THE JAPANESE PRESS AS AN INSTRUMENT FOR CONTROL

The Japanese press is a powerful instrument for social and political control. Through its assumption of a role in the lives of the Japanese people in which it not only guided their knowledge of world events but also molded their cultural tastes and in part directed their social affairs, the press in Japan has exerted strong influence over the population. To exploit this instrument of control to the utmost, the Japanese Government, particularly since 1942, has centralized both newspaper management and government supervision.

Through the combination of extremely wide circulation, broad range of interests, and modern, efficient methods of publication, the Japanese newspaper achieves a far-reaching and intimate influence upon the Japanese people. Enormous circulations are made possible in part by the fact that nearly 99 percent of the people can read newspapers and magazines. The range of the Japanese newspaper's interest extends not only to printing issues in Braille and publishing simplified editions for children but also to matters completely outside the realm of publication. Each of the large daily newspapers, through its "enterprise" bureau, has undertaken such projects as welfare work, scientific expeditions, meteorological observations, agricultural experiments, and aeronautical demonstrations. In its methods of obtaining, transmitting, publishing, and distributing news the Japanese newspaper is nearly as efficient as its counterpart in the United States.

The Japanese press has not shown an equivalent zeal for accuracy in presenting the news. When complete facts are missing, reporters and desk men round out their reports with whatever fiction will appeal to their readers, and they also try to meet their readers' demand for rumor and gossip. Together with the absence of national libel laws, this disregard for accuracy has established a tradition of yellow journalism which has made the Japanese press especially pliable to the wartime demands of the Japanese Government. Newspapermen have not been reluctant to print long, detailed accounts of nonexistent naval battles or to treat factually the propaganda themes their Government has evolved.

The measures taken by the Japanese Government to secure control of this efficient and adaptable medium have been of three kinds: negative censorship, centralization of newspapers, and centralization of the sources of news.

The first of these controls has always been a part of Japanese journalism. The original press laws antedate the Japanese Constitution of 1889.

The press has also long been restrained by the peace preservation and thought control measures which provide that no treasonable or communistic ideas may be presented, and that nothing may be said which might alienate the people from the military. Wartime control legislation has been considerably more restrictive, but the principle of telling the press what must not be printed instead of what must be printed has been retained. Although there has been a tacit understanding since 1937 that militarism and nationalism should be made attractive, the Japanese press has not been obliged to disseminate any particular ideology, and within the limits of wartime security has been relatively free to criticize government policy.

To implement this negative censorship the Japanese Government has set up a system of licensing, press bans, confiscation and suspension of publications, and fines and imprisonment for editors. Most of these restraints are at present administered by the Bureau of Information which also directs general press policy. For printing information prohibited by a news ban, a Japanese publisher faces, in addition to the revocation of his license, the possibility of confiscation of the offending issues, the complete suspension of all his publications in addition to his newspaper, or the fining and jailing of his editor. Furthermore, he may be forced to forfeit the 2,000 yen of guarantee money that all publications dealing with current events are obliged to post. Because of these severe penalties, Japanese newspapermen frequently practice voluntary pre-publication censorship, submitting material to the Bureau of Information for approval in advance of its publication.

Although press bans may be issued on any piece of information the Japanese Government wishes to withhold, the material most frequently banned is that which is termed "inimical to public peace and order." Bans are also placed on material which is thought to fall into one of the following four categories: information that may obstruct foreign diplomatic relations; information that may threaten national security; information that may obstruct the carrying out of economic policies; information that may threaten the security of military affairs. Bans may be issued by the Home Ministry, the War Ministry, the Navy Ministry, and the Foreign Ministry, and are generally released over the signature of the local police chief.

The Japanese Government began to centralize newspaper production shortly after war began in China in 1937. Between 1937 and 1943 the number of daily newspapers was reduced from over 1,000 to less than 200. Furthermore, in 1942 the large metropolitan newspapers were forced by government decree to merge with one another, reducing the number of daily newspapers in Tokyo to one-fourth of the prewar number. Many of the smaller provincial newspapers went out of business at that time through shortage of newsprint, and their communities were then served by the larger newspapers. Although the newsprint shortage was announced as the main reason for the forced merger, the tightening of government supervision was clearly a desired result. In line with this policy of increased centralization, the Japan Press Association was established in 1942 as a government control organization, and early in 1945 was succeeded by the Japan Press Corporation. It supervises the registration of newspapermen, the distribution of newspapers and other publications, and the allotment of newsprint and other materials.

The centralization of news sources was largely achieved through the forced merger in 1936 of the two leading news agencies, Rengo and Nippon Dempo, to form Domei. The formation of this monopoly increased the inaccuracy traditional to Japanese journalism. Newspapers had previously subscribed to both the leading news services and had printed conflicting versions of the same event side by side, thus allowing readers to draw their own conclusions. With Domei as the only Japanese news service, even this check on accuracy was removed. Some Japanese newspapers, resisting this action by the Government, sought to avoid using Domei by relying to a greater extent upon their own correspondents and by establishing agreements with the American news services and the New York Times and the London Times. Since 1942, of course, these agreements have been abrogated. Except for a handful of foreign correspondents Domei has become, as the Japanese Government intended, virtually the only source of outside news. This centralization of news sources, along with the establishment of controls over subject matter and the centralization of newspaper production, completed the shaping of an instrument of social and political control which, whether used by the Japanese Government in prosecuting the war or by an Allied Military Government in restoring peacetime order, has few equals in comprehensiveness or efficiency.

Gentlemen:

I am attempting to collect enough data on the Press of Japan since the Occupation to be able to do a comprehensive paper on the differences or similarities between prewar and postwar newspapers and publications of that country.

I would greatly appreciate a list of any or all publications available in your section dealing with the subject of the Press of Japan since the Occupation and during the war years.

A more detailed description of the type of information for which I am seeking is as follows:

1. General MacArthur's Press Code for Japan.
2. General MacArthur's monthly announcements concerning Japan, particularly when the monthly announcement has concerned the Press of Japan.
3. Number of newspapers operating in Japan today, total; number of newspapers operating in Tokyo today, total; and the number of English-language newspapers operating in Japan today, total.
4. Details of the production strikes of the Yomiuri Shimbun and the Hokkaido Shimbun which were investigated by the CI&E section of SCAP.
5. Some indication of the political affiliation of the more important Japanese newspapers since the new democratic forms were instigated by SCAP.
6. As much information as it is permissible for your office to distribute concerning the activities of the newspaper unions of Japan, present-day.
7. Any information that has been made available concerning the number of English-language newspapers that continued operation in Japan during the war years (WWII).

8. And any other allied information pertaining to the Press of present-day Japan that it is possible for you to distribute at present.

I am more interested in receiving information of the type issued currently as reports from SCAP than in the more lengthy and date reports of earlier years. Since there is no general survey of the condition of the Japanese press since the Occupation today extant, I would appreciate only current material.

If no such information is available at present, I would appreciate a letter to that effect at your earliest possible convenience.

Dear Sir:

I am interested in securing for this library certain Japanese papers and news services, to have them available for study by some of our sociologists.

Mr. Greaves of the Civil Affairs Div. of the War Dept. gave me the titles of three services, i.e. Okuyama News Service, Jiji News Service, Kyodo News Service.

Before placing an order for all of them, I would like to know, whether there is sufficient difference in the nature of these services to warrant acquisition of all for study purposes. You would oblige me greatly by replying as fully as you can.

My dear Mr. Iben:

In Mr. Borton's temporary absence in Japan I am acknowledging your letter of April 14, 1947 inquiring about certain Japanese news services.

The Okuyama News Service is a daily translation service which includes English translations of Japanese newspaper editorials and leading articles. Both Jiji and Kyodo News Services supply daily English translations of original news articles written by staff members of Jiji and Kyodo respectively. For your purposes I should, therefore, think that you might wish to subscribe to the Okuyama Service and either to Jiji or Kyodo. Since the latter two are similar in nature, I should not think you would find it necessary to subscribe to both of them.

- I. Total number of newspapers known to have been published in Japan prior to, and during the period 15 March to 15 May 1946----- 837
 This number, divided into papers carrying general coverage of topics of general public interest (II) and papers covering topics of interest to special groups of various kinds (III) may be broken down as follows:
- II. Papers of general news coverage----- 392
 a. Daily----- 128
 b. Weekly or more frequently----- 104
 c. Monthly or more frequently----- 113
 d. Frequency of issue unascertained----- 47
- III. Papers of special news coverage and news services----- 445
 a. Business papers: house organs of individual firms--- 16
 b. Children's papers----- 7
 c. Cultural and recreational, including literature, arts, music, stage, screen, sports, and cartoons----- 35
 d. Economic and financial journals and commentaries---- 31
 e. Educational papers: journals for teachers, school organs and student papers----- 30
 f. Government publications: national, prefectural and municipal. (This figure represents those papers of which copies have been scanned by Allied Headquarters. It is believed that perhaps double this number are regularly issued).----- 29

RI(S)89-PP-5(3)

g. Labor union papers-----	8
h. Local papers: those serving a part of a large area also provided with general news. Those papers furnishing the only news in small isolated areas are classed as general papers-----	30
i. Korean and Chinese papers-----	10
j. News Services-----	35
k. Organization publications: organs of political parties and societies, social, and study clubs, chambers of commerce-----	55
l. Religious papers, including Christian, Buddhist, and Shinto Sects-----	23
m. Trade and technical papers: including papers issued by associations of businesses within a single industry, commercial papers (printed for profit) giving news of specific industries, trade papers for artisans and technicians, scientific and medical journals-----	107
n. Women's papers, including organs of women's clubs---	8
o. Youth papers, including organs of youth clubs and organizations-----	16

It is apparent that, strictly considered, these classifications overlap; as, for example, organizations could include both women's and youths' clubs. An attempt has been made to avoid repetitive tabulation of this kind, and to furnish classifications helpful to study of the various fields. Frequencies of issue in Section III are seldom less than monthly or more than weekly. A representative breakdown of 251 special papers by frequency of issue appears in "Basic Statistics: Newspapers, as of 15 March 1946", published by this unit.

SUBJECT : Current Japanese Publishers.

PREPARED BY: Press and Publication Research Unit.

SOURCE : Lists furnished CCD by the Japanese Publishers Association, March 1946; List furnished by Iuranami Book Store, February 1946.

METHOD OF PRESENTATION:

Following is a list of Japanese publishers arranged in a tabular format of four columns. The first column gives the name of the publishing firm; in the second is the address; in the third is the name of the company's representative; and in the fourth the publishing specialty, which may be Books, Magazines, or both.

The list is arranged geographically and in alphabetical order, with one exception. Tokyo, because of its importance, appears at the head. The other geographical divisions follow and within each division publishers are arranged alphabetically. Below is the list of the kens or shis included, together with the number of publishers in each:

COMMENT:

It is immediately apparent that the publishing business is preponderantly centered in Tokyo. Eight-eight per cent of the firms listed are located in the capital. This tendency toward centralization obtains for all press and publication agencies investigated by this unit, including news services, newspapers, and organizations of press personnel or businessmen.

RI-118-PP-E-6

5 April 1946,

It is estimated that this report lists approximately 90 % of the publishers currently in business in Japan. Throughout the Japanese press and publication world, however, the situation is far from static. New publishing houses are being organized, firms are combining or separating, and a few, of course, are going out of business. Supplementary lists will be issued by this unit from time to time to record these fluctuations. Future lists will also attempt a further description as to the publishing specialties of the firms concerned, their size, amount of equipment, and other vital information.
