[The remainder of the page contains several paragraphs of extremely faint, illegible text, likely representing the body of a memorandum or report.]

PREFACE

The new impression of the smaller edition of the Royal Picture Gallery Catalogue is based on the excellent catalogue compiled by Wirkl. Geheimer Rat Karl Woermann, with such revision and alterations as have been found necessary to bring it up to date. To the historical and critical remarks have been added particulars as to the mode of acquisition of each picture, while a more effective type has been employed. The numerous pictures loaned to other places are not included in the text proper, but will be found in a brief appendix. In view of the fact that the whole collection without exception has been photographed by authority for inclusion in a larger Catalogue now in preparation, detailed information on this point has been omitted.

For the guidance of those using this catalogue the following directions are given:

1. The room in which the picture is hung is designated by a capital letter in the case of the large rooms, including those of the wings, on the first floor, and by figures in the case of the small rooms (Kabinette) on all three floors. The figure following the capital letter or the letter following the figure shows on which wall the picture hangs. Compare plan.

2. The measurements are given in metres and centimetres.

3. The abbreviations G.=W., N. G.=W., G.=W. N.F. refer to the Engravings of the 18th and 19th Centuries which are on sale singly or collectively in the Secretary's office.

PREFACE

4. The pictures temporarily housed in the business premises of the gallery and more particularly in the old "Landhaus" are designated by the expression "Store-rooms".

The English translation has been made by M^r Harry Virgin M.A. Oxford.

POSSE

INTRODUCTION

The Dresden Royal Picture Gallery is in its essential features the creation of the two art and splendour loving princes who, as Electors of Saxony, are known as Friedrich August I and Friedrich August II, and, as Kings of Poland, as Friedrich August II (Augustus the Strong) and Friedrich August III. It follows as a matter of course that the taste of XVII. Century Collectors, who only recognized, outside the artists of their own day, the great masters of the XVI. and XVII. Centuries and held in small esteem the earlier Schools, reflects itself in the bulk of the pictures in the Dresden Collection even at the present day.

Even before the XVIII. Century the reigning House of Saxony already possessed in its Kunstkammer and Palaces a nucleus of pictures in which even the old masters were, to some extent at least, represented, and the exertions of the XIX. Century have been directed towards establishing a department of contemporary art and also towards filling in lacunae in the earlier Schools.

In the history of the gradual growth of the Dresden Gallery three distinct periods may be traced. The first, which is so to speak introductory, embraces the XVI. and XVII. Centuries, the second the XVIII. and the third the period from the beginning of the XIX. up to the present day.

We may date the commencement of the first of these periods in the year 1560, when the Elector August set apart the rooms above his suite of apartments in the Royal Palace as a "Kunstkammer" for his collection of works of art and curios of every description, such as generally obtained at the princely courts of that time.

This period of the history of the Collection is merely the early history of the Kunstkammer, which, be it mentioned, did not by any means cease to exist as such, when the greater number of its best pictures were transferred to the Gallery proper in 1722. According to the inventory of 1587 it possessed at that time, besides the recently acquired "16 exquisitely painted panels" by Hans Bols of which nine (Nos. 822—890) are now in the Gallery, only two celebrated pictures by distinguished artists viz: "Adam" (No. 1911) and "Eve" (No. 1912) by Lucas Cranach the Elder, and, until the inventory of 1640 was made, the only additions, apart from unknown German artists, were a few masterpiece of the Elder Cranach, the seven important pictures from Dürer's Studio (Nos. 1875 to 1881), the five Swabian panels of the Childhood of the Saviour (Nos. 1896—1900) and a few more small panels by Hans Bols.

INTRODUCTION

The fact that the art treasures of the Kunstammer were greatly increased in the second half of the XVII. Century and the first decade of the XVIII, is proved by the remark "taken from the Kunstammer", put after 284 pictures in the first Gallery inventory of 1722 and is still further evidenced by a catalogue compiled by Hantzsch of the pictures which were taken from the Kunstammer in 1717 and distributed in the various apartments of the palace.

Among these pictures were a number of important works, as for example Giorgione's "Venus" (No. 185), Paudiss' Portrait of a young man in a grey hat (No. 1596), described in the inventory of 1722 as "the artist's own portrait", "Chalking up the Score" by David Teniers the Younger (No. 1073), Gerard Dou's "Old Woman Sewing" and several pictures by Wouwerman.

The second period, during which the Gallery proper may be said to have been founded, dates from the accession in 1694 of Augustus the Strong, during whose reign the best of the before mentioned pictures of the Kunstammer were in all probability acquired.

In Dresden the purchases were at first directed by the Chief Court-painter Samuel Böttsch (1642-1707), through whom for example Dürer's "Dresden Altar" (No. 1869) was acquired from the Wittenberg "Schlosskirche" in 1687, and were afterwards continued by the Cabinet Minister Graf von Wackerbarth, Fieldmarshall von Flemming and more particularly by Baron Raymond Le Plat, Chief Court-architect at the Electoral Court of Saxony.

At that time Antwerp was the principal head quarters abroad of the Saxon agents for the acquisition of pictures. In 1708 and 1709 the King-Elector caused a number of works of the Flemish and Dutch Schools to be purchased there through his "Premier Commissaire" Raschke, whilst those acquired from Italy passed mostly through the hands of a certain Kindermann. In this may a number of choice works had already been secured in 1722.

The Flemish School was represented by Rubens (No. 962 A), Jordaens (No. 1009), Teniers (Nos. 1066, 1072, 1076, 1082, 1085, 1085 A) and Vandyck (Nos. 1022 and 1023); the Dutch School by Dou (Nos. 1704-1706, 1711-1716), Matsu (No. 1736), Terborch (No. 1830), Bol (No. 1606), Wouwerman (Nos. 1413, 1415, 1419, 1427, 1428, 1433, 1451, 1452, 1459, 1460) and J. D. de Heem (Nos. 1261, 1262 and 1267); Italy by Cima da Conegliano (No. 62), Fr. Albano (No. 340) and a good many painters of the early XVII. Century; and finally the French School by Nicolas Poussin (No. 719). Augustus the Strong now decided to have an inventory made of his collections, and to select the best specimens from such with a view to the formation of a recognized Picture Gallery.

In 1722 he caused the 1938 pictures which were destined to institute the Gallery to be placed, under the direction of Le Plat, his "premier architecte" before mentioned, in the second storey of the "Stallgebäude" adjoining the "Jüdenhof".

Le Plat and the "Geh. Cämmerier" Steinhäuser were appointed the first Gallery inspectors. On Steinhäuser devolved the duty of preparing catalogues, and the fruits of his labours may be seen in the excellent inventories which are still extant. As regards the purchase of pictures however Le Plat was as heretofore the moving spirit, and thanks to his judgment and capacity so many excellent works were secured that, at the death of Augustus the Strong in 1733, the Gallery could vie with the best collections of that time. Among its treasures we may mention Rembrandt's "Samson expounding his riddle" (No. 1560) and his "Portrait of himself" (No. 1569), Vandyck's "Drunken Silenus" (No. 1017), J. Jordaan's "Wie die Alten sungen" (No. 1014), Palma Vecchios "Holy Family" (No. 191) and "Venus" (No. 190), Guido Reni's "Venus and Cupid" (No. 324) and Padovanino's "Judith with the Head of Holofernes" (No. 525).

But by far the most brilliant epoch in the history of the Gallery was the time of Augustus III, successor of Augustus the Strong, who during a reign of thirty years brought together in his capital the greater part of those master-pieces on which the world-wide fame of the Dresden Gallery rests.

This Monarch's puissant and capable Minister, Graf von Brühl, in his characteristically masterful manner took entirely into his own hands all further acquisitions of works of art. The real connoisseur of art at the Saxon court, however, was Brühl's private secretary, Carl Heinrich von Heineken, who was invested by the Count with full powers to use his own judgment in the selection of pictures. He is known as the author of "Nachrichten von Künstlern und Kunst-sachen" (Notes on Artists and Works of Art) and of the "Dictionnaire des artistes", the manuscript of which is still preserved in the Dresden Gallery of Engravings.

Under the direction of this able man, Saxon agents were employed in all the Art-centres of Europe. Diplomatic representatives were enrolled in the service in the principal capitals, while to less important places artists or specialists were delegated.

First and foremost Italy was the chief field of activity displayed by the King's emissaries. In Venice they were under the supervision of Count Villio, the

INTRODUCTION

Saxon Ambassador. One of the most enterprising of these agents was Ventura Rossi, who in 1738 sent 44 pictures to Dresden, among them being Ribera's "S. Francis on the Bed of Thorns" (No. 685), in 1741 as many as 70 including the great "Presentation in the Temple" by Paolo Farinati (No. 223), and in 1744 a further 65, among which were two Madonnas by Sassoferrato (Nos. 430 and 431). Rossi, however, was outrivalled by the brilliant writer Count Algarotti, who visited Italy in 1743 for the sole purpose of securing pictures for the Saxon Court, and his purchases, though fewer in number than those of Rossi, surpassed them in value. Among them we may mention the Holbein Madonna which, even though no longer ranking as an original, will always be one of the gems of this Gallery, and the "Three Sisters" by Palma Vecchio (No. 189).

All previous and succeeding purchases were however eclipsed by that of the renowned collection of Duke Francis III of Modena effected by Count Villio, Ventura Rossi and the celebrated art-critic Antonio Maria Zanetti in Venice. By this transaction the Saxon Court came into possession, at a single stroke, of a magnificent collection of first class works by great Italian Masters such as had never before been seen north of the Alps. The sum paid for them amounted to 100,000 sequins, to which must be added considerable incidental expenses. Included among these valuable acquisitions were all the works by Correggio which this Gallery possesses, almost all those by Dosso Dossi and Garofalo, the chief pictures of A. Carracci, Guido Reni and Guercino, Titian's "Tribute Money" (No. 169) and the best of this artist's portraits, four large paintings by Paul Veronese from the Cuccina Palace (Nos. 225-228), Andrea del Sarto's "Offering of Isaac" (No. 77) and Giulio Romano's "Madonna del Catino", together with some important works by other than Italian painters, e. g. Holbein's "Portrait of Moretti" (No. 1890), the fine portrait by Velasquez (No. 697) and Rubens' S. Jerome (No. 955).

The Modena pictures reached Dresden in 1746, but Augustus III and Count Brühl were far from relinquishing the idea of further purchases in Italy. To mention a few, Zanetti acquired in 1747 the wonderful "Santa Conversazione" (Madonna and Child) by Titian (No. 168) in Venice. In 1748 Bernardo Benzoni purchased Gessi's "Repentant Magdalene". In 1749 the Director of the Gallery, Guarienti, visited North Italy in person and returned with several masterpieces, including Palma Vecchio's "Virgin and Child" (No. 188). In 1750 the painter Siegm. Striebel bought the fine "Holy Family" by Garofalo (No. 134) in Rome, and in 1752 the "Canonicus" Luigi Crespi sent from Bologna Guido Reni's "Ninus and Semiramis". Of all the confidential agents the most successful was the painter Carlo Cesare Giovannini of Bologna who in 1754 accured for 20,000 ducats the Madonna di San Sisto by Raphael (No. 93), still the most celebrated picture of this gallery, which up to that time had adorned the High-altar of the Church of San Sisto at Piacenza.

INTRODUCTION

On this side the Alps the principal theatres of the Saxon agents' efforts were Bohemia and Paris. To begin with, the Wallenstein-Collection at Dux was acquired in 1741, 268 pictures for 22,000 florins, including the masterpiece by Jan Vermeer of Delft (No. 1335) and the two beautiful little portraits by Frans Hals (Nos. 1358 and 1359). Next followed 48 pictures from Prague in 1742, among them Fr. Snyder's "Still-life with a dog and her puppies" (No. 1192). The most important acquisition from this town was made in 1749, when 69 pictures of the Prague Gallery, including Rubens' "Boar Hunt" (No. 962), passed into the possession of the Dresden Gallery for the sum of 50,000 thalers.

Hardly less favourable a field was afforded by Paris, from which city the Secretary of Legation de Brais and his man of business Le Leu, who had the advantage of the advice of the noted painter Rigaud, acquired in 1742 a number of valuable paintings for 86,346 livres from the effects of Prince Carignan, including both the principal Carlo Dolcis in this gallery (Nos. 509 and 510), Poussin's "Adoration of the Kings" (No. 717), Rembrandt's "Portrait of his wife" (No. 1562) and Rubens' "Lion Hunt". On the death of de Brais, in the same year, Le Leu became solely responsible for further purchases and in 1749 and succeeding years he was able to send to Dresden among other pictures Rembrandt's "Portrait of himself with his wife on his lap" (No. 1559), Dou's "Violin-player" (No. 1707) and a number of Wouwerman's later works (Nos. 1417, 1424, 1444, 1446, 1448, 1463, 1464).

As may naturally be supposed, purchases on such a gigantic scale entailed the employment of able coadjutors under the supervision of Brühl and Heineken. Le Plat died in 1742, and the Bohemian painter Joh. Gottfried Riedel, who had been appointed court-painter in 1739, was made Inspector of the Picture Gallery conjointly with the aged Steinhäuser. At the very outset of his official career Riedel found himself faced by an entirely new problem. The premises were becoming too limited to accommodate the pictures of the collection, swelled as it was by the recent acquisitions during 1741 and 1742. The upper part of the "Stallgebäude" therefore was adapted for their reception and formed into a Gallery proper in the modern sense (the present "Johanneum"), where the collection remained until past the middle of the XIX. Century. This work was begun in 1744 and finished in 1746 and during the interval the pictures were housed in the Japanese Palace. Steinhäuser had the satisfaction of admitting the Modena acquisitions into the new premises before retiring. To fill the vacancy thus caused, the Venetian painter and expert Pietro Guarienti was chosen September 10th 1746 to act with Joh. Gottfried Riedel as co-inspector. Guarienti died on May 27th 1753, before however having completed the new inventory in Italian which he was then engaged in compiling. Owing to the ever-increasing press of work two sub-inspectors were appointed to assist Riedel, in the persons of his son Joh. Anton and of Matthias Oesterreich who had hitherto filled a post in the Gallery of Engravings, and was the compiler of the inventory of 1754. In the year 1755 the elder Riedel died, and in 1757 Oesterreich was appointed Director of the Gallery of Sanssouci. From this time until 1816 the younger Riedel acted as sole director. During the Seven Years' War, which put an end to further purchases, the work entailed was not too severe for one man to cope with, the most important duty being to ensure the safety of the pictures, which as a precautionary measure were packed in cases and sent to the fortress of Königstein, from which they were reconveyed to Dresden after the peace of Hubertusburg in 1763.

INTRODUCTION

The intention of the King and his adviser Count Brühl to resume their favorite project was frustrated by the death of both in October 1763, and no further efforts were made to augment the collection during the rest of the century. Augustus was succeeded by Friedrich August "the Just" who reigned far into the XIX. Century. On the death of his patrons, Heineken was forced to retire from his confidential post and was succeeded by C. L. Hagedorn of Hamburg, who from 1763 to 1780 was "Generaldirector der Künste und Kunstakademien, auch zugehöriger Gallerien und Kabinetts" (Director-General of Fine Arts and the Academy and the Galleries etc. thereto appertaining). After his death the Cabinet-minister Count Marcolini (died 1814), became Director-General. During the whole of this time, however, the managing director was Joh. Anton Riedel until his death in 1816. The third period of the history of the Dresden Gallery belongs entirely to XIX. Century.

INTRODUCTION

On the death in 1823 of Riedel's successor, Carl Fr. Demiani, who for five years previously to his appointment had been sub-inspector, the historical painter Joh. Friedr. Matthäi, in addition to being Professor and for a while Director of the Academy of Arts, was appointed Director of the Gallery. Under him the most renowned picture-restorer of the day, Pietro Palmaroli, was summoned from Rome to Dresden in order to take in hand the restoration of a number of the most important pictures, in which task he acquitted himself with the utmost skill. By order of the Cabinet-minister B. von Lindenau a thorough revision of the store-rooms (viz: premises not opened to the public) was made, whereby a number of excellent pictures were brought to light, which had either hitherto escaped notice, or had been acquired by degrees in the interval. These pictures were assigned to the Gallery, a very considerable addition, which becomes evident by consulting Matthäi's catalogue of 1835. Finally in 1836 a Board of Commissioners was constituted on whom, devolved the duty of assisting not only in supervising the works of restoration but also at a later date, when means became available for the purpose, in the acquisition of new pictures.

Matthäi undertook an official visit to Vienna, where he died October 23rd 1845, and the distinguished artist Julius Schnorr von Carolsfeld, who was staying in Munich at the time, was invited to fill the posts of Professor of the Academy and Director of the Gallery. The offer was accepted, and in 1846 he took up the duties of his twofold office. Thereupon this third period in the history of the Gallery began to exhibit a new vitality, the seeds sown in the previous decade came to development and fruitage. The need of adequate accommodation had long been keenly felt and after mature deliberation the task of providing it was intrusted to Professor Gottfried Semper, Director of the Dresden School of Architecture. In 1847 this project was taken in hand, while in 1855 the new building, in which the Gallery is now located, was completed and thrown open to the public. Julius Hübner, a member of the Board of Commissioners and Professor of the Academy, undertook the new cataloguing of the pictures. The first edition appeared in 1856, the fifth in 1880, and a reprint as late as 1884. Julius Schnorr von Carolsfeld retired from his post as Director in 1871 and died in the following year. His successor, Julius Hübner, retained office as Director for ten years, retiring in 1882 and during the same year. The post was then offered to and accepted by the Professor of the History of Art, Dr. Karl Woermann, of Düsseldorf.

INTRODUCTION

During Schnorr's period of office, a considerable number of works by both old and modern masters were added to the Gallery from various sources. To begin with, fifteen pictures of the Spanish school, among them masterpieces such as Zurbaran's "S. Bonaventura" (No. 696) and Murillos "S. Rodriguez" (No. 704), were purchased in London in 1753 from the effects of Louis Philippe, King of the French. In 1860 Piero di Cosimo's "Holy Family" (No. 20), which was then ascribed to Luca Signorelli, Lorenzo di Credi's "Madonna and Child" (No. 13) and others were acquired from the effects of Mr. Sam Woodburn, the well known art-dealer, while the celebrated little picture by Albrecht Dürer, entitled "The Crucifixion" (No. 1870), was purchased in Vienna. In the seventies and early eighties money was especially plentiful, owing to large grants from the French War-indemnity. Of old Italian masters we would mention especially the "S. Sebastian" of Antonelli da Messina (No. 52), the painted pilasters from the studio of Luca Signorelli (Nos. 36 and 37), the beautiful portrait by Paolo Morando (No. 201), Mazzolini's "Ecce Homo" (No. 123) and Andrea Mantegna's exquisite "Holy Family"; and of Flemish masters Jean Steen's "Hagar" (No. 1727), Th. de Keyser's "Two Horsemen" (No. 1543), a "Still-life" by Heda (No. 1371) and the "Landscape" by Jan van der Meer van Haarlem (No. 1388A).

From parliamentary grants, which from this time were regularly made, the earlier schools were enriched by many valuable acquisitions, e. g. the "Portrait of Mr. James" by Sir Joshua Reynolds (No. 1798C) in 1891, the "Vision of Jacob's Ladder" by G. van den Eeckhout (No. 1618A) in 1892, the celebrated "Death of S. Clara" by Murillo (No. 1703B) in 1894, Cosimo Tura's "S. Sebastian" (No. 42A) in 1896, Sir Henry Raeburn's fine "Portrait of Bishop O'Beirne" (No. 798D) in 1897, the well known "Watermill" by Hobema (No. 1664A) in 1899, the wonderful "Lamentation over Christ" by the "Meister des Hausbuchs" (No. 1868A) in 1903, the "Dutch Landscape" by Philips Koninck (No. 1612A) in 1905 and Hendrick Gerritsz. Pot's "Cardplayers" (No. 1369A) in 1908.

The first step towards furthering the acquisition of modern pictures was taken by the then "Staatsminister" and Director General Von Lindenau who, on his retirement from office in 1843, devoted 700 thalers of his pension annually to the purchase of pictures by living artists. To this "Lindenau-Stiftung" the Gallery is indebted for, among others, A. L. Richter's "Bridal Procession",

On March 31st 1848 the Council of the Academy passed a resolution to devote a moiety of the nett proceeds of all exhibitions to the purchase of pictures exhibited in the Academy. In this manner the Gallery came into possession of, among others, Gross' "Leda and the Swan", Kummer's "Sunset", Lier's "Oise by Moonlight" and Choulant's "Ponte di Sant Angelo".

INTRODUCTION

Out of the "public fund for the purchase of works of art", supported by state grants, the Gallery was enabled to secure in the sixties such works as Hübner's "Disputation between Luther and Dr. Eck" and Hofmann's "Woman taken in adultery, before Christ".

It was not however until the previously mentioned special grant that the purchase on a large scale of prominent works of living artists could be undertaken. By this means, during the sixties and seventies, were acquired by degrees most of those pictures which now enable this section to vie in interest with that of the old masters. It should be mentioned that since 1884, when the fund, which was not re-voted, became exhausted, the management has had to depend on the means placed at its disposal through grants made in each financial period.

We must here mention that the painter Max Heinrich Ed. Pröll, who assumed by royal licence the name of Pröll-Heuer after his foster-father, the colourman Anton Heuer, bequeathed to the Dresden Academy, on his death in 1879, a considerable sum, from the interest of which pictures of living German artist's are purchased every year at exhibitions held in Dresden, the selection being made by the Council of the Academy. To this Pröll-Heuer bequest the Gallery is indebted for over a hundred pictures, some of them excellent ones, by recent artists.

Of other bequests and donations during late years special mention should be made of the following: Professor Bertrand's donation, through which the Gallery was enriched in 1882 by five first-class pictures by Anton Graff (Nos. 2173 to 2177), the Moritz Winkler bequest, through which nine modern works, among them the masterpieces of Andreas and Oswald Achenbach, passed to the Gallery in 1884, the Ed. Nossky bequest from the proceeds of which no fewer than nineteen pictures, including two modern ones, were acquired, the Hofrat W. Lesky donation, in the year 1897, by which the Gallery became possessed of Böcklin's "Pan and Syrinx", the donation of W. Trübner's "Portrait of himself" of the original wing of the Uhde "Altarpiece" by Mr. L. Uhle, of Böcklin's "Summerday" by the Wirkl. Geh. Kommerzienrat Lingner, and of three of J. A. Koch's landscapes, six works of A. L. Richter and W. Kalf's exquisite "Kit-den Interior" (No. 1639 A) by Mr. Ed. Cichorius.

INTRODUCTION

The appointment of Woermann, not an artist by profession but an art-critic and historian, has been productive of the most beneficial results to the Gallery as regards both its management and enlargement. In the first place the art-treasures were now catalogued on a thoroughly critical and scientific basis. This catalogue appeared in 1887, and during the twenty-eight years of the author's tenure of office has gone through seven editions. In the second place a reform was introduced in the method of restoration, advantage being taken of modern technique and science. This was carried out with the assistance of first-class practical and theoretical experts, so that to day the Gallery ranks among the best ordered in Europe.

Thirdly, such means as were at the disposal of the management were devoted to the enlargement of the Gallery, and more particularly of the modern section. Under Woermann's regime as many as 219 works of modern and 63 of earlier masters were acquired, as well as 5 pastels and 34 miniatures. This constant increase made the question of accommodation again a problem of the first importance, and to relieve the congestion, 308 pictures were loaned to other places, while considerable additional room was obtained by the removal of the sculptures from the east ground-floor of the building. Various circumstances, but more particularly lack of means, prevented a radical and systematic rearrangement of the collection to satisfy the growing interest of all classes of society. This task Woermann had to leave to his successor on his retirement, March 31st 1910, and the conditions of the present seem to be favourable for its solution, inasmuch as considerable public grants have been made in addition to large sums privately subscribed. At the same time there seems to be fair hope for the realization of a scheme which Woermann had strongly recommended, viz: to devote a specially constructed building to the modern section. The "Dresdner Museum-Verein", called into being by Oberbürgermeister Dr. Beutler in December 1911, has promised to take a prominent part in this scheme. It has shown its keen interest in the Gallery's welfare by presenting Hans von Marée's portrait of himself (No. 2399 A), a work of special importance for Dresden. A rearrangement of the pictures has necessitated the removal of works of inferior merit to the old Houses of Parliament (altes Landhaus) where they are open to the public on certain days. By the courtesy of the Ministry of Finance these pictures are allowed to remain here until room can be found for them in that part of the Zwinger which now contains the Natural History Museum Collections.

ANTWERP SCHOOL

RUBENS, PETRUS PAULUS. Born at Siegen or Cologne June 28th 1577; died at Antwerp May 30th 1640. Pupil of Tobias Verhaegt, of Adam van Noort and of Otho van Veen in Antwerp. Was in Italy from 1600 until 1608. One of the most distinguished artists of the Antwerp School.

In his work Rubens used to avail himself to a very great extent of the assistance of his pupils, and the line between his own work and that done in his studio is therefore more difficult to draw than in the case of any other master. The first group of the following pictures contains those works which we consider entirely or principally by the master's own hand; in a second group we place those works which we must attribute to the studio of the master, and in which some assistance by the master's own hand is not impossible; in the third and fourth groups are the copies by other hands or the works of pupils.

CRANACH THE ELDER, LUCAS. Named after his birth-place. His family name is uncertain. Born at Kronach in Franconia in Oct. 1472; died at Weimar Oct. 16th 1553. Founder of the Saxon School in Wittenberg.

The studio sign of the master, a winged serpent (up to 1537 with outstretched, after 1537 with folded wings), is also found on the pictures of his sons Lucas Cranach the Younger and Hans Cranach, and even upon pictures by the hand of unknown apprentices. Whether a picture with the sign is by the hand of Lucas Cranach the Elder, Lucas Cranach the Younger, Hans Cranach, or only from the studio of one or the other can therefore only be decided by internal evidence, unless the date or origin of the picture should supply any reliable information. Some pictures can only be acknowledged as partly by the master's own hand.¹

THE TAPESTRIES

THE RAPHAEL TAPESTRIES ARE HUNG IN THE CUPOLA ROOM (G) OF THE ROYAL PICTURE GALLERY. THE OLD FLEMISH SERIES ARE AT PRESENT IN THE STORE-ROOMS OF THE PICTURE GALLERY

OLD FLEMISH TAPESTRIES

SIX HANGINGS from the XVI. Century, richly interwoven with gold thread. The names of the artists who designed them cannot be determined. The four larger ones (a, b, c, d) belong to the School of Quinten Massy, the two smaller ones (e, f) betray a weaker hand. The tapestries probably belonged to the two "Passion" series, which are mentioned as early as 1565 and 1589 in the inventories of the "Tapezereigewölbe" of the Electors as the "Old Passion" (probably e, f) and the "New Passion" (a to d). The "New Passion" was presumably woven about 1550 by a Flemish tapestry artist (probably of Brussels) from patterns brought from Dresden and is mentioned as adorning the Chapel Royal (Schlosskapelle) as early as 1554.

THE RAPHAEL TAPESTRIES

These are replicas of six out of the ten tapestries, representing scenes from the Acts of the Apostles, which Leo X caused to be woven in Brussels for the walls of the Sistine Chapel in the Vatican, from the cartoons painted by Raphael in 1515 to 1516, seven of which are still preserved in the South Kensington Museum in London. Our six replicas, the borders of which, with figures of Apostles etc., cannot be traced back to Raphael but point to the XVII. Century, were produced at this later period, and probably woven in England. They passed from England to Paris in 1700 and from Paris in 1723 into the
