters evince this coolness. Writing to his wife from Valley Forge, May 17, 1778, he says, "I am going on command to-morrow morning down to the enemy's lines. There are two thousand going on the command. I am of the mind, we shall have a dispute with them before we return." He was forty-two years old at the time of his death. He was, like most men at that day who devoted themselves to the public service, comparatively poor. He left a wid. and four children. She moved to West Camb., where she d. April 6, 1834, aged 83. Honorable mention was made of her in an obituary notice, in the Boston Daily Advertiser of April 11, 1834, from which we extract the following: "The worthy lady who is the subject of this notice, with other families in Lexington, fled on the 19th of April, 1775, with their children, to the woods, while their husbands were engaged with the enemy, and their houses were sacked or involved in flames. Her husband was killed at Monmouth in New Jersey, June 28, 1778. On his bereaved partner; in the midst of discouragement, sorrows, and the privations of the times, devolved the task of rearing an infant family. The long life of this venerable lady was a pattern of domestic duties and virtue."

WILLIAM MUNROE m. Anna Smith, dau. of Benjamin and Anna (Parker) Smith, b. March 31, 1743. She d. Jan. 2, 1781, aged 38, and he m. wid. Polly Rogers of Westford, whose first husband was killed at the Battle of Monmouth by the bursting of a cannon. William Munroe was orderly sergeant of Capt. Parker's co. in 1775; it was under his direction that a guard was posted at Mr. Clarke's house, on the evening of the 18th of April, 1775; and he paraded the men on the Common the next morning, in the very face of the British troops. The services he performed at the opening of the Revolution, were followed up by other services in the progress of the war. He was a lieutenant in the Northern army at the taking of Burgoyne, in 1777. He was a prominent citizen, and filled important town offices. He was selectman nine years, and represented the town two years. He was a colonel in the militia, and marched towards Springfield during Shay's Rebellion; but the dispersion of the insurgents enabled him to return in a short time. Col. Munroe kept the public house, long known as the "Munroe Tavern." Here the British regaled themselves, and committed many outrages on the 19th of April; here they shot down in cold blood John Raymond, who was about leaving the house; and here General Washington dined in 1789, when he visited the first battle field of the Revolution. Col. Munroe's portrait will be seen on the opposite page. He d. Oct. 30, 1827, aged 85; she d. Jan. 10, 1829, aged 73.

THE MUZZY FAMILY.

The Muzzys were early in Lexington, and were for a century and a half among the leading influential families in the place. The name is spelled Mussy, Muzzy, and the Lex. families have recently added the e in the last syllable, Muzzey.

- 1 BENJAMIN MUZZY of Malden m. Alice Dexter, and had Benjamin, b. April 16, 1657; Joseph, b. March 1, 1659. He may have been son of Robert of Ipswich, one of the first settlers of that town, who was made freeman, 1634.
- 1-2 BENJAMIN MUZZY m. first, Sarah —, who d. in Lex. Jan. 28, 1710, aged 50 years, and m. second, Jane —. What time he came to Cambridge Farms, we are not able to say. We find a record of the birth of Mary Muzzy, dau. of Benjamin and Sarah, in Cambridge, in 1683; but whether he lived at that time in the old town or at the Farms, is uncertain. His name is found on the earliest records at the Farms or North Precinct,—he being one of the subscribers for the first meeting house, in 1692, and was one of the largest tax payers the following year. As he was a large land-holder in the centre of the town, at the organization of the Parish in 1693, it is probable that he had been in the place for some time. In 1693, he was placed on a committee with David Fiske, sen., Samuel Stone, sen., and others, to negotiate with Cambridge for the purchase of a tract of land for the support of the ministry. He was constable in 1694, and an assessor in 1700. He filled the dignified office of tythingman in 1716. In 1711, the inhabitants of the Precinct purchased of Benjamin Muzzy about two acres of land for a Common, and a site for a meeting house. This was done by subscription, in which he and his sons John and Richard participated. He resided on or near the spot where Rufus Merriam now resides. Here was opened the first public house in the place, his son John being licensed for that purpose in 1714. He d. May 12, 1732, possessed of a large landed property. The inventory of his estate mentions his mansion house, barn, cider mill, and a homestead of 111 acres. Among the articles appraised were three slaves,—a man, valued at £80, and a woman and child at £60. The record of his family is incomplete. He bought his homestead of Edward Pelham of Rhode Island, 1693. It is described as bounded by John Munroe, ministerial land, Matthew Bridge, and extending to Vine Brook.

July 12, 1731, aged about 40; and he m. third, Mary —, who d. March 9, 1758, aged 66. He d. March 28, 1768, aged 83. He was either born in Lex., or came in with his father in early infancy. He opened the first public house in the place, in 1714, which he continued for a long period. He filled many town offices, being constable in 1727, school committee in 1733, selectman in 1741, '42, '44, and assessor in 1746. He was ad. to the ch. Aug. 24, 1735. In his will, dated 1764, and a codicil dated 1765, he mentions dau. Mary Hall, Sarah Hill, and Jane Stone, and sons John and Benjamin. He made his son-in-law, Samuel Stone, executor of his will. He not only owned land in Lex., but was an owner of land in Templeton, having as a proprietor, drawn a lot of forty acres in that township, in 1735. This land he gave to his sons Benjamin and John.

He was a leading popular man in the town, filled important town offices, and was a justice of the peace. The Lexington railroad is a standing monument of his public spirit and energy of character.

CHARLES MUZZY m. Feb. 3, 1827, Sarah Oakes of Malden. He was a trader, and moved to Philadelphia in 1829, and came back to West Camb. in 1834, where he was in trade at the "Foot of the Rocks," for several years, when he moved to Charlestown. In 1853, his health declining, he came to Lex., in hopes of recovery, but d. Aug. 27, 1853. They had but one child, Sarah Elizabeth, b. in Phil. June 6, 1834. She m. in Lex. April 5, 1855, George Tuttle, who d. Jan. 27, 1856, within a year of his marriage.

NASH.—JOSEPH NASH, of Weymouth, had among other children Joseph, who m. Eunice Ford, and had James, Joseph, Nathaniel, Charles, Atherton, and Oran, and several daughters.

ORAN NASH, the youngest son of Joseph and Eunice, b. March 19, 1805, m. Oct. 12, 1822, Lucy Cushing of Weymouth, dau. of Samuel and Elizabeth. They resided in Boston, where all their children but the youngest were born. They came to Lex. 1835. They have had five children, viz. Emeline Augusta, b. April 11, 1827; Elizabeth, b. April 7, 1829, d. 1830; Howard A., b. July 18, 1831, m. Elizabeth Sutton, r. at Cincinnati, Ohio; Rovena, b. Dec. 30, 1833; Ellen Louisa, b. in Lex. Oct. 20, 1840.

THE NELSON FAMILY.

The name of Nelson appears first upon our records in 1722, when TABITHA NELSON, wife of Thomas, was ad. to the ch. In 1724, Thomas was chosen to a subordinate town office, which shows that he was an inhabitant of the town at that time; in 1730, he had a seat assigned in the meeting house, and in 1743, he was constable. He resided on the road to Concord, above what is now known as the old Viles Tavern, near what was then the line of Concord. When the town of Lincoln was created, in 1754, he and others were taken from Lex. to constitute that town. The Nelsons of Lincoln are from that stock. They were connected by marriage with the Hastings of Lex. The children of Thomas and Tabitha were Thomas and Tabitha, twins, b. Dec. 19, 1721, and Josiah, bap. in 1726.

Thomas Nelson first named was b. in Rowley, 1685; he was son of Thomas, b. in Rowley, 1661; who was son of Thomas, b. in Eng., who came over with his father, Thomas, in 1638, and settled in Rowley.

THE NORCROSS FAMILY.

JEREMIAH NORCROSS, who settled in Wat. as early as 1642, had Richard, who by wife Mary had Nathaniel, b. 1665, who m. Mehitabel Hager, and had a son bearing his own name. This Nathaniel,

b. 1695, m. 1717, Jemima Abbott, and had among other children, Josiah, b. 1734, m. Jan. 6, 1754, Elizabeth Child. They both died 1801. They had nine children. John, their sixth child, b. May, 1771, m. Margaret Everett. He d. 1823, and she d. 1843. They had Eliza, b. 1798, d. young; John, b. 1801, d. young; John, b. Sept. 28, 1803; Anna M., b. 1805, m. John English of Boston.

1 JOHN NORCROSS, son of John and Margaret, m. April 22, 1826, Eleanor Estabrook, dau. of Eliakim and Hannah Estabrook. He came to Lex. in 1846, and has been to the present day depot-master at East Lexington,—a term of service which furnishes the best evidence of his fitness and fidelity.

1- 2 Eleanor M., b. Jan. 13, 1827; m. Dec. 14, 1848, James Prentice of West Cambridge.

3 Eliza J., b. July 27, 1830; m. 1856, Leroy Chappell.

4 Samuel T., b. Sept. 5, 1834. He was residing at the West, where he had accumulated some property. His health failing, he had converted his property into money and started, in a weak and enfeebled condition, for home. A villain, who had learned the facts in the case, ingratiated himself into his favor, and volunteered to become his protector; and when the train had arrived at a station in Altona, Pa., in the night time, he induced Norcross to leave the car and go with him, promising to conduct him to good quarters for the night; and when he had enticed him to a place of seclusion, he basely murdered him, Jan. 16, 1857. The murderer was ultimately arrested, tried, and executed.

5 John Henry, b. Oct. 29, 1841; m. June 6, 1866, Cynthia J. White of Medford, where they reside.

THE NUTTING FAMILY.

There was a family of Nuttings in Camb. Farms about the time the parish was organized. EBENEZER NUTTING was taxed in the parish in 1693. He and his wife owned the covenant in June, 1699, when Jonathan, Lydia, and Sarah, their children, were bap. Ebenezer and James, also children of Ebenezer, were bap. May 30, 1703. After this the name disappears on our records.

OVERING.—In 1729, John Overing of Boston, bought of William Russell of Lex., for £ 308, a tract of fifty-one acres of land, with buildings thereon, bounded on land of Jason and Philip Russell and Joseph Mason. In 1735 and 1737, he sold lands to Dea. Joseph Brown, and in 1738, he bought lands in Lex. of David Comee. John Overing of Lex. was probably a son of John Overing, Esq., of Boston. He probably came to Lex. about 1730. He must have been a man of some pretension, for in 1735 he was taxed in town for three houses, two slaves, three cows, and two horses, besides other personal and real estate. He probably left town about 1740. We find no records of his family, though he probably had one. We have a record of the death of three of the name, who were probably his children, or perhaps one of them was his wife. Henry Overing, d. Aug. 6, 1738; Henrietta Overing, d. Sept. 13, 1738; George Overing, d. Sept. 17, 1738.

THE PARKER FAMILY.

Parker has always been a common name in New England. Emigrants of that name were found in most of the early settlements. The oft repeated fiction of three brothers coming over and settling in three different towns, will not meet the present case; for we find Abraham and Amariah and Edmund and George and Jacob and James and Joseph and Matthew and Nicholas and Robert and Thomas and two or more Williams and as many Johns, appearing in nearly as many of the different settlements at an early day. This name has been common in Reading, Groton, Billerica, Woburn, and other towns in this vicinity. But it is believed that the Lexington Parkers are the descendants of

- 1 THOMAS PARKER of Lynn, who was made freeman in 1637. He embarked at London, March 11, 1635, and settled in Lynn the same year. He moved to Reading, where he aided in establishing a church, of which he was a deacon. He had by his wife, Amy, a family of eleven children. He d. 1683, aged 74 years, and consequently must have been born in 1609. She d. Jan. 15, 1690.

1-2 Thomas, b. 1636; d. June 9, 1699.

3 †Hananiah, b. 1638; d. March 10, 1724, aged 86.

4 John, b. 1640; d. Feb. 28, 1699. 5 Joseph, b. 1642, d. 1644.

6 Joseph, b. 1645; d. 1646.

7 Mary, b. March 12, 1647.

8 Martha, b. March 14, 1649.

9 Nathaniel, b. May 16, 1651.

10 Sarah, b. Sept. 30, 1653; d. Oct. 16, 1656.

11 Jonathan, b. May 18, 1656; m. Sept. 24, 1677, Bethia Polly, and had fourteen children.

12 Sarah, b. May 23, 1658.

- 1-3- HANANIAH PARKER m. Sept. 30, 1663, Elizabeth Brown. She d. 1698, and he m. second, Mrs. Mary Bright, widow of Dea. John of Wat. He d. March 10, 1724; she d. Jan. 4, 1736, aged 87. He lived and died in Reading, and had the honorable title of Lieutenant.

3-13 †John, b. Aug. 3, 1664; m. Deliverance —.

14 Samuel, b. Oct. 24, 1666.

15 Elizabeth, b. June, 1668.

16 Sarah, b. Feb. 6, 1672; d. Oct. 2, 1673.

17 Hananiah, b. Nov. 2, 1674; d. Oct. 2, 1675.

19 Mary, b. —; m. — Poole.

20 Hananiah, b. April 30, 1681.

- 3-12- JOHN PARKER m. 1689, Deliverance ^{Wodge} They came to Lex. about 1712, and settled in the south part of the town. By a deed, dated June 25, 1712, John Cutler sold to John Parker, then of Reading, land at Camb. Farms, containing "one small mansion house and sixty acres of land, bounded southerly on Watertown line," elsewhere by Daniel White, John Stone, and Thomas Cutler. He was chosen fence viewer in 1714, and tythingman in 1715 and 1721. He must have been a man of dignity of character; for in seating the meeting house, 1731, where they had reference to age, honor, and property, they placed him in the second seat below, with Ensign John Mason, Thomas Mead, and other highly respectable citizens. She d. March 10, 1718, and he d. June 22, 1741, aged 78. There is scarcely a prominent family in Lex. whose record in every period of its history is so incomplete. This accounts for any inaccuracy, if any should be found.

- 13-21 Hananiah, b. Oct. 10, 1691; d. at Port Royal, 1711.
 22 †Andrew, b. Feb. 14, 1693; m. Aug. 2, 1720, Sarah Whitney.

 They buried two infant children, probably b. between William and Mary.

22-34- ANDREW PARKER m. Nov. 29, 1759, Abigail Jennison of Weston. They made their peace with the ch. April 20, 1760. They removed about 1763 to Rutland, to the ch. of which place they were dismissed May 10, 1765. They had two children b. in Lexington.

34-59 Rhoda, b. June 19, 1760. 60 Abigail, bap. Feb. 7, 1762.

23-41- JOSIAH PARKER m. Oct. 27, 1748, Mary Munroe of Weston, dau. of Benjamin Munroe, son of the original William of Lex. He must have left town about the time of his marriage, as his name disappears from the tax bills after that time.

23-43- JOHN PARKER m. May 25, 1755, Lydia Moore, dau. of Thomas and Mary Moore of Lexington. They were admitted to the church Oct. 31, 1756. John Parker was an assessor, 1764, '65, '66, and '74. But he was most distinguished for the part he acted at the opening of the Revolution. He commanded the company of minute men who stood firmly at their post on the 19th of April, 1775, when ordered to disperse by the impetuous Piteairn, backed up, as he was, by eight hundred British regulars. He must have been a man of admitted character, to have been selected to command that Spartan band, containing, as it did, within its ranks, several veteran soldiers, and even officers who had seen service upon the "tented field." It has been said that he had served in the French war; but I have failed to find his name upon the rolls. On the Common on that trying occasion, he showed great coolness and bravery, ordering his men to load their pieces, but not to fire unless fired upon. And in the very face of the British regulars, when some of his men seemed to falter, he announced in a firm voice, that he would cause the first man to be shot down, who should quit the ranks or leave his post without orders. And though eight of his men were killed in the morning, and several were severely wounded, true to the spirit of freedom, he collected his company and marched to meet the enemy on their return from Concord, and poured a deadly fire into their ranks. While his health was feeble, and the disease which proved fatal in September of that year, was making a steady inroad upon his constitution, he obeyed the calls of patriotism, and marched with a portion of his co. to Cambridge on the 6th of May, and with a still larger detachment of them on the 17th of June. But though he performed a noble part in the opening scene of that glorious struggle, he did not live to witness its happy termination. He d. Sept. 17, 1775, aged 46. His wid. m. Nov. 5, 1778, Ephraim Pierce of Waltham.

There are some incidents connected with the character and acts of Capt. Parker which deserve mention. We have seen the efforts made by the town, in 1774 and 1775, to arm and equip her company of minute-men. We have the receipt of Capt. Parker for two drums received of the town, which we will give verbatim, with a fac-simile of his signature.

“Agreable to the vote of the Town, I have received by the hands of the Selectmen the drums provided by the Town for the use of the Military Company in this town, until the further order of the town.

John Parker

“Lexington, March 14, 1775.”

There are two muskets, appropriate memorials of Capt. Parker, preserved in the State House, the gift of his grandson, Rev. Theodore Parker, to the State. On one is inscribed

“The First Fire Arm
Captured in the War for Independence;”

and on the other,

“This Firearm was used by Capt. John Parker
in the Battle of Lexington, April 19th,
1775.”

These relics were received by the State authorities with due ceremony, and are conspicuously displayed in the Senate chamber for public view.

- 63-97- THEODORE PARKER m. April 20, 1837, Lydia D. Cabot of Boston, dau. of John and Lydia (Dodge) Cabot, b. Sept. 12, 1813. They had no children. In 1830 he entered H. C., but owing to his limited pecuniary means, he was not able to incur the expense of a life at the college, but remained at home pursuing his studies through the winter, and then engaged himself as a teacher. Not residing at the college and attending the daily exercises, he did not take his degree; though in 1840 he received from the University the honorary degree of A. M. Our limits will not permit us to give in detail the events of his laborious life. It is sufficient to say, that he raised himself to great distinction by his own unassisted industry and force of character. Without the usual advantages enjoyed by those who are destined to a literary life, by persevering industry he overcame all these disadvantages, and became a man of vast acquirements, procured and mastered an extensive library, and died in the midst of life with a reputation which few men ever acquire.
- Giving his mind to religious subjects, he entered the theological school at Cambridge in 1834, and after graduating, he was first settled at West Roxbury, and subsequently became pastor of the Twenty-eighth Congregational Society which worshiped at Music Hall in Boston. By that incessant labor, which few constitutions can endure, he became somewhat enfeebled, and a hemorrhage from the lungs required him to suspend all labor. By the advice of his physician, and the entreaty of friends, he was induced to seek a more genial climate. In February, 1859, he embarked for the West Indies, where he remained for a time, when he sailed for the south of Europe. But neither medical skill, nor the balmy air of Italy, could stay the ravages of disease, and he d. at Florence, May 10, 1860. He was buried in a little Protestant cemetery outside the city walls. The grave is inclosed by a border of gray marble, and at the head is a plain stone of the same material, with this inscription:
- THEODORE PARKER,
Born at Lexington, Mass.,
United States of America,
Aug. 24, 1810.
Died at Florence, May 10, 1860.

The unsparing censure which has been heaped, and the unlimited praise which has been bestowed upon Mr. Parker, will justify us in saying a few words upon his character. The leading characteristic of the man was his thirst for knowledge. This manifested itself in his persistent industry from his boyhood to the day of his death. His love of books became almost a passion, and he made himself acquainted with various languages, that he might read the best authors in their native tongue. Few men under the circumstances in which he was placed, have ever performed more labor, or accomplished as much. His moral character, as seen by the world, was above reproach. But to judge the man aright, we must look beneath the surface, and see the motives by which he was actuated. And here we find a stern sense of justice tempered with mercy, a strong love for the poor and down-trodden, and a warm sympathy for humanity, for whose elevation he was ready to spend, and be spent. And though he sometimes indulged in bitter denunciation, too common among reformers, we shall generally find that it was prompted by a strong sense of wrong or injustice committed against those he was laboring to elevate and improve.

But it is with reference to his religious character that the people have been most divided. Though it is not the object of this work to decide upon matters of faith, we will glance at this subject with that freedom which Mr. Parker himself always exercised, and with such a spirit as he, if present, would approve. Born of a pious and devout mother, whose instructions sank deep into his tender heart, and living under the influences of religious institutions founded upon the broad basis of divine revelation, he early imbibed enlightened views of the character of our Heavenly Father, and of our duty to love and adore him. These views he cherished through life; so that we can with justice pronounce him not only a moral but a devout man. But though we can endorse his moral and religious character, we are constrained to express our conviction that this character was the result of his early training and the natural goodness of his heart, rather than of his theological speculations. He was moral and devout in spite of his theory. This impression is strengthened by the fact that very many of those who embrace his speculations have but little sympathy with that devout spirit by which he was actuated.

That he was a man of extraordinary intellectual powers, all must admit. He had a keen perception of the evils which existed in society, but like many reformers had not constructive powers sufficient to supply the remedy. So in matters of faith, he could point out with a master's hand the incongruities of existing systems, but has never, as far as we can learn, been able to present a clear and well defined system of his own. We do not mean that he had no belief. He had certain doctrines which he inculcated with earnestness and in sincerity. But he has never, we believe, combined them so as to make a complete system,—one harmonious whole.

Thus much it seemed proper to say concerning one of the most distinguished men to whom Lexington has ever given birth. Mr. Parker has left a large number of ardent and devoted friends. They have erected a memorial stone in Lexington to his memory, on the spot where stood the old house in which he was born. The stone is of Concord granite, finished on all sides, three feet square, and three and a half feet high, resting on a base four feet square and one foot high. On the front face, in raised letters, is the simple inscription,

of

The farm has been in possession of the Parker family since 1712. The following engraving shows the house in which he was born, and the old belfry building which stood on the Common on the site of the present monument, in 1775, from which went forth those peals of alarm which called the patriots to arms on the morning of the 19th of April. The old belfry was procured by the family and removed to the Parker Place, where it is now standing.

PARKHURST.—JOHN PARKHURST of Lex. m. Sept. 15, 1763, Elizabeth Bowers of Billerica. He came to Lex. from Chelmsford, and was probably a descendant of Joseph Parkhurst, of that town, who had Joseph, b. 1661, and perhaps other sons. He was in the campaign of White Plains in 1776. He was selectman, 1791. He resided on the Concord road, and built the house occupied by the late Col. John Parkhurst Merriam. He had no children. He d. July 2, 1812. His will, dated June 4, 1812, mentions wife Elizabeth, John White of Gardner, John Muzzey, and John P. Merriam, John Peake Hunt of Jaffrey, N. H., brother Jonathan, and sisters Hannah Parker, Mary Colburn, and Elizabeth Baldwin. His wid. d. July 9, 1822, aged 83 years.

PEAKE.—Jonas Stone in 1754, gave notice as then required by law, that Philip Peake, a child from Boston, came to Lexington to reside in his family. There were other Peakes in town, but I know not their origin.

Joseph Mason m. Oct. 19, 1769, Elizabeth Peake, who was ad. to the ch. Oct. 13, 1765.

PENNY.—DAVID PENNY and Sally Smith, both of Lex., were m. Sept. 30, 1779. They had Sarah, b. Feb. 20, 1780; Polly, b. Feb. 20, 1782, d. Feb. 23, 1782; Jonathan, b. March 12, 1783, d. Dec. 5, 1783; Polly, b. Nov. 12, 1785, d. 1829; David, b. March 25, 1788, m. May 12, 1822, Mary F. Sherman, she d. 1852; Isaac, b. July 20, 1790, d. 1809; Samuel C., b. Dec. 13, 1793; Hannah, b. May 14, 1795, d. Feb. 21, 1860. David, sen., d. Jan. 1830. The absence of a record will prevent any fuller account of this family.

PERRY.—This name appears upon our records at different periods, and yet we are not able to give a connected view of the families. JOHN PERRY, by his wife, Deborah, had the following children: John, b. Dec. 19, 1720; Thomas, b. Dec. 19, 1722; Joseph, b. Oct. 3, 1724; Millicent, b. May 10, 1726; Ebenezer and Jonathan, twins, b. July 17, 1728, Jonathan m. Jan. 27, 1760, Mary Blodgett; Thaddeus, b. Dec. 26, 1730; Abigail, b. Aug. 10, 1735, m. Nov. 20, 1754, Abel Fox of Billerica. Deborah was ad. to the ch. June 29, 1735, and d. May 22, 1736. Thomas Perry was in the French war from Lex. in 1759 and 1762.

The name, which had faded out from the records, appeared again about 1800. NATHAN PERRY by his wife, Sally, had Sullivan B., b. Feb. 1802; Mary, b. Oct. 1, 1803; Sally, b. Aug. 30, 1804; Abijah H., b. Dec. 19, 1806; Thomas W., b. May 1, 1808, d. Nov. 9, 1821; Nahum S., b. March 28, 1810.

THE PHELPS FAMILY.

The early history of this family is but imperfectly known to us.

- 1 JONATHAN PHELPS came to this country early in the eighteenth century, and landed in Newport, R. I. From thence he came to Reading, Mass., where he reared a family of children. One of them (name unknown) came first to Beverly, and then to Salem, where he d. Dec. 1799, aged about 92. He had three sons, Jonathan, Henry, and William, and several daughters.
- 1- 2 HENRY PHELPS was a shipmaster, from the port of Salem, and was lost at sea, 1786. He m. and had children.
- 2- 3 HENRY PHELPS, son of the preceding, having bodily infirmities, which disqualified him from following his father's profession, fitted for college and entered Harvard, where he was graduated, 1788. He studied medicine, and settled in 1799, at Gloucester, as an apothecary and physician. He m. Mary Forbes, dau. of Peter Coffin, Esq., of Gloucester. He d. Feb. 18, 1852, aged 86, and hence was b. 1766. He acquired some practice as a doctor, but soon abandoned that branch of his business. He was many years postmaster, and the principal acting magistrate in the town. He continued to keep his shop till he was about eighty years of age. He had three wives and several children.
- 3- 4 WILLIAM DANE PHELPS, son of the foregoing, was b. at Gloucester, Feb. 14, 1802; m. Mary Ann Cushing, dau. of Henry Cushing of Boston. She d. Dec. 16, 1831, and he m. May 18, 1834, Lusan-na T., dau. of Josiah and Sally (Wellington) Bryant of Lex. He came to Lex. to reside about the time of his second marriage.
- His profession has been that of a mariner. He commenced early as a cabin-boy, and has worked his way through the different grades to master—making many voyages to Europe and the Levant, around Cape Horn and the Cape of Good Hope, in command of some of the finest ships of the times. He was wrecked once while a boy at the Cape of Good Hope, and once when captain at the entrance of Plymouth Harbor in the winter of 1836; which was one of the most distressing shipwrecks known for many years on our coast. The cold was intense, and the ship was unmanageable in consequence of the ice which accumulated upon her. Part of the crew perished by the cold, and those who were saved were badly bruised and frozen. In one of his early voyages, when he was before the mast, he was left with seven others on a desert island in the Indian Ocean to procure a cargo of sea elephant oil, and fur seal skins—the captain promising to return for them in nine months. But actuated probably by that thirst of gain which stifles every feeling of humanity, and believing that they could not subsist after the provision left with them was exhausted, and as the island was very rarely visited by voyagers, he thought he might touch there at a future day, and take his oil and furs without being troubled by having any men to pay off. But on his return twenty-eight months after, he found not only a full cargo of oil and furs, but his eight men all living. The island being in a high latitude, it was cold and desolate, not a tree or shrub sprang from its inhospitable bosom; and consequently these poor dwellers thereon had no fuel of the ordinary kind, but were compelled to burn the blubber of the sea elephant. The interior of the island was composed of barren volcanic ridges, but the shores abounded with sea fowl, penguin, and marine animals. Their nine months' provisions became exhausted, and for the remainder of the time they subsisted upon what the shore afforded, fish and fowls and their eggs. For clothing they supplied themselves with fur skins, and for shelter they sought the "caves and dens of the earth." After twenty-eight months, their unprincipled captain arrived—his being the first vessel which had been in sight for the whole period. He took his cargo and the men, who were glad to leave that inclement island. The subsequent conduct of this brutal captain, fully justified the suspicion that he had hoped that they had all perished before his return.

During this voyage, which to young Phelps was extended to more than six years, he, by the force of circumstances, left the ship, and was obliged to take service under the flags of various nations, visiting most of the parts of the Pacific, and the then known parts of Australia and Van Dieman's land, and returned home by way of Cape Horn in 1823, in good health, with considerable experience, but with empty pockets.

In 1840, in command of a large ship, he commenced a series of trading voyages to California, remaining there till he had disposed of his cargo and procured a cargo of hides. These voyages were generally of about three years' duration. San Francisco was then called Yerba Buena, and consisted of only three houses, where the famous city now stands. At that time the River Sacramento had never been visited from the sea, and Capt. Phelps with two of his boats and a part of his crew explored it about one hundred miles, and displayed the Stars and Stripes for the first time upon its placid waters. On his third voyage, the country was disturbed by the Mexican War, and being upon the coast he co-operated with Stockton and Fremont in various ways, and so contributed something to our gaining possession of the country. He visited the mines twice, handled some of the first specimens of gold, and returned home by the way of Panama, bringing some of the first specimens of gold, and reliable information in relation to the mines. The last voyage he performed was to California, the Sandwich Islands and China, and returned to New York in 1857. He has spent about forty years in a sea life, twenty-six of them in command of a ship. During that time, with one exception already mentioned, no Insurance Office has ever paid a dollar for damage to his ships or cargo; and with the same exception, he never lost a man by sickness or accident, until the last voyage, when two died of disease in China.

From this brief sketch, it will be seen that Capt. Phelps's life has been active and eventful. With no small degree of truth, we can say of him in the language of Campbell,

"His march was o'er the mountain wave,
His home was on the deep."

- 4- 5 Lusanna, b. Nov. 18, 1836.
6 Alice D., b. Oct. 18, 1838; m. Oct. 15, 1862, Charles C. Goodwin of Charlestown. They reside in Lex. and have one child, viz. George C., b. Nov. 24, 1863.
7 Edwin Buckingham, b. April 14, 1845; d. Sept. 9, 1849.

THE PHINNEY FAMILY.

- 1 BENJAMIN PHINNEY, the first of the name in Lex., came into the town, 1787, from Granville, Nova Scotia. We have not been able to learn his birth or parentage. He and his wife, Susanna, were ad. to the ch. in Falmouth, Mass., May 10, 1772; at the same time two of their children, Chloe and Josiah, were bap. In Aug. 1774, their dau. Susanna was baptized; and they were dismissed from the Falmouth church to the united church of Annapolis and Granville, Nova Scotia. The Lexington church records, Oct. 14, 1787, recognize the fact of their recommendation from Falmouth to Nova Scotia, "from thence they came to reside in this town, and requested ch. privileges with us." He d. 1843, aged 99, and hence must have been b. about 1744. She d. June 16, 1829.

- 1-2 Patience, b. ———; m. Sept. 25, 1809, Eli Green of Boston.
- 3 Chloe, bap. May 10, 1772; m. May 21, 1794, John Stearns of Walt.
- 4 Josiah, bap. May 10, 1772.
- 5 Susanna, bap. May 10, 1774; m. May 22, 1794, Peleg Stearns, Walt.
- 6 Joseph, b. ———; was drowned.
- 7 Theodore, b. ———; m. Ann Barrett in Cuba.
- 8 †Elias, b. in Nova Scotia, 1780; m. June 6, 1809, Catharine Bartlett.
- 9 Benjamin, bap. Oct. 14, 1787; d. Oct. 16, 1791.
- 10 Deidama, bap. Aug. 20, 1788; m. Barnabas Fales of Washington city and d. soon after.
- 1-8- ELIAS PHINNEY m. June 6, 1809, Catharine Bartlett, dau. of Dr. Josiah and Elizabeth (Call) Bartlett of Charlestown. He grad. H. C. 1801, read law, and commenced practice in Thomaston, Me. He afterwards removed to Charlestown, where he had an office. Having a taste for rural life, he came to Lex. in 1823, where he d. July 24, 1849, aged 69. His wid. d. Aug. 2, 1864, aged 78. He was a prominent man in the town and county, was for many years clerk of the courts for the county of Middlesex, which office he held at the time of his death. He was highly distinguished as an agriculturalist, being for many years a trustee of the State Agricultural Society. His farm in the south part of the town was brought by him to a high state of cultivation, and the farm, fruit trees, and stock attracted visitors from a great distance; so that his scientific and practical knowledge of husbandry exerted a wide influence over those engaged in that department of human industry. In 1825, he published an interesting account of the Battle of Lexington, in which he vindicated with great ability the claims of the town of Lexington against certain pretensions set up by a few indiscreet men of Concord.
- 8-11 Josiah B., b. April 1, 1810; m. Lucretia Beekford of Charlestown. He moved to Cuba, where they resided twelve or fifteen years, when he returned to the United States and settled in Illinois. He had two sons, one of whom is living.
- 12 Susan M., b. Sept. 30, 1812; m. Dec. 19, 1833, Isaac H. Spring. He resided in Boston, where he d. April 7, 1864. They had four daughters.
- 13 Catharine B., b. April 2, 1814; m. in 1837, Thomas Goodall. They resided in Vicksburg, Miss. He d. and she is now residing in Chicago. They had four children.
- 14 Elizabeth B., b. Dec. 29, 1816; m. Sept. 30, 1841, A. H. Nelson, who was a prominent member of the bar, and was raised to a judgeship. They resided first in Concord, and afterward in Wo., where he d. 1857.
- 15 Mary P., b. Feb. 2, 1818; m. May 1, 1858, G. A. Olmhausen. He d. Sept. 7, 1860. They resided in Manchester, N. H. Mrs. Olmhausen is a lady of great perseverance and force of character. After the death of her husband she returned to her friends, and on the breaking out of the Rebellion her sympathies were turned to the sick and wounded soldiers, who had left the comforts of home to sustain the liberties of the country. Her active sense of the worth of our institutions, and of the baseness of the attempt to overthrow them; and her just appreciation of the devotion of the gallant men who had voluntarily taken their lives in their hands, and gone forth amidst the dangers of the field and the diseases of the camp, to uphold the government of our choice, prompted her to offer her services to her country. In August, 1862, she entered upon her duty as a hospital nurse, and served first at the Mansion House at Alexandria, from thence she was transferred to Morehead City, then to Beaufort, and at last to Smithville, N. C. Having entered for the war, she remained in the United States' service till 1865. She was associated with that well known philanthropist, Miss Dix; and being a regular nurse in the service, she was subject to the orders of the hospital department, or else she would have followed her inclination, and gone to the front, where she would have seen more of suffering, and where she believed, she could have been more useful. Mrs. Olmhausen acquired a high reputation at the hospitals as an active, skillful, and self-sacrificing nurse—always cool and collected, she devoted herself assiduously to the wants of her patients. By her kindness and fidelity she won the respect and esteem of all committed to her care. Many a poor sick or wounded soldier, far from the comforts and endearments of home, has found in her the care and watchfulness of a faithful mother, and the kindness and sympathy of an affectionate sister. We naturally extol the heroism of the gallant soldier who promptly faces danger on the field of battle; but it requires as much moral courage, as much self-sacrifice to brave the diseases of the hospitals, as it does to face the enemy in the field. Much praise is due to Mrs Olmhausen.

16 Jane, b Oct. 3, 1820.

17 Charlotte B., b. July 17, 1822; m. April, 1842, Rev. William G. Swett, who was settled as a minister in Lexington. She had one dau. C. B. W. G. Swett, b. Feb. 8, 1843. He d. Feb. 15, 1843, and she m. June 1, 1863, Francis K. Simonds. They have two children.

18 George P., b. Jan. 24, 1824; m. Kate Richardson of Woburn. He resides in Illinois, and has six children. She d. May, 1867.

19 Alice B., b. Nov. 9, 1826; m. May 23, 1854, James S. Munroe; they reside in Lexington.

20 B. Frank, b. Jan. 28, 1829. He was a mariner—having entered on ship-board as a cabin boy, he passed through the different stages to that of captain. He d. in Brazil, 1855.

THE PIERCE FAMILY.

The Pierces (frequently spelt Peirce,) came to the country early, and settled in that great hive of emigrants, Watertown. It is somewhat difficult to trace the genealogy of the family, as they are quite numerous, and are scattered through several towns. There is also danger of confounding the Watertown families with the descendants of Robert Pierce, who settled at Dorchester as early as 1630.

1 JOHN PIERCE, a weaver of Wat. was ad. freeman March, 1638. He died, Aug. 19, 1661. His wid. Elizabeth, in her will dated March 5, and proved April 2, 1667, makes mention of sons Anthony, Robert and John, and dau. Esther Morse, and Mary Coldam. It is probable that Robert settled in Wo. where he d. Sept. 10, 1706, leaving a family of children.

1-2 ANTHONY PIERCE, b. in England, 1609, and ad. freeman Sept. 3, 1634, was the ancestor of all or nearly all the families bearing that

- name in the towns of Wat., Waltham, Weston, Lincoln, and Lex. He m. first, Sarah ———; m. second, about 1638, Anne ———. He d. May 9, 1678. His wid. d. Jan. 20, 1683.
- 2-3 John, b. ———; m. Ruth, dau. of Nathaniel Bishop. He d. without issue, and his wid. m. William Fuller.
- 4 Mary, b. Oct. 20, 1633; d. young.

THE PRESTON FAMILY.

MARSHALL PRESTON came to Lex. from Billerica in 1849. His family record, as far as ascertained, is as follows:

- 1 AMARIAH PRESTON of Connecticut, m. Elizabeth Warren of Newton, Mass., and r. in Uxbridge. She d. about 1756, and he m. a second wife. He d. in Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y., Feb. 27, 1834, at the advanced age of 95. He had a son bearing his own name.

- 1-2 AMARIAH PRESTON, b. Feb. 5, 1758; m. Oct. 18, 1790, Hannah Reed of Bedford. She d. Feb. 8, 1795, and he m. May 15, 1796, Ruhamah Lane, dau. of John and Rebecca, who d. Oct. 2, 1826. Mr. Preston had an eventful life. His mother dying when he was about two years old, he was put out, as the term was, and after living in Uxbridge, Mass., and Ashford, Conn., he went to Dighton, Mass., to learn a trade. In 1777, he entered the Continental army and served three years. In 1785, he commenced the study of medicine and established himself in Bedford, where he practiced forty-five years. His wife dying, and he being in the seventy-fifth year of his age, and not affluent in his circumstances, he left Bedford to reside with his son, Hervey N. Preston, then practicing medicine in Plymouth. His son dying soon after his arrival, he immediately entered upon his practice, and though advanced in life, he retrieved his fortune by continuing in practice till he was eighty-seven years of age. He then left Plymouth to reside with his son Marshall at Billerica. Soon after this his son removed to Lex., and the old gentleman came with him, where he spent the remainder of his days. He d. Oct. 29, 1853, aged 95 years, 8 months, and 24 days. He retained his faculties both bodily and mental to the last; and his whole life furnishes a remarkable instance of energy and perseverance.

THE RAYMOND FAMILY.

The Raymonds were never very numerous in Lexington, though at one time there were several of that name. We are not able to fix the time when they came to Lexington. We find upon the tax bill of 1733 the names of Jonathan Raymond and Jonathan Raymond, jr., and in the following year Jonathan, jr., was chosen one of the fence viewers in Lexington. Samuel Raymond and his wife, Sarah, were admitted to the church, Jan. 26, 1737, by a letter from the church in Beverly. Richard Raymond was in Salem in 1634, and the name was quite common in Beverly at an early day. As Samuel Raymond came from Beverly, it is highly probable that Jonathan came from the same place, as they were brothers. As Jonathan Raymond in 1733 bore the addition of jr., it is probable that his father was in the town also at that time.

- 1 JONATHAN RAYMOND, sen., was the father both of Jonathan and Samuel. In his will, dated Aug. 16, 1742, and proved Nov. 22, 1742, he says, "To my beloved sons Jonathan Raymond and Samuel Raymond I give twenty shillings each, which, with what I have already possessed them with, is what I devise to them out of my estate." He also mentions in his will his wife, Charity, to whom he gives among other things. "the use of my boy Robin." He mentions further, sons, Thomas, William, Bartholomew, and Josiah, and dau. Sarah Tidd, deceased, Mehitabel, and Charity. The birth of a part of these children are borne upon the Lexington records, though most of them were born before he came to Lexington. She d. March 9, 1768, aged 87.

JONATHAN RAYMOND m. Oct. 4, 1756, Susanna White, dau. of Joseph and Hannah White. They probably lived for a short period in Wat., as we find the following record of the baptism of one of their children. "Baptized Mary Raymond, dau. of Jonathan, jr., the parents having owned the covenant in Watertown." They had a family of eleven children, six sons and five dau. Among them were Susanna, b. March 28, 1757; Mary, bap. Nov. 28, 1759; Hepzibah, bap. Jan. 3, 1762. They removed to Westminster about 1763, where most of his children were born, and where he d. about 1783. He was a soldier in the War of the Revolution. Some of his descendants are found in Westminster at the present day.

There are at the present time, Raymonds in town, but from a different family, though probably of the same original stock, and not till recently resident in this place.

Aug. 23, 1863; Henry S., b. May 18, 1866.

THE REED FAMILY.

The Reeds came to Cambridge Farms from Woburn in 1686. They were in the country much earlier. There is considerable difficulty in tracing the residence of the first ancestor of this family, arising from the fact that there are several persons among the early emigrants of the same name. But there is evidence which we deem reliable, that William Reed and his wife, Mabel, with three of their children, viz., George, then six years old, Ralph, five years old, and

Justus, eighteen months, came to New England from London, in the ship Defence, in 1635. He was at that time forty-eight years old, and his wife thirty. He settled first at Dorchester; but like many of the early settlers moved from place to place, at least temporarily. In 1639, he sold his real estate in Dorchester and moved to Scituate, where he was constable in 1644. While there he sent his wife to Dorchester on horse-back with an infant to be baptized; he being a member of the church in that place. He was probably a resident at Muddy River (now Brookline) in 1648, when he purchased of Nicholas Davis a farm in Woburn of some sixty acres, "with all the barns, out-houses, fences, and all to the same belonging." He probably moved to Woburn soon after he made this purchase, and resided there a few years, when he and his wife returned to England, where he died at Newcastle-upon-Tyne in 1656. He made his will, appointing no executor, and Oliver Cromwell made his wife, Mabel, executrix, on the last day of October, 1656; and she returned to this country to their children, then in Woburn, Nov. 21, 1660. She m. Henry Sumner of Woburn, whom she survived, and d. in the family of her son George, June 15, 1690, aged 85 years. Most of the Reeds of Lexington descended from

1 WILLIAM REED and Mabel, his wife, whose maiden name was probably Kendall.

- 1-2 †George, b. in Eng. 1629; m. Oct. 4, 1652, Elizabeth Jennison.
 3 Ralph, b. in Eng. 1630; m. Mary Pierce of Wat. and d. in Woburn, Jan. 4, 1712, aged 81, and left issue.
 4 Justus, b. in Eng. 1633; d. before his parents went to England.
 5 Abigail, b. probably in Dor.; m. Oct. 2, 1650, Francis Wyman.
 6 Bethia, b. probably in Dorchester; m. Apr. 28, 1657, John Johnson, son of Capt. Edward, Author of "Wonder-Working Providence."
 7 Israel, b. 1642; m. Mary, dau. of Francis Kendall, his cousin.
 8 Sarah, b. ———; m. Sept. 10, 1662, Samuel Walker.
 9 Rebecca, b. ———; m. Joseph Winn.

The above named children all resided in Woburn. George, Ralph, and Israel had large families, making the name of Reed quite common in that town.

1-2- GEORGE REED m. Oct. 4, 1652, Elizabeth Jennison, dau. of Robert Jennison of Wat. She was b. April 12, 1637, and d. Feb. 26, 1665. He m. Nov. 9, 1665, Hannah Rockwell of Charlestown. He had eight children by his first wife, and five by his last. He d. Feb. 21, 1706, aged 77.

 19 Mary, b. June 15, 1674; m. 1697, Matthew Johnson.
 20 Timothy, b. Oct. 20, 1678; m. Persis Kendall.
 21 Thomas, b. July 15, 1682; m. Feb. 1, 1704, Sarah Sawyer.

2-15- WILLIAM REED m. May 24, 1686, Abigail Kendall of Woburn. She had extra fingers and toes, and from this blood that excrecence has cropped out from generation to generation in some branches of the family. William Reed, or Capt. Reed as he was generally called, may be regarded as the ancestor of the greater part of the Reeds of Lexington, though there were others of the name, who will be noticed hereafter. He was one of the most prominent citizens of the precinct and town. He was a justice of the peace, filled the office of selectman, and represented the town in the General Court several years. He was equally prominent in the church, being one of the original members. He purchased land in the north-westerly part of the township, and located himself on what is now known as Bedford street, near the residence of the late Christopher Reed. He added to his real estate from time to time, and became a large land-holder, and so was able to leave a good farm to each of his three sons. A portion of his lands has remained in the family to the present day. The neighborhood of Capt. Reed's residence was at one time the most populous of any part of the town out of the village. In addition to the Reeds, which were quite numerous, the Hewses, Trasks, Poulterers, Kendalls, Lawrencees, Dunklees, and Fassetts all resided on or near Bedford street. No family of the early settlers has sustained its standing, through all periods of the town's history, better than the Reeds. He d. May 12, 1718, aged 56, and she d. Oct. 12, 1734.

- 15-22 Abigail, b. May 29, 1687; m. Jonathan Fiske and moved to Sud.

 25 †Benjamin, b. Oct. 22, 1696; m. Rebecca Stone.
 26 Samuel, b. Oct. 20, 1699; d. April 3, 1711.
 27 †Joshua, b. June 20, 1702; m. Elizabeth Russell.
 28 Hezibah, b. Dec. 10, 1705; m. April 19, 1724, Daniel Tidd.
- 15-23- WILLIAM REED m. Sarah Poulter, dau. of John, about 1719. He was an active and efficient man, both in the church and in the town. He held for many years a commission of justice of the peace, and did considerable business in that capacity; and was well known in the town and vicinity by the appellation of 'Squire Reed'. He was very popular with the people, and received all the honors in their gift. Besides minor offices, he was selectman eleven years, and representative seventeen years. He was also a captain in the militia, and was out with a portion of his company in the French war, in 1755. He d. Feb. 11, 1778, aged 85; she d. Nov. 25, 1769. He resided in the house owned by the late Christopher Reed on Bedford street.

- There is another family of Reeds in Lexington, which have been in the place several generations; and though they do not claim any relationship with the descendants of William Reed of Lexington, are nevertheless from the same stock. George Reed, the oldest son of the original emigrant, and father of William Reed, who settled in Cambridge Farms, now Lexington, had a large family, and among his children was

- There was also another family of Reeds in Woburn and Lexington, which had no connection with the William and Mabel race. If we may believe tradition, and the statement is confirmed by many attendant circumstances, Swethern Reed came to this country from Ireland about 1725, and settled in Boston. After remaining there a few years, he removed to Woburn, and took up his abode in that part of the town which now constitutes Burlington.
- 1 SWETHERN REED probably m. Margery Collens, and had a number of children, of whose birth we have very imperfect records.

 6 Lydia, b. —; m. Nathaniel Hutchinson of Woburn.
 7 Rhoda, b. —; d. 1839, aged 30, unm.

Situated on the borders of Lexington, in Woburn and Burlington, it is not at all strange that individuals and even families of the name of Reed, should cross the line and live for a time in Lexington, or at least should have their names upon our Records. I find several such, and shall give them as I find them, without attempting to trace their descent.

PETER REED m. Abigail, and had Abigail, b. May 23, 1727, d. young; Peter, b. Feb. 16, 1729; Abigail, b. April 2, 1731; Mary, b. April 3, 1733; Sarah, b. April 26, 1736; Thomas, b. Nov. 3, 1739; Rebecca, b. May 24, 1743.

DAVID REED m. Lois, and had Philip, b. April 5, 1736; David, b. April 2, 1738; Lydia, b. June 28, 1740; Silas, b. Feb. 23, 1742; Persis, b. April 11, 1745.

NEWHALL REED of Wo., m. Oct. 16, 1777, Mary Harrington of Lex., dau. of Henry and Sarah (Laughton) Harrington, and had Joel, b. May 13, 1777; Abigail, b. July 21, 1778, and d. same day; Newhall, b. April 5, 1783, d. April 8, 1855, aged 73; Nathan, b. Feb. 18, 1786; Mary, b. Sept. 20, 1790, and d. young; Florinda, b. Nov. 24, 1793; Abigail, b. Nov. 21, 1795.

Whether the above named families resided in Lex. or only had their associations here, we are unable to say. Their names are upon Lexington Records.

THE RICHARDSON FAMILY.

Though the Richardsons have been numerous in Woburn and several other towns in the vicinity, there has been no permanent family of that name in Lexington till within a comparatively recent period; and the head of this family descended from a Newbury emigrant.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON was in Newbury early, and m. Aug. 23, 1654, Elizabeth Wiseman, and d. March 14, 1658. They had two children. Joseph, b. May, 1655, m. July, 1681, Margaret, dau. of Peter Godfrey and Mary Browne, who was the first white child b. in 5-10- NATHANIEL ROBBINS m. ——— and lived in Charlestown, where at an early age he d., leaving two young children and a widow. He was mowing in the field in perfect health, when he fell and expired immediately.

May 9, 1754, by a letter of dismissal from the Second church of Camb. He came to Lex. about 1744, as his name appears upon the tax bill in 1745. He was a soldier in the French war from Lex. in 1758, and was enrolled in Capt. Parker's co. in 1775. He was one of the assessors in 1746, and one of the selectmen in 1749. Several of his children were born before he came to Lex., and hence we have no full record of the family. His will, dated 1789, and proved 1791, mentions eldest son Thomas, Stephen, John, Nathaniel, and daughters Mary Mead, Susanna Wadsworth, Deborah Williams, Exene, Ruth, and Hannah. He d. Jan. 30, 1791, aged 89; she d. Feb. 5, 1786, aged 79. The first six of the children were by the first wife.

THE ROBINSON FAMILY.

This family has never been very numerous in Lexington, nor were they among the earliest settlers. The first of the name which appears on our Records was

1 JONATHAN ROBINSON, son of William, b. in Cambridge, April 20, 1682. I find on a copy of the Will of Richard Cutler of Cambridge, made a short time before his death in 1693, this endorsement: "For the two Robinsons, grandsons to the deceased." This paper being found among the papers left by Jonathan Robinson, and Richard Cutler having several dau., one of them may have m. a Robinson, the father of Jonathan. It appears by a deed in possession of the family, that Isaac Powers of Camb., sold to Jonathan Robinson of Camb., weaver, in 1706, a lot of land at Camb. Farms, bounded northerly by Concord road, easterly by land of Joanna Winship, southerly by land of John Dickson, and westerly by land of the heirs of Samuel Winship. This and other deeds of land to Jonathan Robinson, bounded by the Winships, Whitmores, and Bowmans, leaves no doubt but that he resided on or near the place now occupied by Mr. Jonas Gammell, at the termination of Oak street. Jonathan Robinson m. Ruth ———, and probably came to the Farms about 1706. He d. 1753, and she d. April 25, 1759. He filled the honorable office of tythingman in 1735, and in 1744 was on a committee to "dignify and seat the meeting house."

 33 Joseph, b. July 14, 1787; m. Lydia Gair of Boston. He d. May 18, 1822.
- 5-18- EBENEZER ROBINSON d. in South Reading, Vt., Oct. 31, 1857, in his 92d year. He was too young to take part in the opening scene of the Revolution; but before he was sixteen he enlisted with others in a privateer. While on this voyage, having made two prizes, and sent them into Boston, they fell in with several armed ships, and after a desperate struggle in which he was slightly wounded, they were made prisoners. He was taken to New York, and confined in an old prison ship, where from the packed state of the ship, scanty supply of provision, and other inhuman treatment, he suffered every thing but death. After about six months' confinement in this loathsome prison, he was exchanged; and in a weak, ragged, and penniless condition, was obliged to beg his way home to Lexington, suffering at one time the cold repulses and scourgings of the Tories, and cheered and encouraged at others, by the generosity of the Patriots. Having reached home, and recovered from his imprisonment and suffering, young Robinson enlisted into the Continental army for three years—being then seventeen years of age. For a few months he was stationed at West Point, and was then ordered to New York, where he was connected with the body guard of Washington. On the return of peace, having served about two years, he returned to Lexington, where he remained till 1788, when he in company with an older brother moved to South Reading, Vt., then an almost unbroken wilderness. In 1792, he erected a frame house, and m. Hannah Aekley, who had recently immigrated to that place from Connecticut. He was highly esteemed as a man and a citizen, and filled with honor several military and civil offices. He was always devoted to the cause of liberty, and died respected by his fellow-citizens.
- 10-23- JACOB ROBINSON m. Aug. 26, 1790, Hannah Simonds, dau. of John and Mary (Tufts) Simonds. They were ad. to the ch. April 4, 1791. He d. Sept. 12, 1848, aged 84. She d. Oct. 18, 1853, aged 80. He was selectman in 1805 and 1806, and an assessor several years.

ch. in 1696, and his wife removed her relation from the ch. in Camb. to that of Lex. soon after. He was not only a man of wealth, but was an active and valuable citizen, and filled various offices under the parish and town organization. The record of his family is quite defective. Probably d. March 6, 1733.

|------|----------------------------------------------------|-----|-------------------------------------|
| 5-22 | † John , b. Nov. 9, 1671. | 23 | Thomas , b. Sept. 13, 1673. |

They probably had children between 1676 and 1686.

1-7- PHILIP RUSSELL m. April 19, 1680, Joanna Cutler, dau. of James Cutler, b. 1660, and d. Nov. 26, 1703, aged 43; and he m. second, Oct. 18, 1705, Sarah Brooks of Med. The name of Philip Russell is borne upon our earliest parish and town records; and he appears to have enjoyed the confidence of the people, not only in the new settlement but in the old town. Though residing in the precinct, he was one of the selectmen of Old Camb. in 1700 and 1701. He was a subscriber for the meeting house at the Farms in 1692, and on the committee to "seat the meeting house," when it was ready for occupation. He d. Feb. 7, 1730, aged 80 years. The record of his family is imperfect, but from the probate files we have been enabled to present the following.

- | | |
|------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 7-28 | Joanna , b. Dec. 30, 1684; m. about 1716, William Munroe as his second wife. She was ad. to the ch. Dec. 24, 1727. |
| 29 | † Philip , b. Sept. 18, 1688; d. March 3, 1773, aged 85. |
| 30 | Samuel , b. Jan. 12, 1691. |
| 31 | Jemima , b. 1692; m. William Locke. |
| 32 | † James , b. ———; m. Mary ———. |
| 33 | † William , b. ———; m. Elizabeth ———. |
| 34 | Sarah , b. ———; m. April 26, 1739, Joseph Russell. |
| 35 | Abigail , b. Oct. 27, 1700; m. ——— Sprague. |
| 36 | Susanna , b. Oct. 27, 1706. |

1-8- WILLIAM RUSSELL m. March 18, 1683, Abigail Winship, dau. of Lieut. Edward Winship of Camb. We have little knowledge of the family, as they probably never came to Lex. They had William, b. 1687, who m. Mary, and d. in Lex. Nov. 25, 1731; Abigail, b. Dec. 31, 1688 d. unm. June 20, 1710; Edward, b. 1694, d. June 21, 1695. They probably had other children.

1-9- JASON RUSSELL m. May 27, 1684, Mary Hubbard of Camb., where they resided. They had Jason, b. 1687, John, Martha, Hubbard, Thomas, Elizabeth, and Noah. The late Col. Thomas Russell of W. Camb. was a descendant of this family, being a son of Thomas, son of Jason, son of Hubbard.

2-18- JOSEPH RUSSELL m. Jane ———. He was in the French war. He d. Dec. 20, 1763. The want of records leaves us almost without knowledge of this family. The probate files furnish a few facts. They had at least Jabez, Ephraim, and Joseph. Joseph m. April 26, 1739, Sarah Russell, dau. of Philip Russell. They were cousins. They had two children, one b. Jan. 11, d. Jan. 13, 1740; Sarah, b. Feb. 28, 1740, and d. June 10, 1741. Sarah, the mother, d. May 29, 1742, and Joseph, the husband, d. March 23, 1743. Thus this family became extinct. Joseph, the husband of Jane, in his Will,

- proved 1763, speaks of wife Jane, dau. Abigail Bowman, and sons Thomas, Jabez, and Ephraim. Of the latter alone have we any full record.
- 18-37 †Ephraim, b. 1730; m. Miriam Wheeler of Bedford.
- 5-22- JOHN RUSSELL m. Rebecca ——. They were ad. to the ch. in Lex. April 10, 1715. He d. June 14, 1746.

 86 Betsy, b. May 2, 1808.

It is worthy of remark that in the above family there were nine children born in less than twelve years. This is explained by the remarkable fact that there were two pairs of twins in the family.

70-78- PHILIP RUSSELL m. March 16, 1837, Sabra Wood of Burlington. She d. Oct. 10, 1862. The confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens is manifest from the various offices he has been called to fill. He was selectman thirteen years, assessor five years, and representative nine years. He was also actively engaged in the military, and passed through the various grades till he enjoyed the title of colonel.

- 78-87 Sabra Ann, b. Feb. 3, 1838; d. May 15, 1862.

 89 Henry Austin, b. Nov. 16, 1841; d. March 15, 1866.
 90 Martha Ella, b. Nov. 18, 1850.

We have found more than ordinary difficulty in tracing the Russell family. There were Russells in town who probably did not descend from William and Martha. There were Russells in Charlestown and in Woburn, and probably some of the name came into Lexington. Early upon our records we find the name of Jonathan Russell, who appeared to have been a man of some note, as he filled the office of constable in 1717, and subsequently was otherwise noticed. He was ad. to the ch. Dec. 19, 1708. He may have come to Lex. from Wo.

THE SAVILLE FAMILY.

EDWARD SAVILLE of Weymouth, and WILLIAM SAVILLE of Braintree, were both in the country as early as 1640. But it is not known from which, if from either, the family we design to trace descended.

THOMAS SAVILLE, said to have come from Malden, settled in Gloucester, in a part of the town called Squam, where he d. at the age of 84. He m. 1722, Mary Haraden. They had several children, among whom was Jesse, who was one of his majesty's custom house officers in 1770. The opposition to British taxation rendered every officer of the crown unpopular. Saville shared the fate of all such officers. His house was assailed, and he was treated with violence. It does not appear, however, that he espoused the cause of Great Britain. Babson in his History of Gloucester, says of him, "He lived a useful and retired life, and d. March 11, 1823, at an advanced age." He had several sons; John went to sea and was taken prisoner and carried to England, and never returned; Oliver, d. on a voyage to India; David, was lost at sea. Besides these, he had Thomas, James, and William.

1 THOMAS SAVILLE b. Aug. 18, 1764; m. May 10, 1787, Betsey Haraden, b. June 15, 1764. He d. May 7, 1845; she d. Sept. 23, 1836. They had several children who d. in infancy. Besides they had the following.

| 7 | James , b. Jan. 29, 1808. | |

1-6- DAVID SAVILLE m. Sept. 12, 1830, Ann W. Leonard, dau. of Rev. Ezra and Nancy (Woodbury) Leonard, b. July 19, 1808. Mr. Leonard, the father-in-law of Mr. Saville, was a Congregationalist clergyman in Gloucester. In the course of his ministry he embraced the doctrine of universal salvation, and such was his influence in his parish, and such his hold upon their esteem and affections, that his whole congregation either adopted his views, or quietly tolerated them, so that no rupture occurred in the society, and he continued to be their pastor. Mr. Saville resided in Gloucester till 1845, when he moved to Charlestown, and in 1849 he removed to Lexington. His father being a seafaring man, he accompanied him on voyages at an early age, and continued in the calling of a mariner till he became master of a vessel. He was taken prisoner on the coast of Chili by a privateer and set on shore, where he was forced into the army, from which he escaped and shipped on board a whaler. In his voyages he visited different parts of both continents. He was in the West India and South American trade; made voyages to the Baltic and the Mediterranean, and left the sea about 1835. In 1836 and 1838, he represented his native town in the Legislature, and was for some years an inspector in the Boston Custom House. Since 1849, he has spent most of his time in California, keeping up his residence in Lexington, where his family reside.

- 6-9 | Leonard A., b. Jan. 31, 1833; m. June 5, 1862, Rebecca H. Gould, dau. of James Gould of Lex. He has spent five years in California. They have two children, Fred Clifford, b. Feb. 21, 1863; Anna Muzzey, b. Sept. 19, 1866. He is in trade in Lex.; was chosen town clerk, 1868.
- 10 | John, b. July 7, 1835; d. Jan. 6, 1838.
- 11 | Annie W., b. July 8, 1838; m. Dec. 13, 1860, David W. Muzzey.
- 12 | Clifford, b. July 19, 1840. He was nine months in the service in North Carolina in the late Rebellion.
- 13 | David, b. May 8, 1843; he was killed at Gloucester, Sept. 29, 1853, by the accidental discharge of a gun.
- 14 | Frank Edward, b. Dec. 24, 1846. He was b. in Charlestown, while his brothers and sisters were all b. in Gloucester.

THE SIMONDS FAMILY.

The Simonds of Lexington, originated in Woburn, and came to this place about 1680. The first notice of them in the Woburn records, is in 1644. When they came to the country is unknown.

- 1 | WILLIAM SIMONDS of Wo. m. Jan. 28, 1644, Judith Hayward, dau. of James Hayward. He settled in Wo., about a mile and a half westerly of the centre of the town, where he built a house which was used as a fort during the Indian wars. He was one of the proprietors of the town, and became a considerable landholder. He was denominated a planter. He served, as most of the men at that day did, in the military movements of the times. He was admitted a freeman in 1670. He d. in 1670, leaving a wife and a large family of children. His widow survived him twenty years, and d. Jan. 5, 1690.
- 1-2 | Sarah, b. Aug. 8, 1644. ————— 3 Judith, b. May 13, 1646.
- 4 | Mary, b. Jan. 19, 1648.
- 5 | Caleb, b. Aug. 26, 1649; m. Sept. 1677, Sarah Bacon.
- 6 | William, b. April 25, 1651.
- 7 | †Joseph, b. Sept. 28, 1652; d. Aug. 12, 1733, in Lexington.
- 8 | Benjamin, b. March 28, 1654; m. Rebecca ———.
- 9 | Tabatha, b. July 30, 1656; d. same day.
- 10 | James, b. Oct. 11, 1657; m. Feb. 19, 1685, Susanna Blodgett.
- 11 | Bethiah, b. Feb. 11, 1659; m. Aug. 13, 1696, John Walker.
- 12 | Huldah, b. Jan. 23, 1660; m. May 10, 1683, Samuel Blodgett.

- 1-7- | JOSEPH SIMONDS m. March 7, 1681, Mary Tidd, dau. of John and Rebecca (Wood) Tidd. Mr. Simonds and his father-in-law both came from Wo. and settled in the same neighborhood, near where Mr. Charles Johnson now resides. The locality is marked by the huge and venerable elms which have braved the tempests of nearly two centuries. His name is found on the earliest records of Lex., he being a subscriber to the first meeting house in 1692. His name is also borne on the first tax bill in 1693, and was among the eight or ten highest tax payers on the list. In 1695, we find the name of Sergeant Joseph Simonds among the assessors, along with Sergeant Thomas Cutler and Corporal William Reed, so that at that early day he seems to have been on the high road of military promotion. He was one of the selectmen at the first organization under the town charter, in 1713. He subsequently served on the school committee, and filled other important offices in the town. He and his wife, Mary, were admitted to the church under Mr. Estabrook, in 1698. He d. Aug. 12, 1733, aged 86, and his wife d. Jan. 4, 1732, aged 77.

One stone in the grave yard bears the names of both of them. The record of this family is very imperfect,—the birth of only four of their children is recorded. His Will, dated Jan. 16, 1733, and proved Sept. 21, 1733, mentions sons Joshua, Joseph, Daniel, and Jonathan, and dau. Rebecca Wellington, Mary Grimes, Abigail Knight, and Elizabeth Brown. Daniel was made executor of his Will.

- 7-13 Rebecca, b. June 11, 1682; m. Thomas Wellington of Watertown.
 14 Mary, b. Dec. 15, 1684; m. William Grimes.

 16 Joseph, b. June 8, 1689.
 17 †Daniel, b. 1692; d. April 3, 1776.
 18 †Jonathan, b. ———; d. Dec. 22, 1748.
 19 Abigail, b. ———; m. ——— Knight.
 20 Elizabeth, bap. Nov. 13, 1698; m. Jonathan Brown.

7-15- JOSHUA SIMONDS m. Hannah Poulter of Lex. He was constable in 1728, school committee in 1732, and selectman in 1733 and 1746. He d. Nov. 3, 1768, aged 82; and she d. Nov. 11, 1789, at the advanced age of 96. His Will, dated June 29, 1767, and proved Nov. 22, 1768, mentions Hannah, his wife, and his sons Joshua and Joseph, and his dau. Sarah Bowman, Hannah Brooks and Betty Reed. He made ample provision for his wife, which I will notice, as it shows the habits and customs of the times. After describing the portion of his house which she might occupy, he provides that she shall be furnished with a good horse, two good cows, six bushels of corn, three of rye, two of wheat, two of malt, fifty pounds of pork, hundred pounds of beef, two barrels of good cider, three bushels of winter apples, a sufficiency of suitable sauce, twelve pounds of flax, six pounds of wool, and six cords of wood, to be furnished annually during her life.

- 15-21 Joshua, b. Feb. 11, 1721; d. Aug. 29, 1724.
 22 John, b. Aug. 1, 1724; d. Sept. 1, 1728.
 23 Sarah, b. Aug. 11, 1727; m. June 24, 1756, Francis Bowman, Bed.
 24 Hannah, b. Oct. 17, 1729; m. ——— Brooks.
 25 Betty, b. Jan. 22, 1732; m. April 13, 1757, Hammon Reed.
 26 †Joshua, b. May 26, 1736; m. Martha Bowers.
 27 †Joseph, b. Oct. 1, 1739; m. March 2, 1769, Elizabeth Stone.

7-17- DANIEL SIMONDS m. Nov. 29, 1716, Abigail Smith of Waltham. The same year, according to the good old custom, he was chosen hogreeve. To him this was a rising-post, for subsequently, viz. in 1740 and 1755, we find his name among the selectmen. He and his wife united with the church in Lexington, 1751. He d. April 3, 1776, aged 83.

- 17-28 Mary, b. March 20, 1718.

 33 Abigail, b. Aug. 30, 1736; m. May 29, 1753, Isaiah Tay of Woburn.
 34 Sarah, b. April 25, 1739; m. April 22, 1756, Abraham Merriam of Concord.

7-18- JONATHAN SIMONDS m. Lydia Bowman. He appears to have been a considerable landholder. His homestead contained one hundred and two acres, bounded easterly on land of Thomas Blodgett, Robert Fiske, and Woburn line, westerly by land of Joshua Simonds and the town road, northerly on land of Joshua Simonds, Jonathan Robinson, and Thomas Hadley, and southerly on land of Joshua Simonds, Samuel Raymond, Robert Fiske, and Thomas Blodgett. His whole estate at his decease was valued in the currency of the day at £ 3,251. This description of his homestead fixes his residence in the north-easterly part of the town, near the present corner of Wo. and Bur. He d. Dec. 22, 1748. He was one of the selectmen in 1732.

- 18-35 Jonathan, b. April 26, 1715.

THE SMITH FAMILY.

In looking into the early records of almost any town in the Commonwealth, we should naturally expect to find the name of Smith; and if John himself was not there, we should infer that he had left his kinsmen, Joseph, and Thomas, and Samuel, and had gone on a tour to visit his old friend, Mr. Jones. In regard to Lex. we are not left to matters of inference; for in looking at the first tax ever imposed by the parish, in 1693, we find that both John and Thomas are there, acting the part of good citizens, by contributing to the support of religious institutions. But though we have record evidence that John and Thomas were at Camb. Farms in 1693, we are not so certain whence they came or who were their ancestors. The Smiths were so numerous in Wat., Lex., and other neighboring towns, and the Christian names of John and Joseph and Thomas and Samuel being so common in all the families, it becomes exceedingly difficult to trace them and preserve the personal identity, or even the family to which any one of them belongs. Living as they did, and still do, on the borders of the town, near the line of Wat. and Walt., there will, almost as a matter of course, be some passing and repassing of the town line, which increases the difficulty in making the genealogy perfectly accurate.

According to the best information we can obtain, the Lex. Smiths came from Wat. On the earliest list of proprietors of that town, in 1636, are four of the name of Smith, viz., John, sen., John, jr., Thomas, and Francis.

- 1 JOHN SMITH, sen., had a wife by the name of Isabella, who d. Oct. 12, 1639, aged 60 years. It is probable that John and Isabella were the parents of John, jr., and Thomas, and perhaps of Francis and Daniel. John, sen., d. July 12, 1639, aged 60.
- 1-2 John, ad. freeman, May 22, 1639. He may have been the John Smith who d. in Lancaster in 1669.
- 3 Francis was ad. freeman, May 18, 1631.
- 4 Daniel was a resident in Wat. as early as 1642.
- 5 † Thomas came to America in the summer of 1635, and was ad. freeman, May 17, 1637.

- 1-5- THOMAS SMITH m. Mary, dau. of William Knapp. He d. March 10, 1693, aged 92.
- 5- 6 James, b. Sept. 18, 1637; he moved to Lancaster.
 7 John, b. and d. Nov. 1639.
 8 †Thomas, b. Aug. 26, 1640; d. in Lex. Dec. 25, 1727.
 9 †John, b. Dec. 10, 1641; m. Mary Reeves.
 10 †Joseph, b. June 10, 1643; d. June, 1711.

 13 Jonathan, b. 1659; ad. freeman 1690.
 14 Sarah, d. before her father, leaving children.
- 5-8- THOMAS SMITH m. 1663, Mary Hosmer, dau. of James Hosmer of Con., where his eldest three children were born. He moved to Lex., where he and his wife were ad. to the ch. June, 1701, by a letter of dismissal from Weymouth. He was taxed here in 1693, and in 1700 we find honorable mention of him. In the delicate work of seating the meeting house, we find that John Stone and Thomas Smith, "were Plast in y^e fore seatt of y^e body of seats." He d. Dec. 25, 1727, aged 88, and she d. Oct. 1, 1719, aged 64. Their names and deaths are inscribed on one stone in the Lex. Old Grave Yard.

- 81-151- JOSIAH SMITH m. May, 1817, Lucinda Wyman of Med. She d. April 4, 1853, aged 60. He is living, in the 79th year of his age, as spry and active as most men at sixty. He has been long and extensively known as a master of the fife. Commencing at an early age, he has played nearly seventy years for military companies. Such has been his reputation as a fifer, that he has been engaged by some of the most celebrated companies in the State, to play for them on their annual parades and on festive occasions. The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company have been regaled by his music on their annual parade for the last half century, and thousands of our citizens, from Bangor, Me., to Alexandria, Va., have been excited to patriotic emotions by the piercing notes of his favorite instrument. Nor has his labor in this line been confined to the "piping times of peace." In the war of 1812, he was three months in the service, and in the late war many a soldier has left the Commonwealth to defend our free institutions, with his breast heaving with patriotism excited by the music of this venerable fifer.

1 WILLIAM SMITH b. May 26, 1794, in Walt.; came to Lex. Jan. 8, 1819, m. April, 1820, Mary Fiske, dau. of Isaac and Sarah (Flagg) Fiske of Walt. She d. March 19, 1823, leaving one child. He m. July 22, 1824, Mary C. Green, dau. of Jonas and Hannah (Child) Green of Walt. She d. Feb. 13, 1829. She had two children. He m. Nov. 1832, Joan, wid. of Oliver Locke. Capt. William Smith, though not a Lexington man by birth, is from the same parent stock as the families above traced. He was son of Elijah Smith, b. Jan. 30, 1760, who was the son of Jonas Smith, b. June 7, 1719, who was the son of Zachariah Smith, b. May 16, 1687, who was the son of Jonathau (No. 13 in the foregoing table of the Smith family), and Jonathan was a brother of Thomas, John, and Joseph, who settled in Lex., and they were sons of Thomas, who was born in England and came to this country, 1635, with his father, John.

- 1- 2 William H., b. Dec. 22, 1820; he resides in Boston.
 3 Franklin G., b. May 23, 1825; d. Sept. 19, 1826.

WEBSTER SMITH, like Capt. William above, is a Lexington man by adoption, but is of the same parent stock as the Lexington families. His father, Jonas Smith, b. Feb. 6, 1788, was son of Zachariah, b. Aug. 22, 1749, who was son of Jonas, b. June 7, 1719. Here the ancestors of William and Webster unite; and by tracing them back through Zachariah, we come to Jonathau (No. 13 in the foregoing register of the Smiths), and thence to the first emigrant. These Smiths generally resided in Waltham.

JONAS SMITH of Linc. m. 1815, Abigail Fiske, dau. of Plinckas. She d. April 13, 1862. They have had Abigail, d. in infancy; Francis, b. April 8, 1822, m. Abigail Baker; Webster, b. May 24, 1825; Sarah Caroline, b. June 7, 1828, m. Samuel Pierce.

WEBSTER SMITH, the second son of Jonas, purchased the well known Plinney Place, and came to Lex. about 1852. He m. April 5, 1863, Caroline Cormic, dau. of Peter and Mary Cormic of Pictou, Nova Scotia. They have one child, Abbie Fiske, b. July 4, 1865. He was one of the selectmen during the Rebellion, when many important duties were devolved upon that Board.

There are other Smiths in Lexington, who have come into town recently, but do not belong to the same original stock.

- 1 | WILLIAM L. SMITH came to Lex. from Sterling about 1820. He
 m. Hannah Lane of Bed. He d. July, 1857, aged 60.
- 1- 2 | William H., b. Dec. 10, 1820; m. May 20, 1849, Susan L. Holbrook.

Smith has served several years as overseer of the poor and as selectman. He is also a magistrate.

THE SPAULDING FAMILY.

Though the name of Spaulding is quite common, no family of that name has resided in Lexington till a period comparatively recent. The Spauldings probably originated in Braintree, where Edward and his wife Margaret settled, and where she d. 1640. He had Edward and Benjamin b. in Braintree before 1644, and Andrew b. Nov. 19, 1653 in Chelmsford, to which place he had removed. Andrew was a deacon of the church there. The descendants of Edward Spaulding became numerous in that and some of the neighboring towns. Edward Spaulding was chosen into office in Chelmsford in 1654, and is said to have planted the first orchard in the town. The late Dr. Spaulding of Lexington descended from this stock.

- 1 | STILLMAN SPAULDING, son of Job and Sarah (Proctor) Spaulding of Chelmsford, m. May 13, 1819, Lucy Butterfield, dau. of John and Rebecca (Kendall) Butterfield of the same town. Having studied medicine, he established himself in Lex. about 1820, and continued in practice to the time of his death, May 26, 1860. He was in his 72d year.
- 1- 2 | John B., b. June 29, 1823; d. May 4, 1832.

- 6 | John B., b. Sept. 11, 1836; m. Oct. 3, 1861, Mary^oBates Saville of Gloucester.

There are other Spauldings in Lexington, from whom no returns have been received.

STAPLES.—REV. NAHOR AUGUSTUS STAPLES, who was settled in Lexington, was son of Jason and Phila (Tuft) Staples of Mendon. He was b. Aug. 24, 1830; m. Sept. 24, 1854, Margaret Shipping, dau. of Charles and Martha (Eddawes) Shipping of Philadelphia, Pa. He grad. at Meadville Theological School in 1854, and was ordained at Lexington, Sept. 20, 1854. He was dismissed at his own request, Nov. 30, 1856, and was settled over a new society formed in Milwaukee, Ill. After the breaking out of the Rebellion, he united himself with one of the Illinois regiments as chaplain. His health became impaired and he left the service. Having partially recovered his health, he settled over a society in Brooklyn, N. Y. His zeal and unsparing devotion to his profession gradually undermined his constitution, and he d. Feb. 5, 1864. Mr. Staples was a man of brilliant talents, and though he died young, had acquired a high reputation as a preacher. Their first child, Frederick A. Staples, was b. in Lex. Dec. 11, 1855.

THE STEARNS FAMILY.

There have been a few Stearnses in Lexington in every period of her history, and yet it is impossible to give a connected genealogy of them. This arises from the fact that the first family of that name became nearly if not quite extinct, and also from the fact that they descended from two distinct families.

- 1 ISAAC STEARNS came to this country in 1630, probably in the same ship with Gov. Winthrop and Richard Saltonstall, and settled in Wat., near Mount Auburn. He was made freeman, 1630, which is the earliest date of any such admissions. He was selectman several years, and d. June 19, 1671, leaving a wid., Mary, who d. April 2, 1677. Two or three of their children were born in England. Isaac Stearns, in his Will, dated only a few days before his death, says, "My will is that my kinsman, Charles Stearns, shall have ten pounds of my estate." This Charles Stearns is the ancestor of a portion of the Lex. Stearnses.

THE STONE FAMILY.

The Stones were early in the country, and have become very numerous in all parts of the State. They were among the early settlers in Lexington, and were numerous, respectable, and influential. There were so many of the same name, that they were in many instances in the Lex. Records, designated by their geographical position, as John Stone East and John Stone West, Samuel Stone East and Samuel Stone West. But the family are now, and for some time have been, nearly or quite extinct in the town.

- 1 GREGORY STONE, their original ancestor, came to this country with his family in 1635, and settled in Cambridge. He was one of the members of the first church, and was one of its deacons. He had six children, four sons and two daughters. He was also step-father of John and Lydia Cooper, two children of his wife by her first husband in England. Dea. Stone d. Nov. 30, 1672, aged 82. She d. June 24, 1674. He was ad. freeman, 1636; was one of the proprietors of Watertown, and a representative in 1638.
- 1- 2 John, b. in Eng. about 1619; m. Anne ———. He was one of the proprietors of Sudbury, had several grants of land there, and settled on the Sudbury river near the Falls, being the place where the village of Saxonville, in Framingham, is now situated. He had twelve children, and his descendants have been numerous in Sudbury, Framingham, and other towns in that neighborhood. None of them came to Lexington.
- 3 Daniel, was a "chirurgion," and resided in Boston.
- 4 †David, settled on his father's "Cambridge Farms," where he owned a large tract in the southwestern part of the town, including what is now a part of Lincoln, where Gregory Stone, one of his descendants lived on the old homestead.
- 5 Samuel, like his brother David, settled on his father's large tract, residing about a mile easterly of his brother, near the junction of our present Lincoln and Weston streets, where stood the old mansion, occupied by the Stones for more than a century.
- 6 Elizabeth, m. ——— Potter, and resided in Ipswich.
- 7 Sarah, m. July 12, 1653, Joseph Merriam of Con. and was the mother of Joseph, John, Robert, and Thomas Merriam, who settled in Lex. in the immediate neighborhood of the Stones. She d. in Lex. April 8, 1704, aged 71, and hence was born 1633.
- 1-4- DAVID STONE m. Elizabeth ——— about 1648, and had David, but the mother and child soon d., and he m. second, Dorcas ———, and had several children. He was made freeman, 1647. He d. Jan. 16, 1704, and she d. Aug. 13, 1704. His name does not appear upon the first records of the precinct, except as a tax payer, and his tax being small, he had probably disposed of most of his property to his sons, and had in a manner retired from business, as he was between seventy and eighty years of age. The record of his family, and that of his sons, is exceedingly defective, and hence I can give no full account of them.
- 4- 8 †David, b. April 9, 1650; m. Dec. 31, 1674, Sarah Hildreth.
- 9 †Daniel, b. ———. 10 Dorcas, b. Dec. 18, 1652.

The Stones of Lexington seemed to disappear rather suddenly, and to have left a record so imperfect, that it is impossible to state their genealogy, or the place to which they removed. It would be injustice, however, not to mention the generous act of one of that name, whose family we are unable to trace. At a town meeting in Lex. held June 15, 1761, "Mr. Isaac Stone came into said meeting and gave the Town a Bell for the Town's use forever; which Bell was there, and weighed four hundred sixty-three pounds, for which the Moderator in the name of the Town returned him thanks."

THE STOWE FAMILY.

- 1 WILLIAM STOWE was born in New Haven, Conn. and m. Emeline Thomas of that place. Like many other young men, he was thrown in early life upon his own resources. He entered the army and served several years, mostly upon the frontier. After his discharge, he returned to his native place, and by his own personal efforts qualified himself to enter the Newton Theological School. When he left that institution, he commenced preaching as a Baptist clergyman in Charlestown, Mass. After laboring there about eight years, he went to Martha's Vineyard. He subsequently united with the Episcopalians, and settled at Bristol, R. I. After a ministry of six or seven years, he received a call at Port Huron, Mich., which he accepted, and where he still remains. Though in a great degree self-taught, he has become quite a proficient in some departments of science and literature. He has had eight children, two of whom d. young.
- 1-2 REV. WILLIAM T. STOWE, his oldest son, was b. Aug. 30, 1841. He qualified himself by his own efforts to enter the law school at Albany, from which he graduated, and was admitted to the bar in that city in 1860. Having a desire to enter the ministry, he turned his attention to the Gospel rather than to the law, and commenced preaching under the auspices of the Universalists. In 1862, he was settled in Brattleboro', Vt., where he remained till he came to Lex. in 1864. Since that time he has preached for the United Societies in the East Village. He m. June 7, 1861, Maria Hartness, dau. of John Hartness of Albany.

Aug. 27, 1846, aged 57, unm.; Polly, b. Nov. 2, 1790, m. Sept. 10, 1823, Leonard Wood of Wo.; Dorcas, b. June 14, 1792, m. Aug. 25, 1821, William Child of Groton; Isaac, b. June 7, 1794; Cyrus, b. June 18, 1796; Leonard, b. Aug. 8, 1799, m. May 17, 1827, Almira Whitney.

THE TIDD FAMILY.

There is some obscurity in the early history of the Tidds in this country.

- 1 JOHN TIDD, the original ancestor of the family, it is probable, came over and settled in Charlestown in 1637. He moved to Woburn in 1640, and d. Aug. 3, 1643. His name was spelled Tead, and sometimes Teed, which was the common spelling in the early Lexington records. Most if not all his children were born abroad. His Will, dated Jan. 4, 1642, and proved Sept. 5, 1643, mentions sons John and Joseph, and dau. Mary, who probably m. Francis Kendall, and three grand-children, the youngest children of Ebenezer, deceased. His son John came to Lex., and is the ancestor of the Tidds of this town.

1- 2 JOHN TIDD, b. 1625, and m. in Wo. April 14, 1650, Rebecca Wood of that town. She d. Jan. 10, 1717, aged 92. He moved to Camb. Farms, 1686, and settled upon the farm where Mr. Charles Tidd now resides. He appears to have been somewhat extensively engaged in dealing in real estate. He became one of the proprietors of Camb., for in the division of the land in 1683 above the "eight mile line," John Tidd received his distributive share. He also purchased lands of David Mackgeney, William Carly, David Fiske, and others. The homestead appears to have been bought of David Fiske, and conveyed by deed dated June 1, 1686. It was a lot of forty acres. Here the first house for the Tidds was probably erected, and the property remains in the hands of the lineal descendants at the present day,—a period of more than one hundred and eighty years.

On our earliest records, viz., a subscription for building a meeting house, in 1692, we find the name of John Tidd, or Teed, as the name was frequently spelt, and also the names of his sons Joseph and Samuel; and on the tax bill for 1693, we find the names of John and his sons Joseph, Samuel, and Daniel. The same year John Tidd was chosen one of the assessors, and one of a committee to purchase of the town of Cambridge a tract of land for the support of the ministry. He d. April 12, 1703, aged 78. His Will, dated Aug. 7, 1701, and proved May 31, 1703, gives a general view of his descendants. He gives a considerable portion of his property to his son John, with a provision that he shall pay a certain sum to Daniel and Mary Tidd, the children of his son Daniel, deceased. He gives twenty shillings to each of his four oldest grand-sons (not including Daniel mentioned above), viz., Joseph Smith, John Tidd, Thomas Blodgett, and Joseph Simonds. He also makes a bequest to his four oldest grand-daughters, viz., Elizabeth Tidd, Rebecca Simonds, Hannah Smith, and Rebecca Blodgett. His children were all born in Woburn.

2- 3 Hannah, b. Sept 21, 1652; m. Dec. 1, 1674, Joseph Smith of Wat.
4 John, b. Feb. 26, 1654; m. about 1678, Elizabeth —, by whom he had between 1679 and 1691 five children, Elizabeth, John, Joseph, Rebecca, and Mary. None of them probably ever came to Lex. to reside.

5 Mary, b. Nov. 13, 1656; m. Joshua Simonds of Lexington.

6 Samuel, b. June 16, 1659; d. May 9, 1699, unm. His heirs signed an agreement about his property, by which it appears that his brothers, John and Joseph, and his sisters, Hannah Smith, Mary Simonds, and Rebecca Blodgett, were living at his decease; that his brother Daniel died before him, leaving two children, Daniel and Mary, and their mother, Lydia. Samuel Tidd was in the ill-fated expedition to Canada, in 1690.

7 †Joseph, b. Jan. 20, 1660; d. Dec. 26, 1730.

8 †Daniel, b. about 1662; d. Nov. 29, 1696.

9 Rebecca, b. about 1665; m. Nov. 11, 1685, Thomas Blodgett of Wo. They subsequently removed to Lex. and were the ancestors of most of the Blodgetts which have ever resided in the town.

- 2-7- JOSEPH TIDD m. Mary —, who d. Jan. 23, 1694, aged 23. Their child d. Jan. 23, 1696. He m. second, Mary —, who d. Jan. 9, 1718, aged 32. By her he had at least six children; of the birth of some of them we find no record. He m. third, Mary —. He d. Dec. 26, 1730, and she d. Jan. 4, 1731. Tradition says they both d. of the small pox. He was a man of handsome property for that day. His son Joseph administered upon his estate, which was inventoried at £967, 10s. 6d, his real estate being £809 of that sum. He was constable in 1699, was appointed on several important committees, and was one of the selectmen in 1714.
- 7-10 A child, b. —; d. Feb. 3, 1703.
 11 †Joseph, bap. May, 1707; d. Sept. 2, 1772.
 12 Samuel, b. May 29, 1709; settled in Western (now Warren).
 13 Sarah, b. Nov. 19, 1711; m. John Bridge, and d. March 14, 1754.
 14 Betty, b. May 29, 1714; m. Gershom Flagg of Woburn.
 15 Mary, b. —; m. David Cutler of Lex.

He was a large owner of real estate, having lands not only in Lex. but in New Braintree, Woburn, Templeton, and Phillipston. His Will, dated Oct. 4, 1770, and proved Dec. 15, 1772, mentions wife Dorothy, sons Benjamin, John, Joseph, and Ebenezer, and dau. Mary Jennison and Sarah Joslin. He made Benjamin and John executors of his Will, and gave them the greater part of his property,—they to pay out certain legacies and provide for their mother. The provisions of his Will in relation to the support of his wid. cast some light upon the manners, customs, and mode of living at that day, and hence we will give a few items. After mentioning a certain portion of the house which she should occupy, it is provided that John and Benjamin shall furnish her annually six cords of wood, cut fit for the fire, at the front door of the house, two barrels of cider, one bushel of malt, six bushels of Indian meal or corn, six bushels of rye, one hundred pounds of pork, seventy pounds of beef, four pounds of good wool, ten pounds of flax, &c. He was selectman, 1761, '66, '67.

 19 Joseph, b. May 11, 1734; m. Dec. 7, 1762, Sarah Munroe, dau. of William and Sarah (Mason) Munroe. He moved to New Braintree, where he was a lieutenant, when that title implied more than it does at present.
 20 Ebenezer, b. Aug. 16, 1737; he moved to New Braintree in 1768, where he resided. Among his children was Ebenezer, who was a prominent man in his day. He was a captain of a company of cavalry, served many years as selectman, and filled other town offices. His son, Hollis Tidd (grand-son of Ebenezer of Lex.), has for many years been a leading citizen in that small but very intelligent town. He was an aide to Gen. Crawford, served on the school committee more than thirty years, as one of the selectmen and as one of the assessors some fifteen or sixteen years each, represented the town in the legislature two years, and has for many years held the office of justice of the peace.

11-22- BENJAMIN TIDD m. Jan. 6, 1774, Joanna Fitch. They were ad. to the ch. Oct. 13, 1776, and were dismissed to the ch. at New Braintree, Oct. 24, 1790, to which place they had removed, and where land was left him by his father's Will. Several of his family had already located themselves in that town, where their descendants are at the present day. Benjamin Tidd remained in Lexington till after the close of the Revolutionary struggle, and like most of the citizens of the town, was enrolled in that patriotic band commanded by Parker. He was on the Common on the 19th of April, and marched to Cambridge on the memorable 17th of June, 1775; and served at Dorchester the year following. He was one of the committee of correspondence in 1780. The three children mentioned below were baptized in Lex. They probably removed with their parents to New Braintree, where other children may have been added to the family.

- 22-34 Benjamin, bap. Nov. 10, 1776. 35 Sarah, bap. Sept. 20, 1778.

- 16-30- WILLIAM TIDD m. Jan. 9, 1766, Ruth Munroe, dau. of Robert and Anna Munroe. They were ad. to the ch. Dec. 28, 1766. He was a lieutenant under Capt. Parker, in the company which dared to stand on their own parade ground in the face of ten times their number of British regulars, though commanded to throw down their arms and disperse. In affidavit taken in 1824, after describing the fire of the British on that morning, he says, "I then retreated up the north road, (Hancock street,) and was pursued by an officer on horseback (supposed to be Maj. Pitcairn) calling out to me, 'Damn you, stop or you are a dead man.' I found I could not escape him, unless I left the road. I therefore sprang over a pair of bars, and made a stand, and discharged my gun at him; upon which he immediately returned to the main body, which shortly after took up their march for Concord."
- Lieut. Tidd was also one of a detachment of Parker's company which marched to Cambridge on the 17th of June, at the time of the battle of Bunker Hill, where they remained two days, when they were dismissed. But his public service was not confined to the military alone. He filled various civil offices in town, being an assessor in 1776, '79, '80, '91, and one of the selectmen at the time of the Revolution, when great responsibility rested upon that board. He d. Oct. 25, 1826, aged 91. Ruth, his wife, d. May 14, 1839, at the advanced age of 97.

RESIDENCE OF MR. WILLIAM A. TOWER.

Rebecca W. B. Trask, widow of Rev. William G. Trask of Taunton, and dau. of Col. Daniel Brooks of Lincoln. Mr. Tidd was town clerk from 1832 to 1838. He has taken an active part in the cause of education, has served many years on the school committee, and has been engaged as a teacher of youth more than thirty years, the last twenty-five of which were in Lexington. He resides upon the old homestead, in a house a part of which must have stood at least one hundred and seventy-five years, and was erected, not by his great-grandfather, as stated by mistake in page 433, but by the grandfather of his great-grandfather.

- 52-54 Charles Eustis, b. March 24, 1831; d. Aug. 25, 1833.

 57 Esther Mary, b. April 26, 1841.

TOWER.—This name appears early in New England. John Tower was in Hingham in 1637, and came from Hingham, Eng. He m. Margaret Ibrook, and had at least three sons. He was engaged in settling Lancaster, and some of his descendants may have located in that town. At any rate we find the Towers somewhat numerous in the western portion of Middlesex county, and in the northern portion of Worcester.

WILLIAM A. TOWER, son of Oren and Harriet Tower, was b. in Petersham, Feb. 26, 1825, and m. April 29, 1847, Julia Davis, dau. of Austin and Sally Davis of Lancaster. He came to Lex. in Oct. 1855. He is engaged in business in Boston. He represented the Lexington District in the General Court in 1863. They have four children, Ellen M., b. in Lancaster, Feb. 28, 1848; Charlotte G., b. in Camb. Feb. 12, 1851; Augustus C., b. in Camb. July 3, 1853; Richard G., b. in Lex. Oct. 11, 1857.

THE TRASK FAMILY.

About 1715, a family by the name of Trask came to Lex. and located themselves on the northwesterly side of the meadow, beyond Captain Reed's, near the line of Bedford. The place from whence they came is not certainly known; but as the first of that name settled in Salem and Beverly, it is presumed that the family in Lexington are of the same stock.

- 1 NATHANIEL TRASK and his wife, Anna, had a dau. here as early as 1716; and he was chosen a highway surveyor in 1720. He was also one of the assessors in 1726, '39, and '40. He was a man of considerable property, standing on the tax bill for 1729 the tenth in point of amount. He d. Aug. 4, 1753, aged 59, and hence must have come to Lex. when he was a young man. She was living in Lex. and was taxed in 1779. His property at his death was inventoried at £7,596. He had two hundred acres of land, and was a proprietor in Narraganset Township No. 6, now Templeton. From the imperfect record of the family we glean the following.

- 1- 2 Anna, b. May 20, 1716; m. Joseph Hill of Billerica.
 3 †John, b. Feb. 8, 1717; was of Wo. in 1754.

Turner was literally the architect of his own fortune. With limited early advantages, he entered upon a sea-faring life at the age of sixteen, and passing through all grades, at the age of twenty-two he took the command of a vessel fitted out by that prince of merchants, William Gray, Esq. During nearly forty years he followed the seas, and there were but few parts of the commercial world to which he had not navigated, with unusual success. Though he commenced his career with a very limited education, by industry and application he so informed himself, as to be enabled, as a merchant and shipmaster, to take a high rank in his calling. By his modest and gentlemanly bearing he gained many friends. In 1831, John Randolph, then minister to Russia, did him the honor to make him his confidential agent and friend,—Capt. Turner at that time being at the Russian capital. During his voyages he made Charlestown the place of his residence, and in 1836 and 1837, he represented that town in the legislature. About 1840, he came to Lexington, where he spent the remainder of his days. All his children but the last were born in Charlestown.

THE UNDERWOOD FAMILY.

There is great difficulty in tracing the genealogy of this family, both before and after they came to Lexington. They have left a very incomplete record, and it seems that they were rather migratory in their habits.

- 1 THOMAS UNDERWOOD of Hingham was ad. freeman in 1637. He represented that town in 1636 and 1638. He afterwards moved to Wat., where he was selectman in 1656. His Will, dated Feb. 15, 1668, and proved April 7, 1668, mentions wife, brother Joseph, and several nephews and nieces, and prominently among them Thomas, son of his brother Joseph, then living with him.
- 2 JOSEPH UNDERWOOD, brother of Thomas, first settled in Hingham, but afterwards moved to Wat. and was ad. freeman, 1645. He d. prior to 1677. On the files of the court is a paper relating to his estate, naming his children, Joseph, Sarah, Hannah, Elizabeth, Thomas, and Martha. It is pretty evident that they are not named in the order of their birth.
- 2-3 †Thomas, b. ———; d. 1680.
 4 †Joseph, b. 1650. 5 Sarah, b. ———.
 6 Mary, b. ———; m. May 18, 1670, Isaac Ong.?
 7 Martha, b. ———.
 8 Hannah, b. ———; m. Oct. 14, 1680, John Gibson.
 9 Elizabeth, b. ———; m. Sept. 13, 1693, William Bull.
- 2-3- THOMAS UNDERWOOD m. Magdalen — as her second husband. He probably d. soon after his marriage. His Will, dated July 19, 1679, and proved Oct. 5, 1680, mentions but one child.
- 3-10 †Thomas, b. ———; m. Nov. 19, 1679, Mary Palmer.
- 2-4- JOSEPH UNDERWOOD m. Elizabeth —. He was ad. freeman 1690, and d. the year following. His Will, dated Feb. 16, 1691, and proved April 7, 1691, mentions wife Elizabeth, sons John, Joseph, Jonathan, and Joshua, and dau. Mary, Hannah, and Elizabeth.

THE WELLINGTON FAMILY.

The Wellingtons, though they have been quite numerous in Lexington, were not among the earliest settlers of the place. The name first appears on our records in 1705. They removed from Watertown to Cambridge Farms; and as they settled in the southeasterly part of Lexington, near the Watertown and Waltham line, and some portions of the families were frequently moving across the lines, it is somewhat difficult to trace the Lexington families. We give their origin and descent as near as we can; and in doing this, it would not be strange if in some cases, we should place some individuals on the wrong side of the town line.

- 1 ROGER WELLINGTON, a planter, b. about 1609 or 10, was one of the early proprietors of Watertown. He probably removed to that place from Boston, for the Boston records contain the names of his - children. Though he was in Watertown as early as 1642, he was not admitted freeman till 1690. He m. Mary, eldest dau. of Dr. Richard of Charlestown. He d. March 11, 1698. He mentions in his Will, his sons John, Joseph, Benjamin, Oliver and Palgrave.

- 1-2 John, b. July 25, 1638; admitted freeman Dec. 1677. He was a farmer in Camb.; m. Susanna Straight, and d. Aug. 23, 1726, aged 88. He left no children.
- 3 Mary, b. Feb. 16, 1641; m. May 21, 1662, Henry Maddock, and after his death m. John Cooledge—having one child by each husband.
- 4 †Joseph, b. Oct. 9, 1643; admitted freeman, 1677.
- 5 †Benjamin, b. ———; admitted freeman, 1677.
- 6 Oliver, b. Nov. 23, 1648; admitted freeman, 1677; m. wid. Anna Livermore, and d. Aug. 30, 1727, without issue.

THE WESTCOTT FAMILY.

REV. HENRY WESTCOTT was b. in Warwick, R. I., Oct. 30, 1831; m. June 10, 1863, Sarah A. Read, dau. of William Read of Cambridge, Mass. He graduated at Brown University, 1853, and after pursuing his theological studies, was settled in Barre, Mass., where he remained five years. After leaving Barre, he supplied the society at West Dedham one year, when he came to Lexington, where he was installed June 26, 1867. He was son of Josiah and Mary H. (Tibbetts) Westcott of Warwick, R. I., who was a direct descendant from Stukely Westcott, who came to this country about 1635, and settled in Salem. Entertaining religious opinions differing from the puritans in general, a controversy arose, and Stukely Westcott was excommunicated, in 1639, with Roger Williams and others, who had already gone to Providence to found a colony there. Westcott settled in Warwick, where his descendants are found at the present day.

THE WHITE FAMILY.

1 DANIEL WHITE was in Cambridge Farms as early as 1696, when his name appears on the tax bill. He was constable in 1713 and 1714. He must have been a man of some dignity of character; for in seating the meeting house in 1731, he was placed in the second seat below. He m. Mary —; she d. and he m. second, Hannah —. -
- 1-15- JASON WHITMAN m. March, 1832. Mary Fairfield of Saco; grad. H. C. 1825; read Theology and settled at Saco, Me., 1830. In 1834, was appointed General Agent of the American Unitarian Association. Subsequently he was settled in Portland. In 1845, he was invited to Lexington, where he was installed July 30, of that year. In December, 1847, he and his wife went to Saco, to attend the funeral of her brother, and in Portland he was taken suddenly ill, and d. Jan. 25, 1858. His wid. is still living in Lexington.
- 15-16 Sarah, b. April 8, 1833; d. Feb. 21, 1846.
 17 Bernard, b. Sept. 15, 1834; he has spent some ten years in South America.
 18 Catharine, b. July 18, 1836.
 19 John, b. May 28, 1838. He had followed the seas some years in the merchant service, and in the midst of the late rebellion he entered the navy, and served to the end of the war.
 20 Martha, b. July 13, 1840.
- The Whitmans have been remarkable for longevity. In the brief line we have traced, there are four persons whose aggregate age is three hundred and sixty-five years, giving the average of ninety-one years to each.

THE WHITMORE FAMILY:

Though Whitmore has never been a very common name in Lex., it is immediately connected with the earliest records, and is mentioned in connection with the boundary of the parish, when it was incorporated in 1693. The Great and General Court, in setting off the Farms as a precinct, described the dividing line between the old town of Cambridge and the North Parish as follows: "Beginning at the first run of water or swampy place, over which is a kind of a bridge in the way or road, on the southerly side of Francis Whitmore's house, towards the town of Cambridge."

This vague and indefinite description was again adopted when the precinct was erected into a town, in 1713, and remains to this day the boundary between Lexington and Arlington. But though this description is not very definite, it fixes with a good degree of certainty the location of the Whitmore house. It must have been situated on Main street, below Cutler's Tavern, near the line of the town. But while this house was within the precinct, it is not certain that Francis Whitmore ever resided in it, though it was owned by him and bore his name. He certainly could not have resided there at the incorporation of the precinct, for he had then been dead several years. The house was probably occupied by his son, Samuel, whose name is found upon the parish tax bills, back to the incorporation of the parish.

- 1 FRANCIS WHITMORE was born about 1625. He lived in Camb., and was a large landholder in that and the neighboring towns. He m. Isabel Parke, dau. of Richard Parke of Camb. She d. March 31, 1665, and he m. Nov. 10, 1666, Margaret Harty. He d. Oct. 12, 1685, aged 62. He served in the Indian War under Major Willard, as the treasurer's books show.
- 1- 2 Elizabeth, b. May 2, 1649; m. Nov. 3, 1669, Daniel Markham.
 3 Francis, b. Oct. 12, 1650; removed to Connecticut.

- 4 John, b. Oct. 1, 1654; lived in Medford, and d. Feb. 22, 1739.
 5 †Samuel, b. May 1, 1658; m. Rebecca Gardner.
 6 Abigail, b. July 3, 1660; m. — Wilcox.
 7 Sarah, b. May 7, 1662; m. May 29, 1683, William Locke.
 8 Margaret, b. Sept. 9, 1668; m. Thomas Carter.
 9 Frances, b. March 3, 1671; m. Jonathan Thompson.
 10 †Thomas, b. 1673; m. Mary, dau. of Samuel Waters.
 11 †Joseph, b. 1675; lived in Woburn.
 He had also Margery, bap. March 27, 1664, and Hannah, bap. Feb. 15, 1667, but both died young.

1-5-

SAMUEL WHITMORE m. March 31, 1686, Rebecca Gardner. His name is found upon our earliest records, being a subscriber for the erection of a meeting house in 1692, and one of a committee, in 1693, for making taxes. He was an assessor in 1700 and 1708, and a tythingman in 1712. He was one of the original members of the ch. gathered in 1696, and his wife, Rebecca, was admitted Jan. 16, 1700. She d. June 6, 1709, aged 43, and he m. Mrs. Mary, wid. of Abraham Watson; she d. Nov. 14, 1730, aged 60. He d. May 22, 1724, aged 66.

- 5-12 †Francis, b. Dec. 9, 1686.
 13 †Samuel, b. April 1, 1688; m. Jan. 7, 1720, Bethia Page.

 17 Abigail, bap. Nov. 27, 1698. 18 Sarah, b. April 10, 1701.
 19 Nathaniel, b. May 7, 1702, moved to Newton.
 20 Mary, b. May 4, 1704.
 21 John, b. Jan. 25, 1714. John and his wife, Lydia, of Camb. sold land in Lex. in 1735, to Jonathan Robinson.

1-10-

THOMAS WHITMORE m. Mary, dau. of Samuel Waters of Woburn. She was ad. to the church in Lex. April 10, 1709. In May following eight of their children were bap. It is uncertain how long Thomas Whitmore resided in Lex. In 1696, Hugh Day of Camb. Farms, sold land in Camb. Farms to Thomas Whitmore of Wat. This purchase included a house and twenty acres of land. In 1698, Thomas Whitmore of Camb. Farms, sold the same land to Josiah Whitney. He had seven acres given him, in 1707, by the proprietors of Billerica. He removed to Killingly, Conn., and is said to have died there, Jan. 23, 1751; but we suspect an error in the date.

- 10-22 Thomas, b. Nov. 4, 1694. 23 Francis, b. Sept. 5, 1696.
 24 Samuel, b. Sept. 22, 1698. 25 Mary, b. Sept. 4, 1700.

1-11-

JOSEPH WHITMORE m. Feb. 13, 1699, Mary, dau. of Thomas Kendall. May 9, 1703, he and his wife were ad. to the ch. in Lex., and on the 6th of June following, Joseph, probably their first child, was bap., being b. Feb. 17, 1700. As he was subsequently of Wo. he may have resided there at this time. They were dismissed to the ch. in Wo. Feb. 20, 1704.

5-12-

FRANCIS WHITMORE. Though he was chosen hog-reeve in 1714, a significant intimation that he may have changed his situation in life, we find no record of his marriage or of any children, and hence infer that he was never married. He d. Dec. 20, 1758.

5-13-

SAMUEL WHITMORE m. Jan. 7, 1720, Bethia Page. She was ad. to the ch. June 14, 1724. He was a tythingman in 1723, which shows that he was a man of sobriety of character. He d. Aug. 17, 1724, about three months after his father.

13-30

Rebecca, bap. Jan. 15, 1721.

Daniel, b. Feb. 21, 1725. He was a posthumous son. He m. 1746, Elizabeth Townsend, and lived in Boston, where, in 1748, they executed a deed of their land in Lex. to Jonathan Robinson. He probably left no sons, and possibly no issue.

By deaths and removals from town, the name of Whitmore has long since become extinct in Lex. In 1852, Charles O. Whitmore, a wealthy merchant in Boston, purchased him a summer residence in Lex., which he has fitted up in fine style, and rendered it one of the most spacious and attractive dwellings in the town. He is a direct descendant of the fifth generation from John, the second son of the original Francis Whitmore.

CHARLES O. WHITMORE, son of William D. and Rhoda (Woodward) Whitmore, was b. Nov. 2, 1807, in Bath, Me. He m. Lovice Ayres. She d. Sept. 27, 1849, and he m. Oct. 30, 1851, Mary E. Blake, wid. of George Blake, Jr. of Boston. He had by his first wife the following children.

1- 2

Charles J., b. April 27, 1834; m. June 8, 1858, Sarah Olcott Murdoch Blake, dau. of the above mentioned Geo. Blake, Jr., and has four children.

3

William H., b. Sept. 6, 1836. To him the writer is indebted for information concerning this family.

4

Martha H., b. Sept. 5, 1838.

5

Anna L., b. Sept. 16, 1840; m. Nov. 7, 1867, Philip L. Van Rensselaer of New York.

6

Charlotte R., b. March 9, 1843.

7

Creighton, b. Dec. 16, 1845; d. April 25, 1848.

THE WHITNEY FAMILY.

This name, like the preceding, appears early upon the Lex. records, but does not continue long. ELEAZER WHITNEY was taxed at the Farms in 1693, '94, '95, and '96; and d. Feb. 1697.

1

ISAIAH WHITNEY and wife, Sarah, owned the covenant May 4, 1696, when one of their children, probably their first, was bap. He d. Jan. 7, 1712.

1- 2

Mary, bap. May 4, 1696.

3 Isaiah, bap. July, 1700.

4

Sarah, bap. April 22, 1703; m. Aug. 2, 1720, Andrew Parker.

5

Elijah, bap. April 3, 1707; m. Dec. 8, 1736, Rebecca Winship.

6

Abraham, bap. Feb. 19, 1710.

7 Jonas, bap. Nov. 25, 1711.

THE WHITTEMORE FAMILY.

THOMAS WHITTEMORE came to Malden at an early day, where he owned real estate, and had a family. He is supposed to be the ancestor of the Lex. Whittemores.

1 NATHANIEL WHITEMORE, a grandson of Thomas, and son of Nathaniel and Mary, was b. Sept. 26, 1670. He m. Sarah French. He and his wife were ad. to the ch. in Lex. April 24, 1720. She d. Aug. 15, 1734, and he m. Abigail ———. He d. 1754. His Will, dated Feb. 22, 1752, and proved Jan. 6, 1755, mentions wife Abigail, sons Nathaniel and Jacob, and sister Rebecca. He was an assessor in 1719, and constable 1720. He resided on the Concord road, near the Concord line, in the neighborhood of Thomas Nelson. He was an almanac maker, and published about 1707. He was a man of more than ordinary education for that day; was often employed as a surveyor. He also sold drugs, and hence is often denominated Doctor, in the records. One number of his almanacs has its position in the scale of time thus fixed: "For the Year of Our Lord 1707, being third after leap year. From the Creation, 5656; from Noah's Flood, 4000; from the building of London, 2814; from the death of Alex. the Great, 2030; from the Discovery of America, 215; The reign of our Gracious Queen Anne the 6th." Another, of 1724, shows his loyalty, and the spirit of the times, thus: "O Heaven, crown our Great and Gracious King with length of days and lasting peace. Beneath his feet let all his foes stoop down; let him be a nursing father, while on earth he reigns; and of God's church great care may he take, and Christ will him reward with lasting gain. God save the King."

1- 2 Thomas, b. Sept. 21, 1718.

3 †Jacob, b. March 3, 1722.

4 Sarah, bap. April 4, 1724; d. Aug. 15, 1734.

5 Abigail, b. Dec. 8, 1725.

6 John, b. Aug. 27, 1727; d. the Jan following.

7 †Nathaniel, b. June 26, 1729; m. Jemima Dunton of Bedford.

1-3- JACOB WHITEMORE m. Oct. 28, 1746, Esther Whittemore of Con. She d. 1753, and he m second, Dec. 5, 1754, Elizabeth Hoar of Con. She d. and he m. third, Oct. 19, 1759, Deborah Flagg. He d. Jan. 21, 1780. His Will, proved June 16, 1780, mentions dau. Esther Brown, Sarah Reed, and wife Elizabeth. Jacob Whittemore was ad. to the ch. in Lex. March 21, 1754, being dismissed from the ch. in Concord.

3- 8 Esther, b. Oct. 24, 1748; m. June 12, 1769, Benj. Brown of Templeton.

9 Jonathan, b. Aug. 22, 1750.

10 Sarah, b. Nov. 1, 1751; m. April 23, 1770, Moses Reed of Wo. He had two other children by his first wife, who d. in early infancy.

1-7- NATHANIEL WHITEMORE m. Nov. 1, 1752, Jemima Dunton of Bed. There is some difficulty in fixing the residence and marriage of Nathaniel Whittemore. The Bedford record, in giving the marriage as above, speaks of him as "of Lexington." The Lexington ch. records have the following, under date of June 6, 1756: "Baptized, Abigail Whittemore of Nathaniel, the father having owned the covenant at Lincoln." He also had Jemima, bap. at Linc. Aug. 7, 1763. Ward, in his History of Shrewsbury, gives the following: "Nathaniel Whittemore, (supposed originally from Weston or vicinity,) Aug. 17, 1753, m. Sarah, dau. of Luke Rice. He was then called of Shrewsbury. Chil. Sarah, b. July 18, 1754; Nathaniel, b. March 9, 1756; Lydia, b. Feb. 15, 1758; Paul, b. May 24, 1760; Eber, b. April 24, 1762. Nathaniel Whittemore d. in 1765, and his wid. m. March 31, 1774, George Harrington of Brookfield." There was a Nathaniel Whittemore and his wife, Mary, in Charlestown, in 1670, who had a son, Nathaniel, b. Sept. 26, 1670; these probably were the parents of the Nathaniel who settled in Lexington.

There were other Whittemores in Lexington, from time to time, but we can give no connected view of them.

Pelatih Whittemore, ad. to the ch. April 14, 1728.

Nathan Whittemore, bap. Feb. 7, 1750.

Deborah Whittemore, ad. to the ch. April 21, 1751.

Sarah Whittemore, of Deborah, bap. Nov. 3, 1751.

Submit Whittemore, ad. to the ch. Jan. 18, 1756; m. March 23, 1762, Jonas Mason.

Jonas Whitney, of Narragansett No. 2 (now Westminster), and Sarah Whittemore of Lexington were united in marriage, Sept. 27, 1757.

Joel Whittemore was taxed in Lex. from 1750 to 1752 inclusive. He may have gone to Shrewsbury, and m. April 28, 1761, Rezinah Rand.

The name of Whittemore, should never be confounded with Whitmore, as the families are believed to be distinct.

THE WILLIAMS FAMILY.

- 1 REV. AVERY WILLIAMS, formerly a clergyman in Lex., was b. Jan. 9, 1782, in Guildford, Vt. His father, Rev. Henry Williams, being then pastor of the church at that place, but afterwards removing to Leverett, Mass., Avery's childhood and youth were passed there. He grad. Dartmouth C. 1804, studied Theology at Princeton, N. J. He m. Feb. 25, 1807, Clarissa Grennell of Greenfield, and was settled in Lex. Dec. 30, 1807. He left Lex. in 1815, in consequence of ill health, and went South in hopes of relief; but disease had so far impaired his constitution, that his journey was unavailing. He d. at Spartansburg, S. C., Feb. 4, 1816. His widow was living in Greenfield a few years since. He published a Century Sermon on the anniversary of the incorporation of the town of Lexington, which shows him a man of good talents, careful research, and faithful as a historian.

1-2 Clarissa G., b. April 14, 1810.

3 Lydia Maria, b. April 1, 1812; died in childhood.

4 Mary D., b. Feb. 11, 1814; resides at Greenfield.

5 Avery, b. Feb. 14, 1816; m. Eliza Squire of Lanesboro'. He studied medicine and was residing, when last heard from, at Buffalo, N. Y.

THE WILSON FAMILY.

- 1 JAMES WILSON was in Camb. Farms, 1693, when he was taxed for the purchase of the ministerial land. He was assessor in 1703, and constable in 1713. He m. Deborah —. They were ad. to the ch. Feb. 6, 1699. They buried a child in 1696, and two in 1703. There was also a John Wilson taxed in 1696, but this is the only record we find of him. The Wilsons probably left town early, as no one of the name appears on the earliest town tax bills extant, viz., 1729 and 1735. James Wilson, from Lexington, settled in Leicester, 1721. This was probably the family.

The name appears several times in connection with the history of Lexington, but it is uncertain whether they were related to this family. Hezekiah Dunkley m. Damaris Wilson, Oct. 17, 1734. Sergeant Robert Wilson, Robert Wilson, Jr., and Barnabas Wilson were in the French War from Lex. in 1756, and Robert also in 1758. James Wilson was in the Continental army from Lex. in the Revolution.

THE WINSHIP FAMILY.

The Winships were among the first settlers in Lexington, and were for a long period among the most numerous and respectable families. They were the descendants of 1 EDWARD WINSHIP of Cambridge. He was made freeman in 1635, was a member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Co., 1638, was selectman of Cambridge eleven years, between 1637 and 1684. He was representative in 1663, '64, '81 and '86. He also held a commission in the militia, and was dignified with the title of Lieutenant Winship. He was also an active and honored member of the church. He was twice married. His first wife was Jane, who d. between 1648 and 1651; his second wife was Elizabeth. He d. Dec. 2, 1688, in the 76th year of his age, and his widow, Elizabeth, d. Sept. 19, 1690, in her 58th year. It is believed that all the Winships in the vicinity descended from Lieutenant Edward. His Will was dated 1685, and as it casts considerable light upon this family, I will cite the portions which relate to the Lexington branches.

1. "I give to my son Ephraim, the lot of land whereon his house standeth, both all the meadow and upland he hath now in his possession."

2. "I give to my son Edward, all my land that lieth on the east side of the brook, whereon a sawmill standeth, except that which I bought of Edward Methelson, and twelve acres in my own Great Meadow."

3. "I give to my son Samuel, one hundred acres of land or thereabouts, some of it measured by David Fiske, about eighty acres upon the west side of Concord way, next to his brother Ephraim's line, and another tract of land on the east side of Concord way."

4. He gave land on Alewife brook to Joseph, another son; and mentions Mary, Elizabeth and Abigail, his daughters.

His widow's Will, dated 1689, mentions dau. Elizabeth, Abigail, Margery and Mehitabel.

Lieutenant Winship was a large landholder, not only in Old Cambridge, but at the Farms, where he had land assigned him as early as 1642. He owned, as will be seen by his Will, a large tract of land within the present limits of Lexington, extending from Lowell street across the brook to the hill west of Main street, upon the present line of Arlington, including the mill site, Mount Ephraim, and a portion of the Great Meadow. Living as his descendants did, upon the borders of Lexington and Cambridge, their association was

EPHRAIM WINSHIP m. Aug. 28, 1735, Mehitabel Cutler. He moved to New Marblehead, now the town of Windham, Me., about 1740. This place suffered severely from the Indians, from 1747 to 1763. On the 14th of May, 1756, Ephraim Winship and Ezra Brown, both of Windham, left the fort (for safety required them to live in garrisons) for the purpose of laboring upon Brown's lot, about a mile distant. Knowing that the Indians were lurking about in the region, they took the precaution to engage a guard of four men and four lads. In passing through a thick wood, when Winship and Brown were about fifty rods in advance of the guard, they were fired upon by fifteen or twenty Indians, who lay in ambush. Brown fell dead upon the spot. Winship received two balls, one in the eye, and another in the arm and fell to the ground,—where both were scalped by the Indians. A portion of the guard fled to the fort to give the alarm, while the remainder, and among them Gershom Winship, the oldest son of Ephraim, who was born before the family left Lexington, and then about twenty years of age, boldly rushed upon the savages, who were more than three times their number, and finally put them to flight. The Indians were led by Poland, their chief. When the guard approached, the Indians concealed themselves behind the trees, that they might be secure from the shots of their pursuers, and that they might step from their hiding places and fire upon the citizens, before they were aware of their presence. Poland was the first to break the silence; he stepped from behind the tree, discharged his musket, and immediately concealed himself again to reload. In his eagerness to reload his piece, that he might have another shot, his body became partially exposed, and he received a fatal shot from one of their pursuers. The Indians gathered around their fallen chief, and gave one of their infernal yells, which was answered by a volley from the little Spartan band, which killed or mortally wounded two more of their number. The Indians immediately fled, carrying off their dead and wounded.

At the time Winship received these wounds, he was a widower, his wife, Mehitabel, having died, leaving six children. Winship recovered from his wounds, though the Indians had taken two scalps from his head, and given him a blow with a hatchet, leaving him for dead. They took the two scalps in consequence of his having, as is sometimes the case, two crowns upon his head. In taking the scalps, they left a narrow strip of skin from his forehead directly over the top of his head. This ever afterwards gave him a very singular appearance. After this misfortune he m. a second wife, by whom he had five more children. He d. at Windham, June 4, 1766, aged 55. These facts were obtained from the Centennial Address of T. L. Smith, Esq., delivered at Windham, July 4, 1839, which contains much valuable information. Two children of Ephraim Winship were b. before he left Lex., viz., Gershom, b. May 10, 1736; and Mehitabel, b. July 28, 1738.

The records of many of the Winship families are so imperfect, that it is impossible to trace their genealogy. Some families have neglected their record altogether, and hence it is impossible to bring them down to the present day.

THE WINTER FAMILY.

- 1 JOHN WINTER was a proprietor of Wat. in 1636, and d. in that place, 1662. His Will, dated March 4, 1661, and proved June, 1662, mentions sons Richard and Thomas, late of London, dau. Alice Lockman of London, and son John of Wat., to whom he gave his landed property. He probably came from Camb. to Lex. He had land assigned between the eight mile line and Concord, in 1683.
- 2-2 JOHN WINTER lived at Camb. Farms, where he d. Jan. 18, 1690. His Will, dated Dec. 12, 1689, makes no mention of his wife, who probably d. before him, but speaks of sons John, Thomas, and Samuel, and dau. Sarah, Hannah, and Mary.
- 2-3 Joseph, b. ———; d. at Camb. Farms, Dec. 10, 1690, being the first death mentioned in the Lex. records.
- 4 † John, b. ———; owned the covenant at Wat. June 22, 1690.
- 5 Thomas, b. ———. 6 Samuel, b. ———.
- 7 Sarah, b. ———; d. Jan. 19, 1690, one day after her father.
- 8 Hannah, b. ———; m. Nov. 17, 1681, John Harrington.
- 9 Mary, b. ———.

2-4-

JOHN WINTER m. Abigail —. He was a subscriber for the erection of a meeting house in Lex. 1692, following the example of his father, who had subscribed for the same object before his death. She was ad. to the ch. April 9, 1699. They had Joseph, bap. April 2, 1699; Benjamin, bap. Oct. 8, 1699; Ruth, bap. Sept. 22, 1702; Lydia, bap. Aug. 15, 1703; James, bap. Sept. 30, 1705; Isaac, bap. Nov. 3, 1706; Elizabeth, bap. Jan. 20, 1708.

As the tax bills of 1729 and 1735 do not contain the name of Winter, and as no place was assigned when the meeting house was seated, in 1731, we infer that they had all left town before that period.

WRIGHT.—ELISHA WRIGHT came to Lex. about 1855. He was b. in Washington, N. H., 1811, and m. Dec. 1836, Harriet Farmer, b. Feb. 22, 1814. He was son of Nathan, b. Feb. 1786, who was son of Jacob, b. Dec. 1758, who served in the Revolution, and m. Patty Reed. Jacob was son Jacob, of whose birth we have no record, but whose death occurred in 1763. Elisha, by his wife Harriet, has five children, three sons, all of whom were in the U. S. service in the late Rebellion, and two daughters, as follows:

Walter R., b. Aug. 22, 1838; m. Nov. 1860, Lydia Kenniston, and has Minnie, b. Feb. 8, 1862, and Charles C. He served nine months in the army, in North Carolina. Willis L., b. Sept. 14, 1841; he was nine months in the service. George W., b. June 30, 1843. Like his two brothers, he was one of the nine months' men who served in North Carolina to put down the rebellion. Hattie A., b. June 9, 1850. Emma E. H., b. Oct. 22, 1852. The first three children were b. in Washington, N. H., the last two in Camb. Mass.

There is another Wright family in town, which originated in Ashby, having no connection with the family above.

ABEL WRIGHT of Ashby, m. first, — Hayward of Acton. She d. and he m. second, — Rice of Ashburnham. He had a family of nineteen children. Isaac, their first child, b. Feb. 12, 1799, m. Arvilla Kendall, dau. of Oliver Kendall of Ashby. They had nine children. He d. May 25, 1864.

LUKE W. WRIGHT, son of Isaac, b. Sept. 27, 1821; m. April 7, 1846, Abigail Estabrook, dau. of Attai and Polly (Pierce) Estabrook of Lex. b. Dec. 16, 1819. He came to Lex. 1843. They have had the following children. Sarah Arvilla, b. Oct. 5, 1848; Abbie Elizabeth, b. Dec. 11, 1849; Arthur E., b. Sept. 29, 1854, d. Jan. 22, 1859; Alice Arthurette, b. Jan. 29, 1861.

THE WYMAN FAMILY.

The name of Wyman is of German origin, and was at first spelt Weyman. Two individuals, who were the progenitors of most of the Wymans, appear on the Charlestown records as signers of "town orders," Dec. 18, 1640. This was coeval with the settlement of Woburn. We find John and Francis Wyman in Woburn immediately after. They were Tanners; and thus was laid early the foundation of the shoe and leather business, for which Woburn has always been more or less distinguished. John m. in Wo. 1644, Sarah Nutt.

- 1 FRANCIS WYMAN, from whom our Lex. Wymans descended, m. Jan. 30, 1645, Judith Pierce of Wo. She dying, he m. second, Oct. 2, 1650, Abigail Reed.
- 1-2 Judith, b. Sept. 29, 1652; d. Dec. 22, 1652.

- 1-11- BENJAMIN WYMAN m. Jan. 20, 1702, Elizabeth Hancock of Camb. He d. Dec. 19, 1735, and she m. Aug. 22, 1739, Jonathan Brown of Bed. and d. 1749. Though Benjamin Wyman may not have resided long in Lex., he and his wife o. c. in the place, June 24, 1705, when Elizabeth, their first child, was bap. Mrs. Wyman was probably sister to Rev. Mr. Hancock; which would account for their attending ch. in Lex., though their residence might have been out of town.
- 11-14 Elizabeth, b. May 1, 1705; m. June 11, 1724, Jacob Richardson.
 15 †Benjamin, b. Nov. 13, or Dec. 17, 1706.

INDEX TO THE GENEALOGIES.

In the following Index, the names of the Families, which are arranged in alphabetical order, are printed in SMALL CAPITALS, and the page or pages occupied by each family, respectively, are set against them. The names which follow the families, and are arranged in alphabetical order, are of those, whether male or female, who have intermarried with some member of the family, and the figures set against their name refer to the consecutive number of each family, against which the name will be found. Names having more than one number against them, denote that different persons, of the same surname, married into the family. In a few instances, distinct families of the same name, have the same numbers. Hence both numbers should be consulted. Persons marrying those of the same surname are omitted in the index. In the introduction of the families, the name of the wife is sometimes given before the consecutive numbers commence; and in some of the small families the numbers are omitted altogether. In such cases, the name of the person intermarrying will be found inserted below, without any number annexed, but can easily be found under the head of the family where they occur.
