POZZO, ANDREAS, was born at Trent in 1642. Without the assistance of a master he became an eminent architect and painter. By studying the works of the Venetian school he became an excellent colourist, and during a residence of several years at Rome he improved his style of design. In 1665 he entered the society of Jesus, and was afterwards chiefly occupied in ornamenting the churches of his order. He resided some time at Genoa, where he painted for the Congregazione de Mercanti four pictures of the 'Life of our Saviour,' in the style of Rubens, which he had studied during a previous residence at Turin. Of his works in oil, one of the most esteemed is his picture of 'San Francesco Borgia,' in the Jesuits' church at Rome. He was more eminent in fresco, in which his masterpiece, perhaps, is the ceiling of the church of St. Ignatius at Rome. Such was his facility that Ciro Ferri was accustomed to say, that the horses of other painters moved at a foot's pace, but those of Pozzo were always on the gallop; and Lanzi reports, that he painted the portrait of a cardinal in four hours. He was invited to Vienna by the Emperor Leopold, where he executed some works for public buildings, and died in 1709. He also worked at Modena, Montepulciano, Arezzo, and Bologna. His brother, Padre GIUSEPPE Pozzo, a barefooted and Carmelite monk of Venice, decorated the high altar of the church of the Scalzi in that city during the last years of the 17th century.

POZZOBONELLI, GIULIANO, an obscure Milanese, who was painting in that city in 1605.

POZZO SERRATO, LODOVICO. See TOEPUT.

PRADIER, CHARLES SIMON, a French engraver, but a native of Geneva, was born in 1790, and was a scholar of Desnoyers. He was the brother of James Pradier, the celebrated sculptor, and died in 1848. Among his principal plates are several portraits after Gérard, and the following:

La Vierge aux Ruines; after Raphael.
Titian's Daughter; after Titian.

Cupid and Psyche; after Gérard.

Virgil reading the 'Æneid' to Augustus; after the same.

Zephyr caressing Flora; after the same.

Raphael and the Fornarina; after Ingres.

Jesus Christ giving the keys to St. Peter; after the same.

Virgil reading the Sixth Book of the 'Æneid' to Augustus; after the same.

Antiochus; after the same.

PRAG, THEODORICH VON, was an artist, who flourished from 1348 to 1375, and was court painter at Prague to the Emperor Karl IV. He is now regarded as the probable author of a 'Christ on the Cross,' and 'The Church Teachers, Ambrosius and Augustine,' which have been removed to the Belvedere from the chapel of Carlstein Castle, in Bohemia, and which were formerly attributed to Nicolaus Wurmser. Theodorich also painted an altar-piece in the Raudnitz Monastery, now placed in the Gallery of Prague.

PRAMPOLINI, ALESSANDRO, a landscape painter, who was born at Reggio, in the Emilia, in 1827, and died there in 1865, is known chiefly by his views of the neighbourhood of Tivoli and of the Roman Ruins. He was professor of painting at Reggio.

PRANKER, ROBERT, was an English line engraver, who was much employed by the booksellers. He married the daughter of Gerard van der Gucht, and became in 1763 a member of the Free Society of Artists.

PRATA, RANUNZIO, a native of Milan, who painted in Pavia about 1635.

PRATO, FRANCESCO DEL, an Italian still-life painter. He was first a goldsmith, but afterwards turned to painting, and put himself under the instruction of Salviati. He died in 1562.

PRATO, GIROLAMO DEL, draughtsman, sculptor, niellist, and goldsmith, flourished at Cremona in the first half of the 16th century. He has been sometimes called the 'Lombard Cellini.'

PRATO VECCHIO, JACOPO DA. See LANDINO.

PRATT, MATTHEW, an American portrait painter, born at Philadelphia in 1734. He began life as a sign painter, but afterwards studied four years with West. He assisted Peale in establishing his museum at Philadelphia, and died in 1805.

PRATTENT, T., an engraver who practised at the end of the 18th century, by whom there are some etchings in the 'Gentleman's Magazine.'

PRECIADO, FRANCISCO, (or PREZIADO,) was born, according to Lanzi, at Deville in 1713. He was a scholar of Domingo Martinez, but he visited Rome in 1733, where he entered the school of Sebastiano Conca. On leaving him he painted some pictures for the public edifices at Rome, particularly a 'Holy Family' for the church of the Forty Saints, which is entirely in the style of his instructor. He was appointed painter to the camera of Ferdinand VI., and director of the Spanish Academy at Rome. There are few of his works in his native country, as he resided the greater part of his life at Rome, where he died in 1789.

PREIRA. See PEREIRA.

PREISLER, DANIEL, (or PREISSLER,) was born at Prague in 1627, and in 1654 became a master of the Landau Brotherhood at Nuremberg, through his painting of 'The Death of Abel.' He died at that city in 1665. The Brunswick Gallery possesses a male portrait by him, and two of the churches of Nuremberg contain his 'Descent of the Holy Ghost' and 'The Ascension of Christ.' He was the founder of the Preisler family of artists, being the father of Johann Daniel, and consequently the grandfather of four others named below, and the great-grandfather of Johann Georg Preisler, the last of the name.

PREISLER, GEORG MARTIN, the second son of Johann Daniel Preisler, was born at Nuremberg in 1700, and followed his brother Johann Justin Preisler to Italy, where he resided some years. He was one of the engravers employed by Stosch for his work on antique gems. He died at Nuremberg in 1754. Huber speaks of him as a painter of portraits; but he is most worthy of notice as an engraver. Besides some plates after the statues in the Dresden Gallery, and a set of twenty-one plates from drawings made by Johann Justin Preisler, after statues at Rome and Florence, there are the following prints by him:

PORTRAITS.

Raphael. (His chef-d'œuvre.)

Giovanni Domenico Campiglia, painter; after himself.
Eglon van der Neer; after the portrait by himself in the Florentine Gallery.

PREISLER, JOHANN DANIEL, son of Daniel Preisler, was born at Nuremberg in 1666, and died there in 1737. He was a pupil of his stepfather, H. Popp, and of J. Mürrer, and came to be principal of the school of design in his native city, for which he also published a drawing-book. He painted 'The Four Evangelists' on the ceiling of the Ægidienkirche. He was the father of four of the artists cited in this series of articles (Johann Justin, Georg Martin, Johann Martin, and Valentin Daniel) and of BARBARA HELENA PREISLER. (See OEDING.)

PREISLER, JOHANN GEORG, the son of Johann Martin Preisler, was born at Copenhagen in 1757. After receiving some instruction in engraving from his father he entered the Academy of his birthplace, where in 1780 he obtained the gold medal for his plate of 'Christ and the Samaritan Woman.' In the following year he went to Paris, where he became a pupil of Jean George Wille. He engraved several plates in the style of his instructor, and in 1787 was made a member of the Academy in Paris. His plate of reception represented 'Dædalus and Icarus,' engraved from a picture by Vien. After his return he was in 1788 admitted a member of the Academy of Copenhagen. He died at Lyngby, near that city, in 1831.

PREISLER, JOHANN JUSTIN, a German painter and engraver, the eldest son of Johann Daniel Preisler, was born at Nuremberg in 1698. He was instructed in design by his father, and afterwards visited Italy, where he resided eight years. On his return to Germany he gave proof of considerable ability in a picture representing the 'Ascension of Christ,' for one of the hospitals at Nuremberg, where he died in 1771. He is, however, more known as an engraver than as a painter. The following prints are by him:

The Four Elements; after Bouchardon.

The Four Quarters of the World; after the same.

A set of fifty plates of the principal antique statues at Rome; from the designs of Bouchardon.

Part of the plates from the ceilings painted by Rubens, in the church of the Jesuits at Antwerp, with the frontispiece, containing the portraits of Rubens and Van Dyck.

PREISLER, JOHANN MARTIN, the third son of Johann Daniel Preisler, was born at Nuremberg in 1715. He was instructed in engraving by his father and his eldest brother; but in 1739 he visited Paris, where he received some lessons from Georg Friedrich Schmidt. In 1744 he was invited to the court of Denmark, and became engraver to the king, and a member of the Academy at Copenhagen, near which city (at Lyngby) he died in 1794. There are several plates by this artist, among them the following:

PORTRAITS.

Frederick V., King of Denmark and Norway, and his Consort; after Tilo. 1748.
 Christian VI., King of Denmark; after Wahl.
 Jacobus Benzelius, Bishop of Upsal. 1751.
 Otto, Count de Thot; after Krafft.
 Johan Wiedewelt, sculptor; after P. Alst. 1772.
 Klopstock; after Juel. 1782.
 Equestrian Statue of Frederick V.; after the original in bronze by J. Saly.
 Cardinal de Bouillon; after Rigaud.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

David and Abigail; after Guido Reni.
 Semiramis putting the Crown of Ninus on her head; after the same.
 Christ bearing His Cross; after Paolo Veronese. This and the preceding print were for the Dresden Gallery.
 Ganymede taken up by the Eagle of Jupiter; after Pierre.
 A Bacchanalian subject; after the same.
 Laban seeking for his Gods; after Cazes.
 The Triumph of David; after Trevisani.
 Jonah preaching to the Ninevites; after Salvator Rosa.
 The 'Madonna della Seggiola'; after Raphael.
 Many plates from antique statues in the galleries of Italy and Germany.

PREISLER, VALENTIN DANIEL, the fourth and youngest son of Johann Daniel Preisler, was born at Nuremberg in 1717, and studied under his brother Johann Martin. There are by him some mezzotint portraits of the Burgomasters of Zurich, after the designs of J. C. Füssli, which, from some caprice, he signed with the name of S. Walch. He also scraped some plates of portraits and historical subjects, after pictures in the collection of the King of Denmark. He died in 1765. Nagler enumerates twenty-six pieces by him; one is a 'Virgin and Child,' after Correggio.

PRELLER, FRIEDRICH JOHANN CHRISTIAN ERNST, painter and etcher, was born at Eisenach in 1804. He came when young to Weimar, but studied for two years at Dresden about 1820. In 1822 he returned to Weimar, and became the close friend of Goethe, and, through him, the protégé of the Grand Duke, Karl August. In 1827 Preller went to Rome, where he studied under Koch. Four years later he was again in Weimar, painting six large Thuringian landscapes, with historical incidents, for the Schloss, and decorating the Wieland Hall in the Museum with scenes from 'Oberon' in fresco, and a Hall in Leipsic with scenes from the 'Odyssey.' The sixteen cartoons for these latter pictures are in the Leipsic Museum. In 1840 Preller visited Norway, which provided him with subjects for many landscapes and 'marines.' He died at Weimar in 1878. Among his pictures we may also name:

Calyppo. (Munich.)
 Leucothea. (The same)
 Styrian Landscape. (Berlin National Gallery.)
 Norwegian Coast Scene. (The same.)

About 1830 Preller became interested in etching, and established a club for its encouragement. Among his own plates the best, perhaps, are the three following (B. M.):

Landscape with a View of the Ellersburg.
 Hüon, bound, and leaning against a Tree.
 Landscape with a Stag.

PRENNER, ANTON JOSEPH VON, a German engraver, was born at Vienna about the year 1698. After the death of Jacob Mannl, he undertook, conjointly with Andreas Altamont, Franas, Stampart, Johann Adam Schmutzer, and other artists to engrave all the pictures in the Imperial Collection. The plates, consisting of 160, were published at Vienna in four volumes, under the title 'Theatrum Artis Pictoriae,' in the years 1728 to 1733. He died in 1761. He has scraped a few plates in mezzotint, but they are inferior to his other works. He also engraved some portraits, among which are the following:

Johann Gottfried Auerbach, Painter to the Emperor Charles VI.
 Count d'Odé, Governor of Vienna; after J. G. Auerbach.

PRENNER, GEORG CASPAR VON, the son of Anton Joseph von Prenner, was born at Vienna about the year 1722. He went young to Italy, and studied painting at Rome for several years. In the church of Santa Dorotéa there is an altar-piece by this artist. There are a few etchings by him, some of which are neatly finished with the graver. He engraved some of the plates for the 'Museo Fiorentino,' and also those for the 'Illustri Fatti Farnesiani,' published at Rome in 1744 and 1746. He died in Italy in 1766.

PRENNER, JOHANN JOSEPH VON, was the younger son of Anton Joseph von Prenner, and was instructed in engraving by his father. He resided some years in Italy, where he executed some plates for the 'Museo Fiorentino.' He also engraved a set of forty-five prints from the paintings by Taddeo Zuccaro, in the Castle of Caprarolla, representing the most memorable actions of the Farnese family.

PRENTIS, EDWARD, an English subject painter, born in 1797. He was one of the earliest members of the Society of British Artists, where he exhibited from 1829 to 1850. In 1823-4 he exhibited at the Royal Academy. His works were generally of a domestic and humorous character, conveying some moral, and several of them were engraved. He died in 1854, leaving a widow and a large family. Works:

The Prodigal's return from the Alehouse. (1829.)
 Valentine's Eve. (1835.)
 The Hypocrite. (1838.)
 Morbid Sympathy. (1843.)
 The Folly of Extravagance. (1850.)

PRESTEL, JOHANN AMADEUS, (called also J. GOTTLIEB and J. THEOPHILUS,) a German painter and engraver, was born at Grönenbach, in Swabia, in 1739. He was at first a carpenter, but during the restoration of the abbey of Ottobeuren he learned drawing under F. A. Zeiller, and in 1760 went to Venice, where he studied painting under Giuseppe Nogari, and was instructed in engraving by Joseph Wagner. In 1767 he proceeded to Rome, where he spent four years in studying the antique and copying Pompeo Batoni. Two years later he settled at Nuremberg and married the engraver Maria Catherina Höll (see next article). In 1775 he spent some time in Zurich drawing portraits, after which he returned to Nuremberg, and devoted himself to reproducing drawings by the best masters—among other works executing the thirty plates of the 'Schmidt Cabinet,' and the forty-eight of the 'Braun Cabinet.' In 1783 he returned to Frankfort, where he died in 1808. In 1814 his son published fifty more of his plates. He worked in various styles; and left a great number of plates, most of which are first etched, and then finished in aquatint. He also engraved several plates in the crayon manner. Among others, we have the following prints by him :

The Portrait of himself, sitting at an easel; from his own design.

The Descent from the Cross; after Raphael; in chiaro-scuro.

The Virgin with the Dead Christ; after Van Dyck.

The Holy Family; copied from Albrecht Dürer.

PRESTEL, MARIA CATHARINA, (née HÖLL), was the pupil and afterwards wife of Johann Amadeus Prestel, whom she aided in some of his best plates, particularly in landscape. In 1786 she separated from him, and came with her daughter to England, where she engraved some prints, which are etched with spirit, and finished in a picturesque manner in aquatint. She died in London in 1794. She has left some seventy-three plates after Italian, Dutch, and German masters. Among others, the following prints are by her :

Ceres; an oval; after Cipriani.

Four Views from the designs made by Webber, in his voyage with Captain Cook.

Two other Views; from the same.

A pair of Views, with Horses and figures; after Casanova.

Hobbema's Village; after Hobbema.

Evening, with Cattle reposing; after Rosa di Tivoli.

Two Landscapes; after Gainsborough.

View of a Tin Mine; after Louthembourg.

Her daughter, URSULA MAGDALENA PRESTEL, afterwards REINHEIMER, was born at Nuremberg in 1777, and after residing with her mother some time in London, went on her marriage to Brussels, where she died in 1845. She painted portraits, landscapes, and flowers, and etched in aquatint.

PRESTON, THOMAS, called 'Captain Preston,' was an English engraver, who flourished in the reign of George II. He was an artist of little celebrity, whose name is affixed to a slight etching of a bust of Pope. There are also by him mezzotint portraits of Admiral Blake and James Naylor the Quaker. Preston is said to have died in 1759.

PRETE GENOVESE, IL. See GALANTINI; also STROZZI.

PRETI, GREGORIO, the brother of Mattia Preti. There is a fresco by him in the church of S. Carlo de' Catinari, at Rome.

PRETI, Cavaliere MATTIA, called IL CALABRESE, was born at Taverna in Calabria, or Ravenna, in 1613. After passing some time at Parma and Modena he went to Rome, to work with one of his brothers, GREGORIO, and was for a short time a scholar of Giovanni Lanfranco. The reputation Guercino had acquired by the novelty and grandeur of his style induced him to visit Cento, where he studied under that master for several years. He afterwards went to Venice and Bologna, where he painted some pictures for the public edifices, by which he acquired a considerable reputation. He returned to Rome about the year 1657, where he was employed to paint three pictures for the church of Sant' Andrea della Valle, representing subjects from the Life of that Saint. These, unfortunately for his fame, were placed immediately under the 'Four Evangelists,' painted by Domenichino. His repute reached Malta, whither he was invited by the grand master Cotoner, who commissioned him to ornament the cathedral with some frescoes, representing subjects from the life of St. John the Baptist; for these works Pope Urban VIII. conferred on him the knighthood of the order. He afterwards passed some time at Naples, where he painted some considerable works in fresco, in the church of the Carthusians. Preti was of a violent disposition, and was under the continual necessity of shifting his quarters to avoid the consequence of his quarrels. He usually chose the most terrific and gloomy subjects; and his pictures, which are in the style of Caravaggio and Ribera, frequently represent martyrdoms and scenes of death, to which his sombre style of colouring was particularly appropriate. Disgusted at the admiration bestowed on the works of Luca Giordano, he left Naples and returned to Malta, where he died in 1699, his death being caused, it is said, by a wound received from his barber. The paintings from his hand are innumerable; the following list contains some of the more remarkable :

Florence.	Uffizi.	His own Portrait.
"	Academy.	St. John the Evangelist.
Milan.	Breva.	Christ Blessing the Children.
Modena.	Museum.	Diogenes.
Naples.	S. Pietro a	} Legend of St. Catharine— Frescoes.
	Majella.
"	Museum.	The Return of the Prodigal.
Paris.	Louvre.	Martyrdom of St. Andrew.
Rome.	St. Andrea della	} Scenes from the Life of St. Andrew—Frescoes.
	Valle.
"	Doria Pal.	The Magdalene.
"	"	A Philosopher.

PRÉVOST, BENOÎT LOUIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1735, and was a pupil of Jean Ouvrier. He was a skilful engraver of vignettes, and the faithful interpreter of Cochin, after whose designs he executed about sixty pieces, including the fine frontispiece of the 'Encyclopédie,' 1770. He also engraved the vignettes after Moreau for Désormeaux's 'Histoire de la Maison de Bourbon.' He died in 1804. The following portraits also are by him :

Louis XV.; medallion profile; after Cochin. 1765.

Queen Marie Antoinette; after the same. 1776. (His chef d'œuvre.)

Armand Thomas Hue, Marquis de Miroménil; after the same. 1773.

Marquis de Marigny; monumental medallion. 1781.

Charles Nicolas Cochin, the younger, engraver; small medallion in head-piece of Jombert's 'Catalogue de l'Œuvre de Cochin,' 1770; after Prévost's own design.

The same; medallion; after himself. 1781.

Joseph Ignace Guillotin, physician; after J. M. Moreau. Voltaire walking in his Garden.

PRÉVOST, JACQUES, a French historical painter, born at Gray, in the department of Haute Saône, about 1546. He lived at Langres, where he painted a picture of the death of the Virgin for the church of St. Mamert. He was also an engraver.

PRÉVOST, JEAN, a Flemish historical painter, who settled at Bruges between 1493 and 1494. He was a native of Mons, as we gather from his title citizenship. He was a member of the Corporation of St. Luke as early as 1500 and dean in 1519 and 1521. He was married three times. His first wife died at Bruges, the other two were natives of that town. By the third wife he had three children, one, named Thomas Jean, was buried in the church of St. Giles. Prévost died in 1529. In the Academy of Bruges there is a picture by him of 'The Last Judgment,' painted in 1525. JENNIN PRÉVOST, who was at work at Bruges as early as 1468, may possibly be identical with Jean.

PRÉVOST, NICOLAS, (or PROVOST,) was a native of France, and is mentioned by the Abbé de Marolles as a painter and scholar of Claude Vignon. He flourished about the year 1666, and is said to have etched six small plates. Dumesnil is of opinion that he is the artist that painted the 'Decollation of St. John,' for the church of Notre Dame in Paris. He describes only one print by him, a 'Holy Family,' signed N. Prevost Jn.

PRÉVOST, PIERRE, a painter of panoramas and landscapes, was born at Montigny (Eure-et-Loir) in 1764. In the first place he worked at Valenciennes, but afterwards migrated to Paris. He painted a number of easel pictures, landscapes, and ruins, but his principal works were panoramas, which he, perhaps, was the first to exhibit in France. Among these were Paris, Naples, Amsterdam, London, Antwerp, Athens, Jerusalem, and various battles, in which he was assisted by Bouton and Daguerre. In 1817 Prévost visited Greece and Asia Minor with M. Forbin. He died in 1823.

PRÉVOST, ZACCHÉE, an engraver, was born in or about 1797, and became a pupil of Baron Regnault and of Bervic. The first large work exhibited by him, which established his reputation, was 'Corinne,' after Gérard. About 1830 he commenced engraving in aquatint, executing several plates after Leopold Robert and Delacroix. He soon, however, returned to line-engraving, and exhibited a large plate of the 'Marriage of Cana,' from the great Paolo Veronese in the Louvre. For this he was decorated. He died in 1861.

PREW, JÖRG, (BRÉU, or PREU,) was a painter at Augsburg in the 16th century, an imitator of Altdorfer. He was most likely identical with "Georg Prew von Aue, 1501," as he signs himself on a picture at Herzogenburg, in Austria. He began to work in Augsburg about 1500, and died there in 1536. The Munich Pinakothek contains a 'Battle of Zama' by him. It is signed JÖRG PREW, and with a monogram as well. The arms of Bavaria and the letters H.W. (Duke Wilhelm IV.) also appear upon it.

PREWITT, WILLIAM, an English miniature painter of considerable merit in the middle of the 18th century. He was a pupil of Zincke, and practised in London. His works are in enamel and brilliant in colour. There is a good specimen of his art in the Kensington Museum.

PREY, J. Z., a painter, was born at Prague in 1744. He worked at Pressburg, visited Dresden and Frankfort, and in 1770 settled at Rotterdam. He painted portraits and historical subjects, and died at Bois-le-Duc in 1823.

PRICKE, ROBERT. See PRYKE.

PRIEM, JOSEPH, a German painter, born at Illestissen in Bavaria in 1776. He was a pupil of Kellerhoven, and painted landscapes and historical subjects. He died in 1822.

PRIEST, THOMAS, was an English landscape painter, who resided at Chelsea about the year 1738. He chiefly painted views of the Thames, and published a set of eight etchings of Chelsea, Mortlake, and other places on the river.

PRIEUR, ROMAIN ETIENNE GABRIEL, a French landscape and historical painter, born at Ferté 322

Gaucher, Seine et Marne. He was a pupil of V. Bertin in landscape. He died in 1879. Works:

Metabus, King of the Volscians.

The Via Appia. (1836.)

Moses and the Daughters of Jethro.

Springs in the Forest of Fontainebleau. (1837.)

The Walls of Rome.

The Approaching Storm.

Harvest.

The Eagle's Nest.

The Marché aux Innocents.

Interlaken. (1866.)

Ships at Tréport.

PRIETO, THOMAS FRANCISCO, engraver, was born at Salamanca in 1716. He was a pupil of Lorenzo Monteman y Cusens, and Director of the Academy of San Fernando. His daughter MARIA DE LORETTO, a Spanish amateur engraver, was born at Madrid in 1753. She was received an honorary member of the Academy of San Fernando, and died in 1772.

PRIMATICCIO, FRANCESCO, was born at Bologna in 1504. He was of good birth, and his family, perceiving his strong inclination for art, placed him first with Innocenzo da Imola, and afterwards with Bagnacavallo. Thence he migrated to the studio of Giulio Romano, who had more influence on his style than his earlier masters. Primaticcio worked with Giulio at Mantua, in the Palazzo del Té. On the Duke of Mantua being asked to recommend an artist to Francis I., he sent him Primaticcio, who for a time collaborated with Il Rosso at Fontainebleau. A quarrel arising, however, Primaticcio was sent back to Italy to collect works of art for the French King. During his absence his rival died, and he succeeded to the vacant post of Director of the Works at Fontainebleau. In this office Primaticcio was successively confirmed by Henry II., Francis II., and Charles IX. He died in Paris in 1570. Much of Primaticcio's work at Fontainebleau, (most of it, however, actually painted by Niccolò dell' Abate from his designs,) was destroyed in 1738, when some structural alterations were made in the palace. All that remains is the decoration of the guard chamber, now called the "Salle de Madame d'Étampes," a series of frescoes illustrating the career of Alexander the Great, painted by Niccolò after his master's designs, and various scenes from classic mythology, painted by Primaticcio himself. All these works have undergone much "restoration," and now the art of their author is perhaps to be best appreciated through the fine series of his drawings in the Louvre. His easel pictures are very rare. At Fontainebleau there is a full-length nude figure of 'Diana,' and at Castle Howard a fine 'Return of Ulysses.'

PRIMAVESI, JOHANN GEORG, painter and engraver, was born at Heidelberg in 1776. He drew a series of landscapes illustrating the Rhine from its source downwards. He became court-painter at Heidelberg. Twelve etchings by him of 'Heidelberg Castle,' and some of views from Mannheim and Baden, are extant. The date of his death is not known.

PRIMI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, a marine and portrait painter, was a pupil of A. Tassi and a native of Rome. He resided a long time at Genoa, where he died in 1657.

PRIMISSLER, JULIE. See MIHES.

PRIMO, LUIS, known as GENTILE on account of his gentle manners, was born at Brussels in 1606, and went when young to Rome, where he spent thirty years, and was in 1650 received into the Academy of Saint Luke. He was employed by Pope Alexander VII., whose portrait he painted. In the church of San Marco a painting exists by him of 'St. Anthony,' and in the Cappuccini at Pesaro there are a 'Nativity' and 'St. Stephen.' One of his best works is the 'Crucifixion,' in the church of St. Michael at Ghent. Others are, 'Phœbus in the Chariot of the Sun' (engraved by Bloemaert), 'St. Raymond,' and 'S. Carlo Borromeo healing the Plague-stricken.' Primo painted many portraits, which are remarkable for their finish. He died at Rome in 1668.

PRINA, PIER FRANCESCO, a native of Novaro, who is commended by Orlandi for his decorative frescoes. He was living in 1718.

PRINCE, LE. See LEPRINCE.

PRINETTI, CONSTANTINO, landscape painter, was born at Canobbio in 1830. After studying at the Milan Academy under Canella he travelled in Germany, Holland, Paris, Normandy, England, and Scotland. He died at Milan in 1855. Among his paintings we may name:

The Brienzer See.

The Battle-field of Nâfels; engraved by Salathé.

Dundas Castle.

The Thames and Houses of Parliament.

Street in Edinburgh.

Valsasina.

PRINS, B. M., a painter of landscapes and sea-pieces, was living at Amsterdam about 1824.

PRINS, JOHANN HÜBERT, a painter of views of the interiors of cities, was born at the Hague in 1757. He was intended for the medical profession, but his predilection for painting induced him to quit his home and the university in order to avoid his friends, who were strongly opposed to his inclination. He rambled, as an artist, through Brabant and France, where he made numerous sketches and drawings, with which, after two years' absence, he returned to his own country. He visited Amsterdam, Utrecht, and Leyden, and painted views in each of those cities. The Dutch writers say he painted in the manner of Berck-Heyden and Van der Heyden, but his pictures resemble theirs only in subject. His pictures, which are generally small, are representations of the cities of Holland, with landscapes and marine views. Besides oil paintings, he executed numerous drawings, aquarelles, and etchings. He was drowned in a canal at the Hague in 1806.

PRIOR, THOMAS ABIEL, an English line engraver, was born on November 5th, 1809. He practised the severest form of engraving in line, and in that method interpreted Turner with rare skill. He merits a place among what are called 'Turner's Engravers' by the fact that he engraved one plate during the painter's life, and under his supervision, the 'Heidelberg.' He resided for many years at Calais, where he was engaged as drawing-master in one or two of the public colleges. His plates were done in his spare time. He died at Calais, November 8, 1886. The list of his plates is not long:

Heidelberg; after Turner. (1846.)

Zurich; after the same. (1854.)

Apollo and the Sibyl; after the same. (1873.)

The Golden Bough; after the same.

Venice, the Dogana; after the same. (1859.)

The Goddess of Discord; after the same. (1860.)

Dido building Carthage; after the same. (1863.)

Heidelberg Castle in the olden Time; after the same. (1861.)

The Sun rising through Mist; after the same (1874); begun by Chapman.

Crossing the Bridge; after Landseer.

The Fighting Temeraire; after Turner. (1886.)

And three plates for 'The Turner Gallery.'

PRIWITZER, JOHANN, was a Danish artist, who visited England in the time of James I., and probably had court favour, as it is said that he painted the portraits of many of the nobility. The only one, however, on record, is that at Woburn Abbey, of Sir William Russell, in the robes of the order of the Bath, and attended by a dwarf (dated 1627).

PROBST, JOHANN BALTHAZAR, a German engraver, was born in 1673, and died in 1748. He worked chiefly with the burin, in a neat, formal style. Among other prints, he engraved several of the plates after antique statues in the 'Dresden Gallery.' We have also by him some prints after Luca Giordano, Bernardino Poccetti, Rugendas, and Ridinger. He also engraved several plates of birds and beasts in the menagerie of Prince Eugene, published in 1734.

PROCACCINI, ANDREA, was born at Rome, Jan. 14th, 1671, and was brought up in the school of Carlo Maratti. He painted historical subjects in the style of his master, and among his other works in the public edifices at Rome, is his picture of Daniel, in the series of the twelve prophets painted by order of Clement XI., in San Giovanni Laterano. He assisted the same pontiff with his advice on the establishment of his tapestry factory. He was invited to the court of Spain, where he resided fourteen years, and was appointed cabinet painter to Philip V. He executed many important works in the palaces and churches of Spain, but his smaller pictures are very few. He etched gracefully, and in this branch of art there are by him a half-length of 'San Vincente Ferrer,' an 'Infant Bacchus,' 'Diana in the Chase,' 'Clelia passing the Tiber,' the 'Supper at Emmaus,' and 'The Transfiguration' (after Raphael); and other pieces, after Carlo Maratti. He died at San Ildefonso in 1734, and was buried with great pomp in the convent of San Francisco de Segovia.

PROCACCINI, CAMILLO, the son of Ercole Procaccini the elder, was born at Bologna in 1546, and was first instructed by his father; but he afterwards visited Rome, where he particularly applied himself to studying the works of Raphael and Michelangelo. Correggio and Parmigiano were also the objects of his imitation. Finding the presence of the Carracci an obstacle to his success at Bologna, he removed to Milan, where most of his works are to be met with. He died at that city in 1625. Among the most remarkable of his pictures are those of the 'Martyrdom of St. Agnes,' painted in fresco, in the sacristy of Milan cathedral; a 'Madonna and Child,' in Santa Maria del Carmine; an 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' in the Brera; and the ceiling of the church of Padri Zoccolanti, representing the 'Assumption of the Virgin'—all in the same city. But his best known performances are his 'Last Judgment,' in the church of San Prospero at Reggio; and his 'St. Roch administering the Sacrament to the Plague-stricken,' a really admirable work, to which Annibale Carracci paid a tribute of admiration when he expressed his reluctance to paint a companion picture to it, representing St. Roch distributing Alms to the Poor. Procaccini was commissioned by the Duke of Parma to execute some frescoes in the cathedral at Piacenza, in competition with Lodovico Carracci, and accordingly he painted the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' with a beautiful choir of angels. The Parma Gallery possesses also a 'Plague' by him. In the Uffizi there is a small 'Madonna and Child.' Of his works at Bologna, the most important are the 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' in the church of San Francesco; the 'Nativity,' now in the Pinacoteca; the 'Crucifixion of St. Peter,' in San Petronio; and the 'Annunciation,' in S. Clemente. Camillo Procaccini possessed a fertile invention, and great facility of hand. His colour is fair, and his draperies are cast with judgment and taste; but his facility often led him into extravagance and mannerism. He has left several etchings, among which are the following:

The Holy Family reposing, in which St. Joseph is represented lying on the ground, resting on the saddle of the ass.

Another Holy Family, in which St. Joseph is presenting an orange to the Infant. 1593.

The Virgin suckling the Infant, St. Joseph standing behind her.

The Virgin and Child with St. Peter and St. Anthony.

The Transfiguration, of which there are two impressions; the second retouched by another hand, but in a very able manner.

St. Francis receiving the Stigmata. 1593.

PROCACCINI, CARLO ANTONIO, the third son of Ercole and the brother of Camillo and Giulio Cesare Procaccini the elder, was born at Bologna about the year 1555, and is said to have been instructed in art by his father, though he practised a different genre. He excelled in painting landscapes, flowers, and fruit, and his pictures possessed sufficient merit to secure them a place in the best collections in the Milanese. He was also much employed in commissions for Spain.

PROCACCINI, ERCOLE, the elder, was born in 1520 at Bologna. His principal works are in that city. The following are the most worthy of notice: in the church of San Benedetto, a picture of the 'Annunciation;' in San Giacomo Maggiore, 'The Conversion of St. Paul,' and 'Christ praying in the Garden;' in San Bernardo, 'St. Michael discomfiting the rebel Angels;' and in St. Stefano, a 'Deposition from the Cross.' Ercole established an Academy at Milan, which became the most celebrated of his time, and, besides his own sons, turned out some of the most distinguished artists of the Milanese school. He died after 1591. Other works:

Bologna. Gallery. A Pietà.
 " " The Annunciation.
 " " St. Augustine and an Angel.

PROCACCINI, ERCOLE, the younger, the son of Carlo Antonio Procaccini, was born at Milan in 1596, and was educated in the school of his uncle Giulio Cesare. He followed the style of his instructor, and painted several pictures for the public edifices and private collections at Milan. One of his best works is an altar-piece representing the 'Assumption of the Virgin,' in the church of Santa Maria Maggiore at Bergamo. On the death of Giulio Cesare, he became the director of the academy established by the Procaccini, and died in 1676. Other works:

Milan. Brera. The Crucifixion.

PROCACCINI, GIULIO CESARE, the younger brother of Camillo Procaccini, and son of Ercole Procaccini the elder, was born at Bologna in 1548. He was taught the rudiments of design by his father, and for some time applied himself to the study of sculpture, in which he had made some progress, when the reputation his brother Camillo had acquired as a painter induced him to change the chisel for the pencil. He studied in Rome and Venice, and appears to have formed his style upon the principles of Correggio, whom in his smaller cabinet pictures he sometimes successfully imitated. At Rome, where he passed some time, the productions of Raphael were particularly the objects of his attention. In 1618 he was invited to Genoa, where he worked in the ducal palace. He died at Milan about 1626. An etching representing the Virgin with the Infant Jesus, has been attributed to him, but doubtfully. Of his principal extant paintings we may note:

Dresden. Gallery. Virgin and Child.
 " " St. Roch curing the Plague-stricken.
 Edinburgh. Nat. Gall. A Dead Christ, with the Magdalen and Angels.
 Florence. Uffizi. His own Portrait.
 Genoa. Ducal Pal. Adam and Eve driven from Paradise.
 " Brignola Pal. Holy Family.
 " " Charity.
 " " The Dead Christ.
 Milan. S. Antonio. The Annunciation.
 " Ambrosiana. His own Portrait.
 " Brera Mus. Adoration of the Magi.
 " " Virgin, St. Ambrose, and St. Charles.
 " " The Magdalen.
 " " St. Cecilia.
 Modena. Museum. The Circumcision. (Colossal Composition.)
 Paris. Louvre. Holy Family.
 Petersburg. Hermilage. A Madonna.
 " " Marriage of St. Catharine.
 Toulouse. Museum. Marriage of St. Catharine.
 Turin. Museum. Virgin adored by SS. Cecilia and George.

PROCTOR, THOMAS, an English historical painter, born at Settle (Yorks.), April 22, 1753. His parents were in humble circumstances, and for some years he had to devote himself to uncongenial occupations in Manchester and London. But the love of art at length prevailed, and he entered the schools of the Academy in 1777. His student career was eminently honourable, culminating in 1784 with the gold medal for his picture of the 'Tempest.' He also devoted himself to modelling with such success that he ranks high among English sculptors. In 1785 he exhibited a statue of Ixion, which was bought by Sir Abraham Hume. He then produced a group of 'Diomed devoured by his Horses,' which, failing to sell it, he destroyed in a fit of despondency. The first pictures he sent to the Academy, in 1780-3, had been portraits, and in 1789 he again returned to that genre. In 1794 he was elected to the travelling studentship of the Academy, but could not be found, as for some years he had sent no address with his contributions to the Exhibition. West, however, tracked him out, and found him living on bread and water in an attic in Clare Market. Hopes of prosperity had come too late, and a few days later he was found dead in his bed. He was in his forty-first year, and was buried in Hampstead churchyard. Works:

Elisha and the Shunammite's Son. 1790.
 The Restoration of Day after the fall of Phaeton. 1790.
 Hannah refusing to accompany her Spouse to the Sacrifice. 1791.
 The Final Separation of Jason and Medea. 1793.
 Venus approaching Cyprus. 1794.

PROFONDAVALLE, VALERIO, an historical painter, horn at Louvain in 1533. He lived for some time at Florence, and afterwards settled at Milan. His daughter PRUDENZIA painted still-life and historical subjects. Their real name was Diependale, and they belonged to a famous glass-painting family in Louvain of the 15th and 16th centuries.

PRONCK, CORNELIS, was born at Amsterdam in 1691, and was taught drawing by F. van Houten, and painting by Arnold van Boonen. He became a good portrait painter, and had much employment; but he preferred making views of cities and landscapes, in Indian ink and in water-colours. Many of his drawings, however, are after other Dutch masters. He died in 1759.

PRONTI, Padre CESARE, originally BACCIOCCHI, was horn at Rimini in 1626, and was brought up at Bologna, under Guercino. He was commonly called PADRE CESARE da RAVENNA. He painted historical subjects, and was much employed for the churches at Rimini and Ravenna. At an early period of his life he became a monk of the order of St. Augustine, and was afterwards principally engaged in painting altar-pieces for the churches of his fraternity, of which one of the best is a picture of St. Tommaso da Villanova, at the Augustines at Pesaro, which he embellished with a background of admirable architecture. He died at Ravenna in 1708.

PROSPETTIVE, DALLE. See AGOSTINO, also PALTRONIERI.

PROTOGENES, one of the most illustrious of ancient Greek painters, was a native of either Caunus or Camirus, both cities of Caria. His life as an artist was, however, spent at Rhodes, which he only once quitted on a visit to Athens. He flourished between 330 and 300 B.C. It is not known of whom he was a disciple, but it is probable that he received his instruction from some obscure artist, or that he formed his style by a general study of the painters who had preceded him. It is certain that for some time he practised ship-painting for a livelihood, that the early part of his life was passed in indigence and obscurity, and that he was considerably advanced in years before he became known as an artist. One of his principal pictures, which has been celebrated by several writers, represented the hunter Ialysus with his Dog; it was long preserved in the Temple of Peace at Rome. A singular story is told of the production of this painting. Protopogenes was engaged upon it for seven years, during which he lived wholly upon lupins and water, hoping thereby to give his fancy freer powers. But at the last he found himself wholly unable to produce the appearance of froth in the dog's mouth, and after many unsatisfactory attempts he threw his sponge upon the canvas in a fit of vexation. He had aimed it exactly at the mouth of the animal, and the stroke produced the very effect which he had been seeking so long in vain. A much greater interest attaches to this picture in the fact that it was the means of saving a portion of the city of Rhodes from destruction, and delaying the capture of the whole, when it was besieged (B.C. 305) by Demetrius Poliorcetes, who, finding that the only ready means of mastering the place consisted in setting fire to that side on which was the house of Protopogenes, chose rather to protract the siege indefinitely than to destroy such a work of art. The atelier of Protopogenes was situated without the walls of the city, where, to the astonishment of the besiegers, he continued to paint with the most perfect tranquillity and indifference. This circumstance being made known to Demetrius, he ordered the artist to be brought to his tent, when he demanded how he could persist in the quiet exercise of his profession when surrounded by the enemies of his country. Protopogenes replied, that he did not consider himself to be in any danger, as he was convinced that a great prince like Demetrius did not wage war against the arts, but against the Rhodians.

It was during these hostilities that he painted his famous picture of a Satyr playing on a Flageolet. Into this he introduced a partridge, which he depicted so accurately that some live partridges on being placed near it showed themselves deceived by the resemblance; but Protopogenes, not wishing to be regarded as a mere mechanical imitator, and observing that the presence of the partridge blinded the spectators to everything else, obliterated it from the painting altogether. Another admired work of Protopogenes was a subject taken from the 'Odyssey,' representing Nausicaa driving a chariot drawn by mules. A fourth was in the Propylæa of the Athenian Acropolis, and represented the sacred ships 'Paralus' and 'Ammonias.' Pliny mentions some others, but the length of time devoted by Protopogenes to each prevented the number from being large. His great contemporary Apelles found the one fault in him that he "did not know how to let his pictures alone."

The association of these two masters gave rise to more than one interesting episode. Notwithstanding the distinguished talents of Protopogenes, his fellow-citizens were either insensible to his merit, or were more than usually parsimonious in remunerating him. He continued to live in extreme poverty, until the generosity of Apelles roused the Rhodians from the indifference they had shown to his talents. When that painter visited Rhodes, he was struck with admiration on seeing the works of Protopogenes. He demanded what price he put upon his pictures, and the painter of Rhodes having named an inconsiderable sum, Apelles, indignant at the injustice, offered him fifty talents for each of his works, publicly announcing that he could sell them again as his own at a profit. This liberality opened the eyes of the Rhodians, who now gladly gave the painter a higher sum than Apelles had offered, rather than have their city deprived of what they had at length learned to appreciate.

When Apelles first landed at Rhodes on the occasion of the above interview, he called at the house of Protopogenes, but found him from home. Instead of leaving his name with the servant he drew with a brush an extremely fine line on a panel that lay before him. This being shown to Protopogenes on his return, he declared that it must have been Apelles who had called upon him, and taking a brush with a different colour, he drew a still finer line upon the first line itself, desiring that this might be shown to his visitor upon his second call. When this took place, Apelles with a third colour drew a yet finer line upon this second one, and Protopogenes upon seeing this was compelled to declare that the attenuating process could go no further!

PROU, JACQUES, a French painter and engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1639, or, according to others, at Troyes, in 1624, and died at the end of the same century. He was a scholar of Sebastien Bourdon, and painted landscapes in the style of that master. Of his works as an engraver, the following are the most worthy of notice :

A set of twelve Landscapes and Views; after his own designs.

A set of six large Landscapes; after Seb. Bourdon.
The Baptism of Christ by St. John; after the same.
The Flight into Egypt; after Agost. Carracci.

PROUD, —, an obscure engraver, whom Strutt mentions as having resided in England about the year 1760. He engraved a few plates for books and portraits, among which was that of Sarah Philips, prefixed to 'The Lady's Handmaid.' 1758.

PROUT, J. SKINNER, nephew of Samuel Prout, was born at Plymouth in 1806. He practised chiefly in water-colours, and was a member of the Institute, but was chiefly self-taught. He published 'Antiquities of Chester,' and 'Castles and Abbeys of Monmouthshire' in 1838. He also visited Australia, and resided for some time in Sydney and Hobart Town. On his return he lived for many years in Bristol, and published a work on the antiquities of that town. The sketches for this were made in company with W. Muller, with whom he formed a close friendship. He afterwards came to London, where he died August 29, 1876.

PROUT, SAMUEL, was born in Plymouth about 1784, and educated at the Grammar School. When quite a child he had a sunstroke, which affected his health for the rest of his life. He accompanied John Britton into Cornwall in 1801, and he afterwards went to reside with him in Clerkenwell, during which time he was employed by the chief topographical draftsman of the day. In 1805 he returned home, but returned to London in 1812. He exhibited occasionally at the Academy and British Institution from 1803 to 1827. In 1820 he was elected a member of the Water-Colour Society. In 1818 he visited the Continent, and became famous as the painter of foreign Cathedrals and Market-places. In 1824 he visited Italy, and fac-similes of the sketches of his travels were published in 1839. He contributed to the Annuals, and for Ackermann he undertook drawing-books for learners. Prout died in Camberwell February 10, 1852. Works :

London.	S. Kensington	} Bridge near York.
	Museum.
"	"	Arch of Constantine, Rome.
"	"	Porch of Batishou Cathedral.
"	"	Wurzburg.
"	"	Castle on a Rocky Shore.
"	"	Old House near Tunbridge.
"	"	Cottage near St. Michael's Mount.
"	"	The Beach, Hastings.
"	"	The Zwinger, Dresden.
"	"	Temple of Minerva Medica, Rome.
"	"	Beach at Folkestone.

A collection of Prout's drawings was exhibited at the Fine Art Society's Galleries in 1879-1880, and notes upon it written by J. Ruskin.

PROVENÇAL, JOSEPH, a French historical painter, born in Lorraine. He was a pupil of Cl. Charles and painted several frescoes in the churches of Nancy. He flourished about 1679.

PROVENCE, a German historical painter, who studied in Italy and afterwards settled in Berlin. He died in 1701.

PROVENZALE, MARCELLO, was born at Cento in 1575. He was a scholar of Paolo Rossetti, but is chiefly distinguished for his talents as a mosaicist. Baglione describes several of his works at Rome, 326 executed under the direction of Paul V., among which is the portrait of that pontiff, now in the Borghese Palace. In conjunction with Rossetti, he executed several mosaics in the Capella Clementina, in St. Peter's, from the cartoons of Cavaliere Cristofano Roncalli; and for the Cardinal Scipione Borghese he finished some smaller works, among which is 'Orpheus playing on the Lyre, surrounded by animals.' He died at Rome in 1639.

PROVENZALI, STEFANO, a native of Cento and a pupil of Guercino. Crespi extols his battle-pieces.

PROVOST, NICOLAS. See PRÉVOST.

PRUCKER. See PRUGGER.

PRUD'HOMME, ANTONIE DANIEL, a Dutch amateur, born at Zwolle in 1745. He at first entered on a commercial career, but after a voyage to Demerara he settled at Antwerp, and devoted himself to art. He painted landscapes, sea-pieces, and portraits. He died in 1826.

PRUD'HON, PIERRE, a French historical and portrait painter, born at Cluny (Saône et Loire) in 1758. He was the thirteenth child of a stonemason, who died soon after his birth. His mother had a great affection for him, but her narrow means were insufficient to provide for his education, which was due to the charity of the monks at the Abbey of Cluny. The pictures which decorated the walls of the monastery early developed his taste for art. The fruits of this were first seen in his exercise-books, which he covered with sketches. Unaided, he taught himself the elements of oil-painting with the very humble materials which lay within his reach. At the critical age of sixteen, when his schooling was completed, he was fortunate enough to find a friend in the Bishop of Macon, who placed him in the Academy of Dijon. Here his progress was satisfactory, and his future seemed full of promise, when he contracted an imprudent marriage at the early age of nineteen. To continue his studies, he migrated to Paris in 1780, and received some assistance from an engraver named Wille. The great object of his ambition was to study in Italy, and to enable him to do this, he competed in 1782 for a triennial prize founded by the estates of Burgundy. Concerning this competition there is an interesting little story, showing the painter's kindness of disposition. One of the competitors was overwhelmed with grief at being unable to finish his composition. By the assistance of Prud'hon he was enabled to complete it, and with such success that he was awarded the prize. Not to be outdone in generosity, he confessed the help which he had received, and the prize was adjudged to Prud'hon. During his sojourn at Rome, he diligently made use of his opportunities, and studied closely the masterpieces of Raphael, Correggio, and Leonardo da Vinci. He made the acquaintance of Canova, and the two artists formed a close friendship. Resisting the sculptor's entreaties to stay with him at Rome, Prud'hon returned to Paris in 1789. His wife now rejoined him, and for several years he had an uphill fight to supply the wants of an increasing family. Unknown to fame, he drew book-illustrations, portraits, headings for letters and concert-bills, and even designs to ornament the lids of sweetmeat-boxes. Whatever came he was glad to accept, so as to keep the wolf from the door of his comfortless home. So little prospect of success did he appear to have in the capital that in 1794 he spent two years in Franche Comté, painting portraits. Here he made the acquaintance of his fellow-countryman, M. Frochot, who afterwards, as Prefect of the Seine, became his warm patron. On his return to Paris, he executed some admirable designs for the publisher Didot, and his reputation gradually increased. The assignment to him of apartments in the Louvre, just before the close of the century, to execute the painting of 'Truth descending from Heaven,' for the design of which he had won a prize, marks that his position was at length assured. Cut off by his unfortunate marriage from home comforts, he found consolation in a liaison with a pupil named Constance Mayer. He was introduced to her by a friend in 1803, when she was seeking for a master to replace Greuze. The tardy recognition of Prud'hon's merits secured him a fair share in the public commissions. The chief of these were a ceiling at the Louvre, 'Diana imploring Jupiter,' and the well-known 'Divine Justice pursuing Crime,' originally ordered by his friend Frochet for the Palais de Justice. For the latter work, exhibited in 1808, he received the Legion of Honour, and in 1816 was elected a member of the Institute. In 1821, he suffered a severe shock from the death of Mademoiselle Mayer by her own hand. His health gave way, and he died in Paris in 1823, in the arms of his friend, M. Le Boisfremont.

Prud'hon forms an interesting figure in the history of French art. His pictures have a grace and tenderness which is wanting in the works of all his contemporaries. This he ascribed to his study of Leonardo, whom he was accustomed to call his master and his hero. He is seen at his best, perhaps, in his smaller and less ambitious productions, such as his 'Zephyr,' where he has departed most from the historic style, and allowed freer scope to his poetic imagination.

The following is a list of Prud'hon's pictures in the public galleries of Europe :

Angers.	Museum.	The Two Souls.
Cherbourg.	Museum.	The Assumption. Unfinished repetition of Louvre picture.
Dijon.	Museum.	Three Portraits.

PRUGGER, NICLAS, (PRUCKER, or BRUCKER,) a painter of Munich in the 17th century, who died there in 1694. He was the son of a peasant of Trudering, near that city, and was educated by the help of the Electress Maria Anna, and trained in art by that of the Elector Maximilian I. of Bavaria, whose successor, Ferdinand Maria, appointed him his court-painter. The Pinakothek contains a portrait of the former Elector by him, together with a male portrait of 1664; and there also exist by him seven portraits of the above Electress on copper-plates the size of a groschen.

PRUNATI, SANTO, an historical painter, born at Verona in 1656. He was a pupil of Voltolino and Falcieri at Verona, and of Loth at Venice. He also visited Bologna. There is a 'San Francesco di Sales' by him at the cathedral at Verona. His son, MICHELANGELO PRUNATI, was his pupil and painted in the same style.

PRUNEAU, NOEL, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1751. He was a pupil of Augustin de St. Aubin, in whose style he has engraved several plates, chiefly portraits, among which we may name the following :

Rosalie le Vasseur; after his own design.

Herman Boerhave; the same.

Gerard, Baron van Swieten, Architect; after A. de St. Aubin.

Jean Joseph Sue; after A. de Pujol.

François de la Peyronie, principal surgeon to Louis XV.

PRYKE, ROBERT, an English engraver, who studied under Hollar. He practised after the Restoration, and in 1675 published an edition of Pierre Le Muet's 'Architecture.'

PUBLIAN, JOHANN GOTTFRIED, a German architectural painter of little merit, born at Meissen in 1809. He died at Düsseldorf in 1875.

PUCCHINI, BIAGIO, an obscure painter, who flourished at Rome in the reigns of Clement XI. and Benedict XIII.

PUCCIO D'ORVIETO, PIETRO DI, is entitled to notice for the reason that his works on the north wall of the Campo Santo of Pisa are believed to be the earliest examples of fresco-painting, properly so called. They represent the 'First Person of the Trinity;' 'The Creation of Man;' 'The Fall of Man and its consequences;' the 'Death of Abel;' the 'Death of Cain;' and 'The Deluge.' A 'Coronation of the Virgin,' over the door of the second chapel, is also by him. These pictures display grandeur of conception and design, and a rare harmony of colouring. The series was continued, as far as the Visit of the Queen of Sheba, by Benozzo Gozzoli. Puccio painted in the later years of the 14th century. (See E. Förster, 'Beitrag,' p. 220.)

PUCHLER, JOHANN MICHEL, an engraver of whom very little is known, worked in a peculiar manner, towards the end of the 17th century. He engraved portraits with the point, the hair and habits are formed of writing. In this fashion he engraved a portrait of Martin Luther and his wife, after Cranach. It is signed Mich. Puchler fecit. Van Stettin speaks of a Jan Gregoire Büchler, a writing-master, who worked in this manner about the year 1692, and Bruliot conjectures that the two are identical.

PUCHNER, MELCHIOR, was a painter of Ingolstadt, who produced several altar-pieces and other devotional pictures for the churches, and died in 1760.

PUDISS. See PAUDITZ.

PUELLACHER, LEOPOLD, was born at Telfs in the Tyrol in 1776, and studied for a scene painter at Vienna under Gassner and Platzer. He painted scenes for Count Karolyi, and was in 1815 made court theatrical painter at Innsbruck. He also executed several wall-paintings for Tyrolean churches. Puellacher was still alive in 1830.

PUGA, ANTONIO, a Spanish painter of familiar subjects, was a scholar of Velazquez, whose early manner he imitated cleverly. He flourished about 1650-60. In the Hermitage there is a 'Knife-Grinder' by him.

PUGET, FRANÇOIS, painter and architect, the son of Pierre Puget. He studied first under his father, afterwards with Laurent Fauchier, a clever portrait painter, whose style he followed so closely as to render their works almost indistinguishable. He executed several historical works and religious pictures for the churches. According to a letter written on January 10, 1753, by his son Pierre Paul Puget, many of the pictures ascribed to Pierre Puget, the sculptor, are by his son François. In 1683 François carried his father's group 'Milo of Crotona,' to the king at Versailles, and, in 1685, his 'Andromeda.' He died in 1707. Works :

The Calling of Matthew and other pictures in the Chapel at Château Gombert.

Portrait of the sculptor, Pierre Puget. (Louvre.)

Portrait Group of eight Musicians and Artists. (The same.)

PUGET, PIERRE, (or PUJET), painter, sculptor, architect, and engineer, was born at Château Follet, near Marseilles, October 31, 1622. At the age of seventeen he went to Italy on foot, working his way along the road. He visited Florence and Rome, assisted by Cortona; he painted a ceiling in the Barberini Palace, and in the Pitti Palace at Florence, and returned to Marseilles in 1643. There he painted a portrait of his mother, and after a second journey to Italy, painted many works for his native city, and for Aix, Toulon, Cuers, and Ciotat. In 1655, being attacked by a severe malady, he was forced to give up painting, and henceforth devoted himself to sculpture. He visited Paris in 1659, leaving it after a six months' sojourn, disgusted with the court intrigue which had marred his arrangement for an equestrian statue of Louis XIV. He next spent six or seven years at Genoa, and then a second term at Toulon, finally settling in his native Marseilles, where he died in 1694. The portrait of himself at an advanced age in the Louvre, is by his son, François. An 'Annunciation' of graceful design but somewhat cold colouring is in the cathedral of Aix, and many of his pictures are at Marseilles and in its neighbourhood.

PUGH, CHARLES, an English landscape painter in water-colours, of the early tinted school, who exhibited at the Academy from 1797 to 1803. His subjects were mostly views in Wales and the Isle of Wight.

PUGH, EDWARD, an English miniature painter and landscape draughtsman, was born in the second half of the 18th century. His works appeared at the Academy from 1793 to 1808. He died at Ruthin in 1813. The illustrations in the following works are by him :

Modern London. 1805.

Cambria depicta. 1816.

PUGH, HERBERT, a landscape painter and native of Ireland, who came to London about the year 1758, received a premium from the Society of Arts in 1765. He painted a few pictures also in which he attempted to imitate the style of Hogarth, but they were very indifferent performances. They were engraved by Goldar. There was a large landscape by him in the Lock Hospital. He was an intemperate man, and died comparatively young about the year 1789.

PUGIN, AUGUSTUS, architectural draughtsman, was born in France in 1762. On account of a duel he fled to England, when young, and had to suffer much hardship through his ignorance of English, until he met with a friend in a French artist called Merigot, then settled in London. Towards the end of the century, he entered the schools of the Academy, where he exhibited from 1799. For many years he worked with Nash, the architect, and subsequently was engaged on the publications of Ackermann. He added the architectural backgrounds to Rowlandson's figures. His architectural drawings exercised an important influence in the revival of the Gothic style in this country. He made the drawings for the histories of Oxford, Cambridge, and Westminster Abbey. In 1821, he published his 'Specimens of Gothic Architecture,' which marked an epoch. He occasionally practised, too, as an architect, and trained some eminent pupils, and was the father of Augustus Welby Pugin. He married an English wife, and lived many years in Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, where he died in London in 1832. There are four of his water-colour drawings in the Kensington Museum. The principal publications on which he was engaged are :

Specimens of Gothic Architecture. 1821.

Architectural Antiquities of Normandy.

Paris and its Environs. 1831.

Gothic Ornaments. 1844.

Examples of Gothic Architecture. 1830.

Ornamental Timber Gables.

PUGIN, AUGUSTUS WELBY, demands mention here by his work as a draughtsman and scene painter, in which capacity he worked for some time in early youth. He was born in London on March 1, 1812, and died at Ramsgate on September 14, 1852. His career as an architect and architectural draughtsman has been described by his friend, Benjamin Ferrey, in a 'Life,' published in 1861.

PUGLIA, GIUSEPPE, called GIUSEPPE DEL BASTARO, was a native of Rome, and, according to Baglioni, flourished from 1600, and chiefly during the pontificate of Urban VIII. There are several of his works in the churches at Rome, of which the most deserving of notice are 'The Presentation in the Temple,' in the cloister of the Padri della Minerva; and an altar-piece in the church of Santa Maria Maggiore, representing 'The Assumption of the Virgin.' In the church of San Girolamo there are a 'Descent from the Cross,' and a 'Death of St. Jerome.' Bastaro died at Rome in 1640.

PUGLICOCHI, ANTONIO, a native of Florence, and pupil successively of Pietro Dandini and Ciro Ferri.

PUIS, DU. See DUPUIS.

PUJET. See PUGET.

PUJOL, ALEX. D. See ABEL DE PUJOL.

PULIAN, JOHANN GOTTFRIED, was born at Meissen in 1809, and was a landscape and architectural painter. In 1837 he began to attend the Academy at Dusseldorf, in which city he died in 1875. His best productions are picturesque sketches from the old towns of Belgium and the Rhine. Among them we may name :

The City Gate of Neuss. 1840.

Schwalbach, on the Rhine.

Various Views in Bacharach, on the Rhine.

The Cathedral of Limburg.

St. Nicholas' Church at Ghent.

Canal in Mechlin.

Castle-Elz.

PULIGO, DOMENICO, was a painter of Florence, born in 1475, and brought up in the school of Domenico Bigordi, called Ghirlandaio. On the death of that master, in 1498, when he was twenty years of age, it does not appear that he made choice of another instructor, but he acquired considerable reputation as a portrait painter, and by some easel pictures representing Madonnas and Holy Families, some of which are in the Borghese and Colonna Palaces at Rome, and the Pitti at Florence. He formed an intimate acquaintance with Andrea del Sarto, and though several years older than that painter, he improved his style by a study of his works. He is stated to have worked also with Ridolfo Ghirlandaio. Puligo died in 1527. Works :

Florence.	Pitti Gal.	Five Holy Families.
Panshanger.		A Portrait.
Madrid.	Museum.	A Holy Family.

PULIGO, JACONE, the brother of Domenico Puligo, was also a scholar and assistant of Andrea del Sarto. He was a very inferior painter.

PULZONE, SCIPIONE, called GAETANO, was born at Gaeta in 1550, or, as Zani states, 1562, and was a disciple of Jacopo del Conte. He painted historical subjects, but more especially portraits, and drew those of the most illustrious persons of his time; among whom were Gregory XIII., Cardinal de' Medici, and the Archduke Ferdinand. Lanzi asserts that he was called 'The Roman Van Dyck,' but this cannot have been during his life-time, as he died several years before Van Dyck was born. Of his historical works, the most deserving of notice are, his picture of the 'Assumption, with the Apostles,' in San Silvestro, on Monte Cavallo; a Pietà, in the Jesuits' church; and a 'Crucifixion,' in Santa Maria, in Vallicella. In the Palazzo Borghese there is a fine 'Holy Family' by him. He died at Rome in the prime of life, in 1588, or, according to Zani, in 1600. Besides the above works we may name :

Florence.	Pitti Gal.	Portrait of Eleonora de' Medici, wife of Vincenzo I., Duke of Mantua.
"	"	Portrait of Marie de' Medici.
"	"	Three portraits of Princes.
"	"	Portrait of Ferdinando I. de' Medici.
"	Uffizi.	Christ in the Garden.
Madrid.	Museo.	Male portrait.

PUNT, JAN, a Dutch engraver, was born in 1711, and died about 1779. He was a theatrical scene painter, and painter in chiaroscuro. His principal plates were a set of thirty-six, after the drawings made by Jacob de Wit from the paintings by Rubens on the ceiling of the church of the Jesuits, at Antwerp, which were destroyed by lightning. He also engraved a plate of the 'Ascension,' after Seb. Ricci, for the 'Dresden Gallery;' and many other subjects, of which Nagler has given a list.

PUNTORMO. See CARRUCCI.

PUPILER, ANTOINE, is stated to have been a Flemish painter of extraordinary merit, who was employed in Spain by Philip II. in 1556, but all of whose works were consumed in the conflagration at the Pardo.

PUPINI, BIAGIO, was a native of Bologna, and flourished from about 1530 to 1540. He was a disciple of Francesco Francia, whose style he followed at a respectful distance. He also imitated Raphael. Of his works in the public edifices at Bologna, the following are the most worthy of notice: In the church of S. Giuliano, 'The Crowning of the Virgin;' in S. Giacomo Maggiore, 'The Virgin and Infant Christ, with S. Orsola;' in S. Maria della Baroncella, 'St. John preaching in the Wilderness;' and in the Pinacoteca, a 'Nativity,' with the Virgin, St. Joseph, and Angels adoring the Infant Christ.

PURCELL, RICHARD, who passed by the name of C. CORBUTT, was a mezzotint engraver, born in Ireland about the year 1736. He studied under John Brooks at Dublin, where he practised for a while, engraving 'Jenny Cameron,' 'The Jewish Bride,' 'William at the Siege of Namur,' &c. Some of his plates are mere copies from those of other engravers. In later years on he came to London, where he engraved after Reynolds, Coker, Ramsay, Frye, and other well-known painters. The true reason for his use of a pseudonym can only be guessed, but he was dissolute, even depraved, in his life. He died in misery about 1765. Of his plates the following, perhaps, are the most worthy of notice :

John Manners, Marquis of Granby; after Reynolds.
Lady Fenhoulet, afterwards Countess of Essex; after the same.
Elizabeth, Countess of Berkeley; after the same.
Lady Charlotte Johnstone; after the same.
Garrick between Tragedy and Comedy; after the same.
The Children of Charles I.; after Van Dyck.
John Wilkes, Esq.; after Pine.
Major-General James Wolfe.
François Arouet de Voltaire.
Jean Jacques Rousseau.
William Romaine; after F. Cotes.
Paoli; after Constantine.
Anne Bastard, of Kitley, in Devonshire.
A Flemish Conversation; after Brouwer.
The old Rabbi; after Rembrandt.
Two subjects after J. Vernet.

PUSCHNER, JOHANN GEORG, was a German engraver, supposed to have been a native of Nuremberg. He flourished from 1670 till 1720, and engraved a set of portraits for a folio volume, entitled 'Icones virorum omnium ordinum eruditione,' &c., published at Nuremberg.

PUYOL (PUJOL). See ABEL DE PUJOL.

PYE, CHARLES, an English engraver, born in 1777. There is a 'Holy Family,' after M. Angelo, by him, and specimens of his work will also be found in Dibdin's 'Tour.' He published a work on coins and tokens.

PYE, JOHN, the elder, an English engraver and painter, was born in 1745. He was a pupil of Major, and gained a Society of Arts' pension in 1758. From 1780 onwards he was a constant exhibitor of water-colour views at the Royal Academy. He was employed by Boydell as an engraver, and worked in both the line and dot manners, and also etched. The date of his death is not recorded. We have by him a 'Tobit and the Angel,' after Karel du Jardin, and a 'Holy Family,' after Pölenberg; also several landscapes, after Claude Lorrain, Vernet, Swanevelt, Cuyp, &c., which are etched and neatly finished with the graver.

PYE, JOHN, an English engraver, born at Birmingham April 22, 1782. In his early years he was entirely self-taught, until he came to London about 1802, and worked under James Heath, in whose workshop he had an opportunity of making friends with many of those men who made English engraving famous in the early years of the century. He soon obtained a reputation for his rendering of landscapes, especially those of Turner. In 1811 he engraved 'Pope's Villa,' after that master, with the figures by C. Heath. This so pleased Turner that he engaged Pye to engrave his 'Temple of Jupiter, at Ægina.' With this plate he was very successful, and from its publication his repute was established. Many important works were intrusted to him, and while still comparatively young, he had acquired means enough to take life easily, to help on less fortunate men, and to promote various causes he had at heart. Much of his life was passed in Paris, and he was elected a corresponding member of the French Institute (by which he was awarded a medal), as well as of the St. Petersburg Academy. He took great interest in the history and condition of English art, was a founder of the Artists' Benevolent Fund, opposed the Royal Academy with much energy and not a little acerbity, and wrote an important work on 'The Patronage of British Art.' He also managed the publication of 'Pictures from the National Gallery,' which came to an end after twenty-nine parts had been issued. Pye died in London in 1874. Amongst his best plates are :

Pope's Villa ; after Turner.
 Temple of Jupiter ; after the same.
 Hardraw Fall ; after the same.
 Wycliffe, Yorkshire ; after the same.
 Ehrenbreitstein ; after the same.
 Weathercote Cave ; after the same.
 Rialto, Venice ; after the same.
 La Riccia ; after the same.
 St. Mary Redcliffe, Bristol ; after the same.
 Junction of the Greta and the Tees ; after the same.
 The Annunciation ; after Claude Lorrain.
 Holy Family ; after M. Angelo.
 Evening ; after George Barrett.
 Classical Landscape ; after Gaspar Poussin.
 The last of William Smith ; after Landseer.
 Scenes in India ; after Daniel.
 Plates to Stanhope's 'Olympia.'
 Plates to the 'Oriental Annual.'

PYE, THOMAS, historical painter, studied in Dublin under West, and in 1794 was in Rome. Nothing further is known about him.

PYLE, ROBERT, an English portrait and subject painter, born in the first half of the 18th century. He practised in London, and in 1763 was a member of the Free Society of Artists. Some of his works were engraved, among them the following :

The Power of Music and Beauty. (Engraved by J. Watson.)
 The Four Elements. (The same, by J. Spooner.)
 Portrait of Queen Charlotte.

PYM, B., an English portrait and miniature painter, who had a considerable practice in London in the latter half of the 18th century. He exhibited regularly at the Academy up to 1793. There is a portrait of Bannister by him at the Garrick Club.

PYNAKER. See PIJNAKER.

PYNE, CHARLES CLAUDE, an English water-colour artist, was born in 1802. For many years he was teacher of drawing in the Grammar School at Guildford, in which town he died in October, 1878. In the Art Library, South Kensington Museum, are six volumes of his sketches in Switzerland and North Italy, and a volume filled with small drawings of Normandy and Brittany.

PYNE, JAMES BAKER, was born in Bristol in 1800. He was intended for the law, but he abandoned it to become an artist. In 1835 he came to London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy. In 1842 he was admitted a member of the Society of British Artists, and was for some years its Vice-President. In 1846 he visited Switzerland, Germany, and Italy ; and in 1851 he paid a second visit to Italy. He published 'Windsor and its surrounding scenery,' in 1840, 'The English Lake District,' in 1853, and the 'Lake Scenery of England,' in 1859. He died in 1870. His art was arbitrary in its relation to nature, but as an executant and a decorative manipulator of colour, his skill was very great. Works :

London. S. Kensington Mus.	The Bay of Naples. ( Oil. )
" "	Distant View of Arundel. ( Water. )
" "	View in Cumberland. ( The same. )

PYNE, WILLIAM HENRY, an English water-colour painter of landscape and figure subjects, was born in London in 1769. He received some instruction in drawing from a draughtsman, and exhibited at the Academy from 1790 to 1796. In 1804 he was one of the original members of the Water-Colour Society, where he exhibited till 1809. The later part of his life was chiefly devoted to the literature of art, and he published many works in conjunction with Ackermann. The chief of these were :

'The Microcosm of London.' 1803-6.
 'The Costume of Great Britain.' 1808.
 'Etchings of Rustic Figures.' 1817.
 'History of the Royal Residences.' 1819.

He died at Paddington in 1843. Three of his water-colour drawings are in the South Kensington Museum, namely :

Rustic Cottages. 1806.
 Rochester. 1830.
 Landscape, with Church and Cottages.

PYREICUS, who lived immediately after the time of Alexander the Great, was the most eminent genre painter of his time.

Q

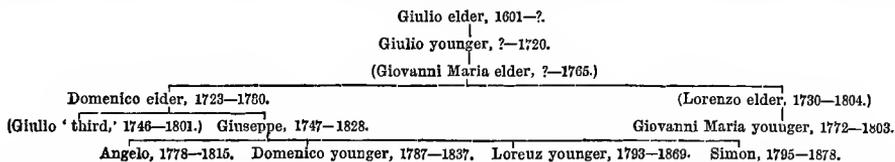

QUADAL, MARTIN FERDINAND, painter and engraver, was born at Niemtschitz in Moravia in 1736. He came in early life to London, then visited France and Italy, worked at Vienna in 1787-9, and in St. Petersburg 1797-1804. After a second visit to London, he returned to St. Petersburg, where he died in 1811. He painted animal pieces, as well as military scenes, genre subjects, and portraits. He etched a 'Group of Cats,' a 'Child with a Dog,' and 'Studies from Domestic and Wild Animals' (London, 1793).

QUADRA, NICOLAS ANTONIO, (or DE LA QUADRA,) a Spanish painter, who flourished at the end of the 17th century. There is a life-size portrait by him in the Carmelite Couvent at Madrid. It is dated 1695.

QUAGLIA, FERNANDO, an Italian miniature painter, who was active in the first years of the 19th century. He painted portraits of Marshal Junot and of the Empress Josephine.

QUAGLIATA, GIOVANNI, an historical painter, born at Messina in 1603. He was a pupil of Cortona. His brother ANDREA, born in 1600, was also an historical painter. Giovanni died in 1673 and Andrea in 1660.

QUAGLIO. This was the name of a family of artists of Laino, between Lakes Como and Lugano. Some of them were exclusively architects (Giovanni Maria 'the elder,' Lorenzo 'the elder,' and Giulio 'the third')—whose names in the following genealogical table are enclosed in parentheses :—

QUAGLIO, ANGELO, eldest son of Giuseppe Quaglio, an architect, designer, and painter, was born in 1784, and died in 1815. He designed and painted landscapes and architectural pictures for Boisserée's work on Cologne Cathedral. Two pictures by him are in the new Pinakothek at Munich.

QUAGLIO, DOMENICO, 'the elder,' historical painter, was born at Laino in 1723, and died in 1760.

QUAGLIO, DOMENICO, 'the younger,' second son of Giuseppe Quaglio, was a landscape and architectural painter, born at Munich in 1787. He was taught perspective and scene-painting by his father, and engraving by Mettenleiter and Karl Hess. In 1819 he resigned his post as scene-painter, and occupied himself thenceforward only with architecture, for which he obtained subjects in the Netherlands, Italy, France, and England. He died at Hohenschwangau in 1837. He engraved twelve plates of 'Architectural Monuments,' and lithographed thirty 'Remarkable German Buildings of the Middle Ages.' There are many pictures by him in the modern collections at Munich and Berlin.

QUAGLIO, GIOVANNI MARIA, 'the younger,' son of Lorenzo Quaglio 'the elder,' was an architect as well as painter, and was born at Laino in 1772. He studied at Rome, Naples, Milan, and Venice, and became in 1793 court scene-painter at Munich. He died in 1813.

QUAGLIO, GIULIO, 'the elder,' father of the younger artist of the same name, was an historical and fresco painter, and an imitator of Tintoretto. He was born in 1601, and worked in Vienna, Salzburg, and Laibach.

QUAGLIO, GIULIO, 'the younger,' was a native of Como. He established himself in the Friuli about the end of the 17th century, and there executed several considerable works in fresco. His most esteemed productions are in the chapel of the Monte di Pietà, at Udine.

QUAGLIO, GIUSEPPE, was born at Laino in 1747, and died at Munich in 1828, having practised scene-painting in Mannheim, Frankfort, and Ludwigsburg.

QUAGLIO, LORENZ, 'the younger,' third son of Giuseppe Quaglio, was a genre painter and lithographer. He was born at Munich in 1793, and died at the same city in 1869. The Berlin National Gallery contains a 'Tyrolese Inn' by him. He furnished designs for a set of illustrations from the Munich Gallery, and lithographed a 'Family Concert' after G. Netscher.

QUAGLIO, SIMON, a son of Giuseppe Quaglio, was a theatrical painter, architect, and lithographer, and was born at Munich in 1795. He studied under his father, and under his brother Angelo, and painted architectural subjects as well as theatrical scenes. He died at Munich in 1878.

QUAINI, FRANCESCO, was born at Bologna in 1611, and was a scholar of Agostino Mitelli, under whom he became a painter of perspective and architectural views. There are several of his works in the public buildings of Bologna. The best perhaps is the decoration of the Sala Farnese, in the Palazzo Pubblico. He died at Bologna in 1680.

QUAINI, LUIGI, the son of Francesco Quaini, was born at Bologna in 1643. After learning perspective under his father, he became a disciple of Guercino, but afterwards entered the school of Carlo Cignani (to whom he was nearly related), at the time when Marc Antonio Franceschini was also a disciple of that master. Jointly with Franceschini, he assisted Cignani in several of his principal works. After the death of their instructor, the two scholars continued to labour in conjunction, Franceschini supplying the figures and Quaini the landscapes, architecture, and other accessories. Their united talents were successively employed at Bologna, Modena, Piacenza, Genoa, and at Rome, where they painted the cartoons for one of the small domes in St. Peter's, which were carried out in mosaic. Quaini also painted several historical subjects from his own compositions, which were entirely finished by himself. In the church of San Giuseppe at Bologna is a 'Visitation' by Quaini; in La Carità, a 'Pieta'; and in San Niccolò the principal altar-piece; it represents the saint in prison, visited by the Virgin and an angel. Quaini died in 1717.

QUARENCHI, GIACOMO, painter, born at Bergamo in 1744. He was a pupil of R. Mengs, but devoted himself chiefly to architecture. He migrated to St. Petersburg, where he worked almost entirely at architecture, and had a great influence over the development of that art at the Russian capital. He died there in 1817.

QUAST, PIETER, was a Dutch painter and engraver at the Hague, where he lived in 1632. His pictures usually resemble those of Brouwer and A. van Ostade, and represent beggars and assemblies of hoors merry-making, treated with a great deal of humour and not less vulgarity. He has been termed 'the Dutch Callot.' Of his paintings there remain :

Berlin.	Suermondt Coll.	An Officer.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	Spirit-dealer and a Woman. Blind Man and Woman.
Vienna.	"	Peasant Dance. 1633.

We have several spirited etchings by him from his own designs, as well as after other masters, some of which are executed in the style of Callot, though incorrect in drawing. He generally marked his prints with one of the following monograms :

Q. D. R. The following may be named :

- The Five Senses; P. Quast fec. 1638.
- The Four Seasons, in grotesque figures.
- A set of twenty-six plates of Beggars, Boors, &c.
- A set of twelve Grotesque Figures.
- A set of ten plates of Beggars, &c. S. Savery exc.
- A set of twelve fancy subjects, in imitation of Callot.

QUATREPOMME, ISABELLA, is mentioned by Papillon as an engraver on wood. She seems to have been a native of Rouen, and to have flourished about the year 1521, for that date appears on the frontispiece of an old calendar executed by her, representing a figure of Janus. It is marked with a rebus made up of an apple on which is the cipher 4. There has been some dispute as to her existence.

QUEBOORN (OR QUEBOREN). See VAN DEN QUEBOORN.

QUECQ, JACQUES EDOUARD, a French historical painter, born at Cambrai in 1796, and died in 1874. He was a pupil of Steuben. Works :

- First Combat of Romulus and Remus. 1827.
- Death of Vitellius. 1831.
- Death of Britannicus. 1833.
- After the Shipwreck. 1834. (Museum of Valenciennes.)
- Saint Waast. 1838. (Ministère de l'Intérieur, Paris.)
- St. Francis of Assissi. 1836. (Do.)
- San Carlo Borrowed during the Plague at Milan. 1840.
- San Carlo Borromeo administering the Viaticum to Pius IV. 1842.
- St. Martin of Tours. 1846. (Ministère de l'Intérieur.)
- Lais and Diogenes. 1850.
- Christ fainting under the Cross. 1861. (Yvry, Nord.)
- Portrait of Louis XVIII. (Cambrai Museum.)

QUELLIN, ERASMUS II., (OR QUELLINUS), was born at Antwerp in 1607. He was son of the sculptor Erasmus Quellin I., and brother of Artus Quellin, also a sculptor. The early part of his life was devoted to the study of the Belles Lettres, and Sandrart asserts that he was for some time professor of philosophy. His intimacy with Rubens inspired him with a love for painting, and, abandoning his professor's chair, he became the disciple of his friend. In a few years he distinguished himself among the able artists of his country, at a period when Antwerp was the residence of the best painters of the Flemish school. He became a master of perspective, and was well versed in the details of architecture, with which he embellished the backgrounds of his historical pictures. His landscapes too are treated in a very pleasing style. On the conclusion of peace between France and Spain, he in 1660 painted 'Mars and Bellona chased by Peace and Hymen,' also 'The Nuptials of Louis XIV. and Maria Theresa,' and several decorative pictures upon the occasion of the entry of the Spanish Governor-General in 1665. He was not less successful with portraits, and painted those of many of the most distinguished artists of his time. Quellin was a great friend of Gevartius. He died in Tongerlo Abbey in 1678. Works :

Antwerp.	St. Andrew's.	The Guardian Angel.
"	St. Jacques.	Death of St. Roch.
"	Museum.	Miracles of St. Hugh of Lincoln ( a double picture ).

Rotterdam.	Museum.	Assumption of the Virgin.
"	"	A Kitchen.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Coronation of Charles V.

We have a few etchings by Erasmus Quellin among which are the following :

- Samson killing the Lion; after Rubens.
- A Landscape, with a dance of children and young satyrs; E. Quellinus fec.
- The Virgin and Infant Jesus; after Rubens.
- Christ at the Pillar.

QUELLIN, HUBERT, (OR QUELLINUS), another brother of Artus Quellin, was born at Antwerp about the year 1608. He engraved a set of plates after designs made by Jan Bennokel, from the marble statues executed by Artus Quellin, in the Stadthouse at Amsterdam, which plates are marked with the initials of both the artists, A. Q. H. Q. They form a volume in folio, and were published in 1655. He also engraved some portraits. His plates are etched in a singular style, resembling that of Pieter Soutman, and neatly finished with the graver. Among others, we have the following portraits by him :

- Artus Quellin, Statuary of Antwerp; H. Quellinus del. et sc.
- Philip IV. seated on his throne, with the Prince Royal, and several allegorical figures; H. Quellinus. 1665.

QUELLIN, JAN ERASMUS, the son and scholar of Erasmus Quellin II., was baptized at Antwerp on December 1, 1634. He visited Italy, and resided some years at Venice, where the works of Paolo Veronese particularly attracted his attention. He adopted the decorative style of that master, and had acquired considerable reputation at Venice, Naples, and Rome, when, at the desire of his father, he returned to his native country. The expectation his countrymen had formed from the report of his talents furnished him with numerous commissions, and his altar-pieces are to be found in most of the churches of the Low Countries. The younger Quellin was a painter of great natural ability, but in his time the school was too far on the decline for his work to be agreeable. He became a member of the Guild at Antwerp in 1660, and was named painter to Leopold II., whose portrait, and that of the Empress, he painted. Quellin married Cornélie, the daughter of David Teniers the younger, and by her had a family of eleven children. The date and place of his death are unknown, although Immerzeel gives the year 1715. QUENTIN, NICOLAS, a French historical painter who lived at Dijon, and died there in 1636. His life has been too much neglected by biographers and critics, for his work had considerable originality. He appears to have had no regular master. The compiler of the catalogue of the Dijon Museum asserts that Poussin, passing through Dijon and seeing his 'Communion of St. Catherine,' exclaimed that if Quentin understood his own interests, and went to Italy for improvement, he would make his fortune. Works :

QUERENA, LACTANZIO, an Italian painter, born at Clusone, near Bergamo, in 1760. He studied at the Academy of Verona, and also in Venice. He was very skilful in restoring old masters, and painted many pictures for the churches. He died at Venice on July 10, 1853. Works :

QUERFURTH, AUGUST, was born at Wolfenbuttel in 1696. He was first instructed by his father, TOBIAS QUERFURTH, a landscape and animal painter, and afterwards studied under Rugendas at Augsburg. He painted encampments, battles, kirmishes of cavalry, and hunting subjects, in all of which he appears rather as an imitator than as an original painter. He sometimes imitated the manner of Bourgognone, Parrocel, and Van der Meulen, but more especially sought to form his style after Wouwerman. He died at Vienna in 1761. The Belvedere possesses two hunting-pieces by him; the Augsburg Gallery, four, and a battle; others are at Berlin, Dresden, and Stüttgart.

QUERRA. See GUERRA.
 QUERTEMONT, ANDREAS BERNHARD DE, a portrait and historical painter, born at Antwerp in 1750. He was a pupil of the Academy of Antwerp, of which he afterwards became Director. He also had a private school, from which he turned out several good painters. He was the author of a series of portraits of the members of the 'States' of Brabant, which have been engraved. He died in 1835.

QUESNEL, a Scoto-French family of artists of some importance : genealogy :

QUESNEL, AUGUSTIN, son of François, was born in Paris in 1595. He was painter and print-seller. Marolles says he painted portraits, but the only known work of his is a 'Flute-player,' engraved by Ganières. Of the other two sons of François, FRANÇOIS II. and NICOLAS, nothing is known, but it is believed that the former quitted the easel for the cloister.

QUESNEL, FRANÇOIS, the eldest son of Pierre, was born at Holyrood, Edinburgh, about 1544. His portrait, by himself, was engraved by Michel Lasne. He seems to have been the ablest and the most famous member of his family. He was a great favourite with Henry III, and his court, especially the Chancellor Chiverny. His portraits, says de Marolles, are often confounded with those of Janet. He compiled 'Le Premier Plan de Paris, en douze feuilles.' But for his modest and retiring disposition, he would have won wider fame and greater honours. He made many designs for tapestries, &c., to be used on the occasions of the entry of Marie de Medici, and the consecration of Louis XIII. Some of these were engraved by Thomas de Leu. Quesnel died in Paris in 1619. Works :

QUESNEL, JACQUES, third son of Pierre, was born at Paris. Nearly all that is known of him is contained in the following quatrain of Marolles :

Jacques peignit des Saints, des voutes, des chapelles.
 Il peignit des tableaux pour l'hôtel de Zamet,
 Et en fit pour le prince à qui tout se soumet,
 Et l'on connut de lui mille beautés nouvelles.

He died in Paris May 11, 1624.
 QUESNEL, NICOLAS, second son of Pierre, born in Paris, was Dean of the Society of Painters and Sculptors. There is a portrait in pastel by him, of his father, Pierre Quesnel, in the National Library, Paris. He died August 7, 1632.

QUESNEL, PIERRE, the head of the family, was descended from an ancient Scottish house. He was protected by Mary of Lorraine, who presented him to her husband, James V. He married Madeleine Digby in Scotland, and, after she had born him one son, returned to France and settled in Paris, where he was still living in 1580. His only known work is the design, executed in 1557, for the east windows in the church of the Augustines, at Paris. The subject is the 'Ascension,' with Henry II. and Catharine de' Medici as kneeling spectators.

QUESNEL, TOUSSAINT, son of Nicolas the elder, flourished in 1651, when he painted history in collaboration with Fréminet and Dubreuil. In the above-named year he signed the act of union between the master painters and the academicians.

QUÉTRY, BARTHELEMY, a French painter, who, in 1543, painted a series of mythological pictures in the Tennis Court at the Tuileries.

QUEVERDO, FRANÇOIS MARIE ISIDORE, a French engraver, doubtless of Spanish origin, was born at Josselin in Brittany in 1748. He was a pupil of J. B. Pierre and of J. de Longueil. He engraved several plates, as well from his own designs as after other masters. He executed part of the plates for the 'Voyage pittoresque d'Italie,' by the Abbé de St. Non. We have also, among others, the following prints by him :

A series of designs for the 'Henriade'; partly engraved by himself, but finished by Dembrun.

A series of vignettes for a translation of Ovid's 'Fasti,' and 'Heroides.'

Setting out for the Sabbath.

Republican Calendar for the year Two.

Portrait of Charlotte Corday. (Drawing.)

QUEVERDO, LOUIS IVE, engraver, born in Paris in 1788, was a pupil of Regnault and Coiny. Among his plates we may name the following :

The Transfiguration; after Raphael. ('Musée Filhol.')

The Canaanitish Woman; after Drouais. (Do.)

The Romans and Sabines; after David. ('Recueil des Prix Décennaux.')

The Three Ages; after Gérard. (Do.)

Marcus Sextus; after Guérin. (Do.)

Orestes and the Furies; after Hennequin. (Do.)

The Coronation of Napoleon I.; after David. (Do.)

Aodromache; after Guérin. (Etching.)

Neptune and Amphitrite; after Giulio Romano. (Do.)

Henry IV. and his family; after Ingres. (Do.)

Daphnis and Chloe; after Gérard. (Do.)

(These four plates were finished with the burin by Richomme).

QUILLERIER, NOËL, a French historical painter and assistant professor of the Academy of Painting, was born at Orleans in 1594, and died in 1669, in Paris. He was received at the Academy in 1663, his reception picture being a 'Saint Paul.' He executed paintings in a cabinet at the Tuileries, and during several years of his life was conservator of the pictures in the Royal Palace of the Louvre.

QUILLIARD, PIERRE ANTOINE, a French painter and engraver, was born in Paris in 1711. He was a scholar of Watteau, and soon after leaving the school of that master, he was invited to the court of Portugal, where he was made painter to the queen, and a member of the Academy at Lisbon. His principal work as a painter is a ceiling in the queen's bed-chamber. He engraved from his own designs the plates for 'The Funeral of Duke Don Nuno Olivares Pereira,' published at Lisbon in 1730. He died at Lisbon while still young.

QUINAURT, CHARLES LOUIS FRANÇOIS, a French painter, born at Valenciennes in 1788. He was a pupil of Abel de Pujol and Watelet. His pictures are numerous. In the museum in his native town there is an 'Erminia with the Shepherds,' in a landscape.

QUINKHARDT, JAN MAURITS, was born at Rees, near Cleves, in 1688, and was a scholar, successively, of Arnold van Boonen, Lubinietski, and N. Verkolje. He painted familiar, allegorical, and mythological subjects, and was excellent in portraits, of which he painted a great number. Five good examples are in the Amsterdam Museum. He died in 1772. His son JULIUS, born in 1736, was instructed by his father, but abandoned art for commerce. He died in 1776. Two pictures by him are in the Amsterdam Museum.

QUINTILIEN, —, is mentioned by Florent le Comte as the engraver of some plates after Callot, to which he did not affix his name.

QUINTON, GEORGE, a self-taught engraver, was born at Norwich in 1779. Some of his works appear in the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' 1796.

QUIRICIUS DA MURANO, an obscure painter over whose career there has been much discussion. Among the treasures at Rovigo towards the close of the 18th century, Francesco Bartoli noticed a St. Lucia by an unknown painter in the house of the Campanari family, dated and signed as follows, Opus Quiricius de Joanes Venecis M<sup>o</sup> 4062. This picture is now in the possession of Cardinal Silvestri at Rovigo. The signature and technical characteristics suggest that Quiricius was the pupil of Giovanni d'Alemania, the chief of the famous workshop of Murano. In the Venice Academy there are a 'Virgin Adoring' and an 'Ecce Homo,' both clearly by the same hand, and the former signed . . . uiritus, Murano. This signature, however, is either false or repainted. For a fuller discussion of Quiricius, see Crowe and Cavalcaselle, 'Painting in North Italy,' vol. i. pp. 34—37.

QUIROS, LORENZO, a Spanish historical painter, and imitator of Murillo, was born at Santos in Estremadura in 1717. He studied at Seville under Bernard German Llorente, and made great progress both in fresco and oil painting. To perfect himself in drawing, he went to Madrid; but his turbulent disposition induced him to abandon the patronage of Corrado and Mengs, who were disposed to employ him. He returned to Seville, where he remained for twenty years without ever making any one acquainted with his place of residence. He employed himself in copying the works of Murillo, which he did very successfully, selling his copies through an agent. He died in 1789. He has left works at Madrid, at the Royal Academy of San Fernando, at Cazalla, Granada, Xeres, Seville, and at other places in Spain.

QUITER, HERMAN HENDRIK, (OR HAR HIND,) a Dutch mezzotint engraver, was born in 1620, and died in 1700. We have by him a few English portraits, after Sir Peter Lely and others.

His eldest son, also HERMAN HENDRIK, studied in the school of Carlo Maratti, in 1700, and was afterwards painter to the Landgrave of Hesse; he died in 1711 at Brunswick. MAGNUS QUITER, a younger son, a portrait painter, was also a short time in the school of Maratti; he visited Holland and England, and probably assisted Kneller. He was afterwards keeper of the Gallery at Salzdalum, and died in 1744. There was also an E. QUITER, a mezzotinter, who produced a few plates after Jan de Baan.

R

RAAB, IGNAZ JOSEPH, a painter, was born at Mechanitz in Bohemia, in 1715. He studied at Getschin under Major, but in 1744 entered the Jesuit Order, for which he did much decorative work in fresco. He died at Welehrad in Moravia, in 1787.

RAABE, JOSEPH, a portrait and historical painter, was born at Deutsch-Warternberg, in Silesia, in 1780. After travelling through Germany, France, and Italy, he became court painter to the Duke of Hesse, and teacher of drawing and painting in the Academy at Bonn. In 1816 he became a member of the Dresden Academy, and in the same year went again to Italy. Some years later he was appointed court painter to the King of Saxony. His chief works are figures of St. Peter and St. Paul, painted for the church at Naumburg, in Silesia, and a 'Madonna and Child' for the church at Werthau, in the same province. In the Dresden Gallery there is a series of pictures and drawings by him illustrating the history of Germany in the Middle Ages. Raabe died in 1849.

RABAGLIO, PROSPER, was a native of Brescia. There is an altar-piece by him in the church of the Capuchins in that city, dated 1588.

RABASSE, JEAN, an engraver and print-seller, who flourished in Paris about 1650. Three prints have been attributed to him: a 'Judith,' signed Jean Rabas avec Privilège du Roy; a 'Holy Family,' with his initials, J. R., and a 'Repose in Egypt,' with the same letters in a cipher. The two latter have been variously assigned by different writers.

RABBIA, RAFAELLE, a portrait painter, was born at Marino. He was living in the year 1610.

RABEL, DANIEL, the son of Jean Rabel, was probably instructed by him in the principles of art. He painted landscapes, some of which have been engraved. He etched a considerable number of plates in a style resembling that of Israel Silvestre, which chiefly consist of views and landscapes, with figures neatly drawn. His death is said to have taken place in 1628.

RABEL, JEAN, painter and engraver, was born at Beauvais, in France, between 1545 and 1550. He executed several etchings for a book called 'The Antiquities of Paris,' published in 1588. He engraved portraits of Charles V., Louis XII., Soissons, and Coligny; and painted portraits of Henri III., Garnier, and others. There is a copper-plate by him representing the 'Martyrdom of St. Lawrence,' copied from the print of the same subject engraved by Marc Antonio, after Baccio Bandinelli. It is smaller than the original, and on a stone at the bottom of the print is inscribed Io Rabel Belonacus lute Parisii. He died in 1603.

RABEN, SERVATIUS, (RÆVEN, or RAVEN,) a Dutch engraver, of whom little is known with certainty, except that he engraved the 'Twelve Cæsars,' after Stradannus, on one of which is a cipher formed of S. R. V., and on the rest his name varied as above; and the 'Madonna della Seggiola,' after Raphael, signed Servatius Ræven. By some he has been confused with Serwouter; but the cipher of the latter is very different from his, being composed of a P and an S interlaced, followed by a W.

RABER, JOHANN GEORG, a German engraver, was born at Vienna in 1764. He became the pupil of Müller in Stuttgart, and of Desnoyers in Paris. His chief works are 'Children,' after Van Dyck; a 'Madonna,' after Raphael; and a portrait of Prince Ludwig of Bavaria, after Kellerhofen.

RABIELLA, PABLO, a Spanish painter of battle-pieces, who lived at Saragossa at the commencement of the 18th century, where he enjoyed a considerable reputation. Though not very correct in his drawing, in his painting he followed with success the styles of Juan Rizi of Castille, and Juan de Valdes of Andalusia. There are several pictures in the Trinitarios Calzados de Ternel attributed to him; also in the chapels of St. Marco and Santiago, and one in the Cathedral de la Seu at Saragossa, representing the Battle of Clavijo.

RABISINO, TOMMASO DA, commonly known as Tommaso da Modena, a native of Modena, who flourished as a painter in the 14th century. Of his life nothing is known for certain, but the chief works which have been the means of preserving his name are: an 'Ecce Homo' and 'Madonna' in the chapel of the Castle at Karlstein; a 'Madonna' in the Gallery at Modena; a 'Madonna with Saints' in the Belvedere at Vienna, and several Saints in the church of St. Niccolo at Treviso, most of which are in a very exaggerated style. See Crowe and Cavalcaselle, 'Italian Painting,' vol. ii. p. 219.

RABON, NICOLAS, (or REBON,) son of Pierre (Rabon), was born in Paris in 1644, and painted historical subjects. He obtained honours at the Academy in 1666, and was admitted a member in 1686. He died the same year at Hermant.

RABON, PIERRE, (or REBON,) born at Havre in 1619, practised portrait painting. He was admitted into the old Royal Academy of France in 1660, and died in 1684.

RACCHETTI, BERNARDO, the nephew and scholar of Giovanni Ghisolfi, was born at Milan in 1639. He painted architectural views and perspectives in the style of his instructor, for whose pictures Racchetti's are not unfrequently mistaken. They usually represent sea-ports embellished with magnificent buildings, which are drawn with precision, and handled with taste and spirit. There are many of his works in the private collections at Milan, where he died in 1702.

RACINE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1747. He was a pupil of François Allamet, and has engraved several vignettes and other plates for books, after Cochin. We have also some prints of landscapes after different masters, and a few subjects from the pictures in the Orleans Gallery. Among others the following are by him:

Hagar and Ishmael; after P. F. Mola.
A Pastoral Subject; after B. Breenberg.
A Pair of Landscapes; after Pillement.

RACLE, FRANÇOIS B., portrait painter, born at Liège, 1739, a pupil of Deprez, and studied also in Italy. He succeeded his father as painter in ordinary to the chapter of S. Lambert's Cathedral. He died 1777.

RADCLYFFE, EDWARD, an English mezzotint and line engraver, born at Birmingham in 1810. He studied under his father, W. Radclyffe, whom he assisted for some time. Coming to London in 1842, he worked for the Annuals and the 'Art Journal.' In 1862 he engraved a series of landscapes after David Cox for the Art Union of London. He died in Camden Town in 1863. Amongst his best plates are :

The Windy Day ; after D. Coz.
A Welsh Funeral ; after the same.
Kenilworth Castle ; after the same.
The Hay-field ; after Absolon.
Rape of Europa ; after Claude.
The Beacon Tower ; after the same.
Morning : Sea Coast ; after F. R. Lee.

RADCLYFFE, WILLIAM, an English engraver, born at Birmingham in 1780. His works are in the line manner, and are chiefly landscape. He practised in his native town, and had much to do with the encouragement of art there. Thus, in 1814, he was one of the founders of the first Birmingham school of art ; in 1821 he assisted in the formation of the Society of Arts ; and, in 1842, he aided in the establishment of the Society of Artists. Many of his works are to be found in the Annuals of the time ; perhaps his best efforts are in 'Graphic Illustrations of Warwickshire' (1829), and Roscoe's 'Wanderings in North and South Wales.' He died at Birmingham in 1855. The following are some of his best plates :

Portrait of Dr. Milner ; after Barber.
Portrait of Lord Nelson.
Rest in the Desert ; after Müller.
Crossing the Sands ; after Collins.
Church of St. Julian ; after Turner.
Hornby Castle ; after the same.
Deal ; after the same.

RADCLYFFE, WILLIAM, an English portrait painter, was the son of W. Radclyffe, the engraver. He practised at Birmingham, and afterwards at London, exhibiting occasionally at the Royal Academy. He died young in 1846.

RADEMAKER, ABRAHAM, probably the younger brother of Gerard Rademaker, was born at Amsterdam in 1675, and is said to have reached an eminent rank in art as a landscape painter, without the assistance of an instructor. His first productions were painted in water-colours, and were very highly finished ; but he afterwards practised oil painting, with no less success. He was well acquainted with the rules of architecture, and embellished his landscapes with buildings and ruins, in a very picturesque manner. He engraved from his own designs a set of plates of the most interesting views of ancient monuments, &c. in the Netherlands. They are executed in a masterly style, and were published at Amsterdam in 1727. Rademaker died at Amsterdam, January 22nd, 1735.

RADEMAKER, GERARD, born at Amsterdam in 1672, was the son of an architect, who taught him the first rudiments of drawing and perspective, with an intention of bringing him up to his own profession ; but perceiving his son's inclination for painting, he placed him under the tuition of A. van Ghoor, a portrait painter of some reputation. He had made some progress in his studies when the death of his master deprived him of his assistance ; but he was sufficiently advanced in the art to give lessons in design ; and he was engaged by the Bishop of Sebasto to teach his niece drawing.

That prelate being afterwards obliged to visit Rome, Rademaker was invited to accompany him, and had the advantage of improving his talent by studying the most interesting objects in that capital. His genius led him to represent views of the principal ruins and other monuments in that city and vicinity, which he designed with accuracy and precision. On his return to Holland he met with the most flattering encouragement. He did not, however, confine himself to architectural views, but painted with considerable success historic and emblematic subjects which adorn the public edifices at Amsterdam and the other cities of Holland. In the Townhall at Amsterdam is an allegorical subject painted by Rademaker, representing the regency of the city ; and in the collection of the family of Walraaven there is a view of the interior of St. Peter's at Rome, designed with great accuracy. He died at Amsterdam in 1711.

RADET, JEAN B., a French painter and native of Dijon, where he was born in 1752. As an artist he had little success, but won some reputation with his pen. He died in 1830.

RADI, BERNARDINO, a native of Cortona, an Italian designer and engraver, whose name is affixed to a set of architectural ornaments, monuments, &c., published at Rome in 1618. They are slight, hasty etchings, and bear the title Varie invenzioni per depositi di Bernardino Radi Cortonese.

RADIGUES, ANTOINE, a French engraver, horn at Rheims in 1719. He is said to have visited England, whence he went through Holland to Russia, and resided several years at St. Petersburg, where he engraved the portraits of the Prince and Princess Gallitzin, and other persons of distinction. He also engraved a plate for the collection of the Dresden Gallery, representing Angelica and Medoro, after Alessandro Tiarini.

RADIN SALEH BEN JAGYA, Prince, a native of Java, where he was born early in the present century. He was the pupil, in painting, of A. Schelffont and C. Kruseman. He lived for a time in Dresden, and afterwards accompanied Horace Vernet to Algeria. Among his best pictures are 'A Lion Hunt,' 'A Storm at Sea,' and a copy of Paul Potter's 'Bull.'

RADL, ANTON, a landscape painter and engraver, born at Vienna in 1774, received his early training in the Academy at Vienna, but in 1790 he went to Brussels, where he put himself under the painter Kormer. Thence he went to Frankfort, and worked at engraving under Prestel, whose chief assistant he became, and had a great share in the engravings by Prestel after Ruysdael. His chief excellence lay in his drawing, especially of foliage, for his colouring was hard. He died at Frankfort in 1842. His chief paintings are 'A Wood in Summer' in the Darmstadt Gallery, and a 'Woodland Scene' in the Städel Institute. He has left seventy-five views of Germany in sepia and Indian ink ; while of his aquatints the most worthy of notice are :

A Moonlight Scene ; after Van der Neer.
A Cornfield ; after Ruysdael.
A Cattle Scene ; after Potter.
A Bear Hunt ; after Snyders.

RADOS, LUIGI, an engraver, born at Parma in 1780, was educated in the Academy of that city. His principal engravings are :

The Emperor Francis II. ; after Bosio.
King Ferdinand ; after the same.

The Archduke Anton; after the same.
 Prince Eugene; after Jacob.
 The Last Supper; after Leonardo da Vinci.
 Madonna Enthroned; after Raphael.
 A Landscape; after Gonzaga.

RAEBURN, Sir HENRY, an eminent portrait painter, was born at Stockbridge, now forming part of Edinburgh, in 1756. His father was a manufacturer, but at the age of six he was left an orphan, and was placed at Heriot's Hospital. At the age of fifteen he was apprenticed to a goldsmith in Edinburgh; but a propensity for sketching and drawing, which he had evinced at school, seemed more to occupy his mind than the business of his master. On discovering this propensity, and seeing some tolerably executed miniatures which he had painted, his master encouraged him in the pursuit by introducing him to David Martin, the leading portrait painter at that time in Edinburgh. The sight of that artist's pictures at once lighted up a flame in the mind of young Raeburn, and the kind manner in which the painter received him made an impression which was not obliterated when he arrived at the summit of his reputation. By the further kindness of his master, the goldsmith, he was permitted to practise art, and was so successful, that in a short time he was enabled to purchase the remainder of his apprenticeship, and to become professedly a painter of portraits in miniature. As his knowledge of art increased, so did his views expand; but as he had received no preliminary instruction he had many difficulties to contend with. By perseverance he overcame them. Martin lent him pictures with permission to copy them, but without offering any assistance as to the manner in which he was to proceed. The elder artist, it is said, grew uneasy, when he saw the talent of the neophyte, and fearing that he was fostering a rival who might hereafter dispute his supremacy, he abruptly terminated the acquaintance. This seems to have been the end of Raeburn's early studies. He soon applied himself entirely to painting in oil, and his reputation, with his application, opened to him the doors of the rich, whose collections of pictures afforded a better opportunity to become acquainted with the beauties of art than he had hitherto enjoyed. At the age of twenty-two he married the widow of Count Leslie, a lady who had, as a maiden, been a Miss Edgar. With her he obtained a fortune which put him above money cares. He at once repaired to London to seek the advice of Sir Joshua Reynolds, who counselled him to go to Rome, and study Michael Angelo. This advice was strengthened by an offer of pecuniary assistance if needed, and letters of introduction to persons who might be useful during his stay in Italy. The latter he accepted, and with his wife departed for Rome. After two years' residence in Italy he returned to Scotland, and may be said to have commenced his real professional career. He soon took the lead in Edinburgh, and verified the justness of his former friend Martin's apprehensions. For years, application, improvement, and success went hand in hand; and he might reckon the greater part of the distinguished men of Scotland of his time among his sitters and friends. In 1813 he became an associate of the Royal Academy, and in the following year R. A., it is said without the usual solicitation. He now again turned his thoughts to the metropolis, and consulted Sir Thomas Lawrence on the subject, who persuaded him to be content with his Scottish supremacy. He took the advice which Lawrence had given with so much disinterestedness, and the portraits of the mountain chiefs, the Macdonalds, Mackenzies, Campbells, Bruces, Hays, Scots, Duffs, Gordons, Douglases, Hamiltons, and many others, attest the fulness of his practice. In 1822, when George IV. visited Scotland, he was knighted, and the following year appointed "His Majesty's limner in that part of his dominions, with all the rights, privileges, and advantages thereunto belonging." Whatever these rights, privileges, and advantages might be, he did not long enjoy them, for he died in Edinburgh in 1823. It has only been within the last few years that Raeburn's high rank in art has been fully acknowledged. In 1876 a collection of 325 portraits by him was brought together in the galleries of the Royal Scottish Academy, and in 1877 several of the best were at the Winter Exhibition of the Royal Academy in London. Since then the Scottish painter has been fast rising in public esteem, and now he may be said to rank next to Reynolds and Gainsborough among British painters of portraits. The following list is confined to his more notable and more accessible portraits:

Daniel Stewart.
Lord Jeffrey.
Lady Raeburn.
Himself.

Many of Raeburn's portraits have been finely engraved in mezzotint and other methods. The best plate after him, perhaps, is Charles Turner's mezzotint from the 'Lord Newton' in the Scottish National Gallery.

RAEFUS, P., (or RAEFE,) a wood engraver, was a native of Paris. He flourished about the year 1575. He, with O. Goujon, a relation of the famous sculptor Jean Goujon, executed the cuts for a cosmographical work by André Thevet. His prints are very neatly finished, and are usually marked with the initials P. R. He also engraved on wood the figures dealing with masonry in Jean Martin's translation of Vitruvius.

RAET, (or DE RAET,) ARNOULD, painter, working at Léau, and in Louvain and the neighbourhood, in the second part of the 15th century. In 1473 he settled finally at Louvain, and by his second wife became the father of Louis Raet.

RAET, LOUIS, (or LOUIS DE SCILDERE,) painter, the son of Arnould Raet. Between 1505 and 1507 he decorated the walls of the church of Léau with paintings, which are now hidden under whitewash.

RAETH, IGNATIUS, painter, born at Antwerp, 1626, a member of the Order of Jesus. He practised for some years in Spain and in Germany, painting historical subjects and, more especially, portraits. In the church of St. Gandolph, at Bamberg, there is a 'Crucifixion' by him. He returned to Flanders in 1662, and died in 1666.

RAFFAELLI, FRANCESCO, a native of Italy, who flourished about the year 1705. He engraved some historical plates of no great merit.

RAFFALT, IGNAZ, painter and engraver, was born at Weisskirchen in Upper Austria in 1800. He entered the Academy at Vienna. His earliest pictures were still-life, but he afterwards devoted himself to landscapes. He died at Vienna in 1857. His principal works are :

A Mill in Obersteier.
A Snow landscape.
A River Scene with a Castle.
Soup for the Convent. 1846.
An Evening Scene with a Castle and Bridge.
Fishermen's Huts. 1848.
Postillions returning.
River Landscape with a Castle. 1852.
A Golden Wedding at Murau, in Styria.

RAFFALT, JOHANN GUALBERT, a son of Ignaz Raffalt, was born at Murau in Styria in 1834. He studied at Vienna under Pettenkofen, and afterwards travelled in Hungary and Dalmatia, the scenes of many of his pictures being placed in this latter country. He died at Rome in 1865. His principal works are :

Annual Fair in Hungary.
A Gipsies' Camp.
Pusztabrunden, Hungary.
Calf-market, Hungary.
The Waggon.

RAFFET, DENIS AUGUSTE MARIE, a French draughtsman, lithographer, and painter, born at Paris in 1804. He lost his father, a soldier, while young, and learnt drawing during apprenticeship to a turner. Entering the Ecole des Beaux Arts in 1824, he studied under Gros and Charlet. In 1826 he published an album of lithographed studies, the first of a series which had a great success. His subjects were scenes from military life, to which he remained faithful throughout his career. In 1832 he went to the siege of Antwerp, and three years later exhibited a fine series of lithographs from the sketches he made there. The patronage of Prince Demidoff enabled him to make extended travels in Europe and Western Asia. During these tours he accumulated materials for a large number of valuable lithographs. In 1849 Raffet went to Italy, and drew the various picturesque costumes and uniforms that were to be found in the still divided country. After the siege of Rome his time was spent either at Paris or at Prince Demidoff's villa at San Donato, near Florence. In 1853 the two friends went to Spain, and when the painter died he left incomplete the resulting album of sketches. Raffet always had the pencil in his hand, and his innumerable lithographs form a valuable chronicle of the scenes visited by himself and his friends. Perhaps the series in illustration of the 'Expedition des Portes-de-fer' is the best. It is said that he was more than once commissioned to paint a picture for Versailles, but always postponed it to his favourite lithographs. Raffet died at Genoa in 1860. Amongst his best works are :

Revue des Ombres.
The Evening after the Battle of Novara.
Capture of Coblenz.
Night Review by Napoleon.

RAGENEAU, JACQUES, painter, practising at the court of France in the first half of the 17th century, was appointed to the household of Marie de' Medici. He died in 1658.

RAGGI, PIETRO PAOLO, was born at Vienna about the year 1650; but his parents removing from thence to Genoa when he was young, he received his first education in art in that city, though it is not known by whom he was instructed. His picture in the Nunziata del Guastato, at Genoa, representing St. Bonaventura, is in the style of the Carracci, and is mentioned by Ratti as a production of great merit. After visiting Turin and Savona, he established himself at Bergamo, where he painted several pictures for the churches and private collections. In the church of St. Lorenzo is an admired picture of the 'Annunciation'; and in St. Marta, 'Mary Magdalene taken up into heaven.' He also distinguished himself as a painter of landscapes, which he embellished with figures representing pastoral or bacchanalian subjects, painted in the style of Benedetto Castiglione and Giulio Carpioni. He died at Bergamo in 1724.

RAGOT, FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, born at Bagnolet in 1641. He engraved some plates after Simon Vouet and Charles Le Brun; but he is chiefly distinguished for his ability in copying the prints engraved by Bolswert, Pontius, and Vorstermans, after the works of Rubens and Van Dyck. He executed about forty of these copies with such accuracy and precision, that they have been mistaken for the originals by inexperienced collectors. He is also said to have engraved a few portraits.

RAGUENEAU, (or RAGUINEAU,) A., painter, was writing-master to William III. of Orange. He painted several portraits of Prince Frederick Henry, two of which were for the parliament of Orange, 1667.

RAHL, KARL, a German historical and portrait painter, born in 1812, at Vienna. He studied in the Academy of that city, and at the age of twenty gained the great prize for his 'David in the Cave of Adullam,' which enabled him to complete his art training at Rome. On his return to Vienna he obtained a high reputation, and a large number of pupils passed through his studio. Politics occupied his attention almost as much as art, and more than once he had to leave Vienna through his inconvenient opinions. He practised fresco painting, and many of his works are to be seen in his native city, where he died in 1865. The Palais Todesco, the façade of the Greek Church, the interior of Baron Sina's palace, all at Vienna; a Banqueting Hall at Oldenburg; and some other buildings were decorated by him. The following are also good examples of his art:

Berlin. Gallery. Surprise of the Christians in the Roman Catacombs.
 Hamburg. Gallery. Manfred at Luceria.
 Munich. New Pinac. } Portrait of Martin Wagner,
                           thek. } Sculptor.
 Vienna. Gallery. Scene from the 'Niebelungen Lied.' 1835.

RAHL, KARL HEINRICH, an engraver, was born at Heilbronn in 1779. His father, a calico printer, apprenticed him to a silversmith, under whom he displayed the first signs of his talent by etching small landscapes. In 1799 he went to Vienna to study under Füger, maintaining himself meanwhile by the proceeds of the sale of his works. In 1815 he became a Fellow of the Academy; in 1829 chief engraver; and in 1839 Professor. He died at Vienna in 1843. There is great power about his work, but an absence of delicacy. His principal plates are:

Job and his Friends; after Wächter.
 The Blind Beggar; after the same.
 Presentation in the Temple; after Fra Bartolommeo.
 'La Notte;' after Correggio.
 The Battle of Aspern; after Kraft.

RAHN, RUDOLPH, engraver, born 1805, at Zurich, where he first studied. He came to Paris to complete his education, and finally settled at Munich. He engraved some excellent plates for Kaulbach's 'Reineke Fuchs,' jointly with Ad. Schleich. We may also mention his portrait of Winckelmann after Angelica Kaufmann.

RAIBOLINI, FRANCESCO DI MARCO (commonly called IL FRANCIA), was born at Bologna in the year 1450. His father was a carpenter, but although belonging to the artisan class, his family was highly respected, and owned lands in the neighbourhood. Francesco is said to have been remarkable for the charms of his person, manner, and conversation, which made him a general favourite, so that he numbered the noblest families of Bologna among his friends. He began life in the goldsmith's shop, and acquired considerable reputation by his designs for coins and medals, his gold and silver enamels, and especially his works in niello. Giovanni Bentivoglio II., the reigning prince at Bologna, became a munificent patron of Francia, and appointed him to be the Master of the Mint, an office which he held until the end of his life. Most of his goldsmith's work was executed for this prince, and perished at the destruction of his palace. Francia's first inclination to the study of painting is attributed to the influence of a visit paid by Andrea Mantegna to Bologna in 1472; and his earliest instruction in the art has long been said to have been received from Marco Zoppo. This, however, Signor Morelli disputes, and maintains that no sign of Zoppo's influence is to be traced in Francia, whom he looks upon as the pupil of Costa, and partly of Francesco Cossa and Ercole Roberti de' Grandi. One of Francia's earliest known works, a small 'Crucifixion,' in the Public Library of Bologna—executed, Morelli thinks, in 1791—shows the influence of both those masters in the fine colour and good expression of the heads, while the draperies have the rather harsh folds of the niellist. Another excellent example of his earliest work is the 'St. Stephen' of the Borghese Gallery at Rome; and another is the portrait of Bartolommeo Bianchini, formerly in the Northwick collection under the name of Raphael. A picture in the Berlin Museum, representing the 'Holy Family,' was painted by Francia for this Bartolommeo, who was a senator in Bologna. An altar-piece, now in the Bologna Gallery, was painted for the same patron. It has been often declared, with insufficient justification, that the earlier works of Francia are Umbrian in feeling, being affected by the example of Perugino, as seen in pictures brought to Bologna. His early manner seems to have been entirely Ferrarese, and so like that of Costa, that works by the one have been often ascribed to the other. That the two worked intimately together is proved by the fact that a predella painted by Costa forms a part of an altar-piece by Francia in the Bologna Gallery. From about the year 1500 there is a gradual change perceptible in the style of Francia's painting. This has been attributed to his friendship with Raphael, and his study of Raphael's work. But within the last few years great doubts have been thrown upon the existence of any such immediate friendship, and upon the documents, the letter and sonnet published by Malvasia, on which its acceptance depends. These were published for the first time in 'Felsina Pittrice,' in the year 1678, and it seems unlikely that if Malvasia had really possessed their originals, nothing would ever have been found of them. The later style of the master, which he owed in all probability as much to his own maturing powers and to the influence of Costa as to the influence of any work of Raphael that came before his eyes, is to be seen at its best in the great altar-piece of the National Gallery, especially the lunette, in a series of frescoes which he executed for the chapel of St. Cecilia, and in the Madonna of the Rose Garden, at Munich. In 1511, on the return of the Bentivogli to Bologna, Francia was elected one of the Gonfalonieri of the people; in 1512 he was re-elected to the Mastership of the Goldsmiths' Guild, and in 1514 he attained a dignity described as "Master of the Four Arts." Vasari says of him that "he was revered as a god in Bologna, and not even his admiration for Raphael, and his desire to see the larger works of the great painter, could tear him away from his native city." It is said that he had as many as two hundred pupils; the best of whom passed into the school of Raphael. His two sons Giacomo and Giulio also became painters, and the works of the former are often wrongly attributed to Francia himself. Francia died on the 5th of January, 1517, and was probably buried in the church of San Francesco, where the remains of Giacomo are also placed. His place in the history of art is by the side of Perugino. Together with that master he illustrates the highest capabilities of the quattrocento tradition. His existing works are numerous. The following list includes the more notable and the more accessible among them :

Berlin.	Museum.	Virgin and Child enthroned, with Saints.

- Vienna. Gallery. Enthroned Madonna with Saints (Francis, Catharine, and John the Baptist). (Signed FRANCIA AURIFABER BONO.)
- „ Liechtenstein Coll. Portrait of a Duke of Urbino (?), formerly assigned to Raphael.

As to Francia's right to be catalogued as an engraver there has been much discussion. Some proofs on paper of his nielli have reached us (eight are described by Passavant), and he is stated by Calvi to have engraved on copper. Dr. Waagen thought the print in the British Museum inscribed 'Guerino dit Meschi' was his. He is believed, too, to have engraved the italic characters first used by Aldus in the 1501 edition of Virgil.

RAIBOLINI, GIACOMO, the elder son of Francesco Raibolini, called FRANCIA after his father, was born about 1484. He studied under his father, and acted as his assistant. He executed two of the frescoes in the chapel of St. Cecilia at Bologna, namely, the 'Baptism of Valerian,' and the 'Martyrdom of St. Cecilia.' His masterpiece, perhaps, is the beautiful 'Madonna seated with SS. Francis, Bernard, Sebastian, and Maurice,' dated 1526, in the Pinacoteca at Bologna, although his 'St. Michael,' in San Domenico, is also very fine. Late in life Giacomo came under the influence of Dosso Dossi, as may be gathered from his two enthroned Madonnas at Milan. Giacomo died in 1557. By him:

A few scarce prints, dated about 1530, and signed I. F., are ascribed to Giacomo Raibolini. Among them we may name, 'A Muse,' 'Cleopatra,' and 'Venus and Amor.'

RAIBOLINI, GIULIO, younger son and pupil of Francia, was a painter of mediocre talents. He was born in 1487. He worked jointly with his brother on the pictures named below, which are now in the Bologna and Berlin Galleries respectively. He died in 1540.

RAIMBACH, ABRAHAM, engraver, born in London in 1776. His father was a Swiss by birth, but had come to England at an early period of his life, and never left it. After receiving his education at Archbishop Tennyson's Library School, the son was apprenticed to J. Hall, the engraver, and the first work of the young apprentice was the explanatory key to the engraving of Copley's 'Death of Chatham,' now in the National Gallery. After his apprenticeship he entered as a student at the Royal Academy, and took what casual employment he could obtain from the booksellers, and also occupied himself with miniature painting. He found the latter irksome, and abandoned it finally for engraving. The plates he executed for Smirke and Forster's edition of the 'Arabian Nights' made known his ability, and were also profitable. In 1812 he became David Wilkie's engraver, and the first work of that distinguished painter that he transferred to copper was 'The Village Politicians,' the next was 'The Rent Day,' and these were followed at intervals by 'The Cut Finger,' 'The Errand Boy,' 'Blindman's Buff,' 'Distraint for Rent,' 'The Parish Beadle,' and 'The Spanish Mother and Child.' After Reynolds he engraved a 'Venus' and the 'Ugolino.' Raimbach, it is said, never employed an assistant, but executed the whole of his plates himself. His prints after Wilkie are masterly works. They were boldly engraved, to enable the publishers to take numerous impressions, and therefore appear somewhat deficient in artistic freedom and delicacy of execution. They are, however, suited to the subjects, and very faithful to Wilkie's characters. Raimbach died at Greenwich in 1843. Besides the plates above named, he is also responsible for the following:

- Leonard Parkinson, a Maroon Chief; after a drawing by Metz (Edwards's 'Maroon War').
- Illustrations for Cooke's 'Tales of the Genii.'
- Illustrations for Forster's 'Arabian Nights.'
- Five plates for 'Rasselas.'
- Plates for Sharpe's 'Spectator,' 'Tatler,' and 'Guardian.'
- Plates for 'Don Quixote.' (Longman: 1818.)
- Frontispiece to Scott's 'Arabian Nights.'
- Initiation into the Mysteries of Isis; after Smirke, for Barlow's 'Columbiad.'
- Rape of the Golden Fleece; the same.

A biography of Raimbach was privately printed by Frederick Shoberl in 1843.

RAIMONDI, MARC ANTONIO, the most famous and the finest of Italian engravers, was born at Bologna towards the end of the 15th century, according to Passavant in 1488. But there is much doubt as to his dates, some authorities putting his birth as early as 1470, and his death as late as a century afterwards. Most probably, however, he was a year or two younger than Raphael, while we have no trace of his existence after 1527, the year of the sack of Rome. His first master was Francia, who taught him to work in niello. He may have had another master for part of the technical work of the goldsmith's engraver. By the year 1505 he had engraved a plate for its own sake, a 'Pyramus and Thisbe,' and had made a journey through Upper Italy to Venice. About 1508-10 he was engaged, in Venice, in making copies of seventeen of Albert Dürer's cuts from the 'Life of the Virgin,' of the thirty-six cuts of the 'Little Passion,' and of the 'Adam and Eve.' Whether Marc Antonio did this with a fraudulent intention or not has been much disputed, but there seems to be no doubt as to his desire to profit, in an unfair way, by Dürer's reputation, for to the seventeen plates from the 'Life of the Virgin' he affixed the Nuremberger's mark, while the 'Adam and Eve' is signed thus :

exactly as the original is signed. The 'Little Passion' is marked with Dürer's tablet, in blank, much as Raimondi afterwards marked his own works. This, perhaps, was due to the representations made, as Vasari tells us, by Dürer, who very probably made use of his favour with the Emperor to get the prohibition to which Vasari refers made effective against the use of his name by the Italian engraver. It is not likely that he actually journeyed to Venice to prosecute his complaint. Marc Antonio's copies after Dürer are as faithful as copper-plates after woodcuts, by an artist with a great original genius of his own, could be expected to be.

About 1510 Marc Antonio was in Florence, and there engraved the famous plate after Michel Angelo's Cartoon of Pisa, which is known as 'The Climbers' (Les Grimpeurs). About a year later he went to Rome, where he at first continued his imitation of Dürer. Soon, however, he enrolled himself among the followers of Raphael, and worked for eight or nine years under his supervision. For a time he seems to have worked in Raphael's studio, but he afterwards set up a studio of his own, where he received pupils, among whom the most famous were Agostino di Musi and Marco Dente da Ravenna. No doubt much of the perfection to which the art was brought in this atelier was due to the taste of Raphael, for the spirit in which Raimondi engraved was curiously akin to that which distinguishes the Urbinate's work with the point. Design, expression, and purity rather than richness of technique, are the merits aimed at. Many of Marc Antonio's plates are after lost designs of Sanzio, while many others reproduce compositions still extant, but reproduce them with variations, suggested most likely by the master. After Raphael's death, in 1520, Raimondi engraved after Giulio Romano. This connection brought him into disgrace and into prison. Giulio made a series of twenty indecent designs in illustration of sonnets by Pietro Aretino. These Marc Antonio engraved, and so scandalized Pope Clement VII., that he was clapped into prison. At the intercession of the Cardinal Ippolito de' Medici and of Baccio Bandinelli he was released, and set to work on his plate of the 'Martyrdom of St. Lawrence,' after Bandinelli. The engraving when finished was submitted to the Pope, who was so pleased with it that he at once took its author under his special protection. Baccio, on the other hand, was not satisfied, and complained to Clement that his work had not been faithfully rendered. The Pope thereupon compared the design with the engraving, and decided that Raimondi had improved upon Bandinelli. The original red chalk drawing by the latter is in the Cabinet at Munich. In 1527 Marc Antonio lost all he had at the siege and subsequent sack of Rome. He fled to Bologna, and nothing more is known of him. From a statement by G. A. di Niccolini di Sabio, however, we may fairly conclude that he was no longer alive in 1534. For three centuries Marc Antonio has enjoyed a reputation among reproductive engravers comparable to that of Raphael among painters. Fine impressions of his best plates have steadily increased in value, until now they excite as fierce a competition at sales as the rarest plates of Rembrandt. His œuvre may be divided into four classes: first, the pieces he executed during his early days under the shadow of Francia; secondly, his imitations of Dürer, and other productions before his journey to Rome; thirdly, his work under Raphael; fourthly, his work after Raphael's death. In works belonging to the first class, the hardness of the miellatore and the immaturity of the youthful artist are both visible. In those of the second, the burin is managed more freely, and the individuality of a true artist is more traceable. In those of the third period the masterpieces of Raimondi are to be found. It begins with 'The Climbers,' which may have been finished at Rome, and includes 'The Massacre of the Innocents,' 'The Judgment of Paris,' 'The Dance of Cupids,' 'The Five Saints,' the 'Lucretia,' &c. The fourth period is marked by less care in drawing, less delicacy in the management of the burin, less patience, and a greater toleration for mannerism in the works reproduced; these were mostly from the hand of Giulio Romano. The following list of Marc Antonio's plates is taken from Passavant, but Bartsch's numbers are also given. W.A.

RAIMONDO, was a Neapolitan painter, who flourished about the year 1477. There is a picture by him in the church of S. Francesco di Chieri, in Piedmont.

RAINALDI, DOMENICO, a painter, who flourished at Rome about 1665. He executed some works for the different churches in Rome, and seems to have been patronized by the Popes of his time. Nothing is known of his history.

RAINIERI, FRANCESCO MARIA, called Lo SCHVENOGLIA, was born at Mantua about the year 1680. He was a scholar of Giovanni Canti, and painted similar subjects, representing landscapes and battle-pieces. His pictures are little inferior to those of his instructor; if they are less vigorously coloured, his figures are usually better drawn. He died in 1758.

RALPH, G. KEITH, an English portrait and subject painter in the latter half of the 18th century. He was portrait painter to the Duke of Clarence, and exhibited at the Academy from 1778 to 1811.

RAM, JAN DE. See DE RAM.

RAMA, CAMILLO, painter, a native of Brescia, who flourished about the year 1622. He was a pupil of the younger Palma, and painted several altar-pieces and other considerable works for the public edifices of his native city, which prove him to have been an able follower of the style of his instructor. In the refectory of the Carmelites, and in the churches of S. Giosèffo and S. Francesco, there are good examples of his work.

RAMACCIOTTI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, amateur, a priest of Siena, who lived about the middle of the 17th century, and practised portrait and historical painting. In the Franciscan church at Siena there is a 'Nativity' by him, and at Florence (Uffizi) a 'Nativity of the Virgin.' Bloemart engraved after him the portrait of a Nun, Colomba da Tofaninis.

RAMAY, JEAN, (or DELLE RAMEGE,) an historical painter, born at Liège about 1530, was a pupil of Lambert Lombard, and became a member of the Corporation of Goldsmiths, of which he was dean in 1585. Very late in life he is said to have worked in the palace at Luxemburg, and to have died during his journey back to his native city. There is an 'Adoration of the Shepherds' by him in the church of Glains, near Liège. He was still alive in 1602.

RAMAZZANI, ERCOLE, born at Roccacontrada in the Roman territory, was a pupil of Perugino and of Raphael. He executed some works of art for his native place. The dates of his birth and death are unknown, but he is asserted to have been still alive in 1588. Lanzi saw a picture by one Ramaziani di Roccacontrada in Matelica, which was dated 1573.

RAMBALDI, CARLO ANTONIO, born at Bologna in 1680, was a pupil of Domenico Viani. He painted history with some success. There are several of his pictures in the churches at Bologna, which show considerable merit. The most worthy of notice are the 'Death of St. Joseph,' in the church of S. Gregorio; the 'Visitation,' in S. Giuseppe; and a 'St. Francis Xavier,' in S. Lucia. Rambaldi died in 1717.

RAMBALDO, LAUDADIO, called RAMBALDO DI FERRARA, an inferior Ferrarese painter, who flourished towards the end of the 14th century. No details of his life are known.

RAMBERG, ARTHUR-GEORG, FREIHERR VON, painter, born at Vienna in 1819, was the son of Field-Marshal Ramberg, but instead of following his father's profession, he turned his attention to art. In 1840 he entered the University of Prague, but soon migrated to the Academy of Art, and then to Dresden, where he studied under Julius Hübner, and painted a 'Combat between King Henry and the Hungarians.' The revolution of 1848 drove him to Munich, where he painted humorous subjects. He afterwards supplied illustrations for Schiller's 'Laura at the Piano,' 'Dido,' 'Drinking-Song,' and 'Expectation.' He also furnished illustrations for Goethe's 'Hermann and Dorothea,' and Voss's 'Luise.' In 1860 he was appointed professor in the Art School at Weimar, and afterwards to the same position at Munich. He died at Munich in 1875. Of his genre pictures the best are:

- Meeting on the Lake.
- The Embroidery Frame.
- The Water-party.
- Frescoes in the Luther-hall of the Wartburg.
- Frescoes in the Palace at Weimar (Legend of the Frog-King).
- Sunday at Dachau.
- The Walk with the Hofmeister.
- After the Masquerade.

RAMBERG, JOHANN HEINRICH, an historical and portrait painter and engraver, born at Hanover in 1763. He came early to England, and became a scholar of Sir Joshua Reynolds and of Bartolozzi, working also in the schools of the Royal Academy. After travelling in Italy and the Netherlands, he became court painter to the King of Hanover. As a caricaturist he is at his best in his 'Reineke Fuchs' and 'Till Eulenspiegel.' He worked too hastily for his fame, and returned to Hanover in 1834, where he died July 6, 1840. Among his works we may further name:

Alexander crossing the Granicus.

The Title-page for the edition de luxe of Wieland.

Curtain for the Theatre at Hamburg.

Illustrations for the 'Taschenbüchern zum geselligen Vergnügen.'

RÁMBERT, LOUIS DE, painter, born in Paris in 1614, son of Louis Rambert, who was keeper of the statues to Louis XIII. He studied under Vouet and Le Brun. The king was his godfather. He painted a portrait of Cardinal Mazarin, but finally abandoned painting for sculpture. He died in Paris in 1670.

RAMBOUX, JOHANN ANTON, painter, born at Trèves in 1790, went in 1804 to Florenville to the school of the Benedictine monk, Abraham, who was then engaged on plates after Rubens, and in 1807 to David, under whom he became a good draughtsman. In 1812 he returned to his home, and there occupied himself with painting portraits. In 1815 he went to Munich, where he applied himself to study the art of the Middle Ages, and produced several portraits in the style of A. Dürer and Holbein. In 1816 he visited Rome, where he became affected by Overbeck, Veit, and Cornelius. He then took to studying early Christian art and to copying old wall paintings, votive pictures, and miniatures. In 1827 he was back at Trèves, but in 1829 was again in Italy, returning to Trèves in 1840, where he completed a collection of water-colour copies. The King of Prussia bought from him two hundred and forty-eight of these for the Academy of Düsseldorf. In 1843 he was appointed keeper of the Wallraf Museum at Cologne, where he made a reputation by his restoration of the old pictures, and by supplying designs for the cathedral tapestry. He possessed a collection of Italian pictures of the 15th and 16th centuries, from which he executed a number of drawings in pen and ink. These were reproduced in lithography, and published jointly with lithographs from a series of drawings made during a visit to Jerusalem in 1854. The whole collection runs to a total of 125 plates. He died at Cologne in 1866.

RAMELLI, PADRE FELICE, born at Asti, in the Piedmontese, in 1666. He was well known as a painter of historical subjects and portraits in miniature, and resided the greater part of his life in Rome, where he became an ecclesiastic, and was made a canon of S. Giovanni Laterano. The King of Sardinia invited him to his court, where he was for some time employed in painting the portraits of the most celebrated painters, many of which he copied from the originals, painted by themselves, in the Florentine Gallery. Ramelli died in 1740.

RAMENGLI, BARTOLOMMEO, called BAGNACAVALLLO, from a village near Bologna, where he was born in 1484, was a pupil of Francia, and painted in Bologna in the style of his master. He appears to have gone early to Rome, where he studied the works of Raphael, and still more those of Dosso Dossi. Bagnacavallo's style is a combination of that of the three masters we have named, the simplicity learnt from Francia preserving him from the affectation that spoils the work of too many of the painters influenced by Raphael. The 'Virgin in Glory' in the Dresden Gallery, and the large altar-piece with several saints in the Berlin Museum, are grand works; in them the pupil of Francia is to be readily recognized. After executing a certain amount of work in Rome, Ramenghi returned to Bologna, where he died in 1542. Morelli denies the influence of Raphael on Ramenghi, and sees in him nothing but a pupil of Francia and an able imitator of Dosso Dossi. Works:

RAMIREZ, ANDREA, a miniature painter of Seville, who in 1555 and 1558 illuminated the choir books of the cathedral.

RAMIREZ, BENEVIDES JUAN, learned drawing from his brother Josef, a sculptor. In 1753, exhibiting at the Academy a picture of the 'Election of King Pelayo,' he was elected a supernumerary Academician of S. Ferdinand. After studying under Giaquinto he neglected painting for music, and died at Saragossa in 1782.

RAMIREZ, CRISTOBAL, a native of Valencia, a skilful illuminator, was in the service of Philip II. in 1566, and did most of his work in his native city. Returning to the Escorial he died there in 1577, leaving his daughter and two sons under the king's protection. Among the books illuminated by this artist were the 'Oficio di difuntos,' the 'Intonario,' and the 'Brevario Nuevo en Cantoria,' for the Escorial.

RAMIREZ, FELIPE, probably a relation of Geronimo, flourished at the same period. He painted hunting-pictures, dead game, birds, and various other subjects. He was a correct draughtsman and understood the figure, as may be seen in his picture of the 'Martyrdom of St. Stephen' at Seville. His pictures of still-life are distinguished by their truth and freshness, and his work generally was held in much esteem in his lifetime.

RAMIREZ, GERONIMO, a painter of Seville, and a disciple of Roélas, flourished about the middle of the 17th century. In the church of the hospital de la Sangre, near Seville, there was a beautiful picture signed with his name, representing the pope surrounded by cardinals and other personages.

RAMIREZ, JOSEF, a Spanish painter, born at Valencia in the year 1624. He was a scholar of Geronimo de Espinosa, and painted history in the style of his master. Palomino mentions, as his most esteemed performances, his works in the convent of San Felipe Neri at Valencia, particularly his picture of Nuestra Señora de la Luz. He died at Valencia in 1692. He was a learned ecclesiastic, and wrote the Life of St. Philip Neri.

RAMIREZ, JUAN, a Spanish portrait painter, who lived about the middle of the 16th century. A great number of his portraits exist at Seville and in its neighbourhood. Of his other works there are no vestiges, though it is supposed that, being employed in the chapel of St. Christopher and other places of note, he must have been an artist of considerable talent.

RAMIREZ, PEDRO, painter, another of the numerous artist-family of this name who flourished in Spain in the 17th century. He practised at Seville, and was one of the first members of the Academy established in that city.

RAMSAY, ALLAN, portrait painter, the son of Allan Ramsay, the author of the pastoral drama of 'The Gentle Shepherd,' was born at Edinburgh in 1713. He was a scion of the house of Dalhousie, his great-grandfather being the Laird of Cockpen, a brother to the chief. After acquiring the elements of design in London, under Hans Huyssing, he returned to Edinburgh and worked for two years from such remains of ancient art as he could there encounter. He went to Italy in 1736, where he was first a scholar of Solimena, and afterwards of Imperiali. He did not, however, long prosecute his studies in historical painting, but devoted himself entirely to portraits. On his return from Italy he established himself for some time at Edinburgh, where he painted the portrait of Archibald, Duke of Argyll. He afterwards, about 1762, settled in London, where he met with very flattering success. He was introduced by Lord Bute, whose portrait he painted, to the Prince of Wales, afterwards George III., whose Painter in Ordinary he became on the death of Shackleton in 1767. From that year onward Ramsay conducted a sort of picture factory, from which he turned out Georges and Carolines by the score. His chief assistants were David Martin, Mrs. Black, Eikhart, Vandyck, Roth, and Vesperier; to whom was added in later years the well-known Philip Reinagle. Ramsay was a good linguist and an accomplished writer. Many of his essays were collected into a volume under the name of 'Investigator.' He corresponded with Voltaire, Rousseau, and Hume. For the last-named he painted a portrait of Rousseau. Of Ramsay Dr. Johnson said, "You will not find a man in whose conversation there is more instruction, more information, or more elegance than in Ramsay's." Without reaching the highest rank in his profession, he painted portraits with very considerable ability. He paid four visits to Italy during his lifetime, and it was on returning from the last that he died at Dover in 1784. Works:

RAMSAY, JAMES, an English portrait painter, born in 1784. He had a good practice in London, and exhibited at the Academy from 1803. He retired to Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1847, and died there in 1854. A good portrait of Grattan by him has been engraved. Amongst his other portraits are:

London.	Nat. Portrait Gal.	Thomas Bewick.
"	Royal Coll. of Phys.	Dr. Elliotson.
Newcastle-on-Tyne.	Town Hall.	Earl Grey.

RANC, —, the elder, painter, worked at Montpellier towards the end of the 17th century with much success, and was one of Rigaud's early masters. He was also the first teacher of his more famous son, Jean Ranc. He died at a comparatively early age. In the church of St. Pierre, Montpellier, there is a 'Christ giving the Keys to Saint Peter' by him.

RANC, JEAN, portrait painter, born at Montpellier in 1674, studied under his father, and under Rigaud, whose style he followed with much success, and whose niece he married. M. D'Argenville relates an absurd story respecting Ranc. He says that having painted the portrait of a gentleman, in which he had exerted all his art, the friends of the sitter persisted in declaring that it was in no way like him. Ranc promised to alter it, and having prevailed on his sitter to co-operate, he prepared a similar cloth, and having cut a hole to admit the head, he requested his model to place himself behind the canvas. The critics were sent for to examine the amended portrait, which they persevered in declaring was not yet like him, when the head answered, "You must be mistaken, gentlemen, 'tis I myself." De la Motte has introduced this adventure into his fables. In 1724 Ranc was invited to the court of Spain and appointed principal painter to the king. He painted the Royal Family, and also the King and Queen of Portugal, and died at Madrid in 1735. Works:

Madrid.	Gallery.	Portrait of Philip V. (on horseback).
"	"	Portrait of Philip V. ( half length ).
"	"	Portrait of the Queen, Isabel, second wife of Philip V. ( half length ).
"	"	Portrait of Philip V. ( to the knees ).
"	"	Portrait of Queen Isabel ( to the knees ).
"	"	Portrait of Queen Luisa, wife of Luis I. of Spain ( half length ).
"	"	Portrait of the Prince of Asturias.
"	"	Portrait of the Prince Carlos (afterwards Charles III.).
"	"	Portrait of a Maid of Honour.
		And several others.

RANDA, ANTONIO, a native of Bologna, was first a scholar of Guido, but afterwards studied under Lucio Masari. He became of sufficient celebrity to be taken under the protection of the Duke of Modena, who appointed him his painter in the year 1614. His works are chiefly to be seen in the churches at Bologna and Ferrara. In the latter city, in the church of S. Stefano, is a picture by him representing S. Filippo Neri, and the great altar-piece of the church of S. Liberale, representing the Virgin Mary, with the infant Saviour and St. Francis, is by this master. He died in 1650.

RANDALL, JAMES, an English painter and draughtsman, who practised in London about the beginning of the 19th century. He exhibited architectural landscapes at the Academy from 1798 to 1814, and in 1806 published 'A collection of Architectural Designs,' in aquatint.

RANDAZZO, FILIPPO, painter, worked in Sicily in the 18th century, and executed some large wall-paintings at Palermo.

RANDEL, FRIEDRICH, painter and draughtsman, born 1801. A pupil of Krüger's. He devoted himself chiefly to genre pictures, into which he introduced animals, especially horses, which he treated with much skill. He also executed portraits in oil and in coloured chalks. One of his best works is an equestrian portrait of General Tumping.

RANDLE, FREDERICK W., born in London, 1847. He went to America in 1860, and became known in Philadelphia as a painter of still-life. He died at Liverpool, 1880.

RANDOLPH, —, painter, worked in England towards the close of the 16th century, for the Earl of Sussex. Directions for payment to him of sums owing are contained in the Earl's will (Walpole, vol. i. p. 187).

RANDON, JOHN, an engraver who resided at Rome about the year 1710, by whom we have several plates after antique and modern statues, for the collection published by Rossi; and other subjects after various masters. The date of his death is unknown, but he was still living in 1755.

RANER, DANIEL, painter. Nothing is known of this artist but that there was once a picture of an old man with a cat in the Schleissheim Gallery, signed D. R., and attributed to him.

RANFTL, JOHANN MATHIAS, a genre and animal painter, born in Vienna in 1805, where he studied at the Academy, and under Peter Kraft. His works are pleasing, and light in composition and colouring. His best pictures were his animals. His chief works are:

- A Scene in the Flood at Pesth. (Belvedere, Vienna.)
- The Reapers' Siesta. (Liechtenstein Gallery.)
- Children gathering Wood. (The same.)
- The Family of Dogs. (The same.)
- The Hunter's Spoil.
- The Labourer's Return.
- Congratulation.
- Kuntz von Rosen in Prison.

He died at Vienna in 1854.

RANKLEY, ALFRED, a subject painter, born in 1819, was a student in the schools of the Academy. His name first appears as an exhibitor in the Academy in 1841, from which time he exhibited works mostly of a domestic nature. His pictures were carefully finished and generally had a moral. He died in Kensington at the end of 1872. Amongst his best works we may name:

- The Village Church.
- A Scene from Macbeth. 1841.
- The Guilty and the Innocent.
- The Lonely Hearth. 1857.
- The Day is Done. 1860.

The Doctor's Coming. 1864.

Follow my Leader. 1867.

Following the Trail. 1870.

The Hearth of his Home. 1870.

The Pharisee and the Publican.

The Benediction. 1871.

RANSON, THOMAS FRAZER, an English engraver, was born at Sunderland in 1784. He was apprenticed to an engraver at Newcastle, and gained prizes from the Society of Arts for his plates in 1814, 1821, and 1822. He was engaged in the bank-note controversy of 1818, and by a strange accident was tried for having a forged note in his possession. He was, however, acquitted. In 1821 he received the gold medal from the Society of Arts for a line engraving, and again in 1822 for his engraving after David Wilkie's 'Duncan Gray.' Among other good plates by him we may name:

A Portrait of George IV.; after a drawing by Edmund Scott.

A Portrait of the Duke of Northumberland; after T. Phillips, R.A.

RANSONNETTE, NICOLAS, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1753. He engraved several mythological subjects, after Gabriel de St. Aubin, and other masters. We have also the following prints by him:

The new Palais-Royal at Paris.

A View of the new Palace of Justice.

The Rival Seducers; from his own design.

The Lover Revenged; from the same.

Cupid and Psyche; after Raphael.

Italian Amusements; after Watteau.

Diana of Poitiers; after L. Penni.

Agnes Sorel; after the same.

The Dream of Voltaire; after St. Aubin.

Nostradamus showing Marie de Medicis the throne of the Bourbons.

RANSPACH, CARL, painter, working at Berlin in the first part of the 19th century. At the Berlin Exhibition, 1838, he exhibited several hunting and battle scenes, and was afterwards a frequent exhibitor of such subjects, and of other genre-pictures.

RANUCCIUS, an Italian painter, of whom it is recorded that he was one of the signatories of the Treaty of Peace made between Lucca and Pisa in 1228.

RAOUL, JEAN, miniature painter. In 1477 he executed a genealogy of the kings of France, adorned with paintings in miniature, and remarkable for the delicacy and finish of its workmanship.

RAOUX, JEAN, a French painter, born at Montpellier in 1677, was a scholar of Bon Boulogne, and having obtained a prize at the Academy, was sent to Italy with the king's pension. Although his studies were directed to historical painting, and he was on his return from Italy received into the Academy on that basis, he afterwards worked principally at fancy subjects and portraits, of which we have Mlle. Prévost as a Bacchante, Mlle. Quinant as Amphitrite, and Mlle. Carton as a Naiad. He is said to have been in England, where he was patronized by Sir Andrew Fontaine. His historical works are his picture of 'Telemachus in the Island of Calypso,' which has been engraved by Beauvarlet, and 'Venus reposing,' of which there is a print by J. Daulle. He died in Paris in 1734. Among his better works we may also name:

The Four Ages.

Scene in the Temple of Priapus.

The young Bather.

Young Women at the Spinnet.

Telemachus. (Louvre.)

Girl reading a Letter. (Louvre; La Caze Collection.)

RAPHON, (RAPHUN,) JOHANN, a German religious painter, a native of Eimbeck, who flourished in the 15th and 16th centuries. There are two pictures known by him, both signed with his name, and bearing the dates 1499 and 1508. The latter picture is in the cathedral of Halberstadt; it consists of a centre and wings, or shutters. In the middle is represented the Crucifixion; on the interiors of the wings the Annunciation, the Adoration of the Shepherds and Magi, and the Presentation in the Temple; on the exteriors, figures of Saints. The composition of the central picture is somewhat overcharged; and the heads are distinguished rather by energy and individuality than by feeling. Another altar-piece, also a 'Crucifixion,' with saints on the wings, said to be by him, is in the library of the university at Gottingen. M. Hausmann of Hanover possesses two wings of a fourth altar-piece. A picture executed in 1499 for an altar-piece in the Cistercian Monastery of Walkenried, was removed thence to Prague in 1631.

RAPLANUS. See OUDENDIJK.

RASCALON, JÉRÔME, painter, born 1786. A pupil of Cicéri and of Bonton. He practised in Paris towards the middle of the 19th century, painting landscape and genre-pictures, and was also employed as scene-painter at the Vaudeville Theatre.

RASPAY, PIERRE, painter, born at Avignon in 1748, went to Paris and studied under Vernet, but returned to his native place and was made director of the School of Art. His works are to be found in the Museum of Avignon, and include a 'View of the Pope's Palace at Avignon,' 'View of the Bridge of S. Benezet,' and a portrait of the Abbe Juenet, first keeper of the Museum at Avignon. Raspay died at Avignon in 1825.

RASPE, C. G., engraver, flourished at Leipzig and Dresden in the 18th century. His chief plates are:

Charles Bonnet; after Jens Juel.

Charles, Count of Saxony; after Schmidt.

H. P. Sturz; after Ganz.

RASSET, JEAN. See VALENTIN.

RASTELL, JOHN, an English wood-engraver of the 16th century, the brother-in-law of Sir Thomas More. He is remembered by 'The Pastyme of the People, or The Chronicles of Divers Realmes,' and more especially of 'The Realm of England,' which he published in 1529, with his own illustrations. These have been wrongly ascribed to Holbein. The book was republished by Dibdin in 1811. Rastell died in 1536.

RATH, HENRIETTE, painter, born at Geneva, 1772, a pupil of Isabey, painted portraits, and also worked on enamel. She, with her sister, founded the 'Musée Rath' at Geneva, and was made an honorary member of the Société des Arts in 1801. She died in 1856.

RATHBONE, JOHN, a native of Cheshire, was born about the year 1750. He has been sometimes called 'The Manchester Wilson.' Without the help of an instructor he acquired a respectable talent as a landscape painter, and his pictures were frequently embellished with figures by Morland, Ibbetson, and other contemporary artists. His life, like those of the two friends just named, was irregular, and most of his pictures pass under other names. He exhibited at the Academy from 1785 till his death, which took place in 1807. The following are fair examples of his art:

Liverpool. Walker Gall. A Landscape.
Salford. *Peel Park } Two Landscapes.
Museum. }*

RATTI, CARLO GIUSEPPE, the son of Giovanni Ratti, born at Genoa in 1735, studied at first under his father, and then was taken under the patronage of Rafael Mengs, with whom he lived as a friend. He did not devote himself so much to painting as to writing; and among his works are, 'The Lives of the Painters of Genoa,' 'A Life of Rafael Mengs,' and 'Notices of Correggio.' He was knighted by Pope Pius VI. He died in 1795.

RATTI, GIOVANNI AGOSTINO, painter, born at Savona in 1699, went early in life to Rome, where he frequented the school of Benedetto Luti. He occasionally painted historical subjects, of which the most deserving of notice are his pictures of the life of St. John the Baptist, in the church of San Giovanni, at Savona, of which the 'Decollation' is perhaps the best. But his principal merit was in painting scenes for the theatre, and caricatures, in which he discovered great ingenuity and invention. He died at Genoa in 1775. He engraved a few plates.

RAUCH, ERNST, engraver, born at Darmstadt in 1797, studied under Portmann, and then after working for some time in Switzerland, went in 1822 to Paris, where he worked under Hersent. In time he returned to Darmstadt, and became court engraver. He worked for a time with his brother Karl (q. v.), and with him completed most of the steel engravings in a collection of original views of German court cities and of their cathedrals (the latter after Ludwig Lange), and some of the plates for Salzenberg's 'Altchristliche Baudenkmale von Konstantinopel.' The chief works he did alone are:

A Portrait of Dr. Liebig.

A Peasant Family at Prayers; after K. Schorn.

RAUCH, FERDINAND, painter, practising in Vienna in the first half of the 19th century. He was a brother of the artists Johann Joseph and Johann Nepomuk Rauch, and painted animals.

RAUCH, JOHANN JOSEPH, painter and etcher, practised in Vienna, with his brothers Ferdinand and Johann Nepomuk, in the first half of the present century. He was educated at the Vienna Academy, and afterwards travelled much in Germany and Russia. He painted landscapes and animals, both in oil and water-colours, and also etched similar subjects.

RAUCH, JOHANN NEPOMUC, a German landscape and animal painter, born in 1804 at Vienna. In the Vienna Gallery there is by him 'A Bull pursuing a Cow' (1832). He died in 1847.

RAUCH, KARL, brother of Ernst Karl, born at Darmstadt in 1804, a pupil of his brother's and of Moller, went to London, and became a Fellow of the Society of British Architects. The two brothers worked together and engraved landscapes in Germany from their own drawings; the principal cathedrals, after Ludwig Lange; and a number of works after Salzenberg. Karl engraved alone the principal door of the Cathedral of Freiburg.

RAUFFER, KARL, a miniature painter, born at Ratisbon in 1727, was secretary to the Elector Maximilian III. of Bavaria. He died at Munich in 1802.

RAUFFLT, —, a Swiss painter, who studied in France towards the end of the 17th century, and who in 1684 gained a prize from the Royal Academy of Painting with an 'Enoch first invoking the name of the Lord.'

RAUFT, FRANÇOIS LOUIS, born at Lucerne in 1730, was first a pupil of his father, and then studied in Paris and Rome. After a visit to Holland and Germaoy, he settled in Hamburg. His chief work was the decoration of some ceilings in the Palace of Hesse Cassel. He died at the Hague in 1798.

RAUSCHER, GEORG FRIEDRICH, landscape painter, was first a pupil of his father, August Friedrich, and in 1813 studied at Munich under G. Dillis and W. Kobell. Was appointed Court painter to the Duke of Coburg, and Professor at the School of Art. He made many drawings in sepia and water-colour, besides his landscapes in oil.

RAUWAERT, JAKOB, painter, a pupil of Martin Heemskerk. He appears to have been a man of property, and to have practised art for pleasure rather than as a profession. He flourished at Amsterdam about the middle of the 16th century. He had a fine collection of pictures, and commissioned Heemskerk to paint him one representing the 'Four Ends of Man,' for which he paid a large sum. When in 1572 Haarlem was besieged by the Spaniards, Rauwaert protected his old master, and received him into his house at Amsterdam.

RAVANALS, JUAN BAUTISTA, engraver, born at Valencia in 1678, studied under Evaristo Muñoz. His principal engravings, which displayed more skill in handling of the graver than in drawing, were: an equestrian portrait of Philip V., and a genealogical tree of the Royal family; a portrait of Father Gregorio Ridaura, a print of San Rodrigo, a second portrait of Philip V., some plates for the first edition of a mathematical work by Tosca, the frontispiece for a book called 'Centro de la Fé Ortodoxá,' which represents the apparition of Our Lady 'del Pilar' to St. Francis and some of his disciples, and illustrations for another book of Devotion, in which St. Thomas Aquinas and other saints figure.

RAVEAU, (Madame,) EMILIE, painter, born in France 1785. A pupil of her father, Michael Honoré Bonnieu. She painted historical and mythological subjects. Died after 1830.

RAVELLI, PIETER ANTONI, painter, born in 1788. Practised at Amsterdam, and was first a pupil of B. Barbiers Pietersz, and afterwards of C. H. Hodges. He finally devoted himself chiefly to portrait-painting in miniature and in oils, but also painted genre-pictures.

RAVEN, JOHN S., an English landscape painter, born in Suffolk in 1829. He was the son of the Rev. THOMAS RAVEN, a clergyman of the Church of England, who had considerable talent as an amateur artist, as may be seen from six water-colour drawings by him in the South Kensington Museum. John Raven was, however, almost entirely self-taught. He exhibited at the Academy as early as 1845, and his works also appeared at the British Institution. He at first fell under the influence of the Norwich school, and of Constable, but his maturer works, which show much poetic feeling, bear traces of pre-Raphaelitism. It was his custom to prepare elaborate cartoons for his pictures. He was drowned while bathing at Harlech in 1877. A collection of his works was exhibited at the Burlington Club in 1878. Amongst his chief pictures were:

Salmsey Church (his first picture, painted when he was sixteen years old).

The Forest of Fontainebleau. 1853.

A Voice of Joy and Gladness. 1860.

The Skirts of a Mountain Farm. 1862.

Midsummer Moonlight. 1866.

The Crops Green. 1867.

The Shadow of Snowden. 1867.

A Hampshire Homestead. 1872.

The Heavens declare the Glory of God. 1876.

Barf and Lord's Seat from the Slopes of Skiddaw. 1877.

RAVENART, HENNEQUIN DE, painter, worked at Bruges about the middle of the 15th century.

RAVENET, SIMON FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1706, was a pupil of Lebas. After practising the art with considerable reputation in his native country, he came to England, and settled in London about the year 1750. He was employed for a time at the Battersea Enamel Works, and gained a premium from the Society of Arts in 1761. In 1766 he was a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists. He is said to have been imported by Hogarth, who employed him upon the 'Marriage à la Mode.' The fourth and fifth plates in that series are by him. He was also employed by Alderman Boydell, for whom, perhaps, he did his best work. He gave both a fine suggestion of colour and great brilliancy to his engravings, and finished them with precision. Ravenet died in London in 1774. Among his plates we may name:

PORTRAITS.

George I.

George II.; after Mercier.

Lord Camden; after Reynolds.

RAVENET, SIMON, the son of Simon François Ravenet, was born in London about the year 1755 (according to others in 1749), and was instructed by his father in the art of engraving. He afterwards visited Paris, where he studied painting for a short time under François Boucher. On leaving that master he went to Italy, and settled at Parma, where he undertook to engrave and publish plates from all the works of Correggio in that city. This arduous undertaking occupied him from 1779 till 1785, in which time he engraved the following prints after the Parmese master :

A set of twelve plates from the Cupola of the Cathedral.
 A set of twelve plates from the Cupola of S. Giovanni.
 The Madonna della Scodella.
 The Madonna della Scala.
 La Santissima Nunziata.
 The Madonna Incoronata.
 Christ bearing his Cross.
 The Descent from the Cross.
 The 'St. Jerome.'
 The Martyrdom of St. Placidus.

For these labours he was made 'Cavaliere.' We have also by him the two following prints :

Jupiter and Antiope; after Rubens.
 Theseus lifting the Stone; after N. Poussin.

Ravenet is believed to have been still alive in 1813.

RAVENNA, MARCO DA. See DENTE, MARCO.

RAVENZWAAY, JAN VAN, the elder, a Dutch landscape and animal painter, born at Hilversum the 29th November, 1789. He studied under P. G. van Os, and died the 2nd March, 1869. Among his works are :

Amsterdam.	Museum.	A Cow-Stable.
Haarlem.	Pavilion.	Landscape with Animals.
"	"	Interior of a Stable.

RAVENZWAAY, JAN VAN, the younger, the nephew of Jan Ravenzwaay the elder, and his pupil, born at Hilversum, in Holland, 1810. He painted landscape in the manner of his uncle. Died 1849.

RAVESTEIN, ANTONIJ VAN, a painter of still-life, practising in Holland in the 17th century. Received a member of the Corporation of Painters in 1614 at the Hague, and was one of the founders of the Pictura Society in 1656.

RAVESTEIN, ARTHUR VAN, painter, born at the Hague 1615, was the son and pupil of Antonij van Ravestein, and practised portrait painting at the Hague, where he was a member of the Guild of Painters. He was dean in 1661, 1662, and 1680. He is stated by some writers to have been the son of Jan van Ravestein. He is mentioned in the accounts of William II. of Orange, as having received 500 florins for a picture representing Diana and Calisto. An ARNOLD VAN RAVESTEIN was inscribed on the books of the Guild at Haarlem in 1639. By some he has been supposed to be the same as Arthur. There are two portraits by him in the Cassel Gallery, and one, of a young man, at Copenhagen. Arthur van Ravestein died at the Hague in 1676.

RAVESTEIN, REGNER, a landscape painter of little note, who practised at Amsterdam in the 18th century.

RAVESTEJIN, HENDRIK VAN, painter, studied at the Hague about the middle of the 17th century, and then travelled in Austria and Germany to complete his education. He practised for a time at Vienna, painting portraits of persons at the Court, and then settled at Bommel, in Holland, and devoted himself chiefly to the painting of still-life. He died in 1672. He was the father and teacher of Nicolaas van Ravesteijn.

RAVESTEIJN, HUBERT VAN, painter, was born at Dort in 1640. His pictures represent the interiors of slaughter-houses, butchers'-shops, and similar subjects. He sometimes painted peasants' kitchens, and stables, which he treated with some power of chiaroscuro.

RAVESTEIJN, JAN ANTHONISZ VAN, a celebrated portrait painter, born at the Hague about the year

1572, was a pupil of Frans Hals, whose early style he closely followed. He was scarcely surpassed in the particular branch of art which he practised by any of his countrymen, if we except Rembrandt, Hals, and Vander Helst. He was received into the Guild of St. Luke at the Hague in 1598, and practised there for the rest of his life. Independently of the individual portraits by this painter, which are found in the private collections of Holland, there are two large pictures by him in the hall of the Company of Archers at the Hague, which establish his reputation as one of the ablest artists of the Dutch school. In one of these he has painted the portraits of the officers and principal members of the society, life-size. The figures, as well as the heads, are correctly drawn and finely coloured. The canvas is dated 1616. The other represents an assembly of the magistrates of the Hague seated at a table; the figures, twenty-six in number, are admirably grouped. There is also a picture of 'The Civic Guard issuing from the Doelen,' and the 'Banquet of the Town Council,' both of which are in the Town Hall. Examples of this artist are to be found in most of the European galleries. He died at the Hague June 21, 1657. Ravesteijn's manner has much of the hardness of the 16th century, reminding us oftener of Mirevelt than of Rembrandt or of Hals at his maturity; but his pictures are characterized by a peculiar nobility in the carriage of his sitters and by a fine largeness of conception. He signed his pictures with a monogram composed of JA VR, or with his name in full. Among his works we may name :

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Portraits of Jan Pietersz and Margriet van Snoek.
"	"	Portrait of Commander Joris Cats.
"	"	Portrait of Prince Ernst Casimir of Nassau.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Savant with his little Daughter.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Professor.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Family Portrait.
Hague.	Museum.	An old Man in Armour.
		A Series of Twenty-four Portraits of Colonels in the service of the United Provinces.
Lille.	Museum.	Two Fine Portraits.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	Three Portraits.
Nancy.	Museum.	Portrait of a Woman.

RAVESTEIJN, NICOLAAS VAN, painter, born at Bommel in 1661, was the son of Hendrik van Ravesteijn. His father instructed him in the elements of design, but died while he was young. After his father's death he studied first under Willem Doudijns at the Hague, and then under Jan de Baan. After leaving the latter, he settled in his native city, and soon acquired an extensive practice. He died at Bommel in 1750.

RAVIGNANO. See DENTE.

RAWLE, SAMUEL, an English engraver and draughtsman, who practised in London about the beginning of the 19th century. There is an engraving from a drawing by him of the Middle Temple Hall, in the 'Gentleman's Magazine' for 1798. Landscapes by him appeared at the Academy in 1801 and 1806. Specimens of his engraving are to be found in Murphy's 'Arabian Antiquities of Spain' (1806), and two of his water-colour drawings are in the Kensington Museum.

RAWLINS, —, an English engraver of portraits and frontispieces for books who flourished about the year 1760.

RAWLINSON, JAMES, an English portrait painter, born in 1769. He was a native of Derbyshire, and studied under Romney. He only once, in 1799, exhibited at the Academy, a picture of an old woman knitting. His portrait of Erasmus Darwin has been well engraved by Heath. Rawlinson died in 1848.

RAXIS, PEDRO, painter, was living and working in Grenada with much credit about the end of the 16th century. It is supposed from his style that he studied in Italy. He was a good draughtsman, and displayed great delicacy in groteschi, on which he was much employed. According to a tradition noted by Bermudez, Raxis had two brothers who were also painters, but were inferior to him in ability. Works:

Grenada.	S. Geronimo.	Saints above the High Altar.
"	Sacromonte.	Immaculate Conception.
"	Carmen Descalzo.	Saints ( in the Cloister ).
"	Agustinos Calzados.	St. Augustine.
Lucena.	S. Juan de Dios.	The Life of S. Juan de Dios (a series of pictures in the Cloister).

RAYMOND, PIERRE, (REYMOND, REXMONT), one of the most famous of the Limoges enamellers of the 16th century. His activity extended from 1534 to 1582. In 1567 he was mayor of Limoges. He and his contemporaries, JEAN and MARTIAL RAYMOND, were the chief rivals of the Penicauds. Good specimens of his work are to be found in the Basilewsky collection, now at St. Petersburg, in the Louvre, at Berlin, and in the most famous private collections, such as those of the Rothschild family and Mr. Spitzer.

RAZALI, SEBASTIANO, a Bolognese painter and scholar of the Carracci. There is a 'St. Benedict among Thorns' by him in San Michele in Bosco, Bologna.

READ, CATHERINE, a painter of portraits, both in oil and in crayons, practised in London in the early part of George III.'s reign. About the year 1770 she went to the East Indies, where she resided a few years. On her return to England, she continued to exercise her talent with respectable success until her death, which happened about the year 1786. There are several mezzotints after her portraits. She painted a portrait of Queen Charlotte, and a group of Princes George and Frederick.

READ, DAVID CHARLES, an English landscape draughtsman and painter, born in 1790. He taught drawing at Salisbury, and published a series of etchings in 1832. He died at Kensington in 1851.

READ, RICHARD, an English engraver in mezzotint and in stipple, who flourished about the year 1780. He was born about 1745, became a pupil of Caldwell, and was premiated by the Society of Arts in 1771. Among other prints by him we have the following:

- Moses saved from the Nile; after Le Sueur.
- A Portrait of a Dutch Lady; after Rembrandt.
- Mary, Queen of Scots, resigning her crown in favour of her Son; after G. Hamilton.

READ, SAMUEL, was born at Needham Market, near Ipswich, about 1816. As a boy he was placed in the office of a lawyer, but showed so decided an inclination for art, that he was transferred to the office of an architect. In 1841 he came to London, and drew on the wood with Mr. Whympier, which brought him into connection with the 'Illustrated London News,' for which he worked for more than forty years. He was the first special artist ever sent abroad by a newspaper, going in 1853 to Constantinople, just before the outbreak of the Crimean War. In 1857 he was elected an associate, and in 1880 a full member of the Old Water-Colour Society. He made many effective drawings of interiors and exteriors of churches and cathedrals. He died at Sidmouth on May 6, 1883. Works:

- The Moated Grange. (S. Kensington Museum.)
- The Corridor, Brewer's Hall, Antwerp. (The same.)

READ, THOMAS BUCHANAN, painter, born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1822, went in 1839 to Cincinnati, and was first an architect and then a painter. In 1841 he worked in New York, and then in Boston and Philadelphia, and went in 1850 to England and Italy, making a prolonged stay in Florence, where he painted fancy pictures, such as 'The Lost Pleiad,' 'The Water Sprite,' 'The Star of Bethlehem.' He also painted portraits, among which were those of George Peabody and of Longfellow's children. In 1848 he published a volume of 'Songs and Ballads,' and in 1850 'Idylls,' 'Silvia the last Shepherdess,' and 'Sheridan's Ride,' illustrated by himself. He died at New York in 1872.

READER, WILLIAM, portrait painter, born at Maidstone, was the son of a clergyman, and practised in the 17th century. There is a portrait by him of Dr. Blow the musician; it is engraved. Reader died in London, a pensioner of the Charter House.

READING, BURNET, an English engraver, born at Colchester about the middle of the 18th century. He held the somewhat incongruous positions of riding and drawing-master to Lord Pomfret. He worked in the dot manner, and appears to have practised in London about 1770-90. Amongst his plates are:

- Lavinia and her mother; after W. R. Bigg.
- Charlotte at the tomb of Werther.
- Portrait of himself; after a drawing by himself.

READING, SARAH, probably a relative of the last named, was at work at the same time and in the same fashion. An oval of 'Olivia and Sophia' by her has been preserved.

READY, WILLIAM JAMES DURANT, an English marine painter, born in London in 1823. The son of a Custom House clerk, he was entirely self-taught, and worked directly from nature. Of a retiring and timid disposition, he only exhibited once at the Royal Academy; and though his works showed marked ability, he never obtained an extended reputation. He paid a visit of some years' duration to America, and on his return resumed his former retired mode of life. Nearly all his pictures were sold to one dealer. They were both in oil and water-colour, and in either case were nearly always finished on the spot. David Roberts was his intimate friend. He died at Brighton in 1873.

REALFONSO, TOMMASO, an Italian painter of the 18th century, one of the pupils of A. Belvedere. He occasionally painted landscapes, but his principal productions were flower and fruit pieces, and studies of still-life.

REATTU, JACQUES, a French historical painter, born at Arles about 1760. He studied under Regnault, and obtained the grand prix in 1791, which enabled him to complete his studies at Rome. The theatre at Marseilles was decorated by him, and at Beauvais is his 'History of St. Paul.' He attained some reputation in his own country, and was elected a corresponding member of the Institute. He died in 1832.

REBACCA, BIAGIO, an ornamentist and historical painter of Italian descent, who lived in England. He was born in 1735, and was admitted into the schools of the Academy in 1769, being elected an Associate in 1771. He was chiefly employed as a decorative artist, working as such on the rooms of the Academy at Somerset House, at Windsor Castle (by which he was brought to the notice of the Royal Family), at Audley End, and at Harewood House. He died in London in 1808.

REBELL, JOSEPH, a German landscape and marine painter, born at Vienna, January 11, 1787. He was a pupil of Th. Wutky. In 1809 he travelled through Switzerland to Milan, where he stayed two years at the Court of Eugene Beauharnais. He afterwards studied at Rome and Naples, being favoured in the latter city by Murat. His Italian sojourn afforded him many subjects. The Emperor Francis took great interest in his work, and in 1824 he was appointed director of the Belvedere Gallery. He died at Dresden, December 18, 1828. Among his works are :

Berlin.	Nat. Gal.	Tempest on the Coast near Cumæ.
Innsbruck.	Museum.	Two Italian Landscapes.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	The Mole at Portici.
"	"	Tempest at Sea.
"	"	The Canal.
"	"	The Environs of Capri.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Italian Landscape. 1819.
"	"	Vietri and the Gulf of Salerno. 1819.
"	"	The Grotto of Foccia. 1819.
"	"	Portici. 1819.

REBELLO, JOSE D'AVELLAR, an historical painter of little note, who flourished in Spain about the middle of the 17th century.

REBOUL, THÉRÈSE. See VIEN.

RECCHI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, painter, a pupil of Mazzuchelli, and brother of Giov. Paolo Recchi. He became well-known at Turin, where he was working about 1660. He painted historical subjects, and was assisted in his studio by his nephew Giovanni Antonio.

RECCHI, GIOVANNI PAOLO, brother of Giovanni Battista Recchi, an Italian painter of the 17th century, who, in conjunction with his nephew Giovanni Andrea, worked in Piedmont about 1660. He was a pupil of Mazzuchelli.

RECCO, GIUSEPPE, born at Naples in 1634, was a scholar of Aniello Falcone and of Porpora. He particularly excelled in painting hunts, dead game, fish, and similar subjects. His pictures are found in the best collections at Naples. He was invited to the Court of Madrid, where he was knighted at the time when Luca Giordano flourished there. His pictures were held in the highest estimation by the Spanish king. There are three pictures by him in the Madrid Gallery, representing fish and game. He died at Madrid in 1695.

RECCO, PIETER, portrait painter, born at Amsterdam, 1766. He was a pupil of A. de Lélie, and settled at Basle, where he spent the greater part of his life. Hence he is often called a Swiss by biographers.

RECHAMBAULT, PIERRE, a painter upon glass and enamel, who flourished at Limoges about 1555. He was associated with the Penicauds in some of their works, especially those for the confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, at Limoges.

RECHBERGER, FRANZ, an eminent designer, etcher, and landscape painter, was born at Vienna in 1771, and was a scholar of F. Brandt at the same time as Martin von Molitor, with whom he afterwards continued to practise. His landscapes are natural, his etchings spirited. In general his plates represent wild, romantic scenery, richly ornamented with trees, or frowning with rocks, in the style of Jacob Ruisdael, or Albert van Everdingen. He also etched a number of landscapes after Dietrich. The care of the fine collection of prints formerly belonging to Count Fries was confided to him, and he was also keeper of the prints and drawings of the Archduke Charles at Vienna. His etchings are marked F. R., which has occasioned them to be sometimes erroneously attributed to Frederic Rehberg, a contemporary artist, whose works are historical, and belong rather to the Roman school. He died in 1842. By him :

Landscape with the Temple of Vesta. (Vienna.)

RECHLIN, KARL, a painter of battle-pieces and scenes from military life, born 1804, practised at Berlin. His principal works are :

- Duke Charles of Mecklenburg at Goldberg, 1813. Painted for the King of Prussia. 1839.
- Battle of Leipzig, 1813. Painted for the Emperor of Russia.
- Blucher at La Belle-Alliance.
- Vandamme taken Prisoner.

RECHTERS, T., a native of Amsterdam, where he lived from 1700 to 1768. Among his pictures is a portrait of Jan Wagenaar. He has also left a history of his native city.

RECK, DAVID VAN, a portrait painter of the 17th century, born in Flanders, and a pupil of Van Dyck. Queen Christina invited him to the Swedish Court, and he settled in Stockholm, where he obtained a large practice among the aristocracy. He painted portraits of the Queen, and of many Swedish generals and persons of distinction.

RECLAM, FRIEDRICH, born at Magdeburg in 1734, after learning the rudiments of design in his native country, went to Paris, where he became a pupil of J. B. Pierre. In 1755 he visited Rome, and after a residence of seven years in that capital, he established himself at Berlin. He painted landscapes and portraits with considerable success, and died in 1774. We have the following etchings by him :

- A set of eight Views in Italy. 1755.
- A Landscape, Morning; after Moucheron.
- The Companion, Evening; after Dubois.
- Two Views in the Environs of Paris; from his own designs.
- A View near Rome, with a Waterfall; the same.

RECOUVRANCE, ANTOINE DE, a French painter, born at Avignon. The works of this artist are little known, though he was appointed painter to the king in 1588, and held his post till 1641. In the collection of Duplessis-Mornay, who died in 1611, there were portraits by him. There are still in existence by him some interiors of churches, with groups of persons assembled for worship, which are apparently portraits.

REDEL, JOSEF, a German historical painter, born in 1774. He worked in the style of Füger, and was considered a good colourist. He was appointed a professor in the Academy at Vienna, where he died in 1836.

REDENTI, FRANCESCO, painter, born at Correggio in 1820, was employed in drawing caricatures for the Fischietto. He died at Turin in 1876.

REDER, CHRISTIAN, called LEANDER, born in Saxony in 1656, visited Rome in 1686. In that year Buda was taken and Reder gained considerable reputation for his battle-pieces, representing the fights that took place between the Ottomans and the Christians. He afterwards visited Venice, Hamburg, England, and Holland, and died in 1729.

REDGRAVE, SAMUEL, was born in London, 3rd October, 1802. His father, who at the time of his son's birth was in the office of Mr. Joseph Bramah, the inventor, placed him in an office connected with the Home Department. There he showed in time that he was possessed of talents of an unusual kind, and was intrusted with various responsible tasks under the Home Secretary. But much of his leisure was given to matters concerning art and artists. He became a probationer at the Royal Academy, in the architectural class, having in his leisure moments acquired considerable proficiency as a draughtsman. In 1842 he became secretary to the Etching Club, in succession to his brother Richard. He was intrusted with the collection of a historical series of English pictures, in oil and water-colour, for the 1862 Exhibition, and was employed in much the same capacity for the Paris Exhibition of 1867. Two years earlier he had submitted a proposal for a Loan Exhibition of Miniatures to the Committee of Council, which had been acted upon, while in 1866 his aid was invoked by Lord Derby for the organization of the Exhibition of Portraits, which was open at Kensington for three years. In 1869 he helped the Royal Academy in starting the series of Winter Exhibitions at Burlington House. But of all his claims to remembrance the chief, perhaps, are his 'Dictionary of Artists of the British School,' and his share in 'A Century of Painters,' published jointly by himself and his brother Richard. Samuel Redgrave married in 1839, but lost his wife in 1845. He died himself on the 20th March, 1876.

REDI, GIOVANNA, a pupil of Gubbiani together with Tommaso Redi, to whom she was, in all probability, related.

REDI, TOMMASO, born at Florence in 1665, after receiving some instruction in his native city went to Rome, where he frequented the Academy established in that city by the Grand Duke Cosmo III., which was at that time under the direction of Carlo Maratti and Ciro Ferri. His studies at Rome were prosecuted with considerable success, and on his return to Florence he was employed by the Grand Duke in several works for the Palazzo Pitti. He also painted some pictures for the churches, and other public edifices, and is spoken of as an eminent portrait painter. When the Czar Peter visited Florence, he was particularly struck with the works of Redi, and being desirous of establishing an academy for the promotion of the fine arts at Moscow, made very liberal proposals to that master to prevail on him to undertake the superintendence of it, but his engagements at Florence prevented his accepting the offer. Redi died at Florence in 1726.

REDIG, L., a Belgian painter of genre and landscape, died 1861. His best known work is a 'Village Fête.'

REDMOND, THOMAS, an English miniature painter, born at Brecon about 1745. As a boy he was apprenticed to a house-painter at Bristol. Coming to London, he studied in the St. Martin's Lane Academy, and was in 1763 a member of the Free Society of Artists. Migrating to Bath, he obtained a good practice, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1775 to 1779. He died at Bath in 1785.

REDONDILLO, ISIDORO DE, a Spanish painter of the 17th century, and pupil of Angelo Nardi. He practised at Madrid, and was appointed painter to Charles II. in 1685. He painted portraits and historical pictures, which are often confounded, says Bermudez, with those of other painters.

REDOUÏTÉ, ANTOINE FERDINAND, the son of Charles Joseph Redouïté, born at St. Hubert, 1756. The pupil of his father. He was a decorative artist of much repute in his day, and decorated the Palais de l'Élysée, the Palais Bourbon, the Château de Compiègne, and other large houses. In 1776 he settled in Paris, where he died in 1809.

REDOUÏTÉ, CHARLES JOSEPH, painter, the son of Jean Jacques Redouïté, and father of the three artists, Pierre Joseph, Henri Joseph, and Antoine Ferdinand Redouïté, was born at Jamagne, near Philippeville, in 1715. He was his father's pupil until 1735, when he came to Paris and studied at the Academy. Later he settled at Saint-Hubert, where he worked much on commission for the Abbey, and for the great houses of the neighbourhood, and where he died in 1776.

REDOUÏTÉ, HENRI JOSEPH, a painter of flowers, fruit, and insects, born at St. Hubert, 1766. He was the son of Charles Joseph Redouïté, and studied under his brother Pierre Joseph at Paris. He was appointed draughtsman to the 'Jardin des Plantes,' and was chosen as one of the members of the Art and Science Commission which Bonaparte sent into Egypt.

REDOUÏTÉ, JEAN JACQUES, an obscure artist, born at Dinant in 1687, and remarkable only as having been the father of Charles Joseph, and grandfather of Pierre Joseph Redouïté. He died in 1762.

REDOUÏTÉ, PIERRE JOSEPH, flower painter, born at St. Hubert in Belgium in 1759, learned the principles of art from his father, and then went to his brother, Antoine Ferdinand, in Paris. In 1792 he was appointed draughtsman to the Academy of Sciences and to the Institute, and in 1805 flower painter to the Empress Josephine. Among his pupils were Marie Antoinette, Josephine, and Hortense. His chief works are lilies and roses, 'The Flower of Malmaison.' He died in Paris in 1840.

REED, JOSEPH CHARLES, an English landscape painter in water-colours, born in 1822. He was elected an associate of the Water-Colour Institute in 1860, and a member in 1866. His subjects were confined to the scenery of the United Kingdom. He died in London in 1877.

REEDER, MARTIN, a painter of still-life, born at the Hague in 1802. He was a pupil of Van Cuylenburgh and of J. Pieneman.

REEKERS, HENDRIK, a painter of flowers and fruit, born at Haarlem, 1815. He was a pupil of his father, whom he greatly excelled in his art, and of G. J. J. Van Os. He lived for a time at Brussels, but returned in 1848 to Haarlem, where he died in 1854.

Rotterdam. Museum. Fruits, Vegetables, and Game.

REEKERS, JAN, born at Haarlem, 1790, was a pupil of Horstok, and a painter of portraits and landscape. He died 1858.

REESBRONCQ. See RYSBROECK, VAN.

REGAMEY, GUILLAUME, a French military painter, born in Paris in 1837. He studied under Lecoq de Boisbaudran and Bonvin, and afterwards under Barye at the Academy, where he gained two medals. His pictures were not at first successful; they were rejected for years at the Salon, and it was not till 1863 that he first appeared there, as a painter, with a 'Turco.' His first important contribution, however, was a 'Batterie de tambours des Grenadiers de la Garde,' which was exhibited in 1865, and is now in the Musée at Pau. This was followed two years later by 'Sapeurs: tête de colonne de 2<sup>m</sup> Cuirassiers de la Garde,' which made a great sensation, and is now in the Chalons Museum. Régamey was troubled all his life with ill health, and his work went on in very intermittent fashion about this time. He contrived, however, to finish a third important picture for the Salon of 1870 ('Tirailleurs Algériens'), and then the Franco-German War interrupted his studies. Partly on account of his weakly constitution, partly because he could be of use to his family by earning money for their support through the exercise here of his talent, he left Paris for London, where he lived and worked to the end of the war. Many of his designs appeared in English periodicals, especially the 'Illustrated London News.' In 1872 he returned to Paris, where he arrived in the midst of the 'Commune.' During the last three years of his life his work was again much interrupted by ill-health, but at his death, on January 3, 1875, he left finished the two last of the pictures named below:

Pau. Museum. The Drummers. 1866.
Chalons-sur-Marne. Museum. Sappers. 1868.
Marseilles. Museum. Tirailleurs Algériens. 1866.
Cuirassiers in a Cabaret.
Drummers of a Greuardier Regiment.

Regamey's life is the subject of a sympathetic notice by M. Ernest Chesneau ('Librairie de l'Art,' 1879).

REGEMORTER, IGNATIUS JOSEPHUS VAN, a Flemish historical, landscape, and genre painter and engraver, born at Antwerp in 1785. He studied under his father, Petrus Johannes, also in Paris, Antwerp, Brussels, and Ghent. He died at Antwerp in 1873. Amongst his works are:

Amsterdam. R. Museum. The old Fish-Market at Antwerp.
" " " The Ménage of Jan Steen.
" " Fodor Mus. Jau Steen and F. Van Mieris.
Brussels. Museum. An Autumn Morning.
Munich. Pinakothek. Interior of a Garret.
" " " The Ruined Cottage.

REGEMORTER, PETRUS JOHANNES VAN, a Flemish landscape and genre painter, born in 1755 at Antwerp. He was a pupil of the Academy of that city, but he owed much to his study of the pictures in some private collections. He became a professor in the Academy, and Dean in the Painters' Guild in 1786. Many artists of note studied under him, and he had a large practice as a picture-restorer. In 1814 he was engaged in bringing back the pictures taken by the French to Paris. He died in 1830. In the Antwerp Museum is a 'Shepherd and Flock' by him. He excelled in painting moonlights.

REGGIO, LUCA DA. See FERRARI.

REGILLO. See LICINIO.

REGNARD, VALÉRIEN, a French engraver, who was a scholar of Ph. Thomassin, flourished at Rome about the years 1630-50. Among other things he engraved several of the plates for the collection of prints from the antique statues, &c., in the Giustiniani Gallery. He also engraved some plates after the works of Giovanni Antonio Lelli, Pomerancio, Agostino Ciampelli, &c.

REGNAULT, ALEXANDRE GEORGES HENRI, born in Paris in 1843, was the son of the director of the Gobelins. He studied under Montfort, Lamothe, and Cabanel, competed unsuccessfully in 1863 for the Prix de Rome, but won it in 1866 with his 'Thetis presenting Arms to Achilles.' In 1864 he sent two portraits to the Salon. From 1866 to 1868 he was in Rome, where he illustrated A. Wey's 'Journey to Rome,' with twenty-seven drawings of the modern city, and painted several good portraits and pictures of horses. In 1868 he went to Spain, where he painted his famous portrait of Marshal Prim, and copied the 'Lanzas' of Velasquez. From Spain Regnault went to Tangiers, to which he took a strong liking, but in 1869 returned to Rome. In 1870 he was again in Africa, but was recalled to his own country by the Franco-German War, in which he was killed at the attack on Buzenval towards the evening of January 19th, 1871. No one saw him fall, but next day the driver of an ambulance found his body, which had the last honours paid to it eight days later in the church of St. Augustin. Works:

Portrait of the Comtesse B——. 1869.
Portrait of Marshal Prim. 1869. Paris, Louvre.
Execution in the Alhambra. do. do.
Salomé. 1870.

The Alhambra; interior of the Hall of the Two Sisters. do.; and a series of fifteen sketches presented by V. Regnault, Member of the Institute.

REGNAULT, ÉTIENNE, born in Paris, 1649, a painter of little note, who became a member of the Academy in 1703. He died in 1720.

REGNAULT, JEAN BAPTISTE, historical painter, was born in Paris in 1754. When he was ten years old his father took him a voyage to America and Africa on board a merchant vessel. He was away four years. When he was fifteen, he went to Rome, where he studied under Bardin, and then to Paris, where in 1776, with his 'Alexander at the House of Diogenes,' he won the Prix de Rome. Returning to Paris from Rome he was elected Fellow of the Academy in 1783, with his 'Deliverance of Andromeda.' His pictures are numerous, and consist of historical, poetical, and allegorical subjects. Of these Gabet has given a tolerably long list in his 'Dictionnaire des Artistes de l'École Française, au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle,' but says that it is confined to his principal productions. At his death, in addition to his pictures, he left numerous academical studies, designs, and finished sketches; many of the latter illustrative of Ovid's Metamorphoses, and other poets. As a teacher Regnault was the great rival of David. Among his scholars were Guérin, Crespin, Robert le Febvre, Menjaud, Lafitte, Bois-selier, Blondel, and many others. Regnault died in Paris in 1829. Works:

The Baptism of Christ; Louvre.
The Education of Achilles; the same.
The Descent from the Cross; the same.
Pygmalion begging Venus to animate his statue; the same.
The Origin of Painting; the same.
The Three Graces.

The Judgment of Paris.

Venus on the Clouds.

Portrait of a Young Woman; Orleans Museum.

REGNAULT, NICOLAS FRANÇOIS, a French painter and engraver, was born in Paris in 1749. His wife GENEVIÈVE (née NANGIS) engraved a few plates after her own and her husband's designs. Among Regnault's plates may be named:

Le Vœu de la Nature; from his own design.

The Fountain of Love; after Fragonard.

Truth and Tenderness; after Lagrenée.

REGNAULT, THOMAS CASIMIR, a French painter and line-engraver, was born at Bayeux in 1823. He was a pupil of De Juine and of Henriquel-Dupont, and is best known by his engraved portraits, among which are those of Voltaire, Madeleine Mars, and the painter Meissonier, the last after a miniature painted by Regnault himself. He died in Paris in 1871.

REGNE, —, a native of France, who flourished about the year 1760. Among other prints he engraved a set of plates of animals, which are neatly executed.

REGNESSON, NICOLAS, a French draughtsman and engraver, was born at Rheims about 1625. There are by this artist a considerable number of historical portraits engraved from his own drawings, and after Philippe de Champaigne, Beaubrun, François Chauveau, &c., besides compositions after other painters. He was the master of Robert Nanteuil, who married one of his sisters. His daughter Madeleine became the wife of Gérard Edelinck. He died in Paris in 1670.

REGNIER, FRANS, an obscure Dutch portrait painter, who was at work in the Hague in 1776.

REGNIER, JACQUES AUGUSTE, landscape painter, born in Paris, 1787. He was a pupil of Bertin. For more than forty years he exhibited landscapes at the Salon, and was often premiated. Two paintings by him decorate the chapel of St. Denis, in the church of Saint Roch, at Paris, and another is in the Palace at Fontainebleau. Regnier's last years were passed in poverty and neglect, and he committed suicide by drowning, in the Canal de l'Oureq, in Paris, in 1860. Among his better works we may also name: 'The Tomb of King Arthur,' a 'Joan of Arc,' and a 'Chartreuse en Auvergne' (1837), in the Museum of Toulouse.

REGNIER, JEAN, a Belgian painter of interiors and of genre pictures, practising in 1853. He was professor at the Industrial School at Verviers.

REGOLIRON, BERNARDO, an Italian portrait painter, practising in the second half of the 18th century, was a pupil of P. P. Cristofani. At Vienna there are portraits by him of the Emperor Joseph II. and of his brother Leopold.

RËGTERS, TIBOUT, portrait painter, born at Dordrecht, 1710. He was the pupil successively of Ten Hage at Arnheim, of Meyer at Rotterdam, and of Quinkhard at Amsterdam. He died at Amsterdam in 1768. In the Ryks Museum there is a portrait by him of the historian Jan Wagenaar, and one of the painter Jan Ten Compe.

REHBERG, FRIEDRICH, historical painter, born in Hanover in 1758, studied first with Oeser in Leipzig, then with Casanova and Schenau in Dresden, and went in 1777 to Rome, where he studied the old masters under Mengs, and measured himself with David. In 1783 he returned to Hanover, painted several portraits, became teacher of drawing in Dessau in 1784, in 1786 Fellow, and in 1787 Professor of the Berlin Academy, and then returned to Rome. There he painted a 'Belisarius,' an 'Œdipus and Antigone,' 'The Death of Abel,' 'Bacchus,' 'Orpheus and Eurydice,' 'Jupiter and Venus.' In 1791 he went to Naples and made a series of drawings from Lady Hamilton, which were published. In 1813 he went to London, and in 1814 painted an allegory of Napoleon's fall. In the same year he returned for a time to Rome, but eventually settled in Munich, where he published, in 1824, 'Raffael Sanzio von Urbino;' the Elements of Lithographic Drawing ('Anfangs gründe des Steinzeichners'), with thirteen of his own lithographs. Rehberg died at Munich the 20th August, 1835.

REICH, WENDEL, was an engraver on wood, who, about the year 1515, flourished at Lyons, where he published several cuts marked with a W. and an R. joined together. We cannot, however, specify any of them. He was also a bookseller, and lived at Strasburg in 1540. Bartsch ('Peintre-Graveur,' ix. 170) has described a print bearing his cipher, supposed to be by him.

REICHEL, JAKOB, in the first part of this century was working as a miniature painter at St. Petersburg, and painted portraits of the Emperor Alexander I., the Empress Marie, and most of the principal personages of the empire. He died at Brussels in 1856.

REICHENBACH, LUD. VON. See SIMANOWITZ.

REICHENTHAL, ULRICH VON, a writer of the 15th century, who illustrated a 'History of the Council of Constance,' which he himself wrote, with a number of well-executed paintings in miniature.

REICHMANN, GEORG FRIEDRICH, painter, born at Munden in 1798, went through the campaign of 1813-1815, and then went to the Academy at Cassel. In 1821 he went to Munich, where he made himself a name with his 'Œdipus and Antigone.' He afterwards devoted himself to portrait-painting, and produced among others a portrait of the Duchess of Cambridge. He died at Hanover in 1853.

REIGLER, PAUL, landscape painter, practising in Belgium about 1845. He was a pupil of the Spa School of Painting.

REIGNIER, JEAN, flower painter, was born at Lyons, August 3, 1815. He was a pupil of the Lyons school of art, and until 1845 employed his talents in designing for the silk manufacturers. Afterwards he turned his attention to fine art, and in 1854 became a professor in the school in which he had been a pupil. He formed many scholars. His flower-pieces and fan-paintings are very clever, though a little stiff and academical. Reignier had much official recognition. He died in 1885.

REIMER, GEORG, painter, produced small cabinet pictures and died in Berlin in 1866. His best known work is 'Before the Sermon.'

REINAGLE, GEORGE PHILIP, marine painter, son of Richard Ramsay Reinagle, and grandson of Philip Reinagle, was born in 1802, and instructed by his father. He gave early proofs of great talent as a painter of marine subjects. After successfully copying pictures by Everdingen, Backhuysen, and William van de Velde, he accompanied the expedition to Navarino, for the express purpose of giving a representation of the expected action, and was also with Admiral Napier's Fleet in the action with the Portuguese. His works cause regret at the shortness of his career. He died in London in 1835.

REINAGLE, PHILIP, a landscape, animal, and panoramic painter, born in 1749, was a scholar of Allan Ramsay, the court painter, whom he assisted in his official portraits of George III. and Queen Charlotte. It is recorded that on one occasion Ramsay left England for some months, and deputed Reinagle to paint fifty pairs of 'Kings and Queens' at ten guineas a-piece. This task was duly performed, but it disgusted Reinagle with portrait painting, and he turned his attention to the study of animals, with which he succeeded to admiration. His pictures of hunting subjects, sporting dogs (particularly the spaniel), shaggy ponies, and dead game, were among the best of the day. He studied rather the manner of the old Dutch painters than that of his contemporaries, and was an excellent copyist of their works, and many pictures now called Paul Potter, A. van de Velde, Berchem, Karel du Jardin, &c., were really painted by him. He assisted Barker, too, in his panoramic Views of Rome, the Bay of Naples, Florence, Gibraltar, Algeiras Bay, and Paris. The work by which he is best known, however, is 'The Sportsman's Cabinet,' or correct delineations of the various dogs used in the sports of the field, taken from life, and engraved by John Scott. Reinagle was elected A.R.A. in 1787, and R.A. in 1812. He died at Chelsea in 1833.

REINAGLE, RAMSAY RICHARD, an English animal and landscape painter, born in 1775. He was the son of P. Reinagle, by whom he was instructed, completing his art training in Italy and Holland. He exhibited at the Water-Colour Society, of which he was a member from 1806 to 1813. In the following year he was elected an Associate of the Academy, becoming a full member in 1823. His later years were clouded by his enforced retirement from the Academy, which was brought about by his exhibiting, as his own, a picture which he had only purchased. This took place in 1848. He afterwards sank into poverty, and was generously treated by the Academy, on the funds of which he became a pensioner. He died at Chelsea in 1862. Amongst his works are :

London.	Bridgewater House.	Landscape.
"	Grosvenor House.	Landscape.
South Kensington.	Museum.	Rydal Mountains.
"	"	Three landscapes in water-colours.
Edinburgh.	National Gallery.	A very fine copy of the 'Coup de Lance,' by Rubens.

REINDEL, ALBERT CHRISTOPH, a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1784. He was apprenticed to Heinrich Guttenberg in 1798, and worked from 1803 to 1809 under his direction in Paris. In 1821 he was entrusted with the restoration of the baths at Nuremberg, in which he acquitted himself very well. In 1811 he was appointed director of the school of art in Nuremberg, keeper of the picture gallery, and a member of the Munich Academy. He died at Nuremberg in 1853. His chief plates are :

The Virgin and Child; after Leonardo da Vinci.
 Charlemagne; after Dürer.
 The Four Apostles; after the same.
 The Shrine of St. Sebald; after P. Fischer.
 Louis I., King of Bavaria; after Stieler.
 Silence; after Annibale Carracci.
 St. Paul preaching; after Le Sueur.
 Dürer; after Rauch.
 Madonna; after a Nuremberg woodcut.
 Christ blessing Little Children; after Heinrich's Hess.

REINER, WENZEL LORENZ, born at Prague in 1686, and son of Joseph Reiner, a sculptor of little note, by whom he was instructed in the rudiments of design: he also took lessons of Peter Brandel, a painter of some reputation, and of Schweiger. By the assistance of this master, and the study of nature, Reiner became a painter of some repute. His talents were not confined to any particular branch, and he painted with considerable success historical subjects, landscapes, and battles. His best productions, however, were landscapes with cattle, and battle-pieces, in which he resembles Peter van Eloeemen. His figures and animals are correctly drawn, and handled with freedom and spirit. His works are chiefly confined to his own country, where they are found in the best collections. He died in 1743. Works: Dresden. Gallery. The Campo Vaccino, Rome.

" " Golden House of Nero, and Barberini Fountain, Rome.

REINERMANN, ANNA MARGARETHE, wife of Friedrich Christian Reinermann, lived from 1781 to 1855, and painted flowers and fruit in oil and water-colour. Her maiden name was Hollenbach.

REINERMANN, FRIEDRICH CHRISTIAN, born at Wetzlar in 1764, received his first instruction in Frankfort from Nothnagel, and then went to study in 1789 in the Gallery of Cassel, after Potter, Berchem, and Claude Lorraine. He also visited Rome, and lived in Switzerland for ten years, where he painted several landscapes. From 1803 to 1811 he worked in Frankfort, from 1811 to 1818 in Wetzlar, and then again in Frankfort. He died at Frankfort in 1835. Works :

The Cascades at Tivoli.

REINHARD, ANNA MARIA. See KUSTER, JOHANN KASPAR.

REINHARDT, EMILIE, born at Amsterdam, 1809, was a flower painter, and a pupil of Pierre Joseph Redouté.

REINHARDT, KARL AUGUST, painter, born at Leipzig in 1818, was originally destined for the Church, but turned his talents to art. He travelled through Norway, the Tyrol, and Italy, but afterwards abandoned landscape for caricature, and produced humorous pen and ink sketches for the comic papers. He died at Kotzschbroda, near Dresden, in 1877.

REINHARDT, LUDWIG, an obscure painter of genre pictures, who committed suicide at Munich in 1870.

REINHARDT, SOPHIA, born at Kirchberg in 1775, studied under Becker, and travelled through Italy, Austria, and Hungary. In the Kunsthalle at Carlsruhe, are a 'St. Elizabeth and the infant St. John,' 'The Death of St. Katharine of Siena,' and 'Death of Torquato Tasso' by her. She died in 1843.

REINHART, HANS, called GRIENINGER, a printer and engraver of the 15th and 16th centuries, who flourished at Strasburg, was a native of Grünigen in Württemberg. He engraved the plates for several works, among which were: Brandt's 'The Ship of Fools,' 1497; Jerome of Brunnwick's 'Book of Surgery'; Terence, 1496; Buccaccio's 'Cunto Novelle,' 1519; Adelphus's 'Barbarossa,' 1520; Virgil, with two hundred plates, 1502; Ptolemy's Geography, with forty-seven wood-cuts, 1522. His works show him to have been a pupil of Martin Schongauer.

REINHART, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, a German landscape painter, born at Hof (Upper Franconia) in 1761. When young, he studied theology at Leipsic, but preferring to devote himself to art, became a scholar of Oeser. About 1785 he made the acquaintance of the Duke of Meiningen, who invited him to his court, where he painted both portraits and landscapes. In 1789 he settled at Rome, where he became one of the pioneers and most influential spirits in the so-called regeneration of German art. In 1825 he painted a room in the Villa Massimi, with eight historical landscapes in tempera, and four years later four large tempera landscapes for King Ludwig of Bavaria. Reinhart fell into reduced circumstances in his latter years, and died at Rome in 1847. The following are some of his pictures:

Frankfort.	Städel Gall.	Landscape, Cain and Abel.
Gotha.	Gallery.	Landscape. 1816.
Leipsic.	Museum.	Landscape, Cupid and Psyche. 1828.
		Landscape, Hypsipyle.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	Landscape. 1846.

He devoted considerable attention to aquatint engraving, and published several volumes of plates. The chief of these are:

Thierstudien, in Rom gezeichnet und radirt.
 Italienische Landschaften.
 Alte Grabmäler.

REINHEIMER, URSULA MAGDALENA, painter, born at Nuremberg. She was the daughter of Maria Prestel (q. v.), and practised for some time in London, painting landscape, portrait, and flower pieces. She afterwards settled at Brussels, where she died in 1845. She also engraved a few plates in aquatint.

REINHOLD, FRIEDRICH PHILIPPE, landscape painter, born at Gera in 1799, worked at the Academy in Vienna, in which city he took up his residence. His principal works are, 'A landscape with thunder-clouds;' 'A landscape with the Wandering Jew,' a very original work; two pictures, 'Death and Life,' 'The Reapers at their Meal.' He died between 1840 and 1843.

REINHOLD, HEINRICH, brother of Friedrich Reinhold, painter and engraver, born at Gera in 1789, went from Dresden, where he first studied, to his brother in Vienna, where he visited the Academy, and then in 1809 to Paris, to Denon, for whom he engraved several plates for his work on Napoleon's campaigns. In 1819 he returned to Vienna, and in 1820 travelled with an English family to Italy, and settled in Rome, where he painted heroic landscapes. Reinhold died at Albano in 1825. Works:

Berlin.	National Gall.	A Sicilian Coast Scene.
Copenhagen.	Thor-	Hagar in the Desert.
	waldsen Museum.	The Good Samaritan.
Munich.	New Pinakothek.	The Garden of the Capuchins at Sorrento.

REINICK, ROBERT, painter, born at Dantzig in 1805, studied first at Berlin under Begas; worked at Düsseldorf from 1831 to 1838, then went to Italy, and finally settled in Dresden. He was also a poet, and issued several songs with illustrations, besides a few books for children. He died at Dresden in 1852.

REINIGER, ERNST, a landscape painter, was a native of Stüttgart. He was very ready with his brush, and his pictures were fresh and natural. He died at Munich in 1873. Works:

The Maderanerthal.
 The Ramsau.
 Mühlthal, on the Starnberger See.

REINSPERGER, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a German painter and engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1711, was a scholar of Liotard, and practised for some time at Vienna. He painted portraits, some of which he has engraved in a coarse, heavy style, nearly as large as life, among which are:

The Empress Dowager, Elizabeth Christiana.
 Joseph II., Emperor of Germany; after Palko.
 Maria Theresa, Empress of Austria; after Liotard.
 The Archduke Leopold of Tuscany; after Palko.

He also engraved a plate of 'The Lute-player,' after Bernardo Strozzi. He died at Vienna in 1777.

REISEN, CHARLES CHRISTIAN, the well-known medallist and seal engraver, was born in London about 1680. He merits a place here through his abilities as a draughtsman, and the work he did as Director of Kneller's school. He was much employed for foreign patrons, in seal engraving, and greatly helped by the Earl of Oxford. He lived in the neighbourhood of Covent Garden, but also had a house at Putney. He was a large collector of medals, books, and drawings. He died December 15, 1725, and was buried in St. Paul's, Covent Garden.

REITER, BARTOLOME, a painter and engraver of Munich, flourished during the first quarter of the 17th century. He was a scholar of Hans Ostendorfer the younger, and of one Henneberger, and, traditionally, one of the best painters of Munich in his time; it is also said that he had many pupils. In the chapel in Unter Ammergau is a picture of St. Vitus, signed B. R. F. 1618. He died at Munich in 1622. The following is a list of Reiter's prints, on which his reputation must now rest:

1. Christ holding the Globe in His right hand.
2. Christ seated, crowned with thorns; Barilme Reitter — Pictor. Inv. Monachij 1615.
3. Christ carrying His Cross, group of half-length figures; Georg Beham inv. Monachii. Bart. Reiter fec. 1610.
4. Christ exposed to the People; inscribed Eccc Homo. Bart. Reiter pictor figur. Monachij 1612 fec.
5. The Holy Family with St. Francis or St. Jerome, half-figures, a copy after Palma, with both monograms.
6. St. Jerome sitting in a Cavern, half-figure, the lion on the left; signed Bart. Reitter pictor inv. et excud. There is an impression signed Bartholome Reuter.
7. A Nymph sitting in the lap of a Satyr, Cupid at their feet; Bart. Reiter fec. Monachij 1610.
8. Venus holding a Mirror, and seated with Cupid under a Tree, half figures; Georg. Becham inv. B. Reiter fec. 1610.
9. Neptune on a Sea-Horse holding his Trident; Georg Beham inv. Monachij, with Reiter's mark, and the date 1610.
10. A Child seated on a Skull and blowing Bubbles; B. R. F. Monachi Zimmermann Excud.
- 11—13. Eight prints, a series of naked Children in different positions; marked B. R.

REITZ, E., a native of Sweden, flourished about the year 1700. He engraved several plates of coins and architectural views for a work entitled 'Suecia Antiqua et Hodierna.'

REJHAN, JOZEF, a Polish portrait painter of German origin, was born in Poland about 1762, and instructed in the rudiments of art at Warsaw. In 1794 he served in the Polish army, but in 1798 he settled at Lemberg in Galicia, where he died in 1822, aged sixty. Rejhan was chiefly engaged as a portrait painter, and in that branch of art occupies a high position among Polish artists, but his pictures of the 'Crucifixion' and the 'Nativity' in the Lutheran Church and the Church of St. Anne at Lemberg also show a high conception of art.

REKTORZIK, FRANZ LORENZ JOSEPH, painter, born at Brünn in 1793, was at first in the Foreign Office, and in 1815 was Interpreter at Valence to the Austrian Governor, and then Director in the Chancery. He painted without having received any set instruction, and produced several etchings of landscapes, animals, and genre pictures.

RELINDE, Abbess of the convent of Alten-Eyck, near Maeseeyck, and her sister HERLINDE were skilful illuminators upon parchment and vellum, and flourished in Flanders in the 7th century. Some specimens of their work are still in existence in the treasury of the ancient church of Maeseeyck.

REM, GASPAR, a Flemish painter of little note, who was born in 1542, and died in 1614. In 1554 one Jasper Rem was inscribed as pupil to Willem van Clevee, at Antwerp, and he seems to have belonged to a large family of artists. In 1578 Rem was in Venice, where his portrait was painted by H. van Aken. Three other painters of this name, HANS, JORIS, and LODEWYCK, are mentioned in a document of 1603, discovered by Mr. Bredius. At Vienna there are two pictures by Gaspar Rem: a 'St. Jerome in the Desert' (engraved by Sadeler, not in 1605 as Nagler says, but in 1603), and a portrait of himself which is thus signed: A(NN)O D(OM)NI MDCCXIII EFFIGIE(S) GASPAR REM ETAT SVE LXII.

REMAUT, PIERRE, portrait painter, born at Bruges in 1771. He studied at the Academy at Bruges, but without achieving much excellence in his art. He died in 1826. At the 'Hôpital St. Jean' at Bruges there is a portrait by him of one of the Superiors of the Hospital.

REMAUX, DES, an obscure painter, a native of Yprès, who practised in Flanders at the end of the 17th century. In the church of St. Bertin, at Poperinghe, there is a 'Holy Family' by him.

REMBOLD, MATTHÄUS, was a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1635 in Ulm, and about 1654 in Stuttgart. His plates are generally signed with a monogram, but sometimes thus: Math. Remb. He engraved portraits, amongst others that of the Duke of Würtemberg, and he also executed the architectural plates for Furtenbach's 'Architecture.'

REMBRANDT. See RIJN.

REMEEUUS, DAVID, painter, was Dean of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1601.

REMES, CHARLES, a Belgian painter, born at Wetteren, practised in the first part of the 19th century. There are by him a 'Blind Beggar' and a 'Madonna of the Rosary.'

RÉMOND, JEAN CHARLES JOSEPH, landscape painter, born in Paris, 1794, a pupil of Bertin and of Regnault. He began by painting conventional heroic landscape, but after travelling much in France, Italy, and Sicily, he adopted a simpler and more natural style. He painted many views of the scenery of Auvergne, Dauphiny, Calabria, and Sicily. He won the usual honours from the French Government, and died in Paris in 1875.

REMONDE, (ROMUNDE, RORMUNDE, ROARMUNDE,) EVERARD DE, a Flemish portrait painter, the details of whose life and works are unknown, but who, in 1616, received a commission from the Chambre des Comptes of Brabant to paint the portraits of Albert and Isabella. Paul van Somer received a similar commission at the same time.

REMSDYKE, ANDREW, a portrait painter and draughtsman of Dutch descent, who practised in England in the latter part of the 18th century. He gained a medal at the Society of Arts in 1767, and assisted his father, John Remsdyke, in a series of natural history illustrations. He died at Bath in 1786.

REMSDYKE, JOHN, a natural history draughtsman, born in Holland in the first half of the 18th century. He settled at Bristol and worked much for Dr. Hunter. Assisted by his son, he published, in 1778, a collection of natural history illustrations taken from the British Museum.

REMSHARDT, KARL, a German engraver, born at Augsburg in 1678, published a dictionary of monograms. His initials, C. R., appear on some etchings of architecture after Paul Decker. Nagler mentions several others by him, some of which are copies from earlier engravings. He died at Augsburg in 1755.

REMY, AUGUST, painter, was a professor of the Academy of Berlin, born in 1800 or 1801. He painted portraits and historical subjects. His best known work is 'The Fisherman's Wife.' He died at Berlin in 1872. His daughter MARIA REMY, born at Berlin, 1829, practised fruit and flower-painting.

RENANTO, J., is mentioned as the engraver of a wood-cut representing 'The Wise Men's Offering,' which is very indifferently executed.

RENARD, JEAN, was a French engraver, who resided in Paris about the year 1710. He executed some plates for a collection of views of the palace and park at Versailles.

RENATUS. See BOIVIN, RENÉ.

RENAUD, MARIE HONORÉ, miniaturist and painter upon porcelain, was born in Paris, 1797. Amongst his miniatures we may mention a 'Holy Family,' after Raphael, and 'Van Dyck painting his first picture,' after Ducis.

RENAUDIN, ROSALIE, a pupil of Girodet, practising in France in the early part of the 19th century. She painted portraits, flowers, and fruit, both in oil and water-colour, and occasionally miniatures. There are by her a 'Sleeping Endymion,' after Girodet, and a 'Zephyrus on the Waters,' after Prud'hon.

RENDEUX, ENGLEBERT, marine painter, born at Liège, 1719. He worked for a time under Joseph Vernet, and eventually became a priest, and settled in Rome, where he held the office of almoner to Prince Berzonico. He died in 1777.

RENÉ of Anjou, King of Naples, Duke of Lorraine, and Count of Provence (father to Margaret, wife of Henry VI. of England), born in 1409, was a good painter. He painted his own portrait, which was extant some years ago in the chapel of the Carmelites at Aix; and there is a print from it in Montfaucon; he is supposed to have painted that of Charles VII. of France, also. He painted a large number of miniatures in missals and on glass, and was lauded as one of the best artists of his age. He also employed himself in writing poetry, and works on agriculture, and in the improvement of the condition of his people, by whom he was called 'le bon roi René.' The events of his life belong to history. Examples of his works exist at Aix, Villeneuve near Avignon, and the Hôtel de Cluny. At Aix is an altar-piece consisting of a centre representing Moses on the ground taking off his shoes, and the burning bush; and two shutters, the left one, his own portrait, with Saints, and the right one, his second wife, Jeanne de Laval, with Saints. The work in Cluny ascribed to him is a curious old picture on panel of 'Mary Magdalene at Marseilles.' In the foreground appear the figures of King René and his wife Jeanne. Around them are grouped the Marseillais, in a circle of which the Magdalen is the centre. She stands upon a tribune and addresses the assembly. In the background are the city of Marseilles and the sea. To quote the words of César Nostradamus ('Hist. et Chron. de Provence,' edit. 1614), René, "besides his sublime and royal qualities, was a good musician, a very good poet both in French and Italian, and above all things loved, with a passionate love, the art of painting, and had so excellent a taste for that noble profession, that he was famous among the most excellent painters and illuminators of his time, as we may judge from the number of masterpieces achieved by his royal and divine hand." He died at Aix in 1480.

RENEDO, JUAN DE, an engraver of Zaragoza, executed in 1666 a bold title-page adorned with heraldic and allegorical devices for Diego de Sayas Rabanera's 'Anales de Aragon.'

RENESE, CONSTANTIN ADRIAN, was a clever designer and etcher, of whose history nothing is known, except what may be gathered from his prints. These bear a considerable resemblance to the etchings of Rembrandt, and may be mistaken by the unwary for the works of that master. Bartsch has admitted one in his Catalogue (tom. ii. p. 104, No. 18). Renesse flourished, as we know from his prints, between the years 1649 and 1661; the probability is that he lived in Holland, though his name may belong to France, or Flanders. Nagler describes six etchings by him, of which the titles are given below; but Brulliot says there are eleven, and that one bears his monogram (C. A. R. in a cipher), and this he supposes is the artist's portrait; it represents a half-length figure of a man, full face, wearing a 'baret,' seated at a table and holding a basin in his left hand. The other prints have, most of them, the monogram accompanied by renesse. Dutch writers mention a J. Renesse, who painted landscapes and sea-pieces, and who is probably identical with this engraver.

The following list of Renesse's prints is taken from Nagler:

- A half-length figure of a Man seated at a table; with the monogram.
- A Clergyman seated at a table, with books, &c.; signed Renesse.
- A half-length figure of a young Man.
- Full-face Portrait of a young Man, with long hair escaping from under his cap; signed C. A. Renesse, 1651.
- Christ bearing His Cross.
- A Village Fair, with Mountebanks and a crowd of People.

RENI, GUIDO, commonly called GUIDO, was born at Calvenzano, near Bologna, in 1575. His father, a music master, placed him first with Denis Calvaert, and afterwards in the studio of the Carracci. He also studied fresco painting under Ferrantini. His first works, however, betray the imitation of Caravaggio, combined with a sincere regard for nature. To this period of his life belong some frescoes on the façade of the Palazzo Zani, and a 'St. Benedict in the Wilderness,' in the church of San Michele in Bosco, as well as two famous pictures in the Bologna Gallery, the 'Massacre of the Innocents' and the 'Pietà.' In 1596 Guido went to Rome. There he added the study of Raphael to the knowledge he had gathered in his native city, and under the new influence painted what is now usually considered his best picture. This is the famous 'Aurora preceding the Chariot of the Sun,' in the garden-pavilion of the Palazzo Rospigliosi. About the same time he produced the 'St. Michael' at the Capucini, and the 'Fortune' of the Academy of St. Luke. After painting the 'Aurora' he revisited Bologna, but was soon recalled to Rome. He also spent some time in Naples, whence, like so many other artists, he was driven by the jealousy of the Neapolitan painters. But in Naples he left a specimen of his talent in what is looked upon by some of the best authorities as really his finest work. This is a 'Nativity.' It is in the choir of San Martino, and is unfinished. About this period of his life Guido finally abandoned the energetic style of his youth, and adopted one in which a rather invertebrate grace and a preference for almost neutral tints are conspicuous. His heads were often modelled on the antique. His 'Ecce Homos' recall the Laocoon; his 'Penitent Magdalens,' the weeping Niobe. The impersonality of Greek art seems, too, to have, perhaps unconsciously, fascinated him, until his figures at last became mere abstractions of humanity. He had three distinct manners. His first, in which colour was used in a harsh, gaudy fashion, is illustrated by a small 'Coronation of the Virgin' in the National Gallery. His second is the vigorous style, much too black in the shadows, borrowed from Caravaggio. His third is characterized by thinness of impasto, by a pearly silveriness of colour, and by extreme facility of handling. Towards the end of his life Guido is said to have been an inveterate gambler, and to have forced his gift of rapid execution in order to supply the losses thus incurred. He died at Bologna in 1642.

Guido had ateliers for pupils both in Rome and Bologna. The painters he formed were very numerous. The following are, perhaps, the best known: Giacomo Semenza, Francesco Jessi, Guido Cagnacci, the Siranis, father and daughter, Simone Contarini da Pesaro, Flaminio Torre, Marescotti, Girolamo Rossi, Ruggieri, Domenico Canuti, Bolognini, and Pietro Ricci. All these are well represented in the Gallery of Bologna. Guido's own pictures are so numerous that space can here only be found for the names of the best known and more accessible. In the first half of the 19th century Guido was one of the most popular of masters, and very large sums were given for his pictures in England and France. The churches and Palazzi of Italy are full of them, and scarcely a gallery in Europe is without at least one example of his work.

Guido has left a considerable number of etchings. They are free and bold in execution, and show the same qualities of grace that we find in his pictures. Simone Contarini, one of Guido's pupils, imitated his work with the point with skill. Guido sometimes marked his plates with his initials, G. R.; sometimes with this monogram GR. The following are perhaps his best plates:

FROM HIS OWN DESIGNS.

The Bust of Pope Paul V., inscribed Paulus V. Pont. opt. max.

The Holy Family, in which the Virgin is seated, with her face towards the Infant Christ.

The Virgin, with the Infant Jesus sleeping on her breast. (He has engraved this subject in three different manners.)

The Virgin embracing the Infant Christ, and holding a book in her hand.

The Virgin, and Infant Jesus giving His hand to St. John.

The Holy Family, with two Angels scattering flowers. (He engraved this subject four times, with variations.)

St. Christopher carrying the Infant Jesus on his shoulders.

St. Jerome praying in a Cave, with a book and a crucifix.

The Virgin seated in the Clouds, with St. George, St. Francis, St. Lawrence, and others.

AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

A Glory of Angels; after Luca Cambiaso.

The Entombment of Christ; after Parmigiano.

The Holy Family, with St. Clara; after A. Carracci.

The Virgin suckling the Infant Jesus; after the same.

The Charity of St. Roch; after the same. 1610.

RENI, LORENZO DEL SIGNOR. See LOLI.

RENNOLDSON, —, was an engraver, who practised in mezzotint in London in the middle of the 18th century. His best known plate is 'The Dancing-Mistress,' after John Collet.

RENODI, ABRAHAM, an obscure portrait painter, born at the Hague, practising in Holland at the close of the 18th century.

RENOU, ANTOINE, a French painter, poet, and actor, born in Paris in 1731, was a scholar of Pierre and Vien, and passed some time at the court of Stanislaus, King of Poland, as painter to that prince; and at the same time exercised his talents as an actor and writer of verses. On his return to Paris he was admitted a member of the Academy of Painting, and was employed on part of the ceiling of the Apollo Gallery in the Louvre. He was the author of a tragedy on the subject of Tereus and Philomela, and translated Dufresnoy's poem on Painting from Latin into French. He also painted a picture of 'Christ among the Doctors;' 'Agrippina with the Ashes of Germanicus;' an 'Annunciation' for the church of St. Germain-en-Laye, and the ceiling of the Hôtel de la Monnaie at Paris. Renou died in Paris in 1806.

RENOU, LOUISE ANTOINETTE (née LUCAS), the wife of Antoine Renou, was born in Paris in 1754. There are by her a few plates engraved after the modern French painters; among which is:

Alexander and his Physician; after Colin de Vermont.

RENOUX, CHARLES CAIUS, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1795, and died there in 1846. He painted landscape and interiors. There are by him the following:

Monks bearing a Coffin.
Subterranean Church at Basle.
View on the Durance.

RENTINCK, ARENT, or AART, a Dutch painter of portraits and genre, was born at Amsterdam in 1712. He was a pupil of Arnold van Boonen and of Nicolaas Verkoljé. Later on he studied under Karel de Moor. He spent many years at Berlin, and there he died in 1775. He painted many good copies from the old masters, and also practised as an engraver.

RENTINCK, JAN, a Dutch painter, born at Nieuwerbrug, near Bodegraven, in 1789. He was a pupil of P. C. Wonder, and of Jan van Ravenszwaay, and painted chiefly interiors and still-life. He died in 1846.

RENTON, JOHN, an English portrait and landscape painter, who exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1799 to 1840. He contributed altogether some forty pictures, one of which was a 'Charles I. raising his Standard at Nottingham.' In the year 1840 he sent some intaglios to the exhibition, after which all trace of him is lost.

RENTZ, MICHAEL HEINRICH, a German painter and engraver, was born at Nüremberg in 1701, where he studied under Preisler and Montalegre. He executed several plates for books, some by himself, others in conjunction with Montalegre. He settled in after life at Kukus in Bohemia, where he had been invited by a Count Spork, whose portrait he had painted, and where he died in 1758.

RENTZCH, (RENSCH, RENTSCH,) JOHANN FRIEDRICH JAKOB, painter, born at Dresden in 1792, studied under J. Schubert, and became professor of drawing at the industrial school at Dresden. His works are well drawn and warm in colour. The best known are an altar-piece for a votive chapel, 'Hagar in the Wilderness,' and 'Gretchen at the Distaff,' the latter engraved by Küchler.

RENZI, CESARIO, an historical painter of little note, born at San Ginesio in Italy. He was a pupil of Guido, and practised late in the 17th century.

REQUENA, VINCENTE, a Spanish painter of the 16th century, born at Concentayna. In 1590 he was practising at Valencia. He painted the 'Conception,' and the 'SS. Jerome and Anne,' in the church of the monastery of San Miguel de los Reyes. A 'St. Michael' in the convent of San Domingo has also been attributed to him.

RESANI, ARCANGELO, was born at Rome in 1670, and was a scholar of Gio. Battista Boncuore. He chiefly excelled in painting animals and hunting scenes. His works were highly esteemed at Siena, Bologna, and Venice. His portrait, with dead game in the background, is in the Florentine Gallery. He died about 1740.

RESCH, ERNST, painter, born at Dresden in 1808, painted portraits and landscapes, and trained excellent pupils. He died at Breslau in 1864.

RESCH, WOLFGANG, was a German engraver on wood, who flourished at Nüremberg about 1530. He executed the woodcuts for 'Ein schöner Dialogus, oder Gespräch von zweyen Schwestern,' 1533, a half-length portrait of Jacob Fugger, and heads in profile of the Emperors Maximilian I. and Charles V. His works are described in Bartsch's 'Peintre-Graveur,' vii. 473, and Passavant's 'Peintre-Graveur,' iii. 252.

RESCHI, PANDOLFO, born at Dantzie in 1643, went to Italy when he was young, and became one of the ablest scholars of Giacomo Borgognone. He painted battle-pieces with considerable success, and imitated cleverly the landscapes of Salvator Rosa. He also excelled in painting perspective and architectural views, of which there are several in the collections at Florence. He died in 1699.

RESTALLINO, CARLO, miniature painter, born at Zornasco (Domo d'Ossola) in 1776, in early life went to Munich, and there studied engraving under J. Dörner and M. Klotz. After that he visited Dresden, Berlin, and Italy. In 1808 he was appointed court painter at Munich, and in 1820 teacher to the household of Maximilian Joseph. There are portraits by him of King Maximilian and Queen Caroline. He died at Munich in 1864.

RESTLEIN, GEORG, painter and engraver, an obscure German artist, who practised in the 17th century, and was born at Zwabach, near Nürnberg.

RESTOUT, JEAN, 'the elder,' painter, born at Caen, 1663, the son and pupil of Marc Restout, and father of the more famous Jean Restout the younger. He had a fair reputation in his day as an historical painter, and his wife CATHERINE, the sister of Jean Jouvenet, also practised painting. He died in 1702.

RESTOUT, JEAN, 'the younger,' was born at Rouen in 1692, and studied in Paris under his uncle, Jouvenet, whose style he followed with considerable success. He was a member of the Academy of Paris, and painted for his reception, 'Venus getting arms from Vulcan for Æneas,' and for his admission as Fellow, 'Arethusa flying into the arms of Diana to escape from the pursuit of Alpheus.' In 1733 he was made professor, and in 1760 a director of the Academy. As a technical artist he was characterized by a soft, woolly touch, by design in which there was little nobility, and by drawing in which there was much mannerism. His colour, too, was poor. He died in Paris in 1768. His principal works are:

Dijon.	Musée.	St. John the Baptist adoring Christ.
Lille.	Musée.	Christ on the way to Emmaus.
Nancy.	Musée.	Portrait of the architect, Bofrand (?).
Paris.	Louvre.	Christ healing the paralytic.
"	"	St. Paul before the High Priest, Ananias.
"	Library of St. Geneviève.	Ceiling.

RESTOUT, JEAN BERNARD, painter, the son of Jean Restout the younger, born in Paris, 1732. He was the pupil of his father, to whom he was greatly inferior in talent. He attained, however, to a respectable proficiency in his art, gained the 'Prix de Rome' in 1758, and was made an Academician in 1769. He resigned his membership in 1771, in consequence of certain regulations which were distasteful to him, and after this time almost abandoned the practice of his profession. Some suspicion having fallen upon him in connection with the affair of the 'Garde-Meuble,' he was thrown into prison, but the events of the 9th Thermidor led to his release. He died in Paris in 1797. There is in Paris a 'St. Bruno' by him, and in the Museum at Toulouse a 'Diogenes,' and a sketch for his reception picture at the Academy, the 'Philemon and Baucis.'

RESTOUT, MARC, painter, was born at Caen in 1616, and was a pupil of Noel Jouvenet. His father was one Marguérin Restout. He visited Rome in company with Poussin, and acquired a certain reputation in that city and in Holland. He was the first of the Restout family of artists; several of his ten children became painters. He died at Caen in 1684. Amongst his sons were: EUSTACHE, born at Caen, 1655. He became Premonstrant of the abbey of Mondaye, practised decorative painting, executed some fine ceilings, and died in 1743. JACQUES, born before 1655. He was a pupil of Letellier de Vernon, and became prior of the abbey of Moncel, near Vitry. He was a painter and a writer. JEAN (the elder), q. v. CHARLES, the fifth son, born at Caen in 1668, became a Benedictine monk. He was a good preacher, and painted ceilings and pictures for churches. THOMAS, born at Caen, 1671, visited Rome and Holland to study his art, and practised portrait painting. He died at Caen in 1754.

RETHEL, ALFRED, born at Aix-la-Chapelle, May 15, 1816. His precocious talent displayed itself in drawings made in his childhood, and at the age of thirteen he went to study at Düsseldorf. There he astonished his masters and fellow-pupils by the vigour of his invention, especially on the occasion of the gala reception given to Schadow on his return to Düsseldorf. Afterwards, in 1837, being dissatisfied with the poverty of the technical system there taught, he migrated to Frankfort, where he came under the influence of Schwind, Passavant, and, above all, of Philip Veit. At Frankfort he painted his 'Daniel,' his 'Justitia,' and three emperor pictures for the Römersaal (Philip of Swabia, Maximilian I. and II., and Charles V.), besides making the cartoon for his 'Resurrection.' In 1841 his projet gained the prize in the competition for the decoration of the 'Kaisersaal' at Aix-la-Chapelle. It was a series of ambitious designs of much merit, representing incidents in the career of Charlemagne. After preparing himself by a two years' sojourn in Italy for their execution, he completed four pictures of the series, when his health failed, and he was obliged to relinquish the work. It was finally completed by Kehren. Whilst engaged on his frescoes at Aix-la-Chapelle, Rethel also made some bizarre drawings for a 'Dance of Death,' to which Reinick wrote verses. Another fantastic composition was a set of water-colour drawings illustrative of Hannibal's passage of the Alps. In 1848 Rethel went to Dresden, where he remained a few years. In 1852 he made a second pilgrimage to Italy, where he began to show symptoms of mental disorder. After his return to Dresden his malady made rapid progress, and he ended his days in an asylum at Düsseldorf, where he died, December 1, 1859. Among his works we may name:

- Procession of the Longobards.
- Charles Martel's Castle.
- Justitia.
- Rudolf of Hapsburg.
- The Swiss in prayer before the Battle of Sempach.
- St. Boniface. (National Gallery, Berlin.)
- Daniel in the Lion's Den. (Frankfort, Stüdel Museum.)
- Nemesis.
- Peter and John healing the lame man. (Leipzig Museum.)
- Joshua crossing the Jordan.
- The Crowning of Sophocles.
- The Burial of Frauenlob.
- And a set of Illustrations for Luther's Hymn, 'Ein feste Burg.'

Five of the cartoons for the Charlemagne series are in the Berlin National Gallery, also the cartoon for the altar-piece, 'The Resurrection,' in the Nicolaikirche at Frankfort. Rethel also etched, and drew much on the wood. He wished to breathe new life into the latter art, on the lines followed by Dürer.

RETZSCH, AUGUST, brother of Moritz Retzsch, born in 1777, was a pupil of Klengel, and painted winter landscapes. He died in 1835.

RETZSCH, FRIEDRICH AUGUST MORITZ, a German draughtsman and painter, born at Dresden, December 9, 1779. He studied in the Dresden Academy, which he entered in 1798, and of which he was elected a member in 1816, and professor in 1824. It was not till he was about twenty years of age that he applied himself seriously to the study of painting; for though he had previously some skill as a designer, he disliked all restraint, and would have preferred following the bent of his genius as a haunter of the forests, and as a student of nature in solitude. His fame does not rest on his work with the brush, but on his illustrations to the German poets and to Shakespeare, which he interpreted with extraordinary vigour and sympathy. As a portrait painter he was successful, especially with his likenesses; one of his best is a portrait of King Friedrich August of Saxony. The Dresden Gallery possesses a portrait of a lady by him. Retzsch died at Hoffössnitz, near Dresden, June 11, 1857. His principal engraved works are:

Twenty-six illustrations to Goethe's 'Faust.' (1828.)
Sixteen	"	"	Schiller's 'Fight with the Dragon.'
Eight	"	"	'Fridolin.'
Forty-three	"	"	'Song of the Bell.'
Eighteen	"	"	'Pegasus in Har-ness.'
Eighty	"	"	Shakespeare. 1827—1846.
Fifteen	"	"	Bürger's Ballads.
Eight	'Fantasien und Wahrheiten.'
The Chess-player.
The Goblet.
Faust and Margaret. ( Two lithographs. )

REUTERN, GERHARD CHRISTOPHOROWITSCH VON, painter and etcher, born at Rösthof in Livonia in 1791. He entered the Alexander regiment of Hussars, and at Leipsic in 1813 lost his right arm. He had made his first essay in drawing in 1814, while in 1817 he studied in Berlin, in 1819 in Heidelberg, in 1821 in Dorpat. In 1827 he devoted himself entirely to art, and painted in water-colours scenes of Hessian peasant life. In 1834 he went to Düsseldorf, where he studied under Schadow and Hildebrand. Afterwards he painted historical scenes, landscapes, and genre pictures, and in 1835 became Russian court painter. He died at Frankfort (where he had settled in 1844) in 1865. His principal works are:

The Sacrifice of Isaac. ( In the Hermitage at St. Petersburg. )
St. George.
A Madonna.
Three Singers. ( Palace of Tsarskoe-Selo. )
Girl Knitting.
The Infant School.
Family Devotion. ( In the collection of the Empress of Germany. )

He also etched eleven plates, mostly of animals.

REUTLIMANN, RUIDIMAN, (or REUTTILMAN,) JOHANN CONRAD, is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of some plates of foliage, and other ornamental designs, published at Angsburg; he was a goldsmith, and lived in the first half of the 17th century.

REUVEN, PIETER, born at Leyden in 1650, studied at Antwerp in the school of Jacob Jordaens. He painted history and allegorical subjects, and was employed to design the triumphal arches for the reception of William III. at the Hague, by which he acquired some celebrity; and he was afterwards engaged to ornament some of the principal apartments in the palace at Loo, in which he showed a fertile invention, and great facility of execution. One of his best productions was a ceiling in the hotel of M. de La Court Vandervoort, at Leyden; it is an ingenious composition, and the colouring possesses much of the brilliancy which is found in the productions of the best painters of the Flemish school. He died in 1716.

REUVER, THEODORE DE, born at Utrecht in 1761, imitated the old masters and painted landscapes. He died in 1808.

REUWICH, ERHARD, a painter of Utrecht, practising in the 15th century, and known only as having accompanied Breydenbach on his travels from 1474 to 1483, and having executed all the designs in illustration of the various editions of the narrative published by the latter.

RÉVELL, ÉTIENNE ACHILLE, a French engraver and draughtsman, born in Paris in 1800, was a pupil of Gros, Girodet-Trioson, and Abel de Pujol. He made drawings from many famous pictures and statues, and engraved them in outline for various publications. Examples of his work are to be found in the 'Musée de Peinture et de Sculpture,' the 'Galerie des Arts et de l'Histoire,' and the 'Musée de Versailles.' He also engraved in outline the works of Ingres, published by Didot.

REVEL, ALFRED, a French engraver, was a native of Paris, and exhibited at the Salon from 1831 to 1852. He died in 1865. He was largely employed upon vignettes for books, but also engraved the following plates:

Paul Potter sketching from Nature in the environs of the Hague; after Le Poittevin.
The Broken Pitcher; after Greuze.
St. Catharine; after Ch. Landelle.

REVEL, GABRIEL, painter, born at Château-Thierry, 1643, was a pupil of Charles Le Brun, and an artist of some reputation in his day. He became a member of the Academy in 1683. He assisted in the decoration of Versailles, and finally settled at Dijon, where he died 1712, and where are to be found the following:

Portrait of Pierre Lenet, procureur général du Parlement de Dijon. 1641.
Portrait of Jean Dubois, the sculptor of Dijon.

His son JEAN, born in Paris, 1684, was a skilful designer of patterns for the silk-manufacture, and died at Lyons 1751.

REVELLO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, called IL MUSTACCHI, a Genoese painter, born in 1672, studied under Antonio Haffner, and formed a close friendship with Francesco Costa. For twenty years these two in concert executed landscape and other accessories for historical painters. Their masterpiece is said to be at Pegli in the Palazzo Grillo, consisting of the decorations of a set of rooms. He died in 1732.

REVERDINO, CESARE, was an Italian engraver, who flourished from 1531 to 1564. His figures are very indifferently drawn, and his plates have little to recommend them, except their neatness. He sometimes marked his plates with the monogram RR. The following prints by him are apparently from his own designs:

Moses striking the Rock. 1531.
The Wise Men's Offering.
A small Frieze, representing a Bacchanalian subject. 1564.
Venus coming to Vulcan for the arms of Æneas.

Those that are marked with his name in full, and are undoubtedly his work, are in a style between that of Giulio Bonasone and Agostino Veneziano, and seem to prove that he was of the school of Marc-Antonio. A descriptive catalogue of his engravings will be found in Passavant's 'Peintre-Graveur,' vi. 107—117.

REVEST, CORNÉLIE LOUISE, painter of genre pictures and of portraits, born at Amsterdam, 1795, studied in Paris under Sérangely and Vafflard. By her:

Magdalen at the feet of Christ. (In the Marseilles Gallery.)

The Toilet of Psyche.

REVETT, NICHOLAS, an architect and painter, born in Suffolk in 1721, went in 1742 to Italy, and studied under Benefial in Rome. While he was there practising as a painter he formed a friendship with 'Athenian' Stuart, and in 1748 went to Naples and Greece to study Greek monuments. He arrived at Athens in 1751, and was there till 1754, but on going to other parts of Greece he was seized by corsairs, to whom he paid a ransom of six hundred dollars for his release. He then continued his researches, but under great difficulties, till 1755, when he returned to London. In 1764 he visited Ionia with Dr. Chandler and William Pars, A.R.A., where he remained for two years. He published the fruits of his travels under the headings of 'The Antiquities of Athens,' and 'Ionian Antiquities.' He also published a work entitled 'Baalbec and Palmyra.' He died in London in 1804.

REVOIL, PIERRE HENRI, a French historical and subject painter, born at Lyons in 1776. He came to Paris and studied under David. His works first appeared at the Salon in 1804. In early life he was content to shine in his native province. He returned to his native city in 1809, as professor of painting in the Royal Academy of Lyons. He belonged to the school which formed the transition between the Classicism of David and the Romanticism of the fourth decade of the century. The cross of the Legion of Honour was awarded to him in 1814, and he was elected a correspondent of the Institute in 1825. His works are bold but mannered, and frequently over-weighted by the accessories. He died in Paris in 1842. The following are some of his pictures:

Aix.	Museum.	Release of Christian Captives.
Fontainebleau.	"	Jeanne d'Albret. 1819.
Lyons.	Museum.	The Tournament. 1812.
Versailles.	Palace.	Philip Augustus raising the Oriflamme.

REY, ETIENNE, landscape painter, born at Lyons, 1789, was a pupil of Pillement and of Cogel. He died in 1867. By him:

Ruins of a Roman Portico.

REYERS, NICOLAS, painter, born at Leyden, 1719. An artist of little note, who was a pupil of Jerome Van der My, and painted portraits and genre pictures.

REYHER, ROBERT, an engraver, born in Berlin, in 1838, entered the Academy in that city, and studied under Mandel. He engraved portraits of Beethoven, Goethe, Liszt, Chopin, Schiller, Raphael, and Cary. His best works are, Maria Mancini, after Mignard; and the Countess Potocka, after Tonci. He died in 1877, through falling into the Havel.

REYN, JAN DE. See DE REYN.

REYNA, FRANCISCO DE, painter, a native of Seville, was a disciple of Francisco de Herrera, the elder. He had given proof of most promising talents, in a picture of the 'Souls in Purgatory,' in the church of All Saints, at Seville, when he died, in the bloom of life, in 1659.

REYNELL, THOMAS, (RENNELL,) portrait painter, born near Chndleigh in Devonshire, in 1718, was educated at the Exeter Grammar School, but was afterwards sent to London, where he became a pupil of Hudson. He then returned to Exeter, where he settled as a painter. The Duke of Kingston offered him assistance to go to London again, but he refused. He painted portraits, and was a musician; but his habits were so idle and improvident that he fell very low in the world. He lived at Dartmouth in a state of the most abject poverty till an asylum was provided for him by the kindness of a friend. He died at Dartmouth in 1788.

REYNOLDS, FRANCES, the sister of Sir Joshua Reynolds, whose house she kept for many years in Leicester Fields, was born at Plympton in 1729. She practised as a miniaturist, and made many copies of her brother's pictures. Frequent mention is made of her in the literary and artistic history of the time. On her brother's death she took a large house in Queen Square, Westminster, where she exhibited her own works, and where she died in 1807.

REYNOLDS, SIR JOSHUA, was born at Plympton, near Plymouth, on July 16, 1723. His father, Samuel Reynolds, was the master of Plympton Grammar School, and intended his son for the medical profession; but at a very early age the child was attracted to the study of art, and it is said that before his eighth birthday he had mastered the rules of perspective from the Jesuit's 'Perspective,' and had produced a correct drawing of a colonnade under his school-house; this was quickly followed up by an attempt at portrait painting. His first work, on the canvas of an old boat-sail, was the portrait of a tutor in the family of the Earl of Mount Edgcumbe, and is still in existence. Ultimately—after some difficulty in raising the required premium—his father sent him in October 1740 to London, to Hudson, then the first portrait painter in England. Hudson was, however, incompetent to develop the genius of Reynolds; and the apprenticeship, which was to have continued four years, was abruptly closed at the end of two. Reynolds then returned to Devonshire, and for a time was very fully employed in painting portraits in the Plymouth district. When he had exhausted the neighbourhood, he returned, in 1744, to London, armed with an introduction, obtained through Hudson, to the Artists' Club. At Christmas in 1746 Reynolds was recalled to Plymouth by the death of his father, who expired on Christmas Day. This broke up the home at Plympton, and the young painter took a house in Plymouth Dock for himself and two of his sisters, and there made the acquaintance of William Gandy, under whose influence he greatly modified his style of painting. A portrait of himself in the National Portrait Gallery illustrates this period of his art. During the years 1747 and 1748 Reynolds appears to have maintained himself and his sisters by his portrait painting; he also studied landscape, and visited occasionally at the house of the Earl of Mount Edgcumbe. There he was so fortunate as to acquire the friendship of Admiral Keppel, who had been appointed to the command of the Mediterranean squadron, and had put into Plymouth for repairs. He offered to take Reynolds to Italy in his own ship, the 'Centurion,' and his offer being gratefully accepted, Reynolds set out in May, 1749.

During the campaign of Algiers, Reynolds, who found friends wherever he went, was landed in the island of Minorca, and remained there as the guest of the English governor, General Blakeney, painting the portraits of all the leading men of the station. From Minorca he finally sailed to Leghorn, and thence to Rome. Here he spent two years in study and in the occasional copying of pictures. He does not appear to have done much original work. His Italian note-books, which have been preserved, display the growth of his critical faculties, and account for much that is to be found in his famous discourses. During his studies in the Vatican he caught a cold from which the deafness arose which afflicted the remainder of his life. In April 1752 he left Rome, and after spending four months in visiting Florence, Venice, and other cities, and three months in Devonshire on his arrival home, he settled down once more in London as a portrait painter. Assisted by the patronage of Lord Mount Edgumbe and welcomed by Hudson, he became immediately popular. His portraits of the beautiful Miss Gunning and of Admiral Keppel secured his position from the first, and his career henceforward was one of uninterrupted enjoyment and success. He possessed a wider circle of friends eminent by rank or talents than any contemporary. His friendship with Edmund Burke, Dr. Johnson, Goldsmith, Garrick, Hogarth, and others, was consolidated by the formation of The Club, of which Reynolds was the president, and which included among its thirty-five members, at the date of Reynolds' death, Fox and Windham, Malone and Steevens, Boswell and Sheridan, Bishop Percy and Dr. Burney.

The Society of Artists opened its first exhibition of pictures in 1760, and Reynolds became a regular contributor to its shows; but in 1768 the Royal Academy was founded, on 10th December, with him as its first President. In the following year the President was knighted. The annual Academy dinners, and the custom of an annual address from the President, were instituted by Reynolds. Among his portraits of this period, those of ladies are commonly in some mythological disguise, or have an allegorical intention in design. His portraits of Dr. Johnson, Goldsmith, Garrick, Sterne, Sheridan, and other men of distinction are more simple. His classical works won the same popular admiration as his simple character studies, and, although his name is less connected with them by posterity, such pieces as the 'Ugolino,' the 'Nativity,' the 'Infant Jupiter,' and the 'Cardinal Beaufort,' augmented his fame as much as his portraits, or such studies of children as the 'Strawberry Girl,' 'Muscipula,' 'Boy with the Cabbage Nets,' 'Master Crewe,' &c. The only important rivals to Sir Joshua Reynolds were Gainsborough and Romney. In 1773 Reynolds was elected mayor of his native town, and sent his portrait to hang between two of his pictures of which the corporation had become possessed years before. In this portrait he appears in his D.C.L. robes, for at the Encenia of this same year he had been honoured with that degree by the University of Oxford. In 1777 Reynolds was again in the neighbourhood of Oxford, at Blenheim, to paint the great Marlborough family pictures, and in 1779 he was occupied with the designs for the windows in New College. In 1780 took place the first exhibition of the Royal Academy in their rooms at Somerset House. To it Sir Joshua's chief contribution was the famous portrait of the three ladies Waldegrave. In 1781 Reynolds made the tour of the Netherlands, and the notes that were published after his death contain interesting records of his judgment on the great masters of the 17th century. Two years later, in 1783, Reynolds paid a second visit to the Low Countries.

It was in 1784 that he painted Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse, now in the Dulwich Gallery, which with the 'Garrick between Tragedy and Comedy,' and the 'Mrs. Abington as the Comic Muse,' make a fine triad of theatrical portraits. The work that Reynolds is said to have taken more pains with than he ever did with any other, is the 'Infant Hercules,' painted for the Empress Catherine, and now in the Hermitage. It was exhibited in 1788 with sixteen other pictures from the President's brush. In 1790 occurred his disagreement with the majority of the Academy, over the election of Bonomi as associate and professor of painting, which resulted in his tender and subsequent withdrawal of his resignation. In December the same year he delivered the fifteenth and last of his famous discourses, and a few months later an affection of the eyesight came to a crisis which resulted in his becoming almost totally blind. He lost his spirits, and again tendered his resignation of the P.R.A.-ship. This was again refused, and West was appointed Deputy President, to relieve Reynolds of the duties he was no longer able to perform. But in spite of this the break-up of his health went on apace, and on February 23, 1792, he died.

Sir Joshua was buried in St. Paul's, close by the tomb of Sir Christopher Wren. He left the whole of his property, after certain legacies had been paid, to his niece, Miss Palmer, afterwards the Marchioness of Thomond. The value of her inheritance has been estimated at £100,000.

REYNOLDS, SAMUEL WILLIAM, an engraver in mezzotint, was descended from a family who possessed property in the West Indies, and was born in London in 1773. He studied in the schools of the Academy, and was a pupil of Charles Howard Hodges. His works are very numerous in portraits, and in historical and fancy subjects, chiefly after pictures by modern painters. He engraved, on a reduced scale, upwards of three hundred portraits and compositions by Sir Joshua Reynolds, which were published in three folio volumes. He also engraved many portraits of distinguished persons, after Dance, Northcote, Jackson, Edridge, Owen, Dawe, and Phillips. The best of these are Reginald Heber, Bishop of Calcutta, and other prelates of the English Church, after Owen; and Lady Georgiana Agar Ellis, after Jackson, which was intended as a pendant to the 'Chapeau de Poil,' also engraved by him after the picture by Rubens in the National Gallery. In 1826 he went to Paris, and during his stay there he engraved several plates after Horace Vernet, Géricault, Delaroche, and Dubufe. Reynolds was also a skilful draughtsman of landscape, and made numerous sketches in oil; of these there is a good example at South Kensington. He also gave lessons in drawing to the daughters of George III. The distinguished engraver, Samuel Cousins, was one of his pupils. He died in London in 1835. His second daughter, ELIZABETH, who married William Walker, the engraver, was a good painter of miniatures. The following are his chief plates:

- Jacob's Dream; after Salvator Rosa.
 Lot and his Daughters; after A. van der Werff.
 The Judgment of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; after Maria Cosway.

REYNOSA, ANTONIO GARCIA. See GARCIA REYNOSA.

REYNOUART, EDOUARD, a French landscape painter, born at Lille in 1802. He was a pupil of Liénard and Souchon. In 1842 he was appointed Director of the Lille Museum, in the administration of which he displayed great ability. He was an officer of the Legion of Honour. His works appeared but seldom at the Salon. He died at Lille, from the results of an accident, in 1879.

REYS, JENNY AUGUSTINE (née ALLAIS), born in Paris, 1798, a pupil of her mother and of Van Spaendonck, practised fruit and flower painting.

REYSSCHOOT, ANNE MARIE VAN, born at Ghent, 1758, the daughter of Emmanuel Reysschoot, and pupil of her brother Pieter Norbert. She married Egide Deginant, and practised to a very advanced age, painting genre pictures and bas-reliefs.

REYSSCHOOT, EMMANUEL PIETER VAN, painter, born at Ghent, 1713. In 1739 he became a member of the Corporation of Painters, and on the occasion of the sixth jubilee of St. Bernard, celebrated at the Abbey of Bandeloo, near Ghent, in 1753, he painted fourteen large pictures representing Christ, the Virgin, and the Twelve Apostles. He died in 1772.

REYSSCHOOT, F. VAN, a Dutch engraver of the 18th century, was probably related to the artists of the same name at Ghent. He engraved some small prints after Teniers, which are executed in a very neat and spirited manner.

REYSSCHOOT, PIETER JAN VAN, the brother of Emmanuel Reysschoot, was born at Ghent. He painted portraits and historical pictures, and visited England, where he remained for some time, from which circumstance he was known at home as 'The Englishman.' At Ghent, in the Augustine church, there are twelve 'Apostles' by him. He died at Ghent in 1772.

REYSSCHOOT, PIETER NORBERT VAN, painter, son of Emmanuel Pieter Reysschoot, born at Ghent, 1738, the pupil of his father and of his uncle, and first professor of perspective and architecture at the Academy at Ghent in 1770. Throughout East Flanders works by him are to be found in various churches and convents. In the church of St. Bavon, at Ghent, there are eleven paintings by him in imitation of bas-reliefs in white marble. He died in 1795.

REYTER. See REITER.

RHEEN, THEODORUS JUSTINUS, painter, an obscure artist, who practised at Amsterdam during the first half of the 18th century. When young he studied in Italy under Trevisani. He obtained a civil appointment in India, where he died.

RHEIN, NICOLAS, engraver and painter, born in 1767 at Vienna, was a pupil of Jacobé. He executed several good works in mezzotint, principally animal pieces; such as, 'The Lion lying in wait,' after a picture of his own; 'The Mad Bull,' after Casanova; 'The Eagle,' after Hamilton; 'The Tigress,' after Rubens; 'Hercules killing the Lion,' after Rubens; and 'The Waterfall,' after J. Verneet. He died in Vienna in 1819.

RHELINGER, WELSER, a native of Germany, executed a hundred and twenty wood-cuts, for a German book entitled, 'Patricium Stirpium, Augustanarum Vindelicum, et earundem sodalitatibus insignia.' The principal figures are all represented on horseback, completely armed, with the arms of their respective families on their shields.

RHENI, REMI VAN, a history painter, born at Brussels in 1560, travelled through Germany, and then became a pensioner of the Count de Volves. He died in 1619.

RHODEN, JOHANN MARTIN VON, landscape painter, born at Cassel in 1778 (1782), went to Rome in very early life, but returned in 1827 to his own country as court painter. After a stay of six years he returned to Rome, where he remained for the rest of his life. In his landscapes of Italian scenery he portrayed the vegetation in its full splendour. He also painted 'The Villa of Hadrian' and 'The Cloister of St. Benedict.' He died at Rome in 1868.

RHODES, JOHN, a landscape and animal painter, born at Leeds in 1809, son of JOSEPH RHODES, a self-taught artist, who died in 1854. He was brought up by his father, and painted rustic scenes and groups of cattle. He went to London, where he settled and, between 1832 and 1842, exhibited at the Royal Academy and the British Institution, but suffering from ill health, he returned to Leeds, where he died in December, 1842.

RHODES, RICHARD, an English line-engraver, born in 1765. He worked for many years for Charles Heath, and died in London in 1838. Specimens of his work are to be found in 'Ancient Terracottas in the British Museum' (1810).

RHOMBERG, HANNO, still-life painter, born at Munich in 1820, was the son of the historical painter, Joseph Anton Rhomberg, and received his first instruction from his father. He then entered the Munich Academy, and studied under Julius Schnorr. He did not remain there long, but took to painting portraits under Bernhardt, until a fourth master, Enhuber, induced him to try genre painting. The following pictures by him may be cited—'The Watchmaker,' in the Berlin National Gallery; 'The Boys going to School,' 'The Tight Boot,' and in the Pinakothek at Munich, 'The Sledge-Maker,' 'Two Boys trying to Smoke,' 'A Boy purchasing a Bird.' He died in 1869.

RHOMBERG, JOSEPH ANTON, an historical painter, born at Dornbirn in the Tyrol in 1786. Till he was twenty-two years of age he was employed in farming, but in 1808 he went to the Academy at Munich, and studied under Langer. In 1814, with his picture of 'The Sacrifice of Noah' he gained the first prize. He settled in Munich, and in 1827 was appointed professor of drawing at the Polytechnic School. His works show very plainly the influence of Langer. Among them may be named, 'Rebecca at the Well,' 'Abraham entertaining the Angels,' 'The Zither-Player.' He died at Munich in 1853.

RIBALTA, FRANCISCO DE, a Spanish painter, born at Castellon de la Plana between 1550 and 1560, was one of the greatest historical painters of Spain. He studied first in Valencia. His life affords a parallel to the courtship of Quentin Matsys. While a student he fell in love with his master's daughter, and demanded her in marriage, but her father refused his consent, alleging that he was not sufficiently advanced in his profession. Ribalta and his mistress, however, agreed privately to wait three or four years, and he immediately departed for Italy, with the determination of perfecting himself by the study of the works of the great masters there. He applied himself with great assiduity to those of Raphael, Sebastiano del Piombo, and the Carracci, and copied many of their pictures, particularly those of Sebastiano. He returned to his own country after an absence of three years, and the first place he visited was the atelier of his former master, the father of his mistress. Finding the sketch of a picture on the easel, he finished it and withdrew. On the return of the old painter he expressed much surprise at the excellence of the performance, and said to his daughter, "How readily would I give you to a painter of such ability as this, instead of that dauber Ribalta." "My father," replied the lady, "it is Ribalta that did it."

Ribalta acquired great reputation not only in Valencia, where his best works are to be found, but all over Spain. The College of Corpus Christi is a perfect Museum of Ribaltas, the gem of which is a 'Last Supper.' Ribalta also painted largely for the different churches and museums throughout Valencia. The Madrid Museum possesses by him 'The Body of Jesus Christ borne by two angels,' and a 'San Francisco de Assisi.' Besides these we may cite a 'Crucifixion,' the altar-piece in the chapel of Magdalen College, Oxford, a 'Conception' in S. Felipe Neri, and 'S. Antonius.' He died at Valencia in 1628.

RIBALTA, JUAN DE, the son of Francisco Ribalta, born at Valencia in 1597, was instructed by his father, and at the age of eighteen he painted a 'Crucifixion' which he inscribed "Joannes Ribalta pingebat et invenit 18 ætatis suæ anno 1615," a fine picture in composition, drawing, and colour. He painted for Don Diego de Vich above thirty portraits of illustrious persons in Valencia, which De Vich at his death bequeathed to the Monastery of St. Jerome. Of his other works we may name, a 'St. Cecilia' for the Monastery of La Murta, a 'Christ on the Cross' for the Dominicans of S. Catalina de Sena in Valencia. The Madrid Museum possesses pictures of SS. John, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, and a 'Singer with Music in his hand.' Juan di Ribalta died in 1628, the same year as his father.

RIBAUT, ATHALIE, was born in Paris 1781. She was a pupil of Lafitte, and practised portrait painting.

RIBAUT, JULIE, was born at Fresnay, France, in 1789, and was a pupil of Lafitte. She painted portraits and genre pictures, among which we may mention: 'Mignard painting Madame de Maintenon,' 'Piron at the Porte d'Auteuil.'

RIBAUT, J— F—, an historical engraver, was born in Paris in 1767. He was a scholar of Ingouff, and engraved 'Christ crowned with Thorns,' after Titian; 'Marcus Sextus,' after Guérin; also 'Paris and Cénone,' after Vander-Werff; 'A Young Lady playing on the Guitar,' after Metz, besides several other plates for the 'Collection du Musée Napoléon,' published by Laurent and Robillard. He also engraved the heads of Bernardin de St. Pierre, the poet Le Brun, the Empress Marie Louise; and a set of the costumes of the grand functionaries of the French court. Ribault died in 1820.

RIBERA, LUIZ A., painter, was practising at Seville in the second part of the 17th century. He was one of the artists who contributed in 1668 to the formation of the Seville Academy.

RIBERA Y FERNANDEZ, D. JUAN ANTONIO, painter, born at Madrid in 1779, first studied under Bayeu, and in the Academy of S. Fernando, but afterwards went to Paris and became the pupil of David. There he painted his 'Cincinnatus,' which is now in the Museum at Madrid. In course of time he went to Rome, and in 1811 was appointed painter to Carlos IV., and member of the Academy of St. Luke; and in 1820 honorary member of the Academy of S. Fernando. In 1838 he was made professor, and two years afterwards Director of the Madrid Museum. He died at Madrid in 1860. Of his pictures we may cite:

Aranjuez.	Palace.	Christ crowned with Thorns. The Resurrection.
Madrid.	Gallery.	Wamba. Allegory of Summer. Allegory of Autumn. Afternoon. Night.
"	Palace.	S. Fernando surrounded by distinguished Spaniards ( ceiling ).
Toledo.	Cathedral.	Portrait of Cardinal Ingranzo.

RIBERA, JOSEF or JUSEPE DE, called LO SPAGNOLETTO, painter and engraver, born January 12, 1588, at Xativa (now San Felipe), near Valencia, was the son of Luiz Ribera and of his wife Margarita. The Italians have claimed him as a compatriot, stating him to have been a native of Lecce in the kingdom of Naples. The fact of his true nationality has, however, long been established. On the 'Bacchus,' one of the finest of the few engravings by him still extant, is the following inscription: Joseph à Ribera, Hispano Valenti Setab. f. Partenop. 1628. His parents designed him for the profession of letters, and with this idea sent him to Valencia to acquire classical learning, but he there became acquainted with Francisco Ribalta, and abandoning all less congenial pursuits, devoted himself to the study of art under that master, with whom he made rapid progress. He then determined to visit Italy, and to become acquainted with the works of the great Italians. He arrived in Rome entirely without resources, and for a time endured many hardships, but was fortunate enough to attract the attention of a cardinal, who, admiring his talent, received him into his house. At Rome Ribera remained for some time studying under Caravaggio, whose system of chiaroscuro had peculiar attractions for him, and became one of the most distinguished disciples of that master. A rupture with his patron caused him to quit Rome, and he is said to have become a soldier, and to have experienced many strange vicissitudes, amongst others a period of captivity as a galley-slave in Algeria. At Parma he studied for some time, and in his early works we may distinctly trace the influence of Correggio, and of other northern masters; but the rugged naturalism of Caravaggio was the element in which he truly delighted, and, abandoning the softer manner of his early efforts, he finally became the leader of the 'Naturalisti,' the eccentric school of realistic painters most sharply opposed to the graceful eclecticism of the Carracci.

From Rome and Parma Ribera passed to Naples, the scene of his greatest activity and of his highest fortunes. He became acquainted with a rich picture-dealer of the city, whose daughter he married, and thus he found himself relieved from all pecuniary embarrassments. At this period the 'Naturalisti' enjoyed an almost undisputed supremacy in Naples, would tolerate no intruders in their stronghold, and waged war against every follower of the Carracci who came within their reach. Ribera, to his discredit, took an active part in the persecution with which his party assailed the eclectics, Guido Reni, Domenico, and Gessi, resulting in the expulsion of these artists from the city. The rulers of Naples in the early part of the 17th century being Spanish, Ribera naturally enjoyed a large share of favour; he was appointed court painter to the Viceroy, the Duke of Osuna, and, on a second visit, was patronized by his successor, the Count de Monterey, who recommended him to Philip IV. In 1630 he became a member of the Academy of St. Luke, and in 1644 he received the decoration of the Order of Christ from the Pope.

The final abandonment of his early style may be broadly said to date from his establishment at Naples. His conceptions became gradually more and more marked by a wild extravagance of fancy and by a stern vigour of execution. His skill in managing violent contrasts of light and shade is very remarkable, but as a colourist he is forceful rather than fine. His large historical pictures, in spite of great merits in execution, are generally terrible and repulsive, and his rendering of mythological subjects is deficient in beauty and dignity. He delighted in the delineation of emaciated figures, of flayings and scourgings, of scenes of torture and death. He was much patronized by the clergy, especially by the Jesuits, and painted many important works for churches and religious houses. The Madrid Gallery contains a large number of his works, and there are good examples in the most important public collections, the 'Pietà' in the National Gallery being excellent in quality. His colour darkens very much with age. Ribera had many pupils, among the more famous of whom are Salvator Rosa, Giordano, Falcone, and Giovanni Dô. His daughter, MARIA BLANCA, who was frequently his model, also practised painting. It has been asserted that her father's death was caused by grief at her seduction by Don John of Austria, but there seems to be no solid ground for the statement. Ribera died at Naples in 1656. The following is a list of his principal works:

RIBERA, JUAN VICENTE, a Spanish painter, practising at Madrid in the early part of the 18th century. He was one of the artists appointed by the Council of Castile in 1725 to tax pictures. He painted the pendentives of the cupola in the church of S. Felipe el Real, and is further known by two scenes from the life of S. Francis de Paul in the church of la Victoria, and a 'Martyrdom of S. Justus.'

RIBET, JEAN CONSTANTIN, marine painter, practised in France in the early part of the 19th century. He was a pupil of Forestier. There is by him a picture representing the taking of the two English frigates the 'Fox' and the 'Piedmontese' by the French vessels 'Venus' and 'Bellona.'

RIBOLT, WILHELM WILKEN, a Danish painter, practising in Germany about 1700. At Copenhagen there is by him a 'Group of Warriors seated and preparing to drink.'

RIBON, FR. M., painter, was born in Paris, 1790. He was a pupil of Baltz, and painted principally upon china.

RICAMATORE, IL. See NANNI.

RICARD, LOUIS GUSTAVE, portrait painter, was born at Marseilles in 1824, studied at Marseilles under Auber until 1844, but afterwards in Paris under Coignet. In the same year he exhibited a portrait of Mme. Sabatier at the Salon, which made a considerable sensation. He copied much in the Louvre. In 1847 he visited Rome, Florence, and Venice, where he studied and copied Titian. Later on he came to England. In 1850 he painted a 'Gipsy Girl with a Cat,' which attracted attention at the Salon, and for the next nine years Ricard was a constant exhibitor. After 1861, however, he appeared no more until 1872, when he sent a portrait of Paul de Musset. His art, however, was unfitted to the crowd and glare of the Salon. Quiet and refined in effect, almost to excess, it had much affinity, technically, with that of Prud'hon. His portraits were popular. In 1863 the Cross of the Legion was offered him; "It is too late," he replied, and remained undecorated till his death, which took place in 1873, in Paris. Among his works we may name:

Paris. Luxembourg. Portrait of Paul de Musset.

The German Student.

RICCA, BERNARDO, painter, a native of Cremona, where he was painting in the cathedral about 1512.

RICCARDI, LUIGI, a marine painter, born in 1807, whose pictures were painted rather for artificial effects than with a due regard for truth to nature. He was a professor at the Brera. He died at Milan in 1877.

RICCHI, PIETRO, called IL LUCCHESE, painter, born at Lucca in 1606, was first a scholar of Passignano, but afterwards studied under Guido Reni. He imitated the grace of the latter, though his colouring resembles that of Passignano. In the church of St. Francesco, at Lucca, there are two altar-pieces, which evince the fertility of his invention and his readiness of hand. He also painted several pictures for the churches at Udine. There is a picture of his in the Dresden Gallery representing the 'Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine.' He painted in France, and in the Milanese and Venetian states, and was very rapid and indefatigable in execution. Ricchi died at Udine in 1675.

RICCHIEDEO, MARCO, was born at Brescia, but it is not known in what year, nor under whom he studied. He was, however, a very reputable historical painter. In the church of St. Thomas, in his native city, there is a fine picture of the Incredulity of that saint by him.

RICCHINO, FRANCESCO, painter, a native of Brescia. He flourished about 1568. He imitated the style of Moretto, but was also greatly influenced by Titian.

RICCI, ANTONIO, called BARBALUNGA, painter, born at Messina in 1600, studied under Domenico Zampieri, and was reckoned among the best painters of his country. Among his pictures are, 'St. Gregory,' in San Gregorio, and an 'Assumption,' in S. Michele in Messina, and an altar-piece in the church of S. Sylvester in Capite in Rome. He died at Messina in 1649.

RICCI, CAMILLO, born at Ferrara in 1580, was the best pupil of Ippolito Scarsella, called Lo Scarsellino. Such was his progress that Baruffaldi reports Scarsellino to have declared that if Camillo had preceded him in the art, he would have chosen him for his instructor. The style of Ricci is very like that of his master, but with less freedom and breadth. In the general harmony of his colouring, however, he has perhaps surpassed him. The churches of Ferrara abound in his works, of which Barotti gives a particular account in his 'Pittura di Ferrara.' His best productions are his 'S. Vincenzo' and 'S. Margherita,' in the cathedral; an 'Annunciation,' in Spirito Santo; and his ceiling in the church of S. Niceolo, representing, in eighty-four compartments, the life and miracles of that saint. Ricci died at Ferrara in 1618.

RICCI, DOMENICO DEL. See DEL RICCIO.

RICCI, FELICE DEL. See DEL RICCIO.

RICCI, GIOVANNI BATISTA, called DA NOVARRA, born at Novarra in 1545, went to Rome when young, and became a scholar and imitator of Raffaellino da Reggio. According to Baglione, he was employed by Sixtus V. in the palace of S. Giovanni Laterano, and in the library of the Vatican. He was afterwards appointed by that pontiff superintendent of paintings in the palace of Mente Cavallo. He was also much employed by Clement VIII. Of his own productions in the public edifices of Rome, the following are the most considerable:—in the nave of the church of S. Maria Maggiore, he painted in fresco the 'Visitation,' the 'Ascension,' and the 'Assumption of the Virgin'; in S. Marcello, a series of frescoes from the Life of the Virgin and the Passion of our Saviour; but his best work is the 'Consecration of the Basilica of San Giovanni Laterano by S. Silvestro,' in that church. Giambattista Ricci is mentioned in the Abecedario by Orlandi, as an engraver, but none of his works are specified. He died in 1620.

RICCI, MARCO, the nephew of Sebastiano Ricci, was born at Belluno in 1680. After receiving his first instruction in art from his uncle, he visited Rome, where he was for some years occupied in drawing the most picturesque views in the neighbourhood, and the most remarkable fragments of ancient architecture. From these designs he painted perspective views, which were greatly admired. In 1710 he came to England, and his talents soon excited attention. His landscapes, with ruins and architecture, are to be found in many collections. There are several landscapes of his in the Dresden Gallery. Marco Ricci etched several plates from his own designs, consisting of views and landscapes, with ruins and figures, of which the most deserving of notice are those in a set of twenty-three prints, entitled 'Varia Marci Ricci Pictoris præstantissimi experimenta ab ipsomet auctore inventa, delineata atque incisa, et a me Carolo Orsolini Veneto incisore in unum collecta, &c. Anno 1730, Venetiis.'

RICCI, NATALE, painter, a pupil of Maratti, and a native of Fermo. He practised in Italy in the 18th century.

RICCI, PIETRO, painter of portraits and historical pictures, a pupil of Leonardo da Vinci. He practised at Milan in the 16th century.

RICCI, SEBASTIANO, (RIZZI), born at Belluno, in the Venetian state, in 1662, was placed when he was young under Federigo Cervelli, at Venice, with whom he studied till he was twenty years of age. On leaving that master he went to Bologna, where he resided a short time, and was taken under the protection of the Duke of Parma, who employed him for some time at Piacenza, and then sent him to Rome for improvement. On the death of his patron Ricci left Rome, and visited Florence, Modena, and Parma, studying the great masters of the Lombard school. He was soon afterwards invited to the court of Vienna by the King of Rome, where he was employed in decorating the imperial palace of Schoenbrunn. On his return to Venice from Germany, his nephew, Marco Ricci, who was at that time in London, encouraged him to visit England, which he did, and met with the most flattering encouragement. He painted the chapel at Bulstrode, for the Duke of Portland; and in the altar-piece, representing the Last Supper, he introduced his own portrait in modern dress. The hall of Burlington House, and some of the ceilings, and the altar-piece in the chapel of Chelsea Hospital, were also painted by him. During a residence of ten years in this country, he executed several other considerable works for the mansions of the nobility, and is said to have left England in disgust, on finding that it was determined that Sir James Thornhill should paint the cupola of St. Paul's. Like Luca Giordano, Ricci had a great facility in imitating the styles of other masters. His picture of the 'Apostles adoring the Sacrament,' in the church of S. Giustina, at Padua, is painted in imitation of the cupola of S. Giovanni, at Parma, by Correggio; and his 'S. Gregorio,' in S. Alessandro, at Bergamo, recalls the works of Guercino. But his most successful imitations were those of Paolo Veronese, many of which he is said to have sold as by that master. He is said to have deceived the French painter, La Fosse, who avenged himself by the sarcastic rebuke: "For the future," said he, "take my advice, paint no more Riccis." Sebastiano possessed a fertile invention, and a commanding facility. Although his design is often incorrect, his figures are graceful, and his colour, though sometimes feeble and cold, is often silvery and agreeable. Some of his very best productions are at Hampton Court. He died at Belluno in 1734. The following are his best pictures:

Bordeaux.	Museum.	Love and Fidelity.
Dresden.	Gallery.	The Ascension.
"	"	A Sacrifice.
Florence.	Uffizi.	His own Portrait.
Hampton Court.	Palace.	The Continence of Scipio.
"	"	The Dinner at Simon's House.
London.	"	Venus and Satyrs ( unimportant ).
Modena.	Nat. Gall.	The taking down from the Cross.
Paris.	Louvre.	Allegorical subject. France as Minerva trampling Ignorance underfoot.
"	"	The Delivery of the Keys.
"	"	Polyxena sacrificed to the Manes of Achilles.
"	"	The Continence of Scipio.
Venice.	Duc Pal.	The Venetian Magistrates revering the Body of St. Mark.

RICCI, UBALDO, an historical painter of some merit, a native of Fermo, practising in Italy in the 18th century. He was a pupil of C. Maratti.

RICCIANTI, ANTONIO, an obscure Italian historical painter of the 17th century. He practised in Florence and its neighbourhood, and was a pupil of V. Dandini.

RICCIARDELLI, GABRIELE, marine and landscape painter, practising in Italy about 1743. He was a pupil of J. F. Van Bloemen (called Orizonte), and was employed at Naples, at the court of Charles de Bourbon.

RICCIARELLI, DANIELE, commonly called DANIELE DA VOLTERRA, born at Volterra in 1509, was first a pupil of Giovanni Antonio Bazzi, called

Il Sodoma, but afterwards studied under Baldasare Peruzzi. Not meeting with the encouragement he expected in his native city, he went to Rome, and at first found employment as assistant to Pierino del Vaga, in the Vatican, and in the Capella Massimi, in the church of La Trinità de Monti. He was, however, chiefly indebted for the reputation he afterwards acquired to the friendship and instruction of Michelangelo Buonarroti, who assisted him with designs for work he executed for Agostino Chigi, in the Farnesina, and for others of his more important productions. But the chief support of his fame is the series of frescoes in the Capella Orsini, in the Trinità de Monti, which occupied him seven years. In these he was also aided by Buonarroti. The principal picture of the series is the famous 'Descent from the Cross,' which used to be considered the finest picture in Rome after Raphael's 'Transfiguration' and Domenichino's 'St. Jerome.' In another chapel of the same church are the 'Assumption of the Virgin' and the 'Presentation in the Temple,' painted from the designs of Ricciarelli by his disciples Gio. Paolo Rossetti and Michele Alberti. After the death of Pierino del Vaga, in 1547, Daniele was appointed by Pope Paul III., on the recommendation of Michelangelo, Superintendent over the works at the Vatican, and commissioned to finish the ornaments of the Sala Regia, which had been begun by Pierino. His last great work as a painter was his 'Murder of the Innocents,' for the church of St. Peter, at Volterra, which was afterwards purchased by the Grand Duke Leopold, and placed in the tribune at Florence. On the death of Pope Paul III., in 1549, Julius III. deprived Daniels of his post as Superintendent and of his pension, and it appears that the latter part of his life was chiefly devoted to sculpture. Daniele earned the nickname of Il Bragghetone, or the Breeches-maker, through being employed by Pope Paul IV. to put draperies on some of the nude figures in Michelangelo's 'Last Judgment.' Daniele died at Rome in 1566. His principal pictures are:

Florence.	Tribune of the Uffizi.	Massacre of the Innocents.
Lucca.	Duomo.	S. Petronilla. ( A graceful figure, ascribed to Ricciarelli in his first maturity. )
Paris.	Louvre.	David's Victory over Goliath. ( A double picture, on the two sides of a slate; it was long ascribed to Michelangelo. )
Rome.	S. Trinità de' Monti.	Scenes from the Life of the Virgin.
"	"	The Descent from the Cross. ( Fresco transferred to canvas. )
"	Farnesina.	The Triumph of Bacchus.
"	"	Frescoes. The Punic Wars.
"	St. Pietro in Montorio.	The Baptism of Christ.

RICCIO, ANTONELLO, the son, and probably the pupil, of Mariano Riccio, whose manner he followed. He was still living in 1576.

RICCIO (BRUSASORCI). See DEL RICCIO.

RICCIO, IL. See NERONI.

RICCIO, MARIANO, historical painter, born at Messina, 1510. He was a pupil of Franco, and afterwards of Polidoro, whose style he successfully imitated.

RICCIO, PIETRO. See PEDRINI, GIOVANNI.

RICCIOLINI, NICCOLA, painter, born at Rome, 1637, was a pupil of P. de Cortona. He competed against Franceschini with cartoons for the Vatican mosaics. At Rome there are by him a 'Crucifixion of St. Peter' (in mosaic) and a 'Descent from the Cross.'

RICCIOLINO, MICHELANGELO, was born at Rome in 1654, and is noticed by Abate Titi, who mentions some of his works in the public places at Rome, particularly in the church of S. Lorenzo in Piscibus, and a ceiling in S. Maria in Campitelli. His portrait painted by himself is in the Florentine Gallery. He died at Rome in 1715.

RICCO, BERNARDO. See RICCA, BERNARDO.

RICHARD, CHARLOTTE JOSEPHINE, a painter of portraits and subject pictures, born in Paris, 1791, was a pupil of Chaudet and of Ducq.

RICHARD, FLEURY FRANÇOIS, painter of historical and genre pictures, born at Lyons, 25th February, 1777, was a pupil of David, and afterwards founded a school of his own at Lyons, where he died, 1842. By him we have the following:

Vert-vert (in the Museum of Lyons).

Valentina of Milan bewailing the Death of her Husband.

King Francis and his Sister, Margaret of Navarre

(engraved by Boucher Desnoyer).

Charles VII. writing his last Farewell to Agnes Sorel. Tasso in Prison.

RICHARD, Monsieur. See TAURIN.

RICHARD, —, painter upon glass, executed, in 1270, the fine paintings upon glass for the choir of the cathedral at Tours.

RICHARD, THÉODORE, landscape painter, born at Milhau, 1782, was a pupil of Victor Bertin. He was appointed chief of the lands department in Cantal in 1802, and filled similar offices until 1819, in which year he was at Bordeaux. There he made the acquaintance of the young Brascassat, and painted in his company with such success that in 1823 he resigned his appointments as an engineer, and set up as a painter at Toulouse. Thence he sent his pictures yearly to the Salon. He passed through the various degrees of honour up to the Cross of the Legion. He died in 1859 at Toulouse, where the following works by him are to be found in the Museum:

View of the Pic du Midi.

The Woodcutters.

The Drinking Place.

A Study of Oaks.

RICHARDS, JOHN INIGO, an English landscape painter, born in the first half of the 18th century. On the foundation of the Royal Academy, he became one of the original members, and in 1788 was appointed its secretary. He contributed to its exhibitions from 1769 to 1809. His pictures were chiefly representations of English mediæval ruins. He was best known as a scene-painter, working at Covent Garden Theatre, and in this branch of art he obtained a great reputation. Hearne and McArdell both worked after him, and one of his scenes for the 'Maid of the Mill' was engraved by Woollett, and won great popularity. Richards repaired the famous cartoon of a 'Holy Family,' by Leonardo da Vinci, which belongs to the Royal Academy. He died in his rooms at the Academy in 1810.

RICHARDSON, JONATHAN, portrait painter, born in 1665. His father dying when he was only five years of age, his mother married a second time, and he was, contrary to his inclination, articulated to his father-in-law, who was a scrivener; but the death of the latter enabled him, in the sixth year of his apprenticeship, to indulge an inclination he had long felt for painting, and to become a pupil of John Riley, under whom he studied four years. Having made considerable progress in art, he married the niece of his instructor, and established himself as a portrait painter. Though Kneller and Dahl were then in great vogue, Richardson possessed sufficient merit to secure a share of the public favour even during their lives, and after their death he was considered at the head of his profession. He continued in enjoyment of his popularity for many years, and was enabled to retire long before his death. But Richardson is best known as a writer upon art. He published the following works: 1. 'The Theory of Painting.' 2. 'The Connoisseur, an Essay on the whole Art of Criticism, as it relates to Painting.' And, 3. 'An account of some of the Statues, Bas-reliefs, Drawings, and Pictures in Italy, &c., with remarks by Mr. Richardson, sen. and jun.' The son made the journey, and from his notes, letters, and observations the two, on his return, compiled the work. In 1734 they also published 'Explanatory Notes and Remarks on Milton's Paradise Lost, with the Life of the Author, and a Discourse on the Poem.' Richardson died in London in 1745. His pictures are of the solid, steady-going, heavy-handed kind, and scarcely deserve the oblivion into which they have sunk. A head, apparently of Gay, in the National Gallery, seems to be a more than usually excellent work by Richardson. Works:

London. Nat. Port. Gall. Portrait of Mr. Oldfield.

" " " " Alexander Pope.

" " " " Matthew Prior.

" " " " Sir R. Steele.

" " " " Lord Chancellor

Talbot.

" " " " George Vertue.

RICHARDSON, JONATHAN, the only son of the last named, was born in 1694. He painted only as an amateur, but, having been blessed with a good education, he assisted his father in his literary productions. His portrait of Matthew Prior has been engraved. He died in London in 1771.

RICHARDSON, THOMAS MILES, an English landscape painter in oil and water-colours, born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1784. His father was master of the St. Andrew's Grammar School. His early years were passed in a variety of occupations: engraving, cabinet-making, and teaching (in 1806 he was named successor to his father at the school) occupied him successively till 1813, when he devoted himself entirely to art. In the following year he commenced exhibiting at the Academy, and his works also appeared at the British Institution. Subsequently he joined the New Water-Colour Society. The subjects of his pictures were mainly taken from the northern counties, and won him a wide reputation. In 1816 he began to publish, in conjunction with a partner, a work on Newcastle and its neighbourhood, with illustrations in aquatint, but only a few numbers were issued. In 1833 he began, in partnership with his brother, the publication of 'The Castles of the English and Scottish Borders,' with mezzotint plates engraved by himself. This enterprise also stopped short of completion. His work in water-colour shows very great talent. His life was chiefly spent at Newcastle, where he died in 1848. Amongst his works are:

Dublin. National Gallery. River Scene.

Liverpool. Corporation Gall. Scene between Chamouni and the Tête Noire.

" " " Lago Maggiore.

Newcastle. Town-Hall. View of Newcastle.
South Kensington. Museum. Ben Lomond.

RICHART. See DE LA MARE-RICHART.

RICHARTE, ANTONIO, born at Yecla in 1690, was educated for a learned profession, but he preferred painting, which he studied under Senen Vila at Morcia, and afterwards at Madrid with one of the Menendez. He was very popular at Valencia, where he was much employed in painting professional banners for the Guild of that city. He died in 1764.

RICHE, AÐÈLE, born in Paris, 1791. She was a pupil of G. Van Spaendonck and of Van Dael, and painted flowers in water-colour.

RICHE, —, probably RENIER LA RICHE, a French painter, practising at the Hague at the beginning of the 18th century. He was a pupil of Th. Van der Schuur.

RICHIER, DIDIER, or DIDIER DE VIE, painter, practising in Lorraine in the latter part of the 16th century. He studied in Italy, and finally established himself at Nancy, where he became known chiefly as a skilful painter of armour. His son, PIERRE, was also a painter.

RICHIERI, ANTONIO, a native of Ferrara, born in 1600, was brought up in the school of Giovanni Lanfranco. According to Passeri, he followed that master to Naples and Rome, and painted some frescoes at the Teatini from the designs of Lanfranco. He is said to have etched some plates from the designs of his master.

RICHMANS. See RYKMAN.

RICHMOND, THOMAS, an English miniature painter, born at Kew in 1771. He studied under G. Engleheart, and at the St. Martin's Lane Academy. Many of his works appeared at the Royal Academy between 1795 and 1825, and were held in some repute. He died in London in 1837. He was the father of Mr. George Richmond, R.A., and of Thomas Richmond, junior.

RICHMOND, THOMAS, the son of the last-named, was born in London, 16th September, 1802. He acquired the rudiments of art from his father, and in 1820 entered as a student of the Royal Academy, where he distinguished himself by the refinement of his drawings from the antique. After a period of study in Paris he established himself as a portraitist in oil and water-colour in the north of England. In 1841 he went to Rome, where he became the close friend of Joseph Severn and John Ruskin. Returning to England, he continued to paint portraits for a time in London, but finally migrated to Cumberland, where he purchased a small property. He died at Keswick on November 13th, 1874. From 1822 to 1860 he was an exhibitor at the Academy and with the Society of British Artists.

RICHOMME, JOSEPH THEODORE, a very eminent engraver, was born in Paris in 1785, and was first a scholar of Regnault, the painter, and afterwards of J. J. Coigny, the engraver. He obtained the grand prix of the Institute for the best engraving in 1806, and his later career did not falsify the promise then given. Richomme died in 1849. His works class with those of the best modern engravers of Italy. Among them may be specified.

The Triumph of Galatea; after Raphael.

The Five Saints; after the same.

The Holy Family; after the same.

Adam and Eve; after the same.

Neptune and Amphitrite; after Giulio Romano.

Venus at the Bath; after the Antique.

Andromache; after Guérin.

Thetis crowning Vasco de Gama; after Gérard.

RICHTER, ADOLPH, painter, born at Thorn in 1816, studied at the Academy in Düsseldorf from 1835 to 1843, in which city he established himself. His paintings are simple, but show the effects of careful study. The best are, 'Christmas Eve,' 'The Return of the Reservist,' 'The Village School.' He died at Düsseldorf in 1852.

RICHTER, ADRIAN LUDWIG, painter and engraver, was born at Dresden, September 28, 1803. His education in art was received from his father, Karl August, who meant his son to be an engraver, like himself. Adrian's inclination towards painting was, however, very strong, and he would have indulged it from the first had his domestic surroundings been less unfavourable. He was also much attracted by the works of Chodowiecki, which had some influence on his after practice. He helped his father for a time in his engraving, particularly on a series of views in Dresden and the neighbourhood; but a wider horizon was opened to him by his acquaintance with Dahl, Friedrich, and Carus, and by a journey through France to Nice, in company with Prince Narischkin, in 1820. Shortly afterwards he made a tour among the Alps, and with the money he obtained from the resulting sketches, he contrived to visit Italy. This was in 1823. In Rome he made many useful friends, and painted his first oil picture. In 1826 he was again at Dresden, and soon after became a master in the drawing school attached to the porcelain factory at Meissen. In 1836 he was appointed professor at the Dresden 'Academie,' where he introduced the fashion of combining genre with landscape. The first thing to make his name popular, however, was the series of illustrations from German life, scenery, and literature, which he furnished to the wood engravers from 1835 onwards. During his later years he was troubled by a weakness of the eyes, and in 1876 he retired from his official duties, being granted a pension by the emperor. Richter died at Dresden, June 19, 1884. His oil pictures are few, and mostly belong to his early period. The following may be named:

Berlin.	Museum.	Landscape (Riesengebirge).
Dresden.	Gallery.	Landscape with a Wedding.
"	"	Ferry at the Schreckenstein.
Leipsic.	Museum.	Five Landscapes.

He produced many water-colour drawings and designs for illustration: he also etched no less than 238 plates, among which a series of 70 views in the neighbourhood of Dresden may be named as perhaps the best.

RICHTER, AUGUST, painter, born at Dresden, 1801. In 1824 he was practising at Düsseldorf, and associated himself with Cornelius, one of whose designs he carried out in fresco at Helldorf. Towards the end of his life he became insane. He died at Pirna in 1873. His best-known works are engraved:

Jacob's Blessing.

Hagar in the Desert.

The Unbelief of St. Thomas.

RICHTER, CAROLINE THERÈSE, flower and genre painter, born at Dresden in 1777, was a pupil of Caroline Friedrich. In the Dresden Gallery are two pictures by her: 'A Carp with a Vase of Flowers,' and 'Two Squirrels, a branch of a Nut Tree, Stag's Horns,' &c. She died at Dresden in 1865.

RICHTER, CHRISTIAN, was a native of Stockholm, and came to England in 1702, where he painted portraits both in oil and in miniature; chiefly studying the works of Michael Dahl, from which he learned a vigorous manner of colouring. In the latter part of his life he turned to enamelling, but died in 1732 before he had made much progress in that branch of art.

RICHTER, DAVID, a Swedish painter, born 1661. He practised at Vienna. There are two landscapes by him in the Gallery of that city, and at Stockholm a portrait of the sculptor Casanova (?). He died 1735.

RICHTER, EMIL THEODOR, landscape painter, born at Berlin in 1801, painted landscapes, ill-drawn but bright in colour, among which were a 'Woodland Scene with Deer,' and pictures of Italian scenery. He died at Munich in 1878.

RICHTER GUSTAV, painter, born at Berlin, August 31, 1823. He studied first at Berlin, and in 1844—1846 was the pupil of Cogniet in Paris. He made numerous journeys to France and Italy, and in 1861 was commissioned by the King of Bavaria to visit Egypt, to make sketches for pictures of the Pyramids, which were destined for the 'Maximilianeum' at Munich. He had previously to this attracted considerable attention by his 'Raising of Jairus' Daughter' (1856), and by his decoration in stereo-chrome, at the New Museum of Berlin, 'Baldu and the Valkyri.' He was member, and later professor, of the Berlin Academy, and member of the Academies of Munich and Vienna, and received medals at Berlin, Vienna, Paris, Brussels, and Philadelphia. His works, which are very popular, have become widely known both in Europe and America, by chromos. He executed a few lithographs. He died on April 3, 1884. The following are good examples of his art:

Jairus' Daughter. (Berlin National Gallery.) 1856.
The Egyptian Maiden.
The Odalisque.
The Neapolitan Fisher-Boy.
Gipsies of the Crimea.
Two portraits of the Emperor William. 1877.
Portrait of the Empress Augusta. 1878.
Portrait of the Princess Karolath. 1872.
Portrait of Queen Louisa of Prussia. (Painted in 1879 for the Cologne Museum.)
Portrait of the Duchess of Edinburgh.
Portrait of Sultan Abdul Medschid.
His own Family.

RICHTER, HENRY J., a 'subject painter in water-colours, born in 1772. He was of German extraction, and practised in London, where he occasionally exhibited at the Academy from 1788. His works chiefly appeared at the Water-Colour Society, of which he was a member, intermittently, from 1813 to his death. In 1813 his picture of 'Christ giving sight to the Blind' was bought by the British Institution for 500 guineas. He published a work on the application to art of Kant's philosophy; it was entitled 'Daylight, a Recent Discovery in the Art of Painting, with hints on the Philosophy of the Fine Arts and on that of the Human Mind, as first dissected by Emanuel Kant.' He died in London in 1857. Some of his pictures attained considerable popularity. Amongst them were:

The Rod.
The Tight Shoe.
School in an Uproar.
A Brute of a Husband.

RICHTER, JOHANN HEINRICH, painter, born at Coblenz, 1803. He began his career as a goldsmith, but soon devoted himself to painting, and after studying in Paris under Girodet-Trioson and Gérard, he established himself as a portrait painter at Munich. In 1832 he went to Italy, where he remained for three years, and during that period painted several scenes from Italian life. Returning to Munich he resumed the practice of portrait painting. He died at Coblenz in 1845. Among his works we may mention:

Portrait of King Otho of Greece.
Portrait of the Hereditary Grand Duchess Matilda of Darmstadt.
Roman Girl in a Landscape.

RICHTER, KARL AUGUST, a German draughtsman and engraver, was born at Dresden in 1776. He was a pupil of Zingg, whose style he followed faithfully. Many of Richter's productions were published under Zingg's name, when the latter became enfeebled by age, and unable to fulfil his commissions. Richter was the first teacher of his son, Adrian Ludwig. Among his works we may name:

Landscape; after Ruissdael.
Landscape; after Swanevelt.
Dresden from the Bautzener Strasse.
" " Moreau's Monument.
A Series of Views in the Neighbourhood of Dresden.

RICKARDS, SAMUEL, a miniature painter, who practised in London in the latter part of the 18th century, and exhibited with the Society of Artists, the Free Society, and the Royal Academy between 1768 and 1781.

RICKE. See RYCKE, VAN.

RICO, ANDREA, a Greek painter, of the island of Candia, practising in the first years of the 12th century. He was one of the first artists who sent works into Italy. At Florence, in the Uffizi, there is a 'Virgin and Infant Christ surrounded by Angels holding the Emblems of the Passion,' by him. It is signed Andreas Rico di Candia pinxit.

RICCOIS, FRANÇOIS EDMÉ, painter, born at Courtalin. He was a pupil of J. V. Bertin, and painted landscapes in the early years of the present century, amongst which we may mention a 'View in the Bernese Oberland,' and a 'View of Montreuil.'

RIDINGER, JOHAN ELIAS, (RIEDINGER), animal painter and engraver, born at Ulm in Suabia in 1695 or 1698, received his first instruction from Christopher Resch, in Ulm, and then studied under Falk and Rugendas in Augsburg. He had been brought up a huntsman, and applied himself to the illustration of animal life and of the modes of the chase. In 1759 he became director of the Art Academy in Augsburg, where he established himself. His works as a painter are few, and but little known; but in his etchings from his own pictures he displays ability of an uncommon kind. His sons, MARTIN ELIAS and JOHANN JAKOB, assisted him in his work. The number of his prints is very great; they are very unequal in quality. He died at Augsburg in 1767. The following are among the best of his plates:

A set of twelve plates of the Creation.
A set of Heads of Wolves and Foxes.
Four plates of Boar-hunts.
A set of sixteen plates representing the mode of hunting different animals in Germany, with inscriptions in German and French.

Eighteen plates of Horsemanship.
Thirteen plates of various Wild Beasts.
A Lion-hunt; after Rubens; for the 'Dresden Gallery.'

RIDLEY, WILLIAM, an English engraver, born in 1764. He had a considerable practice in illustrations for books, and some of his best work is to be found in the 'Evangelical Magazine.' He retired to Addlestone, where he died in 1838.

RIDOLFI, CAVALIERE CARLO, born at Vicenza in 1602, was instructed in art by Antonio Vassilacchi, called l'Aliense, but afterwards studied the works of the best masters at Verona and Vicenza. Little is known of his work as a painter, but Lanzi mentions, as his best performance, the 'Visitation of the Virgin' in the church of the Ognissanti at Venice. He also painted portraits and easel pictures for private collections. He is more distinguished as a writer on art than as a painter, and was the author of the well-known two volumes, published at Venice in 1648, entitled, 'Le Maraviglie dell' arte, ovvero le Vite degl' illustri pittori Veneti, e dello Stato.' These are written with a directness and simplicity which was very rare in the literature of the time, and form a valuable contribution to art history. The good sense and freedom from manner they display were also the ruling notes of Ridolfi's works as a painter. He died in 1658, according to an epitaph quoted by Zanetti in his 'Guide to Venice' (1723), but 1660 is the date more usually given.

RIDOLFI, CLAUDIO, was born at Verona in 1560, and was for some time a scholar of Dario Pozzo, a painter of little celebrity; but he afterwards entered the school of Paolo Veronese. As Venice was at that time the residence of a great number of eminent artists, he went to Rome in search of employment. Not meeting with the success he expected in that capital, he visited Urbino, where the works of Federigo Baroccio were then held in the highest estimation. He formed an intimacy with that artist, and, with the advantage of his instruction and advice, acquired the graceful style by which he was afterwards distinguished. Ridolfi resided several years at Corinaldo, in the March of Ancona, where he painted many pictures for the churches of that town and its vicinity. Of his works at Urbino, the most esteemed are the 'Birth of St. John the Baptist,' in S. Lucia; and the 'Presentation in the Temple,' in Spirito Santo. At Rimini there is a fine 'Deposition from the Cross' by Ridolfi. He also painted portraits. He died in 1644.

RIDOLFI, MICHELE, painter, born in Lucca in 1795. Studied in Rome in 1813 and following years, helped and encouraged by the German artists, principally Cornelius and Overbeck, who taught him to respect the masters of the 15th century, as well as the works of Raphael. His principal picture, the 'First Council of the Apostles under the Presidency of St. Peter,' shows much breadth and power of characterization. For his 'Enthroned Madonna' he received two gold medals and a crown of laurel from the Pope. He restored Aspertini's frescoes in a chapel of S. Frediano at Lucca with great skill. Ridolfi was an honorary member of the Dresden Academy. He died at Lucca in 1854.

RIDOLFI, PIETRO, an Italian engraver, who flourished about the year 1710, is known for a frontispiece which he engraved from a design by C. N. Lamparel, affixed to a volume containing views of ancient and modern Rome, published at Venice in 1716. It is executed in a style resembling that of Cornelis Bloemaert, though very inferior in merit.

RIEBENSTEIN. See RUBINSTEIN.

RIEDEL, ANTON HEINRICH, painter, son of Johann Anton Riedel, was born at Dresden in 1763. He painted portraits, and was also, like his father, an engraver. Died after 1809.

RIEDEL, AUGUST HEINRICH, (or JOSEPH,) painter, born at Bayreuth, Dec. 27, 1802. His father, KARL CHRISTIAN, was an architect, who, however, occasionally practised painting. The younger Riedel studied for a time under Langer, at the Munich Academy, but in 1828 he went to Rome, where he settled, and became a member of the Academy of St. Luke. From this time he adopted a very different style of painting. He was one of the first of the modern Germans to concern himself with colour. His works are also distinguished by various effects of light and sunshine, with which he was very successful. Riedel died at Rome on the 8th of August, 1883. The following are among his best-known pictures:

Sakuntala. } (In the possession of the King of A Roman Woman. } Wurtemberg.)
Women of Albano. (Berlin National Gallery.)
Girls Bathing (the same).

Medea. (In the Stuttgart Gallery.)
The Neapolitan Mother.

Many of the above have been rendered popular by engravings and lithographs.

RIEDEL, GOTTFRIED FRIEDRICH, born at Dresden, 1724. Painted portraits and history, and engraved a few plates. He was the son of Johann Gottfried Riedel. He died at Augsburg in 1784.

RIEDEL, JOHANN ANTON, a German designer and engraver, son of Johann Gottfried Riedel, born at Prague in 1733, was keeper of the Dresden Gallery, and engraved several plates after pictures in that collection, in which he imitated the style of Rembrandt. Among them we may name the following:

The Virgin and Infant Christ; after Baroccio.
The Seven Sacraments; after Gio. Maria Cresspi.
A Portrait of Rembrandt; after Rembrandt.
A Warrior, with a cap and feather; after the same.
Sixteen other plates; after the same.
A Portrait of a Lady holding a Letter; after Vanduyck.
Twenty-one Portraits; after Both, Dietrich, Flinck, Grebber, &c.

Riedel died at Dresden in 1816.

RIEDEL, JOHANN GOTTFRIED, painter and engraver, born at Talken in Bohemia in 1691, was a pupil of Mänil in Vienna, and afterwards of Solimena. He went in 1739 as court painter to Dresden, and in 1742 he was appointed keeper of the Dresden Gallery. He died at Dresden in 1755.

RIEDER, GEORG, an obscure historical painter of Ulm, who was received into the freedom of that city in 1550. He was still living in 1570.

RIEDER, WILHELM AUGUST, painter, born at Döbling in 1796. In 1825 he became professor of figure-drawing at the Academy of Vienna. In 1835 he went to Italy to study, and on his return to Vienna in 1857 was made keeper of the Belve, dere Gallery. His works are mainly religious, but he occasionally painted portraits in water-colour, of which we may mention that of Franz Schubert; and he made some drawings for the Archduke Ludwig, and the Archduchess Maria Elizabeth. His best known works in oil are:

Christ on the Mount of Olives.

Saint Rosalie.

Portraits of Prince Ferdinand and of Prince Augustus of Saxe-Coburg.

Portrait of the Frau von Sonnenfels.

Effie Deans in Prison. (Vienna.)

Rieder died at Vienna in 1880.

RIEDINGER. See RIDINGER.

RIEFSTAHL, LUDWIG FRIEDRICH WILHELM, landscape and genre painter, was born the 15th of August, 1827, at Neu-Strelitz. Failing to become the pupil of Gropius and Gerst, as he had wished, he studied under W. Schirmer at the Berlin Academy. In 1848 he made the architectural illustrations for Kugler's 'History of Art.' This commission started him in life. He travelled through the most picturesque parts of Germany, and the impressions he received had a strong influence upon his after work. In 1869 he visited Rome, and a year later became professor at the art school in Carlsruhe. This post he resigned in order to revisit Rome, but two years afterwards, in 1875, he was appointed director of the school in question. His works are mainly landscapes with figures. He died in 1878. Works:

Berlin. National Gallery. Passeyer Shepherds at Prayer. 1864.

" " All Souls' Day at Bregenz. 1869.

Procession of Mourners, Bregenz.

A Northern Heath.

Seashore at Rügen.

Procession of Capuchin Monks.

Bridal Procession in the Passeyer Thal.

The Return from the Baptism.

Funeral Procession before the Pantheon.

Funeral at Appenzel.

In the Refectory.

RIEPENHAUSEN, ERNST LUDWIG, draughtsman and engraver, born at Göttingen, 1765. He engraved a number of plates in the manner of Chodowiecki, but is best known as the author of some engravings after Hogarth in the 'Göttingen Almanack,' and as the father of Franz and Johann Riepenhausen. He died at Göttingen, 28th January, 1840.

RIEPENHAUSEN, FRANZ and JOHANN, born at Göttingen; Franz in 1786, and Johann in 1789. They first learned engraving from their father, Ernst Ludwig. In 1804 they studied in Cassel under Tischbein, and the following year in Dresden. In 1807 they both went to Rome to study the old masters, and till the death of Franz they worked so well together that it was impossible to distinguish their hands. Franz died in Rome in 1831, and Johann in the same city in 1860. Works:

Der Sänger (in illustration of Goethe's poem).

Mädchen aus der Fremde (in illustration of Schiller's poem).

Hagar. 1820.

View of Rome. 1820.

Legend of St. Elizabeth (painted for the Duke of Cambridge). 1822.

Copy of Raphael's 'Transfiguration.'

Conradin receiving sentence of death.

A 'Madonna.'

Christus Consolator.

The Destruction of the Cenci Family. 1839.

In 1810 the brothers published the 'History of Painting in Italy' ('Die Geschichte der Malerei in Italien nach ihrer Entwicklung'), with twelve plates by themselves. They also made a series of designs for Goethe's 'Faust,' for Schiller's 'Taucher,' and for a life of Charlemagne. They also etched 115 plates, among which we may name:

Thirteen plates from the Life of Raphael.

Sixteen plates from 'Polygnotus at Delphi.'

Fourteen plates from Tieck's 'Genovefa.'

Sixteen plates after ancient classical monuments.

RIESENER, HENRI FRANÇOIS, painter, born in Paris in 1767, studied under Vincent and David. His father was the famous cabinet-maker to Louis XVI. On the outbreak of the Revolution he abandoned his artistic career for that of a soldier. On resuming his brush, he employed it in painting portraits. A portrait of Napoleon I. was so successful that he had to supply more than fifty replicas. From 1816 to 1823 he worked in Russia, both in Moscow and Petersburg, where he was patronized by the Grand Duke Constantine and the Empress-mother, and painted portraits of the Emperor Alexander and other notabilities. He contributed to the Salons between 1793 and 1827. In 1823 he returned to Paris, where he died in 1828. In the Louvre there is a portrait of M. Ravrio by him.

RIESENER, LOUIS ANTOINE LÉON, a French historical and decorative painter, born in Paris in 1808. He was the son of Henri François Riesener. Though he studied under Gros, he was a great admirer and follower of Delacroix. He painted many studies from the nude, of a rather voluptuous character, but excellent in technique. His attention was largely devoted to decoration, and there are works by him in the Luxembourg Palace, in St. Eustache, and at the Charenton Hospital. Those in the old Hôtel de Ville perished when the building was burnt by the commune. His daughter is a successful portrait painter. Riesener died in 1878. Amongst his chief pictures we may name:

Juno.

Leda. 1841.

A Nymph.

Venus.

A Bacchante playing with a Panther.

Egyptian Child and Nurse.

Erigone. 1864. (Paris; Luxembourg Gallery.)

RIETER, HEINRICH, painter and etcher, born at Wintertthur in 1751, learned his art of Schellenburg, and afterwards studied under Graf in Dresden, also landscape painting in Bern under Staberli. On the death of the latter he inherited his plates, and added to the series with plates of his own. These were superior to those of his master. His best plates are, 'The Waterfall of Reichenbach,' 'The Giessbach,' 'The Peak of the Jungfrau.' Of his oil paintings the chief were landscape views of Italian and Swiss scenery. Rieter died in 1818 at Bern, where he had taught drawing at the École Publique for thirty-seven years.

RIETHOORN, JEAN ALBERTZ VAN DEN. See VAN DEN RIETHOORN.

RIETSCHOOF, HENDRIK, the son and pupil of Jan Claasze Rietschoof, was born at Hoorn in 1678.

He painted similar subjects to those of his father, whose skill, however, he failed to rival. He died at Koog, a village in North Holland, about 1746.

RIETSCHOOFF, JAN CLAESZ, (perhaps CLAES JANSZ), born at Hoorn in 1652, was a scholar of Abr. Liedts and Ludolf Backhuysen, under whose tuition he became an eminent artist, and painted sea-pieces and storms so much in the style of his instructor, that his pictures are sometimes mistaken for those of Backhuysen. He particularly excelled in painting storms, which he reproduced with much fidelity. He died in 1719. Works:

Amsterdam. R. Museum. A Calm.
" " A Storm.

RIETSTAP, ANTHONIS R., a Dutch landscape painter, born at the Hague, 1814. He was a pupil of A. Schelfout. He died in 1837.

RIEUE, JEHAN, (DRIEUX, DREUX), a native of Bruges, who worked as an illuminator in the 15th century. In 1439 he illuminated a 'Book of Hours' for the Duke of Burgundy, and in 1449-50 he was attached to Philippe-le-Bon as valet-de-chambre and illuminator. He was still alive in 1455.

RIFFLAERT, ALEXANDRE VICTOR, a Belgian painter of little note, born at Brussels. He painted historical and genre pictures, and was still alive in 1829.

RIGA, JEAN, a Belgian painter, probably of the same family as N. J. Riga. He was born at Liège in 1680, and was employed at the Hôtel de Ville. He also painted sacred subjects for the churches of his native town, but none of his works have been preserved. He died in 1725.

RIGA, MÜLLER VON. See MÜLLER, JOHANN JAKOB.

RIGA, N. J., a Belgian painter, born in 1653, at Liège. There are pictures by him in several churches of his native town. He died in 1717.

RIGAUD, GASPARD, portrait painter, was a younger brother of the famous Hyacinthe Rigaud, but of greatly inferior talent. He was appointed one of the painters to the king, and became an associate of the Academy in 1701. He died in 1705.

RIGAUD-Y-ROS, HYACINTHE FRANÇOIS HONORAT MATHIAS PIERRE-LE-MARTYR ANDRÉ JEAN, a French portrait painter, was born at Perpignan the 20th of July, 1659. Both his father, whom he lost when he was but eight years old, and his grandfather, were artists. At the early age of fourteen, his mother, for whom he had a great affection, sent him to study at Montpellier. Here he received instruction for some time from the local painters Pezet, Verdier, and Ranc. After a stay of four years at Montpellier, he migrated to Lyons, and afterwards to Paris, where he arrived in 1681, and began to study in the Academy. In the following year he gained the first prize for painting for his version of 'Cain building the city of Enoch.' At this critical period of his career he attracted the notice of Le Brun, who strongly advised him to continue the work at portraits, which he had already commenced, and to abandon the idea of studying in Italy. Rigaud took this advice, and, to improve his style, applied himself to a diligent study of the works of Van Dyck, whose disciple he always professed to be. At first his sitters came from the bourgeoisie. His firm establishment as the fashionable painter of the upper classes may be said to date from 1683, when the brother of Louis XIV. sat to him. Notwithstanding that his career was thus definitely marked out, he had the ambition, not uncommon amongst French artists, of being received into the Academy in the highest class, that of historical painters. With this view he submitted a 'Nativity' as his reception picture in 1687. But the Academy was obdurate, and he was only admitted as a portrait painter. It was not till 1700, when he had risen to the first rank in his profession, that he was received as an historical painter, on the completion of 'St. Andrew,' now in the Louvre. He became assistant professor in the Academy in 1702, professor in 1710, and assistant rector and rector in 1733. Other honours were freely bestowed on him: he was ennobled in 1709, and as he had the misfortune to lose his savings through the schemes of Law, the king granted him a pension. There are but few other events in his career to record. His large practice, and the industry with which he worked, left him but little time for any pursuit but that of art. From a list which he kept, specifying each portrait which he painted and the sum received for it, it appears that he produced, on an average, between thirty and forty portraits per annum. It is said, too, that Rigaud did not intrust the accessories to other hands, but painted them himself. After a long and prosperous career—he was practising for no less than sixty-two years—Rigaud died in Paris in 1743. He painted five kings, all the French Princes of the Blood, and most of the distinguished men of his time.

There are many portraits by Rigaud in the French provincial galleries and private collections. The following is a list of his paintings in the chief public galleries in Europe:

O. J. D.

RIGAUD, JOHN FRANCIS, an historical and portrait painter, born at Turin in 1742, was descended from a French Protestant family. He, however, came in 1772 to England, after travelling through Italy and France, where he practised his art. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1772, and in 1784 a full member. His admission picture, which represented 'Samson breaking his bonds,' was much admired. He was employed by Boydell for the Shakespeare Gallery, and he also painted several sacred and historical subjects. But besides this he decorated several ceilings, among which was that of the Court Room in the Trinity House, Tower Hill. He also painted two altarpieces, one for the parish church at Packington, and another for the church of St. Martin-Outwich in London. He translated into English and published Leonardo da Vinci's 'Treatise on Painting,' with illustrative copper plates. He was found dead in his bed at Packington Hall, the residence of Lord Aylesford, his patron, on December 6th, 1810.

RIGAUD, JEAN, a relation of Hyacinthe Rigaud, born in Paris about the year 1700, painted landscapes, which, if we may judge by his prints, must have possessed considerable merit. He appears to have passed some time in England, as he has etched some views in the environs of London. We have several plates by him, executed in a spirited and masterly style, and the figures correctly and neatly drawn. The following are his principal prints:

A pair of Views of Marseilles, at the time of the Plague in 1720.

A set of six Views of the Chateau and Gardens of Marly. The Garden of the Tuilleries.

A View of the Palace of the Luxembourg.

A View of Hampton Court.

St. James's Park.

Greenwich Park.

Greenwich Hospital.

A set of six Landscapes, with figures.

A set of six Views in France, with rural amusements.

Twelve marine subjects.

He had a son, JEAN BAPTISTE RIGAUD, who engraved a view of the Palais Bourbon, after his father.

RIGAUD, STEPHEN FRANCIS, son of John Francis Rigaud, and an English water-colour painter, was born in the latter part of the 18th century. He studied in the schools of the Academy, where he first exhibited in 1797, and in 1801 gained the gold medal by his 'Clytemnestra and Agamemnon.' In 1804 he became one of the original members of the Water-Colour Society, where he exhibited till 1813, when he, Chalon, and others seceded. But little is known of his subsequent life, though it appears that he exhibited at the Society of British Artists as late as 1851. There is a water-colour picture by him at the Kensington Museum of 'Telemachus discovering the priest of Apollo.' We may also name:

Satan in the Bower of Adam and Eve. 1805.

Martha and Mary. 1806.

Sin and Death. 1807.

Invasion of France in 1813. 1814.

David sallying out against Goliath. 1815.

RIGHETTI, MARIO. This painter was born at Bologna about the year 1590, and was a scholar of Lucio Massari. He painted several pictures for the churches of his native city, which are noticed in 'Le Pitture di Bologna.' The best are the following: 'The Archangel Michael,' in the church of S. Guglielmo; 'Christ appearing to the Magdalen,' in S. Giacomo Maggiore; 'The Adoration of the Magi,' in S. Agnese; and the 'Nativity,' in S. Lucia.

RIGOT, JEAN, a friar of the Abbey of St. Pierre de Melun, was an illuminator and miniaturist of the 15th century. In the 'Bibliothèque Nationale' there is a Latin missal of the year 1489 attributed to him.

RIGOULDTS, or RIGHOLZ. See THIELEN.

RIJN, REMBRANDT HARMENSZ VAN, was born at Leyden, July 15, 1607. He was the son of a miller named Harmen van Rijn, and of his wife Neeltjen, the daughter of a baker, Willem van Suytbroeck. The paternal home stood close to the "White," the western gate of Leyden, and immediately behind the mill, which crowned the rampart. In Vosmaer's 'Life of Rembrandt,' the details of his family tree, and of his parents' condition in the world, are elaborately set out. Rembrandt was the fifth of six children, but his parents were comfortably off, and determined that he should have a good education, should attend the Latin school, in order that, as Orlers puts it, "he might in the fulness of time be able to serve his native city, and the Republic, with his knowledge." But such studies as these were not at all to the boy's taste, and before he had been long aux prises with Latin, his father became convinced that his inclination for art would have to be allowed its way. The lad was consequently placed in the studio of Jacob van Swanenburch, a respectable painter, and a member of an old Leyden family. With him Rembrandt stayed three years and made good progress, giving such promise of future excellence that in 1622, when he was only fifteen, he was removed to the more famous studio of Pieter Lastman, at Amsterdam. Lastman had visited Italy, and painted crowded religious pictures, and was just such an artist as would be sure to have an attraction for a man like the miller Harmen, with his visions of advancement for his fifth son. Rembrandt, however, only remained six months with his new teacher. In 1623 he returned to his home at Leyden, and is supposed to have worked there steadily for seven years. His earliest extant picture has long been supposed to be the 'St. Paul in Prison,' of the Stuttgart Gallery, signed and dated R.H. 1627; but perhaps one still earlier has come to light. This is the carefully studied portrait of a young girl, signed and dated Rem<sup>d</sup> 1625, and there seems to be no good reason to doubt its authenticity. In 1628 Rembrandt received Gerard Douw as his pupil, and two years later migrated to Amsterdam, where he lived for the rest of his life. Not much of the work he did before 1630 has come down to us, at least under his own name, but after that date his pictures and etchings become numerous. In 1632 he painted his first corporation picture, the great 'Lesson in Anatomy'; and in 1634 he wedded his first wife, Saskia van Ulenburgh. The Ulenburghs were a good Friesland family, one or two of whose members had already married into art and literature. At the time of her marriage Saskia was twenty-two years of age, and her husband twenty-seven. She has become famous through the many portraits, "in character" and otherwise, which Rembrandt painted and etched. Rembrandt's mother, who had also been frequently his model, died in 1640, leaving her painter son a small fortune, which went, most likely, in the purchase of the large house in the Breed Straat, at Amsterdam, in which he lived for many years, and of pictures and other works of art to fill its rooms. In 1642, the 'Night Watch,' as the sortie of the Militia Company of Frans Banning Cock has long been called, was produced. In June of the same year Saskia died, and was buried on the 19th in the Oude Kerke of Amsterdam. She had borne Rembrandt four children, but only one, Titus, was alive at her death, and he was but a few months old. By Saskia's will, this son Titus was made her heir, the enjoyment of her property being secured to Rembrandt, however, during his life, and its reversion falling to him in case of Titus dying before his father. The will also directed that if Rembrandt became absolute owner of the heritage through the death of his son, and should then marry again, he should cede one-half of Saskia's property to her sister Hiskia. For the due fulfilment of these provisions Saskia expressly forbade any legal security to be taken, "because she had confidence that he (Rembrandt) would behave in the matter in exact obedience to his conscience." About this time, most likely, began the friendship between the painter and Jan Six, afterwards, but not until Rembrandt had been twenty-two years in his grave, Burgomaster of Amsterdam. Six was born in 1618, and was therefore twenty-two in 1642. He acquired some repute as a savant and poet at a very early date, married Margaret Tulp, the daughter of Nicholas Tulp, and the ci-devant fiancée of no less a person than Jan de Wit. The portrait of Six's mother, by Rembrandt, is dated 1641, so that Vosmaer is no doubt right in making the acquaintance between the two men begin about the time the painter was at work on the 'Night Watch.' The etching known as 'Six's Bridge' was done in 1645, and the 'Portrait of Six,' the dry-point, in 1647. The famous unfinished picture, still in the house on the Heren Gracht, in which Jan Six is shown hat on head and gloves half pulled on, for a walk, dates from the year 1656. This was a disastrous era in the painter's life. In 1654 Rembrandt had been the cause of some scandal to the good folks of Amsterdam, through his relations with one Hendrickie Jaghers, his servant, who was reprimanded by the Presbytery for her conduct with her master. She bore Rembrandt a daughter, whom he acknowledged, and to whom he gave the name of Cornelia. Two years later, in the month of July, 1656, Rembrandt was declared insolvent, and fourteen months later still most of his goods were dispersed. The greater part of his collection of prints and drawings was sold in September, 1658. After things were all settled up, Titus received as his heritage a sum equivalent to about £280, and Rembrandt was left to begin life anew. There is much obscurity as to his doings in these latter years. By some it has been suggested that he actually married Hendrickie, and that his pecuniary troubles were caused by the stipulation in Saskia's will, which made half his property transferable, on a second marriage, to her sister Hiskia. It is more likely, however, that he remained a widower until 1665, when he married one Catharina van Wijck.

After the sale of his house in the Breed Straat,

Rembrandt took one on the north side of the Rozengracht, at the west end of the city. There he lived with his son Titus, until the latter married and moved to the Singel, to a house in which he lived but a few months. For in March, 1669, this last of Saskia's children sank into a premature grave, and on October 8th of the same year his father too was buried in the Westerkerke, leaving behind him, as the simple register of burial records, two children. One of these may have been Cornelia, the daughter of Hendrickie Jaghers, but more probably they were both the legitimate offspring of his second wife.

Rembrandt's pupils were numerous. In his early period they included Gerard Douw, Bol, Flituck, Backer, De Wedt, and De Poorter. Some few years afterwards this list was increased by the names of Victors, Eeckhout, and Philip Koninek. About 1640, La Vecq, Ovens, Paudiss, Verdoel, Heerschop, Drost, Karol Fabritius, and Hoogstraten were the principal occupants of the little rooms at the top of the house in the Breed Straat which the painter filled with his scholars. Later still their places were taken by Maes, Renesse, Dullaert, Willemans, Mayr, Wulfhagen, G. Ulenburgh, and Aart de Gelder.

Rembrandt was the greatest artistic individuality of the 17th century. He excelled in every branch of painting to which he seriously turned his hand, while he took up an art which before his time had been humble and insignificant, and set it upon a pedestal round which artists have been crowding, in hopeless emulation, ever since. As a painter he was equally great in conception and in execution; his hand was the skilful, sympathetic servant of a commanding imagination. It is the same with his etchings. Technically they are still unequalled, while in rich dramatic suggestion no man has yet approached them. In the great Rembrandt van Rijn the school of Holland has a more than worthy head.

The following list of his extant and accessible works, as nearly as possible in chronological order, is founded mainly on that of Vosmaer. W.A.

RILEY, JOHN, born in London in 1646, received instructions from Isaac Fuller and Gerard Zoust. He was little noticed till after the death of Sir Peter Lely, though he is justly described by Walpole as one of the best native painters that had then flourished in England. His talents were obscured by the fame, rather than the merit, of Sir Godfrey Kneller, and have been since depressed through his best works being ascribed to Lely. Riley was of an amiable and rather diffident character, and was easily put out of conceit with his own works. Charles II. sat to him, but almost frightened the poor artist out of the profession by crying, when he saw the picture, 'Is this like me? Then, odd's fish, I'm an ugly fellow.' James II. and his queen also sat to him, as did their successors, William and Mary, who appointed him their painter. Among his portraits may also be named those of Lord Keeper North and Bishop Sanderson. Jonathan Richardson was married to a near relation of Riley, and profited by his will. Riley died in London in 1691, and was buried in Bishopsgate Church. The following portraits by him are in the National Portrait Gallery:

- Bishop Burnet.
James II.
William, Lord Russell.
Edmund Waller.
Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham.

RILLAERT, JAN VAN, the elder, painter, was a native of Louvain, where he was working in 1528. In 1547 he became painter to the corporation, and director of the 'Omgang.' In 1549 he designed the principal decorations for the 'Joyeuse Entrée' of Philip II., and he was also employed upon the blazons for the funeral service of the Emperor Charles V. In 1560 he decorated the sheriffs' room in the town-hall. He also executed numerous works for churches and convents in his native town. He practised engraving, and several plates still exist, engraved upon copper, and signed with his initials. By his wife, Madeleine du Vivier, he had one son, Jan, q. v. He died in 1568. Among his works are the following:

Louvain. Hôtel de Ville. Four Panels painted on both sides as follows:

1. The Fall of Simon Magus.

Saint Margaret and the Dragon.
 2. Defeat of the Mahometans.
 The Deliverance of St. Peter.
 3. The Miraculous Draught of Fishes.
 Christ hearing His Cross.
 4. Decapitation of St. Catharine.
 Calvary.
 Consecration of St. Evtarius,
 Bishop of Orleans.
 The Assumption.

Louvain. Ch. of St. Pierre.

Vienna.

RILLAERT, JAN VAN, the younger, was the son of the last-named, and probably his pupil. He married a rich wife, Marie Claes, and after a sojourn in Denmark returned to Louvain and settled there. The dates of his birth and death are uncertain. No mention of him occurs in the town archives after 1591. In 1588 he was commissioned, jointly with the painter Leonard van Marienbergh, to determine the value of the painting by Mabuse, which the town of Louvain wished to buy from the Augustines Order for presentation to the King of Spain. In the church of St. Pierre, at Louvain, there is a 'Resurrection' by him.

RIMINALDI, GIROLAMO, painter, brother of Orazio, practised at Pisa in the early part of the 17th century. He survived his brother, whose last work he completed. As a painter he was greatly inferior to Orazio.

RIMINALDI, ORAZIO, born at Pisa in 1598, was first a scholar of Aurelio Lomi, but afterwards studied at Rome under Orazio Lomi, called Gentileschi. During a residence of some years at Rome, he studied from the great Roman masters, and also from the antique. On his return to Pisa he distinguished himself as one of the most promising artists of his time. He followed, in the early part of his life, the principles of Michel-angelo Caravaggio, which he soon after abandoned for those of Domenichino. He painted several pictures for the churches of Pisa, one of which, 'The Martyrdom of St. Cecilia,' has since been placed in the Florentine Gallery. In the cathedral are two Scripture subjects by him, representing the 'Brazen Serpent,' and 'Samson destroying the Philistines.' His last work was an 'Assumption of the Virgin,' which he did not live to finish. Riminaldi died of the plague in 1630.

RIMINI, PIETRO DA, lived in the early part of the 14th century, and is the author of a 'Crucifixion' at Urbania, near Urbino. Paintings in S. Maria Portofuori in Ravenna are attributed to him.

RINALDO, DOMENICO, painter, called RINALDO MANTOVANO, practised at Mantua, about 1550, and was a pupil of Giulio Romano. His works show great promise, but his career was cut short by a premature death. At Viena there is a 'Triumph of Julius Cæsar' by him, and two pictures in the National Gallery, 'The Capture of Carthage and Continnence of Scipio,' and the 'Rape of the Sabine Women, with the subsequent reconciliation between the Romans and Sabines,' are now ascribed to him instead of to his master.

RINALDI, SANTO, called IL TROMBA, an excellent painter of battles, landscapes, and architecture, born at Florence about 1620, was a scholar of Furini. Though he painted much, and was eminent in his day, very little of his history is recorded. It is supposed that he died in 1676.

RINCON, ANTONIO DEL. See DEL RINCON.

RINCON, FERNANDO DEL. See DEL RINCON.

RING, HERMAN TOM, the son and pupil of Ludwig Ring, the elder, born at Münster in 1521. Like his father, he is chiefly known by one work—a 'Resurrection of Lazarus,' which was painted in 1546 for the cathedral at Münster; in it the traces of Italian influence are plainly marked. It is good in colour and highly finished. Of his other works we may name: 'Christ on the Cross,' 'Christ healing the Sick,' 'Christ on the Cross, with Mary, Joseph, and donors,' 'St. Luke and St. John,' 'Christ in Gethsemane,' 'Christ and the Apostles,' which are in Münster, and twelve Prophets and Sibyls in the Gallery of Augsburg. He died in 1599.

RING, LUDGER TOM, the elder, the founder of a family of Westphalian artists, who flourished in the 16th century, was born at Münster in 1496. He is chiefly known by an 'Intercession of Christ and the Virgin (with the donor by their side) for the world, which is about to be destroyed by God.' It is dated 1538, and executed in a simple and dignified manner, in the style of the early German painters. In the Museum at Münster there are also, 'A Man and his Wife,' a half-length 'Portrait of a Man,' and a 'Madonna.' He died in 1547.

RING, LUDGER TOM, called the younger, to distinguish him from his grandfather Ludwig Ring the elder, born at Münster in 1522, was the son of Herman Ring, and painted homely domestic subjects, but he has also left some portraits, and in the Berlin Museum is a 'Marriage at Cana,' dated 1562. Ring died in 1583.

RING, PIETER DE, an admirable painter of subjects of still-life, flourished about the middle of the 17th century. If not a native of Holland, he practised his art there, as most of his pictures are, or were, confined to that country, though the Dutch writers seem to know nothing of his history. In 1648-9 he was inscribed on the registers of the Leyden guild of St. Luke, and was still painting in that town in 1660. In the Museum at Amsterdam there is a picture by him, representing a table covered with blue velvet, on which are various kinds of fruit, oysters, and other shell-fish. He was a successful follower of Jan D. de Heem. He generally introduced a ring as his signature. In the Berlin Museum there is a picture by him, signed with his name and dated 1650, representing a globe, a book in which is the picture of a man blowing soap-bubbles, an hour-glass, dice, musical instruments, &c.

RINGE, CHRISTOPH GOTTFRIED, painter, born at Bernburg, 1713. He died mad in 1797. His pictures, which are rare, betray his mental disease.

RINGLY, GOTTHARD, or GOTTFRIED, (RINGGLI,) painter and engraver, was born at Zurich in 1575. All that is known of his life is, that he was employed by the authorities of Berne to paint some pictures relative to the history of that city, and that the Painters' Guild ineffectually attempted to prevent him painting. Of his etchings, 'David playing the Harp,' and his illustrations of Joshua Maler's 'Gutjahr für alle Christen,' are well known. They are marked with a cipher composed of the letters G. R. Ringly died in 1635.

RIOULT, LOUIS EDOUARD, painter, born at Montdidier, October 26, 1780. He was a pupil of Regnault and of David, and painted classical and historical subjects, but he was particularly successful in studies of girls bathing, &c., of which he painted a large number. Among his works are the following:

Girl playing with a Zephyr.
Siege of Ostend. (At Versailles.)
Leda.

Diana.
The Death of d'Assas.
A Scholar giving his breakfast to a poor man.

He died in 1855.

RIPANDA, GIACOMO, an obscure painter of the 15th century. He studied in Rome, and practised portrait painting towards the close of the century.

RIPOSO, FELICE. See FICHERELLI.

RIPPINGILLE, EDWARD VILLIERS, an English subject painter, born at King's Lynn in 1798. He was self-taught as an artist, and first practised at Bristol, exhibiting at the Royal Academy from 1819. His subjects were taken from English rural life until he visited Italy in 1837, when for some years his inspiration was Italian. In 1841 he paid a second visit to Italy. He delivered lectures on art, and devoted much attention to literature, contributing to various periodicals. He died suddenly at Swan village railway station, near Birmingham, in 1859. Amongst his pictures are: Liverpool. Corporation Gall. Portrait of Dr. Raffles. London. Bridgewater House. A Brigand's Wife. South Kensington. Museum. Mendicants of the Campagna.

Enlisting.
Scene in a Gaming-house.
A Country Post-office.
A Recruiting Party.
Going to the Fair.
Stage-coach Breakfast.
Progress of Drunkenness. (A series of six pictures.)

RIQUIER, L., a Flemish subject painter, born in 1795 at Antwerp, where he studied under Van Bree. After visiting Italy he settled in Paris. Amongst his works are:

Brussels. Museum. A Family of Brigands.
Haarlem. Museum. Rubens presenting Adrian Brouwer to his Wife.

RISING, JOHN, an English subject and portrait painter, born about the middle of the 18th century. He practised in London, and exhibited at the Academy from 1785 to 1814. Amongst his works are:

Herts. Hatfield House. Portrait of First Marquis of Downshire.
Oxford. Bodleian Library. Portrait of Sir W. Blackstone. 1781.

RISS, FRANÇOIS, painter, born at Moscow in 1804. He was a pupil of Gros, and practised in France. He exhibited at the Salon between 1831 and 1866. At Versailles there is a portrait of Henri François D'Aguesseau, Chancellor de France, by him; and at the Ministry of the Interior a 'St. Vincent de Paul at Marseilles,' and 'Feast in the house of Simon the Pharisee.' His wife, PAULINE, was also a painter.

RIST, GOTTFRIED, engraver, a native of Stuttgart, was a pupil of Johann Gotthard Müller in the early part of this century, and engraved the following plates:

Death of Raphael; after Riepenhausen.
Apollo among the Herds, and Abraham's Sacrifice; after Schick.
Ariadne; after Dannecker.
Job; after Wächter.
King Frederick of Württemberg; after Seele.
Queen Charlotte Matilda of Württemberg; after Stirnbrand.

RIST, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a landscape painter, born in Stuttgart in 1790, was first a confectioner in Stuttgart and Vienna, in which latter city he entered the Academy. In 1816, and again in 1823, he was premiated. The death of his brother Gottfried caused him to leave Italy, and go to Augsburg. From 1830 to 1840 he worked in Munich, and gave drawing lessons; later on he became the head of the drawing school at Augsburg. He died at Augsburg in 1886.

RISVENNO, GIUSEFFO, (or RISUENO, JOSEF,) a Spanish painter, born at Granada about the year 1640. He was a scholar of Alonso Cano, under whom he studied both painting and sculpture. He painted history with some reputation; and there are several of his works in the churches of his native city. The most important is the decoration of the cupola of the Carthusians. Risvenno died at Granada in 1721.

RITRATI, FRANCESCO DE'. See NEGRI, G.

RITT, AUGUSTIN, a Russian painter, born at St. Petersburg. He studied at Antwerp, under De Quertemont, and practised in Russia in the 18th century.

RITTER, ABRAHAM DE, amateur, born at Haarlem in 1668, devoted himself chiefly to water-colour sketches and studies of rustic life. He died in 1738.

RITTER, EDUARD, still-life and genre painter, born at Vienna in 1808, where he was a pupil of the Academy. Among his works we may name: 'In the Wine-cellar,' 'The Workman,' 'The Last Farthing,' 'The Farewell of the Journeyman.' He died at Vienna in 1853.

RITTER, G. N., painter, born at Heilbronn, in 1748. He settled at Amsterdam, where he practised miniature and portrait painting. He died at Amsterdam in 1809.

RITTER, HENRY, painter, born at Montreal in Canada in 1816, went when young to Hamburg, where he received some instruction from Gröger. In 1836 he entered the Academy at Düsseldorf under Sohn, and studied under Jordan. He died at Düsseldorf in 1853.

RITTER, LOUISA CHARLOTTE, the daughter of G. N. Ritter, practised in the manner of her father with some success. She died in 1813.

RITTIG, PETER, painter, born at Coblenz in 1789, studied at Paris under David, but afterwards went to Rome to work under Overbeck. His pictures show talent and sobriety of judgment. He died at Rome in 1840. Works:

A Madonna with Angels.
Allegory of the 96th Psalm.
The Visit of Pope Paul III. to Michel-angelo.

RITUS, MICHAEL. This name is affixed to an etching representing the Virgin Mary and the Infant Christ; after A. Caracci, dated 1647.

RIVALZ, ANTOINE, born at Toulouse in 1667, was the son of Jean Pierre Rivalz, a painter and architect of some celebrity, by whom he was instructed in the rudiments of art. He afterwards visited Paris, where he did not remain long, but went to Rome in search of improvement. During his residence in that capital he was the successful candidate for the prize given by the Academy of St. Luke, for a 'Fall of the Rebel Angels.' After studying the works of the best masters, he returned to Toulouse, where he passed the remainder of his life. He possessed an extraordinary talent for copying the works of Italian masters. As he lived so far from the capital, few of his works are to be met with in Paris. His pictures are chiefly confined to Toulouse, where he died in 1735. He left a great number of drawings, which are executed with great freedom, in a style resembling that of Raymond de la Fage; also a few spirited etchings, among which are the following :

The Martyrdom of St. Symphorianus.

An Allegory of Vice driven away by Truth; in memory of N. Poussin.

Four Allegorical plates for a treatise on Painting, by Dupuy du Grez.

RIVALZ, BARTHÉLEMY, the nephew and pupil of Antoine Rivalz, born at Toulouse in 1724. We have by him a few etchings, among which are the following :

The Fall of the Rebel Angels; after Ant. Rivalz.

Judith and Holofernes; after the same.

Joseph and Potiphar's Wife; after the same.

The Death of Mary Magdalene; after Benedetto Luti.

RIVALZ, JEAN PIERRE, the elder, painter and architect, was born at Bastide-d'Anjou, in Languedoc, in 1625. He was a pupil of Ambroise Frédeau, and the father of Antoine Rivalz. He died in 1706.

RIVALZ, JEAN PIERRE, the younger, painter, was the son and pupil of Antoine Rivalz. He practised historical painting in France, and also visited Italy. He died in 1785.

RIVAROLA, ALFONSO, called IL CHENDA, born at Ferrara in 1607, was the most distinguished scholar of Carlo Bononi. On the death of that master he was engaged to finish the picture of the 'Marriage of the Virgin,' in the church of S. Maria del Vado. There are several pictures of his own composition in the churches at Ferrara, which do honour to the school in which he was educated. Such are his 'Baptism of St. Agostino,' in the church dedicated to that saint, which he has embellished with magnificent architecture; the 'Resurrection,' at the Teatini; 'the Brazen Serpent,' in S. Niccolo; and the 'Martyrdom of S. Caterina,' in S. Guglielmo. This promising young painter had acquired a reputation as one of the ablest artists of Ferrara, when he died in 1640.

RIVE, PIERRE LOUIS, or DE LA RIVE, landscape painter, born at Geneva in 1753. His father designed him for the church or the law, but at last consented to his following his own inclination. He studied at Geneva under the Chevalier de Fassin, a painter of Liège. He then visited Dresden, where he received some instruction from Casanova, and in 1784 went to Italy for two years. He returned to Geneva, and during the disturbances in his native town, travelled in Switzerland and Savoy, painting heroic landscape. His washed drawings have much merit. He died in 1815.

RIVELLI, GALEAZZO, called DELLA BARBA, an unimportant painter of Cremona, who flourished in the 14th century.

RIVERA, J. A., a Spanish historical painter of the 19th century. He became Director of the Museum and of the Academy at Madrid, where he died in 1860. His best known work, painted in 1836, is 'The Oath of the Prince of the Asturias.'

RIVERDITI, MARCANTONIO, a native of Alessandria della Paglia, who received his education in art at Bologna, where he painted some pictures for the churches, in which he imitated the style of Guido Reni. He also painted portraits with considerable success. Of his historical works, the most worthy of notice are his pictures of the 'Conception,' in the church of the Padri Camaldolesi; and of 'S. Francesco di Paola,' in S. Maria de Foscherari. He died at Bologna in 1744.

RIVIÈRE, CHARLES PHILIPPE DE LA. See LARIVIÈRE.

RIVIÈRE, WILLIAM, an English painter, born in London in 1806. He studied in the schools of the Academy, where also he first exhibited in 1833. A cartoon by him was sent to the first Westminster Hall competition. From 1849 his time was devoted to teaching, first at Cheltenham, where he was drawing-master to the College from 1849 to 1859, and then at Oxford, where he died in 1876. He was the father of Mr. Briton Riviere, R.A.

RIVIÈRE, FRANÇOIS, a painter of French birth, who settled at Leghorn, in Italy, in the first part of the 18th century. He painted many Turkish subjects, consisting of dances and public ceremonies. He painted much for the churches of Leghorn and Pisa, and at one time his reputation was very considerable in Italy. He died at Leghorn at a very advanced age.

RIVOLA, GIUSEPPE, an Italian painter of little note, who was a pupil of Ph. Abbiati, and died in 1740.

RIXMONT. See RAYMOND.

RIZI, FRANCISCO, a Spanish painter, born at Madrid in 1608, was the son of Antonio Rizi, a native of Bologna, who had accompanied Federigo Zuccaro into Spain, but was instructed in the principles of art by Vincencio Carducho. He was the Spanish Fu presto. As he lived at a time, and in a court, when and where the great merit of an artist was to improvise, he was celebrated and patronized as one of first-rate talent; and in consequence he became painter to Philip IV. in 1656, which office he continued to hold under Charles II., who added to it the deputy-keepership of the royal keys. A few years before he had been appointed painter to the cathedral of Toledo, a post of more importance to an artist, in a pecuniary point of view, than that of painter to the king, as it gave him the charge of all the existing works in the cathedral, and insured to him the execution of the greater part of what might be undertaken in his time. His empty cleverness is responsible to no slight extent for the decline of Spanish art. Rizi died at the Escorial in 1685. Among his works are :

The decoration, in 1648, with Pedro Nuñez, of the Theatre in the Alcazar of Madrid.

Religious Scenes in the Chapel of Antonio.

Scenery for the Theatre of the Retiro.

Sketch for an altar-piece in the Sacristy of the Escorial.

The Auto-dà-Fé of 1680. (In the Madrid Museum.)

A Portrait of a General of Artillery.

The Annunciation.

The Adoration of the Magi.

The Presentation in the Temple.

RIZI, FRAY JUAN, painter, born at Madrid in 1595, was a brother of Francisco Rizi, and a pupil of Mayno. In 1628 he entered the Benedictine Order, studied in Salamanca, and became Abbot of the Medina del Campo in Madrid. He painted several works for St. Juan Bautista in Burgos, St. Martin in Madrid, and Monte Cassino in Italy. In the Madrid Museum is a 'St. Francis of Assisi' by him. He afterwards went to Rome, where he was made an Archbishop by Pope Clement X. He died at Monte Cassino in 1675.

RIZO, FRANCESCO, (RIZZO). See SANTA CROCE.

RIZZI. See RICCI.

ROBART, —, said to have been a scholar of Jan Van Huysum, painted fruit, flowers, dead game, and landscapes: he flourished about the year 1770.

ROBATTO, GIOVANNI STEFANO, born at Savona in 1649, studied at Rome in the school of Carlo Maratti. He for some time painted historical subjects with considerable reputation, and was employed for some of the churches at Genoa. One of his best works is 'St. Francis receiving the Stigmata,' at the Cappucini. He afterwards abandoned himself to a fatal passion for gaming, and his latter performances are hasty and careless. He died in 1733.

ROBELOT, PIERRE, painter, born 1802. A native of Lorraine, and pupil of Mansion. He practised miniature painting in the first part of the 19th century.

ROBERT, AURELE, (AURELIO,) architectural and genre painter, born at La-Chaux-de-Fonds in 1815, was originally a watch engraver, but in 1822 he joined his brother Léopold at Rome, and became his pupil. In 1828 and 1829 he travelled with Léopold; and though they were separated for a short time in 1831, they met again in Paris, and Aurèle followed his brother to Venice in 1833. After the suicide of Léopold he returned to Paris, where he stayed for some time copying his brother's pictures. In 1838 he returned to Venice, where he stayed for five years, and then went to Switzerland. There is a picture by him, in the Berlin Gallery, of the 'Baptistry of St. Mark's, Venice.' He died at Berne in 1871.

ROBERT, CHARLES, a Scotch engraver, born at Edinburgh in 1806. He learned his art in the Trustees Academy. His early works were chiefly vignette portraits, but he was employed by the London Art Union on its foundation, and produced several excellent plates for its subscribers. He died at Edinburgh in 1872. Amongst his plates we may also name :

The Expected Penny; after A. Fraser.
The Rush-plaiters; after Sir G. Harvey.
The Widow; after Sir W. Allan.

ROBERT, FANNY, painter, a native of Paris, and a pupil of Girodet. She flourished about 1825, and painted portraits and historical subjects.

ROBERT, FELICITAS, Madame, painter. She practised in Germany in the early years of the 19th century, and was the daughter of the Belgian painter and engraver, Philip Tassaert, who died in England in 1803. Her work was chiefly in pastel. In the Dresden Gallery there are two pictures by her, a 'Visitation,' after Rubens, and a portrait of 'An Old Cook.'

ROBERT, HUBERT, generally called ROBERT DES RUINES, a painter and engraver, born in Paris in 1733. After learning the rudiments of design in his native city, he went to Rome, where he passed several years, and made accurate drawings from the remains of ancient architecture. On his return to Paris he was made a member of the Academy, and his pictures were held in high estimation. He has also left a series of eighteen spirited etchings, among them a set of ten views, with buildings, entitled 'Les Soirées de Rome.' In the French Revolution he was deprived of his position, and imprisoned for ten months; but that did not prevent his painting, and he produced a 'Taking of the Prisoners by Torchlight in open Carts from St. Pélagie to St. Lazare.' He obtained his freedom through a mistake of his gaoler, another prisoner of the same name being sent to the guillotine instead of him. He died in Paris in 1808. The Louvre possesses seven good examples of his work.

ROBERT, JEAN, was a pupil of J. C. le Blond. He has left some prints in colour, which possess considerable merit. They are carried out, like those of his master, by the use of four plates.

ROBERT, LE LONG, generally called FIAMINGO, a native of Brussels, went to Piacenza, where he visited the school of Bonisoli, and later on took Massarotti as his model. Of his works we find 'Scenes from the life of St. Theresa,' in St. Sigismondo, near Cremona, in the style of Guido Reni; 'St. Anthony the Martyr;' and 'The Death of St. Xavier,' in the cathedral of Piacenza, which is the best of his works. He died at Piacenza in 1709.

ROBERT, LOUIS LÉOPOLD, painter, born at La-Chaux-de-Fonds, in the canton of Neuchâtel, in 1794, at first entered a house of business, but his love of art induced him to follow Charles Girardet, the engraver, to Paris in 1810; from him he learned engraving, and then entered the studio of David. The cession in 1815 of Neuchâtel prevented him from obtaining the Grand Prix de Rome, as it is only awarded to those who are natives of France, and under the French Government. In 1814 he obtained a second prize for engraving. Disappointed at his want of good fortune, he returned home, and supported himself by portrait painting, till a friend made it possible for him to go to Rome, which he did in 1818. In 1831 he returned to Paris, but soon went back to Italy; this time to Florence, where an unfortunate passion for Princess Charlotte Bonaparte kept him, and on his return to Venice in 1835 he committed suicide in a fit of despondency. ROBERT, NICOLAS, born at Langres in 1610, excelled in painting animals, insects, and plants, in miniature, and was employed by Gaston, Duke of Orleans, in painting the most curious beasts and birds in the royal menagerie. The results are preserved in the National Library, Paris, in the Recueil des Valins. He was also commissioned to engrave his own drawings, in which he was assisted by Abraham Bosse and Louis de Châtillon. In collaboration with Girard Audran, he engraved several plates of ornaments, from the designs of G. Charmetton. See the Abecedario de Mariette, vol. iv. pp. 408—411. He died in Paris in 1684.

ROBERT, PAUL PONCE ANTOINE, called ROBERT DE SERI, or R. DE SEIS, a French painter and engraver, born in Paris about the year 1680, was a scholar of Pierre Jacques Cazes, and afterwards studied in Italy. On his return to Paris he painted an altar-piece for the church of the Capuchins, representing the 'Martyrdom of St. Fidelis,' which is considered his principal work as a painter. He etched several of the subjects executed in chiaro-scuro, by Nicolas le Sueur, for the Crozat Collection.

ROBERT-FLEURY, JOSEPH NICOLAS, painter, was born at Cologne, 1797, but was brought to Paris by his parents at the age of seven, and received his education in that city, studying for a time under Horace Vernet, and later under Girodet. After a term of study in Rome, he finally settled in Paris, where he produced his most important works. He was first brought prominently before the public by a picture exhibited in 1833, the subject of which was a scene from the Massacre of St. Bartholomew. He subsequently painted a good many pictures of the same kind, showing an inclination to depict scenes of horror and bloodshed; but later his art took a simpler and less tragic direction, with increased success in result. In 1864 he was commissioned to paint four pictures for the hall of the Tribunal de Commerce in Paris, namely: 'The Installation of the Judges, 1563;' 'The Proclamation of the Trade Statutes of 1673;' 'The Granting of the Laws of Commerce by Napoleon I.;' and 'The Visit of Napoleon III. to the new Tribunal de Commerce.' Other well-known works by him are:

- The Conference at Poissy. 1561. (Mus. Nat. Luxembourg.)
- Clovis entering Tours. (Versailles.)
- Baldwin of Flanders before Edessa. (Versailles.)
- The Marriage of Napoleon III. (Senate House.)
- Benvenuto Cellini in his atelier.
- The Death of Titian. (Academy of Antwerp.)
- Columbus.
- Charles V. at S. Yuste.
- Fire in the Ghetto. (Luxembourg.)
- Louis XIV.
- Jane Shore. (Mus. Nat. du Luxembourg.)

He also painted several portraits of much merit. He was member of various foreign Academies of Arts, and received many decorations and medals, both in France and in other continental countries. His son TONY is a well-known historical painter practising in Paris.

ROBERTI, ALBERT, painter, born at Brussels, 1811. He was a pupil of Navez, and painted portraits and historical subjects. There are by him, amongst other things, a 'Baptism of Christ' and a 'Review of a Chapter of the Golden Fleece by Charles V.' He died in 1864.

ROBERTI, DOMENICO, painter, born at Rome, 1690. The details of his life are unknown, but there are in the Dresden Gallery four pictures of ruins by him.

ROBERTS, DAVID, a Scottish painter, born at Stockbridge, Edinburgh, October 2nd, 1796. His parents were in poor circumstances, but his father, a shoemaker, remarking his strong artistic predilections, determined to give him a trade in which his gift might have opportunities of development. He was accordingly placed with one Beugo, a house-painter and decorator, and, after a seven years' apprenticeship, he turned his attention to scene-painting. He was first employed by a travelling company at Carlisle, and subsequently obtained more regular work at the theatres of Glasgow and Edinburgh. In 1822, whilst scene-painter at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, he sent several architectural pieces to the Edinburgh Exhibition, and in the same year was engaged as scene-painter to Drury Lane Theatre, and settled in London. He afterwards left Drury Lane for the rival house, Covent Garden, and in 1824 he became a member of the Society of British Artists, and exhibited at the Suffolk Street Gallery. A first visit to the continent took place about this time, and his wanderings amongst the picturesque old towns of Normandy resulted in his painting various pictures during the next two years, introducing some of the finest of their Gothic remains. In 1826 he sent his first picture to the Royal Academy, 'Rouen Cathedral,' but for some years after this exhibited only at the Suffolk Street Gallery, until, in 1836, he resigned his membership. His increasing reputation now entitled him to seek the honours of the Academy, and in 1839 he became A. R. A., receiving the higher dignity two years later. His journeyings in quest of subjects for his art were very extensive, and he wandered through most of the Western countries of Europe, also visiting Syria and Egypt in 1838. Italy and Austria he first saw in 1851. Towards the close of his life he remained in England and painted English scenes, his last work being a series of views on the Thames, of which he had completed six before his death. His productions divide themselves into three classes, identical with the various influences under which he came. The pictures dealing with scenes from Western Europe, and painted before 1838, are after the Dutch manner, broad in treatment and luminous in colour. After his visit to the East he adopted a colder and thinner style, and in his latest work these defects were aggravated by an unpleasant blackness of tone. His strength lies in his fine feeling for architectural effect, artistic composition, and good drawing of detail. His pictures were at one time very popular, and in addition to his paintings he made considerable sums by his published works, of which the best known are his lithographed 'Picturesque Sketches in Spain,' 'Sketches in the Holy Land and Syria,' and his 'Italy: Classical, Historical, and Picturesque.' For some years he also contributed drawings to the 'Landscape Annual.' He was a member of various foreign Academies, and was appointed one of the Commissioners for the Great Exhibition of 1851. On November 25th, 1864, he had an apoplectic seizure in the street, and died in the evening of the same day. His Life has been written by James Ballantine. Among his numerous works in oil and water-colour we may mention:

ROBERTS, EDWARD JOHN, an English engraver, born in 1797. He studied under Charles Heath, with whom he worked many years, on the 'Annuals.' His name does not often occur, as he was chiefly engaged in etching the engraver's plates. He died in 1865. Specimens of his art are to be found in :

- Prout's 'Continental Annual.' 1832.
 Roberts' 'Pilgrims of the Rhine.'
 Birket Foster's 'Rhine.'

ROBERTS, HENRY, an English engraver, born about 1710. There are some humorous prints, large landscapes, &c. by him. One of his landscape plates, after T. Smith, of Derby, is dated 1743. He was a print-seller in Hand Court, Drury Lane, and mostly confined his attention to plates for which he might hope to find a ready sale at small prices. He died before 1790.

ROBERTS, JAMES, an English engraver, was born in Devonshire in 1725. He engraved several landscapes and views from the pictures of Richard Wilson, George Barret the elder, Smith of Chichester, and others; also 'Fox Hunting,' in four plates, after James Seymour. Two small marine views after Pillement. He died in London in 1799.

ROBERTS, JAMES, son of the last-named, was born at Westminster about the middle of the 18th century. He was awarded a prize at the Society of Arts in 1766, and first exhibited at the Academy in 1783. After practising some years at Oxford, he settled at Westminster about 1794, and subsequently held the appointment of portrait painter to the Duke of Clarence. In 1809 he published some 'Lessons in Water-colour Painting,' which is the last trace we have of him. Amongst his works are :

- London. Garrick Club. Mrs. Abingdon in the 'School for Scandal.'
 „ British Museum. A series of elaborate Water-colour Drawings.
 Oxford. Bodleian. Portrait of Sir John Hawkins.
 1785.

ROBERTS, THOMAS, an Irish landscape painter, born at Waterford about the middle of the 18th century. He studied under George Mullens, and was patronized by the Duke of Leinster and by Viscount Powerscourt. He died at Lisbon, where he had gone for his health. His sister, a landscape painter of some skill, was employed as scene-painter in the Waterford theatre.

ROBERTS, THOMAS SAWTELLE, an Irish landscape painter, born in the latter half of the 18th century. He was the younger brother of Thomas Roberts, and at first studied as an architect. Devoting himself to landscape painting, he settled in London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1789 to 1818. Returning to Ireland, he took a leading part, in 1823, in forming the Incorporation of Artists in Dublin. There is at the Kensington Museum a water-colour drawing by him of St. John's Abbey, Kilkenny. He died in 1826.

ROBERTSON, ANDREW, a Scottish miniature painter, was born at Aberdeen in 1777. When young he had some instruction in art from Alexander Nasmyth, but he did not neglect his general education, graduating at Aberdeen University. Making his way on foot to London in 1801, he attracted the notice of Benjamin West, whose portrait he painted, and completed his art-training in the schools of the Academy. His ability procured him a large practice; he was patronized by the royal family, and became the foremost miniature painter of his day. In 1815 he made a tour in France and Italy. Of a kindly nature, he took great interest in several charitable associations, and was one of the founders of the Artists' Benevolent Institution. His love of art was not confined to painting; he had a great liking for music, and was an excellent amateur performer on the violin. He retired from his profession in 1841, and died at Hampstead in 1845. Two of his brothers, ARCHIBALD and ALEXANDER, emigrated successively to New York, where they achieved some success as painters. The latter was a pupil of Samuel Shelley.

ROBERTSON, CHARLES, an Irish miniature painter, the younger brother of 'Irish Robertson,' who practised in Dublin about the end of the 18th century. Coming to London, he exhibited at the Royal Academy for some years from 1806 onwards. Returning to Ireland, he took a prominent part in the movement which led to the foundation of the Royal Hibernian Academy.

ROBERTSON, GEORGE, born in London about the year 1742, was instructed in design in Shipley's drawing-school. His father, a wine merchant, brought up his son to the same business. At an early age, however, he went to Italy with Beckford, where he chiefly studied landscape painting, and produced some pictures which possessed considerable merit. He afterwards visited the island of Jamaica, where he made several drawings and pictures of views of that country, some of which were exhibited in 1775. Not meeting with the encouragement he expected, he adopted the profession of a drawing-master, in which he was more successful. He died in 1788. We have a few landscape etchings by him from his own designs.

ROBERTSON, Mrs. J., an English miniature painter, and niece of George Saunders. She had a good practice in London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1824 to 1844. She then migrated to Russia, when she was elected a member of the St. Petersburg Academy.

ROBERTSON, WALTER, an Irish miniature painter, known as 'Irish Robertson,' who practised in Dublin about the end of the 18th century. In 1793 he departed to America with Gilbert Stuart, after which he went to the East Indies, where he died.

ROBETTA, engraver, who flourished in Florence from about 1490 to 1520, worked after Filippo

Lippi and Sandro Botticelli. His history is wrapped in the greatest obscurity, but it appears that twelve artists formed a club under the appellation of La Compagnia del Pajuola (the company of the Stock-pot), and had pic-nic suppers alternately at each other's lodgings. The names of these associates were Gianfrancesco Rustici (the founder); Andrea del Sarto; Spillo, Pittore; Domenico Puligo; Il Robetta, Orafo; Aristotile da San Gallo; Francesco di Pellegrino; Nicolo Boni; Domenico Baccelli (who played and sang excellently); Il Solosmeo, Scultore; Lorenzo detto Guazzetto; and Roberto di Filippo Lippi, Pittore. By his being admitted a member of a select club of eminent artists, it may be supposed that he was of some celebrity before 1512. He is called Orafo in the list of names, that word being then used for Orefice, goldsmith; but engraving was part of a goldsmith's business in those days, and ranked him among artists. Robetta had an excellent fancy and composed with facility, but his technic is poor. In some of his backgrounds borrowings from Dürer may be recognized. The following is a list of his prints:

SUBJECTS FROM THE OLD TESTAMENT.

1. The Creation of Eve. Not signed.
2. Adam and Eve driven from Paradise. Not signed.
3. Adam and Eve, with Cain and Abel. Signed RBTA.
4. Adam and Eve, with Cain and Abel. No mark.
5. Adam and Eve, with Cain and Abel. No mark.

8. Jesus Christ baptized in the river Jordan. Signed RBTA.
9. Jesus Christ taking leave of His Mother. Signed RBTA.
10. The Resurrection of Christ. Signed RBTA.
11. The Virgin giving the breast to the Infant. Signed ROBTA.
12. The Virgin seated in a landscape, &c. Signed RBTA.
13. The Virgin with Angels, &c. Not signed.
14. St. Sebastian and St. Roch. Not signed.
15. Faith and Charity with their attributes. Signed RBTA.

MYTHOLOGICAL SUBJECTS.

16. Ceres with two goat-footed Children. Signed RBTA.
17. A young Man tied to a Tree, &c. Signed RBTA.
18. Venus surrounded by Cupids. Some traces of a signature may be seen in a dark shadow.
19. Apollo and Marsyas. Signed RBTA.
20. Hercules between Virtue and Vice. Not signed.
21. Hercules killing the Hydra. Signed RBTA.
22. Hercules and Antæus. Not signed.
23. The Lyrist. Signed RBTA.
24. An old Woman and two amorous Couples, &c. Not signed.
25. A Man tied to a Tree by Cupid, &c. On a tablet RORETTA (sic).
26. Mutius Scaevola. Signed RBTA.

The following six prints, the first five of which are in the British Museum, are presumed to be by Robetta, although they are without his mark.

- The Sacrifice of Cain and Abel.
- The Death of Abel.
- Jupiter and Leda.
- The Virgin and Child attended by St. Sebastian and the Magdalene.
- A Riposo. Formerly in the Duke of Buckingham's Collection.
- St. Jerome kneeling before a Crucifix.

ROBINEAU, C., a French portrait painter, born about the middle of the 18th century. He practised in Paris, where he afterwards held the appointment of Inspector of Drawing Schools. There is a portrait by him of Abel, the musician, at Hampton Court, and one of George IV. when Prince of Wales, in the Royal Collections. Both are small full-lengths.

ROBINS, THOMAS S. In 1839 he was nominated one of the original members of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, but resigned in 1866. His marine and landscape pictures were long a feature of the exhibitions. He died in 1880. Works:

- London. S. Kensington } Calais Harbour.
Museum. }
 " " } Shipping—a Fresh Breeze.
 " " } Hay Barges off Reculver.

ROBINS, WILLIAM, an English engraver in mezzotinto, who flourished about the year 1730, by whom we have a few portraits; among others, that of William Warren, LL.D.; after Heims.

ROBINSON, JOHN, portrait painter, born at Bath in 1715, came to London when he was young, and entered the studio of John Vanderbank, under whose tuition he reached considerable proficiency. He afterwards distinguished himself as a portrait painter, and succeeded Jervas in his house in Cleveland Court. For a time he was extensively employed, though his colouring was faint and feeble. He was accustomed to dress his sitters in Vandeyck costume. He died in 1745.

ROBINSON, JOHN HENRY, an English engraver, born at Bolton in 1796. He came to London when young, and studied under James Heath. His early practice included book illustration; his best work in this line was for Rogers' 'Italy.' He attained great excellence in his profession, and was prominent in the agitation for the admission of engravers to the Academy, of which he was elected an associate in 1856, and a full member in 1867. His method was fine, in which he contrived to get peculiar richness. He married a lady of property, and retired to Petworth, where he died in 1871. Amongst his best plates are:

The Flower Girl; after Murillo.

The Emperor Theodosius refused admission to Milan

Cathedral by Archbishop Ambrose; after Van Dyck.

The Countess of Bedford; after the same.

The Mother and Child; after Leslie.

H. M. the Queen; after Partridge.

Napoleon and Pius VII.; after Wilkie.

The Wolf and the Lamb; after Mubready.

Little Red Riding-Hood; after Landseer.

ROBINSON, R., an English mezzotint engraver, who practised in the latter half of the 17th century. He chiefly engraved after his own designs, and his works have much merit. He died or retired from practice about 1690. Amongst his plates are:

Charles I.; after Van Dyck.

The Seven Bishops; on one sheet, each in a small oval.

Charlotte, Countess of Lichfield.

James, Duke of Monmouth.

William, Prince of Orange.

Frances, Duchess of Richmond.

Sir James Worsley.

Diana and Actæon.

ROBINSON, THOMAS, an English portrait painter who practised in London early in the 18th century. He lived in Golden Square. He studied for some time in Italy, where he became a master of Italian and a good musician. In his later years he was afflicted with blindness, and was mainly supported by the talents of his daughter, the famous singer, Anastasia Robinson, who married Lord Peterborough. Robinson died in 1755.

ROBINSON, THOMAS, an English portrait painter, born at Windermere, about the middle of the 18th century. He studied under Romney, with whom he lived for some years. Migrating to Ireland, he practised at Belfast from 1801 to 1808, and was patronized by Dr. Percy, Bishop of Dromore. He then removed to Dublin, where he became President of the Society of Artists, and died in 1810. There is a 'Procession in honour of Lord Nelson' by him at the Harbour Office, Belfast. Other works are :

Encounter between the King's Troops and Peasants at Ballynahinch.

The Giant's Causeway.

ROBINSON, WILLIAM, an English portrait painter, born at Leeds in 1799. He had to overcome parental opposition and many difficulties, before he could make his way to London and enter first the studio of Sir Thomas Lawrence and then the schools of the Academy. Returning to his native town in 1823, he obtained a good local practice, his chief patron being Earl de Grey. He painted for the United Service Club, portraits of the Duke of Wellington, Lord Nelson, George III., and Sir John Moore. He died at Leeds in 1839.

ROBIONOI, DE., a Flemish artist, who flourished in the middle of the 16th century. The only known works of this painter are three pictures at Verviers, which seem to belong to the school of Lambert Lombard. One of these is signed and dated 1560.

ROBSON, GEORGE FENNEL, an eminent landscape painter in water-colours, and native of Durham, was born in 1790. His taste for drawing displayed itself at a very early age, and Bewick's book of 'Quadrupeds,' then lately published, became, after nature, the favourite subject of his study. It seems that he never received any regular instruction in the rules of art, but that all his knowledge was derived from observing artists who came down to Durham to sketch the scenery in its vicinity. At the age of sixteen, with only five pounds in money, he left his father's house and travelled to London. There he made drawings, which he exposed in the shop window of a carver and gilder, and sold for small sums. By these means he not only supported himself for twelve months, but was enabled to return the five pounds he had received from his father. He now published a view of his native city, and the funds derived from the speculation enabled him to visit the Highlands of Scotland. He dressed himself as a shepherd, and with his wallet at his back, and Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel' in his pocket, he wandered over the mountains in all seasons. He left many transcripts of the beautiful scenery of Loch Katrine and its neighbourhood. Though especially inspired by the grandeur of the Highlands, he did not confine himself to Scotland, but visited the Lakes of Cumberland and Westmoreland, made himself familiar with North Wales, and crossed over to Ireland to depict the beauties of Killarney. He was a constant exhibitor with the Water-colour Society; on one occasion he contributed no less than thirty-eight drawings. Robert Hills, who lived for a time in the same house, inserted animals, especially deer, in some of his drawings. Robson died in London, September 8, 1833. It was supposed that his death was caused by something poisonous in the food on the 'James Watt' steamship, in which he had travelled from London to Stockton-on-Tees in the last days of August. Works :

"	"	Loch Coruisk, Skye.
"	"	Conisborough Castle, Yorks.

Besides the 'Views of Durham,' Robson published 'Outlines of the Grampians,' and 'Scenery of the Grampian Mountains.' Britton also published from his drawings 'Picturesque Views of the British Cities.'

ROBUSTI, DOMENICO, son and disciple of Jacopo Robusti, was born at Venice in 1562. He followed in the footsteps of his father at a very respectful distance. His principal works are in the Sala di Consiglio, and in the Scuola di S. Marco at Venice; in some of these he is said to have been much assisted by his father. He was more successful in portraits than in history, and painted many of the principal personages of his time. He died in 1637.

ROBUSTI, JACOPO, called IL TINTORETTO, 'the little dyer,' on account of his father's trade, was born at Venice in 1519. He may be considered the head of the Venetian School in the second and less glorious half of its supreme period, the sixteenth century. He is said to have shown his inclination for art almost from his infancy, and to have covered the walls of his father's house with childish sketches. The latter, recognizing his genius, determined that he should become a painter, and after some elementary teaching, Jacopo was received into the school of Titian. Here he studied for a short time, (according to Ridolfi, only ten days,) when his master's jealousy was aroused by the vigour and spirit of some designs made by the new-comer, and fearing a future rival, Titian dismissed the too-promising pupil. Robusti's ambition seems, however, to have only received a fresh impetus from this indignity, and he conceived the project of forming a new school, the characteristic of which should be a union of the dignity and grandeur of Michel-angelo's design with the glow and splendour of Titian's colour. He established himself in a small atelier, over the door of which he inscribed the device: "Il Disegno di Michelagnolo, e il Colorito di Tiziano," and in a short time gained a considerable following. Here he worked indefatigably, making copies of Titian's pictures, and drawings from casts of Michel-angelo's sculptures, and of antiques, taken by Daniele da Volterra, which he procured from Florence. He frequently worked by lamplight, for the purpose of giving greater breadth and power to his effects of chiaroscuro. To acquire a knowledge of foreshortening, in which the Venetians, as a school, fell short of the Lombards, he made models of wax and chalk which he hung up in his studio, in a variety of positions, and drew them from every point of view, and under different conditions of artificial light. He also attended anatomical lectures and dissections, to acquaint himself more perfectly with the facts of muscular construction.

To this capacity for taking pains, he united a genius which Vasari has described as "terrible"—an extraordinary range and wildness of imagination, and a facility and despatch in execution, which appeared to his contemporaries little short of miraculous. The members of the Brotherhood of San Rocco, at Venice, wishing to place in their church a painting representing the Apotheosis of their patron saint, commissioned some of the most famous artists of the day, Paolo Veronese, Andrea Schiavone, Salviati, Zuccaro, and Tintoretto, to prepare sketches from which a choice might be made. On the day appointed for the decision, Tintoretto produced his finished picture, to the amazement of all present. The astonished competitors, lost in admiration of this feat, dubbed him "Il furioso Tintoretto," a nickname which he amply justified by later achievements.

The impetuosity of his genius, and the extraordinary promptness of his hand, together with his ardent desire for opportunities of distinguishing himself, induced him to paint several large works for the convents and monasteries at Venice, for little more than the cost of the materials. The effect of this unusual readiness and despatch was naturally the frequent production of works unworthy of his powers. The consequent inequalities in his achievements justify the remark of Annibale Carracci, that "Tintoretto was sometimes equal to Titian, often inferior to Tintoretto." On the first appearance of his 'Miracle of St. Mark,' Pietro Aretino, the vilifier of almost every one else, wrote to Tintoretto, greatly commending the work, but adding: "Happy would you be if, instead of being so hasty, you could prevail on yourself to be a little more patient."

A commission for which Tintoretto successfully competed, even with Titian in the field, was the decoration of one of the great halls in the Doge's Palace, with a painting commemorating the victory over the Turks at Lepanto, in 1571, an immense composition, which he finished in twelve months. His masterpieces were chiefly produced during the first ten years of his activity; three of his finest works he distinguished by signing, contrary to his usual practice. These are: 'The Marriage at Cana' (now in the Sacristy of the Salute at Venice), the 'Crucifixion' (in the Scuola di San Rocco), and the famous 'The Slave,' or 'Miracle of St. Mark' above-mentioned. This last represents a Venetian slave, who, condemned to martyrdom by the Turks, has invoked the aid of St. Mark. The saint appears; the instruments of the executioners are shattered, and the crowd of persecutors is dispersed. In this fine work the artist is at his best. The composition is grand and judicious, the design correct, the chiaroscuro impressive, and the colour as fine as Titian. The types, too, are dignified and well chosen to a degree unusual with Tintoretto, who aimed rather at animation and vigour than at grace and beauty, and took his models for apostles and saints as he found them to his hand in the fishermen and gondoliers of his native city. Among the most famous of his other works are the colossal 'Paradiso' in the Doge's Palace, the largest picture in existence, measuring eighty-four feet by thirty-four; 'The Golden Calf,' and 'Last Judgment,' each about fifty feet long; and the series of fifty-seven works in the Scuola di San Rocco, now in a very bad state of preservation, and greatly obscured by dust and dirt.

Tintoretto's work suffered from the mistaken tendency in favour of rapid production and preposterous dimensions, which exercised such an evil influence on Venetian art towards the close of the 16th century. That he was capable of elaboration as delicate and minute as that of a miniaturist he showed in the 'Susanna' of the Casa Barbarigo at S. Polo, in which he represented "in a small space, a park containing birds and rabbits, and all the adjuncts of a pleasure-garden, all carefully finished."

In addition to his vast historical works, Tintoretto produced many portraits, in which his art, having less scope for its characteristic defects, shows to great advantage. He particularly excelled in the rendering of human flesh, an excellence which was marred towards the close of his career by his abuse of a certain purplish tint. His use of dark grounds for most of his later pictures has caused them to lower very much in tone. He continued to practise at Venice to an advanced age, and produced a vast number of works, in which he was greatly assisted by scholars. The most important members of his school were his own son Domenico, his daughter Marietta, and the two (?) Greeks, Domenico Theotocopuli and Antonio Vasilacchi, called respectively Il Greco and Aliense. Tintoretto died at Venice on the 31st of May, 1594. Works :

ROBUSTI, MARIETTA, the daughter of Jacopo Robusti, born at Venice in 1560, was instructed in art by her father, and devoting herself to portrait painting as an art suited to her sex, she acquired considerable reputation. She painted many of the principal personages at Venice, but her celebrity was not confined to her native country. She was invited to the court of the Emperor Maximilian and to that of King Philip II. of Spain; but her father's affection prevented an acceptance of either invitation. She died in 1590.

ROCCA, ANTONIO, painter, practising in Italy about the middle of the 17th century. The details of his life and works are unknown, but he is mentioned by various writers of his age as a foreign artist of much excellence, working in Rome and in Piedmont. He is said to have been a monk, and to have died at Rome about 1660.

ROCCA, DANIELE JACOPO, painter, born at Rome. He was a pupil of Daniele da Volterra, and was an artist of mediocre talent. He died at Rome in 1600, at a very advanced age.

ROCCA, MICHELE, called also PARMIGIANO the younger and MICHELE DA PARMA, was born at Parma in 1671. He practised in Rome, and died some time after 1751. He was gifted with some talent, and worked in the manner of P. da Cortona. In the Munich Gallery there is an 'Adoration of the Shepherds' by him.

ROCCADIRAME, ANGELO, painter, born at Naples in 1396. Several of his works are to be found in the churches of his native city, among the best is an 'Archangel Raphael' in SS. Severino e Sosio.

ROCHARD, FRANÇOIS, a miniature painter, born in France in 1798. He studied in the Paris Academy, and about 1820 migrated to London, where he exhibited for many years at the Royal Academy. He died at Notting Hill in 1858.

ROCHARD, SIMON JACQUES, a French miniature painter, the elder brother of F. Rochard, was born in Paris in 1788. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1813, and studied under Merimée and Isabey. After practising in Paris he settled in England, where he obtained a large and fashionable connection. He exhibited at the Royal Academy for many years, but in 1850 retired to Brussels, where he died.

ROCHE, BENEDICT, painter, born at Valencia. He was a pupil of Gaspar de la Huerta, and it is said that his works were sometimes mistaken for those of his master. He died in 1785.

ROCHE, JEAN, (or BROCHE), a French painter, born at Carcassonne. In 1365 he painted several pictures for the 'Église des Domes' at Avignon.

ROCHE, SAMPSON TOWGOOD, miniature painter, practised at Bath early in the 19th century. He exhibited at the Academy in 1817, but his practice seems to have been purely local.

ROCHERS, ETIENNE DES. See DESROCHERS.

ROCHETTET, MICHEL, a French painter of portraits and historical subjects, who flourished in the 16th century, and worked at the decoration of the Louvre, and of the palace at Fontainebleau, under the direction of Primaticcio.

ROCHETTI. See FAENZA, MARCO ANTONIO DI.

ROCHFORD, P. DE, a native of France, flourished about the year 1720. He engraved several of the plates for the large folio collection of 'Views of the Palace and Gardens of Versailles,' published by P. Menant. He also engraved some prints from the pictures of Jean Baptiste Santerre, and other painters. He resided some time in Portugal, where he died.

ROCHIENNE, PIERRE, a French engraver on wood, who flourished about the year 1551. In conjunction with J. Ferlato, he executed a set of very indifferent wood-cuts for the New Testament, in Latin, published in 1551. He also engraved some cuts for the 'Legende dorée,' published in 1557.

ROCQUE, J., was probably a native of France, but about 1750 he resided in England, where he gravated maps and a few views from his own designs. Among these are two large views of Wanstead House, Essex. Vivaret engraved a view of Kensington Palace after a drawing by Rocque.

RODDELSTET, (or RUDESTEDT), PETER. See GOTTLANDT, PETER.

RODE, CHRISTIAN BERNHARD, painter and engraver, was born in Berlin in 1725. Having learned the rudiments of his art in his native city, he went to Paris, where he studied for a time under Charles Vanloo and Pesne. He afterwards travelled to Italy, and on his return to Berlin met with very flattering encouragement as a painter of history and portraits. He painted several altar-pieces for the churches at Berlin and the other towns in Prussia, and was employed by the king in embellishing the palace of Sans Souci. In 1783 he became Director of the Academy at Berlin. He etched a great number of plates from his own designs and those of others. There is a MS. catalogue of 309 plates by him in the British Museum Print Room. The following are his principal works:

The ceilings in the New Palace, Sans Souci.
A Descent from the Cross. (Marienkirche, Berlin.)
The Agony in the Garden. (Marienkirche, Berlin.)
The Ascension. (Rostock.)

ENGRAVINGS.

A Head of Christ.
The Maskers; after Schlüter.
Plates for Gessner's 'Idylls' and Gellert's 'Fables.'

RODE, JOHANN HEINRICH, the younger brother of Christian Bernhard Rode, born at Berlin in 1727, was brought up to the profession of a goldsmith, but abandoned that pursuit to devote himself to engraving. Having executed some plates at Berlin with considerable success, he went to Paris, where he became a pupil of Johann Georg Wille. During his residence in that city he engraved a few plates in the finished style of his instructor, and on his return to Berlin published several prints from the designs of his brother. He had acquired a reputation, when his career was cut short by his death in 1759. Among others, we have the following prints by him:

The Portrait of Johann Georg Wille; after Schmidt.
A Head of Epicurus; after J. M. Preisler.
Jacob wrestling with the Angel; after C. B. Rode.
An Ecce Homo; after the same.
A Sacrifice of the Vestals; after the same.

RODE, (or ROODE,) NIELS, NELIS, or CORNELIS, painter, born at Copenhagen in 1743. He came to Holland, and studied at the Hague under the portrait-painter J. G. Ziesenis. In 1776 he became a member of the 'Pictura' Society at the Hague, and finally established himself at Leyden. He died in 1794. There is a portrait group by him in the Town-hall at the Hague.

RODEN, MATHYS, a Flemish painter of the 15th century, who practised at Ghent, and became a member of the Corporation in 1475. In 1477 he designed some allegorical figures for the fête in honour of the entry of Duke Maximilian. No record of his works later than 1483 has come down to us.

RODERIGO. See SICILLIANI.

RODERIGO. See RODRIGUEZ.

RODERMONT, (or ROTTERMONDT,) called ROTERMANS, was a native of Holland, and flourished about the year 1640. From the style of his etching he appears to have been a painter, and to have imitated Rembrandt with success. He engraved a few portraits, now become scarce, among which are:

Sir William Waller, Serjeant Major-general to the Parliament, with a Battle in the background; after C. Jansen.

Joannes Secundus, a Latin Poet of the Hague; signed Rodermont, fecit.

RODRIGUEZ, ALFONSO, a painter of Spanish extraction, born at Messina in 1578, studied the works of Titian, Raphael, and Michael Angelo. His best works are to be found at Messina: 'The Impotent Man at Bethesda,' in S. Cosimo de' Medici; 'The Murder of the Innocents,' in S. Elena de Constantino; 'Madonna with St. John, and St. Nicholas,' in S. Filippo Neri. He died at Messina in 1648.

RODRIGUEZ, DOMINGO, a Portuguese painter and Augustine monk, was living at Salamanca in 1682. He painted many pictures of saints and martyrs for the convent of his order in that city.

RODRIGUEZ, FRATE ADRIAN. See DIERIX.

RODRIGUEZ, GIOVANNI BERNARDINO, called IL PITTOR SANTO, the son of Alfonso, and nephew and pupil of Luigi Rodriguez. After his uncle's death he formed a close connection with Domenichino, which continued until the latter was driven from Naples. Rodriguez has much of the tenderness of Domenichino. He died in 1667 at Naples, where the following works of his are to be seen: 'The Virgin with the Child rescuing a Soul from Satan,' altar-piece for the church of the Madonna del Soccorso; 'S. Carlo in glory, with angels singing and playing,' in a chapel of the church of Gesu Nuovo.

RODRIGUEZ, JUAN, OF BEJAR, was employed in 1476 by the Duke of Alva to execute 'arabesques' in his palace of Barco di Avila.

RODRIGUEZ, LUIGI, brother of Alfonso Rodriguez, born at Messina in 1585, studied at Rome and Naples. In the latter city he painted for some time with Bellisario Corenzio. On his return to Messina he executed twelve scenes from the Trojan War, in monochrome. There is a tradition that he was poisoned at Naples by Corenzio.

RODRIGUEZ DE MIRANDA, FRANCISCO and NICOLAS, painters, the less famous brothers of Pedro. FRANCISCO was born in 1701, and was appointed painter to the Master of the Horse. In 1746 he painted twelve large pictures, representing incidents in the life of S. Peter, for the convent of San Gil at Madrid. He died in 1751. NICOLAS distinguished himself as a landscape-painter, and died at Madrid shortly before Francisco.

RODRIGUEZ DE MIRANDA, PEDRO, born at Madrid in 1696, was the nephew and scholar of the elder Juan Garcia de Miranda. (See GARCIA DE MIRANDA.) Under the auspices of Father Aller, confessor of the Infant Don Philip, fourth son of Philip V., he painted an Immaculate Conception so pleasing to the prince that he insisted on its being inscribed with the artist's name. He executed a half-length portrait of Aller, and various religious subjects for the Bare-footed Carmelites. He chiefly distinguished himself, however, by landscapes and scenes of low life, as well as panels of coaches, which were sufficiently prized to be preserved when the coaches themselves were worn out or disused. He succeeded his uncle as painter to the King, and died in 1766.

RODRIGUEZ DE RIBERA, ISIDRO, was court painter at Madrid in the early part of the 18th century, and in 1725 was appointed Valner of Antique Pictures by royal letters patent.

RODRIGUEZ, SIMON, a Spanish painter of some talent, who flourished in the 16th century. The details of his life are unknown, but at the monastery of Belem, on the Tagus, there is a 'Nativity' of much merit by him.

RODRIGUEZ-BLANES, BENITO, painter, born at Granada in 1650, was an imitator of the style of Alonzo Cano. He took orders, and gained a high reputation both for his talent as a painter and for the blamelessness of his life. Among the works he is known to have executed were: 'A Madonna,' for the staircase of the Archbishop's palace at Granada, and other paintings for the church of Nuestra Señora de las Angustias, for the church of the Augustine order, and for that of the Bare-footed Carmelites. In the Munich Gallery there is a portrait of a naval officer by him. He died at Granada in 1737.

ROECKEL, WILHELM, historical painter, born at Schleissheim in 1801, where his father was a glazier. After studying in the Munich Academy under Langer, he went to Düsseldorf. On his return to Munich in 1827 he took up glass painting. In the Auerkirche at Munich is a picture of the 'Marriage of Cana' by him. He died at Munich in 1845.

ROED, HOLGER PETER, was the son of JÜRGEN ROED, a living Danish painter, and was born at Copenhagen in 1846. He studied at first under his father, but in 1861 entered the Academy, where he received a gold medal for a 'Scene from the Deluge.' In 1870 he went to Paris, Rome, and Naples, but returned home after two years' absence. He died prematurely in 1874.

ROEDER, JULIUS SIEGMUND, the son of poor parents, was born at Berlin, 1829, entered the studio of Dr. Herbig at the age of fifteen, and the Academy a few years later. He had great difficulty in maintaining himself, and was obliged to curtail travels undertaken to complete his art education. A fortunate marriage improved his prospects, but his wife soon died, and he left Weimar, where he had been living with her. His picture 'The last Blessing' (in the possession of the Emperor of Germany) was exhibited in 1850. His 'Grape Seller' is now in the Berlin Gallery. He died in 1860.

ROEDIG, J. C., a painter of fruit and flower pieces, was born at the Hague in 1751. He was a pupil of Van der Aa, and became secretary to the School of Art at the Hague in 1794. He died in 1802.

ROEHN, ADOLPHE EUGÈNE, born in Paris in 1780, belonged to the school of the Restoration. He began his career with a 'Market Scene,' and a 'Halt of Spanish Soldiers,' and in 1866 he exhibited his 'Dancing Bear.' He was professor of drawing in the Collège Louis le-Grand. He died at Vannes in 1867.

ROEHN, JEAN ALPHONSE, the son of Adolphe Roehn, born in Paris in 1799, was a pupil of Regnault and Gros. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1813, and afterwards became a colleague of his father at the Collège Louis-le-Grand. His works were rather in the style of the 18th century. He died in Paris in 1864.

ROELAS. See DE LAS ROELAS.

ROELOFSWAART, ADOLF, painter, born at the Hague. He practised towards the close of the 18th century, painting historical subjects and portraits, and was a pupil of Abraham Verkolje, of Amsterdam. He lived for some time at Delft, and finally settled at Ryswick, near the Hague.

ROEPEL, CONRAED, (KOENRAED,) an eminent Dutch painter of flowers and fruit, born at the Hague in 1679. He was placed for some time under the care of Constantine Netscher, with the intention of becoming a portrait painter; but the delicacy of his constitution made it necessary for him to quit the Hague, and to reside at a country-house of his father's, where he amused himself in cultivating flowers. This occupation led him to an attempt to paint the objects of his care. Some of his pictures were bought by a florist at the Hague, who afterwards kept him supplied with flowers. In 1716 he was invited to the court of the Elector Palatine, at Düsseldorf. On the death of his patron he returned to the Hague, where he painted some pictures for Prince William of Hesse, and the families of Fager and Lormier. There are specimens of his art in the Berlin and Cassel Galleries. In 1718 he was received into the Pictura Society, of which he was the Director at the time of his death, in 1748.

ROER, JAKOB VAN DER. See VAN DER ROER.

ROESTRAETEN, PIETER, portrait and still-life painter, born at Haarlem in 1627, was brought up under Frans Hals, whose daughter he married, and whose style in portrait painting he followed for some time with success. Attracted by the fame of Sir Peter Lely's good fortune in England, he visited this country in the reign of Charles II. He was received by Lely with great kindness, and introduced to the king; but it does not appear that he met with much encouragement at Court, as none of his pictures are to be found in the palaces, or in the royal catalogues. The story of Lely's jealousy of Roestraeten seems to be unfounded. Roestraeten painted with great success vases of gold and silver, bas-reliefs, musical instruments, &c., which he designed with precision. His pictures were well coloured, and touched both with delicacy and freedom. The exact date of his visit to England is not ascertained; but he must have resided here many years, as he met with an accident at the fire of London, and was lame for the rest of his life. He died in London in 1698.

ROETTIERS, FRANÇOIS, was born in Paris in 1702, of a Flemish family. His ancestors had for many years been medallists to the French mint. He was probably a scholar of Nicholas de Largilliere, from whose designs he etched the following plates:

Christ bearing His Cross.
The Crucifixion.

There are a few others by him of less importance. He died in 1770.

ROFFE, JOHN, an English engraver, born in 1769. His practice was chiefly confined to architectural plates. He died at Holloway in 1850. Specimens of his work are to be found in:

The Marbles in the British Museum. 1812.
Murphy's Arabian Antiquities of Spain. 1816.

ROGEL, JOHANN, an engraver on wood, practised at Augsburg about the year 1567.

ROGEL, MAËSTRO. See VAN DER WEYDEN, ROGER.

ROGER, ADOLPHE, a French historical painter, born at Palaiseau in 1797. He studied under Gros, and obtained honours in 1822, 1831, and 1841. He had considerable practice as a decorative painter, and executed works at the churches of St. Elizabeth, St. Roch, and Notre Dame de Lorette, in Paris. He died in 1880. Amongst his works we may also name:

Versailles.	Gallery.	Battle of Civitella. 1842.
"	Trianon.	Charles V. entering the Louvre. 1835.
"	"	Taking the Veil.
"	"	Ordination of Africans.

ROGER DE BRUGES. See VAN DER WEYDEN, ROGER.

ROGER, EUGÈNE, a French historical and portrait painter, born at Sens in 1807. He studied under Hersent, and obtained the second prix de Rome in 1827. Six years after he obtained the coveted grand prix. He died in Paris in 1840. Amongst his works are:

Nancy.	Museum.	Finding the body of Charles the Bold.
Versailles.	Gallery.	Charlemagne crossing the Alps. 1837.
"	"	Raising the Siege of Salerno. 1839.

ROGERS, GEORGE, amateur, painted landscapes of some merit, and was an exhibitor at the Spring Gardens Exhibition in 1761 and 1762. He married a daughter of Jonathan Tyers, the proprietor of Vauxhall, and settled in the Isle of Wight. He died about 1786.

ROGERS, PHILIP HUTCHINS, an English landscape painter, born at Plymouth in 1794. His works were chiefly inspired by Devonshire scenery, and occasionally appeared at the Academy up to 1835. During his latter years he resided in Germany, and died at Lichtenthal, near Baden-Baden, in 1853. Amongst his works are:

Karlsruhe.	Gallery.	View of Plymouth Harbour. View of Baden.
"	"	Two views of Saltram.
Saltram House.	"
Strasbourg.	Museum.	Entrance to Plymouth Harbour.

ROGERS, WILLIAM, an English engraver, born in London about the year 1545. It has not been ascertained from whom he learned the art of engraving, but he worked with the burin in a neat though stiff style. He engraved a few portraits, and several frontispieces, and other book ornaments. He was one of the earliest English engravers to practise the art as a profession. He usually marked his plates with the cipher WR.

We have the following prints by him:

PORTRAITS.

Queen Elizabeth; a small upright plate.
Henry IV. of France; a whole length.
The Emperor Maximilian; a whole length.
The Earl of Essex, Earl Marshal of England.
The Earl of Cumberland.
Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk.
Sir John Harrington; the title to his 'Orlando Furioso.'
Thomas Moffat; a frontispiece to his 'Theatre of Insects.'
John Gerarde, Surgeon; frontispiece to his 'Herbal.'

ROGERSON, R., portrait painter, who lived in the middle of the 17th century. He painted a room in the Pope's Head Tavern, in London, in 1688 (Pepys).

ROGERY, ROGER DE, a French artist, who, about 1570, painted a series of pictures at Fontainebleau, from the legend of Hercules.

ROGHMAN, GEERTRUYDT, the daughter of Roeland Roghman, engraved after her father. Bartsch has described Le Chateau de Zuylen, engraved by her after her father's design, and there are also by her a 'Massacre of the Innocents,' after Tintoretto, and about twenty plates more of less importance.

ROGHMAN, HR. LMR., and P. H. ROGHMAN. These names are signed to two or three engraved portraits. The first appears on a portrait of M. Barent Jansz, æt. 53, 1627—H. L. Roghman sculpsit—the H. L. and R. forming a cipher; the second on a portrait of A. I. Roscius in an oval—P. H. Roghman, sculpsit. The latter signature is also affixed to a print after Rubens, and to a portrait of Erasmus.

ROGHMAN, (or ROGMAN,) ROELAND, a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1597. It is not known by whom he was instructed in art, but he was a good painter of landscapes. His pictures usually represent views in Holland, and on the borders of Germany. They exhibit a close attention to nature in the forms, but his colour is dark and disagreeable. He has left several landscape etchings. His landscapes have a strong resemblance to those of Rembrandt, with whom he was on terms of intimacy. He sometimes painted distances to the figures of Lingelbach. His drawings with the pen are very free and spirited, and prove that he was an artist of much talent. They are very numerous. The Rotterdam Museum possesses a collection of twenty-five of the best. His etchings, like his drawings, represent views of chateaux and ruined buildings. Several of the plates have been re-bitten, and these appear scratchy and crude. His prints are thirty-nine in number; six, published by Peter Nolpe with the title of 'Views in the Wood at the Hague,' are retouched and finished with the graver by Nolpe himself. It is supposed that Roghman died in the workhouse at Amsterdam about 1685.

ROGIER, NICOLAUS, called also KAYNOOT RUGIERO, a Flemish landscape painter, who flourished from 1520 to about 1540, and is said to have painted in the style of Joachim Patinir.

ROKERZ, HENDRICK, an obscure Dutch engraver, by whom we have a few portraits, very indifferently executed; among them that of William Henry, Prince of Orange, on Horseback; after P. Janse.

ROKES, HENDRICK. See SORGH.

ROLAN, FANGUERBE, a Spanish painter, who practised in the neighbourhood of Seville, and in 1653 painted a picture of the Virgin and St. Francis, which was bought by the Tribunal of Indian Commerce for 4533 maravedis.

ROLI, GIUSEPPE MARIA, (ROLLI,) born at Bologna in 1654, was a scholar of Domenico Maria Canuti. There are several of his frescoes in the churches of his native city. We have also some etchings by him after the principal Bolognese painters, among which are the following:

Charity; after Lodovico Carracci.

A Sibyl; after Lorenzo Pasinelli.

Lucretia in the act of stabbing herself; after Canuti.

The art of Drawing; after Pasinelli.

His brother, ANTONIO, born at Bologna in 1643, is mentioned by Crespi as a decorative painter of much merit, and the pupil and assistant of Angiol Michele Colonna. He died in 1696.

ROLLAND, AUGUSTE, painter, architectural draughtsman, and modeller, born at Metz in 1797. He had much versatility in his art, painting landscape, genre pictures, and still-life. His travels in Switzerland and the Pyrenees furnished him with many subjects. He died in 1859. By him:

Metz.	Musée.	Cow-stable in the Pyrenees.
"	"	L'Étang de Boulogny.
"	"	Cows crossing a Stream.

ROLLER, JEAN, painter, born in Paris in 1798. He began life as a piano-maker, but afterwards set up as a portrait painter, and was also a sculptor. He was a pupil of Gautherot. He died in 1866. Works:

Portrait of M. Coriolis (Académie des Sciences).

Portrait of M. Dumas, president of the Académie des Sciences.

ROLLIN, J., a French painter of little note, who painted at Avignon at the beginning of the 17th century, and whose works had some local popularity.

ROLLMANN, JULIUS, landscape painter, born in 1827, was originally apprenticed to a decorative painter at Düsseldorf, and at the same time worked at the Academy. Thence he went to the Berlin Academy. After travelling in the Bavarian mountains he settled in Munich, but returned again to Düsseldorf, and in 1858 he was in Italy. His studies in Bavaria, the Tyrol, and Venice, displayed great originality. In the National Gallery at Berlin there is a 'Mountain Scenery, Bavaria,' by him. He died at Düsseldorf in 1865.

ROLLO, —, a painter of whom nothing is known, except that the name appears on an 'Ecce Homo,' in the manner of Guido. The signature is Rollo Gallois, F.

ROLLOS, PIETER, a German engraver, who resided at Frankfurt about the year 1620. He engraved a frontispiece to a book of Emblems, by G. de Monteny, published in that city in 1619. He executed a few other book plates, in a very indifferent style. He sometimes signed his prints P. ROL. F.

ROLLS, CHARLES, draughtsman and engraver, born 1800. He assisted the Findens in their 'Gallery of British Art,' and also exhibited some fruit and flower pieces at the British Institution between 1855 and 1857.

ROMA, SPIRIDONE, an Italian portrait painter and decorator, who practised in England in the 18th century. His works appeared at the Academy from 1774 to 1778, and he painted a ceiling at the old East India House. He died in 1787.

ROMAGNESI, JOSEPH ANTOINE, lithographer, born in Paris, 1776. He is best known as a sculptor, but also published various prints for illustration, among which were a set for 'Les Aventures de Sappho' (1818). He died in 1852. Two more artists of the same name and family were at work at the same time.

ROMAIN, — DE LA RUE, painted landscapes in the manner of Jan Asselyn, Swaneveldt, and Jan Both. No details of his life are known, but excellent pictures by him occasionally appear, and pass for the work of one or other of those masters.

ROMAIN, LE. See MIGNARD, PIETER.

ROMAN, BARTOLOMÉ, a Spanish painter, born at

Madrid in 1596. He was first a scholar of Vincenzo Carducci, but finished his education in the school of Velazquez. He was an eminent painter of history, and executed several considerable works for the church of the Franciscans at Alcalá de Los Henares. In the sacristy of the Padres Cayetanos, at Madrid, there are some pictures by him, which his biographer, Palomino, compares to those of Rubens. He died at Madrid in 1659.

ROMANELLI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, born at Viterbo in 1610. Having shown an early inclination for art, his father sent him to Rome, where he had the good fortune of being taken under the protection of Cardinal Barberini, by whom he was placed in the school of Pietro da Cortona. His indefatigable application to his studies under that master rendered him in a few years one of the most promising young men in Rome; and he was left by his master to finish, during his absence in Lombardy, some paintings he had commenced in the Palazzo Barberini. On leaving the school of P. da Cortona, he altered his style, and adopted one distinguished by more elegance but less vigour. He painted a 'Deposition from the Cross,' for the church of S. Ambrogio, which was so much applauded, that Pietro, alarmed for his own reputation, painted a 'Stoning of Stephen,' in which even Bernini admitted his superiority. Romanelli painted for the church of St. Peter the 'Presentation in the Temple,' which has been executed in mosaic, and the original placed at the Certosa. On the death of Urban VIII., and the succession of Innocent to the papal chair, Cardinal Barberini left Rome for Paris, where he recommended the talents of Romanelli to Mazarin. Romanelli was engaged to decorate some apartments in the Palais Mazarin and in the Louvre, where he painted a series of subjects from the 'Æneid.' On his return to Rome he was employed in several important works, and was preparing for a second journey to France, when he died at Viterbo in 1662. Works:

Hampton Court.	Copy of Guido's 'Triumph of Bacchus.'
Munich. Pinakothek.	Herodias with the head of John the Baptist.
Paris. Bibliothèque National.	A series of Classical Frescoes in the Galerie Massarine.
" Louvre.	Venus and Æneas.
" "	Venus and Adonis.
" "	Israelites gathering Manna.
" "	A series of Classical frescoes in the Musée des Antiques, the Salles des Saisons, de la Paix, de Septime Sévère, and des Antonins.
Rome. S. M. degli Angeli.	Presentation in the Temple.
" S. Agostino.	S. Thomas of Villanova.
" S. Ambrogio.	Descent from the Cross.
Viterbo. Cathedral.	Glory of S. Lorenzo.

ROMANELLI, URBANO, the son of Giovanni Francesco Romanelli, born at Viterbo about the year 1645, was instructed by his father, after whose death he became a disciple of Ciro Ferri. There are some of his works in the churches at Velletri and Viterbo. He died young, in 1682.

ROMANET, ANTOINE LOUIS, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1748. He was a pupil of J. G. Wille, and afterwards resided at Basle, where he engraved several plates under the direction of Christian de Mehel. He was one of the engravers employed on the plates in the 'Galerie du Palais

Royal,' the 'Galerie d'Orleans,' the 'Cabinet Le Brun,' 'Picturesque Views in Switzerland,' and other works of a like kind. He also engraved many detached pieces after Italian, Dutch, and French painters. He died in 1807. The best plates, perhaps, are:

PORTRAITS.

Charles Theodore, Elector of Bavaria; after P. Battoni.
Louis Francis de Bourbon, Prince of Conti; after Le Tellier.

John Grimoux, Painter; after a picture by himself.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

The Death of Adonis; after Kupetzky.
The Village Printseller; after Seekatz.
The Ballad Singer; after the same.

ROMANINO, GIROLAMO, was born about 1485 at Brescia, and is said to have first been the pupil of Stefano Rizzi. His family came from the small town of Romano, on the Serio, whence they took a surname which was already two generations old when it came to Girolamo. He was free of the Brescian Guild of Painters previous to 1510, in which year he finished and signed a 'Pietà' for the church of St. Lorenzo, which is now in Lord Wimborne's collection. One of his earliest existing altar-pieces is that of the church of S. Francesco, at Brescia, representing the 'Virgin and Child between St. Francis and St. Anthony, and four kneeling Saints,' which was probably finished before 1512. In that year Romanino went to Padua to avoid the troubles in which Brescia was involved by the wars between the Venetians and the French. When at Padua, Romanino found a home with the Benedictine Monks of Santa Giustina, and painted for them an altar-piece, of the 'Virgin and Child, attended by St. Benedict, St. Justina, St. Monica, and St. Proscodimo.' He also decorated their refectory with a 'Last Supper,' and finished an 'Enthroned Virgin and Child with Saints.' All three pictures are now in the Gallery at Padua. In 1517 he returned to Brescia, having paid a short visit to Cremona, where on his second visit in 1519-20 he painted four large frescoes in the cathedral, representing 'Christ before Pilate,' the 'Scourging,' the 'Crowning with Thorns,' and 'Christ delivered to the Jews.' On his return, finding Moretto established in Brescia, he entered into a friendly rivalry with that artist, and in 1521 joined him in a contract to embellish the chapel of the Corpus Christi in S. Giovanni; Romanino's part being the frescoes representing the 'Adoration of the Eucharist,' 'Two Evangelists,' and the 'Prophets'; also two canvases with the 'Resurrection of Lazarus,' and the 'Magdalen anointing the Saviour's Feet.' His next work was on the frescoes from scenes in the life of St. Dominic for the convent of his order in Brescia; the decoration of the Town-hall with various subjects; and the frescoes in the church of S. Salvatore. After this he painted a fresco in the castle of Malpaga, representing Bartolommeo Colleoni invested with the command of the Crusaders in the presence of the Pope and his Cardinals. In 1534 he painted a series of frescoes for the village church of the Madonna, near Pisogne, which, although much injured, still shows his great powers. His next undertaking was a series of scenes from the life of the Madonna, in fresco, at Vieno. This was followed by a series from the life of a Saint for the church of St.

Antonio at Breno, which are now much defaced. About 1540 Romanino, by the order of Cardinal Madruzzo, painted several subjects taken from sacred and profane history, in fresco, in the Castello of Trent, and, the same year, four scenes from the life of St. George in the church of that Saint at Verona. About 1541 he finished the organ shutters of the Duomo in Brescia, representing the Birth and the Visitation of the Virgin. His last known work was a picture of 'Christ's Sermon on the Mount,' painted for the Benedictines of Modena in 1557. His death is believed to have occurred in 1566. Many of the private collections and churches in Brescia contain examples by this master. Amongst those most worthy of note is 'The Communion of St. Apollonius,' in the church of St. Maria Calchera, and a 'Nativity' and a 'Pieta' in St. Guiseppe. Also:

ROMBORGH, —, a painter of Nimeguen, who was living at the commencement of the last century. He studied landscape painting at Rome, but chiefly in the works of the old masters. In his style he resembled Frédéric Moucheron.

ROMBOUITS, JAN, (or ROMBOUITS,) of the same family with Salomon Rombouts. He painted in Friesland about 1660, and is the author of several works attributed to Ruysdael and Hobbema. In the Berlin Museum there is by him a 'Wooded Landscape'; in the Stadel Institute at Frankfurt, a 'Park'; several works in the Brunswick Museum; and in the Dresden Gallery a picture of a 'Dutch Village.' There is a woody landscape in the Amsterdam Museum signed V. Rombouts. It is probable that he is the artist mentioned in the Haarlem archives under the name of Gilles (Jilles) Rombouts (1661-1663). Some writers have denied his existence altogether, holding that landscapes attributed to him are by Salomon Rombouts, and that the signature S. has been misread J.

ROMBOUITS, SALOMON, was a follower of Ruysdael. He painted principally landscapes and marine views. In the Hamburg Gallery is a winter landscape; in the Leipzig Museum a seashore at Scheveningen; and at Schleissheim two landscapes. The dates of his birth and death are not recorded, but he died in Haarlem before 1702.

ROMBOUITS, THEODORE, born at Antwerp in 1597, was a scholar of Abraham Janssens, under whom he studied until he was twenty years of age. In 1617 he travelled to Italy, and it was not long before his talents distinguished him as one of the most promising young artists at Rome. His works were sufficiently esteemed to secure him constant occupation; and after a residence of a few years in the capital of art, he had arrived at sufficient celebrity to be invited to visit Florence by the Grand Duke, who employed him in some considerable works for the Ducal Palace. After an absence of eight years he returned to Antwerp, whither the reputation he had acquired in Italy had preceded him, and he painted some pictures for the churches, which excited such general admiration that his vanity led him to believe his abilities equal, if not superior, to those of Rubens, who was at that time in full possession of his powers. This vanity incited him to more arduous exertions, and his happiest productions were conceived and executed under the feelings of emulation. Rombouts possessed a ready invention, and an uncommon facility of touch. He received the freedom of St. Luke in 1625. On the 17th September, 1627, he received a permit from the Burgomaster of Antwerp which allowed him to spend his wedding night outside the city without losing his right as a citizen, and he then married Anne, a member of the noble family of Van Thielen. By her he had one child, a daughter. Of his works, the most remarkable are the following: 'The Descent from the Cross,' in the cathedral at Ghent; 'St. Francis receiving the Stigmata,' and 'The Angel appearing to Joseph in his Dream,' in the church of the Recolets; and 'Themis with the Attributes of Justice,' in the Town-house. Rombouts died at Antwerp the 14th September, 1637. The year 1640 has also been given, but that is a mistake. He was interred in the Carmelite church.

ROMEGIALLO, GIOVANNI PIETRO, born at Morbegno, in the Valteline, in 1739, learned the rudiments of art from G. F. Cotta, an obscure painter of his native city, but afterwards went to Rome, where he became the pupil of Agostino Masucci. He was much occupied in copying the works of Guercino, Guido, and P. da Cortona. His pictures are in the collections at Como, and in the churches of the Valteline.

ROMEO, DON JOSÉ, a Spanish painter, born at Cervera, in the kingdom of Arragon, in 1701, went to Italy when he was young, and studied at Rome under Agostino Masucci. On his return to Spain he resided for some time at Barcelona, where he painted some pictures for the church of the Mercenarios Calzados. He afterwards visited Madrid, where he was taken into the service of Philip V. He died at Madrid in 1772.

ROMERSWALE, VAN. See MARINUS.

ROMEYN, WILLEM VAN, (ROMIJN,) a Dutch painter of landscapes, with cattle and figures, born at Haarlem in 1624, was a pupil of Berchem, to whose pictures those of Romeyn bear a great resemblance. They also show points of similarity with those of Karel du Jardin and Adrian van de Velde. They are generally small, well drawn and composed, and harmonious in colour. His pictures are in all the principal galleries of Europe, but are frequently attributed to one or other of the above-named masters. It may be added that some of his landscapes have a slight resemblance to those of Jan Both: it is probable that he had visited Italy. He died at Haarlem in 1693. Works:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Two landscapes with Cattle, signed W. Romijn .
"	"	Two ditto, signed W. Romeijn .
"	"	One ditto, signed W. R.
Berlin.	Museum.	Italian Landscape; W. Romijn .

London.	Dulwich Gal.	Two Cattle pieces; W. Romeijn .

ROMNEY, GEORGE, painter, was born at Dalton-le-Furness, Lancashire, on the 15th December, 1734. He belonged to a respectable yeoman family, whose original home had been near

Appleby, but the painter's grandfather had, during the troubles of the Civil War, been obliged to move further south. At Dalton he married at the age of sixty, and had several children. His son John, a cabinet-maker, married, in 1730, Anne Simpson, of Sladebank in Cumberland, and had by her a daughter and ten sons, of whom one was the painter. George Romney did not in his school life show any special aptitude for anything. He was accordingly removed in his eleventh year, and set to his father's trade. He soon developed a great fancy for mechanics, and employed his leisure in carving small figures in wood, and in the construction of experimental violins, a passion for music leading him to this last pursuit. It is not clearly known at what precise period Romney first showed an inclination for art, but we are told that during his apprenticeship he was in the habit of making sketches of his fellow-workmen, and that he got hold of a copy of Leonardo's 'Treatise on Painting,' which he read with deep interest, making copies of the engravings. Other sketches and likenesses done at this time showed so much talent that John Romney was persuaded to take his son, then nineteen years old, to Kendal, and to there apprentice him to an eccentric painter, Christopher Steele, whose love of dress and affection of French manners and tastes had gained for him the nickname of 'Count' Steele. Steele had studied in Paris under Vanloo, and was not without talent, but his idleness and extravagance made him a bad master. He neglected his pupil, employing him as a mere studio drudge. Romney allowed, however, that he gained experience even under these unfavourable conditions. Steele, finding that his practice as a portrait painter was an insufficient source of income, resolved to carry off a young lady of fortune, whose affections he had gained, and aided by Romney, he succeeded in wedding her at Gretna Green. The excitement and anxiety caused by this affair is said to have thrown Romney into a fever, through which he was nursed by Mary Abbot, a good and attractive girl, who lived with a widowed mother and a sister at Kendal. Between her and the painter an attachment sprang up, and on his recovery he married her, on the 14th Oct. 1756, Romney being nearly twenty-two years old. In the early days of his marriage he seems to have treated his wife with kindness. She, on her part, was devoted to him, and at first even kept him supplied with money, sending small sums concealed under the seals of her letters while he was on his professional tours with Steele. In 1757 Romney, who had grown weary of his apprenticeship, induced Steele to cancel the articles (which were for four years), and as a set off consented to remit a debt of ten pounds, borrowed at various times by his master. Romney's first work on his own account was a sign for the post-office at Kendal—a hand holding a letter, which long remained in the window. He practised at Kendal for five years, making a living by portrait painting at very modest prices—two guineas being his usual charge for a half-length. The Westmoreland people gave him commissions in plenty, and among his productions of this period are the portraits of Walter Strickland of Sizergh and his wife, Charles Strickland, Colonel Wilson of Abbot-hall, and Morland of Cappelthwaite, besides a few original compositions—'Lear awakened by Cordelia,' 'Lear in the Storm,' 'A Shandean Piece,' 'A Tooth drawn by Candle-light,' 'A Landscape with figures,' etc. About twenty of these he exhibited in the Town-hall at Kendal, and disposed of them by a lottery, which brought in the magnificent sum of £40.

As Romney's local fame increased his ambition took a wider range, and he longed to try his fortune in the capital, leaving his wife and two children behind him. The reasons for this last step have never been satisfactorily explained. Romney's natural disposition seems to have been kindly and affectionate; his wife proved herself in every way worthy of his first feeling for her, yet the fact remains that long after any doubts as to the success of his enterprise had been set at rest, and when he was at the height of his fame and worldly prosperity, she and her children remained in their obscure home in the north, and that in twenty-seven years Romney only twice paid her a hasty visit. In 1762, on the 14th March, Romney started for London. By rapid and continuous work at portrait painting he had raised a sum of nearly £100. Taking £30 for his own expenses, and leaving the surplus to his wife, he arrived in the capital without even a letter of introduction, and having never seen any pictures by other masters save a portrait of Sir William Strickland by Lely, and two portraits by Rigaud. He established himself in a small studio in Dove Court, near the Mansion House. The moment was favourable, and there was much truth in Fuseli's unfriendly remark, that "Romney was made for his times, and his times for him." In 1763 he painted a 'Death of General Wolfe,' to which the Society of Arts awarded him a prize of fifty guineas. Departing from the accepted convention of the day, he had painted his warriors in their actual costume, and the critics fell foul of his work, contending that the event represented was too recent to be strictly called a "historical" subject, and taking great exception to the cocked hats, cross-belts, and bayonets of what was contemptuously described as the "coat and waistcoat style." Mortimer, the historical painter, had also competed, with his 'Edward the Confessor seizing the Treasure of his Mother,' and the upshot of the controversy was the reversal of the Society's decision, the award of the fifty pounds to Mortimer, and of a gratuity of twenty-five guineas to Romney. It seems certain that this mortification was chiefly due to the intervention of Reynolds, and Romney's friends did not hesitate to say that the great portrait-painter feared a rival in his own domains, and persistently depreciated Romney. It seems more just to suppose that Sir Joshua honestly disliked Romney's work, and was out of sympathy with his emotional character. However this may be, a coldness always existed between the two artists, and Reynolds may have felt some natural disappointment at the immense and rapid popularity of Romney as a portrait-painter. He soon divided the patronage of the fashionable world with his two greater rivals. Lord Thurlow declared that the whole town was divided into two—the Romney and the Reynolds—factions, adding: "And I am of the Romney faction." Such comment irritated Reynolds, who, later in Romney's career, is said to have habitually called him "the man in Cavendish Square." In 1764 Romney paid a short visit to France, and a year later he won the first prize of the Society of Arts with his 'Death of King Edward.' In 1773 he set out for Rome in company with his friend Humphrey, the miniature-painter, bearing a recommendation to the Pope, who allowed him to erect scaffolds in the Vatican in order to make copies from Raphael. He stayed two years in Italy, and on his return in 1775 he was overwhelmed with commissions. He now took the large house in Cavendish Square left vacant by the death of Cotes, and afterwards to be tenanted by Sir Martin Archer Shee. Here he lived in affluence, his income from portrait painting alone amounting to between three and four thousand a year. He worked indefatigably, often sitting at his easel for thirteen hours, and having five or six sitters a day; a month's annual holiday, which he spent with the egregious Hayley at Eartham, being his only relaxation.

In 1782 Romney became acquainted with Lady Hamilton, then calling herself Mrs. Harte. Both Hayley and Romney were bewitched by her, the one celebrating her charms in verse, the other in paint. After her first appearance on his horizon Romney seems to have relied almost solely upon her for inspiration. He was miserable when away from the "divine lady," and reduced the numbers of his sitters in order to devote more time to endless studies of her beauties. His infatuation lasted for years, during which he painted the series of studies which have immortalized her beauty. In Boydell's 'Shakespeare Gallery' Romney warmly co-operated, claiming indeed the merit of having originated the idea. Two of his best historical efforts, the 'Infant Shakespeare,' and the 'Tempest' (in which Hayley sat for Prospero), were contributions to the undertaking. In 1797 Romney removed from Cavendish Square to a house he had built at Hampstead, in order to get more room in which to carry out some conceptions he had thus described in a letter to his son: "I have made many grand designs; I have formed a system of original subjects, moral and my own, and I think one of the grandest that has been thought of—but nobody knows it. Hence it is my view to wrap myself in retirement and pursue these plans, as I begin to feel I cannot bear trouble of any kind." The last words point to early symptoms of the mental disorder which was to shadow the close of his career. Always hypochondriacal, he began, soon after his removal to Hampstead, to fail rapidly, both in mind and body. He gave up painting and sank into a state of almost despair. Thus reduced, his mind turned back to his wife. In the summer of 1799, without announcing his intention, he set out for the north. His wife received him with kindness, and tended him till his death with the greatest devotion. He at last sank into a state of helpless imbecility, and died on the 15th November, 1802, aged not quite sixty-eight years. He was buried at Dalton.

The best characteristics of Romney's art are grace, pleasant colour, and sympathy with line. As a draughtsman he gave proof of higher gifts than either Reynolds or Gainsborough, while he also excelled those masters in the solid simplicity of his methods. There is a momentary quality, too, in some of his best works in which he has scarcely been surpassed. On the other hand he was far below Reynolds in intellectual vigour and variety, below Gainsborough in spirituality, and below them both in colour and in richness of chiaroscuro. The following list is confined to his better or more accessible works: F.S.

ROMNEY, JOHN, an English engraver, born in 1786. He died at Chester in 1863. Specimens of his work are to be found in:

Smirke's illustrations to Shakespeare.
The Ancient Marbles in the British Museum.
Views of Ancient Buildings in Chester. 1851.

Amongst his separate plates are:

The Orphan Ballad Singer; after Gill.
Sunday Morning—the Toilette; after Farrier.

ROMNEY, PETER, an English portrait painter, the brother of George Romney. He practised at Ipswich and Cambridge. He fell into difficulties, was imprisoned for debt in 1774, and died early.

ROMSTEDT, CHRISTIAN, an obscure German engraver, who resided at Leipsic about the year 1670. He engraved a few portraits, which are very indifferently executed. His plates are marked with a cipher composed of a C. and an R. It would seem that there were two engravers of this name, probably father and son, and that they worked between 1630 to 1720; the younger died in 1725. They not only engraved portraits, but some plates after the pictures of A. Carracci in the Farnese Palace.

ROMULO, DIEGO, painter, the eldest son of an obscure painter named CINCINATO ROMULO, was born at Madrid, where he studied under his father, and was much esteemed. He was favoured by Philip IV., and was sent to Rome in the suite of the Spanish ambassador. Here he painted the portrait of Pope Urban VIII. with so much success that the Pope conferred on him the title of Cavaliere of the order of Christ of Portugal. He did not long enjoy his honours, for he died at Rome a few days after his investiture, in the year 1625, and was buried in the church of San Lorenzo.

ROMULO, FRANCISCO, painter, the second son of Cincinato Romulo, was born at Madrid, and studied under his father. In consideration of his brother's untimely death, Urban VIII. conferred on him the title Diego had enjoyed for so brief a time, and he accordingly went to Rome, where he practised with some success until his death in 1635.

RONCALLI, CRISOFORO, called DALLE POMARAN-CE, born at Pomarance, in the diocese of Volterra, in 1552, studied at Rome under Niccolo Circignani, also called dalle Pomarance. He was employed by Paul V. in the embellishment of the Capella Clementina, where he represented the 'Death of Ananias and Sapphira'; and in the Basilica of S. John Lateran, he painted a large picture of the 'Baptism of Constantine.' He executed several other important works in the public edifices at Rome. In the church of S. Giovanni Decollato, is a fine picture by him, representing the 'Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elisabeth'; and in S. Andrea della Valle, an altar-piece, representing 'St. Michael discomfiting the Evil Spirits.' One of his most satisfactory works is the Cupola of La Santa Casa di Loreto, in which he was employed through the influence of Cardinal Crescenzi. At Naples, in the church of San Filippo Neri, there is one of his best productions, a 'Nativity.' The pictures of Roncalli exhibit a mixture of Roman with Tuscan characteristics. In his frescoes his colouring is cheerful and brilliant; in his oil pictures, on the contrary, his tints are subdued to a generally quiet tone. He was fond of introducing landscape backgrounds, which he treated well. He died at Rome in 1626.

RONCELLI, GIUSEPPE, painter, born at Bergamo in 1677. He became known for his skill in painting nocturnal conflagrations, the figures in which were added by Celesti. He died in 1729.

RONCO, MICHELE DI, a native of Milan, who flourished in the latter part of the 14th century. He painted in the Duomo of Bergamo between 1375 and 1377.

RONDANI, FRANCESCO MARIA, born at Parma about the year 1505, was brought up in the school of Correggio, whom he assisted in his great work of the dome of S. Giovanni. In the church of St. Mary Magdalene, at Parma, is a fine 'Virgin and Infant Jesus,' which has been sometimes mistaken for the work of Correggio. His talents were, however, confined to compositions of a few figures. One of his most considerable works is a 'St. Augustine and St. Jerome,' in the Eremitani. Pungileone often mentions him in connection with Allegri; and at the death of the latter, Rondani inherited the drawings and many of the cartoons from which he had worked in the Cupola at Parma. Lanzi says that he had seen one of his Madonnas, in the possession of the Marquis Scarani, at Bologna, Mary bearing a swallow in her hand, in allusion to the painter's name. Rondani's known works are rare. He died at Parma about the year 1548.

RONDELET, JEAN and GUILLAUME, brothers, flourished in France in the 16th century. In 1552 they were engaged on the decorations of the palace of Fontainebleau.

RONDINELLO, NICCOLO, flourished at Ravenna and Forli in the last quarter of the 15th century. He is described by Vasari as one of Giovanni Bellini's most industrious pupils. He spent his early years at Venice, and produced pictures that are often thought to be Bellini's own works. In the Doria Gallery, Rome, is a 'Virgin and Child with St. John the Baptist,' signed by Rondinello, that is an exact counterpart of the same subject painted and signed by Bellini in the same Gallery. The identity is so great as to lead Crowe and Cavalcasse to conjecture, that, while Rondinello painted the whole of the picture which bears his name, he also painted a great part of that signed Bellini, the latter being content to finish his pupil's work and sign it as his own. The Gallery of Forli possesses a half-length 'Virgin and Child,' painted by Rondinello after he left Venice; a portrait of a young man in the same Gallery is now also assigned to him. The Duomo of Forli has a 'S. Sebastian' by him, in the style of Palmezzano, whom he seems to have copied in his later years. In the Brera, Milan, a 'St. John the Evangelist censing a kneeling female figure wearing a crown, with angels ministering on each side of the altar, over which hangs a picture of the Virgin and Child,' is rightly assigned to this artist. Many of the churches in Ravenna contain paintings by Rondinello. No dates are known of either his birth or death, but he was still alive in the first years of the 16th century. He usually signed thus: Nicolaus Rondinello.

RONDINOSI, ZACCARIA, a painter of the Florentine school, working at Pisa between 1665 and 1680. He was mainly occupied with ornament, and when he died in 1680 he was buried in the Campo Santo by the Pisans, who there put up a tablet to his memory.

RONDOLINO IL. See TRENZI.

RONJON, LOUIS AUGUSTE, a French historical painter, born in Paris in 1809. He studied under

J. M. Langlois, and obtained a medal in 1834. During his later years he gave up painting, and devoted himself to teaching. He died in Paris in 1876. His best known pictures are :

The Assassination of the Duke of Guise.
An Incident in the Life of Richelieu.

RONMY, GUILLAUME FRÉDÉRIC, painter, was born at Rouen in 1786. He was a pupil of Vien and of Taunay, and for many years was a frequent and successful exhibitor at the Salon. He collaborated with Prévost in his panoramas, notably those of Rio Janeiro and Constantinople. He died at Passy in 1854. Among his principal works we may name : 'The Temple of the Sybil at Tivoli,' 'Henry IV. at the Siege of Paris,' 'A Camp of Laplanders,' and a 'View of Constantinople.'

RONSE, PHILIPPE, a French artist of the 17th century, who, in conjunction with Pauvert and Vespri, painted in the cathedral of Chartres. He died in 1645.

RONSERAY. See DE LORME.

RONTOUBOUT, J—, a Dutch landscape painter, whose pictures at first view have a slight resemblance to those of Hobbema and Ruysdael. They are generally of a small size, always on panel, and represent wooded scenery. The figures are of the same character as those in Hobbema's pictures when painted by himself. They are signed with the name in full, or with a monogram, somewhat in the manner of Jakob Ruysdael, which has deceived many into the belief that they are by that artist.

RONZELLI, FABIO, painter, probably the son of Piero Ronzelli. He flourished at Bergamo shortly after 1627, and is known by the 'Martyrdom of San Alessandro,' which he painted for the church of Santa Grata, at Bergamo.

RONZELLI, PIERO, practised at Bergamo about 1600, and became known as a skilful painter of portraits.

ROODE, THEODOR, (or DE ROODE,) painter and engraver, born at Rotterdam in 1736. He travelled through Belgium and Germany in 1756, and settled for a time in Vienna, where he was appointed painter in ordinary to the Archduke Charles of Austria. He returned to Rotterdam in 1771, and died in 1791.

ROOKER, EDWARD, an English draughtsman and engraver, born in London about the year 1712, was a pupil of Henry Roberts. He possessed an admirable talent for engraving architectural views, of which he has given an excellent example in his large plate of the Section of St. Paul's Cathedral, from a drawing by Gwyn, the figures by Wale. The plates in Sir W. Chambers's 'Civil Architecture,' several of the plates in Stuart's 'Athens,' and Adams' 'Diocletian's Palace at Spalatro,' are by him. We have also the following views :

Four Views in Italy ; after R. Wilson.
Six Views in London ; after P. Sandby.
Twelve Views in England ; after the same.

ROOKER, MICHAEL ANGELO, the son of Edward Rooker, born in London in 1743, was first instructed by his father in engraving, but was after placed under the tuition of Paul Sandby, to be instructed in drawing and landscape painting. In 1772 he painted and exhibited a view of Temple Bar, which possessed considerable merit, and was much admired. For several years he was the principal scene painter to the "theatre in the Haymarket." As an engraver he acquired considerable celebrity, and for many years engraved the headpieces to the Oxford Almanacks. They were executed from his own drawings. Rooker was one of the first Associates of the Royal Academy. About 1788 he began a series of autumn tours on foot, and made many drawings from picturesque ruins in Norfolk, Suffolk, Somerset, Warwick, and other counties. He contributed some of the illustrations to an edition of Sterne, published in 1772. He died in London in 1801.

ROOM, HENRY, an English portrait painter, born in 1802. He practised in London and Birmingham, and occasionally exhibited at the Academy between 1826 and 1848. He died in London in 1850. His principal works are :

The Interview of Queen Adelaide with the Madagascar Princes at Windsor.
The Caffre Chief's Examination before the House of Commons' Committee.

Many portraits by him are engraved in the 'Evangelical Magazine.'

ROOS, CAJETAN, (GAETANO,) son of Philipp Peter Roos (Rosa da Tivoli), was an animal and landscape painter, and practised at Vienna towards the middle of the 18th century.

ROOS, JACOB, a son of Philipp Peter, commonly called Rosa da Napoli, was born at Tivoli in 1680, and painted in Naples in the style of his father.

ROOS, JAN, a Dutch landscape and portrait painter, born at Amsterdam towards the close of the 18th century. After a sojourn at Dresden he went to Italy, and was practising his art at Rome about 1820.

ROOS, JAN, painter, born at Antwerp in 1591. He was a pupil of Snyders, and went to study in Italy in 1615. He was for some time at Rome, and became famous for his painting of animals. It is said that dogs were deceived by the hares he painted. From his choice of subjects he has been occasionally confounded with Philipp Peter Roos (Rosa da Tivoli). He settled later at Genoa, where his works enjoyed a high reputation. He there became acquainted with his great countryman, Vandyck, and was one of the artists who frequented the salon of Sofonisba Anguisciola. The many commissions which he received caused him to work so unceasingly that his health gave way, and he died at Genoa in 1638. In the church of SS. Cosmus and Damianus at Genoa there is an 'Entombment' by him.

ROOS, JOHANN HEINRICH, painter and engraver, was born in 1631, the son of a poor weaver, by whom he was apprenticed to a painter of little note at Amsterdam, named Julian du Jardin, for the term of seven years. Under this master he made little progress. At the end of his time he studied under Adriaan de Bie ; and it was not long before he discovered an extraordinary talent for painting horses, cows, sheep, goats, &c. ; not only surpassing his instructor, but becoming one of the most celebrated animal painters of his time. He frequently placed them in the most singular and difficult attitudes, but always drew them with the correctness of character for which he is remarkable. He was invited to the court of the Elector Palatine, where he painted the portrait of that prince, and those of his principal courtiers, for which he was munificently rewarded. He was employed at several other German courts, but established himself at Frankfurt in 1671, where he painted his favourite subjects with great success. His works were purchased with avidity, and he received commissions from almost every court in Europe. A catastrophe interrupted his career. In 1685 a great conflagration broke out in the night, and the house of Roos was situated in the quarter in which the flames raged with the greatest violence. Anxious to save some valuable objects, he re-entered his house, which was already burning fiercely, and perished. He signed his pictures J. H. Roos, the initials being welded into a monogram. Works:

Berlin.	Museum.	Italian landscape with Cattle.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Cattle, Sheep, and Goats in a landscape.
"	"	Cattle and old Woman in a landscape.
"	"	Landscape with Sheep and Shepherd.
Munich.	Gallery.	Nine Landscapes, with Cattle.

J. H. Roos has left a series of excellent etchings; the following are the best:

- A set of eight Plates of Animals; dated 1665.
- A set of twelve Plates of domestic Animals.
- Two large Landscapes, with Ruins and Animals.
- A Shepherd sleeping at the foot of a Monument, near his Flock.

ROOS, JOHANN MELCHIOR, the younger son of Johann Heinrich Roos, was born at Frankfort in 1659. After being taught some time by his father he travelled to Italy, where he studied a few years, and on his return to Germany settled at Nürnberg, where he met with considerable encouragement as a painter of history and portraits, but his inclination leading him to paint landscapes and animals in the style of his brother, in the latter part of his life he devoted himself entirely to that branch, in which, although he never reached the excellence of Rosa da Tivoli, his pictures possessed sufficient merit to win him the patronage of the Landgrave of Hesse Cassel. He died in 1731. Works:

Dresden.	Gallery.	Stags under an Oak. Signed J. M. Roos fecit 1714 , the J and M interwoven.
Hampton Court.		Cattle at a Fountain.

There is only one etching known by this artist. It represents a Bull standing, seen in front; it is inscribed J. M. Roos, fec. 1685.

ROOS, JOSEPH, the son of Cajetan Roos, was born at Vienna in 1728. He painted landscapes and cattle with considerable success, and was much employed by the Elector of Saxony. He was a member of the Dresden Academy, and was afterwards keeper of the Imperial Gallery at Vienna. His principal works are at Schoenbrun. We may also name:

Dresden.	Gallery.	Landscape with Sheep and Shepherd. Signed Joseph Roos f. 1765 .
----------	-----------------	--

We have a few etchings by this artist, among them the following:

- A set of six Plates of various Animals; inscribed Joseph Roos, inv. et fecit, aqua forti. 1754.
- Ten Plates of Sheep and Goats.

ROOS, PHILIPP PETER, called ROSA DA TIVOLI and MERCURIUS, was the son of Johann Heinrich Roos, and was born at Frankfort in 1657. Endowed with genius by nature, and assisted by his excellent father, he gave early proofs of capacity, and was noticed by the Landgrave of Hesse, in whose service his father at that time was. He took him under his protection, and to promote his improvement sent him to Italy, with an allowance sufficient for his support. On his arrival at Rome his application was so exemplary that he was regarded as the most laborious young artist of his time. He designed every object from nature, and to facilitate this practice established himself at Tivoli, where he kept a kind of menagerie, for the purpose of drawing animals with the greater correctness. His pictures are painted with equal vigour and precision. His colour, though it has darkened much with time, is good. It is in inability to compose that he betrays his chief defect as an artist. As a man, he was given up to dissipation. Rosa da Tivoli died at Rome in 1705. His few etchings of pastoral subjects are very scarce. Works:

Dresden.	Gallery.	Seven landscapes with Cattle.
"	"	Noah surrounded by the Animals.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Cattle on the Roman Campagna. Cattle at Pasture.
Paris.	Louvre.	Wolf devouring a Sheep.
Vienna.	Liechtenstein Col.	Sheep and Shepherd.

ROOS, THEODOR, the younger brother of Johann Heinrich Roos, born at Wezel in 1638. He was first a scholar of Adriaan de Bie, but afterwards was instructed by his brother. In 1659 he was invited to the court of Mannheim, where he was taken into the service of the Elector. His first performance was a group of portraits of the principal magistrates, still preserved in the council chamber. He afterwards visited with success several other courts of Germany. The Duke of Würtemberg employed him in several historical works, and appointed him his principal painter. He was present in Strasburg when it was taken in 1681 by the French, by whom he was treated with great courtesy. The pictures of this Roos are chiefly confined to Germany. His touch is firm and facile, his drawing weak, his colouring vigorous and clear. Theodor Roos has left a set of six etchings, small upright landscapes, with ruins, dated 1667. He died in 1698.

ROOSE, NICOLAES. See DE LIEMAKER.

ROOSMALE, (or ROOZMALE). See ROSEMALE.

ROOSTER, ADRIAAN, (or DE ROOSTER,) landscape painter, born at Mechlin. He was a pupil of Gaspard Poussin, and practised in Italy in the 17th century.

ROOTIUS, JAN ALBERTZ, (or ROOTSEUS,) born at Hoorn about 1615, was a disciple of Pieter Lastman, under whose instruction he became eminent as a portrait painter. Some of his pictures in the hall of the Archer's Guild, in his native town, prove him to have been an artist of considerable ability. They consist of three large groups of portraits of the members. Rootius died in 1674. In the Amsterdam Museum there are by him:

- Portrait of Vice-Admiral Jan Corn. Meppel, signed J. A. Rootius, 1661.
- Portrait of a Child. Same signature, and the date 1652.

ROOTIUS, JAKOB, (or ROOTSEUS,) a younger brother of Jan Rootius, born in 1619, was a scholar of J. D. de Heem, and painted in his manner; and, it is said, approached him closely in excellence. He died in 1681.

ROPER, —, an English artist mentioned by Edwards as a painter of sporting pieces, race-horses, dogs, and dead game. Some of his pictures were in the exhibitions in Spring Gardens in 1761 and 1762, dates he did not long survive.

ROQUEPLAN, CAMILLE JOSEPH ETIENNE, (or ROCOPLAN,) a French genre, landscape, and marine painter, born at Mallemaert (Bouches-du-Rhône) in 1800. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1818, and studied under Gros and Abel de Pujol. Notwithstanding this training amongst the "classicists" he won fame as a "romanticist," and gained great reputation by his works founded on subjects from Sir Walter Scott. In his latter years he suffered much from illness. He died in Paris in 1855. The following is a list of his more important works :

Bordeaux.	Museum.	Valentine and Raoul.
Chartres.	"	Child playing with Cat.
Grenoble.	"	Coast View.
Havre.	"	Sea Piece.
Leipsic.	"	The Harbour of Boulogne.
Lille.	"	Death of the Spy, Morris ('Rob Roy').
Paris.	Louvre.	View on the Coast of Normandy. 1831.
Versailles.	Gallery.	Battle of Elchingen. 1837.
"	"	Battle of Rocoux.
"	"	Portrait of the Maréchal, Marquis de Chastellux.

ROQUES, GUILLAUME, or JOSEPH, painter, born at Toulouse on the 1st October, 1754, was the son of a respectable workman of that city, and showed such an early inclination for art, that at eleven years old he entered the École des Beaux Arts of Toulouse, then directed by Rivalz. His talent and industry enabled him to distinguish himself in all competitions, and a youthful picture of 'Amyntas' was pronounced to be a work of precocious promise. The young painter ardently wished to visit Italy, and, provided with a little store of money which his mother had saved, he set out for Rome when about 22 years old. Here he was kindly received by Vien and David, and formed a friendship with the latter, who assisted him in many ways. His Italian studies proved of great service, and on his return to his native place he was overwhelmed with commissions. Among his pupils was Ingres, in whose development he took a special interest, and with whom he always remained on terms of affectionate intimacy. After the Revolution Roques was appointed director of the Art School at Montpellier, but his affection for his native town induced him to resign his post for a Professorship at the École des Beaux Arts at Toulouse, and there he remained until his death in 1847, at the age of 91. His best known works are the following :

- Portrait of his Mother. (Toulouse Museum.)
- The Tomb of Amyntas. (Toulouse Museum.)
- The Communion of the Duke of Angoulême. (Toulouse Museum.)
- Shepherds of the Valley of Campan. (Toulouse Museum.)
- Marat in the Bath.
- The Death of Lucretia.
- Cupid and Psyche. (A lamplight effect.)

RÖRBYE, MARTIN CHRISTIAN WESSELTÖFT, painter, born at Drammen in Norway, in 1803, entered the Academy at Copenhagen in 1819, and learned drawing under Eckersberg. From 1834 to 1837 he was travelling through Italy, Greece, and Turkey. On his return home he received the Thorwaldsen medal for his picture of a 'Turkish Notary settling the Marriage Articles,' and then, with his 'Life in the East,' he won the Fellowship of the Academy. In 1839 he went to Italy, where he painted his 'Market in Amalfi.' He died in Copenhagen in 1848. The Copenhagen Gallery possesses the following pictures by him :

- Chapel of St. Benedict at Subiaco.
- Oriental Chess-players.
- A Holiday at Cape Skagen.
- Arcade of the Town-hall of Copenhagen.

RORE, (RORUS,) JACQUES. See DE ROORE.

ROSA, ANIELLA DI. See BELTRANO.

ROSA DA NAPOLI. See ROOS, JAKOB.

ROSA DA TIVOLI. See ROOS, PHILIPP PETER.

ROSA, CRISTOFORO, born at Brescia about the year 1520, excelled in painting perspectives; and lived in habits of intimacy with Titian, by whom he was occasionally employed to paint the architecture in some of his pictures. There are several of his works at Brescia and at Venice, particularly in the antechamber to the library of St. Mark, in the latter city. He died of the plague in 1576.

ROSA, FRANCESCO DI, called PACICCO, painter, born at Naples about the year 1600, was brought up in the school of Massimo Stanzioni. His easel pictures are frequently found in private collections at Naples, and he painted some altar-pieces for the churches, of which the best, perhaps, are his St. Thomas Aquinas, in the Sanità; and the Baptism of S. Candida, in S. Pietro d'Aram. He died at Naples in 1654.

ROSA, PIETRO, son of Cristoforo Rosa, was born about 1550. From the friendship that existed between his father and Titian, he was received into his school of that great painter, of whom he became a favoured disciple. His best works are in the cathedral and the churches of S. Francesco and le Grazie at Brescia. This promising young artist died of the plague, in the same year with his father and his master, Titian.

ROSA, SALVATORE, born at Renella near Naples, in 1615, was the son of Vito Antonio (an architect and land surveyor) and Giulia Grecca Rosa. His parents intended him for the Church; with that view he was sent to the College of the Congregazione Somasca at Naples. His impetuous character and temperament seem to have brought him into great trouble, and he left before his education was completed. He returned home, and as his sister meanwhile had been married to Francesco Francanzani, an artist of the Spagnoletto school, the lad was often found in the work-room of his brother-in-law. There he first displayed his talent, and encouraged by Francesco, he was enabled to earn enough to procure himself clothes and sustenance. Impatient, however, of restraint, in his eighteenth year he left Naples, and after wandering about he joined himself to a body of banditti, who infested the Abruzzi; to this sojourn may be traced many of those robber pictures which so especially distinguish this artist. Under what circumstances Salvator returned to Naples is unknown, but it is certain that he did so during the residence of Lanfranco in that city. A few days after his return his father died, bequeathing to the care of his son a poverty-stricken family. Oppressed by want and privation, he used to expose his pictures for sale in the street, till one day Lanfranco happening to be attracted by a 'Hagar' thus exposed for sale, purchased it. It is asserted by some that Lanfranco sought Salvator's acquaintance, and assisted him, though the fact of his continued poverty seems to be in strong disproof of this idea. But the bare circumstance of being brought into notice, though it exposed him to much envy and hatred from less favoured rivals, acted as a spur on his drooping spirits, and was the means also of gaining for him the friendship of Aniello Falcone, one of the best pupils of Spagnoletto, who may be looked upon as the first painter of battles. In 1634 poverty made him resolve to leave Naples and visit Rome. There he maintained himself by his sketches for some time, but under the influence of malaria his mental energy gave way, and he returned to Naples, deprived of hope and strength. Soon after his return, however, he agreed to accompany his fellow-student Girolamo Mercuri, who had been appointed Chamberlain to Cardinal Brancaccia, back to Rome. This led to his being commissioned to paint the portico and loggia of the Cardinal's palace at Viterbo, and also an altar-piece for the Chiesa della Morte, in the same city. After a year's residence in the Episcopal Palace of Viterbo, Salvator returned to Naples, from whence he sent to Rome his great picture, 'Prometheus,' which gained him such reputation as to induce him to return there. Belonging, however, to no school, he was unable to win for himself the footing he wished, till the Carnival of 1639, when, flinging aside his palette, he came forth as a poet, singer, and actor, and found all Rome at his feet. After this outburst he applied himself with increasing success to painting. From 1639 to 1647 he produced numbers of gloomy forests, rocky defiles, and storms at sea, as well as subject pictures and a few altar-pieces for the churches of Lombardy. In 1647, hearing of the approaching revolution in Naples, he shut up his house in Rome, and hastening to his native city, joined himself to Masaniello, together with his old friend Aniello Falcone and his pupils. After the death of Masaniello, Falcone fled to France, where he spent the rest of his life, and Salvator returned to Rome, where he painted his 'La Fortuna' and 'L'Umana Fragilità,' for which he was threatened by the Inquisition, to escape which he fled in the train of Prince Giovanni Carlo de' Medici to Florence, where he was received in triumph. While at Florence he formed a great friendship with Lorenzo Lippi, himself a poet and painter, whom he assisted in his pictures. After a residence of five years in the Tuscan capital, he left it in 1652 to return to Rome, where he established himself in a house on the Monte Pincio. During this period he painted his 'Jonas preaching at Nineveh,' for the King of Denmark, and was chosen to paint a picture as an offering from the Court of Rome to King Louis XIV. of France, which resulted in the battle-piece now in the Louvre. In 1661, on the occasion of the marriage of the Heir Apparent of Tuscany to Marguerite d'Orleans, he again visited Florence, but soon returned to Rome, where, in 1668, he alone of living artists was allowed to exhibit his pictures, and the works then shown were his 'Triumph of St. George,' and 'Saul and the Witch of Endor.' His last work of any importance was a 'S. Turpin,' finished in 1670, after which his faculties began to fail, and in 1673 he died at Rome. His principal pictures are:

Salvator was a free and excellent etcher; he has left 40 plates, of which the following are perhaps the best:

St. William, the Hermit.
Plato, and his Scholars.
Battle of Tritons.
Soldier sitting on a Hill.

ROSA, SIGISMONDO, an Italian painter of the 18th century, and a pupil of Giuseppe Chiari. He practised in Rome, but never attained to much excellence in his art.

ROSA, SISTO. See BADALOCCHIO.

ROSA, STEFANO, painter, a native of Brescia, the brother of Cristoforo Rosa, with whom he was associated in decorative and architectural painting. He also painted portraits and historical subjects. He was working at Brescia about 1570.

ROSALBA. See CARRIERA.

ROSALES, EDUARDO, painter, born at Madrid in 1837. He studied at the Academy of Madrid under Ferrant and Madrazo, and completed his education at Rome, where the works of the old masters exercised a strong influence on his art. Returning to Spain he worked for a time in Murcia, occupying himself principally with subjects from Arab life. His first exhibited work of importance was the 'Isabella dictating her Will,' for which he gained honours at the Paris Exposition of 1867. He was appointed Director of the Spanish Academy at Rome, and died there on the 13th September, 1873. Among his pictures we may also name:

St. Joseph. (In the church at Vergara.)
 Don John of Austria at S. Yuste.
 King Amadeo's entry into Madrid.
 Death of Lucretia.
 Portrait of Don Garcia Aznar.
 The two Evangelists, St. John and St. Matthew. (For the church of S. Tomàs at Madrid.)

ROSALIBA, ANTONELLO, a painter of Messina, who flourished in the first years of the 16th century. He was one of the latest artists of the insular school, before it became fused in that of Italy. His works have now disappeared from his native island. A 'Virgin and Child,' painted for the village church of Postunina, was one of the last to remain in Sicily.

ROSASPINA, FRANCESCO, engraver, born at Rimini in 1762, was a pupil of Bartolozzi, and at first worked in the dot manner. Afterwards, however, he produced plates in line and aquatint, and made drawings in sepia. He was a member of the National Institute, and a professor of the Bologna Academy. He died in that city in 1841. Among his best plates we may name:

Dance of Cupids; after Albano.
 Cupid bending his Bow; after Franceschini.
 St. Francis of Assisi; after Domenichino.
 Dead Christ; after Correggio.
 Love; after Guercino.
 Mary Magdalen; after Cagnacci.
 A series of Napoleonic Battles; after Appiani.
 A series of twenty-five plates in the chalk manner; after Parmigiano.

He also superintended the engraving and publication of the work entitled 'La Pinacoteca,' consisting of about seventy-two of the best paintings in the Academy of the Fine Arts at Bologna. He signed his plates sometimes with his full name, sometimes with his initials separately, and sometimes with a monogram.

RÖSCH. See RESCH.

ROSE, NICHOLAS. See DE LIEMAKER.

ROSE, SUSAN PENELOPE, miniature painter, was the daughter of Richard Gibson, the Dwarf, by whom she was probably instructed in the rudiments of her art. She was the wife of a jeweller, and painted portraits in water-colours with great freedom. Her miniatures were of a larger size than usual, and possessed considerable merit. She died in 1700.

ROSE, WILLIAM, landscape painter, was born in 1810. He exhibited frequently at the Royal Academy, and with the Society of British Artists, views taken from the rural scenes of the Home Counties, such as 'Kentish Heath Scene,' 'Clover Time,' 'Ashdown Forest,' &c. He died at Edenbridge in 1873.

RÖSEL, AUGUST JOHANN VON ROSENHOF, painter and engraver, born at Augustenberg in Arnstadt, in 1705, was a pupil and cousin of the fresco and animal painter, Wilhelm Rösel, and studied in the Academy at Nürnberg. At first he devoted himself to architectural painting, but afterwards to natural history, especially insects. He died at Nürnberg in 1759.

RÖSEL, VON ROSENHOF FRANZ, (RÜSLER, ROSELIUS, ROOSHOF,) an animal painter of Nürnberg, who lived in the 17th century. In the Munich Pinakothek is a picture of a 'Wolf Devouring a Lamb,' which formed the subject of a contest between Rösel and Paudiss, in which the former was victorious, while the latter, if we may believe Descamps, died of grief at having lost. In the Augsburg Gallery there are a 'Fox devouring a Hen,' and 'A Cock,' by him.

RÖSELLI, MATTEO, (ROSSELLI,) born at Florence in 1578, was first a pupil of Gregorio Pagani, and afterwards of Passignano, with whom he visited Rome, and improved his style by studying the works of Raphael and Polidoro da Caravaggio. On finishing his studies at Rome he returned to Florence, where he resided for the remainder of his life, and his works are little known out of that city. He was much employed by the Grand Duke Cosimo II., and embellished the Poggio Imperiale with several frescoes, representing the history of the Medici family. He sometimes emulated the style of Lodovico Cardi, called Cigoli, as particularly appears in his picture of the 'Nativity,' in the church of S. Gaetano, which is considered his finest work, and in the 'Martyrdom of S. Andrea,' at the Ognissanti. Roselli excelled in fresco painting, in which his works still retain their pristine purity and freshness. Roselli founded a school, in which Manozzi, Volterrano the younger, and others were scholars. He died in 1651.

ROSELLI, NICCOLO, of Ferrara, flourished about the year 1568. He is supposed to have been brought up in the school of the Dossi; though in some of his works in the Ferrara Certosa he appears to have imitated the style of Benvenuto Garofalo. He painted several pictures for the churches in his native city, among which are an altar-piece in the cathedral, representing the 'Virgin and Infant in the clouds, beneath, St. John the Evangelist and St. Anthony;' and a 'Purification,' in the church of S. Maria Bianca.

ROSENBERG, FRIEDRICH, an obscure painter and engraver, born at Dantzic in 1758. He lived for some time in Switzerland and in Holland, and finally settled at Altona. He died after 1830.

ROSENBERG, GEORGE F., a water-colour painter, who practised at Bath, and from 1849, in which year he was elected an associate of the old Water-Colour Society, exhibited landscapes, chiefly mountain scenery from Scotland and Norway, painted with much ability. He died at Bath in 1869.

ROSENBERG, JOHANN GEORG, a painter, born at Berlin in 1739, was a cousin of Johann Karl Wilhelm Rosenberg. He was principally employed on theatrical scenery, though he also painted portraits and views of Berlin.

ROSENBERG, JOHANN KARL WILHELM, painter and engraver, born at Berlin in 1737, was mainly a scene painter. But he engraved a few plates, among them a Head after the style of Rembrandt. He died in 1809.

ROSENBRUN. See ROTTMAYR VON ROSENBRUN.

ROSENDAAL, NICHOLAS, painter, born at Enkhuizen, in Holland, in 1636. He accompanied Jakob Torenvliet to Rome in 1670, and died in 1686.

ROSENFELDER, KARL LUDWIG, painter, born on the 18th July, 1813, at Breslau. He began his art studies in 1832 as a pupil of Hensel, at the Berlin Academy, of which he subsequently became a member. In 1845 he was appointed Director of the Art School at Königsberg, and held that post until his retirement upon a pension in 1874. A visit to Italy occupied him in 1851-1852, and in 1865 he was engaged in painting the hall of the Königsberg University with pictures having reference to the Faculties. After his retirement he continued to live at Königsberg, and died there in 1881. Among his works we may mention:

Arrest of Philip of Hesse by order of Alva.

Rienzi's Imprisonment at Avignon.

The Electress of Brandenburg receiving the Sacrament according to Protestant rites.

Occupation of the Marienburg by the Mercenaries of the Teutonic Knights in 1457.

Charles I. taking leave of his Children.

Mourners praying at the Bier of Henry IV. (Cologne Museum.)

ROSENHAGEN, NICOLAAS, a Dutch still-life painter of the 17th century, who worked in the style of J. De Heem. The details of his life are unknown. In the Hague Museum there is a picture of fruit by him.

ROSENTHALER, KASPAR, JOHANN, and JAKOB, three brothers, natives of Nürnberg, who flourished at the beginning of the 16th century, and established themselves at Schwaz, in the Tyrol. KASPAR was an architect and wood-engraver, and is known by two extant wood-cuts, 'Legend des heiligen Vatters Francisci' (Legend of St. Francis), and 'Leben unseres erledigers Jesu Christi' (Life of our Redeemer). He built the church and cloister of the Franciscans at Schwaz, and his brothers decorated the walls with paintings representing scenes from the Passion. Kaspar died in 1514.

ROSER, EDMÉ M. B., (or ROESER,) born at Heidelberg about 1737. He was a pupil of Louthembourg, and in 1765 settled in Paris, where he gained a reputation as a skilful restorer and copyist. He restored several of the pictures in the Louvre. He died in 1804.

ROSETTI. See ROVERE.

ROSETTI, DOMENICO, born at Venice in the last half of the 17th century, painted architectural perspectives with some success, but is chiefly known as an engraver. He was invited by the Elector Palatine to Düsseldorf, where he engraved twelve large plates of scenes from the history of Alexander, after Gerard Lairesse, which are now very scarce, as few impressions were taken. He executed several plates for the collection of prints after some of the most celebrated pictures at Venice, published in that city by Domenico Louisa in 1720. He engraved the prints for a 'History of the Bible,' printed at Venice in 1696; and several single plates after Palma Vecchio, the Bassani, Tintoretto, P. Liberi, and others. Zani says he was at work as early as 1675. The year of his death is not known.

ROSEX, NICOLA, (or NICOLETTO,) called also NICOLETTO DA MODENA, an Italian engraver and goldsmith of the 16th century, was born in Modena. Two only of his works are dated; these bear the years 1500 and 1512 upon them. At various stages his style changed from the imitation of Mantegna to that of Schongauer, Albrecht Dürer, and finally Marc-Antonio. His execution was rude, and his plates vary greatly in appearance and merit. Those which may be given to him with confidence are between seventy and eighty in number, a total which would be greatly increased if we accepted the early prints ascribed to him by Bartsch. His most frequent monograms were the two here given, M. or NE., but he marked his plates in a great variety of ways, seldom, however, omitting to sign them altogether. His better plates, perhaps, are the following:

The Adoration of the Shepherds, with his name.

St. Sebastian, marked Niccolotto, on a tablet.

Another St. Sebastian; inscribed Ora pro nobis Sancte Sebastiane.

St. Jerome Reading; with the monogram.

St. George, with his name.

St. Martin; inscribed Divo Marti; with his name on a tablet.

A Triton embracing a Syren; marked N. M. on a tablet.

A whole-length Figure of Christ standing on a pavement of square stones, &c. Monogram.

St. Sebastian, his arms tied over his head to a column, pierced with six arrows. Name at full length on a step.

St. Sebastian, his arms tied over his head to a column, and is pierced with three arrows. Monogram.

St. George in complete armour, standing in the centre of the print. Name at full length on the frieze of a triumphal arch. (British Museum.)

St. Catherine standing, holding a palm branch in her left hand, &c. Name at full length on the base of a pillar on the right.

Mars in Armour, standing in the middle of the print, companion to the St. George. Name on a tablet hung to a tree on the left.

Three Children; one kneeling in the centre, one on the left raising his left hand, and one on the right raising his right hand. Name at full length on a scroll.

A Female wearing a Helmet, &c., pouring incense on an Altar. No mark.

Perseus and Pegasus. Perseus holding the bridle of the horse with both hands.

ROSHOFF. See RÜSEL, AUGUST JOHANN.

ROSI, ALESSANDRO, said to have been born at Florence in 1627, was a scholar of Cesare Dandini, under whose tuition he became a reputable painter of history. There are many of his pictures in the churches and private collections at Florence. The cathedral at Prato possesses a 'S. Francesco di Paolo' by him; and two good Bacchanalian subjects used to be in the collection of the Grand Duke. He died at Florence in 1697.

ROSI, GIOVANNI, a Florentine painter of the 17th century. He was one of the artists who formed an early school of landscape painting in Italy before the time of Salvator Rosa. He was working about 1620.

ROSI, ZANOBI, painter, a native of Florence. He was one of the pupils of Christofano Allori, and completed some of the pictures left unfinished by his master, so that he was still living in 1621, the year of Allori's death.

ROSITI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an artist of Forli, mentioned by Lanzi as a contemporary of Palmegiani, was the author of a 'Virgin and Child' of much merit in the church of S. Maria dell' Orto at Velletri, bearing the following inscription: "Jo. Baptista de Rositis de Forlivio pinxit, I. S. O. O. de Mense Martii."

ROSLANEY, WELLS, ornamental painter and designer, practising in London in the second half of the 18th century. He died October 1, 1776, and his wife is said to have starved herself to death from grief at his loss.

RÖSLER, JOHANN KARL, (or RÖSSLER,) portrait painter, born at Görlitz on the 18th May, 1775. He began life as a smith, but at the age of twenty determined to become an artist. He worked industriously at the Dresden Academy, and gained further knowledge by studies in Italy. In 1810 he became a member of the Dresden Academy, and five years later was appointed Professor. He died at Dresden in 1845. Among his best works are:

The Marys at the Sepulchre.

The Elector Maurice of Saxony after the Battle of Sievershausen.

Portrait of the Baroness von der Recke.

Portrait of King Anthony of Saxony.

Portrait of the Actor and Entomologist Ochsenheimer. (In the Dresden Gallery.)

RÖSLER, MICHAEL, an obscure German engraver, who resided at Nuremberg about the year 1626. He engraved several portraits for a folio volume, published in that city, entitled 'Icones Bibliopolarum et Typographorum.' Zani mentions a Michael Rosler as a German engraver who flourished about 1728; and Nagler a Rössler of Nuremberg, as living in the first half of the 18th century.

ROSLIN, ALEXANDER, a native of Sweden, born at Malmoe in 1718, worked in Paris as a portrait-painter, and in 1753 became a member of the Academy. In 1765 he gained a prize in competition with Greuze for a family portrait for the Duke of Rochefoucauld. He married Mlle. Giroust, a French artist, and after her death returned for a time to Sweden. He subsequently painted for a time in Russia. His portrait of the Duchess Marie Christine of Saxony was engraved by Bartolozzi. Roslin died in 1793. The following are among his best known works:

Paris.	Louvre.	Portrait of a Lady. ( La Caze Collection. )
Stockholm.	Gallery.	Portrait of Gustavus III. and his brothers, Prince Charles and Prince Frederick. 1771.
"	"	Bust Portrait of Gustavus III. 1775.
"	"	Portrait of Duke Frederick Adolphus, brother of Gustavus Adolphus. 1770.
"	"	Portrait of the Painter's Wife. 1763.

ROSLIN, MARIE SUZANNE, (née GIROUST,) the wife of Alexander Roslin, the Swedish painter, was born in France in 1735. She practised in pastel at Paris with so much success that in 1770 she was elected an Associate of the Academy. She died in Paris in 1772.

ROSS, F. W. R., an English natural history draughtsman, born in 1792. He was an officer in the Royal Navy, and practised art as a pastime. He applied himself chiefly to drawings in illustration of natural history, particularly excelling in the rendering of birds, which he treated with much delicacy and finish of draughtsmanship, and brilliancy of colour. His later years were passed at Topsham (Devon), where he died in 1860.

ROSS, H., miniature painter, a Scottish artist, whose father was a gardener in the service of the Duke of Marlborough, and who gained a certain celebrity by the portraits and portrait groups in miniature, which he exhibited at the Royal Academy in the early years of the present century. He was the father of Sir W. Ross.

ROSS, JAMES, an English engraver, born in 1745, was a pupil of R. Hancock. We have by him several views of the city of Hereford, very neatly engraved; they are small plates, and are taken from drawings by G. Powle. He also executed some plates in illustration of Green's 'City of Worcester,' and of a 'History of Tewkesbury.' He died at Worcester, 1821.

ROSS, KARL, a painter, born at Altekoppel, in Holstein, in 1816. After studying from 1832 to 1836 in the Academy of Copenhagen he went in 1837 to Greece, where he worked at landscape painting for two years, and then went to Munich. From 1842 to 1843 he lived in Rome; in 1846 he was in Paris; in 1850 in Rome again. Among his works we may name, 'Naxos,' 'Temple of Phigalia in Arcadia,' and a 'Forest Party.' He died at Munich in 1857.

ROSS, MRS. MARIA, an English portrait painter, born in 1766. She was the sister of Anker Smith, the engraver, the wife of H. Ross, miniature painter, and the mother of Sir W. C. Ross, R.A. She sometimes exhibited at the Academy, commencing in 1811, and occasionally painted history. She died in London in 1836.

ROSS, ROBERT THORBURN, a Scottish subject painter, born at Edinburgh in 1816. He was a pupil of Sinson and Sir W. Allen. In early life he practised as a portrait painter in pastel, but became better known as a painter of genre. His pictures have an echo of the pastellist about them. His works first appeared in 1845 at the Scottish Academy, of which he became an Associate in 1852, and a full member in 1869. He died in 1876. Amongst his chief pictures were:

The Thorn in the Foot.	Highland Pets.
The Spinning-wheel.	The Broken Pitcher.
Cottage Children.	Wha's at the Window?

ROSS, SIR WILLIAM CHARLES, an English miniature painter, born in London in 1794. He was the son of H. and Maria Ross. Both his parents being artists, he at a very early age showed a predilection for art. He entered the schools of the Academy in 1808, and made distinguished progress, and winning many prizes. He was also awarded by the Society of Arts no less than seven premiums between 1807 and 1821. His two chief works at this time were 'The Judgment of Brutus,' and 'Christ casting out Devils among the Tombs.' His name first appeared in the Academy Catalogues in 1809, when he was scarcely sixteen years of age, and for several years he exhibited historical works, to which he devoted much attention. But in 1814 he became an assistant to Andrew Robertson, a miniature painter on ivory, to which branch of art he at length wholly applied himself. He obtained a large practice in the highest circles. The Queen, the Prince Consort, and their family sat to him, as well as the King and Queen of the Belgians, the King and Queen of Portugal, Napoleon III., &c. It is said that the total number of his miniatures exceeds 2200. In 1838 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, becoming a full member in the following year, when he also received knighthood. In the cartoon competition of 1843 he won a premium of £100 with an 'Angel Raphael Discoursing with Eve.' He continued in full practice, holding the first rank in his art, until 1857, when he was struck by paralysis. After a period of considerable suffering he died, unmarried, on January 20th, 1860.

ROSSELL, JOSEF, a Spanish painter and member of the Academy of St. Barbara at Valencia, who is known as the author of a 'St. Luke' on linen, presented to the Academy in 1754.

ROSSELLI, COSIMO (DI LORENZO DI FILIPPO ROSSELLI), born at Florence in 1439, was a pupil of Neri de Biceci from 1453 to 1456, and is then thought to have won the friendship of Benozzo Gozzoli. At some period of his life he visited Lucca, for a fresco by him can be seen above the portal of the church of S. Martino, besides other paintings in that city. In the court of the SS. Annunziata, Florence, is a fresco representing 'Beato Filippo receiving the Habit of the Servites from the Virgin,' which is said to have been painted in 1476. In 1480 Rossetti was invited to Rome by Sixtus IV. to compete with Ghirlandajo, Signorelli, and Perugino, in the decoration of the Sistine Chapel; and according to Vasari gained the Pope's approbation over his rivals through the immense quantity of gold and ultramarine used by him in his pictures. His subjects were the 'Passage of the Red Sea,' 'Moses delivering the Tables of the Law,' 'The Sermon on the Mount,' and 'The Last Supper.' Rossetti's masterpiece is a fresco in the chapel of the S. Sacrament in S. Ambrogio, Florence, which represents 'The Exhibition of a Miracle-working Chalice.' Amongst his pupils and assistants were Piero di Cosimo and Fra Bartolommeo. In 1496 he valued Baldovinetti's frescoes at S. Trinità, Florence, and he died in 1507, in which year he made his will. Pictures by this artist are to be found in the churches of S. Ambrogio and S. Maria de' Pazzi, Florence, also in:

Berlin.	The Gallery.	The Virgin in Glory.

ROSSET, —, a French landscape painter of the 18th century of some talent, who was employed at Sèvres to paint landscapes on porcelain.

ROSSETTI, CESARE, an Italian painter of the 17th century, the pupil and assistant of the Cavaliere d'Arpino, under whom he worked at the decoration of San Giovanni Laterano during the pontificate of Clement VIII.

ROSSETTI, GABRIEL CHARLES DANTE, painter, was born May 12th, 1823, at 38, Charlotte Street, Portland Place, London. Though an Englishman by education and adoption, his family was of Italian origin, and had once borne the name of Della Guardia, Rossetti being merely a sobriquet which gradually crystallized into a surname. His father, Gabriele Rossetti, was a native of Vasto d'Ammone, a small town of the Abruzzi, on the Adriatic coast. He was the author of various critical and poetical works, became well known as a commentator on Dante, and held the appointment of keeper of bronzes in the Museo Borbonico at Naples. In 1820 the elder Rossetti took a prominent part, both as a politician and as a writer of patriotic songs, in the national movement by which the King of the Sicilies was forced to grant a constitution to his subjects. When, in 1821, Ferdinand, backed by an Austrian army, entered his kingdom to annul the lately-won charter, Gabriele Rossetti was compelled to fly. He escaped to Malta, and eventually to England, where he settled, and in 1831 became Professor of Italian literature at King's College, London. Shortly after his arrival in England he married Frances, the daughter, by an English wife, of Gaetano Polidori, sometime secretary to Alfieri. The second child of this marriage was the poet-painter, Dante Rossetti, the most famous of a gifted quartet. His eldest sister, Maria, is known as the author of a critical work, called 'The Shadow of Dante.' His brother, William Michael Rossetti, has an established reputation as a critic and poet, and his younger sister, Christina, takes high rank among nineteenth-century poets.

The early childhood of Rossetti was not, on the whole, remarkable, though he is said to have shown his artistic bent at a very early age, and mention is made of various precocious juvenile efforts, which were, however, chiefly literary in character. He received his education at King's College School, where he remained until about 1843, at which time he began his art education in Sass's School. Here he studied until 1846, when he was admitted to the Royal Academy Schools. He stopped short, however, of the Life School, and never thoroughly mastered the difficulties of drawing the human form. On his leaving the Academy Schools in 1848, Rossetti, who had been greatly attracted by some exhibited works of Ford Madox Brown, asked permission to attend his studio as a pupil.

In Mr. Madox Brown's studio Rossetti painted his first work in oil, a portrait of his father, and in 1847 he took a studio in Cleveland Street, Fitzroy Square, jointly with Mr. Holman Hunt. In the autumn of 1848, Rossetti, whose great personal charm, no less than his brilliant intellectual and artistic qualities, had gathered round him a circle of gifted young sympathizers, became the prime mover in the famous 'Pre-Raphaelite' revolt. In strict adherence to his new principles Rossetti painted his 'Girlhood of Mary Virgin,' which was exhibited in 1849, and, together with other productions of the brotherhood, raised a storm of indignant criticism. By the large class who decline to judge of any artistic endeavour save from their own accepted standards, the new movement was savagely denounced, and it was not till many years later that its quickening influence upon English art came to be widely acknowledged. The idea of an organ to spread the ideas of the brotherhood occurred to Rossetti in the autumn of 1849, and in January 1850, appeared the first number of 'The Germ,' a title which gave place in the third number to the less happy one of 'Art and Poetry.' The short-lived periodical came to an end with its fourth number. It claims a special interest in connection with Rossetti's career, not only as having been the summary and exposition of the new gospel, but as the vehicle by which he first became known to the world as a poet. It contained in all twelve contributions by him, among them the prose allegory 'Hand and Soul,' and the poem, 'The Blessed Damozel.' Rossetti gradually drifted away from the objective truth of the three pictures, which alone, amongst his important works, were conceived and painted according to the principles of the 'Germ.' These are the 'Girlhood of Mary Virgin,' the 'Ecce Ancilla Domini,' and the unfinished 'Found.' From the year 1853 onwards his art took on an individual character which was too soon to develop into mannerism. "His aim in art," says one of his biographers, "was to have something to say first, and then to say it beautifully." It is on his powers as a colourist that his fame as a painter must rest, and as such he has been too often compared with the great Venetians; but in his completest works—those produced between 1864 and 1870—he achieved a splendour of colour that has seldom been surpassed in modern times. From 1850 to 1860, Rossetti did comparatively little work in oil. The worship of Dante was strongly manifested in his choice of subjects at this period, to which belong the series of water-colours inspired by passages in the 'Vita Nuova' and the 'Divina Commedia.' For water-colours he found at one time a much more ready sale than for his work in oil, and to this it is due that he produced so much in the lighter medium. In 1857 he visited Oxford with Mr. Woodward the architect, who was then engaged on the new building for the Union Club, and it occurred to Rossetti that a fine effect might be gained by the decoration of the bays in the Debating Room with a series of wall-paintings in tempera, from the 'Morte d'Arthur.' The funds of the committee being insufficient to enable them to give a commission for the work, Rossetti, jointly with William Morris, E. Burne Jones, and other artists whom he had succeeded in interesting in the scheme, consented to undertake the frescoes gratuitously, the club defraying the actual outlay for material, &c. Rossetti chose for his subject 'Sir Launcelot before the Shrine of the Grail,' but he never completed the fresco, for in a very short time it was discovered that the paint, laid on a new wall without any sort of special preparation, would, after a while, completely shell off from the plaster. These frescoes are now mostly obliterated, but a memorial of Rossetti's work at the Union survives in a design of 'Arthur and his Knights at the Round Table,' which was carved in stone and coloured by Mr. Munro, and is in the tympanum of the porch.

About 1850 Rossetti took rooms at 14, Chatham Place, Blackfriars. In the beginning of 1851 he was introduced by the painter Deverell to Elizabeth Eleanor Siddall, a beautiful girl, who was afterwards the model for some of his most famous works, and in whom he found a type of feminine loveliness which, variously idealized or modified, he never wearied of reproducing. She had some artistic aptitude, which Rossetti undertook to cultivate, and the result was the marriage of the master and pupil in 1860, after a long engagement. After the birth of a still-born child in 1861, Mrs. Rossetti's health gradually failed, and consumptive tendencies developed. She died in February 1862, from the effects of an overdose of laudanum. Rossetti's grief was deep, and on the day of her burial he took the manuscript of all his poems (of most of which at that time there existed no other copy), and placed them as a last gift in her coffin. From this time he abandoned literary effort for some years, though not, as some have said, all creative work, for to the years 1862-1869 belong, among others, the three pictures which show his technical power at its highest level—the 'Lady Lilith,' the 'Monna Vanna,' and 'The Beloved,'—as well as the 'Beata Beatrix.' On the death of his wife Rossetti gave up the rooms in Chatham Place, and after a stay of six months in some chambers in Lincoln's Inn Fields, he took No. 16, Cheyne Walk, Chelsea, where he settled in the autumn of 1862. At first he occupied the house jointly with his brother and his friends, Algernon Charles Swinburne and George Meredith. But these drifted away one by one. Between 1869 and 1874 the residence at Cheyne Walk was varied by visits to Kelmscott Manor, near Lechlade, which the artist rented jointly with Mr. William Morris. Two visits to Penkill Castle, in Ayrshire (1868 and 1869) are memorable, as during his stay there he thought out some of his finest poems. These visits to Scotland, and a few short tours in France and Belgium, make up the sum of Rossetti's journeyings outside England. Great as was his sympathy with all things Italian, he never saw his father's country.

In Rossetti, two métiers were so closely allied, that in any sketch of his career it is difficult to consider him as either solely poet or painter. In many instances a picture was the illustration of a poem, or a poem the elaboration of a picture. Thus the 'Blessed Damozel' was the subject of two oil-paintings, while the 'Girlhood of Mary,' 'The Passover in the Holy Family,' 'Mary Magdalene,' 'St. Luke,' 'The Lady Lilith,' 'Sibylla Palmifera,' 'Fiammetta,' 'The Day-Dream,' 'Astarte Syriaca,' 'Proserpina,' and 'La Bella Mano,' have all their counterpart in sonnets. These illustrative sonnets it was occasionally his practice to write on the frames of the pictures to which they referred.

In the year 1869, Rossetti was prevailed upon by his friends to allow the exhumation of his buried MSS., and in 1870 the first collection of his 'Poems' appeared. They at once attracted attention and praise, mixed with strong dissent. About this time symptoms of weak health appeared. He had inherited weak sight from his father, which now became much aggravated, and gave him great uneasiness. A severe illness in 1872 seems to have completed the gradual break-up in his health, and from thenceforth he suffered terribly from insomnia. To obtain relief, he took to chloral, with the usual results. In 1881 he made an expedition to the Vale of St. John, near Keswick, but it led to no improvement in his condition. Early in 1882 he went to Birchington, near Margate, and there, on the Easter Sunday of 1882, he died. Rossetti made ten designs for book illustration: one for W. Allingham's 'Night and Day Songs'; five for the edition of Tennyson published in 1857; two in 1862, for 'The Goblin Market, and other Poems,' of his sister Christina; and two, in 1866, for her 'The Prince's Progress, and other Poems.' He also designed two windows and a panel for the pulpit in St. Martin's, Scarborough; as well as a window to the memory of his aunt, Miss M. M. Polidori, in Christ Church, Albany Street. The following list includes, in chronological order, all his important pictures in oil. For those in other media we must refer the reader to the exhaustive table appended to Mr. William Sharpe's biography. F.S.

ROSSETTI, GIOVANNI PAOLO, painter, a native of Volterra, flourished about the year 1568. He was a nephew of Daniele Ricciarelli, called di Volterra, under whom he studied at Rome, and is said to have painted history with considerable success. After the death of his uncle he left Rome, and returned to Volterra, where he executed some altar-pieces for the churches, of which one of the most esteemed was a 'Descent from the Cross,' in S. Dalmazio. He is said to have been still alive in 1600.

ROSSI (or Rosso), ANTONIO, the elder, painter, born at Zoldo in Cadore, in the second part of the 15th century. He is said by Lanzi to have been the first master of his great compatriot Titian, and painted numerous works in tempera, in an archaic and angular style. His period of greatest activity extends from 1472 to 1507. Numerous works of his now lost or obliterated are mentioned in ancient records. Of those still extant there are:

Altar-piece in the church of San Lorenzo, at Selva in Cadore; painted in 1472, and signed Antonius Rubens de Cadubrio pinxit.
 Fresco of Christ and the Twelve Apostles, in the church of San Silvestro sulla Costa, near Serravalle; signed Anto Roso de Cadore.
 Altar-piece (St. Martin sharing his Cloak) in the church of Vigo di Cadore. (1492.)
 Virgin and Child with SS. Bartholomew and Sylvester, formerly in the church of Nabù, now in the possession of Signor Righetti of Venice. This last picture is signed Antonius Zardanus (Antonio of Zoldo).
 Altar-piece lately in the possession of Signora Landonelli, at Venice; signed and dated 1494.
 Virgin with Saints; signed and dated 1494. Formerly in the church of Liban, near Belluno.
 Virgin with St. Sebastian and a Bishop; signed; Fonzaso, near Feltre.
 See Crowe and Cavalcaselle, 'Painting in N. Italy,' vol. ii. pp. 172-3.

ROSSI, ANDREA, an Italian engraver, born about 1726. There are several heads of popes engraved by him, and subjects after Carracci, Novelli, Frezza, and others. He died in 1790. The following prints may be named:

Portraits of Joseph II. and the Archduke Leopold ; after Pompeo Battoni.
a Bust of the Virgin ; after Carlo Dolci.
 St. Margaret of Cortona kneeling before a Crucifix ; after Pietro da Cortona.

ROSSI, AGNOLO, a Genoese painter, born in 1694. He was a priest, and the best-known pupil of Domenico Parodi. In style he was a disciple of Maratti, but he also treated humorous subjects with success. He died in 1755.

ROSSI, ANIELLO, painter, born at Naples about 1660. He was one of the favourite scholars of Luca Giordano, and, with Matteo Pacelli, accompanied his master to Spain, and remained with him as his assistant during his long sojourn at the court of Charles II. and Philip V. His services were rewarded by a handsome pension, and returning to Italy with his master in 1702, he settled at Venice, where he lived in ease and independence till his death in 1719.

ROSSI, ANTONIO, born at Bologna in 1697 (1700), was educated in the school of Cavaliere Marc Antonio Franceschini, of whom he was a favourite disciple, and who recommended him, in preference to his other pupils, to execute the commissions he himself was incapable of undertaking. Of the numerous pictures he painted for the public edifices at Bologna, his 'Martyrdom of S. Andrea,' in the church of S. Domenico, is perhaps the best. He was much employed in painting figures in the architectural views of Orlandi and F. Brizzi. He died in 1750 or 1753.

ROSSI, BERNARDINO DE. See DEI ROSSI.

ROSSI, CARLANTONIO, a Milanese painter, born about 1581. He painted a 'San Siro' for the cathedral of Pavia, in the manner of the Procaccini, and is said to have been the master of Carlo Sacchi. He died in 1648.

ROSSI, ENEA, a Bolognese painter of the 17th century, mentioned by Malvasia as a pupil of the Carracci, and an artist of some merit. He painted numerous works for the churches of Bologna and its neighbourhood.

ROSSI, FRANCESCO DEI. See DEI ROSSI.

ROSSI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an engraver, to whom is attributed a set of perspective views of Rome, published in 1640.

ROSSI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, painter, a native of Rovigo, born about 1627. He was a pupil of Dario Varotari, and practised for a time at Padua, where he painted a picture for the church of San Clemente. He settled later at Venice, where he was still living in 1680.

ROSSI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, called IL GOBBINO, (the little hunchback,) a Veronese painter of the 17th century. He was one of the best known of the disciples of Alessandro Turchi, and practised with credit for many years at Verona.

ROSSI, GIROLAMO, called DE RUBEIS THE ELDER, born at Rome about the year 1630, was brought up at Bologna, under Simone Cantarini. His instinct led him more to engraving than painting, and he has left several plates after Bolognese painters, which possess considerable merit ; among them are the following :

The Portrait of Pope Pius V. ; after Scipione Gaetano.
 Two Cupids playing ; after Guercino.
 The Virgin and Child, with St. Jerome and St. Francis ; after Lodovico Carracci, inscribed, Hieronimus de Rubeis pictor, delinnavit, incidit.
 S. Carlo Borromeo kneeling before a Crucifix ; after An. Carracci.
 A half-length figure of the Virgin.

St. John the Baptist ; after Guido.
 Two Children ; after the same.

ROSSI, GIROLAMO, called DE RUBEIS THE YOUNGER, son of Girolamo Rossi, was born at Rome about the year 1680, and chiefly resided in his native city, where he engraved a variety of plates after the Italian painters. He also executed several portraits of the cardinals of his time, for a series which was afterwards continued by Pazzi and others. They are feebly engraved. We have also by him the following prints :

The Virgin and Infant Jesus ; after Correggio.
 The Martyrdom of St. Agapita ; after Gio. Odazzi.

Nagler gives a list of twenty-one prints by the younger Rossi, among which he enumerates those of Pope Pius V., and of S. Carlo Borromeo kneeling, attributed above to his father. According to Zani, he was at work as late as 1749, but none of the dates quoted by Nagler come near to that period.

ROSSI, GIUSEPPE, engraver and draughtsman. He practised at Florence in the first half of the 19th century, and his drawings and engravings, particularly some of the 'Campo Santo' at Pisa, show considerable talent, but his promise was cut short by his death in 1848, while still a young man.

ROSSI, LORENZO, an Italian painter of the Florentine school, a pupil of Pier Dandini. He imitated the manner of the Flemish artist, Lieven Mehus, and painted small pictures of much delicacy and elegance. He died in 1702.

ROSSI, LORETTO D'UGOLINO, painter. Of this artist nothing is known, but a 'Crucifixion' at Berlin bears the following inscription : " Questa tavola se fatte fare per Loretto d'Ugolino de Rossi la quale a fatteta fare beltrame distoldo de Rossi, 1475."

ROSSI, MUZIO, painter, was born at Naples in 1626, and was for some time the disciple of Massimo Stanzioni. From the school of that master he went to Bologna, where he frequented the academy of Guido, and at the age of eighteen was sufficiently advanced to compete with the ablest artists of his time. An altar-piece for the Certosa, a 'Nativity,' was considered a marvel of precocity. On his return to Naples, he was engaged to paint the tribune of S. Pietro in Majsella, which he had not entirely finished when his career was cut short by his death, in 1651, at the age of 25.

ROSSI, NICCOLÒ MARIA, painter, was born about 1645, at Naples. He was a pupil of Luca Giordano, and a successful imitator of his style. In some of his more important works his master furnished him with designs, for the paintings in the Chapel Royal at Naples, for instance. He was much esteemed for his life-like rendering of animals. He died in 1700.

ROSSI, PASQUALE, called PASQUALINO, born at Vicenza in 1641. Without the instruction of a master, he is said to have reached a respectable rank as an historical painter by studying and copying the best works of the Venetian and Roman schools. Of his pictures in the churches at Rome, the best are : 'Christ praying in the Garden,' in S. Carlo al Corso ; and the 'Baptism of Christ,' in S. Maria del Popolo. In the church of the Silvestrini, at Fabriano, there is a 'Madonna' by him ; but perhaps his best production is an altar-piece in the cathedral at Matelica, representing St. Gregory interceding for the souls in Purgatory. He also painted gallant assemblies, musical parties, &c. He died in 1700. His death has been put as late as 1725.

ROSSI, PROPERTIA, a lady of Bologna, best known as a sculptor and carver, but who also engraved upon copper, and learnt drawing and design from Marc Antonio. She is said to have been remarkable for her beauty, virtues, and talents, and to have died at an early age in 1530, in consequence of unrequited love. Her last work was a bas-relief of Joseph and Potiphar's wife!

ROSSIGNOLI, JACOPO, painter, a native of Leghorn, who, towards the close of the 16th century, settled in Piedmont, and was appointed painter to the Court of Savoy. He was a contemporary of Ardente and Giorgio Soleri, and a successful imitator of the style of Perino del Vaga, in his painting of grotteschi. He died probably in 1604, for a Latin epitaph on his tomb at San Tommaso in Turin bears that date.

ROSSIGNON, LOUIS JOSEPH TOUSSAINT, historical painter and portraitist in pastel, was born at Avesnes, on the last day of 1781. He was a pupil of Vincent and of the École des Beaux Arts. Among his works we may mention :

The Siege of Missolonghi.
Zenobia greeted by Shepherds.
Death of General Sowinski.

He sent his last picture to the Salon in 1850.

ROSSITER, THOMAS, was born in 1818, at New Haven, Connecticut, where he made his first art studies, and where, in 1838, he began his career as a portrait painter. Two years later he came to Europe, visiting London, Paris, and Rome, where he lived for five years. On his return to New York in 1846, he became known chiefly as a painter of historical and Scriptural subjects, and in 1849 he was elected Member of the National Academy, his Associateship dating from 1840. After a second European sojourn, he settled at Coldspring, on the Hudson, in 1860. He died during a visit to Rome, in 1871. Some of his works have been engraved. They are carefully and conscientiously executed, but are deficient in life and animation. Among the best known are :

The Last Hours of Tasso.
Captive Jews in Babylon.
The Wise and Foolish Virgins.
The Ascension.
Washington in his Library.
Washington's First Cabinet.
The Prince of Wales at Washington's Tomb.

RÖSSLER, JOHANN KARL. See RÖSLER.

ROSSMAESSLER, JOHANN AUGUST, was born at Leipsic in 1752, and was instructed in design by Frederick Oeser. He engraved a great variety of vignettes and other plates for books, and also a few views in the environs of Leipsic. He died at Leipsic in 1783.

ROSSMAESSLER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, an engraver, born at Leipsic in 1775, engraved plates for Sir Walter Scott's novels after Westall and Leslie, and also plates for Bulwer Lytton's 'Pilgrims of the Rhine.' He died at Leipsic in 1858.

ROSSO, ANTONIO. See ROSSI.

ROSSO, IL (MAITRE ROUX). See DEI ROSSI.

ROSSUM, J. VAN, was a Dutch painter of the 17th century. He worked in the style of Metsu. There is a picture by him in the gallery at Vienna of an old gentleman walking in a park. In 1654 he painted a portrait of the priest, J. A. Husinga, which was engraved by Matham.

ROSWORM, —, a painter, of whom scarcely anything is known. He was in England about the year 1665, and copied some of Sir Peter Lely's pictures in small.

ROTA, MARTIN, an eminent engraver, born at Sebenico, in Dalmatia, about the year 1540, but who chiefly resided at Rome and Venice. By whom he was instructed in the art of engraving is not ascertained. His plates are executed entirely with the graver, and though not very highly finished, they are wrought in a neat, clear style. His print after Michelangelo's 'Last Judgment' is considered his masterpiece. This fine print, which is inscribed Martinus Rota, 1569, has been copied by Léonard Gaultier, but his version may easily be distinguished from the original, not only by its inferiority, but by the fact that the head in the portrait of M. Angelo in a small oval at the top, is turned towards his right shoulder in the original, while in the copy it is towards the left. There is another copy by J. Wierix. Rota engraved some plates from his own designs. He usually signed his plates with his name, but sometimes marked them with a monogram, consisting of an M. and a wheel (rota) by the side of it, M. . The following are his principal plates :

PORTRAITS.

Maximilian II., Rom. Imper. 1575.
The Emperor Rudolph II. 1592; with the cipher.
Ferdinand I. in the costume of his time. 1575.
Henry IV., King of France.
Albert a Laskó.

SUBJECTS.

The Resurrection; dated 1577. (From his own design.)
The same subject, differently treated. (From his own design.)
The Murder of the Innocents. (From his own design.)
The Last Judgment; dedicated to Rudolph II. 1573.
Another print of the Last Judgment. This plate was left imperfect at his death, and was finished by another hand. (From his own design.)
The Scourging of Christ. 1563. (From his own design.)
The Martyrdom of St. Peter; after Titian.
M. ry Magdalene penitent; after the same.
Prometheus chained to the Rock; after the same.
Christ appearing to St. Peter; after Raffaele. 1563.

ROTARI, PIETRO. See DEI ROTARI.

RÖTENBECK, GEORGE DANIEL, born at Nuremberg in 1645, was a historical and portrait painter of some merit, and also a good draughtsman and modeller. He died about 1705.

ROTERMANS. See RODERMONT.

ROTERMUND, JULIUS WILHELM LOUIS, a German historical painter, born at Hanover in 1826. He studied under Bendemann, who at his early death—he died at Salzbrunn, Silesia, in 1859—finished his last work, 'The Dead Christ,' which is now in the Dresden Gallery.

ROTH, PETER, painter, practised at Cologne, where he became well known as a skilful restorer of old pictures, and also as a portrait painter of some merit. He died in 1866.

ROTH, WILLIAM, an English portrait and miniature painter, in the second half of the 18th century. He exhibited at the Incorporated Society in 1768, and for some time after practised at Reading.

ROTHWELL, RICHARD, an Irish portrait and subject painter, born at Athlone in 1800. In 1815 he commenced his studies in the Dublin Society's school. He practised in the Irish metropolis for a few years, and was elected a member of the Hibernian Academy. Coming to London he assisted Sir Thomas Lawrence, and occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1830 onwards. But success did not wait upon him, and he migrated to Dublin, Leamington, Paris, and finally to Rome, where he died in 1868. Works:

- The Little Roamer. (South Kensington Museum.)
- Noviciate Mendicants. (The same.)
- The Very Picture of Idleness. (The same.)
- Portrait of Huskisson. (National Portrait Gallery, London.)
- Field-Marshal Lord Beresford. (The same.)

ROTHWELL, THOMAS, an obscure engraver. He was born in 1742, and died at Birmingham in 1807.

ROTTENHAMER, THOMAS, painter, practised in Germany in the 16th century. An artist of this name was employed in connection with the ducal stables at Munich.

ROTTENHAMMER, JOHANN, born at Munich in 1564, was instructed in the rudiments of design by an artist named Donauer. At an early period of his life he went to Rome, where it was not long before he distinguished himself by painting small pictures of historical subjects, which, though they retained somewhat of the German taste, were ingeniously composed, and handled with neatness and spirit. He had acquired some reputation by his easel pictures, when he was commissioned to paint an altar-piece for one of the churches at Rome, and discovered unexpected ability. A desire to better his colour prompted him to visit Venice, where he particularly devoted himself to studying the works of Tintoretto, in the Scuola di S. Rocco, and he appears to have imitated the style of that master with some success. During his stay at Venice he painted a few pictures for the churches. Ferdinand, Duke of Mantua, employed him in several considerable works. After a residence of many years in Italy he returned to his native country, and established himself at Angsburg, where he met with great encouragement. He was patronized by the Emperor Rudolph II., for whom he painted a capital 'Feast of the Gods.' His cabinet pictures are by no means uncommon. The backgrounds are frequently painted by Jan Breughel, and sometimes by Paul Brill. He was fond of decorating his compositions with rich and splendid accessories, and of introducing nude figures. Rottenhammer died at Angsburg in 1623. Works:

ROTTERMONDT. See RODERMONT.

ROTTMANN, FRIEDRICH, painter and draughtsman, born at Handschuhsheim, near Heidelberg, a self-taught artist, known chiefly by his water-colour sketches of military life. He became teacher of drawing at the University, and was commissioned to make sketches of local scenery by the Duke of Nassau. He died in 1817. By him are the following pictures, which he also etched:

- The Fight for the Neckar Bridge.
- Battle near Handschuhsheim.
- Storming of the Bridge at Heidelberg.

ROTTMANN, KARL, son of Friedrich Rottmann, was born at Handschuhsheim, near Heidelberg, in 1797. He studied for a short time under Xeller, and first brought himself into notice by his 'Heidelberg at Sunset' (a water-colour), and his 'Castle Elz.' In 1822 he settled at Munich, and devoted himself to the delineation of Bavarian scenery. Later he spent much of his time in Italy and Greece, and the scenes of classic antiquity furnished him with many subjects. He was appointed painter to the Bavarian court, and was commissioned by Louis I. to paint a series of Greek landscapes, twenty-three in number, which now hang in a room by themselves, known as the 'Rottmann Saal,' in the New Pinacothek. Several of these were executed by an encaustic process. He also painted the arcades of the 'Hofgarten' at Munich with a set of twenty-eight Italian landscapes in fresco. He died at Munich in 1850. The following are some of his works:

ROTTMANN, LEOPOLD, landscape painter, born at Heidelberg in 1813, was a brother of Karl Rottmann, and a painter of some popularity. He was patronized by King Max of Bavaria. Many of his works are more topographical than pictorial. He died in 1881.

ROTTMAYR VON ROSENBRUN, JOHANN FRANZ MICHAEL, (ROTHMEYER,) a painter, born at Laufen, near Salzburg, in 1652, studied under Karl Loth in Venice, but afterwards returned to Salzburg, where he painted several pictures for the churches in that city. He then went to Vienna, and became court-painter to the Emperors Joseph I. and Charles VI., and was made a baron. The ceiling of the large hall in Pommersfeld is his most important work. He died at Vienna in 1730.

ROUBAUD, BENJAMIN, painter, was born at Roquevaire, Bouches-du-Rhône, in 1811. He was a pupil of Hersent, and was chiefly occupied in making drawings for 'L'Illustration.' He died at Algiers in 1847.

ROUCHIER, MARIE MARGUERITE FRANÇOISE, (née JASER,) a French miniature painter, was born at Nancy in 1782. She was the pupil successively of Isabey, Aubry, and Regnault. She exhibited at the Salon regularly down to 1844, winning a medal in 1835. She died in 1873.

ROUCHON, —, miniaturist, a Benedictine monk of the 16th century, who illuminated a beautiful breviary for the church of S. Jacques de la Boucherie, in Paris, a work on which he is said to have spent some twenty-two years.

ROUGEMONT, EMILIE, (née GOHIN,) a portrait painter, born in France in 1821, was a pupil of Léon Cogniet. She died in 1859.

ROUGERON, JEAN, a French painter, born at Gevray-Chambertin, Côte d'Or, in 1841. He worked principally in Spain, and was the friend of Henri Regnault, whose picture of 'Les Lances,' left unfinished at Regnault's death during the siege of Paris, he completed. He died in 1880. Works:

The Spanish Letter-writer.
Dance of Gypsies.
Wedding in a Spanish Village.
Brawl in a Posada.
Child's Funeral in Andalusia.
Taking the Habit at the Carmelites.
Departure of the Torrero for the Bull-fight.

ROUGET, GEORGES, painter, born in Paris in 1784, was a pupil of David, and painted portraits and historical subjects. He died in Paris in 1869. Of his portraits we have:

Louis David.	Engène Beauharnais.
Louis XVIII.	Victor Kellerman.
Charles X.	Marmont.
Napoleon.	St. Cyr.
Soult.	Clausel.

HISTORICAL SUBJECTS PAINTED FOR VERSAILLES.

St. Louis receiving the Envoy of the Old Man of the Mountain, at Ptolemais, 1251.
The Death of St. Louis.
Francis I. at Rochelle.
Henry IV. before Paris.
Henry IV. and his Children.
Henry IV. abjuring the Roman Catholic Faith.
The Marriage of Napoleon with Marie Louise.
The Death of Napoleon I.

Besides these pictures there were also several on religions and mythological subjects:

Œdipus and Antigone.
Ecce Homo.
Christ on the Mount of Olives.

At Fontainebleau there are several tapestries executed at the Gobelins after designs by Rouget.

ROUILLARD, FRANÇOISE JULIE ALDOVRANDINE, (née LENOIR,) born in Paris in 1801, a pupil of Saint, of Delacluze, and of her husband, Jean Sebastien Rouillard. She won honours at the Salon, where her works were exhibited between 1819 and 1833. She died of cholera in 1832.

ROUILLARD, JEAN SEBASTIEN, painter, born in Paris in 1789. He was a pupil of David, and painted historical subjects and many portraits. His works appeared at the Salon between 1817 and 1850; he was often premiated. He died in Paris in 1852. Works:

Aix.	Musée.	Portrait of Charles X. in his coronation robes.
Amiens.	Musée.	Portrait of Marshal Grouchy.
Versailles.	Musée.	Portrait of Marshal Schomberg.
"	"	" The Marquis de Bellefonds.
"	"	" General Vandamme.
"	"	" Camille Desmonlins.

ROULLET, JEAN LOUIS, an engraver, born at Arles, in Provence, in 1645, was first instructed in the art of engraving by Jean Lenfant, but he afterwards became a pupil of François de Poilly, and was the ablest of his scholars. On leaving that master he went to Italy, where he passed ten years, and acquired a purity and correctness of drawing which enabled him to engrave with success after the great masters of the Italian school. His plate of the 'Marys with the dead Christ,' after the picture by Annibale Carracci, formerly in the Orleans Collection, now in the possession of the Earl of Carlisle, is admirable. He became an agrée of the Académie Royale in 1698, and died in Paris in 1699. The following are his principal works:

PORTRAITS.

Louis XIV.; a half-length.
François de Poilly, Engraver to the King, ad vivum. 1680.
Jean Baptiste Lully, Musician to the King; after Mignard.
Ascanius Philamarinus, Cardinal Archbishop of Naples.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The three Marys, with the dead Christ; after An. Carracci.
The Virgin and Infant Jesus; after the same.
Two pendentives of the dome of the Jesuit's church at Naples, representing St. Matthew and St. Luke; after Lanfranco. The two other pendentives, with St. Mark and St. John, are engraved by F. de Louvemont.
The Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elisabeth; after Mignard.
The Virgin, with the Infant Jesus in her arms, who is holding a Bunch of Grapes; after the same, and inscribed to Madame de Maintenon.

See Mariette, vol. v. pp. 41—51.

ROULLIÈRE, LA. See LA ROULLIÈRE.

ROUQUET, JEAN ANDRÉ, enamel painter, born at Geneva about 1702. He came to London, where he practised for many years in the manner of Zincke, and was well known in literary and artistic circles in the reign of George II. He afterwards settled in Paris, where he became a member of the Academy of Painting, in 1753, by the special order of the king, and in spite of his Protestant principles. He interested himself much in researches concerning the processes of his art, and was the author of some works on painting. In 1746 he published in Paris a 'Lettre de M. . . à un de ses amis pour lui expliquer les estampes de Hogarth,' and in 1755 a very laudatory work on British Art, called, 'L'Etat des Arts en Angleterre,' a translation of which appeared subsequently in London, and in the same year a satire suggested by Diderot's 'Peinture en Cire,' entitled 'L'Art nouveau de la peinture en fromage, ou ramequin, inventé pour suivre le louable projet de trouver graduellement des façons de peindre inférieures à celles qui existent.' Rouquet had rooms assigned to him in the Louvre, but, becoming insane, was removed to Charenton, where he died in 1759.

ROUSSEAU, ANTOINE, a French painter of the 17th century, and friend of Philippe de Champagne, was in 1645 painter in ordinary at the French Court.

ROUSSEAU, EDMÉ, a French miniature painter of little note, the pupil of Augustin, born in 1816. He died in Paris in 1858, and a notice of his life appeared in 'Le Monde Dramatique' for the 28th January, in that year.

ROUSSEAU, JACQUES, landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1630. After being instructed in the elements of design in his native city he went to Rome, where he applied himself to the study of perspective and landscape, and drew the most remarkable scenes in the vicinity. He formed a friendship with Herman Swaneveldt, whose sister he married, and, assisted by his advice and instruction, became an able painter of landscapes and architectural views. On his return to Paris he met with a favourable reception. He was employed by Louis XIV. at Marly and St. Germain-en-Laye, and was made a member of the Academy. He was at the height of his reputation at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, when, as a Protestant, he fled to Switzerland, whence Louis XIV. invited him to return. He however preferred to go to Holland, whence he was invited to England by the Duke of Montague, and was employed, in conjunction with Charles de la Fosse and John Baptist Monnoyer, in decorating Montague House. He was afterwards employed to paint several landscapes and perspective views for the palace of Hampton Court. The landscapes of Rousseau generally represent classic scenery, embellished with magnificent architecture. In this he appears to have taken Nicholas Poussin for his model. He etched nineteen plates, of much merit, which are now very rare. He died in London in 1693.

ROUSSEAU, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, who resided in Paris about the year 1760. He has engraved a great number of vignettes and other ornaments for books, after the designs of Gravelot and others. We have also the following separate plates by him :

The Virgin and Infant Christ; after Vander Werf.
St. Jerome; after P. F. Mola.

ROUSSEAU, PHILIPPE, was born in Paris on the 22nd February, 1816. He was a pupil of Gros and of Bertin, and made his début at the Salon of 1834, with a 'View in Normandy,' but about ten years later turned his attention to those still-life subjects in which he made his reputation. He won the orthodox honours at the Salon, culminating in the officership of the Legion of Honour in 1870. He died in 1887. Works :

St. Martin, Gisors. 1838.
Interior of a Farm. 1850.
The Intruder. 1850. (Musée du Luxembourg.)
Storks taking a Siesta. 1855. (The same.)
Kid eating Flowers. 1855. (The same.)
The Gala Day. 1859.
The Monkey Photographer. (Princess Mathilde.)
Flowers. (The same.)
The Wolf and the Lamb. 1875.
O ma tendre Musette! 1877.
La Fête Dieu. 1877.
The Two Friends. 1882.

ROUSSEAU, PIERRE ÉTIENNE THÉODORE, a landscape painter, born in Paris in 1812, was the son of a tailor, and, in boyhood, was placed in some humble capacity with a relative who had a steam saw-mill in Franche Comté. He studied under Paul de St. Martin, Rémond, and Guillon-Lethière. In 1834, 1835, and 1838 he exhibited at the Salon, betraying in his work a disregard for convention which was then quite new. After that time his works were rejected by the Paris Salon on the ground that they were not classical; and it was not till 1848, when the Jury of Members of the Institute fell, that his struggles against adverse fortune came to an end. Meanwhile Rousseau had taken refuge in the forest of Fontainebleau, in that village of Barbison which he has done almost as much as Millet to immortalize. There he lived until, with opening fortunes, he added to his retreat a home in Paris. In 1849 his pictures were again admitted to the Salon, and won a medal of the first class. In 1852 he received the cross of the Legion of Honour, at the 1855 exhibition a first-class medal, and in 1867 a médaille d'honneur and the higher grade of the Legion of Honour. Rousseau did not show the courage and magnanimity of Millet, and his failure to win acceptance is said to have shortened his life. The credit of an early appreciation of Rousseau's genius belongs to the Americans. He died at Barbison on the 22nd December, 1867. Of his works we may cite :

A Glade in a wood, Compiègne. 1834.
The Forest of Fontainebleau, at sunset. 1849.
Hoar Frost.
Group of Oaks.
A Group of Oaks in a hollow.
Huts under the Trees.
A Swamp in the Landes, the Basses-Pyrénées in the distance. 1853.
Entrance to Bas-Bréau, Fontainebleau. 1851.

Water-colour Landscape. (Havre Museum.)
Water Meadows. (Nantes Museum.)
Cows at the Drinking Place. (The same.)
Cows in a Meadow, Fontainebleau. (Montpellier Mus.)

ROUSSEAU, THÉODORE AUGUSTE, a French painter, was born at Saumur about 1825. He was a pupil of Leon Cogniet, and went to California, where he died. Examples of his work are to be found at Versailles and in the musée of Saumur.

ROUSSEAU, ÉMILE ALFRED, a French engraver, born at Abbeville in 1831. His studies were directed by Henriquel-Dupont, and he was awarded medals at the Salons of 1863 and 1867. He died in Paris in 1874. Amongst his best plates are :

Fame and Truth; after Correggio.
Portrait of a Man (Louvre); after Francia.
The Christian Martyr; after Delacroix.
Christ and St. John; after Ary Scheffer.
The Virgin and the Infant Jesus; after Hébert.
The Marquis de Sévigné; after Nanteuil.

He also sent to the Salon portraits in chalk of M. Victorien Sardou and M. Lerminier.

ROUSSELET, GILLES, was born in Paris in 1610. It is not known under whom he learned the art of engraving, but his style resembles that of Bloemaert. He was received into the Academy in 1663. His drawing is correct, and his plates possess considerable merit, though in some the lights are too much covered. He was closely allied with Le Brun. He died blind in Paris in 1686. The number of his plates is considerable; the following are the most esteemed :

Charles de Valois, Duke of Angoulême.
Pierre Séguier, Chancellor of France; after Le Brun.
Richard de Belleval, Chancellor of the University; after the same.
The Frontispiece to the Polyglot Bible; after S. Bourdon.
The Holy Family; with St. Elisabeth and St. John presenting the Infant Jesus with a Bird; after Raffaele.
La Belle Jardinière; after the same.
The Holy Family, with St. Elisabeth, St. John, and two Angels; after the same.
St. Michael overcoming Satan; after the same.
The Annunciation; after Guido.
Four plates representing three of the Labours of Hercules and his Death; after the same.
David playing on the Harp; after Domenichino.
The Entombment of Christ; after Titian.
The Four Evangelists; after Valentin (four plates).
Eliezer meeting Rebecca; after N. Poussin.
Moses saved from the Nile; after the same.
The Holy Family; after S. Bourdon.

St. John the Evangelist; after the same.
 The Crucifixion; after Le Brun.
 A Pietà; after the same.
 The Dead Christ supported by an Angel; after the same.
 The Holy Family; after the same.
 The Penitent Magdalene; after the same.
 St. Bernard kneeling before the Virgin; after the same.
 St. Theresa in contemplation; after the same.

ROUSSELET, MARIE ANNE, was the wife of Pierre Tardieu, the engraver, and was probably a relative of Gilles Rousselet. She engraved several plates for Buffon's 'Natural History,' and 'St. John in the Desert,' after Vanloo. She also engraved some sea-pieces after Backhuysen, W. Van de Velde, and J. Vernet. She flourished about 1765.

ROUSSIÈRE, FRANÇOIS DE LA. See DE LA ROUSSIÈRE.

ROUVIÈRE, PHILIBERT, painter and actor, was born at Nîmes in 1805. He was a pupil of Gros, entering the École des Beaux Arts in 1828. He exhibited occasionally at the Salon between 1831 and 1864. He died in Paris in 1865. As an actor he played 'Lear,' 'Macbeth,' and the 'Duke of Alva,' at the Odéon, and 'created' the rôle of 'Maître Favilla.'

ROUX, JAKOB WILHELM CHRISTIAN, a painter and engraver, born at Jena in 1771, studied first in his own city and then at Dresden. His 'Falls of the Rhine at Schaffhausen' is a careful production, and his illustrations to Tiedemann's work on the Arteries are good. His attempts to make use of wax as a vehicle were finally successful, and in this manner he painted a 'Head of Venus,' after Titian, and a portrait of the Councillor Paulus. He etched the 'Student Riot at Jena of 1792,' and a 'Painter's Journey down the Rhine from the Vosges to the Siebengebirge.' He died at Heidelberg in 1831. His son KARL, born 1826, at Heidelberg, is a well-known historical and animal painter.

ROUX, MAÎTRE. See DEI ROSSI, GIOVAMBATTISTA.

ROUX, POMPEYO, was an engraver of religious prints at Barcelona in the 17th century.

ROVERE, GIAMBATTISTA and MARCO, the two brothers of GIOVANNI MAURO ROVERE. They assisted him in his works, and executed a large number of paintings, both in fresco and oil, for the city of Milan. The three brothers were also called Rossetti, and more generally still Fiamminghini, from their father.

ROVERE, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an artist of the 17th century at Turin, the only record of whom was a curious painting which he left in the convent of St. Francis at Turin. The subject was 'Death,' and the Figures of Adam and Eve were introduced in company with those of the three Fates. It was inscribed: "Jo. Bapt. a Ruere Taur. f. 1627." An artist of the same surname was employed at Turin in connection with the court collection of pictures from 1626 and onwards, but his Christian name was GIROLAMO.

ROVERE, GIOVANNI MAURO, called FIAMMINGHINO, (FIAMINGO,) painter and engraver, was born at Milan in 1570, of parents of Flemish origin. He was brought up under the Procaccini, whose style he followed, particularly that of Giulio Cesare. He painted history with some success. His altarpiece, the 'Last Supper,' in the church of S. Angelo at Milan, is a good picture, and so are his battle-pieces and landscapes with animals. Some engravings by him of such subjects, after his own designs, are marked J. M. R. F. GIOVANNI BATTISTA

ROVERE, brother of Giovanni Mauro Rovere, painted architectural perspectives, and showed considerable talent. He died in 1640. Several others of the same family practised painting.

ROVERIO, BARTOLOMMEO, a Milanese painter of the 17th century, seems to have been identical with MARCO GENOVESINI, who has been sometimes confused with CALCIA, called IL GENOVESINO, a painter of the same epoch (q. v.). He practised in the manner of the "Machinisti." Oretti mentions a picture by him in the church of the Certosa, Carignano, signed Bartol. Roverio. D. Genovesino, and dated 1626, and a 'Crucifixion' in the refectory, dated 1614, and he painted numerous works in Milan, notably for the Augustines, among them a genealogical tree of the order.

ROVIGO. See URBINO.

ROVIRA Y BROCANDEL, HIPÓLITO, a Spanish painter and engraver, was born at Valencia in 1693. It is not known under what master he first studied, but it is certain that he assisted in the studio of Evaristo Muñoz, where, solely by application, he became an excellent engraver. In his 30th year he started for Rome. On his arrival there he devoted himself to study with such ardour that he passed days and nights without other sustenance than bread and water. He never undressed; and his enthusiasm was so great that his boast was that he had copied every picture which had given him pleasure. But his privations had their effect on his faculties, and on his return from Rome his work was not equal to what he had done before his departure thither. He had there, however, painted the portrait of the General of the Dominicans; and on Rovira's return to Madrid the reverend father was at the court. The queen, Isabel Farnese, was desirous of having a portrait of Luis I., and the General spoke so highly of the talent of Rovira, that he was sent for to execute the work. After beginning well, mental disturbance led him to spoil his picture, and he fled to Valencia in complete destitution. Here the Marquis de Dos Aguas took him into his house, and got him a commission to paint in fresco the vault of the sanctuary of S. Luis, which he finished without exhibiting the least aberration of mind. It was at last, however, found necessary to place him in an asylum, the Casa de Misericordia, where he died in 1765. In the first volume of the 'Museo Pictórico' of Palomino, there are several prints by him, which show his talent as an engraver.

ROWBOTHAM, THOMAS LEESON, an English landscape painter in water-colours, born at Dublin in 1823. His father was an artist, and by him he was taught. From shortly after his birth until he was twelve he lived at Bristol. He made several sketching tours, beginning in 1847, through Wales, Scotland, Normandy, and Italy. From the latter country many of his subjects were taken. Succeeding his father, he taught drawing at the naval school at New Cross. He joined the Water-Colour Institute in 1858. In his later years he restricted himself practically to Italian subjects, and as a rule to those with sea or a lake in them. His style was sunny, but florid, decorative, and non-natural. He died at Kensington in 1875, leaving his family ill-provided for. Two of his drawings are in the Kensington Museum.

ROWLANDSON, THOMAS, a celebrated designer and etcher of caricatures and humorous subjects, was born in London in 1756. At a very early period he gave presage of his innate talent for caricature, by making caricatures of his school-master and fellow-scholars on the margins of his books. In his sixteenth year he was sent to Paris, and entered as a student in one of the drawing-schools there, where he made rapid advances in the study of the human figure. On his return to London he resumed his studies at the Royal Academy, where he had been admitted a student before his visit to Paris. His father, who was a city tradesman, became embarrassed from injudicious speculation, and young Rowlandson would have been without support but for the liberality of an aunt, a French lady who had married his Uncle Thomas. This lady, whose maiden name was Chattelier, amply supplied him with money; and to this indulgence, perhaps, may be traced those careless habits which attended his early career, and for which he was remarkable through life. At her decease she left him seven thousand pounds, besides other valuable property. He then gave way to his bent towards dissipation. In Paris he had imbibed a love for gaming; and he now frequented the most fashionable play-houses in London, where he alternately won and lost without emotion, until he had dissipated more than one valuable legacy. It is said that he once sat uninterruptedly at the card-table for thirty-six hours. He has been known, after having lost all he had, to sit down coolly to his work, and exclaim, "I've played the fool, but (holding up his pencils) here is my resource." Coarse, hasty, and slight as were the generality of his humorous designs, his early works were wrought with care; and his 'Academies' of the human figure were scarcely inferior to those for which Mortimer was famous. His style, which was purely his own, was quite original. He drew a bold outline with the reed pen, in a tint composed of vermilion and Indian ink, washed in the general effect in chiaroscuro, and then slightly tinted the whole with the proper local colours. Like many other caricaturists he had a keen sense of beauty, especially of the beauty of woman. For many years he was too idle to invent subjects or to seek new employment, and his kind friend and best adviser, Ackermann, the well-known publisher in the Strand, supplied him with ideas for the exercise of his talent. At that gentleman's suggestion he made the illustrations for 'The Travels of Dr. Syntax,' 'The Dance of Death,' 'The Dance of Life,' by W. Coombe. The first-named of these was 'written to' Rowlandson's drawings by Coombe. In spite of his reckless mode of life, Rowlandson had the character of a man of scrupulous honour. He died in London in 1827.

ROWLETT, THOMAS, an etcher and draughtsman, practising in London about the middle of the 18th century. He has left an etching after a portrait of William Dobson, the painter.

RÓXAS Y VELASCO, SALVADOR, a gentleman of Seville, who practised painting as an amateur, and actively contributed to the foundation and support of the Academy in the years 1670-73.

ROY, JEAN BAPTISTE DE, commonly called DE ROY of Brussels, a landscape and cattle painter, was born at Brussels in 1759. From his early childhood he showed a great disposition for drawing, and his father took him to Holland that he might have the opportunity of studying the celebrated Dutchmen. These and nature were his only teachers; but by assiduous attention to both he soon attained to considerable eminence as a painter. The pictures of Paul Potter, Cuyp, and Berchem, decided his choice of subject; but the style he adopted differs from theirs, and is more like that of Ommeganck. His subjects are generally horned cattle standing in groups, or grazing in meadows. In the Brussels Museum there is a good picture by him. He died in 1839.

ROY, JOSEPH, a French painter of the 17th century, employed at a fixed salary by the town of Bordeaux in 1611. He painted the portraits of many of the municipal authorities.

ROY, LE. See LE ROY, PIERRE FRANÇOIS.

ROY, SIMON, a French painter of the 16th century, the friend of Clouet. He was one of the artists employed in 1548 in the decoration of Fontainebleau.

ROYEN, WILLEM F. VAN, a Dutch painter of still-life, born at Haarlem in 1654. In 1689 he settled at Berlin, and became painter to the court, working at Berlin and at Potsdam for many years. Nagler states that he received a considerable pension from the Prussian court. He died in 1723.

ROYER. See LE ROYER.

ROYER, PIERRE, a painter and architect, working towards the end of the 18th century. He was of French birth, but seems to have worked chiefly in London. He exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1774 and 1778, and at the Salon down to 1796. Most of his subjects were taken from London and its neighbourhood. Among them were a 'View of Garrick's Villa, at Hampton,' 'Hyde Park Corner,' 'Chelsea and Battersea Bridge.'

ROYMERSWALEN. See MARINUS.

ROYNARD, VINCENT, a French artist of the 17th century. In 1642 he received commissions for various portraits and pictures from Anne of Austria.

RUBEN, CHRISTIAN, a painter, born at Trèves in 1805. His first master was Cornelius, at Düsseldorf, but he afterwards studied at Munich. In the summer of 1835 he produced an 'Ave Maria' and 'Scenes from Monastic Life,' a series of cartoons for the cathedral of Ratisbon. In 1848 he was appointed Director of the Art Academy in Prague, in which year he also produced some cartoons for the Belvedere in Vienna, of which he was made Director. His last works were ten cartoons from Bohemian history. He died in an asylum near Vienna in 1875.

RUBENS, A., an obscure artist, who practised at Brussels, and died in distressed circumstances about 1824.

RUBENS, PETER PAUL, was born on the 29th of June, 1577, at Siegen in Westphalia. His father, Jan Rubens, was an alderman at Antwerp, who, in the time of the religious troubles, had been denounced as a Calvinist, and escaped to Cologne, where he entered the service of Prince William of Orange. Here, after two years, he became involved in an intrigue with the Princess Anne, and suffered five years rigorous captivity in the castle of Dillenburg, before he was conditionally set free, to live under surveillance in a modest house in the village of Siegen in Westphalia, where the great painter was born, and passed the first year of his life. In 1578 the family were permitted to remove to Cologne, where they lived in a small house in the Sternengasse for ten years, until the death of Jan Rubens, when his widow returned with her family to Antwerp. The mother of Rubens, Maria Pype-linx, was a woman of energy and refinement. Her husband's release had been due to her incessant solicitation, and she now successfully exerted herself to recover, in the ruined city of Antwerp, a portion of the family estates, in order to educate her children. The rigour of the Spanish domination permitted at that time no other instruction of youth than that of the Jesuits, and Peter Paul accordingly passed the next few years of his life at the Jesuits' College, where, young as he was, he acquired a mastery of languages, and probably an attachment to the religious faith of his preceptors, which coloured his career. From the Jesuits' College he was transferred for a short time, in conformity with the custom of the period, to the household of a noble lady, the Countess Lalaing, as a page; and thus the seed was sown of that courtliness and grace of manner which was so invaluable to him in after life, and by which he was distinguished above his compeers. He was, however, only thirteen years of age when he entered upon the serious study of art, with Tobias Verhaeght, a landscape painter of some reputation; from whom the boy acquired an appreciation of the beauty of nature which he never forgot, and which returned to him forcibly in the last days of his life, when the gout forced him to be content with painting landscapes at his château at Steen.

Verhaeght, however, was not a figure painter, and the ambition of Rubens was already directed to historical subjects. He remained, therefore, only a short time with his first instructor, and then removed to the studio of Adam van Noort, where he studied four years in the companionship of Jordaens. Great importance is attached to the influence of Van Noort upon Rubens and Jordaens, and, through them and his other pupils (of whom thirty-two are mentioned in the archives of the Painters' Guild), upon the whole Flemish art of the period. At the age of nineteen Rubens was transferred to the studio of Othon van Veen (often called Otto Vænius), a man of noble family and great connections, who had been appointed court-painter to Alexander Farnese, and to the Archduke Albert and the Infanta Isabella; who had studied also under Zuccheri in Rome, and who imbued his pupil with a desire to visit Italy, while he was able to forward his wish through the favour of the Archduke Albert.

Rubens set out for Italy on the 9th of May, 1600. Nothing is on record of the incidents of his journey or of his arrival, beyond the circumstance that at Venice he became known to the magnificent Vincenzo Gonzaga, the reigning Duke of Mantua, who at once became his patron and protector. He employed Rubens first at Rome, and in the following year at Mantua, in making copies and original works of art; and it is suggested by Dr. Waagen that falling in the course of this task under the influence of the works of Mantegna, the severity of this master's style moderated, for the time, the native taste of Rubens for full forms. In the year 1603 he was sent by the Duke upon an artistic commission into Spain, in charge of presents for the King and others, which included a collection of pictures for the Duke of Lerma. These last became seriously injured on the journey, and were successfully restored by Rubens. On his return to Mantua he began to receive a fixed salary from the Duke, but returned to his studies at Rome in 1605, and continued there throughout the following year, only returning to Mantua for a short time, at the express command of the Duke, in the summer of 1607. He remained at Rome until 1608, when the news of his mother's last illness drew him homewards, to be met, on his journey, by the announcement of her death.

He now settled at Antwerp, where his brother, Philip, was town secretary, and on 13th October, 1609, married Elizabeth (Lijsbette) Brandt, the niece of his brother's wife. He was nominated court-painter to the Archduke, and in the same year admitted into the Romanist Guild of St. Peter and St. Paul. In 1610 he bought a plot of land, and built himself a house in the Italian style, which he decorated with his own hand. His house is said to have cost him 60,000 florins, and contained a princely collection of art treasures. In 1611 his brother Philip's death left Rubens the representative of his family. Philip left two children. Peter Paul had himself no children, until the birth of his eldest son in 1614; about four years later his second was born. The Archduke Albert was godfather to the first-born. It was during this period that some of Rubens' finest pictures were painted. He valued his work at 100 guilders, or about £10, a day, and the amount that he produced was enormous. His process was to sketch out his subjects on a small scale, and have them transferred to canvas by his pupils under his own close supervision. He would then complete them himself with the vigorous finishing-touches which distinguish his work. Amongst his pupils were: Justus von Egmont, Peter van Mol, Cornelis Schut, Jan van den Hoecke, Simon de Vos, Deodato van der Mont or Delmont, Nicolas van der Horst, Jan Wildens, Jakob Moermans, Willem van Panneels, Peter Soutmanns, Erasmus Quellin, David Teniers the younger, Theodore van Thulden, Abraham van Diepenbeeck, Frans Wouters, Gerard van Herp, Jean Thomas, Matthew van den Berg, Samuel Hoffman, Jan van der Stock, Pennemakers, and Jan Victor Wolfvoet; but those who did him the best service were: Anthony van Dyck, Jacob Jordaens, and Frans Snyders. About the year 1620 Rubens was called to Paris at the request of the Queen, Marie de' Medicis, for the decoration of the great gallery in the Palace of the Luxembourg. In the course of his visit he became known to the Duke of Buckingham, whose portrait he painted, and to whom he sold his own fine collection of statues, pictures, and other works of art, for a sum of 100,000 florins. On the 29th of September, 1626, Rubens lost his wife, Elizabeth Brandt. They had been married sixteen years. In a letter to Pierre Dupuy, Rubens mentions his wish for a journey to divert him from the "sight of many things which renewed his grief." With this object in view he became very active in the negotiations for peace, and, at the invitation of the King of Spain, made a journey to Madrid in 1628. It was on this occasion that he was discovered by a courtier busily painting. "Ho!" cried the latter, "does his most Catholic Majesty's representative amuse himself with painting?" "No," answered Rubens, "the artist sometimes amuses himself with diplomacy." He was indeed always industriously pursuing his art. He painted a great many portraits in Madrid of the King and the Royal Family, besides a number of other pictures, and copies of the Titians in the royal galleries. In the following spring, however, the minister Olivares determined to despatch Rubens as an envoy to London; and having been nominated Secretary to the Privy Council of the Netherlands, he left Madrid on the 29th of April, 1629, with full instructions for London. Arriving in London on the 15th of June, he was received with great honour and cordiality, had frequent interviews with the King, and finally brought to a successful issue the intricate and double-dealing commissions he was charged with. Ambassadors were exchanged between Spain and England, and Rubens, who had previously received knighthood at Whitehall, left London on the 6th of March, 1630, and returned to the Netherlands. Among the works that he painted during his sojourn in England was the 'Peace and War,' now in the National Gallery.

On the 6th December, 1630, Rubens being then fifty-three years of age, married his second wife, Helena Fourment, or Forman, the daughter of his former wife's sister. She was a girl of sixteen, and her portrait is familiar to the world in a great number of her husband's pictures. In 1633 he was employed on a diplomatic mission to Holland, and again shortly after, when he succeeded in making an arrangement with the States-General. He had scarcely returned from this mission when he heard of the death of his oldest patroness, the Infanta Clara Eugenia Isabella, in the last month of 1633. Rubens now withdrew from politics. He purchased Château de Steen, between Vilvorde and Mechlin, spent much of his time there, and painted many landscapes. He began to suffer much from gout, but, in 1635, he was employed in the arrangements for the triumphal entry of the new Spanish Governor of the Catholic Provinces. His designs for this pageant were afterwards engraved and published by Gervaearts. His last work was the altar-piece for the church of St. Peter's at Cologne, on which he expended an amount of care and time unusual with him. Rubens etched a few plates; he made designs for several sets of tapestries, of which 'The Life of Achilles,' in eight pieces, the 'History of Constantine,' in twelve (Garde-Meuble, Paris), and two 'Triumphs of the Church,' one in seven, the other in fifteen, pieces (Carmelites, Madrid), are the most important; and he made not a few designs for silversmiths, and for printers like Moretus. For the latter he drew many titles and culs-de-lampe, as well as eight designs for a history of cameos, to be written by Peiresc, which never appeared. He died on the 30th May, 1640, and was in the first place interred in the vault of the Fourment family. His body was two years afterwards removed to a special chapel built out from the church of St. Jacques, at Antwerp, for its reception. A catalogue was made of the works of art in his possession, which sold for the then enormous sum of £25,000. His eldest son succeeded to his office of Secretary to the Privy Council. He was a distinguished scholar and antiquarian, and died at an early age. As the pictures of Rubens number (according to the 'Commission anversaise chargée de réunir l'œuvre de Rubens en gravures ou en photographies') no fewer than 2,253, exclusive of 484 drawings, it is impossible to give a complete catalogue of them here; the following list contains the more remarkable of those which are easily accessible.

RUBENSTEIN, (or RIEBENSTEIN,) drapery and portrait painter, who resided in England many years. He painted dead game and still-life, and sometimes portraits, but his chief occupation was painting draperies in the pictures of others. He was a member of the St. Martin's Lane Academy, and died in London about the year 1763.

RUBERTIS. See GRANDI, ERCOLE DI ROBERTO.

RUBIALES, PEDRO DE, was a native of Estremadura, and flourished about the year 1545. Little is known of his works in Spain, as he resided the greater part of his life at Rome and Florence, where he studied under Francesco Salviati, whom he assisted in many of his works. He was also at one time a coadjutor of Giorgio Vasari. Rubiales painted as late as 1560, but the date of his death is not known.

RUBINI, an Italian painter of little note, who practised at Treviso about 1650.

RUBIO, ANTONIO, a Spanish painter and pupil of Antonio Pizarro. He was appointed painter to the chapter of Toledo in 1645, and died in 1653.

RUBIRA, ANDRES DE, a Spanish painter, was born at Escacena del Campo, and was a scholar of Domingo Martinez, of Seville. His application and activity were very useful to his master in the different works which he was commissioned to paint; for, it is said, he sketched the greater part of the pictures in the ancient chapel of the Cathedral, which were completed by Martinez. On his return to Seville, from a visit to Lisbon, he was soon employed on works of great importance, such as the pictures in the chapel of the Holy Sacrament, in the college of San Salvador, a great part of those in the college of S. Alberto, and most of those that decorate the cloister del Cármen calzado. He also occasionally painted conversation pieces, and bambocciati. Rubira died at Seville in 1760.

RUBIRA, JOSEF DE, son of Aodres de Rubira, was born at Seville in 1747. Though only thirteen at his father's death, he would not submit to be instructed by another master. He was an excellent copyist of the works of Murillo. He died in 1787.

RUCHOLLE, PIERRE, an indifferent French engraver, who flourished about the year 1690. He engraved a few portraits, amongst which we have those of:

- Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy; after Vandyck; with the address of J. Meyssens.
- Louis XIV.; after H. Rigaud.

RUDDER, LOUIS HENRY DE, historical painter, was born in Paris in the early part of the 19th century; he was a pupil of Gros and of Charlet, entering the École des Beaux Arts in 1827. He exhibited regularly at the Salon between 1834 and 1880, and was much employed on decorative work for America. He lithographed forty plates for Prince Solytkoff's 'Voyage dans L'Inde,' and a great many for Cuvier's 'Anatomie Comparée.' He died in 1886. Pictures:

- The Divine Message. (Ministère de l'Intérieur, Paris.)
- Women Bathing. (The same.)
- Ecce Homo. (Ministère de l'Etat.)
- Christ in the Garden of Olives. (The same.)
- The Alchemist, Nicholas Flamel. (Luxembourg.)
- Ecce Homo. (Museum, St. Etienne.)
- Portrait of E. Pasquier. (Versailles.)

RUDE, SOPHIE, (née FRÉMIET,) was born at Dijon in 1797. She was a pupil of David, and painted historical and still-life pictures, and portraits. She married François Rude, the sculptor, and died in Paris in 1867. Of her pictures we may name:

- The Sleep of the Virgin. (Dijon Museum.)
- Charles I. parting from his Children. (Ministère de l'Intérieur.)
- The Duchess of Burgundy stopped at the gate of Bruges. (Dijon Museum.)
- Faith, Hope, and Charity. (Chapel of Mt. St. Michel.)

RUDOLF, SAMUEL, portrait painter, born in Germany, 1639, practised at Nuremberg and at Erlangen. He died 1713.

RUDOLFI, CLAUDIO. See RIDOLFI.

RUDOLPH D'ANVERS, painter, practising at Antwerp in the middle of the 16th century. In 1553 he painted an altar-piece for the church of Saint-Victor, at Xanten.

RUE, DE LA. See VAN STRAATEN.

RUE, P. B. DE LA. See DE LA RUE.

RUEL, GABRIEL DE, a Spanish historical painter, resided at Granada at the commencement of the 17th century. There are several pictures by him in that city. He was appointed painter to the cathedral of Toledo in 1633. He died on Christmas Eve, in 1641.

RUEL, JOHANN BAPTIST, painter, born at Antwerp in 1634, went as a singer to the cathedral at Mayence, and there studied under Johann Thomas, called Ipenaer. He practised as an historical and portrait painter, visited Vienna, where he painted altar-pictures and portraits, and died at Antwerp about the beginning of the 18th century.

RUELLE, CLAUDE DE LA. See DE LA RUELLE.

RUET, DE. See DERVET.

RUFO, JOSEF MARTIN, an historical and portrait painter, born at the Escorial, and educated at the academy of S. Fernando. He flourished in the second half of the 18th century.

RUGENDAS, CHRISTIAN, the son of Georg Philipp Rugendas, by whom we have a great number of prints in mezzotint, after the designs of his father, representing marches, halts, battles, &c. He engraved about sixty of his father's designs; and there are by him about thirty etchings from his own, which are much esteemed. He died at Augsburg in 1781, at the age of seventy-three.

RUGENDAS, GEORG PHILIPP, painter and engraver, born at Augsburg in 1666, and first instructed in design by Isaac Fischer, a painter of history; but his genius leading him to paint battles and skirmishes of cavalry, he formed his style by studying the works of Borgognone, and the prints of Tempesta. He had acquired considerable reputation by his pictures of that description, when he resolved to visit Italy, and, 1692, went to Venice, where he passed some time, and was assisted in his studies by Giovanni Battista Molinari. From Venice he went to Rome, where it was not long before his talents became known, and he met with such flattering encouragement in that metropolis, that he had thought of establishing himself there; but the death of his father obliged him to return to Augsburg, and he quitted Italy with regret in 1695. In a few years after his return to Augsburg, the war of the Succession broke out, when Rugendas had an opportunity of personally witnessing those scenes of slaughter and desolation which his imagination had so frequently enabled him to trace with his pencil. During the siege, bombardment, and pillage of Augsburg, by the French and Bavarians, in 1703, he exposed himself to the most imminent danger, to study the attacks of the besiegers, which he drew with sang-froid, surrounded on all sides with carnage and destruction. He afterwards published a set of etchings from the drawings thus made.

Rugendas died at Augsburg in 1742. He devoted a considerable portion of his time to engraving, and has executed a great number of plates, both etchings and in mezzotint; among them the following:

ETCHINGS.

A set of six Plates; entitled, Capricci di Giorgio Filippo Rugendas. 1698.

RUGENDAS, JOHANN LORENZ, a German battle painter, born in 1775, at Augsburg, where he became Director of the Academy. He was the great-grandson of G. P. Rugendas. There are some etchings and aquatint engravings by him. He died in 1826.

RUGENDAS, JOHANN MORITZ, a German draughtsman, the son of J. L. Rugendas, was born at Augsburg in 1802. He studied under his father, and also at Munich. In 1821, he set out on a series of travels in Brazil with General Langsdorf. These were afterwards extended to Mexico, Peru, and other American States. The sketches he made in these wanderings were published in:

'Malerische Reise in Brasilien.' Paris. 1835.

'Mexico,' by C. Sartorius. London. 1855-8.

RUGGERI, GUIDO, a native of Bologna, who flourished about the year 1550. He was a disciple of Francesco Raibolini, called Il Francia, and accompanied Primaticcio to France, where he assisted that master in his great work at Fontainebleau. He is, however, more known as an engraver than as a painter. He engraved several plates from the designs of Primaticcio, which are executed in a style resembling that of Marco da Ravenna; and it is not improbable that he learned engraving in the school of Marc Antonio Raimondi. His plates were usually marked with a monogram composed of a G. and an R. joined together, with an F. for fecit. The etchings attributed to this master partake of the manners of Giulio Bonasone, Caraglio, and Giorgio Ghisi; but there is great uncertainty respecting them.

RUGGIERI, ERCOLE, called DEL GESSI, the brother of Giovanni Ruggieri, was also educated in the school of Francesco Gessi, whose style he followed with so much success, that his works are with difficulty distinguished from those of his master. Such are his picture of the 'Death of St. Joseph,' in the church of S. Cristina di Pietralata, at Bologna; and the 'Virgin and Infant Jesus, with St. Catherine, and other saints,' at the Servi.

RUGGIERI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, called DEL GESSI, a native of Bologna, was born in 1606, and for some time a disciple of Domenichino. He afterwards became a scholar of Francesco Gessi, whom he accompanied to Naples, and assisted in some of his principal works in that city, and at Bologna. He visited Rome in the pontificate of Urban VIII., when he was patronized by the Marchese Giustiniani, and painted some pictures for the churches and palaces. His principal works at Bologna are, three altar-pieces in the church of S. Barbaziano. Ruggieri died at Rome in 1640.

RUGGIERI, GIROLAMO, painter, born at Vicenza, 1662. Practised at Verona, and painted landscape and battle-pieces. Died 1717.

RUHL, LUDWIG SIGISMUND, painter and engraver, born at Cassel 1794, son of Johann Christian Ruhl, the sculptor. He studied in Germany and Italy, and first brought himself into notice by his picture of 'The Three Kings' (Magi), a clever imitation of the manner of the old masters. His designs for 'Shakespeare's Plays,' and Bürger's 'Lenore,' are well drawn, and show much talent. He was Director of the Cassel Gallery. His best known pictures are :

Louis XIV. and James II.
Van Dyck's Studio.
Sleighting by Night.

RUIDIMANN. See REUTLMANN.

RUINA, GASPARO, an indifferent engraver on wood, by whom we have a cut representing the 'Creation of Adam,' which is evidently taken from the painting by Michel-Angelo, in the Vatican, though it is inscribed, Hieronymo de Grandi, pinxit. Gaspar Ruina, fecit. Zani and Brulliot say he was the engraver who marked his prints with three darts crossed, sometimes accompanied with the letter G. There are several historical, mythological, and allegorical prints by him, signed Gasparo, f., or Gasparo Ruina, f.

RUINES, ROBERT DES. See ROBERT, HUBERT.

RUISCH. See RUYSCH.

RUISSCHER, J., engraver, practised in Holland about the middle of the 17th century. He engraved landscape, and frequently treated subjects introducing cascades and rushing water.

RUIZ, ANTONIO GONZALEZ. See GONZALEZ RUIZ.

RUIZ, DE LA IGLESIA, FRANCISCO IGNACIO, was born in Madrid about the middle of the 17th century. He was the pupil of Francisco Camilo and of Juan Carreño. He died at Madrid in 1704.

Works:
Madrid. Hospital de Montserrat. } Frescoes.
" Sto. Tomàs. Assumption and Coronation of the Virgin.

RUIZ-GONZALEZ, PEDRO, was born at Madrid in 1633. He studied under Juan Antonio Escalante and Juan Carreño. Three of his best pictures were burnt with the church of S. Millan in 1720, in which church he himself had been interred eleven years before, in 1709.

RUIZ GIXON, JUAN CARLOS, lived at Seville, about the year 1677. It would seem that he had practised under Herrera the younger, as his style entirely resembles that master's. This is particularly observable in a picture of the Immaculate Conception, surrounded by numerous angels, in the cathedral at Seville, to which Ruiz has signed his name.

RUIZ, JUAN SALVADORE, painter, was a member of the Academy of Seville in 1671.

RUIZ-SARIONO, JUAN, painter, born at Higuera de Aracena, 1701, was a pupil of his cousin, A. M. de Tobar. He practised at Seville, painting historical subjects, but without much skill, and died in that city in 1763.

RULLMANN, painter, born at Bremen in 1765, first studied at the Academy in Dresden, and then went to Paris, where his portraits gained him considerable reputation. His studies from the old masters in religious and historical subjects show considerable talent. He died in 1822.

RUMEAU, JEAN CLAUDE, a French painter, pupil of David and of Isabey, practised in Paris early in the 19th century. There are by him, 'Charlemagne receiving the Ambassadors of Haroun-al-Raschid;' 'Blue-Beard,' &c. His last appearance at the Salon was in 1822.

RUMILLY, VICTORINE ANGÉLIQUE AMÉLIE, (née GENEVE), Madame, born at Grenoble, 1799, was a pupil of Regnault, and painted portraits and genre pictures. There are by her, 'Venus and Cupid,'

'Holy Family,' &c. She exhibited at the Salon from 1808 to 1839, and died in 1849.

RUMMEN, (or RUREMONDE,) JAN VAN, a Flemish painter, who in 1486 painted a picture and a retable for the church of Léau.

RUMP, CHRISTIAN GOTTFRIED, who was born in 1816 at Hillerød, in Denmark, studied art under Sund at Copenhagen. He began his career as an historical painter, and executed the 'Presentation in the Temple' for the church of Grønholm, but in 1846 he turned his attention towards landscape painting, and won for himself a name high among the artists of Denmark. In 1855-56 he travelled in Norway, and the two following years were spent in Germany and Italy. In 1866 he was made a member of the Academy of Copenhagen, and in 1874 a Professor. He died at Frederiksborg in 1880. The following are among his best works:

Copenhagen.	Nat. Gall.	View near Frederiksborg.
"	"	Landscape, Morning.
"	"	View in Søbygaard Forest.
"	"	View near Skjærgaarden.
"	"	Woodmen, Frederiksborg.
"	Motike Coll.	The Four Seasons ( a series ).

RUNCIMAN, ALEXANDER, historical painter, was born at Edinburgh in 1736. He is said to have served his apprenticeship to a coach-painter, and by dint of mere practice to have acquired facility of hand and a considerable intelligence in colouring, though he was still un instructed in drawing the figure. He travelled to Italy, where he studied for five years, and painted a 'Nausicaa at play with her Maidens.' On his return he lodged for a time with Hogarth's widow in Leicester Square, and exhibited some pictures in 1772. The next year he settled at Edinburgh, where he conducted the recently established Academy of Arts, and painted some historical pictures, among which was an altarpiece for the episcopal chapel in the Cowgate. He was patronized by Sir James Clerk, who employed him to decorate his mansion at Pennycnick with some subjects from Ossian. He died suddenly in 1785. There are a few etchings by Runciman from his own designs, among which are the following:

Sigismunda weeping over the Heart of Tancred.
A View of the Netherbow Port, Edinburgh.

RUNCIMAN, JOHN, a Scotch historical painter, and brother of Alexander Runciman, was born at Edinburgh in 1744. He executed few works during his short career, in which he showed very high promise. About 1766 he accompanied his brother to Rome for the purpose of study, but his health gave way, and he died at Naples in 1768. There is a monument to him in the Canongate Church, Edinburgh. Among his works are:

Christ and the Disciples on the road to Emmaus. (National Gallery, Edinburgh.)
King Lear in the Storm. (The same.)
Portrait of himself. (The same.)
Judith and Holofernes.

RUNGALDIER, IGNAZ, engraver and miniature painter, the son of a silver worker, born at Gratz in 1799, had his earliest lessons from Kauperz, and in 1816 entered the Vienna Academy. His best plates are: 'Ossian,' after Kraftt; 'Jupiter and Thetis,' after Fügér; 'St. Sebastian,' after Guido Reni; 'Madonna,' after Kadlik; a portrait of Fügér the younger, after Fügér. He also became very successful in portrait painting in miniature. He died at Gratz in 1876.

RUNGE, PHILIP OTTO, a painter, born at Wolgast in Pomerania in 1776, studied first at Copenhagen under Abildgaard and Juel, and then in Dresden. He made himself a name by an allegorical representation of the 'Four Seasons,' painted at Hamburg, and was afterwards much employed in wall painting. He died at Hamburg in 1810.

RUNK, FERDINAND, a German landscape painter, born at Fribourg, Brigau, in 1764. He acquired a reputation by his 'Twenty-four Views in the Tyrol,' aquatinted by Piringer, and by a series of eight pictures of 'Nature, from the sea-coast to the mountain-tops.' He died at Vienna in 1834. There is a 'Tyrolese Landscape' by him in the Vienna Gallery.

RUOPPOLL, GIUSEPPE, a painter of flowers and fruit, who particularly excelled in the representation of grapes, was born at Naples in 1600, and died there in 1659.

RUPERT, PRINCE, the third son of the Elector Palatine of the Rhine and Princess Elizabeth of England, who played so considerable a part in our Civil War as leader of his uncle, the king's, cavalry, was born at Prague in 1619. At one time he was looked upon as the inventor of the art of mezzotint engraving, but it has been shown that he learned it of Ludwig von Siegen, a Lieut.-Colonel in the service of the Landgrave of Hesse, and introduced it into England. He died in London in 1682. The following is a list of those prints in mezzotint which can be assigned with some confidence to 'Prince Rupert of the Rhine.' He made use of the annexed monogram :

1. A Magdalene in contemplation ; after M. Merian.
2. An Executioner holding a Sword in one hand and a Head in the other, after Spagnoletto, known as 'The Great Executioner.'
3. The Executioner's head, known as 'The Little Executioner,' done for Evelyn's Sculptura, who informs us that it was presented to him by the Prince himself, as a specimen of the newly invented art.
4. A Standard-Bearer (three-quarter length figure).
5. The same Figure to the shoulders.
6. Bust of an Old Man with bald head and flowing beard.
7. Portrait of a Young Man, leaning on his left arm.
8. Head of an Old Man with moustache (right profile).
9. A Woman's Head, looking down.
10. Boy with basket of fish, on sea-shore ; after Teniers (?).
11. Magdalen, turned to our right, her hands crossed on her bosom.
12. Boy with lighted candle ; after Schalcken (?).

He is also credited with the following etchings :

1. A Mendicant Friar, with rosary ; in the manner of Callot.
2. A Beggar singing ; Do.
3. Landscape with man driving a waggon.
4. (?) Old Beggar resting on staff.
5. (?) A Man with a basket on a stick over his shoulders.
6. Scene on Sea-shore, a man carrying a sack in the foreground.

RUPP, LADISLAUS, a Viennese architect and engraver, was born in 1790. He was a pupil of the Academy in his native town, but also studied in Italy. The date of his death has escaped research.

RUPPRECHT, FRIEDRICH CARL, landscape painter, etcher, engraver on wood, and architect, was born at Oberzeun, near Anspach, in 1779. After receiving some preliminary instruction at Nuremberg, he went to Dresden and improved himself by copying the pictures of Claude, Titian, Paul Potter, and other old masters ; and also turned his attention to architecture and perspective ; acquiring considerable knowledge of both. In 1802 he made a tour through the south of Germany to study landscape, but it being war time he met with much interruption, and, to support himself, was compelled to have recourse to portrait painting. He became acquainted with General Drouet, whose portrait he painted, and those of several of his officers, and for some time accompanied the former through Germany as his interpreter. Rupprecht's water-colour landscapes are drawn with great minuteness, and finished like miniatures. He is, however, better known by his etchings ; he also did a few woodcuts and a lithograph. As an architect Rupprecht was employed to restore the old cathedral of Bamberg to its primitive state, and he prepared the plans, models, and drawings for that purpose, and for some years superintended the work, but did not live to witness the completion. The cathedral possesses about a hundred and thirty of his drawings, some of which are interesting to the antiquary, as representing curious objects of ancient date discovered during the restorations. In other respects, Rupprecht possessed much knowledge, particularly of history, and showed much critical sagacity in matters connected with the fine arts. An enlarged account of his life and works was published at Bamberg in 1843, by J. Heller, and there is a portrait of him after Klein. He died at Bamberg in 1831.

ETCHINGS.

1. Portrait of E. T. A. Hoffmann, for that writer's 'Phantasiestücken,' published in 1819.

RUPPRECHT, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, (RUPERT,) a German painter, was born at Nuremberg in 1600. He copied the works of A. Dürer and several other masters with great talent. He also produced several original compositions, among which was the 'Raising of Lazarus,' in the church of Sebald at Nuremberg. The Emperor Ferdinand III. carried him to Vienna, where he died in 1654.

RUSCA, FRANCESCO CARLO, a painter, was born at Lugano in 1701. He studied law, but abandoned it for art, which he studied at Turin under Amiconi ; and at Venice from the works of Titian and Veronese. From Venice he travelled through Switzerland, Hanover, Berlin, and came also to England. He died at Milan in 1769. He painted several portraits, among which were :

The Countess Schuenburg.

The Doge of Venice.

Charles I. of Brunswick. (Brunswick Gallery.)

RUSCHEWEYH, FERDINAND, a designer, engraver, and lithographer, who distinguished himself by his engravings after Cornelius, Overbeck, Steinle, and other artists of the same school; also after Fra Angelico, Raphael, Giulio Romano, Michel-Angelo, and Thorwaldsen. He was born at Neustrelitz in 1785, and commenced his studies at Berlin about 1803. He passed some time at Vienna, and in 1808 went to Rome. His enthusiasm for the older Italian masters, and his desire to emulate Marc-Antonio, made him the natural interpreter of those painters who wished to restore the ancient simplicity and religious feeling of art. Ruscheweyh's engravings did much to diffuse the knowledge of these artists throughout Europe. While at Rome he engraved the beautiful illustrations to Goethe's Faust by Cornelius, many sacred and classical subjects by Overbeck, in addition to a long list of plates after the old Italians. On his return to his native country in 1832, he engraved the 'Jews in Exile,' after Bendemann; 'Christ in the Temple,' and 'Ruth and Boaz,' after Overbeck. He died in 1845.

RUSS, KARL, painter and engraver, born at Vienna in 1779, was a pupil of Schmitzer and Maurer. In 1800 he was appointed guardian of the Belvedere Gallery at Vienna. In 1822 he exhibited a series of pictures, thirty-seven in number, representing scenes taken from the history of the House of Hapsburg. He died in 1843.

RUSS, LEANDER, painter, born at Vienna in 1809, was a pupil of the Academy in that city, and painted military subjects in water-colours, such as the Battles of 'Kolin,' 'Caldiero,' and 'Leipzig'; and 'Charles XII. at Poltawa.' He also worked much in Indian-ink. He died at Vienna in 1864.

RUSSEL, ANTONY, an English portrait painter, the son of Theodore Russel, born about 1660. He is supposed to have studied under Riley. Many of his works were engraved by J. Smith and Vertue. He died in 1743.

RUSSEL, THEODORE, a Flemish portrait painter and copyist, born at Bruges in 1614. He learned his art under his uncle, Cornelius Jansen, and Van Dyck, with whom he lived in England. His chief patrons were Lord Essex and Lord Holland. He found much employment as a copyist, especially of Van Dyck's portraits. The date of his death is not known. The following are some of his works :

Hampton Court.	Copy of Rubens's 'Thomyris receiving the head of Cyrus.'
Holyrood Palace.	Charles II.
	James II.
London. " Nat. Portrait Gallery. }	Sir John Suckling; after Van Dyck.
Woburn Abbey.	Several portraits.

RUSSELL, JOHN, son of a bookseller, an English portrait painter, chiefly in crayons, born at Guildford in 1744, was a pupil of Francis Cotes, whose manner he followed. His portraits are not inferior to those by Cotes, though somewhat florid in colour. Time and dust have destroyed a great many. He published a work on the elements of painting in crayons, which was considered valuable at the time, and went through two editions. He was also fond of astronomy, and constructed a model showing the appearance of the moon, for which he obtained a patent: he called it the Selenographia, and published a description with plates engraved by himself. In 1788 he was elected an R.A. He was portrait painter in crayons to George III. and to the Prince of Wales. He visited some of the principal towns in England, in pursuit of his profession, and died at Hull in 1806.

RUSSELL, WILLIAM, an English portrait and subject painter, born in the latter part of the 18th century. He was the son of John Russell, R.A. He practised in London, and exhibited at the Academy from 1805 to 1809, after which year no trace of him can be discovered.

RUSSI, FRANCO DE'. See CRIVELLI, TADDEO DE'.

RUSSI, GIOVANNI, or FRANCO, DE', miniature painter, a native of Mantua. In 1455-61 he illuminated the 'Este' Bible for Borso, Duke of Modena, in conjunction with Taddeo Crivelli.

RUSSO, GIOVANNI PIETRO, a painter of Capua, of some local celebrity, who lived in the 17th century.

RUSTICI, CRISTOFORO, painter, the son of IL RUSTICO, practised in Italy in the 16th century, and imitated the style of his father.

RUSTICI, FRANCESCO, (RUSTICHINO,) born at Siena about the year 1595, was a pupil of Francesco Vanni. He for some time imitated the style of Michel-angelo Caravaggio, while his subjects resemble those of Gerard Honthorst. He studied at Rome the works of Annibale Caracci and Guido, and painted some pictures there for the public edifices and private collections. His best picture is an 'Annunciation,' at Siena. In the Pitti Gallery there is a fine 'expiring Magdalene'; and in the Palazzo Borghese at Rome, there is a 'St. Sebastian' by Rustici. He died in the prime of life, in 1625.

RUSTICI, VICENZO, painter, practising in Italy in the 17th century, was a member of the artist family of Rustici, but less famous than the rest. He was a pupil of Casolano.

RUSTICO, IL, painter, practised at Siena in the 16th century, and was a pupil of Sodoma. He devoted himself mainly to the treatment of grotesque subjects.

RUSUTI, FILIPPO, (RUSERUTI,) was the author of some mosaics in the church of Santa Maria Maggiore, Rome, which were executed about the year 1380, and represent Christ in the act of benediction, various Saints, and the legend of the Church's foundation.

RUTA, CLEMENTI, painter, born at Parma, 1668, a pupil of Spolverini and of C. Cignani, came to Naples in the train of Charles de Bourbon. He became blind towards the close of his life, and died in 1767.

RUTGERS, —, called OLD RUTGERS, was an excellent designer of landscapes with the pen and in water-colours, of whose life there is no account. His manner is broad and vigorous, and his figures well grouped.

RUTHART, KARL, (RUTHARTS,) a German animal painter who is known to have been in Italy from about 1660 to 1680, and to have stayed some time in Venice: further details of his life are entirely wanting. His pictures, representing stag and bear hunts, are found in most German galleries. In the Dresden Gallery are four pictures signed with his name: 'Ulysses and Circe;' 'Stags;' 'Stags pursued by Dogs;' and a picture of large dogs used in bear hunts. In the Louvre there is also a 'Bear Hunt.'

RUTTEN, JAN, painter of interiors, was born at Dordrecht in 1809. He was a pupil of A. Van Stry, whose granddaughter he married, and of G. A. Schmidt.

RUVIALE, FRANCESCO, called IL POLIDORINO. According to Dominici, this painter was a native of Spain, though he was brought up at Naples, where he flourished about the year 1540. Having seen some of the works of Polidoro da Caravaggio at Naples, whither he had fled from the sacking of Rome, he became his disciple, and followed the style of that artist with so much success, that he acquired the name of Il Polidorino. His principal works at Naples are a 'Dead Christ, with the Virgin Mary and St. John,' in the chapel of the Courts of Justice; and the 'Descent from the Cross,' in that of the Vicaria Criminale.

RUWERSMA, WESSEL PIETER, born at Kollum, Friesland, in 1750, was a self-educated painter of portraits and landscape. He died at Buitenpost in 1827.

RUYSCH, ANNA, a painter of flowers and fruits, after the manner of Rachel Ruysch, to whom she is supposed to have been related. She practised in Holland towards the end of the 17th century.

RUYSCH, RACHEL, (RUISCH.) flower painter, born at Amsterdam in 1664, was the daughter of Frederick Ruysch, a celebrated professor of anatomy. At a very early age, without the instruction of a master, or any other assistance than that of copying the prints that accidentally fell in her way, she gave such proofs of an unusual gift for art, that her father placed her with William van Aelst, an eminent flower painter. She soon surpassed her instructor, and being recommended by her extraordinary talents was appointed paintress to the Elector Palatine. She married, when young, a portrait painter, Jurian Pool, and is sometimes called by his name. They lived together about fifty years, and had ten children, yet she always signed her pictures with her maiden name. She was more successful in painting flowers than fruit, and she chose exotics in preference to those that were indigenous to her country. She is admirable in her manner of grouping as well as in pencilling; and each flower is relieved by its neighbour, and all kept in perfect harmony. With great taste and judgment she introduced among her flowers the insects peculiar to the country whence they were derived; and these she depicted with microscopic accuracy. The labour she bestowed on her works prevented their being numerous; two, a flower and a fruit piece, are said to have occupied her for seven years; and these she bestowed on one of her daughters as a marriage portion. Rachel Ruysch continued the exercise of her talent until she had reached a very advanced age, and died at Amsterdam in 1750. Works:

RUYSDAEL, ISAAC VAN, the brother of Solomon and Jacob van Ruysdael, lived at Haarlem. He combined the trade of picture-dealing and the profession of painting. His works, which are mostly landscapes, are found in a few German galleries. He died at Haarlem in 1677.

RUYSDAEL, JAKOB VAN, (or RUISDAEL.) landscape painter, was born at Haarlem about 1630. He was the son of Izaak Ruysdael, a frame-maker, and a pupil of Everdingen. In 1648 he entered the Guild of Haarlem, but in 1659 went to Amsterdam, where his co-religionists, the Mennonites, took him into their almshouse. It is not known under whom he studied, but Houbraken informs us that, although he had given proof of extraordinary ability at the early age of fourteen, he did not at first follow painting as a profession, but for some years applied himself to the study and practice of surgery. He afterwards lived in habits of intimacy with Nicholas Berghem, and he is said to have been advised by that artist to devote his attention entirely to painting. His success warranted the recommendation of his friend; his pictures were purchased with avidity, and he soon became one of the most popular painters of his time.

In the pictures of Ruysdael, it is evident that he designed everything from nature, and he is unusually happy in his selection of it. His trees and broken grounds are pleasing in form, and his skies light and floating. The talents of Ruysdael were not confined to landscape proper, he painted sea-pieces with equal success, and his pictures of fresh breezes and gales of wind are equal to those of any other painter of his time. Ruysdael's pictures are sometimes provided with figures by Adriaan Van der Velde, or Philips Wouwerman.

It is said that Ruysdael visited Italy, but the assertion rests on no sure foundation; there is more probability that he lived for some time on the borders of Germany, and there found those valleys between ranges of mountains, with the remains of ancient châteaux, the solemn woods and groves, or impetuous waterfalls he so often painted. Some have made him a student of the wild scenery of Norway; but with no authority beyond the subject of his pictures. In spite of his fondness for painting the wilder appearances of nature, it is scarcely too much to say, that the comparatively uneventful pictures from the neighbourhood of Haarlem are those in which he charms us most. Smith's Catalogue describes four hundred and forty-eight pictures by Ruysdael, leaving out those that properly belong to Everdingen, and a few duplicates or copies. Ruysdael has left a few slight but effective etchings. He died at Haarlem in 1682. Of his pictures we may name:

RUYSDAEL, JAKOB VAN, a cousin of the celebrated painter of the same name, is recorded as a painter by Van der Willigen. He was Master of the Haarlem Guild in 1664. Other details of his life are unknown, as also are his works. He died at Haarlem in 1681.

RUYSDAEL, SALOMON VAN, the uncle of Jakob van Ruysdael, was born at Haarlem at the commencement of the 17th century. He painted landscapes and views of rivers in Holland, in which he modelled himself on Van Goyen. He was particularly successful in the representation of water. In 1648 he was Dean of the Haarlem Corporation. He died in 1670. Works:

RUYTEN, JOANNES MICHAEL, painter, born at Antwerp, 1813. He first studied under Regemorter, then in Holland under W. J. Nuyen. He painted chiefly views of towns and coast scenery, into which he introduced figures; and he was fond of trying effects of light, which were not always happy in execution. He also etched a few plates. He died in 1881.

RUYTENSCHILDT, ABRAHAM, painter, born at Amsterdam, 1778, a pupil of J. Andriessen and of P. Barbiers, painted landscape and genre pictures. He died in 1841.

RUYVEN, PIETER VAN, born at Leyden, 1651, was a pupil of Jakob Jordaens, and an historical painter of talent. He painted the triumphal arch for the entry of William of Orange, King of England, into the Hague. He died in 1716.

RUZULONE, PIETRO, living at Palermo in the 15th century, was the contemporary, and probably the pupil, of Vigilia. The Duomo of Termini possesses a 'Crucifixion' by this artist, where the Virgin, Evangelists, and Mary Magdalene, the Pelican and Serpent, are on one side; with the Resurrection, and the symbols of the Evangelists, on the other; it was painted in 1484. He is known to have been living up to 1517, but the dates of his birth and death are alike uncertain.

RYALI, HENRY THOMAS, an English engraver, born at Frome in 1811. He was a pupil of Sam. Reynolds, and practised on copper and steel, adopting a combination of the line and stipple manners. His works won him a considerable reputation, and he was appointed historical engraver to the Queen. Specimen works are to be found in 'Eminent Conservative Statesmen' (1836-46), and in Lodge's Portraits. He died at Cookham in 1867. Amongst his best single plates are:

Columbus at La Rahida; after Wilkie.

Coronation of Queen Victoria; after Hayter.

There's Life in the Old Dog yet; after Landseer.

Christening of the Princess Royal; after Leslie.

The Holy Well; after Burton.

Portraits of the Queen and the Prince Consort; after miniatures by Sir William Ross.

RYCK, PIETER CORNELISZEN VAN, painter, born at Delft in 1566, was first placed under the tuition of Jacob Wittermeszen, but he afterwards became a scholar of Hubrecht Jacobszen. On leaving that master he went to Italy, and passed some years at Venice, where he formed his style by studying the works of Giacomo Bassano. He painted history and pastoral subjects, which were esteemed in his time. He died at Delft in 1628.

RYCKAERT, DAVID, the first, was born in 1560, and died about 1607. He was received into the Antwerp Academy of St. Luke in 1585, and in 1589 was married to one Catherine Rem. He was mostly employed in painting figures in the pictures of other men.

RYCKAERT, DAVID, the second, son of David the first, was born at Antwerp, 1589. He excelled in painting mountain scenery. His eldest daughter married Gonzalez Coques. He died in 1642.

RYCKAERT, DAVID, the third, the son of David Ryckaert the second, was born at Antwerp in 1612, and instructed in landscape painting by his father; but the high estimation in which the works of Brouwer and Teniers were then held, induced him to attempt similar subjects, in which he was soon very successful. The Archduke Leopold, a great encourager of art, favoured him with his particular protection. In 1651 he was appointed director of the Academy at Antwerp, and his pictures were so much admired, that it was with difficulty he could keep pace with the demand for his works. He usually painted assemblies of peasants regaling, musical parties, and the interiors of chemists' laboratories; though he occasionally attempted subjects of a more elevated character. Towards the latter part of his life he represented grotesque subjects, which were very common at that time. His principal pictures are: 'A Family Concert,' in the Liechtenstein Gallery at Vienna; 'A Peasant's dwelling,' at Berlin; 'A Shoemaker,' at Amsterdam. He died in 1661. He left a son, an obscure painter and a fourth DAVID RYCKAERT, who was born in 1649, and died after 1698.

RYCKAERT, FRIEDRIK, painter, was a member of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp, 1550. About 1570 he painted a large altar-piece for the church of St. Jacques.

RYCKAERT, MARTIN, painter, son of David the first, was born at Antwerp in 1587, and was for a time a disciple of Tobias Verhaecht, an artist of considerable celebrity. Martin had only one arm. On leaving Verhaecht he went to Italy, where he studied several years, and returned to his native country with a great variety of drawings from the most remarkable views in the vicinity of Rome. With these resources, he distinguished himself as one of the ablest landscape painters of his time. He was fond of ruins, rocks, mountains, and waterfalls. His works are occasionally decorated with figures by Jan Brueghel. He lived in habits of intimacy with Vandyck, who painted his portrait in his series of eminent artists. Ryckaert died at Antwerp in 1631 or 1632.

RYCKAERT, PAUL, painter, born at Antwerp, 1592, another son of David Ryckaert the first. Nothing is known of his life or works.

RYCKE, BERNARD, painter, born at Courtrai, was made a member of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1561. At the church of St. Martin at Courtrai there are two pictures by him: 'Christ bearing the Cross,' and the 'Beheading of St. Matthew.' In 1589 he was chosen by Raphael van Coxcie as one of the experts who were to decide upon the merits of the 'Last Judgment,' painted by that artist for the town of Ghent. He died at Antwerp.

RYCKMAN, NICHOLAS, a Flemish engraver, born at Antwerp about the year 1620. From his style, it is probable that he was a pupil of Paul Pontius. His plates are executed with the graver in a neat, formal manner, and his drawing is generally incorrect. We have, among others, the following prints by him:

The Adoration of the Magi; after Rubens. The best impressions are before the address of either Gas. Huberti, or Corn. van Merlen.

The Entombment; after the same.

The Holy Family; after the same.

Christ and the Twelve Apostles; after the same; thirteen plates. The best impressions are before the address of E. Coninck.

Achilles discovered by Ulysses at the Court of Lycomedes; after the same.

RYCX, JAN, born at Bruges, in 1585. Of his life and works there is no record. He was the father of three sons, Paul (q. v.), Mathias, and Nicolas (q. v.), whose names are all found in registers of the painters of the period. Died 1643.

RYCX, NICHOLAS, (RYCKX,) the son of Jan, was born at Bruges in 1637. It is not said by whom he was instructed; but having learned the rudiments of design, he embarked in a vessel bound for the Levant, and travelled through Palestine, where he made designs of the most remarkable views in the vicinity of Jerusalem, and delineated with great precision the customs and costumes of the Orientals, their caravans, camels, and modes of travelling. On his return to Flanders he painted pictures of those subjects, which were much esteemed. In 1667 he was received into the Academy at Bruges, where he died after 1695.

RYCX, PAUL, the elder, son of Jan RyCX, born at Bruges, 1612, was a historical painter, and became a member of the Corporation of Bruges in 1635. In the Église S. Sauveur at Bruges there is a S. Jerome by him, signed P. rycx, fé., 1644.

RYCX, PAUL, the younger, born at Bruges, 1649, was an active member of the Corporation of Painters at Bruges between 1672-77. Died, 1690.

RYDER, THOMAS, an English engraver, born in London in 1746, was one of the artists employed by Boydell to engrave the Shakespeare Gallery, for which he executed eight of the large plates. They are among the best, and are after Fuseli, Stothard, Smirke, Northcote, Ramberg, Durno, Hamilton, and J. F. Rigaud. He also engraved after Angelica Kaufmann, Shelley, and others. He executed several plates in the dotted manner, which possess great merit. Among others, are the following:

The Captive; after J. Wright.

The Last Supper; after West.

The Murder of James I. King of Scotland; after Opie.

RYE, EGIIDIUS DE. See DE RYE.

RYLAND, WILLIAM WYNNE, an eminent English engraver, born in London in 1732, was a pupil of Simon François Ravenet, who was at that time established in England. On leaving that master he went to Paris, where he studied design for some time under Roubillac, and received the instruction of J. P. le Bas in engraving. After a residence of five years in Paris, where he engraved several plates, he returned to England, and was soon afterwards appointed engraver to the king. He engraved two whole-lengths of his Majesty, after Ramsay, and a portrait of the Queen, after Cotes. In the latter part of his life he applied himself to engraving in the chalk manner, partly after drawings by the old masters, but principally from the pictures of Angelica Kauffmann. This style he is said to have first introduced into England, and he certainly improved it. In the work entitled 'A Collection of Prints in Imitation of Drawings,' published by Charles Rogers, in 2 vols. folio, there are fifty-seven by Ryland, besides the admirable mezzotint portrait of Rogers at the commencement. These, with few exceptions, are after the old masters, chiefly the Italian. Ryland held the appointment of engraver to George III., with a pension of £200 per annum; and he carried on an extensive business as a printseller. Towards the end of his life he entered into a liaison with a young woman, who involved him in great expenses, to provide for which he stepped from the path of honesty. In 1783 he was tried on a charge of forgery, condemned, and, in spite of the efforts of his friends, hanged. His brother had very narrowly escaped the same fate the year before, on conviction of highway robbery. A short memoir of William Ryland was published in 1784. The following are perhaps the best of his 200 plates:

George III.; after Ramsay.

Queen Charlotte; after Cotes.

John Stuart, Earl of Bute; after Ramsay.

The Last Supper; after Leonardo da Vinci.

God the Father enthroned on clouds; after Raphael.

Antiochus and Stratonice; after P. da Cortona.

Jupiter and Leda; after F. Boucher.

The Graces bathing; after the same.

Charity; after Vandyck.

Four plates representing the Muses, Urania, Thalia, Erato, and Olio; after Cipriani.

King John signing Magna Charta; after Mortimer: this plate was left unfinished, and completed by Bartolozzi for the benefit of Ryland's widow.

Fourteen plates engraved for the edition of Walton's Angler published by Sir John Hawkins in 1760.

The following are all after Angelica Kauffmann:

Patience; oval.

Perseverance; oval.

Maria, from Sterne's Sentimental Journey.

Telemachus recognized at the court of Sparta.

Achilles lamenting the Death of Patroclus.

Penelope awakened by Euryclea.

Eleanor sucking the Poison from the Wound of Edward.

Lady Elizabeth Grey before Edward IV.

The Judgment of Paris.

Venus on her Car.

The Flight of Paris and Helen.

Venus presenting Helen to Paris.

Juno borrowing the Cestus of Venus.

A Sacrifice to Pan.

Cupid bound, with Nymphs breaking his Bow.

Cupid asleep, with Nymphs awakening him.

Cymon and Iphigenia.

The Interview between Edgar and Elfrida after her marriage with Athelwold. This plate was left imperfect, and was finished by Sharp for the benefit of Ryland's widow.

RYLEY, CHARLES REUBEN, an English historical painter, born in London in 1752, was the son of a private in the Life Guards. For some time he worked with the graver, and obtained a prize at the Society of Arts in 1767. Aiming at higher things, he studied under J. H. Mortimer. In 1778 he obtained the gold medal of the Academy, where he began to exhibit in 1780. He lapsed into dissipated habits, and his works failed to fulfil their early promise. He was employed by the Duke of Richmond in the decoration of Goodwood House. He also taught drawing, and illustrated books. He died in London in 1798.

RYMSDYCK. See REMSDYKE.

RYNE, JOHN VAN, a Dutch engraver, was born in Holland in 1712. He came to London, where he resided about the year 1750. He engraved a variety of views in England, the East Indies, &c. He died in 1760.

RYNVICSH, C., a landscape painter, practising in Holland about 1640, in the style of Velvet Brueghel.

RYSBRACK, PIETER ANDRIES, (or RYSBREGTS,) born at Antwerp in 1655, was a scholar of François Millet, whom he accompanied to Paris. Following the example of his instructor, he set himself to the study of the landscapes of G. Poussin. His pictures were much admired in France, and endeavours were made to detain him in Paris; but attachment to his country prevailed, and he returned to Antwerp, where he was made director of the Academy in 1713. The landscapes of Rysbrack are distinguished by a grandeur, which, though founded on Gaspar Poussin, has sufficient originality to raise him above the rank of a mere plagiarist. Rysbrack etched six landscapes. At the bottom of each, on the left, is inscribed P. Rysbrack, pinx. fecit et excudit. They are named from the figures in them: 'Diana at the Bath,' 'The Woman in a Veil,' 'The Fishermen,' 'Sun-rise,' 'Conversation on the Road,' 'The Woman with the naked back.' Rysbrack died at Brussels in 1729.

RYSBRACK, PIETER ANDRIES, the younger, son of the last named, practised in Flanders early in the 18th century. He was a member of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1709.

RYSBROECK, (or REESBROUCC,) JAKOB VAN, engraver, a member of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1642. He settled at Hoogstraeten, and died there in 1704.

RYSEN, WARNARD, (or WERNER,) VAN, painter, born at Bommel about the year 1600, was a scholar of Cornelius Poelemburg. He resided some time in Italy, and on his return to Holland painted landscapes, with historical figures, in the style of his instructor, which were held in consideration. He is said to have abandoned painting, to become a dealer in diamonds.

RYSZ, PIETER, portrait painter, practised at the Hague in the second half of the 17th century, and finally settled in England, where he died. He was a pupil of J. de Baan.

RYTHER, AUGUSTINE, an English engraver and printseller, who flourished in London in 1590. He engraved some plates of the Spanish Invasion; a curious map of Yorkshire, with views of York and Hull in the corners; and large plans of London and Westminster on wood; of Cambridge and of Oxford on metal, dated 1578. The well-known plates of the Spanish fleets, with some plans of fortifications and batteries on the river Thames for the protection of London, are now looked upon as having been executed by him. The map of Yorkshire was one of a complete series of the counties, engraved under the superintendence of Christopher Saxton, (who lived at Bingley, near Leeds, between 1573 and 1579,) and published at London in a folio volume in the latter year. Though the greater number were the work of Flemish engravers, eight at least were by two Englishmen, one of whom was Ryther. The name "Augustinus Ryther, Anglus," occurs on the maps of Westmoreland, Cumberland, Gloucestershire, and Yorkshire.

S

SAAL, GEORG EDUARD OTTO, landscape painter, born at Coblenz in 1818, studied at Düsseldorf under Schirmer, but went in 1848 to Heidelberg, then to Baden-Baden, and in 1870 to Paris. He painted mountain scenery, and, later on in life, scenes in the Forest of Fontainebleau. He died at Baden-Baden, where he was court painter, in 1870.

SAAL, T., an indifferent engraver of vignettes for books. He lived about the year 1672.

SAAR, ALOIS VON, landscape and architectural painter, born at Traiskirchen, Lower Austria, in 1799, was a student at the Vienna Academy. He painted in oils and water-colours; some of his works are in the Vienna Gallery. He died in 1840.

SAAVEDRA. See DEL CASTILLO Y SAAVEDRA.

SABATELLI, FRANCESCO, history painter, born at Florence in 1803, was the pupil of his father, Luigi Sabatelli. He studied at Rome and Venice, but in 1823 was invited to Florence by Leopold II., and became Professor of the Academy. He died at Milan in 1829.

SABATELLI, GIUSEPPE, painter, born at Milan in 1813, was a pupil of his father, Luigi Sabatelli. In 1834 he went to Florence, and became a Professor in the Academy. He painted portraits and historical subjects. He died at Florence in 1843.

SABATELLI, LUIGI, the elder, history painter and etcher, born at Florence in 1772, studied at the Academy of that city under Pietro Pedroni. From 1788 to 1793 he was in Rome, and from 1795 to 1797 in Venice. In 1808 he was appointed Professor of the Academy at Milan by Eugène Beauharnais. Of his works we may name:

Abigail before David; in the Chapel of the Virgin at Arezzo.

The Blessing of the Children; in the Paroni Palace at Genoa.

Heliόδorus driven from the Temple.

Portrait of the Artist himself.

The Four Great Prophets; in St. Gaudenzio, Novara.

The Olympic Games; in the Pitti Palace in Florence.

The Marriage of Cupid and Psyche; in the Busca Serbelloni Palace in Milan.

The Adoration of God through Prophets and Patriarchs; in the Church of Valmadreva at Lecco.

Three Scenes from the Life of Galileo.

The Triumph of Cupid; in the Villa Giuntini at Florence.

The Coronation of the Virgin; in S. Firenze in Florence.

The Plague of Florence. (Etching.)

The Visions of the Apocalypse. (Do.)

In many of his frescoes he was assisted by his son LUIGI SABATELLI, the younger. He died at Milan in 1850.

SABATERII, PIERRE, a skilful glass-painter, of the 13th century, practising at Montpellier about 1298. He decorated the cathedral with fine paintings on glass, which were much admired for their excellent composition and brilliant colour. His son LAURENT succeeded his father in his practice, and was an artist of much merit.

SABBATINI, ANDREA, (SABATINI,) called DA SALERNO, a painter, was born at Bologna about 1480. He was the son of a wealthy merchant, who, finding his son had a taste for art, took him to Naples, and placed him under the tuition of Raimo

Epifanio, a painter of little celebrity, under whom he studied some time. He is then said to have obtained his father's permission to visit Perugia, to profit by the lessons of Perugino. On his journey he encountered some artists, who were so loud in their praise of Raphael, that Andrea digressed into that painter's atelier, and in a short time was found of sufficient ability to be intrusted by Raphael to execute, from his designs, some of the frescoes in the Vatican and in S. Maria della Pace. It is also said that while prosecuting his studies under Raphael, he was recalled to Salerno by the illness of his father, who died soon after his arrival. The whole of this Roman tale rests, however, on the unsupported evidence of the untrustworthy De' Dominicci. So far as the facts are surely known, Sabbatini worked only at Naples, where he was soon regarded as the ablest artist of the school. His frescoes in S. Maria della Grazie have been, for the most part, destroyed by alterations made in that church, but those in the vestibule of the inner court of S. Gennaro dei Poveri still exist. Other works are:

Naples.	Brancacci Chapel, Duomo.	The Assumption of the Virgin.
"	S. Spirito di Palazzo.	The Adoration of the Magi.
"	S. Domenico Maggiore.	The Madonna and Bambino, with St. Elisabeth and other Saints.

"	"	Miracle of St. Nicholas of Bari.
"	"	St. Benedict enthroned among Six Saints.
"	"	Two Scenes from the Life of St. Pelicidus.

Salerno. Duomo. A Pietà.

Sabbatini died at Gaeta in 1545.

SABBATINI, LORENZO, called LORENZINO DA BOLOGNA, was born about 1530 at Bologna, where he studied under Tibaldi. After having painted several pictures for the churches at Bologna, he visited Rome during the pontificate of Gregory XIII., and improved his style by study of the works of Raphael, imitating them with such success, that he has been called a pupil of Raphael, although he was born some ten years after his death. In his smaller pictures he seems to have followed Parmigiano. He was employed by the pope in the Capella Paolina, in the Vatican, where he painted several subjects from the Life of St. Paul in conjunction with Federigo Zuccaro. In the Sala Reggia he painted a 'Triumph of Faith.' These works were executed so much to the satisfaction of the pope, that he was appointed superintendent of the decorations then going on in the Vatican. Sabbatini died at Rome in 1577. Of his numerous pictures we may name:

Bologna.	S. Pietro and S. Paulo.	A Madonna with Saints.
"	S. Maria delle Grazie.	The Crucifixion.
"	La Morte.	The Assumption.
"	S. Martino Maggiore.	St. Joachim and St. Anne.
"	S. Giacomo.	St. Michael vanquishing the Rebel Angels.

Bologna.	S. Giacomo.	The Four Evangelists.
"	"	The Four Doctors of the Church.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Marriage of St. Catharine.
Paris.	Louvre.	Virgin and Child and St. John.

SABLET, JACQUES HENRI, brother of the next-named, was born in 1749 at Morges. He was the pupil successively of Dubois and Cocher, at Lyons, and of Vien, in Paris. He travelled in Spain and lived twenty years in Italy, dying in Paris in 1803. There are five of his pictures in the Nantes Museum.

SABLET, JEAN FRANÇOIS, was born at Morges, in Switzerland, in 1751, and taught the rudiments of art by a decorator at Lyons. He then went to Paris, where he studied under Vien, whom he accompanied to Rome, where he studied anatomy, ornamental design, and costume, and painted portraits, genre pictures, and landscapes. He settled at Nantes, where, in 1812, he was commissioned by the town to paint six grisailles for the Bourse, illustrating Napoleon's visit to Nantes. After Waterloo these were sold and exported to America. Sablet died at Nantes in 1819. There are six of his works in the Nantes Museum.

SABLON, PIERRE, a designer and engraver, was born at Chartres, in 1584, according to his inscription on the oval border of his own portrait: "PIERRE SABLON CHAETRAIN. XXIII ANS. 1607." On the margin is inscribed :

"Me contemplant un jour en deux diverses glaces
Je veis le mien Profil despainet nagement;
Lors je delibéré en moy soudainement
De graver ce Pourtraict dont vo' voyez les traces."

There are only three other prints known by him: 'Lamech and Cain,' after Lucas van Leyden, (Bartsch, N° 14,) but left unfinished (it is the counterpart of the original, and has the date 1524 high up on the right, the 5 reversed, and the mark of Lucas; at the bottom P. Sablon f. 1602; 'The Good Samaritan,' a small square print, mentioned in the collection of Paignon Dijonval; and the portrait of Rabelais, bust turned to the right, but full face. This is a medallion; on the border is inscribed "FRANC. RABELESIIUS;" in the exergue, "SUM PETULANTIS PLENE CACHINO. Pers P. Sablon f."

SACCHI, ANDREA, sometimes called OUCHE, born at Nettuno, near Rome, about the end of the 16th century, was the son of Benedetto Sacchi, a painter of little note, by whom he was first instructed; he afterwards studied under Francesco Albani. On leaving the school of that painter he studied Raphael, Polidoro da Caravaggio, and the antique. He was favoured by Cardinal Barberini, who employed him in his palace. Several of the public buildings of Rome possess his works. His 'St. Romuald with his Monks,' in the Vatican Gallery, used to be considered one of the four finest pictures in Rome. The composition is extremely simple; it represents the Saint seated in a valley of the Apennines, surrounded by some members of his order, and explaining his reasons for retiring from the world. The effect he has given to a group of six figures, all habited in white drapery, without the aid of contrast, is very remarkable. Sacchi died at Nettuno in 1661. Among his pupils were Lauri, Garzi, and Carlo Maratti. Additional works:

Madrid.	Gallery.	SS. Paul the Hermit and Anthony.
"	"	Portrait of Fr. Albani.
"	"	" " Himself.

Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Angel consoling Hagar.
"	"	Triumph of Truth.

SACCHI, ANTONIO, an Italian painter of the 17th century, a native of Como. He studied at Rome, and is said to have died of grief in 1694, in consequence of having painted an ill-proportioned fresco.

SACCHI, CARLO, painter, was born at Pavia in 1617 (?), and learned the first rudiments of design in Milan from Rossi. He went to Rome, where he resided some time, and afterwards visited Venice. The works of Paolo Veronese were the particular objects of his imitation, and one of his best pictures, a 'St. James raising a dead person,' in the Osservanti, at Pavia, is painted much in the style of Paolo. He also executed some etchings after the Venetian masters, among which are an 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' after Tintoretto, and an 'Adoration of the Magi,' after P. Veronese. He died at Pavia in 1706.

SACCHI, GASPARO, of Imola, flourished in the early part of the 16th century, and painted many pictures in Ravenna and other parts of the Romagna. In the sacristy of Castel S. Pietro at Imola there is an altar-piece with his name, and the date 1517; and at Bologna, in S. Francesco-in-Tavola, another dated 1521.

SACCHI, GIUSEPPE, the son of Andrea, painted portraits and historical subjects in the 17th century. He was his father's pupil, and eventually became a friar minor. No known work of his is extant, but it has been surmised that a 'Sibyl,' at Warsaw, attributed to 'Giuseppe Sacconi,' may be by him.

SACCHI, M., (or IL SACCHI,) a native of Casale, flourished in the 17th century. He painted in S. Francesco, at Casale, a picture representing a lottery for marriage portions, in which a great assemblage of fathers, mothers, and their daughters is introduced. At S. Agostino di Casale is a standard, a 'Virgin and Saints,' containing portraits of several princes of the house of Gonzaga, by him.

SACCHI, PIER-FRANCESCO, a native of Pavia, worked chiefly at Genoa in the 16th century, and was a member of the Guild of that city in 1520. Very little is known of his life, and the date of his birth is uncertain. His earliest existing painting is, 'The Parting of St. John the Baptist from his Parents,' painted in 1512 for the oratory of S. Maria, Genoa. He frequently signed himself Petrus Franciscus Sachus de Papia. His chief extant works are these:

Berlin.	Gallery.	The Crucifixion; signed and dated 1514.
Multedo, near Genoa.	Church.	An arched panel of the Crucifixion, with thirteen figures. 1527.
Paris.	Louvre.	The Four Doctors of the Church. 1518.

Mention of another PIER-FRANCESCO PAVESE occasionally occurs as early as 1460.

SACCHIATI, PIETRO, a native of Ravenna, born about 1598, is noticed by Basan as an engraver in wood and chiaro-scuro after various masters.

SACCHIENSIS (or DE SACCHIO). See LICINIO, GIOVANNI ANTONIO.

SACCO, SCIPIONE, (SACCHI,) a painter, and native of Cesena, who flourished in the 16th century. He painted a 'St. Gregory,' for the cathedral of Cesena, which is inscribed Casenae, 1545; and a 'Death of St. Peter Martyr' for the church of S. Domenico. He is said by some to have been a pupil of Raphael.

SACRAMENTO, JUAN DEL SANTISIMO. See GUZMAN.

SADELER, GILLIS, (ÆGIDIUS,) the nephew and the pupil of Jan and Raphael Sadeler, was born at Antwerp in 1575. After being well grounded in the principles of design, he took up the graver, and in a few years reached a perfection beyond that of his instructors. He had passed some time in Italy, where he engraved some plates after Italian painters, when he was invited to Prague by the Emperor Rudolph II., who retained him in his service, and assigned him a pension. He enjoyed the favour and protection of the two succeeding emperors, Matthias and Ferdinand II. He used the graver with a commanding facility, sometimes finishing his plates with surprising neatness, when the subject required it; at other times working broadly and boldly. His plates, which are very numerous, represent historical subjects, portraits, landscapes, &c. Some are from his own designs, and many, particularly his portraits, are of great excellence. Sadeler died at Prague in 1629. He has been called 'The Phoenix of Engraving.' The following are considered his best prints:

PLATES AFTER HIS OWN WORKS.

SADELER, JAN, engraver, was born at Brussels in 1550. The profession of his father was to engrave ornaments on steel and iron, to be inlaid with gold or silver, and Jan Sadeler was brought up to the same business. At a very early age, however, he applied himself to the study of the human figure, which he drew correctly, though with the stiffness and formality of the time. He was nearly twenty years of age before he commenced engraving on copper, when he executed some plates from the designs of Crispin Van den Broeck, which were so favourably received, that he was encouraged to devote his attention entirely to engraving. He travelled throughout Germany to Italy, where he divested himself, in a great degree, of the dry and hard manner which is discernible in his earlier works. His plates are executed with the graver only, in a neat, clear style. His drawing is generally correct, and there is fine expression in his heads. Jan Sadeler died at Venice in 1600. His prints are very numerous; the following list is confined to the best:

PORTRAITS.

- Clement VIII., Pont. Max.
- Marie de' Medici.
- Charles, Hereditary Prince of Sweden.
- Otto Henry, Count Schwarzenberg.
- Sigismund Feyerabend, the famous printer. 1587.

 The Coming of the Last Day; after the same.
 The Trinity; after Antonio Maria Viani.
 Several Landscapes; after Paul Brill, and others.

SADELER, MARCUS, is supposed to have been the son of Jan Sadeler, and to have been born at Munich between 1589 and 1595; but great uncertainty hangs about his paternity, and it is not clearly known whether he was an engraver as well as a publisher of prints. He resided many years at Venice, whither, it is said, he was taken by Jan Sadeler, and it is certain that many of the prints by Jan, Raphael, and Gillis were published by him; but only the second states have his address. Neither Basan, Lipowsky, nor Füssli mention any of his works; while the 'Passion series,' after Dürer, which Heller ascribes to Marcus, are without signatures or dates (the latter would range from 1607 to 1613), although the second states have Marcus Sadeler's address. They are all reversed from the plates by Dürer.

SADELER, PHILIPP, engraver, a native of Munich, the son of Gillis Sadeler, flourished about 1626. He engraved portraits, landscapes, and pictures of saints.

SADELER, RAPHAEL, the younger brother of Jan Sadeler, was born at Brussels in 1555, and brought up to the same profession. Jan and Raphael travelled together through Germany, where Raphael engraved a variety of plates, after Johann von Aachen, Matthias Kager, Matthias Grünewald, and other masters. They afterwards settled at Venice. Following the example of his brother, Raphael Sadeler worked entirely with the graver, which he handled with boldness and precision. His drawing of the figure is correct. His prints are nearly as numerous as those of his brother. Some are very fine, particularly those after Van Aachen, and the portraits. Raphael Sadeler died at Venice in 1616. The following are his principal plates:

PORTRAITS.

Paul V.; Pont. Max.
 S. Carlo Borromeo.
 Ernest, Archbishop of Cologne.
 Leopold of Austria, Bishop of Salzburg and Passau.
 Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria.
 Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy, on horseback.
 John Dietmar, Abbot of Furstenberg.
 Hypolitus Guarinonius, M. D.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

A set of four plates from the Life of the Virgin; from his own designs.
 Twenty-eight plates from the Life and Passion of Christ; the same.
 Mary Magdalene at the Sepulchre, with St. Peter and St. John; after J. de Winghe.
 Lot and his Daughters; after the same.
 The Holy Family, with St. Elizabeth and St. John; after Johann van Aachen.
 The Entombment of Christ; after the same.
 The dead Christ in the Sepulchre, with Angels; after the same.

 Christ at Emmaüs; after the same; one of the three Sadeler's Kitchens.

The Four Seasons; after J. Stradanus.
 A set of six Landscapes; after P. Steevens.
 Two Landscapes with figures; after Matt. Brill.
 The history of the Prodigal Son; in four scenes after Paul Brill.
 A set of prints for Rader's Bavaria Sancta et Pia, engraved with the help of his son (1624-8).

Several Allegorical subjects; after Martin de Vos.
 The great Battle of Prague, in eight sheets; considered his masterpiece.
 Venus and Adonis; after Titian.

SADELER, RAPHAEL, the younger, son and pupil of the last-named, worked at Venice subsequent to the year 1596. He afterwards accompanied his father to Munich, and assisted in the plates to Rader's 'Bavaria Sancta et Pia,' and also produced several plates on his own account, among them the following:

The Annunciation; after C. Schwarz.
 The Virgin and St. Anne caressing the Infant Jesus; after the same.
 The Holy Family, with his name and the date 1613.
 Forest Scenery; after J. Brueghel.

SADELER, TOBIAS, supposed to be the son of Gillis, was also an engraver, but his works are very little known. He worked at Vienna about the year 1675.

SADLER, THOMAS, portrait and miniature painter, was the son of a Master in Chancery. He practised in the reigns of Charles II., James II., William III. His best works are a portrait of Bunyan, which has been engraved in mezzotint, and a miniature of the Duke of Monmouth.

SADLER, WILLIAM, a portrait painter, the son of a musician, was born in England, but studied and practised at Dublin. He was an artist of some ability, and died at Dublin at the end of the 18th century.

SAENREDAM, JOANNES, a Dutch designer and engraver, born at Zaandam in North Holland in 1565, was by trade a basket-maker, and was instructed in drawing and the use of the graver by Hendrik Goltzius and Jakob de Gheyn. Saenredam died at Assendelft in 1607. He worked entirely with the graver, and has left a great number of plates. The best, perhaps, are the following:

Susanna and the Elders; after a design by himself.
 Hercules between Minerva and Venus; ditto.
 Lycurgus giving Laws to the Lacedaemonians; ditto.
 The Wise and the Foolish Virgins, in five plates. 1606; ditto.
 An Allegory relative to the government of the Low Countries by the Infanta Isabella. 1602; ditto.
 The Prosperity of the United Provinces under the House of Orange; an allegory. 1600; ditto.
 The stranded Whale, on the coast of Holland. 1602; ditto.
 Carel van Mander; after Goltzius.
 P. H. Hornanus, Poet and Physician; after Van Mander.
 John Cesaree, Philosopher.
 Jeau de la Chambre, Writing-master.

Adam and Eve in Paradise; after H. Goltzius.
 Lot and his Daughters; after the same.
 Judith with the Head of Holofernes; after the same.
 Susanna and the Elders; after the same.
 Ceres, Venus, and Bacchus; after the same.
 The Seven Planets, the Four Seasons, the Five Senses, the Four Ages, the Three Marriages at different times of life; all after the same.
 The Bath of Diana; after the same.
 A set of six plates from the History of Adam and Eve; after Ab. Bloemaert.
 Four plates from the Histories of Elijah and Elisha; after the same.
 Elijah and the Widow of Sarepta; after the same. 1604.
 Annunciation to the Shepherds; after the same. 1599.
 The Prodigal Son; after the same. 1618.
 Vertumnus and Pomona; after the same. 1605.
 Mars and Venus; after P. Isaacr.
 Judith with the Head of Holofernes; after L. van Leyden.
 David with the Head of Goliath; after the same.

 The Entombment of Christ; after M. A. da Caravaggio.
 Christ in the House of Levi; after P. Veronese.

SAENREDAM, PIETER, son of Joannes Saenredam, was born at Assendelft in 1597. He was a scholar of Franz Pieterzen de Grebber, but adopted a different style from that of his master. He painted architecture, particularly the interiors of churches, in a large and luminous manner. His pictures were highly esteemed in his own time, and are now extremely rare. A view of the Town-hall of the city of Haarlem, painted by him, was enlivened with a great number of figures, representing the solemn entry of Prince Maurice. Few particulars of him are recorded. He was buried at Haarlem on the 16th August, 1665. Works:

SAEY, —, a Flemish painter, native of Antwerp, practising in the 17th century. He painted chiefly architectural subjects, and worked jointly with Jerome Janssen, who frequently added figures to his backgrounds for him. A certain Jacques Ferdinand Saey is mentioned in the registers as a pupil of Van Ehrenberg in 1672, and was probably related to the above, and not identical with him, as there appears to be evidence that the first-mentioned Saey was at work on his own account as early as 1660.

SAFFT, J. C. G., a Dutch painter and engraver, of little importance, born at Amsterdam, 1778. He was a pupil of P. Barbiers, and painted landscape and interiors.

SAFTLEVEN, CORNELIS, (ZACHTLEVEN, SAFTLEBEN,) painter and engraver, was born at Rotterdam in 1606. Though he did not equal his brother Herman in talent, he showed considerable skill in genre pictures, in the style of Teniers and Brouwer. Several of his etchings were published. His portrait was painted by Vandyke, and engraved by Vosterman. He died in 1682. In the Dresden Gallery are four examples of his work, and in the Amsterdam Museum, three.

SAFTLEVEN, HERMAN, (ZACHTLEVEN, &c.,) painter and engraver, born at Rotterdam in 1609. He was the younger brother of Cornelis Saftleven, and a pupil of Jan van Goyen. His views of the Rhine and Maas are delicately painted from nature, and crowded with figures. He died at Utrecht Jan. 5, 1685. His art, though conventional, is delightful in its way, and his pictures are now in great request.

SÄFVENBOM, JOHANN, a Swedish painter, born in 1721. He studied for a time in France, under Joseph Vernet. In the Stockholm Gallery there is a 'Shipwreck near a Fortress' by him. He died in 1784.

SAGRESTANI, GIOVANNI CAMILLO, a Florentine painter and poet, born in 1660, studied painting in the school of Giusti, and also attended that of Carlo Cignani, whose manner he copied rather than emulated. He died in 1731.

SAHLER, LOUIS, (SAILLAR,) an engraver, was born in France in 1748. He engraved some plates for the Boydells, among them the following:

- Portrait of Helena Forman; after Rubens.
- The Prince of Orange; after Honthorst.
- The Birth of Bacchus; after Reynolds.
- The Toper; after G. Dou.
- George, Prince of Wales; after John Smart.
- The Virgin and Child; after Domenichino.

SAHLER, OTTO CHRISTIAN, an obscure engraver, whose name is affixed to a portrait of one Adrian Stalbert, a painter. He was a German goldsmith, and lived in the 18th century. His plates were imitations of drawings.

SAILLANT, LE PÈRE, an Augustine monk of the 16th century, much esteemed for the excellence of his miniatures. He died at Avignon.

SAILMAKER, ISAAC, an English painter of marine subjects, born in England in 1633, was a pupil of George Geldorp, and was appointed by Cromwell to paint a view of the fleet before Mar-dyke. Walpole says that "a print of the confederate fleet, under Sir George Rooke, engaging the French commanded by the Count de Toulouse, was engraved in 1714, from a design of Sailmaker." He lived to the age of 83, dying in 1721.

SAINT ANDRÉ, SIMON RENARD DE, a portrait painter, born in Paris in 1614, was a pupil of Beaubrun, and settled at Rome. He painted two very good portraits of Anne of Austria. He died in Paris in 1677. He has left several etchings.

SAINT-AUBERT, ANTOINE FRANÇOIS, painter, was born at Cambrai in 1715. He was educated in Paris, at the expense of the Archbishop of Saint-Albin, and afterwards became the first master of the Cambrai School of drawing. The Musées of Cambrai and Lisle possessed examples of his work. He died in the former city in 1788. His son, LOUIS JOSEPH NICOLAS, also a painter, succeeded to his father's post. He was born in 1755, and died in 1810. There is a 'Christ in the Tomb' by him in the Cambrai Museum. By ANTOINE-LOUIS SAINT-AUBERT, son of Louis Joseph Nicolas, there is a 'Norman Coast Scene,' in the same collection. He was born in 1794, and died 1854.

SAINT-AUBIN, AUGUSTIN, engraver, born in Paris in 1736, was taught drawing by his brother Gabriel, and engraving by Etienne Fessard and Laurent Cars. He engraved 'Leda with the Swan,' after Veronese, and 'Venus with a Mussel-shell,' after Titian, and more than 300 portraits of the famous men of his day. He died in 1807.

SAINT-AUBIN, CHARLES GERMAIN DE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1721. He was the author of three series of plates known respectively as 'Essais de Papillonnies humaines,' 'Mes petits bouquets,' and 'Les Fleurettes.'

SAINT-AUBIN, GABRIEL JACQUES DE, brother of the last-named, was born in Paris in 1724. He was a pupil of Jeurat, Collin de Vermont, and Boucher. He painted first heroic and then domestic subjects, and has left forty-three etchings. He died in 1780. His brother LOUIS-MICHEL, also a painter, was employed at Sèvres.

ST. AUBYN, CATHERINE, is the author of some etchings dated from 1788 to 1798. Two drawings by her of St. Michael's Mount have been engraved.

SAINT-AULAIRE, FÉLIX ACHILLE, painter, a native of Piedmont, born 1801. He studied under the elder and younger Garmeray, and practised in France. He chiefly devoted himself to marine subjects. He last appeared at the Salon in 1838. He is also known as a lithographer.

SAINT-ÈVE, JEAN-MARIE, engraver, born at Lyons on the 9th June, 1810. He studied first at Lyons under V. Vibert, and subsequently in Paris under Richomme, and at the Ecole des Beaux Arts. In 1840 he gained the 'Prix de Rome,' and in 1848 a medal of the first class. He engraved some important plates, and died at Montmartre, September 4th, 1856. Among his best plates are:

Portrait of Andrea del Sarto; after that master.

Poetry; after Raphael.

Theology; after the same.

Pamphlet notices of his life and works were published at Lyons by J. S. Bourgeois in 1860, and by Dr. Charles Fraisse in 1862.

SAINT-ÈVRE, GILLOT, painter, born at Bant-sur-Snippe, Marne. He was for a time an officer of artillery, but gave up military life to devote himself to art. He was a frequent exhibitor at the Salon, and died in Paris in 1858. There are examples of his work at Versailles.

SAINT-IGNY, JEAN DE, a painter and engraver of Rouen, who flourished at the end of the 16th century. He wrote a book on the first elements of portrait painting, and died in 1649.

SAINT-JEAN, SIMON, flower-painter, was born at Lyons in 1808, and educated there under François Lepage. He took Van Huysum as his model, and rivalled his truth to nature. He died at Ecully-Lyon, in 1860. Examples of his art are to be found in the Museums of Rouen and Lyons.

SAINT-NON, ABBÉ DE, JEAN-CLAUDE-RICHARD, draughtsman and etcher, born in Paris in 1730. His love for art induced him to sell his office in the Legislative Assembly, and to undertake a journey of some duration in Italy for the purpose of making studies from the old masters. Many of these he etched on his return to Paris. He brought out a 'Voyage pittoresque d'Italie et des Royaumes de Naples et de Sicile,' with many plates, and also published a series of nineteen sheets of antique ornaments and furniture, which had a favourable influence upon decorative taste in France. He usually signed his plates S. N., or S. No. He died in 1804.

SAINT-OURS, PIERRE PAUL DE, painter, was born at Geneva in 1752. His father, a drawing master, sent him to Paris, where he entered the school of Vien, and in 1780 gained the Prix de Rome with his picture of the 'Rape of the Sabines.' Being however a Protestant and a foreigner he was not entitled to the pension, but was allowed to proceed to Rome some years later, under certain conditions. Owing to bad health he returned to his own country, where he devoted himself to portrait painting. In 1803 he won the only reward given by the French Government in a competition set afoot by themselves, for the best picture on the subject of the 'Concordat.' His works are chiefly to be found at Geneva. He died at Schaffhausen in 1809.

SAINT-QUENTIN, a French painter, and pupil of Boucher, who flourished between 1760 and 1780, and painted landscapes and genre pictures.

SAINT-YVES, PIERRE DE, historical painter, born at Maubert-Fontaine in 1666. He became an Associate of the Academy in 1708, his entrance picture being 'Jephthah's Sacrifice' (now in the Tours Museum). He died in Paris, March 20, 1716.

SAITER, DANIEL, (SEITER, SEUTER, SYDER,) painter, was born at Vienna in 1642 (1647). He went to Italy when he was very young, and studied for some years at Venice, under Carlo Loth. From Venice he went to Rome, where he studied under Carlo Maratti. He was afterwards invited to the court of Turin, where he painted many pictures, among them the fresco in the Cupola of the Spedal Maggiore. Examples of his work are also to be found at Brunswick, Dresden, and in the Turin Gallery. He died at Turin in 1705.

SAITER, JOHANN GOTTFRIED, (SEITER, OR SEUTER, SYDER,) a German draughtsman and engraver, born at Augsburg in 1718. He was instructed by J. E. Ridinger and G. M. Preissler. He lived some years in Italy, but died in the hospital at Augsburg in 1800. Works:

Portrait of John Kupetzky, Painter.

George Philip Rugendas, Battle Painter.

Abraham sending away Hagar; after Celesti.

A Holy Family; after Andrea del Sarto.

Christ with Martha and Mary; after L. da Vinci.

The Adulteress before Christ; after Procaccini.

The Marriage at Cana; after P. Veronese.

The Flight into Egypt; after Albano.

SALA, VITALE, painter, was born at Cernusco, near Brienz, in 1803, and educated at Brera, where he painted the 'Death of Cato;' 'The Death of Romeo and Juliet;' and the 'Farewell of Regulus.' There are also works by him in the churches of Vigevano, Novara, Bosisio, Desio, and in those of St. Stefano, St. Lazzaro, and St. Catharine, in Milan. He died at Milan in 1835.

SALAI, ANDREA, (SALAINO, SALARIO,) born at Milan about 1480, was the pupil and favourite companion of Leonardo da Vinci, with whom he went to Rome, and painted many pictures which were retouched by the master. His name continually occurs in Leonardo's memoranda, and he seems to have acted generally as the great painter's humble friend and factotum. Unfortunately none of the pictures assigned to him in various collections can be authentically traced to his hand. Probability, however, seems to point to his authorship of certain Leonardesque pictures in which greenish and rosy tones are combined in a peculiar and not unpleasant fashion; a good example is in England, in the possession of the Rev. W. H. Wayne, and another in the Brera, Milan. Salai has often been confused with Andrea Solario, a totally different person.

SALAMANCA, ANTONIO, a very celebrated publisher and dealer in prints, flourished about the middle of the 16th century. He is the supposed engraver of a plate after Michelangelo's 'Pietà,' on which is inscribed Antonius Salamanca Quod Potuit Imitatus Exsculpsit, 1.5.4.7. This is the only direct piece of evidence that he practised engraving, but two more plates have been ascribed to him: a portrait of Baccio Bandinelli, 1545, and the 'Creation of Animals,' after Raphael, 1548. All the other prints with his name have excudebat, or excudit, instead of exsculpsit.

SALAMANCA, GERONIMO DE, a painter of the 16th century, practising at Seville.

SALAZAR, JUAN DE, a skilful illuminator of the 16th century. He is chiefly known by his work for the choir-books of the Escorial, and for the mass-books of Toledo. His drawing was remarkable for its delicacy and precision, and his colour for its brilliance. He died at Toledo in 1604.

SALERNO, ANDREA DA. See SABATINI.

SALIBA, ANTONELLO DA, a Sicilian painter, who lived in the early part of the 16th century, and adopted the method which Antonello da Messina is said to have introduced into Italy.

SALIMBENE, ARCANGIOLO, (ANGELO SALIMBENI,) a native of Siena, who flourished in the latter half of the 16th century. He was a pupil of Zuccaro. Works:

Lusignano. Parish Church. The Crucifixion.
Siena. Domenicani. St. Peter Martyr.

SALIMBENE, CAVALIERE VENTURA, (SALIMBENI,) called also Bevilacqua, after his patron Cardinal Bonifazio Bevilacqua of Ferrara, the son of Arcangiolo Salimbene, was born at Siena in 1557. After being instructed in the rudiments by his father, he went to Rome in the pontificate of Sixtus V., by whom he was employed in the library of the Vatican, and in the palace of the Lateran. He afterwards visited Florence, where, in competition with Bernardino Barbatelli, called Il Poccetti, he painted several pictures of the life of the Virgin in the cloister de Servi. Salimbene lived in habits of intimacy with Agostino Tassi, who frequently painted landscape back-grounds to his pictures. He died at Siena in 1613. Works:

Foligno.	Cathedral .	Marriage of the Virgin.
Perugia.	S. Pietro .	St. Gregory.
Rome.	Jesuits' Church .	Baptism of Christ.
"	"	Abraham and the Angels.
"	S. Simeoni Lancellotti .	The Circumcision.
"	S. Maria Maggiore .	The Annunciation.

Salimbene has left a few etchings.

SALINCORNO, MIRABELLO, called also CAVALORI, flourished in 1565. He was a scholar of Ridolfo Ghirlandajo, and was one of the artists who helped to paint the catafalque for the obsequies of Michelangelo. It is uncertain when he died. Zani says he was at work in 1578.

SALINI, TOMMASO, CAVALIERE, painter, born at Rome in 1570 or 1575, was the son of a Florentine sculptor, who placed him under the tuition of Baccio Pintelli, an artist of little note. He became a respectable painter of history, and also painted flowers and fruit with considerable success. He died at Rome about 1630.

SALIS, CARLO, was born at Verona in 1680, and first studied at Bologna under Giuseppe da l'Sole, but he afterwards became a disciple of Antonio Balestra, at Venice, whose style he imitated with success. His best picture is an altar-piece at Bergamo, representing S. Vincenzo healing the Sick. He died in 1763.

SALLAERT, ANTONIE, (SALAERT, or SALLAERTS,) was born at Brussels about the year 1590. He was inscribed, as an apprentice, on the corporation book of the Brussels painters in 1606. His master, Michael de Bordeau, also taught Philippe de Champagne. Sallaert was admitted master in 1613. Sallaert enjoyed the friendship of Rubens, whose pupil he is asserted, but without evidence, to have been. He was Dean of the Painters' Guild in 1633-4, 1634-5, 1646-7 and 1647-8, so that his death cannot have taken place prior to 1648, but its exact date is unknown. Pictures:

Brussels.	Gallery .	Christ's Passion; an allegory.
"	"	The Infanta Isabella at the Shooting Feast of the 'Grand-Serment.'
"	"	The Procession of the 'Pucelles du Sablon.'
Madrid.	Gallery .	The Judgment of Paris.

Papillon mentions this artist as an engraver on wood. He usually marked his prints with the cipher

Sometimes with the border, sometimes without. Brulliot denies that he engraved on wood; but a set of the Four Evangelists and an 'Ecce Homo' bear his mark.

SALLIETH, MATHIAS DE, was born at Prague in 1749, and was taught engraving by J. E. Mansfeld of Vienna, and afterwards went to Paris and worked under J. Ph. Le Bas; several prints by him are in Choiseul-Gouffier's 'Voyage pittoresque de la Grèce,' 'Voyage pittoresque en France,' and 'La Galerie Lebrun.' Subsequently he resided in Holland, and employed himself on marine subjects after his own designs, and after pictures by Dutch masters. Among the best are, the 'Battle of Nieuport'; and three others, after D. Langendyck; two after Kobell; one after A. Storck; and one after Vander Capelle. He died at Rotterdam in 1791.

SALM, A. VAN, a Dutch painter of marines and views in Holland, in black and white, in imitation of pen-drawings. He lived about the middle of the 17th century.

SALMEGGIA, ENEA, (SALMASIO,) called IL TALPINO, painter, was born at Bergamo about the year 1556. He received his first teaching at Cremona, under the Campi, but afterwards became a scholar of Procaccini, at Milan. He also passed fourteen years at Rome, where he applied himself to the study of Raphael. His pictures, of which there are many in his native town, have much simplicity and refinement. He died at Bergamo in 1626. FRANCESCO and CLARA, the son and daughter of Enea Salmeggia, imitated their father's manner.

SALMERON, CRISTOBAL GARCIA, a Spanish painter, born at Cuenca in 1603. He was a pupil of Pedro Orrente, and proved a reputable history and animal painter. One of his best works is a 'Nativity,' in the church of St. Francis, at Cuenca. He was employed by Philip IV. to paint a bull-fight, held in honour of the birth-day of Charles II. of Spain. He died at Madrid in 1666.

SALMERON, FRANCISCO, brother of Cristobal Salmeron, was born at Cuenca in 1608, and was also a pupil of Pedro Orrente. His desire was to distinguish himself as a colourist, for which purpose, it is said, he chemically analyzed works by Titian, P. Veronese, Tintoretto, and the Bassani. He neglected the other essentials of art, and so, beside their good colour, his pictures exhibit very great defects. The church of S. Francisco at Cuenca has a 'Burial of Christ' by him. He died at Madrid in 1632.

SALMIER JOSSE, a Flemish painter, probably a native of Mechlin, practising about 1620. He was related to the painter David Herregouts, to whom he gave his first lessons in art.

SALMINCIO, ANDREA, engraver, was a native of Bologna, where he was a bookseller. He learnt engraving from Giovanni Luigi Valesio, and produced several engravings, both on wood and on copper, which he marked with a monogram similar to that of Ant. Sallaert.

SALMON, ADRIEN ALPHONSE, painter, born in Paris in 1802, was a pupil of Lecourt, and entered the Ecole des Beaux Arts in 1819. He was an occasional exhibitor at the Salon, and at the Luxembourg, but was better known as a restorer of pictures. He last appeared at the Salon in 1848.

SALMON, JACQUES PIERRE FRANÇOIS, painter, born at Orleans on the 16th August 1781, was a pupil of Bardin and of Regnault. He was for some time attached to the "Ecole Centrale" of the department of Loiret, and afterwards worked for forty-five years as a professor at the College of Orleans. Several views by him of scenery in the neighbourhood of Orleans have been engraved and lithographed. He died at Orleans on the 10th March, 1855. The Musée of that city possesses examples of his work.

SALOMON, BERNARD, an engraver, called also 'Le petit Bernard,' Bernardus Gallus, and Bernardo Gallo, was born at Lyons (?) about 1520. Though there is a doubt as to Lyons being his birthplace, he certainly resided there in the last half of the 16th century, and was engaged in book illustration. His best works were illustrations to the Bible and to Ovid's 'Metamorphoses.' He is said to have had a son, Jean Bernard, who practised the same art as his father, and was called Giovanni Gallo, Johannes Gallus, &c.

SALT, HENRY, a draughtsman, was born about 1785 at Lichfield, where he was also educated. He accompanied Lord Valentia to India in 1802, and furnished the illustrations for the book of travels published by that nobleman in 1809. He was employed by the Government to carry presents to negotiate an alliance with the King of Abyssinia, the artistic result of which was the publication of twenty-four views of Abyssinia, and the Red Sea. In 1815 he was appointed Consul-General for Egypt, and devoted himself to the study of the antiquities of that country. He died between Cairo and Alexandria in 1827.

SALTARELLO, LUCA, (SARTARELLI), was born at Genoa in 1610, and was a disciple of Domenico Fiasella. At an early age he gave proofs of extraordinary ability, but going in 1635 to Rome in search of improvement, he there fell a victim to his unremitting labour while still very young.

Works:

Genoa. San Stefano. The Miracle of St. Benedict.
" S. Andrea. Martyrdom of St. Andrew.
Lisbon. The Trinity.

SALTER, WILLIAM, historical and portrait painter, was born at Honiton in 1804, went to London in 1822, and became a pupil of Northcote. He then went to Florence, where he painted a picture of 'Socrates before the Areopagus,' and thence to Rome and Parma, at which latter city his studies from Correggio became famous. In 1833 he returned to England, where he painted a picture of the 'Waterloo Banquet.' He was also employed in painting scenes from Shakespeare, and historical scenes from the lives of the Stuarts. Salter was a vice-president of the Society of British Artists. He died in London in 1875.

SALTO, DIEGO DE, an Augustine friar of Seville, who took the vows in 1576, and devoted his leisure to illuminating.

SALTZBURGER, P., a German engraver on wood, who flourished about the year 1580; most of his cuts are from the designs of Jost Amman.

SALVA, CARNIERO JOAQUIN DE, a Portuguese engraver, born at Oporto in 1727. He studied at Rome, and was appointed Professor in the School of Engraving at Lisbon, where he died in 1818.

SALVADOR OF VALENCIA, a Spanish painter of the 15th century, who worked with Benozzo Gozzoli at Rome, and was patronized by Calixtus III., about 1450.

SALVADOR CARMONA, MANOEL, was an engraver and designer, who was born at Madrid in 1730, and became a pupil of Dupuis in Paris. He died at Madrid in 1807. His engravings are much esteemed. Among the more important may be reckoned the following:

An Allegory in honour of Charles III. of Spain; after Solimena.

Bacchus crowning his votaries; after Velazquez.

A Madonna seated on Clouds; after Murillo. 1802.

A Madoua; after Van Dyck. 1757.

The Resurrection; after Van Loo. 1757.

St. John the Baptist; after Raphael Mengs. 1784.

The Magdalene; after the same.

St. Ferdinand praying; after Murillo. 1791.

Angels appearing to Mary Magdalene; after Guercino.

Portrait of François Boucher; after Roslin Suédois.

Portrait of Collin de Vermont; after the same.

Portrait of Charles III.; after Raphael Mengs. 1783.

Portrait of Don Alfonso P. de Guzman; after Van Dyck.

Joseph, a Carmelite Monk; after Velazquez.

SALVADOR GOMEZ, LUCIANO, supposed to be a brother of Vicente S. Gomez, was a pupil of Jacinto de Espinosa. A 'St. Barbara,' in the cathedral and a 'St. Erasmus,' in the Dominican convent, at Valencia, are ascribed to him. He was living in 1662.

SALVADOR GOMEZ, VICENTE, was a native of Valencia, and pupil of Jacinto de Espinosa. At the age of fourteen he is recorded to have painted a series of pictures from the life of St. Ignatius Loyola, which gained him enough reputation to keep him fully employed in the Valentin churches and convents for the rest of his life. He was a skilful painter of birds and animals, also of architecture; and his colour was pleasing. In 1670 he was the Director of an academy held in the convent of St. Dominic, and in 1675 he executed ten scenes from the lives of St. Juan de Mala and St. Felix de Valois for the choir of the church of El Remedio. These are the only dates relating to him which are certainly known. His pictures are numerous.

SALVADOR, MARIANO MAELLO, of Valencia, born in 1739, studied painting with Gonsalez Velazquez at Madrid. He was appointed painter to the King and Director-General of the Academy of St. Ferdinand. In 1775 he was employed in Valencia, with Bayeu, to replace the venerable frescoes of Juan de Borgoña in Toledo with daubs of his own. He furnished illustrations, engraved by Salvador Carmona, for the Infants Don Gabriel's Sallust. He died in 1819.

SALVATORE D'ANTONIO, the author of a panel in San Niccolo, Messina, painted at the close of the 15th century, representing St. Francis receiving the stigmata, is thought by some to have been the father of Antonello da Messina, but no records of his life or death exist. The latest opinion would make him the pupil of Antonello.

SALVESTRINI, BARTOLOMMEO, a Florentine painter of the 17th century, one of the most successful imitators of Jan Bilivert. He died while still young, a victim to the plague of 1630.

SALVETTI, FRANCESCO, a minor Florentine painter and engraver, born 1701. He was the pupil and intimate friend of Anton Domenico Grabbiani. He died in 1768.

SALVI, GIOVANNI BATISTA, called IL SASSOFERRATO, was born at the castle of Sassoferrato, near Urbino, on June 11, 1605. He was the son of Tarquinio Salvi, who instructed him in the rudiments of design, and when he was very young sent him to Rome, where he passed some years. He afterwards visited Naples, where he is supposed to have studied under Domenichino. But Sassoferrato did not confine himself to any particular master, but modelled his work on the styles of Guido, Albano, Barocci, and Raphael. His pictures are mostly Madonnas, and he seldom ventured on more ambitious subjects. His most considerable works are a small altar-piece in the church of S. Sabina, at Rome, representing the 'Madonna del Rosario, with St. Catherine and St. Dominic,' and a 'Crucifixion,' in the church at North Cray, Kent. He died at Rome in 1685. Additional works:

Dresden.	Gallery.	Sleep of the Child Jesus.
"	"	Virgin in Prayer.
"	"	Virgin and sleeping Child.
Florence.	Uffizi.	His own Portrait.
Hampton Court.	Palace.	The Magdalene.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	Virgin and Child.
Madrid.	Museum.	Madonna in Prayer.
"	"	Virgin in contemplation.
"	"	Virgin, and Child asleep.

"	"	Two 'Madonnas.'
Rome.	Vatican Museum.	Virgin and Child.
"	Pal. Borghese.	The Life of Mary.
Venice.	Academy.	St. Cecilia.

SALVI, TARQUINIO, a Roman painter of the 16th century, of whom little is known. He was a native of Sassoferrato, and the father and first teacher of Giambattista Salvi, called Sassoferrato. His only recorded work is a large 'Rosario,' in the Eremitani at Rome. It is signed and dated 1553.

SALVIATI, FRANCESCO. See DEI ROSSI, FRANCESCO.

SALVIATI, GIUSEPPE. See PORTA.

SALVIATINO. See ROSSI, FRANCESCO.

SALVIONI, ROSALBA MARIA, painter, was born at Rome in the 17th century. She studied under Sebastiano Conca, and in 1730 was admitted an honorary member of the Academia Clementi of Bologna. In the church of the Minorites at Frascati there is a 'St. Catharine' by her.

SALVOLINI, GIUSTINO DE, called also EPISCOPIO, a painter of the 16th century, belonging to the Roman school, but practising chiefly in his native town of Castel Durante, where he painted in collaboration with Luzio Dolce.

SALWAY, N., an English mezzotinter, who flourished about the year 1760. He engraved some portraits, which are not without merit.

SALY, JACQUES FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, (SAILLY), a famous French sculptor, born at Valenciennes in 1717, was a pupil of Coustou. He is mentioned here as the etcher of thirty designs for vases, and of four for monuments. He was Director of the Academy in Copenhagen. In 1774 he went to Paris, where he died in 1776.

SALZEA, DE. See DE FOUR.

SALZER, FRIEDRICH, landscape painter, born at Heilbronn in 1827, was instructed in the principles of his art by Baumann, but afterwards went to Munich. He painted the backgrounds for the battle-pieces of Kotzebue. There is a Winter-piece by him in the Gallery of Stuttgart. In 1863 he gave up art on succeeding to his father's business, and died at Heilbronn in 1876.

SAM, ENGEL, (or ANGELO), born at Rotterdam in 1699, was a good portrait painter, but excelled chiefly in genre. He imitated the manner of Van der Werff, and, it is said, painted a 'Flight into Egypt' so perfectly resembling the work of that master, that even experts were deceived by it. It is also said that he imitated Metsu. He died at Amsterdam in 1769.

SAMACCHINI, ORAZIO, painter, was born at Bologna in 1532, and, according to Malvasia, was the pupil of Pellegrino Tibaldi. He afterwards studied the works of Correggio, and was employed to paint in fresco the great chapel in the cathedral of Parma, contiguous to the famous cupola by that distinguished master. He went to Rome in the pontificate of Pius IV., by whom he was employed, in conjunction with Marco da Siena and others, in the decorations of the Sala Regia. The Dresden Gallery has a 'Holy Family' by this artist. Samacchini died at Bologna in 1577. Works:

Bologna.	SS. Narborre e Felice.	Coronation of the Virgin.
"	S. Giacomo Maggiore.	Purification of the Virgin.
"	Cetosa.	Last Supper.
"	La Trinità.	Crucifixion.
"	Pal. Lambertini.	The Fall of Icarus.
Cremona.	S. Abbondio.	Frescoes on the vault.

SAMANIEGO, MARIANA. See SILVA BAZAN.

SAMBACH, FRANZ KASPAR, painter, was born at Breslau in 1715, received his instruction in art from Reinert and de l'Épée, and at Vienna under Donner. In 1762 he became Professor of Architecture; and in 1772 Director of Painting in the same academy. He painted feigned bas-reliefs in the style of Geeraerts and Jacob de Wit. He also executed some frescoes for the Jesuits' church at Stuhlweissenburg, and an altar-piece for the Franciscan church at Camischa. He died at Vienna in 1795.

SAMELING, BENJAMIN, painter, born at Ghent in 1520, was brought up in the school of Franz Floris, in whose style he painted historical subjects and portraits. The church of the Jansenists at Ghent has several works by him after drawings by Lucas de Heere. He died at Ghent in 1614.

SAMENGO, AMBROGIO, a Genoese landscape painter of the 17th century, the pupil of Giov. Andrea Ferrari. His works are few and scarce, in consequence of his early death.

SAMMARTINO. See SAN MARTINO.

SAMMET-BRUEGEL. See BRUEGEL, JAN.

SAMMICHELLI. See SAN MICHELI.

SAMSON, JEAN, a French historical painter of the 16th century, who, in 1533, was engaged in work for the chateau of Versailles.

SAMUEL, GEORGE, landscape painter, was an exhibitor at the Academy from 1786 to 1823. He painted a 'View of the Thames from Rotherhithe Stairs,' during the frost of 1789. He was killed by a wall falling on him, soon after 1823.

SAMUEL, RICHARD, portrait painter and engraver, was an exhibitor at the Academy from 1772 to 1779. There is an engraving after him of 'Nine living Muses,' including Mrs. Sheridan, Mrs. Montague, Angelica Kauffman, etc. In 1773 he gained a prize from the Society of Arts for an improvement in the method of laying mezzotint grounds.

SAN ANTONIO, FRAY BARTOLOMÉ DE, was born at Cienpuzuelos in 1708. At the age of fifteen he took the habit of the order of the Trinitarios descalzos, and after studying philosophy and theology went to Rome to study painting, of which he had acquired the elements at Madrid. He remained in Italy six years, and in 1740 returned to his convent at Madrid, which he enriched with an immense number of his productions. About this time the Academy of S. Fernando was established, for which he painted an allegorical picture representing 'Ferdinand VI. and the Catholic Religion,' for which he was received as a member of that body. The church of the Trinitarios, at Madrid, also possesses many of his works. He died on February 8, 1782.

SAN BERNARDO, IL VECCHIO DI. See MINZOCCHI.

SANCHEZ, ALONSO, one of three artists employed to paint frescoes at the university de Alcalá de Henares, by command of Cardinal Cisneros, the founder. He was also employed, with five others, in the embellishment of the cathedral cloister at Toledo, for which he was paid in 1498. In 1508 he was again employed in the same cathedral with Diego Lopez and Luis de Medina.

SANCHEZ, ANDRÉS, a native of Portillo, near Toledo. He was a pupil of Theotocopuli, called Il Greco, and was commissioned in 1600 by the delegate of the Franciscan missionaries to paint certain pictures for the churches built by them in the Spanish colonies.

SANCHEZ, CLEMENTE, painter, was living at Valladolid in 1620. He painted several pictures for the Dominicans of Aranda de Duero.

SANCHEZ-COELLO, ALONZO, was born at Beny-fayro, in Valencia, in 1513 or 1515. From his style

he appears to have studied in Italy, for his design resembles that of the Florentines, while in colour he follows the principles of the Venetians. In 1541 he resided at Madrid, where he formed an intimacy with Sir Antonio Mor, whom he accompanied to Lisbon, when the latter was sent by Charles V. to paint the portraits of the royal family. Sanchez entered into the service of Don John, who had married Joanna, the daughter of Charles and sister of Philip II., and made a considerable stay at Lisbon. At the death of Don John his widow recommended Sanchez to her brother Philip, who at once received him as his painter in ordinary when Mor made his sudden flight from Spain. He painted many portraits of Philip and of other members of the royal family. He also painted the Popes Gregory XIII. and Sixtus V.; the Dukes of Florence and Savoy; Cardinal Farnese, brother of the Duke of Parma; and many grandees of Spain. With such patronage he became rich, and, it is said, lived according to his fortune. In 1570 he painted, in conjunction with his disciple, Diego de Urbina, the triumphal arch erected at Madrid for the entry of Anne of Austria, the wife of Philip II. In 1573 he entered into an engagement to decorate with suitable subjects the principal altar of the church del Espinar, executed by the celebrated Francisco Giralte, and for which he painted what may be termed a drop-scene, to serve as a screen during the two last weeks in Lent. Notwithstanding his advanced age Philip employed him in 1582 in filling the Escorial with pictures. For this palace-monastery he painted 'St. Paul, the first hermit, with St. Anthony;' 'St. Stephen with St. Lawrence;' 'St. Vincent with St. George;' 'St. Catharine with St. Inez;' and 'St. Justus and Pastor,' in which he introduced a view of Alcalá de Henares, and the scenery about it. About this time he painted the portrait of his friend, Father Siguenza, which is considered a chef-d'œuvre, and has been finely engraved by Ferdinand Selma; and in 1582 that of Ignatius Loyola, from casts taken twenty-nine years previously, and from instructions by Father Ribadeneyra. Notwithstanding all this success, however, Coello was but a second-rate artist. He died at Madrid in 1590. Of his works we may name:

London.	Nat. Por. Gal.	Full-length portrait of Philip II.
Madrid.	Museum.	Portrait of Don Carlos.
"	"	Eugenia and several other
"	"	Infantas.
"	"	The Marriage of St. Catharine.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	A Spanish Lady.

SANCHEZ-COELLO, ISABELLA, who was born at Madrid in 1564, was instructed by her father, Alonso Sanchez Coello, and distinguished herself as a painter of portraits, which are not now, however, to be identified. She was also eminent in poetry and music, and highly esteemed for her personal character. She married Francisco de Herrera, and died at Madrid in 1612.

SANCHEZ-COTAN, FRAY JUAN, an eminent Spanish painter of Madonnas, flowers, and still-life, was born at Alcázar de San Juan in 1561; he was the son of Bartolomé Sanchez-Cotan, and Ana de Quinoñes. He studied at Toledo under Blas de Prado, whose style he imitated, and under him made great progress in art. At first he painted bodegones, subjects like those of Jan Fyt, but in 1604 he became a professor of the Chartreuse of Paular, and painted subjects from Christ's Passion, the sorrows of the Virgin, and particularly Madonnas crowned with chaplets of flowers; all these he devoted to the decoration of his convent, or bestowed on his brethren for their private oratories. From Paular Sanchez-Cotan was removed in 1612 to the royal Chartreuse at Granada, for which he painted the principal historical pictures in that monastery. It is related by Palomino that he painted a Crucifixion for the refectory of the convent, so deceptive in its appearance that birds attempted to perch on the cross; and Cean Bermudez confesses that he, at first sight, mistook it for a piece of sculpture. Vincenzo Carducci made a journey from Madrid to Granada to see his works. Sanchez-Cotan died at Granada in 1637.

SANCHEZ-D'AVILA, ANDRÉS, painter, was born at Toledo. He went to Paris in his youth, and afterwards established himself as a portrait painter at Vienna. He died in 1762.

SANCHEZ DE CASTRO, JUAN, of Seville, founder of the school of Andalusia, was born in the first half of the 15th century. In 1454 he painted pictures for the old Gothic altar, in the chapel of San Josef in Seville cathedral. For the church of San Julian he executed a St. Christopher in fresco, which was repaired in 1775, little but the signature being left of the work.

SANCHEZ, LUIS, is known only as having designed in 1611 the title-page of a book called 'De la Veneracion que se debe a las reliquias de los santos,' engraved by Pedro Perret, and published in Madrid.

SANCHEZ, MANUEL, a priest of Murcia, who was practising as a painter in 1731.

SANCHEZ, PEDRO, a Spanish painter, who was at work in Toledo cathedral in 1462.

SANCHEZ SARABIA, DIEGO, an architectural draughtsman and painter of familiar subjects, was a member of the Academy of San Fernando in 1762. By desire of that body he made drawings of the Alhambra and of the Palace of Charles V., at Granada. These are now in the Academy. Sanchez Sarabia died in 1779.

SANCHO, ESTEBAN, a Spanish painter, known as MANEFA, from his having lost his right hand. He was a native of Majorca, and a pupil of Pedro Ferrer, and painted many pictures for the churches of his native island. He died in 1778.

SAN CLERICO, —, an Italian scene-painter and decorator of much repute, practising in 1823. A good example of his work is the ceiling of the Casino degli Negozianti at Milan.

SAN DANIELE, BATTISTA DA, was a Dalmatian, living at Udine and San Daniele, in the middle of the 15th century, and was the father of Martino da Udine, surnamed Pellegrino da San Daniele. No paintings by him are now extant, but records exist to prove that in 1468 he contracted to paint a curtain-fall for the church of Comerzo, and in 1470 an altar-piece with four figures for the brotherhood of San Daniele di Castello. (Crowe and Cavalcaselle, 'Painting in N. Italy,' vol. ii. p. 188.)

SANDARS, THOMAS, engraver, son of a painter of Rotterdam, went to London, and became a member of the St. Martin's Lane Academy. He etched the 'Italian Fisherman,' after Vernet, and drew and engraved fifteen views of market towns in Worcestershire. He exhibited at the Academy down to 1775.

SANDBERG, JOHANN GUSTAF, a Swedish painter born in 1782. In the Stockholm Gallery there are three pictures by him—a 'Gustavus Adolphus II. at the battle of Stuhm,' and two single figure pictures. He died in 1854.

SANDBY, PAUL, was born at Nottingham in 1725. He came to London when he was sixteen years of age, and having shown an early inclination for art, he obtained an introduction to the draughtsmen's room at the Tower. He had studied there about two years when the late Duke of Cumberland, wishing to have a survey made of the north and west parts of the Highlands of Scotland, young Sandby was engaged as draughtsman, under the inspection of Mr. David Watson. In company with that gentleman he travelled through that most romantic country, and, though the leading object of his tour was the drawing of plans, in his leisure hours he made many sketches of the scenery which surrounded him. From these designs he made a number of small etchings, which were published by Messrs. Ryland and Bryce. Soon after his return from his northern tour, about the year 1752, he passed some time with his brother at Windsor, and during his residence there made a great number of drawings of views about Windsor and Eton, which were immediately purchased by Sir Joseph Banks at good prices. Sandby was invited to accompany that gentleman in a tour through North and South Wales, and was employed by Sir Watkin Williams Wynne to make drawings of the picturesque scenery in that country. Sandby was the first to infuse nature into topographical drawing; his predecessors had been too much accustomed to compose from prints after the "black masters," but he looked at nature with a franker eye. To his other acquirements Sandby added etching and engraving in the style known as aquatint. He was, perhaps, the first English artist who adopted this style, the secret of which, it is said, was brought into England by the Hon. Charles Greville, who purchased it from Le Prince, a French artist, and communicated it to Paul Sandby. His works in aquatint are very numerous, and were popular at the time they were published. In 1768 he was appointed chief drawing-master at the Woolwich Military Academy, which post he resigned in 1799. He died in London in 1809.

SANDBY, THOMAS, brother of the aquarellist, Paul Sandby, was pre-eminently an architect, but claims mention as a clever draughtsman, of great artistic feeling. He was born at Nottingham in 1721, and was, like his brother, first employed as a military draughtsman. In this capacity he held an appointment under the chief engineer in Scotland, and rendered the Government the service of giving the first intelligence of Prince Charles Edward's landing in 1745. He was subsequently appointed draughtsman to the Duke of Cumberland, whom he accompanied to Flanders, and Deputy-Ranger of Windsor Park. He published eight drawings illustrating improvements made by him in the park, and many other drawings by him are in the royal collection at Windsor, in the British Museum, and in the Sloane Museum. He died at the Ranger's House at Windsor, on the 25th June, 1798.

SANDE-BACKHUIZEN. See BACKHUIZEN, HENDRIK.

SANDER, JOHANN HEINRICH, painter, born at Hamburg in 1810, painted sea-pieces and landscapes, and made a hit with a 'View of Heligoland.' He died in 1865.

SANDERAT, ÉTIENNE, a French miniaturist of the 15th century, known as having produced in 1447, for Jean de Chalon, Seigneur de Vitteau, the 'Proprietez des Choses,' illustrated with fifty miniatures.

SANDERS, CATHARINA, called VAN HEMESSEN, or HEEMSEN, was the daughter and pupil of Jan Sanders. She married Christian de Morien, the organist of the church of Notre Dame at Antwerp. He was a musician of repute in the Low Countries, and known generally as Christinano. He resigned his post in 1556, and the pair accompanied Mary of Hungary to Spain. Catharina painted portraits of small size. A fine example of these is to be seen in the London National Gallery. It represents a fair-haired man dressed in black. In 1868, there was in the possession of M. Lescart, lawyer at Mons, a 'Virgin and Child,' with a background of snowy landscape, painted on panel, and signed, Caterina de Hemessen pingebat. The dates of her birth and death are unknown.

SANDERS, (or SANDRES,) FRANS, a Flemish painter of the 16th century, who, in 1526, painted a 'Last Judgment' for the 'Salle des Plaids' of the Grand Council of Mechlin. In Margaret of Austria's Collection there was a 'Little Madonna' by him, which Albrecht Dürer greatly commended.

SANDERS, GEORGE L., miniaturist, was born at Kinghorn, in Fifeshire, in 1774. He studied under Smeaton, a well-known coach-painter in Edinburgh, and then devoted himself to miniature painting and giving drawing lessons. He also produced a Panorama of Edinburgh. In 1807 he went to London and painted numerous miniatures, among them the Princess Charlotte, the Duke of Cumberland, Prince George, Lady Clementina Villiers, and Lord Byron. About 1812 he turned his attention to life-size portraits in oil, in which also he had great success from the commercial point of view. He frequently visited the continent, whence he brought home many excellent drawings from the Old Masters, twenty-six of which now hang in the Scottish National Gallery. His portraits are common in English country-houses, but few have yet found their way into public collections. He died in London in 1846.

SANDERS, GERARD, painter, born at Wesel, in Holland, in 1702, was the pupil of his father-in-law, Tobias van Nymegen, whom he accompanied to Düsseldorf, and there continued his studies. He afterwards was associated with his uncle, Elias van Nymegen, at Rotterdam, in producing designs for tapestries. He died in 1767.

SANDERS, JAN, called VAN HEMESSEN, or HEEMSEN, a Flemish painter of the 16th century, was born at Hemixem, near Antwerp. He was a member of an artist family of some repute, as to whom little was known until the researches of recent writers threw some light upon their history. It is now established that Jan Sanders was a pupil of Hendrik van Cleef, the elder, in 1519, at Antwerp, and that in 1535—1537 he had himself set up an atelier for pupils in that city. In 1547—1548 he was Dean of the Society of Saint Luke. By his wife, Barbe de Fèvre, he had two daughters, Christina and the Catharina mentioned above. Towards the close of his career he migrated to Haarlem, where he settled. A certain similarity between his style and that of Quentin Matsys has caused it to be surmised that he was a pupil of that artist. His dates of birth and death are unknown, but Guicciardini, in his work published in 1666, speaks of him amongst deceased artists. The following works by him are known:

Antwerp.	Museum.	The Calling of St. Matthew.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	A Holy Family. 1541.
"	"	Isaac blessing Jacob.
"	"	The Calling of St. Matthew.
Paris.	Louvre.	Tobias curing his Father's Blindness. (Dated 1555.)
Vienna.	Gallery.	The Calling of St. Matthew. (Three versions.)
"	"	St. William.
"	"	St. Jerome.

SANDERS, JOHN, painter and engraver, was born in London in 1750. His works show the influence of Bartolozzi. In 1802 he went to St. Petersburg as engraver to the Emperor, and made sketches of the pictures in the Hermitage. These were published in 1805. His 'May Day,' and 'Sir John Falstaff,' were engraved respectively by Delatre and P. W. Tomkins.

SANDERS, JOHN, painter, practised in London, and exhibited at the Academy a picture of St. Sebastian in 1772, and a 'Jael and Sisera' in 1773.

SANDERS, JOHN, probably the son of the last-named John Sanders, exhibited at the Academy from 1775 till 1820.

SANDHAAS, KARL, painter, born at Haslach, in Baden, in 1801. After some preliminary study at Carlsruhe, he went in 1820 to Munich, where he was for a time the pupil of Cornelius, and completed his art education at Milan. In 1822 he settled in Frankfort, painting chiefly devotional works from the New Testament history. He also etched a set of four fanciful plates in 1844, published under the name of 'Träume und Schäume des Lebens.'

SANDORS, THOMAS, Dutch engraver, who settled in London soon after the middle of the 18th century. Joining the St. Martin's Lane Academy, he exhibited there till 1775. There are some views of Worcestershire engraved by him (1777-81).

SANDRAKT, JAKOB VON, a nephew of Joachim Sandrart, was born at Frankfort in 1630, and was instructed in engraving by Cornelius Danckerts and Willem Hondius, under whom he worked first at the Hague and afterwards at Dantzic. He engraved a great number of plates, which are executed with the graver in a clear, neat style. His best prints are his portraits, among which are the following:

The Emperor Rudolph II.
— Ferdinand II.
— Ferdinand III.
Frederick, Prince of Norway.
Sophia, Electoral Princess of Saxony.
Ferdinand Maria, Duke of Bavaria.
Joachim Sandrart; inscribed Seculi nostri Apelles .
Joannea Paulus Auer, Painter.

Nagler has given a full list of his plates. He died at Nuremberg in 1708.

SANDRAKT, JOACHIM VON, painter and writer on art, was born at Frankfort in 1606, and was instructed in the rudiments of design by Matthäus Merian and Theodorus de Bry. At the age of fifteen he went to Prague, where he worked for a time at engraving under Gillis Sadeler, who recommended him to exchange the graver for the brush. Sandrart then went to Utrecht, where he became a disciple of Gerard Honthorst. It is said that when Honthorst was invited to England by Charles I., he engaged Sandrart to accompany him, that the king bespoke many pictures of him, that he copied the portraits of Henry VIII., Sir Thomas More, Erasmus, and others, by Holbein, for the Earl of Arundel, and that he remained in England till 1627, when he went to Venice. This however appears rather doubtful, though it is certain that he passed several years in Italy, and at Venice copied the finest pictures of Titian and Paolo Veronese. From Venice he went to Rome, where he resided some years, and was much employed by the Cardinal Barberini and the Prince Giustiniani, and was intrusted by the latter with the superintendence of the engravings from statues in his gallery. From Rome he visited Southern Italy, returning to Germany in 1637. Afterwards he spent some time in Amsterdam, but in 1649 went to Nuremberg to paint a picture of the Peace Congress, which contained fifty portraits. In 1672 he went to Augsburg, where he was employed in several considerable works for the Emperor Ferdinand, and for Maximilian, Duke of Bavaria. In his last years he resided at Nuremberg, where he established an academy, and composed several works on art. These were, 'Academia Tedesca della Architettura, Scultura, e Pittura;' &c., 4 vols. in 2, folio, Nürnberg, 1675-79; 'Iconologia Deorum, 1680; 'Admiranda Sculpturæ Veteris Vestigia, 1680; 'Romæ antiquæ et novæ Theatrum, 1684;' and 'Academia Artis Pictoriæ, 1683,' collected from Vasari, Ridolfi, and Van Mander. But this is a Latin translation of what had already been published in the 'Academia Tedesca.' A uniform edition (in German) of all his works was published at Nürnberg, 1769-75, in 8 vols. folio. He died at Nuremberg in 1688. Works:

Augsburg. Ch. of S. Anna. Christ in the Temple.
Munich. Pinakothek. Portrait of a Woman in Black.
Würzburg. Cathedral. Descent from the Cross.

SANDRART, JOHANN JAKOB VON, the son of Jakob von Sandrart, was born at Ratisbon in 1655. He learned the first rudiments of design from his father, and profited by the lessons of Joachim von Sandrart, his great uncle. He was an able designer as well as an engraver, and possessed a ready and inventive genius. We have some neatly executed portraits by him, and the publications of Joachim von Sandrart are embellished with his spirited etchings. He also engraved several plates for a work entitled 'Suecia Antiqua et Hodierna.' He died at Nuremberg in 1698. The following are his principal independent prints:

Elizabeth, Princess of Brandenburg; after A. Le Clerc.
Silvius Jacob von Dunkelmann; after the same.
The Holy Family; after Joachim von Sandrart.
The Origin of Painting; two plates, after the same.
The Customs of the ancient Germans; two plates, after the same.
Æneas saving Anchises; from his own design.

SANDRART, LORENZ VON, was probably of the same family as the other artists of the same name. His name is affixed to the frontispiece for a set of prints from Ovid's 'Metamorphoses,' by Engelbrecht, published in 1700. It is also believed that he was a painter in enamel, and was still living in 1710.

SANDRART, SUSANNA MARIA VON, the daughter of Jakob von Sandrart, was born at Nuremberg in 1658, and instructed in design and engraving by her father. She executed several plates for the publications of Joachim von Sandrart. She married the painter Hans Paul Auer, in 1683, and after his death the bookseller W. M. Endter of Nuremberg.

She died at Nuremberg in 1716. We have the following independent prints by her:

The Feast of the Gods; after Raphael.
The Nozze Aldobrandini; after a design by Bartoli.
A Bacchanalian subject; inscribed Immoderatum dulce Amorum.

SANDRINO, TOMMASO, born at Brescia in 1575, excelled in perspective and architectural views, and was not unsuccessful in history. His principal works are the ceilings of the churches of St. Faustino, S. Domenico, and the cathedral, at Brescia. There are also several of his works in the public buildings of Milan and Ferrara. He died in 1630.

SANDWYK, FRANS VAN, painter, born at the Hague in 1641 or 1642. He was a pupil of Nicholas Wieling, and a member of the Pictura Society. Later, he became a military engineer in the service of the States, and was killed in battle.

SANDYS, EDWYN, is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a portrait of Sir William Petty.

SANÉ, J. P., a French painter, born about the middle of the 18th century. He worked for some time at Rome, and returning to his native country, died in 1780 in Paris. His works are little known. A 'Death of Socrates' is spoken of as showing considerable talent; there are further two genre pictures by him in the Museum of Angers; and his 'Lame Man at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple,' is in the church of St. Peter at Douai.

SANESE, MAESTRO RICCIO. See NERONI.

SAN-FELICE, FERDINANDO, born at Naples in 1675, was at once the patron and the scholar of Francesco Solimena. He attained a name among historical painters, and with the assistance of Solimena painted altar-pieces for several churches. He also painted fruit, landscapes, and perspective views, in which he particularly excelled; and he had the reputation of being an excellent architect. Solimena painted a gallery in his house, which afterwards became an academy for young artists.

SAN FRIANO, MASO DA. See MANZUOLI.

SANGALLO, SEBASTIANO DA, painter, born at Rome in 1482, son of Giuliano Giamberti, was called Aristotile for his knowledge of perspective and anatomy. He was a pupil of Perugino, but, as a painter, worked in the style of Michelangelo. He copied the 'Cartoon of Pisa' in oil, in grisaille, and was one of the painters summoned to Rome by Buonarroti when he began the Sistine ceiling. He afterwards became the friend of Raphael, after whose designs he built the Palazzo Pandolfini, at Florence. As a painter most of his activity was given to ephemeral work in theatres, and on the façades of houses. See Milanese's 'Vasari,' vol. vi. pp. 433-456. He died in 1551.

SAN GIMIGNANO, SEBASTIANO DA. See MARNARDI.

SAN GIMIGNANO, VICENZO DA. See TAMAGNI.
SAN GIORGIO, EUSEBIO DI, brought up in Perugia, was a fellow-worker with Fiorenzo di Lorenzo and Berto di Giovanni in 1501. He was induced to join Pinturicchio at Siena, and painted the altar-piece of the Epiphany at S. Agostino, in Perugia. In S. Francesco at Matelica, near Fabriano, is a 'Holy Family' painted by him in 1512, perhaps his best work. Other works of his may be seen at Orvieto, Assisi, and Perugia. In the cloister of the Capuchin Convent of S. Damian at Assisi are two frescoes. Levinoff ascribes the Standard preserved at Città di Castello as an early Raphael to Eusebio di San Giorgio. He died in 1550.

SAN GIOVANNI, CAVALIERE ERCOLE, called ERCOLINO DI GUIDO. This painter was a native of Bologna, and a favourite of Guido Reni. He imitated and copied the works of his instructor with such precision, that he is said to have deceived the master himself. Malvasia reports, that Guido having left a picture in a half-finished state, Ercole copied it, and placed his work on the easel of his master, who proceeded to finish it, without discovering the deception. Ercole was patronized by Urban VIII., who conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He died young at Rome, about the year 1640.

SAN GIOVANNI, GERARDO DA. See HAARLEM.

SAN GIOVANNI, GIOVANNI DA, called MANOZZI, born at San Giovanni in 1590, was a pupil of Matteo Roselli, and executed a great number of frescoes at Rome and at Florence, representing biblical, historical, and mythological scenes. He had much facility, and in his colour and chiaroscuro followed Caravaggio and Spagnoletto. He died in 1636. His best works are—

Fiesole. Refectory of the Badia. } Temptation of Christ.
 Florence. Pitti Palace. Scenes from the Life of St. Lawrence.
 " " A Hunting Party.
 " The Academy. A Flight to Egypt.
 " Oynissanti. In the Cloister; five scenes from the life of S. Francesco.
 Rome. Quattro Coronati. Frescoes in Semi-dome.
 " S. Maria del Popolo. Frescoes.

SAN GIOVANNI, MASO DA. See GUIDI, TOMMASO.

SANGSTER, SAMUEL, an engraver, born in 1804, was a pupil of Finden. He engraved for the annuals and for the 'Art Journal.' His best plates are—'Neapolitan Peasants on their way to a Festa,' after Uwins; 'The Gentle Student' and 'The Forsaken,' after Newton. He died in London in 1872.

SANGUINETO, RAFAEL, a Spanish noble of the 17th century, who practised painting as an amateur, and was the intimate friend of Alonzo Cano.

SAN MARTINO, MARCO, (or SAMMARCHI), an Italian landscape painter and engraver, who flourished about 1680. It is in dispute as to whether he was a native of Venice or Naples. Lanzi says he resided at Rimini, where his pictures are more generally to be met with. He ornamented his landscapes with very beautiful small figures, in which he excelled. He also attempted works of a higher order, such as the 'Baptism of Constantine,' in the cathedral of Rimini, and the 'Saint preaching in the Desert,' in the college of S. Vincenzo, at Venice. Bartsch (P. gr. tom. xxi.) has described 33 prints by him, many of which have his name in full, Marco San Martino.

SANNI, DOMINGO MARIA, a Spanish painter who flourished in the 18th century. In the Madrid Museum there are two pictures by him, but the dates of his birth and death are unknown.

SANO, E. B., a Belgian painter of ruins and interiors. He died at Antwerp in 1878.

SANO DI PIETRO DI MENICO, (or ANSANO), painter, was born at Siena in 1406, and principally instructed by Stefano di Giovanni Sassetta. Sano di Pietro was a most prolific artist. The Library at Siena possesses a Codex of the University Statutes, and a Breviary of the Nuns of St. Clara, with his miniatures, while the Academy possesses no fewer than 46 pictures by him. In 1428 he furnished the model for the font in the Baptistery of S. Giovanni in Siena. In 1433 he acted as valuator for Sassetta. He died in 1481. Most of the churches near Siena possess frescoes by him, and many of the chief European collections paintings. An 'Ascension of the Virgin' in the Academy at Siena, a 'Coronation of the Virgin' in the Town-hall, and a 'Virgin and Saints' in the church of S. Girolamo, in Siena, are among his best works. His other chief pictures are—

Paris. Louvre. Five Scenes from the Life of St. Jerome.
 Rome. Vatican Museum. Scenes from the Life of the Virgin. A Predella.
 Siena. Cathedral Library. Several Antiphonaries with miniatures.

SAN SEVERINO, JACOPO DI, brother of the elder Lorenzo di San Severino, whom he assisted in the fresco in San Giovanni Battista, at Urbino, dated 1416. Nothing further is known of him.

SAN SEVERINO, LORENZO DI, was born in 1374. In 1416 he and his brother Jacopo decorated the oratory of San Giovanni Battista at Urbino with frescoes, (which still remain, though much defaced by time,) representing scenes from the life of St. John the Baptist, and the Crucifixion. The latter is inscribed, "M.C.C.C.C.X.V.I. die xvii. Julii. Laurentius. de. Santo. Severino. et. Jacohus. frater. ejus. hoc. opus. fecerunt."

SAN SEVERINO, LORENZO DI, another artist of the same name, and supposed to be a son of Lorenzo. Three works by him exist, dated from 1481 to 1483; the first is in the sacristy of a church at Pansola near Macerata; the second is a fresco in the collegiate church of Sarnano; and the third is a panel in the National Gallery, representing the Marriage of St. Catharine, with four saints. The last picture is signed Laurentius II Severinus pisit.

SANSONE, LU. See MARCHESI, GIUSEPPE.

SANTA CROCE, FRANCESCO DI SIMONE DA, sometimes called Rizo, was born in the village of Santa Croce in the latter part of the 15th century. In his youth he went to Venice, and is thought to have been a pupil of Carpaccio or Previtali, both of whose styles he greatly affects, though in a picture of the 'Madonna and Saints' now in the church of S. Pietro Martire, Murano, he signs himself a pupil of Bellini. His earliest known work is the 'Annunciation,' painted in 1504 for the church of S. Spino, near Croce, and his latest the altar-piece of the Madonna and six Saints in the church of Chirignano, near Mestre. Pictures by him may be found in the Locchis Carrara Gallery, Bergamo, which possesses three examples, and in the Berlin Gallery. An 'Epiphany' and 'Noli Me Tangere' are in the Venice Academy. The date 1541 occurs upon one of his pictures (an altar-piece in a village church near Mestre), but its authenticity is not beyond dispute. The latest year anterior to it is 1529.

SANTA CROCE, GIROLAMO DA, a relative of Francesco da Santa Croce, was born in the early part of the 16th century. He is said to have been a pupil of Bellini, and to have painted at Venice from 1520 (which is the date of the altar-piece in the church of San Silvestro, an enthroned St. Thomas à Becket between St. John the Baptist and St. Thomas) to 1549, when he completed the 'Last Supper' at San Martino. In 1527 he painted the 'Charity of S. Martin' for the church of Luvigliano, near Padua; and in 1532 he executed fourteen frescoes representing scenes in the life of St. Francis of Assisi, in the Scuola di Francesco della Vigna, Venice, which have now vanished. The convent church still contains a fresco of the 'Christ in Benediction,' and a small picture of the 'Martyrdom of St. Lawrence.' Other works by this Santa Croce are :

Berlin.	Museum.	The Epiphany. Christ carrying His Cross.
"	"	The Crucifixion.
"	"	Martyrdom of St. Sebastian.
Dresden.	Gallery.	The Nativity. The Martyrdom of S. Lawrence.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	Two figures of Saints.
Venice.	Manfrini Pal.	Adoration of the Magi.

SANTAFEDE, FABRIZIO, the son of Francesco Santafede, was born at Naples in 1560. He was first instructed by his father, but he afterwards became a scholar of Francesco Curia, and at length visited Rome, where he remained two years, studying the principal objects of art in that capital. On his return to Naples he was employed in several considerable works for the public edifices. For the church of the Nunciata he painted a 'Nativity,' and an 'Annunciation to the Shepherds;' for S. Maria de Constantinopoli, an 'Adoration of the Magi,' and for S. Maria Nuova a ceiling. He died at Naples in 1634.

SANTAFEDE, FRANCESCO, born about 1519, was a Neapolitan, and a scholar of Andrea Sabbatini, called da Salerno. There are many of his works in the churches at Naples, of which the best, perhaps, is the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' in S. Maria Nuova.

SANT AGNESE, STEFANO DA, otherwise known as "the Pievan of Sant Agnese," is the author of an enthroned Madonna, signed, and dated 1369, now in the Correr Museum, Venice. The Academy of that city possesses a 'Coronation of the Virgin,' signed by Stefano in 1381. Nothing further is known of him.

SANTAGOSTINI, GIACINTO and AGOSTINO, the sons of Giacomo Santagostino, painted in the 17th century. Among their joint works were large pictures for S. Fedele in Milan. They also painted many works independently of each other, and Agostino was the author of a little treatise on the pictures in Milan, called 'L'Immortalità et Glorie del Pennello,' published in 1671.

SANTAGOSTINO, GIACOMO ANTONIO, born at Milan in 1588, was a scholar of Giulio Cesare Procaccini, under whom he became a very reputable artist. He painted several pictures for the churches of Milan, particularly for S. Lorenzo Maggiore, S. Maria del Lantasio, and S. Vittore. He died in 1648.

SANTARELLI, GAETANO, painter, a noble of Pescia, was a pupil of O. Dandini. He died young.

SANTELLI, FELICE, a Roman painter of the 16th century. He painted for the church of the P. P. Spagnuoli del Riscatti Scalzi, in competition with Baglione. Lanzi mentions a signed picture by him in the church of Santa Rosa, at Viterbo.

SANTEN, GERARD VAN, a Dutch painter of battle-pieces, who was much patronized by Prince Frederick Henry of Orange. In 1629 he was received into the Guild of St. Luke, at the Hague, and in 1650 he was still at work.

SANTERRE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French painter, born at Magny, near Pontoise, in 1658, was a pupil first of François Lemaire, and then of Bon Boulogne. He was very careful as to his processes, making many experiments in pigments, and finally restricting himself to five, on which he could, as he thought, depend, and delaying the varnishing of his pictures for ten years. His works are few.

The best are 'Susanna and the Elders,' and a female portrait, in the Louvre; a 'Mary Magdalene penitent,' and a 'Saint Theresa,' at Versailles. Santerre formed an academy for female students, from which he drew many of his models. His portraits and domestic subjects are carefully designed and harmonious in colour. Many of his works have been engraved. He died in Paris in 1717.

SANTI, ANTONIO, a native of Rimini and a pupil of Cignani, died in 1700. The great promise shown in his early works was robbed of fruition by a premature death.

SANTI, BARTOLOMMEO, a native of Lucca, who studied at Bologna, and practised as a scene-painter and decorator in the 18th century.

SANTI, DOMENICO, called MINGAZZINO, (MINGACCINO,) was born at Bologna in 1621, and was one of the ablest disciples of Agostino Metelli. He nearly equalled his instructor in painting perspective and architectural views. The churches and palaces at Bologna, particularly S. Colombano, the Servi, and the Palazzo Ratta, possess many of his works, which are embellished with figures by Giuseppe Metelli, Gio. Antonio Burrini, and especially by Domenico Maria Canuti. He also painted pictures of a small size, which are frequently mistaken for the works of Agostino Metelli. He died in 1694.

SANTI, GIOVANNI, the son of a general dealer and the father of Raphael, was born at Castello di Colbordolo, in the territory of Urbino, about 1435. He himself was brought up to his father's trade, and was probably induced to study art through his acquaintance with Melozzo da Forlì and Pietro della Francesca. His earliest known works are the frescoes in the church of S. Domenico, at Cagli, representing the Resurrection and a Madonna Enthroned among four Saints. In 1483 his son Raphael was born in the Contrada del Monte, Urbino, in a house purchased by Santi in 1464. In 1484 Santi painted an altar-piece for the church of Gradara, near Pesaro, representing the Virgin and Child, with Saints. In 1491 his wife, Magia Ciarla, died, leaving her son eight years old. The fresco still extant in Santi's house, a Virgin with the Sleeping Infant pressed to her bosom, is said to have been painted from his first wife and her little son Raphael. In 1492 Santi married Bernardina, the daughter of a jeweller named Piero di Parte. Giovanni Santi was one of the best Umbrian painters of his time. His style is simple and unaffected, but there is an unpleasant coldness about his colouring. His best works are considered to be a 'Madonna with Saints,' in the church of San Francesco in Urbino; a 'Madonna with Saints,' in the convent of Montefiorentino, near Urbino; a 'Visitation of the Virgin,' in Santa Maria Nuovo, and a 'Madonna with Saints' in the Hospital Church of Santa Croce, the two last being both at Fano, and an 'Enthroned Madonna' in fresco, in the Dominican Church at Cagli (dated 1492). He was a poet as well as a painter, and left a Chronicle in rhyme, still preserved in the Vatican, entitled 'Gesta gloriosa del Duca Federigo d'Urbino.' He died at Urbino in 1494. Additional works:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Two altar-pieces.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	Madonna and Child (?).
Milan.	Breva.	An Annunciation.
Rome.	Lateran.	An enthroned St. Jerome.
Urbino.	Brotherhood of } S. Sebastian. }	Martyrdom of St. Sebastian.
"	Gallery.	Madonna with four Saints.

SANTI, PIETRO, commonly called PIETRO BARTOLI, and sometimes IL PERUGINO, from his birth-place, was born at Perugia, about the year 1635. In the early part of his life he studied under Le Maire and N. Poussin, and practised painting, but abandoned it, to devote himself entirely to engraving, in which he greatly distinguished himself by the merit and number of his plates. He died at Rome in 1700. His plates are chiefly etched, and his point is extremely free and masterly. He sometimes marked his works P. B. F., but more frequently Petr. Ss. Bart., sc. Romæ. The number of his prints is very considerable; the following list comprises the best:

Admiranda Romanorum Antiquitatum ac veteris Sculpturæ Vestigia; eighty-one plates.

Romanæ magnitudinis Monumenta; one hundred and thirty-eight plates.

Veteres arcus Augustorum triumphis insignes; fifty-two plates.

Colonna di Marco Aurelio, &c., the Antonine Column; seventy-eight plates.

Colonna Trajana, di Alfonso Ciacconi; one hundred and twenty-eight plates.

Sepolcri antichi Romani ed Etruschi trovati in Roma; one hundred and twenty-three plates.

The Nozze Aldobrandini; two sheets.

Le Pitture antiche delle grate di Roma, &c.; assisted by F. Bartoli; ninety-four plates, 1680 and 1706.

Le antiche Lucerne sepolcrali in Roma, 1691 and 1704; one hundred and nineteen plates.

Antiquissimi Virgiliani Codicis fragmenta et picture, ex Bibl. Vaticana; fifty-five plates.

Scenes from the Life of St. Peter; after Lanfranco.

Subjects from 'Raphael's Bible'; forty-two plates.

Grotesques; after Raphael; inscribed Parerga atque ornamenta in Vaticano, &c.; forty-three plates.

Jupiter hurling thunderbolts at the Giants; after Giulio Romano.

The Birth of the Virgin; after Albani.

The Virgin and Child in the Clouds; after L. Carracci.

Coriolanus and his Family; after An. Carracci.

S. Carlo Borromeo led by an Angel; after the same.

Daniel in the Lions' Den; after Pietro da Cortona.

St. John preaching; after P. F. Mola.

The Adoration of the Magi; after Raphael; in three sheets.

Jupiter nursed by Amalthea; after Giulio Romano.

Hylas carried off by Nymphs; after the same.

Sophonisba before Masinissa; after the same.

The Continence of Scipio; after the same.

St. Stephen; from his own design.

St. Bernard enchaining the Devil; do.

Theatre erected to St. Peter's for a Canonization; do.

The sepulchral Monument of Pope Urban VIII; do.

SANTI, RAPHAEL. See SANZIO.

SANTI, SEBASTIANO, a painter, born at Venice in 1788, was first a restorer of pictures, and then a painter in fresco. His works are to be found in the Venetian churches. He died in 1866.

SANTI DI TITO. See TITO.

SANTIAGO PALOMARES, FRANCISCO XAVIER DE, born at Toledo in 1728, was a learned writer, an ingenious emblazoner of state documents, and a skilful designer. He held an office as receiver of crown rents, and was also much employed in copying manuscripts for the royal libraries. In these, and in literary pursuits, he was occupied for upwards of thirty years. He assisted Bayer in the formation of the Index to the ancient Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and Spanish manuscripts in the Escorial; wrote on the topography of Spain, of her geographical position in America, and of matters ecclesiastical and political. But he is noticed here mainly for his artistic talents, as a painter of landscapes, and an ornamental designer of frontispieces for books in Indian ink and with the pen. He painted in oil four views of Toledo, several portraits of distinguished persons, and a number of landscapes. He had a peculiar aptitude for the designing of frontispieces, and his talent was in great request by authors and publishers for that purpose. These will be found prefixed to many of the books printed in Spain during the second half of the last century. He died at Madrid the 13th of January, 1796.

SANTILLANA, JUAN DE, a skilful glass painter of Burgos, practising towards the close of the 15th century. Jointly with Juan de Valdivieso he worked in the cathedral of Avila, where he painted (in 1497) four windows by the 'Altar de Gracia,' one of which, representing St. John, still exists. He also painted scenes from the life of Christ for the windows of the Cloister Library, and a 'Resurrection,' for the cathedral.

SANTINI. Two painters of this name were living at Arezzo in the 17th century. They were distinguished as 'the Elder' and 'the Younger.' Lanzi mentions a 'St. Catharine' by Santini the Elder in the cloister of the Conventual Friars of Arezzo.

SANTINO DE' RITRATTI. See VANDI, SANTE.

SANTIS, ORAZIO DI, an engraver, probably a native of Aquila, flourished from 1568 to 1577, according to the dates on his prints, which are chiefly after the designs of Pompeo Aquilano. Bartsch has described seventeen prints by Santis, and supposes that there are others which have not come to his knowledge. Nagler has added 74 plates of antique statues at Rome, the joint work of Santis and Cherubino Alberti, published in 1584.

SANTISIMO SACRAMENTO, FRAY JUAN DEL. See GUZMAN, JUAN DE.

SANTO-DOMINGO, FRAY VICENTE DE. This Spanish monk is entitled to notice as being the first instructor of Navarrete, called el Mudo, and for his discernment of his pupil's talents at a very early age. He taught him all that he himself knew, and then very honestly advised his friends to send him to Italy for improvement. Four pictures in the church at Estrella were attributed to Santo-Domingo, but it is now ascertained that they were painted in 1659 by Navarrete, when, for the benefit of his health, he had permission from Philip II. to reside at Logroño. But Santo-Domingo painted the grisailles on the walls of the cloister, and other pictures which are in the convent of S. Catalina de Talavera de la Reyna.

SANTO, GIROLAMO (SORDO), called GIROLAMO DI PADOVA, an artist of the 16th century, who painted the façade of the Cornaro Palace, several frescoes in S. Francesco, and, with Parentino, scenes from the life of St. Benedict in S. Giustina, all at Padua. A curious picture of a genealogical tree in the Santo is also ascribed to him. Of his life little is known, but his existence can be traced as late as 1546.

SANTO PERANDA, was born at Venice in 1566. According to Ridolfi, he was first a scholar of Palma Giovine, and afterwards of Leonardo Corona, of Murano. He executed several considerable works for the Ducal palace at Venice and for the Dukes of Mirandola and Modena. There is a picture by him in the Ducal palace representing the defeat of the Turks by the Venetians. His 'Descent from the Cross' is in the church of S. Procolo. He died in 1638.

SANTO RINALDI, called IL TROMBA, a painter of battles, landscapes, and architecture, born at Florence about 1620, was a pupil of Furini. Though eminent in his day, little is known of his history; he is supposed to have died in 1676.

SANTOS CRUZ, a Spanish painter, who worked on the high altar of Avila cathedral, with Pedro Berruguete, from 1475 to 1499.

SANTOS, JUAN, a fresco painter, flourished at Cadiz in 1662. He was much employed in painting standards for the Spanish navy. It is also recorded that he painted little pictures to please certain ladies of Andalusia, which may occasionally be found in very private cabinets.

SANTO ZAGO, or ZASO. See ZAGO.

SANTVOORT, DIRK VAN, supposed to be the son of Anthonis Santvoort, an obscure engraver, painted history portraits somewhat in the manner of Rembrandt. He was practising in 1635; there are prints after him by Jonas Suyderhoef and Theodore Matham. A picture by him in the Louvre represents 'Christ and the Two Disciples at Emmaus;' but his chief excellence was in portraiture, as is shown in the group of four ladies in the Workhouse at Amsterdam. The date of his death is unknown. Füssli mentions a certain S. van Santvoort as practising in Holland in the 18th century.

SANTVOORT, PIETER, a painter of Haarlem. The only record of him now extant is the registration of his death in 1681, but a landscape in the manner of J. Van Aken has been attributed to him, and has been engraved.

SANUTO, or SANNUTUS, GIULIO, an Italian engraver, was born at Venice about the year 1530. His prints are executed in a coarse, heavy style, with single strokes, without any hatching, and have a certain resemblance to wood-cuts: among them we may name:

Venus and Adonis; after Titian.

The Marriage of the Virgin; after Raphael; with the engraver's mark.

The monstrous Child, signed Jul. Sannutus Venet. Fac.

The birth of this monstrous child took place at Venice in 1540: the mother was a German.

Two winged Genii in the air supporting a globe, on which stands Cupid discharging an arrow to the left of the print; no name of engraver.

Dance of Bacchantes in a wood; signed JULIUS SANNUTUS. F.

Apollo and Marsyas, after Correggio, with the Parnassus, after Raphael, in three sheets.

SAN VITO. See AMALTEO, POMPONIO.

SANZIO, RAFFAELLO, commonly called RAPHAEL, was the second son and third child of Giovanni Santi and his wife Magia Ciarla. His name of Sanzio is Italianized from Sanctius, which, in its turn, was Latinized from the patronymic, Santi. He was born at Urbino in 1483. There has been much fruitless discussion as to the exact day of his birth. His death in 1520 took place on Good Friday, which was March 26th or 28th; and Vasari says the same fast saw his birth, 'at three o'clock in the night.' In the epitaph written for his tomb, however, by Cardinal Bembo, it is distinctly declared that he lived exactly thirty-seven years, and died on his birthday (vix. annos xxxvii . . . integros, quo die natus est eo esse desiit). As Good Friday in 1483 fell on the 6th of April, either Bembo or Vasari must have been mistaken. No conclusive evidence has yet come to light on the point, and Raphael's biographers take sides according to their notions of probability. When Raphael was eight years and six months old his mother, Magia, died, and six months later Giovanni Santi married one Bernardina Parte. In 1494 Giovanni died, leaving Raphael heir to an estate under the guardianship of his uncle, Bartolommeo Santi. Raphael's first master was his father. Over his second ragas a standing controversy. On the one hand the party led by the Comendatore Giovanni Morelli believes that between the death of Santi and Raphael's introduction to Perugino, several years intervened, during which he was taught by Timoteo Viti. On the other, a party, with Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle at its head, refuses to modify Vasari's narrative more than is strictly necessary, and contends that Sanzio left home while still a child, and began to take lessons from Perugino as early as 1495. Perhaps the truth may lie between the two extremes, and Raphael's early teaching have been more desultory than either party will allow. During the last ten years of the 15th century Perugino's movements were very erratic; but from 1495 to 1500 his chief domicile appears to have been at Perugia, and there, too, Raphael may have spent most of his time. That various influences were contending within him at this period is proved by such early works as the 'Vision of a Knight,' in the National Gallery, which is half Timotesque and half Peruginese. If the 'Venice Sketch-Book' may be taken as Raphael's, it affords an additional proof of his catholicity of study. The arguments advanced by Signor Morelli have proved conclusively that the drawings it contains are not original designs by Raphael; but they leave untouched the much more tenable belief that they are copies made by him while still a boy, after studies and even prints by men so different from each other as Mantegna, Pinturicchio, and Signorelli. It is very possible that these drawings were made in the interregnum between Santi's death and the arrival of his son in Vannucci's studio. The continual recurrence in the afterwork of Raphael, of motives foreshadowed in the sketch-book, as well as many details of execution, point to him as its author. It would be impossible to discuss the question here at length, and we must be content merely to note that this solution of the problem has been proposed, and, as yet, has not met with the attention it seems to deserve.

Raphael's doings while under Perugino are still involved in obscurity, and it is not until he finally migrates to Rome that the plain road of his career is reached. While in Vannucci's studio he was much associated with Pinturicchio, and the part he played towards that master is another point in dispute. Pinturicchio commenced his frescoes in the Piccolomini library, at Siena, in 1504, and Vasari asserts that he employed Raphael to make sketches and cartoons for his use. Drawings of three of these frescoes, existing respectively at Chatsworth, in the Uffizi, and in the Casa Baldeschi at Perugia, have long been ascribed to Raphael, and looked upon as evidence to the truth of Vasari's statement. Now, however, Morelli and his followers declare them to be the work of Pinturicchio, and deny that Raphael had any hand in the frescoes.

About the beginning of 1504 Raphael's independent career seems to have begun. The most important work of this time is the 'Sposalizio,' at Milan, which is dated 1504. Late in the same year Raphael went to Florence, where he opened a new stage in his development. The manner of Perugino rapidly fell away from him, and the distinctive characteristics of his own personality grew in freedom. The works of Leonardo and Michelangelo were, no doubt, the immediate stimulus. The influence of the former is visible in such things as the 'Maddalena Doni'; that of the latter in many drawings and studies, notably in the free study from Buonarroti's 'David,' in the British Museum. This visit to Florence was not of long duration, however, for in 1505 we find him back in Perugia, and at work upon several important pictures. To these next years belong the altar-piece painted for the nuns of Sant' Antonio of Padua, the Ansidei Madonna, which was finished in 1506, the San Severo fresco, and the Terranuova Madonna. The 'Entombment' was painted in 1507, and about eighteen months later Raphael was in Rome. Between 1504 and 1509 it is probable that he had oscillated a good deal between Florence, Perugia, and Urbino. The pictures belonging to that period may have been carried on, some in one of those cities, some in another, just as Vannucci before him had probably kept up studios both at Florence and Perugia. His commissions had come from the wealthy patrons of Florence, from the patricians and religious bodies of Perugia, and from the ruling family of his own native Urbino.

It has been generally stated that Raphael went to Rome in 1508, the assertion being founded on a letter from him to Francia, quoted by Malvasia, which, according to that writer, was dated from Rome in September, 1508. Doubts have now been thrown on the authenticity of the letter; and even Crowe and Cavalcaselle, who accept it in the main, question the date. How and by whom Raphael was summoned to Rome is unknown. Julius II. was invested with the tiara on the 26th Nov., 1507. Julius, as we know through Paris de Grassis, declined to take up his abode in the chambers occupied by Alexander VI., and thence called the 'Torre Borgia.' Contiguous to the suite of apartments in which he actually settled himself, lay the rooms now famous as the 'Stanze.' These had been partly decorated by painters of repute, and nothing could be more natural than for the Pope to order their completion. Now, more than a month after the asserted date of Raphael's letter to Francia, Sigismondo Chigi had engaged with Julius that Sodoma should paint pictures to the value of fifty ducats in these upper chambers of the Vatican, and we know from other evidence that Bazzi's energies were confined to the 'Camera della Segnatura.' But it was in this very 'Camera' that Raphael did his first work in Rome, and that after erasing much that Bazzi had done. It is clear that if Sodoma had only been engaged to paint the 'Camera' in the middle of October, 1508, and if Raphael's first work in Rome was the supercession of what that painter had produced in fulfilment of his bargain, the younger man's arrival in the city must have been later than the winter of 1508. Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle assume that Julius II. visited the 'Stanze' early in 1509, disapproved of what Bazzi had done, ordered his work to be taken down, and, on the advice of Bramante, Michelangelo, or perhaps Francesco Maria of Urbino, invited Sanzio to Rome.

Raphael began his work in the 'Camera della Segnatura' by painting the compartments in the ceiling, taking the oblongs first and next the rounds, before descending to the great round-topped frescoes on the walls. The latter were painted in the following order: 'The Dispute of the Sacrament,' 'The School of Athens,' 'The Parnassus,' 'Jurisprudence' (in three pictures). This camera was completed in 1511, after about two years' hard work, and the Pope at once commissioned Raphael to decorate the adjoining chamber, the 'Stanza d'Eliodoro.' The general character of this apartment is Papal rather than philosophical; it is the glorification of the Pope rather than that of mind by which its frescoes are inspired. They consist of the 'Expulsion of Heliodorus from the Temple,' 'The Miracle of Bolsena,' 'The Deliverance of St. Peter,' and 'The March of Attila.' Each of these has a double significance. On the one hand, they celebrate a glorious event in the history of Christianity; on the other, they recall some achievement or characteristic of the reigning Pope.

During 1509-14, while Raphael was engaged upon the 'Stanze,' he also found time to produce several large altar-pieces, many smaller Madonnas, and not a few portraits, all of which are enumerated below. With the accession of Leo X. the Roman patronage of art expanded still farther, and the painter was overwhelmed by the multiplicity of commissions that poured in upon him. From this time onward his biography is comprised in his works. His life was even more uneventful than usual with a painter. Anecdotes of his covert warfare with Michelangelo, of his liaison with the Fornarina, and of his difficulties with those extra-Roman potentates to whom he had promised pictures, make up the history of his later years. About the middle of 1514 he received his orders to paint another 'Stanze,' that of the 'Incendio del Borgo.' In this third chamber he painted the 'Incendio' itself, 'The Battle of Ostia,' 'The Coronation of Charlemagne,' and 'The Oath of Leo III.' The three latter, however, were mainly, if not entirely, carried out by his pupils. Simultaneously with these frescoes, Sanzio carried on the decorations of the famous 'Loggia.' For these, too, he was content to make the designs, the actual painting being carried out by Giovanni da Udine, Giulio Romano, Gian-Francesco Penni, Perino del Vaga, and many others. Passavant came to the conclusion that Raphael's share in the work had been confined to furnishing sketches, which were expanded into cartoons, &c., by Giulio Romano, on whom the immediate charge of the works devolved. Herr Springer carries doubt still further, and affirms that but very few original sketches for the Loggia have come down to us, and that with a large part of the work, especially in the three last bays, the master had nothing to do. The whole Loggia consists of thirteen bays, and each bay contains four frescoes, representing scenes from the Old and New Testaments; hence the series is often called 'Raphael's Bible.' The Vatican contains two more sets of frescoes, for which Raphael furnished the designs, even if he did no more. These are the figures of Christ and the Twelve Apostles, which adorn the hall of the Pope's pages, and the decorations in the small room contiguous to the Loggia, which is known as the bath-room of Bibbiena. The latter has now for years been inaccessible even to the student; it is said, indeed, that the paintings of Sanzio have been hidden under battens ever since the beginning of the present century.

Pending these frescoes, another great work Raphael carried out for the palace of the Popes was the series of designs known as the 'Acts of the Apostles,' whose most famous embodiment is to be found in the 'Cartoons.' These originally were ten in number. All but three have been preserved, and now hang in the South Kensington Museum. They are 'The Calling of Peter,' 'The Draught of Fishes,' 'The Death of Ananias,' 'The Healing of the Lame Man,' 'Paul and Barnabas at Lystra,' 'Paul preaching at Athens,' and 'Elymas struck Blind.' The three which have perished were the 'Stoning of Stephen,' the 'Deliverance of St. Peter,' and the 'Conversion of St. Paul.' All ten designs were woven in tapestry at Brussels by Pieter van Aelst, for 1000 ducats a-piece, and, after many vicissitudes, his tapestries are now preserved in the Vatican, more or less damaged. After the completion of this series, Raphael made sketches for a 'Coronation of the Virgin,' for 'Scenes from the Life of Christ' (which were finished long after his death), and for a set known as the 'Giocchi di Putti.' In all these, however, his share was very slight; in the two latter, perhaps, amounting to nothing beyond a few suggestions to his pupils.

After Leo X., Raphael's chief patron towards the end of his life was Agostino Chigi, who was occupied with the erection of his famous villa in the Trastevere during the first twenty years of the 16th century. Chigi's architect, according to Vasari, whom in this matter we prefer to follow, was Baldassare Peruzzi, but some critics have endeavoured to gain the glory of the work for Sanzio. It is much more probable that Raphael's first connection with the building was when he began the 'Galates' in one of its saloons. The approximate date of this is furnished by a letter addressed to Castiglione in the summer of 1514, in which the fresco is mentioned in terms that would be out of place in speaking of anything but work lately finished. Chigi also commissioned Raphael to paint his famous group of the 'Sibyls,' in Santa Maria della Pace; the 'Planets,' in Santa Maria del Popolo; and the 'History of Psyche,' in the Loggia of his own villa. In all these works his chief assistants were the three artists whose posterity has most closely coupled with his own—Giulio Romano, Gian-Francesco Penni, and Giovanni da Udine. Of the easel pictures executed by Raphael during the last few years of his life, the 'Madonna della Sedia,' the so-called 'Pearl,' the 'Madonna di San Sisto,' and the 'Transfiguration' were the most important. As for the last-named, it was commissioned by Cardinal Giuliano de' Medici as a gift to the town of Narbonne, of which Francis I. had made him bishop. It was painted in a sort of covert competition with Michelangelo, who, as Raphael well knew, was supplying Sebastiano del Piombo with drawings for that 'Raising of Lazarus' which the Cardinal had ordered at the same time as he commissioned the 'Transfiguration.' The latter was left unfinished at Raphael's death, and was displayed at the head of his bier when he lay in state.

Raphael's achievements as an architect and as a sculptor are beyond the scope of this dictionary. Their consideration is, moreover, complicated by the doubts which hang about them. Of all the buildings ascribed to him the finest is the Palazzo Pandolfini, at Florence, which was not actually begun until he was dead, and was then carried on and finished by two successive architects—Gian-Francesco and Aristotile da San-Gallo, whose influence on the result it is now impossible to determine. Raphael's doings at St. Peter's, to which he was appointed architect-in-chief in 1514, on the death of Bramante, do not speak highly for his powers as an architect, so far as we can divine what they were. Another disputed point belonging to these latter years of the painter's life, relates to the authorship of a report on the remains of ancient Rome presented to the Pope. By a papal brief, dated August 27th, 1515, Raphael was appointed a kind of inspector of antiquities, and invested with powers to forbid the destruction of ancient inscriptions; and by that fact a starting-point is afforded to those who would give him the credit of the report in question. Two editions of its text have been published, one by the Volpis in their 1733 edition of Castiglione; the other by Passavant. At first the report was believed to be the work of Castiglione, but after the publication of a paper on the subject, in 1799, by the Abbate Francesconi, the authorship of Raphael was for a time generally admitted. In more recent years, however, certain critics, with Grimm at their head, have elaborated arguments to prove that Andrea Fulvio, the antiquary, who lived in great intimacy with Raphael, was the true author.

Raphael was never married. In 1514 he was negotiating for a wife from his native city, when his appointment to the post vacated by Bramante's death took place. Thereupon Cardinal Bibbiena offered him his niece. Raphael broke off the pourparlers with Urbino, and engaged himself to Maria Bibbiena. Her sickness and death, however, soon put an end to the match. Little as we know of the subject, it is certain that during his last years the heart of Raphael was given to the mistress whom the world now calls the Fornarina, although that name was never committed to print until early in the 18th century. Vasari tells us that "Marc-Antonio executed a certain number of engravings for Raphael, which he handed over to Baviera, one of the master's scholars. This man had charge of a woman whom Raphael loved to death, of whom the master painted a very beautiful portrait, which appeared no less than alive; this portrait is now in Florence, in the possession of Matteo Botti;" again, "Raphael painted the portrait . . . of his own mistress"; and "Raphael, like a good Christian, sent away his mistress before making his will, but gave her enough to keep her in comfort." Finally he tells us that Chigi besought the lady to install herself at the Farnesina, so that Raphael might have no inducement to neglect the work he had there in hand. Late in the 16th century, the owner of a copy of Vasari wrote on the margin of a page in which this lady is mentioned, that her name was Margarita. Beyond the bare facts here set out, nothing is certainly known of Sanzio's mistress.

Raphael died at Rome on Good Friday (March 26th or 28th), 1520. The cause of his death was a rapid fever, brought on, no doubt, as fevers still are in the same city, by over-work. Whether dissipation had anything to do with it or not, as the gossips of the time declared, it is now too late to determine. His body lay in state for a few hours in his studio, with his 'Transfiguration' hung above it, and every painter in Rome passed before it. It was interred in the Pantheon, in a tomb which for centuries had no mark but the eloquent epitaph of Bembo.

For an account of Sanzio's relations with Marc-Antonio Raimondo, and the painters who were his pupils—Giulio Romano, Penni, Udine, &c.,—see their lives.

The following list of pictures is arranged as far as possible in chronological order. The titles in italics are those of which the authenticity is doubtful, or in which there is none of the master's own work : W.A.

SARABIA, FRANCISCO ANTOLINES, nephew of Josef de Sarabia, born at Seville in 1644, studied for the law, but afterwards took to art, and went to Madrid to study in the school of Murillo. He received a judgeship at Seville, but eventually returned to Madrid, where he took orders, and died in 1700.

SARABIA, JOSEF DE, a Spanish painter, born at Seville in 1608, was first placed with Agustin del Castillo, and after that master's death in 1626, with Francisco Zurbaran. He chiefly resided at Cordova, where he painted many pictures and altar-pieces for the churches. He was not deficient in merit, but he took his subjects from prints by Sadeler, some of which were after Rubens, and imposed them on the ignorant as his own inventions. The best original work of Sarabia is the 'Flight into Egypt,' which is entirely his own composition. He died at Cordova in 1669.

SARACENI, (or SARACINO, SARACINI,) CARLO, called VENEZIANO, a painter, born in Venice in 1585. According to Baglione, he visited Rome during the pontificate of Clement VIII., and was for some time under the tuition of Camillo Mariani, but afterwards studied and imitated the manner of Caravaggio. He returned to Venice, whither he had been invited to paint a picture for the council-chamber, but did not live to finish it. He died in 1625. Saraceni engraved a few plates from his own designs, which he signed usually Carolus Saracenus invent. Pictures:

SARAZANA. See FIASSELLA.

SARAZIN DE BELMONT LOUISE JOSÉPHINE, painter and lithographer, was born at Versailles in 1790. She was a pupil of Valenciennes, and was several times premiated. From 1812 till 1868 she exhibited a very large number of works at the Salon, her subjects being principally landscape views, with various effects of light. Of her essays in another manner we may mention 'Gil Blas' and 'Don Alphonso' (1822); 'Herminia and Tancred' (1824). Examples of her work are to be seen in the galleries of Angers, Nantes, and Toulouse. She died in 1871.

SARIBOT. By an artist of this name, who flourished about 1675, we have a print of 'Christ praying in the Garden,' supported by an angel. It is probably from his own design, as he adds the word fecit to his name.

SARBRÜCK, BARTHOLOME VON, painter, born at Trèves about 1590, and called TREVIRENSIS, worked in Basle and in Bern, and painted several portraits in the style of Vandyck.

SARMIENTO, TERESA, Duchess of Bejar, an amateur historical painter of much talent, who painted pictures for various churches in Madrid, where she was living towards the middle of the 17th century.

SARRABAT, DANIEL, painter, born at Paris in 1666. Three prize pictures by him are recorded: 'Noah entering the Ark' (1686), 'The Deluge' (1687), 'Noah leaving the Ark' (1688); but he never took part in any public exhibitions, and though received by the Academy in 1702, did not become a full member. He died at Lyons, June 22nd, 1748.

SARRABAT, ISAAC, a French mezzotint engraver, born at Les Andelys about 1660. He was one of the earliest artists of his country who practised that mode of engraving, and his plates are very indifferently executed. Among others, we have the following prints by him:

J. B. Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux; after Rigaud.

Antoine Coyppel, Painter to the King; after Netscher.

Étienne Gantrel, Engraver to the King; after Largillière.

The Confessor; in two plates; after N. van Haefst.
Heracitus, half-length; after M. Corneille.

SARRAGON, JOHN, an engraver and publisher, who flourished about the year 1645. His plates were mostly portraits.

SARRAZIN, BÉNIGNE, painter, the son and pupil of Jacques Sarrazin, was granted a pension by Louis XIV. to enable him to complete his studies at Rome, and after his father's death was allowed to retain the latter's lodging in the Louvre. His only recorded work was a series of paintings, which he executed in 1674, in the chapel of the Hôtel de Ville at Marseilles, but these were some years ago destroyed during an alteration of the building. He died in Paris in 1692.

SARRAZIN, JACQUES, the elder, the famous French sculptor, born at Noyon in 1588, painted a few pictures. D'Argenville speaks of a 'Holy Family' and four medallions at the 'Minimes' in Paris, so beautiful that they might be taken for the work of Lesueur. In the Rennes Museum there is a pencil drawing by him, and Duret engraved some of his Madonnas. He died in Paris in 1660.

SARRAZIN, JEAN BAPTISTE, professor at the Academy of St. Luke at Paris, held an appointment as decorative painter at the court of Louis XVI. He exhibited a few landscape and marine views between 1762 and 1793.

SARTARELLI. See SALTARELLO.

SARTI, ANTONIO, an Italian painter, practising about 1600, mentioned by Baldassini in his 'Storia di Jesi,' where he highly commends a 'Circumcision' in the collegiate church of Massaccio.

SARTI, ERCOLE, called IL MUTO DI FICAROLO, was born at Ficarolo, a town in the duchy of Ferrara, in 1593, of a respectable family, and was deaf and dumb from his birth. Before he was sixteen years of age, on the occasion of a solemn procession, he placed on the front of his father's house a picture he had painted in secret, representing the 'Adoration of the Magi.' This unexpected production was the object of general astonishment, and its author was placed under Carlo Bononi, at Ferrara. He afterwards imitated the style of Ippolito Scarsellino, his contemporary. The principal pictures of Sarti are in the church of the Benedictines, in his native town. He also painted a portrait of Pope Sylvester, now in the Costabili Gallery. He died about 1637.

SARTO, ANDREA DEL. See ANDREA D'AGNOLO.

SARTORIUS, FRANCIS, an animal painter, who lived and practised in England during the latter part of the 18th century. He painted portraits of horses and dogs, and also hunting-pieces. Many of his productions were engraved in mezzotint and aquatint. He died about 1806.

SARTORIUS, JAKOB CHRISTOPHER, an engraver of Nürenberg, whose portraits and book-illustrations bear dates from 1694 to 1737.

SARTORIUS, JOHN N., son of Francis Sartorius, was, like him, an animal painter. He exhibited at the Academy from 1778 to 1824. His subjects were connected with the turf. A few game pieces are extant with the name of Sartorius, but whether by John N. or Francis is uncertain.

SARZANA. See FIASELLI.

SARZETTI, ANGILO, an artist of the Bolognese school, born at Rimini. For the church of the Angioli, in his native town, he executed some paintings in oil and in fresco. He was a pupil of Cignani, and flourished about 1700.

SAS, CHRISTIAN, a German engraver, who flourished from about 1630 to 1660. He engraved several plates, among which are forty-five scenes from the life of St. Philip Neri, after Stella. There are some other plates by him, after Il Pomerancio, and other masters.

SASC, JULIE DE, (née LISIEWSKA,) painter, born in Saxony, 1724. She was the pupil of her father, Georg Lisiewski, and lived for some time at the Hague, where she became a member of the Pictura Society in 1767. She died at Berlin in 1794.

SASONOFF, WASSILY KONDRATEWITZ, a Russian painter, born at Gomel, Mohyleff, about 1789. He studied in the Academies of Petersburg and Ongrumoff, and devoted himself chiefly to biblical and historical subjects. An example of the latter is in the Hermitage at Petersburg: 'The Grand Duke Dmitry Donskoy after the Victory of Koulikovo, 1380.' He died at Petersburg in 1870.

SASS, HENRY, portrait painter, son of an artist, was born in London in 1788. His first work was the 'Descent of Ulysses into Hell,' and in 1816 he went to Rome. He never, however, obtained much reputation as an artist, though he was very successful as an elementary teacher. Many of the chief English painters of the 19th century passed through his school. He died in 1844. (See 'Reminiscences,' by W. P. Frith; London, 1887.)

SASSE, RICHARD, a water-colour painter, born in 1774, exhibited landscapes at the Academy from 1791 to 1813. In 1811 he was appointed teacher to the Princess Charlotte, and landscape painter to the Prince Regent. In 1815 he travelled on the continent, and eventually settled in Paris, where he died in 1849. He was a cousin of Henry Sass, but lengthened his name by an e. There are examples of his work at South Kensington.

SASSETTA, STEFANO DI GIOVANNI, a Siennese of the 14th century, who painted a 'Christ on the Cross,' in S. Maria de' Servi, in Siena; a 'Coronation of the Virgin,' at the Porta Romana, Siena; 'The Burial of the Virgin,' in the Cathedral of Asciano; and a 'Madonna and Saints,' in S. Domenico in Cortona. He was the master of Sano di Pietro.

SASSI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, flourished at Milan in the 18th century, was a pupil of Solimena, in Naples, but returned in 1715 to Milan, where he painted several altar-pictures, and completed some pictures left unfinished by Pietro Giraldi.

SASSOFERATO. See SALVI.

SASSOLI, FABIANO, a painter upon glass, who flourished at Arezzo in the 15th century. His son, STAGIO, excelled his father in the same art, and was a collaborateur with Domenico Pecori, and later with the famous Guillaume de Marseilles.

SASSONE, IL. See MENGS, ANTON RAFAEL.

SATTLER, JOHANN MICHAEL, born at Neuberg, in Austria, in 1786, was a pupil at the Vienna Academy, but settled at Salzburg. He painted panoramas, which he exhibited in the chief German towns. He died at Mattern, near Salzburg, in 1847.

SAUBERLICH, LORENZ, a German engraver on wood, who, according to Professor Christ, published some wood-cuts at Wittemberg in the year 1599. He used a cipher composed of an L and an S. He is supposed to have died in 1613.

SAUERWEID, ALEXANDER, a draughtsman and painter of battle-pieces, was born in Courland, in 1782, and received his training in the Dresden Academy. Coloured prints from his drawings had great popularity about thirty years ago. He was patronized by Alexander I. of Russia, and resided for a considerable time at St. Petersburg, where he died in 1844.

SAUNDERS, JOSEPH, an English miniature painter, working in London towards the end of the 18th century. He had an extensive practice, and was employed principally as a painter of ladies' portraits. From 1778 to 1797 he exhibited occasionally at the Academy. His son, R. SAUNDERS, practised the same art.

SAURA, MOSEN DOMINGO, a Spanish painter of the 17th century, born at Lucena, in Valencia. On the death of his wife he became a priest, and devoted himself with much success to the art of painting. His works are numerous at Valencia.

SAUTERLEUTHE, JOSEPH, a celebrated painter upon glass, born at Weingarten in 1796. He was a pupil of Isopi, and began his career in the china factory of Ludwigsburg, but in 1812 went to Nuremberg to perfect himself in the art of glass-painting. In 1837 he painted twelve windows for Prince Thurn-and-Taxis at Ratisbon, and, jointly with Vörtel of Munich, he executed the windows in the hall of the Minnesänger in the Landsberg Schloss at Meiningen. Fine examples of his art are preserved in the Hertel collection at Nuremberg, consisting of paintings on glass after Albrecht Dürer's Life of the Virgin. He died at Nuremberg in 1843.

SAUVAGE, ANTOINE, called LEMIRE the YOUNGER, to distinguish him from his father, GABRIEL CHARLES

SAUVAGE, called LEMIRE. He was a French painter of history and portraits. He was born at Lunéville, and died in the last quarter of the 18th century. His wife, née SOPHIE BRINISHOLTZ, was also a painter.

SAUVAGE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French painter of the 17th century. In the museum at Valenciennes there is by him a portrait of Jean Baptiste Rousseau.

SAUVAGE, JOSEPH GRÉGOIRE, a Flemish miniature painter and enameller of the 18th century, who was painter to Duke Charles of Lorraine for seventeen years. On the death of his patron he was reduced to great poverty, and is said to have died in the hospital of St. Peter at Brussels.

SAUVAGE, PIAT JOSEPH, was born at Tournai in 1744, and studied at the Academy at Antwerp. He essayed several styles of painting, and finally adopted that of bas-relief, in which he became eminent. He settled for a considerable time in Paris, where his works were in high estimation. In 1808 he returned to his own city, where he taught in the Drawing School. His paintings in bas relief are to be seen in the museums of Tournai, Antwerp, Montargis, Montpellier, Montauban, Lille, and Toulouse. He imitated marbles and ancient terra-cottas with great success, and painted porcelain in enamel. Van Spaendonck occasionally added flowers in his pictures. He died at Tournai in 1818.

SAUVAGEOT, CHARLES THÉODORE, painter, born in Paris in 1826, was a pupil of Isabey. He exhibited landscape views of French scenery at the Salon from 1863 onwards, and died at Fontainebleau in 1883.

SAUVAGEOT, DENIS FRANÇOIS, painter, born in Paris in 1793, was a pupil of C. Bourgeois. He painted landscapes and interiors, and was an occasional exhibitor at the Salon from 1822 to 1831.

SAUVAGEOT, DESIRÉE CHARLOTTE (née GALLIOT), born in Paris in 1800, was a pupil of Bouchet. From 1819 to 1848 she exhibited portraits and genre pictures.

SAUVAN, PHILIPPE, painter and engraver, born at Ales in 1695, studied under Parocel and in Italy. He painted several altar-pieces in Arles, Aix, and Avignon; also portraits. His son PIERRE and his daughter GABRIELLE also painted. He died at Avignon in 1789. There are examples of his work in the Museum of Avignon.

SAUVÉ, JEAN, a French engraver of little note, who, according to Basan, flourished about the end of the 17th century. He engraved after Guido, P. da Cortona, &c., also some portraits.

SAUVÉ, JEAN JACQUES THÉODORE, a French engraver and lithographer, was born in Paris in 1792. He was a pupil of David, and has left some lithographs after heads by Raphael in the Vatican frescoes. He died in 1869.

SAVAGE, JOHN, an English engraver, who resided in the Old Bailey about 1680. He engraved the portraits of many convicted malefactors, also those of some who fell in a better cause, as Walpole puts it. Among his portraits we may name those of:

William III. and Queen Mary.
Bishop Latimer.
John Alasco.
Algernon Sidney.
Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll.
Henry Cornish, Sheriff of London.
Sir Edmundbury Godfrey.
John Gadbury, Astrologer.
James Fitzroy, Duke of Monmouth.

Sir Thomas Armstrong.
 Sir Henry Chauncey, Antiquary.
 Chief Justice Sir Henry Pollexfen.
 Arthur, Earl of Torrington.
 Charles Leigh, M.D.

He also engraved some of the plates for Tempest's 'Cries of London,' and Evelyn's 'Numismata.'

SAVAGE, WILLIAM, painter and engraver, was born about 1785. He studied in the Academy Schools, and published 'Practical Hints on Decorative Painting, with Illustrations engraved on wood and printed in colours by the type press.' London, 1822.

SAVALO, —, a skilful illuminator of the 12th century, practising at Arras about 1180. In the Library at Valenciennes there is a Gospel finely illuminated by him.

SAVART, PIERRE, French engraver, born in Paris in 1750. He produced several plates in the neat, finished style of Ficquet; among them the following portraits of illustrious Frenchmen :

Louis XIV.; after Rigaud. 1771.
 Louis de Bourbon, Prince de Condé; after Le Juste. 1776.
 Jean Baptiste Colbert; after P. de Champagne. 1773.
 J. B. La Bruyère; after St. Jean. 1778.
 Pierre Bayle; after the same. 1774.
 Jean Racine; after Santerre. 1772.
 Nicholas Boileau Despréaux; after Rigaud; an oval, 1769.
 Rahelais; after Sarrabat. 1767.
 Cardinal Richelieu; after P. de Champagne.
 Nicholas de Catinat, Maréchal de France.
 Comte de Buffon; after Drouais. 1776.
 Bossuet; after Rigaud. 1773.
 D'Alembert; after Catherine Lussurier. 1780.
 Montesquieu. 1779.

SAVARY, AUGUSTE, painter, born at Nantes in 1799, a pupil of Boissier. He exhibited many French landscapes at the Salon from 1824 to 1859.

SAVERY, JAKOB, the elder, born at Courtrai, practised at Amsterdam about 1550. He was the father of Jakob Savery the younger, and the master of Willem van Nieulant. He excelled in painting animals, birds, and fishes.

SAVERY, JAKOB, the younger, painter, was born at Courtrai about the year 1545, and was a disciple of Hans Bol. He painted landscapes and animals, which he finished with great labour and patience, though in a hard, dry style. He died of the plague at Amsterdam in 1602. At the Hague there is a 'Kermesse of St. Sebastian' by him.

SAVERY, JAN, a Flemish painter and engraver, born at Courtrai in 1597. According to Huber, he was the nephew of Roelandt Savery, and was probably his scholar, as he painted landscapes in a similar style. He died in 1655. We have several etchings by this artist, from his own designs, among which are the following :

A set of six mountainous Landscapes, with figures, inscribed J. Savery, fec. Nic. de Clerc. exc.
 A Landscape, with a Stag-hunt; J. Savery, fec. H. Hondius.
 A Landscape, with Samson killing a Lion; J. C. Visscher, exc.

SAVERY, ROELANDT, the son of Jakob Savery the elder, was born at Courtrai in 1576, and instructed by his brother, Jakob the younger. It has been supposed that he was afterwards a disciple of Paul Brill; but this cannot be reconciled with chronology, as that artist had left Flanders for Italy, where he passed the remainder of his life, before Savery was of an age to profit by his instruction. The resemblance of his style to that of Brill is not more apparent than to that of Brueghel, and other Flemish landscape painters of the time. Savery visited France in the reign of Henry IV., by whom he was employed in the royal palaces. Soon after his return to the Low Countries, he was invited to the court of Prague, by Rudolph II., in whose service he passed a great part of his life. By the direction of the Emperor he travelled through the Tyrol, where the scenery was entirely to his taste. The studies he made there were of great use in his later works. After the death of the Emperor, he settled at Utrecht, and died there in 1639. Works :

SAVERY, SOLOMON, (SAVRY,) a Dutch engraver, born at Amsterdam in 1594. From his having engraved a few English portraits, he is said to have visited this country, but it is not certain that he did so. The following are his principal plates :

Charles I. with a high-crowned hat, a view of Westminster in the back-ground.
 Oliver Cromwell. 1649.
 John Speed, the Historian.
 Thomas, Lord Fairfax.
 Christ driving the Money-changers out of the Temple; after Rembrandt.

SAVILLE, DOROTHEA, an English portrait painter. She practised in London in the first part of the 17th century. Some of her works were engraved by Hollar and Thomas Cross.

SAVOLDO, GIAN-GIROLAMO, was born about 1480, at Brescia. Very little is known of his life, but he is said to have pursued his profession for pleasure rather than for gain. He was at Venice in 1521, as he went there from Treviso to finish a painting for the altar of San Niccolò, which had been left unfinished by Fra Marco Pensabene. This picture represents an enthroned Virgin and Child with Saints. He was fond of introducing evening or night effects into pictures of a sacred character. According to Aretino, Savoldo was still living in 1548.

SAVOLINI, CRISTOFORO, painter, of the Bolognese school, a native of Cento, and a pupil of Cristoforo Serra. He painted a good picture of the patron saint for the church of S. Colombia, at Rimini. He was still living in 1678.

SAVONA, IL PRETE DI. See GUIDOBONO.

SAVONANZI, EMILIO, a nobleman of Bologna, born in 1580, who attached himself to painting when nearly arrived at manhood. He had many masters; among them Lodovico Carracci, Guido, Guercino, and Algardi, the sculptor. He resided at Ancona, and at Camerino, where he died in 1660. His principal work is 'The Marriage of St. Catharine' at Camerino.

SAVORELLI, GAETANO, painter and draughtsman, flourished at Rome from 1750 to 1775. He is chiefly known as having made drawings from Giovanni da Udine's grotteschi in the Loggia of the Vatican, from which Giovanni Ottaviani engraved.

SAVORELLI, SEBASTIANO, a priest of Forli and pupil of Cignani. He was practising in 1690, and painted for the churches of Forli and its neighbourhood.

SAVOYE, DANIEL, portrait painter and etcher, was born at Grenoble in 1644, and is said to have been a pupil of Sebastien Bourdon. His signature, D. S. sc., is found on a riposo, in which the Virgin is seated near a fountain attended by three angels. Some small etchings of soldiers, and of costumes of the time of Louis XIII., bear the same initials. In the Dresden Gallery there is a portrait of the artist's wife by himself. He died at Erlangen in 1716.

SAVOYEN, CAREL VAN, was born at Antwerp in 1619, and painted many subjects from Ovid in a small size; he was fond of painting the nude, but his drawing was not equal to his colour. He died at Antwerp in 1669 (? 1680).

SAXON, JAMES, portrait painter, a native of Manchester, exhibited at the Academy, 1795, and then went to Edinburgh; he returned in 1805 to London, but afterwards spent some prolific years in St. Petersburg. On his return he took up his residence at Glasgow, but finally came to London, where he died in 1816 or 1817. His portrait of Sir W. Scott, holding a large dog, has been engraved.

SAXTON, CHRISTOPHER, a native of Yorkshire and a domestic in the service of Thomas Sekeford, Esq., Master of Requests, is remembered for his complete set of maps of the counties of England and Wales, many of which he engraved himself, while in others he was assisted by R. Hogenberg, Augustine Ryther, and other engravers. Master Ryther bore the expense of the series, which was published in 1579, and dedicated to Queen Elizabeth.

SAY, WILLIAM, an eminent engraver in mezzotint, was born at Lakenham, near Norwich, in 1768. He was left an orphan at the age of five years, and was brought up by a maternal aunt. Although he showed an early inclination for art, he did not practise it as a profession till his arrival in London, when he had attained his twenty-first year, and was married. He put himself under the direction of James Ward, at that time chiefly an engraver, and under his instruction produced his first plate. He was indefatigable in the art, and in 1807 he was appointed engraver to the Duke of Gloucester. He engraved about 330 plates, a few after the old masters, but the majority after modern painters. Among them we may name the Dilettanti Society, after Sir J. Reynolds (2); several for Turner's River Scenery; sixteen plates for the 'Liber Studiorum'; two of 'Brigands,' after Eastlake; 'Joseph and his Brethren,' after Northcote; and Hilton's 'Raising of Lazarus.' Many of his plates remained unpublished at the time of his death, which occurred on the 24th of August, 1834. The British Museum possesses a complete set of his works.

SAYER, JAMES, a political caricaturist, was born at Yarmouth in 1748. He commenced life as a clerk in an attorney's office, but came to London in 1780. His works, which are about a hundred in number, were in favour of Pitt and against Fox, and it is said that the latter declared Sayer's pencil had done him more harm than all the attacks he had had to face in Parliament. Pitt gave him a clerkship in the Court of Exchequer, and in time he became Marshal of the Court, Receiver of the Sixpenny duties, and one of the Cursitors. On Pitt's death he published his 'Elijah's Mantle,' which was at one time ascribed to Canning. He died in London in 1823.

SAYTER. See SEUTER.

SAYVE, (or SAIVE), JEAN BAPTISTE DE, called JEAN DE NAMUR, from his birthplace. The earliest known works by him dated from the year 1576. He was for a time painter to the Municipality of his native town, which he left for Brussels, where, in 1590, he was painter to the Duke of Parma. Shortly afterwards he returned to Namur, and finally settled at Mechlin, where he was largely employed by the Guilds, and where he died in 1624. Works:

Mechlin.	Church of Notre Dame.	Martyrdom of S. Catharine.
"	Church of S. Rombaut.	David and Goliath.
"	"	Baptism of Christ.
Namur.	Cercle Arch'ologique.	The Judgment of Cambyses.
"	"	Portraits of the 'Echevins' ( Diptych ).

His son, JEAN BAPTISTE, also practised painting.

SAZJEPIN, NICOLAI KONSTANTINOWITCH, a Russian amateur of great promise, whose 'Nun in the Choir of a Church' excited much attention at Petersburg in 1853. He was the colonel of a Russian Engineer Battalion, and fell at the taking of Sebastopol, in 1855.

SBARBI, ANTONIO, a Cremonese painter, was first a scholar of Bernasconi at Milan, and afterwards studied at Bologna under Lorenzo Pasinelli. He was invited to Piacenza by the Duke Ranucci Farnese, for whom he painted many pictures. He distinguished himself by his representation of animals. He died at Milan early in the 18th century.

SBINKO DA TROTINA, a miniaturist of Prague in the 14th century.

SCABARI, NICCOLO, painter, born at Vicenza in 1735, painted in the style of the Bassani. His works are to be found in the churches of Vicenza, Padua, and Verona. He died in 1802.

SCACCIANI, CAMILLO, called CARBONE, an Italian painter of the Roman school, who flourished towards the close of the 18th century. He was a native of Pesaro, where there is a 'S. Andrea Avellino' by him in the Duomo.

SCACCIATI, ANDREA, an Italian designer and engraver, born at Florence about the year 1726, was a pupil of Schweykhart. In 1766 he published, jointly with Stefano Mulinari, a set of forty-one plates in aquatint, from drawings by distinguished masters in the collection of the Uffizi.

SCACCIATI, ANDREA, was born at Florence in 1642, and was first a scholar of Mario Balassi, but he afterwards studied under Lorenzo Lippi. He painted animals, flowers, and fruit, and was patronized by the Grand Duke of Tuscany. He was still living at Florence in 1704.

SCAGLIA, GIROLAMO, a native of Lucca and painter of the Florentine school, was sometimes called Il Parmigianino. In 1672 he was at work in Pisa.

SCAIARIO, ANTONIO, a painter of Bassano, one of the later disciples of the school of the Bassani, was the pupil and son-in-law of Giambattista da Ponte. In allusion to his birth and training, he occasionally signed his works Antonio da Ponte, and Antonio Bassano. He died in 1640.

SCALABRINO, LO, a scholar of Sodoma, showed great poetical invention in painting grotesche. As a disciple of Bazzi he would rank among the Sieneſe painters; but he was accustomed to ſign himſelf Scalabrino Pistorienſis, ſo that Pistoja ſeems to have been his birthplace.

SCALBERG, PIERRE, a French painter and engraver, who reſided in Paris about the year 1638. Of his work as a painter little is known, but he has left a few etchings, ſome from his own deſigns, others from well-known pictures, e. g. :

Venus and Cupid; ſigned and dated. 1638.

The Entombment of Chriſt; after Raphael.

The Battle of Conſtantine; after the ſame.

Diana and her Nymphs; after Domenichino.

Robert-Dumesnil, tom. iii., has aſcribed forty-ſeven prints to Scalberg, who is ſaid to have worked as late as 1650.

SCALBERGE, (or SCALE BERGE,) FREDERIC, a Flemiſh engraver, who flouriſhed from 1623 to 1636, as appears by the dates on his plates. This engraver, who ſigned hiſ name ſometimes Scalberge, and ſometimes Scalle Berge, muſt not be confounded with Pierre Scalberg.

SCALIGERI, BAROLO, a native of Padua, was born about 1605, but ſettled at Venice, and was a ſcholar of Alessandro Varotari. Several altar-pieces by him are ſtill preſerved in Venice, among which that in the church of Corpus Domini is perhaps the beſt. The date of hiſ deceaſe is not recorded.

SCALIGERI, LUCIA, niece of Bartolo Scaligeri, was born at Venice in 1637. She diſtinguiſhed herſelf by literary and linguistic powers, and was an excellent muſician. In art ſhe was a pupil of Alessandro Varotari, and painted ſeveral pictures for the churches of Venice. She died in 1700.

SCALVATI, ANTONIO, painter, was born at Bologna in 1599, and was a ſcholar of Tommaſo Lauretti. He accompanied hiſ maſter to Rome, and aſſiſted him in the Sala di Conſtantino. Scalvati was employed by Sixtus V. in the library of the Vatican, and excelled in portraiture, painting Pope Clement VIII., and many perſonages of hiſ time. He died in 1622.

SCAMINOSSI, (SCHIAMONOSI, SCIAMINOSSI,) RAPHAEL, a native of Borgo S. Sepolcro, born about 1570, was a ſcholar of Raffaellino dal Colle. He painted hiſtory with ſucceſs, but is more known as an engraver than as a painter. He ſometimes uſed a monogram composed of the letters R. A. S. F. thus RAF. He was ſtill living in 1620. Among hiſ plates we may name :

The Virgin and Child; inſcribed Raphael Schaminossius Pictor, &c. 1613.

St. Francis preaching in the Deſert; alſo from hiſ own deſign. 1604.

A ſet of fourteen plates entitled Mysteria roſarii Beate Mariæ Virginis. 1609.

The Sibyls; a ſet of upright plates; from hiſ own deſigns.

The Stoning of Stephen; after Luca Cambiaſo.

A Riposo; after Federigo Barocci.

SCANDRETT, THOMAS, architectural draughtſman, born at Worceſter in 1797. In 1825 he exhibited two portraits at the Academy, and was an occaſional exhibitor of architectural drawings. He died in 1870.

SCANNABECCHI, FILIPPO, called LIppo DI DALMASIO, and alſo LIppo DALLE MADONNE, from the numerous pictures he painted of the Virgin and Child, was one of the earlieſt painters of the Bologneſe ſchool. He was the ſon of DALMASIO SCANNABECCHI, who painted at Bologna early in the 14th century. There is an example of hiſ art in the gallery at Bologna. Lippo is ſaid to have been a pupil of Vitale da Bologna, and to have practiſed from 1376 to 1410. Hiſ pictures are now exceedingly ſcarce, though Malvaſia ſays that a family uſed not to be conſidered wealthy at Bologna unleſs it poſſeſſed one of hiſ Madonnas. The dates of hiſ birth and death are alike unknown, but he made hiſ will in 1410. In the National Gallery, London, there is a 'Madonna and Child in Glory,' ſigned Lippus Dalmaſii pinxit. It is a very poor production.

SCANNABECCHI, TERESA. See MURATORI.

SCANNARDI D'AVERARA, a painter practiſing at Bergamo towards the cloſe of the 15th century. No record of hiſ life and works has ſurvived, but we learn from an ancient deed preſerved at Bergamo, that in 1477 he was working as partner with Troſo da Monza. Meſſrs. Crowe and Cavalcaſelle ſuggeſt that the fragments of freſcoes detached from the ruins of Santa Maria delle Grazie, and deposited in the Biſhop's palace at Bergamo, may have been a product of hiſ collaboration.

SCANNAVINI, M. AURELIS, (SCANNAVESI,) was born at Ferrara in 1655. He was firſt a ſcholar of Francesco Ferrari but afterwards viſited Bologna, where he ſtudied for ſome time under Carlo Cignani, of whom he became one of the moſt diſtinguiſhed diſciples. Hiſ moſt conſiderable work is in the refectory of the Dominicans, at Ferrara. It repreſents the Life of St. Dominic, in fourteen pictures. There are many pictures by Scannavini in the churches at Ferrara, among others the 'Annunciation,' in the church of S. Stefano; 'S. Tommaſo di Villanova diſtributing Alms to the Poor,' at the Agostiniani Scalzi; and 'S. Brigida fainting before a Crucifix, ſupported by an Angel,' in S. Maria della Grazie. He died at Ferrara in 1698.

SCARAMUCCIA, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, a painter of Perugia, born 1580, was a pupil of Roncalli, but imitated the manner of the Carracci, and painted a large number of pictures for churches in Perugia, where they ſtill exiſt. They are now very dark.

SCARAMUCCIA, LUIGI PELLEGRINI, called IL PERUGINO, was born at Perugia in 1616. He was the ſon of Giovanni Antonio Scaramuccia, by whom he was inſtructed in the elements of deſign; but he afterwards frequented the ſchool of Guido, and is ſaid to have alſo ſtudied under Guercino. He painted ſeveral pictures for the public edifices of Perugia, Milan, and Bologna. He died at Milan in 1680. Works :

Bologna. Pal. Pubblico. Coronation of Charles V.

Milan. Ch. of San Marco. St. Barbara.

Perugia. Ch. of the Filippini. } The Preſentation in the Temple.

We have a few etchings by this artiſt, in which he ſeems to have imitated Guido. They are :

Chriſt crowned with Thorns; after Titian.

St. Benedict praying; after Lod. Carracci.

Venus and Adonis; after An. Carracci.

The Virgin; after the ſame.

SCARPACCIA. See CARPACCIO, VITTORE.

SCARSELLA, IPPOLITO, called Lo SCARSELLINO, painter, was born at Ferrara in the year 1551. He was the ſon of Sigismondo Scarsella, from whom he received hiſ firſt inſtruction, but he afterwards visited Venice, where he became the scholar of Giacomo Bassano, and studied the works of Paolo Veronese. From Venice he went to Bologna, and afterwards to Parma. On his return to Ferrara, he was employed in painting pictures for the churches, and there is scarcely a public building in the city which does not possess some of his works. Scarsellino died at Ferrara in 1620. Pictures :

Dresden.	Gallery.	Flight into Egypt.
"	"	The Virgin and Child.
Ferrara. S. Maria Nuova.	"	The Annunciation.
"	"	The Visitation.
"	"	The Assumption.

Madrid.	Museum.	Virgin and Child.

SCARSELLA, SIGISMONDO, called MONDINO, painter, was born at Ferrara in 1530, and was educated for three years in the school of Paolo Veronese, of whose style he was a constant, though not a very successful, follower. There are many works by him in the public edifices at Ferrara, in which city he died in 1614. His chief picture is the 'Martyrdom of St. Catharine' in the Costabili.

SCARSELLO, GIROLAMO, painter and engraver, a Bolognese, and pupil of Gessi, was practising about 1660. He worked for a time at Milan, and subsequently at Turin, about 1670.

SCHAAL, LOUIS JACQUES NICOLAS, painter and engraver, was born in Paris, February 13, 1800. He was a pupil of Daguerre and of Lethière, and entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1816. He exhibited frequently at the Salon between 1824 and 1853, and was also the author of various treatises on industrial art and design, of a 'Treatise on Landscape,' illustrated with twenty-four lithographs (1824), and of a 'Project for the Regeneration of the Western Empire by means of the Fine Arts,' with eight engravings (1859).

SCHACHMANN, KARL ADOLPH GOTTLIEB, (GOTTLÖB, GOTTFRIED,) FREIHERR VON, painter and etcher, was born at the Schloss Hermsdorf in Saxony, and travelled much in Norway and Sweden. His pictures are to be found in Saxony. He died on the estate of Königshayn in 1789.

SCHADE, RUDOLPH CHRISTIAN, draughtsman and painter, born at Hamburg about 1760, studied successively under Tischbein, Ehrenreich, and Jucl of Copenhagen, and practised portrait-painting at Berlin, Dresden, and Hamburg. Many of his portraits have been engraved. He died at Hamburg on May 16, 1811.

SCHADOW, WILHELM FRIEDRICH VON, son of Johann Gottfried Schadow, the architect, was born at Berlin in 1789. He studied under his father and Weitsch, and later under Schirm. In 1810 he went with his brother Rudolph to Rome, and joined the 'Nazarenes,' and in 1814 became a Roman Catholic. In 1819 he became a Professor in the Academy at Berlin, and acquired great reputation as a teacher. In 1826 he was appointed to succeed Peter von Cornelius as Director of the Düsseldorf Academy, whither his pupils, J. Hübner, Hildebrandt, Sohn, and K. F. Lessing, accompanied him. He successfully reorganized the Academy, and in 1829 founded the Art Union of Westphalia. From 1836 onwards he was the object of many attacks, being accused of professional intolerance, and of favouring religious art to the exclusion of other genres. In 1840 he revisited Rome on account of his health, and in 1859 he resigned his position. Gifted with more taste than originality, and with more technical power than poetic sentiment, he paid great attention to the finish of his pictures. His portraits are among his best works. In 1842 he was created honorary Doctor of Philosophy of the University of Bonn, and in 1843 he was ennobled. He was a Member of the Berlin Academy, and of the Institute of France. While engaged on his last work he was attacked by amaurosis and became blind. In spite of a successful operation he painted no more. He died at Düsseldorf in 1862. His principal works are :

Ansbach.	Cathedral.	A Christ.
Berlin.	Nat. Gallery.	Christ on the Road to Emmaus.
"	"	Half-length portrait of a Woman.
"	"	Portrait group of Thorwaldsen, Wilhelm, and Rudolf Schadow.
"	Theatre.	A Bacchanal.
"	The Werder Church.	The Four Evangelists.
Dülmen, Westphalia.	Parish Church.	Mater Dolorosa.
Frankfort.	Museum.	The Wise and Foolish Virgins.
Hanover.	Market Church.	Christ on the Mount of Olives.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	The Holy Family.
Rome.	Casa Bartoldi.	Joseph's Bloody Coat. ( Fresco ) Joseph in Prison. ( Do. )
"	"	Heaven, Purgatory, and Hell, an allegory ; his last work.

SCHAEKEN, WILHELMUS, painter, born at Weerd in 1754, was a pupil of Borrekens, and the master of van Bree. He spent two years in Italy after a previous sojourn of twelve years in Antwerp. His principal pictures are a 'Virgin,' and a 'Dead Christ lying in the Grave.' He died at Antwerp in 1830.

SCHAERER, H. L., engraved several small landscapes, which he marked either with this cypher, JS., or with his name, thus, H. L.

Schaerer sculp. On a few plates he gives the initials of his Christian names as A. L. His chief prints are copies of Sachtleven and J. Saenredam.

SCHÄFFER, ADALBERT, painter, born at Gross Karoly in Hungary in 1815, received his education in Vienna, and painted still-life, silver-plate, wine-glasses, &c. He died at Düsseldorf in 1871.

SCHÄFFER, EUGEN EDUARD, engraver, born at Frankfort in 1802, entered the Städel Institute, where he studied under Ulmer. He afterwards worked at Munich and Düsseldorf. Under Cornelius, he engraved his Dante's 'Paradise,' and the portrait of Niebuhr. In 1826 he returned to Munich, and in 1839 was appointed teacher of engraving at the Sädcl Institute. In 1844 he went to Florence and engraved the 'Madonna della Sedia.' Between 1852 and 1856 he was in Rome, but returned to Frankfort, where he died in 1871. Of his plates we may name :

The Madonna della Sedia ; after Raphael.
The Madonna del Gran Duca ; after the same.
The Lower World ; after Cornelius.
The Judgment of Paris ; after the same.
Romeo and Juliet ; after the same.
The Rape of Helen ; after the same.
Two scenes from Shakespeare's 'Tempest' ; after Kaulbach.
Euphrosyne ; after Steinle.
Geneviève ; after Steinbrück.
The Erl König ; after Neher.

The Introduction of Christianity; after Veit.
Poetry; after Raphael (left unfinished).
Madonna di Terranuova; after the same (ditto).
Sacred and Profane Love; after Titian (ditto).

SCHAFFNABURGENSIS, MATTHÄUS, an engraver on wood, who executed the cuts for a Bible, printed at Wittenberg in 1545. He marked his prints with the initials M. S. on a tablet. By some he has been supposed to be identical with MATTHÄUS GRÜNEWALD.

SCHAFFNER, MARTIN, a painter of Ulm, who flourished in that city, as appears by the records from 1508 to 1535. He painted historical subjects and portraits, and ranks among the good German masters of the period. Some of his best pictures are in the gallery at Schleissheim. His figures are noble, yet delicate, full of feeling and expression in the heads, but somewhat defective in colour. Several of his marks and dates are given by Brulliot. His monogram is an M with an S imposed on it, or the letters MSMZV, interpreted Martin Schaffner Mahler zu Ulm, as on the 'Adoration of the Magi,' formerly in the Wallerstein collection, but now in that of the King of Bavaria. His dates are said to range from 1490 to 1521. Schaffner's works were formerly attributed to Martin Schongauer, on account of the monogram MS. Chief works:

Augsburg, Schleissheim.	} Scenes from the Passion.
Londou. Buckingham Palace.
Munich.	} Child Christ learning to walk.
" "
" "	} The Annunciation.
" "
" "	} The Presentation in the Temple.

Vienna. Gallery.
	} Saints and the families of Christ's ancestry. Several Pictures.

SCHÄFLER, (SCHÄFFLER, SCHEFFLER,) CHRISTOPH THOMAS, painter, was born at Augsburg about 1700. He was of the Roman Catholic faith, and became for a time a lay-brother of the Order of Jesus, but returned to a secular life. He painted in oil and in fresco many pictures for churches, amongst which we may mention his 'Death of St. Benedict,' in the church formerly belonging to the Convent at Ettal; and works in the monastery of S. Ulrich at Augsburg, in the Capuchin church at Eichstädt, in the old chapel at Ratisbon, and in the "Congregations-Saal" at Ingolstadt. He made many designs for book illustrations. He died at Augsburg in 1756.

SCHAGEN, GILLIS VAN, a Dutch painter, born at Alkmaar in 1616. He was first instructed in art by Solomon van Ravestein, but was afterwards a scholar of Pieter Verbeeck. When he was twenty-one years of age he went to Dantzic, where he resided some time, and painted pictures of Dutch kitchens and conversations in imitation of the style of Ostade. He also painted portraits with success, both at Dantzic and Elbing; among them was a portrait of Stanislaus, King of Poland. After an absence of three years, he returned to Holland, but his restless disposition led him to visit France, where he was employed in copying the works of the best Italian and Flemish painters, for which he possessed a particular talent. On his return to Alkmaar he painted a picture of Admiral van Tromp's victory over the Spanish fleet. He has left one etching, a cottage scene, with an old man. There is a picture ascribed to him in the Bridgewater Gallery. Died at Alkmaar in 1668.

SCHÄUFELIN, HANS, the son of Hans Leonhard Schäuflin, left Nördlingen in 1542, and settled in Freiburg. To Hans are now attributed many of the weaker works formerly assigned to the father. He died in 1582.

SCHÄUFELIN, HANS LEONHARD, (SCHEUFFELIN, SCHAUFFELEN, SCHEFFELIN,) born at Nuremberg in 1490, was the pupil of Albrecht Dürer, of whose style he caught many of the beauties. He had a rich imagination, much true feeling, an intelligent appreciation of drapery, and much taste in execution. In 1537 he designed two wood-engravings for Ulrich Pindter's 'Speculum passionis.' He also drew the illustrations to the 'Theuerdanck' of the Emperor Maximilian, and made twenty designs for a 'Hochzeitanz.' In 1515 he was made burgher of the town of Nördlingen, and, on visiting Nuremberg, was recalled to Nördlingen by the magistrates. He died at Nuremberg in 1540. Of his works we may name:

The Siege of Bethulia; a fresco in the Town-hall of Nördlingen.
A Last Supper; in Ulm Cathedral.
The Dead Christ; in the Cathedral at Nuremberg.
A Descent from the Cross; in St. George's Church, Nuremberg.
Coronation of the Virgin (in 16 panels, with 291 figures); in the Church at Anhausen.
Death of the Virgin; in Munich Pinakothek.
The Virgin dying receives a Palm of Victory from an Angel; in the same.
The Coronation of the Virgin; in the same.
Christ on the Sea of Galilee saving St. Peter; in the same.
Christ crowned with Thorns; in the same.
Christ on the Cross; in the same.
Christ on the Mount of Olives; in the same.
The Visitation; National Gallery, Dublin.
The Last Supper; Berlin Museum.
Noli me Tangere; Cassel Gallery.
Portrait in the possession of the Duke of Northumberland.

Schäuflin did not etch himself. He frequently marked his works with a monogram composed of his initials and a shovel, a rebus on his name.

SCHALCH, JOHANN JACOB, a landscape painter, was born at Schaffhausen in 1723, and was a scholar of Schnaezler, and of an artist of the name of Hamilton, at Augsburg. He visited Holland and England, and died in 1770.

SCHALCKE. See VAN DER SCHALCKE.

SCHALCKEN, GODFRIED, was born at Dordrecht in 1643. His father was rector of the college at Dordrecht, and desired to bring him up to literary pursuits, but becoming alive to the boy's disposition for painting, he placed him in the studio of Samuel van Hoogstraten, whence he migrated to that of Gerard Douw, under whom he acquired delicacy of finish and some skill in light and shade. He remained with Douw until he had established a certain reputation by painting small pictures of domestic scenes, chiefly candle-lights. He afterwards attempted to expand his style by the study of Rembrandt, but soon returned to his early manner.

To give the most natural effect to his candle-light pieces, he is said to have adopted the following system; he placed the object he intended to paint in a dark room, with a candle, and looking through a small hole, painted by day what he saw by candle-light. His small portraits were very popular, and he had painted the principal families at Dordrecht, when he was encouraged, by the extraordinary success of Kneller, to visit England. Here, however, his success was small. There was no room for him. His manners, too, were against him, and many stories of his boorishness are told by the old writers. On his return to Holland he settled at the Hague, where he continued to practise his art with success, until his death in 1706. The chief merit of Schalcken consists in the neatness of his finishing, and the perfect intelligence of his chiaro-scuro. His touch is mellow, but too fused, and his colour warm and golden. Works:

His sister and pupil, MARIA, practised at Dordrecht.

SCHALCKEN, JAKOB, nephew and pupil of Godfried Schalcken, painted in the same style, so that his works have been mistaken for those of his uncle.

SCHALK, HEINRICH, a miniature painter of some repute, born at Frankfort in 1792, died at Carlsruhe in 1834.

SCHALL, JOSEPH, draughtsman and miniaturist, was practising at Breslau from 1810 to 1820. He worked principally in Indian ink, chalk, and pen and ink.

SCHALLER, ANTON, an elder brother of Johann Nepomuk Schaller, the sculptor, was born at Vienna in 1772. He was for some time a painter on porcelain, but afterwards took to oil, and became professor of anatomy in the Academy at Vienna. He painted good miniature portraits. He died at Vienna in 1844.

SCHALLER, EDUARD, painter, son of Anton Schaller, was born at Vienna in 1802, and attended the Academy in that city. He travelled much, but was domiciled at Vienna, where he died in 1848.

SCHALLHAS, CARL PHILIPP, landscape painter and engraver, born in Presburg in 1767, was a pupil at the Vienna Academy, of which, in 1792, he was appointed professor of landscape painting. He died at Vienna in 1797.

SCHALTZ, DANIEL, a German painter and engraver, born at Dantzic, died in 1686. He excelled in portraits, and in the painting of animals.

SCHAPPE, JORG, according to Heineken, executed the cuts for a block-book on Chiromancy by Hartlieb, with the date 1448 upon it. In his 'Idea for a complete Collection of Prints,' Heineken has given a copy of one of these cuts, and nothing could be more rude. The name of the engraver was inscribed on one of the leaves, at the bottom, Jorg Schapff in Augsburg. Zani says he was still at work in 1473.

SHAPPER, (or SHAPER,) JOHANN, a German painter, native of Harburg, who settled in 1640 at Nuremberg, where he devoted himself principally to painting upon glass, ornamenting goblets, jugs, and bowls with small landscapes, battle-scenes, or coats-of-arms, which he executed with much delicacy and finish. Examples are to be seen in the collections of Berlin and Dresden. He died at Nuremberg in 1670.

SCHARER, JOHANN JAKOB, born at Schaffhausen in 1676, was a portrait painter, who practised also as an architect and modeller. He died in 1746.

SCHARF, GEORGE, senior, was born in 1788 at Mainburg, near Munich, and was the first successful practitioner of lithography in England. He studied in Paris and Antwerp. In 1815 he was attached to the British army throughout the Waterloo campaign, and in 1816 came to London. There he was soon largely engaged in making drawings for scientific works, and for the Transactions of the Geological Society. His travels in Belgium and France also afforded subjects for several drawings, and he painted pictures of a 'Sitting of Parliament' and 'The Lord Mayor's Banquet.' Scharf became a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours in 1834, but resigned two years later. There is a drawing of the Society's gallery in Bond Street, by him, at South Kensington. He was the father of Mr. George Scharf, C.B., Director of the National Portrait Gallery. Scharf died in London in 1860.

SCHARF, JOHANN, born at Vienna, July 13th, 1722, was a botanical draughtsman and painter of great talent, who began life as a scullery boy in a convent. His taste for design manifesting itself, he managed to obtain work as a painter of wall-papers. In this position he attracted the attention of the botanist Jacquin, who took him into his service as a flower-painter. His unceasing application so injured his health that he fell into a consumption, of which he died at Vienna, October 5th, 1794.

SCHARNAGEL, FRANZ SEBASTIAN, painter, born at Bamberg in 1791, was a pupil of Sensburg, and afterwards of Geibel and Dorn. In 1811 he painted at the Academy of Munich, but returned to Bamberg in 1815, and died there in 1831. His chief work is the 'Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew.'

SCHATEN, HUBERT, an engraver who resided at Copenhagen, and engraved several portraits during the latter half of the 17th century, between 1675 and 1694.

SCHATTENHOFER, AMALIE VON, née BAADER, born at Erding, in Bavaria, in 1763, was a pupil of Dörner, in Munich, where she settled as a painter in crayons. She also etched. She died at Munich in 1840.

SCHAUBROEK, PIETER, (SCHOEBOEK,) painter, born at Antwerp in 1542, was a pupil and imitator of Jan Brueghel. He died at Antwerp in 1605.

SCHAUFUS, a German painter and etcher, who flourished at Dresden in the 18th century. He was a pupil of J. E. Schönan, and painted miniatures. He also engraved some plates after Vandyck, Mengs, and Solimena.

SCHAUR, PHILIP. This name is appended to an etching of a bearded old man in spectacles, mending a pen, with an hour-glass and books before him.

SCHEBOUYEFF, WASSILY KOUSMITSCH, painter, born at Cronstadt, in 1777, was a pupil of the St. Petersburg Academy. In 1803 he went to Rome, where he painted a 'Decapitation of John the Baptist.' In 1807 he returned to St. Petersburg, and became Professor of Historical Painting, and afterwards Director, of the St. Petersburg Academy. His 'St. Basil the Great,' 'St. Gregory,' and 'St. John Chrysostom,' are in the cathedral at Kasan; his 'St. John in the Wilderness,' 'Assumption of the Virgin,' and 'The Patriot Igolkin,' in the Hermitage. He died in 1855.

SCHEDLER, JOHANN GEORG, (SCHAEDLER,) painter and etcher, was born at Constance in 1777. He devoted himself first to miniature painting, but afterwards took to landscapes in gouache. He settled at Innsbruck, where he died in 1845.

SCHERES, HENDRIK JAN, an obscure Dutch painter, the pupil of Van Hove, was born at the Hague in 1829, and died in 1864.

SCHIEFFER, ARNOLD, the son of Henri Scheffer, was born in Paris, and studied under his father and Picot. From 1859 to 1870 he exhibited occasionally at the Salon, chiefly scenes from French history. In the Museum at Besançon there is a 'Funeral Procession in honour of the Duke of Guise,' by him. He died during a visit to Venice, in 1873, while still young.

SCHIEFFER, ARY, painter, born at Dordrecht on the 12th February, 1795, was the son of Johann Baptist Scheffer, an artist of German extraction, settled in Holland, and practising as court-painter at Amsterdam; and of his wife, CORNELIA LAMME, of Dordrecht, also an artist. Ary and his brother Hendrik received their first instruction from their father, and Ary is said to have shown a precocious talent, and to have exhibited a picture when only twelve years old. In 1810 he sent a portrait to the Amsterdam Exhibition. In the following year his father died, and Cornelia Scheffer, a woman of much energy and strength of character, resolved to take her three sons to Paris to complete their education. Settling in the French capital, she placed both Ary and Hendrik with Pierre Guérin as pupils; and in 1816 Ary gained the chief prize for painting at Antwerp, the subject of his picture being 'Abraham and the Three Angels.' Ary soon began to be favourably known in Paris as an industrious painter of small genre pictures, of which his 'Soldier's Widow,' 'Sailor's Family,' 'Sister of Mercy,' 'Orphans in the Churchyard,' are examples. These became widely popular by means of lithographs. A few more ambitious works dating from this early period are: 'Death of St. Louis' (1817), 'Socrates and Alcibiades' (1818), 'The Surrender of the Burghers of Calais' (1819). The year 1822 was a marked one in his career, his reputation being greatly enhanced by a picture then exhibited, 'The Shades of Francesca da Rimini and her Lover appearing to Dante and Virgil;' and in this same year he painted the 'St. Louis visiting his plagne-stricken Soldiers,' for the church of St. François d'Assise, in Paris.

His early works, though painted in the French manner, show a strong leaning towards the pathetic and emotional vein which was the characteristic note of his mature art. In his second period Ary Scheffer sought inspiration from the greater poets and from the Scriptures. Typical examples in both styles are the 'Beatrice' and 'Francesca da Rimini,' exhibited at the Salon of 1835; and the 'Christ bearing His Cross,' 'Christ the Consoler,' and 'Ruth and Naomi.' Like David, Scheffer combined with his artistic pursuits an enthusiastic interest in politics, and was a warm partisan of the Orleans family. Introduced to them by Gérard in 1826, he became drawing-master to the children of Louis Philippe, and his professional relations with them soon developed into an affectionate intimacy, the Princess Marie in particular being greatly attached to him. In 1830, when the events of the Revolution placed Louis Philippe on the throne, Scheffer rode to Neuilly in company with Thiers to tell the Prince he was king. Faithful to him in misfortune, Scheffer was also with him when the outbreak of 1848 forced him from the Tuileries.

A journey through the Netherlands in 1829 to study Rembrandt and the Flemish masters had a certain influence upon Scheffer's later manner. To this belong the works suggested by Goethe's 'Faust,' and many others inspired by the poems of Byron, Bürger, Schiller, Dante, &c. For the historical gallery at Versailles he painted several pictures, which will be found mentioned below. At the death, in 1839, of his mother, to whom he was greatly attached, he made his first and only essay in sculpture. Desiring that no other than himself should undertake the monument to her memory, he designed and carried out in marble a full-length figure for her tomb, but the result is interesting only as evidence of filial affection.

Scheffer, who was an officer of the Legion of Honour, commanded a battalion of the National Guard during the disturbances of June, 1848, and his services were recognized by an offer of the cross of a commander, which, however, he declined. His political activity brought him into contact with all opinions and classes, and he is said to have been a man of much culture and intelligence, and of great kindness and benevolence of disposition. His open-handed generosity prevented him from amassing a fortune, and in spite of the large sums which he received for some of his pictures, at his death he left no savings. In his political career he was singularly sincere and upright in conviction and aims. As an artist he cannot be said to take a high rank, though few modern painters have enjoyed a greater degree of present popularity. His drawing is correct, and his taste refined and elevated, but his merit lies rather in poetry of sentiment and in a certain devotional fervour, than in individuality of treatment or artistic handling, while as a colourist his shortcomings are very marked. He died at Argenteuil, near Paris, on the 15th June, 1858. The following are among the better examples of his work :

SCHAEFFER, HENDRIK, painter, brother of Ary Scheffer, born at the Hague in 1798, was also a pupil of Guérin. He was not without merit, though far behind his brother. His drawing was incorrect, and his colour cold. His principal work was a 'Charlotte Corday,' and we may also mention :

An Inundation in Rome.	Joan of Arc.
Hermann and Dorothea.	Madame Roland.
Preaching after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes.
The Battle of Monte Cassel. ( Versailles. )

He died in Paris in 1861.

SCHAEFFER, JOHANN BAPTIST, painter and etcher, born at Cassel in 1773, a pupil of Tischbein, went early to Holland, where at Dort he married Cornelia Lamme and became the father of Ary Scheffer. He produced several large historical works, and some portraits; among the latter that of King Louis of Holland. He died at Amsterdam in 1809.

SCHAEFFER VON LEONHARDSHOFF, JOHANN EVANGELIST, painter, born at Vienna in 1795, became a pupil of the Academy. His talents, however, attracted the attention of the Graf Franz von Salm-Reifferscheidt, prince-bishop of Gurk, who supplied him with the means to go to Italy. In 1817 he painted the portrait of Pope Pius VII., who created him a Knight of the Order of Christ. On his return to Vienna he painted a 'St. Cecilia' for Prince Albert of Sachsen-Teschen, and then returned to Rome. There he produced his masterpiece, 'The Dying Cecilia,' supported by two Angels,' now in the Vienna Gallery. He died at Vienna in 1822.

SCHAEFFER, JEAN GABRIEL, painter, born at Geneva in 1797, was a pupil of Regnault, and practised for many years in Paris, exhibiting occasionally at the Salon. Among his works there shown were: 'The Good Samaritan,' 'Woman of Albano,' 'Conjugating the Verb to Love' (in ten tableaux). He also published a number of lithographs, forming various series, under the following names: 'Les Griseites,' 'Ce qu'on dit et ce qu'on pense,' 'Le Diable Boiteux à Paris.' He last appeared at the Salon in 1846.

SCHAEFFER, PAUL, a German painter, who is mentioned by De' Domenici as having painted pictures for the church of San Severino at Naples, in 1560.

SCHAEFFERS, N., a Dutch historical painter, born at Utrecht. He came to England when still young to practise his art, and had at first to submit to much disappointment and hardship. Later he gained the notice of the painter Verrio, who employed him as his assistant.

SCHAEFFLER. See SCHÄFLER.

SCHIEGA, FRANZ ANDREAS, die-cutter and engraver, is better known by his medals and portraits in relief than by his pictures. He was born at Neustädt in Carniola in 1710. The son of a gun-maker, he for a time followed his father's trade, in which he gave evidence of artistic talent by the skill with which he engraved his guns. Late in life he painted portraits in pastel, some of which he himself engraved. He became blind in 1780, and died at Munich on Dec. 6, 1787.

SCHIEGGIA. See GUIDI, TOMMASO.

SCHIEB, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, painter, born at Worms in 1737, was a pupil of Seekatz, whose style he copied. After travelling through France, he settled at Hamburg. He painted small pictures in oils and water-colours, principally fire effects. He died in the workhouse at Hamburg in 1810.

SCHIEINDEL. See SCHEYNDEL.

SCHIEINS, KARL LUDWIG, painter, was born at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1808. He studied at Düsseldorf under Schirner, and painted mostly woodland and mountain scenes. He died at Düsseldorf in 1879.

SCHIEITZ, ANDREAS, (SCHEUTZ,) son of Matthias Scheitz, painter and etcher, was born at Hamburg in 1665. He followed the style of his father. He was painter to the Court of Hanover, where he died.

SCHIEITZ, MATTHIAS, was born at Hamburg about the year 1645, and was a follower of Philips Wouwerman, whose style he afterwards abandoned for that of David Teniers. He designed a series of Scriptural illustrations, which were engraved by J. de Visscher and others, and published at Luneburg in 1672. He died about 1700. He etched fourteen plates from his own designs, in a bold, free style, among which the following may be named :

The Four Seasons, symbolized by the Sports of Children; in four plates; M. Scheitz, fec. 1671.

Two Landscapes, with figures dancing.

An old Man playing on the Violin, and a Woman singing before the door of a Cottage.

The Spectacle Merchant.

There are pictures by him at Pommersfeld, Schwerin, Brunswick, and Cassel.

SCHL, SEBASTIAN, a German painter, of the school of Dürer. Amongst his works was the decoration of the 'Paradise Hall,' in the royal palace at Innsbruck. An altar-piece by him in the same city bears the following inscription: "Sebastian Schel, painter of Innsbruck, made this picture by the help of God." He died in 1554.

SCHELDE. See VAN DER SCHELDE.

SCHELFHOUT, ANDREAS, landscape painter, born at the Hague in 1787, received his first instruction from the scene painter Breckenheymer, and in 1815, with his 'Winter Landscape' now in the Amsterdam Museum, first made himself a name. He painted the natural scenery of Holland, and his works are numerous. He was a Member of the Academies of Amsterdam, Brussels, Ghent, and the Hague. He died at the Hague in 1870. The Amsterdam Museum possesses a large collection of his works.

SCHELLENBERG, JOHANN RUDOLPH, a Swiss designer and engraver, born at Basle in 1740. He was the son of J. U. Schellenberg. Among other plates, he engraved several for Lavater, and from the designs of Chodowiecki; also some of the portraits and ornamental prints for the 'Lives of the Swiss Painters,' by J. C. Fuessli. He also engraved a large number of plates for works on entomology. He died at Töss near Winterthur in 1806.

SCHELLENBERG, JOHANN ULRICH, born at Winterthur in 1709, was a pupil first of a house-painter and then of Huber in Berne. He superintended a Drawing-school in Winterthur and painted portraits and landscapes. He was the master of Anton Graff. He died at Winterthur in 1770.

SCHELLENBERGER, JOHANN JACOB, a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1660. He engraved some of the plates for Priorato's 'History of the Emperor Leopold.' He was living in 1674.

SCHELLINCKS, DANIEL, the brother of Willem Schellincks, was born at Amsterdam in 1638 (?), and painted landscapes and seaports with some success. He died in 1701. Several good chalk drawings by him are to be seen in the Albertina Collection, Vienna.

SCHELLINCKS, WILLEM, (SCHELLINGS, SCHELLINKS,) was born at Amsterdam in 1632, and, from the style of his pictures, is supposed to have been a scholar of Jan Lingelbach. He travelled through England, France, Switzerland, and Italy. He painted landscapes and sea-ports, with figures. The sunny effect in some of his pictures reminds us of Karel du Jardin; his animals are well drawn, and his groups well composed. On the embarkation of Charles II. for England, at the Restoration, Schellincks painted a large picture of the scene for the family of Witsen. It contained a vast number of well-grouped figures. He painted the burning of the English Fleet in the Medway, and was also much employed in inserting figures in the pictures of Wynants and Heusch. The works of Schellincks are to be found at St. Petersburg, Copenhagen, Frankfort, and Augsburg. He made drawings of Stonehenge, as it then existed, and of several other objects that would attract a stranger in England; there is, therefore, little doubt as to his having been here. He died in 1678.

SCHELTEMA, TACO, born at Harlingen in 1760, distinguished himself as a portrait painter. He formed himself on Van Dyck. After visiting Düsseldorf he went to Saxony, where he painted many portraits, but afterwards returned to his own country, and resided alternately at Amsterdam and Rotterdam. He painted the portraits of the founders and directors of the Batavian Society, and numerous family pictures. He died in 1837.

SCHELVER, AUGUST FRANZ, genre and battle painter, born at Osnaburg in 1805, was first a pupil of Neelmeyer, and then, with assistance from his native town, went to Munich for improvement. In 1833 he produced his picture of the Battle of Hanau, but hunting scenes, horse-market scenes, and battles constitute the principal part of his works. He died at Munich in 1844. In the Munich Pinakothek is a picture by him of a Tyrolese wagon coming up a rocky pass.

SCHENAU, (SCHÖNAU,) JOHANN ELEAZAR. See ZEISIG.

SCHENCK, PIETER, was born at Elberfeld in 1645, but studied drawing at Amsterdam. As an engraver he commenced with some topographical works, in which he was assisted by Gerard Valcke, who afterwards taught him mezzotint, in which process he engraved a large number of portraits. In 1683-4 they became partners, and it is difficult thenceforward to distinguish their numerous publications from their actual performances. Augustus II., Elector of Saxony and King of Poland, named Schenck engraver to his court. Schenck died at Amsterdam about 1715. A long list of his prints is given by Nagler. There is a good collection in the British Museum.

SCHENDEL, BERNARD, born at Haarlem in 1634, was a scholar of Hendrik Mommsen. He painted conversations and merry-makings, and was a good draughtsman and colourist. The probable date of his death was about 1693.

SCHENDEL, PETRUS VAN, painter, born at Terheyden, near Breda, in North Brabant, in 1806, worked at the Antwerp Academy from 1822 to 1828, under Van Bree. Wiertz, Leys, and Geerts were his fellow-pupils. He then returned to Holland, living successively in Amsterdam, Rotterdam, where he painted portraits, and the Hague. Thence he went to Brussels in 1845. He produced several Market Scenes, with effects of light, as 'Evening Market at Antwerp,' and 'The Fishmarket,' both in the National Gallery at Berlin; 'Market by Moonlight,' in the Pinakothek at Munich. He also painted a few subjects from sacred and profane history and portraits. He died at Brussels in 1870.

SCHENK, C. WILHELM, engraver, born at Leipsic about 1785, worked at the Academy, and engraved portraits and historical subjects for books. He went afterwards to Brunswick. He has left a small plate from Leonardo da Vinci's 'Last Supper.'

SCHENK, S. P. See TILLEMANS.

SCHENKER, S. NIKOLAUS, engraver, born at Geneva in 1760, went in 1779 to Paris, and began his independent work with some plates after Schall. His principal work was the 'Madonna di Foligno,' after Raphael. Other plates are a portrait of Henry IV. of France, at the age of fifteen, and one of Wieland, after Kugelgen. He died in 1822.

SCHERM, LORENZ, engraver, born in the Rhine provinces about 1690, went to Amsterdam, and worked there from 1720 to 1735. His works are mainly architectural, but he also engraved a few landscapes with figures.

SCHERMIER, CORNELIS, a Flemish decorative painter, who in the 16th century worked for the church of S. Gudule at Brussels.

SCHERTL, JOSEPH, landscape painter, was born at Augsburg in 1810. He began his studies with a lithographer in his own city, and then, in 1832, went to Munich, and studied landscape under Fohr and Morgenstern. He is principally known by his pictures of the neighbourhood of Munich. He died at Munich in 1869.

SCHETKY, JOHN ALEXANDER, a brother of John Christian Schetky, was born at Edinburgh in 1785.

He was educated for the medical profession, and was appointed Assistant-Surgeon to the 3rd Dragoon Guards, and with his regiment joined the army in the Peninsula. He was attached to the 7th Division under Lord Dalhousie, and served till the end of the war. During this time all his spare moments were taken up with drawing from nature, and he sent home a number of sketches illustrative of the scenery in the Pyrenees, which showed a decided originality and much imagination. His artistic power was afterwards devoted principally to the delineation of external and internal pathology, and after his appointment to the General Hospital at Fort Pitt, Chatham, he contributed many valuable drawings to the Museum of Morbid Anatomy established by Sir James M'Grigor. He was promoted to the post of Deputy Inspector of Hospitals on the coast of Africa, and died off Cape Coast Castle in 1824.

SCHETKY, JOHN CHRISTIAN, born at Edinburgh in 1778, was a pupil of Nasmyth, and devoted himself to marine painting in the style of Vandevelde. He held the appointment of Professor of Civil Drawing at the Royal Military College at Great Marlow, the Royal Naval College at Portsmouth, and the East India College at Addiscombe, successively, during a period of forty-seven years. He was appointed painter in water-colours to William, Duke of Clarence, and was marine painter to George IV., William IV., and Queen Victoria respectively. His painting of marine subjects is respectable, and his accuracy in minute details of naval architecture unsurpassed. His principal works are: 'The Battle off Cape La Hogue;' 'The Endymion Frigate, Admiral Sir Charles Paget, relieving a French Man-of-War ashore on a rock-bound coast;' 'The Battle of Trafalgar;' and 'The Sinking of the Royal George.' The last-named is now in the National Gallery. Schetky died in London in 1874.

SCHUEBEL, JOHANN JOSEPH (I), painter, born at Ratisbon about 1675, was painter to the Prince Bishop, at whose expense he was sent to Venice. On his return he painted altar-pictures for the church of St. Stephen at Bamberg, (a 'Stoning of Stephen,' a 'Descent from the Cross,' &c.) an altar-piece for the Jakobskirche, and a ceiling for the Gangolfskirche. He died at Ratisbon in 1778.

SCHUEBEL, JOHANN JOSEPH (II), painter, son of Johann Scheubel, born at Bamberg about 1720, was pupil of Georg Desmarées, and travelled at the Bishop's expense through France and Italy. On his return he was appointed court painter. The Bishop sent him to Paris in 1776, where he painted four allegorical scenes in the Hôtel de Ville. In 1778 he returned to Bamberg, and died there in 1783.

SCHUECHZER, WILHELM, painter, born at Zurich in 1803, was a pupil of Heinrich Maurer. He travelled in Switzerland, and then from 1826 to 1829 worked in the Black Forest on pictures for the Prince of Fürstenberg. His landscapes were much valued for their truthfulness to nature and the freshness of their colouring. He died at Munich in 1866.

SCHUEFFELIN. See SCHÄUFFELIN.

SCHIEVENHUYSEN, ANTHONY, a Dutch engraver, who flourished about the year 1695. He engraved the trades of Holland in a set of one hundred small plates.

SCHHEYNDEL, (SCHEINDEL,) GEORGE VAN, a Dutch engraver, who resided at Rotterdam about the year 1635. He engraved several plates in a style resembling that of Callot. His landscapes are filled with figures correctly drawn, and touched with spirit. He was a contemporary of William van Buytenweg, after whom he engraved some plates. We have, among others, the following prints by him:

The Funeral Procession of William the Silent; in four plates.

A pair of Landscapes, with Peasants amusing themselves. The Tooth-drawer.

A Village Festival, with Boors fighting.

Ditto, with a Quack-Doctor.

A Winter-piece, with Skaters on the ice.

A Landscape, with a Waterfall.

A Landscape, with a Bridge.

A set of four Views of a Castle, one with a Windmill.

A set of twelve Landscapes, with Dutch inscriptions.

A set of twelve plates of European costumes.

Twelve plates of Dutch costumes.

Scheyndel was at work as late as 1660.

SCHIANTESCHI, DOMENICO, an Italian painter of the 18th century. He was a pupil of the Bibieni, and practised at Borgo San Sepolcro, where he painted decorative perspectives in palazzi.

SCHIAVO, PAOLO, was a pupil of Masolino da Panicale, whose style he is said to have imitated. His 'Madonna and Child with a St. John the Baptist and another Saint,' now much damaged, may still be seen on the wall of the Canto di Nelli, at Florence.

SCHIAVONE, ANDREA. See MELDOLLA.

SCHIAVONE, GREGORIO, a Dalmatian living in the 15th century, was a pupil of Squarcione. He was employed in the decorations of the Eremitani Chapel, Padua, and painted the 'Enthroned Virgin and Child,' now in the Berlin Gallery, while the side panels of this altar-piece, with the figures of St. Louis and St. Anthony of Padua, are in the Canons' sacristy at Padua. The National Gallery, London, has two pictures by him, a 'Madonna and Child, enthroned, with Saints,' and a 'Madonna and Infant Christ.' Schiavone was fond of proclaiming himself the disciple of Squarcione in his signatures. He flourished from about 1440 to 1470.

SCHIAVONE, LUCA, a decorative painter, who flourished at Milan about 1450. He excelled in designing embroidery for ecclesiastics.

SCHIAVONETTI, LUIGI, engraver, born at Bassano in 1765, was the son of a stationer, and from his infancy displayed a taste for drawing. Before he was thirteen he had made some progress without the help of a master, when he was placed under the tuition of Giulio Golini, by whom he was taught for three years, at the end of which his master died. He now turned his thoughts to engraving. A copy of a 'Holy Family,' in line, from a print engraved by Barto Corri, after Carlo Maratti, gained him immediate employment from Count Remauidini. The works of Bartolozzi were then in vogue at Bassano, and Schiavonetti imitated several with great success. Some of his copies were shown to Bartolozzi by one Testoloni, as his own, but when Schiavonetti himself came to England, the deception was exposed, and Bartolozzi received him into his house. After working for some time under Bartolozzi, he set up for himself, and practised with much success until his death, which happened in June, 1810, in London.

The following are among Schiavonetti's principal works:

Events in the life of Louis XVI.; four plates; after Benazech.

The cartoon of Pisa; after Michel-Angelo Buonarroti.

Portrait of Vandyck, in the character of Paris.

The Mater Dolorosa; after Vandyck.

The Landing of the British Troops in Egypt; after Louthenbourg.

A set of etchings for Blair's Grave; after Blake.

The Canterbury Pilgrimage; after Stothard.

Dead Christ; after Vandyck.

Portrait of Berchem; after Rembrandt.

SCHIAVONETTI, NICCOLÒ, was the younger brother of Luigi Schiavonetti, and executed some plates in the style of that artist, though he worked chiefly in conjunction with him, helping him especially in the 'Tippo Sahib' and the 'Canterbury Pilgrims.' He did not long survive his brother, but died in London in 1813.

SCHIAVONI, FELICE, a painter, born at Trieste in 1803, was a son and pupil of Natale Schiavoni, whom he followed to Vienna and Milan. He settled at Venice in 1830, where he painted historical and mythological subjects. His best works are his 'Descent from the Cross' and 'Raphael painting the Fornarina.' He died in 1868.

SCHIAVONI, NATALE, an eminent painter and distinguished engraver, was born at Chioggia in 1777. He studied engraving under Raffael Morghen, at Florence, but in 1797 went to Venice, and studied under Maggioto. His first important work was a 'St. Francis' for the church of that saint in Chioggia; he then for a time painted miniature portraits. From 1802 to 1816 he lived in Trieste, and in which latter year he painted portraits of the Emperor and Empress of Austria. In 1825 he went to Milan, and divided his attention pretty evenly between painting and engraving. In 1841 he painted a large altar-piece for St. Antonio in Trieste, and afterwards a fine 'Magdalene,' now in the Belvedere, at Vienna. He painted many 'Bathing Venuses,' in which he could display his skill in the nude; he made a copy of Titian's 'Assumption,' now in Russia; and produced with the help of his sons a large 'Adoration of the Magi.' His celebrity as an engraver is chiefly owing to his splendid plates after Titian's 'Assumption of the Virgin,' and 'The Entombment.' There is also a portrait of the Marquis Manfredini, which is considered a chef-d'œuvre. About 1840 he became a Professor of the Venetian Academy. He died in Venice in 1858.

SCHICK, GOTTLIEB, an historical portrait and landscape painter, was born at Stüttgart in 1779. In 1798 he went to Paris, and commenced his artistic studies in the atelier of David. In 1802 he returned to Stüttgart, but soon went on to Rome. He had some imagination, and his pictures are in many instances distinguished by simplicity and purity of sentiment. 'The Sacrifice of Noah,' 'David playing before Saul,' and 'Apollo with the Shepherds,' the last in the palace at Stüttgart, are among his best works. There is a fine 'Eve at the Fountain,' by him in the Wallraf-Richartz Museum, Cologne. He excelled in portraiture, and painted several members of the Humboldt family, and other distinguished persons. His landscapes are of the heroic kind, enriched with subjects from the poets. Schick was one of the founders of modern German art. He died at Stüttgart in 1812.

SCHIDONE, (SCHEDONE,) BARTOLOMMEO, painter, was born at Modena in 1560. Although he is generally allowed to have been brought up under the Carracci, his works exhibit little resemblance to their style. He rather appears to have formed himself on the study of Raphael and Correggio, but his style has a sharpness, severity, and dryness which is peculiar to him. Schidone had already gained some reputation at Modena, when Duke Ranuccio took him under his protection. He painted several pictures for his patron, and these, with many other works of art in the possession of the Duke of Modena, afterwards came into the collection of the King of Naples. In the Palazzo Pubblico, at Modena, he painted the history of Coriolanus, and seven emblematical figures, in which he emulated Correggio; and in the cathedral a 'St. Geminiano resuscitating a dead Child,' which used often to be taken for a production of that master. His works are extremely rare; in consequence, it is said, of his propensity for gaming, in which he wasted his substance and time. His death is said to have been occasioned by distress of mind, caused by losing in one night more than he was able to pay. It took place in 1616, at Parma.

SCHIERTZ, AUGUST FERDINAND, painter, born at Leipsic in 1804, began in 1830 to study art, and painted genre, historical, and religious pictures. His best works are: 'Mortality,' in the Museum at Leipsic; an 'Adoration of the Kings,' in the church of Bosenstädt; the 'Descent of the Holy Ghost,' for the church at Podelwitz. He was much employed in the restoration of old pictures. He died at Niederfahre, near Meissen, in 1878.

SCHIESL, FERDINAND, engraver, born at Munich in 1775, was a pupil of Mettenleiter. He drew caricatures and engraved vignettes for books. He died in 1820.

SCHIFFER, ANTON, landscape painter, was born at Gratz in 1811. He was a student of the Academy at Vienna. His best works are: 'A Mountain Panorama,' and 'View of the Muhlsturzhörner, near Berchtesgaden;' 'View from the Schafberg, near Ischl;' 'View of the Schneeberg, in Lower Austria.' He died in 1876.

SCHILBACH, J.—HEINRICH, landscape painter, was born at Barchfeld in 1798. He studied at Darmstadt, and in 1823 travelled in Italy, making many sketches, which furnished him with motives for finished oil-pictures. In 1828 he was appointed court scene-painter at Darmstadt. Among his best known landscapes are, a 'View of Mayence,' a 'View of Rome,' and two studies of Roman scenery in the Thorwaldsen Museum at Copenhagen. He has left a considerable number of etchings.

SCHILCHER, ANTON VON, engraver and painter, was born at Mindelheim in 1796. He studied at Munich, and entering the Bavarian army went with General Heydegger to Greece. He drew and painted military and genre pictures. He died at Paros in 1828.

SCHILDER VON BABINBERG, JOHANN, an early German painter, a native of Oppenheim. He was a contemporary of 'Master Wilhelm,' and about 1382 was engaged to paint the high altar of Frankfort cathedral.

SCHILGEN, PHILIPP ANTON, painter, born at Osnaburgh in 1793, studied at Düsseldorf under Cornelius, with whom he went to Munich in 1825. He executed some scenes from the Tragedies of Æschylus, in the Palace, after drawings by Schwantaler. In the Munich New Pinakothek hangs his 'Rape of Helen,' painted in oil after a cartoon by Cornelius. He died in Munich in 1857.

SCHILLER, JOHANN FELIX VON, landscape painter, born at Breslau in 1805, was educated for the legal profession, but afterwards devoted himself to art, which he studied at Munich, and made the beauties of the Bavarian highlands his theme. He died at Munich in 1852.

SCHILLING, GEORG, born at Unterthingau, in Suabia, in 1785. He painted ten landscapes, dealing with scenes in Greek life, in the palace at Munich. They are after drawings in water-colour by Rottmann. Schilling died at Unterthingau in 1839.

SCHILLING, HANS, a German illuminator and calligraphist of the 15th century, known by a rhymed paraphrase of the Bible in 50,000 verses, which he enriched with 515 grotesquely designed but finely coloured miniatures. He was a native of Hagenau.

SCHILT, LOUIS PIERRE, born in Paris, September 11, 1790, was one of the most celebrated of the painters upon Sèvres porcelain. His father was a vivandier of the republican army, and Schilt was brought up entirely by his mother, who apprenticed him at the age of fourteen to the china-painter Constant. His master treated him kindly, putting him into the way of earning small sums for himself by painting on common pottery, and eventually he passed into the atelier of Lefèvre. He here attracted the attention of the painter Paris, who advised him to devote himself entirely to flower-painting, and in accordance with this counsel he began to attend Jussieu's courses at the Museum, with the result that he became an accomplished botanist. In 1822 he obtained employment at the royal manufactory at Sèvres, and worked there with equal assiduity and success until his death in 1859. Nine years previously he had been made a Knight of the Legion of Honour at the solicitation of Paul Delaroche. He published the following series of lithographs: 'The Months,' 'Flowers and Fruit,' 'The Porcelain Designer.'

SCHIMON, FERDINAND, painter, born at Pesth in 1797, was first a singer and actor, and then, after studying art at Munich, came out as a portrait painter. He worked at the Loggie of the Old Pinakothek after Cornelius' designs. Most of his works are in the Villa Rosenstein, near Stuttgart. He died at Munich in 1852.

SCHINDLER, ALBERT, born at Engelsberg, in Silesia, August 19, 1805, studied under Fendi at the Vienna Academy, and became a genre painter of much merit. His 'Dying Pilgrim' is in the possession of the Emperor of Austria. He died at Vienna in 1861.

SCHINDLER, JOHANN JOSEPH, painter, born at St. Pölten in 1777, studied at the Academy at Vienna, and then became professor of drawing at the Normal School of St. Anna in that city. He painted the altar-piece in St. Michael's church at Vienna, and also engraved several plates. He died at Vienna in 1836.

SCHINDLER, KARL, painter, born in 1822, was a pupil of Fendi. He died at Laab, near Vienna, in 1842.

SCHINKEL, KARL FRIEDRICH, the famous German architect, born March 13, 1781, at Neuruppin, began his career in the early years of the 19th century, as a painter. He had been trained in the Academy of Architecture at Berlin, but time and circumstance seemed peculiarly unfavourable to the art in which he was afterwards to achieve distinction. In 1803 he travelled in Italy, painting landscapes, copying historical pictures, and making drawings of costumes, and devoting much time to the study of ancient monuments. On his return to Germany he produced a number of landscapes with buildings, and machines such as a 'Panorama of Palermo,' and the 'Seven Wonders of the World.' Later, when his fame as an architect was established, he furnished designs for the paintings in the vestibule of the Berlin Museum, and continued from time to time to paint landscapes and historical pictures, and projects for theatrical scenery. He published a few lithographs and etchings, and numberless illustrations to books on architecture. He died at Berlin, October 9, 1841. In the National Gallery of Berlin there are seventeen of his pictures.

SCHINNAGL, MAX JOSEPH, born at Burghausen, in Bavaria, in 1694, was a pupil of his step-father, Joseph Kammerloher. He painted wild scenery, with figures by Janneck and Aigen. The galleries at Vienna and Augsburg possess pictures by him. He died at Vienna in 1761.

SCHINZ, JOHANN GEORG, painter, born at Zurich in 1794, was a pupil of Gessner, and painted Swiss landscapes. He died in 1845.

SCHINZ, JOHANN KASPAR, born at Zurich in 1798, painted biblical pictures. He died in 1832.

SCHIRMER, FRIEDRICH WILHELM, landscape painter, born at Berlin in 1802, was apprenticed at the age of fifteen to the Royal Porcelain Manufactory, and worked at the same time in the Berlin Academy. From 1823 he devoted himself entirely to art, travelling in Germany and visiting Italy. In 1839 he was appointed teacher, and in 1840 professor, in the Berlin Academy. In 1845 he revisited Italy, and in 1850 painted the walls of the Egyptian and Grecian divisions in the Berlin New Museum. In 1863 he again went to Italy, though he was suffering at the time from ill-health, and he died at Rome in 1865. Examples of his work are to be seen in the National Gallery, Berlin.

SCHIRMER, JOHANN WILHELM, landscape painter, born at Jülich in 1807, learned drawing from an engineer, and became a bookbinder, which was the trade of his father. In 1826 he became a student in the Academy at Düsseldorf, and attended the studio of Schadow. In 1827 he founded a class, out of which a new school of landscape painting arose. In 1834 he began to travel, making his way successively through the Black Forest, Switzerland, Holland, and Normandy. In 1839 he visited Italy, and was made professor at the Düsseldorf Academy. In 1853 he was summoned to direct the School of Art at Karlsruhe, and there he died in 1863. The following pictures in the Berlin Gallery are by him :

Scene in a German Forest.
The Convent of S. Scholastica in the Sabine Mountains.
Abraham's Entry into the Promised Land.
The Promise in the Grove of Mamre.

SCHITZ, JULES, landscape painter, born in Paris February 9, 1817, was a pupil of Rémond. He exhibited frequently at the Salon between 1840 and the time of his death in 1871. He was Director of the Municipal Drawing School at Troyes.

SCHIVENOGLIA, LO. See RAINIERI.

SCHIZZONE, —, an Italian painter of the 16th century, the friend and companion of Vincenzo di S. Gimignano. His career was cut short by the troubles of 1527, for after the sack of Rome he appears to have abandoned art.

SCHKUHR, CHRISTIAN, draughtsman and etcher, was born at Pegau, in Saxony, in 1741. He devoted himself early in life to botany, but later added mechanics and optics to his pursuits, and was appointed mechanic to the Wittenberg University. He published a botanical handbook, the plates for which he designed and etched himself. He died at Wittenberg in 1811.

SCHLEICH, AUGUST, painter and etcher, born at Munich in 1814, principally devoted himself to drawing animals. He died at Munich in 1865.

SCHLEICH, EDUARD, landscape painter, was born at Schloss Haarbach, near Landshut, in 1812. He was a pupil of the Munich Academy, but his real teachers were the Bavarian mountains and the Old Masters. He travelled in Upper Italy, France, and the Netherlands. In 1868 he was elected Royal Bavarian Professor at Munich, and there he died in 1874.

SCHLEICH, JOHANN KARL, engraver, born at Augsburg in 1759, learned his art under Jungwirth and Mettenleiter. He engraved portraits of many of his contemporaries, some topographical plates, and 'Hope nursing Love,' after Reynolds. He died at Munich in 1842.

SCHLEICH, KARL, engraver, son and pupil of Johann Karl Schleich, was born at Augsburg in 1788. There are by him :

Peasant Family; after Potter.

The Cathedral of Ratisbon.

A View of Munich.

Twelve Landscapes; after Wagenbaur, Dujardin, and Ostade.

He died at Munich in 1840.

SCHLEISNER, CHRISTIAN ANDREAS, painter, was born at Lyngby, near Copenhagen, in 1810. His early education was obtained at the Copenhagen School of Art, but afterwards he studied for a time in Munich, and between 1840 and 1842 was a travelling student of the Copenhagen Academy. Of this institution he became a member in 1852, and a professor in 1858. His pictures belong to the class of genre; many of them are comic. His death took place at Copenhagen in 1881. Works :

Copenhagen. Gallery. Sailors in a Beershop.

Tinker in his Workshop.

Munich. New Pinakothek. The Coppersmith and his Family.

SCHLESINGER, ADAM, painter, born at Ebertsheim, in Rhenish Bavaria, in 1759, painted fruits. In the National Gallery, Berlin, are two examples of his art. He died in 1829.

SCHLESINGER, JAKOB, painter, born at Grünstadt in 1793, learned the first principles of art from his father, Johann Schlesinger, and afterwards studied in Mannheim and Munich. The brothers Boisserée employed him in restoring old pictures. In 1822 he was appointed professor at Berlin. The Sixtine Madonna of Raphael, Titian's daughter, and other well-known pictures were copied by him. He also painted portraits, and fruit and flower pieces. He died at Berlin in 1855. There is a tracing by him from the Sixtine Madonna in the London National Gallery.

SCHLEY, VAN DER. See VAN DER SCHLEY.

SCHLICHT, ABEL. This artist was born at Mannheim in 1754. He engraved several plates in aquatint, which are favourably mentioned by Huber. He was a painter and architect as well as an engraver; he studied perspective under L. Quaglio, and was a professor in the Academy of Düsseldorf. He died in 1826. Among his plates we may name :

A Storm and Shipwreck; after Vernet.

A Calm; after the same.

A Landscape, with cattle; after A. Vandevelde.

A Landscape, with figures and animals; after Berghem.

A Landscape; after Pynaker.

SCHLICHTEN, J. P. VAN DER. See VAN DER SCHLICHTEN.

SCHLÖEPKE, THEODOR, painter, first made his name by painting genre and horse pictures, and portraits. For the Duke of Mecklenburgh he painted a series of scenes of the Schleswig-Holstein war. Between 1855 to 1857 he painted at Paris, under the auspices of H. Vernet, his one great historical picture, the 'Death of Niclot.' He died at Schwerin in 1878.

SCHLÖSSER, LEOPOLD, landscape painter, was a native of Berlin. He painted a large landscape with two wolves in the foreground, which showed considerable talent. He died at Düsseldorf in 1836.

SCHLOTTERBECK, CHRISTIAN JAKOB, a painter and engraver, but chiefly the latter, was born at Böblingen, in Würtemberg, in 1755. He was the son of a stone-cutter, and first studied medicine, which he afterwards abandoned for art. He entered the Karlsacademie at Württemberg in 1774, and studied engraving under J. Y. Müller. In 1785 he was appointed court engraver. He painted Duke Charles and King Friedrich of Württemberg, and engraved a number of portraits, among which are those of Schubart, Harper, Guibal, etc. Of his other plates, the principal are, 'Titian's Mistress,' after the picture once in the Orleans collection, 'Herodias with the head of John the Baptist,' the 'Laocoon,' and busts of Castor and Pollux, Minerva, Mercury, and Diana, from the antique, also some frontispieces and vignettes. He died about 1812.

SCHLOTTERBECK, WILHELM FRIEDRICH, a draughtsman and engraver, born in 1777 at Härtlingen in Switzerland, was a scholar of C. von Mechel of Basle. He had a great predilection for aquatint, and it may be said that his success made that art popular in Germany. He engraved many large plates after Claude, Both, P. Hackert, and his own drawings. He joined the Chalcographic Institution at Dessau in 1798, where he engraved the four fine landscapes by Claude Lorraine, then at Cassel, but now in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg; and in 1801 he went to reside at Vienna. From 1808 till the time of his death he was occupied in making drawings of the picturesque scenery in the Tyrol, at Salzburg, and in various other parts of Germany and Hungary, which he engraved for Mollo, the Viennese publisher. He died at Vienna in 1819.

SCHLOTTHAUER, JOSEPH, painter, born at Munich in 1789, was first a carpenter, though he devoted his leisure hours to drawing. Having finished several preparatory works, he was received as a pupil of the Academy, but a few months after the War of Deliverance in the Tyrol broke out, and Schlotthauer enlisted in a corps of volunteer sharpshooters. When the war was over he returned to his art, and attached himself in 1819 to Cornelius, who had come to Munich to commence the frescoes of the Glyptothek, painting several of the frescoes from Cornelius' Cartoons. In 1838 he painted the side-altars in Bamberg Cathedral, and about this time his mechanical and anatomical studies led him to put forward a new method of orthopædic treatment, for the purposes of which he started an institution, of which he was for many years the manager. In 1845 he went to Pompeii to make researches into ancient methods of painting, and in the following year he invented jointly with Fuchs the kind of fresco painting known as stereochromy. It was used by Kaulbach in his frescoes for the Berlin Museum. His 'Christ crowned with Thorns' is his best known easel-picture. He was further the author of a set of fifty-three lithograph plates after Holbein's 'Dance of Death' (1832). Among his pupils were Count Poggi, E. Linder, J. Schraudolph, and J. A. Fischer. He died at Munich in 1869.

SCHLOTTHAUER, KARL, painter, was born at Munich in 1803. He was the pupil of his uncle, Joseph Schlotthauer, and painted landscapes, chiefly from the Bavarian Alps. He was a professor in the Art School of Lindau.

SCHMEIDLER, KARL GOTTLIEB, portrait painter, born at Nimptsch in 1772, first studied theology, but became a painter from want of means. After studying in the Academy at Dresden, he settled at Breslau, and painted portraits, among which were those of General Bennigsen and his wife, and of some members of the Prussian Royal Family. He died at Breslau in 1838.

SCHMELLER, JOHANN JOSEPH, a painter, born at Gross-Obringen, near Weimar, in 1796, was a pupil of Jagemann. The Grand Duke sent him to Antwerp, in 1820, to study under Van Bree, and on his return he became master of the Drawing School at Weimar. He painted two portraits of Goethe, and was further commissioned by the poet to make an album of portrait sketches in chalk of distinguished persons and friends, which work is still in the possession of Goethe's family. He died at Weimar in 1841.

SCHMERLING, PAULINE VON, flower-painter, was born at Vienna in 1806. Her father was a Freiherr J. von Koudelka in the Austrian army, and she was a pupil of Franz Petter. In the Vienna Gallery there is an excellent flower-piece by her. She died at Vienna in 1840.

SCHMETTERLING, JOSEF ADOLF, was born at Vienna in 1758. He painted miniatures with some success. He established himself in Amsterdam, where he died in 1828. His daughter, CHRISTIANA, was a painter of flowers and fruit, in water-colour. She was born at Amsterdam in 1796, and died there in 1840. Another daughter, ELIZABETH, who followed her father's profession of miniaturist, was established in Amsterdam in 1804.

SCHMID, KARL AUGUST, painter, born at Nenburg in 1807, studied at the Munich Academy from 1822 to 1825, and then turned to out-door Nature. He made drawings for works on natural history and botany. He travelled through the Tyrol, Salzburg, and Upper Italy, and in 1831 produced a series of water-colour landscapes, illustrating his travels. He died in 1834.

SCHMID, PETER, painter, born at Trèves in 1769, displayed talent for art as a boy, and was instructed in painting through the help of Count von Waltersdorf. He taught in Stettin, Berlin, and Frankfort on a new system, laying great stress on a study of nature, and published several books of instruction embodying his theories. In 1834 he became professor of drawing at Berlin.

SCHMID, SIMON, born at Munich in 1760, was Court chaplain, and claims mention as one of the inventors of lithography. The first essays in Kellheim stone were made by him. In 1788 he published eighteen lithographs, some in relief, some in intaglio. He died at Munich in 1840.

SCHMIDT, EDUARD, painter, a native of Berlin, was a pupil of Blechen, and painted chiefly sea-pieces, from the coasts of Heligoland, England, and Sweden. He died in 1862.

SCHMIDT, GEORG FRIEDRICH, born at Berlin in 1712, was instructed in design and engraving by G. P. Busch, at the Berlin Academy; but he afterwards went to Paris, where he became a pupil of Nicholas Larressins. In 1742 he was received into the Paris Academy, and engraved, for his reception plate, his fine portrait of P. Mignard. In 1744 he returned to Berlin, and was soon afterwards appointed engraver to the King. He resided at Berlin till 1757, when he was invited to St. Petersburg by the Empress Elizabeth, and commissioned to organize a school of engraving, and to engrave the Emperor's portrait. He returned to Berlin in 1762, and etched a few plates in the manner of Rembrandt. He died at Berlin in 1775. The following is a list of his better plates; he engraved about 200 in all.

SCHMIDT, HEINRICH, painter, born at Saarbrück in 1740 (1760), painted historical works, portraits, and landscapes. He lived chiefly at Naples, and was painter to the court of Hesse Darmstadt, and died in 1818.

SCHMIDT, HEINRICH FRIEDRICH THOMAS, painter and engraver, born at Berlin in 1780. He practised first at Leipsic, and afterwards at Weimar. There are portraits by him of Wieland, Gall, Schiller, Kant, and the Czar, Alexander I.

SCHMIDT, ISAAK, born at Amsterdam in 1740, received his first lessons in painting from Jan Van Huysum, and subsequently became a scholar of J. M. Quinkhardt, with whom he remained six years. After some attempts at portrait painting, in which he did not succeed to his wishes, he applied himself to landscape, and painted several good pictures in concert with Juriaan Andriessen. His pictures are not numerous, as he devoted much of his time to teaching, and to poetry and music. He wrote some comedies, and translated a 'Life of Rubens.' He was one of the founders of the drawing academy at Amsterdam in 1759, and continued to be a director till the time of his death, which occurred in 1818. His son ISAAK practised portrait painting for a time, but eventually became a professor in the School of Artillery and Engineering at Delft. He died in 1826.

SCHMIDT, JOHANN GOTTFRIED, engraver, born at Dresden in 1764, studied under Rasp, and produced many good engravings, among them a series of fifty portraits of theologians.

SCHMIDT, JOHANN HEINRICH, painter, was born at Hildburghausen in 1749. He studied at Leipsic, and travelled through France and Italy, where he made a name by portraits in oil and pastel. In 1775 he went to Dresden as court painter, and in 1791 painted a 'Council of Princes at Pillnitz.' He executed pastel portraits of Suwarrow, Nelson, the Archduke Charles, Napoleon, &c., and one of the Princess Augusta of Saxony, now in the Dresden Gallery. He died at Dresden in 1829.

SCHMIDT, MARTIN JOACHIM, painter and engraver, was born at Grafenwörth, near Krems, in 1718. He etched a number of altar-pieces and mythological subjects, in the manner of Rembrandt and Castiglione. He died in Krems in 1801. There are some examples of his work in the Vienna Academy.

SCHMIDT, MATHIAS, painter and engraver, born at Mannheim in 1749, painted landscapes, and copied the etchings of Karel Dujardin, Adriaan van de Velde, Jan Fyt, &c. He also etched a number of plates after original drawings by Ferdinand Kobell and Rembrandt. He died at Munich in 1823.

SCHMIDT, OLE JÜRGEN, draughtsman and architect, was born at Copenhagen, July 13, 1793. He studied for three years at the Copenhagen Academy, winning various honours, and then went to Italy, where he devoted himself to investigations at Pompeii and Herculaneum, and in 1830 he published a number of outline drawings of the antique frescoes, and sketches of arabesques, ornaments, &c. which had been brought to light in the buried cities. He died at Hamburg, February 27, 1848.

SCHMIDT, WILLEM HENDRIK, painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1819. At first he combined the study of art with his father's trade of mattress-making, but a tour through Germany in 1840 contributed largely to his improvement. In 1842 he was professor in the Delft Academy. The Museum at Cologne and the Munich New Pinakothek possess examples of his art. He died in 1849.

SCHMITHS, HEINRICH N., (SCHMITZ,) engraver, born at Kaiserswörth, near Düsseldorf, in 1758. His father was a fisherman, but J. L. Krahe took him up and introduced him to art. He learned copper engraving in Paris under Wille. He died at Düsseldorf in 1790. Of his plates we may name:

A group of Children; after Rubens.
 Our Lord and St. John; after Scarsellino.
 Christ and the Magdalene; after Baroccio.

SCHMITSON, TEUTWART, born at Frankfort in 1830, a self-taught artist, was the son of an Austrian officer. He painted his first large picture in Düsseldorf. Thence he went successively to Karlsruhe, Berlin, Italy, and Vienna. He was fond of animals, and often painted them. He etched one plate, 'The Return of Venus to Paphos.' He died at Vienna in 1863.

SCHMUTZ, J. JOHANN RUDOLPH, a Swiss painter, born at Regensperg, in the canton of Zurich, in 1670. He was a scholar of Mathias Fuessli, and at first applied himself to the study of historical painting, but failing in this he turned his thoughts to portraiture, to which his genius was better adapted. He visited England at a period when Sir Godfrey Kneller was in the zenith of his reputation, and imitated his style. He died in London in 1715.

SCHMUTZER, JAKOB MATTHIAS, the son of Andreas Schmutzer, was born at Vienna in 1733. After learning the rudiments of design in his native city under Donner, he went to Paris, where he studied under J. G. Wille. On his return to Vienna he was appointed director of the Academy established by the Empress, Maria Theresa. He died at Vienna in 1811. Among his plates are the following:

Mutius Scævola before Porsenna; after Rubens.
 St. Gregory repulsing Theodosius; after the same.
 Venus rising from the Sea; after the same.
 Neptune and Thetis; after the same.

Wolf Hunt; after Snyder.
 Portraits of Prince Kaunitz; after Tocqué, Steiner, and Hayenauer.
 The Empress Maria Theresa; after Du Creux.
 (And several other Imperial portraits.)

SCHMUTZER, JOHANN ADAM, the eldest son of Jakob Matthias Schmutzer, born about 1700 at Vienna, and died in 1739, was an engraver of little ability.

SCHMUTZER, JOSEPH and ANDREAS, brothers of the foregoing, were natives of Vienna. They are here included in one article, as they generally worked jointly on the same plate, signing it Jos. And. or And. Jos., as one or the other had done most of it. Andreas died at Vienna in 1741, and Joseph in 1740. We have, among twenty-five given by Nagler, the following plates by them;

The Emperor Charles VI.; after Meytens.
The Empress Elizabeth Christian; after Auerbach.
Questenberg; after Seybold.
Two Views of a Temple; after G. Galli Bibiena.
Three subjects from the History of Decius; after the pictures by Rubens in the Liechtenstein Gallery.

SCHMUTZER, JOSEPH, a painter, born at Vienna in 1806, was a pupil of the Academy and an excellent lithographer after the works of the old German masters. He died in 1837.

SCHNAPHAN, ABRAHAM, painter, born at Leyden in 1651, painted portraits and figure subjects in the style of Miernis, but his works are only to be seen in the collections of the Anhalt-Dessau family, to which he was painter. He died in 1691.

SCHNATZLER, JOHANN ULRICH, portrait painter, was born at Schaffhausen in 1704. He was a painter of some talent, and also practised sculpture, but his life was spoiled by intemperance. He died in 1763.

SCHNEBELIE, JACOB C., born in London in 1760, acquiring some knowledge of drawing under Paul Sandby, left his business as a confectioner, and commenced teaching drawing. He was appointed draughtsman to the Society of Antiquaries, and made drawings for the 'Gentleman's Magazine' and 'Morris's Monastic Remains.' He was chiefly employed on antiquarian and topographical subjects, which he drew and etched, or aqua-tinted. He died in London in 1792. His son, ROBERT BREMEL SCHNEBELIE, was engaged in drawing for the 'Gentleman's Magazine' and other periodicals. He was found in his room dead, apparently from want, about 1849.

SCHNEIDER, JOHANN KASPAR, painter, born at Mayence in 1753, was a pupil of Heideloff, and painted altar-pieces, landscapes, and portraits. In the New Pinakothek at Munich there is a landscape by him. He died in 1839.

SCHNEIDER, N. N., painter, was born in Brabant in the first half of the 18th century. In 1753 he was a member of the Pictura Society, at the Hague, but afterwards migrated thence to Amsterdam. He painted landscapes with birds and game.

SCHNELL, FRIEDRICH, engraver, born at Darmstadt in 1790, a pupil of Haldenwang, has left an engraving of Strassburg Cathedral, after a drawing by August von Bayer, which displays great care and attention to detail. He died in 1834.

SCHNELL, JOHANN, a portrait painter of Basle, who visited England about 1720, and died at Bristol.

SCHNELLBOTZ, GABRIEL, (SCHNELLBOLTZ, SCHNELLHOLTZ,) engraver, is said by some to have been born at Merseburg, by others at Wittenberg, in 1536. It appears that, in addition to his practice as a designer and engraver, he carried on the business of a printer and bookseller at Wittenberg, and published several works there in 1562 and 1563. The mark S on a perpendicular arrow is the rebus of his name.

SCHNETZ, JEAN VICTOR, painter, born at Versailles in 1787, studied under David, Regnault, Gros, and Gérard, and, in 1810, exhibited his 'Death of Colbert.' In 1825 he went to Italy, and by his study there improved greatly in style and colouring, as may be seen by the pictures he painted about that time. The 'Battle of Ascalon' was the best of these. On his return from Italy he painted for several Parisian churches, among which were Notre Dame de Lorette and St. Severin. In 1840 he became director of the French Academy at Rome; but from 1847 to 1852 he resided in Paris, but went to Rome again, returning in 1866 to Paris, and dying there in 1870. Works:

Condé at the Battle of Seneff. (Versailles.)
Condé at Rocroi. (Do.)
The Battle of Ascalon. (Do.)
Several portraits. (Do.)
Esther and Mordecai. (Arnas.)
Funeral in the Roman Catacombs. (Nantes.)
Ceiling of the 'Septième Salle,' in the Louvre.

SCHNITZER, JOHN, an early engraver on wood, who flourished about the year 1486. He executed the cuts for the edition of Ptolemy published at Ulm in the above year. The Map of the World is ornamented with ten heads, representing the winds, rudely cut. It is inscribed, Insculptum est per Johannem Schnitzer de Arnsheim.

SCHNITZLER, J. MICHAEL, painter, born at Neuburg in 1785, the son of a painter, settled at Augsburg when he was eighteen years old, and worked at the Academy. He afterwards went to Stuttgart, Ulm, and Munich, where he worked as a scene-painter at the theatre. He painted animals in the style of Hondekoeter. He died at Munich in 1862. Works:

Berlin. Nat. Gallery. Partridges on a Table.
Munich. New Pinakothek. Hawk killing a Dove.
" " Three pictures of Dead Wild-fowl.

SCHNIZER, JOSEPH VON, painter, born at Weingarten, near Ravensburg, in 1792, was the son of an Austrian Colonel, and studied at the Munich Academy. In 1812 he was obliged to enter the army, but after serving through the campaigns of 1813, '14, and '15, he again took to art. He painted several military pictures for the King of Wurtemberg, among which were the 'Storming of Sens' and the 'Battle of Montereau.' He died at Stuttgart in 1870.

SCHNORR VON KAROLSFELD, JOHANN (or HANS) VEIT, painter, born at Schneeberg, in the Erzgebirge, in 1764, was intended for the law, and studied jurisprudence till he was twenty-five, when he entered the art school of Oeser at Leipsic. On the death of his father he gave himself up entirely to art, and settled at Königsberg. In 1802 he paid visits to Paris and Vienna, and in 1803 was appointed teacher of drawing in the Academy at Leipsic, and in 1816 director and professor. He died at Leipsic in 1841.

SCHNORR VON KAROLSFELD, JULIUS (VEIT HANS), historical painter, born at Leipsic in 1794, first studied under his father, Hans Veit Schnorr, but in 1811 went to the Academy at Vienna, and in 1817 to Italy. He associated in Florence with Rumohr, proceeding afterwards to Rome, where he joined Cornelius, Overbeck, Veit, and Koch, and formed one of the great German colony then in the Eternal City. On Cornelius's recommendation he was commissioned to paint scenes from Ariosto, in fresco, in the Villa Massini. In 1825 he was invited to Munich, but before returning to Germany he visited Sicily. In 1827 he went to Munich, where he became professor in the Academy, and decorated the 'Königsbau' with scenes from the 'Niebelungen Lied.' In 1835 he accepted a commission to paint scenes from the history of Charlemagne, Barbarossa, and Rudolf of Hapsburg in the so-called 'Saalbau.' In 1846 he obeyed a summons to become professor of the Dresden Academy and director of the Picture Gallery, which posts he retained till 1871, when he was obliged to resign on account of ill health and loss of sight. In 1851 he visited London, and entered into an agreement with De Bunsen for an illustrated Bible, which came out at Leipzig in parts. He made cartoons for some of the windows in St. Paul's. He died at Dresden in 1872. Besides the works above noted we may name:

Berlin.	Nat. Gallery.	Siegfried returning from the Saxon War. ( Cartoon. )
"	"	Laying out the dead in Etzel's Palace. ( Do. )
Dresden.	Gallery.	Visit of Ananias to Paul. ( Cartoon for St. Paul's, London. )
"	"	Visit of Zacharias, Elizabeth, and St. John to the Holy Family.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	Hagen and Dankwart refuse to greet Chrimhild.

SCHNORR VON KAROLSFELD, LUDWIG FERDINAND, painter, born at Leipsic in 1789, was the brother of Julius Schnorr, and received, like him, his first instruction from their father, Hans Veit Schnorr. In 1804 he went to Vienna, and attended the Academy, where he followed the style of Füger, and made his reputation by a scene from Goethe's 'Faust,' now in the Belvedere at Vienna. He was appointed custodian of the Belvedere, in Vienna, where he died in 1853. He etched a few plates.

SCHÖDLBERGER, JOHANN NEPOMUCK, painter, born at Vienna in 1779, was a pupil of the Institute in Vienna, and painted and etched landscapes, most of them with figures, such as, 'A View of the Traunfall,' 'The Waterfall at Tivoli,' 'The Interior of an Italian Church,' 'An ideal Landscape.' He died at Vienna in 1853.

SCHOEMACKER-DOYER, JAKOB, painter, was born at Crefeld about 1792. His father, who was Dutch, took his son while still a boy to Amsterdam, where he became the pupil of S. Andriessen. He also studied under M. van Brée, at Antwerp, after which he returned to Holland, and divided his time between Amsterdam and Zwolle. He painted portraits, genre, and sometimes history.

SCHOENMACKERS, JAN PIETERSZ, or PIETERSZ JAN, born at Dort in 1755, was a pupil of Jacob van Stry, and painted views of cities in the manner of Vander Heyden. His pictures are to be found in the best modern collections in Holland. The figures in them were painted by the best of his contemporaries. At one of the exhibitions at Dort there were four pictures by him, in which the vessels and figures were painted by J. C. Schotel, and a similar work is in the Amsterdam Museum. Schoenmackers died in 1842.

SCHOEVAERDTS, (or SCHOVAERTS,) M., a Flemish painter of village festivals and merry-makings, is supposed to have been born in 1667. His pictures are frequently met with in the Netherlands, and possess considerable merit. His baptismal name has not been ascertained. He signed his pictures, and his two known etchings, M. Schoevaerds. Two of his works have been engraved under the titles 'Fête de campagne Hollandaise,' and 'Retour de la Fête Hollandaise.' There are two village scenes by him in the gallery of the Louvre. He has been sometimes confounded with Christopher Schwartz.

SCHÖN, BARTEL. See SCHONGAUER.

SCHÖN, ERHARDT, a German painter, who flourished from about 1516 to 1550. He resided chiefly at Nuremberg, where he published, in 1538, a treatise on the proportions of the human figure for the use of students. He was also an engraver on wood, and marked his prints with a monogram composed of an E. and an S. with a small knife under, thus, . Among the thirty-three woodcuts attributed to him by Bartsch, there is one with his mark and the date 1524.

SCHÖN, FRIEDRICH WILHELM, painter, born at Worms in 1810, studied at Darmstadt and Munich. He painted social subjects, and lamp and fire-light scenes, such as — 'The reading Maiden,' 'Going to Church in the Bernese Oberland,' 'Return home of the Soldier,' 'South German Emigrants in a North German Port,' 'Meeting of an Art Society,' with fifty portraits, &c. He published a few lithographs. He died at Munich in 1868.

SCHÖN, JOHANN GOTTLÖB, flourished at Dresden in the first half of the 18th century, and was a pupil of Alexander Thiele. He painted and etched several landscapes. He went in 1740 with Ismael Mengs to Rome, where he died.

SCHÖN, LUDWIG. See SCHONGAUER.

SCHÖN, MARTIN. See SCHONGAUER.

SCHÖNBERGER, LORENZ, painter, was born at Vöslau, near Vienna. He was a pupil of the Vienna Academy under Wutki. In 1798 he was living in Bohemia. He afterwards visited Italy, England, Paris, and Amsterdam. There are pictures by him in the Galleries of Vienna and Hamburg. He etched twenty plates, and died about 1840.

SCHÖNBRUNNER, KARL, painter, born at Vienna in 1832, a pupil of the Academy under Führich, studied also at Rome and Venice. His great work is 'Bishop Ambrose repulsing the Emperor Theodosius.' He died in the Castle of Hirschstetten in 1877.

SCHÖNER, GUSTAV FRIEDRICH ADOLPH, painter, born at Massbach, near Schweinfurt, in 1774, was first a pupil of Konrad Geiger in Schweinfurt, then of Graff in Dresden, and lastly of David in Paris. He lived for a long time in Bern, where he painted a portrait of Pestalozzi, and a good profile of Napoleon. In 1807 he went to Italy, and in after years we find him at Halberstadt. He executed several excellent copies of pictures after Guido, the Carracci, &c. He died at Bremen in 1841.

SCHÖNFELD, HEINRICH, painter, was born at Dresden in 1809. He at first painted scenery for theatres, but afterwards took to architectural painting, chiefly of old German buildings. He died at Munich in 1845.

SCHÖNFELDT, JOHANN HEINRICH, (SCHENFELD,) painter, was born at Biberach in 1609, and was a scholar of Johann Sichelbein. He visited the principal cities in Germany, and had already given proof of talent, when he determined to visit Italy. On his arrival at Rome he found employment in the church of S. Elisabetta de' Fornari, and in the Palazzo Orsini. On his return to Germany he practised as an historical painter at Vienna, Munich, Salzburg, Augsburg, and other cities. Among his better works are his pictures of 'Christ on the way to Calvary,' and the 'Descent from the Cross,' in the church of the Holy Cross at Augsburg, where he resided in the latter part of his life. In the Senate-house of that city there is a picture by Schönfeldt representing the race of Hippomenes and Atalanta. He died at Augsburg about 1680. We have a few slight etchings by Schönfeldt, among which are the following:

- A Head of our Saviour.
- A pastoral subject, with a Shepherd playing on a flute, and a Shepherdess holding a triangle.
- A Landscape, with a Man sitting on a rock.
- A Bacchanal with children.

SCHONGAUER (or SCHÖN), BARTEL, engraver, is supposed to have flourished at Ulm about 1479. According to some he was the brother of Martin Schongauer, whose style he followed. But his real name and the facts of his life are involved in obscurity. His prints are usually marked with a R, and an S, in the old German character, with a cross between them, thus, RS. The following plates by him may be named:

1. Christ on the Mount of Olives; a copy from one of M. Schongauer's 'Passion' series.
2. The Bearing of the Cross; ditto.
3. The Two Lovers (reversed from the plates of Israël van Meckenen and the Master W.).
4. A Concert in the Garden.
5. The Fool and the Cook. (Douce Collection, Oxford.)
6. The Beggars with a Wheelbarrow.
7. Mother with Children and Shield.
8. The Peasant with Shield and Garlic Plants.
9. Armorial Bearings of the families of Rohrbach and Holzhausen.
10. A Family of Monkeys.
11. A Wild Man amid ornamental foliage.
12. Ornamental Foliage.

(All these except No. 5 are in the British Museum).

For fuller information as to this master see Naumann's Archiv., Zweiter Jahrgang, § 168.

SCHONGAUER (or SCHÖN), MARTIN, painter and engraver, was born at Colmar, probably between 1445 and 1450. His parents were natives of Augsburg, as we gather from a note written by Hans Burgkmair on the back of Schongauer's portrait in the Munich Gallery. Caspar Schongauer, the father of Martin, was received into the freedom of Colmar in 1445. Martin's first master was his father, whose trade was that of a goldsmith; he afterwards seems to have visited Flanders and studied under Roger van der Weyden, for Lambert Lombard, in a letter to Vasari, says that "he (Martin) remained faithful to the style of his master, Rogier." Roger died in 1464. Martin probably settled in Colmar about 1465. His earliest plates date from about 1465, when he probably became free of his craft. In the British Museum there are two drawings assigned to him with the date 1469; they are in his mature style. In 1473 he painted the 'Virgin of the Rose Garden,' at Colmar, the only picture which can be traced to his hand, although there seems to be no good reason to doubt his authorship of the 'Death of the Virgin,' in the National Gallery. Many pictures from his bottega are preserved in the Colmar Gallery. In spite of his short life he won a great name among his contemporaries, who called him 'Hübsch Martin,' or 'Martin the Beautiful.' He died at Colmar in 1488. He used his well-known monogram, an

M and an S with a sort of eccentric cross between them, on his plates, but left his pictures unsigned. Of pictures assigned to him in various collections we may name:

Basle.	Museum.	St. Joachim.
Brussels.	Museum.	Ecce Homo.
Colmar.	Ch. of St. Martin.	} The Virgin in the Rose-garden.

 88. A Family of Pigs.
 89. Male and Female Figures supporting shields.
 90. The Head of a Bishop's Pastoral staff.
 91. A Censer.
 92. A Monstrance.
 93-102. Ten Plates of Ornamental Foliage.
 (All these, with the exception of Nos. 26, 60, 80, 96, 97, 101, and 102, are in the British Museum.)

For the fullest information on this artist, see 'Martin Schongauer,' by Alfred von Wurzbach. Vienna, 1880.

SCHÖNINGER, LEO, born at Weil in Würtemberg in 1811, went in 1825 to the Boissérée Institute to lithograph old German pictures. In 1827 he studied at the Munich Academy under Cornelius and Stieler. He afterwards lithographed several pictures in the Lenchtemberg Gallery. He died in 1880.

SCHÖNMANN, JOSEPH, painter, was born at Vienna, April 19, 1799. He studied at the Vienna Academy, and afterwards at Rome, and is known principally by pictures painted for various churches, at Trieste and Vienna. He was a member of the Vienna Academy.

SCHOOCK, or SHOOK, HENDRIK, the son of GIBBERT SCHOOCK, a painter of Bommel, born at Utrecht about 1670. He painted flowers and fruit.

SCHOOF, GERHARDT, historical painter, was born at Mechlin in the 16th century. He was the son of one Jakob Schoof, and perhaps the grandson of Jan Schoof. In 1575 he was admitted into the Antwerp Corporation of St. Luke, of which he was dean in 1588. He had a large number of pupils. In 1612 he gave an altar-piece to the church of Hoboken, on condition that every year he and his wife should be carried to the kermesse in that town in a covered car and provided with a good dinner. In 1614 a WILLEM SCHOOF, and in 1622-3 a JAN SCHOOF, who may have been his sons, were inscribed on the registers of St. Luke, the former as a master, the latter as a pupil.

SCHOOF, JAN, a painter of Mechlin in the 16th century. In 1514 he was commissioned by the magistrates of his native city to paint the council summoned by Charles the Bold. The picture was placed in the church of St. Rumbold, and was destroyed by the Image-breakers.

SCHOOF, RUDOLF. A Flemish painter of this name was appointed to the household of Louis XIII. of France, and numbered Adriaan De Bie among his pupils.

SCHOONEBECK, ADRIAAN, a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1650. He engraved a variety of frontispieces and other plates for books, and published, in two volumes, the 'habits' of all the religious orders in Europe. He died at Moscow in 1714.

SCHOONJANS, ANTHONIE, called Parrhasius, born at Antwerp in 1650, was a scholar of Erasmus Quellin, under whom he studied until he was nineteen years of age, when he travelled to Italy in search of improvement. During a residence of ten years at Rome he distinguished himself by an exemplary application to his studies, and painted some pictures for the churches, which gained him considerable reputation. In 1678 he was invited to the court of Vienna by the Emperor Leopold, who appointed him his painter. The desire to visit England induced him to request leave of absence, and he came to this country in the reign of King William. His portrait, painted by himself, was in the collection at Strawberry Hill. On his way back to Vienna he passed some time at Düsseldorf, where he painted some pictures for the Elector Palatine, who presented him with a gold medal and chain. He died at Vienna in 1726. There is an example of his work in the Munich Pinakothek.

SCHOOOR, NICOLAS VAN, born at Antwerp in 1666, painted fanciful groups, in the flower-pieces by Rysbræck and others. He also made designs for tapestry at Antwerp and Brussels. He died at Antwerp in 1726. In the Museum at Ghent there is an equestrian portrait by him of Charles II. of Spain, painted when that prince was about eighteen.

SCHOOORE, J. V., a Flemish engraver, who flourished about the year 1650. Among other prints he engraved a plate of St. Vincent, after Anthonie Sallaert.

SCHOOOREL, JAN VAN, (SCOREEL, SCOREEL,) painter, was born at Schoorel, a small town near Alkmaar, in 1495. At the age of fourteen he was placed for three years under the tuition of an obscure artist, named Willem Cornelisz, in Haarlem. In 1512 he went to Amsterdam, where he became a disciple of Jakob Cornelisz. The reputation of Mabuse, who was at that time in the service of the Duke of Burgundy, induced Schoorel to visit Utrecht. He afterwards travelled through Germany, and passed some time at Spire, and at Nuremberg, where he resided with Albrecht Dürer, who treated him with great kindness. His next journey was to Venice, where he found a number of people assembled for a pilgrimage to Palestine, among them an ecclesiastic of Gouda, by whom he was persuaded to join the party. On his arrival at Jerusalem he became acquainted with the superior of the monastery of Sion, by whom he was shown the most interesting sites in the city and vicinity, of which he made accurate drawings. He painted for the convent a picture representing the 'Incredulity of St. Thomas'; and in 1520 embarked for the Isle of Rhodes, where he was received with distinction by the grand master, who was a native of Germany, and painted views of the city and fortress. From thence he sailed for Venice, and afterwards visited Rome, where he stayed three years, and was employed by the Pope, Adrian VI., who was his fellow-countryman. He painted a whole-length portrait of the Pope, which was sent to the college of Louvain, which had been founded by his Holiness. On his return to Holland, Schoorel established himself at Utrecht, and was much employed by the noble family of Lochorst, for whom he painted one of his best pictures, 'Christ's Entry into Jerusalem,' which was placed in their chapel in the great church. For the monastery of St. John, at Haarlem, he painted a 'Baptism of Christ,' in which he imitated Raphael. Many of the principal works of Schoorel were destroyed during the troubles in the Low Countries. He must be looked upon as one of the first causes of the great art movement of the 17th century in the Netherlands. He died at Utrecht in 1562. Most of the pictures commonly ascribed to him are of doubtful authenticity. The following may be named with confidence :

- Amsterdam. R. Museum. A Magdalen.
 Bonn. Museum. The Crucifixion; signed and dated 1530.
 Dresden. Gallery. David conquering Goliath (given in catalogue to Bronzino).

Haarlem.	Museum.	Adam and Eve.

SCHOOTEN, FRANS VAN, was an amateur painter of fruit and flowers, who practised at Leyden in the 17th century, and was a professor at the University. It is supposed that he was related to Joris van Schooten. In some of his pictures, figures were inserted by Frédéric Moucheron.

SCHOOTEN, JORIS VAN, was born at Leyden about 1587. He was a pupil of Coenrad van der Maes of Leyden, and was already a portrait painter of repute at the age of twenty. In 1610 he combined with other artists to sign a petition to the local authorities of Leyden, requesting the necessary privileges for the formation of a Guild of St. Luke. The large portrait pieces of many figures which he usually painted are characterized by good colour and a knowledge of chiaroscuro, and have much individuality, though they are poor in composition. Several of them were portrait groups of the Civil Guard or Shooting Guild of Leyden in the years 1626, 1628, and 1650, and are now preserved in the Museum of that city, where are also two curious allegorical pictures. In the Rijks Museum at Amsterdam there is an 'Adoration of the Kings' by him. Jan Lievens and Abraham van den Tempel were for a time his pupils. Snyderhoef engraved one of his portraits, and J. G. Van Vliet a 'Christ and the Woman of Samaria'; it is inscribed J. van Schooten, 1635. Schooten died in 1658.

SCHÖPF, JOSEPH, painter, born at Telfs in the Oberinntal in 1745, was instructed by Martin Knoller, and then went in 1776 to Rome, where he studied Raphael and Correggio, and came under the influence of Mengs. On his return he painted frescoes for many churches in the neighbourhood of Innsbruck. He died in 1822.

SCHÖPFER, HANS, painter, a native of Munich, was born about the middle of the 16th century. His works have been given to Hans Schüpfelin and A. Dürer. He painted the following portraits: the Countess Euphrosyne of Oettingen and Benigna von Lamberg at Schleissheim, Caspar von Pienyenan in the Moritz Chapel at Nuremberg; and several altar-pieces, among which was one for the Pilgrims' Church at Ramersdorf, near Munich. He died in 1610. He signed his works with his initials and a roughly-drawn spoon.

SCHOPIN, HENRY FRÉDÉRIC, painter, was born at Lubeck, of French parents, in 1804. He studied in Paris under Gros, and gained the 'prix de Rome' in 1830. He was several times premiated, and was a constant exhibitor at the Salon from 1830 onwards. He died in 1880. The following are examples of his work:

Douai.	Museum.	Last Moments of the Cenci.
Metz.	"	Battle of Hohenlinden.
Toulouse.	"	Jacob and Laban.
Versailles.	"	Portrait of Cambacérés.

SCHOPPE, JULIUS, painter, born at Berlin in 1797. He received his art education in Rome, where he made a special study of the works of Raphael, Correggio, and Titian. In 1825 he painted for his reception picture at the Berlin Academy a 'Death of Frederick William III.,' which attracted some attention. He decorated Prince Charles' country house at Glienicke, near Potsdam, with mythological paintings, and was also much employed as a portrait painter. His oil pictures in miniature are generally more pleasing than his larger works. Among his most successful portraits are those of the Duchess of Orleans and of the Count and Countess von Arnim.

SCHORN, KARL, born at Düsseldorf in 1800, studied at Munich under Cornelius, from 1824 to 1827 in Paris under Gros and Ingres, and from 1832 onwards worked in Wachtel's atelier at Berlin. He soon produced a number of pictures, among which were, 'Mary Stuart and Rizzio,' 'Charles V. at St. Yuste,' 'Cromwell before the Battle of Dunbar.' From Berlin he went to Munich, where he produced several works of a mythical and allegorical nature. He visited Italy from time to time on short journeys, and so supplied himself with material for fresh pictures. He painted in the Arcades of the Munich Hof-garten. In 1847 he was elected professor of the Munich Academy, which post he held till his death, which took place at Munich in 1850. Works:

Berlin.	National Gallery.	Card-players.
"	"	Pope Paul III. before Luther's Portrait.
Munich.	N. Pinakothek.	The Deluge; unfinished, owing to the artist's death.

SCHORPP, MICHEL, a German painter of the 15th century, known only by a print in the 'Bibliothèque Nationale' of Paris. It is a Madonna in the Byzantine manner, and bears the following inscription: Michel Schorpp, maeler zu Ulm, 1496.

SCHORQUENS, JAN, a Dutch engraver, who resided at Madrid about the year 1620. He was an excellent engraver of title-pages, of which he executed many for Spanish books from 1618 to 1630. Some are signed J. van Schorquens, fecit, in Madrid. His best plate is a View of Lisbon in the official report of the coronation of Phillip III.

SCHOTANUS, PIETER, a Dutch painter of the 17th century, who probably practised as an amateur at Leeuwarden. He painted village fêtes, battles, and kindred subjects.

SCHOTEL, CHRISTINA, the daughter of Johann Christianus Schotel, was born at Dordrecht in 1818. She was taught by her father and by her brother Petrus, and painted flowers, fruit, and still-life. She died at Aardenburg in 1854.

SCHOTEL, JOHANN CHRISTIANUS, a distinguished marine painter, was born at Dort in 1787. He was a scholar of A. Meulemans, and subsequently of Martin Schouman. At the conclusion of his pupilage he devoted himself to the study of nature, for which purpose he would, like Backhuysen, go to sea in an open boat. From 1814 to 1817 he worked in concert with Martin Schouman, on two pictures representing the retreat of the French from Dort, and the bombardment of Algiers. Schotel received honours from his own sovereign and other crowned heads, and was a member of several academies and societies of arts. His pictures were at one time eagerly sought after. He died at Dort the 21st of December, 1838.

SCHOTEL, PETRUS JOHANN, born at Dort in 1808, a son and pupil of Johann Christianus Schotel, in whose footsteps he followed. His best picture is 'The Anchorage near Texel in stormy weather.' He died at Dresden in 1865.

SCHOTT, AUGUST, born at Giessen in 1811, studied first under Ducorée, and afterwards at the Städel Institute, in Frankfort, and at the Munich Academy. He made several pencil drawings, and painted small historical pictures, but afterwards became a follower of Overbeck and Steinle, several of whose pictures he reproduced in lithography. He died in 1843.

SCHOUMAN, AART, a Dutch painter and engraver, born at Dort in 1710, was a painter of some merit, particularly of birds, which he painted in the manner of Hondekoeter and Weenix. He also painted landscapes with animals, portraits, small historical pictures, and subjects from the poets, especially from Ovid's 'Metamorphoses.' He was a good draughtsman and colourist, and at one time engraved on crystal. His rather poor mezzotints are after Gerard Dou, Schalcken, Paul Potter, Frans Hals, &c. He resided constantly at the Hague, where he died in 1792.

SCHOUMAN, MARTINUS, marine painter, born at Dort in 1770, first studied under Versteeg, and then under his uncle, Aart Schouman. He excelled in the representation of ships, and of still and troubled waters. His chief pictures are, 'The Bombardment of Algiers,' 'The Departure of the French from Dort,' painted in conjunction with Schotel. He died in 1853. His son ISAAC, born at Dordrecht in 1801, was his pupil, and painted genre pictures and marine subjects.

SCHOYEN, C., a Norwegian landscape painter, who studied under Eckersburg and Yude, and practised in Germany. He died while still young in 1870.

SCHRAMM, JOHANN HEINRICH, born at Teschen, in Austrian Silesia, made pencil-portraits of Thorwaldsen, Mendelssohn, Andersen, Metternich, Cornelius, Grimm, and others. He died at Vienna in 1865.

SCHRAMM, JOHANN MICHAEL, born at Sulzbach, in Bavaria, in 1772, was first a gold worker, and then went to Munich in 1793, where he practised miniature painting and engraving. In 1801 he went to the Academy at Vienna, and studied for three years, after which he returned and settled at Munich, where he died in 1835.

SCHRAUDOLPH, JOHANN VON, born at Obertsdorf, in Algäu, in 1808, received his first instruction at the Munich Academy, principally under Cornelius and Schlotthauer. He helped the latter with his frescoes of the Glyptothek, and then with his scenes from the history of Moses in the church of All Saints. In 1844 he went to Rome, and on his return was commissioned to decorate the cathedral at Spire. He died at Munich in 1879. Of his pictures we may name:

Munich.	Pinakothek.	St. Agnes with the Lamb.
"	"	The Virgin and Child.
"	"	Ruth and Naomi.
"	"	The Ascension of Christ.
"	"	The Miraculous Draught of Fishes.

SCHREIBER, MORITZ, was working at Leipsic from 1539 to 1556, in collaboration with one HEINRICH SCHMIDT, a painter whose name occurs between 1501 and 1541, in the town archives. Schreiber appears to have been the better artist of the pair.

SCHREUEL, JOHANN CHRISTIAN ALBRECHT, draughtsman and painter, born at Maestricht in 1773, was an officer in the Dutch service, but gave up his profession for the practice of art. He studied at Berlin, and afterwards at Dresden, with Grassi, under whose guidance he became a good miniaturist, and painted portraits of many distinguished persons. He also occupied himself much in making copies from the pictures in the Dresden Gallery.

SCHRIECK, OTTO MARCELLIS VAN, called SNUF-FELAER, a Dutch painter, born at Amsterdam in 1613. It is not known by whom he was instructed, but he acquired considerable celebrity by his excellence in a very singular branch of art. He painted reptiles, insects, and curious plants, which he designed with surprising fidelity, and finished with extraordinary care. He resided some time in Paris, and afterwards visited Florence, where his talents were distinguished by the Grand Duke, Naples, and Rome, where he passed several years. He painted entirely from nature, to which end he is said to have kept a kind of museum of serpents, vipers, rare insects, and other curiosities. His pictures are found in the choicest collections in Holland. There is a good example of his art in the National Gallery. He died at Amsterdam in 1673.

SCHRÖDER, FRIEDRICH, was born at Hesse Cassel in 1768, and was a scholar of Klauber, an engraver of Augsburg. He confined himself chiefly to landscapes, and engraved several after Swanevelt, Vernet, La Hire, Karel du Jardin, and Bommel, in the manner of Woollett. He also assisted in the backgrounds and ornamental parts of plates in which the figures were executed by other artists, among which were the 'Sabines' by Massard, and 'Henry IV.'s Entry into Paris' by Toschi.

SCHRÖDER, GEORG ENGELHARD, a Swedish painter, born at Stockholm in 1684. He died in 1750.

SCHRÖDER, HANS, a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1600. He engraved some plates of ornamental foliage, &c.

SCHRÖDER, JOHANN HEINRICH, born at Meiningen in 1757, learned his art of Tischbein in Cassel, and practised as a portrait painter. He worked in Hanover and Brunswick, and then travelled through the Netherlands and England, where he painted several members of the Royal Family. On his return he painted a portrait of Frederick William II., King of Prussia. He died at Meiningen in 1812.

SCHRÖDER, KARL, painter, was born at Brunswick in 1802. From 1817 to 1824 he attended the Academy Schools at Dresden, and then settled for a time at Munich. On his return to his native town he became known chiefly as a painter of humorous genre pictures, many of which were further popularized by lithographs.

SCHRÖDER, KARL, engraver, born in 1761, at Brunswick, where, after studying in Augsburg and Paris, he settled down and engraved many plates, chiefly after pictures in the now dispersed Salz-dahlum collection, such as:

Abraham's Sacrifice; after Lievens.
 The Marriage Contract; after Jan Steen.
 The Young Man in the Cloak; after Koninck.
 Young Woman of Salzburg; after Pesne.

He etched a few plates.

SCHRÖDTER, ADOLF, born in Schwedt in 1805. In 1820 he entered the studio of Professor Buckhorn, the engraver; in 1829 he went to Düsseldorf, and studied under W. von Schadow; in 1831 he began to paint, and in 1855 was made professor to the Polytechnic at Carlsruhe, which post he resigned in 1872. He died at Carlsruhe in 1875. He produced many book illustrations, and the Berlin National Gallery contains examples of his painting.

SCHRÖTER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, engraver, born at Leipsic in 1770, was a pupil of Bause. In 1813 he was appointed engraver to the Leipsic University. He executed some plates after Rembrandt, but his works were chiefly anatomical. He died at Leipsic in 1836.

SCHRÖTER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH KARL KONSTANTIN, painter, born at Schkenditz, between Halle and Leipsic, in 1795. In 1811 he went to the Drawing School at Leipsic, and in 1817 to Dresden, where he entered the atelier of Professor Pochmann. In 1819 he returned to Leipsic, where he earned his living by portrait-painting, which, however, he eventually abandoned, on the advice of Schnorr, for genre. In 1826 he settled at Berlin, where he died in 1835. His principal pictures are:

Mother and Daughter Spinning.

The Sermon.

The Music Teacher. (National Gallery, Berlin.)

The Village School.

The Sale of a Painter's Effects.

SCHTSCHEDRIN, SEMEN FEDOROWITSCH, painter, a native of St. Petersburg, who after studying at the Academy went to Italy, and on his return became painter to Catherine II. He painted Italian landscapes. He died in 1804.

SCHTSCHEDRIN, SILVESTER FEDOROWITSCH, painter, born at St. Petersburg in 1791, received his early training at the Academy under Iwanoff and Worobieff, and then studied in Germany and Italy. He showed a great talent for landscape. In the Hermitage at St. Petersburg are 'The Celesseum,' and the 'Lake of Nemi,' by him. He died at Sorrento in 1830.

SCHUBART, CHRISTOPHER, a German painter of the 17th century, a native of Ingolstadt. He practised principally at Munich, but is said to have painted a portrait of Queen Anne of England.

SCHUBART, PIERER, (SCHUBERT,) was a native of Germany, but resided at Venice about the year 1696. Professor Christ ascribes to him the engravings marked with the letters P. S. d. E., which he interprets, 'Peter Schubert de Ehrenberg.'

SCHUBERT, JOHANN DAVID, painter and engraver, born at Dresden in 1761, studied there under Hutin and Klass, and became in 1781 painter at the porcelain works at Meissen. In 1800 he became professor of historical painting, and alternate director of the Dresden Academy. He executed many etchings for books. He died at Dresden in 1822.

SCHUBLER, A. G. J., a German engraver, who resided at Nuremberg about the year 1626. He was chiefly employed in engraving portraits for the booksellers, which are very indifferently executed. He engraved part of the plates for a work entitled 'Icenes Bibliopolarum et Typographorum,' published at Alderf and Nuremberg in 1626.

SCHÜCHLIN, HANS, painter, flourished at Ulm in the 15th century, was a contemporary of Martin Schongauer, and seems to have come, like him, under the influence of Roger van der Weyden. His best works are his altar pictures at Tiefenbronn, near Calw, in Wurtemberg, inscribed, Gemacht zu Ulm vo Hanssise Schüchlin Maler, MCCC.LXIX. The drawings for the wood-cuts in the Ulm Bible of 1470 are ascribed to him. He has been confused with the painter called by Eisenmann the Master of Sigmaringen, the author of an altar-piece in the possession of the Prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, in whose catalogue it is ascribed to one "Schülleim."

SCHULER, CHARLES LOUIS, engraver, born at Strasburg in 1784-5, studied in Paris, and worked first at Strasburg, engraving small plates for almanacks, and other fugitive publications. He afterwards settled at Carlsruhe, where he executed a number of more ambitious plates, such as 'The Assumption of the Virgin,' after Guido; a 'Hely Family,' after Raphael. His son and pupil, EDOUARD, also practised as an engraver at Strasburg.

SCHULER, THEOPHIL, born at Strasburg in 1821, studied in Paris and Munich. He was a pupil of Drolling and Paul Delaroche. In 1848 he executed the illustrations for Arnold's 'Whit Monday,' and at the same time painted for the Museum at Colmar his great allegory 'The Chariot of Death.' He made many pencil drawings for the illustrated magazines, and for the works of Jules Verne, Victor Hugo, and 'Erckmann-Chatrian.' He died in 1878.

SCHULTEN, ARNOLD, a landscape painter of the Düsseldorf school, born in 1809, entered the Düsseldorf Academy in 1822, and in 1849 established his own atelier. His earlier landscapes are of German scenery, but his later ones of Switzerland, Bavaria, and Italy. He died in 1874.

SCHULTHESS, KARL, painter, was born at Neuchâtel in 1775. He taught himself drawing, and then gave lessons in his native place. After practising there for a time, he worked for some years in Dresden and Paris. He finally settled in Neuchâtel, and taught drawing at the municipal school.

SCHULTZ, DANIEL (SCHÜLTZ), painter and etcher, born at Dantzig about 1620, studied in Paris and Breslau, and painted many portraits. Three etchings of animals are assigned to Schultz. He died in 1686.

SCHULTZ, JOHANN KARL, architectural and landscape painter, born at Dantzig in 1801, received his first instruction from Breysig in the Academy of that city. In 1820 he went to Berlin, where he studied under Hummel, and in 1823 to Munich, where from a personal acquaintance with Quaglio he learned much, and where he also painted his first pictures, the Cathedrals of Meissen and Ratisbon. In 1824 he went to Italy, and his 'Interior of Milan Cathedral' made his reputation. In 1832 he was appointed Professor of Drawing and Director to the Art School at Dantzig. He etched several plates. He died at Dantzig in 1873.

SCHULTZE, FRANZISKA, a flower painter, born at Weimar in 1805. She modelled herself on Huysum, Seghers, Mignon, and De Heem. She died at Weimar in 1864.

SCHULZ, KARL FRIEDRICH, genre and landscape painter, born at Selchow in 1796, was the son of a baker. He served in the campaigns of 1814 and 1815, and then applied himself to art at the Academy of Berlin. In 1821 he travelled through Holland, France, and England, and copied some of Van Eyck's works for the Berlin Museum. For a short time he was a teacher at the Berlin Academy. His 'Cuxhaven,' 'Storm at Calais,' and 'Poachers,' are in the Berlin National Gallery. He was called 'Jagd Schulz,' from his hunting pictures. He died in 1866.

SCHULZ, LEOPOLD, painter, born at Vienna in 1804, studied in Vienna, Munich, and Rome where he painted a portrait of Gregory XVI. On his return he painted scenes from Homer and Theocritus in the new palace at Munich. In 1837 he painted the Martyrdom of St. Florian for the church of that saint. He died in Heiligenstadt, near Vienna, in 1873.

SCHULZE, CHRISTIAN GOTTFRIED, was born at Dresden in 1749, and learned the rudiments of design from Charles Hutin. After being taught engraving by Giuseppe Camerata, he went to Paris, where he profited by the lessons of J. G. Wille, and other eminent engravers. On his return to Saxony he engraved several portraits and other subjects, particularly some of the plates in the 'Dresden Gallery.' He died in 1819.

SCHUMACHER, KARL GEORG CHRISTIAN, painter, born at Doberan in 1797. After receiving some slight instruction from Suhrlandt, he studied at Dresden and in Italy. On his return to Germany he painted at Schwerin some frescoes in the Government House, which were afterwards destroyed by fire. He was appointed court-painter at Schwerin, but was obliged to relinquish his profession in 1863, when he became totally blind. He etched six plates, and executed three lithographs.

SCHUMANN, JOHANN GOTTLÖB, was born at Dresden in 1761. He engraved several landscapes in a neat, spirited style. He resided some time in London, where he worked in conjunction with W. Byrne. The following are his chief plates :

- A Landscape; after Ruysdael.
- A View in Saxony; after Klengel.
- Two Landscapes with animals; after the same.
- A Landscape, Morning; after Bath; engraved conjointly with W. Byrne.
- A View of Windsor Castle; after Hadges; the same.
- Scene from Oberon; after Koch.

He died at Dresden in 1810.

SCHUMANN, KARL FRANZ JAKOB, painter, born at Berlin in 1767, studied first under Frisch, but afterwards travelled in Italy. In 1801 he was appointed Professor of Anatomy to the Berlin Academy. He died in 1827.

SCHÜMER, JOHANN, a German engraver, practising at Prague in the 18th century. He is known only by five plates of animals.

SCHUPPEN, H. VAN. This name (or its monogram, H. V. S., the H and V joined, the S on the bar of H) appears on landscapes engraved after Giovanni Maggi.

SCHUPPEN, JAKOB VAN, (SCUPPEN,) born in Paris in 1670, son of Pieter van Schuppen, studied under Largillière, whose style he adopted. His productions as a portrait and historical painter gained him a reputation at Vienna, where he became court-painter and Director of the Academy which he had helped to found. There are portraits by him in the Belvedere at Vienna, the Museum at Amsterdam, and the Liechtenstein Gallery. He died in Vienna in 1751.

SCHUPPEN, PIETER VAN, a Flemish designer and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1623. After working for a time in his native city, he went to Paris, where he became a pupil of Nanteuil, and hence was generally known as 'le petit Nanteuil.' His design is correct, and he handled the burin with firmness and dexterity. He engraved portraits, some from his own designs, and historical subjects after various masters. He died in Paris in 1702. Nagler gives a list of 119 plates by him; the following are among the best :

- Louis XIV.; after C. Le Brun. 1662.
- The Cardinal d'Este. 1662.
- The Cardinal de Mazarin; after Mignard.
- The Chancellor Séguier; after C. Le Brun.
- François Villani, Bishop of Tournay; after L. François.
- François M. le Tellier, Marquis de Louvois; after Le Févre.
- Louis le Pelletier, President of the Parliament; after de Largillière.
- Frans Vander Meulen, Painter; after the same.
- The 'Madonna della Sedia;' after Raphael. 1661.
- The Holy Family, with St. John, who holds a pigeon; after Seb. Bourdon.
- The Holy Family; after Gaspar de Crayer.
- St. Sebastian, with an angel drawing out the arrow; after Vandyck.
- King David; after Ph. de Champagne.

Some of his portraits appeared in Perrault's 'Hommes Illustres.'

SCHURIG, KARL WILHELM, born at Leipsic in 1818, studied there, and in Dresden under Bendemann, after which he spent some time in Italy, and then returned to Dresden, where in 1857 he was elected Professor to the Academy. His principal pictures are: a 'Resurrection,' in the church at Eppendorf; 'Siegfried and Chrimhild'; 'The Emperor Albrecht and the Swiss Envoys'; and, in the Gallery at Dresden, 'The Bishop of Spire taking Persecuted Jews under his Protection.' His drawings from the old masters were much esteemed, among them are :

- Madonna di San Sisto; after Raphael.
- Heads from the St. Cecilia; after the same.
- Madonna with Child; after Correggio.
- 'La Notte'; after the same.

He died at Dresden in 1874.

SCHURTZ, CORNELIUS NICHOLAS, an indifferent German engraver, who resided at Nuremberg about the year 1670. He was living in 1689. He engraved portraits of celebrated physicians, and small emblematical subjects; his prints are marked with his name at full length, or with the letters C. N. S., sometimes in a monogram.

SCHURMANN, ANNA MARIA, born at Cologne in 1607, from her cradle displayed extraordinary talents. She is said to have been able to read when she was only three years old, and at seven had made great proficiency in Latin, which she had acquired from occasionally overhearing her brothers' lessons with their tutor. Her father procured her the means of acquiring a fuller knowledge of Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, which became so familiar to her, that she not only wrote but spoke them with fluency and correctness, and mastered a great variety of accomplishments besides. But her inclusion here is justified by her powers as an artist. She painted her own portrait, and those of several of her friends, and sculptured several busts, some of which have been preserved. She etched and engraved some plates, among which is a portrait of herself, signed Anna Maria Schurmans an.

cat. XXXIII. CD. IX. CXL. A. M. S. fec., and inscribed with these verses:

Cernitis hic pietâ nostras in imagine vultus:
Si negat Ars formam, gratia vestra dabit.

At a somewhat advanced age she embraced the opinions of Labbada, and followed him to Altona, but after his death she returned to Holland, and settled at Wiewert, near Leeuwarden, where she died in 1678. There is a portrait of her, by Lievens, in the National Gallery.

SCHUSCHARDT, CHRISTIAN, a German painter, was for a time Director of the Free School of Design at Weimar, where he died in 1870.

SCHUSTER, JOHANN MARTIN, born at Nuremberg about 1667, was Director of the Nuremberg Academy, where he died in 1738.

SCHÛT, CORNELIS, was born at Antwerp in 1597, and was a disciple, at least, of Rubens, although it is not certain what the exact relation between them was. He painted much in the Antwerp churches. Of his altar-pieces, the best are his 'Nativity' and 'Assumption of the Virgin' in the church of the Jesuits; a 'Dead Christ, with the Virgin and St. John,' in St. Jacques, which has sometimes been mistaken for a work of Vandyck; the 'Martyrdom of St. George,' in the cathedral, and the 'Martyrdom of St. James,' in the Museum at Brussels. He also painted subjects from history and classic fable. He is said to have visited his brother, Pieter Schut, at Madrid, and to have painted a picture on the staircase of the imperial college, representing St. Francis Xavier baptizing the Indians. Schut frequently painted figures within the garlands of Seghers; he also etched a considerable number of plates from his own designs. Schut died at Antwerp in 1655. Vandyck painted his portrait among the eminent artists of his country.

SCHÛT, CORNELIS, the younger, the son of Peter Schut, an engineer in the Spanish service, was born at Antwerp, and was partly instructed by his uncle, Cornelis Schut, the elder; he afterwards went with his father to Spain and practised at Seville. He was one of the founders of the Academy in that city, and contributed liberally to its support. Of his ability and character Bermudez speaks in eulogistic terms. Some of his pictures are to be found at Seville, and it is said that his drawings resemble those of Murillo, and frequently pass for such. He died at Seville in 1676.

SCHÛTER. This man engraved, about the year 1760, a portrait of Rembrandt, then in the collection of the Marquis Gerini, now no. 60 in the Pitti Gallery.

SCHÛTER, DAN. See SAITER.

SCHÛTZ, JOHANN GEORG, painter, born at Frankfurt in 1755, son and pupil of Christian Georg Schütz I. He went in 1776 to the Academy at Düsseldorf, and afterwards to Rome. On his return he painted historical and genre pictures and landscapes. He died in 1813.

SCHÛTZ, (or SCHYZ), KARL, born at Vienna in 1746, was an architect, but also practised drawing and engraving. In conjunction with Ziegler and Jantscha he engraved a series of views of Vienna, and, by himself, various landscapes and military scenes. He died in 1800.

SCHÛTZ, HERMANN, a German engraver and pupil of Ainsler. His most important work was a well-executed series of sketches after Genelli. He died at Munich in 1869.

SCHÛTZ, CHRISTIAN GEORG (I), painter, born at Flörsheim, near Mayence, in 1718, went to Frankfurt in 1731 to study under Hugo Schlegel, and also worked under Appiani. Most of his pictures are landscapes, of which the figures and animals were painted in by W. F. Hirt, and afterwards by Pffor. He died at Frankfurt in 1791.

SCHÛTZ, CHRISTIAN GEORG (II), nephew and pupil of Christian Georg I., was born at Flörsheim 1758, copied first the works of his uncle, but afterwards devoted himself to painting Rhine scenery in water-colours. About 1789 he became curator of the Frankfurt Museum, in which capacity he fraudulently sold some pictures ascribed to Holbein, which the city had afterwards to repurchase. He died in 1823.

SCHÛTZ, FRANZ, painter, born at Frankfurt in 1751, son and pupil of Christian Georg I. He painted views in Switzerland. A journey to Milan exercised a very good influence over his work. He was a lover of wine, music, and practical jokes, and died at Sacconay in 1781.

SCHUYLENBURGH, HEMBRICK VAN, a Dutch painter, practising about 1647 at Middleburg.

SCHWABEDA, JOHANN MICHAEL, a painter of landscapes, fruit, and flowers, was born at Erfurt in 1734. He began life as a modeller in wax, but abandoned this for painting. In 1760 he was appointed court painter at Anspach, where he died in 1794.

SCHWALBE, OREST. See KIPRENSKY.

SCHWANFELDER, CHARLES HENRY, animal painter, born at Leeds in 1773, where he chiefly practised. He painted animals, landscapes, and occasionally portraits. He was appointed animal painter to George III., and afterwards to the Prince Regent. He died in 1837.

SCHWARTZ, a German engraver, who resided at Nuremberg about the year 1626. He engraved portraits and a series of plates for 'Icones Bibliopolarum et Typographorum,' published at Nuremberg in the year above mentioned.

SCHWARTZ, JAN. See SWART.

SCHWARTZ, G., a military painter, practising at Petersburg, was born at Berlin in 1800, but entered the service of the Russian court and settled in Russia in 1830. Several of his battle-pieces are in the old royal Schloss at Berlin.

SCHWARTZ, MICHAEL, painter, an imitator of Dürer, who flourished at the beginning of the 16th century, and in 1512 executed an altar-piece for St. Mary's Church at Dantzic, with scenes from the life of the Virgin and the Passion of Christ.

SCHWARTZENBERG, MELCHIOR, was an engraver on wood, who cut some frontispieces for Feyerabend the bookseller. He worked from about 1530 to about 1550.

SCHWARZ, CHRISTOPH, was born at Ingolstadt in 1550, and became the pupil of Bockspurger, in Munich. He afterwards entered the school of Titian, and after passing some years at Venice he returned to Munich, where he was appointed painter to the court, and where he resided for the remainder of his life. He painted many pictures for the public buildings of Munich, and for the Elector. Several of these have been engraved by Jan Sadeler. Schwartz died at Munich about 1597.

SCHWARZ, HANS, historical and portrait painter of the 16th century, was born at Oettingen, in Suabia. In 1520 he was at Antwerp, and later made the acquaintance of Dürer, whose portrait he painted at the house of the Fuggers. In 1540 he married the widow of Hans Leonhard Schläffelin.

SCHWARZ, MARTIN, living in the last part of the 15th century, was a native of Rothenburg. His pictures are sometimes attributed to Martin Schongauer. His principal works are: a 'Christ on the Cross' in the church of Schwabach, near Nuremberg; an altar-picture for the Dominican church at Rothenburg, where he lived as a lay member, comprising 'The Angelic Salutation,' 'The Offering of the Three Kings,' 'The Death of Mary,' 'The Burial of Christ,' and 'The Virgin and Child.' These are now dispersed.

SCHWARZ, PAUL WOLFGANG, an engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1760, studied at Basle under Mehel, and became in 1789 court engraver to the Duke of Sachsen-Coburg-Saalfeld. He died in 1815.

SCHWARZENBURG, Princess PAULINE VON, born September 2, 1774, etched sixteen views of her estates in Bohemia, published in 1814 and 1815, and other plates.

SCHWED, B., a painter who flourished in the 16th century at Bamberg, and with Georg Glaser executed a series of wall paintings in the Carmelite cloister at Frankfurt. Copies from them are in the Stadel Museum.

SCHWEGMAN, HENDRIK, a flower painter and engraver, was born at Haarlem in 1761, and studied under P. van Loo. He engraved and coloured the prints for a work entitled 'Icones Plantarum rariorum'; he also etched several landscapes after E. van Drielst and others, in the manner of Anthony Waterloo. He died at Haarlem in 1816.

SCHWEICKART, JOHANN ADAM, engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1722, studied under Preissler, and in Italy. He lived eighteen years in Florence, where he engraved several of the gems in the collection published by Stosch. On his return to Germany he produced many plates after the old masters, and won some reputation by his engravings from washed drawings. He died in 1787.

SCHWEICKHARDT, HEINRICH WILHELM, painter, was born at Brandenburg in 1746. He studied under Girolamo Lapis, and settling in the Hague, became Director of the Academy. In 1786, in consequence of the disturbances in Holland, he came to England, and resided in London for several years. He painted landscapes and cattle, particularly frost-pieces, and etched a set of plates of animals, which he dedicated to Mr. West in 1788. He died in London in 1797.

SCHWEIZER, JOHANN, was a native of Heidelberg, and flourished about the year 1660. He worked for the booksellers. He engraved the frontispiece and plates for 'Parnassus Heidelbergensis, omnium illustrissimæ hujus academici professorum icones exhibens,' some of which are from his own drawings. Schweizer died in 1679.

SCHWERDGEBURTH, AMAÏE CHARLOTTE, sister of Karl Schwerdgeburth the engraver, was born at Dresden in 1795, and went early with her father to Dessau, where and at Weimar she received her training in art. In 1822 she returned to Dresden, and made a name by her copies. She died at Dresden in 1831.

SCHWERDGEBURTH, KARL AUGUST, engraver, was born at Gera in 1785, and became a pupil of the Dresden Academy. He engraved a few portraits, among them those of the Grand Duchess Maria Paulowna, the Grand Duke of Weimar, and Goethe. He also painted a 'Luther at the Diet of Worms.' He died at Dresden in 1878.

SCHWERDGEBURTH, OTTO, son of Karl Schwerdgeburth, born at Weimar in 1835 (1837), studied first under his father, and then under Preller. In 1856 he went to Antwerp, where he painted in the Town-hall and the church of St. Nicolas. In 1860 he returned to Weimar, where he died in 1866.

SCHWIND, MORITZ LUDWIG, RITTER VON, historical painter, born at Vienna in 1804, attended the Viennese Academy up to 1819, and worked under Ludwig Schnorr. In 1828 he went to Munich, where he painted twenty-nine frescoes from Tieck's poems, in the palace. From 1840-44 he lived in Carlsruhe, and painted a wall picture in the Gallery. Between 1853-55 he painted at the Wartburg a series of pictures from the life of St. Elizabeth. In 1859 he designed thirty-four windows for Glasgow Cathedral. Other works by him are an altar-piece for the Frankkirche, Munich, frescoes for the Pfarrkirche, Munich, the Loggia decoration, the Viennese Opera House, 'The Symphony,' a quadruple picture in the Munich New Pinakothek. Schwind died at Munich in 1871.

SCHYNDAL, (or SCENDEL,) BERNARD, born at Haerlem in 1634, was a scholar of Hendrik Mommers. He painted assemblies of peasants merry-making, in the style of J. M. Molenaar. He treated those subjects with considerable humour, and his pictures are ingeniously composed. He died in 1693.

SCHYNVOET, JAKOB, a Dutch engraver, who resided in London about the year 1700. He engraved some bird's-eye views of country houses, from his own designs, in a style resembling that of John Kip. He is supposed to have worked as late as 1727.

SCIACCA, TOMMASO, a Sicilian artist, a native of Mazzara, born about 1734. He worked at Rome with the Cavalucci, and painted some large compositions for churches at Rovigo.

SCIAMERONI, LO. See FUBINI, FILIPPO.

SCIAMINOSI, RAPHAEL. See SCAMINOSI.

SCIARPELLONI, LORENZO. See CREDI LI.

SCILLA, (or SILLA,) AGOSTINO, born at Messina in 1639, was a scholar of Antonio Ricci, called Il Barbalunga. Such was the promise he evinced, that Barbalunga prevailed on the senate to settle a pension on him, to enable him to pursue his studies at Rome, where he frequented the school of Andrea Sacchi. After a residence of four years at Rome, he returned to Messina, and established an academy, which was much frequented until the political troubles of 1674 obliged him to fly to Rome. He excelled in painting the heads of old men; while the landscapes and animals in his pictures are very true to nature. He died at Rome in 1700. In some of his works he was assisted by his brother Giacinto, a good artist, who lived till about 1711. Agostino had a son, SAVERIO, who was also a painter.

SCIPIONE DI GAETA. See PULZONE.

SCIORINI, (or DELLA SCIORINA,) LORENZO, an Italian painter of the 16th century, a native of Florence, was a pupil of Bronzino. He was one of the artists employed to decorate Michelangelo's catafalque.

SCITIVAUX DE GREYSCHÉ, ROGER DE, born at Nancy in 1830, was a pupil of Couture. Between 1857 and 1865 he exhibited portraits and genre pictures at the Salon. He died in 1870 in Paris.

SCOENERE, JAN, (or DE SCOENERE,) a Flemish painter of the 15th century, who had an atelier for pupils at Ghent. He is thought to have been a pupil of the Van Eycks. In 1443 he painted an altar-piece in collaboration with Baldwin van Wytevelde.

SCOENERE, JAN, (or DE SCOENERE,) the younger, painted at Ghent in the 16th century, working chiefly for the municipality. There were various other artists of this name practising at Ghent and Bruges in the 15th century. For a curious document relating to one SALADIN DE SCOENERE, see 'Peintres Gantois,' by M. Ed. de Busscher.

SCOLARI, GIUSEPPE, was a native of Vicenza, and flourished about the year 1580. He was a disciple of Giovanni Battista Maganza. He painted history both in oil and in fresco; and there are many of his works in the churches of Vicenza, Verona, and Venice. According to Papillon, he executed several wood-cuts, among them the following:

The Entombment.

The Dead Christ, with the Virgini Mary.

St. Jerome holding a Crucifix.

The Rape of Proserpine.

SCOPPA, ORAZIO, an Italian engraver, who flourished at Naples about the year 1642, and was probably a goldsmith. He engraved a set of fifteen designs for chalices, croziers, and other ecclesiastical ornaments.

SCOPULA, GIOVANNI MARIA, an Italian painter of the 13th century, a native of Irunto. His only recorded work is a triptych in the Campana Collection, in the Louvre, the three subjects being, 'The Annunciation,' 'The Visitation,' and 'The Nativity.' It bears the following inscription: Joanes Maria Scopula de Irunto pinxit in Otranto.

SCORE, W., portrait painter, a native of Devonshire, pupil and drapery painter to Sir Joshua Reynolds, who exhibited portraits at the Academy from 1781 to 1794.

SCORODOMOFF, GABRIEL, (SCROUDOMOFF,) a draughtsman and engraver, was born at St. Petersburg about 1748, but came to England when young and studied under Bartolozzi, whose manner he imitated. It is said that he was the first Russian to obtain a reputation as an engraver. He lived in London from 1775 to 1782, and engraved after Reynolds, West, Hamilton, and Angelica Kauffman, also a portrait of Mrs. De Louthembourg from his own design. He engraved a portrait of the Empress Catherine II., after F. Rocotoff, probably after his return to St. Petersburg, where he died in 1792.

SCORZA, SINIBALDO, born at Voltaggio, near Genoa, in 1589, was a scholar of Giovanni Battista Paggi. He painted landscapes, with well-composed groups of figures and animals, and copied with the pen some of Albrecht Dürer's prints. He died in 1631.

SCORZINI, PIETRO, an Italian painter of the 18th century, who studied at Bologna, and practised as a scene painter at Lucca.

SCOTIN, GÉRARD, the elder, a French engraver, born at Gonesse, near Paris, in 1642. He was a pupil of François Poilly, the elder, whose style he imitated. Among his prints we may name:

The Marriage of St. Catherine; after Aless. Veronese.

The Communion of the Magdalene; after Domenichino.

The Circumcision; after P. Mignard.

The Baptism of Christ; after the same.

The Presentation in the Temple; after C. Le Brun.

The Country Life; after Dom. Feti.

He died in 1715.

SCOTIN, JEAN BAPTISTE, said to be the son of the elder Gérard, flourished in Paris in the first half of the 18th century. He engraved after H. Rigaud, Boucher, Watteau, Lancret, Pater, and other French painters. Some of his prints are dated as early as 1710.

SCOTIN, LOUIS GÉRARD, the younger, the nephew of Gérard Scotin, was born in Paris in 1690, and taught by his uncle. He came to London about 1733, to help in the plates for a translation of Picart's 'Religious Ceremonies.' In 1745 he engraved two of the six plates of the 'Marriage à la Mode,' for Hogarth, and several plates after Frank Hayman. We have also by him:

The Birth of Adonis; after Boucher.

Belisarius; after Vandyck.

And a few more.

SCOTNIKOFF, EGOR (GEORG), an engraver, who flourished at the end of the 18th century, was a pupil and member of the St. Petersburg Academy, where he studied under Klauber. He engraved a 'Christ on the Cross,' after Lebrun.

SCOTT, DAVID, a Scottish historical painter, born at Edinburgh in 1806, son of the engraver Robert Scott, first drew and engraved a series of designs, after Stothard, for Thomson's 'Scottish Melodies,' and then commenced painting. He produced in 1828, 'The Hopes of Early Genius dispelled by Death.' He became an Associate of the Scotch Academy in 1830. In 1832 he went to Italy, and on return was elected a Scottish Academician. He sent pictures to the Westminster Hall competitions of 1842 and 1844, but without success, a failure that caused him deep disappointment. He died in 1849. David Scott's imagination was active and poetic, but scarcely of the kind that finds its right vehicle in paint. He was a good colourist, and an expressive rather than correct draughtsman. The following list comprises his best works.

Ariel and Caliban. (Scot. Nat. Gallery.)

A Vintager. (Do.)

Paracelsus lecturing.

Peter the Hermit.

Vasco de Gama meeting the Spirit of the Cape. (Trinity House, Leith.)

Orestes and the Furies.

The Dead Rising.

Achilles Mourning Patroclus.

He also published several series of designs in outline:

'Monograms of Man.' 1831.

'The Ancient Mariner.' 1837.

Illustrations to the 'Architecture of the Heavens,' by Prof. Nichols. 1848.

Illustrations to the 'Pilgrim's Progress,' published after his death.

Mr. W. B. Scott published a memoir of his brother, David Scott, in 1850.

SCOTT, EDMUND, engraver, born in London about 1746, was a pupil of Bartolozzi. He engraved a portrait of the Prince of Wales, by himself, and several subjects after Morland, Stothard, and Ramberg. He died about 1810.

SCOTT, JOHN, an eminent engraver of animals, particularly of horses and dogs, was born at Newcastle in 1774, where he served his apprenticeship to a tallow-chandler. At the expiration of his time, he engraved a series of profile portraits for Angus's 'French Revolution,' and then came to London, where his friend Pollard, a Newcastle man, gave him lessons in drawing and engraving. Scott's name is to be found in the publications of Tresham and Otley, in Britton's 'Cathedral Antiquities,' Westall's 'Illustrations of the Book of Common Prayer, &c. ; but it is in the 'Sportsman's Cabinet,' 'Daniel's Rural Sports,' and a 'Series of Horses and Dogs,' that he excels, as an engraver of animals, all the Englishmen who had preceded him. Some of his detached pieces are of great excellence, particularly 'Breaking Cover,' after Philip Reinagle; 'The Death of the Fox,' after Sawrey Gilpin; 'Warwick, a Famous Racer,' after Abraham Cooper; and a few landscapes, after Weenix, Gainsborough, Callcott, and others. He died at Chelsea in 1828.

SCOTT, JOHN HENDERSON, water-colour painter, the son of William Henry Scott, born February 10, 1829, practised at Brighton, where he had a great local reputation as a teacher, and was an active member of the Brighton Fine Arts Society. He was an occasional exhibitor at the London Water-Colour Galleries, and at the chief provincial exhibitions, but reserved his work more especially for the Brighton Picture Gallery. He painted views of Sussex scenery, views in Normandy, &c. He died at Brighton, December 6, 1886.

SCOTT, MARIA, the sister of William Henry Scott, was a water-colour painter, who practised at Brighton. She became a member of the Water-Colour Society in 1823, and was an industrious exhibitor of fruit and flower pieces, both under her maiden name, and after her marriage in 1830, as Mrs. Brooksbank.

SCOTT, ROBERT, the best Scottish engraver of his time, was born on the 13th November, 1771, at Lanark. He was educated there and at Musselburgh, and apprenticed to Alexander Robertson, a landscape engraver in Edinburgh, in 1787, when he also entered the Trustees' Academy. His first successful engravings were twelve views round Edinburgh. He afterwards, for twenty years, executed the monthly prints of new houses, country seats, &c., for the 'Scots' Magazine,' and many plates for Dr. Anderson's 'Bee,' Barry's 'History of Orkney,' 'Scenery of the Gentle Shepherd,' Burns, &c. &c. He died in January, 1841. Many of his apprentices became distinguished, among them John Burnett, James Stewart, John Horsburgh; also William Douglas, miniature painter, and Thomas Brown, the writer on Natural History. Robert Scott was the father of David Scott, R.S.A., and Mr. W. B. Scott.

SCOTT, SAMUEL, an eminent English painter of views and sea-pieces, was born early in the 18th century, in London, and there practised from about 1725 to his death. He was the friend of Hogarth, and formed one in the famous water-party to Gravesend in 1732. His sea-pieces, chiefly in oil, were very popular, and he was one of the earliest aquarellists. In his topographical views he frequently introduced groups of well-drawn figures. His 'View of the Tower of London on the King's Birthday' was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1771, and some of his works appeared at the Spring Gardens Rooms. After a long and prosperous career in London, he retired to Bath, where he died of gout, in October, 1772. There is a good portrait of him by Hudson in the National Gallery, where there are also two of his own works: 'Old London Bridge' and 'Old Westminster Bridge.'

SCOTT, WILLIAM HENRY STOTHARD, water-colour

painter, born March 7, 1783, was a member of the old Water-Colour Society, and a constant exhibitor in its galleries for many years. He practised at Brighton, and most of his works are subjects from Sussex rural scenery. He died December 27, 1850.

SCOTTO, FELICE, flourished at the end of the 15th century. He painted many pictures at Como for private individuals, and at S. Croce a series of frescoes from the life of S. Bernardo.

SCOTTO, (or SCOTTI,) FRANCESCO, an Italian engraver, was born at Venice about 1760. His fac similes of original drawings by Raphael, with others by Rosaspina, were published by the Abbate Celotti under the title 'Disegni originali di Raffaello per la prima volta publicata, esistenti nella Imp. Accademia di Belle Arti di Venezia,' 1829, folio. F. Scotto also engraved Leonardo da Vinci's (?) so-called 'Modesty and Vanity.'

SCOTTO, (or SCOTTI,) GIROLAMO, born in 1780, was educated in the school of Longhi, at Milan. He was one of the best pupils of that master. The following are among his best plates:

The Madonna di San Sisto; after Raphael.

The Madonna di Polignio; after the same.

Mater pulchre dilectionis; after a picture discovered at Genoa in 1823, and ascribed to Raphael.

The Terranova Madonna; after Raphael.

The Magdalen at the feet of Christ; after P. Veronese.

Children healed by the garments of St. Philip; after A. del Sarto.

SCOTTO, STEFANO, a Milanese painter, who flourished at the latter part of the 15th and commencement of the 16th centuries. He was an admirable painter of grotteschi, and had the honour of being the master of Gaudenzio Ferrari; he is also believed to have been the real master of Luini.

SCOUGALL, GEORGE, a Scotch painter, of the end of the 17th and beginning of the 18th centuries. He is said to have been the son of John Scougall, and practised portrait painting, imitating the manner of Lely. Many portraits attributed to the elder Scougall are so inferior in artistic merit to the work of that painter, and so evidently produced under the influence of Lely, as to make it all but certain they are by the younger painter.

SCOUGALL, JOHN, a Scotch painter of the middle of the 17th century, is supposed to have been a native of Leith. Much obscurity exists as to his history. Tradition states him to have been a favourite of James VI., who is said to have rewarded him with a ring for a portrait he painted of Prince Henry, but existing portraits by him are dated so late in the 17th century as to throw much doubt on this story. Such are the portrait of Sir Archibald Primrose, Lord Clerk Register, dated 1670 (belonging to Lord Rosebery), and two portraits of the ancestors of the Clerk family, dated 1674 (at Penicuik House). In the Scottish National Gallery there is a portrait of John Scougall, painted by himself, holding a ring in his hand, in supposed allusion to the above-mentioned legend.

SCOULER, JAMES, miniature painter, was a member of the Free Society in 1763, having previously exhibited with the Society of Artists. He is said to have gained a premium from the Society of Arts when only fourteen, in 1755. He exhibited constantly at the Royal Academy, from its foundation till 1787, sending chiefly miniatures, but occasionally crayon drawings.

SCRETA, KARL, (Count SCOTNOWSKY VON ZAWORZIC,) painter, was born of a noble family at Prague in 1604. For several years he lived and worked at Venice, Bologna, and Florence; in 1634 he accompanied his friend, Wilhelm Bauer, to Rome. By his talents and application he obtained a high reputation in Italy, and was even appointed professor in the Academy at Bologna. On his return to his native country he became a member of the Academy at Prague, and, in 1652, principal of that institution. Many of his works have been engraved. In the Dresden Gallery there are ten of his pictures. Many of his subjects are taken from sacred history, and the legends of the Saints; of the latter he delighted to paint fanciful portraits. It is recorded that he painted his own portrait as St. Giles, in the church of St. Martin, and again as St. Luke painting the Virgin, in the Thein-kirche, both at Prague. He engraved a curious plate, in two sheets, which was published with the title 'Philosophia Universa in Universitati Pragensi;' it is signed Car. Secreta fec. 1666. He died at Prague in 1674.

SCRIVEN, EDWARD, engraver in the chalk and dotted manner, born at Alcester, near Stratford-on-Avon, in 1775, was a pupil of Robert Thew. His work is to be seen in 'Specimens of ancient Sculpture,' published by the society of Dilettanti, in Dibdin's 'Aedes Althorpianae;' in Tresham's 'Gallery of Pictures,' and other publications of the same class. He engraved Benjamin West's studies for the heads in his 'Christ Rejected'; many detached plates for Boydell and other publishers, after English artists; and a series of portraits, chiefly after Peter Lely, of the heroines of 'Grammont's Memoirs.' He died in 1841.

SCROPE, WILLIAM, (of Castle Coombe,) an amateur painter, born 1772. He published several books illustrated by his own pencil, among which we may mention, 'The Landscape Scenery of Scotland,' 'Days and Nights of Salmon Fishing,' and 'Days of Deer-stalking.' He occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy, and also at the British Institution, of which he was one of the directors. He died on the 20th of July, 1852.

SCROTS, WILLEM, a Flemish portrait painter of the 16th century, was appointed painter to Queen Mary of Hungary in 1537. He is said to have painted portraits of the Empress Elizabeth, mother of Mary of Hungary, and of Charles V. and his Empress, but these have disappeared.

SCROUDOMOFF. See SCRODOMOFF.

SCULPTORE, ADAMO, (GHISI ?) was born at Mantua in 1530, and is supposed to have been the son of Gio. Bat. Sculptore. He was a draughtsman and engraver, forming himself on Michelangelo and Giulio Romano. The dates on his plates range from 1566 to 1577, but he seems to have begun engraving long before the former year; and if the title-page to his series of plates after Michelangelo's frescoes in the Sistine Chapel be really by himself, he must have lived longer than is usually supposed, for it is dated 1585. He signed his plates with a monogram composed of an S. on the bar of an A. Of some 130 prints ascribed to him, the best, perhaps, are:

A Holy Family with Saints; after Giulio Romano.
A Pietà; after Michelangelo.

SCULPTORE, DIANA, (GHISI ?) was born at Mantua about 1535, and is believed to have been a daughter of Gio. Bat. Sculptore. The dates on her sixty plates range from 1581 to 1588. About 1579 she married the architect and sculptor, Francesco Ricciarelli, of Volterra, after which she occasionally added his name to hers in her signatures. In a few instances she signed her work with the single word Diana, sometimes with a monogram composed of a D. with an S. inside it, followed with the word incidebat or Mantuana. She engraved after Raphael, Zuccari, Paris Nogari, and especially Giulio Romano. Her best plates are:

The Martyrdom of St. Catherine.

The Feast of Psyche; after Giulio Romano.

The Woman taken in Adultery; after the same.

The Birth of John the Baptist; after the same.

The Birth of Apollo and Diana; after the same.

The Corpse of Patroclus carried off the Field; after the same.

Christ's charge to Peter; after Raphael.

SCULPTORE, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, (GHISI ?) called MANTOVANO and BERTANO, was born at Mantua in 1503. He was architect, painter, and engraver, and a disciple of Giulio Romano and Marc' Antonio. After the death of the former he became architect-in-chief to the Duke of Mantua. He is said to have designed altar-pieces for Mantuan churches, which were actually painted by Brusasorci, Guisoni, and Ippolito Costa. He engraved about twenty plates, the dates on which range from 1536 to 1540. In technique they are dry, deficient in half-tones, but good in drawing. He used to be considered the head of the Ghisi family, but later researches have gone far to prove that his name was really Sculptore, Scultore, or De' Scultori, and that the word 'Sculptor,' which occasionally follows his usual signature of I. B., or I. G., Mantnanus, was not a mark of condition, but a Latinized form of his name. His best plates are 'A Sally of the Trojans against the Greeks,' and 'Hercules and Antæus;' 'David beheading Goliath' (1540), and 'Mars and Venus' (1539), all after G. Romano. He died at Mantua in 1575.

SEATON, JOHN THOMAS, portrait painter, was the son of Christopher Seaton, the gem engraver. He was a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, and exhibited at the Academy between 1761 and 1777. About three years later he was practising with much success in Edinburgh, and was still living in 1806.

SEBASTIANI, LAZZARO, painter, flourished at Venice in the 15th century. He was a pupil of Alvise Vivarini. Nothing is known as to the dates of his birth or death. He is supposed to have been a native of Padua, but settled in Venice as early as 1470. In the Academy of Venice there are eight scenes from the history of St. Ursula, and a 'Presentation in the Temple,' by him, and in the Scuola di S. Giorgio degli Schiavoni, two series of scenes from the histories of St. George and St. Jerome. At Murano, in S. Donato, there is a Madonna with Saints, and in S. Antonio at Venice, a Pietà. His 'Coronation of the Virgin,' in the Bergamo Gallery, is dated 1490.

SEBASTIANO DEL PIOMBO. See LUCIANI.

SEBILLE, GYSBERT, a Dutch painter, of whom little is known, except that he lived in the middle of the 17th century. He painted the 'Judgment of Solomon' for the Town-house of Weesp, of which place he was a burgomaster. There is also an 'Assembly of the Magistrates in 1652' by him in that building.

SÉBRON, HIPPOLYTE, painter, born at Candebec in 1801, was a pupil of Daguerre. He began his career by painting dioramas. Later he devoted himself to easel pictures, and painted chiefly church interiors, ruins, public buildings, &c., and occasional portraits. He was a constant exhibitor at the Salon from 1831 to the year of his death, which took place in 1879.

SECANO, GERONIMO, a Spanish painter, born at Saragossa in 1638. After learning the rudiments in his native city, he visited Madrid, where he studied the great masters in the royal collection, and returned to Saragossa an able artist. Palomino praises his frescoes and oil pictures in the church of S. Pablo. For the last twenty years of his life he practised as a sculptor as well as painter. He had many pupils. He died in 1710.

SECCANTE, SEBASTIANO, was a native of Udine, and flourished at the beginning of the 16th century. He was a disciple of Pomponio Amalteo, and was a respectable painter of history and portraits. In the church of S. Giorgio, at Udine, there is a 'Christ bearing His Cross,' with angels holding the instruments of the Passion, by Seccante. He married the daughter of Pomponio Amalteo.

SECCHI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian painter of the 17th century. He was called IL CARAVAGGIO and CARAVAGGINO from the place of his birth, and practised about 1619. Lanzi states him to have painted an 'Epiphany' for S. Pietro in Gessato.

SECCHIARI, GIULIO, painter, was a native of Modena, but was educated at Bologna, in the school of the Carracci. He afterwards visited Rome and Mantua, where he painted several pictures, which were destroyed or carried away at the sacking of that city, in 1630. There are some of his works in the churches at Modena. He died in 1631.

SÉCHAN, POLYCARPE CHARLES, born in Paris in 1803, was a scene painter of much repute, and in this capacity was engaged at the Grande Opéra, where he painted the scenery for a great number of pieces. He was similarly employed at the Théâtre Français, the Théâtre de l'Ambigu, and the Porte St. Martin, and had a large practice as a restorer and decorator of theatre interiors, both in Paris and the provinces. He painted in the Dresden theatre, was charged with the decoration and furnishing of the Dolma-Baghtche Palace, Constantinople; and decorated the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels. Outside his theatrical employment his best known works in Paris were the restoration of the Galerie d'Apollon in the Louvre, and the transformation of the Pantheon into the church of St. Geneviève. He died in Paris, September 14, 1874.

SEDDON, THOMAS, landscape painter, the son of an eminent cabinet-maker, was born in London in 1821. He went in 1841 to Paris to study, and on his return designed for his father. In 1850 he took an important part in founding the North London School of Drawing and Modelling in Camden Town, where for some time he constantly taught. In 1851 he began to paint, and in 1852 he exhibited his first work, 'Penelope.' He afterwards turned to landscape. In 1853 and 1854 he travelled with Mr. Holman Hunt in the East, and setting out again two years later, he was taken ill at Cairo, where he died in 1856. His friends purchased and presented to the National Gallery his 'Jerusalem and the Valley of Jehoshaphat.'

SEDELMAYER, JEREMIAS JAKOB, was born in 1704, at Augsburg. He engraved some views of the Imperial Library at Vienna from his own designs, which were published in 1737. Also five plates from Gran's ceiling pictures in the same building. He died at Augsburg in 1761. Among his other plates we may name :

Portrait of Wolff; after Roy.
St. Rosalie and St. Theresa.
Four Allegories; after Solimena.

SEDELMEYR, JOHANN ANTON, a German painter and lithographer, born at Munich in 1797, studied in that city under Kobell and Georg von Dillis. He was a pleasing landscape painter, and lithographed a number of pictures in the Munich and Schleissheim Galleries.

SEDGWICK, WILLIAM, engraver, born in London in 1748, engraved under the influence of Bartolozzi after Angelica Kauffman, Penny, and others. He died about 1800.

SEEKATZ, JOHANN KONRAD, born at Grünstadt, in the Palatinate, in 1719, painted military scenes, scenes of peasant life, and landscapes with figures in the style of Brouwer. 'Girl with a Candle,' a 'Boy with a Chopping-block,' and a 'Boy with Dog,' are in the Staedel Museum, Frankfurt. He died at Darmstadt in 1768.

SEELE, JOHANN BAPTIST, painter and etcher, born at Mörsburg in 1775, was appointed court painter and director of the King's Gallery at Stuttgart in 1804. He painted the exploits of the Würtemberg troops in the years 1806 and 1809 in a series of pictures now in the Palace. He died in 1814.

SEELINGER, ALFRED, historical painter, a native of Bavaria, who painted a well-known picture, called 'Spartacus, Gladiator.' He died at Rio de Janeiro in 1873.

SEEMAN, ENOCH, (ZEEVAN) portrait painter, born in 1694, was the son of Isaac Seeman, a portrait painter of Dantzic, by whom he was brought to England. Here he painted many portraits, some of which have been engraved, and here he died in 1744. Enoch had a brother ISAAC, who died in 1751, and a son PAUL, both of whom were portrait painters.

SEGALA, GIOVANNI, born at Venice in 1663, was a scholar of Antonio Zanchi. A 'Conception,' by him, painted for the Scuola della Carità, Venice, is praised by Lanzi. He died in 1720.

SEGAR, FRANCIS and WILLIAM, two English portrait painters, brothers, who were practising in London in the 16th century, are mentioned by Meres in his 'Wits' Commonwealth,' published 1598.

SEGARRA, JAYME, a Spanish painter, who, in the year 1530, painted an altar-piece for Notre Dame de Belen, at Reus.

SEGHER, ANNE, miniature painter, was the daughter of a physician at Breda, and practised in the 16th century.

SEGHERS. See ZEGHERS.

SEGHIZZI, ANDREA, a decorative painter, born at Bologna in 1630, was a pupil of Albani, and painted in Ravenna, Modena, Parma, and Bologna.

SEGNA DI BUONAVENTURA, painter, who flourished at the beginning of the 14th century at Siena, was a pupil of Duccio di Buoninsegna. His chief works are a 'Majestà,' in the church of Castiglione Fiorentino at Arezzo, 'Christ on the Cross,' in the Abbey of S. Fiore, a 'Virgin with Saints,' in the Academy of Siena, and 'Christ on the Cross with the Virgin and St. John,' in the National Gallery in London.

SEGOVIA, JUAN DE, a Spanish marine painter, who resided at Madrid in the middle of the 17th century.

SEGUIER, JOHN, younger brother of William Seguier, born in London in 1785, studied at the Academy Schools, and painted views, among which are two of Oxford Market, and one of Kew Bridge. He succeeded his brother as superintendent of the British Institution, and died in London in 1856.

SEGUIER, WILLIAM, born in London in 1771, was the son of David Seguier, a well-known picture-dealer of the last century. He studied under George Morland, and painted views in and around the metropolis. He was appointed keeper of the royal pictures, and of the National Gallery on its foundation in 1824. He was also superintendent of the British Institution, and was an active 'restorer' of pictures. He died at Brighton in 1843.

SEGURA, ANTONIO DE, a painter and architect employed by Philip II. in 1580 to paint an altar-piece for the monastery of S. Yuste, and to copy Titian's 'Apotheosis of Charles V.' He died at Madrid in 1605.

SEGUVIRA, DOMENICO ANTONIO DE, a Portuguese painter of the 19th century. In his youth he showed such capacity for art, that a Portuguese minister sent him to Rome to study. In 1810 he returned to his native country, and practised there with success.

SEIBELS, KARL, landscape painter, was a pupil at the Düsseldorf Academy and of Achenbach. He painted scenes in Holland and Italy. He died at Naples in 1877.

SEIBOLD, CHRISTIAN, born at Mayence in 1697 (1703), painted portraits somewhat in the style of Denner. In 1749 he became painter to the Empress Maria Theresa. The Dresden Gallery has five of his portraits, including one of himself. He died at Vienna in 1768.

SEIDL, ANDREAS, painter and engraver, born at Munich in 1760. In 1781 the Elector sent him to Italy, where he gained a prize at the Academy of St. Luke in Rome, and became a Member of the Academies of Bologna and Parma. In 1787, on his return, he became Court-painter and Professor at the Munich Academy. He etched a few plates, chiefly 'Academies.' He died in 1834.

SEIDLER, CAROLINE LOUISE, born at Jena in 1786, was instructed by Roux, and by Goethe, whose portrait she painted. From 1818 to 1823 she studied in Italy, where she copied Raphael and Perugino. In 1823 she became teacher to the Princesses Maria and Augusta, at Weimar, and in 1824 curator of the Weimar Gallery. She painted portraits in oil and crayons, as well as religious, mythological, and romantic scenes. She died at Weimar in 1866.

SEILLER, JOHANN GEORG, of Schaffhausen, a mezzotint engraver, flourished about 1700. His plates are mostly portraits, and are good for their date. Among the best are:

- Portrait of the Emperor Joseph I.
- Do. J. H. Heidegger.
- Do. the Empress Eleonora.
- Do. the engraver Bartholomäus Kilian.
- A Monk attempting to kiss a Girl.

His plates are inscribed J. G. Seiller, fecit, or J. Georg Seiller fecit et ec., and sometimes Joh. Georg Seiller scæfufianus fecit.

SEINSHEIM, AUGUST KARL, GRAF VON, painter, lithographer, and etcher, born at Munich in 1789, began etching about 1809. While studying law at Landshut he learnt oil painting from Simon Klotz. From 1813 to 1816 he frequented the Munich Academy, where he studied under the Langers. In 1816 he went to Italy, and joined the so-called 'Nazarenes.' On his return to Munich he painted a 'Virgin and Child,' for the church at Grünbach, a 'Charge to Peter,' for the church at Vohburg, and other altar-pieces. He died at Munich in 1866.

1869. He etched ten plates, of which we may name:

- An Old Woman Reading.
- A Young Woman with a Child.
- A Madonna with the Child Jesus.
- A Man's Head.
- A Roman Mother.

SEISENEGGER, JAKOB, born in Austria in 1505, painted the portrait of the Emperor Charles V., and became in 1531 court-painter to the Grand Duke Ferdinand. He died at Linz in 1567.

SELB, JOSEPH, born at Stockach in the Tyrol, in 1784, was first instructed by his brother KARL, also a painter, and then went in 1799 to Düsseldorf. He afterwards worked in Munich, and gained a name by his lithographs after Vernet. In 1816 he founded a Lithographic Institute. In 1820 he associated himself with von Mannlich in carrying on Strixner's 'Munich Gallery.' He died at Munich in 1832.

SELIGMANN, JOHANN MICHAEL, engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1720, was instructed by the Preisslers. He visited Rome and Petersburg, and on his return he engraved many plates for botanical and anatomical books. He died in 1762.

SELL, CHRISTIAN, historical painter, was born at Altona in 1831. He studied at the Düsseldorf Academy from 1851 to 1856, and formed a close intimacy with Th. Hildebrand and W. Schadow. He further improved himself by travels in Germany and Belgium, and accompanied the Prussian army in the campaign against Austria in 1866, and in the French war in 1870. His favourite subjects were battles and military scenes, taken sometimes from German history, sometimes from modern warfare. He died at Düsseldorf in 1883. In the Berlin Gallery there is a 'Scene after Königgrätz' by him.

SELLENY, JOSEPH, born at Meidling, near Vienna, in 1824. He studied at the Vienna Academy and under Ender and Steinfield, with the former of whom he travelled in the Tyrol and Italy. In 1857-59 he travelled with the Crown Prince of Austria, the present Emperor, to North Africa, the Canary and Cape Verde Islands, and the Brazils. He died insane in 1875.

SELLET, JAMES, born in 1764, was an English portrait, fruit, flower, and genre painter. He died at Norwich in 1840.

SELLIER, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, painter, was born at Nancy, December 25, 1830. He was a pupil of Leborne and of Léon Cogniet, and in 1857 gained the 'Prix de Rome.' He subsequently became keeper of the Museum of Nancy, where he died November 23, 1882. He executed the paintings for the chapel of St. Denis, in the church of St. Bernard, Nancy, and the following works by him are in the Museum:

- |                        |                       |
|------------------------|-----------------------|
| The Penitent Magdalen. | } A Kitchen Interior. |
| The Death of Leander.  |                       |
| The Levite of Ephraim. |                       |
|                        | Study of a Head.      |
|                        | An Italian Souvenir.  |

SELMA, FERNANDO, a Spanish engraver, was born at Valencia about 1750. He studied in Madrid and Paris. He is among the best of the Spanish engravers. His later manner resembles more that of Edelinek than of his master, Carmona. He engraved the portraits of Cortes and Solis, prefixed to the quarto edition of 'Historia de la Conquista de Mexico,' published at Madrid in 1783, and afterwards engraved the plates for the 'Maritime Atlas of Spain,' which occupied him several years. He also engraved portraits of Charles V., after Titian, of Magellan the navigator, and various others. One of his best plates is the Spasimo of Raphael. We may also name:

La Madonna del Pesce; after Raffaele.

The Virgin and Child; also after Raffaele.

Selma died in 1810.

SEMENTI, GIACOMO, (SEMENZA,) painter, was born at Bologna in 1580, and was a fellow-student with Francesco Gessi, under Denys Calvaert and Guido Reni. He was a clever follower of the style of Guido, and painted pictures for the churches at Bologna. Such are a 'Martyrdom of St. Cecilia,' in the church of St. Elena; a 'Marriage of St. Catharine,' in S. Francesco; a 'St. Sebastian,' in S. Michele; and a 'Crucifixion,' in S. Gregorio. A 'Martyrdom of St. Eugenia' is in the Bologna Gallery. Sementi visited Rome, where he painted frescoes in S. Carlo a Catinari, and in the 'Ara Cœli.' He died at Rome in the prime of life.

SEMINI, ANDREA, the elder son of Antonio Semini, born at Genoa in 1510, was first instructed by his father, but afterwards studied under Perino del Vaga, who had taken refuge at Genoa in 1528, after the sacking of Rome. By the advice of Perino he visited Rome. After a residence of eight years in that capital he returned to Genoa, where he painted pictures for the churches and public edifices, among the best a 'Nativity,' in S. Francesco; and an 'Adoration of the Magi,' in La Nunziata. He worked for a time at Milan in conjunction with his brother Ottavio. He died in 1578.

SEMINI, ANTONIO, painter, was born at Genoa in 1485, and was a disciple of Lodovico Brea. He afterwards studied Perugino, and imitated his style. His principal picture is the 'Martyrdom of St. Andrew,' in S. Ambrogio, at Genoa. There is also a 'Cleopatra' by him in the Pallavicini Palace there. He died in 1545.

SEMINI, GIULIO CESARE, a Genoese, who painted a 'Crucifixion' for the church of S. Bartolomè de Sonsoles, at Toledo. He was also employed by Philip III. in the Palace of the Pardo.

SEMINI, OTTAVIO, the younger son of Antonio Semini, born at Genoa in 1520, was, when very young, placed under the tuition of Perino del Vaga, with whom his elder brother Andrea was a student. Possessed of a more lively genius than Andrea, he was soon sufficiently advanced to proceed to Rome, for the completion of his studies. He returned with his brother to Genoa, and, in conjunction with him, executed several considerable works. He decorated the façade of the Palazzo Doria with statues and architectural ornaments, and painted some frescoes in the interior. He was invited to Milan, where he passed the latter part of his life. In the church of S. Angelo he painted several subjects in the chapel of S. Girolamo; the best a Funeral of that Saint. Ottavio Semini died at Milan in 1604.

SEMITECOLO, NICCOLÒ, flourished at Venice in the second half of the 14th century. His earliest known painting is a 'Coronation of the Virgin,' dated 1351, and now in the Accademia at Venice. In the same collection there are fourteen small panels by him, which have been supplemented by a 'Coronation of the Virgin,' by one STEFANO, (who signs himself Stefan Plebanus Sancte Agnetis pinxit, M.CC.LXXX.) to form an altar-piece. In 1367 he painted an altar-piece with scenes from the life of St. Sebastian, which now hangs in separate pieces in the Chapter Library of the Duomo at Padua. Semitecolo is known to have lived until 1400, and it has been suggested that he was identical with Niccolò Paradisi (q. v.), so called from his residing near the bridge of that name at Venice.

SEMOLLEI, IL. See FRANCO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA. SEMPELIUS, D. G., a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1580. He copied some of Albrecht Dürer's prints with great success. Among his best imitations is the 'Descent into Hell,' from the Life of Christ. It bears the date of the original, 1512, as well as the year in which it was engraved, 1580.

SENAVE, JACOPUS ALBERTUS, born at Loo in 1758, was a painter of Flemish country feasts, in the style of Teniers. He painted the atelier of Rembrandt, with portraits of a great number of artists, contemporaries of that master. This he presented to the Academy at Ypres, and was in return made an honorary director. The church of Loo has a 'Seven Works of Mercy,' by him. He died in Paris in 1829.

SENEFELDER, ALOYS, the inventor of the art of lithography, was born at Prague in 1771, but in early life went to Munich with his father, who was an actor. He was sent to the university of Ingolstadt, to study jurisprudence, but his inclination led him rather to the stage and the drama, in which, however, he was unsuccessful. By his first piece, Die Mädchenkenner, he cleared fifty florins; his second did not pay expenses. By the death of his father his means became straitened, and he could not afford the cost of printing his compositions; he therefore endeavoured to devise some other method of multiplication. He made experiments in engraving, etching, and stereotyping, and to avoid the expense of copper plates, made use of a fine piece of Kehlheim stone, and tried to print from it, but at first without much success. One day, however, when he had prepared a stone for etching, his mother entered the room and requested him to write a list of the linen she was sending to be washed. He had not even a slip of paper for the purpose, having used all in taking proof impressions, and even his inkstand was dry. As the matter was urgent, he wrote the list on the prepared stone with the etching ground he had discovered for himself, intending to copy it at leisure. Afterwards, when about to clean off the writing, it occurred to him that by the application of nitric acid and water he might bite the stone so as to leave the writing in sufficient relief to print from. The experiment succeeded, and as soon as he had brought his new discovery into a practical form, he applied himself to making it a commercial success. The mere use of stone as a substitute for copper had been known before, but Senefelder's experiments led to the discovery of chemical lithography in its full sense. Senefelder published an account of it in 1818, which was translated into French and English, and made the process generally known throughout Europe. His own practice was confined to Germany, where he arrived at a competence, and devoted himself to perfecting the art. He died at Munich in 1834. His brothers, CLEMENS, GEORGE, THEOBALD, and KARL, and HEINRICH his son, all practised as lithographers.

SENELLY, —, an Austrian painter of the 19th century, the first part of whose career was spent in great privation and misery. His early struggles seem to have affected his brain, for, in 1873, after he had obtained some recognition, he became insane, and died in 1875.

SENEX, JOHN, an English engraver, who engraved the plates for the London Almanacks, from the year 1717 to 1727, with the exception of that for the year 1723, which was by John Clarke. He died in 1741.

SENEZCOURT, JULES DE, painter, was born at Saint Omer in 1816. In 1841 he settled at Brussels, where he practised portrait and genre painting. He died in 1866.

SENF, ADOLF, a German painter, born at Hallé towards the close of the 18th century, first studied theology, but in 1810 decided to devote himself to art, and began to work in pastel under Kùgelgen at Dresden. He afterwards went to Rome, where he copied many of Raphael's masterpieces for the 'Rafael-Saal' at Sanssouci. He painted a 'Madonna Enthroned,' and a 'Christ and the Canaanitish Woman,' but was more successful with fruit and flowers. His brother KARL AUGUST also practised as a painter and engraver at Dorpat.

SENTIES, PIERRE ASTHASIE THÉODORE, painter, born in Paris, February 23, 1801. He was a pupil of Gros and Regnault. He painted numerous portraits, some of which appeared at the Salon, but his best work is a 'Resurrection' in the cathedral of Valence.

SEPP, JAN CHRISTIAAN, born at Amsterdam in 1739, was a painter of insects. He published 'The Natural History of the Insects of Holland,' in six volumes quarto, illustrated with some two hundred and fifty coloured plates, in which he was assisted by his son, and some other works of the same class. Sepp was a member of the society Felix Meritis at Amsterdam, where he died in 1811.

SEPPEZZINO, FRANCESCO, a Genoese historical painter, of whom little is known except that he was born in 1530, and studied under Luca Cambiasi and Giambattista Castilli, and died in 1579.

SEPTIMUS, HERCULES. See SETTI.

SEPULVEDA, MATEO NUÑEZ DE, a Spanish painter. In 1640 Philip IV. appointed him painter and gilder to the Spanish Navy, partly in return for his contribution of 500 ducats towards the expenses of the war in which his Majesty was engaged. His patent, among other privileges, gave him the sole right of painting all banners, standards, &c., required in the navy. He is also said to have painted in fresco.

SEQUEIRA, DOMINGOS ANTONIO DE, a Portuguese historical painter and designer, was born at Lisbon in 1768. He gave early proofs of talent, and was sent to Rome in 1788, to complete his studies. He became a scholar of Antonio Cavallucci, and after spending some years in Italy he returned to Portugal, where his works were soon in great request. Sequeira had much versatility, and strange stories are told of the eccentric methods of which he sometimes made use. In 1823 Sequeira visited Paris to exhibit his 'Last Moments of the Poet Camões;' after which he went to Rome and became devout. He died at Rome in 1837.

SEQUENOT, probably a native of France, flourished about the year 1671. He engraved some frontispieces and other plates for books.

SERAFIN, PEDRO, surnamed EL GRIEGO, a painter of Barcelona, who, in conjunction with Pedro Pablo, painted the doors of the organ of the cathedral of Tarragona.

SERAFINI. See DEI SERAFINI.

SERAFINI. See MODENA, BARNABA DA (Supplement).

SERANGELI, GIOACCHINO, painter, was born at Milan in 1778. He studied under David, in Paris, exhibiting at the Salon in the early years of the 19th century. His best works were, a 'Roman Charity,' which excited much attention by its dexterous treatment of an effect of light, and a large 'Napoleon I. addressing the Delegates of the Army.' On his return to Italy he decorated the Villa Sornmariva on Lake Como with frescoes from the legend of Psyche. He finally settled in Milan, where he became Professor to the Academy.

SERENARI, GASPARO, a native of Palermo, flourished about the year 1750. He went to Rome, and frequented the school of Sebastiano Conca. On his return to Sicily he distinguished himself as a painter of history, both in oil and fresco. His principal works at Palermo are the cupola of the Jesuits' church and an altar-piece in the monastery church of La Carità.

SERGEANT, ANTOINE LOUIS FRANÇOIS, engraver, born at Chartres in 1751, studied under S. Aubin, and engraved several excellent plates. When the French Revolution broke out he became president of the Ward of St. Jacques, and secretary to the Jacobin Club. He was the means of saving many people from the guillotine, and of performing many kindly deeds. He married, in 1794, EMIRA MARCEAU, the sister of General Marceau, and the divorced wife of Champion de Sernet. She engraved several plates from drawings by her husband. For two years he was an exile in Switzerland, but on his return to Paris was active in artistic matters. After the 18th of Brumaire he went to Venice, where he published 'The Costumes of the People, Ancient and Modern,' in twenty-one parts. He died, blind, at Nice, in 1817.

SERI, ROBERT DE, painter and engraver, born in Paris about 1680, was a pupil of Cazes, and then studied in Rome. He became painter to Cardinal de Rohan, and painted scenes from the life of the Virgin for the Capuchin Church of the Marais in Paris, and the 'Martyrdom of St. Fidelis' for the Capuchin Church in the Rue St. Honoré. He executed several etchings after Raphael, Bagnacavallo, &c. He died about 1739.

SERICUS. See SOYE, PHILIPPE DE.

SERIN, JAN, a painter of historical subjects and portraits, was born at Ghent in 1678. He has been confounded by Balkema with his father, N. Serin, an historical painter of the same place, by whom there is a picture in the church of St. Martin at Tournay, 'St. Martin dividing his Cloak with a Beggar.' The elder Serin may have been the scholar of Erasmus Quellin, and the younger a scholar of Jan Erasmus, his son. Several altar-pieces in the churches at Ghent are attributed to Jan Serin, but he was more celebrated as a portrait painter, which profession he exercised at the Hague. In 1748, when he had reached his seventieth year, he painted the portrait of the Marquis de Fénelon, ambassador at the Hague, and that of the Marchioness. The precise year of his death, and that of his father, is not known. His son, JAN SERIN the younger, was also a painter, and is known to have practised from 1740 to 1748.

SERMEI, CESARE, IL CAVALIERE, painter, born in 1516, at Orvieto, whence he went to Assisi, where he painted frescoes and oil pictures. He painted besides, pictures of ceremonies, markets, &c., introducing numbers of small figures. He died at Assisi in 1600.

SERMONETA. See SICOLANTE.

SERNÈ, ADRIAAN, born at Haarlem in 1773, painted landscapes with figures, alleys of trees, and views of towns, and also etched views of the neighbourhood of Haarlem. He was director of the Academy of Zwolle, where he died in 1847.

SERRA, MIGUEL, (SERRE, SERRES,) was born in Catalonia about the year 1653. At the age of eight years he absconded from his mother's house, and managed to get to Marseilles, where he obtained instruction from an indifferent painter, and afterwards went to Rome. At the age of seventeen he returned to Marseilles, and painted a 'St. Peter Martyr' for the church of the Dominicans of that city, which at once established his reputation. He was soon fully employed for the churches and for private patrons. He sent a picture to Paris which won him election as a member of the Academy, and an appointment as painter to the king. Having arrived at great honour and riches, he devoted the whole of his wealth to the succour of the poor of Marseilles during the plague of 1721. However, when the plague ceased, he returned with renewed ardour to his profession, and painted scenes which he had witnessed during the epidemic. He worked for the convent of St. Claire de Marseilles, for the Madeleine in the same city, and for the Carmelites of Aix. His easel pictures were also in great request, and are numerous. There are about twenty in the gallery of Marseilles. He died at Marseilles in 1728.

SERRES, DOMINIC, the younger, water-colour draughtsman, was the younger son of Serres the elder. He is best known as a teacher of drawing, but exhibited landscapes at the Royal Academy from 1783 to 1787. After many years of labour in his profession, his mind became clouded by a settled despondency, and he entirely lost his connection as a teacher. For the last few years of his life he was supported by his brother, John Thomas Serres.

SERRES, DOMINIQUE, born at Auch in Gascony in 1722. His parents designed him for the Church, but he ran away and went to sea, and in time became master of a trading vessel, which was captured by the English in 1752, and he himself brought to England. He then applied himself to the cultivation of a native bent towards art, and soon acquired a reputation as a painter of sea-pieces and landscapes. When the Royal Academy was instituted, he was chosen a member, and some years afterwards was appointed marine painter to George III. In 1792 he became librarian to the Royal Academy. One of his important works was a picture of Lord Howe's victory over the combined Fleets of France and Spain, off Gibraltar, in 1782. He was a large contributor to the exhibitions at the Royal Academy for several years after its institution. During the first ten years he exhibited about forty pictures, all of English naval actions. Many of them are at Hampton Court and in Greenwich Hospital. He died in London in 1793.

SERRES, JOHN THOMAS, marine painter, born in London in 1759, was a pupil of his father Dominique. He was drawing-master at the naval school at Chelsea. In 1790 he visited France and Italy. In 1793 he became marine painter to the king and draughtsman to the admiralty. In 1801 he published 'The little Sea Torch for Coasting Ships,' with coloured plates, and in 1825 his 'Liber Nauticus,' a handbook for marine painters. He was ruined by the depravity and extravagance of his wife, who called herself Princess of Cumberland. He became bankrupt and died in the Rules of the King's Bench Prison in 1825.

SERRES, OLIVE, landscape painter, born in 1772, was the wife of John Thomas Serres, and claimed to be the daughter of Henry Frederick, Duke of Cumberland. Her legal father was a house painter at Warwick, named Wilton. Her pretensions were brought before the House of Commons in 1822. She exhibited landscapes at the Academy and the British Institution. She died November 21, 1834.

SERRUR, HENRI AUGUSTE CALIXTE CÉSAR, painter, was born at Lambersart, near Lille, in 1794. He studied first at Lille, but in 1815 was granted a pension by the town to enable him to complete his education in Paris. He there entered Regnault's studio. He exhibited at the Salon from 1819 to 1852, and died in Paris in 1865. Works:

Arras.	Museum.	Brunhilda.
"	Cathedral.	St. Waast healing the Blind.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	Portrait of Charles X.

Versailles.	"	Several Official Portraits and Battle-pieces.

SERVAES, HERMAN, a Flemish painter, born probably at Antwerp in 1601. He was a pupil of Van Dyck, was a member of the Guild of St. Luke in 1650, and was still living in 1660.

SERVANDONY, JEAN NICHOLAS, an eminent painter of theatrical scenery and architectural decorations, was born at Lyons in 1695, and received his instruction in art at Piacenza from Paolo Panini, and at Rome under G. G. Rossi. His name is often Italianized and his birth put at Florence, but the truth seems to be as here stated. After a sojourn in Portugal, where he was much employed on decorations for public fêtes, he settled in Paris, where he was received with enthusiasm, and received the honour of knighthood. In 1749 he was invited to London, where he found a wife, proceeding afterwards to Dresden, Vienna, and Würtemberg. From 1737 to 1765 he was a steady contributor to the Salon. In the Louvre there is a picture of ancient ruins by him, painted in the manner of P. Panini. He died in Paris in 1766.

SERVIN, AMÉDÉE ÉLIE, painter, was born in Paris in 1829. He was a pupil of Drolling, entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1848, and gained several medals at the Salon. His subjects were chiefly landscapes and animals; he occasionally painted genre pictures, and etched a few plates, among them one after his own picture, 'Le Puits de mon Charcutier.' His 'Moulin Balé' is in the Marseilles Museum, and there are landscapes by him in the Museums of Mans and Melun. He died in 1886.

SERVIÈRES, EUGÉNIE, Madame, (née CHAREN,) was born in France in 1786. She was a pupil of Lethière, was premiated in 1808 and 1817, and exhibited occasionally at the Salon in the early years of the 19th century. Her 'Inez de Castro' is in the Trianon.

SERWOUTER, PIETER, a Flemish engraver, born at Antwerp about the year 1574. He was a contemporary with J. van Londerseel, to whose style his bears some resemblance. Among other prints by him are the following:

- A set of twelve Hunts; after D. V'incckebooms.
- The Fall of our first Parents; after the same.
- A Dutch Merrymaking; after the same.
- Samson killing the Lion; after the same.
- David killing the Bear; after the same.

He marked his plates with a cipher composed of a P, an S, and a W, thus, P. W.

SESTO, CESARE DA, sometimes called CESARE MILANESE, was born at Milan about 1470. He is generally regarded as a disciple of Leonardo da Vinci, but late in life he went to Rome and became affected by the example of Raphael. He also visited Naples and Messina, where he painted the 'Adoration of the Magi,' now in the Naples Gallery. But the details of his career are little known, and there is much uncertainty as to his work. The 'Vierge aux Balances' of the Louvre, formerly ascribed to Leonardo, is probably his. Lord Monson's 'Holy Family,' also called a Leonardo, is a good old Flemish copy from a picture by Cesare now in the Brera, at Milan. The 'Judith,' at Vienna; the 'Altar-piece,' in several compartments, in the convent of Sta. Trinità della Cava, near Salerno, long given to Sabbatini, are also by Cesare. He died at Milan about 1524. Other works by him:

Madrid.	Museum.	Virgin and Child.
Milan.	Ambrosiana.	Youthful Head of Christ.
"	Brera.	A Madonna.
"	Casa Scotti.	Baptism of Christ (with a landscape by Bernazzano).
"	Casa Molzi.	Altar-piece in several compartments, St. Roch in the centre.
Naples.	Museum.	Adoration of the Kings.
Turin.	Gallery.	A Madonna.
Venice.	Manfrini Gall.	Two Madonnas.

SESTRIL. See TRAVI.

SETLEZKY, BALTHAZAR SIGISMUND, a German engraver, of Polish origin, who was born at Augsburg in 1695. He died in 1770. He engraved after Watteau, J. M. Roos, and H. Roos.

SETTELLA, MANFRED, painter and mechanic, born at Milan in 1600, was Director of the Academy in his native city, and died in 1680.

SETTI, ERCOLE, (or SEPTIMUS, HERCULES,) an Italian painter and engraver, who flourished about the year 1560. He was a native of Modena, and painted altar-pieces for the churches in that city. He etched a few plates and was still at work in 1593.

SEUBERT, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, born at Stuttgart in 1780, learned art from Heideloff, and painted decorations, portraits, and flowers in water-colours. He became professor to the Katharinenstift in 1838. He died at Stuttgart in 1859.

SEUPEL, J. A., an engraver of portraits, which he frequently drew from the life, was born at Strasburg in 1660. His plates are neatly executed with the graver. In several plates he imitated the effect of mezzotint with the burin; this, perhaps, led him to scrape a 'View of Strasburg by Night.' He died at Strasburg in 1714.

SEUTER. See SAITER.

SÈVE, GILBERT DE, was born in Paris in 1615. It is not known by whom he was instructed, but he was a painter of ability, and a foundation member of the old maitrise. Several of his portraits of distinguished persons were engraved by Edelinck, Van Schuppen, Masson, and other eminent French engravers. His own portrait, by Nattier, is at Versailles. He died in Paris in 1698.

SÈVE, PIERRE DE, brother of Gilbert de Sève, was born at Moulins in 1623. He was trained by his brother, and painted similar subjects. He died in 1695.

SEVERINO. See SAN SEVERINO.

SEVERN, JOSEPH, painter, born about 1795. He settled in Rome, where he worked for many years, frequently sending a picture to the Royal Academy Exhibitions in England between 1827 and 1857. He was the friend of the poet Keats, took him to Italy, and tended him during his last illness in 1821. Severn returned to England in 1840, and won a premium of £100 at the Westminster Hall competition of 1843. In '44, '45, and '47, he was less successful. He was again in Rome in 1861, and held the post of British Consul in that city until 1872, when he retired on a pension. He died in Rome, August 3, 1879, and was buried there, but in 1882 his body was removed from its first resting-place to a grave beside that of Keats in the Protestant cemetery next the pyramid of Caius Sestius. The following works by him are at South Kensington:

Scene from 'Eloïsa and Abelard.'

Mary Stuart at Loch Leven.

Ariet, on a Bat.

Nymph gathering Honeysuckle.

Portrait of Keats. (Nat. Port. Gallery.)

SEVERN, MISS. See NEWTON, MRS. CHARLES.

SEVERO DA BOLOGNA, an early Italian painter, practising about 1460. He was a pupil of Lippo di Dalmasio.

SEVILLA ROMERO Y ESCALANTE, JUAN DE, born at Granada in 1627, was a pupil of one Andres Alonso Argüelles, and of Pedro de Moya. He painted several pictures for the churches of the Carmelite and Augustine friars at Granada, a large 'Last Supper' for the refectory of the Jesuits, and others for the monastery of St. Jerome. An 'Entombment' (No. 707) in the Dresden Gallery, is probably his work. He died at Granada in 1695.

SEVIN, JEAN, a Belgian architectural and decorative painter, was painting in 1750.

SEVIN, PIERRE PAUL, painter, born at Tournon, France, about 1650. He settled at Lyons, where he became a portrait painter of some repute. Several engravings were made after his designs, representing events of Louis XIV.'s reign. They bear dates from 1685 to 1701. Some of his portraits were also engraved, among them one of Mdle. de la Vallière. In the Toulouse Museum there is an 'Alexander and Diogenes' by him. He died at Rome in 1676.

SEYDELMANN, APOLLONIE, of the de Fougue family, wife of J. C. Seydelmann, was born at Venice in 1767, or Trieste in 1768. She obtained a great reputation for her small copies in sepia of the works of Raphael, Correggio, Guido, Cantarini, Cignani, Domenichino, Carlo Dolce, and others. She also excelled in miniature painting. In 1789 she accompanied her husband to Italy, and assisted him in his larger works. She was a member of the Dresden Academy. She died at Dresden in 1840.

SEYDELMANN, JAKOB CRESCENTIUS, was born at Dresden in 1760. He received his instruction from Bernardo Bellotti and Casanova. Subsequently he went to Rome under the patronage of the Elector, and formed a friendship with Rafael Mengs, under whose advice he made many drawings from the antique and after the great Italians. These he finished in sepia in a manner entirely his own, and they sold readily to English visitors. On his return home he was appointed Professor of Drawing to the Academy of Dresden, and he was elected a member of several foreign Academies. In 1788 he commenced copying the principal pictures in the Dresden Gallery, for the engravers. Later in life he paid more visits to Rome, and was for a time at St. Petersburg. Several portraits and allegories by Seydelmann have been engraved. There is also an etching by him, after J. F. Bloemen, of a figure bathing in a cavern. His vogue lasted until his death, which occurred at Dresden in 1829.

SEYFFARTH, LOUISE. See SHARPE.

SEYFFER, AUGUST, painter and engraver, born at Lauffen on the Neckar in 1774, received his first education in Stuttgart, and then went to Vienna, where he made a name by six landscape etchings. He afterwards engraved some views of the neighbourhoods of Stuttgart and Tübingen in the style of Woollett, and became Keeper of Engravings in Stuttgart. He died in 1845.

SEYFFERT, JOHANN GOTTHOLD, engraver, born at Dresden in 1760, was instructed in drawing by Casanova, and in engraving by the elder Stölzel. He was employed by Hofrath Becker in engraving some of the plates for 'The Augustenm.' He was a master in the Dresden Academy. He died in 1824.

SEYMOUR, COLONEL, amateur, a successful painter of miniatures in the reign of Queen Anne.

SEYMOUR, EDWARD, painted portraits in England in the first part of the 18th century, in the manner of Kneller. He died in 1757, and was buried in Twickenham churchyard.

SEYMOUR, JAMES, born in London in 1702, the only son of a banker, who was a great lover of art, drew well himself, and lived in habits of intimacy with Sir Peter Lely and other painters of his time. He excelled in sketching horses, but he was a weak colourist, and few of his works are known. Houston and Burford engraved after him. He died in London in 1752.

SEYMOUR, ROBERT, caricaturist, born in London in 1800, served an apprenticeship to a Spitalfields silk designer in his early years. He afterwards turned to a higher walk in art, and painted at first historical pictures and portraits. His attention then gradually turned to the illustration of books, which were mostly comic. Among these were 'The Odd Volume,' 'The Comic Magazine,' 'Figaro in London,' 'Vagaries in quest of the wild and wonderful,' 'The Book of Christmas,' 'The Looking-glass,' 'The Schoolmaster abroad,' 'New Readings of Old Authors,' and 'Humorous Sketches.' But Seymour will be remembered as the first illustrator of 'Pickwick,' and as the creator of the types of Pickwick, Winkle, and Tupman, on which no successor has contrived to improve. In 1836, however, when only a few numbers of 'Pickwick' had been published, he committed suicide.

SEZENIUS, VALENTINE, a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1620. He engraved some plates of ornaments and groteschi, which he usually marked with the initials V. S.

SGUAZELLA, ANDREA, (or CHIAZZELLA,) an Italian painter of the 16th century, was a pupil of Andrea del Sarto, whom he accompanied to France, remaining there after the return of his master to Italy, and painting various pictures at the Castle of Semblançay for Jacques de Beaune. (See De Laborde, La Renaissance des Arts à la Cour de France.) These, however, all perished at the destruction of the castle in 1793, save the altar-piece of the chapel. On the death of Jacopo da Pontorno, Sguazella succeeded to his possessions, as nearest of kin, in 1557. A 'Deposition,' by Sguazella, was engraved by Enea Vico, with certain alterations, as a work of Raphael, and again, with the true ascription, by A. Girardet for the Musée Napoléon.

SHACKLETON, JOHN, portrait painter, succeeded Kent as principal painter to George II.

There are portraits by him of George II. and his Queen in Fishmongers' Hall, one of the King in the Foundling Hospital, and another in the National Portrait Gallery. In 1755 he was a member of the committee which made a futile attempt to found a Royal Academy. He died in 1767.

SHALDERS, GEORGE, water-colour painter, born about 1826, practised at Portsmouth, and occasionally exhibited views of Surrey, Hampshire, and Irish scenery at the Academy from 1848 onwards. In 1865 he became a member of the Institute of Painters in water-colours, and was a frequent exhibitor of landscapes with cattle at their galleries. The strain of excessive work brought on an attack of paralysis, and he died in 1873, after a few days' illness, aged 47.

SHARP, MICHAEL, portrait and subject painter, born in London, was a pupil of Sir W. Beechey, and studied in the Academy Schools. From 1801 to 1818 he exhibited at the Academy portraits and portrait groups, but afterwards he confined himself to subject pictures. There is a portrait of Miss Duncan, in 'The Honey-Moon,' by him, at South Kensington. He died at Boulogne in 1840.

SHARP, WILLIAM, one of the most celebrated of English line engravers, was born in 1749, in London. The son of a gunmaker, he was apprenticed to Barak Longmate, the engraver on plate, who was also well skilled in heraldry. At the expiration of his term of apprenticeship he commenced business as a writing engraver. His first essays when an apprentice had been on publicans' pewter pots, and when his friends wished to qualify this assertion by substituting silver tankards, Sharp would insist on the humbler metal. One of his first attempts in a higher branch was to make a drawing of the old lion Hector, who had lived in the Tower of London for thirty years, to engrave it on a small quarto plate, and to expose the prints for sale in his window. Recognition of his merit was, however, more widely diffused by his engraving, after Stothard's designs, several of the plates for the 'Novelist's Magazine.' He soon rose above the crowd, and was employed on works of art of the highest order, and proved himself the worthy successor of Woollett, but did not, like him, extend his practice to landscape, except in backgrounds. His style is always masterly, not servilely borrowed from any of his predecessors or contemporaries, but formed by a judicious selection from the merits of all who excelled. These he combined and blended in a manner peculiarly his own, showing more of the artist and less of the mechanic than any other engraver of his time. His plate from West's portrait of Kosciuszko relieved him from an unpleasant and, at that time, dangerous predicament. He was suspected of entertaining revolutionary principles, and was examined before the Privy Council. At one of these examinations, after being long annoyed by questions which he thought irrelevant, he deliberately pulled out of his pocket a subscription list for the portrait, handed it to Pitt and Dundas, requesting them to have the goodness to put their names to it as subscribers, and then to pass it to the other members of the council. The audacity of the proposal, at such a time, set them laughing, and he was soon after liberated. Sharp was by no means qualified to be a conspirator; he was fond of good cheer, and had a weakness for all sorts of mysticism; he believed in the divine mission of Richard Brothers, in the immaculate conception of Johanna Southcote, and in the visions of Emmanuel Swedenborg. The Imperial Academy of Vienna, and the Royal Academy of Munich, each elected him an honorary member. Sharp died at Chiswick in 1824, and was buried in the same churchyard as Hogarth and De Loutherbourg. The following list embraces his principal plates:

- Portrait of John Bunyan.
- " George Washington.
- " Samuel More; after West.
- His own portrait; after E. F. Joseph.
- Portrait of the Earl of Arundel; after Van Dyck.
- " Lord Dundas; after Raeburn.
- " Kosciuszko; after Stothard and C. Andreas.
- " Dr. Edward Jenner; after Chobday.
- The Magdalen; after Guido.
- Siege and Relief of Gibraltar; two plates, after Copley.
- Landing of Charles II.; after West.
- The Doctors of the Church; after Guido.
- Ecce Homo; after the same.
- Portrait of Dr. John Hunter; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.
- The Holy Family; after the same.
- Lea in the Storm; after the same.
- The Witch of Endor; after B. West.
- Alfred dividing his Loaf with a Pilgrim; after the same.
- The Children in the Wood; after Benwell.
- St. Cecilia; after Domenichino.
- The Sortie from Gibraltar; after Trumbull.
- Portrait of Tom Paine; after Romney.
- The Portrait of Mr. Boulton; after Reynolds.
- Interview of Charles I. with his children; after Woodford.
- Boadicea haranguing the Britons; after Stothard.
- 'Lucretia' and 'St. Cecilia'; after Domenichino.
- The three Marys and dead Christ; after An. Carracci, from the picture at Castle Howard, but left unfinished.
- Sharp completed Woollett's unfinished plate after West's 'Landing of Charles II.'

The British Museum contains a complete collection of Sharp's engravings, in a variety of states.

SHARPE, ELIZA, the elder sister of Louisa Sharpe, practised as a water-colour painter, and was elected a member of the 'old Society' in 1829. She occasionally exhibited at the Academy and at the Water-Colour Society's Galleries until 1872, when she resigned. In her last years she found employment chiefly as a copyist at the South Kensington Museum. She died at Chelsea in 1874.

SHARPE, LOUISA, born in London about 1800, began her career with miniatures and portraits, and then took to genre painting in water-colours. In 1829, the same year as her sister, she was elected a member of the Society of Painters in Water-colours. In 1834 she married Dr. Scyffarth, of Dresden, and settled in that city, where she died in 1843.

SHARPLES, Mrs., portrait painter, born at Birmingham about 1753, was the wife of an English artist practising in America. On his death in 1807 she returned to England and exhibited miniatures of General Washington and Dr. Priestley at the Academy. She afterwards settled at Bristol, where she died in 1849, bequeathing her property to found a Bristol Academy of Art. Her son JAMES exhibited portraits occasionally at the Academy. He practised at Bristol, where he died in 1839.

SHARPLES, ROLINDA, portrait painter, was the daughter of Mrs. Sharples, and practised at Bristol. She exhibited occasionally at the Academy, but her best-known work was a 'Trial of the Bristol Rioters,' exhibited at the Suffolk Street Gallery in 1832. She died in 1838, and bequeathed several of her father's portraits to the Bristol Society of Arts, an institution afterwards incorporated with that founded by Mrs. Sharples.

SHAW, HENRY, draughtsman and engraver, was born in London in 1800, and assisted Britton with his English cathedrals, supplying most of the illustrations for Wells and Gloucester. His first independent work was 'The Antiquities of Luton Chapel,' which was followed by 'Details of Gothic Architecture,' and a splendid series of illuminated works, comprising 'Illuminated Ornaments,' 'Specimens of Ancient Furniture,' 'Ancient Plate and Furniture,' 'Dresses and Decorations of the Middle Ages' (1839), 'The Encyclopædia of Ornament' (1842), 'Alphabets, Numerals, and Devices of the Middle Ages' (1845), 'Decorative Arts of the Middle Ages' (1851), 'The Handbook of Mediæval Alphabets,' 'Arms of the Colleges of Oxford' (1855), 'Ornamental Tile Paintings' (1858). He died in London in 1873.

SHAW, JAMES, devoted himself chiefly to the painting of horses. He built an addition to his studio in Mortimer Street, Cavendish Square, for their accommodation. He exhibited with the Society of Artists in 1761, and died about 1772.

SHAW, JAMES, portrait painter, was a native of Wolverhampton, and was placed as a pupil with Edward Penny. He painted portraits with some success, and towards the latter part of his life resided in Charlotte Street, Fitzroy Square, where he died about the year 1784.

SHAW, JOSHUA, a self-taught artist, was born at Bellingborough, in Lincolnshire, in 1776. He was left an orphan at an early age, and apprenticed to a country sign-painter. When his time expired he set up for himself in the same trade at Manchester, and married. He afterwards turned to other branches of art, and tried his hand on flower-pieces, still-life, and landscape, chiefly copying the old masters. He came to London and exhibited some of his works, which attracted the attention of dealers, who employed him to copy landscapes with cattle by Berchem, Gainsborough, and others, which were sold as originals. After a time he emigrated to America, where he carried on the same proceedings and also developed a genius for mechanics. The date of his death is unknown.

SHAYER, WILLIAM, was born at Southampton in 1788. From 1824, the date of the foundation of the Society of British Artists, to 1873, he was a constant and most prolific contributor to their exhibitions, exhibiting frequently seven or eight, and occasionally twelve, works a year. He was elected a member in 1862. He died at Shirley, near Southampton, in 1879. His works mostly represent cattle and sheep.

SHEE, Sir MARTIN ARCHER, born in Dublin in 1769, was the son of a merchant. He was taught at the Drawing School, Dublin, but went to London in 1788, and entered the Academy in 1790. On his arrival in London he made the acquaintance of Reynolds through Burke's introduction, but for a time suffered considerable privation through his refusal to ask help from his relatives. He soon, however, gained a footing by his portraits of well-known actors, such as Lewis, Stephen Kemble, Fawcett, Pope, and others. He also painted several historical pictures, 'Jephthah's Daughter,' 'Lavinia,' 'Belisarius,' 'Prospero and Miranda.' He also painted portraits of the Duke of Clarence, William IV., Queen Adelaide, Queen Victoria, and Prince Albert. In 1796 he took a large house in Golden Square, and married. Two years later he moved to the house in Cavendish Square in which he lived for the rest of his life. In 1805 he published 'Rhymes on Art;' in 1809 a sequel called 'Elements of Art;' and some years later 'Alasco, a Tragedy,' which was only published after it had been banished from the stage by the Lord Chamberlain. In 1829 he published an anonymous novel, 'Old Court.' In 1798 he had been elected an associate, and, in 1800, a member of the Academy, and in 1830, on the death of Lawrence, he was promoted to be President. He died at Brighton in 1850. Shee's art was solid and commonplace, but not without dignity. One of his best pictures is the portrait of Lewis, the actor, now in the National Gallery.

SHELLEY, SAMUEL, painter and engraver, born in Whitechapel about 1750. He received little instruction in art, but greatly admiring Reynolds, he copied much from him, and so acquired his excellent style, attaining in particular a fine harmony and richness in colour. He became famous as a painter of miniatures, dividing the patronage of the day with Cosway and Collins. He also produced mythological and historical subjects in miniature, such as 'Psyche,' 'Nymphs feeding Pegasus,' 'Cupid turned Watchman,' 'Cupid solicits new Wings,' 'Love's Complaint to Time,' all of which were exhibited at the opening show of the Water-Colour Society in 1805. He was one of the original members of this society, which was planned at his house. The few engravings he executed were after his own works. He made some ill-drawn designs for book illustration. He died in London, December 22, 1808. There are good examples of his miniatures at South Kensington.

SHENTON, HENRY CHAWNER, engraver, born at Winchester in 1803, was among the best of the English line engravers. He was a pupil of Geo. Warren, whose daughter he married. He died in London in 1866, having become partially blind some time before. His best plates are:

The Stray Kitten; after Collins.

The Loan of a Bite; after Mulready.

Country Cousins; after Redgrave.

The Generosity of Richard Cœur de Lion; after J. Cross; for the London Art Union.

Some good plates for Finden's 'Annual of British Art,' and the Annals.

SHEPHERD, WILLIAM, portrait painter, practised in the reign of Charles II. A portrait by him is extant of Thomas Killigrew, the jester, with his dog, engraved by Faithorne. He is said to have died in Yorkshire. Francis Barlow was his pupil.

SHEPHEARD, GEORGE, water-colour painter, studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, and from 1811 to 1830 occasionally exhibited landscapes from Surrey and Sussex. At South Kensington there are by him: 'The Vale of Health, Hampstead,' a 'Coast Scene,' and 'Roslin Chapel, near Edinburgh.'

SHEPHEARD, GEORGE WALLWYN, water-colour painter, the eldest son of George Shephard, was born in 1804. He travelled much in France, Germany, and Italy, and exhibited many landscape views and studies at the Academy from 1830 to 1851. He died in 1852. His brother, LEWIS H. SHEPHEARD, also an artist, published sixteen of his sketches in 1873.

SHEPHERD, GEORGE, engraver, born about 1760, practised in London. He produced many plates, etched, and finished in mezzotint. Of these the best are, the 'Attitudes' of Lady Hamilton, in fifteen plates, and 'The Fleecy Charge,' after Morland. He also engraved a considerable number of portraits.

SHEPHERD, GEORGE SYDNEY, water-colour painter, exhibited at the Academy between 1831 and 1837. He became a member of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1833, at about which time he exhibited chiefly metropolitan buildings, 'Old Covent Garden Market,' 'Old London Bridge,' &c. He made drawings for C. Clarke's 'Architectura Ecclesiastica Londini,' and W. H. Ireland's 'England's Topographer.' At South Kensington there is by him, 'The Kilns, 1831,' a good example of his work. His name disappears after 1860.

SHEPHERD, ROBERT, supposed to have been a pupil of David Loggan, was a native of England, and flourished about the year 1660. He engraved a few laborious portraits in line, as well as reduced copies of Gérard Audran's plates after Le Brun's 'Battles of Alexander.'

SHERIDAN, J., portrait painter, was born in Kilkenny county. He studied for a time at the Dublin Academy, and then came to London. He exhibited at the Academy from 1785 to 1789, but his insufficient education prevented him from reaching success. He died in London in 1790.

SHERIFF, CHARLES, (or SHERRIFF,) a deaf and dumb painter, who practised in Edinburgh in the second half of the 18th century. In 1773 he came to London, where he was well received, and took a place among the fashionable miniaturists of the day. In 1796 he was established at Bath, where he remained for some years. It is said that he eventually went to India and there exercised his profession.

SHERIFF, WILLIAM CRAIG, a young Scotch painter, born near Haddington, October 26, 1786. He studied at the Trustees' Academy, Edinburgh, and much was hoped from the great promise displayed in his first important work, 'The Escape of Queen Mary from Lochleven.' While engaged on this work he was seized with a rapid consumption. He lived just long enough to finish his picture, which was engraved by W. H. Lizars, and died March 17, 1805, at the age of nineteen.

SHERLOCK, WILLIAM, painter and engraver, the son of a prize-fighter, was born at Dublin about 1738. He studied at the St. Martin's Lane Academy, in London, and afterwards under Le Bas, in Paris. He exhibited portraits both in oil and water-colours with the Incorporated Society from 1764 to 1777, and at the Academy from 1802 to 1806. He occasionally painted miniatures, and was also known as an engraver, both of landscapes and portraits, his chief plates being a series of portrait heads for Smollett's 'History of England.'

SHERLOCK, WILLIAM P., painter and topographical draughtsman, was born about 1780. He imitated Richard Wilson, under whose name his pictures have been occasionally sold. From 1796 to 1810 he exhibited architectural views at the Royal Academy, and in 1811 he published a series of soft-ground etchings, after Girtin, Payne, Powell, and others. He also engraved some copies of rare portrait plates, and drew many of the illustrations for Dickinson's 'Antiquities of Nottinghamshire.'

SHERWIN, JOHN KEYSE, an engraver, was born in 1751, at Eastdean, in Sussex, where his father was a cutter of wooden bolts for ships, a trade he himself followed till he was about sixteen, when his artistic gift attracted the attention of some helpful friends. He was placed first under Astley and then under Bartolozzi to learn drawing and engraving. Under these masters he made rapid progress, and in 1772 gained the gold medal of the Royal Academy for a picture of 'Coriolanus taking leave of his Family.' His name is to be found in the exhibition catalogues of the Royal Academy from 1774 to 1780, as an exhibitor of chalk drawings, some copies, some originals; among the latter was one dealing with the story of Galatea from Ovid, and another described as 'Leonidas taking leave of his Family.' One of his drawings attracted much attention; it was called 'The Joys of Life,' and was executed in red and black chalk with colour washes, in the manner of Bartolozzi. It is said that Bartolozzi employed him on his plate of 'Clytie,' after Annibale Carracci, but in his own larger works his style is more like that of Woollett than that of Bartolozzi. His plates from his own compositions are unpleasing, but 'The finding of Moses,' in which the beautiful Duchess of Devonshire represents the daughter of Pharaoh, and several other ladies of rank and fashion her attendants, had a great success in its time. On the death of Woollett, Sherwin was appointed engraver to the king. Owing to his many follies he fell into poverty, and died at a tavern which formerly stood where Swallow Street joins Oxford Street, in 1790. Another account says he died in the house of a printseller on Cornhill. He was buried at Hampstead. The following are his best plates:

William Pitt, Earl of Chatham; after Wilton.
 George Nugent Grenville Temple, Marquis of Buckingham; after Gainsborough.
 Dr. Louth, Bishop of London; after Pine.
 Captain James Cook; after Dance.
 Sir Joshua Reynolds; after a picture by himself.
 William Woollett, Engraver to the King.
 Mrs. Siddons, in the character of the Grecian Daughter. The Holy Family; after Carlo Maratti.
 Christ bearing the Cross; after the picture by Guido in the chapel of Magdalene College, Oxford.
 Christ appearing to Magdalene; after Guido's picture at All Souls' College, Oxford.

SHERWIN, WILLIAM, an English engraver, born at Wellington, in Shropshire, and flourished from about 1670 to about 1711. It is not known by whom he was taught. His plates are not numerous, though he was active for many years. We have several portraits by him; he also engraved some frontispieces and other plates for books, from his own designs, among which are the greater part of the plates in the edition of 'God's Revenge against Murder,' printed in 1669. Sherwin had the unusual honour of being named engraver to the king by patent. Among his portraits are the following:

Charles I. on horseback, with a view of Richmond.
 O'iver Cromwell.
 Charles II.; three plates, one a whole-length; prefixed to Ashmole's 'Order of the Garter.'
 Catherine, his Queen.
 Christopher, Duke of Albemarle.
 William III. when Prince of Orange.
 Henry, Duke of Norfolk.
 George I. when Elector of Hanover.
 Richard Atkyns, Typograph. Reg.
 Slingsby Bethell, Sheriff of London.

Henry Scudder, B.D., Presbyt.
 William Ramesay, M.D.
 William Bridge, A.M., Presbyt.
 William Sermon, M.D.; inscribed, W. Sherwin, ad vivum, del. et sculp. 1671
 John Gadbury, Astrol.
 Judge Powell, 1711.

He also scraped a few indifferent mezzotints, among them the first dated English plate in that manner, a portrait of Charles II., inscribed Giul. Sherwin, fecit, 1669.

SHIELS, WILLIAM, painter, was born in Berkshire in 1785. He practised in Edinburgh, but occasionally sent a picture to the Royal Academy between 1813 to 1852. Though best known as an animal painter, he frequently painted genre pictures of a simple domestic character, 'Interior of a Scotch Fisherman's Cottage,' 'Preparing for a Visitor,' &c. He died in 1857.

SHIERCLIFFE, EDWARD, miniature painter, practised at Bristol in the second half of the 18th century. He was still living in 1776.

SHIPLEY, WILLIAM, painter, born in 1714, was the originator of the Society of Arts. He was for a time a drawing-master at Northampton, and afterwards in London, where he became widely known as founder of the St. Martin's Lane Academy, once called 'Shipley's School.' There is a mezzotint by Faber of a man blowing a lighted torch, which bears the name of Shipley as the painter, but whether by this artist or not is uncertain. He died at Manchester, December 1803. He was the brother of Dr. Jonathan Shipley, Bishop of St. Asaph's, whose daughter, GEORGINA SHIPLEY, was an amateur portrait painter, and exhibited at the Academy in 1781. She married Francis Hare Naylor, of Hurstmonceaux, and died in 1806.

SHIPSTER, ROBERT, engraver, was a pupil of Bartolozzi, and practised at the close of the 18th century. He engraved West's 'Witch of Endor' in line for Macklin's Bible.

SHORT, R., painter and draughtsman. He practised about the middle of the 18th century. Twelve pictures by him of naval engagements between the French and the Spaniards, were engraved by Caroline Watson, and published by Boydell.

SHUTE, JOHN, painter and architect, was born at Collumpton, in Devon. In 1563 he published a work, 'The first and chief grounds of Architecture,' embellished with numerous cuts and figures, and dedicated to the Queen. From this dedication we learn that the author had been for a time in the service of the Duke of Northumberland, who had sent him into Italy in 1550, to study under the best architects. He is mentioned by Richard Heydock, in his translation of 'Lomazzo on Painting,' published 1598, as one of the English limners prior to Hilliard, who practised "drawing by the life in small models." He died in 1563.

SHUTER, THOMAS, portrait painter, practised in the early part of the 18th century. At Westwood Park, Droitwich, there is a portrait by him, signed and dated 1725.

SIBELIUS, M., a Dutch engraver, born at Amsterdam, who practised in London from about the year 1775 to his death in 1785. He was much employed by Sir Joseph Banks in botanical work. He also engraved a few portraits, among which are:

Cardinal Beaton; engraved for Pennant's 'Scotland.'
 Mrs. Rudd; after Daniel Dodd.

SIBERECHTS, JAN, painter, born at Antwerp in 1627, was the son of Jan Siberechts, a sculptor. He was pupil of Adriaen De Bye, and became master of the Guild of St. Luke in 1648. The Duke of Buckingham, passing through Flanders after his mission to Paris, met Siberechts, carried him to England, and employed him at Cliefden. He painted landscapes in the style of Berchem and Dujardin, and subject pictures, such as 'St. Francis of Assisi,' and 'Mother watching by Sleeping Children.' He also painted views of Chatsworth, Longleat, &c. He died in London in 1703. There is a 'Farnyard' by him in the Brussels Museum.

SIBMACHER, JOHANN, engraver, of Nuremberg, practised from 1596 to 1611, and etched several plates from Antique Statues for Boissard's collection.

SIBSON, THOMAS, an English subject painter, born in Cumberland in 1817. Intended for commerce, he was chiefly self taught in art. He went to London in 1838, and was engaged in book illustration. Specimens of his powers in this direction are to be seen in 'A Pinch of Snuff,' S. C. Hall's 'Book of Ballads,' the 'Abbotsford' edition of the 'Waverley Novels,' &c. In 1842 he went to Munich to study under Kaulbach, but returned to England on account of ill health. Proposing to winter in Italy, he died on his way there, at Malta, in 1844.

SICARD, LOUIS APOLLINAIRE, a French painter of flowers, fruit, and still-life, born at Lyons, April 25, 1807. He lived at Lyons, whence he sent occasional pictures to the Salon from 1857 onwards. He died in 1881.

SICARD, LOUIS (SICARDY), miniature and enamel painter, born at Avignon in 1746, worked in Paris and exhibited miniatures, oil portraits, and 'Pierret' scenes at the Salon between 1791 and 1819. Many of these latter were engraved. He died in 1825.

SICHELBEIN, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, an obscure painter and engraver, was born in 1648, at Memmingen, Bavaria, where he died in 1719.

SICHEM, VAN. Much confusion exists as to the life and works of the engravers of this name. No less than four Sichems have been enumerated as engravers or draughtsmen on wood, namely, Christopher the elder, Christopher the younger, Cornelis and Carl. Nagler is of opinion that Cornelis and Christopher the younger are identical. Some writers have turned their name into Vichem, through the V being the largest letter in the monogram they used.

SICHEM, CHRISTOPHER VAN, the elder, appears to have been born, perhaps at Delft, about the middle of the 16th century, and seems to have practised at Basle, Strasburg, and Augsburg. A book illustrated with his cuts, 'Die 13 Orte der löblichen Eidgenossenschaft,' was published at Basle in 1573. The 180 cuts in Müller von Marpurck's 'Contrafacturen weitberühmter Kriegshelden,' Basle, 1577, are signed with Sichem's monogram. The Strasburg Livy of 1590; a 'Beschreibung der Kunst des Fechtens,' published at Augsburg by Joachim Meyer in 1600, and a Josephus, Strasburg, 1601, were also illustrated by this Sichem. This Sichem may be the author of the following portraits, on copper:

The Emperor Charles V.; inscribed Carolus Quintus Imperator, &c. Ch. v. Sichem, sculp. et exc.
Queen Elizabeth; inscribed Elisabeta D. G. Anglia, &c. Ch. v. Sichem, fecit.

Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester; C. van Sichem, sc. et exc.

François Valesius, Duke of Alençon; the same inscription.

A set of twelve Historical subjects; Christ. van Sichem, fecit. (Woodcuts.)

SICHEM, CHRISTOPHER VAN, the younger, and CARL. What relation these were to the other Sichems it is impossible to say, but they appear to have been contemporary with Cornelis, and all three may well have been the sons of the elder Christopher. There is but little distinction between their works or the monograms they used. The following prints are attributable to Carl, who seems to have made up his monogram of the initials K. V. S.:

A numerous set of Portraits of the principal Reformers of the Church, published at Arnhem in 1609; entitled 'Iconica Hæresiarcharum.'

A set of whole-length Portraits of the Counts of Holland and Zealand.

SICHEM, CORNELIS VAN, was probably born at Delft about 1580. He was at work in Amsterdam in the early years of the 17th century, and is supposed to have been a disciple of Hendrik Goltzius, several of whose designs he engraved on wood. He also worked after Matham and Bloemart. His prints are pretty numerous. Like those of two other Sichems, they are signed with the monogram annexed . There can be little doubt as to his authorship of the following prints:

Esther before Ahasuerus; after L. de Leyden.

The Adoration of the Shepherds; after Ab. Bloemaert.

The Circumcision; after H. Goltzius.

Judith with the Head of Holofernes; after the same.

St. Cecilia; after the same.

A set of four plates, Judith, David, Samson, and Sisera; after the same.

The Four Evangelists.

SICHLING, LAZARUS GOTTLIEB, engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1812, was a pupil of Karl Mayer and Albrecht Reindel, but in 1832 entered the atelier of Frommel, at Carlsruhe. In 1834 he went to Munich, Paris, and London. For nearly two years he worked at the "Gallery of Versailles." In 1839 he returned to Nuremberg, and afterwards went to Leipsic. His excellent engraving after Graff's portrait of Lessing, led to the publication of a series of German portraits. He died at Leipsic in 1863.

SICILIANI, GIOVANNI BERNARDINO (RODERIGO). See RODRIGUEZ.

SICILANTE, GIROLAMO DA, painter, was born at Sermoneta in 1504, and is generally called Girolamo da Sermoneta. He was at first a pupil of Leonarda da Pistoja, and then of Perino del Vaga, whom he assisted in his works in the Castle of S. Angelo. He was employed by Gregory XIII. in the decorations of the Sala Regia in the Vatican, where he painted in fresco Pepin, king of France, giving Ravenna to the Church, after making Astolfo, king of the Longobardi, prisoner. Other frescoes are in San Luigi dei Franceschi. He was one of the best artists of the Roman Decadence. He died in 1550. Works:

SICKINGER, GRÉGOIRE, a Swiss painter, practising at the close of the 16th century. The details of his life are unknown, save that he appears to have married one Elizabeth Theitrich, at Soleure, in 1595. Recent discoveries have established that he is the same with the unknown artist mentioned by Nagler and Füssli as having used for signature of his works the following monogram: G. †. S. At the confraternity of St. Luke at Soleure there are some pen-and-ink drawings by him, and in the Albertina at Vienna some engravings on wood. It is probable that he made designs for the glass-workers of his period.

SICULO, JACOPO, son-in-law of Lo Spagna, lived in the early part of the 16th century. He is said to have received a commission for the decoration of the Cappella Ernli, now the Baptistery, of the cathedral at Spoleto. His earliest authenticated production is a large domed panel in the parish church of S. Mamigliano. It is dated 1538, and shows the influence of Raphael. Frescoes by Siculo exist in the Palazzo and in the church of S. Niccolo at Spoleto.

SIEBENBÜRGEN, JACOB. See CORONA.

SIEBERT, ADOLPH, a deaf and dumb painter, born at Halberstadt in 1806, entered in 1822 Wach's atelier at Berlin, and in 1830 with his 'Jupiter and Mercurius at the House of Philemon and Baucis,' gained the Academy prize and the Italian Stipendium. He died young at Rome in 1832.

SIEGEN, LUDWIG VON, (or SIEGEN VON SECHTEN,) an officer in the service of the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, who is now credited with the invention of mezzotint, which invention he communicated to Prince Rupert, by whom it was brought to England. He was born in Holland in 1609, his mother being of that country, but his father of an ancient and noble German family. He went to Germany in 1620 to receive his first education; returned to Holland in 1626, and remained there till 1637, when he entered the service of the Landgrave of Hesse. Whether his services were civil or military is not quite clear, but he had the title of lieutenant-colonel. In 1641 he again returned to Holland, and employed that and part of the following year in the execution of his first engraving, which he produced at Amsterdam in August, 1642. Siegen died in the military service of the Duke of Wolfenbüttel about the year 1680. The following are his best known plates:

1. Bust portrait of Amelia Elisabeth, Landgravine of Hesse, with a dedication, dated 1642, signed L à S. H. 17 in., W. 12½. The second state of the plate has the date 1643.
2. Eleonora Gonzaga, wife of the Emperor Ferdinand III., called by others the Queen of Bohemia. On the lower left-hand corner, G. Hondthorst pinxit anno, and on the opposite corner, L. à Siegen inventor fecit, 1643.
3. Portrait of the Prince of Orange, inscribed Guilhelmus D. G. Princeps auriacus comes Nassaviae, etc., MDCLXIII., in one row of capital letters at the bottom. Signed near the top, G. Hondthorst pinxit. L. à Siegen inventor fecit, 1644.
4. Portrait of the Princess of Orange, inscribed Angusta Maria Caroli M. B. Reg. filia Guilhelmi Princi. Aur. Sponsa. In the lower left corner, Hondthorst pinxit. L. à Siegen inv. et fecit.
5. The Emperor Ferdinand III., in an oval, on the upper part of which is inscribed, Rom. Imperator semper Aug. et Boh. Rex. and on the lower part, Lud. Siegen in Sechten ex . . . pinxit novq. a se invento modo sculptit Anno Domini 1654. On the left at bottom L V S in a monogram, and opposite the date 1654.

6. St. Bruno, a whole-length figure kneeling, turned towards the right, an open book before him. At the bottom are six verses; on the left of the verses D'ois suis Patronis, &c.; on the right, In honorem S<sup>u</sup> Brunonis, &c. L à S<sup>u</sup> S. An. 1654.
7. The Holy Family, after Annibale Carracci. Dedicated to Prince Leopold of Austria. At the bottom, Ludw. a Siegen humilissime offert—Annoib. Caratii pinx. Lower down, Lodovicq. a S. novo suo modo lusit. In the second state of the plate it is dedicated to Cardinal Mazarin, and has the date 1657.

The finest existing collection of the works of Siegen and other early mezzotinters is in the British Museum.

SIEGERT, AUGUST, a painter of Breslau, studied first at the Berlin Academy, and afterwards under David in Paris. He began as a historical painter, but afterwards painted landscapes, into which he introduced groups of historical figures. He was also a successful painter of portraits and of dioramas.

SIENA, BERNA DA (or BARNA). See BARNA.

SIENA, GUIDO DA, one of the earliest of the Sieneze painters. The name, Guido de Senis, appears upon a 'Virgin Enthroned' over an altar in the church of San Domenico at Siena. It is inscribed with the year 1221, and upon this the Sieneze have long based their claim to priority over the Florentines in the revival of art. Now, however, it is believed that the date in question has been tampered with, and that it should read 1281. In style this Madonna is thoroughly Byzantine, although in arrangement it bears a very strong resemblance to the great Cimabue in Santa Maria Novella at Florence. Several panels in the Siena Gallery are doubtfully ascribed to Guido.

SIERRA, FRANCISCO PEREZ, is reckoned a Spanish painter, though born at Naples in 1627, and instructed in art by Aniello Falcone, the master of Salvator Rosa. His father, a native of Gibraltar, was an officer in the Neapolitan army, and married a daughter of the governor of Calabria. While a student, Sierra was appointed page to one Don Diego de la Torre, whom he followed to Madrid. There he entered the school of Juan de Toledo. His patron, Don Diego, employed him in copying pictures by Spagnoletto; and in painting a series of Saints for a chapel he had founded at Madrid. Later in life Sierra was appointed manager of the Spanish prisons, and gave up art, except that he painted flower-pieces for his amusement, some of which found their way into the Buenretiro. He died in 1709.

SIEURAC, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH JUSTE, miniature painter, born in 1781, at Cadiz, of French parents. He studied at the Academy of Toulouse, and under Augustin, and exhibited miniatures at the Salon. He died at Sorèze, near Toulouse, about 1832. Amongst his miniatures were portraits of Lord Byron, Sir Walter Scott, Thomas Moore, and the Duchesse de Berri.

SIEURAC, HENRI, painter, was the son and pupil of François Joseph, and was born in Paris, August 15, 1823. He studied for a time under Paul Delaroche, and exhibited at the Salon from 1848 until his death, which took place in Paris, December 1863. The following are his best known works:

Aix.	Museum.	The Triumph of Fabius.
Chalon-sur-Saone.	"	The Birth of Bacchus.
Dijon.	"	Faith, Hope, and Charity.
Toulouse.	"	The Renesceuce (an allegory).

SIEVIER, ROBERT WILLIAM, engraver, born in London in 1794, studied engraving with Young and Scriven, and afterwards worked in the Academy schools. He engraved the portraits of Lord Ellenborough, after Lawrence; Lady Jane Grey, after Holbein; 'The Importunate Author,' after Newton, and several plates after Etty. His study in anatomy and modelling led him about 1823 to desert engraving for sculpture, in which latter art he achieved both distinction and popularity. Much of his energy was devoted to science, and in 1840 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He died in London in 1865.

SIGALON, XAVIER, painter, born at Uzès in 1788, learned his art from one Monrose, a pupil of David, and in the Nismes school of design. He acquired the means to go to Paris by painting saints for the churches of Nismes. He arrived in the capital in 1817, and studied under Guerin and Souchet. His first pictures were 'The Young Courtezan,' now in the Louvre, 'Locusta,' 'Athaliah,' and 'The Vision of St. Jerome.' A 'Baptism of Christ' met with such a fire of criticism that he retired to Nismes, where he devoted himself to portrait painting and giving drawing lessons. On Thiers becoming minister, Sigalon was commissioned to copy the 'Last Judgment' of Michelangelo in the Sistine Chapel. From 1833 to 1837 he was constantly engaged on this work, which, when seen, revived his reputation at home. But after a short visit to Paris, he returned to Rome, where he died of cholera the same year, in 1837.

SIGMUND III., King of the Poles, born in 1566, was not only a lover of the arts, but also a good artist. He painted an 'Allegory of the Foundation of a Jesuit Monastery,' which he gave to his daughter Anna on her marriage with the Count Palatine, Philip Wilhelm. The picture found its way to the Düsseldorf Gallery, and thence to Schleissheim, where it was long called a Tintoretto. He also painted a 'Mater Dolorosa,' now in the Angsburg Gallery. He died in 1632.

SIGNORACCIO, BERNARDO and PAOLO. See DEL SIGNORACCIO.

SIGNORELLI, FRANCESCO, the nephew of Luca Signorelli, assisted his uncle in the frescoes in the Chiesa di Gesù at Cortona. His own style is hard and cold, and deficient in perspective. There is a 'Standard' by him in the Sacristy of S. Giovanni Decollato at Città di Castello; also a 'Conception' in the choir of S. Francesco at Gubbio.

SIGNORELLI, LUCA, painter, born at Cortona about 1441, was the son of Egidio di Ventura Signorelli, and pupil of Pietro de' Franceschi, with whom he worked in Arezzo in 1472, and in Città di Castello in 1474. He then went to Florence, but in 1478 was invited by Pope Julius II. to Rome, where he painted two subjects from the life of Moses in the Sistine Chapel. In 1484 he was again in Perugia, and painting an altar-piece still in the chapel of St. Onofrio, in the Cathedral. In 1488 he was made a citizen of Città di Castello and a magistrate of Cortona, in which capacity he served for the rest of his long life. In 1497 he painted eight frescoes in the convent of Monte Oliveto, south of Siena, representing scenes from the life of St. Benedict, which are specially interesting on account of traits which recall Leonardo. His great work, however, is the series in the chapel of the Madonna di San Brizio in the cathedral of Orvieto, painted after 1499, in which year the first contract for them was signed. In painting them he was assisted by his pupil Girolamo Genga. Together with those of Fra Angelico (from whose design Signorelli painted, on the south side of the vaulted roof, the apostles and angels with the signs of the Passion), Luca's frescoes form a cycle of subjects belonging to the Last Judgment, 'Antichrist,' 'The Resurrection of the Dead,' 'Hell,' and 'Paradise;' below, on a dado, are represented the poets of classical and biblical antiquity, in circular pictures, surrounded by numerous allegorical and mythological paintings and groteschi in monochrome. In the 'Antichrist,' Luca has introduced portraits of himself and Fra Angelico. These frescoes were the first in Italy in which the nude figure was prominent. A comparison with those of Michelangelo in the Sistine Chapel, shows how much the latter was influenced by Signorelli's example, which, by the impulse it gave to the study of the nude, makes an epoch in the history of art. Signorelli spent his later years at Cortona, where he died in 1523. He signs his name in various ways. 'A Dead Christ,' in the cathedral of Cortona, is signed LUCAS ÆGIDII SIGNORELLI CORTONENSIS MDII; some frescoes in the Pandolfo-Petrucchi Palace, Siena, are inscribed ΛΟΥΚΑΣ Ο ΚΟΡΙΤΙΟΣ ΕΠΟΙΕΙ; the form Lucas Coritius appears on a picture in the National Gallery.

SIGRILLI, B., an Italian engraver, who flourished about the year 1760. He engraved some of the plates in the "Gerini Gallery."

SILLET, JAMES, flower painter, born at Norwich in 1764, studied in the schools of the Royal Academy. About 1804 he went to King's Lynn, but in 1810 returned to Norwich, where he died in 1840. He chiefly excelled in miniature, but he also painted still-life and theatrical scenery, and illustrated Richard's 'History of Lynn.'

SILLIG, GEORG VICTOR, painter and etcher, was born in 1806, at Dresden, where he practised for many years, painting and etching military scenes.

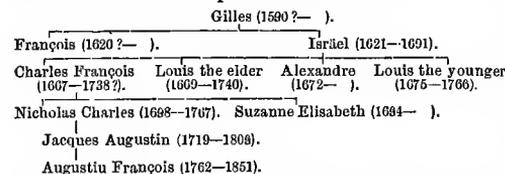

SILÓ, ADAM, a marine painter, draughtsman, and decorator, was born at Amsterdam in 1670. He was skilled in mechanics, and Peter the Great engaged him to teach five young Russians ship-building. He painted marine pieces for the Czar, in which the drawing of the vessels was good. Nine etchings of skiffs, fishing-boats, and other vessels, signed A. Silo inv. et fecit., are extant. It is said that Silo lived to the age of 90.

SILVA BAZAN Y SARMIENTO, DONA MARIANA DE, Duchess of Huescar and Arcos, born December 14, 1750, at Madrid, was a clever amateur painter and modeller, and was also known as a writer of lyric and dramatic poetry. In 1766 she was made honorary member of the Academy of San Fernando, and later was appointed honorary director. She was three times married, lastly to the Duke of Arcos, and died in 1784.

SILVA, DOMINGO JOSÉ DA, a Portuguese die-cutter and medallist, of the early part of the 19th century, was also an engraver of some note. He was a pupil of Bartolozzi, at Lisbon, in 1814, and professor at the Lisbon Academy in 1836.

SILVA, HENRIQUEZ JOSÉ DE, a Portuguese painter, who was practising about 1800. He held the post of Director of the Academy of Painting at Rio Janeiro.

SILVESTRE, (SYLVESTER,) a Scoto-French family of artists, flourished in France from about the beginning of the 17th century. The following table shows the relationship of its members:

SILVESTRE, ALEXANDRE, the third son of Israël Silvestre, was born in 1672. He etched some landscapes after Louis Silvestre, his brother, which are not without merit.

SILVESTRE, AUGUSTIN FRANÇOIS, Baron de, painter and draughtsman, the son of Jacques Augustin, and the last representative of the family, was born in Paris, December 7th, 1762. He studied under his father, and in Rome, hoping to succeed to the office of drawing-master to the royal children, which had been held by members of his family for a century and a half. On his return from Italy, however, he found that the post had been abolished, and in compensation, he was in 1782 appointed assistant-librarian to Monsieur (afterwards Louis XVIII.). From this time he abandoned painting, and devoted himself entirely to scientific pursuits. He was employed under both the Republic and the Empire, and yet was re-installed as librarian and reader to Louis XVIII. at the Restoration, receiving the title of baron. After the Revolution of 1830 he retired into private life, and died in Paris in September, 1851.

SILVESTRE, CHARLES FRANÇOIS DE, painter, engraver, and draughtsman, was the eldest son of Israël Silvestre, and was born in Paris, April 11, 1667. He was the pupil of his father, of Charles Lebrun, and of J. Parrocel, but finished his studies in Italy. On the death of his father in 1691, he succeeded to the office of drawing-master to the French royal children, and to the apartments which had been occupied by Israël in the Gallery of the Louvre. He was ennobled by Augustus III. of Poland. He married Suzanne Thuret, the niece of Jacques Thuret, a famous clock-maker of the day, and died in Paris about 1738. He engraved many landscapes and historical subjects after his own designs and those of his youngest brother.

SILVESTRE, GILLES, the first of the painters of the Silvestre family. Of Scottish origin, the name being originally SYLVESTER, they had settled in Lorraine at the beginning of the 16th century. Gilles, who was born at Nancy about 1590, married Elizabeth Henriet, daughter of Claude Henriet, painter to the Duke of Lorraine, and then, although no longer a youth, determined to devote himself to painting. His son FRANÇOIS, born at Nancy about 1620, was his father's pupil, and a draughtsman and engraver of landscapes.

SILVESTRE, ISRAËL, an eminent French engraver and son of Gilles Silvestre, was born at Nancy, in Lorraine, in 1621. He was the nephew of Israël Henriet, by whom he is supposed to have been instructed. He formed his style on Della Bella and Callot, and appears to have been imitated in his turn by Sebastian Le Clerc. He designed, etched, and engraved a great number of landscapes and views, decorating them with small figures, correctly drawn, and touched with uncommon spirit. His merit recommended him to Louis XIV., who employed him in designing and engraving views of royal palaces, public festivals, and the places Louis had conquered. He was appointed drawing-master to the Dauphin, and was made a member of the Academy. He went twice to Italy, where he found many subjects. His plates amount to upwards of one thousand. He died in Paris in 1691. His daughter SUSANNE, who was married to the painter Le Moine, engraved a few plates. The following are among Israël's best works:

A set of twenty-one Views in Italy and France, representing edifices, ruins, and landscapes, with inscriptions in French.

A set of thirteen Views in Rome and the environs; inscribed Faites par Israël Silvestre, et mises en lumière par Israël Henriet.

Twelve Views of gardens and fountains; entitled Alcune vedute de Giardini e Fontane di Roma e di Tivoli, &c., with descriptions in Italian.

Four Views in the Kingdom of Naples, in the form of friezes.

A set of six Views of Sea-ports in the Kingdom of Naples; circular plates.

Twenty-four Views of Italian and other Sea-ports; with descriptions in French; circular plates.

Twelve of the most remarkable Views in Paris and the environs, some of which are engraved by Della Bella.

A View of Paris, from the Bridge of the Tuileries.

A large View of Rome; four sheets.

Two Views of the Campo Vaccino, and the Coliseum at Rome.

The grand Carousal, or Royal Entertainment at Paris in 1662; in one hundred and eight prints. F. Chaveau engraved some of these plates.

The Pleasures of the Enchanted Island; nine Plates, with a vignette.

'Paysages Diverses;' seventy-four views of Palaces, churches, &c., in France and Italy.

'Vues Diverses de Rome et d'Italie;' one hundred and five views of Italian scenery.

SILVESTRE, JACQUES AUGUSTIN DE, painter, the son and pupil of Nicholas Charles, was born in Paris, August 1, 1719. He succeeded his father as drawing-master to the French royal children. During a three years' sojourn in Rome, he made drawings of most of the antiquities of the city. His fine collection of prints was sold after his death, which took place in Paris, in 1809.

SILVESTRE, LOUIS, called Louis the Elder, the second son of Israël Silvestre, was born in Paris, March 20, 1669, and was taught by his father. Particulars as to his works are lacking, but he appears to have painted landscapes, as he was received at the Academy in 1705 with a work of that class. He died in Paris, in 1740.

SILVESTRE, LOUIS, the younger, fourth son of Israël Silvestre, and the homonym of his elder brother, was born in Paris in 1675. He was a pupil of Le Brun and Bon Boullogne, and entered the Academy in 1702. His election picture, 'The Creation of Man by Prometheus,' is now at Montpellier. Having gained a great reputation for his portraits and landscapes, he was invited to the court of Augustus III., at Dresden, whence, after a residence of thirty years, during part of which he was director of the gallery, he returned to Paris, and was appointed to the corresponding post there. He died in Paris in 1760.

SILVESTRE, NICHOLAS CHARLES DE, the son of Charles François, was born in Paris in 1698. He was drawing-master to the royal family, and died in 1767. The following plates may be named:

Ubaldo and the Danish Knight searching for Rinaldo in the palace of Armida; after Le Moine.

A Hunting-piece; after Audray.

SILVESTRO, an early Florentine painter, was a Camaldolese monk in the Convent of Santa Maria degli Angeli at Florence. He flourished from about 1350 to 1410, and was one of the best missal painters of his time. A splendid mass-book, for his own monastery, mentioned by Vasari, remained there for centuries, and was praised by Leo X. in 1513. It was brought to England by Ottley, and one of the miniatures from it, a birth of St. John the Baptist, in the presence of the Virgin, is now in the Liverpool Institution. Others were in the Fuller Russell collection, now dispersed.

SILVIO, GIOVANNI, a native of Venice, who flourished about the year 1532. He is supposed to have been educated in the school of Titian. In the Collegiata di Piovi di Sacco, near Padua, is a picture by him bearing the above date. It represents St. Martin between SS. Peter and Paul, with three angels, two of which are supporting his crosier, and the third playing on the harp.

SILVIUS, ANTHONY, (SYLVIVS,) whom Papillon calls Silvius Antonianus, are the supposed names of a draughtsman and wood-engraver, who used the monogram A, and flourished from 1553 to about 1580. It is said that he was born at Antwerp in 1525, and was much employed by Christopher Plantin, and other printers. The names, however, of Silvius Antonianus seem to be a mistake. It appears that Papillon had observed the above monogram on the wood-cuts to an edition of Faerno's Fables, printed at Antwerp in 1567, and dedicated to Cardinal Borromeo by Silvio Antoniano, professor of Belles Lettres at Rome, and afterwards a cardinal himself, and had hastily concluded that the editor was the engraver. Nagler has given a catalogue of books to which the engraver who used the above monogram contributed wood-cuts, vignettes, or title-pages.

SILVIUS, BALTHASAR, a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1555. He executed some coarse plates, chiefly from his own designs. They are usually marked with the initials B. S. He also engraved after Frans Floris, Karl Van Mander, Jerome Bos, and others.

SIMANOWITZ, LUDOVIKE VON, née REICHENBACH, was born in Stuttgart in 1761. She painted portraits of Schiller and the painter Wächter. She died at Ludwigsburg in 1827.

SIMBRECHT, MATHIAS, was born at Munich. He died at Prague of the plague, in 1680, probably at an early age, the number of his pictures being very small. It is not known where he received his first instruction, but the effects of a profound study of Raphael are visible in his works, and indicate a sojourn of some length in Italy. There is an altar-piece in the church of S. Stephen at Prague by him; a 'Visitation' in the Museum, and further a 'S. Rosalie' and an 'Education of the Virgin.'

SIMLER, JOHANN, a Swiss painter and engraver, born at Zurich in 1693. He studied for a short time under Pesne at Berlin, and was a pupil of the engraver Melchior Fuessli. He died in 1748.

SIMMLER, FRIEDRICH KARL JOSEPH, landscape and animal painter, born in 1801 at Hanau, whither his parents had fled from the French, studied at Munich and Vienna. He made excursions through Upper Austria and Styria, studying landscape and animal painting. He paid long visits to Florence, Rome, Venice, and Naples, and, in 1829, went to Hanover to paint some portraits at the request of the Minister von Bremer. He painted in the landscapes of Schullen, Böcking, and Grieben, while Aehenbach and Scheuren occasionally painted backgrounds to his cattle. In 1862 he went to live at Aschaffenburg, where he died in 1872. His three sons all devoted themselves to art. Works:

View of Bergen.

View of Butenheim.

Landscape with Goetz von Berlichingen.

Bull and Sheep. (Berlin, Raczyński Col.)

Dutch Landscape. (Duke of Cambridge.)

SIMMLER, JOSEPH, historical and portrait painter, born at Warsaw in 1823, was a pupil of the Munich Academy. He painted portraits and historical pictures, and died at Warsaw in 1868.

SIMMONS, JOHN, born at Nailsea in Somersetshire, about 1715, was a house and ship's painter at Bristol. His name appears in the early catalogues of the Royal Academy as a portrait painter. There is an altar-piece by him in All Saints' church, Bristol, and another in S. John's, Devizes. Many of his portraits have been engraved, among them that of Ferguson, the astronomer. It is said he was known to Hogarth, who thought well of his talents. In the Academy catalogues his name is sometimes printed Simmonds of Bristol. He died at Bristol, January 18, 1780.

SIMMONS, WILLIAM HENRY, engraver, born in London, June 11, 1811. He studied engraving at Finden's Institute, and was for many years perhaps the chief of English workers in his own line. He first appeared at the Royal Academy with two plates after Frank Stone, and his last exhibited plate was 'A Humble Servant,' after Rosa Bonheur, a proof of which was at the Academy at the time of his death. His last work was to etch the plate from 'The Lion at Home,' which was completed after his death by Mr. Atkinson. He died Nov. 6, 1882. The following is a list of his chief plates:

- Rustic Beauty. 1837.
- Catherine Seyton. 1850.
- Well-bred Sitters; after Sir E. Landseer. 1875.
- Dominion; after the same.
- On Trust; after the same.
- Royal Sport; after the same.
- The Sick Monkey; after the same.

- A Wee Bit Fractious; after the same.
- Baith Faither and Mither; after the same.
- The Last of the Clan; after the same.
- His only Pair; after the same.
- New Wars to an old Soldier; after the same.
- Waiting for the Verdict; after A. Solomon.
- Not Guilty; after the same.
- Both Puzzled; after Erskine Nichol.
- 'Steady, Johnny, Steady!'; after the same.
- The Light of the World; after Holman Hunt.
- Claudio and Isabella; after the same.
- News of our Marriage; after Tissot.
- Marriage of the Prince of Wales; after Frith.
- 'Luff, boy'; after Hook.
- An Old Monarch; after Rosa Bonheur.
- A Humble Servant; after the same.
- And plates after Le Jeune, Van Lerius, Winterhalter, and others.

SIMO, or SIMONE, JUAN BAUTISTA, a Spanish painter, and native of Valencia, in which city he was associated with Antonio Palomino, in 1697, on frescoes for S. Juan del Mercado. He accompanied Palomino to Madrid, where he painted in the convent church of S. Felipe el Real. He left these paintings unfinished at his death in 1717, and they were completed by his son, PEDRO SIMO, also an artist of some merit.

SIMON DE CHALONS, a French painter of the 16th century, a native of Chalons in Champagne. From about 1545 to 1565 he was established at Avignon, where four pictures by him, 'The Adoration of the Magi,' and 'Our Lady of Pity,' in the Calvet Museum, a 'Nativity' in the church of S. Peter, and a 'Descent of the Holy Ghost' in the church of S. Didier, are to be found.

SIMON OF BELLUNA. See SIMONE DA CUSIGHE.

SIMON, JEAN, engraver, a native of Normandy, born in 1675, was trained in his own country, but came to England some years before the death of John Smith, and on seeing that artist's work, he quitted the graver, and applied himself entirely to scraping mezzotints. Sir Godfrey Kneller, upon some difference between himself and Smith, employed Simon to engrave some of his pictures in mezzotint. This he did with a success which did not desert him when he turned to the works of other masters. Among his plates we may name:

- Queen Elizabeth; after Hilliard.
- Charles I.; after Vandyck.
- William III.; after Kneller.
- Mary II.; after Vander Vaert.
- Queen Anne; after Kneller.
- George, Prince of Denmark.
- George I.; after Kneller.
- George II., when Prince of Wales; after the same.
- John, Lord Cutts; after the same.
- William, Earl of Cadogan; after the same.
- John Tillotson, Archbishop of Canterbury; after the same.
- John, Lord Somers; after the same.
- Sir William Temple; after the same.
- William, Earl of Cadogan; after La Guerre.
- Horace, Lord Walpole; after Vanloo.
- Half-length of the Princess Mary, daughter of George II.
- William Shakespeare.
- John Milton.
- Alexander Pope.
- Joseph Addison.
- Richard Steele.
- Peter delivered from Prison; after Berchet.
- The Cartoons; after Raphael.
- Christ and His Apostles; after Baroccio.
- Christ restoring Sight to the Blind; after Laguerre.
- The Samaritan Woman; after the same.
- Portrait of the Hon. Mrs. Walpole; after M. Dahl.
- Mary Stuart.
- Dorastus and Fannia; after Berchet.
- A Pastoral Landscape.

Simon died in London about 1755.

SIMON, PIERRE, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1640, is supposed to have been a pupil of Robert Nanteuil, to whose style his bears great resemblance. His best plates are his portraits, some of which are from his own designs. We have, among others:

- Louis XIV.; after C. Le Brun.
- Louis de Bourbon, Prince de Condé; from his own design.
- Anne Marie Louise d'Orleans, Duchesse de Montpensier; the same.
- Elizabeth Charlotte, Duchesse d'Orleans; the same.
- Charles d'Ailly, Duc de Chaulnes; after La Borde.
- Cardinal Rospigliosi; after C. Maratti.
- Federigo Baroccio, Painter.

Among his historical prints we have:

- The Martyrdom of St. Cosmus and St. Damianus; after S. Rosa.
- Moses and the Burning Bush; after N. Poussin.

Simon died in Paris in 1710.

SIMON, PIERRE, called the Younger, a draughtsman and engraver in the chalk and dotted manner, was born in London before 1750. He was early engaged upon plates for Worlidge's 'Antique Gems,' and was one of the engravers employed by Boydell on his Shakspeare gallery, and on other pictures by contemporary painters. His best work was done for the Shakspeare gallery; these are the plates:

- A scene from the 'Tempest'; after Fuseli.
- 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' two plates, one after Smirke, and the other after the Rev. W. Peters.
- Scene from 'Much Ado about Nothing'; after the same.
- Scene from 'Measure for Measure'; after T. Kirk.
- The 'Midsummer Night's Dream'; after Fuseli.
- Scene from the 'Merchant of Venice'; after Smirke.
- Scene from 'As You Like It'; after W. Hamilton.
- Scene from 'Taming of the Shrew'; after F. Wheatley.
- Christopher Sly; after Smirke.

Scene from 'Henry IV.'; after R. Westall.
Scene from 'Romeo and Juliet'; after W. Miller.

We may also name:

The Woodman; after Gainsborough.
Square discovered by Tom Jones in Molly Seagrim's bedroom; after Downman.
The Sleeping Nymph; after Opie.
Frances Isabella Ker Gordon; after Sir J. Reynolds.
The Three Holy Children; after the Rev. W. Peters.
Bust of Clytie; after J. B. Cipriani.
The Fair Emmeline, and a subject from the 'Vicar of Wakfield'; after Stothard.

Pierre Simon died about 1810.

SIMON DE TROYES, a French miniaturist of the 15th century. He worked for the church of S. Peter at Troyes, and died in 1450.

SIMONAÛ, FRANÇOIS, a painter of the Flemish school, born at Bornhem in 1783. He studied at Bruges, and in Paris, under Gros. He came to England about 1815, and settled in London, where he had a good practice as a portrait painter. He died in London in 1859. There is a portrait by him in the Museum at Brussels.

SIMONAÛ, GUSTAVE ADOLPHE, the nephew of François Simonau, was born at Bruges in 1810. He came to London, where his father was established as a lithographer. He took up painting, producing views of towns in water-colours, and his chief work, 'The principal Gothic Monuments of Europe,' was lithographed by himself. Later in life he was engaged as an architectural painter in Belgium. He died at Brussels in 1870.

SIMONE, ANTONIO DI, a Neapolitan painter of the 18th century. He painted battle-pieces and landscapes, and occasionally figures in the pictures of Niccolò Massaro. He must not be confounded with another ANTONIO DI SIMONE, who lived in the 17th century, and was a scholar of Luca Giordano.

SIMONE, MAESTRO. See DEGL' AVANZI.

SIMONE DA CUSIGHE, (DA BELLUNO,) sometimes also called SIMONE DAL PERON, Cusighe and Peron both being villages near Belluno. Simone died before 1416, but the date of his birth is unknown. In 1397 he finished the altar-piece for the high altar in the Duomo of Belluno, receiving 440 lire for his work. In the Baptistery at Belluno, there is an altar-piece in thirteen compartments by him, formerly in the church of S. Martino. The four lower panels were either added or entirely repainted in the 17th century. Another work is: an altar-piece in the Casa Paganì, once in the church of Sala. It is in nine panels, the Virgin of Mercy in the centre, flanked by scenes from the Life of S. Bartholomew. In the same collection is a 'S. Anthony Abbot,' enthroned between Saints. In the parish church at Sala there are some remains of frescoes by him, and in the Chiesetta della Madonna a few small panels in tempera.

SIMONE DE' CROCIFISSI. See BOLOGNA, SIMONE DA.

SIMONE DI MARTINO. See MARTINI, SIMONE.

SIMONE NAPOLITANO, an early painter at Naples, all accounts of whom are, however, obscure and doubtful. He is supposed to have flourished about the end of the 14th or first part of the 15th century, and various pictures at Naples have been assigned to him, some of which, from the dates inscribed upon them, have clearly not a common author. One of these in the church of San Lorenzo Maggiore is now proved, by an inscription which it bears, to be the work of a Siensese painter, who was probably established at Naples. The following works at Naples are ascribed to Simone:

The Nobles and Statesmen of the Kingdom lamenting the Death of King Robert. (In the nave of S. Chiara.)

S. Louis of France and others at the grave of King Robert. 1343. (Refectory of S. Chiara.)
Saint Anthony. 1438. (S. Lorenzo Maggiore.)
S. Louis crowning King Robert. (S. Lorenza Maggiore.)
The Crucifixion, a Triptych. 1412. (In the Duomo.)
Madonna della Rosa. (S. Domenico Maggiore.)
A Virgin and Child. (S. Domenico Maggiore.)

One FRANCESCO SIMONE is said to have been his son and pupil.

SIMONE PAPA. See PAPA.

SIMONEAU, CHARLES, an eminent French engraver, born at Orleans in 1645, was instructed by Noël Coypel and Guillaume Chasteau. His first plates were executed with the graver only, in a style resembling that of Poilly, but he afterwards introduced the point, particularly in the half-tones and distances. He engraved historical subjects, portraits, and vignettes. He was received into the Academy in 1710, and died in Paris in 1728. His plates number about one hundred and fifty; among them we may name:

Henrietta Maria, consort of Charles I.
The Duchess Dowager of Orleans; after Rigaud.
Ch. Fr. de Brienne, Bishop of Constance; after Dumé.
J. H. Mansart, Architect to the King; after de Troy.
George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham.
The Holy Family; after Raphael.
The Virgin and Child, with S. John; after the same.
The Adoration of the Shepherds; after Ann. Carracci.
Christ and the Woman of Samaria; after the same.
Hagar and Ishmael; after Andrea Sacchi.
A Madonna; after Frà Bartolomeo.
The Stoning of Stephen; after Ann. Carracci.
Christ, with Martha and Mary; after Domenichino.
Christ's Entry into Jerusalem; after C. Le Brun.
Christ bearing His Cross; after the same.
The Nativity; after Noël Coypel.
Christ among the Doctors; after Ant. Coypel.
The Triumph of Galatea; after the same.
Venus curing the Wound of Æneas; after C. de la Fosse.
The Journey of Marie de' Medicis; after Rubens.
The Conquest of Franche-Comté; after C. Le Brun; his best print.

SIMONEAU, LOUIS, the younger brother of Charles Simoneau, was born at Orleans in 1654. He appears to have formed his style by an imitation of the works of the Audrans. By combining the point with the graver, he gave a pleasing variety to his plates, and his drawing is correct. He died in Paris in 1727. The following are, perhaps, his best prints:

Giacinto Serroni, Archbishop of Albi.
Antoine Arnauld; after Ph. de Champagne.
Antoine le Maître, Advocate; after the same.
Martin de Charmois, Councillor; after Seb. Bourdon.
Susanna and the Elders; after Ant. Coypel.
Lot and his Daughters; after the same.
Christ with Martha and Mary; after the same.
Christ bearing the Cross; after Ant. Dieu.
The Elevation of the Cross; after the same.
The Crucifixion; after the same.
The Assumption of the Virgin; after a ceiling by Le Brun in St. Sulpice.
The Four Times of the Day; four plates; after the same.
The Four Seasons; four plates; after the same.
The ceiling of the Pavilion of Aurora, in the Jardin de Sceaux; in four plates; after the same.

SIMONEAU, PHILIPPE, the son of Charles Simoneau, was instructed by his father. Either from want of talent or application, he never made much progress in art. We have the following prints by him, which do not possess much merit:

The Rape of the Sabines, and the Peace between the Romans and the Sabines; after the pictures by Giulio

Romano (? Rinaldo Mantovano) in the National Gallery.
The three Goddesses preparing for the Judgment of Paris; after Perino del Vaga.
Venus and Adonis; after Albano.

SIMONELLI, GIUSEPPE, a Neapolitan painter, born 1649. Originally the servant of Luca Giordano, he became a successful imitator of his style. A 'St. Nicholas of Tolentino,' which he painted for the church of Montesanto, was said to equal the best work of his master. He died in 1713.

SIMONET, JEAN BAPTISTE, an engraver of considerable merit, was born in Paris in 1742. His plates are chiefly after Greuze, Moreau, Baudoin, and Aubry. He engraved 'Rachel hiding her Father's Idols,' after Pietro da Cortona, for the Orleans Gallery, the vignettes for an edition of Ovid's 'Metamorphoses,' published by Basan, and illustrations for an edition of Racine. He died in Paris in 1810.

SIMONETTI, DOMENICO, (called MAGATTA), a painter of the Roman school, who flourished in the 18th century. He is mentioned by Lanzi as having furnished many pictures for churches, especially for the Suffragio, at Rome.

SIMONINI, FRANCESCO, born at Parma in 1689, was a scholar of Ilario Spolverini. He painted battles, and cavalry skirmishes, which were well composed, and handled with spirit. He lived at Venice, where he was still working in 1753.

SIMONIS-EMPIS, CATHERINE EDMÉE, Madame, a French landscape painter, born in 1806. She was a pupil of Watelet, and died in 1878.

SIMONS, J. B., a Flemish painter, practising about 1743. He is known by two signed pictures in the Augustine church at Ghent.

SIMONS, M., a Dutch painter of still-life, of the 17th century. His works are mostly in America.

SIMPLICE, a Veronese monk, who was the pupil of Felice Riccio (Brusasorci). He practised at Rome, and died in 1654, at a very advanced age.

SIMPOL, CLAUDE DE, (or SAINT POL), a French historical painter, born at Clamecy, was a pupil of Boulogne. He was elected into the Academy in 1701, but expelled in 1709, for neglecting to send in his reception-picture. His 'Christ at the House of Martha and Mary' was engraved by Doré and Tardieu. He died in Paris, October 31, 1716.

SIMPSON, FRANCIS, an English antiquarian draughtsman, born in 1796. He was Mayor of Stamford, and practised art as a pastime. He published a volume of drawings from fonts, and died in 1861.

SIMPSON, JOHN, portrait painter, born in London in 1782, studied at the Academy schools, and was for many years assistant to Sir Thomas Lawrence. In 1834 he went to Lisbon, and was appointed painter to the Queen of Portugal. He returned to England, and died in London in 1847. In the National Gallery there is a 'Negro's Head' by him, and at Windsor Castle a portrait of the Duke of Brunswick.

SIMPSON, JOSEPH, the elder, practised in the reign of Queen Anne. According to Lord Orford, his first employment was to engrave coats of arms on pewter, but having a turn for drawing, he found access to a society of Artists, with whom he studied the figure. He was afterwards employed by Tillemans to engrave his picture of Newmarket. To this plate he affixed his name. He also engraved after Monamy, Vandevelde, Wootton, and Wyck. He lived about the year 1710.

SIMPSON, JOSEPH, the younger, was the son of Joseph Simpson, and died young, in the year 1736. He engraved a plate of a 'Holy Family, with S. John, S. Sebastian, and several Angels,' after Filippo Lauri, dated 1728, and a 'Charles I.,' after Vandyck.

SIMPSON, MATTHEW, painter, taught drawing to the children of Charles I., and settled later in Sweden. He has left a miniature of the King, signed M. S.

SIMPSON, PHILIP, an English subject painter, the son of John Simpson the portrait painter, practised in the early part of the 19th century. He studied in the schools of the Academy, where he exhibited up to 1836. There is in the Kensington Museum a picture, 'I will fight,' by him.

SIMPSON, WILLIAM, an English engraver, working in 1635. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, and, among other things, engraved the plates for Quarles' 'Emblems.'

SIMSON, GEORGE, a Scotch portrait painter, born at Dundee in 1791. When young, he worked as a printer, and did not devote himself to art till he was thirty. He became a member of the Scottish Academy, with whom his works were exhibited. He died at Edinburgh in 1862.

SIMSON, WILLIAM, painter, born at Dundee in 1800, was educated at the Trustees' Academy in Edinburgh, and painted at first coast and river scenes. In 1830 he was elected a Member of the Royal Scottish Academy. After a stay of three years in Italy, he settled in 1838 in London, where he died in 1847. Of his pictures we may name:

Cattle Shed. (South Kensington Museum.) 1842.
Gil Blas and Laura. (Do.)
Two Water-colour Drawings. (Do.)
Boats at Dordrecht. (Scot. Nat. Gallery.)
The Twelfth of August. (Do.)
Solway Moss. (Do.)
Goat Herd's Cottage, &c. (Do.)
Hagar and Ishmael. (Bridgewater Gallery.)
A Dutch Family. (Bowood House.)

SINGHER, HANS, (or JEAN), was born at Hesse-Cassel about the year 1510. He painted landscapes, with figures, in a free, bold manner, and chiefly resided at Antwerp, where he was received into the Academy in 1543. He was much employed in painting cartoons for tapestry.

SINGLETON, HENRY, an English historical painter, was born in London in 1766. His father died while he was yet an infant, and he was brought up by his uncle, a miniature painter, by whom he was instructed in drawing. He became a student of the Royal Academy, and gained the gold medal in 1788; the subject being 'Alexander's Feast.' On that occasion he was highly praised by Reynolds. For more than fifty years he was a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy, but never arrived at membership. His pictures are numerous, but seldom exhibit much ability. "Propose a subject to Singleton," said West, "and it will be on canvas in five or six hours." As might have been expected, work that cost so little was destined to a short existence. Some of his drawings for books were popular, as well as some sentimental scenes on a larger scale. Among his best works were 'Christ entering Jerusalem,' 'Christ healing the Blind,' 'Coriolanus and his Mother,' 'Hannibal swearing Enmity to the Romans,' 'Storming of Seringapatam,' 'Death of Tippoo Sahib,' and 'Surrender of Tippoo's Sons as Hostages'; all of which were engraved in mezzotint, and were popular for a time. Two pictures of his belonging to the National Gallery have been deposited in the galleries of Leicester and Coventry respectively. He painted also a series of small pictures from Shakespeare. They show more imagination and better colour than his larger works. He occasionally painted portraits. Singleton died in London in 1839. His sister, SARAH SINGLETON, exhibited miniatures at the Academy from 1790 to 1820. Other miniature painters of the same name, who exhibited about the same time, were probably his relatives.

SINIBALDI. See IBI.

SINJEUR, GOVERT, a painter of Rotterdam, who painted in the manner of Philips Wouwerman, in the 17th century.

SINT-JANS, GEBRIT VAN. See HAARLEM.

SINTRAMME, —, one of the earliest of the miniaturists. He was a monk of St. Gall, and practised in the beginning of the 10th century.

SINTZENICH, HEINRICH, (SINZENICH,) an engraver in the chalk and dotted manner, and in mezzotint, was born at Mannheim in 1752. After receiving some elementary instruction in the academy of that city, he was sent to England at the expense of the Elector to complete his studies under Bartolozzi, with whom he remained about four years. On his return to his own country he was appointed engraver to the court, and engraved many plates in the English styles. He was a member of the Academies of Munich and Berlin. He died at Munich in 1812. Nagler has described fifty-four of his principal plates. The best are :

Portrait of Rafael Mengs; after himself.
Cassandra; after Hickel.

SINTZENICH, PIETER, (SINZENICH,) engraver, brother of Heinrich Sintzenich, was in London in 1789. He engraved 'The Truce between the Romans and Sabines,' after Raphael.

SIPMANN, GERHARD, (SIPPMANN,) painter, born at Düsseldorf in 1790, was trained at the Düsseldorf Academy and at Munich, under Langer and Cornelius. He painted at first portraits and historical scenes in oil, but was afterwards employed on arabesques for Cornelius, in the Glyptothek. From 1823 onwards he occasionally painted landscapes. He died at Munich in 1860.

SIRANI, ELISABETTA, the eldest daughter of Giovanni Andrea Sirani, born at Bologna in 1638, was instructed in art by her father. Her first public commission appears to have been won in 1655, when she was seventeen years of age. She was a clever imitator of Guido, and was already famous, when she was poisoned by her servant in 1665. In spite of her early death, she left upwards of a hundred and fifty pictures. We may name :

Bologna. Certosa. Baptism of Christ.
" Pinacoteca. The Infant Christ, with S. Anthony of Padua in Adoration. And eight others.
Munich. Pinakothek. An Allegory.

Also pictures in the Palazzi Zampieri, Caprara, Zambecari at Bologna; and the Palazzi Corsini and Bologneta at Rome. She also produced a few good etchings; among them the following :

The Virgin in the Clouds holding a Rosary, with the infant Jesus; from her own design.
The Virgin weeping, surrounded by Angels, and contemplating the emblems of Christ's Passion; Elisabetta Sirani, F. 1657.
The Holy Family; after Raphael; Elisabetha Sirani, sic incisum exposuit.

The Mother of God; after the same.

St. Eustacius kneeling before a Crucifix; Elisabetha Sirani, f. 1656.

The Decollation of St. John; Elbta. Sirani, f. 1657.

SIRANI, GIOVANNI ANDREA, born at Bologna in 1610, was one of the favourite disciples of Guido Reni. After the death of his master he was employed to finish several of his works in the churches at Bologna, particularly the large picture of S. Brunone, at the Certosini. His first productions resemble the second style of Guido. He afterwards adopted a more violent system of light and shadow, approaching that of Michelangelo da Caravaggio. He died in 1670. Works :

Bologna. S. Marino. The Crucifixion.
" Certosa. The Feast at the House of Simon the Pharisee.
" S. Giorgio. Marriage of the Virgin.
" Pinacoteca. Presentation in the Temple.

He etched a few original plates, which he usually marked with the initials G. A. S. or I. A. S.; among them we may name :

Apollo and Marsyas; oval.
Death of Lucretia.

SIRCEUS, PHILIPPE. See SOYE, PHILIPPE.

SIRIES, VIOLANTE BEATRIX, born at Florence in 1710, was taught pastel and water-colour by Giovanna Fratellini. She afterwards went to Paris, where she studied under Boucher and Rigaud. Her talent was chiefly shown in portraits, though she occasionally attempted historical subjects, as well as flowers and fruit. On her return to Florence from France, she was employed to paint a large group of the Grand-Ducal Family. Her own portrait is in the Uffizi. She died about 1770.

SISSON, —, an Irish portrait painter of the 18th century. Burke speaks of having had his portrait painted by him in miniature.

SIXDENIERS, ALEXANDRE VINCENT, engraver, born in Paris in 1795, worked under Villerey. He won a considerable reputation, and was more than once premiated at the Salon. He worked first in line, afterwards in mezzotint. He was drowned in the Seine, in Paris, in 1846. Plates :

Endymion; after Girodet.
Charlotte Corday; after Scheffer.
The Village Bride; after Greuze.
Posting in the Desert; after Vernet.
Arab praying; after the same.
Edward I. in Scotland; after Delaroche.
Napoleon and the King of Rome; after Steuben.

SJOLLEMA, THIERRY PIEBES, a Dutch painter of landscapes and sea-pieces, born at Terbantsterchans in 1760. His works are almost entirely confined to Friesland. There are two pictures by him in the museum at Leeuwarden. He died at Heerenwal in 1840.

SKELTON, JOSEPH, engraver, flourished early in the 19th century. He was a younger brother of William Skelton, and studied in London. He afterwards went to Paris, and worked from the pictures at Versailles. His latest plates are dated 1850. Among the works he illustrated are :

'The Antiquities of Bristol.'
'Cantabrigia Depicta.' 1809.
'Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata.' 1823.
'Antiquities of Oxforöshire.' 1823.
'Pietas Oxoniensis.' 1828.
'Meyrick's Arms and Armour.' 1830.
'Château d'Eu illustré.' 1844.
'Galeries historiques de Versailles.'
Girault's 'Beautés de la France.' 1850.

SKELTON, WILLIAM, engraver, was born in London in 1763. He belonged to a Yorkshire branch of the Cumberland Skeltons. He was some time pupil of James Basire and of William Sharp. When he first set up for himself, his patrons were Sir Richard Worsley and Charles Townley; then Boydell and Macklin; and still later, the Dilettanti Society, for whom some of his best engravings were produced. At the close of his career he published a series of royal portraits, from the time of George III. down to the accession of Victoria, which was commercially successful, and enabled him to perform many acts of charity. Skelton died in Upper Ebury Street in 1848.

SKILL, JOHN F., water-colour painter, practised in London, and was a member of the Institute. He painted landscapes and sea-pieces, and occasional figure studies. His works were characterized by much delicacy and refinement, but failed to attract popular attention, and the artist is said to have died of a broken heart, March 8, 1881. His 'Sheep in a Turnip Field' and 'Walmer Castle' are in the South Kensington Museum. Other works are: 'Rising Tide,' 'By the Sea,' 'Thames Lock in June,' 'Her First Ball.'

SKILLMAN, WILLIAM, an English engraver, who flourished about the year 1666. Among other plates he engraved a view of Albemarle House, and another of the Banqueting House, Whitehall.

SKIPE, JOHN, a native of Ledbury, was a gentleman of education, and an amateur artist. He engraved in chiaroscuro a number of subjects, chiefly after the designs of Parmigiano, Correggio, Raphael, and other masters of the Italian School, which he published from about the year 1770 to 1812. It is supposed that he was a pupil of John Baptist Jackson. The dates of his birth and death are unknown.

SKIRVING, ARCHIBALD, painter, was born at Haddington in 1749. He studied for some time in Rome, and towards the close of the 18th century practised in London, working principally as a portraitist in chalk and crayon, and also painting miniatures in water-colours. At the beginning of the 19th century he was established in Edinburgh, where he became well known both by the excellence of his art and the humorous eccentricity of his character. He died in 1819. The portraits of Professor Dugald Stewart and William Berry in the National Portrait Gallery (Scotland) are by him, also a portrait in the Scottish National Gallery. Andrew Geddes etched Skirving's portrait.

SKJÖLDEBRAND, a Swedish painter, who went in 1799 with Acerbi to the North Cape, and on his return published a work on his travels. In 1804 he also published a volume of views of the Trollhätta Falls. He died in 1835.

SKOOVGAARD, PETER KRISTIAN, a Danish landscape painter, was born at Haunmerhus, near Ringsted, in 1817. He received his first teaching from his mother, and then at the age of fifteen entered the Copenhagen Academy. His first work, a Moonlight Landscape, was purchased in 1836 by Christian VIII. He afterwards travelled to Rome and Naples, studied Titian and Claude, but continued faithful to Danish scenery for his subjects. In 1864 he became a member of the Academy at Copenhagen, where he died in 1876.

SLABBAERT, KAREL, (SLABBARD,) a Dutch genre painter, flourished in the 17th century. It is supposed that he studied under Gerard Dou. His pictures are not common; there is one in the Museum at Amsterdam, an interior with a woman cutting bread, and two children praying. In 1645 he was living in Amsterdam, but he is supposed to have been a native of Middelberg, where he was buried in November, 1654.

SLANGENBURGH, KAREL JAKOB BAAR VAN, an obscure painter of portraits and interiors, was born at Leeuwarden in 1783. He died about 1850.

SLANGENSCHILDER. See VROMANS.

SLATER, JOSEPH, an English decorative and landscape painter, practised early in the 18th century. He was engaged on decorative work at Mereworth Castle and at Stowe.

SLATER, J. W., a miniature painter of some merit, who settled early in life in Ireland, and practised with success in Dublin in the second half of the 18th century. He subsequently returned to England, and exhibited at the Academy in 1786 and 1787.

SLATER, T., an English engraver who flourished about the year 1630. He engraved, among others, a portrait of George Webbe, Bishop of Limerick.

SLAUGHTER, STEPHEN, portrait painter, was practising in Ireland between 1730 and 1740. He afterwards became keeper of the king's pictures, and lived towards the close of his life at Kensington, where he died in 1765. In the National Portrait Gallery there is a 'Sir Hans Sloane' by him, and at Blenheim Palace, portraits of the Hon. J. and Lady G. Spencer. His sister was also an artist.

SLEAP, JOSEPH AXE, water-colour painter, was born in London, May 30, 1808. He was an artist of much ability, but his life was embittered by a perpetual struggle against poverty, which crippled his powers. He was beginning to win his way to fame and recognition, when he died at the age of fifty-one, October 16, 1859. His 'St. Paul's, from Paul's Wharf,' in the Glasgow Gallery, is a good example of his work. There is also at South Kensington a view of Lago Maggiore by him. His works are little known, as he never contributed to the principal London Exhibitions.

SLEMPOP. See VIRSCHEN, THEODOR.

SLINGELANDT, PIETER CORNELIS VAN, born at Leyden in 1640, was a pupil of Gerard Dou. He followed the style of his master, and as far as patience and polish are concerned, he may be said to have equalled, if not surpassed, his instructor; but in character, chiaro-scuro, and design, he is far inferior. Houbraken declares that he was occupied three whole years on the family portrait of the Meermans, and that he was employed a month in finishing a ruff. He died in 1691. His chief works are:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Violin Player. Signed P. v. Slingerland fecit.
Dresden.	Gallery.	The Music Lesson.
"	"	A Singing Woman.
Glasgow.	Gallery.	The Doctor's Visit.
"	"	A Musical Party.
London.	Bridgewater House.	Cooks with Partridges.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	A Tailor's Shop.
"	"	A Woman at a Window.
Paris.	Louvre.	The Meerman Family.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	A Family Group

SLOANE, MICHAEL, engraver, a pupil of Bartolozzi, who practised up to the beginning of the 19th century, and engraved the 'Notte,' after Correggio, 'The Christening,' after Wheatley, and other works.

SLUYTER, P., a Dutch engraver, who flourished about the year 1700. He was principally employed in engraving frontispieces and other book ornaments from the publications of Peter Van der Aa.

SMAK-GREGOOR, GILLIS, painter of landscapes and animals, was born at Dordrecht in 1770. He was the nephew and pupil of the Van Strys, and also studied under Versteeg and Van Leen. He died in 1843.

SMALLWOOD, WILLIAM FROME, architectural draughtsman, born 1806, was the son of a hotel-keeper in Covent Garden. He was a pupil of Cottingham, and exhibited a number of sketches at the Royal Academy and at Suffolk Street from 1826 to 1834. Many of his drawings were reproduced in the 'Penny Magazine.' He died in 1834.

SMARGIASSO. See CIAFFERI.

SMART, JOHN, miniature painter, born about 1740, was a pupil of the St. Martin's Lane Academy. In 1783 he went to Ipswich, and exhibited miniatures at the Academy up to 1788, when he went to India, where he met with great success. He returned to England after about five years, and settled in London, where he died in 1811.

SMART, SAMUEL PAUL, a painter of miniature portraits, practising in London. He exhibited at the Academy from 1769 to 1787.

SMEES, JAN, a Dutch landscape painter and engraver, who flourished in the first quarter of the 18th century, and is supposed to have died in 1729. To judge of him by his five known etchings, he must have painted in the manner of Jan Both. These etchings consist of landscapes enriched with figures, animals, buildings, and ruins; and are signed J. Smees in. et fecit.

SMETS, CHRISTIAN, a Flemish painter of the 16th century, a native of Mechlin. He came to France in 1550, and entered the service of Henri d'Albret, grandfather of Henry IV.

SMEYERS, GILLIS, (or ÆGIDIUS,) the elder, born at Mechlin in 1635, was the son (?) and pupil of Nicolas Smeyers. He also studied under J. Verhoeven. He married Elizabeth Herregouts, daughter of the painter, David Herregouts, and had by her three sons, JAKOB (q.v.), JAN, and JUSTIN. They all became painters, and were members of the Guild of St. Luke at Mechlin, but only Jakob has left any trace in the history of art. In 1657 Gillis Smeyers was made free of the Guild of St. Luke, and in 1682 he was acting as treasurer for the society. He was the close friend of Lucas Franchoy's II., and finished an 'Assumption' begun by the latter. Smeyers died in 1710. Works:

Brussels.	Museum.	St. Norbert consecrating two Deacons.
"	"	Death of St. Norbert.
Mechlin.	Museum,	The Deans of the Tailors' Guild at Mechlin, 1695.
"	Church of S. John.	The Benefits of the Holy Trinity.
"	Seminary.	The Resurrection of Lazarus.

And other works at Mechlin.

SMEYERS, GILLIS, (or ÆGIDIUS,) the younger, painter, was the son of Jakob Smeyers, and was born at Mechlin in 1694. His father wished him to become a painter, but the young man himself showed a preference for historical studies. At the age of twenty-one, however, he decided for art as a profession, and started for Düsseldorf, under the protection of the Baron de Loë. Here he studied for three years under the painter Douven, of Ruremonde, but was recalled to Mechlin by the necessities of his parents, who had both become blind. He maintained them in their infirmity, working as a decorative painter when other commissions failed, and began also to utilize his early literary studies, by writing articles for the 'Bibliotheca Belgica,' and for Descamps' 'Lives of Painters.' He was the author of a supplement to Van Mander's 'Lives of Painters,' compiled a complete inventory of works of art at Mechlin, with notices of Mechlin artists, and wrote a Life of Rubens, the MS. of which he sold in his old age. His talents and industry, however, failed to secure him against poverty, for towards the close of his life, when attacked by disease, he was obliged to sell his library to gain admittance into the hospital at Mechlin, where he died in 1774. The following of his works are to be found at and near Mechlin:

Portrait of the Chanoine de Laet.	( Grand Seminary. )
Fall of the Angels.
History of S. Dominic.	( Church of S. Rombaut. )
Pentecost.	( Convent of the Black Nuns. )
Allegorical Groups.	( Convent of the Sœurs Maricolles. )
Portrait of Cardinal d'Alsace de Boussu.	( Museum. )
The Deans of the Tailors' Guild in 1735.	( Museum. )
Episode in the History of the Dominicans.	( Museum. )
Portraits of Children.	( Notre Dame, Hanswyck. )
Several Pictures.	( Church of Assche. )

SMEYERS, JAKOB, painter, born at Mechlin in 1657, was the son of Gillis the elder. He was his father's pupil, and entered the Guild of St. Luke in 1688. He painted history and genre, but was more successful with portraits. In the church of S. Catherine at Mechlin there are a 'Temptation of S. Anthony' and a 'Holy Family' by him, and in the convent of the Black Nuns a picture of the Sisters adoring the Trinity. He died at Mechlin in 1732.

SMIBERT, JOHN, (SMYBERT,) born at Edinburgh about the year 1684, served his time with a common house painter. He came to London, where he was forced to content himself with work for coach painters. He was afterwards employed in copying for dealers. He studied for a time in Sir James Thornhill's Academy, and then went to Italy, where he spent three years in copying Titian, Vandyck, and Rubens, and improved enough to be largely employed on portraits after his return. When he had thus surmounted his early difficulties he was tempted to embark in the scheme of the Bishop of Cloyne, for the erection of a universal college of arts and sciences in Bermuda. The death of the King, his patron, put an end to the Bishop's project, but Smibert, who had set sail, had resolution enough to proceed, and settled at Boston, in New England. There he married a lady of fortune, and continued the practice of his art, exercising great influence on American artists. He died at Boston in 1751, leaving two children, one of whom, Nathaniel, became an artist.

SMIES, JAKOB, born at Amsterdam in 1765, painted a few pictures, but was better known as a drawing-master and illustrator of books. He died in 1825.

SMIRKE, RICHARD, antiquarian draughtsman, born in 1778, was the brother of Sir Robert Smirke, and was brought up an artist, studying in the Academy schools, where he gained a gold medal in 1799. Eventually he abandoned painting for the study of antiquities, and became known as an accurate draughtsman of such subjects. He was much employed by the Society of Antiquaries, and made for that body a series of facsimiles from the ancient paintings in St. Stephen's Chapel, Westminster. He died May 5, 1815.

SMIRKE, ROBERT, an excellent English painter of humorous and sentimental subjects, was born at Wigton in 1752. At the age of nineteen he became a student at the Royal Academy, but did not exhibit there till the year 1786; in 1792 he was elected an associate, and in the same year an academian. It is said that he painted arms on coach panels; so did Catton, whose name is among the first forty of the Royal Academicians. His pictures are numerous, and generally of small dimensions, as they were mostly painted to illustrate plays, poems, or novels, and intended for the engravers. Such compositions he carried out mostly in monochrome, or with but very slight indications of colour. His favourite subjects are from Scripture, English history, Shakspeare, 'Don Quixote,' the 'Arabian Nights,' &c. Those for the story of 'The Hunchback,' engraved by Daniell, are in his happiest manner. He continued to practise his art till late in life. It is said that his last works were the designs for the bas-reliefs in front of the Oxford and Cambridge Club House in Pall Mall, of which his sons were the architects. He had formerly designed the bas-reliefs for the Junior United Service Club, at the corner of Charles Street and Regent Street, also built under the same direction. Smirke died in London in 1845. A series of illustrations to 'Don Quixote' have been deposited by the National Gallery authorities in the Museum of Stoke-upon-Trent.

SMIT, ANDREAS, a Dutch painter of marine subjects, lived about the middle of the 17th century. There is a good sea-piece by him in the Berlin Gallery. There was also an Arnold Smit, who lived about the same period, and painted landscapes and sea-pieces. His large pictures of marine subjects resemble the darkest of Backhuysen. There is a sea-piece signed A. Smit, in the Copenhagen Gallery, attributed to him. Perhaps the two men are identical.

SMITH, ANKER, an excellent engraver of small plates in line for books, was born in London in 1759. He received his education at the Merchant Taylors' School, and was afterwards articled to his uncle, an eminent conveyancer. He soon quitted him, however, for an engraver of the name of Taylor. This master instructed him in the mechanical part of the business, and his natural talent soon enabled him to surpass his teacher. He became an assistant to James Heath, in whose name he is said to have executed several plates, among them the 'Apotheosis of Handel.' Bell, who was now publishing an edition of the British Poets, engaged him to engrave the plates for it; and he was soon employed by other publishers. He also engraved several of the plates for Smirke's edition of 'Don Quixote.' It is said that he practised at one time under Bartolozzi. He was one of the engravers employed by Boydell on the 'Shakspeare Gallery'; the print of 'The Death of Wat Tyler,' after Northcote, obtained his election to the Royal Academy. He engraved the plates for an edition of Shakspeare edited by Wood, for the works by Coombe, on 'The Ancient Marbles and Terracottas in the British Museum'; also several plates after Leonardo da Vinci, Titian, and Correggio. He died in 1819.

SMITH, BENJAMIN, an engraver in the chalk and dotted manner, was born in London; the year of his birth is not clearly ascertained. He was a pupil of Bartolozzi, and was one of the engravers employed by Boydell on his 'Shakspeare Gallery,' some of the best plates in which are by him. He engraved chiefly after contemporary painters. Among his works are the following:

Christ healing the Sick; after B. West.

St. Peter's first Sermon; after the same.

An Allegory of Providence; after J. F. Rigaud.

An Allegory of Innocence; after the same.

Sigismunda; after Hogarth.

Bacchus; after Sir J. Reynolds.

Shakspeare nursed by Tragedy and Comedy, and

The Infant Shakspeare attended by Nature and the Passions; both after Romney.

An equestrian Portrait of George III.; after Beechey.

The Portrait of Napoleon; after Appiani.

William Hogarth and his Dog; after Hogarth.

The Marquis Cornwallis; after Copley.

The Annual Ceremony of Administering the Oath of Allegiance to the Lord Mayor elect, &c.

Scene from 'Richard II.'; after Mather Brown.

Smith died in 1833.

SMITH, CHARLES, portrait painter, native of the Orkneys, studied in London. In 1793 he resided in Edinburgh, and exhibited a 'Nymph' and an 'Infant Bacchus,' and the same year went to India, where he was appointed painter to the Great Mogul. In 1796 he returned to London, and exhibited an 'Andromeda,' a 'Cymon and Iphigenia,' and other works. In 1802 he published a musical entertainment, in two acts, called a 'Trip to Bengal.' He etched his own portrait. He died at Leith in 1824.

SMITH, CHARLES JOHN, an engraver, was born at Chelsea in 1803. He was the son of an eminent surgeon, resident there for many years. He was instructed in the art of engraving by Charles Pye. He became skilful in his profession, and was extensively employed in the best antiquarian and topographical publications of the time. Among these are Stothard's 'Sepulchral Effigies,' Cartwright's 'Rape of Bramer,' Murray's 'Illustrations of Johnson,' Dibdin's 'English Tour,' and others, some of which were published privately. In 1828 he engraved a series of facsimile autographs of illustrious persons from the reign of Richard II. to that of Charles II., to which biographies were furnished by John Gough Nichols, F.S.A. At the time of his death he was engaged in a work entitled 'Historical and Literary Curiosities,' of which six numbers were published; the two required to complete it were left unfinished. He was a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. His death occurred in 1838.

SMITH, COLVIN, born at Brechin in 1795, studied in the schools of the Royal Academy in London. He went to Italy and Belgium, returned to Scotland, and settled in Edinburgh. He executed many portraits, among which one of Sir Walter Scott became so popular that he is said to have repeated it more than twenty times. He died in 1875. Works:

Edinburgh.	Nat. Gallery.	Portrait of Lord Melville.
"	"	Portrait of Sir Ralph Abercromby
"	"	Portrait of Sir James Mackintosh.
Glasgow.	Gallery.	Portrait of Lord Jeffrey.
London.	Nat. Port. Gall.	Portrait of Sir Walter Scott.

SMITH, CONSTANTIN LOUIS FÉLIX, painter, was born in Paris, November 18, 1788. He was a pupil of David and of Girodet, and studied at the École des Beaux Arts. He exhibited at the Salon from 1817, and his best known works are to be found in the following galleries :

Amiens.	Museum.	Andromache at Hector's Tomb.	Hector's
Nismes.	"	Athaliah's Dream.
Orleans.	"	An Italian Landscape.
Versailles.	Gallery.	Amerigo Vespucci.
"	"	Louisa of Savoy, Duchess of Angoulême.
"	"	Mary Adelaide of Savoy, Duchess of Burgundy.

His portrait of the Regent Philip of Orleans was destroyed in the pillage of the Palais Royal in 1848.

SMITH, EDWARD, an English engraver, who practised early in the 19th century. He engraved 'Puck,' after Sir J. Reynolds, 'The Piper' and 'Guess my Name,' after Wilkie, and 'The Contadini Family Prisoners,' after Eastlake. He was engaged on Finden's 'Royal Gallery.'

SMITH, EMMA, water-colour painter, born about 1787, was the daughter of John Raphael Smith. She was a member of the short-lived Society of Associated Artists in Water-colours, and in 1805 exhibited 'Hector taking Leave of Andromache' at the Royal Academy.

SMITH, FRANCIS, a landscape painter, whose name appears in some of the earlier catalogues of the Royal Academy, is said to have been born in Italy. He travelled in the East with Lord Baltimore. In 1770 he exhibited Views of Naples and Constantinople; two years afterwards a 'View of Naples,' an 'Eruption of Vesuvius,' and an 'Old Temple near Pozzuoli'; and the following year views of London and Westminster Bridges, taken from the bottom of Arundel Street, Strand. There are some prints after drawings by him of Turkish costumes and ceremonies in the seraglio. He died about 1779.

SMITH, FREDERICK COKE, water-colour painter, was born early in the present century. He visited Turkey, and in 1836 completed a series of sketches of Constantinople, which were lithographed by J. F. Lewis. He subsequently published a set of sketches made in Canada. His works show great facility, but lack finish. He died in 1839.

SMITH, GABRIEL, engraver, born in London in 1724. Having learned to use the burin he went to Paris, where he acquired the chalk method; and on his return to England began to practise it, with the assistance of Ryland, with some success. His best plates were executed for Boydell. We may name the following :

The Blind leading the Blind; after Tintoretto.

Tobit with the Fish; after Sal. Rosa.

The Queen of Sheba's visit to Solomon; after Le Sueur.

A Bear-hunt; after Snyder.

He died in 1783.

SMITH, GEORGE, known as Smith of Chichester, was the son of a man who combined the trades of baker and cooper with the calling of a baptist minister. He was born at Chichester in 1714, and with his brothers studied art by painting the scenery in the neighbourhood. His mature works were feeble imitations of Claude and Poussin, but were fortunate enough to be engraved by Woollett and others, and to win a prize from the Society of Arts over the head of Richard Wilson. With his brother John he published fifty-three small etchings from their own landscapes. Smith was a good musician, frequently performing at concerts, and a poet of some taste. He died in 1776.

SMITH, GEORGE, painter, born in London in 1802, was brought up as an upholsterer, but on coming of age resolved to be an artist, and entered the Academy Schools. He made such progress that in 1829 he won the gold medal, and was sent to Rome in the following year. He returned to England in 1833, and practised in London, but his works did not meet with the recognition they deserved; and discouraged by his want of success, he fell into ill-health, and died October 15, 1838. At South Kensington there is by him, 'Scipio Africanus receiving his son from the Ambassadors of Antiochus.'

SMITH, HERBERT LUTHER, painter, born in 1811, was the younger brother of Frederick William Smith, the sculptor, and a student of the Royal Academy. He exhibited portraits in 1831 and 1832, and, later, various historical subjects. He was much employed by the Queen as a copyist. He died March 13, 1870.

SMITH, JACOB, an obscure English engraver, who flourished about the year 1730. Among other prints he engraved the portraits of Sir Isaac Newton and Sir Hans Sloane, on one plate. The work is carried out in a single spiral line, like Mellan's 'Sudarium of St. Veronica.'

SMITH, JAN, a Dutch painter of the 17th century, painted a portrait of Adam van Vianen, which was engraved by Theodore van Kessel.

SMITH, J. CATTERSON, painter, born at Shipton in Yorkshire, in 1806, studied in the Academy schools in London, and occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy; but about 1839 he went to Ireland, settled for a time in Londonderry, and afterwards in Dublin, where he became the most fashionable portrait painter of the day. He was a member of the Royal Hibernian Academy, and in 1859 was elected president, a distinction which he resigned in 1866. He died in Dublin, May 31, 1872. Works :

Dublin.	National Gallery.	Portrait of himself.
"	"	Portrait of W. Dargan.
"	Mansion House.	Portrait of Queen Victoria.
"	City Hall.	Portrait of Daniel O'Connell.
"	Castle.	Portraits of several Viceroys.
London.	South Kensington Museum.	Portrait of Lord Dungannon.

SMITH, J. JOHN, landscape painter, born in London about 1775. He exhibited occasionally at the Academy from 1813 to 1821, and etched a few plates of village scenes.

SMITH, JOHN, landscape painter, born at Chichester in 1717, was younger brother to Smith of Chichester, to whom he was inferior as an artist. He died at Chichester in 1764.

SMITH, JOHN, born at Daventry in 1652, son of an engraver, is considered the best mezzotint engraver of his time. He is said to have served an apprenticeship to one Tillet, a painter in Moorfields. As soon as he became his own master, he learned the art of mezzotint scraping from Isaac Becket, and received further instruction in it from J. Van der Vaart. Sir Godfrey Kneller having seen some of his performances, took him into his employment, and engaged him to engrave many of his portraits, which are the best of his works. The dates on his plates range from 1679 to 1727. He died at Northampton in 1742. His portrait by Kneller is in the National Gallery. His prints are very numerous; among them are the following :

Charles II. with the Star.

James, Duke of York, leaning on an Anchor.

The Duke of Schomberg on Horseback.

Meinhard, his Son, when Duke of Leinster.
 William III. | Queen Mary II.

 M. Magdalene; after G. Schalcken.
 The Angel and Tobit; after Elsheimer.

SMITH, JOHN, known as Warwick Smith, was born at Irthington, Cumberland, in 1749. He was one of the early draughtsmen in water-colours. He accompanied Lord Warwick to Italy, where he made sketches. His Italian drawings date from 1786 to 1795, and show a vast development of style. Eight of them are in the South Kensington Museum. He was President of the Water-Colour Society in 1816. He died in London in 1831.

SMITH, JOHN ORRIN, an English wood-engraver, born at Colchester in 1799. Intended for an architect, he preferred engraving, and in 1824 became a pupil of W. Harvey. He was much employed in book-illustration. He died in 1843. Amongst the works for which he made woodcuts were:

The Kenoy-Meadows Edition of Shakespeare.
Paul and Virginia. 1835.
Herder's 'Cid,' Stüttgart. 1839.
Scott's Bible.	The Solace of Song. 1837.
La Fontaine's Fables.	Cowper's Poems. 1841.
Béranger's Songs.	The Arabian Nights. 1841.

SMITH, JOHN RAPHAEL, painter and mezzotint engraver, was the son of Thomas Smith of Derby, the landscape painter, and was born in the year 1752. He commenced life as a shopman in Derby, but came early to London. It is not known by whom he was taught mezzotint and crayon drawing, but he became eminent in both. His plates only amount to about one hundred and fifty. He led a life of business and pleasure, the latter predominating, and he lost the advantages fortune placed in his way. He had a good heart, encouraged merit in others, assisted George Morland, made the world acquainted with Chantrey's abilities, gave his advice kindly and generously to all artists who consulted him, and was no man's enemy but his own. At one time he travelled as an itinerant portrait painter; he also painted figure subjects in a style between those of Morland and Wheatley. Among his pupils were William Hilton and Peter de Wint. For the last three years of his life he resided at Doncaster, where he died in 1812, in his 60th year. Among his best plates are the following:

The Duke of Devonshire.
 William Markham, Archbishop of York.
 Richard Robison, Archbishop of Armagh.
 Joseph Dean Bourke, Archbishop of Tuam.
 Lady Beaumont.
 Lady Caroline Montague, daughter of the Duke of Buccleuch.
 Mrs. Montague.
 The Marchioness of Thomond, when Miss Palmer.
 Lady Gertrude Fitzpatrick, daughter of the Earl of Upper-Ossory.
 Lady Catherine Pelham Clinton.
 Master Crewe, as Henry VIII.
 Master Herbert, as the young Bacchus.
 Lieutenant-Colonel Tarleton.
 Mrs. Musters.
 Lieutenant-General Sir William Boothby.
 Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans (Egalité).
 The Student.
 The Calling of Samuel.

(The above are all after Reynolds.)

Vice-Admiral Sir Hyde Parker; after Northcote.
 Miss Coghlan; after Gainsborough.
 Mrs. Siddons, as the Grecian Daughter; after Lawrence.
 Edw. Wortley-Montagu, as an Oriental; after Peters.
 George IV. when Prince of Wales; after Gainsborough.
 Marie-Antoinette, Queen of France.
 William, Duke of Portland; after West.
 Friedrich, Prince of Hesse-Cassel; after Rusca.
 Admiral Lord Duncan; after Danlour.
 Martin Ryckaert; after Van Dyck.
 Woodward, as Petruccio; after Van der Gucht.

Four crayon portraits by Raphael Smith are in the South Kensington Museum.

SMITH, JOHN THOMAS, engraver and writer, was born in 1766. His father, Nathaniel, had been a pupil of Roubilliac, and had formed an early friendship with the younger Nollekens. At the age of thirteen John Thomas Smith was introduced to the studio of Nollekens, to whom his father was then principal assistant. Here he had much practice in drawing, and after three years became a student of the Royal Academy. Having shown much ability by some drawings in imitation of Rembrandt and Ostade, he became the pupil of Sherwin the engraver. After leaving Sherwin he practised as a drawing-master, but in 1791 he commenced his first independent work, 'The Antiquities of London and its Environs,' which he completed in 1800, the whole consisting of ninety-six plates in imperial quarto. He next published 'Antiquities of Westminster,' illustrated with two hundred and forty-six engravings from subjects the greater part of which no longer exist, to which he afterwards added a Supplement. These works were followed by 'Ancient Topography of London,' completed in 1815, which contains thirty-two plates boldly etched in a style like that of Piranesi. In 1816 Smith was appointed Keeper of the Prints in the British Museum. In that situation he found leisure to publish 'Vagabondiana, or Anecdotes of Mendicant Wanderers through the Streets of London,' which he illustrated with etchings of remarkable beggars and other notorieties. His last publication was 'Nollekens and his Times.' His 'Book for a Rainy Day' appeared after his death. He died in London, after a short illness, in 1833.

SMITH, JOSEPH CLARENDON, water-colour painter and engraver, was born in London in 1778. His father, a builder, left his son without provision, and the boy was accordingly sent to sea. After three years' service he gained admission to Christ's Hospital School to study navigation. Here he showed an inclination for art, which led to his being apprenticed to an engraver, under whom he worked creditably, but afterwards meeting with little recognition he began to practise water-colour, and with more success. He exhibited topographical subjects at the Academy from 1806 onwards. His best work as an engraver is to be found in Weld's 'Topography of Killarney.' Attacked by lung disease he was ordered to Madeira, and died on the return voyage in August, 1810. Two examples of his work are at South Kensington.

SMITH, SAMUEL, engraver, born in London about 1745, practised in landscape, and completed some good plates, such as 'The Finding of Moses,' after Zuccarelli, and a 'Niobe,' after Wilson.

SMITH, SAMUEL S., an English engraver, born in 1810. He worked much for the 'Art Journal.' He died at St. John's Wood in 1879. Amongst his best plates are:

The Carrara Family; after Eastlake.
St. Agnes; after Domenichino.

SMITH, THOMAS, an ingenious English landscape painter, who resided chiefly at Derby, and was usually styled Smith of Derby, to distinguish him from the other artist of the same name who practised at Chichester. Without the help of a master he reached an eminent rank in his profession, and was one of the first of English artists to explore and display the charming scenery of his native country. He painted many picturesque views in the Peak; forty of these, engraved by Vivares, were published, collectively, by Boydell in 1760. Other views were engraved by Mason and Elliot. Smith also painted some sporting subjects. He died at the Hot Wells, Bristol, in 1769.

SMITH, THOMAS CORREGGIO, miniature painter, the eldest son of Smith of Derby, was brought up to his father's profession, for which, however, he seems to have had very little aptitude. He exhibited miniatures and small portrait drawings of a very mediocre stamp at the Academy from 1785-1788. He settled at Uttoxeter, where he died early in the 19th century.

SMITH, TOM, engraver, was a pupil of Charles Grignon, and executed some plates jointly with C. White. He became independent of his profession through coming into a fortune. On this account he was known among his companions as 'Squire Smith.' He died of fever when still a young man, in 1785.

SMITH, WILLIAM, born at Guildford in 1707, devoted himself to portraiture, but later tried landscape, and afterwards fruit and flowers. He was the eldest brother of Smith of Chichester. He died at Shopwyke, near Chichester, in 1764.

SMITH, WILLIAM COLLINGWOOD, an English water-colour painter and popular teacher, was born in 1815. In 1843 he was elected an associate, and in 1849 a member of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours. His work was distinguished by breadth and delicacy rather than by strength. Many of his subjects were taken from Roman remains in Italy and elsewhere. Two of his drawings are in the South Kensington Museum. He died in 1887, and a small collection of his works was exhibited the following winter in the Gallery of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours.

SMITS, FRANS MARCUS, a Flemish painter, born at Antwerp in 1760. In 1779 he was studying at the Academy at Antwerp. He was also a pupil of A. de Quertemont. He died at the Hospital of S. Elizabeth in 1833, after a life of much privation and poverty. At Antwerp there is a portrait of the painter Herreyns by him. He also painted a good portrait of Ommeganck.

SMITS, LUDOLF, (or LUDEWYK,) called HART-CAMP, was born at Dort in 1635, and acquired some reputation as a painter of flowers and fruit, but his impasto was so thin that his works are now almost obliterated. He was still living at Dort in 1675.

SMITS, NICHOLAS, a native of Breda, and born about the year 1672, is mentioned as a good painter of historical subjects. It is said that he died in 1731, but the Dutch writers seem to know little or nothing of his history. His works are few.

SMITZ, CASPAR, (SMITS,) a Dutch painter, who came to England soon after the Restoration, and who, from painting a great number of Magdalenes, was called 'Magdalene Smith.' He visited Ireland, where he painted small portraits in oil, at high prices. His flower and fruit pieces were good. In his Magdalenes he generally introduced a thistle in the fore-ground. He died poor at Dublin in 1707. He engraved three mezzotints, a portrait, a 'Magdalene in a Grotto,' and a 'Hagar in the Wilderness.'

SMUGLEWICZ, LUCIAN, painter, flourished at the end of the 18th century at Warsaw. He painted some frescoes in the Castle and Dominican Church at Lancut, in Galicia. He was the pupil of his father, one LUCAS SMUGLEWICZ.

SMYTERS, (or DE SMYTERE.) See DE HEERE.

SMYTH, JOHN TALFOURD, engraver, born at Edinburgh in 1819, studied under Sir W. Allan and at the Trustees' Academy, though he was chiefly self taught. In 1838 he went to Glasgow, but returned to Edinburgh, where he died in 1851. His chief engravings are:

Knox distributing the Lord's Supper; after Wilkie.
Tartars dividing their Booty; after Allan.
The Last in; after Mulready.

SNAPHAAN. See SCHNAPHAN.

SNAYERS, HENDRIK, (SNYERS,) a Flemish engraver, born at Antwerp about the year 1612. It is not ascertained from whom he learned his art of engraving, but he imitated the style of Scheltius & Bolswert with considerable success. His drawing is tolerably correct, and his prints exhibit much of the character of the masters after whom he worked. We have, among others, by him, Portrait of Prince Rupert; after Vandyck.

Adam Van Noort; after Jordaens.

The Virgin seated upon a step, surrounded by several Saints; after Rubens.

The Fathers of the Church; after the same.

The Death of St. Francis; after the same.

He also engraved some plates from Titian and other masters, and a few portraits. He signed his engravings Heinrich Snayers and H. Snayers.

SNAYERS, PETER, born at Antwerp in 1593, was a scholar of Sebastian Vrancx. Although he painted history and portraits with considerable success, he distinguished himself more by his battles and landscapes. He was patronized by the Archduke Albert, who appointed him his painter, and sent several of his pictures to Spain; which brought him many commissions from the Spanish court. Vandyck painted the portrait of Snyers among the eminent artists of his time. He was still living in 1669. There are pictures by him in many public Galleries, including sixteen at Madrid. There is a good 'Cavalry Skirmish' at Dulwich, and a fine 'Battle of the Forty' at Hampton Court.

SNELLAERT, JAN, a Flemish painter of the 15th century, who is recorded as working in Antwerp from 1453 to 1480, and who is discovered, by recent researches, to have received the freedom of the city in 1484. He is looked upon as the founder of the Antwerp school, and must have been a painter of considerable distinction, to judge from the prominent position he took in civic and artistic matters. He was appointed painter to Mary of Burgundy, and Kramm surmises that he may have been the author of the paintings in the ancient chapel of the Dukes of Burgundy at Antwerp. Jointly with his friend Jan Scoerموke, he was the first Dean of St. Luke, at Antwerp.

SNELLAERT, NICHOLAS, painter, the son of Willem Snellaert, practised at Courtrai in the second half of the 16th century. The dates of his birth and death have been given as 1542 and 1602 respectively, but have not been satisfactorily established. He was a pupil of Charles d'Ypres, and passed the greater part of his life in Holland. He helped his master with a large 'Last Judgment,' for the village of Hooglede, and is said to have died at Dordrecht.

SNELLAERT, WILLEM, a Flemish painter, who flourished at Courtrai about 1560, and is mentioned by Van Mander as the first master of Pieter Vlerick.

SNELLINCK, JAN, (SNELLINCKX,) was born at Mechlin in 1544, according to his epitaph. It is not known by whom he was taught, but Karel van Mander, in the 'Life of Otho Venius,' calls him an eminent painter of history and battles. There are some historical pictures by him in the Belgian public buildings, which prove him to have possessed a considerable gift for 'high art.' His best works, however, were skirmishes and attacks of cavalry. He lived at Antwerp, where he was much employed, and was appointed court-painter to Albert and Isabella, the governors of the Netherlands. His battle-pieces are well grouped, the figures and horses correctly designed, and the fury of the combatants fully expressed. The talents of Snellinck were appreciated by Vandyck, who painted and etched his portrait among the distinguished artists of his time. Snellinck worked much as a designer of patterns for the factories of Oudenarde. He was twice married, and of his numerous sons no fewer than five were painters, viz. JAN, born 1575; DANIEL, born 1576; GERARD, born 1577; ANDRIES, born 1587; ABRAHAM, born 1597. Snellinck died at Antwerp in 1638. Works:

- |            |                              |                        |

SNELLING, MATTHEW, portrait and miniature painter, practised in the reign of Charles II., painting heads, chiefly of ladies. There is a portrait by him at the College of Physicians, and a portrait of Charles I., dated 1647, was exhibited at South Kensington in the Loan Collection of 1862.

SNELLINKS, J., a Dutch painter, who practised in the manner of F. Moucheron, painting landscapes with figures. He died at Rotterdam in 1691.

SNYDERS, FRANZ, painter, born at Antwerp in 1579, received his first instruction from Hendrik van Balen and P. Brueghel. For some time he confined himself to painting still-life, in which he excelled; but he afterwards devoted his studies to a more difficult branch of art, in which he won a unique celebrity. He painted animals and hunts with surprising fire and spirit. The talents of Snyders excited the admiration of Rubens, who frequently intrusted him to paint the animals, fruit, &c., in his pictures, although he could do them so well himself. Snyders is said to have travelled in Italy, though others assert that he never left Flanders, but constantly resided at Antwerp, except for a short time, when he was invited to Brussels by the Archduke Albert. For him he painted some of his finest works, particularly a stag-hunt, which was sent by the Archduke to Philip III. of Spain, who commissioned Snyders to paint several large hunting pictures, and combats of wild beasts, which are still in the old palace of Buen-Retiro. He also excelled in painting kitchens and larders stored with game, fish, fruit, vegetables, &c., which are occasionally provided with figures by Rubens and Jordaens. Vandyck painted Snyders more than once. One example is at Castle Howard. Snyders died at Antwerp in 1657. His pictures are very numerous. The following are good and accessible examples:

SNYERS, PIETER, born at Antwerp in 1681, studied his art under Alexander van Bredael. In 1707 he was free of the Guild of S. Luke, and was afterwards president of the Antwerp Academy. He is reported to have visited London, and to have painted portraits of various members of the nobility. A 'Rocky Landscape' in the Antwerp Museum is one of his best works. Besides landscapes and portraits he also painted flower-pieces with much skill. He died in 1752.

SNYERS, PIETER JAN, the nephew of Pieter Snyers, was born at Antwerp in 1696, and was instructed by his uncle, but when only twenty-five years old abandoned his profession. His works are consequently very scarce. His subjects were hunting-scenes, and he excelled in those of small size. He died in 1757.

SOBLEO. See DESUBLEO.

SOBRINO, DOÑA CECILIA, née MORILLAS, born 1538, carved in wood, and painted; she was particularly skilful in the execution of globes and maps. She is said to have had a thorough knowledge of Greek, Latin, and Italian, and to have been well versed in various branches of science. She had a son and a daughter who devoted themselves to art, José and CECILIA. The latter was a Carmelite nun at Valladolid, where many of her paintings are still to be found, and died April 7, 1646. Her mother died at Madrid, October 21, 1581.

SOCRATES, a Greek painter, mentioned by Pliny as a disciple of Pausias.

SÖDERMARK, OLAF JOHAN, painter, was born at Stockholm in 1790. He was an officer in the Swedish Army, and served in several campaigns before he decided upon an art career. In 1819 he left the army, and later went to Munich to study, and eventually to Rome. He was a successful portraitist, and also painted many pleasing genre pictures. In the Stockholm Gallery there are two pictures by him, a bust portrait of the German artist, Franz Riepenhausen, and a study of an Italian girl, 'La Grazia.' His last work was a portrait of Jenny Lind. He died in 1848.

SODERINI, MAURO, painter, practised at Florence in the 18th century. He was a pupil of Giovanni dal Sole. In the church of San Stefano at Florence there is by him a 'Raising of a Dead Child by S. Zanobio.'

SODOMA, IL. See BAZZI.

SOENS, JAN, born at Bois le Duc about the year 1553, was first instructed by Jakob Boon, but afterwards became a scholar of Gillis Moestaert. Under that master he made great progress, and was considered one of the most promising young artists of his time. He travelled to Italy, where he was employed by the Pope, and by several of the Roman nobility, in the embellishment of their palaces. He passed some time at Parma, in the service of the duke. His manner was animated, and the figures he introduced into his landscapes were well drawn and handled. He died at Parma in 1611.

SOEST, or ZOEST, GERARD, a native of Westphalia, was born early in the 17th century. He visited England some time before the Restoration, with an established reputation as a portrait painter. His heads are animated, in bold relief, yet highly finished. His draperies were usually of satin, in the manner of Terburg; but he enlarged his style on seeing the works of Vandyck. He was more successful in his portraits of men than women. He executed a portrait of the Lord Mayor Sheldon and Dr. John Wallis. He died in London in 1681.

SOEST, JARENS VON. See JARENUS.

SOGGI, NICCOLO, painter, born at Florence in 1480, was a disciple of Pietro Perugino. He painted in the style of his instructor. His chief residence was at Arezzo, where some of his works are preserved in the churches. In La Madonna delle Lagrime a 'Nativity' represents him fairly. In 1550 he was in Rome, and working for the Pope. He died at Arezzo in 1554.

SOGLIANI, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, painter, born at Florence in 1492, was a pupil of Lorenzo di Credi, whose style he imitated, as may be seen in his

'Burial of Christ,' in the Berlin Museum. He also copied the manner of Fra Bartolommeo, notably in a 'Miraculous Conception,' with Saints, formerly in Santa Maria Nuova, Florence. One of his earliest works was a 'S. Martino,' in Or San Michele, Florence. In 1521 he painted the 'Martyrdom of S. Arcadius,' in S. Lorenzo. It is a good study of the nude, but with no originality. In conjunction with Andrea del Sarto and Sodoma, he painted a series of subjects behind the high altar of the Pisan duomo. At Florence there are several Madonnas by Sogliani in the Accademia; a St. Catherine in the Torrigiani Collection; also a 'Christ Washing the Apostles' Feet,' in S. M. del Fosso, Anghiari. He died at Florence in 1544.

SOGLIARI, IL. See GATTI.

SOGNI, GIUSEPPE, an Italian painter, born in 1797. He studied at the Brera, in Milan, under Pacetti and Sabatelli, and went to Rome for further instruction in 1830. He was a member of the Milan Academy, and held the post of Professor at Bologna from 1834 to 1839, and from 1839 at the Brera. He occasionally painted portraits, but devoted himself chiefly to historical pictures, the best known of which are the following:

Columbus Embarking at Palos. (1829.)
The Death of Raphael.
The Rape of the Sabinas. (1831.)
Susannah. | Adam and Eve.
Return of the Milanese after Legnano. (1837.)
Last Hours of Beatrice Cenci.
Frescoes in S. Pietro al Rosario, Novara.

In the Milan Hospital there are portraits of various benefactors by him.

SOHN, KARL FERDINAND, historical and portrait painter, born at Berlin in 1805, studied first at the Berlin Academy, and then in the private atelier of W. Schadow, whom he accompanied to Düsseldorf in 1826. After a visit to the Netherlands, he went in 1830 to Italy. In 1832 he was appointed teacher, and in 1838 professor at the Düsseldorf Academy. He was an excellent portrait painter, especially of women; the best of his portraits being that of the Countess Monti, now in the Wallraf Museum, Cologne. He was also particularly successful as a painter of the nude. Of his pictures we may name:

Diana in the Bath.		The Two Leonoras.
The Judgment of Paris.		Romeo and Juliet.
The Sisters.		Vanitas.
Girl playing the Lute.	(Berlin National Gallery.)
Hylas seized by Water Nymphs.	(Do.)
Rinaldo and Armida.	(Do.)
Portrait of a Young Lady.	(Do.)

He died at Cologne in 1867.

SOIGNIE, JACQUES JOACHIM DE, painter, born at Mons, 1720, studied in Paris, and practised for a time at Lyons. He finally settled in his native town, where, in the Museum, an 'Annunciation,' an 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' 'Episodes in the Life of Madame de Chantal,' and other works of his, are to be seen. He died in 1783.

SOITZ, G. C., a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1530. He executed some of the portraits for the 'Templum Honoris,' published at Vienna in the above-mentioned year.

SOKOLOFF, PETER, painter, flourished at St. Petersburg in the 18th century. He studied in Rome under Battoni, and painted historical and mythological subjects. He was assistant professor at the Academy at St. Petersburg, where he died in 1791.

SOLARIO, ANDREA, (or, as he sometimes signed himself, ANDREAS MEDIOLANENSIS,) was born at Milan about 1460, and together with his brother Cristoforo, called Il Gobbo (the hunchback), a sculptor of repute, went to Venice about 1490. In 1495 he painted a 'Virgin and Child, with S. Joseph and S. Jerome,' for the church of S. Pietro Martire, Murano; and in 1499 he returned to Milan, where he finished the 'S. Catharine' and 'S. John the Baptist,' now in the Poldi Pezzoli Museum. In 1507 he painted 'The Head of S. John the Baptist, in a Charger,' and in the same year went to France at the invitation of the Cardinal d'Amboise, and assisted in decorating the Château Gaillon, where he painted a 'Nativity,' and completed the designs for that ornamentation of the chapel which was destroyed in the Revolution of 1793. The account-books of the Château Gaillon record that Andrea and his assistant received for the expenses of their journey seventy crowns, for a year's wages three hundred and seventy livres, and one hundred livres extra for expenses, while the French artists employed only received four sous a day. In 1513 Solario was engaged in conjunction with Andrea da Salerno in decorating the chapel of S. Gaudenzio at Naples. Solario was great as a portrait painter. One of his best works is the portrait of Maximilian Sforza, now preserved in the Casa Perego, Milan. About 1515 he finished the 'Holy Family,' in the Poldi Pezzoli Museum, and in the same year received a commission to paint an 'Assumption of the Virgin' for the Pavian Certosa. This he seems to have left unfinished at his death, which took place at Milan about 1515. The work was completed by Bernardino Campi.

SOLARIO, ANTONIO DA, called Lo Zingaro, painter, was born about 1382, either at Venice, or at Civita di Penna, near Chieti, or according to Dominici, at Abruzzo, where, like Quentin Matsys, he followed the trade of a blacksmith till he was seventeen, when he fell in love with a daughter of Colantonio del Fiore, and became a painter in order to win her affections. He became a pupil of Lippo

Dalmasii in Bologna, and then visited the principal cities of Italy, studying under Vivarini in Venice, Bicci in Florence, Galassi in Ferrara, and the works of the old masters in Rome. He afterwards returned to Naples, married the lady of his choice, and distinguished himself as a painter. Among his best works are twenty frescoes in a court of the convent of San Severino, Naples, from the life of S. Benedict. A 'Madonna with Saints,' in the Museum, an 'Ascension of Christ, with Saints,' in the church of Monte Oliveto, and the following pictures in galleries, may also be named:

Solario died at Naples in 1455. SOLDI, ANDREA, portrait and history painter, was born at Florence about 1682. After a visit to the Holy Land, he came to England, about 1735. He was a good draughtsman, and found considerable employment as a portrait painter, but was very thriftless. He died soon after 1766.

SOLE, DAL. See DAL SOLE.

SOLEMAKER, J.—FRANS, (SOOLEMAKER,) a landscape and cattle painter, of whom little is known. He lived at the same time as Wynants, Ruysdael, and Berchem. It is supposed that he was a pupil of the last, but of that there is no proof. He imitated Berchem in the grouping and forms of his cattle; but in handling he was without the freedom of that master; his shadows are black, and the general appearance of his pictures heavy. He painted cows, sheep, and goats better than horses. His pictures are generally of small dimensions, always on panel, and a good specimen may be a locum tenens for a Berchem. There is a good example of his art in the Hague Museum.

SOLERI, GIORGIO, painter and sculptor, and a native of Alessandria, flourished in the 16th century. He was probably a disciple of Bernardino Lanini, whose daughter he married, though he did not adopt his style. He worked at the Escorial for Philip II. of Spain. As a painter of portraits he holds a respectable position. An altar-piece, in the church of the Conventuali, at Alessandria, representing the Virgin, to whom SS. Augustine and Francis are recommending the city of Alessandria; and a S. Lorenzo kneeling before the Virgin, with a group of three Angels, in the church of the Domenicani, at Casale, which is signed with his name, and dated 1573, are his chief works as a painter of religious subjects. Soleri died in 1587.

SOLFAROLO, IL. See TAVELLA.

SOLIMENA, FRANCESCO, (SOLIMENE,) called L'ABATE CICCIO, was born at Nocera de Pagani, a small town about eighteen miles distant from Naples, in 1657. He was the son of ANGELO SOLIMENA, an obscure painter, who had been a disciple of Cavaliere Massimo. Angelo had his son instructed in classical learning, and the boy is said to have often passed whole nights in the study of poetry and philosophy. In spite of this assiduous application he managed to cultivate his talent for art, and Cardinal Orsini, afterwards

Pope Benedict XIII., happening to pass through Nocera, saw his designs, and persuaded his father to indulge his son's inclination. After studying two years under his father he went to Naples in 1674, where he first became a disciple of Francesco di Maria, but left that master to enter the school of Giacomo del Po. He afterwards went to Rome, where the works of Pietro da Cortona, Lanfranco, Il Calahrese, Guido, and Carlo Maratti were his models. Among his best works are a series of frescoes in S. Paolo Maggiore, others at Naples and Monte Cassino, and the 'Last Supper,' in the refectory of the Conventuali at Assisi. In 1702 he was commissioned by Philip V. of Spain to paint some pictures for the Royal Chapel at Madrid. He was the friend of Luca Giordano, and formed many scholars, among whom the best known are, Seb. Conca, C. Giaquinto, N. M. Rossi, S. Capella, and F. di Mura. Solimena was also a poet and musician. He died at Naples in 1747.

SOLIS, FRANCISCO DE, a Spanish painter, born at Madrid in 1629, was instructed in art by his father, JUAN DE SOLIS, a little-known painter. Intended at first for the Church, he was led to take up art in earnest by the success of a picture painted in his eighteenth year, which attracted the notice of Philip IV., who directed him to put his name and age upon it. This brought him into public favour, and he obtained much employment. When Queen Louisa of Orleans made her solemn entry into Madrid, he contributed a series of paintings representing the labours of Hercules to the decoration of the city; but the work which established his reputation was an 'Immaculate Conception of the Virgin, with the Dragon at her Feet.' For many years De Solis held an academy in his house, to which all young artists were admitted free of expense, to draw from the living model. He wrote an account of the lives of Spanish painters, sculptors, and architects, and even engraved several of their portraits, which he intended to publish, but was prevented by death. This manuscript is now lost. He died at Madrid in 1684. He left an enormous collection of books, prints, and drawings.

SOLIS, NICLAS, engraver of the 16th century, a son or brother of Virgil Solis, published fifteen plates representing the Marriage Festivities of Duke William V. of Bavaria and the Duchess Renata of Lorraine in 1568.

SOLIS, VIRGIL, a German engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1514. He engraved both on wood and on copper, chiefly from his own designs. The copper-plates worked in the early part of his life resemble those of Hans Sebald Beham, but when he afterwards engraved after the Italian masters, he adopted a style more open and spirited. His woodcuts are similar to those of Jost Ammon, with respect both to composition and execution. His works prove him to have been a man of ability, though his design is formal and stiff. He has been sometimes called a little master. His prints are very numerous, amounting to upwards of eight hundred. He usually marked them with a cipher composed of a V. and an S., thus, V.S. or U.S. He died in 1562. Among his multifarious productions are the following:

PLATES.

A variety of small Engravings on copper, representing hunting subjects; dated 1541.
A set of vases and ornaments for goldsmiths. 1541.
The Marriage of Cupid and Psyche, the Assembly of the Gods, Parnassus, and other subjects; after Raphael.
The Bath of the Anabaptists; copy from Aldegrever.

WOOD-CUTS.

Several sets of small historical subjects from the Bible. The Metamorphoses of Ovid, in one hundred and seventy cuts; published at Frankfurt in 1563.
A set of cuts for Nicholas Reuser's Emblems. 1581.
Another for the Emblems of Andreus Alciatus. 1581.
A series of French Kings from Pheramond to Henry III.

SOLLAZZINO IL, a Florentine painter, whose real name seems to have been Giulano da Montelupo, was born about 1470. In 1506 he was working at Pistoja, in conjunction with G. B. Volponi. He painted an altar-piece for S. Stefano at Serravalle, and other works in Casole and Pisa, in which latter city he died in 1543.

SOLOMAYOR, LUIS DE. See SOTOMAYOR.

SOLOMON, ABRAHAM, painter, was born in London in 1824, went in 1838 to an Art School in Bloomsbury, and in 1839 was admitted to the Academy schools. From 1843 he contributed pictures to the Academy and British Institute. His 'Waiting for the Verdict,' exhibited at the Academy in 1857, and its sequel, 'Not Guilty' (1859), established his reputation. Other pictures by him which have become well known through engravings are, 'Third class—the Parting,' and 'First class—the Return' (1854), 'Le Malade Imaginaire,' and 'Consolation' (1861). His last exhibited work was 'The Lost Found,' and he died still young at Biarritz in 1862.

SOLOSMEO, IL, an Italian sculptor and painter, whose real name appears to have been ANTONIO DI GIOVANNI, was a scholar of Andrea Sansovino the sculptor, and of Andrea del Sarto. In the church of Badia di San Fedele at Poppi there is a panel of the Virgin and Child, with SS. John Baptist, Francis, Sebastian, and John Gualberto, inscribed: ANTONIUS SOLVSMEVS SCVLTOR M.D.XXVII.

SOLSERNUS. This name, with the date 1267, appears on a large mosaic of the Byzantine type, representing Christ enthroned, with the Virgin and S. John, on the exterior of the Cathedral at Spoleto.

SOLVYNS, FRANS BALTASAR, a marine painter, born at Antwerp in 1760, was a pupil of Querte-mont. After gaining several prizes at the Antwerp Academy he went to Paris, and studied under Vincent. His sea-pieces, however, are not numerous, as his fondness for travel led him to visit India, where he found materials for some three hundred coloured plates illustrating the occupations, festivals, and costumes of the Hindoos, which, when published, were unsuccessful, and involved their author in pecuniary embarrassment. He died in 1824. One of his marine pieces, a view from Ostend, is in the palace at Vienna.

SOLY, ARTHUR, an obscure English engraver, who lived about the year 1683. He was employed by Robert White, and engraved a few portraits, among which are the following :

His own Portrait; dated 1683.

Richard Baxter, Presbyter. 1683.

Tobias Crisp, D.D., Rector of Brinckworth, Wiltshire; prefixed to his Sermons. 1689.

He died about 1695.

SOMER, JAN VAN, (SOMEREN,) was probably a relation of Mathys van Somer, and flourished about the year 1675. He engraved some indifferent mezzotints from the Dutch painters and a few portraits; among them the following :

The Duchess of Mazarine.

Charles Louis, Elector of Bavaria.

Michael Adriansz de Ruyter, Dutch Admiral; after Karel Du Jardin.

Peasants drinking; after A. Both.

Dutch Boors regaling; after A. Ostaide.

A Flemish Concert; after Teniers.

A Conversation; after Terburg.

A Drinking Party; after his own design.

Abraham and the Angels; after Pieter Lastman.

He usually marked his plates with the following monogram .

SOMER, MATHYS VAN, (SOMMEREN,) a Dutch engraver, who flourished about the year 1660. He engraved a set of landscapes, marked with the initials M. V. S., and his name is affixed to a small oval portrait of John Ernest, dated 1666. There are many other portraits by him; among them, that of Oliver Cromwell.

SOMER, PAUL VAN, painter, was born at Antwerp about the year 1576, and according to Van Mander, resided at Amsterdam in 1604, with his brother BERNARD, where they practised portrait painting with great success. Paul Van Somer soon afterwards visited England, where the great majority of his works are now to be found. His portrait of the Lord Chamberlain, William, Earl of Pembroke, is in St. James's Palace. He painted two pictures of James I., one of which was engraved by Vertue; his queen, Anne of Denmark, and Lord Bacon (at Panshanger), Lord Falkland and Lady Mandeville, and the Earl of Arundel and his wife (in the collection of the Duke of Norfolk). Van Somer died about the age of forty-five, and was buried in St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, as appears by the register, January 5, 1621: Paulus Vansomer pictor eximius sepultus fuit in ecclesia. Works :

Hampton Court.	Christian IV. of Denmark.
"	James I.
"	Anne of Denmark. 1617.
"	James I. in his robes.
"	Anne of Denmark. Ditto .
London. Nat. Por. Gall.	James I.
"	Anne of Denmark.
"	Lord Bacon.
"	Countess of Southampton.

SOMER, PAUL VAN, engraver, apparently of the same family with Jan van Somer, was born at Amsterdam in 1649. After residing and working some time in Paris, he came to England, and settled in London, where he died in 1694. He etched, engraved, and was one of the first to scrape in mezzotint. The following are his best-known prints :

Portrait of the Duke of Bavaria and his Secretary. 1670.

The Countess of Meath; after Mignard.

Tobit burying the Dead Hebrew; after Seb. Bourdon.

Moses saved from the Nile; after N. Poussin.

The Baptism of Christ; after the same.

The Fable of the Old Man and his Ass; a set of six etchings; after Griffier.

The Four Times of the Day; from his own designs.

The Adoration of the Shepherds; from the same.

The Holy Family; from the same.

SOMERS, LOUIS J., a Flemish genre painter, born at Antwerp in 1813. He was a pupil of De Braekeleer; his best-known works are a 'Villages School,' and 'Monks Chanting.' He died in 1880.

SOMERVILLE, ANDREW, painter, was born at Edinburgh about 1803. He was educated at the Trustees' Academy. He practised at Edinburgh, and in 1831 became an associate member of the Royal Scottish Academy. In the following year he was promoted to the full membership, but died shortly after his election, in 1833. His most popular pictures were 'Flowers of the Forest,' and 'The Bride of Yarrow.'

SOMMERAU, LUDWIG, draughtsman and engraver, but better known in the latter capacity, was born at Wolfenbüttel in 1750. He was a scholar of Mechel at Basle. He engraved portraits; pictures after Guido, Domeichino, and Guercino; also a series of twenty plates after the tapestries designed by Raphael and his pupils. These were published at Rome in 1780, and in London in 1837, with six additional plates, and letterpress by Cattermole.

SOMMEREN. See SOMER.

SOMPEL, PIETER VAN, (SOMPELEN,) engraver, born at Antwerp about the year 1600, was taught engraving by Pieter Soutman, whose style he followed. His plates are neat, particularly his portraits. The following prints by him may be named :

Paracelsus; after Soutman.

Henry, Count of Nassau; after the same.

Philip of Nassau, Prince of Orange; after the same.

The Emperor Charles V.; after Rubens.

Cardinal Ferdinand, brother to Philip IV. and Governor of the Netherlands; after Vandyck.

Isabella Clara Eugenia, Infanta of Spain; after the same.

Gaston, Duke of Orleans; after the same.

Margaret, his consort; after the same.

Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy; after J. van Eyck.

Frederick Henry of Nassau; after G. Honthorst.

Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus; after Rubens.

The Crucifixion; after the same.

Juno and Ixion; after the same.

The only certain date in connection with this master is 1643, on his 'Christ at Emmaus,' after Rubens.

SON, JAN VAN, (ZONN,) the son of Joris van Son, was born at Antwerp about the year 1650. Walpole calls him Francis. He painted similar subjects to those of his father, by whom he was instructed. He came to England when young, and, having married the niece of Robert Streater, succeeded to a great portion of her uncle's business. He painted flowers, fruit, dead game, vases, curtains fringed with gold, Turkey carpets, and similar objects. He composed well; his touch was free and spirited, and his colouring rich and transparent. He is said to have died in London in 1700, but the date is uncertain; some would put it as late as 1723. Pictures by him are to be found at Augsburg, Brussels, Dresden, and Lille.

SON, JORIS VAN, (or ZOON,) born at Antwerp in 1622, excelled in painting flowers and fruit. His pictures are well composed, his handling easy, and his colour transparent. His death occurred about 1667.

SON, NICOLAS DE, (ANFOINE?) a native of Rheims, who flourished about the year 1628, imitated the style of Callot with success. We have several etchings by him from Callot's designs, as well as some from his own compositions. Among them we may name :

- A set of small Landscapes with figures and buildings.
- The Village Fair ; after Callot.
- The Companion, representing a street, with a coach in the back-ground, and several female figures.
- Façade of St. Nicaise, Rheims.
- Porch of Rheims Cathedral.

SONDER. See CRANACH.

SONDERLAND, JOHANN BAPTIST WILHELM ADOLPH, painter and etcher, born at Düsseldorf in 1805, was a pupil of the Academy there, under Cornelius and Schadow. He produced many genre pictures, which are distinguished by humour and by fertility of invention. He designed illustrations for Reinick's 'Painters' Songs,' for Immermann's 'Münchhausen,' and for several religious works. He also etched a few plates. He died at Düsseldorf in 1878.

SONJE, JAN, painter, born at Rotterdam, flourished in the 17th century. In 1646 he entered the Painters' Guild at Delft, but left that city about 1654. He painted large mountain landscapes in the Italian manner, with blue skies, silver clouds, dark foregrounds, and figures of men and animals. He also painted Rhine scenery in the style of Sachtlevén. Pictures by Sonje are to be found in the Museums at the Hague, Rotterdam, and Augsburg. He died in 1691.

SONMANS. See SUNMAN.

SONNE, JÖRGEN VALENTIN, a Danish painter, born at Birkerød in Zealand, June 24, 1801, was destined for the army, but soon abandoned a military career for art. He received his first teaching at the Copenhagen Academy, and came out as a painter of military life and of animals. In 1829 he went to Munich, and studied for a time under Hess, and three years later he made his first journey to Rome, where he remained for some time, painting principally scenes from popular life. On his return to his native country he painted a large number of peasant pictures, but the Schleswig campaign of 1848 furnished him with subjects for many works in his early manner. He painted the frescoes on the exterior of the Thorwaldsen Museum. He became a member of the Academy in 1846, and was decorated with the Dannebrog Order in 1852. Works :

SONNIUS, HENDRIK, a Dutch painter, who flourished at the Hague about the middle of the 17th century, and was a pupil of Jan van Ravesteijn. He was one of the forty-seven artists who, in 1656, founded the Pictura Society. He is said to have come to England, and to have died here at an advanced age.

SORELLO, MIGUEL, a native of Spain, born at Barcelona about 1700, established himself at Rome, where he learned engraving from Jakob Frey. He was one of the engravers employed on the 'Antiquities of Herculaneum,' published in 1757—1761. He engraved several prints after the Italian masters, but his principal work is a set of eight plates from Raphael's tapestries in the Vatican. He died in 1765.

SÖRENSEN, CARL FRIEDRICH, a Danish painter, born at Samsøe in 1818. He painted chiefly landscapes and sea-pieces. For the study of marine effects he made trips to the Mediterranean and elsewhere in Danish war-ships. He won a wide reputation, exhibiting in London and Paris as well as his native city. He became professor of painting in the Academy of Copenhagen, in which city he died in 1879. In the Copenhagen Gallery there are three sea-pieces by him, and in that of Stockholm two.

SORGH, HENDRIK MARTENSZON ROKES, (or ZORG,) painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1621. He was the son of Martin Rokes, the master of the passage-boat from Rotterdam to Dordrecht, who, on account of his care and attention to passengers and to the commissions he received, acquired the appellation of Sorgh, or Careful, and the name descended to his son. Having shown an early disposition for art, the latter was sent to Antwerp, and placed under the tuition of Teniers the younger. He is also said to have studied under Willem de Buytenweg. His pictures represent conversations, fairs, fish-markets, and the interiors of Dutch apartments, with figures regaling and amusing themselves, in some of which he sometimes imitated the style of Adriaan Brouwer. The general character of his works is a mixture of features from the above-mentioned artists. His colour is warm, his impasto thin and fused. He died in 1682. Works :

SORIANI, NICCOLO, a Cremonese painter of the 15th century, was the maternal uncle of Garofalo, to whom he gave some early lessons.

SORIAU, DANIEL, (or PETER,) a German painter of the 17th century, details of whose life are unknown. At the Copenhagen Gallery there is a still-life picture by him of flowers, fruit, and gold and silver plate.

SORLAY, JÉRÔME, a French painter of the 17th century, the pupil of Mignard. In 1664 he painted a 'Christ appearing to S. Peter on his Flight from Rome.'

SORNIQUE, DOMINIQUE, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1707. He was a pupil of Charles Simoneau, whose style of engraving he followed with considerable success. His vignettes and other plates for books are neatly executed. He also engraved several portraits and other subjects, among them the following:

The Cardinal de Richelieu; after Nanteuil.
 Jean Louis, Duc d'Épernon; after the same.
 Louis de Bourbon, Admiral of France; after Mignard.
 Marshal Saxe; after Rigaud.
 Diana and her Nymphs; after Correggio.
 Danaë; after the same.
 The Rape of the Sabines; after L. Giordano.
 Peasants regaling; after Teniers.

He died in 1756.

SORRI, PIETRO, born at S. Gusmè, near Siena, in 1556, was for some time a scholar of Arcangelo Salimbeni, but afterwards studied at Florence under Cavaliere Passignano, whose daughter he married. He adopted the eclectic system of his father-in-law, whom he accompanied to Venice, where he improved his manner by studying Paul Veronese. Less facile than Passignano, his colour is more durable, and his drawing more correct. He afterwards went to Genoa and Rome, and died in 1622.

SOSIAS, a Greek vase painter, some of whose works are still extant.

SOTO, JUAN DE, a Spanish historical painter, born at Madrid in 1592, was one of the best scholars of Bartolomé Carducho, and assisted him in several of his works. While still very young, he was selected to decorate in fresco the queen's dressing-room in the palace of the Pardo. He obtained a considerable reputation with his pictures in oil; they were much in the style of his master, pure in design, and harmonious in colour. The expectations he had raised were, however, disappointed by his early death at Madrid in 1620.

SOTO, LORENZO DE, born at Madrid in 1634, was the pupil of Benito Manuel de Agüero, whose manner he imitated. He painted landscapes, with hermits and saints and religious figure subjects. Among the latter a scene from the life of Sta. Rosa served as an altar-piece in the church of the Atocha at Madrid. In consequence of an attempt by government to tax artists, Soto abandoned painting and retired to Yecla, in Murcia, where he became collector of the royal rents. During this period of retirement, he painted landscapes, which are praised by Palomino. After an absence of about fifty years he returned to Madrid, but his works were looked at with indifference, and he was reduced to selling them in the public places for a subsistence. He died in 1688.

SOTOMAYOR, LUIS DE, born at Valencia in 1635, became a disciple of Estéban March, the painter of battles, but refusing to submit to that master's caprices, he left him for the school of Juan Carreño, at Madrid. After a time he returned to Valencia, where he enjoyed much success. He had a fine talent for composition, and was an excellent colourist. He painted a 'St. Christopher in company with Christ and the Virgin,' and a 'St. Augustine,' for the Augustine nunnery; and for the Carmelites, two large scenes from the legend of the miraculous discovery of an image of the Virgin, called 'La Morenita,' which is an object of their great veneration. He died at Madrid in 1673.

SOUBEYRAN, PIERRE, born at Geneva in 1697 (1708). He resided several years in Paris, where he engraved some of the plates, after Bouchardon, of antique gems in the king's cabinet, for a publication of Mariette's. He also engraved a variety of plates for books after Cochin and others. Returning to Geneva in 1750, he there practised as an architect, and became director of the art school. The following prints by him may also be named:

The Portrait of Peter the Great; after Caravaque.
 The Arms of the City of Paris; after Bouchardon.
 The Fair Maid of the Village; after Boucher.

He died in 1775.

SOUCHON, FRANÇOIS, born at Alais in 1786, was a pupil of David, and a friend of Sigalon. He painted heroic landscapes and historical pictures, and made many excellent copies from the great masters. Many of his works are at Lille, where he was director of the Painting School from 1836 to 1857, and where he died in 1857.

SOUKENS, JAN, a Dutch painter and engraver of the 16th century, born at Bommel. He was a pupil of Jan Vorsterman, and painted river views with figures. His two sons, GISBERT, 1685—1760, and HENDRIK, 1680—1711, were also landscape painters.

SOULARY, CLAUDE, painter, born at Lyons in 1792, was a pupil of Révoil and of Gros. For forty-seven years he directed the School of Art at Saint Etienne, where he died in 1870, and where there are several of his pictures in the museum.

SOULÈS, EUGÈNE EDOUARD, painter, born in Paris. He was a frequent exhibitor of landscapes in oil and water-colour at the Salon from 1831 to 1872. He died in 1876.

SOUMANS. See SUNMAN.

SOUMY, JOSEPH PAUL MARIUS, engraver, was born at Puy Amblay in 1831, learned drawing in Lyons, and then entered the atelier of Guy, and afterwards that of Bonnefond, studying engraving under Vibert at the same time. In 1852 he went to Paris, and worked first in the École des Beaux Arts, and then under Henriquel Dupont. In 1855 he visited Italy, where he painted portraits, landscapes, and genre pictures, and made several copies after Raphael, Michelangelo, &c. He also etched a portrait after Giorgione, and Titian's Francis I. On his return to France he led a desultory life, engraving for printsellers, and then for Flandrin, for whom his chief work was the 'Entry of Christ into Jerusalem.' Depression caused by a disease of the eyes led him to commit suicide at Lyons in 1863.

SOUNES, WILLIAM HENRY, was born in London in 1830. In 1855 he became modelling master in the Birmingham School of Art, and later, head master of the Sheffield School of Art. He died at Sheffield in 1873. In the South Kensington Museum there are two architectural drawings by him.

SOURCHES, LOUIS-FRANÇOIS DU BOUCHET, MARQUIS DE, Grand Provost of France, and amateur engraver, was born at the commencement of the 17th century. He handled the point in the manner of Stefano Della Bella, of whom it is supposed he took lessons during the residence of that artist in Paris from 1640 to 1649. In the Bibliothèque at Paris are preserved nineteen pieces by him. They are copies after Della Bella, and are so exact that proofs before letters have been mistaken for the originals. This series is entitled 'Diverses figures et Maneiges de Chenaux Gravés par le Marquis de Souches.' According to le Père Lelong (Bibliothèque Historique de France), this artist engraved the portrait of Madame de Nevelet, the wife of a counsellor of the Parliament of Paris; but it has escaped the researches of Dumesnil. That writer, however, (tom. ii.) describes a series of twelve plates by Souches which are still rarer than those in the French National Library. Their titles are as follows:

- |                                  |                              |
|----------------------------------|------------------------------|
| 1. Le Berger.                    | 7. Le Départ pour la Chasse. |
| 2. L'Homme de Qualité.           | 8. Le Promeneur.             |
| 3. La Dame de Qualité.           | 9. Le Pêcheur.               |
| 4. Le Duel.                      | 10. Le Puits.                |
| 5. La Porte-drapeau.             | 11. Les Ramoneurs.           |
| 6. La Marchande de vieux Habits. | 12. Le Batelier.             |

One of these, No. 4, was ascribed by Mariette and Gersaint to Della Bella himself.

SOURLEY, JÉRÔME. See SORLEY.

SOUTMAN, PIETER, a Dutch painter and engraver, born at Haarlem in 1590, was a pupil of Rubens, and is said to have painted historical subjects and portraits with considerable success, particularly at the courts of Berlin and Warsaw. He was one of the group of Flemish engravers attached to the school of Rubens, who carried the vigour of the art to a height scarcely equalled by any other workers with the burin. We have several plates by him from his own designs, and from those of Rubens and other masters. He appears to have aimed at giving a striking effect to his plates, by keeping the lights broad and clear; but by carrying this notion too far, many have a slight, unfinished appearance. The following are, perhaps, his best plates:

- The Fall of the Rebel Angels; after Rubens.
- The Rout of Sennacherib; after the same.
- Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter; from a drawing by Rubens, after Raphael.
- The Draught of Fishes; after the same.
- Consecration of a Bishop; after the same.

SOWERBY, JAMES, an English natural-history draughtsman and engraver, born in 1757. He published, and illustrated many works, which obtained for him a good reputation. He lived in Paris in the latter part of his career, and died in 1822. The following are some of the works on which he was engaged:

- 'The Florist's Delight.' 1791.
- 'English Botany.' 1790—1820.
- 'English Fungi.' 1797.
- 'British Mineralogy.' 1804-17.
- 'Elucidation of Colours.' 1809.
- Sir J. E. Smith's 'Icones Pictæ Plantarum.' 1790-3.
- Ditto, 'Spicilegium Botanicum.' 1791-2.
- Ditto, 'Botany of New Holland.' 1793.
- Shaw's 'Zoology of New Holland.'

SOYE, PHILIPPE DE, (SERICUS, SYTICUS, SORGE, &c.,) engraver, was born in Holland in 1538, and became a pupil of Cornelis Cort, whom he accompanied to Rome. In 1568 he published a set of twenty-eight engraved portraits of the Popes. We have also the following prints by him:

- The Angel appearing to Joseph in a Dream; after Cort.
- Christ on the Cross; after Michelangelo.

The Virgin with the Infant Christ; after the same.

A Pietà; after the same.

S. Francis receiving the Stigmata; after Zuccaro.

Adoration of the Shepherds; after the same.

The Angel appearing to Joseph; after the same.

Adam and Eve in Paradise; after P. del Vaga.

Judith with the Head of Holofernes; after Giulio Clovio.

S. Jerome in a Landscape; after H. Muziano.

SOYER, EMMA, née JONES, was born in London in 1813. Before she was twelve years of age she had drawn more than a hundred portraits from life. In 1836 she married Soyer, the famous chef-de-cuisine. Besides sketches and drawings she painted many pictures. Her 'Jewish Boy selling Oranges' was engraved by Gérard. She died in London in 1842.

SOYER, HANS, a Flemish painter, practising at Yprès about 1323. He painted the portraits of the Count and Countess of Flanders for the municipality of Yprès, for which he received the sum of twenty sous (16s. 8d.).

SOYER, JEAN, a French miniaturist, who practised at Tours at the close of the 15th century, and was employed in the illumination of the smaller Livre d'Heures of Anne of Brittany.

SPACKMAN, ISAAC, an English painter, practising about the middle of the 18th century. He was best known as a painter of birds and animals. He died at Islington, January 7, 1771.

SPADA, LIONELLO, born at Bologna in 1576. His parents were extremely poor, and he was placed in the service of the Carracci as a colour grinder. This employment gave him an opportunity of picking up some knowledge, and he showed so much capacity for art, that his masters admitted him into their academy. His progress was rapid, and he became an eminent member of the Bolognese school. After a time he turned to the energetic style of Caravaggio, and he went to Rome to study under that master. With Caravaggio he went to Naples and Malta, afterwards visiting Modena, Ferrara, and Reggio. On his return to Bologna, he painted the 'Miraculous Draught of Fishes,' for the refectory of S. Procolo, and an altar-piece in the church of S. Domenico, which is considered his best performance. The latter part of his life was passed at Parma, in the service of the Duke Ranuccio, by whom he was patronized until the death of that prince. He did not long survive his protector, and died at Parma in 1622. He sometimes marked his pictures with a sword, (in Italian Spada,) crossed with the letter L. Works:

SPADEN, JAN, a Flemish painter of the 14th century, who practised at Louvain, and is recorded in the town registers, under the sobriquet of Jan Oliepot (oil-pot), to have worked for the Commune from 1364 onwards. He died some time before 1394. His son JAN was also a painter.

SPAENDONCK, CORNELIS VAN, brother of Gerard van Spaendonck, born in 1756, was also a painter of flowers. He was chiefly employed at the Sèvres porcelain factory, but occasionally painted portraits in oil. He died in 1839.

SPAENDONCK, GERARD VAN, a distinguished fruit and flower painter, was born at Tilburgh in Holland in 1746, and studied under the elder Herreyns at Antwerp. At the age of twenty-four he went to Paris, where for some time he painted miniatures, and fruit and flowers. His productions became very popular, and were purchased with avidity. In 1793 he was lecturing at the Jardin des Plantes. The title-page to his 'Fleurs dessinées d'après Nature' informs us that he was a member of the National Institute, and Professor-Administrator of the Museum of Natural History in Paris, where he died in 1822. The Fruit and Flower piece by him in the Louvre was in the collection of Louis XVI.

SPAGIASI, GIOVANNI, an Italian painter, born at Reggio, who died in the service of the King of Poland, in 1730.

SPAGIASI, PELLEGRINO, was a pupil of Francesco Bibiena; he painted interiors and perspective decorations, and also worked as a scene painter. He died in France in 1746.

SPALTHOF, N., a Dutch painter, who flourished about the year 1650. He is said by Descamps to have visited Italy, and to have studied there several years. He excelled in painting fairs, markets, carnivals, and merry-makings, somewhat in the style of Theodorus Helmbrecker.

SPANGENBERG, FRIEDRICH, historical painter, born at Göttingen in 1843, began his career in Munich under Ramberg. In 1861 he went to Weimar, where he painted the 'Triumph of the American Union' for the Capitol at Washington. After that he returned to Munich, where he produced his 'Plundering Vandals,' and his 'Departure of Geiseric from Rome with Eudoxia.' He met with an accident in going up Vesuvius, and died in 1874.

SPANZOTTI, MARTINO, (DE SPANZOTIS,) painter, a native of Casale, who practised at Vercelli towards the close of the 15th century, and in whose studio Sodoma learnt the rudiments of art.

SPARMANN, KARL CHRISTIAN, landscape painter, was born at Meissen in 1805. He became the pupil of Arnold at Meissen, and of Dahl at Dresden, and teacher of drawing to Prince Louis Napoleon, in Arenenberg. From the latter, when he became Emperor of the French, he received a pension. He died at Dresden in 1865.

SPARVIER, PIERRE DE, a French painter, born 1660, was a pupil of Cesare Gennari at Bologna. He painted portraits and battle-pieces, and occasionally flowers. He settled at Florence, where he died in 1731.

SPECCHI, ALESSANDRO, an Italian engraver, who flourished from 1665 to 1706. He engraved a set of plates from the palaces and public buildings of Rome, which are executed in a spirited style. These engravings were published by Dom. de Rossi, in 1699. Specchi is supposed to have died in 1710.

SPECKLE, VEIT RUDOLPH, (SPECKLIN,) an old engraver on wood, who flourished at Strasburg about the year 1540. He executed a set of cuts for Fuchs's 'Herhal,' published in that year, with a whole-length portrait of the author, portraits of Heinrich Fullmaurer and Albrecht Maher, who designed the figures, and the engraver's own portrait.

SPECKTER, ERWIN, painter, was born at Hamburg in 1806. He worked at Munich under Cornelius, but was influenced by Overbeck and Genelli. From Hamburg, where he painted his 'Christ and the Samaritan Woman at the Well,' he went in 1830 to Italy, where he produced a 'Samson and Delilah,' and 'Three Marys at the Grave of Christ,' which was engraved by Schröder. In his leisure he wrote 'Letters of an Artist from Italy.' He died at Hamburg in 1835.

SPECKTER, OTTO, brother of Erwin Speckter, was born at Hamburg in 1807. He practised as a lithographer and book illustrator. In the latter branch of art, the following are his best works: Illustrations to Luther's 'Spiritual Songs,' Bellman's 'Epistles,' Eberhard's 'Hannchen und die Küchlein,' 'Puss in Boots,' and Klaus Groth's 'Quickborn,' which last is considered his most successful achievement. He died at Hamburg, April 29, 1871.

SPEECKAERT, HANS, or JAN, a Flemish painter of the 16th century, a native of Brussels, where his father worked as an embroiderer. He lived for some time in Italy, and worked both at Rome and Florence. At Rome he became acquainted with Arnold Mytens, and a close friendship sprang up between them. He died at Rome about 1577. Van Mander calls him an artist of great merit.

SPEECKAERT, J., a Flemish painter, born at Mechlin in 1748. He painted flowers and fruit, and practised for some time in his native town, but lived towards the close of his life at Brussels, where he died in 1838.

SPEER, MARTIN, (or MICHAEL,) a painter and engraver, was born at Ratisbon in 1700. It is said that he became a disciple of Solimena: at all events he imitated his manner, and engraved some of his allegories and martyrdoms. He painted several altar-pieces and historical pictures, and there are engravings by him after his own designs. They are signed M. Speer inv. et fecit, 1742. The time of his death is uncertain, but Zani puts it in 1762.

SPELT. See VAN DER SPELT.

SPENCER, FREDERICK, an American painter, born at Canistota, U.S.A., in 1805. He studied art in his native village, without a master. About 1830 he settled in New York as a portrait-painter, where he met with much success, painting many distinguished persons. He became a member of the Academy in 1848, and in 1853 he retired to Canistota, where he practised until his death in 1875.

SPENCER, JARVIS, (or GERVASE,) a painter in miniature and in enamel, who flourished about the middle of the last century. He began life in domestic service, but by the help of his employer and his family, developed his faculty for art, and became a fashionable painter of the day. He painted on ivory and in enamel. In 1762 he sent some enamel portraits to the exhibition of the Society of Artists, and some fine enamels bearing the initials G. S. are probably his. He etched his own portrait, after Reynolds, a plate on which the name George Spencer was afterwards erroneously placed. Some portrait etchings by him in the British Museum prove him to have been a good draughtsman. He died October 30, 1763.

SPENCER, LAVINIA, COUNTESS, (née BINGHAM,) daughter of the Earl of Lucan, and wife of the second Earl Spencer, was an amateur of some ability. Some of her drawings were engraved, among others 'The Orphan,' by Gillray, and 'New Shoes,' by Bartolozzi. She died June 8, 1831.

SPERANZA, GIOVANNI, an Italian painter of the 16th century. The dates of his birth and death are both unknown, though he was probably a native of Vicenza. Vasari states that both he and Bartolommeo Montagna, with whom he has much in common, were disciples of Mantegna, but there is no proof of their personal acquaintance with the Paduan master. The church of S. Giorgio, at Volo, in the province of Vicenza, has an enthroned 'Virgin and Child with Saints' by him; and in the gallery of Vicenza is an 'Assumption of the Virgin, with S. Thomas and S. Jerome'; this latter is a reproduction of the 'Assumption,' assigned to Pizzolo, in the Eremitani Chapel, Padua; both are in tempera. At the Casa Nievo, Vicenza, is an oil painting of the 'Virgin and Child.' Other paintings by this artist may be found at Santa Corona and Santa Chiara, Vicenza, and in the Casa Pioveni, Padua. In his later works it is difficult to distinguish his hand from that of Montagna. It is likely that the 'Madonna with the Child holding a Strawberry' in the National Gallery, and there ascribed to Montagna, is by Speranza; also No. 174, in the Brera, at present unasccribed.

W.A.
SPERANZA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, born at Rome about the year 1610, was a disciple of Francesco Albano. He acquired a considerable repute as a painter of history, particularly in fresco. In a chapel in the church of S. Caterina da Siena, there are some subjects from the life of the Virgin, in fresco, by him; and in the Orfanelli a ceiling representing the Passion of our Saviour, in five compartments. Speranza died in the prime of life, in 1640.

SPEERLING, HIERONYMUS, a German engraver, born at Augsburg about the year 1695, was a pupil of Preissler, at Nuremberg, and engraved some of the plates for a work on the churches of Vienna, published by J. A. Peffel, in 1724. He also engraved some of the plates from statues in the gallery of King Augustus of Poland, at Dresden, which were published as a collection in 1733. He engraved many portraits, chiefly after German painters, and a set of 'Months of the Year,' with a frontispiece. He died in 1777.

SPEERLING, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, a painter of portraits and small historical subjects, was born at Halle, in Saxony, in 1691. He was the son of JOHANN HEINRICH SPEERLING, a painter of portraits and fancy heads, who had moved from Hamburg to Halle. Christian studied under his father, and afterwards under Adriaan Van der Werff, at Rotterdam, and adopted his manner of painting. There is a 'Vertumnus and Pomona' by him in the Dresden Gallery; and many of his portraits of persons of high rank exist in Germany. They are but little known elsewhere. He died at Ansbach in 1746.

SPERWER, PIETER, a Flemish painter of the 17th century, was born at Antwerp, where he practised, and where a few of his pictures are still to be found. He is registered as a pupil in the records of the Guild of St. Luke for 1675-76. In 1703 he received from the States of Antwerp the sum of ninety florins for a portrait of the King, to be placed in the Hôtel de Ville.

SPEY, MARTIN, a painter of portraits, flowers, and dead game, was born at Antwerp in 1777. He left his native country for Paris in 1809, and remained there till the entry of the allied army in 1814, after which all trace of him is lost.

SPEZZINI, FRANCESCO, was a native of Genoa, and flourished about the year 1578. He was first a scholar of Luca Cambiasi, but he afterwards studied under Giovanni Battista Castelli. He visited Rome, where he studied Raphael, Michelangelo, Giulio Romano, &c. On his return to Genoa, he painted several pictures for the churches, particularly an altar-piece for S. Colombano, which is perhaps his best work. He died young, of the plague.

SPICER, —, an English mezzotint engraver, who flourished about the year 1770. He engraved some portraits after Sir Joshua Reynolds, among which are those of Barbara, Countess of Coventry; Kitty Fisher; and Lady Stafford.

SPICER, HENRY, painter in miniature and enamel, born at Reepham, in Norfolk, was a pupil of Gervase Spencer. He was extensively employed, and reached considerable excellence as an enamel painter. He was a constant exhibitor with the Incorporated Society and with the Royal Academy, and was appointed portrait painter in enamel to the Prince of Wales. In 1776 he visited Dublin, and painted many Irish celebrities. He died in London in 1804.

SPIEGL, JOSEPH, a mezzotint engraver, of whom nothing is known, except that he was born in 1772, and received his artistic education in the Academy at Vienna. Five prints by him are extant:

A Holy Family; after Sassoferrato.
Mater Dolorosa; after Guido.
Venus and Cupid; after N. Poussin.
Bacchus and Ariadne; after Gavin Hamilton.
A Woman bathing; after Rubens.

SPIELBERG, ADRIANA, (SPIELBERG,) the daughter of Johannes Spielberg, was born at Amsterdam in 1646, and instructed by her father. She excelled in crayon portraits, though she occasionally practised in oil. She married the painter Breckvelt, and, after his death, Eglon Van der Neer.

SPIELBERG, JOHANNES, (or SPIELBERG,) born at Düsseldorf in 1619, was the son of a glass-painter in the service of the Elector Palatine. It was his father's intention to have sent him to Antwerp, to the school of Rubens, but that painter's death put an end to the project. So Spielberg went to Amsterdam, where he became a scholar of Govert Flinck. He prosecuted his studies under that artist for seven years, and on leaving his school, soon won fame as a painter of history and portraits. The reputation he acquired at Amsterdam led to his being invited to the court of Düsseldorf, as painter to the Elector Palatine. He painted the portraits of the Electoral Family, and several historical works for the churches. For the Schloss he painted a series of 'Labours of Hercules.' He was also commissioned to paint some scenes from the 'Life of Christ,' which he did not live to accomplish. He died in 1690. His 'Banquet of the Archers' Company,' in the Stadthaus at Amsterdam, shows clearly the influence of Van der Helst. One GABRIEL SPIELBERG, who was painter to the court of Spain in the 17th century, is supposed to have been his brother.

SPIERINC, NICHOLAS, a Flemish miniaturist of the 15th century. He was working at Brussels in 1469 for the Duke of Burgundy.

SPIERINGS, PIETER, (or SPIERINCKX,) painter, born at Antwerp in 1633. He has sometimes been mistakenly called Nicholas. He painted landscapes, into which other artists occasionally introduced figures. Pieter Ykens in particular is said to have frequently aided him in this manner. He spent several years in Italy, and imitated the works of Salvator Rosa. It has been said that he died in England, but more recent researches show him to have died in his native town in 1711. He and his wife, Maria de Jode, whose death took place in 1714, were both buried in the Church of St. Jacques at Antwerp. He was the friend of Biset, and was one of the painters of Louis XIV. At Antwerp there are two large landscapes by him, and two in the Madrid Museum.

SPIERRE, CLAUDE, a French painter of the 17th century, and brother of Fr. Spierre, the engraver. He went to Rome to study, and gave promise of a great career, which was cut short by his early death.

SPIERRE, FRANÇOIS, born at Nancy in 1643, went to Paris when very young, and became the pupil of François de Poilly, whose style he for some time followed with success. He did not, however, confine himself to the manner of his master, but went to Italy, where he acquired a distinctive style of his own. He did not long survive his return to his native country, but died in 1681. The following are, perhaps, his best prints :

Pope Innocent XI.; engraved in the style of Mellan; Franciscus Spier, del. et sculp.

The Grand Duke of Tuscany; dated 1659.

Lorenzo, Count de Marsciano; after his own design.

The Virgin suckling the Infant Christ; after Correggio.

St. Michael defeating Satan; after P. da Cortona.

The Immaculate Conception; after the same.

The Virgin and Infant Jesus, with St. Catharine; after the same.

The Circumcision; after Ciro Ferri.

St. John preaching in the Wilderness; after Bernini.

The miracle of the Loaves and Fishes; after the same.

Christ on a Cross suspended over a sea of blood, which flows from His wounds; after the same.

SPIERS, ALBERT VAN, was born at Amsterdam in 1666, and was a scholar of Willem van Ingen, an historical painter of some eminence. He had already given proof of considerable talent in his native country, when he determined to visit Rome. After passing seven years there, he went to Venice to improve his colour. After a residence in Italy of ten years he returned to Holland in 1697, and established himself at Amsterdam, where he was largely employed in decoration. He had established a great reputation when he fell a victim to overwork; in 1718.

SPIESS, AUGUST FRIEDRICH, engraver, was born at Castell, in Franconia, in 1806. He began his studies at the Munich Academy, under Amsler. His first works were, 'The Transfiguration,' and a 'Holy Family,' after Raphael, and 'The Last Supper,' after Leonardo da Vinci. He produced a large number of historical and religious engravings, and many excellent crayon portraits. He died at Munich in 1855.

SPIESS, HEINRICH, historical painter, born at Munich in 1831, was a pupil of the Academy under Voltz from 1849 to 1856, and studied later under Kaulbach. He was associated with Schwind in the execution of the Wartburg frescoes, and jointly with his brother, August Fr., he painted allegories of the sciences in the Arcades of the Maximilianeum, at Munich. He died at Munich in 1875.

SPILMBERGO, IRENE DI, was born at Udine about 1540. Although practising painting for her amusement only, she applied herself to it with all the zeal of a professor, and is said to have received lessons from Titian. Lanzi mentions three pictures from sacred history, by this lady, which were in his time in the Casa Maniago at Venice. Titian is said to have painted her portrait. She died in 1559.

SPILMAN, HENDRIK, was born at Amsterdam in 1721, and painted portraits and landscapes with some success. He engraved a few plates, among which are the following :

Henry Tilly; after C. van Noorde.

His own Portrait; after the same painter.

Several portraits for Langendijk's History of the Counts of Holland.

He also engraved three landscapes, in the style of bistre drawings, after Everdingen, Van Borssum, and Berchem. He died in Haarlem in 1784.

SPILNBERGER, HANS, (SPIELBERGER,) painter and etcher, was born at Kaschau, in Hungary, in 1628. He worked in Italy and Augsburg, and afterwards settled in Vienna as court painter. He was carried off by the plague in 1679, while travelling in Bohemia. His works include, 'St. Peter preaching on the Day of Pentecost,' in the Kreuzkirche at Augsburg; 'The Death of St. Benedict,' in the church of S. Emeran at Ratisbon; and 'The Assumption of the Virgin,' in St. Stephen's, Vienna. He also etched several plates.

SPILSBURY, F. B., an amateur painter and draughtsman, was a surgeon in the navy, and made many drawings of scenery and costumes seen by him during his voyages. He served in the Syrian campaign of 1796, and published a 'Picturesque Scenery in the Holy Land and Syria,' and, in 1805, a book on the West Coast of Africa, illustrated by himself.

SPILSBURY, JOHN, an English engraver and printseller, was born in 1730. He scraped a great many plates in mezzotint after Reynolds and others, and many portraits after his own designs. In the dot style he engraved a collection of gems, which was published in numbers. About 1782 he was drawing-master at Harrow School. He also kept a print-shop in Russell Court, Covent Garden. He died in 1795. Among his plates we may name :

Miss Pond, who rode 1000 miles in 1000 hours; from his own design.

The name Inigo Spilsbury, which often occurs in catalogues, seems to have been given to John, as the engraver of Van Dyck's 'Inigo Jones,' to distinguish him more readily from his brother Jonathan.

SPILSBURY, JONATHAN, the brother of John Spilsbury, exhibited portraits at the Royal Academy from 1776 to 1807. Among them were those of Charles Wesley, and of the Rev. J. Fletcher and his wife.

SPILSBURY, MARIA, painter and engraver, was the daughter of John Spilsbury, and was born in London in 1777. She painted genre pictures, and was most successful in the treatment of rural life and of childhood. In 1807 she exhibited eight pictures at the Royal Academy. Many of her best works were engraved, one, 'A Shepherd's Family,' by herself. She married a Mr. John Taylor, and settled in Ireland, where she died.

SPINELLI, GASPARRI, (PARRI), painter of Arezzo, born in 1387, was the son and pupil of Luca Spinelli. He afterwards went into the school of Ghiberti in Florence. The church of S. Domenico, Arezzo, contains a 'Crucifixion,' with the Virgin and figures of three saints on either side, by him, in fresco. The Gallery of Arezzo possesses three frescoes taken from the church of Sta. Maria della Misericordia of that city; and the church of San Francesco, a 'Last Supper,' which is now much damaged by time. His portrait, painted by Marco de Montepulciano, is still preserved in the cloisters of S. Bernardo, in his native city. He died in 1452.

SPINELLI, LUCA, commonly called SPINELLO ARETINO, was the son of Luca Spinelli, a Ghibeline, who about 1308 had fled to Arezzo, where the younger Luca was born about 1332. The boy was apprenticed to Jacopo del Casentino, and before his twentieth year was a better artist than his master. Very few of his early works at Arezzo have been preserved. About 1348 we find him at Florence, painting frescoes in the choir of S. Maria Maggiore, in two chapels of the Carmine, and in one at S. Trinità, besides three altar-pieces for the churches of S. Apostolo, S. Lucia di Bardi, and S. Croce. The frescoes have all disappeared, but the panels remain. In 1361 he was recalled to Arezzo, where he painted an altar-piece for the Abbey of the Camaldoli in the Casentino, which was removed in 1539 to give place to one by Vasari, as well as many other altar-pieces and frescoes, of which an 'Annunciation' over the altar of S. Francesco, and frescoes in different parts of the church, may still be seen; the bell-room contains frescoes illustrating the life of St. Michael the Archangel. In 1384, when Arezzo was sacked, Spinello again went to Florence, where he was engaged by Don Jacopo d'Arezzo, Abbot of S. Miniato, and General of the Congregation of Monte Oliveto, to furnish an altar-piece for his church. The centre panel of this work has disappeared; but its two wings, with the date 1385, and the names of Simone Cini, the carver, and Gabriello Saracini the gilder, inscribed on two members of the frame, are in the possession of Mons. Ramboux, superintendent of the gallery at Cologne, while its gable and predella are in the gallery of Siena. He also decorated the sacristy of San Miniato and the Pisan Campo Santo with frescoes. These finished he again returned to Florence, where in 1400 and 1401 he painted scenes from the lives of SS. Philip and James for a chapel in Santa Croce, and an altar-piece for the convent of Santa Felicità, now in the Accademia at Florence. It is in three compartments, of which the centre, with the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' is painted and signed by his assistant and pupil, Lorenzo di Niccolò Gerini; the figures of St. Peter, St. James, St. John, and St. Benedict on its right were painted and signed by Niccolò di Pietro, the father of Lorenzo; and the figures of St. John Baptist, St. Matthew, and St. Felicità on its left were painted and signed by Spinello himself. The whole bears an inscription dated 1401. To about the same period must be ascribed the famous fresco, formerly in S. Maria degli Angeli, at Arezzo, representing the 'Fall of the Rebel Angels.' The church was destroyed in the present century, and the only parts of Spinello's work which were saved are now in the National Gallery. It is of this last subject that Vasari states that Spinello died through fright from a dream in which he saw the devil, who demanded of him why he had painted him so frightful. But so far from dying at this time, Spinello accepted a commission to paint at Siena, where he and his son Gasparri or Parri, went in 1404, and worked at the decoration of the Duomo until 1405. He probably then returned to Florence, where he decorated Dardano Accaiuoli's chapel in San Niccolò, as well as portions of the church. In 1408 he and his son returned to Siena, and decorated the Sala di Balia of the Palazzo Pubblico with a series of sixteen frescoes, illustrating the Venetian campaign against Frederic Barbarossa, and giving prominence to the part taken in it by Pope Alexander III. It is supposed that he then retired to Arezzo, where he died in 1410, leaving two sons, Gasparri and Baldassare. Forzore Spinelli, sometimes called Luca's son, was his nephew.

SPINNY, GUILLAUME DE, a native of Brussels, studied art in that city and in France. In 1756 he established himself at the Hague, where he painted with some acceptance for many years. He died in 1785.

SPIRINX, J., an indifferent engraver, who flourished about the year 1635. He engraved some frontispieces and other plates for books.

SPIRINX, L., probably a relation of J Spirinx, engraved some frontispieces and other ornaments for books, dated from 1641 to 1674. This artist has left a few portraits, among them one of Pierre de la Mothe, dated 1663.

SPISANO, VINCENZO, (called LO SPISANELLI,) painter, born at Orto, in the Milanese, in 1495, studied at Bologna, in the school of Denys Calvaert, whose style he adopted, and followed without deviation. His compositions are, however, less judicious, and his design less correct. Of his numerous works in the public buildings of Bologna, the most remarkable are, the 'Death of S. Joseph,' in S. Maria Maggiore; the 'Visitation of the Virgin to S. Elizabeth,' in S. Giacomo Maggiore; the 'Baptism of Christ,' in S. Francesco; and the 'Conversion of Paul,' in S. Domenico. His easel pictures, most of which are in private collections in Bologna and its neighbourhood, are better than his altar-pieces. He died in 1662.

SPLINTER, GERRIT, is quoted by Van Mander as the master, at Utrecht, of Abraham Bloemaert. The records of Utrecht show that early in the 16th century a family of painters of this name was established in the city.

SPOEDE, JEAN JACQUES, a Flemish painter of still-life, was born at Antwerp, probably in the first years of the 18th century. He studied in the Academy of his native city, and afterwards went to Paris, where he became the friend and pupil of Watteau. His name occurs in the catalogue of the exhibitions held by the Paris Society of S. Luke, of which he was professor, and rector in 1751, 1752, and 1753. He died in 1760. There is a portrait by him in the Orleans Museum.

SPOFFORTH, ROBERT, an English engraver and printseller, who flourished about the year 1707. From his style Strutt thinks he was a pupil of S. Gribelin. We have a few portraits by him, among them the following:

Queen Anne. | George I. | John Cole, M.D.

SPOLETTI, PIER-LORENZO, a Genoese, born in 1680, was a pupil of Domenico Piola the Elder, and lived for a time at Madrid, where he had some success as a portrait painter. He died in 1726.

SPOLVERINI, HILARIO, born at Parma in 1657, was a disciple of Francesco Monti. Although he occasionally painted historical subjects, he was better known for his battles, attacks of banditti, and assassinations, which he designed with spirit, and painted with a consistent vehemence. He was much employed by Francesco, Duke of Parma. There are some altar-pieces by him at Parma, in the cathedral and the Certosa. He died at Piacenza in 1734.

SPOONER, CHARLES, was born in the county of Wexford in the first half of the 18th century, and apprenticed in Dublin to John Brooks. He came to London on the invitation of McArdeil. We have several mezzotint portraits and other subjects by him, dated from 1752 to 1762, among which are the following:

Thomas Prior; after J. Van Nost. 1752.
Major-General Sir William Johnson; after T. Adams. 1756.

Miss Gunning; after Cotes.
Miss Smith; after the same.
George Keppel, Earl of Albemarle; after Reynolds.
Lady Selina Hastings; after the same.
Garrick in the character of Lear; after Houston.
Woman with a Candle in her hand; after Schalcken.
Peasants regaling; after Teniers.
A set of four plates of Youthful Amusements; after Mercier.

He died in London in 1767, aged about fifty.

SPOOR, W. J. L., a Flemish painter of the 18th century, was born at Budel, in North Brabant. He was a scholar of Hendrik van Anthonissen, at Antwerp. In his early pictures he imitated the manner of that painter; but afterwards became a copyist of Paul Potter, and of other landscape and animal painters of the Dutch school.

SPORCKMANS, HERBERT, was born at Antwerp in 1619. He studied under Rubens; received the freedom of the Corporation of S. Luke in 1640, and was dean in 1659. He died in 1690. There is a picture by him in the Hôtel de Ville, at Antwerp.

SPRANGHER, BARTHOLOMÆUS, painter, born at Antwerp in 1546, was the son of Joachim Sprangher, an eminent merchant, who destined him for commercial pursuits; but betraying a decided inclination for painting, he was placed under the tuition of Jan Mandijn, at Haarlem, with whom he studied eighteen months, when, on the death of his instructor, he became a scholar of an amateur called Van Dalem. He afterwards travelled through France to Italy, and resided three years at Parma, where he studied under Bernardino Gatti, called Il Sojaro, who had been a disciple of Correggio. From Parma he went to Rome, where he was engaged to decorate the Villa of Caprarola by Cardinal Farnese. He was introduced by that prelate to Pope Pius V., who appointed him his painter, and gave him apartments in the Belvedere. The first thing he did for the Pope was a 'Last Judgment,' a composition of more than five hundred figures, painted on a copper-plate six feet high, which he finished with great care. He was also commissioned by the Pope to paint twelve scenes from the Passion of our Saviour. In 1575 Sprangher was invited to the court of Vienna, by the Emperor Maximilian II., who appointed him his principal painter. On the death of Maximilian, in 1576, he remained in the service of Rudolph II., for whom he was employed both at Vienna and at Prague. Sprangher was greatly respected by the Emperor, both for his abilities as a painter, and for his literary acquirements, which were extensive, as well as for his talents in conversation. In 1588 Rudolph ennobled him and his descendants. He died at Prague about 1627. There is a curious picture by Sprangher in the magazine of the National Gallery; the subject is 'Men devoured by Dragons.' Other works:

Berlin.	Museum.	The Resurrection.
Copenhagen.	Museum.	The Death of Lucretia.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Portraits of himself and his Wife.
"	"	The Virtues of Rudolph II., an allegory.
		And others at Stockholm, Schleissheim, Darmstadt, and Brunswick.

Spranger has left a few etchings, among which the best is,

A Figure bound to a Tree, on which the initials B.S. are reversed.

SPRINGINKLEE, HANS, is said to have resided in the house of Albrecht Dürer, from whom he learnt the principles of the art of design, and to have died about 1540. He was formerly ranked among wood engravers from the presence of his mark, ISK on several of the woodcuts in the 'Hortulus animæ cum horis beatæ Virginis,' &c., printed at Nuremberg in 1518, 1519, and 1520. All that can be certainly affirmed of him, however, is that he was the designer of those subjects, and that he was contemporary with Albrecht Dürer. Neudörfer calls him an illuminator, and Thausing believes him to have been the author of some of the borders in the Prayer Book of Maximilian.

SPRONCK. See VERSPRONCK.

SPRONG, GERARD, born at Haarlem in 1600, was a fair painter of portraits and interiors. He died in 1651. There is a half-length portrait of a lady by him in the Louvre.

SPROSSE, KARL, painter and etcher, born at Leipsic in 1819. He worked at the Art Academy of Leipsic, under Fr. Brauer and Schnorr. About 1838 he was employed by Dr. Puttrich of Cologne. In 1840 he went to Italy, where he painted several views of the ruins of ancient Rome, from which he afterwards etched twelve plates. In 1848 he returned to Germany, but in 1849 was again in Rome. In 1850, 1857, and 1860 he was painting in Venice. He also visited Greece in search of subjects. Besides his Italian series, he etched many German castles, cathedrals, &c. He twice exhibited in London. He died at Leipsic in 1874.

SPRUYT, CHARLES, son and pupil of Philip Spruyt, was born at Brussels in 1769. After studying in Italy, he settled in Brussels, where he painted historical pictures, such as a 'S. Theresa,' 'The Disciples at Emmaus,' 'John, Duke of Brabant, rescuing his sister.' He died at Brussels in 1827.

SPRUYT, JAKOB PHILIPS, a native of Ghent, where he flourished about 1764. He worked for a time at Delft and the Hague, but finally settled in his native city.

SPRUYT, PHILIP LAMBERT JOSEPH, painter, was born at Ghent in 1727. He received his first teaching from Milé and Van Loo in Paris, and then from Mengs in Rome. On his return to Belgium he became Professor of Drawing at the Ghent Academy, and by command of Maria Theresa made a catalogue of all the works of art in the Belgian churches and convents, which he adorned with etchings. He died at Ghent in 1801.

SPRY, WILLIAM, an English flower-painter, who practised in London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1834 to 1847.

SPYCK, HENDRIK VAN, portrait painter, flourished at the Hague about 1670. He was an artist of some ability, and painted the portrait of Spinoza, with whose opinions he sympathized.

SPYERS, JAMES, a painter of views, practised in London in the second part of the 18th century. Various landscapes by him were engraved and mezzotinted by Jukes and G. Wills.

SQUARCIONE, FRANCESCO, the son of a notary, was born at Padua in 1394. He was at first a tailor and embroiderer, but, when still young, turned to the art of painting, and determined to improve his mind by travelling. Having made a tour of Italy, he is said to have wandered as far as Greece. On his return he founded a school, which became the most famous of its time. The list of his pupils reaches a total of one hundred and thirty-seven. He formed a collection of pictures and antique fragments, which he set before his pupils as models, and thus, though himself of moderate skill, he became one of the most famous of masters, and earned the title of 'Father of Painters.' Among his pupils were the two younger Bellini, Mantegna, Gregorio Schiavone, Dario da Treviso, Bono Ferrarese, Ansuino, Pizzolo, Matteo Pozzo, and Marco Zoppo, and it was by their aid that he executed the commissions he received. In the spring of 1439 he finished a Crucifix for Fantino Bragadini, a Venetian noble, living at Terrassa, near Padua. In 1441 he was employed in decorating the organ at the Santo, and in that year his name first appears in the lists of the Paduan guild. According to Vasari, he next contracted to ornament a chapel at the Eremitani, and entrusted its execution to Mantegna, Pizzolo, and others.

From 1444, when he laid in with plain colours several ceilings at the Santo, until 1465, when he became formally exempt from taxation in consideration of his having cast a model of the city and territory of Padua, he was constantly employed in that building, sometimes executing his commissions himself, sometimes employing his pupils. Crowe and Cavalcaselle express the belief that it was Mantegna's refusal, after he had arrived at the maturity of his talent, to paint pictures for Squarcione, that led the latter to quarrel with his pupil, rather than anger at Andrea's marriage with Niccolosia Bellini. Squarcione's death occurred in 1474. Amongst his few remaining pictures are the 'Glory of St. Jerome, with St. Lucy, St. John the Baptist, Anthony the Abbot, and Giustina,' now in the Gallery of Padua, a very poor production, in which, according to Crowe and Cavalcaselle, Zoppo may have had a hand; and a 'Virgin and Child,' in the Casa Lazzara of the same city. The latter is an excellent picture, bearing unmistakable signs of the hand of Mantegna. It is signed Opus Squarconi pictoris.

SQUARCIONE, ZOPPO DI. See ZOPPO, MARCO.

SSOTNOWSKI. See SCRETA.

STAAL, PIERRE GUSTAVE EUGENE, painter, was born at Vertus, Marne, in 1817. He entered the Ecole des Beaux Arts in 1838, and was a pupil of Paul Delaroche. He exhibited portraits, chiefly in pastel, at the Salon from 1839 to 1872, and in 1865 eight etchings. He died at Ivry in 1892.

STABEN, HENDRIK, born at Antwerp in 1578, is said to have visited Venice when very young, and to have entered the school of Tintoretto. He could not have studied there long, however, for Tintoretto died before Staben had reached his seventeenth year. He does not appear to have remained long in Italy, but established himself at Paris, where he painted small interiors, with neatly drawn figures. He died in 1658.

STACCOLI, FRANCESCO, water-colour painter, flourished in Rome at the end of the 18th century. He was a pupil of A. Maron, and copied much from the old masters. He died in 1815.

STACHOWICZ, MICHAEL, painter, born at Cracow in 1768, was a pupil of Molitor. He painted pictures for churches and afterwards battle pictures, and other scenes from Polish history. In 1817 he became Professor at the Lyceum of S. Barbara in Cracow, where he died in 1835.

STÄCK, JOSEF MAGNUS, a Swedish painter, born at Sund, in 1812. He studied at Stockholm and Munich, completing his education by visits to Paris and Italy. He died in 1868. The following pictures by him are in the Stockholm Gallery:

A Sea View by Moonlight. 1847.

A View of Haarlem in Winter. 1848.

River Scene in Dalecarlia. 1856.

Italian Landscape. 1860.

STACKELBERG, OTTO MAGNUS, BARON VON, antiquarian draughtsman, was born at Revel in 1787. He studied first in Dresden, and finished his education in Rome; whence, in 1810, he went with an exploring party to Greece. The result of their researches was the discovery of the remains of the Temple of Apollo at Bassæ, which are now in the British Museum, and of the Æginetan marbles, now in the Glyptothek at Munich. Of all these Stackelberg made careful and exact drawings, which he published in 1826. He also published a series of views of modern Greece, drawings of Greek costumes and customs, and a work on ancient Greek sepulture. He travelled later in Italy, and discovered some ancient Etruscan frescoes, to which another book was devoted. He died at St. Petersburg in 1837.

STACKHOUSE, J., an English painter of flowers and fruit, who practised in London towards the close of the 18th century.

STADING, EVELINE, born at Stockholm in 1803, was a pupil of Fahlcrantz. She travelled and worked in Germany and Italy, but died young in 1829.

STADLER, ALOIS MARTIN, painter, born at Imst, in the Tyrol, in 1792, studied at Innsbruck and Munich, and in Italy. In 1822 he settled in Munich, and painted altar-pieces for different towns in the Tyrol, among them an 'Assumption of the Virgin,' for the parish church at Imst. He died at Sterzing in 1841.

STADLER, JOSEPH CONSTANTINE, a German engraver, who worked from 1780 to 1812 in London, and engraved views in aquatint. Among his best plates are :

The Fire of London; after Louthembourg.

The Destruction of the Armada; after the same.

The Picturesque Scenery of Great Britain; six plates; after the same.

Views of London, Westminster, and Blackfriars Bridges; after Farington.

Many plates for Combes' 'History of the Thames.'

A series of views of Schloss Hohenheim, Würtemberg; engraved in conjunction with Nicolas and Victor Heidehoff.

STAEVAERTS. See STEVAERTS.

STAGNON, ANTOINE MARIE, draughtsman and engraver, flourished in the second half of the 18th century. He was engraver of seals to the King of Sardinia. Among his works were forty-three plates of Sardinian costumes, and two volumes of Sardinian uniforms. He assisted St. Non with the plates for his 'Voyage pittoresque d'Italie.' In the fifth edition of that work, Choffard's name was substituted for his on two of the plates, Nos. 36 and 38, and Stagnon published an indignant protest in 'Les Nouvelles de la République des Lettres et des Arts,' for May 1779, claiming their sole authorship.

STAINIER, R., an English engraver, who practised in London towards the close of the 18th century. He was chiefly engaged on portraits, but occasionally engraved subject pictures, such as 'Lindor and Clara,' and 'Cleopatra,' both after Wheatley.

STALBENT, ADRIAAN VAN, (STAELBENT,) a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1580. He painted landscapes with small figures, in a style resembling that of Brueghel; also interiors with historical subjects. He practised for a time at Middelburg, and visited England in the reign of Charles I., and is noticed by Walpole under the name of Stalband. He painted a 'View of Greenwich,' and is said to have returned rich to Antwerp. Vandyck painted a portrait of Stalbent, which was engraved by Pontius. Stalbent has left an etching representing the ruins of an English Abbey, with cattle and sheep. It is signed. He died at Putte, in Brabant, in 1662. Works:

STAMM, JOHANN GOTTLIEB SAMUEL, was born at Meissen in 1767. He practised as a copyist at Dresden, but also etched after Klengel, Dietrich, and others. He died in 1828.

STAMPART, FRANS, born at Antwerp in 1675, was a scholar of the younger Tyssens, and a student of Vandyck. He had acquired a reputation as a portrait painter in his native city, when he was invited to Vienna by the Emperor Leopold, who appointed him his principal painter, in which office he was confirmed by Charles VI. He died at Vienna in 1750.

STANFIELD, GEORGE CLARKSON, son of William Clarkson Stanfield, was born in London in 1828. He was a pupil of his father, but was gifted with very little talent. He exhibited, from 1844 to 1876, continental landscapes, marine subjects, and views of towns. He died at Hampstead in 1878.

STANFIELD, WILLIAM CLARKSON, painter, was born at Sunderland in 1793. His father, James Stanfield, was an Irishman of a certain reputation as a writer, and author of an 'Essay on Biography.' William Stanfield began life as a sailor, and showed an early taste for art, drawing and sketching ships and marine views, and painting scenery for plays performed on board ship. During one of his voyages to Guinea he became acquainted with Thomas Clarkson, and a warm friendship sprang up between them, in token of which Stanfield adopted the abolitionist's surname. Whilst serving as a clerk in the navy, Stanfield's talent attracted the notice of Captain Marryat, the novelist, who was the first person to recommend him to art as a profession. In 1816 he was temporarily disabled by a fall on an anchor, and getting his discharge in 1818, he made a fresh start as scene-painter at the Old Royalty in Wellclose Square, a theatre much frequented by sailors. His reputation growing steadily, he obtained engagements successively at the Colurg Theatre, Her Majesty's, and Drury Lane; an early acquaintance with Douglas Jerrold proved of much service to him at this period of his career. Whilst occupied with his profession he at the same time painted a number of small sea-pieces, and became known in London as a promising marine painter. In 1824 he was elected a member of the Society of British Artists, with whom he had exhibited the previous year. A large sea-piece, painted in 1827, and exhibited at the British Institution, 'Wreckers off Fort Rouge,' attracted considerable attention. In 1829 he sent his first picture to the Academy, a 'View near Châlon-sur-Saône,' and encouraged by its favourable reception and by a premium of fifty guineas from the British Institution, he gave up scene-painting to devote himself to easel pictures, and started on a continental tour, the fruits of which were shown in pictures exhibited during the two following years: 'Venice,' 'Strasburg,' 'A Honfleur Fisherman,' &c. A fine example of his art is the 'Mount St. Michael, Cornwall,' which was exhibited in 1830 at the Academy, and ensured his election, in 1832, as an Associate. Three years later he rose to full membership, and having resigned his connection with the Society of British Artists, became a constant exhibitor in Trafalgar Square up to the year of his death, sending altogether 132 pictures to the Academy exhibitions. In 1836 he completed a large 'Battle of Trafalgar,' for the Senior United Service Club, having previously been brought prominently before the public by a commission from William IV. to paint 'Portsmouth Harbour,' and the 'Opening of New London Bridge.' To these large spectacular works Stanfield's manner was peculiarly adapted. In his easel pictures he could never entirely free himself from the influences of the theatre, and his best landscapes are marred by a cold staginess of effect and of treatment. His pictures were greatly admired in their day, but their reputation has waned, and is not likely to revive. Among important works executed by him on commission, we may mention a series of large pictures painted for the Banqueting-room at Bowood, and another series for Trentham Hall. A visit to Italy in 1839 resulted in the painting of a number of views of Italian scenery, of which the 'Castello d'Ischia, from the Mole' (1841), and 'Isola Bella, Maggiore' (1842), are notable examples. He also frequently treated Dutch coast scenery, and published a series of lithographic views of the Rhine, the Meuse, and the Moselle, and a number of coast views in Heath's 'Annual.' His health gradually declined towards the close of his life, but he continued to work with unabated industry, exhibiting at the Academy in the year of his death, which took place at Hampstead, May 18, 1867. He was buried in S. Mary's Roman Catholic cemetery at Kensal Green. A large number of his pictures were included in the winter exhibition at Burlington House in 1870. Among his other works we may name:

STANGE, BERNHARD, painter, born at Dresden, July 24, 1807. He was intended for the profession of the law, and studied for a time at Leipsic University, but his admiration for Rottmann and Rahl caused him to devote himself to art. His first works were poetical landscapes, which had a great popularity in his native country. His 'Morning Bell,' in particular, had such success, that he repeated it twenty times. In 1849 he went to Venice, where he began moonlight scenes, for which he became famous. Later he painted many historical and genre pictures. He died in 1880 at Sindelsdorf, a village in the Bavarian Highlands to which he had retired. There are several of his pictures in the New Pinakothek, Munich, and one in the possession of Queen Victoria.

STANLEY, CALEB ROBERT, landscape painter, born about 1790, studied in Italy and practised in London. He painted in oil and water-colours, and exhibited at the Academy from 1820 to 1863. He died in London in 1863. There are three of his landscapes in the South Kensington Museum.

STANLEY, HAROLD JOHN, painter, was born at Lincoln in 1817. He studied at Munich under Kaulbach. In 1845 he painted 'King Alfred with his Code of Laws.' He afterwards travelled and painted in Italy. For the 'Ludwig's Album' he made a series of drawings illustrating 'Some Years of an Artist's Life.' He died at Munich in 1867.

STANLEY, MONTAGUE, landscape painter, was born at Dundee in 1809. Losing his father when young, he spent a wandering childhood with his mother, visiting New York, Nova Scotia, and Jamaica before he was ten years old. At the age of eight he played the part of 'Ariel,' and up to the year 1838 he followed the theatrical profession, in which he obtained a considerable reputation. From conscientious motives he quitted the stage and devoted himself to art, receiving instruction from J. W. Ewbank. He rapidly rose in public estimation, and was elected an Associate of the Scottish Academy. He died in the island of Buta in 1844.

STANNARD, JOSEPH, landscape and marine painter, was born in 1797 at Norwich, where he afterwards practised. He was a pupil of Robert Ladbroke, and also studied for a time in Holland. He was a member of the Norwich Society of Artists. His works are chiefly coast and river scenes, with some portraits. He also published a set of etchings. He died in 1830. His most important picture was one of the annual 'Water Frolic' at Thorpe, in which he introduced many portraits.

STANTON, THOMAS, landscape painter, born about the middle of the 18th century. He practised in London, painting views in which he generally introduced architecture. A 'View of Stonyhurst College' by him was engraved by Middiman.

STANZIONI, MASSIMO, painter, born at Naples in 1585, was a pupil of Giovanni Battista Caracciolo, but received some instruction in fresco from Belisario Corenzio. When Lanfranco visited Naples, Stanzioni profited by his lessons, and also by those of Fabrizio Santafede. He afterwards visited Rome, where he applied himself to study the works of Annibale Carracci, and formed an intimacy with Guido. On his return to Naples he displayed an ability that enabled him to compete with the ablest of his contemporaries. There existed between Stanzioni and Spagnoletto a jealousy and animosity which led the latter into the commission of a disgraceful piece of treachery. Lanzi reports that Stanzioni had painted an altar-piece at the Certosa representing the dead Christ with the Marys, in competition with Ribera's 'Deposition from the Cross.' Stanzioni's picture having turned somewhat lower in tone, Spagnoletto recommended the monks to permit him to clean it, when he made use of some spirit or acid by which the beauty of the work was entirely destroyed. The fathers applied to Stanzioni to repair it, which he refused to do, declaring it should remain as it was, that such perfidy might be exposed. Among his other works at Naples are the ceilings of the churches of S. Paolo and del Gesù Nuovo, his best frescoes, and a large 'S. Bruno presenting the Regulations of his Order to his Monks' at the Certosa. He also painted many easel pictures for private patrons at Naples. Stanzioni's works are distinguished above those of his contemporaries by nobility of conception, simplicity of feeling, and purity of line. He formed many scholars, among them Dom. Finoglia and Gius. Marullo. He died in 1656. Other works :

Dresden.	Gallery.	A Genius.
Naples.	S. Martino.	Last Supper.
"	"	Legend of S. Bruno.
"	Trinità dei Pellegrini.	S. Emidio.

STAPLEAUX, MICHEL GHISLAIN, painter, born at Brussels in 1799. He was a pupil of David. He painted historical and genre pictures, and portraits. He painted a 'Napoleon at St. Helena,' and portraits of other members of the Bonaparte family. His 'Prodigal Son' is at Prague. Several pictures by him are in the collection of the King of Würtemberg and Prince Peter of Oldenburg. He died in 1881.

STAR. See STELLA.

STAR, DIRCK VAN, (STAREN,) a Dutch engraver, who flourished in the middle of the 16th century. He is sometimes called a little master, although not one of the seven men more strictly associated with the title. His drawing of the figure is good, with well-marked extremities. His prints are dated from 1520 to 1550. He usually marked them with the initials D. and V. divided by a star, to which he generally added the date, thus : .

The following are among the best of his very numerous plates :

1. Eve and the little Cain, 1522, A. G. (Augusti) 19.
2. The Deluge; 1544.
3. Christ calling Peter and Andrew, 1523, Mey 30.
4. St. Peter walking on the Water, 1525, Des. 30.
5. Christ tempted by the Demon, 1525.
6. Christ and the Woman of Samaria, 1523.
7. The Virgin and S. Anne, 1522, D. C. (Decembris) 31.
8. St. Bernard, 1524, Oct. 3.
9. St. Luke painting the Virgin, 1526. In Juli. 28.
10. St. Elisabeth, 1524, Nov. 15.
11. Venus, 1524, Oct. 20.
12. The Faun, 1522, Sept. 14.
13. Man with a chimerical Fish, 1522, A. G. 16.
14. The Goldsmith, no date.
15. The Man Asleep, 1532, Oct. 10.
16. The Drunken Drummer, 1525, Mert. 8.
17. The Drummer and a Child, 1523, Oct. 14.
18. The Man holding a Shield of arms, 1522.
19. The Woman holding an Escutcheon; lozenge; 1525.
20. St. Christopher.
21. A wood-cut of an Interior, with a Gallery, and numerous Figures. The mark near the middle, 1526 on the left.

Whether the initials D. V. with a starling between them, and the letters D. V. separated by an asterisk in the upper part, belong to this engraver or not, is a matter of dispute.

STARKE, JAMES, landscape painter, was born at Norwich, November 19th, 1794. He was the son of one Michael Stark, a Scotchman, who had settled at Norwich, where he had a dye-works. James studied under Crome for three years, and then went to London, where he entered the Royal Academy in 1817. His first work was 'Boys Bathing.' After a time a painful affliction compelled him to return to Norwich, where he had to abandon painting entirely for some three years. As he became stronger in health, he began to take part energetically in the exhibitions of the Norwich Society of Artists, to which he had been elected as early as 1812. He was also a frequent exhibitor at the Academy and at the British Institution, where, in 1818, he had won a premium of £50. In 1821 he married Elizabeth Dinmore, and moved to Yarmouth for a time. He soon returned, however, to the cathedral city, and there, in 1827, he began the publication of his 'Scenery of the Rivers Yare, Waveney, and Bure.' Shortly afterwards he migrated to London, moving on, in 1839, to Windsor, where he lived and painted for ten years. Returning for the last time to London in 1849, he died there, in Mornington Place, Regent's Park, on March 24th, 1859. A collection of his pictures was shown at Norwich in 1887. Stark's reputation has suffered from the frequent ascription of his better pictures to Crome, and from the attribution to him of inferior works of the Norwich school. The following examples of his art are in English public collections :

Edinburgh.	Nat. Gal.	Gowharrow Park.
London.	"	The Valley of the Yare ( perhaps his masterpiece ).
"	S. Kensington Mus.	Landscape—Woody Lane near Hastings.
"	"	Distant View of Windsor. ( And others in circulation. )
Sheffield.	Mappin Gal.	Landscape with Cattle.

His son Arthur is a landscape and animal painter. STARK, JOSEPH, born at Graz in 1782, first studied theology, and then law, and afterwards painting at the Vienna Academy. In 1817 he became director of the Academy at Graz. In 1826 he travelled in Italy, and produced several portraits and historical pictures. He etched several plates after his own pictures, among them a 'Christ in the House of Martha and Mary,' which is in the Academy at Venice. He died at Graz in 1838.

STARNINA, GHERARDO, painter, born at Florence in 1354 (?), was a disciple of Antonio Veneziano. He is entered on the lists of the Painters' Guild, in 1387, as Gherardo d'Jacopo Starna. He painted history in the stiff style which prevailed at the early period at which he lived. Vasari reports that he was invited to the court of Spain, where he painted some pictures for the king, for which he was well paid. Among the few works of his at Florence which have escaped the ravages of time, is a 'Dying St. Jerome delivering his doctrines to his disciples,' in the church of S. Croce. Some scenes from the life of the Virgin, in a chapel of the cathedral at Prato, are partly attributed to Starna. He is supposed to have been the master of Masolino da Panicale. He died at Florence in 1408?

STARRENBERG, JOHANN, was born at Gröningen, and flourished from the year 1650 to 1670. He painted historical subjects, and frescoed ceilings.

STÄTTLER, ALBERT CORNEL, painter, was born at Cracow in 1800. He was a pupil of Lampi, but went in 1817 to Rome, where he studied at the Academy of St. Luke, and came under the influence of Overbeck. He painted historical subjects and portraits, and died at Rome in 1870.

STAVAREN, JOHAN ADRIAENSZ VAN, flourished about 1600, and if not a pupil, was a close imitator of Gerard Dou. His favourite subject was a hermit contemplating a skull, reading a book, or at his devotions before a crucifix. As the scene is generally the entrance of a grotto in a wild locality, he introduces the trunk of an old tree covered with ivy or moss. His execution is as elaborate as that of Gerard Dou, but his handling is not so clear and fluent. Works :

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	An Old Man praying.
"	"	A Hermit.
"	"	The Schoolmaster.

Copenhagen. Gallery. Woman Sewing.
Paris. Louvre. A Savant in his Study.

Dutch writers mention three other artists of this name, PAUL, JACOB, and E.; Paul and E. are also said to have been pupils of Gerard Dou; Jacob was a painter of fruit and flowers; they all lived from about 1660 to 1700. Laborde mentions a mezzotint of a Man counting Money, signed P. Straverenus.

STAYLER, ALEN, illumined the choir hooks for the Abbey of St. Alban's, in the reign of Henry III.

STAYNER, J., an English engraver, worked in London towards the close of the 18th century. Two line plates by him, after Collet, are known, and a few mezzotints.

STECH, ANDREAS, a painter of Dantzic of the 17th century, painted for the churches of Dantzic, Oliva, and Peplin. In the Dantzic cathedral there is a 'S. Rosa' by him. He made drawings for books on botany and astronomy, and several portraits by him have been engraved. He died in 1697.

STEELE, EDWARD, nicknamed 'Count Steele,' was born at Egremont, in Cumberland, about 1720. He studied in Paris, and under an obscure painter called Wright. He practised at Kendal and York, whence he made tours in the northern counties, painting portraits at a few guineas apiece. Sterne was among his sitters. In 1756 he ran away with a young lady who was his pupil, in which exploit he was assisted by George Romney, who was at that time his scholar. The date of his death is unknown, but in 1759 his collection of pictures, prints, and drawings was sold by auction. He is said, however, to have been living in Ireland, with his wife, after that date.

STEEN, JAN, was born at Leyden in 1626. His father was a brewer of respectable family, and probably sufficiently rich. The maiden name of his mother was Elisabeth Capiteyns. He displayed an early talent for art, and was sent to study in the first place under Nicholas Knupfer, or Knuffer, a German painter of historical subjects settled at Utrecht; and from him transferred to the studio of Adriaen van Ostade, at Haarlem. The influence of Ostade is evident in his principal works. He is supposed to have received further instruction from Adriaen Bröwer, whose choice of subjects he largely adopted. He completed his studies under Jan Van Goyen, of the Hague, whose daughter Margareta he married in 1649, and by whom he had four, if not five, children. The details of his life are obscure. That he worked hard is proved by the number of pictures (more than 500) he has left. That he was improvident is proved by the records of executions for debt which have been discovered at Haarlem by Mr. Van Willigen, and that his pictures sold at low prices is clear from a contract he made to pay the year's rent of his house for 1666-1667, with three portraits "painted as well as he was able," the amount of the rent being only twenty-nine florins. Jan Steen was entered in the Painters' Guild at Leyden in 1648, but is not supposed to have resided there between his marriage and the deaths of his father and wife in 1669, when he returned to take possession of his inheritance. In 1672 he opened a tavern in the city at the Lange Brug (Long Bridge). Many of his pictures had been painted in the interval, a great part of which he may have spent at the Hague. In 1673 he married a second wife, Marie van Egmont, widow of Nicolas Herculens. A son was born in 1674; and five years later Jan Steen himself died, and was buried in the parish church of St. Peter, at Leyden, on the 3rd of February, 1679, leaving the house he had inherited from his father to his widow and children.

A very large proportion of the works of Jan Steen are in English private collections. The annexed list is mainly restricted to pictures in public galleries:

STEEN, JAN, (of ALKMAAR,) an obscure Dutch painter of the 18th century, who painted historical and genre pictures.

STEENREI. See STENREE.

STEENWIJCK, HENDRIK VAN, (STEINWYCK,) the elder, born at Steenwijck in 1550, was a scholar of Jan Vredeman de Vries, an artist of reputation as a painter of perspectives and architectural views. Steenwijck painted similar subjects, in which he not only surpassed his instructor, but in his own way has scarcely been equalled by any one who has succeeded him. His pictures represent the interiors, usually Gothic, of churches and other buildings. He was fond of painting torchlight, with which, by judicious chiaroscuro, he won extremely picturesque effects. His pictures are usually supplied with figures by the Franckens and others. He worked at Antwerp in 1577, but in 1579 went with Lucas and Martin Valckenborcht to Germany, and afterwards settled in Frankfort. Pieter Neefs was among his pupils. He died about 1604. The following are among his better pictures :

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	Interior of a Catholic Church.
Brussels.	Museum.	Interior of St. Peter's Church at Louvain.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	Interior of an Ante-room.
"	Bridgewater Gal.	Interior of a Church by Torchlight.
"	S. Joseph, Esq.	Interior of a Church.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Interior of a Gothic Church.
"	"	Dungeon Interior. (The Deliverance of St. Peter, dated 1604. His last known work. )

STEENWIJCK, HENDRIK VAN, (STEINWYCK,) the younger, the son of Hendrik Steenwijck, born at Amsterdam, or perhaps Frankfort, about 1580, was instructed by his father. His pictures are similar in subject to those of the elder Steenwijck, but are usually on a larger scale. He lived in intimacy with Vandyck, who painted a fine portrait of him, of which we have a print by Pontius. He was recommended by Vandyck to the notice of Charles I., who, about 1629, invited him to England, where he resided several years. In the Whitehall catalogue ten of the principal works of Steenwijck are to be found. The pictures he painted before coming to England have figures by Jan Brueghel, Theodore van Thulden, and others, while he himself occasionally painted architectural backgrounds to Vandyck's portraits. He died in London in 1648. His widow, SUSANNA, settled in Amsterdam, and became known as a painter of views, while his son NICHOLAS entered the service of Charles I., and is believed to have died in England. The younger Steenwijck's works are often confounded with those of his father. The following are good examples :

Berlin.	Museum.	The Prison (dated 1649).
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	Interior of a Gothic Church.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Three Church Interiors, dated respectively 1609, 1611, 1614.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Interior of a Prison, with Beheading of St. John Baptist.
The Hague.	Museum.	A Public Square, with Monuments and figures.
London.	Bridgewater Gallery.	Interior of a Church at Antwerp (figures by Van Thulden).
Madrid.	Gallery.	Christ brought before the High Priest.
"	"	The Denial of Peter.
Paris.	Louvre.	Christ in the House of Martha and Mary. (The figures attributed to Poelenburgh.)
"	"	Interior of a Church.

Vienna.

Gallery. Two Church Interiors; and Two Dungeon Interiors, with Deliverance of St. Peter.

STEENWIJCK, NICHOLAS, born at Breda in 1640, excelled in painting vases, musical instruments, books, and other inanimate objects, and fish. He died in 1698.

STEENWIJCK, PIETER, a Flemish painter of the 17th century, who practised at Breda, where he is said to have led a very dissolute life. His favourite subjects were emblems and allegories of Death. In the Madrid Museum there is an example of his work. He may be identical with the last-named Nicholas Steenwijck.

STEEVENS, RICHARD. See STIEVENS.

STEFANESCHI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, born at Ronta, near Florence, in 1582, was a monk, and is generally called l'Eremita di Monte Senario. He was instructed by Andrea Comodi, by Ligozzi, and by Pietro da Cortona, and chiefly excelled in copying, in miniature, the works of other painters, in which he was much employed by Ferdinand II., Grand Duke of Tuscany. He died in 1659.

STEFANI, BENEDETTO, a publisher and engraver, and native of Verona, who flourished about 1575, and whose name is affixed to a print in the style of Ænea Vico, copied from Marc Antonio's Battle of the Lapithæ.

STEFANI, PIETRO DEGLI. See DEGLI STEFANI.

STEFANI, TOMMASO DEGLI. See DEGLI STEFANI.

STEFANI DA FOSSANO, AMBROGIO, called also BORGOGNONE, AMBROGIO DA FOSSANO, and, by Lanzi, AMBROGIO EGOGNI, was born probably between 1450 and 1460. His birthplace is usually said to have been Fossano, in Piedmont, but he seems rather to have been born in Milan, for his father, Stefano, was already called 'Mediolanensis,' or a native of Milan. As for his name of Borgognone, some writers, notably M. Rio, believe it to have been given in consequence of Flemish characteristics in his art, others, among them the commendatore Morelli, think it due merely to some ancestor, his father or grandfather, having lived for a time in Flanders, which was then called Borgogna by the Italians. Ambrogio's life is so little known that Lanzi divided him into three different individuals, giving to each one class of his works. His master was, in all probability, Vincenzo Foppa, to whom some critics would add Zenale and Buttinone. His earliest known works date from about 1488. They were painted for the Pavian Certosa, where Ambrogio was at work for some years. The stalls and other wood-work in the choir were finished by Bartolommeo de' Polli from designs furnished by Borgognone about the year 1490. The latter returned to Milan in 1494, in which year he was at work at San Satiro. In 1497 he was at Lodi, painting in the church of the Incoronata. In 1508 he received a commission for an altar-piece in San Satiro, Bergamo, which is still extant. In 1512, as documents prove, he was back at Milan. In 1524 he painted some scenes from the legend of St. Sisinus in the portico of San Simpliciano, Milan, which have now disappeared, and he may have died very soon after. The date 1535, which, it was said, was upon an 'Assumption' that has now disappeared from the church of Cremeno, in Valsassina, is so much later than any other record we possess of Ambrogio's existence, that we may put it aside, especially as the authenticity of the picture itself was doubtful. In Borgognone's latest works, traces of Leonardo's influence are visible, but otherwise he may be called the incarnation of the early Milanese spirit in art. He was to the Lombard school what Perugino was to the Umbrian, Francia to the Bolognese, or Bellini to the Venetian. He had a younger brother, BERNARDINO, who often acted as his assistant. W.A.

STEFANO, TOMMASO, painter, called IL GIOTTINO, from the exactness with which he imitated the manner of Giotto, is said to have been the son and pupil of Stefano, called Fra Fiorentino, (see FIORENTINO,) and to have been born at Florence about 1324. A 'Pietà' in the church of San Remigio at Florence is attributed to him, and certain frescoes at Assisi. He died at Florence in 1356.

STEFANO DA FERRARA. See FERRARA.

STEFANO DA PONTE VECCHIO. See FIORENTINO.

STEFANO DA VERONA, and STEFANO DA ZEVIO. A difference of opinion exists as to whether the above are one and the same, or an older and a younger painter. The existence of Stefano da Zevio (Zevio is near Verona) is well authenticated. He was a contemporary and follower, and perhaps a scholar, of Vittore Pisano, and was born in 1393. He was by profession a miniaturist, and was the grandfather of Girolamo dai Libri. A distinctive mark of his pictures is the frequent introduction of a peacock. To him Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle assign all the paintings under the name of Stefano in Verona, and the two panels at Rome and Milan, given in the list below. Vasari, however, mentions one Stefano da Verona, a pupil of Agnolo Gaddi, and certain Veronese critics have contended that under this master the school of Verona rose to a fair level of excellence as early as the 14th century. They divide the frescoes attributed to Stefano into two classes, those of the 14th and those of the 15th century, giving the former to the master whom they claim as the founder of their school.

STEFANO, FR. DI. See FRANCESCO DI STEFANO.

STEFANO D'ANTONIO DI VANNI, a Florentine painter of the 15th century. None of his works survive. He is said to have worked in conjunction with Bicci di Lorenzo on pictures for San Marco and the Camaldolese church. In 1468 he was painting in the hospital of San Matteo, and in 1472 he painted the marble mausoleum of Temmo Balducci, its founder, of which Francesco di Simone Ferrucci was the sculptor.

STEFANO SANT' ANNA, an obscure Sicilian painter, of the early 16th century. In the church of San Dionisio at Messina there is an altar-piece of the patron saint enthroned, inscribed: Stephanus S<sup>ca</sup> Anna 1519.

STEFANONE, MAESTRO, painter, born at Naples about the year 1325, was a pupil of Maestro Sinone, and a fellow-scholar of Gennaro di Cola. In conjunction with the latter, he painted some frescoes in the church of S. Giovanni da Carbonara, at Naples.

In S. Maria della Pietà he painted a Virgin Mary and the Magdalene weeping over the dead Christ, which is still well preserved. A curious 'Genealogy of Christ' over the entrance to the chapel of San Lorenzo, in the Duomo at Naples, has been conjecturally ascribed to him, also a Magdalene and S. Dominic, in San Domenico Maggiore. He died about 1390.

STEFANONI, GIACOMO ANTONIO, a native of Bologna, who flourished about the year 1630. He is said to have been both painter and engraver. We have, among others, the following etchings by him :

- The Virgin with the infant Christ, St. John, and two Angels; after Lod. Carracci.
- The Holy Family, with St. John; after An. Carracci. 1632.
- Another Holy Family, with St. John presenting cherries; after the same.
- The Virgin and infant Christ, with St. John; after Agostino Carracci.
- The Murder of the Innocents; after Guido Reni.
- The Martyrdom of St. Ursula; after L. Pasinelli.

STEFANONI, PIETRO, an Italian engraver, born at Vicenza about 1600, who has left a set of forty etchings, from the designs of the Carracci, intended for use as a drawing-book. He marked his plates with the initials P. S. F.

STEFFELAER, CORNELIS, painter and engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1797. He was a pupil of Kobell, and painted landscape. He died at Haarlem in 1861.

STEIDL, MARTIN MELCHIOR, painter, born at Innsbruck in the 17th century, studied under Joh. Andr. Wolf in Munich, and painted pictures in fresco and in oil. His 'Draught of Fishes' is in the Dominican church at Eichstädt. He died in 1720.

STEIFENSAND, XAVER, engraver, was born at Caster, near Cologne, in 1809, and received his first lessons from Gützenberger and Cauer at Bonn. He then became a student of the Düsseldorf Academy, where he studied till 1833. His first plate was from a copy of Raphael's St. Catharine, by Desnoyers, after which he went to Darmstadt, and worked under Felsing. In 1835 he returned to Düsseldorf, engraved 'Shepherd and Shepherdess' after Bendemann, and several plates from drawings by Kaulbach, Schrödter, and Stilke for editions de luxe of Schiller and Goethe. He was a member and professor of the Berlin Academy. He died at Düsseldorf in 1876. Among his other works we may name :

- A Madonna; after Overbeck.
- Frederick II.; after J. F. Schrader.
- Portrait of Lacordaire; after Chauvin.
- Portrait of Pius IX.
- The Child Jesus; after E. Deger.
- The Nativity, Visitation, and Ave Maria; after Mintrop.
- 'Regina Coeli'; after K. Müller.
- The Adoration of the Magi; after P. Veronese.
- Plates after Rethel's designs for Rotteck's 'Weltgeschichte.'

STEIN, THEODOR FRIEDRICH, a painter of the 18th century, a native of Hamburg, who painted portraits in crayons. He died at Lübeck in 1788.

STEINBRÜCK, EDUARD, born at Magdeburg, May 3, 1802. He was intended for commerce, and in 1817 was sent to Bremen to learn business. There he remained until 1822, when, being called to Berlin for his term of military service, he resolved to embrace art as a profession, and took the opportunity of attending Wach's newly-opened atelier. In 1829 he went for a short time to Düsseldorf, and later to Rome. It was not until 1846 that he finally settled in Berlin. He had meantime become well known as a painter with much poetic feeling, and in 1841 had been elected member of the Berlin Academy. He now received many commissions, and became very popular, both in his native country and in America. He became professor at the Berlin Academy in 1854, but in 1876 retired to Landeck in Silesia, where he died February 3, 1882. The following are among his more important works :

STEINER, EDUARD, painter, born at Winterthur in 1811, studied at Munich under the influence of Cornelius, but made his reputation as a portraitist, chiefly in pastel. He also made many landscape drawings in pen-and-ink. He died in 1860.

STEINER, EMANUEL, painter, was born at Winterthur in 1778. He painted landscapes in oil and water-colour, and afterwards flower pictures in water-colour. He etched several plates. He died in 1831.

STEINER, JOHANN KONRAD, painter, born at Winterthur in 1757, studied in Geneva and Dresden. He afterwards went to Paris, and then travelled in Italy, where he drew much after Claude Lorraine. On his return home he devoted himself to Swiss landscapes in oil and water-colour, and etched a few plates. In 1796 he paid a second visit to Italy. He died in 1818. His wife ANNA BARBARA STEINER was also a painter.

STEINER, JOHANN NEPOMUK, painter, born at Iglau in Moravia in 1725, after gaining a reputation as a portrait painter, went to Italy, where he was influenced by Mengs. On his return he painted altar-pieces in Iglau and the neighbourhood. In 1755 he became court painter at Vienna, and painted some excellent portraits, among them those of Maria Theresa and Joseph II. He died in 1792.

STEINER, KASPAR, painter, born at Winterthur in 1734, was first manager in a silk warehouse at Bergamo, and then took to painting portraits, which are warm in colour, but careless in execution. He afterwards devoted himself to landscapes, and died at Bergamo in 1812.

STEINFELD, FRANZ, painter, born at Vienna in 1787, worked first as a sculptor at the Vienna Academy, and then took to landscape painting, in which, though self-taught, he displayed such talent that he was appointed painter to the court. In 1846 he became professor at the Academy in Vienna, and led his pupils to study nature and Ruysdael. In the Vienna Gallery he has a 'View of Heligoland,' 'The Deserted Mill,' and 'Dawn.' He also executed some etchings and lithographs. He died at Pisek, in Bohemia, in 1868.

STEINFELD, WILHELM, son and pupil of Franz Steinfeld, born at Vienna in 1816, was also a painter of landscapes. There is a mountain scene by him in the Belvedere Gallery at Vienna. He died at Ischl in 1854.

STEINFURTH, HERMANN, who was born at Hamburg in 1824, studied first with E. Sohn in Düsseldorf, and then in the Academy of that city; and subsequently visited Italy. He afterwards resided for some time in Düsseldorf, and won himself a name as an historic painter. He also made a series of pencil drawings in illustration of the Prometheus of Æschylus, and painted portraits. He died in his native city in 1880. Pictures:

The Entombment. 1844.

The Education of Jupiter. 1846. (Cologne Museum.)

Hylas carried away by the Nymphs. 1847.

The Resurrection. (In St. Nicholas, Hamburg.)

STEINHÄUSER, PAULINE, née FRANK, was the wife of the architect Karl Steinhäuser, and a painter of historical pictures. Her 'Esther before Ahasuerus' is in the Schloss Bellevue, at Berlin. She died in 1866.

STEINHEIL, LOUIS CHARLES AUGUSTE, painter, was born at Strasburg, June 26, 1814. He studied under Ducaisne and David d'Angers, and first became known as a painter of portraits and flower-pieces. Later he produced a number of romantic subjects, treated in imitation of the early German masters, in imitation of the early German masters. Upon his mural and glass paintings, however, his reputation chiefly rests. He exhibited frequently at the Salon from 1836 onwards, and was several times premiated. He was the brother-in-law of Meissonier, and his son and pupil, ADOLPHE CHARLES, is a young painter of repute in Paris. Steinheil died in 1885. The following are good examples of his works:

Amiens. Cathedral. Several figures of Saints.
Dijon. Museum. Cartoons for the 'Marriage of the Virgin.'

Dunkirk. Church of S. Eloi. A window painted with the 'Marriage of the Virgin.'

Limoges. Cathedral. Various pictures.
Nantes. Museum. The Mother.

Several wall-paintings and windows in the Sainte Chapelle in Paris, and a 'St. George and the Dragon' in the Chapel of St. George, Notre Dame.

STEINKOPF, GOTTLÖB FRIEDRICH VON, painter, born at Stuttgart in 1779, was the son and pupil of Johann Friedrich Steinkopf. He went to Vienna in 1799, where he transferred his attention from engraving to painting. From 1807-14 he was in Rome, and, under the influence of Koch, Schick, and Overbeck, painted ideal historical pictures. From 1814-21 he was in Vienna, and went thence to Stuttgart. In 1829 he was teacher at the Stuttgart Art School, in 1833 professor, and in 1845 head of the school. His 'Cleobis and Biton' is in the King of Würtemberg's collection, his 'Elysian Fields' in the Stuttgart Gallery. He died at Stuttgart in 1861.

STEINKOPF, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, painter, was born at Oppenheim in 1737, and went in 1755 as painter to the porcelain works at Ludwigsburg, in Würtemberg. He afterwards painted animal pictures in the style of Roos and Wouwerman, became in 1786 teacher of drawing at the Gymnasium at Stuttgart, and in 1801 court painter. He died at Stuttgart in 1825.

STEINLA, MORITZ. See MÜLLER, MORITZ.

STEINLE, JOHANN EDUARD, painter, born at Vienna, July 2, 1810, was the son of an engraver. He was at first placed with an engraver named

Kininger in Vienna, studying in the Academy at the same time. Finding that his real inclinations lay towards oil painting, he entered the atelier of Leopold Kupelwieser, who had lately returned from Rome, and under him became an ardent supporter of the lately-founded neo-German school of religious art. In 1828 he set out for Rome with introductions to the chiefs of the movement, Overbeck and Ph. Veit, by whom he was warmly received, and under their influence his art training was completed. He remained at Rome till 1834, when he returned to Vienna, and made a short stay in Frankfort. He was soon occupied with important works, one of the first being a commission from Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg to decorate the Castle chapel at Rheineck with frescoes illustrating the Beatitudes. In 1838 he spent some months in Munich, studying the technique of fresco painting under Cornelius, and shortly afterwards settled at Frankfort, where in 1850 he accepted a professorship at the Städels Institute. Steinle was a member of the Academies of Berlin, Munich, Hanau, and Vienna, and received a gold medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1854. In 1875 he undertook a series of decorative paintings for Strasburg Cathedral, and one of his latest commissions was a 'cycle' of religious and historic subjects for the cathedral at Mayence. In the Berlin National Gallery are the cartoons for his 'Last Judgment,' and a scene from 'As You Like It.' He died in 1886. Other works:

Virgin and Child. (Bridgewater Gallery.)

Groups of Angels. (Cologne Cathedral.)

The Judgment of Solomon. 1848. (Kaisersaal, Frankfurt.)

St. Peter's Sermon. (Riga.)

Paintings in the 'Egidienkirche' at Münster. 1857. Frescoes in the Wallraf Museum at Cologne, and in the 'Marienkirche' at Aix-la-Chapelle. 1860-1866.

Decoration of the Löwenstein Chapel at Heubach. 1867.

STEINMÜLLER, JOSEPH, born at Vienna in 1795, received his first instruction at the Academy of that city under Maurer, and began in 1818 as an engraver of portraits. His principal plates are the three which follow; they were engraved for the Austrian Art Union:

The Madonna in the Meadow; after Raphael.

The Virgin and Child; after Leonardo da Vinci.

A Madonna and Child, and two Saints; after Perugino.

Steinmüller also engraved several plates for the 'Vienna Gallery.' He died in 1841.

STELLA. See STERN, IGNAZ.

STELLA. A family of French painters and engravers, of Flemish origin. The following table shows their genealogy, and relation with the Bouzonnets, who also called themselves Stella:

Jean Stella 1625-1601.		Madeleine Stella Married to Etienne Bouzonnet.
Jacques 1596-1657.	François 1603-1647.
Antoine 1637-1682.	Antoinette 1641-1676.	Claudine 1637-1697.	Françoise 1638-1691.

STELLA, ANTOINE. See BOUZONNET.

STELLA, ANTOINETTE. See BOUZONNET.

STELLA, CLAUDINE. See BOUZONNET.

STELLA, FRANÇOIS, the elder, painter, son of Jean Stella, was born at Mechlin in 1565. In 1578 he accompanied a Jesuit friend to Rome, and there studied painting. On his return northwards he stopped at Lyons, and there married the daughter of a notary. He painted a large number of religious pictures in that city, among others a 'Descent from the Cross' for the Célestins, and an 'Entombment' for the church of St. Jean. He died at Lyons in 1605.

STELLA, FRANÇOIS, younger brother of Jacques Stella, born at Lyons in 1601, was instructed by his brother, whom he accompanied to Italy. He painted history, but never arrived at much eminence, and was very inferior to Jacques. There are some pictures by him in Paris churches, among them an altar-piece, representing the dead Christ with the Virgin Mary and St. John, at Les Augustins. He died in Paris in 1661.

STELLA, FRANÇOISE. See BOUZONNET.

STELLA, JACQUES, an eminent French painter, born at Lyons in 1596, was the son of François Stella. His father taught him the rudiments of design, but he was left an orphan when only nine years old. He had, however, at that early age, made such progress, that he continued his studies without another master. When he had reached his twentieth year he travelled in Italy, and passing through Florence, on his way to Rome, was employed by Cosmo de' Medici to assist in the preparations for the marriage of his son Ferdinand. He painted several pictures for the Grand Duke, who assigned him apartments in his palace, with a pension equal to that of Callot, who was at that time in the same service. After a residence of seven years at Florence, he proceeded to Rome in 1623. There he studied in the society of Nicholas Poussin, with whom he contracted an intimate acquaintance. Stella resided eleven years at Rome. In 1634 he returned to France, where his talents recommended him to Richelieu, by whose favour he was appointed painter to the king, with a pension, and was presented with the order of St. Michael. His principal works in Paris are a 'Baptism of Christ,' in the church of St. Germain-le-Vieux; an 'Annunciation,' in the chapel of the Nuns of the Assumption; and a 'Christ with the Woman of Samaria,' at the Carmelites. Stella was more successful in easel pictures than in large works. His composition is graceful, and his design correct; but his works as a whole are cold and lifeless. He died in Paris in 1657. The Louvre possesses two of his pictures, an 'Assumption of the Virgin,' on alabaster, and a 'Minerva and the Muses.' Stella left some etchings, among them the following:

The Descent from the Cross.

The Ceremony of Homage to the Grand Duke of Tuscany on St. John's Day. 1621.

A Madonna.

St. George.

Children dancing.

A great number of his decorative designs have been engraved by Edelinck, Claudine Bouzonnet (called Stella), the Poillys, Mellan, Paul Bosse, and others.

STELLA, JEAN, painter, the first of the family, was born at Antwerp in 1525. Nothing is known of his works. He died in 1601.

STELZER, JOHANN JAKOB, a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1720. He engraved some plates for the collection of prints from the antique marbles in the Dresden gallery, which was published in 1733.

STEMPSIUS. See SEMPELIUS.

STENBOCK, MAGNUS GRAF VON, a Swedish field-marshal, born at Stockholm in 1764. He painted some good portraits, and executed mechanical art work. He died at Copenhagen in 1717.

STENDARDO. See BLOEMEN, PIETER VAN.

STENGLIN, JOHANN, engraver, born at Augsburg in 1715, studied under Bodenehr, and engraved after Dinglinger, Groot, Haid, Klein, and De Meytens. In 1743 he received a summons to St. Petersburg, and engraved portraits of Russian Czars and members of the Royal Family. He died at St. Petersburg in 1770.

STENNETT, WILLIAM, amateur, was a merchant at Boston, in Lincolnshire, who practised, under the pseudonym of 'Delineator,' as an antiquarian draughtsman in the first part of the 18th century. His chief productions were drawings of Lincolnshire churches, some of which were engraved, the best known being those of Boston and Walpole churches. He died poor at Boston about 1762.

STENREE, (or STENREE,) by some called WILLEM, by others GEORG, was a nephew of Cornelis Poolemburg, by whom he was instructed, and whose manner he followed. His birth is placed at Utrecht in 1600, and his death in 1648, but on uncertain authority.

STENT, PETER, resided in London, and carried on a considerable business as a printseller from 1640 to 1662. It is believed that he occasionally engraved. A portrait of Andrew Willet, with six Latin verses, and marked with the initials P. S., is generally attributed to him.

STEPHAN, (STEPHANUS, or STEVENS,) JOHANNES, called CALCAR, from his birth-place in the Duchy of Cleves, was born in 1449. He worked for a time at Dordrecht, and in 1536 went to Venice, and became a pupil of Titian. He imitated his master with much success, and painted portraits that have been mistaken for works of Vecelli. Later he also imitated Raphael. He spent the greater part of his life in Italy, and at Naples became acquainted with Vasari, who speaks of him in terms of high praise, and states that he made the designs for the 'De humani corporis fabrica' of Vesalius. It is said that he also drew the portraits in the early editions of Vasari. He died at Naples about 1546. The following portraits are ascribed to him:

Berlin.	Museum.	Portrait of a Young Man.
Paris.	Louvre.	Ditto.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Man.

STEPHAN, MEISTER. See LOCHNER.

STEPHANI. See STEVENS, PIETER.

STEPHANOFF, FRANCIS PHILIP, was born in London in 1788. He was the son of Fileter Stephanoff, and painted popular pictures in oils and water-colours, such as 'The Poor Relation,' 'Reconciliation,' 'The Trial of Algernon Sidney.' He also made the drawings for Pyne's 'Royal Residences,' and a fine series of costume portraits for 'Garter's' work on the coronation of George IV. This series is now in the South Kensington Museum. Another excellent series was devoted to the 'Field of the Cloth of Gold.' His illustrations are to be found in a great many other books published in the first half of the present century. He died at West Hannam, in Gloucestershire, in 1860.

STEPHANOFF, N— FILETER, a Russian painter, who settled in London in the second half of the 18th century. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1778-81. He was by profession a portrait painter, but in this country was chiefly employed on decorations for ceilings, and scenery for a Circus in St. George's Fields. He committed suicide some time before 1790. His wife, GERTRUDE STE-

PHANOFF, was a flower-painter and teacher of drawing. She exhibited at the Academy in 1783 and 1805, and died at Brompton in 1806. Her daughter, M. G. STEPHANOFF, followed the same professions.

STERN, IGNAZ, (called STELLA,) painter, was born at Ingolstadt, Bavaria, about the year 1698. He went early in his life to Bologna, where he entered the school of Carlo Cignani. He painted for churches in Lombardy, and resided several years at Rome, where he was much employed both for public buildings and private collections. In the Basilica of St. John Lateran, there is an Assumption by him; he also painted some frescoes in the sacristy of S. Paolino. He also painted concerts, conversations, and bambocciate. He died at Rome in 1746.

STETTLER, WILHELM, was a native of Berne, and a scholar of Konrad Meyer at Zurich and of Joseph Werner at Paris. He accompanied the archæologist Charles Patin in his travels through Holland and Italy, and designed most of the plates in his publications on medals and antiquities. Stettler died in 1708.

STEBEN, KARL, painter, was born at Bauerbach, near Baden, in 1788. His father was an officer in the Russian army, and he received his first education at the Academy of St. Petersburg, and then went to Paris, where he studied under Gérard, Robert Lefèvre, and Prud'hon. In 1812 he exhibited for the first time. He soon made his mark, and was employed by the French Government and decorated with the cross of the Legion of Honour. Late in life he visited Russia, and painted seven scenes from the life of Christ for St. Isaac's cathedral. He died in Paris in 1856. Works:

Amiens.	Museum.	Peter the Great in a storm on Lake Ladoga. 1812.
Compiègne.	Palace.	Mercury and Argus. 1822.

Steben's wife, ELÉONORE, practised portrait painting in Paris.

STEUDTNER, MARK CHRISTOPH, born at Augsburg in 1698, engraved the 'Loves of the Gods,' and many other subjects on copper and wood, and in mezzotint. He was also much employed on designs for goldsmiths, in conjunction with his brother ESAJAS. He died in 1736.

STEAERTS, (STAEVAERTS, STEVERS, STEVENS,) ANTHONIE PALAMEDESZ, painter, was the son of Palamedes Stevaerts, a gem-engraver of Delft, and was born in that city in 1600. He painted portraits and conversations, and was particularly successful in the rendering of groups of small figures in interiors, at meals or musical entertainments. He frequently painted figures in the architectural pieces of his friend Dirk van Deelen. He was admitted into the Guild of S. Luke in 1621, and later filled the important office of Dean. He died in 1673. Works by him:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Young Girl.

STEAERTS, (STAEVAERTS, STEVERS, STEVENS,) PALAMEDES PALAMEDESZ, painter, was the brother of Anthonie Palamedesz. It is said that his father, having been summoned to the court of James I. of England, remained for some time in London, and that during this sojourn Palamedes was born, in 1607. On the return of the family to Delft he worked for a time in his brother Anthonie's studio, and also studied the works of Esaias van der Velde, devoting himself finally almost exclusively to the representation of battles, skirmishes, and hand-to-hand encounters in the manner which Esaias had brought into fashion. These he treated with extraordinary animation. He became a member of the Guild of S. Luke in 1627. He was deformed, and his early death in 1638, at the age of thirty, accounts for the rarity of his works.

STEVENS, ALFRED, the sculptor of the Wellington Monument in St. Paul's, was also a painter of remarkable powers. He was born towards the end of 1817, at Blandford, in Dorsetshire. At the age of eight he could make a recognizable portrait, and when he had reached more mature years, he was sent to Italy by a discriminating friend, the Hon. and Rev. Samuel Best. There he copied the early fresco painters of Florence, as well as Andrea del Sarto, and afterwards Titian, his copies from whom are extraordinarily fine. His motto through life, however, asserted the unity of art. In Italy he studied architecture and sculpture as well as painting, and on his return home it was in the two latter arts that he was chiefly active, and in those, together with ornamental design, he won his great name. In England his activity as a painter was confined to a few portraits—two of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Collman may be named—and to decorative designs. Of the latter the most notable are a design for the decoration of the British Museum Reading Room, at South Kensington; four prophets for the spandrels of the dome of St. Paul's, one of which has been carried out in mosaic; and a sketch for the decoration of the dome itself. The two latter belong to the cathedral authorities. Stevens died at Haverstock Hill, in 1875. For further particulars see 'Alfred Stevens,' by Walter Armstrong, 1881.

STEVENS, ANTHONIS, painter, a native of Mechlin, flourished in the second part of the 16th century, and was the head of a numerous family of artists. For his eldest son, see STEVENS, PIETER. His daughter, Joanna, married a painter, MAURICE MOREELSE, and had a son MAURICE, who was also a painter. His younger son, JAKOB STEVENS the elder, flourished at Mechlin at the beginning of the 17th century, and settled at Antwerp, but later practised again at Mechlin, where he married in 1614. He died before 1630, leaving, among other children, two sons, JAN and JAKOB (q. v.).

STEVENS, D., an English portrait painter of the 18th century. He painted a portrait of George I., which was engraved by J. Faber.

STEVENS, FRANCIS, water-colour painter, born in 1781. He appears to have been a pupil of P. S. Munn, and his name first appears at the Royal Academy in 1804. Joining the Water-Colour Society in 1806, his works were exhibited there for a few years, and he assisted in forming the Sketching Society. He then seems to have migrated to Norfolk, as in 1810 he belonged to the Norwich Society of Artists. His latter years were spent in Exeter, where he died suddenly from apoplexy in 1822 or 1823. There is a volume of etchings of English cottages and farm-houses, published by him in 1815. The following are two specimens of his work with the brush :

Devon and Exeter Institution. } Lustleigh Cleeve. 1820.
S. Kensington Museum. } A Devonshire Cottage. 1806.

STEVENS, JAKOB, the younger, painter, the son of Jakob Stevens, was born at Mechlin in 1593. He was his father's pupil, practised in his native town, and married there in 1620. Having lost his first wife by the plague, he married his pupil, Agnes Bisschops, in 1626. He died in 1662.

STEVENS, JAN, called DE CUYPERE, a Flemish painter of the 14th century. Details of his life and works are wanting. The town registers of Antwerp record that he was practising in that city in 1378. His father, ANDRIES STEVENS, also worked as a painter at Antwerp.

STEVENS, JAN, painter, the son of Jakob the elder, was born at Mechlin in 1595. He was a member of the Guild of S. Luke, practising in his native town and at Antwerp. He died about 1627.

STEVENS, JAN or JOHN, a Dutch landscape painter, settled in England in the early part of the 18th century. His works were chiefly small pictures in the manner of Van Diest; many are to be found in old English houses over doors and chimney-pieces. He died in London in 1722.

STEVENS, JOHANN, (or STEPHANUS,) a German engraver, who flourished at Strasburg about the year 1585. His plates are frequently little more than outlines, but they are from his own designs, and prove him to have been a man of some genius. He generally marked them with the initials I. and S. and the date.

STEVENS, JOHN, a Scotch subject and portrait painter, born at Ayr about 1793. He studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, where he obtained two silver medals in 1818. After practising portraiture for a time at Ayr, he went to Italy, where he spent the chief part of his artistic career. He was a foundation member of the Scottish Academy. Travelling in France, he met with a railway accident, which eventually brought about his death at Edinburgh in 1868. As specimens of his art may be cited :

Edinburgh. Nat. Gal. The Standard-Bearer.
 London. Nat. Port. Gal. Sir C. Bell.

STEVENS, JOHN, an English engraver of the 18th century, who practised in London, and engraved a series of views of English scenery in conjunction with C. Grignon.

STEVENS, PALAMÉDES. See STEVAERTS.

STEVENS, (or STEVENS,) PIETER, called STEPHANI, a painter, born at Mechlin in 1540, was the eldest son of Anthonis Stevens of Mechlin. He settled at Prague about 1590, and was appointed painter to the Emperor Rudolph II. In 1600 he is said to have returned to his native town, and to have painted four landscapes, which Gillis Sadeler engraved in 1620, under the name of 'The Four Seasons.' He was the uncle of Maurice Moreelse the younger, who studied under him at Prague. Stevens died at Prague after 1620. In the Vienna Gallery there is a 'Woody Landscape with a Stag and Hounds' by him, and a 'Fight with the Amalekites'; two small landscapes in the Brunswick Gallery are also attributed to him. It has been stated that several German painters called Stevens or Stephani, (a name adopted by Pieter Stevens at Prague,) were offshoots of his family. The following artists are among his known and supposed descendants :

PIETER STEVENS the younger, his son, painter and engraver, practised at Prague. ANTHONIS STEVENS the younger, called STEPHANI, his grandson, painter, settled at Prague in 1644, and died there in 1672. Anthonis Stevens was also known as Stevens of Steinfelds, and had a son a fresco-painter, who died at the beginning of the 18th century. One STEINFELS or Stevens, who worked in 1695—1698 at the convent of Waldsassen, in Bavaria, was probably of the family, as also a certain PAUL STEVENS, who practised at Prague in 1674.

STEVENS, (or STEVENS,) RICHARD, a Dutch painter, sculptor, and medallist, who came to England in the reign of Elizabeth, and designed and executed the monument to Radcliffe, Earl of Sussex, in Boreham Church, Suffolk. The Lumley family possesses some portraits by him, notably one of John, Lord Lumley, 1590, painted in the manner of Holbein. The curious portraits of Queen Elizabeth, in a gown embroidered with sea-monsters, and of Mary Queen of Scots, both at Hardwicke, have been ascribed to him. His reputation in England rests chiefly on his achievements as a medallist.

STEVENSON, THOMAS, an English landscape painter, and pupil of Aggas, practised towards the end of the 17th century. He made the designs for the Jubilee pageants of the Goldsmiths' Company, in the mayoralty of Sir Robert Vyner. He also painted portraits, two of which were engraved.

STEVEER, GUSTAV CURT, historical and genre painter, was born at Riga in 1823, and went in 1847 to the Berlin Academy, whence he was summoned in 1850 to Stockholm, where he painted portraits for the Court, and for Upsala University. In 1854 he went to Paris, and studied in the school of Couture. His chief works are: 'The Death of Gottschalk, the Vandal King,' 'Abishag and King David,' 'The Transfiguration,' 'The Visitation,' 'The Last Supper,' cartoons of the Four Evangelists for the windows of the Schröder Mausoleum in Hamburg, and cartoons for the windows of S. Paul's Church in Schwerin. From 1859 to 1865 he worked in Hamburg, but died at Düsseldorf in 1877.

STEVERS. See STEVAERTS.

STEWARTSON, THOMAS, was born at Kendal in 1781. He went to London, and became a pupil of Romney. He painted portraits with considerable success, and was appointed to the household of Queen Caroline. His portrait of Grote is in the National Portrait Gallery. He died in London in 1859.

STEWART, ANTHONY, born at Crieff, Perthshire, in 1773, was placed under Alexander Nasmyth in Edinburgh to study landscape. He made many sketches of Scotch scenery, but at an early period took to miniature, which, after some practice in Scotland, he adopted as his profession, and established himself in London. He painted the Princess Charlotte, and the first miniature ever done of the Princess Victoria. In the last fifteen years of his life he devoted himself entirely to painting children. He died in London in 1846.

STEWART, GILBERT. See STUART.

STEWART, JAMES, an English portrait painter, who practised in the middle and latter half of the 18th century. He was appointed Sergeant Painter to George III. in 1764, and worked for Boydell. There is a portrait of G. F. Cooke by him at the Garrick Club.

STEWART, JAMES, painter and engraver, was born at Edinburgh in 1791. He studied under Robert Scott and John Burnet, and at the Trustee's Academy, under Graham. His first plate was 'Tartar Brigands dividing their Spoil,' after Allan, on which followed 'The Murder of Archbishop Sharp,' and 'The Abdication of Mary Stuart,' after the same. At this time Stewart was teaching in Edinburgh. In 1830 he went to London, where he engraved Wilkie's 'Gentle Shepherd,' 'The Pedlar,' and 'The Penny Wedding.' In 1833 he emigrated and went to Algoa Bay. When the Caffre insurrection broke out his farm was destroyed, and he and his family had to fly to Somerset. He then fell back upon art, and by painting portraits and teaching he was enabled to buy another farm, on which he resided for many years. He died in the colony in 1863.

STEYAERT, ANTHONIE, painter, born at Bruges in 1766. He studied at the Academy of his native town, and afterwards settled at Ghent, where he became a Professor at the Academy, and died in 1863. In the church of S. Nicholas at Ghent there is a 'S. Anthony' by him.

STIELER, JOSEPH KARL, was born at Mayence in 1781. After working for a time at miniature painting, he studied oil under Fasel at Wurzburg, and then went to study under Füger, at Vienna. In 1805 he was painting in Poland, whence he proceeded to Paris to work under Gérard. Then he painted a 'S. Charles' for the Grand Duke of Frankfort, in which city he was in 1808. Between 1806 and 1816 he visited Frankfort, Milan, Rome, Munich, and Vienna. In 1820 he became painter to the Austrian court. Among others he painted portraits of Goethe, Tieck, Humboldt, Schelling, and Beethoven. He died at Munich in 1858.

STIEMART, FRANÇOIS, portrait painter, born at Douai in 1680, was keeper of the French king's pictures, and decorator to the Louvre. He was received into the Academy in 1720, his reception picture being a copy after Rigaud's portrait of Louis XIV. There is by him at Fontainebleau a picture of 'Children Playing with a Dog.'

STIFTER, ADALBERT, the poet, born at Oberplan, in Bohemia, in 1806, was also known as a painter of miniatures. An example of his work on copper is in Herr R. Fischer's collection in Vienna. He died at Linz in 1868.

STILKE, HERMANN, painter, born at Berlin in 1803, received his first instruction in the Academy there. In 1821 he went to Munich, and then accompanied Cornelius to Düsseldorf. After he had, with Stürmer, painted a 'Last Judgment' in the Assize Court in Coblenz, he devoted himself to the frescoes in the Court garden in Munich. From Munich he went to Italy, and on his return in 1833 joined Schadow at Düsseldorf. From 1842-46 he was engaged on frescoes in the Rittersaal at Stolzenfels, and in 1850 was painting frescoes in the Royal Schloss and in the new theatre, at Dessau. He died at Berlin in 1860. His 'Children of Edward IV. taken from their Mother' is in the National Gallery, Berlin. His wife, HERMINE, was a clever designer of ornamental borders, initials, &c., for editions 'de luxe.' She died at Berlin in 1869.

STIMMER, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, perhaps the younger brother of Tobias Stimmer, was born at Schaffhausen in 1552. He distinguished himself as an eminent engraver on wood, and executed cuts from the designs of Tobias. He marked his prints with a monogram composed of the letters C. S. T. M., thus, . But there is much dispute as to what should be included in his œuvre and as to whether another monogram, in which C. S. also occurs, should be ascribed to Stimmer or to Christoph Maurer. Besides the cuts in the Bible, published at Basle in 1586, we have the following prints by him:

A set of cuts for the New Testament, printed at Strasburg in 1588.

A set of portraits of German savants; published by Bernard Jobio, at Strasburg, in 1587

A set of Emblems entitled Icones Afabræ, published by B. Jobio at Strasburg, in 1591.

STIMMER, TOBIAS, was born at Schaffhausen the 7th of April, 1539. It is not known under whom he studied, but he acquired a reputation by decorating the façades of houses in his native town with historical subjects in fresco. He was invited to the court of the Margrave of Baden to paint a series of ancestral portraits. His frescoes have perished; but his ability appears in the woodcuts from his designs. Tobias Stimmer also engraved on wood himself, and with his brother, Johann Christoph Stimmer, executed the cuts for the Bible published at Basle in 1586, and 'Novæ Tobiaë Stimmeri sacrorum Bibliorum figuræ versibus Latinis et Germanicis expositæ,' which he had himself designed. Rubens declared he had studied these prints with attention, and recommended them to young artists. Among his other works may be named cuts for a 'Livy,' a 'Josephus,' cuts of animals for a 'Neues Jagdbuch,' 1590, and a series of satirical drawings directed against the Pope. Tobias Stimmer usually marked his prints with a monogram composed of a T. and an S., thus .

He died in 1592 (?).

STIRNBRANDT, FRANZ XAVER, was born about 1793. He began his career as a painter upon lacquer, and afterwards worked in Frankfort, ornamenting metal boxes. In 1813 he went to Stuttgart, and afterwards studied in Paris and in Rome. Returning to Stuttgart in 1825, he obtained a good practice as a portrait painter, and painted various members of the royal family. He died in 1880.

STÖBER, FRANZ, engraver, born at Vienna in 1795, son and pupil of Josef Stöber, studied at the Academy of Vienna under Maurer, where he gained several prizes. At first he worked with his father for books and almanacks, but in 1830 he engraved the portraits of the Emperor Francis and the Empress Caroline Augusta, Don Miguel, and Alexander von Humboldt. His plates are numerous; among them we may name:

- The Return of the Peasant; after Waldmüller. 1835.
- The Death of Zriny; after Krafft. 1836.
- The Spendthrift; after Dannhauser.
- The Convent Soup; after the same. 1839.
- The Opening of the Will; after the same. 1843.
- The Novel Reading; after the same. 1851.
- S. Catharine of Siena; after Rieder. 1846.
- Doice far Niente; after Ender. 1851.
- Madonna with the Child; after Sassoferrato.
- The Judgment of Solomon; after Führich. 1853.
- The Sibyls; after Raphael. 1854.

Besides these he has also left some etchings of Austrian celebrities after Dannhauser. He died in 1858.

STÖBER, FRANZ, painter, born at Vienna in 1760, studied with the Jesuits, and under the painter Christian Brand. He afterwards paid a visit to the Netherlands to study the Dutch masters. Returning to Vienna, he met with no success, and so settled at Spiers. He painted, among other things, the 'Falls of the Rhine at Schaffhausen,' and a view of the ruins of St. James's Church at Spiers. He died at Vienna in 1834.

STOCK, ANDREAS, resided chiefly at Antwerp, where (?) he was born about 1616. He is supposed to have been a pupil of Jakob de Gheyn the elder, from the similarity of their style. He engraved several of the plates for the 'Académie de L'Espée,' published at Antwerp by Thiébeau; which are inscribed Andreas Stokius Haga Comitit sculp. We have the following plates by him:

- Albrecht Dürer; Effigies Alberti Dureri. And. Stock. sc. 1629.
- Hans Holbein; Effigies Holbeini, Pictoris celeberrimi se ipse pinx. And. Stock, fecit.
- Lucas van Leyden; from a picture by himself.
- Peter Sneyers, Painter; after A. Vanduyck.
- The Sacrifice of Abraham; after Rubens.
- The Twelve Months in the Year; after Wildens.
- A set of eight Landscapes; after Paul Brill.

STOCK, DORIS, (DORA,) painter, born at Leipsic in 1761, was a daughter of JOHANN MICHAEL STOCK, an obscure engraver. She was a member of the Dresden Academy, and copied many of the principal works in the Dresden Gallery. She also gained some reputation by original works. She died in 1815.

STOCK, MARTIN, painter, was born at Hermandstadt in 1746. He was a pupil of Meyten, and settled at Pressburg, where he painted altar-pieces and portraits. He left a set of etchings of Gipsy musicians. He died in 1800, having for some time abandoned art for trade.

STOKADE. See HELT-STOKADE.

STOCKER, JÖRG, (STÖCKER,) painter of Ulm, who flourished from 1481 to 1525. To him are assigned a panel in the Neidhart Chapel at Ulm, and altar-pieces at Oberstaden and Dischingen.

STOCKMANN, JAKOB, painter, born at Hamburg about 1700, studied in Holland under Meyering and M. Carré. He painted landscapes with animals, and died at Hamburg in 1750.

STOCKVISCH. See STOKVIS.

STOER, LORENZ, a native of Augsburg, flourished about the year 1567. He is mentioned by Professor Christ as a painter and engraver on wood, and is said to have marked his cuts with the cipher S.

STOFFE, J. V. D., a painter of battle-pieces, chiefly skirmishes of cavalry, flourished about the year 1649. His pictures are not uncommon, though his history is not known. They are generally small, on panel, spirited in action, well-drawn, and smoothly finished. They are sometimes attributed to D. Stoop, or Esaïas Vandavelde. His pictures, when untouched, have his name, and sometimes the date.

STOKADE. See HELT-STOKADE.

STOKER, BARTHOLOMEW, portrait painter, was the son of an upholsterer in Dublin, and studied at the art schools in that town, working at the same time under his father. He became very successful as a portraitist in crayons. He died at Dublin in 1788.

STOKVIS, HENDRIK, (STOKVISCH,) painter, born at Loenen, in the province of Utrecht, in 1768, went when he was seventeen years of age to Amsterdam, to learn drawing and painting under J. C. Schultsz. He studied hard from nature, and painted landscapes with sheep, oxen, &c., often in Indian ink and pastel. He died in 1824. The Amsterdam Museum possesses a good example of his art: it is signed H. Stokvisch.

STOLKER, JAN, portrait painter, designer, and engraver in aquafortis and mezzotint, was born at Amsterdam in 1724, and studied portrait painting there under J. M. Quinkhardt, with whom he remained till he was twenty-three. He then removed to the Hague, where he lived nine years painting portraits and family groups; moving afterwards to Rotterdam, and there following the same branch of art. He also painted cabinet pictures. When about fifty he abandoned painting, and devoted himself to making copies in water-colours and Indian ink. He etched some plates after Rembrandt, F. Hals, Jan Steen, Schalcken, Adriaen Ostade, Brekelenkam, and others. He was also much employed on designs for hangings and other decorations. There is a portrait group by him in the Rotterdam Museum. He died at Rotterdam in 1786.

STOLTZHIUS (STOLZIUS). See STOSS.

STÖLZEL, CHRISTIAN ERNST, engraver, born at Dresden in 1792, was the son and pupil of Christian Friedrich Stölzel. He first copied the works of Goltzius, Preissler, Seifert, and Bervic, and then engraved a 'Hagar in the Wilderness,' after Baroccio, and several vignettes and small portraits. In 1822 he went on foot to Italy, where he painted landscapes, engraved a 'St. Catharine' and a 'St. John the Evangelist,' after Fra Angelico, and made a drawing of Raphael's 'Coronation of the Virgin,' which on his return home he engraved. He died in 1837.

STÖLZEL, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, engraver, born at Dresden in 1751, studied under Schenau and Canale. He engraved portraits, genre and historical pictures, and landscapes, and became chief engraver to and member of the Dresden Academy. Among his best works we may name:

- Portrait of Schenau; after Vogel.
- Christ on the Cross; after Schenau.
- The Magdalene; after Guido Reni.
- The Wise Man; after Schenau.
- March of a Regiment of Ural Cossacks; after K. A. Hess.

He died in 1815.

STOM, or STOOM, MATTHÆUS, was born in 1643, probably in Flanders, and practised principally in Italy. He painted landscapes and battle-pieces, and died at Verona in 1702. Five of his pictures are in the Dresden Gallery. Another painter of the same name painted an altar-piece now in the church of St. Cecilia, at Messina.

STOMME, —, a still-life painter, of whom there is no account, who appears to have been an imitator, if not a scholar, of Johan Davidisz De Heem. A signed picture by him is in the Museum at Brussels.

STONE, FRANK, A.R.A., an English painter, was born at Manchester, August 22, 1800. His father was a cotton-spinner, and brought his son up to his own business, but at the age of twenty-four the young man obtained leave to study art as a profession. He worked diligently in his new calling, and in 1831 came to London. His first works were in water-colour; distinguished chiefly by a pretty sentimentality, they caught the popular taste, and the artist rose quickly into public favour. In 1837 he was elected an Associate Exhibitor of the Water-Colour Society, and in the same year began to contribute to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy. His first essays in oil had a rapid success. His pictures were engraved, and became widely known. In 1841 he was awarded a premium of fifty guineas by the British Institution, and in 1843 he became a member of the Water-Colour Society, a distinction which he resigned in 1847. In 1851 he was chosen an associate of the Royal Academy, and his works began gradually to assume a higher character, his 'Gardener's Daughter' being a distinct advance in achievement. Some French subjects treated at this period showed similar improvement. His sudden death from heart disease took place in London, November 18, 1859. He was the father of Mr. Marcus Stone, R.A. The following are among his most popular works: 'The First Appeal,' 'The Last Appeal,' 'Checkmate,' 'Mated,' 'The Course of True Love never did run smooth,' and 'The Gardener's Daughter.'

STONE, HENRY, painter and sculptor, the son of Nicholas Stone, master mason to James I., was usually called Old Stone, to distinguish him from his younger brother, John. As a painter he is principally known by his excellent copies after Vandyck and some of the Italian masters. By his epitaph, which is preserved by Walpole, it appears that he passed several years in Holland, France, and Italy, and died in London in 1653. He was the last survivor of the family, and was buried in one grave with his father and brothers: the epitaph commencing, 'Four rare stones are gone, the father and three sons,' &c. A copy by him of Titian's 'Cornaro Family' is at Hampton Court. Many portraits ascribed to Vandyck are really copies by 'Old Stone.'

STONE, JOHN, was the brother of Henry Stone, and followed his father's profession of stone-cutter. He also copied the old masters. Thomas Cross is said to have taught him engraving: one of the plates for Dugdale's 'History of Warwickshire' is by him; he also published anonymously 'Euclidion,' a book on fortification, with small plates engraved by himself. He died soon after the Restoration.

STONE, WILLIAM OLIVER, an American painter, born at Derby, Connecticut, in 1830. He studied at New Haven, and settling in New York about 1858, became known as a successful painter of portraits, especially of women and children. He was made a member of the Academy of Design in 1859, and was an annual exhibitor until his death in 1875.

STOOM. See STOM.

STOOP, CORNELIJS, painter, born at Hamburg in 1606. Few details are known of him, but there is in the Dresden Gallery a 'Rocky Cave, with Figures,' ascribed to him.

STOOP, DIRCK, (THIERRY, RODERIGO,) a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at Utrecht about 1610. He was the son of a glass-painter, WILLEM JANSZ VAN DER STOOP, and painted cavalry engagements, hunting scenes, seaports, still-life pictures, and altar-pieces, which in his time were valued very highly. He lived for a time at Lisbon, where he became painter to the Court, and went with the Infanta Catharine to London. He returned to Utrecht in 1678, and died there in 1686. Walpole, misled by his use of the Portuguese equivalent, Roderigo, for his Christian name, Dirck or Thierry, and by the asserted existence of a brother, Pieter, makes three men of him (vol. ii. p. 137). Works by him are to be found in the Galleries of Dresden, Berlin, and Copenhagen, in the Cathedral at Halberstadt, &c. Of his etchings there are known, the plates for the first part of Ogilvy's translation of 'Æsop's Fables'; 'Twelve breeds of Horses,' published in 1651; a bird's-eye view of the Battle of Solebay, fought between the English and Dutch fleets on the 3rd and 4th of June, 1665, signed Ro. Stoop, f. London, in the cabinet of prints at Copenhagen, and believed to be unique. Another unique print in the same collection represents a panorama of the theatre of war, with a chart. Another rare print representing Oliver Cromwell dancing on the tight-rope, is ascribed to him. There is an impression in the British Museum. We may also name:

The Rape of Helen. (British Museum.)

A Skirmish of Cavalry. (Ditto.)

Portrait of Charles II.

Portrait of Catharine of Braganza, wife of Charles II., inscribed Catharina D. G. Magnæ Britanniæ, Franciæ et Hiberniæ Regina Filia Johanne III. Portug. &c.—Consecrat T. Stoop. On the left, below the inscription, Lisboa 1682. N. Munier f.

The Title. In a cartouche, is inscribed Al Illustrs. Lr. D. Catharina Rajnha da gran Bretanha D. V. C. R. Stoop 1660 Lix.; a general view of Lisbon, with sea and numerous vessels in front.

Seven views of Lisbon and vicinity; dedicated to Q. Catharine.

Eight large plates of Q. Catharine's procession from Portsmouth to Hampton Court on her arrival in England.

Impressions of five plates of Dutch battles, supposed to be by Stoop, are in the British Museum.

STOOP, JAN PIETER, is said to have been born in Holland in 1612, and to have painted landscapes and battle-pieces. He is thought to have been the brother of Dirck Stoop, and to have worked in England.

STOOPENDAAL, BASTIAAN, engraver, was a native of Holland, and flourished about the year 1710. In his best plates he appears to have imitated the style of Cornelius Visscher, though not always with success. We have, among others, the following prints by him:

Sixty Views in Holland, entitled Les Délices du Diemer Meer; engraved from his own designs.

A set of twenty-four Views near the Hague.

Four plates representing the Departure of King William from Holland for England, his Arrival, his Meeting the Parliament, and his Coronation; inscribed B. Stoopendaal, fec.

The Robbers; after Bamboccio; B. Stoopendaal, sc.

Attack on a Military Convoy; after the same.

A Lime-kiln; after the same.

The last three are fine copies from Visscher. Stoopendaal engraved the plates for Clarke's Cæsar, published in 1712.

STOOPENDAAL, DANIEL, a contemporary of Bastiaan Stoopendaal, etched several plates after his own drawings.

STOOTER, LEONARD, painter, was born at Leyden, and flourished in the second part of the 17th century. He settled at Antwerp, where he was received into the Guild of St. Luke. Teniers is said to have added the figures to a picture by him.

STOPPELAER, HERBERT, painter, was a native of Dublin, and came to London with Thomas Frye. He tried various means of making a living, and was by turns actor, painter, dramatic writer, and singer. He exhibited portraits with the Society of Arts in 1761-62, and designed some of the humorous subjects published by Bowles. He was associated with Charles Dibdin in the Patagonian Theatre, a puppet-show held over Exeter Change, for which Dibdin wrote the pieces, while Stoppelaer painted the scenery and worked the puppets. For a time he was employed as an actor by Rich, but finding that he could live by portrait painting, he seems to have abandoned his many other pursuits. He died in 1772. His brother, MICHAEL, also practised portrait painting. He painted a portrait of Joe Miller, in 1738, which has been engraved.

STORCK, ABRAHAM, (STORK,) painter, born at Amsterdam about 1630. His master is unknown, but his style is formed on that of Bakhuisen. His pictures usually represent views of the Y, or the Amstel, near Amsterdam, with a variety of shipping and boats, and a number of small figures, correctly drawn, and handled with spirit. His ships are well drawn, his colouring clear and transparent, and his skies and water light and floating. One of his best pictures represents the arrival of the Duke of Marlborough at Amsterdam, with a public procession of ships, barges, and yachts, decorated with flags and full of picturesque figures. Storck painted figures in the landscapes of Hobbema and Moucheron, and also etched a few plates. He died at Amsterdam in 1710 (?). There are four good examples of his art in the Amsterdam Museum, besides others at Rotterdam, Copenhagen, Dresden, and Brussels.

STORER, CHRISTOPH JOHANN, (STORRER,) was born at Constance in 1611. He travelled in Italy, and studied at Milan under Ereole Procaccini. After beginning well, Storer became a mannerist, and not unfrequently adopted gross ideas. He was, however, a good colourist. He was employed in decorating Milan for the solemn entry of Philip IV. and Maria of Austria. He etched several prints of sacred and profane subjects; these are sometimes signed Joan Christ. Storer, sometimes Giov. Christ. Storer. It is said that he returned to his own country, and died in his native city in 1671. Several of his pictures have been engraved.

STORER, HENRY SARGANT, draughtsman and engraver, was the son of James Storer, and worked jointly with him on many of his later undertakings. He lived for some years at Cambridge, but died in London, January 8, 1837.

STORER, JAMES, engraver, born at Cambridge in 1781, worked at drawing and engraving old English buildings and other antiquarian subjects. In the early part of his career he lived at Cambridge, but afterwards moved to London, where he spent the rest of his life. A list of his publications is appended. In many of these he was assisted by his son, Henry Sargant. He died in London in 1853.

STORK, ABRAHAM, or JAN, the younger, a marine and landscape painter of the 18th century. It is said that some pictures signed A. Stork are dated 1742. In the Rotterdam Gallery there is a picture of the Old Harbour, Rotterdam, by him.

STOSS, VEIT, the famous Nuremberg sculptor, was also an engraver. He was born in 1447. It has been supposed that he was a native of Cracow, but the greater probability seems to be that he was born in Germany, but married a wife from Cracow. Between 1472 and 1495 he was more or less at work in Cracow, but in the latter year he seems to have settled finally at Nuremberg. There he lived a more or less disreputable life, and died, blind, in the Schwabach hospital in 1542, aged ninety-five. The plates ascribed to him were formerly given to a mythical Stolzen, or Stolzins, while some writers, Christ among them, call him Franz Stoss. The notion that he was the master of Martin Schon-gauer is inconsistent with dates. Stoss variously signed his baptismal name Vit, Wyt, Eit, Fit, and Fyt, while to his plates, as well as to his works in sculpture, he attached the annexed monogram:

. His twelve plates are very rare; the best of them are, perhaps, the following:

The Raising of Lazarus.
The Virgin kissing the body of Christ at the foot of the Cross. ( British Museum. )
The Madonna and Child, standing. ( Do. )
The Madonna and Child, seated, in a room. ( Do. )
The Martyrdom of St. Catherine of Alexandria. ( Do. )
A Gothic Capital. ( Do. )

STOTHARD, CHARLES ALFRED, antiquarian draughtsman, painter, and illuminator, was the son of Thomas Stothard, and born in London in 1786. After receiving a liberal education, he became a student in the Royal Academy, where he showed great talent in drawing from the antique. His father being engaged to paint the staircase at Burrell House, he accompanied him thither from time to time, and made drawings of the antiquities of that locality. This awakened in him a predilection for a pursuit in which he became eminent, but which eventually cost him his life. In 1811 he exhibited a 'Murder of Richard II. at Pontefract Castle,' in which the portrait of the king was painted from his effigy in Westminster Abbey. His next undertaking was 'The Monumental Effigies of Great Britain,' selected from the cathedrals and churches, and etched throughout by himself with remarkable delicacy and fidelity. In 1816 he was deputed by the Society of Antiquaries to make drawings from the Bayeux Tapestries. While engaged on this work he visited the Abbey of Fontevraud, where he discovered the effigies of the Plantagenets, the continued existence of which had been doubted since the revolution. These were added to his work. His last undertaking was the illustration of 'Devonshire,' in Lysons's 'Magna Britannia.' For that purpose he began some tracings of the stained glass window in the church at Bere Ferrers, where, on May 27th, 1821, he slipped from the ladder on which he stood, and was killed on the spot. His wife, afterwards Mrs. Bray, published an account of their tour through Northern France, which was illustrated with twenty-one plates from designs by her husband.

STOTHARD, THOMAS, painter, was born in London (at the "Black Horse," in Long Acre) in 1755. His father, a publican, died when he was only five years old, and he was left to the care of some relations, who placed him in a school at Stretton, near Tadcaster, his father's birthplace, where he remained till he was of an age to be apprenticed. Having shown an inclination for drawing, by copying some of Houbraken's heads, his friends placed him with a designer of patterns for silks. The trade declining, and his master dying before the expiration of his term, he was left to his own resources. Having, however, minutely studied nature in the drawing of flowers and other ornaments, he at once struck out a profitable profession for himself by making drawings for the 'Town and Country Magazine.' This made him known, and he was soon employed on other publications, particularly Bell's edition of the British Poets, and Harrison's 'Novelist's Magazine.' These designs attracted the notice of Flaxman, and a friendship commenced between the two artists which was of advantage to both. Stothard then became a student of the Royal Academy, and in 1778 exhibited an 'Ajax defending the dead Body of Patroclus.' He was made an associate of the Royal Academy in 1785, an academicien in 1794, deputy librarian in 1810, and librarian in 1812. It is said that Stothard made upwards of five thousand designs for books, three thousand of which were used. Among the more important series and single designs may be enumerated those for Boydell's 'Shakespeare,' 'Rogers' Poems,' 'The Canterbury Pilgrims,' the 'Ceremony of the Dunmow Fitch,' and the 'Wellington Shield.' He painted the staircase at Burleigh House, and the ceiling of the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh. It is said that he gave the preference, before all his other works, to fifteen small pictures from Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress.' He furnished countless designs for goldsmiths, and the origin of many well-known pieces of English sculpture may be traced to him. About 1784 Stothard married, and in 1793 bought the house in Newmarket Street (No. 28), in which he spent the rest of his life. He died on the 27th of April, 1834, and was buried in Bunhill Fields. There are portraits of him by Harlowe, Jackson, and Wood, and a bust in marble by Baily. His biography has been written by Mrs. Bray. Works:

- London. National Gall. The Greek Vintage.
 " " Intemperance. (Sketch for the picture at Burleigh.)
 " " Fête Champêtre.
 " " The Canterbury Pilgrims.
 " " (And six others.)
 " S. Ken. Museum. Characters from Shakspeare.
 " " Twelfth Night.

 (And six others.)

STÖTTRUP, ANDREAS, portrait painter and engraver, born at Hamburg in 1754, studied from 1771-74 at the Academy at Copenhagen, and afterwards settled at Hamburg. He died in 1812. His son, CHRISTIAN GEORG, was also an engraver at Altona.

STÖVESANDT, FRIEDRICH ADOLPH, landscape painter, was born at Dantzig in 1808, and studied first in his native city, then at Berlin under Gropius, and afterwards at the Vienna Academy. He died at Dantzig in 1838.

STOW, JAMES, line-engraver, and the son of a labourer, was born near Maidstone about 1770. In his boyhood he showed such an aptitude for art, that some of the gentry in the neighbourhood raised a subscription and apprenticed him to Woollett. On the death of his master he was transferred to William Sharp, with whom he remained as assistant after his term of apprenticeship had expired. He was highly thought of in the early part of his career, and employed on many important works, but he seems to have been wanting in steadiness and application. He fell into dissipated habits, and on his death left a family in poverty. His most important works are:

- Eight plates for Boydell's 'Shakespeare.' 1795-1801.
 Twelve plates for Du Roveray's 'Homer.' 1806.
 Gainsborough's 'Boy at the Stile.'
 Plates for 'Londina Illustrata.' 1811-23.

STRAATEN, JAN JOSEPH IGNATIUS VAN, a painter of dead game and flowers, was born at Utrecht in 1766, and was a scholar of C. van Geelen. His pictures are in the style of J. Weenix, well composed and highly finished. In his landscapes he was assisted by his countryman, Swagers. He died in 1808. One BRUNO VAN STRAATEN, born at Utrecht in 1786, may have been of the same family. There is a picture by him in the Rotterdam Gallery.

STRAATEN, VAN, (or VERSTRAETEN,) LAMBERT, sometimes called DE LA RUE, was born at Haarlem in 1631. He was a painter of portraits and historical subjects, and also kept a school. He died in 1712. His son HENDRIK, born about 1665 at Haarlem, was a landscape painter, and became a member of the Guild of St. Luke in his native town in 1687. He came to England in 1690, and there practised with some success, painting landscape somewhat in the style of Ruysdael. (See Walpole, vol. ii. p. 235.)

STRACK, ANTON WILHELM, born at Hayna, in Hesse, in 1758, was the son of a baker, and grandson of Joseph Heinrich Tischbein. He studied under Johann Anton Tischbein, and became professor and court painter in Bückeburg. He painted a series of Westphalian landscapes, which were afterwards engraved.

STRACK, LUDWIG PHILIPP, painter, born at Hayna, in Hesse, in 1761, received his art education at Cassel. In 1783 the Duke of Oldenburg took him into his employment, but in 1786 he returned to Cassel, where he painted portraits and landscapes, becoming court painter to the Duke of Hesse. He died at Oldenburg in 1836.

STRADA, JACOPO, a Milanese draughtsman, who flourished about the middle of the 16th century, was chiefly employed in making designs for new coins and medals, and in drawing from old ones. The Libraries of Vienna and Gotha have many volumes of such drawings. He also drew a series of portraits of the emperors for a work published by his son.

STRADA, VESPASIANO, a native of Rome, but of Spanish parentage, learned the rudiments of the art from his father, an obscure painter. He worked chiefly in fresco in the churches and public buildings of Rome. He died at Rome, still young, in 1624. We have several etchings by Strada from his own compositions, which prove him to have been a man of considerable talent. He usually marked his plates with the initials V. S. F., or V. S. I. F., and sometimes VES. ST, I. FE. The following prints may be mentioned :

Christ shown to the Jews (or little Ecce Homo).
Christ crowned with Thorns (or great Ecce Homo).
The Holy Family, with St. John.
The Virgin, supported by two Angels.
The Marriage of St. Catherine.
The Virgin and Infant Christ.

STRADANUS, JOHANNES, or GIOVANNI DELLA STRADA. See VAN DER STRAET.

STRÆLY, EDUARD, was born at Düsseldorf in 1720. He came to London while still young, and adopted the English manner of miniature painting, and later visited Italy. At the time of the Emperor Paul's coronation he went to Moscow, and remained for some years in Russia. On the accession of Alexander he left St. Petersburg, and returned to London, settling finally in Vienna. His later works were chiefly portraits, but in Russia there are by him four scenes from the life of Peter the Great, painted on copper, and a 'Hebe feeding the Eagle.'

STRAMOT, NICHOLAS, a Flemish painter, practising at Antwerp about 1693. In the church of St. Gertrude, at Louvain, there is a large picture by him containing numerous figures, probably portraits, and in the Antwerp Museum a portrait of Frans van Steerbeek.

STRANGE, HENRY LE. See LE STRANGE, H.

STRANGE, SIR ROBERT, engraver, born in Pomona, Orkney, in 1721, was descended from a cadet of the Strange family of Balcasky, Fife, who settled in Orkney at the time of the Reformation. He was originally intended for the law, but some of his drawings having been shown to one Cowper, a drawing-master at Edinburgh, were so highly approved by him, that the young man was placed under his tuition. He had made considerable progress under Cowper's instruction, when civil war broke out on the arrival of the young Chevalier. He joined the Jacobites, and was named engraver to the Prince, whose portrait, with those of many of his officers, he drew in pencil and engraved. After Culloden, where he is said to have fought in the ranks, he escaped to France. As soon as peace was restored, Strange came to London, but soon afterwards revisited Paris. On his way he made some stay at Rouen, where he frequented the Academy, and obtained a prize for design, though his competitors were numerous. On his arrival in Paris he became a pupil of Le Bas. In 1751 he returned to London, at a period when historical engraving had made little progress in England, and became the father of that arduous and difficult branch of the art in this country. In 1761 Strange went to Italy, where he made drawings from many then celebrated pictures, some of which he engraved abroad, others after his return to England. In the course of his tour he was elected a member of the academies of Rome, Florence, Bologna, Parma, and Paris. In 1787 he received the honour of knighthood. He died in London in 1792. Sir Robert Strange engraved about eighty plates. His style shows a combination of purity, breadth, and vigour which has scarcely been equalled. In colour, however, his prints are somewhat deficient. The following are among the best :

Charles I.; after Vandyck. 1770.
Charles I.; after the same. 1782.
Henrietta Maria, Queen of Charles I., with the Prince of Wales and Duke of York; after the same. 1784.

William Hamilton, of Bangor, a Poet. 1760. In his 'Poems.'

Robert Leighton, Archbishop of Glasgow. 1758. In a selection from his works.

Archibald Pitcairn, Physician and Poet; after Medina.

Strange published 'A Descriptive Catalogue of a Collection of Pictures, and of thirty-two Drawings, collected by him in Italy.' Also 'An Inquiry into the Rise and Establishment of the Royal Academy of Arts; to which is prefixed a letter to the Earl of Bute.' The 'Memoirs of Sir Robert Strange and of Andrew Lumisden' were published in 1855. Lumisden was the brother of Strange's wife, who came of an old Jacobite family.

STRASSBERGER, CHRISTOPH GOTTHELF, painter and engraver, was born at Frauenstein, in the mountains of Saxony, in 1770, and destined by his parents for the Church. With this view he entered the University of Leipsic, but left it for the art school under Oeser. He painted portraits in crayons and on porcelain, and engraved a few plates. From 1815 onwards was chiefly engaged in teaching. He died in 1841.

STRASSBERGER, ERNST WILHELM, painter, the son of Christ. G. Strassberger, was born at Leipsic in 1796. He studied first under his father, and at the Leipsic Academy under Berggold, Schnorr, and Siegel. He first exhibited in 1814, but in 1815 went to Dresden, where he studied for a time at the Academy, and in 1823 he was engaged at the Meissen china factory. In 1842 he returned to his native city, and employed himself chiefly in painting incidents in the battle of Leipsic, of which he had been an eye-witness. He also worked as a scene-painter, to which calling he brought up his son. He died at Leipsic, September 11th, 1866.

STRASTER, FRAY GERONIMO, a Franciscan, who resided at the convent of his order in Valladolid, in 1613, where he engraved, with considerable ability, the plates to a work entitled 'Historia del Monte Celia de nuestra Senora de la Salceda,' written by D. Fr. Pedro Gonzalez de Mendoza, archbishop of Granada.

STRATEN. See VAN DER STRATEN.

STRAUBE, A., painter, born about the middle of the 17th century in Hamburg, painted landscapes with animals and figures in the style of Pynaker.

STRAUCH, GEORG, painter, born at Nuremberg in 1613. In the Gallery at Vienna there is an 'Immaculate Conception' by him, and in the Gallery of the Patriotic Union at Prague two portraits. He died in 1675.

STRAUCH, LORENZ, born at Nuremberg in 1554, was a skilful portrait and architectural painter, and also painted on glass. Bartsch, P. G. tom. ix., describes an etching by him, a 'View of the Market-place at Nuremberg,' with the date 1599, as the only one known to him. Nagler, however, gives a list of twenty-two, some of which are signed with his name in full, and dated as late as 1614; others with the monogram LS. Strauch died about 1630.

STRAVIUS, a painter of Hamburg in the 17th century, who painted life-size animals and hunting landscapes.

STREATER, ROBERT, an English painter, born in London in 1624, was a scholar of Du Moulin. He painted history, portraits, landscape, architecture, and still-life. At the Restoration he was appointed serjeant-painter to Charles II. His principal works were: the theatre ceiling at Oxford; some ceilings at Whitehall, which have perished; the 'Battle of the Giants,' at Marden Park, Surrey; and the pictures of Moses and Aaron, in the church of St. Michael, Cornhill. There is a landscape by him in the Cartwright collection at Dulwich. He died in 1680. He left a few indifferent etchings.

STRECKER, WILHELM, painter, born in 1795, painted history and scenes from poets. He was Inspector of the Gallery at Stuttgart, where he died in 1857.

STREEK, HENDRIK VAN, son of Jurriaan van Streek, born at Amsterdam in 1659, was a scholar of his father, Emanuel de Witte. His pictures generally represent the interiors of churches and palaces, and are frequently embellished with figures by some other artist. The Hermitage at St. Petersburg has an 'Interior of a Church' by him. He died in 1713.

STREEK, JURRIAAN VAN, born at Amsterdam in 1632, occasionally painted portraits, but is better known as a painter of still life. A skull, a ball of soap, and a lamp are frequent objects in his compositions. He signed his pictures with J V S in a monogram. He died in 1678.

STRÉSOR, ANNE MARIE RENÉE, the daughter of Henri Strésor, was born in Paris in 1651. A miniature painter of some reputation, she was received by the Academy about 1676, but in 1687 resolved to become a nun. The convent of the Visitation at Paris agreed to receive her without a dowry, on condition that she learnt to paint in oils, for the benefit of the sisterhood. This she did, and produced a great number of works after her admission. She died in 1713.

STRÉSOR, HENRI, a portrait painter of the 17th century, mentioned by Marolles. He was a German by birth, but settled in Paris and embraced the Roman Catholic faith. He painted portraits of Louis XIV. and many persons of distinction. He died about 1672.

STRETES, GUILLIM, was painter to Edward VI. in 1551. Strype records that the King paid "fifty marks for recompense of three great tables made by the said Guillim, whereof two were the pictures of His Highness sent to Sir Thomas Hoby and Sir John Mason (ambassadors abroad); the third a picture of the late Earl of Surrey, attainted, and by the Council's commandant fetched from the said Guillim's house." The last-named picture was discovered by Horace Walpole to be identical with one in his father's collection, which Sir Robert bought at the sale of the Arundel collection at Stafford House, in 1720, and subsequently presented to the Duke of Norfolk. The picture is now at Arundel Castle. It is dated 1547. A half-length at Knole is a copy from it. An excellent portrait of Edward VI., by Stretes, was formerly at Hamilton Palace, where it was called a Holbein.

STRIEBEL, FRANZ XAVER, painter, born at Mindelheim in 1822, studied at the Munich Academy, and painted first history, and afterwards genre pictures of a humorous kind. He died at Munich in 1871.

STRIGEL, BERNHARD, painter, was born in 1460 or 1461, at Memmingen. After working for a time at Memmingen, he moved first to Augsburg, and afterwards to Vienna, where he settled finally about 1517. He was a protégé of the Emperor Maximilian, and seems to have had a monopoly of painting his portraits. Herr Bode, to whom we owe our knowledge of Strigel, identified him with a painter first discriminated by A. Woltmann, and called by him the 'Master of the Hirscher Collection.' Strigel seems to have been much influenced by Zeitblom. He died at Memmingen in 1528. Works:

Berlin.	Museum.	SS. M. Magdalen and John the Baptist.
"	"	SS. Lawrence and Catharine.
"	"	SS. Vitus and Margaret.

STRIJ, ABRAHAM VAN, a painter of portraits, landscapes and cattle, and familiar subjects, was born at Dordrecht the 31st of December, 1753. He studied under his father, a decorator, and at first painted fruit and flowers, but was obliged to assist his father in historical subjects, landscapes, and feigned bas-reliefs. He afterwards turned to the painting of portraits, landscapes, and cattle, in the manner of Cuypp, and the interiors of shops and kitchens. In such subjects he arrived at much excellence, especially in chiaroscuro. In 1774 he founded the 'Pictura' Society of Dordrecht, and was its first president. He died at Dordrecht the 7th of March, 1826. Works:

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	The Drawing Lesson.
"	"	The Housekeeper.
"	"	The Scullery-maid.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	Two pictures.

STRIJ, JAKOB VAN, landscape and cattle painter and brother of Abraham van Strij, was born at Dordrecht the 2nd of October, 1756. He studied at home, under his father, and at Antwerp, under Andrew Lens, and also at the Antwerp Academy. Though a sincere student of nature, he had a great predilection for copying and imitating the works of other masters. Cuypp, Hobbema, and Paul Potter were the models he most affected, particularly Cuypp, and many of his imitations of that master have passed as originals. Some of his 'Hobbemas' are also masterly; but they are not so common as his 'Cuypps.' He was a corresponding member of the Royal Institute of the Netherlands, and is eulogized by contemporary writers for his general knowledge. He died at Dordrecht, February 4th, 1815. Works:

Amsterdam. R. Museum. Four landscapes.

STRINGA, FERDINANDO, engraved some of the plates for the 'Antiquities of Herculaneum,' published at Naples in 1750.

STRINGA, FRANCESCO, painter, born at Modena in 1635 (?), was a follower of Lodovico Lana. He also studied Guercino, and the best pictures in the celebrated Galleria Estense, of which he was director. He painted several historical subjects for the churches and the ducal palace at Modena, and some of his works are to be found in Venice. He died at Modena in 1709. He left some etchings; among them:

The Disciples placing Christ in the Sepulchre.
Portrait of Francesco II., Duke of Modena.
St. John with the Cross.

STRINGER, DANIEL, portrait painter, was a student of the Royal Academy about 1770; his portrait heads and comic sketches were good, but he lacked application, and seems gradually to have abandoned art.

STRINGER, E., topographical draughtsman, practised towards the end of the 18th century. He was a member of the Liverpool Academy, where many of his works were exhibited. Some are engraved in the 'Gentleman's Magazine' of 1785.

STRIXNER, JOHANN NEPOMUK, draughtsman and lithographer, born at Alten-Oetting in 1782. He studied drawing at Wasserburg under the sculptor Eichhorn, and in 1797 went to Munich, where he worked under Professor Mitterer, and also learnt engraving. In 1809 he made his first essay in lithography. His best works of that class are: a series of lithographs after Dürer's designs for 'The Prayer-Book of Kaiser Max'; some lithographs for the collections of the Boisserées, and for works published by the Munich Gallery authorities.

STROBERLE, JOÃO GLAMMA, painter, born at Lisbon in 1708, went as a court pensioner to Rome, where he studied in the Academy of St. Luke, under Marco Benefial, and was principally employed in copying Raphael. After spending two years in Rome he returned to Lisbon, where he was engaged at the theatre, and worked for Bishop J. Maria da Fonseca e Evora. In 1751, on the death of his patron, he went to London, but in 1755 returned to Lisbon, whence after the earthquake he migrated to Oporto, where he died in 1792. His chief works are: 'The Last Supper' in S. Nicolão; altar-pieces in S. João-Novo and Senhora da Victoria, Lisbon, and in the cathedral of Braga.

STROEHLING, P. E., a Russian painter, who was educated at the expense of the Czar, and finished his studies in Italy. He came to England about 1804, and practised with some success as a portrait painter in oils and in miniature. He exhibited occasional works at the Academy from 1803 to 1826. A portrait of the Duchess of York by him is at Buckingham Palace.

STROHMAYER, HANS, a native of Prague, who flourished in the 16th century, was first in the service of the Arch-Duke Ernst of Austria, and became in 1583 court painter to the Emperor Rudolph II. He etched many plates, among them a 'Venus and Cupid,' dated 1593.

STROZZI, BERNARDO, called IL CAPPUCINO GENOVESE, and sometimes IL PRETE GENOVESE, was born at Genoa in 1581, and was a pupil of Pietro Sorri. At an early period of his life he became a monk of the order of St. Francis. This retirement did not, however, lead him to abandon his pursuits as an artist, and he distinguished himself as a reputable painter of history. Strozzi left the cloister, when a priest, to contribute to the support of an aged mother and a sister; but the one dying and the other marrying, he refused to return to his order; and being forcibly recalled and sentenced to three years' imprisonment, he contrived to make his escape to Venice, where he passed the remainder of his days as a secular priest. He there painted portraits, in which walk of art he was superior to his contemporaries, and in all his larger compositions he painted the figures from life. Of his frescoes at Genoa, the most important is a Paradise, in the church of S. Domenico, a copious composition, with a force approaching that of oil. At Novi and Voltri are several altar-pieces by him, and in the Palazzo Brignole is an 'Incredulity of St. Thomas.' He was more occupied for private collections and galleries than for the churches. Strozzi died at Venice in 1641. Among his works we may also name:

Genoa.	Pal. Durazzo.	Portrait of a Bishop.
"	Pal. Balbi.	Joseph in Prison.
"	"	St. John the Baptist.
Paris.	Louvre.	Virgin and Child.
"	"	St. Anthony of Padua with the Child Jesus.
Venice.	S. Benedetto.	St. Sebastian.
"	Accademia.	St. Jerome.

STROZZI, ZANOBI DI BENEDETTO, painter, born at Florence about 1412, was a pupil of Fra Angelico. He was of noble birth, and painted as an amateur. He died December 6, 1468. There is a 'St. Lawrence' by him in the Uffizi.

STRUDEL VON STRUDELSDORF, PIETER, Baron, was born at Cles, in the Tyrol, in 1648, and studied at Venice under Carlo Lotti, under whose direction he became a reputable painter of history. On leaving that master, his talents recommended him to the Emperor Leopold, who invited him to his court, appointed him one of his painters, and conferred on him the dignity of a baron. He was the first Director of the Academy at Vienna. He died at Vienna in 1717. Pictures by him are to be found at Vienna, at Cassel, and at Düsseldorf. Strudel was also a sculptor.

STRUETT, JOHANN JAKOB, painter and etcher, was born at Weisenthal, near Basle, in 1773. He has left some views near Salzburg, and some good aquatints. He died in 1820.

STRUTT, JACOB GEORGE, an English landscape painter, born about the beginning of the 19th century. His works appeared at the Royal Academy from 1822 to 1852. Soon after 1830, he settled at Lausanne, and thence migrated to Rome, not returning to England till 1851. There is a landscape by him at Woburn Abbey. He used the etching needle, and published two volumes of etchings: 'Sylva Britannica' (1825), and 'Deliciæ Sylvarum' (1828).

STRUTT, JOSEPH, an English engraver, and writer on art, born about the year 1749, was the son of a miller. He engraved a variety of plates in the crayon and dotted manner, which are executed with great neatness and delicacy. We are chiefly indebted to him, however, for his 'Biographical Dictionary of Engravers,' with plates engraved by himself. He also published the 'Antiquities of England,' also with his own plates; and 'Horda Angel-cynnian, or the Manners and Customs of England from the time of the Saxons;' 'Chronicles of England;' 'Regal and Ecclesiastical Antiquities of England;' 'Dresses and Habits of the People of England;' 'Sports and Pastimes.' He also left an unfinished romance in manuscript, entitled 'Queen-Hoo-Hall,' which Sir Walter Scott, in 1808, endeavoured to complete. Strutt exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1779 to 1784. He died in London in 1802. Among others, we have the following plates by him:

The Birth of Venus. 1779.

Pandora presenting the fatal Box to Epimetheus. 1779. Candaules betraying his Queen to his favourite Gyges; after Le Sueur. 1787.

Twelve Illustrations for the 'Pilgrim's Progress'; after T. Stothard.

Venus in the Island of Cyprus.

Allegory of America; after R. E. Pine.

STUART, GILBERT, an Anglo-American painter of great talent, was born in the State of Rhode Island in the year 1754. Soon after reaching manhood he came to England, and was introduced to Benjamin West, with whom he worked for some time. He showed great ability, and some portraits that he exhibited brought him into public notice. He rose into eminence, and his claims were acknowledged even during the life of Sir Joshua Reynolds. His reputation as a portrait painter introduced him to a wide acquaintance among the higher classes of society, and he was on the road to fame when he left England. He returned to America in 1793, and resided chiefly in Philadelphia and Washington, in the practice of his profession, till about the year 1805, when he removed to Boston, where he remained to the time of his death. During the last ten years of his life he had to struggle with many infirmities; yet such was the vigour of his mind, that it seemed to triumph over the decays of nature, and to give to some of his last productions all the truth and splendour of his prime. While in England he painted the portraits of Sir Joshua Reynolds, Benjamin West, W. Woollett, Alderman Boydell, John Kemble, Dr. Fothergill, and many persons of less note. But his best work in this country is a full-length of a Mr. Grant, skating in St. James's Park. It is in the collection of Lord Charles Pelham Clinton. Of his American portraits, that of Washington is the chef d'œuvre. He painted the President several times; once for the late Marquis of Lansdowne; this was engraved by James Heath. Stuart died at Boston in 1828. Several of the portraits mentioned above are in the National Portrait Gallery.

STUBBS, GEORGE, painter of animals, born at Liverpool in 1724, particularly excelled in the anatomy of the horse, and was much employed in painting the portraits of the most celebrated racers of his time, which he not only designed with correctness, but painted with a very remarkable command of technique. That he could occasionally take a higher flight he proved by a 'Phaeton with the Horses of the Sun,' and by some admirable pictures of tigers. At the age of thirty Stubbs visited Rome. In 1766 he published a work entitled 'The Anatomy of the Horse,' with plates etched by himself, after his own designs. He etched and scraped in mezzotint several good plates of animals from pictures painted by himself. Other pictures by him were engraved by Woollett, Earlom, Green, Hodges, &c. Stubbs was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1780, and an Academician in 1781. The latter election, however, he refused to accept. He died in London in 1806.

STUBBS, GEORGE TOWNLEY, son of George Stubbs, born in 1756, died in 1815, engraved several of his father's pictures of animals, and a few plates after others.

STUBLEY, P., portrait painter, practised in London in the first part of the 18th century. There is a plate after his portrait of Peter Monamy, the marine painter, and several other of his portraits were engraved by J. Faber.

STUHR, JOHANN GEORG, painter, was born at Hamburg about 1640. He painted landscapes, sea pieces, and harbour views in the style of Storck and Lingelbach, poultry in the style of Hondekoeter, and a few historical subjects. In the Schloss at Berlin there is a 'Sacrifice of Iphigenia' by this artist, and in the Cassel Gallery a 'Harbour Scene.'

STUMP, JOHN S., miniature painter, was a student of the Academy, and was a constant contributor to the London exhibitions from about 1802 to 1849. His miniatures were highly esteemed for their breadth of treatment and fine tone. He painted also a few portraits in oil, and some Swiss landscapes, and was a member of the Sketching Society. He died in 1863.

STÜNTZ. See FREYBERG, ELEKTRINE.

STUNTZ, JOHANN BAPTIST, lithographer and draughtsman, was born at Arlesheim, near Basle, in 1753. He painted landscapes in water-colour, and published, jointly with J. Hartmann, a series of Swiss views. In 1802 he settled at Strasburg, where he carried on business as an art dealer, and finally removed to Munich, where he devoted himself to lithography, and was associated with others in the issue of reproductions from Dürer. He died in 1836.

STUREL, MARIE OCTAVIE, (née PAIGNÉE), painter, was born at Metz in 1819. She painted flowers and fruit, chiefly in pastel. She died at Metz in 1854.

STURM, FERDINAND. See STURMIO, HERNANDO.

STURM, JACQUES, painter, was born at Luxemburg in 1808. He was a pupil of J. B. Fresez, and worked for some time at a lithographic establishment at Brussels. In 1841 he went to Paris, and afterwards visited Italy, where he died in 1844.

STÜRMER, JOHANN HEINRICH, painter, born at Kirchberg, in Hohenlohe, in 1774, studied at Oehringen, at Augsburg, and at Göttingen, and settled eventually at Berlin, where he became a member of the Academy. He painted landscapes, historical pictures, and military scenes. He died at Berlin in 1855.

STÜRMER, KARL, painter, born at Berlin in 1803, was the son and pupil of Johann Heinrich Stürmer. He studied at Düsseldorf under Cornelius, and devoted himself chiefly to fresco painting. His first work of importance was a fresco in the Schloss, Helltorf, near Düsseldorf, 'The Reconciliation between Barbarossa and Pope Alexander.' He accompanied Cornelius to Munich, and was employed upon the frescoes in the arcades of the 'Hofgarten,' and again, in 1842, went with the master to Berlin, and painted several frescoes from Schinkel's designs in the portico of the Berlin Museum. He further painted two figures of prophets for the Schloss Chapel, and numerous easel pictures, battle-pieces, landscapes, and genre pictures. He died in March, 1881.

STURMIO, HERNANDO, a Dutchman, born at Ziricksee, resided at Seville about the middle of the 16th century, and painted the altar of the chapel of the Evangelists in the cathedral there, in several compartments. One of these compartments is inscribed, Hernandus Sturmius Ziriccensis faciebat, 1555.

STURRINI, MARCO, an Italian painter, who is known only by the existence, in the Uffizi at Florence, of a 'Penitent Magdalene' with this inscription: Opus Marci Sturrini, 1654.

STURT, JOHN, born in London the 6th of April, 1658, and a pupil of Robert White, was an excellent engraver of letters. His principal work is his Book of Common Prayer, published in 1717, which was engraved on silver plates. At the top of every page there is a small historical vignette. He died in 1730.

STUVEN, ERNST VAN, born at Hamburg in 1657, was the pupil of an obscure painter, named Hins. In 1675 he went to Amsterdam, where he studied under Jan Voorhout, a reputable painter of history and portraits. Finding that the pictures of flowers and fruit by Abraham Mignon were at that time in great favour, and having himself an inclination for that branch of the art, he became his disciple, and won a respectable place in the same genre. He was a man of violent character, and was more than once in prison. He died in 1712.

SUARDI, BARTOLOMEO, called BRAMANTINO, and in the historical records of his time, Bramantino de' Suardis, was born about 1450. He was the pupil successively of Foppa and Bramante, and followed the latter to Rome in the early part of the 16th century. There in 1508 he executed a series of frescoes in the Stanze, by orders of Julius II., all of which were afterwards destroyed to make way for the work of Raphael. Of his early paintings, there is in the Louvre a 'Circumcision' dated 1491; and in the Municipio at Milan is a 'Crucifixion' of the same date, though now much injured through repainting. At the church of San Sepolero, Milan, is a fresco called the 'Christ of Pity,' that was painted soon after his return from Rome. In the library of the Ambrosiana, Milan, can be seen a sketch-book containing architectural and other designs, which were probably made during his visits to Rome and Florence, which occurred previously to 1513. In that year he painted for the Cistercians at Rome a 'Pietà,' which had been contracted for by the brethren of the monastery of Chiaravalle, near Milan; it is now lost. The picture formerly ascribed to Bramantino in the National Gallery, is now restored to his master, Foppa. He was in Milan in 1523, when it was besieged by the French, and so distinguished himself in its defence, that in 1525 he received from the Duke Francesco Maria a patent as architect and engineer. From that date until 1536, when he probably died, he continued to execute both frescoes and paintings, among which we may name:

Locarno.	Madonna del Sasso.	Flight into Egypt. ( Signed. )
Milan.	S. Sepolero.	Pietà with Figures.
"	S. Sebastiano.	Martyrdom of St. Sebastian.
"	Municipio.	Crucifixion.
"	Breva.	Virgin, Child, and Angels.
"	"	St. Martin dividing his Cloak.
"	Casa Melzi.	The Virgin, St. Michael, St. Ambrose.
Paris.	Louvre.	The Circumcision. 1491.
		The Adoration of the Magi. ( Sir H. Layard )

SUAU, JEAN, painter, born at Toulouse in 1758, was a pupil of Rivalz, and gained the first prize for painting at the Toulouse Academy. He afterwards became professor, fellow of the Academy and director of the Museum. He died at Toulouse in 1836.

SUAU, PIERRE THÉODORE, painter, the son of Jean Suau, was born at Toulouse. He studied with his father and with David, and entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1811. He painted chiefly religious subjects, and many of his works are to be found in the churches of Toulouse and other towns in the south of France. He died in 1856.

SUAVIUS, LAMBERT, an engraver of the 16th century, who practised at Liège. He was the pupil and brother-in-law of Lambert Lombard, with whom he has been often confounded. He flourished between 1540 and 1559. He signed his plates L. S. The most important is a 'Raising of Lazarus,' after Lambert Lombard.

SUBLEYRAS, PIERRE, (HUBERT,) a French painter, born at Usèz, in Languedoc, in 1699, was the son and pupil of Mathieu Subleyras, an artist of little celebrity. When he was fifteen years of age he was placed under Antoine Rivalz, of Toulouse. On leaving that master in 1724, he went to Paris, and obtained the first prize at the Academy, for a 'Raising the Brazen Serpent.' He finished his studies in Rome, and established himself there for the remainder of his life. His altar-piece for St. Peter's, which he lived to see executed in mosaic, represents St. Basil celebrating Mass before the Emperor Valens. It has been engraved by Domenico Cunego. He also painted portraits. He married Maria Tibaldi, the miniature painter, in 1739. He died at Rome in 1749. Two of his pictures, one of them a 'Magdalen washing Christ's feet,' painted for the canons of St. John Lateran, are in the Louvre; two in the Brera at Milan; and at Alton Towers, the seat of the Earl of Shrewsbury, there is a 'Fall of Simon Magus.' Many others are in the French provincial museums. He has left a few etchings from his own designs; among them the following:

The Brazen Serpent.
The Martyrdom of St. Peter.
Mary Magdalene washing the Feet of Christ.
The Holy Family; in an oval.
St. Bruno restoring a Child to life.
Martyrdom of St. Peter.
A set of four Plates from Fontaine's Fables.

SUDRÉ, JEAN PIERRE, painter and lithographer, was born at Alby, September 19, 1783. He studied first under Suau at the Toulouse Academy, and in 1802 came to Paris, and was for a time in David's atelier. In 1818 he took to lithography, and from that time to the year of his death was a busy and prolific worker in this branch of art. He exhibited with success at the Salon from 1824 onwards. He died in Paris in July, 1866.

SUESS, HANS, (or HANS VON CULMBACH,) painter and engraver upon wood, was born at Culmbach in Franconia, and flourished at Nuremberg in the early years of the 16th century. Sandrart and Lochner are responsible for the error by which his name has been given as Fuss or Fuess. He signs his name JOHANNES SVES on a series of scenes from the life of St. Catharine, in the church of the Virgin at Cracow. He was a scholar of Jacopo de' Barbari, and apparently lived in close connection with Dürer, and probably worked in his studio. Sketches by Dürer are in existence from which Suess painted. A notable instance is the 'Christ treading the Wine-press,' in the chapel of St. George at Anspach, Dürer's sketch for which is in the print-room at Berlin. It has also been surmised that Dürer provided the sketch for Culmbach's masterpiece, the fine triptych in St. Sebald's Church at Nuremberg. Another important work is the 'Adoration of the Kings,' in the Berlin Museum, which shows the influence of De' Barbari. The series of eight scenes from the history of SS. Peter and Paul, in the Uffizi, there attributed to Schaufelin, should most probably be ascribed to this master, and other examples are to be found at Schleissheim and Leipzig. Recent researches show him to have died before Dürer, at latest in 1522.

SUEUR. See LE SUEUR.

SUHR, CHRISTOPH, painter, born at Hamburg in 1771, studied in Salzdhallum, and for three years in Italy. Thence he sent his 'Judgment of Midas' to Berlin. In 1798 he returned to Hamburg, where he acquired a reputation as a portrait painter. He also painted humorous subjects, which were engraved by his brother CORNELIUS, with whom he painted the scenes for an 'optical cosmorama,' exhibited by Cornelius in most of the countries of Europe. He died at Hamburg in 1842.

SUHRRLANDT, JOHANN HEINRICH, painter, born at Schwerin in 1742. He painted portraits and historical pictures, and died in 1827.

SUHRRLANDT, RUDOLPH FRIEDRICH KARL, painter, born at Ludwigslust in 1781, son and pupil of Johann Heinrich Suhrlandt. He studied in Dresden and Vienna, and in 1808 went to Rome, where he painted a 'Theseus and Ariadne.' From 1812-15 he was in Naples, painting portraits. On his return to Germany he was appointed painter to the court of Mecklenburg. Several altar-pieces by him are in the churches of Ludwigslust and the neighbourhood. He died at Schwerin in 1862. His son, KARL, is an animal painter.

SUIJDERHOEF, JONAS, engraver, was born at Leyden in 1613 (1600), and studied under Cornelius Visscher and Soutman. He died in 1669. His plates are numerous and excellent; the following are among the best:

The Emperor Maximilian; after Lucas van Leyden.
The Empress Maria, his consort; after the same.
Maximilian, Archduke of Austria; after Rubens.
Philip III, King of Spain; after the same.
Albert, Archduke of Austria, Governor of the Netherlands; after the same.
Isabella Clara Eugenia, Infanta of Spain, his consort; after the same.
Charles I, King of England; after Vandyck.
Henrietta Maria, his Queen; after the same.
François de Moncade, Comte d'Ossonne; after the same.
John, Duke of Burgundy; after P. Soutman.
Charles, Duke of Burgundy; after the same.
Aldus Swalmius (The old Man with the Beard); after Rembrandt.
René Descartes; after F. Hals.
Anna Maria Schurmann; after J. Lievens.
The Fall of the Rebel Angels; after Rubens.
The Virgin embracing the infant Jesus; after the same.
A Bacchanalian subject; after the same.
A Drunken Bacchus, supported by a Satyr and a Moor; after the same.
The Peace of Munster; after Terburg's picture in the National Gallery; one of his finest plates.
The Burgomaster of Amsterdam in Council; after Thomas de Keyser.
Three old Women at table; after Ostade.
Three Boors, one playing on the Violin; after the same.
The Tric-trac players; after the same.
Dutch Boors fighting with Knives; after the same.
Dutch Boors dancing, called the Ball; after the same.

SUISSE, LE. See LE SUISSSE.

SULLIVAN, LUKE, a native of Ireland, came to London when young and studied under Thomas Major. He practised miniature painting as well as engraving, and was well employed. As an engraver, he was chiefly engaged on plates after Hogarth, and sometimes worked conjointly with that artist. The following prints by him may be named :

The infant Moses presented by his Mother to the Daughter of Pharaoh; after Hogarth; W. Hogarth, et L. Sullivan, sc. 1752.

Paul before Felix; after the same; L. Sullivan, sc. 1752.

The March to Finchley; after the same. 1761.

The Temptation of St. Anthony; after Teniers.

A set of six Views of Country-seats.

SULLY, THOMAS, painter, was born at Horncastle, in Lincolnshire, in 1783. At nine years old he went with his parents, who were actors, to America, studied in Charlestown, and in 1813 set up as a portrait painter in Richmond. He afterwards returned to Europe, studied under West and Lawrence, and painted a portrait of Queen Victoria, which now belongs to the St. George's Society of Philadelphia. In 1838 he settled in Philadelphia, where he painted portraits of Lafayette, Jefferson, and Washington, and of famous actors; among them T. P. Cooke and Fanny Kemble. He also designed some illustrations to Shakespeare, and his 'Washington Crossing the Delaware' is in the Boston Museum. He died in Philadelphia in 1872.

SUMMERFIELD, JOHN, engraver, was one of Bartolozzi's best pupils. His finest work was an excellent plate of 'Rubens and his Wife,' after the Flemish master, engraved in 1800, for which he received the gold medal of the Society of Arts. Another good plate was 'The Sleeping Boy,' after Reynolds. In spite of the high quality of his work, he found it impossible to make a living, and is said to have been reduced to great poverty. Redgrave gives the date of his death as 1817, but he is believed to have lived much longer.

SUMPTER, H——, an English painter of still-life, who exhibited regularly at the Academy, the British Institution, and the gallery of the Society of British Artists, between 1816 and 1847.

SUNDER, LUCAS. See CRANACH.

SUNMAN, WILLEM, (or SONMANS,) a Dutch portrait painter, who came to England in the reign of Charles II., and was much employed after the death of Sir Peter Lely. Walpole says that, being less successful than Riley in a portrait of the King, he retired to Oxford, and was there employed to paint portraits of founders. He died in London about the year 1707. In Wadham College there is an excellent portrait inscribed: Mary George, Ætatis 120, Gul. Sonmans, pinxit et dedit.

SONMANS, WILLIAM, perhaps a son of the last named, was employed in London as a draughtsman early in the 18th century. The drawings for Morrison's 'Historia Plantarum,' 1715, are by him.

SUPPA, ANDREA, painter, born at Messina in 1628, studied under B. Tricomi and Caeambrot. He painted very minutely finished works in oil, and frescoes for the churches and convents of his native city, among them a 'Trinity' in the chapel of St. Gregory, 'The Acts of St. Paul' in San Paolo delle Monache, and 'The Assumption' at the Nunziata de' Teatini. He died in 1671.

SURCHI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, called DIELEI, a native of Ferrara, who flourished about the year 1543. He was a disciple of the Dossi, whom he assisted in several of their principal works in the palaces of Belriguardo, Giovecca, and Cepario, at Ferrara. He painted history, and distinguished himself also as a painter of groteschi and landscapea. He died in 1590. The Costabili Gallery has an 'Adoration of the Shepherds' by him.

SURUGUE, LOUIS, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1695, was instructed in design and engraving by Bernard Picart, whose style he adopted with success, and, like his instructor, united the point with the graver in a very agreeable manner. The effect of his prints is pleasing, and he would have reached an eminent rank among the engravers of his country if his drawing had been more correct. He was a member of the Academy of Paris, where he died in 1769. We have, among others, the following prints by him :

Portrait of Louis de Boullongne, painter to the King; after Mathieu.

St. Margaret; after Raphael; for the Crozat collection. St. Jerome in the Desert; after Bal. de Siena; engraved by N. Chasteau, and finished by L. Surugue; same collection.

Christ curing the Lepers; after Girol. Genga; for the same collection.

The Sacrifice of Isaac; after A. del Sarto.

The Birth of the Virgin; after P. da Cortona.

Abraham sending away Hagar; after Le Sueur.

Venus nursing Love; after Rubens.

A Flemish Merry-making; after Teniers.

The Fortune-teller; after the same.

Clytia; after Coypel.

Last Supper; after Rubens.

Susanna; after Verkolje.

SURUGUE, PIERRE LOUIS, the son of Louis Surugue, born in Paris in 1716, was taught the art of engraving by his father. His style, though inferior, resembles that of his father. He became a member of the Academy in 1747. Among his plates we may name the following :

René Fremin, Director of the Academy; after Latour.

Simon Guillain, Sculptor to the King; after N. Coypel.

The Nativity; after Correggio ('La Notte').

The Virgin and Child, accompanied by St. Jerome and two other saints; after Guido.

The Judgment of Paris; after Hendrik Goltzius.

He also engraved after Charles Coypel, Pater, Chardin, Teniers, and other masters. He died in 1772.

SÜSEMIHL, JOHANN KONRAD, draughtsman and engraver, was born at Rainrod in Hesse in 1767. After studying for a time at the Düsseldorf Academy, he went to Darmstadt, where he made a reputation by his plates of birds, and, in 1800, was appointed engraver to the court. He engraved the plates for Drumpelmann and Friebe's work on the 'Zoology of the Baltic Provinces,' and jointly with his son and daughter, those for Moller's 'Monuments of German Architecture.' In 1839 he published an illustrated work on the 'Birds of Europe.' His brother JOHANN THEODOR, born 1773, was a pupil of Pforr, and engraved zoological and ornithological plates. He practised for many years in Paris.

SUSTERMANN, LAMBERT, was called so in error, and apparently through some confusion between him and his brother-in-law, Lambert Sustermann or Suavius, of Liège (q. v.). His real designation was LAMBERT LOMBARD. He was born at Liège in 1506, was a pupil of Mabuse, and afterwards travelled with Cardinal Pole to Italy, where he studied the pictures of Andrea del Sarto. On his return to Liège he opened a school which was largely attended, and was the means of diffusing his style through the Netherlands. He also professed architecture, engraving, numismatics, archæology, and poetry. He is not deficient in feeling for beauty, and his execution is careful, but his colouring is generally cold. His pictures are not common. There is a 'Virgin and Child' in the Berlin Museum, and a 'Deposition from the Cross,' in the National Gallery, is ascribed to him. He died at Liège in 1566.

SUSTRIS, or ZUSTRIS, FREDERIK, called FEDERIGO DI LAMBERTO, and DEL PAVONANO, born at Amsterdam in 1524, was the son of Lambert Sustris, and, like his father, practised chiefly in Italy, and married there. He settled in Florence, and was one of the painters associated with Vasari in adorning the catafalque of Michelangelo. He died at Florence in 1591.

SUSTRIS, LAMBERT, (SUSTER, ZUSTRIS,) was a native of Germany, and flourished about the end of the 16th century. He was first instructed in art by Christopher Schwartz, of Munich; but he afterwards travelled to Italy, where he became a follower of Titian, and an unsuccessful imitator of that master's colour, though he still retained the dry Gothic design. In the Louvre there is a picture by Sustris, representing Venus and Cupid, with Mars in the background. Sustris, Snavius, or Sustermans, and Lambert Lombard, have been continually welded into a single individual by biographers, and otherwise confused.

SUTCLIFFE, THOMAS, still-life and landscape painter, was born in Yorkshire. He studied ardently from nature, and in his works showed great artistic talent. He first exhibited at the Academy in 1856. Shortly afterwards he became an associate of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, and was thenceforth a constant contributor of landscapes to the Society's exhibitions. He died at Headingley, near Leeds, in 1871.

SUTHERLAND, THOMAS, engraver, was born about 1785, and practised in London, producing chiefly plates in aquatint of hunting scenes, views, &c. One of his best known plates was 'The Peacock Tavern, Islington,' from which the northern mail used to start.

SUTER, JOSEPH, painter, was born at Linz, in Upper Austria, in 1782. He studied for a time under Füger at the Vienna Academy, and later at Rome. He afterwards worked for a time at Munich, where he made several designs for frescoes for the Basilica, two of which he himself carried out. One was painted by his son DANIEL.

SUTERMANS, JUSTUS, (SUSTERMANS,) was born at Antwerp in 1597, and was a scholar of Willem de Vos in that city; and of François Pourbus the second, in Paris. He travelled through Germany to Venice, where he passed some time, and afterwards went to Florence, where his abilities recommended him to the notice of Cosmo II., Grand Duke of Tuscany, who appointed him his painter, and in whose service he remained until the death of that prince, when he was favoured with the protection of Cosmo III. In 1623 he was summoned to Vienna to paint the emperor and empress, and returned to Florence with a patent of nobility. Sutermans painted history and portraits, and in the latter was little inferior to Vandyck. When Vandyck visited Florence, he expressed the greatest admiration of the works of Sutermans, and painted his portrait, etching it afterwards among his famous 'icones.' His historical pictures are well composed, and their design correct. One of his most important pictures is in the Gallery at Florence; it represents the Florentine nobility swearing fealty to Ferdinand II. Into it he has introduced the portraits of the most distinguished personages of the time. He died in Florence in 1681. Among his works we may name:

Edinburgh.	Nat. Gal.	Portrait of Spinola.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Portrait of Galileo.
"	"	A Magdalen.
"	"	Puliciani and his wife ( two pictures ).
"	"	His own portrait.
"	Pitti Gal.	The Crown Prince of Denmark.
"	"	Portrait of Ferdinand (II.) de' Medici.
"	"	" Vittoria della Rovere.
"	Corsini Col.	" Cardinal Corsini.
"	"	" Mary Magdalen of Austria, wife of Cosmo (II.) de' Medici.
Lucca.	Accademia.	Portrait of a Young Woman.
"	"	" Cardinal Leopoldo de' Medici.
Venice.	Accademia.	Catherine Cornaro ceding Cyprus to Venice.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Portrait of the Archduchess Claudia.

SUVÉE, JOSEPH BENOÎT, an historical painter, born at Bruges in 1743, was taught drawing by Matthias de Visch. He afterwards entered the Academy of St. Luke, in Paris, and in 1766, was appointed superintendent of the free school of design. In 1771 he won the prize of Rome. After working for a year in Rome he visited Naples, Sicily, and Malta, deferring his return to Paris until 1778. In that year he exhibited the results of his work in Italy, and soon after became a member of the Academy. At the outbreak of the French Revolution he was appointed director of the Academy at Rome, but incurring the suspicions of the Jacobins, he was thrown into prison, where he painted portraits of several of his fellow-captives, among them that of André Chénier. On the fall of Robespierre he was released, but he did not take up his appointment till 1801, when, under the auspices of Napoleon, he went to fulfil its functions. He re-organized the French school at Rome, and removed it from the Palazzo Mancini to the Villa Medici. He occupied the situation for about six years, and died suddenly on the 9th of February, 1807. His pictures are numerous. His wife was also a painter.

SUYDAM, JAMES A., painter, was born in New York in 1817, and was the pupil of the American artist M. C. Kellogg, with whom he travelled through Greece and Turkey, and visited the East. On his return to America he became well known as a painter of mountain scenery and coast views. He took a very prominent part in the foundation and organization of the Academy at New York, and was appointed treasurer, which post he held till his death. His 'View on Long Island,' and 'Hook Mountain on the Hudson,' are among his best known works. He died in 1865, bequeathing a large sum of money, and the pictures known as the 'Suydam Collection,' to the Academy.

SWAGERS, CHARLES, the son of Frans Swagers, painter, was born in 1792. He was professor of painting at Dieppe in 1840. His son ÉDOUARD was a painter and lithographer, and practised in Paris.

SWAGERS, FRANS, a landscape and marine painter, born at Utrecht in 1756, received his art education in Holland, but afterwards he went to Paris, and resided there till his death. His pictures consist chiefly of Dutch views, and marine subjects off the coast. From his long residence in Paris, his pictures exhibit a mixture of the Dutch and French schools. He died in Paris in 1836. His wife, ELISA, née MÉRI, was a miniature painter and professor of drawing at Ecoen. She died in 1837. Her daughter and pupil, CAROLINE, practised in Paris, and exhibited frequently at the Salon from 1831 onwards.

SWAINE, FRANCIS, an English marine painter, who practised in London from about 1760 to 1782. He painted small sea-pieces in the style of Willem Vandevelde, and moonlight scenes. He was a member of the Free Society in 1763, and gained medals from the Society of Arts in 1764 and 1765. He was chiefly employed by the dealers, who sold his copies of Vandevelde as English Vandeveldes. He died at Chelsea in 1782. One MONAMY SWAINE, probably his son, painted the same class of subjects.

SWAINE, JOHN, engraver, was born at Stanwell, Middlesex, in 1775. He was a pupil of Jacob Schiebelle, and later of Barak Langmate. He worked chiefly on antiquarian subjects, and produced some well-executed facsimiles of old portraits. He died in London in 1860. His son, JOHN BARAK SWAINE, was also educated in his father's art, but died in 1828, at the age of twenty-three.

SWANENBURCH, ISAAC KLAASSEN VAN, called NICOLAI, painter, was born at Leyden in 1534. He was the master of O. Van Veen and of Jan Van Goyen, and in 1596 was burgomaster of Leyden. His only known works are designs for the painted windows for the church of St. John at Gouda, and for the Town Hall at Leyden. He died in 1614. His three sons, JAKOB, WILLEM, and NICOLAS, were also painters.

SWANENBURCH, JAKOB ISAASZ VAN, son of the last-named, is chiefly known as the first master of Rembrandt, to whom he was probably related. He was born at Leyden, apparently about 1580. After having learnt the elements of art from his father, he travelled in Italy, and, in Naples, married Margherita Cordona, by whom he had four children. He returned to Leyden in 1617, and died there on the 17th of October, 1638. The Copenhagen Gallery has a picture signed Giacomo Swanenburgh, and dated 1628, representing the Pope crossing the square of St. Peter's at Rome in procession; in the Court House at Leyden there is a 'Pharaoh crossing the Red Sea.' See Vosmaer's 'Rembrandt,' p. 33.

SWANENBURCH, WILLEM VAN, brother of Jakob, was a Dutch engraver. He was born at Leyden about the year 1581. His style of engraving is bold, and his prints bear some resemblance to those of Hendrik Goltzius. He occasionally painted a picture, but it is as a master of the burin that he demands notice. He had a great command of the graver, but his drawing is not correct. The following are among his more esteemed plates:

Esau selling his Birthright to Jacob; after P. Moreelse.
The Resurrection; after the same.

The Adoration of the Shepherds; after Ab. Bloemaert.

The six Penitents; after the same.

St. Jerome in the Desert; after the same.

St. Peter penitent; after the same.

Lot and his Daughters; after Rubens.

Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus; after the same.

The Judgment of Paris; after M. Mierevelt.

Perseus and Andromeda; after J. Saerredam.

A Village Festival; after D. Vinckebooms.

A set of fourteen Plates, entitled The Throne of Justice; after Joachim Utevaal. 1605, 1606.

He died at Leyden, the 15th of August, 1612.

SWANEVELT, HERMAN, landscape painter and engraver, was born at Woerden in 1620. He is said to have been a scholar of Gerard Douw, but he left that master and travelled to Italy, while still very young. On his arrival at Rome, he was indefatigable in his studies, studious and solitary promenades procuring him the nickname of 'the Hermit.' In 1640 he became the disciple of Claude Lorraine, with whose help he soon became one of the most celebrated painters of landscape of his time. His better works are not seldom ascribed to his master. A 'Classic Landscape' in the Berlin Museum is probably a case in point. The date of his death is doubtful. According to the registers of the French Academy, it took place in 1655, but the year 1690 has also been given, while Passeri says he died in Venice in 1659. Works:

Copenhagen. Gallery. Summer Evening.

Dresden. Gallery. River Landscape.

Florence. Uffizi. Landscape.

Hague. Museum. Italian Landscape.

Hampton Court. Landscape with Cattle (and two others).

London. Bridgewater Ho. Landscape, with Figures loading a Ship.

„ Dulwich Gall. Three Landscapes.

Herman Swanevelt has also left the following etchings: they are better, on the whole, than his pictures.

A set of eighteen small oval plates, representing Views in Italy, and rural subjects; entitled Varia campestri fantasia a Hermanno Swanevelt, invent. et in lucem edita.

A set of thirteen Italian Landscapes, including the title; dedicated to Gideon Tallemont.

A set of twelve Views in and near Rome; entitled Diverses Vues dedans et dehors de Rome, &c. 1653.

A set of seven Plates of Animals, with landscape backgrounds, and figures.

A set of four Arcadian Landscapes, with Nymphs and Satyrs.

A set of four Landscapes with Biblical subjects.

A set of four Mountainous Landscapes, with different representations of the Flight into Egypt.

A set of Four Views of the Apennines; with pastoral subjects.

A set of six grand Landscapes, with the history of Venus and Adonis.

A set of four Landscapes, with Mary Magdalene and different Saints.

SWART, JAN, (SCHWARTZ,) painter and engraver, was born at Groeningen in 1469. It has been stated that he was a pupil of Scorel's, which seems improbable, as he was considerably the elder. He spent some time in Venice, and afterwards settled at Gouda, where he died in 1535. A fine woodcut, 'Christ preaching from the Ship,' bears his monogram, and shows great similarity in style to the 'St. John Baptist' in the Pinacothek, and the 'Adoration of the Kings' in the Antwerp Museum, ascribed to him. Waagen has described an 'Adoration of the Kings,' in the possession of Queen Victoria, as a typical example of the master.

SWEBACH DE FONTAINE, JACQUES FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, a prolific painter of battles, marches, encampments, and landscapes, was born at Metz in 1769. Many of his pictures were exhibited in Paris, where he chiefly resided. He was in England, too, for a short time. In 1814 the Emperor of Russia made him director of his Porcelain Works, but he was unable to stand the climate, and soon returned to France. J. Swebach etched a great number of his own compositions, which were published in Paris, in five volumes, quarto, under the title 'Encyclopédie Pittoresque; ou, Suite de compositions, caprices, et études utiles aux Artistes.' He died in Paris in 1823. There are pictures by him in the Museums of Lyons, Marseilles, and Montpellier.

SWEBACH, BERNARD EDOUARD, painter and engraver, the son of Jacques Swobach, was born in Paris, August 21, 1800. He was taught by his father, and at the École des Beaux Arts. He painted the same class of subjects as his father, but without attaining equal excellence. He exhibited at the Salon from 1822 onwards. In the Besançon Museum and at Cherbourg there are examples of his work. He died at Versailles, March 2, 1870.

SWEERTS, MICHAEL, (SWERTS), a Dutch painter and engraver, who flourished about the year 1655. His pictures have disappeared, but he etched some nineteen plates, chiefly from his own compositions, among which are the following :

Jan van Bronckhorst, Painter (?).

Herman Saffleven, Painter (?).

His own Portrait.

The dead Christ, supported by the Marys and St. John.

A Man seated in a chair, smoking, and a Boy standing by him.

An Indian shooting with bow and arrows.

SWELINCK, JAN, a Dutch engraver, who resided at Amsterdam about the year 1620. He engraved a set of emblems, after A. V. Venne. They are executed with the graver in a style resembling that of the Wierixes. He engraved some subjects from the 'Life of the Virgin,' a 'Raising of Lazarus,' and a 'St. John the Evangelist'; these are in ovals with arabesque borders, and are signed J. S.

SWERTS, JAN, painter, born at Antwerp in 1820, was a pupil of N. de Keyser. He painted historical and religious subjects, and frescoes for churches, of which there are examples in the church of Notre Dame, at St. Nicholas, in the church of St. George, at Antwerp, in the town-halls at Yprés and Courtrai, and in the chapel at Ince-Blundell Hall. He settled at Prague, where he became director of the Academy, and corresponding member of the Institute of France. He died at Marienbad in 1879.

SWIDDE, WILLEM, a native of Holland, born about 1660, chiefly resided in Sweden. In 1695 he engraved several of the plates for a work entitled 'Suecia Antiqua et Hodierna.' We have also by him a set of six landscapes, with figures and cattle, after Dirk Dalens; the plates for Puffendorf's 'Life of Charles Gustavus'; and some large marine pieces with the date 1680. He usually marked his plates with the initials W. S.

SWIFT, JOHN WARKUP, marine painter, was brought up at Hull, and was for some years a sailor, but gave up the sea and obtained employment as scene-painter to an amateur dramatic society. He afterwards settled at Newcastle-on-Tyne, where he practised successfully for many years, painting such subjects as, 'The Channel Fleet running into Sunderland,' 'Shields Harbour,' &c. Some of his works were reproduced in chromolithography. He died in 1869.

SWITSER, JOSEPH, or THE SWISS, was a pupil of Johann von Aachen, and worked for the Emperor about 1580.

SWITZER, CHRISTOPH, a German engraver on wood, who resided in England about the year 1614. He was employed by Speed to cut the coins and seals for his 'History of Great Britain,' from the originals in the Cottonian collection. Speed calls him the most exquisite and curious hand of that age. In the Harleian Library was a set of woodcuts, representing the broad seals of England, from the Conquest to James I. inclusive, neatly executed, which Vertue believed to have been cut by Christoph Switzer; they were the originals from which Hollar copied those published by Sandford. He had a son named CHRISTOPHER, who also engraved on wood, and whose works are sometimes confounded with those of his father.

SWOBODA, KARL, painter, was born at Prague in 1823. He studied first under Ruben, and secondly at the Viennese Academy. He painted a number of historical pictures, but was more successful as an etcher and illustrator. He died at Venna in 1870.

SWOBODA, RUDOLPH, born at Vienna in 1819, was a painstaking painter of landscapes and animals. He became a member of the Vienna Academy in 1848, and died in 1859.

SYDER, DANIEL. See SAITER.

SYKES, —, an English portrait painter, who practised in the early part of the 18th century. He was of considerable repute in his day, and was one of the painters who valued Thornhill's works at Greenwich Hospital. He was an art patron as well, and formed a collection of pictures, which was sold after his death in 1733. The Duke of Bedford has a miniature by him.

SYKES, GODFREY, painter, ornamental designer, and decorator, was born at Malton in 1825. He was educated at the art school of Sheffield. He was also a pupil of Alfred Stevens, and was employed on the decoration of South Kensington Museum. While at Sheffield he painted interiors of rolling-mills, smiths' shops, &c., also a few landscapes. There is a 'Smith's Shop' by him, in water-colour, in the South Kensington Museum. He died in London in 1866.

SYME, JOHN, R.S.A., portrait painter, was a nephew of Patrick Syme. He was born in Edinburgh in 1795, studied in the Trustees Academy, and was afterwards a pupil of Raeburn, some of whose unfinished works he completed. He was one of the foundation members of the Scottish Academy, and his portrait, painted by himself, hangs in the Academy Gallery. There is also an excellent portrait by him in the Scottish National Gallery. He suffered much from ill-health in his later years, and died in Edinburgh in 1861.

SYME, PATRICK, R.S.A., flower painter, was born at Edinburgh, September 17, 1774. He devoted himself to art at an early age, and on the death, in 1803, of an elder brother, who was a teacher of drawing in Edinburgh, succeeded to his practice. He was a man of various attainments, an accomplished botanist and entomologist, and also a writer. In 1823 he published a 'Treatise on British Song Birds,' and later an edition of Werner's 'Nomenclature of Colour.' He exhibited with the Society of Associated Artists from 1810 to 1816. He died at Dollar, N. B., July 1845.

SYSANG, JOHANN CHRISTOPHER. To this engraver we owe several portraits, executed in a neat, clear style, for 'Portraits Historiques des Hommes illustres de Danemark,' published in 1746. SYTICUS. See SOYE.

SZOTAIKOW, —, a Russian engraver, born 1777. He studied at the Petersburg Academy, and died in 1843.

TABAR, FRANÇOIS GERMAIN LÉOPOLD, painter, born in Paris, 1818, was a pupil of Paul Delaroche. In the early part of his career he painted chiefly historical subjects, but later produced many genre pictures and military scenes. His 'S. Sebastian,' exhibited at the Salon in 1851, attracted much attention. In the Bordeaux Museum there is an 'Episode in the Egyptian Campaign,' by him, and at Saumur an 'Ambulances with Wounded.' He exhibited frequently at the Salon between 1842 and 1869, in which latter year he died at Argenteuil.

TABORDA, JOSE DA. See DA CUNHA TABORDA.

TACONE, INNOCENZIO, a native of Bologna, was a disciple and, according to Baglione, a relative of Annibale Carracci. In 1600 he accompanied that artist to Rome, where he assisted him in many of his works. In the vault of the church of S. Maria del Popolo he painted three large frescoes, from the designs of Annibale, representing the 'Crowning of the Virgin,' 'Christ appearing to St. Peter,' and 'St. Paul taken up into the third heaven.' Of his own compositions the most considerable are some pictures in S. Angelo in Pescheria, in the chapel dedicated to S. Andrew, representing the principal events of the life of that Apostle. He died at Rome, in the prime of life, in the pontificate of Urban VIII. (1623—1644).

TACCONI, FRANCESCO, of whose life little is known, flourished from 1464 to 1490, and was an artist of some importance at Cremona in the 15th century. He and his brother, FILIPPO TACCONI, executed several frescoes in a loggia in the Palazzo Pubblico of their native city. In 1464 their fellow-citizens exempted them from all taxes on account of these frescoes, which have since, however, been whitewashed over. In 1490 Francesco was employed in St. Mark's, at Venice, where he painted, on the organ doors then in use, the Epiphany, the Resurrection, and the Assumption. These paintings, though much damaged, are still preserved, and are said once to have been signed and dated. In the National Gallery there is a 'Virgin Enthroned,' signed OP. FRANCISI TACHONI 1489 OCTU. It is a free copy from a 'Madonna' by Giov. Bellini, in the Scalzi, Venice.

TADDEO DI BARTOLI. See BARTOLI.

TAFI, ANDREA, a Florentine painter, and contemporary of Giotto. That he flourished in the early years of the 14th century, and that his real name was probably Ricchi, appears from the registers of the Guild of Physicians and Apothecaries, which then included painters. He is there inscribed, in 1320, as Andreas vocatus Tafus, olim Ricchi. That the Florentines were indebted to him for the revival of the art of working in mosaic, has been stated on the authority of Vasari, who says that some Greek painters in mosaic being employed in ornamenting the church of S. Marco at Venice, Tafi visited that city, in hopes of becoming acquainted with their mystery, and succeeded so well that one of them, named Apollonio, not only instructed him in the art, but was prevailed on to accompany him to Florence, where, in conjunction with others, they were employed on the mosaics in the Baptistery. The parts traditionally assigned to Tafi are the innermost of the concentric bands in the dome, containing groups of angels, and the immense 'Christ Enthroned.' But several inaccuracies have recently been pointed out in Vasari's account of this artist, whose death he places in 1294. It may be doubted whether Tafi was really the author of any frescoes in the Baptistery at all.

TAGLIASACCHI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, painter, a native of Borgo S. Donnino, near Piacenza, flourished about the year 1730. He was a scholar of Giuseppe dal Sole, and for some time painted history in the manner of his teacher, but afterwards modified his style by studying Correggio, Parmigiano, and Guido. He was an excellent portrait painter. He died in 1737. His principal works are at Piacenza.

TAGPRET, PETER, (DACHBRETT), painter, a native of Ravensburg, who flourished about 1480. Two works by him, painted in the style of Zeitblom, are extant—the one, a 'Gregory the Great, Joseph of Arimathea, and the Virgin'; the other, 'John the Evangelist, Nicodemus, and a Bishop.'

TAIG, SEBASTIAN, painter, born at Nördlingen, worked from 1516 to 1560 with J. Herlin and Jan Schäuflin, and imitated Dürer. Works by him are at Nuremberg, Nördlingen, and Schleissheim.

TAILLASSON, JEAN JOSEPH, painter, born at Blaye, near Bordeaux, in 1746, went in 1764 to Paris, where he entered the atelier of Vien. From 1791 to 1806 he painted classical pictures, wrote a critical work on painting, and also poetry in the style of Ossian. He died in 1809.

TAILLEVENT, TALLEVEN, (OR TALVEN,) FRANÇOIS, an obscure Flemish painter of the 17th century.

TALAMI, ORAZIO, born at Reggio in 1625, was a scholar of Pietro Desani. He afterwards visited Rome, where he spent some time in the study of Annibale Carracci. On his return to his native city he distinguished himself as a reputable painter of history and architecture, both in oil and fresco. He died in 1699.

TALFOURD, FIELD, the younger brother of Mr. Justice Talfourd, was born at Reading in 1815. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1845, and from that time onwards was an occasional contributor to the exhibition. His works were chiefly portraits, but from 1865 to 1873 he exhibited landscapes. He died in London in 1874.

TALMAN, JOHN, amateur draughtsman, was the son of William Talman, the architect. In 1710 he went with Kent to study in Rome, and there made a number of pen and ink sketches and washed drawings, from churches and other buildings; some of these are in the possession of the Society of Antiquaries.

TALPINO. See SALMEGGIA.

TAMAGNI, VINCENZO, usually called VINCENZO DA SAN GEMIGNANO, was born at San Gemignano in 1492. He went to Rome and entered the school of Raphael, where, according to Vasari, he was called on to assist his master in the Loggia of the Vatican. The statements of Vasari with regard to Tamagni are open, however, to much doubt. He was really a member of the Sienese school. His earliest works, some frescoes at Montalcino, a small town near Siena, were once signed and dated 1510. Two signed altar-pieces are still at San Gemignano; and in the apse of S. Maria d'Arrone, Umbria, he painted frescoes in conjunction with Lo Spagna, on which the names of both artists appear. Tamagni died about 1530.

TAMAROZZO, (or TAMAROCCIO), CESARE, a Bolognese painter of the early 16th century, the pupil of Francia. Two of the frescoes in the oratory of S. Cecilia at Bologna were painted by him — 'The Baptism of Valerian,' and 'The Martyrdom of St. Cecilia.' It has been suggested that these were painted from designs by Francia or Costa, so superior are they in conception to execution. A signed picture by Tamarozzo, 'The Madonna and Child, with the little S. John,' is in the Poldi Pezzoli collection at Milan.

TAMBURINI, GIOVANNI MARIA, painter and engraver, a native of Bologna, who flourished about 1640, was first a scholar of Pietro Facini, and afterwards of Guido Reni. He painted history with some success, and was employed for several of the churches at Bologna. His best works are his 'S. Antony of Padua,' in the church of La Morte, and an 'Annunciation,' in S. Maria della Vita.

TAMM, Franz Werner, (called DAPPER), was born at Hamburg in 1658, studied at first under Von Sosten and Pfeiffer, and then went first to Rome, and afterwards to Vienna, where he became court painter. The Vienna Gallery contains seven and the Dresden Gallery four of his works, representing chiefly fruit, flowers, dead game, and similar subjects. His works show good drawing, careful and highly finished execution, and colour, which though heavy at first, became clearer and more brilliant as time went on. He died at Vienna in 1724.

TANCREDI, FILIPPO, born at Messina in 1655, studied some time at Naples, and afterwards visited Rome, where he entered the school of Carlo Maratti. He spent a great part of his life at Palermo, where he painted the ceiling of the church of the Teatini, and that of Il Gesù Nuovo. He died at Palermo in 1722.

TANJÉ, PIETER, a Dutch engraver, was born at Bolsward, in Friesland, in 1706. At first a waterman's boy, he studied at the age of twenty-four under Folkema, and became a most industrious artist, engraving a great number of portraits and other subjects, as well as vignettes for books. The most considerable of his works are five large plates, after the famous windows of the church of St. John at Gouda. He also engraved some plates for the 'Dresden Gallery.' Among others we have the following prints by him:

Portraits of the Dutch Stadtholders (jointly with Houbraken).

George II., King of England, &c.; after Faber. 1752.

Charles VII., Emperor of Germany; P. Tanjé, sc.

Christina, Queen of Sweden; after S. Bourdon.

His own Portrait; after J. M. Quinckhardt.

A Dead Christ; after Francesco Salviati.

The Chastity of Joseph; after Carlo Cignani.

Children Dancing; after Albano.

The Card-players; after M. Angelo Caravaggio.

Tarquín and Lucretia; after Luca Giordano.

(The last five are in the 'Dresden Gallery'.)

Tanjé died at Amsterdam in 1760.

TANNER, RUDOLPH, painter, born at Richtensweil, on the Lake of Zurich, in 1775, was a sword cutler by trade. He studied art without a teacher, but in 1814, when he was already thirty-nine, he went to Munich to study, and there he died in 1830.

TANNEUR, PHILIPPE, painter, was born at Marseilles in 1795. He was a pupil of Horace Vernet, and painted marine and battle pieces, coast views, etc. He exhibited at the Salon from 1827. There is a sea-piece by him in the Luxembourg, and other examples of his art in the museums of Marseilles, Montpellier, and Nantes. He died in 1873.

TANNOCK, JAMES, a Scottish portrait painter, was born at Kilmarnock 1784. Of humble parentage, he was brought up as a shoemaker, and then worked as a house-painter. With a strong predilection for art, he painted some portraits in Kilmarnock, and after receiving some instruction from Alex. Nasmyth, eventually succeeded in forming a practice as a portrait painter in Greenock and Glasgow. In 1810 he migrated to London, and from 1813 to 1841 exhibited forty-four portraits at the Royal Academy. He died in London in 1863. His portraits of Professor Geo. Jos. Bell, of Henry Bell, and of George Chalmers, are in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. His younger brother WILLIAM TANNOCK also practised as a portrait painter.

TANZIO, ENRICO ANTONIO, (called TANZIO D'ALAGNA, or TANZIO DI VARALLO), born at Alagna, near Novara, in 1574. He was a competitor with the Carloni in several public works at Milan, and painted a 'Destruction of Sennacherib,' in the church of S. Gaudenzio at Novara. He is supposed to have died in 1644.

TAPARELLI D'AZEGLIO, MASSIMO, Marchese, statesman, soldier, poet, and painter, and brother of Roberto, Marchese d'Azeglio, was born at Turin in 1798. In Rome he devoted himself for some time to painting landscapes, which were frequently combined with historical subjects. He also painted the scenes for an opera composed by himself. He died at Turin in 1866.

TAPARELLI D'AZEGLIO, ROBERTO, Marchese, who was born at Turin in 1790, painted historical works after the manner of Gaudenzio Ferrari. He was director of the Turin Gallery, and wrote several books on art. He died at his birth-place in 1862.

TAPÍA, DON ISIDORO DE, a painter of historical pictures, born at Valencia in 1720, was a scholar of Evaristo Muñoz. He went to Madrid in 1743, and afterwards passed into Portugal. He was a member of the Academy of S. Fernando, which possesses a picture of 'Abraham's Sacrifice' painted by him. He died at Madrid in 1755.

TARABOTTI, CATERINA, was a native of Vicenza, and a pupil of Alessandro Varotari and his sister Chiara. She practised chiefly at Verona, where she painted historical pictures. The dates of her birth and death are unknown, but she was at work in 1659.

TARAVAL, JEAN HUGUES, painter and engraver, born in Paris in 1728, was the son and pupil of Thomas Raphael Taraval. In 1756 he won the Grand Prix at the Academy, and in 1759 went as pensioner to Rome. On his return in 1764 he painted a successful portrait of Louis XV. In 1769 he was received by the Academy, his reception picture being a 'Triumph of Bacchus.' In 1785 he was appointed professor and chief inspector at the Gobelín manufactory, and died in Paris the same year. There is a 'Triumph of Amphitrite' by him in the Louvre.

TARAVAL, LOUIS GUSTAVE, architectural designer and engraver, was the son of Thomas Raphael Taraval. He was born at Stockholm in 1737, was sent by his father to join his brother Hugues in Paris, where, among other prints, he engraved some architectural subjects from the designs of Dumont. Another member of the family, Jean Gustave Taraval, a nephew of Raphael, was born in Paris in 1767. He won the Grand Prix in 1782, and died in Rome two years later.

TARAVAL, THOMAS RAPHAEL, painter, was a Frenchman by birth, and studied in Paris. He was invited to Sweden, and became court painter to the King. In the Castle of Stockholm are several wall paintings by this artist. He founded a school of painting at Stockholm, where he died in 1750.

TARDIEU, AMBROISE, nephew and pupil of Pierre Alexandre Tardieu, was born in 1788. He was geographical engraver to the French Government. With his work as an engraver he combined a trade in prints, books, and maps. Like his uncle, he engraved many portraits, his total productions in that line amounting to some 800 plates, mostly of very small size. He died in Paris in 1841.

TARDIEU, ELISABETH CLAIRE (née TOURNAY), was the second wife of Jacques Nicolas Tardieu. She was born in Paris in 1731, and died there in 1773. Among other prints, she engraved these :

The Concert; after J. F. de Troy.
The Mustard Merchant; after Charles Hutin.
Two plates of the Charitable Lady and the Catechist; after P. Dumesnil.
The Old Coquette; after the same.
The Repose; after Jevurat.

TARDIEU, JACQUES NICOLAS, (called COCHIN), the son of Nicolas Henri Tardieu, born in Paris in 1718, was instructed in the art of engraving by his father. He used the point less and the graver more than his father; hence his prints are neater, though inferior in spirit and picturesqueness of effect. He was a member of the Academy at Paris. He engraved a considerable number of portraits and other subjects, among which are the following :

Louis XV.; after Vanloo.
His Queen Marie Leczynska; after Nattier.

He also engraved some plates for the 'Galerie de Versailles,' after Le Brun. He died in Paris in 1795. LOUISE TARDIEU, his wife, who was the daughter of the celebrated medallist Du Vivier, also engraved some plates.

TARDIEU, JEAN BAPTISTE PIERRE, nephew and pupil of Nicolas Henri, was a geographical engraver. He was born in Paris in 1746, and died 1816.

TARDIEU, JEAN CHARLES, called COCHIN, was the son of Jacques Nicolas Tardieu. He was born in Paris in 1765, and studied under Regnault. He painted a great number of pictures for the Government, which were placed in the Luxembourg, at Versailles, St. Cloud, and Fontainebleau; also in the Museum at Rouen, and in the cathedral. In addition to these he exercised his pencil on classical and poetical subjects for private individuals; and seems to have been fully employed during the reigns of Napoleon, Louis XVIII., and Charles X. He also made copies of several pictures by P. de Champaigne. He died in Paris the 3rd of April, 1830. There are examples of his work in the Museums of Besançon, Havre, Versailles, and Marseilles.

TARDIEU, MARIE ANNE. See ROUSSELET.

TARDIEU, NICOLAS HENRI, an eminent French engraver, born in Paris in 1674, was first a pupil of P. le Pautre, and was afterwards instructed by Gérard, and by Benoît Audran. He was engaged in some of the most important publications of his time, and engraved several plates for the 'Collection Crozat,' the 'Galerie de Versailles,' and other publications. He was received into the Academy in Paris in 1720, and died in that city in 1749. The following are among his best prints :

Louis Antoine, Duke d'Antiu; after Rigaud; engraved for his reception plate at the Academy in 1720.
Jean Soazon, Bishop of Senez; Nic. Tardieu ad vivum fecit. 1716.

The three last form a series from the History of Æneas, painted in the Palais Royal by Ant. Coyvel.

TARDIEU, PIERRE ALEXANDER, engraver, nephew of Jacques Nicolas Tardieu, was born in Paris in 1756, and was a pupil of J. G. Wille, and afterwards of Nanteuil and Edelinck. He engraved the portrait of Henry IV. of France, after F. Pourbus, for the 'Collection du Palais Royal.' Among his scholars were Desnoyers, Bertonnier, and Aubert. He died in Paris in 1844. Among his numerous plates, the following may also be named :

St. Michael overcoming Lucifer; after Raphael.
The Communion of St. Jerome; after Domenichino.
Judith and Holofernes; after Allori.
Psyche abandoned; after Gérard.
Three portraits of Henry IV.; after Janet and F. Pourbus.
Two of Voltaire; after Largillière and Houdon.
The Earl of Arundel; after Van Dyck.
Marshal Ney; after Gérard.
Napoleon in his Coronation robes; after Isabey.
Marie Antoinette; after Dumont.
Montesquieu, Paul Barras, and many other portraits.

TARDIEU, PIERRE FRANÇOIS, was the nephew of Nicolas Henri Tardieu, by whom he was in-structured. He was born in Paris in 1720. His plates, though inferior to those of his relatives, are not without merit. We may name the following :

The Judgment of Paris; after Rubens.
Perseus and Andromeda; after the same.

He also engraved several architectural views after Panini; a set of plates for La Fontaine's 'Fables,' after Oudry; and several plates for Buffon's 'Natural History.' He died in Paris about 1774.

TARDIF, OLIVIER, a famous French glass painter in the 16th century, who flourished at Rouen, where he worked for the cathedral. His son Noël succeeded to his position, but was of inferior talent.

TARICCO, SEBASTIANO, painter, was born at Cherasco, in the Piedmontese, in 1645. He formed his style by the study of Guido and Domenichino. He died in 1710.

TARUFFI, EMILIO, born at Bologna in 1633, was a fellow-student with Carlo Cignani, under Francesco Albano. In conjunction with Cignani, he painted some pictures in the Palazzo Publico at Bologna, and accompanying him to Rome, was his coadjutor in his frescoes in S. Andrea della Valle. Of his works at Bologna, the best are a 'Virgin presenting the Rosary to S. Domenico,' in the church of S. Maria Nuova, and a 'Virgin, with a glory of Angels, appearing to S. Celestine,' in the church dedicated to that saint. He painted landscape in the style of Albano. There is an etching by him dated 8th May, 1651, when he was only eighteen. He was assassinated in 1696.

TASCA, CRISTOFORO, painter, was born at Bergamo in 1667. After learning the rudiments of design in his native city, he studied the works of Antonio Bellucci and Carlo Loti at Venice. He established himself in Venice, where his best works are, a 'Birth of the Virgin,' in the Chiesa dell' Assunzione; a 'Death of St. Joseph,' in SS. Filippo e Giacomo; and a 'Nativity' and 'Baptism of Christ,' in S. Marta. He died at Venice in 1737.

TASNIERE, G., was resident about the year 1670 at Turin, where he engraved part of a set of prints from hunting subjects and portraits painted by Jan Miel, in the palace of the Duke of Savoy, which were published at Turin in 1674, and entitled 'La Venaria reale Palazzo di piacere,' &c. He also engraved several plates from the pictures of Domenico Piola, in a coarse, tasteless style.

TASSAERT, JEAN PIERRE, painter, born at Antwerp in 1651, was the son of PIERRE TASSAERT, a painter of Antwerp. Jean Pierre became free of the Guild of S. Luke in 1690, and dean in 1701. He was the grandfather of Philip Joseph Tassaert. He painted interiors and historical subjects, but few of his works are now extant. There were formerly eight pictures by him in the hall of the suppressed Company of Diamond Polishers, containing scenes from the lives of St. Peter and St. Paul. In the Museum at Antwerp there is a 'Meeting of Philosophers' by him. He died in 1725.

TASSAERT, NICOLAS FRANÇOIS OCTAVE, painter, born in Paris in 1800, studied under Girard and Lethière, and in the Ecole des Beaux Arts. He painted portraits, historical subjects, and genre. Tassaert had a life of misery, and his works are of a melancholy character. The best, perhaps, is 'The Unfortunate Family,' in the Luxembourg. We may also name:

Early Christians celebrating the Eucharist in the Catacombs (Bordeaux Museum).

Heaven and Hell (Montpellier Museum).

Portrait of Himself (do.).

He committed suicide by inhaling carbonic acid gas, in Paris, in 1874.

TASSAERT, PHILIP JOSEPH, a Flemish painter, born at Antwerp in 1732, was painter to Prince Charles of Lorraine. He migrated to England early in his career, and worked as journeyman for Hindson. In 1769 he became a member, and in 1775 president, of the Incorporated Society of Artists, where his works were chiefly exhibited. He practised as a picture restorer and dealer, and also scraped some plates. He died in London in 1803. Amongst his plates are:

Jonah thrown into the Sea; after Rubens.

The Woman taken in Adultery; after the same.

The Virgin and Child, with St. Elizabeth and St. John; after the same.

The Martyrdom of St. Lawrence; after the same.

The Parting of Venus and Adonis; after the same.

The Rubens Family; after the same. 1768.

Rubens' three Children; after the same.

J. Harrison; after T. King. 1768.

The Four Ages; after a drawing by himself. 1768.

TASSEL, PIERRE, a French painter of the 16th century, was born at Langres in 1521. The details of his career are unknown. At the Troyes Museum there is an 'Æneas carrying Anchises' by him.

TASSEL, RICHARD, born at Langres in 1588, was the pupil of his father, Pierre Tassel. When he was eighteen he went to Italy, and entered the school of Guido Reni at Bologna, moving afterwards to Rome. On his return to France he obtained a civil appointment, but still practised as a painter and sculptor. His works are to be found at Langres, Lyons, and Dijon. He died, according to the date on his epitaph, in 1660, though there is a 'St. Martina' by him, dated 1663. His son, JEAN TASSEL, born at Langres in 1608, was also a painter, and his father's pupil. He died in 1667.

TASSI, AGOSTINO, whose family name was Buonamici, was born at Perugia in 1565, and studied at Rome under Paul Bril, although he called himself a disciple of the Carracci. He painted landscapes in the style of Bril, and was rising into fame, when, for some unexplained offence, he was sent to the galleys at Leghorn. During his confinement he occupied himself in drawing the maritime objects with which he was surrounded, and after his liberation they became the favourite subjects of his pictures. He painted sea-ports, calm seas with shipping and fishing-boats, and occasionally storms. He also excelled in architectural and perspective views. Agostino Tassi was the master of Claude Lorraine. He died at Rome in 1644. He has left a few slight but spirited etchings, of storms at sea and shipwrecks.

TATE, WILLIAM, an English portrait painter, born about the middle of the 18th century. He studied under Wright of Derby, and practised successively in Liverpool, London, Manchester, and Bath. He was a member of the Incorporated Society, with whom he exhibited, as well as with the Royal Academy, from 1771 to 1804. He died at Bath in 1806.

TATHAM, CHARLES HEATHCOTE, architect, was also known as a draughtsman and etcher. He was born in 1770, studied in Italy, and was elected a member of the Academies of Rome and Bologna. In 1799 he published 'Etchings from the best Examples of Ancient Ornamental Architecture, drawn from the Originals at Rome'; in 1806 two volumes, 'Etchings representing Fragments of Grecian and Roman Architectural Ornaments,' and 'Designs for Ornamental Plate'; and in 1811, 'The Gallery at Castle Howard,' and 'The Gallery at Brocklesby.' He died in April, 1842.

TATORAC, V., engraved a set of one hundred and fifty wood-cuts for an edition of Ovid's 'Metamorphoses,' published in 1537; and a print of the 'Annunciation,' for a Prayer-book of 1530.

TAUBERT, GUSTAV, painter, was born at Berlin in 1755. His father, an obscure painter, was his first teacher, and he improved himself by copying the pictures in the Dresden Gallery. He afterwards went to Warsaw, where from 1785 to 1794 he painted portraits in pastel and historical pictures. In 1800 he went to Berlin, and became superintendent of the porcelain factory, and soon after court painter. He became a member of the Berlin Academy, and died in that city in 1839.

TAULER, (or TAULIER,) JEAN, painter and engraver, was born at Brussels, and established himself at Liège about 1600. He there married a sister of the painter, Simon Damery, and instructed her in painting. Pictures by him are to be found in several churches and convents of Liège. He died in 1640.

TAUNAY, ADRIEN, son of Auguste Taunay, the sculptor, and nephew of Nicolas Antoine, held the post of second draughtsman on the French corvette 'Uranie.' A number of his natural history designs were engraved about 1824.

TAUNAY, FÉLIX, painter, born in Paris about 1796, was the son and pupil of Nicolas Antoine. He accompanied his father on his Brazilian expedition, and on the return of the latter to France remained in Brazil, and accepted the post of Director of the Academy of Rio de Janeiro, which Nicolas Taunay had founded. He painted chiefly Brazilian scenery. He died in 1881.

TAUNAY, NICOLAS ANTOINE, painter, was born in Paris in 1755. He was the pupil successively of Bronet and of Casanova. He was received by the Paris Academy in 1784, but never became a full Academician. Through the influence of D'Argenvilliers he was admitted to the privileges of the Roman pension without competition, and passed three years in study in Rome. He was a foundation member of the Institute in 1795. In 1815 Taunay went to Brazil with several other French artists, and founded an academy at Rio Janeiro. In 1824 he returned to France, and painted in Paris till his death. He painted several of the battles and victories of Napoleon, and a great number of pictures in various other genres. He died in Paris in 1830. Works:

Montpellier.	Museum.	A Village Fête.
"	"	A Game of Bowls.
Paris.	Louvre.	Exterior of a Field Hospital in Italy: and several others.
Versailles.	Museum.	Battle of Ebersberg.
"	"	Bonaparte receiving Prisoners on the Battle-field.
"	"	The French Army descending the Great St. Bernard: and several others.

TAUPIN, MAURICE HIPPOLYTE, painter, born in France in 1795. He was a pupil of Budelot, and though the author of a few original works, is best known as an excellent restorer and transferrer of pictures.

TAUREL, ANDRÉ BENOÎT, engraver, born in Paris in 1794, was a pupil of Bervic, and entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1809. He gained the 'Prix de Rome' in 1818. His portrait of the Czar Nicholas I., after Kruger, was exhibited at the Salon in 1844.

TAUREL, JEAN JACQUES, painter, born at Toulon in 1757. He was a pupil of Doyen, and exhibited at the Salon from 1793 onwards. Many of his works celebrated the exploits of the Republican armies. Among such were: 'The Heroic End of the Vengeur,' 'Burning of the Port of Toulon, and its abandonment by the English' (painted for the Nation). His 'Entry of the French Army into Naples, January 21st, 1799,' is at Versailles. Many of his pictures have been lithographed. He died in Paris in 1832.

TAVARONE, LAZZARO, painter, was born at Genoa in 1556. He was a favourite disciple of Luca Cambiaso, whom he accompanied to Spain in 1583. He assisted him in his great work in the Escorial, and, after the death of Cambiaso, was employed to finish the paintings left imperfect by that master. He remained for some years in the service of the King of Spain, and returned rich to Genoa in 1594. His principal works there are his frescoes in the tribune of the cathedral, representing subjects from the life of S. Lorenzo, and the façade of the Dogana, or Custom-house, on which he painted a St. George and the Dragon. He also painted scenes from the life of Columbus, and the victory of the Genoese at Antwerp in the Saluzzo Palace at Albaro. He died in 1641.

TAVELLA, CARLO ANTONIO, called IL SOLFAROLA, was born at Milan in 1668. He was a scholar of Peter Molyn, called Il Tempesta, whose vigorous manner he followed with a spirit which earned him the name of Il Solfarola. He afterwards adopted a style distinguished by more amenity, and became the chief landscape painter of Genoa. He died at Genoa in 1738. He had two daughters, Angiola and Teresa, who painted landscapes, and lived about the middle of the 18th century.

TAVENER, WILLIAM, an English amateur painter, born in 1703, whose profession was that of a proctor in Doctors' Commons. He painted landscapes, and was further known as the author of two plays, 'The Maid the Mistress,' 1732, and the 'Artful Husband,' 1735. He died October 20, 1772.

TAVERNER, JEREMIAH, an English portrait painter, practising in the first half of the 18th century. His portrait of Defoe was engraved by M. Vandergucht, and his own portrait by John Smith.

TAVERNIER, FRANÇOIS, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1659. He became a member of the Academy in 1704, and a professor in 1724. He sent three pictures to the Salon of 1704, and died in Paris, September 10th, 1725.

TAVERNIER, —, painter, was born at Vannes, in France, but passed the greater part of his life in Belgium, where he painted landscapes, views of towns, &c. He died at Brussels in 1859.

TAVERNIER, MELCHIOR, a French engraver, who practised in Paris about the year 1630. He was a print-seller as well as an engraver, and was appointed engraver and copper-plate printer to the king in 1618. His prints are chiefly portraits; but he also engraved some ornamental subjects from his own designs. Among his plates we may name eight of Gardes Françaises, and fifty-seven small plates of 'Chevaliers du Saint Esprit'; also:

A Bust of the Duke of Alençon, crowned with laurel.
An Equestrian Statue of Henry IV. of France; inscribed, Melchior Tavernier a Paris, graveur et imprimeur du Roi, &c. 1627.

He died in Paris in 1641, at an advanced age.

TAYLOR, ALEXANDER, an English miniature painter, who was an occasional exhibitor at the Royal Academy from 1776 to 1796.

TAYLOR, CHARLES, an English engraver, born in London in 1748. He studied under Bartolozzi, and produced many plates after Angelica Kauffmann. His works appeared at the Incorporated Society between 1776 and 1782.

TAYLOR, EDWARD CLOUGH, amateur, of Kirkham Abbey, Yorkshire, has left a number of clever etchings. He was a graduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, taking his M.A. in 1814. He died in 1851, aged sixty-five.

TAYLOR, ISAAC, an English engraver, born at Worcester in 1730. In the early part of his career he worked successively as a brass-founder, as a silversmith, and as a surveyor. Then devoting himself to engraving, he found much employment in book illustration, for which he frequently furnished the designs. His best work was done for an edition of 'Sir Charles Grandison.' Many of his plates are to be found in the 'Gentleman's Magazine.' From 1774 to its dissolution, he acted as secretary of the Incorporated Society of Artists, where many of his works appeared. He died at Edmonton, October 17th, 1807.

TAYLOR, ISAAC, the son of the last-named, and an English engraver, was born in London about 1750. He studied under Bartolozzi, and worked much for Alderman Boydell, for whose Bible he made designs. Before he was forty he retired into Suffolk, and passed the remainder of his life as a dissenting minister. He was the father of Jane and Ann Taylor, the writers of 'Original Poems.' He died at Ongar, December 11th, 1829. Amongst his best plates are:

Henry the Eighth's First Sight of Anne Boleyn; after Stohard.

Falstaff and his Tormentors; after Smirke.
Assassination of Rizzio; after Opie. 1791.

TAYLOR, ISIDORE JUSTIN SÉVÉRIN, BARON, painter, engraver, and art-writer, was born at Brussels, of French parents, in 1789. He studied at the Ecole Polytechnique, but afterwards became the pupil of Suvée, and attracted notice by various articles on art matters. In 1811 he visited Belgium, Holland, Germany, and Italy, but the events of the day recalled him to France, and he served for some time in the army, notably in the Spanish campaign after the Bourbon restoration. On the conclusion of peace he retired from military life, and resumed his art work. It was at his instance that negotiations were opened with the Pacha of Egypt for removal of the Luxor obelisk, and its erection in the Place de la Concorde as a monument to the French victories in Egypt. Taylor was despatched to Egypt on this errand in 1830. He exhibited occasionally at the Salon, and some of his books of travel were illustrated with his own plates, as 'Voyages Pittoresques en Espagne, en Portugal, et sur la côte d'Afrique' (1826-1832). He founded the Association des Artistes in 1844, was several times premiated, became a member of the 'Institut' in 1847, and a senator in 1869. He died in Paris, September 6th, 1879.

TAYLOR, JAMES, an English engraver, born at Worcester in 1745. He was the younger brother of the elder Isaac Taylor, with whom he worked. Anker Smith was his pupil. He exhibited at the Incorporated Society between 1770 and 1776. He died in London in 1797.

TAYLOR, JOHN, an English portrait painter, who practised at Oxford in the 17th century. He was the nephew of Taylor, the water-poet. His portraits of his uncle (painted in 1655) and of himself are in the Bodleian.

TAYLOR, JOHN, an English marine and landscape painter, was born about the middle of the 18th century, at Bath. He practised in London as a painter, and also etched a few plates. He died at his native place in 1806.

TAYLOR, JOHN, known as 'Old Taylor,' born in London in 1739, was the son of an officer in the Customs, and a scholar of Francis Hayman. His early practice was that of taking likenesses in pencil, but afterwards, by the advice of his friends, Paul Sandby and J. A. Gresse, he adopted the business of teaching. By this he accumulated a sufficient sum to retire with comfort. He used to be called the father of the English school, as he was an original member of the Society of Incorporated Artists, and survived all the rest. He died in London on the 21st of November, 1838.

TAYLOR, SIMON, an eminent painter of botanical subjects, was employed by Lord Bute about 1760; and afterwards by Dr. Fothergill. The collection of plants he painted for the latter was sold to the Empress of Russia for £2000; those he painted for Lord Bute were sold by auction in 1794, and are now to be found in various collections. It is believed that Taylor died in 1798.

TAYLOR, THOMAS, an English engraver and print-seller, who practised in London from 1680 to 1720.

TAYLOR, THOMAS, an English engraver, who flourished towards the end of the 18th century. He engraved several plates for the collections published by Boydell, among them the following:

Henry VIII.; after Opie. (For the Shakespeare Gallery.)
Democritus and Protagoras; after Salv. Rosa.

A Flemish Collation; after Van Harp.

Two emblematical Vignettes from the designs of J. Gwyn.

TAYLOR, WILLIAM DEAN, an English line engraver, born in 1794, who obtained a considerable reputation. He died in 1857. His best plates are:

Acis and Galatea; after R. Cook.

The Duke of Wellington; after Sir T. Lawrence.

TAYLOR, WILLIAM B. SANSFIELD, a landscape and battle painter, born at Dublin in 1781. His early years were spent in the Army Commissariat, and he served in the Peninsula. Devoting himself to art, he exhibited at the Royal Academy and the British Institution between 1820 and 1847. During his latter years he was curator of the St. Martin's Lane Academy. As a painter he did not achieve much reputation; but he became known as an art writer. He died in 1850.

TEDESCO, ADAMO. See ELSHEIMER.

TEERLINK, ABRAHAM, a Dutch landscape and animal painter, was baptized at Dordrecht in 1776. His studies were directed by Versteeg and Arie Lamme. He spent some time in 1808 in England, and also in France, where he received advice from David. The latter part of his life was passed at Rome, where he died in 1857. There are by him:

Amsterdam. R. Museum. Italian Landscape. 1823.

" " Cascade at Tivoli. 1824.

Munich. Pinakothek. View of Aricia.

TEGLIACCIO, NICCOLÒ DI SER SOZZO, a Sieneſe miniaturist, who flourished about the middle of the 14th century, and died in 1363. His only known work is an 'Assumption,' forming the frontispiece to the 'Codex Caleffo,' in the Archivio Delle Riformazioni, at Siena.

TEICHEL, WILHELM, engraver, born at Berlin in 1815, executed the following plates:

A Roman Woman with a Child in her Lap; after E. Dage.

Italian Country Girl; after Roqueplan.

A Hartz Mountain Girl; after E. Meyerheim.

Frederick the Great; after Kaulbach.

He died in 1873.

TEISSIER, JAN GEORG, born at the Hague in 1750, painted portraits and landscapes in a very respectable manner, but was better known as a copyist and restorer of 'old masters.' He had sufficient merit to win him a place on the direction of the Hague Academy of Design, and on that of the Museum. He died at the Hague in 1821.

TEISSIER, JEAN, a French engraver, who practised in Paris about 1770. He was a scholar of Philip le Bas; among his plates we may name:

Les Mangeurs de Huitres; after Bénard.

Le Marchand de Poissons de Dieppe; after the same.

TEJADA, MORENO, a Spanish engraver, who made some plates for the quarto edition of the 'Conquest of Mexico,' published at Madrid in 1783.

TELBIN, WILLIAM, one of the most successful of English scene-painters, was born in 1813. One of his best works was his drop-scene for the 'Overland Route,' at Drury Lane theatre. He was a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, though not a contributor to their exhibition, and exhibited on rare occasions at the Royal Academy and British Artists' Gallery. Towards the close of his life he became a confirmed invalid, having suffered much from shock at the death of a son killed by an avalanche in the Alps. He died in 1873.

TELLIER, JEAN LE. See LETELLIER.

TELMAN VON WESEL, a German engraver, of whose personal history very little is known. He was a goldsmith engraver, working at Wesel in the first years of the 16th century. The British Museum has a collection of circular playing cards by him, and the three following plates may also be named:

The Virgin and Child on the crescent moon, with a Knight adoring; Signed: TELEMAN · OP · DEN · DICH · GOLTSMIT · OF · PRENTESNIER · TO · WESEL. and with the letters T. W.

St. Christopher.

St. Crispin and St. Crispinian.

TEMINI, GIOVANNI. The name of this engraver is affixed to a portrait of Carlo Gonzales, Duke of Mantua, which is dated 1622.

TEMMELE, (TÜMMELE,) ANTON, painter, was a native of Silesia, and flourished in the first part of the 19th century. He studied first at the Munich Academy and afterwards at Rome, where he remained for some time making copies of the old masters, such as the 'Madonna di Foligno,' and 'Transfiguration,' after Raphael; 'Aurora,' after Guido Reni; 'Diana,' after Domenichino. His last work was a copy of Raphael's 'Dispute of the Sacrament,' for the King of Prussia. He died at Rome in 1841.

TEMMINCK, H. C., a Dutch female painter, by whom there is a picture in the Rijks Museum at Amsterdam. She was painting about 1841, but nothing is known of her life except that she was the pupil of L. H. de Fontenay.

TEMPEL. See VAN DEN TEMPEL.

TEMPEST, PIERCE, an English mezzotint engraver, was born about the middle of the 17th century. He was pupil and assistant to Hollar. With engraving he combined the trade of print-selling. He is best known by his 'Cries and Habits of London,' (50 plates,) after Old Laroon, published in 1688. He also published a translation of C. Ripa's 'Iconologia,' in 1709. He died in London in 1717. Amongst his plates are:

Charles I.; after Van Dyck.

Charles II.

Nell Gwyn.

James II.; after Lely.

Mary of Modena, Queen of James II.; after the same.

Sir T. Killigrew.

Roger L'Estrange.

Ernest, Count Starembergh.

William, Prince of Orange.

William III.

Portrait of himself, with the motto Caveat volis Principes.

Andromeda; after An. Carracci.

Susannah and the Elders; after Corn-liissen (?).

TEMPESTA, ANTONIO, born at Florence in 1555, was first a disciple of Santi di Tito, but afterwards studied under Stradanus. His favourite subjects were battles, cavalcades, huntings, and processions, which he composed well, and painted with spirit. During a long residence at Rome he was much employed by Gregory XIII. in the gallery and loggie of the Vatican; and by the Marchese Giustiniani in the decorations of his palace. He also drew many designs for tapestries. In the church of S. Stefano Rotondo there is a fine 'Murder of the Innocents' by Tempesta. He also left some 1800 etchings. With the exception of occasional extravagance in design, they are very able performances. He usually marked his plates with one of these monograms, A. Æ. T. TA.

Among his numerous prints are the following:

A set of plates from the Old Testament, generally called Tempesta's Bible.

Twenty-four plates from the Life of St. Anthony.

A set of one hundred and fifty prints from Ovid's 'Metamorphoses.'

The Labours of Hercules; thirteen plates.

The Ages of Man; four plates.

The Entry of Alexander into Babylon.

Diana and Actæon.

The Crucifixion; inscribed Ant. Tempesta. 1612.

Many plates of Battles, Hunts, and Cavalcades.

He died at Florence in 1630.

TEMPESTA, (TEMPESTINO,) DOMENICO. See MARCHI.

TEMPESTA, PIETRO. See MOLYN, PIETER.

TEMPESTI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, born at Volterra in 1729, studied in Pisa and Rome. On his return from Rome to Pisa he painted for the church of S. Domenico scenes from the life of S. Chiara Gambacorti, and for the cathedral the 'Celebration of Mass by Pope Eugenius III.' He painted the music-hall in the Pitti Palace at Florence for Leopold I., also several frescoes in palaces and villas in Pisa. His largest fresco is the 'Last Supper,' in the cathedral of Pisa; his best, perhaps, the 'Death of S. Ranieri,' in the Oratory of S. Vito, where his oil painting, the 'Martyrdom of S. Ursula' is also to be seen. He died at Pisa in 1804.

TEMPLE, W. W., wood engraver, was one of Bewick's apprentices. For his master's 'British Birds' he engraved the plates of the rough-legged falcon, pigmy sand-piper, red sand-piper, and the eared grebe. He never practised independently, for at the close of his apprenticeship he gave up art, and went into business as a linen-draper.

TEMPLETOWN, VISCOUNTESS, (née Lady MARY MONTAGUE,) was born about 1770. She designed some groups for china, which were executed by Messrs. Wedgwood. There is at South Kensington an Indian ink drawing by her. She died in 1824.

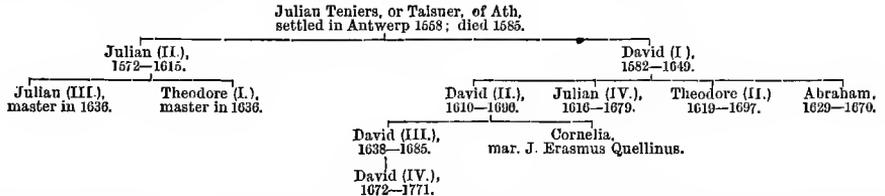

TEMPORELLLO, IL. See CASELLI.

TEN CATE, HENDRIK GERRIT, a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1803. He painted town views, winter scenes, &c., with moderate ability. He died in 1856.

TEN COMPE, JAN, born at Amsterdam in 1713, was a scholar of Dirk Dalens the younger. He painted landscapes, river scenes, views of cities and villages, among which were several different views of the Hague. His best pictures approach those of Berck-Heijde and Van der Heijde. He died in 1761.

TENIERS: the pedigree of the Teniers family is thus given by Wauters:

TENIERS, ABRAHAM, the younger brother of David Teniers the Younger, was born at Antwerp in the year 1629, and instructed in art both by his father and brother. He painted Flemish festivals in the style of David Teniers the Younger, and though his pictures are inferior both in the colour and handling, they are sometimes mistaken for the productions of his brother. There is by him a 'Portrait of a Prelate,' in the Hermitage at Petersburg, and an 'Armoury' in the Gallery at Madrid. He died in 1670.

TENIERS, DAVID, the Elder, was born at Antwerp in 1582. His father was one Julian Teniers, a mercer, who died in 1585, leaving also an elder son Julian, who was David's first master. The latter afterwards entered the school of Rubens. He for some time applied himself to historical painting, and visited Italy. His genius leading him to landscape painting, he placed himself under the tuition of Adam Elsheimer, at Rome, and studied under that master for six years. On his return to Flanders he painted rural sports, merry-makings, temptations of St. Anthony, fortune-tellers, &c. He treated those subjects with considerable humour and ingenuity, but his fame has been eclipsed by that of his son. Works:

Berlin.	Museum.	Temptation of St. Anthony.
Brussels.	"	Landscape.
Dresden.	Gallery.	A Village Fair, and six less important examples.
London.	Nat. Gal.	A Rocky Landscape.

"	"	Four Landscapes.

The following etchings are ascribed to the elder Teniers:

- A Pilgrim, with his staff and chaplet.
- A Peasant putting a plaster on his hand.
- Bust of a Peasant with a fur cap.

He died at Antwerp in 1649.

TENIERS, DAVID, the Younger, was born at Antwerp in 1610, and baptized in the church of St. Jacques on the 15th of December. His father was David Teniers the Elder, his mother Dymphne Cornelissen de Wilde, the daughter of a captain working on the Scheldt. There is no record of the year in which his apprenticeship to art began, or of the master who first taught him. This, however, was no doubt his father, of whose style the son's is, in fact, a sublimation. It has often been said that after leaving the paternal studio, he worked first under Brouwer and afterwards under Rubens. But of this no proof is forthcoming. Teniers and Rubens were, it is known, intimate friends, but the friendship does not seem to have begun until after the former had been received as a master by the Corporation of St. Luke. It may have had its origin in the choice of a wife made by Teniers. On the 22nd July, 1637, he married Anne, the daughter of Jan Brueghel, and a pupil of Rubens. She had been baptized in 1620, so cannot have been more than seventeen years of age. By her Teniers had five children, two sons and three daughters. Anne died in 1656, and six months later Teniers married Isabel, the daughter of Andreas de Fren, secretary to the Council of Brabant. By her he had three children, two sons and a daughter.

It is said, upon doubtful authority, that at first Teniers was unsuccessful as a painter, and had much difficulty in selling his pictures. If this were the case at all, it can only have been for a very short time, as by the date of his first marriage he must have been in comfortable circumstances. In 1644-5 he was dean of the Guild of St. Luke, and was appointed painter to the governor, Archduke Leopold William, who loaded him with gifts and commissions. Teniers set himself to make copies of the pictures, more than two hundred in number, in the Archduke's collection, and afterwards published plates from them. The Archduke's successor, Don Juan of Austria, the natural son of Philip IV., confirmed Teniers in his post, and even, it is said, practised art under his tuition. However this may be, it is certain that his father, Philip IV., conceived a great admiration for the Flemish master, and acquired those examples of his art which make the Madrid Gallery so rich in the work of Teniers. According to Cornelius de Bie, he also found favour with Queen Christina of Sweden, who sent him a gold chain and her portrait, and was sent to England to buy Italian pictures for the Count of Fuensaldagne.

In 1650 Teniers migrated from Antwerp to Brussels, becoming owner also of the famous country-house near Perck, of which we catch so many glimpses in his pictures.

In 1663 Teniers took an active part in founding the Antwerp Academy of the Fine Arts. In the same year he solicited admission to the ranks of the noblesse, declaring his family to be "honorable, originaire de Haynaut, cartier d'Ath," and describing the shield they had 'de tout temps porté,' thus: "Argent, à un ours au naturel, au chef d'azur, à trois glands d'or rangés; le heaume ouvert et treillé, bourrelet et hachements d'argent et d'azur; cimier, un ours naissant au blason de l'écu, tenant en sa patte droite un gland d'or." The result of his appeal seems to have been a recommendation that it should be granted, on condition that he no longer publicly exercised his profession for gain. This condition, perhaps, was fatal, for no more is heard of his nobility. Teniers died at Brussels on the 5th April, 1694, and was interred at Perck, in the neighbourhood of his chateau of Dry Toren. His second wife, Isabel, had preceded him to the grave.

The pictures of Teniers are innumerable. He painted nearly every kind of subject, but his finest art is confined to scenes from peasant life, which lend themselves most thoroughly to his faculty for rapid creation, for incisive, dexterous handling, and for the cooler harmonies of colour. Smith's catalogue enumerates nearly seven hundred pictures by his hand, and every important museum possesses a selection. In the following list only the more important and more accessible are included:

TENIERS, DAVID III., painter, born at Antwerp in 1638, was the eldest of the eleven children of David Teniers the Younger. Helena Fourment, the wife of Rubens, was his godmother. He was taken to Brussels by his father when very young, and afterwards sent to Spain to complete his education. The respectability of his talents is sufficiently shown by his having been his father's collaborator in many works, and also by the fact that the pictures of the two are often confounded. M. Wauters, in his 'Flemish School of Painting,' points out that it was David III., and not his father, who signed his pictures and cartoons David Teniers junior. A 'S. Dominic,' which still exists in the church at Perck, is a case in point. David III. died at Brussels in 1685. His son, DAVID IV., was also a painter. He was born in 1672, settled in Portugal, and died at Lisbon in 1771.

TENIERS, JULIAN, painter, another son of Julian, the mercer, has been often confounded with his father. He was born in 1572, and was therefore older than his brother, David Teniers the Elder, who was bound his apprentice in 1595. He stood godfather to David the Younger in 1610. Of his own works nothing definite is known. He died in 1615.

TENNANT, JOHN, an English painter, born in London in 1796. He painted at first subject pictures, such as 'Meg Merrilies,' 'The Old Smuggler,' 'The Old Forester,' but afterwards turned his attention to landscape. In 1842 he became a member of the Society of British Artists. He exhibited occasionally at the Academy between 1820 and 1847. He died in 1872.

TEOSCOPOLI. See THEOCOPOLI.

TERASSON, H., engraver, practised in London early in the 18th century. He engraved some entomological plates, and, in 1713, a 'View of the Banqueting-House, Whitehall,' from his own design.

TER-BORCH, GERARD, commonly called TERBURG, was born at Zwolle in 1617, and studied art under his father, an obscure painter, who had visited Italy; he was afterwards sent to Haarlem, and also visited Germany and Italy. He was very successful in his early years in the painting of portraits on a small scale. In 1646—1648 he was at Münster, where the plenipotentiaries of Spain and the delegates of the Dutch provinces were met to ratify the treaty of peace with Philip IV. His picture of that event, with the portraits of the assembled delegates, is considered his masterpiece, and is now in the National Gallery. He was fond of painting series of pictures, with some slight dramatic connection. Ter-borch visited the court of Spain, and was received with honour by Philip IV., who knighted him. He also visited the courts of France and England, but left no traces of his visit. On his return to Holland he probably resided for a time at Haarlem, but finally settled at Deventer, where he married his cousin, and became a member of the town council, and afterwards Burgomaster. His portrait in this capacity, in the Hague Museum, painted by himself about the year 1660, represents him wearing a majestic wig, the curls of which shade a long and somewhat melancholy face; the nose well shaped and long; the mouth firm and shaded with a greyish moustache. Terborch often introduces his own figure into his pictures. His life appears to have been free from incident. He died at Deventer, the 8th December, 1681, leaving no children. His pictures are comparatively few in number. The following is a list of the more accessible:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	His own Portrait.

TERBRUGGEN, HENDRIK, born at Deventer in 1588, was brought up in the school of Abraham Bloemart, at Utrecht. He resided ten years at Rome and Naples, where he painted many pictures for the churches and for private collections. When Rubens made his tour through Holland, he pronounced Terbruggen to be one of the ablest painters of his country. Of his works we may name: at Deventer, 'The Four Evangelists;' in the Copenhagen Gallery, 'Christ Crowned with Thorns;' and in the Wallraf Museum at Cologne, 'Esther and Vashti.' He died at Utrecht in 1629.

TERENZI DA URBINO, TEREZIO, called also IL RONDOLINO, was a native of Urbino, and flourished about the year 1600. He was a scholar of Barocci, and, according to Baglione, visited Rome, where he was favoured with the protection of Cardinal Montalto. He is said to have possessed an extraordinary talent for imitating the works of the great masters, and to have thus deceived some of the best judges. Having practised one of these deceptions on his benefactor, imposing on him a picture painted by himself for a work of Raphael, he was disgraced. There is a picture of his own composition in the church of S. Silvestro, at Rome, representing the Virgin and Infant Christ, with several Saints. He died in 1620.

TERHIMPEL, ANTHONIS, a painter of landscapes and kermesses, flourished at Delft about 1650. He painted much on porcelain, and many drawings by him are still extant.

TERLEE, — VAN, born at Dort in 1636, is said to have been a scholar of Rembrandt, and to have painted a few historical pictures of slight merit.

TERMISANO, DECIO, a Neapolitan, and pupil of Giovanni Filippo Criscuolo, and of Pittone and Marco da Siena, was born in 1565. Dominici, in his 'Lives of the Neapolitan Painters,' mentions a picture by this master in the church of S. Maria detta a Chiazza, at Naples, representing the 'Last Supper;' it is signed and dated 1597. He died in 1600.

TERNITE, WILHELM, painter, was born at Neustrelitz in 1786. He served in the army during the War of Deliverance, and later studied in Paris under Gros. He afterwards went to Rome and Naples, and made drawings from the Pompeian frescoes, which he published as lithographs. On his return to Germany, he devoted himself to portrait painting. Among his portraits are: 'The Emperor Francis II. of Austria,' 'Queen Louisa of Prussia,' and 'The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz.' Ternite died in 1871.

TEROL, JAYME, a Spanish painter, and pupil of Fray Nicolas, who from 1604 to 1607 assisted Rodriguez Espinosa on the high altar of the church of St. John Baptist at Muro, Valencia.

TERRY, G., an English engraver in mezzotint, who flourished from 1770 to 1788. He was chiefly employed in engraving portraits; among others, we have the following by him:

The Rev. John Towers; after Fisher. 1770.

The Rev. William Huntington. 1786.

The Rev. Richard Johnson, B.A., Chaplain at Botany Bay. 1787.

George Saville Carey, prefixed to his Lectures on Mimicry.

TERRY, H—J—, was born in England, but studied under Calame, in Geneva, and was for several years engaged in reproducing his master's works by lithography. He subsequently turned his attention to landscape painting in water-colour, 560 in which he was successful. He practised at Basle, Mülhausen, and Lausanne, exhibiting his works in Switzerland. He died at Lausanne in 1880.

TERSAN. See CAMPION, CHARLES PHILIPPE.

TERWESTEN, AUGUSTYN, painter, was born at the Hague in 1649. Without the help of an instructor, he made sufficient progress in art to be employed by the goldsmiths as a chaser, which profession he followed until he was twenty, when he turned to painting. He then became the pupil of an artist named Wieling, who had some reputation as an historical painter. Under him he studied two years. He afterwards placed himself under Willem Doudyns, and in a short time found himself in a position to undertake a journey to Italy. He travelled through Germany to Rome, where he met with sufficient employment to keep him for four years. He afterwards visited Florence and Venice, and in 1678 returned to Holland. He was chiefly employed in painting ceilings at the Hague, Amsterdam, and Dort, with subjects from Ovid. He was a principal agent in the re-establishment of the Hague Academy, which had for years been in a state of decay. In 1690 he was invited to the court of the Elector of Brandenburg, afterwards King of Prussia, who appointed him his principal painter, and made him director of the Berlin Academy. He died at Berlin in 1711. He etched a few plates.

TERWESTEN, ELIAS, younger brother of Augustyn Terwesten, was born at the Hague in 1651, became the disciple of his brother, and for some time applied himself to figure subjects; but not succeeding to his expectation, he turned to animals, flowers, fruit, and still life, in which he was more successful. Following the example of his brother, he travelled to Italy, and settled at Rome, where his works were held in considerable estimation. He was employed by the Elector of Brandenburg to collect works of art. By artists he was called 'The Bird of Paradise.' He died at Rome in 1729.

TERWESTEN, MATTHEUS, the youngest brother of Augustyn Terwesten, born at the Hague in 1670, was for some time instructed by his brother, but afterwards studied successively under Daniel Mytens II. and Willem Doudyns. On the departure of Augustyn Terwesten for the court of Berlin, he completed some of the pictures left unfinished by the latter. In 1694 he went to Italy, and worked three years in Rome. He also visited Berlin. Soon after his return to Holland he was received into the Hague Academy, and, early in the 18th century, appointed its director. One of his best works is a 'Christ on the Mount of Olives,' in the church of the Jansenists, at the Hague. In the Museum at Amsterdam there is a portrait by him of the Princess Anna, consort of William IV. of Orange. He died at the Hague, June 11th, 1757. His two sons, AUGUSTYN the younger, and PIETER, were also painters. AUGUSTYN, born at the Hague in 1711, was a member of the 'Pictura' Society. He practised at Delft and in his native town, and died in 1781. PIETER combined literature with his work as a painter. Born at the Hague in 1714, he became secretary of the 'Pictura' Society in 1762. He wrote sequels to Hoet's catalogues and various notices of Dutch artists. He died in 1798.

TERZI, CRISTOFORO, a native of Bologna, was born in 1692. He was a scholar of Guiseppe Maria Crespi, and acquired considerable reputation as a painter of history. There are several of his works at Bologna, among which the most worthy of notice is his 'S. Petronio kneeling before the Virgin,' in the church of S. Giacomo Maggiore. He died at Bologna in the prime of life in 1743.

TERZI, FRANCESCO, born at Bergamo about the year 1525, was a disciple of Giovanni Battista Moroni. According to Tassi, he painted history with some success, and distinguished himself, while still young, by two pictures for S. Francesco, at Bergamo, a 'Nativity of Christ,' and an 'Assumption of the Virgin.' He was invited to the court of the Emperor Maximilian II., who appointed him his painter. Terzi passed the greater part of his life in Germany, but died at Rome, at an advanced age, in 1600. A series of portraits by him of the Austrian arch-ducal family was afterwards engraved.

TESAURO, BERNARDO, born at Naples in 1440, was of the same family with Filippo Tesauro. He was a disciple of Silvestro dei Buoni, and an artist in great fame in his time. His chief picture was an 'Assumption of the Virgin,' in the church of S. Giovanni Maggiore. Frescoes by him still exist in the chapel of S. Aspreno, in the Duomo of Naples; and in the Chiesa dei Pappacodi. He died at Naples about 1500.

TESAURO, FILIPPO, or PIPPO, a Neapolitan painter, born about 1260, to whom is assigned a picture in the Museum at Naples, the Virgin with the Infant Saviour holding a basket of cherries, in the midst of Saints, with a lunette above, representing the Martyrdom of S. Lawrence. He also painted some frescoes in the church of S. Restituta, at Naples. He died about 1320.

TESAURO, RAIMO EPIFANIO, born at Naples about 1480, was the son (or nephew) and disciple of Bernardo Tessuro. He painted several considerable works in fresco in the public buildings of Naples. He died at Naples in 1511.

TESCHNER, ALEXANDER, painter, born at Berlin in 1816, began his studies at the Berlin Academy in the atelier of Professor Herbig, and studied later under Wach. On the death of the latter he turned his attention from historical to religious art, by which he soon acquired a reputation. Among other works he designed cartoons for the choir windows in Magdeburg Cathedral, and a 'Magdalen and Christ,' for the church of the Magdalen at Breslau. He visited Rome in 1857. His intercourse with Cornelius had an influence upon his art which is perceptible in his cartoons for windows in the cathedrals of Stralsund and Aix-la-Chapelle. Other works by him are: 'Ecce Homo,' in the church of Perleberg; 'Christ and the Four Evangelists' in the church of Teplitz; 'Angels' in the church at Baden-Baden. He died at Berlin in 1878.

TESI, MAURO ANTONIO, painter and engraver, born at Montebianco in Modena in 1730, first worked with the heraldic painter Morrettini. By study of the great masters, and by copying the designs of men like Metelli, Colonna, and others, he raised himself to a higher place in art. His pictures were chiefly interiors, with much elaborate decoration. Some of them were painted after the notions of Count Algarotti, TESI's patron, and among his engravings was a portrait of his patroness, the Countess Algarotti. He also left many plates of vases, foliage, arabesques, etc. He died in 1766.

TESTA, GIOVANNI CESARE, the nephew of Pietro Testa, born at Rome about the year 1630, is supposed to have been taught by his uncle, after whose designs he etched. He died in 1655. We have, among others, the following plates by him:

Portrait of Pietro Testa; J. Cesar Testa, sc.

The Death of Dido; after P. Testa.

The Centaur Chiron teaching Achilles to throw the Javelin; after the same.

The Emperor Titus consulting Basilides respecting his expedition against Jerusalem; after the same.

The Communion of St. Jerome; after Domenichino.

TESTA, PIETRO, called IL LUCCHESINO, born at Lucca in 1617, was a pupil of Pietro Paolini. He afterwards studied in Rome, first under Domenichino, and afterwards under Pietro da Cortona; but having spoken disrespectfully of the latter, he was dismissed from his school. He worked hard from the classical remains in Rome, but is said to have been of a morose disposition, making many enemies by his tongue. Testa was drowned in the Tiber in 1650. Of his works at Rome the best are, a 'Death of S. Angelo,' in the church of S. Martino a Monti; and the 'Sacrifice of Iphigenia,' in the Palazzo Spada. Many of his pictures are at Lucca. As an engraver, Pietro Testa is of some importance. Mariette had ninety-two etchings by him. He sometimes marked his plates, which are from his own designs, with the cipher T. The following are perhaps the best:

Abraham sacrificing Isaac; P. Testa, fec.

The Holy Family, with Angels.

A 'Madonna,' the Child embracing the Cross.

The Adoration of the Magi.

The Crucifixion.

Four scenes from the Parable of the Prodigal Son; P.

Testa, fe. Roma.

The Martyrdom of St. Erasmus.

St. Jerome praying.

St. Roch and two Bishops praying for the cessation of the Plague.

Thetis directing the infant Achilles to be plunged into the river Styx; P. Testa, fecit.

Achilles dragging the Body of Hector round the walls of Troy; P. Testa, aq. for.

Socrates at Table with his Friends; P. Testa. 1648.

The Death of Cato.

The Sacrifice of Iphigenia.

Four plates of the Seasons, with the Signs of the Zodiac.

The Triumph of Bacchus.

Faith, Hope, and Charity.

Magdalen in the Desert.

A young Woman in a Swoon, surrounded by Cupids.

TESTANA, GIOSEFFO, a relation of Giovanni Battista Testana, was born at Genoa about the year 1650. He was established at Rome in 1680, and engraved some of the plates for a work entitled 'Effigies of the Cardinals now living,' published in that year. We have also, among others, the following prints by him:

St. Margaret; after P. da Cortona.

An allegory of Religion holding the Portrait of Pope Alexander VII.; after the same.

TESTANA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian engraver, born at Genoa about the year 1645, resided chiefly at Rome, where, in conjunction with Guillaume Vallet and Etienne Picart, he engraved some plates from medals and antique gems, for the work of Canini. There are also a few independent plates by him, among them the following:

The Guardian Angel; after Pietro da Cortona.

The Baptism of Constantine; after Agost. Carracci.

He was living in 1700.

TESTELIN, HENRI, (TETTELIN,) the brother of Louis Testelin, was born in Paris about 1616. A scholar of Simon Vouet, he was at once portrait painter, engraver, and writer on art. He wrote a work entitled 'Sentimens des plus habiles peintres sur la pratique de la peinture et de la sculpture, mis en tables de préceptes, avec plusieurs discours académiques, ou Conférences tenues en l'Académie Royale desdits Arts,' &c., and filled it with illustrations engraved, and in some cases designed, by himself. Henri Testelin held the office of secretary to the Academy of Paris, of which he was a foundation member, and at the death of his brother, succeeded him as professor of painting. In 1681, however, he was excluded as a Protestant. He died at the Hague in 1695. At Versailles there are two portraits of Louis XIV. and one of Séguier by him.

TESTELIN, LOUIS, (TETTELIN.) a French painter and engraver, born in Paris in 1615, was a pupil of Simon Vouet. He painted history with success, and was a foundation member of the Paris Academy in 1648. His principal pictures are the 'Resurrection of Tabitha,' and the 'Scourging of Paul,' in the church of Notre Dame, Paris. Pictures by him are to be seen also in the museums of Rennes, Rouen, Grenoble, and Versailles. He etched a plate of 'The Holy Family,' after his own design. He died in 1655.

TETAR VAN ELVEN, JAN B., painter and engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1805. He studied at Antwerp under Meulemeester, and in Brussels under François. His portrait plate of the Prince of Orange, published in 1833, was the first engraving on steel executed in the Netherlands. In 1834, he became Director of an Art School at Amsterdam, and Member of the Academy in 1836. He was further known as a painter of portraits and genre pictures, and as an illustrator of books.

TEUCHER, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a German engraver, who practised in Paris about the year 1750, where he engraved the 'Virgin of the Rose,' after Parmigiano, for the publication known as the 'Dresden Gallery.'

TEUFEL'S MÜLLER. See MÜLLER, FRIEDRICH.

TEUNISSEN. See ANTHONISZON, CORNELIS.

TEXIER, G——, a native of Paris, and pupil of Ph. Le Bas, who flourished about the year 1780. He engraved several landscapes and genre pictures of the Watteau school in a neat, clear style. He was still living in 1824.

TEXIER, ANDRÉ LOUIS VICTOR, was born in 1777, at La Rochelle. He was a pupil of Fr. Piranesi and of Pierre Laurent. He engraved views of the Alhambra, of chemists' laboratories, and other such interiors. Some of the plates for the 'Musée Français,' and for De Clarac's 'Musée de Sculpture antique et moderne,' are by him. He died in Paris in 1864, from the effects of a carriage accident.

THACKER, ROBERT. By this English engraver, who signs himself designer to the king, we have a large print, in four plates, representing Salisbury cathedral. He flourished about 1670.

THACKERAY, WILLIAM MAKEPEACE, claims mention in a work like this by his artistic aspirations rather than by his art. Born at Calcutta in 1811, he was educated at the Charterhouse and at Cambridge. For some time he wavered between literature and art, but he soon found his true vocation. Amongst the works he illustrated himself are 'Comic Tales and Sketches,' 'The Irish Sketch Book,' 'The Paris Sketch Book,' 'Memoirs of Mr. Charles Yellowplush,' 'The Book of Snobs,' 'Catherine, Little Travels, and the Fitzboodle Papers,' 'Christmas Books,' 'Vanity Fair,' 'Penny-dennis,' 'Denis Duval' (jointly with F. Walker), and 'Burlesques' (jointly with R. Doyle). He died at Kensington, December 24, 1863. There is a collection of his original drawings in the Forster Collection at South Kensington. A selection of nearly 600 of his sketches was published in 1875.

THÄTER, JULIUS CÆSAR, engraver, born at Dresden in 1804. He had in his youth to struggle with poverty, and for a time made a scanty living by any humble employment that came to hand. In 1818, however, he was enabled to enter the Dresden Academy, and from 1826 to 1828 he worked in Nuremberg; he was for a time at Berlin, and also studied in Munich under Amsler, but in 1834 he settled in Munich, where he engraved seven plates for Count Raczyński's 'History of Art.' In 1842 he went to Weimar as a teacher in the Art School, and in 1843 returned to his native town, where, in 1846, he was appointed teacher at the Academy; three years later he became professor of engraving at Munich. Thäter died in Munich in 1870. His principal plates are the following:

Barbarossa in Milan; after Schnorr.
 Barbarossa in Venice; after the same.
 Designs for Faust; after Schwind.
 Ritter Curt's Brautfahrt; after the same.
 St. Elizabeth's Works of Mercy; after the same.
 Cinderella; after the same.
 Barbarossa in Milan; after Mücke.
 The Battle of the Giants; after Kaulbach.
 Chrimbild and Siegfried's Corpse; after Schnorr.
 The Fates; after Carstens.
 Charon; after the same.
 The Battle of the Saxons; after Kaulbach.
 Rudolph of Hapsburg; after Schnorr.
 Designs for the Campo Santo in Berlin; after Cornelius.
 The Four Riders of the Apocalypse; after the same.
 The Golden A B C; after König.
 The Psalms; after the same.

THEER, ROBERT, miniature painter and lithographer, was born at Johannesberg, in Silesia, in 1808. Among his best miniatures were those of the engraver Desnoyers, and of H. Ratakowski. He died at Vienna in 1863.

THELOTT, ERNST, portrait painter, born in 1802, was son and pupil of Ernst Karl Gottlieb Thelott. He studied at the Academies of Düsseldorf and Munich, and afterwards painted portraits. He died at Augsburg in 1833.

THELOTT, ERNST KARL GOTTLIEB, engraver, born at Augsburg in 1760, studied at Augsburg and Munich, and then settled at Düsseldorf, where he was named professor, and engraved several plates for the 'Düsseldorf Gallery.' He worked chiefly for almanacs. His best independent plates are:

The Sleeping Girl; after Amoros.
 The Sick Lady; after Jan Steen.

He died at Augsburg in 1839.

THELOTT, JACOB GOTTLIEB, (sometimes called JOHANN GOTTFRIED,) a German engraver, was born in 1714. He engraved several portraits; among others, that of 'Guido Patten, M.D., Paris.' He also engraved some of the plates for a work entitled 'Représentation des Animaux de la Ménagerie de Prince Eugène,' published in 1734. He died in 1773. His father JOHANN ANDREAS, a famous goldsmith of Augsburg, (born 1654, died 1734,) is also known as a draughtsman and etcher of some merit.

THELOTT, KARL, engraver and portrait painter, born at Düsseldorf in 1793, was the son and pupil of his father, Ernst Karl, and went to Munich in 1814 to study portrait painting under Langer. In 1821 he was employed in Düsseldorf by Prince Frederick of Prussia, and was afterwards engaged in painting portraits of various princely personages in Frankfurt, Berlin, and Westphalia. He died at Augsburg in 1830.

THÉNOT, JEAN PIERRE, a French water-colour painter and draughtsman, was born in Paris in 1803. His art training was obtained at the École des Beaux Arts, (which he entered in 1819,) and under Thibault. He first exhibited at the Salon in 1827. Much of his attention was devoted to lithography, in which medium he produced many landscapes, hunts, and animal subjects. He also delivered courses of lectures on anatomy and perspective, and published 'Essai de Perspective' (1826), 'Cours de Perspective Pratique' (1829), and 'Règle de la Perspective Pratique' (1839). He died in Paris, October 11, 1857.

THEOBALD, HENRY, an English water-colour painter of little note. He was elected an associate of the Institute of Painters in Water-colours in 1847, and died in 1849.

THEODORE, —, was a scholar of François Millet, in whose style he painted landscapes. He etched twenty-eight plates from the designs of his master, which are inscribed 'Francisque pinxit avec privilege du Roy; or Francisque pinxit, Simon excudit cum privilegio Regis.'

THEODORE, A—, is mentioned by Strutt as the designer and engraver of a Dutch Procession, etched and retouched with the graver, in a style resembling that of Hollar. It is dated 1636.

THEODORE, CASPAR. See FÜRSTENBERG.

THEODORICH OF PRAGUE, a painter employed by the Emperor Charles IV. at Prague, flourished from about 1348 to about 1375. A series of 125 colossal half-length figures of saints, teachers, and rulers of the Church, executed in tempera, on panel, for the church of the Holy Cross, at Schloss Carlstein in Bohemia, are ascribed to him. One of the series, St. Ambrose, is now in the Imperial Gallery at Vienna. Akin to these pictures is an altar-piece in the Gallery of the Estates of Bohemia at Prague, from the Provost's House at Raudnitz, containing the Virgin and Child adored by the Emperor Charles IV. and his son Wenceslaus, with Saints and the donor. There is also a 'Crucifixion' by the same artist in the Gallery at Vienna.

THEODOROS, a native of ancient Athens, was a painter of considerable celebrity. Among his principal works were the following: 'Clytemnestra and Ægisthus slain by Orestes'; several pictures of events from the Trojan war, which were afterwards taken to Rome, and a 'Cassandra,' preserved in the Temple of Concord. Several other artists of the same name, both painters and sculptors, are mentioned by Pliny and by Diogenes Laertius.

THEOLON, ÉTIENNE, (or THÉAULON), a French painter of interiors and conversations, was born at Aignes-mortes in 1739. He was a scholar of Joseph Vien, but did not follow his manner. Being of a delicate constitution, he was a slow worker, and his pictures are not numerous. His works were in great request during his life, and he was a member of the Paris Academy. He died in Paris, May 10, 1780. In the Louvre there is a 'Portrait of an Old Woman,' by him. Other examples are to be found at Angers and Montpellier.

THEOMNESTES, an ancient Greek painter, who flourished about 331 years before Christ, and is mentioned by Pliny as, in some respects, the equal of Apelles.

THEON, a painter of Samos, who flourished in the time of Philip of Macedon and Alexander the Great.

THEOPHANES OF CONSTANTINOPLE, painter, flourished in the first half of the 13th century. He went to Italy and settled at Venice, where he is said to have formed a school.

THEOPHILUS, (THEOPHILUS MONACHUS, or THEOPHILUS PRESBYTER), a miniaturist, and a writer upon the processes of painting, flourished, probably in Lombardy, in the first half of the 12th century. His 'Schedula Diversarum Artium,' is of value as the earliest known work on art in the middle ages. The oldest known codex is in the Ducal Library at Wolfenbüttel. Others are at Leipsic, Cambridge, and Paris.

THEOTOCOPULI, (or TEOSCOPOLO), DOMENICO, called also IL GRECO, and EL GREGO, is supposed from his name to have been of Greek origin, but was born in one of the Venetian States. It is also said that he was a scholar of Titian, but this is uncertain, as he is not named among that master's disciples, though in many of his earlier pictures there is a manifest imitation of his style. In most of his work the style of Tintoretto is clearly the chosen model, and it is more than probable that Robusti was his true master. One of his best pictures is the 'Parting of our Lord's Raiment,' in the cathedral of Toledo. The time of his birth is placed about 1548, but the most authentic account of him, as an artist, commences in 1577, when, according to Cean Bermudez, he was practising at Toledo, having been summoned to Spain by Philip II. to work in the Escorial. It is certain that the greater part of the pictures ascribed to him were painted in Spain, and he occupies an important place in the history of art in that country. Many of the distinguished Spanish painters were his scholars, or at least his disciples. Theotocopuli was also an architect and a sculptor; some will have it that he was an engraver on wood as well, but this is doubtful. He died in 1625. Works:

London. Nat. Gallery. St. Jerome.

Madrid. Gallery. A Dead Christ; and several portraits.

Petersburg. Hermitage. Portrait of Alonso Ercilla.

Vienna. Gallery. Portrait of a Young Man.

THERBUSCH, ANNA DOROTHEA. See LISCZEWSKA.

THESEL, ANTON MORITZ FÜRCHTEGOTT, was born at Wurzen in Saxony, in 1830. He studied first under Friedrich Nestler, and then worked from nature, in the neighbourhood of Dresden, Bavaria, the Tyrol, and Switzerland. He died at Dresden in 1873.

THÉVENIN, CHARLES, painter, was born in Paris in 1760. He was a pupil of Vincent, and won the Prix de Rome in 1791. He became a member of the Institut in 1825, and keeper of the prints in the Bibliothèque Royale in 1829. He died in 1838. Among his works are:

Cædipus in the Storm with Antigone.

The Capture of Gaeta by Ney.

Angereau at Arcola. (Versailles.)

The Passage of the French over the St. Bernard. (Do.)

The Battle of Jena.

The Martyrdom of Stephen. (Paris; S. Etienne du Mont.)

And other works at Angers, Douai, and the Great Trianon.

THÉVENIN, CLAUDE NOËL, painter, was born at Crémieux (Isère), in 1800. He was a pupil of Maricot and of Abel de Pujol, and was a frequent exhibitor at the Salon from 1822 to 1849, in which latter year he died in Paris. At the Ministère de l'Intérieur there is an 'Apostles at the tomb of the Virgin' by him, and at Versailles the following portraits.

Louis XI.

Lieut.-General Jean Étienne de Perz de Crassier.

Marshal Augereau.

Jean Chapelain, poet, and founder of the Comité Central des Artistes.

THÉVENIN, JEAN CHARLES, engraver, born at Rome in 1819, was the son and pupil of Charles Thévenin, and pupil also of Mercuri and Henriquel. He killed himself in 1869, at Rome, by throwing himself from the top of St. Paul's Without the Walls. Among his plates are:

St. Luke painting the Virgin; after Raphael.

The Charitable Child; after Ary Scheffer.

The 'Madonna della Tenda'; after Raphael (? Domenico Alfani).

The Mandolin Player; after Ingres.

Susannah in the Bath; after Correggio.

The Children of Charles I.; after Vandyck.

Beatrice Cenci; after Guido.

An Allegory (Alfonso d'Avalos and a young woman); after Titian.

THEW, ROBERT, an excellent engraver in the chalk and dotted manner, was born at Patrington, Holderness, in 1758, served till 1783 as a soldier, and then at Hull took to engraving visiting cards and addresses. His Head of an Old Woman, after G. Dou, first brought him into notice, and he was afterwards employed by Boydell on the large plates for his 'Shakespeare.' Of these he engraved scenes from

The Tempest; after Wright.

The Merry Wives of Windsor; after Peters.

The Taming of the Shrew; after Smirke.

A Winter's Tale; after Hamilton.

As You Like It (the Lover in the Seven Ages); after Smirke.

The Cauldron scene in Macbeth; after Reynolds.

King John; after Northcote.

Richard II. (Bolingbroke entering London); after the same.

Henry IV. (the Boar's Head Tavern); after Smirke.

Henry IV. (Henry asleep); after Boydell.

Henry VI. (Countess of Auvergne's Castle); after Opie.

Mortimer and Richard Plautagenet; after Northcote.

Richard III. (Burial of the Children); after the same.

Henry VIII.; after Peters.

Timon of Athens; after Opie.

Cymbeline, Imogen and Pisanio; after Hoppner.

Hamlet (Ghost on the Platform); after Fuseli.

Of his independent plates, the best is 'Wolsey entering Leicester Abbey,' after Westall. He held the appointment of engraver to the Prince of Wales, and died at Stevenage in 1802.

THIBAULT, JEAN THOMAS, painter and architect, was born at Montierender, Haute Marne, in 1757. He at first painted landscapes, but afterwards took to architecture, and went as King's Pensioner to Rome, where he studied from the antique. On his return he became a member of the 'Institut,' and Professor of Perspective at the École des Beaux Arts, and wrote a practical handbook on that science, which was published by his pupil, Chapuis. He died in Paris, June 27th, 1826.

THIBOUST, BENOÎT, a French engraver, born at Chartres about the year 1655. He resided some years at Rome, where he engraved several single plates after Italian masters, and a set of thirty-four from the Life of St. Turribus, after Gio. Battista Gaetano, entitled 'Vita Beati Turribii, Archiepiscopi Limani in Indiis.' These were published at Rome in 1679. He worked with the graver only, in a style resembling that of Mellan, at a respectful distance. The following independent prints by him may be mentioned:

St. Theresa; after Bernini.

St. Bibiena; after the same.

St. Thomas d'Aquinas; after Giacinto Calandrucci.

St. Rosa kneeling before the Virgin; after Baldi.

The Martyrdom of St. Peter; after the same.

St. Peter of Alcantara; after the same.

The Crucifixion; after Pulzone.

THIELE, JOHANN ALEXANDER, was born at Erfurt, in Saxony, in 1685. He began life as a soldier, and is said to have been a scholar of C. L. Agricola, but was chiefly a student from nature. His pictures represent the beautiful scenery on the banks of the Saal and the Elbe. He was appointed painter to the court of Dresden, and has the credit of having been the master of Dietrichy. We have several original etchings by Thiele, of views in Saxony, dated from 1726 to 1743. He died at Dresden in 1752. His son JOHANN FRIEDRICH ALEXANDER, born 1747, died 1803, was also a landscape painter and engraver.

THIELEN, JAN PHILIP VAN, (from his mother called RIGOLTS, or RIGOLZ,) HERR VAN COUWENBERCH, was born at Mechlin in 1618. He was of a noble family, and was Seigneur of Cowenberch, on which account he usually signed his pictures J. P. Cowenberch. An early inclination for art induced him to study in the atelier of Rombouts, and also to take lessons of Daniel Zeghers. In competition with Zeghers, he was engaged to paint a picture for the Abbey of St. Bernard, near Antwerp, on which occasion he exerted all his ability, and his performance was judged to be little inferior to that of his master. He arranged his flower-pieces with taste; and though his pictures are less brilliant than those of Zeghers, they are highly finished and good in colour. He particularly excelled in representing insects. Poelenburgh and others occasionally painted figures in the centres of his flower garlands. Several of his best productions are in the royal collections in Spain, and the Vienna Gallery has three pictures by him. He died in 1667. His daughters and pupils, MARIA THERESA, ANNA MARIA, and FRANCES KATHARINA, attained considerable excellence as flower painters. Maria Theresa, the eldest, also painted portraits with some success.

THIELENS, JAN, a Flemish painter, who flourished at Antwerp about 1694. He painted the interiors of studios and laboratories, in the manner of David Teniers.

THIENON, ANNE CLAUDE, painter, born in Paris in 1772, studied in Paris and Italy, and painted large landscapes in water-colours from the scenery round Rome and in provincial France. He exhibited at the Salon from 1798 to 1822, and died in Paris in 1846.

THIERRIAT, AUGUSTIN ALEXANDRE, a French subject and flower painter, was born at Lyons in 1789. He was a pupil of Grognaud and Revoil, and first exhibited at the Salon in 1817. In 1823 he was appointed a Professor in the Lyons Academy, and subsequently Director of the Museum. He also founded at Lyons the 'Galerie des Peintres Lyonnais.' These occupations left him but little leisure for painting in his later years. He died at Lyons, April 14th, 1870.

THIERRY DE HAARLEM. See BOUTS.

THIERRY, E. J., engraver, born in Paris in 1787, was the son and pupil of Jacques Etienne Thierry, the architect. He was chiefly engaged on plates for books on architecture. He was the author of a 'Cours pratique de Dessin linéaire, contenant 145 Planches.' He engraved the plates for Delaborde's 'Voyage en Espagne.'

THIERRY, JOSEPH FRANÇOIS DESIRÉ, painter, born in 1812, was a pupil of Gros, and studied at the École des Beaux Arts. He exhibited many landscapes at the Salon from 1833, but is better known as scene-painter to the opera. In conjunction with Cambon, he furnished scenery for the following operas:

Le Prophète.	Joseph.
Jerusalem.	Quentin Durward.
The Wandering Jew.	L'Étoile du Nord.
The Bleeding Nun.	Midsummer Night's Dream.

He died in Paris, November 11th, 1866.

THIERRY, WILHELM, painter and architect, was born at Bruchsal in 1766. He studied landscape at Mannheim, under Ferdinand Kobell. In 1810 he went to Carlsruhe, where he studied under Weinbrenner, and finally devoted himself entirely to architecture. He etched a few landscapes. He died in 1823.

THIERS, BARON DE, a French amateur engraver, who etched a few landscapes and subjects after Boucher. He was living about the year 1760.

THIERS, LE. See LETHIÈRE.

THIERNATI, FRANCESCO, an artist of the Perugian School, of whom very little is known. An 'Annunciation' in St. Domenico, a similar subject in the cathedral, and other less important pictures by him may be seen at Città di Castello.

THIM, MOSES, a German printer and engraver, resided at Wittenberg about the year 1613, and is said to have marked his plates with the initials M. T., sometimes separate, sometimes in a monogram, M.

THIRION, CHARLES VICTOR, a French subject painter and engraver, born at Langres in 1833. He was a pupil of Gleyre and Bouguereau. His works first appeared at the Salon in 1861. He scraped several mezzotints after Bouguereau, Lobrichon, and others. He died in 1878.

THIRTLE, JOHN, an English water-colour painter, born at Norwich in 1774, of humble parentage. He was one of the Cromie circle, and married a sister of J. S. Cotman. A member of the Norwich Society, he contributed largely to its exhibitions, sending on one occasion as many as thirteen works. His practice included portrait painting, and in 1816 he exhibited his own portrait on the walls of the Society. He only once, in 1808, appeared at the Royal Academy. His landscape subjects were taken from Wales and the Thames, as well as from the neighbourhood of Norwich and the Norfolk coast. He died at Norwich, September 29th, 1839. Two of his water-colour drawings are in the South Kensington Museum.

THIRY, LÉONARD, called LEO DAVEN, or D'AVESNE, was born at Bavay, Belgium, about 1600. He was both painter and engraver, and worked at Fontainebleau with Rosso and Primaticcio. Bartsch enumerates sixty-nine plates by him, of religious, historical, and mythological subjects. He died about 1550.

THOM, JAMES, painter, was born at Edinburgh about 1785. After a term of study in his native city, he came to London, where he practised for some years. In 1815 he exhibited at the Royal Academy. His 'Young Recruit' was engraved by Duncan in 1825.

THOMAN, (or THOMANN,) CHRISTIAN RAYMOND, a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1730. He engraved some of the plates for the collection of prints from the antique marbles at Dresden.

THOMANN VON HAGELSTEIN, JAKOB ERNST, born at Lindau in 1588. He received his first instruction in the art from an obscure painter in his native town. At the age of seventeen he travelled to Italy, and on his arrival at Rome became a disciple of Adam Elsheimer, whose style he imitated with success. During a residence of fifteen years in Italy, he visited Naples and Genoa, where his pictures were held in no less esteem than at Rome. After the death of Elsheimer he returned to Germany, and established himself at Lindau. He painted small and neatly finished landscapes, enriched with figures representing historical or Biblical subjects. He died at Lindau in 1653.

THOMANN VON HAGELSTEIN, PHILIP ERNST, the grandson of Jakob Ernst, was born at Augsburg in 1657. He was a mezzotint engraver, and painted some pictures for churches. Among his prints one is mentioned by Laborde as being tolerably good; it is the half-length portrait of Narcissus Rauner in ecclesiastic costume. He died in 1726.

THOMAS, GEORGE HOUSMAN, painter, was born in London in 1824. He worked for a time with the wood engraver, Bonner, and then went to Paris, where he began his career as a book illustrator. In Paris he was commissioned to make illustrations for an American paper in New York, and also to supply designs for American banknotes. He afterwards went to Italy, and being present at the defence of Rome by Garibaldi, he supplied the 'Illustrated London News' with a series of interesting sketches, and was permanently retained on the staff of that journal. He was much employed by the Queen to make drawings, and Her Majesty possesses an album of such sketches, in which she herself and Prince Albert frequently figure. Among his illustrations we may name those for 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' and for Wilkie Collins' 'Armada'; and among his pictures, 'Rotten Row,' 'Apple Blossoms,' &c. He died at Boulogne in 1868, from the effects of a fall from his horse. The following pictures are in the Royal collection:

- The Marriage of the Prince of Wales.
- The Marriage of the Princess Alice.
- Distribution of Crimean Medals by the Queen.

THOMAS, JAN, born at Yprès, in Flanders, about the year 1610, was a pupil of Rubens. After passing some years under that master, he travelled to Italy with his friend and fellow-student, Abraham Diepenbeeck. He afterwards passed the greater part of his life in Germany. The Emperor Leopold I. appointed him his principal painter in 1662. In the church of the Barefooted Carmelites, at Antwerp, there is an altar-piece by Thomas, 'St. Francis kneeling before the Virgin and infant Christ.' In the Vienna Gallery there is a 'Triumph of Bacchus'; and other examples are to be seen at Yprès. He has left a few spirited etchings; among them the following:

- A Lady at her Toilet, holding a Portrait; J. Thomas. inv. et fec.
- A Shepherd and Shepherdess.
- A Satyr embracing a Shepherdess.
- A Pastoral Group, three Men and three Women, one of the men playing on the Bagpipes.

He was one of the first workers in mezzotint. His plates are scarce and fetch high prices. The following may be named :

- A Female at a window, with a lantern ; after G. Dou.
- A Lady, supposed to bear some resemblance to Christina of Sweden, attended by an armed Cupid.
- The bust of a Warrior wearing a helmet, and holding a lance over the left shoulder. Motto, Pro Deo et Patriâ.
- Portrait of the Emperor Leopold.
- Portrait of Titian. Inscribed: Dato in luce in questa nuova invenzione in Vienna li 30 Marzo l'anno 1661. (Perhaps his masterpiece.)
- Diogenes the Philosopher.

Thomas died at Vienna in 1672.

THOMAS, JEAN BAPTISTE, painter, born in Paris in 1791, was a pupil of Vincent, and received the 'Prix de Rome' in 1816. He exhibited at the Salon between 1818 and 1832. His chief works are: 'Christ clearing the Temple,' in the church of St. Roch in Paris; 'The Procession of St. Januarius;' 'The Hermit in the Storm.' Under the title of 'A Year at Rome' he published seventy-two plates of Roman costumes, &c. He died in Paris in 1834.

THOMASSIN, HENRI SIMON, the son of Simon Thomassin, born in Paris in 1688, was trained by his father. After a two years' residence at Amsterdam he returned to Paris, and was received into the Academy in 1728. His plates are executed with more freedom than those of his father, and he made more use of the point. He died in Paris in 1741. We have, among others, the following prints by him :

- Louis XIV., presented to the Arts by Minerva ; after L. de Boullogne; engraved for his reception into the Academy. 1728.
- Louis, Dauphin of France ; after Tocqué.
- The Bust of Cardinal de Fleury, supported by Diogenes ; after Rigaud.
- Jean Thierry, Sculptor to the King ; after N. Lar-gillière.
- Carlo Cignani, Painter ; after a portrait by himself.
- Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus ; after P. Veronese; for the 'Collection Crozat.'
- Adam and Eve driven from Paradise ; after D. Feti; for the same.
- Melancholy ; after the same; for the same.
- The Magnificat, or Song of the Virgin ; after Jouvenet.
- Coriolanus and his Family ; after La Fosse.
- The Plague at Marseilles ; after J. F. de Troy.

THOMASSIN, PHILIPPE, a French engraver, was born at Troyes about the year 1560. He went to Rome when he was young, and resided there for the greater part of his life. According to Huber, he was a pupil of Cornelius Cort, whose style he followed with considerable success. He worked entirely with the burin. His plates are numerous, amounting to upwards of two hundred, of which about fifty are from antique statues in Rome. In 1600 he published a 'Recueil de portraits des Souverains et des Capitaines les plus illustres,' with notices in Latin. Callot and Nicolas Cochin were his pupils. He died at Rome, very old, about 1649. The following are, perhaps, his best plates :

- The Portrait of the Duc de Mercœur.
- 'Christ and the Apostles;' after Raphael. A set of fourteen plates.
- St. Margaret ; after the same.
- St. Cecilia ; after the same.
- The School of Athens ; after the same.
- The Dispute of the Sacrament ; after the same.
- The Battle of Ostia ; after the same.
- The Incendio del Borgo ; after the same.
- The Holy Family ; after Federigo Zuccaro.
- The Adoration of the Magi ; after the same.
- The Miracle at the Marriage of Caua ; after Taddeo Zuccaro.

- The Nativity ; after Ventura Salimbeni.
- The Purification of the Virgin ; after F. Barocci.
- The Last Judgment ; after F. Vanni.
- Apollo and the Muses ; after Bal. Peruzzi; a frieze.
- Christ before the Sanhedrim ; inscribed, Ph. Thomassinus sc. et exc., Roma, 1649. (Probably his last plate.)

THOMASSIN, SIMON, nephew of Philippe Thomassin, was born at Troyes about 1652. After being instructed in the rudiments of design at Paris, under Étienne Picart, he went to Rome, and studied for some time in the French Academy there. He then devoted himself to engraving. His plates are executed entirely with the burin, in a neat, clear style, but without much intelligence in the matter of chiaroscuro. He was a member of the Paris Academy, and was one of the engravers to the king. His most considerable work was a folio volume of plates from the statues and other marbles in the palace and garden of Versailles; it was published in Paris in 1694, and republished at the Hague in 1723. We have also, among others, the following independent prints by him :

- Louis XIV.
- Louis, Duke of Burgundy. 1698.
- Marie Adelaide of Savoy, Duchess of Burgundy.
- Paul Beauvillier, Duc de St. Aignan. 1695.
- The Duc de Maine.
- Charles XII. of Sweden.
- Pierre Corneille ; after Le Brun.
- The Miraculous Draught of Fishes ; after Raphael.
- The Transfiguration ; after the same.
- St. Paul taken up into the third Heaven ; after N. Poussin.
- Christ praying on the Mount ; after Le Brun.
- St. Benedict ; after Ph. de Champagne.
- Christ disputing with the Doctors ; after Lesueur.
- St. Ambrose and the Emperor Theodore ; after Bon Boullogne.
- St. Scholastica ; after Jouvenet.

He died in Paris in 1732.

THOMÉ, LUCA, a Siense artist of the 14th century, probably a pupil of Simone Martini, and the companion of Barna and Lippo Memmi. His name is the third on the register of the Compagnia di S. Luca for 1355, when that guild was finally established. He and Cristoforo di Stefano restored in 1357 a 'Madonna' which had been painted above the portal of the Duomo of Siena in 1333 by Pietro Lorenzetti. In 1373 he painted, by order of the general council, an altar-piece in honour of St. Paul, to celebrate the Siense victory over the Cappellucci. He was himself a member of the council for the Duomo in 1388 and 1389. He is known to have painted about this time some frescoes in the church of S. Domenico, at Arezzo, but they have wholly disappeared. In 1389 he assisted Bartolo di Maestro Fredi and his son Andrea in an altar-piece for the chapel of the Shoemakers' Guild in the Siena Duomo. Della Valle mentions a 'Madonna' painted by him in 1392, for the church of S. Francesco in Siena. The date of Luca Thomé's death is uncertain. Works :

- Castello S. } Certosa { Virgin and Child with St. Anne.
- Quirico. } (1367.)
- Pisa. } Academy. The Crucifixion. (1366.)

THOMPSON, CHARLES, an English wood engraver, born in London in 1791. He was the brother of John Thompson, and studied under Bewick and Branston. In 1816 he settled in Paris, where he obtained a large practice, and was held in high repute, receiving a gold medal in 1824. He introduced the practice of engraving on the end of the wood, on a section across the grain, into France. He died at Bourg-la-Reine in 1843, and his widow was granted a pension by the French government. Specimens of his work are to be found in :

- 'L'Histoire de l'ancien et du nouveau Testament.' 1835.
- 'Fables de La Fontaine.' 1838.
- Thierry's 'Conquête de l'Angleterre.' 1841.
- 'Corinne.' 1841.

THOMPSON, CHARLES, an English engraver, who practised in London early in the 19th century. He engraved the illustrations for 'Ædes Althorpiæ,' in 1822, and several plates for almanacs.

THOMPSON, CHARLES THURSTAN, was the son of John Thompson the wood-engraver, and was born in Peckham in 1816. He was well employed as an illustrator of books, and did much excellent work for the publications of Messrs. Longman and Messrs. Van Voorst. He took an important part in the arrangements for the exhibition of 1851. He became much interested in the newly-invented art of photography, and was appointed by the Exhibition Commissioners to superintend their photographic printing at Versailles in 1852, after which time he devoted himself to photography. He was employed by the Science and Art Department to photograph objects of interest in Paris, Spain, and Portugal, and his health giving way while on his travels for this purpose, he returned to Paris, and died there, after a short illness, January 22, 1868.

THOMPSON, E. W., an English portrait painter, born in 1770. He chiefly lived in Paris, where he enjoyed a good practice. His works were only exhibited on a few occasions at the Royal Academy between 1832 and 1839. He was engaged on Walmsley's 'Physiognomical Portraits,' published in 1822-4. He died at Lincoln in 1847.

THOMPSON, JAMES, born at Mitford, in Northumberland, about 1790, was the son of a clergyman. He was apprenticed to an engraver in London, and at the close of his apprenticeship worked with his master for two years, at the end of which he set up for himself, and became well known by the following plates :

- The three nieces of the Duke of Wellington; after Lawrence.
- The Queen on Horseback; after Sir F. Grant.
- Prince Albert; after Sir W. Ross.
- The Bishop of London; after G. Richmond.

He also engraved several plates for 'Lodge's Portraits,' and the 'Townley Marbles.' He died in London, September 27, 1850.

THOMPSON, JAMES ROBERT, an English draughtsman, lived in the early part of the 19th century. He worked chiefly on architectural subjects, and made many drawings for Britton's publications. His name occasionally appears in the catalogues of the Royal Academy between 1808 and 1843. Among his contributions were five scenes of Elephant-hunting in Ceylon, a 'Design for a Temple of Peace,' and designs for the new London Bridge. There is a water-colour drawing by him in the South Kensington Museum, of the West Gate and Bridge, Gloucester.

THOMPSON, JOHN, an English portrait painter, who practised in London from 1590 to 1610. He enjoyed the dignity of City Painter, and was a member of the Painters' Company, in whose hall hang several portraits by him, including his own.

THOMPSON, JOHN, an eminent wood-engraver, was born at Manchester, May 25, 1785; he was a pupil of the elder Branston, but was more influenced by his intimate subsequent connection with John Thurston, more than 900 of whose designs he engraved for the Chiswick Press. He was also at one time employed by the Bank of England, and engraved Mulready's design for the old penny postage envelope, and the figure of Britannia which is still used for the bank-notes. From 1852 to 1859 he was director of the female school of engraving at South Kensington. In 1855 he won a médaille d'honneur at the Paris Exhibition. He was an assiduous student of the theory of his art, and of the works of such masters as Dürer, Callot, Rembrandt, Bartolozzi, and Goltzius. He retained his full powers to the end of his life, and his last engraving, the 'Death of Dundee,' after Sir Noel Paton, is a vigorous and yet delicate example of his powers. He died at Kensington, February 20, 1866. Among other works, he made engravings for the following :

- 'The London Theatre.' 1814-1818.
- Fairfax's Tasso.
- Butler's 'Hudibras.' 1818.
- 'The Blind Beggar's Daughter of Bethnal Green.' 1832.
- Gray's 'Elegy.' 1832.
- Shakespeare. 1836.
- 'The Arabian Nights.' 1841.
- 'The Vicar of Wakefield;' after Mulready. 1843.

He made many of the engravings for Yarrell's works on Natural History, and for many works published in France.

THOMPSON, R. See TOMPSON.

THOMPSON, THOMAS CLEMENT, an Irish portrait painter, was born about 1780. He at first practised in Dublin, but in 1818 he migrated to London, where he exhibited at the Royal Academy, at the British Institution, and at the Society of British Artists, from 1816 to 1857. Working strenuously for the establishment of an Academy for Ireland, he became one of the original members of the Hibernian Academy in 1823. There is a portrait by him in the Kensington Museum, and one of Archbishop Troy in the Irish National Gallery. Thompson ceased to exhibit in 1858.

THOMPSON, WILLIAM, (called 'Blarney Thompson,') a native of Dublin, who practised portrait painting in London, where his name appears in catalogues from 1761 to 1777. He exhibited with the Society of Artists, chiefly half-length portraits. He was good at a likeness, but his art was poor. He was twice married, each time to a woman of fortune, and forsook his profession. He fell, however, into debt, was imprisoned in the King's Bench, and attracted some notice by his noisy protests against his imprisonment. He made one of the notorious circle at Mrs. Cornely's, in Soho Square, and was also for a time secretary to the Incorporated Society of Artists. He published 'An Enquiry into the Elementary Principles of Beauty in the works of Nature and Art.' He died suddenly in London in 1800.

THOMPSON, WILLIAM JOHN, portrait painter, was born at Savannah, in 1771. On the outbreak of the War of Independence his parents moved with him to England, where he painted portraits for a living at a very early age. He practised at first in London, where in 1808 he became a member of the Associated Artists in Water-Colours. Settling in Edinburgh in 1812, he gained a considerable reputation, and was elected a member of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1829. He died in Edinburgh, March 24, 1845.

THOMSON, HENRY, an English historical and poetical painter, and the son of a purser in the navy, was born in London, July 31, 1773. He lived for a time with his father in Paris, and on the outbreak of the French Revolution, returned to London, becoming a pupil of Opie, and, in 1790, a student in the Academy schools. He completed his art education by travels in Italy and Germany. He contributed a 'Perdita,' and some subjects from 'The Tempest,' to Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery. He first exhibited at the Academy in 1800, and the following year was elected an A. R. A. He became an Academician in 1804, and in 1825 was appointed keeper of the Royal Academy. In 1828, owing to failing health, he retired to Portsea, where he amused himself with boating, and with making sketches of marine objects, which he presented to his friends. He died on the 6th of April, 1843. His 'Prospero and Miranda' is in the Diploma Gallery at Burlington House.

THOMSON, JOHN, 'Thomson of Duddingston,' a Scotch landscape painter, was born at Dailly, Ayrshire, in 1778. His father was the Presbyterian minister of Dailly, and he succeeded him in that office in 1800. But Thomson had a great liking for art, and his early efforts in landscape were much aided by Alexander Nasmyth. In 1805 he removed to the parochial cure of Duddingston, near Edinburgh, and soon became intimate with the most distinguished members of contemporary society in the Scotch capital. He first exhibited in 1808 with the Associated Artists, and between that year and 1840, contributed a total of 109 landscapes to the Scotch exhibitions. He considered himself an amateur, and as his clerical profession rendered him unwilling to become a full member of any artistic association, he was elected an honorary member of the Scottish Academy. In his choice of subjects and in their treatment he was influenced mainly by Claude and the Poussins. He died at Duddingston, October 20th, 1840. Among his works are:

Edinburgh.	Nat. Gallery.	Bruce's Castle of Turnberry.
"	"	Landscape Composition.
"	"	Ravensheugh Castle.
"	"	Scene on the Clyde.
"	"	The Trossachs.
"	"	Aberlady Bay. 1822.
"	"	Trees on the bank of a stream.
London.	"	Loch an Eilan. 1835.
"	S. Ken. Museum.	Duddingston Loch (water-colour).

THOMSON, PATON, an English engraver, born about the middle of the 18th century. He worked in London, and was much engaged on portraits of actors in character. His death occurred after 1821. Amongst his plates are:

Portrait of E. Jerningham. 1794.
'John Anderson my Jo'; after D. Allan . 1799.
Charles Kemble as Romeo. 1819.
Charles Kemble as Vincentio. 1821.
Edmund Keau as Coriolanus. 1820.

THÖNERT, MEDARDUS, engraver, born at Leipzig in 1754, was a pupil of Bause and Geysler. He engraved historical plates and vignettes, some after his own drawings, and others after those of Graff, G. F. Schmidt, Oeser, &c. He died in 1812.

THÖNING, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, painter and lithographer, was born at Eckernförde in 1802. He studied at the Academy of Copenhagen, at Munich, and finally in Rome, where he settled. He painted principally marine views, with figures, introducing varied effects of sunlight. He lithographed two landscapes after Cuypp and Backhuisen, and several views of Swiss scenery after his own drawings. He died at Naples in 1873.

THORIGNY, FÉLIX, draughtsman, born at Caen in 1824, was much employed on illustrations for the following periodicals: le Monde Illustré; le Magasin Pittoresque; le Music des Familles; The Illustrated London News; le Calvados Pittoresque. He died suddenly in Paris in 1870.

THÖRNER, BENNO, painter, born at Dresden in 1802, and studied under Vogel von Vogelstein. He afterwards went to Rome, where he settled. He painted chiefly romantic genre pictures, many of which were engraved. Among them we may name:

The Falconer.	Nymphs in the Bath.
The Lute Player.	The Return of the Knight.
The Sick Nun.

He died at Rome in 1858.

THORNHILL, SIR JAMES, painter, the son of a gentleman of old family in Derbyshire, was born at Melcombe Regis, in 1676. His father having been reduced to poverty, the son was obliged to look out for a profession for support. He had conceived an early inclination for painting, and came to London, where his uncle, Sydenham, a well-known physician, placed him under the tuition of Thomas Highmore. He had acquired considerable fame as a painter, when he started on an expedition through Holland, Flanders, and France. On his return to England, he was appointed by Queen Anne to paint the cupola of St. Paul's Cathedral, which he decorated with eight scenes from the history of the apostle. These have been engraved in as many plates, by Du Bosc, Beauvais, Baron, G. Van der Gucht, and Simoneau. He was afterwards employed in painting an apartment at Hampton Court with some emblematical subjects, relating to the histories of Queen Anne and her consort, Prince George of Denmark. He was also employed on the decorative paintings at Greenwich Hospital, in the great hall at Blenheim Palace, on the saloon and hall at Moor Park, on the hall and staircase at Easton Neston, and on the chapel at Wimpole. He also painted altar-pieces for All Souls' and Queen's Colleges, at Oxford. These considerable works were very ill paid, and he found it difficult to obtain the stipulated prices. His demands were contested for his paintings at Greenwich; and though La Fosse, the French painter, received two thousand pounds for his work at Montague House, and five hundred pounds more for his support, Thornhill could obtain only forty shillings a square yard for the cupola of St. Paul's, and the same for Greenwich. Sir James copied Raphael's cartoons, then at Hampton Court, being employed three years on the work. At the sale of his pictures after his death, these copies were purchased by the then Duke of Bedford, and were placed in a gallery in Bedford House, Bloomsbury. When Bedford House was taken down, the Duke presented them to the Royal Academy.

Sir James Thornhill was honoured with the particular patronage of George I., by whom he was knighted, and was elected to represent his native town in parliament. He died at Weymouth in 1734, leaving a son, John (q.v.), and a daughter, who was married to William Hogarth. Thornhill has left a few slight etchings; among them an 'Adam and Eve.'

THORNHILL, JOHN, the only son of Sir James Thornhill, painted landscapes and marine pieces. He succeeded his father as Sergeant-Painter to George II., but resigned the office in 1757.

THORNTHWAITE, J. an English engraver, born about 1740, in London, where he practised from 1771 to 1794. Specimens of his work will be found in 'Bell's Shakespeare,' and in the 'Booksellers' British Theatre,' and a portrait by him of Dr. William Hunter, founder of the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow, is extant.

THOURET, NIKOLAS FRIEDRICH, a German architect, born at Ludwigsburg in 1767, also practised painting, which he had studied in Rome. His pictorial works were chiefly drawings in water-colour or ink, of historical and mythological subjects. He died at Stuttgart in 1845. His son PAUL, born 1814, was a successful scene-painter and decorator. He died in 1874.

THOURNEYSER, JOHANN JAKOB, (THOURNEISEN,) engraver, was born at Basle in 1636, and received his first instruction in engraving at Strasburg, from Pieter Aubry. He afterwards visited France, where he engraved several plates in a style resembling that of F. de Poilly. Some of his prints are executed with a single line, in the manner of Claude Mellan. He worked at Lyons and at Bourg-en-Bresse, and afterwards at the court of Turin. We have several portraits by Thourneyser, chiefly Swiss, as well as that of Louis XIV. when young, supported by Minerva and Apollo. He also engraved a variety of frontispieces and other plates for books, and executed part of a set of prints published by Catherine Patin, in 1691, from select pictures. He usually marked his plates with a cipher composed of an H. for Hans or John, and a T., thus, HT. He died at Basle in 1718. His chief plates were the following :

- Joseph I.; after Isaac Fischer, jun.
- Joseph I.; after Schoonjans.
- Fred. Augustus of Poland; after the same.
- S. Francis Xavier; after the same.
- Ignatius Loyola; after the same.
- Tobit and the Angel; after Titian.
- Holy Family; after Sprangher.
- The Elector Frederick of Brandenburg promising protection to French Huguenot Refugees; after Brandmüller.
- Laocoön; after the antique group.

His son, of the same name, occasionally assisted his father in his plates; he was still living in 1736.

THOURON, JACQUES, miniature painter and painter on enamel, was born at Geneva in 1737. He settled in Paris at an early age, and exhibited enamels at the Salon in 1781 and 1782. In the Louvre there are by him a miniature portrait of Franklin, a replica of the same in enamel, and a 'Bacchante,' after Madame Lebrun, in enamel. He died in Paris about 1790.

THÜFEL, (or TRUFEL,) JOHANN, was a native of Saxony, and flourished at Wittenberg between 1540 and 1570. He is the supposed author of certain portraits of Saxon princes and nobles, and of some cuts for Martin Luther's Bible, printed at Wittenberg by Hans Luft in 1572. These latter are signed with the initials J. T., or with a monogram; a key often accompanies the initials, hence he has been called the "Master of the Picklock." In conjunction with Thüfel another engraver seems to have worked who signs with a Clover Leaf, and is thence called Kleemann.

THULLIER, PIERRE, a French landscape painter, born at Amiens in 1799. In his early years he studied law, but preferring art he worked successively under Watelet and Gudin. He travelled much in the South of France, Italy, and Algiers where he found subjects for his pictures. His works appeared at the Salon from 1831 to 1857. He died in Paris, November 19th, 1858. The French provincial museums are rich in his landscapes.

THULDEN, (TULDEN,) THEODOOR VAN, was born at Hertogenbosch, in 1607. He went early to Antwerp, where he studied at first under Abraham Blyenberch, and afterwards under Rubens. His master employed him as an assistant, and he is said to have had a considerable share in 'forwarding' the pictures for Marie de' Medici's Palace of the Luxembourg. He visited Paris in 1633, where he was engaged to paint a series of twenty-four pictures from the Life of St. John of Matha, for the choir of the Mathurins, as well as three altar-pieces for the high altar, and two for chapels. One of the latter, a Saint Barbara, is perhaps his masterpiece. On his return to Flanders, he settled in Antwerp, and married the daughter of Hendrik van Balen. He painted several pictures for the churches and public buildings of Antwerp, Mechlin, Ghent, Bruges, and other Flemish cities, and made the cartoons for the windows in the chapel of the Virgin, in S. Gudule, Brussels. In 1648 he was at the Hague, where he painted seven historical and allegorical pictures, commemorating the election of the Stadtholder Frederick Henry, and the victory of Nieuport, for the 'House in the Wood.' He did not confine himself to historical subjects, but also painted rural pastimes and village festivals, in which he excelled. He painted figures in the churches of Peter Neefs and Steenwÿck, and in the landscapes of Wildens and Mompers, and even Snyders was indebted to him for assistance in his hunting-pieces. He died about 1676. Works :

We have a considerable number of etchings by Theodoor Van Thulden, both from his own designs and after other masters. Among them are the following :

- A set of twenty-four plates of the Life of St. John of Matha; after the pictures painted by himself. 1633.
- The History of Ulysses, in fifty-eight plates; from the pictures painted by Primaticcio at Fontainebleau. 1640.
- Eight plates from the Triumphal Arches designed by Rubens for the entry of the Cardinal Infant Ferdinand into Antwerp.
- The Prodigal Son; in eight plates; from his own designs.

THURSTON, JOHN, born at Scarborough in 1774, was principally employed in designing book illustrations, which may be found in most of the editions of the poets and novelists published early in the present century. Among the works illustrated by him were :

- 'Religious Emblems.' 1808.
- 'Shakespeare.' 1814.
- Falconer's 'Shipwreck.' 1817.
- Somerville's 'Rural Sports.' 1818.

In 1806 he was made an Associate of the Water-Colour Society. He died in London in 1822.

THYS, a Dominican monk, who is represented in the Antwerp Museum by a 'Descent from the Cross,' but of whose life no details are known. His picture belongs to the period of Flemish decadence.

THYS, AUGUSTINE. Two painters of this name are inscribed in the 'Liggeren' as members of the Corporation of Antwerp in the 17th century. It has been stated that the younger of these two was a son of Peeter Thys, that he was instructed by his father, and imitated Nicholas Berchem with much success, painting landscapes with figures and cattle. But the names of Peeter Thys's ten children are all preserved in parochial records at Antwerp, and there is no Augustine among them. It would seem therefore that a mistake has arisen from similarity in the not uncommon surname.

THYS, GYSBRECHT, a native of Antwerp, who flourished about the year 1625, was a scholar of Adrian Hanneman. He was one of the ablest portrait painters of his time, and his works in that branch of art have been sometimes mistaken for the pictures of Van Dyck. He also excelled in painting landscapes, with figures and animals. In his smaller landscapes with figures he imitated the manner of Poelemburg. Some of his pictures are dated 1660. He died in 1684.

THYS, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a Flemish subject painter, born at Brussels in 1783. He was the son of Pierre Joseph Thys, under whom he studied. His picture of Zeghers receiving the presents of the Prince of Orange, is now in the Brussels Museum. He died in 1865.

THYS, PEETER, the elder, (or TYSENS,) born at Antwerp in 1616, was a pupil of Artus Deunwaerder, and a distinguished painter of the second rank. He practised portraiture and historical painting; in the former he founded his style upon that of Van Dyck; in his historical pictures, the influence of Casper de Crayer is perceptible. His talent attracted the notice of Leopold I., who appointed him court painter. Particulars as to his life are very scanty. He was made free of the Guild of St. Luke in 1644-45, and became dean in 1660. The date of his death is uncertain, but it must have taken place before the middle of 1683, for in June of that year the Guild paid over a sum of sixty-eight florins to his heirs. Works:

Antwerp.	Museum.	St. Francis receiving the Indulgence of the Portiuncula.
"	"	Dædalus and Icarus.
"	"	The Virgin and St. William.
"	"	The Saviour appearing to St. John of the Cross.

Vienna.	Gallery.	Venus bewailing Adonis.

His son, PEETER, born in 1652, was also a painter.

THYS, PIERRE JOSEPH, born at Lierre in 1749, was educated in the Academy at Antwerp. He also studied under Koeck, the flower-painter, and in his house became acquainted with Spaendonck, with whom he went to Paris. He afterwards established himself at Brussels, and was employed to decorate the orangery of the palace of Laeken with flower-pieces. These were carried off by the French in 1792. During the latter part of his life he was employed in what is called "restoring," in which he was very adroit, and he continued this profitable occupation till the time of his death, in 1823.

TIARINI, ALESSANDRO, born at Bologna in 1577, was first a scholar of Prospero Fontana, and afterwards of Bartolommeo Cesi. Having to fly from Bologna on account of a quarrel, he retired to Florence, where he studied for some time under Domenico Cresti, called Passignano. Before long, however, the fame of Lodovico Carracci induced him to venture back to Bologna, where he soon raised himself to a good position. The subjects he selected were congenial with his grave and sedate character. 'La Madonna Addolorata,' the 'Sorrows of the Magdalene,' and the 'Repentance of St. Peter,' were often treated. His principal works in the public edifices at Bologna are a fine picture of the 'Virgin, Mary Magdalene, and St. John, weeping over the instruments of the Passion,' in the church of S. Benedetto; 'St. Catherine kneeling before a Crucifix,' in S. Maria Maddalena; a 'Pietà,' in S. Antonio; and 'S. Dominic restoring a dead Child,' in the church dedicated to that saint. The last-mentioned picture excited the surprise and admiration of Lodovico Carracci. Tiarini died at Bologna in 1668. Other works:

Bologna.	S. Petronio.	Martyrdom of St. Barbara.
"	S. Salvatore.	The Nativity.

TIBALDI, MARIA FELICE, painter, born at Rome in 1707, became the wife of the painter Subleyras in 1739. She painted portraits and historical subjects in oil and pastel, and numerous miniatures, of which the two best known were, 'Bacchus and Ariadne,' and 'Angelica and Medoro.' She made a copy of her husband's work, 'The Last Supper,' for Pope Benedict XIV. Her sisters, TERESA and ISABELLA, were also artists in the same genre.

TIBALDI, DOMENICO PELLEGRINO, engraver and architect, born at Bologna in 1540, was the younger brother of Pellegrino Tibaldi, and learnt the rudiments of design in his native city. He is said to have also practised painting, but this statement rests on very slight grounds. He is said to have taught engraving to Agostino Carracci, and Malvasia believes them to have worked in conjunction. The nine plates catalogued by Bartsch are so fine in quality that we may conclude that many of the anonymous prints of his time are by Tibaldi. As an architect and engraver he won a considerable reputation. This is the list given by Bartsch :

The Repose in Egypt; after his own design.
 The Holy Trinity; after Sammachiini. 1570.
 The Virgin with a Rose; after Parmigiano.
 St. Francis of Assisi; copied from two prints by C. Cort; the landscape from one with the date 1587, and the figure from another with the date 1568, both after pictures by Girolamo Muziano.
 The Penitent Magdalen; after Titian.
 The Triumph of Peace; after his own design.
 Portrait of Pope Gregory XIII.; after Passarotti. 1572.
 View of the Grand Fountain in the Palazzo Scaffieri at Bologna. 1570.
 View of a magnificent Palace, ornamented with columns and statues, from a design by G. Alghisi. It is in two plates, with the date 1566. Bartsch is of opinion that there should be a third plate to complete the composition.

Zani says Tibaldi was born in 1532 and died in 1583; but his epitaph says 1540 and 1582.

TIBALDI, PELLEGRINO, called PELLEGRINO DA BOLOGNA, and PELLEGRINO PELLEGRINI, was born at Bologna in 1527. He was a disciple of Bagnacavallo, and distinguished himself as an architect no less than as a painter. In 1547, after copying the works of Vasari at St. Michele in Bosco, he went to Rome, where he studied the works of Michelangelo. Cardinal Poggi employed him in ornamenting his Vigna, near the Porta del Popolo, with frescoes. The same patron further employed him in the completion of his palace at Bologna, now the Palazzo dell' Instituto, which was finished from his plan, and which is regarded as one of his principal works as an architect. The interior of the palace he decorated with subjects from the Odyssey. He constructed a chapel for his patron, in the church of S. Giacomo Maggiore, and painted in it a 'St. John preaching in the Wilderness,' and the 'Division of the Elect from the Damned.' The Cardinal Poggi next employed him in the erection of a chapel in La Madonna di Loretto, where he painted the 'Nativity,' the 'Presentation in the Temple,' the 'Transfiguration,' and the 'Decollation of St. John.' He was also employed by Cardinal Carlo Borromeo, at Pavia, on the plans for the Palazzo della Sapienza.

In 1586 Tibaldi was invited to Spain by Philip II., and employed in the Escorial, where he painted the greater part of the lower cloister, having first erased the work of Federigo Zuccaro. But Tibaldi's best work in Spain is the ceiling of the Madrid Library, on which he painted a composition suggested, it is said, by Raphael's 'School of Athens.' After a residence of nine years in Spain, he returned rich to Italy, and settled at Milan, where in 1570 he was appointed architect to the Duomo. He died at Milan about 1592. His oil pictures are extremely rare out of Spain and Italy. In the Bologna Gallery there is a 'Marriage of St. Catharine' by him; in the Vienna Gallery a 'St. Cecilia'; in the Dresden Gallery a 'S. Jerome with an Angel'; and in the Uffizi his own portrait.

TIBERIO, an Italian painter of the 16th century, was a native of Assisi and a pupil of Perugino, whose manner he endeavoured to imitate. Extant works by him are: a 'Madonna' in the church of S. Martino, near Trevi; a 'Madonna and five scenes from the life of St. Francis' (1512), in the church of San Francesco at Montefalco; a 'St. Sebastian,' in the church of S. Fortunato at Montefalco; a 'Madonna,' at S. Domenico at Assisi, and Scenes from the life of St. Francis in Santa Maria degli Angeli in the same city (1518).

TIDEMAN, (or TIEDEMAN,) PHILIP, born at Hamburg in 1657, of a respectable and opulent family, was a pupil of Nicholas Raes, a painter of history of some reputation, under whom he studied eight years. He had made considerable progress under that master, when the fame of Gerard Lairese induced him to visit Amsterdam. On his arrival he was admitted into the school of Lairese, who soon began to employ him as his assistant. On leaving that master he was employed in painting historical and allegorical pictures in public buildings and private houses. Among his best productions of this kind was a saloon for the Verschuier family, at Hoorn, in which the History of Æneas was treated with some originality. Tideman died at Amsterdam in 1705.

TIDEMAN, ADOLF, a Norwegian subject and landscape painter, was born at Mandal on the 14th August, 1814. He was a distinguished student of the Copenhagen Academy, but completed his studies at Düsseldorf, under Schadow and Hildebrandt. Returning to Norway in 1842, he soon took a high place in the Norwegian school, and was appointed court-painter. One of his chief works was a series of twelve pastoral pictures for the Royal Palace of Oscarhall, near Christiania. His reputation was not confined to his native country: he was elected a member of the Academies of Berlin, Copenhagen, Stockholm, and Amsterdam. In England, the works which he exhibited at the Exhibition of 1862 attracted much attention, and contributed greatly to raise the reputation of the Scandinavian school. He died at Christiania on the 25th August, 1876. Tideman's colour is cold: his forte is the fidelity with which he reproduces the manners of the peasantry of his native country. The following are some of his best works:

Carlsruhe. Gallery.	Grandmother's Bridal Ornaments.
Christiania. Nat. Mus.	The Haugians.
" "	Sunday Afternoon.
" Trefoldighe- dens Church. }	The Baptism of our Lord.
Düsseldorf. Gallery.	Meeting of Haugians. 1848.
Hamburg. Museum.	The Wolf Hunters.
Leipsic. Museum.	Departure of Norwegian Emigrants.
Stockholm. Nat. Mus.	The Story-Teller. 1857.
Vienna. Belvedere.	Return from a Bear Hunt.

TIDEY, HENRY F., water-colour painter, was born at Worthing, where his father was a schoolmaster. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1839. He was elected an associate of the Institute of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1858, and a full member in 1859, and exhibited much of his best work with them. He died in 1872. He was very successful in painting the portraits of children, but also exhibited historical subjects and genre pictures somewhat of the Watteau class. Among these we may name:

The Feast of Roses ( H.M. the Queen ).	1859.
Dar Thule.	1861.
Christ Blessing little Children.	1863.
Saxon Captives at Rome.	1863.
Sardanapalus.	1870.
Flowers of the Forest.	1871.

TIEFFENTHAL, HANS, a painter of the Swabian school, was born probably between 1380 and 1390 at Schlettstadt, in Alsace. He is conjectured to have painted for the church of the Carthusians at Dijon, and, in 1418, he decorated the 'Kreuzkapelle der Elenden' near Basle, with paintings of birds, animals, the heavenly bodies, and Scriptural scenes. In 1433 he settled at Strasburg as a goldsmith, and entered the Senate. The date of his death is unknown.

TIELEMANS, MARTIN FRANÇOIS, a Flemish historical and portrait painter, born at Lierre in 1784. He studied in the Antwerp Academy, and afterwards under David. He eventually became Director of the School of Design at Lierre, where he died in 1864. His best known picture is:

Christ and the Disciples at Emmaus.

TIELKER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, born at Brunswick in 1762, was a miniature painter and engraver, and practised at Darmstadt. He received a summons to the Court of Berlin, where he painted and engraved portraits of Iffland and Fräulein Döbblin. He subsequently tried his hand at aquatint engraving and landscape painting. He also made some essays in the painting of panoramas, the most successful of which were those of St. Petersburg and Moscow, which he exhibited in Russia; the former he even took to China in the suite of the Russian Ambassador. He died at Brunswick in 1830.

TIEPOLO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Venice in 1696. He was a scholar of Gregorio Lazzarini, and was also influenced by Gio. Battista Piazzetta. He afterwards studied the works of Paolo Veronese, and, though inferior in dignity and in richness of colour to that great painter, he approached him in transparency and in breadth of chiaroscuro. Possessed of a lively invention, and an uncommon facility of execution, he was admirably qualified to decorate, and his large ceilings, and other things of the same class, are his best performances. His masterpiece in this genre is the series of frescoes in the Palazzo Labia, at Venice, dealing with the loves of Anthony and Cleopatra. Other frescoes by him are in the Villa Stra, between Venice and Padua; the Villa Valmarana, near Vicenza; the Tribunale and the Congregazione di Carità, at Milan; the Capella Colleone, at Bergamo, and the Residential Palace at Würzburg. In 1769 Tiepolo was invited by Charles III. to Spain, where he painted several frescoes in the new palaces at Madrid, among them the ceiling, 'The Glory of Spain,' in the Throne-room of the Royal Palace, which were sufficiently admired to excite jealousy in Mengs, the court painter, who was then in the height of his celebrity. Tiepolo sometimes inserted figures in the pictures of Canaletto. Though chiefly known as a painter on walls, his easel-pictures have great merit, especially in colour and arrangement. He painted many altar-pieces for the Venetian churches. Taken altogether he may be considered the ablest of all those painters whose genius has been purely scenic. He died at Madrid, March 27th, 1770. The following are his chief easel pictures:

Berlin.	Museum.	Martyrdom of S. Agatha; and three others.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	Eliezer and Rehekah.
London.	Nat. Gal.	A Bishop in the act of Benediction.
"	"	S. Augustine with a group of minor figures.
Madrid.	Museum.	The Conception.
"	"	Venus and Cupid.
Padua.	S. Antonio.	Martyrdom of St. Agatha.
"	Museum.	St. Patricia tending a Sick Person.
Paris.	Louvre.	The Last Supper.
Petersburg.	Hermi-tage.	Cleopatra's Banquet.
Rouen.	Museum.	Card Party.
Turin.	Pinacoteca.	Triumph of Aurelian.
Venice.	Ch. d. Fava.	St. Aune and the Virgin.

Venice.	SS. Apostoli.	St. Lucia.
"	Academy.	St. Joseph and the Child Jesus.
"	S. Alvise.	Christ on His way to Calvary.
"	Gesuati.	Virgin in Glory.
"	Sevola del Carmine.	Ceiling (oil on canvas).
Vienna.	Gallery.	S. Catharine of Siena.

We have about fifty-six etchings by this master, executed with taste, neatness, and spirit; of which the following are the most deserving of notice:

The Adoration of the Magi.
A set of twenty-four Fancy Subjects.
Ten Fancy Subjects of a smaller size.

TIEPOLO, GIOVANNI DOMENICO, the son of Giovanni Battista Tiepolo, was born at Venice about the year 1726. He was instructed by his father, and painted some historical subjects in the churches at Brescia. He accompanied Gio. Battista Tiepolo to Spain, and assisted him in the palace at Madrid. The younger Tiepolo has left several etchings, in some of which he has imitated the style of Benedetto Castiglione. We may name the following:

The Flight of the Holy Family to Egypt. A set of twenty-seven plates.

The Passion of Christ; in fourteen plates.

A set of twenty-six Heads, in the style of Benedetto.

The Virgin appearing to St. Theresa; after Gio. Bat. Tiepolo.

St. Ambrose preaching to the People; after the same.

A set of eight pieces of Satyrs, Turks, and Arabs.

G. D. Tiepolo died in Spain in 1804. His younger brother, LORENZO, painted and etched in the style of his father, Gio. Battista.

TIERCE, JEAN BAPTISTE, landscape painter, was born at Rouen in 1741. He was a pupil of Pierre, was received by the Academy in 1786, but never became an Academician. In 1779 he settled in Italy, where he died. In the Orleans Museum there is a scene from Ariosto, in Indian ink, by him.

TIERENDORFF, JEREMIE VAN, a Flemish historical painter, who was at work about the year 1626. There is a 'Christ delivering the Keys to the Apostle' by him in the church of St. Peter at Ypres, and a 'Nativity' in the church of St. James.

TIERSONNIER, LOUIS SIMON, a French painter of history and mythology, born in 1718. He was a member of the Academy of St. Luke, and assistant professor. He died in Paris in 1773.

TIESENHAUSEN, PAUL, FREIHERR VON, marine painter, was born at Idfer, in Esthonia, in 1837. He served in the Russian army during the Crimean war, and afterwards devoted himself to painting, which he studied at the Munich Academy, and under the landscape painter Millner. A sea-piece by the young artist attracted the notice of Lier, who took him into his studio, and developed his talents in the direction thereby pointed out. He painted a number of poetically conceived sea-pieces, taking his subjects from the northern coasts. The Stuttgart Gallery has a 'Harbour at Nightfall' by him. He died at Munich in 1876.

TILBORCH, EGIDIUS, (or GILLES VAN,) the elder, was born at Antwerp about the year 1570. He was a contemporary of David Teniers the elder, and painted similar subjects, representing Flemish wakes and festivals, which were esteemed at the time in which he lived. He died about 1632. At Lille there is a Village Fête by him, dated 159-, the last figure being undecipherable. Some writers have doubted the existence of the elder Tilborch, and ascribed the pictures on which his name appears to his son. The date at Lille seems enough to disprove this theory.

TILBORCH, EGIDIUS, (or GILLES VAN,) the younger, son of Egidius van Tilborch the elder, was born at Brussels in 1625. On his father's death he became a scholar of Teniers, at the time when François Duchatel studied under that master. He was made free of the Guild of St. Luke, at Brussels, in 1654. His pictures represent peasants regaling, and village feasts, which are ingeniously composed and vigorously coloured, though infinitely inferior to those of Teniers in the lightness and dexterity of his pencil, and in the clearness and purity of his colour. His death is supposed to have occurred in 1678. Works:

Brussels.	Museum.	A Cavalcade.
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	The Cobbler.
Dresden.	Gallery.	A Dutch Wedding.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Guard-room.
"	"	Courtyard of an Inn.
"	"	Workman Smoking.
"	"	An Interior.
The Hague.	Museum.	A Portrait Group.
Vienna.	Liechtenst. Gal.	Peasants quarrelling.

Other pictures at Bordeaux, Nantes, Rouen, and Valenciennes.

TILENS, HANS, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1589 (?). He painted in the manner of Paul Bril, and is said to have enjoyed the friendship of Van Dyck, who painted his portrait. In 1612 he became master in the Guild of S. Luke. The only two known works by him in public galleries are, 'A Mountainous Landscape,' at Vienna, and a 'Landscape with Mythological Figures,' at Berlin. He died at Antwerp in 1630.

TILIUS, JAN VAN, a native of Hertogenbosch, who practised in the second half of the 17th century. He painted conversations in the manner of Gaspar Netscher. There are no particulars of him recorded beyond his reception into the 'Schilds-confrerie' at the Hague in 1683. In the Dresden Gallery there is a picture of a woman sewing, by him. It is inscribed J. Tilius Pin., 1681. 'A Young Man playing Bagpipes,' in the Vienna Gallery, is dated 1680.

TILL, JOHANN KARL VON, a German engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1624. He was chiefly engaged in engraving portraits and other plates for books. An indifferent etching of a bust of Ferdinand Talentschger crowned by Minerva, is inscribed Joh. Carl van Till, 1644. He died in 1676.

TILLARD, JEAN BAPTISTE, (TILLIARD,) a French engraver. We have by him several etchings of the national dresses of the Savoyards and Russians; after St. Aubin, Le Prince, and others. He was born in Paris in 1740, and was a scholar of Fessard, but engraved in much better taste than his master. His works, which are very numerous, are chiefly plates for books. He died in Paris in 1813. Among his illustrative prints may be named:

Some of the views in Choiseul-Gouffier's 'Voyage de la Grèce.'

Vignettes for an edition of Tasso; after Cochin.

The plates for the quarto edition of Telemachus; after Monnet.

The greater part of the prints for the Abbé Chappé's 'Voyage en Sibérie.'

A series of Savoyards, with the title 'Mes Commissionnaires, mes Gens,' &c.

A Portrait of Pope Clement XIV.; after D. Porta.

Hagar in the Desert; after J. Vernet.

Russian Shepherds; after Le Prince.

TILLEMANS, PIETER, (TILMANS,) born at Antwerp in 1684, was the son of a diamond-cutter, and was instructed in landscape painting by an indifferent artist whose name has not been preserved. He visited England in 1708, and first attracted notice by his excellent copies after Borgognone, Teniers, and others. He painted landscapes with small figures, seaports, country-seats, hunts, and races, and drew horses very well. He was favoured with the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire, for whom he painted a view of Chatsworth, one of his best pictures, and was much employed by the fourth Lord Byron, whom he taught to draw. Another important picture by him was that of the Duke of Kingston and a shooting-party, dated 1725. In 1719 he was employed on Bridge's 'History of Northamptonshire,' for which he made nearly five hundred drawings. He died at Norton, in Suffolk, December 5, 1734.

TILLEMANS, SIMON PETER, called SCHENK, born at Bremen about the year 1602, passed the early part of his life in Italy, where he was esteemed as a painter of landscapes. He also painted some excellent portraits, and was invited to the court of Vienna by the Emperor Ferdinand, whom he painted, with several distinguished members of his court. Tillemans died in 1670. His daughter practised as a flower-painter.

TILSON, HENRY, born in Yorkshire in 1659, was educated under Sir Peter Lely. After the death of that master in 1680, he went in company with Dahl to Italy, where he resided seven years. He painted portraits, both in oil and pastel, and was likely to make a figure in his profession, when his mind became deranged, and he shot himself in 1695, at the age of thirty-six. He painted his own portrait two or three times.

TIMAGORAS, a painter of Chalcis, known only as having defeated Pænœnus of Athens in a contest at the Pythian games.

TIMANTHES, the distinguished and successful competitor of Parrhasius, was, according to Quintilian, a native of Cythnus, in Attica; according to others, of Sicyon. He triumphed over Parrhasius with his 'Ajax disputing with Ulysses for the arms of Achilles.' Born at a period when considerable progress had been made in rendering expression, he carried it still farther. Of this he gave proof in his celebrated 'Sacrifice of Iphigenia.' Having represented in the various actors different degrees of sadness, he exhausted his powers in the face of Menelaus, Iphigenia's uncle, and unable to give a still deeper expression to Agamœnon, her father, he covered his features with a veil. Pliny mentions with high praise a picture by Timanthes of a 'Sleeping Cyclops.'

TIMBAL, LOUIS CHARLES, painter, born in Paris in 1821, was a pupil of Drolling, and entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1842. He painted chiefly religious subjects, imitating the manner of the old Italian masters. He exhibited frequently at the Salon, from 1847 onwards. He is known not only by his easel pictures, but by mural paintings in the chapel of the Sorbonne, in S. Sulpice, and in the church of Saint Etienne-du-Mont. He died in Paris, November 24, 1880. His 'Agony in the Garden,' and 'The Poet and the Muse,' are at present in the Luxembourg.

TIMOMACHUS, a painter of Byzantium, living in the time of Julius Cæsar, who purchased two of his pictures, an 'Ajax' and a 'Medea,' and dedicated them in the Temple of Venus Genetrix.

TIMOTEO DA URBINO. See DELLA VITE.

TINELLI, CAVALIERE TBERIO, painter, was born at Venice in 1586. He studied under Giovanni

Contarini and Leandro Bassano, and painted portraits in historical disguises, a proceeding which won him much employment. His small pictures of historical and mythological subjects were also popular. Some of his pictures found their way into the collection of Louis XIII., who conferred on him the order of knighthood. He occasionally painted large pictures and altar-pieces, in which he was less successful than in those of a cabinet size. He resided the greater part of his life at Florence. According to Ridolfi, domestic afflictions drove him into a state of despondency, and he is said to have put an end to his own life in 1638.

TINGHIUS, A. M., was an engraver who flourished about the year 1670. Strutt says he engraved the great 'Temptation of St. Anthony' from the drawing by Callot. Zani notices a Florentine engraver of the name Antonio Meitinghius, as having flourished in 1627.

TINNEY, JOHN, an English engraver, born in the early part of the 18th century. He worked in London, where he traded as a printseller, and also for a time in Paris. Anthony Walker, John Browne, and Woollett were among his pupils. He published a treatise on anatomy for artists. He died in 1761. Amongst his plates are :

Eight Views of Kensington and Hampton Court; after Anthony Highmore.

The Times of the Day.

Portrait of 'Maitre Chardin.'

" Catherine Clive; after Ellys.

" George II.; after Joseph Highmore.

" Sir T. Parker.

" John Wesley.

" Flora; after Rosalba Carriera.

TINTI, CAMILLO, born at Rome about the year 1738, was employed by Gavin Hamilton to engrave some of the plates for his 'Schola Italica'; among these were the following :

The Marriage of St. Catherine; after Parmigiano.

Meleager and Atalanta; after Polidoro da Caravaggio.

Christ on the Mount of Olives; after Lanfranco.

TINTI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian painter of the 16th century, studied first under Samacchini at Bologna, and subsequently established himself at Parma, where he took Tibaldi, Correggio, and Parmigiano for his models. He painted many works for his adopted city, amongst others, a large 'Assumption,' of many figures, for the cathedral. He flourished about 1590.

TINTI, LORENZO, an Italian painter and engraver, born at Bologna in 1626, (1634,) was a scholar of Gio. Andrea Sirani, and painted some altar-pieces for the churches at Bologna in the style of his master, of which the best are, his 'Scourging of Christ,' in the church of La Madonna del Piombo; and the 'Virgin and Child, with several Saints,' in S. Tecla. Tinti etched several plates after painters of the Bolognese school. Bartsch ('Peintre Graveur,' tom. xix.) describes nine plates by him, two of which, a Holy Family and an Allegory, are after Elisabetta Sirani; the rest are portraits and frontispieces to books. One has the date 1671. Gori mentions two others, a 'Virgin and Child,' after Guido, and a portrait of Dr. J. C. Claudinus, after Domenico Ambrogi. Tinti died in 1672.

TIRPENNE, JEAN LOUIS, painter, lithographer, and writer, was born at Hamburg of French parents in 1801. He was a pupil of Bouton, Daguerre, and Remond. He exhibited many landscapes at the Salon from 1831 onwards, but devoted himself later to the illustration of works on sculpture and architecture. He was the author, jointly with Chalet, Devéria, Maurin, Redouté, and Victor Adam, of 'La Méthode Tirpenne,' and also wrote several plays.

TISCHBEIN, JOHANN ANTON, painter, born at Hayna in 1720, was originally a clerk. He studied in Paris and Rome, settling afterwards in Hamburg, where he opened a Drawing School. He painted landscapes, historical pictures, and portraits; and died in 1784.

TISCHBEIN, JOHANN FRIEDRICH AUGUST, portrait painter, was born at Maestricht in 1750. His early instruction in art was due to his uncle, J. H. Tischbein, but he was enabled to complete his training in France and Italy through the generosity of the Prince of Waldeck. On his return to Germany, his patron appointed him court painter and councillor. He subsequently practised at the Hague, at Dessau, and at Leipsic, where in 1800 he was appointed Director of the Academy. He died at Heidelberg in 1812. There are by him :

Amsterdam. Rijks Museum. A series of Portraits of Princes of the House of Orange.

Berlin. National Gallery. Lady playing the Lute.

Brunswick. Gallery. Pr. Charles of Brunswick.

Frankfort. Stüdel Instit. Two Portraits.

Leipsic. Museum. Portrait of Schiller.

TISCHBEIN, JOHANN HEINRICH, the elder, historical painter, born at Hayna in 1722, was the son of a baker. He was first apprenticed to a locksmith, then to a designer of wall-papers, and lastly studied under the court painter Van Freese. In 1743 he went to Paris, with the aid of Count von Stadion, and spent five years in Vanloo's atelier; thence he went to Venice, and worked for a time under Piazzetta. After continuing his studies in Florence, Bologna, and Rome, he returned to Germany in 1751, and was appointed court painter to Wilhelm VIII. of Hesse. In 1776 he was made Director of the newly founded Academy at Cassel. He painted chiefly mythological pictures and portraits, showing in his works strong traces of the study of the Italians, and may be looked upon as having been first among the modern Germans to follow after the great Venetian colourists, and to direct attention to their method. He died at Cassel in 1789. Works :

Berlin. Nat. Gal. Portrait of Lessing.

Cassel. S. Michael's Ch. The Resurrection.

" Lutheran Ch. The Transfiguration.

" Catholic Ch. Ecce Homo; and other pictures.

The Triumph of Arminius after the Defeat of Varus.

Tischbein etched several plates from his own designs, among them the following :

Cupid stung by a Bee complaining to Venus.

Nymphs Bathing.

Hercules and Omphale.

Menelaus and Paris.

Thetis and Achilles.

The Resurrection; after a picture painted for the church of St. Michael, Hamburg.

TISCHBEIN, JOHANN HEINRICH, the younger, the nephew of Johann Heinrich the elder, was born at Hayna in 1742, and was taught the rudiments of design by his uncle. His genius led him to picturesque landscape, though he occasionally practised portraiture. In 1775 he became Director of the Cassel Gallery. He engraved a number of plates both with the point and in aquatint, after his uncle, and after Berchem, Rembrandt, &c., among his plates are the following :

- Acis and Galatea; after Jacob Moore.
 Bacchus and Ariadne; after the same.
 A Stag-hunt; after Rulhart.
 A Landscape, with Cattle; after P. Potter.
 A Mountainous Landscape; after Rembrandt.
 A Landscape with Animals; after J. H. Roos.

He died at Cassel in 1808.

TISCHBEIN, JOHANN HEINRICH WILHELM, painter and engraver, was born at Hayna in 1751. After studying for a time with his uncle, Johann Heinrich Tischbein, he went, in 1776, to Hamburg, to Johann Jakob Tischbein, who employed him in restoring old pictures, and in copying the works of Berchem and Wouwerman. In 1770 he went to the Hague and to Rotterdam, where he improved himself by study of the old masters. In 1773 he returned to Cassel and began to paint portraits, working at the same time on copies from Rembrandt and Van Dyck, and making studies of animals. In 1777 he visited Dresden and Berlin; in the latter city he painted many portraits, including one of the Queen of Prussia; in 1779 he went as a pensioner of the Court of Hesse to Rome, where he studied Raphael and the antique. In 1781 he was in Switzerland making drawings for Lavater. In 1782 the Duke of Gotha provided him with funds for a visit to Rome, and he there painted the 'Conradin,' now in Schloss Friedenstein, for his patron, and made the sketches for his 'Brutus,' 'Sophonisba,' and 'Helena.' In 1787 he accompanied Goethe to Naples, where he was made director of the Academy two years later. At Naples he became acquainted with Sir William Hamilton; he painted a portrait of the Ambassador's beautiful wife, and carried out the admirable engravings in outline from the Greek vases belonging to Sir William. This work was published at Naples in 1791, in three volumes folio, under the title of 'The Hamilton Vases.' On the occupation of Naples by the French he returned to Cassel, and settled later at Hamburg. In 1808 he removed to Eutin, where he was chiefly occupied in painting portraits and heads of animals. He died at Eutin in 1829. Among his chief works are the following :

- Goetz von Berlichingen. 1781.
 Suffer Little Children to come unto Me. (St. Ansgarii Kirche, Bremen.)
 The Rape of Cassandra.
 The Parting of Hector and Andromache.

He has left 147 etchings, 81 of which are in illustration of Homer.

TISCHBEIN, KARL LUDWIG, painter, born at Dessau in 1797, son and pupil of Johann Friedrich August Tischbein, also studied under Hartmann at Dresden. In 1819 he went to Italy, where he painted portraits and poetically-conceived genre pictures. He was from 1825 Professor of Drawing at the Roman Academy. He afterwards travelled in the Netherlands, and finally settled in Bückeburg, where he died in 1855.

TISCHLER, ANTON, a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1750. He engraved some of the plates for the collection of prints from pictures in the cabinet of Count Brühl. He was living in 1774.

TISI, BENVENUTO, (TISIO,) commonly called GAROFALO, from the native village of his family, Garofalo, in the district of Polesina, on the Po.

In allusion to this origin, a clove-pink (garofalo) figured in his family arms, and he sometimes painted one in the corner of his pictures. Tisi was born at Ferrara in 1481, and received the first part of his education under his uncle, Soriani, and Domenico Panetti; but he was afterwards apprenticed to Boccacci Boccaccino, at Cremona. Not satisfied with the instruction of his master, he ran away to Rome in 1499, and there studied under Baldini. His father's illness recalled him to Ferrara, where he was employed by the Duke, and for the churches. He visited Bologna, where he came under the influence of Lorenzo Costa, and it is probable that from 1510 to 1512 he was again in Rome, whence the traces of Raphael's feeling in some of his works. Various records show that from 1517 to 1550 he was established at Ferrara. The works of Garofalo occasionally approach Raphael in expression, and are very correct in design. His colour is warm, and his chiaroscuro vigorous. The churches of Ferrara possess several of his larger works, both in oil and in fresco; and his small pictures are found in most of the finer collections of Europe. He may be said to share the headship of the Ferrarese school with Dosso Dossi. He became blind, and died at Ferrara, September 6, 1559. Works :

TISOIO, ANTONIO DA, lived in Belluno in the 16th century, and is the author of a mutilated altar-piece in the church of Orzes, representing the 'Virgin and Child between SS. John the Baptist, Andrew, Sebastian, and Michael,' signed and dated 1512. It has been suggested that he is identical with Antonio da Cesa. Other works:

Belluno.	Casa Pagani.	Virgin and Child.

TISSIER, JEAN BAPTISTE ANGE, a French portrait and historical painter, was born in Paris in 1814. He studied in the École des Beaux Arts, under Ary Scheffer and Paul Delaroche. His works appeared at the Salon from 1838 to 1876. He died in Paris in the latter year. Several of his portraits are at Versailles, notably one of Abd-el-Kader.

TISSOT, AMÉDÉE ANGELOT, a French landscape painter, who exhibited water-colour views at the Salon between 1835—1845. He died in 1867.

TITIAN. See VECELLI.

TITO, POMPILIO, an obscure engraver, who was at work in Rome about the year 1685. His prints are said to be marked with the initials P. T.

TITO, SANTI DI, painter, born at Borgo S. Sepolcro, in the Florentine state, October 6, 1536, was first a disciple of Agiolo Bronzino, but, according to Baldinucci, afterwards became a scholar of Baccio Bandinelli. He also studied hard from the antique at Rome, and from the works of the Roman masters. He returned to Florence a correct draughtsman, and distinguished himself in everything but colour. Vasari says he finished a picture of Sogliani's for S. Domenico, at Fiesole; also that he painted in the Belvedere of the Vatican, and on the catafalque of Michelangelo. He excelled in architectural perspectives, with which he gave dignity and variety to his compositions. Among his best works are: 'Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus,' in the church of S. Croce, at Florence; the 'Resurrection of Lazarus,' in the cathedral of Volterra; the 'Madonna,' in S. Salvatore, Florence; the 'Burial of Christ,' in S. Giuseppe; a 'Baptism of Christ by St. John,' in the Corsini palace, Florence; as well as portraits in the Uffizi and in the Torrigiani collection. Santi died at Florence, July 23, 1603.

TITO, TIBERIO DI, (VALERIO,) the son of Santi di Tito, was born at Florence in 1573, and instructed by his father. He did not, however, follow the same style, but devoted himself to portrait painting, which he practised with success. He also excelled in small pencil portraits, on which he was much employed by Cardinal Leopoldo de' Medici. A considerable collection of heads drawn by him for that prince, are preserved in the Florentine Gallery. He died in 1627.

TIVOLI, ROSA DI. See ROOS.

TIZIANO, GIROLAMO DI. See DANTE.

TKADLIK, FRANZ, (KADLIK,) born at Pragus in 1786, was destined for the church, and became a painter late in life. At Prague he studied under Bergler. In 1817 he entered the Vienna Academy, and in 1825 he was sent to Rome as a pensioner of the Emperor. On his return to Prague he became Director of the School of Fine Arts. He died at Prague in 1840.

TOBAR, DON ALONSO MIGUEL DE, an historical painter, and copyist of Murillo, was born at Higuera, near Aracena, in 1678. He went young to Seville, and placed himself under a painter of very little ability, named Juan Antonio Faxardo. He applied himself to copying the easel pictures of Murillo, and became so great an adept that many passed even in his own time as originals. In the church of St. Isidro, at Seville, are two pictures, one representing 'The Good Shepherd,' and the other, 'The young St. John,' which are copies, with variations, of the two so well known in England, the latter of which is in the National Gallery. In 1729, Tobar succeeded Teodoro Ardemans as painter to Philip V., and removed to Madrid, where he painted a great number of portraits. Of his own creations, the best, perhaps, are, 'Our Lady of Consolation,' in the cathedral of Seville, and 'The Divine Shepherdess,' in the Royal Collection, Madrid. Of his copies after Murillo, the most celebrated, as such, is one in the church of Santa Maria la Blanca de Sevilla; which passed for a Murillo till the original was discovered in the palace at Madrid. Tobar died at Madrid in 1758.

TOBIN, J., an obscure English engraver, who, about the year 1770, etched several landscapes after H. Grimm, Both, Ostade, and other masters. Some of his plates were printed in colours.

TOCCAGNI. See PIAZZA, ALBERTINO.

TOCQUÉ, LOUIS, (TOUQUET,) a painter, born in Paris in 1696, was first a scholar of Nicolas Bertin, and afterwards of Hyacinth Rigaud. Tocqué devoted himself chiefly to portraits. He became a member of the Paris Academy in 1734. He was invited by the Empress Elizabeth to the Russian court, where he painted the portrait of that princess, and met with general encouragement. He spent two years at St. Petersburg, moving thence to Copenhagen, where he painted several members of the Royal Family of Denmark. He married the daughter of the painter Nattier, and died in Paris, February 10, 1772. The following examples of his art are in public galleries:

Amiens.	Museum.	Portrait of a Young Man.
Bayeux.	"	Portrait of a Lady and her Daughter.
Marseilles.	"	Portrait of the Comte de Saut Florentin.
Nantes.	"	Portrait of a Lady.
Paris.	Louvre.	Portrait of Marie Leczynska.
"	"	Portrait of the Dauphin Louis, son of Louis XV.
"	"	Portrait of Mme. de Graffigny. And four in the La Caze Collection.
Versailles.	Mus. Hist.	Portrait of the Empress Elizabeth of Russia.
"	"	Portrait of the Poet Gresset. And three others.

TOEPUT, LODEWYK, (POZZO, POZZO-SERRATO,) was born at Mechlin in 1550. According to Descamps, he went at an early period of his life to Italy, where he passed the remainder of his days. He won some reputation as a painter of landscapes, fairs, and markets. He also had some repute as a poet. He chiefly resided at Treviso, in the Venetian State, where he was still living in 1604.

TOFANELLI, STEFANO, painter, born at Lucca in 1750, was a pupil of Niccolò Lapiccola in Rome. He was employed by the first engravers of the day to make drawings for them, and among other things drew for Volpato, Raphael's 'Parnassus,' a 'Sibyl and two Prophets,' by Michelangelo, Guido Reni's 'Martyrdom,' Guercino's 'Aurora' and 'Day and Night,' and a Landscape by Claude Lorraine; for Morghen, Poussin's 'Dance of the Hours,' Raphael's 'Jurisprudence,' 'The Transfiguration,' and 'Miracle of Bolsena;' and Murillo's 'Magdalene.' He also worked for Bettelini, Fontana, and Folo, and himself painted altar-pieces, portraits, and some mythological scenes. In 1781 he opened an Art School in Rome, but he afterwards returned to Lucca, and in 1802 became Professor of Drawing at the University of S. Frediano. He died at Lucca early in the 19th century.

TOGNONE, ANTONIO, a fresco painter of Vicenza, who was instructed by Zelotti, during his stay in that city (circa 1580), where certain frescoes by Tognone still remain. He died young at Vicenza.

TOL, DOMINICUS VAN, was born at Bodegrave, between 1631 and 1642. He was the nephew and scholar of Gerard Dou, and one of his most successful imitators. Some of his interiors partake of the manner of Brekelenkam. He practised for a time at Amsterdam, but most of his life was passed at Leyden. He died there in 1676. A David and a Peter van Tol have been mentioned, but there is reason to believe them identical with Dominicus. Works:

Amsterdam.	Rijks Museum.	The Mouse-trap.
"	"	Portrait of Hendrick Spiegel.
"	"	A Family Scene (copy after Dou).

TOLEDO, JUAN DE, a Spanish painter, was born at Lorca, Murcia, in 1611. He was the son and pupil of Miguel de Toledo, an obscure artist. According to Palomino, he went to Italy when young, and studied under Anniello Falcone at Naples. He afterwards went to Rome, where he became the disciple and friend of Michelangelo Cerquozzi, called delle Battaglie. On his return to Spain he established himself at Granada, and acquired a distinguished reputation as a painter of battles and sea-pieces, and also of history. There are several of his works in the churches at Granada, Talavera de la Reyna, Madrid, and Alcalá de Henares. At some time in his life he served in the army, and was commonly known as el capitán. He died in 1665.

TOLEDO, JUAN DE, a pupil of Luis Tristan, flourished from 1641 to 1645, and painted a number of pictures in the cathedral of Toledo; a small 'Virgin, Christ, and St. John' by him is preserved in the sacristy of the Capuchin Church at Toledo.

TOLENTINO, FRANCESCO DI, a painter of the 16th century, who worked in the style of Pinturicchio. He was probably the author of the frescoes in S. M. Nuova, Naples, from the life of Christ; of a 'Pieta', an 'Adoration of the Kings,' eight scenes from the life of St. Barbara, and a 'Virgin with Saints and Angels' in the cloister church of Liveri, near Nola.

TOLMEZZO, DOMENICO, and MARTINO DI CANDIDO DA, two brothers, who worked at Udine in 1479, as painters and statuaries, overlaying their figures with feigned draperies in paint. Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle attribute frescoes in the following churches to Domenico: Sant' Antonio, at Mione; Santa Catarina, at Luint; San Vito, at Liaris; San Leonardo, at Osais; San Floriano, at Forni di Sopra, and San Leonardo, at Forni di Sotto. A more fully authenticated work by him is an altar-piece in the Duomo of Udine—a 'Madonna with Saints' above, and an 'Entombed Christ with Angels' below—signed '1479. Opus Dominici de Tumetio.'

TOLMEZZO, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO DA, a painter of Udine, was the son of one Oderico di Daniele of Sacchieve. He flourished towards the close of the 15th century, and though not related in any way to Domenico da Tolmezzo, was one of the journeymen associated with him in the carrying out of certain frescoes (see preceding article). In 1489 he painted the frescoes in the church of S. Antonio at Barbeano, which still remain, though much damaged in parts; in 1493, those in San Martino at Sacchieve; there is also in this church an altar-piece representing the patron saint dividing his cloak, evidently painted by the same hand. At the entrance there is the following inscription on a pilaster: Opera di Zuane Francesco de Tolmezzo depentor fu de M. Duri, Daniel d. Soclevo de la Ghaxada de quel del Zoto, 1493. He was further the author of frescoes, now partly obliterated, in the church of Provesano. A picture on panel of a 'Virgin and Child with Angels,' is also known as his work, and is in the possession of Signor C. Astori at Udine.

TOLOSANO. See BARON, JEAN.

TOMASI, NICCOLA, called COLANTONIO DEL FIORE, lived in the middle of the 14th century, and was the contemporary and acquaintance of Andrea Orcagna. He was one of the first promoters of the Guild of Painters at Florence. In S. Antonio Abbate, at Naples, is an altar-piece by him painted in 1371. It was originally a triptych, having in its centre, 'St. Anthony, the Abbot, enthroned between Saints.' Of this artist's birth or death nothing is known.

TOMBE, LA. See LA TOMBE, NICOLAAS.

TOMÉ, DIEGO, an engraver of Toledo, who executed, in 1726, a title-page representing 'St. Ildefonso receiving the Marian chasuble,' surrounded with an architectural design by Narciso Tomé.

TOMÉ, LUCA DI. See THOMÉ.

TOMKINS, CHARLES, painter and engraver, was the eldest son of William Tomkins, A.R.A., and brother of Peltro Tomkins. He was born in London about 1750, and in 1776 gained a premium from the Society of Arts. He exhibited several landscape views at the Academy, some of which he subsequently engraved. In 1782 he engraved, jointly with Jukes, Cleveley's 'Floating Batteries before Gibraltar,' and in 1796 published 'A Tour in the Isle of Wight,' containing a series of eighty views, engraved from his own drawings. Other works by him are: 'Review in Hyde Park,' 1799 (printed in colours); 'Views of Reading Abbey,' and 'Illustrations to Petrarch's Sonnets,' the two last published in 1805. He died about 1810.

TOMKINS, PELTRO WILLIAM, an English engraver in the chalk and dotted manner, and a distinguished scholar of Bartolozzi, was born in London in 1760. Many of his early works were after Angelica Kauffman, and other painters of the time; but his best plates are those after Italian and Dutch masters for the publication entitled 'The British Gallery of Pictures,' and for the 'Stafford Gallery.' Of the latter some impressions were printed in colours. He also engraved the plates for 'Original designs of the most celebrated masters of the Bolognese, Roman, Florentine, and Venetian schools' (1812); for Tresham's 'Gallery of Pictures' (1814); for 'Illustrations of Modern Scripture' (1832); for a splendid edition of 'Thomson's Seasons,' after pictures by W. Hamilton; and for 'The Birth of Love,' by Bland Burgess, from designs by the Princess Elizabeth of England. He engraved, too, some plates from his own designs, among them 'Innocent Play' and 'Love and Hope.' One very rare private plate by him is the portrait of Margaret Audley, Duchess of Norfolk; after Lucas de Heere.

Many small ornamental prints for publications of the day, which were probably engraved by scholars under his direction, bear his name. He died in London, April 22nd, 1840.

TOMKINS, WILLIAM, A.R.A., an English landscape painter, born in London about the year 1730, was the son of an obscure painter. In 1763 he obtained a premium for a landscape, and was among the first associates of the Royal Academy. He exhibited at the Academy from 1769 to 1790, his subjects being chiefly views, with birds and dead game. Six views of Windsor by him were engraved. He painted numerous landscapes and views of gentlemen's seats in England and Scotland; there are also some copies of Hobbema and other Dutch landscape painters by him. He died in London, January 1st, 1792.

TOMLINSON, J., an English engraver, who practised in London in the early part of the 19th century. Receiving a good offer of employment in Paris, he settled there, but falling into bad company, he took to drinking and debauchery, and finally drowned himself in the Seine in 1824. His works were principally landscape views.

TOMMASO DI MARCO, a native of Florence, and a pupil of Orcagna; none of whose works are known to be extant. Vasari mentions a picture by him painted in 1392, in Sant' Antonio at Pisa, but this has been long destroyed.

TOMMASO DI STEFANO, architect, painter, and miniaturist, born at Florence about 1496, was a scholar of Lorenzo di Credi, and the friend of Sogliani. His surname is said to have been Lunetti. He successfully imitated the manner of his master, and excelled particularly in the painting of draperies. He painted an altar-piece for the Villa d'Arcetri, representing the 'Nativity,' which is still to be seen in the chapel of the Capponi della Rovinate family, and carried out many architectural works in Florence and its neighbourhood. He died at Florence in 1564.

TOMOLIUS, LUCA, an engraver, whose name is affixed to a small portrait of F. Lælius Contesino, coarsely executed with the graver. He was probably identical with Lucas Tomiolus, whose name appears on a portrait of Antonius Paulutius.

TOMPSON, RICHARD, mezzotint engraver, practised in London towards the close of the 17th century. He kept a shop for the sale of engravings, and also a printing office, which has caused it to be questioned whether the excellent prints which bear his name were really his productions, or merely sold by him. His engravings are chiefly after Kneller and Lely. A print of Nell Gwynne and her two sons, signed by him, is extant. His own portrait, painted by Soest, was engraved by Francis Place. Tompson died in 1693. Other plates:

Elizabeth, Countess of Southampton; after Van Dyck.

Mary Davis, with a guitar.

Prince Rupert; after Lely.

Gilbert Shelton, archbishop of Canterbury.

Lady Ann Montagu; after Lely.

Admiral Sir W. Berkeley.

Admiral Sir Joseph Jordan.

TOMS, PETER, the son of W. H. Toms, was a scholar of Hudson, and drapery painter to Sir Joshua Reynolds, Cotes, and West. He was one of the first forty Royal Academicians, and also held a situation in the Herald's Office. He went to Ireland to practise as a portrait painter, but not meeting with encouragement, he returned to England. The death of Cotes is said to have so deeply affected him, that he fell into a state of melancholia, and destroyed himself in 1776.

TOMS, W. H., an English engraver, who flourished about the year 1740. He engraved several views and architectural subjects, some plates for books, and a few portraits. He died about 1750. The following are among his best prints:

The Portrait of Sir Philip Percival; after Van Dyck.

Two Views of Greenwich Hospital; after Lawranson.

Four Views of Gibraltar; after Macé.

A set of eight Views in the Island of Jersey.

A series of English Views; after Chatelain. 1747.

A series of perspectives of ancient London churches; after R. West. 1736—39.

Twelve Views of Shipping.

TONDUZZI, GIULIO, painter, a native of Faenza, who flourished in the first half of the 16th century. He was a pupil of Giulio Romano. Lanzi mentions a 'Stoning of S. Stephen' by him in the church at Faenza, which from its resemblance to the works of his master, had been attributed to Romano.

TONELLI, GIUSEPPE, an Italian painter of perspectives and theatrical scenery, who flourished about 1668. He was a pupil of Chiavistelli. He worked chiefly at Bologna and Rome.

TONNO, —, a Sicilian painter, the servant and pupil of Polidoro Caravaggio, whom he assassinated in order to get possession of his money. He was executed for this crime in 1543, at Messina.

TOOKEY, JAMES, an English engraver in the beginning of the 19th century. Specimens of his work will be found in Church's 'Cabinet of Quadrupeds,' and Bell's 'British Theatre.'

TOORENBURGH, GERRIT, born at Amsterdam about 1737, was a scholar of J. Ten Compe, and of C. Pronk. He painted landscapes and views of cities, and his drawings are good. He also decorated the interiors of houses, among them that of the Baron Van Esse, called the Old House of Scheffelaar. Toorenburgh died at Nykerk about 1785. In the Museum at the Hague there is a view of the Amstel at Amsterdam by him.

TOORENVLIEET, ABRAHAM, son and pupil of Jakob Toorenvliet, was born in 1685. He painted portraits, and died in 1735.

TOORENVLIEET, JAKOB, (TORENVLIET,) called JASON, was born at Leyden in 1641. He was instructed in design by his father, ABRAHAM TOORENVLIET, a glass painter, and for some time applied himself to painting portraits. With these he had acquired some reputation, when, in 1670, he was induced to accompany his friend Nicholas Rosendaal in a journey to Italy. On his arrival at Rome, the works of Raphael became the particular objects of his study. To improve his colour he visited Venice, where he resided some time, and after an absence of six years returned to Holland, where his success was unequal to his hopes. He was the first master of Frans Mieris. He died at Leyden in 1719. Works:

Brunswick.	Gallery.	A party of men and women with books.
Dresdeu.	"	A Woman singing while a man plays the hurdy-gurdy.
"	"	A Fishwoman.
"	"	A Jew holding a book.
Vienna.	"	A Butcher's Shop.

TÖPFFER, ADAM WOLFGANG, born at Geneva in 1765, studied in Paris under Suvée and Delarive, and drew and painted landscapes, genre pictures, and scenes of peasant life, treating the latter with much drollery and humour. He died in 1847.

TÖPFFER, J. RUDOLF, a draughtsman and art-writer, born at Geneva in 1799, was the son of Adam Töpffer. He was destined for his father's profession, but a weakness of eyesight prevented his becoming a painter. He devoted himself, however, with great success to draughtsmanship, and published a number of humorous works, illustrated with original drawings. Among these were a 'History of M. Jabot,' a 'History of M. Crispin,' and a pleasantly written book of travels, 'Voyages en Zig-Zag.' He was also the author of various critical writings on art, and was Professor of Æsthetics at the Academy of Geneva. He died at Geneva, June 18th, 1846.

TOPHAM, FRANCIS WILLIAM, an English subject painter in water-colours, was born at Leeds in 1808. His early years were devoted to the practice of engraving. Coming to London at the age of twenty-one, he gradually devoted himself, self-taught, to painting. He was elected an Associate of the New Water-Colour Society in 1842, and a member in 1843, but resigned in 1847, and was elected an Associate of the Old Water-Colour Society the same year, becoming a full member in 1848. Here his works chiefly appeared, though he occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy, the British Institution, and the Society of British Artists. His early subjects were much taken from Wales and Ireland, but in his later years, Spanish scenes greatly attracted him, and he travelled much in the Peninsula. He had at one time considerable practice as a draughtsman: amongst the works he illustrated were Mrs. S. C. Hall's 'Midsummer Eve,' Moore's 'Melodies,' 'Burns' Poems,' and his own 'Angler's Souvenir,' for he was a disciple of the gentle craft. He died at Cordova, during one of his Spanish trips, in March 1877. Amongst his pictures we may name:

Dublin.	Nat. Gall.	The Irish Mother.
Liverpool.	Corp. Gall.	Group of Children.

Liverpool.	Corp. Gall.	Voices of the Sea. } oil.
"	"	The Irish Pattern. } oil.
London.	S. Ken. Mus.	Galway Peasants.
"	"	Irish Peasant Girl at the foot of a Cross.
"	"	Peasants at a Fountain, Bas Pyrénées. 1858.
"	"	South Weald Church, Essex.

TOPINO-LEBRUN, FRANÇOIS JEAN BAPTISTE, born at Marseilles in 1769, is remembered for his picture of the 'Death of Caius Gracchus,' painted in 1797, which was purchased by the government and placed in the Museum at Marseilles. He had been a pupil of David, both in Rome and Paris, and imitated him in painting and politics. In 1793 he became a member of the Revolutionary Tribunal, and was guillotined at Paris in 1801, for conspiring against the life of the first consul.

TORBIDO, FRANCESCO, called IL MORO, painter, was born in Verona about 1486. His sobriquet seems to have been suggested by his personal appearance; for his portrait in red chalk, in the Christ Church collection at Oxford, represents him with thick lips and crisp hair. In his youth he went to Venice to study under Giorgione, but having quarrelled and come to blows with some Venetian, he returned to Verona, where he gained the friendship of Liberale, who made him his heir. From his custom of imitating the manners of various masters, notably Giorgione, Cariani, Palma, and Giulio Romano, his easel pictures are often wrongly ascribed. Crowe and Cavalcaselle point out three conspicuous instances: the 'Flute Player' in the Casa Maldura, Padua, ascribed to Pordenone; the picture called 'General Gattamelata with his Esquire,' in the Uffizi Gallery, and a 'Flute Player crowned with laurel,' in the Paduan Gallery, both ascribed to Giorgione, the latter with a forged signature. The same writers point out that the 'Woman taken in Adultery,' at the Hermitage. (No. 12), ascribed in the catalogue to an unknown Venetian master, is by Torbido. The Munich Pinakothek possesses a portrait by him, dated 1516. A portrait of a gray-bearded man is in the Museum of Naples; in the Verona Gallery there is a 'Virgin enthroned' by him, dated 1542; in the church of St. Zeno, at Verona, and in the cathedral of Salò, there are altar-pieces. In 1534 Torbido painted the frescoes of the 'Nativity,' 'Presentation,' and 'Assumption,' in the choir of the Duomo of Verona, from cartoons by Giulio Romano. In 1535 he was at Friuli, where, in the choir of the church of Rosazo, he left frescoes representing 'SS. Peter and Paul,' the 'Virgin and Child,' the 'Transfiguration,' 'Peter walking on the Sea,' the 'Call of SS. James and Andrew,' and the symbols of the Evangelists. The date of his death is uncertain, but that he was alive in 1546 is proved by a letter of Pietro Aretino's. Torbido was also an engraver. A list of his plates is to be found in Passavant's 'Peintre Graveur.'

TORELLI, CESARE, painter, was a native of Rome, and a pupil of Giovanni de' Vecchi. He flourished in the pontificate of Paul V., and was employed both as a painter and a mosaicist in the library of the Vatican, and in the Scala Santa, at San Giovanni Laterano. He painted two sibyls in the church of La Madonna del Orto. He died in 1615.

TORELLI, FELICE, a painter of Verona, born in 1670, was of the school of Giangioseffo dal Sole, but had previously studied art under Santo Prunati. His altar-pieces are to be found at Rome, Turin, Milan, and other cities of Italy.

That in the church of the Dominicans, at Faenza, is one of his best works. It represents 'St. Vincent in the act of curing a female Lunatic.' He died in 1748. His wife LUCIA, née CASALINI, also painted some pictures for churches, in which she imitated the style of her husband; but her chief excellence lay in portraits. Her own hangs in the Uffizi at Florence. She was born in 1677, and died in 1762.

TORELLI, FILIPPO DI MATTEO, a Florentine miniaturist, who flourished between 1440 and 1468. In the 'Lorenziana' at Florence there is a finely illuminated 'Evangelistarium' by him, with miniatures of the 'Adoration of the Kings,' the 'Crucifixion,' the 'Resurrection,' &c. In conjunction with Zanobi Strozzi, he illuminated some choir-books for the Duomo and for San Marco, at Florence. These miniatures were at one time wrongly attributed to Fra Benedetto, the brother of Fra Angelico.

TORELLI, GIACOMO, Cavaliere, a celebrated painter of architecture and theatrical scenery, was born at Fano in 1608. He was the first, it is said, to invent shifting scenes and machinery for dramatic representations, and, for the surprise they occasioned, was named il gran Stregone, the great magician. He died at Fano in 1678.

TORELLI, STEFANO, painter, was born at Bologna in 1712. He studied first under his father, Felice Torelli, and then under Francesco Solimena. Augustus III., the future King of Poland, brought him to Dresden in 1740, and he there painted altar-pieces and ceiling decorations, many of which were destroyed in the Seven Years' War. He painted the figures in Canaletto's twenty-nine views of Dresden (1741). In 1762 he was summoned to the court of Petersburg, where he painted ceilings in the Royal Palace, and some portraits, among the latter one of the Empress Elizabeth in armour. He was a clever caricaturist, and etched a few plates. He died at Petersburg in 1784.

TORESANI, ANDREA, an Italian painter, and native of Brescia, who flourished between 1727 and 1760, practising chiefly at Venice and Milan.

TORNIOLO, NICCOLÒ, was born at Siena, and flourished about the year 1640. He resided some time at Bologna, where he painted two pictures for the church of S. Paolo, a 'Cain slaying Abel,' and a 'Jacob wrestling with the Angel.' Some of his pictures are on variegated marble.

TOROND, —, an English engraver and humorous draughtsman, practising about the middle of the 18th century, of whom nothing is known.

TORRE, BAROLOMMEO, a fresco painter of Arezzo, who flourished about the beginning of the 17th century, and died young.

TORRE, FLAMINIO, called DEGLI ANGINELLI, born at Bologna in 1621, was first a scholar of Jacopo Cavedone and Guido Reni, but afterwards studied under Simone Contarini. His chief excellence was as a copyist. He painted, however, some pictures of his own for the churches at Bologna; the best is a 'Deposition from the Cross,' in S. Giorgio. Bartsch describes the following seven prints by Flaminio Torre:

Samson; after Guido.

The Virgin accompanied by the Infant Jesus and St. John; from his own design; dated 1639.

580

The Virgin with St. Jerome and St. Francis; after Lodovico Carracci.

The Virgin with the patron Saints of Bologna; after Guido.

St. John the Evangelist; from his own design. Signed F. T. F.

Three Children bearing a Plateau, on which are two vases and a glass; signed G. R. T.

Pan conquered by Cupid; after Ag. Carracci.

Flaminio Torre died at Modena in 1661.

TORREGIANI, BAROLOMMEO, a pupil of Salvatore Rosa, painted landscapes and portraits. He is supposed to have died in 1674.

TORRENTIUS, JOHANN, born at Amsterdam or Haarlem in 1589, was not less remarkable for the talents he possessed as a painter, than for the depravity of his morals. In the early part of his life he painted conversations, domestic subjects, and still-life; and his pictures were greatly admired for beauty of finish and delicacy of colour. But he afterwards fell into a dissolute course of life, and selected obscenity for his subject. To profligacy he added impiety, and attempted to justify his art by preaching tenets subversive of every moral principle. He was accused of being a leader of the Rosicrucians, was arrested, 'questioned,' and sentenced to twenty years imprisonment. By the intercession of some persons of consideration, among whom were Sir Dudley Carleton and Charles I., who addressed a letter on his behalf to the Prince of Orange, he obtained his liberty, and, after an unsuccessful visit to England, lived in hiding at Amsterdam till his death in 1640. Two pictures by him are mentioned in the Whitehall Catalogue. They were presented to Charles I. by Sir Dudley Carleton.

TORRES, CLEMENTE DE, born at Cadiz in 1665, was a pupil of D. Juan de Valdes Leal, in Seville. By his talent and application he became one of the best painters of his time, both in oil and fresco. In the latter manner he painted the S. Fernando over the principal door in the convent of St. Paul, Seville, and three colossal Apostles, with groups of angels above each, in other parts of the same convent. For the Mercenarios Calzados, he painted in oil the two Saints John, and the Virgin. He went to Madrid about 1724, where he formed a friendship with Antonio Palomino, in whose praise he wrote a sonnet: Palomino returned the compliment by describing him as a distinguished painter, and a laurelled scholar of the Muses. In the church of S. Felipe Neri, Cadiz, he painted a 'God the Father.' In the Hermitage there is a 'St. Joseph with the Infant Christ' by him. He died at Cadiz in 1730.

TORRES, MATIAS DE, born at Espinosa de los Monteros in 1631, studied under his uncle, an indifferent painter, and in the Madrid Academy. He also received lessons from the younger Herrera. He imitated and exaggerated the style of Caravaggio. He, however, painted landscapes, and battle-pieces, in a graceful and free manner, which were esteemed by the amateurs of his time. He died in 1711.

TORRITI, JACOBUS, (TURRITI,) is known by his signature on mosaics in San Giovanni Laterano, and Santa Maria Maggiore, Rome. Those in the Lateran were carried out in conjunction with the Franciscan monk, Jacobus de Camerino. They were executed between the years 1287 and 1292, and though in imitation of the style of Cimabue, they display a great advance on the old mosaicists of Rome.

TORTEBAT, FRANÇOIS, painter and engraver, was born in Paris in 1616. He was a disciple of Simon Vouet, whose daughter he married, and became a reputable painter of portraits. He was received into the Academy in 1663, his reception picture being a portrait of Vouet, now at Versailles. There are twenty-five spirited etchings by Tortebat, executed in a style resembling that of Michael Dorigny. He engraved the plates for 'L'Anatomie des Peintres,' by De Piles, from designs by Johannes Calcar. The following independent plates are also by him:

Peace descending upon earth; after S. Vouet.

St. Louis carried up to Heaven by Angels; after the same.

Samson breaking the Pillars of the Temple of the Philistines; after the same.

He died in Paris, June 4, 1690.

TORTEBAT, JEAN, painter, one of the twenty-nine children of François Tortebat, was born in Paris in 1652. He became a member of the Academy in 1699. His reception picture, a portrait of Jouvenet, is now at Versailles. He was a successful portrait painter, and many of his works were engraved by Edelinck. He died in Paris, November 10, 1718.

TORTIROLE, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, painter, was a native of Cremona, and flourished in the first part of the 16th century. He was a pupil of Mainardi, and worked for a time both at Rome and at Naples. He died at the age of thirty.

TORTOLERO, PEDRO, a Spanish painter and engraver, was born at Seville about the beginning of the 18th century, and died from an accident in 1766.

TORTOREL, JEAN, a native of France, who flourished about the year 1570, and engraved both on wood and on copper. In conjunction with Jacques Perrissin, he executed a set of twenty-four large prints, representing the 'War of the Huguenots.' They are engraved coarsely, but not without some spirit.

TORY, GODEFROID, a famous miniaturist, draughtsman, engraver, and printer, was born at Bourges about 1480. He began life with the study of philosophy and letters, and was a professor in various colleges. Determining to devote himself to art, he visited Italy, and, on his return to Paris, set up a printing-press, and published a number of translations from Greek and Latin authors, with illustrations by himself. He took for the sign of his house a broken jar, which he frequently placed on his plates. Hence he is known as the "Maître au pot cassé." He was appointed printer to the king, and is looked upon as a reformer of typography in France. A 'Cæsar's Commentaries' and a 'Petrarch's Triumphs,' with miniatures by him, are still extant. To his brush is also ascribed a miniature at the head of a Codex of Diodorus Siculus. He died in Paris in 1533.

TOSCANI, GIOVANNI DI FRANCESCO, (TOSSICANI,) a painter of the 14th century, was the pupil of Giotto, in whose style he painted. His masterpiece is said to have been an 'Annunciation,' in a chapel of the Bishop's palace at Arezzo. It was restored by Agnolo di Lorenzo, and later by Vasari. Toscani died May 2, 1403, and was buried in Santa Maria del Fiore.

TOSCHI, PAOLO, draughtsman and engraver, born at Parma in 1788, studied in Paris under Bervic, and first made a reputation by a fine etching of Henry IV., after Gérard. In 1837 he was appointed Professor of Engraving and Director of the Academy of Parma, and shortly afterwards was commissioned to carry out the reproduction of Correggio's and Parmigiano's injured frescoes in S. Giovanni, and in the Della Steccata at Parma, in water-colour and engraving. The results were published in forty-eight plates. Other fine plates by Toschi were:

Lo Spasimo; after Raphael.

The Madonna Della Tenda; after the same.

The Descent from the Cross; after Daniele da Volterra.

The Madonna della Scodella; after Correggio.

Venus and Adonis; after Albano.

Portraits of the Grand Duke of Tuscany; the Duc Descazes; Machiavelli; Alfieri.

He died at Parma, July 30, 1854.

TOSCHI, PIER FRANCESCO D' JACOPO DI DOMENICO, was the son of a painter living outside the Porta Romana at Florence. He was a pupil of Andrea del Sarto. Three pictures by him, an 'Assumption,' a 'Transfiguration,' and a 'Resurrection,' are in the church of S. Spirito, Florence. He was also much engaged on decorative work. He died on September 17, 1567, and was buried in S. Spirito.

TOSS, J. The name of this artist is affixed to a spirited etching, representing the adoration of the Shepherds; after C. Hochfeld.

TOTO, ANTHONY, painter and architect, was an Italian by birth, but came to England about 1531, and was naturalized in 1543. Henry VIII. appointed him Serjeant-Painter. None of his works are known.

TOUR, MAURICE QUENTIN DE LA. See DE LA TOUR.

TOURFAUT, LÉON ALEXANDRE, engraver, was a native of Paris, and a pupil of Sotain. He engraved chiefly on wood, and reproduced portraits, etc., for 'Le Monde Illustre,' and other publications, principally after designs by contemporary artists. He committed suicide by hanging himself, November 16, 1883.

TOURNEMINE. See VACHER DE TOURNEMINE.

TOURNEUX, JEAN FRANÇOIS, painter, was born at Banthouzel (Nord) in 1809. He was a pupil of Maréchal, at Metz, and painted realistic pictures with a certain vigour. He was also the author of several volumes of verse. In the Metz Museum there is a pastel picture by him, 'The Gipsy Camp,' and at the Grenoble Museum, an 'At the Organ.' He died in Paris in 1867.

TOURNIER, —, a French painter, born at Toulouse about 1604. He was a pupil of Valentin, and is said to have afterwards studied in Italy under Caravaggio, whose blackness he imitated to an absurd degree. In the Toulouse Museum there are two pictures by him; a 'Descent from the Cross,' and an 'Entombment.' He died about 1670.

TOURNER. See TOURNIÈRES.

TOURNIER, JEAN JACQUES, a French engraver of the 17th century, a native of Toulouse. He engraved several plates for 'Les Édifices Antiques de Rome,' by Antoine Desgodets. He also engraved a set of vases from the designs by Charles Errard, and some Madonnas, after Guido.

TOURNIÈRES, ROBERT, born at Caen, in Normandy, in 1668. He received his first instruction from Lucas de la Haye, a Carmelite friar, but went young to Paris, and entered the school of Bon Boullongne. In 1702 he was received by the Academy as a portrait painter, and in 1716 as a painter of history. He was made professor in 1735. He painted several large pictures for churches, and the portraits of some persons of distinction; but he also imitated the manner of Gerard Dou and Godfrey Schalcken, and his little genre pictures became so popular, that he eventually gave up historical painting. He exhibited occasionally at the Salon between 1704 and 1748. He was a favourite with the Regent Duke of Orleans, who took great delight in seeing him paint. Several of his works have been engraved. In 1750 Tournières returned to Caen, where he died in 1752. Among his pupils were Huliot the younger, Romagnesi, and Le Moine. His 'Origin of Painting' is in the Louvre, and his portraits of the Maupertuis family in the Nantes Museum.

TOURNY, JOSEPH-GABRIEL, a water-colour painter and engraver, who was born in Paris in 1817, studied under Martinet, and became tapissier at the Gobelins in 1836. He gained the 'prix de Rome' for engraving in 1846, and then took up his residence in the Papal city. While in Italy he made many copies in water-colour of paintings by the old masters. He was also successful as a portrait painter. He died at Montpellier in 1880.

TOURSEL, AUGUSTE, a French painter of landscapes and historical subjects, born at Arras in 1812. He was the pupil of Lordon and of Gros. He exhibited a few pictures at the Salon between 1840-50, and there are several of his works in the museum of his native town. He died in Paris, February 12, 1883.

TOUSSAINT, AUGUSTUS, an English miniature painter, born in London towards the middle of the 18th century. He studied under James Nixon, and was awarded a prize in 1766 by the Society of Arts. From 1775 to 1788 he exhibited miniatures at the Royal Academy, but, succeeding to property on the death of his father, a jeweller, he retired to Lynnington, where he died towards the close of the century.

TOUZE, JEAN, born in Paris in 1747, was a pupil of Greuze, whose manner he successfully imitated. He painted domestic scenes, and was also much employed in making drawings for engravers. He died in Paris in 1809.

TOWNE, CHARLES, an English landscape and cattle painter, born in the latter part of the 18th century. His works were occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy and at the British Institution between 1795 and 1828, after which he settled at Liverpool for some years, and became Vice-President of the Liverpool Academy in 1813. He is supposed to have returned to London and to have died about 1850. There is a picture of Everton village by him in the Liverpool Corporation Gallery.

TOWNE, FRANCIS, an English landscape painter, born in 1740. He studied under W. Pars, and was awarded a prize by the Society of Arts in 1759. His works first appeared at the Free Society and in Spring Gardens, but he afterwards exhibited at the Academy and at the British Institution. He spent several years of his life in Italy and Switzerland. He died in London in 1816.

TOWNLEY, CHARLES, an English painter and mezzotint engraver, was born in London in 1746. He studied in Rome and Florence, and engraved portraits and historical subjects. He also painted portraits, both in oil and pastel; some of the latter were exhibited with the Free Society in 1782. In 1789 he visited Berlin, where he painted miniatures and engraved portraits, among the latter those of Frederick William II., Catharine II., and Ziethen.

He was appointed court engraver at Berlin. In 1790 he went to Hamburg, and thence returned to England. He died about 1800. Among his plates are the following:

PORTRAITS.

Leonardo da Vinci; after a picture ascribed to the master.
Annibale Carracci; after himself.
Domenichino; the same.
Peter Paul Rubens; the same.
Rembrandt; the same.
Sir Joshua Reynolds; the same.
Percival Pott, Surgeon, F.R.S.; after Reynolds.
Joseph Allan, M.D.; after Romney.
Sir Hyde Parker, Vice-Admiral; after the same.

SUBJECTS.

Agrippina weeping over the Tomb of Germanicus; after Casway.
Bulls fighting; after Stubbs.
And others after Hoppner, Opie, and Dance.

TOWNSHEND, GEORGE, Marquis, amateur etcher, had a great reputation for his humorous sketches and caricatures, some of which he etched himself. He was born in 1724, and in 1767 became Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. It was during his term of office that many of his best drawings were made, notably a clever caricature of the Duchess of Queensberry. He died in 1807.

TRABALLESI, FRANCESCO, a native of Florence, flourished at Rome in the pontificate of Gregory XIII. (1572—1585). In the Chiesa de' Greci, which was founded by that pope, are two altar-pieces by this painter, an 'Annunciation,' and a 'Christ disputing with the Doctors.' His brother BARTOLOMEO was an assistant of Vasari.

TRABALLESI, GIULIO, (GIULIANO,) an Italian designer and engraver, born at Florence in 1726. He made most of the drawings for the collection of portraits of illustrious Florentines, which were engraved by Allegrini and others. We have several etchings by him, after Bolognese painters; among them are the following:

The Communion of St. Jerome; after Agas. Carracci.
The Conversion of St. Paul; after L. Carracci.
St. Alò and St. Petronius kneeling before the Virgin; after Cavedone.
The Circumcision; after Guido.
The Communion of St. Catharine; after F. Brizzio.

Traballesi died in 1796.

TRAIES, WILLIAM, an English painter, born at Crediton in 1789. In his early years he was a clerk in the Post Office. He at length devoted himself entirely to art, and gained a considerable local reputation as the "Devonshire Claude." His atmospheric effects are good, but his foliage is heavy. He formed a close friendship with Gendall, another Devonshire painter, with whom he sketched much. Only four of his works appeared at the Royal Academy. He died at Exeter, April 28, 1872. There is a landscape, 'On the Ockment,' by him in the South Kensington Museum.

TRAINI, FRANCESCO, a native of Pisa, who flourished in the 14th century, was a distinguished disciple of Andrea Orcagna. Vasari mentions a picture by him, in the church of S. Catarina at Pisa, representing 'S. Thomas Aquinas triumphing over heresy,' which is still in situ. The other works of this artist are: four scenes from the life of S. Dominic, in the Academy of Florence, once an altar-piece; it was completed in 1346; and the banner of the Fraternità della Lauda, painted for the church of S. Maria Maggiore at Pisa, in 1341.

TRAMAZZINO, FRANCO, is noticed by Florent le Comte as the engraver of a print, dated 1561, representing a solemn entry into the city of Rome.

TRAMBLIN, DENIS CHARLES, was scene-painter to the king's private theatre and to the opera in Paris, and flourished towards the middle of the 18th century. In 1751 he became a member of the Academy of S. Luke; and in 1752 he was appointed to a post at the Gobelins in succession to his father-in-law, De Neumaison.

TRAMULLES, FRANCISCO, born at Perpignan at the commencement of the 18th century, was the son of a Catalonian sculptor, who was employed at the time in the cathedral of Perpignan. He was first sent to Paris to study painting, and afterwards to Barcelona to the elder Viladomat. After devoting two years to copying the works of the old masters at Madrid, he returned to Barcelona, opened a school of design, and obtained a great number of scholars. He was employed to paint three large pictures for the cathedral at Perpignan. He also painted for the city of Gerona, and for Barcelona. He died in the latter city about 1760, in the fifty-sixth year of his age.

TRAMULLES, MANUEL, born at Barcelona in 1715, was the elder brother of Francisco. Like him, he studied under Antonio de Viladomat, whose manner he closely imitated. Like his brother, he opened a school, which was frequented by many scholars. He was very studious, and very patient in his teaching. He died July 3, 1791. His chief works are in the churches and convents at Barcelona; and there are a few at Tarragona and Gerona.

TRANFURNARI. See TZANFURNARI.

TRASI, LODOVICO, painter, born at Ascoli in 1634, was a scholar of Andrea Sacchi, at the same time with Carlo Maratti; and afterwards became the disciple of his fellow-student. In his easel pictures he resembles Maratti; but in his larger works and altar-pieces he imitated the less laboured manner of Sacchi. His 'S. Niccolò,' in the church of S. Cristoforo, at Ascoli, is esteemed his best work. He died about 1694.

TRAUT, HANS, a Nuremberg painter of the 15th century, the contemporary of Wolgemut, in whose manner he painted. His name occurs in the city rate-books in 1477. His principal work, the decoration of the cloisters of the Augustine Convent, into which he introduced portraits of many famous Nurembergers, is no longer in existence. But an example of his art is preserved in the University Collection at Erlangen. It consists of a large coloured drawing, the painter's name written upon it by Dürer.

TRAUT, WOLFGANG, an engraver on wood, was a native of Nuremberg, but practised chiefly at Frankfort a.M., where he settled in 1647. He died in 1662. Of his forty-four fine and rare prints the best are: 'The Scourging of Christ,' 'The dead Christ with an Angel,' 'Head of Christ,' and 'A Head of the Virgin.'

TRAUTMANN, JOHANN GEORG, painter, born at Zweibrücken in 1713, studied at first with F. F. Bellon at Zweibrücken, and then under Schlegel and Kiesewetter at Frankfurt, and in 1761 was made painter to the court of the Palatinate. He painted principally pictures with fire-light effects, such as his 'Burning of Troy,' portraits in eastern costume, and peasant gatherings. Examples of his art are to be found in the Städel Institute at Frankfort, and in the Augsburg and Cassel Galleries. He etched six plates, and made a number of pen and ink drawings. He died at Frankfort in 1769. His son, JOHANN PETER TRAUTMANN, born in 1745, painted in the style of his father. He died in 1792.

TRAUTMANN, KARL FRIEDRICH, landscape painter, born at Breslau in 1804, studied at the Academy of Berlin. He worked for some time in the duchy of Cassel, and from 1844 alternately in Breslau and Waldenburg. He also practised as a lithographer. In the Berlin National Gallery there is an 'Oak Forest' by Trautmann. He died at Waldenburg, in Silesia, in 1875.

TRAUTSCHOLD, WILHELM, painter, was born at Berlin in 1815. He studied at the Düsseldorf Academy, and painted a few genre pictures, but was best known as a portraitist. He died in 1876. His best work is a portrait of Liebig. There is a chalk-drawing of Black Forest scenery by him at South Kensington.

TRAVI, ANTONIO, born at Sestri, in the Genoese territory, in 1613, was generally known by the name of Il Sordo di Sestri, on account of his deafness. He was originally a colour-grinder to Bernardo Strozzi, who instructed him in design, and he afterwards studied landscape painting under Godfrey de Waals. He died in 1668. His son ANTONIO was also a landscape painter.

TRAVIÈS, CHARLES JOSEPH, painter and lithographer, was born at Wintherthur, in Switzerland, of French parents, in 1804. He studied first at Strasburg, and went later to Paris, where he worked for a time at the École des Beaux Arts, and under Heim. He made his début as a portrait painter, but finding that his bent lay rather towards caricature, he devoted himself almost entirely to drawings of that class. He was a prolific contributor to the 'Charivari' and 'La Caricature,' and assisted in the illustration of Balzac's novels. His burlesque studies of Parisian low life were full of humour and observation, and had a great popularity. He was perhaps best known in this genre by his invention of the little hunchback 'Mayeux,' a still popular type. Other works were: 'Les Français peints par eux-mêmes,' 'Les Rues de Paris,' 'Le Miroir Grotesque.' He died in Paris, August 13, 1859.

TRELLENKAMP, WILHELM, historical painter, was born at Sterkrade, near Ruhrort, in 1826. He began life as a schoolmaster at Crefeld, and afterwards studied art at the Academy at Düsseldorf. He painted a number of sacred pictures, and many portraits. He died at Orsoy on the Rhine in 1878.

TREML, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, born at Vienna in 1826, studied at the Academy of that city under Fendi, and painted military scenes in oil and water-colours with much animation. He died at Vienna in 1852.

TRÉMOLLIÈRE, PIERRE CHARLES, (TREMOILLIÈRES,) painter, born at Cholet, Maine et Loire, in 1703. He studied in Paris under Jean Baptiste Van Loo, and in Rome, as king's pensioner. While in Rome he married Isabella Tibaldi, the miniature painter, and sister to Maria Subleyras. On his return from Italy he resided some time at Lyons, where he painted three pictures for the church of the Carmelites, a 'Nativity,' an 'Adoration of the Magi,' and a 'Presentation in the Temple.' In 1734 he returned to Paris, and in 1737 was made a member of the Academy; his reception picture was an 'Ulysses shipwrecked on the Island of Calypso.' He painted several historical and fabulous subjects for the Hôtel de Soubise, and was engaged to prepare cartoons for a set of tapestry for the king, representing the 'Four Ages of the World,' when he died of consumption, in Paris, May 10, 1739. Trémollière etched a set of studies after Watteau, and had commenced 'The Seven Works of Mercy,' from his own designs, but only lived to finish two.

TRENCH, HENRY, an Irish historical painter, born towards the close of the 17th century. He studied in Italy, and gained a medal at the Academy of St. Luke. Settling in England in 1725, he died young in London, in the following year.

TRENN, EDUARD, a German landscape painter, born at Sachsenhausen in 1839. He studied at the Berlin Academy, and under Eschke. In 1866 he accompanied an exploring expedition into the interior of Africa, and was killed in an attack made upon his party by the natives.

TRENTO, ANTONIO DA (ANTONIO FANTUZZI; ANTOINE FANTOSE), engraver, was born at Trent, in the Venetian States, about the year 1508. He studied painting for a time under Parmigiano, but, on the recommendation of that master, turned to the art of engraving on wood, in the manner known as chiaroscuro. It is supposed that he was instructed in this process by Ugo da Carpi, its reputed inventor. His practice was to use three blocks to each print; the first for the outline, the second for the dark shadows, and the last for the demitint. He continued to work at Bologna under Parmigiano for some time, and about 1530 he engraved several blocks after designs by his master. But shortly afterwards he disappeared from Parmigiano's atelier, carrying off a number of drawings, engravings, and wood-cuts. Henceforth we hear no more of him in Italy. But in France there appeared among the workers at Fontainebleau one ANTOINE FANTOSE, who designed groteschi for the decoration of the Gallery, and etched a number of plates upon copper. There seems little doubt as to the identity of the two, and Bartsch and others base their opinion to that effect upon the agreement of names and dates, and upon—(1) the strong resemblances in style observable between the Italian wood-cuts and the French etchings; (2) the similarity between the monograms on the wood-cuts and those on etchings dated 1540, 1542, 1544, and 1545; (3) the partiality shown by the French artist for subjects after Parmigiano. Zani, however, dissents from this view, pointing out that Fantose confined himself to reproductions upon copper, and that these are inferior in quality to the Italian wood-cuts. Fantose died after 1550. The following list gives some of the best both of the wood-cuts and etchings. Wood-cuts:

The Virgin embracing the Infant Jesus; after Beccafumi.
The Holy Family; after A. del Sarto.

The Martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul; after Parmigiano.

The Tiburtine Sibyl showing the Virgin and the Infant Christ to the Emperor Augustus; after the same.

Circe receiving the Companions of Ulysses; after the same.

Psyche saluted by the People as a Divinity; after Salvati.

St. John in the Wilderness; after the same.

The Philosopher; after the same.

The Lute Player; after the same.

A Naked Man, seated, with his hack turned.

Among his best etchings we may name:

Hercules; after Primaticcio.

The Draught of Fishes; after Raphael.

The Fight between the Horatii and the Curiatii; after G. Romano.

Regulus; after the same.

TRESHAM, HENRY, was born at Dublin about 1749. He received his first instruction in the rudiments of art in West's academy, in his native city. He came to England in 1775, and was for some time employed in drawing small portraits. He afterwards won the patronage of Lord Cawdor, and was invited to accompany that nobleman in his travels to Italy. During a residence of fourteen years on the continent, chiefly at Rome, he prosecuted his studies with success. He had produced designs for some of the principal publications of his time, when Boydell formed his Shakespeare project and invited Tresham to paint three scenes from 'Antony and Cleopatra.' In 1791 he sent three pictures to the Academy, an 'Adam and Eve,' a 'Phryne,' and a subject from St. Luke's Gospel. After this he was elected an A.R.A. In 1799, when he became an R.A., he contributed a 'Christ and Nicodemus.' In 1807 he was appointed Professor of Painting, a post he resigned two years later on account of ill-health. Tresham was a better designer than painter; his drawings in ink and black chalk are his best productions. On his return from Rome he devoted much of his time to amateur picture-dealing, and had a gallery, in which the connoisseurs of the day might find Correggios, Raphaels, and Carraccis always on sale. He was also a writer of some reputation, and, till his death, edited for the Longmans the publication known as the 'British Gallery,' and wrote descriptions for it. Soon after his return from Italy, his health became considerably impaired, and for years before his death he was reduced to a state of infirmity which incapacitated him for any arduous undertaking. He died in London, June 17, 1814.

TREU, JOHANN NIKOLAUS, (TREY,) was born at Bamberg in 1734. He studied science and painting under his father Marquard Treu, and later under Van Loo and Pierre in Paris. He subsequently became court painter at Würzburg. Thence he went to Rome, where he lived several years, painted a portrait of Pope Pius VI., and was crowned by the Academy of St. Luke. On his return to Würzburg he painted portraits and pictures for churches. He died at Würzburg in 1768.

TREU, JOSEPH CHRISTOPH, (TREY,) born at Bamberg in 1738, was another son and pupil of Marquard Treu. He painted landscapes and sea-pieces. In 1780 he was appointed inspector of the gallery of Pommerfelden. He died at Bamberg in 1798.

TREU, (TREY,) KATHARINE, painter, was born at Bamberg in 1743. She was the daughter of Marquard Treu, and at a very early age showed talent in the representation of flowers, fruit, and insects. In 1764 she was appointed painter to the Court Palatine at Mannheim, and later became professor of painting at Düsseldorf. She died at Mannheim in 1811.

TREU, MARQUARD, painter, born at Bamberg in 1712, was a Jew by birth, but while studying at Prague embraced the Catholic faith. In the Augsburg Gallery there is a picture by him. He died in 1796.

TREU, MARTIN, a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1540. He was contemporary with Johann Sebald Beham and Heinrich Aldegrever, and, from the small size of his prints, is sometimes placed among what are called the little masters. His plates are from his own designs, and they prove him to have been a man of some genius. He appears to have attentively studied Lucas van Leyden. He sometimes marked his plates with the initials M. T. with the date, and sometimes with a monogram composed of those letters, thus,

M. He engraved moral and allegorical subjects, to the number of about sixty in all. The following are among the best :

- The Judgment of Solomon. 1540.
- The Five Wise Virgins. 1540.
- History of the Prodigal Son; twelve plates. 1541—1543.
- Peasants Dancing; twelve (?) plates. 1542.
- Gentlefolks Dancing; twelve plates. 1542.
- The Surprise—Peasant finding his wife in the arms of a Monk. 1540.
- 'La Polissnerie.' 1540.
- The ill-used Husband.
- Design for a Dagger Sheath. 1540.
- A Poniard in its Sheath. 1540.

Thirteen plates of Christ and His Apostles, with the mark M. may also be by Tren. [It is to be noted that the identity of one Martin Tren with the 16th century master whose prints are signed M.T., rests entirely on the somewhat arbitrary decision of Professor Christ.]

TREU, ROSALIE. See under DORN, JOSEPH.

TREVETT, ROBERT, an English draughtsman and engraver, born towards the close of the 17th century. He was master of the Paper-Stainers' Company, and worked in conjunction with Vertue. He died in 1723, leaving unfinished a work illustrating St. Paul's cathedral, and a large view of London from Southwark.

TREVIGI, GIROLAMO DA. See PENNACCHI.

TREVIGI, LODOVICO DA. See TOEPUT.

TREVIGLIO, BERNARDINO ZENALE DA. See MARTINI, BERNARDINO.

TREVILLIAN, WILLIAM. The name of this engraver is affixed to a portrait of Oliver Cromwell's porter, dated 1650.

TREVINGARD, ANNA, an obscure painter, practised in London in the second part of the 18th century.

TREVISANI, ANGELO, born at Venice in 1669, was a pupil of Celesti. Though he occasionally painted historical subjects, he was more employed as a portrait painter, by which branch of art he acquired both fame and fortune. Among his subject pictures were: 'The Expulsion of the Money-changers from the Temple,' in SS. Cosmo e Damiano, Venice; 'The Dream of S. Theresa,' in San Pietro in Oliveto, at Brescia; and a Madonna, in the Gallery at Madrid. He died about 1753.

TREVISANI, FRANCESCO CAVALIERE, painter, born at Capo d'Istria in 1656, was the son of Antonio Trevisani, an architect of some reputation, by whom he was instructed in the first rudiments of design. He afterwards became the disciple of Antonio Zanchi, at Venice. He visited Rome, where he studied under Maratti, and was favoured with the patronage of Cardinal Chigi. Chigi employed him in several considerable works, and recommended him to the protection of Pope Clement XI., who not only commissioned him to paint one of the Prophets in S. Giovanni Laterano, but engaged him to decorate the cupola of the cathedral at Urbino. There he represented, in fresco, allegories of the four Quarters of the World, in which he displayed much invention and ingenuity. The public buildings of Rome abound with his works. He showed talent in imitating the style of the old masters, and was employed by the Duke of Modena, in copying the works of Correggio, Parmigiano, and other favourite painters. He died at Rome, July 30, 1746. His principal pictures are :

Cassel.	Gallery.	Diana and Endymion.
"	"	Portrait of himself.
Dresden.	"	A Holy Family.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Madonna.
"	"	'Noli me Tangere.'
Paris.	Louvre.	Sleep of the Child Jesus.
Rome.	Pal. Spada.	Antony and Cleopatra.
		And others at Brunswick, Madrid, Munich, Stockholm, and Vienna.

TREVISO, DARIO DA, was living in the 15th century, and in 1446 is mentioned in the account-books of the Santo, Padua, as one of Squarcione's disciples. His only known existing picture is a Virgin of Mercy in the Gallery of Bassano. He was a very poor artist, and seems chiefly to have been employed in decorating the fronts of houses in Serravalle, Treviso, and Conegliano, with designs, mottoes, and arabesques. Many of these still exist. The dates of his birth and death are unknown.

TREVISO, GIROLAMO DA, born of respectable parents, was the brother of Lodovico Aviani, a poet. He finished an altar-piece and frescoes for a chapel of S. Niccolò, Treviso, in 1470; it has since disappeared. A small arched panel with the dead Virgin in the tomb, surrounded by the Apostles, painted by him about 1478, is in the possession of Signor Fabrizio Pieribondi, at Lonigo. In the Duomo of Treviso is an enthroned Virgin and Child with SS. Sebastian and Roch, and two Angels, dated 1487. In 1495 he painted a Madonna with four Saints, in San Salvatore of Colalto. The Casa Rinaldi, Treviso, has a 'Christ at the Column' attributed to him. The dates of his birth and death are alike unknown. Other works:

Montebelluno. S. Vigilio. Virgin with Saints.
Paese, near Treviso. Church. St. Martin sharing his Cloak.

TREVISO, GIROLAMO DA. See PENNACCHI.

TREZEL, PIERRE-FÉLIX, painter, was born in Paris in 1782. He was a pupil of Lemire, and painted historical and mythological subjects and saints in the style of Prudhon. In 1830 he accompanied a scientific expedition to the Morea, where he made numerous drawings. He died in Paris, June 16, 1855. Works:

Angers. Musée. Pnædra.
Bordeaux. " Hector and Andromache.
Versailles. " Portrait of Lautrec.

TRICOMI, BARTOLOMEO, a Messinese, who flourished in the first half of the 17th century. He was a scholar of Barbalunga, (Ricci) and the master of Andrea Zuppa, and is described by Lanzi as an excellent portrait painter.

TRIÈRE, P., an obscure French engraver, who flourished about the year 1780.

TRIMOLET, ANTHELME, painter, born at Lyons in 1798, was a pupil of Revoil, and became professor of drawing in his native town. In the Lyons Museum there is an 'Interior of a Mechanician's Work-room,' and in the Nantes Museum a 'Portrait of a Man,' by him. He died at Lyons in 1866.

TRINGHAM, —, engraved a portrait of the Reverend Samuel Clark, and several plates for books, about the year 1750.

TRIOSON. See GIRODET-DE-ROUSSY-TRIOSON.

TRIQUETI, HENRI DE, painter and sculptor, born at Conflans in 1802, (1804.) studied in Paris under Hersent. In 1831 he painted the 'Condemnation of Galileo,' and sent it to the Salon of that year. He shortly afterwards made his first essays in sculpture, to which he finally devoted himself. The mosaic decorations in the Albert Memorial chapel at Windsor are by him. He was also the author of a work on 'The Three Museums of London.' He died at Windsor in 1874.

TRISTAN, LUIS, a Spanish painter, born at a village near Toledo in 1586, was a scholar of Domenico Theotocopuli, called Il Greco. He painted a 'Last Supper' for the monks of La Sisia, near Toledo; also a series of pictures for the church of Yepes, in 1616, when he was in his thirtieth year; and in 1619, the portrait of Cardinal Sandoval, Archbishop of Toledo, in which he united the elaborate execution of Sanchez Coello with some of the Venetian spirit. The churches of Toledo possess many of his pictures, and others are to be found at Madrid. He died at Toledo in 1640.

TRIVA, ANTONIO, painter, was born at Reggio in 1626, and studied under Guercino, at Bologna. He was a reputable painter of history, and distinguished himself by some pictures in churches at Reggio and Piacenza, which have been celebrated by the poet Boschini. He visited Venice, taking with him his sister and assistant FLAMMINIA. He was invited to the court of the Elector of Bavaria, and died at Munich about 1699. He painted as well with his left hand as with his right, and was a good etcher. Bartsch has described four etchings by him with the following titles: 1. Susanna and the Elders. 2. A Repose in Egypt. 3. The Virgin, half-length, seated, holding the Infant Jesus in her arms. 4. An Allegory; a young Man looking in a Mirror, and seeing Sensuality, the Furies, and Death. All these are signed with his name. Füssli mentions five more; four views in Italy, and a frontispiece to a book.

TROGER, PAUL, a German painter and engraver, born at Zell, in the bishopric of Brixen, in 1698. After acquiring the rudiments of design in his native town, he visited Fiume, and became a scholar of Dom. Giuseppe Alberti, passing afterwards to Venice and Bologna. He finally established himself at Vienna, where he was made Director of the Imperial Academy. Of his pictures, we have, 'Christ on the Mount of Olives,' 'St. Joseph with the Child,' and 'St. Francis in a Cave.' Others are in the cathedral at Brixen, and in the Ferdinandeum at Innsbruck. He has left several original etchings of historical subjects and landscapes. Among them the following:

The Holy Family; Paul Troger, fec. 1721.
St. Joseph embracing the Infant Jesus.
The Dead Christ in the Lap of the Virgin.
Six Landscapes, with ruins and figures.

Troger died in 1777.

TROGLI, GIULIO, an Italian painter, born 1613, was a pupil of Gessi. He published a work on 'The Paradoxes of Perspective,' which gained for him the nickname of 'Il Paradosso.' He died in 1685.

TROIJEN, JAN VAN, a native of the Netherlands, who flourished about the year 1650. He engraved some of the plates for the 'Teniers Gallery,' from the copies by that master after pictures in the collection of the Archduke Leopold. They are slight in execution, and the drawing is incorrect.

TROIJEN, ROMBOUR, (TROYEN, RONTBOUITS), VAN, painter of the 17th century, was a native of Friesland. He painted landscapes with ruins, palaces, and other buildings in the Italian style. His pictures bear some resemblance to those of Cuylenburg, and, like the works of that artist, have darkened considerably since they were painted. He also painted portraits; for Suyderhoef engraved one after him. He died at Amsterdam in 1650. There are pictures by him in the Galleries of Brunswick and Augsburg.

TROILI, GUSTAV UNO, a Swedish portrait painter, born at Ransbergsbruk, in 1815, was first a soldier, then studied under Södermark, and visited Italy in 1845. In 1850 he began to practise portrait painting, and soon achieved success, his works being distinguished by fine colour and keen appreciation of character. He died in 1875. Two of his pictures are in the Stockholm Gallery.

TROLL, JOHANN HEINRICH, born at Winterthur in 1756, studied at Dresden for seven years under A. Zingg, and drew landscapes from nature. He went to Paris and the Hague, in 1794 he travelled through Switzerland, and in 1796 visited Rome. He afterwards returned to Paris, where he published a number of Swiss landscapes in aquatint. Towards the close of his life he practised flower-painting. He died at Winterthur in 1826.

TROMBA, IL. See SANTO RINALDI.

TROMETTA, NICCOLA, (or NICCOLA DA PESARO), flourished in Italy in the 17th century, and was a pupil of F. Zuccaro. Some of his works still exist in Rome, where he painted in the Ara Cœli. His best picture, however, is a 'Last Supper,' painted for the Church of the Sacrament at Pesaro. He died during the Pontificate of Paul V. (1605 to 1621).

TRONCHON, A—R—, a French engraver, who flourished from 1740 to about the year 1760. He engraved after Noël Nicholas Coypel, and other masters.

TRONO, GIUSEPPE, born at Turin in 1739, was a pupil of Alessandro Trono, but completed his studies in Rome. He was long portrait painter to the court of Naples, and later became court painter at Turin. In 1785 he went to Lisbon in a like capacity, and gained a reputation by his copies of the great masters. He died in 1810.

TROOST, CORNELIS, born at Amsterdam in 1697, was a scholar of Arnold van Boonen. He painted conversations, in which he was faithful to the customs of the people of Holland, and so won the appellation of the Dutch Watteau. He also distinguished himself as a portrait painter, being much employed on groups for the halls of the different companies in Amsterdam. He worked in pastel as well as in oil. He died at Amsterdam in 1750. Works:

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	Two Portraits of himself.
"	"	Alexander the Great at the Battle of the Granicus.
"	"	The Anatomy Lesson.
"	"	Three Chiefs of the Surgeons' Guild at Amsterdam in 1731.
"	"	The Governors of the Asylum called the 'Almoeceniersweeshuis.'
"	"	Portraits of Inspectors of the Collegium Medicum, Amsterdam. 1724.
"	"	Children playing with a Monkey.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	L' Accouchée.
The Hague.	"	Nine Scenes from Dutch Comedies.
"	"	The Meeting at the House of Biberius. (Forming a series of five pictures called the 'Nelri,' from the initial letters of the Latin inscriptions on the frames.)

The Hague.	Museum.	Portrait of himself.
"	"	The Epiphany Singers.
"	"	The Love Song.

We have a few plates by Troost, chiefly mezzotints; among them the following:

Portrait of Pietro Locatelli, Painter.

Bust of an old Man with a Beard. 1734.

A Girl drawing by the Light of a Lamp.

A Woman on the Steps of a Door, holding a light, and taking leave of a Gentleman in black.

SARA, the daughter of Cornelius Troost, was born at Amsterdam in 1731. She painted pastel portraits, and made drawings from her father's pictures and from those of Steen, Dou, and Dujardin. She became the wife of Ploos van Amstel, and died at Amsterdam in 1803.

TROOST, WILHELMUS, portrait and landscape painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1684. He was a scholar of Johann Glauber, but went to Düsseldorf to complete his studies, and there married the daughter of J. Van Nikkelen, painter to the court. After visiting several German courts, he returned to his own country, where he practised for ten years at Haarlem, and afterwards settled at Amsterdam. He occasionally painted portraits, but chiefly devoted his time to landscapes, both in oil and Indian ink; the latter are considered valuable. His style in landscape partakes of that of his first master, Glauber. He died at Amsterdam in 1759. His wife, JACOBA MARIA VAN NIKKELEN, was also a painter; she had been a scholar of Van der Mijn, and excelled in fruit and flower-pieces.

TROOSTWIJK, WOUTER JOHANNES VAN, a landscape and cattle painter, born at Amsterdam, May 28, 1782, studied drawing under Anthonie Andriessen, and painting under Jurriaan Andriessen. His pictures have a resemblance to those of Paul Potter, Karel Du Jardin, and Adrian Van de Velde, and some are worthy to rank with theirs. He practised in Amsterdam, where he died September 20, 1810. There are landscapes by him in the Museums of Amsterdam and Rotterdam.

TROPPIA, GIROLAMO, painter, flourished in Italy about 1700. He was a successful imitator and probably a pupil of Maratti. He left many works in Rome, both in oil and fresco, and painted in the church of S. Giacomo delle Penitenti, in competition with Romanelli. In the Copenhagen Gallery there is a 'Penitent Magdalen' by him.

TROSCHÉL, HANS, a German engraver, born at Nuremberg about 1592, was a disciple of Peter Iselburg, but afterwards studied in Italy under Francesco Villamena. His style, however, is inferior to that of Villamena, and his plates, though neat, are stiff and laboured. He engraved emblems after various Italian masters, as well as frontispieces and other plates for books, together with some portraits; among the latter one inscribed, Fortunius Lucetus, Philosoph. He frequently marked his plates with a cipher composed of an H and a T, thus, HT. He died in 1633. He sometimes added the figure of a thrush to his monogram, in allusion to his name. Among his works are:

The Conception; after Castelli.

The Emperor Julian; after Il Pomerancio; and the Portrait of Louis XIV.

TROSCHÉL, PETER PAUL, son of Hans Troschel, practised at Nuremberg about the year 1650, and appears to have been chiefly employed by the booksellers. He engraved some frontispieces and other book ornaments, which are executed with the graver in an indifferent style. He usually marked his plates with the initials P. T. He was still living in 1661.

TROST, ANDREAS, engraver and painter of homely subjects, was a native of Carniola, and flourished about the year 1680. He usually marked his plates with the cipher A. He was living in 1695.

TROST, CORNELIS. See TROOST.

TROTTER, S—C—, an Irish portrait painter, who flourished in the second half of the 18th century, is chiefly to be remembered for his portraits of Dr. Johnson, one of which was engraved in 1784.

TROTTER, THOMAS, an English engraver and draughtsman, born in London about the middle of the 18th century. Brought up to trade, he preferred art. After some instruction from Blake, he engraved a few plates after Stothard, and obtained a considerable reputation for his portraits. Failure of sight compelled him in his later years to give up engraving, and to devote himself to architectural and antiquarian draughtsmanship. He died at Westminster, February 14, 1803. Amongst his best plates are:

Lord Morpeth; after Sir J. Reynolds. 1787.

Dr. Shipley, Bishop of St. Asaph; after the same. 1792.

TROTTI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, Cavaliere, called IL MALOSSO, was born at Cremona in 1555, and brought up in the school of Bernardino Campi, of whom he was the most distinguished disciple. He was employed by the court of Parma, in conjunction with Agostino Carracci; and though the works of the latter were preferred, Agostino allowed that he had found in Trotti "a hard bone to crack," on which account he acquired the name of Il Malosso. Perhaps it was from a desire to perpetuate this acknowledgment of his ability by Agostino Carracci, that he inscribed one of his pictures Jo. Baptistæ Trotti dictus Malossus Cremon. faciebat an. a partu Virginis, 1594. Other pictures by him are: 'The Decapitation of St. John the Baptist,' in S. Domenico, at Cremona; a 'Conception,' in San Francesco Grande, at Piacenza; a 'Crucifixion,' in the Duomo at Cremona; and a 'Descent from the Cross,' in the Brera, Milan. His best works are his frescoes in the cupola of S. Abbondi, after designs by Campi, and in the Palazzo del Giordani, at Parma. For these he was rewarded with the title of Cavaliere. One of his last works was a 'Pietà,' in the church of S. Giovanni Novo, at Cremona, which bears the date 1607.

TROTTI, EUCLIDE, a native of Cremona, who lived in the 16th century, was the nephew and pupil of Giovanni Battista Trotti, whose manner he successfully imitated, as may be seen by two pictures in S. Sigismondo at Cremona. An 'Ascension' in S. Antonio at Milan is also ascribed to this artist. He died young in prison, where he was confined on a charge of high treason.

TROUGHTON, THOMAS, draughtsman and painter, practised towards the middle of the 18th century. A voyage to Africa, on which he set out in 1747, resulted in his shipwreck on the coast of Morocco, and his detention in slavery for thirty-three years. On his liberation and return to England he published an account of his experiences. He died in 1797.

TROUVAIN, ANTOINE, a French engraver, born at Montdidier in 1656. His plates are executed entirely with the graver, which he handled with great neatness and dexterity, and his prints produce a very pleasing effect. He was a pupil of Gérard Edelinck, and became an Academician in 1707. He died in Paris in 1710. Among others, we have the following prints by him :

- Pierre Daniel Huet, Bishop of Avranches. 1695.
- François le Boutellier, Bishop of Troyes.
- Jean Pesne, Painter and Engraver. 1698.
- René Antoine Houasse, Painter; after Tortebat.
- Jean Jouvenet, Painter; after a picture by himself.
- The Chauoine Claude du Moliuet; after a drawing by himself.
- Armande de Lorraine d'Harcourt, Abbess of Soissons. (His best plate.)
- The Annunciation; after Carlo Maratti.
- Christ restoring Sight to the Blind; after Ant. Coypel.
- The Marriage of Marie de' Medici with Henry IV., and the Minority of Louis XIII.; after the pictures by Rubens in the Louvre.
- Silenns drunk; after Ant. Coypel.

TROUVÉ, NICOLAS EUGÈNE, painter, was born in Paris in 1808. He was a pupil of Bertin and of Picot, and entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1827. He exhibited landscapes and village scenes at the Salon from 1836 onwards, and gained a medal in 1846. He died in 1886.

TROY, FRANÇOIS DE, painter, born at Toulouse in 1645, was the son of Nicolas de Troy, from whom he received the first rudiments of design. He was sent to Paris when young, became a disciple of Nicolas Loir, whose sister he married, and for some time applied himself to the study of historical painting. In 1674, he became a member of the Academy in Paris, painting Mercury and Argus for his reception picture. The brilliant success of Claude Le Fevre as a portrait painter induced him to attach himself to that more lucrative branch of art. In 1693 he was appointed a professor at the Academy, and in 1708 Director. He was sent by Louis XIV. to the court of Munich, to paint the portrait of Maria Christiana, of Bavaria, afterwards Dauphiness of France, which was placed in the Apollo gallery of the Louvre. The portrait of François de Troy, painted by himself, is in the gallery of artists at Florence, his portrait of Mansart is at Versailles, and that of the Duc de Maine at Dresden. The galleries of Angers, Grenoble, Marseilles, Montpellier, Orleans, Rouen, Toulouse, Troyes, and Valenciennes also possess examples of his work. A good example of his art in the Jones Collection at South Kensington is ascribed to Watteau. Very many of his pictures have been engraved, and he himself has left an etching of the Catafalque for the funeral of Maria Theresa, the wife of Louis XIV., which took place in 1683. He died in Paris in 1730.

TROY, JEAN DE, painter, born at Toulouse in 1640, was the eldest son of Nicolas Troy, whom he succeeded as painter to the municipality. It has been asserted by Toulousain historians that he never quitted his native town, but from a statement in the 'Histoire Générale du Languedoc,' it appears that he obtained permission from the States of the Province, and a grant of money, towards the establishment of an Art Academy at Montpellier in 1679, and it is probable that he settled and died there. The date of his death is unknown. At the Toulouse Museum there is a 'Conception' by him; at Montpellier, in the Palais de Justice, 'Louis XIV., supported by Justice and Religion;' and in the Basilique de S. Pierre 'The Charge to Peter,' and 'S. Peter healing the Paralytic.'

TROY, JEAN FRANÇOIS DE, painter, the son of François de Troy, was born in Paris in 1679. After receiving the instruction of his father, until he had made considerable progress in art, he competed without success for the prix de Rome, and his father sent him to Italy at his own cost. His stay was prolonged by the Marquis de Villacerf, who procured him a royal pension for four years. He reluctantly returned to France, by his father's desire, in 1708, and soon afterwards was made a member of the Academy. He was employed by Louis XIV., for whom he painted a series of cartoons for tapestry, representing the history of Esther; and several large allegorical subjects for the Hôtel de Ville. He also carried out some decorative work for the hotels of Samuel Bernard and M. de la Lire, and for the Seignorial chapel at Passy. In 1719 he became a professor, and in 1727 took part in the competition ordered by the king between the Academicians, sharing a prize with Le Moine. In 1738, the king appointed him Director of the French Academy at Rome, where he completed a second set of tapestry cartoons, consisting of seven scenes from the 'History of Jason.' These were exhibited in the Apollo Gallery of the Louvre in 1748. Some fancied grievance against the court caused de Troy to resign his Roman appointment in favour of Natoire, and he was on the eve of returning to France, when he died suddenly at Rome in 1752. Of his easel pictures the following are in French galleries :

Besançon.	Museum.	Portrait of the Marquis de Marignan; and two other portraits.
Dijon.	"	Pilate washing his hands before the People.
Montpellier.	"	Apollo and Diana slaying Niobe's Children.
Nancy.	"	Diana in the Bath.
Nismes.	"	The Reaper; and two others.
Orleans.	"	Portrait of the Abbé Desfriches.
Paris.	Louvre.	Henri IV. presiding at the first Chapter of the Ordre du Saint Esprit.
"	La Caze Coll.	A Female Head with powdered hair.
"	"	Portrait of a Man.
"	"	Portrait of an Echevin,
Rouen.	Museum.	Portrait of the Duchesse de la Force.

TROY, NICOLAS DE, painter, was born at Toulouse early in the 17th century, and studied in his native town under Chalette. He subsequently went to Paris, and entering the atelier of Claude Lefebvre, he became a successful painter of portraits. After a sojourn of some years in the capital, he returned to Toulouse, and endeavoured to establish a life-school, but provincial prudery took fright at the idea of nude models, and the enterprise had to be abandoned. Troy nevertheless gathered round him a large circle of pupils, his two sons being among the most distinguished of his scholars. After the death of Chalette, he succeeded to the post of municipal painter. His works, which were numerous in his native town, nearly all perished in the Revolution. In the Toulouse Museum there is a portrait of Pierris Godolin, a poet of Languedoc, by him. The date of his death is not known.

TROYA, FELIX, a Spanish painter, born at San Felipe, near Valencia, in 1660. He was a disciple of Gaspar de la Huerta, and painted history. His pictures, which are to be found in almost every church and public building in the neighbourhood of Valencia, are more remarkable for vigour of colour than correctness of design. His best works are in the church of S. Agostino, at Valencia, where he died in 1731.

TROYEN, ROMBOU VAN. See TROIJEN.
TROYON, CONSTANT, a prominent member of the modern French landscape school, was born at Sèvres, in 1810. His father was employed in the porcelain manufactory, and in his early years he worked there himself; but he aimed at higher things, and after a period of study under Riocreux, he devoted himself to landscape and animal painting. At first one POUPART, a pupil of Bertin, and member of David's school, had much influence on his proceedings. One day, however, as Troyon was sketching at St. Cloud, he fell in with Camille Roqueplan, who introduced him to Théodore Rousseau, Camille Flers, Diaz, and Jules Dupré. Thenceforward Troyon was a romantic, and soon took his place as one of the leaders of the movement. His first appearance at the Salon was in 1833, when he exhibited 'La Maison Colas, Sèvres;' 'Fête at Sèvres;' and 'A Nook in the Park of St. Cloud.' For several years his subjects were taken from the country in the neighbourhood of Paris, and throughout his life his brush was chiefly inspired by French scenery. Trips to Belgium and Holland in the latter part of his career exercised but little influence on his art. He won the usual honours at the Salon and at the Universal Exhibition of 1855. His reputation was not confined to his native country. His works were quickly appreciated in England and in the Netherlands; he was elected a member of the Amsterdam Academy in 1847, and received the Cross of the Belgian Order of Leopold in 1861. His industry was untiring. He seldom devoted himself continuously to a single picture, but had many works in various stages of progress at the same time. So assiduously did he work that at one period his sight was endangered. A few months before his death he lost his reason, and his friends were compelled to place him under restraint. Although he recovered his senses his general health never returned, and he died in Paris, March 20, 1865. Troyon yields to few in the harmony which pervades his works, though this has in some cases, owing to his love for cool tones, produced blackness in his colour. An English critic (W. E. Henley) thus writes of his work: "His drawing is loose and inexact; and he composes not as an inheritor of Claude but as a contemporary of Rousseau. But he had the true pictorial sense; and, if his lines are often insignificant and ill-balanced, his masses are perfectly proportioned, his values are admirably graded, his tonality is faultless, his effect is absolute in completeness. His method is the serene and large expression of great craftsmanship; and with the interest and the grace of art, his colour unites the charm of individuality, the richness and the potency of a natural force." His pictures are at present chiefly in the possession of private collectors. The following works by him are, however, to be found in public galleries: —

Amiens.	Museum.	View from the Parc de Neuilly.
Bordeaux.	"	Oxen going to Work.
Havre.	"	Sheep in a Landscape.
"	"	Landscape at Sunset.
Leipsic.	"	Cows at Pasture. 1851.
Lille.	"	Forest Scene at Fontainebleau.

"	"	The Return to the Farm. 1859.
Rouen.	Museum.	Cows Drinking.

TROSO DA MONZA. See MONZA.
TRUCHOT, —, a French painter of landscapes and architectural views, of whose life little is known; he died in 1823. Among his recorded pictures are, a 'View of Canterbury Cathedral;' 'View of St. Michael's Mount, in Normandy;' 'Abelard reading a letter from Eloisa,' and 'Eloisa in Prayer before an Altar;' 'The Grand Staircase of the Palais Royal;' and 'Henry, Count de Bouchange, in a Cloister.' Some of his pictures have figures by Xavier Le Prince.

TRUCHY, L., a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1731, and settled in London. He engraved twelve plates in conjunction with Guillaume Philippe Benoist, from Joseph Highmore's designs, in illustration of 'Pamela;' 'A Village Dance,' after Teniers, and several plates for Boydell. He died in London in 1764.

TRUFFIN, PHILIPPE, (or PHILIPPOT,) one of the best painters of the school of Tournai, was a pupil of Louis le Duc in 1457. He was received master painter in 1461, and was Dean of the Corporation in 1479 and 1504. In 1474 he engaged to paint an altar-piece for the church of Warchin, which the contract bound him to make in every respect equal to a 'History of St. Anthony' executed by him for the church of St. Catharine at Tournai. The result seems to have failed to satisfy the parishioners, for they cited him to answer for its shortcomings before the magistrates. Truffin had a large following of pupils, who came to his atelier not only from neighbouring cities, but even from Spain. He died at Tournai in 1506 or 1507.

TRUMBULL, JOHN, born at Lebanon in Connecticut about 1756, worked at art, and afterwards went to the University of Cambridge, U.S. Shortly after leaving college he painted a 'Battle of Cannæ,' which attracted much attention. He served with distinction in the War of Independence as adjutant to Washington and Gates. In 1778 he retired with the rank of colonel, and in 1780 went to London to study under Benjamin West. In London he painted his 'Battle of Bunker's Hill,' and 'The Death of Montgomery at Quebec.' In 1789 he returned to America, where he painted a 'Sortie from Gibraltar,' 'Burgoyne's Capitulation,' 'Cornwallis' Capitulation,' and portraits of many heroes of the War of Independence. He received a commission to paint four historical pictures for the Capitol at Washington, and eventually became President of the Academy of Arts at New York. He died at New York in 1843.

TSCHAGGENY, EDMOND J. B., painter, was born at Brussels in 1818. He was a pupil of E. Verboeckhoven, and became well known for his studies of animals, to which he chiefly devoted himself. Among his best known works are a series of 100 water-colour drawings, entitled 'The Anatomy of Cattle,' 'A Horse in a Burning Stable,' 'Giotto drawing his Sheep,' 'Oxen at a Ford,' 'Arabs with Cattle,' &c. He died at Brussels in 1873.

TSCHEDRIN. See SCHATSDRIN.

TSCHERMEZOW, IWAN, draughtsman and engraver, was born at Petersburg about 1730. He was a pupil of G. F. Schmidt, and engraved several portraits, among them the Empress Elizabeth, after Tocque; Iwan Schuwaloff, after Rotari; his own portrait; and that of the actor Wolkow.

TSCHERNEZOW, GREGOR and NICANOR, brother painters, were born in Russia, and studied at the Petersburg Academy. Nicanor visited the Caucasus in 1830-1831, and the Crimea in 1834-1835, and brought away above five hundred drawings of scenery, buildings, and costumes in these districts. In 1838 the two brothers explored the Volga from Ribinsk to Astrakhan, and in 1841 they visited Italy, painting many pictures in oils and water-colours of Florence, Rome, and Naples. Gregor died at St. Petersburg in 1865.

TSCHERNINGK, DAVID, a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1639. He engraved several frontispieces and other plates for books, which are executed with the graver in a slovenly style.

TSCHERNINGK, JOHANN, of the same family with David Tscherningk, engraved portraits and other plates for books in a neat, formal style. He was alive in 1634. A portrait painter of the name of Andreas, probably of the same family, flourished in 1660.

TSCHERNINGK, JOHANN, engraver and publisher, son of Johann Tscherningk, was living in 1685.

TSCHESKI, IWAN WASSILIEWITSCH, engraver, was born at Mohilew in 1770, and became a member of the Imperial Russian Academy. By him we have, 'The Interior of the Temple at Jerusalem,' after Worobiew, and a landscape, after Poussin. He also engraved several plates after designs by Tilesius for Krusenstern's 'Journey round the World.' He died at St. Petersburg in 1848.

TUAIRE, FRANÇOIS, painter, was born at Aix, Provence, in 1794, and sent at the age of fourteen to Paris, where he studied under Prudhon, and afterwards worked in Paris as a teacher. He painted a 'Venus and Cupid' for the Empress Josephine, and a 'Psyche in Prison' for which he received a gold medal. In the Aix Museum there is a portrait of Louis XVIII. by him. He died in 1823.

TUBACH, PAUL, a Flemish painter of the 16th century, who was attached to the suite of Margaret of Austria, in 1526. He is mentioned in an old document as having made the designs for some glass-paintings in the church of Our Lady of Seven Sorrows, near Bruges.

TUBIÈRES, PHILIPPE C. A. DE. See CAYLUS.

TUCCARI, GIOVANNI, born at Messina in 1667, was the son and pupil of Antonio Tuccari, an obscure painter. He excelled in painting battles and skirmishes, and possessed extraordinary facility of execution. Many of his works are in Germany. He died of the plague in 1743.

TUCCI, BIAGIO D'ANTONIO, was a Florentine painter, born 1446, who assisted Perugino in the decoration of the Palazzo della Signoria. He died in 1515.

TUCCI, GIOVANNI MARIA, painter, was a member of the school founded at Siena by Sodoma. He accompanied his master to Pisa in 1542, and assisted him in some of his works there. He painted chiefly for the churches of Siena and its neighbourhood, where many of his pictures still exist.

TUCKER, NATHANIEL, an English portrait painter, practising in London between 1740 and 1760. Some of his works were engraved by Johan Faber the younger.

TUDOT, LOUIS EDOMOND, painter and lithographer, was born at Brussels in 1805, of French parents. He was a pupil of Gros, and in 1836 founded the Art School of Moulins (Allier), of which he became the professor. He was the author of several technical manuals, illustrated by his own designs. He died at Moulins, December 8, 1861.

TUER, HERBERT, an English portrait painter of the 17th century. He was of good family; his mother was related to George Herbert, the poet. During the Commonwealth, he migrated to Holland, where he practised, and is supposed to have died at Utrecht before 1680. He painted many portraits of his relatives. There are by him:

London. Nat. Portrait Gallery. } Sir Leoline Jenkins. (Painted at Nimeguen.)
Oxford. Jesus College. } Sir Leoline Jenkins. (Duplicate of the first.)

TULLERIES, BERNARD DES. See PALISSY.

TULDEN. See THULDEN.

TULL, N—, landscape painter, was the master of Queen Elizabeth's School, Borough. He painted portraits and rustic scenes, and made drawings in black and white chalk. He exhibited with the Society of Artists in 1761, and six plates were engraved after him by Vivares and Elliott. He died in 1762.

TULLIO DA PERUGIA, an Italian painter of the 13th century, who in 1219 journeyed to Assisi to paint a portrait of Saint Francis. No trace remains of the portrait, which is said to have borne this inscription: Io Tullio, pittore di Perugia, essendo stato guarito da questo beato huomo, F. Francesco d'Assisi, di una grandissima apoplezia, sono andato quest'anno MCCXIX al capitolo delle store alla M. deli Angeli, et ho fato il presente suo ritratto sopra di lui per divocione che io ho in questo beato huomo.

TUNICA, JOHANN CHRISTIAN LUDWIG, painter, born at Brunswick in October 1795. After completing his studies at the Dresden Academy under Rösler, he returned to Brunswick to practise, and became painter to the court. He occasionally painted genre, but his principal works were portraits of distinguished living persons and historic characters. Among those of the latter class we may mention his portrait of the Elector Palatine Heinrich, for the 'Rittersaal' at Hanover. His son and pupil, HERMANN, is well known in Brunswick as a painter of battle-pieces and horses.

TUNNER, JOSEPH, painter, was born at Grätz in 1792. He first studied at the Academy in Vienna, then at Prague under Führich, and afterwards at Rome, where he devoted himself to religious painting. In 1840 he was appointed director of the picture gallery in the "Johanneum" at Grätz. His 'Crucifixion' is in the church of S. Antonio at Trieste. He died in 1877.

TUNNICELLI, JACOPO, painter, born at Villafraanca, near Verona, in 1784, studied under Saverio della Rosa, and at the Academy of Milan, and became one of the first miniaturists of his day. He also painted a few oil pictures. He died in 1825.

TURA, (or TURRA,) COSIMO, called COSMÈ DA FERRARA, was born at Ferrara about 1420, and became a pupil of Galasso Galassi. He was to the school of Ferrara much what Mantegna was to that of Padua, or Giov. Bellini to that of Venice. He was in the service of the Dukes of Ferrara from 1451 until the close of his life, obtaining a permanent appointment at court in 1458. In 1457 he produced some cartoons for tapestry. He painted in a style characterized by vigour in design, by lumpy, spasmodic forms, by sometimes violent colours, and by a general harshness of effect. His works are common enough. Several remain in the churches and public edifices at Ferrara, and picture galleries out of Italy are not deficient in them. It has been said, perhaps erroneously, that he was much employed in illuminating missals. Between 1468 and 1471, Tura was employed by Duke Borso of Este, in decorating the Schifanoia palace, a pleasure retreat of the Duke's in a retired part of Ferrara. On this he was associated with Francesco Cossa. Their works, which were in fresco, have now in great part disappeared, but those remaining are of much value for their details of costume and architecture. In 1471 he decorated the library of the Picos of Mirandola, and the new chapel at Belriguardo, the latter with paintings which have now vanished; in 1473 he painted the portraits of the Duke Alfonso and Beatrice d'Este as a present for Lodovico Sforza (Il Moro) of Milan; and in 1481 he executed a series of nude studies in oil for the Duke's study. He also worked for private patrons, but much of what he did for them disappeared. His most important picture is the 'Madonna with Saints,' at Berlin. Many of his works have been assigned to Mantegna, Marco Zoppo, Lorenzo Costa, and others. After a long life he died between 1494 and 1498, leaving large legacies, for some unexplained reason, to the poor of Venice. Works:

Bergamo.	Lochis Car-rara Gall.	A Virgin and Child; tempera.
Berlin.	Museum.	Madonna and Saints.
Ferrara.	Cathedral.	St. George (on the organ doors). The Annunciation.

TURCHI, ALESSANDRO, called L'ORBETTO and ALESSANDRO VERONESE, was born at Verona in 1582. He is said to have acquired the name of L'Orbetto, from having been employed, when a boy, as conductor to a blind beggar. A more probable explanation is given by Passeri, who says that he was so called from a defect in one of his eyes. In his poverty he was noticed by Riccio (Brusasorci), who discovered in him so decided a gift for art, that he took him under his protection. On leaving the school of Riccio, he went to Venice, where he worked for a time under Carlo Cagliari, and afterwards to Rome. In competition with Andrea Sacchi and Pietro da Cortona, he painted some pictures in the church of La Concezione, as well as several altar-pieces for other churches, of which the best are, a 'Flight into Egypt,' in S. Romualdo; a 'Holy Family,' in S. Lorenzo in Lucina; and a 'S. Carlo Borromeo,' in S. Salvatore in Lauro. He was much employed on cabinet pictures, representing historical subjects, which he frequently painted on black marble. He died at Rome in 1648 or 1650. His two pupils, GIOVANNI CESCHINI and GIOV. BAT. ROSSI, practised at Verona, the former painting copies of his master's works, which were often taken for originals. Other works:

Dresden.	Gallery.	The Nativity; and two others.
Hague.	Museum.	Venus, an allegory.
Madrid.	"	A Penitent Magdalene. Flight into Egypt.
Milan.	Brera.	Madonna adored by a Pope.

Munich.	Pinakothek.	Hercules aud Omphalc. Hercules Mad. Salome.
Paris.	Louvre.	Samson and Delilah. The Woman taken in Adultery. Death of Cleopatra.
Petersburg.	Hermilage.	Christ hearing the Cross. Bacchus and Ariadne.
Verona.	Museum.	The Nativity; and two others.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	The Entombment.

TURCO, CESARE, born at Ischitella, Naples, about the year 1510, was first a disciple of Giovanni Antonio d'Amato, but afterwards studied under Andrea Sabbatini. He painted for the churches and public buildings of Naples. An altar-piece, in S. Maria delle Grazie, representing the Baptism of Christ by St. John; and a 'Circumcision,' in the Jesuits' church, may be mentioned. Turco died at Naples about 1560.

TURNER, CHARLES, one of the most eminent of English engravers, was born at Woodstock in 1773. He entered the Academy in 1795, and at first worked for Boydell in Bartolozzi's style. He afterwards turned his attention to mezzotint, and acquainted with a partial use of the point, and produced a large number of fine plates. He was particularly successful as an interpreter of Turner, for whom he engraved twenty-three numbers of the 'Liber Studiorum.' In 1828, having already been appointed mezzotinto engraver in ordinary to the King, he was elected an associate engraver of the Royal Academy. He died in London, August 1, 1857. His principal works are:

Charles X.; after Lawrence.

The Duke of York; after the same.

The Marquis of Anglesey; after the same.

Lady Georgiana Fane; after the same. (From the picture in the National Gallery.)

Duke of Newcastle; after the same.

James Watt; after the same.

Sir Robert Peel; after the same.

Sir Walter Scott; after Raeburn.

Lord Newton; after the same.

Mme. Malibran as Desdemona; after Decaisne.

The Cottage Girl; after Gainsborough.

The Spanish Contrabandista; after J. F. Lewis.

Rembrandt's Mill; after Rembrandt.

Mecenas's Villa; after Richard Wilson.

The Satyr and the Traveller; after Jordaens.

The Choir of Westminster Abbey, during the coronation of George IV.; after F. Nash. (Some of these were printed in colour.)

The Marlborough Family; after Reynolds.

The Age of Innocence; after the same.

The Little Fortune-Tellers; after the same.

The Beggar; after Owen.

The Wreck; after Turner.

The plates in the 'Liber Studiorum' engraved by Charles Turner are the following: Bridge and Cows; Woman and Tambourine; Flint Castle; Basle; Jason; Straw-yard; Oakhampton Castle; St. Gothard; Ships in a Breeze; Holy Island Cathedral; Pembury Mill; Sun between Trees; Dunstanborough Castle; Lake of Thun; The Fifth Plague; Farm-yard with Cuck; Falls of Clyde; The Devil's Bridge; Guardship at the Nore; Morpeth; London from Greenwich; Norham Castle; Inverary.

TURNER, DAVID, an English draughtsman and engraver, was born in the latter part of the 18th century. He learnt his art from John Jones, and devoted himself to landscape, architectural, and antiquarian subjects, occasionally exhibiting at the Free Society and the Academy between 1782 and 1801. The subjects of his exhibited pictures were mostly taken from London and the Thames. Nothing is known of him after 1801. He left a few etchings of Scottish castles and abbeys, one of Peterborough Cathedral, and one of St. Owen, Rozen.

TURNER, JAMES, an English portrait painter, who practised between 1760 and 1806. He frequently exhibited with the Society of Artists after 1760. In 1806 his name appears in a catalogue for the last time.

TURNER, JOSEPH MALLORD WILLIAM, was born April 23, 1775, at 26, Maiden Lane, Covent Garden. His father, William Turner, was a barber; of his mother, née Mary Marshall, it has been asserted, upon no grounds that can be verified, that she was of gentle blood. Her sister was married to the Rev. — Harpur, curate of Islington, and grandfather to that Mr. Henry Harpur who was one of Turner's executors. It is believed that Mrs. Turner died mad, and that she was identical with one Mary Turner, admitted into Bethlehem Hospital in 1800, and discharged uncured a few months later. Turner began his career as a sort of infant prodigy in his father's shop. His earliest known drawing is one of Margate Church, made when he was nine years old. Shortly afterwards he went to his first school, at New Brentford, where he drew trees and poultry while his school-fellows did his sums. About this time, too, he began to make copies of engravings, which were exposed for sale in the barber's window. These indications of a call to art determined his father to give him such facilities as he could. There is a vague tradition that he spent £200 in placing his son with an architectural draughtsman, perhaps Malton. On the whole it is not surprising that Turner never had any facility in the use of an educated man's instrument, language. Early in his teens he was employed in colouring prints for John Raphael Smith; in making drawings at Dr. Monro's, in the Adelphi, and in the fields and streets, with Girtin; and in washing in backgrounds for Mr. Porden. For a time he was in the studio of Thomas Malton, junior, the architect, who dismissed him for incapacity to learn perspective—a curious commentary by anticipation on his appointment, many years afterwards, as Professor of Perspective to the Royal Academy. The most interesting passage in Turner's early life is his friendship or acquaintance with Girtin, and his intense admiration for that artist's work. How great the degree of intimacy may have been between them it is now impossible to say, and so with Turner's patron and "true master," as Mr. Ruskin calls him, Dr. Monro. Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse sums up the education of Turner thus: "He learnt reading from his father, writing and probably little else at his schools at Brentford and Margate, perspective (imperfectly) from T. Malton, architecture (imperfectly and classical only) from Mr. Hardwick, water-colour drawing from Dr. Monro, and perhaps some hints as to painting in oils from Sir Joshua Reynolds, in whose house he studied for awhile." Like other men of those pre-photographic days, he spent much of his time in making topographical drawings, to be reproduced in magazines, and he was less eager to shake himself free from such work than one might have expected. In 1789 he became a student of the Royal Academy, and the year after exhibited a 'View of the Archbishop's Palace at Lambeth.' Four years later he received a commission from J. Walker, the engraver, to make drawings for his 'Copperplate Magazine.' This was the first of the long series of engraved works for which he supplied material. Acting, perhaps, on the strength of this commission, he took a studio, in Hand Court, Maiden Lane, close to the paternal shop. There he remained until his election as an Associate of the Academy, in 1799. Between 1790 and 1797 he explored nearly all England south of the Humber, as well as Wales, in search of subjects for his drawings. So far he had given proof of taste rather than of any more robust artistic faculty, but a tour in the North in 1797 stimulated his powers into stronger display. Either during this tour, or as a result of it, Turner made the acquaintance of many who were afterwards among the best of his friends: Dr. Whitaker the historian of Whalley, Mr. Fawkes of Farnley, Lord Harewood, Sir John Leicester, afterwards Lord de Tabley, and Mr. Lister Parker of Browsholme Hall.

After Turner's election to the R.A.-ship in 1802, he practically ceased to make drawings for engravers, and until the commencement of the 'Southern Coast,' fifteen years later, confined himself to a heading for the Oxford Almanac and to a few drawings for books. He marked too his sense of his changed position by migrating from Hand Court to 64, Harley Street. It is to the work of these few early years of the century that Mr. Ruskin applies the curious statement that Turner's manner "is now stern, reserved, quiet, grave in colour, forceful in hand. His mind tranquil; fixed, in physical study, on mountain subjects; in moral study, on the Mythology of Homer, and the Law of the Old Testament." A sonorous pronouncement, but difficult in the application. The truth of this time, seems to have been, that conscious of low birth, of an unattractive person, of an ill-furnished mind, he deliberately set himself to conquer fame by those gifts of imagination, of perception, of manual skill, that he also knew to be his, and that, with the narrowness of his class, he could not separate success for himself from the conquest of his rivals. Claude, Wilson, Nicolas and Gaspar Pous-sin, Titian, and Vandevelde, even Loucherbourg, had one by one to be equalled or surpassed. This is the key to his choice of subjects and their treatment from the first year of the century down to about 1830. In 1801 he appears to have paid an unrecorded visit to Scotland, for the Academy of 1802 contained three Scotch Views. In 1802 he made his first tour on the continent, and the year afterwards exhibited six pictures of foreign subjects, one of which was the 'Calsis Pier,' in the National Gallery. In 1807 he began the 'Liber Studiorum,' a confessed but completely illogical stroke at Claude's 'Liber Veritatis.' This, according to his own prospectus, was intended "as an illustration of Landscape Composition, classed as follows: Historical, Mountainous, Pastoral, Marine, and Architectural." His method was to make sepia drawings of the subjects, and then partly with his own hand, partly with the help of professional engravers, to transfer them to copper by a mixed process of etching and mezzotint. The whole series forms the most satisfactory monument of Turner's genius. Forced into concentration in his own despite, he creates with a certainty not to be found in his oil pictures or his water-colour drawings, while the métier leaves no room for that proneness to exceed the limits of his material which lessens our pleasure in his pictures. Commercially, the 'Liber' was unsuccessful, as indeed it was foredoomed to be by Turner's methods of doing business. The publication dragged on intermittently until 1819, when it was allowed finally to drop. The original plan was for a hundred plates, excluding the frontispiece. Of these seventy were published, while of the remaining thirty, some were finished, some were only etched, and a few stopped short at sketches. Perhaps the most faultless work Turner ever did is to be found in the etchings for these plates. The engravers employed for the mezzotinting were Charles Turner, William Say, Dunkardon, Clint, Easling, Lupton, Dawe, S. W. Reynolds, W. Annis, and Hodgetts. The first plate executed, however, 'A Bridge and Goats,' is an aquatint, by F. C. Lewis.

From 1808 to 1811, Turner had a house at Hammersmith. In 1812 he moved to Queen Anne Street West, to a house near the corner of Harley Street, which has lately (1887) been pulled down and rebuilt. This remained his official address to the end of his life, although Solus, or Sandycombe, Lodge, at Twickenham, is also given in some of the catalogues. In the years between 1803 and 1815, the wars with Napoleon compelled him to depend on his own country for his subjects, and his yearly excursions were into Devonshire and other rich corners of England. During these years he spent much of his time with the Trimmers, at Heston, about three miles from Sandycombe. In 1819 he paid his first visit to Italy, and from that moment dates the commencement of his bolder excursions into colour. Just before it he had exhibited such pictures as the 'Apuleia and Apuleius,' and had seemed, for the moment, to be falling into a mannered key. But the sight of the Venetians at home seems to have lifted him from this at once, and after his return he began the series of works, in oil and water-colour, on which his fame as a colourist must chiefly depend. Much of the best work of these years was done for Dr. Whitaker's 'History of Richmondshire' (1823), and for the 'Rivers of England' (1824). In 1823 he sent the 'Bay of Baize, with Apollo and the Sibyl,' to the Academy. Together with the 'Caligula's Palace and Bridge' (1831), and 'Childe Harold's Pilgrimage' (1832), it may be taken as the summing up of the impression left upon him by Italy. In 1826 Turner gave up Sandycombe Lodge, and thenceforward spent more of his time in Queen Anne Street, with no company but his father and Mrs. Danby, his 'house-keeper' from 1801 to his death. His 'Southern Coast' was the chief publishing enterprise with which he was at this time concerned, and his disputes over it with Mr. W. B. Cooke are among the most unpleasant episodes in his life. In 1827 the first part of his most important series, 'England and Wales,' was published, and a year later he was again in Italy. In 1829 he exhibited his greatest colour dream, the 'Ulysses deriding Polyphemus.' In 1830 occurred the death of his father, the greatest shock, perhaps, of his life. In this same year the illustrated edition of Rogers's 'Italy' was published, to be followed in 1834 by the 'Poems,' both with Turner's designs. In 1830, too, his first subjects from Venice were exhibited. In 1834-5 he was at work on the series known as the 'Rivers of France,' and four years later, in 1839, he sent the last picture to the Academy in which his full power was shown, namely, the 'Fighting Téméraire tugged to her last Berth.'

During the last ten years of his life, Turner's powers failed gradually by losing their health. It was not a case of diminution so much as of perversion. His judgment as an artist disappeared, and although he could still—he could perhaps even more than ever—astonish by the splendour of his dreams, he could no longer weigh and create. During these last years his interest was awakened by the new art of photography, and he paid several visits to Mr. Mayall's studio, incognito, calling himself a Master in Chancery. He carried his interest in his new acquaintance so far as to lend him, unasked, a sum of £300 at a time when litigation about patents had brought him into some financial embarrassment. About the same time he received two offers of £100,000 for the contents of his house in Queen Anne Street, as well as a large offer for his two pictures of Carthage, from a committee which numbered Sir Robert Peel and Lord Hardinge among its members. But having already willed his picture to the nation, he declined this flattering proposal, very much to his honour. For years before he died, Turner had, as many of his colleagues divined rather than knew, an unacknowledged retreat to which he was accustomed to betake himself. Not even Mrs. Danby, his house-keeper in Queen Anne Street, knew its whereabouts. Towards the end of 1851, however, she discovered that he was living, under the name of Booth, in a small house at Chelsea, and there, on her hints, he was found by his cousin and executor, Mr. Harpur. This was on December 18, 1851, and on the 19th Turner died.

Turner's will turned out to be so confused a document that its provisions were to a great extent set aside. After years of litigation, in which a large part of his wealth was made over to the lawyers, it was decided by the courts that the bulk of his funded property and his rights in engravings should go to the next of kin, that the Royal Academy should have £20,000, and that all his pictures and drawings should go to the nation. By this decision the National Collection came into possession of some hundred oil pictures and about nineteen thousand drawings in water-colour and sketches. The following list is restricted to his more notable pictures, in the order of their production:

- 1802. Dolbadern Castle. (Royal Academy; Diploma picture.)

Turner's water-colours are so numerous that it would here be impossible to give a complete list of even the more important. The National Gallery has five hundred, framed and so arranged as to be readily accessible, from elaborate pictures like those for the Rivers of France to hasty sketches. The Oxford University Gallery possesses ten important early drawings, and a series of forty sketches and drawings presented by Mr. Ruskin. In the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, there is a corresponding series, also given by Mr. Ruskin. The following may also be mentioned:

- London. S. Ken. Mus. Hornby Castle, Lancashire.
 „ „ Warkworth Castle, Northumberland.
 „ „ Bay of Spezzia.
 „ „ A Waterfall.
 „ „ Interior, Tintern Abbey.

TURNER, WILLIAM, an English water-colour landscape painter, was born at Blackbourton (Oxon.) in 1789. His father died while he was young, and his art training was obtained from John Varley. Settling in Oxford, he became known as "Turner of Oxford," and obtained a large teaching practice there. He was elected, in 1809, a member of the Water-Colour Society, with which he exhibited during the whole of his long career. His works also occasionally appeared at the Academy, at the British Institution, and at Suffolk Street. Many of his subjects were taken from the neighbourhood of Oxford, but he also painted the scenery of Wales, Scotland, and other parts of England. He died August 7, 1862, having been an exhibitor for fifty-four years. There are two water-colour drawings by him in the Kensington Museum, 'Kingly Bottom, Sussex,' and a 'Waterfall' (1795).

TURONE, (TURONI), a native of Verona, who flourished in the 14th century. In the Museum at Verona there is an altar-piece by him in five panels, dated 1360. It was formerly in the Convent of the Holy Trinity, at Verona. The centre is a Trinità; on the side panels are the Virgin and Angels, with four Saints.

TURPILIUS, a Roman painter, (contemporary with Pliny,) who was the author of some fine works at Verona. Pliny states him to have painted with his left hand.

TURPIN DE CRISSÉ, LANCELOT THÉODORE, COMTE DE, painter and architectural draughtsman, born in Paris in 1781, was the son of the Marquis de Turpin de Crissé, the representative of an old Angevin family, whom the troubles of the Revolution forced to fly from France. The elder Turpin was himself an amateur of some distinction, and had given his son his first instruction in art. When the Marquis emigrated, Lancelot and his mother took refuge with a relative in Anjou, where they remained in retirement till the dawning of more peaceful times. The young artist was taken under the protection of Choiseul Gouffier, who took him to Switzerland, and afterwards sent him to Rome. He returned to France when the Empire was established, and was patronized by Josephine and others in power. He also continued to enjoy court favour after the Bourbon restoration. In 1816 he became a member of the Institute, and in 1824 Inspector-

General of the Fine Arts. On the fall of Charles X. in 1830, he retired into private life, occupying himself with artistic and literary pursuits. In 1826 he published 'Souvenirs du Golfe de Naples,' with thirty-nine plates, and in 1835, 'Souvenirs du Vieux Paris,' with fifty plates. He formed a collection of antiquities and works of art, which on his death he bequeathed to the Museum of Angers. He died in 1852. He exhibited a large number of works at the Salon, and the following have found a permanent place in French galleries:

Angers.	Museum.	Syrinx pursued by Pan.
"	"	View of the Temple of Vesta at Tivoli.
Lisieux.	"	Study of Trees.
Marseilles.	"	View at Roquebrune.
Nantes.	"	Entry of the Austrian Emperor into Venice.

TURPIN, PIERRE JEAN FRANÇOIS, painter of natural history in water-colours, was born at Vire in 1775, and was self-taught. He made upwards of six thousand drawings in water-colour on vellum, which were engraved by Scellier, Plée, Bouquet, Coutant, Massard, and others, for works on natural history. Among those so illustrated may be named, the travels of Humboldt and Bompland; 'Les Plantes de la Nouvelle Calédonie'; 'Les Icones,' of M. Decandolle; 'L'Iconographie Végétale'; 'L'Atlas du Dictionnaire des Sciences Naturelles'; 'La Flore Médicale'; and Duhamel's treatise on Fruit Trees. He died in Paris, May 2, 1840.

TURRITI. See TORRITI.

TUSCHER, KARL MARCUS, painter, etcher, and architect, was born at Nuremberg in 1705. Walpole says he was painter and architect, while Füssli calls him painter, copper-plate engraver, sculptor, carver in wood, and gem engraver. He was the natural son of a lacemaker, and was brought up in the hospital for orphans, at Nuremberg. He was afterwards placed under J. D. Preisler, with whom he remained about ten years. From the school of Preisler he went to Italy, on an allowance from the municipality, and was employed by Stosch at Leghorn, to make drawings from gems. In 1741 he visited France, England, and Holland. In England he made the acquaintance of the Danish traveller, H. v. Norden, for whose 'Travels in Egypt and Nubia,' published in London in 1757, he engraved some plates, one of which is inscribed F. L. Nörden del. M. T. fecit, 1748. Most of his plates are marked with his name in full, and consist of historical subjects, portraits, vignettes, and other book illustrations. From England Tuscher went to Copenhagen, where he became a professor at the Academy. He died in 1755. In the Copenhagen Gallery there is a 'Sappho and Cupid' by him.

TUSON, G. E., painted 'The Reception of a Deputation from the Corporation of Manchester by the Sultan, in Buckingham Palace,' for the town-hall of Manchester. He afterwards painted genre subjects and portraits in Turkey, and afterwards in Monte Video, where he died in 1880.

TUTIANI, BARTOLOMMEO, an engraver on wood, to whom are ascribed some prints with this Gothic monogram, T. Bartsch, however, mentions only one wood-cut with this mark: it represents 'Christ insulted by the Jews,' and occurs in a work printed at Augsburg in 1515.

TUTILO, a famous miniaturist of the 10th century, who acquired a wide reputation as painter, poet, musician, and sculptor. He was a monk of the Benedictine Order at Saint Gall, and died about 908.

TWEEDIE, WILLIAM MENZIES, a Scottish portrait painter, born at Glasgow in 1826. The son of a naval officer, he was himself intended for the Navy, but showed an early bent towards art. In 1842 he entered the Edinburgh Academy, where he gained a prize, and in 1846 came to London to study in the Royal Academy, subsequently completing his training in the studio of Couture, in Paris. He exhibited chiefly at the Royal Academy, and had many distinguished sitters. But the rejection of his pictures in 1874 and afterwards, disheartened him. His health gave way, and he died in 1878. His portrait of the present (1888) Duke of Devonshire hangs in the University of London.

TYBOUTS, WILLEM, a famous Dutch glass-painter, born at Haarlem about 1526. His best known works are portraits of Philip II. and Elizabeth of Valois, painted for the church of St. Ursula at Delft; 'The Taking of Damiatta,' for the church of St. John at Gouda; and the glass windows in the 'Schützenhans' at Leyden. He is further said to have painted portraits of the Counts of Holland. He died in 1599. Several other glass-painters of the same family are mentioned in the city registers.

TYMMERMAN, FRANZ, a native of Hamburg, was one of the pupils of Lucas Cranach, under whom he was working from 1538 to 1540.

TYN, LAMBERT DEN, born at Antwerp, in 1770, was a scholar of P. Van Regemorter. He painted interiors by candle-light, landscapes by moonlight, and genre subjects generally. He died in 1816.

TYR, GABRIEL, painter and lithographer, was born at Saint-Paul-de-Mons, in 1817. He was a pupil of Victor Orsel, in conjunction with whom he worked for twenty years, and completed his paintings in the chapel of Notre-Dame-de-Lorette. He himself painted chiefly portraits in oil and pastel. He was commissioned to decorate the cathedral at Le Puy with mural paintings, but his death prevented his carrying out the work. He made the designs for some good windows in the church of S. Etienne, in which town he died February 18, 1868. There are pictures by him in the museums of Le Puy, S. Etienne, and Lyons.

TYROFF, MARTIN, a German engraver and publisher, who resided at Nuremberg about 1750, and engraved a considerable number of portraits and plates for books. Among the former is that of Charles à Linne, architect to the King of Sweden.

TYSON, MICHAEL, a fellow of Bennet (Corpus Christi) College, Cambridge, who about 1770 painted for his amusement, and etched some plates, among them portraits of Archbishop Parker, Sir William Paulet, Thomas Gray, and Jane Shore. He died May 4, 1780. (See Anderdon's 'Collectanea,' British Museum, vol. 99.)

TYSSENS, AUGUSTINE. See THYS.

TYSSENS, NICOLAS, was born at Antwerp, in 1660, learned the first principles of design in his native city, and is said to have visited Italy, and passed some time at Rome, Naples, and Venice. He was a painter of still-life. His pictures represented dead game, flowers, fruit, armour, sabres, and other military weapons. He is said to have visited Holland and England, and to have practised for a time at Düsseldorf. He died in 1719.

TYSSENS, PIETER. See THYS.

TYTLER, GEORGE, held the appointment of lithographic draughtsman to the Duke of Gloucester. About 1820 he made a journey in Italy, and on his return published some lithographic views of Italian scenery. He was further known by a large panoramic view of Edinburgh, also by a pictorial alphabet, which was first published as a lithograph, and afterwards on copper. He died in London in great poverty, Oct. 30, 1859.

TZANFURNARI, EMANUEL, a Byzantine painter of the 9th century. He is known only by a curious relic of early Byzantine art in the 'Museo Cristiano' in the Vatican. It was brought into Italy by means of Squarcione, and is a picture of the Death of St. Ephraim, with numerous monks and suffering poor, and, in the background, scenes illustrating the life of the anchorite.

U.

UBALDINI, PETRUCCIO, an Italian calligraphist and illuminator on vellum, who was working in England in the reign of Elizabeth, and seems to have enjoyed the favour of the Court. Vertue says that he taught the Italian language. One of his illuminated books, presented by him to Elizabeth, is in the Bodleian Library, and Walpole gives a list of other works, formerly in the King's Library, and now, most of them, in the British Museum. (See 'Anecdotes of Painting,' vol. i. p. 170.)

UBEDA, FRAY TOMAS DE, a member of the short-lived Academy of St. Barbara of Valencia. In 1754 he painted a picture of Judith, which was famous for a time.

UBELLESQUI, (or UBIELESQUI,) ALEXANDRE, painter, called ALEXANDRE, was born in Paris in 1649. He was a pupil of Charles Lebrun, and completed his studies in Rome, where he became a member of the Academy, and where he painted the dome of a chapel in Santa Maria Transpontina. On his return to France he was patronized by the Court, became a member of the French Academy in 1682, and Professor in 1695. He died in Paris, April 21, 1718.

UBERTI, P. F. DEGLI. See FARINATI, PAOLO.

UBERTINI, FRANCESCO D'ALBERTINO, called IL BACCHIACCA, was a native of Florence, and pupil of Perugino. He was born March 1, 1494. His father was one Ubertino di Bartolommeo, a goldsmith, of the Verdi family. Their pedigree is given by Milanese ('Vasari,' vol. vi. p. 454). He painted historical subjects with success, and also excelled in groteschi and ornamental painting. He frequently painted predellas for altar-pieces by other masters, and panels for the decoration of furniture. His works are generally on a small scale, with numerous figures. The latter part of his life was passed in the service of the Grand Duke Cosimo, for whom he designed some tapestries, painted some historical pictures, and was employed on decorative works generally. At a late period in his life he painted, in fresco, the grotto of a fountain in the garden of the Palazzo Pitti. Several of his rare easel pictures have passed into England and France. He died at Florence, October 5, 1557. Works:

Berlin.	Museum.	Baptism of Christ.
Florence.	Uffizi.	History of S. Casius (predella in three compartments).
"	S. Lorenzo.	History of the Martyrs (predella to an altar-piece by Giov. Antonio Sogliani).
"	S. Maria d. Pazzi.	Deposition from the Cross (?).
London.	Nat. Gallery.	Two Scenes from the History of Joseph.

His brother BACCIO UBERTINI, born 1484, was also a pupil of Perugino, and a successful designer and painter. There is a 'Crucifixion' by him in the Uffizi. His other brother, ANTONIO, born 1499, followed the art of embroidery, and executed many of the tapestries which Francesco had designed. He died in 1572.

UCCELLI. See DONO, PAOLO DI.

UCEDA, DE. Several painters of this family flourished in Seville in the 16th and 17th centuries.

JUAN the elder, about 1594; JUAN the younger, about 1660; PEDRO died in 1714, and JUAN UCEDA CASTROVERDO, about 1623.

UCHTERVELT. See OCHTERVELT.

UDEN, JAKOB VAN, was believed to have been the brother and scholar of Lucas van Uden, and to have painted landscapes in his style; but his existence is doubtful.

UDEN, LUCAS VAN, the son of ARTUS VAN UDEN, a landscape painter of little repute, was born at Antwerp, October 18, 1595, and was first taught by his father. He had not the advantage of any efficient master, but was indefatigable in his studies from nature, and passed his leisure hours in the fields and forests, drawing everything which appeared to him picturesque or remarkable, and giving particular attention to the peculiar appearance of the sky at sunrise and sunset. He was influenced by Paul Bril, and by a study of the landscapes of Rubens. In 1626 or 1627 he entered the Guild, and in 1647 travelled abroad. Van Uden was a painter of no originality, and it is mainly to his connection with abler men than himself that he owes such fame as he has. Rubens assisted him with his advice, and frequently employed him to paint landscape backgrounds to his pictures; himself occasionally painting figures in the landscapes of Van Uden. The death of this artist occurred in 1672 or 1673. Some of his latter works have figures by David Teniers, Regemorter, and others. Van Dyck's portrait of Van Uden was engraved by Lucas Vosterman the Elder. Pictures by him are to be seen in the galleries of Antwerp, Berlin, Brunswick, Dresden, Frankfurt, Madrid, Munich, Paris, Petersburg, and Schleissheim. The Marquis of Bute has a very important landscape by Van Uden, in which the figures are by Teniers. It is signed L. V. V., and may be taken as an example of the master at his best. We have sixty-two etchings of landscapes by this artist, of which fifty-eight are from his own designs. Among them the following:

- Ten Landscapes and Views in Flanders, of various sizes; from his own designs.
- Four Landscapes; after Rubens. The first impressions are before the name of Rubens was inserted.

UDINE, GIOVANNI DA. See NANNI.

UDINE, GIOV. DI MART. DA. See MARTINI.

UDINE, GIROLAMO DA, a painter of the Venetian school, and a disciple of Pellegrino da San Daniele. He is known only by a small picture of 'The Coronation of the Virgin,' painted for San Francesco at Udine.

UDINE, MART. DI BATT. DA. See MARTINO DI BATTISTA.

UFFENBACH, JOHANN FRIEDRICH VON, a designer, etcher, and art connoisseur, was born at Frankfort à M. in 1687. He published, in 1726, a work entitled 'Die Nachfolge Christi,' with numerous vignettes of his own etching. He died in 1769, leaving part of his collection of works of art to the University of Göttingen.

UFFENBACH, PHILIPP, painter and etcher, was born at Frankfort à M. in 1570. He was instructed by Hans Grimmer, and was himself the teacher of Adam Elsheimer. He painted in the 'Römer' and other buildings in Frankfurt, and has left an 'Ascension of Christ,' and 'Adoration of the Kings,' with thirteen etchings of Scripture subjects and battles. He was also a clever mechanical artist and land-surveyor. He died in 1630.

UGGIONE. See OGIONNO.

UGOLINO DA SIENA, painter, flourished at Siena in the first half of the 14th century. He belonged to a family of painters, the genealogy of which is given by Milanese ('Vasari,' vol. i. p. 457). Vasari supposes him to have been a pupil of Cimabue; others assert him to have studied under Guido of Siena, and the evidence on this point is obscure. His design was that of the Greek painters, and he was at least an imitator of Cimabue. He painted a large number of works for churches, and in all parts of Italy, and died in 1339, at a very advanced age. Two panels of an altar-piece painted by him for S. Croce, in Florence, are now in the National Gallery. They represent 'The Betrayal of Christ,' and the 'Procession to Calvary,' and are of much interest to the historian of art.

UGOLINO DI NERI was painting in Siena in 1317, and may be identical with UGOLINO DA SIENA. (See Milanese, 'Vasari,' vol. i. pp. 453 et seq. notes.)

UGOLINO DI PIETRO was painting in Siena in 1324. Nothing further is known concerning him. He may be identical with UGOLINO DA SIENA (q. v.).

UGOLINO DI PRETE ILARIO, a painter of Siena, who executed frescoes in the chapel of S. Corporale in the cathedral at Orvieto, which bear the inscription, Ugolinus pictor di Urbe Veteris, and the date 1364. In 1378 he was employed with other artists on the decoration of the walls of the tribune and choir behind the high altar of the same church.

UGRUMOFF, GREGOR IWANOWITSCH, painter, was born in Russia about 1764. He was a pupil of Lossenko, and became professor and rector of the Petersburg Academy. The Hermitage contains two of his best pictures, 'The Conquest of Kasan,' and 'The Ascension of the Romanoff Family to the Throne.' He died in 1825.

UHLICK, —, was an obscure German engraver, who resided at Leipsic. His name is affixed to a portrait of Johann Melchior Jacob, dated 1719. According to Zani, he was at work as late as 1740.

UIJTENBOGAART, IZAAK, was born at Amsterdam in 1767, and was a pupil of J. Andriessen. He painted landscapes with cattle, also fruit-pieces and dead game. He also worked in black chalk and Indian ink, and was for a time director of a tapestry factory at Hoorn. In 1810 he was crowned by the Society Felix Meritis. He died at Amsterdam in 1831. His son ABRAHAM was a painter and architect.

UIJTENBROUCK, MOYSES VAN, (called LITTLE MOSES,) was born at the Hague about 1590. He painted numerous small landscapes, which he usually embellished with subjects taken from church history, or from fables. In 1620 he was made free of the Guild of St. Luke at the Hague, and was dean in 1627. His name has been spelt in a great variety of ways (Utenbroeck, Uytbroeck, Vijt den Broeck, Veit van den Broeck, Van Bronck, Wtenbroeck). He died at the Hague in 1648. Pictures by him may be seen at Augsburg, Brunswick ('The Festival of Bacchus,' 1627),

Copenhagen, Florence, and Vienna. Bartsch and Weigel give a list of sixty-seven plates by Uijtendroock. Two other painters of the same name, JAN and MATTHÄUS UIJTENBROUCK, flourished at the Hague about the middle of the 17th century.

UIL, J. DEN. See DEN UYL.

UITEWAAL, JOACHIM, (UYTENWÆL, WTTWÆL, &c.,) was born at Utrecht in 1566. He was the son of a glass painter, who taught him the rudiments of design, and he followed his father's profession until he was eighteen years of age, when he became a scholar of Joost de Beer, under whom he studied three years, after which he travelled to Italy, and passed some time at Padua. In that city he became known to the Bishop of St. Malo, in whose employment he passed four years in Padua and two years in France. He then returned to Utrecht, and there passed the rest of his life. He died after 1626. He painted history in the style of Bartholomäus Spranger; and cabinet pictures of more decided merit. He also furnished designs for glass painters, and carried on a trade in hemp. Among his best pictures are:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Lot and his Daughters.
Brunswick.	Museum.	Feast of the Gods. 1600. ( A subject he often treated. )
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	The Preaching of John.
Dresden.	"	Apollo and Minerva. 1590.
Madrid.	"	Adoration of the Shepherds.
Munich.	"	The Marriage of Peleus with Thetis.
The Hague.	Museum.	Mars and Venus surprised by Vulcan. 1600.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Adoration of the Shepherds. 1607.
"	"	Diana and Actæon.

UITENWÆL, (or UTENWÆL,) PAULUS VAN, an obscure engraver, who may have been connected with Joachim Uitewaal. He engraved portraits, mythological scenes, and plans of towns.

ULEFELD, ELEONORE CHRISTINE, Countess of, was born at Friedriksborg in 1621. She was the daughter of King Christian IV. of Denmark, and wife of the minister Ulefeld. She was a pupil of Karel van Mander, and was clever in miniature painting as well as in modelling in clay and embroidering. She died at Mariboë, in Laland, in 1698. Her daughter, HELENA CHRISTIANA, was also an artist.

ULENBURGH, (or ULENBURG,) GERHARD, a Dutch painter of the 17th century, was a native of Amsterdam. His father Hendrik, an art-dealer, was cousin to Saskia, Rembrandt's first wife, and placed his son in the great painter's atelier. After Hendrik's death, Gerhard carried on his father's business, and gathered together a fine collection of pictures. In 1675 he was impoverished by losses in trade, and his collection was sold. He is said to have then tried his fortune in England, where he was employed by Sir Peter Lely to paint-in draperies and backgrounds. He is supposed to have died in this country about 1690.

ULERICK. See VLERICK.

ULIN, PIERRE D', a French painter, born in 1669. He gained the first prize of the Academy in 1696, with a picture of 'Pharaoh giving his ring to Joseph,' and afterwards became painter in ordinary to the king. He died in 1748.

ULIVELLI, COSIMO, was born at Florence about 1625. He was a disciple and imitator of Baldassare Franceschini. His works are to be seen at Florence, in the Carmine, in the Uffizi, in S. Spirito, and S. Nunziata. He died in 1704.

ULLMANN, WALTER, an English painter, was born in 1861. In 1882 his 'Jour d'Automne,' a landscape with figures, attracted attention at the Salon. He died in the June of the same year.

ULMANN, BENJAMIN, painter, born at Blotzheim (Haut Rhin) in 1829, was a pupil of Drolling and of Picot, and entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1849. He gained the "prix de Rome" in 1859, and profited much by his studies in Italy. He exhibited a number of works at the Salon from 1855 onwards, chiefly portraits and historical subjects, and was commissioned to paint some pictures for the Palais Royal and for the Palais de Justice. His 'Sylla and Marius' is in the Luxembourg, and other works by him are in the Museums of Mans, Marseilles, Melun, and Colmar. He died in 1884.

ULMER, JOHANN KONRAD, an engraver, was born at Beroldshelm, near Ansbach, in 1783. He studied first under Naumann, then at the Augsburg Academy, and next under J. G. Müller at Stuttgart. In 1806 he went to Paris, where he worked twelve years for the Musée Napoléon. In 1818 he returned to Germany, and became professor of engraving in the Städels Institute, Frankfurt. He committed suicide in 1820. Among his best plates are:

The Madonna della Sedia; after Raphael.

Madonna di San Sisto; after the same (completed by Piotti).

St. Cecilia; after Mignard.

The Burgomaster; after Van der Helst.

Triumph of Religion; after Lesueur.

The Duke of Buckingham; after Van Dyck.

Carlo Dolci; after that painter.

ULRICH, called 'S. ULRICH,' a miniature painter who flourished from about 923 to about 973. He transcribed and illuminated an 'Evangelistarium,' now in the Munich Court Library, and another, now in the British Museum.

ULRICH, HANS JAKOB, painter, born at Zurich in 1798, was brought up by his parents to be a merchant, but gave up business and devoted himself to painting. He travelled in France, Italy, England, and the Netherlands for improvement, and became a successful painter of landscapes, sea-pieces, birds, and animals. He was at one time Professor at the Zurich Polytechnic. He was an exhibitor at the Salon between 1824 and 1840. Many of his landscapes were English in origin, and he was one of the first of his country to profit by the finer styles of the north in that branch of art. Examples of his work exist in the museums of Orleans and Nantes. C. Huber etched a series of sixty plates from his designs.

ULRICH, HEINRICH, a German painter and engraver, was born at Nuremberg about 1572, and worked in that city and Vienna. Two plates by him, 'Christ on the Cross,' and 'The Body of Christ in the lap of His Father Joseph,' have merit. In all he has left 150 plates, portraits, historical subjects, and genre. He died about 1631.

ULRICH, JOH. See WECHELTIN.

UMBACH, JONAS, painter, designer, and engraver, was born at Angsburg about 1624. He was cabinet painter to the Bishop of Augsburg, and produced many landscapes with cattle, also kitchen pieces, feathered game, and a few historical subjects in chiaro-scuro. He also etched 230 plates of biblical, historical, and mythological scenes and landscapes. Among these there are:

Christ on the Mount of Olives.

Trains of Children and Nereids.

Two Duck-shooters lying in Wait.

Landscape with Ruins.

Bacchanals and Infant Sports.

He died in 1680, or 1700. There was a younger JONAS UMBACH, but there are no particulars respecting him, except that he drew portraits.

UNDELOT, JACQUES, a miniaturist of the 15th century, who illuminated a missal for Charles the Bold (while Comte de Charolais) in the year 1465. It is now in the Copenhagen Library.

UNDERWOOD, RICHARD THOMAS, an English water-colour painter. He studied at Dr. Monro's, and practised in London, following art more as a pastime than as a profession. Some of his drawings appeared at Cooke's Exhibition in Soho Square. He died at Auteuil, near Paris, in 1836.

UNDERWOOD, THOMAS, born in 1809, was originally an engraver, but finally devoted himself to writing on artistic and antiquarian subjects. He published a work on 'The Buildings of Birmingham, past and present.' He was also much employed as an adviser by collectors of works of art. He died in London in 1882.

UNGER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, wood-engraver, was a son and pupil of Johann Georg Unger. He was born at Berlin about 1740 or 1750. He was a member of the Berlin Academy, and Professor of wood-engraving. A set of improved German printed characters was designed by him. His principal wood-cuts were after drawings by J. W. Meil. He died in 1804.

UNGER, JOHANN GEORG, a wood-engraver, was born at Goos, near Pirna, in 1715. He was originally a printer, but in 1757 devoted himself entirely to the art of wood-engraving. He worked for the Berlin Tobacco Administration, and also produced some good landscapes for his time. He invented several improvements in the technic of wood-engraving, and had much influence on the revival of the art. He died in 1788.

UNGER, JOHANNA, was born in Hanover in 1836-8, and studied from 1855 onwards under Karl Sohn and Otto Rethel at Düsseldorf, then under Leutze, and last at Munich under Piloty. She died at Pisa, February 11, 1871. She was clever at illustrative arabesques, and besides some portraits and aquarelles, left the following oil paintings:

The Sleeping Beauty. 1863.

The Marys at the Sepulchre. 1864.

Jephthah's Daughter.

Cinderella's Sisters.

Joan of Arc.

Deborah.

UNGER, JOSEPH, the younger, the son of an architect, was a painter and lithographer, and was born at Munich in 1811. He studied in the Academy there, and after devoting himself for a short time to painting, transferred his attention wholly to lithography. He died in 1843. Among his best lithographs are:

The Nativity; after Schraudolph.

The Death of the Virgin; after the same.

UNKER. See D'UNKER, HENNING-LUTZOW.

UNTERBERGER, CHRISTOPH, was born at Cavalese, in Tyrol, in 1732. He was taught drawing by an uncle, and afterwards went to Vienna, Venice, Verona, where he studied under Cignaroli, and, in 1758, to Rome. Here he made the acquaintance of Rafael Mengs, and copied the works of Pietro da Cortona, in whose style he produced two altar-pieces for the cathedral of Brixen. On the recommendation of Mengs he was commissioned to decorate the Vatican Library with groteschi and other painted ornament, and to work in the Villa Borghese. He died at Rome in or about 1798. His works were mostly historical, but he also executed genre subjects, landscapes, and fruit and flower-pieces. He copied the Loggia of Raphael for the Emperor of Russia. Some genre paintings by him are in the Liechtenstein Gallery at Vienna.

UNTERBERGER, IGNAZ, painter and engraver, a younger brother of Christoph Unterberger, was born at Cavalese about 1743-8, and was also a pupil of his uncle, Franz. He likewise went to Rome and came under the influence of Mengs, but his model among the old masters was Correggio. He painted grotesque subjects and bamboccianti. After settling in Vienna in 1776, he attracted attention by his arabesques and imitations of cameos. He became a member of the Vienna Academy, and died in the Austrian capital in 1797. Works: Königgrätz. Cathedral. Descent of the Holy Ghost. Prague. Gallery. Bathsheba. Vienna. Italian Ch. Madonna.

Unterberger scraped some mezzotints; among them the best were:

Hebe giving drink to the Eagle of Jove; after M. A. Unterberger.

Venus surrounded by Loves.

UNTERBERGER, MICHEL ANGELO, was born at Cavalese in 1695, and studied first in that place under Giuseppe Alberti, and afterwards at Venice under Piazzetta. His most important work was done in the convent at Passau and in Vienna. In 1751 he became joint director of the Vienna Academy. He died in 1758. Among his best works are:

The Dismissal of Hagar.

The Archangel Michael.

The Death of the Virgin (Brixen).

SS. Joseph and Theresa (Wiltau).

Hebe giving drink to the Eagle.

UNWIN, R., enamel painter, was much employed at the beginning of the 19th century in enamelling watches and jewellery. He also painted portraits and landscapes in miniature, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1785 to 1812.

UNZELMANN, FRIEDRICH LUDWIG, wood-engraver, was born at Berlin in 1797. He studied under Gubitz at the Berlin Academy, of which he became a member in 1843, and in 1845 a professor. His cuts consisted chiefly of architecture, landscapes, portraits, and genre subjects. He engraved Menzel's illustrations to the works of Frederick the Great. He died at Vienna in 1854.

URBANO DA VENEZIA, an obscure artist who is said by Venetian writers of the 18th century to have assisted Francesco Tacconi in painting the organ shutters of St. Mark's, Venice.

URBANO, PIETRO, a native of Pistoia, was a scholar of Michelangelo, and is mentioned by Vasari as one of those who lived in Buonarroti's house.

URBINA, DIEGO DE, was born at Madrid about the middle of the 16th century, and was employed in 1570, in conjunction with A. Sanchez Coello, on the paintings for the triumphal arches for the entry of Anna of Austria, fourth bride of Philip II. of Spain, to whom Diego was appointed painter. In 1572 he painted for the royal monastery of Santa Cruz, six pictures from the histories of the Virgin and our Lord, and a 'Finding of the Cross by the Empress Helena.' With Gregorio Martinez, in 1524, he painted and gilded a retable for the high altar of Burgos cathedral. The work was finished in 1594.

URBINA, JUAN DE, is said to have painted at the Escorial in the reign of Philip II. His name lives in the verse of Lope de Vega, who calls him 'Generoso Urbina,' and laments his death as his royal patron's loss.

URBINO, BRAMANTE DA. See LAZZARI.

URBINO, CARLO, a painter of Crema, in the 16th century, who painted some pictures in the town-hall of that place, and in some of the churches of Milan. The Brera has a 'Baptism of Christ' by him.

URBINO, GIOVANNI and FRANCESCO DA, two Italian painters, who, in 1575, were engaged to decorate the Escorial. Francesco was the abler of the two, and obtained considerable reputation in Spain.

URBINO, LUCA DA, is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a set of prints for a drawing-book, from designs by Michelangelo, the Carracci, and other masters.

URZANQUI, —, was an artist of Saragossa, who enjoyed a considerable reputation in his native city about the middle of the 17th century.

USTERI, JOHANN MARTIN, draughtsman, was born at Zurich in 1763. His father was a connoisseur of art, and he was instructed partly at home, and later on by the sculptor Sonnenschein. In 1783 he travelled in Germany, the Netherlands, and France. His drawings, which embrace every variety of subject, are drawn with the pen and then washed with Indian ink, or coloured like miniatures. Some of them are moral subjects in series, in the manner of Hogarth. He died at Rapperswyl in 1827.

UTKIN, NICOLAI IWANOWITSCH, (or OUTKIN,) engraver and medallist, was born at Twer in 1779. He was a pupil of Klauber, and then studied in London, and under Bervic in Paris. He afterwards became director of the school of engraving at St. Petersburg. He died in 1863. Among his plates are:

Aeneas saving Anchises; after Domenichino.

Portrait of the Empress Catherine II.; after Borowikowsky.

Prince Kurakin; after Regnault.

Field-Marshal Suwarrow; after Schmidt.

Dr. Leighton.

UTRECHT, ADRIAEN VAN, born at Antwerp in 1599, was an eminent painter of domestic fowls, dead game, and objects of still-life. In 1614 he entered the atelier of Harmen de Neyt, and became in 1625 free of the Guild. He frequently introduced fruit and flowers into the pictures of other artists. He travelled in France, Germany, and Italy, and went to Spain, where he was much employed by Philip IV. It was there that he painted the fruit in the large picture by Rubens of 'Pythagoras and his Disciples,' which is now in Buckingham Palace. This part of the work is attributed to Snyders. He died at Antwerp, October 5, 1652. Two pictures by him are in the Madrid Gallery, in one of which the figures are inserted by Jordaens. Other good works by him are at Amsterdam, Antwerp, Brunswick, Brussels, Cassel, Cologne, Copenhagen, Dresden, Ghent, and St. Petersburg.

UTRECHT, ALEX. VAN. See KEIRINCKX.

UTRECHT, CHRISTOPH VAN, a native of Utrecht, which he left when quite young, to become a pupil of Antonio Moro. He was at the court of Portugal about the middle of the 16th century, and held high rank at the courts of Charles V. and Philip II. of Spain. He died in 1557. There is some uncertainty concerning the works of this artist, but according to Nagler, some paintings at Evord, which are somewhat in the style of Van Eyck, may be attributed to him.

UTRECHT, JAKOB VAN, (Jacobus Trajedensis,) portrait painter of the early part of the 16th century, was a native of Utrecht, and is probably identical with one "Master Jacob v. Utrecht," who is registered as a member of the Antwerp Guild in 1506. In the Berlin Gallery there is a portrait of a man by him, dated 1523.

UTRERA y CADENAS, JOSÉ, was born at Cadiz in 1829. He studied at the Academy there, and showed much promise, both as a portrait and history painter, when his career was cut short by death, in 1848. His 'Guzman the Faithful' is now in the Royal Palace at Madrid.

UWINS, THOMAS, painter, was born in Pentonville, London, February 24, 1782. In 1797 he was apprenticed to an engraver, but having a great desire to be a painter, he left his master at the age of sixteen, and became a student at the Royal Academy. He soon began to make a modest living by designs for book-illustration, chiefly for frontispieces and vignettes. He was elected an Associate of the Water-Colour Society in 1809, and full member in 1810, and in 1813 became Secretary to the Society, a post which he only held for a short time, for, his health failing, he went in 1814 to the south of France. In 1818, in consequence of a money difficulty brought upon him by a friend for whom he had been surety, he resigned his membership of the Water-Colour Society, and worked unceasingly till he had freed himself from his embarrassments, drawing portraits in chalk and making many designs for booksellers. In 1824 he was able to make a long-desired journey to Italy, where he remained till 1831, studying and collecting material for future work. Returning to England, he set about a new departure in his art, determining thenceforth to abandon water-colour for oil, and at the age of fifty he began his practice in the new medium, with marked success. His exhibited works from this time onward were chiefly Italian subject pictures, and had great popularity in their day. He became an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1833, and a full member in 1838. He was appointed librarian of the Royal Academy in 1844; Surveyor of the Queen's Pictures in 1845; and Keeper of the National Gallery in 1847. His health again gave way, and in 1855 he resigned his appointments and retired to Staines, where he died, August 25, 1857. Among his works we may name:

The Little Housewife (water-colour). 1810.
 Children returning from School (do.). 1811.
 Higglers Boy going to Market (do.). 1812.
 Girl decorating her Head with Hops (do.). 1813.

VACCARO, ANDREA, painter, was born at Naples in 1598. He was a scholar of Girolamo Imparato, and a rival of Massime Stanzioni. He for some time attached himself to an imitation of the style of Caravaggio, and some of his early productions were mistaken for the works of that painter. He afterwards adopted principles more like those of Guido. After the death of Stanzioni, Vaccaro was considered the ablest artist of the Neapolitan school, and reigned without a rival until the coming of Luca Giordano from Rome, and even him he defeated in a competitive design for a 'Madonna' for Santa Maria del Pianto. He at last took to fresco painting, in which he was less successful. He was peculiarly happy in single figures of saints. Many of these are in the Naples Gallery. He died at Naples in 1670. He used a monogram similar to that of Andrea del Sarto, which at one time caused a few of his easel pictures to be attributed to that artist. Among his best works are:

Dresden.	Gallery.	Christ appearing to Mary after the Resurrection.
Madrid.	"	The Resurrection.
"	"	Isaac and Rebekah.
"	"	Death of St. Januarius. And seven others.
Munich.	"	The Scourging of Christ.
"	"	The Child Jesus Sleeping.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	The Repentant Magdalene.
Vienna.	Gsell Coll.	Susannah in the Bath.

VACCARO, DOMENICO ANTONIO, who practised painting to some very small extent, was chiefly an architect and sculptor. He was born at Naples in 1680, and painted some ceilings in the church of Monte Vergine.

VACCARO, FRANCESCO, (or VICARO,) an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Bologna about 1636. He was a scholar of Francesco Albani, and is chiefly known, as a painter, by his perspective and architectural views. He published a treatise on perspective, embellished with plates designed and engraved by himself. His prints consist of twelve perspective views of ruins, fountains, and other edifices in Italy, inscribed Fr. Vaccaro fec. He died in 1675.

VACCELLINI. See VASCELLINI.

VACHER, CHARLES, was born in Westminster in 1818. He went to Italy in 1839, studied in Rome, and afterwards travelled in Sicily. In 1846 he was elected a member of the New Water-Colour Society, now in the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, to the exhibitions of which he was a regular contributor. His subjects were mostly from Italy, Algeria, and Egypt. He died in London, July 21, 1883. A 'Naples, with Vesuvius,' by him, is in the South Kensington Museum.

VACHER DE TOURNEMINE, CHARLES ÉMILE, (or VACHER DE TOURAINÉ,) was born at Toulon in 1814. He was a pupil of Isabey, and at first painted landscapes from the coast of Brittany, but in 1854 visited the East, and thenceforth chose Oriental subjects. He became assistant conservator of the Luxembourg, and in 1853 received the Legion of Honour. He died at Toulon in 1873. Among his best paintings are:

Coast View in Brittany.
Thebes and Luxor at Sunset.
The Pyramids of Ghizeh.
View of the Bosphorus.
Moorish Churchyard in Algeria.
Turkish Café.
Salvator Rosa among the Robbers.
The Magi following the Star of Bethlehem.
African Hunt.
Elephants attacked by Lions.
Flamingoes and Ibis.
Fishing Birds.

VAFFLARD, PIERRE ANTOINE AUGUSTIN, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1777. He was a pupil of Regnault. His works consist chiefly of poetical subjects, some of the earliest being 'The Death of Jocasta,' 'The Blinding of Œdipus,' and 'The Death of Œdipus.' He also painted events from the careers of Henry IV., Napoleon, Prince Poniatowski. His 'Death of Molière' has been engraved by Migneret. He was employed to restore the decorative paintings at Versailles and in the Tuileries. Several of his pictures are in French provincial galleries. He died in 1835.

VAGA, P. DEL. See BUONACCORSI.

VAGNUCCI, FRANCESCO, a painter of Assisi, who practised about 1500. He painted in the style of the quattrocentisti, and remains of his work are to be found in his native town.

VAILLANT, ANDRÉ, third brother and pupil of Wallerant Vaillant, was born at Lille in 1629, and died at Berlin in 1693. He engraved the following portraits:

Aloisius Bevilacqua; after Bernard Vaillant.
Johann Ernst Schroder; after Jakob Vaillant.
Gabriel de la Gardie.

VAILLANT, BERNARD, was born at Lille in 1625. The success of his brother Wallerant as a portrait painter, induced him to adopt the same pursuit, and to become his brother's pupil. He chiefly excelled in painting portraits in crayons, and having accompanied Wallerant to Frankfort and Paris, he was much employed. On his return to the Low Countries, he established himself at Rotterdam, where he chiefly resided for the remainder of his life. He died at Leyden in 1674. He engraved several portraits in mezzotint, among which are the following:

Johann Lingelbach, Painter; after Schwarz.
Paul Dufour; after Wallerant Vaillant.
Charles de Rochefort; B. Vaillant ad vivum faciebat.
1671.
Admiral Sweers.
Busts of St. Peter and St. Paul; from his own designs.

VAILLANT, JACQUES, fourth of the brothers and scholar of Wallerant, was born at Lille in 1628. Whilst young, he visited Italy, and passed two years at Rome. On his return to Flanders he was invited to the court of the Elector of Brandenburg, who, in 1672, employed him in painting some historical subjects. He was then sent by the Elector to Vienna, to paint the portrait of the Emperor, who presented him on the occasion with a gold medal and chain. He died at Berlin in 1691.

VAILLANT, JEAN, second of the five artist brothers, was born at Lille in 1624, and died at Frankfurt. He painted and etched portraits and landscapes, but ultimately abandoned art for trade.

VAILLANT, WALLERANT, painter and etcher, the eldest of five brother artists, was born at Lille in 1623. After learning the rudiments of design in his native city, he went to Antwerp, where he became the disciple of Erasmus Quellin. On leaving the school of that master he adopted portrait painting, as the most lucrative branch of art, and settling at Middelburg, was received into the Guild of St. Luke there in 1647. Being advised to visit Frankfurt, at the time (1658) of the coronation of the Emperor Leopold, he painted a successful portrait of Leopold, and his reputation was at once established. The Maréchal de Grammont took him in his train to Paris, where he painted the Queen, the Queen mother, and the Duke of Orleans, and was so fully employed that in four years he returned to Flanders with a competent fortune. He settled at Amsterdam, where he died in 1677. Some of his best portraits are in the Museum, and in the French Orphanage in that city, and in the palace at Berlin. Some striking portraits by him in chalk are preserved at Berlin and Dresden. He is said to have visited England in the suite of Prince Rupert, and to have learnt from that prince the then newly-discovered process of scraping in mezzotint. In conjunction with the prince, and also independently, he engraved a great variety of plates in that manner, some from his own designs, some after other masters. Among them are the following:

Prince Rupert, two; one in armour, and one with his arms crossed and leaning his head on his left hand.

(After his own design.)

His own Portrait. (Do.)

The Portrait of his Wife. (Do.)

Desiderius Erasmus.

Johann Frobenius, the celebrated Printer of Basle.

Sir Anthony van Dyck.

Barent Graat, Painter.

A young Artist, probably his brother André.

St. Barbara; after Raphael.

Judith; after Guido Reni.

The Holy Family; after Titian.

The Temptation of St. Anthony; after Cam. Procaccini.

The Bust of a Warrior; after Tintoretto.

Venus lamenting the Death of Adonis; after Eras. Quellin.

The Prodigal Son; after Marc Geerarts.

Judith and Jael; after Gérard de Lairesse.

Vaillant executed a few excellent portraits with the point, among them the following:

Archbishop Johann Philipp, Elector of Mainz.

The Duc de Grammont.

The Emperor Leopold I.

Charles Louis, Elector Palatine, and his Wife. (Two plates.)

VAILLIÈRE, —, a French painter, of whose career there is no record. In the Besançon Museum there are drawings by him of Montbarrey, Minister of War under Louis XVI., and of the Princesse de Montbarrey, afterwards Princesse de la Trémoille.

VAINES, MAURICE DE, painter, was born at Bar-le-Duc, March 2, 1815, and was a pupil of Auguste Conder and of Pigot. He worked much as a decorative painter, and was the author of the allegorical paintings in the Chapel of the Grand Séminaire, Blois, and of others in the choir of the Church at Chailles. His 'Slave Market' is in the Marseilles Museum, and his 'Death of Eustache Le Sueur' in the Orleans Museum. He exhibited occasionally at the Salon between 1839 and 1861. He died in 1872.

VAJANI, ANNA MARIA, resided at Rome about the year 1650, where she engraved some plates for the 'Giustiniani Gallery.' She also painted flowers.

VAJANO, ALESSANDRO, or ORAZIO, called 'Il Fiorentino,' was a native of Florence, and flourished about the year 1628. He resided chiefly at Milan, and acquired considerable reputation by pictures for the churches of San Carlo and Sant' Antonio Abate. There are also several of his works at Genoa. Bartsch has described a print by him of a 'Dead Christ with the Instruments of the Passion,' and also one of a 'Magdalene' engraved after him by SEBASTIANO VAJANI, an artist of whom nothing else is known.

VAL, DU. See DU VAL.

VAL, SEBASTIANO DE, (or D'VL,) whose correct name has been given, perhaps, by Zani, as SEBASTIANO DE VALENTINI UTINENSE, was an engraver, and flourished about the middle of the 16th century. All that is certainly known is that he engraved two plates; but Bartsch says that he was a painter of merit, and probably a Venetian. His two prints are:

A Repose in Egypt, in which the Virgin, with the Infant in her arms, rests at the base of a rock on the right, and Joseph is seated on the left. On a tablet is inscribed Sebastiano D' VL.

Prometheus chained, and tormented by the Vulture. On a stone to the right is inscribed Sebastiano D' Val. Ut. 5558. (Bartsch says 15558, but the 1 may possibly be a correction of the 5. Zani conjectures that 5558 represented the date from the Creation, which would be equivalent to A.D. 1554.)

VALADE, JEAN, painter, was born at Poitiers in 1709. He was received by the Academy in 1750, and became an academician in 1754. He was a frequent exhibitor of portraits in oil and pastel at the Salon between 1751 and 1781. He died in Paris, December 12, 1787.

VALBRUN, ALEXIS LÉON LOUIS, painter, was born in Paris in 1803. He was a pupil of Gosse and of Gros. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1817. Exhibited at the Salon between 1831 and 1843. His portrait of Philip V. of Spain is in the Versailles collection. He died in 1852.

VALBUENA. See MEDINA Y VALBUENA.

VALCK, GERARD, (or VALK,) a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1626. He was first a servant to Abraham Blooteling, but having married his master's sister, was instructed in engraving, and taken into partnership. He worked jointly with Blooteling upon several mezzotints. It is therefore not unusual to find the same plates ascribed to both. They worked much for Browne, the printseller, who, as was his custom, omitted their names from the plates. In Blooteling's company Valck visited England, where he was employed for some time by David Loggan. Returning to Amsterdam, he assisted Peter Schenck in the publication of his large Dutch Atlas, in two folio volumes, in 1683. He is believed to have died at Amsterdam in 1720. We have several portraits and other subjects engraved by him, both in mezzotint and with the graver. Among others are the following:

ENGRAVED PLATES.

Hortensia, Duchess of Mancini; after Lely; one of his best plates.

Nell Gwyn; after the same.
 Robert, Lord Brooke.
 John, Duke of Lauderdale.
 Burgomaster Koningh; after Miereveldt.

MEZZOTINTS.

William, Prince of Orange; after Lely.
 Mary, Princess of Orange; after the same.
 Louisa, Duchess of Portsmouth; after the same.
 Mary Davis, Actress; after the same.
 A Girl holding a Lamp; after G. Dou.
 David and Bathsheba; after B. Graat.
 A Trumpeter presenting a letter to a Lady; after Terborch.
 The Sleeping Maid.
 A Death's Head crowned with Laurel.
 Cupid asleep; after Guido Reni.
 A Woman 'qui cherche ses puceux.'

VALCK, PETER, painter, was born at Leeuwarden, Friesland, in 1584, and formed his manner by studying the works of Abraham Bleemaert. He afterwards went to Italy, and passed some years in Rome. On his return to Holland, he practised as an historical painter, and excelled also in portraits and landscapes. A portrait of himself, done in his twenty-first year, is praised by Houbraken. He engraved a few plates, in which he imitated the style of Philipp Galle.

VALCKENBURG. See VALKENBORCH.

VALCKERT, WERNER, or WARNARD, VAN, (VAN DEN VALKER, &c.) a Dutch painter and etcher, was born, probably at Amsterdam, about 1580. According to Houbraken he was a scholar of Hendrik Goltzius, at Haarlem. He painted historical pictures and portraits. He was still alive in 1635, when he was at Delft, painting on fayence. There are pictures by him in some of the churches at Utrecht, and the following are in the Amsterdam Museum:

The Archer company of Captain Albert Coenraet Burgh. 1625.
 Four Syndics and an Employé of the Mercer's Guild. 1622.
 Four Male Regents of the Leper's Hospital. 1624.
 Three Female Regents of the same.
 Five pictures from the Foundling Hospital.
 Portrait of Swartenhont, Lieut.-Admiral of Holland. 1627.
 (?) Portrait of Pieter Dirksz. Hasselaer.

He also etched a few plates from his own designs, among them the following:

His own Portrait.
 The Holy Family.
 Jacob with Joseph's Coat.
 The Last Supper.
 St. Luke.
 The Good Samaritan.
 Venus sleeping, surprised by two Satyrs.
 An old Man and Woman seated at a table, with the figure of Death giving his hand to the old Man; dated 1612.
 Fool and Girl.
 Cupid and Satyrs.

VALDELMIRA DE LEON, JUAN, was born at Tafalla, in Navarre about 1630. He was instructed in the rudiments of design by his father at Valladolid, and after his death entered the school of Francisco Rizi, at Madrid. He assisted that master in several of his works, particularly in the Portuguese church at Toledo, in the Retiro, and other places. But his chief excellence was in flower-pieces. He died in his thirtieth year.

VALDES, LUCAS DE, a painter and engraver, was the son of Juan de Valdes-Leal, and of his wife Isabella Carasquilla. He was born at Seville in 1661, and at the age of eleven he engraved four plates, which are to be found in 'Fiestas de Seville á la canonizacion de San Fernando,' and form emblematic allusions to the virtues of that Saint. He became mathematical master of the Marine College at Cadiz, but continued the exercise of the pencil and graver till his death there in 1724. His sacred subjects are chiefly in the cathedral and churches of Seville, and there is one in the Museum of that city. He also painted pictures of Saints and portraits, several of which he engraved; among them the portrait of Father Francisca Tamariz, and that of the philanthropist Mañara. His son, JUAN DE VALDES, distinguished himself as an engraver, particularly of religious subjects for books of devotion.

VALDES, MARIA and LAURA DE, daughters of the Spanish painter, Juan de Valdes-Leal, were painters of some skill, especially of miniature portraits. The former died a nun in the Cistercian Convent at Seville, in 1730.

VALDES, SEBAST. See LLANOS Y VALDES.

VALDES-LEAL, DON JUAN DE, was born at Seville in 1630, and distinguished himself as a painter, sculptor, and architect. He worked for a time under Antonio del Castillo. Of his pictures, the most worthy of notice are a 'History of the Prophet Elias,' in the church of the Carmelites; the 'Martyrdom of St. Andrew,' in the church of S. Francesco, at Cordeva; and the 'Triumph of the Cross,' in la Caridad, at Seville. He was one of the founders of the Seville Academy. He lived in habits of intimacy with Murillo, who was an admirer of his works, and died at Seville in 1691. He has left two plates. His wife, ISABELLA CARASQUILLA, was also a painter. She died at Seville as late as 1730.

VALDIVIESO Y HENAREJOS, DOMINGO, was born at Mazarron, in Murcia, in 1832. He was first a pupil of Juan Albacete, and then studied successively in the Schools of Art at Madrid, in Paris, and in Rome. After his return he became anatomical teacher to the Academy of San Fernando. About 1870 his mind was for a time deranged. He died in 1872. He painted portraits, genre subjects, and historical pictures; among the latter are:

The Entombment.

The First Communion.

Philip II. on the occasion of an Auto da Fé.

VALDOR, JAN, the elder, an engraver, was born at Liège about 1580. He was a pupil of Wierix, and engraved portraits, historical subjects, and title-pages for books. An 'Assumption of the Virgin' and a 'Conversion of St. Paul' are among his plates.

VALDOR, JAN, the younger, (or WALDOR,) was a native of Liège; his birth has been assigned both to 1590 and 1602. He is supposed to have been the son of Jan Valdor the elder; if so, the latter date is probably the right one for his birth. He closely followed the style of Wenzel Hollar. He was sent when young as plenipotentiary to the French court, where he attracted the notice of Mazarin. He from this time chiefly resided in Paris, where he executed a considerable number of plates, representing saints and devotional subjects. He also engraved, after Michel Pontianus, some of the plates for 'Les Triomphes de Louis le Juste,' published in Paris in 1649. These are his best performances. We have besides, by him, a 'Repose of the Holy Family,' after Herm. Swanevelt; and a head of St. Ignatius Loyola, very highly finished. After the death of his wife he returned to Liège, and became an ecclesiastic. His death occurred after 1649.

VALÉE. See VALLÉE.

VALEGGIO (VALEGIO, or VALEGIUS). See VALESIO.

VALENCIA, JACOPO DA, sometimes called VALENTINA, learnt his art in Mursno, and was probably a disciple of the Vivarini. His earliest picture is a Madonna and Child, dated 1485, belonging to the Pagani Family, at Belluno. The Correr Museum, in Venice, has a similar subject, dated 1488; the Berlin Gallery contains two Madonnas; in the church of San Giovanni, Serravalle, is an Enthroned Virgin and Child, dated 1502; the cathedral of Ceneda possesses two Madonnas, one dated 1508; and in the Academy of Venice there is a Virgin and Child, dated 1509. The dates of neither his birth nor death are known.

VALENCIA, MATIAS DE. See CHAFFRON.

VALENCIENNES, PIERRE HENRI, (or DEVALENCIENNES,) landscape painter, was born at Toulouse in 1750, and after studying for a time in his native city, was sent by his parents to Paris, where he became a pupil of Doyen. He subsequently visited Italy, and studied the works of Claude and Poussin at Rome. On his return to France he formed a school, from which issued many well-known masters of classical landscape. He exhibited at the Salon from 1787 to 1814. He became a member of the old Academy of Painting in 1787. He died in Paris in 1819. His principal pictures are, 'Cicero discovering the tomb of Archimedes;' two subjects from Œdipus; 'Philoctetes in the island of Lemnos;' a 'View of the ancient city of Trœzene;' the 'Vale of Tempé;' and the 'Dance of Theseus.' Besides these he painted a great number of landscapes. Several of his pictures have been engraved. He published a treatise entitled 'Éléments de Perspective pratique à l'usage des Artistes.'

VALENS, (or FALENS,) CHARLES VAN, painter, born at Antwerp in 1683, was a pupil of Constantinus Francken about 1696. In 1703 he went to France, and, practising in Paris, became a member of the Academy in 1726. He married Marie, the daughter of the sculptor, Sebastien Slodts, in 1716, and became painter in ordinary to the French king. He painted battle-pieces, hunting-scenes, &c., in close imitation of the manner of Philips Wouwerman, and his works show little trace of any original talent. In the Dresden Gallery there is a 'Starting for a Heron Hunt' by him, and two pictures in the same genre in the Stockholm Gallery. He died in Paris, May 26, 1733.

VALENTIN, a painter, who, though French by birth, should be classed among the Naturalisti of the Italian school. He was born at Coulommiers (Seine et Marne) in 1600. But little is known concerning him: even his name has been a subject of doubt. He has frequently been assigned the Christian name of Pierre, and sometimes that of Moïse. The latter has been shown to be a corruption of the title "Mosu" prefixed to his name by the Italians. He has been called Jean Rasset, but his real name would appear to have been Jean de Boullongne, and his pseudonym of Valentin to have been taken from the Christian name of his father. He found his way to Rome when very young. Here he is said, doubtfully, to have studied under his countryman Vouet, then in the height of his Italian reputation. Some writers, influenced by the reflection of Caravaggio seen in his works, have called him a pupil of that master. That this is a mistake is evident from the fact that Caravaggio died in 1609. He shows the weaknesses and strong points of that painter. His drawing is vigorous, and his treatment of light and shade powerful, though frequently overstrained. In his choice of subjects, like the other Naturalisti, he seems to have found nature only in her ugliest and most ignoble forms. Valentin was known to Sandrart and to Nicolas Poussin. Like both of these painters, he was patronized by Cardinal Barberini, for whom he painted the 'Execution of St. John Baptist.' Through the influence of the same patron, he obtained the commission for his principal work, the 'Martyrdom of SS. Processus and Martinianus,' for St. Peter's. Another important commission was the picture of 'Peter denying Christ,' now in the Corsini Palace at Rome. But it is not in works of this character that he is in his element. He was a man of irregular life, and the scenes most congenial to him are those peopled by wandering musicians, swashbucklers, gamblers, gipsies, and pickpockets. His career was cut short by a fever caused by imprudently bathing when heated after an orgy. He died at Rome August 7, 1634. One etching was formerly attributed to Valentin. It is now ascribed to another hand. The following is a list of his pictures in some of the chief European galleries:

VALENTIN, A—HENRI, painter and illustrator, was born at Allarmont in 1820, and died in 1855. He painted genre subjects and aquarelles, but was better known by his designs for the 'Magasin Pittoresque' and other papers.

VALENTIN, GOTTFRIED, a painter of Leipsic in the 17th century, produced numerous animal and hunting pieces, and allegories. One of the latter, a 'Vanity,' is in the city library at Leipsic, and represents a skeleton playing upon the harpsichord.

VALENTINA, JACOPO. See VALENCIA.

VALENTINI, ERNST, a German painter, was born at Westerbürg in 1759. He was at first a bookseller in Frankfort, but practised drawing and silhouetting in his leisure hours, till in 1780 a portrait of his gained him sufficient notoriety to cause him to proceed to Italy for improvement. He attended the academies of Turin and Milan. At Parma he painted the Duke and his family, and at Florence (1787) the Grand Duke (afterwards the Emperor) Leopold. From 1789 till 1794 he was in Rome. In the latter year he returned to Germany, where he lived partly at Oettingen and partly at Detmold as court painter. In his later career he painted landscapes and miniature portraits. He died in 1820.

VALERIANI, Padre GIUSEPPE, according to Baglione, was a native of Aquila, and flourished at Rome in the pontificate of Clement VIII. (1592—1605). It is not said under whom he studied, but he imitated the style of Sebastiano del Piombo. In this manner he painted for the church of San Spirito in Sassia, two pictures, representing the 'Transfiguration,' and the 'Descent of the Holy Ghost.' He afterwards became a Jesuit, and painted several scenes from the Life of the Virgin for the Church of his order.

VALÉRIO, THÉODORE, a French painter, draughtsman, engraver, and lithographer, born at Herserange in 1819. He was a pupil and friend of Charlet. His works first appeared at the Salon in 1838, when he exhibited a 'Corps de Garde Flamand.' He travelled in Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Hungary, the Herzegovina, and Montenegro. His drawings of the people and scenery of South-Eastern Europe made his reputation. On the outbreak of the Russo-Turkish war of 1853, he accompanied the Turkish army, and exhibited a series of water-colour sketches then made by him at the Paris Exhibition of 1855. Of a retiring disposition, his latter years were spent in a secluded corner of Brittany. He died at Vichy in September, 1879.

VALERO, CRISTÓBAL, was born at Alboraya, Valencia, early in the 18th century. He was at first a student of philosophy, but later devoted himself to art under Evaristo Muñoz, and afterwards travelled to Rome, where he worked with Sebastian Conca. On his return he became a priest, and also (1754) director of the Academy of Santa Barbara; in 1762 he was made an honorary member of that of San Fernando, and in 1768 director of that of San Carlos. He died at Valencia in 1789. Some of his pictures are in the churches of Valencia; in the Archiepiscopal Palace in the same city there are portraits of various prelates, while the Madrid Museum possesses two scenes from 'Don Quixote' by him.

VALERY, CAROLINE DE. A picture signed with this name hangs in the Glasgow Gallery. It is in the style of Greuze, and represents a girl examining a miniature, but nothing is known of its author.

VALESCART, (or WALESCART,) JAN, a painter of Liège, who flourished in the 17th century. He studied first at Antwerp, and afterwards went to Italy to complete his education in Guido's atelier. He died at Liège in 1675.

VALESIO, FRANCESCO, (VALEGGIO, VALEGIUS, &c.) who was born at Bologna in 1560, is mentioned by Florent le Comte as both painter and engraver; he has left several plates from his own compositions, as well as frontispieces and other book-ornaments. His most important work, however, is a set of Hermits, engraved for the 'Illustrium Anachoretorum Elogia,' written by Jacobus Cavacius, a Benedictine monk, and published at Venice in 1612. He also engraved some portraits and views of towns, after Pietro Facini and other masters. He carried on a business as an art dealer in partnership with one Doino.

VALESIO, GIACOMO, (VALEGIO, &c.) an Italian engraver, was a native of Verona, and flourished towards the close of the 16th century. His plates are executed with the graver, in a style resembling that of Cornelis de Cort, but very inferior to it. Among other prints by him, we have one of 'St. Michael vanquishing the Evil Spirits,' after Paolo Veronese, and bearing the signature Jacom. Valegio fecit, 1587. NICCOLÒ VALEGIO, another engraver, flourished about the same time; he was also of Verona, and both were publishers.

VALESIO, GIOVANNI LUIGI, was born at Bologna about 1579. He was the son of a Spanish soldier, and was at first a dancing and drill master, but took to decorating doctors' patents, and in 1610 entered the school of Lodovico Carracci. Here he studied miniature as well as fresco painting, and also executed some pen-and-ink drawings. In 1621 he proceeded to Rome, where he prepared designs for the embroideries of the Countess Lodovisi, and then became secretary to the Cardinal of that name, who presently succeeded to the Popedom as Gregory XV., and employed Valesio to paint in his palace. Valesio died at Rome not sooner than 1623. Among his works at Bologna are, a 'Scourging of Christ,' in the church of San Pietro; an 'Annunciation,' at the Mendicanti; and 'St. Roch curing the Plague-stricken,' in the church dedicated to that Saint. At Rome his best work is 'Religion,' in the Minerva Monastery. He etched several plates from his own designs, and after other masters, as well as a variety of plates for books. In these he approached the style of Agostino Carracci. Among others, we have the following prints by him:

The Virgin, with the Infant Christ seated on her lap; after his own design.
Venus threatening Cupid; do.
Venus chastising Cupid; do.
Funeral of Gregory XV. (1623.)

VALET. See VALLET.

VALETTE-FALGOUS, JEAN, called PENOT, painter, was born at Montauban in 1710. There are some pictures of still-life by him in the museum of his native town. He died after 1776.

VALETTE, LOUIS ANTOINE, was born in Paris in 1787. He was a pupil of Guérin and Chéry. The only picture he exhibited was a 'Cephalus and Procris,' at the Luxembourg in 1830. In that same year he was killed by a soldier during the street-fighting of the "Days of July."

VALETTE, PAUL BERNARD, wood-engraver, was born at Toulouse in 1852. He was a pupil of M. Panemaker and of the École Nationale de Dessin. He exhibited, at the Salon, wood-engraving after well-known painters, such as Baudry, Carolus Duran, Mercié, Madrazo, and Gautherin; also after Michelangelo and Albrecht Dürer. He died in Paris June 9, 1880.

VALIN, —, painter. All that is known of him is that a picture signed with his name exists in the Straburg Museum.

VALK, GERARD. See VALCK.

VALK, H. (J. ?) —, a Dutch painter of whom scarcely anything is known. He worked in the second half of the 17th century, and two pictures by him are in the Amsterdam Museum; a portrait of Hans Willem, Baron van Aylva, and another of his wife.

VALK, PIETER DE. See VALCK.

VALKENBORCH, FREDERIK VAN, the son of Lucas van Valkenborch, is said to have been born at Mechlin in 1570, and was instructed by his father. He travelled to Venice when still young, studied the works of Titian, Tintoretto, and P. Veronese, and afterwards settled with his father in Nuremberg. Though he occasionally painted historical subjects, he was more successful with perspective views, markets, fairs, and festivals, in which he usually introduced a great number of figures. His works are little known out of Germany. He passed the latter part of his life at Nuremberg. In 1612 he painted a triumphal arch for the entry of the Emperor into the city. He died in 1623. He is the author of a 'Village Fête' (1594) and a 'Fair' (1595), in the Vienna Gallery; and of landscapes in those of Frankfort and Brunswick.

VALKENBORCH, LUCAS VAN, was born at Mechlin about 1530, and lived in that town and Antwerp. He was registered in the Guild of St. Luke in 1560, and became a master in 1564. He painted landscape and genre subjects with peasants and soldiers in water-colours, as well as portraits in miniature. During the troubles in the Netherlands he took the popular side, and, in 1566, was compelled to fly from Mechlin. After a stay at Antwerp, where he joined his brother Marten, and is believed to have studied under Pieter Brueghel, the brothers, accompanied by Jan Vredeman de Vries, proceeded to Aix-la-Chapelle and Liège, where they produced a number of landscapes. Lucas seems to have returned to the Netherlands for a short time, but the Spanish triumphs sent him back to Germany. In 1570 he obtained the patronage of the Archduke Matthias, whom he accompanied to Linz. There, until the outbreak of the Turkish war, he painted miniature portraits, and landscapes with genre subjects introduced. In 1594 he was at Frankfort a. M., where Georg Hoefnagel employed him on designs, and in 1597 he was back at Nuremberg, where Sandrart says he met him in 1622. At that date he would be about ninety-two. In addition to landscapes at Brunswick and Frankfort, there remain the following by him:

Vienna.	Gallery.	The Four Seasons.	1580-7.
"	"	Stag Hunt.	1590.
"	"	Portrait.
"	Ambraser Coll.	Landscape.	1585.
"	"	Banquet of Persons of Rank.

VALKENBORCH, MARTEN VAN, brother of Lucas van Valkenborch, was born at Mechlin in 1542 (some say 1533), was enrolled in the Mechlin Guild in 1559, went to Antwerp in 1565, and in 1566 accompanied his brother to Liège and Aix. At a later period he settled at Frankfort. He died after 1602. He painted landscapes, portraits, and genre subjects. There is a 'Kermesse' by him in the Vienna Gallery; a 'Tower of Babel,' at Dresden; several landscapes in the Ambraser Collection at Vienna, and other pictures at Frankfort (private collections) and Gotha.

VALKENBORCH, MARTEN VAN, the younger, probably a son of Marten van Valkenborch the elder, was a painter of Frankfort, and died there in 1636. A companion picture to Frederik van Valkenborch's 'Village Fête,' by Marten the younger, is preserved in the Vienna Gallery.

VALKENBORCH, THEODOOR, DIRK, or GILLIS VAN, was born at Amsterdam in 1675, and was first a scholar of Cuylenborch, but he afterwards studied under Michiel van Musscher. Ultimately he became the pupil of Jan Weenix, and painted similar subjects to his. In 1695 he travelled in Germany, with the intention of visiting Italy, but he was commissioned to paint some pictures at the court of the Duke of Baden, and afterwards visited Vienna with a recommendation to Prince Liechtenstein. He was so much employed in that capital, that he renounced his project of visiting Rome, and amassed a fortune. After a time he returned to Holland, where he was employed to paint for the palaces at Loo. Subsequently, however, he met with domestic afflictions, and emigrated to Surinam, where he died in 1725. Works:

Brunswick. Gallery. Defeat of Sennacherib.
Frankfort. Stüdel Inst. Study of Dead Game.

VALKERT (VALKER, &c.). See VAN DEN VALCKERT.

VALLAYER-COSTER, ANNE, a painter of flowers, animals, and still-life, was born in Paris in 1744, and died in 1818. She was admitted into the Academy in 1770 as a painter and sculptor.

VALLÉE, ALEXANDRE, designer and engraver, was born at Bar-le-Duc about 1558, and is known by some 134 unimportant plates, executed with the point and graver. They include some religious subjects after Snstris, Sprangher, and others; also plates after antique medals, architectural subjects, portraits, &c.

VALLÉE, ETIENNE, or STEFANO, DE LA. See DE LA VALLÉE.

VALLÉE, SIMON, (or VALÉE), was born in Paris about the year 1700. He was a pupil of Pierre Drevet, and has engraved several plates, which are etched and finished with the graver. The following are among the best:

Jean de Troy, Painter to the King; after Fras. de Troy.
Jean François Savary, Curate of S. Menehault; after the same.

The Transfiguration; after Raphael.

St. John in the Wilderness; after the same.

The Flight into Egypt; after Carlo Maratti.

The Resurrection of Lazarus; after Girolamo Mu-ziano.

The Finding of Moses; after Francesco Romanelli.

Christ bearing His Cross; after Andrea Sacchi.

The Death of the Virgin; after Caravaggio.

The Sacrifice of Abraham; after Ant. Coyppel.

Christ blessing Little Children; after P. J. Cazes.

The Descent of the Holy Ghost; after the same.

VALLENBURGH. See VALKENBORCH.

VALLES, JOSEF and JUAN, two brothers, were engravers at Saragossa in the reign of Philip IV. Josef engraved the title-page to Leonardo de Argensola's 'Annals of Arragon'; Juan, from a design by Juan Martinez, engraved the frontispiece to a work on the birthplace of San Lorenzo, by Juan de Ustarroz.

VALLET, GUILLAUME, (or VALET), a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1633. His father, also an engraver, died when Vallet was but three years old, and his mother placed him under Daret at an early age. He made rapid progress, and at the age of twenty travelled to Rome, with his friend, Etienne Picart, and studied under Maratti. After a stay of eight years in Rome, where he engraved chiefly after the Italian and French masters, he returned to settle in Paris, where he died July 1, 1704. He exhibited at the Salon in 1673 and 1699. Among others, we have the following prints by him:

Vallet's son, JEROME, who became a member of the Academy in 1702, engraved sixteen plates from the bas-reliefs of 'The Pillars of Theodosius in Constantinople,' after drawings by Gentile Bellini.

VALLET, PIERRE, designer and engraver, was born at Orleans about the year 1575. He bore the title of 'Brodeur ordinaire du Roi' to Henry IV. of France, and was living in 1655. He is noted by Dumesnil as the engraver of the one hundred and twenty-four prints in 'Les Aventures amoureuses de Théagène et Chariclée,' published in 1613; of a Plan of the City of Paris, after François Quesnel; of 'Earth and Fire,' after Toussaint Dubrenil; and of the one hundred plates of flowers in 'Le Jardin du Roy très Chrestien Henry IV., Roy de France et de Navare. Dedié à la Reyne,' published in 1608. This edition has the portrait of the artist with his name and the date. He continued to work for Louis XIII. Nothing further is recorded of Pierre Vallet, except that he was connected in some other work with two artists, P. FATOURE, and GABRIELLO GIOVANE, or GABRIEL LE JEUNE, who flourished in Paris in 1609.

VALLIN, JACQUES ANTOINE, a French painter of whose life no details are forthcoming. He was a frequent exhibitor at the Salon between 1791 and 1827, and his pictures are to be met with in private collections in France. His subjects were taken from classic literature.

VALLORY, THÉODORE, Chevalier, a French amateur engraver, flourished about the year 1760. He etched, for his amusement, several small landscapes and other subjects, after Boucher. There was also a Cavaliere ANTONIO VALLORY, an Italian, who practised thirty years earlier.

VALLOT, PHILIPPE JOSEPH, engraver, born at Vienna in 1796, of French parents, was a pupil of Ortemann. He engraved a few plates after Gros and Vernet, among them 'Napoleon visiting the Field of Eylau,' 'The Battle of the Pyramids,' and 'The Trumpeter's Horse.' He executed vignettes after various artists for the works of Voltaire, Rousseau, Rabclais, Legouvé, for 'The History of Napoleon,' 'Don Quixote,' and for the Bible. He died in Paris in 1870.

VALLOU DE VILLENEUVE, JULIEN, painter, engraver, and lithographer, was born at Boissy-Saint-Léger in 1795. He was a pupil of Garneray and of Millet, and exhibited many works in oil and water-colours, and several lithographs, at the Salon, from 1824 onwards. He died in Paris, May 4, 1866.

VALOIS, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a Dutch painter, was born at Paramaribo in 1778. He was the pupil of his father, an obscure painter. He lived at the Hague for many years, and gave lessons in drawing. He died at the Hague, December 7, 1853. Works:

Amsterdam. R. Museum. View of a Town.
 Rotterdam. Museum. A Farmyard.

VALPUESTA, PEDRO DE, 'El licenciado,' a Spanish painter, was born at Osma, in Old Castile, in 1614. He was a disciple of Eugenio Caxes, at Madrid, and, according to Palomino, the most successful follower of his style. He became a priest, and died in the capital in 1668. His principal works are in the churches and convents at Madrid. The most remarkable are: a series of pictures from the Life of the Virgin, in the church of San Miguel; the 'Holy Family, with St. Joachim and St. Anne,' in the chapel of the Hospital del Buensuceso; six pictures representing the 'Life of St. Clara,' and scenes from the Life of St. Francis, in the respective convents of those saints.

VALTON, HENRI, painter, born at Troyes about 1810. He was a pupil of Couture, and exhibited portraits and historical pictures at the Salon from 1834 to 1857. His portrait of Dominique Morlot, painter, is in the Troyes Museum.

VAN. For names beginning with this prefix separately, if not followed by DE, DEN, or DER, see under the names themselves.

VANASSEN, BENEDICTUS ANTONIO, a designer and engraver, who worked in England towards the end of the 18th and the beginning of the 19th centuries. His works occasionally appeared at the Academy between 1788 and 1804. His death is supposed to have taken place in London about 1817. Amongst his plates are:

Portrait of Belzoni. 1804.

Portrait of Mortimer, R.A. 1810.

Emblematic Devices in forty-eight plates. 1810.

A Sacrifice to Pomona and Ceres.

VANDAEEL. See DAEL, VAN.

VANDELAR, JEAN, a French illuminator of the 14th century, who worked in Paris. In 1372 he was employed by the king, Charles V.

VAN DE LAAR, JAN HENDRIK, a Dutch painter, born at Rotterdam in 1807. He was a pupil of G. Wappers at Amsterdam, and worked alternately at Rotterdam, the Hague, and Antwerp. He became a member of the Academy of Amsterdam in 1852, and was Professor of the Rotterdam Academy. He died at Rotterdam, May 15, 1874. There is a picture by him in the Museum of that city. His brother BERNHARD born at Rotterdam in 1804, was chiefly known as a painter of church interiors.

VAN DE PASS, CRISPIN, the elder, (VAN DE PASSE, DE PASSE, DE PAS, or PASSEUS,) an eminent draughtsman and engraver, was born at Armuyden in the province of Zealand, about the year 1560. He was instructed in engraving by Cuerehert, and worked successively at Cologne, Utrecht, and Amsterdam. His talents recommended him to the notice of Prince Maurice, who sent him to Paris, where he taught drawing in the academy of M. Pluvinel, riding-master to Louis XIII., on which occasion either he or his son Crispin the younger (see below) published in 1629 the celebrated set of sixty prints, entitled 'Instruction du Roi en l'exercice de monter à cheval, par Messire Antoine de Pluvinel.' In these are introduced the portraits of Louis XIII., the Duc de Bellegarde, and many other great personages of the court. From Paris he came to England, at what date is not certain; but as none of his English prints are dated later than 1635, it is probable that he quitted this country about that year. He published a drawing-book in 1643 at Amsterdam, in Italian, French, and Dutch, entitled 'Della Luce del dipingere e disegnare,' in the preface to which he mentions his intimacy with the most celebrated masters of the time. Freminet, Rubens, A. Bloemart, P. Moreelze, and P. Van der Berg, were among his friends. Another work of his in four languages was 'The Functions of the Human Body,' illustrated with engravings. The date of this publication makes him an octogenarian, and after that he disappears. The plates of Crispin van de Pass are neatly executed with the graver. Many were designed from life, and the greater part of his subject plates are engraved from his own compositions. He succeeded best in figures of a small size, for he undertook too many engagements to devote sufficient time to the larger ones. He usually marked his plates with a cipher composed of an S. a V. and a P. joined together. He was a man of letters, and a 'patron.' This appears from the fact that Holland's 'Heröologia Anglica' is expressly stated to be published, 'Impensis Crispini Passe.' This work, published in 1620, contained thirty-five portraits of English statesmen, and thirty of divines and martyrs of the Protestant faith. These were probably engraved under commission from Van de Pass. The following is a list of his better prints :

PORTRAITS.

 A set of four Landscapes, with figures; after J. Brueghel.

VAN DE PASS, CRISPIN, the younger, the eldest son of the elder artist of the name, was born at Utrecht in 1585, and was instructed by his father. There is some confusion between the younger and the elder Crispin, and it is now suspected that the sixty plates in Pluvinel's 'Horsemanship,' cited under the elder artist, were really executed by the son. Crispin the younger flourished up till at least 1645, and Zani says as late as 1659: he quotes an inscription, Avec privilège du Roy 1659. C. de Pas. inven. et fecit—Crisp. Passeus Junior Sculptcit. We have also the following engravings by the younger Crispin:

Frederick, Elector Palatine; inscribed, Crispin Passeus, jun. fig. et sculp.

Johannes Angelius Werdenhagen; C. de Passe filius, fec. 1600.

Pope Paul V.; Crispinus Passaeus senior inv. et exc., junior sculp. aetatis 17.

Three out of a set of four scenes from the Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; the fourth was engraved by Crispin, senior.

VAN DE PASS, MAGDALENA, who was born at Utrecht about 1583, was the daughter of the elder Crispin van de Pass, and learned the art of engraving from her father. She worked for a time in England, and also in Germany and Denmark. The date of her death is not known. She executed some small plates in imitation of the style of Count Goudt, and also engraved a few portraits. She sometimes used the cipher PM. Among others, we have the following prints by her.

Her own Portrait (bust).

Catherine, Duchess of Buckingham, with a feather in her hand.

The Wise and the Foolish Virginia; after Elsheimer.

The Four Seasons; after Crispin Van de Pass, senior.

Cephalus and Procris.

Salmacis and Hermaphroditus. 1623.

Latona changing the Lycian Peasants into Frogs.

Alpheus and Arethusa. 1623.

A pair of Landscapes; after Roelandt Savery.

A pair, one a Storm with a Shipwreck, and the other a Landscape with a Windmill; after A. Willeres.

VAN DE PASS, SIMON, the elder, born at Utrecht in 1591, was the youngest son and pupil of Crispin Van de Pass the elder. He resided about ten years in England, where he engraved several fine portraits, the earliest of which is dated 1613. On leaving this country he entered the service of the King of Denmark. He died at Copenhagen in or soon after 1644. He was employed by Nicholas Hilliard to engrave counters of the English Royal Family. Of his numerous prints, his portraits are the best, although he engraved several sacred subjects, frontispieces, and other plates for books. He sometimes marked his plates with the cipher P. The following are his most esteemed prints:

Queen Elizabeth; whole length.

James I. crowned, sitting in a chair.

The same, with a hat.

Charles I. when Prince Charles.

Anne, Queen of James I., on horseback, with a View of Windsor. 1617.

Prince Henry with a Lance.

Philip III., King of Spain.

Maria of Austria, his daughter, the intended bride of Charles I.

Another portrait of the same lady.

General Edward Cecil, son of the Earl of Exeter.

George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. Two portraits, one dated 1617, the other 1620.

Launcelot Andrews, Bishop of Ely. 1618.
 William Burton, Physician. 1620.
 Robert Carr, Earl of Somerset.
 Frances Howard, Countess of Somerset.
 Francis Manners, Earl of Rutland.
 James Hay, Lord Saley, afterwards Earl of Carlisle.
 Thomas, Earl of Arundel; after Mierevelt.
 Sir Walter Raleigh.
 John King, Bishop of London.
 Sir Thomas Smith, Ambassador to Russia.
 William, Earl of Pembroke; after Van Somer.
 Richard, Earl of Dorset.
 Archbishop Abbot, with a View of Lambeth.
 Robert Sidney, Viscount Lisle.
 Charles, Earl of Nottingham.
 Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke.
 Henry Wriothesly, Earl of Southampton.

 Count Gondomar, Spanish Ambassador to the English Court.
 Frederick Henry, Prince of Orange, inscribed Liberum Belgium.
 Large Head of Christian IV. of Denmark.
 Sir Thomas Overbury.
 Captain John Smith.
 Four whole Length Portraits of Dukes of Burgundy—
 John the Intrepid, Philip the Bold, Philip the Good, and Charles the Rash; etchings.
 The Holy Family.
 Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus.

VAN DE PASS, SIMON, the younger, was a son of Crispin van de Pass the younger. He resided at Copenhagen, probably with his uncle Simon. All that is known about him is that he engraved a portrait of Frederick III. of Denmark; an 'Ecce Home' (1639), and a 'Woman with three Children' (1643).

VAN DE PASS, WILLEM, was the second son of Crispin van de Pass the elder. He was born at Utrecht about the year 1590, and was also instructed by his father. It is probable that he came with the latter to England, and there resided the greater part of his life. The date of his death is not known, but if he engraved Cromwell's portrait, as Nagler states, it is probable that he lived till about 1660. His most esteemed works are his portraits, many of which are very scarce. He also engraved some devotional and other subjects. He sometimes marked his plates with the cipher

W. The following are his principal works:

James I. and his Family, inscribed Triumphus Jacobi Regis Augusteque ipsius probris.
 James I. with Henry, Prince of Wales. After the death of that prince the face was erased, and that of Charles his brother substituted in its place.
 Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester; oval, with the cipher.
 George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, on horseback, with shipping in the background.
 Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex, on horseback.
 Frances, Duchess of Richmond and Lenox; a very careful plate, inscribed Anno 1625. insculptum Gualiel. Passeo Londinum.
 Christian IV. of Denmark and Frederick of Holstein, in a group.
 George Chapman, the poet.
 Sir Jobu Haywood, W. Pass f.
 Sir Henry Rich; very fine.
 Darcy Wentworth. 1624.
 The King and Queen of Bohemia, with four of their children, inscribed Will Pass fecit. ad vivum figurator. 1621.
 The Palatine Family, in which the youngest child is playing with a rabbit; without the engraver's name.

VAN DE PERE, ANTON, a Fleming, flourished at Madrid about the middle of the 17th century. He painted pictures of two bishops for the Carthusians of Paular, and for the Carmelites and Hieronymites of the capital a number of sacred subjects, one of which bore his signature and the date 1659.

VAN DE VELDE, ADRIAEN, painter, the son of Willem Van de Velde the elder, was born at Amsterdam in 1635 or 1636. He was at first instructed by his father, showing a precocious talent for painting, but as his bent seemed rather towards landscape and figures than marine subjects, he was sent to Haarlem, where he entered the atelier of J. Wynants, and afterwards studied the figure under Philips Wouwerman. He painted genre and battle-pieces with success, but especially excelled in landscapes with animals, and was much employed by contemporary painters to insert figures in their pictures. Among those whom he thus assisted were Hobbema, Van der Heyden, Hakkert, Wynants, Verboom, and Moucheron. His works are numerous, taking into account their high finish and the shortness of the painter's life. They amount to about 187, but many have darkened through his use of inferior pigments. He died at Amsterdam, January, 21st, 1672. The following pictures by him may be named:

Amsterdam.	Rijks Museum.	The Ferry.

Adriaen Van de Velde was an etcher. Bartsch enumerates twenty-one plates by him, chiefly landscapes with cattle. Five are dated 1653, when Adriaen was only fourteen years old, ten are dated 1657, 1659, and six 1670. To these Immerzeel adds three landscapes with figures, and one plate of a cow lying in a field.

VAN DE VELDE, ESAIAS, a Dutch painter of 'conversations,' cavalry skirmishes, and especially winter landscapes with skaters, was born at Amsterdam, in what precise year is unknown, but probably not much before 1590. In what degree he was related to William Van de Velde the elder is another debatable point. Kramm suggests that they were father and son. Nothing, however, has come to light in confirmation of this hypothesis. The known facts of his life are very scanty. We find him established at Haarlem in 1610, and in the following year he there married Cateljne Maertens, a native of Ghent. In 1612 he was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at Haarlem, and in 1618 he was employed by the Prince of Orange at the Hague, where in 1628 his name was inscribed in the registers of the Painters' Guild. Two years later he was working in Leyden, but his burial is recorded to have taken place at the Hague, November 18th, 1630. Like Adriaen, he was often employed by landscape painters to insert figures in their pictures. With Avercamp, Dirk Hals, and Adriaen van der Venne, Esaias Van de Velde may be looked upon as the founder of Dutch genre painting. He was also an etcher. Works:

VAN DE VELDE, JAN. Much uncertainty prevails as to the identity of various painters of this name. One JAN VAN DE VELDE was painting still-life at Haarlem about the middle of the 17th century. There is an example of his work in the Brussels Museum, signed with his name in full and the date 1655. Another, of very fine quality, is in the National Gallery. It is also fully signed, and dated 1656. Another (?) JAN VAN DE VELDE, a painter of landscapes and cattle, and an engraver, was Vinder of the Guild of St. Luke at Haarlem in 1635. It has been suggested that he was the brother of Esaias, to one of whose children he stood sponsor in 1619. He engraved chiefly after M. Molyn and Adam Elzheimer. Nagler mentions a JAN VAN DE VELDE the younger, as a painter and draughtsman.

VAN DE VELDE, NICOLAS, an obscure Flemish painter, who worked at Ypres in the 17th century. The Eglise St. Bertin at Poperinghe has a 'Last Supper' by him, and Descamps speaks of a 'St. Martin' in the church of that saint at Ypres, but this picture has now disappeared.

VAN DE VELDE, PIETER (CHAMPAIGNE). See DE KEMPENEER, PIETER.

VAN DE VELDE, WILLEM, the elder, was born at Leyden in 1610, and in early life was a sailor. Before he was twenty years of age he had acquired a reputation as a painter of marine subjects in black and white, in imitation of drawings in Indian ink. His talents recommended him to the States of Holland, and a small vessel was put at his disposal to witness the sea-fights. King Charles II. invited him to England, where he arrived in 1675. He received a pension from Charles, which James II. continued until his death in 1693. He was buried in St. James's Church, Piccadilly, with the following inscription on his tombstone: "Mr. William van de Velde, senior, late painter of sea-fights to their Majesties King Charles II. and King James II., died in 1693." Many of the large sea-fights signed W. van de Velde are painted by the son, from designs by the father; the more coarsely executed are probably entirely by the former. Such are the twelve naval engagements, in the palace at Hampton Court. These are dated 1676 and 1682.

VAN DE VELDE, WILLEM, the younger, the son and pupil of Willem van de Velde, and the best known of the Dutch marine painters, was born at Amsterdam in 1633, and studied also under Simon de Vlieger. After gaining a certain reputation in Holland he went with his father to London; and in 1674 Charles II. granted him a salary of £100 for painting sea-fights for which his father made the drawings. The pension, like that of equal amount granted to his father, was continued by James II. Van de Velde died in London, April 6th, 1707, and was buried by his father in St. James's Church, Piccadilly. Three hundred and twenty-nine pictures by him are described in 'Smith's Catalogue raisonné.' The great majority of them are in English private collections. His drawings are astonishingly numerous. It is said that between 1778 and 1780 there were about eight thousand sold at public auction. It is also recorded that his execution was so rapid that he frequently filled a quire of paper with sketches in an evening. Many of his larger pictures represent actions between the English and Dutch fleets. On these he often wrote over the ships their names, and those of their commanders, and under his own vessel in front, "V. Velde's Gallijodt," or "Mijn Gallijodt," showing that he had been a spectator of the battle. His sketches are executed in black-lead; his more finished drawings with pencil and pen, shaded with Indian ink. Among his works are the following:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	The Four Days' Battle between the Dutch and English.
"	"	Bringing in the prizes from the Four Days' Battle.
"	"	The Cannon Shot ( very fine ).
"	"	The Y, before Amsterdam.

His son, CORNELIUS VAN DE VELDE, practised in London at the beginning of the 18th century as a copyist, and reproduced several of his father's works.

VAN DEN AVEELEN, (or AVELEN,) JAN, a Dutch engraver, was born about the middle of the 17th century, and resided at Leyden about the year 1696. He also lived much in Sweden. He died at Stockholm in 1727. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, and, among other plates, engraved the frontispiece for the nineteenth volume of the Thesaurus Antiq. Rom., published by Peter van der Aa in 1698. He also engraved views of Dutch country houses.

VAN DEN BERG, JAKOBUS EVERARDUS, a Dutch historical painter, born at Rotterdam in 1802, was first instructed by his father, GYSBERTUS JOHANNES, a miniature painter, (born 1769, died 1817,) and later by Herreyns, at Antwerp. He travelled in France and Italy, and was very successful in his genre. Among his best known pictures are: 'The Fair Maid of Perth,' Jan van Schaffelaar, Claudius Civilus. He died at the Hague, July 20, 1861.

VAN DEN BERG, MATHIAS, a Flemish painter, was born at Ypres in 1615. His father, according to Descamps, had the management of Rubens' estates in the neighbourhood of that place, and the boy was brought up in the great master's academy. He is only known by the excellent copies he left of some of the pictures of Rubens. Balkema says he died at Alkmaar in 1687; Brulliot, following Descamps, that he died at Ypres in 1647; and Zani places his death in 1685.

VAN DEN BERGEN, THIERRY or DIRCK, (or BERGHEN,) a painter of landscapes and cattle, was born at Haarlem about 1645. He was probably brought up under Adriaen Van de Velde, whose manner he imitated, and whose ablest disciple he became. He settled in London in 1673, where he painted for some time, but he died in his native country about 1689. He sometimes signed his name Berghen, as in a landscape in the Louvre, where there is also one signed D. V. Bergen, with the date 1688. The Berlin Museum, the galleries of Vienna and Dresden, the Amsterdam Gallery, and other collections in Holland and Germany, contain good specimens of his art. Not a few of his pictures are ascribed to Berchem and Adriaen Van de Velde.

VANDENBERGHE, CHARLES AUGUSTE, painter, the son of Augustinus Van den Berghe, was born at Beauvais, April 13, 1798. He entered the École des Beaux Arts, Paris, in 1817, and was the pupil of Girodet, Gros, and Guérin. He exhibited at the Salon from 1822 to 1853, winning a medal and the Legion of Honour. His subjects were various, but portraits predominated. The Ministry of the Interior, Paris, has a 'Holy Family' by him. He died in Paris, December 17, 1853.

VAN DEN BERGHE, AUGUSTINUS, an excellent historical and portrait painter, was born at Bruges in 1757, and studied under Gaeremyn and afterwards under Suvée in Paris. Returning to Bruges in 1772, he obtained the first prize at the Academy at Ghent for his picture of 'Œdipus.' In 1796 he returned to France, and settling at Beauvais, was appointed professor at the École Centrale. He afterwards opened a private academy at Beauvais, where he died about 1830. Others of his paintings are:

The Vision of St. Anthony. (In the church of Notre Dame at Bruges.)
St. Sebastian; after Suvée. (In the Bruges Hospital.)

VAN DEN BERGHE, PIETER, was a native of Amsterdam, where, as well as at Hamburg and Paris, he worked towards the end of the 17th century. He engraved in mezzotint after himself and others. Of his plates we may mention:

The Elephant and the Rhinoceros. 1686.
The Portrait of the Princess Friederike Amalie of Denmark.
St. Theresa; after G. D. Lar.

VAN DEN BOGAERDE, DONATUS, a Flemish painter of the 17th century, born in 1644. He became a monk at the Abbaye des Dunes at Bruges, and painted several large landscapes in the cloister of his monastery. In the Bruges Academy there is a wooded landscape by him.

VAN DEN BOS, GASPAR, a Dutch painter of sea-pieces, was born at Hoorn in 1634. His storms and calms, with shipping, are not without merit. He died young in 1666.

VAN DEN BOSCH, JAKOB, born at Amsterdam in 1636, painted battle-pieces, and died in 1676.

VAN DEN BOSCH, LODIEWYK, a flower painter mentioned by Van Mander, who was active early in the 16th century.

VAN DEN BOSSCHE, BALTHASAR, (or VAN DEN BOSCH,) was born at Antwerp in 1681. His only instruction was from an obscure artist, one Gerard Thomas, whom he soon surpassed. He is said to have spent three years in France, working in Paris, Douai, and Nantes. He became a master in the Guild of St. Luke in 1696. He excelled in painting the interiors of saloons, galleries, painters' and sculptors' studios. His pictures were extremely popular, and fetched large prices. He also painted small portraits with success; the Duke of Marlborough, when he was at Antwerp, had his picture painted by him. He represented the duke on horseback; and in order that the work might be more complete, engaged Peter van Bloemen to paint the horse. The Wallraf Museum at Cologne has two 'Studios' by him, and an excellent portrait-group of about forty persons is in the Antwerp Museum. He died in 1715.

VAN DEN BOSSCHE, DOMENICUS, painter, was born at Granmont in 1808. He painted portraits and history, and became a professor at the Ghent Academy. He died at Ghent in 1860.

VAN DEN BRANDEN, JAN, painter, was born at the Hague towards the middle of the 17th century. He visited England in 1690, and died there a few years later. He painted portraits and genre.

VAN DEN BROECK, BARBARA, the daughter of Crispin van den Broeck, was born at Antwerp in 1560, and was taught drawing by her father. From the style of her engraving it is thought she was instructed in that art in the school of Collaert, who engraved some plates from her father's designs. She worked entirely with the burin, and in some of her plates, particularly in that of the 'Last Judgment,' she imitated with success the style of Martin Rota. We have the following engravings by her:

The Holy Family, with Angels; marked with the cipher of her Father, and signed B. filia sc. Samson and Delilah; Crispin. inv.; B. fecit.
The Last Judgment; Barbara filia Crispini sc.; H. Hond. eac.

Maudonia prostrating herself before Scipio; Barbara fec.
Venus and Adonis; B. fil. fec.

VAN DEN BROECK, CRISPIN, (or CRISPIAEN,) a Flemish painter, engraver, and architect, was born at Mechlin about the year 1530. He was a disciple of Frans Floris, and painted history with some skill. In 1555 he was received into the Antwerp Guild of St. Luke, and became a citizen in 1559. An 'Adoration of the Magi' by him is in the Vienna Gallery. To him also is now given the 'Last Judgment,' signed Crispian f., and dated in 1571, in the Museum at Antwerp. He also distinguished himself as an architect. He died in 1601. Van den Broeck engraved both on wood and on copper, and marked his plates with a cipher composed of the letters C V and B, thus

The following may be named:

COPPER-PLATES,

The Creation; a series of seven plates, with Latin inscriptions.

Another set of nine Scriptural scenes, beginning with an 'Adam and Eve,' and ending with a 'Tower of Babel.'

Nineteen scenes from the Life of the Virgin. The Crucifixion; with a border in which the Instruments of the Passion are introduced.

WOODCUTS.

The Annunciation (circular).

The Visitation (do.).

The Adoration of the Shepherds (do.).

The Adoration of the Magi (do.).

The Circumcision (do.).

VAN DEN BROECK, ELIAS, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp about 1657. He was probably a scholar of Ab. Mignon, but De Heem and Ernst Stuven have also been suggested as his masters. He painted flowers and fruit with tolerable success. The Vienna Gallery has three works by him, and there are four in the Schwerin Gallery. He died at Amsterdam in 1708.

VAN DEN BROECK, VEIT. See UIJTENBROUCK.

VAN DEN DIJCK, DANIEL, (or VAN DEN DYCK,) was born, according to Brulliot, in France, but Boschini and others say he was a native of Flanders. He was an historical painter, and also an etcher. He went to Venice, and in 1658 became inspector of the gallery of the Duke of Mantua. It is said that he was a successful painter of historical compositions and portraits, in which he was assisted by his wife LUCRETIA, a daughter of Nicolas Renier Mabuse, whom he married at Venice. Van den Dijck is said to have died in 1729. Robert-Dumesnil has described five etchings by him, all of which have his name. Three of them, marked below with a star, have sometimes been attributed to Anthony Van Dyck.

* Susannah and the Elders; Dani. Vanden Dyck in. et fecit.

* The Virgin and Child; DV. Dyck in et fecit
St. Catharine; D.V. Dyck I.
The Dedication of Æneas.

VAN DEN EECKHOUT, ANTONIE, a Flemish painter of flowers and fruit, was born at Bruges about 1651. He accompanied his relation, L. de Deyster, to Italy, and remained there several years. He afterwards went to Lisbon, where he met with encouragement, and married a lady of fortune. After this he only painted, perhaps, for his amusement. He is said to have been assassinated in 1695, when driving in his coach.

VAN DEN EECKHOUT, GERBRAND, (or VAN DEN ECKHOUT,) was born at Amsterdam in 1621, and was in the school of Rembrandt from about 1635 to 1640. He was a favourite pupil, and lived in close intimacy with Rembrandt even after he had left his house. He excelled in small Biblical subjects, painted in close imitation of his master. Good examples are the 'Tobit,' in the Brunswick Gallery, and a 'Raising of Jairus's Daughter,' in the Berlin Museum, if indeed the latter be his. Herr Bode prefers to give it to Bernard Fabritius. Late in life Eeckhout took to painting large pictures, which are greatly inferior to his small works. He died at Amsterdam in 1674. Other works:

Amsterdam.	R. Mus.	The Woman taken in Adultery.
"	Gallery.	Huntsman Resting.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	Sophonisba taking the Poison.
"	"	Portrait of an old Man.
"	"	And five others.
Cassel.	"	The Circumcision.
Dresden.	"	Simeon in the Temple.
Frankfort.	Stüdel Inst.	Portrait of Dapper, the Dutch Historian. 1669.
London.	Stafford Ho.	Soldiers gambling.
"	Nat. Gallery.	(?) Christ blessing the Children. (Formerly in the Suermondt Collection, and looked upon as a masterpiece by Rembrandt himself.)
Luton House.		Merry Life in the Guard-house (in Terborch's style).
Munich.	Pinakothek.	Christ among the Doctors.
Paris.	Louvre.	Hannah delivering Samuel to the High Priest.
Pommersfeld.	Gallery.	The Witch of Endor raising Samuel.
"	"	Six Persons over a Game of Draughts.
Schleissheim.	"	Ahigail before David.

There are a few etchings by Gerbrand Van den Eeckhout, among them:

A Bust of a young Man, in an Oriental Dress; marked G. V. D. 1646.

The Portrait of Cornelius van Tromp.

VAN DEN HECKE, JOHAN, born at Quaremonde, near Oudenarde, about 1625, was a painter of landscapes, sea-pieces, still-life, and portraits. He lived for many years in Rome, where he practised with success. He returned eventually to his own country, settled at Antwerp, and died there about 1669. In the Madrid Gallery there are three marine pictures by him.

VAN DEN HECKEN, ABRAHAM, a painter of the Dutch school, born at Antwerp. In 1635 he was at Amsterdam, and there married the sister of the painter Gerard Lundens. From 1636 to 1656 he worked alternately at the Hague and at Amsterdam. He painted interiors, peasant assemblies, and portraits. The Amsterdam Museum has a signed example of his work.

VAN DEN HEUVELE, ANTONIE, (called DON ANTONIO,) a scholar of Gaspar de Crayer, was born at Ghent in 1600. He was for some years in Italy. On his return to Ghent he painted many historical pictures and portraits, which are in the churches and private collections of Ghent, and other Belgian cities.

VAN DEN HOECKE, JAN, (or VAN HOECK,) painter, born at Antwerp in 1611, was the son of KASPAR VAN DEN HOECK, an obscure painter. Jan was probably a pupil of Rubens, though there is no direct evidence on this point. He was, at any rate, one of the most successful imitators of the master. His chief merit lies in the warm harmony of his colour. He visited Italy and Germany, and in both countries was well received, and patronized by the most influential persons of the day. The Archduke Leopold made him his painter in ordinary. In 1647 he returned to the Netherlands, in the suite of the archduke, and died at Antwerp in 1651. In the Vienna Gallery there are two portraits of the Archduke Leopold William by him, and one of Philip IV. of Spain; in the Rotterdam Museum a 'Roman Charity,' and other pictures at Antwerp, Bruges, Louvain, and Stockholm.

VAN DEN HOVE, FREDERIK HENDRIK, a Dutch engraver, was born at Haarlem about 1630. The circumstances of his life are little known, but he resided chiefly in London, where he was employed by the booksellers. His prints are dated from 1648 to 1692, and consist chiefly of portraits. He also engraved some plates for the 'Historia Plantarum' of Robert Morison, and several of the plates for Quarles' 'Emblems.' He died after 1715. We have, among others, the following portraits by him:

- James II.
- William III. on Horseback. 1692. | Mary II.
- William and Mary Enthroned.
- Thomas Sutton, founder of the Charter-house.
- Thomas Butler, Earl of Ossory.
- Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; prefixed to his Life.
- Sir Matthew Hale; prefixed to his 'Origin of Mankind.'
- Samuel Speed, Poet. | Sir Thomas Browne, M.D.
- Hansard Knollis, V.D.M. | John Hopkins, Poet.
- Sir Henry Morgan, Governor of Jamaica.
- Joseph Moxon, Mathematician.
- John Taylor, Mathematician.
- William Winstanley, Biographer.

VAN DEN KERCKHOVE, JOSEPH, was born at Bruges in 1670, and studied at Antwerp under Jan Erasmus Quellin. Under that master his progress was rapid, and on leaving school he set out intending to travel through France to Italy, but meeting with encouragement in Paris, he lived there some years, and abandoned his project of visiting Italy. On his return to Bruges he united with Duvenede in founding an academy, of which he became first director. He was also employed in a series of fifteen pictures from the Life of our Saviour, for the church of the Dominicans at Bruges. The collegiate church of St. Saviour has four 'Works of Mercy' by him, and a fine Resurrection; a 'St. Catharine of Siena' is in the Bruges Academy. At Ostend he painted a 'Feast of the Gods,' on the ceiling of the town-house. He also painted portraits. He died at Bruges in 1724.

VAN DEN KERKHOVE, FREDERIK, the son of Jan van den Kerkhove, a living Belgian painter, showed an extraordinary bent towards art from very early years. He was born in 1862, painted a number of landscapes which were exhibited in various European capitals, and died in 1873. His works were rude in design, but full of poetry.

VAN DEN QUEBOORN, CRISPIN, (or VAN QUEBOREN,) a Dutch engraver, was born at the Hague about 1600. He mainly confined himself to engraving portraits, which he did with considerable skill. He also executed a part of the plates for Thibault's 'Académie de l'Épée,' published at Antwerp in 1628; and a print after Hendrik van Balen's 'Nativity.' The date of his death is unknown. We have, among others, the following portraits by him:

- Queen Elizabeth. 1625.
- Charles I. 1626.
- William I., Prince of Orange; after Visscher.
- Mary, daughter of Charles I., consort of the Prince of Orange.
- Friedrich Wilhelm, Elector of Brandenburg, and his Consort Luise of Orange; after Honthorst.
- Court Heinrich Math. von Thurn-Valsassina; from his own design.
- Friedrich V., Elector Palatine.
- Elizabeth, daughter of James I., his consort.
- Juliana, Princess of Hesse.
- Frederick Henry, Prince of Nassau. 1630.

VAN DEN RIETHOORN, JAN, (or RITHOORN,) a Dutch painter of little note, was born at Haarlem early in the 17th century. He was a pupil of Cornelis Visscher, and painted portraits and genre. He joined the Guild at Haarlem in 1646, and died in the same city in 1669.

VAN DEN TEMPEL, ABRAHAM, was born at Leeuwarden in 1622 or 1623, and after a period of study with his father, Lambert, became the scholar of Joris van Schooten at Leyden. He remained at Leyden until 1660, after which he settled at Amsterdam. He painted small pictures of historical subjects, allegories, conversations, and portraits. His works are very highly finished, and he has the credit of having been master to Frans Mieris the elder, Karel de Moor, Ary de Vois, and Michiel van Musscher. In portraiture he followed the styles of Van der Helst, and acquired especial repute. He died at Amsterdam May 13, 1672. Three allegories by him are in the Cloth Hall at Leyden, and some excellent portraits in the Berlin and Rotterdam Museums. The following may also be named:

- Amsterdam. R. Mus. Portrait of Machteld Bas, widow of Abraham Visscher.
- " " Portrait of Abraham Visscher.
- " " Portrait of a Woman.
- Leyden. Orphanage. Portraits of the Regents.

VAN DEN WIJNGAERDE, ANTHONIE, who lived in the middle of the 16th century, is known as the draughtsman of a series of thirty-two views of Spanish cities, which were made for Plantin, the celebrated printer of Antwerp. These, with a number of topographical drawings of London and its neighbourhood, Rome, and various cities of the Netherlands, are now in the South Kensington Museum. A collection of views of English cities by him is in the Bodleian Library. Some of his drawings bear his signature and the date 1558, whence it has been conjectured that he was a Fleming attached to the suite of Philip II., and that he accompanied that prince on his travels.

VAN DEN WIJNGAERDE, FRANS, a Flemish draughtsman, etcher, and print publisher, was born at Antwerp about the year 1612. He died about 1660. We have by him several etchings after Rubens and others, which possess great merit, though the drawing is frequently incorrect. Among them are the following:

Samson killing the Lion; after Rubens.

Christ appearing to Mary Magdalene; after the same.

The Nuptials of Peleus and Thetis; after the same.

A Bacchanal, in which Bacchus is represented with a Cup, into which a Bacchante is pressing the juice of the Grape; after the same.

Brawling Soldiers; after the same.

A dead Christ, supported by the Marys; after Van Dyck.

Achilles discovered amidst the Daughters of Lycomedes; after the same.

Two Women with a Light; after Callot.

The Return from Egypt; after J. Thomas.

Flemish Peasants regaling at the Door of an Alehouse; after Teniers.

The Temptation of St. Anthony; after the same.

Portrait of Lucas Vosterman; after Livius.

St. Jerome; after Vanni.

VAN DER AA, HILDEBRAND, a Dutch engraver, who flourished from about 1692 to 1728, was brother to Pieter Van der Aa, the celebrated publisher of Leyden, by whom he was employed to engrave frontispieces, portraits, and other plates for books. They are executed with the graver in a heavy style, and the drawing is incorrect. In the collection entitled 'Principum et illustrium Virorum Imagines,' there is a portrait by Van der Aa, inscribed Otho, Archiep. et Vice-Comes Mediolan. H. v. Aa del. et sculpsit. He engraved the title for the 'Index Batavicus,' by Adriaan Pars, printed at Leyden in 1701.

VAN DER AA, THIERRY, (or DIERICK,) a Dutch painter, born at the Hague in 1731, was a disciple of Johann Heinrich Keller; and after quitting this master he worked in concert with Gerrit Mets, as a painter of coach panels. His skill was shown chiefly in flowers, fruit, and birds. He practised for a time in Paris, and died in 1809.

VAN DER ASSELT, JAN, from 1364 to 1380 held the post of painter to Luis de Male, Count of Flanders, for whom he executed a series of portraits of the Princes of the House of Flanders, on the walls of a chapel in Notre Dame, at Courtrai. Of these portraits the faces have disappeared, and those parts which remain do not testify much to the author's ability as an artist. He was employed a few years later by Philip the Hardy.

VAN DER AST, BALTHASAR, (or BARTHOLOMÆUS,) flourished at Utrecht in the early part of the 17th century, and was received into the guild of St. Luke in 1619 as Baltus Van der Asch. He painted small pictures of flowers and fruit, in the manner of Brueghel, introducing insects, shells, drops of water, and other such accessories. Unfortunately his pictures are defective in arrangement and harmony, though each object by itself is well done. In 1629 he presented to the Hospital of St. Job, at Utrecht, a picture of fruit. Works:

Berlin. . . . . Museum. Three pictures of still-life.
Dresden. . . . . Gallery. Shells, apricots, and a branch of currants.

VAN DER BANCK, JOHAN, portrait painter, and son of Pieter Van der Banck, was born in England about 1694. He lived a considerable time in London, where he painted numerous portraits, some of distinguished persons. He showed much facility, but often painted with insufficient care. He painted the 'Sir Isaac Newton,' in the rooms of the Royal Society, and has left at Hampton Court a group of figures. He had some power of comedy, and, in 1735, designed the illustrations to Lord Carteret's translation of 'Don Quixote.' He was the leader of the party which seceded from Sir James Thornhill's Academy, and himself established a rival school, which, however, was not long lived. He died in London in 1739.

VAN DER BANCK, PIETER, an engraver, of Dutch extraction, was born in Paris in 1649. He was a scholar of François de Poilly, under whom he became an excellent artist. About the year 1674 he came to England with Henri Gascar, the painter, and engraved the portraits of many eminent persons of his time. His chief merit lies in the neatness and finish of his execution. He engraved a set of heads for Kennet's History of England, from the designs of Lutterel. The time required for the execution of his plates, which were unusually large for their class, was out of all proportion to the prices he received. He was reduced to poverty, and became dependent on his brother-in-law, one Forester, in whose house at Bradfield, Hertfordshire, he died in 1697. His widow sold his plates to Brown, the printseller, who made considerable sums by them. The following are his more interesting prints:

Archbishop Tillotson; after Mrs. Beale; the face was taken out and re-engraved by R. White.

Thomas Lamplugh, Archbishop of York.

Archbishop Tenison; after the same. 1695.

John Smith, writing-master; after Faithorne.

Charles II.; after Gascar. 1675 and 1677. Two plates.

James II., large plate; after Kneller.

Mary, his Queen; after the same.

William III.; after the same.

Queen Mary II.; after the same.

William, Lord Russell; after the same.

Sir William Temple; after Lely. 1679.

Lady Litchfield; after Verelst.

The same; after Wissing.

William III.; after the same.

Queen Mary II.; after the same.

The Princess Anne. | Prince George of Denmark.

Thomas, Earl of Ossory.

Alexander, Earl of Moray. 1686.

George, Viscount Tarbat. 1692.

James, Duke of Monmouth.

Richard, Lord Maitland. 1683.

Sir George Mackenzie. | Archibald, Earl of Argyle.

Frederick, Duke of Schomberg.

Robert, Earl of Yarmouth.

John, Earl of Strathnaver, or Earl of Sutherland.

William, Duke of Queensberry.

George, Lord Dartmouth. | Sir Thomas Allen.

James, Earl of Perth. 1683.

George Walker, who defended Londonderry

Thomas Dalziel. | John Locke.

Edmund Waller. Æt. 23 and Æt. 70. Two plates.

John Cotton Bruce.

The Virgin and Child, with St. Elizabeth and St. John;

after S. Bourdon.

Christ praying on the Mountain; after the same.

The Naval Triumph of Charles II. from a ceiling at Windsor Castle, by Verrio, in two sheets.

Mercury in the Air, bearing the portrait of Charles II.,

from the ceiling at Windsor Castle; after the same.

VAN DER BAREN, JAN ANTON, a painter of flowers, landscapes, &c., who flourished in the middle of the 17th century. He seems to have founded his style upon that of Zeghers. He was employed at Brussels by the Archduke Leopold William, whom he accompanied to Vienna in 1656. He succeeded Teniers in the curatorship of that prince's collections. In the Vienna Gallery there are two pictures by him: both female portraits surrounded by flowers.

VAN DER BAREN, JOSSE, painter, flourished at Louvain in 1604. He is supposed to have been a pupil of Michael Coxie. In the church of St. Pierre, Louvain, there is a triptych by him, a 'Decapitation of St. Dorothea'; and in St. Gertrude's two panels from broken-up altar-pieces. He also made the drawings for the views of Louvain and Héverlé, engraved in the 'Lovanium' (1604).

VAN DER BENT, JOHANNES, a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1650. He was first instructed by Philips Wouwerman, on whose death he became a scholar of Adriaen van de Velde. His style of painting, however, bears a closer resemblance to that of Nicolaas Berchem than to that of either of his masters; and his works are often mistaken for Berchem's. Besides landscapes, one of which is in the Rotterdam Museum, he painted battles and animal pieces. His pictures are frequently met with in English collections.

VB, JB

He died in 1690.

VAN DER BERG, NICOLAAS, a Flemish engraver, is supposed to have been a native of Antwerp. He etched some plates after Rubens, which he marked N. V. D. Berg; among them are:

Portrait of Justus Lipsius.

Portrait of a devout person, with a crucifix; half length.

VAN DER BERGE, P., an obscure Dutch engraver, produced a set of plates for a folio volume of prints, entitled 'Theatrum Hispaniæ,' or views of the towns, palaces, &c. of Spain, published at Amsterdam. He also engraved some portraits, including one of a Jewish Rabbi, with a Hebrew inscription, to which is appended P. V. D. Berge ad vivum del. et fec.; also the 'Triumph of Galatea,' after A. Coyvel.

VAN DER BILT, JACQUES, (or, as he usually called himself, BILTIUS,) a native of the Netherlands, was living at the Hague in 1651; he went to Amsterdam in 1661, and to Antwerp in 1671, where he was made a member of the Guild in the following year. He was still living in 1678. A 'Cock-fight' by him is in the Antwerp Museum, and a 'Dead Game' in the Copenhagen Gallery. He excelled in painting game, fowling-pieces, pouches, nets, and other impedimenta of the sportsman. These objects he was fond of representing on a white ground, as if they were attached to the wall; they are often painted with such fidelity as almost to produce illusion.

VAN DER BORCHT, HENDRIK, the elder, painter and engraver, was born at Brussels in 1583. The troubles in the Low Countries obliged his family to move into Germany when he was very young, and they settled at Frankfort, where he was placed under one of the Valkenborchs. The Earl of Arundel, passing through Frankfort, had dealings with Van der Borcht, and became the patron of his son. Van der Borcht the elder painted flowers and fruit. Towards the latter part of his life he resided at Antwerp, where he died in 1660. We have the following etchings by this artist:

The Virgin and Infant Jesus; after Parmigiano. 1637.
The dead Christ, supported by Joseph of Arimathea, from a drawing by Parmigiano after Raphael. 1645.
Abraham at Table with the Angels; after L. Carracci.
The Infant Jesus embracing St. John, from Guido's print; after Agost. Carracci.

Apollo and Cupid; after Perino del Vaga; oval.

Twenty-two plates of the Entry of Frederick, Elector Palatine, with Elizabeth, Princess Royal of England, his Consort, into Frankenthal; dated 1613.

VAN DER BORCHT, HENDRIK, the younger, was born at Frankfort about 1610. He was educated as a painter, but was employed as draughtsman and engraver by the Earl of Arundel, by whom he was sent to Italy. After Lord Arundel's death, he entered the service of Charles II., then Prince of Wales, but afterwards retired to Antwerp, where he died at a very advanced age. Hollar engraved the portraits of both the elder and the younger Hendrik Van der Borcht, the former from a painting by the latter.

VAN DER BORCHT, PIETER, the elder, a Flemish landscape painter and engraver, was born at Brussels about the year 1540. His work as a painter was of no great merit, but he applied himself with industry at least to engraving, and has left a great number of somewhat rough plates. Among them are:

A set of Landscapes, with subjects from the Old and New Testament.

Rural Enjoyments; Cornelis van Tienen exc.

The Feast of the Company of Archers; same inscription

A Country Wedding; fecit Petrus van der Borcht, 1560.

A Landscape, with Hagar and Ishmael; dated 1586.

A set of 178 Plates for the 'Metamorphoses' of Ovid, published at Antwerp; Theodore Galle exc.

VAN DER BORCHT, PIETER, the younger, received the freedom of Antwerp in 1597. Together with one PAUL VAN DER BORCHT, he is supposed to have been of the same family as Pieter the elder. Pieter the younger and Paul worked chiefly at Mechlin.

VAN DER BRUGGEN, JAN, a Flemish engraver, was born at Brussels in 1649. After engraving some plates in Holland and Vienna, he settled in Paris, and followed the business of a printseller. He scraped several plates in mezzotint; they are chiefly portraits and drolleries, after Teniers, Brouwer, and Ostade. He marked his plates with his name, or with the cipher VB. The following are the best:

Portrait of himself; after Largillière.

Soldiers in a Tavern, drinking and playing Cards; after Teniers.

The Children of Teniers playing with Soap-bubbles; after the same.

The Peasant War; after the same.

An old Peasant, and a Girl playing on the Flute; after the same.

A Man drinking and a Woman smoking; after the same.

Portrait of A. van Dyck; se ipse pinx.

Portrait of Louis XIV. 1681.

Portrait of Johann August Uijtenbogaart; after Rembrandt.

The Gold Weigher; after the same.

An old Woman weighing Gold; J. V. Brug. f.

Man holding a Goblet.

Man leaning on a Table, and a Woman.

Man sitting on the Trunk of a Tree, lighting his Pipe.

Cupid and Psyche.

A Skull; Memento mori.

VAN DER BRUGHEN, HANS or LOUIS, a French painter of miniatures, was born in Paris in 1615; died in the same city, April 5th, 1658. He was a member of the Academy of Painting in 1648, but details of his life are wanting.

VAN DER BURCH, AELBERT, was a portrait painter, born at Delft in 1672. He was a scholar of Verkolje, and of Adriaan van der Werff.

VANDERBURCH, JACQUES ANDRÉ EDOUARD, painter, son of one Dominique Vanderburch of Cambrai, was born at Montpellier, Hérault, December 1st, 1756. He studied in Paris and Italy. In 1791 he began to exhibit landscapes at the Salon. In 1801 he won the Prix d'Encouragement with a landscape with animals and shepherds. Some religious pictures by him are in the Church of St. Maurice, at Lille; and there are other examples of his art in the Musées of that town, of Lisieux, and of Montpellier. Vanderburch died at the Sorbonne, Paris, in August, 1803.

VANDERBURCH, JACQUES HIPPOLYTE, landscape painter and draughtsman, was born in Paris in 1796. He was a pupil of his father, J. André Vanderburch, and also studied under David, Guérin, and Mulard. His works first appeared at the Salon in 1824. He became draughtsman to the Museum of Natural History in Paris, and also practised in lithography. Much of his attention was devoted to the theory of art, and he wrote 'Méthode Nouvelle de Peinture à l'Aquarelle' (1835), and 'Essais sur le Paysage à l'Huile' (1839). He died in Paris, October 20, 1854. There is a 'View on the Lake of Geneva' by him in the Marseilles Museum.

VAN DER BURG, ADRIAAN, (or VANDERBURG,) was born at Dordrecht in or about 1693, and was a scholar of Arnold Houbraken, whom he accompanied to Amsterdam. He became a good painter of portraits and conversation pieces. He produced some cabinet pictures in the style of his master, and also attempted to imitate Mieris and Metsu. He died in 1733. His best picture is a portrait group of seventeen directors of the Dordrecht Mint.

VAN DER BURG, THIERRY, (or DIRCK,) was born at Utrecht in 1723. He painted landscapes with cattle, views of villages, and country mansions. He died in 1773.

VAN DER BURGH, HENDRIK, a Dutch painter, born at the Hague in 1769. He died there September 15th, 1858. In the Amsterdam Museum there is a 'Milking Cows' by him.

VAN DER BURGH, HENDRIK ADAM, an obscure Dutch painter, born at the Hague in 1798. 'Milking Time' by him is in the Amsterdam Museum.

VAN DER BURGH, R——, an obscure Dutch painter of still-life, who was working towards the close of the 17th century. The Amsterdam Museum has a study of fish by him.

VAN DER BURGT, N., an obscure fruit and flower painter, who lived about the middle of the 18th century. It is said that he copied some of Luca Giordano's pictures.

VAN DER CABEL. See VAN DER KABEL.

VAN DER CAM, F., an obscure Dutch engraver, who flourished about the year 1750. He scraped a few plates of Scriptural subjects.

VAN DER CAPELLE, JAN, (or VAN DE KAPPELLE,) painter and etcher, was born at Amsterdam about 1630. He received the freedom of that city in 1653, and the dates on his pictures range from 1650 to 1680. He painted river scenes and sea-pieces with great delicacy, also landscapes with winter effects. In spite of the excellence of his work, none of the Dutch writers notice either him or his pictures. Amongst his best works may be mentioned, 'Fishing Boats,' in the Rotterdam Museum; a 'River Scene with Shipping,' dated 1650, in the Museum at Amsterdam; a 'View on the Scheldt near Bats,' in the Arenberg Gallery; a 'Beach with Shipping,' in the Vienna Gallery; a 'Sea-piece,' in the Berlin Museum; a 'River Scene' at Bridgewater House, and five pictures in the National Gallery, London. Of late years Van der Capelle has become fashionable, and his pictures now fetch considerable prices. Two etchings by him are known; one, in the Galerie d'Estampes, Paris, is marked J. v. Capel, pinx.

VAN DER CROOST, ANTHONIE JANSZ, (or CROOS,) a Dutchman of the 17th century, who won a certain reputation in his time as a painter of town views. In 1647 he was received into the Guild of St. Luke at the Hague, and practised in that city, where he died at an advanced age about the year 1662. He was one of the foundation members of the Pictura Society at the Hague, and imitated Jan v. Goyen, whose pupil he may have been. In the Amsterdam Museum there is a view of the Castle of Egmont, near Alkmaar, by him.

VAN DER CROOST, JAKOB, (or CROOS,) painter, was the son of Anthony van der Croost. He painted landscapes and marine pieces. Pictures by him, dated 1643 and 1667, are extant. The details of his life are unknown. The Stadthuis at the Hague has a picture by him.

VAN DER DOES, AART, engraver, was born at the Hague in 1610. He has left several portraits and a few other subjects, executed with the burin in the style of Paul Pontius, of whom probably he was a pupil. He engraved several of the plates for 'Portraits des Hommes illustres du 17<sup>me</sup> Siècle,' published at Amsterdam, some of which are dated 1649. The following plates may be named:

Ferdinand, Cardinal-Infant of Spain, Governor of the Low Countries, on Horseback; in the background is the Battle of Nördlingen; after A. van Diepenbeek.
Gerard Coch, Senator of Bremen; after A. van Halle.
George Wagner, Quæstor of Eslingen, Plenipotentiary at the peace of Onsburg; after the same.
The Marquis of Castello Rodrigo; after Rubens.
The Magdalene; after Van Dyck.
A Miracle wrought by St. Francis; after A. van Diepenbeek.
The Virgin and Child; after Erasmus Quellin.
The Holy Family; after the same.

VAN DER DOES, JAKOB, the elder, was born at Amsterdam in 1623. After being instructed for some time by Nicolaas Moyaert, he visited Paris, when he was twenty-one years of age, and afterwards proceeded to Italy. He made drawings of views in the vicinity of Rome, and the work of Peter van Laer being then in great favour in Italy, he adopted the style of that master, and painted similar subjects. After passing some years at Rome, he returned to Holland. He died at the Hague in 1673. Van der Does is said to have been a morose, melancholy individual. His pictures have darkened very much. We have by him several small etchings of landscapes with cattle. They are free and masterly. His best pictures are the following:

Cassel.	Gallery.	Landscape with Animals.
Copenhagen.	"	Sheep at pasture on a Hill.
"	"	Sheep and Goats in an Italian Landscape.
"	"	Sheep under Oak-trees.

Vienna. Gallery. Landscape with Figures and Cattle.
 " " Italian Landscape.

VAN DER DOES, JAKOB, the younger, second son of the elder painter of the name, was born at Amsterdam in 1654. After receiving instruction from his father and Karel du Jardin in landscape, and being also for a time under Caspar Netscher, he applied himself to historical painting under Gerard de Lairesse, in which he made great progress, and had produced some pictures which promised much, when he was overtaken by death while still very young.

VAN DER DOES, SIMON, the son of Jakob van der Does the elder, was born at Amsterdam in 1653, and was instructed in art by Adriaan van de Velde. His pictures, like those of the elder Van der Does, usually represent Italian landscapes, with figures and cattle, painted in a clearer and more agreeable tone than those of his father; he also painted small portraits and domestic subjects, in the style of Caspar Netscher. He is said by Houbraken to have visited England, where he did not remain longer than a year; he worked also at Brussels and Antwerp, and finally settled at the Hague. He died in 1717. Simon van der Does etched a few plates of landscapes with cattle. Pictures by him are in the galleries of Amsterdam, Copenhagen, the Hague, and Frankfort, and in the Vienna Academy.

VAN DER DONCKT, JOSEPH, a Flemish painter, born at Alost in 1757. He learnt the rudiments of art from J. de Rycke, and afterwards studied under Suvée and Gaeremyn at the Bruges Academy. In his youth he was intended for a Jesuit, but on the suppression of the order, was sent to Marseilles into a house of business, and soon abandoned commerce for painting. He visited Paris and Italy, and did not finally settle in his native city till 1791. He distinguished himself as a painter of portraits, especially in pastel. He died in 1821. The Bruges Academy has several portraits by him.

VAN DER DORT, ABRAHAM, modeller, earns a place in this dictionary by having acquired at least some proficiency in painting, for a portrait of the King of Denmark, by him, was in the collection of Charles I. He was born in Holland, was employed by the Emperor Rudolph, and afterwards came to England, where he was in the service successively of Prince Henry and of Charles I. He was keeper of the king's pictures, and was appointed designer to the mint in 1628. Walpole mentions a document in which he is recommended as a husband, by the king himself, to one Louisa Cole. He received other favours from Charles, and compiled the still extant catalogues of the Royal Collections of pictures, medals, and other works of art. It is said that he mislaid a miniature by Gibson, which had been given into his safe keeping by the king, and that, when it could not be found, he hanged himself in despair, the miniature being afterwards discovered and restored by his executors.

VAN DER EIJDEN, JAN, (or JEREMIAS,) portrait painter, was born at Brussels, but came to reside in London, where he was employed by Lely to paint draperies. After the death of that artist he was patronized by several of the nobility. He afterwards settled in Northamptonshire, where, according to Walpole, he died about 1697. The date of his death has also been given as 1687, and his name as VAN DER HEYDEN.

VAN DER EIJK, ABRAHAM, (or VAN DER EYK,) was a contemporary of Willem Miris, and painted somewhat in the manner of that master.

VAN DER ELST, PIETER. See VERELST.

VAN DER EYDEN, JOHN. See VAN DER EIJDEN.

VAN DER FAES, PIETER, better known as Sir Peter Lely, was born in 1618, at Soest in Westphalia, where his father (a captain of infantry, who had changed his name from Van der Faes to Lely) was in garrison. He studied under Pieter Franz de Grebber at Haarlem for about two years. On the death of Van Dyck in 1640 he determined to visit England, where he arrived the following year. He first painted landscapes with historical figures; but finding that portrait painting was more encouraged here than any other branch of art, he devoted himself to it, imitating the style of Van Dyck. At the marriage of the Prince of Orange with the Princess Mary in 1643, he was presented to Charles I., and painted his portrait and those of William and the Princess. He remained in England during the Commonwealth, and painted the portrait of Cromwell. At the Restoration, Charles II. appointed him his principal painter, and made him a baronet, 1679-80. From 1662 to his death he lived in the Piazza, Covent Garden. He was seized with apoplexy while painting the portrait of the Duchess of Somerset. He died in 1680, and was buried by torchlight in the church of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, where his bust by Grinling Gibbons was destroyed by fire in 1795. Lely's collections of works of art and his other effects were sold after his death, and produced the very large sum for the time of £26,000. His will, in which he bequeathes fifty pounds towards the building of St. Paul's, was printed for the Camden Society in 1863. The number of his portraits in private hands is very great. The following are among the more remarkable:

Dublin. Nat. Gallery. James, First Duke of Ormonde. Portrait of a Girl.

Greenwich Hos- " Great } The Flagmen: Twelve portraits pital. Hall. } painted for the Duke of York
 (James II.). They are:

VAN DER GOES, HUGO, was born at Ghent (?) about the year 1405. He is described by Van Mander as a painter of Bruges and pupil of the Van Eycks, statements which are probable enough, but of which we have no positive evidence. His earliest works were the distempered canvases with which the churches and palaces of Bruges and other lowland towns were decorated instead of frescoes, which would not stand the climate. He also made cartoons for glaziers. Vasari calls Van der Goes "Hugo of Antwerp;" and Van Vaerne-wijk, (the historian of the Rebellion,) "Hughe van der Ghoest in Zeelandt, so called because he lived long in that country, though he was born at Leyden." He was a master at Ghent in 1465, and became a sworn arbitrator to the Guild of Painters in 1468, a rank no member could hold until he had enjoyed the freedom for at least a year, and had paid the fees. It is suggested that he had previously joined that at Bruges, and in the same year was called to take part in the preparations for the wedding of Margaret of York at Bruges and at Ghent. There is some reason to believe that, about the time of the Ghent insurrection in 1440, Van der Goes was invited to Paris, and there painted the 'Crucifixion,' which still hangs above the judges' seat in the Cour d'Appel. About 1450-3 he appears to have settled at Ghent, where, in 1472-75, he presided as elder in the Guild. In 1476 he entered the Convent of Rooden Cloestere, near Brussels. Here he was allowed various indulgences, among them that of dining in the refectory with the distinguished strangers who came to see him. On these occasions he would drink much wine, which had a great effect upon his excitable temperament. Five or six years after he 'professed' he went to Cologne with some brother monks, and on his return had an attack of madness which the Prior attempted to mitigate with music. In 1478 he went to Louvain, to value an unfinished picture by Dierick Bouts, receiving a stoup of wine for his trouble. He died in 1482, his insanity having in the meantime disappeared. Of all the oil pictures that he produced, the only one historically authenticated is that mentioned by Vasari, which he painted to the order of Tommaso Portinari, agent in Bruges for the Medici, for the Hospital of S. Maria Nuova at Florence, where it is still preserved. Of this triptych, the middle picture represents the 'Adoration of the Shepherds;' the figures being almost life-size. On one wing are the portraits of Tommaso Portinari and his two little sons, presented by their patron saints Matthew and Anthony; on the other his wife and daughter, presented by SS. Margaret and Magdalen. Many works of Van der Goes perished by the hands of the Iconoclasts. Several important pictures by other masters have until lately been erroneously attributed to him. Two in the National Gallery, a 'Portrait of an Ecclesiastic,' and 'The Madonna and Child Enthroned,' bear his name in the catalogue; the latter is by Dierick Bouts. Nearly all large museums have pictures ascribed to Van der Goes, mostly quite at random. Among pictures by him, known to have once existed, which are now missing, we may name: two panels with scenes from the legend of St. Catharine; and four episodes from the seven sacraments, which Albrecht Dürer saw in the Nassau Palace, at Brussels, and ascribed to Meister Hugo. Among other pictures ascribed to him with more or less justice, are a 'Madonna and Child with SS. Catharine and Barbara,' which found its present place in Santa Maria del Gesù at Polizzi, in Sicily, through a ship on which it was freighted being wrecked in the neighbourhood; and a 'Madonna,' in the Bologna Gallery. Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle do not believe in Hugo's authorship of the latter. W.A.

VAN DER GOUWEN, WILLEM, a Dutch engraver, was a native of Amsterdam and flourished early in the 18th century. We have by him an indifferent set of Bible prints, published in that city in 1720, after the designs of Picart and others. He also engraved some ornamental frontispieces, &c., for the booksellers. 'The Whale cast upon the Dutch Coast in 1598' should also be specially noticed among his plates.

VAN DER GRACHT, JAKOB, a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Lierre (?) in 1593. Raphael Coxie was his master. He spent some years in Italy, under the protection of the Spanish Viceroy at Naples. He is chiefly known, however, by his 'Anatomy for Artists,' published at the Hague in 1634. An excellent portrait by him is in the Weimar Collection. He died at the Hague in 1647.

VAN DER GUCHT, BENJAMIN, portrait painter and picture-dealer, was the only son of John van der Gucht, the engraver. Benjamin was a student at the school in St. Martin's Lane, and afterwards at the Royal Academy. He painted many portraits of actors, among them those of David Garrick, as steward of the Stratford Jubilee, and of Woodward the Comedian, now in the Lock Hospital. He also painted scenes from popular plays, but in 1786 he relinquished painting for picture-dealing, picture-cleaning, and repairing. He was drowned in the Thames, near Obiswick, September 21st, 1794.

VAN DER GUCHT, GERARD, an elder son of Michiel van der Gucht, was born in 1696 (or 1695). He was the pupil of Louis Chéron, and was principally employed by the booksellers, for whom he engraved a great number of portraits in small, chiefly after Kneller. Later in life he became a dealer, founding a "Gallery" in Lower Brook Street. He was employed by Sir Hans Sloane. He died, the father of thirty children, in 1776. We have by him, among others, the following portraits:

John Tillotson, Archbishop of Canterbury; after Kneller.
 John Milton, Poet; three plates.
 John Dryden, Poet; after Kneller.
 John Hughes, Poet; after the same.
 John Philips, Poet; after the same.
 Colley Cibber, Poet and Actor; after Van Loo.
 Charles Jervas, Painter.
 The Four Seasons; after Coypel.

VAN DER GUCHT, JOHN, a younger son of Michiel van der Gucht, was born in London in 1697, and was taught engraving by his father. He also studied under Louis Chéron. He died in 1776. He engraved six academical figures, from the drawings of Chéron, which were much admired; and was employed by William Cheselden, the surgeon, to engrave the plates for his 'Osteology,' for which he is highly commended in the preface to that work. He also had a share in the plates after Sir James Thornhill's pictures in the Cupola of St. Paul's. There is a print by him of 'Tancred and Erminia,' after N. Poussin. He is stated to have excelled as a caricaturist. We have also by him the following portraits:

John Ker, of Kerland; affixed to his Memoirs; after Hammond.
 William King, LL.D.; prefixed to his works.
 John Dennis, critic.

VAN DER GUCHT, MICHEL, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1660, and was first a pupil of one of the Boutats, but came early to England, and studied under David Loggan. Here he met with considerable encouragement, and remained till death. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, and engraved many of the portraits for Clarendon's 'History.' He also engraved anatomical figures, and a large print of the 'Royal Navy,' after Baston. He was the master of Vertue. Walpole calls him Vandergutch. He died in Bloomsbury, October 16th, 1725, and was buried in St. Giles's churchyard. The following portraits by him may be named:

Queen Elizabeth; after Sir Antonio Mor.
 Sir Josiah Child; after Riley.
 J. Savage; prefixed to his History of Germany; after Foster; his best work.
 James Stanley, Earl of Derby; after Winstanley.
 Francis Aterbury, Bishop of Rochester; after Kneller.
 William Congreve, Poet; after the same.
 Joseph Addison, Poet; after the same.
 Thomas Betterton, Actor; after the same.

VAN DER HAERT, HENRI, painter and sculptor, was born at Louvain in 1794. He studied in the Academy of Ghent, and afterwards under Jacquin and David. He was successful in portraiture, and in 1841 he became a director of the Ghent Academy, which he completely reorganized. He died at Ghent in 1846. The Museum of that city possesses a 'Dismissal of Hagar' by him.

VAN DER HAGEN, JAN or JORIS, (or VERHAGEN,) painter, was born at the Hague, where he was living as early as 1640. The year of his birth is unknown, but various improbable dates have been given. His identity also has been matter of doubt, some writers holding that Jan and Joris Van der Hagen were two distinct persons. Messrs. Bredius and Stuers ascribe all the Van der Hagens at Amsterdam and the Hague respectively to 'Joris', making no mention of 'Jan'. Joris was one of the forty-seven artists who founded the Pictura Society at the Hague in 1656. He was the friend of Berchem and Adriaan van de Velde, and studied the works of Ruysdael. He painted landscapes, and views chiefly taken from the environs of Cleves and Nimeguen. The pictures of Verhagen are well painted; but having made use of a pernicious pigment, much in vogue at his time, called Haarlem blue, the freshness of his greens and blues has disappeared. He died in 1669. Several landscapes by him are at Amsterdam, Berlin, Copenhagen, the Hague, and Rotterdam. One of the best of his landscapes is in the Louvre; it represents a 'Village in a Plain,' with a Sportsman, his Servant, and his Dogs, 1660.

VAN DER HAGEN, JOHANN, a Dutch marine painter, born at the Hague early in the 18th century. He migrated to London, and finally settled in Ireland. In his latter years his improvidence brought him to want, and he died in Dublin about 1770.

VANDERHAMEN Y LEON, JUAN DE, the son of a Flemish archer of the guard, was born at Madrid in 1596. His father amused his leisure with flower painting, in which he instructed his son. The latter married a Castilian wife, Eugenia de la Herrera, and adopted painting as a profession. On the death of Gonzales in 1627 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the vacant post of painter to the king. In conjunction with Eugenio Caxes, Vanderhamen painted several scenes from the infancy of Christ for the Convent of the Holy Trinity at Madrid, as well as six scenes from the Life of Christ for the Carthusians of Paular. In these subjects his style was dry and harsh; but his portraits were agreeable. His chief merit was displayed in kitchen-pieces, of which an excellent example is in the Gallery at Madrid. He died in 1632.

VAN DER HECKE, MARTEN HEEMSKERK, was the son and pupil of Nicolas van der Hecke. He painted landscapes with ruins, but never rose above mediocrity.

VAN DER HECKE, NICOLAAS (or CLAESZ) DIRCKSZ, was born at the Hague about the year 1580, and was a scholar of Jan Naghel, and a relative of Marten Heemskerk. He painted history and landscapes, but excelled chiefly in the latter. Of his historical works, the most important are three large pictures in the town-hall at Alkmaar: the 'Decapitation of a Magistrate, for an act of oppression towards a Peasant;' the 'Punishment of Cambyzes;' and the 'Judgment of Solomon.' He was one of the founders of the S. Luke's Guild at Alkmaar, in the year 1631. He died in 1638. The Dresden Gallery has two Alehouse interiors by him, and the Amsterdam Museum views of the Castles and Abbey of Egmont.

VAN DER HEIJDEN, JAN. See VAN DER EIJDEN and VAN DER HEYDEN.

VAN DER HELST, BARTHOLOMEUS, portrait painter, was born at Haarlem in 1611 or 1612. The registers of Haarlem have been searched in vain for the exact date of his birth. It is supposed that Nic. Elias was his instructor, and that he was further influenced by Frans Hals. He settled at Amsterdam while still very young, and lived there for the greater part of his life. In 1636 he married Constantia Reinst, a young girl of good family, who was famous for her beauty and wit. He was a foundation member of the Painters' Guild (1654). He occasionally painted civic scenes and shooting pieces, but his better known and more numerous works are portraits and portrait groups, often of civic officers or archer guards. He has been called a realist whose works were scarcely pictures, and sometimes the criticism is not without foundation. His best pictures are apt to lack what the French call enveloppe. They have little unity or subordination, while they are often cold in colour. The strength of his work lies in its robust simplicity of conception, in its vigorous solidity of method, and in its unflinching carefulness. Van der Helst died at Amsterdam, December 16, 1670. Pictures:

VAN DER HELST, LODEWIJK, painter, was the son of Bartholomeus van der Helst. He was born at Amsterdam in 1645, and became the pupil of his father. He practised in Amsterdam, where he died after 1680. Works:

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	Portrait of Admiral Stellingwerf.
"	"	Portrait of Adriana Hinlopen.

VAN DER HEYDEN, JAN, (or VAN DER HEIJDEN,) was born at Gorinchem (Gorcum) in 1637. His only instruction consisted of a few desultory lessons received from an unknown glass-painter; but his natural genius soon discovered itself in very correctly finished drawings of ruins and buildings. He next attempted similar subjects in oil, and succeeded still better. He travelled in Germany, Belgium, and England, painting in Cologne, Brussels, London, and other places. He died at Amsterdam, September 28, 1712. The chief pictures of Van der Heyden represent picturesque spots in Dutch towns, particularly in Amsterdam. Although he paints each individual brick or stone in his buildings, there is nothing hard or dry in his pictures; his handling is dexterous and light, and his colour warm and luminous. His pictures are generally furnished with figures by Adriaan van de Velde. After the death of Adriaan, Van der Heyden got Lingelbach and Eglon van der Neer to perform the same office for him. We have a few original etchings by this painter; he had also a secret for printing pictures. These were stamped in oil colours on parchment and afterwards retouched. The following pictures by Van der Heyden may be named:

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	A Quay with Trees.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	A Landscape with old Castle.

Brussels.	Arenburg Coll.	The Quay of Amsterdam.

There was also a JAN VAN DER HEYDEN the younger, of whom little is known.

VAN DER HEYDEN, JAKOB, engraver, was born at Strasburg about 1570 and died in 1637. At the beginning of the 17th century he was living at Frankfort, where he engraved a number of small pictures of churches, an 'Interior of Strasburg Minster' among them.

VAN DER HORST, GERARD, a Dutch draughtsman and painter of landscapes and marines, who flourished in the 17th century. Jan van de Velde engraved after him.

VAN DER HORST, NICOLAS, was born at Antwerp in 1598, and was educated in the school of Rubens. He afterwards travelled through Germany, France, and Italy, and on his return to the Netherlands established himself at Brussels, where he was not unsuccessful as a painter of history and portraits. The Archduke Albert favoured him, and appointed him to his household. He died at Brussels in 1646. Several of his drawings for booksellers are extant, and his 'Sacrifice of Jephthah' was in the Suermondt Collection. He painted a portrait of Marie de' Medici, which Vostermann engraved. He signed with the initials N. V. H.

VAN DER HULST, JAN BAPTIST, was born at Louvain in 1790, and first studied under Geedts at Ghent, after which he visited Paris, Rome, Naples, &c. He settled at the Hague, became court-painter to Willem I. of the Netherlands, and was elected a member of the Amsterdam Academy. His work was at first confined to historical subjects and altarpieces, but at a later period he took to portraits, which he sometimes lithographed. He died at Brussels in 1862. In the Amsterdam Museum there are by him the portraits of Willem I. and of his Queen.

VAN DER HULST, PIETER, the elder, a Dutch painter, who flourished in the first half of the 17th century, was a pupil of Van Goyen. His works consisted of landscapes with figures; among them are:

Brunswick.	Gallery.	A Church Consecration. 1628.
Frankfort.	Städel Inst.	Dutch Village with River. 1652.

VAN DER HULST, PIETER, a Dutch painter, born at Dordrecht in 1652. He was at first a pupil of W. Doudyns, but from 1674 he studied under Mario Nuzzi, at Rome, where he attempted historical painting, but without success. He afterwards painted flowers, fruit, and reptiles, in the style of Nuzzi. Ultimately he settled at the Hague. He was called 'Tournesol' or 'Solsiffe,' because he generally painted a sunflower in his pictures. His manner of painting was rather Italian than Dutch. He died in 1701.

VAN DER JAGT, MARTINUS, draughtsman and painter, was born at Haarlem in 1747. He was a pupil of J. H. Jelgersma and Jan Punt, and painted animals somewhat in the style of Hondcoeter. He also painted sea-pieces. He died at Zeist in 1805.

VAN DER JEUGHT, JAN JOZEF, a Flemish painter of history and portraits, who flourished at Antwerp in the 18th century. In 1771 he was director of the Antwerp Academy.

VAN DER KABEL, ADRIAAN, or ARIE, (or VAN DER CABEL,) originally VAN DER TOOW, painter and etcher, was born at Ryswick, near the Hague, in 1631. He was a scholar of Van Goyen. Leaving home to visit Italy, he stopped at Lyons, where his works were so much admired, and so liberally paid for, that he was induced to settle in that city. This took place not later than 1669, for in that year he married one Susanne Bourgeois, at Lyons. He painted landscapes with figures and cattle, and views of sea-ports. He appears to have sometimes imitated the style of Benedetto Castiglione and Salvator Rosa, at others that of the Carracci and P. F. Mola. His pictures are very unequal, as his life was irregular and dissolute. Descamps says he did not visit Italy, but there is a tradition that he was known in Rome by the nicknames of 'Corydon' and 'Geestigkeit.' He died at Lyons in 1705. A landscape by him, signed, and dated 1652, is in the Munich Pinakothek; and in the Lyons Museum there is a sea-piece. Van der Cahel has left the following etchings:

A set of six Landscapes, with figures and buildings.

Another set of thirty Landscapes and Marines.

A set of four mountainous Landscapes, with figures; inscribed A. vander Cabel fecit. N. Robert exc.

Two large Landscapes, with figures.

A large upright Landscape, with St. Bruno: the figure is engraved with a single stroke, in the manner of Mellon.

Another, its companion, with St. Jerome.

VAN DER KAPPEN, FRANS, a Flemish painter, was born in 1660, at Antwerp. He died in 1723, and nothing is known of his life beyond the bare fact that he travelled in Italy.

VAN DER KOOGEN, LEENDERT, painter, was born at Haarlem in 1610. His parents were in affluent circumstances; and on his discovering an inclination for art, sent him to Antwerp, where he became a scholar of Jacob Jordaens. On his return to Holland, his first efforts were in history, but becoming acquainted with Cornelis Bega, he quitted that for conversations, boors regaling, and other things in the style of Bega. He entered the Haarlem Guild in 1652, and died in that city in 1681. His works are little known out of his own country. Van der Koogen has left several etchings, some of which are in the style of Salvator Rosa. We may name the following:

A set of six prints of Soldiers; in three series, dated 1664, 1665, and 1666.

A set of four, representing Apollo and the Muses; the Battle of the Giants; a Sacrifice near a Tomb; and a Standard-bearer, with Soldiers.

Another set of four; a Female Head, 1664; an Ecce Homo, 1664; St. Sebastian, 1665; and two Men playing at Tric-trac.

VAN DER KOOGH, ADRIANUS, painter, was born at Middelharnis in 1796, and died at Dordrecht in 1831. The Rotterdam Museum has a landscape by him.

VAN DER KOOL, WILLEM BARTEL, was born at Augustinusga, in Friesland, in 1768. He studied under J. Verrier, at Leeuwarden, and under Beekkerk, and in 1798 became teacher of drawing at the Academy at Franeker, where he remained till its dissolution in 1811. In 1808, he won a prize of 2000 florins at the Amsterdam Exhibition, for his picture of a 'Lady with a Servant handing her a Letter.' After this he resumed study at Dusseldorf after Van Dyck. He was correspondent of the Netherlands Institute, and a member of the Academies of Amsterdam, Antwerp, and Ghent. He died at Leeuwarden in 1836. Seven portraits by him are in the Amsterdam Museum.

VAN DER KRYNS, (or KRYNS VAN DER MAES,) EVRARD, a Dutch painter of the 17th century, was a pupil of van Mander. He was received into the Painters' Guild at the Hague in 1604, but worked for the greater part of his life in Italy and other foreign countries. The Hague archives speak of him also as a glass painter. The windows in the Frederiksberg Chapel, Copenhagen, which were destroyed in the fire of 1859, were by him.

VAN DER KUYL, GYSBERT, a Dutch painter, born at Gouda at the beginning of the 17th century. He was a pupil of Wouter Crabeth the younger, and also spent twenty years in France and Italy. His manner shows the influence of Honthorst and Abraham Bloemaert. He died at Gouda in 1673. The Amsterdam Museum possesses two of his works.

VAN DER LAAK, MARIA, a Dutch painter, who worked at the Hague about the middle of the 17th century, and died there in 1664.

VAN DER LAAN, ADRIAAN, a Dutch engraver, was born at Utrecht about the year 1690. He resided some time in Paris, where he worked for the printsellers. His most important performance is a set of landscapes after J. Glauber. He also engraved a portrait of Laurens Coster, of Haarlem, to whom the Dutch attribute the invention of printing, and some plates after Van der Meulen. He was still living in 1742.

VAN DER LAAN, DIRK, a Dutch painter, and pupil of Frans Floris, who flourished in the 16th century, and painted history in small.

VAN DER LAMEN. See VAN DER LANEN.

VAN DER LANEN, CHRISTOFFEL JOAN, or JACOBZ, (LAENEN, LAMEN,) a Flemish painter, is supposed to have been born at Antwerp about the year 1570. He is believed to have been a pupil of Frans Francken the younger. He was working at Antwerp about 1620, whilst one of his pictures is dated as late as 1638. He painted conversations and riotous subjects, some of them not very decent. The picture bearing the above date represents 'Two Ladies playing at Draughts.' A 'Ball at Antwerp' by him is in the Copenhagen Gallery. He died in 1651 or 1652.

VAN DER LEEPE, JAN ANTHONIE, painter, came of an opulent family, originally of Brussels, which city his parents left on account of the troubles in Brabant, to settle at Bruges, where our artist was born in 1664. He painted sea-pieces, both in calm and storm, and landscapes in the style of Gaspar Poussin. These were generally furnished with figures by his fellow-townsmen, Duvenede and Kerkhove. Van der Leepe was appointed Comptroller-General of Flanders by the Emperor. In 1713 he became councillor at Bruges, and in 1716 'Échevin.' He died in 1720. A series of fourteen pictures by him, from the life of Christ, is at Bruges.

VAN DER LEEUW, GABRIEL, (or GABRIELE LEONE,) was born at Dordrecht in 1643. He was the son of SEBASTIAAN VAN DER LEEUW, a painter of landscapes and animals, who had been a scholar of Jacob Gerritz Cuyp. In a short time Gabriel greatly surpassed his father, when he went to Amsterdam, and there formed an acquaintance with David van der Plaas, with whom he set out to visit Italy. Passing through France he stopped four years at Paris, and two at Lyons. On his arrival at Rome, he studied Benedetto Castiglione and Rosa da Tivoli, and painted landscapes with cattle in their styles. After a residence of ten years in Italy he returned to Holland, where after a time he lost his popularity and projected a return to Italy. But going to Dordrecht, for the arrangement of some family affairs, he there died suddenly in 1688. Gabriel van der Leeuw etched several plates in the style of Castiglione and H. Roos. When in Italy he signed these G. Leone, which has led to the invention of an apocryphal Giovanni, Gabriele, or Guglielmo Leone.

VAN DER LEEUW, PIETER, a native of Dordrecht, was a younger son of Sebastiaan van der Leeuw. He studied for some time under his father, but subsequently became an indefatigable imitator of Adriaan van de Velde. It is said that he never painted without one of that master's pictures by his side. He entered the 'Kunstgenootschap' in 1669, and in 1678 he was made director. He died in 1704. Several of Van der Leeuw's best works are in the galleries of Rotterdam and Munich.

VAN DER LEUR, NICOLAAS, was born at Breda in 1667. After studying art for a time in his native country, he went to Italy when young, and passed some years at Rome. On his return to Holland he acquired some reputation as a painter of history and portraits. His chief work is the principal altar-piece in the church of the Recolets, at Breda. He died about 1726.

VAN DER LINDEN, MORITZ, a Dutch painter of the 17th century. He was a pupil of Caspar Netscher, and showed talent as a painter of portraits and genre. He had, however, a more decided turn for engineering, and entering the service of the States-General as engineer, he abandoned art.

VAN DER LISSE, DIRCK, painter, flourished at the Hague about the middle of the 17th century. He entered the Guild of St. Luke in 1644, helped to found the new Guild in 1656, was burgomaster in 1660, and died in 1669. Between him and Van der Lys there seems to have been some confusion. Dirck made use of a monogram composed of a D, an L, and a stroke which may stand for J or I or a part of V. There is a picture by him in the Munich Gallery.

VANDERLYN, JOHN, painter, was born at Kingston in America, in 1776. He studied in France, and on his return to his own country, attracted attention by some clever pen-and-ink copies of engravings. After some further study at Washington, where he became known by his picture of 'Niagara Falls,' and some creditable portraits, he returned to France, and coming under the influence of Vincent, began to paint historical pictures. His 'Landing of Columbus,' now in the Capitol at Washington, was of this period. From Paris he went to Italy, where he painted 'Marius among the Ruins of Carthage,' for which he received a gold medal from Napoleon I. in 1807. After his re-establishment in America in 1815, he executed panoramas of Paris, Athens, Mexico, and Geneva, which were exhibited in many of the States with much success. He also painted portraits of Madison, Monroe, Washington, Calhoun, and Jackson. He died at Kingston in 1852.

VAN DER LYS, JAN, or more probably DIRCK, (VAN DER LIS, or VAN DER LIJS,) was born at Breda in 1600, and was a scholar of Cornelis Poolemburg, whose manner he imitated so well that his pictures are often attributed to that master. He painted historical subjects, landscapes, bathing nymphs, and conversations; some of which he engraved. He is supposed to be identical with Giovanni Lutz, after whom Mogalli engraved 'A Sacrifice of Isaac.' He has also been confused with Jan Lis, called Pan (q. v.). He died at Rotterdam in 1657. Pictures by him are at Brunswick and Copenhagen.

VAN DER MAES, KOENRAD, a Dutch painter, flourished at Leyden towards the close of the 16th century, and was the master of Joris van Schooten.

VAN DER MAST, HERMAN, a Flemish painter, was born at Brielle about 1550. He was a pupil of Frans Floris, and after that master's death, in 1570, of Frans Francken. Later he worked for a time in Paris, under the patronage of the Archbishop of Bourges. He is said to have finally settled at Delft, and to have died there some time after 1604. His skill was chiefly shown in the realistic painting of details.

VAN DER MEER, BAREND, (or BERNARD,) probably a son of the elder Jan van der Meer, was born at Haarlem about 1659, and painted still-life with some success. Pictures of fruit by him are in the Vienna Gallery, and at Würzburg. The Vienna picture is signed and dated 1689.

VAN DER MEER, CATHARINA, probably a daughter of Jan van der Meer the elder, was a painter of conversation pieces, in the style of Caspar Netscher. One of her pictures is said to be dated 1675.

VAN DER MEER, GERARD. See VAN DER MEIRE.

VAN DER MEER, JAN, called VAN DER MEER, of DELFT. See VER MEER.

VAN DER MEER, JAN. See VAN DER MEIRE.

VAN DER MEER, JAN, the elder, (erroneously VERMEER,) was born at Haarlem in 1628. He was the son of an obscure painter of the same name as himself. He entered the school of Jacob de Wet in 1638, and when he was still young he visited Italy, accompanied by Lieven van der Schuur. On his return to Holland his pictures were sought after with great avidity. He painted landscapes with cattle and figures, and marines. His sea-pieces are particularly good, the skies light and floating, and the water clear and transparent. He also painted battle-pieces with success, and drew horses with great fire and animation. He entered the Guild of St. Luke in 1654, and died at Haarlem in 1691. Works:

Berlin.	Museum.	View of Haarlem. Two Landscapes.
Brünswick.	Gallery.	A Landscape.
Dresden.	"	Two Forest-scenes.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	Four Landscapes.
Paris.	Louvre.	Entrance to an Inn.
Vienna.	Gsell Coll.	A Landscape. 1663.

VAN DER MEER, JAN, the younger, (erroneously VERMEER,) was the son of Jan van der Meer the elder, and was born at Haarlem in 1656. He was first instructed by his father, but he afterwards studied under Nicolas Berchem, of whom he became one of the best scholars. He painted subjects similar to those of Berchem, landscapes with cattle and pastoral figures, and was peculiarly successful in painting sheep. His landscapes also exhibit very pleasing scenery. He died at Haarlem in 1705. Pictures :

We have a few charming etchings by this artist, which are now become scarce, viz. :

A set of four landscapes, with sheep.
A Ewe suckling a Lamb ; I. v. der Meer de Jonghe feicit.
1683.

VAN DER MEER, N., a Dutch engraver, who resided in Paris about the year 1760. He engraved some church interiors, flowers, &c., for Le Brun's Gallery.

VAN DER MEEREN, (or MEREN,) JAN, a Flemish painter and engraver, who worked at Antwerp, and was Dean of the Guild of St. Luke in that city in 1505.

VAN DER MEERSCH, PASCHUIER, is mentioned in the archives of Bruges as having entered the Painters' Guild in that city in 1483, and as having been a pupil of Memling.

VAN DER MEERSCH, PHILIP, a Flemish draughtsman and painter, born at Oudenarde in 1749. He founded a free school of design and architecture in his native town, where he died in 1819.

VAN DER MEIRE, GERARD, a Flemish painter, who flourished about the middle of the 15th century at Ghent. He entered the Guild of St. Luke, in that city, in 1452, and was sub-dean in 1474. He is described in a chronicle of the 15th century as a pupil of Hubert van Eyck, but van Mander says he began to paint after the death of Jan van Eyck, which is confirmed by the date of his enrolment in the Guild. Many of his works were destroyed during the Spanish troubles, and no absolutely authentic painting by him is known. In St. Bavon's at Ghent there is a triptych, composed of a 'Crucifixion,' 'Moses striking the Rock,' and the 'Brazen Serpent,' all much damaged, which is signed with his name, but the signature is not beyond suspicion. It is of very slight merit. Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle are inclined to accept as his a 'Visitation' and an 'Epiphany,' in the Berlin Museum, and taking them as standards, to ascribe also to him a 'Visitation,' in the collection of Baron Speck von Sternburg, at Lütschena, near Leipsic ; the 'Exhumation of St. Hubert,' in the National Gallery (No. 783) ; the picture known as 'A Count of Henegan, with St. Ambrose,' in the same collection (No. 264) ; several pictures in the gallery at Antwerp ; and an 'Annunciation to (? coronation of) the Virgin' at Madrid, where it is assigned to the school of Van Eyck. To this Van der Meire some of the miniatures in the Grimani Breviary at Venice used to be ascribed. Gerard Horenbout is now believed to have been their author. The portrait of Marco Barbarigo, in the National Gallery, where it is ascribed to Van der Meire, is now considered the work of Petrus Cristus.

W.A.
VAN DER MEIRE, JAN, a painter of Ghent in the 15th century, is called by Immerzeel a brother of Gerard van der Meire, and scholar of the Van Eycks. The same author says he painted a picture of an 'Installation of the Order of the Golden Fleece' for Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, whom he followed in his campaigns, and that he died at Nevers in 1471. An interesting discovery has recently been made concerning Jan van der Meire. It has been ascertained that a triptych in the church of S. Sauveur, Aix, which was long ascribed to King René of Anjou, is in reality Jan's work. It represents King René with his wife and their patron saints. The following pictures by him are at present not to be found :

The Martyrdom of St. Lieven.
The Death of St. Bavon.

Reiffenberg (De la peinture sur verre aux Pays Bas) mentions a Jan Van der Meire who was registered in the Antwerp Guild in 1505. The name, however, was a common one at Ghent during the 14th and 15th centuries.

VAN DER MÈRE, LIEVEN, a Flemish painter of the 16th century, the date of whose death has been hypothetically given as 1525-27. He is known to have worked at Lyons, where there are several pictures by him in churches.

VAN DER MEULEN, ADAM FRANS, painter, was born at Brussels in 1632, though from his long residence in Paris he is generally classed with the French school. His parents, who were in easy circumstances, placed him as a disciple with Peter Snayers, whom he soon surpassed. Some of his first productions then found their way to Paris, and possessed sufficient merit to attract the attention of Charles Le Brun, at that time the arbiter of taste in the French metropolis. As the great aim of every one about the court was to flatter the ambition of Louis XIV., Le Brun recommended Van der Meulen to Colbert, as a likely person to fitly commemorate the military achievements of that monarch. The minister agreed. Van der Meulen was invited to Paris, was pensioned by the king, and granted apartments at the Gobelins, where he was employed on designs for tapestry. The brilliant exploits of Louis XIV. afforded an ample field for the painter's ability ; and Van der Meulen was appointed to attend his royal patron to the field in his campaigns. He painted the principal battles and sieges in Flanders for the Château of Marly. He also painted huntings and cavalcades. Although he was principally employed in painting for the court, many of his pictures are in private collections. In 1673 he was received a member of the Academy. Most public museums possess samples of his works, while those of the Louvre and Versailles have a large collection between them. The king heaped riches and distinctions on him, and Le Brun, his constant friend, gave him his niece in marriage. Van der Meulen died in Paris in 1690.

VAN DER MEULEN, PIETER, was the brother, and probably the scholar, of Frans van der Meulen. He was originally brought up a sculptor, but abandoned that art for painting. He, too, painted battles and huntings, and in 1670 came to England to paint the exploits of King William III., Louis's rival. Largillière's portrait of this artist was mezzotinted by Becket.

VAN DER MIJ, JEROME, (VAN DER MY,) was born at Leyden in 1687, and was a scholar of Willem Mieris. He painted history, portraits, and genre subjects.

VAN DER MIJN, AGATHA, the sister of Herman van der Mijn, came with her brother to London, and was a member of the Free Society of Artists. She painted fruit, flowers, game, &c., and exhibited for the last time in 1768.

VAN DER MIJN, ANDREAS, an obscure Dutch engraver, was the second son of Herman van der Mijn, and resided some time in London. He was born in 1714, but the year of his death is unknown. We have a portrait of Richard Leveridge, the actor, by him.

VAN DER MIJN, FRANS, the third son of Herman van der Mijn, was born at Amsterdam in 1719. He was an excellent portrait painter, and, after a period of activity in his native town, came to London, where, in 1763, he became a member of the Free Society of Artists. To the Society's exhibitions he sent forty portraits between the years 1761 and 1772. He was in some ways the best painter of his family. He died in London, August 20, 1783.

VAN DER MIJN, GERHARDT, the eldest of the sons of Herman van der Mijn, was born in 1706, and painted chiefly in London. His subjects were portraits, ladies attired as shepherdesses, and other subjects after the manner of contemporary French art.

VAN DER MIJN, HERMAN, painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1684. He was the son of a clergyman, who intended him for the Church, and bestowed on him a suitable education. His love for art, however, finally led to his being placed under the tuition of Ernst Stuven, the flower painter. Wishing to practise a higher branch of art, he quitted Stuven and flower-painting, and turned his attention to history and portraiture. In 1716 he was summoned to the court of the Elector Palatine, where he passed some time. He afterwards returned to Holland, where he painted a 'Jupiter and Danae,' which excited much admiration. He then visited Antwerp, and afterwards Paris, where he painted a picture of 'Peter denying Christ,' which is considered his best work. On the recommendation of Lord Cadogan, he came to England about the year 1722, and was employed in painting portraits for the nobility, in which he carried minuteness to excess. Frederick, Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Orange, sat to him; and he painted a picture of the Duke and Duchess of Chandos, for which he is said to have received five hundred guineas. He was also employed in repairing the pictures at Burleigh House. Van der Mijn died in London in 1741. Several of his paintings are at Angsburg and Munich. Besides his five sons he had a daughter, CORNELIA, who gained some reputation in England as a painter of still-life. She was born at Amsterdam in 1710; the year of her death is unknown.

VAN DER MIJN, JORIS, (or GEORGE,) the fourth son of Herman van der Mijn, was born in London in 1723, but after the death of his father he went to Amsterdam, where he painted small portraits and genre pieces, and discovered a talent for representing silks and other stuffs. He died at Amsterdam in 1763.

VAN DER MIJN, ROBERT, fifth son of Herman van der Mijn, and a painter of portraits, landscapes, and fruit and flower-pieces, was born in London in 1724. He was an imitator of Watteau, and exhibited portraits with the Free Society in 1762-3-4.

VAN DER MOERE, NICOLAS, an early Flemish painter, who is mentioned in a record of 1397 as practising at Antwerp.

VAN DER MOIRON, —, a Dutch landscape painter of the 17th century, of whom nothing is known. In the Stockholm Gallery there are two pictures by him; one represents peasants dancing near the ruins of a temple, the other a cattle fair.

VAN DER MONT, THEODORE, a Flemish painter, was born at St. Trond in 1581. His name has been Italianized into Deodato Del Monte. He was a pupil of Rubens, and enjoyed the special friendship of this master. He was made free of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1608. He worked as engineer for the King of Spain, and was also employed by the Duke of Neuburg, who ennobled him. He died at Antwerp in 1644, and was buried in the church of St. Jacques. In the Antwerp Gallery there is a 'Transfiguration' by him; another version of the same subject is at Nancy.

VAN DEN MOORTELE, (or MOORTERE,) GHEROLF, a Flemish painter of the 15th century, was a pupil of Daniel De Rycke. He became Master in the Painters' Guild at Ghent in 1453. In 1460-61 he was engaged on an altar-piece for the church of Everghem-lez-Gand, jointly with Lieven Van Den Bossche.

VAN DER NEER, AERT, (AERNOUT,) was born at Amsterdam in 1603. Scarcely anything is known of his life. He excelled in moonlight views, generally of towns, and groups of cottages or fishermen's huts on the banks of a river or canal, with boats and figures. He is said to have painted some two hundred of these without a single case of repetition. He occasionally painted sunsets and often winter pieces, with figures amusing themselves on the ice, in which he is scarcely surpassed. He died, very poor, at Amsterdam, November 9, 1677. A great variety of dates have been proposed for Aert van der Neer. Those here given are due to the researches of Mr. Bredius. His best pictures have a transparency of colour, a lightness of hand, a general freshness and sincerity, and a mastery of composition, which gave them a very high rank in the Dutch school. He signed his pictures with a double monogram, an A interlaced with a V, and a D with an N

VAN DER NEER, EGLON HENDRIK, the son of Aert van der Neer, was born at Amsterdam in 1643, and received his first instruction from his father, but his taste leading him to history and portraits, he was placed under the care of Jacob van Loo. When he was twenty years of age he went to Paris, where he passed four years, and painted small portraits and domestic subjects, which were popular. On his return to Holland he attempted some historical and poetic pieces, which have little to recommend them but their elaborate finish. He was more successful in genre, in which he appears to have imitated Terborch and Netscher. In pictures of this class he carried fusion of touch and finish about as far as they would go. Eglon van der Neer lived for a time at Rotterdam, Amsterdam, and Brussels, and was employed by the Elector Palatine at Düsseldorf, where he died in 1703. He was appointed painter to the King of Spain, on account of his portrait of the Princess of Neuberg. His own portrait was engraved by G. M. Preisler. He is supposed to have been the instructor of Adriaan van der Werff. Works :

VAN DER O, LEON HEINRICH, a German engraver, flourished about the year 1660. He executed some of the portraits for Priorata's 'History of the Emperor Leopold.'

VAN DER PERRE, JAN, (or JOHANN DE PERRE,) painter, was the son of an obscure portrait painter, NIKLAS VAN DER PERRE, who had fled as a heretic, from Antwerp to Leipsic, and afterwards died in the latter city in 1595. Jan became painter to the Electoral court, and has left portraits of Luther, Melancthon, Frederick the Quarrelsome, and the Elector Moritz. He died about 1618.

VAN DER PLAES, DAVID, (or PLAAS,) portrait painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1647. After studying for a time in his native country, it is said that he travelled to Italy, and resided some years at Venice, where the works of Titian were the objects of his particular attention. All this, however, Mr. Bredius denies, and declares that the only break in his activity at Amsterdam was during a short sojourn in London. In Holland he was widely employed in portraiture, and painted many of the distinguished people of his time, among others Admiral van Tromp. He was employed by Peter Martin to superintend the plates for his Bible. He died at Amsterdam in 1704. There is a portrait by him in the National Portrait Gallery, supposed to represent Milton, which was engraved as such for W. Stephenson of Norwich in 1797, and also for the Boydells. The Amsterdam Museum possesses two portraits by him.

VAN DER PLAS, PIETER, (or VAN DEN PLAS,) was, according to Descamps, born in Holland about the year 1570. M. Fétis, however, in his catalogue of the Brussels Museum, shows that he was probably born in that city about 1595. He resided many years at Brussels, where he won some repute as a painter of history. In the 17th century there was a Dutch sculptor named Pieter van der Plass, whose portrait was painted by Kneller and engraved by Schenck. There was also an engraver who signed himself P. van der Plaas. Of these two men and the Brussels painter, Nagler makes a single individual. M. Fétis has discovered, however, that Van der Plas, the painter, was inscribed on the Guild books at Brussels in 1610, as an apprentice, so that he was then probably about fifteen. He is there called a native of Brussels and a pupil of Ferdinand de Berdt. He was received into the mastership of the Guild in 1619, and an 'Enthroned Virgin' by him in the Brussels Gallery is dated 1647. The date of his death has not been discovered.

VAN DER POEL, EGBERT, was probably a native of Delft, where he was baptized March 9, 1621. He became a member of the Guild at Delft about 1650. He is best known by his pictures of conflagrations, but he also produced views of villages, of rustic interiors, and genre subjects. In the Museum at Amsterdam there is a picture by him, representing the explosion of a powder magazine at Delft in 1654, which was a favourite subject with him, as he repeated it many times ; several of these repetitions are in England, others are in the Rotterdam Museum and the Vienna Gallery. Van der Poel generally signed his name in full, but sometimes he only used the initials E. V. P. He removed from Delft in 1654, and died at Rotterdam in 1664. The following pictures by him may be named :

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Interior of a Cottage. 1646.
Brussels.	Museum.	Interior of a Kitchen.
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	Burning of a Town.
Hague.	Museum.	Moonlight Scene.
London.	Nat. Gallery	Delft after the Explosion of 1654.
Paris.	Louvre.	Peasants before their Door.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Three Kitchen pieces.
Stuttgart.	Gallery.	Attack of Robbers.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Peasant Family before a Cottage.

VAN DER POORT, AELBERT JAKOB, an obscure Dutch painter of landscapes and portraits, was born in 1771. He was a pupil of Beekkerk, and died in 1807.

VAN DER POORTEN, HENDRIK JOSEF FRANCISCUS, landscape painter and etcher, was born at Antwerp in 1789, and was a pupil of Herreyns and Mayn. He was in much repute about the year 1815, and his landscapes with figures and animals, and especially those representing sunrise and moonlight, were in great request. He etched and lithographed thirty-eight landscapes. He was a member of the Antwerp Academy. There are pictures by him at Ghent and Brussels. He died in 1874.

VAN DER ROER, JAKOB, was born at Dordrecht in 1648. He studied portrait painting under Jan de Baen, and practised for some time in England, during the reign of Charles II. It is not known how long he remained in this country, but he was in the employment of Kneller towards the end of the 17th century. He died at Dordrecht in 1699.

VAN DER SCHALKE, CORNELIS, a Dutch painter of river scenery, and of landscapes with cattle and figures, living in the 17th century, is noticed by his contemporary, V. L. Van der Vinne. He is said to figure as a sergeant in the picture by Frans Hals in the Haarlem Museum, representing the 'Officers of the Archers' Corps of St. George.'

VAN DER SCHELDE, LIEVEN, a Flemish painter of history and miniatures, who flourished at Ghent about 1580. He was one of the artists employed with Lucas de Heere in 1582 on the decorations for the reception of the Duc d'Alençon, and also reproduced in miniature the decorations for the Joyeuse Entrée of Alessandro Farnese into Ghent, 1584. These he presented to the Municipality of Ghent, to which they still belong.

VAN DER SCHLEY, JACOB, a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1715. He was a disciple of Bernard Picart, whose style of engraving he imitated; he also finished several of the plates left imperfect at the death of that master. He died in 1779. We have a few portraits and book ornaments by this artist; among them the following:

Jean Baptiste Boyer, Marquis d'Argens; after Van Pee.
Antoine Bernard Frérot, Almoner to the Prince of Conti; after the same.

Bernard Picart, Engraver; after Mathias des Angles.
1734.

Henri de la Tour d'Auvergne, Vicomte de Turenne;
after the same.

The prints after Coypel for the edition of 'Don Quixote' published at Amsterdam in 1746.

VAN DER SCHLICHTEN, JAN PHILIPP, (or VON DER SCHLICHTEN,) a Dutch painter of the 18th century, was a pupil of Adriaen Van der Werff, whose style he imitated. He was employed by the Elector Palatine Karl Philipp, and seems to have settled at Mannheim (whence the Germanized form of his name,) and to have died there in 1745. In the Munich Pinakothek are the following by him: 'A Village Musician' (1731), 'S. Andrew' (1732). His son JOHANN FRIEDRICH, born at Mannheim in 1725, travelled for instruction in Italy, and studied under F. Torelli and under Conca. He painted genre pictures in the manner of Metsu and Netscher, and occasionally feigned bas-reliefs, &c. He became director of the Mannheim Gallery, and died in that town in 1795.

VAN DER SCHUUR, THEODOOR, was born at the Hague in 1628. After receiving some instruction in his native country he went to Paris, where he frequented the school of Sebastien Bourdon, under whom he passed three years. He travelled to Rome in 1651, and there studied chiefly after Raphael and Giulio Romano. He had already acquired some reputation when he was favoured with the patronage of Christina, Queen of Sweden, who employed him in several undertakings. After a residence of fourteen years at Rome, Van der Schuur returned to Holland, in 1665, was made a member of the Academy at the Hague, and painted 'Justice, Temperance, and Fortitude,' on a ceiling in the Town-hall. One of his best works is a large group of portraits of Officers of trained bands, painted in 1675, and now in the Shooting Gallery at the Hague. He has also left some pictures of Saints in the New Church there, and an allegory in the hall of the States-General. He at one time impoverished himself by speculation, but by application to his art he finally retrieved his losses. He died in 1705.

VAN DER SLUIJS, JAKOB, was born at Leyden in 1660, and brought up in the Orphanage. Evincing some taste for art, he was placed under Ary de Vois, whom he left to become a disciple of Peter van Slingelandt. He imitated the polished style of the latter, but with a less laborious finish, and his small pictures of conversations, domestic subjects, and fashionable assemblies met with considerable success. They are chiefly confined to Leyden, where he constantly resided, and where he died in 1736. There are four pictures by him in the Leyden Museum.

VAN DER SLUYSE, CHARLES, a Flemish painter of little note, who was a pupil of the Antwerp Academy in 1773, and became Director in 1784.

VAN DER SPELT, ADRIAEN, a flower painter, was born at Gouda, according to some authorities, or at Leyden, according to others, about 1630. He was a scholar of W. Crabeth, the younger, and occasionally painted upon glass. He resided in Germany for a considerable time, where his flower-pieces were held in much esteem. He was for some time at Berlin, and was patronized by the Elector of Brandenburg. He returned to his native country, and died at Gouda in 1673.

VAN DER SPRIETT, JAN, was a native of Delft, and a scholar of Verkolje, and died in London about the beginning of the 18th century. He scraped a mezzotint portrait of Timothy Cruso, Presbyterian, after his own design.

VAN DER STAR. See STELLA.

VAN DER STEEN, FRANS, a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1604. He took to art in consequence of having lost a leg through a fall, and made such progress that he was employed and pensioned by the Archduke Leopold. Little is known of his work as a painter, but his plates for the collection known as 'Teniers's Gallery,' are excellent. Among fifty prints enumerated by Nagler we may name the following:

Cornelis Cort, Engraver, of Antwerp.

Dirk Cuenerbert, Engraver, of Amsterdam.

Andrea del Vaulx, Professor of the University of Louvain.

The Holy Family; after Titian.

La Madonna del Sacco; after Andrea del Sarto.

Michelangelo's Dream; after Michelangelo.

Soldiers playing at Cards; after Manfredi.

The Adoration of the Trinity; after Albrecht Dürer.

The Martyrdom of the Ten Thousand Saints; from a drawing by Van Hoyer, after the picture by Albrecht Dürer, now in the Vienna Gallery.

Silenus drunk, supported by Satyrs and Bacchante; after Van Dyck. (Rubens?)

Cupid shaping his Bow; after Parmigiano (ascribed to Correggio in the lettering).

Jupiter and Io; after Correggio.

Ganymede; after the same.

VAN DER STOCK, IGNAZ, a Dutch painter and engraver, who flourished about the year 1670. Judging from his original etchings, he was a landscape painter of some ability. Adriaen Boudewyns was his pupil. His plates are slight but spirited. Some are from designs by Fouquières, others after compositions of his own. Among them we may cite :

View of Linckenbeek.	A Swamp.
The Two Stags.	Gentleman giving alms.
A Forest.

VAN DER STRAET, JAN, also called JOHANNES STRADANUS and GIOVANNI DELLA STRADA, was born at Bruges in 1523, or, according to another account, in 1536. He was first instructed by his father, an obscure artist of little merit. He afterwards studied under Pieter Aartsen, until he found himself sufficiently advanced to undertake a journey to Italy. He worked at Rome under Salviati, and in conjunction with that painter and Daniele da Volterra, was employed in the Belvedere of the Vatican. He was invited to Naples by Don John of Austria, whom he accompanied back to the Netherlands. He afterwards returned to Italy, and Vasari engaged him to visit Florence, where he was employed, conjointly with that painter, in several considerable works for the ducal palace and other buildings. The Annunziata has one of his best works, a 'Crucifixion,' with the Virgin Mary, Mary Magdalene, St. John, and a great number of other figures. San Spirito has 'The Expulsion of the Money-changers from the Temple;' the chapel of the Archiepiscopal Palace a 'Nativity' and an 'Adoration of the Shepherds;' Santa Croce, an 'Ascension;' and Santa Maria Nuova, a 'Baptism of Christ by St. John.' In the chapel of the Palazzo Pitti are two small altar-pieces by him, a 'Nativity' and an 'Adoration of the Magi.' In much of his work an exaggerated imitation of Michelangelo is evident. He was a member of the Academy at Florence, and in that city he died in 1605, according to Balducci. He produced a number of pen-and-ink and indian-ink drawings, and made many designs for tapestries. His works have been engraved to the number of 388. In 1578 was published at Antwerp a volume entitled 'Stradani Venationes Ferarum, Avium, Piscium,' &c., illustrated with ninety-four plates after Van der Straet's designs. The Vienna Gallery has a 'Scourging of Christ' and a 'Feast of the Gods,' by him.

VAN DER STRAETEN, HENDRIK, (or VAN DER STRAETEN,) a native of Holland, was born about the year 1665. Without the help of a master he became a successful landscape painter. About the year 1690 he visited England, where he met with great encouragement, but spent his money as fast as he made it. Walpole tells the following story of his improvidence: "One day sitting down to paint, he could do nothing to please himself. He made a new attempt with no better success. Throwing down his pencils, he stretched himself out to sleep, when thrusting his hand inadvertently into his pocket he found a shilling; swearing an oath, he said, 'It is always thus when I have any money. Get thee gone,' continued he, throwing the shilling out of the window, and returning to his work, produced one of his best pictures." The better pictures of Van der Straeten resemble those of Ruysdael and Hobbema in style. Towards the latter part of his life, his expensive habits reduced him to the necessity of despatch, and his last pictures are the mere shadows of their predecessors. He is probably identical with NICOLAS VAN DER STRAETEN, who is stated to have come to London, and to have died there in 1722.

VAN DER STRATEN, JORIS, a Flemish portrait painter, resided in Portugal about the middle of the 16th century. This appears by an order from the queen to pay him 7600 reis for the portrait of Dom Antonio, and his receipt for the money, signed Joons Van dr Z Estraten, July 4, 1556. He received a further sum of 80 cruzades for painting the portrait of Dom Sebastiaen, the youngest son of the queen, on December 14, of the same year.

VAN DER ULFT, JAKOB, was born at Gorcum in 1627. It is not known under whom he studied, but at first he appears to have been a painter on glass; and some windows by him in the churches of Gorcum, and in Guelderland, are little inferior to those of Dirk and Wouter Crabeth. It is conjectured, however, from his style that he was a pupil of Jan Both, and that he may have studied in Italy. Later in life he distinguished himself as a painter of small historical pictures. He often painted subjects from Roman History, processions, and markets, in which he introduced the most remarkable views in Rome and the vicinity. He also painted Dutch scenery. He understood perspective and architectural details, and his works are generally crowded with figures, well grouped and draped. His pictures are rare out of Holland. It is said, we do not know on what authority, that he painted a view of London Bridge. He also etched. The exact time of his death is not known, but it was later than 1688. Among his pictures we may name :

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	An Italian Port.
"	"	An Italian Town.
"	"	A Market-place in Italy.
Berlin.	Museum.	Market with Temple Ruins. ( A masterpiece. ) 1671.
Dresden.		Landscape with ruins and figures.
Haarlem.	Museum.	The Forum at Rome.
Hague.	Museum.	Roman Army on the March. 1671.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	The Triumph of Scipio.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	The Bride of Allucius before Scipio. 1674.

VAN DER VAART, JAN, was born at Haarlem in 1647. He came to England in 1674, and studied under Thomas Wijck. He began with portraits and still-life, but after a while was employed by William Wissing in painting draperies. In 1713 he abandoned art and took to repairing pictures; but ultimately he made yet another change, and became a mezzotint engraver. He died in London in 1721. He was the master of John Smith in mezzotint. We have by him a few portraits, indifferently scraped; among them are the following :

King Charles II.; after Wissing.
Ann Scott, Duchess of Monmouth; after Kneller.
Robert Fielding, called the Beau; after Lely.
Edward Weteuball, Bishop of Cork; ad vivum del.

VAN DER VALCK, SIMON, a goldsmith and painter, who flourished at Delft or Leyden about 1615.

VAN DER VAST. This name is said to be affixed to some etchings of landscape.

VAN DER VENNE, ADRIAEN, was born at Delft in 1589, and after being for a while under Simon Van der Valck, goldsmith at Delft, became a scholar of Jerome van Diest. From 1618 to 1624 he was established at Middelburg, but in 1625 he was at the Hague, and his name occurs in the archives of that city from that year onwards. He was a foundation member of the Pictura Society in 1656. He painted history, allegory, landscapes, hunting and battle pieces, and conflagrations. He showed to most advantage when he restricted himself to grisaille, which he took to late in life. As a designer he furnished vignettes for an edition of the works of the Dutch poet, Cats, and for various printers of his time. He was also a poet, too, himself, and published several satires. He was a warm partisan of the House of Orange and of the Reformed Religion. He died at the Hague, November 12, 1662. Some of his pictures are immense, but they are nevertheless very numerous. The following may be named :

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	Prince Maurice of Nassau, with his Brothers and Cousins, all mounted.
"	"	The Fishers for Souls, an allegory, with numerous portraits. ( And four others. )
Berlin.	Museum.	Summer (1604), Winter (1604).
Brunswick.	Gallery.	Gipsy Family.
Cassel.	Gallery.	An old Castle.
Christianaia.		Market Place.
Hague.	Museum.	Ronde de Gueux.
Paris.	Louvre.	Peace Festivities of 1609, for the treaty between the Dutch and the Archduke Albert.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	Prince Frederick Henry of Orange.

VAN DER VENNE, HUBERT, the son of Adriaen van der Venne, was born at the Hague. He painted bas-reliefs, groups of children, vases, and other decorations, chiefly in grisaille. His name was inscribed on the Pictura registers at the Hague in 1665. PIETER VAN DER VENNE, probably another son of Adriaen, was a member of the Guild of S. Luke, at the Hague, in 1639, and a foundation member of the Pictura Society in 1656.

VAN DER VINNE, or VAN DER VENNE, the name of a family of artists of Frisian origin settled at Haarlem. 'Venne,' or 'Fenne,' the original form, is equivalent to the English 'Fen.'

VAN DER VINNE, IZAAK, a Dutch engraver, son of Vincent Laurenszoon van der Vinne, was born at Haarlem in 1665, and entered the Guild in 1690. He etched landscapes and sea-pieces, among them twelve views in the environs of Haarlem, after Pieter Bout. He also etched after A. van Ostade and T. Wijck. He subsequently became a publisher at Haarlem, and died in that city in 1740.

VAN DER VINNE, JAKOB, born at Haarlem in 1688, was the son of Laurens the elder, and worked both as painter and engraver. He died in 1737. His son LAURENS, called the younger to distinguish him from his grandfather, painted landscapes with cattle. Born at Haarlem in 1712, he entered the Guild in 1735, and died in 1742.

VAN DER VINNE, JAN LAURENSZOOM, was the son of Laurens the elder. He was born at Haarlem in 1699, and died in 1753. He painted landscapes, flowers, &c. He had two sons, VINCENT, (q. v.) and JAN, born 1734, died 1805, who was an engraver and draughtsman.

VAN DER VINNE, JAN, elder son of Vincent Laurenszoon van der Vinne, was born at Haarlem in 1663, and was a scholar of his father and Jan Wijck. In 1686 he came to England, where he painted hunting subjects and horse-races. Some of these are respectable, and show artistic knowledge, but others are mere house decorating.

Wainscot panels by him are occasionally to be found in old houses. On his return to Haarlem he continued to paint hunting-pieces, and occasionally skirmishes. He acquired wealth by his art, and towards the end of his life combined it with the manufacture of silk. He died at Haarlem in 1721.

VAN DER VINNE, LAURENS, the elder, the son of Vincent Laurenszoon van der Vinne, was born at Haarlem in 1658, and was instructed by his father, whose style he attempted to follow. He never rose above mediocrity, and his principal merit consisted in the imitative painting of flowers and plants, on which he was much employed by the botanists of his time. He painted landscapes and cattle, in the manner of Berchem, under whom he had studied, and also engraved. He entered the Guild at Haarlem in 1685, and died in the same city in 1729.

VAN DER VINNE, VINCENT, was the son of Jan Laurenszoon van der Vinne, and was born at Haarlem in 1736. During his youth he painted fruit and flower pieces, but afterwards adopted landscape and cattle painting. He was much employed in decorating rooms with designs on canvas. He also engraved, and painted both original pictures and copies in water-colour. He was for a while director of the Art Collection in the Teyler Museum, and also carried on a trade in works of art. He died at Haarlem in 1811. There is a landscape by him in the Haarlem Museum.

VAN DER VINNE, VINCENT LAURENSZOOM, was born at Haarlem in 1629. In 1647 he was placed under the tuition of Frans Hals. In 1649 he entered the Guild, and in 1652-3 travelled in Germany, Switzerland, and France, residing some time in Paris; and wherever he went, his ability insured him employment. In 1657 he returned to Haarlem, where he passed the remainder of his life. He painted large historical and allegorical subjects, portraits, landscapes, buildings, animals, still-life, and drolleries; and in each discovered much facility of execution, and insight into nature. His skill in the execution of heraldic shields procured him the name of the 'Raphael' of signs. Towards the end of his life, desire of gain induced him to grasp at every commission offered, and his last works are negligent and hasty. His best works are his portraits, in many of which he approaches Hals, under whose name it is probable that many pass. He died in 1702. The New York Museum possesses a 'Male and Female Toper' by him. There is a picture ascribed to a younger Vincent Laurenszoon de Vinne, and dated 1729, in the Haarlem Museum.

VAN DER VLIET, HENDRIK CORNELISZ, painter, was the nephew of Willem van der Vliet, and was born at Delft about 1612. He was the pupil of his uncle and of Michiel Mierevelt. For some time he practised portraiture, but afterwards distinguished himself as a painter of perspectives and views of church interiors in the style of Emanuel de Witte. He often painted scenes by torch-light. His pictures are decorated with figures correctly drawn. He showed much skill in his management of chiaro-scuro, and in some of his pictures introduced effects of light in the manner of Schalcken. He died at Delft, in October, 1675. The following are well-known works by him :

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	The Old Church of Delft. 1654.
"	"	Female portrait.
Berlin.	Museum.	Interior of a Gothic church.

Copenhagen.	Museum.	The old Soldier and his Family.
Ghent.	Museum.	Two Gothic interiors, with figures.
Haarlem.	Museum.	Female portrait. 1671.
Hague.	Museum.	The New Church of Delft.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	Interior of a Gothic Church.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	Interior of a Protestant Church, with figures.

One HENDRIK WILLEMSZ VAN DER VLIET, who is inscribed in the Guild at Delft in 1632, is by some assumed to be identical with the above, by others to be a contemporary artist. The Berlin Catalogue, however, says that his death in 1650 is recorded in the Registers, which would establish his separate identity.

VAN DER VLIET, JAN JORIS, a Dutch painter and etcher, was born at Delft about 1610, and was one of the numerous disciples of Rembrandt. Of his works as a painter little is known. In the Berlin Museum a 'Rape of Proserpine,' long ascribed to him, is now given, on the authority of Waagen and others, to Rembrandt himself. The Rotterdam Museum has a portrait of an old man in Oriental costume by him. The date of his death is unknown. He has left about ninety etched plates, most of which are after Rembrandt, a few after J. Lievens, and some from his own designs. They produce a striking effect; the lights being broad and clear, and the shadows dark. His drawing, however, is incorrect, and his draperies clumsy and mannered. He sometimes signed his plates with his name, and sometimes used a monogram. The following are his principal works:

- Bust of a Man, with his face in shadow. 1634. After Rembrandt.
- Bust of an old Man, with a turban and aigrette. Do.
- The Head of a Warrior. Do.
- An old Man with his hands joined, apparently in grief. 1634. Do.
- Bust of an Oriental Character, with a fur cap. Do.
- An Old Woman reading. (One of his best prints.) Do.
- Woman laughing. Do.
- Lot and his Daughters; very fine. Do.
- The Baptism of the Eunuch. Do.
- St. Jerome praying in a cavern, with a book and a crucifix. (His finest print.) Do.
- Jacob obtaining his Father's Blessing instead of Esau; after Lievens.
- Susanna and the Elders. Do.
- The Resurrection of Lazarus. Do.
- An Assembly of Peasants regaling; after his own design.
- The Rat-catcher. Do.
- A set of twenty-two plates of the Arts and Trades. Do.
- The five Senses. Do.

VAN DER VLIET, WILLEM, born at Delft in 1584, painted historical subjects and portraits somewhat in the dry style of Mierevelt. His works are rare, and little is known of his life. He died in 1642. The National Gallery, the Brussels Museum, and the Liechtenstein Gallery contain portraits by him.

VAN DER VOORT, CORNELIS, (or VAN DER VOERST,) a portrait painter of the Dutch school, was born at Antwerp about 1576. He settled at Amsterdam, and studied, perhaps, under Cornelius Ketel. He died at Amsterdam in 1632. In the Museum of that city there are seven of his works. His son PIETER was also a painter.

VAN DER VOORT, MICHEL, (or VERVOORT,) an obscure painter and engraver, who flourished about 1745. His name is affixed to a spirited etching, representing boys playing with musical instruments.

VAN DER WAL, J., an obscure Dutch painter, born at the Hague in 1728. He became a member of the Academy at the Hague in 1775, and about that year settled at Amsterdam. He died in 1788.

VAN DER WAL, JAKOB, a Dutch painter, born at Haarlem in 1644. He was a pupil of Adriaen Van Ostade, and was dean of the Guild of S. Luke in 1688. He died in 1720.

VAN DER WALL, WILLEM RUTGAART, born at Utrecht in 1756, was an excellent painter of landscapes and animals; he also drew the figure with remarkable correctness. He was the instructor of Jan Kobel. He was received into the Painters' Guild in 1795, and died in his native city in 1813.

VAN DER WERFF, ADRIAAN, was born at Kralinger-Ambacht, near Rotterdam, in 1659. Having discovered an early disposition for art, he was placed under the care of Cornelis Picolet, a portrait painter, under whom he remained two years, after which he worked under Eglon van der Neer. When he was seventeen years of age he left Van der Neer, and established himself at Rotterdam. He became intimately acquainted with a M. Flink, who possessed a collection of Italian drawings, to which he had at all times access, and it was from these that he formed that coldly correct method of design which used to be so much admired. In 1696, the Elector Palatine visited Holland, and, in passing through Rotterdam, was particularly struck with the works of Van der Werff. He commissioned him to paint a 'Judgment of Solomon,' and his own portrait, for the Grand Duke of Tuscany, inviting him to bring the two pictures, when finished, to Düsseldorf. The following year Van der Werff delivered his pictures, which were so greatly admired that the painter had to engage to devote six months in the year to the service of the Elector, for which he received a liberal pension. In 1703 Van der Werff was ennobled, and in 1722 he died, at Rotterdam. Van der Werff made some attempts in modelling; he was also author of the plans for the Rotterdam Exchange. List of his more notable and accessible works:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Family Group, with his own Portrait, and those of Wife and Daughter. ( And seven others. )
Berlin.	Museum.	Pastoral scene.
Dresden.	Gallery.	The Judgment of Paris. The Dismissal of Hagar. ( And ten others. )

Edinburgh.	Nat. Gal.	A Burgomaster and his wife.
Glasgow.	Gallery.	Samson and Delilah. Two female portraits.
"	"	The Flight into Egypt. 1710.
"	"	A Portrait.
London.	Dulwich Gal.	The Judgment of Paris.
"	Buckingham Pal.	Lot and his daughters. ( And two others. )
Munich.	Pinakothek.	Nocturnal Concert. ( And thirty-three others. )
Paris.	Louvre.	Adam and Eve. ( And six others. )
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Bathsheba presenting Abishag to David.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	The Entombment. Charity.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Male portrait.

VAN DER WERFF, PIETER, the younger brother of Adriaan van der Werff, was born at Kralinger-Ambacht in 1665, and was instructed in art by his brother. He for some time confined himself to copying the works of the latter; but he afterwards painted pictures of his own, occasionally history, but more frequently domestic subjects and small portraits, in which he was much employed. One of his best pictures is a group portrait of Directors of the Dutch East India Company. Without equalling those of his brother in finish, the pictures of Pieter van der Werff are highly wrought. He died at Rotterdam after 1721. The Amsterdam Museum has five pictures by him, that of Rotterdam, six, including his own portrait.

VAN DER WEYDEN, GOSWYN, was born at Brussels in 1465, and was free of the Guild of S. Luke, at Antwerp, in 1503. He is noted as the master of numerous apprentices between 1504 and 1513. He is known to have composed a triptych for the church of Tongerlo, representing the Death, Assumption, and Coronation of the Virgin, in which he called himself the grandson of Roger, the Apelles of his age. The triptych was dated 1535.

VAN DER WEYDEN, ROGER, the younger. Many pictures are now ascribed to a painter of this name, who is asserted to have been a grandson of Roger Van der Weyden the elder. There are traces of such a painter in the Antwerp Guild-book for 1528, but nothing is known of the pictures he may have painted. The National Gallery catalogue, which puts his name to four pictures, says he was born at Brussels about 1450, and died in 1529. The works given to him are clearly of the most various origin, though some bear traces of direct affiliation with Roger. Those in the National Gallery are as follows:

Portraits of himself and wife. (Fine panels, in a style which seems a development from that of Roger.)
The Magdalen. (School of Van Eycks.)

VAN DER WEYDEN, ROGER, (ROGER OF BRUGES, ROGER OF BRUSSELS, RUGGIERO DA BRUGIA, MAESTRO ROGEL, ROGER DE LA PASTURE, &c.), was born at Tournai in 1400. He was apprenticed to an obscure local painter named ROBERT CAMPIN, with whom he was at work in 1426. It is probable that before this he had followed some other trade; according to the chronicle of the Carthusians of Enghien, he was already married when he became an apprentice. In 1432 he was made free of the Guild at Tournai, and in 1436 we find him painter in ordinary to the city of Brussels, for in that year it was resolved, on the 2nd of May, "that after the death of Master Roger, the office of town-painter should be suppressed." About this time Roger painted four pictures for the Hall of Justice in the Brussels Town-hall. These have been lost. Their subjects were: 'The Justice of Trojan,' 'Gregory the Great receiving the head of Trojan,' 'The Justice of Judge Herkenbald,' 'The Miraculous Communion of Herkenbald.' Roger's designs are preserved in a set of tapestries in Berne cathedral. As early as 1449, Cyriacus noticed Roger as second only to Jan Van Eyck; and a few years later Facio spoke of the same master as Van Eyck's pupil. This error was copied by Vasari, and by subsequent writers down to our own time. At last, however, more careful criticism and increased industry in the tracing out of facts, have shown that the two men were at the head of two different art movements, and that while Van Eyck was gifted with the finer individuality, Roger exercised a profounder influence on contemporaries and successors. The earliest pictures by Roger of which the approximate dates are known, are those which compose the triptych from the Charterhouse of Miraflores, near Burgos, now in the Berlin Museum. They were given to the Monastery by John II. of Spain, in 1445, and are described in its books as "by the great and famous Fleming Magistro Rogel." About this time Roger kept a regular bottega for all kinds of painter's work at Brussels. In 1439, Philip the Good ordered some carved work for the Récollets church, at Brussels, which Roger coloured "for the sum of forty ridders of fifty gros of Flanders." He also painted the arms of the Duke and Duchess on the doors for six livres. Shortly before 1450, Roger had finished the great altarpiece in the hospital of Beaune, a commission from Rollin, the Chancellor of Burgundy. About the same time he painted for the Flemish family of Bracque the triptych now belonging to the Duke of Westminster. In 1449 Roger visited Italy, proceeding, perhaps, by way of Milan, to Ferrara; and thence, perhaps, through Florence, to Rome. Either in Florence or Rome, which he reached in 1450, he painted for Cosmo de' Medici, 'The Madonna with SS. Peter, John, Cosmus, and Damianus,' now at Frankfurt. Other pictures he finished in Italy—a 'Madonna meeting Christ on the road to Calvary,' which found its way to Naples; a 'Woman bathing,' which Facio saw at Genoa—and yet, on his return to Flanders, he set himself to carry out the many commissions with which he was welcomed in exactly the style he carried away with him. Among his patrons on his return were Pierre Bladelin, treasurer of the Golden Fleece and founder of Middelburg in Flanders, for whom he painted the altarpiece which has migrated from Middelburg church to the Berlin Museum; and Jean Robert, abbot of S. Aubert of Cambrai, for whom he painted an altarpiece identical, perhaps, with one in the Madrid Gallery, but uncatalogued. Van der Weyden never signed or dated any of his pictures, and so their authorship and chronological order is generally a matter of internal evidence. The list of pictures given below excludes those numerous works ascribed to him which are unworthy of his reputation. Roger was married, perhaps about 1424, to Elizabeth Goffaerts, a lady of his own rank in life. He was of independent means, having money out at interest at Tournai and in the "domaine de Brabant." He had four children—Cornelius; Margaret, born at Tournai in 1432, died 1450; Peter, born at Brussels in 1437; John, born at Brussels in 1438, died 1468. For the last twenty years of his life Roger owned a house at the corner of the Montagne de la Cour, which remained in his family down at least to 1511. That he was an excellent citizen appears from many fragments of evidence. Lampsonius belauded him. He endowed the monastery of Hérinnes with four hundred crowns, and was equally liberal to the Carthusians of Scheut. In 1462 he was affiliated to the brotherhood of the Holy Cross, in the church of Caudenberg, by Brussels. Van der Weyden died at Brussels on the 16th June, 1464, and was buried in the nave of S. Gudule. There, many years later, his wife was also interred, but she was still living in 1477.

VAN DER WILLINGEN, PIETER, was born at Bergen-op-Zoom about 1607. He painted still-life, gold and silver vases, books, and musical instruments, which are highly finished, and produce a truthful effect. He practised at Antwerp, and died in 1694. His brother and pupil, JAN, also worked at Antwerp, and died there in 1693.

VAN DER WILT, THOMAS, a Dutch painter and mezzotint engraver, was born at Piershil in 1659. He was a pupil of Jan Verkolje, and painted portraits and genre subjects in the style of Poelenburg. He exercised his profession at Delft, and died there in 1733. In the Berlin Gallery there is an interior, with a lady and gentleman playing draughts, by him. He scraped several plates after Brouwer, Schalken, and other masters.

VAN DER WILT, F—, painter and mezzotint engraver, was a contemporary of Thomas Van der Wilt. Nagler ascribes two plates to him, but little is known of his life.

VAN DER WOESTINE, ROGER, a Flemish painter of the 15th century, identical with ROGER DE BRUESLE, or ROEGERE VAN BRUESELE, who was 632 formerly confused with Roger van der Weyden. It has been ascertained that he was made free of the Guild at Ghent in 1414, but none of his works can be pointed to.

VANDI, SANTE, an Italian portrait painter, born in 1653. He was a pupil of Cignani. In early life he painted at Bologna, but was afterwards employed at Mantua, and other cities in Central Italy. He had constant commissions, and left a great number of portraits, chiefly of a small size. He died at Loreto in 1716.

VANDYKE, PETER, an Anglo-Flemish portrait painter, was born in 1729. At the invitation of Sir Joshua Reynolds, he came to England and worked as his assistant. He afterwards settled at Bristol, where he obtained a good practice. Several of his works appeared at the Incorporated Society, and at the Free Society between 1762 and 1772. There are by him:

London. Nat. Port. Gall. Portrait of Coleridge.

" " " Southey.

VANGELISTI, VINCENZO, an Italian engraver, was born at Florence about 1740. He visited Paris when young, where he became a pupil of Ig. Hugford and Johann Georg Wille. Leopold II. invited him in 1766 to Milan, where he became professor in the Academy, and in 1790 first director of the School of Engraving instituted by that prince. He committed suicide in 1798, having previously defaced his plates. He had several pupils, who distinguished themselves as engravers; among them, Longhi, who succeeded him, and F. Anderloni. His masterpiece is the 'Pyramus and Thisbe,' from a picture attributed to Guido, but in reality by De la Hire. The following plates are also by him:

Armand de Bourbon, Prince de Condé.

Georges Louis, Comte de Buffon; after A. de Pujol.

Satyr and Nymph; after Van Loo.

The Virgin and Child; after Raphael.

Venus chastising Cupid; after Agost. Carracci.

VANNI, ANDREA, was born at Siena in 1332, and in conjunction with Bartolo di maestro Fredi, began to paint in 1353. He seems to have been of some consideration in his native city, having been elected a member of the Great Council in 1370, Gonfaloniere in 1371, sent as Envoy to the Pope at Avignon in 1372, on a mission to Florence in 1373, and again as Envoy to the Pope, at Naples, in 1384. Many examples exist of his paintings between 1353 and 1414 in Naples and its vicinity. At the chapel of St. Catherine of Siena, in the church of San Domenico, Naples, can be found the remains of a fresco painted by him to commemorate the life of that saint, who was a correspondent and perhaps a relation of his own. About the year 1400, he painted her portrait with scenes from the life of St. James, in a chapel in San Jacomo Interciso, but these works have now disappeared. He also decorated three chapels in the cathedral of Siena; finished other work on its façade in 1380; and in 1398 painted an 'Annunciation' for the same building. He died about 1414. The church of San Stefano, and the Academy of Siena, also possess examples of this artist.

VANNI, Cavaliere FRANCESCO, was born at Siena in 1565, and was taught the rudiments of design by his step-father, Arcangiolo Salimbene, who died when Francesco was still very young. When he was sixteen years of age he went first to Bologna and afterwards to Rome, entering the school of Giovanni de' Vecchi, studying also under such men as Baroccio, whose style he imitated with success. Returning to Siena, he afterwards worked at Parma, Bologna, and again at Rome, where he painted a 'Simon Magus' for St. Peter's. He painted several other pictures for Roman churches; the most important are, 'St. Michael vanquishing the rebel Angels,' in the sacristy of S. Gregorio; a 'Pietà,' in S. Maria in Vallicella; and the 'Assumption,' in S. Lorenzo in Miranda. At Siena there is a 'Marriage of S. Catharine,' in the chapel of Il Refugio; and a 'S. Raimondo walking on the Sea,' in the church of the Dominicans. Vanni finally returned to Siena, and died there in 1609. He etched a few plates. The following works may be named:

Dresden.	Gallery.	Holy Family.
Florence.	Pal. Pitti.	S. Francis in Ecstasy.
"	Uffizi.	Joseph made known to his Brethren.
Genoa.	Pal. Spinola.	S. Catharine of Siena.

VANNI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Pisa or Florence in 1599; he studied successively under Empoli, Aurelio Lomi, and Matteo Roselli, and then became a disciple of Cristoforo Allori. Of his works as a painter, the most important is a San Lorenzo, in the church of San Simone, at Florence. He is, however, better known as an engraver than as a painter. He died at Florence in 1660. Of his etchings, the following are the best:

A set of fifteen Plates from Correggio's frescoes in the cupola of San Giovanni, Parma.
The Martyrdom of S. Placido; after the same.
The Marriage at Cana; after Paolo Veronese.

VANNI, LIPPO, a Siennese artist living in the 14th century, whose name first appears on the Guild in 1355. He was a miniaturist, and painted for the Spedale in 1344. In 1352 he executed a 'Coronation of the Virgin,' for the Biccherna. In 1359 he, together with Nello Betti, executed some work in the Palazzo Pubblico, and in 1372 he painted an 'Annunciation,' in the cloisters of San Domenico at Siena, portions of which work still exist. The latest fact recorded of him is that in 1375 he received six gold florins and thirty-one soldi for painting the doors of the great crucifix in the cathedral of Siena. The dates of his birth and death are unknown.

VANNI, NELLO DI, a Pisan painter of the 14th century, and pupil of Andrea Orcagna. He painted for the cathedral of his native town, and also worked for the Campo Santo. He is conjectured to be identical with BERNARDO NELLO DI GIOVANNI FALCONE, q. v.

VANNI, RAFFAELLO, a son of Francesco Vanni, was born at Siena in 1596, and received his first instruction from his father, whom he lost, however, when he was only thirteen. He was afterwards sent to Rome, and recommended to the care of Antonio Carracci. The works of his contemporary,

Pietro da Cortona, appear to have had a peculiar fascination for him. His 'Birth of the Virgin,' in the Pace, is entirely Cortonesque; as are his paintings in Santa Maria del Popolo. There is a 'Marriage of S. Catharine' by him in the Pitti Palace, and other pictures at Siena and Pisa. He was a member of the Academy of S. Luke in 1655, and died probably in 1657. His brother, MICHELANGELO VANNI, is better known as the inventor of a process of making pictures by staining marble than as an artist in the strict sense.

VANNI, TURINO, painter, was born at Rigoli, a small village near Pisa, in the 14th century. The records of Pisa show that he worked for the cathedral between 1390 and 1395. He was an imitator of Taddeo Bartoli. In the church of San Paolo, Ripò d'Arno, Pisa, is an enthroned Virgin and Child with saints, and adored by four kneeling figures, signed TURINUS VANNIS DE REGULI DEPINXIT A.D. MCCCXCVII. MADLI. He has also left:

Palermo.	Convent of S. }	Madonna with Angels and
"	Marino. }	Saints.
Paris.	Louvre.	Madonna (signed TURINUS VANNIS DE PISIS ME FIGIT).

VANNINI, OTTAVIO, born at Florence in 1585, was first a disciple of Giovanni Battista Mercati, but afterwards studied under Anastasio Fontebuoni, and ultimately entered the school of Passignano, whom he assisted in many of his public works. He died in 1643. His best works were in fresco. Pictures:

Florence.	Uffizi.	Tancred and Erminia.
"	Pal. Pitti.	Ecce Homo.
Pisa.	S. Anna.	The Communion of St. Jerome.

VANNUCCI, PIETRO, commonly called PIETRO PERUGINO, was born in 1446, at Città della Pieve. It is not known for certain who his first Umbrian master was, but it was probably either Benedetto Buonfigli or Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. It is known that he acted as assistant to Piero della Francesca, at Arezzo, and that about the year 1475 he was a fellow-student with Leonardo da Vinci and Lorenzo di Credi, in the studio of Verrochio, at Florence. To this time Giovanni Santi refers in his rhymed chronicle, in which he calls Perugino, 'Pier della Pieve.' The earliest important commissions intrusted to Perugino were those for frescoes in the upper hall of the Palazzo Comunale at Perugia, painted in 1475, and in a chapel at Cerqueto, painted in 1478. All these have now perished, so it is probable that the oldest existing examples of his monumental art are the frescoes in the Sistine Chapel at Rome. On these he began to work about 1480. If we may accept the Com. Morelli's opinion, only one now remains, the 'Chargé to Peter.' Three of the original five mentioned by Vasari were removed to make room for Michelangelo's 'Last Judgment,' while the fourth, the 'Baptism of Christ,' as well as a sixth picture, the 'Journey of Moses,' of which Vasari says nothing, but which was long assigned to Perugino, Morelli ascribes to Pinturicchio. During Perugino's intermittent stay, extending over some ten years altogether, in Rome, he was also employed in the Vatican 'Stanze,' but his pictures there were removed, with a few unimportant exceptions, to make way for the frescoes of his pupil, Raphael. The money he had earned in Rome was not paid to him in full until 1491. Between 1482 and 1493 he was often in Florence. In the latter year he married one Chiara Fancelli, a native of Mantua, and in 1496 he bought a site for a house; but, although he settled in Florence, he kept up his rights in Perugia, and perhaps a studio, for it was in the last years of the 15th century that he received the boy Raphael as a pupil. The exact date, which is a matter of dispute, is not of vital importance in the story of Perugino's career. In his early practice Perugino used tempera in easel pictures; then came a period of experiment, followed by one in which he used the oil method with complete comprehension and mastery. It has been suggested that the secret, so far as it was one, had been communicated to him by Antonello da Messina, who was established in the latter years of the century at Venice, where, as we know from documentary evidence, Perugino was for a time in 1494. In 1493 he had not yet mastered the oil process. In the Uffizi there is a male portrait by him which recent investigation has proved to be that of a Florentine, Francesco delle Opere, who died in Venice in 1496. It is painted in oil, with complete skill, and therefore strengthens our belief that Perugino finally learnt the method in Venice, about 1494. Between 1496 and 1499 he painted several altar-pieces, and, among other frescoes, that of the 'Crucifixion,' which still exists in the Chapter-house of S. Maria Maddalena dei Pazzi. In 1500 he finished the frescoes in the Cambio, at Perugia; the 'Assumption,' for the convent of Vallombrosa, and the 'Marriage of the Virgin,' now at Caen. In 1505 he painted the 'Triumph of Chastity,' now in the Louvre, for the Marchese Isabella of Mantua, and in these latter years paid a second visit to Rome, painting in the Stanze, where one of his ceilings, that in the Camera del Incendio, was preserved by the good feeling of his pupil, Raphael. Between 1515 and 1523 he was chiefly engaged on minor works for provincial patrons, among them the 'St. Sebastian' and the 'Transfiguration,' both in the Bologna Gallery, and a 'Nativity,' now in the South Kensington Museum, which was painted for the church at Fontignano, near Perugia, and is probably the last work he touched. Perugino died at Fontignano in 1523.

Among his pupils were Raphael, Giovanni di Pietro, called Lo Spagna, Eusebio di San Giorgio, and Pinturicchio. Besides the works already mentioned, we may enumerate the following pictures by Perugino:

 VAPRIO, AGOSTINO DA, was living in Pavia in the 15th century, and was one of the artists employed by Ludovico Sforza, in Milan, in 1490. He is the author of an altar-piece in San Rino, Pavia, a Virgin and Child, with Saints and donor, dated 1499.

 VARCO, ALONSO DE, was born, according to Palomino, at Madrid, in 1645, and was a disciple of José Antolinez. He painted landscapes in the style of his instructor, and was much employed for the convents and the private collections of Madrid, in which city he died in 1680.
 VARCOLLIER, OSCAR, painter, was born at Rome of French parents in 1820. He was a pupil of Paul Delaroche, and worked in Paris, where he gained a medal of the third class in 1846, and where he died in the same year.
 VARDY, JOHN, well known as an architect, was also an engraver, and has left a spirited print representing the hall at Hampton Court. He died in 1765.
 VAREGE, —, was a close imitator, if not a scholar, of Cornelis Poelenburg. He flourished about the middle of the 17th century. He painted small landscapes with figures, generally on copper. He is not noticed by the Dutch or Flemish writers, and, from his name, it may be conjectured that he was of French origin.
 VARELLA, FRANCISCO, a Spanish painter, was born probably at Seville, about the end of the 16th century. He was a scholar of Pablo de las Roelas, and painted history with some success. He was employed in 1618 by the Carthusians of Santa Maria de las Cuevas to make copies of certain pictures painted by Gaudin for the Grande Charreusse, Grenoble. Bermudez notices a 'Last Supper,' in the church of San Bernardo, signed with his name, and dated 1622, as one of his best works. Others are his pictures of the 'Martyrdom of S. Vincent,' in the church dedicated to that saint; and an altar-piece representing St. Michael, in the convent of La Merced. There are also several of his pictures in the private collections at Seville, where he died in 1656.

VARENNE, — DE, a French painter of the 18th century, details as to whose life are unknown. He exhibited at the Salon in 1796-1798. The Angers Museum possesses a portrait by him.

VARENNE, CHARLES SANTOIRE DE, painter, was born in Paris in 1763, and was a pupil of Joseph Vernet. He settled in Poland, where he held the post of Professor at the Academy of Warsaw. He exhibited occasionally at the Salon in the early part of the 19th century. He died in Russia in 1834. His daughter DOROTHÉE, born in Paris about 1804, painted flowers and miniatures, and was a pupil of Redouté.

VARGAS, ANDRES DE, was born at Cuenca in 1613, and went while young to Madrid, where he studied under Francisco Camilo. Camilo obtained him commissions from churches and private persons. In the latter part of his life he practised at Cuenca, and died there in 1674.

VARGAS, LUIS DE, one of the most eminent Spanish painters of the 16th century, was born at Seville in 1502. Having acquired the elements of art in his native city he went to Rome, where his attention was mainly given to the works of Perino del Vaga. In all he passed twenty-eight years in Italy, returning to Spain about the middle of the century. The first picture he painted after his return was a 'Nativity,' for Seville cathedral, which still exists in the chapel for which it was painted. The date of its execution, 1555, Bermudez found in the records of the chapter, and the picture is inscribed Tunc discibam Luisius de Vargas. The better works of Vargas were painted in fresco, and unfortunately little of them now remains. Among the most remarkable was a Christ bearing His Cross, called 'La calle de la Amargura,' ('The Street of Bitterness,') which he painted in 1563-8. Criminals going to execution were allowed to stop before this picture to perform their devotions. About thirty years after its completion, it was repaired by Vasco Pereira, a Portuguese artist. The 'Last Judgment,' painted for the Casa de la Misericordia, is a wreck. The same fate has befallen the figures of the Apostles, Evangelists, and other Saints, which he painted in the cathedral tower in the last year of his life. Of his pictures in oil, the most admired is a genealogy of Christ, in which Adam is represented adoring the Virgin. It is called 'La Gamba,' ('the Leg,') on account of a much admired limb of the patriarch, as to which an ill-founded story used to be told that Perez Alesio had declared one limb of the Adam to be worth more than the whole of his own 'St. Christopher.' The portraits of De Vargas are excellent. He died at Seville in 1568.

Luis de Vargas was mild, benevolent, and charitable, suffering with patience the attacks and injuries of his rivals. In his house he led the life of an anchorite. At his death they found in the chamber to which he used to retire for his devotions, hair shirts, scourges, and other instruments of mortification, and even a coffin in which he was accustomed to repose and ruminate on death. And yet he could make a joke. A bad artist having painted a 'Christ on the Cross,' asked his opinion of the figure; Vargas replied, "It is well; it seems to be saying—Lord, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

VARIN, CHARLES NICOLAS, draughtsman and engraver, was born at Châlons-sur-Marne in 1741. He was the son of JEAN BAPTISTE VARIN, an engraver and chaser on metal. He studied engraving under Pierre Quentin Chedel, and also studied painting. For a time he directed a school of art founded by his father at Châlons, and was also curator of the Châlons musée. He eventually settled in Paris, and worked in conjunction with his brother Joseph, occasionally forwarding the plates of other engravers, notably those of Saint Aubin. He also produced several independent plates after Teniers, Wouwerman, Fragonard, Le Prince, &c.; and the costume plates for the 'Tableau de l'Empire Ottoman,' by D'Ohsson Mouradja, published in 1787. Varin died at Châlons, February 22nd, 1812.

VARIN, JEAN, (or WARIN,) a French draughtsman and engraver of the 17th century, better known as a medallist, was born at Liège in 1604, and died in 1672. In his last years he was superintendent of public buildings, and master of the mint.

VARIN, JOSEPH, an elder brother of Charles Nicolas Varin, was born at Châlons-sur-Marne in 1740. He studied under P. Q. Chedel and the Chev. de la Touche, at Châlons, and won medals of honour for his series of plates from the Rheims fêtes in 1765, on the occasion of the inauguration of a statue to Louis XV. in that city, and also for his large map of the Duchy of Burgundy. In both of these he was assisted by his brother, Charles Nicholas (q. v.). In 1760 the brother had settled in Paris, where they worked in conjunction. In 1791 they sent to the Salon a view of the Palais-Royal, and a perspective of a proposed place in Bordeaux. Joseph furnished plates for many publications of the day, among which we may name: the greater number of the plates for Blondel's 'Treatise on Architecture,' Montalembert's 'Treatise on Fortification,' Belin and Berthier's 'Instruction for the Royal Navy;' for the 'Voyage Pittoresque' of the Abbé St. Non, for Choiseul Gouffier's 'Travels in Greece,' for Cassas' 'Travels in Syria, Judæa, and Lower Egypt,' and for 'Architecture in relation to Art and Legislation,' by Ledoux. He also engraved the plates of antiquities for Sabbatier's 'Dictionary of Greek and Latin Authors.' He died in Paris, September 7th, 1800. Charles and Joseph Varin claimed descent from Jean Varin, the medallist.

VARIN, JOSEPH, the younger, draughtsman, engraver, and lithographer, born at Châlons-sur-Marne in 1796, was the son and pupil of Charles Niclas Varin. In his youth he served in the army, and was wounded at Waterloo. After the peace he was employed as superintendent of works at the Château de Neuilly. He was afterwards for a time professor at the Art School of his native town, but in 1820 came to Paris to study lithography under Chasteau. Finally settling at Châlons, he died there June 6th, 1843. He engraved and lithographed a few plates after Raphael and Girodet, and two plates from his own design are mentioned, one, an engraved portrait of the little King of Rome, the other an allegorical lithograph called 'La Patrie des Souvenirs,' proofs of which were sold for the benefit of the Poles.

VARIN, PIERRE AMADÉE, engraver and painter, the son of Joseph Varin the younger, was born at Châlons-sur-Marne in 1818. He was a pupil of Monvoisin, and worked in conjunction with his two brothers, PIERRE ADOPHE and EUGÈNE NAPOLEON, well-known engravers still practising in Paris. Many of his works were exhibited at the Salon between 1843 and 1882. He died at Crouttes (Aisne) in October 1883.

VARIN, QUENTIN, a French painter of the early 17th century, born at Beauvais, is now remembered chiefly as the first master of Nicholas Poussin. He studied at Beauvais and Amiens, and afterwards practised in Paris. He was presented to Marie de' Medicis, and commissioned to carry out decorations in the Luxembourg. Terror of the dangers of a court led him, however, to abandon the commission, and to go into hiding, with the result that Rubens was employed in his place. In the church at Les Andelys there are an 'Assumption' and a 'S. Vincent' by him; in S. Germain des Prés, a 'Presentation in the Temple.'

VARLEY, CORNELIUS, water-colour painter and brother of John Varley, was born at Hackney, November 21st, 1781. He was only ten years old at the death of his father, and was adopted by an uncle, a manufacturer of scientific instruments and apparatus. In his new home the boy acquired some knowledge of optics and chemistry, and seemed to show an inclination for mechanics, but about 1800 he left his uncle in consequence of some family disagreement, went to live with his brother John, and applied himself to the study of art. He never, however, lost his interest in scientific pursuits, and later on made some considerable improvements in optical instruments, for which he received the 'Isis' gold medal of the Society of Arts; for his invention of the graphic telescope he also received a gold medal at the Exhibition of 1851, and was an active member of the Society of Arts. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1803, but he was not a frequent contributor. He was, however, a foundation member and a zealous supporter of the Water-Colour Society. His pictures were chiefly classical landscapes, with groups of figures and architecture. He was a member of the Sketching Club, and had a good practice in London as a teacher of drawing. He died at Highbury, October 2, 1873. Among his best works we may name :

- A Mountain Pastoral. 1809.
- The Sleeping Shepherd. 1810.
- Evening. 1811.
- Palemon and Lavinia. 1811.
- View of Ardfort, Ireland. 1815.
- After Sunset, North Wales. 1803. (South Kensington Museum.)
- Ruius of Troy. 1819.
- The Vale of Tempé. 1820.

VARLEY, JOHN, an English landscape painter in water-colour, was born at Hackney in 1778. Owing to his father's objection to art he was placed with a silversmith, but on his parents' early death he obtained more congenial employment with a portrait painter. His true vocation was found with an architectural draughtsman, whom he accompanied in visits to various parts of England. In 1798 he first appeared at the Royal Academy with a 'View of Peterborough Cathedral.' He owed much to the group of painters which met at Dr. Monro's, where the foundation of the true English water-colour school was laid. Varley was one of the original members of the old Water-Colour

Society on its foundation in 1804, and he regularly contributed to its exhibitions. Though he worked assiduously with the brush, and had a good teaching connection, he did not secure himself a competence, and his later years were disturbed by pecuniary difficulties. He died in 1842. His works belong entirely to what may be called the middle period of the water-colour school, between the abandonment of the reed pen and the full development of the art. Works :

- Beddgelert Bridge. 1800. (South Kensington Museum.)
  - Pass of Llanberis. 1803. (Do.)
  - High Street, Conway. (Do.)
  - River Scene. 1840. (Do.)
  - Bolton Abbey. 1842. (Do.)
  - Pond at Wotton, near Dorking. (Do.)
  - Frognal, Hampstead. 1826. (Do.)
  - Illustration to 'The Bride of Abydos.' (Do.)
  - Burial of Saul. (Do.)
- (And twenty-six others.)

VARLEY, WILLIAM FLEETWOOD, water-colour painter, was born in 1777? He was the younger brother of John Varley, under whom he made his first studies in art. He exhibited at the Royal Academy at intervals from 1804 to 1817. He practised as a teacher of drawing in Cornwall, at Bath, and at Oxford, in which city he was nearly burnt to death through a foolish frolic of some of his pupils. He never recovered the shock, and, falling into ill-health, gave up work and became dependent on a son-in-law. He died at Ramsgate, February 2, 1858. Works :

- A Welsh Mountain scene. (South Kensington Museum.)
  - S. Michael's Mount, Cornwall. (Do.)
- (And three others.)

VAROTARI, ALESSANDRO, called IL PADOVANINO, was the son of the elder Dario Varotari, and born at Padua in 1590. His father dying when he was only six years of age, he was instructed in art by some painter unknown. He was sent to Venice when he was very young, where his talents procured him the pet name of 'Il Padovanino.' At Venice he studied the works of Titian, and entered so entirely into his manner, that he was considered one of his most successful followers. If his design had been equal to his colour, few painters of the Venetian school would have surpassed him. He generally selected subjects which admitted the introduction of the nude, in which he was as successful in the beauty of his carnations as deficient in design. With children and landscapes he was especially successful. He died in 1650. Among his best extant works are mentioned the following:

- |           |                           |                                     |

VAROTARI, CHIARA, was the daughter of Dario Varotari the elder, and flourished at Venice in the middle of the 17th century. She was instructed by her father, and is celebrated by Ridolfi and by Boschini for her talent as a portrait painter. The Uffizi has her own portrait painted by herself. She was still living in 1660. She was a poetess, and the author of an 'Apology for the Female Sex.'

VAROTARI, DARRO, the elder, a painter, sculptor, and architect, was born at Verona about 1539, and was descended from a Strasburg or Augsburg family of the name of 'Weyrotter.' He was a scholar of Paolo Veronese, and an imitator of Titian, particularly in the airs of his heads. His chief residence was at Padua, and some of his principal works are in the church of Sant' Egidio in that city. He died in 1596. The Venice Academy contains a 'Visitation of St. Elisabeth' by him.

VAROTARI, DARRO, the younger, was the grandson of the elder painter of the name, and son of Alessandro Varotari. He flourished about the year 1660, and was painter, engraver, poet, and physician. Though his pictures cannot now be identified, his portraits were very popular in their time. Bartsch describes two portraits engraved by him; one of his grandfather, Dario Varotari, the other of Vincentius Gussonus, Eq., both signed with his name. He painted rather as an amateur than for gain.

VASARI, GIORGIO, painter, architect, and writer, was born at Arezzo, July 30, 1511. He is said to have received his first instruction in design from a glass painter, named Guglielmo da Marcilla, but he was studying in Florence, first under Michelangelo, afterwards under Andrea del Sarto. During the siege of Florence, in 1529, Vasari moved successively to Pisa, Bologna, and back to Arezzo, where he made the acquaintance of Salviati, who gave him valuable assistance and advice. About this time he was brought to Rome by Cardinal Ippolito de' Medici, who had taken him under his protection, and by whose family he was afterwards loaded with riches and honours. In Rome he worked hard from the antique, from the works of Michelangelo, in the Sistine chapel, the frescoes of Raphael and Baldassare Peruzzi. Having acquired some reputation as a painter, he set himself to study architecture. He was employed as a painter in the Sala Regia; in the Sala della Cancelleria, where he painted, by the direction of Cardinal Farnese, a series of frescoes, representing the principal actions of Pope Paul III.; and in the church of S. Giovanni Decollato he painted the Martyrdom of that Saint, one of his best oil pictures. From Rome Vasari came to Florence, and entered the service of Alessandro and Ottaviano de' Medici. After the murder of Alessandro, he retired to Arezzo, but in 1553 he was invited to Florence, by Cosimo I., who employed him to superintend the works on which he was then engaged in the Palazzo Vecchio. Here, in the apartment of Clement VII., he painted that Pope crowning the Emperor Charles V.; and other events in his life. Vasari died at Florence, June 27, 1574. He had much facility as a draughtsman, but his compositions are mannered and without originality, and his colouring is cold and lifeless. He is at his best in his few portraits. Vasari is vastly more famous as a writer than as a painter. His great work is the history of artists, from the period of Cimabue till his own time, entitled 'Vite de più eccellenti Pittori, Scultori, e Architetti,' first published at Florence in two volumes in 1550, and republished with large additions and portraits, in three volumes, in 1568, and again in 1648. A fourth edition, published at Rome in 1749, was annotated by the learned priest, Giov. Bottari. Numerous later editions have appeared; the most valuable are: (1) that published by Passigli, at Florence, in 1832-38; it was edited by Montani of Cremona, and, on his decease, by Giovanni Maselli. (2) That published by Le Monnier, at Florence, between 1845 and 1856, and edited by a society of learned Italians. (3) The latest, most elaborate, and most trustworthy, the edition published by Sansoni, at Florence, in 1878-1885, edited and annotated by Gaetano Milanesi. There are also excellent translations into English and German, besides a very poor one into French. Vasari's pictures are very numerous in Italy; the following may be named:

Arezzo.	Academy.	The Banquet of Ahasuerus.
	Pinacoteca.	Virgin and Saints.
Berlin.	Museum.	Portrait of Cosmo I. ( one of many repetitions ).
Bologna.	Pinacoteca.	The Supper of S. Gregory.

VASARI, LAZZARO, great-grandfather of the historian Vasari, was born at Arezzo in 1399. He was a friend and co-worker of Piero della Francesca. Early in life he painted nothing but small ornamental figures in armour, banners, and the larger pictures of other artists; but at a later date he worked in fresco both at Arezzo and Perugia, and furnished designs to the glass painter Fabiano Sassali for the 'Madonna' and 'Resurrection' windows in the Madonna delle Grazie, Perugia. Lazzaro died in 1450. His son GIORGIO, grandfather to the biographer, also worked at Arezzo as a modeller and painter of pottery. He died in 1481.

VASCELLINI, CAJETANO or GAETANO, (or VACCELLINI,) an Italian engraver, was born at Castello San Giovanni, in the Bolognese, about 1745. He learned the principles of design from Ercole Graziani, was instructed in engraving by Carlo Faucci at Florence. He etched some original portraits of distinguished Florentines, and also engraved after various Italian masters. The following are among his principal plates:

Andrea del Sarto.
Daniello Ricciarelli da Volterra.
Cosimo I.; after the statue by Giovanni da Bologna.
S. Joseph and S. Francis of Paula; after Seb. Conca.
The penitent Magdalene; after F. Furini.
Venus; after Titian.
Danaë; after the same.
The Last Supper; after L. Signorelli.

VASCONI, FILIPPO, who flourished about the year 1720, engraved several views of Venice and its neighbourhood.

VASI, GIUSEPPE, Cavaliere, designer and engraver, was born at Corleone in Sicily in 1710. He was at first a painter, but afterwards went to Rome and studied under Sebastian Conca, P. L. Ghezzi, and Juvara. He engraved some of the designs for the decorations set up at the coronation of Ferdinand of Naples. He was employed on several views of the Harbour of Ancona for Benedict XIV., which confirmed his reputation. After this followed plates from the façades of San Giovanni in Laterano and Santa Maria Maggiore, and, for Charles III., of the Festivities on the birth of his son in 1745, which procured him the post of engraver to the court of Naples. He was also made a Knight of the Golden Spur. He died at Rome in 1782. He engraved some hundreds of plates from the buildings of that city, and also painted in the Farnese and Caprarola Palaces. Piranesi was his pupil.

VASLET, LEWIS, miniature painter, practised at York and Bath, towards the close of the 18th century. He was an occasional exhibitor at the Royal Academy, his last contribution being there in 1782.

VASQUEZ. See VAZQUEZ.

VASSALLO, ANTONIO MARIA, was a native of Genoa, and flourished about the year 1650. He was a scholar of Vincent Malo, of Cambray, who had studied under Rubens. Vassallo painted landscapes, animals, fruit, flowers, &c., which were well coloured, and touched with freedom. He also gave proof of considerable ability in historical subjects, but died young.

VASSEUR. See LE VASSEUR.

VASSILACCHI, ANTONIO, (or VASCIBRACCI,) called L'ALIENSE, was born in the Grecian island of Milo, in the Archipelago, in 1556. He was sent to Venice when he was young, where he became a scholar of Paolo Veronese. In 1574 he assisted Tintoretto and Paolo Veronese in decorating the city for the visit of Henry III. of Poland, and his share of the work attracted much notice. He visited Treviso, where he worked under Benedetto Caliari; and Padua, where he was influenced by Dario Varotari. A visit to Rome and the work of Michelangelo in the Sistine Chapel also told upon his style. An early work was a picture of 'St. Sebastian, with a glory of angels,' for the church of Santa Maria delle Vergine, and, on its being reported that it was from a design by Paolo Veronese, he determined to get rid of all the drawings he had made in that master's school, as a proof of his determination to abandon his style. He then applied himself to study Tintoretto, and, in a fair imitation of his manner, painted an 'Abraham sacrificing Isaac,' a 'Cain slaying Abel,' and a 'Brazen Serpent.' Several of the best productions of Aliense are in the Sala dello Scrutinio. He also painted in San Giorgio, Venice, and San Pietro, Perugia. He died at Venice in 1629.

VACHELET, THÉOPHILE AUGUSTE, a French historical and portrait painter, was born at Passy in 1802. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1822, and studied under Abel de Pujol and Hersent. In 1827 he obtained the second grand prix for his 'Coriolanus,' and in 1829 the first grand prix for a 'Jacob refusing to send Benjamin.' His works appeared at the Salon from 1830 to 1863, and he won all the orthodox honours up to the Legion of Honour. He had considerable practice in mural decorations, and executed works in the great hall and chapel of the Senate; at the churches of St. Germain l'Auxerrois and St. Eustache (but these are now destroyed), at the Tuileries and the Hôtel de Ville. He died in 1873. Amongst his easel pictures are:

Amiens.	Museum.	Christian Charity.
Versailles.	Palace.	The Surrender of Magdeburg.
"	"	Portrait of Prince Poniatowski.
"	"	Marshal Gouvion
"	"	St. Cyr.
"	"	Duc de Choiseul-Stainville, &c. &c.

VAUDECHAMP, JEAN JOSEPH, painter, born at Rambervillers (Vosges) in 1790. He was a pupil of Girodet. He painted a 'S. Carlo Borromeo' for the chapel in the Royal Tapestry Factory at Beauvais, and exhibited portraits and historical pictures at the Salon from 1817 onwards. He died in 1866.

VAUGHAN, ROBERT, an English engraver, who practised about the middle of the 17th century. He was chiefly employed on portraits and other plates for the booksellers, which are sought after for the sake of sitters rather than for their merit as art. He engraved a plate in Dugdale's 'Warwickshire,' and some of the maps; the prints for Morton's 'Ordinal,' and some of those for Ashmole's 'Theatrum Chemicum,' in 1651. Vertue informs us, that during the interregnum, Vaughan engraved a portrait of Charles II., to which he affixed so offensive an inscription, that after the Restoration he was prosecuted for it. He died towards 1667. Among others, the following portraits by him are extant:

- James I.
- Launcelot Andrews, Bishop of Winchester.
- Sir John Wynn of Gweddyr, Bart.
- George Clifford, Earl of Cumberland.
- John Fisher, Bishop of Rochester.
- Arthur Hildesham, Preacher at Ashby-de-la-Zouch.
- Sir Francis Drake. | Sir Walter Raleigh.
- Sir Thomas Lyttleton, Chief Justice of the King's Bench.
- Thomas Wilsford, Mathematician.
- Edward Terry, Rector of Greenford, Middlesex. 1655.
- (His latest known work.)
- Henry and Robert Vere, both Earls of Oxford.
- Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Stafford.
- James Usher, Bishop of Armagh.
- Sir George Crooke, Chief Justice of the King's Bench.
- Edward Turgis, Poet. | Ben Jonson, Poet.

VAUGHAN, WILLIAM, an English engraver, was probably related to Robert Vaughan, and flourished about the same time or slightly later. He also was principally employed by the booksellers. Three prints by him, engraved for a small folio pamphlet describing the 'Sufferings of Sir William Dick, of Braid,' are known. He also engraved a set of thirteen plates of animals for 'A Book of such Beasts as are most useful for drawing, graving, or arms painting and chasing (designed by F. Barlow, and engraved by William Vaughan);' 1664.

VAULOT, CLAUDE, a French subject and portrait painter, was born in 1818. He studied under Cogniet, and commenced to exhibit at the Salon in 1837. He practised in Paris, but his career was cut short by his early death in 1842.

VAUQUER, —, a native of France, who was probably a goldsmith by profession. He engraved, from his own designs, several plates of flowers and ornamental foliage, for a 'Livre des Fleurs propres pour orfèvres et graveurs.'

VAUROZE. See FRIQUET.

VAUTHIER, JULES ANTOINE, draughtsman, painter, and lithographer, was born in Paris in 1774. He was a pupil of Regnault, and won the second prize at the École des Beaux Arts in 1801. He exhibited a few pictures at the Salon, but was best known by his drawings for various publications on classic art. He died of cholera in Paris in 1832.

His brother, ANTOINE CHARLES, a natural history draughtsman, born in Paris in 1790, made the drawings for an edition of Buffon, and for the 'Dictionnaire classique d'Histoire naturelle,' both published by Beaudoine; also for the 'Collection des Papillons diurnes et crépusculaires de France,' published by Crévoit.

VAUZELLE, JEAN LUBIN, a French painter, born at Angerville in 1776, was a pupil of Perrin and of Hubert Robert, and painted chiefly views of buildings, ruins, classic monuments, and interiors, a large number of which he exhibited at the Salon from 1799 onwards. He also produced a good many illustrations for books.

VAVASSORI, (VALVASSORI,) ZOAN ANDREA, (or GIOVANNI ANDREA,) an Italian engraver, over whom there is a standing controversy. It seems now to be established that he was identical with the Venetian Zoan Andrea, who appears in the first volume under the title ANDREA, ZOAN. Of his life, all that can be stated for certain is that at a period not exactly known he was in Mantua, involved in a dispute between Andrea Mantegna and one SIMONE DI ARDIZONI, a painter and engraver, with whom, as appears from a document in the Gonzaga archives, he had previously been living and collaborating in Verona. As to his after career, we know that in the first years of the 16th century, a wood-engraver, or at least publisher of wood-cuts, was flourishing at Venice, many of whose prints bear the following inscription, or some variant of it: GIOVANNI ANDREA VAVASSORI DETTO GUADAGNINO. We know, too, that this inscription occurs as late as 1566, suggesting that either the name had become a sort of trade-mark, or that Vavassori and the employer of the annexed monogram, i. e. Zoan

Andrea,  were not identical after all.

This latter contention has been revived by Herr Kolloff, in the new edition of the 'Künstler-Lexicon,' but so far it has made few converts. The monogram appears on about sixty Italian prints. In the Berlin Print-Room there is a print inscribed: In Venetia per Zuan Andrea Vadagnino di Vavassor. Vavassori was the author of the only known Italian block-book, a series of wood-cuts from the Passion, with lines of text at the bottom of each, and the title 'Opera Nuova Contemplativa.' The date is 1516. The British Museum has an unique impression from a fine print by Vavassori of the Doge's barge, the Bucentaur, making its way in procession down a Venetian canal. (See Fisher's 'Introduction to a Catalogue of the early Italian prints in the British Museum,' pp. 201-215; and Lippmann's 'Wood Engraving in Italy,' [London, 1888] passim.)

VAYEMBOURG, JEAN DE, who flourished at Nancy from 1592 to 1602, was court painter to Charles III. of Lorraine.

VAYMER, GIOVANNI ENRICO, a Genoese painter, born 1665, pupil of Giov. Bat. Gaulli. He obtained a considerable reputation as a portrait painter, and was three times summoned to paint the king and royal family at Turin. He was invited to remain at the court, but declined. He died in 1738.

VAZQUEZ, —, a Portuguese who, in 1562, painted a 'Descent from the Cross' and a 'Martyrdom of St. Sebastian' on a panel for the church of San Luicar de Borromeda, in Andalusia. The latter was inscribed: Vazquez Lusitanus tunc incipiebam anno 1562.

VAZQUEZ, ALONSO, (or VASQUEZ,) painter, was born at Ronda, Andalusia, in the latter part of the 16th century, and was educated at Seville, under Antonio Arñan. He painted history, and was a contemporary and rival of Francisco Pacheco. His principal works are in the monastery of the 'Merced Calzada,' at Seville, and comprise a series from the Life of S. Raymond, a 'Magdalene,' and a 'Pietà.' He was one of the artists employed on the magnificent catafalque erected in Seville cathedral for the requiem mass of Philip II., in 1598. The date of his death is not known, but it took place before 1649. Few of his pictures exist.

VAZQUEZ, JUAN BAUTISTA, painter and sculptor, was born at Seville towards the end of the 16th century. He studied painting under Diego de la Barrera. In 1568 he painted an altar-piece for the chapel then existing in the orange-tree court of the Alhambra, at Granada. Vazquez was an artist of considerable genius, and did much to develop painting in Andalusia. The date of his death is unknown, but in 1579 he was at work in Malaga Cathedral.

VEAU, FRANCESCO, a painter of architecture and perspectives, was born at Pavia in 1727, and died in 1768. He was an excellent decorative painter, but nothing is known of his life.

VECELLI, CESARE, cousin of Titian, was born at Cadore about 1530. He was both painter and engraver. He accompanied Titian to Augsburg in 1548, and seems to have worked as his assistant. Many of Cesare's pictures are no doubt ascribed to Titian. In the Milan Pinacoteca there is a small 'Trinity' by Cesare. He died at Venice about 1606. It has now been established that the woodcuts for 'De gli Habiti Antichi e Moderni,' though so long attributed to Cesare, were not executed by him, but by Christopher Chriegher of Nuremberg. His brother, FABRIZIO, a painter of Cadore, was little known beyond his native place, for the Council-hall of which he is said to have painted a fine picture. He died in 1580.

VECELLI, FRANCESCO, was the brother of Titian, and was born at Cadore, perhaps about 1483. After studying the elements of art under his brother, he served some years in the army, and was probably induced to take finally to painting by the extraordinary success of Titian. He painted some pictures for the Venetian churches which possessed sufficient merit to alarm the jealousy of Titian, particularly a 'Transfiguration,' for S. Salvatore. But his best performance is a 'Nativity,' in the church of S. Giuseppe, at Belluno. By the persuasion of Titian, he is said to have abandoned painting in 1531, to devote himself to commercial pursuits. Works:

VECELLI, MARCO, called MARCO DI TIZIANO, was born at Venice in 1545. He was the nephew of Titian, and accompanied his distinguished uncle in his journeys to Rome and Germany. He was the favourite disciple of Titian, and approached nearer to his style than any other member of the family. There are several pictures by him in the Doge's palace, among the best an allegory in the ante-chamber to the Sala del Gran Consiglio. Another good example is a picture in the Sala della Bussola, 'The Doge Leonardo Donato before the Virgin and Infant Christ.' He also painted for churches at Venice, Treviso, and in the Friuli, among other things a 'Christ fulminating the world, and the Virgin and several Saints interceding,' in S.S. Giovanni e Paolo, at Venice. He died in 1611.

VECELLI, ORAZIO, the son and pupil of Titian, was born at Venice about 1528. He distinguished himself as a painter of portraits, some of which were thought little inferior to those of his father. He occasionally painted historical subjects; one of the most important was destroyed in the conflagration in the ducal palace at Venice. He neglected painting, however, to devote himself to alchemy, and died of the plague, at Venice, in the same year with his father, 1576.

VECELLI, TIZIANO, called TIZIANELLO, a son of Marco Vecelli, who, early in the 17th century, acquired some reputation at Venice. The principles established by the great founders of the Venetian school had, however, in his time given way to manner. His best productions are his portraits, which have vitality and natural colour.

VECELLI, TIZIANO, the greatest painter of the Venetian school, was born at Pieve, in Cadore, a mountainous district of the Venetian or Carnic Alps. He was the son of Gregorio di Conte Vecelli, a member of an old family in Cadore, and though not rich himself, a man of some note in his province, "equally distinguished by his wisdom in the council of Cadore, and by bravery as a soldier in the field." Titian was one of four children born to this worthy, and his birth took place, as seems certain from his own testimony, not later than 1477, the date usually assigned, which has been doubted by some historians. Showing an early disposition towards art, the young Titian was not brought up to law or to arms like the rest of his race, but was sent at an early age to Venice to learn painting. According to Dolce's statement, which there is no reason to doubt, he was first placed with Sebastiano Zuccato, a Venetian mosaicist, from whose school he appears to have quickly passed into that of the Bellini, who were already at this time, (about 1488,) considered the chief masters in Venice. Dolce affirms that he first worked with Gentile, the elder brother, who disapproved of his bold and rapid style of drawing. This led him to seek the workshop of Giovanni, where he doubtless acquired that love for colour and knowledge of its effects which became the predominant characteristic of his art. It was at this time also that he made the acquaintance of Palma Vecchio and Giorgione, the latter of whom especially exercised considerable influence over his style. He seems at one time to have entered into a sort of partnership with Giorgione, but the exact facts of their intercourse are not clearly established. Probably Titian's first independent employment in Venice was as a house-painter, not in the sense in which we now use that term, but as it was understood at a time when the great nobles were accustomed to adorn the outside of their palaces with frescoes. One of the earliest references to Titian's name in contemporary writings connects it with a work of this kind, a fresco of 'Hercules' mentioned by Sansovino as painted outside the Morosini Palace, but no longer in existence. In the years 1507-1508 he was employed, in conjunction with Giorgione, on the decoration of the new Fondaco dei Tedeschi, or house of exchange for the German merchants in Venice, which had just before been rebuilt. Here, among other works, he painted in fresco, above the gateway, a large figure of Judith, Justice, or Germania, for it has been called by all three names, which is spoken of by early critics as a remarkable work, but of which scarcely a trace now remains. (It was engraved by Piccino in 1658, and by Zanetti in his 'Varie Pitture' in 1760.) Among Titian's earliest works on canvas, Crowe and Cavalcaselle reckon: a small 'Virgin and Child,' in the Belvedere; a 'Man of Sorrows,' and 'Christ carrying the Cross,' in the Scuola di San Rocco at Venice; and the allegorical composition usually called 'Sacred and Profane Love,' in the Borghese Palace in Rome. In this latter work, whatever it may be meant to signify, Titian's powers as a colourist are already strikingly apparent, and soon afterwards his skill as a portraitist was made known in a portrait that he executed of Marco Barbarigo, still in the possession of the Barbarigo family, and also in a splendid portrait of a Doge, now in the Vatican. The celebrated 'Christ of the Tribute Money,' 'Cristo della Moneta,' of the Dresden Gallery, which is spoken of by Vasari as something "stupendous and miraculous," and by Crowe and Cavalcaselle as being "the most perfect easel picture of which Venice ever witnessed the production," also belongs to this early period. It would seem that Titian, who was well acquainted with several of the members of the learned Aldine Club, was advised by Pietro Bembo to go to Rome and accept service under Leo X., but he was dissuaded, it is said, by Navagero, from taking this step, and the letter is still extant, dated May 31, 1513, in which he offers himself to the Doge and Council of Venice to paint in the Hall of the Great Council, in the Ducal Palace. "I, Titian of Cadore," this letter begins, "having studied painting from my childhood upwards, and desirous of fame rather than profit, wish to serve the Doge and Signori rather than his Highness the Pope and other Signori who in past days and even now have urgently asked to employ me." He then begs to be employed on the "canvas of the battle, which is so difficult that no one as yet has had the courage to attempt it," and asks for "the first broker's patent for life that shall be vacant" in payment. This request was granted, but it led to so much opposition on the part of Giovanni Bellini, that the Council had to revoke its decree, and Titian did not get his patent (a sort of sinecure, or retaining fee given to the best artist of the time in consideration of doing certain work) until after Bellini's death in 1516. Before this, however, he had already begun painting in the Hall of Council, but he could not for many years be got to finish the great battle-piece he had undertaken, and his delays led to much dissatisfaction on the part of the Council, and even from time to time to the revocation of his patent.

Much has been written concerning the intercourse of Titian with Alfonso, Duke of Ferrara, and the friendship he formed with Ariosto, whom he met at that Prince's brilliant court. His first recorded journey to Ferrara was made in February 1516, when he lodged with two assistants in the Castello of Ferrara, receiving weekly rations of "salad, salt meat, oil, chesnuts, tallow candles, oranges, cheese, and five measures of wine." Whether he was engaged at this time in finishing Bellini's celebrated 'Bacchanal,' now in the possession of the Duke of Northumberland, or whether he was working on other pictures, is not certain, for besides painting the portraits of Alfonso and his mistress, the beautiful Laura Dianti, and numerous subjects both religious and mythological, Titian is known to have executed for this prince two of the finest of his early works, 'The Cristo della Moneta' before-mentioned, and the 'Bacchus and Ariadne,' now the pride of our National Gallery. It was in the same year as this visit to Ferrara that Titian received the commission for his great 'Assumption of the Virgin,' now in the Accademia at Venice.

In 1523, Federigo Gonzaga, Marquess, and afterwards Duke, of Mantua, was added to the list of Titian's noble patrons, and numerous letters have been found in the Mantuan archives and published in Crowe and Cavalcaselle's life, that passed between the painter and this nobleman. They all tend to show the high esteem in which he was held by his contemporaries. No painter, indeed, was ever more favoured by the great than Titian, and soon he numbered not only dukes and princes, but kings, popes, and emperors among his employers and correspondents. Of Titian's domestic life very little is known. His wife, who was named Cecilia, died in 1530, after having borne him three children—his scapegrace son, Pomponio, who took priest's orders, and for whom he was always seeking benefices; Orazio, who followed his father's profession; and his beautiful daughter, Lavinia, whom he has immortalized.

In 1531, the year after his wife's death, Titian left the house in the San Samuele quarter in Venice, where he had resided since 1516, and took another in the north-eastern suburb of Biri, where his children were brought up under the care of his sister. The charms of Titian's house and garden at Biri, and of the society which assembled there, are revealed to us in a letter appended by the Latinist Priscianese to the first edition of his Grammar, published in 1540. In this letter he describes an entertainment in Titian's garden at which he met the architect Sansovino, Jacobo Nardi, the historian of Florence, and Pietro Aretino, who was one of Titian's most intimate friends. Many other distinguished visitors were received by Titian; but very often his profession called him away from Venice, and we find him at one time at Ferrara, at another at Mantua, and afterwards travelling in the interests of his noble patrons to Bologna, Augsburg, Milan, and other places. The year 1530 is the date assigned by Vasari for Titian's first meeting with the Emperor Charles V. He affirms that Titian was sent for after the Emperor's coronation to Bologna, and there painted such a magnificent portrait of his Majesty in complete armour, that he was presented with a thousand scudi for the same, of which, however, he had subsequently to refund half to Alfonso Lombardi the sculptor. But much doubt is thrown on this story by Crowe and Cavalcaselle, who find that its statements are not proved by authentic records. It seems, indeed, more probable that it was during the Emperor's second visit to Bologna in 1533 that he first sat to Titian for his portrait. Vasari likewise states that the Emperor was so pleased with Titian's likeness of him that he would never afterwards sit to any other master; but this again is doubtful. It is certain, however, that Titian received high honour at the Imperial Court, where he painted not only the Emperor himself many times, but also most of the great lords, ministers, and agents who surrounded him, receiving in return, besides a liberal number of gold scudi, other payment in the shape of grants and patents. By one of these he was created a Count Palatine of the Empire, with the power of appointing notaries and ordinary judges, and of legitimizing the illegitimate offspring of persons below the rank of prince, count, or baron. He was likewise made a Knight of the Golden Spur with all its privileges, one of which was the right of entrance to the Imperial Court at any time.

In 1536 Titian was with the Emperor again, both at Mantua and Asti. At this time he obtained a grant of a pension on the treasury of Naples from the Emperor, which, however, was not paid for many years, although he "bombarded the treasury with letters," and Aretino in his name "moved heaven and earth" for the same purpose. Much of Titian's work seems to have been paid for by his patrons in this unsatisfactory manner, giving rise to many heartburnings and disappointments, as is well seen in his letters, most of which have reference to these business details.

On Titian's return to Venice, after his second visit to the Emperor, he found a rival in the field. Although his city was doubtless proud of his successes, it could scarcely brook his continual neglect of the work he had undertaken. The great battle-piece that he had promised was not yet accomplished, although Titian had held the office, and drawn the salary of the Senseria, ever since 1516. Accordingly, by a severe decree, dated 1537, he was called upon to refund all he had received during the time in which he had done no work, and there seemed every chance that Pordenone, who had already painted in the Public Library, would be installed in his place. This severity seems to have brought Titian to a sense of his obligations, and he immediately "threw upon canvas" his magnificent representation of the 'Battle of Cadore,' which unfortunately perished by fire in 1577, and is now only known to us at second hand.

In 1541 Titian was again with the Emperor at Milan, but seems to have returned quickly to Venice, where he entered upon many new engagements. In the early letter to the Council which has been quoted, he alludes to having been "urgently asked" to work for the Pope. He received, indeed, several invitations to Rome, but he does not appear to have gone there until 1545, when he was received with great distinction by Paul III., by Cardinal Farnese, who had been for some time trying to lure him to the Holy City, and by his learned friend Cardinal Bembo. Rooms were assigned him in the Belvedere, that he might have easy access to the Farnese family, upon whose portraits he was engaged; and Vasari, whose acquaintance he had before made in Venice, undertook to show him the sights of the city. He likewise at this time made the acquaintance of Michelangelo, whose opinion of his work Vasari has reported. Titian's portraits of Paul III., of Cardinal Farnese, and of the Duke Ottavio, the Pope's grandson, were executed during this visit to Rome, as well as other portraits, and his 'Danae,' now in the Naples Museum.

In the winter of 1548, we find Titian undertaking a long and fatiguing journey across the Alps, in order to join Charles V. at Augsburg. Aretino, in one of his letters, has described the scene that took place in Venice when he was about to depart; how every one tried to gain possession of some small work of his, thinking that henceforth he would not deign to paint for any one but the Emperor. That Titian's powers, in spite of his age, were in full vigour at this time, is shown by the amount of work he accomplished. His industry indeed to the very last is perfectly amazing. At this time, in Augsburg, he not only painted the fine portrait of Charles V. on the field of Muhlberg, now in the Madrid Museum, but likewise portraits of King Ferdinand, his five daughters and two sons, Mary of Hungary, John Frederick the Elector of Saxony, the Emperor's noble prisoner, Maurice of Saxony, and most of the other noble and princely personages who were then at the Imperial court. The German master, Lucas Cranach, who had accompanied the Elector into captivity, was also at Augsburg, and drew Titian's portrait. But probably the chief object of Titian's call to Augsburg was to paint the portrait of the morose Prince who won the heart of Mary Tudor. Titian's portraits of Philip of Spain are well known, for they exist in many replicas, but the one executed at this time is, according to Crowe and Cavalcaselle, the large full-length in the Madrid Gallery, the original sketch for which still exists in the Barbarigo collection at Padua. A number of letters have been found in the Simancas archives that passed between Titian and Philip II., most of them relating to commissions executed for that monarch, for whom, besides portraits, Titian painted several religious and mythological subjects. Spain, indeed, in the latter part of his life, received the greater number of his works. Titian's splendid vigour of constitution and indomitable energy seem never to have failed, and it is not until the last years of his life that we see any signs of decay in his art. Vasari found him in 1566 with the brushes still in his hand, and even in 1574, when he was ninety-seven years of age, he was able to receive a royal visitor—Henry III. of France—with his wonted magnificence. It was not, indeed, until 1576, when he was only one year short of a hundred, that this Prince of Painters, who had "never received from heaven anything but favour and felicity;" (so far at least as Vasari knew,) succumbed at last to the terrible plague which desolated Venice in that year, and which carried off also his painter-son Orazio within the course of a few days. The law by which the churches in Venice were closed to the plague-stricken was set aside in Titian's case, and he was honourably buried in the church of the Frari, for which he had painted his great 'Assumption,' and his beautiful votive altar-piece, the 'Madonna di Casa Pesaro.'

Of Titian's art it may be said that it reaches the highest perfection of sensuous beauty. As a colourist he stands perhaps unrivalled; but we miss in his works that spiritual loveliness which moves the heart more than the senses in the works of several other Italians. "The Venetian mind, and Titian's especially as the central type of it, was wholly realist, universal, and manly," writes Ruskin. In truth the asceticism of the early religious painters had no hold over the Venetians of the 16th century, who strove like the Greek artists before them to represent human life in its full enjoyment and animal perfection. No one has ever done this more splendidly than Titian. His method and the secret of his colour have been eagerly sought after by succeeding artists, though he himself was wont to declare that his secret only consisted of "black, red, and white, and all three well in hand." As a portrait painter Titian is generally admitted to hold the first rank. "Titian," says Kugler, "may be considered the finest portrait painter of all times. He was not content with giving his subjects all that was grand in style, he also gave them the appearance of dignified ease. He seems to have taken them at the happiest moment, and thus left us the true conception of the old Venetian, by the side of whom all modern gentlemen look poor and small." His female portraits, too, have a wonderful charm. No estimate of Titian's art would be sufficient without mentioning the surpassing beauty of his landscape backgrounds. The first picture, claiming to be nothing but a landscape, mentioned in the annals of Italian painting, is one by Titian, which is spoken of by Ridolfi as 'A Landscape with Soldiers and Animals,' in the collection of Paolo del Sera. The background in the now destroyed 'S. Peter Martyr,' added enormously to its effect, and in many of his lighter subjects, we find the same charm of harmonious and poetic landscape. Titian is said to have engraved himself, both on copper and wood, but it is more probable that he employed engravers to execute his designs. Under the title of 'The Triumph of Faith,' he published in 1508 a series of rough but powerful woodcuts, somewhat in the manner of Mantegna, representing a religious triumph. Of the four pictures called the 'Triumphs,' of which a long account is given in former editions of this dictionary, there is no satisfactory authentication. Cort and Boldrini were the two engravers employed by Titian to engrave some of his finest works, and a patent granting a monopoly in their publication was granted him in 1566. Works: M. M. H.

VEELWAARD, DANIEL, an engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1766. He learnt drawing under P. Louw and J. C. Schultsz, but in engraving and etching he was self-taught. In 1828 he engraved seventy large plates for the 'Museum Anatomicum,' after designs by G. Sandifort. His sons—HARMANUS, ABRAHAM, and DANIEL—were also engravers.

VEEN, GEERTRUIDA VAN, (or G. VÆNIUS,) was the daughter of Otto van Veen, and was born at Brussels in 1602. She was instructed in art by her father, and excelled in portraits. A portrait of Otto van Veen, by her, was engraved by Rucholle.

VEEN, GILBERT, or GILBERT, VAN, (VÆNIUS,) portrait painter and engraver, was the younger brother of Otto van Veen, and was born at Leyden in 1558, or, according to Huber, in 1566. He executed a variety of plates, with the graver, in a style resembling that of Cornelis Cort. He visited Italy in 1588, making some stay at Rome and Venice, and has left several prints after the Italian masters. He also engraved many plates from designs by his brother, chiefly emblematical subjects and portraits. He died at Antwerp in 1628. The following are among his best prints:

Ernest, Duke of Bavaria.

Cardinal Alessandro Farnese; after Otto van Veen.

Giovanni da Bologna. 1589.

The Four Seasons; after Raffaello dal Colle. 1589.

These have been incorrectly stated to be after Raphael Sanzio.

The Crucifixion; after the same.

The Emblems of Horace; after Otto van Veen.

Emblems of divine and profane Love; after the same.

The Life of S. Thomas Aquinas; a set of several plates; after the same.

VEEN, MAERTEN VAN, called MARTIN HEEMSKERK, (or HEEMSKERK,) was the son of Jakob Willem van Veen, a small farmer, and was born at Heemskerk, a village near Haarlem, in 1498. His father, yielding to his desire of becoming a painter, placed him under the care of Cornelis Willemsz, of Haarlem, but repenting of his indulgence, cut short the boy's apprenticeship, and took him back to work on the farm. Maerten, however, ran away, and took refuge at Delft, in the studio of Jan Lucas, with whom and some other obscure artists, he studied some time. The reputation of Schoorel was great at the time, and Heemskerk went to Haarlem and entered the school of that master. His progress was such as to excite the jealousy of his instructor, who dismissed him from his academy. One of his first public works was a picture of 'S. Luke painting the Virgin,' for the chapel of the painters at Haarlem, so entirely in the manner of Schoorel that it was generally supposed to be by him. At about the age of thirty-five Maerten went to Italy, and passed three years at Rome, where the antique and the works of Michelangelo were the particular objects of his study. On his return to Holland he settled at Haarlem, where he painted several pictures for public buildings, notably a 'Crucifixion,' for S. Laurentius, at Alkmaar, with doors on which were depicted other scenes from the Passion (1538-41). In 1572, Maerten fled from Haarlem in fear of the threatened siege, and took refuge at Amsterdam with his pupil, Jakob Rauwerts. Two years later he returned to Haarlem, and died there, October 1, 1574. His compositions, though rich, are without judgment or taste; and in attempting to imitate the great style of Buonarroti, his design is frequently overcharged and preposterous. His draperies are clumsy, with a confusion of folds, and the expression of his heads is marked with neither grace nor beauty. Works:

VEEN, OTTO VAN, (or VENIUS, OTHO,) was born at Leyden in 1558, of a good Dutch family. He was carefully educated by his parents, who did not oppose the inclination he discovered for painting. His father Cornelis was burgomaster of Leyden, and when, in 1572, the town declared against Philip II., he declined to join the insurgents. His property was confiscated, and he retired with his family to Liège. Otto had already received some lessons from Isaac van Swanenburch, called Nicolai, and at Liège his talents recommended him to the notice of Cardinal Grosbeeck, at that time Prince Bishop, who sent him to Rome furnished with letters to Cardinal Madruccio. He was kindly received by Madruccio, and granted apartments in his palace. He entered the studio of Federigo Zuccaro, and soon learnt all that master could teach him. After seven years in Italy, he returned to Liège, where he became page to Ernest of Bavaria, the successor of Grosbeeck. His new protector despatched him on a mission to Rodolph II., at Vienna, in whose service Otto remained for a time. He then returned homewards by way of Munich and Cologne, where he painted some pictures for the ruling princes. In 1584 he revisited Leyden, and in 1585 we find him at the Court of Alessandro Farnese, Prince of Parma, who was at that time the governor of the Netherlands. In 1593 he was settled at Antwerp, and was made free of the Guild of S. Luke in the following year. At about this time his marriage with Anne Loots, the daughter of a noble Flemish house, probably occurred. At Antwerp he painted for the churches and public buildings, and had Rubens for his pupil. When the Archduke Albert, who succeeded the Prince of Parma in the government of the Low Countries, made his public entry into Antwerp, he designed the triumphal arches, and his compositions were so much admired that the Archduke invited him to Brussels, appointing him his principal painter and Master of the Mint. Van Veen distinguished himself in literature, and published several works, illustrated by plates from his own designs, engraved chiefly by his brother Gysbert. Among them were: 'A History of the War of the Batavians against Claudius Civilis and Cerialis,' from Tacitus; 'Horace's Emblems, with Observations;' 'Life of Thomas Aquinas,' and 'Emblems of Love, Divine and Profane.' He died at Brussels, May 6, 1629. His pictures in public galleries are:

VEEN, PIETER VAN, brother of Otto van Veen, painted for amusement only, but has left a 'Relief of Leyden in 1574,' of some merit. It is now in the Leyden Museum.

VEEN, ROCHUS VAN, perhaps a nephew of Otto van Veen, flourished at Haarlem about the middle of the 17th century, and excelled in painting birds, living and dead, which he finished with great care. He died at Haarlem in 1706.

VEENHUIJSEN, J., a Dutch engraver, who flourished at Amsterdam about 1656 to 1677. He engraved a set of views of the public buildings in that city. He also drew portraits.

VEGA, GONZALES DE. See GONZALES.

VEGLIA, MARCO and PIERO, two Venetian painters, who flourished at the beginning of the 16th century.

VEIT, JOHANNES, painter, and elder brother of Philipp Veit, was born towards the close of the 18th century, at Berlin. He studied at Vienna, and from 1811 onwards, at Rome. His works are akin to those of his brother and of Overbeck, and his 'Madonnas' are much admired. An 'Adoration of the Shepherds' by him is in the Berlin cathedral, and an altar-piece at Liège. He also produced some excellent portraits. He died at Rome in 1852.

VEIT, PHILIPP, painter, was born at Berlin, of Jewish parents, in 1793. His father died while Veit was still a child, and his mother, a daughter of Mendelssohn, the philosopher, married Friedrich von Schlegel. The boy was baptized, and brought up under the guidance of his stepfather. He made his first studies in Dresden under Matthäi, and then worked for a time at Vienna. In 1813 he entered the army and served during the Napoleonic wars. In 1815 he went to Rome, where he joined the neo-German religious school, and remained till 1830. Working together with Cornelius, Overbeck, and Von Schadow, he painted many important frescoes, among them 'The Seven Fat Years' in the Casa Bartholdi, 'The Triumph of Religion' in the gallery of the Vatican; subjects from Dante's 'Paradise' in the Villa Massimi, and, in conjunction with Koch, a 'Mary in Glory' for Santa Trinità de' Monti. In 1830 he was elected Director of the Staedel Institute in Frankfort-on-the-Maine. He painted in this town 'St. George' for the church at Bensheim, 'The Marys at the Sepulchre' (now in the Berlin National Gallery); and the following frescoes, 'The Triumph of Christianity,' 'The Introduction of Art into Germany by Christianity,' 'Italia,' and 'Germania'; these four were for the Institute. In 1843 he retired to Sachsenhausen. In 1846 he there painted an 'Assumption of the Virgin' for Frankfort cathedral, and several pictures for King Frederick William IV. In 1853 he settled at Mayence, and there designed the cycle of frescoes for the cathedral, which were carried out by his pupils and completed in 1868. Veit died at Mayence in December, 1877.

VEITH, JOHANN MARTIN, was born at Schaffhausen in 1650. He studied in Italy, where he spent ten years, and from Venice accompanied Prince Radziwil to Warsaw. On his return he made a certain reputation as a painter of portraits and historical pieces. He died in 1717.

VEITH, JOHANN PHILIPP, draughtsman, painter, and engraver, was born at Dresden in 1768 or 1769. He studied at the Academy there, and devoted himself at first to landscape painting, but afterwards became a pupil of the engraver Zingg. In his thirtieth year he visited Italy, studying there from nature. After his return he practised as an engraver of landscapes, and was made first a member and afterwards professor of the Dresden Academy. In 1822 he published 'Views in the Neighbourhoods of Dresden and Rome,' 'Two Views of Terracina,' and several plates after Berchem and Ruysdael. He died in 1835. Nagler catalogues 206 plates by him.

VELA, ANTONIO, the Licentiate, son of Cristobal Vela, was born at Cordova in 1634. He was a priest renowned for his virtue, and a painter of considerable skill. He painted two excellent pictures on subjects from the life of S. Augustine for the convent of that saint at Cordova, and gilded and painted several retables for other convents. He died at Cordova in 1676.

VELA, CRISTOBAL, a Spanish painter, was born at Jaen in 1598, and was first a scholar of Pablo de Cespedes, but afterwards studied under Vincenzo Carducho. He chiefly resided at Cordova, where he painted historical pictures, correct in design, though languid and weak in colour. In the cloister of the convent of San Agustin, at Cordova, is a series of the Prophets, designed in a good style. He was drowned in the well of his own house at Cordova, in 1658.

VELASCO, —, a Portuguese painter, who probably flourished at Vizeu between 1530 and 1540. A picture of the descent of the Holy Ghost, signed by him, is in the church of the Holy Cross at Coimbra. Sir Charles Robinson considers him as possibly identical with the painter of several large pictures in the cathedral of Vizeu.

VELASCO, ANTONIO CASTRO Y. See PALOMINO DE CASTRO.

VELASCO, CRISTOBAL DE, was the son and disciple of Luis de Velasco. He adopted the maxims and imitated the style of his father, but did not arrive at equal excellence. In 1598 he painted the portrait of the Archduke Albert. He painted for Philip III. seven views of cities in Flanders, to place in his hunting lodge in the woods of Valsain, for which he received the sum of 20,673 reals. His son, MATTIAS DE VELASCO, was also an historical painter, and pupil of his father. He accompanied the court of Philip III. to Valladolid, and painted some scenes from the life of the Virgin for the royal nunnery of the Carmelites of that city.

VELASCO, LUIS DE, an historical painter. He flourished at Toledo in 1564, and painted several pictures for the cloister of the cathedral. In 1581 he was appointed painter to the chapter, and in the same year began his picture of the 'Incarnation of Christ,' which is over the door of the cloister, and which Antonio Ponz has attributed to Blas del Prado; this and three altar-pieces he finished in 1584-5. One of the latter represents the Virgin holding the Infant in her arms, accompanied by S. Anthony, S. Blaise, and a female Saint. Palomino erroneously attributed this retable to Blas del Prado, as Ponz had that of the Incarnation. But the archives of the cathedral show that it was executed by Luis de Velasco in 1585, and that a sum of 419,788 maravedis was paid to him in that year. A few more of his works are known. He died at Toledo in 1606.

VELAZQUEZ, A. G. See GONZALES VELAZQUEZ.

VELAZQUEZ, DIEGO RODRIGUEZ DA SILVA Y, was born at Seville on the 6th of June, 1599. There has been some dispute as to the date, but the registration of his baptism on that day, in the parish of San Pedro, is still extant. His father was Juan Rodriguez da Silva, his mother Geronima Velazquez, so that the painter ought rather to have been known as Silva, than by the name he has rendered famous. The Silvas were of gentle Portuguese origin, but had been settled in the capital of Andalusia ever since the beginning of the 16th century. The young Diego was intended by his parents for some liberal profession, was taught Latin, was introduced to belles lettres, and even to philosophy. After a time, however, he began to show such an unmistakable bent towards art that he was placed as a pupil with Francisco Herrera the elder, whose brutal manners are said to have driven the boy away, after but a short probation, to the studio of the milder Pacheco. In his 'Arte de la Pintura,' Pacheco claims nearly all the glory of his pupil's education. His assertions must, however, be taken with some reserve, for the mature art of Velazquez has vastly more in common with the rough but painter-like vigour of Herrera, than with the cold timidity of the other Francisco. Whether the lad stayed longer with his first master than tradition declares or not, a comparison of their work leaves no room for doubt as to the strong and permanent influence of Herrera's example. The influence of a third master has been said to count for something. This was Luis Tristan da Toledo, a pupil of Il Greco. On him, however, no great stress need be laid. The true masters of Velazquez were his models. He worked directly from nature with a determined sincerity which has not been surpassed. Huge studies of still-life, with life-size figures introduced, exist to prove how frankly he endeavoured to realize the actual look of things. Before he was out of his teens he painted the 'Water-Carrier' of Apsley House; the 'Adoration of the Kings' of the Madrid Museum; and the 'Adoration of the Shepherds' in the National Gallery; and in each of these the power given by such studies is conspicuous.

In 1618, when he was not yet nineteen, Velazquez married Pacheco's daughter Juana. Thirteen months afterwards she bore him a daughter, Francisca; and two years later still, a second daughter, Ignacia, who seems to have died in infancy. Francisca lived to become the wife of the painter Mazo Martinez, and the mother of many children. The wedded life of Velazquez was one of tranquil felicity, and when he died, forty-two years after his marriage, his wife followed him in eight days to the grave. She seems to have been something of an artist herself, for she holds a canvas in her hand in her portrait at Madrid.

In April, 1622, Velazquez paid his first visit to the Spanish capital. There he won the friendship of Don Juan Fonseca, canon of Seville and almoner to the king, who presented him to the minister, Olivares. Of this nothing came for the moment, and the painter returned to Seville. In the first months of 1623, however, he received a letter, through Fonseca, from Olivares, calling him back, and enclosing a sum of fifty ducats to defray expenses. He at once set out for Madrid, taking his wife and his father-in-law with him. Within a few days of his arrival he began and finished a portrait of Fonseca, which was carried to the palace and shown to the king. Philip IV. at once named the painter of his household, with a salary of twenty ducats a month, and commanded him to begin a portrait of the royal person. Some time had to elapse before this portrait was finished, for during the summer of 1623, the king was greatly occupied with the entertainment of the Prince of Wales and his friend 'Steenie,' who were present on their famous tour in search of a wife. Pacheco says that Velazquez began a portrait of Charles; it cannot now be traced. In the autumn of 1623 Philip's portrait was finished, and his delight in it was such that he granted the painter a monopoly in the royal features, and, it is said, ordered previous portraits (by the Carducci, Angelo Nardi, and others) to be removed from the palace.

In August, 1628, Rubens arrived at Madrid, just about the time that Velazquez was finishing his famous picture of the Bebedores. According to Pacheco, the two painters had already been in correspondence, but however that may be, both natural inclination and the express commands of Olivares led the Spaniard to pay solicitous attention to the Fleming. During nine months the two men lived in close intimacy, and the influence of the elder (Rubens was now fifty-one years of age) must have had its effect upon his companion. In the work of Velazquez no direct echo from Rubens can be traced, but it was by his new friend's advice that the Spanish painter made his first journey into Italy. He set out on the 29th of June, 1629, sailing from Barcelona in the same ship as Don Ambrosio Spinola, the victor of Breda, and taking his faithful slave Pareja with him. Olivares gave him two hundred ducats for his journey, a gold medallion of the king, and many letters of recommendation. The first city in which Velazquez made a stay was Venice. The pacific character of his visit had been notified to the State inquisitors before his arrival, by the Venetian ambassador at Madrid ('Gaz. des Beaux Arts,' vol. i. p. 79). Here he copied Tintoretto's 'Crucifixion' and 'Last Supper.' From Venice he went to Rome, by way of Ferrara, Bologna, and Loretto. At Rome he remained for a whole year. Thanks to the influence of the Count Monterey, at that time Philip's ambassador to the Vatican, he was assigned a lodging in the Villa Medicis. Thence, after a stay of two months, he was driven by fever to take refuge in the Spanish Embassy. His time was spent in making studies from the Italian masters, few of which can now be traced, in painting such sketches as the two from the Villa Medicis now in the Madrid Gallery, and in completing the 'Forge of Vulcan,' now in the Museo del Prado, and the 'Joseph's Coat,' at the Escorial. Towards the end of 1630 Velazquez went to Naples, where he was the guest of the Spanish Viceroy, the Duke of Alcalá, and where he struck up a close friendship with Spagnoletto. It was at the instigation of Velazquez that Philip IV. bought many of those pictures by the Valencian master which now hang at Madrid.

Early in 1631 Velazquez was again in the Spanish capital. Delighted to have his favourite back, Philip assigned him for a studio the north gallery of the Alcazar, which communicated with the royal apartments by a door of which Philip kept the key. The king soon fell into the habit of paying a daily visit to the painter, with whose help he himself made some by no means contemptible essays in art. Soon after his return, Velazquez finished a portrait of Don Baltasar Carlos, at the age of two, and provided a sketch of the equestrian statue of Philip which was afterwards modelled by Pietro Tacca, at Florence, and now stands before the royal palace at Madrid. The sketch hangs in the Uffizi. In 1634, on the occasion of his daughter Francisca's marriage to Juan Bautista del Mazo-Martinez, Velazquez was permitted to hand down his court appointment to his son-in-law, and was himself named ayuda da guarda ropa, without salary. Between this time and 1648, the story of Velazquez is contained in the chronological list of his pictures. In the last weeks of 1637 he is said to have painted Marie de Rohan, Duchesse de Chev-reuse, perhaps in the male costume in which she fled from France. In 1638, probably, he painted the 'Crucified Christ' (Madrid Gallery), as to which Sir William Stirling-Maxwell was in error in supposing it to have been carried off to France by Joseph Bonaparte or some of his generals. In 1642 he painted the two Aranjuez landscapes, now at Madrid, during the sojourn of the court in that retreat. The following year saw the disgrace of Olivares. He was accompanied into obscurity by the best wishes of Velazquez, who so far disregarded the etiquette of the court to which he belonged, as to visit the fallen minister in his exile. The great equestrian portrait of Philip in the Museo del Prado was the fruit of 1644. To these years, too, belong the portraits of dwarfs, fools, and other eccentric members of Philip's household, which hang in the same gallery. In 1646 died the infante, Don Baltasar Carlos, and in 1647 Velazquez painted the 'Surrender of Breda,' the famous 'Las Lanzas,' perhaps the finest purely historic picture in the world.

In January, 1649, Velazquez embarked at Malaga on his second visit to Italy. He was accompanied as before by Pareja, and he travelled in the suite of the Duke of Najera, who was on his way to receive Philip's fiancée, the Grand Duchess Mariana of Austria. The main object of this second journey was to collect pictures and casts from the antique for the Alcazar and for the proposed Academy of Fine Art, which was only to be established a century later by Ferdinand VI. The painter landed at Genoa, visited successively Milan, Padua, Venice (where he bought a Veronese and three Tintoretto's), Bologna (where he engaged the decorative painters Colonna and Mitelli to go to Spain), Modena, Parma, Florence, and Rome. From Rome he passed on almost immediately to Naples, where he presented himself to the Viceroy (the Condé d'Oñata, who had just suppressed the rising of Masaniello), and renewed his friendship with Ribera. After this he returned to Rome, and stayed there for more than a year. Innocent X., Giovanni Battista Pamphili by birth, was the reigning pontiff, and his portrait, now in the Doria Pamphili palace, is one of the finest works of Velazquez. Among other portraits painted during his stay were those of Donna Olympia Maldachini, of Flaminia Triunfi, of Girolamo Bibaldo, and of various chamberlains and other servants of the pope. All these, says Palomino, were painted with those long-handed tools which have since been known as Velazquez brushes. In the early months of 1651 the painter still lingered in Italy, but a letter from his friend Fernando Ruiz de Contreras, hinting at Philip's impatience for his return, led him to make preparations for his journey homewards. He sent his collections off to the care of the Spanish Viceroy at Naples, and embarked at Genoa for Barcelona, where he landed in June, 1651.

On the 16th of February, 1652, Velazquez was named Aposentador Mayor, or grand marshal, of the palace to Philip. During the eight years of life which remained to him, the duties of this office must have demanded a large part of his time, and this may, in some degree, account for his adoption of that broader and more summary manner which marks his final period. The chief works which belong to this time are, 'Las Hileras,' or the 'Tapestry Weavers,' 'Las Meninas,' or the 'Maids of Honour,' the so-called 'Portrait of Alonso Cano,' the 'Æsop' and 'Menippus,' and the later portraits of Philip and his family. The 'Meninas' was painted in 1656, and it was not until 1659 that Velazquez was received into the order of Santiago. Hence it has been sought to discredit the story which ascribes the red cross on the painter's breast to the hand of Philip himself. There is no need, however, to abandon the tradition, which has every probability. We have only to suppose the graceful act was done some time after the completion of the picture, and that the deliberate Spaniards took their time over that verification of the artist's noblesse which was necessary before he could be finally received into the knightly brotherhood. His reception took place on the 28th of November, 1659.

Shortly before this the Maréchal-duc de Gramont, who came to demand the hand of the Infanta Maria Teresa for Louis XIV., had made his entry into Madrid. The painter had been directed to attend upon him, and five months later it became his duty, as Aposentador, to carry out the Spanish share of the preparations on the Island of Pheasants, in the Bidassoa, where the marriage by proxy was to take place. Setting out from Madrid eight days before the king, in company with two assistants, his son-in-law Mazo and one José da Villareal, he prepared lodgings for the court along the whole route to the Castle of Fontarabia, and completed the pavilion on the island. During the ceremonies connected with the marriage he acquitted himself admirably, but the fatigue of it all was too much for his strength. He returned ill to Madrid, and after a few partial recoveries, he finally sank and died on the 6th of August, 1660, in the sixty-first year of his age. He left all he possessed to his wife, Juana Pacheco, but she followed him to the grave on the 14th of the same month. After his death, the painter's affairs were found, or at least declared, to be in disorder. The Spanish treasury claimed a sum of about one and a quarter million maravedis from his estate, and laid an embargo upon his effects. Six years later this was taken off on the payment, by his son-in-law Mazo, of half that sum, the remaining half being remitted as due by the treasury for arrears of pay to the king's Aposentador. As a man Velazquez seems to have been all that was attractive and admirable. As a painter he more thoroughly foreshadowed the art of our own time than any other 'old master,' and so his pictures are held in higher esteem in modern schools of art than those of any one else.

The chief pupils of Velazquez were Muñillo, Carreño de Miranda, Juan de Pareja, Juan Bautista Mazo-Martinez, Juan de Alfaro y Gomez, Juan de la Corte, Francisco Palacios, Nicolas de Villacis, Francisco de Burgos, Tomas de Aguiar, and Antonio Puga, by one or the other of whom many pictures ascribed to the master were painted.

The following list includes all the more important works of Velazquez.

VELDENAEER, JOHANN, a Dutch engraver on wood, and printer, flourished from 1447 to 1483. He was perhaps a native of Germany, as Italian writers call him 'Giovanni di Westfalia.' He printed the book called 'Fasciculus Temporum,' in Latin, ornamented with wood-cuts, at Louvain, in 1474; 'Caroli Viruli formulæ Epistolæræ,' in 1476; the 'Speculum Humanæ Salvationis,' in folio, perhaps as early as 1480, also in quarto, at Culembourg, in 1483; and 'Historia Santæ Crucis,' at the same place, in the same year. The 'Speculum Humanæ Salvationis' supplies the link between the block-books and books printed entirely with movable metal types, and illustrated with cuts containing figures. Whether Veldenaer really designed and engraved the cuts that ornament those books is a question that has exercised the ingenuity of many able writers. He certainly sawed in two the wood-cuts from the folio edition of the 'Speculum Humanæ Salvationis,' to get them into his quarto edition. For fuller accounts of Veldenaer see Willshire, 'Introduction to Ancient Prints.' London, 1877.

VELI, BENEDETTO. This artist was a native of Florence, and flourished in the 17th century. He painted history with some reputation, and Lanzi mentions in favourable terms an 'Ascension' by him in the cathedral at Pistoja.

VELIJN, PHILIPPUS, designer and engraver, was born at Leyden in 1786. He studied at the school 'Æmula Nature,' and under Delfos the engraver, but developed his talents principally by himself. He passed eight years in Paris, and afterwards became a member of the Academies of Amsterdam and Antwerp. He died in 1836. Among his best plates were the battles of Waterloo, Quatre Bras, and Esslingen, and several portraits.

VELLANI, FRANCESCO, a Modenese painter of the school of Stringa, born about 1688, died in 1768. He left many works in Modena and its neighbourhood.

VELLATRANO, VIRG. DI VEZZO. See VEZZO and under VOUTET, SIMON.

VELTRONI, STEFANO, an Italian painter of the 16th century, a relation of Giorgio Vasari, whom he accompanied to Naples, Bologna, and Florence, and with whom he worked.

VÉLY, ANATOLE, a French painter, born at Ronsoy (Somme) in 1838, studied first at Valenciennes, and afterwards in Paris at the École des Beaux Arts under Signol. He devoted himself chiefly to portraits, but not seldom painted subject pictures of a decorative kind. Several of his works found their way to America; in the Corcoran Art Gallery, Washington, there is 'The Talking Well' by him. His death took place in Paris, January 10th, 1882.

VENANZI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was a native of Pesaro, and was born about the year 1628. He was for some time a disciple of Guido, but afterwards studied under Simone Cantarini, and perhaps under Gennari, whose style he closely followed. In the church of SS. Gervasio e Protasio, at Bologna, is a 'Descent of the Holy Ghost'; and in the church of S. Antonio, at Pesaro, two subjects from the life of that saint, by him.

VENDRAMINI, GIOVANNI, an eminent engraver, was born at Roncade, near Bassano, in 1769. He pursued his studies in his own country till the age of nineteen, when he came to London, and completed his artistic education under Bartolozzi. In 1802 he married an English wife, and in 1805 he went to Russia, and spent two years in that country. He was patronized by the Emperor and the court, and his talents so highly appreciated, that he was refused a passport when he was desirous of returning to England. He, however, with the assistance of his friend, the Duke of Saracaprìolo, at that time Neapolitan ambassador, contrived to escape, disguised as a courier charged with despatches. His departure was hastened, as he told Stanley, the last editor of this dictionary, by an accident that happened to a large cameo, 'Alexander and Olympia,' from which he had to engrave a plate for the emperor. On his return to England he engraved several popular pictures by contemporary painters; but those on which his reputation stands are after works by the old masters. Among these are, 'The Vision of S. Catherine,' after Paolo Veronese; 'S. Sebastian,' after Spagnoletto; 'Leda,' after Leonardo da Vinci; and lastly, the 'Raising of Lazarus,' after Sebastiano del Piombo. Vendramini was a very accurate draughtsman, and frequently engraved from a picture without making a preparatory drawing. He died in London, February 8th, 1839.

VENENTI, GIULIO CESARE, was a Bolognese gentleman, who was a great admirer of art, and studied it with the zeal of a professor. He was born at Bologna about the year 1609, and was instructed in design by Filippo Brizio, a pupil of Guido Reni. Zani places his death in 1697. There are several spirited etchings by Venenti; among them the following:

The Guardian Angel; after Dom. Maria Canuti.

Tancred and Clorinda; after the same.

The Virgin of the Rose; after Parmigiano.

A Landscape, with the Holy Family; after Annibale Carracci.

VENETIIS, CHATARINUS DE, was living in the 15th century, and was both a painter and a carver of crucifixes. The church of Sant' Agostino of Verruchio formerly possessed a crucifix carved by him, and painted by Nicolaus Paradixi, or Semitecolo, in 1404. Count Orsi of Ancona possesses an altar-piece with the Madonna between four saints, and a Crucifixion between six saints, both signed by Chatarinus.

VENEVAULT, NICOLAS, miniature painter, was born at Dijon in 1697. He studied in Paris, and became an Academician in 1752. He was also a member of the Academy of St. Luke, and sent many of his portraits and miniatures to its exhibitions. In 1724 he was commissioned to paint portraits of the princes and princesses of Lorraine at Lunéville. He died in Paris in 1775.

VENEZIANO, AGOSTINO. See MUSI.

VENEZIANO, ANTONIO, (ANTONIO FRANCISCI

DE VENETIIS,) an Italian painter of the 14th century, whose family name was probably LONCHI. The earliest authentic records of him are in the archives of Siena, which show that he and Andrea Vanni worked together on the ceilings of the cathedral in 1370. Baldinucci asserts him to have been a Florentine by birth, but Vasari calls him a Venetian settled in Florence. In 1374 he was registered in the Apothecaries' Guild, which included painters, of that city. In 1386 he painted the three lower compartments in the series of six frescoes illustrating the life of S. Raniero, on the walls of the Campo Santo, at Pisa; they are now nearly obliterated; the three upper compartments were the work of Andrea da Florentia, and the whole series was, until recently, ascribed to Simone Martini. He also restored Lorenzetti's frescoes there. At Palermo there is a picture painted by him in 1388, for the Compagnia di SS. Niccolò and Francesco, representing the Virgin and S. John in grief. The date of Antonio's death is unknown.

VENEZIANO, BARTOLOMMEO, was a pupil of the Bellini, and lived in the early part of the 16th century. Of his life and death no records remain, and only four authentic pictures by him are known. The Locchis Carrara Gallery, Bergamo, has a 'Virgin and Child,' dated 1505; Colonel Carew, of Somersetshire, possessed a picture dated 1506; the late Mr. Barker had a portrait of a Lady, dated 1530; and in the National Gallery, London, is the portrait of a Young Man, dated 1546.

VENEZIANO, DOMENICO DI BARTOLOMMEO, was probably born in the early part of the 15th century, of Venetian parents. He signed himself, and is mentioned in records, as a Venetian, but his works have little in common with the school of Venice. Judging from existing documents, and from his style, he spent his early years in Florence. In a letter from him to Piero de' Medici, dated from Perugia in 1438, where he likewise resided for many years, he mentions his long connection with the fortunes of the Medici family, and begs to be allowed to paint an altar-piece for the head of that house. He was a contemporary with Fra Angelico and Fra Filippo, since those two artists and himself are known to have valued the frescoes of Buonfigli at Perugia. He worked at the decorations of the Portinari chapel in Santa Maria Novella, Florence, from 1439 to 1445, and had as his assistants Piero della Francesca and Bicci di Lorenzo. It is certain that whilst employed there he used linseed oil as his medium, since the hospital books of that date make many allusions to this item in his expenses. The Uffizi contains an enthroned Virgin and Child, with SS. John the Baptist, Francis, Nicholas, and Lucy, painted by him, which shows that he employed other vehicles than those previously in use. His latter days were spent in Florence, where he died May 15th, 1461, four years after the death of Andrea del Castagno, whom Vasari accuses of having been his murderer. Very few of this artist's works are now in existence. The most important is an enthroned Madonna, in the National Gallery, with two heads of saints which formerly belonged to it. All three are in fresco, and were transferred to canvas from a tabernacle in the Canto de' Carneseccchi, Florence. The chief picture is signed at the base DOMICUS, D. VENECHS. P. Signor Morelli further ascribes to him the frescoes of Saints Francis and John the Baptist in the church of Santa Croce, Florence, there attributed to Andrea del Castagno.

VENEZIANO, DONATO, an artist living at Venice between 1438 and 1460, was probably a pupil of Jacobello. A winged Lion between SS. Jerome and Augustine, in the magazine of the Palazzo Pubblico, Venice, is all that is now known of his work.

VENEZIANO, LORENZO, flourished between the years 1357 and 1379. Very little is known of him. His earliest altar-piece was painted for the high altar of the church of Sant' Antonio di Castello, and is now in the Academy at Venice. It is dated 1358, and represents the 'Annunciation,' with a portrait of the donor, Domenico Lion, the Christ in benediction, and figures of various Saints, and was painted in conjunction with Francesco Bissolo. The Academy also possesses an altar-piece by him executed in 1371. It consisted of five panels, on which an 'Annunciation' and six figures of saints were painted, but it is now broken up into separate works. We may also name:

VENEZIANO, STEFANO, was a contemporary of Lorenzo Veneziano and Semitecolo, and painted in the same manner. He signed his works STEFAN PLEBANUS SANCTÆ AGNETIS, and is hence supposed to have been parish priest (piovano) of Sant' Agnese, at Venice; he flourished in the latter part of the 14th century. The following works are ascribed to him:

Paris. Louvre. Madonna; inscribed MCCCXIII
M. OT.

Venice. Academy. Coronation of the Virgin. 1381.
(The central panel of an altar-piece, of which the smaller portions are by Semitecolo.)

„ Correr Museum. Virgin Enthroned, holding the Child Jesus. 1369.

VENIER, NICHOLAS, is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a set of twelve plates, representing the Months of the Year, after Bassano.

VENNEMAN, CHARLES FERDINAND, painter, was born at Ghent in 1803. In his early youth he studied at the Ghent Academy, and began his career as a decorative painter. In 1836 he determined to devote himself to easel pictures, and completed his training under De Braekeleer in Antwerp. He painted homely interiors, drinking scenes, &c., after the style of Ostade, which had considerable success. His 'Card-Players' is in the gallery of his native town, and there is a 'Peasant Scene' by him in the New Pinacothek at Munich. He died in 1875.

VENTURINI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, was born at Rome about the year 1619. From the style of his engraving, it is probable that he was a disciple of Giovanni Battista Galestruzzi. He etched several plates from the works of Italian masters, among them the following:

A set of Plates; after Polidoro da Caravaggio.

Diana and her Nymphs; after Domenichino.

The Pulpit of S. Peter's; after Bernini.

A partial bird's-eye View of Rome.

VENUSTI, MARCELLO, was born at Como in 1515, and was a scholar of Perino del Vaga; but he is chiefly indebted for his reputation to his study of Michelangelo, and to being employed by that master as assistant. He also executed several original works in the churches and public buildings of Rome. Cardinal Alessandro Farnese employed him to copy the 'Last Judgment' of Michelangelo, on a small scale, which he accomplished so well that Buonarroti engaged him to paint an 'Annunciation' from his design for the Capella de' Cesi, in the church of the Pace. The copy of the 'Last Judgment' is now at Naples. In the Palazzo Borghese there is a fine 'Christ bearing His Cross' by him, from a design by Michelangelo. A 'Prayer on the Mount of Olives' is in Sant' Ignazio at Viterbo, and a 'Holy Family' in the National Gallery. Perhaps the best of his more original pictures, however, are: 'Christ expelling the Money-Changers,' also in the National Gallery; and 'Christ in Hades,' in Palazzo Colonna, Rome. He died in 1579.

VERA, CRISTOBAL DE, born at Cordova in 1577. It is probable that he studied under Cespedes in that city. In 1602 he removed to Castile, and became a lay brother of the Hieronymites of Lupiana, painting eight 'Stations' of the Cross for their cloisters. His nephew, JUAN DE VERA, had commenced his novitiate in the convent of La Sista, at Toledo, when he was there visited by his uncle Cristobal. At the end of the year Juan left the convent without assuming the cowl; but Cristobal remained to paint two altar-pieces for the church, a 'S. Jerome' and a 'S. Mary Magdalene.' He died soon afterwards, in the year 1621, and was buried in the convent.

VERA CABEZA DE VACA, FRANCISCO, a Spanish portrait painter, and pupil of J. Martinez, born at Calatayud in 1637, was page to Don John of Austria. He died in 1700.

VÉRARD, ANTOINE, an illuminator, wood engraver, printer and bookseller, who flourished in Paris from about 1485 to 1512. Scarcely anything is known of his life beyond the facts that in 1499 he occupied a shop with the sign of S. John the Evangelist on the Pont Notre Dame, and that he afterwards lived successively in the Carrefour S. Séverin, in the Rue S. Jacques, and in the Rue Neuve Notre Dame. He illustrated and published a miscellaneous variety of works, among which the most famous are the following: 'Chronique de S. Denis' (1493), 'L'art de bien Mourir,' 'Le Romant de la Rose,' 'La Légende Dorée en François,' and 'Les Heures de Notre Dame en François et en Latin.' Of this last he published many editions. He is also supposed to have illuminated a 'Danse Macabre, avec les Trois vifs et les Trois morts,' printed on vellum, of which only two copies exist. Of his 'Figures du Vieil Testament et du Nouvel,' only one copy, a splendid volume printed on vellum, is known. It is in the British Museum.

VERAT, DARIUS. See VAROTARI.

VERBEECK, CORNELIS, a Dutch painter of marines, who was inscribed on the books of the Haarlem Guild in 1610. He was the father of Pieter Cornelisz Verbeeck.

VERBEECK, FRANÇOIS XAVIER HENRI, a Flemish military painter, was born at Antwerp in 1686. His master was P. Casteels, whose daughter he afterwards married. He was received into the Guild of S. Luke in 1709, and from 1741 to 1747 was dean of the Fraternity, and one of the Directors of the Antwerp Academy. He had two daughters, ELIZABETH (b. 1720) and ANNE (b. 1727), who became artists, and were his pupils. He died in 1755. There is by him :

Antwerp. Museum. State visit to the 'Serment de l'Escrime.' 1713.

VERBEECK, FRANS, a painter of Mechlin in the 16th century, was a pupil of Frans Minnebroer. He painted Scriptural scenes, peasants' marriages, &c., in the style of Jerom Bos, but in distemper. He became free of the Guild of S. Luke in 1531, was dean in 1563, and died in 1570. His brother PHILIP entered the Guild at Mechlin in 1525.

VERBEECK, JAN, called HANS of MECHLIN, flourished in that city in the second part of the 16th century. He was probably the son of Frans Verbeeck. He took part in the decorative works for the entry of Albert and Isabella into Mechlin in 1599, and was granted the title of painter to their Highnesses. He was still living in 1619.

VERBEECK, PIETER CORNELISZ, a painter and etcher of Haarlem, born probably about 1599, was the son of one CORNELIS VERBEECK. He entered the Guild at Alkmaar in 1635, and became a master at the Hague in 1645. The subjects of his pictures were tavern scenes, cavalry combats, halts of travellers, hunting parties, landscapes, &c. He has also left drawings in chalk and Indian ink, and eight plates (1619-39) etched in the style of Rembrandt. Pictures by him are in the Museums of Berlin, Cassel, and Stockholm. Brulliot describes a print of 'A Shepherd standing,' signed P. C. Verbeeck, and dated 1639. The figure wears a bonnet ornamented with a feather, and is dressed in a short cassock, with a calabash on his right side, and holds a crook; he is accompanied by a dog. Two small busts, in ovals, of a Man and a Woman, in Oriental costume, have the same signature and date.

VERBIUS, ARNOLD, (VERBUIJS, or VERBICES,) called 'the Libertine,' a painter of history, portraits, and lascivious subjects, was born at Dordrecht about 1646, and died in Friesland in 1704.

VERBOECKHOVEN, CHARLES LOUIS, painter, the brother of Eugène, was born at Warneton, in East Flanders, February 5th, 1802. He learnt drawing and modelling from his father, and devoting himself to marine painting, produced many studies of English, French, and Dutch coast scenery. In the Antwerp Museum there is a picture of a stormy sea, with drifting vessels, by him; signed Louis Verboeckhoven. Other works are in the Pavilion at Haarlem and in the Courtrai Museum.

VERBOECKHOVEN, EUGÈNE JOSEPH, painter, born at Warneton, in East Flanders, June 8th, 1798, was the son of Barthélemy Verboeckhoven, the sculptor, and was taught design and modelling by his father. The practice of modelling animals in clay was continued by him after he began to work as a painter, and to it may be attributed much of the correctness in the rendering of animal life and form which is observable in his pictures. His subjects are principally horses, cattle, and dogs in landscapes, after the manner of Potter and Omme-ganck. He practised at Brussels, where he had an atelier for his pupils, and gained various honours from the Belgian Government. He died at Brussels, January 19th, 1881. Well-known works by him are :

Amsterdam. R. Museum. Three landscapes with animals.
Brussels. Museum. Sheep surprised by a Storm.

Hamburg. Kunsthalle. Flock of Sheep and other Animals.

London. S. Kensington M. Landscape with sheep and ducks.

Munich. N. Pinacothek. A Sheep-fold.

The Antwerp Museum has a 'Flood Tide,' signed by him, in which the marine background was painted by his brother, Charles Louis.

VERBOOM, ADRIAEN or ABRAHAM H., (or VAN BOOM,) was a native of Holland, and flourished in the third quarter of the 17th century. He painted landscapes in a style in which characteristics of Waterloo, Both, and Jakob Ruysdael are to be traced. His pictures are occasionally enriched with figures and animals by A. van de Velde, Wouwerman, and Lingelbach. The dates of his birth and death are unknown. Examples of his work bearing dates from 1649 to 1663 are to be seen at Amsterdam, Brunswick, Brussels, Dresden, and Rotterdam. The Dulwich Gallery possesses a good Verboom in a 'Church near a wood,' figures preparing for the chase; the figures and animals are by Lingelbach. He has also left a couple of etchings:

Le Hameau. A hut in a wooded landscape.

La Pièce d'eau. A landscape with a sheet of water.

VERBRUGGE, GIJSBERT ANDRIESZ, was born at Leyden in 1633, according to Immerzeel, but Füssli and Zani say twenty years later. He was a scholar of Gerard Dou, but confined himself chiefly to portrait painting. He passed some time in England, but returned to his own country and established himself at Delft, where he died in 1730.

VERBRUGGE, JEAN CHARLES, painter, born at Bruges in 1756, was a pupil of J. Gaeremyn and of Légillon. In the Academy of Bruges there are several of his works, which were generally farm-yard interiors, with animals. He died in 1831.

VERBRUGGEN, GASPARD PIETER, born at Antwerp in 1664, was the son and pupil of the elder GASPARD VERBRUGGEN, a flower painter, who died in 1680 or 1681. Having acquired considerable reputation in his native city as a painter of flowers and fruit, and having become dean of the Guild there in 1691, Gaspar the younger established himself at the Hague in 1706. The Greffier Fagel employed him, in conjunction with Matheus Terwesten, in the decoration of his hotel. The figures were painted by Terwesten, and the festoons of flowers and fruit, with the other ornaments, were executed by Verbruggen. In 1708 he was made a member of the Academy of the Hague, where, during a residence of several years, he amassed a competent fortune. He squandered his wealth, however, and returning destitute to Antwerp, he died there as a servant of the Guild in 1730. The works of Verbruggen show much facility, but his productions during the latter part of his life are very inferior to those of an earlier date. The Antwerp Museum has a flower-piece by him.

VERDIER, FRANÇOIS, sometimes called VAN HAWKEN, a French historical painter, designer, and engraver, was born in Paris in 1651. He was a scholar of Le Brun, whose niece he married, and in 1668 obtained the first prize for drawing. He assisted Le Brun at Versailles, at Trianon, and in the Apollo Gallery of the Louvre. He also copied many works of his master. For his 'Hercules with Geryon' he was admitted in 1678 to the Academy, of which in 1684 he became a professor. He painted 'The Resurrection of Lazarus' for Notre Dame in 1677, and worked for many other Paris churches. In 1698 he designed forty plates from 'The History of Samson,' of which he himself engraved four. He died in Paris, June 20th, 1730. His drawings are numerous in France; they are chiefly in black or red chalk heightened with white. There are pictures by him in the Louvre, and in the Museums of Nantes, Orleans, and Rennes.

VERDIER, MARCEL ANTOINE, painter, was born in Paris in 1817. He studied at the École des Beaux Arts, and was also a pupil of Ingres. He painted chiefly portraits, many of which appeared at the Salon between 1835 and 1853. He died in 1856. The Museums of Arras and Montpellier own pictures by him.

VERDIZZOTTI, GIOVANNI MARIA, was born at Venice in 1525, and, according to Ridolfi, was the scholar and friend of Titian. He excelled in painting small landscapes, in the style of his instructor; these he embellished with some subject from history or fable. He also published a translation of Ovid's 'Metamorphoses,' and the 'Æneid'; and, on the death of Titian, celebrated the memory of his master in a Latin poem. He died at Venice in 1600.

VERDOEL, ADRIAEN, (or VERDAEL,) was born at Overmaas, in Holland, in 1620. It is said that he studied under Leonard Bramer and Gaspar De Witte; other accounts say that he entered the school of Rembrandt. In later life he quitted the practice of art, and became a dealer. He was also a poet, and in 1675 received a prize for a drama. He died at Flushing in 1681. There is a picture by him in the Copenhagen Gallery.

VERDOT, CLAUDE, was born in Paris in 1667, and became a pupil of Bon de Boullongne. He gained the second prize at the Academy in 1690, with a 'Building of the Tower of Babel.' He was received as an Academician in 1707, his reception picture being 'Hercules strangling Antæus.' He worked much for the churches in Paris, where he died in 1733. A 'S. Paul at Malta' by him is in the Louvre.

VERDUSSEN, JAN PIETER, a painter of battles, horse-fairs, hunting-pieces, and other animal subjects, was born probably at Antwerp about 1700. He at first worked at Marseilles, where he became director of the École de Dessin, and then entered the service of the King of Sardinia as a painter of battles. He died at Avignon in 1763. The Marseilles Gallery contains a battle-piece by him, the Schleissheim Gallery two pictures, and that of Augsburg a 'Meet after the Hunt.' A 'View of Windsor, with a gamekeeper and dogs,' ascribed to him in the Hampton Court catalogue, suggests that he visited England.

VEREIJCKE, HANS, (VEREYCKE, VERRIJCKE,) called also 'Kleyn Hanskin,' or 'Little John,' was born at Bruges about 1510. He excelled in landscapes with figures, in glass painting, and in portraits. He painted the portraits of Karl van Mander's uncle Claudius, with his wife and children, on the wings of a triptych, the centre of which represented the Virgin in a landscape. He is supposed to have died about 1569. *

VERELLEN, JEAN JOSEPH, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Antwerp in 1788. He was a pupil of Herreyns. His 'Jupiter and Mercury in the House of Philemon and Baucis' is now in the Brussels Gallery. He died in 1856.

VERELST, CORNELIS, the son of Herman Verelst, was born, probably at the Hague, in 1667, and accompanied his father to England, where he met with success in painting similar subjects. He died in London in 1734.

VERELST, GILES (or EGLIDIUS). See VERHELST. VERELST, HERMAN, the elder brother of Simon, and the pupil of his father, Pieter Verelst, was born at the Hague after 1640. He became a master of the Guild at the Hague in 1666. From 1667 to 1670 he was settled in Amsterdam, and then, after visiting Italy, resided at Vienna until it was invested by the Turks in 1683. He had there acquired some reputation as a painter of fruit and flowers, and sometimes attempted history, portraits, genre, and landscapes. The success of his brother induced him to migrate from Austria into England, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying in London about 1700. Portraits of Jan de Witt and his wife, by him, are in the Amsterdam Museum.

VERELST, MARIA, the daughter of Herman Verelst, was born at Vienna in 1680, and learned the first rudiments of design from her father, but was more indebted to the instruction of her uncle, Simon Verelst, with whom she principally lived. She excelled in painting portraits of a small size, and occasionally attempted history. She had received an excellent education, was a proficient in music, and spoke Latin, German, Italian, and other languages. She died in London in 1744.

VERELST, PIETER, who was born in 1614 at Antwerp, was a painter who imitated Rembrandt in his portraits, and Adriaen van Ostade in his genre pictures. He has been called a pupil of Gerard Dou, but there seems to be no evidence in support of that idea. From the records of the Artists' Guild at the Hague, he is known to have been still living in 1665, and three years later he is said to have left that city in order to escape his creditors, but great uncertainty exists as to the dates both of his birth and death. Verelst's works are carefully finished, but a pervading brownish-red tint somewhat mars the effect of his good chiaro-scuro. He signed his pictures variously

VERELST, SIMON, the son of Pieter Verelst, was born at Antwerp in 1637 or 1640, and distinguished himself as a painter of flowers and fruit. In 1666 he became a master of the Guild at the Hague. In the reign of Charles II. he visited England, where he was extensively employed, and received higher prices than had ever been given for similar subjects here before. It was his practice to surround his portraits with garlands of fruit and flowers. Walpole gives a curious picture of his vanity, conceit, and success. The flattery he received seems to have turned his head. He called himself the 'God of Flowers' and the 'King of Painting.' He had ultimately to be placed in a lunatic asylum, but recovered his reason towards the close of his life. He died in London in 1710. He painted portraits of the Duke of Buckingham and the Prince de Condé. The Louvre has a young lady's portrait by him; at Hampton Court there are a 'Duchess of Portsmouth as Flora,' and a study of white grapes.

VERELST, WILLEM, son of Cornelis Verelst, was a portrait painter, who died in London or soon after 1756. He painted a portrait of Smollett in that year, and, before the fire of 1864, the Rotterdam Museum had two portraits of his dated 1729.

VERENDAEL, NICOLAES VAN, was born at Antwerp in 1640. He was instructed by his father, WILLEM VAN VERENDAEL, and acquired a considerable celebrity as a painter of flowers and fruit. In his works every object is faithfully copied from nature, and the insects, which he was fond of introducing, are handled with surprising minuteness and precision. His flower-pieces are tastefully arranged, and are generally preferred to his pictures of fruit. He died at Antwerp in August, 1691.

VERGARA, JOSEF, was born at Valencia in 1726, and was a pupil of Evaristo Muñoz. He afterwards followed the style of Coypel, and painted numerous works in oil, fresco, and tempera, chiefly saints and portraits. In 1754 he became director of the Academy of Santa Barbara, at Valencia, which had been founded by him and his brother the sculptor, Ignacio Vergara; afterwards he was appointed to the same post in the Royal Academy of San Carlos, which grew out of this, and held the office for six years. He died in 1799. The churches in and around Valencia abound with his paintings, among the best of which are a 'Conception' in the monastery of San Francisco, and those executed for his own house. His picture of 'Mentor warning Telemachus against Calypso,' was accepted at the Academy of San Fernando, and gained his election as an Academician. He left some MS. notes on the lives of Valencian artists, to which Cean Bermudez acknowledges himself indebted.

VERGARA, NICOLAS DE, the elder, a Spanish painter and sculptor, and one of the chief artists of Toledo, was apparently born in that city about 1510. From his knowledge of drawing and the grandeur of his figures, it is supposed that he studied in Rome. He was appointed painter and sculptor to the chapter of Toledo in 1542. Many of the windows of the cathedral were painted by him and under his direction; those which he left incomplete at his death were finished by his sons and scholars, Nicolas and Juan de Vergara. He was engaged with Berruguete in superintending the embellishments of the tomb of Cardinal Ximenes at Alcala de Henares. For the cloisters of Toledo he made sketches for frescoes of the infernal regions, which, however, were never executed. He died at Toledo in 1574.

VERGARA, NICOLAS DE, the younger, was born at Toledo about 1540. He was the son and pupil of the elder artist of the name. Under commission from Philip III., he, in 1573, prepared the choir books for the Escorial, and together with his brother, JUAN DE VERGARA, painted the windows of Toledo cathedral, as mentioned above. He died at Toledo in 1606.

VERGAZON, HENDRIK, was a Dutch painter of landscapes and ruins, who came to England in the reign of William III. He also painted small portraits, and was employed on the backgrounds of Sir Godfrey Kneller's pictures.

VERHAEGT, TOBIAS, (VERHAAGT, VERHAECHT, or VAN HAECHT,) was born at Antwerp in 1566 (in 1561, according to Mr. A. J. Wanters). It is not known who his master was, but he had acquired some celebrity as a landscape painter, when he determined to visit Italy in search of improvement. He resided some time at Florence, where his talents recommended him to the notice of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, for whom he painted several large pictures, including a 'Tower of Babel.' This subject he repeated more than once. He afterwards visited Rome, where his works were held in no less estimation. On his return to Flanders he was considered one of the ablest landscape painters of his time, and he enjoys the credit of having been the first master of Rubens. He was made free of the Antwerp Guild in 1590, and was dean in 1595-6. He embellished his landscapes with antique ruins of which he had made many studies during his residence at Rome. The figures in his pictures were put in by other hands, particularly by Francks. He died in 1631. The only accessible picture by him we can name is a 'Hunting adventure of Maximilian I.,' in the Brussels Museum.

VERHAGEN, JAN. See VAN DER HAGEN.

VERHAGHEN, JAN JOSEPH, painter, called POTTEKENS VERHAGHEN, was the brother and pupil of Pieter Joseph Verhaghen. He was born at Aerschot about 1726, and gained his sobriquet by his skill in painting pieces of earthenware in his pictures. He also excelled in rendering metals.

VERHAGHEN, PIETER JOSEPH, an historical painter, was born at Aerschot in 1728. He studied under the picture restorer Kerkhoven, and, in the Antwerp Academy, under Beschey. In 1753 he settled at Louvain. In 1771 he became court painter to Prince Charles of Lorraine, and was patronized by the Empress Maria Theresa, who supplied him with means to travel through France, Sardinia, and Italy. At Rome he painted an 'Ecce Homo,' and 'Christ at Emmaus,' which attracted so much attention, that the Pope, Clement XIV., desired to know the painter. At an audience, his Holiness was so charmed with his talents and modesty, that he accorded him plenary indulgence, at the hour of death, for himself, his relations and connections to the third degree, and for thirty persons of his nomination. After painting several other pictures, he returned to Vienna, where he was appointed principal painter to the court. This favour, however, did not induce him to remain at Vienna. He returned to Louvain in 1773, and was met by such a cavalcade, that neither horse nor carriage, says his biographer, was left in the city. He died at Louvain in 1811. Verhaghen may be considered the latest continuator of the principles of the Great School of Antwerp. His pictures are plentiful in Louvain and its neighbourhood, and the two following are in public collections:

Antwerp. Museum. Abraham and Hagar.
Ghent. " The Presentation in the Temple.

VERHAS, THEODOR, born at Heidelberg in 1812, was a painter of landscapes in oil, aquarelle, and sepia. His subjects were often taken from the neighbourhood of his native town, and he largely contributed to an 'Album of Heidelberg,' lithographed by Lemer cier. The S. Kensington Museum possesses a snow scene by him. He died in 1872.

VERHEIJDEN, FRANS PIETERSZ, was born at the Hague in 1657. He followed the profession of a sculptor until he was forty years of age, and was employed in modelling ornaments on the triumphal arches for the public entry of William III. into the Hague, in 1691. Having seen some pictures of animals by Frans Snyders, he was so charmed with them, that he abandoned sculpture to devote himself to painting. In this change of profession he was very successful, although his pictures are little known out of Holland. He painted hunts of stags and wild boars in the style of Snyders, and also fowls and dead game, in the style of Hondekoe ter. He died at the Hague in 1711. His son FRANS, also a painter and sculptor, died the same year.

VERHEIJDEN, MATHEUS, probably the son of F. P. Verheijden, was born at Breda in 1700, and was a good portrait painter. He was first placed under Hendrik Carré, but having lost his father when at the age of eleven, he was taken under the protection of Terwesten and Constantine Netscher, and pursued his studies under their care. At the age of fifteen he went to the Hague, and worked under Karel de Moor. He painted historical and allegorical subjects, besides portraits, and appears to have maintained himself in comfort by his art. He was still living in 1776. His portraits are unknown out of Holland.

VERHEIJEN, JAN HENDRIK, a Dutch landscape and architectural painter, born at Utrecht in 1778. He began life as a notary, but took to painting at the age of 21. He died 14th January, 1846. There are two pictures by him in the Rotterdam Museum.

VERHELST, EGIDIUS, the younger, (or VERELST,) was born at Ettal, in Bavaria, in 1742. His father was a sculptor, and for some years he followed the same profession, practising at Munich, Stuttgart, Augsburg, Düsseldorf, Mannheim, and other cities. At Augsburg he learnt engraving under Rudolph Stärkel. He was appointed Professor of Design to the Academy of Mannheim, and a member of that of Düsseldorf. Being desirous, however, of further improvement, he went to Paris, and placed himself under the direction of J. G. Wille. After some stay with this master, he returned to Munich, and made engraving his profession. He died in 1818. His numerous plates are chiefly portraits of small size. Among others, we may name the following:

Charles Theodore, Elector of Bavaria. 1790.

Elizabeth Augusta, his consort.

Clement Wenceslaus, Elector of Trèves.

A. W. Iffland.

Five plates for a Translation of Tasso's 'Jerusalem Delivered.'

Two Heads, 'Innocence and Simplicity,' for Lavater.

VERHEYDEN. See VERHEIJDEN.

VERHOEK, GIJSBERT, (or GILBERT,) was born at Boodegrave in 1644; he was the younger brother and pupil of Pieter Cornelis Verhoek, and also studied under Adam Pynaker. He painted similar subjects, however, to those of his brother, namely, battles, marches of cavalry, and encampments, and particularly excelled in drawing horses. The works of Verhoek are frequently encountered in Holland, though little known in this country. He died in 1690.

VERHOEK, PIETER CORNELIS, a Dutch painter, was born at Boodegrave in 1633. He first studied under Jacob Van der Ulft, as a painter on glass. He then became a disciple of Abraham Hondius, and afterwards travelled in Italy, where he studied Borgognone, and distinguished himself as a painter of battles and cavalry skirmishes. He also painted landscapes in a pleasing style, which he decorated with figures in the manner of Callot. He died at Amsterdam in 1702. A certain CORNELIS VERHUIK, given by Kramm as a separate artist, and as having been born at Rotterdam in 1648, seems to be identical with the above.

VERHOEVEN, JAN, a Flemish painter, born about 1600, at Mechlin, was the son of Gillis Verhoeven, a painter and sculptor, and the pupil of one Nicholas van Ophem. He was admitted into the Corporation of Painters in 1642, became dean in 1669, and was still living in 1676. He was the rival and persistent enemy of Lucas Franchoys the younger. There are three portrait pieces by him in the museum at Mechlin, where several churches also have works from his hand.

VERHUIJK, CORNELIS, (VERHUYK, VERHUIJS, &c.) See VERHOEK, PIETER CORNELIS.

VERHULST, PIETER, a native of Dordrecht, painted fruit, flowers, and insects, in the manner of Van Schrieck (Otto Marcellis). He was a scholar of Willem Doudyns, which is all we know of him.

VERHULST, CHARLES PIERRE, a painter of portraits, interiors, &c., was born in 1775 at Mechlin. He studied in the school of that city, and afterwards became a professor at the Brussels Academy. He died in 1820. He painted portraits of the King of Holland and the Prince of Orange.

VERHUNNEMANN, ANNEKIN, a pupil of Memline, who entered the Guild of S. Luke at Bruges in 1480. No further details of his life are known.

VERKOLJE, JOHANNES, (VERKOLYE, or VERKOLIE,) born at Amsterdam in 1650, was the son of a locksmith, who brought him up to his own trade. But the boy having, when about twelve years of age, met with an accident which confined him for three years to his bed, he amused himself with copying whatever prints or other objects of art he could procure. After his recovery he was permitted to follow this up, and he became a pupil of Jan Lievens, by whose instruction he was in six months sufficiently advanced to dispense with further assistance. The works of Gerard Pietersz van Zijl were at that time in high esteem, and Verkolje endeavoured to imitate his highly-finished manner. He was chiefly employed on portraits of a small size, though he occasionally produced historical subjects and conversations, which were pleasant in colour, and touched with delicacy. In 1672 he settled at Delft, after which he worked much at engraving. He died at Delft in May, 1693. Works:

Amsterdam. Museum. The Family Concert. 1673.

Dresden. Gallery. The Trumpeter and the Lady.

Paris. Louvre. Mother with Infant in Arms.
 Petersburg. Hermitage. An Entertainment.
 Rotterdam. Museum. The Sportsman.
 Venus and Adonis.
 "The Messenger." (Baron G. de Rothschild.)

Jan Verkolje was one of the earliest mezzotinters in Holland. The following prints by him may be named:

William III. | William Henry, Prince of Orange.
 Stephen Wolters, Amator Artium; after Kneller.
 Hortensia Mancini, Duchess of Mazarin; after Lely.
 His own Portrait; after De Leeuw.
 Diana and Calisto; after Casp. Netscher.
 Venus and Adonis; after his own picture.
 Venus and Cupid. 1682. | Pan and Flora.

VERKOLJE, NICOLAAS, the son and disciple of Johannes Verkolje, was born at Delft in 1673. His father died when he was twenty years of age, but he had made sufficient progress to do without the aid of another master. For some time he painted small portraits and domestic subjects in the style of his father, but he afterwards applied himself to historical painting in the manner of Van der Werff. He died at Amsterdam in 1746. The Rijks Museum, at Amsterdam, has a portrait by him of the Dutch physician, Anthony van Leeuwenhoek; and in the Louvre there is a 'Proserpine gathering flowers in the fields of Enna.' Nicolaas Verkolje also distinguished himself as a draughtsman in black and white, and as a mezzotint engraver. The following are his principal plates; they surpass those of his father:

Bernard Picart; after Nattier.
 Jan Pieter van Zomer; after A. Boonen.
 The Holy Family; after Ad. van der Werff.
 Diana and Endymion; after Cas. Netscher.
 Bacchus and Ariadne; after the same.
 A Shepherd and Shepherdess; after the same.
 An Entertainment in a Garden; after J. B. Weenix.

VERKRUYTS, THEODOOR, called in Italy DELLA CROCE, was a Dutch engraver, who resided chiefly in Italy. He flourished about the beginning of the 18th century, and engraved some plates from pictures in the Florentine galleries; some views of sea-ports, after Salvator Rosa; and several portraits.

VERLA, FRANCESCO, (or VERLO,) of Vicenza, was a third-rate scholar of Squarcione, and lived in the early part of the 16th century. In the Brera at Milan is a 'Virgin and Child,' painted by him, dated 1511. A picture by him at Schio is inscribed Franciscus Verlus de Vicentia pinxit XXX Junii MDXII. Another work of his is at Sercedo. It is probable that FRANCESCO VERUZIO, of Vicenza, mentioned by Vasari, is identical with Verla, and that Vasari's mistake arose from his misapprehension of the diminutive, Verlucio, Verluzo, in the Venetian dialect. The dates of Verla's birth and death are unknown.

VERLINDE, PIERRE ANTOINE AUGUSTIN, a French painter, born at Bergues-Saint-Winoc, January 20th, 1801. After studying for a time under Guérin, in Paris, he became the pupil of Ducq and of Van Brée, and settled in Belgium. He painted portraits, historical subjects, and panoramas, and in 1829 became Professor at the Academy of Antwerp, in which city he died on March 29th, 1877.

VERMEER, JOHANNES, commonly called VERMEER, or, incorrectly, VAN DER MEER, of DELFT, was born at Delft, where he was baptized on October 31, 1632. He has been called the pupil of Karel Fabritius. As Fabritius was only inscribed in the books of the Delft Guild on October 29, 1652, as a stranger, and as Vermeer himself was admitted a master on December 29, 1653, the connection between the two in this capacity must have been short. It is likely that Vermeer also studied under Leonard Bramer, but the art of Pieter de Hooch shows more affinity to his than that of any other master. Substitute a predilection for blue to one for red, and a Vermeer becomes very like a De Hooch. In 1653 he married one Catharina Bolenes, of Delft. In 1662, 1663, 1670, and 1671, Johannes Vermeer was one of the chiefs of the Delft Guild. The date formerly given for his death was 1696. It has now, however, been discovered that he was buried at Delft on December 15, 1675, and that he left eight children, all under age. Twenty of his pictures, including the famous 'View of Delft,' were sold at Amsterdam on the 16th of May, 1696. He painted portraits, genre pictures, landscapes, and town views. His existence was in danger of being forgotten, and many of his works were ascribed to others, when the late 'W. Burger' ('Th. Thoré) devoted himself to the revindication of his fame. Vermeer's pictures are very scarce and costly. Among them we may name:

Vermeer usually signed himself J. V. Meer, the J. V. and M. being combined into a monogram. For a complete list of pictures ascribed to him see H. Havard, 'Van der Meer de Delft,' Paris, 1888.

VERMEERSCH, IVO AMBROS, was born at Maldegheem, near Ghent, in 1810. When a boy he used to draw the old houses of his birthplace, and after a term of military service, he studied for an architectural painter under P. F. de Noter, at the Academy. In 1841 he moved to Munich, whence he made repeated tours in Italy. He died in 1852. Among his best pictures are views of the Fish Market and of churches and ruins in Ghent, of the Market Place of Brunswick, and of various corners in Bruges, Venice, Verona, &c. Several of his pictures are in the New Pinacothek at Munich.

VERMEIJEN, HENDRIK. This painter is believed to have been the son of Jan Cornelis Vermeijen. He settled at Cambrai, and became the ancestor of a long line of second-rate artists.

VERMEIJEN, JAN CORNELIS, (VERMEYEN, VERMAYEN, VERMEY,)—called 'Juan de Mayo' or 'Majo,' 'Hans May' or 'Jan May,' 'El Barbudo' or 'Barbato,' and 'De Barbalonga.'—was born at Beverwijk, near Haarlem, about 1500. He was probably the pupil of his father, CORNELIS VERMEIJEN, who flourished in 1490. His work seems to show that he visited Italy, and studied Raphael. In 1529 he was at Cambrai, in the service of Margaret of Austria, aunt of Charles V. At her death, his ability recommended him (1534) to the protection of Charles V., whom he attended in many of his expeditions. In 1535 he was present, as engineer as well as artist, at the taking of Tunis, where he made sketches of the most remarkable events of the siege, from which he executed the cartoons for a suite of tapestry now in the Palace at Madrid. The sketches are now in the possession of Queen Victoria; the cartoons are in the Belvedere. A second suite of ten tapestries, two being omitted, was made from these cartoons in 1712, for the Emperor Charles VI., and are now at Schönbrunn. He afterwards accompanied Charles to Naples, Germany, and Flanders. Towards the latter part of his life he principally worked at Brussels and at Arras, where he painted pictures for the churches and public buildings, which are favourably mentioned by Van Mander. They were destroyed by the Iconoclasts. Prof. A. J. Wauters lately discovered three oil pictures in the Marchese Mansi's Gallery at Lucca, which he ascribes to Vermeijen. They are similar to three of the above-named cartoons, and represent the 'Taking of Tunis,' the 'Battle of Pavia,' and the 'Taking of Rome.' He died at Brussels in 1559.

Vermeijen's talents were distributed over historical subjects, portraiture, and landscape. He was also well skilled in mathematics and architecture. Many of the pictures he painted for Charles V. are supposed to have perished in the fire at the Prado in 1608. He was also remarkable for the length of his beard! This, though the wearer was a tall man, used to trail on the ground, and the Emperor, when in a playful mood, would condescend to tread upon it! Hence the names of Barbudo, Hans with the Beard, &c.

Vermeijen was an engraver. Brulliot describes four of his etchings. He also gives his cipher, thus, , which properly signifies Jean Cornelisz, and is to be found on the following prints:

The Virgin and Infant accompanied by an Angel. 1545. A Man duped; composition of several half-length figures. At the bottom is inscribed, Sic Hispana Venus loculos excantat amando, sic fuvata rapit bastia Stultus amans. 1545.

A young Woman with a Cat, half-length profile. 1546. A young Woman seated on a Couch, apparently sewing. 1545.

We may also name:

Philip II. of Spain. (Philippus Rex Anglorum.)
(Equestrian portrait.)

Henry II. of France. 1555.
Venus and Cupid.

VERMEULEN, ANDRIES, painter, and son of Cornelis Vermeulen the younger, was born at Dordrecht in 1763, and instructed by his father. His subjects were landscapes with figures, horses, and cattle. He also painted winter scenes, with figures skating and otherwise amusing themselves on the frozen canals of Holland. He died at Amsterdam in 1814. The Rijks Museum and the Copenhagen Gallery have some winter scenes by him.

VERMEULEN, CORNELIS, the elder, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1644. In the early part of his life he passed some time in France, but afterwards chiefly resided in his native city. There he engraved many plates, of which the best are his portraits, for his drawing was not sufficiently correct for success in historical subjects. He worked entirely with the graver, in a neat, clear style. His death occurred at Antwerp in 1710. The following are his best prints:

Anne Boleyn; engraved for I. de Larrey's History of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

Catherine Howard; for the same.

Catherine Parr; for the same.

Lady Jane Grey; for the same.

Robert, Earl of Leicester; for the same.

Oliver Cromwell; for the same.

William III.; for the same.

Marie Louise of Orleans; after Rigaud.

Louis de Luxembourg, Marshal of France; after the same.

Philip V. of Spain; after Vivien.

Maximilian Emanuel, Elector of Bavaria; after the same.

Marie Louise de Tassis; after Van Dyck.

Nicolas Van der Borcht; after the same.

Pierre Mignard, Painter; from a picture by himself.

Bacchus and Erigone; after Guido; for the 'Croizat Collection.'

Marie de Medicis escaping from the city of Blois; after the picture by Rubens, in the Louvre.

VERMEULEN, CORNELIS, the younger, father of Andries Vermeulen, was born at Dordrecht in 1732, and was an ornamental painter and picture dealer. He copied many pictures of the older Dutch masters, and died at Dordrecht in 1813.

VERMEYEN. See VERMEIJEN.

VERMEIGLIO, GIUSEPPE, was a native of Turin, and flourished about the year 1675. He painted pictures for the churches and public buildings at Novara and Alessandria, but his best work is a large 'Daniel in the Den of Lions,' in the Biblioteca Della Passione at Milan.

VERMONT, HYACINTHE COLIN DE, was born at Versailles in 1693. He studied under Rigand, and in 1727 was admitted to the Academy, of which he afterwards became a professor. He died at Versailles in 1761. Among his best pictures are:

The Presentation in the Temple. (St. Louis, Versailles.)
Cleopatra at the feet of Augustus.

VERNANSAL, GUY LOUIS, a French painter, was born at Fontainebleau in 1648. He was a pupil of Lebrun, and the master of N. Bertin. He became an Academician in 1687, and his reception picture, 'The Extinction of Heresy in France,' is now at Versailles. In 1704 he was appointed a professor. Pictures by him are in the museums of Angers, Orleans, and Rennes. He worked much in Italy, especially at Padua and in Rome. He died in Paris, April 9, 1729. His son, JACQUES FRANÇOIS, was his pupil and assistant.

VERNET, ANTOINE, a decorative painter, born at Avignon in 1689, is chiefly remembered as the father of Joseph Vernet. Of his twenty-two children four were painters. The Musée Calvet, at Avignon, has a study of flowers and birds by him. He died at Avignon in 1753.

VERNET, ANTOINE CHARLES HORACE, generally known as CARLE VERNET, was the son of Claude Joseph Vernet, and was born at Bordeaux in 1758. He drew horses when quite a child, and studied painting under the instruction of his father and of Lepicier. At the age of twenty-one he obtained the second prize at the Academy of Painting, and three years later the grand prize of Rome. In Italy, after a period of dissipation, he threatened to become a monk, so that his father recalled him to France. Returning with vigour to his neglected art, he produced a painting of 'The Triumph of Paulus Æmilius,' which in 1788 procured his admission to the Academy. He now devoted himself anew to the horse, and his works were mainly concerned with that animal. His father's popularity in Paris society opened many good houses to the young painter. He became the friend of the Marquis de Villette and the Comte de Lauragnais, and with them set the fashion of 'Anglomania,' and popularized horse-racing in France. On the outbreak of the Revolution his sympathies were at first on the side of the people. But flying with his wife and children across the Place du Carrousel on the 10th August, he was wounded by a ball in the hand. This, followed by the loss of a sister upon the scaffold, gave him a shock from which he only recovered upon the establishment of the Directory. At this period he created the famous types of the 'Merveilleux' and 'Incroyable.' Forsaking the classic style he then took to military subjects, and his 'Morning of Austerlitz' in 1808 procured him the Legion of Honour. In 1810 he was admitted a member of the Institute. During the Restoration he painted hunting scenes, horse-races, and also landscapes, portraits, and comic subjects. He also executed numerous lithographs and drawings, among the latter those from the Italian campaigns, which were engraved by Duplessis-Bertaux. Carle Vernet died in Paris November 28, 1836. The following may be cited among his principal paintings :

The Battle of Marengo. (Versailles.)
 The Morning of Austerlitz. 1808.
 Napoleon before Madrid. 1810.
 The Taking of Pampeluna. 1820.
 The Castle of Rivoli. (Versailles.)
 Stag Hunt. (Louvre.)
 The Walls of Rome.

VERNET, ANTOINE IGNACE, ANTOINE FRANÇOIS, and FRANÇOIS GABRIEL, the three brothers of Joseph Vernet, were natives of Avignon. IGNACE was born in 1726, and died about 1775. He settled at Naples in 1746, and painted chiefly marine subjects, and eruptions of Vesuvius. FRANÇOIS, born in 1730, was a decorative painter. He worked in Paris, and through the influence of Joseph, obtained the post of painter to the palaces of Fontainebleau and Versailles. The Avignon Museum possesses a 'Landscape' and studies of flowers by him. He died in Paris in 1779. FRANÇOIS GABRIEL, born in 1728, practised in his native town as a painter of religious subjects.

VERNET, CLAUDE JOSEPH, was born at Avignon August 14, 1714. After receiving some instruction in the rudiments of design from his father, Antoine Vernet, he was sent to Aix, and worked for a time under local artists of repute. At the age of seventeen he so successfully carried out some decorative work for M. de Caumont, that his patron raised a subscription to enable him to go to Rome. Upon the voyage he was so impressed with the effect of a stormy sea that he had himself tied to the mast in order to be able more accurately to observe it. In Rome he had at first to paint carriages for a living, but was shortly able to enter the school of the marine painter Bernardo Fergioni, whom he speedily surpassed. He also studied under Adrien Manglard, Panini, and Solimena, his subjects now being the ruins, landscapes, and costumes of Rome. His landscapes soon came to be eagerly sought after by distinguished French amateurs and by the Italian nobles and prelates. He first followed a manner resembling that of Salvator Rosa, and worked in that style for the Farnese Gallery and Rondamini Palace. In 1745 he married Cecilia Parker, daughter of the Pope's naval commandant. The works he sent home excited so much admiration that Madame de Pompadour begged him to settle in Paris. On returning to France he was in 1753 admitted to the Academy, and in 1766 to its council. Soon after this Louis XV. commissioned him to paint a set of twenty pictures of French sea-ports. He devoted nine years to this undertaking. Only sixteen of the pictures, however, were finished, the war with England preventing the painting of the Channel ports. These pictures are now in the Louvre. They were followed by a host of other marine views, many of which are in the same collection. Vernet died in the Louvre, December 3, 1789. His last years were embittered by the madness and death of his wife. His pictures are very numerous, and are to be found in most large galleries. There are two in the National Gallery. Lebas, Benazech, Cochin, and others engraved over two hundred plates after his works. Vernet left a few small etchings, among them the following :

A Landscape, with a Bridge and part of a Village.
 A Shepherd and Shepherdess.
 A View of a Market-place.
 A Canal, with Fishermen.

VERNET, EMILE JEAN HORACE, painter, was the son of Carle Vernet, and was born in Paris, June 30, 1789. Showing from his early childhood an equal facility in the use of pencil and burin, his father decided that he should follow in the family footsteps and become an artist, though the boy himself, who had a passion for sport, horses, and military life, wished to enter the army. He became his father's pupil, and also studied for a while under Vincent, gaining the first of the many official honours that fell to him in 1812 (a medal of the first class). The elder Vernet, determining to settle the question of Horace's career in a definite manner, married him, before he had reached the age of twenty, to Mlle. Louise Pajol, and shortly afterwards obtained for him the post of military draughtsman at the seat of war. So early as 1812 Vernet had attracted the attention of the Court, and had received commissions from the King of Westphalia and Marie Louise. In 1814 he, together with his father, fought in the defence of the Barrière de Clichy, and for his gallantry on this occasion the Emperor bestowed on him with his own hand the Cross of the Legion of Honour. An ardent Bonapartist, he remained faithful to the Napoleonic tradition after the Restoration, and propagated it by means of sketches, pictures, and lithographs, which had an immense popularity throughout the country. This partizan zeal was naturally displeasing to the Bourbons. They looked coldly upon the artist, who was led to attach himself strongly to the Duke of Orleans' party. In 1820 the King's displeasure made it politic for Vernet to leave Paris for a while, and he went to Rome with his father. It was at this time that he painted his famous 'Course des Barbari' (the Carnival race-horses). After his return to Paris in 1822, he produced the 'Defence of the Barrière de Clichy,' his best work, now in the Louvre, and sent it, together with his 'Battle of Jemappes,' and some other pictures, to the Salon, but the authorities rejected them on political grounds. Vernet accordingly opened an exhibition of his works in his own studio, which had an extraordinary success, the Parisian public generally espousing his cause. Two years later Charles X., desirous of attaching the popular painter to himself, commissioned him to paint his portrait. This was followed by other royal commissions, and in 1826 Vernet was elected a member of the Institute. His principal works for the king were a ceiling for the royal museum, and two historical pictures for Versailles, 'Fontenoy' and 'Philip Augustus before Bouvines.' In 1828 Vernet became Director of the French Academy at Rome, and remained at the Villa Medicis till 1833, when he gladly resigned his post, and hastened to join the French army at Algiers. Returning to Paris, he received numerous commissions from his former patron, King Louis Philippe, who had converted the Palace of Versailles into a museum, and who inaugurated the great 'Gallery of Battles' to accommodate his protégé's enormous canvases. In 1842 Vernet visited Russia, where he was received with great distinction by the Emperor, and painted the portrait of the Empress, and in the following year he was again with the army in Algiers. The Revolution of 1848 was a terrible blow to his hopes and prospects, but under the second empire fresh honours fell to his share. At the French Exhibition of 1855 an entire gallery was devoted to his works, and the outbreak of the Crimean War opened a new field to him. Among his latest pictures were the 'Battle of the Alma,' and a portrait of Napoleon III., who made him grand officer of the Legion of Honour a few weeks before his death in Paris, January 17, 1863. Vernet's work, great as was its vogue in his day, has little of the quality that makes for lasting fame. He has been called the 'Paul Delaroche of military painting,' and the comparison aptly illustrates the characteristic appeal of his œuvre to emotions stirred by the choice of subject, and not to artistic perception. Flourishing at a period of extraordinary patriotic excitement, he won success by the facile skill with which he translated the national enthusiasm, and flattered the national vanity. His works are too numerous for any detailed list here. Besides such as have been mentioned, there is a large collection at Versailles, of which perhaps the most notable are:

The Taking of the Smalah of Abdel-Kader in 1843.

Four Scenes from the Siege of Constantine in 1837.

The camarieu decorations in the 'Salle de Crimée.' F.S.

VERNET, JULES, a French miniature painter, who exhibited portraits at the Salon, chiefly of literary and theatrical celebrities, from about 1812 to 1842. He died in 1843.

VERNICI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was, according to Malvasia, a native of Bologna, and was brought up in the school of the Carracci. He painted religious and historical pictures for the churches and public buildings of Pesaro and Urbino, particularly of the latter city, where he was appointed principal painter to the Duke, in whose service he died in 1617.

VERNIER, EMILE LOUIS, a French marine and landscape painter and lithographer, was born at Lons-le-Saulnier (Jura) in 1831, and was a pupil of Colette. He was perhaps best known by his lithographs, of which he produced a great variety of a very high degree of excellence, chiefly after the works of Corot, Rousseau, Daubigny, Millet, and Courbet. His 'Angelus,' after Millet, was executed on commission for the 'Chalcographie du Louvre.' As a painter of coast scenes and fisher-folk, both in oil and water-colour, he also held a foremost place among modern French artists. His subjects were taken principally from the Norman and Breton coasts, but he also produced some views of Venice and Dordrecht, and studies of the Cornish coast, and the Thames near and in London. A public exhibition and sale of a large number of his works was held in Paris shortly after his death, which took place in that city, May 26, 1887. He held medals both for painting and lithography, and received the cross of the Legion of Honour in 1881.

VERNIER, PAUL BARTHÉLEMY, a French painter and lithographer, born in Paris in 1830, was a pupil of Drolling, and exhibited portraits at the Salon in 1857 and 1861. He died at Marlotte in 1861.

VERNON, JEAN DE. See LETELLIER.

VERNON, THOMAS, engraver, was born in Staffordshire, about 1824. He studied in London and Paris, and won a high reputation, especially as an engraver of figure pictures. He worked, however, at a time when excellence in his special branch of art met with little return in money, and he had all through his career to struggle with narrow means. He died January 22, 1872. Among his best plates were:

Madonna and Child; after Raphael.

Virgin and Child; after Dyce.

Princess Helena; after Winterhalter.

Lady Constance Grosvenor; after the same.

Olivia Unveiling; after C. R. Leslie.

The First-born; after Cope.

Christ healing the Sick; after Murillo.

VERON, ALEXANDRE PAUL JOSEPH, called BELLECOURT, painter, born in Paris in 1773, was a pupil of David and of Van Spaendonck. He painted a few historical pictures, but devoted himself chiefly to flower-studies, both in oil and water-colour, many of which appeared at the Salon. At Versailles there is by him, 'The Emperor visiting the Infirmary of the Invalides on February 11, 1808.' He appeared at the Salon for the last time in 1838.

VERONA, CECCHINO DA. See CECCHINO.

VERONA, FILIPPO DA, a third-rate imitator of Giambattista Cima, flourished in the 16th century, and is the author of a 'Virgin and Child,' in the Academy of Arts, Turin, a replica of which is in the Locchis Carrara Gallery at Bergamo. He was employed at the Eremitani Chapel, Padua, where he painted the 'Glory of the Virgin, with Angels and Saints,' in 1511; having previously in 1509 produced a 'Virgin and Child, with SS. Felix and Catharine,' for the Santo. The church of San Niccolò, Fabriano, has a 'Madonna between SS. Peter and Nicholas of Bari,' by him, dated 1514. The dates of his birth and death are unknown.

VERONA, JACOPO AVANZO DA. See AVANZI.

VERONA, MAFFEO, was born at Verona in 1576, and was a disciple of Luigi Benfatto, but derived more advantage from the works of his kinsman, Paolo Veronese, than from the instruction of his master. He is said by Ridolfi to have painted with uncommon celerity, and to have particularly excelled in fresco. Many of his works exist in the public buildings of Venice, among them a 'Christ bearing His Cross' and a 'Crucifixion,' in the chapel dedicated to St. Isidoro, St. Mark's. The same church has two altar-pieces, a 'Deposition from the Cross,' and a 'Resurrection.' He also painted several pictures for the cathedral at Udine, and for churches in his native city. He died in 1618.

VERONA, MICHELE DA, was born in 1470. Very little is known of his career. He was a contemporary of Paolo Morando (Cavazzola), and may have assisted him in the decorative work for S. Bernardino, at Verona. Inside the portal of San Stefano, Milan, is a large 'Crucifixion,' signed by him in 1500, and formerly in the Refectory of San Giorgio, of Verona. The same subject, dated by him in 1505, is in Santa Maria in Vanzo, Padua. In both pictures there is a very obvious imitation of the manner of Jacopo Bellini. In the church of Santa Chiara, Verona, are frescoes representing the Eternal, with Angels, Prophets, and the four Evangelists, dated 1509. Frescoes of later dates exist in the churches of Vittoria Nuova and Sant' Anastasia; whilst in the church of Villa di Villa, near Este, is a 'Madonna and Child, between SS. John the Baptist, Lawrence, Andrew, and Peter,' dated 1523. This is the latest date we have in connection with Michele. Besides the works already named we may cite:

London. Nat. Gallery. The meeting of Coriolanus with Volumnia and Veturia.
Verona. Gallery. Four heads of Saints.

VERONA, NICCOLÒ DA. A fresco of the 'Virgin with the Child and Saints,' in the Ognisanti at Mantua, is signed with this name, and dated 1461.

VERRIO, ANTONIO, was born at Lecce, near Otranto, in 1639. His master is unknown, but as soon as he had made sufficient progress to travel on the produce of his talents, he went to France and settled at Toulouse, where he painted an altarpiece for the Carmelites, which is described in Du Puy's 'Traité sur la Peinture.' Charles II., wishing to revive the famous tapestry works at Mortlake, which had been ruined by the civil war, invited Verrio to England. Once there, however, he was employed in decorating Windsor Castle, where, in a 'Christ healing the Sick,' he introduced himself, Sir Godfrey Kneller, and Baptist May, surveyor of the works, in long periwigs, as spectators of the miracle. It appears by a memorandum preserved by Vertue, that he received nearly seven thousand pounds for his performances at Windsor. He was named 'master gardener' to the king, and had a lodging assigned to him in St. James's Park. On the accession of James II., Verrio was again employed at Windsor, in Cardinal Wolsey's tomb-house, then destined for a Romish chapel. He is said to have refused for some time to work for King William. He was employed by Lord Exeter at Burligh, and afterwards executed many considerable works at Chatsworth, among which the altar-piece in the chapel may be named, representing the Incredulity of S. Thomas. By the persuasion of Lord Exeter, he at length consented to serve King William, and was employed to paint the great staircase at Hampton Court. Queen Anne granted him an annual pension of £200 upon his relinquishing work through failure of sight. He died at Hampton Court, June 17, 1707.

VERSCHAEREN, JEAN ANTOINE, was born at Antwerp in 1803, and was a painter of portraits, history, and landscapes. He was a pupil of Herreyns, and afterwards travelled in England, Germany, France, and Italy, spending some time at Munich and Rome. He became professor at the Academy of Antwerp, where he died in 1863. Among his best pictures are:

Rebekah and Eliezer at the Well.

Ruth and Boaz.

The Descent from the Cross. (Louvain.)

Jephthah.

The Annunciation. (Bois-le-Duc.)

Portrait of G. J. Herreyns.

VERSCHOOTEN, —, a Flemish painter of the 18th century, who was the first director of the Brussels Academy, founded by Prince Charles of Lorraine. He died towards the close of the 18th century.

VERSCHUIER, LIEVE, (or VERSCHUUR,) painter, was born at Rotterdam about 1630. He was a pupil, as is supposed, of Simon de Vlieger, after which he went to Italy. On his return he painted numerous sea-pieces with vessels, and in some cases fights. The Amsterdam Museum has three pictures by him: 'Charles II. of England entering the port of Rotterdam,' 'The Punishment of a surgeon for having attempted to poison Admiral van Nes,' and a 'Sea-piece.' He died at Rotterdam in December, 1686. ALBERT VERSCHUIER, the brother of Lieve, was a portrait painter. He died in 1691.

VERSCHURINGH, HENDRIK, a Dutch painter, born at Gorcum in 1627. His father, who was a captain of infantry in the Dutch service, was desirous of bringing him up to the profession of arms, but the feeble constitution of his son and his evident talent for drawing, induced him to place him under the tuition of Dirk Govertsz, a portrait painter of some reputation, with whom he remained until he was thirteen years of age. His genius leading him to a different department of art, he quitted his first instructor, and became a scholar of Jan Both, at Utrecht, and six years later visited Italy for improvement. His taste led him to paint animals, huntings, and battles, with remains of ancient architecture as accessories. After a residence of ten years in Italy, he in 1662 returned to Holland, where his opportunities of painting the calamities of warfare were but too frequent. Although he occasionally painted landscapes, his best pictures represent battles, attacks of banditti, and the plundering of villages. Wouwermans is said to have occasionally painted horses for him. After a career of much prosperity, he was drowned near Dordrecht, on the 26th of April, 1690. Pictures of his are at Berlin, Brunswick, Copenhagen, and Rotterdam. Verschuringh has left a few slight but spirited etchings, which are now scarce :

A Battle: two Horsemen galloping to the left, one armed with a helmet and shield, the other sounding a horn. H. Verschuringh, f. There are two versions of this.

The Travellers; a Woman on an Ass, with a Boy before her, and a Man on horseback by her side; a large Dog barking. H. Verschuringh, f.

The Two Dogs; a Greyhound with his head lifted up as if howling, and a Dog couched, turning his head towards the Hound. H. V. S. in a monogram.

The Three Dogs; a Greyhound standing and turning his head towards a Dog lying down, a third Dog in the background. The artist's cipher at bottom.

VERSCHURINGH, WILLEM, the son of Hendrik Verschuringh, was born at Gorcum in 1657, and was for some time instructed by his father; but his inclination leading him to a different branch of art, he was permitted to become a disciple of Jan Verkolje. He painted small portraits, conversations, and domestic subjects, finished in the style of his master, by which he had acquired some reputation, when he abandoned painting for commerce. He died in 1715. His son, WILLEM VERSCHURINGH the younger (1695—1769), was also a painter, and practised at the Hague.

VERSCHUUR, WOUTERUS, (or WALTER,) was born at Amsterdam in 1812, and was instructed by P. G. van Os and C. Steffelaar. In 1831 and 1832 he was præmiated by the Felix Meritis Society at Amsterdam, and afterwards became a member of the Academy in that city. His pictures consisted of landscapes, coast views, and horses, in Wouwerman's manner. He died at Vorden, July 4, 1874. Besides numerous stables with horses, the following pictures by him may be noted :

Sleigh racing on the Zaan. (Amsterdam Museum.)

Stormy Weather. (Do.)

Horse Fair. (Do.)

The Halt before the Inn. 1830.

A Bay Horse with a Plough. 1840.

Landscape with Horses and Figures. 1841.

VERSELIN, JACQUES, miniature painter, was born in Paris in 1646, and died there June 1st, 1718. He was received into the Academy, 1687, his reception picture being a miniature portrait of the king, after Le Brun.

VERSPLIT, VICTOR. Nothing is known of the life of this painter, who practised in the 17th century. He was probably a native of Ghent, as there are several landscapes signed with his name in the sacristy of the Augustine church in that city. He is perhaps identical with the VERSPILT mentioned by Decamps.

VERSPRONCK, CORNELIS ENGELSZEN, a painter of Haarlem, was a pupil of Cornelis Cornelisz and Karel van Mander. In 1593 he entered the Guild and became a painter of portraits and of shooting pieces, one of which, dated 1618, is in the Haarlem Museum. The date of his death is not known, but that of his widow is recorded in 1666.

VERSPRONCK, GERARD, or JOCHEM, or (GERARD SPRONCK, or SPRONG,) the eldest son of C. E. Verspronck, was probably born at Haarlem about 1600. He was an historical painter, and there is also a half-length female portrait in the Louvre by him. He is supposed to have died in 1651. In the Louvre catalogue he is called SPRONG, and under that name has been already inserted in this dictionary.

VERSPRONCK, JAN, (or JOHANNES SPRONCK,) the second son of C. E. Verspronck, was born at Haarlem in 1597, and entered the Guild in 1632. He was a pupil of his father and Frans Hals, and painted portraits and shooting pieces. There are pictures by him at Haarlem, Amsterdam, Berlin, Paris, Oldenburg, Schleisshem, &c. Two excellent portraits of Thomas Wijck and his wife, by Verspronck, are in the collection of Mr. David Sellar. He died at Haarlem, June, 1662.

VERSTAPPEN, MARTIN, was born at Antwerp in 1773, and was first a pupil of P. van Regemorter and afterwards of Klengel, in Dresden. Subsequently he went to Rome, and studied under his countryman, Simon Denys. He settled in that city, and became professor to the Academy of S. Luke, but continued to send pictures to the exhibitions in Belgium, Holland, and Paris. He painted with the left hand. He died in 1840. Among his works we may name :

Pilgrims' Chapel at Narni.

Church of the Madonna del Neve at Caprarola.

Grotto of Palazzoli.

Chapel at L'Aricia. (Thorvaldsen Museum, Copenhagen.)

VERSTEEG, MAGGIEL, (or VERSTEIGH,) a painter of landscapes and interiors, was born at Dordrecht, August 30th, 1756. He was a pupil of A. van Wanum and of J. Ponse. At first he painted landscapes with figures and cattle in a careful, sometimes too elaborate, manner. He afterwards abandoned landscape and painted interiors with figures, by lamp-light or candle-light, and in this genre became eminent. Without reaching the polish of Schalken, he often equals him in his effects of light and shadow. His pictures of this class are to be found in the best Dutch collections, and some have migrated to England. He died at Dordrecht in November, 1843. He was a member of the Royal Institute of the Netherlands, and of the Antwerp Academy. Pictures :

VERSTER, D. See STAR, DIRCK VAN.

VERSTRAELEN, J., was a Dutch engraver, who flourished about the year 1620. He has left a plate representing Maurice, Prince of Orange, lying dead, surrounded by his officers and guards and two children.

VERSTRAETEN, —, a Flemish architectural painter, who flourished at the beginning of the 18th century. There is a picture in the Antwerp Museum by B. van den Bossche of the Guild of Crossbowmen, in which the distant landscape is painted by Cornelis Huysmans and the architectural background by Verstraeten. He died about 1729.

VERTANGEN, DANIEL, was born at the Hague in 1598, and was a disciple of Cornelis Poelenburgh. He painted similar subjects to those of his master, representing landscapes, with small figures, principally Nymphs bathing, Bacchanals, and subjects from Ovid. His works are often ascribed to Poelenburgh. In the Dresden Gallery there is an 'Adam and Eve' by him, and in the Copenhagen Gallery a 'Diana and Nymphs.'

VERTUE, GEORGE, was born in the parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, London, in the year 1684. His parents were in poor circumstances. About the age of thirteen he was placed with a Frenchman who engraved arms on plate, and had the chief business of London; but who, being extravagant, failed and returned to his own country, after Vertue had served him about three or four years. Returned to his parents, Vertue gave himself entirely to the study of drawing for two years, and then entered into an engagement with Michiel Van Der Gucht for three more, which term he protracted to seven, engraving copper-plates for him, when, having received instructions and advice from several painters, he quitted his master on handsome terms, and began to work for himself. This was in the year 1709. His first twelve months were passed in drawing and engraving for books. In the intervals of leisure Vertue practised music, learned French, Dutch, and a little Italian, so that he might consult in the originals the books in those three languages on the art to which he was devoted. At last his works began to attract attention, and Lord Somers paid him well for a plate of Archbishop Tillotson. This print was the ground-work of his reputation. In 1711 an academy for painting was started in London. Sir Godfrey Kneller was placed at its head. Vertue was one of the first members, and drew there for several years. To the end of the reign he continued to engrave portraits after Kneller, Dahl, Richardson, Jervas, Gibson, and others. On the accession of the house of Brunswick, he published a large portrait of the new king, which was shown at court, and followed by those of the prince and princess. As early as 1713, Vertue commenced his researches into the lives of our artists, and began those collections into which he put everything that could tend to advance his great work, the 'History of the Arts in England.' Robert Harley, second Earl of Oxford, was one of the first to understand the merit and application of Vertue. Another patron was Heneage Finch, Earl of Winchelsea, whose portrait he painted and engraved, and who, being president of the Society of Antiquaries on its revival in 1717, appointed Vertue its engraver.

The university of Oxford employed him for many years to engrave the headings to their almanacks. In 1730 appeared his twelve heads of poets, and shortly afterwards a set of heads of Charles I. and the sufferers in his cause, with their characters from Clarendon. This was scarce finished, before Rapin's History of England appeared, with portraits of kings and culs-de-lampe by Vertue. In 1740 he published his proposals for the commencement of his valuable historical prints.

Vertue died, as he had lived, in the Roman Catholic faith, on July 24, 1756, and was buried in the cloisters of Westminster Abbey. His work as an engraver, though of no great artistic merit, forms a valuable historical record, and his antiquarian researches and writings were of the highest importance. His large collection of notes and memoranda were purchased after his death by Horace Walpole, and formed the basis for his 'Anecdotes of Painting in England.' The original collections are now in the British Museum. A complete, classified list of Vertue's plates is given by Walpole.

VERTUE, JAMES, portrait painter and draughtsman, was the brother of George Vertue, the engraver. He practised at Bath, where he died about 1765. George Vertue engraved an 'Interior of Bath Abbey Church,' from a drawing by James.

VERUZIO. See VERLA.

VERVEER, ARY HUBERTSZ, an inferior Dutch painter and unsuccessful imitator of Rembrandt, flourished at Dordrecht in the middle of the 17th century. In 1646 he entered the Guild of S. Luke in that city.

VERVEER, SALOMON LEONARDUS, a Dutch landscape painter, was born at the Hague, November 30, 1813. He was a pupil of B. J. Van Hove. His works are chiefly views of Dutch towns and scenery, with characteristic figures. He enjoyed a high reputation in his native country, and his works were occasionally exhibited in Belgium, France, and Germany. At the Philadelphia Exhibition of 1876, his 'Village of Scheveningen' received a medal. He died at the Hague, January 5, 1876. Among his pictures are:

Amsterdam. R. Museum. Three Landscapes.
Rotterdam. " Afternoon at Katwijk-on-Sea.

VERVLOET, FRANCISCUS, painter born at Mechlin in 1795, was the younger brother of Jean Vervloet. His works were principally views of towns, monuments, and interiors, with figures introduced. He worked much in Italy, and died during a visit to Venice in 1872. Works:

Amsterdam. R. Museum. View of S. Peter's, Rome.
Brussels. " " S. Maria Nuova, Naples.

VERVLOET, JEAN JOSEPH, painter, born at Mechlin in 1790, was professor, and afterwards director, of the Academy of Mechlin. He painted historical pictures—The 'Penitent Magdalen' (at Reeth), 'Saint Vincent de Paul,' &c. He died in 1869. His wife, MADAME AUGUSTINE VERVLOET, also practised as a painter of flowers and fruit.

VERVOORT. See VAN DER VOORT.

VERVOORT, MICHAEL, painter and native of Antwerp, was a pupil of the Academy in 1797. In the Eglise du Sablon, at Brussels, there are two scenes from the life of S. Barbara by him.

VERWÉE, LOUIS PIERRE, painter, born at Courtrai in 1807, was a pupil of E. Verboeckhoven, whose manner he imitated with minute fidelity. He painted landscapes, to some of which Verboeckhoven added the animals, and hence many of his works have been sold as by his master. He died in 1877.

VERWILT, FRANS, was born at Rotterdam about 1620, and was a scholar of Cornelis Poelenburgh, of whose works he was a fairly successful imitator. He died in 1691. The Amsterdam Museum has the portrait of a son of Admiral van Nes by him, and the Copenhagen Gallery a bathing nymph.

VESTIER, ANTOINE, portrait painter, was born at Avallon, (Yonne,) in 1740. He became an Academician in 1786. He travelled for some years in England and Holland, and on his return in 1764, settled in Paris, and married the daughter of one Réverand, an enameller. After this he executed a few enamels; he continued, however, to practise chiefly as an oil-painter and miniaturist, and sent many works to Parisian exhibitions between 1782 and 1806. He died in Paris, December 24, 1824. His portrait of his wife, a child playing with a dog at her feet, is in the Louvre; also portraits of a young man and a young woman (in the La Caze Collection).

VETTEWINKEL, HENDRIK, a Dutch painter, born at Amsterdam, October 20, 1809, died there

May 8, 1878. There is a shipping scene by him in the Rijks Museum at Amsterdam.

VEXES, JOSEF, was a Spanish painter of about the middle of the 18th century, who spent some time in Italy, and ultimately went to South America, where he died in 1782.

VEYTH. See VEITH.

VÈZE, JEAN CHARLES, BARON DE, painter, born at Toulouse in 1788, was a painter of views and architecture. He died in 1855.

VEZZO, VIRGINIA DE, painter, was a native of Velletri, and the pupil of Simon Vouet, whose first wife she became. She painted historical pictures and miniatures, and also practised in pastel. She enjoyed a share of her husband's popularity at the court of Louis XIII. One of her daughters married the painter, François Torteat, and another Michel Dorigny, the engraver. She died in 1638.

VIA, ALESS. DELLA. See DELLA VIA.

VIALY, LOUIS RENÉ DE, (or VIALIS,) was a portrait painter, and a pupil of Rigaud. He was born at Avignon in 1680. He is supposed to have given some assistance to Joseph Vernet, with whom he had friendly relations all his life. He settled in Paris in 1755, became a member of the Academy of S. Luke in 1756, and was appointed painter to the king. He died in 1770. Among his works were, portraits of Don Philip, Infant of Spain, and of many of the Royal Family of France.

VIANA, FRANCISCO DE, a Genoese, accompanied Castello from Genoa to Spain, assisting in his works at the Alcazar during his lifetime, and finishing some after his death. He was appointed painter to Philip II. in 1571, with a salary of twenty ducats a month. He died at Madrid in 1605. His son, LORENZO DE VIANA, held office as painter to Philip III.

VIANEN, JAN VAN, a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1660. He engraved several portraits, as well as frontispieces and other plates for books. Among his portraits are the following:

Frederick William I., King of Prussia.
Augustus Pfeiffer, superintendent at Lubeck.
Jean Turretin, Theologian, of Geneva.

VIANEN, PAULUS VAN, portrait painter, is represented in a print (etched by Jacobus Lutma after his brother Janus) in the act of painting the likeness of Jan van Aken. He was born at Utrecht in the second half of the 16th century, was the pupil of his father, Willem Eerstensz v. Vianen, and was not only a painter and engraver, but also a goldsmith and chaser. He visited Italy and Germany, and was patronized by the Emperor Rudolph II., who appointed him his goldsmith. He died at Prague before 1620.

VIANI, ANTONIO MARIA, called VIANINO, was a painter and carver, who was born at Cremona about 1540. He was a pupil of the Campi. He was court painter to Duke Vincenzo Gonzaga, and adorned the large gallery of the Ducal Palace at Mantua with groups of children. He worked also at Capua. He died at Mantua at a very advanced age.

VIANI, DOMENICO MARIA, the son of Giovanni Maria Viani, was born at Bologna in 1668 (?), and was educated under his father, who kept a rival academy to that of Carlo Cignani. He was inferior to his father, but attained much vigour through study from the Venetian masters. In the church of La Natività, at Bologna, there is a series of Prophets and Evangelists by him; in the church of San Spirito, at Bergamo, a 'Miracle of S. Anthony,' and in the Dresden Gallery, a 'Venus reclining, with Cupid.' He died at Pistoja in 1711. Bartsch describes an etching by him of 'Joseph with the Infant Jesus.'

VIANI, GIOVANNI MARIA, was born at Bologna in 1637, and was a fellow-student with Pasinelli, in the school of Flaminio Torre. He imitated the general style of Guido, and few of his contemporaries equalled him in correctness of draughtsmanship and knowledge of anatomy. He directed a school at Bologna in which many distinguished artists were formed. He painted many pictures for the public buildings of Bologna, among them an 'Annunciation,' in S. Giuseppe; and at the Servi, 'S. Filippo Benizi carried up to Heaven,' and the 'Coronation of the Virgin.' He died in 1700. Other works:

Bologna.	Gallery.	S. John the Baptist.
		Portrait of a Monk.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Virgin and Child.

Bartsch describes these four etchings by him:

Christ crowned with Thorns; after Annibale Carracci.
Dido; after the same.
S. Francis with the Infant Christ in his arms; after Lodovico Carracci.
War; after the same.

VIARD, GEORGES, a French landscape painter, the dates of whose birth and death seem to be unknown. He exhibited at the Salon from 1834 to 1870. There is a pastoral landscape by him in the Orleans Museum.

VIBERT, VICTOR, an engraver, was born in Paris in 1799. He was the son of JOSEPH VIBERT, an engraver who was much employed by the publisher Didot, and studied under Panquet and Richomme. In 1828 he obtained the Grand Prix de Rome, and accordingly betook himself to Italy. There he engraved 'The Virgin with the Pink,' after Raphael. In 1833 he became a teacher of engraving in the School of Art at Lyons. He died at Lyons, March 19th, 1860. One of his best works was his large engraving from Orsel's 'Good and Evil.' Another was a portrait of Jacquard, after Bonnefond. Vibert's plates, however, are few, for most of his time was given to teaching.

VICENTE, BARTOLOME, a landscape and fresco painter, was born at Saragossa in 1640, and studied painting under Juan Carreño at Madrid. It is said that he spent seven years in copying pictures at the Escorial, especially those by the Bassani. He painted a few pictures at Madrid, some of which were from designs by his master. Having acquired the reputation of a good painter he returned to Saragossa, and employed himself in teaching mathematics, and painting small landscapes. Among his larger works were a fresco for the convent of the Augustines, an altar-piece for the church of S. Lorenzo, and a 'S. Peter in Prison,' for the University. He died at Saragossa in 1700.

VICENTINO, FRANCESCO, a Milanese painter of the school of Bernazzano, who flourished in the 16th century. He painted some pictures for Santa Maria delle Grazie, at Milan, and other churches, and Lomazzo praises the minute finish of a landscape by him.

VICENTINO, GIUSEPPE NICCOLÒ, called ROSFIGLIANI, an Italian painter and wood-engraver, was born at Vicenza about the year 1510, and was working at Bologna about 1540. His method was 'chiaro-scuro.' He used three blocks, and did much to develop the process. Among other cuts by him are the following:

Hercules killing the Nemean Lion; after Raphael.
A Sibyl reading a Book; after the same.
Venus embracing Cupid.
The Death of Ajax; after Polidoro da Caravaggio.
Clelia escaping from Porsenna's camp.

He is often confused with Niccolò Boldrini.

VICKERS, ALFRED, an English landscape painter, was born at Newington, Surrey, in 1786. He was self-taught, and studied much from nature, and from the works of the Dutch masters. His pictures were pleasant, but without much individuality or real insight into nature. He exhibited at the Royal Academy, the British Institution, and at Suffolk Street from 1814 to 1868, and died in the latter year.

VICKERS, ALFRED GOMERSAL, an English marine, landscape, and subject painter, was born in Lambeth in 1810. He was the son of Alfred Vickers, by whom he was taught. From the age of seventeen, he began to exhibit at the Royal Academy, in Suffolk Street, and at the British Institution. He was commissioned by Charles Heath to make drawings in Russia for publication in the 'Annuals.' For this work he received £500. He was just beginning to be known, when he died in Pentonville, January 12th, 1837. His sketches were sold at Christie's. Four of his water-colour drawings are in the South Kensington Museum.

VICO, ENEA, (VICUS, or VIGHI,) engraver and archæologist, was born at Parma in the year 1523. He went at an early age to Rome, where he was first instructed by Tommaso Barlacchi, an engraver and print-seller, for whom, in 1541-2, he engraved a series of twenty-four grotesques. He soon reached excellence, studying successively the manners of Giulio Bonasone, Agostino Veneziano, Caraglio, and especially Marc Antonio. Passavant dates from about 1550 the development of a manner of his own, remarkable for delicacy of execution and the skilful use of fine, closely-set lines. Cosmo I. invited him to Florence, where he engraved some of the best works of Michelangelo, with portraits of Charles V. and Henry II. (that of the former monarch has been erroneously stated to have been engraved by him on wood, in which it does not appear that he ever worked at all). He also worked for a time in Venice. In 1554 he brought out engravings of twelve imperial medals with descriptions; in the following year a 'Treatise on Medals,' and in 1557 a series of Empresses, with their biographies. He also engraved a variety of medals, and a set of thirty-six antique gems. He died at Parma in 1567. Bartsch assigns 494 plates to him, and Passavant 503. When he did not sign his plates with his name at length, he marked them with the initials Æ. V., sometimes upon a tablet, and sometimes without it. He also occasionally signed A. E. N. V. F. The following are his most noteworthy prints:

Charles V., surrounded by emblematical figures, inscribed, Inventum sculptumque ab Aenea Vico Parmense, MDL.

Bust of Giovanni de' Medici, in a border. 1550.

Bust of Cosmo de' Medici, when young.

Bust of Alfonso II., Duke of Ferrara.

The Army of Charles V. passing the Elbe; from his own design.

The Battle of the Amazons; inscribed, Bellum Amazonum. 1543.

A Female Figure, with her arms extended, over which appears an Owl; after Parmigiano. 1548.

Vulcan and Venus (a free subject); after the same. 1543.

Jupiter and Leda; after Michelangelo.

A Bacchanalian subject; after the same.

Vulcan and the Cyclops; after Primaticcio.

The Muses upon Parnassus.

Apollo and Cupid; after Baccio Bandinelli.

The Academy of Baccio Bandinelli; after the same.

The Conversion of S. Paul; after F. Salviati.

The Battle of the Lapithæ and Centaurs; after the same. 1542.

Judith with the Head of Holofernes; after Michelangelo.

The Entombment of Christ; after Raphael. 1548.

The Death of Lucretia. 1541.

The Annunciation; after Titian.

A set of twelve Vases; from designs by Polidoro da Caravaggio.

A set of fifty plates of National Costumes; from his own designs.

VICO, FRANCESCO, a Milanese painter of the 15th century, of whose birth or death no dates are known. He is the author of two canvases in the Milan Hospital, the one representing Francesco and Bianca Maria Sforza kneeling before Pope Pius II., who gives them the Bull to build the Hospital, and the other the same couple kneeling in front of an altar before the Hospital.

VICTOORS, JAN, (FICTOORS, FICTOOR,) a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1620. He was educated in the school of Rembrandt, and worked in his atelier in 1635-40. He must not be confused with Johannes Victor, whose proper surname was Wolfvoet (q. v.). His works are better known than those of some other pupils of Rembrandt, but scarcely anything is recorded of his life. Some of his pictures show much affinity with those of his master, but his hand was apt to get heavy. Very many of his subjects are taken from the Old Testament, but he also painted genre, landscapes, peasant assemblies, markets, charlatans, &c. The date of his death is uncertain, but it took place at Amsterdam after 1672. Works:

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	Joseph interpreting the Dreams. 1648.
"	"	The Dentist. 1654.
"	"	The Pork Butcher.
Antwerp.	Museum.	Village Wedding.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	Esther and Haman. 1632.
"	"	David and Samuel.
"	"	Capture of Samson.
Copenhagen.	"	Ruth and Boaz. (And three others.)
Dresden.	"	The Finding of Moses. 1653.
Louvain.	Museum.	The Prophetess Anna. 1643.

Munich.	Gallery.	Tobias recovering his Sight. 1651.
"	"	Portrait of an Old Man.
Paris.	Louvre.	Isaac blessing Jacob.
"	"	Young Lady at a Window.

VICTOR, JAKOB, (or GIACOMO,) was a Dutch painter of the 17th century. Works by him are at Dresden, Copenhagen, and Munich. His 'Barnyard' in the last-named gallery is ascribed in the catalogue to Hondecoeter, whose forged signature appears on it.

VICTOR, JOHANNES. See WOLFVOET.

VICTORIA, VICENTE, was born at Valencia in 1658. He at first studied literature, philosophy, and theology, but had a preference for art, and went when he was young to Rome, where he became a scholar of Carlo Maratti, and studied from Raphael and the antique. He was appointed painter to the court of the Grand Duke Cosmo of Tuscany, whose portrait he painted. He afterwards settled at Xativa, in Valencia, where he painted pictures for the churches and convents of Valencia; and wrote poetry, as well as part of a 'History of Painting.' He finally returned to Rome and became antiquary to the Pope. He died in that city in 1712. His portrait is among those of the distinguished artists in the Florentine Gallery. Among other plates he has left are the following:

The Madonna di Foligno; after Raphael.
The Last Supper; after Ciro Ferri.
The Resurrection; after the same.

VICUS. See VICO.

VIDAL, DIEGO, the elder, a Spanish historical painter, was born at Valmaseda in 1583. He painted a picture of a naked Christ, and one of the Virgin with the Infant in her arms, which were placed in the cathedral of Seville, of which he was a prebend. Pacheco speaks of Vidal's drawings in eulogistic terms. He died at Seville in 1615. He was called 'the elder' to distinguish him from his nephew, Vidal de Liendo.

VIDAL, DIONISIO, was born at Valencia about 1670, and was the disciple and travelling companion of Antonio Palomino. At Valencia he painted the vaults of the church of San Nicola in fresco, from designs furnished by Palomino. He also painted pictures in several other churches. He died at Tortosa while employed on the chapel of Nuestra Señora de la Cinta. The year is unknown.

VIDAL, FELIPE, engraved, in 1741, the arms of Lorca for Morote's history of that city. He likewise furnished the plates to the work of Cristobal Rodriguez on Spanish polygraphy.

VIDAL, GÉRAUD, a French engraver and etcher, was born at Toulouse in 1742. He resided chiefly in Paris, where he had long to contend with poverty before his powers became known. His death occurred in that city in 1804. He engraved a variety of plates after the modern French painters, among them the following:

Jupiter and Io; after Ch. Monnet.
Jupiter and Antiope; after the same.
Venus and Adonis; after the same.
Rinaldo and Armida; after the same.
Paris and Helen; after David. 1788.

VIDAL, JOSEF, a painter of battles and genre subjects, was born at Vinaroz, and studied at Valencia under Estéban March, of whose style he became a successful imitator. He had a son of the same name as himself, who was also a painter.

VIDAL, L., was a painter of fruit, flowers, dead birds, and other natural subjects. Of his life there is no account, but his manner resembles that of the elder Van Os. He appears to have been a native of northern France, or at least to have worked there in the early years of the 19th century. The Lille Museum has a picture by him of fruit, flowers, and game, on a table.

VIDAL DE LIENDO, DIEGO, called VIDAL THE YOUNGER, born at Valmaseda in 1602, was a nephew of Vidal the elder, and like him was both a painter and a canon of Seville cathedral. He also followed his uncle's example in going to Rome to study art and divinity. His pictures in the sacristy of the cathedral at Valencia (engraved by Marc Antonio) show considerable skill, and include life-size figures of various Saints, and a copy of Raphael's 'Michael triumphing over Satan.' Vidal died at Seville in 1648. He possessed a fine collection of pictures.

VIDAL, VINCENT, a French painter and pastellist, was born at Carcassonne, January 20, 1811. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1837, and was a pupil of Paul Delaroche, gaining in due course medals of the 3rd and 2nd class, and the cross of the Legion of Honour. His portraits, ideal heads, and especially a large number of fanciful designs, many of them suggested by Moore's 'Loves of the Angels,' were very popular, and their delicate draughtsmanship went far to atone for a certain tameness and monotony in their execution. He died in 1887.

VIEILLEVOYE, JOSEPH BARTHELÉMY, a Flemish historical and subject painter, was born at Verviers in 1798. He studied in the Antwerp Academy, and became director of that of Liège. He died in 1855. There is by him:

Brussels. Museum. Head of an old Man.

VIEIRA, FRANCISCO, the elder, a Portuguese painter and engraver, was born at Lisbon in 1699. He accompanied the Portuguese ambassador to Rome, and there studied art in the school of Trevisani, and further improved himself by copying Raphael and Michelangelo. He returned to Portugal at the age of sixteen, and was commissioned by John V. to paint a 'Mysteries of the Eucharist.' He afterwards designed the king's head for the coins. He formed an attachment to a young lady of a high family, and before he won her, went through various romantic adventures. He was at last married, at Rome. Vieira was recalled to Portugal by the king, and fixed his residence at Lisbon, where, for forty years, he painted for the palace, the convent of Mafra, and other places. In 1744 he became affiliated to the religious order of Santiago. In 1755 the wife for whom he had encountered so many adventures, died, and he relinquished the pencil to spend the rest of his days in religious exercises. He died at Lisbon in 1783. Many of his pictures are said to have perished in the great earthquake at Lisbon in 1755.

VIEIRA, FRANCISCO, the younger, son of the elder artist of the name, studied in Italy, especially from the works of Correggio in Parma. Many of his drawings from Correggio, Carracci, and Parmigiano were subsequently engraved. He came to England at the latter end of the 18th century, and exhibited at the Royal Academy in the years 1798 and 1799; one of his pictures is described as 'Viriato, the Lusitanian chief, exhorting his countrymen to take vengeance for the perfidy of Galba.' Vieira, during his stay in England, lived with Bartolozzi, and probably studied under him, for he is said to have been an engraver. He married and returned to his own country, where he became first painter to the king, and executed some historical and allegorical frescoes for the palace of Ajuda. He died in 1805. A 'Christ Crucified' by him is in the Lisbon Academy.

VIEL, PIERRE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1755. He was a pupil of B. L. Prévost. His style of engraving was neat and finished; among his plates we may name:

- The Judgment of Paris; after Rottenhamer.
- The Bath of Diana; after P. Mettzy.
- A pair of Landscapes; after Ruysdael.
- Peace bringing back Abundance; after Le Brun.
- Death of Adonis; after P. Veronese.

VIEN, JOSEPH MARIE, a French painter and engraver, was born at Montpellier, June 18, 1716. After some study in his native place, he entered the studio of Natoire. To support himself while going through the course at the Academy, he painted for a picture-dealer. After obtaining a first medal in 1742, he won the following year the Grand Prix de Rome. This enabled him to continue his training in Italy, where he spent five busy years. Besides the usual academical studies and copies, he painted several pictures for churches, and designed the costumes, triumphal chariots, &c., for a masquerading procession, which was very successful. After a tour through Italy, he returned to France in 1750. On his way to Paris he made short stays at Marseilles and Tarascon, where he received some commissions. On commencing practice in the capital, his style was not readily appreciated, and he failed to obtain admission to the Academy until Boucher, strangely enough, had made a strong remonstrance in his favour. He was received on the 30th March, 1754, with his 'Dædalus and Icarus,' now in the Louvre. Once within the charmed circle, his progress was rapid, and commissions flowed in upon him thickly. His atelier was thronged with pupils, amongst whom were Vincent, Savée, and Louis David. Here was laid the foundation of the classic school which was soon to reign supreme in French art. Vien's reputation extended so widely that the Empress of Russia and the King of Denmark sought to induce him to enter their service, but in vain. In 1775 he was appointed Director of the French Academy at Rome, whither he was accompanied by David and two other pupils. He introduced several reforms in the working of the Academy, and, after a useful directorate of six years, returned home via Naples. On settling in Paris, further honours and a pension were bestowed on him. These, however, were swept away by the Revolution, and he once more applied himself with success to work. He was made a Count and a Senator by Napoleon, from whom he also received the cross of Commander in the new Legion of Honour. The veteran continued to paint till the year before his death, which took place in Paris in 1809. There are several plates etched by him, of which the chief are a series of about thirty illustrations of the masquerade for which he designed the costumes in his student days at Rome. Vien's position in the history of the French school was very accurately described by himself. He said that he only half unclosed the door which David threw wide open. The following is a list of his pictures in public galleries:

Angers.	Museum.	The Body of Hector carried back to Troy.
Epinal.	"	Parting of Hector and Andromache.

VIEN, JOSEPH MARIE, painter, and son of J. M. Vien the elder, was born in Paris in 1761. He was the pupil of his father and of F. A. Vincent. He died in 1848. His portrait group of himself and his wife is in the Rouen Museum.

VIEN, THÉRÈSE, née REBOUL, miniature painter, was the wife and pupil of Joseph Vien. She was born in Paris in 1728, and studied for a time at the Academy of S. Luke in Rome. In 1757 she became an Academician; her reception piece, a miniature of a cock and hen, with a new-laid egg, is in the Louvre. She exhibited occasional studies of flowers and birds at the Salon, between 1757 and 1767. She died in Paris, December 28, 1805.

VIENOT NICOLAS, a French engraver who flourished about 1630. He engraved small plates from those engraved by Pontius after the portraits of Philip IV. of Spain and his Queen, Elizabeth de Bourbon, by Rubens. Another little known engraver of the same name was active about fifty years later.

VIGÉE, ELISABETH LOUISE. See LE BRUN.

VIGÉE, LOUIS, a French painter of the 18th century, now remembered chiefly as the father of Madame Vigée Le Brun, was a portraitist of some merit, excelling chiefly in pastel. He was a man of much culture and social talent, and his house was frequented by a large circle of distinguished men and women. He died in 1767, from the effects of an accident.

VIGER, JEAN LOUIS HECTOR, historical painter, was born at Argentan in 1819. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1844, and was the pupil of Monvoisin, Drolling, and Paul Delaroche. He began his artistic career by painting miniature-portraits, decorations for fans, etc. His works appeared at the Salon from 1845 to 1879, in which latter year he died in Paris. There are examples of his work in the Museum of his native town, and also in those of Orleans, Versailles, and in many French provincial churches. He painted a picture for the Salon des Grands Chanceliers in the Palais de la Legion d'Honneur, representing the first distribution of the cross of the Legion in the Church of the Invalides.

VIGEVANO, AMBROGIO DA, was a Milanese painter living in the 16th century, and is said to have been Cristoforo De' Motti's fellow-worker in the frescoes at Cantù, painted in 1514. Crowe and Cavalcaselle incline to the belief that he was identical with the Ambrogio Bevilacqua, mentioned by Lomazzo, who executed a 'Charity' and other similar designs on the Poor House of Milan in 1486, and was a salaried workman in the cathedral of that city for some years. The Brera, at Milan, possesses a 'Virgin and Child, between King David and St. Peter Martyr,' signed Ambrogio Bevilacqua, and dated 1502. The dates of his birth and death are alike unknown.

VIGHI. See VICO.

VIGIER. See COURT, JEAN.

VIGILA, —, was a monk of Albelda, and the earliest known artist of Spain. Ceán Bermúdez discovered, in the royal library at Madrid, a missal illuminated by him, and adorned with rude portraits of ancient kings, executed about the end of the 10th century.

VIGILIA, TOMMASO DE, flourished in Palermo between the years 1480 and 1497. His earliest existing work is a triptych belonging to the Duke of Verdura, at Palermo, representing a 'Virgin and Child, with four Saints,' dated 1486; and his latest a 'S. Nicholas enthroned in a glory of Angels,' dated 1489, in the church of San Niccolò Reale, Palermo. The ceiling of the church of the Santissima Annunziata, in the same city, is decorated with a series of sixteen scenes from the life of the Virgin, on canvas, by Tommaso. Other churches in Palermo possess paintings by him. Crowe and Cavalcaselle describe his work as "cold, careful, and without power" ('P. in N. Italy,' vol. ii. p. 108).

VIGNALI, JACOPO, was born at Prato Vecchio in 1592, and was a disciple of Matteo Roselli. His style resembles that of Guercino. His principal works in oil are in the church of San Simone, at Florence; but he appears to greater advantage in the frescoes with which he decorated the chapel of the Buonarroti. He died in 1664.

VIGNAUD, JEAN, a French painter, was born at Beaucaire in 1775. He was a pupil of David, and became director of the Art School at Nîmes. He exhibited many portraits and historical pictures at the Salon from 1808 onwards, and painted, for the church of S. Nicolas du Chardonneret a 'Raising of Jairus' Daughter,' for the church of St. Louis d'Antin a 'Flight into Egypt,' and for the cathedral of Beaucaire a 'Christ appearing to the Magdalen.' In the Nîmes Museum there are portraits of the Marquis and Marquise de Lamote by him; a portrait of Liszt when a child, and 'Mercury teaching the Lyre to Amphion.' He died at Nîmes, November 10, 1826.

VIGNE, EDOUARD DE, landscape painter and etcher, a younger brother of Félix de Vigne, was born at Ghent in 1808. He studied at the Ghent school of design, and afterwards under Surmont de Volsberghe. In 1834 he won the pension for Italy, where he accordingly spent the years 1836-8. He visited England in 1841, and died at Ghent in 1866. His drawings were much esteemed; and he left a few etchings. Pictures:

VIGNE, FÉLIX DE, painter, etcher, and art writer, was born at Ghent in 1806. His father, the decorative painter IGNAÇE DE VIGNE, was his first instructor, and afterwards he was placed under Paelinck at Brussels. He devoted himself partly to portraiture, but more especially to depicting the costumes of the middle ages, for which purpose he made extensive researches in his own country, and in France, England, and Germany. His 'Recueils des Costumes du Moyen-âge' contains a thousand illustrations drawn and etched by himself, with descriptive letterpress. He was a professor of the Ghent Academy, and president of the Society of Arts and Sciences there. He died at Ghent in 1862. Pictures:

VIGNERON, PIERRE ROCH, a French painter and lithographer, was born at Vosnon (Aube) in 1789. He was a pupil of Gautherot and of Gros, and studied also under Roques of Toulouse, in which town he practised for a time as a miniaturist. He also made some essays in sculpture, but finally devoted himself to the painting of genre pictures. He also executed a number of lithographs, chiefly portraits. He died in 1872.

VIGNON, CLAUDE, a French painter and etcher, was born at Tours about 1590. He was the son of a valet in the household of Henry IV., and was protected by that king's son, Louis XIII., and by Richelieu. He studied first in Spain, and then in Italy, where he attached himself to the style of Caravaggio. On returning to France he became a pupil of Fréminet, whose style he imitated with some success. He died in Paris in 1670. He was an art critic and a professor in the Academy. His 'Christ with the Doctors' is in the Grenoble Museum, and his 'Baptism of the Eunuch' in Notre Dame. There are by this artist twenty-seven etchings of Biblical subjects, among them the following:

A set of thirteen scenes from the Life of Christ.

St. John in the Desert.

St. Philip baptizing the Eunuch of Queen Candace.

The Martyrdom of St. Andrew.

The Crowning of the Virgin.

He is said to have been the father of thirty-four children, and left three sons, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS, NICOLAS, and PHILIPPE, who were painters.

VIGNON, HENRI FRANÇOIS JULES DE, painter, was born at Belfort (Haut Rhin), October 11, 1815. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1831, and was a pupil of Cogniet. He gained medals of the third class in 1847, 1861. He painted chiefly portraits, or studies of single figures, exhibiting constantly at the Salon from 1833 to 1882. His portrait of General le Vicomte Paultre de Lamotte is in the Versailles Museum. He died in 1883.

VIGNON, PHILIPPE, painter, the son of Claude Vignon, was born in Paris in 1634, and became a member of the Academy in 1667. In the Versailles Museum there are by him portraits of Maupeché, the painter, and of Mesdemoiselles de Blois et de Nantes, daughters of Louis XIV. and Madame de Maintenon. He died in 1701.

VIGOROSO DA SIENA. An altar-piece in the public gallery of Siena is inscribed with this name, and the date 1280.

VIGRI, CATERINA, was born at Bologna in 1414. She is called 'La Santa di Bologna,' having been canonized in 1712. She practised painting in her youth, and then entered a convent at Bologna, where she decorated the missals with miniatures and illuminations. She died in 1463. A 'S. Ursula and her companions' by her, dated 1452, is in the Bologna Gallery, and the same subject, dated 1456, in the Venice Academy.

VILA, LORENZO, was the son and pupil of Senen Vila, and was born in Murcia in 1682. He painted history in the style of his father, and had gained considerable reputation by pictures for churches, particularly a 'Holy Family,' for the refectory of San Fulgenzio, at Murcia, when he became a monk. He died in 1713.

VILA, SENEN, was a native of Valencia, and a disciple of Estéban March. In 1678 he settled at Murcia, where he painted a great number of pictures for the churches and other buildings, particularly for the convent of Santa Isabel, for the monastery of San Domingo el Real, and for the Enfermaria di San Francisco. He died in 1708.

VILADOMAT, ANTONIO, was born at Barcelona in 1678. He was a pupil of Bautista Perramon. When he was twenty-one he was commissioned to paint a series of scenes from the life of St. Bruno, for the Carthusians of Monte Allegre. He also painted three subjects from the life of St. Francis, for the Franciscans of Barcelona, and produced landscapes, battle-pieces, and portraits. For the last seventeen years of his life he was paralyzed in the hands. He died in 1755. He left a son named JOSEF VILADOMAT, who was also a painter, but very inferior to his father. Works of both are to be found in the churches and convents of Barcelona.

VILLACIS, NICOLAS DE, was of a noble family of Murcia, where he was born about the middle of the 17th century. After receiving some instruction in his native city, his parents sent him to Madrid, to the school of Velazquez. He afterwards travelled to Rome, and, on his return to Spain, established himself at Murcia, where he painted, among other things, a series of pictures from the Life of S. Blaise, in the convent of La Santissima Trinidad de Calzados; and the Martyrdom of St. Lawrence, in the church of the Dominicans. These pictures, which were praised by Palomino as the works of a great artist, no longer exist, having already been destroyed by damp in the beginning of the present century. Being rich, Villacis painted chiefly for his amusement, and declined the proffered post of court painter, and also the invitation of Velazquez to take part in the decoration of the Alcazar. His correspondence with Velazquez is said to be still in existence. He died in 1690.

VILLAFRANCA - MALAGON, PEDRO DE, a Spanish engraver and painter, was born at Alcolea, La Mancha, at the beginning of the 17th century. He received instruction at Madrid from Vincenzo Carducho, but preferred the burin to the brush. He engraved a great number of title-pages, portraits, and illustrations, particularly for the Books of the Religious Orders of Santiago, Calatrava, and Alcántara. These he also embellished with portraits of Philip IV., to whom he was, about 1654, appointed engraver in ordinary, with a salary of one hundred ducats. In the next three years he engraved 'The Pantheon of the Escorial,' and a portrait of the king. Between 1660 and 1676 he engraved many illustrations for books, and a number of portraits, including those of Calderon Carlos II., Anne of Austria, Louis XIV., and Maria Theresa of Austria. For the church of San Felipe el Real at Madrid, he painted a series of pictures for the festival of the canonization of S. Thomas of Villanueva. The time of his death is uncertain, but it was subsequent to 1719.

VILLAIN, GÉRARD RÉNAUD, a French engraver, flourished about the year 1760. He engraved a portrait of M. Dufour de Villeneuve, after Maupein.

VILLAMENA, FRANCESCO, draughtsman and engraver, was born at Assisi about the year 1566. He is generally supposed to have been a fellow-student with Agostino Carracci, under Cornelis Cort. After this he visited Rome, where he drew and engraved after the antique. He had also practised painting, but this he wholly abandoned in favour of engraving. He died in 1626. His style of engraving is bold and open, but somewhat mannered, and unfinished. He executed three hundred and sixty plates; they are occasionally signed with his name at length, sometimes with the initials F. V. F., and he occasionally used the monogram . The following are among his best plates :

Cardinal Bellarmine.

Christian IV., King of Denmark.

Galileo.

St. Theresa in her Cell. From his own design.

Mary Magdalene penitent, crowned by an Angel. Do.

St. Francis praying before a Crucifix. Do.

This plate was begun by Agostino Carracci, and was finished by Villamena.

St. Bernard, with the Virgin in the clouds; after Vanni.

A set of twenty Scriptural subjects, from 'Raphael's Bible.'

VILLARD DE HONNECOURT, (or WILARS,) a famous architect and draughtsman of the 13th century, who left a book of drawings, now in the Library of Paris, which was published by Darcel in 1858. It contains drawings of machines, architecture, monuments, human figures, and animals.

VILLAVICENCIO. See NUNEZ DE VILLAVICENCIO.

VILLEGAS MARMOLEJO, PEDRO DE, was born at Seville in 1520. He was a pupil of Vargas, and also studied in Italy from the works of Raphael. He died in 1597, and was buried in the church of San Lorenzo, where an 'Annunciation,' and a 'Virgin and Child,' by him, adorn the altar. His friend Arias Montano wrote the epitaph on his tomb. His fine 'Visit of Mary to Elizabeth,' in the cathedral at Seville, has been attributed to Pedro Campaña, as also has a 'Lazarus in pontifical Robes,' which he painted for the hospital of the Lazarinos.

VILLEGUAIN (or VILLEGUIN). See VILLEQUIN.

VILLEMSENS, JEAN BLAISE, painter, was born at Toulouse in 1808. He first studied in his native town, and at the age of seventeen started for Paris, where he gained admission to the atelier of Gros, and in 1829 entered the École des Beaux Arts.

Returning to Toulouse, he established himself there, and in 1841 became Professor at the Art School. He died at Toulouse, September 19, 1869.

VILLENEUVE, LOUIS FRÉDÉRIC, painter and lithographer, was born in Paris in 1796. He was a pupil of Regnault, and entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1817. He also studied after Salvador Rosa, and from nature in Switzerland and Italy. After working for a time at Milan, he returned to Paris, where he died in 1842. He painted and lithographed excellent landscapes and sea-pieces, and furnished many designs for Nodier's 'France Pittoresque,' and other illustrated works.

VILLEQUIN, ÉTIENNE, (or VILLEQUAIN,) was born at Ferrières (Brie) in 1619, became a member of the Academy in 1663, and died in 1688. He painted historical pictures and portraits, and was clever at grotesques and caricature. He engraved a satirical plate, 'The Peasants of Lycia turned into Frogs.' Of his paintings, the Louvre has a 'Christ healing the Blind Men of Jericho,' and Notre Dame a 'S. Paul before Agrippa.'

VILLERET, FRANÇOIS ÉTIENNE, a French water-colour painter, born about 1800. He was a pupil of Gué, and exhibited architectural views, chiefly of French churches, at the Salon from 1831 onwards. He died in 1866.

VILLEREY, ANTOINE CLAUDE FRANÇOIS, an engraver, was born in Paris in 1768. He was a pupil of Romanet, and engraved several plates for the 'Musée Filhol'; a great part of the vignettes for the edition of Voltaire published by Renouard; the 'Battle of Austerlitz' for the 'Concours décennal'; 'Innocence and Love,' after Prud'hon; 'Hymen and Happiness,' after the same; and twenty-six plates for the 'Galerie de St. Bruno,' after Le Sueur. He was still living in 1831. His son NICOLAS, born in Paris in 1801, was also an engraver, chiefly of plates for books. He engraved a series of vignettes after Devéria, for editions of Voltaire and Molière.

VILLEVIEILLE, LÉON, a French landscape painter and engraver, born in Paris, August 12, 1826, was a pupil of Louis Marvy. He exhibited at the Salon between 1850-59, and a promising career was cut short by his early death in 1863. A catalogue of his pictures and drawings, of which there was a public sale, was preceded by a biographical notice of the painter by M. Charles Yriarte.

VILLIERS, FRANÇOIS HUET, a French miniature, landscape, and animal painter, born in Paris in 1772. At the Revolution he migrated to England, where he obtained a good practice, and was appointed miniature painter to the Duchess of York. He also styled himself painter to the King of France. His works appeared at the Academy and at the British Institution from 1803 to 1813, and in 1808 he was a member of the Associated Artists in Water-Colours. He died in London in 1813.

VILLOLDO, JUAN DE, a distinguished painter of Toledo in the 16th century, studied under his uncle, Alvar Perez de Villoldo, a scholar of Borgoña's. The chapter of the cathedral employed him to paint several pictures for the Muzarabic chapel, which he commenced in 1508, and, with the assistance of Juan de Borgoña and Amberes, terminated in 1510. His series of forty-five pictures on sacred subjects, executed 1547-8, for the Carbajal chapel in the church of St. Andres, Madrid, are commended by Bermudez for correct design and antique purity of style. He died some time after 1551. ALVAR PEREZ DE VILLOLDO, uncle of Juan, is mentioned in the records of Toledo cathedral as having been employed on decorations there.

VILSTEREN, — VAN, a Dutch engraver in mezzotint, by whom we have some portraits, among them that of a Burgomaster Bikker.

VINCELET, VICTOR, a French painter of fruit and flowers, was a native of Thiers (Puy-de-Dôme), and a pupil of M. L. Hullier. He exhibited flower-pieces at the Salon in 1869 and 1870, and committed suicide in 1871. The Museum of S. Étienne has a fruit and flower picture by him.

VINCENT, ADELAIDE LABILLE-DES-VERTUS, was born in Paris in 1743, and was at first a pupil of her father-in-law, François Élie Vincent, and afterwards of Latour. She first married a M. Guiard, and after his death François André Vincent. She painted portraits, miniatures, &c., and was received into the Academy in 1782, with a portrait of 'Pajou modelling his master Le Moine.' In 1787 and 1789 she painted portraits of Mesdames Adélaïde and Victoire, and a large picture for Monsieur, afterwards Louis XVIII., of the 'Initiation of a Knight of Malta,' which she had completed at the outbreak of the Revolution, was soon after destroyed. She died in 1803.

VINCENT-CALBRIS, Madame SOPHIE, landscape painter, born at Ronen in 1822, died at Lille in 1859, was a pupil of Rémond. There is a landscape by her in the Lille Museum.

VINCENT, FRANÇOIS ANDRÉ, the son of FRANÇOIS ÉLIE VINCENT, a clever miniaturist, was born in Paris in 1746. He was at first placed with a banker, but showing no taste for business, he afterwards entered the school of Vien. Upon winning the Grand Prix in 1768, he went to Rome, whence he returned, after eight years, in 1776. He was admitted an Associate of the Academy in 1777, with a 'S. Jerome,' and became an Academician in 1782, his reception picture being the 'Rape of Orythia by Boreas,' now in the Louvre. He was appointed Professor in 1792, and died in Paris, August 3, 1816. His principal works were 'Belisarius asking Alms,' and 'Alcibiades listening to the Lessons of Socrates.' He painted for the king, 'President Molé seized by the Mob,' which was exhibited in the Salon of 1779. Vincent also practised as a painter on china, and as an etcher. M. P. de Beaucour, in his 'Peintre Graveur,' describes two rare plates by him, 'Le Malade' and 'Le Prêtre Grec.' Vincent had many pupils. The museums of Rouen, Bordeaux, and Orleans have pictures by him.

VINCENT, FRANÇOIS PHILIBERT, painter, was a pupil of David, and flourished in Paris in the early years of the 19th century. His portraits of the Emperor and Empress appeared at the Salon of 1810.

VINCENT, GEORGE, an English landscape and marine painter, was born at Norwich in 1796. He learnt the principles of art from old Crome, and at the early age of seventeen began to exhibit with the Norwich Society. In 1814, his works first appeared at the Royal Academy, to which he occasionally contributed down to 1823. Coming to London in 1819, he married and settled in Kentish Town. His prospects were fair, but were blighted by his recklessness. Bestowing less and less care on his works, he gradually sunk into poverty and obscurity. In his later years he exhibited at Suffolk Street, where he last appeared in 1830. He is believed to have died soon afterwards. Vincent may be assigned the fourth place in the Norwich school, after Crome, Cotman, and Stark. His chef d'œuvre is a masterly picture of Greenwich Hospital from the north bank of the Thames. He signed his pictures with a monogram composed of his initials.

VINCENT, HENRIETTE, née RIDEAU DU SAL, flower-painter, was a pupil of Spandonek and Redouté, and was born at Brest in 1786. Lambert the elder engraved two series of fruit and flower studies from her designs.

VINCENT, HUBERT, was a French engraver who resided at Rome about the year 1691. We may name the following plates by him:

The Nativity, called 'La Notte'; after Correggio.
The Judgment of Paris; after Paolo Veronese.

VINCENT, W., an excellent English mezzotint engraver of the latter part of the 17th century, who worked in London. His plates are frequently from his own designs; these are perhaps the best:

Mrs. Bracegirdle as 'The Indian Queen.'
Charles I.
The Coke Family; after Huysman.
Isabella, Duchess of Grafton.
Prince James Stuart.
Queen Mary of Modena.
Sanicroft, Archbishop of Canterbury.
Lake, Bishop of Chichester.
Turner, Bishop of Ely.
White, Bishop of Peterborough.
Boy and Girl.
Shepherd and Shepherdess.

VINCENZO DI STEFANO DA VERONA, or VINCENZO DA VERONA, probably the son of Stefano da Verona, flourished in the second half of the 15th century, and is the reputed master of Liberale da Verona. A fresco at Verona is attributed to him. It forms part of the decoration on the monument erected in 1432 at Sant' Anastasia to the memory of Cortesia Serego, the general of Antonio Scaliger.

VINCENZO-BRESCIANO. See FOPPA.

VINCHON, AUGUSTE JEAN BAPISTE, was born in Paris in 1789, and was a pupil of Serangeli. In 1814 he obtained the Grand Prix de Rome with his 'Diagoras borne to the Temple.' In Rome he worked in the style of the French school of the day, but after his return he took to frescoes, executing under commission from the Government a series of 'Scenes from the Life of St. Maurice,' for the chapel of that saint in S. Sulpice. He also produced some grisaille paintings in the Louvre from Greek and Roman history. He died at Ems in 1855. The following oil pictures are also by him:

The People breaking into the Convent—modern Greek scene.

Enrolling the Volunteers of 1792.
The Dead Christ. (S. Vincent de Paul.)

VINCI, LEONARDO DA, was born in 1452, at the Castello Vinci, in the Val d'Arno, midway between Florence and Pisa. He was the illegitimate son of Ser Pier Antonio da Vinci, notary to the Florence Signory. His mother, whose name was Caterina, was afterwards the wife of one Accatubriga di Piero del Vacca da Vinci. Leonardo's education was given to him in the house of his father. In his early childhood he gave promise of the almost universal genius he afterwards displayed. His favourite occupations, however, were drawing and modelling in clay, and this fact induced Ser Piero to place him, while still a child, with Andrea del Verrocchio, as good a master as could then have been found in Florence. In Verrocchio's studio, where Leonardo's chief fellow-pupil was Lorenzo di Credi, he was soon promoted to paint on his master's pictures. In a 'Baptism of Christ,' ordered of Verrocchio by the monks of Vallombrosa, Leonardo painted an angel which, according to Vasari, was so much better than his master's share of the work that Verrocchio thenceforward renounced painting altogether. Dr. Richter, however, Leonardo's latest biographer (1879), is of opinion that his work was by no means confined to the angel. In June 1472, Leonardo's name was entered on the books of the Florentine Guild as an independent painter; his name is there given as 'Lyonardo di Ser Piero da Vinci.' Of his early pictures none can now be surely traced. A cartoon for a 'Fall of Man,' and the famous panel with the Medusa's head, which is mentioned in all the books, have both disappeared. A picture in the Borghese Gallery, described by Vasari, and assigned by him to Leonardo, is, in the opinion of modern critics, from the brush of Lorenzo di Credi. It is possible, however, that the scepticism as to Leonardo's authorship of many works ascribed to him, has been carried too far, and that his style in youth may have been peculiarly uncertain and various. In 1478 Leonardo signed a contract for an altarpiece for the chapel of St. Bernard, in the Palazzo Pubblico at Florence. After carrying out a very small part of the work, however, the commission was transferred to Filippino Lippi, in whose creation there is no trace of his predecessor. The earliest undoubted work by Leonardo, which has come down to us, is the unfinished 'Adoration of the Kings,' now in the Uffizi. To about the same period belongs a small St. Jerome, in the Gallery of the Vatican. Leonardo was among the artists admitted by Lorenzo de' Medici into his famous garden near the Piazza di San Marco, and about the year 1482 he was sent—if we may accept the account of his anonymous biographer, which appears, on the whole, more probable than that of Vasari—by Lorenzo to Duke Gian Galeazzo of Milan, with the present of a silver lute. Belinzone says that Leonardo was a sort of master of the ceremonies at the wedding of Galeazzo with Isabella of Calabria. Shortly after this we find him addressing to the Regent, Ludovico Sforza, the famous report on his own talents, in which he declares himself competent to undertake almost any task to which a master could put a servant. Leonardo remained nearly twenty years in Milan, but what he did all the time it is now hard to say. The Duke apparently turned his genius to profit in any capacity that was convenient for the moment, and only a small part of his time seems to have been given to painting and sculpture. Even taking that into consideration, however, Leonardo was the reverse of prolific. The one great work of his which Milan still can boast is the famous 'Cena,' in the refectory of the convent of Santa Maria delle Grazie. It was commissioned, jointly, by the monks and Ludovico, and like every one else who employed Leonardo, they had the greatest difficulty in getting the work completed. It was finished, according to Luca Paciolo, in 1498. It is not a fresco, as it has so often been called, but an oil painting on plaster, and in its present condition but little of Leonardo's work can be described upon it. Its original appearance may now, perhaps, be best divined from the famous copy in the Diploma Gallery of the Royal Academy, which is usually ascribed to Marco d'Oggionno. Dr. Richter thinks it more likely to be by Gian Pietrini. In 1499 Louis XII. of France, after his defeat of Sforza, visited Leonardo's masterpiece, and expressed his wish that it could be cut out of the wall and carried back with him to France. Of the preparatory studies for it, the most important are some heads in red chalk and two pen sketches, in the royal collection at Windsor. While the 'Last Supper' was in progress, Leonardo was also at work on the equestrian statue of Francesco Sforza, of which nothing remains but preparatory sketches, the best of which are at Windsor. His time was also occupied with engineering projects, especially with a scheme for regulating the beds of the Lombard rivers, which has since borne good fruit, and with plans for Milan cathedral. He also painted, among other things, portraits of Lucrezia Crivelli and Cecilia Gallerani, mistresses of the Duke, which are not now to be identified. The picture in the Louvre known as 'La Belle Ferronière,' and sometimes asserted to be the missing Lucrezia Crivelli, is almost certainly by another hand. In the British Museum there is an engraving of a female head, in profile, crowned with ivy, and encircled by an inscription which reads: ACHA: LE: VI: an abbreviation for Academia Leonardi Vincii. This points to the Academy, the first of its kind, founded by Leonardo in Milan, where numerous pupils were trained in various branches of art. Among the scholars who shared its advantages were Beltraffio, Luca Paciolo, Andrea Salai, Francesco Melzi, Lomazzo, and Cesare da Sesto.

On the downfall and captivity of Duke Ludovico, in 1500, Leonardo betook himself to Venice, where, however, his stay was short, as in 1501 we find him in Florence, and agreeing with Novolaria, the vice-general of the Carmelites, to paint a portrait for the Marchesa Isabella Gonzaga. In 1502 he was in the service of Cæsar Borgia as engineer, a post he only filled for about a year, as Pope Alexander VI. died on August 18, 1503, when his son's authority came to an end. Records of Leonardo's activity during this year are extant in his journals and note-books, and in six maps drawn up by himself, and now at Windsor. In 1503 he was in Florence, and contracted with the Servite monks to paint an altar-piece for their church, Santa Maria dell' Annunziata, but never got farther than the cartoon, which is now in London, in the Diploma Gallery of the Royal Academy. Early in 1504 he took part in the discussions as to the best position for Michelangelo's 'David,' and immediately afterwards entered upon that veiled contest with Buonarroti which forms one of the chief episodes of his life. Both artists were commissioned to paint pictures in the new Sala del Consiglio, in the palace of the Signory. Leonardo chose for his subject a supposed incident in the Battle of Anghiari, gained by the Florentines over the Milanese on the 29th June, 1440. For some two years he worked at the cartoon, and then began the picture itself, but left it unfinished on discovering his process to be untrustworthy. It is now chiefly known through the famous 'Fight for the Standard,' engraved by Edelinck after a free copy by Rubens. Leonardo's father, Ser Piero da Vinci, died on the 9th of July, 1504, as we learn from the MS. in the British Museum; while in a MS. at South Kensington occurs an account headed, 'Expenses for the funeral of Caterina,' no doubt his mother. Here, unfortunately, there is nothing to show the date. To 1504 belongs the most famous of Leonardo's easel pictures, 'The Portrait of Mona Lisa,' now in the Louvre. This lady was the wife of one Zanobi del Giocondo, and the daughter of a Neapolitan, Antonio Maria di Noldo Gherardini. Leonardo is said to have spent four whole years on the picture, which was bought a few years after its completion by Francis I., who paid for it the then extravagant price of four thousand gold florins. About the same time Leonardo painted the portrait of Ginevra Benci, the famous beauty, and drew the illustrations for his pupil Paciolo's book, 'De Divinâ Proportione,' which was published in 1509. His more or less immediate disciples at Florence included Fra Bartolommeo, Pontormo, Baccio Bandinelli, Rhdolfo del Ghirlandajo, Gianfrancesco Penni, 'Ferrando the Spaniard,' 'Jacopo the German,' Raffaello d'Antonio di Biagio, and Riccio da Santa Croce.

Some years before 1509, probably in 1505, Leonardo had returned to Milan, where he lived with his pupil Melzi. In 1506 he took service under the French king, whom we find writing in his favour to the Florentine Signory in 1507. In that year Leonardo twice visited Florence, where he re-appeared in 1509, but in 1511 he was in Milan. This we gather from two drawings at Windsor of conflagrations in that city; which, he notes, were lit by the Swiss mercenaries. In 1513 Giovanni de' Medici became Pope Leo X., and Leonardo was carried to Rome in the suite of Giuliano, the new Pope's youngest brother. From a note of his own, we know that the master was accompanied by five of his pupils—Giovanni (Beltraffio?), Melzi, Salai, Lorenzo, and Il Fanfoia. In Rome no success attended him as an aspirant for commissions, a result which was much more likely due to the want of confidence caused by his continual failure to finish what he undertook, and by the equivocal reputation he must have gained by such childish experiments as those with wax and lizards described by Vasari, than by the intrigues which have been so freely attributed to his rivals. In 1515 he was again in Milan, and it was, perhaps, during this last stay in the city of which he was in future to be accounted the brightest ornament, that he painted 'The Madonna among Rocks,' now in the National Gallery, of which there is a copy in the Louvre; and the 'Saint Anne' in the latter collection. Studies for both pictures are at Windsor. A third Louvre picture, 'St. John the Baptist,' may have been painted at the same time. On the accession of Francis I. to the French throne, Leonardo was confirmed in his office, and from 1516 onwards he is said to have received a yearly allowance of seven hundred scudi, and in that year was established with his friend Melzi and some of his old servants at the Château Cloux, near Amboise. At Cloux he painted a 'Leda' and a 'Pomona,' both of which have vanished, and it is within the bounds of possibility that the Louvre 'Saint Anne' was painted there also, its design being suggested by the cartoon now in our Royal Academy. On April 23, 1519, Leonardo made his will, leaving his papers to Melzi, his garden near Milan to Salai and his servant Battista de Vilani, and to his brother a sum of four hundred ducats deposited in Santa Maria Nuova, Florence. His death took place at Cloux, on May 2nd, in the same year. The tradition that he died in the arms of Francis has been disproved by entries in the King's diaries, which show him to have been at St. Germain-en-Laye on the day of the painter's death. The grave of Leonardo has of late years been searched for without result, but in the archives of the Royal Chapel at Amboise occurs this entry: 'Fut inhumé dans le cloistre de cette église Mr. Lionard de Vinci, nosble millanais, 1<sup>er</sup> peintre et ingénieur et architecte du Roy, meschansischien d'estat et ancien directeur de peinture du duc de Milan. Ce fut fait le dovec jour da aoust, 1519.' The only authentic portrait of Leonardo is a red chalk drawing by himself in the Turin Academy.

All the pictures by Leonardo which can be certainly depended upon have been already mentioned. It is likely that some others ascribed to him are really by his hand, but in no case is there sufficient evidence, internal or external, to justify their inclusion in a list of his authentic works. His drawings, on the other hand, are very numerous. The finest collection, by far, is that in the Royal Library at Windsor. Leonardo was also a prolific writer. The library of the 'Institut,' in Paris, possesses fourteen volumes of his manuscripts; Milan has the 'Codex Atlanticus'; and in England there are as many as in the rest of Europe put together. Most of these are at Windsor, others in the British Museum, the South Kensington Museum, the collections of Lord Ashburnham, and the Earl of Leicester. Leonardo was left-handed, and wrote from right to left, which makes his MS. difficult to decipher. His famous 'Trattato della Pittura' was published in an abridged form in 1650, in Paris; and in full, in 1817, in Rome. But the bulk of his MSS. remained inaccessible until 1883, when Dr. Richter published them in London, in two 8vo volumes. To the same writer, who has devoted much of his time to an exhaustive study of the master's life and work, do we mainly owe our present notion of Leonardo's career. W. A.

VINCINO (or VICINO) was a pupil of Gaddo Gaddi, and worked in the 14th century at mosaics for the Cathedral of Pisa. It has been proved that he was a native, not of Pisa, but of Pistoja.

VINCITORE, TOMMASO, (VINCIDOR,) painter, called TOMMASO DA BOLOGNA, was the pupil of Raphael, whom he is said to have helped in the execution of the famous cartoons. In 1520 he travelled to Flanders, commissioned by Leo X., to intrust the reproduction of the cartoons in tapestry to Flemish artists. In the safe-conduct supplied him by the Pope for his journey, Leo eulogizes his talent, and speaks of him as his own painter. At Antwerp he formed a friendship with Albrecht Dürer (1521); the German master painted his portrait, and refers to him in his 'Journal' under the name of Thomas Polonius. Vincidor is further said to have been one of those pupils of Raphael who carried out the frescoes in the Loggia under his direction. Later details of the life of Tommaso are vague and scanty. He seems to have entered the service of Henry of Nassau, at Breda, to have been employed in reconstructive and decorative work at the Castle there, and to have died in the Netherlands about 1536.

VINCK, J., was a landscape and portrait painter, of whose life no particulars are known. His landscapes are in a manner founded upon those of Vinckeboons, Paul Bril, and Brueghel, and appear to have been painted in the early part of the 17th century. His portraits are known only by engravings.

VINCKEBOONS, DAVID, (VINCKEBOOMS, or VINCKENBOOMS,) born at Mechlin in 1578, was the son of PHILIP VINCKEBOONS, (an obscure painter in distemper, who went to Antwerp in 1580, and to Amsterdam in 1587,) by whom he was taught the elements of art. He painted small landscapes in the style of Roelandt Savery and Jan Brueghel. They have sometimes subjects from the Bible, sometimes fairs and merry-makings, the figures being frequently by Rottenhammer. He also painted animals in small, and practised as a glass painter. He died at Amsterdam in 1629. One of his most important works is a picture in the 'Old Men's House,' at Amsterdam, representing a crowd of people attending the drawing of a lottery by torch-light. The Antwerp museum has a 'Village Fête,' and other examples in the same genre are to be found at Augsburg, Dresden, Stockholm, Hamburg, Frankfurt, Amsterdam, and Copenhagen. Of his sacred subjects the best examples are 'Christ bearing His Cross,' in the Munich Gallery; 'Christ restoring Sight to the Blind,' at Frankfurt; a 'Flight into Egypt,' in the Berlin Museum, and a number of pictures in the Vienna Gallery. He etched a few original landscapes, and a plate known as 'Death and the Loving Couple'; these he usually marked with a monogram, composed of a D, a V, and a B. The British Museum has four pen drawings by him, washed with Indian ink, from the story of the Prodigal Son.

VINIT, CHARLES LÉON, painter and architect, is best known as the latter, but after completing his education as an architect, he studied painting in Remond's atelier, and from 1838 to 1852 frequently exhibited architectural views, of French and Eastern subjects, at the Salon. Born in Paris in 1806, he died in his native city, April 30, 1862. The Toulouse Museum has a view by him of the École des Beaux Arts, and the Nîmes Museum a copy by him of Panini's 'St. Peter's, Rome,' now in the Louvre.

VINKELES, REINIER, a Dutch draughtsman and engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1741. He was a pupil of Jan Punt, and also studied in Paris under Lebas. He engraved some 2500 plates for books, chiefly portraits and vignettes, of which about 1500 were from his own designs. Most noteworthy among these are the illustrations for the dramatic works of Winter and Merken, and his own portrait on the same plate with those of J. Schmidt and J. Andriessen. He died at Amsterdam in 1816. His two daughters, CECILIA and ELIZABETH, and his grandson HERMAN, were painters.

VINNE. See VAN DER VINNE.

VINSAC, CLAUDE DOMINIQUE, was born at Toulouse in 1749. He engraved small portraits, and designs for goldsmiths, in the dotted manner.

VINCENT, LOUWYK ANTHONIS, was born at the Hague in 1812. He was a pupil of B. J. van Hove and Cornelis Krnseman. He for a time devoted himself to genre subjects, but, in 1831, he took to portraiture in pencil, chalk, and Indian ink. He visited Paris in 1837, and died in 1842, a member of the Academy of Amsterdam.

VIOLA, DOMENICO, a mediocre imitator of Il Calabrese, who flourished at Naples, and died, very old, about 1696.

VIOLA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Bologna in 1576, and was a scholar of Annibale Carracci, whose manner in landscape he adopted. In company with Francesco Albani, he visited Rome, and was employed in ornamenting palazzi, in which he painted landscapes, with figures by Albani and Domenichino. One of the works which brought him into repute was a landscape, painted for the Vigna of Cardinal Alessandro Montalto, where Paul Bril was employed at the same time. He also painted in the Apollo saloon of the Villa Aldobrandini. He was appointed keeper of the bed-chamber to Pope Gregory XV., and died at Rome in 1622.

VIOLET, PIERRE, a French miniature painter, born in 1749. The first part of his career was passed in his native country, where he was appointed miniature painter to the court. At the Revolution he migrated to England, where he continued to practise, exhibiting many works at the Royal Academy between 1790 and 1819. He died in London in 1819.

VIOLLET-LE-DUC, ETIENNE ADOLPHE, born in Paris in 1817, was a pupil of Léon Fleury, and exhibited at the Salon from 1844 to the year of his death. His works were landscape views, chiefly of French coast scenery, and gained three medals at the Salon. He died in Paris in 1878.

VIOTTI, GIULIO, painter, born in 1845, first studied jurisprudence, but afterwards turned to art, and became the pupil of Andrea Castaldi. He painted genre pictures, and in 1873 won a medal at Vienna. He was a defective draughtsman. He died at Turin in 1877.

VISCH. See DE VISCH.

VISCHER, CORNELIS, a Dutch portrait painter, of whose life little is known. Born at Gouda about 1520, he is said to have become insane, and to have drowned himself during his passage from Hamburg to Amsterdam. In the Vienna Gallery there is a portrait of a man by him, inscribed: Ætatis suæ 62 Aº 1574. Ars probat virum. A portrait by him of William I. Prince of Orange lying in State, now at Amsterdam, is dated 1584.

VISCHER, PETER, called VISCHER VON WILDENSTEIN, an engraver, was born at Basle in 1779. He was a pupil of Peter Biermann, and etched some good original landscapes. He died in 1851.

VISCHER, VINCENTZ. See FISCHER.

VISENTINO, ANTONIO, painter and engraver, was born at Venice in 1688. He was a pupil of Canale, in whose manner he painted and etched architectural views of Venice, to which Tiepolo and Zuccarelli sometimes added figures. He died in 1782. Among his plates are a series of forty after his master, Canale.

VISINO, IL —, has been called the pupil both of Mariotto Albertinelli and of Francia Bigio; the latter assertion at least is improbable. Vasari says Albertinelli. A panel with the 'Descent from the Cross,' by Visino, is in the Galleria del Seminario, at Venice. In the Bologna Academy, a 'Virgin and Child' is generally attributed to him. He visited Hungary, and is believed to have died there about 1512.

VISO. See DEL VISO.

VISPRÉ, FRANÇOIS SAVERIO, a French painter and engraver, was born in Paris about 1730. He engraved portraits in mezzotint, among them those of Louis XV. and other members of the Royal Family of France. He visited London about the year 1765, where, among other plates, he engraved a portrait of the Chevalier d'Eon. He exhibited fruit-pieces, in oil and on glass, in Spring Gardens. He was still living and practising at Dublin at the end of the century. He was a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries.

VISPRÉ, VICTOR, a French miniature painter, born towards the middle of the 18th century. He was the brother of François Vispré, with whom he migrated to Ireland, to practise in Dublin. His works, which were chiefly portraits, often in pastel, appeared at the Society of Artists, the Free Society, and the Royal Academy, from 1763 to 1778. Among his sitters were Garrick and his wife.

VISSCHER, CORNELIS, draughtsman and engraver, was born at Amsterdam about 1620. He was a pupil of Pieter Soutman, but adopted a manner of his own, and has never been surpassed in the technic of line engraving. His 'Giles Boutma,' the 'Pancake-woman,' the 'Seller of Rat's hane,' the 'Gipsy Woman,' the 'Harper,' and the 'Cat,' may be cited as models of perfection in the carriage of the burin. He was less successful in historical plates from Italian and Flemish painters, particularly in those engraved after Rubens. He died about 1670. He executed some good drawings in black chalk. The following are his best prints:

A Portrait, supposed to be that of himself; inscribed Corn. Visscher fecit. anno 1649.

Ditto. Corn. Visscher fecit. anno 1651.

Andreas Deonyszoon Winius, called 'The Man with the Pistol.' The scarcest and most valuable of his portraits.

Gellius de Bouma (Giles Boutma), Minister at Zutphen. William de Ryck, Oculist, of Amsterdam. These two portraits are commonly called 'The great Beards.'

Cornelis Vosbergenius, pastor of Spaerwouw. 1653.

Willem van den Zande, Theologian; after Soutman.

David Pieterz de Vries, Grand-master of Artillery to the States of Holland.

Jacob Westerbaen, Lord of Brandwyck, &c.

Constantine Huygens, Lord of Zuylichem. 1657.

 The Attack on the Convoy; after P. van Laar.
 The Coach robbed; after the same.
 The Lime-kiln; after the same.
 A set of four Landscapes; after Berchem.
 Another set of four Landscapes; after the same.

A very fine collection of the works of Cornelis Visscher is in the British Museum.

VISSCHER, JAN, the younger brother of Cornelis Visscher, was born at Amsterdam in 1635 or 1636. Although he did not possess the genius of his brother, he was an able engraver. His plates are carried farther with the point than those of Cornelis, and his style of etching is uncommonly picturesque and effective. His prints after Berchem (about fifty), Wouwerman, Van Goyen, and Ostade are excellent. He also engraved several portraits. In his fifty-sixth year he learnt painting under Carré, but of his pictures we know nothing. The date of his death is unrecorded, but it was after 1692. The following are among his best plates:

Jan de Uytenbogaert; Joh. de Visscher sc.
 Abraham van der Hulst, Vice-Admiral of Holland.
 Peter Paul Rubens; after Van Dyck.
 Admiral de Ruyter; after Berchmans.
 A Negro, holding a Bow and Arrow in his hand; after Cornelis Visscher.
 Peasants playing at Trictrac; after A. van Ostade.
 A Woman spinning and a Man winding; after the same.
 Peasants dancing; called Ostade's Ball; after the same.
 Peasants regaling at an Ale-house door; after the same.
 A Country Wedding, called Ostade's Bride; after the same.
 Several Peasants dancing in a Cottage; called Berchem's Ball; after Berchem. (His best plate.)
 The Shepherd; after the same.
 The Four Times of the Day (Landscapes); after the same.
 A set of six plates of Figures and Animals; after K. du Jardin.
 A set of four plates; after P. van Laar.
 Several Landscapes, &c.; after Ph. Wouwerman.
 A set of twelve Landscapes; after J. van Goyen.
 A set of twelve Landscapes; after Herm. Swanewelt.

VISSCHER, CLAES JANSZ, an engraver and print-seller, was born at Amsterdam in 1580, and probably belonged to the same family as the artists already mentioned. We have a variety of etchings by him, partly original, partly after other artists. He also engraved several portraits. His prints are sometimes marked with a monogram, composed of a C, an I, and a V: thus, ; the first letter for Claes, which is an abbreviation of Nicholas. Of the large number of plates inscribed C. J. Visscher exc., many were no doubt only published and sold by him. The following are some of his own works:

Charles I., King of England, in a round hat. Marked with the above monogram.
 William Laud, Archbishop of Canterbury.
 James II.
 James, Duke of Monmouth.
 John Calvin.
 Desiderius Erasmus.
 An Allegory on Human Life.
 A set of twelve Views of Haarlem and its neighbourhood.
 A View of the Castle of Löwenstein.
 A set of Landscapes, with Views of the Castles of Abcon, Fymerendt, Muyden, and Toutenburg.
 A set of four plates from the Story of the Prodigal Son; after Vinckeboons.

There has been a good deal of confusion over the Visschers. Nagler points out that a print-selling business was carried on at Amsterdam in the middle of the 16th century by JAN CLAESZ VISSCHER; that he had a son, an engraver, CLAES (Nicolas) JANSZ, (the above,) whose early plates are frequently signed de Jonge (the younger); that, later, Claes Jansz succeeded to his father's business, and thenceforth signed himself C. J. Visscher, Nicolaus Joannis Visscher, or Nic. Jo. Piscator.

VISSCHER, LAMBERT, the brother of Cornelis and Jan Visscher, was born at Amsterdam in 1634, and passed most of his life in Rome, where he died. In conjunction with Cornelis Bloemaert and François Spierre, he engraved some plates from the paintings by Pietro da Cortona, in the palace of the Grand Duke of Tuscany. We have also some portraits by him. The following are perhaps his best plates:

Marie Thérèse, Queen of France; after Van Loo.
 Anne of Austria, Queen of France; after the same.
 Jan de Wit, Pensionary of Holland; after J. de Baan.
 Cornelis Tromp, Vice-Admiral of Holland; after F. Bol.
 Seleneus yielding Stratonice to Antiochus; after P. da Cortona.
 Virtue withdrawing a young Man from the embraces of Sensuality. Do.

VISSCHER, THEODOOR, a landscape and animal painter, was born at Haarlem about 1650, and studied under Nicolas Berchem, but afterwards spent twenty-five years in Rome, where, from his drunken habits, he acquired the name of 'Slempoy.' Some of his pictures, however, are painted fairly, and resemble those of his first master. He died about the end of the 17th century.

VISSELLET, M., an engraver, supposed to have been a Frenchman, who lived about the commencement of the 17th century. Dumesnil enumerates forty-three plates by him of subjects from the New Testament; they are coarsely engraved, and resemble the wood-cuts of J. Stella, of which they seem to be imitations. Some are signed MV. F., and one M. Vissellet F.

VITA, DELLA (VITE). See DELLA VITE.

VITALBA, GIOVANNI, was an Italian engraver, who was born about the year 1740. He was a pupil of Wagner, whose style he imitated. In 1765 he came to England, and engraved several plates for Boydell. He was still living in 1790. Among others, we have the following prints by him :

Cupid, with two Satyrs; after Agostino Carracci.
'Spring' and 'Summer'; after Fil. Lauri.
Herodias with the Head of St. John; after L. Pasinelli.

VITALE. See CAVALLI.

VITALI, ALESSANDRO, born at Urbino in 1580, was a scholar and imitator of Federigo Barocci, who was so pleased with his talent that he painted on some of his pictures. Vitali died in 1630.

VITALI, CANDIDO, was born at Bologna in 1680. He was brought up in the school of Carlo Cignani, and by his advice devoted himself to painting animals, birds, flowers, and fruit. He died in 1753.

VITALI, GIOSEFFO, was a native of Bologna, and flourished about the year 1700. He was a scholar of Giovanni Giuseppe dal Sole, and painted historical subjects. There are several of his works in the churches at Bologna, the best being an 'Annunciation,' in Sant' Antonio; a 'S. Petronio,' in SS. Sebastiano e Rocco; and a 'Martyrdom of St. Cecilia,' in the church of that saint.

VITE, ANTONIO, was a disciple of Gherardo Starnina, and was born at Pistoja. He flourished about the year 1378, and was perhaps identical with one ANTONIO DI FILIPPO of Pistoja, whose name occurs in records of the period. He is said to have worked at Pisa, for the Campo Santo, at Prato, in the Palazzo del Ceppo, and in various churches of his native town.

VITERBO, LORENZO DI. See LORENZO DI VITERBO.

VITO, SAN. See AMALTEO, POMPONIO.

VITRINGA, WIGERUS, sometimes called WILLIAM, a marine painter, was born at Leeuwarden in 1657. He was a lawyer by profession. His pictures have features in common with those of Bakhuizen, Willem van de Velde, and Rietschoof, but are not servile imitations. His ships are well drawn. His pictures are seldom signed, and are often ascribed to other artists. His drawings, in Indian ink washed with bistre, are frequently signed and dated. He seems to have worked at Alkmaar, where his name occurs in the Painters' Guild registers in 1696. He died at Wirdum in 1721.

VITTINGHOFF, KARL, Baron von, who often worked under the name of FISCHBACH, was born at Presburg in 1772. He lived at Vienna, where he painted and etched landscapes, with figures and animals. He illustrated an edition of 'Æsop's Fables.' He died in 1826.

VITTORE BELLINIANO. See BELLINIANO.

VITTORE DI MATTEO, a painter of the Venetian school, and the disciple and assistant of Giov. Bellini. He was one of the artists chosen by Bellini to value Giorgione's frescoes in the Fondaco in 1508, and in 1515 worked under his master in the Hall of Council. It seems highly probable, as pointed out by Crowe and Cavalcaselle, that he was identical with Vittore Belliniano (q. v.).

VITULINI, BERNARDINO, was born in Serravalle, and lived at Belluno. He is known to have painted frescoes in the church of Ampezzo, Cadore, in 1356.

VITUS, DOMENICO, an Italian engraver, was born about the year 1536. The facts of his life are little known. He is supposed to have studied engraving under Agostino Veneziano, whose style he imitated with some success. In the prime of life he retired to the monastery of Valombrosa, in the Apennines. Among his plates are the following :

St. Bartholomew; inscribed, Dom. Vitus ordinis Valisumbrosæ Monachus excidit Romæ. 1576.

St. Joachim holding a Censer; after A. del Sarto.

Jupiter and Calisto; inscribed, Dominicus V. F.

A set of small plates representing the Passion, the borders ornamented with birds, beasts, &c.

A set of plates from the Antique; Dom. Vitus fec.

VIVARÈS, FRANÇOIS, was a native of France, but passed the greater part of his life in England. He was born near Montpellier, July 11, 1709, and was apprenticed to a tailor, but was in the habit of drawing, etching, and even engraving, during his leisure. When eighteen years old he came to London, where he studied under J. B. Chatelein. Being a man of ability, he improved upon the style of his master, and became one of the most eminent landscape engravers of his time. He was particularly successful in his plates after Claude Lorrain. Eventually Vivarès formed a school of engravers, and to him and his fellow-countryman Baléchon must be accorded the credit of founding the school of landscape engraving which was carried to such perfection by the genius of Woollett and others. In 1766 he entered the Incorporated Society of Artists, and died in London, November 6, 1780, after a residence of thirty years in England. He has left some hundred and fifty prints; among them the following :

A set of four Views of Ruins; after J. Smith (of Chichester).

Eight Views in Derbyshire; after Thos. Smith of Driry.

A Landscape, called the Hop-gatherers; after Geo. Smith (of Chichester).

A Landscape; after Gainsborough.

A View in Holland, by moonlight; after Van der Neer.

A Land-storm; after Gaspard Poussin.

A Tempest, with the history of Jonah; after the same.

A Landscape, Morning; after Claude Lorrain.

The Companion, Evening; after the same.

The Enchanted Castle; after the same.

A View in the Environs of Naples; after the same.

VIVARÈS, THOMAS, an English engraver, born in London about 1735. He was one of the thirty-one children of François Vivarès, by whom he was taught, and gained a prize at the Society of Arts in 1761. He engraved several architectural plates for the works of the brothers Adam, published in 1773, but some of his plates are after drawings by himself. He also taught drawing. He exhibited a few works at the Academy, the Society of Artists, and the Free Society, between 1764 and 1788; after the latter date we can find no trace of him.

VIVARINI, ANDREA, or ANDREA DA MURANO, painter, flourished at Murano at the end of the 15th century, and was thought to have been of the same family with Antonio and Bartolommeo Vivarini, but of that there is no evidence. In 1501 he painted a large altar-piece for the church Trebaseleghe, near Noale, as we know from the document recording payment for it, which still exists in the parish archives. In the Venice Academy there are two figures of saints by him. They once formed part of an ancona in the church of S. Pietro Martire, Murano, which has been dismembered.

VIVARINI, ANTONIO, more properly ANTONIO DA MURANO, was an Italian painter of the first half of the 15th century, who flourished at Murano, and who, together with his partner, Giovanni da Murano (Johannes Alemannus), must be looked upon as the founder of the school of Murano. The date at which the partnership began is uncertain, and it is not known whether they practised elsewhere than at Murano or no. Their works, however, seem to clearly prove the influence of Gentile da Fabriano and of Pisano. Antonio was a native of Murano, and a member of the artist family afterwards known as the Vivarini, while the theory that Giovanni was a member of the school of Cologne is fairly supported by the characteristics of his art. The Italian Giovanni da Murano, to whom the later works of Johannes Alemannus have been ascribed, is now allowed to be a myth, created by that common form of artistic chauvinism which demands a native founder for a national school. The two painters signed their names jointly Johannes et Antonius de Muriano. Later the signature varies, and appears as Johannes Alemannus et Antonius de Muriano. Under the first signature there is a large 'Coronation of the Virgin,' in the Venetian Academy, dated 1440, which has, however, been much damaged by restoration. The Commendatore Morelli, we may note, believes this picture to be merely a copy of the one mentioned below, as now in the church of S. Pantaleone, and the signature to be forged. A Madonna Enthroned with Angels, and four Fathers of the Church, dated 1446, is in the same gallery, and bears the second inscription. Other works produced during this partnership are: an altar-piece in fourteen compartments, in the Brera, representing the Virgin and Child, with a Benedictine monk kneeling before her, and numerous Saints; and three altar-pieces in the sacristy of the church of S. Zaccaria at Venice—two dated 1443, and the third 1444. Of works painted by Antonio alone the following are known: an 'Adoration of the Kings,' in the Berlin Gallery, an early production, probably painted before his connection with Giovanni, and showing the influence of Gentile da Fabriano; SS. Peter and Jerome, in the National Gallery; 'The Coronation of the Virgin,' a large altar-piece in the church of S. Pantaleone at Venice, signed and dated 1444. This last has been much repainted. In 1450 Antonio seems to have parted company with his German fellow-worker, to associate himself with his own younger brother, Bartolommeo, who took the name of Vivarini (q. v.). An altar-piece, the Virgin and Child with Saints, in the Bologna Gallery, dated 1450, is inscribed with the names of the two brothers. Antonio, if we may believe Sansovino, lived until 1470. His latest extant work is an altar-piece in the gallery of the Lateran. It is signed with his name alone, and dated 1464. Besides the works already mentioned we may note: W. A.

Brescia. Seminario. S. Ursula between SS. Peter and Paul.

Padua. S. Filippo. A Madonna (very fine fragment).

VIVARINI, BARTOLOMMEO, who up to 1459 signed himself BARTOLOMMEO DA MURANO, but afterwards adopted the name which is now so well known, was the brother of Antonio da Murano. In 1450 he, with Antonio, executed the Madonna and Child, for the Carthusians of Bologna, which is generally considered one of the best productions of that time in Northern Italy, and is now in the Communal Gallery of Bologna. A 'Glorification of St. Peter,' signed and dated by the two brothers in 1451, is in the Communal Gallery of Padua; and other examples are to be seen in the churches of Pausola and Bergamo, and in S. M. d. Salute at Venice. The S. Giovanni Capistrano in the Louvre is dated 1459, in which year Bartolommeo first commenced to sign himself 'Vivarini.' In 1464 he withdrew from his partnership with his brother, and began to show the influence of Paduan masters on his style. Bartolommeo's method was much affected by the arrival of Antonello da Messina in Venice, about 1470, and by the experiments in the use of oil or varnish induced by his example. Crowe and Cavalcaselle say that Bartolommeo was the first Venetian to try the new system. In 1489 Vivarini painted a 'Death of the Virgin,' for the Certosa of Padua, which formerly bore, according to Moschini, the following inscription: "Hoc opus factum fuit Venetiis per Bartholomeum Vivarinum de Muriano 1499." This was afterwards so mutilated and doctored as apparently to declare the authorship of Giotto, under whose name it existed for a long time in Lord Northwick's collection. The date of Vivarini's death is uncertain, but it occurred after 1499. Works: W. A.

VIVARINI, GIOVANNI. The theory that a Muranese painter of this name existed at all is now generally abandoned. It was first promulgated by some Italian critics, notably Zanetti and Moschini, who, zealous for the glory of the Venetian school, sought to establish that the Giovanni da Murano of the later signatures on the joint works of Antonio da Murano and Johannes Alemannus (q. v.), was a native artist, and not identical with the German Giovanni. Taking advantage of this hypothesis, certain Venetian dealers dismembered an altar-piece purchased from the church of San Stefano, at Venice (probably an 'Apotheosis of S. Jerome,' executed for that church by the partners in 1441), and, forging signatures on the separate panels, invented, amongst others, the name of Giovanni Vivarini. The fragments thus decorated were foisted upon Signor Ascanio Molin, a wealthy collector, but the fraud was speedily detected, and denounced by Pietro Brandolese, Lazzaro, Lanzi, and others.

VIVARINI, LUIGI, (ALVISE, ALOISE,) the date of whose birth is unknown, was a kinsman of Bartolommeo Vivarini, under whom he certainly studied. His earliest recorded works were painted about 1464, when he and Carpaccio competed with Giov. Bellini in the decorations for the scuola of S. Girolamo, at Venice. These pictures of Alvise's have, however, disappeared. The 'Adoration of Christ,' dated 1476, in the sacristy of the church of Montefiorentino, is one of his early productions, and shows that he had then already commented the use of oil. In 1480 he painted a splendid 'Virgin and Saints,' for San Francesco, Treviso, now in the Venice Academy. To about this date belong the SS. Matthew and John the Baptist, in the same collection; and the fresco of 'Christ carrying His Cross,' in SS. Giovanni e Paolo. In 1488, Alvise Vivarini wrote a letter to the Signory of Venice, requesting permission to share with the Bellini in the commission to decorate the Hall of Great Council. To this he received a favourable reply, and thereupon executed two paintings, which were burned in the fire of 1577. The subjects, Vasari tells us, were 'Otho promising to mediate between Venice and Barbarossa,' and 'Barbarossa receiving his Son.' The Council were so pleased with the pictures that, in 1492, Alvise was named Depentor in Gran Conseio, with a salary of five ducats a month. Notwithstanding this work for the State, he continued to paint altar-pieces for private patrons. The 'Apotheosis of St. Ambrose,' in the Cappella Milanese of the Frari, Venice, was probably the last production of Alvise, as the inscription tells us that it was completed after his death by Marco Basaiti. The date upon it is 1503. After the Bellini, Luigi Vivarini was the greatest of the Venetian quattrocentisti. Works:

VIVERONI, F., is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of some views in Ireland of little merit.

VIVIANI, ANTONIO, called CODAGORA, was brought up in the Academy at Rome, and flourished 678 about the year 1650. He excelled in painting architectural ruins, and perspectives of his own composition. He has been confounded with Ottavio Viviani of Brescia, who painted similar subjects, but in a very inferior style. Domenico Gargiulo of Naples, Cerquozzi, and Miel put in his figures.

VIVIANI, ANTONIO, called IL SORDO D'URBINO, from his deafness, was a native of Urbino. He was a favourite scholar of Federigo Barocci, whose nephew he is said to have been. He left some pictures at Urbino, in the style of Barocci, various frescoes in Rome, and a vast work in the Chiesa De' Filippini, at Fano, consisting of scenes from the lives of those apostles to whom the church was dedicated.

VIVIANI, OTTAVIO, a painter of architectural perspectives, was born at Brescia, and flourished about the middle of the 17th century. He was a pupil of Tommaso Sandrino, and is frequently confounded with the abler An. Viviani (Codagora).

VIVIEN, JOSEPH, a French painter, was born at Lyons in 1657. He went to Paris in 1677, studied under Charles Le Brun, and, for a time, painted portraits in oil with considerable success. But he afterwards adopted pastel, which he carried to a perfection unknown before him. His countrymen called him 'the French Van Dyck'; and his popularity was great all over Europe. He occasionally illustrated his portraits with historical or emblematical subjects, characteristic of his sitter. In 1701 he was received into the Academy, and was afterwards on its council. He passed the latter part of his life in the service of the Elector of Bavaria, for whom he painted some of his best pictures. His own portrait, by himself, hangs among those of distinguished artists in the Florentine Gallery. He died in the Electoral Palace at Bonn in 1735. His portraits of Fénélon and of himself are in the Munich Gallery.

VIVIER, G. (GUILLAUME?) DU OR DE, probably a native of Liège, was an engraver, and flourished about the middle of the 17th century. He is often confounded with Jean Duvivier. He is said to have engraved vignettes for books, and little devotional leaflets. Dumesnil gives the following eight plates by him, to which Nagler adds a 'Façade of S. Germain en Laye.'

Christ in the Sepulchre; after Ant. van den Heuvel.
 The Four Evangelists, in one piece.
 Temptation of St. Anthony; after Ant. van den Heuvel.
 Thetis, Chiron, and the infant Achilles.
 A Flemish Kitchen; after Ant. van den Heuvel.
 The Flageolet Player.
 The Tippler; in the manner of Rembrandt.
 A Winter Landscape outside a fortified city.

A younger engraver of the same name, probably a son, worked at Liège about 1700, and has also been confounded with Jean Duvivier.

VLERICK, PIETER, was born at Courtray in 1539. He was the son of a lawyer, who, perceiving his inclination for art, placed him under Willem Snellaert, a painter in distemper, with whom he remained only a short time. The reputation of Karel van Yperen then induced him to become that master's disciple. The morose and capricious disposition of Karel drove Vlerick, two years later, into the studio of Jacques Floris, at Antwerp. He afterwards went to Paris, where he met with such encouragement that he was enabled to proceed to Venice, where he entered the school of Tintoretto. After four years at Venice, he proceeded to Rome, where he studied from the antique, and from the works of Michelangelo. He worked in conjunction with Girolamo Muziano, supplying figures to the landscapes of that painter. He also drew landscapes and ruins with the pen. In 1568 he returned to Flanders, and established himself at Tournay, where he spent the rest of his life. He died at Tournay in 1581. Van Mander, who was his disciple, gives a list of his works.

VLEUGHELDS, NICHOLAS, was born at Valenciennes in 1669, and studied first under his father, Philippe Vleughels, then under P. Mignard, and afterwards, while still quite young, in Rome, where he spent twelve years. After a visit to Venice, he settled down in Paris, where he became a member of the Academy. In 1724 he was appointed president of the French Academy in Rome, where he died in 1737. He is stated to have been a skilful plagiarist rather than an original artist. A 'Holy Family,' and a 'Visitation,' by him are in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg. The Toulouse Museum has a 'Vulcan giving Venus arms for Æneas,' by him, and the Valenciennes Museum two companion pictures, 'Le Lever,' and 'La Toilette.'

VLEUGHELDS, PHILIPPE, a Flemish painter, born at Antwerp in 1619. He was a pupil of C. Schut, and also profited by the relationship of his mother, Catherine Geerts, to Rubens, to spend much time in the great artist's atelier. In 1641 he journeyed to England, to place himself under the protection of Van Dyck, whom, however, he found dead on his arrival. He then settled in Paris, where he was made a member of the Academy in 1663. He died in 1694.

VLEYS, NICHOLAS, an inferior Flemish painter, who flourished at Bruges towards the end of the 17th century, and died in 1703. There are pictures by him in some of the churches of his native city.

VOERST, ROBERT VAN, draughtsman and engraver, was born at Arnheim about 1600. His style of engraving resembles that of Gilles Sadeler, his plates being executed with the burin in a clear, neat manner. He visited England when young, and engraved a considerable number of English portraits, the latest bearing date 1635. Van der Doort expressly calls him the king's engraver in his famous Catalogue. For Charles I. he executed two plates, one of his Majesty's sister, the other after Van Dyck's picture of the Emperor Otho. He died in 1669. The following portraits by him may be named :

Charles I. and his Queen; one plate; after Van Dyck.

Sir Kenelm Digby; after the same.

Sir George Jones; after the same.

Christian, Duke of Brunswick; after the same.

Sir George Carew; after the same.

Philip, Earl of Pembroke; after the same.

Ernst, Count Mansfeld; after the same.

Simon Vouet, Painter; after the same.

His own Portrait; after the same.

Prince Rupert.

James Stewart, Duke of Lennox; after Geo. Geldorp.

Robert, Earl of Lindsay; after Mierevelt.

Edward, Lord Lyttleton.

James, Marquis of Hamilton.

Henry Rich, Earl of Holland.

William Fielding, Earl of Denbigh.

Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia; after G. Van Honthorst.

He also engraved a few plates of animals for the drawing-book of Crispin van de Pass.

VOET, ALEXANDER, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1613, and, from his style, is supposed to have been a pupil of Paul Pontius. His handling of the graver is neat, but his drawing incorrect. He worked chiefly after Rubens. Among others, we have the following prints by him :

Judith with the Head of Holofernes; after Rubens.

The Holy Family returning from Egypt; after the same.

Virgin and Child, with Angels presenting Fruit; after the same.

The Martyrdom of St. Andrew; after the same.

Death of Seneca; after the same.

The Roman Daughter; after the same.

The Entombment of Christ; after Van Dyck.

Christ bearing the Cross; after the same.

Folly, holding a Cat; after Jordaens.

The Card-players; after De Vos.

Landscape; after Fouquieres.

VOET, FERDINAND, a Flemish painter of the 17th century, who settled at Rome, where he worked from 1640 to 1691, and was appointed painter to the Pontifical court.

VOET, KAREL BORCHAERT, was born at Zwolle in 1670, and was first taught by his elder brother, the Burgomaster of Zwolle (who, though not a professional artist, had learned drawing for the purpose of his studies in botany and natural history), and under him became a correct draughtsman of flowers, plants, and insects. Descamps asserts that his talents recommended him to the patronage of the Earl of Portland, whom he accompanied to England, where he was much employed by that nobleman, as well as by King William III. He subsequently went with the Earl to his summer palace at Zorgvliet, where he painted 'The Products of the Twelve Months,' with backgrounds from the neighbourhood. At the instance of King William, he compiled a book of drawings from insects. After this he settled at Dordrecht, where he devoted himself to his 'Systematic Classification of Beetles,' with illustrations from nature. He died at the Hague in 1745.

VOGEL, BERNHARD, a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1683, and was a pupil of Christoph Weigel. He lived chiefly at Augsburg, where he engraved many portraits, some with the graver, others in mezzotint. He died at Nuremberg in 1737. The Kupecky Gallery of Portraits was brought out by him. The two following are, perhaps, his best plates :

Christoph Weigel, Engraver; after Kupecky. 1735.

Johann Kupecky, Painter. 1737.

His son, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, also practised mezzotint engraving, and produced some plates after Kupecky.

VOGEL, CHRISTIAN LEBRECHT, was born at Dresden in 1759, and having in his twelfth year painted his own portrait in pastel, he was placed under Johann Eleazar Schenau. He was patronized by Count Solms, by whose direction he, in 1780, proceeded to Wildenfels, where he painted many portraits and family pictures of distinction. The portraits of his own two children (now in the Dresden Gallery) procured him many commissions for other things of the kind. He also painted two altar-pieces, on the subject of 'Suffer little children to come unto Me,' for the churches at Wildenfels and Liechtenstein. He became a member of the Dresden Academy in 1800, and a professor in 1814. He died at that city in 1816.

VOGEL, KARL FRIEDRICH OTTO, wood engraver, was born at Berlin in 1816. He was the second son of JOHANN DANIEL VOGEL, and his career was passed in intimate relations with his elder brother, Johann Philipp Albert, who is still alive (?). As an illustrator of books, he worked under Baumgärtner, at Leipsic, in 1834-5, but returned with his brother to Berlin, where he died in 1851, while engaged on a block of 'The Temple of Peace,' after Kaulbach, for the title-page to Decker's Illustrated Bible. His chief undertakings were the cuts for Baumgärtner's 'Shakespeare,' 1838, and for Kugler's 'History of Frederick the Great,' 1844-51, after the designs of Menzel.

VOGEL, LUDWIG, a Swiss historical painter, born in 1788. He studied at the Vienna Academy, from which he was expelled on account of his strictures on the teaching. In 1810 he went to Rome, where he worked under Overbeck, and formed a friendship with Cornelius. His reputation was won by his pictures of the Swiss war of independence. He died at Zurich in 1879. Amongst his best known works are :

Return of the Swiss from the Battle of Morgarten.

Winkelreid's Fight with the Dragon.

Putting the Stone on the Rigi.

Tell before Gessler.

The Fight of Adam Naf at Kappal.

VOGEL VON VOGELSTEIN, KARL CHRISTIAN, historical painter, was born at Wildenfels in Saxony in 1788. He was a pupil of his father, Christian Lebrecht Vogel, the court painter, and was ennobled by the King of Saxony in 1831. In 1804 he became a student at the Dresden Academy. From 1808 to 1812 he was in St. Petersburg, where he practised with success as a portrait painter. In 1813 he went for seven years to Italy, where he became a Catholic, and joined the Nazarenes. In 1820 he succeeded Kugelgen as professor at the Dresden Academy. In 1824 he was appointed court painter. After visits to London and Italy he retired to Munich, where he died in 1868. The Berlin National Gallery possesses a portrait of Ludwig Tieck by him. He also painted Pius VII., the Kings of Saxony and Holland, and the sculptor Thorwaldsen.

VOGELAER, CAREL VAN, (or DE VOGEL,) called also CARLO DI FIORE and DISFELBLOEM, was born at Maastricht in 1653. He painted still-life, chiefly flowers and fruit. He studied in his native town and in Italy, and also practised for a time in Paris and Lyons. He finally settled at Rome, where he gained the friendship of Maratti, who occasionally employed him to paint accessories in his pictures. He died at Rome in 1695. In the Dresden Gallery there is a picture ascribed to Maratti, in which he is said to have painted the fruit.

VOGELSANCK, ISAAC, a Dutch landscape, cattle, and decorative painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1688. He was a pupil of Huchtenburgh. Migrating to England about 1715, he practised in London, in Ireland, and in Scotland. He was much employed on accessories for portrait painters. He died in London in 1753.

VOGHTER, HEINRICH, a German engraver on wood, was born at Strasburg, about 1490. He imitated the style of Albrecht Dürer with some success. He executed the cuts for a drawing-book, entitled 'A Book of the extraordinary and marvellous Art, very useful to all Painters, Sculptors, Goldsmiths,' &c., printed at Strasburg in 1540. Zani, however, says he died in 1537. His son, HEINRICH VOGHTER the younger, was also a wood engraver. He was born in 1513, and was at work in 1545.

VOGT, ADOLF, landscape and animal painter, was born at Liebenstein, in Saxe-Meiningen, in 1843, and was taken to America when a child. He studied first in Philadelphia, then (in 1861-5) at Munich, and afterwards at Zurich and in Paris. He returned to America, and died in 1871 at New York. Among his best pictures are :

Harvest Scene in a Storm.

Niagara in Summer. | Niagara in Winter.

The returning Harvest Waggon. | The Smithy.

VOIRIOT, GUILLAUME, a French painter of the 18th century. He became a member of the Academy in 1759, his reception pictures being portraits of Pierre and of Natier. He exhibited portraits at the Salon and at the Academy of S. Luke from 1759 to 1791.

VOIS, ADR. DE. See DE VOIS.

VOISARD, ETIENNE CLAUDE, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1746, was a pupil of B. Baron. Together with some plates after French painters, he has left a copy of Woollett's Battle of La Hogue, on a smaller scale.

VOISEUX, —, a French artist of whose life no details are known. Two pastel portraits by him, dated respectively 1766 and 1767, are in the Valenciennes Museum.

VOLAIRE, (or VOLÈRE,) JACQUES, painter, was born, probably either at Toulon or Nantes, about 1735. His father, a native of Nantes, worked at Toulon as painter to the Arsenal. Jacques, who appears to have also held some official post in the arsenal, became acquainted with Joseph Vernet when the latter visited Toulon, and attached himself to the master as companion and assistant, going with him to Bordeaux, Bayonne, and Rochelle. In 1763 the friends parted company, and Volaire settled in Rome, where his marines in the manner of Vernet attracted considerable attention. Later on he visited Naples, and there painted an 'Eruption of Vesuvius,' of which he multiplied replicas. Volaire died at Naples early in the 19th century. The following are among his best known works :

Two Sea-pieces. (Palace of Compiègne.)

Eruption of Vesuvius. (Havre Museum.)

Eruption of Vesuvius, with view of Portici. (Nantes Museum.)

Eruption of Vesuvius by night. (Toulouse Museum.)

VÖLCKER. See VÖLKER.

VOLDERS, LOUIS, painter, and a native of Brussels, flourished about the middle of the 17th century. No details of his life are known, though several of his works have survived. He is believed to have been a pupil of Crayer, but his portraits have been frequently ascribed to Coxie. There are two pictures by him in the Hôtel de Ville at Louvain, and one in the church of Notre Dame de la Chapelle at Brussels.

VOLÈRE. See VOLAIRE.

VOLIGNY, —, is mentioned by Florent le Comte as an engraver, but his talent lay in pen portraits washed with Indian ink. He is probably identical with VOLIGNY DE TONNERES, engraver, who died in 1699.

VÖLK, JOHANN GEORG BARTHOLOMÄUS, was born at Ochsenfurth on the Maine in 1747, and studied first under his father, and then in the Augsburg Academy, under Günther. He painted portraits, landscapes, and historical pictures. He died in 1815. His elder son, FERDINAND VÖLK (1772—1829), lived and worked as a painter at Ratibor in Silesia. KARL VÖLK, his second son, was settled as a painter in Hungary.

VOLKAERT, NICOLAAS and KLAASZ, father and son, painters of Haarlem, flourished in the 15th century; the elder about 1450, the younger from 1480 to 1506. They painted chiefly in distemper, and made designs for the glass painters. Their name occurs occasionally on fragments of windows from disestablished convents and churches.

VÖLKER, FRIEDRICH WILHELM, son of Gottfried W. Völker, was born at Berlin in 1799, and died at Thorn, February 17, 1870. He painted flowers and fruit, and was employed, like his father, in the porcelain factory at Berlin.

VÖLKER, GOTTFRIED WILHELM, (or VÖLCKER,) flower painter, was born at Berlin in 1775. He was a pupil of JOHANN FRIEDRICH SCHULZE, a flower painter, and succeeded him as superintendent of the painters in the Royal Porcelain Manufactory at Berlin. In 1811 he became a member of the Berlin Academy, and died in that city in 1849. Two 'Vases of Fruit and Flowers' by him are in the Berlin National Gallery.

VÖLKER, OTTO, (or VÖLCKER,) landscape painter, was born at Berlin about 1810, and studied first under Blechen and then in Italy. He became a member of the Berlin Academy in 1845, and died in 1848.

VÖLKER, WILHELM, was born at Wertheim in 1812, and by the help of the Princes of Löwenstein-Wertheim, was educated at the Munich Academy. He devoted himself to landscape and genre painting, and travelled for improvement in the Bavarian highlands and the Tyrol. In 1848 he painted a room in the palace of the Prussian ambassador at Munich with hunting-scenes, landscapes, and famous German battles. In the following year he painted two altar-pieces for the court chapel of his patron at Löwenstein, and afterwards two others, together with a 'Nativity,' at Aschaffenburg. In 1851 he published an 'Art of Painting' (Leipsic), and in 1853 became teacher in the cantonal school of St. Gall, where he died in 1874.

VOLKHART, GEORG WILHELM, a German subject painter, was born in 1815 at Herdicke (Westphalia). He practised at Düsseldorf. His subjects were frequently taken from the history of Mary, Queen of Scots, and from the wars between England and France. In his later years he painted many portraits. He died at Düsseldorf, March 14, 1876.

VOLLENHOVEN, HERMAN VAN, a Dutch painter, who flourished at Utrecht in the early part of the 17th century. It appears that he was a member of the Guild at Utrecht in 1611, and Dean in 1627, and that in 1612 Beernt de Visscher was his pupil. No further details of his life have transpired, and he was long known only through an engraving, dated 1614, by Simon van de Pass, after a picture by him of 'Christ and the Disciples at Emmaus.' But a signed picture of his, dated 1612, was acquired by the Hague Museum in 1873. The subject is an artist (probably himself) painting the portraits of an old man and woman seated before him. This picture is now in the Rijks Museum at Amsterdam.

VOLLER, AERTGEN DE. See CLAESSEN.

VOLLERDT, JAN CHRISTIAN, or CHRISTOPH, (or VOLLAERT,) was born at Leipsic in or about 1709, and was a scholar of Alexander Thiele. He is credited with the execution of many small landscapes, views on the Rhine and in Switzerland, somewhat in the manner of Chr. Geo. Schütz, enlivened with figures and animals, many of which were imported into England early in the present century. He died in 1769. Some of his pictures have been engraved. There is a Rhine landscape by him in the Bordeaux Museum.

VOLLERT. See VOLLERDT.

VOLLEEVENS, JOHANNES, was born at Geertruidenberg in 1649. He was a scholar first of Nicolas Maas, and afterwards of Jan de Baan, with whom he remained eight years. From 1672 onwards he worked independently, and after the death of De Baan (1702), he succeeded to the greater part of his practice, and became one of the most popular artists of his time. The Prince of Courland and the Prince of Nassau, Stadtholder of Friesland, were among his particular patrons. He died at the Hague in 1728. The Rijks Museum, Amsterdam, has two portraits by him, one of them being that of William III. His son, JOHANNES VOLLEEVENS, was also a good portraitist. He was born at the Hague in 1685, was appointed court painter to the Princess Dowager of Orange, and was dean of the painters' guild at the Hague in 1748. It is supposed he was a short time in England. He died at the Hague in 1758.

VOLLMER, ADOLPH FRIEDRICH, painter and etcher, was born at Hamburg in 1806. He travelled through Germany with the cosmorama painter Suhr, studying subsequently under Rosenberg at Altona, and under Eckersberg at Copenhagen. From 1833 to 1839 he was at work at Munich, and travelling in the Tyrol and Italy. He lost his sight in 1866, and in 1875 died at Hamburg. He painted harbours and other sea views, also views in Venice and on the Elbe. He has left some thirty etchings and lithographs.

VOLMAR, JOHANN GEORG, was born at Mengen, in Swabia, in 1770, but withdrew to Switzerland to escape the conscription, and took to landscape painting at Lausanne. He studied entirely from nature, without the help of a master. After a journey to Italy, he became professor in the School of Art at Berne, where he died in 1831. One of his largest works was 'The Parting of Nicolas von der Flüe from his Family,' which was engraved by Lips. His brother, XAVER VOLMAR, etched some of his works. Xaver's son, JOSEPH VOLMAR, (born 1795, died 1865 at Berne,) was a sculptor as well as a landscape and animal painter, with particular skill in painting horses.

VOLPATI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, born at Bassano in 1633, was an indifferent painter, and the author of some treatises on the fine arts. The most important of these is 'La Verità Pittoresca.' He died in 1706.

VOLPATO, GIOVANNI, draughtsman and engraver, was born at Bassano in 1733. He received his first training from his mother, an embroiderer, and then studied under the engraver Remondini. While still young, however, he went to Venice, where he received some instruction from Wagner and Bartolozzi, and engraved several plates after Piazzetta, Mariotto, Amiconi, Zuccarelli, M. Ricci, and others. He worked some time for the Duke of Parma, until a plate from the Monument of Algarotti at Pisa brought him into wider notice. He afterwards visited Rome, where Gavin Hamilton employed him to engrave several plates for his 'Schola Italica Picturae'; and he was the principal artist employed on the well-known set of coloured prints from the works of Raphael in the Vatican. In Rome he founded a School of Engraving, in which several excellent artists received their education. He died in Rome in 1803. In signing some of his earlier works he Gallicized his name into Renard. Volpato was one of the many Italians of the 18th century whose merits were greatly overrated. Like that of his son-in-law and pupil, Raffaello Morghen, his fame depended chiefly on the dearth of really able men in Italy in his time. Among his best plates are the following:

PLATES ENGRAVED FOR GAVIN HAMILTON.

The four Sibyls; after Raphael.
The Marriage of Alexander and Roxana; after the same.
Modesty and Vanity; after Leonardo da Vinci (?).
Perseus and Andromeda; after Polidoro da Caravaggio.
Christ praying on the Mount; after Correggio.
The Feast in the house of Simou; after Paolo Veronese.
The Marriage of Cana; after Tintoretto.
The Gamblers; after Michelangelo da Caravaggio.

SUBJECTS AFTER GAVIN HAMILTON.

The Death of Lucretia.	Innocence.
Juno.	Hebe.
Melancholy.	Gaiety.

COLOURED PRINTS AFTER RAPHAEL.

The School of Athens.
The Dispute of the Sacrament.
Heliodorus driven from the Temple of Jerusalem.
Attila stopped by SS. Peter and Paul.
St. Peter delivered from Prison.
The Parnassus.
The Fire in the Borgo.
The Mass of Bolsena. This plate was actually engraved by Raffaello Morghen.

VOLPE, VINCENT, painter, practised at the English court from 1514 to 1530, and amongst other works is said to have painted the banners for the famous vessel, 'The Great Harry.'

VOLPELIÈRE, Mlle. L. P. JULIE, a native of Marseilles, and pupil of Sérangeli, practised in Paris in the first part of the 19th century, gaining a medal of the second class in 1810, and exhibited portraits, sacred subjects, etc., at the Salon from 1808 to 1839. She died in Paris in 1842. She painted a 'S. Martin' for the church at Perpignan, and in the Versailles Museum there is a portrait of Colonel Jean Baptiste Jourdain by her.

VOLPONI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA DI PIETRO DI STEFANO, a painter of Pistoja, who flourished at the beginning of the 16th century, and painted in conjunction with Il Sollazzino, and with Bernardino del Signoraccio for various churches of his native city.

VOLTERRA, DANIELE DA. See RICCIARELLI.

VOLTERRA, FRANCESCO DA, who resided much at Pisa, is known, from the records of the Campo Santo, to have painted the 'History of Job' on its south wall. This fresco is in six compartments, and was painted between 1370 and 1372. Like the rest of the earlier pictures in the Campo Santo, it is now almost obliterated, but some idea of its verbal realism may still be formed from Lasinio's 'Pittura del Campo Santo,' and other reproductions in Italian books on art. Francesco da Volterra is supposed to have been identical with FRANCESCO DI

MAESTRO GIOTTO, a painter of Florence, whose name occurs in the records of the city Guild for 1341.

VOLTZ, JOHANN MICHAEL, painter and engraver, was born at Nördlingen in 1784. In 1801 he was apprenticed to F. Weber of Augsburg, and four years later entered the academy of H. von Herzberg, with whom he studied etching and engraving. He returned to Nördlingen in 1812; in 1819 he travelled in the highlands of Baden, and found materials for many costume and genre pictures in sepia. He died at his birthplace in 1858. He worked largely as an illustrator, furnishing the plates for editions of the 'Arabian Nights,' and of many German classics. Of his pictures we may name:

Berlin.	Nat. Gallery.	A Menagerie.
		Cows drinking.
Breslau.	Museum.	A Village; morning.
"	"	Watering the Cattle.

VONCK, ELIAS, (or VONK,) was a Dutch artist of talent, who painted birds, animals, and still-life, in the manner of Hondecoeter and Snyders. He died at Amsterdam in June, 1652. JAN VONCK, probably his son and pupil, painted the same subjects. He flourished at Amsterdam about 1660. In the R. Museum of that city there is a study of dead birds by him, and in the Dresden Gallery there is a landscape by Jacob Ruysdael (No. 1803) with animals beautifully painted by Vonck. It is signed with Ruysdael's monogram, and with J. Vonck fe. There seems to have been a third VONCK, who resided at Middelburg about 1750; he painted birds and still-life subjects in the manner of Aart Schouman.

VON DER EMBDE, AUGUST, was born at Cassel in 1780. He studied painting at Cassel, Dresden, Düsseldorf, Munich, and Vienna; and established himself at Cassel, where he painted portraits, scenes of peasant life, and children. He also copied the old masters in sepia. Many of his genre subjects have been engraved. He died in 1862 at Cassel. His two daughters, KAROLINE and EMILIE, were also painters.

VONWYL, JAKOB, (or VON WYL,) was born at Lucerne in 1595. He painted in the style of Holbein. Many of his better works were burnt at the destruction of the abbey church at Lucerne, but his very remarkable 'Dance of Death' is still to be seen in the Library of the Canton. He died in 1621.

VOOGD, HENDRIK, a landscape painter, was born at Amsterdam about 1764-7, and studied first at the school of design there, and afterwards under Juriaan Andriessen. He was furnished by a friend with the means to visit Italy, whence he sent to the Société des Sciences, at Haarlem, a landscape which obtained for him a pension of fifty ducats per annum for three years. Thus encouraged, he continued his studies with assiduity till he was acknowledged to be the best landscape painter in Rome, and designated 'the Dutch Claude.' At intervals he sent pictures to the exhibitions at Amsterdam, chiefly landscapes with cattle. He died at Rome in 1839. He executed some landscape etchings, and made several drawings after Claude for the use of the engraver Volpato.

VOORDECKER, HENRI, painter, born at Brussels in 1779, was a pupil of J. B. de Roy, and painted landscapes, animals, and simple domestic subjects. His 'Village and Chapel of Waterloo,' 'Children playing with Poultry and Pigeons,' may be named, also a 'Huntsman's Family,' in the Amsterdam Museum. He died at Brussels in 1861.

VOORHOUT, JOHANNES, was born at Uithoorn, near Amsterdam, in 1647. He was the son of a watchmaker, who placed him under CONSTANTINE VERBOUT of Gouda, a painter of conversations and gallant assemblies, with whom he passed six years. After this he became a pupil of Jan van Noordt, under whom he studied five years. In 1672, when the French army entered Holland, Voorhout took refuge at Friedrichstadt, and from thence removed to Hamburg. After an absence of three years, the desire of revisiting his native country induced him to return to Amsterdam, where his success was no less prompt than it had been at Hamburg. He painted the principal citizens, and received commissions for several historical subjects, among them a 'Death of Sophonisba.' Voorhout died in 1720. Two conversation pieces by him are in the Stockholm Gallery, and a 'Luna and Endymion,' 'Venus upon the Clouds,' and 'Birth of Samson,' in the Brunswick Museum. He had a son or brother, JAN VOORHOUT, who died in 1749, and left a picture of 'The Good Samaritan,' now in the Brunswick Museum.

VORSTERMAN, LUCAS, the elder, (or VOSTERMAN,) engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1578, and at first studied painting in the school of Rubens. He was afterwards advised, however, by his preceptor, to devote himself entirely to engraving. Few painters have had the satisfaction of seeing so great a number of their best works finely engraved as Rubens. He was surrounded by artists of ability, who worked immediately under his eye, and had the advantage of his advice. Of these Lucas Vorsterman was one. His plates are executed entirely with the graver, which he handled with great facility, though he was always more attentive to the general effect than to the neatness and regularity of the execution. His plates after the 'Adoration of the Magi,' and the 'Descent from the Cross,' by Rubens, are regarded as masterpieces of engraving. He visited England in the reign of Charles I., and lived here about eight years, from 1623 or 1624 to 1631, being employed by the king and the Earl of Arundel. He died later than 1656. Vorsterman usually signed his plates with his name, but he sometimes used a cipher composed of an L. and a V. joined together thus,

V. The following are among the best of his very numerous plates :

- Charles I., King of England; after Van Dyck.
- Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel. Do.
- Isabella Clara Eugenia, Infanta of Spain. Do.
- Gaston, Duke of Orleans. Do.

- The Angel at the Sepulchre. Do.
- St. Francis receiving the Stigmata.
- The Martyrdom of St. Laurence.
- Mary Magdalene renouncing the Vanities of the World.
- The Battle of the Amazons; a large print on six sheets.
- The Holy Family; after Raphael.
- The Entombment of Christ; after the same.
- St. George; after the same.
- Christ praying in the Garden; after An. Carracci.
- Lot and his Daughters; after Orazio Gentileschi.
- The Virgin and Child, with Pilgrims; after Caravaggio.
- A Pietà; after Van Dyck.
- St. Theresa; after the same.
- Christ at the Pillar; after G. Zeghers.
- The Death of St. Francis; after the same.
- St. Ignatius; after the same.
- The Fable of the Satyr, with the Peasant who blows hot and cold; after J. Jordaens.
- A Concert of five persons, one of whom is a Girl playing on the Guitar; after Adam de Coster, being a Companion to the Concert engraved by Bolswert, after Theodoor Rombouts.

VORSTERMAN, LUCAS, the younger, was the son of the elder artist of the name, and was born at Antwerp about the year 1600. Although he had the advantage of his father's instruction, his plates are inferior in every respect to his. The following are considered the best :

- A Bear-Hunt; after F. Snyders.
- Lucas Vorsterman the elder; after Van Dyck.
- Sir Hugh Cartwright; after Diepenbeek.
- The Trinity; after Rubens.
- Part of the Whitehall ceiling; after the same.
- The Virgin in the Clouds, surrounded by Angels; after Van Dyck.
- The Triumph of Riches; after Holbein.
- The greater part of the Plates for the Duke of Newcastle's book on Horsemanship; after designs by Diepenbeek.
- Several Plates in the Teniers Gallery.

VORSTERMANS, JOHANNES, (or VOSTERMAN,) was born at Bommel in 1643. He was the son and pupil of a portrait painter, but afterwards studied at Utrecht, under Herman Saffleven. He visited Paris, assumed the title of 'Baron,' and, for a short time, kept up the establishment of a man of rank. His necessities, however, obliged him to return to Holland, and, in 1672, on the approach of the French army, he moved from Utrecht to Nimeguen, where his talents became known to the Marquis of Bethune, for whom he painted several landscapes and views on the Rhine, and by whom he was employed to collect works of art. Soon after the Restoration he came to England, and painted a view of Windsor, and some other works for the king, but, demanding extravagant prices for his pictures, he did not receive many commissions, was arrested for debt, and only released through the generosity of some brother artists. When Sir William Scames was sent on an embassy to Constantinople by James II., Vorstermans proposed to accompany him, but Sir William dying en route, the painter accepted an invitation to go to Poland with the Marquis of Bethune, and there, it is believed, he died in 1699. There is a small landscape by him in the Dresden Gallery.

VÖRTEL, WILHELM, painter, was born at Leipsic in 1793, and learnt glass-painting from the elder Mohn. Interrupted in his studies by a term of military service on which he entered in 1813, he resumed them on his release, acquired the elements of landscape painting in Dresden, and in 1817 accompanied the younger Mohn to Vienna, and was engaged in painting windows at Laxenburg. On his return to Dresden he was commissioned by the brothers Boisserée to reproduce upon glass various works after the early German and Flemish masters, Meister Wilhelm, Jan van Eyck, Memling, and Van der Goes. Vörtel further painted upon glass Raphael's Madonna di San Sisto, and Murillo's Madonna in the Leuchtenberg Gallery, and executed windows for castles and private chapels in Hanover, Meiningen, etc. He died at Dresden in 1844.

VÖSCHER, LEOPOLD HEINRICH, landscape painter, was born at Vienna in 1830. He was a pupil of the landscape painter Hansch, and sought subjects for his art in Switzerland, Italy, and the romantic mountain districts of his own country. In 1864 he settled in Munich, where he practised successfully for some years. He excelled in the treatment of aerial perspective and effects of light and shade. He died insane in 1877, at Vienna.

VOSTRE, SIMON, the famous French printer and publisher of 'Livres d'Heures,' who flourished about 1488—1520, is supposed by some authorities to have been the designer and engraver, as well as the publisher, of his illustrations. These consisted of prints in the manière criblée (dotted white), and are generally considered to be impressions from wood, though certain experts hold that they were engraved from metal. For a full discussion of the technical points involved, see Willshire's 'Introduction to Ancient Prints,' vol. i., London, 1877, and Renouvier, 'Des Gravures sur Bois dans les Livres de Simon Vostre,' Paris, 1862.

VOUET, AUBIN, brother and pupil of Simon, born in Paris in 1599, was a mediocre artist, who, after studying with his brother in Italy, practised in Paris, chiefly as a decorative painter. He died in Paris, May 1, 1641. Examples of his work are in the Lyons and Nantes Museums. A younger brother, CLAUDE, was also a pupil of Simon at Rome, and returned with him to Paris. No further particulars concerning him are known.

VOUET, JACQUES, the son and pupil of Simon, was painter to the maîtrise, was received by the Academy in 1664, and was employed on decorative work in the Tuileries, in conjunction with Mosnier, Corneille the younger, and Bonnemer. No further details concerning him have survived.

VOUET, SIMON, a French historical painter, born in Paris in 1590. His father, an obscure artist named LAURENT VOUET, was his first teacher. Under this tuition he made considerable progress, for at the age of fourteen he paid a visit to England, practising as a portrait painter. In 1611 he accompanied the French Ambassador to Constantinople, where he distinguished himself by painting from memory a portrait of the Sultan, whom he had seen but once. Towards the close of the following year he made his way to Venice, and devoted himself to copying the works of the great Venetian colourists. Settling at Rome in 1613, his studies were influenced successively by Caravaggio and by Guido. He rapidly acquired a reputation, so that in 1620 he was summoned to Genoa on a commission to decorate the palace of the Doria family. On his return to Rome he was fortunate enough to find patrons in Pope Urban VIII. and the powerful Barberini entourage. Thus patronized, he secured a position in the front rank of the Roman art-world, and in 1624 was elected Prince of the Academy of St. Luke. About this time he married. His wife, VIRGINIA DI VEZZO VELLATRANO, was, like himself, an artist. In 1627 he was summoned to France by Louis XIII. to occupy a position even more prominent than that which he had filled at Rome. He was appointed principal painter to the king, was assigned apartments in the Louvre, and was granted an ample pension. The royal commissions came thickly upon him. He was engaged in the palaces of the Luxembourg, the Louvre, and St. Germain, and by Richelieu at the Château de Rueil. So great a favourite was he with Louis XIII. that the king became his art-pupil. The royal favour brought that of the nobility in its train, and so supreme did Vouet become, that when Nicolas Poussin visited France in 1640, he found himself unable to cope with the rival influence—not always fairly exercised, it was said. Vouet's first wife died in 1638, and two years later he remarried, Le Sueur being one of the witnesses of the ceremony. The closing years of his life were clouded by much physical suffering, and he died in Paris in 1649. Vouet's merits are most apparent in the works of his Italian period. His art was marred by success. The multitude of his commissions led to mannerism, and to those constant repetitions with which the eye is wearied. Over the French school he exercised a despotic influence in his time, similar to that subsequently wielded by Le Brun and David. Most of the artists of the succeeding generation passed through his studio, amongst them Le Sueur, Le Brun, P. Mignard, J. B. Mola, and Dufresnoy. There is an etching by him, a 'Holy Family,' dated 1633. The following is a list of Vouet's pictures in the chief European collections:

Avignon.	Museum.	Mater Dolorosa.
Dresden.	Gallery.	St. Louis.

VOUILLEMONT, SEBASTIEN, a French engraver, was born at Bar-sur-Aube, about 1610. He was a pupil of Daniel Rabel, and afterwards went to Rome, where he studied under Cornelis Bloemart. He engraved after the Italian masters, as well as after his own designs and those of Rabel, his master. He has left one hundred and forty-five plates. The following are among the best:

- The Murder of the Innocents; after Raphael. 1641.
- Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus; after the same.
- Mount Parnassus; after the same.
- The Holy Family; after the same.
- The Virgin and Infant Christ; after Parmigiano.
- The Marriage of St. Catherine; after Albani.
- A young Man presenting Money to a Fortune-teller.

VOULLEMIER, M<sup>LE</sup>. ANNE NICOLE, a French artist, born at Châtillon-sur-Seine in 1796, was a pupil of Regnault and of Aubry. She gained medals of the third and second class, and exhibited a large number of miniatures at the Salon between 1819 and 1850. She died in 1886.

VOYEZ, NICHOLAS JOSEPH, was born at Abbeville in 1742. He went to Paris when very young, and became a pupil of Beauvarlet, his fellow-citizen. He engraved vignettes for Marmontel's 'Contes' and for 'L'Indigent,' a drama of Mercier's; also a series of 'Têtes d'Expression' after Le Brun, which he afterwards transformed into a set of 'Figures Républicaines.' Among his plates we may name the following:

- Louis XVI.; engraved in 1785.
- Marie Antoinette, Queen of France.
- Marie Adelaide Clotilde Xavière, of France.
- Prince Henry of Prussia.
- The Sister of Charity; after Eisen.
- Funeral of St. Gregory; after Van Loo.
- Angelica and Medoro; after Blanchard.
- The Astrologer; after G. Dau.
- An old Man in meditation; after the same.

His brother FRANÇOIS VOYEZ, also an engraver, was born in 1746. He, too, was a pupil of Beauvarlet, and engraved after Greuze, Touzé, Bon de Boullongne, and others. Several plates signed Voyez only are ascribed to Nicholas.

WILLEM, a miniaturist of the 15th century, who was cotemporary with Memling, at Bruges. In 1477 he took a prominent part in commissioning Memling to paint an altar-piece for the chapel of the Booksellers' Guild, in which body Vrelandt held a position of trust. An inventory of 1499 describes this work as 'an altar-table with four wings, by Master Hans, including the portraits of Willem Vreland and his wife.' Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle ('Early Flemish Painters') suggest that the altar-piece in the Turin Gallery, 'The Seven Griefs of Mary,' may be identical with this. Vrelandt is further known as the illuminator of the MS. 'Histoires de Haynaut' (Brussels, 'Bibliothèque de Bourgogne,' 2 vols.). He died in 1481.

VROMANS, NICOLAAS, was born in Holland about 1660. He was called 'The Snake Painter,' from his partiality for painting serpents and other reptiles. He also painted all sorts of wild plants, briars, and creepers, among which he placed toads, frogs, mice, moths, worms, spiders in their webs, birds' nests, and other objects. His pictures are rare in England. He died about 1719.

VROOM, HENDRIK CORNELISZ, was born at Haarlem in 1566. He was the son of a sculptor and potter, who died when he was still very young, and his mother having afterwards married Cornelis Henricksen, a painter on china, he was by him taught the rudiments of design. He at first painted views of towns, and resided some time at Rotterdam. He afterwards visited Spain and Italy, and during a stay of two years at Rome, was employed by the Cardinal de' Medici, and became acquainted with Paul Bril, whose advice and assistance were of great service to him. On leaving Rome he visited Milan, Genoa, Turin, Venice, and Paris, and then returned to Haarlem. There he painted many small devotional subjects, which he purposed to dispose of in Spain, and with that intention embarked a second time for Seville. Being shipwrecked, however, on the coast of Portugal, he lived there for a time and painted sea-pieces. On his return to Holland he applied himself entirely to that branch of painting. About this time Lord Nottingham ordered the famous suit of tapestries, representing the defeat of the Spanish Armada, of Frans Spiering, who employed Vroom to make the designs. This necessitated a visit to England, during which Isaac Oliver painted his portrait. Vroom returned to Haarlem, where he died in 1640. The tapestries from his design were burnt in 1834, with the Houses of Parliament. They are engraved in a work by John Pine, published in 1739. Works:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Admiral Heemskerck sinking the Spanish Galleons. 1617.
"	"	Return of the vessel in which Houtman made his first voyage to India.
"	"	View of Amsterdam and the Y.

"	"	Harbour of Amsterdam.
"	"	Taking of Damietta.
Haarlem.	Museum.	Arrival of the Earl of Leicester at Flushing, in 1586.

He left two sons, of whom CORNELIS, who died in 1661, was a landscape painter, and FREDERIK, who died in 1667, an historical painter and architect.

VUEZ, ARNOULD DE, (WUEZ, D'HUEZ, DUEZ,) an historical painter, was born at Hautpont, near St. Omer, in 1642. He was apprenticed to a painter at St. Omer, and afterwards entered the school of the Franciscan, Brother Lucas, in Paris. Three years later he proceeded to Venice and Rome. There he won the first prize at the Academy, and copied Raphael's 'School of Athens.' He was afterwards invited by Le Brun to assist him at Paris and Versailles. Having killed an officer in a duel, he fled to Constantinople, but under the protection of Louvois he ventured back to Lille, to paint in the Hospital chapel. He died at Lille in 1719 or 1720. His works used to be numerous in the religious establishments at Lille, Cambrai, and Douay. A great many have now been gathered into the Lille Museum. They are rich in composition, full of architecture, but bad in colour.

VUIBERT, REMI, (or WIBERT,) a French painter and engraver, was born (in Paris or Troyes) about 1607, and is supposed to have been a scholar of Simon Vouet. He probably worked from 1639 to 1643 in Paris, and then resided for a considerable time at Rome, and died there. He was on intimate terms of friendship with N. Poussin, who speaks of him in his correspondence with M. de Chanteloup. His works as a painter are little known, but he etched twenty-nine plates after Italian painters (including eighteen after Raphael), as well as some from his own designs. The dates on them range from 1635 to 1663. We may name the following :

Adam receiving the forbidden Fruit from Eve; after Raphael.

The Judgment of Solomon; after the same.

Apollo and Marsyas; after the same.

The Descent from the Cross; after N. Poussin.

The Cure of one possessed of a Devil; from his own design.

St. Andrew; after the statue by Duquesnoy. 1629.

VULPE, Fra GARRIELE DE, was living at Palermo in the 16th century, and is the author of a painting of the 'Virgin and Child, with Angels, and SS. Peter, John Baptist, Roch, and Sebastian, and a donor,' which is now in the vestibule to the sacristy of San Domenico, Palermo; it is dated 1535.

WAAGEN, FRIEDRICH LUDWIG HEINRICH, was born at Göttingen in the middle of the 18th century, was a student under Ferdinand Kobell, and, in 1780, went for a term to Rome. He afterwards practised in Hamburg, where he started an academy for drawing and painting. His works consisted of portraits, historical subjects, and landscapes, in the style of Poussin.

WAAGEN, KARL, probably a son of Friedrich L. H. Waagen, was born at Hamburg about 1800. He studied at Dresden and Prague, and then settled at Breslau as a miniature-portrait painter and picture restorer. After a visit to Italy, where he painted landscapes, he became a lithographer for a time, but finally returned to portrait painting. He died in 1873.

WAAS, AART VAN, (or WAES,) was a native of Gouda, and scholar of Wouter Crabeth. After a tour in Italy, he returned to Gouda, where he painted genre pictures, and died in 1646, according to Balkema; in 1650, says Immerzeel. This is all we know of his life; but in Hazard's catalogue of prints nine grotesque subjects are attributed to him both as painter and engraver. One of these represents a painter, disgusted with his art, "qui fait ses ordures sur la palette et les pinceaux." At the bottom of the print is inscribed "Om dat ick door de konst, &c. 1645."

WABBE, JAKOB, painter, flourished at Hoorn in the early part of the 17th century, and is known by various portraits and historical works, among the most important of which were four scenes from the life of Joseph, for the hospital at Hoorn.

WACH, KARL WILHELM, a German historical and portrait painter, born at Berlin in 1787. He was a pupil of Kretschmar, but his studies were interrupted by the war of independence in 1813, in which he took part as an officer of landwehr. At the peace, he spent some time in Paris, studying under David and Gros, and in 1817 went to Italy, where he joined the neo-German group. On settling in Berlin in 1819, Wach opened an atelier, and acquired great vogue as a teacher. He had also a large practice as a portrait painter, and devoted much attention to the chemistry of colours and varnishes. He became a member and professor of the Berlin Academy. He died in Berlin, November 25, 1845. There are by him :

WACHSMUTH, FERDINAND, painter and etcher, was born at Mühlhausen in 1802. He studied in Paris under Gros, and then travelled in Algeria in quest of subjects for genre pictures. He was professor at the school of St. Cyr, and obtained a second-class medal in 1833. He died in 1869. He engraved after Wouwerman 'A Halt of Huntsmen.' The Museums of Amiens, Avignon, and Versailles possess examples of his work, in history, genre, and portraiture.

WACHSMUTH, HIERONYMUS, was a German engraver of the 18th century, who resided chiefly at Vienna. He engraved, among other plates, the 'Elements' and the 'Seasons,' from his own designs, and seems to have been a humble imitator of Bernard Picart.

WÄCHTER, EBERHARD GEORG FRIEDRICH VON, painter, was born at Balingen in Württemberg, Feb. 29th, 1762. He was educated at the 'Karls-Schule,' at Stuttgart, where he studied jurisprudence, with the intention of devoting himself to the law, but in 1778 he abandoned this idea, and going to Paris, entered David's atelier. He there became an ardent believer in the classicism which the French master had brought into vogue. When the events of the Revolution, however, drove him away to Rome, he came under the influence of Carstens, which, combined with the example of the great Italians, caused a vast change in his artistic predilections. He embraced the Roman Catholic faith, and after his return to Germany, his art had little in common with that of the French school. He strove after ideality of conception, often to the loss of vigour in execution. He worked for some time in Vienna, and later in Stuttgart, receiving many important commissions, and leaving his mark upon the generation of artists which succeeded him. He died, August 14th, 1852, at Stuttgart. Pictures :

WADDINGTON, S—, an English landscape painter, was born in 1736 (?). He painted some good landscapes in the style of Claude, but died at the age of twenty-two, in 1758.

WAEGEMAN, HEINRICH, was born, according to Füssli, at Zurich, in 1536. He was little known as a painter, but some of his drawings, in the style of Paolo Farinato, have been preserved.

WAESBERGE, IZAAK, was a Dutch engraver, who flourished from about 1650 till 1660. We have by him several portraits, engraved in a style resembling that of Cornelis Visscher; among them that of Admiral de Ruyter, after H. Berckmans.

WAGEMAN, THOMAS CHARLES, an English portrait painter, was born in 1787. He had a large practice in theatrical portraits, and exhibited at the Academy and in Suffolk Street, from 1816 to 1857. He died in 1863. There are by him :

London.	Kensington Mus.	Portrait of T. Stothard.
"	"	Fawcett as Autolycus. 1828.

WAGENBAUER, MAXIMILIAN JOSEPH, landscape and animal painter, was born at Gräding, near Munich, in 1774. He was a pupil of the elder Dorner, and served in the Napoleonic wars. King Max I. created him court painter, and, in 1815, director of the gallery. His death occurred at Munich, May 12, 1829. Works:

Berlin.	Nat. Gall.	Mountain Tarn in Bavaria. Cattle at Pasture.
Munich.	N. Pinakothek.	Landscape, with a young Ox.
"	"	Evening Landscape, with Figures and Cattle.
"	"	Morning Landscape, with Figures and Cattle.

WAGGONER, —. In Painters' Hall, London, there is a picture of the 'Great Fire,' by a painter of this name. The Society of Antiquaries possesses another, which is engraved in Pennant's 'London.'

WAGNER, ALBERT, was born at Stuttgart in 1816. He studied at the Stuttgart school of art, and afterwards at Munich. He painted mountain landscapes, and has also left some lithographic views. He died at Stuttgart in 1867.

WAGNER, EDMUND, son and pupil of the engraver Friedrich Wagner, was born at Nuremberg in 1830. He attended the Academy at Antwerp for some considerable time, and visited England, after which he returned with his father to Munich. He was a successful painter of dogs and game. He lost his life near Munich in 1859, through the accidental discharge of his gun.

WAGNER, FRIEDRICH, engraver, was born at Nuremberg, May 24, 1803. After a thorough grounding in the technicalities of his art under Reindel, at Nuremberg, he completed his education in Paris, and returning to Germany, found employment on such works as small engravings for pocket-books. In 1833 he was commissioned by the Albrecht Dürer Society to engrave Guido Reni's 'S. John in the Desert.' Other undertakings were plates in illustration of Nuremberg sculpture in the Middle Ages, and of Swabian monuments of the Middle Ages, and the Atlas of Plates for Kugler's 'Kunstgeschichte.' In 1852 he settled at Stuttgart, but afterwards moved to Munich, where he died in April, 1876. His plates are very numerous; the following are perhaps the best:

Leonardo da Vinci's Last Supper; a copy after Morghen.
Noah; after Oppenheim.
Hieronymus Holzschuher; after Dürer.
Sakuntala; after Riedel.
S. Sebastian; after Carlo Dolce.
The Cherry-Seller; after Kreul.
The Banquet in honour of the Peace of Westphalia; after Sandrart.
The Descent from the Cross; after Rubens.
Ecce Homo; after Dürer.
Dürer's Portrait of himself.
The Madonna della Tenda; after Raphael.

WAGNER, HANS. See Suess.

WAGNER, HANS ERHARD, was, according to Professor Christ, a native of Strasburg, and engraved a considerable number of copper-plates, which were printed by Johann Heyden. He flourished about 1690.

WAGNER, JACOB, was probably of the same family with Hans Erhard Wagner. He is said by Professor Christ to have inscribed his prints, J. Wa. fec.

WAGNER, JOHANN GEORG, son of an indifferent painter, JOHANN JAKOB WAGNER, was born at Meissen in 1732, and was a scholar of Dietrich, who was his uncle. He painted landscapes with pastoral subjects, nymphs bathing, and other Arcadian relaxations, the picturesque scenery on the borders of the Meuse, and also maritime compositions. His pictures have been frequently sold in England as the works of Dietrich. He died in 1766. He is sometimes called 'the younger,' to distinguish him from another now forgotten painter of the same name, who flourished a century earlier.

WAGNER, JOHANN MARTIN, painter and sculptor, was born at Würzburg in 1777. His father, who was sculptor to the court, gave him his first teaching, but in 1797 he placed himself under Figer at the Vienna Academy, where he gained the first prize in 1802 for 'Æneas inquiring of Venus the road to Carthage.' In 1803 he went to Paris, and in 1804 to Rome. During a long stay in the latter city and a tour in Greece, he acquired a profound knowledge of classic antiquity. While in Greece, he effected the purchase of the Æginetan marbles, now in the Munich Glyptothek. He died at Rome in 1858.

WAGNER, JOSEPH, draughtsman and engraver, was born at Thalendorf, on Lake Constance, in 1706. He studied painting at Venice under Jacopo Amigoni, who persuaded him to turn his thoughts to engraving, in which he had Späth for his master. He accompanied Amigoni to Rome and Bologna, and in 1733 to England. He afterwards went to Paris, to study engraving under Laurent Cars. He then made a second stay in England, where his first productions were portraits of the three princesses, Anne, Amelia, and Caroline, the daughters of George II. He engraved several other plates in this country, but returned to Venice, where he opened a school and also carried on a considerable business as a printseller. He died at Munich in 1780. His prints are very numerous, and among his scholars were Bartolozzi, Flipart, and Berardi. The following are perhaps his best prints:

Peter the Great, Emperor of Russia, conducted by Minerva; after Amigoni.
Anne, Empress of Russia. Do.
Elizabeth Petrowna, Empress of Russia. Do.
Carlo Brosci, called Farielli, Musician. Do.
The Education of the Virgin. Do.
The Infant Christ sleeping. Do.
The Holy Family; after Paolo Veronese.
The Meeting of Jacob and Rachel; after Luca Giordano.
Rebekah and Eliezer; after the same.
The Death of Abel; after Benedetto Luti.
The Magdalen in the House of Simon; after the same.
The Virgins and Infant Christ; after Solimena.
The Assumption of the Virgin; after Piazzetta.
S. John in the Desert; after C. van Loo.
Twelve Landscapes and Pastoral subjects; after Zuc-carelli; engraved by Wagner and his pupils.

WAGNER, KARL, painter and etcher, was born at Rossdorf near Meiningen in 1796. From 1817 to 1820 he studied at Dresden; from 1821 to 1825 he travelled in Switzerland, the Tyrol, and Italy. On his return he was appointed painter to the court and inspector of the Gallery, at Meiningen, and took to painting landscapes in oil and water-colour, and to etching. He died at Meiningen in 1867.

WAGNER, LUDWIG CHRISTIAN, painter and etcher, was born at Wetzlar in 1799, and at first brought up to trade. In 1830 he devoted himself, under Radl, to landscape painting, travelled the following year in Italy, and in 1835 settled down to further study at Düsseldorf, choosing Ruysdael as his chief model. He died at Wetzlar in 1839. He excelled in painting forest trees, especially the oak. He has left thirteen etched plates.

WAGNER, MARIA DOROTHEA, sister of C. W. E. Dietrich, and mother of Johann Georg Wagner, was born about 1728, and died at Meissen in 1788. She painted landscapes and historical subjects in oil and gouache.

WAGNER, OTTO, painter, etcher, and lithographer, was born at Torgau in 1803. He studied in the Dresden Academy, and under the scene painter Jentsch, and afterwards travelled in South Germany, Switzerland, and (1830) Italy. He painted landscapes, with groups of figures. He etched and lithographed a few plates, and painted some scenes for the Dresden court theatre. He died at Dresden in 1861.

WAGNER, SIMON, was born at Stralsund in 1799. He studied at Dresden, where he continued to live till his early death in 1829. He at first painted scenes from the lives of soldiers, hunters, and peasants, and was very successful to a certain point, but want and sickness marred the full perfection of his work. Shortly before his death he produced 'Seven Scenes from the Life of Albrecht Dürer,' which excited warm admiration.

WAGNER-DEINES, JOHANN, was born at Hanau in 1803, studied in Berlin and Munich, and devoted himself to animal and landscape painting, taking the works of Paul Potter and Adrian van de Velde for his models. He died in 1880.

WAHLBOM, JOHANN WILHELM CARL, a Swedish painter and draughtsman, born at Calmar in 1810. He began his career as a sculptor, and had achieved some success, when he abandoned his first profession for painting. Taking Winterhalter for his model, he produced a number of somewhat theatrical and exaggerated works, both in history and portraiture. He was more pleasing as a draughtsman, his most important achievement being a series of drawings from Swedish history. His 'Death of Gustavus Adolphus' is now in the Castle at Stockholm. He died in London in 1858.

WAINWRIGHT, THOMAS GRIFFITH, an English subject painter, was born towards the close of the 18th century. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1821 to 1825, and wrote some art criticisms for the 'London Magazine' under the name of Janus Weathercock. His misdeeds procured him an unenviable notoriety. He married secretly, and subsequently insured the life of his wife's sister. She died suddenly, and the suspicion of having poisoned her falling upon him, the insurance company resisted his claim. He was afterwards transported for forgery, and died at Hobart Town in 1852.

WAIT, ROBERT, a Scotch portrait painter, born in the latter part of the 17th century. His art training was obtained from George Scougall and from Kneller. He had a good practice till he died, in 1732.

WAKKERDAK, P. A., is noted by Strutt as the name affixed to a portrait of Kenou Simons Hassalaer. The same artist engraved in mezzotint a landscape after Jan Asselyn, showing a cavern with ruins near it, and peasants at the entrance.

WALBURG, —, is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a portrait of John Frederick Gronovius, from a design of his own.

WALCH, GEORG, a German engraver, who flourished in the second half of the 17th century (1650-78). He appears to have been chiefly employed in engraving portraits in line, but he also worked in mezzotint.

WALCH, JACOB. See BARBARJ, JACOPO DE'.

WALCH, JOHANN, painter, born about 1757, was a native of Kempten. He eventually settled at Augsburg after studying at Geneva, Vienna, and Rome. He painted miniature portraits in water-colour, and also carried on a business in maps. A miniature of the Archduke Anton by him is in the Fischer Collection at Vienna. He died in 1816.

WALCH, JOHANN SEBASTIAN, son of Johann Walch, was born at Augsburg (?) in 1787. He painted portraits in oil and miniatures, but afterwards took to glass-painting, and restored the windows in Augsburg cathedral. He died in 1840.

WALCH, SEBASTIAN, an amateur engraver, who lived about 1750. He was a native of Switzerland, and scraped a series of portraits of the burgo-masters of Zurich from 1336 to 1740, from drawings by J. C. Füssli.

WALDECK, JOHANN FRIEDRICH MAXIMILIAN, was born at Vienna in 1766, and studied in Paris under Vien, David, and Prud'hon. In 1785 he took part in a voyage of discovery to South Africa, and in 1794 entered the French army in Italy as a volunteer. Subsequently he went a second time to South Africa, and in 1819 to Chili and Guatemala. Three years later he was in London, where he designed the illustrations to Del Roó's work on 'The Ruins of Palenque.' In 1866, when a hundred years of age, he painted two pictures, dealing, the one with Grecian and Roman antiquities, the other with Mexican. He died in Paris in his one hundred and tenth year, in 1875.

WALDMÜLLER, FERDINAND GEORG, painter, was born in Vienna in 1793. His parents wished him to enter the Church, and disinherited him when he persisted in following his natural disposition. He studied under Lampi and Maurer, at the Academy, and earned a living at the same time by making drawings for bonbon boxes. When he had only half-completed his education, he obtained a place as drawing-master to Count Gynlai, in Agram. He married an actress there, and travelled with her in the provinces until she obtained an engagement at Vienna. He first practised as a portrait painter, imitating the style of Lawrence, but afterwards devoted himself to genre. At Vienna he obtained the post of curator to the Lamberg Gallery, in the Academy. He died at Vienna in 1865. Works:

A Village School. ( Berlin, National Gallery. )
The Convent Supper. ( Vienna Academy. )
The Tramp Family.	Christmas Morning.
The Peasant's Return.	Sunday Afternoon.
The Dog and the Grapes.	'Christmas-Box-ing.'

WALDO, SAMUEL, a native of Connecticut, U.S.A., was born in 1783, and after some preliminary study in America, came to London in 1806, and practised for three years as a portrait painter. Returning to America, he then settled in New York, where he worked successfully until his death in 1861. In the City Hall at New York there are several portraits of ex-mayors of the city by him, and the New York Historical Society owns his picture of Peter Remsen.

WALDOR. See VALDOR.

WALDORP, ANTOINE, was born at Huis-ten-Bosch, near the Hague, in 1803, and worked as a scene-painter under Brickenheimer. Later on he painted views of towns, harbours, churches, and so forth, with domestic scenes and portraits. Later still he devoted himself exclusively to the painting of calm and stormy seas. He died at Amsterdam, October 12, 1866. Among his paintings we may mention :

Amsterdam. R. Museum. Still Water with Shipping.
 Rotterdam. Museum. The Escape of Grotius from Loevestein.

WALDRÉ, VINCENT, an Italian decorative painter, was born at Vicenza early in the 18th century. Coming to England, he was patronized by the Marquis of Buckingham, for whom he worked at Stowe. On his patron becoming Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1787), he had a commission to decorate St. Patrick's Hall, Dublin, and was made architect to the Irish Board of Works. He settled and married in Ireland, and died at Dublin towards the end of the century, aged 72.

WALE, SAMUEL, was born in London, (or at Yarmouth,) and was brought up as an engraver on plate. He afterwards studied in the St. Martin's Lane Academy, and practised decorative painting in the manner of Francis Hayman. But his chief employment was designing for the booksellers. He understood architecture and perspective, and assisted Gwynn in his well-known drawing of a section of St. Paul's, decorated according to Sir C. Wren's intention. He also made drawings for an edition of Izaak Walton's 'Angler,' and for 'London and its Environs.' At the establishment of the Royal Academy, Wale was chosen a foundation member, and appointed first professor of perspective. Upon the death of Wilson, he was also made librarian, and he retained both these places till his death, which took place in London in 1786. He had been an exhibitor from 1769 to 1778, and was the first member to share in the benefits of the Academy pension fund. It has been suggested that he was the author of a well-known view of the Stocks Market, which now belongs to Mr. Graves. We have a few original etched vignettes by him. There are pictures by him in Bethlehem, Christ's, the Foundling, and St. Thomas's hospitals.

WALE, JAMES, was born at Peterhead, Aberdeenshire, in 1748, of respectable parents. He showed his genius for drawing at an early age, and was educated at the Marischal College of Aberdeen. He exhibited portraits at the Royal Academy in 1778 and the following years. In 1791 he went to India, where he painted many excellent portraits. He began the picture of the Mahratta Durbar, which was afterwards completed and engraved by Thomas Daniell, R.A. He made twenty-four drawings from the Caves of Ellora, which, with the plans, were engraved and published after his death by Thomas Daniell, in his work on Hindoo Excavations (1803). Wale died at Salseth on the Malabar coast in 1796. He left some portraits of Indian princes and their ministers, which passed into the possession of Sir Alexander Malet, of Wilbury House, in Wiltshire.

WALESCART, JAN. See VALESCART.

WALKER, ANTHONY, an English draughtsman and engraver, was born, probably at Salisbury, in 1726. He studied engraving in London under John Tinney, and at the St. Martin's Lane Academy. He was long employed in engraving frontispieces and vignettes, from his own designs, for the booksellers. Some of these are not destitute of merit, though rather heavy and dark. The figures in Woollett's 'Niebe' were by him, also five original illustrations to 'Romeo and Juliet.' He engraved several plates for Boydell, among them the following :

Curius Dentatus refusing the presents of the Samnites; after Pietro da Cortona.

The Village Lawyer and his Clients; after Holbein.

The Angel departing from the House of Tobit; after

Rembrandt (exhibited at Spring Gardens, 1765).

View of the City of Worcester; after J. B. C. Chatelain.

View of Lord Harrington's Park; after the same.

He died in London in 1765.

WALKER, ELIZABETH, an English miniature painter, was born in London in 1800. She was the daughter of S. W. Reynolds, the mezzotinter, and married the Scottish engraver, W. Walker. She studied engraving under T. G. Lupton, but, after producing several plates, among others her own portrait after Opie, she devoted herself to miniatures, receiving instruction from G. Clint. Obtaining a good practice, she was appointed miniature painter to William IV., and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1818 to 1850. After a long career, she died in London in 1876. There is by her :

Oxford. Christ Church. Portrait of the Earl of Devon.

WALKER, FREDERICK, was born in Marylebone, May 24, 1840. He began his studies in the British Museum, and for a time worked under an architect called Baker. Leaving him, he returned to the British Museum, and entered himself at Leigh's, in Newinan Street. It was not long, however, before he made his way into the Royal Academy Schools. While a student he had already begun to draw on wood, and had placed himself with Mr. J. W. Whymper in order to learn the requirements of the art. He won employment on the new defunct periodical, 'Once a Week,' which did so much in a quiet way for the more retired walks of English art, and getting an introduction to Thackeray, he was engaged to make drawings for the 'Cornhill Magazine.' He also worked for 'Good Words,' 'Sunday at Home,' and other prints of the same kind. In 1864 he was elected an Associate of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, and in 1866 a full member. In 1867 he won a medal for his water-colour drawings at the Paris Exhibition. In 1871, when still a member of the Water-Colour Society, he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, by which a much required precedent was set. Never robust in health, he began to show signs of the end soon after his election into the Academy. A winter in Algiers did him little good, and on the 5th June, 1875, he died at St. Fillan's, Perthshire. He was buried in Cookham church, the centre of his favourite district, and there his friends and brother artists erected a tablet to his memory. Frederick Walker's art has had an enormous effect upon his younger contemporaries, and the broad characteristics of a large proportion of the pictures painted in England between 1875 and the present date (1888), are due to his example. More almost than any other painter of similar rank did he depend on 'feeling' for success. As a colourist he improved till the end, but as a draughtsman he was more proficient in his earlier than in his later years. As a composer, too, in line, he left much to desire; but whatever theme he selected for treatment, he clothed it with a pathetic beauty, to which humanity and inanimate nature had each to contribute its share. He showed curious skill in combining rusticity with grace in his peasants. As a technical painter, he displayed more power in water-colour than in oil, and it is among the workers in the former medium that his influence has chiefly worked for good. His subjects were frequently taken from the literature of his time, but in many instances they were of his own invention, and in others they were idealized portraits of actual places. Among his best works in each medium we may name :

WATER-COLOURS.

Philip in Church.	The Fairy.
The Fishmonger's Shop.	High Street, Cookham.
Marlow Ferry.	Portrait of himself.
Our Village.	Mushrooms.
The New Boy.	The Chaplain's Daughter.
Well-sinkers.

Water-colour replicas of nearly all the oil pictures mentioned below.

WALKER, GEORGE, an English painter, was born in the first half of the 18th century. Many of his works were engraved by W. Byrne. He exhibited landscapes at the Royal Academy from 1792 to 1795, and is believed to have died soon after the latter year. There is a water-colour drawing by him of Deptford in the South Kensington Museum.

WALKER, JAMES, an English mezzotint engraver, was born in 1748. He studied under Valentine Green, and soon acquired a reputation by his portrait plates, especially by those after Romney. In 1784 he went to St. Petersburg as engraver to the Empress Catherine, and was engaged for some years on various important works. Returning to England in 1802, with a pension, he lost his plates by shipwreck on the way. Redgrave states that he died about 1808, but his death more probably did not occur till after 1819. The following are among his best plates :

Mrs. Musters; after Romney. 1780.
Countess of Carlisle. Do. 1781.
Miss Woodley. Do. 1781.
Master Tempest. Do. 1781.
Lady Isabella Hamilton. Do. 1782.
Sir Hyde Parker. Do.
The Fair Persian; after M. Cosway. 1784.
Dr. Robertson; after Reynolds.
The Infant Hercules; after the same.
Woman teaching Child to read; after Rembrandt. 1792.
Ariosto; after Titian. 1819.

WALKER, JOHN, engraver, was the son of William Walker (of Thirsk). He practised in London towards the close of the 18th century, finishing many of his father's plates after the latter's death. He also engraved some views which were published in the 'New Copper-plate Magazine' in 1794-6.

WALKER, J. RAWSON, an English landscape painter, born in the latter part of the 18th century. He had a good practice at Nottingham, and exhibited occasionally at the Royal Academy, at the British Institution, and at Suffolk Street from 1817 to 1865. His art inclined to the poetic school of landscape painting.

WALKER, ROBERT, an English portrait painter and contemporary of Van Dyck, who formed his style, apparently, by study from the works of that master. He did not, however, attract much notice until the time of Cromwell, whose portrait and those of other republican chiefs he painted. He painted the Protector more than once. One portrait represents him with a gold chain about his neck, which had been sent to Cromwell by Christina of Sweden, in return for his miniature by Cooper. Another was purchased for the Grand Duke of Tuscany, whose agent, meeting with one in the hands of a female relation of the Protector, and offering to purchase it, was asked five hundred pounds, and paid it. Walker had for some time an apartment in Arundel House, in the Strand. It is stated on an engraved portrait of him by Peter Lambart that he died there in 1658. His own portrait, by himself, is in the picture gallery at Oxford; another at Hampton Court is the original of Lambart's plate. We may also name :

London.	N. Port. Gal.	Oliver Cromwell.
"	"	Henry Ireton.
"	"	John Lambert.
"	"	William Faithorne.

WALKER, WILLIAM, an English landscape painter in water-colours, was born at Hackney in 1780. He studied under R. Smirke, and in 1803 paid a visit to Greece. The immediate fruit of this voyage was the publication of 'Six Picturesque Views of Greece,' but it also influenced his choice of subjects, which were chiefly taken from the Mediterranean and the East. He joined the Associated Artists in Water-Colours in 1808, and in 1820 was elected an associate of the Old Water-Colour Society, where he exhibited down to 1836, as well as at the Royal Academy. He died at Sawbridgeworth, September 2, 1863. There is a water-colour drawing, 'The Market Woman,' by him in the South Kensington Museum.

WALKER, WILLIAM, a Scottish engraver, was born in Midlothian in 1793, and studied his art in Edinburgh, under John Mitchell. In 1816 he came to London, and practised stipple under T. Woolnoth, and mezzotint under Thomas Lupton. In 1819 he returned to Scotland, where he engraved some fine plates in stipple after Sir Henry Raeburn. Among these were portraits of Sir Walter Scott and of the painter himself, for which he, Walker, had given Raeburn commissions. He also commissioned Sir Thomas Lawrence to paint a portrait of Lord Brongham, from which he made another excellent plate. In 1832 he settled in London, where he died on the 7th September, 1867. His wife was Elizabeth Walker, q. v. He published his own plates; beside those already mentioned we may name :

The Passing of the Reform Bill.
Reformers at the Diet of Spire; after Cattermole. 1847.
Caxton and Edward IV.; after Macclise.
The Aberdeen Cabinet. 1857.
Distinguished Men of Science living in Great Britain in 1807.

WALKER, WILLIAM, brother of Anthony Walker, was born at Thirsk in 1729, and after serving an apprenticeship to a dyer, came to London and was instructed in art by his brother. He worked for nearly thirty years as an illustrator of periodicals, and was also much employed by Boydell. The process of re-biting was a discovery of his. He died in Clerkenwell, February 18, 1793. Among others, we have the following prints by him :

The Family of Sir Balthazar Gerbier ; after Van Dyck.
 Diano and Calisto ; after F. Le Moyne.
 The Power of Beauty ; after Fil. Lauri.

WALL, JOHN, a physician and amateur painter, was born at Powick, Worcestershire, in 1708. He was educated at Oxford, and became eminent as a physician and experimental chemist in Worcester. He had a hand in the establishment of the Royal Worcester Porcelain Factory, and as a painter he made some cartoons for windows. One of these is in the chapel of the Bishop's palace at Hartlebury. Dr. Wall died at Worcester in 1783.

WALL, W. R. VAN DER. See VAN DER WALL.

WALLACE, WILLIAM, a Scottish portrait painter, was born at Falkirk in 1801. For some years he practised in Edinburgh, but in 1833 settled in Glasgow. He died in 1866. There is by him :

Edinburgh. Nat. Gall. Portrait of Thomson of Duddingston.

WALLAERT, PIERRE, painter, was born at Lille in the latter half of the 18th century. He exhibited at the Salon from 1795 to 1810. In the Marseilles Museum there is a 'Shipwreck' by him, and in that of Toulouse a washed landscape. He died in Paris about 1812.

WALLER, J., portrait painter, practised about 1700. After him Bernard Lens engraved a portrait of Lord Cutts, surrounded by Mars, Minerva, and Apollo.

WALLINT. See LINT.

WALLIS, JOHN WILLIAM, a Scottish landscape painter, was born about 1765. He practised for some years in Italy and Germany, but after 1812 devoted himself to picture dealing.

WALLIS, JOSHUA, an English landscape painter in water-colour, was born in 1789. He excelled in snow scenes, and his works had many good points, but he did not win success. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1809 to 1820, and died at Walworth in 1862. There are three water-colour drawings by him in the Kensington Museum.

WALLIS, ROBERT, an English landscape engraver, born in London in 1794. He worked in line, and his renderings of Turner are excellent. He was much employed by the publishers. Specimens of his art will also be found in the 'Art Journal,' and 'Roger's Poems,' as well as in 'England and Wales,' and 'The Southern Coast.' He retired to Brighton in 1860, where he spent his latter years, and died in 1878. Amongst his best plates are :

The Approach to Venice ; after Turner.
 Brighton Chain Pier ; after the same.
 Lake Nemi ; after the same.
 The Dutch Ferry ; after Callcott.
 On the Gulf of Venice ; after Clarkson Stanfield.
 Val S. Nicolà ; after J. D. Harding.

WALMSLEY, FREDERICK, an English subject and portrait painter, was born in 1815. He studied under H. P. Briggs, and in the schools of the Royal Academy. He exhibited at the British Institution, in Suffolk Street, and at the Royal Academy, from 1838 to 1872. His work was much impeded by paralysis of the legs. He died in 1875.

WALMSLEY, THOMAS, landscape painter, was descended from a Rochdale family of good position, but was born in Ireland in 1763, at which time his father, a major in the army, was there with his regiment. Having quarrelled with his friends he came to London, to procure a living by his own exertions. Having already made some progress in landscape painting, he was engaged as scene-painter at the King's Theatre, and afterwards in the same capacity at Covent Garden. He subsequently held a similar post in the Crow Street Theatre, Dublin, but finally settled at Bath, where he practised landscape with success for the last ten years of his life. Between 1790 and 1796 he exhibited many landscapes, chiefly Welsh scenes, at the Royal Academy. He died at Bath in 1805.

WALRAVEN, ISAAK, a Dutch amateur painter and engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1686. He worked successively under a goldsmith, a sculptor, and lastly under the painter Gerard Rademaker, after whose death he went to Düsseldorf to copy pictures in the Gallery. His own pictures were chiefly historical. His 'Death of Epaminondas' is in the Amsterdam Museum. He has left a series of etchings in the manner of Stefano della Bella, and some of goldsmiths' patterns. He died at Amsterdam in 1764-5.

WALRAVEN, NIC. See HÆFTEN.

WALS, GOTTFRIED, landscape painter and engraver, was a native of Cologne, and flourished about 1640. He studied under Agostino Tassi, and worked chiefly in Italy. He lost his life in an earthquake at Naples.

WALSKAPPEL, JAKOB VAN, (WALSCAPELLE, or WALTSKAPELLE,) was a painter of fruit and flowers. The dates of his birth and death are unknown, but those of his pictures range from 1670 to 1680. According to Houbraken he was living at Amsterdam before 1667 and after 1716, and abandoned art for some other calling. He is said to have been a pupil of the flower-painter, Cornelis Kick. His pictures are something like those of J. D. de Heem. His flowers are tastefully arranged in globular water-bottles, and besprinkled with butterflies, moths, and other insects. His pictures are fairly numerous in England ; the National Gallery has one ; others are to be found in the Berlin Museum, at Frankfort, at Schwerin, and in New York.

WALTER, HENRY, a painter of pastoral and rural subjects, was born in London about 1790. His works were few in number, and less well-known than they deserved. Being much engaged in teaching, he had little time to devote to the practice of his art, and his over-severity in his judgment of his own work caused him to destroy much that might have given him a wider reputation. His pictures occasionally appeared at the winter exhibitions of the Royal Academy, and a 'Farmyard Scene' of much merit, was at the great exhibition of 1851. His private character was such as to attract many friends, and he enjoyed the intimacy of Samuel Palmer, F. O. Finch, Geo. Richmond the elder, Blake, and Linnell. He died at Torquay, May 23, 1849.

WALTER OF COLCHESTER. A monk of St. Alban's, who flourished in the first half of the 13th century, and is remembered chiefly as a statuary and carver, but is said to have been also a painter.

WALTHER, FRIEDRICH, of Dinkelsbühl, an early German painter, is said to have flourished in the second half of the 15th century, and to have painted altar-pieces in the manner of Martin Schongauer. In conjunction with Hans Hürning (q. v.) he designed a series of prints for a 'Biblia Pauperum' (published in 1471).

WALTHER, KARL SIGMUND, was born at Dresden in 1783. He studied under Schubert in his native city, and became known as a pleasing portrait painter. He also painted a few historical pictures. He died in 1820.

WALTIER, CHARLES EMILE. See WATTIER.

WALTON, ELIJAH, was born at Manchester in 1833. He became a student in the Royal Academy, where he gained a medal when only ten years of age. He made journeys to the East, to the Alps, to Norway, to the English Lakes and the Isle of Wight, making drawings in which a poetic fancy took the place of truth to nature. His work lent itself to reproduction by chromolithography, and so his impossible peaks and generally artificial effects have become widely known. He wrote a treatise on the camel, and often employed his pencil in the illustration of books. He died in 1880.

WALTON, HENRY, an English subject and portrait painter, was born about 1720. He was a member of the Society of Artists, where he exhibited, as well as at the Royal Academy, from 1771 to 1779. His subjects were usually portraits in small or domestic incidents. Several of his pictures have been engraved. His death took place about 1790. Two of his pictures were exhibited at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1889.

WALTON, JAMES TROUT, an English landscape painter, was born at York. He studied under Etty, his fellow-townsmen, and travelled in Switzerland and Algiers; but excelled especially in English pastoral landscape. He died on the 17th October, 1867, at York.

WALTON, PARRY, an English copyist and still-life painter of the 17th century. He studied under Robert Walker, and became keeper of the pictures to James II. He had much practice as a picture restorer, and as such exercised his skill on Ruhens's ceiling at Whitehall. For his work upon it he was paid £212. He died in Lincoln's Inn Fields about 1700. His son, who succeeded to his appointments, was known as a copyist.

WALWERTH, JAKOB SAMUEL, engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1750. He studied draughtsmanship under Preisler, and engraving under Schweickhart. He was chiefly employed as an engraver of anatomical, botanical, and architectural plates, and worked much for the publisher Mechel, at Basle. His landscapes and historical plates were comparatively unimportant. He died in 1815.

WAMPS, BERNARD JOSEPH, (or WAMPE,) was born at Lille, November 30, 1689. He studied under Vuez in his native city, and under Jean Restout in Paris. In 1715 he won the Premier Grand Prix de Rome with a 'Judith receiving the treasures found in the tent of Holofernes.' After five years in Rome, Wamps settled in Lille, where he was accorded certain privileges by the municipality. He died in that city about 1750.

WANDELAAR, JAN, painter and engraver, was born at Amsterdam about 1691. He was instructed by W. van Gouwen and G. de Lairese, and painted many portraits, some in pastel. He also engraved portraits and book ornaments for publishers, but his best productions were thirty-four plates for the 'Tabulæ sceleti et musculorum corporis humani,' of Albinus. The drawings were made from the subjects by himself, under the direction of Albinus. There is an English translation, in which the figures are copied in the original size, by C. Grignon, Ravenet, Scotin, and others. Wandelaar was known as an author, and wrote a comedy called 'The Sham Relation.' It was through his exertions that a public school of design was opened at Amsterdam. He died at Leyden in 1759.

WANS, JAN BAPTIST, (or WAMPS,) surnamed 'THE CAPTAIN,' from being commander of the civic guard in his native town, was a Fleming, born in 1628. He was accounted a good landscape painter in the classic Italian style he and his contemporaries borrowed from Poussin. He also made copies of the works of Van Dyck. There is a landscape by him in the Antwerp Museum. His death took place after 1687, but the date is not known.

WAPPERS, GUSTAVE, a Belgian historical painter, was born August 23, 1803, at Antwerp. He worked under Herreyns and Van Bree, in the Academy of his native city, and subsequently studied the works of Rembrandt in Holland and the Italian masters in Paris. Returning to Belgium in 1830, he became the leader of the romantic movement, and soon deposed the classicist Navez from his position as head of the Belgian school. His first important picture, the 'Episode of the Belgian Revolution,' now in the Brussels Museum, raised the standard of revolt, and a band of young artists eagerly enlisted themselves under it. His pictures, based on subjects from Flemish history, at once became popular in the new kingdom. Many honours were bestowed on him. From 1839 to 1855 he was Director of the Antwerp Academy. In his own country he was made a baron and appointed principal painter to the King; while in France he was made an officer in the Legion of Honour. His latter years were chiefly spent in Paris, where he died, December 6, 1874. Amongst his works are:

Amsterdam.	Fodor } Museum. }	Peter the Great at Zaandam.
"	R. Museum.	Van Dyck falling in love with his model.
Antwerp.	Academy.	Portrait of himself.
"	"	The Song of Solomon.
"	Jesuits' Church.	The Presentation in the Temple.
Brussels.	Museum.	Charles I. going to the Scaffold.
"	"	Episode of the Belgian Revolution of 1830.

WARD, EDWARD MATTHEW, an English historical painter, was born in Pimlico in 1816. His mother was a sister of James and Horace Smith, the authors of 'Rejected Addresses.' His art proclivities early developed themselves, and in 1830 he obtained the silver palette of the Society of Arts. He was indebted to Chantrey and Wilkie for much valuable advice and encouragement, and in 1835 entered the schools of the Royal Academy. Before he was twenty he produced a series of illustrations to the famous jeu d'esprit of his two uncles. In 1836 he went to Rome, and studied in the Academy of St. Luke, where in 1838 he was awarded the silver medal for historical composition. After a stay of three years in Italy, he made his way to Munich, and worked on fresco painting for a time under the direction of Cornelius. On his return to England he made his appearance on the walls of the Royal Academy in 1839 with a picture of 'Cimabue and Giotto.' He soon devoted himself to the class of subjects which has been termed "historical anecdote." His chief pictures were: 'Dr. Johnson reading Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield"' (1843), 'Dr. Johnson and Lord Chesterfield' (1845; National Gallery), 'Disgrace of Lord Clarendon' (1846), 'The South Sea Bubble' (1847; National Gallery), 'Charles II. and Nell Gwyn' (1848; South Kensington Museum; Jones Collection), 'James II. hearing of the landing of the Prince of Orange' (1850; National Gallery), 'Louis XVI. and his family in the Temple' (1851), 'Charlotte Corday going to Execution' (1852), and 'The Ante-chamber at Whitehall during the last moments of Charles II.' (1861). He early entered into the Westminster Hall competitions. In 1843 he sent a 'Boadicea,' which was unsuccessful; but at length, in 1853, he received a commission for eight pictures for the corridor of the House of Commons, of which the best, perhaps, are 'The Execution of Montrose,' 'The Last Sleep of Argyll,' and 'Alice Lisle concealing Fugitives.' He also made several designs for tapestry, which were carried out at the works at Old Windsor. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1846, but his election to the full membership was delayed till 1855. His mind became unbinged through ill-health, and he died by his own hand at Windsor on the 15th January, 1879. His wife, the daughter of Geo. Raphael Ward, is also well known as a painter.

WARD, FRANCIS SWAIN, an English landscape painter, was born in London about 1750. He was brought up as an artist, and exhibited with the Society of Artists from 1765 to 1773; but he entered the military service of the East India Company, and afterwards appears to have pursued art merely as a pastime. He made many drawings of Indian temples and antiquities, as he had previously done of the castles and ruins of England. He died about 1805.

WARD, GEORGE RAPHAEL, son of James Ward, R.A., and father-in-law of E. M. Ward, R.A., was born in 1798. He studied art under his father and in the schools of the Royal Academy. He was at one time much employed in making miniature copies of the portraits of Sir Thomas Lawrence, but he is better known by his engraved portraits. He died December 13, 1879.

WARD, JAMES, animal painter and engraver, was born in Thames Street, London, on the 23rd of October, 1769. He began the study of engraving at a very early age, working under John

Raphael Smith for a time, and then serving an apprenticeship of nine years to his elder brother, William Ward. He soon made his mark as an engraver, and having attracted attention at the exhibitions of 1792 and 1793 with some clever pictures of rural life, he was, in 1794, appointed painter and mezzotint engraver to the Prince of Wales. He became a frequent contributor to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy, and soon won a great reputation as a painter of animals, in which line he was much assisted by previous studies of comparative anatomy. He was elected an A.R.A. in 1807, and a full Academician in 1811. In 1817 he gained the prize offered by the Directors of the British Institution for an 'Allegory of Waterloo,' but in attempting to realize his sketch he was not so successful. In his later years he made experiments in all kinds of subjects, and continued to exhibit with the Academy into extreme old age. A very characteristic portrait, painted by himself at the age of seventy-nine, is in the National Portrait Gallery. Ward retired to Cheshunt about 1830, and died there November 23, 1859, in his ninety-first year. Works:

London.	Nat. Gall.	Alderney Bull, Cow, and Calf in a Meadow.
"	"	Gordale Scar, Yorkshire.
"	"	Harlech Castle.
"	"	Regent's Park in 1807. A Cattle Piece.
"	South Kensington Museum.	Donkey and Pigs.
"	"	Pigs.
"	"	A Chinese Sow.
"	"	Bulls Fighting in a Landscape; St. Donatt's Castle, Glamorganshire, in the background.
		Boa-constrictor seizing a Horse (the horse, a portrait of George IV.'s favourite, Apollo).
		The Council of Horses. ( Manchester Gallery .)
		De Tabley Park. ( Oldham Gallery .)
		Bull-Baiting.

Among Ward's plates the best, perhaps, are:

The Centurion Cornelius; after Rembrandt.
 Admiral Duncan; after Hoppner.
 Daniel in the Lions' Den; after Rubens.
 The Flight into Egypt; after F. Bol.
 Descent from the Cross; after Dietrich.
 Diana and her Nymphs; after Rubens.
 The Alpine Traveller; after Northcote.
 Louisa; after Hoppner.
 Thoughts on Matrimony; after the same.
 The Fruits of Early Industry and Economy; after Morland.
 Smugglers; after the same.
 Fisherman; after the same.
 The Rocking-Horse; after himself.
 Mrs. Billington; after Reynolds.

(Nagler makes James Ward the painter and James Ward the engraver two different people.)

WARD, MARTIN THEODORE, an English animal painter, and son of William Ward, A.E., was born about the beginning of the 19th century. He was a pupil of Sir Edwin Landseer, and in the early part of his career practised in London. About 1840 he settled in Yorkshire, and became noted for his eccentricity. His works appeared at intervals between 1819 and 1858 at the Royal Academy, the British Institution, and the Society of British Artists. He died in great misery at York, February 13, 1874.

WARD, SAMUEL, an English caricaturist of the early part of the 17th century. He lived at Ipswich, and was in orders, but espousing the Puritan side, he was successively imprisoned by the Star Chamber and Archbishop Laud. His best known caricatures are 'Spayne and Rome Defeated' (1621), and 'Woe to Drunkards' (1635). He died in 1639.

WARD, WILLIAM, an eminent engraver in mezzotint, was born in London in 1766. He was the brother of James Ward, the celebrated animal painter, and father of W. J. and M. T. Ward. He served an apprenticeship to J. R. Smith, and afterwards became his assistant. He engraved many of the pictures of his brother-in-law, George Morland, and these plates are now (1889) in great request. He also engraved numerous portraits after Reynolds and others, and a few historical pictures. In 1814 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, at which he had first exhibited in 1795, and was appointed mezzotint engraver to the Prince Regent and the Duke of York. He died suddenly in London, December 21, 1826. Among his plates we may name :

The Defeat of Mary Stuart at Langside; after Westall.
The Battle of Camperdown; after Copley.

Review of the Third Dragon Guards; after Beechey.

David and Uriah; after F. Bol.

Joseph presenting his Father to Pharaoh; after the same.

Pilate washing his hands; after G. Honthorst.

Mary Magdalen reading; after Correggio.

The Death of Œdipus; after Fuseli.

The Death of the Elk; after Rubens.

The Livery Stable; after James Ward.

The Haymakers; after the same.

The Country Ale-House; after the same.

The Gamblers; after W. Peters.

The Birth of the Heir; after W. Bigg. And about twenty plates after Morland, of which 'The Visit to the Child at Nurse' is perhaps the best.

WARD, WILLIAM JAMES, mezzotint engraver, was the son of William Ward, and was born about 1800. He exhibited a talent for art at a very early age, and in his twelfth year obtained the silver medal of the Society of Arts for an elaborate drawing of the 'Madonna della Seggiola' of Raphael. His style was robust, and more adapted to the translation of Sir Joshua Reynolds and John Jackson than of Sir Thomas Lawrence, after each of whom he engraved. He died in 1840. Among his plates we may name :

Admiral Sir P. Durham; after F. Grant.

Prince George of Cambridge; after John Lucas.

Lady Vernon Harcourt; after J. Jackson.

The Infant Hercules (the single figures); after Sir J. Reynolds.

Earl Grey, K.G.; after Jackson.

George Canuing; after T. Stewartson.

Thomas Moore; after George Mulvany.

Garrick in the Green Room; after Hogarth.

John Jackson; after Jackson.

Marriage of St. Catherine; after Vandyck.

Some plates in the 'Gems of Art.'

WARNBERGER, SIMON, landscape painter, was born at Pullach, near Munich in 1769, and was educated at the Munich Academy. He travelled for his improvement in Austria and Italy, and was in 1824 elected a member of the Munich Academy. He died in 1847. The Berlin National Gallery contains a 'Beech Wood' by him.

WARNECK, ALEXANDER, (or WARNYK,) was born at St. Petersburg about 1780, and instructed in the Academy of that city, and afterwards in Italy. He was a painter of genre subjects and portraits, among the latter of which were those of Count Stroganoff, President Olenin, and himself. KARL EDUARD WARNECK, probably his son, was born at Dantzic in 1803, and died there in 1858. He practised in Russia, visited Italy, and was a painter of historical subjects and genre.

WARNIR, JOHANN, a native of Germany, was born about the year 1620. He is chiefly known as a copyist of prints by Albrecht Dürer and other German masters. His plates are neatly executed, but have all the servility of imitation. He copied the print by Dürer, representing 'St. Jerome seated before a Crucifix,' with a city in the background, inscribing it Jh. Warnir, Æ. 16, 1636, and the following year he copied the 'Twelve Apostles,' after the same master, which he marked Jh. W., Æ. 17. He is supposed to have died very young.

WARNYK. See WARNECK.

WARREN, ALFRED WILLIAM, an English engraver, who practised in London in the 19th century. He was the son of Charles Turner Warren. He engraved 'The Beggar's Petition,' two plates of English kings and English poets respectively, and 'The New Coat,' after Wilkie, and illustrations for the following books :

Pope's 'Essay on Man.'

Smirke's 'Arabian Nights.' | Coxe's 'Social Day.'

WARREN, CHARLES TURNER, an eminent engraver, was born in London, June 4, 1767. While young his occupation was the engraving of rollers for calico printing, and in after life he was chiefly employed on small plates for book illustration, especially of the poetry and novels published by Bell, Harrison, Cadell, and others. Little is known of his life, but he was the first to succeed as an engraver on steel, for which process he received a gold medal from the Society of Arts. He engraved several of the beautiful illustrations to 'Don Quixote,' after Smirke. He died at Wandsworth, April 21, 1823. Among his other plates we may name :

Lord Castlereagh; after Lawrence.

Alexander Pope.

The Broken Jar; after Wilkie. (Coxe's 'Social Day.')

Antony and Cleopatra; after Tresham (for the Boydell Gallery).

Troilus and Cressida; after T. Kirk (do).

WARREN, HENRY, water-colour painter, was born in London, September 24, 1794. He evinced an early taste for art, but for a while was almost equally divided between painting, sculpture, and music. He first entered the studio of Nollekens, the sculptor, where he had John Gibson and Bonomi as his companions. In 1818, however, he gave up sculpture for painting, and entered the schools of the Royal Academy. His first picture, entitled 'Love among the Roses,' appeared in 1823, but soon afterwards he adopted water-colour in preference to oil, and in 1835 joined the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours. He was elected President in 1839—a post he resigned in 1873, when he accepted the title of Honorary President; this he held until his death, which occurred in London, December 18, 1879. He was a member of the Royal Commission for the Paris Exhibition of 1855, and took a leading part in the Fine Arts section of the 1862 exhibition. He published an antiquarian work on the river Ravensbourne, in Kent, illustrated by lithographic views drawn by himself; two little volumes, entitled respectively 'Notes upon Notes' and 'Hints upon Tints,' besides many elementary essays on art.

He also designed series of illustrations to 'A Winter's Tale,' to Lockhart's 'Spanish Ballads,' to Wordsworth's 'Pastoral Poems,' and to Moore's 'Paradise and the Peri.' He was an honorary member of the 'Société Belge des Aquarellistes,' and of the Pennsylvania Academy of Arts.

WASER, ANNA, (or WASSER,) was born at Zurich in 1679, and was the daughter of Rudolph Waser, a member of the town-council. When she was not more than twelve years of age her father placed her under Joseph Werner, of Berne, one of the best artists in Switzerland. She soon rivalled Werner himself in miniature, and her reputation spreading through Germany, there was scarcely a court in the empire from which she did not receive commissions. Her miniatures were sought for also in London and Holland. She painted pastoral subjects and flowers as well as portraits. She died in 1713.

WASSEMBERG, JAN ABEL, was born at Groeningen in 1689. He was the son of an advocate, who, after giving him the rudiments of a classical education, yielded to his bent towards art, and placed him under one JAN VAN DIEREN. With him Wassemberg remained until he was twenty-three years of age, when he went to Rotterdam, where he formed an intimacy with Adriaan van der Werff. He afterwards returned to Groeningen with the reputation of one of the most promising young artists of his time. He painted the portrait of the Prince of Orange, with that of the princess, and those of the most distinguished personages of the court. He also painted small pictures from sacred history, in the style of Van der Werff. He died in 1750. His daughter, ELIZABETHA GERTRUIDA WASSEMBERG, painted like her father, but sometimes approached pretty closely to Gerard Dou. She died in 1782. Wassemberg's son, JAN, was also a painter.

WASSER. See WASER.

WATELET, CLAUDE HENRI, a distinguished amateur and writer on art, was born in Paris in 1718. His father was receiver-general of the finances, to which position he himself succeeded. In his youth he united the study of art with that of belles lettres, and travelled through Germany to Italy, passing some little time at Rome. After his return to Paris he published, in 1761, his poem on the 'Art of Painting,' embellished with plates from the designs of M. Pierre, etched by himself, and finished with the graver by L. S. Lempereur. He was the principal author of the 'Dictionnaire des Arts de Peinture, Sculpture et Gravure,' published in 1792, with additions by M. Levesque. He died in 1786. Watelet may be ranked among the best amateur engravers. His plates number nearly two hundred; the following may be named:

- Claude Henri Watelet; engraved in 1753; after Cochin.
- Jean le Rond d'Alembert, of the French Academy. Do.
- P. Joliot de Crébillon, of the French Academy. Do.
- J. P. M. Pierre, Painter. Do.
- Louis de Silvestre, Painter. Do.
- The Count de Vence. Do.
- A. B. J. Turgot. Do.
- Venus nursing Loves; after Rubens.
- A Corps-de-Garde of Monkeys; after Teniers.
- A Landscape, with Figures; after K. du Jardin.
- A large Landscape; after J. Both.
- A pair of Views of Ruins; after Panini.

WATELET, LOUIS ETIENNE, a French landscape painter and lithographer, was born in Paris in 1780. He began to exhibit at the Salon in 1799, and there his works appeared for upwards of half a century. His travels extended to Belgium, the Tyrol, and Italy, and afforded many subjects for his pictures. He died in 1864. There are by him:

- Fontainebleau. Palace. Henri IV. and Captain Michaud.
- Neuchâtel. Museum. Landscape.
- Versailles. Palace. Reception of Napoleon I. at Louisbourg. 1812.

And other works in the Museums of Amiens, Aix, Bordeaux, Montpellier, and Nîmes.

WATERLO, ANTHONIE, (or WATERLOO,) painter and engraver, was born at Lille, in 1609 or 1610. Various dates have been given for his birth, but Mr. Bredius has discovered that his betrothal took place in Amsterdam in 1640, the painter being at the time thirty years of age. He was married a few weeks later at Zevenbergen. He seems to have divided his time mostly between Amsterdam, Leeuwarden, and Utrecht, paying an occasional visit to his native city. He had a château near Utrecht, where Jan Weenix used to visit him for the purpose of inserting figures in his landscapes. It has been usually asserted that he died at Utrecht, in the Hospital of St. Job, in 1670, but it is now known that he was still alive in 1676, and living in Leeuwarden. His landscapes are characterized by the most extreme simplicity. They represent the entrance into a forest; a broken road, with a few trunks of trees; a solitary cottage, or a water-mill; all treated with truth and sincerity. Landscapes by him are in the Amsterdam and Rotterdam Museums and the Stuttgart Gallery. But he is best known as an engraver and etcher. His plates usually represent forest subjects. According to Bartsch, they amount to one hundred and thirty-six. They are etched with spirit and facility, and retouched with the graver. He sometimes marked his plates with the initials A. W. f., and sometimes with the cipher AW. The drawings of Waterloo are also excellent; they are generally in black chalk and Indian ink. The following are perhaps the best of his plates:

A set of six upright Landscapes, among which The Water-mill is the chief.

A set of six Landscapes, with subjects from Mythology (Alpheus and Arethusa; Apollo and Daphne; Mercury and Argus; Pan and Syrinx; the Parting of Venus and Adonis; and the Death of Adonis).

A set of six Landscapes, with subjects from the Old Testament, and the Angel directing Tobias.

WATERSCHOODT, HEINRICH VAN, a Dutch painter of the 18th century. He practised in Munich, where he worked in a sort of rivalry with Beich from 1744 to 1773, and painted genre pictures, flowers, and battle-pieces. In the Augsburg Gallery there is a 'Consecration of a Village Church' by him.

WATHER, PHILIPP, painter and engraver, was born at Mühlhausen in 1798. He learnt etching and engraving from Reindel at Nuremberg, and was finally known best as a worker upon steel. His early productions, however, were chiefly views of buildings in oil and water-colour. His most popular plate was 'The Baker Girl,' after Kreul.

WATMAN, HENRY, an engraver of landscapes, mentioned by Professor Christ, is said to have marked his prints with an H and a W joined into a monogram.

WATSON, CAROLINE, an excellent English engraver and daughter of James Watson, was born in London about the year 1760. She was instructed in the art by her father, and engraved many subject pictures and portraits, both in mezzotint and in stipple. In 1735 she received the appointment of engraver to Queen Caroline, and died in Pinlicko, June 10, 1814. Among others we have the following prints by her :

Prince William of Gloucester; after Reynolds.

WATSON, GEORGE, a Scottish portrait painter, was born in 1767, at Overmains, Berwick. His first instruction was due to Alexander Nasmyth, but he worked for two years with Sir Joshua Reynolds. Settling in Edinburgh, he obtained a foremost place in the Scottish art world. From 1808 to 1812 he was president of the Associated Artists, and in 1830 he took a leading part in the fusion of the Royal Institution with the Scottish Academy, of which he became president the same year. His works were not only exhibited in Edinburgh; from 1808 to 1828 he sent forty-five pictures to the London Royal Academy and to the British Institution. He died in Edinburgh, August 24, 1837. Works: Edinburgh. Nat. Gall. Portrait of himself.

WATSON, JAMES, mezzotint engraver, and brother of William Watson the portrait-painter, was born in Ireland in 1740 (?). He exhibited at Spring Gardens in 1775, and died in 1790, having been for years a resident in Little Queen Street, London. He was the father of Caroline Watson. We have by him a great number of interesting plates, among which are the following :

Anne, Duchess of Cumberland; after Reynolds.
 Elizabeth, Duchess of Buccleuch, with her daughter.

WATSON, JOHN, a Scotch portrait painter, born in 1685. He was taught in the Trustees' Academy, Edinburgh, and in 1715 emigrated to America. Settling in New Jersey, he acquired an independence by the practice of his art. He died in America, August 22, 1768.

WATSON, THOMAS, mezzotint engraver, was born in London in 1743, and apprenticed to an engraver on plate. He worked at first in the dot manner, but afterwards became very successful in mezzotint. For a time he kept a printshop in Bond Street, in partnership with W. Dickenson. He exhibited at Spring Gardens in 1775, and died at Bristol in 1781. Of his numerous prints, the following are among the most esteemed :

The Windsor Beauties; a series of six, after Kneller.

Lord Apsley and his Brother; after N. Dance.

Frances, Countess of Jersey; after Gardner.

Alderman Sawbridge, in the character of a Roman senator; after West.

WATSON, WILLIAM, a portrait painter, practised in Dublin in the last quarter of the 18th century. He was better known as a flute-player, however, than as an artist. His wife painted flowers and fruit, and in 1771 exhibited once with the Free Society.

WATSON, W. SMELLIE, a Scottish portrait painter, was born in Edinburgh in 1796. He was a pupil of his father, the first President of the Scottish Academy, and also studied in the Trustees' Academy. Coming to London in 1815, he worked for five years in the schools of the Royal Academy, and for one year with David Wilkie. He settled in Edinburgh, where he obtained a good practice as a portrait painter, and was one of the original members of the Royal Scottish Academy. His fancy portraits, such as 'The Ornithologist,' 'A Conchologist,' and 'The Student'—the latter in the Scottish National Gallery—obtained him a very considerable reputation. He died on the 6th November, 1874. An enthusiastic naturalist, he bequeathed his collection of birds to the Edinburgh University.

WATT, JAMES HENRY, engraver, was born in London in 1799. He was a pupil of Charles Heath, but showed much originality, and won distinction as a line-engraver, in a style of his own. He always worked on copper, which he managed with great sympathy and power. He died in London in June 1867. Works:

Procession of the Dumow Fitch; after Stothard.

Christ blessing little Children; after Eastlake.

The Highland Drover's Departure; after Landseer.

WATTEAU, ANTOINE, the son of a tiler, was born at Valenciennes on the 10th of October, 1684. His education was of the slightest, and his father soon grew tired of paying for any at all. He turned the lad adrift, and the latter, without money or resources of any kind, made his way to Paris.

Accident made him acquainted, in the first instance, with one Metayer, a mediocre artist, whom he soon abandoned for a manufacturer of rough daubs, which were sold by the gross to provincial dealers. At this work he soon showed great address, and for some time was employed solely in painting figures of St. Nicholas. His pay for such work was three livres weekly and his daily soup. In the evenings and on holidays he laboured hard at the drudgery of his art, acquiring that facility as a draughtsman which was afterwards to distinguish his work. In the first years of the 18th century he found his way into the studio of Claude Gillot, from whom he acquired a taste for modern subjects, and especially for those with a vein of comedy in them. He soon surpassed this master, and left him to become the assistant of Audran at the Luxembourg. Audran treated him well, but when, a few months later, the younger man put a small picture before him of his own execution, he dissembled the admiration he could not help feeling, and tried to dissuade his assistant from further attempts at creative art. Watteau, however, understood his motives, and, in order to regain his liberty, announced his intention to visit his parents. Funds for the journey were obtained by the sale of his first picture to a dealer, who gave him an order for a pendant, which was duly finished and despatched from Valenciennes. Both these pictures were engraved by Cochin. Watteau's restless nature did not allow him to stay long at Valenciennes. He returned to Paris, and had the good fortune to attract the attention of M. Crozat, the famous collector. Crozat lent him drawings to copy, by which his enthusiasm for such men as Rubens and Paul Veronese was kindled, and he endeavoured to find the means for a visit to Italy; but the measures he took had an opposite result. In 1709 he had competed for the Grand Prix de Rome, and had only been second. In his disappointment he determined to try for royal assistance in a roundabout fashion. He hung up the two small pictures already mentioned in one of the corridors of the Academy, where the Academicians could not help seeing and admiring. One of their number, De La Fosse, sent for Watteau, and, reproaching him for distrust of his own powers, declared that the Academy would always honour such talent as his. He was immediately enrolled as an Associate, and in 1717 became a full member. But this good fortune made no change in his habits. He still studied hard, and failed to appreciate his own works. He constantly erased and repainted, and it was only by decisive measures that those who bought his pictures could get them out of his hands. In 1719 he paid a visit to England, partly to consult Dr. Mead, for whom he painted 'Les Comédiens Italiens' and 'L'Amour Paisible.' He returned to Paris the next year, as the climate of London did not agree with him. In 1721 he painted a sign for the shop of the dealer Gersaint, which had a great success. After living for twenty-six months in Gersaint's house and finding the weakness of his chest increase, the painter made efforts to discover a country retreat, where he could breathe a purer air. With the help of his friend, L'Abbé Haranger, he obtained the loan of a house at Nogent, near Paris, and there he died soon after his installation, on the 18th of July, 1721. He left a fortune of 9000 livres, and a large number of sketches, all of which he divided between his four friends, Gersaint, Haranger, De Julienne, and Henin. Watteau's pictures are rare, especially in public collections.

WATTEAU, FRANÇOIS LOUIS JOSEPH, painter, was born at Valenciennes, August 18, 1758. He was the son of Louis Joseph Watteau, and the pupil of his father and of Durameau. He also studied in Paris, at the École des Beaux Arts. In 1785 he settled in Lille, as assistant to his father at the Academy. In 1812 he became director of the Academy, and it is to him that Lille owes the first foundation of her fine museum. He died there on the first of December, 1823. The museums of Lille and Valenciennes have examples of his work.

WATTEAU, LOUIS JOSEPH, painter, was born at Valenciennes, April 10, 1731. He was the nephew of Antoine Watteau, and a pupil of the Royal Academy of Paris. In 1755 he settled in Lille, where he became a professor at the local academy. In this capacity he attempted to introduce the study from the nude model, and lost his appointment, but was afterwards reinstated. In 1795 he was employed to make inventories of works of art abandoned by the émigrés or in convents. He died at Lille, August 18, 1798. The museums of Valenciennes and Lille possess a number of his pictures, which have mostly to do with the operations of war. He also painted landscapes and a few altar-pieces.

WATTIER, CHARLES EMILE, painter and lithographer, was born in Paris, November 17, 1800. He was a pupil of Gros, and exhibited at the Salon from 1831 to 1868. His pictures were mostly genre and history of the less heroic kind. A water-colour by him is in the museum at Bagnères-de-Bigorre. He died in the Hôpital de la Charité, in Paris, November 22, 1868.

WATTIER, EDOUARD, a French painter and lithographer, was born at Lille in 1793, and studied under Baron Gros. Some of the lithographs in the 'Galerie de la Duchesse de Berry' and in the 'Galerie du Palais Royal,' were executed by him.

WATTS, JANE, (née WALDIE,) an amateur painter, was born in 1792. She was the daughter of a Scottish gentleman, and married Captain, afterwards Admiral, Watts, R.N. She exhibited landscapes at the Academy and the British Institution, between 1817 and 1820, while still unmarried. She afterwards dabbled in literature, and published 'Sketches descriptive of Italy,' in four volumes, in 1820. She died on the 26th July, 1826. Her sister Charlotte, afterwards Mrs. Eaton, was the author of the well-known 'Waterloo Days,' and of other works.

WATTS, JOHN, an English mezzotint engraver, who practised in London from about 1770 to 1786. He was probably also a printseller. Amongst his plates are:

Icarus; after Van Dyck. 1778.
Nathaniel Lee; after Dobson. 1778.
Earl of Denbigh; after Dance. 1785.
Joseph Baretta; after Reynolds. 1780.
Marquis of Hertford; after the same. 1786.

WATTS, SIMON, an English wood-engraver, practised in London about the middle of the last century. He has left two or three large woodcuts dated 1736, and some medallion portraits of painters, engraved with much freedom. Some later portraits are also ascribed to him, among them a 'Queen Elizabeth,' dated 1773, and a 'Dudley, Earl of Leicester,' dated 1775.

WATTS, WILLIAM, landscape engraver, was born in London in 1752. His father was a silk-weaver in Moorfields, and the son obtained his education in art from Paul Sandby and Edward Rooker. On the death of Rooker, he continued his 'Copperplate Magazine.' He published in 1779-86, 'Views of the Seats of the English Nobility and Gentry.' In 1786, he went to Italy for a year, and on his return took up his residence at Sunbury, near London. After visiting Carmarthen and Bristol, he in 1791 settled for twelve years at Bath, where he produced twelve line engravings of Bath views. On the outbreak of the French Revolution, he removed to Paris, and lost much of his property through investing it in French securities. Being compelled to resume active work, he in 1800 produced 'Select Views in London,' and, in the course of the next five years, sixty illustrations to Ainslie's 'Turkey and Palestine.' He also collaborated in various works with Sandby, Ingleby, Middiman, Fittler, Angus, Milton, and others. He was once more able to retire, and in 1814 settled at Cobham, where he died, blind, and in his hundredth year, in 1851.

WATZDORFF, HEINRICH AUGUST VON, was born at Greiz in 1760. From his early years he showed a taste for drawing and painting, and when, in 1778, he entered the Leipsic University, he still pursued his artistic studies. In 1780 he became a lieutenant in the army, but eight years later he was at work as a landscape painter under Klengel in Dresden, first in water-colours and then in oil. He also copied Wouwerman, Potter, Ostade, and Lingelbach. In 1793-4 he took part in the campaign on the Rhine, in the course of which he made numerous drawings. In 1796 he quitted the army and settled down as painter of landscapes and cattle-pieces in the Dutch style, often with carts and waggons introduced. He also etched three landscapes with cattle. He died at Darmstadt, August 18th, 1824.

WAUMANS, CONRADE, a Flemish engraver, flourished at Antwerp about the year 1642. He was a pupil of Pieter de Bailliu, whose style he imitated. The following are his best plates:

Frederick Henry, Prince of Orange; after Van Dyck.
Emilie von Solms, Princess of Orange; after the same.
Don Antonio de Zuniga; after the same.
Jan Both, Landscape painter; after Willaerts.
Herman Safflevre, Painter; after a picture by himself.
David Bailly, Painter; the same.
Cornelis Janssen, Painter; the same.
The Descent from the Cross; after Rubens.
The Assumption of the Virgin; after the same.
The Virgin and Infant Jesus; after Van Dyck.
Mars and Venus; after the same.

WAUQUELIN, —, a Flemish miniaturist of the 15th century. The Town Library of Brussels has a 'History of S. Helena,' illuminated by him in 1448.

WAUTERS, CHARLES AUGUSTIN, a Belgian historical painter, born at Boom in 1811. He studied at the Academies of Mechlin and Antwerp, and at the latter worked under Van Bree. For some years he was director of his old school, the Mechlin Academy, and he died in that town in 1869. A monument was erected to his memory in the church of St. André at Antwerp. Among other pictures by him we may name:

Karlsruhe. Gallery. The Traveller.
Mechlin. Museum. Salvator Rosa in the Abruzzi.
" " Floris de Montigny in prison at Madrid.
" Cathedral. The Last Supper.
" St. Jean. Crucifixion. 1860.

WAXSCHLUNGER, JOHANN PAUL, painter, born at the close of the 17th century, was a pupil of his father, JOHANN GEORG WAXSCHLUNGER, and like him devoted himself to painting landscapes with animals, flowers, fruit, and dead game, in the manner of Weenix. Examples of his works are to be seen in the Nymphenburg and Schleissheim Galleries. He died in 1724.

WAY, JOHAN WILHELM CARL, a Swedish painter, was born in 1792, and died in 1873. There is a portrait by him of Queen Désirée, wife of Charles XIV. of Sweden, in the Stockholm Gallery.

WEBB, DUNCAN, an English engraver, was born at the end of the 18th century. He worked chiefly on pictures of dogs and horses, and had gained a very considerable reputation, when he fell down dead in the street, in 1832.

WEBB, WESTFIELD, an English portrait painter, who practised in St. Martin's Lane about the middle of the 18th century. He was a Fellow of the Society of Artists, with whom he exhibited portraits, landscapes, and flower-subjects from 1762 to 1772. He is believed to have died soon after the latter date.

WEBBER, JOHN, (originally WEBER,) landscape painter, was born in London in 1752. His father, who was a sculptor, was a native of Berne, Switzerland, and sent his son when young to Paris, where he received part of his education as an artist. On his return to London in 1775, he studied at the Royal Academy. Having acquired a considerable reputation as a topographical draughtsman, he was appointed draughtsman to accompany Captain Cook, in the last voyage he made to the South Seas. From this voyage he returned in 1780, when he was employed by the Lords of the Admiralty to superintend the engraving of the prints from his own drawings. This concluded, he published, on his own account, a set of views of the principal places he had visited. They were etched, aquatinted, and printed in colour by himself. He then devoted his attention to landscape painting. He travelled much in Great Britain, Italy, France, and Switzerland, making numerous drawings from which he produced oil paintings. He had been present at the death of Captain Cook, and his drawing of that event was engraved by Byrne and Bartolozzi. Webber was elected an Associate of the Academy in 1785, and a Royal Academician in 1791. He died in London in 1793. There are four water-colour drawings by him in the South Kensington Museum.

WEBBERS, J., was a Dutch engraver, who flourished about the year 1656. He engraved several views of the churches and public buildings at Amsterdam, which were published in 1656, with descriptions in Dutch and French.

WEBER, ANTOINE JEAN, painter and lithographer, was born in Paris, May 11, 1797. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1813, and studied under both Gros and Afflard. He was chiefly known as a lithographer, sending many reproductions, mostly after second-rate masters, to the Salon between 1824 and 1850. Two portraits by him are at Versailles. He died in 1875.

WEBER, AUGUST, a German landscape painter, was born at Frankfort-on-Maine, January 10, 1817, and obtained his first lessons in art from the landscape painter Rosenkranz. He 1835 he entered the studio of the court painter Schilbach in Darmstadt, and travelled with him in Switzerland. He afterwards studied for some time in the Städel Institute at Frankfort. In 1838 he settled at Düsseldorf, and became a most successful painter of ideal landscapes. He has also left some lithographs. He died at Düsseldorf in 1873. A 'Westphalian Landscape' by him is in the Berlin National Gallery.

WEBER, FRIEDRICH, an excellent Swiss engraver, was born at Liesthal, near Basle, in 1813. He studied under Amsler at Munich, and completed his training in Paris, where he settled. He gained a medal of the second class in 1847, 1859, and 1863, was a corresponding member of the Institute, and a member of the Berlin Academy. He died in Paris in 1882. Among his best plates we may name:

Portrait of a Young Man; after Raphael.
The Empress Eugénie; after Winterhalter.
The 'Vierge au Linge'; after Raphael.
The Lugano Madonna; after Luini.
Sacred and Profane Love; after Titian.
Portrait of the Empress Josephine; after David.
Portrait of Giulio Romano; after himself.
Portrait of Hans Holbein; after the same.
Lais Corinthiaica; after the same (?).

WEBER, OTTO, a native of Berlin, was a pupil of Steffek and of Couture, and won a high reputation as a painter of cattle in landscapes. He worked in Paris and in London, and exhibited frequently at the Salon, gaining medals in 1864 and 1869. His best picture was, perhaps, 'La première Neige sur l'Alp (Bavière),' which was exhibited both in London and Paris, and is now in the Melbourne Gallery. Weber executed many commissions for Queen Victoria. He died in London, December 23, 1888.

WEBSTER, G., an English marine painter, born in the latter part of the 18th century. From his works it appears to have been to the Gold Coast; he also accompanied the elder Varley on a sketching tour in Wales, in 1802. His works, both in oil and water-colours, appeared from 1797 to 1832 at the Royal Academy, the Society of British Artists, and the British Institution. In 1825 he sent a 'Battle of Trafalgar' to the Royal Academy.

WEBSTER, JOSEPH SAMUEL, portrait painter, practised in London in the time of George III. There is a portrait by him in the hall of the Drapers' Company. McARDell and J. Watson scraped a few plates after his work. He occasionally made excursions into the ideal. He died in London, July 6, 1796.

WEBSTER, MOSES, an English landscape and flower painter in water-colours, was born at Derby in 1792. In his early years he worked with much skill in decorating china at the factories in his native town, and at Worcester. He subsequently devoted himself to teaching drawing at Derby and Nottingham, and also published landscape views. In his later years he fell into poverty, and died in an alms-house in 1870. There is a water-colour drawing by him of 'Matlock High Tor,' in the Kensington Museum.

WEBSTER, SIMON, an English painter of miniature and landscapes in water-colour, was born towards the middle of the 18th century. He was a member of the Society of Artists, with whom he exhibited miniatures, 1762-80, and from whom he received a grant of money, in 1769, to recoup his losses from a fire. He contributed to Ackerman's 'Views of Cottages and Farm-Houses in England.' His death probably took place about 1820.

WEBSTER, THOMAS, was born in Pimlico on the 20th of March, 1800. His father, who was a member of the Household of George III., intended him in the first instance for the musical profession, and the boy was educated in St. George's Chapel with a view to his becoming a chorister. But he soon displayed a preference for painting over music, and in 1820 entered the Royal Academy as a student. In 1823 he exhibited a portrait group, and in 1825 obtained the first medal in the school of painting. Thenceforward, for many years, his pictures were annually seen on the walls of the Academy and other exhibitions. His favourite subject was the British schoolboy, whom he represented in every variety of class and character. His earliest important picture, 'Rebels shooting a Prisoner' (a scene of boy mischief), was exhibited in 1825 at the Gallery of the Society of British Artists. Webster was elected an associate of the Royal Academy in 1840, in which year he produced 'Punch,' a picture full of grotesque incident and individual character. In 1841 appeared two pictures by which perhaps he is best known to the present generation, and which are familiar to all by the engravings of the Art Union of London—'The Smile,' and 'The Frown'—the subjects of which are drawn from the familiar lines about the schoolmaster in Goldsmith's 'Deserted Village.' 'The Boy with many Friends,' exhibited at the British Institution in 1842, achieved an almost equal success, and in the year following he painted picture after picture of a like character—'The Grandmother,' 'Going to School,' 'The Impenitent,' 'Sickness and Health,' and 'The Pedlar.' In 1845 appeared 'The Dame's School,' made by engravings almost as familiar as 'The Frown,' and 'The Smile.' In 1846 Webster became an Academician, and from that time all his principal pictures were to be seen on the walls of the Royal Academy.

In 1844 he painted a portrait of himself and his wife, and one of his latest contributions to the Academy was another portrait of himself, in 1878. He resigned his membership of the Academy in 1876, when he was placed in the list of Honorary Retired Academicians. He died at Cranbrook, Kent, in 1886. Works:

WECHINGER, JEREMIAS, painter, a native of Ansbach, flourished in the 16th century. In conjunction with J. (?) Herlin he painted a 'Fight with the Amalekites,' on the façade of the Rathhaus at Nördlingen, in or about 1594. He is further known by a 'Last Supper,' still extant (late Hess Collection, Ellwangen).

WECHTLIN, JOHANN ULRICH, (WECHTEL, or VUECHTELIN,) called also J. ULRICH, and at first J. U. PILGRIM, was a painter and wood engraver of Strasburg in the 16th century. He was granted the freedom of that city in 1514, as 'Hans Wechtel the Painter,' and is thought to have worked at Strasburg from 1508 to about 1520. No pictures by him have been yet identified. He was distinguished for his woodcuts in chiaroscuro, which he at first worked in three blocks. He marked his prints with two pilgrims' staves crossed, between the letters J° V. The French writers call him 'Le Maître aux Bourdons Croisés.' Bartsch has described the following ten prints by him:

Christ on the Cross, with the Magdalene kneeling at the foot, and the Virgin and St. John standing.
The Virgin seated in a Garden, with the Infant on her knees. (In the style of Dürer.)
The Virgin, half-length, with the Infant in her arms.
St. Jerome in the Desert, with a book in one hand, and a stone in the other.
St. Sebastian tied to a tree. (Style of Holbein.)
A Death's Head seen in front, in a niche, with the inscription, Mundanae foelicitatis gloria.
Thisbe and the dead body of Pyramus, with an inscription, Quid Venus in venis possit, &c.
Orpheus charming the Brutes; inscription, Orpheus vates.
Alcon, a famous Archer of Crete, delivering his Son from a monstrous Serpent.
A Warrior on horseback, armed cap-à-pie, accompanied by a Halberdier on foot.

It must be noted that the identification of Johann Ulrich Pilgrim (Le Maître aux Bourdons Croisés) with Johann Wechtlin, the painter, of Strasburg, and author of a well-known Passio Christi, is of modern date. It was first announced by Loedel in 1851, but has received the support of Passavant, and other respectable authorities. Nagler, however, refuses to accept their conclusions, and maintains that the author of the chiaroscuros signed Io. V., known as J. Ulrich Pilgrim, is perfectly distinct from Io. Vuechtlin, the master of the Passio of 1508. For further information as to this controversy see H. Loedel's 'Des Strassburger Malers und Formschniders Jolann Wechtlin, genannt Pilgrim,' Leipzig, 1863; Passavant, 'Le Peintre-Graveur,' vol. iii. p. 327; Nagler, 'Die Monogrammisten,' vol. iv. n. 209.

WEDGWOOD, JOHN TAYLOR, engraver, was born about 1783. He practised in London, and in 1812 was employed on plates from the Elgin marbles. He worked in line, and has left some good historical plates as well as a series of portraits, among others those of Byron, Scott, and Bernardin de St. Pierre. He died at Clapham on the 6th March, 1856.

WEELING, ANSELM, was born at Bois-le-Duc in 1675. His father, an officer in the service of the States General, intended him for the profession of arms, but yielding to the disposition he discovered for art, finally placed him under an obscure painter, named Delang. His real training, however, was won by the study of the most fashionable masters of the Dutch school, particularly Godfried Schalcken and Adriaan van der Werff. His best pictures are those he painted in imitation of Schalcken's candle-lights. In the latter part of his life he is said to have given way to intemperance. He died in 1749.

WEENIX, JAN, (or WEENINX,) son of Jan Baptist Weenix, was born at Amsterdam in 1640. He was instructed by his father, and, at the death of the latter, had made sufficient progress to prosecute his studies without further assistance. Though less versatile than his father, he also painted landscapes, animals, figures, portraits, and architecture. But he particularly excelled in the representation of dead game, in which he may be said to have equalled any artist of his country. His celebrity in that branch induced the Elector Palatine, Johann Wilhelm, to invite him to his court, and for him he painted many of his best pictures. Jan Weenix died at Amsterdam in 1719. Works:

WEENIX, JAN BAPTIST, (or WEENINX,) was born at Amsterdam in 1621. He was the son of an older Jan Weenix, an architect of considerable celebrity, who died when Jan Baptist was very young, so that he was placed by his mother with a bookseller, with the intention of bringing him up to that business. But such was his inclination for drawing, that he was permitted to follow the bent of his genius, and he first became a scholar of Johannes Mikcker, but afterwards of Abraham Bloemaert. Under the latter master his progress was rapid. On leaving the school of Bloemaert, he passed two years under Nicolaes Moijart. When he was eighteen he found himself able to stand alone, and painted several pictures which were very favourably received. He now (1642) set out on a visit to Italy. His talents recommended him to many of the principal personages at Rome. Cardinal Pamphili was among his protectors, and not only favoured him with commissions, but settled a pension on him. That prelate was desirous of retaining Weenix at Rome, but the solicitations of his family, and his desire to shine among his own countrymen, induced him to return to Holland, after an absence of four years. He at once received extensive employment. He practised at Amsterdam until 1649, when he moved to Utrecht. In 1657 he installed himself at the Château Ter Mey, near Utrecht, and there, having acquired the reputation of one of the most distinguished artists of his country, he died, in the prime of life, in 1660. Weenix painted history, portraits, genre subjects, landscapes, animals, and dead game, but his forte was Italian seaports, enriched with noble architecture, and filled with figures. In the Duke of Sutherland's gallery there is a landscape by J. B. Weenix, in which there is a tomb inscribed with the famous epitaph :

Cy git le père, cy git la mère,
Cy git la sœur, cy git la frère,
Cy git la femme, et le mari,
Et il n'y a que deux corps ici.

1651. Giovan. Battista Weenix.

Bartsch attributes two etchings to J. B. Weenix, 'The Bull,' and 'The Mun seated;' Weigel describes five others, all containing animals or figures.

WEERDT, or WERT. See DE WEERT.

WEESOP, —, is stated, in the 'Anecdotes of Painting in England,' to have arrived here in 1641, a little before the death of Van Dyck, of whose manner he was a successful imitator. He left England in 1649, saying, "he would never live in a country where they cut off their king's head, and were not ashamed of the action."

WEET. See DÜWERT.

WEGERT, AUGUST, painter, born at Berlin in 1801, was a pupil of Schadow. He painted portraits and historical pictures, and in 1825 competed for the grand prize, the subject of his composition being 'Danæ and Perseus.' His non-success is said to have so preyed upon his mind as to have caused his death, which took place in 1825.

WEHLE, HEINRICH THEODOR, draughtsman and painter, was born at Förtschen, near Görlitz, in 1778. He learned drawing under Nathe, and in 1793 entered the Dresden Academy, and studied landscape under Klengel. In 1802 he went to Russia, with Choiseul Gouffier, and from thence was sent by the Czar to make drawings in the Caucasus and Persia. In this tour he was accompanied by Count Puschkin. He died at Kreba, near Görlitz, in 1805.

WEHNERT, EDWARD HENRY, painter in water-colours, was born in London in 1813. His parents were German, and sent him to Göttingen for his education. He returned to England about 1833, and began the study of art. He at first exhibited in Suffolk Street and at the British Institution. He afterwards worked for a time in Paris and in Jersey, returning to London in 1837. He was elected an associate of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours the same year. In 1845 he was a competitor at Westminster Hall. In 1858 he visited Italy, but weak health prevented his doing as much there as he had hoped. He died, unmarried, on the 15th of September, 1868. His works were as a rule large drawings of figure subjects, good in drawing but bad in colour, and German in general character. Works :

WEIDE, ROGER VON DER. See VAN DER WEYDEN

WEIGEL, CHRISTOPH, a German engraver, was born at Redwitz in Bohemia, in 1654. Between 1666 and 1691 he visited successively Hof, Jena, Frankfort, Vienna, and Augsburg, to study the different branches of engraving. He finally settled at Nuremberg as an engraver and dealer in prints. He died in 1725. He engraved a series of subjects from the Bible, entitled 'Sacra Scriptura loquens in imaginibus,' &c. Each of the two hundred and ten plates contains four subjects, which appear to be all engraved by himself, from his own designs. There is also a mediocre mezzotint by him, inscribed 'Carolus V Dei gratia Lotharingæ Barri, &c. Dux. C. Weigel f. et. ex. 1688.'

WEIGEL, HANS, was a draughtsman, engraver on wood, and printer, at Nuremberg; he was at work as early as 1535, and died in or about 1590. He marked his cuts HW. These letters are found on portraits, and on a woodcut of two unruly horses, one of which appears to have just thrown his rider. He is also known by a book of costumes, by a portrait of Hans Sachs, and by some ornamental titles, some of which have his initials, or the inscription—Gedruckt zu Nurrberg bey Hans Weygel Formschneyder, bey dem Sonnenbad.

WEIJDMANS, N., (or WEIJDEMAN ?) is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a small original print of a country surgeon performing an operation on a woman's forehead. There were two portrait painters of the name of Weijdejan; FREDRIK WILLEM, who was born in 1668, and died in 1750; and KAREL EMILIUS, his cousin, or nephew, born in 1685, and died in 1735. The latter is said also to have engraved.

WEIJERMAN, JAKOB CAMPO, landscape and flower painter, was born at Breda in 1679, and is said to have been a scholar of Ferdinand van Kessel. While quite young he showed much talent, but a very dissolute character. His mother expelled him from home, and he went first to Antwerp and then Paris, improving his art, but committing fresh excesses. At Lyons he formed an intimacy with Cartonche, and at Rome with Van Dyck, but could never rest long in one place. From Rome he travelled through Germany to the Hague. Here he eloped with a widow to London, where he squandered her property and then returned to Holland. He next published a periodical which was successful; but an attack upon the East India Company led to his imprisonment for life. He died in prison at the Hague in March, 1747. He published the 'Lives of the Dutch Painters,' in four volumes, a compilation from Houbraken, disfigured by gross falsehoods and absurdities. There is a flower-piece by him in the Amsterdam Museum.

WEINER, HANS, (or WEINHER, sometimes called JOHANSEN WEYNERS,) was a painter and engraver of Weilheim, in Bavaria, and was in the service of the Duchess Maximiliana as valet de chambre. He studied under Frederik Sustris, and published his first print in 1610. He afterwards worked under Christoph Schwarz, after whom he engraved several plates. On an etching by him of Christ seated on a stone, and surrounded by soldiers holding lances and flags, is a monogram formed of H and W, with a bunch of grapes. It is to be noted that the initials H W were used by other artists of about the same period, such as Hans Weigel (q. v.), and it is possible that some of the prints attributed to Weiner may be by other hands.

WEINHER, PETER, a designer and engraver, and also assayer of the Mint to the Duke of Bavaria, lived at Munich about 1580. Bartsch has described twelve prints by him. He signed his engravings with his name, or with the initials P. W. V. B. (Peter Weinher Vadarinus Bavarus), and occasionally W. B. F. (Weinherus Bavarus Fecit).

WEIROTTER, FRANZ EDMUND, was born at Innsbruck in 1730. After learning the rudiments of design in his native city and at Mayence, he went to Paris, where he studied under J. G. Wille, and became an able landscape draughtsman. He afterwards visited Italy, and brought back to Paris a large collection of sketches in red chalk and sepia. In 1767 he was appointed Professor to the Vienna Academy. He died at Vienna in 1771. He etched a great number of landscapes, views of ruins, bridges, churches, cottages, &c., which are formed into sets and numbered. A collection of several series, consisting in all of one hundred and eighty-six plates, was published in 1760 and succeeding years. The following are among the best:

A set of twelve Views in Normandy.

Twelve Views in Italy; dedicated to Prince Kaunitz.

A set of twelve Views in Italy; dedicated to Prince Staremberg.

Twelve Views in Italy; dedicated to Duke Albert of Saxe-Teschen.

WEISHUN, SAMUEL, was a German engraver, who worked from 1627 to 1650, and resided at Dresden. He produced a considerable number of portraits, which are executed with the burin. Among them is a head inscribed Daniel Senvestus, Wittenb. Profess. 1627. According to Professor Christ, he engraved a set of portraits of the Princes of Saxony. Zani states that he was a goldsmith as well as a designer and engraver.

WEISS, BARTHOLOMÄUS IGNAZ, painter and etcher, was born at Munich in 1730. He was a son and pupil of FRANZ JOSEPH WEISS. He painted miniatures and portraits in oil, and was a miniature painter to the Bavarian court. He was, however, best known by his numerous etchings of portraits, and of historical, Biblical, and allegorical subjects. Some of these were after Rembrandt, Salvator Rosa, and Dietrich, but the majority were from his own designs. He died at Munich in 1815.

WEISS, DAVID, engraver, was born at Strigno, in Tyrol, in 1775. He studied under Föger in Vienna, and afterwards in Italy. After his return he settled in Vienna, and was chiefly employed in engraving, in stipple, small portraits of notable persons for pocket-books and almanacs. He died in 1846. His best plate is 'The Storm,' after Fendi.

WEISS, ELEAZAR. See ALBIN.

WEISS, FERDINAND, was a portrait painter and draughtsman, who worked extensively for the Berlin Art Union. He died at Berlin in 1878.

WEISSBROD, KARL WILHELM, an engraver, was born at Ludwigsburg about 1750. He was probably first instructed by his father, JOHANN PHILIPP WEISSBROD (who was court painter from 1736 to 1790); but subsequently he went to Paris, where he became a pupil of J. G. Wille, and engraved a great number of landscapes after Berchem, Bril, Hobbema, Ruysdael, and other masters. About 1780 he went to Hamburg, where he etched a few landscapes, and made both drawings and etchings from the coins in the cabinet of Count Bentink. He also executed several plates for the Poullain, Choiseul, and Praslin 'Galleries.' He died in 1806.

WEISSE, GOTTHELF WILHELM, was born at Dresden in 1751, and was instructed in engraving by Stölzel and afterwards by Giuseppe Canale. He had already given proof of ability, when he was invited to the court of Hesse-Cassel, where the Landgrave appointed him his principal engraver. Among others, we have the following prints by him:

The Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel; after Graff.

The Landgravine of Hesse-Cassel; after Tischbein.

Apollo playing on the Lyre; after the same.

A Landscape, with a Waterfall; after Everdingen.

A Landscape, moonlight; after Dietrich.

WEISSENBRUCH, JOHANNES, a Dutch painter, and pupil of Salomon Leonardus Vermeer, was born at the Hague in 1822, and died there in 1880. The Rijks Museum at Amsterdam has two views of towns by him.

WEITSCH, FRIEDRICH GEORG, historical painter, was born at Brunswick in 1758, and was the son of the painter Johann Friedrich Weitsch. He entered Tischbein's atelier at Cassel in 1776, and visiting Holland and Italy for improvement, studied chiefly the works of the Dutch animal painters. A few successful portraits, however, had already shown where his real talent lay, and he subsequently devoted himself to figure painting. In 1781 he returned to Brunswick, and six years later was appointed court painter at Berlin. In 1797 he became director of the Berlin Academy, and died in that city, May 28, 1828. Among his best portraits were those of Soult, Alexander von Humboldt (Berlin National Gallery) of Jerusalem, the father of Goethe's "Werther" (do.), of his own father (Brunswick Gallery), of the Prince of Orange, and the Hereditary Prince and Princess of Brunswick.

WEITSCH, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, called 'Pacha Weitsch,' from his fancy for Oriental costumes, was born at Hessendamm, near Wolfenbüttel, in 1723. He was the son of a house-tiler, but from his youth had a bent towards art. Having become a sergeant in the army, his colonel once called upon him to copy a few landscapes, which, though his first attempts at painting, were so successful that he thenceforth devoted himself exclusively to art. He copied pictures in the gallery at Salzdahlen, and was then appointed to a post in the porcelain factory at Furstenberg. He pursued oil painting at the same time, and studied from nature and the old Dutch masters. His works were at first small landscapes and views of towns, but later on he took to woody scenes, and especially oak forests with cattle. In 1788 he became inspector of the Salzdahlen gallery, and died in that place in 1803. Four landscapes by him are in the gallery at Brunswick.

WELBRONNER. See WILBORN.

WELL, ARNOLD VAN, born at Dordrecht in 1772, was a scholar of Andries Vermeulen, and painted cabinet pictures in the manner of the Van Stry, also winter scenes, and landscapes by moonlight. He died in 1818.

WELLER, DAVID, was born at Kirchberg in Saxony in 1759, and after studying at the Meissen school of design, was placed in the porcelain factory, where he painted historical pictures and portraits upon china. Later on he took to flower painting in oil and gouache, and to portraiture in pastel, but he had to struggle hard for a livelihood. His merits at last procured him the appointment of court painter to the Elector, but this preferment only reached him a few days before his death. He died at Dresden in 1789.

WELLER, J. The print-room of the British Museum possesses the chalk portrait of a painter of this name, executed with care and knowledge, and inscribed se ipse pinxit, ætat 30, 1718.

WELLS, JOANNA MARY, née BOYCE, born in 1831, painted portraits, genre pictures, and occasionally landscapes. At the age of eighteen she entered the school of Mr. Carey, and afterwards worked under Mr. Leigh, in Newman Street. Her first exhibited work was a life-size head, which appeared at the Academy in 1855. In the same year she went to Paris, where she joined the ladies' class in Couture's atelier. The year 1857 she passed in Italy, and in December was married at Rome to Mr. H. T. Wells, now R.A. Before returning to England, she painted the greater part of 'The Boys' Crusade,' exhibited at the Academy in 1859. Subsequent exhibited works were: 'The Outcasts,' 'The Heather-Gatherers,' 'Do I like Butter?' 'La Veneziana,' 'Peep-Bo!' and 'A Bird of God.' This last was left complete on her easel at the time of her death. She died in child-bed, on July 15, 1861.

WELLS, WILLIAM FREDERICK, an English landscape painter in water-colour, born in London in 1762. He was taught by J. J. Barralet, and in his early years wavered between pastel and oil. One of the earliest practitioners in water-colours, he took an active part in the foundation of the Old Society in 1804, and in 1806 was its President. Between 1795 and 1813 he exhibited at the Royal Academy, and also, between 1805 and 1812, with his own society. He travelled on the continent, extending his tours to Norway and Sweden. The latter half of his life was chiefly occupied in teaching drawing, of which he was professor at Addiscombe for many years. He died in 1836. There is a water-colour drawing, 'The Dawn,' by him in the South Kensington Museum.

WELSCH, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, painter, born at Nieder-Wesel in 1796. He served as a volunteer in the war of liberation, and afterwards studied art in Berlin and in Holland. He first became known by his genre pictures and portraits, but afterwards settled at the Hague, and produced chiefly views of Dutch towns. He finally became director of the drawing school at Münster, working also as a restorer of pictures, and publishing a book on that subject.

WELTE, GOTTLIEB, painter and etcher, was born at Mayence in 1745, and first taught by his father, an obscure painter of landscapes and animals. He afterwards settled at Frankfort, where he painted the figures in the landscapes of Schütz. Later on he visited Russia, and, after maintaining himself for a time by his musical talents, died in a village near Revel in 1790. In the castle of Oberpehlen, near Dorpat, he decorated a room, and also painted many conversation pieces, bambocciate, and caricatures. There is a series of fifty-eight etchings by him.

WENČELAS, (or WENCESLAUS). See OLLMÜTZ, WENZEL VON.

WENDELSTADT, KARL FRIEDRICH, painter and etcher, was born at Neuwied in 1786. He was early left an orphan, and was brought up as an artist by his foster-father, the art connoisseur Dr. Grambs, of Frankfort, who at last sent him to Paris for improvement. He there cultivated historical and portrait painting, and upon his return in 1817 was appointed inspector of the Städel Institute. He also acquired a good collection of his own, and was a teacher of drawing. In 1840 he hanged himself at Antwerp. He painted many portraits and altar-pieces, and has left ten etchings after various masters.

WENDLER, FRIEDRICH MORITZ, a German painter, was born at Dresden in 1814, and died there October 16, 1872. His 'Death of the Chamois Hunter' is in the Dresden Gallery.

WENETZIANOW, ALEXEI GAWRILOWITSCH, was born at Néjine in 1775, and studied in the St. Petersburg Academy. He painted portraits, house interiors, and genre subjects, and after becoming a member of his Academy, died in the government of Twer, December 5, 1846. Among his works are:

The Threshing-floor.

Peasant Girl receiving the Communion.

A Peasant Lad. (Hermitage.)

WENG, — (WENGH, WENIG, or WENING). This name is affixed to a print dated 1509, representing a man and woman almost naked. Over the head of a man, who is attended by a dog, is written Paris, and over the woman, Egenoe, probably in mistake for Enone. The print appears to be by a German, working in the style of the early Italian engravers.

WENG, J. G. (or WENIG). This name is affixed to a print representing 'Minerva visiting the Muses.' It is etched in the manner afterwards employed by Romeyn De Hooghe, and dated 1630.

WENNG, KARL HEINRICH, painter and lithographer, was born at Nördlingen in 1787. He studied art in his native town, and afterwards went to Stuttgart to learn engraving under Müller. He soon determined, however, to devote himself to painting, and after travelling in Switzerland and Italy, he went to Munich, to work under Langer. In 1816 he was appointed professor of drawing to the Lithographic Institution at Stuttgart. While there, he executed a number of original lithographs, designed a large cartoon of the Flood, and lithographed Weitbrecht's frieze in the Schloss Rosenstein. In 1827 he left Stuttgart for Munich, where he was employed at the Cotta Literary Institute. Returning to Stuttgart in 1837, he worked industriously both as a painter and teacher of art; he published a book on perspective, and brought out a new invention in lithography, by which plates could be reproduced without a press.

WENTZEL, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, was born at Berlin about 1660, and studied perspective and decorative painting under the elder Harms. He was employed by the Elector Friedrich of Brandenburg, and received a stipend from him to enable him to visit Italy. After his return he painted a 'Coronation Ceremony at Königsberg,' and four allegorical cartoons for tapestry; he was also a painter of portraits, and of scenes for court festivities. He settled at Dresden after the death of Friedrich, and died there in 1729.

WENTZEL, MICHAEL, was born at Grossschönau in Saxony about 1790, and was for a time dancing-master at the Leipsic theatre. He however took to flower-painting in gouache, and afterwards worked in oil at Vienna. About 1828 he went to Italy, and there commenced the painting of landscapes, panoramas, &c. Later on he settled at Leipsic, where he published a series of motives for ornaments.

WENZEL. See OLLMÜTZ, W. VON.

WERDMÜLLER, JOHANN RUDOLPH, painter and modeller, was born at Zurich in 1639. His father was a distinguished officer in the Venetian and Swiss services, and possessed a collection which incited the son to the choice of art as a profession. He studied for three years under Konrad Meyer, and then worked independently, directing his attention chiefly to landscapes and to civil and military architecture. He also produced a number of portraits, studied flower painting under Marel at Frankfort, and visited Holland. He was drowned in the Sihl, in 1668.

WERENFELS, RUDOLPH, was born at Basle in 1629. He received his first instruction at Amsterdam, but afterwards studied some time in Italy. He chiefly practised portraiture, and was employed at several German courts. He died in 1673.

WERFF (or WERF). See VAN DER WERFF.

WERNER, ANNA MARIA, (or MARIANNE, née HAYD), was born at Dantzic in 1688. She studied under her father, Andreas Hayd, and in 1705 married the painter CHRISTOPH JOSEPH WERNER of Augsburg. Subsequently she became noted as a miniature painter at Berlin, and in this capacity was invited to the court of Dresden in 1721. She died in that city in 1753.

WERNER, JACQUES CHRISTOPHE, natural history painter, was born in France in 1798. He was the author of an 'Atlas of European Birds,' and was appointed painter to the Museum of Natural History at the Jardin des Plantes, in recognition of his skill in the delineation of birds and animals. Many drawings by him, on vellum, are in the Museum there. He died in Paris in 1856.

WERNER, JOSEPH, was born at Berne in 1637. He was the son of an obscure painter, by whom he was first instructed. He was afterwards sent to Frankfort, where he became a scholar of Matthäus Merian the younger. After a time his preceptor introduced him to a M. Müller, an amateur of fortune, who invited Werner to accompany him to Rome. During his residence there, he copied the works of Pietro da Cortona and Andrea Sacchi; but his predilection for high finish induced him to take to painting portraits and historical subjects in miniature. In returning from Italy he passed through France, where his talents attracted the notice of Louis XIV. He was invited to Versailles, where he painted the king, and several personages of the court; and was also employed in historical and emblematical subjects. He was compelled, however, by the intrigues of Le Brun, to leave France, and moved in 1667 to Augsburg, where he painted in the Kreuzkirche, and produced for the Electress of Bavaria seven pictures from the Life of the Virgin, and some allegories for the Elector. He was then invited to Vienna, where he painted a portrait of Leopold I. About this period he recommenced painting in oil, in which he was thoroughly successful. Returning to Berne, he painted a large picture, 'The Marriage of Justice and Prudence,' for the Rathhaus, which procured him an invitation from Frederick, Elector of Brandenburg and first King of Prussia, to take the post of director of the newly-founded Berlin Academy; this post he held from 1696 to 1707, when a change of ministry caused his displacement. He died at Berne in 1710. A 'Temptation of St. Anthony' by him is in the Augsburg Gallery; an 'Allegory of Avarice' in that of Munich; and a 'Tobias burying the Dead' in that of Vienna.

WERNHER, a monk of Tegernsee in the 11th century, was famous for his skill as illuminator, glass painter, and ornamentist.

WERTMÜLLER, ADOLF ULRICH, a Swedish painter, was born at Stockholm in 1749. He went to Paris in his youth and worked in the Academy there. In 1787 he was appointed painter to the King of Sweden. In 1797 he emigrated to America, where he died at some date unknown. Nagler wrongly asserts that he died at Stockholm in 1811. He was a member of the Stockholm Academy.

WERY, GERARD, one of the pupils of Rubens, born in 1605, died in 1644. He was known chiefly as a copyist of his master's works, and never attained to any distinction in the school.

WERY, PIERRE NICOLAS, born in Paris in 1770, died at Lyons in 1827. The Lyons Museum has a landscape by him.

WESEL, TELMAN VON. See TELMAN.

WEST, BENJAMIN, was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, in 1738. From early childhood he evinced an inclination for drawing. His biographers dwell on his childish attempts, and would persuade the world that he was a prodigy in art from his cradle. At eight years old he received some lessons in the management of colour from a party of Cherokee Indians, who were pleased with his rude drawings of birds, fruits, and flowers. On the death of his mother, in his eighteenth year, he moved to Philadelphia, and afterwards to New York, painting portraits in both places. He found this profitable, and was enabled to amass money; but he yearned to be acquainted with the higher walks of art. For that purpose he planned a journey to Rome, which he was enabled to carry out by the help of a merchant named Kelly, and one Allen, a shipowner. He arrived at Rome in July, 1760. An American artist was a novelty in Rome, and caused a sensation. Having a letter of introduction to Lord Grantham, he was at once introduced to the best society. He stayed in Italy about three years, visiting Florence, Bologna, Venice, and Parma, making copies of celebrated pictures, and painting some originals. When his funds ran short, he received a fresh supply from his two merchant friends, and from the Englishman, Gavin Hamilton. In the middle of the year 1763 West arrived in London, at first with no intention of remaining in England; but his reception there decided his future course. Patronized by the Church and by royalty, and favourably received by artists and literary men, he sent for the lady to whom he had been engaged before he left America, married, and settled for life in England. For nearly sixty years he held a prominent position among the painters of the country; he produced numerous pictures both from sacred and profane history, and probably his works had some effect, at the time, in inciting others to attempt such subjects; but he did not create a school, nor did his style survive him. He struck a blow, however, for realism in art. His 'Death of Wolfe' contained a startling innovation in the substitution of the military regulation coat, the cocked hat, and the musket with the bayonet for the ample paludamentum, the helmet, spear, and shield. In 1765 West was chosen both a member and a director of the Incorporated Society of Artists, and in the following year sent 'Pylades and Orestes' and 'The Continence of Scipio' to their exhibition. In 1768 he was one of the four commissioned to draw up the plan for the Royal Academy, and in 1772 was appointed historical painter to the king. On the death of Sir Joshua Reynolds, West was elected to the president's chair, and took his place on the 24th March, 1792. He delivered an inaugural address, which was much applauded, but, says his biographer, it must have caused him little thought, as it dwelt on but two topics—the excellence of British art, and the great benevolence of his Majesty. He died on the 11th March, 1820, and was buried in St. Paul's cathedral. Many of his more important works were painted for George III. Those formerly in the National Gallery have been removed to provincial museums, as may be seen by the following list:

WEST, CHARLES, an English engraver, was born in London about 1750. He produced many plates in stipple, and also in a mixed process of etching and stipple. His best plate was 'The Silver Age,' after Henry Walton (1787).

WEST, FRANCIS ROBERT, an Irish historical painter, and son of Robert West junior, was born in 1748. After studying under Boucher and Van Loo in Paris, he succeeded his father as master of the Dublin Society's School. There he acquired a high reputation as a teacher and draughtsman. At the London Free Society he exhibited in 1774 an 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' and at the Royal Academy in 1790 a couple of portraits. He died in Dublin in 1809.

WEST, JOHANNES HENDRIK VAN, a modern Dutch painter, was born in 1803. He was a pupil of C. Kruseman; he practised art only as an amateur, but one of his pictures, 'The Poet Cats and his Family,' was crowned by the Felix Meritis Society, of Amsterdam; and another, 'The Billet Doux,' is in the Rijks Museum, in the same city. West was elected a member of the Amsterdam Academy. He died in 1881.

WEST, RAPHAEL LAMAR, an English historical painter, born in 1769. He was the son of Benjamin West, and studied in the schools of the Academy. Though gifted with considerable powers, he did not reach success, owing, it is said, to want of industry. He inherited a competence from his father. He died at Bushey in 1850. 'Orlando and Oliver,' in the Shakespeare Gallery, was by him.

WEST, ROBERT, topographical draughtsman, drew a series of views of ancient buildings in London and Westminster, which were published between 1736 and 1739.

WEST, ROBERT, an Irish historical painter, born in Waterford early in the 18th century. He studied under Van Loo in Paris, where he gained the first medal in the Academy. For many years he was master of the school of the Royal Dublin Society, but was at last compelled to resign through mental infirmity. He died in 1770.

WEST, ROBERT LUCIUS, an Irish historical painter, the son of F. R. West, whom he succeeded in 1809 as master of the Dublin Society's School. He exhibited on two occasions, 1808 and 1822, with the London Royal Academy, and was elected one of the original members of the Hibernian Academy in 1823. There is a portrait by him of his father, in the Hibernian Academy. He died after 1824.

WEST, SAMUEL, portrait and genre painter, was born at Cork about 1810. He came to London, and began to exhibit at the Royal Academy in 1840, contributing some twenty-three pictures between that year and 1867, when his name appears for the last time. His subjects were chiefly portraits, and portrait-groups of children. He painted a few historical subjects, and in the last years of his life made many excellent copies in water-colour from the old masters. Works:

Cardinal Wolsey leaving London after his fall.
Charles I. taught drawing by Rubens.

WEST, WILLIAM, landscape painter, was born in 1801, at Bristol, where he practised for most of his life. He began exhibiting at the Academy in 1845, with a picture from Bible history, but afterwards turned his attention to landscape. His style was imitative, and his subjects taken from Wales, Norway, and the coast of Devonshire. In 1851 he was elected a member of the Society of British Artists, to whose exhibitions he was a constant contributor. He died at Chelsea in January, 1861.

WESTALL, RICHARD, was born at Hertford in 1765. He was apprenticed to an heraldic engraver who lived in Gutter Lane, Cheapside. Towards the end of his time he was permitted by his master to attend the Royal Academy schools, where he formed an acquaintance with Lawrence. He and Lawrence afterwards took a house, jointly, at the corner of Greek Street and Soho Square. It had two entrances; on the door in Greek Street was placed the name of Westall, on that in the Square the name of Lawrence. The subjects Westall chose, and the style in which he represented them, were suitable to his time, and he became a favourite with the public. He was one of the early practitioners in water-colour, but it is chiefly as an illustrator of books that he is now remembered. His 'vignettes' are very numerous; some of the best are in editions of Crabbe, Moore, Gray, and the 'Arabian Nights.' He was employed by Alderman Boydell to illustrate Milton and to paint five subjects for the Shakspeare Gallery; and his representations of Church of England services and ceremonies were popular with the serious part of the public. Westall was elected an Associate of the Academy in 1792, and an Academician in 1794. In 1808 he published a volume of poems, with the title, 'A Day in Spring,' with plates engraved by J. and C. Heath after his own designs. Towards the close of his life he lost much of his fortune in amateur attempts at picture dealing. Westall gave lessons in drawing to the Princess Victoria, now her most gracious Majesty. He died on the 4th December, 1836. There is a 'Cassandra prophesying the Fall of Troy' by him, in water-colour, in the South Kensington Museum. His 'Christ crowned with Thorns' is in All Souls' Church, Langham Place.

WESTALL, WILLIAM, brother of Richard Westall, was born at Hertford on the 12th October, 1781. He studied under his brother, and in the schools of the Royal Academy. When only nineteen, he was appointed draughtsman to Captain Flinder's Australian expedition. After being out some two years, his ship was wrecked off the north coast of Australia, and he rescued by a ship bound for China. There he remained several months, visiting the interior and making sketches, which have now much interest. From China he made his way to Bombay, whence he explored the Mahratta country, making drawings at Kurlie and Elephanta. Returning to England after an absence of four years, he soon afterwards set out for the West Indies, taking Madeira on the way, and there coming near to losing his life by a second shipwreck. In 1805 he returned to England, and began to contribute frequently to the Academy. In 1811 he was elected an Associate of the Water-Colour Society, and in the year after a full member. This honour he resigned, and a few months later he was elected an A.R.A. His work was chiefly topographical landscape in water-colour. He died from the effects of an accident on January 22nd, 1850. Works :

'Picturesque Tour on the River Thames.' (Jointly with Samuel Owen.)

WESTCOTT, PHILIP, an English portrait painter, was born in 1815. In the early part of his career he lived in London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1844 and 1861, also occasionally at the British Institution and in Suffolk Street. His practice was, however, chiefly in the north of England, and the greater part of his career was spent in Liverpool and Manchester, where his portraits were held in high repute. Examples are to be seen in the Salford Museum. He died at Manchester in January, 1878.

WESTENBERG, PIETER GEORGE, painter, was born at Nymeguen in 1791. In 1808 he began the study of art under J. Hulswit, and at the Amsterdam Academy, and afterwards became known as a painter of landscapes and town views. He was a member of the Royal Academy of Amsterdam. He died at Brummen, December 26th, 1873. In the Rijks-Museum there is a 'View of Amsterdam in Winter' by him, and in the Rotterdam Museum a 'Rustic Scene.'

WESTERBAEM, J., a portrait painter, was living in 1659 at the Hague, and painted the portraits of Arnold Gesteramus and Jacob Batliere, which were engraved by Hendrik Bary.

WESTERHOUT, ARNOLD VAN, an engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1666. After having received some instruction in design and engraving in his native city, he went to Italy, and worked for some time at Florence for the Grand Duke Ferdinand. In 1700 he established himself at Rome, where he engraved several plates from his own designs, and after the works of Daniele da Volterra, Maratti, Lenardi, and others; also some portraits in mezzotint. He died at Rome in 1725. Plates by him :

Cardinal Giacomo Antonio Moriga; after Lod. Ant. David.
Prince Rospoli; after the same.
Michelangelo Tamburini, General of the Jesuits; after Ant. Odati.
The Transfiguration; after Raphael.

The Abjuration of the Priest, Miguel Molinos.

WESTERMAYR, CHRISTIANE HENRIETTE, née STÖTZER, painter, etcher, and embroiderer, was born at Weimar in 1772, and instructed in the school of her native town. About 1800 she married Konrad Westermayr, whom she afterwards assisted in many of his works. She herself painted portraits in oil, and copied the works of Raphael, Leonardo, Van Dyck, and other old masters. She died at Hanau in 1830.

WESTERMAYR, KONRAD, painter and engraver, was born at Hanau in 1765. He was the son of a goldsmith, and learnt drawing in the school of his birthplace, afterwards producing pastel portraits upon parchment, and miniatures. A pension from the Landgrave enabled him to study at the Cassel Academy. He afterwards studied engraving under Lips at Weimar. In 1807 he became a teacher at Hanau, and died there in 1826. Two of his best plates are a 'Madonna' after Guido, and 'Götz von Berlichingen' after Tischbein.

WETZEL, JAKOB, draughtsman and painter, was born at Hirslanden, near Zurich, in 1781, and studied under Walser. He painted landscapes in water-colours, chiefly views among the Italian lakes. He died at Richterschwyl in 1834.

WEYDE, JULIUS, genre painter, was born at Berlin in 1822, and first studied at the Academy there. He afterwards became a pupil of Venne-man at Antwerp and of Delaroche in Paris. In 1848 he settled in Berlin, and became well known by his scenes from bourgeois life. He died near Stettin in 1869.

WEYDMÜLLER, JOHANNA ELISABETH, née KRÜGER, was born at Sorau in 1725. She was her father's pupil, and became a clever painter of flowers, fruit, and portraits upon glass. She taught drawing to the Saxon Royal family, and died in 1807.

WEYER, GABRIEL, a German painter, etcher, and wood engraver, was born at Nuremberg about the year 1580, and was one of the most productive workers of his time. He painted historical and allegorical pictures, and made many designs for the engravers. He also executed several woodcuts (which are marked with a monogram composed of a G. and a W.), and left a number of pen drawings washed in Indian ink. He died at Coburg in 1640.

WEYER, HANS. See WEINER.

WEYER, JAKOB MATHIAS, (or JOHANN MATHIAS,) was born at Hamburg at the beginning of the 17th century, and was a pupil of J. A. Decker, under whom he painted horses and battles. He afterwards studied under Wouwerman. He chiefly produced landscapes with rustic figures and skirmishes. He died about 1690. The Brunswick Gallery contains the following pictures by him:

Brunswick, Gallery. The Battle with the Amalekites.
 " " The Conversion of Saul.
 " " A Camp.

WEYERMAN. See WEIJERMAN.

WEYGANDT, SEBASTIAN, was born at Bruchsal in 1780, and taught successively by Engelhard, the sculptor Günther, and Schweickart. He settled as a portrait painter, first at Augsburg, and afterwards at Wallerstein, where he painted the family of the prince. He was also for a time court painter to the Margrave of Ansbach, and to the Prince of Hohenlohe. In 1804 he was at Breslau, where he painted several French officers, among them Prince Jerome Bonaparte, who took him to Cassel as his court painter. He was appointed director to the projected Westphalian Academy in Rome, but the Westphalian kingdom being put an end to, he never entered upon the office. He died at Cassel in 1824.

WEYLER, MADAME. See KUGLER.

WEYLER, or WEYLLER, JEAN BAPTISTE, a painter of portraits in pastel, miniature, and enamel, was born at Strasburg in 1749. He worked in Paris, and became an Academician in 1779, his reception work being a portrait in enamel of the Comte d'Angivilliers, director-general of architecture to Louis XVI., which is now in the Louvre. He exhibited miniatures of many distinguished persons at the Salon, between 1775 and 1790, among them those of Gustavus Adolphus, Turenne, and Peter the Great, etc., painted on commission for the French Government. His pupil, Mademoiselle Kugler, who became his wife, worked in the same genre. He died in Paris, July 25, 1791.

WEYNEERS. See WEINER.

WHARTON, PHILIP F., an American painter, was born at Philadelphia in 1841, studied in the Academy in that city, and later in Dresden and Paris. His picture of 'Perdita at the Sheep-shearing Festival' received a medal at the Philadelphia Exhibition of 1876. He died at Media in 1880.

WHEATLEY, FRANCIS, was born in London in 1747. His father, a master-tailor, placed him at first under a good teacher, and afterwards at Shipley's drawing-school, which he left after a time for the schools of the Academy. When young he obtained several premiums from the Society of Arts, and, having formed a friendship with Mortimer, he assisted that artist in painting a ceiling at Broomfield Hall, for Lord Melbourne. He was also employed on the decorations at Vauxhall. He met with considerable employment in painting small whole-length portraits, which induced him for some time to make that his particular pursuit. After practising some years in London, he eloped to Dublin, with the wife of Grasse, the painter. In Dublin he was much employed in portraiture, and painted a large picture, representing the 'Irish House of Commons,' in which he introduced portraits of all the more remarkable Irish politicians. On the tardy detection of his irregular course of life he returned to London, where he appears to have now met with no serious obstacle to the pursuit of his profession. He painted a picture of the Gordon Riot, from which Heath engraved an excellent print for Boydell, and became very popular as a painter of rural and domestic subjects, for which he had a peculiar talent. When Boydell projected the Shakespeare Gallery, he was engaged to contribute twelve pictures. He was a contributor also to Macklin's 'Poets' Gallery.' Wheatley first exhibited at the Academy in 1771, his subjects at that time being portraits. Later on he sent genre pictures and landscapes, some in water-colours but more in oil. He frequently drew with the pen, using Indian ink for the shadows. An etching and a mezzotint by him are also known. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1790, and Royal Academician in 1791. He was a martyr to the gout for several years, and died in 1801. In his best work, Wheatley is an excellent painter, approaching Morland in freedom of handling and in sense of beauty. Works:

London. N. Port. Gall. Group of officers, with camp in background.

The second Duke of Newcastle, with a shooting party.

The Disaster (Sir Charles Tennant, Bt.).

The 'Cries of London.'

WHESSELL, JOHN, an English engraver, who was at work in London towards the close of the 18th century. He engraved after Serres, Stothard, Singleton, Gainsborough, and others.

WHICHELO, C—JOHN M—, an English marine painter in water-colours, born towards the close of the 18th century. He practised in London, and became marine painter to the Prince Regent. Between 1810 and 1846 he occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy and the British Institution, but his works chiefly appeared, from 1823 onwards, at the Old Water-Colour Society, of which he was elected an associate in that year. He died in 1865.

WHITAKER, GEORGE, a water-colour painter, born about 1834, who chiefly painted the scenery of his native Devonshire, where he resided for most of his life. He died at Dartmouth, September 16, 1874.

WHITAKER, JAMES WILLIAM, was born at Manchester, and apprenticed to an engraver for calico printers. Coming into a small fortune, he migrated to Llanrwst, North Wales, where he practised landscape painting in water-colours. He was elected an Associate of the Old Water-Colour Society in 1861, and a member in 1864. Falling, however, into habits of intemperance, he failed to improve in his art, and was drowned at Bettws-y-Coed on the 9th September, 1876.

WHITCOMBE, THOMAS, an English marine painter, born about 1760. His works, which dealt with storms, naval battles, &c., appeared at the Royal Academy from 1783 to 1824. His best work was the 'Destruction by night of the Spanish batteries before Gibraltar, 1783.'

WHITE, CHARLES, an English engraver, was born in London in 1751. He was a pupil of Pranker, on leaving whom he quitted line engraving, and worked chiefly, if not entirely, in stipple. He was for some time engaged on trifling subjects from designs by ladies, but in the latter part of his life he was employed on works of more importance, among them a series of plates of 'The Ruins of Rome,' and others for works on natural history. He also helped to illustrate Bell's edition of the Poets, and was the author of some comic drawings, among them a 'Masquerade at the Pantheon.' He married a daughter of Gerard Van der Gucht. He died in Pimlico, August 28, 1785.

WHITE, CHARLES WILLIAM, an English engraver, was born in London early in the 18th century. He was a pupil of George White, and practised from about 1750 to 1785. His plates are chiefly after Stothard, Cosway, Pether and Bunbury.

WHITE, EDWIN, an American painter, born about 1817. He began to paint when only twelve years old, and studied in Paris, Rome, Florence, and Düsseldorf. His pictures were chiefly historical, the subjects of many being taken from American history. Among them we may mention 'Washington resigning his Commission,' 'The first New England Thanksgiving,' 'The Signing of the Compact on the Mayflower.' He died in 1877.

WHITE, GEORGE, the son of Robert White, was born about 1671. He was instructed in drawing and engraving by his father, but first practised as a portrait painter, both in oil and in miniature. After the death of Robert White he finished the plates left incomplete by him, and also engraved some portraits in the same style. Those of the Duke of Ormond and Lord Clarendon, prefixed to the 'Rebellion in Ireland,' may be especially praised. But his best prints are in mezzotint, in using which process he frequently etched the outline before the ground was laid upon the plate. He engraved much after Kneller, and is said to have become so troublesome to that painter by constantly requesting him to touch on proofs, that Sir Godfrey forbade him his house. His death is supposed to have occurred about 1734. A small chalk portrait of Martha Blount by him is dated 1732. The following are his best plates:

WHITE, HENRY, an English wood engraver and pupil of Bewick. He had previously worked under James Lee. Settling in London he produced much good work, notably the illustrations for Hone's 'House that Jack Built,' 'The Matrimonial Ladder,' &c.

WHITE, JOHN BLAKE, an American painter, born in South Carolina, in 1781. He studied for four years in London under Benjamin West, and returning to America, settled at Charleston, where he combined painting with the practice of law. His works, chiefly historical pictures, and portraits, are numerous in America. He was also well known as a writer of plays, essays, &c. He died in 1859.

WHITE, ROBERT, engraver and draughtsman, was born in London in 1645, and was a pupil of David Loggan, for whom he drew and engraved several architectural views. He was much employed in drawing portraits with black lead upon vellum, and in engraving plates from them. The heads of Sir Godfrey Kneller and his brother, in Sandraart's 'Lives of the Painters,' were engraved from drawings by White, whose portrait Sir Godfrey painted in return. In 1674 he engraved the heading to the first 'Oxford Almanack,' and the title-plate to the 'History of Oxford Antiquities.' Few artists have left more English portraits than Robert White. They are frequently disfigured, however, by large, tasteless borders. Most of his plates are executed with the graver; he scraped a few heads in mezzotint, but they are very inferior to his other prints. He made money in the course of his career, but was in poverty at his death, which occurred at Bloomsbury in 1704. Of his numerous portraits (Vertue gives a list of 275), the following are the best:

James I.; after C. Janssens.

George, Earl of Cumberland, habited for a tournament.

Charles I.; after Van Dyck.

Another of Charles I.; after R. Van Voerst.

John, Earl of Radnor, ditto; ditto.

WHITE, THOMAS, engraver, was born in London about 1730. He was for some time employed by Ryland to assist in the backgrounds of his plates, and afterwards engraved the greater part of the architectural prints for Wolf and Gandon's continuation of the 'Vitruvius Britannicus.' His name is also affixed to a landscape after Brueghel, etched by T. Saunders, and finished by White and Ryland. He died in London about the year 1775.

WHOOD, ISAAC, an English portrait painter, born in 1688. Though but a poor artist he obtained a good practice, and was much patronized by the then Duke of Bedford, for whom he made many copies. A suit in Chancery, which he had to defend in his later years, occasioned him much loss. He died in London, February 24, 1752. There is an edition of 'Hudibras' illustrated by him. Amongst his portraits are:

Cambridge. Trin. Hall.	Several Portraits.
Lambeth Palace.	Archbishop Wake. 1736.
Woburn Abbey.	Duke of Marlborough. 1734.
" "	Hon. John Spencer. 1737.

WICAR, JEAN BAPTISTE, (or VICAR), was born at Lille in 1762. He was the son of a cabinet maker, to whom he was for a time apprentice, but entered the school of design in his native town in 1773. In 1780 he went to Paris with a provision from the Lille municipality, and studied painting under David and engraving under Le Bas and Bervic. He accompanied David to Rome, and in 1784 proceeded to Florence, where he made drawings of the entire Pitti collection, to be used for engraving. In one year he produced four hundred drawings from paintings and statues, three hundred from cameos, and one hundred and forty from busts and other portraits. Upon his return he set about the projected engravings, and brought out four volumes between 1789 and 1807. In 1793, returning to the French capital from a second sojourn in Rome, he became a member of the Conservatorium in Paris, and in 1796 was chosen by Bonaparte to inspect the art treasures of Italy, and to select those to be carried off to Paris. About 1800 he settled in Rome, and became well known as a painter of portraits, producing among others those of the Duke and Duchess of Torlonia, of Murat, and of Pius VII. In 1805 he became a member of the Roman Academy of S. Luke, and a few years afterwards director of that of Naples. He died at Rome in 1834, having bequeathed his collection of drawings and works of art to his birthplace, with a fund sufficient to send three pensioners annually to Rome. Pictures:

Joseph interpreting the Dreams. ( Lille —his first picture.)
The Concordat between Pius VII. and Napoleon.
The Raising of the Widow of Nain's son. ( Lille Museum .)

WICHMANN, ADOLPH, historical painter, was born at Celle, Hanover, in 1820, and in 1838 entered the Dresden Academy, where he worked in Bendemann's atelier till 1847. On quitting Dresden in 1847 he worked in Venice and Rome till 1851, and the next year returned to Bendemann. He settled in Dresden, where he died in 1866. His best known pictures are:

Christ the Comforter.
The Request granted. ( Munich, New Pinakothek .)
The Virgin and St. Elizabeth watching the sleeping Child Jesus. ( Liège Gallery .)
Rachel weeping for her Children.

WICHMANN, J., a German engraver, flourished about the year 1683. His name is affixed to a large plate of the Siege of Vienna. The portraits of the German and Turkish generals are introduced at the top, and those of the Emperor of Germany and the Sultan at the bottom.

WICHMANN, OTTO GOTTFRIED, genre painter, was born at Berlin in 1828, and was a pupil of Robert Fleury, in Paris. After a stay of two years in that city he went to Rome, where he died in 1858. His 'Paolo Veronese in Venice,' and 'Catherine de' Medici and the Poisoner,' are in the Berlin National Gallery.

WICKENBERG, PETER GABRIEL, a Swedish landscape and marine painter, born in 1812. He settled in Paris in 1837, and exhibited at the Salon. He died of consumption in 1846. There are by him:

Amsterdam. Fodor Mus.	Winter Scene.
Stockholm. Nat. Gall.	Moonlight on the Dutch coast. 1841.
" "	Winter Scene in Holland. 1840.
" "	Eve mourning for Abel. 1835.
" "	Landscape with Sheep.

WICKER, JOHANN HEINRICH, an engraver, was born at Frankfort in 1723, and died in 1786. His works were chiefly ornamental borders, coats of arms, and vignettes for books; he also engraved a few portraits and painted flowers in water-colours.

WICKSTEAD, PHILIP, was a native of London, and a disciple of Zoffany. He distinguished himself chiefly by painting small whole-length portraits. He was at work about 1773 in Rome. There he became acquainted with Mr. William Beckford, whom he accompanied to Jamaica. He practised there some time as a painter, but afterwards became a planter, and failed. This disappointment caused him to take to drink, and hastened his death, which took place in 1790.

WICKSTEED, JAMES, engraver, was born in 1719. He practised in London, working in the stipple manner, and died July 11, 1791.

WIDEMAN, ELIAS, was a native of Germany, and practised at Augsburg. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, for whom he engraved a great number of portraits, frontispieces, and other plates, from his own designs. His most important work is a set of portraits of illustrious personages, published at Augsburg in 1648.

WIEGMANN, RUDOLPH, a well-known German architect, practised occasionally as a painter in water-colours. He was born at Adensen in Hanover in 1804, and died in 1865. As a painter he is known by the following architectural views, among others:

The Engelburg. ( For the Duke of Cambridge .)	1834.
The Via Sacra.	1834.
View of Rome from the Loggia of the Vatican.	1836.
The Interior of Bonn Cathedral.	1842.
Interior of San Marco at Venice.

His widow, MARIE WIEGMANN, née HANCKE, is a successful portrait painter.

WIELING, NICOLAS, an historical and portrait painter, is supposed to have been a native of the Hague, where his name occurs in the Guild books for 1661, but the year of his birth is unknown. He was much employed by Friedrich Wilhelm, the Elector of Brandenburg, who appointed him painter to the court in 1671. He died at Berlin in 1689. His manner is more Flemish than Dutch; and some of his pictures have a touch of Van Dyck. He had a son, MATHIAS, who was a scene painter.

WIERENGEN. See WIERINGEN.

WIERINGA, GERARD, born at Groningen, was the son and scholar of his father, JAN WIERINGA (1709—1780), a painter of ornaments, and also studied under J. Andriessen. He worked for a time in the Düsseldorf Gallery, but in 1790 returned to his native place, where he gave lessons in drawing, and painted landscapes, chiefly sunsets and winter scenes, for one of which he obtained a gold medal from the Leyden Academy. He died in 1817.

WIERINGEN, CORNELIS CLAESZ, was born at Haarlem about 1570-80. He was brought up to a sea life, and excelled in painting sea-pieces and storms. He was also a good landscape painter, as appears by a series of fourteen plates after him by Claesz Jansz Vischer. He died in 1635. A picture by him of 'The Sea Fight at Gibraltar,' was painted in 1623 for Prince Maurice of Nassau, and his 'Arrival of Frederick, the Elector Palatine, and the Princess Elizabeth, at Flushing, in 1613,' is in the Haarlem Museum. He also etched several landscapes and sea-views. His son NICOLAAS, also a marine painter, was registered in the Haarlem Guild in 1636.

WIERIX, the brothers ANTHONIE, HIERONYMUS, and JAN, engravers, who flourished at Antwerp from about 1562 to 1618, are generally said to have been natives of Amsterdam, but M. Louis Alvin, the chief authority on the subject, asserts that they were born at Antwerp. As a rule Hieronymus is considered the ablest of the three, but it is likely that many of Jan's prints are ascribed to him, and vice versa, in consequence of the identity of their monograms. For an exhaustive account of their work, the student is referred to M. Alvin's 'Catalogue Raisonné de l'Œuvre des Trois Frères, Jean, Jérôme, et Antoine Wierix'—Bruxelles, 1866. M. Alvin gives a list of two thousand prints by them. Only the most important are mentioned in the following articles.

WIERIX, ANTHONIE, (WIERX, or WIERINX,) designer and engraver, the youngest of the family of the Wierixes, was born at Antwerp or Amsterdam about 1555. His small plates are executed in the finished style of his brothers, but his larger prints exhibit more freedom and facility. He engraved subjects similar to theirs, and frequently worked in conjunction with them. His prints are usually signed with his name. The following are perhaps the best:

Pope Clement VIII.; Ant. Wierix. | Philip II.
Wilhelm, Elector Palatine. | Archduke Ernst.
Philippe Emanuel de Lorraine, Duc de Mercœur.
Margaret, Queen of Philip III. of Spain.
Cardinal Bellarmín.

Albert of Austria, Archbishop of Toledo and Governor of the Low Countries.

St. Sebastian. (Ant. Wierix fec. Hier. Wierix inv.)

St. Theresa. (From his own design.)

St. Dominick receiving the Rosary from the Virgin (Do.)

The Marriage of St. Catharine. (Do.)

The Entombment. (Do.)

The History of the Prophet Jonah; in four plates; after the same.

A Riposo; after Cam. Procaccini.

The Death of S. Francis; after the same.

Christ between SS. Peter and Paul; after Sprangher.

Death of the Virgin; after Otto van Veen.

A series of sixty-nine plates from the Life and Passion of Christ, with the Death and Assumption of the Virgin; in these he was assisted by his two brothers.

WIERIX, HIERONYMUS, (or WIERINX,) was born at Antwerp or Amsterdam in 1551. Died in 1619. He is supposed to have learned the art of engraving from his brother Jan, whose style he followed so exactly, that it is difficult to distinguish their works. His prints are more numerous than those of Jan Wierix, and chiefly consist of devout and allegorical subjects, saints, and fathers of the church, many of them from his own designs. They are sometimes marked with his initials thus, HI. W., or HI. W. F., or J. Hieronymus W. Fe.; sometimes with a monogram composed of an H, an I, and an E, joined together and followed by a W, thus, HEW. The following are his chief plates:

The Emperor Charles V.

Henri de Bourbon, King of Navarre.

Queen Elizabeth. | Philip II. of Spain.

William the Silent.

Sigismund III., King of Poland.

Ludwig, King of Hungary.

Isabella Clara Eugenia, Infanta of Spain.

Archduke Albert. | Ignatius Loyola.

Alessandro Farnese, Duke of Parma.

Sir Francis Drake.

Henriette d'Estragues, Marquise de Verneuil. 1600.

St. Cecilia. (From his own design.)

The Temptation of St. Anthony. (Do.)

St. Bruno, the founder of the Carthusians. (Do.)

Jupiter and Danaë; after the same.

Christ expiring on the Cross; after P. Aquila, considered his master-piece.

The Doctors of the Church; after Ph. Galle.

WIERIX, JAN, (WIERX, or WIERINX,) draughtsman and engraver, was born at Antwerp or Amsterdam in 1549. It is not known by whom he was instructed, but he appears to have formed his style by an attentive study of the works of Albrecht Dürer, and has copied several of the prints of that master with a precision bordering on servility. The date of his death is unknown. M. Alvin says he is the truest artist of the three; that he has most originality and most style, although both Jerome and Anthonie excel him in silky softness and polish. His plates are executed with the graver, in a very neat, finished style, and his drawing is remarkably correct. He usually signed his work with the initials I. W. F., sometimes he used I. H. W. F., to which he occasionally added his age, and the date of the year in which the plate was engraved. The following are among his best works:

- Rodolphus II., Emperor of Germany.
- Philipp Willem, Prince of Orange.
- Bleanore de Bourbon, Princess of Orange.
- James I., King of England, and his Queen; scarce.
- Philip II. of Spain.
- Marie de' Medicis, Queen of France.
- Henry IV., King of France.
- The Marquise de Verneuil (after F. Clouet, probably a copy from Hieronymus' larger plate).
- The Virgin enthroned.
- The Resurrection; inscribed Insanus Miles, etc. (From his own design.)
- Mary Magdalene seated at the Entrance of a Grotto; J. Wier inv. et fec. (Do.)
- An allegory, the Redemption of Mankind. (Do.)
- Orpheus charming the Beasts. (Do.)
- The Four Elements; Wierix. 1601. (Do.)
- The little Satyr; copied from Albrecht Dürer, when Wierix was only twelve years of age.
- Adam receiving the forbidden fruit from Eve; also copied from Dürer; upon a tablet is inscribed Albert Dürer inventor, Johannes Wierix fec. et. 16.
- St. Jerome in meditation; copied from Albrecht Dürer.
- Melancholy; signed Johan Wierix Fecit an. 1602.
- The Christian Virtues giving Oil to the Wise Virgins; after Gilles Coignet.
- The Marriage of St. Catharine; after D. Calvaert.
- Abraham's Sacrifice; after M. de Vos.
- The Death of Moses; after the same.
- Descent from the Cross; after O. van Veen.
- The Last Judgment; copied from Martin Rota's print after Michelangelo.
- Descent from the Cross; after Bern. Passari.

WIERTZ, ANTOINE JOSEPH, was born at Dinant, February 22nd, 1806, but at the age of fourteen came to Antwerp, and studied under Herreyns and Van Bree. In 1832 he gained the Roman pension, and spent some time in Italy, where he painted the portrait of Lætitia Bonaparte, and the best of his historical pictures, the 'Fight for the Body of Patroclus.' Wiertz was an artist whose technical powers were unequal to the rendering of his undoubtedly large and noble conceptions. He aspired to combine the qualities of Homer, Michelangelo, and Rubens, and, as might have been expected, the outcome was an extravagance, at first merely fantastic, but later gloomy, morbid, and devoid of all æsthetic instinct. Yet for a time the prestige he enjoyed was extraordinary. An atelier was built for him at Brussels at the government expense, where he carried on his experiments in the use of painting mediums. He succeeded in inventing a process he called "matt-painting," the merit of which was that it obviated the occurrence of reflections on a painted canvas. He accepted commissions only for portraits, refusing to make his imaginative creations a means of livelihood. In this, as in other points, there was some affinity between the Belgian master and our English poet-painter, William Blake. At Wiertz's death in Brussels, June 18th, 1865, the house in which he had lived in that city, built to imitate a ruined temple, was converted into a museum, in which a large number of his works are now preserved, and which is known as the "Musée Wiertz." Among the most famous pictures of the collection are the 'Triumph of Christ' (1848), 'Napoleon in Hell,' 'The Suicide.' Towards the end of his career he made some essays in sculpture, which he had studied in his youth. F.S.

WIESSNER, KONRAD, painter and engraver, was born at Nuremberg, June 1st, 1796. He first practised as a topographical draughtsman, but in 1811 began to attend the Nuremberg Academy, and at the same time to study engraving under A. Gabler. He afterwards visited Munich, and travelled in the Bavarian Highlands, making studies from nature. On his return to Nuremberg, he took a prominent part in founding the Albrecht Dürer-Verein, of which he became director. Until 1826 he was busily engaged at Nuremberg in the production of engravings, lithographs, and drawings, but in that year he removed to Ratisbon, to superintend the painting in the porcelain factory. In 1827 he was again at Nuremberg, and thenceforth was much occupied as a teacher at various institutes, combining with such labours his work as a creative artist.

WIGAN ISAAC, a Flemish painter of subjects known as 'Desserts' (tables set with fruit, cheese, oysters, etc.). He was probably a pupil of Jan van Es, was born in 1615, and died in 1662-3.

WIGMANA, GERARD, was born at Workum, in Friesland, in 1673. He went to Italy when young, and is said to have studied Raphael and Giulio Romano. On his return to Holland he took to painting subjects of a cabinet size, which he disguised by exaggerated expression, and inattention to propriety of costume. He had the vanity to call himself 'the Raphael of Friesland.' Disappointed at the unfavourable reception his works met with in his own country, it is said by Descamps that he visited England, where he met with no better success. He returned to Holland, and settled at Amsterdam, where he died in 1741.

WIJCK, JAN, (called in England JOHN WYCK or WYKE,) the son of Thomas Wijck, was born at Haarlem about the year 1640, and was instructed by his father, whom he accompanied to England. Jan Wijck distinguished himself as a painter of battles, sieges, huntings, and processions. He sometimes painted large pictures, such as the 'Battle of the Boyne,' and the 'Sieges of Naarden and Namur,' but they are inferior to his small pictures. In the equestrian portrait of the 'Duke of Schomberg,' by Kneller, the horse and the battle in the background were finely painted by Jan Wijck. He painted several views in Scotland, etched a plate called 'The Siege,' and also made designs for a book on hunting and hawking. He died at Mortlake in 1702.

WIJCK, THOMAS, (WYCK, or VAN WYCK,) was born at Beverwyck about 1616. He was a pupil of his father, and improved himself by a residence in Italy, particularly in the environs of Naples, where he executed many sketches which he subsequently worked up into drawings of coast views. He excelled in painting shipping and seaports, with small figures, very frequently odd characters, such as quacks, alchemists, and misers, in a style resembling that of Peter van Laar. He also painted fairs, public markets, and the interiors of chemists' laboratories. In 1660 he was appointed Dean of the Guild at Haarlem. He came to England about the time of the Restoration, and was much employed. He painted a View of London before the fire, and another of the north bank of the Thames, from Southwark, exhibiting the mansions of the nobility in the Strand; of these there are prints. He also painted the 'Fire of London' more than once. He died at Haarlem in August, 1677. We have twenty-one scarce etchings by Thomas Wijck of landscapes and figures; the best known of them is 'The Open Coffin.' His pictures are to be met with in numerous European galleries. The following may be mentioned:

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	Rustic Interior.
"	"	An Alchemist.
Haarlem.	Museum.	Ruins of a Roman Temple.
Rotterdam.	"	Woman with Children.

WIJCKERSLOOT, J. VAN, a Dutch painter of the 17th century, supposed, from the extreme rarity of his works, to have painted as an amateur. He may be identical with one Johannes Wijckersloot, a clergyman at Weesep, near Dordrecht, in 1651. His few known cabinet pictures are carefully executed in the manner of Teniers. The Berlin Museum has a portrait of a young lady by him.

WIJELANT. See VRELANDT.

WIJNANTS, JAN, one of the founders of the great Dutch school of landscape painting, was born at Haarlem, probably about 1615. Details concerning him are of the very scantiest, and no additional light has been thrown on his career by modern researches. Tradition asserts him to have been the master of Philips Wouwerman, and of Adriaen van de Velde. His earliest known pictures are dated 1641 and 1642. In the records of the Guild of St. Luke at Haarlem, one Jan Wijnants, probably the painter, is mentioned as a dealer in works of art, and the marriage registers of Haarlem show that in 1646 one Jan Wijnants, widower, married Luytgen van den Ende, a native of Goch, but there is no evidence by which we can identify the master with the contracting party. It seems, however, that Wijnants worked at Haarlem, and from 1665 onwards at Amsterdam. A picture by him in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg is dated so late as 1679. It is assumed that he died at Amsterdam. Wijnants is well represented in most of the leading European galleries, yet his works are not numerous, when we take into account his long career as a painter. Smith catalogues two hundred and fourteen. Their comparative scarcity, however, is explained by the extreme care and finish of their technique. In the rendering of natural phenomena, Wijnants was a master of the first rank, but he never succeeded well with human figures or animals, and was obliged to rely upon the aid of his contemporaries, Lingelbach, Adriaen van de Velde, Ph. Wouwerman, Helt-Stokade, and others, for the étouffage of his landscapes. It is probable that many works ascribed to him are by Jan Wouwerman. Pictures by him:

Amsterdam.	R. Museum.	Landscape, with hunters. (The figures by Adr. v. de Velde.)
"	"	The Farm.
"	"	Hilly Landscape. (And five others.)
Antwerp.	Museum.	Two Landscapes, with figures by Adr. v. de Velde.
Berlin.	Museum.	Landscape — a harvest field, with figures by Adr. v. de Velde.
Brussels.	Museum.	Four Landscapes.

Hague.	Museum.	Borders of a Forest, with figures by Helt Stokade (?). A Road on the Dunes.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	Landscape with figures.
"	"	Landscape, with man fishing, and female bathers.
"	"	Landscape with Sportsman.
"	"	Two other Landscapes.
Munich.	Pinacothek.	Eight Landscapes with figures.
Paris.	Louvre.	Three Landscapes, one dated 1668.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	An Italian Landscape. 1679. (And seven others.)
Vienna.	Gallery.	Two Landscapes.

WIJNEN, DOMINICUS VAN, (called ASCANIUS,) was born at Amsterdam in 1661, and studied in the school of the Hague painter Doudyns, after which he went through Germany to Rome, and spent several years there copying. His original paintings are of a jocose nature. He was unfit to deal with money, and became dependent on Bonaventura van Overbeck, for whom he painted comic scenes and the burlesque ceremonies elaborated by the Flemish painters in Rome. He died at Amsterdam at some date unknown.

WIJNGAERDE. See VAN DEN WIJNGAERDE.

WIJNTRACK, D., (or WIJNTRANCK,) a Dutch painter, lived at Drenthe in the 17th century, and was noted for his painting of water-fowl. He enriched the pictures of Wijnants, Ruysdael, and other painters with wild ducks and other aquatic birds. His own landscapes represent marshy grounds with pools backed by alders and willows, serving merely as backgrounds for their feathered population. The birds are full of life and activity, their plumage soft and flexible, and their colouring true. Pictures painted entirely by himself are rare. Nothing of his history is recorded. A landscape by Hobbema, dated 1667, in the National Gallery, contains ducks of Wijntrack's painting. There are two pictures by Wijntrack in the Hermitage, St. Petersburg; and one is ascribed to him in the Louvre.

WIJTMAN, MATHEUS, was born at Gorcum in 1650, and studied for some time under Hendrik Verschuringh. His first pursuit was landscape painting; but he afterwards became a scholar of Jan Bijlaert, and applied himself to painting conversations, and domestic subjects, in which he imitated the style of Caspar Netscher with success. He also painted flowers and fruit, and his pictures of that description possessed great merit. He enjoyed a considerable reputation at his death, in 1689. The Dresden Gallery has a picture by him of a young girl turning over the leaves of a music-book.

WILARS. See VILLARD,

WILBAUT, JACQUES, painter, born at Château Porcien in 1729, was the nephew and pupil of Nicolas Wilbaut. He painted portraits and historical subjects, and many pictures for churches and monasteries. Most of his works perished in the French Revolution; but in the Museum of Rheims and the parish church of Bethel there are pictures by him. He died in his native town, June 18, 1816.

WILBAUT, NICOLAS, painter, born at Château Porcien (Ardennes) in 1686, was a pupil of Jean Jouvenet. He worked much as a decorative painter for the religious houses of Champagne, Lorraine, and Picardy, and was employed for seven years by the Elector Frederick Augustus at Dresden, where he painted many portraits of distinguished persons. He also worked for a time at Leipsic. He died in his native town, May 4, 1763.

WILBORN, NICOLAS (incorrectly called WELRRONNER). The real name of this engraver is NICOLAS WILBORN; it was Professor Christ who turned him into Welbronner. He is stated by Brulliot to have produced eighteen etchings marked with the letters N. W. and fourteen more, one of which has his name in full, Nicolas Wilborn, and the date 1536. We may name:

- Adam; a small upright plate; dated 1534.
- Eve, with the Serpent.
- A Portrait of Bernard Knipperdolling, the chief of the Anabaptists of Münster, dated 1536; copied from a print by H. Aldegrever.
- Victory and Fame; copy from the Master of the Caduceus.
- A Sacrifice to Priapus; copy with variations, from the same.
- A Triton making love to a Siren; copy in reverse from the same.
- A winged Horse.
- A Frieze, with the Triumph of Paris and Helen; dated 1535.
- Saturn in a Car drawn by a Frog and a Dragon, and other symbols.
- Infants amusing themselves with warlike sports, on a frieze; dated 1533.

WILD, CHARLES, an English architectural painter in water-colours, born in London in 1781. He was articled to T. Malton, the writer on perspective, and in his early years worked as an architectural draughtsman. His drawings occasionally appeared at the Royal Academy between 1803 to 1820, and upon one occasion at the British Institution. But he chiefly exhibited at the Water-Colour Society, which he joined as an Associate in 1809. He seceded on the introduction of oil paintings, but was re-elected in 1820, and afterwards became Secretary and Treasurer of the Society. In 1807 he commenced the publication of a series of illustrations from the English cathedrals. In that year appeared drawings of Canterbury; in 1809, of York; in 1813, of Chester and Lichfield; in 1819, of Lincoln; and in 1823, of Worcester. During this period he also produced some of the drawings for Pyne's 'Royal Residences.' The close of the Napoleonic wars opened up fresh fields for his pencil, and from 1821 onwards he exhibited many drawings from France, Belgium, and Germany, publishing works, also, based upon them. In his latter years he gradually lost his sight, perhaps through straining his eyes whilst sketching the roof of Henry VII.'s chapel at Westminster, in a glare of light. He died in London August 4, 1835. Wild was thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Gothic architecture. His details are correctly drawn, and the pictorial adjuncts of his works are in good taste and keeping. There is a large collection of his drawings in the South Kensington Museum.

WILDE. See DE WILDE.

WILDENS, JAN, was born at Antwerp in 1580, and was in 1591 a pupil of Pieter Verhulst, but was largely indebted for his progress to his own diligent studies from nature. In 1604 he was received a Master of the Guild of St. Luke. His talents attracted the attention of Rubens, who employed him to paint backgrounds, clouds, and trees in his pictures. He frequently did as much for Snyders, Diepenbeek, and Johann von Bockhorst. He produced landscapes of his own also, several of which are in public buildings at Antwerp. Other pictures by him are, a 'Winter Landscape,' at Dresden; a 'Stag Hunt' and 'Heron Hawking' at Nuremberg; 'Skaters,' in the Venice Academy; a 'Landscape' in Lord Bute's Collection (an important example); and others at Augsburg and Madrid. He died at Antwerp in 1653. His portrait by Van Dyck was engraved by P. Pontius. Hollar, Hondius, Malham, and Nolpe have engraved after him. Zani and Brulliot say that he was an engraver as well as a painter, and the latter attributes to him several views of châteaux in Holland, which are marked, J. W. fecit. Robertus de baudous excudit Amstelodami, 1616. His son, JEREMIAS, born in 1621, was also a painter. He died a few weeks after his father.

WILDER, GEORG CHRISTIAN, designer and engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1797. He studied drawing under Zwinger, and engraved under Gahler, and in 1819 went to Vienna, where he spent more than twelve years, drawing and etching architectural objects in the neighbourhood. He afterwards travelled in Western Germany, sketching the buildings of Nuremberg and Ratishon in the same manner. He died at the former city in 1855. His brother, JOHANN CHRISTOPH JACOB WILDER, (born 1783, died 1838,) was also a draughtsman and etcher. He has left a number of landscape plates from his own design or after Klein, F. Kobell, Schallhas, and others.

WILHELM VON KÖLN (OR MEISTER WILHELM). See KÖLN.

WILKIE, Sir DAVID, was born at Cults, in Fifeshire, on November 18, 1785. His father, the Rev. David Wilkie, was the minister of the parish, and his mother, Isabella Lister, the daughter of a farmer at Pitlessie. The Wilkie family came originally from Midlothian, where, at Ratho Byres, a small property had been in their possession for some four centuries. Isabella Lister was the minister's third wife, and David her third son. As soon as he could crawl he began to evince a bent towards art. He could draw after a fashion before he could read or even talk distinctly. At his first school, the village school of Pitlessie, he used to make portraits of his companions, for which they had to pay with marbles, pencils, &c. At the age of fourteen he was sent to Edinburgh, to the Trustees' Academy, into which at first he had some difficulty in winning admission. Before the end of his course, however, he won a prize of ten pounds for a sketch of 'Diana and Calisto.' In 1804 he returned to Cults, and began work upon his 'Pitlessie Fair,' for which he found plenty of material among the natives of the district. It is an extraordinary production for a lad of eighteen. In this same year Wilkie painted many portraits, the proceeds of which enabled him to make his way to London. He arrived in May, 1805, took lodgings at 8, Norton Street, Portland Road, and a few months afterwards he was at work in the schools of the Royal Academy. Before he left Scotland he had painted a small picture called 'The Village Recruit.' This and a few studies brought in the funds on which he lived during his first year in London. Stodart, the pianoforte-maker, who was married to a connection of the Wilkies, introduced the young painter to Lord Mansfield. At this time—it was in the last month of 1805—Wilkie had finished the sketch for 'Village Politicians,' which Lord Mansfield saw, and apparently said enough about it to give him, in his own opinion, a right to the refusal of the finished picture, and that at what was even then the absurd price of fifteen guineas. The picture went to the Academy of 1806, where it had an extraordinary success, and after some dispute, entered Lord Mansfield's collection at the price of thirty guineas. The success of 'Village Politicians' brought Wilkie commissions from Sir George Beaumont and Lord Mulgrave. For the former he painted 'The Blind Fiddler,' exhibited in 1807; for the latter the 'Rent Day.' Lord Mulgrave sent him a cheque for it for three times the agreed price, and advised him to be a little bolder in his demands for the future. The 'Rent Day' was exhibited in 1809. After Lord Mulgrave's death it was offered at Christie's, but bought in for 750 guineas, and afterwards sold for £2000. About this time (1807) the Duke of Gloucester gave Wilkie a commission, through Sir Francis Bourgeois, which resulted in the 'Card Players,' for which H.R.H., like Lord Mulgrave, paid treble the price asked. The picture was afterwards sold to Mr. Bredel by the Duchess for 500 guineas. 'Card Players' was exhibited in 1808; in 1809, 'A Sick Lady,' now in the collection of Lord Lansdowne, was at the Academy, and in the same year the painter was elected an Associate of that society. It was in 1810 that the painful incident, to him, of his abstinence from exhibition in obedience to the advice of some of his colleagues took place, and that he withdrew his 'Man with the Girl's Cap'—one of the very finest, in quality, of all his works—in apprehension lest it might be eclipsed by the work of Edward Bird. By this, perhaps, he was mainly induced to have the separate show of his own works, which took place in the summer of 1811. In this same year he was elected a full Academician, in succession to Sir F. Bourgeois. His chief productions in the year between his promotion to the R.A.-ship and the peace of 1814, were 'The Village Festival,' 'Blindman's Buff,' and 'Duncan Gray.' In 1814 he and Haydon went together to Paris, a memorable journey, which is described to perfection in Haydon's wonderful diary. On his return Wilkie set to work on his 'Distraint for Rent,' which was bought by the Directors of the British Institution. In the autumn of the same year he made a tour in the Netherlands, in company with the engraver Raimbach, returning by the way of Calais, where, like Hogarth, he was arrested for sketching the famous gate. In 1817 he made a journey in Scotland, covering much the same ground as a modern tourist, and finishing with a visit to Abbotsford, where he painted Scott and his family in the guise of peasants. On his return to London he painted 'The Penny Wedding' for the Prince Regent, the 'Reading of a Will' for the King of Bavaria, and the 'Chelsea Pensioners and the Waterloo Gazette' for the Duke of Wellington. In 1822 he was back in Scotland, to be present at the famous visit of George IV., and again in 1824; and then, in 1825, came the failure of health which drove him to seek change of scene, and led to a complete change in his art. In 1812 Wilkie's father had died, and he had summoned his mother and sister Helen from Scotland to share his home, which was henceforth in Phillimore Place, Kensington. In 1824, on the day before his return from Scotland, his mother had died, and her death, no doubt, was one cause of his illness.

His foreign route lay through Paris, Milan, Genoa, Pisa, Florence, Rome, Naples, Bologna, Parma, Venice, Innspruck, Munich, Dresden, Tocplitz, Prague, and Vienna, and then by Trieste back to Italy and Rome. From Italy, he went to Switzerland and then to Spain, where the example of Velazquez, Murillo, and the crowd of unknown Spaniards of lesser mark revolutionized his style. From Spain he sent several pictures home to the Academy, and in 1828 he returned to England. From this time forward he painted openly, loosely, with little care for detail, and with less for local and individual truth. Even in his finest works there are hints of the mannerist, and in the weakly condition in which his last sixteen years were passed, he seems to have had no strength to shake off the fault. Two of the best pictures of this time are 'Napoleon and Pius VII.,' and 'The Queen's First Council,' but it is to the reflected glory of the early pictures that most of their aesthetic interest is due. On the death of Sir Thomas Lawrence, in 1830, Wilkie was appointed Painter in Ordinary to the King, and was brought forward for the Presidency of the Academy. For this, however, he only received two votes, those of Collins and Leslie. Between 1830 and 1840 Wilkie painted many pictures, among them the two above-named, and the 'First Earning,' in the National Gallery. In 1840 he began that pilgrimage to the East, from which he was never to return. Leaving London in August, with Mr. William Woodburn, he made his way, by the Rhine and Danube, to Constantinople, where he painted the Sultan's portrait, and where he was the guest of Sir Moses Montefiore. From Constantinople he made his way by Smyrna, Rhodes, and Beyrout to Jerusalem. From Jerusalem he turned to come home by way of Alexandria, Malta, and Gibraltar. After the steamer left Malta he was taken suddenly ill, and on the forenoon of June 1, 1841, he died. He was buried at sea the same evening, within sight of Gibraltar.

Wilkie was an etcher of great ability, though but little practice. He has left fourteen plates, the best of which are 'Cellini and the Pope,' and 'The Lost Receipt' (dry point).

W. A.

WILKIN, CHARLES, an English engraver, was born in 1750. He gained a prize at the Society of Arts in 1771, and practised in London, working chiefly in stipple, and on portraits. He died from the effects of an accident, May 28, 1814. Amongst his best plates are:

Master Henry Hoare; after Reynolds. 1789.
Lady Cockburn and Children; after the same. 1791.

WILKIN, FRANK W., an English portrait painter and son of Charles Wilkin, the engraver, was born about the close of the 18th century. His early efforts were in miniature, but in his later period he worked in chalk, exhibiting at the Academy from 1820 to 1841. For a time he was ambitious to shine as an historical painter, and in 1820 exhibited at Spring Gardens a very large picture of 'The Battle of Hastings,' which he had painted on commission. But he did not receive any encouragement to persevere in this branch of art. He died in September, 1842.

WILKIN, HENRY, portrait painter, and also a son of Charles Wilkin, the engraver, was born in 1801. He practised in London, and afterwards in Brighton, where he died in 1852. His works, consisting chiefly of portraits in pastel, appeared at the Academy from 1831 to 1847.

WILKINS, ROBERT, an English marine painter, was born shortly before 1750. The Society of Arts awarded him a prize in 1765, from which year up to 1778 he exhibited with the Free Society. His works also appeared at the Royal Academy from 1772 to 1788, and soon after the latter date he is believed to have died. He painted storms, moonlights, sea-fights, and ships on fire.

WILKINSON, the Rev. JOSEPH, an amateur draughtsman, published in 1810 a series of landscapes from Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancashire, with Ackermann. They are poor productions.

WILKINSON, —, an engraver, working in London towards the end of the 18th century. His attention was chiefly given to portraits, but a good mezzotint after Northcote's 'Loss of the Halsewell East Indian,' is by him.

WILLAERTS, ABRAHAM, the son of Adam Willaerts, was born at Utrecht. The date of his birth is usually given as 1613, but this cannot be correct if, as Kramm asserts, he was Dean of the Guild at Utrecht in 1624. For some time he was instructed by his father, but he afterwards studied under Jan Bijlaert. On leaving that master he went to Paris, where he entered the school of Simon Vouet, and became a reputable painter of portraits, historical subjects, and sea-pieces. Returning from France to Holland he visited Brussels, where he was taken into the service of Prince Maurice, in whose employment he passed several years. As a Dutch soldier he afterwards took part in the expedition to Angola, where he painted costumes and landscapes. He died at Utrecht in 1671. He painted the portrait of Jan Both, and was the intimate friend of Jakob van Campen, the architect. Pictures by him are at Munich and Brunswick. He had a brother, CORNELIS WILLAERTS, a landscape painter, and a member of the Guild of St. Luke. A second brother, ISAAC WILLAERTS, is mentioned in the Utrecht records as having painted in that city in 1659. In the museum there several pictures may be seen, by Schoorl, to which Isaac Willaerts added the figures. A river landscape by him is in the Rotterdam Museum.

WILLAERTS, ADAM, (WILLARTS, WILLERS,) was born at Antwerp in 1577, and distinguished himself as a painter of river and canal pieces, coast views, fish-markets, processions, and so forth. His pictures are generally embellished with groups of small figures correctly drawn, and handled with spirit. He also painted villages and ships on fire. In the year 1600 he left Antwerp, and established himself at Utrecht, where he became a member of the Guild of St. Luke in 1611, and Dean in 1620. It has been said that he died after 1666, but Cornelis de Bie writes of him as already dead in 1662. Two sea-fights by him are in the States Chamber at Utrecht, and a 'View of Dordrecht from the Water-side' is in the museum of the latter city. Pictures by him are also to be found at Antwerp, Berlin, Frankfurt, Dresden, Rotterdam, Copenhagen, Vienna, and Madrid.

WILLE, JOHANN GEORG, an eminent engraver, was born in the Biebertal, near Konigsberg, November 5, 1715. In his early youth he was placed under a gunmaker, with whom he learnt to engrave in silver and steel. In 1736 he went to Paris, where he engraved some plates after Rigaud. His earlier works were mostly portraits, but later he also applied himself to historical subjects. He worked in line, and particularly excelled in representing silk and satin draperies, and the general delicacy of his method was admirably adapted to do justice to the work of the most celebrated Dutch painters. In 1746 he visited Western Germany, but returned to Paris in the following year, and remained there for the rest of his prolonged life. In the Revolution he lost his property, and, about the same time, became blind. He died in Paris in 1808, in his ninety-third year. The dates on his prints range from 1738 to 1790. His talent was duly appreciated during his life, and accordingly he was a member of the Academies of Paris, Rouen, Augsburg, Vienna, Berlin, and Dresden. He was engraver to the King of France, to the Emperor of Germany, and to the King of Denmark; he was also a Knight of the Legion of Honour. Among his most distinguished pupils may be named Schulze, Schmutzer, J. G. Müller, Bervic, Dunker, Chevillet, the brothers Guttenberg, Halm, and Dannel. His memoirs, by himself, were edited by Georges Duplessis, with a preface by Edmond and Jules de Goncourt (Paris, 1857). The following are among his most famous prints:

Prince James Frances Edward Stuart.
 Prince Charles James Edward Stuart.
 Prince Henry Benedick Stuart, Cardinal York.
 Prospero, Cardinal Colonna; after Pompeo Batoni.
 Frederick II., King of Prussia; after Pesne.
 Marsbal Saxe; after Rigaud.
 Waldemar de Loevendael, Marshal of France; after La Tour.

WILLE, PIERRE ALEXANDRE, painter and etcher, the son of Johann Georg Wille, was born in Paris, July 19th, 1748. After receiving some instruction from his father, he was the scholar successively of Vien and Greuze. He distinguished himself as a painter of domestic and other subjects, and became a member of the Paris Academy. He was appointed court painter to Louis XVI., but, like his father, lost his property during the Revolution. He died in Paris after 1820, for in 1821 he petitioned the Duchesse d'Angoulême to assist him in the maintenance of his wife in the asylum of Charenton. His father (q. v.) engraved after him. He amused himself occasionally with the point, and etched a few prints, among them one called 'Le Petit Vauxhall,' from his own design. He also left some good drawings in Indian ink, including the portraits of his father and mother. There are pictures by him in the museums of Angers, Bordeaux, and Cambrai.

WILLEBORTS, THOMAS, (OR WILEBOORTS,) sometimes called BOSSCHAERT, (OR BOSSAERT,) was born at Bergen-op-Zoom in 1613. After studying for a time in his native city he was sent to Antwerp, where he became a disciple of Gerard Zeghers, under whom he worked four years, when he was advised by his preceptor to visit Italy. On his return to Antwerp, he was commissioned to paint several altar-pieces for the churches there, and in other cities of Flanders and Brabant. His style was modelled on that of Van Dyck. He was much employed by Prince Frederick Henry of Orange and his son William, for the former of whom he painted several important works, particularly a large allegory of 'War and Peace.' Two of his best pictures are a 'Marriage of St. Catharine,' in the church of the Carmelites, at Antwerp; and a 'Martyrdom of St. Basil,' at the Capuchins, in Brussels. In 1650 he was made Dean of the St. Luke's Guild at Antwerp, and died in that city in 1656. Some of his portraits were engraved by Paul Pontius, others by Theodorus van Kessel. His pictures are to be found in the museums at Brussels and other Belgian towns, while his 'Venus and Adonis' and 'Lion in Love' are at the Hague, and his 'Elijah in the Desert' in the Vienna Gallery.

WILLEMANS. See WILLMANN.

WILLEMINS, NICOLAS XAVIER, engraver, was born at Nancy-Euville (Meurthe) on the 5th August, 1763. He was a pupil of Taillasson and of Lagrenée, junior, and exhibited at the Salon in 1800 and 1824. He died in Paris, January 25th, 1839.

WILLEMS, CORNELIS, an obscure painter, who flourished at Haarlem in the 16th century, and was the first master of Maerten v. Veen.

WILLEMS, MARCUS, was born at Mechlin in 1527, and was a scholar of Michiel van Coxie. He painted a good picture of the 'Decollation of St. John' for the church of S. Rombouts in his native town. When Philip II. of Spain made his public entry into Mechlin, Willems was employed to paint a triumphal arch with the 'History of Dido,' though he was then only twenty-two years of age. He designed much for glass-painters and tapestry weavers, and worked for a short period in England. He died in 1561.

WILLERS, ERNST, a landscape painter, was born an Oldenburg in 1804. He studied at Dresden and Munich, and afterwards travelled in Italy and Greece, collecting subjects which he used in later works. He died in 1880.

WILLES, WILLIAM, an Irish landscape and subject painter, was born at Cork about the beginning of the 19th century. He was a man of considerable culture, and occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy and the British Institution, between 1820 and 1865. In the middle of his career he lived in London, but in the latter part of his life at Reading. Among his exhibited works may be named: 'A Serenade,' 'A River Scene,' 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' 'The Mock Funeral,' and 'Excelsior.' Altogether he sent twenty-seven pictures to the two exhibitions above named. After 1865 his traces disappear.

WILLIAM of COLOGNE. See KÖLN.

WILLIAM of FLORENCE, a monk of Westminster Abbey, in the 13th century, who was employed by Henry III. in decorative painting at Windsor. He also worked at Guildford.

WILLIAMS, ARTHUR GILBERT. See under WILLIAMS, EDWARD.

WILLIAMS, A. SHELDON, animal painter and draughtsman, was born in the first half of the present century. He contributed drawings of sporting subjects to many of the leading illustrated papers. He died in March, 1880.

WILLIAMS, EDWARD, an engraver, who worked in London at the end of the 18th century, and to whom we owe several plates after Rowlandson, and one after H. Wigstead. He married the sister of James Ward, R.A.

WILLIAMS, EDWARD, landscape painter, and son of the last-named, was born in Lambeth in 1782. He studied under his uncle, James Ward, and was afterwards apprenticed to a carver and gilder. Trying his hand, however, at some moonlight landscapes, he was so successful that he took up painting again in earnest, and in 1814 and 1815 exhibited at the Royal Academy. Later in life he painted much of the scenery of the Thames. He died at Barnes on the 24th of June, 1855, leaving six sons, who all became artists, three of them changing their names (to Boddington [q. v.], Percy [q. v.], and Gilbert [still alive] respectively) to avoid confusion.

WILLIAMS, HENRY JOHN. See BODDINGTON.

WILLIAMS, HUGH WILLIAM, (called GRECIAN WILLIAMS,) was born of a good Welsh family in 1773. While still young he settled in Edinburgh, and Scotland became his adopted country. In 1808 he joined the short-lived New Society of Painters in Water-Colours. In 1811 and 1812 he published six large engravings of Highland views. After winning a name in Edinburgh, where he was personally very popular, he travelled several years in Greece, the Greek Islands, and Italy. On his return in 1818, he began to publish the results of his journeys, and to exhibit the sketches he had brought home. His 'Travels in Italy, Greece, and the Ionian Islands' appeared in 1820; his 'Views in Greece' came out in numbers between 1827 and 1829. He married a lady of position and fortune, and died soon after at Edinburgh, June 23rd, 1829. There is an account of his Gallery in 'Peter's Letters.' Works:

Castle Campbell, looking down the Devon. (South Kensington Museum.)

Loch Tummel. (Do.)

Bothwell Castle. (Do.)

Temple of Minerva Sunias, on Cape Colonna. (Scottish National Gallery.)

Athens from the East. (Do.)

Plain of Marathon and distant View of Eubœa. (Do.)

Twenty-five drawings of Greek, Italian, and Scottish Scenery. (Do.)

Many of his early topographical drawings are engraved in the 'Scots Magazine.'

WILLIAMS, JAMES FRANCIS, a Scottish landscape painter, was born in Perthshire in 1785. His early manhood was spent in London, scene-painting. He went back to Edinburgh about 1810, and gradually relinquished working for the stage for teaching. After 1811 he exhibited with the Associated Artists at Edinburgh, and on the establishment of the Scottish Academy in 1826, he was elected one of the original members, becoming subsequently Treasurer. His works occasionally appeared in London at the Royal Academy, the British Institution, and the Society of British Artists. He died at Glasgow in 1846. By him:

Edinburgh. Nat. Gall. Scene on the Ayrshire Coast.

WILLIAMS, JOHN, an English engraver, born about the middle of the 18th century. He studied in the schools of the Academy, and under Matthew Darby, the engraver. But he is chiefly known as an art-critic, writing under the name of 'Anthony Pasquin.' He emigrated to the United States, and died at Brooklyn in 1818. His chief publications were:

'Liberal Critique on the Exhibition for 1794.'

'Lives of English and Irish Artists.' 1794.

'An authentic History of the Professors of Painting, &c., in Ireland.'

'Memoirs of the Academicians, being an attempt to improve the taste of the Realm.'

'Critical Guides to the Academy for 1796 and 1797.'

WILLIAMS, JOHN MICHAEL, portrait painter, said to have been a scholar of Jonathan Richardson, flourished in London about the middle of the 18th century. He painted a half-length portrait of Mr. Beard, the celebrated singer, from which there is a mezzotint print by McArdell. He exhibited with the Incorporated Society in 1761. He lived in Scotland Yard, and is supposed to have died in London about the year 1780.

WILLIAMS, JOSEPH LIONEL, an English wood-engraver and water-colour painter, was born early in the 19th century. He contributed to the 'Art Journal' and to the 'Illustrated London News,' for the latter of which he superintended the engravings of the exhibition of 1851. For the Art Union he illustrated 'L'Allegro,' 'Il Penseroso,' 'Childe Harold,' and 'The Traveller.' He also worked much for Messrs. Blackie of Glasgow. His water-colour drawings, chiefly domestic in subject, appeared occasionally at the Royal Academy, the British Institution, and the Society of British Artists, between 1834 and 1874. He died on the 19th September, 1877.

WILLIAMS, PENNY, painter, was born at Merthyr Tydvil in 1798. His father was a house-painter, and he himself was sent as a boy to London, to study in the Royal Academy, at the charges of Sir John Guest, Mr. Crawshay, and some other Welsh magnates who were interested by his talent. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1824. In 1827 he went to Italy, and settling in Rome, continued to contribute constantly to English exhibitions, his works being chiefly Italian landscapes and character subjects, painted in the manner of the Italian school of fifty years ago. His 'Italian Girl with a Tambourine,' and 'Italian Peasants,' had for a time a place in the National Gallery. They have now been relegated, the first to the Nottingham, the second to the Leicester Museum. For nearly sixty years he was a familiar figure in Rome, where he was very popular. He died in 1885.

WILLIAMS, ROGER or ROBERT, mezzotint engraver, was a native of Wales, and flourished about 1700-15. He is stated to have studied under Theodor Freres. He has left a number of portraits, among them the following:

Charles I.; after Van Dyck.

Edward, Lord Littleton, Lord Keeper; after the same.

Charles II.; two plates; after Lely and Kneller.

James II., when Duke of York; after Cooper.

Mary Beatrix, his Queen; after Wissing.

 Sir Edmund King, M.D.; after Lely.
 William, Earl of Portland; after Simon Dubois.

WILLIAMS, SAMUEL, wood engraver, was born at Colchester in 1788. After serving an apprenticeship to a house-painter, he turned his hand to wood-cutting, and soon gained employment on natural history books. He also designed and engraved the illustrations for an edition of 'Robinson Crusoe,' published in 1822. Good examples of his power are to be seen in Hone's 'Every-day Book' (1825). Between 1831 and 1845 he was an occasional exhibitor at the Royal Academy. He died on the 19th September, 1853.

WILLIAMS, SOLOMON, an Irish portrait painter, born in Dublin about the middle of the 18th century. He was a pupil of the Dublin Academy, but spent several years in Italy. While there he made many good copies of Titian's pictures, and was elected a member of the Bologna Academy. On his return he practised in Dublin, with the exception of a few years spent in London, where his works occasionally appeared at the Royal Academy and the British Institution. On the establishment of the Royal Hibernian Academy he was elected one of the original members. He died August 2, 1824. There are by him:

Dublin. Royal Dublin Society. } Portrait of General Vallancy.
 " " " } Mr. Pleasant.

WILLIAMS, T. H., an English landscape painter in water-colours, who worked at Plymouth and Exeter in the early part of the 19th century. His pictures were occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy and the British Institution, between 1801 and 1830. He also practised as a draughtsman, and drew and etched plates for the following publications:

'Picturesque Excursions in Devonshire and Cornwall.' 1804.
 'The Environs of Exeter.' 1815.
 'A Tour in the Isle of Wight.'
 'A Walk on the Coast of Dorsetshire.' 1828.

WILLIAMS, WILLIAM, an English subject, landscape, and portrait painter, who practised in London and Norwich in the latter half of the 18th century. The Society of Arts awarded him a premium in 1758, and he exhibited occasionally at the Royal Academy between 1770 and 1792. His 'Marriage' and 'Gallantry' were engraved by Jukes, and several of his Shakespearian subjects by Valentine Green.

WILLIAMSON, JOHN, a respectable English portrait painter, who practised his art between 1788 and 1818. He died at Liverpool in the latter year.

WILLIAMSON, PETER, an engraver who flourished about the time of the Restoration. He lived in London, and was apparently a publisher also. We have by him some portraits, among them King Charles II., Queen Catharine of Braganza, and Mildmay, Earl of Westmoreland. He also engraved some small illustrations of Charles II.'s escape after Worcester, dated 1667. He was employed for a time by David Loggan.

WILLINGEN. See VAN DER WILLINGEN.

WILLIOT, LOUIS AUGUSTE ADOLPHE, painter, was born at St. Quentin in 1829, and was a pupil of Cogniet. He exhibited landscapes, chiefly of Fontainebleau and its neighbourhood, at the Salon between 1856 and 1865, in which latter year he died from injuries received through the falling in of a ceiling.

WILLIS, BROWNE, an English draughtsman, was born at Blandford in 1682. He enjoyed some repute as an artist, and was a member of the St. Martin's Lane Academy. But he is chiefly remembered as an antiquary. He published many antiquarian works, several with his own illustrations, notably:

'Survey of the Cathedral of Llandaff.' 1719.
 'Survey of the Cathedral of St. Asaph.' 1720.
 'Survey of the Cathedral of Bangor.'
 'Survey of the Cathedral of St. Davids.'
 'A Survey of the Cathedrals.' 1727-30.

He died in 1760.

WILLIS, HENRY BRITTON, painter, was born at Bristol, and was a pupil of his father, a landscape painter of little note, practising in that town. After a visit to America in 1842, the younger Willis settled in London, where he became well known as a painter of English scenery and of cattle, both in oils and water-colours. He occasionally contributed to the Royal Academy exhibitions, but the greater number of his works appeared at the shows of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, of which body he became an Associate in 1862, and Member in 1863. His 'Group of Highland Cattle in Glen Nevis,' exhibited at the Centennial Exhibition of 1876, belongs to the Marchioness of Lorne. He died in 1884.

WILLISON, GEORGE, a Scotch portrait painter, born in the first half of the 18th century. After studying at Rome, he practised in London, exhibiting at the Society of Artists and the Royal Academy from 1767 to 1777. He then went to India, where he acquired a fortune, though not in the practice of his art. Settling in Edinburgh, he died there in 1797. There is a portrait of the Nabob of Arcot, by him, at Hampton Court.

WILLMANN, EDUARD, a German engraver, born in 1820, was a pupil of Frommel. He engraved views of Paris, Heidelberg, and Baden, after his own drawings; 'Spring-time,' after Knaus; the 'Four Seasons,' after Julius Marak; 'Ancient Athens,' after Hoffmann; the Buildings of the Vienna Exhibition, after Feldscharek. He was Professor of the Art School at Carlsruhe, where he died in 1877.

WILLMANN, MICHAEL, whose name is usually written MICHEL WILLEMANS, was born at Königsberg in 1630. When young he went to Amsterdam, to become the scholar of Jacob Backer, but afterwards entered the school of Rembrandt, under whom he studied several years (1650-1654?). On his return to Germany, he was much patronized by the Elector of Brandenburg, for whom he painted several large pictures, notably one of 'Vulcan forging the Arms of Mars.' He was also employed at several other courts in Germany, especially Prague and Breslau. After returning to Königsberg he entered a Cistercian monastery near Leibus in Silesia, where he died in 1706. He etched a few plates in the style of Rembrandt, among them a 'St. Joseph.' There is a portrait by Willmann in the Dresden Gallery.

WILLMORE, ARTHUR, engraver, born at Birmingham, June 6th, 1814, was a younger brother of J. T. Willmore, and served his apprenticeship in art under his brother. He first exhibited at the Academy in 1858. He was a frequent contributor to the 'Art Journal,' and engraved designs by Bartlett, Brockedon, Birket Foster, Doré, W. Collins, and others, for the illustration of books. Towards the close of his life he was afflicted with lung-disease, which caused the stooping over his plates to become increasingly irksome and painful to him. He died November 3rd, 1888. Among his plates we may mention :

Agrippina landing the Ashes of Germanicus; after Turner.

Ancient Rome; after the same.

Royal Volunteer Review, Edinburgh; after Sam. Bough.
On the Thames; after David Cox.

The Lord of the Glen; after McWhirter.

Dutch Fishing Boats; after E. W. Cooke.

Summer-Time; after Rubens.

Farm at Laeken; after the same.

Young Shrimpers; after Collins.

Fisher-Boys, Coast of Norfolk; after the same.

WILLMORE, JAMES TIBBITTS, was born at Erdington, Staffordshire, on the 15th September, 1800. He was apprenticed to William Radclyffe, an engraver at Birmingham. On the expiration of his time he came to London, and was employed for three years in the studio of Charles Heath. After that his independent career began. In 1843, the first year he exhibited with the Royal Academy, he was elected an associate engraver. He worked after John Chalon, Leitch, Stanfield, Landseer, and Turner, being especially successful with the latter. Several plates in the 'Rivers of France' were by him. In his last years ill health made it impossible for him to pursue his art. He died on the 12th March, 1863. The following is a list of his better plates :

Kilgarran Castle; after Turner.

Peumaen Mawr; after the same.

Ulleswater; after the same.

Windermere; after the same.

Mercury and Argus; after the same.

Ancient Italy; after the same.

Oberwesel; after the same.

The Fighting Téméraire; after the same.

The Golden Bough; after the same.

Venice, Bellini's picture carried to the Redentore; after the same.

Crossing the Bridge; after Sir E. Landseer.

Byron's Dream; after Sir C. Eastlake.

Wind against Tide; after Stanfield.

Harvest in the Highlands; after Sir A. W. Callcott.

WILLS, the Rev. JAMES, painted about the middle of the last century. In 1760 he exhibited a 'Liberality and Modesty' with the Society of Artists, and in 1761 a 'St. Peter returning from Prison.' He also presented a large picture of 'Suffer little children to come unto Me,' to the Foundling Hospital, but failing to meet with success in art, he took orders, and became first curate, and afterwards vicar, of Canons, Middlesex. He was for a time chaplain to the Chartered Society of Artists. In 1754 he published a translation of Du Fresnoy's 'Art of Painting.' He died in 1777.

WILMOT, OLIVE. See SERRES.

WILS, JAN, (or WILRS,) a Dutch landscape painter, was born at Haarlem about 1600. Berchem married his daughter, and he has the credit of having improved that master in his style of landscape painting, whilst the latter frequently embellished Wils' landscapes with cattle and figures. These joint productions are now attributed entirely to Berchem; they may, however, be distinguished by a peculiar green in the vegetation, and less of freedom in the handling than the real works of that master. Wils also imitated Jan Both with considerable success. He died at Haarlem in 1669 (?). There is a 'Rocky Landscape,' by Wils, with figures by Wouwerman (?), in the National Gallery.

WILSON, ANDREW, a Scottish landscape painter, was born at Edinburgh in 1780. He received some early instruction from Alexander Namyith, and in 1796 came to London and studied for a short time in the schools of the Royal Academy. He then went to Italy, and spent a considerable time at Rome and Naples, where he laid the foundation of an intimate knowledge of the works and style of the great masters. After a short stay in London in 1803, he returned to Italy, and settled at Genoa, where he was made a member of the Ligurian Academy. In this capacity he was one of the modern artists whose works were inspected by Napoleon. It is said that an envious brother Academician sought to prejudice Bonaparte, who was admiring Wilson's picture, by telling him that the author was an Englishman, and provoked the dignified rebuke: "Le talent n'a pas de pays." At Genoa he was chiefly occupied in purchasing pictures of the old masters, of which he obtained no less than fifty-four. Returning in 1806, he practised in water-colours for some time, and taught drawing at Sandhurst Military College. In 1818 he removed to Edinburgh as master of the Trustees' School, where he trained several good artists. During this period his works regularly appeared at the Scottish exhibitions. But he preferred Italy, and returned thither with his wife and family in 1826. There he spent the next twenty years, painting works inspired by Italian scenery, and aiding many collectors in their purchases of pictures. Those acquired by the Scottish Royal Institution were mostly selected by him, and in this manner he formed the nucleus of the Scottish National Gallery. He died at Edinburgh whilst on a visit there in 1848. There is much refinement in his style, and his success in aerial effects obtained for him in Italy the title of the Scottish Claude. Works :

WILSON, BENJAMIN, portrait painter, was born at Leeds in 1721. He came to London when young, and there worked as a clerk, but practised art in his leisure. Dr. Berdmore, master of the Charterhouse, took him under his protection, but it does not appear that he was regularly educated in art. Hudson, however, gave him some assistance, that painter, with Hogarth, Lambert, and others, having become acquainted with him.

He endeavoured to introduce more relief and chiaroscuro into his pictures than had before been common, and his heads have more warmth and nature than those of the generality of his contemporaries. Zoffany occasionally painted draperies for him. From 1748 to 1750 he worked in Ireland, but in the latter year he settled in London, in Great Queen Street, where he is said to have made £1500 a year by the painting of portraits. About the year 1773 he was appointed master painter to the Board of Ordnance, which post he retained till a few years before his death. He succeeded Hogarth as serjeant painter in 1761, and painted the King and Queen in 1776. He died at his house in Great Russell Street, in 1788. General Sir Robert Wilson was one of his sons. He was known as an electrician and chemist, was elected an F.R.S. in 1756, and published a book entitled 'Experiments and Observations on Electricity.' In addition to his numerous portraits he painted a 'Belshazzar's Feast.' There are several mezzotints after him; two represent Garrick in the characters of Hamlet and King Lear. Wilson left a few good etchings, among them the following:

An old Man's Head, with hat, feather, and ruff; in imitation of Rembrandt.
A small Landscape. (Do.)
His own Portrait.
'The Repeal,' a caricature published upon the repeal of the American Stamp Act. It contains portraits of the leading ministerialists.

WILSON, JAMES, an English mezzotint engraver, was born about 1735. He worked in London, and died after 1786. The following plates are by him:

Master Skinner; after F. Cotes. 1770; and another, dated 1786.
Lady Broughton; after Reynolds. 1771.
Nelly O'Brien; after the same.
Mrs. Abington; after the same.
Elizabeth, Lady Arran; after the same.
John Wilkes; after Pine. 1764.
Miss Nailor as Hebe; after the same.
The Fair Nun; after Morland.

WILSON, JOHN W., an English landscape painter, was born in 1812. His father was "Jock" Wilson, the marine painter, in whose vigorous style he painted many pictures. His best work is, however, to be found in his farm-yard and cattle pictures. He died at Folkestone, January 30, 1875.

WILSON, JOHN, (called "JOCK WILSON,") a Scottish landscape and marine painter, was born near Ayr on the 13th of August, 1774. He was apprenticed to a well-known decorator in Edinburgh named Norie, and afterwards received some teaching in landscape from Alexander Nasmyth. He settled for a time in Montrose, where he painted landscapes and taught drawing, but about 1798 he moved to London, where he was employed to paint scenery for two or three theatres. In 1807-1809 he exhibited at the Royal Academy. He won a premium from the British Institution for a 'Battle of Trafalgar,' which was afterwards bought by Lord Northwick. Wilson was one of the founders of the Society of British Artists, and one of its most constant supporters. But although domiciled in the south, he never relaxed his connection with his northern brothers of the brush, who had elected him an honorary member of the Scottish Academy. His fine memory and rare conversational powers made him the centre of a delighted circle wherever he went. His last years were spent at Folkestone, where he died on the 29th of April, 1855. Works:

Coast Scene. (Scottish National Gallery.)
A Ferry Boat. (Do.)
Coast Scene. (South Kensington Museum.)
Landscape with Cattle. (Glasgow Gallery.)

WILSON, RICHARD, a distinguished landscape painter, was born at Pinegas, in Montgomeryshire, August 1, 1714. He was the son of a beneficed clergyman, who was collated to the living of Mold, in Flintshire, soon after his son's birth. At an early period of his life, young Wilson discovered a marked disposition for drawing, and was in 1729 sent to London, where he was placed under the tuition of Thomas Wright, an obscure portrait painter. To this branch of art Wilson at first devoted himself, and acquired a considerable reputation. After having practised some years in London, he went to Italy, where he continued to paint portraits, until a landscape, painted in his leisure moments, was accidentally seen by Zuccarelli, and caused that artist to strongly recommend him to abandon portraiture for landscape. The French painter, Vernet, was at that time, too, in Rome, and happening to visit Wilson's painting room, was so struck with a landscape of his, that he offered in exchange for it one of his own best pictures; the proposal was accepted and the picture delivered to Vernet, who placed it in his exhibition-room, and recommended the painter to the attention of the cognoscenti. Wilson's progress in landscape must have been rapid, as he had pupils in that line while still in Rome, and Mengs painted his portrait, receiving a landscape in return. During his stay in Italy he travelled to Naples with Lord Dartmouth, for whom he painted some fine landscapes. He came back to England in 1755. He was introduced by Thomas Sandby to the Duke of Cumberland, for whom he painted his 'Niobe,' which was in the first exhibition of the Society of Artists, in 1760. Wilson, however, did not at once attain success, partly from the inability of the public to recognize his merits, partly from the jealousy of some among his contemporaries, and partly also from his own unconciliatory disposition. He lost the favour of the Court by an unfortunate outburst of temper. Having painted a view of Sion House for the king, he submitted it to Lord Bute, who objected to the price demanded (sixty guineas). Thereupon the painter angrily retorted that if the king could not pay it all at once he would take it in instalments. Although he was chosen a foundation member at the institution of the Royal Academy in 1768, he had still long to struggle with poverty. But after the death of Hayman in 1776, he became librarian to that institution, and retained the post until his decayed health obliged him to retire. The death of his brother about this time placed him in possession of a small estate at Llanberis, North Wales, where he died in May, 1782. It is probable that had Wilson met with warmer encouragement his art would have been even finer than it is. In colour, composition, and aerial truth, few landscape painters have equalled and none excelled him. It is only in a certain emptiness, or lack of material, that they fall below the level of Claude. Works:

In 1774 Wilson painted a picture of Niagara, after a drawing. Some of his best pictures have been very finely engraved by Woollett (q. v.). His chief pupils were Joseph Farington, R.A., and William Hodges, R.A.

WILSON, W——, an English engraver in mezzotint, who flourished in the reign of Queen Anne. He has left some portraits, among them that of the Countess of Newburgh, after Dahl.

WILSON, WILLIAM, engraved several landscapes, after Claude Lorrain, Poussin, and other masters. They are in line, and neatly engraved.

WILSON, WILLIAM CHARLES, engraver, was born about 1750. He worked in mezzotint, and was employed by Boydell on the 'Shakespeare Gallery.' His plates were after Smirke, Westall, West, and Pillement.

WILT. See VAN DER WILT.

WILTON, JOSEPH, an English engraver, flourished about the year 1670. He engraved plates of various subjects in a style resembling that of Romeyn de Hooghe.

WILTS. See WILS.

WINCK, CHRISTOPH, painter and etcher, originally a shoemaker, was born at Eichstadt in 1738, and studied art under his brother, CHRISOSTOMUS WINCK. Christoph painted scenes for the court theatre at Vienna, and was occupied on altar-pieces and other pictures for a number of Bavarian churches. In 1769 he became court painter to the Elector of Bavaria, and in the following year assisted in founding the school of design at Munich which developed afterwards into the Academy. He died in 1797.

WINDHAM, JOSEPH, an amateur draughtsman, was born at Twickenham on the 21st of August, 1739. He was educated at Eton and Christ's College, Cambridge, where he became an excellent scholar. He travelled and made many drawings in France, Italy, Istria, and Switzerland, and worked long at measuring the ruins of ancient Rome. Many of his plans and sections are engraved in Cameron's book of the Roman Baths. He himself wrote most of the letter-press in the second volume of the Dilettanti Society's 'Ionian Antiquities.' He died on the 21st of September, 1810.

WINDLER (or WINDTER). See WINTER.

WINGANDORP, F., was a native of Germany, and flourished about the year 1672. He engraved several frontispieces and other plates for books.

WINGFIELD, JAMES DIGMAN, an English landscape, historical, and subject painter, was born in the early part of the 19th century. He practised in London, and his pictures appeared in large numbers at the Royal Academy, the British Institution, and the Society of British Artists, between 1832 and 1872. He died in the latter year, and the works remaining in his studio were sold at Christie's in July, 1873.

WINGHE, (WINGHEN,) JEREMIAS VAN, painter, was born at Frankfort in 1587. He was the son and pupil of Joost Winghe, and also studied under Frans Badens at Antwerp. He eventually went to Rome, where he practised successfully, painting historical and genre pictures, and returning to his native city in the later years of his life, he there became well known as a portrait painter. Some of his pictures are in the Gallery at Diisseldorf. The subjects and the marks resemble those of his father, and probably have caused some confusion in the accounts of both. He died in 1648.

WINGHE, JODOCUS, JOOST, or JOAS, (WINGHEN, or WINGEN,) historical painter, was born at Brussels in 1544. He went young to Italy, and after four years' study in Rome (where he resided with a cardinal), returned to Brussels, and was appointed principal painter to the Prince of Parma. In 1584 he settled in Frankfort, where he painted an allegory of the Netherlands, as a naked woman chained to a rock, with Time flying to deliver her. 'The Last Supper' (Church of S. Géry, Brussels), 'Samson being shorn of his Locks,' 'Andromeda,' and 'Apelles painting Campaspe' (Vienna Gallery), were also among his subjects. The portrait of a female member of the Von Stalburg family is in the Staedel Institute at Frankfort. He also designed forty-nine subjects for engravers and tapestry weavers. He died at Frankfort in 1603.

WINKEL, THERESE AUS DEM, born at Weissenfels about 1784, was the daughter of a Saxon officer, and distinguished herself as a painter as well as by her playing on the harp and her powers of elocution. She confined herself chiefly to copies.

WINKLER, GEORG FRIEDRICH, painter, was born at Dresden in 1772. He was the son of a well-known theatrical machinist, and was brought up as a scene-painter. After some study in Vienna, he was appointed court scene-painter at Dresden in 1800, and in 1815 to a like post at Berlin. He published a book on his art, and died in 1837.

WINNE, LIÉVIN DE, born in Ghent in 1832, studied under Félix de Vigne, and became one of the best Belgian portrait painters of his time. He also painted religious pictures, but with less success. He died in 1880. His portrait of King Leopold I. of Belgium is in the Brussels Museum.

WINSTANLEY, HAMLET, engraver, born in 1700, at Warrington, was the nephew of Henry Winstanley, and was designed for a painter. With that intention he was placed under the tuition of Sir Godfrey Kneller, and produced some portraits, including those of the Bishop of Chester and of himself with his wife. On leaving his master he went to Italy, where he resided some years, and after his return to England applied himself entirely to engraving. He etched a set of twenty-five plates from pictures in the collection of the Earl of Derby, by Titian, Tintoretto, Paolo Veronese, Bassano, Guido, Castiglione, Spagnoletto, C. Maratti, Rubens, Van Dyck, Rembrandt, and others; these were published as 'The Knowsley Gallery.' He also engraved a set of prints from the paintings by Sir James Thornhill, in the cupola of St. Paul's. He died in 1761, probably at Warrington. His own portrait, engraved in vol. iii. of Walpole, is at Knowsley.

WINSTANLEY, HENRY, who is noticed here as an etcher, was the architect who projected and built the first Eddystone lighthouse, and perished with it when it was destroyed by a storm in 1703. In 1694 he was clerk of the works at Audley End, of which, in 1688, he etched a series of views. These he dedicated to James II., adding an inscription in honour of Sir Christopher Wren. They are now very scarce, but are generally included in the five-volume edition of Kip's Views, in which is also found a very large plate of the Eddystone lighthouse. The inscription beneath runs, "This Draught was made and engraven by Henry Winstanley of Littlebury, Gent. and is sold at his Water-works; where also is to be seen at any time y<sup>e</sup> modle of y<sup>e</sup> said Building and principal Rooms, for sixpence a peice."

WINSTON, CHARLES, an amateur of stained glass, was born at Farningham, Kent, in 1814. At his death, which occurred on the 3rd of October, 1864, he left to the nation a large collection of copies in water-colour from painted windows.

WINTER, ABRAHAM HENDRIK, a Dutch painter, the pupil of P. C. Wonder, was born at Utrecht in 1800, and died at Amsterdam May 28, 1861. In the Rijks Museum at Amsterdam there is a 'Sheep-fold' by him.

WINTER. See DE WINTER.

WINTER, JOHANN GEORG, was born at Groeningen in the Netherlands in 1707, his father being an officer of the Bavarian army in garrison there. He studied under Müller and Engelhard, at Munich, and painted portraits both there and at Augsburg. In 1744 he became court painter to the Emperor Charles VII., and afterwards painted some frescoes for the Elector of Cologne at his summer palace in the neighbourhood of Bonn. He died there in 1770.

WINTER, JOHANN WILHELM, (WINDLER, or WINDTER,) an engraver, was born at Nuremberg about 1696, and died in 1765. He engraved the portraits of Sophie Elizabeth, Countess of Reuss-Plauen, after Müller; of J. W. von Imhoff, after Decker; and a few others.

WINTER, JOSEPH GEORG, (or WINTTER,) a draughtsman and engraver of animals, was born at Munich between 1720 and 1730. He was the son and pupil of Johann Georg Winter, and his first works were cartoons for the Munich tapestry factory. He subsequently abandoned painting and devoted himself to engraving, etching, and designing in Indian ink, taking for his models Ridinger and Hollar. His favourite subjects were hunting pieces. He died in 1789. He published a number of plates from his own designs and after Melchior Roos, Teniers, Peter van Laar, Berchem, Wouwerman and other masters.

WINTER, RAFAEL, (or WINTTER,) painter, etcher, and lithographer, son of Joseph Georg Winter, was born at Munich in 1784. His father dying while he was but a child, his step-father, Mettenleiter, trained him in art. He painted and etched animals. He visited Italy, and started a lithographic establishment in Rome, and afterwards became director of the Royal Lithographic Institute of Bavaria. He died in 1852.

WINTERGERST, JOSEPH, was born at Wallerstein in 1783, and became teacher of drawing in the canton school at Aarau, and afterwards professor at Ellvangen. He painted Biblical scenes and subjects of the romantic genre. Both in teaching and practice he strove to counteract the influence of the French school, and to inculcate the principles of the great Italian masters. He was appointed Director of the Gallery at Düsseldorf, and died there in 1867.

WINTERHALTER, FRANZ XAVER, painter and lithographer, was born at Menzenschwand, near St. Blasien, in the Black Forest, April 20, 1806. After studying engraving for a time at Freiburg, he went in 1823 to Munich, where he received some instruction from Stieler in portrait painting, working meantime in Piloty's lithographic institute to support himself during his novitiate. In 1828 he moved to Carlsruhe, and a successful portrait of the Grand Duke Leopold put him on the road to fortune. He was appointed painter to the court, and was now enabled to make journeys to France and Italy for his further improvement. In 1834 he settled in Paris, making, however, constant journeys to foreign capitals as his position as a fashionable portrait painter became assured. He painted many European royalties and distinguished persons, and his meretricious and mediocre art soon achieved a vogue greatly above his merits. He has been compared with Lawrence, to whom, both in career and œuvre, he affords a parallel on a lower plane. Winterhalter's merits are to be looked for in his composition and organization, and in his power to suggest the superficial elegance of an aristocratic sinner. Among his numerous portraits the most famous were those of Louis Philippe, Queen Amélie, and all the members of the Orleans family; Napoleon III., the Empress Eugénie, and the Prince Imperial (exhibited at the Salon of 1864); the Empress Eugénie and her Court, the Grand Duchess Helen of Russia, King Leopold, Queen Victoria and her family, Prince Metternich, the Emperor Francis Joseph, etc. He also painted a few genre pictures and landscapes, chiefly Italian, and executed some engravings and lithographs. A few days before his death he made a will, in which he directed that twelve pictures he had never shown should remain in a box in which he had secured them until fifty years after his death, when they were to be submitted to the verdict of a generation free from personal bias for or against him. His wishes were, however, disregarded, and the case was found to contain, besides several landscapes and flower-pieces, two battle-scenes from the Austro-German war of 1866, a portrait of Pauline Viardot Garcia, one of Queen Caroline of England, painted from a miniature in the Brunswick Museum, and a portrait of Prince Clement Metternich in his garden at Johannisberg, with this inscription: "I painted this portrait in 1858. I was so pleased with it that I resolved to keep it." Two of the landscapes were scenes from the Isle of Wight. He died at Frankfort, July 8, 1873. His full-length of the Prince Consort is in the National Portrait Gallery.

WINTERHALTER, JOHANN, was born at Vöhrenbach in the Black Forest in 1743, and worked for a time at Olmütz with his uncle, Joseph Winterhalter, a sculptor. He afterwards studied under Stern at Brünn, and under Maulpertsch. He worked in fresco, oil, and miniature, but his chief works were altar-pieces and other pictures for churches. He also excelled in architectural studies. He died at Znaim, in Moravia, in 1807.

WINTOUR, JOHN CRAWFORD, landscape painter, born in 1825, was an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy. He died at Edinburgh, July 29, 1882.

WIRTZ, JOHANN, (or WIRZ,) designer and engraver, was born at Zurich in 1640. He lost one eye when quite young, but took with avidity to drawing, and became a scholar of Konrad Meyer. Portrait painting was his profession, but he is remembered rather for the etchings produced in his leisure hours, especially for a set of forty-two original plates for a book written by himself, entitled 'Johannis Wirzii Romæ Animale Exemplum,' &c., published in 1677. They are etched in a neat style, resembling that of J. W. Baur. He also etched Michelangelo's 'Last Judgment,' and two plates after Holbein, one a woman with a naked child holding an arrow, the other a woman with two children. He died at Zurich in 1710.

WISSING, WILLEM, was born in 1656 at Amsterdam, but was a pupil of Willem Doudyns at the Hague. He afterwards visited Paris and England. He was for some time assistant to Sir Peter Lely, after whose death he became a favourite with English patrons. He painted all the Royal Family, and particularly the Duke of Monmouth, whose portrait he often repeated. Although he soon found a formidable rival in Sir Godfrey Kneller, he still was extensively employed, and after the death of Charles II. was appointed principal painter to his successor, by whom he was sent into Holland to take the portraits of William and Mary. He did not long survive his return to England, but died in 1687 at Bureleigh, the seat of the Earl of Exeter, whose portrait he had been painting. John Smith scraped a mezzotint after Wissing's portrait of himself. It is inscribed Gulielmus Wissingus inter pictores sui sæculi celebratissimus, nulli secundus, artis suæ non exiguum decus et ornamentum, immodicis brevis est ætas.

WITDOECK, JEAN, (WITDOUCK, or WITHOUC,) a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1604. He worked under the immediate eye of Rubens, after whom he engraved several plates. He also translated the works of Cornelis Schut, and other masters. The time of his death is unknown. The following are his best plates :

Melchizedeck presenting Bread and Wine to Abraham ;
after Rubens. 1638.

The Nativity. Retouched and improved by Bolswert.

WITHERINGTON, WILLIAM FREDERICK, landscape and figure painter, was born in London on the 26th of May, 1785. Brought up to business by his father, he at first attempted to combine it with the work of a student at the Royal Academy. At last, however, he abandoned "the city" for art, and in 1811 exhibited both at the Academy and the British Institution. His earlier works were landscapes with figures, but as time went on the figures encroached upon the landscape, until his subjects became almost purely genre. Weak health led him to desert London for the country, and thence, in 1835, he sent to the Academy a 'Hop Garden,' which now well represents him at South Kensington. The pictures by Witherington, which used to hang with the rest of the Vernon group in Trafalgar Square, have been banished to the provinces. He died April 10, 1865. Works :

WITHOOS, FRANS, was the youngest son and scholar of Mathias Withoos, and painted plants and insects in water-colours, in the style of his brother Pieter, to whom, however, he was very inferior. He visited Batavia, where the governor employed him. He died at Hoorn in 1705.

WITHOOS, JOHANNES, eldest son of Mathias Withoos, was born at Amersfort in 1648, and was taught by his father until he was able to undertake a journey to Italy on the produce of his talents. During a residence of several years at Rome, he painted the most picturesque views in that vicinity, in water-colours. Though he met with encouragement at Rome, he returned to Holland, where his works were not less popular. He was afterwards invited to the court of the Duke of Saxe-Lauenburg, in whose service he remained until his death in 1695.

WITHOOS, MATHIAS, (or MATTHÄUS,) was born at Amersfort in 1627, or 1629, and was for six years a scholar of the architect Jacob van Kampen. On leaving that master he travelled to Italy in company with Otto Marcellis, and instead of pursuing the line of art in which he had been trained, adopted that of his companion, and distinguished himself as a painter of curious plants, reptiles, and insects. During a residence of two years in Rome, he was much employed by the Cardinal de' Medici. On his return to Holland, in 1650, his works soon won popularity. The approach of the French in 1672 induced him to retire into North Holland. He settled at Hoorn, and there he died in 1703. His daughter, ALIDA, worked in her father's manner.

WITHOOS, PIETER, the second son of Mathias Withoos, was born in 1654, and received his first instruction in art from his father. He excelled in painting flowers, plants, and insects, in water-colours, on vellum. He died at Amsterdam in 1693.

WITTE. See DE WITTE.

WITTEL, KASPAR VAN, (usually called VANVITTELLI, or VANVITEL, also DEGLI OCCHIALI, and PICTORS,) was born at Utrecht in 1674. He was a pupil of Mathias Withoos, but went when young to Italy, (where he Italianized his name,) and then painted landscapes and architectural subjects. In Naples he obtained the patronage of the Spanish Regent, but after the revolution there he departed to Rome. He has painted views in the latter city, as well as in other cities and seaports of Italy, with a precision approaching to those of Venice by Canaletto. He died at Rome in 1736.

WITTIG, BARTOLOME, was born at Oels, in Silesia, about 1610. He excelled in painting festivals, concerts, and night pieces, and died at Nuremberg in 1684.

WITZANI, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, (OR WISZANIE,) painter and etcher, was born at Dresden in 1770, and was a pupil of Zingg. He first painted miniatures and then landscapes. For a while he was employed at the Meissen porcelain manufactory, and afterwards devoted himself to painting views and transparencies, and the production of aquatints and coloured etchings. He published a book of instruction in landscape painting. He died in 1835.

WITZANI, KARL AUGUSTUS, landscape painter and etcher, elder brother of Johann Friedrich Witzani, was born at Dresden in 1769. He was a pupil of Canale, but interrupted his artistic course by spending ten years in the artillery. He etched 'The Annunciation to the Shepherds' after Wouwerman, a view of a town after Van der Neer, and a landscape with cattle, after Karel Dujardin. He shot himself in 1816.

WIVELL, ABRAHAM, portrait painter, was born in Marylebone on the 9th July, 1786. After some education at the hands of his mother, he learnt shoemaking at the Marylebone School of Industry, but was apprenticed at thirteen to a wig-maker. This business he followed himself when his time was up, but beside the wigs in his window he used to expose for sale some miniatures in water-colour of his own doing. At the trial of the Cato Street conspirators he made sketches of their heads, which had a great success, and led him on to further ventures in the same field. He obtained a few commissions for theatrical portraits, and drew and published portraits of the chief persons engaged on the trial of Queen Caroline. The money he made by these productions he lost in publishing 'An Enquiry into the History of the Shakespeare Portraits,' and was only relieved from distress by an opportune legacy. He next took to inventing fire-escapes, and was appointed superintendent of their plant by the new Society for the Protection of Life from Fire. After a time he resigned this post and migrated to Birmingham, where, in 1847, he was employed to make portraits of railway magnates for the 'Railway Record.' He twice exhibited portraits in oil at the Academy, in 1822 and 1830, but his real gift was for a good likeness in black lead pencil. He died at Birmingham on the 29th of March, 1849.

WOCHER, MARQUARD, designer and etcher, was born at Seckingen, Baden, in 1758. He was first instructed by his father, and became a successful imitator of Aberli. He etched Swiss costumes after Lory; Swiss views after the same artist, after Aschmann, and from his own drawings; and painted a panorama of Thun and its neighbourhood. He died at Basle in 1825. His father, TIBERIUS WOCHER, (born at Mimmenhausen, 1728, died at Reutli, 1799,) was a portrait painter and etcher.

WOEIRIOT, PIERRE, (WOERIOT, VOEIRIOT, &c.,) who in 1562 assumed by permission the name of DE BOUZEY, was an engraver and sculptor, and was born at Bouzey, near Rheims, in 1531 or 1532. He was for a time sculptor to the Duke of Lorraine, but subsequently studied in Italy, and in 1555 settled in Lyons as an engraver, producing many historical plates and portraits, as well as a large number of patterns for goldsmiths. In 1561 he took to wood-engraving, and succeeded in that too. He usually marked his copper-plates with a monogram composed of the letters P. D. B. His woodcuts are very numerous, and executed with great delicacy. They are marked with the cross of Lorraine  $\ddagger$ . Dumesnil gives minute descriptions of 401 plates and woodcuts by him. The following plates are among his best:

The Sacrifice of Abraham.

Moses saved from the Nile.

Phalaris put into the Brazen Bull.

A Woman with two Children in her arms, throwing herself on a funeral pile.

Two small Landscapes, with a great number of figures.

The Battle betwixt Constantine and Maxentius; after Raphael.

The Resurrection; after Giorgio Ghisi.

WOENSAM, ANTON, (called ANTON VAN WORMS,) was a painter and wood engraver, who flourished in the 16th century. He was a native of Worms, but worked chiefly at Cologne. His works show him to have been a close imitator of Albrecht Dürer. He is first mentioned in records, in 1528, and is spoken of as dead in 1561. His pictures are rare, but there are examples in several private collections in Cologne, besides the following in public places: a 'Madonna,' at Darmstadt; a 'Madonna enthroned between Saints, in a Landscape,' in the Presbytery of the Church of St. Severin, Cologne; and a 'Christ on the Cross.' 'The Arrest of Christ,' in the Wallraf Museum at Cologne, dated 1520, is ascribed to him. Between 1528 and 1538 he executed a large number of cuts for illustrated Bibles and other works. It is suspected that he also engraved on copper, but his monogram so closely resembles that of a certain Saxon engraver that this point cannot be regarded as settled. Brulliot, however, asserts him to be the author of two copper plates: one represents a naked man sitting in a cavern and Death standing near him (dated 1522); the other represents St. Andrew holding his cross in one hand and a book in the other. Florent le Comte calls him 'Vuormace,' and one of his cuts has the inscription, 'Coloniae, per Anthonium de Vormacia Pictorem.' His prints are usually marked with an A and a W intersected, thus  $\text{XW}$ . The best of his woodcuts are:

Paradise (for the Cologne Bible of 1529).

The Holy Family (for the work of the Carthusian Dionysius).

Christ on the Cross, with the Virgin, St. John, and the Magdalene.

The Twelve Apostles.

St. Jerome (for the Cologne Bible of 1530).

Charles V. and the Sultan (a satirical print).

View of Cologne in nine plates—a Panorama of the city and its people in 1531.

WOENSEL, PETRONELLA, painter, was born at the Hague in 1785. She was a pupil of Van Os, and became a successful painter of flowers, fruits, and insects. She died in 1839.

WOGAN, THOMAS, an Irish miniature painter, was born about 1740. He studied at Dublin, and practised both there and in London, exhibiting at the Royal Academy in 1776-78. He died in Dublin in 1780.

WOHLGEMUTH. See WOLGEMUT.

WOLF, CASPAR, was born at Muri, in Aargau, in 1735, and studied first under Lenzer at Constance, afterwards at Augsburg, Munich, and Passau, and lastly under De Louthembourg in Paris. On returning home he was employed by the connoisseur Wagner to assist in bringing out 'The Beauties of Switzerland' in coloured plates; but the work was never completed. Altogether Wolf contributed about one hundred and fifty engravings. His principal works were landscapes, chiefly wild mountain scenery. He died at Mannheim in 1798.

WOLF, HANS, was born about 1480, and flourished about 1508-38 at Bamberg, where, in 1518, he became court painter to the prince bishop. He was friendly with Albrecht Dürer, who drew his portrait in his sketch-book.

WOLF, JOHANN ANDREAS, was born at Munich in 1652. He was the pupil of his father, JONAS WOLF, an obscure painter, and of the sculptor Ableitner. For a time he followed the manner of Schönfeld and Karl Loth, but afterwards improved his style by the study of some drawings by Raphael. He painted many pictures for Bavarian churches, and was appointed court painter at Munich and Freising. Among his works are a 'St. Andrew' in the Freising cathedral, an 'Ascension of Christ' at Krensmünster, his own portrait in the Old Pinakothek at Munich, and other examples at Augsburg, Schleissheim, &c. He died at Munich in 1716.

WOLF, LUISE, was born at Leipsic in 1798, and studied successively under Langer, Cornelius, Overbeck, and Schnorr. She painted religious pictures in imitation of mediæval art, also miniature portraits in water-colour. A series of the former were reproduced in forty plates engraved by Barfus, Walde, and Petsch, and published at Göttingen with text by Dr. Schöberlein, under the title of 'Hauscapelle.' She died at Bogenhausen, near Munich, in 1859.

WOLF, ULRICH LUDWIG, designer and engraver, was born at Berlin in 1772. He was destined for a sculptor, but became a painter, and the pupil of Meil and Carstens. He received so many commissions for illustrative designs, however, that he soon abandoned painting. He illustrated Shakespeare, Schiller, and Ossian; whilst his portrait of Frederick II. upon his favourite horse, Condé, was pronounced the most truthful of that monarch's likenesses. He also etched, engraved, and lithographed a number of plates. He was a member of the Academy of Berlin, where he died in 1832.

WOLFAERTS, ARTUS, (or WOLFFORDT,) historical painter, was born at Antwerp in 1581, and was made free of the Guild of St. Luke in 1616-17. His subjects were often taken from the Bible or from mythology, and had landscapes and architectural compositions for their backgrounds. He also painted peasant gatherings in the style of Teniers. His reputation was great during life, and Van Dyck painted his portrait. He died in 1641.

WOLFAERTS, JAN B——, the son of Artus (?), was born at Antwerp in 1625. After travelling for a time in Italy, he seems to have settled in Holland. He was received into the Guild at Haarlem in 1647. His works were chiefly landscapes in the manner of Cuypp, sometimes with animals. He died in 1687.

WOLFENBERGER, JOHANN JAKOB, was born at Runlikon, in the canton of Zurich, in 1797, and commenced his artistic career by colouring prints for the establishment of H. Füssli. He then went on foot to Naples, where he worked at first under Huber, and afterwards on his own account. Under commission from the Duke of Berwick, he went to Sicily in 1821 to paint views in that island. He then worked for a while in Rome, visited Athens in 1832, Constantinople and Asia Minor in 1834. After his return from the East in 1838, he exhibited in Zurich some two hundred of his water-colour pictures. He visited Vienna, Paris, and London, where some of his works became popular in engravings. His latest productions were views in Switzerland. He died at Zurich in 1850. His favourite model was Salvator Rosa.

WOLFF, BENJAMIN, a German painter settled in Holland, was born at Dessau in 1758. He studied for a time in Italy, and in 1814 was appointed Keeper of the Amsterdam Museum, where there is a copy of Titian's 'Portrait of Francis I.' by him. He died at Amsterdam, October 15, 1825.

WOLFGANG, ANDREAS MATTHÄUS, an engraver, son of Georg Andreas Wolfgang, was born at Augsburg in 1662, or perhaps 1660, and learned drawing and engraving from his father. He accompanied his brother Johann Georg to England, and on his return voyage was taken by pirates and carried to Algiers. Ransomed by his father, he then settled at Augsburg, where he died in 1736. He engraved many portraits of distinguished persons, of which the best, perhaps, are those of the Margrave of Anspach, of Prince Eugène, and of the Emperor Charles VI. He also engraved some battle-pieces and genre subjects.

WOLFGANG, GEORG ANDREAS, engraver and goldsmith, was born at Chemnitz, Saxony, in 1631. He at first engraved sword-blades and other weapons, but afterwards learnt to work on copper from Mattheus Küssel. He engraved historical subjects and portraits after Schönfeldt, Werner, Zierl, and others, in line. He also scraped some mezzotints. He died at Augsburg in 1716. Among others, we have the following prints by him:

LINE ENGRAVINGS.

Georg. Friedrich, Margrave of Brandenburg; after C. Zierl.

Peter Müller, Jurisconsult.

A Sacrifice to Diana; after J. H. Schönfeldt.

Saul consulting the Shade of Samuel; after J. Werner.

A set of ten subjects from the Old and New Testament; after Umbach.

MEZZOTINTS.

Johannes Koch, a medallion.

A young Warrior in armour, with flowing hair.

An old Man seated at a table, an old Woman behind his chair.

A young Man with long curled hair, and an old Man with a beard.

Susannah at the Bath; after Holbein.

A younger GEORG ANDREAS WOLFGANG was the son of Johann Georg Wolfgang, and was born at Augsburg in 1703. He was a portrait painter, and worked for some time in England, but afterwards became court painter at Gotha.

WOLFGANG, GUSTAV ANDREAS, painter and engraver, was the son of Andreas Matthäus Wolfgang, and was born at Augsburg in 1692. He was taught engraving by his uncle, Johann Georg, and executed several portrait plates in the same neat style. He died at his birthplace in 1775.

WOLFGANG, JOHANN GEORG, an engraver, the younger son of Georg Andreas Wolfgang, was born at Augsburg in 1664, and was his father's pupil.

He was carried to Algiers with his brother, Andreas Matthäus, and after his return was invited, in 1704, to the court of Berlin, and appointed engraver to the first king of Prussia. He died in 1748. He has left a considerable number of portraits, executed much more neatly than those of his father and brother. He also engraved a set of prints for a folio volume entitled 'Notitia Universitatis Francofurtanæ,' published in 1707. His best plate is a 'Crucifix,' after Le Brun. The following are among his portraits:

- Friedrich Wilhelm, Elector of Brandenburg; from the equestrian statue by Jacobi.
- August Wilhelm, Duke of Brunswick and Lunenburg; after Franck.
- Johann Melchior Dinglinger; after A. Pesne.

WOLFVOET, VICTOR, (who has been confounded by some writers with the pupil of Rembrandt, Jan Victoors, or Fictooors,) was the son of a painter of the same name. He was born at Antwerp in 1612. He was the scholar first of his father, and afterwards of Rubens, whose style he studied with much success. In 1644 he entered the Artists' Guild. A 'Visitation' by him, in the church of St. Jacques at Antwerp, is in imitation of the same subject on the wing of Rubens's 'Descent from the Cross' in the cathedral of Antwerp. In the Dresden Gallery there is a 'Head of Medusa,' signed 'Victor Wolfvoet.' He died in his native city in 1652.

WOLGEMUT, MICHAEL, (or WOHLGEMUTH,) the most famous master of the early school of Franconia, was born at Nuremberg in 1434. He is first mentioned in the town records in 1473. In 1472 he married the widow of a brother painter, one Hans Pleydenwurff, and his step-son, Wilhelm, assisted him for a time in his atelier. He had many pupils, and it is believed that not only was the painting of large altar-pieces carried on in his workshop, but also the carving of their adjuncts, and of church furniture generally. His earliest works are four scenes from the 'Passion' (1465), now in the Munich Pinakothek. A later work, painted in 1479, is a large altar-piece in the Marienkirche at Zwickau, which shows a marked improvement upon his earlier productions. In the Vienna Gallery there is a 'St. Jerome' painted by him in 1511. Scenes from the saint's history are depicted in the background; the donors, a man and woman, kneel at his side. Wolgemut was an excellent portrait painter. Dr. Woermann ascribes to him the portraits of a man and his wife, in the 'Amalienstift,' at Dessau; also a small half-length of Ursula Tucher, in the Cassel Gallery, and three members of the same stock in the Weimar Museum. Wolgemut died at Nuremberg, November 30, 1519. Three years before his death Albrecht Dürer painted his portrait, which is in the Munich Gallery. It bears an inscription in old German to the following effect: "This has Albrecht Dürer portrayed after his master Michael Wolgemut, in the year 1516. He was then eighty-two years old, and lived until the year 1519, when he died on Saint Andrew's Day (30 November), early, before the sun rose." Dürer's drawing for this portrait is in the Albertina, Vienna. Dr. Thausing attaches the greatest importance to the influence of Wolgemut over Dürer, and has done much to restore the general prestige of the older master. Additional works:

- Augsburg. Gallery. The Resurrection.
- " " " " The Crucifixion.
- Darmstadt. Gallery. The wings of an Altar-piece.
- Liverpool. Institute. Christ before Pilate.

Liverpool.	Institute.	(?) Deposition from the Cross. (Wings of an altar-piece, no. 1049 in the National Gallery, which was formerly ascribed to Aldegrever.)

The assertion that Wolgemut was himself an engraver is still open to doubt, but the balance of authority now inclines strongly to the opinion which would make him the author of the much-contested prints signed with the initial W. Down to the commencement of the 19th century, Wolgemut had been generally identified with the 'Master W.' Bartsch then found, in the Albertina, an impression of the 'Man of Sorrows, between Mary and John,' also engraved by Schongauer, on which an old written inscription was legible, to the effect that "this engraver was named Wenzel, and was a goldsmith." This, combined with the inscription on a copy of Schongauer's 'Death of Mary,' namely, Wenceslaus de Olomucz ibidem, led to Wenzel's identification with the Master W, who was assumed to have copied Schongauer in his youth and Dürer in his old age. Thausing, however, reverts to the old belief, and his opinion now tends to prevail. The chief plates signed W. and ascribable to Wolgemut are as follows:

- The Angelic Salutation. (Two versions.)
- The Nativity. (Copy from Schongauer.)
- The Last Supper.
- Christ on the Mount of Olives. (Copy from Schongauer.)
- Pilate washing his hands. (Do.)
- Christ on the Cross. (After Schongauer.)
- The Man of Sorrows. (Free copy from Schongauer.)
- Virgin and Child with a Paroquet. (Reversed copy from Schongauer.)
- The Martyrdom of St. Andrew.
- The Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew. (After Meister Stephan.)
- St. George and the Dragon. (Copy from Schongauer.)
- St. Sebastian. (Copy in reverse from Schongauer.)
- St. Sebastian. (Do.)
- Martyrdom of St. Sebastian.
- St. Judas Thaddeus. (Copy from Schongauer.)
- St. Thomas. (Do.)
- St. Barbara.
- St. Catharine. (Reversed copy from Schongauer.)
- The Two Lovers, walking.
- The Abduction of Amymone.
- The Hostess and the Cook.
- The Two Lovers, seated.
- The Subjugation of Man by Woman.
- A Savage with Shields. (Reversed copy from Schongauer.)
- An Angel with a Shield. (Do.)
- A female Savage with Child and Shield. (Do.)
- Seated Female with a Shield. (Do.)
- 'Roma Caput Mundi?' (A famous satirical print, of which three impressions are known, one at Dresden, one at Frankfort, and one at the British Museum.)

Whatever conclusion may be come to on the subject of these W plates, there is no doubt that Wolgemut was a prolific producer of designs for the wood-cutter. In 1491 Anton Koberger brought out the 'Schatzkammer der wahren Reichthümer des Heils und der ewigen Seligkeit,' with his designs. This was followed by Schedel's 'History of the World,' full of wood-cuts, as to which a note at the end informs us that they were engraved under the supervision of Wolgemut and Wilhelm Pleydenwurff. See Thausing, 'Life of Dürer,' 1882. (Eng. Translation, Caps. IV. and VIII.) W. A.

WOLLASTON, J., was born in London about the year 1672, and painted portraits, which had the reputation of being good likenesses. Besides painting, he performed on the violin and flute, and played at the concerts of Thomas Britton, the Musical Small-Coal Man, whose portrait he twice painted; one of these portraits was purchased by Sir Hans Sloane, and is now in the National Portrait Gallery, transferred from the British Museum. Wollaston died in the Charterhouse at an advanced age.

WOLLASTON, JOHN, an English portrait painter of the 18th century, who painted a portrait of Whitefield preaching, which is now in the National Portrait Gallery. It was engraved by John Faber. Emigrating to America, he painted several portraits at Philadelphia in 1758. He afterwards had a good practice in Virginia, where he painted Washington's mother.

WOLSTENHOLME, D. } Two English
WOLSTENHOLME, D. JUNR. } animal painters of the 19th century. The father practised at Cheshunt, and afterwards at Turnford, exhibiting at the Royal Academy, the British Institution, and the Society of British Artists from 1803 to 1859. The son was born about 1800, and practised in London, exhibiting at the Royal Academy between 1819 and 1849.

WOLTERS, HENRIETTA, miniature painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1692. She was the daughter and pupil of Theodorus van Pee. She afterwards studied miniature under Jacques Christophe le Blond, and soon surpassed her preceptor in delicacy of handling and beauty of colour. The portraits of Van Dyck were her favourite models. Her talent soon attracted attention, and she was employed by the principal families of Amsterdam. In 1719 she married the painter HERMAN WOLTERS (born at Zwolle in 1682, died 1755 or 56), who assisted her in some of her works, especially in the draperies. Peter the Great invited her to St. Petersburg, but attachment to her own country led her to refuse his offer. An invitation from Frederick William, King of Prussia, met with the same answer, and she died at Amsterdam in 1741.

WOLUWE, JAN VAN, painter and illuminator, was one of the earliest artists of the Flemish school, and flourished in Brabant towards the close of the 14th century. He held the post of painter to the ducal court, and ancient records show that between 1378 and 1386 he executed a large number of works for the Duchess Jeanne de Brabant, among them a diptych for her oratory in Brussels, but none of these have survived.

WONDER, PIETER CRISTOFFEL, was born at Utrecht in 1777. He studied at the Düsseldorf Academy in 1802-4. He visited England, and worked in London from 1823 to 1831. His works were portraits, family pictures, and conversation pieces; he was also a designer and etcher. He was a member of the Amsterdam Academy, and died in that city, July 12, 1852. The Rijks Museum has a picture by him, and his 'Herring Seller' is in the Rotterdam Museum.

WOOD, JOHN, an English engraver, flourished in London about the year 1745, and is believed to have received his instruction under Chatelain. He engraved several plates for the set of landscapes published by Boydell in 1747. His death occurred about 1780. Among other prints by him we have the following :

Two Landscapes; after Gaspard Poussin.
Two Italian Landscapes; after Claude Lorrain.
A Fire-light; after Rembrandt.
Lake Nemi; after Richard Wilson.
A View of London from Greenwich; after Tillemans.

WOOD, JOHN, painter, was born in London on the 29th June, 1801. He was the son of a drawing master, showed an early inclination for art himself, and went successively to Sass's Academy and the schools of the Royal Academy. At the Academy, in 1825, he won the gold medal; in 1834, the commission for an altar-piece for St. James's, Bermondsey; and, in 1836, a prize at Manchester for his 'Elizabeth in the Tower,' and a premium of £1000, in open competition, for a 'Baptism of Christ.' But his later work did not fulfil the expectations thus excited, and he died obscure on the 19th April, 1870.

WOOD, JOHN GEORGE, an English water-colour painter and draughtsman, was born in the latter part of the 18th century. He practised in London, and exhibited landscapes, chiefly Welsh, at the Royal Academy from 1793 to 1811. He died in 1838. He published the following illustrated works:

'Plans for Labourers' Cottages.' 1792.
'Six Views of Llangollen.' 1793.
'Elements of Perspective.' 1799.
'Lectures on Perspective.' 1804.
'The Principal Rivers of Wales.' 1813.
'The Principles . . of sketching . . from Nature.' 1814.

WOOD, MATTHEW, copyist, &c., held an appointment in the Post Office. He exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1841 and 1855, and committed suicide in 1855.

WOOD, THOMAS, was born in London, April 24, 1800. He was educated at the Royal Academy, and afterwards painted landscape in water-colour. Between 1828 and 1853 he exhibited eighteen drawings with the Academy, many being of a very great merit. In 1835 he was appointed drawing-master to Harrow School, a post which he was compelled to resign in 1871, from loss of sight. He died at Conisborough Vicarage, Yorkshire, in 1878, and was buried in York.

WOOD, WILLIAM, an English miniature painter, was born in 1768. He practised with success in London, and exhibited at the Academy from 1788 to 1807. He took a prominent part in founding the Society of Associated Artists in Water-Colours, in 1808, and became their president. In 1808 he published an essay on National and Sepulchral Monuments. He died in London in 1809.

WOODCOCK, ROBERT, marine painter, was born in or about 1691, of a gentle family. He had a place under the Government, but quitted it to devote himself to art, and confined himself to seapieces. He studied the technical part of his subject with so much attention, that he could model a full-rigged ship with the utmost exactness. In 1723 he began to paint in oil, and in two years is said to have copied above forty pictures of W. Van de Velde. He was also an amateur musician of some skill, and published a few compositions of his own. He died of the gout, in 1728.

WOODFIELD, CHARLES, painter of topographical landscapes, was born about 1650. He was a pupil of Isaac Fuller, and in his rare fits of industry painted buildings, antiquities, and views. He died in 1724.

WOODFORDE, SAMUEL, an English subject and landscape painter, was born at Castle Cary in 1764. Early showing a talent for art, he was enabled by the help of Sir R. C. Hoare to enter the schools of the Royal Academy at the age of eighteen. Three years later, the same patron sent him to Italy, where he studied until 1791. Returning to England, he worked for Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery, and painted fancy subjects and portraits. His 'Forest scene from Titus Andronicus,' painted for Boydell, was engraved by Anker Smith. But though very laborious, success came to him slowly. In 1800 he was elected an Associate of the Academy, where he had exhibited for several years, and in 1807 a full member. In 1815 he married, and soon after set out for Italy. His career was cut short by a fever, and he died at Ferrara in 1817. There are by him :

London. R. Academy. Dorinda wounded by Sylvia.
 " S. Ken. Museum. Pan teaching Apollo. 1790.
 (Water-colours.)

WOODHOUSE, JOHN THOMAS, an English amateur painter of portraits and subjects, was born in 1780. He was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.D., though he never practised medicine. His reputation as an artist was acquired by his portraits of his friends and contemporaries, and he exhibited a few subject pictures at the Royal Academy. He died at Cambridge in 1845. There are portraits by him of the Rev. Chauncy Hare Townshend and his sister, and of Henry Hare Townshend, in the South Kensington Museum.

WOODING, P—, an English line engraver, practised towards the close of the 18th century, and was the master of William Bromley.

WOODMAN, RICHARD, an English engraver, was born about the middle of the 18th century. He worked in London, in stipple, up to about 1810. Amongst his best plates are :

The Choice of Penelope; after J. Riley.
 Children at Play; after N. Poussin.

WOODMAN, RICHARD, engraver and draughtsman, was born in London in 1784, and was the son of the above. When about fifteen he entered the studio of R. M. Meadows, a stipple engraver, where besides learning to engrave he received a few lessons in colouring from a fellow-pupil. After leaving Meadows he was employed for a time in colouring the engraved fac-similes of Westall's drawings. In 1808 he accepted an offer from Wedgwood to superintend the engravers' department at Etruria, but did not remain there long. On returning to London he was employed on large sporting plates, and engraved several subjects in line for Knight's 'Pictorial Gallery.' Towards the end of his life he relinquished the graver for water-colour and miniature painting. He died December 15, 1859. His best plate is 'The Judgment of Paris,' after Rubens.

WOODWARD, GEORGE M., an English caricaturist, born in the second half of the 18th century. His earliest works appeared in 1792. In 1797 Rowlandson engraved his 'Cupid's Magic Lanthorn.' He caricatured Mrs. Billington in a design called 'The Musical Mania for 1802.' He led an irregular life, and died in a state of destitution in an inn in Bow Street, London, in 1809. Besides his separate plates, he published the following illustrated works :

'Eccentric Excursions in England.' 1798.
 'Le Brun travestied.' 1800.
 'The Caricature Magazine.' 1807.
 'Comic Works in Prose and Poetry.' 1808.

WOODWARD, THOMAS, animal painter, was born at Pershore, Worcestershire, in 1801. He was a pupil of Abraham Cooper, R.A. At the age of fifteen he began to exhibit at the British Institution, while from 1822 to the year of his death he was seldom absent from the Academy. He died at Worcester in 1852. Works :

Turks with their Chargers. 1823.
 The Chariot Race. 1829.
 Horse pursued by Wolves. 1831.
 Detachment of Cromwellian Cavalry surprised in a Pass. 1841. A Tempting Present.
 Welsh Shepherdess and her Dogs. 1845.
 Mazeppa. 1851. Battle of Worcester.

WOOLLETT, WILLIAM, an eminent English engraver, was born at Maidstone, August 15, 1735. His father, by descent a Dutchman, was a flax dresser, but a lottery ticket in which he had a share having drawn a prize of £5000, he on the strength of it took a public-house called the 'Turk's Head.' Here young Woollett is said to have determined his future career by scratching a clever Turk's Head on a pewter pot. His father sent him to London, binding him apprentice to an obscure engraver, John Tinney of Fleet Street, but he owed his fine style to nothing but his native genius. By an intelligent union of the point and the burin, he carried landscape engraving to a perfection unknown before his time, and still unsurpassed. His foregrounds are as deep and vigorous as his distances are tender and delicate. In his exquisite prints from Richard Wilson, he has impressed on the copper the very mind and feeling of that classic painter. The talent of Woollett was not, however, confined to landscape; he engraved historical subjects and portraits with equal success. Of his historical plates, the two best, perhaps, are those after West's 'Death of Wolfe,' and 'Battle off Cape La Hogue.' He belonged to the St. Martin's Lane Academy, and in 1766 was received into the Incorporated Society of Artists, to which he subsequently became secretary. On November 27, 1775, he was appointed engraver to the king. Woollett lived for many years at 11 Green Street, Leicester Square, and later in Charlotte Street, Rathbone Place. It is said that he was in the habit of firing a cannon from the roof of his house when he had finished an important plate. His character as a man was exemplary. Naturally modest and amiable, he never censured the works of others, or omitted to point out their merit. He died in London, May 23, 1785, from the effects of an injury received some years before while playing at Dutch Pins. He was buried in Old St. Pancras Churchyard, a plain tombstone marking his resting-place. On this stone some anonymous versifier wrote the following in pencil :

"Here Woollett rests, expecting to be saved;
 He graved well, but is not well engraved."

The distich may have had some part in bringing about a subscription for a fit memorial. This was executed by Thomas Banks, R.A., and was placed in the west cloister of Westminster Abbey. The following is a list of Woollett's more important plates :

George III.; after Allan Ramsay.
 Peter Paul Rubens; after Van Dyck.
 The Merry Villagers; after Thomas Jones.
 Æneas and Dido; after Jones and Mortimer.
 A Landscape, with Buildings; after John Smith; the 'Second Premium' print.
 Another Landscape; after George Smith; the 'First Premium' print.
 The Hay-makers; after the same.
 The Apple-gatherers; after the same.

The Rural Cot; after the same.
 The Spanish Pointer; after Stubbs.

 Jacob and Laban, or, 'Le Grand Pont'; after the same.
 The Death of General Wolfe; after West.
 The Battle of La Hogue; after the same.
 Charles II. landing at Dover; after the same (only the etching is by Woollett; the plate was finished by William Sharp).
 The Storm; after Joseph Vernet.

For a complete list of Woollett's plates and further details of his career, see the 'Catalogue Raisonné of the engraved works of William Woollett' (London, 1885), by Louis Fagan, of the British Museum.

WOOLNOUTH, THOMAS, an English engraver, was born in 1785. He engraved many theatrical portraits after Wageman. He died after 1836. Amongst his plates are:

The Infant Saviour; after Correggio.
 Portrait of Gevartius; after Van Dyck.
 Ecce Homo; after Guido (?).

WOOTTON, JOHN, an eminent English painter of landscapes and animals, was born towards the end of the 17th century. He was a scholar of Jan Wijk, and became a distinguished artist in the branch which he principally pursued. He excelled in sporting subjects, and in painting dogs and horses. He was much employed at Newmarket in painting the portraits of racers. Seven pictures of Fox-hunting by him were engraved by Canot. He painted a portrait of William, Duke of Cumberland, with the routed army of the Pretender in the background, which Baron engraved. He painted excellent landscapes in the styles of Claude Lorrain and Gaspard Poussin. He designed some of the illustrations in the first edition of Gay's 'Fables,' published in 1727. In his latter years his sight failed, and he died in London in 1765. His works are numerous in English country houses.

WORLIDGE, THOMAS, an English portrait painter and etcher, was born in 1700. He first practised at Bath, drawing miniature portraits on vellum, in pencil or Indian ink. He afterwards painted, in King Street, Covent Garden, portraits in pastel and oil, including those of Mary Squires, Elizabeth Canning, and Kitty Fisher. Meeting, however, with little success, he abandoned painting and devoted himself to etching. He etched 'The Theatre at Oxford as it appeared on the Installation of the Earl of Westmoreland,' in 1761; a work containing a multitude of heads and figures, mostly portraits, including one of the artist himself. Worlidge adopted a style modelled on that of Rembrandt. His prints are very numerous, but chiefly consist of Rembrandtesque heads, and portraits. In 1768, two years after his death, a series of one hundred and eighty-two engravings of antique gems by him was published. A complete set of first states on satin is now a valuable rarity. He has also left an etching of 'Marcus Tullius Cicero,' after the marble at Oxford. He spent part of his later years at Bath, but died at Hammersmith September 23, 1766, having exhibited portraits with the Free Society in that same year.

WORMS, ANTON VON. See WOENSAM.

WORNUM, RALPH NICHOLSON, was born at Thornton, near Durham, in 1812. Originally intended for the bar, he chose art as his profession when he was twenty-two, and studied for five years in Munich, Dresden, Rome, and Paris. He settled in London in 1840, competed at the first Westminster Hall Competition, (where he was honourably mentioned,) and in 1846 first printed that excellent catalogue of the National Gallery which has served as the model for so many later compilations of the same kind. In 1856 he was appointed keeper of the Institution to which he had already done so great a service. After his catalogue, his best known works with the pen are 'Epochs of Painting,' and a 'Life of Holbein.' He died in London on the 15th of December, 1877.

WOROBIEFF, MAXIME NIKIFORÓWITSCH, a Russian painter, was born in 1787, and was a pupil of Semen F. Schtschedrin and Alexejeff, but improved himself by travels in the East and Italy. In 1825 he was appointed professor of perspective to the St. Petersburg Academy, and founded therein a school of landscape painting, distinguished by its daring colour. He died in 1855. Among his works the following may be noted:

Quay of the Neva on a Summer's Night.

View of Moscow in 1818. (Hermitage.)

View of Constantinople.

The Subterranean Chapel at Bethlehem. (Hermitage.)

Interior of the Church of Golgotha. (Hermitage.) 1824.

Gateway of the Church of the Redeemer at Jerusalem.

View from the Sabine Mountains.

WORSDALE, JAMES, an English portrait painter, was the scholar and reputed natural son of Sir Godfrey Kneller, who dismissed him for marrying his wife's niece without his consent. He never arrived at great excellence in art, but, being gifted with humour and with a happy disposition, he made friends, and was appointed, by their influence, master painter to the Board of Ordnance. He painted a full-length portrait of George II., and presented it to the Yarmouth Corporation. He published several poetical pieces, songs, &c., besides some dramatic productions. He died in London in 1767, leaving instructions that his tombstone should be thus inscribed:

"Eager to get, but not to keep, the pelf,
 A friend to all mankind except himself."

His son, also a painter, succeeded him at the Board of Ordnance, and died in 1779.

WORSEY, THOMAS, an English flower painter, born in 1829. In his early years he worked at Birmingham as a painter on papier-maché. Aspiring to a higher art, he devoted himself to flower painting about 1850, and obtained a good practice, exhibiting at some of the London exhibitions. His death occurred at Birmingham in 1875, shortly before which he had been elected a member of the Royal Birmingham Society of Artists.

WORST, JAN, a Dutch draughtsman and painter, was born in 1625. In company with his friend Jan Lingelbach, he passed some time in Italy, making drawings of the scenery in bistre and black chalk. Some of these he afterwards used for pictures. He died in Holland in 1680.

WORTHINGTON, WILLIAM HENRY, an English line engraver, was born about 1795. Specimens of his work will be found in 'British Museum Marbles,' and in Pickering's 'History of England.' He also engraved after Stothard. He was still active as late as 1833.

WORTMAN, CHRISTIAN ALBRECHT, was, according to Huber, a native of Pomerania, and flourished about the year 1730. He was instructed in engraving by Wolfgang, and at the age of twenty-five was invited to the court of Hesse-Cassel, where he was appointed engraver to the Landgrave. In 1727 he went to St. Petersburg, where he engraved the portraits of several princes and people about the court. Among others, we may name the following plates by him :

Anna, Empress of Russia; after L. Caravague.
Alexis, son of Peter I.; after Lundden.
Ernst Ludwig, Landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt.

WOUTERS, FRANS, was born in Lierre, Brabant, October 12, 1614. After receiving some instruction in art, he was sent to Antwerp, to the school of Rubens, where he applied himself to landscape painting. His subjects were generally taken from the Forest of Soignies, near Brussels, which he filled with an historical and fabulous population. There are altar-pieces by him in the Belgian churches, notably a 'Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter,' in St. Peter's at Louvain; and a 'Visitation,' in the church of the Augustines, Antwerp; but he is less successful in large pictures than in small. He was employed as court painter by the Emperor Ferdinand II., but coming to England in 1637, and the Emperor dying in the same year, he was appointed chief painter to the Prince of Wales, afterwards Charles II. On the breaking out of the civil war he returned to Belgium, and was in 1648 appointed director of the Antwerp Academy, where, in 1659, he was killed by the accidental discharge of a gun. Four landscapes and some other subjects were etched by Frans Wouters. Additional works:

Copenhagen. Gallery. Venus and Adonis.
Frankfort. Staedel Inst. A Conflagration by Moonlight (with the forged signature of
A. Van der Neer).

Vienna. Gallery. The Huntress Diana. 1630.

WOUTERS, GOMAR, historical and landscape painter, was a native of Flanders, but practised chiefly at Rome. He flourished towards the end of the 17th century. There are some large prints by him, representing views in and near Rome, with figures. Their style resembles that of Callot, and they are inscribed G. Wouters, Cavalier, del. et sculp.

WOUTERS, JAKOB, called also VOSMEER and VOSMAER, was born at Delft in 1584. He was an excellent painter of landscapes, which he quitted, however, for fruit and flower painting. He went to Italy, but returned to Delft, where he married, became Dean of the Guild of St. Luke in 1633, and died in 1641. One DANIEL VOSMAER, perhaps his son, painted landscapes, views, &c., and flourished at Delft in 1654. He more than once painted the disastrous explosion of that year. An example in the Delft Town-hall is signed Daniel Vosmaer.

WOUTERSZ, JOHANNES, an obscure Dutch painter, born at Oudewater. His name occurs as a citizen of Amsterdam in the civic records of 1542. In the Rijks Museum at Amsterdam there is a picture by him, representing the bureau of a Jurisconsult. The half-obliterated inscription reads: johan: i: WOVT: an: 15.

WOUTIERS, (or WOUTERS,) MICHELINA, or MAGDALENA, a native of Mons or Berghen, and a portrait painter of the Flemish school, flourished in the first half of the 17th century. No details concerning her are known, but in the Vienna Gallery are two half-length figures of saints (a 'S. Joachim' and a 'S. Joseph'), which were long erroneously ascribed to Frans Wouters. They were restored to their rightful author by Herr v. Engerth in the new Catalogue. Michelina's portrait of the Spanish General, Andres Cantelmo, was engraved by Pontius in 1643.

WOUWERMAN, JAN, was born at Haarlem in 1629. He was the third son of Paul Joosten, and the younger brother and pupil of Philips Wouwerman. He was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke in 1655. He painted so much in the style of Wijnants that his pictures are often ascribed to that master. He died at Haarlem in 1666. The Rotterdam Museum has a sandy landscape by him. It is signed J. W.

WOUWERMAN, PAUL, was the son of Pieter Wouwerman, and was born at Haarlem in 1657. He was educated in art at Antwerp, where he afterwards became a Carthusian monk, and where he lived until he was nearly a hundred years old. He was inscribed on the registers of St. Luke in 1669-70. He died about 1755. There has been some dispute as to whether he were the son of Pieter or Philips Wouwerman, but the evidence favours the statement made above.

WOUWERMAN, PHILIPS, was born at Haarlem, where he was baptized on May 24, 1614. His father, PAUL JOOSTEN WOUWERMAN, was a native of Alkmaar and a mediocre painter. He married three times, and had three sons by the third wife, all of whom became painters. Philips was the pupil of his father and of Jan Wijnants. At the age of nineteen he eloped with a young woman of the old religion to Hamburg, where he married her. At Hamburg he stayed for a time, working in the studio of Everard Decker, but in 1640 we find him back in Haarlem, and received into the Guild of St. Luke. In 1643 he buried one of his children. In 1642 a pupil of his was inscribed on the Guild books; in 1645 he was Vinder of the corporation; in 1655 we again hear of a pupil of his being received by the Guild; and then, on May 19, 1668, we find the record of his own funeral, which cost thirty-seven florins. His wife survived him less than two years, being buried on January 22, 1670. Her funeral cost twenty-one florins. These sums, considerable for the time, seem to negative the idea that the last years of Wouwerman were passed in poverty. It is said that a priest, one Cornelis Cats, helped him out of his early difficulties, and set him on the road to comparative ease, by the loan of a considerable sum early in his married life, and that the painter never ceased to show his gratitude. In his short life of forty-nine years, Wouwerman did a prodigious amount of work. Even if we deny his authorship of one half the pictures ascribed to him in the better European collections, we leave him with at least 500, or about one for every three weeks during his productive years. His popular reputation depends chiefly on his horses, but in his finest works he shows himself a consummate master of composition, of aerial perspective, and of artistic anatomy. As a natural colourist, too, and as a technical painter he has had few equals. Among his pupils were his brother Pieter, Koort Witholt, Nicolaas Ficke, Jacob Warnars, and Anthonie de Haen. The following list is confined to his better and more accessible pictures:

WOUWERMAN, PIETER, was the son of Paul Joosten, and the younger brother of Philips Wouwerman. He was received into the Guild of St. Luke at Haarlem in 1646. He married in 1654, and had children. He must have visited France, for in some of his pictures, views in Paris are introduced. It is possible also that he lived for a time in Antwerp, where his son Paul was apprenticed. Pieter Wouwerman died about 1683. His pictures are often ascribed to his brother Philips.

WREN, SIR CHRISTOPHER, was born at East Knoyle, Wilts, on October 20, 1632; died in London, February 25, 1723. He demands a place in these pages by his doings as an engraver. At one time it was thought by some critics that Wren was the actual inventor of mezzotint. That he worked at it, and worked well, is pretty certain, but the time of his doing so was probably no earlier than 1662-1665. Delaborde supposes him to have become acquainted with the secret then possessed by Prince Rupert, through Evelyn. The plates ascribed to Sir Christopher are only two in number; both are heads of negroes. Of one Delaborde gives a capital facsimile, by Girard. The other is a smaller plate. Impressions of both are in the British Museum.

WRENK, FRANZ, engraver, was born at Strahain, in Carinthia, in 1766. He learnt his art from J. Jacobé of Vienna, and was employed as professor at the Engineers' Academy in that city. Many of his best plates were portraits after Füger; he also executed a 'Magdalen' after Gentileschi, and a landscape after Vernet. He died at Vienna in 1830.

WRIGHT, ANDREW, sergeant painter to Henry VIII., practised at Southwark early in that king's reign, but never enjoyed much repute.

WRIGHT, INIGO, was an English mezzotint engraver, who flourished about the year 1770, and engraved after Morland, Frans Hals, and others. We have among others the following prints by him:

The Family of Van Goyen; after J. van Goyen.
St. John preaching in the Wilderness; after F. Lauri.

WRIGHT, JOHN, a miniature painter, who practised early in the present century, exhibited regularly at the Royal Academy between 1795 and 1819. About 1820 he put an end to his own life.

WRIGHT, JOHN MASSY, was born at Pentonville in 1773. At the age of sixteen he was introduced to Stothard, who encouraged him in his artistic attempts. He made the acquaintance, too, of several eminent scene-painters, and was engaged towards the end of the century to help in the scene-loft at His Majesty's Theatre. In 1808 he began to exhibit at the Royal Academy, but about 1820 he devoted himself to water-colours, was elected a member of the Old Society, and regularly contributed to their shows. He designed a great many book-illustrations. He died on the 13th May, 1866, in his ninety-third year. Three of his water-colour drawings are in the South Kensington Museum.

WRIGHT, JOHN WILLIAM, an English subject painter in water-colours, born in London in 1802. He was the son of John Wright the miniature painter, and early received instruction from T. Phillips, R.A. Joining the Water-Colour Society as an Associate in 1831, he regularly exhibited there, becoming a full member in 1842, and secretary in 1845. His works also appeared at the Royal Academy from 1825 to 1846. He occasionally painted miniature portraits, and worked as a book-illustrator. Specimens of his work in the latter branch of art will be found in Heath's 'Book of Beauty,' and in 'The Female Characters of Shakespeare.' He died in London, January 14, 1848, leaving his family in straitened circumstances. Two of his water-colour drawings are in the South Kensington Museum.

WRIGHT, JOSEPH, distinguished by the sobriquet 'Wright of Derby,' was born at that town in 1734. He came in 1751 to London, where he became a scholar first of Thomas Hudson, and afterwards of Mortimer. On leaving the latter he returned to Derby, where he established himself as a portrait painter. In 1765 he sent two candle-light and fire pieces to the Exhibition of the Incorporated Society, and the following year exhibited three more of the same class, one of them the well-known 'Orrery,' now in the Derby Museum. In 1773 he visited Rome and other parts of Italy, and returned to England in 1775. He then first settled at Bath, but returned to Derby in 1777. In the following year he exhibited fire and moonlight subjects at the Royal Academy, and in 1781 he was elected an A.R.A. In 1784 he was chosen an Academician, but did not accept the honour, perhaps from annoyance at Garvey's having received it before him, but more probably from fear of the duties and responsibilities which his membership might entail. In 1785 he made an exhibition of twenty-four of his own works, at the great room in Spring Gardens, of which the principal picture represented the destruction of the floating batteries before Gibraltar. He died at Derby in 1797. Several of Wright's pictures have been engraved; some are in mezzotint, among them 'The Blacksmith's Forge,' 'The Air-Pump,' and 'The Gladiator'; others in line, among them 'The Dead Soldier,' engraved by Heath, and a scene from 'A Winter's Tale,' by Middiman, in which the painter and engraver may be said to rival Wilson and Woollett. Other subject pictures by him are, 'The Destruction of the Floating Batteries at Gibraltar,' 'Edwin at the Tomb of his Ancestor,' 'Belshazzar's Feast,' 'Hero and Leander,' and 'The Lady in Milton's "Comus."' His 'Eruption of Vesuvius,' and 'Ulleswater,' are both excellent in their way. Other works:

London. National Gall. An experiment with the air-pump.
 " Nat. Port. Gall. Portrait of Sir Richard Arkwright.
 " " Portrait of Erasmus Darwin.
 " " " himself.

WRIGHT, JOSEPH MICHAEL, a Scottish portrait painter, born in the first half of the 17th century. He was taught by Jamesone, and at an early age migrated to England, where he soon obtained a good practice. Some years were then spent by him in Italy, and in 1648 he was elected a member of the Florence Academy. On his return to England, he painted many sitters of eminence during the Restoration period, and appears to have held the next place to Lely, to whom Wright's portraits have been frequently ascribed. On its refusal by Lely, a commission to paint the Judges for the Corporation of London was given to Wright. He was attached to Lord Castlemaine's embassy to Rome in 1686, and published an account of the negotiations with the Pope. On his return, he found his reputation eclipsed by that of Kneller. Wright is the 'one Wright' whom Pepys so unfavourably compares with Lely; Evelyn speaks more respectfully of him. He died in London about 1700. Wright was known by various pseudonyms. At Rome he called himself 'Michael Ritus' (q. v.), and is so registered at the Roman Academy. He occasionally described himself as 'Scotus' or 'Anglus,' and on the back of one portrait as 'Jos. mick Wripls Londonensis Pictor Caroli Regis.' There are by him:

Hampton Court. John Lacy, the actor. 1675.
 London. Nat. Por. Gall. Thomas Hobbes.
 " Garrick Club. John Lacy.
 " Lincoln's Inn. Sir Matthew Hale.
 Full-length of Prince Rupert, in armour.

His nephew, of the same name, was also a portrait painter. He studied in Rome and practised in Ireland.

WRIGHT, RICHARD, marine painter, sometimes called 'Wright of the Isle of Man,' was born at Liverpool, in 1735. Without any advantage of education, he acquired some skill as a painter by his own genius and industry. In 1764 the Society of Arts offered a premium for the best marine picture, when Wright obtained the prize. In 1764 he gained a premium of fifty guineas for a sea-piece from which Woollett engraved his plate, 'The Fishery.' He was a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, and exhibited with them from 1765 to 1770. He died about the year 1775. A French copy was made of Woollett's engraving of 'The Fishery,' and the name of Vernet affixed as the painter, but this must have been done without Vernet's knowledge. At Hampton Court there is a picture by Wright of 'The Royal Yacht bringing Queen Charlotte to England in a Storm.' His wife and daughter were also painters.

WRIGHT, THOMAS, engraver and portrait painter, was born at Birmingham, on March 2, 1792. Before he was fourteen he was apprenticed to Meyer, the engraver. At the end of his time he joined a fellow-pupil, William Thomas Fry, whose plates he took up at the etching stage and finished, Fry's name alone being placed upon them. After four years of this, he left Fry and began to engrave portraits, for which he had a real gift. He worked chiefly after his brother-in-law, George Dawe, R.A., and in 1822 went to St. Petersburg to engrave some of Dawe's pictures there. In 1826 he came home to England, but four years later returned to St. Petersburg to arrange Dawe's affairs, and stayed there fifteen years, painting portraits and engraving them himself. A series of these he published in St. Petersburg, with the title 'Les Contemporains Russes.' On his return to England he commenced a plate of the 'Infant Hercules' of Reynolds, from a copy made by himself while in Russia; but he did not live to complete it. He died in London, March 30, 1849. He was a member of the Academies of St. Petersburg, Stockholm, and Florence.

WRIGHT, THOMAS, a portrait painter of the 18th century. Little is known of him beyond the fact that Richard Wilson, R.A., was his pupil. A portrait by him in the Bodleian shows that his abilities were respectable.

WUCHTERS, ABRAHAM, (or WUGTERS,) was born about 1610-15, in Holland, and in 1638 accompanied his brother-in-law, Karel van Mander, to Denmark. He soon made a reputation as a portrait painter at Copenhagen, and was much employed by Christian IV. and his court. Disappointed, however, at not being named court painter when a vacancy occurred, he retired to Sorøe, where he worked until his death. He painted over fifty portraits of the King, his family, and other persons of rank, many of them being engraved by Haelwegh. He died at Sorøe in 1683. The Copenhagen Gallery contains portraits by him of Prince Waldemar Christian and the minister Gersdorf (?), and there is a 'Last Supper' by him in the church of Sorøe. In 1675 he supplied several illustrations for a Danish translation of Jakob Cats, and perhaps engraved them himself. Nagler also ascribes a few etchings to him.

WULFHAGEN, FRANZ, born at Bremen in 1620, was an obscure scholar of Rembrandt, and painted after the manner of his master. He died in 1678.

WULFRAAT, MARGARETHA, daughter of Mathijs Wulfraat, was born at Arnheim in 1678. She painted in the style of Netscher, producing portraits and small historical and mythological pictures. A 'Cleopatra,' a 'Semiramis,' and two pictures with wood nymphs, by her, are in existence. She died in 1738.

WULFRAAT, MATHIJS, (or WULFRAET,) was born at Arnheim in 1648. He was the son of an eminent physician, who meant him to follow the same profession; but he was devoted to drawing, and his father, yielding to his bent, placed him under Abraham Diepraam, a painter of bambocciate. He himself, however, painted conversations, and polite assemblies; also small portraits and domestic subjects, which were held in great esteem in Amsterdam, where he chiefly resided, and where he died in 1727.

WÜRBS, KARL, was an architect and landscape painter, who practised at Prague, where he was a professor in the Academy and director of the Gallery. He died at Prague in 1876.

WURMSER, NICOLAUS, a native of Strasburg, was one of four painters who worked in the 14th century for the Emperor Charles IV. at Karlstein, near Prague. His collaborators were Theodor of Prague, Procop Kunczo, and Tommaso da Modena. Wurmser was a favourite with the Emperor, and is mentioned in ancient records of 1359 and 1360 as enjoying certain privileges from him. Of the works executed at Karlstein, those ascribed to Wurmser are the large frescoes in the soffits of the window arches of the chapel. They consist partly of scenes from Scripture, partly of single figures. These, though much damaged by time and neglect, are remarkable for a certain impressive dignity, in spite of their queer drawing and deficient sense of beauty. In the Vienna Gallery there is a 'Crucifixion,' originally painted for the high altar of the castle chapel, at Karlstein. It has been ascribed by Van Mechel and others after him to Wurmser, but has been also given to Theodor of Prague. The altar-piece of 1375, in the Gallery of the Estates of Bohemia, at Prague, is generally given to Theodor, but some writers ascribe it to Wurmser.

WÜRSCH, JOHANN MELCHIOR, was born at Buochs, in Nidwalden, in 1732, and painted a large number of pictures for Unterwalden churches as well as for private persons. He died in 1798.

WÜST, JOHANN HEINRICH, was born at Zurich in 1741, and received his first instruction from a house painter, after which he went to Holland, and there found patrons and employment. He next spent two years in Paris, and then returned to Zurich. He painted nature under tranquil aspects, being especially successful with foliage and water. He died in 1821.

WUST, KARL LUDWIG, was a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1760. Among other prints, he engraved a plate representing 'The Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew,' after Matteo Preti.

WUTKI, MICHEL, (or WUTKY,) landscape painter, was probably born at Tuln in 1739 (others say at Krems or Stein in 1738). He studied at Vienna under Meytens, and lived for a long time in Italy, and painted somewhat in the style of Philipp Hackert. He died at Vienna in 1823.

WYATT, HENRY, an English subject and portrait painter, born at Thickbroom, near Lichfield, September 17, 1794. He early lost his father, and in 1811 was sent to London by his guardian, Francis Eginton, the glass painter, to study art. He worked in the schools of the Academy, and also in the studio of Sir Thomas Lawrence, receiving, for the latter part of the time he was with him, a salary of £300 a year. Returning to Birmingham in 1817, he practised portraiture there, at Liverpool, and at Manchester, successively. In 1825 he came back to London, where he remained for some years, until he was obliged to go to Leamington for his health in 1834. Thence he went to Manchester to paint some portraits, and in the spring of 1838 was struck by paralysis. He never recovered, and died at Prestwich in 1840. His pictures appeared at the Royal Academy, at the British Institution, and at Suffolk Street, between 1817 and 1838. There are by him:—

Chester.	The Castle.	Portrait of T. Harrison, Architect.
Glasgow.	Gallery.	The Philosopher. 1832.
Manchester.	"	Vigilance. 1836.

WYATT, THOMAS, brother of Henry Wyatt, was born at Thickbroom about 1799. He studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, and practised portrait painting with little success at Birmingham, Liverpool, and Manchester. He was secretary to the Midland Society of Artists. Towards the end of his life he settled near Lichfield, where he died after a very long illness, July 7, 1859.

WYGMORE, JOHN, Abbot of Gloucester (MSS. Cotton, Domit. VIII.) in the 14th century, had a series of portraits of English kings, down to Edward II., painted for his great dining hall, and is said to have been eminent as a limner and embroiderer himself.

WYLIE, ROBERT, a landscape and subject painter, who by his art should be classed with the French school. He was born in 1839, in the Isle of Man, and while still a child was taken by his parents to America. His first instruction in art was received in the Pennsylvania Academy, and he worked for some time as an ivory carver. In 1865 he came to Europe, and continued his studies in Paris, where he became a pupil of Barye. He then settled at Pont Aven, Finistère, and made his mark as a painter of Breton scenes and peasantry. His works appeared at the Salon, where, in 1872, he was awarded a medal for 'La Sorcière Bretonne.' He died of an aneurism on the 13th February, 1877.

WYNFIELD, DAVID WILKIE, painter, was a grand-nephew of Sir David Wilkie, and was born in 1837. He studied at first with a view to taking orders, but in 1856 determined to be a painter, and entered the studio of T. M. Leigh. He first exhibited in 1859, and in 1863 sent to the Royal Academy 'The Meeting of Edward IV. and Elizabeth Woodville.' From that time onward he was a constant exhibitor, painting chiefly historical and tragic subjects, with occasional excursions into genre. A careful, conscientious, though somewhat heavy-handed artist, his strength lay in his solid simplicity of style, but he failed as a colourist. He died May 26, 1887. Among his works we may mention:

Last Moments of Oliver Cromwell. (Foster Coll. S. Kensington Museum.)

Buckingham murdered. 1872.

The Lady's Knight. 1873.

Visit from the Inquisitors. 1875.

The New Curate. 1877.

WYRSCH, JEAN MELCHIOR JOSEPH, painter, born in 1732, was the founder of the Academy of Painting and Sculpture at Besançon, and professor of that institution. In the Besançon Museum there are several of his pictures, chiefly portraits of local celebrities. He was one of the victims in the massacre of Stantz, September 9, 1798.

WYTEWELDE, — VAN, a painter who seems to have enjoyed some repute at Ghent in the middle of the 15th century. He is known to have been at work in 1456.

WYTMAN. See WIJTMAN.

WYTTENBACH, FRIEDRICH ANTON, painter and etcher, was born at Trèves in 1812. He was a pupil of Karl Ruben and of Schadow. In 1832 he returned to Trèves from Düsseldorf, and for a time devoted himself to architectural pieces, but finally took to painting animals, especially in hunting pictures. He has left some etchings. He died at Trèves in 1845.

X.

XANTO AVELLI, FRANCESCO, a majolica painter of the 16th century. He was a native of Rovigo, but worked at Urbino. There are plates by him in the Campana Collection, in the Louvre.

XAVERY, FRANS, painter, was the son of Jan Baptist Xavery, the sculptor, who flourished in Holland in the latter part of the 17th century. Frans became a member of the Pictura Society at the Hague in 1768, practised for some time in that city, and later in Amsterdam and Rotterdam. He studied first under his uncle Gerhard Joseph, and afterwards under J. de Wit.

XAVERY, GERHARD JOSEPH, painter, was the brother of Jan Baptist Xavery, the sculptor, and uncle to the brothers Frans and Jakob. He was a native of Antwerp, but settled in Holland and practised at the Hague, becoming a member of the Pictura Society in 1741.

XAVERY, JAKOB, was born at the Hague in 1736. He was the son of Jan Baptist Xavery, the sculptor, and the pupil of Jakob de Wit. He practised at Amsterdam, Breda, and the Hague, and passed some time in Paris. Occasionally he imitated the manner of Berchem in his landscapes, and approached closely to his master, Jakob de Wit, in his feigned bas-reliefs. He painted portraits of several distinguished persons, among them M. Braamcamp and the sculptor Cressant. He died towards the end of the 18th century. In the S. Kensington Museum there is a 'Vase of Fruit and a Vine Branch' by him.

XIMENEZ DONOSO, JOSEF, (or JUAN), a Spanish historical painter and architect, was born at Consuegra in 1628. His father, ANTONIO XIMENEZ, taught him the elements of painting, and he received further instruction in the school of Francisco Fernandez, at Madrid. On the death of Fernandez he went to Rome, where he remained for seven years. He afterwards returned to Madrid, and practised for a time in the school of Carreño. He painted several frescoes in collaboration with Claudio Coello. He succeeded Francisco Rizi as painter to the Chapter of Toledo, and repainted the altar-piece by Rizi in the church of St. Gines, which excited the indignation of his professional brethren. He died of apoplexy at Madrid in 1690 and was buried in the church of Saint Gines.

XIMENEZ, FRANCISCO, a Spanish historical painter, was born at Tarazona, Aragon, in 1598. He studied painting in that city and in Rome. Returning to his own country, he was employed to paint two large pictures for the cathedral at Saragossa. He died at Saragossa in 1666, and left his fortune to educate the orphan sons, and to provide dowries for the daughters, of painters.

XIMENEZ, J. F. See FERNANDEZ NAVARRETE.

XIMENEZ, P. A. See AYBAR, XIMENEZ.

XIMENEZ-ANGEL, JOSEF, a scholar of Antonio Rubio, of Toledo, succeeded Claudio Coello as painter to the cathedral of that city in 1695. He painted frescoes in the Hermitage of Sonseca, representing incidents in the life of the Virgin, and the work was considered creditable; he also painted a 'St. Anthony' for the parish of St. Bartholomew at Toledo, and other subjects from sacred history.

XIMENEZ DE ILLESCAS, BERNABÉ, a Spanish historical painter, was born at Lucena in 1613, and from his infancy showed a disposition for art. He entered the army, however, and when stationed in Italy his fondness for drawing and painting revived, and for six years he studied the works of the great masters, and became a tolerable, if not a very good, painter. On his return to Spain he painted for private persons, and died while occupied on his first public work, at Andujar, in 1671. Leonardo de Castro and Miguel Parrilla were his scholars.

XIMENO, JOSEF, a Spanish draughtsman and engraver, made the designs for the sumptuous edition of Solis's 'History of the Conquest of Mexico,' published at Madrid in 1783, and also for the edition of the 'Galatea' of Cervantes, published in 1784. He was living and at work in 1791.

XIMENO, MATIAS, a painter of Old Castille. He was a pupil of Vincenzo Carducho, and flourished about the middle of the 17th century. He painted four lateral altars for the Jeronymites of Sigüenza, representing 'The Incarnation,' 'The Nativity,' 'The Epiphany,' and 'The Presentation in the Temple.' His 'Conversion of St. Paul,' dated 1652, is, perhaps, his best work.

Y.

YAHIA, BEN MAHMUD, an Arab painter, living about 1236, who executed one hundred and one miniature pictures, illustrating the Anecdotes of Hariri, which are now in the French National Library.

YANEZ, HERNANDO, (or YANES), was a native of Almedina in La Mancha. He flourished about the year 1531, and appears to have studied under Leonardo da Vinci. About the year mentioned, he was painting in the cathedral of Cuenca, for the cathedral treasurer, Gomez Carillo de Albornoz, a man of considerable judgment in works of art, who had visited Italy. The death of Yanes is supposed to have occurred between 1550 and 1560.

YATES, THOMAS, an English marine painter and draughtsman, was born in the latter half of the 18th century. He served in the Royal Navy, in which he rose to the rank of Lieutenant, and practised art as an amateur. Between 1788 and 1794 he exhibited sea-pieces at the Royal Academy, and also published a series of drawings of 'Celebrated Naval Actions.' He was shot in a quarrel, and died in 1796. His widow was the famous actress.

YEATES, GEORGE, an English engraver, who flourished in the reign of Charles I., and is known by a portrait of George Mountaigne, Bishop of London and Archbishop of York.

YEATES, NICHOLAS, an obscure English engraver, who flourished about 1680, and who, in conjunction with John Collins, executed a few portraits, among them one of the Parliamentary General, Sir William Waller.

YELLOWLEES, WILLIAM, a Scottish painter, was born at Mellerstain in 1796. He came to Edinburgh in 1812, and studied there under William Shiels, the animal painter. He began practice as a portrait painter and soon became popular, winning the sobriquet of 'the little Raeburn,' partly by the small size, but more by the excellence of his work. He painted in Edinburgh for about fifteen years, and then moved to London, where he met with much success. Prince Albert was among his patrons. He contributed twenty portraits to the Royal Academy between 1829 and 1845. He died in London in 1856 (?). There is a portrait by him in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery.

YEPES, TOMAS DE, was a native of Valencia. He excelled in painting flowers, fruit, fish, and game. There are many of his works in the private collections at Madrid, Seville, and in his native city. He died in 1674.

YKENS, FRANS, born at Antwerp in 1601, was an excellent painter of flowers, fruit, and dead game. He studied under his uncle, Osias Beert, and afterwards in France. In 1630-31 he was free of the Guild of St. Luke in his native town, and about 1666 worked for a short time in Brussels. He is said to have died in distressed circumstances in 1693. In the Vienna Gallery there is a flower-piece by him, in the Berlin Museum a study of fruit, in the Madrid Gallery a picture of dead game, fruit, &c., and in the Hermitage, St. Petersburg, a fine panel of large size, the 'Purchase of Provisions.'

YKENS, JAN, painter, was born at Antwerp in 1625. He was the son and pupil of Pieter Ykens the elder, and practised first as a sculptor. At Lierre, in the church of the Beguines, there is a 'Centurion at the Feet of Christ' by him. It is signed, Johannes Ykens, Inv. et F. 1651.

YKENS, LAURENCE CATHARINE, the daughter of Jan, was born at Antwerp in 1659. She excelled in painting flowers, fruit, and insects. She was received into the Guild of St. Luke in 1687. In the Madrid Gallery are two of her pieces, each consisting of a landscape in a medallion, surrounded by a garland of fruit and flowers.

YKENS, PIETER, the elder, painter, was born at Antwerp in 1599, and died in 1649. No details as to his life and works are known, and he is chiefly remembered as the father of Jan Ykens, and grandfather of Pieter Ykens the younger.

YKENS, PIETER, the younger, painter, was the son of Jan Ykens, and was born at Antwerp about 1648. He was probably his father's pupil. In 1672 he became free of the Guild of St. Luke, and in 1689 Dean, but escaped office by paying a fine of sixty patacons and the promise of a 'picture painted in his best manner.' In 1671 he married a daughter of the painter Peter van Bredael, and by her had twelve children. He died in 1695 or 1696. The following works by him are known :

Antwerp.	Museum.	St. Catharine disputing with the Philosophers.
"	"	Portrait of Jan Baptist Greyns.
"	"	Portrait of Janssens de Hujoel, in a frame carved and emblazoned by Jan Baptist de Wree.
"	Church of St. Andrew.	The Last Supper.
Lille.	Museum.	Saint Theresa, signed Ptr. Ykens Inventor et Fecit.

His son and pupil, PIETER JAN, also practised at Antwerp.

YOLL, (or YOLW). See JOLI, ANTONIO.

YONGKIND, JOHAN BARTHOLD. See JONGKIND (Supplement).

YOUNG, JOHN, born in 1755, was a mezzotint engraver and designer, but is better known for his outlines of celebrated English Picture Galleries. Among these are the Stafford, Angerstein, Grosvenor, Leicester, and Miles Collections. His best mezzotint is after Mortimer's picture of the fight between Broughton, the prize-fighter, and Stevenson, coachman to Sir William Wyndham. He exhibited some mezzotint portraits at the Academy in 1794. John Young was Keeper of the British Institution, and was an active promoter of the Artists' Benevolent Fund. He died in London, March 7, 1825.

YOUNG, TOBIAS, an English landscape painter, exhibited at the Academy in 1816 and 1817, and painted the scenery for Lord Barrymore's private theatre at Wargrave. He practised for some time at Southampton, to which town and its neighbourhood his reputation was chiefly confined. In the Southampton Town Hall there is a 'Judgment of Solomon' by him. He died in 1824.

YPEREN, KAREL VAN, or YPRÈS, CHARLES D', painter, sculptor, and architect, was born at Yprès in 1510. He travelled for improvement in Italy, and is said to have been a pupil of Tintoretto. Van Mander says that his death was caused by his stabbing himself, in a fit of delirium, at a banquet given in his honour by the artists of Courtrai, in 1563 or 1564. Some of his works are to be seen at Yprès, a 'SS. Peter and Paul,' in the church of St. Peter, and an 'Adoration of the Magi,' at the hospital, among others.

YRIARTE. See IRIARTE.

YSENDYCK, ANTOINE VAN, painter, born at Antwerp in 1801, was a pupil of Van Bree. In 1823 he won the Roman pension at the Antwerp Academy, and after a term in Italy, worked for ten years in Paris. He was a member of the Academies of Amsterdam and Antwerp. He became director of the Academy at Mons in 1840, and died at Brussels in 1875. Among his pictures we may name a 'Christ Blessing the Children,' a 'Charity,' and a portrait of Van Bree. Several examples of his work are at Versailles.

YSSELSTEYN, A. F., a Dutch artist of the 17th century, known only by the picture of a dead cock in the Schleissheim Gallery.

YUNG, ANTOINE ROBERT, called LEJEUNE, engraver, was born in Paris in 1789, and was a pupil of Gros. In 1824 and in 1834 he exhibited vignettes at the Salon, after drawings by Déveria, Chasselat, Colin, and Choquet.

YUNK, ENRICO, painter, was born at Turin in 1840. He studied first at the Academy of Turin, and afterwards in Paris, under Gérôme and Picot. He painted chiefly scenes from Italian peasant life, and subjects gathered during his travels in Turkey, Spain, and Egypt. Towards the close of his life he worked mainly in Rome and Pisa, in which latter city he died, November 18, 1878.

YUSO. See IRALA YUSO.

YVART, BAUDOIN, painter, born at Boulogne in 1610, was a member of the Maîtrise and of the Academy, into which he was received in 1663. He was employed on the decorative paintings in Salle 169 of the palace at Versailles, and the Versailles Museum has a 'Consecration of Louis XIV.' and 'Siege of Douai' by him. He died December 12th, 1690.

Z.

ZAAGMOOLEN, MARTINUS, was a native of Holland. He was working from 1640 to 1660, but neither his birthplace nor the master under whom he studied is known. Houbraken calls him a painter of history, and describes a 'Last Judgment' by him. He was the master of Jan Luiken, the engraver, and of Michiel van Musscher.

ZAAL, I. or J., was a Flemish engraver of the latter part of the 17th century, by whom we have a large etching after a Boar-hunt, by Snyders. Its date appears to be 1673.

ZAANREDAM. See SAENREDAM.

ZABELLI, ANTONIO, (or ZABAGLIO), was born at Florence about the year 1740. He engraved several portraits for the collection published by Francesco Allegrini, at Florence, in 1762; and some plates after the principal pictures at Naples: among them the following:

Mary Magdalene; after Guercino.

The Flight into Egypt; after Guido Reni.

The Meeting of Christ and St. John; after the same.

The Three Marys at the Tomb of Christ; after Ann. Carracci.

ZABELLO, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, an engraver, was, according to Orlandi, a native of Bergamo, and flourished about the year 1546. He marked his prints with a die and the date.

ZACCAGNA, TURPINO, a Florentine painter, who flourished about 1537. He was a pupil of Luca Signorelli, and painted a 'Burial and Ascension of the Virgin' in the choir of the cathedral of Cortona.

ZACCHETTI, BERNARDINO, was a painter of Reggio, who flourished about 1523. He has been called a disciple of Raphael, and is also said to have worked with Michelangelo in the Sistine chapel. His picture of 'St. Paul' in the church of San Prospero, at Reggio, is in the style of Garofalo.

ZACCHIA, PAOLO, 'il Vecchio,' was a native of Lucca, where he worked from about 1520 to 1530. He probably studied at Florence, for his works show traces of the influence of Ghirlandajo and of Fra Bartolommeo. There are several altar-pieces painted by him in the churches at Lucca, which prove him to have been an artist of some ability.

Works:

Berlin.	Museum.	Virgin, Child, and St. John.
Lucca.	Cathedral.	St. Petronilla.
"	S. Salvatore.	The Ascension.
"	Pinacoteca.	The Assumption. 1527.
"	S. Michele.	Marriage of the Virgin.
"	Pietra Santa.	Nativity. 1519.
Paris.	Louvre.	Portrait of a Musician.

His son, LORENZO DI FERRO ZACCHIA, called ZACCHIA IL GIOVANE, an indifferent painter and engraver, also practised at Lucca.

ZACCOLINI, Padre MATTEO, was born at Cesena, in the Roman States, about 1590, and painted perspectives, in which he is said to have instructed Domenichino and Nicolas Poussin. He became a Theatine monk, and his principal works are in the church of that order, on Monte Cavallo. He wrote some treatises on perspective, the manuscripts of which are in the Barberini Library. He died in 1630.

ZACHTLEVEN. See SAFTLEVEN.

ZAECH, BERNARD, a German engraver, etched a set of ruins, after Jonas Umbach. There is also by him a small original landscape with figures, animals, and ruins. Brulliot mentions twelve pieces, designs for goldsmiths' work, consisting of Vases and Goblets, marked B. Z. 1581, and which he suspects to be by Bernard Zaech. One DANIEL ZAECH, a painter, goldsmith, and engraver, was also at work in 1613.

ZAENREDAM. See SAENREDAM.

ZAFFONATO, ALESSANDRO, an Italian engraver, who flourished about 1730. He engraved Raphael's 'Judgment of Solomon,' and a few other plates.

ZAFFONI, GIOVANNI MARIA, better known as CALDERARI, was a Friulan, and flourished between 1534 and 1570. He was an imitator of Pordenone and Pomponio Amalteo. The well of the font in the cathedral of Pordenone was painted by him in 1534 with four scenes in fresco from the lives of Christ and John the Baptist. In 1542 he painted in distemper a Nativity, various Saints, and a Patron in armour in the Church of Pissancana, Friuli. This fresco was taken by Ridolfi for the work of Pordenone. In the year 1555 he decorated the Montereale Chapel in Pordenone cathedral with frescoes from the lives of Christ and the Virgin; and the church of the Santissima, in the same city, with frescoes from Old Testament History. In the church of Montereale are a series of frescoes painted by him some time previous to 1570; they were valued in that year by Pomponio Amalteo, and Zaffoni was then dead.

ZAGANELLI. See DEI ZAGANELLI.

ZAGEL, M. See ZATZINGER.

ZAGO, SANTO, a native of Venice, was brought up in the school of Titian, and worked about 1550. He painted some frescoes and altar-pieces for the churches at Venice. An altar-piece, in the church of Santa Caterina, representing Tobit and the Angel, may be specially named.

ZAHN, JOHANN KARL WILHELM, archaeologist, architect, and painter, was born at Rodenberg in Hesse in 1800, and first instructed at the Academy of Cassel. In 1822-4 he was in Paris, where he attended the ateliers of Gros, Chabillon, and Bertin, and then proceeded to Italy, studying at Rome, Naples, Pompeii, &c. After his return he decorated the new palace at Cassel, and brought out a book on the ornaments and paintings of Pompeii, Herculaneum, and Stabiae. In 1830 he returned to Italy, and spent ten years in drawing, excavating, and inspecting antiquities. In 1839 he visited Greece, and shortly afterwards published a continuation of his work on the Pompeian remains. In 1850 he travelled in France, England, and the Netherlands, studying ancient miniatures. He died at Berlin, August 22, 1871. Zahn's writings had a considerable influence on the course of modern German industrial art. He did not confine himself to the study of the antique, but endeavoured to direct the attention of his countrymen to the beauties of mediæval and renaissance ornament, and was the author of many important works besides those above mentioned.

ZAHN, LUDWIG, genre painter, was born at Munich in 1830, and died in 1855. Among his best works were :

Peasant Girl at Harvest Time.
The Emperor Maximilian at the 'Martin's-wand.'

ZAIS, GIUSEPPE, was a native of Venice, and studied under Francesco Zuccarelli, during his residence in that city. He painted landscapes and battle-pieces with considerable success. He died at an advanced age, in 1784. There is a picture by him in the Venice Academy.

ZAMACOIS, EDUARDO, a Spanish painter, was born at Bilbao in 1842. He was a pupil of Balaca and of Federigo Madrazo, in the Academy of San Fernando at Madrid, and afterwards of Meissonier. He painted scenes from life in the 16th and 17th centuries, often dealing with monks and friars, and mostly comic in character, but seldom without a touch of malice. After Fortuny, he was, perhaps, the most brilliant member of the group of painters to which the new Spanish school owes its vitality. In 'The Education of a Prince,' his peculiar combination of vivid colour, sparkling execution, sound drawing, and keen though genial satire, is to be seen at its best. His death occurred at Madrid in 1871. Among his works we may mention :

The Enlisting of Cervantes. 1863.
The Entry of the Toreros. (Painted in conjunction with Vibert.) 1866.
The King's Favourite. 1868.
The Gate of the Monastery. 1869.
The Good Pastor. 1869.
The Education of a Prince. 1870.
Platonic Love. 1870.
The Father Confessors.

ZAMBONI, MATTEO, was, according to Crespi, a native of Bologna, and flourished about the year 1700. He was one of the ablest disciples of Carlo Cignani, and painted history with considerable skill. He had given proof of talent, in two altar-pieces for the church of San Niccolò, at Rimini, when he died in the prime of life.

ZAMBRANO, ALONSO. See LLERA.

ZAMBRANO, JUAN LUIS, a Spanish painter, was born at Cordova towards the close of the 16th century. He was a disciple and follower of Pablo de Cespedes. His principal works are in the cathedral at Cordova, in the church of the convent of Los Martyres, and in the Colegio de Santa Catalina. He settled at Seville about the time of the death of Cespedes, in 1608, and there painted several altar-pieces and three large pictures upon the staircase of the convent of San Basilio. He died at Seville in 1639.

ZAMORA, JUAN DE, a native of Seville, flourished from about 1650 to 1671. He distinguished himself as a painter of landscapes, embellished with historical figures, in which he appears to have imitated the style of the best masters of the Flemish school. Some of his best pictures are preserved in the Episcopal Palace at Seville. There was also a DIEGO ZAMORA, who painted at the latter part of the 16th century in the cathedral of Seville, but nothing further is known of him.

ZAMORA, SANCHO DE, was a painter who flourished towards the close of the 15th century. In the chapel of Santiago, in Toledo Cathedral, there is an altar-piece painted by him in 1498.

ZAMPEZZO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Cittadella, near Bassano, in 1620, and studied at Venice, under Jacopo Apollonio. He was a successful imitator of Jacopo da Ponte, and painted some altar-pieces for the churches at Bassano. He died in 1700.

ZAMPIERI, DOMENICO, (or SAMPIERI,) commonly known as DOMENICHINO, was born at Bologna in 1581, and was placed, when young, under the tuition of Dionysius Calvaert; but being treated with severity by that master, for copying a drawing by Annibale Carracci, he prevailed on his father to remove him to the academy of the Carracci, where Guido and Albani were then students. On the first award of a prize after his admission, Domenichino was hailed, much to his own astonishment, as the successful candidate, and this triumph incited him to greater assiduity. He contracted an intimacy with Albani, and on leaving the school of the Carracci, they visited together Parma, Modena, and Reggio, to study Correggio and Parmigiano. On their return to Bologna, Albani went to Rome, and was soon afterwards followed by Zampieri. Cardinal Agucchi, Zampieri's first patron, employed him in his palace, and also gave him commissions. While in Rome, Domenichino was a frequent visitor of Annibale Carracci, who was then engaged in the Farnese, and painted from his cartoons. He also painted 'The Death of Adonis,' from his own designs, in the garden loggia. The health of Annibale becoming daily worse, he had to pass on many commissions to his scholars, and it was by his recommendation that Guido and Domenichino were engaged by Cardinal Borghese to paint the frescoes in San Gregorio. Cardinal Farnese also employed the latter in some works in fresco, and he was commissioned about this time by Cardinal Aldobrandini to decorate his villa at Frascati, where he painted ten frescoes from the history of Apollo. The next work of Domenichino was his famous 'Communion of St. Jerome,' painted for the principal altar of San Girolamo della Carità, and long considered the second picture in Rome. The reputation Domenichino had acquired had already excited the jealousy of some of his contemporaries, Lanfranco in particular, and it was now increased by the applause bestowed on this picture. Disgusted with their cabals, he returned to Bologna, where he passed a few years in the tranquil exercise of his talents. Pope Gregory XV., however, invited him back to Rome, and appointed him principal painter and architect to the Pontifical palace. Domenichino died in 1641. In the first half of the 19th century his reputation with amateurs almost rivalled that of Raphael. With the advance of knowledge, and the improvement of taste, his works have now fallen to a truer level. The following is a list of the more important :

ZAN, BERNARD, an engraver mentioned in the Abecedario, is said to have flourished about the year 1571, and to have marked his prints with the initials B. Z., and the date. (See also ZAECH, BERNARD.)

ZANARDI, GENTILE, was, according to Orlandi, a native of Bologna, and a pupil of Marc Antonio Franceschini. She possessed an extraordinary talent for copying, but also painted historical pictures of her own composition.

ZANCARLI, POLIPHILOS, (or GIANCARLI), was an ornamental draughtsman, who flourished about 1624. Among his works were twelve plates of antique foliage for friezes. Many of his designs were engraved by Odoardo Fialetti.

ZANCHI, ANTONIO, born at Este in 1639, was a scholar of the naturalist, Francesco Ruschi. In the Scuola di San Rocco, Venice, is his chief performance, the 'Prayer of San Rocco.' In the Academy of Venice there are two of his works, 'Job upbraided by his Wife,' and 'The Prodigal Son.' A sketch for an 'Assumption of the Virgin' is in the Uffizi. He died in 1722. Fr. Trevisani and Pietro Negri were his pupils.

ZANDER, CHRISTOPH EDUARD, painter and architect, was born at Radegast, in Anhalt, in 1843. He was first brought up to farming, but abandoned that pursuit to study painting at Munich. In 1847 he joined Dr. Schimper at Antitscho in Abyssinia. He assisted the latter in his scientific pursuits, and made drawings of animals, plants, costumes, and landscapes. The regent Ubié ennobled him, and gave him command of the artillery in the battle of Debela against King Theodore. After the battle, however, Zander went over to Theodore, who made him governor of the fortified island of Gregora, and guardian of the treasury and archives; in 1868 he was made Minister of War, but died in September of the same year at Mulkutto.

ZANETTI, Conte ANTONIO MARIA, sometimes called GIROLAMO to distinguish him from his nephew, was a Venetian nobleman, celebrated both for his collections of works of art and for his own work as an amateur engraver. He was born at Venice about 1680, and was taught drawing as an accomplishment. At the age of fourteen he etched a set of twelve original plates, representing heads and figures, which he dedicated to Dr. Mead. He afterwards travelled in Italy, France, and England, studying the best collections in each country. With the assistance of others, he published a great number of engravings on wood, in chiaroscuro, a process which he is said to have re-discovered from the drawings of Raphael, Parmigiano, and other masters, many of which he had purchased at the sale of the Arundel Collection. These cuts are divided into two sets, and altogether consist of ninety-nine prints, with the portrait of Zanetti engraved by Faldoni after Rosalba, as frontispiece. Zanetti was also a writer upon art. He died at Venice in 1757. He marked his prints with a monogram, composed of an A, an M, and a Z, thus, . Besides those already named, we have the following etchings by him:

- A series of Biblical and Mythological subjects.
- A set of twelve plates; after B. Castiglione.
- A collection of Public Statues in Venice.

ZANETTI, ANTONIO MARIA, 'il giovane,' sometimes called ALESSANDRO to distinguish him from his uncle, was the nephew of the last named, and was born at Venice about the year 1716. He was librarian of St. Mark, and was not less distinguished than his uncle for his love of art. In 1760 he published a set of eighty plates, designed and etched by himself, from the works of the Venetian painters, entitled 'Varie Pitture a fresco de' principali Maestri Veneziani,' &c., and also assisted his uncle in engravings from the Venice statues. The work, however, by which he is best known, is his 'Pittura Veneziana,' a history of painting in Venice, in five books (Venice, 1771). He died in 1778.

ZANETTI, DOMENICO, a Bolognese painter, who worked at the Electoral Court of Düsseldorf at the beginning of the 18th century. In the Munich Pinakothek there is a 'Deposition' by him.

ZANETTO. See BUGATTI.

ZANGANELLI (ZAGANELLI). See DEI ZAGANELLI.

ZANI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was a native of Bologna, and a scholar of Giovanni Andrea Sirani. He endeavoured, about the middle of the 17th century, to form a collection of etchings from the works of the most eminent Bolognese painters, and for that purpose had completed the drawings from the cloisters of San Michele in Bosco, but died young before the etchings were finished. There is but one print known by him, which is of great rarity; it is a 'Glory,' after L. Carracci.

ZANIMBERTI, FILIPPO, (or ZANIBERTI,) was born at Brescia in 1585, and brought up in Venice, in the school of Santa Peranda. He painted history in the style of his master, and pictures by him are in the churches of Brescia and Venice, notably a large 'Miracle of the Manna,' at Santa Maria Nuova in the latter city. He also painted easel pictures, historical and fabulous subjects, into which he introduced a great number of small figures. He died in 1636.

ZANNICHELLI, PROSPERO, a theatrical painter, born 1698, died 1772, who flourished at Reggio.

ZANUSI, JAKOB, was born in the Tyrol about 1700, and studied in Venice. He became court painter to the Archbishop of Salzburg, and executed some historical pictures, including an altar-piece at Salzburg, and several portraits of the Firmian family at the Castle of Leopoldskron. He died at Salzburg in 1755.

ZARATO. See LUZZI.

ZARIÑENA, FRANCISCO, was born, according to Palomino, about the year 1550. He went to Italy when he was young, where he was a scholar of the elder Ribalta. His principal works were altar-pieces for Valencian churches. He died in 1624, leaving two sons, CRISTOBAL and JUAN, who were his disciples, and painted history in the style of their father. Cristobal died at Valencia in 1622, and Juan in 1634. Several of their works are in the public buildings of Valencia.

ZARLATTI, GIOSEFFO, an engraver, was born at Modena about the year 1635, and died very young. We have a few original etchings by him, of historical and fancy subjects, executed with much spirit.

ZASINGER. See ZATZINGER.

ZATZINGER, MARTIN, (or MATHEUS), a goldsmith-engraver, working at Munich about the year 1500. Much doubt exists as to his identity, there having been other masters contemporary with him, to whom the monogram <sup>1500</sup>  or  with which certain prints from metal of the early German school are signed, may also be ascribed, namely, Matheus Zinck and Matheus Zündt (q. v.), and one MATHES ZWIKOPF, a goldsmith of Munich, to whom Nagler is inclined to assign the prints initialed M. Z. The names ZAGEL, ZUIGLER, ZEISINGER, have also been suggested. Duplessis and Thausing, however, speak confidently of the master M. Z. as Mathæus Zasinger, or Zatzinger. The earliest date on his existing works is 1500, and he is thought not to have been alive after 1509. The master M. Z. is also said to have been a painter and pupil of Wolgemut. The following prints assigned to him are in the British Museum:

1. Solomon adoring Idols. (Dated 1501.)
2. Virgin and Child ('Mater Amabilis'). (Dated 1501.)
3. The Beheading of St. John Baptist.
4. St. Christopher.
5. St. George and the Dragon.
6. The Martyrdom of St. Barbara.
7. The Martyrdom of St. Catharine of Alexandria.
8. St. Catharine of Alexandria.
9. St. Margaret.
10. St. Ursula.
11. Entertainment at the Court of Munich, given by the Grand Duke Albrecht IV. (Dated 1500.)
12. The Great Tournament at Munich in 1500.
13. The King's Sons shooting at the Dead Body of their Father; or, The Trial of Filial Affection. (Erroneously described by Bartsch as a 'Martyrdom of St. Sebastian.')
14. The Subjugation of Man by Woman.
15. The Embrace. (Dated 1503.)
16. The Two Lovers.
17. A Lady and Gentleman together on Horseback.
18. A Rencontre.
19. Soldiers and Military Band.
20. Warriors conversing.
21. Life and Death; an Allegory.
22. Light and Darkness; an Allegory. (Dated 1500.)
23. Sensuality and its Cost (?).

F. S.

ZAUFFELY, JOHANN, generally called ZOFFANY, was born at Ratisbon in 1733. His father, descended from a Bohemian family, was architect to the Prince of Thurn and Taxis. Zoffany was first instructed by Speer, in his native city. He is said to have run away to Rome at the age of thirteen, to carry on his studies in painting, but it seems that his father continued to befriend him, and he remained in Italy altogether twelve years. On returning to Germany he made an unhappy marriage, which led him in 1758 to come to England. Here, however, he for some time met with so little encouragement, that he was reduced to great distress. At last a portrait he painted of the Earl of Barrymore caused Lord Bute to recommend him to the Royal Family. He soon afterwards began to acquire fame by his portraits of actors in character, which are admirable for their truth and vivacity of expression. Of these, the best, perhaps, were Garrick as 'Abel Drugger,' Foote and Weston as 'Dr. Last,' and Foote as 'Major Sturgeon.' The first of these was exhibited with the Incorporated Society of Artists in 1762. Zoffany was also a member of the St. Martin's Lane Academy, and in 1769 was admitted to the newly established Royal Academy, of which he painted many portraits of the members. He also painted a group of the Royal Family, and on its completion engaged to accompany Sir Joseph Banks upon Captain Cook's voyage, but threw up his engagement from dissatisfaction with the cabin allotted him, and finding this displeasing to many friends who had given him commissions, as well as financially embarrassing, he resolved to proceed a third time to Italy. King George III. gave him an introduction to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, and he was also assisted by a present of £300. While in Florence he painted his Interior of the Florentine Gallery, now in the Royal Collection. Maria Theresa sent him a commission to paint for her the Royal Family of Tuscany, which led to his going in 1778 to Vienna, and being there raised to the rank of a baron of the empire. He passed through Coblenz to England in 1779. Four years later he met with an opportunity to go to India, where he acquired a competent fortune by the exercise of his talents. Although he continued to paint after his return from India, in 1790, it was evident that his mental powers and his general health were weakened, and his later productions exhibit little of the vigour which characterizes his early works. He died at Strand-on-the-Green, near Kew, November 11, 1810. There are some portrait groups by him in the Royal Collection; the College of Physicians possesses a 'Dr. W. Hunter, M.D., delivering a lecture on anatomy before the Royal Academy;' in the Diploma Gallery at Burlington House there is more than one interior of a painting school which may be ascribed to him. Sir G. Beaumont has two theatrical groups by Zoffany ('Parsons and two others in "The Kaiser,'" and 'Garrick and King in "Lethe"') in which the landscape background is by Richard Wilson. His best known Indian pictures are 'Col. Mordaunt's Cock Fight,' 'The Embassy of Hyder-Beck,' and 'The Tiger Hunt.'

ZAVATTARI, FRANCESCO, a Milanese painter of the 15th century, was also by trade a glazier. Aided by his brother, CRISTOFORO ZAVATTARI, he executed in 1444 a series of forty scenes from the legend of Queen Theodolinda in the chapel of Santa Maria del Rosario, in the cathedral of Monza, which, although much faded, are still decipherable. Their authorship is attested by the following inscription:

Suspice qui transis ut vivos corpore vultus
Peneque spirantes et signa similima verbis
De Zavattaris hac ornare capellam
Preter in excelsum convexa picta triune. 1444.

In spite of this many writers ascribe the frescoes in question to Troso da Monza. In 1453 both brothers were at work in the Certosa of Pavia.

ZAVATTARI, GREGORIO, whose name frequently occurs in the annals of Milan, is known to have been employed on the decorations of the sanctuary at Caravaggio previous to 1477.

ZEELANDER, ABRAHAM, engraver, born at Amsterdam in 1789, was a pupil of J. E. Marcus. He engraved plates after Gerard Dou, Brongdeest, Noël and B. van Overbeck; and six original landscapes with figures. He was for many years occupied in making a set of outline engravings from pictures in the possession of William II. of Holland.

ZEGELAAR, GERRIT VAN, a deaf and dumb painter, born at Loenen, near Utrecht, in 1719, painted interiors and portraits. He practised at Amsterdam, but died at Wageningen in 1794.

ZEGHERS, DANIEL, (SEGGERS, &c.), was born at Antwerp in 1590. He was first a pupil of his father, PIETER ZEGHERS, but his taste led him to flowers and fruit, and he became a disciple of Jan Brueghel, who at that time painted those subjects. He was admitted a master of the Guild in 1611; but in 1614 he became a Jesuit, and abandoned painting during his novitiate. When this expired, he obtained permission to visit Rome, where his brother Gerard had already made a name. After a time Zeghers returned home, and his reputation grew rapidly. Many princes sought his works, and his convent grew rich by meeting their wishes. He was the friend of Rubens, for whom he frequently painted garlands and borders of flowers around portraits and historical subjects. His chef d'œuvre, perhaps, is the garland about a Virgin and Child, by Rubens, in the Jesuits' church at Antwerp. Others with whom he collaborated in the same fashion were Erasmus Quellinus the younger, Cornelis Schut, and Abraham van Diepenbeeck. Many of his garlands, with medallions by contemporary artists, were painted for Jesuit colleges and chapels, and on the suppression of the order, the best of these were transported to the Imperial Gallery in Vienna. Others were sold at low prices by the Austrian Government. Zeghers himself cultivated the flowers which served him for models, and he gave to his imitations the beauty, brilliancy, and variety with which nature had clothed the originals. He died at Antwerp in 1661. The following galleries possess examples of his work: Antwerp, Berlin, Brussels, Bologna, Copenhagen, Dresden, Dulwich (a very fine one), Florence (Uffizi), the Hague, Madrid, Munich, Rotterdam, and Vienna.

ZEGHERS, GERARD, (SEGGERS, &c.) the brother of Daniel Zeghers, was born at Antwerp in 1591. He was first a scholar of Hendrik van Balen, but afterwards studied under Abraham Janssens, and in Italy. On his arrival at Rome, he became a disciple of Bartolommeo Manfredi, who had studied under Caravaggio. He painted street musicians, soldiers at cards, and so forth, in Caravaggio's manner. He had won some notoriety by his productions of that description, when he was carried by Cardinal Zapara, the Spanish ambassador at Rome, to the court of Madrid. He then entered the service of the Spanish king. For him Zeghers painted historical subjects, and musical conversations, which were greatly admired; but after some years at Madrid (between 1610 and 1620) the desire to revisit his native country induced him to seek permission to return to Flanders. On his arrival at Antwerp, he painted some pictures for the churches in imitation of the style of Caravaggio, but they were not so favourably received by the public as he expected. It is asserted by D'Argenville, and after him by Deschamps, that Zeghers visited England; but this statement rests on no other authority, nor is Zeghers mentioned by Walpole. Van Dyck painted his portrait, which Pontius engraved; another, painted by himself, was engraved by Pieter de Jode. He died at Antwerp, March 17, 1651. His works are fairly numerous; the best, perhaps, are the 'Marriage of the Virgin' at Antwerp, and 'Christ in the House of Martha and Mary' at Madrid. Others are in the Louvre, and in the museums of Rotterdam, Brussels, Ghent, Vienna, &c.

ZEGHERS, HERKULUS, (SEGGERS, or SEGGERS,) a Dutch painter of landscapes and animals, who must not be confused with the Flemish artists of the same name. He was born about 1625. That he was a favourite with Rembrandt may be gathered from the fact that no less than six of his landscapes occur in the inventory of that master's effects, taken under the law process of 1656. It is said that he invented a method of engraving and printing landscapes in colours on cloth; and also that in 1660 he practised what is now called aquatint. In the British Museum there are prints from nineteen etchings by this artist. One was adopted by Waterloo, with the addition of some foliage to the trees. In the French National Library there are three more etchings by him, and in the Dresden collection fifteen. Zeghers abandoned himself to drink, and is said to have lost his life in consequence by a fall. He died about 1679.

ZEGHERS, JAN BAPTIST, painter, the son of Gerard Zeghers, was born at Antwerp in 1624. He was received into the Guild of St. Luke in 1646, as the son of a master, and in 1649 he was working at Vienna, under the patronage of the Duke of Amalfi, who, on the return of the artist to his native country, warmly recommended him to the Governor of the Netherlands, the Archduke Leopold. He was Dean of the Guild of St. Luke in 1669, and died in 1670 or 1671.

ZEHENDER, KARL LUDWIG, (or ZEHNTER,) a Swiss painter and engraver, was born at Gerzensee in 1751. In 1769 he went to Paris, and was appointed designer to the Duke of Chartres. He painted landscapes in water-colour, as well as battles, popular subjects, and scenes from Swiss history; among the latter 'The Death of Winkelried' and 'The Condemnation of Tell.' He died at Berne in 1814.

ZEI, —, a native of Città San Sepolcro, and supposed scholar of Cortona, flourished about the beginning of the 18th century, and painted an altar-piece for the cathedral of his native place, representing the liberating Angel visiting the Souls in Purgatory.

ZEILLER. This was the name of a family of painters of Reutte in the Tyrol, in the 17th and 18th centuries.

ZEILLER, FRANZ ANTON, was born in 1716. He was Paul's second son. He studied under Holzer and Götz at Augsburg, under Corrado at Rome, and under Ricci at Venice. After his return home he worked chiefly for Tyrolese churches. He died after 1794.

ZEILLER, JOHANN JAKOB, was born in 1710, and was also Paul's son. He studied under Conca at Rome, and under Solimena at Naples. He long worked in the former city, where he became a member of the Academy. He painted in fresco for various monasteries and for the churches of Reutte and its vicinity. He died in 1783.

ZEILLER, PAUL, was born at Reutte in 1653. He studied under Calabrese in Rome, and then returned to Reutte and painted for churches there and in other parts of the Tyrol. He died in 1736.

ZEISIG, JOHANN ELEAZAR, (called SCHENAU, or SCHÖNAU,) a German painter and engraver, was born at Gross Schönau, near Zittau, in or soon after 1737. He ran away from his father's house to Dresden, where he combined work as a lawyer's clerk with the study of art. He was at last helped by Bessler to enter the Academy, where he attracted Silvestre's attention, and was by him taken to Paris in 1756. After many vicissitudes, he was, in 1770, invited back to Dresden. Two years later he was appointed director of the school of design at the Meissen porcelain manufactory; in 1774 he became professor at Dresden; and, in 1777, jointly with Casanova, director of the Dresden Academy. In 1772 he painted an 'Allegory upon the Recovery of the Electress,' and, in 1790, a 'Crucifixion' for the Kreuzkirche. He also painted numerous genre pictures, and etched a set of twelve plates, with a frontispiece inscribed 'Achetez mes petites eaux fortes à la douzaine' (1765). He died at Dresden in 1806.

ZEITBLOM, BARTHOLOMÄUS, (or ZEYTBLOM,) a German painter of Ulm, of whom personally all that is known is that in 1483 he married a daughter of Hans Schüchlin, becoming thereby connected with Martin Schaffner, and that his death took place in or after 1518. His name occurs in the civic records of Ulm from 1484 to 1518. It is said that he was a pupil of Schongauer, and his works show the influence of both the Franconian and Augsburg schools, modified, however, by the originality of his own genius. In sincerity, simplicity, and purity of feeling, he is, says Waagen, 'of all painters the most thoroughly German.' (For 'German,' Woermann would here substitute 'Swabian.') His forms are sometimes awkward, the arms and legs meagre and stiff, but the heads beautiful, with an expression of mild serenity and repose; his colour is rich and harmonious, his draperies are full of dignity and skillfully cast. The latest date on any of his authentic pictures is 1504, on a picture of the Pope-saint, Alexander, at Augsburg. Works:

Augsburg. Gallery. Four panels from the Legend of S. Valentine.

Berlin. Museum. Angels holding up the Sudarium (the back of a triptych formerly at Eschach, the wings of which are in the Stuttgart Gallery).

Blaubereun, } near Ulm. } Monastery. { S. Peter. The wings of the carved altar-piece, painted on both sides,

Stuttgart. Gallery. Sixteen pictures, among them an altar-piece from the Church of the Hospice in the Kocherthal—the Nativity and Presentation—with portrait of the master at the back of the shrine, signed, and dated 1497.

Other pictures at Nuremberg (Germanic Museum), Nördlingen, Ulm, Donaueschingen. In the 'Archiv für die zeichnenden Künste,' for 1860, Harzen ascribes a series of old Netherlandish (?) prints, of which facsimiles exist in the British Museum, to Zeitblom. These prints have given rise to much discussion, but their ascription to Zeitblom is not generally accepted. F. S.

ZEITTER, JOHN L., a German painter naturalized in England. He painted chiefly Polish and Hungarian scenery, and domestic subjects. Between 1832 and 1862 he exhibited three hundred and nineteen pictures at the British Institution, and with the Society of British Artists. Of the latter body he was elected a member in 1841. He died in London in 1862.

ZELLER, ANTON, a German painter, of whose life no details can be learnt. He was at work in Dresden about the middle of the 18th century, and he is mentioned in Bavarian documents of 1785. There is a picture by him in the Schleissheim Gallery, and in that of Darmstadt, two copies, one after Mengs, the other after Guido Reni. The subject of the Schleissheim picture is a school-master reading a paper to a circle of listeners.

ZETTER, PAUL DE. See DE ZETTER.

ZEUXIS, the most distinguished painter of antiquity, was a native of Heracleia, whether the one in Lower Italy or that on the shores of the Black Sea is uncertain. It is stated that he was born in the 78th Olympiad (B.C. 464-60), and died B.C. 396. He was probably a disciple of Apollodorus; it is at least certain that they lived in habits of intimacy, and Pliny informs us that Apollodorus wrote some verses in praise of his talents, in which he complains that "the art of painting had been stolen from him, and that it was Zeuxis who committed the theft." He did not, like Polygnotus, occupy his talents in large compositions, but confined himself to single figures, and was particularly successful in the beautiful forms of his women. He preferred the sensuous beauty of the Asiatic school to the strict idealism of the painter just named. Amongst his principal works, Pliny mentions a picture of Penelope, in which he seemed to have expressed the mind of that princess. The Crotonians having commissioned him to paint a picture of Helen, he selected five of the most beautiful young women of the city, and uniting in his single figure whatever was most perfect in his models, produced a work of surpassing loveliness. The subject was taken from the passage in the 'Iliad' where Helen passes before the Trojan elders assembled at the Scæan Gate. The painter Nicomachus seeing this picture some time afterwards, could not restrain the expression of his admiration, when a bystander, not equally capable of appreciating its excellence, demanded what he saw in the picture to excite such sensations. "Ah," replied the painter, "take my eyes, and she will appear to you a goddess!" A picture of 'The Centaur Family' was another of his best productions, but it gave rise to the remark of Lucian that Zeuxis chose his subjects for their singularity; it is stated, however, that he withdrew this very picture from exhibition on finding that its sensational character blinded observers to its artistic merits.

The story told by Pliny of the competition between Zeuxis and Parrhasius, though very generally known, must not be omitted here. Zeuxis painted a bunch of grapes with such truth to nature that birds came and pecked it. Parrhasius then produced his picture, which appeared to be concealed under a curtain; but upon his rival calling upon him to remove this, it turned out on inspection that the curtain was the picture itself. Zeuxis at once confessed himself defeated, observing that though he had deceived the birds, Parrhasius had deceived the author of that deception. In another instance, Zeuxis is related to have painted a boy with grapes, which the birds again pecked at, but this time the artist was mortified at the result, declaring that if he had painted the boy as naturally as the grapes, the birds would not have dared to approach them.

Zeuxis also painted an 'Assembly of the Gods,' 'Jupiter,' 'Hercules strangling the Serpent,' 'Cupid crowned with Roses,' 'Marsyas Bound,' 'Pan,' 'Alcmena,' 'Menelaus,' 'An Athlete,' and 'An Old Woman.' He decorated the palace of the Macedonian king, Archelaus, with pictures, but most of his best works were carried to Rome, and thence to Constantinople, where they perished. From the total omission of his name by Pausanias, it seems clear that they must all have been dispersed and lost sight of even before that writer's time.

ZIARUKO, JOHN, was a native of Poland, and was probably a painter. We have by him a set of large original etchings, representing the ceremonies at the coronation of Louis XIII. of France.

ZICK, JANUARIUS, was born at Munich in 1733, or 1734. He was at first a pupil of his father, Johann Zick, but in 1757 he went to Basle and then to Rome, where he became acquainted with Rafael Mengs. On his return he was, in 1761, appointed court painter at Coblenz. He also painted extensively in the churches of Upper Swabia, and in Biberach. He died at Ehrenbreitstein in 1797.

ZICK, JOHANN, painter, was born at Ottobuern in 1702, and died at Bruchsal in 1762. He studied in Venice, and worked as a decorative painter in the Castles of Bruchsal and Würzburg.

ZIEBERLEIN. See ZÜBERLEIN.

ZIEGLER, CLAUDE JULES, a French historical and portrait painter, born at Langres, March 16, 1804. He worked in the atelier of Ingres, and subsequently studied fresco under Cornelius at Munich. His pictures began to appear at the Salon in 1830, and he soon acquired sufficient reputation to be intrusted with large decorative works in the Madeleine. These occupied him from 1835 to 1838. He subsequently devoted considerable attention to ceramic art, and in 1850 published 'Études Céramiques.' There is also a report by him on Photography at the Paris Exhibition of 1855. In his later years he held the position of director of the Dijon Academy and Museum. He died in Paris, December 25, 1856. Amongst his pictures are:

Amiens.	Hôtel de Ville.	The Peace of Amiens.
Dijon.	Museum.	'Les Pasteurs.'
"	"	A Summer Shower.
Lyons.	"	Judith. 1847.
Nancy.	"	St. George.
Versailles.	Palace.	Louis XIV. receiving Cardinal Chigi.
"	"	Comte de Sancerre.
"	"	Various portraits.

ZIEGLER, HENRY BRYAN, an English landscape and genre painter, born in 1798. He was a pupil of the elder Varley, and exhibited a large number of works between 1814 and 1874 at the Royal Academy, the British Institution, and the Society of British Artists. His latter years were spent at Ludlow, where he died, August 15, 1874.

ZIEGLER, JOHANN, designer and engraver, was born at Vienna in 1750, and studied at the Academy there. In conjunction with Karl Schütz he brought out a series of fifty etched and coloured views of that city and its neighbourhood, with figures in national costumes. He also produced a series of similar views from the Austrian provinces. He died at Vienna in 1812.

ZIEGLER, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, landscape painter, was born at Wunsiedl in 1803. He chiefly painted forest and mountain scenes. He died in 1833.

ZIESEL, GEORGES FRÉDÉRIC, painter, was born at Hoogstraeten, near Antwerp, in 1756. He painted flower-pieces, and occasionally miniatures, brilliant in colour and delicately finished. He settled at Antwerp in 1770, and became a close friend of Pieter Faes and of Ommeganck. He died at Antwerp in 1809. In the Antwerp Museum there is a picture of flowers, grapes, and gold-fish on a marble table by him.

ZIESENIS, JOHAN GEORG, was born at Copenhagen in 1716. He studied under his father, an obscure Danish painter, and at the Düsseldorf Academy. He afterwards became court painter to the Elector of Hanover. He died at Hanover in 1777. He worked also at Berlin, Brunswick, &c., and in 1768 was invited to the Hague, where he joined the Pictura Society, and painted several portraits of the Stadtholder William V. and of his wife. An example of the former is in the R. Museum, at Amsterdam.

ZIFRONDI, ANTONIO, (or CIFRONDI,) was born, according to Tassi, at Clusone, in the Bergamese, in 1657. After being taught the rudiments of design, he went to Bologna, where he entered the school of Marc-Antonio Franceschini, and became a reputable painter of history. One of his best works is an 'Annunciation' in the church of San Spirito at Clusone, and there are many others in the churches and private collections there. He worked for a time in France, with little success. He died in 1730.

ZIGNANI, MARCO, a Florentine engraver, who died in 1829. He was a pupil of R. Morghen, and engraved many plates after Italian masters, among the best an 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' after Casolano, and an 'Enthroned Madonna,' after Brescianino.

ZIJDERWELD, WILLEM, a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1796. In the Haarlem Museum there is a picture by him representing Jan van Oldenbarnevelt presenting to Arent Meyndertsz Fabricius the silver-gilt cup voted to the latter by the States of Holland for his services at the siege of Ostend. Zijderweld died at Amsterdam, 24 December, 1846.

ZIJL, GERAERD PIETERSZ VAN, (ZYL, or ZEYL,) called GERARDS, and GHERARD VAN LEYDEN, was born in Holland in 1606. He distinguished himself as a portrait painter, and visited England in that capacity about the year 1635, when Van Dyck was in full possession of the public favour. He formed an intimate acquaintance with that artist, who occasionally employed him to assist in draperies and backgrounds. He also painted conversations. By the frequent opportunities he had of profiting by the example and instruction of Van Dyck, he became a successful imitator of his style; and after a residence of a few years in London, he returned (1641) to Amsterdam, where he met with extensive employment, and was called 'the Little Van Dyck.' Like that master, he excelled in painting hands, and his colour is clean. He died in 1667. The 'Departure of the Prodigal' is stated by Houbraken to have been his best work. The Copenhagen Gallery possesses an 'Assembly of Ladies and Gentlemen dancing' by him.

ZIJLVELT, ADAM, or ANTON, VAN, (ZYLVELT, SYLVELT, &c.,) draughtsman and engraver, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1643. He imitated the style of Jan Visscher with some success. He engraved a set of plates after Johann Lingelbach, representing (seaports, &c. We have also several portraits by him, some of which are original. We may name the following:

Dirk Volkertsz Cuerenhert, Engraver.

Etienne le Moine, Doctor in Theology at Leyden.

Christoph Wittichius, Professor of the University of Leyden.

Herman Witsius, Professor of Theology at Franeker.

Cornelis Bosch.

ZILOTTI, DOMENICO BERNARDO, was born at Borso, near Bassano, in 1730, and studied at Venice, where he afterwards settled. He painted landscapes in the style of Francesco Zuccarelli, which are not without merit. There are several etchings by Zilotti, some original, others after Simonini, Marieschi, and others. He died in 1780.

ZIMBRECHT. See SIMBRECHT.

ZIMMER, SAMUEL, draughtsman and painter, was born at Hamburg in 1751. He was the pupil successively of Koch, Richard, and J. J. Tischbein; he also studied law at Rostock and Göttingen. He produced many illustrations of natural history, and was in 1790 appointed drawing master to Göttingen University. He died in 1818.

746

ZIMMERMAN, CLEMENS VON, historical painter, was born at Düsseldorf in 1788; he studied in his native town under Langer, and in 1808 he accompanied his master to Munich, where he entered the Academy. In 1815 he went to Augsburg, where he was appointed professor and director of the school of art. Ten years later he became professor at the Munich Academy. He assisted Cornelius in his frescoes at the Glyptothek, and was also engaged on decorative work in the colonnades of the Hofgarten, in the corridor of the Pinakothek, and in the dining-hall of the Residenz. He died at Munich in 1869. The Pinakothek contains two of his pictures—'Cimabue finding Giotto sketching a Lamb,' and 'Pilgrims to Loretto from the Roman Campagna.' He painted a large number of portraits, among them those of Queen Hortense and of King Max I. of Bavaria, and etched and lithographed many views of Rome.

ZIMMERMANN, HEINRICH WILHELM, portrait painter, was born at Dantzig in 1805. In 1828 he went to Vienna, and thence, in 1835, to Paris, where he placed himself under Delaroche. While in Paris he painted his 'Sabbath Morning in Styria,' a large work with twenty-six figures. On his return to Dantzig he practised chiefly as a portrait painter. He died at Dantzig in 1841.

ZIMMERMANN, JOSEPH ANTON, engraver, was born at Augsburg about 1705, and studied at the Munich Academy under Störkel. In 1753 he was appointed court engraver to the Elector. He died at Munich in 1796. His chief work was a series of portraits of princes and princesses from originals in the various Bavarian castles.

ZIMMERMANN, KARL FRIEDRICH, draughtsman and painter, was born at Berlin in 1793, and studied under Weitsch and Schadow. In 1814 he fought as a volunteer in the French campaign, and drew a number of battle scenes. He afterwards painted in oil, choosing both domestic and military scenes, and architectural subjects. His best productions, however, are a set of designs in illustration of 'Faust,' in the possession of Prince Radziwill. He was drowned in the Loisach, near Wolferathshausen, in 1820.

ZIMMERMANN, MAX, (AUGUST MAXIMILIAN,) painter and lithographer, was born at Zittau, in Saxony, July 7, 1811. His father, the impresario Zimmermann, brought him up as a musician, but in his leisure he practised lithography. At the age of twenty-three he abandoned music to devote himself entirely to lithography, and joining his brother Albert in Munich, studied drawing under his direction. He finally took to landscape painting, which he practised with some success. His subjects were chiefly forest scenes, studies of trees, and the like. The New Pinakothek at Munich has three of his pictures. He died at Munich in 1878.

ZIMMERMANN, MICHAEL, was, according to Papillon, a native of Vienna, and flourished about the year 1550. He is said to have engraved a large geographical chart, in ten parts, of Hungary, after Wolfgang Lazius, Physician and Historiographer to the Emperor Ferdinand I.

ZIMMERMANN, RICHARD AUGUSTUS, genre and landscape painter, was born in Zittau in 1820. He was the son of the impresario Zimmermann, and his three brothers, Albert, Max, and Robert, have all been well-known painters. He was a pupil of the first, and in 1838 he followed him to Munich, devoting himself, in opposition to his advice, to landscape painting instead of history. The change, however, proved successful, and his winter landscapes, forest and mountain views, village sketches, and sea pieces became popular. In his later period he adopted the style of Berchem. He retired for a time to Prague, where he worked for a goldsmith. He died after a short illness in 1875. Among his pictures we may note:

Potato Harvest. (Munich, New Pinakothek.)

(And three others.)

Moonlight Night. 1862.

Fishermen on the coast of the North Sea. 1863.

Sunset in Winter. 1863.

Cows and Sheep in a rocky cleft.

ZIMMERMANN, ROBERT, a landscape painter, was born at Zittau in 1815. Among his pictures are 'The Innthal, near Kufstein,' and a 'Waterfall,' both dated 1863. He died at Munich in 1864.

ZIMMERMANN, WILHELM PETER, draughtsman and etcher, flourished at Augsburg at the beginning of the 17th century. He also published a number of tolerable engravings of costumes, buildings, plans of fortifications, &c.

ZINCK, MATHEUS, a German engraver of the early 16th century. He has frequently been confounded with Martin Zatzinger, from having used the same cipher, and is best known by a series of the 'Ars Moriendi.' Bartsch was the first to point out that these prints were certainly not the work of Martin Zatzinger, though they bore the letters M. Z., and Passavant, agreeing, identifies their author with an engraver mentioned by Murr, in his description of Nuremberg, as Mathes Zinck, Sculptor, Noribergae. The whole question of these various identities is, however, in much confusion. For further discussion of them see Passavant, vol. ii., pp. 169-173, and Dr. Willshire's 'Catalogue of Early Prints in the British Museum.' The following prints in the British Museum are assigned to Zinck: 'The Gentleman Advancing,' and a series of eleven engraved copies on a reduced scale of the designs in the famous 'block-book' of the Netherlands (or of the School of Cologne) known as the 'Ars Moriendi.'

ZINCKE, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, (or ZINK,) a celebrated painter in enamel, was the son of a goldsmith, and was born about 1684 at Dresden. He came to England in 1706, and studied under Boit, whom he soon surpassed. He was patronized by George II. and other members of the royal family, for whom he executed numerous portraits, still in the Royal Collection. Among his finest works were a copy of Isaac Oliver's portrait of Mary Queen of Scots, in the possession of Dr. Mead, and a head of Cowley, after Lely, which was bought by Mr. Holford at the Strawberry Hill sale, in 1842. Zincke was appointed cabinet painter to the Prince of Wales, and was generally much employed; his works are numerous, but many are attributed to him which he did not execute. In 1737 he paid a visit to Germany; and after his return to England, finding his sight injured by so much application, he, in 1746, retired from practice. His reputation, however, was so great, that Madame de Pompadour begged him to copy in enamel a portrait of the King of France, which she forwarded to England for the purpose. He died in South Lambeth, March 24, 1767.

ZINCKE, PAUL CHRISTIAN, younger brother of Christian Friedrich Zincke, was born at Dresden in 1684. He was designed for a goldsmith, but practised etching and engraving in his leisure time, and afterwards attended the Academy. He then spent some time with his brother in London, whence he proceeded to Vienna, and finally to Leipsic, where about 1721 he founded a school of design, of which Boëtius was one of the first pupils. This, however, Zincke soon abandoned to engage in business. In 1756 he lost his sight, and in 1770 died at Leipsic.

ZINCKE, PAUL FRANCIS, known by the nickname of 'Old Zincke,' painter, was the grandson of Christian Friedrich, and practised in London as a copyist. He sometimes used his talents in illegitimate ways, and many portraits of Shakspeare, Milton, and Nell Gwynn, by him, were sold as originals by more famous men. He lived in a miserable manner in Windmill Street, Haymarket, and there he died in 1830, at a great age.

ZINGARO, LO. See SOLARIO.

ZINGER, HANS, painter, born at Zinger in Hesse, flourished at Antwerp in the 16th century. In 1543 he was made free of the Antwerp Guild of St. Luke. He engraved on wood, and worked as a decorative designer. He was called 'der deutsche Hans.'

ZINGG, ADRIAN, (or ZING,) engraver, was born at St. Gall, in Switzerland, in 1734, and was taught engraving by Johann Rudolf Holzbach, of Zurich, and by Aberli, with whom he remained two years. He next visited Paris, where he worked for seven years under Johann Georg Wille, by which his style was greatly improved. In 1766 he was invited by the Elector of Saxony to Dresden, where he was appointed engraver to the court, and became a member of the Academy. He died in 1816. We have a variety of landscapes and views by Zingg, among them the following:

Two Marine Views; after Fernet; one entitled La Pêche heureuse; the other, L'Écueil dangereux.

A Landscape, with Nymphs bathing; after Dietrich.

A Moonlight piece; after A. van der Neer.

Two Views on the Main; after C. G. Schütz.

A pair, representing the Port and the Gulf of Naples; after P. Mettay.

ZIPELIUS, EMILE, painter, was born at Mühlhausen, June 30, 1840, and was a pupil of Cogniet and Bénédicte Masson. He exhibited a few religious pictures and portraits at the Salon from 1861 to 1865, in which latter year he was drowned while bathing in the Moselle, near Nancy.

ZIX, BENJAMIN, a French painter, who flourished at the beginning of the 19th century. At the Salon of 1810 the following by him were exhibited:

View of the Castle of Schönbrunn, with the Emperor

Napoleon reviewing his Troops.

The Last Moments of the Marshal Duc de Montebello.

The Entry of Napoleon into Bordeaux.

The Entry of Napoleon into Toulouse.

There are ten drawings by Zix in the Louvre.

ZOBEL, GEORGE J., an English engraver in the mixed method, was born about 1810. He contributed thirty-eight proofs altogether to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy and Society of British Artists between 1834 and 1874. His death took place in 1881. His chief plates were:

Mrs. Payne Galloway and child; after Sir J. Reynolds.
Dr. Johnson as an infant. (Do.)
Home from the Fair; after Rosa Bonheur.
Still for a Moment; after Sir J. Millais.
The White Cockade. (Do.)
Can't you talk? after G. A. Holmes.

ZOBOLI, JACOPO, was born at Modena about the year 1700. He was first a pupil of Francesco Stringa, but afterwards studied at Bologna. He went to Rome, where he died about 1765. He painted altar-pieces and portraits, and is said to have etched fifteen plates dealing with 'The Exploits of Alois Gonzaga and Stanislaus Koska.'

ZOCCHI, GIUSEPPE, was born in Tuscany about 1711. He was chiefly employed in decorating palaces in Florence and its vicinity, especially the Palazzi Serristori, Rinuccini, and Gerini. The Gerini family furnished him with the means of studying in Florence, Rome, Bologna, and the Lombard towns. He made drawings of the more remarkable views in Florence and the neighbourhood, which were engraved and published in sets. He etched the figures himself, and also two entire plates of the last set. He engraved several plates after Guido, Simone da Pesaro, Pietro da Cortona, Solimena, and others. He died at Florence in 1767.

ZOLA, GIUSEPPE, landscape painter, was born at Brescia in 1675, and was a pupil of Tortelli. He resided the greater part of his life at Ferrara, where his landscapes with small figures were in great request. He usually introduced sacred subjects into his pictures. One of his best productions is in the church of San Lionardo, at Ferrara; others are in the Pinacoteca, the Costabili Gallery, and the Monte di Pietà. He died in 1743.

ZOLL, FRANZ JOSEPH, was born at Möhringen, in Baden, in 1772, and was first instructed by his father, a sculptor and painter. In his fourteenth year he went to Trostenberg in Bavaria, to an uncle who was a fresco painter, and then spent two years at Munich, studying under Dorner and Hauber at the Academy. He visited Paris, Vienna, and Rome. In 1821 he became professor of design at Freiburg University, and in 1823 director of the Mannheim Gallery. He died in 1833. A 'Hercules and Hebe' by him is in the Carlsruhe Gallery, and a 'Resurrection' in the church of his birthplace. His early works were chiefly portraits.

ZOLLER, FRANZ, draughtsman and etcher, was born at Klagenfurth about 1748, and was instructed first by his father, ANTON ZOLLER, a painter, and afterwards under J. Schmutzer. His chief plate is an etched and coloured View of Vienna, dated 1785. He published a topographical dictionary of the Tyrol. He died at Innsbruck in 1829.

ZÖLLNER, LUDWIG, lithographer, born at Oschatz in 1798, began his career as a merchant, and took up drawing as a pastime. He went to Paris to study lithography, to which he entirely devoted himself on his return to Germany. He lithographed many portraits of distinguished persons after Vogel von Vogelstein, and many plates after Horace Vernet, C. Ruthart, K. Schröder, and others. He sometimes worked in conjunction with Grünewald.

ZOPPO, MARCO, a native of Bologna, flourished about 1468-1498, and worked at Padua, Venice, and Bologna. The dates of his birth and death are unknown. He was a pupil of Squarcione, and frequently emphasized his relation to the master by the signature Zoppo di Squarcione. But his works show strong traces of the influence of Tura, under whom he may have studied in his youth, and are sometimes grotesque to the verge of caricature. He is conjectured to have been engaged in the decorations at the Eremitani Chapel in Padua, and to have been employed with Costa and others in the decorations of the Schifanoia at Ferrara. At Bologna he painted a great number of house façades, none of which, however, have been preserved. The greater part of his life was spent in Venice, but soon after 1471 he went to Bologna, where many of his pictures still remain, and where he is said to have worked up to 1498. This Bolognese period is marked by an improvement in his art, due no doubt to the influence of Cossa and of Costa. Malvasia asserts him to have been the master of Francesco Francia, but this statement is rejected by Crowe and Cavalcaelle, and is characterized by Morelli as 'a fable, originating most likely at Bologna, and dating from the 17th century.' It is suggested that the altar-piece of 1452 in the Padua Gallery, attributed to Squarcione, is in reality by Zoppo.

ZOPPO, PAOLO, a Brescian, flourished in the 16th century. It is said that after having spent two years in depicting the sack of Brescia on a crystal basin for Doge Gritti, who was in office between the years 1523 and 1538, he let it fall and broke it, which so disheartened him, that he took to his bed and died. This took place at Desenzano, on the Lago di Garda. He seems to have worked for a time at Venice, for in 1505 he visited Giovanni Bellini, in company of Bembo, as the bearer of a commission from the Marchioness of Mantua.

Frescoes assigned to Paolo Zoppo exist in the churches of San Pietro, San Domenico, Santa Maria degli Angeli, and San Barnaba, all in Brescia. A 'St. James,' on panel, is in the Venice Accademia.

ZOPPO, ROCCO, a relative of Marco Zoppo, and a pupil of Perugino, painted in the 16th century. An 'Adoration of the Shepherds' in the Berlin Museum was formerly ascribed to him on the evidence of a cartellino. The signature is now quite illegible, and the compilers of the new catalogue, in which the picture is entered as by an unknown master of the Umbrian school, doubt the authenticity of the cartellino.

ZOROASTRO, a pupil of Leonardo da Vinci, whose correct name is said ('Vasari,' Ed. Mil. iv. p. 53) to have been TOMMASO DI GIOVANNI MASINI. He is also said to have been a grandson of Bernardo Rucellai, a kinsman of Lorenzo de' Medici, and to have acquired the name of Zoroastro through dabbling in the black arts. He died in Rome, and was buried in S. Agata.

ZOTO, AGNOLO, was registered in the Paduan Guild in 1469, and was a pupil of Squarcione. He worked at the Cappella Gattamelata, Padua, in 1472, and also painted some Seasons and Zodiacal Signs in the Salone.

ZOUST, GERARD. See SOEST.

ZÜBERLEIN, JACOB, (or ZIEBERLEIN,) was a native of Tübingen, in Germany, and flourished about the year 1590. He is said to have been a painter, but is known rather as an engraver on wood. He executed a considerable number of cuts, among them the frontispieces to the 'Annals of Crusius,' printed at Frankfort in 1595. He signed his cuts with his monogram, and often with a small tub, in allusion to his name.

ZUBOZ, ALEXIS, a mezzotint engraver, lived in the first half of the 18th century. He was a scholar of B. Picart, but went to Russia, and practised at St. Petersburg. He engraved a series of the Emperors of Russia; to the portrait of Peter the Great he put his name with the date 1729. His name is also found on the portraits of Anne Petrowna and Catharine Alexowna.

ZUCARELLI, FRANCESCO, (or ZUCCHERELLI,) was born at Pitigliano, in Tuscany, about 1702. He was first a scholar of Paolo Anesi, at Florence, but he afterwards studied successively under Giovanni Maria Morandi and Pietro Nelli, at Rome. For some time he applied himself to historical painting, but he afterwards confined himself to decorative landscapes with small figures, in which he acquired a style, which became popular throughout Europe. He settled for a time at Venice, where the British Consul, Smith, patronized him, and recommended him to visit England. Accordingly he passed through Germany, Holland, and France, and came on to this country, where he remained for five years. He returned to Venice, but was soon induced to come a second time to England. This second stay extended from 1752 to 1773, and in the course of it he became one of the foundation members of the Royal Academy. He had already belonged to the Incorporated Society of Artists, and was largely employed for persons of distinction. Many of his pictures were engraved by Vivares, Byrne, Woollett, Bartolozzi, and others. In 1773 he returned to Italy, and settled at Florence, where he invested his savings in the securities of a monastery, soon afterwards suppressed by the Emperor Joseph II. By this he was reduced to indigence, and was obliged to resume work. He died at Florence in 1788. His paintings are numerous in England. There is a room full of them in Windsor Castle, and five hang in the Glasgow Gallery. There are many in Venice, in the Louvre, the Hermitage, and the Belvedere, and at Gotha. In the early part of his life Zuccarelli amused himself with the point; among others, we have the following etchings by him:

A set of various studies; from the designs of A. del Sarto.

The Virgin and Infant Christ, with St. John and St. Anne; after the same.

The Wise and the Foolish Virgins; after Giov. Menozzi.

ZUCCARO, FEDERIGO, (ZUCCHERO, or SUCARUS,) the younger brother of Taddeo Zuccaro, was born at St. Angelo in Vado, in 1543, (or 1542,) and was placed under the tuition of his brother at Rome when seven years old. In a few years he was sufficiently advanced to be able to assist Taddeo, and was employed by Pope Pius IV., in conjunction with Barocci, in the Belvedere, where he painted 'The History of Moses and Pharaoh,' 'The Marriage of Cana,' and 'The Transfiguration.' These works gained him credit; and Taddeo furnished him with further opportunities of distinction by making him his coadjutor in the Vatican, and in the Villa Farnese, at Caprarola. He was invited to Florence by the Grand Duke, to finish the cupola of Santa Maria dei Fiori, which had been left imperfect by Giorgio Vasari. On the death of Taddeo, in 1566, Gregory XIII. engaged Federigo to paint the vault of the Capella Paolina, but quarrelling with some of the Pope's officers, the painter took refuge in France, where he was for a time in the service of the Cardinal of Lorraine. From France he went to Antwerp, where he painted several cartoons for tapestry, then to Amsterdam, and in 1574 to England. Here he is said to have painted the portrait of Queen Elizabeth, and the famous one in a fancy dress at Hampton Court used to be assigned to him. It is also affirmed by Lord Orford, that Mary Queen of Scots sat to him, and that a print was engraved by Vertue from his portrait of her. But as Mary was in close confinement, Zuccaro's portrait (now at Chatsworth) was painted, most likely, at second-hand. He also painted Sir Nicholas Bacon, Lord Nottingham, Sir Francis Walsingham and others. Zuccaro returned to Italy, and resided some time at Venice, where he painted for the patriarch Grimani. He was also employed on the Hall of the Grand Council, and knighted. He now ventured to return to Rome, and was employed to finish the work he had begun in the Capella Paolina. About 1586 he was invited to the court of Madrid by Philip II., who employed him to paint in the Escorial. In this undertaking, however, he did not please the king, and after his departure, his works were replaced by others from the brush of Pellegrino Tibaldi. On his return to Rome he established the Academy of St. Luke, for which he had received letters patent from Sixtus V., and of which he became the first president. At his death, which happened at Ancona in 1609, he bequeathed all his property to the Academy. In his last years he wrote 'L'idea de' Scultori, Pittori, ed Architetti' (1607). Among his pictures we may further name a 'Dead Christ surrounded by Angels,' in the Palace Borghese; a 'Man with two Dogs,' in the Pitti Palace; a 'Madonna and Child, with the Infant St. John,' in the Vienna Gallery; and a 'St. James of Spain and St. Catherine,' in the Glasgow Gallery.

ZUCCARO, TADDEO, (or ZUCCHERO,) was born at St. Angelo in Vado, in the duchy of Urbino, in 1529. He was the son of OTTAVIANO ZUCCARO, a painter of little talent, by whom he was instructed in the rudiments. He afterwards worked under Pompeo da Fano, but went to Rome when he was only fourteen years of age. After many hardships he was noticed by Daniello di Por, a painter then in some estimation, who took him to Vitto, where, when he was eighteen, he was employed to decorate the façade of the Palazzo Mattei with emblematical subjects in grisaille. By this, his first public work, he attracted notice, and was soon afterwards engaged by the Duke of Urbino to paint a series of frescoes in the cathedral. He also worked at Pesaro, and returned to Rome in the time of Julius III., when he was employed by that pontiff and his successor, Paul IV., in the Vatican. He was also employed by Cardinal Farnese to decorate his villa at Caprarola. Taddeo Zuccaro died at Rome in 1566, in the thirty-seventh year of his age, worn out by continual exertion, and by some disposition to excess. He was buried in the Pantheon, near the grave of Raphael, and the following epitaph was afterwards inscribed on his tomb by his brother Federigo: "Fredericus mærens posuit anno 1568, moribus, picturâ, Raphaëli Urbinati simillimo." Pictures:

Christ in the Tomb. (Rheims Cathedral.)

Diana. (Uffizi, Florence.)

ZUCCATI, SEBASTIANO, an Italian painter of the 16th century, a native of the Valteline, who is said to have given his first lessons in drawing to Titian. His two sons, FRANCESCO and VALERIO, were workers in mosaic, also his grandson ARMINIO, son of Valerio.

ZUCCHI, ANDREA, painter and engraver, was born at Venice about 1675. He became known as a successful scene-painter, and in 1726 was invited to Dresden in that capacity. He also engraved some of the plates after the most celebrated paintings at Venice, published by Lovisa. We have by him a set of twelve prints of Venetian costumes. He died in 1740. The following are among his best works:

Tobit and the Angel; after Titian.

St. John the Evangelist; after the same.

St. John the Baptist; after P. Veronese.

The Death of Paolo Erizzo; after P. Longhi.

The Birth of the Virgin; after Niccolò Bambini.

The Miracle of the Manna; after G. Porta.

The Goddess Cybele in a Car, drawn by Lions; after Tintoretto.

Aurora and Tithonus; after the same.

Æneas saving Anchises from the Burning of Troy; after Seb. Ricci.

ZUCCHI, ANTONIO, A.R.A., painter, the son of Francesco Zucchi, was born at Venice in 1726; he studied architectural drawing and perspective with his uncle CARLO ZUCCHI, a scene-painter, and historical painting under Fontebasso and Amigoni. Becoming acquainted with the Brothers Adam, he travelled with them through Italy, drawing antique and classic buildings, and was by them persuaded to come to London, where he was employed in decorating some of their finest buildings. He painted ceilings at Osterley Park, Caen Wood, Luton House, and Buckingham House (since pulled down). He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1770, and exhibited a few pictures of ruined temples and ancient buildings. He married Angelica Kauffmann in 1781, and, returning to Italy, lived with her in Rome until his death in 1795.

ZUCCHI, FRANCESCO, engraver, was born at Venice in 1698 (?). He was the son of Andrea Zucchi, and was instructed by his father. He was invited to Dresden, to engrave some plates from the pictures in the Gallery. He died in 1764. We have, among others, the following prints by him:

The Portrait of a Spaniard; after Rubens; in the Dresden Gallery.

The Portrait of a Lady, resembling one of Rubens's wives; after the same; in the same collection.

St. Helena worshipping the Cross; after Giambettino Cignaroli.

Two Allegorical Subjects; after Antonio Balestra.

ZUCCHI, GIUSEPPE, engraver, brother of Antonio, practised in London for some years, and is chiefly known in this country by his engravings after Angelica Kauffmann.

ZUCCHI, JACOPO. See DEL ZUCCA.

ZUCCHI, LORENZO, was the younger brother of Francesco Zucchi, and was born at Venice in 1704. He was instructed by his father, Andrea Zucchi. In 1738 he was appointed engraver to the Elector of Saxony, and was employed to execute several plates for the Dresden Gallery collection. Zani says he died in 1779; Ticozzi, in 1783. The following are among his best plates:

The Seven Sacraments; after Spagnoletto.

The Martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul; after Nic. dell' Abbate.

The Crowning of St. Catharine; after Rubens.

A Sacrifice to Venus; after Ger. Laïresse.

The Flaying of Marsyas; after Langhetti.

The Tribute-Money; after Titian.

David with the Head of Goliath; after Luc. Giordano.

ZUCCO, FRANCESCO, was born at Bergamo, about the end of the 16th century. He studied under the Campi at Cremona, and with Pietro Moroni at Bergamo. He painted history and portraits, and imitated Paolo Veronese with such success that his works have often passed for the productions of that master. A 'Nativity,' and an 'Adoration of the Magi,' in the church of San Gottardo, at Bergamo, especially recall Cagliari. Zucco died in 1627.

ZUCCOLI, LUIGI, an Italian subject painter of the 19th century. He was a native of Milan, and a member of the Academy there. His works, which were chiefly scenes from Italian domestic life, won considerable popularity beyond his native country. He came to England in 1860, and lived here for five years: he sent a scene from the Revolution of 1848 at Milan to the 1862 Exhibition, and also occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1864 and 1871. He died at Milan, after a short illness, on January 7, 1876.

ZUGNI, FRANCESCO, (or GIUGNI,) was born at Brescia about 1559, and was a scholar of Palma Giovine. He was inferior to his master in design, but surpassed him in impasto and colour. He excelled in fresco, and frequently painted figures in the architectural perspectives of Tommaso Sandrino.

One of Zugni's best pictures is 'The Circumcision,' in the church of Santa Maria delle Grazie, at Venice. He died in 1621.

ZUMPE, JOHANNES, was born in 1819, and studied at Leipsic under Hans Veit Schnorr, under Neher at Stuttgart, and lastly under Julius Schnorr at Dresden. He went to Italy on a pension from the Dresden Academy, and studied the works of Cornelius. He died at Dresden in 1864. Among his chief productions were cartoons for the windows in the abbey church at Stuttgart, a drawing of 'Parnassus' for the Leipsic Art Union, and the decorative designs for the Loggia of the Dresden Gallery.

ZÜNDT, MATTHIAS, (or ZYNNDT,) an engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1498, and died in 1586. He worked with both the graver and point, and produced portraits, Scripture subjects, allegories, and crests. Brulliot mentions an etching with a mark supposed to be his; it represents a Vase with figures of Tritons, standing on sea-horses' feet, and surmounted by a figure of Neptune. Bartsch describes these three prints by him:

Portrait of Giovanni de Raleta, Grand Master of the Knights of Malta. 1566.

Portrait of Louis III. de Bourbon-Condé. 1568.

View of the city of Grodno, in Lithuania. 1568.

ZUPPELLI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, (or CAPELLINI,) a native of Cremona, was born about the end of the 15th century. He painted landscapes, with subjects from sacred history inserted. He died in 1536.

ZURBARAN, FRANCISCO, was baptized on November 7, 1598, which was probably the day of his birth. His father was a husbandman, and intended to bring his son up in the same employment; but the boy showed so much aptitude for painting that he was released from the plough, and placed under the tuition of Juan de Roelas. Under this master he soon acquired both knowledge and reputation. He determined to strictly follow nature, and never even to paint a piece of drapery without the object before him. His admiration of Caravaggio led him to imitate that master's style, and he won the title of the Spanish Caravaggio. In 1625 he was employed by the Marquis of Malazon to paint for the chapel of St. Peter in Seville cathedral. Nearly at the same period he produced his 'St. Thomas Aquinas' for the collegiate church of that saint in Seville. This is one of the finest productions of the Spanish school. He next painted eleven scenes from the life of St. Jerome for the Hieronymite Friars at Guadalupe, and a few altar-pieces. On his return to Seville, he painted three pictures for the Carthusians of Santa Maria de las Cuevas; in 1633 he painted several fine pictures for the Carthusians of Xeres, on one of which he inscribed his name as painter to the king; an honour which he shared with Velazquez. It does not, however, appear that he was employed at the court till about 1650, when he was employed to paint the 'Labours of Hercules' in the Buenretiro. It is said that Philip IV. often visited him during the progress of the work, and that one day he expressed his satisfaction by laying his hand on the painter's shoulder, and calling him "painter to the king, and king of painters." Zurbaran died at Madrid, in 1662, according to Palomino, but the date is uncertain. Among the pupils he formed were the Palancos and Bernabé de Ayala. A list of his more accessible pictures is given below. The Louvre formerly contained nearly a hundred pictures by Zurbaran, most of them belonging to the Spanish Gallery of Louis Philippe, which was dispersed in 1853.

ZWECKER, JOHANN BAPTIST, painter, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Main, in 1815. He studied at Düsseldorf, and in the Art School at Frankfort, and painted the portraits of Henry I. and Henry VI. for the 'Kaisersaal,' in his native town. In 1870 he came to London, and practised as an illustrator of books. He died in London in 1876.

ZWENGAUER, ANTON, landscape painter, was born at Munich, October 11, 1810. He worked from the antique under Cornelius, but afterwards turned his attention to landscape, taking many of his subjects from the Bavarian Highlands and from Southern Tyrol. In 1853 he was named a conservator of the Schleissheim Gallery, and in 1869 of the Munich Pinakothek. He died at Munich in 1884. His chief works are:

ZWINGER, GUSTAV PHILIPP, painter and etcher, was born at Nuremberg in 1779. He was the son and pupil of the painter and engraver SIGMUND ZWINGER (1744—1813), now chiefly remembered as a teacher. Gustav completed his studies under Füger in Vienna, and returning to his native town, became in turn professor and director of the Art School. He was also known as an historical painter, both in oil and water-colour, and as a designer of book illustrations. He etched a few plates and tried his hand at lithography. He died at Nuremberg in 1819.

ZWOLL, ZWOLLE, or ZWOTT. Great uncertainty prevails as to the identity of the master formerly designated by this name. He seems to have been a goldsmith and engraver, flourishing at the close of the 15th century. Bartsch calls him the 'Maître à la Navette,' or 'Master of the Weaver's Shuttle,' and gives his name as Zwott. Other writers have entitled him J. Ancker von,

Zwoll. But the cipher with which the prints ascribed to him are marked has by recent experts been declared to be, not a shuttle, but a goldsmith's scraper or burnisher, and the word Zwoll, generally engraved on the top of the plates, is explained as being not the name of the artist, but an abbreviation of Zwollensis, in allusion to the town where he resided, namely Zwoll, or Zwolle, in the province of Overijssel. For the name Ancker there seem to have been no reasonable grounds, and it has been abandoned. Passavant and other authorities support the hypothesis that the true name of the master was JOHANNES DE COLONIA, or JOHN OF COLOGNE, that his style was formed by the influences of the school of Van Eyck, and that he is to be identified by a paragraph in a book of memoirs of the fraternity of Agnetenburg near Zwolle, which records that about the year 1478 'a very pious young man' named John of Cologne, who was both painter and engraver, was living with the community, having joined the Brothers of Common Lot, i. e. the lay section of the fraternity. The supporters of this theory read the monogram I. A. M., which usually figures alongside of the hieroglyph above-mentioned, Johannes Aurifater Monachus, and we have thus a sufficiently probable solution of the difficulty. Nagler, however, points out that the M. could not stand for Monachus, as the lay brethren were not monks; and, secondly, that certain very inferior prints of the late 15th century exist signed I. C., and marked with the cipher of a shield with three crowns, the badge of Cologne. This signature, he contends, is a much more probable one for the cloister-brother, John of Cologne. Zani and Ottley, again, unable to harmonize the various discrepancies in connection with the subject, have suggested that two separate masters are responsible for the prints which have given rise to so much discussion. Dr. Willshire, in his 'Catalogue of German and Flemish Prints in the British Museum,' has adopted the views of Passavant; and following these two learned authorities, we subjoin a list of the exceedingly rare works assigned to the so-called 'Master of the Shuttle.' For the exhaustive discussion of all these points, the student is referred to Willshire's 'Catalogue of Flemish and German Prints,' vol. ii. pp. 322—364; Nagler's 'Monogrammisten,' vol. iii. pp. 741, 843; Ottley's 'Inquiry into the Origin and Early History of Engraving upon Copper and Wood,' vol. i. p. 107; and Passavant's 'Peintre Graveur,' vol. ii. pp. 178—186. Of the following the British Museum possesses impressions:

The Adoration of the Kings.

The Last Supper.

Christ on the Mount of Olives.

Christ taken in the Garden.

Christ Crucified between two Thieves.

The Entombment of Christ (a Pietà).

The Saviour standing holding an open Book in one hand, and giving benediction with the other.

The Virgin with the Infant, who is turning the leaves of a Book.

Virgin with the Child, standing on a Dragon.

Virgin and Child at a Window.

St. Gregory celebrating Mass.

A Skeleton in a vaulted Tomb (an allegory of Death).

Three Medallions of sacred subjects on a Plaque.

A Combat with a Centaur.

An architectural design of Gothic character.

A 'Passion' sequence of fifty-three prints.

The Angelic Salutation.

F. S.

Passavant states that the master was also a painter, and gives three pictures as by him: an 'Adoration of the Kings,' in the Berlin Museum; 'The Israelites gathering Manna,' at Paris; and a 'Marriage of the Virgin,' at Madrid.

SUPPLEMENT.

ACHARD, JEAN ALEXIS, painter and etcher, was born at Voreppe (Isère), June 8, 1807. He first appeared at the Salon in 1839, with a 'View near Cairo,' after which he contributed a number of landscapes, chiefly French in subject. His 'View near Grenoble' is in the Luxembourg. Towards the close of his life he devoted himself mainly to etching. He died October 6, 1884.

ADAM, FRANZ, a German painter of horses, equestrian portraits, and battle-pieces, was born at Milan, May 4, 1815, and was the pupil of his father, Albrecht Adam. He practised chiefly at Vienna and Munich. He served with the Austrian army in the campaigns of 1849 and 1859, and made innumerable sketches of life in the field, many of which he afterwards used for pictures. He was a member of the Academies of Munich and Vienna, and gained medals in Paris and Berlin. He died September 29, 1886.

AMERLING, FRIEDRICH, painter, was born at Vienna, April 14, 1803. After some hard struggles occasioned by narrow means, he succeeded in entering the Vienna Academy as a pupil, and completed his training under Lawrence in London and under Vernet in Paris. On his return to Vienna he gained the first prize at the Academy with his 'Dido forsaken' and 'Moses the Law-giver.' He several times visited Italy. He became a very popular portrait painter in his native city, but continued to paint occasional historical and subject pictures. Among his best known works in each genre we may name: portraits of himself, of the Emperor Francis I., of Thorwaldsen, of Franz Grillparzer, and of Prince Windischgrätz, also 'Judith,' 'Ophelia,' 'The Widow,' 'Roman Woman with her Infant.' Amerling was a member of the Vienna Academy. He died at Vienna in January, 1887.

ANDERSON, ROBERT, born in 1842, was a Scottish engraver of some repute. In the latter part of his life he devoted himself to painting in water-colour. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1879, and died in Edinburgh, April 24, 1885.

ANGELL, HELEN CORDELIA, née COLEMAN, was born in 1847, and early distinguished herself as a brilliant and original painter of flowers and kindred subjects, which she was among the first of modern English painters to treat with breadth and vigour. She first exhibited at the Dudley Gallery in 1866. She became a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, but seceded in 1879, on being elected an associate exhibitor of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, of which she afterwards became a member. She married, in 1875, Mr. W. T. Angell, and died at the age of thirty-seven, March 8th, 1884. Her last picture was exhibited at the Dudley Gallery in the winter of 1889.

ANNIS, W. T., an English mezzotint engraver, of whom very little is known. He exhibited landscapes at the Royal Academy between the years 1798 and 1811, and engraved the following plates in Turner's Liber Studiorum :

Sunset; No. 40.

Chepstow Castle; No. 48. Also

Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin; after Opie.

ANSDALL, RICHARD, painter, was born at Liverpool in 1815. He was educated at the Bluecoat School, and was then put into business at Liverpool, but his desire to become an artist triumphed, and he was allowed to study painting. In 1840 he exhibited his first pictures at the Royal Academy, 'Grouse Shooting' and 'A Galloway Farm.' He then made a few not very successful essays in history, but eventually devoted himself almost entirely to animal painting, in which genre he became known as a popular imitator of Landseer. His 'Turning the Drove' gained a gold medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1855. Between 1850 and 1860 he occasionally painted in conjunction with Thomas Creswick, the latter supplying landscapes for Ansdall's studies of cattle, &c. Among the results of this co-operation were, the 'South-downs,' the 'Drover's Halt,' and the 'Park.' Mr. Frith also painted figures in some of Ansdall's pictures, an example being the milkmaid in 'Feeding the Calves.' In 1856 Ansdall visited Spain, in company with his friend John Phillip, and painted a number of subjects of Spanish popular life, such as 'The Water-carrier,' 'Mules drinking,' 'Spanish Flower-seller.' He became an associate of the Royal Academy in 1861, and a member in 1875. Among the best of his later works were 'The Goatherds of Granada' and 'The Home of the Red Deer.' Ansdall etched a few plates of no great merit. He died April 25, 1885.

ANTHONY, MARK, landscape painter, was of Welsh extraction, but was born at Manchester in 1817. He studied medicine in his early youth, and at the age of sixteen was placed with a doctor at Cowbridge. Here he spent all his leisure in sketching and drawing, and his master, who seems to have shared his artistic tastes, and to have been himself an amateur of some practice, gave him occasional lessons in painting, and otherwise encouraged his talent. The result was that the young man, who had some private means, threw up his medical pursuits, and went to study in earnest in Paris and at the Hague. He remained abroad for ten years, making Paris his head-quarters, and in 1837 sent his first landscape for exhibition at the Royal Academy. In the same year he was working at Fontainebleau, and there came in contact with Jules Dupré and Corot, whose influence naturally told strongly upon his art. In 1840 he first exhibited with the British Institution, and in 1845 was elected a member of the Society of British Artists. With them he exhibited 'Harvest Home' (1847), 'Prayer for the Absent' (1848), 'Old Country Churchyard' (1849), 'The Elm at Eve' (1850). From 1851 onwards his works appeared pretty constantly at the Royal Academy. In 1852 Anthony resigned his membership of the 'British Artists,' hoping for an A.R.A.-ship, which, however, never fell to him. He gradually withdrew from all society, save that of very intimate friends, and died December 2, 1886. His pictures are chiefly in the possession of private patrons.

BACON, FREDERICK, engraver, born in London in 1803, was a student of the Royal Academy for some time under Fuseli, and afterwards became a pupil and assistant of the Findens. He engraved, on his own account, illustrations for the Waverley Novels, and for Heath's Annals, &c., and was much employed by Messrs. Colnaghi and Puckle, and for the Art Union. In 1869 he retired from the active exercise of his profession, and in 1882 left England for California, where he invested in a property, and where he died in 1887.

BALZE, PAUL JEAN, enamel painter, born at Rome of French parents in 1815, was a pupil of Ingres. He was best known by copies made in conjunction with his brother Raymond Joseph, of Raphael's frescoes in the Vatican, a work on which he was engaged ten years. He also worked for Parisian churches. He died in 1884.

BARKER, THOMAS JONES, a popular painter of battle-pieces and military subjects, was the son of "Barker of Bath," from whom he received his first teaching, and was born in 1815. At the age of nineteen he went to Paris, and entered the studio of Horace Vernet, on many of whose pictures he collaborated. His first pictures were exhibited in Paris, among them a 'Death of the Grand Monarque' for Louis Philippe. Among his later works were 'Meeting of Wellington and Blucher after Waterloo,' 'Nelson's Prayer in the cabin of the Victory,' 'The Secret of England's Greatness,' and 'The Riderless Horse, after Sedan.' Barker died March 29, 1882.

BASTIEN-LEPAGE, JULES, painter, was born at Damvillers, Lorraine, November 1, 1850. His parents were poor, and in his early manhood he had a hard struggle for existence. He began life as a government clerk in his native district, but at nineteen quitted the desk, and coming to Paris, entered Cabanel's atelier. Associated as his name now is with an art essentially actual and realistic, it is curious to find him making his début in pseudo-pastoral in 18th century taste. One of his earliest recorded works is 'Women in a wood attacked by Cupids,' and in 1874 he exhibited at the Salon a peasant girl surrounded by piping Cupids, together with his first notable work, 'Le Portrait du Grandpère.' The following year was marked by the production of one of his most pathetic and masterly studies of humble life 'La Petite Communiant.' In this same year he competed for the prix de Rome with a remarkable work, 'Les Bergers' ('The Angels appearing to the Shepherds'). The Art section of the Academy awarded it the prize, but their decision was overruled by the majority of the Council. The disappointment, though severe, did him good service. An outcry was raised against the injustice of the reversal, and Bastien-Lepage's name became well known throughout the country. He himself used to assert that this was the starting-point of his career. For the remaining years of his life he was a prominent figure in the French art world, and became well known in this country as an exponent of the traditions of Millet and Courbet, modified by his own vigorous individuality. He is said to have expressed an ambition to paint a cycle of rustic subjects, setting forth the chief events of peasant life in childhood, maturity, and old age, and such pictures as 'Les Foins,' 'La Saison d'Octobre,' 'Le Mendiant,' and 'Pauvre Fauvette' may be taken as links in the sequence. His 'Joan of Arc' of 1880, in which, discarding convention, he represents his heroine as a poor and even squalid peasant girl, glorified by a mystic spiritual grandeur, may be said to summarize his artistic idea. He died in Paris of cancer of the stomach, at the early age of thirty-six, December 3, 1884. Besides the works above mentioned, the following are remarkable:

The Wood-Cutter.

My Parents.

Rustic Courtship.

Portrait of the Prince of Wales.

" " Madame Sarah Bernhardt.

" " M. Albert Wolf, of the Paris 'Figaro.'

BAUDRY, PAUL JACQUES AIMÉ, painter, was born, of humble parentage, at La Roche-sur-Yon, Vendée, November 7, 1828. He first studied under one Sartoris, at La Roche, and was afterwards sent to Paris with an allowance from his native city. In Paris he became the pupil of Drolling, and in 1850 won the Grand Prix de Rome with a 'Zenobia found on the Banks of the Araxes.' Four years in Rome were spent in the study of Michelangelo, Raphael, Titian, and Correggio, from each of whom he endeavoured to take some characteristic quality. During his stay in Italy he sent pictures to the Salon which attracted much attention, and this success continued after his return to Paris. It was in quasi-historical, decorative painting, in which his fine sense of balance and his pleasant colour served him well, that he succeeded best, and so, about 1865, he was invited to take part in the decoration of the new Opera. In preparation for this task he revisited Italy, made a series of partial copies from Buonarroti's frescoes in the Sistine Chapel, and studied Raphael at the Stanze. In 1867 he came to England, and finished a series of copies from Raphael's cartoons. The actual decoration of the Opera foyer absorbed Baudry's energies for some twelve years. The subjects are single figures of the Muses, Polymnia excepted, and various scenes from mythology, legend, and even biblical history. Besides these decorations, Baudry painted much for private patrons, and at the Salon of 1881 he obtained the medaille d'honneur for his 'Glorification de la Loi,' a ceiling for the Cour de Cassation. Throughout his career he combined portrait painting with his decorative work. Among his portraits, the best, perhaps, are those of Beulé (1857), Baron Dupin (1860), Charles Garnier (1868), and Edmond About (1871). In 1870 Baudry was elected a member of the Institute. He died January 7, 1886.

BAUGNIET, C., a well-known Belgian draughtsman on stone, who practised chiefly in Paris, and whose portraits were especially noteworthy. He died at Sèvres, July 3, 1886.

BAVIERA, a native of Parma, and one of the pupils of Raphael. Of his work nothing is known, and details of his relations with Sanzio are of the scantiest, but that he was a trusted friend and confidant of the master appears from the fact that to him Raphael gave the copper-plates of the engravings executed for him by Marc Antonio, that his name figures as signatory to a contract concluded on behalf of Raphael in 1515, and that before his death Raphael confided to his care his mistress, the famous 'Fornarina.' He is further mentioned by Vasari as having come to the aid of his fellow-pupil, Perino del Vaga, when the latter was rendered destitute by the sack of Rome in 1527.

BEATRICIUS. See above, MASTER OF THE DIE.

BEAULIEU, ANATOLE HENRI DE, a French painter of historical, genre, and military subjects, was born in Paris in 1819, and was a pupil of Delacroix. He died in 1884.

BEAUME, JOSEPH, a French historical painter, born at Marseilles in 1796, was a favourite pupil of Gros, and a frequent contributor to the Salon between 1819 and 1878. In the time of Louis Philippe he was commissioned to paint several large battle-pieces for Versailles. His 'Henri III. on his Death-bed' is in the Luxembourg. He died in September, 1885.

BEAUMONT, CHARLES ÉDOUARD DE, painter, was a native of Lannion (Côtes de Nord), and a pupil of Boisselier. He painted genre pictures, generally of a humorous character, both in oils and water-colour, and gained medals in 1870 and 1875. He was president of the Société des Aquarellistes Français at the time of his death, which took place in January, 1888.

BECKER, AUGUST, landscape painter, was born at Darmstadt in 1822. He studied in his native town under Schilbach, and afterwards settled at Düsseldorf. He several times visited Queen Victoria at Balmoral, where he painted a series of pictures of Highland scenery, and gave lessons to the young princesses. In 1862 he became teacher to the Hereditary Princess of Hohenzollern. He died at Düsseldorf in December, 1887.

BEGAS, OSKAR, painter, was born in Berlin, July 31, 1828. He was the son of Carl Begas, from whom he received his first teaching. In 1852 he won a premium, which enabled him to travel to Italy. He worked in Rome for some time, and there painted a 'Descent from the Cross' for the church of St. Michael at Berlin. He then visited France and England, and on his return to Berlin devoted himself to portrait painting and decoration. In 1866 he became Professor at the Berlin Academy. He died at Berlin, in November, 1883.

BERNARD, THEODORE. See BARENSEY, DIRK.

BERTINOT, GUSTAVE, a French engraver, was born at Louviers (Eure), June 23, 1822. He was a pupil of Drolling and Martinet, and gained the prix de Rome in 1850. In 1867 he gained a medal of the first class and the Cross of the Legion. He succeeded Martinet at the Académie des Beaux Arts in 1878. He died April 19, 1888. Among his best plates were portraits of Ingres, Cherubini, and Van Dyck, and the 'Vierge aux Donataires,' after Van Dyck.

BERTRAND, JAMES, a French painter, and native of Lyons, was one of the most distinguished of Perrin's pupils. His subjects were chiefly poetical and mythological. Among pictures exhibited by him at the Salon we may mention: 'The Communion of S. Benedict (now in the possession of the Société des Beaux Arts at Lyons),' 'The Conversion of S. Thais,' 'S. Mary of Egypt,' 'Peasants of the Abruzzi at S. Peter's,' 'Phryne at Eleusis,' and 'The Death of Sappho.' He died in September, 1887.

BEVILACQUA, AMBROGIO and FILIPPO, Milanese painters, were brothers and partners, and flourished at the end of the 15th century. They were employed at the Palace and in the Duomo, and Ambrogio painted an allegory of Charity on the front of the Milan poor-house in 1486. The only acknowledged picture by him is a 'Virgin and Child between King David and Peter Martyr,' in the Brera. See also VIGEVAÑO, AMBROGIO DA, above.

BIELBY, W., topographical draughtsman, flourished towards the end of the 18th century, and painted some of the views engraved in Angus' 'Seats of the Nobility and Gentry,' published 1787. Some views of Chelsea and Battersea by him were engraved in aquatint by Jukes.

BILLINGTON, HORACE W., landscape painter, was the brother of the celebrated singer. A landscape by him was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1802. He died in London, November 17, 1812.

BLANC, LUDWIG AMMY, a painter of portraits and mediæval genre, was born at Berlin, August 9, 1810. In 1829 he entered the Berlin Academy schools, and in 1834 removed to Düsseldorf, where he studied under Julius Hübner. From 1840 to 1842 he worked at Hanover, painting portraits of members of the reigning family, and other persons of note, and in 1845-7 he was similarly employed at Darmstadt. In 1857 he visited France and England. He died in April, 1885. There is a picture by him in the Berlin National Gallery.

BOND, R. SEBASTIAN, landscape painter, was born at Liverpool in 1808. He was educated in his native city, and practised there for the greater part of his life, settling finally at Bettws-y-Coed. He occasionally exhibited in London between 1846 and 1872, but most of his works appeared at Liverpool and in the midland counties. He died in February, 1886.

BONHEUR, FRANÇOIS AUGUSTE, painter, was born at Bordeaux in 1824, and was his father's pupil. He was the brother of Mlle. Rosa Bonheur. His first picture exhibited at the Salon was 'Children and Cockchafer,' in 1845. He afterwards painted portraits, but was best known by his landscapes with cattle. He died of heart disease in a railway carriage in Paris, February 21, 1884.

BONSTETTEN, ABR. SIGM. AUGUST VON, a Swiss landscape painter, born in 1796, of a good family. He was brought up for the military service, and served in a Swiss regiment in the pay of the Dutch Government. After the separation of Belgium from Holland, he gave up soldiering and devoted himself entirely to art. Possessed of considerable property, his works but seldom appeared at the public exhibitions. He died at Sinneringen, near Berne, in 1879.

BONVIN, FRANÇOIS SAINT, a French painter of still-life and of interiors in the style of Chardin, was born in Vaugirard, Paris, November 22, 1817. His father was a garde-champêtre, and Bonvin was educated at the charge of patrons in the drawing school of the Rue de l'École de Médecine. For more than thirty years he was a constant exhibitor at the Salon, gaining the Legion of Honour in 1870. In 1881 he entered the Hospital of Saint Jean de Dieu to be operated on for the stone, and for the rest of his life was an invalid. He died in 1888. Pictures:

BOULANGER, GUSTAVE RODOLPHE CLARENCE, painter, was born in Paris, April 25, 1824. He began his art education at an early age, and when only fourteen was sent by an uncle to Africa, where he spent eight months making sketches, and where he seems to have imbibed his love for Oriental subjects. He became a pupil of Paul Delaroche and of Jolivet, and in 1849 gained the prix de Rome, and remained in Italy till 1856. His mature performances failed to justify his early promise, but his works had nevertheless great popularity. He devoted himself to Oriental and archæological painting, treating Roman and Grecian themes somewhat in the manner of Mr. Alma Tadema. In 1882 he was elected a member of the Institute, and was long a professor at the École des Beaux Arts, where he showed much ability as a teacher. He married Madame Nathalie, of the Comédie Française, and to this theatre he presented a portrait of his wife, painted in 1867. He was also the author of a series of mural pictures in the Foyer de la Danse of the new Opera house in Paris, and of two in Prince Napoleon's Pompeian house in the Avenue Montaigne, the 'Flute Player' and the 'Wife of Diomed,' themes which he several times repeated. He died in Paris of congestion of the lungs, September 22, 1888.

BOURSSE, ESALIAS, a Dutch painter of domestic interiors, was born at Amsterdam about 1630. He was working in his native city from about 1656 to 1672. He visited Italy, and made several voyages to the East Indies in the service of the Dutch East India Company. His works are rare, and but little known. The Rijks Museum at Amsterdam has an 'Interior with a Woman spinning'; the Suermondt Museum at Aix-la-Chapelle has an example; and Sir Richard Wallace an 'Interior, with a Woman sitting by a Child in a Cradle.'

BRASSEUR, ANTOINE, painter, was born at Lille in 1819, and brought up at the Comtesse Foundling Hospital. He gained a wide reputation as a restorer of pictures, following his calling at Cologne. On his death, in 1886, he left his large collection of pictures to the museum of his native town.

BREDAEL, JOZEF VAN, a Flemish painter, born at Antwerp, August 14, 1688, painted landscapes, but was best known as a copyist of the works of Brueghel, Wouvermans, and others, for the picture-dealer Jacob de Witte. In 1736 he settled in Paris, where he became painter to the Duke of Orleans. He died in Paris in 1739. There is a river landscape by him in the Rijks Museum at Amsterdam.

BRONDGEEST, ALBERTUS, a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam, December 2, 1786. He was a pupil of P. G. van Os and of H. Numan. He travelled in Germany, became a member of the Netherlands Institute and of the Antwerp Academy, and painted many landscapes and marines. He died at Amsterdam, July 30, 1849. Works:

Amsterdam. R. Museum. A River Scene. 1837.

" " Ditto (after Cuypp).

BROOKES, WARWICK, draughtsman and designer, was born at Salford, of poor parents, in 1808. On leaving school he was placed as 'tear-boy' under his uncle, a block-printer in some calico printing works. But his drawings having attracted the attention of his master, he was promoted to the designing-room. In 1838 a 'School of Design' was established at Manchester, and Brookes was one of the first to avail himself of its instruction. He was afterwards one of the most zealous among the band of young men who associated themselves for study from the life as "The United Society of Manchester Artists." Brookes now began to make a local reputation, and the Manchester Exhibition of 1857 brought him before a wider public. His contributions were noticed and admired by the Prince Consort, and he was brought into contact with many brother artists, and for a time paid yearly visits to London. He was about this time engaged by the Rossendale Printing Company, and among other books, illustrated the works of Dr. John Browne. In 1865 the first symptoms of lung disease showed themselves. He was gradually forced to give up active work, and in 1871 was granted a pension of £100 a year on the Civil List. He died at Salford, August 11, 1882, and was buried at Brooklands, near Sale, Cheshire. For further particulars see the 'Portfolio' for November and December, 1886.

BROWNE, HABLOT KNIGHT, better known as 'PHIZ,' was born at Kennington, June 15, 1815. His father, a merchant, was a native of Norfolk. Hablot (so named after a French officer killed at Waterloo, to whom his sister was betrothed) was apprenticed to William Finden, and domiciled in London with a sister married to Elhanan Bicknell, the well-known collector. Engraving, however, was not to the boy's taste, and he began to dabble in water-colour. After his time was out he took a modest lodging in company with a friend, and entered as a student at the St. Martin's Lane life-school, where Etty was working at the time. In 1832 Browne gained a medal from the Society of Arts, having in 1830 begun that association with Dickens, for which he is chiefly remembered. His first drawings were for 'Sunday as it is, by Timothy Sparks.' The publication of 'Pickwick' followed in the same year, and after the death of Robert Seymour, and the failure of Buss, Browne was chosen by Dickens to finish the series. On the first two plates he signed himself 'Nemo,' but afterwards adopted 'Phiz,' as more in harmony with 'Boz.' This association between writer and artist lasted many years, and bore fruit in 'Nicholas Nickleby,' 1839; 'Martin Chuzzlewit,' 1844; 'Dombey and Son,' 1848; 'David Copperfield,' 1850; 'Bleak House,' 1853; 'Little Dorrit,' 1855, and 'A Tale of Two Cities,' 1859. Later, 'Phiz' designed illustrations for the novels of Aiasworth, Lever, and Frank Smedley; his mastery of horses serving him well with the two latter. After his prosperity became assured he left London, and lived successively at Croydon and at Banstead, working at his art, and spending most of his leisure in the hunting-field. He painted in water-colours and occasionally in oil, contributing for many years to the British Institution and the Society of British Artists, and even competing at Westminster Hall in 1843. In 1867 he was overtaken by partial paralysis, and though he continued to work for the fifteen years that passed before his death, his hand had lost its cunning. Towards the close of his life he received a small pension from the Royal Academy. In 1880 he moved with his wife and family to Brighton, where he died, July 8, 1882.

BUNNEY, JOHN WHARLTON, painter, born in 1808, was an English artist practising in Venice. In 1873, 1879, and 1881 he exhibited views of Venice at the Royal Academy. For the last four years of his life he was engaged on an elaborat and minutely finished transcript from the west front of St. Mark's, on a commission from Mr. Ruskin. He died at Venice, Sept. 23, 1882.

BURNITZ, CARL PETER, landscape painter, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Main in 1824. He was brought up to the profession of an advocate, and in 1847 took his doctor's degree at Heidelberg, but he meantime diligently studied art without a teacher. After travels in Spain and Algiers, he lived for ten years in Paris, where he devoted himself entirely to painting, and received valuable help from Dupré, Corot, and Theodore Rousseau. He first exhibited at the Salon in 1855, a landscape which was bought by the Emperor. He died in 1866.

BURTON, W. P., son of Capt. Wm. Paton Burton, an officer in the Indian army, and nephew of Dr. John Hill Burton, was born at Madras in 1828. He was educated in Edinburgh, and entered the office of David Bryce of that city, intending to become an architect, but eventually devoted himself to landscape painting in water-colours. He travelled much on the continent and in Egypt, and produced many drawings of French river scenery, and of old buildings in Holland and Egypt, besides numerous studies of Surrey and Sussex landscape. He died at Aberdeen on the 31st December, 1883.

BUTIN, ULYSSE, painter, was born at Saint Quentin in 1838. He early showed a talent for art, but his parents were poor, and could not afford to educate him fully. He accordingly began his career as a designer of patterns for muslins in a factory of his native town. While thus engaged he won a prize of three hundred francs, and with the money travelled to Paris, where he combined work at his trade with study under Picot at the École des Beaux Arts. In 1871 he made his début at the Salon with a picture called 'Le Bouffon.' He subsequently exhibited many pictures, chiefly scenes of fisher life. Among the best of these were 'Waiting for the Boats, Villerville,' 1875, and 'A Sailor's Funeral, Villerville,' 1878. The latter is in the Luxembourg. For twelve years he held the post of professor of drawing to the Écoles de la Ville de Paris. He died in Paris, December 9, 1883.

CABANEL, ALEXANDRE, painter, was born at Montpellier in 1823. He came to Paris at an early age, entered Picot's atelier, and crowned a successful course at the École des Beaux Arts by gaining the prix de Rome in 1845. While in Rome he painted a 'Death of Moses,' which attracted considerable attention at the Salon of 1852, and for which he was awarded a medal of the second class. Another meritorious early work was his 'Glorification of Saint Louis,' exhibited at the Salon of 1855, and now in the Luxembourg. But the picture by which he is best known is his 'Birth of Venus' of 1863, also in the Luxembourg, which was engraved by Jules François, and in which the painter may be said to have reached the highest expression of his graceful, delicate, and insipid art. Under the Second Empire, Cabanel became the fashionable portraitist of his day, and painted most of the délicates of the third Napoleon's Court. "His satiny complexions and mincing hands," says a French critic, "were a continual source of delight to ladies and irritation to artists." His portrait of the Emperor, painted for the Empress, gained the medaille d'honneur of 1865. Under the Republic

Cabanel was no less popular, and up to the very time of his death was overwhelmed with commissions. As a teacher, he was very successful. His studio at the École des Beaux Arts was one of the most frequented, and he turned out artists of such widely diverse gifts as Benjamin Constant, Bastien-Lepage, Albert Besnard, Aimé Morot, Fernand Cormon, and Henri Gervex, besides many others. Though himself faithful to the traditions of Cogniet, Ingres, and Abel de Pujol, Cabanel showed great liberality in his relations with his pupils, never seeking to impose his own style upon them, but endeavouring to develop the individual bent of each. In 1863 Cabanel succeeded Horace Vernet as a member of the Institute. He was also a member of a long list of foreign academies, and won a large share of official honours. He died in Paris, January 22, 1889, and was buried at his native Montpellier.

CALDECOTT, RANDOLPH, was the son of an accountant at Chester, and was born in that city, March 22, 1846. He was educated at the King's School, Chester, and in his boyish days seems to have shown the bent of his genius in drawings, sketches, and models of animals cut in wood. At the age of fifteen he became a clerk in the Whitchurch Bank, Shropshire, living in an old farm-house near the town, and in this country atmosphere gathered up a store of impressions at such scenes as meets, fairs, and markets, that later yielded rich fruit. He remained at Whitchurch for six years, and was then transferred to the Manchester and Salford Bank at Manchester, where he worked steadily at his duties for five years, meanwhile devoting all his spare time to evening studies in the Manchester Art School, and in summer weather to open-air sketching. In 1868 his first published drawings appeared in a local paper called 'Will o' the Wisp,' to be followed the next year by some contributions to another paper, 'The Sphinx.' At the same time he was painting a little for friends, chiefly hunting subjects, and in 1869 he exhibited a picture at the Manchester Royal Institution. His artistic gifts now appeared so unquestionable, that in 1870, acting on the advice of some friends, he went to London with a letter of introduction to Mr. Thomas Armstrong of the South Kensington Museum, who throughout his career consistently befriended him. Some drawings of Caldecott's were submitted to Shirley Brooks, and to Mark Lemon, then editor of 'Punch,' also to Mr. Henry Blackburn, who was on the staff of 'London Society,' with the result that the young man became one of the regular contributors to that journal. His water-colours and small oil-pictures also began to have a wider sale, and thus encouraged, he determined to give up his situation in the bank, and to devote himself to art. He came to London early in 1872, and worked for a time in the life class of the Slade School, under Mr. Poynter. In June of the same year his first drawing for 'Punch' was published. It was the beginning of a long series of work for London illustrated papers such as the 'Graphic,' the 'Pictorial World,' and the American 'Daily Graphic.' In the illustration of books, Caldecott made his first essay in August, 1872, when he accompanied Mr. Blackburn to the Harz district, and executed a number of whimsical drawings for a book of summer travels by the latter, 'The Harz Mountains, a Tour in the Toy Country.' In 1873 he went to the Vienna Exhibition, to make drawings for the 'Daily Graphic.' Later in the year he worked in M. Jules Dalou's studio at Chelsea, the sculptor having made a compact with Caldecott, who was to teach him English, while he helped the novice with the clay. In 1876 Caldecott exhibited an oil picture at the Royal Academy, 'There were Three Ravens sat on a Tree,' and a metal bas-relief, 'Horse Fair in Brittany;' but towards the close of the year he began to show symptoms of failing health, and was obliged to winter in the South, whence he brought home innumerable sketches, and there he made the drawings illustrating Mrs. Comyns Carr's 'North Italian Folk.' In 1878 he agreed with Mr. Edmund Evans to illustrate some books for children, to be printed in colour. Of these the following is a complete list, with dates of publication: 'The House that Jack Built' and 'John Gilpin,' 1878; 'Elegy on a Mad Dog' and 'Babes in the Wood,' 1879; 'Three Jovial Huntsmen' and 'Sing a Song of Sixpence,' 1880; 'Queen of Hearts' and 'Farmer's Boy,' 1881; 'The Milkmaid' and 'Hey-diddle-diddle,' 1882; 'The Fox jumps over the Parson's Gate' and 'A Frog he would a-wooing go,' 1883; 'Come, Lasses and Lads' and 'Ride a Cock Horse to Banbury Cross,' 1884; 'Mrs. Mary Blaize' and 'The Great Panjandrum,' 1885. Of books illustrated in black and white we may mention Washington Irving's 'Old Christmas,' 1875; and 'Bracebridge Hall,' 1876; 'Æsop's Fables with Modern Instances,' 1883; also illustrations for several of Mrs. Ewing's books, notably 'Jackanapes' and 'Lob-lie-by-the-Fire.' Various tours in Brittany in company with Mr. Henry Blackburn were commemorated by drawings and terra-cotta studies of Breton life. For many years Caldecott suffered from heart complaint, the result of rheumatic fever, and in the winter of 1885-6 he was advised to winter in Florida. He accordingly sailed with his wife for the United States. The season, unhappily, proved abnormally severe. He reached St. Augustine's, Florida, but only to die, February 12, 1886. His last work was part of a series of 'American Facts and Fancies' drawn for the 'Daily Graphic.'

CALVERT, EDWARD, painter and draughtsman, was born in Cornwall about 1803. His father was a naval officer, and he himself served for a time as a midshipman. He studied painting under a west country artist named Johns, married at an early age, and, coming to London, entered the Royal Academy Schools. He began work in the capital as an illustrative draughtsman upon wood. His diffidence led him to constantly destroy his blocks and plates, so that impressions from them are very scarce. His admiration for Greek art led him to visit Greece, whence he brought back many studies. A worshipper of Blake, whose acquaintance he had made in his youth, he became the intimate friend of John Linnell, and of his son-in-law, Samuel Palmer. He died on the 14th July, 1883. Among his prints the most remarkable are perhaps the 'Christian ploughing the Last Furrow of Life,' and the 'Cider Press,' both strongly reminiscent of Blake.

CAMPBELL, CHARLES WILLIAM, an English engraver in mezzotint, was born at Tottenham, July 13, 1855. In 1870 he entered the office of his father, an architect and surveyor, and stayed there until 1878. In the meanwhile he studied Ruskin and practised drawing so far as his means and leisure would allow him. Finally he was intrusted by Mr. Burne-Jones with his picture of the 'Birth of Galatea,' to be scraped in mezzotint. The plate was published early in 1886, and was followed by an 'Ophelia,' from his own design, and 'Pan and Psyche,' again after Burne-Jones. All three were pure mezzotint, without adulteration by any other process. Campbell also scraped a mezzotint of Miss Ellen Terry from life, and at his premature death, which occurred on May 31, 1887, left the following plates in various stages of completion:

The Annunciation; after E. Burne-Jones.

The Virgin among Rocks; after Leonardo da Vinci.

Portrait of Cardinal Newman; after G. F. Watts.

'Ariosto'; after the portrait by Palma formerly so called and ascribed to Titian, in the National Gallery.

After Strong Seas; from his own design.

CANON, HANS, (or JOHANN VON STRASCHIRIPKA,) a German painter, of Polish descent, was born in 1829. In 1853 he dropped his unpronounceable Polish name for that by which he was afterwards known. He began life in the army, but in 1853 studied under Rahl, and subsequently worked in Paris under Delaroche and Horace Vernet. He first attracted attention as a satirico-political draughtsman, then as a painter of portraits and military subjects. He eventually took to historical painting on an enormous scale, and in a preposterously exaggerated style. He lived successively at Carlsruhe, and at Vienna, where he was a prominent figure in art circles, and where he died in 1885. A typical example of his art is in the Natural History Museum at Vienna.

CASEY, DANIEL, a French historical painter, was a pupil of Wappers, in whose atelier at Antwerp he was a fellow-student with Mr. Ford Madox Brown. He first exhibited at the Salon of 1842, when he contributed a 'St. Louis in the Desert, near Darnietta,' which was bought by the Government, and is now in the Bordeaux Museum. He exhibited constantly in Paris and Belgium, and became known as a powerful painter of ambitious themes, excelling especially in his rendering of horses. Casey died in Paris, December 27, 1885.

CATHELINAUX, CHRISTOPHE, a French painter of dogs and other animals, born at Warcq (Meuse) in 1819, was a pupil of Drolling, and entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1839. He exhibited at the Salon from 1857 onwards. He died in 1883.

CLEMENT, FÉLIX AUGUSTE, was born at Douzère, Drôme, in 1826. He was a pupil of Drolling and Picot, and obtained the first prix de Rome in 1856. He settled in Cairo, and contributed pictures of Oriental subjects to the Salon. Later in life he painted French landscapes and some portraits. He died in 1888.

CLINT, ALFRED, painter, born in 1807, was the son and pupil of George Clint, A.R.A. He first appeared at the Academy in 1829, with 'A Study from Nature,' and several of his later works were exhibited with that body. He contributed more frequently, however, to the shows of the British Artists, of which society he became a member in 1843, secretary in 1858, and president in 1870. He painted a few portraits early in his career, but his popularity rested chiefly on his landscapes and coast studies. In 1849 he published a 'Guide to Oil Painting.' He died in 1883.

COLAS, ALPHONSE, a French historical and portrait painter, was born at Lille in 1818, and studied under Souchon at the school of his native town. He first attracted attention by a large canvas at the Salon of 1849, representing the 'Raising of the Cross.' He was much employed as a decorative painter in French churches, a good specimen of his work in this genre being his paintings in grisaille in the cupola of the Eglise de Notre Dame at Roubaix. He held the post of director of the art school of Lille, where he died in 1897. His portrait of Souchon is in the Lille Museum.

COLE, GEORGE, painter, was born in 1808. He was entirely self-taught, and began life at Portsmouth as a painter of portraits and animals. He finally, however, devoted himself to landscape, and settled in London. He first exhibited in 1840, and was afterwards a pretty constant contributor to the Old British Institution, and, later, to the Suffolk Street Exhibitions. He died September 7, 1883.

COLLIER. See above, MONKSWELL.

COLLIER, MARIAN, an English amateur painter, was the daughter of Professor Huxley. In 1879 she married Mr. John Collier. She painted figure pictures, and occasionally exhibited at the Academy and the Grosvenor Gallery. She died November 18, 1887.

CORBAUX, FANNY, water-colour painter, was born in 1812. In 1827, after being self-taught, she gained the silver medal of the Society of Arts, and in 1830 the gold medal. She was the same year elected an honorary member of the Society of British Artists, and in 1839 a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours. She was further known as a student of and writer on Oriental subjects and biblical exegesis, and was granted a Civil List pension. She died at Brighton, February 1, 1883.

COT, PIERRE AUGUSTE, painter, born at Bédarieux (Hérault) February 17, 1837, was a pupil of Duret and of Léon Cogniet. He painted mythological subjects, and also enjoyed a considerable reputation for his portraits. He died in July, 1883.

COUSINS, HENRY, the brother of Samuel Cousins, was also an engraver, and practised in London. He engraved many portraits in mezzotint, and some other plates; among them 'Refreshment,' after Landseer; 'Prayer,' after Sant; 'The Infant Shakespeare,' after Romney; and 'Home of the Homeless,' after T. Faed. He died at Dorking in 1864.

COUSINS, SAMUEL, mezzotint engraver, was born at Exeter, May 9, 1801, and received his early education in his native city. He is said to have astonished his friends while still a child by the truth and spirit of the portraits he was constantly drawing in pencil. At the age of eleven he gained a silver palette from the Society of Arts for a pencil copy of James Heath's plate of the 'Good Shepherd,' after Murillo, and in the following year won the Society's silver medal. His vocation was determined by a chance meeting with the late Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, who saw the boy sketching outside a printseller's window in Exeter. Recognizing the precocious talent of the copyist, he helped him to London, where he was apprenticed to S. W. Reynolds. After working as an apprentice for seven years, Cousins remained with Reynolds four years as assistant, and a few plates of this date bear the joint signature of master and pupil. Cousins' first independent work was a commission from Sir T. Dyke Acland for a plate after Lawrence's group of Lady Acland and her children. Lawrence was so pleased with the result that he wished to engage the young engraver to work exclusively for him. This, however, Cousins would not agree to. He, however, undertook a second plate after Lawrence, the famous 'Master Lambton,' which at once secured his reputation. In 1835 he was elected associate engraver of the Royal Academy, and in 1855 a Royal Academician. About 1872, being then over seventy years old, Cousins determined to retire from his profession. After a short term of idleness, however, he again took up the graver, and to this late period of his life belong such masterpieces as the 'Age of Innocence,' 'Penelope Boothby,' 'Simplicity,' and other plates after Sir Joshua, 'Miss Rich,' after Hogarth, and 'Cherry Ripe,' after Millais. During his long career he had amassed a fortune much in excess of his modest needs, and about ten years before his death he made a generous donation of £15,000 to the Royal Academy, to be used as a fund for pensioning destitute artists. In 1880 he retired from the Academy. He died in London, May 7, 1887. Some years before he had presented to the British Museum a (then) complete set of impressions from his plates, containing some very rare states. His œuvre consists in all of about two hundred plates, of which the following are famous examples:

Prince Metternich; after Lawrence. 1827.

Pius VII.; after the same.

Duke of Wellington; after the same. 1828.

Sir Astley Cooper; after the same.

Lady Grey and Children; after the same.

Miss Peel; after the same.

Lady Grosvenor; after the same.

William Wilberforce; after the same.

Bolton Abbey; after Landseer.

The Abercorn Family; after the same.

The Queen; after the same.

Return from Hawking; after the same.

The Queen receiving the Sacrament; after the same.

Christ weeping over Jerusalem; after Sir C. Eastlake.

Shakespeare, after the Chandos portrait.

The Order of Release; after Millais.

The Minuet; after the same.

Yes or No? after the same.

Yes! after the same.

No! after the same.

Pomona; after the same.

Marie Antoinette in the Temple; after E. M. Ward.

Miss Bowles; after Reynolds. 1874.

Lady C. Montagu; after the same.

Sylvia; after the same.

Hon. Anne Bingham; after the same.

Lavinia; after the same.

Princess Sophia of Gloucester; after the same.

Duchess of Rutland; after the same.

Countess Spencer; after the same.

COX, DAVID, the younger, the only child of David Cox the elder, was born at Dulwich in 1808. He was a pupil and imitator of his father. Though a good master, and socially a well-known figure, he never attained to much reputation as an artist. In 1849 he was elected an Associate Exhibitor of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours. He died December 4, 1885.

CRAWFORD, EDMUND THORNTON, a Scottish landscape painter, was born at Cowden, near Dalkeith, in 1806. His father was a land surveyor, and Crawford was apprenticed when a boy to a house-painter in Edinburgh. Shortly afterwards, however, his indentures were cancelled, and he entered the Trustees' Academy, then under Andrew Wilson. In 1833 he paid the first of several visits to Holland. In 1839 he was elected an associate, and in 1848 a full member of the Scottish Academy. He died at Lasswade on September 29, 1885. His art was closely akin to that of Thomson of Duddingston. Works:

Edinburgh. S. Nat. Gall. Group of Trees.
 " " Coast scene, North Berwick.
 " " Close hauled, crossing the Bar.

CZERNY, LUDOVIC, an Austrian painter, and professor of the Academy, died at Vienna in January, 1889, aged sixty-nine.

DANBY, THOMAS, marine painter, was the son of Francis Danby, A.R.A., and was born in Ireland, but spent his early youth chiefly at Bristol, where his father practised and taught drawing. He first exhibited in London in 1841, when he sent a small oil picture, 'The Wreck,' to the British Institution, and in 1843 he appeared at the Royal Academy with an illustration of one of Wordsworth's poems. He was elected an associate of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1867, and became a full member in 1870. He died March 25, 1886.

DANIELS, WILLIAM, painter, born about 1812, was the son of a brickmaker at Liverpool, and first showed his artistic talent by modelling figures in clay. He studied drawing at the Liverpool Institution, and was then apprenticed to an engraver on wood, painting portraits and effects of chiaroscuro in his leisure. At the close of his apprenticeship he set up as a painter in his native town, and might have risen to eminence in his art but for his fondness for drink and for jovial company. He died in Liverpool, October 13th, 1880. There are five portraits by him in the South Kensington Museum, among them those of George Stephenson, and Charles Kean as Hamlet. See 'Magazine of Art,' June, 1882.

DARBY, MATTHEW, engraver and caricaturist, practised in London and at Bath in the second half of the 18th century. He kept a shop in the Strand for the sale of artists' materials, and advertised himself as a teacher of engraving. Anthony Pasquin was one of his pupils. He also published comic drawings, among them some of H. W. Bunbury's early works, and a series of 'Caricatures' by various hands. He himself is said to have produced about three hundred caricatures.

DAUBIGNY, KARL PIERRE, the son of the famous landscape painter, was a pupil and imitator of his father, and painted the same class of subjects. Born in Paris in 1846, he gained medals in 1868 and 1874, and died in May, 1886.

DE BRAEKELEER, FERDINANDUS, historical painter, was born at Antwerp in 1792. He was the son of Jean Ferdinand Joseph de Braekeleer and of Jeanne Bernardine Antoinette Seghers. He studied at the Antwerp Academy, and under M. J. van Bree. In 1819 he won the grand prize of the Academy, with the pension for Rome. He spent three years in Italy, painting historical pictures ('Healing of Tobias,' 'Esau and Isaac') in the manner of David. After his return to Antwerp he perfected a manner of his own, in which he painted genre subjects, scenes from Belgian history, &c. He died in 1883, at Antwerp. Among his pupils were Leys, Jacobs, De Block, and others. Pictures by him are in the Galleries of Antwerp, Berlin, and Munich.

DE BRAEKELEER, FERDINANDUS, son of the last named, was born at Antwerp in 1829, and had shown some promise as a genre painter, when he died at the age of twenty-eight, in 1857. Another brother, HENRI, born in 1840 at Antwerp, was a painter of genre, and died in 1888.

DE KEYSER, NICAISE, a Flemish painter, was born at Santvliet, near Antwerp, in 1813. He was a pupil of J. Jacobs and of Van Brée, and distinguished himself by his battle-pieces, &c., in the manner of Wappers and the reactionaries of 1830.

In 1855 he became director of the Academy of Antwerp. He died in 1887.

DEL LUPINO. See above, LUINI.

DEMARNE, JEAN LOUIS DE MARNETTE, painter and etcher, born in Brussels in 1754, was the son of a Belgian officer, and of his wife, the Baroness Anschütz. When only twelve years old, he was sent to Paris, and studied in the atelier of Gabriel Briard. He became a successful painter of landscapes with figures or cattle, in the manner of Berchem and Karel Dujardin. He also etched thirty-eight plates of similar subjects. He practised in Paris, making occasional journeys in Switzerland. In 1783 he became a member of the Académie des Beaux Arts. He was long employed as painter to the Sèvres porcelain factory. He died at Batignolles in 1829. In the Hermitage at Petersburg there are five of his pictures, and several were in the San Donato Collection at Florence.

DE MOMPER. See above, MOMPER.

DEROCHE, VICTOR, a French landscape painter of some note, was born at Lyons in 1824 (?). He was a frequent exhibitor at the Salon of pictures illustrating the beauties of the Seine, and generally somewhat melancholy in sentiment. He lived for many years at Montigny, near Vernon-sur-Seine, and died in 1886.

DESSURNE, MARK, painter, born in 1825, was a student and frequent exhibitor at the Royal Academy. He also contributed to the Suffolk Street and British Institution galleries between 1840 and 1870, and held an art mastership in connection with the Glasgow school of design for many years. He died May 4, 1885.

DICEY, FRANK, an English painter of portraits, and of genre subjects of a somewhat ambitious class, exhibited at the Academy and with the British Artists between 1865 and 1880. A portrait by him of the Prince of Wales was engraved by Scott. Dacey died in May, 1888.

DONALD, JOHN MILNE, a Scottish landscape painter, was born at Nairn in 1819. His parents settled at Glasgow shortly after his birth, and he was educated and received his first art teaching in that city. In 1840 he visited Paris, and then London, where he remained until 1844. In London he made the acquaintance of Samuel Rogers, who encouraged him and gave him commissions for two pictures. In 1844 he established himself at Glasgow, where he worked till his death in 1866. His pictures failed to attract much notice in his lifetime, and sold for small prices. Like many of his contemporaries, he was glad occasionally to paint panels for ships built on the Clyde. Of late years many of these have been transferred to canvas, and sold for considerable sums. His landscapes usually represent distant mountains with foregrounds of pasture land and flocks of sheep. They are chiefly to be found in small private collections in Glasgow and its neighbourhood.

DOO, GEORGE THOMAS, an English engraver, was born in January, 1800. He studied under Charles Heath, and published his first plate, a portrait of the Duke of York, after Lawrence, in 1824. In 1825 he visited Paris, and spent some time in the ateliers of the French engravers. On his return to London he opened a school in the Savoy, for study both from the life and from the antique. He also lectured upon painting. In 1836 he was appointed engraver in ordinary to William IV., and in 1842 to Queen Victoria. In 1856 he was elected an associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1857 a full member. In 1861 Doo became president of the Artists' Annuity Fund, and in 1863 he was a witness before the Royal Academy Commission at Westminster. He died at Sutton, Surrey, November 13, 1886. Among his best plates are:

The Infant Christ; after Raphael.
 'Ecce Homo'; after Correggio.
 The Combat; after Eddy.
 John Knox preaching; after Wilkie.
 Pilgrims in sight of Rome; after Eastlake.
 The Raising of Lazarus; after Seb. del Piombo.
 St. Augustine and St. Monica; after Ary Scheffer.
 Yorick and the Grisettes; after Newton.
 'Gevartius' (Cornelius van der Geest); after Vandyck.
 The Calmady Children; after Lawrence.
 Six plates for the 'Elgin Marbles,' published by the trustees of the British Museum.
 Several plates in Jones's 'National Gallery.'

DOVE, THOMAS, marine painter, began life as a house-painter, but later entered the studio of George Chambers, with whom he worked for some time. His pictures were chiefly scenes from Liverpool or its neighbourhood, and he became well known in the north of England. Reduced to poverty in his old age, he died in the Whithy Workhouse, in January, 1887.

DOYLE, RICHARD, draughtsman and caricaturist, was born in London, September, 1824. He was the second son of John Doyle (H. B.), who taught him from early childhood, and to such purpose that at the age of sixteen the boy was already an accomplished draughtsman. A remarkable specimen of his early powers is preserved in the British Museum. It is a MS. journal, illustrated with a large number of humorous and fanciful sketches. (This work was published in facsimile by Smith, Elder and Co., in 1885.) Other productions of about the same date were, 'The Eglinton Tournament,' and 'A Grand Historical, Allegorical, and Classical Procession.' In 1843, two years after the establishment of 'Punch,' Doyle, then nineteen years old, was permanently engaged on the staff. He soon attracted attention by his cartoons of leading statesmen, and later by a series of humorous designs called 'Manners and Customs of ye Englyshe, drawn from ye Quick by Richard Doyle.' Akin to these were the 'Bird's-eye Views of Society,' contributed to the 'Cornhill Magazine.' One of his happiest contributions to 'Punch' was the now familiar cover. Besides work of this importance, Doyle further contributed to 'Punch' innumerable small drawings, initials, and culs de lampe. His connection with the periodical came to an end in 1850, when conscientious scruples caused him to resign his post. A sincere Roman Catholic, he felt it unseemly to associate himself with attacks directed against Papal aggression. Henceforward he worked as an illustrator of books, and as a painter in water-colours. His original drawings were chiefly of Welsh and Devon scenery, into which he loved to introduce gracefully fantastic figures of fairies, gnomes, and pixies. Among such the most important examples are:

The Triumphant Entry, a Fairy Pageant. (Nat. Gal. Ireland.)
 The Witch's Home. (Two drawings.)
 The Manners and Customs of Monkeys. (Both in the South Kensington Museum.)

Doyle was seized with apoplexy at the Athenæum Club, December 10, 1883, and died on the next day. Among the books illustrated by him are:

Thackeray's 'Rebecca and Rowena.' 1850.
 Ruskin's 'King of the Golden River.' 1851.
 'The Foreign Tour of Brown, Jones, and Robinson.' 1854. (Began in 'Punch.')
 Thackeray's 'Newcomes.' 1853-5.
 'In Fairy Land.' Elfin scenes, with verses by Mr. William Allingham. 1870.
 Dickens' 'Battle of Life.'
 Leigh Hunt's 'Jar of Honey from Mount Hybla.'

A number of his miscellaneous sketches are preserved in the British Museum, and in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge.

DREUX, ALFRED DE, was born in Paris in 1808. He was a pupil of Léon Cogniet, and became a fashionable painter of race-horses and of equestrian portraits. Many of his pictures have been engraved. Among the best known are: 'The Postilion' (1836); 'The Imperial Guard' (1855); 'Equestrian Portrait of the Duc de Nemours' (1844), and several large hunting-pieces. He died in 1860.

DUVAL, AMAURY, painter, was born at Montrouge, Paris, in 1808. In 1826 he entered the atelier of Ingres, and afterwards travelled in Greece, where he made numerous studies and sketches. In 1834 he exhibited at the Salon his 'Greek Shepherd discovering a Bas-relief,' and soon became favourably known as an able exponent of his master's traditions. His portrait of 'Rachel as the Tragic Muse,' contributed to the Exhibition of 1855, attracted considerable attention. He painted various pictures for Parisian churches, and executed some decorations in St. Germain l'Auxerrois. He died in December, 1885.

DUVAUX, JULES ANTOINE, painter and etcher, born at Bordeaux in 1818, was a pupil of Charlet, and a painter of battles and military subjects generally. Several of his pictures are in the Versailles Museum. He also worked much as an illustrative draughtsman and etcher for various publications. He died in 1884.

DYCKMANS, JOSEF LAURENS, a Flemish painter, was born at Lierre in 1811. He was a pupil of Tielemans and Wappers. He painted genre pictures, portraits in small, &c., in a style of the minutest finish. He was Professor in the Antwerp Academy, and died in 1888. Pictures:

The Blind Beggar. (National Gallery.)
 Portrait Group. (South Kensington Museum.)

EBERT, KARL, landscape painter, was born at Stuttgart in 1821, and studied there under Steinkopf, as well as at Munich. He died in 1885. In the Stuttgart Gallery there are two pictures by him.

FAHEY, JAMES, painter, was born at Paddington, April 16, 1804. He was intended for an engraver, and studied for a time under Swaine, who was his uncle. He afterwards worked in Munich and Paris, where he was employed as a surgical draughtsman. He exhibited a portrait at the Academy in 1825, but shortly afterwards devoted himself to landscape in water-colours. In 1834 he joined the short-lived Associated Painters in Water-Colours, and in the following year he, with other leading members of that body, formed the 'New Society,' now the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours. He was for more than forty years secretary to the society. In 1856 he was appointed drawing-master at Merchant Taylors' School, whence, after twenty-seven years, he retired on a pension. He died December 19, 1885.

FAURE, LÉON, a French painter, and pupil of Eugène Delacroix, was a native of Toulouse. His first contribution to the Salon was a picture called 'L'Offrande,' exhibited in 1857. He was for many years Professor at the Art School of his native town, where he died in 1887.

FAVRETTO, GIACOMO, painter, was born at Venice in 1849. He was one of the ablest of the little knot of Venetian painters whose practice is founded more or less on the water-colours of Ludwig Passini. His pictures are generally market-scenes, and are notable for the skill with which positive greens are employed. Towards the end of his life his works became popular in London. The best perhaps is 'A Clothes Market in Venice.' He died at Venice in 1887.

FEYEN-PERRIN, FRANÇOIS NICOLAS AUGUSTIN, painter, was born in 1829 at Bey-sur-Seille (Meurthe et Moselle). As a child he displayed a precocious artistic gift, and after a short period of study at Nancy, he entered the École des Beaux Arts in Paris, and became the pupil of Cogniet and of Yvon. His first works were scenes for the Théâtre Italien; he then devoted himself to history, but his narrow means forced him to turn his attention to portraiture and studies of peasant life, in which he achieved great excellence. His best works are perhaps his 'Return from Oyster Fishing' (in the Luxembourg), 'La Vanneuse' (painted 1867), 'Les Cancaïses,' 'The Road to the Market,' a portrait of M. Alphonse Daudet, and a 'Death of Orpheus.' He was also an etcher of some ability. He died in 1888.

FISK, WILLIAM HENRY, painter, was the son and pupil of William Fisk, and was born about 1825. He studied at the Royal Academy schools, and was appointed anatomical draughtsman to the Royal College of Surgeons. He continued at the same time to practise painting, and many of his pictures were exhibited at the Academy, the British Institution, the Suffolk Street Gallery, and in Paris. He also contributed numerous essays and articles on art subjects to current literature, and lectured both in London and the provinces. His artistic powers were very considerable, but he was best known as a careful and able teacher, in which capacity he worked for forty years at University College School, London. He died at Hampstead, November 13, 1884.

FÖRSTER, ERNST JOACHIM, painter and writer upon art, was born in 1800, at Munchergosserstädt, on the Saale. After a stay at the Universities of Jena and Berlin he took up art as his career, and studied under Schadow at Berlin, and under Cornelius at Munich. In 1824-5 he was working under Hermann on the frescoes in the Aula at Bonn, and was afterwards employed on those in the arcades of the Munich Hofgarten. He married a daughter of Jean Paul Richter, and this connection led him again in the direction of literature. After the death of his father-in-law he published several biographical notices of him, and edited his literary remains. He was employed in 1832 by the then Crown Prince Max, of Bavaria, to visit Italy, and make a series of drawings from the antique, and his archæological researches in connection with this work were afterwards embodied in his 'Material for a new History of Art' (1835). He also carried out various decorative works in the new palace at Munich. Of his numerous literary productions in connection with art the most important are: 'A History of German Art' (1851-60); 'Monuments of German Architecture, Sculpture and Painting' (1853-69); 'Life of Raphael' (1867-69); 'History of Italian Art' (1869-75). He published the continuation of Schorn's German version of Vasari, and was joint editor with Kugler of the 'Kunstblatt' from 1842-49. He died in 1885.

FRANÇOIS, ALPHONSE, one of the most famous of modern French engravers, was born in Paris in 1811. Left an orphan in his childhood, he was early thrown on his own resources, and began life as a goldsmith's engraver. His skill and industry soon insured him a modest livelihood in Paris, but, oppressed by the mechanical drudgery of his craft, he turned his thoughts to music, and was even engaged for a time in the orchestra of the Conservatoire concerts. He next tried the stage, and was fond, in after life, of describing a memorable occasion on which he played with Rachel. Through his elder brother, Jules, he was introduced at the mature age of twenty-six to Henriquel-Dupont, the engraver. Henriquel received him kindly, and agreed to let him work in his atelier. Though absolutely ignorant even of the elements of drawing, François set to work, confident of success. It happened during the first year of his apprenticeship that he saw a portrait of Titian at the house of the well-known collector, M. Chaix d'Est-Ange, and asked leave to make a drawing of it. To the amazement of Henriquel, he then announced his intention of engraving it. The result was extraordinarily successful for a first effort. With each fresh undertaking his powers developed. His plates began to attract attention at the Salon, where he first exhibited in 1842, and Paul Delaroche persuaded Messrs. Goupil to intrust one of his own pictures to the débutant, the 'Napoleon crossing the Alps.' This was followed by numerous commissions from the same firm, and by plates after Fra Angelico's 'Coronation of the Virgin,' and Cabanel's 'Birth of Venus,' for the Chalcographie du Louvre. Henceforth commissions poured in on him, and the story of his later years is one of uneventful prosperity, up to the time of his loss of sight. Debarred by this calamity from the work in which he delighted, his health and spirits alike gave way, and he died in Paris, July 6, 1888. Among his later undertakings was a commission from the directors of the Doré Gallery, in London, to reproduce the pictures in their exhibition. This long and laborious work was carried out with the help of pupils and assistants, the plates being finally worked over by François himself. Of his finer plates after other masters we may also name:

The Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine; after Memlinc.

The Virgin on the Steps; after Titian.

Marie Antoinette leaving the Revolutionary Tribunal; after Delaroche.

The Youth of Pico de la Mirandola; after the same.

Psyche; after Jules Lefebvre.

FREEMAN, JAMES EDWARD, painter, was a native of Nova Scotia, but was educated in the National Academy in New York. He settled in Rome, where he painted genre pictures, mostly of Italian subjects. He is known also by his publication, 'A Portfolio of Italian Sketches.' He died in 1884.

FRÈRE, CHARLES THÉODORE, (BEX,) painter, was born in Paris in 1815. He was a pupil of Roqueplan and Léon Cogniet, and made his début at the Salon in 1834 with landscapes from Northern France. Two years later he went to Algiers, and afterwards spent some time in Africa, whence he drew his subjects for the rest of his life. He died in Paris, March 24, 1888.

FRÈRE, PIERRE EDOUARD, a French genre painter, was born in Paris, January 10, 1819. He studied under Delaroche, and made his début at the Salon of 1843. His early pictures were chiefly interiors of cottages, workshops, &c., with cobblers, coopers, cooks, and other industrious members of the lower classes at work. They were warm and transparent in colour, and often forcible in chiaroscuro. In later years he almost entirely confined himself to painting incidents of child life, and became cold in colour and feeble in his light and shade. He produced a great number of drawings in which coloured figures are set against monochrome backgrounds, generally sketched in black chalk. His works are well known in England, where he frequently exhibited, first at the French Gallery in 1854. His first picture in the Royal Academy was one of his most characteristic works, the 'Girls leaving School.' Frère lived at Écouen, and died there, May 23, 1886.

GAILLARD, CLAUDE FERDINAND, engraver and painter, was born in Paris, January 7, 1834. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1850, and worked under Léon Cogniet. He won the Prix de Rome as an engraver in 1856, and from 1863 onwards was a constant contributor to the Salon, of portraits, classical and sacred subjects, both painted and engraved. He executed several important commissions for the Chalcographie du Louvre, among them the reproduction of Leonardo's 'Monna Lisa' and 'Last Supper,' and engraved a number of plates for the 'Gazette des Beaux Arts.' His plates were principally after the old masters, but he also engraved occasionally from his own pictures, and those of other modern painters. His style, both with paint-brush and burin, was a marvel of accurate minuteness. Several of his works are in the Luxembourg. He died in January, 1887.

GALLAIT, LOUIS, painter, was born at Tournay in 1810, and was educated in his native town. He showed his artistic talent at a very early age, and gained a prize from the Ghent Academy while still a boy. The municipal authorities of Tournay bought one of his early performances, a 'Christ restoring sight to the Blind Man,' and presented it to the cathedral. The city further granted him a sum of money in 1835, which enabled him to study in Paris, under Hennequin. Henceforth his career was one of assured success. His ambitious and melodramatic pictures were received with great favour by the public, though condemned by artists and connoisseurs. His art had much in common with that of his contemporary, Scheffer, with whom he was often compared, though Gallait was a very much more accomplished craftsman than the Franco-Dutch painter. He gained a long list of honours, prizes, and distinctions both at home and abroad, was a member of the Institute of France, and an honorary foreign Royal Academician. Several of his pictures were at the International Exhibition of 1862. He died November 20, 1887.

GAUCHEREL, LÉON, engraver, etcher, and painter in water-colours, was born in Paris in 1816. He was a pupil of Viollet le Duc, with whom he travelled in Italy and Sicily. He was a constant exhibitor at the Salon, where he gained numerous official honours from 1853 onwards. He etched many plates for the 'Gazette des Beaux Arts,' for 'L'Art,' the 'Portfolio,' and other publications. He died in Paris in 1885.

GEYER, ALEXIUS, landscape painter, was born at Berlin in 1826, and studied in the academies of Berlin, Munich, and Dresden. He worked for some years in Rome and Paris, and was patronized by King Otho of Greece. He painted a number of large water-colours for the Archæological Museum at Berlin, and also worked for King Frederick William IV. of Prussia. He died in 1883.

GILL, ANDRÉ, a French painter and political caricaturist, was born in October, 1840. He studied under Leloir, and at the Académie des Beaux Arts. He exhibited a few portraits, &c. at the Salon, but was best known by his caricatures of notabilities under the second empire. He became insane about five years before his death, which took place in 1885.

GILLIES, Miss MARGARET, the daughter of a Scotch merchant settled in London, and niece of Lord Gillies the judge, was born in Throgmorton Street in 1803. Her father having lost his fortune, she lived as a girl under the care of her uncle in Edinburgh, where she enjoyed the society of some of the most notable men of the day, among them Scott, Erskine, and Jeffrey. Determined, however, to earn an honourable livelihood for herself, she resolved to become an artist, and went to Paris to study, where she made the acquaintance of the Scheffers, and worked more or less under their direction. She made her début as a painter of miniatures, and afterwards devoted herself to water-colour drawings of domestic or romantic subjects. In 1852 she was elected an associate of the Water-colour Society, of which she was the first lady member. With that body she was a constant exhibitor, contributing down to the year before her death, which took place at her house at Hampstead in the spring of 1888.

GODDARD, BOUVERIE, an English animal painter, was born in Wiltshire in 1834. He came to London in 1849, and studied for two years in the Zoological Gardens. In 1851 he settled in Salisbury, but six years later returned to London. He was a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy. He died at Brook Green in 1888. His 'Struggle for Existence' is in the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool.

GOSLING, WILLIAM, landscape and figure painter, was born in 1824. He took to painting somewhat late in life, but in 1852 he was elected a member of the Society of British Artists; he exhibited frequently with that body, and with the Royal Academy. He died at Wargrave, Henley-on-Thames, December 6, 1883.

GOUPIL, JULES ADOLPHE, born in Paris in 1839, was a pupil of Henri and Ary Scheffer, and a popular painter of portraits and genre. He first exhibited at the Salon in 1878. He died in Paris of consumption, April 28, 1883.

HADAMARD, AUGUSTE, a French painter of portraits and genre, was born at Metz in 1823, and was a pupil of Paul Delaroche. He was a frequent exhibitor at the Salon between 1846 and 1880. He died in 1886.

HAGHE, LOUIS, water-colour painter and lithographer, was born at Tournay in 1806. He came to England while still a young man, was elected one of the foundation members of the New Society (afterwards Institute) of Painters in Water-Colours, and made his début in London at their exhibition in 1835. Of this body he continued an influential member for many years; he acted as vice-president under Mr. Henry Warren, and on the death of the latter in 1873 was elected President. His subjects were chiefly the picturesque streets and buildings of Northern France and of the Low Countries, which he treated both in water-colour and lithography. He was a partner in the well-known lithographic establishment of Day & Haghe. He exhibited occasionally in Paris. Among his best-known publications was 'A Portfolio of Sketches in Belgium, Germany, &c.' in three vols. London, 1840-50. In 1883 he resigned his Presidentship of the Institute, and died at Stockwell, March 9, 1885.

HAMMAN, EDOARD JEAN CONRAD, a Belgian painter, was born at Ostend in 1819. He was a pupil of Nicaise de Keyser, and in 1846 settled in Paris. He was much employed by the French Government, and gained the orthodox honours. He died in Paris, on March 30, 1888. Pictures:

Dante at Ravenna. (Brussels Museum.)
Entry of Albert and Isabella into Ostend. (Do.)
Vesalius.
Infancy of Charles V.; a reading of Erasmus. (Luxembourg.)

HÉDOUIN, EDMOND, painter and engraver, was born at Boulogne in July, 1820, and became a pupil of Paul Delaroche and of Célestin Nanteuil. He first attracted attention as a painter of rustic scenes and of Algerian subjects. But it is as an engraver that he takes an important place among modern artists. For the Print Department of the Louvre he reproduced Boucher's 'Diana at the Bath,' and Carl van Loo's 'Halt of Huntsmen.' He was largely employed by French publishers as an illustrator of éditions de luxe. Among his most successful undertakings were the engravings for 'Manon Lescaut,' for the French translation of 'The Sentimental Journey,' for Rousseau's 'Confessions,' and for the works of Molière. This last received the medaille d'honneur at the Salon of 1888. He died on the 13th of January, 1889.

HEINLEIN, HEINRICH, landscape painter, was born at Nassau-Weilburg in 1803. His mother, a pastel painter of some repute, gave him his early instruction in art. He also worked under Gärtner at Munich, and later in the Mannheim Academy. He travelled much in Italy and Switzerland, and his subjects were chiefly mountain scenery. Many of his pictures are in German galleries. He died in 1885.

HENDSCHEL, ALBERT, painter, draughtsman, and etcher, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, June 9, 1834, and studied at the Stadel Institute under Steinle, Passavant, and Jakob Becker. In 1869-70 he visited Italy. His pictures were chiefly poetical and humorous illustrations of German legends and folk-lore, but he occasionally painted genre. His 'Sketch-Book' was published in 1872-74. He etched a few plates. He died in 1883.

HERDMAN, ROBERT, a Scottish painter of portraits and historical subjects, was born at Rattray, Perthshire, in 1830, and was educated at the Trustees' Academy, Edinburgh. The son of a minister, he was himself intended for the church, but showed such a disposition for art, that he was allowed to abandon the idea and become the pupil of R. S. Lauder. From 1861 onwards he was a frequent contributor to the Royal Academy Exhibitions, where, however, his works failed to attract much attention. In the north he had a considerable reputation, and painted many portraits of Edinburgh notabilities. He became an associate of the Scottish Academy in 1861, and a full member in 1863, and took an active part in the management of that body. He died very suddenly of heart disease, in his studio at Edinburgh, December 31, 1887. There are two pictures by him in the Scottish National Gallery.

HILLEMACHER, ERNEST, a French historical and genre painter, was born about 1818. He was a pupil of Léon Cogniet, and a frequent exhibitor at the Salon, where he won the usual honours. He died in 1887. Works:

Molière and his Housekeeper.
Philip IV. and Velazquez.
Mortimer and Richard Plantagenet.
A Game of Whist.

HOLL, FRANK, was born at St. James's Terrace, Kentish Town, London, on the 4th July, 1845. He was the son of the eminent engraver, Francis Holl, A.R.A. He was educated at Heath Mount School, Hampstead, and at University College School, Gower Street. At the age of fifteen he became a probationer in the school of the Royal Academy, where he was among the most successful students of his year. In 1868 he won the travelling scholarship with his picture of 'The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away,' but resigned it twelve months later, as he found he was not profiting by the foreign travel it rendered obligatory. Between 1869 and 1878 he exhibited many pictures at the Academy, dealing mostly with the more sombre incidents in domestic life. By these he won reputation, but scarcely popularity. In 1878 he exhibited 'Newgate,' his most ambitious subject picture, and a portrait. The latter was a success, and led to the production of a half-length portrait of Mr. Samuel Cousins, the famous engraver. This was at the Academy in 1879, and its merits were so great that from the moment it was seen until the author's death, he was never without more commissions for portraits than he could carry out. A list of the more remarkable among them is given below. Holl's constitution, which had been weakly from his birth, gave way under the strain imposed upon him by his popularity, and during his latter years he developed a dangerous weakness of the heart. In 1888, after the pictures had been sent in for the annual exhibition, he paid a flying visit to Madrid. The fatigue thus caused, added to the strain of finishing his portraits for the Academy, brought on an attack which proved fatal on the morning of the last day in July. Holl was elected an A.R.A. in 1878, and a full Academician in 1884. The following list is confined to his more notable works:

The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. 1868. (F. C. Pawle, Esq.)
No Tidings from the Sea. 1871. (The Queen.)
'I am the Resurrection and the Life.' 1872. (John Akroyd, Esq.)

HUBERTI, GASPAR, the engraver of an excellent plate in the style of Hollar, after a portrait of General Thomas Preston, now at Gormanston Castle, County Meath. Of Huberti's life no particulars have been yet discovered. The only known impression from his plate is in the library of Trinity College, Dublin.

INCHBOLD, JOHN WILLIAM, painter and etcher, born at Leeds, April 29, 1830, was the son of Mr. Thomas Inchbold, editor and proprietor of the 'Leeds Intelligencer.' He was educated in his native town, and showing a strong taste for drawing, was sent to London to be trained as a draughtsman in Messrs. Day and Haghe's lithographic works. About 1847 he began the study of water-colours under Mr. Louis Haghe. His first exhibited works were 'Sheep's Tor, Dartmoor,' and 'The Dewar Stone, Dartmoor,' which he sent to the Suffolk Street Gallery in 1849. He early became an adherent of Pre-Raphaelism, his works being distinguished by a laborious accuracy and minuteness. In 1851 he exhibited two water-colours at the Academy, and in 1855 his contribution, 'The Moorland,' was the subject of a warm panegyric from Mr. Ruskin in his notes on that year's Academy. As his powers developed, the painter gradually acquired a larger and more sympathetic manner, retaining the sentiment which distinguished his early works, and showing much power in the treatment of mountain distances and effects of atmosphere. He etched a considerable number of plates, though few were published, and was favourably known in the literary world as the author of a volume of poems, 'Annus Amoris,' published in 1877. He died suddenly of heart disease, at his sister's house at Headingly, near Leeds, January 23, 1888.

ISABEY, EUGÈNE LOUIS GABRIEL, painter, son and pupil of the famous miniaturist, was born in Paris in 1804. He was one of the most original of the 'men of '30.' In 1830 he accompanied the French expedition to Algiers as marine draughtsman. He practised later in Paris, and distinguished himself by his bold, effective, though sometimes false treatment of marines and landscapes. He gained the usual honours from the French Government, and died in April, 1886. Among his best pictures we may name:

- Battle off the Texel. 1839. (Versailles Museum)
 Embarkation of Napoleon's Corpse.
 View of Boulogne. (Toulouse Museum)
 Embarkation of De Witt and De Ruyter. (Luxembourg)
 Wreck of the 'Emily.'

JONGKIND, JOHANNES BARTHOLO, Dutch painter, is still alive.

JUSTUS OF PADUA. See above, MENABUOL.

KALTENMOSER, MAX, a German painter of domestic genre, was born at Munich in 1842, and was the son of Caspar Kalteumoser. In 1858 he entered the Munich Academy, where he studied under Foltz and Arthur von Ramberg. He died in 1887.

KEARSE, Mrs. See above, LAWRENCE, MARY.

KEELING, W. K., an English painter, born about 1808, practised in Manchester, where he took an active part in the foundation of the Manchester Academy of Fine Arts. He died February 21, 1886.

LALANNE, MAXIME, draughtsman and etcher, was born at Bordeaux in 1827. He was a pupil of Gigoux. He was an assiduous exhibitor at the Salon, where he won the orthodox medals and knighthood. His etchings are famous for the scientific clarity of their method, a method which he explained in his 'Treatise on Etching,' published in 1866. Lalanne died in 1886. Among his plates we may name:

- Animals at Pasture; after Berchem. 1864.
 Italian Landscape; after Claude. 1865.
 Souvenir de Bordeaux. 1867.
 Paris from the Trocadéro. 1867.
 Cows crossing a Ford; after Troyon. 1873.
 The Cornfield; after Ruysdael.
 Twilight; after Crome.
 Paris from the Louvre.

LANÇON, AUGUSTE, painter and etcher, was a native of Saint-Claude (Jura), and a pupil of Picot. He painted chiefly battle-pieces and animals, and was well known as an etcher. His best plates were a series of seventeen from the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-1. He died in May, 1885. His heirs presented his 'Lionne en arret' to the Luxembourg, and his 'Tranchée devant Le Bourget' to the city of Paris.

LAPIERRE, LOUIS-ÉMILE, landscape painter, born in Paris in 1817, was a pupil of V. Bertin. He exhibited landscapes, many of them of scenes in the neighbourhoods of Rome and Fontainebleau. He died in 1886.

LAZERGES, JEAN RAYMOND HIPPOLYTE, painter, was born at Narbonne, July 5, 1817. He was a pupil of David d'Angers and of F. Bouchot, and painted religious and historical subjects, exhibiting a large number of works at the Salon between 1840 and 1880. He was much employed in decorative painting for French churches. Examples of his work in this genre are to be seen in the Église Saint-Laurent at Orleans, and in the Église de Notre Dame de Recouvrance; also in the church of S. Eustache in Paris. A 'Death of the Virgin' by him, in the Tuileries Chapel, perished with the palace. He died in Paris, October, 1887.

LEAR, EDWARD, draughtsman and landscape painter, was born in 1813 (?), on the Earl of Derby's estate near Knowsley, in Lancashire, his father being an employé of the Earl. He was the youngest of twenty-one children, and by the help of friends was enabled to become an accurate zoological draughtsman. In 1835 he came to London, and first exhibited at the Suffolk Street Gallery in the following year—'A Study of Dead Birds.' It was his practice to make minute studies of birds in the Zoological Gardens, and many of the drawings in Gould's earlier volumes were by him. He also worked much in hospitals as a pathological draughtsman. The outcome of a visit to Knowsley was 'The Knowsley Menagerie,' now a rare and highly-prized book. He became a constant visitor at Knowsley, and there composed that 'Book of Nonsense,' by which he is best known. He had meanwhile been devoting himself seriously to landscape painting, and when his delicate health began to give way under the severity of English winters, the successor of his first patron started a subscription which enabled him to go to Rome for further study. In 1846 he published his 'Illustrated Excursions in Italy,' which he gratefully dedicated to the then Earl of Derby. A kindred work was 'Sketches of Rome and its Environs.' Journeys in Greece, Albania, Sicily, Malta, Corsica, Palestine, Syria and Egypt, &c., were all industriously recorded in like picturesque fashion with pen and pencil, drawing from Tennyson the 'Lines to E. L. on his Wanderings and Travels in Greece.' Lear never became popular, however, as a landscape painter, and in his later years he can scarcely be said to have risen above the rank of a topographical artist, as which he was accustomed modestly to describe himself. In character he was a man of great amiability and personal charm, and his social gifts attracted to him an immense circle of friends in the various countries he visited. Towards the close of his life he lived in great retirement at San Remo, where he had built himself a house, and where he died, January 29, 1888. Besides the illustrated books above mentioned, Lear further published 'Illustrations of Parrots,' 'More Nonsense Pictures,' and 'Laughable Lyrics.'

LEGRAS, AUGUSTE, was born at Périgueux, June 2, 1817, and was a pupil of Bonfond and of Ary Scheffer. He was a successful painter of portraits, genre, and still-life, and exhibited at the Salon between 1847 and 1882. He died in October, 1887.

LELOIR, ALEXANDRE, painter in water-colours, born in Paris, March 14, 1843, was a pupil of his father, J. B. Auguste Leloir. He made his debut at the Salon of 1863, when he exhibited a 'Massacre of the Innocents,' which was followed by various genre pictures and sacred subjects. He died in Paris in 1884.

LEMUD, AIMÉ DE, a French painter, engraver, and lithographer, was born in 1816, and studied under M. Maréchal of Metz. He learnt engraving in order to illustrate the songs of Béranger, and practised his new art with much success. He was best known, however, by two popular lithographs, 'Maître Wolfram' and 'Hélène Adelsfreit.' He retired to Nancy some years before his death, which took place in April, 1887. His 'Fall of Adam' is in the Museum of Nancy, and his 'Prisonnier' in that of Metz.

LE PAON, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French draughtsman and battle painter of some repute in the 18th century, was born near Paris in 1738. He began life as a dragoon, and served in the Seven Years' War, but was wounded and discharged. He then came to Paris and submitted sketches he had made during the campaign to Boucher and Carle Van Loo, who encouraged him to persevere. He accordingly studied under Casanova, and first exhibited at the Salon in 1779. Several of his battle pieces are in the Versailles Museum, and in the Nantes Museum there is a hunting scene by him. He also engraved a plate, 'La Trompette.' He married in 1785, but the date of his death is not known.

LERIUS, JOSEPH HENRI FRANÇOIS VAN, a Belgian historical and subject painter, was born at Boom, near Antwerp, in 1823. He studied in the Academies of Brussels and Antwerp, and was a pupil of Baron Wappers. His works achieved much popularity in his native country, and he rose into the front rank of contemporary Belgian painters. He became professor of painting in the Antwerp Academy, and died at Mechlin in 1876. His best known picture is 'Lady Godiva.'

LIÈVRE, ÉDOUARD, painter, engraver, and designer, was born at Blamont, Meurthe, in 1829, and was a pupil of Couture. He eventually devoted himself chiefly to archaeology, and published several works on decoration and ornament, also a book on 'The Works of Art in England.' He died in Paris, November 26, 1886.

LOD. FERRARESE. See above, MAZZOLINI.

LOTHOUSE, Mrs. MARY, née FORSTER, painter in water-colours, was born in 1853. She was the daughter of Mr. T. W. B. Forster, a painter who frequently exhibited at the Royal Academy. Her drawings appeared at the Dudley Gallery and at Burlington House, but more often at the exhibitions of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, of which she was elected an Associate in 1884. She died at Halliford, May 2, 1885.

LUCAS, DAVID, mezzotint engraver, was born on August 18, 1802. He is famous as "Constable's engraver," having reproduced in mezzotint a number of that painter's works. The chief enterprise on which the two men collaborated, was a series of plates published with the collective title of 'English Landscape.' Besides these Lucas engraved the following single plates after Constable: 'The Lock,' 'The Cornfield,' 'Salisbury from the Meadows,' 'Dedham Vale,' 'The Young Waltonians,' 'Hadleigh Castle.' In each of these the style of the painter was reproduced with extraordinary force and truth. Lucas also engraved a few portraits, but they are of slight merit. Many years before his death he gave way to intemperate habits, and abandoned his art. He died in 1881. The following plates by him may also be named:

The Grand Canal; after J. D. Harding.

The Corsair's Isle; do.

Grace Darling; after J. W. Carmichael and H. W. Parkes.

Landscape with Mill; after Lee.

The Burns Monument, on the Doon; after F. C. Auld.

MACBETH, NORMAN, a Scottish portrait painter, was born in 1822. He was educated in Edinburgh, and in 1870 was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy. In 1880 he became a full member, his diploma picture being a portrait of Sir John Steell, R.S.A. He afterwards moved to London, where he was representative trustee of the Scottish Academy at the British Institution. He died in London, February 27, 1888. Mr. R. W. Macbeth, A.R.A., Mr. James Macbeth, and Mr. Macbeth-Raeburn, are his sons. His portrait of Dr. William Lindsay Alexander is in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery.

MAGLIETTI. See above, MACCHIETTI.

MAILLOT, THÉODORE PIERRE NICOLAS, painter, was born in Paris in 1826. He was a pupil of Drolling and Picot. He won the First Grand Prix de Rome in 1854, and afterwards painted many historical pictures, including some for the French Government. Works by him are in the Pantheon, the church of St. Jacques-du-Haut-Pas, and in the Chapelle de St. Marcel. He died at Passy, June 25, 1888.

MAKART, HANS, painter, was born at Salzburg, May 29, 1840, of parents who belonged to the humbler burgher class. In 1858 he entered the Vienna Academy, from which he was dismissed a few months later as "entirely devoid of talent!" He returned, greatly discouraged, to Salzburg, and had almost made up his mind to turn engraver, when his maternal uncle, one-Schiffmann, a local painter, came to his aid, provided him with money, and took him to Munich, where, after two years' delay, he entered Piloty's atelier. Makart remained there until 1868, painting and exhibiting a few works, which attracted little attention, but enabled him to pay visits to Paris, London, and Italy. In 1868 he painted two pictures which created an immense sensation throughout Germany. These were the 'Modern Amorini,' a triptych representing groups of children against a background of gold, and a 'Plague in Florence, or the Seven Deadly Sins,' also in three compartments. Thenceforth Makart's career was an ever-recurrent triumph. In 1869 he was invited to Vienna by the Emperor Francis Joseph, and a splendid atelier built for him at Government expense. In Vienna he became the centre of a brilliant circle, the recognized organizer of fêtes and pageants, and the dispenser of gorgeous hospitalities in his own studio. The great allegorical 'progress' in honour of the Emperor's silver wedding (1879), was designed by him in every detail. His talent was further shown in his decorations for the Vienna 'Kunst-Museum.' Of his easel pictures, the earliest were the best. Later, he dashed off enormous compositions which had little but a certain brilliant assertiveness to recommend them. In 1879 Makart became professor of a special school of history-painting in the Vienna Academy, and as a teacher his influence was beneficial. Makart was twice married; for the second time, in 1882, to the ballet-dancer, Bertha Linda. He died suddenly on the 3rd of October, 1884, at Vienna. He was buried with extraordinary pomp, the whole city flocking to his funeral. Of his more careful works, the best, perhaps, are: 'Abundantia,' a series of life-size allegorical figures, typifying the riches of land and sea; 'The Triumph of Catarina Cornaro,' 1873, now in the National Gallery of Berlin; the 'Entry of Charles V. into Antwerp,' 1878 (Hamburg Kunst-halle); 'Cleopatra's Voyage' (Stuttgart Gallery); allegories of 'The Senses,' 'Spring,' 'Summer,' 'Morning,' 'Evening,' 'Noon,' and 'Night.'

MARC, A., born at Metz in 1818, was a painter and draughtsman, but was better known as editor of 'Illustration.' He practised for a time as drawing-master at Diekirch, in Luxembourg, when a very young man, and subsequently became a pupil of Delaroche, exhibiting first at the Salon of 1847. He died in 1886.

MASTER P., THE, is known as the engraver of a fine early print, either German or Netherlandish in origin, called the 'Immaculata' or 'Mary as Queen of Heaven.' It bears as signature a Gothic P. and the date 1451, but the latter, it is thought, may have been tampered with on the one impression known. This was formerly in the Weigel collection, at the sale of which in 1872 it fetched nearly £600, and was reproduced in Weigel's 'Drucker-Kunst' and The Sale Catalogue.

MATOUT, LOUIS, painter, was born at Renwez, Ardennes, March 19, 1811. He studied at the Collège Rollin, at Charleville, and was intended for the profession of an architect, but abandoned it in favour of painting, and entered the École des Beaux Arts in Paris. In 1846 he was sent to Rome, and commissioned by Government to paint five pictures on the subject of 'The Senses.' Two only were completed, and these were exhibited at the Salon of 1848, together with a 'Pan surrounded by Nymphs.' Shortly afterwards he made a stay of some length in Algiers, and on his return he received another important Government commission, the decoration of the Paris School of Medicine. For this work he was awarded the Cross of the Legion of Honour. It was followed by other undertakings of a like nature, notably six paintings for the Hôpital de Lariboisière, the decoration of the chapel of St. Anne in the church of St. Gervais, of the St. Louis chapel in the church of St. Sulpice, and of the Salle des Empereurs in the Louvre. His easel pictures, ambitious in conception, but mediocre in execution, were chiefly mythological and historical in subject. Matout died in Paris in January, 1888.

MAUVE, ANTON, a Dutch painter, was born at Zaandam in 1838, and became a pupil of P. F. van Os. He painted landscapes with animals, chiefly sheep and cows, but occasionally horses. He worked much in water-colour, in which his broad methods showed to advantage. Many of his pictures are in England. He died February 5, 1888.

MEADOWS, J. KENNY, draughtsman and painter, was born in Cardiganshire, November 1, 1790. His father was a retired naval officer. He himself first became known in art by his designs on wood for book illustration. He exhibited occasionally at the Royal Academy and in Suffolk Street. His life was spent mostly in the companionship of professed humorists, and his designs have the rather forced comicality we should thence expect. During the last ten years of his life he was in receipt of a pension from the Civil List. He died in August, 1874. Among the works he illustrated we may name:

- J. R. Planché's 'Costume of Shakespeare's King John.' 1823. Figures designed and executed on stone by J. K. M.
- Autobiography of a notorious Legal Functionary, by 'Jack Ketch.' 1836.
- Heads of the People, or Portraits of the English, drawn by K. M. 1840.
- Swift's Hints to Servants. 1843.
- Shakespeare. 1843.
- Punch's Complete Letter-Writer, by D. Jerrold. 1845.
- New Testament. 1847.
- Magic of Kindness, by J. and H. Mayhew; illustrated by Geo. Cruikshank and Kenny Meadows. 1849.
- The Works of Byron. 1854.
- Blanchard's 'Corporation Characters.' 1855.
- Granny's Wonderful Chair, by F. Browne. 1857.
- Merry Pictures by the Comic Hands of H. K. Browne, M., and others. 1857.
- Beeton's Book of Games. 1866.
- Don Quixote. 1872.

MÉDARD, EUGÈNE, a French painter of battle pieces, was born in 1849. He was a pupil of Léon Cogniet and of Gérôme. His 'Retraite de Buzenval' was bought in 1886 by the French Government. He died in 1887.

MÉLIN, JOSEPH, a French painter, best known by his vigorous studies of animals, though he began life as an historical painter, was born in 1814, and was a pupil of P. Delaroche and David d'Angers. He died in November, 1886.

MESGRIGNY, FRANK, Marquis de, painter, born in Paris in 1836. He was a pupil of Lalanne and Worms, and exhibited a number of refined and highly finished studies of French river scenery (chiefly of the Oise and Seine) from 1870 onwards. He died in 1884.

METELLI. See above, MITELLI.

MILLER, JOHN, an amateur portrait painter, was born in London in 1820. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1846 and 1847, and resided for some time in Rome and Florence. He returned to England in 1852, and died in London in 1871. Among his portraits are the following :

Henry, seventh Duke of Beaufort.

Robert Graves, A.R.A.

John Richardson Jackson, mezzotint engraver.

MODENA, BARNABA DA, who has been mistakenly called SERAFINI, and confused with Serafino dei Serafini, flourished in the 14th century, and seems to have passed much of his time in Piedmont and Pisa. There are no records existing concerning his birth or death, and very little is known of his life. He was a contemporary of Tommaso da Modena, and was sent for by the Pisan authorities to finish the frescoes of St. Ranieri in the Campo Santo in 1380, though no evidences of his workmanship can now be found there. Of two altar-pieces in the church of San Francesco, one alone remains. An altar-piece, formerly in the monastery of San Giovanni del Fiero, which represents an enthroned life-size Virgin and Child with eight Angels, and is now in the Academy of Pisa; and an unsigned altar-piece in the sacristy of Ripoli, four miles from Padua, are all that attest his visit there. There also remain by him :

Berlin. Gallery. Virgin and Child; signed, and dated 1369.

Frankfort. Staedel Gall. Virgin and Child, half-length; signed Barnabas da Mutina pinxit, anno 1367.

MOLE, JOHN HENRY, water-colour painter, was a native of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and was born about 1814. He first exhibited in London in 1845 at the Royal Academy, and two years later became a member of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, of which body he was afterwards Vice-President. He was a frequent exhibitor for many years at the leading London galleries. He died December 13, 1886.

MOODY, THOMAS WOLLASTON, painter, better known as a lecturer, teacher, and designer, was the son of the Rector of Chatham, Kent, and was born about 1824. He occasionally exhibited pictures, but was chiefly occupied with his duties at the South Kensington Museum, where for many years he held the post of Instructor in Decorative Art. He died August 10, 1886.

MORIN, GUSTAVE, a French historical painter, born at Rouen, April 18, 1809, was a pupil of Chaumont and of Léon Cogniet. He first exhibited at the Salon in 1833. In 1858 he was appointed Director of the Academy of Painting at Rouen, and in 1865 Conservator of the Museum. He died February 15, 1886.

MUSSINI, LUIGI, a modern Italian painter of history, was born in the first years of the 19th century, and enjoyed a considerable reputation in his own country. Towards the close of his long career he practically abandoned painting, and devoted himself to his duties as Director of the Siena Gallery. His portrait, painted by himself, is in the Uffizi. Mussini died at Siena, June 18, 1888.

MUTRIE, MARTHA DARLEY, a painter of fruit and flowers, was born at Manchester in 1824. She first exhibited at the Academy in 1851, when she was living in Manchester. In 1853 she went to London, and was henceforth a constant contributor to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy and the British Institution. She died at her house in Kensington, December 30, 1886. The South Kensington Museum has a 'Study of Camellias' by her.

NEHER, BERNARD, historical painter, was born at Biberach, Würtemberg, in 1806. After some early instruction in his native place, he studied at Stuttgart under Dannecker, and at Munich under Cornelius, and showed so much talent in his early essays that he was relieved from military service, and granted a government pension for further study in Italy. He stayed four years in Rome, and while there painted (1831) his 'Raising of the Widow's Son,' now in the Stuttgart Gallery. On his return to Munich he was commissioned to paint a fresco on a large scale over the restored 'Isarthor,' representing the entry of Ludwig of Bavaria after the battle of Ampfing. He was afterwards engaged on decorative paintings at the Court of Weimar, and designed a number of cartoons for glass-painting. In 1841 he became Director of the Leipsic Academy, and in 1854 Director of the Art School of Stuttgart. He died in 1886. His 'Descent from the Cross' is in the Stuttgart Gallery.

NICHOLSON, T. (?) H., was popular as a book-illustrator in the first half of the present century. He produced a series of designs for a Shakespeare, and was said to be the real author of Count D'Orsay's statuette of Wellington.

NORBURY R., painter and sculptor, was born at Macclesfield in 1815. He held successively the posts of assistant master to the Schools of Design at Somerset House and at Liverpool. After his resignation of the latter appointment he was elected president of the Liverpool Water-Colour Society. He was also a member of the Liverpool and Cambrian Academies. He painted a large number of portraits, and was also much employed in decorative design and in book illustration, practising at Liverpool, but frequently exhibiting in London. He died April 25, 1886.

NULCK, L., a painter apparently of the Dutch school, of whose life nothing is known. In the collection of M. Ch. Careus, Brussels, there is an interior with figures by him, signed L. Nulck, 1680.

NUTI, GIULIA, the wife of Antonio Marini (q. v.), frequently painted flowers in her husband's pictures.

OAKES, JOHN WRIGHT, landscape painter, was born at Sproston House, Middlewich, Cheshire, which had been for several generations in the possession of his family, on July 9, 1820. He was educated at Liverpool, and received his art training under Mr. Bishop, of the Liverpool College. His first exhibited works appeared at the Liverpool Academy, of which body he shortly afterwards became a member, and later honorary secretary. His subjects were chiefly Welsh coast, moorland, or mountain, or studies of Highland scenery. In 1847 the first picture exhibited by him in London, 'Nant Francon, Caernarvonshire,' appeared at the British Institution, and the following year he sent 'On the Greta, Keswick, to the Royal Academy. In 1859 he settled in London, and thenceforth was, with one intermission, a yearly contributor to the Academy Exhibitions. In 1876 he was elected an associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1883 an honorary member of the Scottish Academy. About six years before his death his health began to give way, and he had practically laid aside his work for some time when he died on August 8th, 1887, at his house in Kensington. Among his works we may name the following:

Early Spring twilight. (S. Kensington Museum.)

Early Spring. (Glasgow Gallery.)

Autumn. (Liverpool, Walker Gallery.)

PALING. See above, PAULYN.

PAULI, (or PAUL,) ANDREAS, also called DE PAULIS, a Dutch engraver, was born about 1598. No details of his life are known. The following plates by him have much in common with those of Johann Anton Pauli:

Portrait of the physician N. Bulius.

Titian and his Mistress; copied on a reduced scale from Van Dyck's plate.

The Denial of Peter; after G. Zeghers.

Virgin and Child; after Rubens.

Bacchus and Ceres; after Spranger.

The Entry of Maria de' Medici into the towns of Mons, Brussels, and Antwerp, in 1631; three plates.

A set of Fifty Plates of Emblems.

PEHAM. See PECHAM.

PELLEGRINI, CARLO, draughtsman and caricaturist, was born at Capua in 1838, and was, on his father's side, the scion of an ancient family long settled in the district, and known as the Sedili Capuani; on his mother's a descendant of the Medici. In his youth he became involved in the Italian struggle for liberty, and enrolled himself among the Garibaldians. In 1865 he arrived in England in straitened circumstances, and a chance having revealed his gifts as a satirical draughtsman, he was engaged on the staff of 'Vanity Fair.' In 1869 his first political caricature, a drawing of Lord Beaconsfield, appeared in that journal. It was signed 'Singe,' a pseudonym which he afterwards changed for 'Ape.' Henceforth he was a prolific contributor for many years to 'Vanity Fair,' and has left behind him many hundreds of portraits of notabilities in the English political, artistic, and social world. One of the most successful was a statuette in red plaster of Mr. Lowe standing on a match-box, which the artist modelled in Count Gleichen's studio. His last published caricature was that of Sir William Dolby, the famous aurist, and the last he drew a sketch of Mr. Edison, the inventor of the phonograph. During his long residence in London, Pellegrini's gay and genial temper endeared him to all with whom he came in contact, and in his last illness a fund was provided by his more intimate friends for his support. He died in Mortimer Street, Cavendish Square, January 22, 1889, and was buried at Kensal Green.

PERCY, S. R., landscape painter, was the son of Edward Williams (q. v.), and changed his name to avoid being confused with his numerous brothers. He was the founder of what is known as the 'School of Barnes.' He was a frequent contributor for over forty years to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy, and his sketches and pictures were very popular with the public. He died April 13, 1886.

PEREZ DE LA VILLA AMIL, GERONIMO, a Spanish painter, born at Madrid about 1810. He studied at the Madrid Academy, and painted landscape, genre, and notably architectural interiors with figures. His best known picture is an 'Interior of Seville Cathedral on Corpus Christi day.' He published a work on Spanish architecture, illustrated by lithographs. He died at Madrid in 1853.

PFANNSCHMIDT, KARL GOTTFRIED, painter, was born at Mühlhausen in Thuringia, September 15, 1819. He came to Berlin in 1835, and studied under Däge and Cornelius. He painted a great many altar-pieces and pictures for North German churches, also decorative works in the manner of Cornelius; of the latter the most remarkable is the apse of the Charlottenburg Mausoleum. Pfannschmidt died in July, 1887. There is a picture by him in the National Gallery at Berlin.

PHILP, JAMES GEORGE, painter, was a native of Falmouth, and was born in 1816. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1846, his contributions being two landscapes in oils. He afterwards successfully devoted himself to painting in water-colour, and in 1856 became a member of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours. He died April 11, 1885.

PICKENÖY, NICOLAS ELIAS, called ELIAS, a little-known Dutch painter, who is, however, the reputed master of Van der Helst, was born at Amsterdam about 1590. There are twelve pictures by him in the Rijks Museum at Amsterdam, which show him to have been an excellent portraitist. He died, probably at Amsterdam, between 1646 and 1656.

PINEL, EDOUARD, painter, born at La Rochelle, was a pupil of Roqueplan and of Gudin. He enjoyed some repute as a landscape painter in the days of Louis Philippe, and was for many years keeper of the Museum in his native town. He died in 1884.

PITTORI, PAOLI, called PAOLO DEL MASACCIO, an Italian painter, born at Masaccio, where he painted many pictures for churches, &c. He died in 1590.

PONTIUS. See DU PONT.

RAJON, PAUL ADOLPHE, draughtsman and etcher, was born at Dijon in July, 1843, and was educated at the lycée of his native town. His father died when Rajon was thirteen years old, and his mother, left with small means, placed the boy with his brother-in-law, a photographer, at Metz, who employed him to "touch up" plates. In 1864 he came to Paris, and for a time gained a precarious livelihood by working up and colouring photographs, making cartoons for stained glass, and drawing portraits in black lead or sanguine. At the same time he worked for a month or two under Pils at the École des Beaux Arts. About 1865 Rajon made the acquaintance of Léopold Flameng and Léon Gaucherel, and was induced to try his hand at etching. The result was an admirable reproduction of Gérôme's 'Rembrandt dans son Atelier,' which was purchased by the Messrs. Goupil. The success of the publication was followed up by several commissions from the same firm, and Rajon's vocation was determined. From 1866 onwards, his artistic career was one of unchequered success, broken only by the interlude of the siege of Paris, when, like so many other artists, he quitted his studio to enrol himself in the corps known as Les Enfants perdus de La Villette. After the campaign he visited England, being invited by the editor of the 'Portfolio.' Henceforth he made annual visits to England, and some of his finest plates were from pictures in this country. In 1885 Rajon exhibited a large collection of his works, in oils, water-colours, chalk, and pastel, as well as many etchings, in Bond Street; and an exhibition of his etchings took place the following year in New York, which he then visited for the first time. In 1880 he moved to a country house he had built at Auvers, on the banks of the Oise, about forty miles from Paris, where he delighted to entertain the many friends of all nationalities he had attached to himself throughout his career. He died there on the 8th of June, 1888, and was buried in the cemetery of Auvers. Of his numerous plates we may name:

Relais de Chiens; after Gérôme.
L'Amour Platonique; after Zamacoïs.
Le Liseur; after Meissonier.
Salomé; after Regnault.
L'Indifférent; after Watteau.
Dutch Courtyard; after De Hooghe.
John Bright; after Oulss.
Charles Darwin; after the same.
Cardinal Newman; after the same.
The Emperor Claudius; after Alma Tadema.
'George Eliot'; after Sir Frederick Burton.
Lord Tennyson; after G. F. Watts.
Herr Joachim; after the same.

Also many plates for the 'Portfolio' from pictures in the National Gallery, the Dulwich Gallery, &c. For a complete list of Rajon's plates, with fuller details of his life, see 'Twelve Etchings contributed to the "Portfolio" by Paul Adolphe Rajon, with Memoir and Notes by F. G. Stephens.' London, 1889.

REDGRAVE, RICHARD, painter, was born on the 30th April, 1804, in Pimlico, and in his early youth worked as assistant to his father, who was associated in the engineering works of Bramah, the inventor of the hydraulic press. At the age of twenty-one he entered the Academy schools, and competed unsuccessfully for the gold medal. He first attracted public attention in 1836, by his 'Gulliver on the Farmer's Table,' exhibited at the British Institution, which is now at South Kensington. In 1840 he was elected an associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1851 a full member. Meantime he had been actively engaged in the organization of the Government School of Design, of which he was appointed Botanical Teacher and Lecturer, and later Head Master and Art Superintendent. It was about this time that, with the help of Mr. H. Cole (afterwards Sir Henry Cole, K.C.B.), he formed the museum of ornamental art at Marlborough House, the nucleus of the present Museum of Art at South Kensington. They were again associated in the arrangement of the Great Exhibition in 1851, and in the British Section of the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1855. In 1862 Redgrave worked in conjunction with Creswick in carrying out arrangements for the English Art Section of the International Exhibition. In 1858 he was appointed Surveyor of Crown Pictures, and for many years was engaged on a catalogue of them. In 1866 he joined his brother Samuel (who died in 1876) in preparing a history of British art from the time of Hogarth, under the title of 'A Century of Painters.' For many years he kept up his connection with South Kensington, where he took the chief part in forming an historical collection of water-colours for the Museum. In 1880 he resigned both his appointment as Surveyor and Keeper of the Royal Pictures, and also his post in the Department of Science and Art at South Kensington, and from that time he seems to have painted but little. He died in Kensington, December 14th, 1888. Redgrave was a member of the Etching Club.

RIDLEY, MATTHEW WHITE, landscape painter and etcher. He exhibited frequently with the Society of British Artists, the British Institution, and the Royal Academy, between 1857 and 1880. He died June 2, 1888.

RIVIÈRE, HENRY PARSONS, water-colour painter, was a student of the Royal Academy, and first exhibited in London 1832, when he sent two pictures to the Suffolk Street Gallery. He was afterwards a frequent exhibitor there, and also at the Royal Academy and the British Institution. In 1834 he became a member of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, and in 1852 was elected an Associate of the Old Society. He painted chiefly 'history and genre, either English or Italian in subject. In 1867 he went to Rome, where he lived for many years. He died at his house in St. John's Wood, in 1888.

ROBINSON, HUGH, an English painter of the 18th century, was born about 1755. He painted vigorous portraits, somewhat after the style of Reynolds. He exhibited at the Academy in 1780-1-2. About 1782 he went to Rome, where he painted for eight years. In 1790 he started to return home by sea, but the ship was wrecked; Robinson was drowned, and the work of his eight years lost. Pictures by him were at the 'Old Masters,' in 1881-85-87.

ROELFSEMA. See OEVER.

ROLLAND DE LA PORTE, HENRI HORACE, a French painter of fruit, flowers, still-life, and feigned bas-reliefs, was born in Paris in 1724. Between the years 1760 and 1789 he frequently exhibited at the Salon. In 1763 he was received into the Academy. He died in 1793.

ROSEMALE, —, a Dutch painter of the 17th century, who painted views of towns and interiors in the manner of Emanuel de Witte. The town of Utrecht possesses a picture by him, representing the church of St. Peter of that place in ruins, after the hurricane of 1674.

SAUVAIGNE, LOUIS PAUL, a French marine painter, and pupil of Corot and Daubigny, was born at Lille in 1827. He exhibited at the Salon from 1870 onwards, practising chiefly at Lille. He died at Trouville in 1885.

SÉGÉ, ALEXANDRE, painter and engraver, was born in Paris in 1819, and was a pupil of Cogniet and of Camille Flers. He distinguished himself chiefly by his poetic pastorals from La Beauce, and his scenes from the neighbourhood of Chartres, also by many studies of Corsican landscape. His 'Chêne de Kertregoune' is in the Luxembourg. He died of an aneurism at Coubron, Seine-et-Oise, in October, 1885.

SIMONSEN, NIELS, painter and sculptor, was born in Copenhagen in 1807, and was first apprenticed to a house painter, but afterwards studied in the Academy, and in 1826 in Lund's atelier. Later in his career he devoted himself for some years to sculpture, but finally reverted to painting, and worked from 1833 to 1845 in Munich. In the latter year he returned and settled in Copenhagen. He served in the campaign of 1848, and painted many of its incidents. He afterwards visited Sweden and Italy, and died in 1885. Two of his pictures are in the Royal Danish Gallery.

STEINLA, MORITZ, engraver, whose real name was MÜLLER, which he changed for that of Steinla as more distinctive, was born at Steinla near Hildesheim in 1791. He received his first training at the Dresden Academy, and showing remarkable promise, was sent by the King of Saxony to Florence and to Milan, where he studied successively under Morghen and Longhi. His first important plate was after Titian's 'Tribute Money,' and was published in 1829. It was followed by a 'Pietà' after Fra Bartolommeo (1830), 'The Murder of the Innocents' after Raphael (1836), the 'Madonna della Misericordia' after Fra Bartolommeo (1838), and in 1841 and 1848 respectively by plates from the two gems of the Dresden Gallery, Holbein's 'Madonna' and Raphael's 'Madonna di San Sisto.' For the former he was awarded a gold medal in Paris. His last important work was a plate after Raphael's 'Madonna del Pesce,' which he executed at Madrid in 1851. On his returning to settle in Dresden he was appointed Professor of Engraving at the Academy. He died at Dresden, September 21, 1858.

STEPHENSON, JAMES, engraver, was born at Manchester, November 26, 1808. He was a pupil of the Findens, and worked both in line and mezzotint. He first exhibited at the Academy in 1856. He engraved much after Maclise, T. Faed, Sir J. W. Gordon, Sir John Millais, &c., and also in illustration of books. Among his best plates are:

The Day of Wrath; after Martin.
 The Last Judgment; after the same.
 The Plains of Heaven; after the same.
 The Highland Whiskey Still; after Landseer.
 The Taming of the Shrew; after the same.
 The Queen at Osborne; after the same.
 Ophelia; after Sir John Millais.
 Portrait of Lord Tennyson; after G. F. Watts.

He died May 28, 1886.

SWINTON, JAMES, portrait-painter, was born about 1820, and exhibited at the Royal Academy, at Suffolk Street, and with the British Institution. For about twenty years he was a very fashionable portrait painter, among his sitters being the Emperor Napoleon III., Lady Burdett-Coutts, Lady Dufferin, Lady Marian Alford, Mrs. Norton, and Lady Seymour. His portrait of Professor Wilson is in the Scottish National Gallery. He died in December, 1888.

SYER, JOHN, an English painter, was born at Bristol (?) in 1815. He painted landscape in a style formed chiefly upon that of William Muller, but failed as a colourist. He exhibited at the Academy, the British Institution, and with the British Artists, between 1832 and 1875. He died in July, 1885.

TAYLOR, JOHN, an English painter, perhaps an amateur, to whom, as well as to Burbage the actor, the Chandos portrait of 'Shakespeare' has been ascribed. That portrait has been traced back to the hands of Joseph Taylor, who is believed to have been the first impersonator of Hamlet; John Taylor is said to have been his brother. The Chandos portrait is now in the National Portrait Gallery. See Elze's 'William Shakespeare' (translated by L. D. Schmit; pp. 263, 559, 561).

THOMPSON, JACOB, painter, was born at Penrith, April 28, 1807, and was educated in art with the help of Lord Lonsdale. His patron sent him to London in 1829 with an introduction to Lawrence, and he became a student at the Royal Academy, where he received much encouragement from Hilton, Smirke, and Lawrence. He began by exhibiting portraits in 1833, but subsequently devoted himself mainly to landscape with figures, taken chiefly from his native Cumberland, and from Scotland. He died December 27, 1879. See also 'The Life and Works of Jacob Thompson,' by Llewellyn Jewitt. (1882.)

THOMPSON, JOHN KNIGHTON, an English painter, was born about 1820. From 1849 to shortly before his death he was a constant exhibitor at the Academy, and with the Society of British Artists. He also exhibited at the British Institution. His 'First Easter Dawn' has been engraved. He died in 1888.

THORBURN, ROBERT, painter, was born at Dumfries in 1818. He was educated in the high school of his native town, and afterwards in the Royal Scottish Academy. The Duke of Buccleuch sent him to London in 1836 with letters of introduction. He entered the Royal Academy schools, and soon became favourably known as a portrait painter, chiefly in miniature. He first exhibited at the Academy in 1837, from which year till 1884 he was a constant contributor. In 1848 he was elected an A.R.A., an honour which he resigned a few months before his death. His miniatures were fashionable, among his sitters being the Queen and other members of the Royal Family; the Marchioness of Waterford, Viscountess Canning, the Duchess of Buccleuch, Lord and Lady Mount Edgcumbe, Mrs. Gladstone, and many others. Finding that his speciality had been virtually superseded by photography, he had long abandoned it for the painting of oil pictures, when he died at Tunbridge Wells, November 2, 1885.

VIVA, TOMMASO DE, an Italian painter of historical subjects, was born at Rome in 1790, and painted much for the public buildings of that city. He was a professor in the Istituto delle Belle Arte, Inspector-general of all the Royal Galleries, and a member of the Academies of the Pantheon and San Luca. He received many honours from the Italian Government, and continued the active exercise of his profession down to the time of his death, which occurred in October, 1884.

VOGEL, JOHANN PHILIPP ALBERT, an engraver upon wood, was born at Berlin in 1814, and was the son of the engraver Johann Daniel Vogel. His artistic career is almost identical with that of his younger brother, Karl Friedr. Otto (q. v. above). He worked for a short time at Leipsic for the publisher Baumgärtner, and in 1835 returned and settled in Berlin, where he became director of the wood-engravers' atelier at the Academy. He died April 15, 1886.

ZALISKI, MARCIN, a Polish painter of architecture, chiefly church interiors, practised in the middle of the 19th century, and was professor at the Warsaw Academy. He was accused of complicity in a plot against the Russian Government, and sent to the Siberian mines. He died in October, 1885.

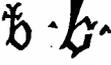

ZIMMERMANN, FRIEDRICH, a German engraver, was born at Gordemitz, near Merseburg, in 1826. He studied at the Academies of Leipsic and Dresden, under Sichling and Steinla, but finished his training in Paris and Munich. He died in 1887.
