PREFACE

The task of providing a worthy successor to the earlier editions of Webster's Collegiate Dictionary was a heavy one. From the older International had been constructed a smaller dictionary that presented the material that was most useful as well to the general reader as to the scholar, and this material had been embodied in a form at once convenient and of proven excellence. Indeed, no other English dictionary of similar scope had ever given such general satisfaction. With the publication of the New International, however, there became available a great number of popular words that demanded inclusion in a book like the Collegiate. Within the eighteen years since the first edition of the Collegiate Dictionary was published, multitudes of scientific and technical terms have become part of everyday speech. In 1893 the automobile industry was in swaddling clothes, wireless telegraphy hardly existed outside the patent office, five years were still to elapse before the Wright brothers were to prove mechanical flight practicable. To-day words connected with all of these subjects come easily from the tongue of the man in the street, and his newspaper and magazine employ them as part of the vernacular. While the proven convenience of the older Collegiate made any increase in size questionable, still, in order that adequate treatment might be given to this vast amount of new material, it was found necessary to use a slightly larger type page, and to add some 150 pages to the Vocabulary itself. But even with this added space a doubling or even trebling of the care and precision with which essentials were selected and nonessentials were rejected was demanded. To this task the editorial staff has, during the space of two years, resolutely applied not only the experience gained during the preparation of the New International, but the training in clear and concise statement resulting from its work in making the new School Series of Webster's Dictionaries. This new book can thus with confidence be offered as representing the matured and integrated judgment of editors thoroughly versed in the varied and subtle problems of lexicography.

The general title Webster's Collegiate Dictionary has been retained, since the plan of the first and second editions (1898, 1910) of this book has nowhere been widely departed from. The Third Edition is, however, in no sense a revision or adaptation of these predecessors, but is a new work abridged directly from Webster's New International Dictionary, the material of the older Collegiate having been used only incidentally, mainly for purposes of comparison.

From the wealth of material in the New International there are here presented about ninety-seven thousand words and phrases. The endeavor has been to select those that will meet the needs of the busy general reader who wishes precise but not extended information about the words of the newspaper and periodical, and that will also satisfy the demands of the student in his college work. In the field of science, nouns and adjectives which are used in naming or describing parts or characteristics of plants, animals, or minerals, or the significant phenomena of their growth and relations, have been included with great fullness. The common names of plants and animals, especially if of literary value, have been given freely. Classificatory names, however, such as the names of genera, orders, and the like, have been inserted only when they have also a popular character. Thus many words like fuchsia, geranium, gladiolus, octopus, junco, though originally only the names of genera, have through common use become vernacular names as well. Such vernacular names are freely entered in the vocabulary, and in the definition the genus name itself appears. In the case of many scientific names an English derivative has, in popular use, replaced the Latin form of science. Preference has been given to such derivatives, but usually in the definition the scientific name itself also appears. Thus Protozoa will be found in the definition of protozoan, and Cephalopoda in that of cephalopod.

The spelling of Webster's New International Dictionary has been adhered to throughout. This is based upon the Webster system of simple spellings which prefers color, center, traveling, and the like, to colour, centre, travelling. In all such cases, however, the alternative spelling is included. In words that may be spelled either with e or with æ, as medieval, mediæval, or with e or æ, as ecumenical, æcumenical, the preference is given to the simpler spelling except where usage prefers the form with the diphthong. The words in which the diphthong is retained usually belong to the technical language of science. Here, also, alternatives are often given, though not so freely as in the New International.

Proper names or words derived from them, titles, and the like, that should be written or printed with a capital initial have this fact indicated either by beginning the vocabulary entry itself with a capital or by inserting [cap.] at the specific definition affected.

The work done in the New International in the department of Pronunciation was, perhaps, the most painstaking ever devoted to the subject for dictionary purposes and its results have therefore been kept unchanged. It should be borne in mind that the pronunciations finally chosen as representing the best usage were selected only after scrupulously collating all the published material available together with the results of careful personal investigations by the editor extending over many years and conducted both in America and in England. Again, thousands of disputed pronunciations were submitted to scholars, public speakers, actors, and specialists both in the United States and in Great Britain and a decision was reached only after a careful study of all this gathered information.

Attention is, also, specifically directed to the very valuable notes showing special variations in usage in the case of many words.

The pronunciation is indicated by the simple and well-established Webster system of respelling with one symbol only for each sound. The Guide to Pronunciation, while much shortened, is abbreviated directly from that in the New International and retains the essentials necessary to understand the symbols used and the principles followed. The Rules for the pronunciation of Latin (both by the Roman method and the English) and of Spanish will be found of much interest.

Plurals of nouns and pronouns, the degrees of adjectives or adverbs, and the parts of verbs are given when irregular or where, though regular, an irregular form might be expected. Thus, all plurals of words ending in i, o, or y are given because for some of these words plurals ending in is, os, or ys are used, while others end in ies or oes. Likewise the principal parts of verbs ending in a silent e are usually given. In the case of compounds, these irregular inflected forms are often omitted, to avoid duplicating under a derivative information already available at the main word.

The Etymologies are abridged from those of Webster's New International Dictionary, and retain the same qualities of accuracy and lucidity that so notably mark the work of Professor Sheldon and Professor Wiener in the larger book. The abridgment has consisted in the omission of many of the cognate forms, the omission of doubtful or controversial matter given in the New International with such qualifying words as 'perhaps' and 'apparently,' and, often, in the omission of the etymology of certain words in a group when the essential information is given in connection with the main word. Thus, no etymology is given for separation, although it is strictly from the Latin separatio, inasmuch as the essential information appears under the verb separate. Except for the above systematic modifications, the etymologies of the Collegiate, Third Edition, are, in general, as complete as those of the New International. The process of condensation has, it is believed, in no case made the etymology less accurate or less intelligible.

Definitions have generally been taken directly from the New International, though frequently modified in statement to obtain greater brevity or directness. They, therefore, retain the great lucidity and accuracy which characterize the work done by the general editor, Mr. Allen, and those trained under him. Noah Webster has been called "a born definer of words"; and his ideals and methods were, by example, precept, and personal training, passed on to his son-in-law Professor Goodrich and then to each of those who in turn came to take up the active editorial labors, Noah Porter, L. J. Campbell, and F. Sturges Allen. The best of the Webster traditions in definition have been followed in this volume. The historical order too has been preserved to show the growth of a word's meanings. For the same purpose obsolete senses have been retained where they are essential steps in a word's development; other obsolete senses have been omitted unless found in well-known works still widely read.

In the New International thousands of citations serve to illustrate and make clear the meaning and application of the definitions. The limitations of space forbade the use of full citations in the Collegiate, but in many instances the significant part of a citation has been retained as an illustrative example. Especial care has been taken to insert such examples in figurative or derived senses of the fundamental words of the language. Thus at active, break, make, in, after, on, most of the definitions are reinforced by such examples.

The difficulty often found in selecting from a dictionary the precise meaning to fit a given use of a word is removed by these examples, for it is necessary only to scan the definitions until one is found accompanied by an example showing an analogous use. Especial attention is directed to this valuable feature of the Collegiate, since no other dictionary of its size has heretofore attempted to supply information of this kind; it seems certain that it will fill a need which never before has been met, perhaps because not fully realized.

Hundreds of phrases are current in English with meanings that differ essentially from the natural meanings to be gathered from the component words. Such phrases are included in Idiomatic Phrases large numbers. When the meaning of the significant word is not too remote from its ordinary meanings, a special definition has been made to cover its use in the idiomatic phrase and the latter has been given as an illustrative example. In many other cases the phrase itself has been inserted with a suitable definition. This feature of the book should be especially helpful to those who do not know English as a mother tongue, but are forced to acquire it in later life.

Strictly speaking there are no perfect synonyms, that is, no two words which exactly agree in sense and use. Yet there are in English many words whose meanings are so closely akin that they are carelessly used without discrimination. Such words demand Synonyms especial attention in order that they may be used each with its due force and in its proper setting. This department of the New International was treated with especial care and fullness by Professor John L. Lowes, now of Washington University at St. Louis, Missouri, under the critical supervision of Professor George Lyman Kittredge of Harvard. The essence of their material is retained for the most part unmodified save for the abbreviating of the citations into illustrative examples, so that the treatment of synonyms in the Collegiate Dictionary, Third Edition, constitutes one of its strongest features.

More fully than ever before in a work of this size have pictures been used to clarify and strengthen the verbal definitions. Some 1700 of these illustrations appear in the text. In Illustrations addition, eleven full-page illustrations have been prepared especially for this book. The plates showing various forms of inflorescence, of leaves, of flags, of helmets, etc., will repay careful study, for by placing together pictures of objects similar in form the specific differences characteristic of each become clearly evident.

The supplemental vocabularies found in the preceding editions have been retained in this edition with several new features of value and interest. The Supplemental Vocabularies

Valuable as the Vocabulary of Rimes has proved itself in the former edition, it should be even more serviceable as now presented. The list has been revised and enlarged, monosyllables, dissyllables, and polysyllables being grouped separately in alphabetical order, an arrangement that will be found more convenient and suggestive. The pronunciation of the riming elements is indicated, which was not uniformly done in the earlier editions, thus emphasizing the fact that it is the sound rather than the form which determines the rime. The new typographical arrangement also will be found to lend itself to greater ease of reference. Vocabulary of Rimes

In this edition the Scottish Glossary shows improvements in vocabulary, definitions, and pronunciation. The vocabulary has been enlarged, and the difficulties likely to be encountered in the works of Scottish authors have been kept steadfastly in Scottish Glossary view. The definitions are more numerous, and all have been made to agree with the more recent information contained in the New International Dictionary. Where a fuller definition is given in the main Vocabulary, as under colter, deasil, kill, plaid, thrum, etc., reference is made thereto in order to avoid repetition. The pronunciation has been revised, and the respelling made to conform to the improved notation of the New International. No effort has been spared to make the Scottish Glossary of practical value to the general reader. It is at once comprehensive and authoritative.

In the place of the general vocabulary of Proper Names in the earlier Collegiate which gave only the spelling and pronunciation of a list of names, a much more helpful plan has been adopted. Names in mythology are for the most part entered with careful definitions in the main Vocabulary. The Pronouncing Dictionaries of Geographical and Biographical Names geographical Names, both ancient and modern, are now entered in one list with the pronunciations and brief descriptions added showing location, political ownership, statistics as to population, length (of rivers), elevation (of mountains), area (of states, lakes, etc.), all in the concise form found so effective in the New International. The careful work made available by the very recent revision of the New International Gazetteer insures the accuracy of the material here included.

The Biographical Names are given in a separate Biographical Dictionary and cover the great personages, ancient and modern. The accepted spelling, pronunciation, Christian names, nationality, and some hint as to their notable achievements are given, together with dates of birth and, if no longer living, of death, and in the case of rulers the years of their reigns. Biographical Names

The collection of personal names has undergone severe revision. Fanciful etymologies have been discarded, and only such meanings given as bear the hallmark of present-day English Christian Names philology. Anthony, in the former edition, was said to mean "priceless; praiseworthy"; Bartholomew, "a warlike son"; Clarence, "illustrious"; Edith, "happiness; rich gift"; Mary "bitter, otherwise, their rebellion, or star of the sea." It is not without regret that these interesting and poetic but erroneous interpretations have been cast aside. Thus, Bartholomew is now given as meaning "son of Talmal"; and Clarence as a Christian name is derived from Clarence the English dukedom. When the meaning is not certain, it is not given. While the list of English names is not materially greater than in the former edition, the foreign equivalents are more numerous. This, with the revision in pronunciation, makes the collection fuller, more accurate, and more serviceable than its predecessor.

Collections of Foreign Phrases and Quotations serve a twofold purpose: To the writer or public speaker they suggest some new or half-forgotten expression; to the reader unfamiliar, or but superficially acquainted, with the foreign tongue, they give the meaning, and in this dictionary the pronunciation, of the imported phrase. Of such phrases, the New International Dictionary presents a veritable embarras de richesses, and a selection of the best-known and most widely applicable has been made. The English-speaking race becomes more and more cosmopolitan in speech, and imported sayings form part of the equipment of every educated person. Certain foreign phrases by reason of their conciseness and expressiveness have virtually become an essential part of our language. Such, for example, are the Latin ad libitum, alter ego, ex officio, flagrante delicto, ipso facto, pro bono publico; the French à la mode, amour propre, coup de grâce, de trop, hors de combat; the German auf Wiedersehen, mehr Licht, Wanderlust, Zeitgeist; the Italian con amore, dolce far niente, sotto voce. The present collection contains the more familiar phrases found in its predecessor, and many additions. The mottoes of the various States of the Union are entered.

The pronunciation is given, a feature which was absent from the old edition. Furthermore, the plan of using bold-faced type will prove a grateful change from the italics formerly used.

The list of Abbreviations is very comprehensive, and covers academic degrees, military titles, honorary orders, scientific symbols, commercial contractions, and the like, some of which have gained wide currency since the last edition was prepared. Thus, A. B. C., Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, A. N. Z. A. C. or Anzac, Australian and New Zealand Army Corps, C. S., Christian Science, D. O., Doctor of Osteopathy, I. S. O., Imperial Service Order, S. O. S., the wireless signal used by ships in distress, can be expected only in an up-to-date list. These and practically all other abbreviations likely to meet the attention of the layman are given in the present collection. Attention is also directed to the introductory remarks on the correct usage of abbreviations in writing and printing. Such information is not elsewhere readily available, and will be appreciated by the careful writer. When, and when not, to use capital letters is clearly shown in the present edition, and this improvement alone more than justifies the revision.

Any who have occasion to write or print will welcome the simple and concise rules here given for Punctuation, Use of Capital Letters, etc. These rules exhibit the best current practice and, while in matter so condensed many niceties of analysis have, perforce, been omitted, they give the general principles involved.

Many of the errors that appear in print and much of the expense incurred in making printer's changes would be avoided if the original copy were prepared with sufficient care. The hints here given are the result of much experience and will be found of assistance in preparing circulars, advertisements, and form letters, as well as more extended forms of literary work, such as themes, stories, or the like.

The Signs and Symbols associated with astronomy, botany, chemistry, mathematics, medicine, commerce, music, etc., have been prepared de novo from the New International Dictionary; and, while containing all that was in the previous edition, the present list includes a number of very useful additions. The specimen of a corrected proof sheet is of special interest.

KEY TO THE SYMBOLS

 For FULL DISCUSSION OF THE SOUNDS of the language, see ELEMENTS OF SPOKEN ENGLISH, below.

REFERENCES. Numbers following the respelling for pronunciation of some words in the vocabulary refer to sections in this GUIDE.

ACCENTS AND HYPHENS. The principal accent is indicated by a heavy mark (´), and the secondary accent by a lighter mark (˘), at the end of the syllable. Syllabic division is indicated by a light hyphen, except where this is replaced by an accent mark, or by a heavier hyphen used to join the members of words written or printed with a hyphen.

For a SYSTEM OF MARKING WORDS WITHOUT RESPELLING, see page xviii.

FOREIGN SOUNDS for which no special symbols are provided are represented by the nearest English equivalents.

ELEMENTS OF SPOKEN ENGLISH

☞ In this discussion, unless otherwise indicated, it is the sound of a letter that is meant in any instance, and not its name. Thus, t is called "tā"; its sound may be heard by pronouncing a word like to, and then omitting the vowel.

A

§ 1. ā as in āle, fāte, māk'er, etc., commonly called "long a," although it corresponds, at least in its main element, nearly with ē (§ 23), is the name sound of the letter a in modern English. It is usually diphthongal, beginning with a sound nearly that of ē in mēt, and ending with a brief sound as of ī in īt, which is most noticeable at the end of a syllable, or before a voiced (sonant) consonant, as in māy, āle. In passing from the ē position to the ī position the tongue is raised, and the main element of the ā becomes somewhat closer than ē. The ā is never simply ē prolonged.

The sound (ā) is also otherwise variously represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in pain, day, break, veil, obey, and (exceptionally) gaol, gauge, aye (ever).

§ 2. ā as in sen'āte, pref'āce, vīl'āge, etc., is a modification of ā (āle), in unaccented syllables. In ordinary speech, the sound is nearly ē as in ēnd, or, as pronounced by some, ī in īt. In formal speech, the sound approaches ā in many adjectives and nouns where in the corresponding verb it has the full sound, as in con'ju-gāte, a, ag'gre-gāte, n. It is nearly ā when before another vowel in a following syllable, as in chā-ō'tic, Ju'dā-ism. In such words as mis'cel-lā-ry, sal'u-tā-ry, etc., the ā usually is more nearly ā in American than in British use.

§ 3. ā as in cāre, com-pāre', pār'ent, etc., occurs in standard English only in syllables closed by r and more or less strongly accented. The sound varies somewhat with different speakers. By many, it is made with the tongue nearly in the position for ā in āt (§ 4); by others, with the tongue nearly in the position for ē in ēnd (§ 23). But in either case the tongue is tenser and slightly higher than for the ā or for the ē, so that the ā is not simply ā prolonged, as some describe it, or ē prolonged, as others describe it.

An a before r does not usually take the sound of ā when the r immediately precedes a sounded vowel or another r in a following syllable of the word; as in vā'ry, wā'ry, Mā'ry, etc.; pār'i-ty, pār'ry, chār'i-ty, etc. (cf. § 75). Words like vā'ry, wā'ry, etc., are, however, pronounced with ā by many, especially in British usage. The sound (ā) remains unchanged when an inflectional ending is added; thus, shāre, shār'er, shār'ing.

The sound (ā) is also represented, in the ordinary spelling, by e before r, as in there, and in other ways, as in air, bear, hair, prayer, etc.

§ 4. ā as in ādd, hāt, rān'dom, pār'i-ty, etc., is commonly called "short a." It corresponds in tongue position nearly with ā as that sound is pronounced by many (§ 3).

The sound (ā) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in plaid, guar'an-ty, etc.

§ 5. ā as in āc-count', ā'nūl, mad'ām, etc., occurs frequently in unaccented syllables closed by a consonant, in the ordinary spelling. In formal speech, it has the quality of ā (āt), but ordinarily it is more or less obscured, often becoming nearly or quite the same as ā in so'fā (§ 8). The italic (ā) indicates the quality of ā (āt), with allowable colloquial obscuration.

§ 6. ā as in ārm, fār, fā'ther, ālms, pālm is often called "Italian a." It has also been called the "open-throat" vowel, because in pronouncing it the mouth and throat are opened wide, the tongue being lax.

In American usage, ā occurs most often before r. In calf, half, salve, etc., ā is the generally accepted sound, though ā, and even ā, are also common in such words (not, however, in calm, palm, balm, etc., in educated speech). The digraph au in laugh, haunt, taunt, etc., is preferably pronounced as ā, although when followed by n, as in haunt, taunt, etc., it is by many given as ō (§ 11). The sound (ā) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in hearth, guard, etc.

§ 7. ā as in stāff, grāft, dānce, com-mānd', chānt, āsk, pāss, lāst, pāth, etc., occurs before ff, ft, nce, nd, nt, sk, sp, ss, st, and th; and in some other cases. The sound thus represented is not the short form of ā in ārt (§ 6). It is medium or long in quantity, and variable in quality between the limits ā (ārt) and ā (ām), usually more nearly resembling the former, but articulated somewhat further forward in the mouth. It is used by many cultivated speakers, in such words as are here mentioned, as a compromise between the ā used by some and the ā used by others.

§ 8. ā as in ā-bound', cā-rouse', dī'ā-dem, so'fā, etc., occurs only in unaccented syllables, usually such as are not closed by a consonant in the ordinary spelling. The sound is that of ā in āsk, usually with more or less colloquial obscuration toward the sound of ē in ev'er (§ 27), such allowable obscuration being indicated by italicizing the letter (ā).

§ 9. ā as in all, talk, swarm, wā'ter, etc., is equivalent to ō as in ōrb, bōrn, etc. (§ 59), and is represented by ō in the respelling; as, all (ōl), talk (tōk).

§ 10. ā as in what, wān'der, swan, qual'i-ty, etc., is equivalent to ō as in ōdd (§ 60), and is represented by ō in the respelling; thus, what (wōt), what (hwōt).

Au and aw

§ 11. Au, in the ordinary spelling, regularly represents the sound of ō in lōrd (§ 59), as in taught, caustic, haul, etc. It also has the sound of ā, as in aunt, laugh; and in taunt, haunt, etc., as preferably pronounced (§ 6). It never has the sound of ou in house in English words. The common sound of au (ō) is also represented, in the ordinary spelling, by aw, now the usual form where final or before k, l, or n; as in law, saw, hawk, crawl, lawn, etc.

B

§ 12. B as in boy, cab, rob'ber, a'ble, etc., is the voiced labial stop (i. e., consonant formed with stoppage at the lips of the voiced, or intoned, breath). It differs from p (§ 72) only in being uttered with voice, or vocal tone.

B is usually silent after m in the same syllable, as in bomb, climb, thumb, etc.; but is sometimes sounded, as in rhomb. It is usually silent before t (except in compounds, as subtle, etc.); as in debt, doubt, sub'tle, etc. In a few other cases, also, especially when initial before another consonant, as in bdel'i-um, it is silent.

C

§ 13. C as in cede, cy'press, ac'id, glance, etc., ("soft" c) is identical with s as in see (§ 77), and is indicated by s in the respelling for pronunciation.

C has this sound (s) before e, i, or y; as in cede, ac'id, etc. The c rarely has the sound of z, as in sacrifice and suffice as pronounced by some. Before an i, less often an e, immediately followed by another vowel in the same word, "soft" c commonly takes the sound of sh, either by itself, as in oc'ce-an'ic (ō'shē-ān'ik), or by assimilation with the i or e, as in vi'cious (vī'chūs), o'cean (ō'shān), etc.

§ 14. C as in cat, cold, ac'rid, etc., ("hard" c) has the sound of k, and is represented by k in the respelling.

C has this sound (k) before a, o, or u; before l and r, as in cliff, craft; in the combination ck, as in crack; and at the end of a syllable (if not immediately followed in a succeeding syllable by e, i, or y), as in pic'ture, arc, sanc'tion, disc, zinc, al'ma-nac, vap'ci-nate, etc.; also before e in sc'pt'ic, as sometimes spelled, and before i in scir'rous (pronounced also sir'ūs), and in the irregular spellings arc'ing, zinc'ing, zinc'y, etc.

§ 15. C initial before n occurs in a few words and names from the Greek, and is silent, as in Cni'dus (nī'dūs). C is also silent in czar, etc., as commonly pronounced; also in vict'uals, in-dict', and in mus'cle, cor'pus-cle, etc.

Ch

§ 16. The most frequent sound of ch, as in chln, church, much, arch, etc., is a consonantal diphthong, commonly analyzed as t + sh (tsh). But these elements are not simply pronounced in succession, without change, as are, for instance, k and s in box (bōks); they blend into a composite sound in which both elements are changed somewhat. The sound is the voiceless (surd) correlative of j (§ 48). Ch has this sound in all native English words, and is used in the respelling invariably with this value.

Ch often has an equivalent, in the ordinary spelling, the trigraph tch, at the end of a syllable; as in hatch, watch, satch'el, etc. This sound of ch is also represented, in the ordinary spelling, by ti, as in bas'tion, ques'tion, and, rarely, by te, as in right'eous; also, by t and the initial element of u in na'ture, vu'l'ture, etc., as commonly colloquially pronounced. (Cf. § 87.) Ch occasionally has the sound of j, as in spin'ach.

§ 17. Ch has the sound of sh in she (§ 81) in words from modern French, as cha-grin', ma-chine', mus-tache', etc.; also, in some words from Old French, in which historically the sound is ch (chop), but in which it has commonly become sh through analogy with more recent borrowings, as in chiv'al-rous, cham-paign' (flat ground).

§ 18. Ch "hard," as in cho'rus, ech'o, etc., has the sound of k, and is represented by k in the respelling.

Ch has its "hard" sound in most words from the Greek, directly or through the Latin, as in cho'rus, ep'och, chyle; also, in most words or names from the Hebrew, as Chaldea, Enoch, Nebuchadrezzar. In a comparatively few such words, the sound of ch as in chop occurs; as chart, cherub, Rachel; also, in the prefix arch-, as in archbishop, archduke; but the k sound remains in architect, archangel, architecture, etc. In some words from foreign languages, the corresponding ch has a fricative ("guttural") sound. (See § 50.)

§ 19. Ch is silent in drachm, schism, yacht, and in fuchsia, as a common plant name.

§ 20. D as in day, bed, hard, wed'ded, etc., is the voiced dental (or often alveolar) stop (i. e., consonant formed with stoppage of the voiced, or intoned, breath by placing the point of the tongue against the back of the upper front teeth, or the gums just above). The sound differs from t (§ 82) only in being uttered with voice, or vocal tone.

D, when preceded in the same syllable by a voiceless sound (i. e., one uttered without vocal tone), is pronounced like t; as in hissed (hĭst), looked (lŏkt). It is silent in the first syllable of Wednesday, as usually pronounced, and in handkerchief and handsome. D often assimilates with a following i, the two taking the sound j (§§ 43, 87).

E

§ 21. e as in ève, bē, mēte, etc., commonly called "long e," is the name sound of the letter e in modern English. The sound is formed with the tongue in nearly the same position as for i (§ 44), but slightly raised and tenser, the front of the tongue being raised higher than for any of the other "front" vowel sounds (i, ā, ē, ā, ā). A further raising of the tongue, or a slight increase in the force of utterance, by causing audible friction of the breath, turns the sound into a consonant, as y in yes.

This sound is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in Cæ'sar, beam, feet, de-ceive', peo'ple, key, machine', field, Phœ'bus, quay, Por'tuguese.

§ 22. e as in ē-vent', crē-ate', so-ci-ē-ty, etc., is a modification of ē (ève) in unaccented syllables. In ordinary speech it is uttered with the tongue slightly lower and less tense than for the accented ē, the sound tending toward that of i (§ 11), which it often becomes in colloquial speech.

§ 23. e as in ënd, pēt, ēr'ror, etc., commonly called "short e," corresponds nearly to the main part of "ā" (§ 1). The sound (ē), which usually occurs in accented syllables closed with a consonant, is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in di-er'e-sis, said, says, feath'er, heif'er, leop'ard, friend, as-a-tō'ti-da, etc.

§ 24. Short e (ē) also occurs in unaccented initial syllables, as in ex-cuse', en-large', ef-face', etc. In many final unaccented syllables, the sound verges toward that of i in ill, as in end'ed, car'pet, hors'es, wool'en, etc., and is given as i by many phoneticians, where others give ē, or a sound intermediate between ē and i. In this Dictionary the more formal sound (ē) is preferred, although the i sound is allowable colloquially. Otherwise, the ē in unaccented syllables usually is obscured toward the sound of ē (ev'ēr). (See §§ 25, 27.)

§ 25. e as in mo'mēt, de'cēn-cy, nov'el, gos'pēl, etc., usually before n or l, is pronounced in formal speech like ē (ënd). From this there is an allowable colloquial weakening or obscuration in the direction of ē (ev'ēr, § 27), the vowel sometimes appearing to be almost elided, as in mo'm'nt, nov'l. (Cf. § 26.) The formal sound, together with its allowable obscuration, is indicated by the italic (ē).

§ 26. In some words—as eat'en, o'pen, gold'en, shriv'el, etc.—the e is so far reduced that it becomes a mere vocal murmur, or even drops out altogether, leaving to the n or the l the function of the vowel. Such words are marked in the respelling for pronunciation with an apostrophe (') to indicate the reduction or elision of the vowel; thus, eat'en (ēt'n), gold'en (gŏl'd'n).

§ 27. e as in read'ēr, sev'ēr-al, pēr-form', etc., is the sound of unaccented e before r. The tongue position in the articulation of this sound is nearly the same as that for ū (§ 88), or ū (§ 89), but in pronouncing either ū or ū the tongue is tenser, making a perceptible difference in the sound, as may be felt and heard by pronouncing such pairs of words as cūr and mak'ēr, cūt and sev'ēr.

The sound (ē) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in al'tar, e-lix'ir, ac'tor, zeph'yr, etc.

§ 28. The sound of e as in fern, err, her, herd, infer, etc., as ordinarily pronounced, is the same as ū in ūrn, and is indicated in the respelling by ū. (See § 88.)

§ 29. E as in there, where, etc., is identical in sound with ā (§ 3), by which it is represented in the respelling.

§ 30. E as in veil, rein, they, etc., with the sound of ā (§ 1), occurs in English words only in the digraph ei (or ey final), and it is, properly speaking, the digraph that represents the sound, and not the single letter.

§ 31. E with consonant value. An unaccented e immediately followed by another vowel often assumes more or less of a consonant y sound, as in right'eous, as pronounced by some, ri't'yūs. Even with careful speakers, this y sound, however, often assimilates with a preceding t or d or s, or c with the sound of s, modifying its sound more or less, as in right'eous (rĭ'chūs, by some ri't'yūs), gran'deur (grā'n'ūr; by some grānd'yēr, by others grā'n'jēr), o'cean (ō'shūn), nau'seous (nō'shūs, by some -shūs), etc. Cf. § 87.

The e does not always disappear even when, by partial assimilation, it has changed the sound of the preceding consonant, especially if the accent falls upon the following syllable, as in o'ce-an'ic (ō'shē-ā'n'ik).

§ 32. E silent. When it follows a consonant at the end of a syllable, e is usually silent in modern English, but indicates: (1) Generally, that a preceding vowel is long; as in cāme, tōne, hōme. In many words, however, the preceding vowel is short; as in bāde, o'live, prom'ise, etc. (2) That a preceding c or g is "soft" (i. e., pronounced as s or j); as in serv'ice, rav'age, etc. A final silent e, also, often occurs after certain consonants not usual in a final position, as y, th (when sounded as in them), and single s (when not the sign of the plural), or z; as in leave, wreath, mouse, nurse, bronze, etc.

In the ending -ed of the past tense and participle of verbs, the e, except in solemn or poetic speech, is usually elided, as in sealed (sēld), waved (wāvd), hoped (hōpt), unless the verb ends in d or t, as in add'ed, suit'ed. When the e is thus elided in pronunciation, the d following a voiceless consonant (i. e., one uttered without vocal tone) is pronounced as t; as, stopped (stōpt), hoped (hōpt).

Ee

§ 33. Ee has usually the sound of ē (ève) as, in beet (bēt), deep (dēp). In been, it has usually, in America, the sound of i. In breech'es and coff'ee, it has the sound of i.

Eu, ew

§ 34. Eu regularly has the sound of ū (§ 85), as in feud (fūd), deuce (dūs), or, when unaccented, of ū (§ 87), as in eu-phon'ic (ū-fŏn'ik), etc.

Eu, having usually the same sounds as eu, is common at the end of words or syllables; as in pew (pū), new (nū), etc. It also occurs (rarely) initially and medially; as in ewe (ū), ew'er (ū'ēr), newt (nū). After certain consonants, it has the sound of ō; as in flow (fŏō), threw (thrŏō). (Cf. § 86.) It has exceptionally the sound of ō; as in sew (sŏō), shew (shŏō).

F

§ 35. F as in fame, fly, staff, oft, etc., is the voiceless labiodental open consonant (i. e., consonant pronounced by bringing the lower lip and upper teeth lightly together but without complete stoppage of the breath, which is emitted without accompanying voice, or vocal tone). F is the same as v, except that v is pronounced with voice (§ 95).

The commonest equivalent of f in the ordinary spelling is ph (chiefly in words from the Greek), as pha'lanx, pho'to-graph, etc.; the sound being otherwise sometimes represented by gh (§ 40). In of, and usually in hereof, thereof, whereof, f has the sound of v.

G

§ 36. G as in gay, go, gun, is called "hard" g. This sound of g is the voiced guttural, or velar, stop (i. e., consonant pronounced by stopping the voiced, or intoned, breath by contact between the back of the tongue and the back palate). It corresponds to k (§ 49), except that the latter is uttered without voice. As used in the respelling for pronunciation, g has invariably its "hard" sound.

In modern English, g has its "hard" sound: (a) Always at the end of a word; as in hug, hag, tug; also in derivatives of such words even when the g (doubled in the spelling) is followed by e, i, or y, as in rag'ged, drug'gist, fog'gy. (b) Before a, o, or u, or ā, ō, or ū, or ā, ō, or ū in the same syllable; as in gay, glad, grow, lin'gual, bags (except in the British gaol, gaoler). (c) In words of Teutonic origin before e and i, as in get, give; also when doubled before y, as in bug'gy, mug'gy. (d) In a few words and names from the Hebrew; as ga'rah, Gid'e-on. The sound of "hard" g, followed by z, is also often represented by x; as in ex-ist' (ĕg-zist'), ex-am'ple (ĕg-zămp'l). See § 100.

This sound of g is otherwise indicated, in the ordinary spelling, by gu, as in guard, guest; by gh, as in ghost; and by gue final, as in plague.

§ 37. "Soft" g, as in gem, en'gine, gy'rate, has the sound of j (§ 48), and is represented by j in the respelling.

The letter g has this sound usually before e, i, or y, except in words of Teutonic origin (§ 36, c). At the end of a syllable, the sound is usually represented by dg, dge, or ge, as in badg'er, badge, rage.

§ 38. G with sound of zh. In a few words from the French, as rouge, mirage, cortège, etc., g retains its French sound of z in azure.

§ 39. G is silent in modern English before m and n final, and when initial before n; as in phlegm, sign, gnat, gnaw, etc. In the digraph ng, as in sing, the g blends with the n to form a new sound (§ 55).

Gh

§ 40. Gh occurs initially in a few words, in which it has the sound of "hard" g (§ 36); as in ghost, ghost'ly, a-ghast'. In other positions it either has become silent or has the sound of f. It is silent: (a) after i (or ei), as in high, nigh, sleigh, etc.; (b) before a t in the same syllable, as in caught, eight, right, etc. (an exception is draught [drăft]); (c) often at the end of a word or syllable after au or ou, as in daugh'ter, dough, bough, etc. It often has the sound of f after au or ou at the end of a word or syllable, as in laugh, laugh'ter, cough, e-nough', etc. In hough, it has, exceptionally, the sound of k.

H

§ 41. H as in hate, hire, house, hoot, etc., is a simple breath sound, and is often called the aspirate. It usually begins as a weak, voiceless glottal consonant produced by friction of the breath against the vocal cords, while its latter part is articulated with the same position of the vocal organs as for the following vowel.

An h initial in a word is sounded in the best present English, except in heir, honest, honor, hour, and, esp. in America, herb, and their derivatives, while in hostler (when so spelled), humble, humor, present usage is divided, but on the whole favors the sounding of the aspirate. The h is frequently silent at the beginning of a syllable; as in ex-haust', ex-hort', shepherd, Dur'ham, etc. After a vowel in the same syllable, as in ah, oh, the h is regularly silent. The h is silent in John and phthisic (tíz'ík); and is either silent, or blended with a neighboring sound, in ch, gh, kh, ph, rh, sh, th, and wh.

I

§ 42. ĩ as in ice, time, child, etc., commonly called "long ĩ," is the name sound of the letter i in modern English. The sound (ĩ) is a diphthong having for its initial element in the best American usage the sound of ĩ (ĭrm) or the same sound shortened (as in ar-tis'tic). In some localities, notably the South of England, the initial element lies between ũ (ũp) and ĩ (ev'ĕr).

The sound is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in aisle, ay or aye (yes), height, eye, vie, choir, guile, buy, thy, rye.

§ 43. Long ĩ unaccented, as in ĩ-de'a, dĩ-am'e-ter, etc., does not differ essentially from ĩ in ice, but is commonly pronounced more quickly, and is hence somewhat shortened.

§ 44. ĩ as in ill, pit, ad-mĩ't', etc., is commonly called "short ĩ," though formed with nearly the same tongue position as for ĩ (§ 21), but with the tongue slightly lower, and less tense.

Short ĩ unaccented is usually followed in the same syllable by a consonant, as in cab'ĩn, in-hab'ĩt. Otherwise, as in qual'ĩ-ty, trin'ĩ-ty, dĩ-vid'e', etc., the sound tends slightly toward ĩ (ev'ĕr, § 27), but in careful speech its quality is maintained.

The sound (ĩ) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in guĩn'ea, for'eĩgn, sur'feit, car'riage, mis'chief, cir'cuit, etc., and, exceptionally, in English, breaches, also (§ 33), women, tor'toise (by some), let'tuce, busy'; also, colloquially, in ad'ed, etc. (Cf. § 24.)

§ 45. ĩ before r, as in fir, bird, irk'some, etc., is the equivalent of ĩ in ĩrn (§ 88), and is represented by ĩ in the respelling, as in fĩr (fĩr), bĩrd (bĩrd), etc. When unaccented, the sound is equivalent to ĩ in ev'ĕr; as in ta'pĩr (tă'pĩr), e-lĩx'ĩr (ĕ-lĩk'ĕr). (Cf. § 27.)

§ 46. ĩ as in ma-chĩne', po-lĩce', etc., occurs in modern English chiefly in words of foreign origin or under foreign influence, and is equivalent to ĩ in ĕve (§ 21), being represented by ĩ in the respelling for pronunciation.

§ 47. ĩ with consonant value. A short ĩ (ĩ) when closely followed by another vowel often falls into a y sound; as in fil'ĩal (fĩl'yăl), gen'ĩal (jĕn'yăl), etc. A preceding "sharp" s (as in sun), "soft" c (as in cede), or sc (as in science), by assimilation with the y sound, commonly takes an sh sound, as in man'sĩon, vĩc'ĩous, con'sĩcĩous; and a voiced s (as in as) or a z similarly takes a zh sound, as in vĩ'sĩon, gla'zĩer, etc., the ĩ in either case being wholly absorbed. A preceding t is affected in the same way, as in na'tĩon, par'tĩal, etc.; but when preceded by a syllable ending in s, the t (ty) takes a ch (tsh) sound, as in ques'tĩon, Chris'tĩan, etc. A g followed by ĩ similarly takes, by fusion with the ĩ sound, the sound of j, as in re'ĩgĩon; and d ĩ in like manner often takes the sound of j, as in sol'dĩer, cord'ĩal.

J

§ 48. J as in jar, jest, jute, etc., is a consonantal diphthong, commonly analyzed as d + zh (dzh). But these elements are not simply pronounced in succession, as are, for instance, the sounds of g and z in eggs (ĕgz); they blend into a composite sound in which both elements are somewhat changed. The sound is the voiced (sonant) correlative of ch in chĩn (cf. § 16).

The equivalents of j, in the ordinary spelling, are "soft" g, ge, and dg(e), by which it is usually represented at the end of a syllable, as in page, badg'er, judge (cf. § 37); exceptions being pre'ĩ-ĩdice, prof'ect, maj'es-ty, and caf'e-put. Also, j (or dj) occurs at the end of a syllable in some foreign words, mostly Oriental. Other equivalents of j, in the ordinary spelling, are d ĩ as in sol'dĩer, ge as in sur'geon, gĩ as in re'ĩgĩon. (Cf. §§ 47, 87.) In hal-lelujah, j has the sound of y.

K

§ 49. K as in kite, ark, oak, etc., is the voiceless guttural, or velar, stop, formed in the same manner as "hard" g (§ 36), but uttered without voice, or vocal tone.

The sound (k) is also otherwise indicated, in the ordinary spelling, as in call, choir, hough (hök), khan, co-quet', an-tĩque', saqueu, queue. The sound is also a component of one of the sounds commonly represented, in the ordinary spelling, by x (§ 99). Before n in the same syllable, k is now silent in English; as in knot, knee, etc. Kk has the sound of k, as in tack, as has lk, usually, after the sound of a in all (ăl) or of ō in old, as in walk, folk, etc.

§ 50. A small capital k (thus, K) is used in the respelling to indicate any of certain fricative sounds, often popularly called "gutturals," which occur in German, Scottish, Dutch, and other languages.

These sounds are of two typical classes: (a) The palatal fricative is made with the tongue nearly in position for y in yes, but raised closer to the palate, so that there is more distinctly audible friction. It may be imitated by exaggerating the slightly fricative sound of y in yes (without uttering voice), or of h in hue; or by pronouncing k in key so that the breath passes through a very narrow passage, instead of being entirely stopped between the tongue and the palate. This sound is typically that of chĩn standard German "ich," and commonly occurs after or before "front" vowels, as ĩ, e, and after consonants. (b) The guttural fricative is usually deeper and stronger than the palatal, and somewhat resembles a light hawking, or clearing of the throat. It may be imitated by pronouncing c in cow, with the closure between the back of the tongue and the palate loosened so that the breath passes through a very narrow passage, instead of being entirely stopped. This sound is typically that of ch in standard German "ach," and commonly occurs after or before "back" vowels, as a, o, u.

The nature of the preceding or the succeeding sound sufficiently determines the character of these fricative sounds. Those not familiar with the foreign pronunciation may pronounce the K as simple k.

L

§ 51. L as in le, low, ill, clay, etc., is normally formed with partial closure of the oral passage by contact of the point of the tongue with the back upper gums at the same place as for d (§ 20) and t (§ 82), the voiced (intonated) breath passing out either at both sides or at one side, whence it has been called the point-divided, or point-side, consonant. L has no voiceless correlative in English.

In certain combinations the l, originally sounded, has regularly become silent, as in would, alms, balm, salmon, almond, half, salve, talk, folk, and like words, and their derivatives. L often fulfills the office of a vowel in an unaccented syllable, as in bat'tle (băt'tl), bus'tle.

M

§ 52. M as in me, tame, smile, etc., is the voiced labial nasal (labiodental) consonant, formed by bringing the lips together, as for b and p, at the same time lowering the soft palate, and thus allowing the intonated breath, or voice, to pass into or through the nasal passage.

Initial m before n, occurring in a few words from the Greek, is silent; as in mne-mon/ics (nê-môn/iks).

N

§ 53. N as in none, inn, ten, etc., is the voiced dental nasal (dentinal) consonant, formed with closure of the oral passage by the tongue in the same position as for d and t, while, at the same time, the soft palate is lowered, allowing the intonated breath, or voice, to pass into or through the nasal passage. N often serves as a vowel in unaccented syllables, as in eat/en (ê't'n). (Cf. § 26.)

After m, a final n is silent, as in hymn, condemn, etc.; but when a suffix is added to such a word, the n is usually sounded, as in hym-nol'o-gy, con/dem-na'tion, au-tum/nal, etc. In damned, damning, limning, usage is divided; in condemning, contemning, hymnings, condemn, contemner, present usage favors the silent n. In kiln the n is usually silent. In the initial combinations kn, pn, mn, only the n is now sounded in English, as in know, pneumatic (cf. § 72), mnemonics.

§ 54. A small capital n (thus, N) is used in the respelling to indicate that a preceding vowel is pronounced as a nasal, as in French bon (bôn).

There are four such nasal vowels in French, indicated by a following n in the ordinary spelling (not if the n is doubled or followed by a vowel in the same syllable), as in the phrase un bon vin blanc (în bôn vãn blãns), "a good white wine." These are pronounced by opening the mouth very wide and uttering the vowels as here marked, while allowing the soft palate to hang loose, the breath or voice passing out through both nose and mouth, only the vowel being pronounced in any case, the printed n merely indicating the nasalization. Many English-speaking people substitute for such nasal vowels similar, but not nasalized, vowels followed by the English nasal consonant sound ng, or n as in ink (§ 55) and this, though inaccurate, is allowable for those who find the true nasal vowels too difficult. Similar nasal vowels occur in some other languages, as Portuguese.

ŋ, ng

§ 55. Ng as in sing, hang, bang'ing, etc., is a nasal consonant sound formed with complete closure between the back of the tongue and the soft palate, in the same manner as for "hard" g (§ 36), and is hence called the guttural, or velar, nasal. In its pronunciation the sounds of n and g are so closely blended that neither can be distinguished.

The digraph occurs only at the end of syllables; as in sing, sing'er, hang, etc.; or with e added, as in tongue. An added inflection usually causes no change; as in sing'er, hang'ing, etc.; but in the comparatives and superlatives of long, young, etc., the g goes, with the sound of "hard" g, with the inflection, while the n takes to itself the ng sound; as in lon'ger, lon'gest. When ng is followed in the same syllable by a silent e, as in flange, range, it does not take the sound as in sing, but is simple n, followed by the sound of g (= j).

At the end of an accented syllable, an n followed immediately, either in the same or the succeeding syllable, by the sound of k or of "hard" g (go), commonly takes more or less of the ng sound (being marked in the respelling for pronunciation with ŋ); as in ink (iŋk), fin'ger (fîn'ger), etc.; also, often, in unaccented syllables, as in e/lon-ga'tion, pro/lon-ga'tion, etc.

The n does not take this sound (ŋ) in the prefixes in-, en-, on-, un-, non-.

O

§ 56. ō as in ōld, nōte, bōne, etc., commonly called "long o," is the name sound of the letter o in modern English. The main part of the sound (ō) in standard English is pronounced with the back of the tongue raised toward the soft palate, its maximum elevation being about midway between that for ô (orb, § 59) and that for oo (foōd, § 68). In its pronunciation the lips are contracted to a circular opening. In addition to this main element, the vowel commonly takes a distinct vanishing sound of oo (foōt), or even oo (foōd), making it more or less diphthongal. This diphthongal quality is more marked in the pronunciation of some localities than in that of others. (Cf. § 1.)

The sound (ō) is otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in roam, foe, oh, door, grow, owe, haut-boy, beau, yeo'man, sew.

§ 57. When accented before r, ō commonly takes as its vanishing sound a slight sound of ē in ev'ēr (§ 27), instead of oo or oo. By some in America, and by many in England, the ō in this position is pronounced nearly or quite like ô (§ 59); as in glō'ry, pork, etc.

§ 58. ô as in ô-bey', pō-et'ic, a-nat'ô-my, etc., differs from ō (ōld) not only in the (usual) omission of the vanishing sound, but also in that the tongue takes for ô a slightly lower position and is laxer. In careful pronunciation, the sound is almost that of ō.

§ 59. ô as in ôrb, lôrd, ôr'der, etc., is formed with nearly the same tongue position as "short o" (§ 60), but in pronouncing it the tongue is tenser.

As indicated by the letter o followed by r in the same syllable, the sound (ô) is mostly limited to accented syllables with the r not immediately followed by a vowel or another r in the same word (inflected words, as ab-hôr'ring, ab-hôr'rer, excepted). Otherwise the sound is usually ô, as in fôr'eign, ôr'ange, tôr'rid, or ô, as in môre, glô'ry, dôor; but all these words are pronounced with ô by many speakers (cf. § 57).

The sound (ô) is also represented, in the ordinary spelling, by a in certain positions, as in swarm, all, talk, wa'ter, etc.; and otherwise as in draw, awe, haul, ex-traor'di-nary, George, etc.

§ 60. ô as in ôtt, ôdd, pôd, etc., is commonly called "short o." The sound is formed with nearly the same tongue position as for ô (§ 59), but in its pronunciation the tongue is laxer.

In the pronunciation of this pair of vowels (ô, ô) the back of the tongue (the part active in their formation) is lower than for any of the other "back" vowels (ô, ô, oo, oo) and the lips are rounded but slightly. "Short o" sometimes occurs in unaccented syllables, as in ma'er'ôn, car'bôn, etc., but here, except in very formal speech, it is usually more or less obscured, as in côn-clu'de', ôc-cur', etc. (§ 61). Such obscuration is more marked in most final unaccented syllables, the vowel often disappearing altogether, leaving to the consonant the function of a vowel, as in cot'ton (kôt'n), but'ton (bût'n), etc. (Cf. § 26.)

§ 61. ô as in ôc-cur', côn-nect', rec'ôl-lect', etc., has the sound of ô in ôdd (§ 60) in formal speech, but in ordinary speech the sound is more or less obscured, such allowable obscuration being indicated by making the letter italic.

§ 62. ô as in sôft, côst, gône, clôth, etc., is intermediate between ô in ôrb (§ 59) and ô in ôdd (§ 60). The o in such words is pronounced by some as ô, by others as ô, but properly takes the medial sound here indicated.

§ 63. o as in do (doo), prove (prôov), tomb (tôom), etc., is equivalent to oo in foōd (§ 68), and is indicated by oo in the respelling.

§ 64. o as in wolf (wôlf), wom'an (wôom'ân), etc., is equivalent to oo in foōt (§ 69), and is represented by oo in the respelling.

§ 65. o as in son (sôn), done (dôn), oth'er (ôth'êr), etc., is equivalent to û in ûp (§ 89), and is indicated by û in the respelling. The o in na'tion (nã'shún), caution (kô'shún), etc., has this sound, usually more or less obscured in ordinary speech, as indicated by the italic û. (Cf. § 90.)

§ 66. o as in worm (wôrm), work (wôrk), world (wôrld), etc., occurs only before r in accented syllables, and is equivalent to û in ûrn (§ 88).

Oo

§ 67. Oo in modern English regularly has the sounds of oo as in boōt (§ 68), and oo in foōt (§ 69); exceptionally it has the sound of û in ûp, as in flood (flûd), blood (blûd), etc., (§ 89), and of ô (ôld), as in door (dôr), floor (fôr), etc., (§ 57).

§ 68. oo as in môon, foōd, toōt, etc., is articulated with the back of the tongue raised close to the back palate and the lips firmly and closely rounded. The height of the tongue and the degree of lip rounding are greater than for any of the other "back" vowels (â, ô, ô, ô). (Cf. § 60.)

The sound (oo) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in rude, group, drew, fruit, do, canoe, rheum, manoeuvre.

§ 69. oo as in foōt, goōd, croōk is called the short of oo, although the two sounds differ not only in quantity, but also somewhat in quality. The oo is formed with nearly the same tongue position as oo, but in pronouncing it the tongue is slightly lower and less tense.

The sound (ō) is also commonly represented, in the ordinary spelling, by u, as in full (fūl), pull (pūl), etc.; and exceptionally by o, as in wolf, woman, and by ou, as in would, could.

Oi and oy

§ 70. Oi regularly represents the diphthong heard in oil, coil, etc., and is used in the respelling always with this value. Its first element, which takes the accent, is approximately ō and its final element is i, the elements being pronounced in a single wave of sound (thus, ōi).

In the ordinary spelling, oi exceptionally represents several other sounds; as in chan/ois, av'oird-pois, choir, tor/toise, etc. The diphthongal sound of oi when final is commonly represented, in the ordinary spelling, by oy, as in boy (boi), toy (toi), etc.

Ou and ow

§ 71. Ou in modern English regularly represents the diphthong heard in out, a-bout, house, a sound never represented by au in English. This sound of ou is approximately ä (ärt) + ō (bōk), pronounced in one wave of sound, with the accent on the first element (ä/ō). The diphthong is used in the respelling always with this value.

In the ordinary spelling, ou exceptionally represents several other sounds; as in soup, brought, soul, cou/ple, griev/ous. The diphthongal sound as in out is also represented by ow, in the ordinary spelling, especially when final, as in owl, cow, proW, etc. Ow also has the sound of ō (ōld), as in know, bow.

P

§ 72. P as in pea, pay, cup, happy, etc., is the voiceless labial stop, differing from b (§ 12) only in the absence of voice, or vocal tone. Both p and b have the same articulative position as the nasal m (§ 52).

The letter p is silent when initial before s, sh, and t, as in psalm, pslaw, ptarmigan, and, usually, before n in words from the Greek, as pneu/matic, pneu-mo/ni-a, etc., though some scholars pronounce the p in words of the latter class, except the more common ones. It is also silent in raspberry, receipt, sempstress, accompt, corps, and their derivatives.

Ph

§ 73. Ph occurs chiefly in words of Greek derivation. It usually has the sound of f as in five (§ 35), and is represented by f in the respelling. Exceptionally, it has the sound v, as in Stephen, and in nephew as pronounced by some. In diph/thong, diph-the/ri-a, naph/tha, etc., the pronunciation with f is the best present usage.

Q

§ 74. Q is not used in the respelling. In the ordinary spelling, it is in all cases followed by u, and the two letters together commonly have the sound of kw, as in queen, con/quest, etc. They have the sound of k in a few words, mostly from the French, as in coquette, etiquette, etc., and in the ending que, as in antique, burlesque, etc.

R

§ 75. R as in room, rope, merry, is usually pronounced in English as an open, voiced (sonant) consonant, in the articulation of which the point of the tongue is raised toward, but not to, the back of the upper front teeth, or the hard palate, the exact position and height varying somewhat according to the adjacent sounds. The r also differs quite markedly as pronounced in different sections, but is now rarely trilled in standard English, though it still is in the Scottish and some other dialects, and as it usually is in foreign languages. In some localities, especially in the South of England and in New England, r is commonly omitted in certain positions or is replaced by a vowel sound, as of ē in ev'er (§ 27), even by educated speakers.

R is never preceded by the regular short sound of a vowel in an accented syllable, except when the r ends a syllable and is followed in the succeeding syllable of the same word by a vowel or another r, as in mā/r'ry, vēr'y, spī/r'it, etc., — and not even then if there is a primitive form ending in r; as in bar, bar/r'ing; in-fer', in-fer/r'ing, etc.

§ 76. S, either alone or by assimilation with a following element, represents four sounds in the ordinary spelling, all of which are open dental fricatives (i. e., consonants formed by bringing the tongue near enough to the teeth to cause decided friction of the breath, but not complete closure). Two of the sounds are voiceless, or sord, as in sun (sūn), sure (shūr), and two voiced, or sonant, as in has (hās), vi-sion (vīzh'ūn).

§ 77. (1) Voiceless, or sord, s ("sharp" s), as in see, hiss, basis, etc., is the primary sound of the letter, which is used in the respelling invariably with this value. The sound is variously formed by different speakers. It is most often pronounced with a rather narrow aperture between the blade of the tongue and the back of the upper front teeth, or the gums just above. The unintonated breath is forced through this aperture, and, impinging upon the edges of the teeth, produces the sound commonly called "hissing." If the sound is clear it is not advisable to change the usual tongue position.

This sound of s is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, by c "soft" (§ 13), as in cell, vice; by sc, as in scene, science; by sch, as in schism.

§ 78. (2) Voiced, or sonant, s ("soft" s), as in is, has, easy, accuse, etc., is the same sound as z (zeal, § 105), and is represented by z in the respelling for pronunciation. It is formed with the same tongue position as for "sharp" s, but the tongue is more tense for the voiced sound.

The s is sometimes voiced as the final sound of verbs, and voiceless as the final sound of the cognate nouns or adjectives; as in use, abuse, house, diffuse, close, etc.

§ 79. (3) S sometimes takes the sound of sh (§ 81), by assimilation with a following i or y sound, as in mansion, sure, sugar, censure, etc. (§§ 47, 87). In the case of a doubled s, the first s is assimilated to the second; as in pas/sion (pāsh'ūn), is/sue (īsh'ū), etc. In a few words s takes the sh sound while leaving the following vowel unchanged; as in one pronunciation of A/si-a (āsh'ī-ā; āsh'ā), in nau/se-a (nāsh'ē-ā), o/ce-an/ic (ōsh'ē-ān'īk), etc.

§ 80. (4) S, when preceded by a vowel in an accented syllable, takes the sound of zh as in az/ure (§ 106) by assimilation with a following i or y sound; as in fa/sion, de-ci/sion, ex-plō/sion, etc. When doubled in this position, the first s is assimilated to the second (cf. § 79); as in ab-scis/sion (āb-sīzh'ūn), re-scis/sion (rē-sīzh'ūn).

Sh

§ 81. Sh as in she, rash, usher, etc., is a voiceless dental fricative (i. e., consonant formed by narrowing the oral passage near the teeth so that the unintonated breath is forced out with audible friction). It is formed with a rather narrow opening between the blade of the tongue and the back upper gums, somewhat further back than for s (§ 77). The current of air is broader, and the resulting sound fuller and softer, than in the case of s. The sound (sh) is a simple element, the voiceless correlative of zh in azure (§ 106).

This sound is otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, by c or s with or before e or i (§§ 13, 79); by sc or t with or before i (§§ 47, 87); by the s element of x combined with a following i (§ 99); by chs in fuch/si-a (fūsh'ī-ā; -shā), as a common plant name, and by sch in schist, etc.

§ 82. T as in tle, it, note, etc., is the voiceless dental (or often alveolar) stop, corresponding to d (§ 20), but uttered without voice, or intoned breath.

In combination with a following i, or the initial element of a ti or ti (§§ 47, 87), t often has the sound of sh, as in na/tion, me/tion, etc., or of ch, as in ques/tion, na/ture, etc. The sound of t is otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, by th (§ 84, 3); also by the verb inflection -ed in certain positions (§ 20). The t is silent in Mat-thew, mortgage, hautboy, chasten, hasten, of-ten, listen, etc.

Th

§ 83. Th has two chief sounds: one voiceless (surd) as in thin, birth, etc., marked with plain th in the respelling for pronunciation; the other voiced (sonant) as in the, than, breathe, etc., marked th; thus: thē, thān. Both sounds have the same tongue position, which varies slightly with different speakers, the point of the tongue being brought against or near or between the edges of the teeth, producing a "lisp" sound.

§ 84. (1) The plural of nouns ending in voiceless th in the singular usually retains the voiceless th, especially after a short vowel or a consonant, as in breath/s, death/s, myths, breadths, etc., but in some cases, esp. when following a long vowel, the plural has preferably th, as in baths, cloths, laths, moths, mouths, oaths, paths, sheaths, truths, wreaths.

(2) Verbs and nouns ending in th often differ in pronunciation, the noun having the th, the verb the t, sound; as mouth, n. & v., south, n. & v., etc. The voiced sound in the verb is often indicated by a final silent e; as breath, n., breathe, v.; wreath, wreath; bath, bathe, etc.

(3) Th has exceptionally the sound of t in thyme, Thomas, Thames (Eng.), Esther, and, with ph, in phthisic. It is commonly silent in isthmus and asthma.

U

§ 85. ū as in ūse, pūre, cūbe, mū'sic, hū'man, etc., commonly called "long u," is the name sound of the letter u in modern English. The sound varies considerably, not only with different speakers, but also in the pronunciation of the same person, according to its position with reference to other sounds. The main element of ū is always the sound of oo (fōōd), which in a full pronunciation of the ū is preceded by the sound of y (yes). In certain positions the initial element becomes ī (ill), often so much lightened as to be scarcely audible, and in some positions disappears altogether, leaving simply oo (see § 86).

At the beginning of a syllable, as in use, un'ion, disun'ion, etc., the initial element of the ū is y (yes), the ū in such cases sounding the same as you. Otherwise the y element comes in most clearly after p, b, m, v, f, c "hard" (= k), and g "hard" (as in go); as in pure, bu'reau, beauty, mute, view (vū), fu'tile, cube, ague. After n, it is less prominent, often becoming ī (ill); as in new (nū), num'ber-ous. After d, l (except as below, § 86), s, t, and th, as in duke, lute, suit, as-sume', time, enthu'si-asm, the y sound comes in with more difficulty, and the initial element usually becomes ī, but is not, however, properly entirely omitted.

The sound (ū) has various equivalents in the ordinary spelling, as in beauty, feud, pew, ewe, lieu, view, cue, suit, yule, yew, you.

§ 86. After r, as in rude (rōōd), true (trōō), u is now pronounced as simple oo in the best usage. The same is true of the u after the sound of sh, as in sure (shōōr), chute (shōōt), and, usually, after l preceded by another consonant, as in blue (blōō), flute (flōōt), and after j, as in ju'ry (jōō'ri).

§ 87. ū as in ū-nite', val'ū-a-ble, etc., is a modification of ū, in unaccented syllables. It differs from ū by taking for the final and main element the sound of oo (fōōt).

A preceding t tends to assimilate with the y or i element of the ū, the two together forming a more or less clear ch sound; as in na'ture, pic'ture, nat'ū-ral. A preceding d in like manner tends to assimilate with the y or i element, the two forming a more or less clear j sound; as in ver'dure, grad'ū-al. The pronunciation of such words with ch and j, though common, is considered colloquial, and they are marked in this Dictionary with a tie bar connecting the t or d with the following ū; as in na'ture (nā'tūre), nat'ū-ral (nā'tū-rāl). The tendency to assimilation is thus shown, and the pronunciation with the sounds of ch and j, as nā'chur, nāch'ū-ral, ver'jur (with n pronounced as oo, often obscured to ē in ev'ēr) may be considered allowable in colloquial speech. A preceding s in a syllable not initial (as in cen'sure, sen'su-al) commonly takes an sh sound, and a preceding z or a voiced s (as in az'ure, lei'sure, cas'ū-al) a zh sound. The preceding s usually remains unchanged in initial, and sometimes in medial, syllables; as in su-preme', con'su-lar, etc. But in su'gar (shōōg'ēr), sure (shōōr), and their derivatives the assimilation occurs.

§ 88. ū as in ūrn, ūrge, hūrl, etc., varies somewhat with different speakers and as occurring in different positions. The sound (ū) occurs in standard English only in syllables under some degree of accent, and before r in the same syllable (but not when the r is doubled, as in hūr'ry; except in derivatives, as fūr'ry).

Orthopists have long divided words containing this sound (ū) into two groups, one typified by such words as her, fern, bird, etc., the other by urn, burn, etc., and have considered those of the first group to have a sound produced somewhat further forward in the mouth than is that of the second. But the great majority of English-speaking people do not make the distinction. Most phoneticians of the present day regard the words of both groups as having the same sound, and no distinction is made in this Dictionary. In articulating this sound the tongue lies nearly flat in the mouth, neither front nor back articulation predominating, but it is tenser than for ē in mak'ēr (§ 27).

The sound (ū) is variously represented in the ordinary spelling, otherwise than by u; as in fern, earn, bird, word, journal, worthy, myrrh, etc.

§ 89. ū as in ūp, ūs, ūn'der, etc., is called "short u." The sound is formed with the tongue in nearly the same position as for ē in ev'ēr (§ 27), but slightly retracted and tenser. The vowel sometimes occurs unaccented, as in the prefix un-, but otherwise is usually more or less obscured in pronunciation when unaccented. (See § 90.)

The sound (ū) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in son, does, blood, to-uch, etc.

§ 90. ū as in cir'cus, sūb-mit', etc., is a variation of ū (§ 89), occurring unaccented. In formal speech it is often given as ū, but ordinarily it is lightened and obscured, readily falling into the sound of ē in ev'ēr (§ 27). The usual colloquial lightening is indicated by making the u italic (ū).

The ou in pi'ous, etc., oi in por'poise, eo in dun'geon, etc., the final element of the eo in right'eous, etc., and of io in gra'cious, etc., and the o in at'om, irk'some, na'tion, etc., also have this sound. (Cf. § 65.)

§ 91. ū as in French menu (mē-nū'), German grün, etc., occurs only in foreign loan words not yet naturalized. The French sound may be imitated by firmly rounding the lips as if to pronounce oo (mōōn), and then, while holding the lips in this position, pronouncing ē (ēve). The German sound is in some words the same as the French, in others it is approximately ī (īll) pronounced with somewhat less rounding of the lips.

§ 92. U as in bull, put, push, etc., has the same sound as oo in fōōt (§ 69), and is indicated by oo in the respelling; thus, bull (bōōl), push (pōōsh). The u in su'gar (shōōg'ēr) also takes this sound after the sound of sh. This sound of u occurs unaccented in the syllable ful; as in joy'ful, ful-fill', etc. After r, as in fru-gal'i-ty, the unaccented sound often becomes oo, but usually, in deliberate speech, retains more of the quality of oo.

§ 93. A silent u often occurs after g, which is then always "hard" (as in go); as in guard, guess, plague. For u silent after q, see § 74.

§ 94. U with consonant value, equivalent to w, often occurs after q or hard g (go) and before another vowel, as in qual'i-ty, quite, ques'tion, gua'no, lan'guage, etc.; also after s, as per-suade', suite, etc.

V

§ 95. V as in vain, ever, live, etc., is the voiced labiodental open consonant, correlative of f, from which it differs only in being uttered with voice, or vocal tone. (See § 35.)

W

§ 96. W as in we, wet, dwarf, twin, etc., is a voiced labial open consonant (i. e., consonant pronounced with the lips brought close together so as to cause friction, but not complete stoppage, of the voiced, or intoned, breath). The sound is produced with so little audible friction as closely to resemble a vowel, and is classed as a semivowel. It has a close relationship to oo and ōo, the highest and closest of the "back" vowels (§§ 68, 69). A slight further elevation of the tongue from the oo position, or an increase in the force of utterance, produces the consonantal friction of w. Thus for w, as for oo, there is not only rounding of the lips, but also a constriction between the back of the tongue and the palate. The w, therefore, has two places of articulation, and is a back, or guttural, as well as a labial (labioguttural) consonant, though commonly classed as a labial.

§ 97. When not silent or forming part of a diphthong, w is always followed by a vowel. Its sound is sometimes represented by u before a vowel, as in quail, lan'guage (§ 94). After a vowel in the same syllable, the w either forms a diphthong with the vowel, as in cow, town, few; or is silent, as in glow, mow, sometimes determining the vowel sound, as in awe, law. W is silent before r in the same syllable, as in wring, wrote, etc.; also in answer, sword, toward, two, and in who, whom, whoop, etc.

Wh

§ 98. Wh as in when, what, which, is usually pronounced as h + a voiceless w, no voice, or vocal tone, being heard until the beginning of the following vowel. By some it is regarded simply as a voiceless (surd) w. In this Dictionary it is indicated by the respelling hw, which represents the usually accepted sound.

§ 99. The voiceless (surd) sound of x, as in box, wax, ex-claim', etc., is equivalent to ks, by which it is represented in the respelling. This, the commoner sound of x, occurs usually in accented syllables, or when the x is followed by a sounded consonant. In such words as anx'ious, lux'u-ry, the s component of the x takes the sound of sh by assimilation with the following sound of i or y (§§ 47, 87).

§ 100. The voiced (sonant) sound of x, as in ex-ist', ex-alt', ex-haust', ex-hib'it, etc., is equivalent to gz, by which it is represented in the respelling. The x usually takes this sound when unaccented and followed by an accented syllable beginning with a vowel or a silent h.

§ 101. When initial in a word or syllable, x has the sound of z (zeal); as in xan'thic, xe'bec, etc.

Y

§ 102. Y as a consonant (as in yes), with which value it is invariably used in the respelling, is a voiced (sonant) palatal fricative (i.e., consonant pronounced with a passage between the blade of the tongue and the palate narrow enough to cause audible friction of the voiced, or intoned, breath). The friction of y, however, is slight. In pronouncing consonant y, the tongue has nearly the same position as for e (§ 21), but is raised slightly and more of it is involved in forming the constricted passage. The sound is sometimes represented by i (§ 47), and also, less often, by e (§ 31). Y, consonant, occurs usually at the beginning of a syllable; at the end or in the middle, it is more often a vowel. (Cf. § 104.)

§ 103. As a vowel, y has four sounds: (a) y = ī, as in de-fy', style, hy-e'na; (b) y = i, as in nymph, lyr'ic, pit'y (also ey final, as in hon'ey, mon'key); (c) y = ū, as in myrrh, myr'tle; (d) y = ē, as in zeph'yr, etc. The y, therefore, as a vowel, has all the sounds of i, except ē as in pique (pēk). These sounds of y are replaced in the respelling by the various equivalents as here given.

§ 104. Y is classed with w as a semivowel, because of its use, in the ordinary spelling, both as a consonant and as a vowel, but it differs from w in that it often is the only vowel in a syllable; as in my, sky, my'th, etc. They is also interchangeable with i in diphthongs and digraphs, which usually have the y when final; as, ai, ay; ei, ey; oi, oy.

Z

§ 105. Z as in zeal, fro'zen, diz'zy, etc., is ordinarily a voiced (sonant) dental fricative, the voiced correlative of "sharp" s (§ 77). The sound is often represented, in the ordinary spelling, by s (§ 78); rarely, by c (§ 13).

§ 106. In some words z, by assimilation with a following i or y sound, takes a sound (zh) which is the voiced (sonant) correlative of sh (§ 81); as in az'ure, sei'zure, etc. (Cf. §§ 47, 87.) The same sound is represented by si in fu'sion, etc. (§ 80); by ti, exceptionally, in the preferred pronunciation of tran-si'tion; and by g in rouge, etc. (§ 38).

SOUNDS CLASSIFIED ACCORDING TO PLACE OR MANNER OF FORMATION

VOWEL SOUNDS

	Back	Mixed	Front
High	ōo (fōōd) ōō (fōōt)		ē (ēve) ī (īll)	High
Mid	ō (ōld) ä (ärt)	ē (evēr) ū (ūp)	ā (āle) ē (mān)	Mid
Low	ō (ōrb) ō (nōt)	û (tūrn)	â (câre) ä (mān)	Low

EXPLANATIONS: "Front" vowels are such as are pronounced with the front of the tongue more or less raised toward the palate, forming a place of constriction at the front of the mouth. "Back" vowels are such as are pronounced with the back of the tongue similarly more or less raised toward the palate at the back of the mouth. "Mixed" vowels are those in which neither "front" nor "back" articulation predominates. "High," "mid," and "low" refer to the "height" of the tongue, that is, its relative distance from the palate at the place of constriction, the raising and lowering of the tongue being accompanied by raising and lowering of the lower jaw.

NOTES: <sup>1</sup> See §§ 96, 98. <sup>2</sup> See § 75. <sup>3</sup> ch (chop) and j (jet) are compound consonants, equivalent respectively to tsh and dzh (§§ 16, 48), and the place of formation for each therefore shifts during its pronunciation, beginning with that of t or d and moving into that of sh or zh, the latter, however, being, in the most characteristic. So, also, x (§ 99) combines the positions of k (or g) and s. <sup>4</sup> The place of formation for k and g varies widely according to the vowel which precedes or follows, as in key or gim'let, call or go, but the sounds are usually classed as gutturals, or velars.

EXPLANATIONS: "Voiced" consonants, or sonants, are consonants pronounced with voice, or vocal tone. "Voiceless" consonants, or surds, are consonants that are uttered with breath only, without voice, or vocal tone. "Stopped" consonants, or stops, are consonants in the pronunciation of which the voice or breath is completely stopped momentarily at some point in the mouth passage. "Open" consonants are those in the pronunciation of which, though the passage is more or less impeded, the voice or breath issues through the mouth or nose with no complete stoppage, or break.

ASSIMILATION OF SOUNDS

§ 107. When a voiced (sonant) consonant and a voiceless (surd) consonant come together in the same syllable, it is often difficult to preserve each in its regular sound. Thus, in cats the voiceless s is easily pronounced after the voiceless t, but in dogs the s takes more naturally its voiced sound (= z) after the voiced sound g. Such conformation of one sound to another, called assimilation, is a marked characteristic of English. Four common inflectional terminations come under its influence; namely: (1) Possessives in s, as maid's (mādz). (2) Plurals in s, as tubs (tūbz), groves (grōvz). (3) S in the third person singular of verbs, as loads (lōdz), smooths (smōōthz). (4) Pret-erits and participles in d preceded by e mute, as in dashed (dāshd). Usually, it is the second consonant that is assimilated to the first, but in some cases it is the reverse, as in spasm (spāz'm), prism (prīz'm). Assimilation is sometimes reflected in the ordinary spelling, as in leapt, spelt, etc., instead of leaped, spelled, etc. For other forms of assimilation see §§ 13, 31, 47, 79, 80, 87, 99, 106.

DUPLICATION OF CONSONANTS

§ 108. In many words, a consonant is doubled between two vowels, in the ordinary spelling, although in pronunciation it is sounded but once. In banner, for example, it is possible to utter two complete n sounds only by pronouncing ban, then intermitting the voice entirely, opening the organs, and closing them a second time. But as the word is ordinarily pronounced the vocal organs are closed only once between the first and second syllables, and, moreover, the n position is not held long enough to produce the acoustic effect of a doubled sound. Hence, in all such cases, when a consonant is doubled in the ordinary spelling, to indicate that a preceding vowel is short, as in banner, robbing, madden, letter, horrid, it is represented by the single consonant in the respelling for pronunciation.

In many derived words, however, in which the primitive ends or begins with the same letter as that with which an added suffix or a prefix of English origin respectively begins or ends, as in soulless, fouly, keenness, misstep, outravel, unnatural, the position of the doubled consonant is held long enough to make upon the ear the impression of a doubled consonant, though there rarely is any actual pause or break between the two consonant sounds. The same effect occurs in compound words in which the second part begins with the same sound as that with which the first part ends, as in headdress, nighttime. In all such cases as those mentioned in this paragraph, the consonant is written twice in the respelling.

ACCENT

§ 109. Accent (stress) is a special articulative effort distinguishing certain syllables of words or phrases from the others by a greater distinctness and loudness of pronunciation. There are various degrees of accent, only two of which need be marked. These are the primary, as in in-tend', where the full force of the voice is on the last syllable, and the secondary, as in su'per-in-tend', where the first syllable has a stress greater than that laid on the second and third syllables, but less than that laid on the last. In some words two subordinate accents are shown, as in in-com/pre-hen/si-bil'i-ty. While there are no fixed rules for English accent, the following general principles may be mentioned:

(1) English accent is recessive; that is, the general tendency of the language is to carry the chief accent back toward or to the first syllable. The working of this principle is seen in such words as bal/co-ny, formerly bal-co'ny, con/fis-cate, v., formerly, and still by some, con-fis'cate, etc. Often, the struggle between this principle and former usage is reflected in varying present usage, as in ad-ver-tize and ad-ver-tize', il'lus-trate and il-lus'trate, etc.

(2) The general tendency of accent, whether primary or secondary, is to shorten all vowels but u, when further back than the penultimate syllable, as in ten'ement, at'om'ical, per'son'ification, etc. (though we say lu'bricate, not lub'ricate; su'perabun'dant, not sup'erabun'dant, etc.). This tendency generally fails if the first of the two following syllables ends, and the second begins, with a vowel; as in pe'ri-od, o'ri-en'tal, etc.

(3) In many adjectives, as red'-hot, un-armed', etc., the accent is often variable, being stronger on one syllable or the other according to the rhythm of the sentence. Thus we say, a red'-hot stove; but, the stove is red'-hot!; a man un-armed!; but, usually, an un'armed man, etc. Such shifting, or variable, accent was formerly more common than at present, and there are many examples of it in the poets. The attributive use, as in a well'bred' man, being the more usual and characteristic one, the accent proper to such use is the one usually given in the dictionary.

(4) Many in America give a marked secondary accent in certain words which properly have but one accent, and that on a syllable preceding the penult, as in ter'ri-to'ry, circum-stanc'es, in'ter-est'ing, etc. This fault may be corrected by giving the accented syllable a sharp percussion, which carries the voice lightly through the rest of the word.

RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION OF LATIN

Two methods of pronouncing Latin are now in extended general English use; one, the so-called English method, follows in general the analogies of English pronunciation according to certain formal rules; the other, the so-called Roman method, attempts to follow more or less closely, as far as it is known, the pronunciation of the Romans themselves at the height of their civilization (about B. C. 50 to A. D. 50).

The English method was until recently taught in both England and America, and is still used almost exclusively in the pronunciation of Latin scientific words, and in names, phrases, and quotations, when these are in English context. Since most of the Latin words and phrases contained in the Dictionary fall in one or another of these categories, their pronunciation is indicated according to the English method.

SYLLABICATION AND ACCENT OF LATIN WORDS

Every Latin word has as many syllables as it has vowels or diphthongs. In the English method, words are syllabified according to English analogies. In the Roman method, words are syllabified as follows: (a) A single consonant (including consonant l and v) or, by many, any consonant group (as sp, st, gn) that can begin a word, when between two vowels is written and pronounced with the following vowel. Doubled consonants are separated. Examples:

mi/li-tes, de'ti-net. Some carry over an x to the following syllable, as in dix'it; but the division dix'i't is, on the whole, to be preferred. (b) Prefixes and suffixes are kept separate.

Words of two syllables are accented on the first syllable; as, pa'ter, mi'tes. Words of more than two syllables are accented on the penult (next to the last syllable), if it is long; otherwise they are accented on the antepenult (last syllable but two).

NOTE. No attempt is made to cover the rules for determining the quantities of Latin vowels and syllables. A complete statement of these is to be found in any Latin grammar. The proper accentuation is indicated for all Latin words and phrases. In accordance with most present usage, Latin words and phrases which are considered to be purely such are divided into syllables according to the Roman method, and further indication of the pronunciation is usually omitted, except that when such division would lead to mispronunciation of any word according to the English method, the pronunciation of the word according to that method is shown; as, non de'ti-net (dēt'ī-nēt). For those who prefer to pronounce such Latin quotations according to the Roman method, the syllabification as indicated, together with the Rules for the "Roman" Pronunciation of Latin given later, will be a sufficient guide.

RULES FOR THE ENGLISH PRONUNCIATION OF LATIN

Syllabic division, as forming a basis for these rules, follows the English method; thus, det/i-net, etc., and not de/ti-net, as now commonly divided. Cf. Note, above.

1. Vowels, when ending accented syllables, have always the sounds as in aile, éve, ice, ôld, ùse; as, pâ/ter, hō/mo, etc.

When final in unaccented syllables, vowels are as follows: A has the sound of â in so/fâ; as, mu'sa (mū'sâ), a-cer/bus (â-sêr'būs).

E, o, and u have nearly the same sound as when accented, but slightly shorter; as, rē/tē, vō/lō, pō/pu-li (pōp'ū-li).

I, when the final sound of a word, always has its long sound (as in ice); as, nī/stī. Exception: The final i of tibi and sibi has, like the first i, its short sound (as in it).

I, at the end of an unaccented syllable, not final, has its short sound; as, de/ti-net. Exception: I has its long sound in the first syllable of a word the second syllable of which is accented, when it either stands alone before a consonant, as in i-dō/lum, or ends a syllable followed by a vowel, as in fi-ē/bam, fām/bus.

Y is always pronounced like i in the same position.

2. Vowels, when followed by a consonant in the same syllable, have always the sounds as in mân, mêt, in, ôdd, nūt; as, mág'nus, rēg'num, hōc, etc. Exceptions: -

A, following qu before dr, has the sound of a in quad-rant, as in quad'rans (kwōd'rânz); when followed by r it has the sound of a in quart, as in quar'ter. Otherwise, a before r has the sound of a in art, as in par'ticeps, arma; except when followed by another r, as in pâ'rri-cida.

E, i, and y, before r final in a word or final in a syllable, when followed in the next syllable by any other consonant than another r, sound as in her, fir; as, fer'vet (fêr'vet), hir'cus (hîr'kūs).

Es, at the end of a word, sounds like the English word ease; as, mi'l'i-tes (mîl'i-têz).

O, at the end of plural cases, sounds like ose in dose; as, do'mi-nos (dōm'i-nōs).

Post, alone or compounded, is pronounced like post in English, as in post'e-a; but not in its derivatives, as in pôs-tre'mus.

3. Diphthongs are as follows:

Æ (ae) and œ (oe) are always diphthongs unless separated by diæresis. They are pronounced as e would be in the same position; as, æ'vum (ê'vūm), œz (êz).

Au, when a diphthong, is pronounced as ô (ôr); as, au-rum (ô'rîm).

Au, in the termination of proper names from the Greek, has the vowels pronounced separately; as, Men'e-lâ'us.

ai, ei, oi, and yi, usually have the vowels pronounced separately. When they are accented, and followed by another vowel, the i is pronounced like initial y; as, Cassiopeia (pê'yâ), Troia (trō'yâ), Harpyia (pî'yâ).

Ei, when a diphthong, and not followed by another vowel, is pronounced like i; as in ei-do'lon.

Eu, when a diphthong, is pronounced as ū (ûse); as in Eu-phrâ'tes, e'heu.

Eu has the letters pronounced separately in the terminations eus and eum of Latin nouns and adjectives, except neuter; as, me'um, me'us. Otherwise it is pronounced as a diphthong; as, Eu-rō'pâ (û-rō'pâ), The'seus (thê'sūs).

NOTE. The termination eus, in proper names derived from the third declension of Greek contracts in -eus, is better pronounced in one syllable, as Or'pheus (ôr'fūs), The'seus (thê'sūs); although many pronounce it in two, Or'phe-us, The'se-us.

Ua, ue, ui, uo, uu, when diphthongs, are pronounced like wa, we, etc.; as, lin'gua (lîn'gwâ), quo'ta (kwō'tâ), e'quus (ê'kwūs), etc. They are always diphthongs after g and usually after g.

Ui in cui and huic is pronounced like i (ki, hik); or, by some, like wî (kwî, hwîk).

4. Consonants are, in general, pronounced as in English, but the following cases are to be noted:

C, before e, i, and y, and the diphthongs æ, œ, and eu, is pronounced as s; as in Cæ'sar, cœ'lum. Exception: C, ending or following an accented syllable, before i followed by a vowel, and also before eu and yo, has the sound of sh; as, fa'ci-as (fâ'shî-âs), Sî'cy-on (sî'shî'on).

Ch has the sound of k, as in char'ta (kâr'tâ), but before th at the beginning of a word it is silent; as, Chtho'ni-a (thō'nî-â).

Ct, initial, in words of Greek origin, is pronounced as t; as, cte-nid'i-um (tê-nîd'i-ŭm).

G is pronounced "soft" (like j) before e, i, and y, and the diphthongs œ and œ; as, ge'nus (jê'nūs), æ'gis (ê'jîs). Otherwise it has its "hard" sound (as in bag, go).

When g comes before another g "soft," it is assimilated to it in pronunciation; as, Ag'ger (âj'êr).

Gn, initial, in words of Greek origin, is pronounced as n; as, gno'mon (nō'mōn).

Mn, initial, in words of Greek origin, is pronounced as n; as, Mue-mos'y-ne (nê-mōs'î-nê).

Ph is usually pronounced as f. Before th at the beginning of a word it is usually silent; as, phthi'sis (thî'sîs).

Ps, initial, in words of Greek origin, is pronounced as s; as, psy-cho'sis (sî-kō'sîs).

Pt, initial, in words of Greek origin, is pronounced as t; as, pter'o-dac'tyl (têr'ô-dâk'tîl).

S is usually "sharp" (as in sun). Exceptions: (a) Si, followed by a vowel and immediately preceded by a consonant in an accented syllable, is pronounced as sh; as, Al'si-um (âl'shî-ŭm). (b) Si and zi, followed by a vowel and immediately preceded by an accented vowel, are pronounced zhi; as, ec-cle'si-a (ê-kî-ê'zhî-â), Sa-ba'zi-a (sâ-bâ'zhî-â).

In a few proper names, s preceded by a vowel in an accented syllable and followed by i before another vowel, has the sound of sh; as, Asia (â'shî-â), Theodosia (thê'ô-dô'shî-â).

S, final in a word, after e, æ, au, b, m, n, and r, has the sound of z; as, mi'les (mî'lêz), æs (êz), laus (lôz), lens (lênz), Mars (mârz). In accordance with English analogy, s is pronounced as z in Cæ'sar, cœ-su'ra (usually), mi'ser, mu'sa, re-sid'u-um, cau'sa, ro'sa, and their derivatives, and in some other words; but not (usually) in Cæsarea, nor in trans or its compounds; as, trans'e-at.

T, following an accented syllable and preceding an i followed by another vowel, sounds like sh; as, ra'ti-o (râ'shî-ô; -shô), Ig-na'ti-us (îg-nâ'shî-ŭs; -shŭs). But t in such positions retains its sound as in English tin after s, t, or x, as in Sal-us'ti-us, Brut'ti-i; and in proper names ending in -tion or -tyon, as in The'o-do'ti-on, Am-phi'ty-on.

X, initial, has the sound of z, as in Xan'thi-um (zân'thî-ŭm), Xen'o-phon; otherwise it has the sound of ks, as in ax'is (âk'sîs), ex'e-unt. Exceptions: When ex (also by some ux) is followed by a vowel in an accented syllable, the x has the sound of gz; as, ex-em-plum (êg-zê'm'plŭm).

X, final in a syllable, before i followed by another vowel, or before u with the sound of ū or ũ, is pronounced as ksh; as, nox'ti-us (nôk'shî-ŭs).

Y, initial, has the sound of y, as in Xan'thi-um (zân'thî-ŭm), Xen'o-phon; otherwise it has the sound of ks, as in ax'is (âk'sîs), ex'e-unt. Exceptions: When ex (also by some ux) is followed by a vowel in an accented syllable, the x has the sound of gz; as, ex-em-plum (êg-zê'm'plŭm).

X, final in a syllable, before i followed by another vowel, or before u with the sound of ū or ũ, is pronounced as ksh; as, nox'ti-us (nôk'shî-ŭs).

RULES FOR THE "ROMAN" PRONUNCIATION OF LATIN

There are no silent letters and no obscured vowels. Each vowel has always the same, or nearly the same, sound, but may be long or short in actual quantity.

The vowels are sounded as follows:

Long.	Short.
a, as in art.	a, as in ar-tis'tic.
e, ,, a in pale or cha'os.	e, ,, a in cha-ot'ic, or as e in pen.
i, ,, in pō-lice'.	i, as in tin.
o, ,, ,, pole.	o, ,, ,, o-bey'.
u, ,, ,, rude (rōōd).	u, ,, ,, pull (pōōl).
y, ,, French u or German ii.

The diphthongs are sounded:

Æ (ae) as ai in aisle; au as ou in house; ei as ei in veil; eu as a'oo; oi (oe) as oi in oil; ui as wê, as in cui (kwê), huic (hwêk).

The consonants:

B, d, f, h, k, l, m, n, p, and qu are pronounced as in English; except that bs and bt are pronounced as ps and pt.

C always as in cow; never as in city or in gracious (-shŭs). Cf. l.

Ch as k + h, about as in truck horse; but it may be pronounced as simple k.

G always "hard," as in go; never as in gem. When ngu precedes a vowel, the gu has the sound of gw; as in languens.

J is like y in yes.

Ph as p + h, about as in loophole; but it may be pronounced as simple p or like English ph (f), a sound which it acquired soon after the classical period.

R is trilled slightly with the tip of the tongue.

S always "sharp," as in sun.

Su as sw; as in suavitas.

T always as in tun; never as in nation (-shŭn).

Th as t + h, about as in hothouse; but it may be pronounced as simple t.

V like w.

X always as in box; never as in ex-ist' (êg-zîst'), or in xe'bec (zê'bêk).

Z as in maze, or as dz in adz.

RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION OF SPANISH

1. Vowels: A as in art, e as a in ale, i as in police, o as in old (or as in lord), u as in rule = oo in noon. When unaccented they are the same in quality, but slightly shorter in quantity, though always pronounced clearly and distinctly.

2. Consonants: As in English, with the following exceptions:

B, especially between vowels, sounds much like v in have, hence b and v are often interchanged and such spellings as Habana, Havana, are common.

C in Castilian Spanish (the standard literary form of the language) before e or i is like th in thin; but in some parts of Spain and generally throughout Spanish America and in the Philippine Islands it is like s in sun, although the Castilian sound is often taught in the schools.

Ch is always like ch in church.

D is not so clear as in English, but has more or less of the sound of th in this. Between vowels, especially in endings like -ado and -ido, and at the end of words, it is like th in this. At the end of words it is often so faint as hardly to be heard, and in colloquial speech it often disappears entirely in this position and between vowels.

G before a, o, u, or a consonant is like g in go; before e or i it is like h in hew pronounced with strong friction of the breath, about like German ch in ich, ach. Gu in the combinations gue and gui is like g in go, or like gu in English guess. If the u is marked with the dieresis (Sp. crema), as in agüero, the gü is like gu in guano (gwä'nō), as is gu in the combinations gua and guo. In gn the two sounds are always distinct, as in signo (sīg'nō).

H is always silent.

J has always the strong sound of h like that of g before e and i.

Ll is like ll in William, as villa (vĕl'yä). Colloquially it is like y in yes, and this pronunciation is very common in Spanish words and names in the southwestern United States.

ñ is like ni in onion, as doña (dō'nyä).

Q occurs only in the combinations que and qui, and is like k in keep, as Quijote (kĕ-hō'tä).

R is strongly trilled with the tip of the tongue.

S is always like s in sun.

X formerly had the sound of Spanish j, in many words and names in which it is replaced by j in the modern spelling of the Spanish Academy. In the spelling of the Academy it now represents the sound of x as in box, but the old spelling and sound often remain, esp. in Spanish America. In Mexican names x often has the sound of s, and in some dialects is silent or nearly so.

Y is like y in you, or, at the end of a word after a vowel or when used alone as the conjunction y (and), it is like e in me.

Z in Castilian Spanish is like th in thin, but in parts of Spain, in Spanish America, and in the Philippine Islands it is commonly like s in sun, although the Castilian sound is often taught in the schools.

3. Accent. Words ending in a consonant, except n or s, are regularly accented on the final syllable. Words ending in a vowel, or in n or s, are regularly accented on the next to the last syllable. If the accent is irregular it is indicated by placing the mark (´) over the vowel of the accented syllable, as in Córdoba (Cordova).

ADDITIONAL SYMBOLS FOR USE IN INDICATING PRONUNCIATION WITHOUT REPELLING

For indicating PRONUNCIATION BY REPELLING, the table on page viii. is complete in itself and is alone used throughout this Dictionary. To indicate PRONUNCIATION WITHOUT REPELLING, the table below may be used in connection with that on page viii. The table here given is to be used only when any letter of a word has a sound that is represented in the other table by a different letter. Thus, in the respelling, s is used for one sound only, that in sin or so, never for that in his (hiz), is (iz). To show the pronunciation of his, therefore, without respelling, the s is marked with a diacritic; thus: hiſ; the first two letters (hi) being from the table on page viii., and the ſ from the table below. In this table, the symbols in parentheses are the equivalent symbols from the respelling table.

In digraphs, mark only the letter that is to be regarded as sounded, as in breäk, bréad, yiæld, veill, etc. Ce, ci, sci, se, si, and ti, before a vowel and immediately after an accented syllable, usually have the sound of sh, and need not be marked. Silent e at the end of a syllable, as in fate, etc., need not be marked. When desirable, a silent letter may be shown as an unmarked italic. In a few words, the pronunciation can be indicated only by respelling.

ORTHOGRAPHY

The English language, as being the offspring of two parent languages very different in form and spirit, and having been in no inconsiderable degree modified in its growth by influences from various other tongues, contains, as was inevitable, very many anomalies; and in no particular are these anomalies more numerous and striking than in its orthography, with the single exception, perhaps, of its orthoëpy. Neither the Anglo-Saxon nor the Norman-French could boast of any great regularity in orthography, though writers in either of these two languages spelled their words, each in his own fashion, so as to represent their sounds, and not according to an arbitrarily fixed orthography such as exists for modern English. When, therefore, the vocabularies of these two languages, widely different both in their orthographical structure and their phonological character, were combined, the result is a language in which the orthography has almost reached the extreme of irregularity. To such an extent, in fact, have the signs representing sounds been multiplied, that many of the letters are pronounced in several different ways, while the letters, or combinations of letters, for a single sound amount, in some cases, to scores. Indeed, it is computed that many words of no more than two syllables may be spelled in several thousand different modes, by the use of combinations actually employed in other words in the language. The word scissors, for instance, may be thus written, as is computed by Ellis, in nearly six thousand different ways. Of course, comparatively very few of these possible forms of spelling are ever employed in the case of any one word; yet the causes of disorder mentioned above have operated so effectually, that the words in respect to which even the most careful writers are at variance are numbered by thousands, while those in which an orthography contrary to analogy has been universally adopted are equally numerous.

Bad as is the orthography of the present day, however, it is order itself compared with that of a few centuries ago. It would, of course, be unreasonable to expect that there should be any general correspondence of orthographical forms in the works of different authors before the types of the printer gave prominence to certain forms, which finally became recognized as standards; and manuscripts conclusively prove that the greatest freedom prevailed in spelling words. Even proper names, which would naturally receive more attention and be written with more care than any other class of words, are found recorded in great multitudes of forms, several variations being sometimes found in the same manuscript or work. Disraeli states that "Leicester has subscribed his own name eight different ways," and that "the name Villers is spelled fourteen different ways in the deeds of that family." A still more remarkable instance is stated by Lower; namely, that the family of Mainwaring has the extraordinary number of one hundred and thirty-one variations of that single name, all drawn from authorized documents. But there is evidence that, in the midst of all this confusion, there were some writers who were attentive to the proper forms of words, and who were notable exceptions to the general rule. The spelling of the Ormulum, which was written in the thirteenth century, though strange and cumbrous, is very remarkable for its regularity; and the author strenuously urges his copyists to follow his orthography with the utmost exactness. So also Chaucer, more than a century later, carefully revised and corrected his own works; and he enjoined upon his scribe to "write more trew" that which was intrusted to him, saying that he was obliged "it to correct and eke to rubbe and scrape," because of the carelessness with which it had been copied.

The invention of printing commenced a new era, though for a long time even this had little effect to fix the external form of the language. Indeed, much of the perverse orthography of books printed two or three centuries ago is to be attributed to the printer, who often inserted or expunged letters as the length of the lines or convenience of spacing required. It is no uncommon thing to find, in the works of Chaucer, Spenser, and other early writers, or in books printed two or three centuries ago, the same words occurring in several different forms upon the same page. Even as late as the time of Shakespeare, orthography was very unsettled; and, as Halliwell states, the name of the great bard himself was written in more than thirty different ways. The printers, however, were not solely, nor even chiefly, responsible for this confusion; for it is certain that their arbitrary changes and deviations from uniformity would not have been tolerated had they been made in defiance of established usage; and there is abundant evidence to prove that writers themselves were careless in the extreme. The fact must not be overlooked, that in the writings of Wycliffe, Chaucer, and other early authors, there were still many remnants of earlier inflectional forms which have since disappeared, and which gave to some words a variety of form to be attributed neither to the carelessness of the writer, nor to an unsettled orthography.

The irregularities found in early books, though continuing for so long a time, were neither unnoticed nor looked upon with indifference. On the contrary, not only have numerous complete systems for the reformation of orthography been proposed, but various scholars have advocated, with more or less acuteness and learning, changes in regard to a great number of particular points. Sir Thomas Smith, Secretary of State to Queen Elizabeth, endeavored to introduce a regular system of orthography; after him, William Bullokar brought forward another system; a few years after this, Dr. Gill, Master of St. Paul's School, in London, a teacher of considerable eminence, proposed another scheme; and, still later, Charles Butler devised a new method of spelling, and printed a book in which it was employed. These writers agreed essentially as to the manner in which they sought to attain the end proposed, their plan being to reduce the spelling of words to uniform principles and make it practically phonetic, by the use of new characters, by applying various diacritical marks to the old letters, and by making the letters, or their combinations of characters, represent certain definite sounds. It is needless to say that these projects were never carried into practice.

In the time of Charles I., many changes were introduced; and it was still very common, even among eminent scholars, to spell words according to their pronunciation, omitting such letters as were deemed superfluous. These attempts at improvement, being made upon no settled or uniform principles, had little or no permanent effect upon the language.

The celebrated Dictionary of Dr. Samuel Johnson, first published in 1755, has contributed more than any work written either before or since, to fix the external form of the language and to diminish the number of irregularities; for though numerous inconsistencies are to be found in it, and many oversights, the learning of the author, and the sound judgment and practical wisdom which he displayed, gave it at once an authority which it has not even yet entirely lost; and the orthography of the present day, though it has received some important modifications since his time, is substantially the same as that exhibited in his dictionary. The changes in the spelling of words, introduced by Dr. Johnson, were generally made in order to restore the ancient orthography, or to remove some anomaly; and perhaps the most important office performed by his work was its having settled usage definitely in favor of some one of the numerous forms in which many words were written, thus removing the cause of much confusion. Among the most prominent alterations made by him were the restoration of k to many words which had long been written without it, as in musicke, rhetorick, and the like, and the insertion of v in the termination of many words which previously ended in or, as in ancestour, author, errour, and others. The former of these changes, a revival of the "ancient practice," was not received with favor, nor was this spelling adopted by subsequent writers; the latter, as it was thought to be justified by the analogy of the corresponding termination eur in the French, through which language many, perhaps a majority, of the words affected by it were derived from the Latin, was generally followed. Johnson's practice in this respect, however, was not in harmony with his theory; for he wrote only about half the words of this class with the ending our, leaving the rest in or, though for no reason that would not equally apply to them all. Yet this inconsistency was not only overlooked, but was perpetuated, especially in the orthography of English writers. In the United States a different practice now generally prevails, as will presently be mentioned.

During the 18th century, several English divines employed in many words methods of spelling peculiar to themselves, chiefly such as had long been abandoned, as in writing ie for final y; in adding e to words ending in ss; and in the use of such forms as præface, persue, procede, sais (for says), and the like. It is proper to mention here also the innovations of Archdeacon Hare, in the 19th century, who, on the ground of pronunciation, etymology, and analogy, employed in his works such forms as achieve, compell, ensure, flry (for flery), forein, inveiy (for inveigh), highth, ploughman, smugler, and the like. He also advocated the omission of the apostrophe in the possessive case, and the substitution of t for ed in those preterits in which the latter termination is pronounced like t; as in expressed, fixed, published, etc. This substitution of t for ed, however, is not peculiar to Hare, since it accords with the usage of the early writers and of many in later times.

Besides the incomplete reforms mentioned above, many plans have been devised, at different times, for reducing the spelling of words to absolute uniformity and the greatest simplicity, by a complete reform in the method of representing the sounds of words by written characters; that is, by employing a new alphabet in which each sign stands for one, and only one, definite sound, and each sound is represented by one, and only one, character. Such a method of spelling was invented by Dr. Franklin, in the 18th century, though he never brought it to perfection, and scarcely used it, except in a brief correspondence with a friend. The Phonotypy of Isaac Pitman and A. J. Ellis promulgated in 1840, the Glossic of A. J. Ellis published in 1871, the Broad Romanic of Henry Sweet, 1878, are ingenious systems of phonetic spelling employing the ordinary alphabet, with various modifications and additions. None of these has come into any extensive general use. The schemes of Lepsius, Müller, and others who have endeavored to form philosophical alphabets of universal application are but indirectly related to English orthography.

Several organized attempts at a more or less thorough revision of English spelling have been made within recent years. In 1883, the Philological Society of England and the American Philological Association took joint action on the amendment of English spelling, and twenty-four joint rules were adopted, on the basis of which a list of amended spellings was made. Many of these spellings agree with those already adopted in this Dictionary and in general use. The Simplified Spelling Board, in America, and the Simplified Spelling Society, in England, aim at the gradual simplification of English spelling by the reduction to uniformity of classes of words, and the elimination of sporadic anomalies.

In 1828, Dr. Webster published his Dictionary of the English Language, and the changes in spelling advocated by him have had no inconsiderable influence upon orthography, especially in the United States. These alterations were proposed by him chiefly on the ground of etymology and of analogy, from a desire, on the one hand, to make the words correspond, as far as practicable, with their primitive forms, so as to reveal more clearly their etymological affinities, and, on the other, to reduce as much as possible the number of anomalies and exceptional cases. Of the words whose orthography had been changed for the former reason, many were restored to their ordinary forms by Dr. Webster himself in the second edition of his work, published in 1840, and others still were restored in subsequent editions. The alterations of the second class have been received with favor and adopted by a large portion of the writers in the United States, and by some authors also in England.

It is to be observed that many of Dr. Webster's deviations from the usage of his time were not innovations, but restorations of older forms which were once very generally employed. The most important points in his orthography in reference to which there is still difference of usage among scholars, are included in the following list. These are: not doubling the final consonant in derivatives of words like travel, worship, etc.; doubling the l in installment, enrollment, etc.; doubling the final letter in such words as fulfill, instill, etc.; retaining the i in derivatives of villain; writing defense, offense, etc., for defence, offence, etc., and practice for practise; writing the termination -er for -re in words like center, meter, etc.; writing mold, molt, etc., without u. It may be remarked further with regard to words often written with the termination -re, but which in this book are spelled with two endings, -er and -re, that the use of -er, as in meter, etc., is but a restoration of the older spelling; and the same is true of the use of the ending or for -our.

RULES FOR SPELLING CERTAIN CLASSES OF WORDS

FOUNDED ON THE ORTHOGRAPHY OF DR. WEBSTER

FINAL CONSONANTS

§ 1. The letters f and l, at the end of monosyllables, and standing immediately after a single vowel, are generally doubled: as in staff, cliff, doff, puff; all, bell, hill, toll.

EXCEPTIONS: clef, if, of, pal, nil, and sob.

§ 2. The letter s, at the end of a monosyllable, and standing immediately after a single vowel, is generally doubled, as in grass, press, hiss, moss, truss, except when (as in o's, spade's, tones, loves, has, is, was, etc.) it is used to form the possessive case or the plural of a noun, or the third person singular of a verb.

EXCEPTIONS: as, gas, yes, his, this, pus, plus, bus (for omnibus), this, and us.

§ 3. B, d, g, m, n, p, r, t, z are the only other consonants (besides f, l, and s) that are ever doubled at the end of a word. The following are the more important words in which these letters are doubled, including some that are also, sometimes, spelled with a single consonant: abb, ebb; add, odd, radd; egg, bigg (n. & v.), vugg; Ann, inn, Finn, jin, bunn, sunn (Bot.); Lapp; gnarr, parr, err, birr, shirr, skirr, dorr, burr, purr; bitl (Naut.), mill, butl; fizz, frizz, buzz, fuzz. The words let, net, set, etc. are sometimes incorrectly spelled lett, nett, sett, etc.

§ 4. A consonant is rarely doubled when standing at the end of a word immediately after a diphthong or a digraph, as in ail, peat, haul, door, and main.

EXCEPTIONS: feoff, cnfeoff, gneiss, speiss are exceptions. The word guess is only an apparent exception, as the u does not form a diphthong or a digraph with the e, but serves merely to indicate that the g is "hard."

§ 5. Monosyllables ending with the sound of k, and in which c follows the vowel, have, generally, k added after the c; as in black, fleck, click, knock, and buck.

EXCEPTIONS: sac, talc, zinc, roc, soc, arc, marc, orc, disc, and fusc.

Words of more than one syllable, ending in -ic or -iac, are now written (except derrick) without the k; as, maniac, elegiac, zodiac, cubic, music, public. Words of more than one syllable, in which c is preceded by other vowels than i or ia, commonly end in ck; as, arrack, barrack, hammock, hillock, wedlock.

EXCEPTIONS: almanac, sandarac, rebec, zebec, maniac, havoc. Almanac, rebec, and havoc, however, are sometimes written with k after the c, especially in England.

DERIVATIVES

§ 6. Words ending in c have a k inserted when adding a termination beginning with e, i, or y, so that the c shall not be pronounced like s; as, colic, colicky; traffic, trafficked, trafficking, trafficker; physic, physicked, physicking; zinc, zinned, zinking, zinky.

§ 7. Final consonant doubled. Monosyllables and words of more than one syllable with the accent on the last syllable, when ending in a single consonant (except h and z) preceded by a single vowel, double the consonant before a suffix beginning with a vowel; as, clan, clan'nish; plan, planned, plan'nine, plan'ner; bag, bag'gage; hot, hot'ter, hot'test; wit, wit'ty; cabal, cabal'ler; abet, abet'ted, abet'ting, abet'tor; begin, begin'nine, begin'ner; infer, infer'ed, infer'ring. The consonant is doubled to preserve the short sound of the vowel. Thus, planned, hottest, and abetted, would naturally be pronounced plāned, hōtest, and abēted, if the consonant were not doubled. Words in which the final consonant is preceded by qu, followed by a single vowel, form no exception to this rule, since the u is equivalent to consonant w; as, squab, squab'bish, squab'by; squat, squat'ting, squat'ter; quit, quit'ted, quit'ting; acquit, acquit'ted, acquit'ting.

EXCEPTIONS: Derivatives of the word gas (except gas'ing and gas'sy); as, gas'eous, gas'e'ity, gas'ify; the words infer'able and transfer'able; also, derivatives in which the accent of the primitive is thrown back upon another syllable; as, cabal, cab'alism, cab'alist; prefer, preference; refer, reference; defer, deference. It is no exception to this rule that cancellor, and the derivatives of metal and crystal (words not accented on the last syllable), as metal'loid, metallurgy, crystal'line, crystal'ize, and the like, are written with the l doubled, since they are derived respectively from the Latin cancellarius (through the French), and metallum, and the Greek κρυσταλλος. So, also, tranquillity has the double l, as being from Latin tranquillitas, while the English derivatives of tranquil are more properly written with one l; as, tranquillize, tranquillizer, etc.

§ 8. Final consonant not doubled. Words accented on any syllable except the last, words ending in more than one consonant, and words ending in a single consonant preceded by more than one vowel, do not double the final consonant before an ending beginning with a vowel; as, daub, daubed, daub'er; need, need'y; brief, brief'er, brief'ing; trav'ail, trav'ailed, trav'ailing; rev'el, rev'eled, rev'eling; trav'el, trav'eling, trav'eler; profit, prof'ited; act, act'ed, act'or; perform, perform'er; stand, stand'ing.

EXCEPTIONS: In humbug and a few other words ending in g, the g is doubled (humbugged, humbugging) before e or i, so that the g shall not be pronounced like j. The derivatives of kidnap are preferably spelled with one p, although the forms kidnapper, kidnapping, kidnapped are not uncommon. The form woolen, with one l, is usual in the United States; woollen, with two l's, is preferred in British usage.

NOTE. There is a large class of words ending in a single consonant, and not accented on the last syllable, the final consonants of which are, by very many writers and lexicographers, doubled in their derivatives, though unnecessarily and contrarily to analogy. The following list, chiefly of verbs, includes the most important of these words, most of which end in l: apparel, barrel, bevel, bias, bowel and its compounds, carburel and all similar words ending in -uret, carol, cavi, channel, chisel, counsel, cudgel, dial, dishevel, dowel, drivel, duel, empanel, enamel, equal, funnel, gambol, gravel, grovel, handsel, hatchel, imperil, jewel, kennel, kidnap, label, laurel, level, libel, marshal, marvel, medal, metal (see § 7), model, panel, parallel, parcel, pencil, peril, pistol, pommel, quarrel, ravel, revel, rival, rowel, shovel, shrivel, snivel, tassel, tinsel, trammel, travel, tunnel, unravel, vial, victual, worship. Both spellings are usually given in this Dictionary, that with the single consonant having the first place.

§ 9. Double consonant retained. Words ending in a doubled consonant generally retain both consonants when adding suffixes; as, ebb, ebbing; odd, oddly; stiff, stiffness; fell, fellable; skill, skillful, skillfulness; will, willful, willfulness; dull, dullness; full, fullness. So also the double l is retained in the words installment, intrallment, thralldom, and enrollment (from install, intrhall, thrall, and enroll), in order to prevent mispronunciation. Many, especially in England, omit one l in these words, as also in the derivatives of skill, will, dull, and full, formed by adding the syllables -ly and -ness. See §§ 16, 17.

EXCEPTIONS: The derivatives of pontiff; as, pontifical, pontifical, and the like. One l is also dropped in a few words formed by adding the termination -ly to words ending in ll, in order to prevent the concurrence of three l's; as, ill, illy; dull, dully; full, fully. Words formed by adding the termination -less, are written either with the three l's, a hyphen being inserted before the termination, or with only two l's; as, skill-less, or skillless, smell-less or smellless.

§ 10. Silent e retained. Words ending with silent e, generally retain this e before suffixes beginning with a consonant; as, pale, paleness; hate, hateful; incite, incitement; chaste, chastely, chasteness; move, movement.

EXCEPTIONS: Many words ending in silent e immediately preceded by another vowel (except e) drop the e in forming the derivatives; as, due, duly; argue, argument; true, truly; awe, awful, etc. The words wholly, nursing, wisdom, abridgment, acknowledgment, lodgment, judgment, are also exceptions. The last four, however, are by many written, abridgement, acknowledgement, lodgement, judgement.

§ 11. Silent e omitted. Words ending with silent e generally drop the e before suffixes beginning with a vowel; as, bride, bridal; guide, guidance; plume, plumage; use, usable, usage; grieve, grievance; come, coming; shape, shaping; move, movable; sale, salable; fleece, fleecy; force, forcible; true, truism.

EXCEPTIONS: The e is retained in hoeing, shoeing, and toeing (from hoe, shoe, and toe), to prevent mispronunciation, but is generally excluded from shoer. It is retained, also, in the words  dyeing, singing, springing, swingeing, tingeing (from dye, singe, springe, swinge, tinge), to distinguish them from  dying, singing, springing, swinging, tinging (from die, sing, spring, swing, ting). The word mileage, as commonly written, does not omit the e. The words lineage, lineal, and pineal, though apparently exceptions, are not, since they are not formed from line and pine, but from the Latin linea (through the French), linealis, and pinea. Words ending in ce or ge retain the e before suffixes so that the c or g shall not be pronounced with the "hard" sound; as, peace, peaceable; notice, noticeable; manage, manageable; change, changeable; advantage, advantageous; outrage, outrageous. Mortgage, pronounced mor'ga-jor', from mortgage, and pledgor, pronounced plej-or', from pledge, are the forms preferred in usage, though under the above rule they should be mortgageor and pledgeor. In derivatives in -able, as usable, useable, salable, saleable, etc., usage is divided and often inconsistent.

§ 12. Ending -ing added to ie. Words ending in ie generally drop the e and change the i to y when adding -ing, so as to prevent two i's from coming together; as, die, dying; hie, hying (some write hieing); lie, lying; tie, tying; vie, vying.

§ 13. y preceded by a consonant. Words ending in y preceded by a consonant usually change the y to i before any suffix except one beginning with i; as, icy, icest, icily; mercy, merciless; tidy, tidiness; modify, modifies; foggy, foggiest; earthy, earthiness; pity, pitiful.

EXCEPTIONS: The derivatives of adjectives of one syllable ending in y generally retain the y; as, shy, shyness; sly, slyest; dry, dryly; spry, spryer, spryest; wry, wryness. But drier and driest, from dry, are commonly written with i instead of y; and drily, shily, slyly, are not uncommon. Before -ship and -like, as in secretaryship, suretyship, ladyship, citylike, countrylike, etc., and in derivatives from baby and lady the y is retained. The y also is retained in the possessive case of nouns, when formed by adding s with the apostrophe; as, country's, everybody's.

§ 14. y preceded by a vowel. Words ending in y preceded by a vowel, generally retain the y unchanged before all suffixes; as, gay, gayety, gayly; play, player, plays; sway, swayed; obey, obeying; joy, joyful; enjoy, enjoyed; buy, buying; gluey, glueyness.

EXCEPTIONS: Daily, laid, paid, said, saith, slain, and staid (from day, lay, pay, say, slay, and stay), with their compounds; devyness. Staid, however, is sometimes written stayed. Gaiety and gayly are preferred by many. Says is regular in form, but not in pronunciation. Derivatives from words ending in uy, as colloquies, from colloquy, are not exceptions, as the u in such words is equivalent to the consonant v.

§ 15. Adding a vowel to a vowel ending. Words ending with a vowel sound, generally retain the letter or letters representing such sound before a suffix beginning with a vowel; as, huzza, huzzaed; agree, agreeable, agreeing; weigh, weighing; dough, doughy; echo, echoed; woo, wooer; bow, bowed; beau, beaux. Sometimes cooes, wooes (from coo, woo) occur, but coos, woos, as also taboos, shampoos, etc., are preferable. Cooed and wooded are proper, like other participles in -ed.

EXCEPTIONS: Derivatives of words of this class ending in silent e, as also those of words ending in double e by adding a termination beginning with e, drop the final e; as, hoe, hoed; sue, sued; owe, owed; free, freer, freest; see, seen; oversee, overseer; agree, agreed, agreeer. The cases mentioned in §§ 11, 12, and 13 are also exceptions.

§ 16. Derivatives formed by prefixing one or more syllables to words ending in a double consonant commonly retain both consonants; as, tipstaff, rebuff, recall, befall, intrhall, foretell, undersell, fulfill, enroll, emboss (from staff, buff, call, fall, thrall, tell, sell, fill, roll, boss).

EXCEPTIONS: The word until, always written with one l; also, words of this class that end in ll are written by some, especially in England, with one l; as, reel, befall, intrhall, foretell, enroll. The words distill and instill should have the l doubled, though often written distil and instil.

§ 17. Compound words formed by joining two or more words commonly retain all letters of the simple words; as, stiff-necked, well-bred, dull-eyed, save-all, wide-mouthed.

EXCEPTIONS: Many compounds which by long use have acquired the force of single words. They are: some compounds of all and well; as, almighty, almost, alone, already, also, although, altogether, always, withal, therewithal, welcome, wherewithal, welfare; — compounds of mass; as, Candlemas, Christmas, Lammas, Michaelmas, etc.; — words of which the second part is full; as, artful, hateful, rueful, woeful, or woful; also, the words chilblain, often dumfounded, expire and its derivatives (cf. inspire), fulfill (see § 16), namesake, neckerchief, numskull, pastime, standish, where'er and wherever.

PLURALS

☞ For irregular plurals, as of man, foot, brother, ox, deer, and for plurals of foreign nouns, as of datum, genus, index, crisis, consult the individual words in the Vocabulary. See also the Note under the word PLURAL in the Vocabulary.

§ 18. The plural of English nouns regularly ends in s, or, in certain classes of words, in es.

When the singular ends in a sound with which s can unite and be pronounced without forming a separate syllable, s only is added in forming the plural; as, bay, bays; shah, shahs; sea, seas; tree, trees; pie, pies; Hindu, Hindus; woe, woos; canto, cantos; virtue, virtues; purlicue, purlicues; claw, claws; cab, cabs; panic, panics; bead, beads; chief, chiefs; bag, bags; ache, aches; plaque, plaques; lock, locks; bell, bells; cup, cups.

Nouns ending in o generally form their plurals regularly, by adding s only. Some nouns ending in o preceded by a consonant form their plurals by adding es; as, echo, echoes; cargo, cargoes; embargo, embargoes; motto, mottoes; potato, potatoes. Those in which final o is preceded by a vowel form their plurals regularly; as, cameo, cameos; punctilio, punctilios.

As to nouns ending in i usage differs, though as a rule, their plurals are preferably formed by adding s only; as, Maori, Maoris; rabbi, rabbis; macaroni, macaronis.

When the singular ends in a sound (as that of ch in much, sh, j, s, x, or z) with which s cannot unite in pronunciation, but must form a separate syllable, e is inserted before s in forming the plural, unless the word ends with a silent e, which then forms a separate syllable with the s; as, church, churches; rush, rushes; age, ages; edge, edges; lace, laces; gas, gases; class, classes; alias, aliases; marquis, marquises; case, cases; box, boxes; maze, mazes. For classis, crisis, and like words, see § 25.

Plural of a letter, figure, sign, etc. To express the plural of a letter, figure, or any character or sign, or of a word mentioned without regard to its meaning, the letter s, generally preceded by the apostrophe, is appended, as in the phrases: "The two l's in all;" "The two o's in 400;" "Two u's in Orion;" "He uses two many i's." Some, however, omit the apostrophe in such cases, as in: "The two *l*s in all;" "Two u's in Orion;" "The pros and cons."

§ 19. Nouns ending in y preceded by a consonant form their plurals by adding es and changing y into i; as, mercy, mercies; lady, ladies; sky, skies; army, armies; pity, pities; Mary, Marias, (by some Marys). This rule includes words ending in quy, in which u is equivalent to consonant v; as, colloquy, colloquies.

Nouns ending in y preceded by a vowel (except u having the power of v) form their plurals by adding s only; as, day, days; key, keys; money, moneys (see in Vocab.); monkey, monkeys; attorney, attorneys; alloy, alloys.

§ 20. The plurals of a few nouns ending in f or fe are irregularly formed by changing f or fe into ves. The principal examples are: life, lives; knife, knives; wife, wives; leaf, leaves; sheaf, sheaves; loaf, loaves; beef, beeves; thief, thieves; calf, calves; half, halves; elf, elves; shef, shelvees; self, selves; wolf, wolves. For the plurals of wharf and scarf see in Vocab. The plurals of hoof and turf, formerly hooves and turves, are now usually hoofs and turfs. The plurals of other nouns ending in f, fe, or ff, are formed regularly by the addition of s only.

§ 21. Plural formed by change of vowel. In the following nouns, the singular and the plural differ in their vowels: man, men; woman, women; goose, geese (gooses in the sense of tailor's irons); foot, feet; tooth, teeth; brother, brethren (see §§ 22, 23); louse, lice; mouse, mice. Compounds ending with these words form their plurals in the same way; as, workman, workmen; dormouse, dormice. Words that end in -man, but are not compounds, form their plurals regularly, by adding s only, as, captain, captains; desman, desmans; talisman, talismans; German, Germans; Mussulman, Mussulmans; Ottoman, Ottomans.

§ 22. A few plurals end in -en; namely, brother, brethren (see §§ 21, 23); child, children; ox, oxen. The number of such nouns was formerly much larger.

§ 23. Nouns having two plurals with different meanings. Some nouns as brother, die, pea, penny, cherub, cloth, genius, index, seraph, staff, stamen, have plurals of different forms and with different meanings. See these words in the Vocabulary. See also § 24.

§ 24. Plural same as singular. Some nouns, mostly names of animals, have the same form in the plural as in the singular; as, deer, sheep, swine, grouse, trout, etc., but these words and some others which ordinarily have no plural, as wheat, barley, have plural forms in s or es used to denote a number of species. See the Note under PLURAL, n., in the Vocabulary. Gentle nouns in -ese have the same form in the plural as in the singular; as, Chinese, Portuguese, Tyrolese, Japanese.

§ 25. Foreign words. Many nouns from foreign languages retain their original plurals; as, datum, data; critterion, criteria; genus, genera; larva, larvæ; classis, classes (see class, pl. classes, in § 18); crisis, crises; matrix, matrices; focus, foci; monsieur, messieurs.

Many words of this class, however, have also a second plural formed after English analogy; as, formula, formulæ or formulas; beau, beaux or beaus; focus, foci or focuses; index, indices or indexes; stratum, strata or stratums; bandit, banditti or bandits; cherub, cherubim or cherubs; seraph, seraphim or seraphs.

§ 26. In certain loose compounds consisting of a noun followed by an adjective or the like, the plural is commonly formed by making the same change in the noun as when it stands alone; as, court-martial, courts-martial; cousin-german, cousins-german; son-in-law, sons-in-law; knight-errant, knights-errant (but cf. KNIGHT BACHELOR, KNIGHT TEMPLAR, MANSERVANT, etc., which have the plurals knights bachelors, knights templars, menservants). When, however, the components are so closely joined that the compound has the force of a simple word, its plural is formed like that of any other word of the same termination; as, cupful, cupfuls; handful, handfuls.

MISCELLANEOUS RULES.

§ 27. There are many words, besides those mentioned in the preceding paragraphs, in respect to which good usage is variable. The most important of these are mentioned in this and the succeeding sections.

The derivatives of villain (as villainous, villainy, etc.), though sometimes, esp. formerly, written villanous, villany, etc., now commonly retain the i, like those of other words ending in ain; as, mountainous, from mountain; captaincy, from captain; and the like.

The words connection, deflection, inflection, and reflection, follow the spelling of the words connect, deflect, inflect, and reflect, though often written, esp. in England, connexion, deflexion, inflexion, and reflexion.

The word woe, though often written without the final e, should retain it, like most other nouns of one syllable of similar form; as, doe, floe, foe, hoe, sloe, toe, etc. Monosyllables other than nouns and also words of more than one syllable omit the e; as, do, go, no, so, canto, motto, potato.

The words defense, expense, offense, and pretense, though often, esp. in England, spelled with c are preferably spelled with s, for the s is used in all their derivatives.

The words drought and height have also often been written drouth and highth or hight, but these forms are now rare in literary usage.

The verb practise is thus written like the noun, in preference to the form practise used by many writers, esp. in England. The difference in spelling between the noun and the verb is properly observed, in words of this kind, only in such as are accented on the last syllable, as devise, devise.

§ 28. -able or -ible. There is a class of adjectives ending either in -able or in -ible, of which a large majority have -able; as, blamable, laudable, legible, mutable, navigable, vendible. Many of them are from Latin words in -abilis or -ibilis, some are from the French, and not a few are formed by adding the termination to English words. The forms in -ible are mostly words going back directly to Latin verbs in -ere or -ire. For English compounds, -able has become usual. See Note under -ABLE, in the Vocabulary.

§ 29. en- or in-. There is a class of words beginning with en- or in-, as enclose or inclose, enquire or inquire, ensure or insure, and the like, many of which take either form of the prefix indifferently. They are chiefly derived from the Latin, either directly or through the French, the prefix in- belonging to the former language, and en- to the latter. See words of this class in the Vocabulary.

§ 30. -ant or -ent. Many words ending in -ant or -ent were formerly spelled either way, almost indifferently; as, confidant or confident, dependant or dependent, and the like. Present usage, however, is settled in favor of one or the other form in most words of this class, though not always on uniform principles. Thus, the abstract noun confidence and the adjective confident are universal, while the common noun is sometimes the English confident, but often the French confidant. The abstract noun dependence and the adjective dependent have almost entirely superseded dependance and dependant, while the noun dependant, formerly at least as common as dependent, has now yielded its place in great measure to dependent. On the other hand, we now have both the adjectives and the common nouns attendant and repentant; and the abstract nouns attendance and repentance.

§ 31. -er or -re. There is a class of words ending in -er some of which are by many written -re; as, center, meter, theater, etc., often written centre, metre, theatre, etc. Acre, chancre, lucre, nacre, massacre, and ogre retain the termination -re, in order to preserve the hard sound of the c and g. Still, we have the adjective eager, the noun eagre or eager, and the preposition mauger or maugre.

§ 32. -id or -ide. There are two classes of chemical words ending respectively in -id or -ide and -in or -ine, in regard to which usage has varied. Most of them were formerly written without the final e; but now -ide is preferred to -id, and there is an attempt to establish a distinction between -in and -ine. See 2d -INE in the Vocabulary. The word tannin is always written without the final e.

§ 33. -ize or -ise. Certain words ending, as pronounced, with the sound of long i followed by z are written with either -ize or -ise; as, criticize or criticise; civilize or civilise; naturalize or naturalise; patronize or patronise. These words are mostly verbs, and are chiefly derived from Greek words ending in -ίζω, often through the French and Latin (see -IZE, in the Vocabulary). Those derived from Greek words properly have -ize; as, anathematize, baptize, characterize, dramatize, tantalize. The spelling exorcise is, however, in common use. Those formed in an analogous manner from English words are also written with -ize; as, albumenize, bastardize, memorize, sensitize. But those derived from the French verb prendre (participle pris or prise) end in -ise; as, apprise, comprise, emprise, enterprise, surprise. The following are the principal English verbs ending in -ise: advertise, advise, affrontise, apprise, arise, chastise, circumcise, comprise, compromise, demise, despise, devise, disenfranchise, disfranchise, disguise, emprise, enfranchise, exorcise, exercise, franchise, merchandise, premise, revise, supervise, surmise, surprise. Most of those in respect to which usage varies are now generally written with -ize, and there is a tendency to extend the use of -ize to all analogous terms.

§ 34. mold or mould. The words mold and molt, and their compounds and derivatives, are entered in this Dictionary with o instead of ou, in analogy with bold, bolt, colt, gold, etc., from which the u has been dropped. Many, however, write these words mould and moult, etc.; and this spelling also is given in this Dictionary as alternative.

§ 35. -or or -our. There is a numerous class of words almost universally written in the United States with the ending -or, many of which are written also, esp. in England, with -our; as, candor, favor, honor, labor, rumor, vigor. English usage, however, is not uniform, many of these words being spelled with -or in English books.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

Pronunciation. A part or the whole of a pronunciation is often omitted when it is the same as that of a word immediately preceding and may be readily supplied from such preceding entry.

The accentuation only is given for some compound words, and for some derivatives ending in common suffixes such as -ess, -est, -ing, -ist, -less, -like, -ness, -ship, if the pronunciation is perfectly regular and can therefore easily be learned from the separate parts.

Figures within the parentheses with the pronunciation refer to sections of the GUIDE TO PRONUNCIATION, pp. viii-xviii.

Preferred Forms of Spelling or Pronunciation. When two or more forms of spelling or of pronunciation are recorded the general rule has been to place first the one that has been selected as preferable. Each form entered, however, has the support of good usage, and in some cases this usage is nearly or quite equally divided. Specific variations of usage have been indicated by limiting words, as also, often, sometimes (see CONCH, OLFOMARGARINE, PATENT, TRAIT). When, instead of a definition, there is a cross reference (introduced by =, by Var. of, or by See) to another spelling, the form referred to is the one preferred.

Capitalization. When a word should begin with a capital letter in writing or print, the vocabulary entry of this word begins with a capital. Where, in a specific use, a different style from that shown by the vocabulary entry is to be followed, [cap.] (meaning a capital initial) or [I. c.] (meaning a lower case or small initial) is inserted at the definition affected. Thus Italic, a, in sense 1 should begin with a capital, but in sense 2 a small letter is preferred.

Hyphenated Words. Words that are to be written or printed with a hyphen have this hyphen indicated by a mark (—) longer and heavier than the short, light hyphen (·) used to show division into syllables; as in ab'sent-mind'ed, light'-heart'ed-ness.

Principal parts of verbs are given in small capitals after the vocabulary titles, except when the parts are regularly formed by the simple addition of -ed or -d and -ing (see RULES FOR SPELLING, pp. xxi-xxii).

Plurals are given whenever they are irregular in form or when, from analogy, an irregular form might be expected. See RULES FOR SPELLING, pp. xxi-xxii.

See PLURAL, after such words as fish, deer, quail, trout, etc., refers to the Note under the word PLURAL in the Vocabulary for information as to the two plural forms in use and the differences in their meanings.

See -ics, as at mathematics, gymnastics, refers to the entry at -ics for information as to the use of words with this ending both as singular and plural.

The comparative and superlative forms of adjectives are given in small capitals after the vocabulary word except where these forms are made by the simple addition of -er and -est or by the use of more and most.

Adjectives usually compared by adding -er and -est are: a Those of one syllable; as, big, gay, small. b Those of two syllables accented on the final and not ending in a consonant group; as, polite, severe, serene. c Many adjectives of two syllables accented on the first, especially such as end in w, y, or le; as, narrow, happy, simple.

Many adjectives that are usually compared by adding -er and -est are often compared with more and most for euphony, emphasis, etc.

Adjectives that end in silent e drop the e before the endings -er and -est; thus, late, later, latest. Those that end in y preceded by a consonant change the y to i before the endings; thus, sunny, sunnier, sunniest.

Adjectives that are usually compared with more and most are: a Those of more than two syllables; as, ignorant, amiable, prodigal. b Those of two syllables ending in a consonant group; as, distinct, correct, ancient, frequent. But some such adjectives, often used in comparison, as pleasant, cunning, usually take -er and -est. c Those ending in -ful; as, mournful, careful; those ending in -ive; as, active; many ending in -ed and -ing; as, wretched, daring.

Etymologies are printed within brackets [ ]. The following familiar conventions are used:

1. In the etymology the words in italic type are those, whether English or foreign, from which the vocabulary word is derived. Definitions of the italicized words are in roman type. Example: scallion, n. [OF. escalone, fr. L. caepa Ascalonia onion of Ascalon.]

2. A label, as F, G, It, which indicates a language, applies to all following italicized words until another label is reached. If the language of the first italicized word is unspecified it is English. Example: saturate, v. t. [L. saturatus, p. p. of saturare to saturate, fr. satur said.]

3. When the only etymology is [F.] [L.], or the like, or where the etymology begins with F. or L., followed by a comma, the source word in French or Latin is spelled in the same way as the English word. Example: delicatessen, n. pl. [G., fr. F. délicatess.]

4. Any prefix or suffix used without definition will be found defined in its alphabetical place. Example: dictograph, n. [L. dictum a thing said + -graph.]

5. The history of a word is in general traced back as far as it can be with certainty. Thus if a Middle English word is the only etymology given, the source of the Middle English word is either unknown or doubtful. Example: shallow, a. [ME. schalowe.]

In accordance with these conventions then, the etymology of impugn [F. impugner, fr. L. impugnare; in against + pugnare to fight.] will be read as follows: "impugn is from the French impugner, which is derived from the Latin impugnare, which is itself made up of the Latin words in meaning 'against' and pugnare meaning 'to fight.'" Similarly, that of curfew [OF. coerveu; covrir to cover + feu fire, fr. L. focus hearth.] will be rendered "curfew is from the Old French coerveu, which is derived from the Old French covrir meaning 'to cover' and feu meaning 'fire'; feu is from the Latin focus meaning 'hearth.'"

Certain derivatives are run on after the primitive word when the meaning may easily be gathered from the meaning of the suffix and that of the primitive. Each suffix so used, as -er, -hood, -ic, -ment, -ness, -ship, is fully defined in its vocabulary place.

Music, Scot., Archaic, Colloq., or a similar label, when preceding the first numbered definition of a word applies to all of the definitions; when preceding a group of definitions distinguished by a, b, c, etc., it applies to the entire group (see SKEP, SUE, S). Otherwise, such a label applies only to the definition to which it is joined. Both or All may precede a label (as, Both Obs.) to show that it applies to two or more parts of speech, as a noun and a verb, defined under one vocabulary title (see SPUTTER).

¶ prefixed to a vocabulary word indicates that this word is from a foreign language and that it would ordinarily be printed in italic letters when used in English; as, ¶ a'ban'don', n., ¶ an'no Do'mi-ni.

X 2, X 6,  $\frac{1}{2}$ ,  $\frac{2}{3}$ , or the like, inserted at an illustration indicates that a picture is twice, six times, one half, one sixth, etc., as long and as high as the original.

= preceding a word in small capitals indicates that the vocabulary word has the same meaning as the word in small capitals and that the latter is the preferred form.

A DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

A

ABASEMENT

A (ā). 1. The first letter of the English alphabet. The different forms come from the Latin A, corresponding to Greek Alpha, of the same form, which came in turn from Aleph ("ox"), the first letter of the Phœnician and old Hebrew alphabets. In English, various sounds are now represented by this letter (see Guide to Pron., § 1). 2. As a symbol, used to denote or indicate: a First in order or class, or, sometimes, the numeral 1; as, Company A. b Muscle. The sixth tone in the model major scale (that of C), or the first of its relative minor scale. Also, a key giving this tone, or a symbol for it.

A or a, n.; pl. A's, AES, or AS (āz). The letter A, a, or its sound; as, he mouths his a's.

a, pron. Corruption of I, HE, SHE, IT, THEY. Obs. or Dial. a (ā), v. t. Corruption of Abuse. Obs. or Dial.

a (unstressed, ā; emph., ā), adj., or (as usually called) the indefinite article. 1. The shortened form of AN, signifying, but less emphatic than, one or any, and commonly used before words beginning with a consonant sound. See AN. 2. In each; or to or for each; as, "a dollar a yard."

a (ā), prep. [AS. of off, from.] Of. Obs.

a (ā), prep., a-, a- (ā-), prefix. [AS. an, on.] On; in; at; as in aloft, afield, afire, asleep, "a Monday," "thrice a year," a-hunting.

a-. [Gr. ἀ-, á-, not, á- being used before consonants.] A prefix, appearing as an- before vowels or the letter h, denoting not, without, un-; as in abys, asexual, anhydrous.

a-. A prefix equiv. to 1st a, prep., denoting off, from, of; as in adown, athirst, afresh, etc.

a-. A form of AB-. See AB-.

A 1 (ā wūn). A registry mark given to ships in first-class condition; hence: prime; first-class.

aard'-vark' (ārd'-vārk'), n. [D., earth-pig.] Either of two ant-eating edentates (genus Orycteropus) of Africa.

aard'-wolf' (wōolf'), n. [D., earth-wolf.] A hyenalike quadruped (Proteles cristata) of South Africa. It feeds on insects, carrion, etc.

Aar'on (ār'ūn), n. [From L. or Gr., fr. Heb. Aharōn.] The brother of Moses (Ex. iv. 14). Aaron is the first high priest mentioned in the Bible.

Aa-ron'ic (ā-rōn'ik) a. Pertaining to Aaron; hence: Le-Aa-ron'ic-cal (-i-kāl) } vitical; pontifical.

Aaron's rod. a. The rod used by Aaron (Ex. vii. 9, Num. xvii. 8). b. [Preferably Aaron's-rod.] A plant with a tall flowering stem; esp., the great mullein or the goldenrod.

Ab (āb; āb), n. [Heb.] See HEBREW CALENDAR.

ab- (āb-). A prefix fr. Lat. ab-, signifying from, away.

a'ba-cá' (ā'bā-kā'), n. [Native name.] The Manila hemp.

a-back' (ā-bāk'), adv. Back; backward; — said specif., Naut., of sails when pressed back by the wind, or of a ship when so checked; whence the phrases to be taken aback, all aback, etc., often used figuratively.

ab'a-cus (āb'ā-kūs), n.; pl. E. -CUSSES (-ēz; 24), L. -CI (-sī), [L., fr. Gr. ἄβαξ.]

1. A table or frame for arithmetical calculation by means of sliding balls or counters. 2. Arch. The top member of the capital of a column, next under the architrave.

Abacus, 1.

A-bad'don (ā-bād'ūn), n. [Heb.] 1. Lit., (place of) destruction; the place of the lost in Sheol; the abyss of hell. 2. Apollyon (Rev. ix. 11).

a-baft' (ā-bāft'), prep. [on + ME. baft, AS. beaftan; be by + aftan behind.] Naut. Behind; toward the stern from. — adv. Naut. Toward or at the stern; aft.

A Abacus, 2.

ab'a-lo'ne (āb'ā-lō'nē), n. A large gastropod mollusk (genus Haliotis) having a slightly spiral shell, perforated with a row of holes for the escape of water from the gills. The shell is lined with mother of pearl which is used in inlaying, button making, etc.; an ear shell.

Shell of Abalone.

a-ban'don (ā-bān'dŏn), v. t. [OF. abandoner, fr. a (L. ad) + bandon authority, deriv. fr. L.L. bannire to proclaim.] 1. To give up absolutely; forsake or renounce utterly. 2. To yield (one's self) unrestrainedly; — often in a bad sense. 3. To banish; expel. Obs.

Syn. Leave, quit, resign, surrender, relinquish, desert, forsake. — Abandon, desert, forsake agree in the idea of quitting, or leaving in the lurch. Abandon denotes an absolute giving up, often with implication of surrender to the mercy of something or some one else; as, to abandon a wreck, or one's self to despair. Desert (except sometimes as applied to places; as, the deserted village, deserted streets) denotes the quitting of an object in violation of duty; as, to desert one's colors, one's principles. Forsake, which may or may not involve culpability, implies the breaking off of association with something familiar or dear; as, to forsake one's friends; the blood forsook his cheeks.

|| a'ban'don' (ā'bān'dŏn'), Eng. ā-bān'dŏn, n. [F.] A complete giving up to natural impulses; careless ease.

2. Self-abandoned; extremely or irreclaimably wicked.

Syn. Depraved, corrupt, dissolute, profligate, reprobate, vicious, vile. — Abandoned, profligate, dissolute, reprobate all express great personal depravity. Abandoned suggests unresisting self-surrender to vice; profligate, open and shameless disregard of decency (and often squandered means); dissolute, utter laxity of morals and the throwing off of all restraint; reprobate, complete insensibility to reproof.

a-ban'don-ment (dŏn-mĕnt), n. Act of abandoning; state of being abandoned; absence of self-restraint.

a-base' (ā-bās'), v. t.; A-BASE' (ā-bāst'), A-BAS'ING. [OF. abaissier. See BASE, a.] 1. To lower; throw or cast down. Archæol. 2. To cast down or reduce, as in rank or estimation.

Syn. Disgrace, dishonor, debase, degrade, reduce, humble, humiliate, mortify, shame, depose. — Abase, debase, degrade, reduce, humble, humiliate agree in the idea of bringing down to a lower state. Abase expresses a āle, senāte, cāre, ām, āccount, ārm, āsk, sofā; ēve, ēvent ēnd, recĕnt, makĕr; ĩce, ĩll; ōld, ōbey, ōrb, ōdd, sŏft, cŏnnect; ūse, ūnĭte, ūrn, ūp, circŭs, menŭ; fŏod, fŏot; out, oil; chair; go; sing, ĩrk; then, thĭn; natŭre, verdŭre (87); k = ch in C. ich, ach (50); bon; yet; zh = z in azure. Numbers refer to Sections in Guide to Pronunciation. Explanations of Abbreviations used in this work, Signs, etc., precede Vocabulary. || Foreign Word. + combined with. = equals.

bringing down, always in the feeling of one's estate or condition; as, to abase the proud. Debase involves an actual deterioration in quality or worth; as, to debase the coinage. Degrade implies a lowering in rank (so also reduce) or in moral standard. Humble always suggests a sense of lowered dignity or lost prestige, and when reflexive often implies self-abasement without loss of self-respect, thus differing from humiliate, which always implies ignominy.

a-bash' (á-básh'), v. t. [OF. esbahir, fr. L. ex + bah, interj. of astonishment.] To destroy the self-possession of; confuse; put to shame; discredit. — Syn. See EMBAR-RASS. — a-bash'ment (-mĕnt), n. a-bat' (á-bát'), v. t. That may be abated.
a-bate' (á-bát'), v. t.; A-BAT'ED (-bát'ĕd); ABAT'ING. [From OF., fr. LL. abater to beat down; ad + battere to beat, L. battere.] 1. To beat down; demolish; hence, to put an end to. Obs., exc. in Law; as, to abate a nuisance. 2. To reduce in amount, number, degree, intensity, etc., as a demand, pride, zeal; lessen; moderate. 3. To reduce (in respect of); deprive. Obs. 4. To deduct, as part of a price; omit. — v. i. To be abated; as: a To come to naught; fall through, as a writ. b To decrease, as a storm. — Syn. Diminish, wane, slacken, sink, recede, decline.

abatement (-mĕnt), n. 1. An abating; state of being abated; also, amount abated; decrease. 2. Her. A mark indicating depreciation, degradation, or disgrace.
ab-at-tis (áb'at-tis; F. á'bát'tĕr'), n. [F. abatis mass of things cut/down.] Fort. A defense of felled trees with the branches sharpened and turned toward the enemy.
ab-to'r (á-bát'tĕr), n. Law. One who abates a nuisance.
ab'at'toir' (á'bát'twáir'), n.; pl. -toirs (-twáir'). [F., fr. abatre to beat down.] A slaughterhouse.

abb (áb), n. [AS. āweþ, āþ; a + þeþ. See WEB.] Among weavers, the wool or yarn for the wool.

Ab'ba (áb'á), n. [Syriac abbā father.] Father; — used by Jesus of the Deity.

ab'ba-cy (-sĭ), n.; pl. -cies (-sĭz). [L. abbatia.] Dignity, estate, jurisdiction, or term of tenure of an abbot.

Ab-bas'side (á-bás'id; -ĭd), n. Pert. to or designating the dynasty of caliphs claiming descent from Abbas, uncle of Mohammed. They ruled (about 750–1258) at Bagdad, and were famous for luxury and patronage of art and literature. — n. One of this dynasty.

ab-ba'tial (á-bá'shĭl), a. Pertaining to an abbot or abbey.

ab'be' (á'bá'), n.; pl. -bĕs (-báz'). [F.] Abbot; — now a title in France for any secular ecclesiastic holding no living. He usually acts as a tutor, instructor, or the like.

ab'bess (áb'ĕs), n. [From OF., fr. L. abbatissa, fem. of ab-bas abbot.] A female superior or governess of a nunnery.

ab'bey (-ĭ), n.; pl. -bĕys (-ĭz). [From OF., fr. L. abbatia, fr. abbas abbot.] 1. A monastery or society of persons secluded and devoted to religion and celibacy; also, the monastic building or buildings. 2. The church of a monastery. — Syn. See CLOISTER.

ab'bot (áb'ŭt), n. [AS. abbod, abbad, L. abbas, abbatis, Gr. abbās, fr. Syriac abbā father.] Superior or head of an abbey of monks. — ab'bot'cy (-sĭ), n. — ab'bot-ship, n.

Abbot of Misrule or Unreason. = LORD OF MISRULE.

ab-bre'vi-ate (á-brĕ'vĭ-āt), v. t.; -ATED (-āt'ĕd); -AT'ING. [L. abbreviatus, p. p. of abbreviare. See ABRIDGE.] To make briefer; shorten, esp. by contraction or omission, as words. — Syn. Contract, reduce. See ABRIDGE.

ab-bre'vi-ation (-á'shĭn), n. Act or result of abbreviating; abbreviated form of a word or phrase, as d. for died.

ab-bre'vi-a'tor (á-brĕ'vĭ-ā'tĕr), n. 1. One who, or that which, abbreviates. 2. Any of those officers of the papal chancery who originally made abbreviated extracts of the papal letters, and later constituted a college (now suppressed) charged with expediting the papal letters.

A'B'G' (áb'bĕ'sĕr'). 1. The first three letters of the alphabet. 2. The simplest rudiments of any subject.

ab-di-cate (áb'dĭ-kāt), v. t.; -CAT'ED (-kāt'ĕd); -CAT'ING. [L. abdicatedus, p. p. of abdicare; ab + dicare to proclaim.] To give up or relinquish formally, as sovereign power; renounce; surrender, as a trust, duty, right, etc.

Syn. Abdicate and resign imply a yielding up of office, authority, or trust. Abdicate applies particularly to the relinquishment of authority or dignity which is inherent or sovereign; as, to abdicate the crown; resign applies to the relinquishment of an unexpired office or trust.

— v. i. To renounce a throne, high office, or dignity. — ab-di-ca'tor (-kāt'tĕr), n.

ab-di-ca'tion (-kāt'shĭn), n. Act of abdicating.

ab-do'men (áb-dŏ'mĕn), n. [L.] 1. The belly; the part of the body between the thorax and the pelvis; also, the cavity of the belly, containing the stomach, bowels, etc. 2. The posterior section of the body, behind the thorax, in insects, crustaceans, etc.

ab-dom'i-nal (-dŏm'i-nál), a. Of or pert. to the abdomen.

ab-dom'i-nous (áb-dŏm'i-nŭs), a. Big-bellied. Rare.

ab-duce' (áb-dŭs'), v. t.; AB-DUCED' (-dŭst'); AB-DUC'ING (-dŭs'ĭng). [L. abducere to lead away; ab + ducere to antecedent drainage, Phys. Geog., a system of water-courses established before the deformation of the surface which it drains, and persisting after the deformation has taken place and in spite of it. Cf. CONSEQUENT DRAINAGE.

Syn. Antecedent, preceding, precedent, foregoing, previous, prior, former, anterior agree in implying temporal succession. Antecedent (opposed to subsequent, consequent) and preceding (opposed to succeeding, following) differ in that preceding usually applies to that which goes immediately before (as, the preceding day), whereas antecedent often suggests an indefinite interval; as, a period antecedent to the Conquest. Antecedent, unlike preceding, often involves logical, as well as temporal, connection or dependence; as, an antecedent cause, probability. Precedent often applies to that on whose going before the validity or effectiveness of something else depends; as, conditions precedent. Foregoing (opposed to following) applies almost exclusively to statements. Previous and prior (opposed to subsequent) are often used convertibly, esp. with to. But prior sometimes implies a closer relation than previous; thus, a previous obligation is one merely earlier in time, whereas a prior obligation may be one that takes precedence. Former (opposed to latter), more definitely than prior, implies comparison. Anterior (opposed to posterior), also comparative in force, applies to position, usually in space.

That by which one thing is attached to another; connection; as, the attachments of a muscle. 3. Something attached; adjunct of an instrument, machine, or other object. 4. Law. A seizure or taking into custody under legal process; the writ commanding such seizure.

Syn. Adherence, fidelity; affection, love. — Attachment, affection, love. Affection is confined to sentient beings; attachment may apply to inanimate objects. Attachment connotes strong liking or even devotion; affection, rather warmth and tenderness of sentiment. Affection implies a feeling more settled and regulated, less intense or ardent, than love, which alone of the three may connote passion. Thus, to one's friends any one of the three terms may be applicable; to the members of one's own family, love or affection, but scarcely attachment; to God, love (in the sense of reverent devotion), but not affection or attachment.

at-tack' (ăt-tăk'), v. t. [F. attaquer, It. attaccare, of same (uncertain) origin as F. attaquer.] 1. To fall upon with force; assault. 2. To assail with unfriendly language; censure. 3. To set to work on, as on a task or problem. 4. To begin to affect; begin to act upon injuriously; as, attacked by fever. — v. i. To make an onset or attack.

Syn. Attack, assail, assault all denote a forcible onset. Attack is the generic term, the others specific. To assail is to make a sudden and violent attack, or to attack repeatedly; to assault, to attack physically by a hand-to-hand approach or by unlawful violence. In the figurative sense, assault is less common than assail.

— n. 1. Act of attacking; onset; assault; — opp. to defense. 2. An access of disease; fit of sickness. 3. A setting to work upon some task, etc.; beginning of action.

Syn. Banish, exile, transport, expel agree in the idea of enforced removal. To be banished is to be compelled, by public edict or sentence, to leave a country. Exile differs from banishment in applying to removal under constraint from one's own country only; in admitting compulsion of circumstances as well as formal sentence or decree; and in emphasizing the element of enforced absence rather than the expulsion itself. Thus, Russians and foreigners alike may be banished, but only Russians exiled to Siberia. Dante banished from Florence, spent his later years in exile. Exile is also loosely used for prolonged but voluntary absence from one's native land in the fulfillment of some purpose. Transport refers specifically to the banishment of convicts, usually to a penal colony. To expel is to eject or banish summarily or authoritatively, commonly in disgrace; it applies to ejection from institutions or societies as well as from a place or country.

ca'ra-ha'ó (ká-rá-há'ó), n.; pl. CARABAS (-óz). [Native name.] A water buffalo. Phil. I.

car'a-bin (kár'á-bin), car'a-bine (-bín), n. A carbine.

car'a-bi-neer', -nier' (kár'á-bi-nēr'), n. [F. carabinier.] A soldier, esp. a cavalry soldier, armed with a carbine. See SOLDIER, Illust.

car'a-cal (kár'á-kál), n. [F. caracal, fr. Turk. qarahqulaq; qarah black + qulqaq ear.] A lynx (Lynx caracal), native of Africa and Asia, reddish brown in color, with the ears black and tipped with long black hairs.

ca'ra-ca'ra (ká-rá-ká-rá; ká-rá-ká-rá'), n. [Tupi caracá.] Any of certain species of large hawks, mostly South American, of vulturelike habits; as: the common caracara (Polyborus tharus), the black caracara (Ibycter ater), etc.

car'ack, car'rack (kár'ák), n. [From F., fr. LL. carraca.] A kind of large ship; a galleon. Obs. or Hist.

car'a-cole (-á-kól), car'a-col (-kól), n. [From F., fr. Sp. caracol, lit., snail.] Manège. A half turn to right or left; any turn in a zigzag course. — v. i.; -COLED (-kóld); -COL-ING. To perform a caracole, or move in caracoles.

ca'ra-cul' (ká-rá-kóol'; pop. kár'á-kúll), n. See KARAKUL.

ca-rafe' (ká-ráf'), n. [F.] A kind of glass water bottle.

car'a-geen, car'a-gheen. Vars. OF CARRAGEEN.

car'am-bo'la (kár'ám-bó-lá), n. [Pg.] An East Indian tree (Azerrhoa carambola) of the sorrel family; and also, its acid fruit, eaten as a preserve.

car'a-mel (kár'á-mél), n. [F.] 1. Burnt sugar, used for coloring and flavoring. 2. A kind of confection. — v. i. & t. To turn into caramel. — car'a-mel-ize (-íz), v. t. & i.

ca-ran'goid (ká-rán'goid), a. [Carangus, the type genus + -oid.] Zool. Of or pert. to a large family (Carangidæ) of marine acanthopterygian fishes containing the pompanos cavallas, etc.

car'a-pace (kár'á-pás), n. [F., fr. Sp.] A bony or chitinous case covering an animal's back, as the turtle's upper shell.

car'a-pax (-páks), n. [NL.] = CARAPACE.

car'at (kár'át), n. [E., fr. Ar., fr. Gr. κεράτιον little horn, carob bean, acarat.] 1. A unit of weight for precious stones, as diamonds, being 200 milligrams (or about 3½ grains troy). 2. A twenty-fourth part; — used in stating the proportionate fineness of gold; as, 14 carats fine, i. e., being 14 parts gold and 10 alloy.

car'a-van (kár'á-ván; kár'á-ván'), n. [From F., fr. Per. karwán a caravan.] 1. A company traveling together, esp. through a desert or dangerous country. 2. A covered vehicle of any of various sorts; as: a In the 17th and 18th centuries, a vehicle for carrying a number of people; — now called a van. b Now, a large covered wagon variously used, as for conveying wild beasts for exhibition, for moving furniture, etc., as a traveling house, etc.; a van.

car'a-vel (kár'á-vèl), n. [Through F., Sp., & L., fr. Gr. κάβος a kind of ship.] Naut. Any of several kinds of vessels, usually small sailing vessels.

car'a-way (-á-wá), n. [Through F. & Ar., fr. Gr. κάρων.] A biennial apiceous plant (Carum carui) having seeds with aromatic smell and pungent taste. [acid.]

car'ba-mate (kár'bá-mát), n. A salt or ester of carbamic car-bam'ic (kár-bám'ík), a. [carbon + amido.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating an acid, NH<sub>2</sub>.CO<sub>2</sub>H, occurring as a salt of ammonium in commercial ammonium carbonate. It may be regarded as an amino derivative of formic acid.

car'ba-mide (kár'bá-míd; -míd), n. [carbonyl + amide.] Chem. Urea.

car'bide (kár'bíd; -bíd), n. Chem. A binary compound of carbon; specif., calcium carbide (which see).

car'bine (-bín), n. [From F., fr. carabine carabineer.] A short, light rifle or, formerly, musket, used esp. by cavalry.

car'bi-neer' (-bi-nēr'). Var. OF CARABINEER.

car-bo-hy'drate (kár'bó-hí'drát), n. Chem. Any of a group of compounds, including the sugars, starches, celluloses, etc., composed of carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen.

car'bo-late (kár'bó-lát), n. Chem. A salt of carbolic acid.

car'bo-lat'ed (-lát'éd), a. Impregnated with carbolic acid.

car'bo-lic (kár'bó-lík), a. [L. carbo coal + oleum oil.] Designating a substance technically called phenol, esp. in solution. See PHENOL.

car'bo-lize (kár'bó-líz), v. t.; -LIZED (-lízd); -LIZ'ING (-líz'ing). Med. To wash or treat with carbolic acid.

car'bon (-bón), n. [From F., fr. L. carbo coal.] 1. Chem. An elementary substance occurring native as the diamond and also as graphite, and forming a constituent of coal and carbonates and of all organic compounds. Symbol, C; at. wt., 12.00. 2. Elec. A carbon rod or pencil used in an arc lamp, or a piece of carbon used as an element of a voltaic battery.

car'bo-na'ceous (kár'bó-ná'shús), a. Pertaining to, composed of, or containing carbon.

car'bo-na'ó (-bó-ná'ó), n.; pl. -DOES or -DOS (-dóz). [From Sp., fr. L. carbo coal.] A piece of flesh or fish scored across, seasoned, and broiled. — v. t. 1. To score across and broil; hence, to broil. 2. To cut; slash. Obs.

car'bo-na'ó (-ná'ó), n.; pl. -DOES (-dóz). [Pg., carbonated.] An opaque, dark-colored variety of diamond, found in Brazil, and used for drills; — called also black diamond.

Car'bo-na'to (-ná'tó), n.; pl. -NARI (-rí). [It., a coal man.] A member of a secret political association in Italy, organized in the early part of the 19th century for the purpose of changing the government into a republic; — usually in the pl. — Car'bo-na'tism (-ríz'm), n.

car'bon-ate (kár'bón-át), n. Chem. A salt or ester of carbonic acid. — v. t.; -AT'ED (-át'éd); -AT'ING. 1. To carbonate. 2. Chem. To convert into a carbonate; impregnate with carbonic acid. — car'bon-a'tion (-á'shún), n.

carbon dioxide. A heavy colorless and odorless gas, CO<sub>2</sub>, which extinguishes flame and is unfit for breathing. Plants absorb it from the air and decompose it, assimilating the carbon, and returning most of the oxygen. See CARBONIC ACID.

car'bon'ic (kár'bón'ík), a. Chem. Of, pert. to, or obtained from, carbon.

carbonic acid. Chem., an acid, H<sub>2</sub>CO<sub>3</sub>, existing only in solution and reacting with bases to form carbonates. It breaks up readily into water and carbon dioxide (often called carbonic acid or carbonic acid gas).

car'bon-if'er-ous (kár'bón-if'ēr-ús), a. [carbon + ferrous.] 1. Producing or containing carbon or coal. 2. [cap.] Geol. Of, pert. to, or designating, a Paleozoic period following the Devonian, or the system of rocks formed during this period; — so called from the great coal beds in the system. Specif., designating: a The entire period between the Devonian and the Triassic. b The period between the Devonian and the Permian. c The period of the coal measures; — called also Pennsylvanian.

car'bon-ize (kár'bón-íz), v. t.; -IZED (-ízd); -IZ'ING (-íz'ing). 1. To reduce to a residue of carbon as by fire; char. 2. To impregnate or combine with carbon. — car'bon-iz-a'tion (-íz-á'shún; -íz-á't'), n.

carbon monoxide. Chem. A colorless, odorless gas, CO, a product of the incomplete combustion of carbon. It burns with a pale blue flame, forming carbon dioxide. It is very poisonous.

carbon paper. Thin paper coated with a preparation of ále, senâte, câre, âm, âccount, ârm, âsk, sofâ; êve, êvent ênd, recênt, makêr; Ice, ill; ôld, ôbey, ôrb, ôdd, sôit, cônnect; ùse, ùnite, ùrn, ùp, circùs, menù; fôod, fôot; out, oil; chair; go; sing, injk; then, thin; nature, verdure (87);

lampblack, or of some color, used in making written copies. Pressure on the back causes the color to be transferred to paper laid against it.

carbon process. Photog. A printing process depending on the effect of light on gelatin sensitized with potassium dichromate. Paper coated with a mixture of the gelatin and a pigment is called carbon paper or carbon tissue.

car'bon-yl (kär'bôn-yl), n. [Carbon + -yl.] Chem. The bivalent radical CO, occurring only in compounds, as the aldehydes, the ketones, urea, carbonyl chloride, etc. Though denoted by the same formula as carbon monoxide, it is chemically distinct. — car'bon-yl-ic (-il'ik), a.

carbonyl chloride. Chem. A colorless gas, COCl<sub>2</sub>, formed from chlorine and carbon monoxide, under the influence of light, and hence sometimes called phosgene.

car'bo-nun'dum (-bô-rün'düm), n. [Carbon + corundum.] A compound of carbon and silicon, SiC, harder than emery.

car'box'yl (kär'bök'sil), n. [Carbon + oxygen + -yl.] Chem. The univalent radical CO-OH, the characteristic group of almost all the organic acids, as formic, acetic, and benzoic acids. — car'box-yl-ic (-sil'ik), a.

car'boy (kär'boy), n. A large globular glass bottle, esp. one inclosed in wickerwork or a box, as for carrying acids.

car'bun-cle (-bün-k'l), n. [From OF., fr. L. carbunculus, dim. of carbo coal.] 1. Formerly, any of several deep red minerals, as the ruby; now, the garnet cut in convex form without facets. 2. A painful local inflammation of the subcutaneous tissue, larger than a boil and often fatal. 3. A pimple or red spot due to impregnation.

car'bun'cu-lar (kär'bün'kü-lär), a. Of or pert. to a carbuncle; like a carbuncle; inflamed.

car'bu-ret (-bü-rét), n. [From CARBON.] Chem. A carbide. Archaic. — v. t.; -RET'ed or -RET'ing; -RET'ing or -RET'ing. To combine or impregnate with carbon, or, esp., with a volatile carbon compound; as, to carburet water gas by passing it over or through benzene, to increase its illuminating power.

car'bu-ret'ant (-rét'ánt), n. Any carbureting agent.

car'bu-ret'or, car'bu-ret'tor (-rét'ér), n. That which carburets, as an apparatus by which air is mingled with the vapor of petroleum oil.

car'bu-rize (-riz), v. t.; -RIZED (-riz'd); -RIZ'ing; -RIZ'ing. To combine or impregnate with carbon; as, to *carburi*ze iron.

— car'bu-ri-za'tion (-ri-zá'shün); -ri-zá'shün), n. — car'bu-riz'er (-riz'ér), n.

car'ca-jou (-ká-joo; -zhoo), n. [Can. F. corrupt. of an Indian name of the wolverene.] Zoöl. The wolverene.

Sometimes, the Canada lynx, the cougar, or the American badger.

car'ca-net (-ká-nét), n. [Dim. fr. F., fr. LL.] An ornamental chain, necklace, or collar, usually of gold or jeweled. Archaic.

car'case (kär'kás), n. Var. of CARCASS.

car'cass (kás), n.; pl. -CASSES (-éz; 24). [From F., fr. It. carcassa.] 1. A dead body of a beast or (now only in contempt) of a human being. 2. The living material, or physical, body. Obs. or Contemptuous. 3. Anything from which the vital principle is gone. 4. The abandoned and decaying remains of some bulky and once comely thing, as a ship; the skeleton of a thing, as of a building. — Syn. See body.

car'cel (-sèl), n. Photom. A light standard much used in France, being the light from a lamp (Carcel lamp) of stated size and construction consuming 42 grams of colza oil per hour with a flame 40 millimeters in height. Its illuminating power is from 8.9 to 9.6 British standard candles.

Carcel lamp. [After B. G. Carcel (d.1812), the inventor.] a A French mechanical lamp, in which the oil is pumped to the wick tube by clockwork. b See CARCEL.

car'ci-no'ma (-si-nô'má), n.; L. pl. -NOMATA (-má-tá). [L., fr. Gr. καρκίωμα, fr. καρκίος crab, cancer. See oma.] Med. Any of a class of cancers, typically painful and tender, arising from epithelioid or hypoblastic epithelia. The neighboring lymphatic glands become large and tender. Carcinomata include the majority of malignant tumors.

card (kárd), n. [F. carte, L. charta, Gr. χάρτης a leaf of paper.] 1. A playing card. 2. In pl. A game or games played with cards; card playing. 3. A person or thing compared to, or thought of as resembling, some card, the effect of playing which in a game is in mind; — used with adjectives, as sure, good, safe, likely, doubtful, etc. 4. A flat, stiff, usually rectangular, piece of paper or thin paste-board, variously used; as, a post card, indicator card, Easter card, birthday card. 5. A program of, or a form for keeping a record of, the items of races, games, etc.; hence, an attraction; as, a drawing card. 6. A published note of explanation, request, etc., as in a newspaper. U. S.
