PAINTERS AND ENGRAVERS.

VOL. II.

PREFACE.

---

FOR the present edition of Bryan's "Dictionary of Painters and Engravers," the two editors thus divide the responsibility: for the general form of the work, as well as the whole of the first volume and the letter L in the second volume, Mr. R. E. Graves is responsible; for the rest, Mr. Walter Armstrong.

Since the appearance of the last edition in 1849, the development of connoisseurship, chiefly through the help of photography; and the publication of many valuable works on art and artists, embodying the results of careful research among city records, guild books, and church registers, particularly in Italy and in the Netherlands, has furnished much new material for the correction and enlargement of such a dictionary as this. More especially are the Editors indebted to the invaluable works of Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle, Burckhardt, Milanesi, and Morelli on the Italian painters, of Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle, Weale, Bredius, Bode and Kramm on Flemish and Dutch art, and of the late Sir William Stirling Maxwell and D. Pedro de Madrazo, on the artists of Spain.

Dealing, as a dictionary does, with facts rather than with criticism, the labours of preceding writers must necessarily be used with a frequency which makes special acknowledgment in every case impossible, but the Editors trust they will not be found to have placed themselves under any obligations that may not be frankly acknowledged.

Besides the addition of a large number of names, new authority has been given to every one of the old entries by a careful revision, and in most instances by important changes. In several cases the notices have been supplied by contributors specially qualified for the task; a list of these, with their distinguishing initials, is given below.

Among the improvements is a more scientific arrangement of the names, of which the following is the plan:—

I. Every artist having a surname is placed under that surname. Assumed names and sobriquets are given in cross-reference when needed.

e. g. The artist commonly known as—

Correggio will be found under	...	ALLEGRI, Antonio
Giorgione     ,,     ,,	...	BARBARELLI, Giorgio
Pinturicchio     ,,     ,,	...	BIAGIO, Bernardino
Sebastiano del Piombo     ,,	...	LUCIANI, Sebastiano
Tintoretto     ,,     ,,	...	ROBUSTI, Jacopo
Titian     ,,     ,,	...	VECELLI, Tiziano

(a) When the prefix to a name is an ARTICLE it is retained, because it is an integral part of the name; but when a PREPOSITION it is rejected. Thus, the French Le and La, the Spanish Los and Las, and the Dutch and Flemish De are accepted; while the French de, the Italian da and di, the German von, and the Dutch van are rejected.

e. g. Charles Le Brun will be found under	...	LE BRUN, Charles
Jan David De Heem     ,,     ,,	...	DE HEEM, Jan David
Jean François de Troy     ,,     ,,	...	TROY, Jean François de
Heinrich von Hess     ,,     ,,	...	HESS, Heinrich von
Isaac van Ostade     ,,     ,,	...	OSTADE, Isaac van

(b) When an article is joined to or preceded by a preposition, as in the French du, de la, and des, the Italian del, della, dai, dalle, and degli, the Spanish del and de la, the Portuguese dal, and the Dutch Van de and Van der, they are together treated as an article: for, in order to retain the article, we are forced to retain the preposition as well.

e. g. Alphonse du Fresnoy will be found under	DU FRESNOY, Alphonse
Laurent de La Hire     ,,     ,,	DE LA HIRE, Laurent
Niccolò dell' Abbate     ,,     ,,	DELL' ABBATE, Niccolò
Alonso del Barco     ,,     ,,	DEL BARCO, Alonso
Willem van de Velde     ,,     ,,	VAN DE VELDE, Willem

(c) English artists bearing foreign names are placed under the prefix whether it be a preposition or not.

e. g. Peter De Wint will be found under ... DE WINT, Peter

(d) Proper names with the prefix St. are placed as though the word were written in full, SAINT; and M' and M<sup>c</sup> are arranged as MAC.

(e) Foreign compound names are arranged under the first name.

e. g. Baptiste Aubry-Lecomte will be found under	AUBRY-LECOMTE, Baptiste
Juan Cano de Arevalo     ,,     ,,     ,,	CANO DE AREVALO, Juan

II. An artist having no surname is placed under the name of the place from which he is known.

e. g. Andrea da Bologna will be found under ... BOLOGNA, Andrea da

Or, failing that, under his own Christian name.

e. g. Andrea del Sarto will be found under ... ANDREA d'Agnolo
 Fra Bartolommeo ,, ,, ,, ... BARTOLOMMEO di Pagholo

III. Anonymous artists known as the Master of the Crab, the Master of the Die, the Master of the Rat-trap, will be found under the common title of MASTER.

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

PAINTERS AND ENGRAVERS.

LAACK, MARIA VAN DER. See VAN DER LAACK.

LAAN, VAN DER. See VAN DER LAAN.

LAAR, J. O. VAN, the youngest brother of Pieter van Laar, is said to have accompanied his brother to Italy, and to have perished by falling into a mountain torrent while crossing a bridge near Rome.

LAAR, PIETER VAN, called BAMBOCCIO and SNUFFELAER, was born at Haarlem, in 1582. His parents were in easy circumstances, and so were able to indulge the inclination which he early showed for art, by having him instructed in the elements of design by Jan van Campen, and afterwards by Adam Elsheimer. He went when young to Italy, and resided for sixteen years in Rome, where he was distinguished by the uncommon vivacity of his genius and the amiability of his disposition. He lived in habits of intimacy with Nicolas Poussin, Claude Lorrain, and Sandrart, in whose company he made drawings of the most interesting monuments in the neighbourhood of Rome. These studies were of use to him in the composition of his pictures, as forming the backgrounds. He acquired the name of 'Bamboccio' most probably from his usually painting such subjects as the Italians call 'bambocciate,' such as fairs, rural festivals, huntings, and masquerades, rather than from any deformity of his body. In 1639 he left Rome and settled at Haarlem, where his pictures were not less admired than in Italy. His works are scarce, and are deservedly held in high repute. He died at Haarlem in 1642. The following paintings by him are in European galleries:

Brunswick.	Museum.	Scene before a Tavern.
Cassel.	Gallery.	A Quack Doctor.
"	"	Italian Peasants dancing.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Italian Peasants.
Florence.	Uffizi.	His own Portrait.
Munich.	Gallery.	Two Horses in a Stall.
"	"	Italian Porters playing under the wall of a Fortress.
Paris.	Louvre.	The Departure.
"	"	The Shepherds.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Halt of the Travellers.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Peasant Scenes.

LAAR, ROELAND VAN, a younger brother of Pieter van Laar, was born at Haarlem in 1610. He painted in the style of his brother, with whom he travelled in Italy. He died young at Genoa in 1640.

LABACCO, ANTONIO. See ABACCO.

LABACCO, MARIO, was an Italian engraver, who flourished from 1551 to 1567. He engraved some of the plates to a work on architecture by his father, Antonio Labacco, published at Rome in 1559; and also copied Martin Schongauer's print of the 'Temptation of St. Anthony,' and Béatrizet's print, after Giotto, of 'Peter walking on the Sea.' No particulars of his life are recorded. Both this artist and his father are sometimes called Abacco.

LABADIE, ANDREAS, a German painter and sculptor, was born at Bautzen in 1731, and was instructed in art by Schwarzenberg at Leipsic. In 1763 he went to Berlin, where he was appointed a professor in the Academy, and where he died at the beginning of the present century.

He visited Arabia and the East in company with his father, and on his return was appointed secretary to the French Embassy in Rome, which post he subsequently held in London, the Hague, and Cassel. In 1841 he was elected a deputy, and in 1842 a member of the Academy. He was afterwards appointed Keeper of the Sculpture in the Louvre, and in 1856 Keeper of the Archives of the Empire and Senate. He published an account of his travels in the East, and also a history of engraving in mezzotint. He died at the château of Beaugregard, Eure, in 1869.

LABOUCHÈRE, PIERRE ANTOINE, a French painter, was born at Nantes in 1807. After studying in Germany and England he was placed in a house of business at Antwerp. In 1827 he made a voyage to the United States, and in 1832 to China. His residence at Antwerp had fostered the great love he had for art, and so in 1836 he definitely abandoned his commercial career, and after a year's travel in Italy, he went to Paris, and studied under his friend Paul Delaroche. He afterwards travelled in Africa, whence he brought back with him a large number of water-colour sketches. He died in Paris in 1873. His most important productions were:

He died in 1882.

After studying at Rome he settled at Bordeaux, and was appointed professor in the Academy of that city, and it is there that the greater number of his pictures are to be found in the churches and the collections of amateurs. Among his principal works are, 'St. Paulin, Archbishop of Bordeaux, opening his Palace to the Afflicted,' 'Orpheus bringing Eurydice from the Infernal Regions,' 'A Miser sleeping on his Treasure,' and 'A Mendicant.' He also painted portraits, landscapes, and marine subjects. He died at Bordeaux in 1814.

LACOUR, PIERRE, the younger, son of Pierre Lacour the elder, was born at Bordeaux in 1778. He was a painter, and succeeded his father as professor in the Academy of Bordeaux, though he is

LADAM, GHISLAIN FRANÇOIS, was a Flemish historical painter, who flourished in 1659. He was made free of the Corporation of St. Luke at Tournai in 1659. In the cathedral of Tournai is a picture by him of 'Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter.'

LADAME, GABRIEL, flourished at Frankfort about 1650. Florent Le Comté mentions this artist as the engraver of several plates, representing Holy Families, and other devotional subjects, in the style of Claude Mellan.

LADBROOKE, HENRY, a landscape painter, born at Norwich in 1800, was the second son of Robert Ladbroke. He received a good education, and was brought up for the church, but at his father's wish he devoted himself to art. He did not exhibit at the Royal Academy, but his works appeared at the Norwich Society of Artists, in the catalogue of which he is described as "writing and drawing master." His works were faithful transcripts of nature, and his representations of moonlight effects were very successful. He died in 1870.

LADBROOKE, JOHN BERNEY, a landscape painter, the third son of Robert Ladbroke, was born at Norwich in 1803. His attention was early devoted to art, for he exhibited at the Norwich Society of Artists as early as 1817. He was then described as "Master J. Ladbroke," and was represented by two works after Morland and a flower piece. His style was chiefly based on that of Crome, and he excelled in depicting foliage. He did not often exhibit—he only appeared at the Royal Academy once or twice in the early part of his career—but he is said to have received good prices for his works. He died at Norwich in 1879.

LADBROOKE, ROBERT, a landscape painter of the Norwich school, was born in 1770. He began life as a printer, but his love for art triumphed, and he was content to commence the profession of an artist by painting portraits at five shillings each. He early became acquainted with "Old" Crome, and they married sisters. Together they were the moving spirits in the foundation of the Norwich Society of Artists in 1805, but later in life he quarrelled with Crome, and they headed opposition societies. Ladbroke was a large contributor to the exhibitions of the Society. His works were chiefly views in Norfolk and on the Norfolk coast, with an occasional portrait. In the catalogues he is described as "drawing-master." He also exhibited pictures in London at the Royal Academy between 1809 and 1816, and published 'Views of Norfolk Churches' in five volumes. He died at Norwich in 1842.

LADD, ANNE, who was born in London in 1746, and died in 1770, painted portraits and fruit pieces.

LADDER, —, was an English painter of the 18th century, who painted genre pictures in the style of Morland.

LADENSPELDER, JOHANN, or HANS VON ESSEN, an engraver, was born at Essen, a frontier city of the duchy of Berg, about the year 1512, according to the inscription on his portrait; but nothing further is known of his life, or of the time of his death. Bartsch and Passavant describe sixty-one prints by this master, the latest date on any one of these being 1554, some of them bear monograms composed of the letters J. L. V. E. S., which he interprets Johann Ladenspelder von Essen sculpsit. Bartsch thinks he was a painter as well as an engraver, and that all the prints specified by him were after his own pictures, or designs; at least, there are several on which he put his name, with the word in. or inventor, besides the monograms mentioned. Among his prints are:

His own Portrait.

The Descent from the Cross.

The Man of Sorrows.

The Trinity.

The Four Evangelists.

The Conversion of St. Paul.

Allegory of the Christian Virtues.

The Planets.

LADEY, JEAN MARC, a French painter of fruit and flowers, born in Paris in 1710, was a pupil of Belin de Fontenay. He became an academicien in 1741, and died in Paris at the Gobelins Tapestry Manufactory in 1749. There is in the Louvre a painting by him of a 'Vase surrounded by Flowers and Fruit,' dated 1743.

L'ADMIRAL, JAKOB, was born in 1699, and accompanied his brother Jan on his travels. He was employed in engraving insects.

L'ADMIRAL, JAN, a Dutch engraver, was born at Leyden of French parentage in 1680. He came to London, where he worked for Le Blon, and then went to Amsterdam, where he engraved the portraits for Van Mander's 'Livres des Peintres.' He also executed in colours many prints of anatomical subjects and natural history, and was much employed by the celebrated Frederik Ruysch. He died at Amsterdam in 1773.

LADRON Y GUEVARA, FELIPE DE, a scion of the noble house of Oñate, was no less distinguished for his valour than for his love of art. He accompanied the Emperor Charles V. to Bologna in 1530, and acquired there the friendship of Titian and other Italian and Flemish masters. From this intercourse and a careful study of their works he became an excellent amateur. He died at Madrid in 1563. He wrote a 'Commentary on Painting,' which after long neglect was published by Pony at Madrid in 1788.

LADURNER, ADOLPHE, was a French historical, portrait, and battle painter, who was born in 1798. He was a pupil of Horace Vernet. In 1829 he went to St. Petersburg, where he became painter to the Emperor Nicholas, and where he died in 1865.

LAECK, REINIER VAN, or VAN DER, was an historical and mythological painter, who flourished about 1640.

LAEGH, WILLEM VAN DER. See VAN DER LAEGH.

LAEN, THIERRY VAN DER. See VAN DER LAEN.

LAETHEM, JAKOB VAN, was a Flemish portrait painter of the 16th century, who in 1517 painted a portrait of the Emperor Charles V.

LAETHEM, JAN ALEXANDER, was a Belgian painter of genre subjects, whose works appeared at the exhibitions of Antwerp, Ghent, and Brussels, between the years 1825 and 1836.

LA FABRIQUE, NICOLAES, a Flemish painter, was born about 1649 at Namur, where he was a pupil of Bouge. He went to Rome when quite young, and on his return settled at Liège, where he practised and died in 1736. There is a picture of 'The Money Counter' by him in the Brussels Gallery.

He died in Paris in 1821. Amongst his works are :

LAGRENÉE, LOUIS JEAN FRANÇOIS, was born in Paris in 1725. He was a scholar of Carle van Loo. In 1749 his picture of 'Joseph interpreting the Dream of Pharaoh' obtained the great prize from the Academy of Painting, and he was sent as a pensioner to Rome. He returned to Paris in 1753, and was admitted a member of the Academy in 1755. His picture of admission was the 'Rape of Deianeira by the Centaur Nessus.' This and his 'Justice and Clemency,' painted in 1765, are in the Louvre. His reputation induced the Empress Elizabeth to appoint him to the office of director of the Academy at St. Petersburg, and to that of her principal painter. In 1781 he was made director of the French school at Rome; and there he painted some of his best pictures. They are chiefly from sacred and profane history, and the ancient poets, and the greater part have been engraved. He was professor-rector of the School of Fine Arts, and honorary conservator and administrator of the Musée, when he died in Paris in 1805. He etched several small plates from his own designs and others, with great spirit; among which are the following:

The Virgin, with the Infant sleeping; after Guido.
St. Peter and St. Jerome; two prints; from his own designs.

The Virgin and Child.
Charity and Justice; two emblematical subjects.
The Sacrifice of Noah.
A Sacrifice to Pan.

LAGUERRE, JOHN, called 'Jack Laguerre,' was the son of Louis Laguerre. He was born in London, and was instructed in painting by his father, and worked also under Hogarth, but having a talent for music and singing, he had recourse to the stage, where he met with considerable success. Towards the latter part of his life he painted scenes and decorations for the theatre. He etched a plate representing Falstaff, Pistol, and Doll Tearsheet, with other theatrical characters, in allusion to a quarrel between the players and patentees. He also engraved a set of prints to the farce of 'Hob in the Well,' which had a great sale, though indifferently executed. As a caricaturist he is considered the founder of a school. He was one of the class of pleasant, clever, and careless fellows whose disposition and habits preclude any great attainment. He died in poverty in 1748.

LAGUERRE, LOUIS, called 'Old Laguerre,' was born in Paris in 1663, and had Louis XIV. for his godfather. His father was a Catalan who settled in France, and became master of the Menagerie at Versailles. He placed his son to be instructed in literature in the college of the Jesuits, where he acquired sufficient learning to be of use to him in his historical subjects and allegories. He was for some time a scholar of Charles Le Brun, and frequented the Academy in Paris. In 1683 he came to England with one Ricard, a painter of architecture, and was first employed by Antonio Verrio to assist him in the numerous decorative works in which he was engaged. Laguerre painted the greater part of Verrio's work in St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and when he was little more than twenty years of age, got into very extensive business in painting saloons, ceilings, &c. in the mansions of the principal nobility. King William employed him at Hampton Court, where he repaired Mantegna's cartoons of the 'Triumphs of Julius Cæsar,' and painted, in chiaroscuro, the 'Labour of Hercules.' Horace Walpole states, that he was at first chosen unanimously by the commissioners for rebuilding St. Paul's, to decorate the cupola, but was set aside by the paramount interest of Sir James Thornhill. Sir Godfrey Kneller employed him to paint the staircase of his house at Whitton, where he distinguished himself beyond his usual performances. There is an etching by Louis Laguerre of the 'Judgment of Midas.' He died in 1721 whilst witnessing a performance in Drury Lane Theatre. Pope has immortalized him and his employer Verrio in the line, "Where arawl the aints of Verrio and Laguerre." This, however, is unjust to Laguerre's ability. In the National Portrait Gallery is a portrait by him of William, first Earl of Cadogan.

LAIRESSÉ FAMILY.

LAIRESSÉ, ABRAHAM DE, born at Amsterdam in 1681, was a son of Gerard de Lairesse, in whose style he painted. He died at Amsterdam in 1739.

LAIRESSÉ, ERNEST DE, the elder brother of Gerard de Lairesse, was born at Liège about the year 1635, and was instructed in design by his father. He painted animals and hunting scenes in distemper, and was sent to Italy to study, by his patron, the Elector Maximilian Heinrich of Cologne, who, on his return, appointed him his painter, and in whose service he died at the age of forty. His best work perished at the bombardment of Bonn.

LAIRESSE, GERARD DE, was born at Liège in 1641. He was the son of Renier de Lairesse, an artist of some celebrity, who had him instructed in the belles-lettres, poetry, and music, and taught him the principles of design. He afterwards studied under Bertholet Flemalle, and at the age of sixteen had made himself known as a portrait painter. He was soon after employed in some historical works for the Electors of Cologne and Brandenburg, and these established his reputation. Unfortunately an expensive and dissolute course of life kept him in indigence, although his gains were considerable. Not finding sufficient employment in his native city, he settled at Utrecht, and soon afterwards removed to Amsterdam, where he was regarded as the greatest historical painter of his time. Lairesse was afflicted with loss of sight in 1690, when he was only fifty years of age; but so great was his love for art, that he continued till his death to communicate his ideas on its theory and practice, in discourses from which were collected the materials for the treatise on design and colouring, published after his decease. He died at Amsterdam in 1711. His style is grand and poetical, he was perfectly acquainted with history and fable, possessed a lively and ready invention, and was attentive to propriety of costume. In his composition and design he has been compared to Nicolas Poussin, but he has very slender pretensions to Poussin's classic elevation of thought, profound acquaintance with the antique, elegance of taste, and purity of design. He painted with an extraordinary facility, and is said to have finished in one day a picture of 'Mount Parnassus, with Apollo and the Nine Muses;' an achievement which Poussin would not have been ambitious of performing. His backgrounds are enriched with architecture, the principles of which he perfectly understood. A visit to Italy might have given more elegance and delicacy to his figures, which are occasionally ungraceful and too short. It is, however, surprising that he could arrive at so accomplished a style as is generally visible in his works, without the advantages of travel, and with no better models to consult than those he met with in his own country. Among his paintings are:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	A Festival of Bacchanals.

As an engraver, Gerard de Lairesse claims particular notice. He etched a large number of plates from his own designs, executed with great freedom and spirit: the lights are broad and powerful, and the eye is carried at once to the principal figures of the composition. He sometimes marked his works with the initials G de L; G L; G: D: L: pnx.; G L; G L fec et exc.: G L F; G L f; G. Laire; G. Laives. The following are engraved by himself:

The Fall of our first Parents
Adam and Eve driven from Paradise.
Joseph and his Brethren.
Solomon consecrated by the High Priest.
The Infant Jesus explaining to his Parents the Divine Will.
The Incredulity of St. Thomas.

LAMA, GIOVANNI BERNARDO, the son of an artist of little celebrity, named Matteo Lama, was born at Naples in 1508. After learning the first principles of design from his father, he was placed under the tuition of Giovanni Antonio d'Amato. In 1527 the memorable sacking of Rome drove from that city the greater part of the inhabitants; among others, Polidoro da Caravaggio, who took refuge at Naples, and Lama had the advantage of his instruction. He, however, followed rather the style of Andrea Sabbatini, and his paintings are sometimes weak and affected. He died at Naples in 1579. Many of his works are to be found in the churches of that city; amongst them the following are noteworthy:

S. Severino.	The Entombment.
S. Gregorio Armeno.	The Ascension.

LAMBERT, GEORGE, was born in Kent in 1710, and was a scholar of William Hassell, and afterwards of Wootton, to whom he was greatly superior. His first employment was as a theatrical scene-painter, in which line he worked for the Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre, but in 1736 he obtained the post of principal painter at Covent Garden, where his productions were numerous and important, but many of them perished in the fire of 1808. He has the credit of being one of the first of the English painters who treated landscape with a pleasing and picturesque effect. In conjunction with Samuel Scott, he painted some views of the settlements of the East India Company, for their house in Leadenhall Street, which has since been demolished. The Foundling Hospital possesses a landscape by him. Some of his English landscapes have been engraved by Vivares, Mason, &c. LAMPI, JOHANN BAPTIST VON, the younger, an Austrian portrait painter, was born at Trent in 1775, and studied under his father, Johann Baptist Lampi the elder, and at the Academy at Vienna. He went afterwards to St. Petersburg, where he stayed thirteen years, and became a member of the Academy at that city as well as of that at Vienna in 1813. He painted many of the most distinguished personages of his time. Among his other works is to be mentioned a 'Venus' in the style of Füger. He died at Vienna in 1837.

LAMPSONIUS, DOMINICUS, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Bruges in 1532. He was a pupil of Lambert Lombard, whose life he afterwards wrote. He went in the suite of Cardinal Pole to England, and after his death in 1558 he settled at Liège, and was secretary to several Bishops in succession. He was also a sculptor and a poet, and wrote an elegy in Latin verse on the painters of Lower Germany, published in 1572. He died at Liège in 1599.

LAMSIN was a Flemish painter, who flourished at Ypres in 1290.

LÄMSVELT, JAN, a Dutch engraver, was born at Utrecht about the year 1660. His style resembles that of Romeyn De Hooghe. There are by him some portraits, which are scarce, and some other subjects, of which the following are the principal :

Oliver Cromwell; an oval.

Jan De Wit, pensionary of Holland.

Cornelis Pieterszoon Hooft.

Joris Cassander.

Hubert Duishuis, of Rotterdam.

The Siege of Tournay, by the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene.

LAMSWEERDE, SIMON ANTON VAN, a Dutch designer and engraver, was born at Utrecht about 1625, and was living up to 1683. He engraved several portraits in the style of Suyderhoef, though very inferior; among which are the following:

Franz Gomarius, professor of theology at Groningen.
Heurich Alting, professor of theology at Heidelberg.
Anna Maria van Schurman. 1657.
Cyprian Regnier, jurist of Utrecht.
Karel De Maets, professor of theology at Utrecht. 1659.

LA MURA, FRANCESCO, (or DE MURA,) called FRANCESCIELLO, was born at Naples in 1699. He was one of the numerous scholars of Francesco Solimena, and was much employed in ornamenting the churches and other public edifices in his native city. In the royal palace of Turin he painted, in competition with Claudio Beaumont, frescoes representing the Olympic Games, and the Life of Achilles. He died in 1782. The following frescoes by him are at Naples:

S. Chiara. St. Clara putting the Saracens to Flight.
" The Adoration of the Sacrament.
" Solomon building the Temple.
Monte Cassino. Scenes from the Old and New Testaments.
" Lives of the Saints.

LAMY, CHARLES, a French historical painter, was born at Mortagne (Orne) in 1699, and became an academician in 1735. He died in Paris in 1743. An 'Assumption of the Virgin' by him is in the Museum at Tours.

LAMY, JEAN AUGUSTE, a French painter of still-life, was the son and pupil of Louis Auguste Lamy. He was born at Marseilles in 1773, and died there in 1844. Some of his works are in the Museum at Marseilles.

LAMY, LOUIS AUGUSTE, a French landscape painter, was born at Marseilles in 1746. He was received into the Academy in 1788, and died in his native city in 1831. Many of his works are in the Museum at Marseilles.

LANA, LODOVICO, a painter and engraver, was born at Modena in 1597, and was educated at Ferrara under Ippolito Scarsellino, but afterwards studied under Guercino at Bologna. The theatre of his triumph is, however, at Modena, where there are many admirable productions of his pencil; particularly his celebrated emblematical picture of the city of Modena delivered from the horrors of the plague, in the Chiesa Nuova; a production with which few works of art at Modena can be compared. Lana was a successful imitator of Guercino, and exhibits the vigorous opposition of his masses, to which he united something of the spirited movement of Tintoretto. He was the rival of Giovanni Battista Pesari, who appears to have yielded to him the superiority, by retiring to Venice when Lana established an Academy at Modena, which became famous through Italy. He died at Rome in 1646. Among his best etchings are:

The Empress Irene binding up the Wounds of St. Sebastian.
Six Labours of Hercules.
The Holy Family.
The Virgin.
The Death of Seneca.

There is a list of his prints in Bartsch's 'Peintre-Graveur,' vol. xviii.

LANCASTER, HUME, was a painter of marine subjects and coast scenery. He was a member of the Society of British Artists, and exhibited also at the Royal Academy. Some of his views off the coast of Holland are among his best paintings. He died at Erith, in Kent, in 1850.

LANCE, GEORGE, a still-life painter, was born at Little Easton, Essex, in 1802. It was originally intended that he should follow a mercantile life, but his distaste for trade, as well as delicate health, induced his parents to consent to his pursuing art, and he accordingly, by his own introduction, became a pupil of Haydon, with whom he remained seven years. He also studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, where he exhibited from 1828 to 1862, contributing in all only thirty-eight works. His contributions more frequently appeared at the British Institution. Although it was in the representation of flowers and fruit that Lance won his greatest reputation, for some years he produced many subject pictures, and one of these, 'Melancthon's First Misgivings,' won the prize of the Liverpool Academy in 1836. In his later years, however, he gave the preference to still-life pictures. He died at Sunnyside, near Birkenhead, in 1864. Amongst his chief works are:

Captain Rolando showing Gil Blas the Treasures of the Cave. 1839.
The Village Coquette. 1843.
Portrait of Himself. 1830. } (South Kensington Museum.)
Two Fruit Pieces. }

and Bird's Nest. 1834. } (National Gallery.)

LANCE, MICHEL, a French fruit and flower painter, was born at Rouen in 1613, and died in 1661.

LANCHARES, ANTONIO, was born at Madrid in 1586. He entered the school of Patricio Caxes, where he acquired a style so like that of his master's son, Eugenio, that it is difficult to distinguish between their works. He was employed to paint various pictures for the Jesuit Convent at Madrid, and for the Carthusians at Paular, all of which have perished. In 1625 he was commissioned to paint some pictures for the Convent of the Order of Mercy at Madrid, the subjects being taken from the life of Pedro Nolasco, a zealous redeemer of Christian captives in the 13th century. He also executed a large composition for the choir. He died at Madrid in 1658.

LANCILAO, one of the best masters of miniature painting, lived in the 16th century at Padua, and studied under Bartolommeo della Gatta.

LANCILOTTO. See BLONDELL.

LANCISI, TOMMASO, was an historical painter, who was born at Città San Sepolcro in 1603. He was a pupil of Sciaminosso. Two of his brothers also were painters. He died in 1682.

LANÇON, AUGUSTE, a French water-colour draughtsman and sculptor, was a native of Sainte-Claude (Jura), and first exhibited at the Salon in 1872. His etchings of episodes in the war of 1870-71, published in Véron's 'Troisième Invasion,' and his two albums, 'La Rue à Londres,' and 'Les Animaux,' show considerable ability. He died in 1885.

LANCONELLO, CRISTOFORO, was a native of Faenza, who flourished about the year 1587. From his style, Lanzi thinks it probable that he was a disciple of Federigo Barocci. In the Palazzo Ercolani, at Bologna, is a picture by him of the 'Madonna and Child,' with a glory of angels, and St. Francis, St. Clara, and other Saints below.

LANCRENON, JOSEPH FERDINAND a French historical painter and lithographer, was born at Lods (Doubs) in 1791. He entered the École des Beaux-Arts in 1814, and after studying under Girodet-Trioson, was in 1835 appointed Director of the Museum at Besançon. He died in his native village in 1874. Amongst his works are:

- Tobit restoring his Father's Sight. 1819. } (Besançon Portrait of M. Courvoisier. } Museum.
- Boreas carrying off Oreithya. 1822. (Ceiling in the

LANCRET, NICOLAS, a French painter of 'fêtes galantes,' was born in Paris, January 22nd, 1690. His parents were in a humble position, and his father died when he was quite young. Intended for an engraver, he early received elementary instruction in drawing, but, becoming ambitious of higher things, he entered the studio of Pierre D'Ulin, one of the professors of the Academy. It was, however, to Gillot that he chiefly owed his art education. With him he remained some years, and there he came under the influence of Watteau. His friendship with the chief of the 'fêtes galantes' school was not long-lived. According to Ballot de Sovot, the success obtained by two works exhibited by him, and which were attributed to Watteau, caused a rupture between the two painters. Doubt has been expressed as to this account of the origin of the quarrel. Whatever may have been the cause, the estrangement lasted till the closing year of Watteau's life. Lancret was a thorough 'bourgeois,' and passed his time chiefly in Paris. He was a regular frequenter of the opera and the 'Comique,' and was a friend of the dancers La Camargo and La Salle, whom he frequently represented in his works. Such time as he did not spend in Paris was passed in sketching excursions in the country, and in the winter he drew much in the life school of the Academy. In 1719 he was received into the Academy as a painter of 'fêtes galantes.' Lancret long remained a bachelor: he appears to have appreciated the Parisian life 'en garçon' too much to enter early into the state of matrimony. It was not till 1740 that he married a grand-daughter of the comic poet Boursault. His married life did not, however, last long, for he died in Paris on the 14th September, 1743. Lancret has sometimes been called the art-child of Watteau, but he lacks his warmth, and he fails to invest his works with the airy gracefulness which constitutes the great charm of that master. The following is a list of his pictures in the chief public collections of Europe:

- Angers. Museum. Wedding Breakfast. 1737.

Further details as to Lancret can be obtained from Charles Blanc's 'Peintres des Fêtes galantes,' 1854, and the 'Éloge de Lancret,' by Ballot de Sovot, edited, with catalogues of his pictures and of prints engraved after his works, by J. J. Guiffrey, Paris, 1874. O.J.D.

LANDA, JUAN DE, was a Spanish painter of frescoes and historical subjects, who flourished at Pampeluna from 1570 to 1630. In 1599 he painted the high altar of Santa Maria de Tafalla, and in the following year a 'St. Michael' and a 'St. Catharine' for the church of Caseda.

LANDELLS, EBENEZER, a wood engraver, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1808. He was a pupil of Bewick, and came to London about 1829. He was much employed on the illustrated journals, contributing to 'Punch' and the 'Illustrated London News' from their commencement, as well as to the 'Illuminated Magazine' and the 'Ladies' Newspaper.' He died at Brompton in 1860.

LANDELLS, ROBERT THOMAS, the son of Ebenezer Landells, was born in 1833. He was a special artist on the staff of the 'Illustrated London News,' for which he depicted the Crimean, Danish, Austro-Prussian, and Franco-German Wars. In his later years he reproduced in oil and water-colours many of the scenes he had witnessed. He died in 1877.

LANDI, GASPARO, was born at Piacenza in 1756.

He was a pupil of Pompeo Batoni and Corvi. Though brought up in the school of the Mannerists at Rome, he did not follow their principles. His study of the great artists of the 16th century caused him to paint in a style in which he united the broad colouring of the Venetians with the pleasing chiaroscuro of the Lombards. He is considered the founder of the modern Italian school. He was Director and President of the Academy of St. Luke at Rome, and obtained the first prize at the Academy at Parma in 1781. He died at Rome in 1830. There are by him:

Florence. Pitti Palace. The Ascent to Calvary.
Piacenza. Cathedral. The Maries at the Tomb.
The Burial of the Virgin.

LANDI, GIUSEPPE ANTONIO, was an architectural painter of the 18th century. He was a pupil of Ferdinando Galli, and was received as an Academician of Bologna.

LANDI, NEROCIO DI BARTOLOMMEO, was a partner of Francesco di Giorgio, from whom he parted in 1475. He was born in 1447, and followed the professions of painting and sculpture; his death occurred in 1500 at Siena. The 'Hellespontic Sybil' in the pavement of the cathedral at Siena was designed by him in 1483, and the Academy of that city possesses several pictures by him.

LANDINO, JACOPO, called JACOPO DI CASENTINO, was a member of the family of Cristoforo Landino, of Prato Vecchio, whence he is sometimes known as 'Jacopo da Prato Vecchio.' He was born in the first years of the 14th century, at Arezzo, and was the pupil of Taddeo Gaddi, whom he followed to Florence, where he founded in 1349 the Company of Painters under the patronage of the Virgin and SS. John the Baptist, Zenobio, Reparata, and Luke. He appears to have remained at Florence until 1354, and then returned to Arezzo, where he superintended the rebuilding of the waterworks of the Fonte de' Guinizzelli. He is recorded as having executed a large number of frescoes in that city, the greater portion of which have now disappeared. Portions of the Duomo Vecchio, the Vescovado, and the church of San Bartolommeo, at Arezzo, were decorated by Casentino; the last-named building still contains a fresco by him of the 'Dead Christ bewailed by the Virgin and St. John the Evangelist.' He was the master of Agnolo Gaddi and Spinello Aretino. Little now remains of this artist's work, although it is known that he executed very many frescoes, both in Florence and in Arezzo. According to Vasari his death occurred at Prato Vecchio at the age of eighty, and he was buried in the Camaldolese church of Sant' Agnolo. The following are some of his paintings:

Florence. Uffizi. Coronation of the Virgin.
" " Predella with scenes from the life of St. Peter and eight Saints.
London. Nat. Gallery. St. John the Evangelist lifted up into Heaven.

LANDOLT, SALOMON, a German battle, landscape, and sporting painter, was born at Zurich in 1741. He entered the military profession, and studied painting in Paris with Le Paon. In 1776 he went to Berlin and raised for Frederick II. a corps of Swiss troops. In 1784 he went to Eglisen on the banks of the Rhine in command of a body of volunteers, and in 1799 he was fighting with the Archduke Charles. In 1803 he returned to Zurich, and was made a member of the Council. He died at Andelfingen in 1818.

LANDON, CHARLES PAUL, a French historical painter, was born at Nonant (Orne) in 1760. He was a pupil of Vincent and of Regnault, and obtained the 'grand prix' in 1792. In 1816 he was appointed Curator of the Louvre Gallery, and also became a corresponding member of the Institute. He died in Paris in 1826. Amongst his chief pictures are:

Dædalus and Icarus. 1799.
Leda. 1806. (Louvre.)
Venus and Cupid. 1810.
Paul and Virginia. 1812.

He is, however, better known as a writer on art: his contributions to literature amounting to more than a hundred volumes. His chief works are:

'Vies et Œuvres des Peintres les plus célèbres,' 25 vols. 1803—17.

LANDRIANI, PAOLO, horn at Milan in 1737, was a painter and architect, who studied under Gonzaga. He was employed at the Scala theatre, and became reputed as a decorator. He followed especially the principles of Bibiena, Bernardin, and Galleavi. Perego and Sanquircio were his pupils. He died at Milan in 1839.

LANDRIANI, PAOLO CAMILLO, called DUCHINO, was born at Milan about 1570. He was a scholar of Ottavio Semini, and painted history with considerable success. There are several altar-pieces by him in the churches at Milan, of which that of 'The Passion' is dated in 1602. One of his best performances is his picture of 'The Nativity,' in the church of Sant' Ambrogio. He died at Milan in 1619.

LANDRY, PIERRE, a French engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1630, and died there in 1701. He was much employed by the booksellers, and engraved a variety of frontispieces, portraits, and other subjects. His best prints are his portraits, some of which possess considerable merit. Among other plates, the following are by him:

LANDSEER, CHARLES, a subject painter, was born in 1799. He received his early instruction from his father, John Landseer, the engraver, and from Haydon. In 1816 he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where he first exhibited in 1828. He went to Portugal with Lord Stuart de Rothesay, and also to Rio de Janeiro, where he made a large number of sketches. He was elected an Associate of the Academy in 1837, and an academician in 1845. From 1851 to 1874 he conducted the instruction in the antique school of the Academy, as Keeper. He died in London in 1879, leaving £10,000 to the Royal Academy for the foundation of 'Landseer Scholarships.' Amongst his chief works are:

LANDSEER, Sir EDWIN HENRY, the eminent animal painter, was the youngest son of John Landseer, A.R.A., and was born at 83, Queen Anne Street East, London, on the 7th of March, 1802. His artistic education was begun by his father at a very early age, but not before his innate genius had shown itself in sketching and drawing, and the boy was sent into the fields to sketch from nature sheep, goats, and donkeys. In the South Kensington Museum are nine drawings, executed at a very early period of his life, some of them having been made when he was but five years old. He also produced several etchings. His first appearance in public occurred in 1815, when on the walls of the Royal Academy Exhibition appeared a 'Portrait of a Mule,' and 'Portraits of a Pointer Bitch and Puppy.' In the same year he was advised by Haydon to study the Elgin Marbles, and to dissect animals, though he does not seem to have studied under him, as did his brothers Thomas and Charles. In 1817 he exhibited the portrait of 'Brutus,' having in the preceding year entered the Royal Academy as a student. In 1818 he exhibited 'Fighting Dogs getting Wind,' at the Exhibition of the Society of Painters in Oil and Water-Colours; and at the Academy a 'Portrait of a Donkey.' In 1819, at the British Institution was 'The Cat disturbed;' in 1820, 'Alpine Mastiffs reanimating a distressed Traveller;' and in 1821, 'The Seizure of a Boar,' and 'Pointers To-ho.' In 1822 he received a premium of £150 from the directors of the British Institution for 'The Larder invaded.' In 1824 he exhibited the 'Cat's Paw,' and in the same year he paid his first visit to the Highlands in company with Leslie. They visited Glasgow, Loch Lomond, Loch Katrine, and Loch Earn, and paid a visit to Sir Walter Scott at Abbotsford. In 1825 'Taking a Buck,' and 'The Widow,' were his contributions to the Academy, and 'The Poacher' to the British Institution. In 1826 appeared 'The Dog and the Shadow;' and in the same year he became an Associate of the Royal Academy, being then twenty-four, the earliest age at which the laws of that institution admitted of his election. In 1827 were exhibited 'The Chief's Return from Deer-stalking,' 'The Monkey who had seen the World,' now the property of Lord Northbrook, and 'Chevy Chase.' In 1829 he produced 'The Highland Whiskey-Still,' the property of the Duke of Wellington, and 'A Fireside-Party.' In 1831 he was elected a Royal Academician, and in the same year he exhibited at the British Institution 'High Life' and 'Low Life,' of which latter Ruskin says, "it is the intensest rendering of vulgarity absolute and utter with which I am acquainted." In this year appeared also 'Poachers deer-stalking;' and 'Too Hot.' In 1832 was exhibited 'Spaniels of King Charles's Breed,' or 'The Cavalier's Pets,' and in 1833 'The Harvest in the Highlands,' and 'Jack in Office.' In 1834 appeared 'Suspense,' 'The Highland Shepherd Dog rescuing a Sheep from a Snow-drift;' 'Bolton Abbey in the Olden Time,' the property of the Duke of Devonshire, and 'Highland Breakfast.' In 1835 came 'The Highland Drovers' Departure,' 'A Sleeping Bloodhound,' and 'Comical Dogs.' 'The Sportsman's Annual' was published in 1836, with illustrations by Edwin Landseer, A. Cooper, and C. Hancock. In 1837 came 'The Highland Shepherd's Chief Mourner,' which Ruskin in his 'Modern Painters' praises so highly, and 'The Shepherd's Grave.' The portraits of the Marquis of Stafford and Lady Evelyn Gower, one of Landseer's best portrait pictures, appeared in 1838, together with 'There's Life in the old Dog yet,' and 'A distinguished Member of the Humane Society.' 'Dignity and Impudence,' with the title 'Dogs,' was first shown at the British Institution in 1839, in which year was exhibited also 'Van Amburgh and his Animals,' now in the Royal Collection at Osborne House. In 1840 'The Lion Dog from Malta,' 'Laying down the Law,' and 'Roebuck and Rough Hounds,' appeared at the Academy. 'Otter and Salmon,' in 1842, was the fruit of one of those visits to the Highlands which had become annual. In the same year were exhibited the 'Highland Shepherd's Home;' 'Pair of Brazilian Monkeys;' 'Breeze,' a retriever; 'Eos,' a greyhound belonging to Prince Albert; and 'The Sanctuary.' In 1844 he exhibited 'The Otter speared,' 'Coming Events cast their Shadows before,' sometimes called 'The Challenge,' and 'Shoeing,' 'Peace' and 'War' appeared in 1846, as did also 'The Stag at Bay.' 'The Drive,' produced in 1847, was a hunting-piece, representing the shooting of deer in a pass of Glenorchy Forest. The pictures of 1848 were 'A Random Shot,' one of the most pathetic of Landseer's works; 'The old Cover Hack;' 'Alexander and Diogenes;' and the 'Sketch of my Father.' These were accompanied by a series of etchings by C. G. Lewis, styled 'The Mothers,' from drawings made by Landseer in 1837. In this year also he received a commission to paint three subjects connected with the chase for the Peers' Refreshment Room in the new Houses of Parliament, but the matter came to nothing, as the House of Commons refused to vote the money. In 1849 Landseer paid his first visit to Belgium to collect materials for the 'Dialogue at Waterloo,' which appeared in 1850, in which year he was knighted. 'The Monarch of the Glen,' 'The Last Run of the Season,' and 'Titania and Bottom,' were the chief pictures of 1851. To 1853 belong 'The Combat,' 'Night and Morning,' and 'Children of the Mist.' In 1856 he contributed 'Saved' to the Academy Exhibition. In 1857 came 'Scene in Braemar,' a magnificent stag; 'Rough and Ready,' a portrait of a favourite mare; and 'Uncle Tom and his Wife for sale.' In 1858 appeared 'The Maid and the Magpie,' and 'Deer browsing,' an immense cartoon in coloured chalks. In the British Institution of the same year were 'Twa Dogs,' and a portrait of Sir Walter Scott. The year 1860 produced 'A Flood in the Highlands,' 1861, 'The Taming of the Shrew;' and 1864, 'Man proposes, God disposes,' an Arctic incident, suggested by the finding of the relics of Sir John Franklin. In 1865 was exhibited 'The Connoisseurs' (his own portrait); in 1867, 'Her Majesty at Osborne;' and in 1869 his last great picture, 'The Swannery invaded by Sea Eagles.' In 1869 the Lions at the four corners of the Nelson Monument were uncovered. On the death of Sir Charles Eastlake Landseer declined the Presidency of the Royal Academy, and in 1855 he received the large gold medal at the Paris Universal Exhibition. His later years were clouded by fits of depression, and he died at St. John's Wood, London, on the 1st of October, 1873, and was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral. The Winter Exhibition of the Royal Academy in 1874 was entirely devoted to his works, when 461 pictures, drawings, and sketches were exhibited, besides many touched proofs of engravings after his works. A complete catalogue of Landseer's works and of the engravings after them has been compiled by Algernon Graves, Chief among the engravers are his brother Thomas Landseer, Charles George Lewis, Charles Heath, Robert Graves, John Burnet, William Finden, Samuel Cousins, Francis Holl, James Stepbenson, John Outrim, and Thomas L. Atkinson. A uniform series of small engravings in mezzotint has been in course of publication since 1880 by Messrs. Henry Graves and Co.

The following are the principal pictures by him in public and private collections:

Chatsworth.	House.	Bolton Abbey in the Olden Time.

LANDSEER, GEORGE, the only son of Thomas Landseer, was born about 1834. When about twenty years of age he went to India, and whilst there he painted a great many portraits of Rajahs and other distinguished natives, and also made a large series of water-colour drawings of views in Cashmere and the hill country, which he brought back with him on his return to England about 1870, after which date he was an invalid and did little or no work. He died in London in 1878.

LANDSEER, HENRY, a landscape painter, was a brother of John Landseer, and a frequent contributor to the Exhibitions, especially to that of the Society of British Artists. His name appears at the British Institution Exhibitions of 1821, 1822, and 1823.

LANDSEER, JESSICA, a daughter of John Landseer, who died at Folkestone in 1880, also used the painter's brush and the etching-needle. She etched a few designs after her brother Edwin.

LANDSEER, JOHN, a line-engraver, was born at Lincoln in 1769. He was the son of a jeweller, and was apprenticed to William Byrne, the landscape engraver. The earliest works on which he was engaged were the illustrations after De Louthembourg for Macklin's Bible, and Bowyer's 'History of England.' These were followed in 1795 by Moore's 'Twenty-five Views in the Southern Part of Scotland.' He devoted considerable attention to a series of engravings of animals after the great masters, which were afterwards published in a collected form. In 1806 he delivered a course of lectures on engraving at the Royal Institution, and in 1802 he was elected an Associate Engraver of the Royal Academy. He had previously attacked the Academy on account of the total exclusion of engravers from its honours, and his election did not prevent his continuing to urge their claims to full membership. Antiquarian pursuits had a great attraction for him, and he published 'Observations on the Engraved Gems from Babylon' (1817), and 'Sabæan Researches' (1833). He continued to exhibit at the Academy up to 1851. He died in London in 1852, and was buried at Highgate Cemetery. Two of his sons, Edwin and Charles, became Royal Academicians, and a third, Thomas Landseer, followed in his father's footsteps, and became an eminent engraver.

LANDSEER, THOMAS, the eldest son of John Landseer, was born in London in 1795, and was brought up by his father to the profession of an engraver; he also studied, with his brother Charles, under Haydon, by whose instruction he made chalk drawings from the cartoons of Raphael. His first engraving on copper was, it is said, a 'Study of the Head of a Sibyl,' after Haydon, which appeared in 1816; and from that time he continued to engrave diligently through a long life, the labours of which were somewhat tardily recognized by the Royal Academy in 1868, when he was elected an Associate Engraver. He died in London in 1880. Thomas Landseer's engravings are for the most part from the works of his brother Edwin, and it is no disparagement to the latter to say that his pictures owe much of their popularity and public appreciation to the faithful and sympathetic rendering which they have received at the hands of the engraver. The following are after Sir Edwin Landseer:

- A Bull; an etching. 1811.
- To-Ho; an etching. 1823.

Besides these must be mentioned his engraving of the 'Horse Fair,' after Rosa Bonheur; 'Ten Etchings illustrative of Coleridge's 'Devil's Walk,' 1831; 'Monkeyana,' 1827; and 'Characteristic Sketches of Animals,' 1832.

LANDTSHEER, JAN DE, a Flemish painter, born at Baesrode in 1750, was a pupil of the Antwerp Academy in 1779. He painted portraits, and historical and genre subjects. At Brussels is a picture of 'Venus clipping the Wings of Love;' and at Haarlem 'Two Children seated.' He died in 1828.

LANDULFO, POMPEO, a Neapolitan painter, was born about the year 1515. According to Dominici, he was of ancient family, and showing an early disposition for art, was placed under the care of Gian Bernardo Lama, where he discovered a superior genius, and whilst he was yet very young, painted an altar-piece for the church of San Matteo, at Naples, representing the 'Virgin with the Infant Jesus in the clouds, surrounded by angels.' He afterwards painted a fine picture for the church of La Pietà, of the 'Holy Family, with St. Francis, St. Catharine, and St. Lucia.' He died at Naples in 1590.

LANE, JOHN BRYANT, an historical painter, was born in Cornwall towards the end of the 18th century. Originally intended for the medical profession, he was enabled to study art through the patronage of Lord de Dunstanville. He exhibited some pretentious works at the Royal Academy from 1808 to 1813, and then went to Rome, where during the next fifteen years he was chiefly employed on an ambitious picture, 'The Vision of Joseph,' which proved a failure. He last exhibited at the Academy from 1831 to 1834.

LANE, RICHARD JAMES, an engraver, was born in 1800. His mother was a niece of Gainsborough, and his father a prebendary of Hereford. At the age of sixteen he was apprenticed to Charles Heath, under whom he made good progress, but owing to the decadence of line engraving, he devoted himself to lithography, which he practised with much success. Among his works were a series of sketches by Gainsborough, followed by 'Imitations of British Artists,' and 'Sketches by Sir Thomas Lawrence.' He was appointed lithographer to the Queen, for whom he executed many portraits after Winterhalter and Chalon. In 1827 he was elected an Associate Engraver of the Royal Academy. He died at Kensington in 1872.

LANE, SAMUEL, a portrait painter, was born at King's Lynn in 1780. From his childhood he was deaf and almost dumb. His instructors in art were Farington and Sir Thomas Lawrence. The fidelity of his likenesses procured him a large practice, and he contributed many portraits to the Royal Academy from 1804 to 1857. He retired in 1853 to Ipswich, where he died in 1859. Amongst his works are:

- G. Crompe. 1813. (Clothworkers' Hall, London.)
- Thomas Clarkson. (Wisbeach Town Hall.)
- Lord De Saumarez. 1838. (United Service Club, London.)
- John Kaye, Bishop of Lincoln. (Riseholme Palace.)
- Lord George Bentinck. (King's Lynn Town Hall.)

LANE, SOLOMON DE. See DE LANE.

LANE, THEODORE, a subject painter, was born at Isleworth in 1800. He originally studied engraving, which he early quitted for portrait painting, exhibiting at the Royal Academy from 1816. His forte, however, was in humorous subjects, and he was attaining some position when his death occurred in 1828 through falling through a skylight in Gray's Inn Road, London. His best works are:

- The Christmas Present. 1827.
- The Gouty Angler. 1828. (National Gallery; but lent to the Corporation of Stockport.)
- Disturbed by the Nightmare. (1828.)

LANE, WILLIAM, a portrait painter, was born in 1746. He for some years practised as a gem engraver, but afterwards devoted himself to portraits in crayons. He had a large circle of sitters, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1785 to 1815. He died at Hammersmith in 1819.

LANEN, VAN DER. See VAN DER LANEN.

LANETTI, ANTONIO, a painter, was a native of Bugnatò. He was a pupil of Gaudenzio, and had a reputation in Ferrara. He died about 1530.

LANEUVILLE, JEAN LOUIS, a French portrait painter, was a native of Paris, and a pupil of David. He exhibited at the 'Exposition de la Jeunesse' in 1783 and 1789, and at the Salon from 1791 to 1817. He died in 1826.

LANFRANCO, GIOVANNI, called CAVALIERE GIOVANNI DI STEFANO, was born at Parma, on the same day with Domenichino, in 1581. His parents placed him, when a boy, as page to the Count Scotti at Piacenza. While in the service of that nobleman he was perceived drawing with a piece of charcoal the frieze of one of the apartments; and the Count, desirous of encouraging his apparent disposition for art, introduced him to Agostino Carracci, who was at that time employed by the Duke Ranuccio at Ferrara. The young pupil made rapid progress under so able an instructor, and before he was sixteen he painted a picture of the 'Virgin and several Saints,' which was deemed worthy of being placed in the church of Sant' Agostino at Piacenza. By the advice of Agostino Carracci, he studied with particular attention the works of Correggio; but though he attained to some approach to his model in the grandeur of his conceptions and the bold variety of his foreshortening, he could not imitate the tender beauty of his expression and the graceful turn of his forms, the peculiar characteristics of the works of Correggio. Lanfranco was twenty years old when death deprived him of the lessons of Agostino. He then went to Rome, and became a student under Annibale Carracci, who employed him in the Farnese Gallery, and in the church of St. Giacomo, where he executed some frescoes from Annibale's designs. The works of Raphael were also the objects of his attentive admiration. In conjunction with his compatriot and fellow-student, Sisto Badalocchio, he etched the history of the Bible, from Raphael's Loggie in the Vatican, which they dedicated to Annibale. After the death of that master, Lanfranco was employed by Cardinal Sannes in some works, which first brought him into public notice at Rome, and he increased his reputation by his fresco paintings in the chapel of Buon Giovanni in the church of Sant' Agostino, the principal picture representing the 'Assumption of the Virgin.' He was taken under the protection of Paul V., who employed him in his chapel in Santa Maria Maggiore, and in the great saloon at the Quirinal, where he painted 'Moses striking the Rock,' 'Abraham sacrificing Isaac,' and 'The Flight into Egypt.' It was about this time that, by the death of Cardinal Montalto, the patron of Domenichino, he procured, through intrigue, the commission to paint the cupola of Sant' Andrea della Valle, which had been promised to Domenichino, who had previously painted the four angles. However one may lament that the work was not completed by that master, it is but justice to acknowledge that on this occasion Lanfranco surpassed himself. In wrestling with so formidable an antagonist, he assembled and put forth all his powers. This celebrated work represents the 'Virgin seated in the Clouds, contemplating the figure of our Saviour,' which is in the upper part of the composition; on one side are St. Peter and St. Gaëtan; and on the other, St. Andrew and other Saints, the principal light emanates from a luminous glory surrounding the body of Christ, and spreads itself in tender and harmonious suffusion over the whole composition. The grandeur of the arrangement, the boldness of the design, the admirable disposition of the groups, and the intrepid daring of the 'di sotto in su,' rank this performance among the most extraordinary achievements of the art of that description, after Correggio's cupola at Parma. The increasing fame of Lanfranco spread to Naples, whither he was invited, in 1646, to paint the cupola of San Gennaro, which occupied him a year and a half; he there depicted the 'Ascension of the Virgin,' with a countless host of Saints. This great work has been destroyed by an earthquake, except the angles, which remain. In the church of San Martino also he decorated the cupola with 'The Ascension,' the Apostles, and the Miracles of Christ. Lanfranco was at Naples when Domenichino was engaged to paint the cupola of the Treasury, in which he had made considerable progress when the cabals of Lanfranco and some of the Neapolitan artists occasioned the work to be suspended. After the death of Domenichino, Lanfranco was employed to finish it: he destroyed all that had been done except the angles, which are still the admiration of the intelligent observer, and loudly proclaim the transcendent superiority of their author over his malevolent competitor. The troubles which soon after took place at Naples occasioned Lanfranco to return to Rome during the pontificate of Urban VIII., who employed him to paint a picture for the basilica of St. Peter, representing that apostle walking on the sea, which has been engraved by Gérard Audran; and in a series of pictures of the 'Passion of Christ,' for the chapel of the Crucifix. These productions were so much to the satisfaction of the Pope that he conferred on the painter the order of knighthood. The last works of Lanfranco were his pictures in the tribune of San Carlo ai Catinari, and they are the feeblest of his performances. He died at Rome in 1647. LANG, MORITZ, a German engraver, flourished about 1670. He chiefly resided at Vienna, and was much employed by the booksellers, for whom he engraved a number of frontispieces, book-plates, and portraits, of which the last were the best. He worked with the graver, and executed several of the plates for Priorato's 'History of the Emperor Leopold.'

LANGE, ANGE LOUIS JANET. See JANET LANGE.

L'ANGE, FRANÇOIS, who was born at Annecy in Savoy, in 1676, was a pupil of André Cheville at Turin, where he was much patronized. He also painted with much success at Bologna, where he joined the Society of St. Philip Neri in 1735, and died in 1756. His chief merit, as an artist, was in small Scriptural pieces, which Lanzi saw at Vercelli, and of which he speaks in terms of commendation.

LANGE, FRIEDRICH, a German painter of Scriptural subjects, was born at Plau, in Mecklenburg, in 1834, and painted under the influence of Cornelius. His 'Christ on the Cross' and 'Faith, Love, and Hope' are in the Schwerin Gallery. He died at Strassburg in 1875.

LANGE, JAN HENDRIK, was a Flemish historical painter, who was a pupil of Van Dyck, and died at Brussels in 1671.

LANGE, JOSEPH, an Austrian painter, was born at Würzburg in 1751. On the death of his father he went to Vienna in 1767, and attended the Art School. He was better known as an actor, and painted several portraits of dramatic celebrities. He died at Vienna in 1831.

LANGE, JULIUS, was born at Darmstadt in 1817. He was instructed in the rudiments of art by Müller, the Inspector of the Gallery, and at the age of fifteen he made designs for a work of his brother Ludwig, entitled 'Views of the Chief Towns in Germany,' which was published at Darmstadt in 1834. In this year he went to Munich, and studied historical painting at the Academy. In 1835 he went to Düsseldorf, and visited Switzerland with J. W. Schirmer. In 1840 Rottmann persuaded him to return to Munich, where he became highly esteemed for his mountain landscapes. In 1854 he visited Upper Italy, where he made a number of sketches for the Academy of Venice, of which he was made a member. In 1857 he was appointed drawing-master to the Archduchess Charlotte, Empress of Mexico. In 1858 he entered the service of King Maximilian of Bavaria, and in 1867 was appointed court painter to Louis II. He was a famous draughtsman in crayons. He died at Munich in 1878. Some of his principal works are:

Landscape in Upper Italy.

Two Views of the Gossau Lake. (New Pinakothek, Munich.)

View near Partenkirchen. (The same.)

The Gäll.

Watzmaun in the Tyrol.

LANGE, LUDWIG, born at Darmstadt in 1808, was an architect and painter. He studied landscape painting under Rottmann, with whom he visited Greece, where he stayed three years as master of design at Athens. He executed a series of Greek landscapes which are of considerable merit. He died at Munich in 1868.

LANGE, SØREN LÆSSØE, a Danish painter, was born at Faaborg, in the island of Funen, in 1760. He entered the Academy at Copenhagen in 1781, and his merit was deservedly rewarded with several medals of the Academy, and the gold medal of the court. His landscapes and portraits are distinguished for their beauty. He also etched on copper. He died in 1828.

LANGE JAN. See BOCKHORST, JOHANN VON.

LANGE PEER. See AARTSEN.

LANGENDYK, DIRK, born at Rotterdam in 1748, was a scholar of D. A. Bisschop. He designed and painted combats and battles, in the composition of which he showed extraordinary skill. He depicted the passions with great truth, and gave to the smallest details of his subject the highest degree of finish. His drawings are particularly admired, and some of his landscapes with cows and horses have been engraved. His paintings in oil are not numerous; they are, like his drawings, skirmishes and battles, by sea and land. In the Rotterdam Museum are pictures of 'A Camp,' 'A Cavalry Charge,' and 'A Wounded General,' and twenty-one etchings. He died at Rotterdam in 1805.

LANGENDYK, JAN ANTONIE, son of Dirk Langendyk, was born at Rotterdam in 1780. He went a voyage to St. Domingo, but afterwards returned to his own country, where he lived successively at Rotterdam, The Hague, Brussels, and Amsterdam, at which latter place he died in 1818. He painted in the style of his father, and has left some good engravings.

LANGENHÖFFEL, JOHANN JOSEPH, was born at Düsseldorf in 1750. After receiving his education in his native city, he made several etchings after the Italian masters, in which he displayed great proficiency. He became court painter at Mannheim, and afterwards director of the Gallery at Vienna, where he died in 1807. Among his historical paintings and portraits are:

The Rape of the Sabines.

Venus binding Cupid apprentice to Bion.

Portrait of the Emperor Leopold II.

His etchings are entitled:

'Recueil des Dessins gravés d'après les fameux Maitres à Düsseldorf,' 1780.

LANGER, JOHANN PETER VON, was born at Calcum, near Düsseldorf, in 1756. He studied at the Düsseldorf Academy under Krahe, and became professor in 1784, and director in 1789; as well as director of the Gallery. He visited Holland and Paris, and was afterwards appointed director of the Academy, which was founded at that time at Munich. He died at Munich in 1824. He was the follower of a stiff classicism, and though his religious and historical subjects are of excellent colouring, his compositions are cold and too studied. Many of his works are in the Gallery at Schlessheim. Among his best paintings are:

Six subjects from the fable of Psyche. (A Saloon at Barmen.)

'Let the Little Children come unto Me.' (School-Chapel at Munich.)

Portrait of Queen Theresa of Bavaria.

Among his best etchings is that of 'St. Jerome,' after Correggio.

LANGER, SEBASTIAN, an Austrian engraver, was born at Troppau in 1772, and was educated in the Academy of Vienna. The year of his death is not known. He worked chiefly for the booksellers, though he also executed some plates, among which were:

 The Quack; after G. Dou.
 The Old Jew; after Hoogstraeten.
 St. Francis; after Carracci.
 The Prophet Isaiah; after Raphael.
 The Dentist; after I. van Ostade.

LANGETTI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Genoa in 1635. He was first a scholar of Pietro da Cortona, but afterwards studied under Giovanni Francesco Cassana. Although celebrated by the poet Boschini, his powers appear to have been chiefly confined to heads and busts of old men, of which there are many in private collections in the Venetian States, and in Lombardy. Lanzi notices a picture by him of 'The Crucifixion,' in the church of Santa Teresa at Genoa. In the Dresden Gallery is a picture of 'The Punishment of Marsyas,' and in the Brunswick Gallery is one of 'Archimedes.' He died at Venice in 1676.

LANGEVELT, RUTGER VAN, was born at Nymwegen in 1635, and was a pupil of the Academy of that town. Frederick William, Elector of Brandenburg, sent for him to Berlin, where he appointed him painter, architect, and mathematician to the court, and director of the Academy. In the Court House at Nymwegen is a historical picture by this artist. He died at Berlin in 1695. He had a son Wilhelm, who was a portrait painter at Berlin.

LANGJAN, REMIGIUS, a painter of the 17th century, was one of the best pupils of Van Dyck. In the Vienna Gallery is a picture by him of 'Herse going with her sisters to the Temple of Minerva.' He died in 1670, or 1671.

LANGLACÉ, JEAN BAPTISTE GABRIEL, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1786. He exhibited at the Salon from 1817 to 1845, and also painted upon porcelain at the manufactory at Sèvres. He died at Versailles in 1864.

LANGLEY, THOMAS, a brother of Batty Langley the architect, resided in London during the first part of the last century. There are some plates of antiquities by him, and he published, in conjunction with his brother, several works on Gothic architecture, with the plates designed and engraved by himself. He died in 1751.

LANGLOIS, CHARLES, a battle and panorama painter, was born at Beaumont, Calvados, in 1789. He first attended the Polytechnic School, and afterwards studied under Girodet, Gros, and Horace Vernet. He travelled in Algeria and the Crimea, and died in Paris in 1870. At Versailles are pictures of the 'Battles of Castella,' 'Smolensk,' 'Polotsk,' and 'Borodino,' and 'The Taking of Morea.' His best panoramas were the 'Battle of Eylau,' the 'Battle of the Pyramids,' the 'Battle of Solferino,' and the 'Burning of Moscow.'

LANGLOIS, CLAUDE LOUIS, called LANGLOIS DE SEZANNE, a French portrait painter, was born at Sezanne in 1757. He was instructed by Beaufort, and painted the portraits of several famous French generals, many of which were engraved by Voissart for different publications. He was director of the Drawing School at Sens till 1830, when he removed to Paris. He died in 1845.

LANGLOIS, EUSTACHE HYACINTHE, a French landscape painter, draughtsman, and engraver, was born at Pont-de-l'Arche in 1777. His art training was due to Lemonnier and David. During the Revolution he was imprisoned, and was also drawn for military service, but owed his escape to the Empress Joséphine. He afterwards settled at Rouen, where he taught in the Academy. He devoted great attention to archæology, and published many works in connection with it, which he illustrated himself. He died at Rouen in 1837. His chief publications were:

'Description historique des Maisons de Rouen.' 1821.
 'Essai sur la Peinture sur verre.' 1832.
 'Essai sur l'Abbaye de Fontenelle.' 1834.
 'Stalles de la Cathédrale de Rouen.' 1838.
 'Essai sur la Calligraphie des Manuscrits du Moyen-Age.' 1841.
 'Essai historique sur les Danses des Morts.' 1851.

LANGLOIS, FRANÇOIS, called CIARTRES, was a French engraver and printseller, who died in Paris in 1748. He has left the 'History of Psyche,' a series of thirteen plates after Raphael, and the 'Theological and Cardinal Virtues,' after the pictures at Fontainebleau.

L'ANGLOIS, GUILLERMO, a French artist, with whom Alexander Gonzalez Velazquez painted from the designs of Mengs a ceiling in the Palace at Madrid about 1750.

LANGLOIS, JEAN, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1649. After learning the rudiments of design in his native city under Vien, he went to Rome, and became a member of the French Academy there. He died about 1712. He engraved several plates from the antique statues, and some architectural subjects from Andrea Palladio. There are also by him a few portraits, and other prints, among which are the following:

PORTRAITS.

LANGLOIS, JÉRÔME MARTIN, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1779. He studied under David, whom he assisted in many of his works, and obtained the second prize in 1805, and the grand prix in 1809. After his period of study at Rome, he returned to France in 1815, and in 1824 went to Brussels to paint the portrait of his exiled master, David, to whose principles he was ever faithful. He died in Paris in 1838, having in the same year been elected a member of the Institute. Amongst his works are :

Bordeaux.	Cathedral.	St. Hilary.

LANGLOIS, NICOLAS, a French engraver, who flourished in the second part of the 17th century, was the son of François Langlois, called Ciartres, whose business as a printseller he continued to carry on. The following plates are by him :

The Holy Family; after Raphael.
 St. Paul and Barnabas; after the same.
 St. Paul; after Le Pautre.
 The Repentance of St. Peter; after the same.

LANGLOIS, PIERRE GABRIEL, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1754. He was a pupil of Simonet, and worked on the 'Galerie de Florence,' the 'Musée des Monuments Français,' by Lenoir, and on the edition of Voltaire's works published by Beaumarchais. He died about 1810. He reproduced several pictures of the Italian and Dutch schools, among which may be named :

Silence; after A. Carracci.
 The Alchemist; after Teniers.
 The Virgin and Child; after Titian.
 Roman Charity; after Pellegrini.
 The Denial of St. Peter; after Teniers.

LANGLOIS, VINCENT MARIE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1756, and was instructed by his brother Pierre Gabriel Langlois. He engraved several vignettes after Moreau, Lebardier, and others. The date of his death is unrecorded. Among his plates are :

Portrait of Andrea del Sarto; after himself.
 The Holy Family; after Rubens.
 Venus in the Forge of Vulcan; after Van Dyck.
 Virgin and Child; after L. Carracci.

LANGLOIS DE CHEVREVILLE, LUCIEN THÉOPHILE ANGE SOSTHÈNE, was born at Mortain (Manche), in 1803. He studied under Gros, and stayed afterwards for a considerable time at Rome, Pompeii, and Geneva. Subsequently he returned to France, and settled at Rouen, where he founded a studio for painting and perspective. Later on he went to Cherbourg as conservator of the Museum, and to Paris as professor of design at the College. He died in Paris in 1845. He was an excellent copyist and painter of portraits. Of his large historical subjects mention may be made of :

An Angel overthrowing a Demon. (St. Pierre, Rouen.)
 An Apparition of the Virgin. (St. Patrice, Rouen.)

LANGOT, FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, was chiefly employed in copying the prints of other masters, particularly Cornelis Bloemaert and Huret.

LANGREMUS, M. F., an engraver, executed several book-plates, frontispieces, portraits, &c. He lived about the year 1649.

LANGUASCO, TERESA MARIA, a barefooted monk, was born at San Remo in 1651, and died in 1698. He studied under Giovanni Battista Carlone. In St. Niccolò at Tolentino are some saints of his order painted by him.

LANIERE, NICCOLÒ, or NICHOLAS, who was a native of Italy, born apparently in 1568, lived in England during at any rate the latter portion of his life. He possessed various talents, which were all suited to the taste of Charles I., being a musician, a painter, an engraver, and a connoisseur; and he had a great share in the purchases made for the royal collection. As a painter, he drew a 'Holy Family' for the king; and his own portrait, by himself, with a pallet and pencil in his hand, and a scrip of paper, with musical notes, is in the music-school at Oxford. He possessed a considerable collection of drawings, several of which he caused to be engraved, and etched some of them himself; on one of them is the inscription in Italian, 'Prove prima fatte a l'acqua forte da N. Laniera a l'età sua giovanile di settanta otto anni 1636.' He died in London in 1646.

LANINI, BERNARDINO, was born at Vercelli about the year 1520, and was a disciple of Gaudenzio Ferrari, whose style he imitated with such precision, that a picture he painted for the church of San Giuliano, at Milan, representing a 'Pieta,' might be taken for a work of that master, had he not signed it with his name, and the date 1547. At a later period of his life, he worked with more freedom, and painted an altar-piece of St. Catharine, for the church dedicated to that saint near San Celso, which is highly commended by Lomazzo. He was much employed at Milan, and in the State, and particularly at Novara, where he painted, in the cathedral, the 'Eternal Father,' the Sibyls, and some subjects from the life of the Virgin. In some of his works he aimed at the impressive style of Leonardo da Vinci, particularly in a picture in Sant' Ambrogio, of 'Our Saviour after the Scourging, between two Angels;' a production so full of pious and beautiful expression, and of such admirable relief, that it is esteemed one of the finest works of art in that basilica. He died about the year 1578. In addition to the above paintings, he has left :

Berlin.	Gallery.	Madonna and Saints.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	Holy Family. 1543.
Milan.	Brera.	Three Angels playing.
"	"	St. Martha.
"	"	Virgin and Child, with Saints.

LANINI, GAUDENZIO, and GIROLAMO, were the brothers of Bernardino Lanini, and followed his style at a humble distance. By the former, Lanzi mentions a picture in the sacristy of the Barnabites, representing the 'Virgin and Infant, with several Saints'; and by the latter, a 'Deposition from the Cross,' in a private collection at Vercelli.

LANKRINK, PROSPER HENRICUS, was born at Antwerp in 1628. His father, a soldier of fortune, had come to that city from Germany, and there he obtained a colonel's commission, and died. The young Lankrink received a good education, and was intended by his mother for a monk, but discovering an inclination for painting, he was permitted to attend the Academy, where his progress was considerable, and was promoted by his having access to study the best pictures in one of the finest collections at Antwerp. Lankrink went afterwards to Italy and especially studied the works of Salvator Rosa. On the death of his mother he came to England, in the reign of Charles II., and was patronized by Sir Edward Spragge, and more particularly by Sir William Williams, for whom he painted a great number of landscapes, which were destroyed when that gentleman's mansion was burned down. His pictures were in considerable estimation, and he was occasionally employed by Sir Peter Lely to paint his backgrounds. The scenery in his landscapes is wild and romantic, with rocks and broken grounds, in the style of Salvator Rosa. In later life he degenerated into an idle and dissolute character. He died in London in 1692.

LANOUE, FÉLIX HIPPOLYTE, a French landscape painter, was born at Versailles in 1812, and studied under Victor Bertin and Horace Vernet. After having obtained the first prize at the École des Beaux-Arts in 1842, with 'Apollo tending Sheep,' he visited Rome, Holland, and Russia. He died at Versailles in 1872. His chief merit consists in representing Italian scenes, especially those of the Campagna. Among his best landscapes are :

The Tiber at Acqua Acetosa. 1864.

View in the Island of Capri. 1848. (Lisieux Museum.)

View of the Roman Aqueduct over the Gard. 1850. (Avignon Museum.)

The Rock of the Nasos, in the Roman Campagna. 1866. (The same.)

St. Benedict in the Solitudes of Subiaco. 1853. (St. Étienne-du-Mont, Paris.)

LANSCROON, —, a native of Flanders, came over to England and assisted Verrio and Laguerre. He died in 1737, leaving a son who followed the same profession.

LANSE, MICHEL, a French painter of flowers and birds, was born at Ronen in 1613. He became a member of the Paris Academy in 1660, and died in 1661.

LANT, THOMAS, who was born about 1555, was in the service of Sir Philip Sidney, whose funeral procession he drew and published in 1587. He was created Windsor Herald in 1597, and died in 1600.

LANTARA, SIMON MATHURIN, was born at Oncy (Seine-et-Oise), in 1729. His father was a weaver, and at the age of eight he commenced life as a herdsman. The chalk sketches which he made on walls, rocks, &c., caused his talent to be appreciated by the son of his master, who took him to Paris, and placed him in a studio at Versailles. He made rapid progress, and entered the service of an artist in Paris, who paid his wages in painting lessons. There is little else known of Lantara; he lived a careless life from hand to mouth, working when he wanted food, never profiting from the success which his works enjoyed. He executed many drawings, landscapes, and marine views, in which Bernard, Joseph Vernet, Casanova, Berré, and Taunay, often inserted the figures. He died in extreme poverty in the Hôpital de la Charité, Paris, in 1778. Many of his works have been engraved by Duret, Lebas, Mouchy, Née, Beaugeon, and Couché. Among his principal works are the following :

Landscape: Morning Effect. 1761. (Louvre.)

Morning. (Besançon Museum.)

View on the Banks of the Loing. (Châteauroux Museum.)

Moonlight Scene. (Nantes Museum.)

LANZANI, ANDREA, was born at Milan about the year 1645. After receiving some lessons from Luigi Scaramuccia, a scholar of Guido, then resident at Milan, he went to Rome, where he entered the school of Carlo Maratti. His genius, however, led him to something less placid; and he particularly devoted himself to the study of the energetic productions of Lanfranco. His best pictures were those he painted immediately on his return to Milan, whilst his mind was impressed with the great principles of the Roman school. Such are his picture of 'St. Charles in Glory;' and a subject from the life of Cardinal Federigo, in the Ambrosian Library at Vienna. He also painted at the court at Vienna, and was there knighted. He died at Milan in 1712.

LANZANI, POLIDORO, called POLIDORO VENEZIANO, was born at Venice in 1515, and was one of the numerous scholars of Titian. He has left pictures of Madonnas and Saints in the church of the Servi, and in other public buildings at Venice, and a 'Madonna' and a 'Marriage of St. Catharine' are to be seen at Dresden. He died in 1565.

LANZENI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, a painter and etcher, was born at Verona in 1659. His masters were Voltolino and F. Barbieri. He painted at Verona in oil and fresco for churches and private houses. In San Proclo he painted thirty-six Bishops of Verona, the 'Four Doctors of the Church,' and 'The Last Supper.' The date of his death is unknown. He had a son, ANGELO MARIA, who was also a painter.

LANZILAGO, an Italian historical and portrait painter, was a native of Padua, who flourished towards the close of the 15th century. He went to Rome and was an imitator of Bartolommeo della Gatta.

LAODICIA, was a painter of the Milanese school, and contemporary of Andriano di Edesia, who lived at Pavia in the first half of the 14th century. She was probably a Greek by birth.

LAP, JAN, a Dutch artist, flourished about the middle of the 17th century, and drew and painted landscapes with ruins and numerous figures, in the manner of Jan Both.

LA PEIGNE, HYACINTHE DE. See DE LA PEIGNE.

LA PEÑA, DE. See DE LA PEÑA.

LA PENAI, —, was a French portrait painter, of the 16th century, and a pupil of Rigand.

LAPI, GIOVANNI, an Italian engraver, flourished about 1750, and executed some of the plates for the 'Museo Etrusco.' There were other engravers of the name of Lapi.

LAPI, NICCOLÒ, an Italian painter, was born in 1661, and died in 1732. He was a scholar of Luca Giordano. At Florence is a 'Transfiguration' by him.

LAPIS, GAETANO, was born at Cagli in the Roman State, in 1704, and studied at Rome under Sebastiano Conca. He was a painter of an original taste, possessing great fire, yet correct in his design. In the Palazzo Borghese at Rome, he painted a ceiling representing the 'Birth of Venus.' He died at Rome in 1776.

LAPIS, GIROLAMO, an historical, portrait, and landscape painter, who flourished in the 18th century, was a native of Venice. He settled in Holland, and was living at the Hague in 1785. H. Lapis, the miniature painter, was probably his son.

LAPITO, LOUIS AUGUSTE, a French landscape painter, was born at Joinville-le-Pont (Seine) in 1803. He studied under Heim and Watelet, whose style, though differing in colouring, he followed. He died at Boulogne-sur-Seine in 1874. His best landscapes are:

LAPPO, TOMMASO DI, called GIOTTINO, son of Stefano di Lapo, was born at Florence in 1324. He painted a picture of Gauthier de Brienne, who was driven from Florence in 1343. At Naples is a 'Virgin and Angels,' and some other works are at Florence. He died in 1356.

LA POINTE, F. DE. See DE LA POINTE.

LAPORTE, GEORGE HENRY, an animal painter, was an exhibitor at the Society of British Artists from 1825, and at the Royal Academy from 1827. He was a member and constant exhibitor at the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, his subjects being animals and figures, military and Arab groups, and hunting-scenes. He was animal painter to the Duke of Cumberland. He died in 1873.

LA PORTE, HENRI HORACE ROLLAND DE. See ROLLAND DE LA PORTE.

LAPORTE, JOHN, an English landscape painter, chiefly in water-colours, was born in 1761. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1785, and taught drawing at the Military School at Addiscombe. He published 'Sketches of Trees' (1798-1801); 'Drawing Book' (1800); 'Progressive Lessons sketched from Nature' (1804); and 'The Progress of Water-Colour Drawing.' He died in London in 1839. The following drawings by him are in the South Kensington Museum:

Conway Castle.
 Buttermere.
 Forest Scene with Cattle. 1790.

LAPPICOLA, NICCOLÒ, a painter, was born at Crotona in 1730, and took lessons at Rome from Francesco Mancini. He supplied the designs for the mosaics for one of the chapels of St. Peter and in other parts. He died at Rome in 1790.

LAPPOLI, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, the son of Matteo Lappoli, was born, according to Vasari, at Arezzo in 1492, and was first a disciple of Domenico Pecori, but afterwards studied under Jacopo Caruzzi, called Pontormo. He went early in his life to Rome, where he formed an intimacy with Perino del Vaga and Il Rosso, and was favoured with the protection of Clement VII., who employed him in some public works, but the completion of them was interrupted by the sacking of Rome in 1527, when he was obliged to flee. He retired to his native city, where he painted several pictures for the churches and private collections. He died in 1552.

LAPPOLI, MATTEO, was born at Arezzo about 1450, and died in 1504. He studied under Don Bartolommeo. The greater part of his paintings have perished. There are still at Arezzo, in the refectory of the Bernardines, a 'St. Bernard,' and in Santa Maria a 'St. Sebastian.'

LAPOTER, ADÉLAÏDE ISABELLE ANTONINE, whose maiden name was CHEREAU, was born at Les Riceys (Aube) in 1814. She was a pupil of Antoine Chazal and of Madame de Mirbel, and became well-known for her portraits in miniature. She died in 1880.

LA QUEWELLERIE, GUILLAUME DE. See DE LA QUEWELLERIE.

LAQUY, GUILLAUME JOSEPH, born at Bruel in 1738, studied in the school of Jan Remmers with Wybrand Hendriks, in whose landscapes he painted the figures. He was patronized by the celebrated amateur Braamcamp, and made copies of the works of Gerard Dou, Metsu, De Hooch, Paulus Potter, and other eminent masters in that fine collection. He also painted original pictures of cabinet size. He died at Cleves in 1798.

LARCHER, ANTOINETTE, was born in Paris in 1685, and flourished about the year 1725. She engraved some plates of historical subjects, among which is 'Judith with the Head of Holofernes,' after Raphael. She signed her name Tonette Larcher.

LAREDO, JUAN FERNANDEZ DE. See FERNANDEZ.

LARGILLIÈRE, NICOLAS DE, a French portrait painter, was born in Paris in October, 1656. When three years old, he was taken to Antwerp, where his father had settled as a merchant. This was not his only youthful experience of travel. At the age of nine he paid a visit to England, which lasted twenty months. On his return to Antwerp he became a pupil of Antoon Goubau, whom he assisted by painting the still-life accessories in his pictures. About 1675, he paid a second visit to England, and found work in the Royal palaces, under Sir Peter Lely. This brought him to the notice of Charles II., whose portrait he painted, together with those of several of the nobility. After a stay of four years in this country, he settled in Paris, and at once obtained a large practice amongst the bourgeoisie and professional classes. He was fortunate enough to become intimate with Van der Meulen and Le Brun, the latter of whom proved himself a great friend. During the reign of James II. he paid another short visit to England, and painted the king's portrait, as well as those of Mary of Modena and the infant Prince of Wales. In 1686 he was received into the French Academy as an historical painter, on his portrait of his friend Le Brun. It is curious to note that though Largillière is now only remembered as a portrait painter, and as such has been styled the French Van Dyck, yet in his own day he had a great reputation as an historical painter. After the deaths of Le Brun and Mignard, he occupied the foremost position in the French school in this branch of art, although he did not court royal and aristocratic patronage. He filled successively all the offices of honour in the Academy, and died in Paris of paralysis on the 20th March, 1746. The chief name amongst his pupils is that of Oudry, the animal painter, in whom he took great interest. The French provincial Museums contain many specimens of Largillière's art, which it is not possible to particularize. Mention should, however, be made of the following works by him:

LARIVE-GODEFROY, PIERRE LOUIS DE, was born at Geneva in 1753, and studied under Fassin at Rome. He worked for some time at Munich, Dresden, and Mannheim, and at last he settled at Persingue near Geneva. The expression in his works is most pleasing, and the arrangement is full of spirit, but he is too mannered. His etchings are also most spiritedly executed. He died at Persingue in 1814. Among his paintings there are :

Scenes of the Golden Age.
View of Mont Blanc.

LARIVIÈRE, CHARLES PHILIPPE AUGUSTE DE, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1798. He entered the École des Beaux-Arts in 1813, and studied under Girodet and Gros. In 1819 he obtained the second prize, and in 1824 the 'grand prix,' which enabled him to pursue his studies at Rome. Specimens of his work as a decorative artist are to be seen in the Cathedral at Dreux. He died in Paris in 1876. Amongst the pictures which he produced are :

Bordeaux.	Museum.	Christ in the Garden of Olives.
Versailles.	Gallery.	The Taking of Brescia.

LARMESSIN, NICOLAS DE, the elder, a French engraver, was born about 1636, and died in Paris in 1694. He had a younger brother, also named Nicolas, to whom are usually ascribed all the plates of the period which bear this name, but M. Didot is of opinion that the greater number of them are in reality the work of the elder of the two brothers, and draws attention to the finished style of the portrait of Archbishop Adhémar de Monteil, which bears the date 1658, at which time the younger Larmessin would be but eighteen years of age.

LARMESSIN, NICOLAS DE, the younger, a brother of Nicolas de Larmessin, the elder, was born in Paris about the year 1640, and died there in 1725. There are by this artist several portraits, executed entirely with the graver, and possessing considerable merit. He sometimes marked his plates with the initials N. L., and sometimes with the cipher DL. The following portraits are by him :

Philip de Bourbon, Duke of Orleans, brother to Louis XIV.
Henrietta, Duchess of Orleans.
Henri Jules de Bourbon, Duke d'Enghien.
Charles XI., King of Sweden.
Claudia Felicitia of Austria, Empress of Leopold I.
Maximilian Henry, Archbishop of Cologne.
Godefroi, Count d'Estrades, Marshal of France.
Gabriel Nicolas de la Reynie, Lieutenant of Police.
Louise Françoise, Duchesse de La Vallière, in the habit of a Nun.
Balthasar Moretnus.
Paolo Manuzio, Librarian of the Vatican.
Laurens Coster.
Johann Guttenberg.

LARMESSIN, NICOLAS DE, the son of Nicolas de Larmessin, the younger, was born in Paris in 1684, and was instructed in engraving by his father. He acquired considerable celebrity by some prints he engraved for the Crozat Collection, became a member of the French Academy in 1730, and engraver to the king. He died in Paris in 1755. There are by him a great number of portraits, and historical and other subjects, engraved in a neat, finished style, in which he united the point with the graver. There is a want of correctness in the drawing of his figures, and his prints are without much effect. The following are his principal works :

LAROON, MARCELLUS, called 'OLD LAROON,' was born at the Hague in 1653, and learned the rudiments of painting from his father, with whom he came when young to England. Here he was placed with La Zoon, an obscure portrait painter, and was afterwards some time with B. Flechière. He, however, studied chiefly by himself. He lived in Yorkshire for some years, and then came to London, where Sir Godfrey Kneller employed him to paint his draperies, in which branch he was eminent. He possessed the talent of imitating the different styles of the great masters with uncommon success; and painted historical subjects, portraits, and conversations. From 1680 he lived in Bow Street, but he died at Richmond of consumption in 1702. There are by this artist some slight spirited etchings of 'Dutch Boors regaling,' and similar subjects, in a style resembling that of Ostade, but very inferior. He also drew and engraved 'The Coronation Procession of William and Mary,' and Tempest's 'Cryes of the City of London,' 1688. He sometimes marked his plates with the cipher M.

LARON, MARCELLUS, an English subject painter and draughtsman, was born in London, in 1679. He was the son of "Old Laroon." In early life he accompanied embassies to Ryswyck and Venice. Then quarrelling with his father, he became an actor. Finally, in 1707, he obtained a commission in the army, and served in the campaigns in Flanders, in Spain, and in the Jacobite Rebellion of 1715. He retired from the service in 1734. He had great power as a draughtsman, and excelled in his groups of figures. He died in 1772.

LA ROULLIERE, —, is mentioned by Papillon as an engraver on wood of some merit, who flourished about the year 1700.

LA ROUSIERE, FRANÇOIS DE. See DE LA ROUSIERE.

LARRAGA, APOLINARIO, was a native of Valencia, and has been erroneously stated to have been a scholar of Pedro Orrente, who most probably died before he was born, as Larraga outlived him upwards of eighty years. He is said, however, to have made Orrente's works the model for his imitation, and painted several pictures in his style in the convent of San Domingo, and in the churches of his native city. He died in 1728. His daughter, JOSEFA MARIA LARRAGA, an historical and miniature painter, was a pupil of her father.

LARSEN, CARL FREDERIK EMANUEL, a Danish marine painter, was born in 1823, and died in 1859. At Copenhagen are pictures of the 'Harbour of Nieuwe Diep,' 'The Coast at Marseilles,' and 'Morning on the Sand.'

LASINIO, Conte CARLO, an Italian engraver, was born at Treviso about 1757, but worked chiefly at Florence. He was conservator of the Gallery at Pisa, where he died in 1839. He is known by several works illustrative of the older painters, including the following:

Forty plates of Frescoes and Oil Paintings at Florence. 1789.

Forty plates of Frescoes in the Campo Santo at Pisa. 1810.

Thirty-two plates of Frescoes of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries.

He was the instructor of his son, GIOVANNI PAOLO LASINIO, who was born in 1796, and who together with Rossi engraved forty-four plates of the Campo Santo at Pisa (1832), and took part in the decorations of the Galleries at Florence and Turin. He executed also the plates for Rosellini's 'Monumenti dell' Egitto e de la Nubia,' 1833-44. His signature was L. F. scul. He died in 1855.

LASINSKY, JOHANN ADOLF, was born at Simmern, near Coblenz, in 1808, and entered the Academy at Düsseldorf in 1827. Along with Lessing and J. W. Schirmer he was one of the first who cultivated landscape painting independently. In 1837 he painted for the Emperor Alexander at Coblenz. He went afterwards to Cologne, but returned to Düsseldorf in 1850, where he died in 1871. Among his landscapes may be mentioned:

Castle Elz on the Moselle. 1831.

An Old Watch-Tower by moonlight. 1835.

The Waterfall at Pymont. 1835.

The Narrow Pass at Dusk.

L'ASNE, MICHEL, was one of the first of the French engravers who distinguished himself by a free and dexterous management of the graver. He was born at Caen in Normandy in 1596, and appears to have imitated the style of Cornelis Bloemaert and F. Villamena. He died in Paris in 1667. He was extremely laborious, and has left a great number of prints, consisting of portraits, and historical and other subjects. When he did not sign his plates with his name, he generally used the cipher M. The following are his principal prints :

LASTMAN, NICOLAES, the son of Pieter Lastman, was born at Haarlem about 1590 or 1595. After learning the principles of design from Jan Pinas, he was instructed in engraving by Joannes Saenredam. His plates are neatly executed, but without much taste. The following among others are by him:

LASTMAN, PIETER, was probably born at Amsterdam in 1562, and was a disciple of Gerrit Pieterszen. Afterwards he visited Italy, where he was influenced by Elsheimer. He painted historical subjects, generally composed of a great number of figures, in which it appears that his journey to Italy had not contributed to render his design either graceful or correct. There is, however, a broad difference between his works at different periods, and four distinct styles are recognisable: first, the spirited style up to 1608 (as those below at Berlin); second, the clumsy and mannered style, 1609-19 (as those at Brunswick and Copenhagen); third, the style of Caravaggio, 1620 to about 1630 (as those at the Hague and Rotterdam); fourth, a transparent style like Rembrandt's, after 1630 (as those at Haarlem and Utrecht). He was for a time the instructor of the last-mentioned painter, and also of Jan Lievens. He is supposed to have died at Haarlem in 1649. The following are examples of his works, which are signed P. Lastm., P. as., or with a monogram.

After learning the rudiments of the art in his native city, he travelled when quite young to Italy, and resided some years at Rome, where he was chiefly employed in painting small landscapes and architectural subjects, which he decorated with figures in the Italian costume. He sometimes painted views of the vestiges of ancient buildings and monuments in the vicinity of Rome, with landscapes in the backgrounds, in which he appears to have imitated the style of Cornelis Poelenborch. He also occasionally painted small portraits, especially after his return from Italy. He died at Amsterdam in 1676.

LAURETI, TOMMASO, called TOMMASO SICILIANO, who flourished throughout the latter half of the 16th century, was a native of Palermo, and a disciple of Sebastiano del Piombo. At an early period of his life he established himself at Bologna, where he painted several pictures for the churches. The principal are the 'Martyrdom of SS. Vitale and Agricola,' in the church dedicated to those saints; in San Giacomo Maggiore, the 'Resurrection of Christ,' and the 'Burial of St. Augustine,' the latter a grand and copious composition; in San Mattia, the 'Coronation of the Virgin;' and in the house of Signor F. Bolognetti, 'Venus embraced by Cupid.' He was invited to Rome by Gregory XIII., to finish the ceiling of the Sala di Constantino, left imperfect at the death of Clement VII. He was no less patronised by Sixtus V. and Clement VIII. By the latter, he was engaged to ornament one of the saloons in the Campidoglio, where he painted in fresco scenes from Roman history, one of his most considerable works. He was the second president of the Academy of St. Luke after its foundation, and flourished at Rome in great esteem until his death at about eighty years of age.

He was first instructed by his brother, Francesco Lauri, and on the death of that promising artist, became a scholar of Angelo Caroselli. The progress of Filippo was extraordinary, and he soon surpassed his instructor. He had a turn for poetry, was well acquainted with history and mythology, and was a master of perspective. He succeeded better in easel pictures than in life-size figures, though he painted some altar-pieces for the churches at Rome, particularly his picture of 'Adam and Eve' in La Pace. His best works are his bacchanals, and subjects of fable. He imitated Albani in a very pleasing manner, and was often employed to paint the figures in the pictures of Claude Lorrain. On leaving that master, he travelled through Italy, France, and Germany, and returned to Rome, where the expectations of his friends were destroyed by his premature death in 1635, at the age of 25. The only work mentioned as by him is a ceiling in the Palazzo Crescenzi at Rome, representing 'Three Goddesses.'

LAURI, GIACOMO, an Italian engraver, a native of Rome, flourished about the year 1610. He published, in 1612, a set of one hundred and sixty-six prints, entitled, 'Antiquæ Urbis Splendor,' consisting of views, executed with the graver, of the ancient buildings of Rome.

LAURI, PIETRO, (or LAURIER,) who flourished about 1650, was a native of France, though he resided the greater part of his life at Bologna, where he was brought up in the school of Guido. He painted several pictures for the churches at Bologna; some of which have the appearance of having been retouched by Guido. At the Cappuccini is a fine picture of the 'Virgin presenting the Infant Jesus to St. Felix'; and in La Madonna della Libertà, 'St. Anthony of Padua.'

Frankfort, where he established the first collection of paintings, and in 1553 published a treatise on 'Perspective.' He died at Frankfort in 1590. Some plates are attributed to him, but on very insufficient grounds; they are in the style of Hans Sebald Beham, though much inferior.

He, however, became so troublesome by reason of his fanaticism, that he was in 1542 expelled from the city, but after a time he was allowed to return, and is believed to have died there in 1558. LAWRENCE, ANDREW, (known in Paris as ANDRÉ LAURENT,) an engraver, was born at Westminster in 1708, and was taught drawing by M. Regnier, who was then residing in Soho. He also worked in crayons and in oil, but devoted himself likewise to other accomplishments, being skilled in languages and in music. Unfortunately he gave his mind also to alchemy, and by its means got through the fortune left him by his father, and had to leave the country. After proceeding to Bologna he came to Paris, where he worked at etching for very slender daily wages under Philippe Le Bas, and then under A. Pond. He died in Paris in 1747. He engraved the plates of the great gallery at Versailles, after the drawings of Cochin. There are also by him some plates after De Louthembourg, and the following :

Saul consulting the Witch of Endor; after Salvator Rosa.
A Conversation; after Teniers.
The Hay Harvest, and its companion; after Wouwerman.
Halt of Officers; after the same.
Le Soir; after Berchem.

LAWRENCE, MARY, (afterwards KEARSE,) was a flower painter, who exhibited at the Royal Academy under her maiden name from 1794 to 1813, and under her married name of Kearsé from 1814 to 1830. She drew and engraved the illustrations for her 'Various Kinds of Roses in England,' published in 1797.

LAWRENCE, SAMUEL, a portrait painter, was born in 1811. His first appearance in London was at the Exhibition of the Society of British Artists in 1834, when he contributed two portraits. In 1836 he sent to the Royal Academy portraits of Matthew Gisborne, Mrs. Somerville, and another. He died in 1884. His portraits are mostly in crayons, and among them may be named :

Right Honourable J. Erskine.

LAWRENCE, Sir THOMAS, was born at Bristol, on the 4th of May, 1769. Soon after his birth, his father, who had been a solicitor, and afterwards a supervisor of excise, took the White Hart Inn at Bristol, but not prospering there he went to Devizes, where at 'The Black Bear' young Tommy used to recite before the customers, and draw their portraits. From Devizes they went to Oxford, and from Oxford to Bath, at each of which places young Lawrence was fully occupied in drawing in chalks pastel portraits. In 1787 he first visited London, where he received much valuable advice from Sir Joshua Reynolds, who was then near the end of his career. In his first years in London he attempted classical art, but this proving a failure, he devoted himself to portrait painting, induced thereto by his portrait of Miss Farren, afterwards Countess of Derby, painted in or about 1790. After this he soon began to make his way. The King had already patronized him, and indeed went so far as to insist upon Lawrence being made an extra Associate of the Royal Academy, when he was only twenty-one. In 1792, on the death of Sir Joshua Reynolds, he was appointed to the office of painter in ordinary to His Majesty, as also to that of painter to the Dilettanti Society. In the same year he was commissioned to paint the portraits of the King and Queen as a present for the Emperor of China. In 1792 also he exhibited ten portraits, one of which was that of the King. In 1794 he was made an Academician, his presentation picture being 'A Gipsy Girl.' In this year also Lawrence removed from Old Bond Street to Piccadilly, from whence in 1797 he removed to Greek Street, Soho. From 1798 to 1813 he exhibited ninety portraits at the Royal Academy. In 1813 he removed to 65, Russell Square, where he spent the remaining years of his life, and amassed a matchless collection of drawings by the old masters, of which those by Raphael and Michelangelo are now in the University Galleries at Oxford. In 1814 Lawrence paid his first visit to the Continent, but he was recalled from Paris by command of the Prince Regent to paint the portraits of the allied Sovereigns, their statesmen and generals, which formed the commencement of the Waterloo Gallery at Windsor Castle. In the following year he was knighted by the Prince Regent. During the Congress that met at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1816, Lawrence was commissioned by the Prince Regent to paint its chief members for the Gallery. From Aix-la-Chapelle he went to Vienna, and from Vienna to Rome, where he painted the portraits of the Pope (Pius VII.), Cardinal Gonsalvi, and Canova. Leaving Rome in December 1819, he returned in the following year to London to find himself the elected President of the Royal Academy. Between 1825 and the year of his death, some of the finest of his works were painted and exhibited, and none more beautiful than his groups of mothers and children, in portraying whose beauty and vivacity no English portrait painter except Reynolds has been happier. In 1829 he received the freedom of his native city, Bristol. To the exhibition of this year—the one destined to be his last—he contributed eight paintings, and on the morning of January 7th, 1830, he expired suddenly from ossification of the heart. He was interred with much pomp in St. Paul's Cathedral, where he rests by the side of his predecessor, Sir Joshua Reynolds. Among the honours conferred on him in his lifetime were:—Member of the American Academy of the Fine Arts, 1818; of the Academy of St. Luke, 1816; of the Academy of Vienna, 1820; of the Academies of Florence, Venice, and Copenhagen, 1823; and of that of Bologna, 1824. The King of France in 1825 sent him the Cross of the Legion of Honour, and a set of Sèvres china. The following are some of his principal pictures:

LAWRIE, ROBERT. See LAURIE.

LAWSON, CECIL GORDON, was born at Wellington in Shropshire in 1851. His father, William Lawson, is a portrait painter, from whom he learnt the elements of painting. He was always inclined to art, and from fourteen years of age till he was seventeen he employed himself in making careful studies of fruit and flowers, bits of landscape, and special clouds, or blossoms, or grasses. In 1866 he took his first sketching tour through Kent, Sussex, and Surrey. His first appearance in public was at the New British Institution in Bond Street, where he exhibited a grey landscape called 'Ice on the River.' In 1870 he took to drawing on wood for the engravers, and made his first appearance at the Academy with 'Cheyne Walk, Chelsea.' In the Royal Academy of 1871 he exhibited 'The River in Rain' and 'Summer Evening in Cheyne Walk.' In 1873 he made a tour in Ireland, and in 1874 he went to Holland, Belgium, and Paris. In the same year he settled down at Wrotham, and there commenced his picture of the 'Hop Gardens of England,' which was in the Academy of 1876. In 1878 'The Minister's Garden,' in the Grosvenor Gallery, excited much attention. In 1879 he married, and went to live at Haslemere, where in 1880 he painted 'The August Moon,' which was presented by his widow to the National Gallery. His health, however, began to fail, and though he was in the Riviera in the winter of 1881, he returned too soon, and died at Chelsea in 1882. Besides those already mentioned he painted the following pictures:

A Lament. 1872.
A Pastoral in the Vale of Miefod, North Wales. 1873.
The Voice of the Cuckoo. 1880.
Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 1881.
The Storm-Cloud, West Lynn, North Devon. 1882.
The Wet Moon, Old Battersea. 1882.
An Autumn Sunrise.
Sundown.
Strayed; a Pastoral.
On the Road to Monaco.

LAZINSKY, GUSTAV, an historical painter, was born at Coblenz in 1811. He was a brother of Johann Adolf Lazinsky, and with him went to Düsseldorf in 1829. He died at Mayence in 1870. Among his pictures are :

Death of Tell.
The Cross-Bearer.
Departure of Gustavus Adolphus.
Death of Prince Ludwig.

LAZZARI, DONATO, commonly known as BRAMANTE, the architect of the basilica of St. Peter at Rome, and whose name has now been proved to have been DONATO BRAMANTE, was born at Castle Durante, now Urbania, near Urbino, in 1444. Of his early life little is known; but he is recorded to have been from about 1472 to 1499 in Milan, where he executed numerous architectural works of note. Of his paintings, some damaged frescoes in the Casa Prinetti (formerly Panigarola), Milan, are all that remain; though he is recorded to have decorated the façades of houses in that city, where for a long time the 'Four Evangelists' were preserved in a church as specimens of his bold foreshortening. Bramante was also an engraver; there exist three impressions of a plate by him, representing persons standing and kneeling around an altar in a chapel; it has been engraved in outline in Rosini's 'Storia della Pittura Italiana.' One of these is in the British Museum. Bramante died at Rome in 1514, and was buried in the crypt of St. Peter's.

LAZZARINI, GIOVANNI ANDREA, a painter, poet, and art-writer, was born at Pesaro in 1710. He was instructed in painting by Francesco Mancino, and studied at Rome under Fantuzzi from 1734 to 1749, and subsequently at Venice and Forlì after Cignani. He distinguished himself as a fresco-painter: his design is correct and his compositions are excellent. He was, however, a better teacher than artist. His chief works are to be met with at Gualdo, near Rimini, at Osimo, Foligno, Ancona, and Pesaro. He died at Pesaro in 1801.

LAZZARINI, GREGORIO, was born at Villanuova in 1657. He was a pupil of Francesco Rosa, a Genoese painter, who resided some time at Venice, but he soon abandoned the dark and gloomy style of his instructor, and aimed at the higher excellences of the simple and natural. On viewing the works of Lazzarini, one would suppose him to have been educated in the Bolognese, or rather in the Roman school. Lanzi, however, asserts that he never quitted Venice, and that by the impulse of his genius alone he conciliated the esteem of the most distinguished professors of his time, particularly Carlo Maratti, who was not much accustomed to over-rate the talents of his contemporaries. When the Venetian ambassador, then resident at Rome, proposed a commission to the Roman artists to paint a picture for the Sala dello Scrutinio, at Venice, Carlo Maratti had the generosity to refuse the offer, expressing his surprise that the ambassador should apply to the painters of Rome while Venice possessed such an artist as Lazzarini. Of the justice of Maratti's appreciation of his talents, Lazzarini has given proof in the picture he painted on that occasion, representing the triumphal memorial of the Morosini. He distinguished himself still more in his picture of 'St. Lorenzo Giustiniani,' at the Patriarcale, which is esteemed by Lanzi the finest oil painting of the Venetian school of the period in which he lived, whether in regard to the grandeur of the composition, the elegance of the contours, or the variety in the heads and attitudes. In the Academy at Venice there are four paintings by him. Tiepolo was one of his pupils. Lazzarini died at Venice in 1735.

LEADER, WILLIAM, was a mezzotint engraver, by whom there are a few prints after the old masters; among others, a small upright plate, representing 'Samson,' after Rembrandt. He was working in London about the middle of the 18th century.

LEAHY, EDWARD DANIEL, a portrait and subject painter, was born in London in 1797. He exhibited at the Royal Academy portraits and subject pictures from 1820 to 1853. He died at Brighton in 1875. In the National Portrait Gallery is a portrait by him of Father Mathew, the Apostle of Temperance in Ireland.

LEAKE, HENRY, an English portrait painter, flourished in the latter half of the 18th century. He studied under William Hoare, and practised in London about 1764-6. He then went to the East Indies, where he died.

LEAKEY, JAMES, a portrait and landscape painter, was born at Exeter in 1773. He was about to enter the studio of Sir Joshua Reynolds, but was unfortunately prevented by that artist's death. He painted also a good many miniatures, and was much patronized in the West of England. From time to time he exhibited pictures at the Royal Academy, amongst others 'The Fortune Teller,' and 'The Marvellous Tale.' His style was much after the manner of the Dutch School, and he was called on one occasion by Sir Thomas Lawrence the 'English Wouwerman.' He died at Exeter in 1865, after having for many years been obliged to give up the practice of his art.

LEBARBIER, JEAN JACQUES FRANÇOIS, called LEBARBIER L'AÎNÉ, a French historical painter, was born at Rouen in 1738. After gaining prizes in his native city, he studied painting under Pierre, first painter to the king. He next made drawings in Switzerland for Zurlauben's 'Tableau topographique de la Suisse,' and afterwards went to Rome. On his return he was elected an academicien in 1785, on which occasion he painted 'Jupiter asleep on Mount Ida,' now in the magazines of the Louvre. His works prepared the way for the revolution begun by Vien and carried out by David. He made designs for the illustration of editions of Ovid, Racine, Rousseau, and Delille, and also published some works on art. The Louvre contains his 'Courage of the Spartan Women,' dated 1787. He died in Paris in 1826.

LE BAS, JACQUES PHILIPPE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1707. He was instructed in the art of engraving by Hérisset and N. Tardieu, and was one of the best artists of his time. He excelled in landscapes and small figures, which he touched with infinite spirit and neatness. He availed himself much of the freedom and facility of etching, which he harmonized in an admirable manner with the graver and dry point. The popularity of his works procured him a number of scholars, whose talents were employed in advancing the plates which he afterwards finished and published with his name. He became an academicien in 1743, his reception work being a 'Conversation galante,' after Lancret. He died in Paris in 1783. The number of his plates is very large; but the following are his most esteemed works:

Portrait of Robert Le Lorrain, sculptor; after Drouais. 1741.

LEBAS, MICHEL OLIVIER, was born in Paris in 1783. He was a pupil of Regnault and of Langlois, and distinguished himself especially by his engraving in mezzotint. He died in 1843. He engraved for Landon's 'Annales du Musée.' One of his best plates is 'The Bull,' after Paulus Potter, in the Le Brun Gallery.

LE BEAU, PIERRE ADRIEN, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1744. He has engraved several portraits, and other subjects, after different masters, among which are:

Louis XVI., King of France; six different portraits, after Binet, and others.

Marie Antoinette, Queen of France; ten different portraits, after Le Clerc, Binet, and others.

Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans.

Hyder Ali; after J. Year.

Mlle. Raucourt, actress.

Abbé Terray, comptroller of finance under Louis XV.

A. R. J. Turgot, comptroller under Louis XVI.; after De Troy.

Jacques Necker, director of finances under Louis XVI.; after Le Clerc.

LEBEDEV, MIKHAIL, a Russian landscape painter, was born in 1812. He studied at the Academy of St. Petersburg, and afterwards travelled in Italy. He painted several views of Rome and Naples, at which latter city he died from cholera in 1837.

LEBEL, ANTOINE, a French landscape painter, was born at Montrot (Haute-Marne) in 1705. He was received as an academician in 1746, upon a 'Sea-piece,' which is now in the Museum at Caen. He was the master of Aved, and died in Paris in 1793.

LEBEL, CHARLES JACQUES, a French historical painter, who was a pupil of David, exhibited at the Salon from 1801 to 1827. He produced several interesting works relating to the French nation: among them, 'Napoleon visiting the Hospice of Mont St. Bernard;' 'The Reduction of the City of Paris by Henry IV.;' 'A Trait of Humanity in a French Grenadier;' and others of a similar kind. The picture of 'Turenne asleep on the field of battle, in winter, and his officers sheltering him with their cloaks from the inclemency of the weather,' was in the collection of the late Baron Bolland. Lebel also painted a great number of portraits.

LEBEL, CLÉMENT LOUIS MARIE ANNE, a French subject and animal painter, who was a pupil of Lemoine, was born in Paris in 1772, and died in 1806. Some of his works are in the Museums of Orleans and of Caen.

LE BERT, —, a French designer and engraver, flourished about 1770. He engraved the following portraits after Cochin:

King Henry IV.

The Duke of Orleans.

The Count of Artois.

King Louis XV.

The Dauphin, afterwards Louis XVI.

LEBERT, HEINRICH, an Alsatian landscape draughtsman and flower painter, was born at Thann in 1794, and died at Colmar in 1862.

LEBLANC, ALEXANDRE, a French landscape painter, was born at Châteauneuf in 1793, and died in 1866. His 'End of the Deluge' is in the Museum at Angers.

LE BLANC, HORACE, a French painter, who resided at Lyons in the 17th century, was employed by the Duke of Angoulême in his gallery of Gros Bois, near Paris. He was the master of Jacques Blanchard.

LEBLANC, THÉODORE, a French battle painter, born at Strassburg in 1800, was a pupil of Charlet. He became a captain in the engineers, and died from wounds received at the siege of Constantine in 1837. Three of his works are at Versailles.

LE BLOND, JACOB CHRISTOPH, was born at Frankfort in 1670, and was first instructed by C. Meyer at Zurich. From there he went to Italy, where he is said to have been a scholar of Carlo Maratti. At the solicitation of Bonaventura van Overbeck, he accompanied him to Amsterdam, where he was employed for some time in painting portraits in miniature, which were much esteemed. He quitted Holland, and came in 1720 to London, where he set on foot a project for printing mezzotint plates in colour, so as to imitate the pictures from which they were engraved. He executed some large plates in this way, and disposed of the prints by a kind of lottery. In 1730, he published a work explanatory of the process, entitled 'Il Coloretto, or the Harmony of Colouring in Painting, reduced to mechanical Practice, under easy Precepts and infallible Rules.' The book was printed in English and in French. He soon afterwards projected a plan for copying the cartoons of Raphael in tapestry, and he made some fine drawings from the originals for that purpose; houses were bought, and great expense incurred, but the scheme failed of success, and Le Blond left England, and went to Paris in 1732, where he was not more successful, and died, it is said, in a hospital in 1741. The following are the principal prints he published, which, independent of the novelty of the manner, certainly possess considerable merit:

LE BLOND, JEAN, a French historical painter and printseller, was born in Paris in 1635. He was received into the Academy in 1681, his picture of reception being 'Jupiter hurling thunderbolts at the Giants,' now in the Louvre. He was sometimes assisted in his works by Willem De Gheyn, a Dutch painter. He died in Paris in 1709.

LE BLOND, MICHEL, a German engraver, was born at Frankfurt in 1587. He chiefly resided at Amsterdam, but travelled with Sandrart in Italy, and stayed several years in England. He appears to have been principally employed at Amsterdam on ornaments for the goldsmiths. In 1626, he published a set of ornaments, foliage, fruit, and flowers, engraved with great neatness. His prints, which are all very small, are executed entirely with the graver in the finished manner of Theodorus De Bry. He sometimes marked his plates with the accompanying cipher M. He died at Amsterdam in 1656. The following prints are by him:

St. Jerome, seated at a desk writing, with an ornamental border; a small circular plate, about the size of a shilling; dated 1610.

LEBORNE, LOUIS, a French painter and lithographer, was born at Versailles in 1796. He was a pupil of Regnault, and became in 1843 director of the School of Design at Nancy, and in 1848 conservator of the Nancy Museum, where there are paintings by him. He died in 1865.

LE BOSSU, DANIEL, a French engraver, flourished from about the year 1670 to about 1700. He imitated the style of François de Poilly, but without much success. He is said to have resided some time at Rome, where he engraved some plates after the Italian painters, among which is 'The Resurrection of Lazarus,' after Giacinto Brandi.

LE BRUN, CHARLES, a French historical painter, was born in Paris, February 24th, 1619. He received his first instruction in art from his father, who was a sculptor, and from an obscure painter named Perrier. At the age of eleven he was fortunate enough to be noticed by the Chancellor Séguier, who placed him in the studio of Vouet, and ever proved a constant friend to the rising young artist. During the next few years his progress and industry were remarkable. He attracted the notice of Poussin, and in 1642 accompanied him to Italy, whither he was enabled to proceed by the generosity of his patron. He was received by the Barberini, then paramount in Rome, and presented to Pope Urban VIII. His stay lasted about four years, during which period he painted a few works, but chiefly occupied himself in studying from the antique. There is still extant a letter written by him at this period, which shows how greatly he was attracted by the smallest details of classical antiquity. During his journey home, he made a short sojourn at Lyons, where he executed some commissions. Arrived at Paris, where his reputation had preceded him, he at once settled down to the practice of his profession. Orders quickly flowed in upon him. He was one of the numerous band of artists who worked for the President Lambert de Thorigny on the decoration of his hôtel on the Île St. Louis. The magnificent Fouquet employed him at his château at Vaux, and gave him a pension of 12,000 livres. For the oratory of Anne of Austria, he painted a 'Crucifixion,' and she presented him with her portrait set in diamonds. By Mazarin he was introduced to Louis XIV., and through the king's patronage became, after the death of Le Sueur, the head of the French school, exercising unlimited sway in all matters relating to art in France. In 1648, he took the principal part in the foundation of the Academy, which was always an object of great solicitude to him, and in which he filled successively all the offices of honour. This was not the only service French art owed to him. He was greatly instrumental in the establishment of the French school at Rome, and he was the first director of the Gobelins manufactory on its foundation by Colbert. During all this time he was painting unceasingly for his royal patron. After the fire at the Louvre in 1661, the works in the Apollo Gallery were entirely confided to him. He also found employment at the royal château at Sceaux, and at the Pavilions at Marly. But his greatest work was at the King's new and costly hobby at Versailles. There he designed fountains, statues, decorations, &c., besides painting the gigantic series of allegories commemorating his royal patron's achievements. On the death of Colbert in 1683, his supremacy began to suffer an eclipse at the hands of Louvois, who favoured his rival Mignard. He gradually withdrew from court, and fell into a state of melancholy, which continued until his death at the Gobelins in Paris, on February 12, 1690.

The failings of Le Brun's art are neither few nor small. His drawing is heavy, and his colour unpleasing. Generally speaking, his execution fails to reach the standard of his ideas, and his efforts after the heroic are frequently overstrained, becoming pompous and scenic. Still he was in many cases inspired by great conceptions, and his fertility was very wonderful. In the history of French art he holds an important place from the unlimited sway which he exercised, not beneficially it must be owned, for so long a period.

The pictures by him in the French provincial galleries are too numerous to mention. The following is a list of his works in some of the chief European collections:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Family of Eberhard Jabach.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Holy Family.
Dulwich.	Gallery.	Massacre of the Innocents.

LEBRUN, FRANÇOIS JEAN BAPTISTE TOPINO.
See TOPINO LEBRUN.

LE BRUN, GABRIEL, the brother and scholar of Charles Le Brun, was born in Paris in 1621, and died there after 1657. He never arrived at any great eminence as a painter, but is somewhat better known as an engraver. He executed several plates after the designs of his brother, and also after Tintoretto, Carracci, and other masters, among which are the following:

Portrait of Charles Frevet de St. Mesmin. 1657.
Allegory on the Peace of Cardinal Mazarin.
Frontispiece for the Memoirs of Vittorio Siri.
The Twelve Apostles; after Charles Le Brun.
The Saviour; after the same; on two sheets.
St. Martin; after the same.
St. Anthony; after the same.
A Thesis; dedicated to the Parliament of Normandy; after the same.

LE BRUN, MARIE LOUISE ELISABETE, whose maiden name was Vigée, was born in Paris in 1755. Her father was a portrait painter, but he died in 1768. At the age of fifteen she executed a portrait of her mother. She received lessons from Davesne and Briard, and excellent advice from Joseph Vernet. She supported herself and her mother with her copies from great masters till her mother married an avaricious jeweller, who took all her earnings, and refused to supply her with even the necessaries of life. Her reputation soon began to spread, and in 1779 she painted her first portrait of Marie Antoinette, whom she afterwards painted no less than twenty-five times, and with whom she was on terms of the greatest intimacy. In 1776 she married Jean Baptiste Pierre Le Brun, a painter and picture-dealer, and the grand-nephew of Charles Le Brun. (He was born in Paris in 1748, and died there in 1813.) In 1782 she paid a visit to Belgium, and on her return Joseph Vernet proposed her for the Academy, which Pierre opposed, but she was nevertheless admitted in 1783, when she painted for her reception 'Peace bringing back Plenty.' When the Revolution broke out in 1789 she went to Italy and visited Bologna, Rome, Naples, and Florence, painting a large number of portraits, and was admitted a member of different academies. She then went to Vienna, and in 1795 was at St. Petersburg, where she remained painting portraits till 1801. She then returned to France, but in 1802 she came to England, where she lived three years. In 1808 and 1809 she was in Switzerland, and on her return to France, she bought a country house near Marly, which in 1814 and 1815 was pillaged by the Prussians and the allied armies. She then went to live in Paris, where she continued painting, and where her salon was the rendezvous of the best society till her death, which took place in Paris in 1842. Late in life she published her 'Souvenirs,' which appeared in Paris in 1837-39.

She painted a number of very pleasing semi-allegorical subjects, and many portraits of distinguished persons; among which were Lady Hamilton, in the characters of a Sibyl and a Bacchante; Madame de Staël, as Corinna; Madame Catalani at the piano; La Bruyère; the Abbé Fleury; and several princes and royal personages. In some of her pictures she imitated the style of Greuze. The Louvre possesses by Madame Le Brun two paintings of herself and her daughter, the portraits of Hubert Robert and Joseph Vernet, the painters, and that of Giovanni Paisiello, the composer.

LE BRUN, NICOLAS, a French painter, the brother of Charles Le Brun, was, according to Guillet de St. Georges, the author of the landscape in Le Sueur's 'Plan de l'ancienne Chartreuse de Paris, porté par deux Anges,' now in the Louvre. It gives a view of the Tuilleries, the Louvre, the Seine with the Pont-Neuf, and a part of the quay opposite the Louvre.

LEBSCHÉE, CARL AUGUST, a painter, etcher, and lithographer, was born at Schmiegel, Poland, in 1800. He studied at Munich, where his parents settled in 1807. He painted landscapes and architecture in oil and water-colours, and designed in the style of different masters. His etchings are executed with great spirit, and he signed with the initials C. L., or a monogram. He died at Munich in 1877.

LE CAPELAIN, JOHN, a water-colour landscape painter, was born in Jersey about 1814. He had no regular art instruction, and, unaided, acquired a pleasing, though vague, style. He drew the views for the Jersey Album presented to Queen Victoria after her visit to the island. There is a large collection of his works in the Jersey Museum. He died in 1848.

LE CARPENTIER, CHARLES LOUIS FRANÇOIS, a French painter, born at Pont-Audemer (Eure) in 1744, was a pupil of Doyen and of J. B. Descamps. He was professor at the School of Fine Arts at Rouen, and devoted himself chiefly to writing on art. He died at Rouen in 1822.

LE CAVE, P., a water-colour painter, flourished in the latter half of the 18th and in the beginning of the 19th century. His works are chiefly landscapes with cattle and figures, and are in the tinted style. His life was passed in poverty, and the date of his death is unknown. There are four specimens of his work in the South Kensington Museum, one dated as late as 1806.

LECCIO, MATTEO DA. See ALESIO.

LECKERBETJEN, VINCENT, a native of Antwerp, who flourished about 1650, was called MANCIOL, because he had lost his right hand. He lived chiefly in Rome, where he executed several landscapes and battle-pieces. At the castle of Vincennes in France he painted four frescoes representing scenes in the battles of Alexander the Great.

LECLAIRE, VICTOR, a French flower painter, was born in Paris in 1830. He was a pupil of his brother, Léon Louis Leclair, and died in 1885. His 'Fleurs d'automne,' painted in 1879, is in the Luxembourg Gallery.

LECLERC, DAVID, was born at Berne in 1680. He was instructed by Werner, and at the age of eighteen went to Frankfort. He worked afterwards at the courts of Darmstadt and Cassel, and then went to Paris and studied under Rigaud. He returned to Frankfort, and in 1715 visited England, but he eventually settled at Frankfort. He painted flowers, historical subjects, and portraits, of which latter that of Prince Louis of Hesse is in the Darmstadt Gallery. He died at Frankfort in 1738.

LECLERC, ISAAC, the brother of David Leclerc, was an engraver at the court of Cassel, where he succeeded his father. He died in 1746.

LECLERC, JACQUES SÉBASTIEN, the son of Sébastien Leclerc the younger, was born in 1734. He was appointed assistant-professor of perspective in the Academy of Paris in 1778, and died in 1785. Some of his works are in the Museum at Caen.

LE CLERC, JEAN, a French painter and etcher, born at Nancy in 1587, was a pupil of Carlo Saraceno. He engraved after Jean Cousin, and died at Nancy in 1633.

LECLERC, JEAN FRÉDÉRIC, the son of David Leclerc, was born in London in 1717. He settled at Deux-Ponts, where he devoted himself to miniature painting, and was living in 1768.

LECLERC, SÉBASTIEN, the elder, a French engraver, was born at Metz in 1637. He was instructed in the elements of drawing by his father, Laurent Leclerc, a jeweller, and afterwards went to Paris. He applied himself to geometry, physics, and perspective, but by the advice of Le Brun he devoted himself entirely to engraving, and became very proficient. He became an academicien in 1672, and from that year to 1702 he was Professor of Perspective at the Academy. He was appointed engraver to Louis XIV., and a Professor at the Gobelins. He died in Paris in 1714. He produced about 3400 plates, of which a 'Catalogue raisonné' was published by C. A. Jombert in 1774. Among them the most famous are:

The Battles of Alexander; after Le Brun.

The Council of Nicea.

The Apotheosis of Isis.

The Passion.

Greek and Roman Costumes.

LECLERC, SÉBASTIEN, the younger, a French painter, was the eldest son of Sébastien Leclerc, the engraver, and was born in Paris in 1676. He was a pupil of Bon de Boullongne, and was admitted into the Academy in 1704, his reception work being 'The Purification of Æneas previous to his Deification,' now at Versailles. He exhibited in the Salons of 1737, 1747, and 1751. He died in Paris, at the Gobelins, in 1763. In the Louvre is a picture of 'The Death of Sapphira.'

LECEUR, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French historical and genre painter, was born at Le Mans in 1795. He was a pupil of Regnault, and exhibited at the Salon from 1822 to 1837, among his works being that of 'Charles VII. and Agnes Sorel,' in the Museum at Angers. He died in Paris in 1838.

LECOMTE, HIPPOLYTE, a French painter, was born at Puisseaux in 1781. He was a pupil of Mongin and of Regnault, and married Camille, the daughter of Carle Vernet. He exhibited at the Salon, from 1804 to 1847, historical subjects, landscapes, and battle-pieces. He died in Paris in 1857. Among his pictures are:

Joan of Arc.

Battle of Raab.

Louis XIII. storming the entrenchments of Pas-de-Suze. (Fontainebleau.)

LECOMTE, MARGUERITE, a French engraver, was born in Paris about 1719. She etched some small Italian landscapes, but her name has been saved from oblivion less by her merits as an artist than by her connection with Watelet, with whom in 1764 she visited Rome, where she etched the heads of Pope Clement XIII. and of Cardinal Albani. She died at the end of the 18th century.

LE DAVIS, EDWARD, a painter and engraver, was born in Wales about 1640. He was articled as a pupil to Loggan, but not being treated to his satisfaction, he fled from his indentures, and went to France as a domestic servant, but was able in Paris to resort to his art in both its branches. On his return he engraved some portraits and other subjects; among which are the following:

LEDERER, HANS. To this artist Professor Christ attributes some engravings marked with the cipher H. Brulliot and Nagler mention a Hieronymus Lederer, and the former says there are four prints by him expressing the temperaments of men, the 'Sanguine,' the 'Phlegmatic,' the 'Choleric,' and the 'Melancholic.' The first of these has the name h. lederer, and the last a mark, which may be taken for I. L. or H. L. Malpe, he says, attributes these prints to Hans Lederer.

LEDERER, JOHANN, a painter, was the youngest of three brothers who flourished at Augsburg, and painted on glass and in oil. He was court painter to the Prince-Bishop of Freising. In the cathedral of Augsburg and in other churches are altar-pieces by him and in the Franciscan church at Freising is an altar-piece representing the 'Death of St. Francis of Assisi.' He died about 1785.

LEDERLEIN, JAKOB, a German engraver on wood, was born at Tubingen about the year 1565. He executed a set of portraits of the professors of the University in that city, which were published by Erhard Zeil in 1596. There are other prints by this master, some of which are dated 1590. He usually marked his works with the monogram

LEDERWASCH, CHRISTOPH, was a German engraver, who flourished at Salzburg from 1668 to 1687, and there also painted altar-pieces. Among his engravings are 'The Virgin presented in the Temple,' after Romanelli, and 'The Heavenly Glory,' after himself.

LEDERWASCH, GREGOR, an Austrian painter, was born at Salzburg in 1726. He painted many altar-pieces, but his monochrome landscapes and views were most celebrated. He died at Salzburg in 1792.

LEDESMA, BLAS DE, was a Spanish painter of the reign of Philip II. (1556—1598). He is mentioned by Pacheco as a successful imitator of the frescoes of Julio and Alessandro.

LEDESMA, JOSEF DE, was born at Burgos in 1630. After acquiring some knowledge of painting in his native city, he came to Madrid and entered the school of Carreño. His principal works were a 'Burial in the Recollet Convent,' and pictures of the Trinity and Saints in the Convent of the Holy Trinity, which were pleasing in colour. He died in 1670.

LEDOULX, PIETER, was born at Bruges in 1730. He studied at the Bruges Academy under Jan Gareynyn, and afterwards under Matthias De Visch. He painted views, but his principal work was his collection of insects and flowers painted in miniature. He collected materials for a 'History of the Arts and Painters of the 18th and 19th centuries.' He died in 1807.

LE DOYEN, —, a French engraver, lived at Paris about the year 1666, and executed some plates for the booksellers, among which are some prints of ornaments, and the plates for a book entitled 'Figures des différents Habits des Chanoines reguliers en ce siècle,' published at Paris in 1666.

LEDRU, HILAIRE, a French portrait painter, was born at Oppy, near Calais, in 1774. He was self-taught, but several of his works were in high repute, and gained medals. He died in Paris in 1840.

LE DUCQ, JAN, a Dutch painter, was born at the Hague in 1636. He learned the principles of art under Paulus Potter, and for some time imitated the style of that admired painter of animals. He afterwards changed his style, and painted corps-de-garde, assemblies of officers, and card-players. His pictures of this description are more frequently met with than his cattle-pieces, which are very scarce. He was director of the Academy at the Hague in 1671, and had acquired the reputation of an able painter, when in 1672 he abandoned art, and adopted a military life. He died as a captain between 1680 and 1685. Pictures by him are at Amsterdam, Copenhagen, Dresden, St. Petersburg, Vienna, and several other places. Le Ducq etched a few plates from his own designs, among which is a set of eight prints of dogs, very neatly and spiritedly executed.

LEE, A., was a portrait painter, who practised in the reign of George II.

LEE, ANNA, a native of London, was a pupil of Parkinson, who gained a great reputation by her paintings and drawings of natural history subjects. She died about 1790.

LEE, FREDERICK RICHARD, a landscape painter, was born at Barnstaple in 1798. When very young he served a campaign in the Netherlands in an infantry regiment. He then became a student in the schools of the Royal Academy, where he first exhibited in 1824. His works also appeared at the British Institution, from which he received a premium of £50 in 1829. The Academy elected him an Associate in 1834, and an Academician in 1838. His works were chiefly inspired by English scenery, and the cattle in many of them were painted by Sidney Cooper. He ceased to exhibit at the Academy after 1870, and spent the remaining years of his life in yachting and travel. He died in Cape Colony in 1879. Amongst his works are:

He engraved the illustrations for the 'Cheap Repository,' 1794-98, Hansard's 'Typographia,' and for a reading-book, 'A Wreath for the Brow of Youth,' as well as for many other children's books. He died in 1804.

LEE, JOSEPH, an enamel painter, was born in 1780. He exhibited enamel miniatures at the Royal Academy from 1809 to 1853. In 1818 he was appointed enamel painter to the Princess Charlotte, whose portrait he exhibited in the same year and in 1823; and in 1832 enamel painter to the Duke of Sussex, whose portrait after Thomas Phillips, R.A., he exhibited. He died at Gravesend in 1859. There is an example of his art at South Kensington.

LEE, WILLIAM, a water-colour painter, was born in 1810. His paintings consist chiefly of English rustic and French coast figure-pieces. He was elected a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours in 1846, and was for many years connected with the Langham School. Among the later pictures painted by him were 'The Long Sermon,' 'The Rustic Beauty,' and 'The Drinking Fountain.' He died in London in 1865.

LEECH, JOHN, the eminent comic draughtsman, was born in London in 1817. His father, John Leech, was an Irishman, who possessed some skill with the pencil, and from him the son inherited the talent. At three years old he was discovered by Flaxman seated on his mother's knee drawing, and the great sculptor foretold that he would astonish the world. At the age of seven he was sent to the Charterhouse, where he formed a life-long friendship with Thackeray. At the age of sixteen he was placed at St. Bartholomew's Hospital to study medicine, but he gradually gave up his medical studies and resolved to devote himself to art. He was eighteen years old when he published his first work, entitled 'Etchings and Sketchings by A. Pen, Esq.,' which consisted of a book, quarto size, of four leaves covered with sketches. He next turned his attention to lithography, and his caricature of Mulready's envelope brought him into notice. A great deal of his early work may be seen in 'Bell's Life,' and in 1840, in conjunction with Percival Leigh, he published the 'Comic Latin Grammar' and 'Comic English Grammar.' In August 1841, in the fourth number of 'Punch,' appeared Leech's first contribution. To the second volume of 'Punch' his contributions did not amount to more than half-a-dozen, but after that till 1864 his drawings amounted to more than three thousand; and he is said to have received for them more than £40,000. In 1840 he assisted Cruikshank with the illustrations to the 'Ingoldsby

Legends,' and in 1844 he illustrated the 'Christmas Carol' of Dickens. In 1847 appeared Gilbert à Beckett's 'Comic History of England,' which was followed in 1852 by the companion work, 'The Comic History of Rome,' both profusely illustrated by Leech. In 1853 appeared the series of sporting novels entitled 'Mr. Sponge's Sporting Tour,' 'Handley Cross,' etc. In 1854 appeared the first series of his pictures of 'Life and Character' reprinted from 'Punch,' of which a second and a third series were published respectively in 1858 and 1860. In 1858 Leech went a tour in Ireland, the result of which was the publication of a book written by Canon Hole, his travelling companion, and illustrated by himself. Among his other etchings may be named those that appeared in 'Punch's Pocket-Book,' and the wood-cut illustrations to 'Once a Week' and the 'Illustrated London News.' In 1862 he exhibited in the Egyptian Hall his 'Sketches in Oil,' the subjects of which were reproduced from the most remarkable of his 'Punch' drawings: this exhibition was a great success. In the same year, in company with Mark Lemon, he went to Paris, and afterwards to Biarritz. In 1864 he went to Hamburg in company with Alfred Elmore, and afterwards to Schwalbach. On his return to England he went to Whithy with his family, but after his return to London he succumbed in the same year to the malady from which he had long been suffering.

LEEMANS, A., was a painter of birds and accessories of hunting scenes, who flourished at the Hague about 1662.

LEEN, WILLEM VAN, was born at Dordrecht in 1753. He was a pupil of Arends, Cuyper, and Ponse. At the age of twenty he went to Paris, where he remained three years studying flowers. He then went to Rotterdam, but in 1787 returned to Paris, where he was induced to remain for two years. In 1789 the Revolution compelled him to quit Paris, and he went to Delfshaven, where he died in 1825.

LEEPE, JAN ANTOON VAN DER. See VAN DER LEEPE.

LEES, CHARLES, a Scottish painter, who was born in 1800, is chiefly known for his historical paintings, such as 'The Murder of Rizzio' and 'John Knox during his Confinement.' He also executed various landscapes of merit. His paintings were frequently seen on the walls of the Royal Scottish Academy, of which he was a member from 1830 until his death in 1880.

LEEST, ANTONIUS VAN, is stated by Papillon to have been an engraver on wood of some talent, who executed, among others, four cuts of the 'Four Evangelists.'

LEEUW, DE. See DE LEEUW.

LEEUW, VAN DER. See VAN DER LEEUW.

LE FÈBRE, ROLLAND. See LEFÈVRE.

LE FÈBRE, VALENTIN, (OR LEFEBURE,) a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Brussels in 1642. During a long residence in Venice he painted portraits and historical pictures in the style of Paolo Veronese, and etched numerous plates after that master, as well as after Titian and Tintoretto. Many of his etchings were published in Venice in 1682, in a large folio volume, entitled, 'Opera selectiora quæ Titianus Vecellius Cadubriensis, et Paulus Calliari Veronensis inventerunt et pinxerunt; quæque Valentinus Le Febre Bruxellensis delineavit et sculpsit.' He died at Venice about 1700.

LEFEBVRE, CHARLES VICTOR EUGÈNE, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1805. He studied under Gros and Abel de Pujol. His first contribution to the Salon was 'The Prisoner of Chillon,' exhibited in 1827. He died in 1882.

LE FEBVRE, CLAUDE, a French portrait painter, was born at Fontainebleau in 1633. He studied after the works of Le Sueur and Le Brun in the château of that town, and became an excellent painter of portraits, which resemble in their tone the works of Van Dyck. In 1663 he was received a member of the Academy, on which occasion he painted the portrait of Colbert. After this he went to England, and met with great encouragement at the court of Charles II. He died in Paris in 1675. Two of his portraits are in the Louvre, and in the National Portrait Gallery is a portrait by him of Isaac Barrow. He also etched a few portraits. JACQUES LE FEBVRE, his brother, who died in 1678, was also an excellent painter of portraits.

LEFÈVRE, ROBERT. See LEFÈVRE.

LEFÈVRE, DESIRÉ ACHILLE, a French engraver, the son and pupil of Sébastien Lefèvre, was born in Paris in 1798, and died in the same city in 1864. There are by him:

LE FÈVRE, ROBERT, a French historical, portrait, and decorative painter, was born at Bayeux in 1756. It was intended by his father that he should enter the legal profession, but his inclination for art was too strong, and at the age of eighteen he made the journey to Paris on foot in order to see its treasures. He returned to Caen, and at length, by the works which he executed in the château of Airel, near St. Lo, he was enabled to raise funds to study under Regnault at Paris. He obtained a great reputation as a portrait painter, and most of the eminent personages of the time sat to him. On the Restoration, he was appointed principal painter to Louis XVIII. He put an end to his life in Paris in 1830, in consequence, it is said, of being deprived of his appointments by the Revolution of July. Amongst his works are:

Antwerp.	Museum.	Portrait of Van Dael.
Caen.	Museum.	Portrait of the poet Malherbe.
Compiègne.	Museum.	Phocion.

LEFÈVRE, ROLLAND, called ROLLAND DE VENISE, was born in Anjou in 1608, and spent considerable time at Venice and London, in which latter city he died in 1677. He painted portraits and historical subjects of a small size. One of his best portraits is that of Cigala, which has been engraved by Picart. He was patronized in England by Prince Rupert, but he is more esteemed for a mode of staining which he introduced than for his skill as a painter.

LE FÈVRE, VALENTIN. See LE FÈBRE.

LEGAT, FRANCIS, an engraver, was born in Scotland in 1755, and after receiving instruction in art at Edinburgh under Alexander Runciman, he came in 1780 to London, where he found employment with Boydell and other publishers. In consequence of his engraving of 'Ophelia before the King and Queen,' he was towards the end of the century appointed engraver to the Prince of Wales. He died in London in 1809. He engraved several plates in a very finished style, in which he appears to have imitated the fine manner adopted by Sir Robert Strange. Among others are the following plates, which were engraved for Boydell:

The Contineuce of Scipio; after N. Poussin. 1784.

The King, Queen, and Laertes, in 'Hamlet'; after West. The Children in the Tower, from 'Richard the Third'; after Northcote.

Scene from 'King Lear'; after Barry.

LÉGILLON, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a Flemish landscape painter, was born of French parentage in 1739 at Bruges, where he was a pupil of M. De Visch. In 1760 he went to Rouen and studied at the Academy under J. B. Descamps, carrying off the silver medal in 1762. In 1763 he travelled through France and Italy, and returned to Rouen in 1769. In 1770 he went to Rome, where he remained for two years, and then travelled again through Italy, returning to Bruges in 1774. There he established a small school, but in 1779 he went to Paris, and travelled through Switzerland, returning again to Bruges in 1780. In 1782 he removed from Bruges and settled in Paris, where he was made a member of the Academy and painter to the king in 1789. The troubles of the French Revolution compelled him to return to Bruges, where he remained. In 1797 the wish to see a friend took him again to Paris, where he was seized with sudden illness and died.

LEGNANI, STEFANO MARIA, called IL LEGNANINO, was born at Bologna in 1660. He was called 'Legnanino' to distinguish him from his father, Ambrogio Legnani, a portrait painter, by whom he was instructed in the first rudiments of design. He afterwards studied at Bologna under Carlo Cignani, and at Rome under Carlo Maratti. He distinguished himself as a fresco painter, particularly in Sant' Angiolo at Milan, where he has represented a battle gained under the protection of St. James, which is treated with a fire and capacity equal to the most difficult subjects in the art. Many of his works are at Genoa, at Turin, and in Piedmont. The cupola of San Gaudenzio at Novara is esteemed one of his best works. He died at Bologna in 1715. He has left some etchings, among which are a 'Virgin' and a 'Holy Family.' In the Brera at Milan is a portrait of the painter.

LÉGNANO, FRANCESCO DA. See BARBIERI.

LEGOTE, PABLO, was a Spanish painter, who flourished in the early part of the 17th century. Between the years 1629 and 1636 he was engaged with Alonzo Cano in painting and gilding in the church of Lebrija. The subjects of his pictures were the 'Annunciation,' the 'Nativity,' the 'Epiphany,' and the two St. Johns. In 1647 Cardinal Spinola, Archbishop of Seville, commissioned him to execute for the large hall of his palace a full-length series of apostles. A similar series, which hung in the church of the Hospital of Pity, was by some attributed to him, but by others to the elder Herrera. He afterwards went to Cadiz, where he was employed in 1662 to paint banners for the royal fleet.

His first works were Scriptural subjects, but his reputation rests chiefly upon his portraits. He was also employed in mural decorations, among which were the chapels of the church of St. Merry, and the galleries of the Hôtel de Ville, Paris. In 1861 he was made head of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, and in 1875 professor in the École des Beaux-Arts. He died in Paris in 1882.

During one part of his career he was much occupied in literary pursuits, and in his later years he established an art school in Newman Street, which obtained a good reputation. He died in London in 1860.

LEINBERGER, CHRISTIAN, a German painter, was born at Erlangen in 1706. He worked in Italy, and painted historical and allegorical pictures, among which was the 'Stoning of St. Stephen.' He died in 1770. His works are signed with the initials C.L., or this monogram: CL.

LEINBERGER, GEORG KARL, born at Erlangen in 1718, visited Italy with his brother Christian at the age of thirteen. After having stayed three years at Venice, Rome, and Naples, he went by way of Vienna to Frankfort, and painted with his brother the ceiling in the Imperial Electoral Hall, after which they worked in Westphalia and Baireuth. Georg Karl went again to Italy, and was employed at the court of Turin; he subsequently visited Lyons, Paris, Holland, and Copenhagen, where he worked some time at the court, and afterwards returned to Baireuth. He died at Anspach in 1797.

LEIPOLDT, J. The name of this engraver is affixed to a small oval portrait of Mary, Queen of Scots, with a crucifix in her right hand and the axe in her left.

LEITCH, WILLIAM LEIGHTON, a Scottish water-colour painter, was born at Glasgow in 1804. He was educated at a private school, and afterwards at the Highland Society School. As a schoolboy he showed great liking for drawing, and made the acquaintance of Daniel Macnee, afterwards President of the Scottish Academy, with whom he used to study in the evening. He was placed by his friends in a lawyer's office, but he soon left that uncongenial labour, and took employment with a decorator and sign-painter. He then came to London and worked as a scene-painter, and here he made the acquaintance of David Roberts and Clarkson Stanfield. He then went to Italy, where he remained for five years, and on his return to London exhibited at the Royal Academy and other exhibitions. He was teacher of water-colour painting to the Queen, and other members of the royal family. He died in London in 1883.

He claims a place here as the painter of many of the battles in which he was engaged, and in which victory fell to the French; among them are those of Marengo, Lodi, Aboukir, Mount Tabor, the Pyramids, the Passage of the Rhine by Jourdan, the Battle of Moskowa, and several others, all sketched at the several actions, and afterwards transferred to canvas. He died at Toulouse in 1848. Some of his battle-pieces have been engraved by Jacques Joseph Coigny and Bovinet.

LE KEUX, HENRY, a line-engraver, born in 1787, was a younger brother of John Le Keux. He was articled to Basire, and was engaged on the Oxford Almanacs, and afterwards on the illustrations for the 'Beauties of England and Wales.' He assisted his brother in Britton's 'Cathedrals,' and with Blore produced the 'Monumental Remains.' He engraved Claude's 'Embarkation of St. Ursula,' as well as plates for the 'Forget-me-not,' and other annuals, after Martin and Prout, and after Turner for Rogers's 'Poems.' He retired from his profession in 1838, and went to reside at Bocking in Essex, where he engaged in a crape manufactory, and died in 1868.

LE KEUX, JOHN, a line-engraver, was born in London in 1783. At first he worked with his father, a pewter manufacturer, but at the age of about seventeen he was apprenticed to Basire, the engraver. Architectural and antiquarian subjects chiefly engaged his attention, and he worked much in conjunction with Britton. He died in 1846. Many of his works are to be found in:

Britton's 'Architectural Antiquities.'

" 'Cathedral Antiquities.'

Beck's 'Annales Furnienses.'

Neale's 'Memorials of Oxford.'

LELIO DA NOVELLARA. See ORSI.

LELLI, ERCOLE, was born at Bologna in 1702, and became a scholar of Giovanni Pietro Zanotti. He appears to have applied himself more to the study of the anatomy of the human body than to painting; and is more celebrated for his anatomical preparations in wax, at the Bolognese Institute, than for his works as a painter. The only paintings by him mentioned are his picture of the Virgin and Infant, with St. Anthony of Padua and St. Clara, in the church of Sant' Andrea delle Scuole, at Bologna; and a St. Fidele, at the Cappuccini, at Piacenza. He was an eminent teacher of design, and had many pupils. He afterwards became director of the Academy at Bologna, and died there in 1766. He has also left some engravings, one of the best of which is 'Hagar and Ishmael.'

LELLI, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, was born at Rome in 1591, and was a disciple of Lodovico Cardi, called Cigoli. Although he was more employed in easel pictures for private collections, there are some of his works in the churches at Rome, which entitle him to the rank of a respectable historical painter. In San Matteo in Merulano is an admired picture by him of the 'Annunciation'; and in the cloister of La Minerva, his most celebrated work of the 'Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elisabeth.' He died in 1640.

LELOIR, LOUIS, a French water-colour painter, was born in Paris in 1843. He was a pupil of his father Auguste Leloir, and sent to the Salon of 1863 'La Massacre des Innocents,' which was followed by other excellent works. He died in 1884.

LE LORRAIN, LOUIS JOSEPH, a French painter and engraver, was born in Paris in 1715. He was a pupil of Jean Dumont, and visited Rome for improvement. After his return he was received a member of the Academy. He went to St. Petersburg in 1758, where he chiefly distinguished himself as a painter of theatrical decorations. He died in that city in 1760. Two paintings by him are mentioned:

The King of France as Apollo, protecting Painting and Sculpture.

The Graces; a ceiling-piece.

He engraved some prints from his own designs, and the following after J. F. de Troy:

The Judgment of Solomon.
Solomon sacrificing to Idols.
Esther before Ahasuerus.
The Death of Cleopatra.

LELY, Sir PETER. See VAN DER FAES.

LE MAIRE, FRANÇOIS, was born at Maison Rouge, near Fontainebleau, in 1620. He was a portrait painter and a good colourist, and was the master of Santerre. He was received into the Academy in 1657, upon the portrait of Jacques Sarrazin, and died in Paris in 1688. He was the nephew of Pierre Le Maire, and to distinguish him from his corpulent relative was called 'Le petit Le Maire.'

LE MAIRE, PIERRE, a French painter and engraver, was born at Dammartin, near Paris, in 1597. He was first instructed by Claude Vignon, and resided afterwards twenty years at Rome. After having returned to Paris in 1637 he went again to Rome, where he however did not stay long. He was the intimate friend of Poussin, and was called 'Le Maire Poussin;' and, as he was a corpulent man, he was also known as 'Le gros Le Maire.' He died at Gaillon in 1659. In the Louvre there are by him two views of the ancient monuments of Rome. He distinguished himself also as an etcher. His plates, executed in the style of Vignon, are correctly drawn, and include fourteen subjects from the history of Paris, 1637; and 'David before the Ark,' after Domenichino.

LEMBKE, JOHANN PHILIPP, was born at Nuremberg in 1631. He studied for some time under Matthäus Weyer and Georg Strauch, and then went, in 1653, to Italy, where the works of Pieter van Laer and Jean Courtois had a great influence on his style of painting. Lembke went subsequently to the court of Sweden to be principal painter to Charles XII. at Stockholm, where he eventually died in poverty in 1713. It is in Sweden—more especially in the castle of Drottningholm—that his pictures may be seen. The Vienna Gallery has a 'Skirmish' by Lembke of much merit. The favourite subjects of this artist are battles, marches, sieges, skirmishes—in fact anything with military action. His works are good in composition, and equally well drawn and coloured. He also etched several plates.

LEMENS, BALTHAZAR, was born at Antwerp in 1637, and was one of the first artists who visited England after the Restoration, which held out a prospect of a revival of the encouragement of the arts; but his expectations were disappointed. He painted small historical subjects, in which he displayed a fruitful invention, and a neat and ready execution. But the fashion of the time was confined to portrait painting, and he was under the necessity of finishing the draperies and backgrounds for other artists. He died in London in 1704.

LE MERCIER, ANTOINE. There are by this artist, who flourished about 1633, some slight but spirited etchings of architectural ornaments, &c., after the designs of P. Collo.

LEMERCIER, JACQUES, born at Pontoise about 1585, was an architect and engraver. In the latter capacity he etched with a spirited pen the design of a model (not executed) by Michelangelo for the church of San Giovanni de' Fiorentini at Rome, 1607; the statue of Henry IV., erected in San Giovanni in Laterano, in 1608; and the catafalque at Rome for the obsequies of Henry IV., in 1610. He died in Paris in 1654.

LEMERCIER, PHILIPP, was born in 1689 at Berlin, where he attended the Academy. He afterwards visited Italy, France, and Hanover. He gained a reputation as a portrait painter, and came to England, where he found ample employment for some time. After travelling through Ireland and Portugal he returned to Berlin, and died in 1760.

LE MERSION, MADELINE, a French lady, etched a plate of a 'Landscape and Cattle,' in a style resembling that of Danckerts. It was published at Paris, without date or the name of the painter.

LEMETTAY, PIERRE CHARLES, was born at Fécamp in 1726. He studied under Boucher, and after having obtained the first prize for Rome, he went to that city, and afterwards spent two years at Turin. On his return to Paris he became a member of the Academy, and received the title of painter to the king. He died in Paris in 1760. His sea-pieces resemble those of Vernet. Leveau and Zingg engraved after him.

LEMIRE, ANTOINE SAUVAGE. See SAUVAGE.

LE MIRE, NOEL, a French draughtsman and engraver, born at Rouen in 1724, was a scholar of Le Bas. He made numerous illustrative engravings for books; particularly for the 'Contes' of La Fontaine, 1762; 'Les Métamorphoses d'Ovide,' published by him and Basan in 1767-71; and ten plates after Eisen for an edition of the 'Temple de Gnide,' published in 1762. Independently of these he engraved for other works a great number of subjects after Cochin, Eisen, and Moreau. 'Le Gateau des Rois,' a satirical representation of the partition of Poland, by Moreau, was seized and the plate destroyed. Le Mire died in Paris in 1801. The following are among his plates:

LEMOINE, SUSANNE. See SILVESTRE.

LEMONNIER, ANICET CHARLES GABRIEL, was born at Rouen in 1743. He was destined for a commercial life, but he abandoned it and studied in Paris in the school of Vien, with David and Vincent as fellow-pupils. In 1772 he carried off the 'grand prix' with his picture of 'The Children of Niobe killed by Apollo and Diana.' In 1774 he went to Rome, and afterwards travelled through Italy. In 1786 he was commissioned by the Chamber of Commerce of Rouen to paint a picture to commemorate the visit to Rouen of Louis XVI, which was exhibited in 1789, in which year he was made a member of the Academy. In 1810 he was appointed Director of the Tapestry Establishment, which post he held for six years. He also re-organized the Museum at Rouen, where there are twelve of his works. He died in Paris in 1824. Among his chief works are:

The Plague at Milan. 1785. (Rouen Museum.)
The Mission of the Apostles. 1793. (The same.)
Jesus calling to Him the Little Ones. 1783. (The same.)
Christ to the Synagogue. 1782. (The same.)
The Salon of Madame Geoffrin. 1814. (Munich.)
Francis I. receiving at Fontainebleau Raphael's 'Holy Family.' 1814. (The same.)
Louis XIV. inaugurating Puget's statue of Milo of Crotona. 1814. (The same.)

LE MOYNE, FRANÇOIS, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1688. He entered the studio of Galloche, and in 1707 gained a prize for drawing, and in 1711 the 'grand prix' with his picture of 'Boaz and Ruth,' which entitled him to go to Rome, but the state of affairs and the royal finances prevented his journey. In 1714 he painted a picture of 'St. John the Baptist' for the church of St. Eustache in Paris. In 1716 he painted a 'Temptation,' which is in the church of Camon, near Amiens. In 1718 he became a member of the Academy, and his reception picture was 'Hercules and Cacus.' In 1719 he painted a picture of 'St. Paul before Sergius,' which was destroyed in 1870 in the siege of Strassburg. In 1722 he painted a picture of 'Tancred and Clorinda,' which is now in the Museum at Besançon. He then took to decorative painting, and his first essay was in 1723, when on the ceiling of the Novitiate of the Jacobins, which is now the Church of St. Thomas d'Aquin, he painted a large representation of the 'Transfiguration.' In 1724 a patron, M. Berger, took him to Italy, where he spent about six months, where he seems rather to have studied Pietro da Cortona and Carlo Maratti than Michelangelo. On his return to Paris he painted 'The Bathers,' and 'Hercules and Omphale.' In 1727, with his 'Contenance of Scipio,' he divided the honours with De Troy for a prize offered by Louis XV. In 1730 he painted an 'Assumption' for the cupola of the chapel of the Virgin in the church of St. Sulpice. He was commissioned to decorate the ceiling of the Grand Saloon at Versailles with the 'Apotheosis of Hercules,' an immense composition, which occupied him four years. This work procured him in 1736 the appointment of principal painter to the king, which had been vacant since the death of Boullogne in 1733. Notwithstanding this patronage, and that of the King of Spain, for whom he was commissioned to paint a large picture representing 'The Defeat of Porus,' owing to the loss of his protector, the Duke d'Antin, he fell into a state of melancholy. In 1737, when M. Berger visited him, he found that his door was closed, and on it being opened, it was discovered that Le Moyne had stabbed himself in several places.

Among his principal paintings are the following:

The Apotheosis of Hercules. 1732-36. (Versailles.)
Hercules and Cacus. 1718. (Louvre.)
Hercules and Omphale. 1724. (Louvre.)
Cupid and Cephalus. 1724. (Versailles Mairie.)
Venus and Adonis. 1729. (Stockholm Museum.)
The Ascension of Mary. (Cupola of St. Sulpice.)
The Transfiguration. (St. Thomas d'Aquin.)

LEMOYNE, FRANÇOIS, (or LEMOINE,) was a French engraver, who flourished in the 17th century, and was concerned with Berain and Chauveau in designing and engraving the ornaments of painting and sculpture which are in the Gallery of Apollo in the Louvre.

LEMPEREUR, CATHERINE ELISABETH, whose maiden name was Cousinet, the wife of Louis Simon Lempereur, was born in Paris in 1726. She was instructed in engraving by Laurent Cars and Fessard. There are several pleasing prints by her, among which are the following:

Two Architectural Subjects; after Pannini.
The Milkmaid; after Teniers.
The Dangerous Forest; after Wouwerman.
The Rural Labours; after the same.
The Departure of Jacob; after Boucher.
Six Marine Subjects and Sea-ports; after Vernet.

LEMPEREUR, JEAN BAPTISTE DENIS, the son of Jean Denis Lempereur, was born in Paris about 1740, and inherited the taste and talent of his father. It is probable that he died in 1796. He etched several plates after various masters, as well as from his own designs, among which are the following:

The Angel announcing to the Shepherds the Nativity of Christ; after Boucher.
The Murder of the Innocents; after Pierre.
Two Landscapes; after Ruisdael.

LEMPEREUR, JEAN DENIS, a French amateur engraver, was born in Paris in 1701, but the date of his death is not known. He possessed an extensive collection of pictures and drawings, and etched a variety of plates after Pietro da Cortona, Benedetto Castiglione, Van Dyck, and others.

LEMPEREUR, LOUIS SIMON, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1728. He was a pupil of Pierre Aveline and Laurent Cars, and became a member of the Academy in 1776. He afterwards came to England, where he met with considerable encouragement, but after a time returned to France, and died in Paris in 1807. There are several prints by this artist, which prove him to have possessed very eminent talents. The following are his principal plates:

PORTRAITS.

 Pierre Laurent Buyrette de Belloy, a dramatic poet; an emblematical portrait, after Jollain. 1765.

LEMPUT, REMI VAN, was born at Antwerp, and arrived at some excellence by copying the works of Van Dyck. He came over to England, and died in London in 1675. His daughter was an artist, and married Thomas Streater.

LE NAIN, ANTOINE, LOUIS, AND MATHIEU, three brothers, and the sons of a sergeant, were born at Laon in 1588, 1593, and 1607 respectively. After learning the elements of painting they together went to Paris, where Antoine was received as a painter in 1629. Létouffé was instructed by Antoine about 1630, and his paintings, which are inferior to those of his master, are generally attributed to Louis and Mathieu. The three brothers worked a long time together in Paris, and became members of the Academy in 1648, but both Antoine and Louis died in Paris in May of the same year. Mathieu painted historical subjects for churches, and portraits, among which were those of Cinq Mars, Cardinal Mazarin, and Anne of Austria. He died in Paris in 1677. It is probable that the very interesting and pleasing subjects known as the works of Le Nain were painted by Louis and Antoine conjointly. They consist of familiar objects and incidents, such as interiors of inns, rustic habitations, domestic enjoyments, card-players, and village pastimes, and they have characteristic peculiarities that distinguish them from the works of all other masters. They are unequalled for natural expression and an air of truth. The pictures by the Le Nains, which are best known, are of the cabinet size. There was one of unusually large dimensions in Watson Taylor's collection, representing the interior of an inn, with a party of travellers, an itinerant performer on the hurdy-gurdy, and several other figures. Specimens are to be found in some of the richest cabinets in England, France, and Germany. The following are some of their principal works:

LENDINARA, LORENZO DA. See CANOZZI.

LENEY, WILLIAM S., an engraver, was born in London, and practised as a stipple engraver towards the end of the 18th century. He was a pupil of Tomkins. He produced a large plate of the 'Descent from the Cross,' after Rubens, and engraved for the Shakespeare Gallery. He emigrated to America, where he made some money by engraving bank-notes, and bought a farm on the St. Lawrence, a little below Montreal, where he was living in 1808.

LENFANT, JEAN, a French engraver, was born at Abbeville about 1615, and died in Paris in 1674. He was the cousin and pupil of Claude Mellan, and followed the first style of that master, in which he used the cross strokes. The greater part of his prints are portraits, which are his best works. The following plates are by him:

PORTRAITS.

The Count de Brienne; after Le Brun.

LENFANT, PIERRE, a French battle-painter, was born at Anet, near Dreux, in 1704, and died in Paris in 1787. He was a pupil of Parrocel, and was made an academicien in 1745, as a painter of landscapes and battle scenes. At Versailles are the following works by him:

The Taking of Mervin.
 The Siege of Fribourg.
 The Siege of Mons.
 The Siege of Tournai.

LENGELE, MARTINUS, was born at the Hague in 1604, and distinguished himself as a portrait painter. There was by him in the Shooting-house a painting with ten large figures, representing the Company of Orange. He was appointed Director of the Academy in 1656, and died in 1661.

LENGERICH, HEINRICH, was born at Stettin in 1790, and studied under Wach. In 1817 he visited Italy, where he studied chiefly the works of Raphael and Correggio. He was professor at the Academy at Berlin, where he died in 1865. A 'Taking down from the Cross' by him is in the church of St. Jakob at Stettin.

LENKER, HANS, was a goldsmith at Nuremberg. There is by him in the Royal Library at Munich a book of prayers ornamented with beautiful miniatures, the covers of which are engraved and enamelled in silver, and dated 1573. He was burgomaster at Augsburg. Hans Lenker, the elder, who is supposed to have been his father, was the author of a treatise upon optics, published in 1616.

LENOIR, ADELAIDE, whose maiden name was BINART, was born in Paris in 1771. She was first instructed by her father, and afterwards by Regnault. She painted several portraits, among which was that of her father, most of which were exhibited between 1801 and 1817.

LENOIR, MARIE ALEXANDRE, was born in Paris in 1761. He was instructed in painting by Doyen, but it is chiefly as an art lover and writer that he is known. At the outbreak of the French Revolution he received permission from the National Assembly to collect the principal ecclesiastical monuments and art treasures into one place, and he used the Convent of the "Petits Augustins" as a museum, of which he became the president, and published eight volumes descriptive of its formation and contents. He also wrote a history of French art, and a work on hieroglyphics. His museum was scattered under Louis XVIII.'s government, and its president became in 1816 curator of the Royal Monuments. His collection of French portraits is at Stafford House, and has been lithographed by Lord Ronald Gower. He died in Paris in 1838.

LENOIR, PAUL MARIE, was a French painter of ability, who died at Cairo in 1881. He was a pupil of Gérôme and Jalabert, and his 'Les Courses à Osaka, Japon,' in the Salon of 1880, attracted considerable attention.

LENOIR, SIMON BERNARD, a French portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1729, and died in the same city in 1789.

LENS, ANDREW BERNARD, and PETER PAUL, were miniature painters, who practised in London about the middle of the 18th century. They were sons of Bernard Lens the younger. The first-named exhibited at the Incorporated Society from 1765 to 1770, and sold a collection of his own and his father's works in 1777.

LENS, ANDRIES, was born at Antwerp in 1739, and was a scholar of Ykens and Balthasar Beschey. At the age of sixteen he obtained the first prize at the Academy, of which he became a professor in 1763. In 1764 he was appointed court painter to Prince Charles of Lorraine, and went the same year to Italy, where he studied after Raphael and the old masters. In 1781 he established himself at Brussels, where he painted for the palaces and churches. He was a member of the Institute, and he died at Brussels in 1822. He has been called the regenerator of painting in Belgium, and a monument has been erected to him in Notre-Dame de la Chapelle, Brussels. The following are his most important paintings:

LENS, BERNARD, the elder, the son of a painter of the same name, of little note, was born in London in 1659, and was instructed by his father. He was a mezzotint engraver, and also etched a few plates, and drew views in Indian ink. He died in 1725. The following plates are by him:

David with the Head of Goliath; after Domenico Feti.
The Judgment of Paris; after Sir Peter Lely.
Bacchus, Venus, and Ceres; after F. Badens.
Three Landscapes, with Figures and Cattle; after Berchem.
Rinaldo and Armida; after J. Vandervuert.

LENS, BERNARD, the younger, the son of Bernard Lens the elder, was born in London in 1680, and became celebrated for his fine copies in water-colours from Rubens, Van Dyck, and other masters. He was also an eminent miniature painter and drawing-master, and had the honour of instructing the Duke of Cumberland, and of becoming enameller and miniature painter to George II. He etched a few portraits, and two or three drawing-books of landscapes and views, which he published for the use of his pupils. He died at Knightsbridge in 1740. He also engraved in mezzotint; an account of 23 plates is given by Nagler.

LENS, JACOB, a Flemish portrait and historical painter, brother of Andries Lens, was born at Antwerp in 1746, and died about 1814. Amongst his pictures are:

Antwerp.	Church of Augustinians.	Presentation in the Temple.
Brussels.	Gallery.	Portrait of the Emperor Leopold.

LENTHE, FRIEDRICH CHRISTOPH GEORG, was born at Grabow, in Mecklenburg Schwerin, in 1774, and studied under Grassi at Dresden. He was director of the Gallery in 1811-12, and afterwards court painter of the Grand-Duke. He died at Ludwigslust in 1851. He worked with great ability, and his paintings are marked by a deep religious feeling. He also painted portraits, and was successful in mezzotint engraving. A 'Death of Christ' by him is in the cathedral of Schwerin.

LENTZEN, JAN FRANS, a Flemish landscape painter, was born at Antwerp in 1790, and died there in 1840. He is known chiefly by his successful copies of the works of Omnegeanck.

LENTZNER, JOHANN NIKOLAUS, was born at Schleiz in Voigtland, in 1711. He was instructed by Dietrich at Weimar, and studied afterwards under Hamilton, in whose style, as well as in that of Wouwerman, Heinrich Roos, and Dietrich, he executed excellent landscapes, ruins, and cattle. He settled at Frankfort, and died there in 1749. In addition to several drawings in Indian ink and ruddle after the above-mentioned artists, he has left one of the 'Festivities at the Coronation of the Emperor Charles VII. in 1741.'

LENZ, KARL GOTTLIEB, was born at Dresden in 1753. He was a pupil of Hutin, and resided for some time at Schenau, but in 1788 he went to Rome, where he died in 1790. Among his works were 'Paul and Festus,' and the 'Worship of the Golden Calf.'

LEON, CHRISTOBAL DE, a scholar of Valdes Leal, painted eighteen monastic portraits, and some decorations in distemper for the church of San Felipe Neri, by which he proved himself, according to Cean Bermudez, one of the best artists in Seville after the death of Murillo and Valdes. He died at Seville in 1729.

LEON, FELIPE DE, a Spanish historical painter, appears to have been the brother of Christobal de Leon. He imitated the style of Murillo, and also copied the works of that master. Many of his copies were formerly at Seville, where they were held in great esteem by the amateurs. He likewise produced several pictures of his own composition; among others, 'The Prophet Elijah ascending to Heaven in a Chariot of Fire.' He died at Seville in 1728.

LEON LEAL, SIMON DE, a Spanish painter, was born at Madrid in 1610. He was a scholar of Pedro de Las Cuevas, and distinguished himself both in history and portraits. In the latter, he formed his style from the chaste and simple colouring of Van Dyck. For the Premonstratensian Friars he painted an altar-piece representing 'St. Norbert triumphing over Heresy,' and another picture of 'St. Norbert receiving his vestments from the hands of the Virgin.' For the church of the Noviciado of the Jesuits he painted an altar-piece, and a series of pictures of the Infancy of Christ, and for the church of the Capuchins an 'Immaculate Conception.' He was appointed painter to the queen, and was much employed by the court. He died at Madrid in 1687.

LEON SALCEDO, IGNACIO DE, was a scholar of Valdes Leal, who studied in the Academy of Seville in 1666-7. He imitated the style of his master. His best work was in the Convent of Mercy, and represented 'San Pedro Nolasco correcting the Novices of his Order.'

Among his works are 'The Baptism of our Lord,' and 'The Baptism of the Eunuch,' in the Cathedral at Montpellier, and the 'Death of St. Joseph' in the church of La Charité at Nîmes.

LEONARDIS, GIACOMO, an Italian designer and etcher, was born at Palma, in the Venetian State, in 1723, and died after 1780. He was instructed by M. Benville and G. B. Tiepolo, and obtained the first prize at the Academy of Venice. He was skilful in preserving the character of the artist he represented. He etched several plates after Italian masters; among which are the following:

Cupids at Play; after Giulio Carpioni.

The Triumph of Silenus; after the same.

Neptune and Thetis; after Sebastiano Conca. 1765.

The Rape of Europa; after the same.

Two plates of the Amusements of the Carnival: after Tiepolo.

The Golden Calf; after Tintoretto.

The Last Judgment; after the same. 1768.

LEONARDO, AGUSTIN, a native of Valencia, is supposed to have taken the habit of the Order of Mercy at Xativa. In 1620 he was a brother of the convent of that order at Puig, near Valencia, where he painted for the sacristy four large pictures of the 'Finding of the Image of Our Lady at Puig;' the 'Siege of Valencia,' and its surrender to King James; and the 'Battle of Puig,' in which St. George fought for the Christians. He afterwards visited Seville, where he painted a picture, dated 1624, of 'Christ and the Woman of Samaria.' In 1624-5 he was called to Madrid, where he painted two pictures for the great staircase of the Convent of Mercy, which, according to Cean Bermudez, possessed some merit in drawing and composition, but were harsh in colouring. He was thought to excel in portraiture, and painted a portrait of Gabriel Bocangel, the poet. Palomino states that he died at Madrid in 1640, but Cean Bermudez thinks it more probable that he returned to Valencia, and died there at a later date.

LEONARDO, JUSEPE, a Spanish painter of battles, was a distinguished scholar of Pedro de Las Cuevas. He was born at Calatayud in Aragon in 1616, and died at Saragossa in 1656, of poison, supposed to have been administered to him by some who were jealous of his merits. He was painter to the king, and executed for the palace of Buen Retiro works worthy of celebrity; among them the 'Surrender of Breda,' and the 'March of the Duke of Feria's Troop upon Acqui,' which are now in the Madrid Gallery; the latter is a picture of large dimensions and great merit. There is also a portrait of Alaric the Goth, which is one of the ornaments of the royal collection.

LEONARDONI, FRANCISCO, was born in 1654 at Venice, where he studied for some time. Expatriated for some unknown cause, he travelled through various parts of Europe, and settled at Madrid in 1680. There he distinguished himself by his portraits, especially miniatures, although he also painted several pictures for the churches. In the church of the Convent of Atocha at Madrid, are two pictures of the 'Marriage and Death of St. Joseph;' and in the church of San Geronimo el Real, a large altar-piece of the 'Annunciation.' He died at Madrid in 1711.

LEONART, JOHANNES FREDRIK, a Flemish etcher and engraver in mezzotint, was born at Dunkirk about 1633, and died at Berlin in 1680. He engraved the portraits of Justus van Merstræten, Syndic of Brussels, and his wife, after Van Dyck.

LEONBRUNO, LORENZO, was born at Mantua in 1489. He studied after the works of Mantegna, attended the school of Lorenzo Costa in 1508, and visited Rome in 1521. Several of his paintings, which he executed in the palaces of his native city, have disappeared. There is by him in the Berlin Gallery the 'Judgment of Midas.' He died in 1537, probably at Mantua.

LEONCINI, FRANCESCO, was the engraver of a plate representing the 'Flight into Egypt;' it is etched in the style of a painter, and signed Francesco Leoncini di S. Geminiano, f. et inv.

LEONE, a Benedictine monk, was probably a native of Amalfi. He wrote in 1072 the Codex 99, 'Homiliæ diversæ,' at Monte Cassino, which he illuminated with portraits and scenes from the Bible in miniature, that might easily be attributed to Cimabue or Giotto. He is probably identical with Leo, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, who was secretary to Pope Urban II., and died in 1115.

LEONE, ANDREA DI, born at Naples in 1596, was a disciple of Corenzio, Il Greco, and Salvator Rosa. When Corenzio left Naples, Leone became his successor, and adorned the palace of the Viceroy in that city. He painted there several battles, but afterwards imitated Aniello Falcone in his works of a smaller size. There are several paintings by him in the cathedral and in San Paolo Maggiore at Milan. He died at Naples in 1675. The following also is by him :

The Triumph of David; after Guercino.

Christ on the Cross; after F. Gessi.

Christ in the Temple among the Doctors; after Leonardo da Vinci.

LEONI, GUGLIELMO DA, an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Parma in 1664. He is supposed to have been a pupil of Giulio Romano, but he soon abandoned painting for engraving. He died about 1740.

LEONI, LODOVICO, called IL PADOVANINO, was born at Padua in 1531. He spent most of his life in Rome, and executed portraits in wax, besides painting in oil and fresco landscapes and historical subjects. He died at Rome in 1606.

LEONI, OTTAVIO, the son and pupil of Lodovico Leoni, was born at Rome about 1578. He was esteemed one of the ablest portrait painters of his time, and drew the popes, cardinals, and principal nobility of the period in which he lived. His talents were not, however, confined to portraiture; for he painted several altar-pieces for the churches in Rome. In Sant' Eustachio is a picture by him of the 'Annunciation'; in Santa Maria della Minerva, the 'Virgin and Child, with St. Hyacinthe'; and in Sant' Urbano, 'St. Charles, St. Francis, and St. Nicholas.' He was made principal of the Academy of St. Luke, and a knight of the order of Christ, on which occasion he painted for the church of the Academy the 'Martyrdom of St. Martina.' He died at Rome in 1630. Ottavio Leoni was the engraver of a set of heads of painters and others, executed in a singular manner, but producing a very pleasing effect. The hair and draperies are engraved with strokes; the faces delicately dotted, with the shadows assisted with strokes. There are about twenty of the plates, among which are the following, which are signed, Eques Ottav. Leonus, Romanus pictor fecit.

Eques Ottav. Leonus; se ipse fec. 1625.

LE PAULTRE, JEAN, (or LE PAUTRE,) a French draughtsman and engraver, was born in Paris in 1618. In the early part of his life he was placed with a carpenter and builder, under whom he learned to draw plans and ornamental designs. He afterwards turned his attention to engraving, both with the point and the graver, and executed some fourteen or fifteen hundred plates, consisting of architectural decorations, friezes, ceilings, vases, and other ornaments, which, with the exception of a few prints from the drawings of Paolo Farinati, are all after his own designs. He also engraved several historical and religious subjects; but they are inferior to his other plates. He was made a member of the Academy at Paris in 1677, and died there in 1682. LÉPICIÉ, BERNARD, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1698. He was probably a pupil of Jean Audran, whose style he adopted with success. He was invited to England by Clands Du Bosc, to assist him in engraving the cartoons of Raphael, on a smaller scale than those of Dorigny; but his talents ought not to be estimated from those unfavorable specimens. On his return to Paris, he engraved several plates, which gained him great reputation. He was received into the Academy in 1740, and became its secretary and historiographer; and in the latter capacity he published in 1752 a 'Catalogue raisonné des Tableaux du Cabinet du Roi,' and 'Les Vies des Premiers Peintres du Roi, depuis M. LE PIPER, FRANÇOIS, was the son of a Kentish gentleman of Flemish extraction, and was born about the year 1640. His father, who was in possession of a considerable estate, gave him a liberal education, intending him for a merchant, but his inclination leading him entirely to drawing, he rambled over great part of Europe to study painting. He was of a gay and facetious turn of mind, and the subjects he treated were usually humorous and comical, and were chiefly painted in black and white. Most of his performances were produced over a bottle, and the theatre of his exertions was the Mitre Tavern at Stock's Market, or the Bell in Westminster, which were adorned by the productions of this jovial artist. He drew landscapes, which he etched on silver plates for the tobacco-boxes of his friends. Towards the latter part of his life his circumstances were sufficiently reduced to make it necessary for him to think of turning his talents to some account. Becket employed him to design his mezzotints, and he drew several of the heads of the Grand Seigniors, for Sir Paul Rycaut's 'History of the Turks.' On the death of his mother, his fortune being re-established, he launched again into a course of pleasure, contracted a fever, and being bled by an ignorant surgeon, who pricked an artery, he died in 1698. His portrait was drawn in crayons by Faithorne, and engraved by Lutereau.

other subjects are to be found in some of the best collections. He exhibited at the Salons of 1819, 1822, and 1824, and died at Nice in 1826. Vien and François Boucher, and after having acquired some reputation at Paris, went to Russia, where he resided several years, and visited various parts of that empire, sketching the different costumes and the most remarkable views in the provinces through which he passed. He returned to Paris with an extensive collection of drawings, from which he painted pictures, which were much admired, and executed several plates, both in etching and aquatint. He also engraved several fancy subjects and domestic scenes from his own designs. The number of his plates exceeds 160. He became an academician in 1765, and died at St. Denis-du-Port, near Lagny-sur-Marne, in 1781. Among his best paintings are:

He died at Brussels in 1861.

LE ROYER, JEAN and AUBIN OLIVIER, were brothers, who lived in the middle of the 16th century, and were both in the service of Henry II. of France, the one as a printer, the other as a medallist. Both were skilful engravers on wood, and jointly executed the figures for the 'Livre de Perspective,' by Jean Cousin, printed and published by Jean Le Royer, in 1560. These geometrical figures are very beautiful, and consist of about sixty illustrations. Jean availed himself of his knowledge of drawing to embellish the works that he printed; so that the greater part of the fleurons, vignettes, and ornamental letters, whether on metal or on wood, employed in his editions, are his own work. In 1553 he obtained letters patent, in which he is designated "Printer in ordinary to the King, and especially in mathematics." Jean Le Royer flourished until 1581.

LERPINIÈRE, DANIEL, though from his name apparently of French extraction, was born in England about 1745, and was a pupil of F. Vivares. LESLIE, CHARLES ROBERT, a subject painter, was born in London in 1794, of American parents, who soon after returned to Philadelphia. In 1808 he was bound apprentice to a bookseller, but, desiring to become an artist, in 1811 he sailed for England, where he entered the schools of the Royal Academy in 1813, and obtained two silver medals. Amongst his instructors were Benjamin West and Washington Allston. His first picture was 'Saul and the Witch of Endor,' which was bought by Sir John Leicestershire, afterwards Lord De Tabley, for 100 guineas, in 1817. The same year saw his first exhibited work, 'Murder.' At this period he produced several historical works, and he also practised as a portrait painter. It was not till after a visit to the continent in 1817 that he settled down to the class of works—humorous genre subjects from the standard authors—on which his reputation rests. His progress then was rapid. In 1821 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1825 his prospects were sufficiently assured to admit of his marrying. In the following year he became a full member of the Academy. With the exception of one year, 1833, when he was induced to go to America as teacher of drawing at the West Point Military Academy, the remainder of his life was spent in England. From 1847 to 1852 he held the Professorship of Painting in the Royal Academy, and he published the substance of his lectures as a 'Handbook for Young Painters.' This was not his only literary venture. He published in 1845 'Memoirs of Constable,' and his materials for a life of Reynolds were posthumously brought out by Tom Taylor, who also edited his autobiography. He died in London in 1859. LESSING, KARL FRIEDRICH, a German historical and landscape painter, the grandnephew of the poet, was born at Breslau in 1808. He was originally intended for an architect, but, evincing a love of painting, he received his first instruction from Rösel and Dähling, at Berlin. In 1827 he went with Schadow to Düsseldorf, where he speedily became famous both for his masterly landscapes and his historic paintings. The latter show a strong Protestant feeling; three of his masterpieces being scenes inspired by the history of Hus, the Reformer. In 1858 Lessing was appointed Director of the Gallery of Carlsruhe, a post which he held till his death in that city in 1880. The following are his principal works:

LESSORE, ÉMILE AUBERT, a French genre painter, and a native of Paris, was a pupil of Hersent and of Ingres, and exhibited at the Salon between 1831 and 1869. He also designed for the Sèvres manufactory, and afterwards for the Wedgwoods. He died in 1876.

LE STRANGE, HAMON, an amateur, was born at Hunstanton Hall, Norfolk, in 1815. As a labour of love he undertook to paint the nave of Ely Cathedral, but died suddenly in London in 1862, after which his work was carried on by Mr. Gambier Parry.

LE SUEUR, EUSTACHE, a French historical painter, was born of humble parentage in Paris in 1616. He was one of the many celebrated artists who received instruction from Vouet, and his progress was such that he was selected by his master to assist him in various works. Although he did not visit Italy, he lost no opportunity of studying the works of the great Italian masters which found their way to France. The style of Raphael greatly attracted him, and the works of his fellow-countryman, Nicolas Poussin, also had an important influence in the development of his art. In 1640 he became a member of the guild of master-painters, and painted for them a picture of 'St. Paul expelling Evil Spirits at Ephesus.' He quitted this confraternity, however, on the formation of the French Academy, of which he was one of the twelve original members. The position which he early achieved among French artists rendered him the chief competitor of Le Brun, when the latter settled in Paris after his return from Italy. Many stories of their rivalry are extant, not altogether to the credit of Le Brun, if they may be trusted.

Le Sueur was much engaged in decorative works. He was one of the numerous band of French artists who worked at the hotel of the President Lambert de Thorigny in the Ile de la Cité. At the Louvre, he decorated the apartments of the King and of the Queen-Mother. His greatest work in this line was the series of paintings in the cloisters of the Chartreuse at Paris, illustrating the life of St. Bruno, the founder of the order. These were afterwards sold by the community to Louis XVI., and are now in the Louvre. So great is the number of his productions, that, however unwearied his industry, he could not possibly have found time during his short career to execute them without assistance. This help he obtained from his brothers, Pierre, Philippe, and Antoine, and his brother-in-law, Thomas Goussé. The elder Patel also is said to have inserted the landscape backgrounds in his compositions.

Concerning the life of the painter, many tales have obtained currency. Such are the accounts of his narrow means, of his melancholy at the loss of his wife, of his being left childless, and of his subsequent retreat among the Carthusians, where he is said to have died. These fictions have, however, been dispelled by recent research. He died in Paris in 1655, at the early age of thirty-eight. For many years his art was not duly appreciated, owing to its eclipse by the pretentious works of his rival Le Brun. His reputation has, however, recovered. He is now justly considered to hold a place in the front rank amongst the artists of his country, and he has sometimes been styled the French Raphael. This position he owes to his gracefulness, and freedom from affectation. Another merit is the originality of his ideas, although founded on the best traditions of the great masters. The following is a list of his works in the chief European galleries:

Berlin.	Gallery.	St. Bruno.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	Urania.

LE SUEUR, NICOLAS, the son of Pierre Le Sueur the younger, was born in Paris in 1690. He excelled as an engraver on wood, and was the most eminent of his family. He executed, chiefly in chiaroscuro, several fine cuts for the Crozat Collection, from the works of the great masters, especially Goltzius. He also engraved, in a very tasteful style, the ornaments which embellish the edition of La Fontaine's Fables, from the designs of Bachelier. He died in Paris in 1764. Some of his works are signed N. L. S., others with a monogram. The following cuts were executed by him for the Crozat Collection :

Fishermen drawing their Nets; after Giulio Romano.
 The Mass; after Polidoro da Caravaggio.
 The Egyptians overwhelmed in the Red Sea; after G. F. Penni, called Il Fattore.
 Christ with the Apostles; after Raffaello dal Colle.
 The Man and the Lion; after Baldassare Peruzzi.
 The Death of St. Francis Xavier; after Lodovico Gimignani.
 The Descent of the Holy Ghost; after G. B. Lenardi.
 The Annunciation; after G. Morandi.
 The Virgin appearing to St. Philip Neri; after L. Garzi.

LE SUEUR, PIERRE, the elder, a French engraver on wood, was born at Rouen in 1636, and was a disciple of Du Bellay. Among other prints, he executed a woodcut, representing 'Judith,' after Van Sichem. He generally used a monogram composed of the letters P. L. S., thus, . He died at Rouen in 1716.

LE SUEUR, PIERRE, the younger, the son of the elder artist of the same names, was born at Rouen in 1669, and was instructed in drawing and engraving on wood by his father. He engraved many figures and vignettes, and some devout subjects and Biblical prints; and Papillon mentions an emblematical subject by him, called 'Alpha and Omega,' in which the Christian Religion is represented by a naked figure, and Idolatry concealed by a veil. He died in 1750. He usually marked his prints with the initials P. L. S., or a monogram composed of the same. Among his other works were cuts for the following books :

 Ozanam's 'Cours de Mathématiques.' 1693.
 Erasmus's 'Éloge de la Folie.' 1745.

LE SUEUR, VINCENT, the brother of Pierre Le Sueur the younger, was born at Rouen in 1668. After being instructed in the principles of the art by his father, he was sent to Paris, where he became a pupil of Jean Papillon. He distinguished himself as an engraver on wood, and Papillon mentions as his best print 'The Soldier's Farewell,' engraved in 1702. He executed several cuts in chiaroscuro, among which is 'Mercury and Prometheus,' after P. Farinato. He marked his prints with the initials V. L. S.

LE SUISSE, —, is mentioned by Papillon as an engraver on wood, who, among other prints, executed a large cut, representing the Turkish army arranged in order of battle, at the bottom of which is an eulogy in praise of the artist. He is probably the same as Christoph Stimmer.

LETELLIER, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1743, and died in 1800. He was a pupil of François Boucher, and engraved several plates, representing conversations, &c., after the French and other masters.

LETELLIER, JEAN, a French portrait and historical painter, was born at Rouen in 1614. He was the nephew and pupil of Nicolas Poussin, and owed much to his teaching. His heads of the Virgin are full of candour and grace. Later in life he adopted a more careful finish than his early works display. He was the master of Jacques Restout, and for a time painter and secretary to the prior of the abbey of Moncel, near Vitry, on the Marne. He painted the 'Death of St. Alexis' for the church at Gravelines, and a 'Holy Family' and the 'Miracles performed at the Tomb of St. Augustine,' both in the church dedicated to that saint at Rouen, are works of great merit. He died in 1676. Many of his pictures are at Rouen.

LETH, HENDRIK DE. See DE LETH.

LETHBRIDGE, WALTER STEPHENS, a miniature painter, was born at Charlton in Devonshire in 1771. His father was a farmer, who apprenticed him to a house painter, but he afterwards became assistant to a travelling artist, and after visiting the principal cities in England and Scotland, he settled in London. He then became a student of the Royal Academy, where he exhibited from 1801 to 1829. In April 1830 he removed from London to Stonehouse, where he died in 1831. In the National Portrait Gallery are portraits of Bishop Horsley and Dr. John Wolcot ('Peter Pindar').

LETHIÈRE, GUILLAUME GUILLOIN, a French historical painter, was born of Creole parents at Sainte-Anne, in the island of Guadeloupe, in 1760, but came to France when young, and received a good general education. The knowledge of the classics he thus obtained proved valuable to him in the phase of French art contemporaneous with the Revolution. His art training was obtained in the studio of Doyen. Although he only succeeded in obtaining the second prize by his version of the 'Canaanitish Woman' in 1784, he was by special favour allowed to proceed to Rome to complete his studies. After a stay of four years in Italy, he returned to Paris, and settled down to the practice of his art. His reputation was first made by the designs, exhibited in 1795 and 1801, for his 'Virginus' and 'Brutus.' The actual pictures were not completed by him until many years after. He had the good fortune to find a patron in Lucien Bonaparte, whom he accompanied on his embassy to Spain. There he remained two years, selecting pictures from the Spanish collections to enrich the French galleries. Subsequently, he succeeded Suvée as Director of the French School at Rome, which office he held for the exceptionally long period of ten years, and his authority was wielded to the great advantage of French art. Returning to Paris in 1817, he opened a studio, and pupils flocked to him so rapidly that their numbers rivalled even those in the studio of Gros. In 1818 he was elected a member of the Institute, and also became a professor in the École des Beaux-Arts. He died in Paris in 1832. At one period of his career, Lethière's reputation stood so high that he was considered the rival of the great David; but in the rapid rise of the Romantic school, his fame, like that of many other classicists, was quickly obscured. Amongst his chief works are :

Amiens.	Museum.	Æneas and Dido.	1819.
Angers.	Museum.	The Woman taken in Adultery.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	Louis IX. visiting the Plague-stricken at Carthage.

LEUPENIUS, J., (or LEUPEN,) was a Dutch landscape painter and engraver, by whom there are a few slight etchings, retouched with the graver. They represent views in Holland, and appear to be the works of a painter. He was a pupil of Rembrandt, and flourished from about 1660 to 1677, probably at Utrecht.

LEUTZE, EMANUEL, a German historical painter, was born at the village of Emingen, near Reutlingen in Würtemberg, in 1816. He went when a child to Philadelphia, where he was instructed by John A. Smith, a portrait painter. In 1842 he visited Munich, Venice, and Rome, and returned in 1845 to Düsseldorf, where he executed a considerable number of paintings. He obtained in 1850 the gold medal at Berlin for his 'Washington crossing the Delaware,' now in the Kunsthalle at Bremen. After having been in America in 1851, and again in 1859, he LEVECOQ, JAKOB, (or LAVECOQ,) a Dutch portrait painter, was born at Dordrecht about 1624. He was a pupil of Rembrandt, and a most successful imitator of his style, for portraits by him have passed as genuine works of Rembrandt. He visited France, and afterwards painted in the style of De Baan. In 1655 he became a member of the artists' guild in his native town, where he died in 1674. The Duke of Leinster possesses a 'Portrait of a Young Man,' by him, dated 1654.

LEVESQUE, PIERRE CHARLES, a French etcher and writer, was born in Paris in 1736, and died in 1812. He is perhaps better known for his share in the publication of the 'Dictionnaire des Arts de Peinture, Sculpture et Gravure,' 1792, begun by M. Watelet, than by his works as an engraver. There are, however, several plates by him which possess considerable merit. Among them are the following:

He also engraved plates for the 'Galerie de Florence,' 'Galerie du Palais-Royal,' and 'Musée Français.'

LEVRAC TOURNIÈRES, ROBERT, a French historical and portrait painter, was born at Ifs in Calvados in 1668. He was a pupil of the Carmelite monk Lucas de La Haye, and of Bon de Boullongne. He died at Caen in 1752.

LEVYN, CRUYL, (or LIVIUS,) was born at Ghent in 1640. He was an ecclesiastic who visited Rome, and there designed antique and modern buildings, and adorned them with figures, many of which he etched in a spirited manner. He was living in 1684. Among his etchings are views of the Pantheon and of St. Peter's.

LEWIN, WILLIAM, was an amateur, who in 1789 published, with plates drawn and engraved by himself, seven quarto volumes of the 'Birds of Great Britain,' followed in 1795 by the 'Insects of Great Britain.'

LEWIS, CHARLES GEORGE, an etcher and engraver in line and mezzotint, was born in 1808 at Enfield, Middlesex. He was the son and pupil of Frederick Christian Lewis, and a brother of John Frederick Lewis, R.A. He died in 1880, at Felpham, near Bognor. LEWIS, FREDERICK CHRISTIAN, an English engraver and landscape painter, was born in London in 1779. His instruction was derived from Stadler, a German engraver, and in the schools of the Royal Academy. The first work on which he was engaged was Ottley's 'Italian School of Design' (1823), and for some years he engraved in the stipple manner many of Lawrence's portraits. But he did not neglect original work, for he sketched much from nature about Enfield and in Devonshire, exhibiting landscapes at the Water-Colour Society, the British Institution, and the Royal Academy. He was engraver to George IV., William IV., and Queen Victoria. He died at Enfield in 1856. Amongst his best plates are:

LEWIS, GEORGE ROBERT, a portrait, subject, and landscape painter, was born in London in 1782. He studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, where he was a pupil of Fuseli. In 1818 he accompanied Dibdin through France and Germany, furnishing the illustrations for the 'Bibliographical Tour' and the 'Bibliographical Decameron.' He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1820 to 1859, and obtained a good practice as a portrait painter. He died at Hampstead in 1871. Several works were published by him, illustrated by himself; amongst them are:

'Muscles of the Human Frame.' 1820.

LEWIS, JOHN FREDERICK, a painter of Italian, Spanish, and Oriental subjects, in oil and water-colours, was born in London in 1805. He was the eldest son of Frederick Christian Lewis, the engraver, from whom he received his first instruction in art. His earliest efforts were in animal painting, and he exhibited at the British Institution from 1820, and at the Royal Academy from 1821. Devoting himself chiefly to water-colours, he became an Associate of the Old Water-Colour Society in 1827, and a full member in 1830. In 1832 he went to Spain, and did not return to England until 1834; this visit caused a complete change in the current of his art. The Carlist War furnished him with many subjects, and he also made a large number of studies of the works of the great masters, which were purchased by the Scottish Academy. In 1843 he went to Egypt, and remained several years in the East. This sojourn turned his attention to Oriental subjects, which inspired some of his best works. On his return to England in 1851 he married, and settled at Walton-on-Thames. In 1855 he succeeded Copley Fielding as President of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, but did not long hold the office. He resumed oil-painting, and was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1859, and an Academician in 1865. He died at Walton-on-Thames in 1876. Amongst his chief works are:

LEXMOND, JAN VAN, was born at Dordrecht in 1769, and was a pupil of A. and J. van Strey. He executed some views of towns, though he was mostly employed as a teacher. He died at Dordrecht in 1838.

LEYBOLD, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, an engraver and miniature painter, was born at Stuttgart in 1755. He was instructed in design by the court sculptor Baucr, and began to paint at the Karlsschule under Guibal in 1772, and to engrave under G. von Müller in 1776. He went to Coburg in 1797, and to Vienna in 1798, where he brought himself into notice by his miniature paintings. He died at Vienna in 1838. His best plates are:

LEYS, JEAN AUGUSTE HENRI, Baron, a Belgian historical and genre painter, was born at Antwerp in 1814. He studied in the Academy of that city, and under his brother-in-law, Ferdinand De Braekeleer. His works were first exhibited in 1833 at Brussels, and he rapidly acquired a reputation; the subjects which he chose—scenes from the mediæval history and customs of his country—contributing much to the popularity of his works. In 1862 he was created a Baron. His latter years were much occupied in the execution of decorations for the Hôtel-de-Ville at Antwerp, where he painted a series of pictures illustrating the history of the city. He died in 1869, and a statue has been erected in his honour in the park at Antwerp. Alma Tadema was one of his pupils. Amongst his works are :

LEYSENS, NICOLAAS, called CASSENOIX, was born at Antwerp in 1661, and was a scholar of Pieter Ykens. On leaving that master, he went to Rome, where he passed some time, and would have prolonged his studies in that metropolis of art, had he not been under the necessity of returning to his native city for the purpose of succouring an aged parent in his last illness. Leyssens had acquired in Italy a correct and tasteful design, and was much employed in ornamenting the saloons and ceilings of the principal mansions at Antwerp, in which he was assisted by Boschaert, Verbruggen, &c., who painted the flowers and other accessories. For what reason his surname was given to him is not stated; it will bear the interpretation of a nut cracker, a magpie, or a blackbird. He died in 1710.

LEYTO, ANDRES, a painter of historical subjects and interiors, resided at Madrid in 1680. He painted, in conjunction with Josef de Sarabia, the pictures of the cloister of the convent of San Francisco at Segovia; but his chief excellence lay in painting interiors, in which he had few equals among the Spanish artists of his time.

LEYVA, DIEGO DE, was born about 1580, at Haro, in Old Castile. He is supposed to have spent his youth at Rome, whence he returned to Spain a painter, and settled at Burgos. In 1628 he was commissioned by the Chapter of Burgos to paint the portraits of certain dignitaries for the chapel of St. Catalina in the cathedral, and for the chapel of the Virgin he painted a picture of the 'Presentation.' In 1633 he retired to the Chartreuse of Miraflores, where in 1634 he took the final vows, and devoted himself to the performance of his duties, and the production of religious pictures, among which were fifteen large compositions on the life of St. Bruno, eleven martyrdoms, ten pictures of Saints of the Order, a Crucifixion, and some pictures of the Virgin. His style was somewhat weak. He died at Miraflores in 1637.

LEZIER, PAUL, a native of Dordrecht, who flourished in the 17th century, and was a contemporary of Cuyp, was the painter of a large picture representing the principal citizens of Dordrecht.

LHERIE, FERDINAND, an engraver, was a native of Paris, who went to Antwerp about 1831, and became a pupil of Baron Wappers, after whom alone he engraved. He died insane, as did his brother, who was an actor. The following plates after Wappers are by him :

Héloïse and Abélard.

Agnès Sorel reproaching Charles VII.

The Defence of Tournai by the Countess of Epemay.

The Entombment.

Devotion of the Burgomaster Van der Werff.

L'HOMME, JACQUES, an historical and landscape painter, born at Troyes at the commencement of the 17th century, was a pupil of Vouet at Rome. He painted a 'St. Catharine' and a 'Lady playing the Lute'; the latter he also etched.

L'HORFELIN, ANTONIO, a Spanish painter, was born at Saragossa in 1587. He was the son of an obscure artist, named Pedro L'Horfelin, who sent him to Rome for improvement when he was very young, and he there studied the works of Michelangelo and Raphael. His principal work is a picture of 'St. Joseph,' with two laterals, in the church of the Bare-footed Augustines at Saragossa. He died in 1660.

LIANO, FELIPE DE, a Spanish portrait painter and etcher, was born at Madrid in 1556, and was a scholar of Alonso Sanchez Coello. He is supposed to have resided in Italy, where he executed the plates signed Teodor. Filippo da Liagno. He particularly excelled in painting portraits of a small size, which he executed with such fidelity of resemblance and beauty of colouring that he acquired the title of 'El Titiano Pequeño,' or simply 'El Pequeño.' He died at Madrid in 1625. His most esteemed portrait is that of Don Alvaro de Bazan, Marquis of Santa Cruz, which was painted for the Emperor Rudolph in 1584. His best etchings are 'St. John the Baptist in the Wilderness,' a set of twelve plates of Soldiers and Moors, 'The Nymph surprised,' 'The Nymph and the Satyr,' and fifteen plates of the skeletons of animals. He signed his works F.; Felippo Lia, f.; and as above.

LIANO D'ANGELI, FILIPPO DE. See ANGELI.

LIART, MATTHEW, was born in London, of French descent, in 1736, and studied under Ravenet, as well as with the Society of Artists, and in the schools of the Royal Academy, in the latter of which he gained the silver medal. He was employed in engraving some plates for Boydell's collection. He died about 1782. Among others, the following prints are by him:

The Sacrifice of Noah; after Andrea Sacchi.

The Convention between Jacob and Laban; after Pietro da Cortona.

The Jovial Companions; after Ostade.

Venus lamenting the Death of Adonis; after West.
Cephalus and Procris; after the same.

LIBERAL, GEORG, was a German painter and wood engraver, probably of Meissen, who flourished about 1560, and in conjunction with Wolfgang Miererpeck executed the large cuts of the animals and plants for Mattioli's 'Commentaries on Dioscorides,' published at Venice in 1565.

LIBERALE, who is described as the son of 'Magistri Jacobi a Blado de S. Joanne in Valle,' and who was commonly called 'Liberale de Jacome da Verona,' in that city's account-books, was born there in 1451, and brought up as a miniaturist. He was a disciple of Vincenzo di Stefano, and his first works were performed at the chapel of the Monte della Pietà in the church of San Bernardino, where he painted a 'Deposition from the Cross.' In the church of Sant' Anastasia is a picture of the 'Dead Christ.' He left Verona when he was eighteen, and worked for the Benedictines of Mont' Oliveto, near Siena, painting in miniature and illuminating books, and was afterwards employed in the cathedral of that city. His miniatures are considered masterpieces of art, and his paintings, after the style of Bellini, only too clearly show the effect of his early training. In the cathedral of Verona is an 'Adoration of the Magi' by him; and in the archiepiscopal palace is a predella containing 'The Nativity,' 'The Epiphany,' and 'The Death of the Virgin,' painted by Liberale between the years 1480 and 1490. In the Casa Scotti, Milan, is a 'Madonna' by him that was formerly assigned to Andrea Mantegna. The churches of San Fermo, Santa Maria del Paradiso, and the chapel of Comune alla Vittoria, Verona, all possess panels with saints by this artist. In the Brera, Milan, is a 'St. Sebastian,' of which the Berlin Gallery possesses the replica; the last-named gallery also possesses a 'Virgin and Child enthroned, between SS. Lawrence and Christopher,' dated 1489. The Gallery of Verona has a 'Holy Family' and an 'Adoration of the Shepherds' by this master. He was an umpire in the Municipal Council of Verona in 1493. He died in 1536, and was buried in San Giovanni in Valle, a suburb of Verona. The following are some of his chief works:

Assisi.		Frescoes and Altar-pieces.

LIBERALE, GENNESIO, (or GENESIO,) a painter of the Venetian school, was born at Udine, and flourished in the second half of the 16th century. He was a pupil of Pellegrino da San Daniello, and painted animals and fish.

LIBERATORE, NICCOLÒ DI, called in error by Vasari, NICCOLÒ ALUNNO, was a native of Foligno, and was born about the year 1430. His earliest work still extant, dated 1458, is in the Franciscan church of La Diruta, near Perugia. He signed his pictures Nicolaus Fulginates. A 'Madonna enthroned,' painted in 1465, is in the Brera, Milan. There is an altar-piece representing the 'Annunciation,' dated 1466, in Santa Maria Nuova at Perugia. There are also altar-pieces by him in the Castle of San Severino and in San Francesco at Gualdo. A 'Pietà,' of which fragments only remain, in the cathedral of Assisi, was one of his best works. Vasari says of two angels represented as weeping in this 'Pietà,' that their emotion was so naturally expressed that no painter in Italy at that time could have painted them better. In 1499 he painted the altar-piece of Sant' Angelo, in La Bastia, near Perugia. Over a side-altar in the church of San Niccolò at Feligno is a picture of 'St. Nicholas and the Infant Christ,' painted in 1492. It was one of the many paintings which were sent to Paris, and when it went back it was without its predella, which is still in the Louvre. An 'Ecce Homo' in the National Gallery is given in the catalogue to Niccolò; but Mr. J. A. Crowe thinks it is probably by Matteo da Siena. Niccolò died, a rich man, in 1502; and was buried in Sant' Agostino, in his native town. He executed his pictures in tempera, and excelled especially in rendering the expression of the face; he also painted standards, called 'Gonfaloni,' which were used in religious ceremonies; and there is still a gonfalone by him in Santa Maria Nuova at Perugia, which bears the following inscription: "Societas Annuncista fecit feri hoc opus 1466." He is supposed by Mariotti to have been the master of Pietro Perugino, Pinturicchio, and Andrea di Luigi. A very interesting memoir concerning this painter has been written by Professor Adamo Rossi, of Perugia, and printed in the 'Giornale d'Erudizione Artistica' for 1872.

LIBERI, MARCO, the son of Pietro Liberi, was born at Padua about the year 1640, and was educated under his father, whose style he imitated with little claim to originality. He copied his father's works almost to illusion, and painted easel pictures of fabulous subjects, some of which are in the Palazzo Ercolani, at Bologna. He died after 1687. In the Dresden Gallery is 'Venus caressing Cupid,' and 'Venus and Cupid smelling a Flower.'

LIBERI, PIETRO, called LIBERTINO, was born at Padua in 1605. He was a scholar of Alessandro Varotari, and is considered one of the ablest designers of the Venetian school. His studies at Rome, after Raphael and Michelangelo, at Parma, after Correggio and Parmigiano, as well as after the most distinguished of the Venetian painters, led him to a style which may be said to partake of every school. Few artists have discovered a greater variety of character in their works than Pietro Liberi. He was used to say, that when employed for the intelligent, his pencil was frank and expeditious, without the appearance of labour or finish; but when working for the less experienced, his pictures were painted with the utmost minuteness, in which every object, even to each hair, was precisely attended to. In his works for the churches he exhibits a grandeur which is not to be found in his other productions. Such are the 'Murder of the Innocents,' at Venice; 'Noah leaving the Ark,' and the 'Destruction of Pharoah's Host,' at Vicenza; and the 'Deluge,' and 'Moses striking the Rock,' at Bergamo. He was more employed in subjects of the fable, which he treated with elegance and grace, in the style of Titian; but sometimes with a freedom which procured him the title of 'Liber-tino.' He died at Venice in 1687. He signed his works P. L., or with a monogram. His chief works are as follow:

LIBOUR, ESPRIT AIMÉ, an historical and portrait painter, was born at Laval in 1785. He went to Paris and became a pupil of David, Regnault, and Gros. In 1805 he received a first prize for his 'Arab dying in the Wilderness.' Among his other works were 'The Death of Abel,' 'Cephalus and Procris,' and 'Venus in the Water.'

LIBRI, DAL. See DAL LIBRI.

LICALDE, JUAN DE, was a scholar of Pedro de Las Cuevas, who displayed considerable ability, but died young. One of his drawings, 'A Crowned Lion upholding a Shield of the Arms of Spain and Portugal,' neatly executed with the pen, was seen by Cean Bermudez in the collection of Don Pedro Gonzalez de Sepulveda. It bore the signature Juan de Licalde en el amor de Dios à 10 Novembre de 1628, which places his death after that year. He made a clever pen-and-ink portrait of the Duke of Olivarez, Philip IV.'s minister.

LICHERIE, LOUIS, was born at Houdan (Seine-et-Oise) in 1629, and was instructed by the elder Louis de Boullogne. He was employed by Le Brun from 1666 to 1670 as a teacher at the Gobelins, and in 1679 became a member of the Academy, presenting 'David and Abigail' (now in the Louvre) as his reception picture. Other paintings by him are in the churches of the Invalides and St. Germain l'Auxerrois at Paris. He died in Paris in 1687.

LICHT, FERDINAND, a German painter, was born in 1750 at Troppau in Silcsia. He was instructed by Joseph Burkart, and painted portraits as well as altar-pieces, of which there are two in the church of Obrowitz. He died at Brünn, but in what year is not recorded.

LICHTENREITER, FRANZ, was born at Passau in 1700. He went to Italy and studied at Venice under Vincentini. After some years he returned to Germany and settled in Prague, painting portraits and historical pieces. He died in 1775.

LICHTENSTECHE, GEORG, a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1700. He executed several portraits and anatomical engravings. He died about 1780. Among his works are:

Cattarina Cornaro, Queen of Cyprus; after Titian.
Portrait of H. von Behaim.
Portrait of the Artist; after C. B. Müller.

LICINIO, BERNARDINO, was a distant relation of Pordenone, who flourished in the 16th century. He received his early education in Friuli, and afterwards resided in Venice. Of his birth and death nothing certain is known. His pictures have been frequently confounded with those of Pordenone, and chiefly consist of portraits and family groups, the earliest known being dated 1524, and the latest 1541. His finest religious composition is the altarpiece of the Frari at Venice, representing the 'Virgin and Child enthroned between Saints.' The following are his principal paintings:

LICINIO, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, (or CUTICELLO), called PORDENONE, from the name of his native town, twenty-eight miles from Udine, was born in 1483. He assumed various surnames, and was called at one time 'Licinio,' at another time 'Regillo,' but more often 'Pordenone,' and with this name he signed many of his works. His father was a builder or architect living in Pordenone, named Angelo di Bartolommeo de Lodesanis, and also 'de Corticellis,' from the name of his father's birthplace, as well as 'Sacchiensis,' or 'de Sacchis.' Pordenone received a liberal education, and is said to have been a pupil of Pellegrino da San Daniello at Udine. Ridolfi relates that Giovanni's first commission was given to him by a shopkeeper of Pordenone, and that its subject was a 'Madonna,' which the artist began and finished in the time that his patron heard mass. Vasari states that Pordenone was driven for some years from his home by an epidemic, and that he employed this time in decorating the surrounding village churches. In the church of Vacile, fifteen miles from Pordenone, are a series of mural designs which may be his workmanship; at Colatto, near to Conegliano, there is a chapel dedicated to San Salvatore, which is decorated with frescoes representing the 'Annunciation,' the 'Epiphany,' the 'Flight into Egypt,' the 'Meeting of Jesus and Martha,' the 'Raising of Lazarus,' the 'Last Judgment,' the Evangelists, Prophets, and Angels, painted by him in the early part of the 16th century. Of this period in his life is the 'Madonna and Saints' of the church of Susigana. In 1513 he again returned to Pordenone and married his second wife, Elisabetta Quagliata. In 1514 he painted 'The Glory of St. Anthony, with attendant Saints,' in Sant' Antonio of Conegliano; and also adorned with frescoes the church of Sant' Odorico of Villanuova. In 1515 he produced the 'Virgin of Mercy, with SS. Joseph and Christopher,' in the Cathedral of Pordenone. In 1516 he contracted to paint the frescoes which formerly adorned the church of Rorai Grande. He next went to Travesio, where he painted a 'St. Christopher' on the façade of the church, and thence to Udine, where he completed a 'Virgin and Child' on the Loggia of the Town Hall. In 1519-20 Pordenone executed the frescoes in the Malchiostro chapel in San Niccolò of Treviso, for which Titian painted the altar-piece. The frescoes represent the 'Eternal in Benediction,' the 'Epiphany,' the 'Visitation,' and figures of St. Liberale and other Saints, Doctors of the Church, and Angels. In 1520 he went to Mantua, where he covered the façade of the Ceresara palace with mythological subjects; from thence he journeyed to Cremona, where the authorities of the cathedral contracted with him to paint the frescoes of 'Pilate delivering up Christ,' the 'Procession to Calvary,' the 'Preparation for the Crucifixion,' and the 'Crucifixion.' During a second visit paid to Cremona in 1522 he finished that series by the 'Deposition,' and also executed the altar-piece in the Schizzi Chapel in the Cathedral, representing the 'Virgin and Child, between SS. Paul and Dominick.' In 1524 he went to Spilimbergo, and executed a series of distempers for the organ of the church of Santa Maria, representing the 'Assumption,' the 'Fall of Simon Magus,' and the 'Conversion of St. Paul'; he also painted five panels for the well of the same organ, and an altar-piece for the church that is now lost. From 1525 to 1527 he completed a great quantity of pictures and frescoes for the churches of Travesio, and in the adjoining towns and villages of Galeriano, Blessano, Casarsa, Udine, and Valvasons. The frescoes in the cathedral of Travesio cover the entire octagon of the choir, and include seven scenes from the life of St. Peter, seven subjects drawn from Old Testament history, the 'Conversion and Martyrdom of St. Paul,' the 'Epiphany,' the 'Last Supper,' the 'Entombment,' and 'Christ in Glory.' In 1528 Pordenone went to Venice, where he decorated the tribune of the church of San Rocco with frescoes which have now disappeared, and also designed two colossal panels of SS. Christopher and Martin, which are still remaining. In 1529 he was again in Pordenone, and from there went to Piacenza, where he decorated two chapels in the church of the Madonna di Campagna with frescoes drawn from the lives of the Virgin and St. Catharine. His next journey was to Genoa, where he went by invitation of Andrea Doria, and embellished his palace with allegorical designs which are now lost. About 1534-5 were finished the altar-pieces of the 'Trinity' for the cathedral of San Daniele, and the 'Glory of St. Mark' for the cathedral of Pordenone. In 1535 Pordenone received the patent of knighthood from King John of Hungary, and thenceforward took the name of 'Regillo.' Soon afterwards he settled at Venice, where he decorated the house of Martino d'Anna, the palaces of the Mocenigos and the Morosinis, the brotherhood of San Francesco de' Frari, and the cloisters of San Stefano with frescoes, which gained for him such renown that he received from the Council of Ten the order to finish the decorations and ceiling of the Sala del Scrutinio, which he completed by 1538. His work here was so much approved that in 1537 the Council deprived Titian of his patent in the Fondaco de' Tedeschi, and ordered of Regillo in 1538 a picture for the Sala del Senato. All these last-named works have perished. In that same year he left Venice to pay a visit to Ercole, second Duke of Ferrara, for whom he had already designed subjects drawn from the Odyssey, for embroidery in arras. He arrived there in the month of December, and before he had been there many days, was taken sick (some accounts state he was poisoned), and died at the Angel Inn, Ferrara, in his 56th year, in January 1539, and was buried in the church of San Paolo in that city. Authentic pictures by this artist are very scarce, many of those under his name in public and private collections being by his pupils and imitators. Some authentic examples may be found in the different collections in Venice. Especially worthy of mention are the following:

He was very successful with his drawings, as well as with the graver. He died at Amsterdam in 1815.

LIESBORN, MASTER OF, is known by an excellent altar-piece, which was formerly in the second church of the convent at Liesborn, near Münster, and consecrated in 1465. It was sold in 1807, and the new proprietor made several pieces of it. Some of them are in the possession of Dr. Haindorf at Münster, and others are now in the National Gallery in London. A copy of the whole by one of the artist's pupils was in the Protestant Church at Lünen, but it is now destroyed; it represented, in the middle, 'Christ on the Cross, surrounded by St. John, St. Scholastica, and St. Benedict, the Virgin Mary, St. Cosmas, and St. Damian'; and on the sides eight scenes in the Life of Christ,—the 'Annunciation,' 'Nativity,' 'Adoration of the Magi,' 'Presentation,' 'Resurrection,' 'Ascension,' 'Descent of the Holy Ghost,' and 'Last Judgment.' The whole is a mixture of the school of the Van Eycks and that of Cologne. The Master of Liesborn had several pupils, whose works are still partly preserved.

On his return to his native town in 1727, he was employed in painting some historical pictures for the churches and private collections. He died at Sondrio in 1748. He has left a 'St. Benedict' in the church of the nunnery at Sondrio, and a 'Descent of the Holy Ghost' in the church at Morbegno. In the Brera at Milan are portraits of the painter's father and the Abbot Mottalini. He also engraved a 'Virgin' and 'The Martyrdom of St. Peter.'

LIGHTFOOT, WILLIAM, was an English painter and engraver. He excelled in painting landscapes and perspective views, and was employed by Wren in the decoration of the Royal Exchange. In the 'Sculptura,' by Evelyn, he is mentioned as an engraver, in the following terms: "Lightfoot hath a very curious graver, and special talent for the neatness of his stroke, little inferior to Wierix; and has published two or three Madonnas, with much applause. He died about 1671."

LIGLI, VENTURA, was a painter of the Neapolitan school, who lived in the second part of the 17th and the commencement of the 18th centuries. In the Church of the Apostles at Verona is a picture by him entitled 'The Name of Jesus,' dated 1573, and a fresco over the principal door of the church of SS. Nazaro e Celso.

LIGOZZI, JACOPO, was born at Verona about 1543, and was a disciple of Paolo Veronese. His principal residence was at Florence, where he was made painter to the Grand-Duke Ferdinand II., and superintendent of the Ducal Gallery, a distinction honourable to his talents, as it was conferred on him in preference to the many able Florentine painters of the time. He died after 1632. He has left some admired fresco paintings in the cloister of the Ognissanti. There are several of his oil pictures in the churches at Florence. In Santa Maria Novella is a grand picture of 'St. Raymond resuscitating a Child'; but his most celebrated work is his 'Martyrdom of St. Dorothea,' at the Conventuali at Pescia. He was very successful with easel pictures of a small size. He signed his works Jacob Legot. pinxit. Some of them have been engraved by Agostino Carracci, and other artists. Andrea Andreani executed several woodcuts after him, and it is said that he engraved some prints, both on copper and on wood, from his own designs. The name of FRANCESCO LIGOZZI is found on a painting in San Luca; and that of PAOLO LIGOZZI (died 1630) on one in Sant'Enfemia.

In a chapel of the Chiesa Nuova, he painted 'The Archangel Michael driving the Evil Spirits from Heaven'; and in Santa Maria Maggiore a fine fresco of 'Christ washing the Feet of His Disciples.' After the death of his protector he continued to ornament several of the churches and convents of Rome in the time of Pope Clement VIII. He also painted allegorical subjects, some of which have been engraved. At Ancona, in the church of San Stefano, is a picture of the 'Stoning of St. Stephen.' He died at Ascoli in 1610.

LIMOSIN FAMILY. The history of this family of enamel painters of Limoges is veiled in a cloud of obscurity, which the researches of M. Maurice Ardat among the archives of Haute-Vienne, and of M. A. Thomas in the municipal archives of Limoges, have not been able entirely to dispel. Nevertheless, the following genealogical table will show approximately the relationship which existed between several members of the family of Limosin, but there are others also who practised the art of enamel painting, whose lineage has not yet been ascertained. Three only of these are of sufficient importance to merit separate notices, viz. Léonard I., Jean I., and François I.

LIMOSIN, FRANÇOIS, the younger son of Martin Limosin, was born before 1554, and with his brother, Léonard II., was co-heir of his uncle, Léonard I. He died in 1646. His enamels are more like those of the De Courts; they are deep in colour and sometimes heightened with gold, and his backgrounds are often of dark violet. He frequently copied the designs of Virgil Solis and Étienne Delaune. The following may be mentioned as examples of his style:

- London. British Museum. Neptune. 1633.
- Paris. Louvre. Neptune; after Virgil Solis. 1633.
- " " Orion pierced by the arrows of Apollo.
- " " Psyche imploring Venus.
- " " Orpheus before Pluto and Proserpine; after Virgil Solis.
- " " Orpheus charming the Animals; after Étienne Delaune.
- " " Venus and Cupid.

LIMOSIN, JEHAN, a younger brother of Léonard I. and Martin Limosin, was born before 1528, and died about 1610. The earliest enamel signed by Jehan Limosin is a portrait of Bardon de Brun, the founder of the confraternity of Penitents at Limoges, which bears the date of 1597. His style approaches nearer to that of Jean and Suzanne de Court than to that of his uncle, and he gives to his heads the sharp profile which is characteristic of French art at the close of the 16th century. Hunting scenes were his favourite subjects, and green backgrounds and reliefs of gold dominate in most of his works. Among them may be mentioned:

- London. British Museum. Charon ferrying Psyche across the Styx; oval plaque. 1590?
- " " St. Margaret. 1600?
- " South Kensington Museum. Oblong Casket, painted with Bacchanalian procession and mediæval dancing groups. (Formerly in the Debruge and Soltkyoff Collections.)
- " " The Death of St. Benedict; a plaque.
- Paris. Louvre. Esther before Ahasuerus.
- " " The Wife of Uriah.
- " " The Rape of Europa; after Virgil Solis.
- " " Pompey.
- " " Julia, wife of Pompey.
- " " Divine Love conquering Profane Love.

LIMOSIN, LÉONARD, the greatest of the enamel painters of Limoges, whether in regard to the variety of his works, or to their artistic merit, was born at Limoges about 1505, and was probably a pupil of Nardon Pénicaut. His first works were inspired by German masters, and the earliest date found upon any of them is 1532, which occurs upon a series of eighteen plaques of the 'Passion,' after Albrecht Dürer. From 1535, however, he came under the influence of the Italian school, and of the artists who had been engaged by Francis I. to decorate his palace at Fontainebleau. Nevertheless, his copies even of Raphael are executed with such freedom as to render them almost his own works. In 1541 he was established at Limoges, and subsequently he was appointed court-painter to Francis I., and patronized by Henry II. The latest enamels upon which Léonard Limosin has placed a date bear that of 1574. He died between January, 1575, and February, 1577. He practised all the processes known to the enamel painters who had preceded him, but his predilection was for brilliant colours, which towards the end of his career he placed on a deep blue ground. His portraits in enamel are very fine, and often of large size. He also painted in oil the 'Incredulity of St. Thomas,' dated 1551, in the Museum at Chartres, and other works. His works are signed with his name, the initials L. L., or a monogram. There are by him:

- Berlin. Kuns kammer. A Madonna.
- " " Ruth and Boaz.
- Chantilly. Duke d'Aumale. } Antoine de Bourbon, King of Navarre. (Formerly in the Debruge and Soltkyoff Collections.)

- Christ entering Jerusalem. 1544.
- The Last Supper. 1544.
- Christ on the Mount of Olives. 1544.

LIN, HANS VAN, called STILLHEID, or DE STILLE, flourished from 1664 to 1675, according to dates on his pictures. He painted battles and hunting pieces, and some of his works are to be met with at Copenhagen and Dresden. His pictures are marked H. V. L. There exists a plate of animals engraved by him. C. F. Boetius executed after him an engraving of 'A Company in an Alehouse.'

LINAJUOLO, BERTO, was a Florentine painter, who lived in the first part of the 15th century. His pictures gained him sufficient fame to cause him to be summoned to the court of Hungary, where he was received with favour.

LINCK, HANS VON, is mentioned as an engraver by Professor Christ, who says he marked his prints with the monogram HF.

LINCK, JOHANN ANTON, a painter and engraver, was a native of Geneva, who worked with his father, Johann Conrad Linck, till 1788. He executed a large number of Swiss views, especially of Chamounix, which are correct in drawing and good in colour.

L'INDACO, JACOPO, an Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1476. He was the son of Lazzaro di Pietro, a baker, and received from his contemporaries the surname of 'L'Indaco.' He was a pupil of Domenico Ghirlandaio, and worked in Rome with Pinturicchio. There he became intimate with Michelangelo, who instructed him in the art of painting in fresco. He died at Rome about 1544, at the age of 68. He was a good artist, but all his works mentioned by Vasari have perished. He had a brother, FRANCESCO, also called L'INDACO, who was born in 1492, and was living in Rome in 1558. His talents were inferior to those of Jacopo.

LINDEMANN, CHRISTIAN PHILIPP, a German engraver, was born at Dresden in 1700. He worked in Italy, Nuremberg, and Ratisbon, and devoted himself chiefly to reproducing Italian masters. He died at Nuremberg in 1754. Among his works are:

He was subsequently employed in the castle of the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen at Landsberg. He died at Mayence in 1848. The following are by him:

LINDER, FRANZ, (or LINDEREN,) a German painter and engraver, was born at Klagenfurt in 1738. He studied the elements of art under Laybach, and then went to Venice and afterwards to Vienna, where he attended the Academy. In 1776 the Empress sent him to Rome, whence after four years he returned to Vienna. He painted portraits in the style of Palko, and among his sitters were the Grand-Duke Maximilian, Joseph II., the Royal Family of Naples, and several others. He died about 1809.

LINDMEYER, DANIEL. See LINTMEYER.

LINDNER, FRANZ. See LINDER.

LINDSAY, THOMAS, a landscape painter in water-colours, whose specialty was Welsh scenery, was in 1837 elected a member of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours. In the latter part of his life he lived near Brecon, where he died in 1861.

LINES, SAMUEL, a landscape painter, was born in 1778 at Allersby, near Coventry. Being an orphan, he was brought up by an uncle, a farmer, whom he assisted. He was then apprenticed to a clock-face enameller at Birmingham, and afterwards designed for art-manufactures. He found his true vocation in 1807, when he opened a drawing academy, and during the remainder of his life he took a prominent part in all matters relating to art in Birmingham. He died in 1863.

LINES, SAMUEL RESTELL, a landscape painter, the third son of Samuel Lines, by whom he was taught, was born at Birmingham in 1804. His forte was the depiction of trees, and he had also a keen eye for the picturesque in architecture. He died at Birmingham in 1833. There is a water-colour drawing by him at the South Kensington Museum of the 'Daïs and Dining-Table at Haddon Hall.'

LINGE, BERNHARD VAN, was a native of the Netherlands, who established himself in England about the middle of the reign of James I. He distinguished himself as a painter on glass, and his oldest known work is at Wadham College, representing the 'History of Christ,' 1622. It is said that several other glass paintings by him are there, as well as at Lincoln College, 1629-31.

LINGÉE, CHARLES LOUIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1751. He worked with the point and the burin, and engraved several prints, among which was 'The Vintage,' after Louthembourg. He died in Paris about 1805. His wife, THÉRÈSE ÉLÉONORE HÉMERY, who was born in Paris in 1753, executed several plates in the crayon style.

LINGELBACH, JOHANNES, was born at Frankfurt on the Main in 1625. It is not mentioned by whom he was instructed; but the ability of the master may be presumed from the talents of the pupil. He went to Amsterdam in 1637, and after spending five years there he returned home and remained two years, and then in 1644 visited Italy. He passed six years at Rome, assiduously employed in sketching the most remarkable objects in and near that capital. In 1652 he returned to Amsterdam, with the studies he had accumulated during his residence in Italy, of which he made an ample use in the composition of his pictures. His works frequently represent Italian sea-ports, in which he introduced an infinite number of small figures, habited according to their different nations. His pictures are embellished with architecture, and the ruins of ancient monuments and statues. He was equally successful in his representation of fairs, Italian markets, and the amusements of the Carnival, with appropriate figures, ingeniously grouped, of quack doctors, surrounded by crowds of spectators, and similar assemblages. His ability in painting small figures and animals induced several of the landscape painters of his time to have recourse to him to decorate their pictures, particularly Wynants and Wouwerman, by whom his style of painting was largely influenced, and also Koninck, Verboom, Moucheron, and Hackaert. He signed his works with his name or a monogram. Zylvelt engraved after him four 'Genoese Harbours,' and Gronsvelt twelve 'Italian and Oriental Ports.' There are by Lingelbach a few slight but spirited etchings of landscapes, sea-ports, &c., after his own designs. He died at Amsterdam in 1687. The following are among his paintings (besides others at Augsburg, Copenhagen, Christiania, Brunswick, Dresden, Frankfurt, Munich, St. Petersburg, and Vienna):

LINNELL, JOHN, a portrait and landscape painter, was born in 1792 in London, where his father was a picture-dealer and wood-carver. He soon showed remarkable aptitude for art, and by the advice of Benjamin West he attended the schools of the Royal Academy at Somerset House, into which he was admitted in 1805. He became too a pupil in John Varley's studio, where he learned more from his fellow pupil, Mulready, than from his master. His progress was so rapid that in 1807 he contributed to the Academy exhibition 'A Study from Nature,' and 'A View near Reading.' About this date he and William Hunt worked for George Dawe on a large transparency which was required for an illumination intended to celebrate a victory over the French. Like the ablest of his contemporaries, he could paint a panorama or a miniature, or engrave a portrait. Besides old masters' works, Linnell engraved in mezzotint John Varley's 'Burial of Saul,' and Collins's 'Feeding the Rabbits' and a 'Scene on the Brent.' In 1807 he gained a medal for a drawing, and in 1810 one for a model in the Life School of the Academy; and in 1809 he gained in the British Institution a prize of fifty guineas for a landscape called 'Removing Timber.' He soon devoted himself to portrait painting and to pictures of scenery near London. At this time he established himself with Mulready in Francis Street, Tottenham Court Road. In 1810 appeared 'Fishermen waiting the return of the Ferry Boat, Hastings,' and in 1811, 'The Ducking, a scene from Nature.' After this Linnell ceased to contribute to Somerset House till 1821, but from 1818 to 1820 he exhibited in Spring Gardens with the Society of Painters in Oil and Water-Colours. He executed many miniatures on ivory, and produced several portraits, some of which he reproduced in mezzotint. One of the first of his subject landscapes was painted in 1835, 'Christ's Appearance to His Disciples on the way to Emmaus,' which attracted a great deal of attention owing to its originality, and the pathos imparted to the landscape, which was the distinguishing characteristic of all his work. 'Windsor Forest' was painted in 1837. In 1852 Linnell retired from London to Redhill, where he died in 1882. He published 'Michael Angelo's Frescoes in the Sistine Chapel,' 1834; 'The Royal Gallery of Pictures,' being a selection of the paintings in Buckingham Palace, 1840; and a tract entitled 'The Royal Academy, a National Institution,' 1869. A drawing of Sarah Austin by him is in the National Portrait Gallery. The following is a list of his principal pictures:

LINO, PIETRO DI, or FERROLINO, was an old Siennese painter, who flourished in the 12th century. He is the oldest Tuscan master known, but no work has been assigned to him with certainty.

LINSCHOTEN, CORNELIS ADRIAAN VAN, a Dutch historical painter, was born at Delft in 1590. As soon as he had learned the rudiments of the art, he went to Rome, where he is stated to have been a pupil of Ribera, and to have attached himself to the study of the works of Michel Angiolo da Caravaggio, whose vigorous style he followed with some success. On his return to Holland he painted some historical subjects; but his dissipated character rendered it difficult for his employers to get their pictures out of his hands. Two of his most esteemed works, representing 'St. Peter denying Christ' and the 'Repentance of St. Peter,' were at the Hague. He died at the Hague in 1679.

LINSEN, JAN, was a Flemish painter, who resided some years in Italy. He painted marines and sea-fights, of which the most remarkable was the representation of an engagement at which he had himself been present, and in which he was taken by an African corsair. He is said to have been killed in a quarrel with a gamester.

LINT, HENDRIK VAN, called STUDIO, the youngest son of Pieter van Lint, was born at Antwerp in 1684. In 1697 he entered the studio of Pieter van Bredael, and afterwards went to Rome, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was assiduous in sketching the most picturesque views in the vicinity of that city, from which he formed the subjects of his landscapes, which are painted in a style imitating that of Claude Lorrain. He acquired the name of 'Studio' from the society of Flemish painters at Rome, through his application to his studies. He was still living in 1726. His paintings include the following:

Augsburg.	Gallery.	Two Landscapes.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	Return from the Chase.
Turin.	Gallery.	Landscape. 1726.

LINT, PIETER VAN, was born at Antwerp in 1609. At the age of ten he entered the studio of Roeland Jacobs, and having become in 1633 a master of the Guild, he went to Italy, and passed several years at Rome. Soon after his arrival, his talents attracted the notice of Cardinal Domenico Giunasio, Bishop of Ostia, who employed him in several considerable works for his cathedral, and in the chapel of La Santa Croce in Santa Maria del Popolo, at Rome. After an absence of nine years he returned to Antwerp, and was employed in painting some altar-pieces for the churches, as well as pictures of a smaller size for private collections. He died at Antwerp in 1690. Among his chief historical works were the 'Virgin and Child, with Saints,' in the church of St. Jacques, at Antwerp; and a fine picture in the church of the Carmelites, representing the 'Virgin presenting to some Monks the Order of their Community,' painted in the style of Van Dyck. He also painted portraits with great success, many of which are highly esteemed in the Low Countries. Besides five other paintings, there is the portrait of Cardinal Giunasio in the Antwerp Gallery. But apart from these the only other picture by Pieter van Lint now to be seen in his native city is 'The Parting of St. Peter and St. Paul before their Martyrdom,' which adorns one of the altars in the church of St. Jacques. He executed also an etching, representing 'Virtue and Vice.'

LINTHORST, J., a painter of fruit and flowers, was born at Amsterdam in 1755, and died there in 1815. Two fine specimens of his work are in the Museum of his native city.

LINTMEYER, DANIEL, (or LINDMEYER,) was born at Schaffhausen about the year 1540. He was chiefly known as a painter on glass, and flourished from about 1560 to 1591.

LINTON, J., an English portrait painter, flourished at the close of the 17th century. He painted a portrait of Sir William Ashurst, Lord Mayor of London in 1694.

LINTON, WILLIAM, a landscape painter of the classic or ideal school, was born at Liverpool in 1791. He was educated at Rochdale, and then placed in a merchant's office at Liverpool. Attracted by art, he studied Claude and Wilson, and made his first appearance at the Royal Academy with three pictures in 1817. He also exhibited at the British Institution, and at the Society of British Artists, of which he was one of the founders. Considerable time was spent by him in travel among the scenes of classical antiquity, and he exhibited a collection of his sketches in 1842. He paid considerable attention to the composition of colours, and published a pamphlet on 'Ancient and Modern Colours.' He died in London in 1876. Amongst his chief works are:

The Temples of Pæstum.	( National Gallery. )
Embarkation of the Greeks for the Trojan War.
A Fête Day at Venice.
Venus and Æneas.
Greek Armament.
Marius at Carthage.

LION, A., is a name inscribed, with the date 1628, on a good picture in the Town Hall of Amsterdam, representing twenty-five archers. No other work is known by this master.

LION, PIERRE, a Belgian portrait painter, was born at Dinant about 1740. He went to Paris, where he became a pupil of De Vien. He lived for several years at Vienna, but eventually returned to his own country, where he died in 1814.

LIONARDO DA VINCI. See LEONARDO.

LIOTARD, JEAN ÉTIENNE, called 'The Turk,' was born at Geneva in 1702, and was intended by his father for mercantile pursuits, but having succeeded in copying a miniature by Petitot, he was permitted to follow his inclination for painting. He went to Paris in 1725, where he became a pupil of J. B. Massé and made the acquaintance of Lemoyne. He soon got into practice in painting portraits in crayons, miniature, and enamel. In 1738 he accompanied the Marquis de Puysieux to Naples and then to Rome, where he painted the likeness of the Pope, and became acquainted with two English noblemen, who engaged him to accompany them to Constantinople. During his journey to the Levant, he put on Turkish costume, which he wore, with a long beard. He remained in the Turkish capital four years, and was next employed at Jassy by the Prince of Moldavia, and then in 1749 by the Empress Maria Theresa at Vienna. From there he proceeded to Paris and thence to London, where he painted portraits of the Princess of Wales and the young princes. He met with considerable employment, for which he was probably indebted more to the notoriety of his masquerade than to his talents as a painter. He went in or about 1756 to Holland, and there married; but returned to London in 1772, bringing with him a valuable collection of pictures by celebrated masters, as well as glass paintings of his own workmanship, and these were sold by auction for large sums. His chief forte lay in crayon portraits, which he exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1773 and 1774. In 1776 he returned to Switzerland, and died at Geneva in 1779. Among his paintings are :

Liotard, Jean Michel, born at Geneva in 1702, was a twin brother of Jean Etienne Liotard. He learned engraving at Paris under Benoît Audran, and in 1735 went to Venice, whence after a time he returned to Paris, and finally to his own country, where he died in 1788. He engraved the following prints :

Lippardini, Ludovico, was born at Bologna in 1800, and was instructed in art in that city, where he brought himself into notice at the age of fifteen. In 1820-21 he was at Rome and Naples, and in 1822, and again in 1825, at Venice, where he became Professor at the Academy in 1838, and Professor of Painting in 1848. He died at Venice in 1856. Among his chief paintings there are :

- Erigone. 1827.
- Byron's Oath at the Grave of Bozzaris.
- The Ascension of Mary (Gran Cathedral).
- Achilles.
- Bacchus and Ariadne.
- The Youth of Jupiter.

Lippert, Joseph, a portrait painter, was born at Neuburg in 1764. He went to the Art Academy, and afterwards to Vienna, where he became acquainted with a painter named Geringer, with whom he travelled for seven years. He died at Pressburg in 1812.

Lippi, Fra Filippo, was born at Florence about the year 1400. He was the son of a butcher called Tommaso Lippi; but he lost both his parents at an early age, and was left to the care of an aunt, whose poverty rendered her unable to afford him much material aid. In 1412 he entered the Carmelite community at the Carmine of Florence, and studied painting from the frescoes of Masaccio in the chapel of the Brancacci. In 1430 his name first appears as a painter, and in 1432 he seems to have left the monastery. The story told of his capture by the pirates of Barbary at Ancona, and of his captivity, is now considered to be more than doubtful, since no traces of this event can be found in any authentic records or works of this artist. A letter exists, written by Fra Filippo in 1439 to Piero de' Medici, in which he calls himself "one of the poorest friars in Florence," and as having under his charge six marriageable nieces for whom he has to find means to live and dowries. When about twenty-six he painted the altar-piece, representing the 'Virgin and Child enthroned,' with a predella of four subjects, for Gherardo di Bartolommeo Barbadori, which exhibited wonderful talent at even that early age. The upper part of this altar-piece is now in the Louvre, and its predella is in the Academy of Arts at Florence. In 1441 he executed for the nuns of Sant' Ambrogio a 'Coronation of the Virgin, with Saints and Bernardine Monks,' one of the latter of whom is his own portrait with the tonsure, and holding a scroll inscribed 'Is perfect opus.' This clearly shows that at that date he had not abandoned the robes and marks of his Order. He seems at this period to have been highly esteemed, and to have received many commissions from the clergy and the nobility of Florence. His most powerful patron was Cosmo de' Medici, and it is probably owing to his patronage that in 1452 he was appointed chaplain to a convent of nuns in Florence; and in 1457 was made rector of San Quirico at Legnaia. In 1456 Fra Filippo began the frescoes at the Pieve, now the cathedral of Prato, having already painted a 'Death of St. Bernard' for the provost of that church, where it is still preserved. It is whilst he was employed at Prato that Vasari tells the story of Fra Filippo having abducted a nun named Lucrezia Buti, whose child is known as Filippino Lippi. One of the finest paintings executed by Fra Filippo whilst at Prato is a 'Nativity,' now to be seen in the refectory of the convent of San Domenico in that city. His frescoes in the choir of the cathedral of Prato represent events in the lives of SS. John the Baptist and Stephen. They are remarkable for their harmonious grouping and colour, as well as for the richness of the costumes, head-dresses, and other accessories. After frequent interruptions, these frescoes were completed about 1468 by the one which represents the 'Death of St. Stephen,' in which he introduced the portraits of Carlo de' Medici, Fra Diamante, and himself. He afterwards went to Spoleto, where he commenced the frescoes which adorn the choir of the cathedral. They represent the 'Annunciation,' the 'Nativity,' and the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' and were completed after Fra Filippo's death in 1469 by his pupil and assistant, Fra Diamante. LIPPI, FILIPPO, called FILIPPINO, to distinguish him from his father, was the natural son of Fra Filippo, a Carmelite, and Lucrezia Buti, a novice. He was born about 1457 at Prato, and received his early education in that city, and after the death in 1469 of Fra Filippo, whose relatives were also living there, he came under the care of Fra Diamante, and received his first lessons in painting from him, and not from Botticelli, as has been pretended. This can be judged from his early paintings, and from contemporary records. In 1480 he painted, by commission of Pietro del Pugliese, the 'Vision of St. Bernard,' which is now above the altar in a chapel of the Badia, Florence. Another altar-piece, executed at about this time, is the one in the church of San Michele, Lucca, representing 'SS. Roch, Sebastian, Jerome, and Helena.' Both the above-mentioned pictures strongly recall Fra Filippo's style. Between 1482 and 1490 he painted the frescoes in the Brancacci chapel in the Carmine, Florence, where Masaccio had already commenced the decorations, and left unfinished the fresco representing 'St. Peter restoring a Boy to Life,' which was completed by Filippino. His own frescoes are those of the 'Visit of St. Paul to St. Peter in Prison,' 'St. Peter liberated from Prison,' 'SS. Peter and Paul before the Proconsul,' and the 'Crucifixion of St. Peter.' That he was highly esteemed by the Florentines of his time is proved by the fact that he was chosen by the Council in 1482 to replace Perugino in the decorations of the hall of the Palazzo Pubblico. The 'Madonna and Child, between SS. Victor, John the Baptist, Bernard, and Zanobius,' painted in 1485, and originally intended for the Sala degli Otto of the Palazzo, is now in the Uffizi Gallery. In 1487 he received the commission to adorn the Strozzi chapel in Santa Maria Novella, but seems to have left that work unfinished and gone to Rome, where he entered the service of Cardinal Oliviero Caraffa, whose chapel in Santa Maria sopra Minerva he embellished with frescoes representing different scenes from the life of St. Thomas Aquinas. These frescoes were probably finished by about 1493, when Filippino returned to Florence, and in 1495 painted for the Confraternity of San Francesco at Palco, near Prato, the altar-piece of 'Christ appearing to the Virgin,' which has upon the gradino the Body of Christ in the tomb, and SS. Francis, Dominick, Clara, and others. This painting is now in the Munich Gallery. In 1498 he adorned a tabernacle at Prato with a 'Virgin and Child, between Angels and Saints,' and in that same year he formed one of the Council called to decide the question of the repair of the lantern above the cupola of Santa Maria del Fiore, that had been struck by lightning. Both Perugino and Lorenzo di Credi likewise assisted at these deliberations. Soon afterwards he recommenced and finished the frescoes at the Strozzi chapel, which represent various scenes in the lives of SS. John the Evangelist and Philip. These all show a certain decline in the artist's powers in their general design, colour, and execution. Filippino died at Florence in 1504, and was buried in the church of San Michele Bisdomini. Other works by him are :

Berlin.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Youth. Christ Crucified, between three Angels.

LIPPI, GIACOMO, called GIACOMO or GIACOMONE DA BUDRIO, and GIACOMO DELLA LIPPA, born at Budrio, flourished at the end of the 16th century. He was a pupil of Lodovico Carracci, but displayed more power of execution than genius. Among his works was a set of frescoes taken from the 'History of the Virgin,' which he executed for the church of the Annunciation at Bologna.

LIPPI, LORENZO, was born at Florence in 1606, and studied painting under Rosselli. Lorenzo Lippi, like his friend Salvator Rosa, divided his time between painting and poetry. His poem of 'Il Malmantile racquistato,' though perhaps less read than the 'Satires' of Salvator, is more elegant, and is one of the most admired productions in the Italian language. In choosing a prototype worthy of his imitation in painting, his taste and feeling directed him to Santo di Titi. His pictures are not very scarce in Florence, though he passed several years at Innsbruck, where he was painter to the court. He died at Florence in 1664. Among his best works may be mentioned:

Florence. Uffizi. The Crucifixion.
 " Sig. Galli. The Triumph of David.
 Vienna. Gallery. Christ with the Woman of Samaria.

LIPPO, a Florentine painter, was born in 1357. His earliest work was the decoration of a chapel in the convent of San Benedetto in his native city. From Florence this artist was invited to Arezzo, where he decorated the chapel of the Magi in the church of Sant' Antonio with a fresco representing the 'Adoration of the Magi.' In the Cathedral also he decorated two chapels. At a later period he executed many works at Bologna, and then returned to Florence, where he executed several scenes from the life of St. John the Evangelist in the church of Santa Maria Maggiore. He also worked largely in mosaic. None of this master's works now remain, as most of them perished in the siege of Florence. He was of a quarrelsome disposition, and having used some offensive words to an adversary in a law-suit, he was stabbed by him and died about 1430.

LIPPOLD, FRANZ, a German portrait painter, was born at Hamburg in 1688. He was instructed by Denner, and employed at several German courts until he settled at Frankfort in 1720. He died there in 1768. Among his best portraits are:

The Emperor Charles VII. 1742.
 The Emperor Francis I. 1745.
 The Empress Maria Theresa.

LIPS, JOHANN HEINRICH, was born at Kloten, near Zurich, in 1758, and was destined for the surgical profession; but his inclination for art caused him to abandon that intention, and he studied design under Lavater, attending the Academy at Mannheim in 1780, and six months afterwards that of Düsseldorf, where he executed his first plate, representing the 'Martyrdom of St. Sebastian,' after Van Dyck. With his 'Antiochus in Love with his Mother Stratonice,' he was received a member of the Academy. He visited Rome twice, in 1783 and 1786, in which last time he began to paint historical subjects in water-colours, and his copies after the old masters are very faithfully executed. Circumstances forced him to return to engraving, and among his 1447 plates there is not one of inferior quality. From 1789 to 1794 he was professor at the Academy of Design at Weimar, but on account of his health he was obliged to return to Zurich, where he died in 1817. Among the most important of his plates may be mentioned:

The Adoration of the Magi; after Annibale Carracci.
 The Bacchanal; after N. Poussin.
 Charlotte Corday; after Brœa.
 Portraits of Goethe, Wieland, and Ludwig Hess.

LIPS, JOHANN JAKOB, the son and pupil of Johann Heinrich Lips, was born at Zurich in 1790. He studied at Munich, whence he returned to his native town in 1818; he there committed suicide in 1833 through disappointment over a plate on which he had worked for years. He was an engraver of ability, and executed various historical subjects and portraits the best of which are:

Portrait of the Crown-Prince Louis of Bavaria.
 Portrait of the poet Hebel.
 St. John; after Giulio Romano.

LIRIOS, BUONAVENTURA. See LIGLI.

LIS, JAN, called PAN, a Dutch painter, was born at Hoorn in 1570. He was a pupil of Hendrik Goltzius at Haarlem, and imitated his style exceedingly well. He afterwards travelled, and visited Paris, Rome, and Venice. On his return to his native country he found plenty of employment, but his intemperate habits led him to neglect his art. He after a time resolved again to travel, and visit his friend Sandrart at Rome; but stopping at Venice, he died there of the plague in 1629. His paintings represent festivals, peasant life, masquerades, and nymphs bathing. Among his best paintings are:

Cassel. Gallery. Sailors in an Inn.
 " Gallery. Italian Peasants playing at Mora.
 Dresden. Gallery. The Penitent Magdalen.
 " Gallery. The Lute Player.
 Venice. Ch. of the Tolentini. } St. Jerome in the Wilderness.

 " " } The Temptation of St. Anthony.

LIS, JAN VAN DER. See VAN DER LYS.

LISCORNET, JAKOB, was a native of Dantsic, who flourished in the first part of the 17th century. He painted historical subjects, and died in 1646.

LISEBETTEN, PIETER VAN, (or LEYSEBETTEN,) a Flemish engraver, was born at Brussels about the year 1610. In conjunction with Jan van Troyen, he engraved part of the plates for the Teniers Gallery. Among others are the following:

The Portrait of David Teniers the elder; after P. van Mol.
 Jupiter and Danaë; after Titian.
 The Marriage of St. Catharine; after Paolo Veronese.
 The Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elizabeth; after Palma Vecchio.
 The Virgin, with the Infant Jesus and St. John; after the same.
 Cupid presenting Fruit to Venus; after Paris Bordone.
 Diana and Endymion; after the same.

LISKA, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, (or LISCHKA,) a painter, whose father was a government official at Breslau, in 1660 executed some frescoes in Prague. Several of his pictures are to be found in the churches of Bohemia. He was living in 1692.

LIST, GEORG NIKOLAUS, a native of Ulm, was a painter of portraits, and worked also at the court at Stuttgart. He died after 1657. The following portraits by him were engraved:

The Duchess of Würtemberg; by E. C. Heiss.
 Eberhard III, Duke of Würtemberg; by Ph. Kilian.
 The Theologian Schubels; by Rembold.

LISTER, MARTIN, a draughtsman and engraver of natural history subjects, was born at Radcliffe, in Buckinghamshire, about 1638. He graduated M.D., and practised at York and afterwards in London, where he became physician to Queen Anne. He died in 1711. Assisted by his daughters, Anna and Susanna Lister, in the etchings, he published:

'Historia Animalium Angliæ.' 1678.
 'Historia Conchyliorum.' 1685-93.

LISZEWSKA, ANNA DOROTHEA, afterwards THERBUSCH, was born at Berlin in 1722. She was first instructed in painting by her father, Georg Liszewski. She went to Stuttgart in 1761, where she painted portraits. Shortly afterwards she became a member of the Institute at Bologna, and then court painter at Mannheim. Subsequently she returned to Berlin, and executed several historical sketches. In 1766 she visited Paris, and was received a member of the Academy in 1767, as well as of that at Vienna. She returned to Berlin in 1770, and died in 1782. Among her best productions are :

She was patronized by the Princess of Anhalt-Zerbst at Stettin, whose portrait she painted when herself in her fourteenth year. In 1741 she married the painter David Mathieu, but he died in 1755. After this she painted in the Salon des Beautés at Zerbst forty of the most beautiful women. In 1760 she married her second husband, H. von Gasc of Berlin, and in 1764 received a handsome pension at Brunswick. In 1766 she travelled in Holland, and was received in 1769 a member of the Academy at Dresden. She died in 1783. Her best paintings are :

She painted the portraits of her father and of the Turkish Ambassador at Berlin; also pictures of a girl reading, another knitting, and a third holding a pigeon, for the Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. She was living in 1838.

LISZEWSKA, JULIA, who was born in 1724, and died in 1794, has left some portraits and family scenes.

LISZEWSKI, CHRISTOPH FRIEDRICH REINHOLD, the son of Georg Liszewski, and brother of Anna Dorothea and Anna Rosina Liszewska, was born at Berlin in 1725, and was probably instructed by his father. He was court painter at Dessau in 1752, worked at Dresden in 1768, visited Berlin in 1772, and became in 1779 court painter to the Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin at Ludwigslust, where he died in 1794. He excelled in portraiture, which he liked to represent by candle-light, and in which branch he was most successful. Among his best performances may be mentioned the portrait of Eugene, Prince of Anhalt.

LISZEWSKI, JERZY, (or GEORG,) was born at Olesko in Poland in 1674, and was first in the employ of Eosander, an architect, who, seeing his talent, set him to study painting. He established himself in Berlin, and died there in 1750. The following portraits by him were engraved :

- A. de Vignolles, the Mathematician; by J. J. Haid.
 Prince Friedrich August of Anhalt; by J. M. Bernigeroth.

LITSCHAUER, KARL JOSEPH, an Austrian painter, was born at Vienna in 1830. He was first instructed by Waldmüller of that city, but studied afterwards at the Academy of Düsseldorf under Tidemand and by himself. After staying some time in his native city he returned to Düsseldorf, and became from about the year 1850 a follower of that school. He died at Düsseldorf in 1871. His best known works are :

- Düsseldorf. Herr Brewer. } Scenes from the Thirty Years' War.

LITTERINI, AGOSTINO, (or LETTERINI,) was born at Venice in 1642. He was a pupil of Pietro della Vecchia. At Vicenza, in the church of San Geronimo, are two pictures by this artist of 'St. Joseph' and 'St. John of the Cross.' He was living in 1727. His daughter, CATARINA LITTERINI, born in 1675, was also an artist.

LITTERRINI, BARTOLOMMEO, (or LETTERINI,) was born at Venice in 1669, and was instructed by his father, Agostino Litterini. He was a happy imitator of Titian, and represented Madonnas with exquisite sweetness. There are works by him in San Pater-niano at Venice, and in the church at Partenkirchen is an 'Ascension of the Virgin,' dated 1731.

LITTRET DE MONTIGNY, CLAUDE ANTOINE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1735, and studied under Cars. This artist visited England about the year 1768, but not meeting with much encouragement, he returned to France, and died at Rouen in 1775. LIUTHARD, (or LITHUARD,) a famous miniature painter, flourished in the time of Charles the Bald, by whose orders in 870 he illustrated with miniatures the Codex Aureus, which he wrote with his brother Berengarius. It was transferred in 888 from the Abbey of St. Denis, near Paris, to St. Emmeran at Ratisbon, from whence it was removed in 975, and is now in the Royal Library at Munich. There is also by him a prayer-book of 862-869 in the Louvre at Paris.

LIVENSZ, JAN, (LIEVENS, or LYVENS,) a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at Leyden in 1607. He was instructed in the first rudiments of design by Joris Verschooten, and at ten years of age was placed under Pieter Lastman, with whom he did not continue longer than two years, and it does not appear that he had any further instruction. When he was only twelve years old he copied the pictures of 'Democritus' and 'Heraclitus,' by Cornelis van Haarlem, with an exactness which made it difficult to distinguish them from the originals. Before he was eighteen, he had established his reputation as a portrait painter, and his picture of 'Students reading at a Peat Fire' opened the way to him in 1630 to visit England, where he was favourably received, and painted the portraits of Charles I. and his queen, with several of the nobility. On leaving England, he established himself at Antwerp, and painted several altar-pieces for the churches of the Low Countries. In 1635 he entered the Guild of St. Luke, and in 1661 the 'Pictura' Society at the Hague, whence after a time he returned to Antwerp, where he was still living in 1672. He died about that date. The following are among his best paintings:

Other portraits by him are at Cassel, Copenhagen, Dresden, Stuttgart, and Vienna.

Jan Livensz distinguished himself not less as an engraver than as a painter. His plates are partly etched, and finished with the graver in a manner resembling that of Rembrandt. His prints amount to about sixty, and are usually signed with his name, but sometimes with the initials I. L. The following are his most esteemed prints:

LIVERSEEGE, HENRY, a painter of genre subjects, was born at Manchester in 1803. From his birth he was weak, and deformed in his person, and being neglected by his father, he owed his education to an uncle, who watched over him with great care and tenderness. It is not said by whom he was instructed in art, but his first attempts were in portraiture. His touchy sensibility, however, is said to have prevented success in that line. Being enamoured of the works of Shakespeare and Sir Walter Scott, he turned from the real to embody the ideal characters in the writings of those authors, and produced a series of pictures of the dramatic kind, which brought him both money and reputation. Among these personifications of imaginary characters were Adam Woodcock, from Scott's romance of 'The Abbot,' in which he happily depicted the ridiculous part in that good-humoured worthy; 'Isabella and the Recluse,' from 'The Black Dwarf'; and 'Edie Ochiltree and Sir Arthur Wardour,' from 'The Antiquary.' To these followed 'The Inquiry,' a scene of quiet humour, representing a country lad inquiring his way from a burly-looking porter at the door of a mansion. 'The Cobbler' is of the same stamp; he is reading Cobbett's Register, and spelling his way with a look of pondering sagacity. 'Percie Shafton and Mysie Happer' is another of his happy delineations. In 1827 he came up to London, and in the following year exhibited at the Royal Academy, 'Wildrake presenting Colonel Everard's Challenge to Charles II.' After this he used to spend three or four months occasionally in this city, studying at the British Museum and the British Institution, and continuing to exhibit both here and at Manchester. The weakness of his frame sank under the activity of his imagination; his life was a continued disease, and it was scarcely a surprise to his friends when he expired suddenly at Manchester in the year 1832. As an artist his power lay in delineation of character; and he has left it doubtful whether he was most successful in the serious or the humorous. He is excellent in both. His works were published in mezzotint, under the title 'Recollections of Liverseege,' in 1832-35.

LIVESAY, RICHARD, a portrait painter and engraver, was born about the middle of the 18th century, and about 1781 lodged with Hogarth's widow in Leicester Fields. He was a pupil and assistant of Benjamin West. Settling at Windsor, he was patronized by George III., to whose family he taught drawing. Afterwards he removed to Portsea, on being appointed drawing-master to the Royal Naval College. Some of Hogarth's and of his own works were engraved by him. He died at Southsea in 1823. There are by him:

 Review of Troops by George III. (Ha'field House.)

LIVIN, MENUS, a Florentine painter of Dutch origin, was born at Amsterdam in 1630. He went to Milan and then to Rome, where he met with a gentleman who took him to Vienna. There he found a powerful patron in Prince Matthias of Tuscany, who placed him with Pietro da Cortona at Florence. From thence he ran away and joined the players of the Duke of Savoy, but after three years he returned to painting, and meeting again with Prince Matthias, he joined Stefano della Bella. His chief works were a picture of the 'Sacrifice of Abraham,' and the decoration of the cupola of the church of La Pace at Florence. He was also an engraver. He died at Florence in 1691.

LIVIUS, CRUYL. See LEVYN.

LIVIZZANI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was an Italian painter and poet, who lived in the first part of the 17th century. Some of his pictures have been engraved, but he gained more distinction with the pen than with the brush.

LIZARS, WILLIAM HOME, a Scottish subject painter and engraver, was born at Edinburgh in 1788. He received instruction from his father, an engraver, and also in the Trustees' Academy. His reputation was made by his 'Scotch Wedding' and 'Reading the Will,' exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1812, and which are now in the National Gallery of Scotland. The death of his father, however, compelled him to devote the remainder of his life to the engraving and printing business. He died at Edinburgh in 1859.

LLAMAS, FRANCISCO, was a Spanish painter who lived at Madrid in 1700. He was a pupil of Giordano, whose style he adopted. On the ceilings of the halls which separated the two cloisters of the College of Monks in the Escorial, he represented 'The Trinity,' 'The Creation,' 'The chief Doctors of the Church,' 'The chief Philosophers,' 'The Sciences,' 'The Virtues,' 'The Elements,' and several other subjects. He also decorated the Cathedral of Avila, and the Hermitage of our Lady of Prado, near Talavera de la Reyna.

LLANOS Y VALDIS, SEBASTIAN DE, a painter of Seville, was born at Granada about 1602. He was a pupil of Herrera the elder, and worked chiefly for private and lay patrons. In 1660 he actively supported Murillo in founding the Academy of Painting at Seville, afterwards making frequent donations of oil and other materials for the use of the students. He was thrice chosen president of the Academy, in 1666 and the two following years. It is probable that he died about 1668. Cean Bermudez mentions only two of his works, a 'Virgin of the Rosary, adored by Angels and Neophytes,' in the College of St. Thomas at Seville, and a 'Magdalene' in the Recollet Convent at Madrid. Llanos is chiefly remarkable for having remained under the despotic Herrera longer than any other of his scholars, and for having been wounded in a duel by Alonso Cano.

LLANTA, JACQUES FRANÇOIS GAUDERIQUE, a French lithographer, was born at Perpignan in 1807, and died in 1866. He was a pupil of Gros, and occasionally painted in oil. Among his lithographs is a portrait of the Duke of Orleans, Regent of France, after Santerre.

LLERA ZAMBRANO, ALONSO DE, a native of Cadiz, flourished in that city as a painter of banners for the royal navy, and executed, in 1639, altar-pieces for the oratories of four galleons despatched in that year to New Spain.

LLORENS, CRISTOBAL, was a painter of good repute, who lived in Valencia about 1597. He painted the histories of St. Mary Magdalene and St. Sebastian, which long adorned their altars in the conventual church of San Miguel de las Reyes. It is uncertain whether these or any of his works exist.

LLORENTE, BERNARDO GERMAN. See GERMAN LLORENTE.

LLOYD, MARY. See MOSER.

LOARTE, ALEXANDRO, was a painter of Toledo, and disciple of El Greco. Cean Bermudez praises his works for their correct drawing and a Venetian cast of colour, mentioning a large composition of the 'Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes,' painted in 1622 for the Mission Friars of Toledo; a hunting-piece of the next year; and a picture of 'Hens and Chickens,' painted in 1626.

LOAYSA Y GIRON, JUAN DE, was a Spanish painter and archaeologist, who lived at Seville in 1669. He painted with taste, and was canon of the cathedral, and one of the founders of the Academy of Seville.

LOBIN, JULIEN LEOPOLD, a French historical painter, was born at Loches in 1814. He studied under Steuben and Hippolyte Flandrin, and became director of the manufactory of stained glass at Tours, where he died in 1864.

LOCA, BATTISTA, according to Dominici, was a Neapolitan painter, who flourished about the year 1540. He was first a scholar of Giovanni Antonio d'Amato the elder, but afterwards studied the works of Andrea da Salerno, and became a historical painter of some reputation. In the church of Il Spirito Santo, at Naples, is a picture by this master, representing the 'Conversion of St. Paul,' painted in 1543.

LOCATELLI, ANDREA, (or LUCATELLI), was born at Rome in 1660, and studied under Paolo Ancsi. He painted landscapes, architectural pieces, and some historical subjects, and had also an especial talent in representing 'bambocciate.' There is by him at Paris, in the Louvre, a 'Landscape, with Shepherds'; other works are at Augsburg, Cassel, and Stockholm. Joseph Vernet was instructed by him. He died in 1741.

LOCATELLI, ANTONIO, an Italian engraver, born at Alvisopoli, near Venice, about 1800, was a pupil of Raffaello Morghen and Longhi at the Academy of Milan. Among his plates are:

LOCATELLI, MARIA CATTARINA, (or LUCATELLI), a native of Bologna, was a pupil of Pasinelli. She painted historical pictures, and in the church of the Madonna di S. Columbano is a picture of 'St. Anthony and St. Theresa.' She died in 1723.

LOCATELLI, PIETRO, (or LUCATELLI), an Italian painter, was born near Rome about 1630. He was a pupil of Ciro Ferri, or Pietro da Cortona, and his pictures in the church of Sant' Agostino and the Colonna Palace show boldness and freedom of colouring. At Siena are a 'Beato Galgano' at the church of San Francesco, and an 'Assumption' at the hospital of Santa Maria della Scala. He was living in 1690, and died at Rome in the depth of poverty and wretchedness.

LOCHE, ÉTIENNE, a French painter and lithographer, was born at Nîmes in 1786. He was a pupil of David and of Baron Gros, and he lithographed several drawings by Girodet.

LOCHEM, B. VAN, was a Dutch engraver, who flourished at Amsterdam from about 1605 to 1635. There are a considerable number of his plates, which are partly in the style of Virgil Solis, and partly in that of Wierix, as 'Christ on the Cross.' There is a set of plates of ornaments for goldsmiths, after Tangen, engraved by him conjointly with Hendrik Janssens. He also engraved a set of small plates of hunting scenes, which, from their shape, appear to have been intended for fans.

LOCHER, N., a painter and engraver, was born at Freiburg in Switzerland in 1770. He painted pictures in the style of Teniers.

LOCHNER, STEPHAN, (or LOETHENER), called MEISTER STEPHAN, a painter of the school of Cologne, was born at Constance in the early years of the 15th century. In 1442 he was living at Cologne; and in 1448 he represented the Guild of St. Luke in that city as a member of the Senate. Again in 1451 he occupied the same post of honour, but died poor and neglected in the same year. His most famous picture is the 'Dom-Bild,' or altar-piece, in the choir of the cathedral at Cologne, painted soon after 1426. It is a triptych, containing on the outside an 'Annunciation,' and within an 'Adoration of the Magi'; on one wing are 'St. Gereon and his Knights,' on the other 'St. Ursula and her Virgins.' The figures are all painted on a gold background, and the green foreground with its many flowers seems to anticipate the rich colours of the oil-painters of Flanders. It was originally done for the chapel of the Town Hall, and is attributed to his latest and maturest period. Another great work of this master is 'The Madonna of the Rose-Arbour,' in the Cologne Museum, attributed to his earliest period. Amongst his principal works are:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Adoration of the Cross.
"	"	Adoration of the Magi.

LOCHOM, MICHEL VAN, was a Dutch engraver, who resided in Paris about the year 1635. According to Basan, he engraved several plates for Crispyn van de Passe, whose style he attempted to imitate, but with little success. He appears to have been chiefly employed by the booksellers, and worked entirely with the graver. One of his best prints is a frontispiece to the 'Life of Louis XIII.,' with a portrait of that monarch on horseback, with several small figures. He engraved several portraits for the works of Hippocrates, published at Paris in 1639; and others after Ferdinand Elle. He also engraved the plates for Girard's 'Peintures sacrées de la Bible,' published in folio at Paris in 1656.

LOCHON, RENÉ, a French line engraver, was born at Boissy about the year 1632. He resided in Paris, where he engraved some historical subjects and several portraits, in which he seems to have imitated the style of Nanteuil. He died in Paris about 1675. Among other plates, the following are by him:

During his travels he drew various views, which he afterwards etched. On his return to England, he assisted Dr. Lister in drawing rare shells and fossils, which were transmitted to the Royal Society, and are inserted in their 'Transactions.' He died at Leeds in 1689. LOFVERS, HENDRICK, the son of Pieter Lofvers, was born in 1739, and was instructed by his father. He painted marine subjects, fruit, and flowers, and died at Groningen in 1805.

LOFVERS, PIETER, born at Groningen in 1710, was a scholar of J. A. Wassenburg, and painted sea views with great ability. His pictures were formerly in great request in England, France, and Hamburg. He died in 1788.

LOGGAN, DAVID, was born at Dantsic about the year 1630. He is said to have received his instruction in engraving from Simon van de Passe, in Denmark, and afterwards passing through Holland, he studied under Hendrik Hond, and came to England before the Restoration. He was first employed in engraving views of the public buildings of the University of Oxford, which were published in 1675, in a folio volume, under the title of 'Oxonia Illustrata,' and comprised forty-four plates. He also engraved and published a similar volume for Cambridge ('Cantabrigia Illustrata') in 1688, comprising thirty plates. He executed also a set of eleven plates, entitled, 'Habitus Academicorum Oxoniæ a Doctore usque ad Servientem,' which form a distinct series from the plates of costumes engraved in the 'Oxonia Illustrata.' He died in London in 1693. There are a great number of portraits by him, which are esteemed his best works. They are generally executed with the graver in a neat but formal style, and signed D. L. The following are the principal:

Charles I., on horseback.

Queen Henrietta Maria.

Charles II.; four plates.

Queen Catharine of Braganza.

James, Duke of York.

Loggan was also very successful in portraits drawn with the pencil, and he has left two painted in oil—Gilbert Sheldon, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Peter Mew, Bishop of Bath and Wells.

LOHDE, MAX, was born at Berlin in 1845, and was early made acquainted with classical beauty by his father, who was a connoisseur. He studied painting under Julius Schnorr at Dresden, and Cornelius, but he afterwards attended the Academy at Berlin, and obtained a prize in 1866 with the 'Bride of Messina.' Subsequently he travelled in Silesia, and devoted himself especially to sgraffito painting. He succeeded in inventing a new method of hardening the chalk, and imparting increased warmth to the colours. He earned great applause with the four wall-paintings on the staircase of the Sophia Gymnasium at Berlin; they represent the 'Rape of Helen,' the 'Return of Helen,' the 'Return of Agamemnon,' and the 'Arrival Home of Ulysses.' He died at Naples in 1868.

LOIR, ALEXIS, the younger brother of Nicolas Loir, was born in Paris in 1640. He was brought up to his father's profession of a goldsmith, to which he added that of an engraver, in which he became eminent. He became a member of the Academy at Paris in 1678, and died there in 1713. He etched several plates from his brother's designs. The following are esteemed his best works:

LOIR, NICOLAS, a French painter and etcher, was born in Paris in 1624. He was the son of a goldsmith, who, perceiving his inclination for painting, placed him under the tuition of Sébastien Bourdon and Le Brun, with whom he studied until he was twenty-three years of age, when he travelled to Rome. In that city he passed two years, and being in easy circumstances, he occupied his time in contemplating, rather than in copying, the works of the principal masters; and he possessed so retentive a memory, that on returning to his apartment, he could trace sketches of the pictures which had most attracted his attention. The works of Nicolas Poussin were the objects of his particular admiration, and his best pictures are those of an easel size, painted in the style of that master. On his return to Paris he met with immediate employment, and was engaged in several considerable works for Louis XIV., in the palace of the Tuileries and at Versailles. In 1663 he was made a member of the Academy at Paris, and painted for his picture of reception 'The Progress of Painting and Sculpture.' In the church of St. Barthélemy is one of his best public works, representing the 'Marriage of St. Catharine.' He died in Paris in 1679. Many French and Dutch artists have engraved after him. He has also left a great number of etchings from his own designs; they are slightly but spiritedly executed, in the style of a painter. They amount to one hundred and thirteen, and are described in Robert-Dumesnil's 'Peintre-Graveur Français,' vol. 3. They are signed N. L. I. F. or N. L., and among them are the following:

Set of Twelve subjects, the Virgin and Holy Families.
 The Infant Jesus embracing the Cross.
 The Judgment of Paris.
 Apollo and Daphne.
 Cleobis and Biton drawing the Chariot of their Mother to the Temple of Juno.
 Two large Landscapes.

LOISEL, —, a French engraver, resided at Paris about the year 1645. He executed part of the plates for the folio volume of plans and views published by Beaulieu.

LOISY, JEAN DE, a son of Pierre de Loisy the elder, was born at Besançon in 1603. He engraved 'Les Portraits des S. S. Vertus de la Vierge contemplées par feue S. A. S. M. Isabelle Claire Eugénie, Infante d'Espagne,' published in 1635.

LOISY, PIERRE DE, the elder, a French engraver, was born at Besançon, and flourished in the early part of the 17th century.

LOISY, PIERRE DE, the younger, a son or nephew of Jean de Loisy, was born at Besançon about 1630. Among his works are several religious subjects, the portrait of Philip IV., King of Spain, and others.

LOLI, LORENZO, a painter and engraver, was born at Bologna in 1612, and died in 1691. He is sometimes called 'Lorenzino del Signor Guido,' from his having been a favourite disciple of that master. He painted some pictures for the churches at Bologna, of which the most admired is the 'St. Anthony of Padua,' in Santa Caterina di Strada Maggiore. There are by this artist several etchings after Guido and Sirani, whose school he also attended, as well as from his own designs. He sometimes signed his prints with his name, and sometimes L. LL. F., Lo. F., Laur. Lol., &c. The following are his best prints:

LOLMO, GIOVANNI PAOLO, (or LULMO,) was born at Bergamo, and died about 1595. In the church of Santa Maria Maggiore at Bergamo is a picture of 'St. Sebastian and St. Roch,' painted in 1587, and in the Berlin Gallery is a 'Madonna.'

LOMAZZO, GIOVANNI PAOLO, a painter and writer on art, was born at Milan in 1538, and was a scholar of Gaudenzio Ferrari, and Giovanni Battista della

Cerva. Of his works as a painter little is known; and it is probable he did not paint much, as he became blind when he was thirty-three years old, and was chiefly occupied as an author on various subjects. In 1584 was published at Milan his 'Trattato dell' Arte della Pittura, Scultura, ed Architettura'; in 1587 his 'Rime'; and in 1590 his 'Idea del Tempio della Pittura.' He died about the year 1600. The following works by him remain:

 " Ch. Rocchinetti. The History of Melchizedek.
 " Capuchin Conv. A Pietà.

LOMBARD, LAMBERT. See SUSTERMAN.

LOMBARDELLI. See DELLA MARCA.

LOMBARDI, GIOVANNI DOMENICO, called OMINO, was born at Lucca in 1682, and was a scholar of Pietro Paolini, whose style he followed and improved by studying the works of the best Venetian colourists, and the style of the Carracci. He has left two laterals in the choir of the Olivetani, representing 'St. Bernard succouring those afflicted with the Plague.' There are two other pictures by him in San Romano, painted with such force of colour and relief, that they approach the best style of Guercino. His reputation would have stood higher if he had always painted with equal care, and had not degraded his talents by painting pictures at all prices. He died in 1752.

LOMBARDO, ANTONIO, was a painter of the Parmese school, who flourished at the end of the 17th century. He is supposed to have been a pupil of Giovanni Maria Conti, whom he assisted in decorating with frescoes the oratory of Santa Croce at Parma, and painting several figures in the church of Sant' Illario.

LOMBART, PIERRE, a French designer and engraver, was born in Paris about 1620. He is said to have learned the principles of design under Simon Vouet, but it is not known who instructed him in engraving. After acquiring some reputation at Paris he came to England, some time before the Restoration, as he engraved a portrait of the Protector; a frontispiece to Ogilby's 'Virgil,' published in 1654; a title to a small octavo, in 1658; and Sir Robert Stapleton's portrait for his 'Juvenal,' before 1660. His latest known work bears the date 1672, after which he returned to Paris, and died there in 1681. During his stay in this country he was chiefly employed by the booksellers, for whom he executed a great number of subjects, as well as portraits, which are his best works. The following are his principal plates:

LOMI, ALESSANDRO. See LONI.

LOMI, AURELIO, was born at Pisa in 1556, and was first a disciple either of his father Giovanni Battista Lomi, or else of Bronzino, but he afterwards studied under Lodovico Cardi, called Cigoli, and is considered as the head of the Pisanese school. His fresco works in the cathedral at Pisa partake of the style of both Bronzino and Cigoli. Of his numerous works in Florence, the most worthy of notice are his picture of 'St. Anthony of Padua,' at the Franciscans, and his 'Last Judgment,' in the church of Santa Maria di Carignano. Less strikingly effective, but esteemed by the Pisanese as his chef-d'œuvre, is his 'St. Jerome,' in the church of the Campo Santo at Pisa, which is marked with his initials and the date 1595. He died in 1622.

LOMI, BACCIO, was an Italian painter, born at Pisa, who flourished about 1585. He was a pupil of Taddeo Zuccheri, whose style he followed. His chief work is an 'Assumption' in the chapter-house of the cathedral of Pisa.

LOMI, ORAZIO. See GENTILESCHI.

LOMMELIN, ADRIEN, an engraver, was born at Amiens about the year 1636, and was instructed in engraving at Antwerp, where he passed the greater part of his life. He has left plates of a number of the works of Rubens, but very indifferently executed. The portraits he engraved, after Van Dyck, however, are not without merit. The following are his principal plates:

LONARDINO. See FERRARI, LEONARDO.

LONDERSEEL, ASSUERUS VAN, an engraver on wood and copper, was born at Amsterdam in 1548, and died after 1599. He executed several small woodcuts in a very neat style, resembling that of Virgil Solis, as well as some Bible illustrations and some small cuts for a 'Herbal,' by Matthias de L'Obel. He also executed the woodcuts for 'The Voyage and Travels of Nicolas de Nicolay into Turkey,' published at Antwerp in 1576. On copper he engraved a series of ornaments for jewellers, in the style of the German Little Masters. He usually marked his prints with one of these monograms :

XL. AV.

LONDERSEEL, JAN VAN, a Flemish engraver, was born at Bruges in 1582. There are by this artist several plates of landscapes, and other subjects, engraved in a stiff, formal style, after Marten De Vos, Coninxlo, Vinckeboons, Goltzius, and Hendrik Arts. His prints are executed with the graver, and some of them possess considerable merit. He usually signed them with his name abbreviated, J. Lond. or J. Londer fec. Among others the following are by him :

Faith, Hope, and Charity; represented by allegorical figures; from his own designs.

The Five Senses, emblematically represented; the same.

A set of Landscapes, with figures; after J. Savary.

LONDONIO, FRANCESCO, an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Milan in 1723. He was instructed by Ferdinando Porta, and at first attempted historical painting, but abandoned that branch for landscapes with animals, in which he was much more successful. His pastoral subjects are highly esteemed at Milan, Genoa, and Naples, where they are found in the best collections. He also etched about seventy plates of landscapes, with figures and cattle, from his own designs, having been instructed in this branch by Benigno Bossi. They are executed in a spirited style, though his fidelity to nature seems to have led him to a selection of the ugliest objects. In the Brera at Milan are five examples of his art. He died in 1783.

LONG, JOHN ST. JOHN, an engraver, was born in Ireland in 1797. He received some assistance from John Martin, and acted as an assistant to Ottley. He then took to painting, and in 1825 exhibited at Suffolk Street 'Elijah comforted by an Angel,' 'The Temptation,' and 'Abraham entertaining an Angel.' His last occupation was that of quack doctor. He died in London in 1834, and was buried in Kensal Green Cemetery.

LONGHI, ALESSANDRO, a Venetian painter and engraver, born at Venice in 1733, was the son of Pietro Longhi. He was a scholar of Giuseppe Nogari, and is chiefly known as a portrait painter. In 1763 he published a volume of the 'Lives of the modern Venetian Artists,' with portraits etched by himself. He etched several other plates of various subjects. He died in 1813. Among others, there are the following prints by him :

PORTRAITS OF PAINTERS.

LONGHI, ANTONIO. See VENEZIANO.

LONGHI, BARBARA, the daughter of Luca Longhi, was born at Ravenna in 1552, and was still living in 1619. The Castellani Collection possessed a picture by her dated 1589. There also exist by her :

Paris.	Louvre.	Virgin and Child.
Ravenna.	Academy.	St. Monica.
"	"	St. Judith.
"	"	The Sacristy of San Vitale.
"	"	The Healing of St. Agatha.
"	"	St. Dominick.
"	"	St. Catharine and St. Agnes.

LONGHI, FRANCESCO, the son and scholar of Luca Longhi, was born in 1544, and died in 1618. He painted history and portraits in the style of his father, though greatly inferior to him. One of his best pictures is in the church of the Carmelites at Ravenna. Other works by him are :

Ravenna.	San Vitale.	Annunciation.
"	"	Virgin and Saints.
"	S. Gio. Battista.	Madonna and Saints.

LONGHI, GIUSEPPE, an Italian painter, and one of the most distinguished engravers of recent times, was born at Monza in 1766. His father was a silk mercer, and intended his son for the Church; but, through his own determination, Giuseppe was finally placed with the Florentine engraver, Vincenzo Vangelisti, professor in the Brera at Milan, and the Florentine painter, Giulio Travalesi. He studied afterwards, for some time, in Rome, where he became acquainted with Raffaello Morghen. Longhi soon obtained a reputation for himself by his print from the 'Genius of Music,' a picture by Guido, in the Chigi Palace. After his return to Milan he was chiefly employed in miniature painting, until he was ordered by Napoleon to make an engraving from Gros's portrait of him. About the same time (1798) he was appointed to succeed Vangelisti as professor of engraving in the Academy of the Brera, to which, during Longhi's professorship, many distinguished engravers of the present century in Italy owe their education. Among his principal works are, 'The Vision of Ezekiel,' 'The Sposalizio, or Marriage of the Virgin,' and a 'Holy Family,' all after Raphael; 'The Entombment,' and 'St. Jerome,' after D. Crespi; 'The Reading Magdalene,' after Correggio; 'The Madonna del Lago,' after Leonardo da Vinci; 'Galatea,' after Albani; and many heads after Rembrandt. It would occupy too much space to enumerate all the productions of Longhi's graver worthy of being specified. In the fine series of portraits published at Milan, under the title 'Vite e Ritratti di Illustri Italiani,' he engraved the portraits of Napoleon, with the iron crown on his head, as King of Italy; Michelangelo Buonarroti; and Enrico Dandolo, Doge of Venice; all superb in execution. But his 'Fasti di Napoleone il Grande' must not be omitted. This beautiful work, after the designs of Appiani, was executed in part by Longhi, and the whole of it, as far as it exists, under his direction. Six of the plates were engraved entirely by him, in what the Italians call the semilibero manner; five of them represent 'The Battle of Marengo'; the sixth, 'Time with the Fates': the rest are by Michele Bisi, Giuseppe Benaglia, and the two brothers Rosaspina, all worthy disciples of this great master. This work is especially deserving of notice, as having been executed at the expense of the Emperor Napoleon. It is said that, not being completed at the time of his abdication, its further progress was forbidden, and the plates destroyed. He commenced in 1827 the engraving of the 'Last Judgment,' after Michelangelo, from a drawing by Minardi, but died without finishing it. The 'Madonna del Velo,' after Raphael, he also left unfinished, but it was completed in 1834 by his pupil the Cavaliere Toschi. Longhi died of apoplexy at Milan in 1831. Among his other works are :

Bonaparte at Arcole; after Gros.
 The Good Samaritan; after Rembrandt.
 The Philosopher; after the same.
 The Old Man; after the same.
 The Laughing Negro; after the same.
 St. Joseph carrying the Infant Jesus; after Guido Reni.
 The Triumph of Scipio; after Matteini.
 The Virgin; after Carlo Dolci.
 The Repose in Egypt; after Procaccini.
 The Beheading of St. John the Baptist; after G. Dou.
 Louis XIV.; after Bervic.

 Pan pursuing Syrinx; after his own design.
 Portraits of Appiani, Washington, Giovanni Longhi, Carlo Portia, and Francis I. of Austria.

LONGHI, LUCA, was born at Ravenna in 1507. There are several of his historical works in the churches of Ravenna, Ferrara, and Mantua. In the church of San Benedetto at Ferrara is a picture by him representing the 'Circumcision'; but his principal works, Madonnas with Saints, are in the churches of San Vitale, Sant' Agata, and San Domenico at Ravenna. His compositions are generally confined to a few figures, but his pictures are highly finished, and very agreeably coloured. He also distinguished himself as a portrait painter. He died at Ravenna in 1580. In the Hermitage at St. Petersburg is a 'St. Catharine,' and in the Brera at Milan a 'Madonna and Saints.'

LONGHI, PIETRO, a genre painter and engraver, was born at Venice in 1702, and was instructed by Antonio Balestra and Giuseppe Maria Crespi. Of his paintings there are several in the Academy at Venice, among which is a portrait of the architect Temanza, and the representation of a tall lady at her toilet. There is one etching by him, representing 'Country Girls dancing.' He died in 1762. Bartolozzi, Cattini, Faldoni, and others, engraved after his works.

LONGMATE, BARAK, an engraver, was born in Westminster in 1737. His plates were chiefly heraldic, and he edited an edition of Collins's 'Peerage,' 1779-84. He died in 1793.

LONGMATE, BARAK, the younger, son of Barak Longmate, succeeded his father as an engraver. He was born in 1768, and died in 1836.

LONGRAFF, —, a Dutch engraver, flourished about the year 1698. He engraved a set of ornamental subjects for goldsmiths, which are executed with the graver in a very neat style.

LONGUEIL, JOSEPH DE, an engraver, was born at Givet in 1736. He was instructed in engraving at Lille, and studied afterwards under Le Bas and Aliamet in Paris. He died in Paris in 1792. He engraved several vignettes for the 'Henriade' of Voltaire and the 'Contes' of La Fontaine. His talents were not confined to book-plates; he executed some subjects after various masters, among which are the following :

Two Allegorical Subjects; after Cochin.
 Heroic Fidelity; after Moreau.
 Two Rural Subjects; after Lépicié and Aubry.

A pair of Dutch Merry-makings; after Ostade.
 The Fishermen; after Vernet.
 View in the Environs of Naples; after Mettai.
 A Sea-storm; after the same.

LONI, ALESSANDRO, (or LOMI,) was born at Florence in 1655, and was a scholar and imitator of Carlo Dolci. He was chiefly employed in copying the pictures of his master, which he did with a precision that renders it difficult to distinguish them from the originals. He died in 1702.

LONJUMEAU, PIERRE JOSEPH GAILLARD DE. See GAILLARD DE LONJUMEAU.

LONS, DIRCK EVERSEN, a Dutch engraver, was living from 1612 to 1622. He has left an etching of the 'Holy Family, with St. Elizabeth and St. John,' after A. van Nieulandt. There are also four landscapes by him, each having a large windmill.

LONSDALE, JAMES, a portrait painter, was born in Lancashire in 1777, but came to London at an early period of his life. He studied under Romney and at the Royal Academy, and afterwards purchased the house in Berners Street vacated by the death of Opie, and there he settled for the remainder of his life. He was one of the founders and chief supporters of the Society of British Artists, and exhibited with them almost regularly from 1824 to 1837. He was a man of independent mind and manners, and perhaps his neglect of the svawiter in modo was the reason that his practice was chiefly confined to male sitters. He had a masculine style of painting, and showed great discrimination of character in his portraits; and as he painted some of the really great men of his time, his pictures are likely to be appreciated long after the works of more fashionable portrait painters are forgotten. He died in London in 1839. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1818 a painting of 'Talma as Hamlet'; and for the Duke of Norfolk he executed a historical picture of 'King John signing Magna Charta.' In the National Portrait Gallery are portraits of Lord Brougham, Sir Philip Francis, Joseph Nollekens, R.A., William Sharp, Abraham Rees, and Queen Caroline.

LONSING, FRANS JOZEF, was born at Brussels in 1743. He was intended for the military profession, and entered as a cadet in one of the Belgian regiments in the service of Austria, called the Walloons. Being in garrison at the citadel of Antwerp he showed a love of art, and under the patronage of Prince Charles of Lorraine, governor of the Low Countries, he frequented the academy which that prince had organized, and in 1759 obtained the principal prize. After this he entered the school of Martin J. Geeraerts, a distinguished painter of bas-reliefs, who had been a scholar of Theobald Michau. In this school, Lonsing made such progress that Prince Charles and Count de Cobentzél sent him to Italy, with a pension, to perfect his studies. At Rome he entered the school of Raphael Mengs, and there made acquaintance with Sir William Hamilton, for whom, in 1772, he engraved several prints for the 'Scholæ Italicæ Picturæ,' among which 'The Hunt of Meleager,' after Giulio Romano, is noteworthy. He afterwards pursued his art at Paris, Lyons, and Bordeaux; and he died at Leognan, near the latter city, in 1799, while engaged in painting the mansion of a rich merchant. His pictures are chiefly portraits, some of which have been engraved; his easel pictures are rare and much sought after; the greater part of his works are at Bordeaux. His general style is a mixture of the Italian and Flemish, which gives his pictures a peculiar air, differing from every other master, yet reminding the observer of the works of older date. In the Museum at Bordeaux are portraits of himself and the Duke de Duras.

LOO, CHARLES AMÉDÉE PHILIPPE VAN, (or VAN-LOO,) was born at Rivoli in Savoy in 1719, and instructed by his father, Jean Baptiste van Loo. In 1747 he became a member of the Academy at Paris, and was afterwards appointed court painter to the King of Prussia. In 1770 he returned to Paris, and became professor at the Academy, and in 1790 rector's adjunct. He died in Paris in 1795. At Potsdam there is a painting by him of 'Psyche watched by Cupid with a Lamp,' an excellent performance in chiaroscuro. Other pictures by him are at Sanssouci. His works have been engraved by Larmessin, Chéreau, and Petit.

LOO, CHARLES ANDRÉ VAN, (or VANLOO,) usually known as CARLE VAN LOO, a painter and sculptor, was born at Nice in 1705. He was a son of Louis van Loo, and was instructed by his brother, Jean Baptiste, with whom he went to Rome, where he studied under Benedetto Luti, and learned sculpture under Le Gros. In 1719 they returned to Turin, and thence to Paris, where in 1723 he obtained the first prize for drawing, and in 1724 the first for painting, with 'Jacob purifying his House in order to make a Sacrifice to God.' After having in 1727 again visited Rome, he obtained the first prize for design at the Academy of St. Luke, and was knighted by the Pope. After this he returned to Paris, and became a member of the Academy in 1735, a professor in 1737, director of the Royal Art School in 1749, knight of the Order of St. Michael in 1751, rector of the Academy in 1754, court painter in 1762, and director of the Academy in 1763. He died of apoplexy in Paris in 1765. His best works are :

LOO, ERNEST VAN, a Flemish landscape and portrait painter, was born in 1825. He studied in the Academy of Ghent, and was employed on decorative work. He died at Ghent in 1860.

LOO, FRANÇOIS VAN, (or VANLOO,) was born at Aix in 1711. He was a pupil of his father, Jean Baptiste van Loo, but he died at Turin in 1733 from the effects of a fall from his horse.

LOO, JAKOB VAN, a portrait painter, was born at Sluys in 1614. He was the son of Jan van Loo. From 1652 to 1660 he was at Amsterdam, and painted there portraits and figures of a small size for the landscapes of the elder Wynants and Hobbema. Subsequently he settled in France, where he was naturalized, and in 1663 was received into the Academy upon his portrait of Michel Corneille the elder, executed in the style of Van Dyck. He died in Paris in 1670. Among his works are :

Berlin.	Gallery.	Diana and Nymphs.
Glasgow.	Gallery.	Susannah and the Elders.
Paris.	Louvre.	Portrait of Michel Corneille, the elder.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	The Concert.

LOO, JAN VAN, born at Loo, near Ghent, about 1585, appears to have been the first artist of this family. There are by him two paintings in the Museum at Copenhagen, viz. :

- A Company of Drinkers and Gamblers.
- A Glass-Bead Manufactory.

LOO, JEAN BAPTISTE VAN, (or VANLOO,) born at Aix, in Provence, in 1684, was first instructed by his father, Louis van Loo, and at an early age studied after the antique and the works of the great masters. He had acquired considerable reputation by some pictures he painted for the churches and public edifices at Toulon, when the siege of that place, in 1707, obliged him to return to Aix. At Toulon he married Marguerite Le Brun, the sister of Michel Le Brun, the miniature painter. After this he visited Nice, Monaco, and Genoa, and then went to Turin and worked two years for the Duke of Savoy and the Prince of Carignan. Being patronized by the latter he was enabled to go to Rome, where he attended the school of Benedetto Luti. In 1719 he accompanied the prince to Paris, and in 1737 he came to England, where, according to Walpole, his first works were the portraits of Colley Cibber and Owen MacSwinney, whose long silvery hair was extremely picturesque, and contributed to give the new painter reputation. He was favoured with the patronage of Sir Robert Walpole, by whom he was introduced to the Prince and Princess of Wales, whose portraits he painted. Van Loo soon bore away the chief business of London from every other painter. His likenesses were very striking, though not often flattering. His draperies and other accessories were usually painted by Van Aken and Van Loo's scholars, Eckhardt and Root. He became a member of the Academy of Paris in 1740. In 1742 he found his health considerably impaired, and he was advised to try the effect of the air of his native country, Provence, where he died at Aix in 1745. His first paintings are designed with correctness, but the numerous portraits which he had to execute were detrimental to his success in historical subjects. He restored some of the paintings of Giulio Romano and Primaticcio, and also etched a plate of 'Diana discovering Endymion in a Forest,' apparently from his own painting in the Louvre, which formed his reception piece at the Academy. Among his best works are :

Brussels.	Gallery.	Diana and Endymion.
Darmstadt.	Gallery.	Portraits of Louis XV. of France, and his Queen, Marie Leszczyńska.
"	"	The Slaughter of Zedekiah's Children.
Paris.	Louvre.	Diana and Endymion.

Rome.	S. M. della Scala.	The Flagellation.

LOO, JULES CÉSAR DENIS VAN, (or VANLOO,) a French landscape painter, the son of Carle van Loo, was born in Paris in 1743. He became an academician in 1784, and exhibited at the Salon from 1785 to 1817. He died in Paris in 1821.

LOO, LOUIS VAN, (or VANLOO,) was born at Amsterdam about 1641, and was instructed by his father, Jakob van Loo. He went to France, and obtained the first prize at the Academy, into which he would have been admitted had not a dust compelled him to retire to Nice. He settled at Aix in 1683, where several frescoes by him are still to be seen. There is by him at Toulon, in the chapel of the Black Penitents, one of his best productions, 'St. Francis.' He died at Nice in 1713.

LOO, LOUIS MICHEL VAN, (or VANLOO,) was born at Toulon in 1707, and instructed by his father, Jean Baptiste van Loo. After having in 1725 obtained the first prize at the Academy with 'Moses treading upon Pharaoh's Crown,' he went to Rome. On his return to Paris he became a member of the Academy in 1733; after this he was appointed court painter to Philip V. of Spain, and received in 1748 the Order of St. Michael. After the death of Philip he went to Paris, and was elected director of the Royal School of Arts for the Nobility. He died in Paris in 1771. There is by him in the Louvre, 'Apollo pursuing Daphne' (1733).

LOO, PIETER VAN, a Dutch painter of landscapes, fruit, and flowers, was born at Haarlem in 1731. He commenced by painting choice specimens for the florists of his native city. He died in 1784.

LOOFF, PIETER, a Dutch engraver, flourished about the year 1630. He engraved some portraits, among which is one of A. van den Broucken. He also executed a print of Frederick Henry, Prince of Orange, drawn in a triumphal car.

LOON, — VAN, a painter of birds, fruit, and flowers, was born at Amsterdam in 1711, and died in 1787.

LOON, H. VAN, a Flemish engraver, was probably a relation of Theodorus van Loon. He chiefly resided in Paris, where he engraved some plates for a work entitled 'Les Forces de l'Europe,' published in Paris in 1695. They consist of fortifications, plans of towns, &c.

LOON, PETER VAN, a Flemish marine and historical painter, was born at Antwerp in 1600, and died there in 1660.

LOON, THEODORUS VAN, was born at Louvain about 1595. It is not said by whom he was instructed in his native country, but he went to Italy when he was young, and at Rome became acquainted with Carlo Maratti, whose style he particularly admired, and with whom he lived in habits of friendship. On his return to Brussels he painted a fine picture of the 'Nativity' for the Abbey of Dillinghem, near that city, which gained him great reputation. He died in 1630. In the church of St. Gery, at Brussels, there is a series of pictures of the 'Life and Passion of our Saviour,' which are much admired; but his most esteemed performances are seven pictures of the 'History of the Virgin,' at Aerschot, near Mechlin, which appear rather productions of the Roman than the Flemish school, and are entirely in the style of Carlo Maratti. In the Brussels Gallery is an 'Assumption' and an 'Adoration of the Shepherds.'

LOOS, —, a flower painter of Hamburg, who flourished in the first half of the 18th century, and gained a great reputation. He died in 1750.

LOOS, FRIEDRICH, an Austrian landscape painter, was born at Gratz in 1797, and died in 1856. In the Vienna Gallery is a landscape by this artist.

LOOSE, JOANNES JOSEPHUS DE. See DE LOOSE.

LOOTEN, JAN, (or LOTEN,) who was born about 1618, probably at Amsterdam, painted in England during the reign of Charles II., and died here in 1681. His pictures generally represent rocky and thickly-wooded landscapes, and occasionally views of a quieter character, in which the figures were sometimes painted by Nico'laas Berchem. They are well executed and true to nature, but are somewhat spoiled by a too dark colouring. The Berlin Gallery has a 'Landscape with a Stag Hunt,' dated 1659. In the Cassel Gallery is a 'Hunting Scene' by him. Three 'Landscapes' are in the Dresden Gallery; and the National Gallery contains one—a 'River Scene,' with figures. Looten's works are also seen in private galleries in England, notably at Combe Abbey, Warwickshire, where there are no less than five. There also exist of his paintings:

Copenhagen. Museum. A Fair in a Swiss Village.
 Rotterdam. Museum. A Forest Landscape. 1653.
 Vienna. Liechtenstein Gall. A Landscape. 1673.

LOPEZ, CRISTOBAL, a pupil of A. Sanchez Coello, became painter to John III. of Portugal. He painted many portraits of that prince and his family, and some good devotional pictures for the chapel at Belem. He died at Lisbon in 1594.

LOPEZ, DIEGO, a Spanish painter, was born at Toledo about 1465. He studied under Antonio del Rincon, and became an excellent painter of frescoes and historical subjects. From 1495 to 1508 he was engaged in decorating the cathedral of Toledo, and in 1519, in company with Alonzo Sanchez, he decorated the theatre of the University of Alcalá de Henares. He died about 1530.

LOPEZ, FRANCISCO, was a scholar of Becerra, who painted creditably at Madrid in the reign of Philip II. (1556-1598).

LOPEZ, FRANCISCO, was a pupil of Bartolommeo Carducci, whom he assisted in pictures executed in 1595 for the church of San Felipe el Real at Madrid, which was destroyed by fire in 1718. He was appointed painter in ordinary to Philip III. in 1603, and painted a series representing the victories of Charles V. in the King's dressing-room at the Pardo. He also etched the third, sixth, and seventh plates for Vincenzo Carducci's 'Dialogues on Painting.'

LOPEZ, GASPARO, born at Naples about 1677, was an excellent painter of flowers, and therefore called 'Gasparo dei Fiori.' He studied under J. Baptiste Du Buisson, Andrea Belvedere, and at Rome, Venice, and Dresden. He settled subsequently at Florence, where he became court-painter to the grand-duke. He was murdered there in 1732. In the Vienna Gallery is a flower-piece by him.

LOPEZ, JAIME, surnamed EL MUDO, born at Madrid, was a Spanish painter, who flourished in the 15th century. He decorated the Hermitage of our Lady of Prado.

LOPEZ, JOSEF, a painter, born about 1650 at Seville, was a disciple of Murillo, who followed the style of that master, but confined himself chiefly to painting representations of the Virgin. A 'St. Philip' by him is in the convent of La Merced Calzada at Seville.

LOPEZ, PEDRO, a Spanish painter, was a scholar of El Greco. He painted, among many others, the magnificent picture of the 'Adoration of the Kings' in the convent of the Trinitarians at Toledo; it bears his name, and the date 1608.

himself chiefly to portrait painting, though in Madrid is a picture of 'Christ and the Maries.'

LOPICINO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, (or LUPICINI,) an Italian painter, who flourished at Florence about 1625, was a pupil of Cigoli. At Pistoja, in the church of San Domenichino, are several figures, and in the Vienna Gallery is a picture representing 'Martha and Mary.'

LOQUEYSSIE, EMILIE VON, a painter of portraits and miniatures, was born at Dresden in 1787, and gained a considerable reputation.

LORCH, MELCHIOR, (or LORICH, or LORICHS,) a Danish painter and engraver, was born in 1527 at Flensburg in Schleswig. He worked first with a goldsmith at Lubeck, and then set out on his travels, and visited Germany, the Low Countries, and Italy. An opportunity of going to Turkey presenting itself, he availed himself of it, and so far gained the confidence of the Sultan as to engrave his portrait. After his return he stayed some time at Copenhagen, and then visited Constantinople a second time. He was made court-painter at Copenhagen in 1582. He is said by some authors to have died at Rome in 1586, but others state that he was living in 1594. His woodcuts are executed in a bold, free style; and his copper-plates are engraved with great neatness and delicacy. He sometimes signed his prints with his name, and sometimes marked them with the monogram ML, with the date. The following are by him:

LORENTE, FELIX, was a Spanish painter, born at Valencia in 1712, whose best works are to be found in the churches of that city. He died there in 1787.

LORENTINO, AGNOLO DI, called LORENTINO DI AREZZO, flourished in the 15th century. At Arezzo, his native town, on the door of the church of San Domenico, is a 'Madonna and Saints' by this artist.

LORENTZEN, CHRISTIAN AUGUST, was born at Sønderborg in Denmark in 1749, and received his first instruction in art at the Academy of Copenhagen. He then travelled through Holland and France, after which he returned to his own country, where he gained a considerable reputation. He died in 1828.

LORENZ, FRIEDRICH GOTTLÖB, a landscape painter, born at Dresden in 1722, was a pupil of Louis de Silvestre and Johann C. Turner. He died about 1790.

LORENZ, J. D., was a German engraver, who worked about 1765, and among whose works are:

- The Vision of Jacob; after Bocksberger.
- St. Sebastian; after Dürer.
- The Last Supper; after Rembrandt.

LORENZETTI, AMBROGIO, was the son of one Lorenzo of Siena, and the younger brother of Pietro Lorenzetti, with whom he frequently worked in concert. The dates of his birth and death are both uncertain, and the first records known of him commence in 1323. According to Tizio, his earliest frescoes were those painted in 1331 in the cloisters of San Francesco, Siena. Ghiberti very highly praised them, and when seen by him they represented the lives and martyrdoms of certain Franciscan friars; but their remains, which are now preserved in one of the chapels of the church, hardly seem to merit his encomiums. He is recorded to have executed certain frescoes illustrative of the Creed and the Life of St. Catharine, in the church of Sant' Agostino, Siena, but they have now almost completely disappeared. In 1335 he went to Cortona, and painted frescoes in the church of Santa Margherita, which are now lost. On his return to Siena he painted in the cathedral, and aided his brother Pietro in the frescoes at the Spedale. From 1337 to 1339 he was occupied in decorating the Sala della Pace of the Palazzo Pubblico, Siena, with three immense frescoes, which represent allegorically the 'Advantages of Peace' and of 'Justice,' and the 'Evils caused by Tyranny' (or, as they are often called, 'The Results of Good and Bad Government'). These paintings are now damaged by time, especially the one last named; but enough remains to fully justify the praises bestowed upon them by Ghiberti, who saw them in their prime. In 1340 Ambrogio completed for one hundred and thirty-five gold florins an altar-piece for the cathedral of Siena, called 'La Tavola di San Crescenzo,' which is lost. The last record known of this artist is a payment made to him for work done for the Sala de' Nove in 1345, which has also disappeared. It is not unlikely that he died of the plague in 1348, at the age, as stated by Vasari, of eighty-three. Among extant works by him are the following:

Florence. Academy. Presentation in the Temple. 1342.

" " " Two panels with scenes from the Lives of St. Nicholas and St. Proculus.

Siena. Academy. Madonna dei Donzelli. 1344.

LORENZETTI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, a native of Verona, flourished about 1640. He painted several frescoes in the churches of Verona.

LORENZETTI, PIETRO, called by Vasari PIETRO LAURATI, whose father's name was Lorenzo, was born in the latter part of the 13th century, and first appears as an artist in 1305, when he received one hundred and ten livres for painting part of an altar-piece at Siena, called 'La Tavola dei Nove.' In 1326 he painted an altar-piece for the 'casa dell' opera' of the cathedral of Siena, where can still be seen four panels belonging to it, with SS. Mary Magdalene, Catharine, Francis, and Romualdo. The church of Sant' Ansano, outside Siena, possesses an altar-piece with his signature, and the date 1329. It is a 'Madonna and Child, with four Angels, between SS. Anthony and Nicholas.' In 1333 he painted the 'Madonna' above the new portal of the cathedral, which in 1357 had to be restored by Luca di Tomè; and in 1335 he executed an altar-piece called 'di San Savino,' for the same building. In that same year Pietro, in conjunction with his younger brother Ambrogio, painted the 'Marriage of the Virgin' on the front of the Spedale of Siena, which was destroyed in 1720. A long series of frescoes have recently been rescued from white-wash in the church of San Francesco in Siena, which admirably show Pietro's style and finish. They represent different incidents in the Passion, from the 'Entry into Jerusalem' up to the 'Resurrection,' also the 'Miracle of the Stigmata of St. Francis,' and the episode of the 'Death of Judas.' These frescoes are remarkable for their vigour and harmony, and show Pietro to have possessed great talents both as a colourist and a draughtsman. The Campo Santo, Pisa, contains some frescoes by him (for some time ascribed to Orcagna), which, although very considerably damaged by damp and by time, still show how great his ability as an artist was. These frescoes illustrate different legends of the lives of the saints and hermits in the Thebaide, and are admirable in the diversity of their incidents, and in the truth and force with which they are depicted. The date of Pietro's death is uncertain, but it is probable that he died in 1348, when the plague devastated Italy. Among his extant works are the following:

Arezzo. Pieve. The Virgin and Child, with Saints.

Berlin. Gallery. Madonna and Child, with Saints, and five other examples.

Cortona. S. Marco. A Crucifix.

Florence. Uffizi. The Thebaide in Egypt.

" " " Madonna and Saints. 1340.

London. Nat. Gall. A Legendary Subject.

Monte Pulciano. Misericordia. Coronation of the Virgin.

Siena. Academy. Two panels with Scenes from the Carmelite Annals, and five other examples.

Rome. Museo Cristiano. Eight small panels illustrative of the Martyrdom of St. Stephen and other Saints.

LORENZETTI, SANO, or ANSANO DI PIETRO, a native of Siena, flourished in the 15th century. In the Palazzo Pubblico are several frescoes by this artist, representing the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' and a 'Madonna,' painted in 1459.

LORENZI, FRANCESCO, an Italian painter, was born at Verona in 1719. He was a pupil of J. B. Tiepolo. His 'Holy Family' at Brescia and his frescoes at Verona show great sweetness of colour and outline. He died in 1783.

LORENZI, LORENZO, an Italian engraver, was a native of Volterra, who flourished about 1760. He was a pupil of Cigna, and engraved part of the plates from the pictures in the cabinet of the Marquis Gerini. Among his principal works are:

The Eternal Father between Adam and Eve; after Furini.

The Virgin and Child; after Annibale Carracci.

Landscape; after Titian.

Psyche and Cupid; after Manozzi.

LORENZINI, Fra ANTONIO, or GIANANTONIO, a Bolognese painter and engraver, was born in 1665, and was a scholar of Lorenzo Pasinelli. He is little known as a painter, as he devoted himself in the early part of his life entirely to engraving. In 1699 he was employed at Florence, in conjunction with Theodor Verkruijs, Mogalli, and others, to engrave the pictures in the gallery of the grand-duke, sometimes found collected in a single volume under the title of 'Gallery of the Grand-Duke of Tuscany,' in a set containing one hundred and forty-seven subjects, engraved on one hundred and sixty-seven plates. He died in 1740. Nagler gives a list of seventy-six engravings by him. His plates are almost entirely etched, and the following are the principal:

LORENZO, DON, called IL MONACO, a Camaldolese monk of the convent of the Angeli at Florence, was born about 1370, and probably instructed by Agnolo Gaddi, though his style resembles that of Spinello Aretino, as well as of Fra Angelico. His figures are expressive of religious feeling, but somewhat cold. As a miniaturist he is most successful in his smaller works. He died in 1425. His best performances are:

Cerreto. Camaldolese Abbey. { The Coronation of the Virgin, with side pictures of the Adoration of the Magi and of the Shepherds, and scenes from the life of St. Bernard. 1413.

LORENZO DI PIETRO, called IL VECCHIETTA, was born at Castiglione di Valdorcia, in the province of Siena, about 1412. He was a painter, a goldsmith, a sculptor, and an architect; but he did not succeed well in any one of these branches of art. Siena possesses in the Palazzo Pubblico and in the sacristy of the Spedale remains of frescoes by him, which have been recently freed from a covering of whitewash. An altar-piece by him is in the cathedral of Pienza, and the gallery of the Uffizi possesses a signed work by his hand. The dates on Lorenzo di Pietro's paintings extend from 1441 to 1457. He died in 1480.

LORENZO DI VITERBO, was a painter of the 15th century, who executed a famous fresco representing the 'Marriage of the Virgin,' in a chapel of the Servite Church at Viterbo.

LORRAINE, JEAN BAPTISTE DE, a French engraver, mentioned by Basan, was born in Paris in 1737, and died at the end of the 18th century. He engraved some plates of portraits, and other subjects.

LORY, GABRIEL, (or LORI,) a Swiss painter and engraver, was born at Berne about 1763. He worked first at Berne, and about 1806 at Herisau, from whence he went to assist Osterwald in Neuchâtel. He died in 1840. He was a superior landscape painter, and among his productions are :

LÖSCHER, ANDREAS, was born at Schaffenstein in Bavaria. He spent some time in Venice and Rome, and afterwards went to Augsburg, where he devoted himself to portrait painting. He died in 1762.

LOSCHI, BERNARDINO, the son of Jacopo Loschi, was born at Parma in 1489. He painted an altar-piece, now in the Gallery of Modena, representing the 'Virgin and Child, between SS. Anthony and Nicholas, with four Angels,' signed by him in 1515. He was also the author of many paintings and frescoes in the churches and the castle of Carpi, where he died whilst in the service of Alberto Pio, in 1540.

LOSCHI, JACOPO, was born at Parma in 1459. He painted in 1488 a standard and an altar-piece for San Giovanni, Parma; and in 1496 he produced the 'Virgin and Child' for the Servi at Carpi, a picture that afterwards became famous for its miracles, but which has been lost since 1707. The Gallery of Parma possesses a 'Madonna and Child,' signed by him in 1471; and in the Gallery at Modena is a 'Magdalene.' Many of the churches in that city possess paintings by him and by his father-in-law, Bartolommeo Grossi. Loschi died at Carpi in 1504.

LOSENKO, ANTON PAVLOVICH, a Russian historical painter, was born at Gluchov in 1737. He studied at the Academy of St. Petersburg, and afterwards travelled through France and Italy. He returned to St. Petersburg, where he gained great reputation, and became Director of the Academy. He died there in 1773.

LOSSOW, FRIEDRICH, was born at Munich in 1837, and entered the Academy of that city, where from 1860 he studied the technicalities of the art under Piloty. For the most part, however, he was his own instructor, and distinguished himself as a painter of animals and of humorous pieces, which appeared in the 'Münchener Bilderbogen' and in the 'Fliegende Blätter.' He died at Munich in 1872. The following works by him may be mentioned :

The Story of the Little Roe.

The Fable Book.

The House Dog. 1860.

Dog with Puppies.

Rat-Catching. 1861 and 1862.

Dog and Monkey Travelling Performance. 1866.

On visiting Italy in 1856 he became acquainted with the Hereditary Prince George of Saxe-Meiningen, who employed him in his Villa Carlotta at Lake Como. He died at Rome in 1861. Among his paintings for Prince George are the following :

Horrad courting Hilda, the daughter of King Hagen, on behalf of Hettel, King of the Danes; scene from 'Gudrun.'

Hagen carried off by Greif, and how he maintained the Fight with the elder Greif.

LOTEN, JAN. See LOOTEN.

LOTH, FRANZ, a German painter, was born at Munich in 1641. He was a brother of Johann Karl Loth, with whom he visited Venice, where he resided for several years. In 1699 he returned to Munich, where he died in 1701.

LOTH, JOHANN KARL, called in Italy CARLOTTO, was born at Munich in 1632. He was the son of Johann Ulrich Loth, under whom he studied for a short time, and then went to Venice, where he worked under Pietro Liberi. After painting some historical pictures at Venice, he went to Vienna, where he painted portraits of the Emperor and other distinguished personages. In the church of the Lesser Hospital at Venice is a picture of a 'Dead Christ'; in the church of San Giovanni Crisostomo is an altar-piece, representing the 'Death of St. Joseph'; and other works are to be found in the galleries of Augsburg, Bordeaux, Brunswick, Cassel, Dresden, Munich, and Vienna. He died at Venice in 1698.

LOTH, JOHANN ULRICH, was born at Munich about 1590, and was first instructed by his father, a painter on glass, and afterwards by Pietro Candido; he probably studied also under Carlo Saraceno at Venice during 1610-13. After returning to Munich, he became about 1620 court painter to the Elector Maximilian. He died at that city in 1662. He painted in oil, water-colours, and miniature. His best works are considered to be:

Augsburg. Gallery. Several productions.
Munich. Peterskirche. The Last Supper.
" Heiliggeistkirche. The Descent of the Holy Ghost.

LOTH, ONOFRIO, a painter, was born at Naples in 1662. He was a pupil of Ruoppoli, and painted fruit and flowers. He died at Naples in 1717.

LOTTER, TOBIAS CONRAD, a German engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1717, and died in 1777.

LOTTE, CHRISTIAN, a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1701. He worked also at Augsburg, and died in 1740.

LOTTI, COSMO, was a painter and mechanic of Florence, in the service of Philip IV. of Spain. He furnished the marine and woodland scenery for Lope de Vega's pastoral drama, 'Selva de Amor.'

LOTTO, LORENZO, was born about 1480, probably at Treviso. He is said to have learned his art from Andrea Previtali, and to have gone in early life to Venice, where, according to Vasari, he became the journeyman and friend of Palma Vecchio, and also studied under both Giovanni Bellini and Giorgione. His earliest known paintings are a 'Holy Conversation' in the Borghese Palace, Rome, and an altar-piece belonging to the church of San Domenico, Recanati, both having the date of 1508. The church of San Floriano at Jesi has an 'Entombment,' painted by him in 1512, and of about this date is the altar-piece of the church of San Pietro Martire, at Alzano, representing the 'Death of St. Peter Martyr.' In 1513 Alessandro Martinengo of Bergamo chose Lotto from amongst the Bergamese artists to paint the altar-piece for the church of San Stefano, and agreed to pay him five hundred ducats in gold for it. Lotto took three years to complete this immense work, which was first exhibited in 1516, and then consisted of a central panel with a 'Virgin and Child enthroned, attended by Angels, and adored by SS. Dominick, Alexander, Barbara, Roch, Mark, Stephen, John the Baptist, Augustine, and Sebastian'; a triangular tympanum with an 'Angel bearing the Orb and Sceptre' (both of which are now in the church of San Bartolomeo at Bergamo), and a predella containing the 'Resurrection,' the 'Stoning of St. Stephen,' and a 'Miracle of St. Dominick,' which is now in the Piccinelli Collection at Seriate, near Bergamo. Existing records prove that at this same period Lotto painted a standard for the Brotherhood of Mercy at Bergamo, designed many of the cartoons for the 'tarsias' in Santa Maria Maggiore, and furnished the two large altar-pieces of the churches of San Spirito and San Bernardino, Bergamo. In 1524, at the request of the Suardi family, he decorated the chapel of St. Barbara, at Novate, near Trescorre, with frescoes illustrating the lives of St. Barbara and another saint, which, although much injured, can be still seen. Soon afterwards were completed the fresco of the 'Visitation' in the church of San Michele Arcangelo, Bergamo, and the 'Glory of St. Dominick' in the church of the same name at Recanati. In 1525 Lotto left Bergamo and travelled towards Venice, where he remained for some years. He is known to have been in Treviso in 1544, and to have there valued an altar-piece painted by Francesco Becaruzzi. In 1550 he was at Ancona, where he painted the altar-piece of the 'Madonna and Angels, with four Saints,' for the church of Santa Maria della Pace, and also agreed to paint seven canvases for the church of Loreto, which are now to be seen in the governor's palace in that town. Lotto died at Loreto soon after 1554. This painter's most celebrated altar-pieces are to be seen in the churches of the Carmine and SS. Giovanni e Paolo, Venice, the cathedral of Asola, and at Monte San Giusto, near Ancona, where the church possesses a 'Crucifixion,' containing twenty-three life-size figures. Besides these the following are extant:

LOTYN, JAN, a native of Brussels, was a flower painter employed a long time by Queen Mary II. of England, after whose death he returned to his native city, where he died after 1695.

LOUIS, LEONARD FRANÇOIS, a portrait painter, was born at the Hague in 1698, and was a pupil of Pieter van Kink and Jan Vollevens. He died at the Hague in 1786.

LOUND, THOMAS, a landscape painter in oil and water-colours, was born in 1803. He was engaged in the brewing trade at Norwich, and pursued art as a recreation. His works appeared at the Royal Academy from 1846 to 1855. He died at Norwich in 1861. There is a water-colour drawing of 'Framlingham Castle' by him in the South Kensington Museum.

LOUTHERBOURG, PHILIPPE JACQUES DE, was born at Strassburg in 1740. He was the son and pupil of a miniature painter, who settled in Paris, where his son was placed under the tuition of Tischbein and Francesco Casanova, and became a very popular painter of battles, hunts, sea-pieces, and landscapes, with figures and cattle, in which last he at that time appears to have imitated the charming style of Nicolaas Berchem. His works were universally admired, and in 1768 he was made a member of the Academy of Painting in Paris, and afterwards appointed court painter by the king. Though he met with very flattering encouragement, he in 1771 quitted France, and settled in London, where he passed the remainder of his life. Soon after his arrival in England he was employed to make the designs for the scenes and decorations of Drury Lane Theatre, and in that province of art he displayed extraordinary ability. In 1780 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1781 became an Academician. He died at Chiswick in 1812. When Macklin projected his Bible, De Louthembourg was engaged to exercise his powers as a historical painter; on which occasion he painted two pictures, representing the 'Angel destroying the Assyrian Host,' and the 'Universal Deluge'; the latter was considered as his best performance in that department. Besides a great variety of easel pictures, De Louthembourg occasionally employed his talents on a larger scale, in commemoration of the most remarkable military and naval events of the time. Among his most noted paintings are :

The Review of Warley Camp. (Royal Collection.)
 Lord Howe's Victory of the 1st June, 1794. (Greenwich Hospital.)
 The Defeat of the Spanish Armada. (The same.)
 The Siege of Valenciennes.

 The Fire of London, 1666.
 Miranda.
 View of Skiddaw.
 View of a Lead Mine in Cumberland.
 Landscape and Cattle; thunderstorm. (Glasgow Gallery.)
 Two Landscapes. (Bordeaux Museum.)

He has left the following and other etchings :

Six plates of Peasants.
 Six plates of Soldiers.
 The Four Times of the Day.

LOUUMENT, FRANÇOIS DE, a French engraver, was born at Nevers in 1648. He is said by Florent Le Comte to have resided some time in Italy, at the time when François de Poilly studied at Naples. He died about 1690. He engraved several plates after the Italian masters, including Lanfranco, Solimena, and others, among which are :

The Stoning of St. Stephen; after Pietro da Cortona.
 St. Francis Xavier interceding for the Plague-stricken; after Ciro Ferri.

LOUYS, JAN, (or LOYS,) a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp about the year 1600. He was a pupil of Pieter Soutman, at the time when Suyderhoef studied under that master, and he engraved several plates after his instructor's designs. The following are his principal prints :

LOVELL, PEREGRINE, an engraver who flourished about the middle of the 16th century, worked in the style of Hollar. There are some small engravings of Flemish soldiers by him, and specimens of his work will also be found in Della Bella's Drawing-Book (1634).

LOVER, SAMUEL, an Irish miniature and landscape painter, was born at Dublin in 1797. He early obtained a reputation for his miniatures, and was elected a member of the Hibernian Academy in 1822. Much of his time was taken up by giving entertainments illustrative of Irish character. He also achieved a considerable literary reputation by his novels, and had a civil list pension of £100. Many of his landscapes and portraits were exhibited at the Royal Academy. During his last years he lived in Jersey, where he died in 1868.

LOWE, JOHANN MICHAEL SIEGFRIED, a German painter and engraver, was born at Königsberg in 1756. He studied first at Berlin, and afterwards went to Dresden. He visited Venice and Vienna, and in 1780 went to Russia, where he stayed some time, returning to Berlin in 1795. He painted portraits and historical subjects, and was living in 1822.

LOWE, MAURITIUS, an historical painter, was born about the middle of the 18th century. He was a pupil of Cipriani, and studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, where in 1769 he was the first gold medalist for historical painting. Sent to Rome, he forfeited the travelling studentship by non-compliance with the conditions. He had a contest with the Academy in 1783 as to the reception of his picture of the 'Deluge,' and was much befriended by Dr. Johnson. Improvident and ill-conditioned by nature, his circumstances were aggravated by an imprudent marriage, and he gradually sank out of public notice. He died in Westminster in 1793.

LÖWENSTERN, CHRISTIAN LUDWIG VON, was born at Darmstadt in 1702. In the Museum of that town is a battle-piece by this artist. He died in 1755.

LOWRY, ROBERT. See LAURIE.

LOWRY, STRICKLAND, a portrait painter, flourished in the latter part of the 18th century. He was a native of Whitehaven, where he practised, as well as in Dublin, Shropshire, Staffordshire, and Worcestershire, obtaining a considerable local reputation. He furnished some illustrations for Phillips's 'History and Antiquities of Shrewsbury,' 1779.

LOWRY, WILSON, was born at Whitehaven in 1762. He was the son of Strickland Lowry, and was by him taken when a child to Ireland. Afterwards, while still a boy, he worked as a house painter at Worcester, and also began to practise engraving. At the age of seventeen he was in London, and was admitted into the schools of the Royal Academy. Few of his earlier plates bear his name, having been executed for other artists, to whose fame they contributed. He engraved most of the plates on mechanical subjects in Rees's 'Cyclopædia,' Crabbe's 'Technological Dictionary,' the 'Philosophical Magazine,' and other works of a like kind. His mathematical knowledge of drawing, his researches in the laws of mechanics, his extensive acquaintance with physics and the general properties of matter and form, combined with the correctness of an eye that never erred, and a hand that could not deviate, highly qualified him for such work. Some of the finest specimens of his abilities, as an architectural engraver, are to be found in the plates of Murphy's 'Batalha,' Nicholson's 'Architecture,' the print of the House of Commons at Dublin, and Gandon's designs. He died in London, after a prolonged illness, in 1824, leaving a son and daughter, who followed the same profession.

LOYER, —, was a native of France, who flourished about the year 1760. Among other prints, he engraved some plates of architectural subjects from the designs of Dumont and others after Marieschi, Bernini, and others.

LOYER, NICOLAES, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Antwerp in 1625, and died in 1681.

LUARD, JOHN DALBIAC, a subject painter, was born in 1830. He originally held a commission in the army, which he left to become a pupil of John Phillip. From 1855 he exhibited a few pictures, hearing on a soldier's life, at the Royal Academy. His health early failed him, and he died at Winterseton in 1860, after having shown much promise of future excellence.

LUBIENIECKI, BOGDAN, or TEODOR, a Polish painter and engraver, was born at Cracow in 1653. He was instructed in design by Juriaan Stur, a painter of Hamburg; from thence he went to Amsterdam, where he became a scholar of Gerard de Lairese. On leaving that master he went to Italy, and resided some time at Florence, where he was particularly patronized by the grand-duke. On his return to Germany he was invited to the court of Berlin, and was made painter to the Elector of Brandenburg, and director of the Academy. He painted history and landscapes in the style of De Lairese, and designed Schlüter's 'Masks,' which are in the arsenal at Berlin. He etched a set of six grand landscapes and figures, inscribed Th. de Lubnetzki fecit., in 1698. Others of his works are marked T. D. L. He returned to Poland in 1706, and was still living in 1729.

LUBIENIECKI, KRZYSTOF, the younger brother of Teodor Lubieniecki, was born at Stettin in 1659. After receiving some instruction in design, with his brother, from Juriaan Stur, he accompanied Theodor to Amsterdam, where he entered the school of Adriaan Backer, and followed the style of that master, both in history and portraits. He died at Amsterdam in 1729. Two of his paintings, 'The Snuff-box and the Pipe' and 'Table Friends,' are at Copenhagen.

LUBIN, JACQUES, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1637. From the resemblance his style bears to that of Gérard Edelinck, he is supposed to have been a pupil of that artist. He was living in 1694. Among other plates, the following are by him:

POBTRAITS.

Henri, Vicomte de Turenne, Marshal of France; after Philippe de Champaigne.

LUBLINSKY, MARTIN ANTON, a painter, was born at Leschnitz in Silesia in 1643. He was a pupil of Scieta. In the Collegiate Church of Olmutz are frescoes by this artist, as also an altar-piece, and several pictures are to be found in the different churches in Olmutz. He died in 1690.

LUCA, SANTO, a monk, was a native of Florence, who lived in the 9th century, and on account of his saint-like conduct was called Santo. He is said to be the author of several paintings which were formerly attributed to Luke the Evangelist, as those of the 'Virgin and Child' in the Madonna di San Luca at Bologna, and in Santa Maria Maggiore at Rome.

LUCAN, MARGARET BINGHAM, Countess of, born in 1740, was the daughter and co-heiress of James Smith, M.P. She married in 1760 Sir Charles Bingham, Bart., who in 1776 was created Baron Lucan, and in 1795 Earl of Lucan. She painted original miniatures, and made clever copies of those by Hoskins, the Oliviers, and Samuel Cooper. There is at Althorp a Shakespeare illustrated by her with portraits, views, and various ornaments. She died in 1815.

LUCAS, AUGER, a French historical painter, was born in 1685. He was a grandson of Tournières, and was received into the Academy in 1722 upon his picture of 'Acis and Galatea,' which was formerly at St. Cloud. He died in 1765. The Museum of Nantes possesses 'Spring,' 'Summer,' 'Autumn,' and 'Winter,' by this artist.

LUCAS, AUGUST, a German landscape painter, was born at Darmstadt in 1803. He resided for some time at Rome, and died in 1863. In the Darmstadt Gallery are three landscapes by him.

LUCAS, GERMAIN, a French engraver, flourished from about 1700 to 1745. He engraved, in a very neat style, several architectural plates for the collection of 'Views of Versailles,' published by P. Menant. He had a son who engraved, but his prints are not specified.

LUCAS, JOHN, a portrait painter, was born in London in 1807. He was a pupil of S. W. Reynolds, and began life as a mezzotint engraver, but turned early to painting. He obtained a large practice as a portrait painter, and was a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy from 1828 until his death. Among his sitters were the Prince Consort and the Duke of Wellington. He died in London in 1874. In the National Portrait Gallery is a portrait of Miss Mitford.

LUCAS, JOHN TEMPLETON, a portrait painter, and the eldest son of John Lucas, was born in 1836. He exhibited at the Royal Academy, and at the Society of British Artists. He was the author of a farce called 'Browne the Martyr,' produced at the Court Theatre, and of a little volume of fairy tales, entitled 'Prince Ubbely Bubble's New Story Book,' published in 1871. He died at Whitby in 1880.

LUCENA, DIEGO DE, of an illustrious family of Andalusia, was a scholar of Velazquez, whom he imitated in his portraits, both large and small. He acquired great credit by his portrait of the poet Atanasio Pantaleon, who repaid him with a sonnet. He died young in 1650.

LUCENSIS, MICHELE, (or LUCCHESI,) was an Italian engraver and printseller, who resided at Rome about the year 1550. He engraved some prints after Michelangelo, Raphael, and Polidoro da Caravaggio, which he usually marked with the monogram MF.

In that year he painted for the chapel of St. Thomas's College a pair of landscapes with figures, representing the 'Calling of St. Andrew and St. Peter.' He also visited the city of Granada, where he executed in 1642 seven small works on the subject of the discovery of the manuscripts and relics at Sacro Monte.

LUCETTO DA GENOVA (or LUCHINO). See CAMBIASO, LUCA.

LUCIANI, ANTONIO, a painter and engraver, was born at Venice in 1700. He was a pupil of Piccini in landscape and of Feldoni in engraving.

LUCIANI, SEBASTIANO, commonly called SEBASTIANO DEL PIOMBO, from the office of Keeper of the Lead Seals, conferred upon him by Pope Clement VII., was born at Venice in 1485, and was educated by his father for the profession of music. Having become acquainted with Giorgione, who was likewise a musician, he was probably induced by him to learn the art of painting, and to enter the studio of Giovanni Bellini; in after years he became the disciple of Giorgione. Amongst his earlier paintings were the altar-pieces of the 'Incredulity of St. Thomas,' executed for San Niccolò at Treviso, and the 'Majesty of St. John Chrysostom,' executed for San Giovanni Crisostomo, Venice. Soon after finishing this last painting Luciani went to Rome by invitation of Agostino Chigi, who had just finished building his palace of the Farnesina, and who desired his aid in its decoration. His first work there was a series of mythological designs taken from Ovid's 'Metamorphoses,' which attracted the attention and admiration of both Michelangelo and Raphael. A friendship then sprung up between Michelangelo and Sebastiano, which produced a marked effect on the style and future fortunes of the latter. The frescoes at the Farnesina Palace were finished about 1512, and it was then that Sebastiano commenced to paint portraits in oil. Amongst these may be mentioned the 'Fornarina,' now at Berlin, and that in the Uffizi, Florence. A league was now formed between Sebastiano and Buonarroti against Raphael, and they both endeavoured to obtain commissions from Julius II., that they might compete against the acknowledged talents of the latter. Buonarroti had felt some uneasiness at the growing fame of Raphael, and he readily availed himself of the powers of Sebastiano as a colourist, in the hope that, assisted by his designs, he might be enabled to enter the lists with his illustrious antagonist, if not to drive him from the field. With this view, he furnished him with the designs for the 'Pietà' in the church of the Conventuali at Viterbo; and the 'Transfiguration' and 'Flagellation' in San Pietro in Montorio at Rome, which, as he was very tedious in his process, occupied him six years. The extraordinary beauty of the colouring, and the grandeur of Michelangelo's composition and design, in these celebrated productions, were the objects of universal surprise and applause. It was at this juncture that the Cardinal Giulio de' Medici commissioned Raphael to paint his immortal picture of the 'Transfiguration,' and being desirous of presenting an altar-piece to the cathedral of Narbonne, of which he was archbishop, he engaged Sebastiano del Piombo to paint a picture of the same dimensions, selecting for the subject the 'Raising of Lazarus.' On this occasion he was again assisted by the powers of Buonarroti, by whom it was composed and designed. The picture was publicly exhibited at Rome, in competition with the 'Transfiguration'; and it is no mean proof of its extraordinary merit, that, notwithstanding the transcendent beauty of Raphael's chef-d'œuvre, Sebastiano's performance excited universal admiration. This celebrated work of art was removed, by the Regent of France, from the cathedral at Narbonne into the Orleans collection, of which it was once one of the most important ornaments. It is now in the National Gallery. After the death of Raphael, Sebastiano was reputed the most distinguished artist at Rome. He was particularly favoured by Clement VII., who remunerated his services by appointing him to a lucrative office, which occasioned him, in the latter part of his life, to relax in his labours as a painter. On the death of that Pope he continued to hold the post of Frate del Piombo under Paul III. His last undertaking was the chapel of the Chigi family, in Santa Maria del Popolo, which he left incomplete: it was afterwards finished by Francesco Salviati. He died at Rome in 1547. LUCKX, CHRISTIAAN, a Flemish flower painter, was born at Antwerp in 1623, and in 1639 became a pupil of Philips de Maelier, with whom he remained three years, and afterwards of Frans Francken III., under whose guidance he painted some small historical pictures, such as 'Lot and his Daughters,' 'The Adoration of the Kings,' 'Christ bearing His Cross,' 'Christ's Appearance to St. Theresa,' and 'St. Ignatius.' In 1645 he became a master in the painters' guild at Antwerp, and henceforward devoted himself to still-life and flowers. There is no record of him after the baptism of his son in 1653. The Madrid Gallery has a flower piece by him.

LUCQUIN, HENRIQUETTA, whose maiden name was GIROUARD, was born at Lisbon in 1819. She became a pupil of Gosse, and exhibited portraits and historical subjects at the Salon from 1841 to 1865. She died in 1866.

LUCY, CHARLES, a portrait painter, was born in London in 1692. He studied at Rome and Bologna, and for eight years was a pupil of Cignani.

LUCY, CHARLES, an historical painter, was born at Hereford in 1814. He commenced life as an apprentice to his uncle, who was a druggist, but he soon abandoned that business, and proceeding to Paris, entered the École des Beaux-Arts, where he attended principally the classes under Paul Delaroche. Subsequently he returned to England, and became a student in the Royal Academy. After oscillating for some time between England and France, he settled down at Barbison, near Fontainebleau, where he resided nearly sixteen years. From 1838 until the time of his decease scarcely a year passed without one or more of his works appearing on the walls of the Royal Academy. In 1843 he sent to the Westminster Hall competition a cartoon of 'Caractacus and his Family before the Emperor Claudius,' and in 1844 another cartoon of 'Agrippina interceding for the Family of Caractacus.' In 1845 he sent to the same exhibition 'An Abstract Personification of Religion;' and in 1847 'The Embarkation of the Pilgrim Fathers in the Ship Mayflower,' for which he received a premium of £200. He also painted for Sir Joshua Walmsley several portraits of distinguished statesmen and others, which have since been bequeathed to the South Kensington Museum. He devoted himself almost entirely to historical subjects, chiefly connected with the Puritan era of English history, several of which have through engravings become popular both here and in America, where some of his works have found a home. He died in London in 1873. The most important of his exhibited works are:

LÜDEKE, PETER LUDWIG, a painter, was born about 1760. He studied landscape painting, and then proceeded to Italy. In 1786 he went to Rome, but in the next year returned to Berlin.

LÜDERS, DAVID, a portrait painter, was born at Hamburg about 1710. He was first instructed by Pfeiffer at that city, but went afterwards to Paris, where he studied under Lemoine, and then to Italy, and subsequently to England and St. Petersburg. Among his best portraits are :

The Prince of Wales. 1751.
 The Family of the Russian Ambassador.
 Count Tschernitschev.

LUDIUS, was a Roman painter in the time of Augustus, who, according to Pliny, was the first to adorn the walls of rooms with landscapes, which he embellished with figures variously occupied. He was the first Roman artist who painted in fresco, and he was chiefly employed in decorating the walls of the villas and country-houses with views of gardens, woods, and water-courses, with graceful figures.

LUFFOLI, GIUSEPPE MARIA, was a native of Pesaro, who flourished about 1680. He was a pupil of Simone Contarini, and painted portraits and historical subjects.

LUGANO, LO ZOPPO DI. See DISCEPOLI.

LUGARDON, JEAN LÉONARD, a French historical painter, was born at Geneva of French parentage in 1801. He studied under Gros and Ingres, and exhibited at the Salon from 1827 to 1857. Three landscapes by him were in the Exposition Universelle of 1867. He died in 1875.

LUGRENCELIS. This name is affixed to a bold, spirited etching of a Bacchanalian subject, in the style of Benedetto Castiglione. It is inscribed Lugrencelis inv. et scul.

LUHNE, JOACHIM, was born at Hamburg about 1620, and studied under A. Backer, whose style he imitated with success, but he afterwards studied the works of Carlo Lotti, and adopted from him a darker colouring. In 1673 he was master, and in 1692 head of the Guild at Hamburg. He died there in 1717. Among his works are :

Brunswick. Museum. His own Portrait, those of his family, and that of the mathematician Hertel. 1672.

LUIGI, ANDREA DI. See ALOVIGI.

LUIKEN, GASPAR, (OR LUYKEN,) a Dutch engraver, supposed to have been the brother of Jan Luiken, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1670, and is known to have been living in 1710. He executed many works in conjunction with Jan Luiken. Those executed by him alone are very inferior, and consist chiefly of book-plates, in which he was almost entirely employed. Among them are the following :

Twelve plates of the Months of the Year.
 Four plates of the Seasons.
 St. Francis Xavier preaching before the Emperor of Japan.
 The Miracle of the Loaves.

LUIKEN, JAN, (OR LUYKEN,) was born at Amsterdam in 1649. He was a scholar of Martinus Zaagmolen, and for some time applied himself to painting, but not succeeding to his expectation, he turned his thoughts to engraving, in which he became eminent. He usually engraved after his own designs, and he received, from his crowding his compositions with an infinite number of figures, the name of 'The Dutch Callot.' He died in 1712. His principal work is the set of plates he engraved for the Biblical works published by Mortier. Only a few of the plates of the so-called 'Mortier's Bible' are by Luiken, but there is another series published by Mortier and Covens, consisting of 62 very elaborate engravings of occurrences in Bible history, the whole of which are by him, and exhibit uncommon powers of invention and freedom of execution. Out of upwards of 900 engravings, the following may be selected :

Ten plates of the Commandments.
 Seventeen plates for the 'History of Finland.'
 Seventeen plates for the 'Voyages orientaux de M. Thévenot.'
 One hundred and five plates for the 'History of the Martyrs.'
 The Prophet Jonah preaching to the Ninevites.
 The Assassination of Henry IV. of France.
 The Massacre of St. Bartholomew; on two sheets (in conjunction with Gaspar Luiken).
 A great variety of emblematical subjects, fairs, public ceremonies, book ornaments, &c.

LUINI, AMBROGIO, a brother and pupil of Bernardino Luini, flourished in the earlier part of the 16th century, and was a good artist, as is shown by his frescoes of the Madonna at Saronno.

LUINI, AURELIO, son of Bernardino Luini, was born at Milan about 1530, and was still living in 1584. In the Brera at Milan is a picture of the 'Martyrdom of St. Vincent the Deacon.'

LUINI, BERNARDINO, called erroneously by Vasari BERNARDINO DEL LUPINO, was born at Luino on the Lago Maggiore between 1460 and 1470. He was a pupil of Stefano Scotto, but in the middle part of his career he became an imitator and follower of Leonardo da Vinci. His early works bear no trace of Leonardo's style, and his late productions evince much originality, with Leonardo's manner for a basis. Several of his best works have for a long time been attributed to the hand of Leonardo. He worked in the churches of Milan and the neighbouring towns. Milan, Saronno, and Lugano still possess his best pictures, which for sweetness and depth of feeling are unrivalled. He was still living in 1530. It is impossible for one artist to approach nearer to the style of another than Luini does to that of Leonardo. There is the same taste in his composition and design, the same peculiarity of colour and extraordinary relief; and it requires an intimate acquaintance with the works of Leonardo to discriminate between them. To form a just idea of the powers of Luini, it would be necessary to study his series of pictures of the 'Life of the Virgin,' at Saronno, in which the Virgin is represented with a beauty, dignity, and modesty which resemble the works of Raphael. He was not less distinguished in his fresco paintings, of which the principal are the 'Christ crowned with Thorns' in the Collegio del S. Sepolcro, and those in the choir of the Monastero Maggiore at Milan. The following are among Luini's extant works:

LUISMON, JOHANN ANTON. See EISMANN.

LUIZ, was a Portuguese painter of the 15th century, who painted between 1442 and 1446 several historical pictures in the monastery of Naxera.

LUKE, SAINT. The well-known tradition that the Evangelist Luke was a painter rests on the authority of Nicephorus, of the Menology of the Emperor Basil, and of other late writers. None of these are of historical authority, and the New Testament makes no mention of a fact so likely to have been recorded.

LUMLEY, GEORGE, an amateur, has left several portraits engraved in mezzotint. He was a solicitor, and resided at York, where he died in 1768 at the age of 60. Among his works are the following:

Thomas Comber, Dean of Durham.

Lady Mary Fenwick; after Dahl.

Sir Walter Hawksworth, Bart.

Sir Mark Millbanke, Bart.

LUNARDUS, a wood engraver, flourished about 1520. He executed some cuts of frontispieces and book ornaments from his own designs.

LUND, JENS PETERSEN, a Danish painter and etcher, was born in Sønderjylland, and received his first instruction at the Academy at Copenhagen. In 1756 he received the gold medal, and then visited France and Italy, remaining in Rome for some time. He returned to Copenhagen in 1775, where he painted landscapes and architectural pieces, and died in 1790.

LUND, JOHAN LUDVIG GEBHARD, a Danish painter, was born at Riel in 1777. In 1796 he entered the Academy of Copenhagen, where he remained three years, and then went to Dresden. In 1800 he went to Paris, and entered the atelier of David. In 1802 he went to Rome, where he painted his picture of 'Andromache,' and others. He returned to Copenhagen in 1810, and became a professor of the Academy. In 1814 he painted the 'Return of Habor from the Battle,' and in 1819 the 'Magdalene at the Sepulchre.' The picture of the 'Walk to Emmaus' is in the church at Fühnen. He died in 1867.

LUNDGREN, EGRON, a Swedish landscape and subject painter in water-colours, was born at Stockholm in 1816. He was educated in Paris under Cogniet, and afterwards travelled much in Italy, Spain, Egypt, and India, in which last country he accompanied the staff of Lord Clyde. Through meeting John Phillip at Seville, he came to England in 1853, where he subsequently chiefly lived, becoming in 1864 an associate, and in 1867 a member of the Water-Colour Society. He published 'Letters from Spain' and 'Letters from India,' and died at Stockholm in 1875. Amongst his chief works are :

LUNGHI, ANTONIO, was born at Bologna about the year 1685 (or, according to Zani, 1677), and was a scholar of Giovanni Giuseppe dal Sole. He painted historical subjects, of which the principal are in the churches at Bologna. In Santa Maria Maddalena is a picture of 'Christ appearing to Mary Magdalene,' and in San Bartolomeo an altarpiece representing 'St. Rita.' He died in 1757.

LUNY, THOMAS, a marine painter, was born in 1758. His works appeared at the Royal Academy between 1780 and 1802. There is a picture by him at the Foundling Hospital of 'Vessels attacking Land Batteries.' He died at Teignmouth in 1837.

LUPICINI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA. See LOPICINO.

LUPTON, THOMAS GOFF, a mezzotint engraver, was born in London in 1791. He was the son of a working goldsmith in Clerkenwell, and at an early age he showed so much taste for drawing that in 1805 his father placed him under the tuition of George Clint, A.R.A., the mezzotint engraver, and portrait and historical painter. On the expiration of his apprenticeship he began work on his own account as an engraver of portraits, but finding that he could not obtain a sufficient number of impressions of works executed on copper to make them remunerative, he made several experiments on plates of nickel, the Chinese alloy called tutenag, and steel, in the hope of discovering something that would be more durable than copper. He finally selected steel, and on a plate of this metal he engraved after George Clint a portrait of Munden, the comedian, which proved a great success. In 1822 he received the gold Isis medal of the Society of Arts, as an acknowledgment of the value of his application of soft steel to the process of mezzotint engraving, and he was successful in establishing the use of plates of that metal. He worked both on steel and copper, and produced some good plates after Sir Thomas Lawrence, Sir Martin Shee, Thomas Phillips, and other eminent portrait painters of his day. He also re-engraved a selection of fifteen plates from Turner's 'Liber Studiorum,' which were published in 1858. Lupton died in London in 1873. Among his more notable works are :

LUSURIER, CATHERINE, was a pupil of Hubert Dronais, and painted portraits in his style. She died in Paris in 1781, at the age of 28. In the Louvre is a portrait by her of Jean Germain Drouais drawing, on the right-hand corner of which is inscribed, "Ætatis suæ xv Lusurier pœtit."

LUTERO, GIOVANNI DI. See DOSSI.

LUTI, BENEDETTO, was born at Florence in 1666, and was for some time a scholar of Antonio Domenico Gabbiani. On leaving that master he was favoured with the patronage of the grand-duke; and expressing a strong desire to visit Rome, his protector promoted his wishes by supplying him with the means, and accommodated him with apartments in his palace in the Campo Marzio. He there studied under Ciro Ferri, and from the works of the great masters. It is to be regretted that this able artist should have occupied so much of his time in crayon drawing, so transient in its nature, as he possessed powers for superior performances. One of his earliest works at Rome was his picture of the 'Death of Abel,' which was publicly exhibited on the festival of St. Bartholomew, when it excited universal admiration by the sublimity of the composition and the characteristic expression in the head of the murderer. He was commissioned by Clement XI. to paint his fine picture of 'The Prophet Isaiah' in St. John Lateran, and other works, for which the order of the Cross was conferred on him. He was also knighted by the Emperor, and ennobled by the Elector of Mentz. He died at Rome in 1724. The following paintings by him are in public galleries :

LÜTKE, PETER LUDWIG, a German landscape painter, was born at Berlin in 1759. He was originally a merchant, but in 1785 he devoted himself to painting, and going to Italy, studied under Philipp Hackert in Rome from 1785 to 1787. He decorated a room wholly with his landscapes in the Marble Palace in Potsdam. In 1787 he was created member of the Academy, and in 1789 professor of landscape painting. He died at Berlin in 1831. A picture of 'Baïæ' by him is in the National Gallery of that city.

LUTMA, ABRAHAM. There is an engraved portrait of Rubens, after Van Dyck, by this artist, but there is no account of him.

LUTMA, JACOBUS, was of the same family as Janus Lutma. He etched and finished with the graver a set of plates of ornamental shields and foliage; they are executed in a neat style, from the designs of Janus Lutma the elder. He also engraved a plate of three portraits in a frame, inscribed, Jan Lutma d'Oude inv. Jac. Lutma fecit aqua forti et exc.

LUTMA, JOANNES, or JANUS, the younger, a Dutch engraver and goldsmith, was born at Amsterdam in 1629, and was a son and probably pupil of Janus Lutma the elder, who was a goldsmith. Janus the younger died at his birthplace in 1689. There are by him a set of four portraits represented as antique busts, which are executed in a peculiar manner, with a punch or chisel, and a mallet; this he called 'opus mallei;' also two portraits of his father and himself, engraved in the style of Rembrandt, and some views of ruins, &c. in a style executed with the point, and assisted with the mezzotint tool. In the Amsterdam Museum is a portrait of Paulus van Vianen, a goldsmith.

LUTTEREL, EDWARD, was born at Dublin about the year 1650. He came early in his life to London, and was trained to the law in New Inn; but having a disposition for the arts, he abandoned the profession, and applied himself to taking portraits in crayons. He studied under Ashfield, and practised in crayons successfully. He possessed an inventive mind, and observing the admiration excited by the new art of engraving in mezzotint, he was desirous of discovering the process, and contrived the means of laying the grounds with a roller, which succeeded to a certain degree, but not to his satisfaction. At this time, the mezzotints of Blooteling were in great repute, and Lutterel persuaded his friend Lloyd, a printseller, to bribe a person of the name of Du Blois, who used to lay the grounds for Blooteling, and who was then returning to Holland, to discover the mystery. He afterwards connected himself with Isaac Becket, and they became the earliest English engravers in mezzotint. He died about 1710. The best of his portraits, which were his principal works, was that of Le Piper, the painter. The following, also, are by him :

LÜTTGENDORF, FERDINAND VON, Baron, a painter and etcher, was born at Würzburg in 1785. He studied under Seidel and Hauber at the Academy of Munich, and from 1805 to 1809 at that of Vienna. He gave lectures at the University of Erlangen, and subsequently resided at Prague, Vienna, Presburg, and Munich, where he died in 1858. His best works are :

His own Portrait. (Herr H. Majsch, Vienna.)

He also etched 125 portraits of the Hungarian Reichstag.

LUTZ, PETER, a German painter and line engraver, was born at Munich in 1797. He studied painting at the Academy of his native city and under Johann Peter von Langer, but in 1821 he turned his attention to engraving, and became a pupil of Karl Hess. He died in 1867. The following are his chief plates :

LÜTZELBURGER, HANS, called also HANS FRANCK, one of the greatest of German engravers on wood, was born probably at Augsburg about 1495. Like Holbein, he appears to have gone from Augsburg to Basle in 1522, and he died there in 1526. His best known woodcuts are those from the designs of Holbein—especially the figures of the Old Testament and the 'Dance of Death.' The whole series of the former and forty-one out of the fifty-eight cuts which compose the latter are by him. They were first printed in 1530, but were not published until 1538. He is believed also to have assisted in engraving 'The Triumph of the Emperor Maximilian,' after Hans Burgkmair; and his name of Hans Franck is supposed to be identical with that of 'Jan Franck,' who lived at Nuremberg, and worked for Albrecht Dürer. He marked his woodcuts with his name, or H. L. FUR. (= Furmschneider, form-cutter). Among his other works after Holbein are :

Fight between Peasants and naked Robbers in the Forest; after Holbein. 1522.

The Title-page, containing Figures of St. Peter and St. Paul, for the German New Testament printed at Basle by Adam Petri in 1522.

LÜTZENKIRCHEN, PETER JOSEPH, born at Cologne in 1775, was a painter and an engraver in mezzotint. He studied at the Academy of Düsseldorf, but afterwards returned to his native city, and eventually, in 1810, established himself at Frankfurt, where he died in 1820. Among his paintings, which are signed with his name or P. L., are the portraits of Merlo and of Dr. J. G. L. von Pempelfurt (engraved by Bierweiler). His best plates are :

Thomas feeling the Wounds of the Saviour; after Luca Giordano.

LÜTZOW, KARL HINDRICK D'UNKER HENNING. See D'UNCKER HENNING LÜTZOW.

LUXAN MARTINEZ, JOSEF, was born at Saragossa in 1710, and was brought up by the family of Pignatelli, and sent to Naples in 1730 to study under Giuseppe Mastroleo. After five years he returned to his patrons, and practised portrait painting. In 1740 he married the daughter of Juan Zabalo, a painter, and went to Madrid on being made painter to the King. The Inquisition of Saragossa named him inspector of pictures, and he had the principal share in maintaining a school of design, afterwards promoted to the rank of a Royal Academy. He died at Saragossa in 1785. The Cathedral, Santa Engracia, and other churches, were adorned with his works, which are commended by Cean Bermudez for their agreeable colouring.

LUYCX, FRANS, almost forgotten in his native country, and better known beyond it as LEUX, or VAN LEUX, was born at Antwerp in 1604, and became a master painter in 1620. He studied under Rubens, after whose death he went to Vienna, where he was appointed court painter to the Emperor Ferdinand III., and director of the royal collections. He returned to Antwerp in 1652, but went again to Vienna in the same year. The date of his death is not recorded. There are by him in the Vienna Gallery an 'Allegory on the Vanity and Instability of Human Affairs' and a portrait of the Cardinal Infant of Spain, Charles Ferdinand, brother of Philip IV., and in the Liechtenstein Gallery is 'Christ appearing to Mary Magdalene.'

LUYKEN. See LUKEN.

LUYKS, NICOLAS, a German historical and portrait painter, was born in 1600, and died in 1658.

LUZZI, LORENZO, a native of Feltre, who flourished about 1511, is not to be confounded with Pietro Luzzi. There is a picture by him in the Berlin Gallery of the 'Virgin and Saints.'

LUZZI, PIETRO, called MORTO DA FELTRE, who was born about 1474, was the son of a surgeon, who in order to practise his profession went in 1476 to Zara, and thus caused his son to be called also ZARATO. He is known to have been at Rome in 1495, at Florence in 1506, and at Venice in 1508, although none of the pictures painted by him in either city are now in existence. He commenced to paint at Feltre in 1515, soon after that city had been nearly destroyed in the wars between the Emperor Maximilian and Venice. Records remain to prove that he executed the frescoes and the altar-piece of the Town-Hall and Loggia, all of which are now missing. The Casa Bartoldini and the Crice Palace, Feltre, are both decorated with frescoes that Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle assign to Luzzi. In the church of the Ognissanti at Feltre is a fresco with the 'Transfiguration of Christ, between SS. Anthony and Lucy,' which is said to have been painted by Luzzi in 1522. The story of his having been killed in battle at Zara in 1519 must of course be abandoned. His extant works comprise :

Berlin.	Gallery.	Madonna.
Feltre.	Palazzo Crice.	The front decorations, representing Nymphs and Cupids.
”	Casa Bartoldini.	Decorations of the façade: Judith, Quintus Curtius, and Romulus and Remus, in the style of Giorgione.
”	S. Stefano.	The altar-piece.
”	Town-Hall.	Several paintings.
”	S. Giorgio.	Several different treatments of the Madonna.
”	Ognissanti.	The Transfiguration of Christ.
Villabruna.	Church.	The Virgin and Child, with Saints.

LYEN, JACQUES FRANÇOIS, was a French portrait painter, who exhibited at the Salon from 1737 to 1747.

LYMANN, JOHANNES SAMUEL, a Danish line engraver, was born at Copenhagen in 1742. He studied in the Art Academy of his native city, and in 1758 gained the large gold medal for an engraving of 'David cutting off the Head of Goliath,' after his own design. Most of the plates which he executed are portraits. He died in 1769.

LYNCH, JAMES HENRY, a lithographic artist, executed principally portraits, which he exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1856 to 1865. He died in 1868.

LYNE, RICHARD, was a painter and engraver, who lived in the second half of the 16th century, and was retained by Archbishop Parker on his establishment. There is a portrait of this prelate by him at Lambeth Palace, dated 1572.

LYONET, PIETER, a draughtsman, carver, and engraver, was born at Maastricht in 1708. He received a superior education, and was first a lawyer. One of his first and best carvings was 'Apollo and the Muses.' Subsequently he became acquainted with Karel De Moor and Limborch, under whom he produced excellent crayon portraits. At a later period he drew and engraved insects with extraordinary accuracy, and by these works he obtained much repute. He died at the Hague in 1789.

LYS, JAN VAN DER. See VAN DER LIS.

LYSARDE, NICHOLAS, was an historical painter, who was in the service of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., and subsequently became sergeant-painter to Queens Mary and Elizabeth. There is a portrait at Hatfield House of one of the French kings, which is ascribed to him. He died in 1570.

LYSONS, Rev. DANIEL, an antiquarian draughtsman, was born in 1760. Many of the illustrations in his well-known 'Environs of London' (1792-6) and 'Magna Britannia' are by him. He was rector of Redmarton from 1804 to 1833, and died at his seat, Hempsted Court, Gloucestershire, in 1834.

LYSONS, SAMUEL, an antiquarian draughtsman, was born at Redmarton in 1763. He studied for the bar, but devoted himself to antiquarian pursuits, and became keeper of the records at the Tower. He illustrated his 'Roman Ruins at Woodchester' (1797) and 'Reliquiæ Britannicæ Romanæ' (1813). He died at Cirencester in 1819.

The number of his plates is very considerable, and the greater part are from portraits of persons of distinction by the principal painters of his time. He also scraped a few plates from historical subjects by Vandyck, Murillo, Rembrandt, &c., some of which are extremely fine. The following may be considered as his best plates:

MACARÉ, PIERRE JOSEPH, a French still-life painter, who was born at Valenciennes in 1758. He was a pupil of Watteau, whose style he imitated. He died in 1806.

MACCHI, FLORIO, is mentioned by Malvasia as a native of Bologna, and a worthy disciple of Lodovico Carracci. He flourished about the year 1620, and painted several pictures for the churches at Bologna. In Sant' Andrea del Mercato is a picture by him of the 'Crucifixion,' with two wings; and in La Morte, a 'Raising of Lazarus.' But his most admired work is a fine fresco of the 'Annunciation,' in the church of Il Spirito Santo, which has been frequently mistaken for a work of Lodovico. Florio Macchi is mentioned by Orlandi, in the 'Abecedario,' as an engraver, but his prints are nowhere specified. His brothers, GIOVANNI BATTISTA (died 1628) and GIULIO CESARE, were also pupils of Lodovico Carracci.

MACCHIETTI, GIROLAMO, (or MAGLIETTI), called DEL CROCIFISSAJO, was born at Florence about 1535. He was called 'del Crocifissajo,' from his having been an extensive painter of crucifixes. After studying some time under Michele Ridolfo del Ghirlandaio, he became a scholar of Giorgio Vasari, whom he assisted for six years in the Ducal palace at Florence. He afterwards visited Rome, where he studied two years, and then went to Spain, and after that to Naples. On his return to Florence, he acquired considerable reputation by his pictures of the 'Adoration of the Magi,' in San Lorenzo, of the 'Martyrdom of St. Lawrence,' in Santa Maria Novello, and of 'Medea and the Daughters of Pelias,' in the Grand Ducal Palace. His best works are at Naples, Pisa, and Benevento, but those in the last-named place perished in an earthquake in 1668. The year of his death is unknown, but he was still living in 1564.

MACCO, ALEXANDER, historical painter and etcher, was born at Ansbach, in Bavaria, in 1770. He studied at Munich, and afterwards at Rome. He then travelled to Paris and through Germany, spending some time at Berlin, Prague, Hamburg, and Vienna. His works were in the style of David.

MACEDO. See CLOVIS.

MACÉE, CHARLES, a French engraver, born in Paris about 1631. He was employed by Jabach in engraving from his collection of pictures; he also engraved twelve landscapes after Castiglione. He died after 1665.

MACERATA, GIUSEPPINO DA, was born at Macerata about the year 1600, and is said to have been a pupil of Agostino Carracci. His style betrays the principles of the Bolognese school, as is evident in his works in the two colleges at Fabriano—in the 'Annunciation,' painted in oil, at San Niccolo; and in his frescoes in San Venanzio representing some of the miracles of the Apostles.

In the church of the Carmelites at Macerata is a picture by him of the 'Virgin and Infant, with a glory of Angels, and SS. Nicola and Girolamo'; and at the Cappuccini, 'Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter,' both of which are stamped with the character of the school of the Carracci. The latter is so like Guido's picture of the same subject, in the church of the Filippini at Fano, that it may almost be considered as a copy. It is signed Jos. Ma. faciebat. 1630.

McCONNELL, W., known as an illustrator of books, died in 1867. Amongst his work may be mentioned the illustrations to Sala's 'Twice round the Clock.'

McCULLOCH, HORATIO, a Scotch landscape painter, born at Glasgow, of humble parentage, in 1806. He received his art instruction from a landscape painter named Knox, and worked diligently for some years on the scenery of Western Scotland. Removing to Edinburgh, he was in 1834 elected an Associate, and in 1838 a member of the Scotch Academy. Here he was a frequent exhibitor, but only once appeared at the London Academy, namely, in 1844. His art, though meritorious, and fairly true to the scenery of his native country, is somewhat conventional, and but little known south of the Tweed. His pictures are very plentiful, however, in Scotland. He died at Edinburgh in 1867. Three of his works—'Inverlochy Castle,' 'A Lowland River,' and an 'Evening Landscape'—are in the Scottish National Gallery.

MACDUFF, ARCHIBALD, an English etcher and sketcher, born about 1750, who probably did not follow art as a profession. Amongst his etched plates are:

- The Temptation of Adam; after Barry.
- Job and his Friends; after the same.
- The Birth of Venus; after the same.
- King Lear; after the same.
- Holy Family; after Raphael.

MACHADO, CIRILLO, painted at Lisbon, and was a professor at the Academy there early in the present century. He distinguished himself principally in portraiture, and is further known for his knowledge of architecture and science. An attack of apoplexy made him unfit for work in 1827. His best works are in the Palace at Mafra, and in that of the Marquis de Goulé, but an altarpiece for the church of the Heart of Jesus, and paintings of the Apostles for the church of Goletto, may also be mentioned.

MACHEK, ANTON, was born at Podlaczicz, in Bohemia, in 1771. He was apprenticed by his father, who was a musician in the private chapel of the Bishop of Koniggrätz, to a cabinet-maker, but showing a talent for art, he was sent to Prague. There he studied under Wenzel Bluma, and a year after under Ludwig Kohl. He afterwards returned to Koniggrätz, where he painted two altarpieces for the chapel in Grast, and several works for the Bishop's residence. In 1798 he went to Vienna and studied at the Academy for a year. He then travelled through the country, supporting himself by portrait painting. In 1806 he settled in Prague, where he died in 1844.

MACHEREN, PHILIPP VAN, a marine painter, lived at Middelburg towards the end of the 17th century. In 1672 he entered one of the vessels of war of the republic, for the express purpose of seeing a naval combat, a subject which he delighted to represent. He also made several voyages in Danish and Swedish vessels for the same purpose.

His works are rarely seen with his name, nor are there any further particulars recorded of him. Balkema says he died at Amsterdam, and Immerzeel, at Rotterdam.

MACHIAVELLI, ZENOBIO DE', an excellent early Florentine artist, who is mentioned by Vasari as the best of Benozzo Gozzoli's pupils. He assisted Benozzo in his frescoes in the Campo Santo at Pisa. The Gallery of the Louvre possesses a 'Coronation of the Virgin,' by Machiavelli, bearing the date 1473. The Pisa Academy has also a 'Virgin and Child, with Saints,' by him, and the National Gallery of Ireland an 'Enthroned Madonna, with Saints.'

MACHUCA, PEDRO, a Spanish painter, sculptor, and architect of the 16th century, who is spoken of in high terms by several writers, but whose works are little known. It is said that he lived at Granada, and that he there executed several grand works both as an architect and as a painter, the latter being in the manner of Raphael, whose works he had studied in Italy. It is certain that he had been to Italy; for he is named among the Eagles, that is to say, the most illustrious artists of the time, by Francisco d'Ollanda, whose book was finished in 1548. Zani says he flourished between 1527 and 1548, and probably to a much later period. Pachecho, Lazaro Diaz del Valle, and Palomino, all speak of Machuca having been in Italy. His fame now rests on his works of sculpture and architecture in the Alhambra.

MACHY, PIERRE-ANTOINE DE, born in Paris about 1722, was an excellent painter of architectural perspectives. He studied under Servandoni. There are by him in the Palais Royal, on the large staircase, three perspective views; and a picture of the ruins of a Temple is at Valenciennes. Basan, Janinet, and Descourtis reproduced his best works. He engraved a Triumphal Arch and two architectural pieces in bister after his own designs. He died in 1807.

MACINI. See MANCINI.

MACIP, VICENTE JUAN, called also JUAN BAUTISTA DE JUANES, or JOANNES, was born at Fuente de Higuera, in Valencia, in 1523. Palomino asserts that he was a pupil of Raphael, who died two years before he was born. But he certainly studied in Italy, and caught some of the Urbinate's manner. After his return to Spain he settled at Valencia, where he established a school of painting. His brush was wholly dedicated to religious subjects. He designed a series of tapestries for the Archbishop of Valencia, and was much employed in the different churches and monasteries of the neighbourhood. His most famous picture was a Madonna, called 'La Purissima,' painted for the Convent of the Jesuits. Macip died in 1579. The following works of his are now extant:

Madrid.	Museum.	Preaching and Martyrdom of St. Stephen.
"	"	The Bearing of the Cross.
"	"	Portrait of Don Luis de Castelvig.
"	"	The Last Supper.
Valencia.	Cathedral.	Baptism of Christ.
"	"	Conversion of St. Paul.
"	"	Holy Family.
"	Museum.	A Christ.
"	"	Portrait of St. Thomas de Villanueva and Abp. Juan de Ribera.
"	"	Assumption of the Virgin.
"	"	Francis de Paula.
"	Ch. of Jesuits.	The Immaculate Virgin.

Valencia.	S. Nicola.	The Last Supper.
"	S. Pedro.	The Dead Christ.
Villanueva.	S. Tomas.	The Nativity.
"	"	Martyrdom of St. Ines.
"	"	Burial of a devout Monk.

The paintings of Macip's daughters, DOROTEA and MARGARITA, are often attributed to their father. Dorotea painted an excellent 'Crucifixion' in the church of the Santa Cruz, Valencia.

MCLAN, ROBERT ROLAND, a Scottish subject-painter, born in 1803. He was originally an actor, and indulged in art as a pastime. From 1828 onwards his pictures appeared on the walls of the Academy, and at length, in 1840, he adopted painting as a profession. His subjects were chiefly illustrative of Highland life and warfare. He was a member of the Royal Scottish Academy. He died at Hampstead in 1856. His wife was also an artist, and taught for many years in one of the government schools of design.

MACKENZIE, FREDERICK, a water-colour painter, was born in 1787. He was a pupil of Repton, and was noted for his conscientious drawings of ancient buildings, mostly ecclesiastical. He exhibited at the Royal Academy for the first time in 1804, and with the Water-Colour Society in 1822, being elected treasurer of that institution in 1835. He also published several works, amongst others: 'Etchings of Landscapes,' 'Specimens of Gothic Architecture,' and 'Architectural Antiquities of St. Stephen's Chapel, Westminster.' He also made the drawings for Britton's 'Salisbury Cathedral.' He died in 1854 at the age of 67.

MACKENZIE, SAMUEL, a Scotch portrait painter, was born at Cromarty in 1755. He was originally a stone-carver, but coming to Edinburgh, he was inspired by Raeburn's works, and became a portrait-painter. He obtained a good practice, and was in 1830 elected a member of the Scottish Academy. He died in 1847.

MACKEWAN, DAVID HALL, water-colour painter, was born in 1817. He exhibited drawings at the Royal Academy from 1837 to 1849, and at Suffolk St. from 1840 to 1844. In 1848 he was elected a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, to which from 1840 he was a large contributor. He published 'Lessons on Trees in Water-Colours.' He died in 1873.

MACKLIN, THOMAS, an English engraver in the latter part of the 18th century. He engraved Guercino's 'Peace and War,' and the plates for Banbury's Shakespeare.

MACLEAN, ALEXANDER, an English subject painter, who exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1872 to 1877; he died at St. Leonard's in the latter year, after showing much promise.

MACLEAY, KENNETH, a Scotch landscape and miniature painter, born in 1802 at Oban. He was a Highlander by birth, but was educated and lived at Edinburgh, where he became a member of the Scotch Academy. He died in 1878.

MACLEOD, JOHN, a Scotch animal painter, practising at Edinburgh, whose forte was dogs and horses. He died in 1872.

MACLISE, DANIEL, born at Cork on the 25th January, 1811, was the son of a Scottish father and an Irish mother. Some doubts have been thrown upon the status of his family by inconsistencies between his own assertions and recorded facts, but it is known that, in spite of the strong inclination he had already shown for art, he was placed by his father at an early age in the office of a banking firm at Cork. But his natural bent was not to be frustrated, for he soon after left the desk and devoted himself to painting. He first pursued his studies at the Cork School of Art, and received instruction in anatomy from Dr. Woodroffe. To this branch of study he devoted great attention, and thus laid the foundation for his future excellence in figure drawing. He gained much popularity and many friendships in his native city; and a sketch of Sir Walter Scott created such a sensation that he soon secured many commissions for portraits. In 1826 he made an excursion into the charming county of Wicklow, where he found ample employment for his pencil. On his return to Cork he continued his portrait practice until he had saved enough to enable him to gratify his desire of proceeding to London. Arriving in the metropolis in July, 1827, he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, and soon became one of their most distinguished students. He obtained the silver medals in both the life and the painting schools, and crowned his career by obtaining the gold medal, in 1829, for his 'Choice of Hercules.' This distinction entitled him to the travelling studentship of the Academy, of which privilege, however, he did not avail himself. In the year 1829 Maclise's works first appeared on the walls of the Royal Academy; he exhibited 'Malvolio affecting the Count,' a subject which found employment for his brush a second time in 1840. Several portraits were exhibited by him in the next year (1830), and amongst them one of the unfortunate Miss Landon (L. E. L.), whose acquaintance he had made in the literary circles to which he had obtained introduction soon after his arrival in London. He also produced a portrait of Sir John Soane, the architect, to which, for various causes, considerable attention was drawn. Maclise was thus induced to contribute to 'Fraser's Magazine,' from 1830 to 1835, a series of eighty-one sketches of eminent persons of the day, each portrait being accompanied by humorous letter-press from the pen of Dr. Maginn. In the year 1833 Maclise exhibited 'Snap-Apple Night' at the Royal Academy, and at the British Institution 'Mokanna Unveiling his Features to Zelica,' from Moore's 'Lalla Rookh.' Owing to the fame he obtained through these pictures, he abandoned the practice of portrait painting, and had not long to wait before he attained the full membership of the Academy, for, elected A.R.A. in 1866, he became R.A. in 1840. In this year he again visited Paris, and soon after began to be connected with the decoration of the new Houses of Parliament. In July, 1844, six artists were commissioned to paint subjects for the House of Lords. Amongst these Maclise was assigned 'The Spirit of Chivalry,' and afterwards 'The Spirit of Justice,' which had previously been allotted to W. C. Thomas. He afterwards painted the celebrated pictures of 'The Meeting of Wellington and Blucher after Waterloo,' and the companion subject, 'The Death of Nelson'; the latter was finished in the year 1864. At the Paris Exhibition of 1855 Maclise was a juror; for that held in London in 1862 he designed the medal. In 1863 Maclise gave some valuable evidence before the Commission on the Royal Academy. The death of Sir Charles Eastlake, in 1866, occasioned a vacancy in the presidency of the Academy, and the office was, on its refusal by Sir Edwin Landseer, offered to Maclise, who also declined it.

Similar motives appear to have influenced him in refusing to accept the honour of knighthood. His health had been much impaired by his constant attendance at the Palace of Westminster, and he never wholly recovered the loss, in the latter part of 1865, of his sister Isabella, who had always lived with him, for he was unmarried. His death occurred on the 25th of April, 1870, at his house in Cheyne Walk, Chelsea. The shortest account of Maclise would be incomplete which did not make some mention of the books illustrated by him. Chief among these were Moore's 'Irish Melodies,' published by Longmans; Bürger's ballad poem 'Leonore'; and Lord Lytton's 'Pilgrims of the Rhine.' Under this category should also be classed the series of designs for 'The Story of the Norman Conquest,' which was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1857. The drawings in this work are forty-two in number, and were executed in the leisure moments of the twelve years previous to their exhibition. The following are some of Maclise's principal works:

MACNEE, DANIEL, Sir, was born at Fintry, Stirlingshire, in 1806. His father dying when he was only six months old, his mother went to Glasgow, and there, as he showed a taste for drawing, he was apprenticed in 1820 to John Knox, a landscape painter. After four years spent in Knox's studio, he was employed at lithographic work, but at nineteen he removed to Cumnock, where he was engaged to paint snuff-boxes. He then went to Edinburgh, and entered the studio of the engraver Lizars. At the same time he enrolled himself a pupil in the Trustees Academy, and in 1825 he first exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy. He was elected a member of that body in 1829. He gained his reputation exclusively by his portraits. In 1832 he returned to Glasgow, and there remained till 1876, when, on his election as President of the Scottish Academy, he removed to Edinburgh, where he died in 1882. He was an occasional exhibitor at the Royal Academy.

MACCOURT, C., is stated by Horace Walpole to have been a native of Germany. He resided in London several years, where he practised portrait painting, both in oil colours and miniature, and was a member of the Chartered Society of Artists, with whom he exhibited from the year 1761 till 1767. In the 'Addenda' to the 'Anecdotes' he is said to have died in January, 1768. He is also stated to have scraped some mezzotints.

MACRET, CHARLES FRANÇOIS ADRIEN, a French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1750, and died in Paris in 1783. He was a pupil of N. G. Dupuis, and engraved a few plates, of which the following are perhaps the most important:

Christ and the Woman of Samaria; after Van der Werf.

The Arrival of Rousseau in the Elysian Fields; after Mouveau.

The Reception of Voltaire in the Elysian Fields; after Fauvel.

The Sacrifice to Cupid; after Greuze.

The First Fruits of Self-Love; after Gonzalez.

MACRINO. See FAVA, GIANGIACOMO.

MADDEN, WYNDHAM, an English portrait painter, who lived in the latter part of the 18th century. There is a mezzotint after him by Dickinson.

MADDERSTAG, MICHEL, or MICHAEL, (or MADDERSTEG,) was born at Amsterdam about 1659, and is called by Houbraken the ablest scholar of L. Bakhuisen. He was invited to the court of Berlin, where he passed the greater part of his life. In later years he returned to Amsterdam and took to trade. He died in 1709. Two sea-pieces by him are in the Berlin Museum. He was a shipbuilder as well as a painter, and constructed a frigate for King Frederick I. of Prussia, which was afterwards brought to St. Petersburg. His sea-pieces and storms approach so near to the pictures of Bakhuisen in the drawing of vessels, the movement of the waves, and the lightness of the skies, that they are sometimes mistaken for those of that master.

MADDOX, WILLIS, portrait and historical painter, was born at Bath in 1813. He executed several works for Beckford of Fonthill, and first exhibited at the Academy in 1844. He was invited to Constantinople, and painted the Sultan. He died at Pera in 1853.

MADER, GEORG, a painter, was born near Steinach, in North Tyrol, in 1824. His father was a miller, and he was apprenticed to the same trade, but at a very early age displayed a taste for drawing, and at sixteen he went to Innsbruck to learn painting. From 1844 till the year of his death he was actively engaged in adding to the religious art of his country, the years between 1867 and 1873 being employed in decorating the church of Steinach with frescoes of scenes in the life of Christ. Mader died in 1881.

MADIJN (or MADIN). See MANDIJN.

MADIONA, ANTOINE, an historical painter, born at Syracuse in 1650. He was a pupil of A. Scilla. He afterwards went to Rome, and joined Preti, whom he accompanied to Malta. He died in 1719.

MADOT, ADOLPHUS M., figure painter, was a student at the schools of the Royal Academy. He executed a large number of drawings on wood for a series of papers on 'British Artists,' published in the 'Art Journal.' The few small pictures—figure subjects—exhibited by him showed signs of future ability, but he died of consumption, at an early age, in 1861.

MADOU, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Belgian lithographer and genre painter, born at Brussels in 1796. In early life he was engaged in commerce. Then, turning his attention to art, he became a pupil of Celestin François, and studied in the Brussels Academy. For several years he devoted himself chiefly to lithography, and illustrated many works in that fashion. Among these are: 'Un voyage pittoresque dans les Pays-Bas' (1821-8); 'Costumes Belges' (1830); 'Costumes de l'armée Belge'; 'Physionomie de la société en Europe' (1837); 'Scenes de la vie des Peintres de l'École Flamande' (1840). After 1840, however, he chiefly devoted himself to genre painting, in which he achieved a high reputation. For several years he taught in the Belgian military school. He died in 1877. Several of his chief works are in the museums of Brussels and Antwerp.

MADRAZO, José, a Spanish portrait and historical painter, born at Santander in 1781. He was a pupil of Gregorio Ferro, but following Charles IV. into France, he received lessons from David, and afterwards went to Rome. He returned to Spain in 1819, and established a National School of Painting. He was Director of the Academy and Museum at Madrid. He died in 1859. His chief works are:

Christ before Annas.
Death of Viriathus.
Portrait of Ferdinand VII.
Sacred and Profane Love.

MAELLA, MARIANO SALVADOR, a Spanish historical, landscape, and marine painter, born at Valencia in 1739. He studied painting under Gonzalez and sculpture under Castro. He became Director of the Academy of S. Fernando and first painter to the king. He died at Madrid in 1819. Among his pictures are:

" " The Ascension.
" " The Last Supper.

MAENNL. See MANNL.

MAES, AART VAN, ARNOULT, painter and engraver, was born at Gouda about 1620. He was a pupil of Teniers. He travelled through Italy and France, and died in his own country when still young. He painted chiefly village festivals and peasant scenes.

MAES, DIRK, painter and engraver, was born at Haarlem in 1656. He was a pupil successively of Mommers, Berghem, and Hugtenburg, but worked in the style of the last. He painted hunting and battle scenes, excelling chiefly in his horses. He came to England, where he painted the 'Battle of the Boyne,' and met with some success. His death took place in 1717.

MAES, GODEFROY, a Flemish painter, born at Antwerp in 1649. He was a pupil of his father, Godefroy Maes, who died in 1679, and of Pieter van Lint. In 1682 he was appointed Director of the Antwerp Academy. The 'Four Quarters of the World,' four designs for tapestry, 'The Martyrdom of St. Luke and St. George,' an 'Assumption,' and a 'Fishmarket,' at Venice, are his best known works. He died about 1710.

MAES, JAN, the elder, born at Alkmaar in 1631. He was a genre painter, but seems to have been an amateur. He entered the Guild of St. Luke in 1658. He painted in the style of Nicolas Maes, but with far inferior talent. He died in 1693.

MAES, JAN, the younger, was born at Haarlem in 1655. He was a son of Pieter Maes, and probably a pupil of Dirk Maes. He excelled in the painting of horses, battles, and encampments. He died in 1690.

MAES, JAN BAPTIST, a Flemish historical, portrait, and genre painter, born at Ghent in 1794. He was the son and pupil of Maes-Canini, with whom he is sometimes confounded. He completed his studies in Italy, where he stayed from 1821 to 1826. Amongst his pictures are:

Amsterdam. Museum. The Good Samaritan.
Ghent. Academy. Holy Family.
Hamburg. Museum. Roman Fruit-seller.
Munich. New Pinakothek. Roman Peasant praying.
Rotterdam. Museum. Apollo and the Muses.

MAES, (or MAAS,) NICOLAAS, one of the best of the Dutch genre painters, was born at Dordrecht in 1632. He studied under Rembrandt in Amsterdam, and in his earlier pictures he followed his master somewhat closely. About 1665 he left Rembrandt's studio and removed to Antwerp, where he lived until 1678. In that year he returned to Amsterdam, where he died in 1693. This is all we know of his life. The change in the style of his later pictures is so remarkable that it has been suggested that they are by another painter of the same name, a notion that receives some support from the fact that the signatures upon them are ornamented with flourishes which never appear on his earlier and far better works. It is possible that the Maes who returned to Amsterdam to die in 1693 was the son of Rembrandt's pupil. Certainly no other example of so radical a change in a master's style, both of conception and of execution, can be pointed to. Maes' early pictures are extremely rare. Probably more than two-thirds of them are in England. The National Gallery possesses at least three of the very highest quality. The following are his chief works:

Amsterdam. Ryks Mus. Old Woman spinning.
" " Another Version of the same subject.
" " Girl at a Window.
" Six Collection. The Inquisitive Servant.
Berlin. Museum. A Philosopher.
Brussels. Royal Museum. An old Woman reading.
Dresden. Gallery. Two Women in a Kitchen.
London. Apsley House. Selling Milk.
" " The Listening Girl.
" Bridgewater Ho. A Girl threading her Needle.
" Buckingham Pal. The Listening Girl.
" National Gallery. The Cradle.
" " The Dutch House-wife.
" " The Idle Servant.
" " Portrait of a Girl (237; ascribed to Rembrandt).

MAES-CANNINI, JAN BAPTIST LODEWYK, a Flemish historical painter, born at Ghent in 1794. He was a Professor in the Academy of Ghent. He died at Rome in 1856. The Ghent Museum possesses his chief works; they are of no great merit.

MAESTRO GIORGIO, IL (or EL MAESTRO JORGE). See INGLES.

MAFFEI, FRANCESCO, a painter and engraver, was a native of Vicenza, and at first a scholar of Peranda, though he afterwards became a follower of the style of Paolo Veronese. He died at Padua in 1660. His picture of St. Anna, in the church of San Michele at Vicenza, and other works by him in the public palace, exhibit a poetical fancy, and in colour are quite worthy of the Venetian school. It is to be regretted that he adopted a hasty and slight mode of execution, as many of his pictures have already become nearly obliterated. Of his large 'Paradise,' in the church of San Francesco at Padua, scarcely a trace remains. He engraved his own picture of 'The Death of St. Francis'; his 'Trials of Job' was engraved by P. Monaco.

MAGADAN Y GAMARRA, JUAN CIRILO, was a miniaturist of some merit, and first secretary to the Royal Academy of St. Ferdinand. He published in 1743 a little book on his art, called the 'Amateur's Precious Torch,' and wrote some notes on the various styles of painting, which were published two years after his death. Neither of these works, according to Cean Bermudez, possesses much practical utility or literary merit. Their author died in 1752.

MAGANZA, ALESSANDRO, the son of G. B. Maganza the elder, was born at Vicenza in 1556. After receiving some instruction from his father, he became a scholar of Giovanni Antonio Fasolo, and studied the works of Paolo Veronese and Zelotti. His principal works are the 'Adoration of the Magi,' in the church of San Domenico at Vicenza; and the 'Martyrdom of St. Giustina,' in San Pietro. He died in 1630 at Vicenza, of grief for the loss of his two sons, GIROLAMO and MARCANTONIO, and of his grand-children, the sons of Giovanni Maganza the younger, all of whom died of the plague in the same year (1630).

MAGANZA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, the elder, was born at Vicenza in 1509, and was the head of a family of artists, who did credit to their native town. He was brought up in the school of Titian, whose style he followed with some success; but he was more distinguished as a painter of portraits than of historical subjects. He was one of the reputable poets of the day, and published several works under the name of 'Magagno.' He died in 1589.

MAGANZA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, the younger, the son and scholar of Alessandro Maganza, was born at Vicenza in 1577. He painted history in the style of his father, to whom he showed himself little inferior in his picture of St. Benedetto, in the church of Santa Giustina at Padua. He assisted Alessandro in many of his principal works at Vicenza, where he died of the plague in 1617.

MAGATTA, IL. See SIMONETTI, DOM.

MAGATTI, PIETRO ANTONIO, a painter of Vaccalo, born in 1687, studied at Bologna under Dal Sole, and painted several pictures for the churches in Padua. He died at Varese in 1768.

MAGDALENEN-SMITZ. See SMTZ.

MAGES, JOSEPH, was born at Imst, in Tyrol, in 1728; he studied the art of painting at his native place, and at Innsbruck, Vienna, Stuttgart, and lastly at Augsburg, under G. Rotpletz. He was an excellent painter of history, both in oil and fresco, and was principally employed at Stuttgart, Colmar, and Strasburg. He died in 1769. His two chief productions are at Augsburg, and consist of a 'St. Mary of Egypt,' in the Salvatorkirche, and a 'History of St. Augustin,' on the ceiling of the church of the Holy Cross.

MAGGI, GIOVANNI, was born at Rome about 1566, and died about 1620. He painted landscapes and architectural views, but is more known as an engraver than as a painter. In 1618 he published a set of plates of the principal fountains in Rome, engraved in conjunction with Domenico Parasachi. He had undertaken to engrave the plan of Rome, on a very large scale, with all the principal buildings; but from the want of encouragement he was not able to carry his object into execution. We have by him the following prints:

A Landscape with Ruins and a Waterfall, with figures; J. Maius in. et fec. 1595.

Figura della Vita humana; Joh. Maius fec. 1600.

The Portrait of a Cardinal; life-size.

MAGIMEL, ALBERT, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1799. He was a pupil of Regnault and Hersent, and afterwards of Ingres. He executed some paintings in a chapel in St. Eustache, Paris. He died in 1877.

MAGIOLLI. See MAGLIOLI.

MAGISTRIS, SIMONE DE, was a native of Caldarola, in the Papal States, and flourished towards the close of the 16th century. He distinguished himself as a painter and sculptor. He has left a picture in the principal church of Orsino, representing 'St. Philip and St. James,' painted in 1585; and at a more advanced period of his life produced some works at Ascoli, particularly a 'Madonna del Rosario,' in San Domenico.

MAGLIAR, ANDREA, an Italian engraver, was born at Naples about the year 1692. He engraved some plates after Francesco Solimena.

MAGLIAR, GIUSEPPE, was the son of Andrea Magliar, by whom he was instructed in engraving. He gave unusual promise of ability, but died very young. He engraved a plate representing 'Christ appearing to St. William,' after Solimena.

MAGLIOLI, GIOVANNI ANDREA, (MAGIOLLI, MAJOLUS, or MALIOLUS,) worked at Rome from 1580 to 1610, and engraved a series of excellent plates in which marine gods and monsters were introduced.

MAGNANI, CRISTOFORO, was born at Pizzighetone, a castle in the vicinity of Cremona, and was a scholar of Bernardino Campi. He flourished about the year 1580, and painted history and portraits. He is said to have possessed so retentive a memory, that he could draw a most correct likeness of any person he had once seen. He painted some considerable works in fresco, in conjunction with Cavaliere Malosso and Mainardi, and at Placentia there is a 'St. James and St. John' by him.

MAGNASCO, ALESSANDRO, called IL LISSANDRINO, was born at Genoa in 1681, and was the son of Stefano Magnasco. He studied at Milan under Filippo Abbiati, whose style he imitated, though he painted on a smaller scale and different subjects. These were public processions, military exercises, and bambocciate. He is styled by Lanzi the 'Michelagnolo delle Battaglie' of the Genoe-e school. There are several of his pictures in the Pitti Palace at Florence, where he resided some time, being patronized by the Grand Duke Giovanni Gastone. He died in 1747.

MAGNASCO, STEFANO, was born at Genoa about 1635. He was a pupil of Valerio Castello. He spent five years at Rome, after which he returned to his own country, and was employed in the painting of altar-pieces. His death is stated by biographers to have occurred in 1665, but it must have taken place much later in the century.

MAGNUS, EDUARD, portrait and genre painter, was born at Berlin in 1799. After spending some time in the study of medicine, architecture, and philosophy, he at last devoted himself to painting, and entered the studio of Schlesinger. He exhibited for the first time in 1826, after which he travelled in France, Italy, Spain, and England. In 1837 he became a member, and in 1844 a professor, of the Berlin Academy. He obtained much recognition from the State, and died at Berlin in 1872. Among his best pictures we may mention:

- A portrait of Jenny Lind.
- A portrait group of the Royal Family of Prussia.
- A portrait of Mendelssohn.
- And two genre pictures in the Berlin National Gallery.

MAHUE, GUILLAUME, was born at Brussels in 1517, and died at the same city in 1569. He was a portrait painter of great repute in his time; but his pictures are rare, and we have no particulars of his life.

MAILLE-SAINT-PRIX, LOUIS-ANTOINE, was born in Paris in 1796, and instructed by Bidault, Hersent, and Picot. He was an excellent painter of landscapes, and several wall-paintings by him are in the church of Etiolles. Among his best works may be mentioned:

- A View of the Pont de Breuil.
- The Ruins of St. Jean de l'Île.
- The Valley of Corbeil.
- The Interior of a House at Damascus.
- A Cataract on the Nile.

MAILLET, JOSEPH, engraver, was a native of France, and worked in Paris in the last quarter of the 18th century. He engraved several plates which showed great promise, but died young, in 1788.

MAINARDI, ANDREA, called IL CHIAVEGHINO, was a native of Cremona, and flourished from 1590 till 1613. He was brought up in the school of Bernardino Campi, and was one of his ablest disciples. In conjunction with his nephew, MARC ANTONIO MAINARDI, he executed several considerable works at Cremona. One of his best pictures is the 'Marriage of St. Anna,' in the church of the Eremitani.

MAINARDI, LATTANZIO, called 'LATTANZIO OF BOLOGNA,' an Italian painter, born at Bologna, who flourished in the latter part of the 16th century. He was a pupil of the Carracci, but afterwards went to Rome, where he was employed by Pope Sixtus V.

in the decoration of several churches. He lived too fast, and died at Viterbo at the age of twenty-seven.

MAINARDI, SEBASTIANO DI BARTOLO, was born at San Gimignano in the 15th century, and, according to Pecori, died about 1515. He was the pupil, favourite assistant, and brother-in-law of Domenico Ghirlandaio. He painted the fresco of 'St. Thomas receiving the Girdle of the Virgin,' in the Baroncelli Chapel at Santa Croce, Florence; and a life-sized fresco, 'Virgin and Child in glory,' in a tabernacle in the Via San Giovanni, at Gimignano. MAIR, ALEXANDER, (or MAYR,) a German engraver on wood and on copper, was born at Augsburg, probably about 1559. He was living up to 1620. We have by this artist some book-plates and frontispieces, executed with the graver in a masterly style. He engraved the frontispiece to Velsler's 'Dissertation on the Antiquities of Augsburg,' published in 1596; and that of the 'Uranometria,' by John Bayer, dated 1603. He usually marked his plates with his name or initials, or with a monogram. Among them there are:

COPPER-PLATES.

MAIR, NICOLAUS ALEXANDER, an old German painter and engraver, who was working from 1492 to 1514, was a native of Landshut, probably the town so named in Lower Bavaria. From the likeness in his style of engraving to that of Martin Schongauer it has been conjectured that he was taught by the latter, but others believe Wohlgenuth to have been his master. He is said to have been the inventor of the process of engraving known as chiaroscuro. Among others we have the following prints by him, signed with his name or a monogram:

- David and Goliath.
- The Nativity.
- Christ Bearing the Cross.

MAJOLI, CLEMENTE, (or MAJOLA,) was born at Ferrara about the year 1625, and studied at Rome under Pietro da Cortona. He was a reputable painter of history, and some of his pictures in the churches of Rome and Ferrara, especially the latter, are meritorious productions. In the church of San Paolo, at Ferrara, is a picture of 'St. Maria Maddalena de' Pazzi'; and in San Giuseppe, 'St. Niccolò da Tolentino, supported by an Angel.'

MAJOLUS. See MAGLIOLI.

MAJOR, ISAAC, a German painter and engraver, was born at Frankfort about the year 1576. Early in his life he went to Prague, where he became a scholar of Rolandt Savery, at that time painter to Rodolph II. He was also instructed by Giles Sadeler, in whose style he engraved several plates. Major died in poverty at Vienna in 1630. We have by this artist the following:

A set of six Landscapes, Views in Bohemia; after P. Stephani.

A set of nine romantic Views, signed: Isaac Major fec. A very large Landscape, with the figure of St. Jerome; after Rolandt Savery. Isaac Major scul. Vienna. 1622.

MAJOR, THOMAS, an eminent English engraver, was born in 1720. He resided some years of the early part of his life in Paris, where he was thrown into prison by the Government in reprisals for the imprisonment of French soldiers taken at Culloden. He there engraved several plates after Berchem, Wouwerman, &c. On his return to England he distinguished himself by a variety of plates from portraits, landscapes, and other subjects, executed in a neat, firm style. He was for forty years seal engraver to the king, and in 1770 received from the Royal Academy the honour of being elected first associate engraver. In 1768 he published a set of twenty-four prints, entitled 'The Ruins of Pœstum, otherwise Posidonia, in Magna Græcia,' after the designs of J. B. Borra. He died in Covent Garden in 1799. On some of his prints after Berchem and Arnold Maas he has put an anagram of his name, Jorma, or Jor sculp. The following are his principal plates:

At seventeen he established himself in Providence as a portrait painter. In 1796 he went to Boston, and afterwards to New York, Philadelphia, and Charleston. In 1801 he came to England, and was urged by West to remain, but returned to Charleston in the same year. There he painted miniatures, but his health giving way, he abandoned his profession and went to Savannah, where he died in 1807.

MALCOLM, JAMES PELLER, an English topographical draughtsman and engraver, born at Philadelphia in 1767. He came to England about 1788, and studied in the schools of the Academy. He also received instruction from Benjamin West and Wright of Derby. Not succeeding with the brush, he turned to engraving. He worked for the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' and had much employment on topographical subjects. He died in London in 1815. Specimens of his work are to be found in Nichols' 'History of Leicestershire'; 'Excursions through Kent'; 'History of Caricaturing' (1808); 'Anecdotes of the Manners and Customs of London in the 18th century' (1808-11); Granger's 'Biographical History of England.'

From 1838 to 1842 he travelled in Italy and the East. On his return he settled at Brussels, but in 1852 became Director of the Academy at Bruges. After a life of much success, he died at Brussels in 1867. Perhaps his most important picture is 'Charles V. in his cell.'

MALI, HUBERTUS, born at Mauren, Würtemberg, in 1818. He was an elder brother of Christian Friedrich Mali (a living artist), and studied painting under P. F. Peters the elder, at Nymwegen; subsequently he worked at Hoheneck, near Ludwigsburg. His landscapes are poetic in conception and crisply painted. He was drowned while bathing near Altenaer, in 1839. His works are mostly at Mannheim and Stuttgart.

MALI, JOHANN, a landscape painter, and second brother of Christian Friedrich Mali, was born at Broekhuizen in 1828, and instructed by P. F. Peters the younger, at Stuttgart. MALINCONICO, ANDREA, was born at Naples about the year 1600, and was one of the ablest scholars of Cavaliere Massimo Stanzioni. Of his works in fresco little is known, but the churches at Naples possess several of his oil paintings; of these the most esteemed are the 'Four Evangelists' and the 'Doctors of the Church.' Andrea's son, NICOLA, was a good painter of flowers and fruit.

MALLEIN, G., (or MALLEYN,) was born at Dordrecht in 1753. He settled at Rotterdam, and was chiefly employed as a decorator. He died in 1816.

MALLERY, KAREL VAN, a Flemish designer and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1576. Judging from his style, it is probable that he formed his manner from the prints of the Wierixes, or that he was instructed by them. His work with the graver is very highly finished, though his drawing is not always correct. He must have been extremely laborious, as his prints are very numerous. The Abbé de Marolles possessed three hundred and forty-two prints by him. The following are his principal prints:

The Infant Jesus, with two Angels, in a landscape;
C. de Mallery fec.

The Adoration of the Magi.

MALLERY, PHILIP VAN, was born at Antwerp about 1600. He was an engraver, and worked in the style of the Wierixes. If not a son of Karel van Mallery, he was at least his pupil. He worked chiefly at Prague, and there engraved the portrait of Archbishop Johann Gohelius. Several small historical subjects, published about 1650, are also by him. The engravings of his work, 'Typus Mundi' (Antwerpise, 1627), are signed with his name or monogram.

MALLET, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French historical and still-life painter, was born at Grasse in 1759. He was a pupil of Simon Julien at Toulon, and afterwards of Prud'hon and Mérimée. Among his pictures are the 'Education of Henri IV.,' and 'Nature and Honour.'

MALLIUS, LUCIUS, one of the best painters of the Roman Empire, who flourished in the time of Macrobius, A.D. 395.

MALO, VINCENT, (or VINCENZIO,) was born at Cambray about the year 1625. He was at first a pupil of Rubens. After the death of that master he became a scholar of David Teniers the elder, who had been brought up in the same academy. He afterwards went to Italy, where he passed the remainder of his life, and distinguished himself as a painter of battles and landscapes; he also executed some altar-pieces for the churches at Genoa. He died at Rome before the year 1656.

MALOGAVAZZO, CORIOLANO, born at Cremona about the year 1555, was a disciple of Bernardino Campi, whom he assisted in some of his great works in the church of San Gismondo. He is better known as the coadjutor of that artist than by any original productions of his own. His principal work is his picture in the church of San Silvestro, at Cremona, representing the 'Virgin and Child, with St. Francis and St. Ignatius,' which, according to Lanzi, is supposed to have been designed by Bernardino.

MALOMBRA, PIETRO, was born at Venice in 1556, and studied the works of Salviati and Palma. He has left four excellent pictures of the miracles wrought by St. Francis de Paula, in the church dedicated to that saint at Venice. He is still better in his historical subjects of an easel size, and painted with great success architectural views of the principal places in Venice, enriched with groups of numerous figures. He was also a distinguished portrait painter. He died at Venice in 1618.

MALOSSO, IL. See TROTTI.

MALPE JEAN, painter, was born at Ghent in 1764. He studied in the Academy of his native town, and then spent some time in Paris. He afterwards returned to Ghent, and devoted himself to portrait painting in miniature. He died in 1818.

MALPIEDI, DOMENICO, an Italian painter, and pupil of Barocci, was born at S. Ginesio. He flourished from 1590 to 1605, and executed several pictures for the churches in the neighbourhood of his birthplace. One of these, the 'Martyrdom of St. Ginesio and St. Eleuthera,' shows that he kept pretty close to the style of his master.

MALPIEDI, FRANCESCO, a brother of Domenico M., and also a pupil of Barocci.

MALTESE, FRANCESCO, called after his birthplace, Malta, was a painter of still-life, who especially excelled in his rendering of carpets and musical instruments. Two of his pictures are in the Gallery at Munich, and some are to be met with in England. He lived about 1670, or later, but no particulars of his life have been recorded.

MALTON, JAMES, an English topographical draughtsman in the second half of the 18th century. He died in Marylebone in 1803. The South Kensington Museum has a drawing by him of 'Capel Street, Dublin.' He published 'Picturesque Views of the City of Dublin' (1791-5); 'Essay on British Cottage Architecture' (1798); 'The Young Painter's Maulstick' (1800); 'Designs for Rural Retreats' (1801).

MALTON, THOMAS, topographical draughtsman, was born in 1726. At one time he kept an upholsterer's shop in the Strand. In 1749 he was in Dublin, driven there, it is said, by money difficulties into which he had drifted in London. He resided there many years, making a scanty living as a teacher of perspective. He was an early exhibitor at the Royal Academy, and in 1775 we find him back in London, where he advertises a course of lectures on perspective. He died at Dublin, 18th February, 1801. His drawings are what were known as 'tinted drawings,' begun in Indian ink. So far as they can be tested they are very accurate. The South Kensington Museum possesses four of them.

MALTON, THOMAS, architectural draughtsman, was a son of the above. He was born in 1748. In 1774 he received a premium from the Society of Arts, and in 1782 the gold medal of the Royal Academy for a design for a theatre. He entered the office of Gandon, where he remained for three years, being then dismissed for irregularity. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1774 to 1802. He also produced some engravings in aqua-tint from the chief buildings of London. He died in Long Acre, 7th March, 1804.

MALTON, WILLIAM, another son of Thomas Malton, senior, did some work as an architectural draughtsman.

MALWEL, JEAN, (MALOÛEL, or MALUEL,) who was born in the latter half of the 14th century, is recorded as 'painter and valet-de-chambre' to Philip the Hardy and to Jean Sans Peur, Dukes of Burgundy, from 1397 to 1415. He worked for the now destroyed Chartreuse of Dijon, and in 1415 he painted a portrait of Jean Sans Peur, which was carried by special messenger to John II. of Portugal. It is believed that none of his works have survived.

MAN, CORN. DE (OR MAAN). See DE MAN.

MANAIGO, SILVESTRO, was born at Venice about the year 1670, and was a scholar of Gregorio Lazzarini. His compositions evince both taste and ability; but he worked for money only, and became negligent and a mannerist. His most creditable picture is 'Christ driving the Money-changers from the Temple,' in the church of San Felice, at Venice.

MANASAR, DANIEL, a German engraver, who resided at Augsburg early in the 17th century. He chiefly engraved architectural plates, which are carried out entirely with the burin, in a neat but stiff style. Conjointly with Wolfgang Kilian, he engraved the plates for a work entitled 'Basilicæ SS. Udalrici et afræ Augustæ Vindelicorum Historiæ,' published at Augsburg in 1626. His prints are usually marked D. M. F.

MANBY, THOMAS, an English landscape painter, who practised in the second half of the 17th century. He spent much time in Italy, whence he brought back a collection of pictures. He died in London about 1691.

MANCHE, EDOUARD, a Flemish genre and historical painter, born at Brussels in 1819. He died in Paris in 1861. One of his chief works is a 'Descent from the Cross.'

MANCHELLI, MICHELE, was born at Genoa in 1550, according to Domenici. He studied at Naples, under Marco di Pino, and acquired some reputation as an historical painter. One of his best works is a picture in the church of Sant' Agnello at Naples, representing the 'Virgin and Infant, with St. John, Mary Magdalene, and St. Lucia'; it was painted in 1586.

MANCHINO DAI PAESI, IL. See DAL SOLE, ANT'.

MANCINI, BARTOLOMMEO, a follower of Carlo Dolce, of whom little is known.

MANCINI, DOMENICO, a Venetian artist living in the early part of the 16th century, of whose life or death no details are known. He is the author of the centre panel in an altar-piece now in the sacristy of the cathedral of Lendinara, representing a 'Virgin and Child enthroned, with an Angel playing a viol.' It is signed and dated 1511.

MANCINI, FRANCESCO, (or MACINI,) was born at St. Angiolo in Vado in 1705, and was a pupil of Carlo Cignani. He went to Rome, and there painted the 'Miracle of St. Peter,' his chief performance; it is now in the Palazzo di Monte Cavallo, and a mosaic fills its place in St. Peter's. Mancini became a member of the Academy of St. Luke, and died in 1758.

MANCIOL. See LECKERBETJEN.

MANDEL, JOHANN AUGUST EDUARD, engraver, was born in 1810, at Berlin. He was a pupil of Buckhorn, and worked in pure line. In 1837 he became fellow of the Berlin Academy, and in 1842, after a visit to Paris, was appointed Professor of Engraving. He was a frequent exhibitor at the Salon, where he obtained all the regulation honours. His last important work was a plate from the 'Madonna di San Sisto,' published after his death, which took place in 1882. Among his best works we may name:

Charles I.; after Vandyck.

Titian's portrait of himself.

Christ weeping over Jerusalem; after Scheffer.

Ecce Homo; after Guido.

Bindo Altoviti; after Raphael.

Madonna della Seggiola; after the same.

Frederick the Great; after Stock.

Frederick William IV.; after Otto.

MANDER, KAREL VAN, the elder, a well-known painter and writer on art, was born at Meulebeke, in Flanders, in 1548. He was of a noble family, and received an education suited to his rank. At an early age he discovered a lively genius for poetry and the belles-lettres, and a decided disposition for painting. To cultivate the latter, on finishing his literary pursuits, he was placed under the tuition of Lucas de Heere, a painter and poet of Ghent, with whom he studied some time, and about 1569 became a disciple of Pieter Vlerick, an historical painter of some eminence at Courtrai. He had acquired considerable reputation by some pictures he had painted for the churches in Flanders, when he determined in 1573 to visit Italy, and passed three years in Rome, where he was assiduously employed in drawing from the remains of antiquity. He formed an intimate acquaintance with Bartholomew Spranger, and in conjunction with that artist, was employed for some of the public places and private collections at Rome. He accompanied his friend Spranger to Vienna, where he met with flattering encouragement, and received an invitation to enter the service of the Emperor; but his attachment to his native country prevented him from accepting this mark of distinction. About 1578 he returned to Flanders, whence after many vicissitudes he made his way northwards to Haarlem, and finally to Amsterdam, where he ended his days. At Haarlem Van Mander formed an intimacy with Cornelis Cornelisz and Hendrik Goltzius, and in conjunction with the latter he established an academy, which had numerous scholars. But our chief debt to Van Mander is for his account of the Italian and Flenish schools from 1366 to 1604. In his hours of leisure he also wrote verses. He translated the 'Iliad' of Homer; the 'Georgics' and the 'Bucolics' of Virgil; and the 'Metamorphoses' of Ovid. He finished his 'Lives of the Painters' at Zevenbergen, between Haarlem and Alkmaar, where he remained for a year. Van Mander's final migration to Amsterdam took place in 1604. There he fell sick; and although he endeavoured to vanquish his pain by his courage, he was obliged to send for a doctor. From that moment his situation became perilous; for he found "it was two against one," says Michiels. The man of skill expedited the business by a debilitating regimen, and the patient died of weakness (1606). He was crowned with laurel in his coffin; three hundred friends and amateurs followed his body to the grave; a multitude of panegyrists feelingly deplored his loss; and his celebrity still lives in his book. His pictures, which are rare, are poor enough.

MANDER, KAREL VAN, the younger, a painter, was a son of Karel van Mander the elder, and was born at Courtrai about 1579. He was a scholar in his father's studio at Haarlem, where he painted portraits and historical subjects. He was afterwards attached to the tapestry works of Spiering at Delft, from whence he was sent for in 1606 to execute some hangings for Christian IV., King of Denmark. He died in Holland in 1623.

MANDER, KAREL VAN, was the son of Karel van Mander the younger. On his father's death he went with his mother to Copenhagen, where he was well received by the king. He studied, it is believed, in Italy, and was afterwards appointed painter to the Danish court. In 1635 he visited Amsterdam, and there painted the portrait of the poet Vondel. Of his paintings there are at Copenhagen, 'The Tartar Ambassador at Copenhagen in 1655,' 'The Remorse of St. Peter,' portraits of Admiral Giedde, and others. Van Mander died at Delft in 1672.

MANDIJJN, JAN, (MANDIN, MADIJJN, or MADIN,) was born at Haarlem in 1500. He painted configurations, wild and rocky landscapes, and diableries, in the style of Jerom Bos. His chief residence was at Antwerp, and there he died in 1560.

MANENTI, VINCENZIO, was born at Canimorto, in the province of Sabina, in 1600. He was the son of ASCANIO MANENTI, an obscure artist, by whom he was instructed in the first principles of design. He afterwards studied at Rome, under Giuseppe Cesari and Domenichino. There are several of his pictures in the churches of his province; and Lanzi speaks favourably of his 'St. Stefano,' in the cathedral at Tivoli, and of his 'St. Saverio,' in the Jesuit's church. He died in 1674.

MANES, ANTON, was born at Prague in 1784. He was a pupil of Karl Postels, and painted landscapes in the style of Ruysdael. In 1836 he was appointed teacher at the Academy. He died in 1843.

MANES, GUIDO, born at Prague in 1829, was a son of Anton Manes, and painted battle scenes. He died in 1880.

MANES, JOSEPH, was born at Prague in 1821. He was a son of Anton Manes, and received his first instruction from his father. He painted portraits and historical scenes, and died in 1871.

MANES, WENZEL, brother of Anton Manes, was born at Prague in 1796. He studied at the Academy, and devoted himself to landscape and portrait painting, though we find some altar-pieces from his hand. He died in 1858.

MANET, EDOUARD, painter, was born in Paris in 1832. His first master was Thomas Couture, in whose studio he spent some six years. After leaving Couture he travelled in America, England, the Netherlands, Germany, Italy, and Spain, and after his return to Paris retained for a time a manner he had caught from Velazquez. In 1860 he exhibited his 'Buveur d'Absinthe,' in which the influence of Couture is strong, and shortly afterwards his 'Enfant à l'Épée,' which is very like a Velazquez. Towards 1863 Manet became the chief of the famous 'École des Batignolles,' to whom Degas, Claude Monet, Guillemet, Fantin-Latour, Cisley, Pissarro, and others belonged. Thenceforward his art became and was known as 'impressionism.' In 1863 he exhibited, at the first Salon des Refusées, his 'Déjeuner sur l'Herbe,' and in 1864, at the official show, his 'Olympia,' which raised a storm and failed to win acceptance even from many who were prepared to go a long way with him. From that time onward the Salon was more often barred against him than not until the last few years of his life, when his pictures were well lung. Manet was decorated with the Legion of Honour during the administration of M. Antonin Proust, who had been his friend for a quarter of a century. He exhibited at the Salon for the last time in 1883, and died the same year. Among his best pictures we may name:

L'Enfant à l'Épée.
Christ mocked by the Soldiers.
Le Déjeuner sur l'Herbe.
Olympia.
Le Bon Bock.
Dans la Serre.
La Toilette.
Portrait of M. Antonin Proust.
Portrait of Rochefort.
Portrait of Zola.

W. A.

MANETTI, DOMENICO, was born at Siena in 1609, and was probably a relation of Rutilio Manetti. He painted chiefly for the churches of Siena, but also produced historical subjects of an easel size. Lanzi particularly mentions one in the Casa Magnoni, representing the 'Baptism of Constantine.' He died in 1663.

MANETTI, RUTILIO, was born at Siena in 1571, and was a scholar of Francesco Vanni. He was not faithful, however, to the style of that master, but sought to imitate the vigour of Caravaggio. His pictures at Siena are remarkable for the loaded shadows characteristic of the tenebrosi. He was well versed in architecture. There are several of his pictures at the Certosa in Florence, and in the churches at Pisa; a 'Repose of the Holy Family,' in S. Pietro di Castelvecchio, at Siena, is particularly admirable. He died in 1639. He signed his works R. M. J.; and Rut. Man. Pin. His portrait in the Gallery at Florence is engraved by Payzi.

MANFREDI, BARTOLOMMEO, was born at Ustiano, near Mantua, about 1572. Although Manfredi was a scholar of Niccolò Circignano, he might be styled another Michel-Agnolo da Caravaggio, if his works were not distinguished by a better choice of forms and a more dignified taste in design. He painted few pictures for the churches; his favourite subjects were banditti, assemblies of gamblers, and armed soldiers, which he represented with an appropriate ferocity of character, and an extraordinary effect of light and shadow. The works of Manfredi are rarely to be met with, as he died young in 1605, and of the few pictures he painted some are attributed to Caravaggio, others to Valentin. One representing 'Christ driving the Traders from the Temple' was engraved by J. B. Haussard. Among those known are also the following:

Augsburg.	Gallery.	A Company drinking and playing.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	The Denial of Peter.

MANGINI, PROSPER, a little-known painter of the 17th century. He was a pupil of Agostino Metelli, and painted similar subjects.

MANGLARD, ADRIEN, a French painter and engraver, was born at Lyons in 1695. At an early period of his life he went to Rome, where he met with considerable encouragement, and painted several landscapes and sea-pieces for the Villa Albani, and for the Colonna and Rospigliosi Palaces. He became a member of the Academy in Paris in 1736, and subsequently of that of St. Luke, at Rome, where he died in 1760. Joseph Vernet was his scholar. Among his pictures are:

Paris.	Louvre.	A Shipwreck.
Rome.	Pal. Ruspoli.	Several Paintings.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Agitated Sea at Sunrise.

He engraved forty-four plates, representing similar subjects to those of his paintings. The best is 'The Widow of Sarepta.'

MANGOKI, ADAM DE, (MANYOCKY,) was a German portrait painter, born at Szokolva, in Hungary, in 1674. He was a pupil of Scheitz, and lived at Dresden, where many of his works still exist. Among his best pictures we may name:

- Portrait of Count Promnitz.
- Portrait of François Rakocsy.
- Portrait of Augustus the Strong.
- Portrait of Count Bielinsky.

MANINI, GAETANO, was born at Milan about the year 1730. He painted history in the gaudy and frivolous style of the modern Italian school, and came to England a little before 1775, in which year he was an exhibitor with the Chartered Society of Artists. He died between the years 1780 and 1790.

MANINI, GIACOMO ANTONIO, (OR MANNINI.) a painter and engraver of perspective and architectural ornaments, was born at Bologna in 1646, and died in the same city in 1732. He was a disciple of André Monticelli and Domenico Santi. There is a series of sixteen perspective views by him, entitled 'Vedute deliziose'; they are etched with great taste.

MANISFELS, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, an historical painter, was born at Tournai in 1742. He was a pupil of N. Brebar. He died in 1807.

MANNI, GIANNICOLA DI PAOLO, was born at Città della Pieve in the latter half of the 15th century, and died in 1544. He was a fellow-pupil under Perugino of Raphael and Lo Spagna. He died in 1544. There is an 'Annunciation' by him in the National Gallery, and the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge has a 'Madonna' ascribed to him. Elsewhere the following are preserved:

MANNIN, JAMES, (OR MANNING,) a flower painter, born in France, who settled in Dublin, where in 1746 he became a master in the Dublin Society's School, and taught several good artists. He died in 1779.

MANNIN, Mrs., was a miniature painter. She exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1829 to 1832 as Miss MILLINGTON, and from 1833 to 1859 under her married name. Among her best works are the portraits of Sir Henry Havelock, Sir Felix and Lady Agar, and the children of Sir George Brooke-Pechell. She died at Brighton in 1864.

MANNINI, JACOPO ANTONIO, painter and engraver, was born at Bologna in 1646. He and Giambattista Dragli were intrusted by the Duke of Parma with the decoration of a chapel at Colorno. From 1706 to 1708 Mannini was at Modena, where he painted the dome of the church of St. Barnabas. He engraved several plates. He died in 1732.

MANNL, JACOB, (OR MÄNNL,) a German engraver in mezzotint, was born at Vienna about the year 1695. In 1720 Christopher Lauch, the inspector of the Imperial Gallery, which had been augmented by the collection of the Archduke Leopold, undertook to have the whole of the pictures engraved, and Jacob Mannl was employed for that purpose. The death of the archduke and of the artist prevented the completion of the project, and only thirty-one plates were finished. These prints are now become extremely rare. They are as follows:

His winter-pieces are in the manner of Klaas Molenaer. Examples are to be found at Vienna, Florence, Rotterdam, Dresden, and Gotha. They are generally of small dimensions, and signed with his name, and some are dated as late as 1677.

MANSFELD, JOHANN ERNST, (OR MANSFELD), a German engraver, was born at Prague in 1738. When he was sixteen years of age he visited Vienna, where he learned design in the Imperial Academy, and was instructed in the art of engraving by Jakob Schmutzer, the court painter. MANSKIRCH, BERNARD GOTTFRIED, was born at Bonn in 1736. He distinguished himself as a painter of landscapes; but in the latter part of his life he became loose and negligent in execution. He settled at Cologne in the year 1790, and died there in 1817.

MANSKIRCH, FRANZ JOSEPH, was born in 1770, and was instructed by his father, Bernard Gottfried Manskirch. He distinguished himself as a painter of landscapes and as an engraver. About 1796 he resided for a time in England, but was back in Germany by about 1805. He was at Bonn in 1823, and afterwards at Frankfort, Berlin, and Dantzic, where he died in 1827. He was commissioned by the Empress Josephine to paint a series of scenes on the Rhine. He etched one landscape.

MANSON, GEORGE, was born at Edinburgh in 1850. After he left school he worked for a few months with a punch-cutter, making the dies for type, and after that for five years at wood-engraving, producing water-colour pictures in his leisure hours. His style of engraving was direct and artistic, resembling much that of the Bewicks. When he was twenty-one he set up as a professional painter, though greatly hampered by failing health. In 1871 he visited London, and in 1873 the continent for the first time. On his return to Edinburgh symptoms of lung disease manifested themselves, and early in 1874 he was ordered to the South, to the Channel Islands. He went to Sark, and a year later paid a second visit to Paris, where he began to etch. On his return to England he settled for a time at Shirley, near Croydon; but his health was finally broken, and removing to Lympstone in Devonshire, he died there early in 1876. His pictures are distinguished by fine colour, great delicacy of handling, and a tenderness of sentiment scarcely surpassed by any other painter of his school. Among the best are:

Milking Time.

The Cottage Door.

What is it?

Waiting for the Boats.

Companions.

Girl with a Donkey.

The Gipsy Camp.

The Haunted Well.

MANSUETI, GIOVANNI, was a Venetian painter living in the latter part of the 15th and beginning of the 16th century, and a contemporary and friend of Lazzaro Bastiani. The registers of San Giovanni, Venice, tell us that he was lame; and by his own authority we learn that he was a pupil of Giovanni Bellini, and a believer in a miracle of the Cross, which took place in 1474, and forms the subject of one of his paintings now in the Academy of Venice. An early effort of Mansueti's is the 'Adoration of the Magi,' in the Communal Gallery of Padua. The Academy of Venice possesses also 'St. Mark curing Anianus the Cobbler'; 'St. Mark preaching to the Populace of Alexandria'; and a picture said to represent 'Antonio Riccio congratulated by his friends on his escape from Shipwreck.' In the Brera, Milan, is a 'St. Mark baptizing Anianus,' formerly in the school of San Marco, Venice. In later years were painted a 'Pietà' and a 'St. Jerome,' now in the Locchi Carrara Gallery, Bergamo. The galleries of Berlin, Venice, and Verona also possess paintings by this master, and a picture signed Joannes de Mansuetis pinsit is in the possession of Mr. J. G. Crace. Of the dates of his birth and death no exact information can be had.

MANTEGNA, ANDREA, was born in the neighbourhood of Padua in 1431. He was the son of humble parents, since, according to Vasari, he herded cattle in his youth, and was adopted by Francesco Squarcione as his foster-child in 1441, in which year he was entered on the register of Paduan artists. From Squarcione he learned the first rudiments of his art, although it is evident from his paintings that he had studied the masterpieces of Bellini, Donatello, and Lippi. Mantegna commenced to show his talents at a very early age. He painted a 'Virgin and Child' for the high altar of Santa Sofia, Padua, when only seventeen years old. His earliest known fresco is that of 'SS. Bernardino and Anthony supporting the Sacred Monogram,' above the high portal of Sant' Antonio of Padua. It was painted in 1452. The Brera, Milan, possesses an altar-piece with St. Luke and other Saints, which was painted in 1454 for Santa Giustina, and shows his earlier style as a worker in tempera. There is, too, in the Museum of Naples, a St. Eufemia, painted apparently from a marble statue, which bears the same date. According to Vasari, Andrea first commenced to work in the Eremitani Chapel, Padua, after 1448. It is believed that Mantegna finished the frescoes representing 'The Call of SS. James and John by Christ,' and 'St. James exorcising the Devils,' which Pizzo's sudden and violent death prevented his completing. Those entirely executed by Andrea are 'St. James baptizing Hermogenes'; 'St. James before Herod'; 'St. James, on his way to Martyrdom, blessing a Convert'; 'The Martyrdom of St. James'; 'The Martyrdom of St. Christopher'; and 'The Removal of the Body of St. Christopher.' These were executed in the years 1453-59. About this period Mantegna married Nicolosia, the daughter of Jacopo Bellini, which was probably one cause of the estrangement which had been gradually growing up between Squarcione and himself; for there had always existed a certain antagonistic rivalry between the schools of the Bellinis and of Squarcione. To these years may be referred the fine altar-piece (No. 274) in the National Gallery, which may be looked upon as an example of the purest art of Mantegna. By some connoisseurs it is placed as early as 1456. Attracted by the renown that Andrea was now gaining by his works, the Marquis Lodovico Gonzaga made liberal overtures to him at the close of 1456, and Andrea consented to go to Mantua as soon as he should have finished the commissions entrusted to him by the Protonotary of Verona and others. That dignitary had ordered an altar-piece for the church of San Zeno, to consist of a life-size 'Virgin and Child, attended by Angels, with eight Saints'; and a predella with three subjects, viz., 'The Agony in the Garden'; 'The Crucifixion'; and 'The Ascension.' This altar-piece was long in the church, but is now partly dispersed. The main picture is still in place in San Zeno, but the 'Crucifixion' is in the Louvre, and the remaining two panels in the Museum of Tours. In the year (1459) which saw the completion of this altar-piece, Andrea executed a subject for the Podestà of Padua, which Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcasselle believe to be the 'Agony in the Garden' now in the possession of Mr. Baring. In its background there is a view of Padua, with the city gate and the church of the Eremitani. It is probable that Mantegna entered the service of the Gonzagas about 1463, for in that year he was residing at Goito, where that family had a castle, and where he painted many pictures and frescoes, now either lost or dispersed. In the Uffizi there is a triptych that once belonged to a chapel of the Gonzagas; it represents the Adoration of the Magi, the Circumcision, and the Resurrection. To this same period belong the 'Virgin and Child'; 'The Presentation'; and a portrait of Matteo Bozzo, Abbot of Fiesole, all now in the Berlin Gallery; also the 'St. George in Armour,' in the Academy of Venice; and the 'St. Sebastian' at the Belvedere, Vienna. About 1468 Andrea settled down at Mantua with his family. The frescoes executed by him in the Castle of Mantua, in the rooms known as 'the Camera degli Sposi,' and 'the Schalcheria,' are still preserved. In the first-named are a series of episodes taken from the life of Lodovico, containing portraits of himself, his wife, and the different members of his family and household; the ceiling is decorated in monochrome with various mythological subjects, and eight medallions of the Roman Emperors; these frescoes are dated 1474. Those in the Schalcheria are of about ten years later, and chiefly consist of hunting scenes and portraits of the Emperors. Besides these works for his patron, these years saw the production of 'The Dead Christ wept over by the three Maries,' now in the Brera, Milan; and 'The Death of the Virgin' (painted about 1470), now in the Museum of Madrid. In 1476 Lodovico gave Mantegna a site for a villa, whereupon the artist began one of great beauty, both in design and decoration. It still remains, but its ornament has long since been destroyed. In the year 1478 the Marquis died, leaving his possessions to his son Federigo, who honourably fulfilled his father's engagements to the painter, and continued to protect him on his own behalf. In 1480 the artist declined to paint a portrait of the Duchess of Milan, the Marquis Federigo himself writing the letter of refusal. In 1483 Lorenzo de' Medici visited Mantegna's workshop, and expressed his admiration for all he saw there; and a year afterwards Giovanni della Rovere, Governor of Rome, wrote to the Bishop of Mantua, a brother of the Marquis, asking him to use his interest with Andrea to induce the painter to send him a picture. This was refused on the plea that Andrea had no time to spare, being hard pressed to finish a room the Marquis wished to occupy that summer. Before the summer was over, however, Federigo died, leaving his estates to his son, Francesco II., then a mere youth. Dreading lest he should not obtain from the new Marquis such favour and patronage as he had won from Lodovico and Federigo, Mantegna wrote letters to his former patrons and friends, among others to Lorenzo de' Medici, begging aid and assistance, and explaining his heavy losses and present necessities. Happily, however, for Mantegna, his position at the Mantuan Court was not permanently shaken, while orders from his ancient patrons helped to lift him out of difficulty. Among other commissions then received he executed one for a 'Madonna and Saints' for the Duchess of Ferrara. This picture Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcasse believe to be the 'Madonna and Child, with SS. Joseph, Anna, and John the Baptist,' formerly in the possession of Sir Charles Eastlake, and now in the Dresden Gallery. Signor Morelli places it, however, between 1497 and 1506. Between 1485 and 1492 Andrea painted the famous 'Triumphs of Cæsar,' now at Hampton Court. They were originally designed for the decoration of the theatre erected in the Castle of Mantua in 1501, when the Adelphi of Terence and the Comedies of Plautus were performed. These frescoes, nine in number, are now much injured. They belonged to Charles the First, and at the sale of his collection were bought in by Cromwell for £1000. In 1488 Mantegna was knighted and sent to Rome by the Marquis Francesco Gonzaga. Innocent VIII. desired him to decorate the Belvedere chapel, which he had just erected for his own private use in the Vatican. These decorations took the artist two years to complete. He afterwards painted a 'Madonna and Child' for Francesco de' Medici, which is now in the Uffizi; and the 'Man of Sorrows,' now at Copenhagen. In the summer of 1490 the painter returned to Mantua, and again worked on the 'Triumph of Cæsar,' which he finished between 1490-92. From this date his pictures begin to strongly betray the hands of assistants. Among these were his two sons, Francesco and Lodovico, and also, if we may trust Vasari, Francesco Bon-signori and Gian-Francesco Carotto. In 1495 Mantegna painted, by order of the Marquis Francesco, an altar-piece for the church of S. Maria della Vittoria, Mantua, which had been erected by the Marquis to commemorate the battle of Fornovo. This picture is now in the Louvre. It represents the Marquis, in full armour, kneeling at the feet of the Virgin and Child, who is attended by the archangels, and the saints Longinus, Andrew, John the Baptist, and Elizabeth. Andrea was also an engraver, and among other works, engraved his own 'Triumphs of Cæsar.' Impressions are now very scarce. In 1499 he furnished a design for a statue of Virgil, which was to have been placed in some public square in Mantua; the sketch is now in Paris. In his old age Mantegna again fell into difficulties, partly through his own indiscretion and extravagance, partly through the ungenerous treatment he met with from the Gonzaga family. His last strength was given to the elaboration of a 'Masque of Comus' for the Marchioness Isabella of Mantua, to whom he sold a portion of his collection of antiques. He died in the autumn of 1506, aged 75. Among his best works we may quote the following :

MANTEGNA, BERNARDINO, son and pupil of Andrea Mantegna, born in 1490, assisted his father, and at sixteen gained a certain reputation. FRANCESCO, another son, was working in 1494 for Francesco de Gonzago, and after his father's death he finished some of his pictures. It has sometimes been asserted, but on very slight grounds, that he was the first master of Correggio. Two small pictures in the National Gallery are ascribed with some probability to Francesco. He was still living in 1517. LODOVICO, the youngest son of Andrea Mantegna, died in 1509.

MANTEGNA, CARLO DEL, a pupil and relation of Mantegna, assisted his sons in finishing their father's pictures. In 1514 he had a school at Genoa.

MANTOVANO, ADAMO, DIANI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA. See SCULPTURE.

MANTOVANO, (or MANTUANO,) GIORGIO and TEODORO; see GHISI. ANDREA; see ANDREANI.

MANTOVANO, RINALDO, was born at Mantua, and was one of the more distinguished scholars of Giulio Romano. In the church of Sant' Agnese at Mantua is a fine picture by him of the 'Virgin and Infant, with SS. Agostino and Girolamo,' composed and designed with a grandeur so much beyond his age, that it gave rise to a suspicion that it was painted from a drawing by his instructor. Two pictures by him have long been in the National Gallery, where for many years they were ascribed to his master Giulio. Rinaldo died young.

MANTUANO, DIONISIO, born at Bologna about 1624, was a painter and architect. After having spent some time at Genoa, he was in 1656 employed at the theatre of the Buen Retiro, in Spain; after this he received the Order of Christ, and was appointed painter to the king. In conjunction with Vicente de Benavides he painted the front of the house of the Marquis de los Valbases, and with Ricci and Carreño worked in the cathedral at Toledo. Among his own compositions we may name especially the ceiling in the ladies' gallery in the Alcazar at Madrid. Dionisio died at Madrid in 1684.

MANUEL, HANS RUDOLPH, the son of Nicolaus Manuel, was born at Erlach in 1525, and studied painting at Basle, under Maximin, about 1544. Several good pictures by him, especially portraits, are to be met with at Berne. He also designed a considerable number of bird's-eye views of towns, and executed several woodcuts. Manuel died in 1572.

MANUEL, NICOLAUS, called DEUTSCH, a Swiss artist, born at Berne about 1484, was a painter, wood-engraver, poet, statesman, soldier, and reformer. It is most probable that he went to Venice in 1511 and studied under Titian. His chief work is the 'Dance of Death,' a series of frescoes for the Dominican convent at Berne, which was painted between 1514 and 1522. It exists now only in copies, which show it to have been entirely in the style of Holbein. Another excellent work, representing 'Solomon's Idolatry' (1518), has also come down to us in a copy. Manuel died at Berne in 1530 or 1531. He signed sometimes with his name, sometimes with the annexed monograms:

There are some woodcuts by him from his own designs, in a free, slight style.

MANUEL, POLEQUIN, or JOSSEQUIN, was a miniature painter, who flourished in the 15th century. In 1400 he was engaged by the Duke of Burgundy to make designs for a Bible. Nothing is known of his life, but he had a brother Nicolas, who helped him with his work.

MANWAIRING. Strutt mentions an artist of this name as the engraver of a portrait of the Rev. Mr. Madan about the year 1760.

MANZINI, GIUSTO DI ANDREA, was born in 1440. He was a Florentine, and painted by turns under Neri di Bicci, Fra Filippo, and Benozzo Gozzoli. In his own diary he tells us that, under Benozzo, he painted the saints at the sides of the window in the choir of S. Agostino, and the four apostles on the vaulting of the entrance. The former are obliterated but the apostles remain, and show that Giusto was far inferior to his master. Crowe and Cavalcaselle enumerate five pictures which they ascribe to him. He died in 1498.

MANZINI, RAIMONDO, a painter of Bologna, was born in 1668, and was probably first instructed by his father, CESARE MANZINI. At Bologna there is a collection of pictures of fishes, birds, and flowers by him. At one time of his life he was appointed ébéniste to the Margrave of Baden. The date of his death is unknown.

MANZONI, RUDOLPH, a fruit, flower, and miniature painter, was born at Castelfranco in 1675, and died in 1743.

MANZUOLI, TOMMASO D'ANTONIO, (called MASO DA SAN FRIANO,) was born at San Friano in 1536. He was first a disciple of Pierfrancesco di Jacopo di Sandro, and afterwards of Carlo da Loro. An admired work by him is a 'Visitation,' formerly in the church of San Pietro Maggiore at Florence; afterwards taken to Rome, and placed in the Gallery of the Vatican; it was painted when he was thirty years of age. There are other works by him in the church of the Santa Trinità, and in the Florentine Gallery. He died in 1575.

MARACCI. See MARRACCI.

MARATTI, CARLO, (or MARATTA,) an eminent painter, also an etcher, was born at Camurano, in the March of Ancona, in 1625. At eleven years of age he showed so strong a propensity for design that his parents sent him to Rome, where he entered the school of Andrea Sacchi, under whom he studied for several years, and was his most favoured disciple. On the recommendation of his instructor, he made the works of Guido Reni, the Carracci, and Raphael the chief objects of his study. He returned to his own country, and did not revisit Rome till 1650, when he went there in the train of Cardinal Albrizio, Governor of Ancona. He was much employed in painting Holy Families, pictures of the Virgin, and female saints, on which account the contemporary artists, particularly Salvator Rosa, supposing him incapable of higher or more arduous exertions, satirically styled him 'Carluccio delle Madonne.' To counteract the efforts of his enemies, Andrea Sacchi procured him the commission to paint a picture for the Baptistery of the Lateran, where he represented 'Constantine destroying the Idols,' a performance which silenced his calumniators, and was esteemed one of the ablest productions of the time. It procured him the patronage of Alexander VII., under whose protection, and that of his successors, he became the most popular artist at Rome. In 1704 he received the Order of Christ from Pope Clement XI. for cleaning Raphael's frescoes in the Vatican, and Louis XIV. appointed him court painter through admiration for his picture 'Daphne.' Maratti died at Rome in 1713. Among the best of his more accessible works are:

Brussels Museum: Apollo and Daphne.

Chiswick: Pope Clement XI.

Florence, Pitti Collection: St. Philip Neri.

Hampton Court: Virgin and St. Francis.

Louvre: Sleep of the Child Jesus.

„ Marriage of St. Catherine.

„ Portrait of Maria Maddalena Rospigliosi.

„ His own portrait.

National Gallery: Portrait of a Cardinal.

National Gallery of Ireland: Europa.

By Maratti we have several etchings executed with much freedom and spirit. Some of these are original, others after various Italian masters.

MARATTI, MARIA, daughter and pupil of Carlo Maratti. She married Giambattista Tappi, a poet, and abandoned painting for literature. Her portrait, painted by herself, is in the Corsini Palace at Rome.

MARCEL, N., was born at Frankfort in 1628, and was a scholar of Georg Vluegels, an indifferent painter of still life. Marcel greatly surpassed his master, and his pictures of flowers, fruit, shells, &c., are highly finished and good in colour. He died at Frankfort in 1683.

MARCEL, PROVENZALE, an Italian painter, was born at Cento in 1575. He was a pupil of Paolo Rosetti, and executed a 'Mater Dolorosa.' He died in 1639.

MARCELLIS, OTTO (or MARCELLUS). See SCHRIECK.

MARCENAY, ANTOINE DE GUY, a French engraver, was born at Arnay le Duc in 1724, and died in 1811. He was one of the most successful imitators of the style of Rembrandt, and has engraved several plates of portraits and other subjects in which the dry point is used with great dexterity. Among others, we have the following prints by him :

MARCH, ESTÉBAN, (or MARC,) was, according to Palomino, a native of Valencia, and a scholar of Pedro Orrente, under whom he became an eminent painter of battles. He adopted the Venetian style of painting, and became a kind of Quixote in his art. In order to rouse his imagination he would arm himself cap-à-pié, place lance in rest, and to the sound of drums and trumpets make a furious attack on the walls of his atelier. In the church of San Juan de Mercado, in Valencia, is an altar-piece of the 'Last Supper,' highly commended by his biographer, and for the Bueno Retiro he painted a large picture of the 'Marriage at Cana.' He died at Valencia in 1660, at an advanced age. His works are chiefly to be found at Valencia and Madrid.

MARCH, MIGUEL, (or MARC,) the son and scholar of Estéban March, was born at Valencia in 1633. He painted history and battles in the style of his father, but with much less ability. One of his best performances is the 'Death of St. Francis,' in the church of the Franciscans at Valencia. March died at Valencia in 1670.

MARCHAL, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, a French subject painter, born in Paris in 1825. He entered the École des Beaux Arts in 1843, and studied under Drolling and Dubois. His reputation was acquired by his pictures of Alsatian life and customs. He first exhibited at the Salon in 1852. He died by his own hand in Paris in 1877. Amongst his chief works are :

- Fête de la Mère. 1857.
- Wasted Labour. 1860. (Beziers Museum.)
- Interior of an Inn at Bouxwiller. 1861.
- The Servants' Fair, Bouxwiller. 1864. (Luxembourg Gallery, Paris.)
- Spring-time. 1866.
- Penelope. 1868.
- Alsace. 1873.
- The Return from the Masquerade.
- Phryne.

MARCHAND, GABRIEL, an engraver, was born in Paris about 1755. He was a pupil of E. Vozzard, and executed several works after Barbier, Schmutzer, and others.

MARCHAND, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, an engraver, son of Johann Jakob Marchand, a portrait painter, was born in 1679. He was a pupil of Preissle and Bernigeroth, and engraved some portraits and historical pictures. He died in 1711.

MARCHAND, PIERRE (or MARCHANT). Floren le Comte and Professor Christ mention an artis of this name, who lived about the year 1577, and engraved both on wood and on copper.

MARCHANT, J., engraved a portrait of Mrs Cibber, after Hudson, in 1749.

MARCHANT, JAN, an historical and still-life painter, was born at Antwerp in 1808. In 1835 he migrated to France, and became Professor of Drawing at the Cavalry School at Saumur. He died in 1864.

MARCHANT, PETRUS. A book of goldsmith's ornaments, executed with the graver, is signed Petrus Marchant fecit. 1623. Perhaps identical with Pierre Marchand (q. v.).

MARCHELLI, ROLANDO, an Italian painter, was born at Genoa in 1664. He was a pupil of Maratti, but abandoned painting for commerce and died in 1751.

MARCHESI, FRANCESCO and BERNARDINO. See DEI ZAGANELLI.

MARCHESI DA COTIGNOLA, GIROLAMO, flourished in the early part of the 16th century, and was probably a pupil of Zaganelli. The church of San Francesco, at San Marino, contains his two first pictures, both Madonnas with Saints and Angels. In Lord Ashburton's collection there is a 'Holy Conversation,' signed and dated 1513; and the Bologna and Berlin Galleries possess works by him dated from 1516 to 1526. Vasari asserts that he painted the portrait of Gaston de Foix when he lay wounded at Ravenna in 1512; he also says that during his latter years Marchesi went to Naples and then to Rome, where he painted the portrait of Paul III., and that he died there in his 64th year of a broken heart, through having been entrapped into marriage with a woman of ill fame. His will was made at Bologna in 1531 and can still be seen. The following are among his works :

MARCHESI, GIUSEPPE, called IL SANSONE, was born at Bologna in 1699, and was first a scholar of Marc Antonio Franceschini, but afterwards studied under Aureliano Milani. To the vigorous colour and fore-shortening of his first instructor, he united the correct design of Milani. He has left many works in the churches of Bologna. In San Pietro there is a 'St. Ambrose repulsing Theodosius.' His picture of the 'Birth of the Virgin,' in La Madonna di Galeria, and that of the 'Resurrection,' in Santa Croce, are painted in the style of Franceschini. One of his most esteemed works is the 'Martyrdom of St. Prisca,' in the cathedral of Rimini, on the conception of which the 'St. Agnes' of Domenichino seems to have had some influence. Marchesi died in 1771.

MARCHESINI, ALESSANDRO, according to Orlandi, was born at Verona in 1664, and received his first instruction in art from Biagio Falcieri. At the age of sixteen he was sent to Bologna, and placed under the tuition of Carlo Cignani. Under that master he became a reputable painter of history, and on his return to Verona was employed in San Biagio, La Madonna della Scala, and other public edifices. He resided some time at Venice, where he was chiefly occupied in painting easel pictures of historical and fabulous subjects. He died in 1733.

MARCHESINI, PIETRO, born at Pistoja in 1697, was a pupil of Gabbiani at Florence. He painted several pictures for the churches and palaces in Florence and Pistoja. He died in 1757.

MARCHETTI, DOMENICO, (or MARCHETTI,) an engraver, was born at Rome in 1780, and was still living in 1831. He worked in the manner of G. Volpato. Among his best productions are:

Dante and Beatrice; after Agricola.

Religion with the Cross; after Canova.

The Tomb of the three Stuarts; after the same.

MARCHETTI, MARCO, called MARCO DA FAENZA, flourished at Rome in the pontificate of Gregory XIII., who employed him in ornamenting the Loggie of the Vatican with arabesques, in which he sought to follow the style of Giovanni da Udine. He decorated twenty rooms in the ducal palace at Florence in the same fashion. His talents were not, however, confined to that branch of the art. He painted historical subjects, which were correctly and elegantly designed, with a more than usual mastery of the nude. Of this his 'Murder of the Innocents' in the Vatican is an example. In the church of the Trinità de' Monti he painted a series of pictures of the life of St. Francis di Paolo. He died in 1588.

MARCHI, DOMENICO, known as TEMPESTINO, also DOM. TEMPESTA, was, according to Lanzi, born at Florence in 1652, and was a scholar of Baldassare Franceschini. He painted portraits and landscapes, but distinguished himself more as an engraver than as a painter, and is said to have received instruction in that art from R. Nanteuil and Gerard Edelinck. Among other plates he engraved a set of portraits of the Electors Palatine. He was called 'Tempestino' from having been a pupil of Peter Molyn, who was named Tempesta. He was a great traveller, and there is much uncertainty in his history. The date of his death is variously given; some placing it in 1718, others in 1737. It may be, however, that there were two artists called Domenico Tempesta, and that the accounts of them have been blended.

MARCHI, GIUSEPPE FILIPPO LIBERATI, was born at Rome about 1735, and brought to England in 1752 by Sir Joshua Reynolds. By him he was much employed in preparing his palette, in painting draperies, and in 'forwarding' pictures. He attempted about 1770 to establish himself as an independent portrait painter, but after some brief experience both in London and in Wales, he was glad to return to his former employer. He died in London in 1808. He engraved several plates in mezzotint from portraits by Sir Joshua; among them we may name:

Lady Mulgrave, when Miss Cholmondeley.

Mrs. Crewe and Mrs. Bouverie.

Mrs. Oliver.

Dr. Goldsmith.

Mrs. Hartley, with her child.

MARCHIORETTO, PIETRO, painter and draughtsman, was born in the neighbourhood of Feltre in 1772. He owed his education in art to a Venetian noble, who placed him first with Lazzarini, and afterwards with Frans Cauzitsch. He afterwards settled down as a teacher at Verona, and was also employed in the chalcographic institute of Bisdolini. He painted a 'Holy Sepulchre' for the church at Brixen, and a number of north Italian landscapes for the Countess Kielmannsegg.

MARCHIS, ALESIO DE, was a Neapolitan, and was born at the beginning of the 18th century. He painted landscapes, sea-ports, and towns on fire, in which he followed the style of Salvator Rosa. His principal works are at Perugia and Urbino. Lanzi reports that, in order to imitate nature more exactly in his conflagrations, he set fire to a barn, for the purpose of study; the fact being discovered, he was sent to the galleys for some years, but was released from his punishment in the pontificate of Clement XI., who employed him in his palace at Urbino, which he decorated with several of his best works. One of his most celebrated pictures is the 'Burning of Troy,' in the Palazzo Semproni. He died about 1742.

MARCILLAT, GUILLAUME PIERRE DE, (called by others GUGLIELMO DA MARCIGIA, or GUILLAUME DE MARSEILLE,) who was chiefly a painter on glass, was born at St. Michel, near Verdun, or, according to others, at Marseilles, in 1475. He was instructed in the art by Claude ('Claudio Francese'), at Nevers, and there entered the order of the Dominicans. Subsequently the two went to Rome together, and painted in the Vatican and in Santa Maria del Popolo, but their works in the Vatican have disappeared. While in Rome Marcillat entered the order of the Benedictines, in 1509, and subsequently executed, from the designs of Claude, several works for Cardinal Passerini at Cortona, and others at Arezzo, Florence, Perugia, and Castiglione. He died at Arezzo in 1537.

MARCKE, JULIE ROBERT VAN, was born in 1801. She was the daughter of M. Robert, director of the Sevres factory, and married J. VAN MARCKE, a landscape painter and pupil of Watelet. She painted fruits and flowers. Her death took place in 1875. Her two sons have both reached fame as painters.

MARCO, CALABRESI. See CARDISCO.

MARCO DI ANTONIO. See PALMEZZANO.

MARCOLA, MARCO, an Italian historical painter, was born at Verona in 1728, and died in 1790. Nothing is known of him.

MARCOLINI, FRANCESCO, an Italian engraver on wood, was born at Forli about the year 1500. He was from 1530 to 1535 a printer at Venice, but after that he settled at Verona. In 1540 he published a book entitled 'Il Giardino de' Pensieri,' with woodcuts, executed by himself, after the designs of Giuseppe Porta.

MARCONI, Rocco, painter and engraver, was a native of Treviso, and flourished about the year 1505. He was probably a pupil of Giovanni Bellini. His chief performances are in the Academy at Venice. His picture in the church of San Niccolò, which is considered one of his earliest works, is dated in 1505. One of his best pictures is the 'Adulteress before Christ,' formerly in San Giorgio Maggiore, now in the Procuratie Nuove, at Venice. Another example of the same subject is in the Gallery at Berlin. Dresden, St. Petersburg, and Treviso also possess pictures by him. Marconi engraved some plates, MARCOVALDO, COPPO DI, was a contemporary of Andrea Tafi, and the author of a picture representing the 'Virgin enthroned,' in the convent church of the Servi at Siena, and dated 1261. He is also known to have executed between the years of 1265 and 1275 a number of wall paintings and a 'Madonna' in the cathedral at Pistoja. These have now all perished.

MARCUARD, ROBERT SAMUEL, an English designer and engraver, was born in 1751, and died about 1792. He was a pupil of Bartolozzi, whose manner he followed, and was considered one of the best scholars of that master. His engravings are chiefly after the works of contemporary painters, particularly Cipriani, Angelica Kauffmann, W. Hamilton, Hoppner, Flaxman (sculptor), Stothard, Peters, and Sir J. Reynolds.

MARCUCCI, AGOSTINO, was a native of Siena. He was educated at Bologna, and had the advantage of studying in the school of the Carracci, until Pietro Facini attempted the establishment of a rival academy, to which Marcucci attached himself. He painted some pictures for the churches at Bologna: among them 'The Death of the Virgin' in the Church of the Conception. Marcucci died early in the 17th century.

MARCUS, JACOB ERNST, was born on the island of St. Eustatius in 1774, and instructed in the rudiments of design by S. Goblé, and in engraving by Vinkeles, at Amsterdam. In 1798 he obtained the first prize at the school of design, and in conjunction with Fock founded a society of artists, 'Kunst zy ons Doel.' Though his landscape drawings were esteemed, he distinguished himself more as an engraver, and we have by him a series of one hundred plates, representing landscapes and portraits after the designs of Caspari. Marcus died at Amsterdam in 1826.

MARÉ, JEAN CHARLES, born at Berlin in 1772, was an engraver, and pupil of the Berlin Academy, of which he became a professor in 1813. He died in 1855. Besides several maps, he engraved some pictures, among others the 'Crowning of the Monument of Lysicrates at Athens,' after Matthäus Mauch.

MARÉ, RICHART DE LA. See DE LA MARE-RICHART.

MARÉCHAL, —, a painter, who died in 1803, is chiefly known by his paintings, on parchment, of Mammalia in the Paris Zoological Museum. Lallier and others have engraved after him.

MARÉCHAL, LAURENT CHARLES, was born at Metz in 1801. He studied under Regnault, and distinguished himself chiefly as a painter on glass. He died in 1877. He has left a few genre pieces in oil and pastel.

MARÉES. See DESMARÉES.

MAREL, or MARRELLUS, JACOB, painter of still life, was born at Frankfort about 1614. He is said to have been a pupil of Georg Flegel at Frankfort, and of J. D. de Heem at Utrecht. He was the first master of Abraham Mignon. His pictures are very rare, but one has recently been added to the Rijks Museum, Amsterdam, with the inscription Jacobus Marrellus fecit Utrecht, 1634. Marel died in Brussels about 1685.

MARESCALCO, IL. See BUONCONSIGLIO.

MARESCALCO, PIETRO, called LO SPADA, a native of Feltre, was a portrait and historical painter, and flourished about 1576. At Feltre there is a 'Madonna' by him; at Dresden a 'Salome bearing the head of John the Baptist,' and a 'Solomon and the Queen of Sheba.'

MARESCOTTI, BARTOLOMMEO, was a native of Bologna, and was brought up in the school of Guido Reni, of whose style he was an unsuccessful imitator. There are some of his works in the churches and public edifices at Bologna; in San Martino Maggiore, the 'Martyrdom of St. Barbara'; in San Stefano, the 'Crowning of the Virgin'; and 'St. Sigismondo condemned to death,' in the church dedicated to that saint. He died in 1630.

MARGARITONE DI MAGNANO, was born at Arezzo in 1216. He was painter, sculptor, and architect, and a man of note in his day. Influenced, however, by the fact that he was a fellow-townsmen, Vasari has spoken of him at greater length than the excellence of his works will justify. Of these the best is a 'Madonna with scenes from the lives of the Saints,' now in the National Gallery. Margaritone's chief work in sculpture is the monument to Gregory X. in Arezzo Cathedral. He died at Arezzo in 1293. The date of his death has sometimes been given as 1313, which would make him 97 years of age. This was a mistake arising apparently through the transposition of a c in the roman numeral. Margaritone's chief surviving works are:

Arezzo.	S. Francesco.	A Madonna.
"	"	Christ on the Cross (colossal).
Liverpool.	Institute.	Coronation of the Virgin.
London.	Nat. Gal.	Madonna, with scenes from the lives of the Saints.
Sargiano, near Arezzo.		A St. Francis.

The picture ascribed to him in the Guise collection at Christchurch, Oxford, is a Byzantine work of the 17th century.

MARGHINOTTI, GIOVANNI, was an Italian historical painter of some talent. He was painter to Charles Albert of Savoy, and died in 1865.

MARGHUCCI, GIACOMO, an engraver and print-seller of the 18th century. He has left some plates of antique busts and statues.

MARGUERITE, Archduchess of Austria, who was born at Brussels in 1480, painted a few portraits with some skill. She died in 1530.

MARI, ALESSANDRO, was born at Turin in 1650, and was first a scholar of Domenico Piola of Genoa, but afterwards went to Venice, where he studied some time under Cavaliere Liberi. He next visited Bologna, and passed some years in the school of Lorenzo Pasinelli, and on leaving that master, painted some pictures for Bolognese churches. His principal residence was at Milan for a time, where he gained considerable reputation by painting symbolical subjects, in imitation of the old masters. According to Lanzi he went to Spain, and died at Madrid in 1707.

MARIA, ERC. DI. See SAN GIOVANNI.

MARIA, FRANCESCO DI, was born at Naples in 1623, and became a disciple of Domenichino, when he resided in that city. Like his instructor, he studied the subjects he painted with the most profound attention; and, like him, patiently endured the taunts of his contemporaries for tardiness and irresolution. His historical works are not numerous. He excelled in portrait painting; and Lanzi reports, that a portrait by him being exhibited at Rome with one by Rubens, and another by Van Dyck, the preference was given by the judges, Niccolò Poussin, Pietro da Cortona, and Andrea Sacchi, to that of Maria. He died in 1690.

MARIANI, GIOVANNI MARIA, was a native of Ascoli, and flourished about the year 1655. He was a scholar of Domenico Fiasella at the time when Valerio Castelli was also under that master, and in conjunction with him distinguished himself by several works at Genoa, both in oil and in fresco. His picture in the oratory of San Jacopo, of the baptism of that saint, may be ranked with the best productions of his time. He passed some part of his life at Rome, and was received into the Academy there in 1650. He sometimes painted historical subjects of an easel size, and his works of this class are found in the collections at Genoa and Florence. One of the best is a 'Rape of the Sabines,' in the Florentine Gallery.

MARIENHOF, A., a Dutch painter, was born at Gorcum in 1650. It is not known by whom he was taught, but according to Descamps he passed the early part of his life in studying and copying the works of Rubens. He afterwards settled at Brussels, where he was much employed in painting small historical pictures in the manner of that master. He died young; Balkema says in 1712.

MARIESCHI, JACOPO, (or GIACOMO,) the son of Michele Marieschi, was born at Venice in 1711. After being instructed in design and perspective by his father, he became a scholar of Gasparo Diziani. He painted architectural subjects, and views of Venice, in which he imitated the style of Canaletto. The National Gallery of Ireland has two of his works, both views of Venice, which are there on deposit from the National Gallery of London. He died in 1794.

MARIESCHI, MICHELE, was a native of Venice. He excelled in painting architectural views and perspectives, and passed the first part of his life in Germany, where his works were much esteemed. On his return to Venice he painted the most remarkable views in that city, several of which, moreover, he has etched. He died in 1743.

MARIETTE, JEAN, an eminent French engraver and print-seller, was born in Paris in 1654. He was instructed in drawing by his brother-in-law, J. B. Corneille, with the intention of becoming a painter, but by the advice of Charles le Brun, he changed his pursuit, and devoted himself to engraving. He died in Paris in 1742. Several of his plates are from his own designs. He worked both with the point and the graver. We have a great number of plates by him, the greater part of which are frontispieces, vignettes, and other book ornaments. The following are esteemed his best prints:

The Descent from the Cross; after Le Brun.

The Angels ministering to Christ in the Desert; after the same.

St. Peter delivered from Prison; after Domenichino.

Moses saved from the Nile; after Poussin.

Joseph making himself known to his Brethren, after M. Corneille.

Christ curing the Paralytic; after the same.

St. Louis receiving the Communion; after J. B. Corneille.

St. Louis received into Heaven; after the same.

MARIETTE, PIERRE JEAN, was the son of Jean Mariette, from whom he inherited a very considerable property, and an extensive collection of prints, which, by continual additions, he rendered the most numerous and select of any private gathering in Europe. His immense collection was sold in Paris in 1775. For his amusement he etched a few landscapes, after Guercino; and some heads and studies, after the Carracci and Pierino del Vaga. He also brought out a 'Traité des Pierres gravées,' with 250 engravings of antique gems from his own hand, in 2 vols., folio. He died in Paris in 1774.

MARIGNY, MICHEL, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1797, and died there in 1829; he was a scholar of M. Lafont and the Baron Gros. He painted several pictures of large dimensions for churches at Paris and Rouen, and one of 'Moses, as the Law-giver,' for a council-chamber in the Louvre. His last production, a 'Wounded Soldier,' was exhibited at the Luxembourg in 1830.

MARILHAT, PROSPER, was born at Vertaison, in the south of France, in 1811, and entered the Atelier of Roqueplan at Paris in 1829. There he executed several landscapes in the classic manner. During 1831-33 he travelled in Greece, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt. There his natural bent was developed, and he studied nature long and conscientiously. His power was chiefly shown in his rendering of southern light. He attracted attention at once with his oriental subjects, but he improved steadily up to his last years. Marilhat died in Paris in 1847. His best pictures are:

Ruins of the Mosque of Sultan Hakim.

The Esbekieh Square, Cairo.

Caravans at Baalbec. 1840.

Syrian Arabs on the March.

A Souvenir of the Nile. *

MARILLIER, CLEMENT PIERRE, a French designer and engraver, was born at Dijon in 1740; and died on his own estate near Melun in 1808. He first studied painting under Hallé at Paris, but the cares of maintaining his family compelled him to illustrate books, and he made numerous drawings of subjects from the Bible, and for the works of Dorat, the Abbé Prevost, De Roucher, Amand Bacculard, Voltaire, and Sauvigny. He also engraved from his own designs the landscapes for 'Les Voyages en France, à Naples et en Grece,' and for various other works.

MARIN-LAVIGNE, LOUIS STANISLAS, a French painter and lithographer, born in Paris in 1797. He died in 1860. His lithographs form his best claim to be remembered. The best are:

Battle of Jemappes; after Horace Vernet.

Camille Desmoulins; after the same.

Mater Dolorosa; after Murillo.

MARINARI, ONORIO, a painter and engraver, was born at Florence in 1627. He was first instructed by his father, PIETRO MARINARI, and afterwards by his cousin, Carlo Dolci, and for some time followed the finished and laboured manner of the latter, but afterwards adopted a larger style. His principal works are in the church of Santa Maria Maggiore, and in that of San Simone at Florence. He died in 1715. Among his paintings are:

A series of portraits of painters (Florence).

St. Jerome.

St. Mark healing the sick.

The Hours preceding the chariot of the Sun.

He engraved 19 plates for a mathematical treatise, written by himself.

MARINAS, DE LAS (or DELLE MARINE). See DE LAS MARINAS.

MARINI, ANTONIO, was born at Prato in 1788. He was a pupil of the Academy at Florence. In 1821 he introduced the art of lithography into Italy, and twenty years later was admitted a member of the Florence Academy. He restored several of the frescoes of Giotto, Gaddi, and Gozzoli, and painted various Madonnas in the style of the old masters. He died at Florence in 1861.

MARINI, BENEDETTO, was a native of Urbino, and flourished about the year 1625. According to Lanzi, he was one of the most distinguished scholars of Claudio Ridolfi, and on leaving that master resided some years at Piacenza, where he painted several altar-pieces and other works, in which he united the Lombard with the Venetian style. The most celebrated of his performances is his picture of the 'Multiplication of the Loaves,' in the refectory of the Conventuali, painted in 1625; an immense composition, painted in oil, and arranged with surprising ingenuity and variety.

MARINKELLE, JOSEPH, (called MARINKELTJE,) a Dutch painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1732. His nickname was an allusion to his small stature. He was a miniature and portrait painter, and in practice for a long time at Amsterdam. He died in 1775, and his death has been ascribed partly to chagrin caused by a lampoon from the pen of an authoress whom he had failed to flatter in painting her portrait.

MARINUS, IGNATIUS CORNELIS, a Flemish engraver, was probably born about 1587. The date of his death is uncertain. His principal residence was at Antwerp, where he executed several plates, in a neat but singular style. They are worked entirely with the graver, with very delicate strokes crossing each other, and filled up with long dots. The best are named in the following list:

The Flight into Egypt; a night-piece; after Rubens.
St. Ignatius curing the Diseased; after the same.
St. Francis Xavier resuscitating a Dead Person; after the same.
The Adoration of the Shepherds; after Jordaens.
Christ before the High-priest Caiaphas; after the same.
The Martyrdom of St. Apollonia; after the same.
A Concert of Village Children; after C. Saffleven. 1633.

He also engraved some plates, after M. A. Caravaggio, Van Dyck, and others.

MARINUS DE ZEEUW, or VAN ROMERSWALE, a Dutch painter of the sixteenth century. The dates on his pictures range from 1521 to 1560, and he seems to have been alive as late as 1567. There can be little doubt that he is the Marino di Siressa of Vasari, and the Marino di Sirissea of Guicciardini, for Ziricksee is a town in the district of Schonwen, part of the province of Zeeland. The name de Zeeuw, which means simply the sea-lander, is not to be found on a signed picture by Marinus, but only this latter appellation, combined sometimes with Romerswalen or Roymerswalen. Hence we may fairly conclude that Marinus is nothing more than a Latinized form of de Zeeuw, while Romerswalen, or van Romerswale, may be a family name. Nothing as yet has been recovered as to the facts of this painter's life. His pictures, however, show that he must have been a disciple, if not a direct pupil, of Jan or Quentin Matsys. One of the best of them is a 'Money-changers,' in the National Gallery, where it used to be ascribed to Quentin Matsys.

MARIO DI FIORI. See NUZZI.

MARIOTTI, —, who was a native of Italy, and probably a painter, is known only by a slight, spirited etching of a frontispiece to a collection of altar-pieces, published at Rome by Giacomo Rossi. It is after a design by Ciro Ferri.

MARIOTTI, CARLO SPIRIDONE, an historical painter, and native of Perugia, is supposed to have been a pupil of Subleyras. He died in 1775.

MARISSAL, PHILIP, a portrait and still-life painter, was born at Ghent in 1698. He was a pupil of Leplat. There are several large decorative pictures by him at Ghent. He died in 1770.

MARKO, KARL, was born at Leutzschau, in Hungary, in 1790. He studied in Vienna, Rome, Pisa, and Florence. His pictures are mostly landscapes with figures, in the style of Gaspar Poussin. He died in 1860.

MARKOS, GIORGIOS, a native of Argos, who, early in the last century, painted a number of frescoes in the church of the 'Panagia-Phaneromena,' in the island of Salamis. In this work he was helped by his pupils. It was finished in 1735.

MARLET, JEAN HENRI, a French poetical, historical, and portrait painter, was born at Autun in 1771, and was a pupil at the Academy at Dijon, and afterwards of the Baron Regnault. His compositions are numerous, embracing a great variety of subjects from poetry, history, anecdote, and fancy. He has published some works in lithography, among them 'Les Tableaux de Paris.' He died in 1846.

MARLIE, RENÉE ELIZABETH. See LEPICIE.

MARLOW, M., an obscure English engraver, lived towards the end of the 17th century. He appears to have been employed only by the booksellers; in that capacity he engraved a portrait of John Mayne, Arithmetician, prefixed to his 'Clavis Commercialis'; dated 1674.

MARLOW, WILLIAM, an English landscape painter and engraver, was born at Southwark in 1740. He was a scholar of Scott the marine painter, and also studied in the St. Martin's Lane Academy. He joined the Incorporated Society of Artists, and from 1762 repeatedly exhibited at Spring Gardens. From 1788, however, he was a regular exhibitor at the Academy until 1796, and again for the last time in 1807, when his picture was 'Twickenham Ferry by Moonlight.' In his earlier career he had painted views of several English noblemen's seats, and from 1765 to 1768 he travelled in France and Italy. On returning home he settled first in Leicester Square, and afterwards at Twickenham, where he died in good circumstances in 1813. He painted scenes on the lower banks of the Thames, and also in the neighbourhood of Richmond and Twickenham. He also painted and etched some Italian views: to these he has put his name, with the addition of F. S. A. Some of his pictures are in the Foundling Hospital; several have been engraved, including views of Westminster and Blackfriars Bridges. The South Kensington Museum possesses one landscape by him.

MARMIETTI, LODOVICO, an Italian engraver, was born at Parma in the 15th century. He was a pupil of his father, Francesco Marmiotti. He went to Rome in the train of Cardinal Salviati, and there made a certain reputation.

MARMION, SIR EDMUND, was an English designer and engraver, of the time of the two Charleses, who has left a few etchings of domestic subjects of ladies and gentlemen, from his own designs. His prints bear some resemblance to those of Gaywood, though inferior. There is a portrait of George Tooke, of Popes, by him, which is scarce; also some portraits in the style of Van Dyck.

MARMION, SIMON, a painter of Valenciennes, flourished from about 1425 to about 1489. According to contemporary chroniclers, "was worthy of great admiration" in his time. He was at once painter and illuminator, and we know that he painted a number of miniatures for a missal of Philip the Good. The first mention of him occurs in 1453, in which year he painted a picture for the town-hall of Amiens. In 1460 he appears among the founders of the Guild of Valenciennes, and in 1468 he was raised, at Tournai, to the rank of master. No picture can with certainty be assigned to him, but in all likelihood he painted the altar screen formerly in the Abbey of St. Omer, which is now in the king's palace at the Hague.

MAROCCHINI, GIOVANNA CORTESI, was born at Florence in 1670. She was first a pupil of Iieven Melus, and afterwards of Pietro Dandini and Ippolito Galantini. Although she chiefly excelled in portraits in miniature, she practised both in oil and in crayons. The grand duchess of Tuscany was her patroness. She died in 1736.

MARMOLEJO. See VILLEGAS MARMOLEJO.

MARNEFFE, FRANÇOIS DE, an obscure Flemish landscape painter, born in 1793, and died in 1877.

MAROLI, DOMENICO, was born at Messina in 1612. He was a scholar of Antonio Ricci, called Barbulunga; and on leaving the school of that master visited Venice, where he studied with profit the works of the great Venetian masters. Among his pictures are the 'Martyrdom of St. Placido,' in San Paolo; and the 'Nativity,' in the Chiesa della Grotta, at Messina. While at Venice, he painted with success some pastoral subjects, in the style of Giacomo Bassano. Maroli fell a victim to the revolution which took place in Sicily in 1674.

MARON, ANTON VON, was an Austrian portrait painter, born at Vienna in 1733. He was a pupil of Mengs, whose sister Teresa he married. He painted a portrait of the Emperor Joseph II. His death took place at Rome in 1808.

MARON, TERESA VON, a sister of Rafael Mengs, was born at Aussig in Bohemia about 1733. She studied painting under her father, and in 1752 went to Rome with her brother Rafael. She married Anton von Maron, and attained to some excellence as a miniaturist.

MARONE, JACOPO, was a native of Alessandria, and flourished from about 1451 to 1484. He spent most of his life in and around Genoa, where he painted several altar-pieces for the churches. In the church of San Jacopo at Savona is a picture of the 'Nativity' by him, painted in distemper, in a careful, high-finished style. In Santa Brigida, at Genoa, are two pictures by this master, dated 1481 and 1484.

MAROT, DANIEL, the son of Jean Marot, was born in Paris about 1650-55, and distinguished himself as an architect, designer, and engraver. He is usually styled architect to William III., King of England. He engraved several plates in the style of his father, which were published at Paris, with some of those of Jean Marot, entitled 'Receuil des planches des Sieurs Marot, père et fils.' He also engraved a set of architectural plates, which were published at Amsterdam in 1712; and the statues and vases in the palace at Loo. He was living in 1718. We have also the following prints by him:

The great Fair at the Hague, with the Burghers under arms, saluting the Prince and Princess of Orange; in two sheets.

The great Fair at Amsterdam, with the Citizens under arms.

The Festival of the Birth-day of the Prince of Orange. 1686.

MAROT, FRANÇOIS, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1667. He was the best scholar of Charles de la Fosse, and painted history in the style of that master. One of his most esteemed works is a picture in the church of Notre Dame, representing 'Christ appearing to the Three Marys'; another is the 'Martyrdom of St. Lawrence,' in a church at Rotterdam. He died in 1719. Moreau, Chereau, and others have engraved after his works.

We have by him several architectural plates, plans and elevations of the most remarkable edifices in Paris and its neighbourhood. In conjunction with S. de la Boissière, Is. Silvestre, I. de Paultre, Seb. le Clerc, F. Chaveau, and other artists, he executed several of the plates for the cabinet of the King of France. The following are his principal prints:

Plans and Views of the Château de Vincennes; three plates.

Plau and Elevation of the Château de Madrid; two plates.

MARQUEZ, ESTÉBAN, a Spanish historical painter, was born in Estremadura about the middle of the 17th century, and was a scholar of his uncle Fernando Marquez de Joya, who followed the school of Murillo. At the death of his uncle Marquez went as a workman to one of the establishments where they manufactured pictures for exportation to America; but not having had sufficient practice and experience in this sort of work, he became the butt of his fellow labourers, and was obliged to quit Seville and return to his native place. After a while he returned to Seville, and having by close application acquired a tolerable facility in imitating the style of Murillo, he surpassed all those who had before made him the object of their mockery. His works are nearly all in Seville. He died at Seville in 1720.

MARQUEZ DE JOYA, FERNANDO, uncle of Esteban Marquez, was a painter of portraits, among which he in 1649 produced that of Cardinal Spinola, which is engraved by Van der Gouwen. He followed the manner of Murillo; and was a frequenter of the Academy of Seville from 1668 to 1672, when he died.

MARQUIS, —, an English portrait painter, who painted small portraits in oil in the reign of James I.

MARRACCI, GIOVANNI, was born at Lucca in 1637, and was first a scholar of Pietro Paolini. When he was fourteen years of age he went to Rome, where he had the advantage of being received into the school of Pietro da Cortona, under whom he studied some time; and before he was twenty-five had distinguished himself as an historical painter. On the death of his father he returned to Lucca, where he painted several pictures for the fraternity of San Lorenzo, and the Collegiate de San Michele. In the cathedral of Sant' Ignazio, at San Giovanni, he painted some considerable frescoes. His brother HIPPOLYTE worked with him. He died in 1704.

The coming Footstep. 1847. (South Kensington Museum.)

The Parting Day.

Sad News from the Seat of War.

MARSHALL, WILLIAM, was an English engraver, who probably began to practise the art early in the reign of James I.; his works are dated from 1591 to 1649. He engraved chiefly for the booksellers, by whom he was employed upwards of forty years. He worked entirely with the graver, in a stiff style, without taste. His best prints are his portraits, of which he engraved a great number, mostly from his own designs. Although indifferently executed, they are interesting to the collector, on account of the personages they represent. He also engraved several frontispieces and other book ornaments. His portraits include the following:

Sir Thomas More.

Desiderius Erasmus.

William Cecil, Lord Burleigh.

MARTEAU, GILES DE, 'the elder,' was born at Liege in 1722. He went to Paris when he was young, and there acquired considerable reputation as one of the most successful revivers of the dot style of engraving. He was elected into the Academy at Paris in 1764. He engraved several plates of academical figures, after the designs of some of the most eminent French artists. We have the following prints by him:

There is a water-colour view, 'Near Dover,' by him, dated 1803, in the South Kensington Museum. R. H. MARTEN painted in water-colour about the same time.

MARTENASIE, PIETER, a Flemish engraver, was a native of Antwerp, but was instructed in engraving in Paris by J. P. le Bas. We have the following prints by him:

The Watering-place; after Berchem.
The Father of a Family; after Greuze.
The Rape of the Sabines; after Rubens.

MARTIN, DAVID, an English portrait painter and mezzotint engraver, was born at Anstruther, in Fife, in 1736. He was a pupil of Allan Ramsay, and when quite young accompanied him to Rome; after which he studied at the St. Martin's Lane Academy. He joined the Incorporated Society of Artists, and in 1775 settled in Edinburgh, and was made chief painter to the Prince of Wales for Scotland. But before long he married a wealthy lady in London, and removed to Soho, where he lived till her death, when he returned to Edinburgh, and died there in 1798. Among his painted portraits were Dr. Franklin and Lord Mansfield, both of which were afterwards engraved in mezzotint, the former at least by himself. He engraved several portraits, among which are:

L. F. Roubillac, Sculptor; after A. Carpentiers. 1765.
Lady F. Manners, daughter of the Marquis of Granby. 1772.
J. J. Rousseau; after Ramsay.

MARTIN, ELIAS, a painter and engraver, was born in Sweden in 1739. In 1769 he came to England, and became an associate of the Royal Academy. He painted portraits, landscapes, and genre pieces in oil and water-colour. One of his best performances is a view of Westminster Bridge, with the arrival of the King of Denmark. Several of his portraits have been engraved in aquatint. As an engraver we have by him six plates, called 'A Daughter's Education from Cradle to Marriage.' On his return to Stockholm in 1750 he became court painter, and published with his brother, JOHANN FRIEDRICH MARTIN, a series of views of Stockholm. He died in 1818.

MARTIN, F. B., an English engraver in the latter part of the 18th century. Amongst his plates are:

Maria Cosway; after R. Cosway.
Sopbia Western; after Hoppner.

MARTIN, GUILLAUME, a French painter, born at Montpellier in 1737. He was a pupil of Cipriani, but was more engaged in selling pictures than in painting them. He died in Paris in 1801.

MARTIN, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, engraver, was a brother of Elias Martin, A.R.A. He was born at Stockholm in 1745, and died there in 1808. In 1790 he visited England. He published a series of views of Stockholm in conjunction with his brother Elias.

MARTIN, JEAN BAPTISTE, called 'Martin the elder,' was born in Paris in 1659, and was a pupil of La Hire. He also studied fortification, and was draughtsman to Vauban. He succeeded Van der Meulen as director of the Gobelins, and accompanied the king and the dauphin in all their campaigns. He has been called 'Martin des Batailles,' from the contests and victories with which he decorated Versailles and the Invalides. His death occurred in Paris in 1735. Of his works we may note:

Luneville. Gallery. A series of twenty pictures from the career of Charles V. (Painted for the Duke of Lorraine.)

Paris. Louvre. Siege of Fribourg.
Versailles. Forty-five battles (by or after him).

MARTIN, JOHN, an English landscape and historical painter, born at Haydon, near Hexham, in 1789. He originally worked at heraldic coach-painting, and at the decoration of china. He came to London in 1806, and diligently occupied his spare time in studying for the higher branches of art. Marrying at the early age of 19, he was compelled to exert himself strenuously, and in 1812 he produced his first picture, 'Sadak in search of the Waters of Oblivion.' Owing to the manner in which one of his pictures was hung at the Academy in 1814, he commenced a life-long but not very bitter struggle with that body. He did not discontinue to send his pictures to its yearly show. In 1817 and 1821 his contributions obtained prizes at the British Institution, and his art became widely popular. He was instrumental in the foundation of the Society of British Artists, where his works appeared for some years. He did not confine himself to the oil medium; he painted many sketches in water-colours, and he furnished illustrations for editions of the Bible and of 'Paradise Lost.' Many of his own pictures were engraved by himself. He died at Douglas, in the Isle of Man (whither he had gone for the benefit of his health after a paralytic stroke), in 1854. Among his chief works are:

Joshua Commanding the Sun to stand still. 1816.

MARTIN, LEON, a French still-life and historical painter, born in Paris in 1837, and died in 1861.

MARTIN, PIERRE DENIS, 'the younger,' who painted during the early part of the 18th century, is said to have been a cousin of Jean Baptiste Martin. He was also a pupil of Van der Meulen. He painted a number of views of royal residences, which are now at Versailles. One is signed, 'P. D. Martin, peintre ordinaire et pensionnaire du Roi, 1722'; on another is added 'pensionnaire de sa Majesté Czarienne.' Like his cousin, he was employed at the Gobelins. He painted a few hunting and battle pieces. The Louvre possesses a 'Louis XV. hunting,' by him.

MARTIN, PIERRE EDMOND, painter, was born at La Rochelle in 1783. He was instructed in Paris by Vincent, but afterwards went to Italy. On his return he painted portraits, but was principally engaged in the restoration of pictures.

MARTIN, WILLIAM, an English historical painter, who practised in the end of the 18th and the 19th centuries. He was a pupil of Cipriani, and in 1766 obtained a gold palette from the Society of Arts. His works were exhibited at the Academy from 1775 to 1816. He was patronized by George III., to whom he was appointed history painter, and for whom he executed some decorative works at Windsor Castle. There are at St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, by him :

Edward and Eleanor.
Execution of Lady Jane Grey.

MARTINEAU, ROBERT BRAITHWAITE, painter, was born in London in 1826. At first intended for a lawyer, he forsook that profession for art and became a student at the Royal Academy. Afterwards he was for a time a pupil of Mr. Holman Hunt. He began to exhibit in 1852, and in 1862 attracted great attention by a picture called 'The Last Day in the Old Home.' His later works were inferior to this. He died somewhat suddenly in 1869.

MARTINELLI, GIOVANNI, painter, flourished at Florence about the middle of the 17th century. In the Florentine Gallery there is a fine picture by him of the 'Feast of Belshazzar'; and in Santa Lucia de' Bardi, the 'Guardian Angel'; but his best work is a 'Miracle of St. Anthony,' at Pescia.

MARTINELLI, GIULIO and LUCA, painters, were brothers, and pupils of J. Bassano. Giulio painted twenty-eight scenes from Genesis in the church at Enego.

MARTINELLI, GIUSEPPE, an obscure landscape painter, was born at Bologna about 1740, and died there about 1795.

MARTINELLO DI BASSANO, an obscure Byzantine, who worked at Venice in the 13th century.

MARTINET, ACHILLE-LOUIS, a French engraver, was born at Paris in 1806, and instructed by Heim and Forster. In 1830 he received the 'prix de Rome.' He died in Paris in 1877. Among his best plates may be mentioned :

The Last Honours paid to Counts Egmont and Horn ;
after Gallait.

The Sleep of Christ ; after Raphael.

The Birth of the Virgin ; after Murillo.

The Madonna with the Pink ; after Raphael.

The Madonna with the Lily ; after Beltraffio (?) , in the Pal. Albani.

MARTINET, ANGÉLICA, a French engraver, was born in 1731. She was a niece of N. Dupuis. Her brother, FRANZ NICOLAUS, also an engraver, produced some small vignettes of animals, landscapes, &c. Angelica died about 1780. Among her plates are :

Old Age ; after Vernet.

The After Dinner Walk ; after Vernet.

The Little Musician ; after Schenau.

MARTINET, E., a French painter of little note, who lived early in the present century. He was a pupil of Fontaine.

MARTINEZ, AMBROSIO, was born at Granada about the year 1630, and was brought up in the school of Alonso Cano. With the help of that artist, he became a reputable historical painter. His principal works are in the churches of the monasteries of S. Jerome, and of the Carmelites, in his native city. He died at Granada in 1674.

MARTINEZ, CRISOSTOMO, of Valencia, a painter and engraver of considerable merit, flourished about 1680. He engraved portraits, and also twenty plates for a work on anatomy. He painted several devotional works for the church of S. Philip Neri.

Pictures in the church of S. Michael and in the Carmelites are ascribed to him. He died in 1694.

MARTINEZ, DOMINGO, was born at Seville near the close of the 17th century, and after having learned painting with an obscure artist named Juan Antonio, became one of the most popular artists in Seville. The Frenchman Ranc sought his friendship, and he died rich and honoured in 1750. According to Cean Bermudez his best paintings are those in a chapel in Seville Cathedral. His fame was hardly deserved.

MARTINEZ, FRAY ANTONIO, a son of José Martinez, and painter to Philip IV. of Spain, was born at Saragossa in 1638. He studied first with his father, and afterwards at Rome. On his return to Spain he helped his father in many of his works, and entering the convent of Scala Dei in 1690 he there painted some creditable pictures from the life of St. Bruno.

MARTINEZ, GREGORIO, a painter of repute in Valladolid, was employed in 1594 by the chapter of Burgos to gild the high altar of their cathedral. Cean Bermudez mentions having seen a small picture on copper, signed with this master's name. The subject was a Virgin with Saints.

MARTINEZ, JOSÉ, a painter and engraver, was born at Saragossa in 1612, and went young to Italy, where he studied some years at Rome. On his return to Spain he was employed in several considerable works for the churches and convents at Saragossa, and made court painter by Philip IV. in 1642. His chief productions are in the cathedral of that city, and in the convent De la Manteria. Palomino mentions a series of pictures of the life of our Saviour in the cloister of San Geronimo. He has also left an engraving of the portrait of Mathias Piedra, and a work on art and artists entitled 'Dirursos practicables del nobilissimo arte de la Pintura.' He died at Saragossa in 1682.

MARTINEZ, JOSÉ, flourished at Valladolid towards the close of the 16th century. He painted so exactly in the style of the early Florentine masters, that it is conjectured he studied in their city. For the chapel of the Annunciation in the Augustine convent he painted various pictures from the life of the Virgin, also fresco decorations, and the designs for the tiles on the walls. This chapel was finished in 1598, and destroyed by the French in 1811. A picture then rescued is now in the Museum at Madrid ; in this the drawing is good, the colouring rich, and the draperies finely cast. He painted a few pieces for the Bernardine nuns.

MARTINEZ, JOSEF LUXAN. See LUXAN.

MARTINEZ, JUAN BAUTISTA DEL MAZO. See DEL MAZO MARTINEZ.

MARTINEZ, SEBASTIAN, a Spanish artist, was born at Jaen in 1602. He was a reputable painter of history, and, according to Palomino, resided during the early part of his life at Cordova, where he painted several pictures for the churches, particularly three altar-pieces for the Convent of Corpus Christi, representing the Immaculate Conception, Saint Francis of Assisi, and the Nativity. On the death of Velazquez, he visited Madrid, and was appointed painter to Philip IV. He died in the capital in 1667. He was an excellent landscape painter, and also produced many cabinet pictures, which are to be found in private collections at Jaen, Cordova, Seville, Cadiz, and Madrid.

MARTINEZ, TOMMASO, a Spanish historical painter, born at Seville. He was a pupil of Gutierrez, an imitator of Murillo. He died in 1734.

MARTINEZ DE GRADILLA, JUAN, was a painter of Seville, and an office-bearer in the Academy there for some years. He was a pupil of Zurbaran, and painted a fresco in the Convent of Mercy, which in the time of C. Bermudez was his only surviving work. It has been completely ruined by frequent restorations. He died probably in 1673.

MARTINEZ DEL BARRANCO, BERNARDO, was born in 1738, at La Cuesta, in La Rioja. After preliminary study at Madrid, he went to Italy, visiting Turin, Rome, and Naples, and studying the old masters, especially Correggio. Returning to Madrid he was elected into the Academy of St. Ferdinand in 1774. He painted a portrait of Charles III., and designed some of the illustrations for the fine edition of 'Don Quixote,' Madrid, 1780. He died in 1791.

MARTINEZ DE LOS CORRALES, JUAN, a miniaturist of Toledo, began in 1583 to illuminate a mass book for the cathedral of his native town, and in seven years had finished two volumes, which are characterized by fine colour and tasteful arabesques.

MARTINI, BERNARDINO, who is better known as ZENALE, was born at Treviglio in 1436, and was a disciple of Foppa. In early years he worked in common with Bernardino Jacobi, of Treviglio, who was surnamed Buttinone, and orders were given to the two painters conjointly. Zenale was the friend of Leonardo da Vinci, and was probably working at Santa Maria delle Grazie while the great Florentine was painting his 'Last Supper.' Vasari tells a story how that Da Vinci, despairing of being able to produce a face which should express his ideal of the Saviour, went to Zenale for advice and sympathy. When Zenale had seen and fully admired his friend's labours, he told him that what he had already produced was so fine that it was useless to think of surpassing it; "for to fancy that the Christ could be conceived in nobler lineaments was to covet attributes little short of divine." Zenale was a master of theory, and in 1524 wrote a treatise on perspective. The majority of his frescoes have now disappeared, and we can point to only one fully authenticated work by his hands. This is an altar-piece in the parish church of Treviglio, on which he worked jointly with Buttinone, a fact which makes it difficult to use the picture as a standard to test other works ascribed to Zenale. From 1501, when he furnished a design for an intended decoration at Santa Maria sopra San Celso, until his death in 1526, he seems chiefly to have devoted his time to architectural pursuits. Pictures ascribed to him with more or less probability are to be found in the galleries of Bergamo, Berlin, Hanover, Milan, and St. Petersburg.

MARTINI, GIOVANNI, (or GIOVANNI DA UDINE,) and GIROLAMO, were Friulans, sons of Martino, and nephews of Domenico da Tolmezzo. In 1501 Giovanni competed with Pellegrino da San Daniele in the decoration of two chapels in the cathedral of Udine, and acknowledged his inferiority by signing an altar-piece representing the Glory of St. Mark, "1501, Johannes Utinensis hoc parvo ingenio fecit." The cathedral of Spilimberg has a 'Presentation in the Temple' by Giovanni. In 1503 he began to make carved and coloured altar-pieces; his best work in this branch of art is the altar of the church of Mortigliano, finished in 1527. Most of his works are still in the province of Friuli.

MARTINI, SIMONE—called by Vasari SIMONE MEMMI—a Sieneſe, was born in 1283. He married, in 1324, Giovanna, the daughter of the artist Memmo di Filipuccio. He was a contemporary of Giotto. One of his earliest frescoes is that in the Hall of the Palazzo Pubblico at Siena, representing an enthroned 'Virgin and Child,' with numerous figures of 'Saints and Angels,' enclosed in a border decorated with shields of arms and medallions. The date of this design is about 1315, and existing records prove that in 1321, Simone received twenty-six livres for the renewal of certain portions that had been injured by damp. In 1320 Simone executed an altar-piece for the Church of Santa Catarina, Pisa. This has since been dismembered, and parts of it may be seen in the Library of the Seminario Vescovile, and the remainder in the Academy of Pisa. At about the same date he painted an altar-piece of the 'Virgin and Child with Saints and a kneeling donor,' for the high-altar of San Domenico, Orvieto, which is now in the cathedral. There it has for companion an altar-piece with the 'Virgin and Child and Angels.' In 1321, Simone seems to have been at Assisi, and amongst other works executed there by him, he decorated the chapel of San Martino in the cathedral by order of Cardinal Gentile. These frescoes fill the entire chapel, and illustrate different episodes in the Life of S. Martin. They contain figures of the Cardinal, and of numerous Saints and Angels. Simone also commenced a series of eight half-length Saints in the Lower Church of Assisi, but these are said to have been finished by Lippo Memmi. Up to 1335, Simone seems to have principally resided in Siena, where he executed many frescoes and paintings which cannot now be traced. In 1339, Simone went to Avignon with his wife and his brother Donato, and there made the acquaintance of Petrarch and of Laura, whose portrait he painted. Whilst in Avignon, Simone decorated two chapels in the Papal Palace, and some other rooms, and in 1349 painted some frescoes in the portico of the cathedral. These consisted of a St. George and the Dragon, with a female figure supposed to be Laura, which has now faded away; and a Virgin and Child, enthroned with angels and donor, and also a 'Saviour in Benediction.' Both of these latter are still visible. Among his works we may name:

"	"	Crucifixion and Deposition.
Avignon.	Cathedral.	Fresco of Virgin and Christ.
Florence.	Uffizi.	The Annunciation.

MARTINO DI BATTISTA, also called MARTINO DA UDINE, and PELLEGRINO DA SAN DANIELE, was the son of a Dalmatian named Battista da San Daniele, who sometimes lived at Udine. In 1491 he was partner with Ser Giovanni Antonio of San Daniele as goldsmith, but left that place and went to Venice, where he was commonly called Pellegrino, most likely in allusion to his foreign origin. In 1494 he received the commission for the altarpiece now in the church of Osopo, which represents an enthroned 'Virgin and Child between SS. Columba and Peter, with Angels and Saints.' In 1495-96 he painted altar-pieces for the cathedral of Udine, and for the church of Santa Maria di Piazza. He then determined to go to Rome, and according to the custom of his time, made his will before starting. His friends, hearing of this, determined to prevent his departure by offering him some important work, and through their influence the brotherhood of Sant' Antonio gave Pellegrino a commission to decorate their church at San Daniele. This undertaking, which was commenced about 1498, suffered many interruptions through foreign wars and internal feuds, but was finally completed in 1522. These frescoes, which cover the entire sanctuary and chancel end of the church, consist of various scenes drawn from the lives of Christ, St. Anthony, St. Sebastian, St. George, and other Saints, as well as innumerable figures of Prophets, Doctors, Saints, and Martyrs; also scenes from Old Testament History. They vary in style, and betray the successive influences exercised over Pellegrino by artists with whom he was brought into contact during his travels in North Italy. In 1501, in friendly competition with Giovanni Martini, he painted the altar-piece of the 'Glory of St. Joseph,' for the cathedral of Udine, and as a reward was elected a member of the city council for the years 1501 and 1503. In 1506 he retired to San Daniele, and painted a fresco known as 'La Vergine di Strada,' in the church of the Madonna. Between 1508 and 1512 he visited both Venice and Ferrara. In 1512 he returned to Udine and designed the Allegories of Religion, Justice, Victory, and Fame, for the monument of Andrea Trevisano in the Palazzo Publico, and recommenced his labours at Sant' Antonio. In 1521 he painted the organ-doors of the cathedral, which were valued by Giovanni Martini and Sebastiano Florigerio. These though much injured are still preserved in the Town-hall of Udine. He is also known to have painted several banners, none of which are now extant. In the close of 1529, he produced the 'Madonna and Child with six saints between SS. Michael and Sebastian,' now in Santa Maria, Cividale, after which he devoted most of his time and energies to dealing in timber. He died in 1547, more than eighty years old. Besides the works we have mentioned, we may name an 'Annunciation,' in the Venice Academy, and a 'Madonna and Saints,' in the Palazzo Giovanelli, as among his best productions.

MARTINO DI CANDIDO. See under TOLMEZZO.

MARTINOFF, IWAN, painter, was born at St.

Petersburg in 1765, and was a student in the Academy there. He painted landscapes and scenes for the theatre. He also painted thirty-six views of St. Petersburg.

MARTINOTTI, EVANGELISTA, was born at Castel Monferrato in 1634. He was a scholar of Salvator Rosa, and, according to Orlandi, excelled in painting landscapes, with figures and animals. Lanzi mentions him as a painter of history, and commends his picture of the 'Baptism of Christ by St. John,' in the cathedral of Casale. He died in 1694. He had a brother, FRANCESCO MARTINOTTI, who was also a disciple of Salvator Rosa, and painted history. He died in 1694.

MARTIS, OTTAV. DE. See NELLI.

MARTIS, OTTAVIANO, born at Gubbio, flourished from 1400 to 1444. In the church of St. Maria Nuova is a fresco of the 'Virgin and Child' by this artist, dated 1403.

MARTIUS. This is the name of a large family of artists who resided at Ghent. BAUDOUIN was the eldest son of Jan Martius, entered the Corporation in 1432, was master painter in 1434, and Dean in 1475. GERARD, master painter in 1398. GHOLOET, master painter in 1398. GILLES, master painter in 1396. JAN, a painter at Ghent, who, in conjunction with Van Axpoele, executed frescoes for the Counts of Flanders. He also worked at Tournai. LAURENT, father and son, flourished in 1364 and 1380 respectively. NABUR, NABOR, or NABUCHODNOSOR, was born at Ghent in 1404. He was the son and pupil of Jan Martius. He worked for the city and churches of Ghent and Oudenarde. He died in 1453. REGNIER, son of Baudouin, flourished from 1447 to 1472.

MARTORELLI, GAETANO, was born at Naples in 1670, and was a pupil of Giacomo del Po or N. Massaro. His first attempts were in historical subjects, but not succeeding to his wishes, he abandoned that branch of the art, and applied himself to landscape painting in the style of Salvator. He died in 1723.

MARTSS, JAN, 'de jonge,' (or MARSSEN,) incorrectly known as J. M. DE JONGE (or JONG), was a Dutch etcher and probably painter, who flourished about 1630. We have by him a set of etchings of battles, which are executed with great spirit, and supposed to be from his own designs. His manner is somewhat peculiar; it is built up of bent strokes with very little hatching. He marked his prints J. M. D. Jonge fecit, and J. M. D. J. fe.

MARUCELLI, GIOVANNI STEFANO, (or MARUCELLI,) was born at Pisa in 1586. He was a scholar of Andrea Boscoli, and distinguished himself as a painter of history, although he was more celebrated as an architect and engineer. His principal residence was at Pisa, where he painted, in the tribune of the cathedral, 'Abraham and the Angels,' and 'The Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew.' He died in 1646.

MARULLO, GIUSEPPE, a native of Ceta in the kingdom of Naples, studied under Massimo Stanzioni, but copied the style of his master's rival, Spagnoletto. He died in 1685. His son ANGELO, also a painter, died early.

MARVIE, MARTIN, painter and engraver, was born in Paris in 1712. We have several prints by him, and among others 'The Siege of Bergen op Zoom' after Bronard, plates in Blondel's 'French Architecture,' and others.

MARVY, LOUIS, a French engraver, born at Versailles in 1815. He was a pupil of Jules Dupré, and engraved several pictures after Rembrandt, Corot, C. Flers, Decamps, Diaz, &c. He died in 1850.

MARY DE' MEDICI, wife of Henry IV. of France, born in Florence in 1573, died at Cologne in 1642. At the age of eleven years she engraved a portrait of herself on wood, and signed it Maria Medici F. MDLXXXII. Another plate is ascribed to her, the portrait of a girl, signed L. O. 1587.

MARZIALE, MARCO, was living in the early part of the 16th century. Of his life very little is known, except that he was employed by Giovanni Bellini as journeyman, at a salary of twenty-four ducats per annum, in the Hall of Great Council at Venice, in 1492. In the Conservatorio de' Penitenti at San Giobbe, Venice, is a 'Circumcision' painted by him in that same year; and in the Academy of the same city is a 'Christ and the Apostles at Emmaus,' dated 1506. In the Gallery of Berlin is a similar subject, painted in 1507, which shows a strong leaning towards the German feeling. His two best works, however, are in the National Gallery. These are, 'The Circumcision,' signed and dated 1500, and 'The Madonna and Child, with Saints,' 1507. In the Locchis Carrara Gallery at Bergamo there is also a 'Virgin and Child,' with profile portrait of donor, dated 1504. The dates on his pictures range from 1499 to 1507. His works are fairly numerous, but many of them are ascribed to Bellini and other members of his school.

MARZIO DE COLANTONIO, flourished at Rome in the 16th century. He painted landscapes and battle-pieces. He was for a time at Turin, in the service of the Prince of Savoy.

MARZO, ANDREA and URBAN, were two brothers of Valencia, and painters of some credit, born about 1620. Andrea executed two pictures of St. Anthony of Padua for the parish churches of Santa Cruz and Santa Catalina; he also designed the title-page for a book, describing a grand festival in the city, published in 1663 by Don Juan Bautista de Valda. Urban painted a picture of 'Christ bearing the Cross,' said to possess some merit. It is in a private collection at Valencia.

MARZY, JOHANN HEINRICH, an engraver, was born at Iglau in Moravia in 1722. He became a teacher in the Normal School, and afterwards devoted himself to engraving. He died in 1801.

MASCAGNI, DONATO, (or MASCAGGIO,) called Fra ARSENIO, was born at Florence in 1579, and was one of the ablest scholars of Jacopo Ligozzi. Soon after leaving the school of that master, he became a Servite monk, and took the name of Fra Arsenio, by which he is generally known. He painted several altar-pieces for the churches at Florence, particularly for that of his monastery. His principal performance is a large picture at Vallombrosa, which Lanzi mentions in very favourable terms. He also worked in Spain early in the 17th century, chiefly in the convents of Valladolid. He died in 1636.

MASCALL, EDWARD, an English portrait painter, flourished about the year 1650. He painted a portrait of Oliver Cromwell, which was once in the possession of the Duke of Chandos. We have a print, by James Gammon, from a portrait of Mascall by himself.

MASCHERINI, OTTAVIANO, a painter and architect, was born at Bologna in 1530. He was a pupil of the Carracci, but he abandoned painting for architecture. He died about 1610.

MASON, ABRAHAM JOHN, wood engraver, was born in London in 1794. He was apprenticed to Robert Branston, and in 1821 he set up on his own account. In 1829 he went to New York, where he was elected Associate of the Academy and Professor of Engraving. He engraved Cruikshank's illustrations to 'Tales of Humour and Gallantry.'

MASON, GEORGE HEMMING, was born at Wetley Abbey in Worcestershire in 1818. His parents were well-to-do people, and by his father's wish he studied for the medical profession, but abandoned it in 1844 for art. In company with a brother he travelled through France, Germany, Switzerland, and Italy, residing at Rome for several years. While Mason was in Rome he received news of financial losses at home, which for a time threw himself and his brother entirely on their own resources. Better times came, however, and in 1855 he was enabled both to contribute to and to visit the Paris Exhibition. He contributed to the Academy from 1857, in which year he returned to England and married, till 1872. All the subjects now chosen by him were taken from the neighbourhood of his home at Wetley. In 1865 he settled in London, in Shaftesbury Road, Hammer-smith, where he remained faithful to the same rural themes. In 1868 he was elected A.R.A., and moved to a larger house and studio, where he worked for three years, and where he died in 1872. His two best works, perhaps, are, 'Girls dancing by the Sea,' etched in 1886 by Mr. R. W. Macbeth as 'A Pastoral Symphony,' and 'The Harvest Moon,' also etched by the same artist. The former is in the collection of Lord Wantage. Besides those he also painted:

Wind on the Wold.

Mist on the Moor.

Catch!

Crossing the Heath.

Return from Ploughing.

The Cast Shoe.

Geese.

The Gander.

Young Anglers.

Unwilling Playmates.

Evening, Matlock.

The Evening Hymn.

Only a Shower.

A Derbyshire Landscape.

Blackberry Gatherers.

The Milkmaid.

MASON, JAMES, an English landscape engraver, was born in 1710, and died about 1780. He belonged to the Incorporated Society of Artists, and was very eminent in his line, his works being held in great esteem by foreign amateurs. His principal pieces are after Claude, G. Poussin, Swaneveldt, Hobbema, Wilson, Lambert, Scott, and Zuccarelli. 'The Landing of Æneas in Italy,' after Claude, is one of his finest landscapes; and he is no less admirable in the print, after Andrea Sacchi, of 'Venus at the Bath, surrounded by Cupids.' He sometimes engraved in conjunction with Canot, Vivares, and other masters of the period, who, like himself, were employed by the enterprising Boydell.

MASON, WILLIAM, an English animal painter in the latter part of the 18th century. His works were engraved by J. Jenkins, R. Pollard, and Val. Green.

MASQUELIER, LOUIS JOSEPH, a French engraver, was born at Cisoing, near Lille, in 1741. He was a pupil of J. P. le Bas at Paris, where he engraved several plates which possess considerable merit, particularly his landscapes. He died in 1811. He engraved several of the plates for 'Le Voyage d'Italie,' by St. Non; also several of the French battles and victories, and other subjects after Monnet and Vernet; some of the plates for the voyage of La Peyrouse, and numerous designs illustrative of the 'Metamorphoses' of Ovid, the Fables and the Kisses of Dorat, and, in conjunction with M. Née, the work entitled 'Tableaux de la Suisse,' consisting of 216 plates in folio. He was also director of the publication of 'La Galerie de Florence,' for which he engraved several of the pictures, statues, cameos, and bas-reliefs, and for which he obtained the gold medal in 1802. Numerous other works were produced by him, which are well known to amateurs of engraving. Among others, we may name the following:

The Arrival of Voltaire in the Elysian Fields; after Le Barbier.

A pair of Landscapes; after Ruissdael; by Masquelier and Le Bas.

A View in Italy; after Vernet.

A Shipwreck; after the same.

Two Views of Ostend; after Le Moy.

A Landscape, with a Waterfall; after Dietrich.

He was the instructor of his son, CLAUDE LOUIS MASQUELIER, born in Paris in 1781, who engraved in 1848 'The Entombment of Christ,' after Raphael. He obtained several gold medals and prizes, and was professor at the Academy of Rome.

MASQUELIER, NICOLAS FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, called 'the younger,' was a relation and scholar of Louis Joseph Massard. He was born at Lille in 1760, and died in 1809. He received lessons also from L. J. Watteau and Guéret. He engraved a 'Corps-de-garde,' after Leduc; 'Cæsar at the Tomb of Alexander,' after S. Bourdon; 'Extreme Unction,' after Jouvenet; 'Christ at the Column,' after Vouet, all for the Musée Robillard: and several other pieces for the same collection. He also assisted in engraving the cameos and bas-reliefs for the 'Galerie de Florence.'

MASQUERLIER, JOHN JAMES, a portrait painter, born of French parentage at Chelsea in 1778. He went back to France with his parents in 1789, and received some instruction from Vernet. Returning to England in 1792, he became a student in the schools of the Academy, where his first exhibited work appeared in 1796. In 1800 he made a second visit to Paris, where he was enabled to take a portrait of Napoleon. This on being exhibited in England, where it was the first authentic portrait of the emperor, proved a source of considerable gain to the painter. After a successful career as a portrait painter—he painted 400 portraits in twenty-eight years—he was enabled to retire in 1823 with a competence to Brighton. Here he died in 1855.

MASRELIEZ, LOUIS, a painter, was born in Paris in 1747. In 1752 he was taken to Sweden, but returned to Paris to study art, proceeding later to Italy. On his return to Stockholm he was made Director of the Swedish Academy. He painted portraits, landscapes, and historical subjects. He died at Stockholm in 1810.

MASSA, GIOVANNI, was a native of Carpi. He was a pupil of Griffoni, and, in conjunction with GIOVANNI POZZUOLI, worked at architectural views and designing. He died in 1741.

MASSARD, JEAN, a French engraver, was born at Bellême in 1740. He was instructed in the rudiments of his art by Martinet, but owed more to private study. In 1814 he received the title of Engraver to the King. He was a member of the Academy, and died in 1822. His best plates are:

Adam and Eve; after Cignani.

La Mère bien aimée; after Greuze.

La plus belle des mères; after the same.

Abraham and Hagar; after Girardon.

The Family of Charles I.; after Van Dyck.

Erigone; after Mieris.

The Death of Socrates; after David.

MASSARD, JEAN BAPTISTE LOUIS, an engraver, was born in 1774. He was the eldest son of Jean Massard. Among his works were 'The Magdalene,' after Seghers, and the portrait of Francis I., after Titian. He died about 1810.

MASSARD, JEAN BAPTISTE RAPHAEL URBAIN, son and scholar of Jean Massard, was born in Paris in 1775. He studied design in the school of David. He engraved many of the plates for the beautiful editions of Virgil and Racine, published by Didot, also for 'Le Musée Robillard,' and other collections. The 'St. Cecilia,' after Raphael; 'Apollo and the Muses,' after Giulio Romano; 'Hippocrates refusing the Presents of Artaxerxes,' after Girodet, and the 'Burial of Atala,' after the same, are among his most esteemed works.

MASSARI, LUCIO, painter, was born at Bologna in 1569, and was some time a scholar of Bartolommeo Passerotti; but he afterwards studied in the school of the Carracci, and then at Rome from the antique and the works of the great masters. His style resembles that of Annibale, rather than Lodovico; and in some of his works he approaches so near to his manner, that they may easily be mistaken for those of that master. He died in 1633. Among his works we may name:

Bologna.	Life of St. Benedict ( four pictures ).
"	Marriage of St. Catherine.
"	Christ appearing to the Magdalen.
"	St. Gaetano.
Florence. Uffizi.	Holy Family.

MASSARO, NICCOLO, was a Neapolitan, and a scholar of Salvator Rosa. He painted landscapes, which resemble those of his instructor more in forms and scenery than in colour, which is weak. As he was not successful in figures, he was assisted in his pictures by other artists, particularly by the little known Antonio di Simone. Massaro's sons, GIROLAMO and GENNARO, were also painters.

MASSAROTTI, ANGELO, was born at Cremona in 1655, and for some time studied under Agostino Bonisoli, in his native city. He afterwards visited Rome, where he became a scholar of Carlo Cesi. His principal work is a large picture in the church of Sant' Agostino representing that saint distributing his regulations to his different orders. He died in 1723.

MASSÉ, CHARLES, (or MACÉ,) a French designer and engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1631. He was employed by M. Jabach to make designs from his celebrated collection of drawings, and to etch them. The set consists of 280 prints, among which we may specify:

Sixty-seven after Annib. Carracci.
 Fourteen after Titian.
 Twelve after Castiglione.
 Four after Campagnola.
 Several after Correggio, Guercino, Nic. Poussin, Parmigiano, and others.

MASSÉ, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French painter and engraver, was born in Paris in 1687. In the early part of his life he applied himself to the sciences, but afterwards took to engraving, and shortly to painting in enamel. By the common device of representing ladies as more beautiful than they were he soon succeeded in making himself the fashion. It was as an engraver, however, that he obtained in 1717 a reception into the Academy at Paris. He undertook the direction of the engravings from the pictures by Le Brun, in the Gallery of Versailles. The work consists of fifty-two plates, entitled 'La grande galerie de Versailles et les deux salons qui l'accompagnent, dessinée par J. B. Massé et gravée par les meilleurs maîtres du tems,' Paris, 1752. In 1749 he became a Councillor of State, and in 1760 inspector of the Gallery at Versailles. He died in Paris in 1767.

MASSE, SAMUEL, a miniature painter, was born at Tours in 1671. He settled in Paris, where he died in 1753. Another painter of the same name flourished at Tours at the same time.

MASSEI, GIROLAMO, was a native of Lucca, and, according to Baglione, flourished at Rome in the pontificate of Paul V., where he painted several pictures for churches and other public buildings. In San Luigi de' Francesi is an altar-piece by him, representing the 'Martyrdom of St. Sebastian'; and in the Trinità de' Monti there are several pictures in fresco of the Life and Miracles of St. Francis of Paula. Agostino Taja, in his 'Descrizione del Vaticano,' says he was one of the artists selected by Fra Ignazio Danti, superintendent of the works, to ornament the Loggie of the Vatican, where he was employed several years. He returned to Lucca towards the latter part of his life, and died there at the age of eighty.

MASSI, CASPAR, painter and engraver, worked at Rome at the end of the 18th century. Among his works are plates from:

Cardinal Fleury; after Rigaud.
 Pope Clement XII.
 St. John of Nepomuc; after Poli.
 St. Nicolas; after Calandrucci.

MASSI, G., is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a portrait of Cardinal Alaman Salviati, after P. Nelli, dated 1730.

MASSI, GENTILE, called GENTILE DI NICCOLÒ (DI GIOVANNI) DA FABRIANO, was probably born at Fabriano between 1360 and 1370. He learned his art under Allegretto Nuzzi; his death took place between 1440 and 1450, and he was buried in San Francesco Romana, in the Campo Vaccino. He is known to have paid a visit to Venice, where he spent some years in decorating the ducal palace, and also painted an altar-piece for the church of S. Felice, representing St. Paul and St. Anthony. From thence in 1422 he went to Florence, and in 1425 he was sent for to Rome by Pope Martin V., to paint in San Giovanni Laterano, and he painted a 'Holy Family' for the church of S. Maria Maggiore. At Florence, in the church of S. Niccolò, is a subject by him from the life of that saint; and in the sacristy of la Trinità, the 'Adoration of the Magi,' dated 1423. Gentile's masterpieces have perished both at Rome and Venice; remains of his paintings can be seen at Perugia, at Fabriano, and as under:

Berlin.	Museum.	Virgin between SS. Catharine and Nicholas.
Florence.	S. Niccolò.	SS. Mary Magdalene, Nicholas, John the Baptist, and George. 1425.
"	Sacristy.	God the Father, Christ, the Virgin, and several Saints.

MASSINGER, ANDREAS, an engraver, was born at Wasserburg, Austria, in 1759. He emigrated to Vienna, where he died in 1808. Among his plates are:

The Spanish Pointer; after Stubbs.
 A View near Exeter; after Holmes.
 Sheep and Rams in groups; after H. Roos.

MASSINI, C. An etching after a picture of 'Penelope at her Web,' by G. F. Greut, is signed with his name.

MASSOLINI. See AZZOLINI.

MASSON, ANDREW, a Scotch landscape painter, born near Edinburgh in 1750, who also practised as a drawing master. In the year before his death he assisted Turner by making wave studies from the Bell Rock Lighthouse. He died in 1825.

MASSON, ANTOINE, a celebrated French engraver, was born at Lour, near Orleans, in 1636. He was brought up to the business of an armourer, and first exercised the burin in graving ornaments on steel. Early in his life he settled in Paris, where he applied himself to drawing with great assiduity, and acquired some celebrity in painting and designing portraits. But he is principally distinguished as an engraver; and in some of his plates, particularly his portraits, he reached an excellence which has seldom been surpassed. He worked entirely with the graver, which he handled with surprising firmness and facility, and at the same time with the utmost delicacy. His portrait of Brisacier, known by the name of 'The Grey-headed Man,' is a model of lightness and precision. That of Olivier d'Ormesson is also admirable. Of his subjects, the celebrated print of 'Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus,' after Titian, commonly called 'The Table-cloth,' may be regarded as a chef-d'œuvre in the style to which it belongs. In 1679 he became a member of the Academy in Paris, and died in that city in 1700. The following is a list of Masson's works:

MASSON, MADALEINE, was a relation of Antoine Masson, and was born in Paris about the year 1660. She was a pupil of Antoine, in whose fine style she engraved several portraits, or heads, life-size. She was living up to 1711. Among others, we have the following by her:

MASSONE, GIOVANNI, was horn at Alessandria, and probably laboured there, but little is known of his life. He is best known by a triptych, executed about the year 1490, which now hangs in the Gallery of the Louvre. It represents the 'Birth of Christ,' 'St. Francis adored by Pope Sixtus IV.,' and 'St. Antony of Padua, with the Cardinal Giuliano della Rovere.'

MASSOT, FIRMIN, a painter, was born in 1766. He settled at Geneva, after a short stay in Italy, and painted there and at Berne several portraits and miniatures. In later life he produced some genre pictures. He died about 1826.

MASSYS, CORNELIS, painter and engraver, and the fourth (?) son of Quentin Massys, was born at Antwerp about 1513. Some writers make him the son of Quentin's brother, Jan Massys the elder. He was received into the Antwerp Guild of St. Luke in 1531. In the Dresden Gallery there is a red chalk drawing by him of 'Lot and his Daughters.' The figures have much elegance and refinement, betraying a master who had visited Italy without leaving his own Flemish manner behind him there. Cornelis was still living in 1580. He usually signed his works with the initials C.M.A., or C.M.-E. in a monogram, and sometimes we find the abbreviation COR. MET. Works:

Berlin. Gallery. Landscape with figures. (Signed C.M.-E. 1543.)

MASSYS, JAN, (METSYS,) was the son of Quentin Massys by his first wife. In 1516 he was a pupil of Jaket Osket, and was received into the Corporation of St. Luke in 1531. He visited Italy, but afterwards returned to his own city. His eldest son QUENTIN, also a painter, died at Frankfort. His death occurred after 1568. His two elder brothers, PAUL and CORNELIS, were also painters. Paul was living in 1649. Among the pictures of Jan are:

Antwerp.	Gallery.	The Virgin and St. Joseph at Bethlehem.

MASSYS, QUENTIN, (MATSYS, MESSYS, or METSYS,) the son of a locksmith, Josse Massys, was born at Louvain in 1466. In early life he worked under his father, but became a painter to obtain the consent of his wife's father, who belonged to that profession, to his marriage. This is recorded by the inscription on his tomb: "Connubialis amor de mulcibre fecit Apellen," and he wrote on his own portrait the words "Pictorem me fecit amor." His wife's name was Alyt van Tuyt. After her death, which took place in 1507, he married Catharine Heyns. Quentin is believed by some to have studied under Dierick Bouts, who was town painter at Louvain; but dates do not favour this theory, for Bouts died in 1475. In 1491 Massys settled at Antwerp, where he joined the Painters' Guild, and rapidly became famous. In 1508 he painted the 'Descent from the Cross' for the chapel of the 'Joiners' Company in Antwerp Cathedral. It is now in the Museum at Antwerp. Massys received 300 florins for his work, but it was sold in 1580 to the magistrates of Antwerp for 1500 florins. Massys died at Antwerp in 1531, leaving a large family. Three of his sons were painters (see MASSYS, CORNELIS and JAN). The following are some of his principal works:

MAST, HERMAN. See VAN DER MAST.

MASTELLETTA, L. See DONDUCCI.

MASTER A. D. F., THE, was probably a painter of the Austrian school about 1511, and is known by an altar-piece, now in the Belvedere at Vienna, representing St. Jerome, with scenes from his life; on the inner side of the laterals are the three Fathers of the Church, the Emperor Henry the Saint, St. Elizabeth, and the Queen of Hungary. It is signed A D F 1511.

MASTER B. M., THE, was a pupil and imitator of Schongauer. We have nine plates by him, among them:

The Judgment of Solomon.

St. John in Patmos.

A 'Riposo.'

A Pietà.

Madonna and Child in a Landscape.

St. Barbara.

MASTER C. T., THE. See ANTHONISZON, CORNELIS.

MASTER E. S., or 'MASTER OF 1466,' a prolific engraver, whose name is unknown, but by many is supposed to be Erhardt Schön. He was a German, and judging from the dates on his plates, was born in the early part of the 15th century. He is supposed to have travelled through Switzerland, and worked a long time at the Court of Burgundy. Bartsch names 136 plates from his hand, among which there are scenes from the Old Testament, scenes from the life of Christ, the apostles and saints, &c. Among his most celebrated plates are:

The Baptism.

The Nativity of Christ.

The Judgment of Solomon.

The Creation.

Virgin and Child.

MASTER F. V. B., THE. See BOCHOLT, FRANZ VON.

MASTER J. M. S., probably identical with MABUSE (GOSSART, JAN, q. v.).

MASTER L. C. z. OF 1492, THE, seems to have been influenced by M. Schongauer. We have ten plates by him, of which the best is a 'Christ entering Jerusalem.'

MASTER M. Z., THE, was a miniaturist in the latter part of the 15th century, who painted under the influence of Wolgemuth.

MASTER N. D. B. OF 1544, THE, engraved 'Cupids at Play,' after Raphael.

MASTER, WY., THE, an engraver of the Netherlands in the 15th century, executed sixty-one plates, among which are a 'Sancta Veronica' and a Gothic Fountain.

It was sold and divided on the establishment of the kingdom of Westphalia by Napoleon in 1807. Some of the pieces have disappeared, but a good many are still in existence. In 1600 he entered the Guild, of which in 1605 he became the president. He died at Haarlem in 1631. He worked entirely with the graver. He sometimes marked his prints with Math. Inv., *J. In the early part of his life he went to France, where he was employed for three years in some considerable works for the court. He was invited to Rome by Benedict XIII., where he painted several pictures for la Minerva and the church of the Ara Cœli. At Genoa, in the church of S. Of his portraits those of the Duchess Mary Anne and the Queen of Prussia are noteworthy. He successfully restored several paintings in the churches at Munich, in which city he died in 1850.

MATTEO and his pupil ALOISE, were miniature painters who lived in the 16th century. The first was a native of Terranova, Calabria, and studied at Rome; the second was born at Naples. They painted during 1507-23 the mass-books in Monte Casino at Naples, and in 1526-27 the mass-books at Perugia.

MATTEO DI GIOVANNI (DI BAROLO), called MATTEO DA SIENA, the son of a tinman of Borgo San Sepolcro, was born not later than 1435. He was considered one of the best Sieneſe painters of his time. The 'Madonna della Neve' (the 'Madonna in the Snow'), painted for the brotherhood of that name at Siena, is a fine example of his art; it is signed "Opus Matei di Senis," and dated 1477. Matteo painted several pictures representing the 'Murder of the Innocents,' two of which are still preserved in Siena. A third is in the Naples Gallery. A mosaic by him of the same subject is on the floor of the Siena Cathedral; a rubbing from it is in the South Kensington Museum. An 'Assumption of the Virgin,' in the National Gallery, is a first-rate specimen of Matteo da Siena. He is also represented in the same collection by a small 'Ecce Homo,' which was long ascribed to Niccolo da Foligno. Matteo died in 1495.

MATTEO DA SIENA, called MATTEINO, landscape painter, was a native of Siena, and flourished in the 16th century. He lived chiefly at Rome, where he painted the landscapes in the pictures of Circignano. He died at Rome.

MATTIOLI, LODOVICO, was born at Guisa, near Crevalcore, in Piedmont, in 1662, and learned design in the school of Carlo Cignani, with the intention of becoming a painter, but the success of some essays in etching induced him to devote himself principally to that art. He died at Bologna in 1747. He painted several landscapes in fresco at the Orphanage of San Bartolommeo in that city. We have a variety of etchings by him, after the Bolognese masters, as well as from his own designs; among them the following :

MATURINO, B. C., was born at Florence in 1490. He had the advantage of studying under Raphael, and was employed by him in ornamenting the Loggie da Vatican. He was the instructor of Polidoro da Caravaggio, in conjunction with whom he was much employed in ornamenting the exterior of Roman palaces. One of the most celebrated of the united works of the two painters was the 'Death of the Children of Niobe,' at the Maschera d'Oro. The sacking of Rome by the Spaniards in 1527, separated the friends, and interrupted their work. Maturino did not long survive that event, and is said to have died of the plague when he was little more than thirty-seven years of age. His works are signed B. C. M. The greater part of his work done in collaboration with Polidoro has long disappeared, but most of it has been engraved by Cherubini Alberti, Pietro Santi Bartoli, and others. The 'Story of Perseus and Andromeda' is still to be seen in the summer-house of the Palazzo del Bufalo.

MATVELEFF, FEODOR MICHAILOWITSH, born at St. Petersburg in 1758, stayed at Rome in the early part of the 19th century, and was one of the most distinguished Russian landscape painters of his time. He died there in 1826. His chief productions are in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg.

He was a member of the Academy of Paris, and became a professor in 1655. He died in 1686. In the large room at Fontainebleau are fourteen landscapes in fresco by him. We have fifty-one etchings of his, some of which are from his own designs, and others after H. Swanevelt. The following may be named:

His father, JOSIAS MAURER, was a painter of some merit, by whom he was instructed in the first elements of design, but he afterwards studied at Strassburg, under Tobias Stimmer, whose style he adopted, and in conjunction with whom he published a series of hunting-pieces in 1606. He painted a large number of façades with scenes from Scripture and Roman history, as well as from that of his own country. His portraits in oil are little inferior. He died at Winterthur in 1614.

In 1758 he went to St. Petersburg, where he became principal painter to the Empress Elizabeth, and directed the coronation fêtes on the accession of Catharine II. On his return to France he was employed by Marie Antoinette in decorative work. He formed a rich collection of objects of art. He died in Paris in 1820.

MAYER, KARL, was born at Vienna in 1810, and his father dying soon after his birth, his mother supported herself and child upon a very small pension. His father's brother taking an interest in the orphan, adopted him, and wished him to be educated for the service of the Government, but his talent for art was so decided that his uncle finally encouraged it, and he was placed under Gsellhofer in the Vienna Academy. Karl Mayer travelled in various parts of Austria and Germany, and acquired the friendship of Schubert the composer. In 1834 he settled for a time at Munich. In 1842, having obtained the prize of Rome with his 'Prometheus and Pandora,' he commenced his travels in Italy, and after his return, in 1846, painted many noticeable pictures. In 1851 he was elected to the professorship of the smaller Academy at Vienna, and was largely employed in fresco paintings. In 1873 he fell out of health, and received assistance in the form of a pension, which he enjoyed until his death in 1876.

MAYER, MARIE FRANÇOISE CONSTANCE M. LA MARTINIÈRE, was born in Paris in 1778. She was instructed by Sauvée, Grenze, and Prud'hon. She exhibited many portraits and other subjects, in France, from 1800 to 1821, in which year she committed suicide through vexation caused by her love for Prud'hon. Among her works the most popular were:

Innocence between Love and Riches.

Venus and Cupid asleep, caressed and awakened by Zephyrs.

The Torch of Venus.

The Happy Mother.

The Abandoned Mother (in the Louvre).

A Dream of Happiness.

MAYNO, Fray JUAN BAUTISTA, was born in 1569, and is said to have been instructed by Greco. At an early period of his life he became a Dominican monk; but this seclusion from the world did not prevent the exercise of his talents, and he was reputed one of the ablest painters of his time. He had the honour of being drawing-master to Philip IV., and was employed by him to paint his celebrated battle-piece in the Buen' Retiro, into which he has introduced Olivarez animating the troops to victory, by showing them the portrait of their King Philip. He was also superintendent of the paintings in the royal palaces. He died at Milan in 1649. Among his paintings we may name:

MAYR, HEINRICH VON, was born at Nuremberg in 1806, and after studying in that city under the direction of his step-father, went to Munich in 1825. On accompanying Duke Maximilian on his journey to the East, he executed several excellent genre paintings, some of which are at the Rosenstein near Stuttgart.

MAYR, JOHANN ULRICH, (or MAIR,) was born at Augsburg in 1630, and died at the same city in 1704. He was an excellent disciple of Rembrandt and Jakob Jordaens, and was most distinguished as a painter of portraits, amongst which were Joachim von Sandrart and a painting on glass of himself. Of his other works we note:

Augsburg.	Anna-kirche.	Christ in Prison.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	The Apostle Philip reading in a book.

MAYRHOFER, JOHANN NEPOMUK, flower painter and lithographer, was born at Oberneukirchen, in Austria, in 1764. He was instructed by Haslinger at Linz, and studied afterwards at Munich. He was an excellent painter of flowers and fruit, as we may see in his 'Flora Monacensis' (Munich, 1816—30). He died at Munich in 1832.

MAZELL, PETER, an English engraver who flourished in the second part of the 18th century, and worked for Pennant and Boydell, and all the engravings in Cordiner's 'Ruins and Romantic Prospects in North Britain' (1792) are by him.

MAZO, MARTINEZ JUAN BAUTISTA DEL. See DEL MAZO MARTINEZ.

MAZOT, —, is mentioned by Strutt as an engraver, by whom we have a few indifferent portraits; among others, that of Christian IV., King of Denmark.

MAZZA, DAMIANO, was a native of Padua, and disciple of Titian. He chiefly resided at Venice, where he painted for the churches; but his most celebrated work was his picture of 'Ganymede taken up by the Eagle,' in the Casa Sonica at Padua. Mazza died young.

MAZZAROPPI, MARCO, was born at San Germano, near Naples, about 1570. His principal works are to be found in the Abbey of Mont Cassin, near San Germano. He died in 1620.

MAZZIERI, ANTONIO DI DONNINO, according to Vasari, was a native of Florence, and a disciple of Francia Bigio. He flourished about the year 1520, and distinguished himself as a painter of landscapes and battle-pieces, which were well coloured and handled with spirit.

MAZZOLA, GIUSEPPE, was born at Valduggia, in Piedmont, in 1748. He formed himself at first on Gaudenzio Ferrari, afterwards on Correggio. By the assistance of King Victor Amadeus III. of Savoy, he went to Rome in 1774, and studied the works of Raphael and Michelangelo. From 1789 to 1797 he was court painter to his patron. In 1802 he established himself at Milan, and became director of the Gallery there. From 1803 he was obliged to paint with the left hand. Mazzola died at Milan in 1838. Among his best paintings are:

A 'Holy Family.' (Brera, Milan.)

The Ascension of Mary.

The portrait of King Amadeus III.

MAZZOLINI, GIOV. BERN. See AZZOLINI.

MAZZOLINI, LODOVICO, called MAZZOLINI DA FERRARA and LODOVICO FERRARESE, was born at Ferrara about 1481. He was a scholar of Lorenzo Costa, and may be placed next after Garofalo among the masters of his native town. His pictures are even more remarkable than others of their school for their architectural backgrounds. Three small examples in the National Gallery show this tendency in a very marked way. Perhaps Mazzolini's best picture is the first in the list below. He died in 1530.

MAZZONI, CESARE GIUSEPPE, was born at Bologna in 1678, and was a scholar of Lorenzo Pasinelli, and afterwards of the younger dal Sole. There are several of his works in the churches and public edifices at Bologna, which prove him to have been a respectable painter of history. He died in 1763. His best works are:

In San Colombano, Bologna, an altar-piece.

In San Tommaso di Strada Maggiore, a 'Crucifixion.'

In San Giovanni in Monte, a 'St. Peter delivered from Prison.'

MAZZONI, GIULIO, was a native of Piacenza, but studied at Rome under Daniele da Volterra, and flourished about the year 1568. He is mentioned by Vasari, in the life of that master, as a painter of considerable merit. His principal work is the 'Four Evangelists' in the cathedral at Piacenza.

MAZZONI, SEBASTIANO, was born at Florence about 1615. He removed to Venice, where, after a life of some local success, he died near the end of the century.

MAZZUCHELLI, PIETRO FRANCESCO, called IL MORAZZONE (MORANZONE, or MARAZZONE), was born at Morazzone, in the Milanese, in 1571, and is generally called from the place of his nativity. He resided at Rome in the early part of his life. where he painted for the church of Santa Maria Maddalena al Corso, the 'Assumption of the Virgin, with the Apostles,' and for San Silvestro in Capite, the 'Adoration of the Magi.' He afterwards went to Venice, where he studied the works of Titian, Tintoretto, and Paolo Veronese, by which he greatly improved his colour; and on going to Milan he painted the 'Adoration of the Kings,' for the church of Sant' Antonio Abate, in a style so superior to the picture of the same subject he had painted at Rome, that it appeared to be by a different hand. At Como, in the church of San Giovanni, is one of his principal works, representing 'St. Michael discomfiting the rebel Angels.' He was employed and patronized by the King of Sardinia, by whom he was knighted. In 1626 he was invited to Piacenza to paint the great cupola of the cathedral, which he only lived to commence. He died the same year, and his work was finished by Guercino.

MAZZUOLA, ANNIBALE, a native of Siena, was a painter of history. He passed his life in Rome, where he died in 1743.

MAZZUOLA, FILIPPO, was born at Parma in the latter part of the 15th century, and was sometimes called 'Filippo dall' Erbette,' from a habit he had of introducing plants into his pictures. He was the father of Parmigiano. The Gallery of Parma possesses a 'Virgin and Child, between SS. Francis and John the Baptist,' painted by him in 1491; at the Palazzo Vescovile, in the same city, is a 'Baptism of Christ,' dated 1493. In the year 1500 he completed the 'Dead Christ, with the Virgin, and SS. Magdalene, Catharine, Monica, Appollonia, and Barbara,' now in the Naples Museum. The Brera, Milan, and the Doria Gallery, Rome, both possess portraits of men by Mazzuola. His death occurred in 1505. Additional works by him are:

Berlin. Museum. Virgin and Child between SS. Catharine and Chiara. 1502.
 „ Raczynski Coll. Bust of Christ. 1504.

MAZZUOLA, FRANCESCO, (MAZZOLA, MAZZUOLI, MAZZOLI, PARMIGIANINO, &c.,) called IL PARMIGIANO, was the son of Filippo Mazzuola, and was born at Parma in 1504. His father dying when he was very young, he was brought up under his uncles, MICHELE and PIER ILARIO MAZZUOLA, who taught him what they knew of the art, and curious tales are told of his precocity. Surrounded by the productions of Correggio, he studied them with attention and success. His earliest works were entirely in the style of that painter; among them we may name a 'St. Bernardo' at the Osservanti at Parma, and the 'Holy Family' in the collection of the Presidente Bertoli. The desire of seeing the works of Michelangelo and Raphael led him to Rome when he was twenty years of age, and there his talents recommended him to the notice of

Clement VII., for whom he painted a picture of the 'Circumcision' for the palace of the Vatican. He improved his taste by the help of Raphael, and his energy by that of Buonarroti. Vasari reports that it was said at Rome "that the soul of Raphael had passed into the person of Parmigiano." Mazzuola was high in his patron's favour, and in the public esteem, when his career was interrupted by the sacking of Rome in 1527. This event obliged him to take refuge at Bologna, where he painted some altar-pieces for the churches, among which was the 'Virgin and Infant Christ, with St. John, St. Margaret, and St. Jerome,' in Santa Margherita, now in the Louvre. The church of San Petronio possesses a 'St. Roch,' a noble and dignified performance. On his return to Parma he was engaged to decorate in fresco the vault of La Madonna della Steccata, where he painted 'Adam and Eve,' and his famous chiaroscuro of 'Moses breaking the Tables of the Law,' which is one of the chief productions of the school to which it belongs. Of his easel pictures one of the best is the 'Virgin and Infant, with St. Catharine, St. John, and St. Jerome,' in the Florentine Gallery, of which there are several repetitions. Another good picture by him, representing the 'Virgin and Child, with Mary Magdalene and Angels,' called 'La Madonna del collo lungo,' is now in the Pitti Gallery at Florence. Lastly we may name the 'Vision of St. Jerome,' in the National Gallery, as also among his finest works. Parmigiano was unfortunately addicted to alchemy, and wasted his substance and health in the absurd pursuit of the philosopher's stone. This fatal infatuation occasioned him to neglect, and at last to abandon, the important works he was engaged on at the Steccata, and having received several sums of money in advance, he was prosecuted by the confraternity. He fled to Casal Maggiore, where he died in 1540 of a fever, brought on by disappointment and chagrin, at the age of thirty-six. The following are the chief works of Parmigiano to which we can point:

Berlin.		Baptism of Christ.
Bologna.	Pinacoteca.	Virgin, Child, and Saints.

As an engraver Francesco Mazzuola has been erroneously supposed to have been the inventor of etching; but it was practised in Germany a considerable time before him, though he is considered as the first artist who wielded the point in Italy. This is rendered extremely probable, by the difficulty he appears to have laboured under in the mechanical part of the execution of some of his first prints. His plates are scratched in with the point, and being sometimes not well bitten, are coarsely retouched with the burin. From his inexperience in the process, his earliest etchings are seldom clear or perfect, but some of those executed in the latter part of his life are better. These defects are, however, amply compensated by the tasteful arrangement of his subjects, and the spirit and animation of his design. It is very difficult to meet with fine impressions of his prints, as the plates have been much retouched. We have a number of wood-cuts from his designs, printed in chiaroscuro, which have been incorrectly said to have been executed by himself; but it is now well known that he only superintended their execution by Ugo da Carpi, Andrea Andreani, and others, including Antonio da Trento, who robbed him of his designs, which were eventually found by Count Antonio Maria Zanetti in the possession of the Earl of Arundel in London, and taken to Italy. He signed his works F. P., F. P. F., F. Parm., &c., or with a monogram. We have the following etchings by Parmigiano:

- Moses and the Burning Bush; supposed to have been his first plate.
- Judith with the Head of Holofernes.
- Joseph and Potiphar's Wife.
- The Nativity.
- The Marriage of St. Catherine.
- The Holy Family, with St. John presenting a Basket of Flowers.
- The Holy Family, with Zacharias.
- Another Holy Family, with St. John embracing the Infant Jesus.
- The Entombment. Guido has copied this print.
- The Resurrection, with several Soldiers.
- A Man and a Woman seated in a landscape.
- A Mother instructing her four Daughters.
- A Shepherd resting on his Crook.
- Diogenes seated near his Tub. There is a chiaroscuro cut of this by Ugo da Carpi.
- St. Peter and St. Paul healing the lame Man; after Raphael; fine.
- A set of thirteen plates of Christ and the Apostles.

MAZZUOLA, GIROLAMO, whose real name was BEDOLO, but who took the name of his father-in-law, Pietro Ilario Mazzuoli, was born at San Lazzaro, near Parma, in the first half of the 16th century. He studied under his cousin Parmigiano, and became an imitator of his style. Works by him are to be seen in the Galleries of Berlin, Dresden, Paris, and Parma. He was still living at Parma in 1566, but apparently died soon afterwards. His son ALESSANDRO, who died in 1608, was a feeble imitator of his father.

MAZZUOLI, GIUSEPPE, called IL BASTARUOLO, was born at Ferrara about the year 1525, and was a fellow-student with Giovanni Francesco Surcli, in the school of Dosso Dossi. He acquired the name of Il Bastaruolo from the profession of his father, who was a dealer in grain. His pictures were in such estimation, that there is scarcely a public building in his native city which does not possess some works of his. In the cathedral there is a fine picture of the 'Virgin and Child, with Angels'; in San Maurelio an 'Ascension,' one of his best works; in the Jesuits' Church, an 'Annunciation,' and a 'Madonna, with Mary Magdalene and St. John'; but perhaps his best known performance is a 'St. Barbara and St. Ursula,' with a number of female figures, in the Conservatorio of St. Barbara. Giuseppe (he has sometimes been erroneously called Filippo) was drowned in the Po in 1589.

MEADOWS, ROBERT MITCHELL, an English engraver in the second half of the 18th century, who published some lectures on engraving. He worked for Boydell's 'Shakespeare Gallery,' and there are plates by him after Westall, Hamilton, Lawrence, &c. He was already dead in 1812.

MECARINO, IL. See BECCAFUMI.

MECHAU, JAKOB WILHELM, a German painter and engraver, was born at Leipsic in 1745. He was for some time a pupil of Bernard Rode and Le Sueur, at Berlin, and afterwards frequented the Academy at Leipsic, where he studied under Casanova. In 1776 he went to Rome, and improved his style by studying the works of Claude de Lorrain and Philipp Hackert. On his return to his native city in 1780 he became a member of the Academy, and after a second visit to Rome in 1790 he settled at Dresden, where he died in 1808. He painted history and landscapes, in which he acquired considerable reputation in Germany. The following are among his works:

- View of Castel Gandolfo.
- Landscape near the Tiber, with Cincinnatus.
- The Flight into Egypt.

He is, however, more generally known as an engraver. He etched several plates, some of which are from his own designs, and engraved a variety of views in Italy in aquatint. Among others, we have the following prints by him:

- St. Michael vanquishing the Demon; Mechau fec. aqua forti.
- The Resurrection of Lazarus. Mechau fec. 1761.
- The Adoration of the Shepherds; after C. Schut.
- A Dance of Nymphs and Fauns; after Giulio Carpioni.
- A set of six Italian Landscapes; in the style of Swaenevelt. 1792.
- A set of six Views in and near Rome. 1792, 1793.

He signed his prints J. M. f., or M inv. ac de G. Sc. (Mechau invenit ac De Geyser sculpsit).

MECHEL, CHRISTIAN VON, was a native of Basle, in Switzerland, where he was born in 1737. After studying under various German masters he visited Paris in 1757, and, eight years later, went to Italy, where he was received a member of the Academy at Florence. Subsequently he returned to his native country and settled at Basle, carrying on considerable business as a dealer in works of art. In 1806 he was elected a member of the Academy at Berlin, where he died in 1815. The following are among his best plates:

PORTRAITS.

- The Emperor Joseph II. on horseback, reviewing his troops; after J. C. Brand.
- Frederick II. King of Prussia, on horseback; the companion.
- General Elliot, Lord Heathfield.
- Caspar Lavater.

- His own Portrait.

MECHELEN, JAN VAN, a Flemish painter who flourished in the 17th century. He was a pupil of Schoof. He was made master of the Guild at Antwerp in 1609, and he is named for the last time in 1627-8.

MECHELN. The name of this artist is affixed to a portrait of Pope Urban VIII., dated 1623.

MECHOPHANES, an ancient Greek painter, was a disciple of Pansias. His manner, we are told, was dry and hard, but this defect was in a great degree compensated by extreme correctness of design.

MECKENEN, ISRAEL VON, (MECKEN, MECK, MECHELN, MEESTER, MEKENICK, METRO, MENTZ, VAN MECHELEN, DE MALINES, MECHELIENSIS, DE MAYENCE, MOGUNTIVS, DE MUNSTER). There were two artists of this name, father and son, both of whom lived at Bocholt, where they had the right of citizenship. The father was probably born at Mecheln, a small village between Zutphen and Cleves, about 1440. He was a goldsmith and engraver, while his son was a painter and engraver. In Bocholt is a tomb bearing the name of Israel, and the date March 13, 1503. This is generally assigned to the son, but Kranim mentions an engraving bearing the date 1517. In the annals of the town of Bocholt there are records of Meckenen from 1482 to 1498, one of which speaks of Ida as the wife of Israel. As engravers father and son probably worked together. It has not been found practicable to distinguish precisely the prints of the elder Meckenen from those of his son. M. Heineken estimates the number of their prints at about two hundred and fifty. They are usually signed with the initials I. M. or I. V. M. or Israhel V. M., or sometimes at length, Israhel van Mekenen Goldschmit, or Israhel zu B.ckholt; the letters in the Gothic character. The younger one seems to have been the painter.

The British Museum possesses a very fine set of their engravings, which fills three volumes. The series known as the 'Life of the Virgin' is considered their best work. There are also four drawings in the British Museum:

- A Group of six draped Female Figures.
- A Man standing with a Book in his hand.
- An Entombment.
- A Holy Family.

The following are among their most remarkable prints:

- The Portrait of Israel von Meckenen the elder, with a beard, and a kind of turban; signed Israhel von Meckenen Goldschmit.
- The Portraits of Israel von Meckenen the younger and his Wife; inscribed Figuracio facierum Israhelis et Ide Uxoris, I. V. M.
- A set of Prints of the Life of Christ. These, as well as the two following prints, are supposed to be some of the earliest works of the elder Meckeln.
- The Descent of the Holy Ghost.
- St. Luke painting the Virgin.
- Judith with the Head of Holofernes. In the background is a battle, with cannons, and other warlike instruments.
- The Death of the Virgin.
- The Virgin standing upon a Crescent, crowned by Angels.
- The Annunciation; the Angel holds a Scroll, on which is inscribed A.V.E. G.R.A.

The Virgin seated, in a landscape, embracing the Infant, and St. Joseph reposing. On the right of the print is a Grasshopper, on which account it is called the 'Virgin with the Grasshopper.' The same subject has been engraved by Albrecht Dürer, and copied from him by Marc Antonio.

The Virgin and Infant surrounded by four Angels. 1480. The Virgin seated, holding the Infant, with a garden-wall in the background, inscribed in Gothic letters, Ave potissima Maria. The same is engraved by Schongauer.

The Feast of Herod; Herodias with the Head of St. John. Herod's Cruelty.

The Scourging of Christ.

The Crucifixion; Israhel, M.; with a light ground.

The Crucifixion; Israhel, V. M.; with a dark ground.

St. George and the Dragon; I. V. M.

St. Jerome seated in a room, pointing to a Skull which lies on the table. This is considered one of their best prints. It has been copied by Lucas van Leyden.

St. Anthony tormented by Devils. The same subject is engraved by Martin Schongauer.

The Death of Lucretia.

A Man and a Woman walking, with Death behind a tree, shaking an hour-glass. This print has been copied by Albrecht Dürer and others.

Several single Figures of male and female Saints.

A Woman singing, and a Man playing on the Lute.

A Man playing on the Organ.

Three naked Women, with a Globe hanging above them. Albrecht Dürer and others have copied this print.

A Man holding a Skull, inscribed Respice finem.

A Cup, richly ornamented. The same has been engraved by Schongauer.

A variety of goldsmith's ornaments, and a great number of other subjects.

MEDA, GIUSEPPE, a Milanese painter, who flourished at the end of the 16th century. He seems to have been a pupil of B. Campi, but he gained more reputation as an architect than as a painter.

MEDICI, PIETRO, was born at Florence in 1586, and was a scholar of Lodovico Cardi, called Cigoli. By the instruction of that master, he became a reputable painter of history, and was the author of several altar-pieces for the churches at Florence. He died in 1648.

MEDINA, ANDRES DE, was a painter of Seville, and a disciple of Juan del Castillo. He etched several sacred subjects, amongst others, in 1663, the image of our Lady 'de la Soterraña,' in the church of St. Nicolas at Seville. Medina died in 1663.

MEDINA, JOHN, portrait painter, born in 1721. He was a grandson of Sir J. B. Medina, and practised in Edinburgh and London. Copying and picture-cleaning occupied much of his time. He died at Edinburgh in 1796.

MEDINA, SIR JOHN BAPTIST, the son of Medina de l'Asturias, a captain in the Spanish service, was born at Brussels in 1660. He was a scholar of François Duchastel, and afterwards improved himself by studying the works of Rubens. When he was twenty-six years of age he came to England, and for a time painted portraits with some slight success. He was invited to visit Scotland, under the patronage of the Earl of Leven, who procured him many commissions; and he painted the portraits of many of the Scotch nobles. At Wentworth Castle there is a large picture of the first Duke of Argyll, with his two sons, John and Archibald. The portrait of Medina, by himself; was sent to the Grand Duke of Tuscany by the Duke of Gordon, and was placed in the Florentine Gallery. He occasionally painted history and landscapes, and the plates in a folio edition of 'Paradise Lost' (1688) were designed by him. Medina was knighted by the Duke of Queensberry, when Lord High Commissioner. He died at Edinburgh in 1711. Some of his portraits have been engraved.

MEDINA, MOISE CASIMIR, a portrait painter, was born at San Felipe in 1671, and died at Valencia in 1748. In early life he painted history, but without success.

MEDINA Y VALBUENA, PEDRO DE, was a painter of Seville about 1620. He was a pupil of Juan del Castillo, and friend and fellow-pupil of Murillo, whom he assisted in forming the Academy of Seville, in which he afterwards filled various offices. He painted and gilded several retablos, and being dexterous in water-colours, he executed in 1673-4 many flags for the royal fleet of New Spain. The year of his death is unknown.

MEDLAND, THOMAS, an English engraver in the latter part of the 18th and the beginning of the 19th centuries. He was chiefly engaged on landscape and topography, and occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy up to 1822. In his latter years he taught drawing at the East India College, Hertford. MEDLEY, SAMUEL, a painter, was born at Liverpool in 1769. He was a follower of Reynolds and Gainsborough. In 1811 he had to abandon art by medical advice. He died in 1857. Some of his works were exhibited in the Royal Academy. He painted the picture representing the Medical Society of London in Session; Dr. Lettsom speaking, and Jenner, the discoverer of vaccination, in the background, which now hangs in the Society's Rooms in Chandos St., Cavendish Square.

MEE, (Mrs.) ANNE, an English miniature painter, born in the last half of the 18th century. She was the daughter of John Foldsone, a painter, who died young, and through an unfortunate marriage had to work to support her family. Her works appeared at the Academy from 1815 to 1836. She obtained a good practice, and had many commissions from George IV. She died, very old, in 1851.

MEEN, MARGARET, an English flower painter in water-colours in the second half of the 18th century. Her works appeared at the Academy from 1775 to 1785. There is a flower-piece by her, dated 1806, at the South Kensington Museum. Her work shows considerable vigour and ability.

MEERT, PIETER, (or MEERTE,) was born at Brussels in 1619, for we are told in the Gulden Cabinet of De Bie, that he was forty-two when that was published, in 1661. Meert had a considerable reputation as a portrait painter, imitating the style of Van Dyck. He died at Brussels in 1669. In the Museum at Brussels there is a fine group of portraits by him. Others of his works are in the halls of the city guilds. A 'Sea Captain with his Wife sitting on the Seashore,' in the Berlin Museum, is perhaps the best of his known works.

MEERTENS, ABRAHAM, (MEERTE and MERTEN,) a painter, born at Middlebourg in 1757. He painted birds, flowers, and landscapes, and was one of the original founders of the Academy of his native town. He died in 1823.

MEHLEM. See MELEM.

MEHUS, LIEVEN, (or MEUS,) was born at Oudenarde in 1630. The troubles which soon afterwards took place there obliged his family to leave Flanders, and they settled at Milan, where he received some instruction from the Flemish artist named Carlo, then resident in that city. At an early age he visited Florence, where he was placed under the tuition of Pietro da Cortona, who was at that time employed by the Grand Duke Ferdinand II. in the Palazzo Pitti. After a time he left Florence secretly, and entering the army of Christine of Savoy, he served three years as a soldier. On his return to Florence he was again taken under the protection of the Duke, and later on, was employed by the Marquis Gerini to ornament his palace, in conjunction with Ciro Ferri, who had been his fellow-student under Pietro da Cortona. Here he painted his 'Bacchus and Ariadne.' Although he was more engaged on the palaces than the churches, he was chosen to paint the dome of La Pace, in which he acquitted himself with credit. He was afterwards employed in the Palazzo Pitti, where he painted a 'Sacrifice of Abraham.' The autograph portrait of Mehns is in the collection of Painters in the Florentine Gallery. He died at Florence in 1691.

MEI, BERNARDINO, was a native of Siena, and flourished from the year 1636 till 1676. It is not known under whom he studied, but the Padre della Valle, who had seen several of his works, says his style sometimes resembles that of the Carracci, and sometimes of Guercino. There are some of his pictures in the churches at Siena. One of his best performances is a ceiling in fresco, an 'Aurora,' in the Casa Bandinelli. He died at Rome.

He furnished designs for the fables of La Fontaine and Gellert, the poems of Bürger, &c. He died in 1803.

MEIL, JOHANN WILHELM, a German designer and engraver, was born at Altenbourg in 1733. He first studied the sciences, but on visiting Berlin he conceived a strong preference for art, and zealously took to the practice of drawing and painting and the use of the graver. He was for the most part his own instructor, and engraved 667 vignettes and book ornaments, from his own designs, also numerous other plates, in a neat, spirited style, in which he appears to have been emulous of imitating the works of Della Bella. He was highly esteemed in the theatre at Berlin for his knowledge of costumes. The design 'A Sailor Drinking' exists in a wood-cut by J. F. Unger. His works are signed with J. W. M., J. W. M. inv. or a monogram. In 1791 he was rector, and in 1798 vice-director, of the Academy at Berlin. He died there in 1805. Among a variety of other prints we have the following by him:

A set of eight small plates of Heads and Caricatures; scarce.

Four of Quack-doctors and Ballad-singers; in the manner of Dietrich.

A set of ten Vignettes for the Poem of 'Joseph,' by Bitaubé.

Twelve Allegorical Vignettes.

MEISTER, SIMON, born at Coblenz in 1803, was a disciple of H. Vernet. He established himself at Cologne in 1833, and distinguished himself as a painter of battles, animals, and portraits, which are carried out with vigour, but with some looseness of hand. He died at Cologne in 1844. The Wallraf Reichartz Museum at Cologne contains by him:

The Portrait of King William IV. of Prussia, as Crown Prince (lithographed by J. B. Hützer).
Lions Fighting.

He generally signed with his full name, but also with a monogram. His brother NICOLAS MEISTER was also a painter, and assisted him in his work.

Sketch on the Untersberg.

MEL, GIOVANNI DA, was the son of Antonio Rosso, and was living at Cadore and Belluno in the 16th century. His earliest picture is dated 1521; he was still at Belluno in 1548. The dates of his birth and death are both uncertain. Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcasselle assign to Giovanni the frescoes in the choir of San Lorenzo at Selva di Cadore, which are dated 1544.

MELA, ANTONIO, was a native of Verona, born in 1700. He was a pupil of Prunati, and with him painted several historical pictures. He also painted altar-pieces. He died in 1742.

MELAN. See MELLAN.

MELANI, GIUSEPPE and FRANCESCO, born at Pisa about 1680. These brothers were natives of Pisa. Giuseppe, a scholar of Camillo Gabrielli, was a reputable painter of history, as is evident from his large picture in oil of the 'Death of S. Ranieri,' in the cathedral at Pisa. His chief merit is in fresco painting, in which he never appears to more advantage than when he paints the figures in the architectural views of his brother Francesco, which are modelled on the style of Pietro da Cortona. Francesco was esteemed one of the ablest painters of perspective of his time. The best-known performance of the brothers is the vault of San Matteo at Pisa. Francesco died in 1742; Giuseppe in 1747.

MELANO. See JACOBINI, GIOV.

MELANTHIUS, (or MELANTHUS,) a pupil of Pamphilus and Apelles, is said by Pliny to have painted in only four colours. He is also mentioned by Plutarch and Quintilian. His school was frequented by numerous disciples, and he wrote some treatises on art.

MELANZIO was a local painter of Montefalco, and one of Perugino's pupils. Of his birth and death nothing is known. He was a fourth-rate artist, of whose paintings examples may be seen in the cathedral at Montefalco, and in the monastery of Subiaco.

MELAR, ADRIAN, was a Flemish engraver, who resided at Antwerp about the year 1650. He attempted to imitate the style of Paul Pontius, but with very little success. We have several portraits by him, among which are Charles I. of Spain, and Frederick III. of Denmark. He also engraved a plate representing 'St. Michael overcoming the Evil Spirit,' after Rubens.

MELBOGI. See GOSSAERT.

MELBYE, D. H. ANTON, a Danish marine painter, born at Copenhagen in 1818. He was originally a shipwright, then became a musician, and finally devoted himself to painting, studying under Eckersberg at Düsseldorf. In 1840 he first exhibited three pictures at Charlottenburg, and gained the patronage of Christian VI. He migrated in 1847 to Paris, where he attracted the notice of Louis Philippe, and in 1853 made his way to Constantinople, where he was employed by the Sultan. Returning to France he gained the favour of Napoleon III., from whom he received the Legion of Honour in 1854. He died in Paris in 1875. Among his works are :

Copenhagen.	Gallery.	The Eddystone Lighthouse. 1846.
"	"	Sea-fight between Danes and Swedes in 1677 at Kjøga, 1855.
Stockholm.	National Gallery.	The French Steamer 'Le Forfait.' 1866.

MELCHIOR, HEINRICH ANTON, son of Johann Peter Melchior the architect, studied first at the Academy of Munich, and afterwards went to Berlin, where he won the Academy prize with his allegory of the peace between France and Prussia. He died young in 1796.

MELCHIOR, WILHELM, born at Nymphenburg in 1813, was an excellent painter of animals and of hunting parties. One of his best pictures represents a cat, which has crept up to a plate of fish, gripped by the head in the claws of a crab. Other pictures are in the new Pinacothek at Munich. Melchior died at Munich in 1860. His brother JOSEF, who was born in 1810, had some repute as a painter of horses.

MELCHIORI, GIOVANNI PAOLO, was born at Rome in 1664, and was brought up in the school of Carlo Maratti. He painted historical subjects, and was employed for some of the public edifices at Rome. His most esteemed work is his picture of the prophet Ezekiel, in the Lateran Church. He was living in 1718.

MELCHIORI, MELCHIOR, an obscure painter of history, who was born at Castelfranco in 1641. He worked at Venice and Castelfranco, and died in 1686.

MELDEMANN, NICOLAUS, flourished at Nuremberg in 1529-32, and was a card painter and wood engraver.

MELDER, GERARD, was born at Amsterdam in 1693. He showed an early inclination for art, and when a boy neglected the usual amusements of his age to devote his time to drawing. He acquired some miniatures by Rosalba Carriera, and by copying and imitating them, he arrived at great proficiency in that branch of painting. His productions are landscapes (sea-coasts and mountains) in water-colour and Indian ink. He also drew the portraits of many of the principal persons of his time, and was especially noted for his miniatures in enamel, both original and after Dou and Van der Werff. He died at Utrecht in 1754.

MELDOLLA, ANDREA, (or MEDULA,) called IL SCHIAVONE, was born at Sebenico, in Dalmatia, in 1522. He painted portraits, history and historical genre, and decorative compositions, in a style which bears strong traces of the influence of Titian, Tintoretto, and Giorgione. It is said that by Titian Meldolla was rescued from obscurity, and put in a way to reach the success of his later years. He was a good colourist and a man of considerable imagination, but his works suffer from hasty composition and weak drawing. One of his best pictures is the 'Birth of Jupiter' in the possession of the Earl of Wemyss. Schiavone died in 1582. The following list includes the more accessible of his good works :

Berlin.		The Parable of the Unrighteous Steward.
"		The Parable of the Vineyard.

MELDOLLA, ANDREA, an Italian designer and engraver, who flourished between 1540 and 1550. There has been much discussion respecting his works, but very little has been accurately ascertained of his history. Until a recent period the etchings now allowed to be by him were attributed to Andrea Meldolla, called Schiavone; or to Francesco Mazzuola (Parmigiano), because the greater number of them are evidently from pictures or drawings by that painter. Zani claims the honour of making the discovery that Meldolla was a different artist from Schiavone or Parmigiano. He establishes the fact that Meldolla was the engraver of the print of 'Heliodorus driven from the Temple,' from a drawing by Parmigiano after the painting by Raphael. He had heard in the course of his researches respecting this master, that an impression was in the possession of Count Antonio Remondini, which had the inscription Andrea Scлавonus Meldolla fecit. To ascertain the fact he wrote to the Count, who replied, "It is true that I possess the cited print of 'Heliodorus,' but without the Scлавonus." Andrea's monogram or other signature is often so slightly put in that it is difficult to find. But sometimes the word 'Meldolla' is very distinct, and in a few instances 'Andrea' also. The following list, with details now omitted, was supplied by the late Messrs. Smith to a former edition of this work. Down to No. 87 it is arranged in the order of Bartsch. It is now generally believed that the plates on which Meldolla etched were of pewter, which will account for the scratches and corrosions that appear on the later impressions, and for the frequent alterations made in the treatment of the subject and the accessories.

MELEAGER. See MOMMERS.

MELEM, JOHANN VON, (or MEHLEM,) painted in Cologne during the first half of the 16th century. It has been supposed that he was a native of the village of Mehlem, near Bonn, and, from an inscription on his autograph portrait in the Munich Gallery, that his birth took place in the year 1493. He was a pupil of Jan van Scorel. His only authentic work is the portrait above alluded to.

MELEUN, Comte DE, was a French amateur engraver, mentioned by Basan. He lived about the year 1760, and etched several small plates after Berchem, Callot, and other masters.

MELGAREJO, Fray GERONIMO, an Augustine friar and painter of Granada, who flourished about the middle of the 17th century, left in his convent two pictures of which Cean Bermudez praises the composition. The first represents four monks of the order and sundry ecclesiastics, carrying the bones of their patron saint in solemn procession.

MELINGUE, ETIENNE MARIN, born at Caen in 1808, was an actor, sculptor, and painter. He died at Veulles in Calvados in 1875.

MELINI, CARLO DOMENICO, (or MELLINI,) was an Italian engraver, born at Turin about the year 1745, but chiefly resident in Paris, where he became a pupil of Beauvarlet. We have several plates by him, among which are the following :

Portrait of the King of Sardinia.
The Children of the Prince of Turenne; after Drouais.
La helle Source; after Natier.
The Education of Cupid; after Lagrenée.
Morning, a landscape; after Louthembourg.

MELISSI, AGOSTINO, was a native of Florence, and flourished about the year 1675. According to Baldinucci he was much employed by the Grand Duke in painting cartoons for tapestry, from the designs of Andrea del Sarto. He also painted several pictures of his own composition; among which the above-mentioned author commends his 'Peter denying Christ,' in the Palazzo Gaburri.

MELLAN, CLAUDE, (or MELAN,) an eminent French draughtsman and engraver, born at Abbeville about 1601. His disposition for art discovering itself at an early age, he was sent to Paris, where he studied under Simon Vouet. An inclination for engraving induced him to attempt the management of the burin, which he soon handled with extraordinary facility. He executed several plates from the busts and statues in the Giustiniani Collection. The greater part of his work at Rome is in the usual manner, with the strokes crossed a second and a third time, as the strength of the shadows require. After his return to Paris he adopted a novel and singular method of working, with single parallel lines, without any cross strokes over them, variety of light and shade being rendered by variations in the thickness of the lines. By this method he acquired considerable celebrity, but his permanent success is, of course, to be attributed to the dexterity with which he handled his tools, rather than to the peculiarity of his process. His 'Rebekah,' after Tintoretto, is full of colour; it is evidently engraved from the work of a great colourist; yet it is only in some of the accessories that cross lines are introduced. Mellan lived to the advanced age of ninety, and died in Paris in 1688. The following are his best prints :

Romae*, &c., or a monogram.

MELLIN, CHARLES, (MESLIN,) painter of Lorraine, was a pupil of Vouet, and afterwards went to Rome, where he spent the greater part of his life. He was called Lorenesse. He painted historical and mythological works, and flourished between 1636 and 1693.

MELLING, ANTON IGNAZ, born at Carlsruhe in 1763, was instructed in art by his uncle, Joseph Melling, at Strasburg, and afterwards visited Italy, Egypt, and Smyrna. On his return in 1803 he became landscape painter to the Empress Josephine, and subsequently painter to Louis XVIII., and a member of the Legion of Honour. He died in Paris in 1831. Among his published works are :

'Voyage pittoresque dans les Pyrénées françaises.'
'Voyage pittoresque de Constantinople et des rives du Bosphore.'

In conjunction with his daughter, Madame ADELE CLERGET, who was also an artist, he produced an 'Entry of Louis XIII. into Paris,' and a 'Distribution of the Colours to the National Guards.'

MELLING, JOSEPH, studied in Paris under Vanloo, and afterwards went to Strasburg. In 1777 he became court painter at Carlsruhe, where he died at the end of the century.

MELLISH, THOMAS, an English marine painter, who practised about the middle of the 18th century.
MELLUEL. See MALWEL.

MELONE, ALTOBELLO, a distinguished contemporary of Boccaccio, was living at Cremona in the beginning of the 16th century. He painted seven frescoes from the lives of Christ and the Virgin in the cathedral of Cremona in 1517. The organ shutters at San Michele, in the same town, which represent the Virgin and Gabriel, and SS. Anthony and Paul the Hermit, are by this artist. He was also a portrait painter, and examples of his work may be found in the public galleries of Stuttgart, Bergamo, Naples, Venice, and Milan. The National Gallery possesses an excellent though somewhat bizarre picture of 'Christ and the Two Disciples going to Emmaus' by him. Panni, in his account of the pictures in Cremona, describes a picture in the cathedral divided into two subjects, 'The Slaughter of the Innocents' and 'The Flight into Egypt,' which was signed Altobellus de Melonibus P. MDXVII. Vasari, too, in his life of Garofalo, mentions Melone as superior to most of the Lombard painters of his time. He is praised also by Baldinucci, Zaist, and Grasselli.

MELONI, ANTONIO, a native of Mantua, who went to Rome in 1656 and worked in the school of Trevisani. He painted historical subjects, and died about 1700.

MELONI, FRANCESCO ANTONIO, an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Bologna in 1676. He was instructed by P. A. Paderna, J. Monti, and Marc Antonio Franceschini; but not succeeding to his wishes as a painter, he etched some plates after the designs of Franceschini, which encouraged him to devote himself entirely to engraving. He died at Vienna in 1713. His works are signed F.A.M. del. et inv., F.A.M.F., &c. Among others we have the following by him:

The Adoration of the Shepherds; after C. Cignani.
Aurora; from a ceiling painted at Forli; by the same.
Diana and Endymion; after Franceschini.

MELONI, MARCO, of Carpi, is the author of a 'Madonna with SS. John the Baptist, Bernard, Francis, and Jerome,' dated 1504, in the Gallery of Modena.

MELONI, PIETRO ANTONIO, born at Imola in 1761, was a pupil of Dardane and Gottarelli. He painted historical subjects, and was on the household of Pope Pius VI. He founded an Academy at Ancona, and died in 1836.

MELOTIUS, M. DE. See PALMEZZANO.

MELOZZO DA FORLI. See DEGLI AMBROSI.

MELZER, JOHANN GOTTLIEB, was born in Prussia about 1680, and after remaining some time in his own country he went to Hamburg, where he distinguished himself as a portrait painter, and where he died about 1730.

MELZI, FRANCESCO, Il Conte, the pupil and friend of Leonardo da Vinci, was born at Milan about 1491. He was of noble birth, and practised the art of painting as a delightful employment rather than as a profession. No really authentic work by him has come down to us, but many are ascribed to him in various galleries and private collections. The 'Vertumnus and Pomona' at Berlin has more to be said for it, perhaps, than any other, although 'Lermolieff' will not accept it as a Melzi. Melzi followed Leonardo to France, and attended him at his death, and succeeded to the whole of his drawings, instruments, books, and manuscripts. He furnished Vasari and Lomazzo with notes on Leonardo's life, and it is to him that posterity is indebted for the preservation of the valuable collection of the master's writings. He died in 1568.

MEMLINC, HANS, was born about 1430—1440, perhaps at Memling, near Aschaffenberg, in Germany, or at Memelynck, in Holland. He was probably settled at Bruges in 1471, certainly in 1478. In May 1480 he was in possession of house property in the street now called Sint Jooris Straet. In the town accounts of 1480 he appears among the 247 burghesses who advanced money towards the carrying on of the war between the Emperor and the King of France. Memlinc was married; his wife's Christian name was Anne, and she bore him three children, two boys and a girl, John, Nicolas, and 'Nielkin,' which may have been short for Cornelia. Anne was already dead on the 10th September, 1487, and Hans followed her, as Mr. Weale has ascertained from the orphan registers of the town, between the 1st June, 1492, and the 10th December, 1495. Vasari says Memlinc was the scholar of Roger van der Weyden, and in the collection of pictures in the possession of Margaret of Austria, once at Mechlin, there was a triptych of which the centre was by Roger and the wings by Hans. The names of two of Memlinc's pupils have been ascertained: Hannekin Verhanneman, son of Nicolas, and Passcier van der Meersch, son of Passcier. The romantic tale first told by Descamps, which narrates how Memlinc fought as a soldier in the battle of Nancy, and returned grievously wounded to Bruges, to be nursed by the sisters of the Hospital of St. John, finds too little support before the year in which Descamps wrote (1713) to be accepted now. Mr. Weale, however, found in a MS. of the 17th century a statement to the effect that Memlinc painted one of his pictures for the Hospital out of gratitude for the services rendered to him by its members. For harmonious frankness of colour and purity of expression, Memlinc must be put at the head of the old Flemish painters. The following list of his works is divided into two classes, the first containing all those of which authenticity is undoubted, in their approximate chronological order:

CLASS I.

Florence. Uffizi. Virgin Enthroned. (Triptych.)
London. Nat. Gallery. St. John the Baptist and St. Lawrence. (The doubts expressed as to these two panels seem to be ill founded.)
Lubeck. Cathedral. The Crucifixion; a triptych. (The largest production of the school, but only partly from the hand of Memlinc.)
Madrid. Museum. Triptych ('Adoration of the Magi,' 'Presentation in the Temple,' and the 'Nativity'). (Much injured, and parts only by Memlinc's own hand.)

MEMMI. See MARTINI.

MENA, FELIPE GIL DE, was a Spanish painter, born at Valladolid in 1600. He studied under Vanderhamen at Madrid, and was himself a teacher. At his death, in 1674, he left a large collection of prints and models, valued at 3000 ducats. His most curious work, representing an 'Auto-da-Fé at Valladolid,' was painted for the Inquisition. His portraits of the painter Diaz and his wife resemble Pantoja in style. In 1444 he painted a series on the life of St. Francis for the convent of that saint, and some of the pictures are now in the Museum at Valladolid.

MENABUOLI, GIUSTO DI GIOVANNI DE', called PADOVANO, or JUSTUS OF PADUA, was born at Florence in the earlier half of the 14th century. He was a follower of Giotto, and studied the works which that master had executed in Padua, of which city Giusto was made a citizen in 1375. He is supposed to have executed several frescoes in Padua, but those in the baptistery of the cathedral, and in the chapel of St. Luke, in the church of Sant' Antonio, which were formerly ascribed to him, are now declared to be the work of two unimportant painters, who were probably his pupils—Giovanni and Antonio da Padova. The only authenticated picture by him is a small triptych in the National Gallery; it represents in the centre, the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' with various saints. On the interior sides of the wings are the 'Birth' and 'Crucifixion of our Lord,' and the 'Annunciation.' On the exterior wings are various scenes in the life of the Virgin before her marriage. The picture, which was formerly in the Wallerstein Collection, and was presented to the National Gallery by the Queen, is signed on the back 'Justus pinxit in archâ,' and dated in the front MCCCXLVII. Giusto died in the year 1400.

MENAGEOT, FRANÇOIS GUILLAUME, (or MESNAGEOT,) an historical painter, was born of French parents in London in 1744. He worked successively under Augustin, Deshayes, Boucher, and Vien. He distinguished himself by his classic compositions, and became in 1780 a member, and in 1781 one of the professors of the Academy, and in 1787 director of the French School at Rome. After having spent eight years at Vicenza he returned to France in 1809, and became a member of the Institute, dying in Paris in 1816. Among the best of his works are:

Nebuchadnezzar ordering Zedekiah's sons to be put to death.

The Death of Leonardo da Vinci.

Industry stopping the flight of Time. (Louvre.)

Mars and Venus. (St. Petersburg.)

Polyxenus taking leave of Hecuba.

Astyanax torn from the arms of his Mother.

Cleopatra at the Tomb of Marc Antony.

Diana and Venus.

Dagobert giving orders for the construction of the Church of St. Denis.

MENAGEOT, ROBERT, an engraver, was born in Paris in 1748. He was for some time a pupil of Boucher, and at first practised painting, but he afterwards devoted himself entirely to engraving. We have several plates by him, executed in the dotted manner, some of which were engraved for Boydell during a residence in London. Among others we have the following prints by him:

Friendship; a circular print; after Correggio.

Innocence; the companion; Menageot fecit.

The Virgin and Infant, with St. Elizabeth; after Guido.

An African Woman; after Louthembourg.

MENANT, P., a French engraver, flourished in Paris about the year 1715. In conjunction with Raymond, Fonbonne, Scotin, and others, he executed part of the plates of the 'Views of the Palace and Gardens at Versailles.'

MENAROLA, CRISTOFORO, an Italian painter, who flourished at Vicenza in 1727. He was a pupil of Volpato, and painted historical subjects. In the churches of Vicenza several of his pictures are to be seen.

MENAROLA, CRESTANO, was a painter of Bassano, who produced gigantic figures in the style of Michelangelo, and composed in the manner of Paolo Veronese. He died in 1640.

MENDEZ, DE HARO SOTOMAYOR GUZMAN BERNARDO INCA, a native of Cordoba, is mentioned by Bermudez as working in 1790 in pen-and-ink.

MENDEZ, JUAN, was a Spanish engraver who flourished at Seville, and in 1627 executed an architectural frontispiece, with Ionic columns and several figures, designed by one Juan de Herrera for Rodrigo Caro's edition of the 'Apocryphal Chronicle' of Flavins Lucius Dexter.

MENDOZA, ESTEBAN HURTADO DE, a Spanish painter who lived at Seville in 1630. He painted religious subjects, and his pictures are to be found in the principal buildings of Seville. He was a Knight of the Order of St. James of Campostello.

MENEGHINO (or MENICHINO). See AMBROGI.

MENENDEZ, ANNA, daughter and pupil of Francisco Menendez, was born at Naples in 1714. She painted miniatures and scenes from 'Don Quixote.' In 1759 she was made a fellow of the Academy. Her sister CLARA, a portrait painter, was born at Naples in 1712, and died at Madrid in 1734.

MENENDEZ, FRANCISCO ANTONIO, was born at Oviedo in 1682, and at an early age joined his brother Miguel at Madrid. He proceeded to Italy in 1699, visiting Genoa, Milan, Venice, Rome, and Naples. On his return in 1717 he devoted himself to miniature painting, achieving great success in portraits of the royal family. In 1726 he addressed a memorial to the king on the scheme for establishing an Academy of Art, but died before the realization of his hopes by the creation of the Academy of St. Ferdinand in 1752. A votive picture of a 'Storm' by Menendez adorns the high altar of our Lady of Atocha.

MENENDEZ, JOSÉ AGOSTINO, son of Francisco Menendez, was born at Madrid, 1724. He resided at Cadiz, and practised miniature painting.

MENENDEZ, LUIS, also a son of Francisco Menendez, was born at Naples in 1716, and studied painting under his father, and afterwards at Rome. At Naples he presented two pictures to King Charles, who appointed him painter-in-ordinary. Returning to Madrid, he was employed by Ferdinand VI. to illuminate the choir books of the royal chapel. In 1773 he painted a 'Holy Family,' in miniature, for the portable oratory of the Princess of the Asturias. Although he painted several large devotional pictures, his favourite subjects were of a lower genre. As many as forty-four of his less ambitious works used to hang in the king's apartments at Aranjuez. Many good specimens are in the Royal and National Museums at Madrid, and in the latter collection is a portrait of himself, painted in a smooth and agreeable manner. He died at Madrid in 1780. In nearly all his pictures we find a dish of large Andalusian olives.

MENENDEZ, MIGUEL JACINTO, was born at Oviedo in 1679, and studied painting at Madrid. He was appointed painter to Philip V. in 1712. Amongst his principal pictures were two for the cloister of the Shod Carmelites, a 'Magdalene' in the Recoleta convent, and an 'Apostle' in the church of San Gil. His sketches for two compositions for the church of San Felipe Real were afterwards made use of by his friend Andres de la Calleja. A drawing by Menendez representing St. Isidore in pontifical robes, on horseback, slaying Moors, was tolerably engraved by Juan Bernabé Palomino.

MENESES, OSORIO FRANCISCO, born at Seville in 1630, was a pupil of Murillo's. He was president of the Seville Academy, for which he painted a 'Conception.' In the church of St. Martin, at Madrid, is an 'Elijah.' He died at Seville in 1705.

MENGELBURG, EGIDIUS, painter, was born at Cologne in 1770. In 1783 he studied at the Academy of Düsseldorf, returning to Cologne in 1787. From 1790 to 1800 he was engaged in painting portraits and copying pictures in the Düsseldorf Gallery. From 1800 to 1806 he resided at Elberfeld, and returned to Cologne in 1821, where he died in 1848.

MENGAZZINO. See SANTI, DOMENICO.

MENGOZZI-COLONNA, GIROLAMO, was born at Ferrara in 1688. He studied under A. Ferrari, and resided chiefly at Venice, where he painted in churches and palaces. He died in 1772.

MENGS, ANA. See CARMONA.

MENGS, ANTON RAFAEL, was born at Aussig, in Bohemia, in 1728. His father, Ismael Mengs, instructed him in the first rudiments of drawing, and having removed to Dresden whilst his son was young, young Mengs had an opportunity of improving himself, by studying the works of the best masters in that celebrated Gallery. When he was thirteen years of age his father took him to Rome, in 1741, where he was employed in copying, in miniature, some of the works of Raphael, for Augustus III., Elector of Saxony and King of Poland, which were sent to Dresden, and much admired. Mengs remained three years at Rome, where he studied under Marco Benefial and Seb. Conca, and on his return to Saxony was appointed one of the painters to the King-Elector, with a salary, and was permitted by his royal patron to visit Rome a second time, where he resided four years, and exhibited a large picture of the 'Holy Family' of his own composition, which gained him great reputation. He married at Rome (his bride being a beautiful peasant girl, Margaretha Quazzi, who had sat to him as a model), and was desirous of fixing his residence in that capital, but his father would not permit him to indulge his inclination, and he was compelled to return to Saxony, where he arrived in 1749. He remained three years at Dresden, where the tyranny of his father rendered his situation so distressing, that he found his health and spirits impaired, and he requested and received the king's permission to return to Rome. He was soon afterwards reduced to very embarrassed circumstances, by the discontinuance of his salary, which was stopped from the embarrassment of the king's finances occasioned by the war. He was working in Rome, at very low prices, when he was employed by the Duke of Northumberland to paint a copy of the celebrated 'School of Athens,' by Raphael. In 1754 he undertook the direction of the newly-established Art Academy in the Capitol. In 1787 he was engaged to paint the ceiling of the church of St. Eusebins, and soon afterwards he executed his fresco of 'Mount Parnassus,' in the Villa Albani, which has been finely engraved by Rafael Morghen. In an excursion he made to Naples, to execute a commission for the Elector of Saxony, he became known to the king, afterwards Charles III. of Spain, who, on his succession to the throne, invited Mengs to Madrid, with the offer of a very considerable appointment. This proposal was not refused, and he arrived at the Spanish court in 1761. His first undertaking was the ceiling of the king's antechamber, representing the Graces; and afterwards that of the queen's apartment, where he painted one of his most celebrated works, the 'Aurora,' a grand and beautiful composition. He was elected a member of the Academy of Madrid. The climate of Spain not agreeing with his constitution, he was permitted by the king to return to Rome, for the re-establishment of his health. On his arrival he was employed by Clement XIV. in the Vatican, where he painted two pictures in the Camera de' Papini. Mengs remained three years at Rome, and on his return to Madrid in 1773 was received with great kindness by his royal protector. It was soon after his return that he undertook the ceiling of the great saloon in the palace, on which he painted the 'Apotheosis of Trajan.' The fresco paintings of Mengs are greatly superior to his pictures in oil. Of the latter, perhaps the best is his picture of the 'Nativity,' in the royal collection of Spain. Mengs died at Rome in 1779. The following are some of his chief pictures:

MENGS, ISMAEL, a miniature painter, and father of Rafael Mengs, born at Copenhagen in 1690. He was the pupil of an English painter called Cooper. He was painter to the King of Poland and director of the Dresden Academy, where he died in 1764.

MENGS, JULIA, sister of Anton Rafael Mengs, was a miniature painter, and died in 1789.

MENGS, THERÈSE. See MARON.

MENHEERE, CORNELIS LAURENSZ, a Dutch marine painter, lived at the beginning of the 18th century. He resided at Flushing, and the greater part of his pictures are views of that city taken from the sea-coast.

He was an imitator, if not a scholar, of Pietro da Cortona, and painted history in the style of that master. In the church of Santa Chiara, in his native city, he painted two subjects from the life of the Virgin; and in San Lorenzo, an altar-piece which resembles the style of the Carracci. We have several spirited etchings by this artist, some of which are from his own designs; they are variously signed G.M., G.M.I.F., G.B.M.I., *G.M. del. Jo. MERCIER, PHILIP, was born of French parents at Berlin in 1689, and was brought up in the Academy there. After visiting France and Italy he went to Hanover, where he painted the portrait of Prince Frederick, son of George II., which he brought with him to England. When the Prince came over Mercier was appointed his painter, became a favourite, and was taken into his household, when by the prince's order he drew several of the royal family, particularly the three eldest princesses, his work being reproduced in mezzotint by J. Simon. After some years he lost the favour of the Prince of Wales, and was dismissed from his service. He afterwards lived in Covent Garden, painting portraits and pictures of domestic subjects in the style of Watteau, in whose manner he has left an etching of himself, with his wife and two children. Still later he spent some time at York, and then in Portugal and Ireland. He died in 1760. A portrait of Peg Woffington by him is at the Garrick Club, and he has also left one of Queen Anne. MERELLE, P., a portrait painter, who worked in Paris from 1660 to 1710. Several of his works were engraved.

MERIAN, DOROTHEA MARIA HENRIETTA, daughter of Maria Sibylla Merian, was born in 1678. She followed in the steps of her mother, and painted insects. She married the painter Xells, who lived at St. Petersburg. She retained through life the name of Merian, though her real maiden name was Graff. She died in 1745. Her sister, JOHANNA MARIA HELENA, was born at Frankfort in 1668. She also painted flowers and insects. She married a merchant named Herold, who was in business at Surinam. The date of her death is unknown.

MERIAN, GASPAR, was a native of Germany. He engraved a set of plates representing the 'Ceremonies at the Election of the Emperor Leopold,' published at Frankfort in 1660.

MERIAN, JAN MATTHÄUS, was the son of Matthäus Merian the younger. He was a miniature painter, and died at Frankfort in 1716.

MERIAN, MARIA SIBYLLA, the daughter of Matthäus Merian the elder, was born at Frankfort in 1647. She lost her father when she was only four years of age, but her mother having some time afterwards married Jacob Marel, a fruit and flower painter, he encouraged the disposition she discovered for drawing, and taught her the first rudiments of the art. Her father-in-law placed her under the care of Abraham Mignon, who had been his scholar, and who excelled in painting insects; and it was not long before she arrived at a perfection little short of her instructor. She usually painted in water-colours, on vellum. In 1665 she married Johann Andreas Graff, an artist of Nuremberg, who had been a scholar of Marel, and settled in that city. She died in 1717. The British Museum possesses two volumes of her drawings.

MERIAN, MATTHÄUS, the elder, an eminent draughtsman and engraver, was born at Basle in 1593. Having discovered an early disposition for art he was sent to Zurich, and placed under the tuition of Dietrich Meyer, a glass painter and engraver, with whom he studied four years. On leaving that master he was employed to make an etching of the frieze representing the 'Entry of the Duke of Lorraine into Nancy,' which he executed in twelve plates. From Zurich he visited Paris and Stuttgart. He also passed a short time in the Netherlands, and subsequently married the daughter of Theodor de Bry, an engraver at Oppenheim. He then worked at Basle until 1624, and etched a considerable number of landscapes, battles, and hunts; in the same year he returned to Frankfort, and engraved topographical plates of Heidelberg, Stuttgart, Schwalbach, &c., which he afterwards published at Frankfort, and which are the best of his works. They are etched from his own designs, in a slight free style, and finished with the graver, and give a perfect idea of the places they represent, though without much taste in the execution. He has the credit of having been the master of Hollar. Merian died at Schwalbach in 1650. Among the important works which he illustrated were, the Bible, Gottfried's 'Chronik,' Zeiller's 'Topographia' (1640-88), and 'Theatrum Europæum.' The following are his principal prints, which are sometimes marked with M M or one of these ciphers, .

MERIAN, MATTHÄUS, the younger, the son of Matthäus the elder, was born at Basle in 1621. At the age of fourteen he came to Frankfort, where he learnt the principles of painting from Joachim von Sandrart, whom he accompanied to Amsterdam in 1637 and to England in 1640. In the latter country he followed the style of Van Dyck, and after having travelled in the Netherlands, he went to Paris and Rome, and studied there, under Sacchi's direction, after the works of the old masters. He painted history and portraits, and in the latter line he was employed by the most distinguished personages in Germany. After the death of his father in 1650 he continued his business as a printseller at Frankfort, and engraved several plates for the 'Theatrum Europæum.' He died at Frankfort in 1687. Bartholomäus and Philipp Kilian, M. Küssel, and several others have engraved after his works. His son CASPAR was born in 1627. He was an engraver and assisted his father. MERICA, PETRUS A., generally called MERECINUS, (MIRICENUS, MURICINUS, &c.,) was a Flemish engraver, a native of Merica (perhaps Meereyck or Meeryck), and flourished about 1560-70. He engraved several eccentric and strange compositions, after Jerome Bosch, Brueghel, and others. There is also a portrait of Albrecht Dürer at the age of fifty-six, copied by him from a larger print. He marked his plates with the cipher ME. The name appears on several prints published by Jerome Cock; one has the date 1567, and is signed Pet. Mecerinus sc. This artist is said to be the same as Pieter Martini, a printseller of Antwerp. Among other plates there are by him:

A Bird's-eye View of Antwerp in four plates.

MÉRYON, CHARLES, sailor, engraver, and etcher, was born in Paris in 1821. His father, Charles Lewis Méryon, was an English physician, and his mother, Pierre Narcisse Chaspoux, a dancer at the opera. At five he went to school at Passy, and afterwards was taken by his mother to the south of France. In 1837 he entered the naval school at Brest, and two years later went to sea. While in the navy he had an opportunity of accumulating materials for use in the new profession which he finally adopted in 1846. In that year he settled in Paris, and became the pupil for a time of a painter named Phelippes, who was employed at the Ministère de Guerre. It was while he was struggling to paint a large historical picture on the strength of the hints given to him by Phelippes, that he was discovered to be suffering from the affection of the eyes known as Daltonism, which made him quite unfit to be a painter. He then entered the atelier of M. E. Bléry, the engraver, with whom he stayed six months, and after that began the series of etchings from the streets of Paris with which his name will always remain associated. In 1856 he went to Belgium on the invitation of the Duc d'Arenberg, of whose château at Enghien he made some drawings, but returned to Paris early in 1858, the mental disease by which he had long been threatened having then greatly developed itself. Two months later he was placed in the asylum at Charenton, the certificate declaring him to be "suffering from melancholy madness, aggravated by delusions." Here his health improved, and at the end of 1859 he left the asylum. For seven years he worked on, leading a curiously fitful life with the few whom he called his friends; but in 1866 his malady increased, and a second confinement became necessary. Méryon died at Charenton at the beginning of 1868, and was buried in the cemetery of the asylum. The following is a complete list of his etchings:

In 1829 he became the pupil of Amsler, who was professor of engraving in the Academy, and to this time belongs his fine engraving of the Madonna, after the altarpiece in the church of All Saints in Munich. He died from a fall on the Kaiser mountain in 1875. His cartoon engravings are picturesque. His chief plates are:

Billwiller, and, among his engravings, a 'Cupid in the Chariot of Victory,' after Domenichino. J. J. L. Billwiller has engraved after him. Merz died in 1807.

MESA, ALONSO DE, according to Palomino, was born at Madrid in 1628, and was a scholar of Alonso Cano. He painted several historical works for the public edifices in that capital, among them a series of pictures of the life of St. Francis, in the cloister of the Franciscans. He died at Madrid in 1668.

MESA, JUAN DE, was a Spanish painter, who resided at Madrid at the commencement of the 17th century. He painted for the college of the Jesuits de Alcalá de Henares a series of pictures illustrative of the 'Life of St. Ignatius Loyola' by Father Ribadeneyra, which were engraved in Flanders.

MESLIN, CHARLES, called LE LORRAIN, was a French landscape and historical painter and engraver. He was a pupil of Vouet, but spent most of his time in Italy. He died in 1650.

MESMER. See MÖSSMER.

MESNIL, ELIAS DU, (MÉNIL,) a French engraver, was born at Troyes in 1726. He was a pupil of Fessard, and engraved several plates after Mieris, Karel de Moor, and other Dutch masters.

MESQUIDA, GUILERMO, the son of a merchant of Minorca, was born at Palma about 1675, and studied at Rome under Carlo Maratti. So close was his imitation that his works were often confounded with his master's. At Venice he studied under an animal painter of local reputation. He went to Brussels, where he married, and met with some success. On his return to Italy he worked extensively at Bologna and Rome. In the latter city he became the master of Rosalba Salvioni. He died at Palma in 1747. Cean Bermudez praises his colouring. There are several paintings by him in the cathedral, in Sant' Eulalia, and in San Jaime, in his native town, where he spent the latter part of his life, and died in 1747.

MESSA, ALONSO DE. See MESA.

MESSINA, ANT. DA. See ANTONIO, ANTONELLO D'.

MESSINA, ONOFRIO DA. See GABRIELLO.

MESSINA, PINO DA, was living in the 16th century, and is said to have been a pupil of Antonello da Messina. It is recorded of this artist that he painted a panel of St. Sebastian (now lost) for the church of San Giuliano, Venice.

MESSINA, SALVO DA, was, according to Hakert, in his 'Memorie de' Pittori Messinesi,' the nephew of Antonello da Messina, and flourished about the year 1511. He is said by that author to have been a successful follower of the style of Raphael; and he mentions with distinction a picture by him, in the sacristy of the cathedral at Messina, representing the 'Death of the Virgin.'

MESSINESE, IL. See AVELLINO, GIULIO D'.

MESSMER, FRANZ, was born at Antholz, in the Puster Valley, in 1729, and studied under Martin von Mytens, and was one of the best portrait painters of his time. In 1765 he was at the court at Innsbruck, and in 1767 became a member of the Academy at Vienna, where we meet with his portrait of Schmutzer. He died at that city in 1773. Schmutzer engraved after him the portrait of J. von Sonnenfels.

MESSYS. See MASSYS.

METGER, J. J., is the name of an engraver, affixed to a portrait of Cardinal Giovanni Nitardo, in Priorata's 'History of the Emperor Leopold,' published in 1672.

METHODIUS, a monk of the Order of St. Basil, who in 863 went with St. Cyril to the court of the Duke Ratislaus of Bulgaria. He studied painting at Rome, and was employed by the Duke to decorate his palace with pictures. Whereupon the artist, we are told, painted a 'Last Judgment' with such power as to cause the Duke and his subjects to be baptized on the spot!

METRANA, ANNA, according to Orlandi, was a native of Turin. She flourished about the year 1718, and distinguished herself as a painter of portraits.

METRODORUS, the elder, was a Greek painter, philosopher, and probably writer on art. He flourished about B.C. 168. He was painter to Lucius Paulus Æmilius, the conqueror of Perseus of Macedonia, and tutor to his children.

METSU, GABRIEL, a Dutch painter of genre, was born at Leyden in 1630. He was the son of Jacob Metsu, a native of Belle in Flanders, and of his third wife Jacomina Garnijerns, widow of a painter, Willem Fremault. His first teacher in art was probably his father, but he afterwards studied under Dou, though in his style he more resembled Terborch, for his pictures deal, as a rule, with the more refined sides of domestic life. In 1648 he was admitted into the Painters' Guild at Leyden, but two years later he left that city and went to Amsterdam, where he probably spent the rest of his life. In 1658 he married Isabella Wolff, and had to submit to the operation of lithotomy. Twelve months later he obtained the rights of a citizen of Amsterdam. He was buried at Amsterdam on the 24th October, 1667. His pictures are to be found in all the principal European galleries, as the subjoined list will show.

METSYS. See MASSYS.

METTAY, PIERRE, a painter, was a native of Normandy, and a pupil of Boucher in Paris. He afterwards studied at Rome, and became a member of the Paris Academy. He painted genre pictures, mythological and historical scenes, and sea-views after the style of Vernet, several of which were engraved. He died about 1750.

METTENLEITER, JOHANN EVANGELIST, an engraver, the nephew of Johann Michael Mettenleiter, was born at Grosskuchen in 1792. He studied under his uncle.

METTENLEITER, JOHANN JAKOB, was born at Grosskuchen, Württemberg, in 1750. He went to Spiers and Holland, where he enlisted as a soldier for the Cape. After his return he established himself for a time at Augsburg, but went to St. Petersburg in 1786, and died there in 1825. Some of his paintings are in the Augsburg Cathedral, viz., a 'Resurrection' (1785) and two conversation pieces, with portraits of the Von Oberwexer Family. As an engraver he executed among others the following plates:

A Peasant with a Hat and Stick.

Peasants Drunk and another Laughing; after the same.

METTENLEITER, JOHANN MICHAEL, was born at Grosskuchen, Württemberg, in 1765, and accompanied his brother Johann Jakob to Rome when only ten years of age, but returned afterwards to Augsburg. He continued his studies under Dorner at Munich in 1782, and next etched for the bookseller Strobel at Augsburg, and in 1790 became court engraver. The paintings in the Hirschgarten at Munich are by him. He engraved in the style of Chodowiecki; amongst others four plates for the 'History of Germany' by Klein, and many plates from Bavarian history for Westenrieder's Almanac (1787—1815). He signed with his full name, or the initials J M M, or a monogram. He died at Pockau in 1853.

METZ, CAROLINE M., subject painter, the daughter of Johann Martin and sister of Conrad Metz. She came to London with her family, and there her works, which appeared at the Academy from 1773 to 1794, included portraits, fruit, and landscapes.

METZ, CONRAD MARTIN, an eminent engraver in the chalk manner and in aquatint, was born at Bonn in 1755, but received his education in art in London, under Bartolozzi. His principal works are imitations of and facsimiles from the drawings of the old Italian masters, of which he published a great number. In 1801 he left England for Rome, where he continued to exercise his ready talent at imitation, and otherwise engraving from works of the highest order till the time of his decease, which occurred in London in 1827. One of his chief works was Michelangelo's 'Last Judgment,' in twelve plates (1808).

METZ, FRANZ, a Benedictine brother of the cloister of Prifing near Rheims, who went to Seeben in the Tyrol about 1630, and painted three altar-pieces. In the library at Innsbruck is the drawing of a 'Magdalene' by this artist.

METZ, GERTRAUD, a flower painter, was the daughter and pupil of J. M. Metz of Cologne. She studied at the Academy of Düsseldorf about 1766, and with her father and brother came to England soon after. She painted some figure pictures, besides flowers, fruit, and insects.

METZ, GUSTAV, painter and sculptor, was born at Brandenburg in 1817. He first tried sculpture under Rauch at Berlin, and followed his school-fellow Rietschel to Dresden, but being disappointed in his hopes of obtaining the grand medal of the Berlin Academy, he devoted all his attention to painting. Metz died of a severe attack of cholera in 1853, in London. A 'Betrothal of Tobias' by him is in the Berlin National Gallery.

METZ, JOHANN MARTIN, was born about 1730, and was received a member of the Guild at Cologne in 1768. He was long court painter to the Elector Clemens August at Bonn, and made drawings of his castles, which were engraved by Nikolaus Mettel and Peter Wyon; but he especially distinguished himself as a painter of flowers. In 1771 he went to England, and died about 1800. Several of his still-life and genre pieces are at Cologne, in the Wallraf-Richartz Museum.

METZGER, CHRISTOPH, an engraver of Frankfurt on the Main, who lived in the latter part of the 17th century.

METZGER, JOHANN JAKOB, a German engraver who flourished in 1670. Six portraits engraved by him are known.

MEUCCI, VINCENZO, was born at Florence in 1694, and studied under Giachetto Fortini and Sebastiano Galeotti at Piacenza, and Giuseppe dal Sole at Bologna. He died in 1766. Gregori engraved a 'Madonna' after him. He has left the following works among others:

Florence. Gerini Gall. A Ceiling with the History of Achilles.

„ S. Lorenzo. Frescoes in the Cupola.

MEULEMANS, ADRIAAN, (MEULMANS,) a painter, was born at Dordrecht in 1766. He studied with Versteeg. He lived at Dordrecht, and painted water pieces, night scenes, and cabinet pictures. He died about 1834.

MEUNIER, LOUIS, (MEUSNIER, or MUSNIER,) an architectural designer and engraver, flourished about 1665. His prints, which number eighty-six, consist of landscapes and architectural views in Spain, Portugal, Italy, France, and Belgium, in all of which countries he appears to have travelled. His manner of engraving resembles that of Perelle and I. Silvestre, and in some of his pieces that of Thierry Stoop.

MEURER, JOSEPH, was born at Münster, Westphalia, about 1740, and was instructed in the art of painting by an artist at Frankfurt. He next studied in Paris, and afterwards lived at Münster and Verden, but his works, representing still-life, landscapes, devastations by fire, genre, mythology, scenes from the Bible, and portraits, seem modelled on Rembrandt. He died at Verden in 1817. He etched several plates, among which the best are:

The Boy with the Bird.

The Hermit praying.

Andromeda.

MEURS, CORNELIS HUBERT VAN, an engraver, was a native of Holland, and resided at Amsterdam about the year 1760. According to Basan he engraved several plates after Mieris, Van der Werf, and other masters.

MEURS, JAKOB VAN, an engraver, was born at Amsterdam about 1640. His name is affixed to a portrait of Tycho Brahe, the astronomer. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, and engraved several frontispieces, &c.

MEUS, LIVIUS, or LIEVEN. See MEHUS.

MEUSNIER, PHILIPPE, a French painter of perspective and architectural views, was born in Paris in 1655. He was a scholar of Jacques Rousseau, and on leaving that master went to Rome, where he passed several years in the study of painting and in other work. On his return to Paris he was patronized by Louis XIV. and his successor. In 1680 he executed the decorations of the roof of the chapel at Versailles. He became a member of the Royal Academy in Paris in 1702, one of its council in 1703, and its treasurer in 1719. He died in Paris in 1734. His son PHILIPPE, a pupil of Largillière, died in England.

MEVIUS, JOHANN GEORG AMBROS, was a landscape painter, native of Frankfort on the Main. He was born in 1710; and when he was sixty years of age he went to Amsterdam, where he died. His son JOHANN FRIEDRICH was born at Worms in 1727, and died about 1796. He also painted landscapes.

MEYER, ANDREAS, according to Professor Christ, was a native of Zurich. He is said to have been a painter, and to have engraved some views of towns, which are marked with a curious monogram .

Fifty plates, 'Architectura, oder Verzeichniss allerhand Einfassungen au Thüren, Fenstern. Alles erstlichen new erfunden und geetzt durch Daniel Meyern, Mahlern vu Bürgern zu Frankfurt am Main MDCIX, neu aufgelegt im Jahr 1659.'

MEYER, DIETRICH (or THEODOR), a Swiss painter and etcher, was born at Eglisau in 1572, and obtained a reputation for portraiture, historical and glass painting, as well as by several designs in Indian-ink and black and red chalk. A series of plates which he published in 1599 show that at that time he had not yet discovered the "soft etching-ground" which at a later period he employed in all his plates. He died at Zurich in 1658. The following are the best of his plates :

Six plates of Peasants dancing.

A Festival Procession with fireworks, in Paris, on the occasion of a Double Wedding between members of the French and Spanish Courts.

Six plates of Mythological figures.

He used the monogram .

MEYER, ELIAS, a flower and landscape painter, was born at Copenhagen in 1763. He was a fellow of the Academy, and died in 1809.

MEYER, ERNST, genre painter, was born at Altona in 1795. He attended the Academy at Copenhagen, studied at Munich under Cornelius, went in 1824 to Naples and Amalfi, and settled in 1833 at Rome. He became a member of the Copenhagen Academy in 1843, and died at Rome in 1861. There are by him :

Copenhagen. Thorwaldsen Museum. Several pictures.

Stuttgart. Rosenstein. A House at Tivoli.

MEYER, FELIX, painter and etcher, was born at Winterthur in Switzerland in 1653. He was the son of a clergyman, who was desirous of bringing him up to the Church; but his inclination for drawing interfered with his studies, and he was at length permitted to indulge his propensity. He possessed an uncommonly fertile imagination, and an extraordinary readiness of hand, of which he made the fullest use. Decamps says that during his travels through Germany, he visited the famous Abbey of St. Florian just when two halls had to be decorated in fresco. An obscure artist of the neighbourhood, who had been applied to, had taken months to prepare a scheme, while Meyer, in the course of a few minutes' talk with the abbot, sketched out a complete series of pictures, drawing them in the while on the blank wall with a piece of charcoal tied to a stick. In the result he was engaged to carry out the work. There is an excellent landscape by Meyer in the Belvedere at Vienna. Meyer had his figures inserted usually by M. Roos and G. P. Rugendas. He died at Weyden in 1713. He etched several plates from his own designs. Among them are : 1701.

A set of twelve Views of Switzerland; Felix Meyer fec.
Four Landscapes, with ruins and figures; same signature.

Four Views in Switzerland, with figures.

Four Mountainous Landscapes, with buildings.
The Falls of the Rhine.

MEYER, FRANZ ANTON, (or MEYERLE), was born at Prague in 1710. According to Lanzi he resided several years at Turin, where he took the name of Francesco Antonio Meyerle. He painted small highly-finished pictures of domestic subjects and portraits, and was less successful when he painted on a larger scale. He passed the latter part of his life at Vercelli, where many of his works are to be found. He died in 1782.

MEYER, GEORG FRIEDRICH, painter, was born at Mannheim in 1735. His first master was Daniel Hein, and then he went to Paris, where he studied under Casanova, and had the good fortune to meet with Duke Christian IV., who took him with him to Mannheim, where in the summer he studied nature on the banks of the Rhine and Neckar, and in the winter pursued his studies at the Academy. He died in 1809.

MEYER, HENDRIK, (MEIJER), a landscape and cattle painter, chiefly in water-colours and tempera, was born at Amsterdam in 1737. He was one of the directors of the Academy at Haarlem, where he resided. Late in life he became implicated in the Revolution of 1788, and had in consequence to leave Holland, upon which he visited England, in company with W. Hendriks, the painter of dead game, and established himself in London, where he died in 1793. He had exhibited at the Academy in the two previous years, executing principally Dutch scenes. His landscapes were in the style of Izaak van Ostade.

MEYER, HENRY, born in London in 1782, was a nephew of Hoppner and a pupil of Bartolozzi. He engraved in mezzotint and in the dotted manner, and was very skilful in his management of portraits, on which he was principally engaged. He was one of the foundation members of the Society of British Artists, and contributed to some of their exhibitions from 1824 (their first) to 1831. In the latter portion of his career he sometimes drew portraits, and that with great success. He died in 1847. Among his plates there are:

Admiral Nelson and Lord Cathcart; after Hoppner.
The Princess Charlotte and Prince Leopold; after Chalon.

The Proposal and the Congratulation; after Harlowe.
The Stolen Kiss; after Kidd.
The Dancing Bear; after Witherington.

MEYER, JEREMIAH, (or MEIER,) English miniature painter, was born at Tubingen, in Wurtemberg, in 1735. He came to this country with his father at the age of fourteen. He was long a member of the St. Martin's Lane Academy. In 1757-8 he had two years' pupilage under Zincke, for which he paid £200 premium. In 1762 he was naturalized, and in 1764 appointed on the households both of the King and Queen. On the foundation of the Royal Academy in 1769 he was invited to become a member, and for fourteen years he was a constant contributor to its exhibitions. Meyer was a great student of Reynolds, from whom he caught not a little of his grace and refinement, and some of his power as a colourist. His miniatures were among the best of their time. Meyer married BARBARA MARSDEN, herself an artist of some ability. He died at Kew in 1789.

MEYER, JOACHIM, was a native of Strasburg, and flourished about the year 1570. We have by him a set of sixty-two woodcuts, representing combats with the sword.

MEYER, JOHANN, was probably of the same family with Dietrich Meyer. He was a painter, and usually resided at Nuremberg. We have several prints by him, some of which are from his own designs. Among others, a set of battles, etched in a spirited style. He also engraved a set of the principal fountains at Rome, which were published at Nuremberg in 1600.

MEYER, JOHANN, the son of Konrad Meyer, was born in 1655. He was a painter and engraver. He died in 1712. Nagler gives a long list of his plates.

MEYER, JOHANN, flower painter, was born in Switzerland in 1614, and died in 1666.

MEYER, JOHANN HEINRICH, also called GOETHE-MEYER, was born at Stäfa on the Lake of Zurich in 1760. He was first instructed by Johann Kaspar Füssli at Zurich, from whence he returned home and studied by himself in 1781-4. He went to Italy in the latter year, and there made Goethe's acquaintance in 1786. At Naples, which city he visited in 1787, he studied the collections of the old vases and antiquities of the Museum at Herulanum. From Rome, where he went in 1788, he returned to Switzerland in 1789, and became drawing-master at the Academy at Weimar in 1792. He undertook a second journey to Italy in 1795, and stayed principally at Rome and Florence. He returned to Weimar in 1797, and shortly after gave himself up to writing upon art. He assisted Goethe a great deal in his works upon art, and was also in communication with Schiller. He died at Jena in 1832. His productions as an artist consist chiefly of water-colour and other drawings from antique remains, or from the works of the great Italian painters.

MEYER, JOHANN HEINRICH LUDWIG, (or MEIJER,) painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1819. He was a pupil of Jan Willem Pieneman. During the early part of his career he devoted himself to landscape and history. In 1843 and 1844 he exhibited with success at the Salon, and in 1855 was awarded a prize at the Paris International Exhibition. He died in 1866 at Utrecht. Among his best productions we may name:

A Storm in the Channel. (Amsterdam Museum.)
Burning of the 'India' at Sea.
Dutch Vessels off Flushing.
A Ship striking on the English Coast.
A Storm off Scheveingenen.
Shipwreck on the Dutch Shore.

MEYER, JOHANN JAKOB, born at Zurich in 1749, was a designer, painter, and engraver, and was instructed in art by Balthasar Bullinger and Joh. K. Füssli. He came afterwards to Vienna, and worked a great deal for the Hungarian nobility. He died in 1812.

MEYER, KONRAD, the elder, the younger son of Dietrich, and the younger brother of Rudolph Meyer, was born at Zurich in 1618. After receiving some instruction from his brother Rudolph and L. Stadler, he went to Frankfort, where he became a scholar of Matthäus Merian, and studied the works of Bloemaert, Jordaens, and Sandrart. Subsequently he went to Augsburg, and in 1643 to Zurich, in both of which towns he was chiefly occupied in the painting of portraits, including that of his father, which is considered his best. He died at Zurich in 1689. As an engraver he may be considered as one of the most laborious artists of his time, and the number of his prints is very considerable. Kaspar Füssli, who had endeavoured to collect an entire set of them, had got together upwards of 900, without having them nearly complete. Among the best we may enumerate:

A series of ninety portraits of his fellow-citizens.
A series of 103 portraits of writers and churchmen.
A 'Dance of Death' (61 plates).
The 'Mirror of a Christian' (15 plates).
The Sports of Children (26 plates).
The ages of Man (10 plates).
Scenes from the New Testament (102 plates).

Meyer used the signatures C. M. fecit, C. M. f., &c.

MEYER, LUDWIG, called MEYER of KNONAU, was born at Knonau in 1705. He was an engraver, and painted portraits and landscapes. He died in 1785.

MEYER, MELCHIOR, the unknown author of a plate of 'Apollo and Marsyas' (Bartsch xvi. 146).

MEYER, RUDOLPH, the son and scholar of Dietrich Meyer, was born at Zurich in 1605, and died in 1638. He painted history and portraits, but was more distinguished as an engraver than as a painter. We have by him several plates of emblematical subjects and portraits, some of which were published with those of his brother Konrad. He made the designs for the 'Dance of Death,' which were engraved by Konrad.

MEYER, WILHELM, was born at Zurich in 1806, and studied decoration under S. Quaglio at Munich. In 1833 he worked at Nuremberg, and from 1837 to 1840 at Zurich, Berne, and Lucerne. He subsequently visited Italy and Spain, and in these countries devoted himself to architectural painting, in which branch he became deservedly esteemed. He died at Zurich in 1848.

MEYERHEIM, EDUARD FRANZ, who was born at Berlin in 1838, first studied painting under his father F. E. Meyerheim, and in the Academy at Berlin, but afterwards travelled much in search of subjects for his pictures, which are mostly of a genre character. For a short time he held the post of professor of anatomical drawing at the Berlin Academy, but in 1878 his ill health compelled him to resign, and he died in 1880 at Marburg on the Lahn. The following are a few of his best works :

Children and Cats. 1859.
Maternal Love. 1862.
Market Day. 1863.
The Young Mother. 1866.
Hessian Peasant Family. 1868.

MEYERINGH, AALBERT, (MEIJERINGH,) was born at Amsterdam in 1645. He was instructed in the elements of design by his father, FREDERIK MEIJERINGH, who was chiefly employed in painting screens, and other articles of furniture. Albert was, however, destined to exercise his talents in a higher line. Whilst he was yet young he formed the project of travelling in search of improvement, and before he was twenty years of age he visited Paris, where he resided some time, but with no great encouragement. By assiduity and labour he procured the means of continuing his journey to Italy, where his abilities procured him the esteem of Jan Glauber and others, and he met with sufficient employment to induce him to reside for some time at Rome. On his return to Holland, after an absence of ten years, he was employed by William, Prince of Orange. His views are agreeably varied, and are frequently embellished with the ruins of ancient architecture, and decorated with figures representing historical or fabulous subjects, in the style of Gérard de Lairesse. He died at Amsterdam in 1714.

MEYLENER, P., a little known Dutch painter of landscapes. He flourished about 1645.

MEYNERT, CLAES, was commissioned in 1507 to paint a St. Matthew, for the Church of St. Bavon, at Haarlem, for the sum of 40 florins.

MEYNIER, CHARLES, a French historical and battle painter, born in Paris in 1768. He studied under Vincent, and shared the prix de Rome with Girodet in 1789. The Revolution, however, caused his premature return from Italy, and he immediately began to practise in Paris. Much of his time was engaged in decorative work. He painted several frescoes for the Louvre and for the Paris Bourse. He was elected a member of the Institute in 1815, and in 1822 was decorated with the Legion of Honour, becoming an officer in 1830. Two years later he died in Paris of cholera. Amongst his chief works are :

Amiens.	Museum.	Œdipus. 1814.

MEYSSSENS, CORNELIS, (MYTENS, &c.,) the son of Jan Meyssens, was born at Antwerp about the year 1640, and was instructed in engraving by his father. His principal plates are portraits, many of which are from the designs of Jan Meyssens. They are executed with the graver, in a stiff, tasteless style. He also engraved several frontispieces, and other book ornaments. The following are his best works :

A set of Portraits of the Austrian Emperors; entitled 'Effigies Imperatorum domus Austriacæ, delineatæ per Joannem Meyssens, et æri insculptæ per filium suum Cornelium Meyssens.'

The Portraits of the Sovereign Princes and Dukes of Brabant; entitled, 'Les Effigies des Souverains Princes et Ducs de Brabant.' A part of these are engraved by P. de Jode, Waumans, and others.

He was first a scholar of Anthonie van Opstal, and afterwards of Nicolas van der Horst, both obscure artists. He attempted both historical subjects and portraits, but was generally employed in the latter. The greater part of his life was passed in Holland. For many years he resided at Amsterdam, where he carried on an extensive commerce in prints, and engraved many plates from his own designs, as well as after other masters, among which are several portraits of artists. He died about 1670. Among his plates we may name :

MEYTENS, MARTIN VAN, (MILTENS or MYTENS,) a Swedish painter, was born at Stockholm in 1695 or 1698. He was instructed by his father, PETER MARTIN MEYTENS, and visited for improvement Holland, England, and France. In the last country he learned enamelling under Boit, and painted at Paris the portrait of the Duke of Orleans, Louis XV., and the Czar Peter. Subsequently he was employed by August I. at Dresden. In 1721 he went to Vienna, afterwards to Venice and Rome, and there studied oil painting. On his return to Vienna in 1726 he became painter to the emperor, and in 1759 director of the Academy. He died at Vienna in 1770. Though his portraits were good likenesses, he followed the taste of his time in other respects, and fell into mannerism. There is an equestrian portrait of the Emperor Charles VI. by him in the National Museum at Stockholm.

MEYVOGEL, MATTHIEU (?), a Dutch painter who was at work in Rome early in the 17th century.

MEZIOS, M., is mentioned by Strutt as having engraved a few portraits; among others, that of a physician and poet, Joannes Petrus Lothicus, prefixed to his works, which were published in 1626.

MEZZADRI, ANTONIO, was a native of Bologna, and flourished about the year 1688. According to Lanzi he excelled in painting fruit and flowers.

MICHALLON, ACHILLE ETNA, a French landscape painter, born in Paris in 1795. When quite young he lost his father, the sculptor Claude Michallon. At the early age of fifteen his pictures attracted attention, and he received a pension from the Russian Prince Issouhoff. His studies were directed by David, Valenciennes, Berfin, and Dunouy. He was but sixteen years of age when he obtained a second class medal at the Salon of 1812. Five years after he won the grand prix for his 'Democritus and the Abderans.' After a stay of four years at Rome he returned and settled down in Paris to the practice of his profession. The promise of his career was, however, cut short by his premature death, which occurred in Paris in 1822. Amongst the few works which he left are:

Landscape near Frascati. 1822. (Louvre.)

The Isle of Lemnos. 1822. (Montpellier Museum.)

Roland at Roncesvalles.

The Centaurs and the Lapithæ.

MICHALOWSKI, a Polish water-colour painter of military scenes, was born at Cracow in 1804. He took refuge in France, where he became the friend of Horace Vernet and Charlet. He died in 1855.

MICHAU, THÉOBALD, was born at Tournay in 1876, but resided chiefly at Brussels. He studied under W. Schellinks, and painted landscapes and merry-makings, in which he imitated Pieter and Jan Breughel, David Teniers, and Pieter Bout. In 1699 he was residing at Brussels, and was received into the Corporation of St. Luke. He died at Antwerp in 1755. There are by him:

Augsburg.	Gallery.	The Ford.

"	"	A Fair.
"	"	March of Troops.
"	"	Street Scenes.
Vienna.	Belvedere .	Several paintings.

MICHAULT, GEORGES, a French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1752. He was a pupil of François Aliamet, and engraved several plates in the style of his instructor; among them some views in the neighbourhood of the Parc Monceau, Paris. He died about 1810. We have also the following by him:

Acis and Galatea; after Lafosse.

The dead Christ; after Schiavone; in the Orleans Gallery.

MICHEL, GEORGES, landscape painter, was born in Paris about 1763. His father was employed in the Paris markets, but his son found a protector who placed him, in childhood, in the house of a village curate on the plain of St. Denis, and afterwards apprenticed him to the painter Leduc. When he was sixteen, Michel formed an alliance, it is uncertain whether a legal one or not, with a girl of his own age, who bore him eight children before he was out of his first youth. In 1827 she died, when he married Anne Maria Charlotte Claudier-Vallier, who survived him, and to whom we owe most of what is known of his life. This seems to have been a sufficiently adventurous one in a small way. At one time he was the painting companion of Louis Bruandet, at another he was living in the house of a noble amateur, whose pictures he finished. His favourite subject was the great plain which stretches from Montmartre out to the north of St. Denis. There he found subjects for the hundreds of pictures which he left behind, and which are only now emerging from obscurity. As a rule they are painted on prepared paper, and in style may be compared, at a respectful distance, to the work of Old Crome. In spite of the small prices he received, Michel contrived to pass his life in modest comfort. He died in Paris in 1843. The following two pictures are to be seen in the new gallery at the Luxembourg:

Aux environs de Montmartre.
Intérieur de Fôret.

MICHEL, JEAN BAPTISTE, an engraver, was born in Paris in 1738 or 1748. He is said to have been a scholar of Chenu, whom he greatly surpassed. He came to England about the year 1780, and was employed on several plates for Boydell. He died in 1804. The following are his principal prints:

MICHELE DA PAVIA was an historical and portrait painter, who flourished about 1460. In 1459 he worked for Pius II., and was painter to the court of Mantua from 1458 to 1465.

MICHELE DA VERONA, painted in that city at the beginning of the 16th century. We know that he existed because a series of frescoes and canvases bearing his name have come down to us. Of these the most important is a 'crucifixion' dated 1500, formerly in the refectory of San Giorgio at Verona, but now in San Stefano, at Milan. Pictures by him are also to be found in Sant' Anastasia, Verona; Santa Maria in Vanzo, Padua; Santa Chiara, Verona; and in churches at Selare and Villa di Villa, near Este. In his art he was allied but far inferior to Cavazzola. His latest known picture is 'The Madonna enthroned,' at Villa di Villa, which is dated 1523. There is a fair example of his work in the National Gallery. The subject is the encounter between Coriolanus and his wife and mother, Virgilia and Volturna.

MICHELE DI MATTEO. See LAMBERTINI.

MICHELE, ANDRÉ, called VICENTINO, an historical painter, was born at Vicenza in 1539. He was a pupil of Palma the elder. He died in 1614. At Florence there are by him 'The Queen of Sheba,' 'Banquet of Solomon,' 'The Visitation'; at Munich 'The Assembly of Crowned Heads'; at Paris 'The Reception of Henri III. at Venice in 1574;' and at Brussels 'The Marriage of Cana in Galilee.'

MICHELE, PARRASIO, was a native of Venice, and flourished about the year 1590. He was a pupil first of Titian and then of Paolo Veronese, whose style he followed with some success. There are several of his works in the churches at Venice; among them a 'Pieta' in San Giuseppe. The Academia has by him a portrait of a Venetian noble.

MICHELIN, JEAN, a French historical painter, born at Langres in 1623. He died in Jersey in 1696.

MICHELIS, ALEXANDER, landscape painter, was born at Münster in 1823. He entered the Academy at Düsseldorf in 1843, and studied landscape painting under Schirmer. He died at Weimar in 1868.

MICHEUX, MICHEL NICOLAS, a French flower painter, born in 1688. He was received in the Academy in 1725, and died in 1733.

MICHU, BENOÎT, a Flemish historical and portrait painter, born in 1610. He settled in Paris, where he died in 1703. His son did some work in the chapel of Versailles.

MICIER, PEDRO, was an Italian, who flourished as a painter at Saragossa in the 17th century, and amassed a considerable fortune, which at his death he bequeathed to the churches for which he had painted. One PABLO MICIER, an amateur, who lived at the same time at Saragossa, seems to have been a distinct person. Pedro died in 1659.

MICOCARD. Papillon mentions a woodcut by this artist, representing 'Diogenes,' after Parmigiano. It is probably a copy of the print in 'chiaroscuro' by Ugo da Carpi.

MICON, a Greek painter and sculptor, flourished about 460 B.C., and assisted Polygnotus. He painted 'The Battle of the Amazons' and a part of 'The Battle of Marathon' in the Pœcile at Athens. He also painted some pictures in the Temple of Theseus, but we have no account of their subjects. He was an excellent painter of horses. His pictures were purchased by the Athenians at large prices.

MICONE, NICOLAS, called IL ZOPPO, an obscure landscape painter, born at Genoa in 1750. He was a pupil of Javella, and died in 1830.

MIDDIMAN, SAMUEL, a distinguished English engraver, was born in 1750. He was a pupil of Byrne, and is said to have also studied under Woollett and Bartolozzi. His forte was in landscape, of which he left many beautiful examples; two of the large prints for Boydell's Shakspeare, 'A Scene from the Winter's Tale,' and the melancholy 'Jaques,' may vie with the productions of Woollett. He engraved several other plates for the same work, and landscapes after Berchem, Gainsborough, Barret, Zuccarelli and Hearne. He exhibited at the Free Society in 1781, at Spring Gardens in 1773 and 1775, and at the Academy in 1780 and some of the subsequent years up to 1797, producing for 1780 some stained drawings. His etchings also were much admired; in this branch he worked for Pyne. His 'Select Views in Great Britain' (1784-92) is a charming work, and was very popular both in England and on the continent; it was followed in 1807-11 by 'Picturesque Views and Antiquities of Great Britain.' Middiman died in London in 1831.

MIDDLETON, CHARLES, was an architectural draughtsman and engraver. From 1766 to 1790 he was a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, and up to 1790 contributed to the Royal Academy. He published several works, and made many designs. He died about 1818.

MIDDLETON, J. J., an English draughtsman and landscape painter of the 19th century. In 1812 he published 'Grecian Remains in Italy.'

MIDDLETON, JOHN, landscape painter, was born at Norwich in 1828. He received lessons in painting from J. B. Crome, and also from Stannard. From 1849 to 1855 he was a fairly constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy, and also at the British Institution. He painted illustrations of the seasons, especially of early spring. 'A Study in March, on the Norfolk Coast' may be mentioned as a specimen of his style. His death occurred in 1856.

MIDIAS, a Greek painter, executed the design upon the vase found in Campania representing the Rape of the daughters of Leucippus by the Dioscuri.

MIEL, JAN, (MIELE, or MEEL,) also called BICKER, and by the Italians GIOVANNI DELLA VITE and JAMIELLI, was a painter and etcher, born in the castle of Ulaerdingen near Antwerp in 1599. He was a scholar of Gerard Seghers, and on leaving that master went to Rome, where he attached himself to Andrea Sacchi, and was shortly entrusted to assist his master in some of his most considerable works. Being, however, employed by Sacchi to co-operate with him in a picture for the Palazzo Barberini, representing a Procession of the Cavalry of the Pope, Miel, whose disposition naturally led him to the grotesque, introduced something which was deemed inconsistent with the gravity of the subject. This occasioned a sharp rebuke, and a consequent separation. Stung with the reproach of his master, and encouraged by the advice of his friend Bernini, Miel determined to improve and strengthen his powers by visiting North Italy for the purpose of studying the works of Correggio and the Carracci; and he passed some time at Parma and Bologna. On his return to Rome he was employed by Alexander VII. to paint a picture of 'Moses striking the Rock,' for the gallery of Monte Cavallo. He also painted for the churches of San Martino de' Monti, the 'Baptism of St. Cyrillio'; and in Santa Maria dell' Anini, some frescoes of the life of St. Lamberti, and the 'Annunciation.' His best performances, however, are his easel pictures, representing fairs, markets, huntings, festivals of the Carnival, and similar subjects. Miel was made a member of the Academy of St. Luke in 1648. He was invited to the court of Turin by Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy, who retained him in his service for the remainder of his life, and conferred on him the order of St. Maurice. Miel died at Turin in 1664. Le Bas, Beaumont, and others have engraved after him. Among his extant paintings are the following:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Landscape—a Dead Ass.

Jan Miel has etched several plates from his own designs in a masterly style. He sometimes signed with his name in full, and sometimes with a monogram and date. We have the following by him:

- The Holy Family.
- The Assumption of the Virgin.
- A set of Four Pastoral Subjects; in one of them a figure seated on a bank, picking a thorn from his foot.
- Three Battle Pieces; for the History of the Wars in Flanders, by Flaminius Strada.

MIREVELDT, MICHEL JANSZEN, (MIREVELDT, &c.) was born at Delft in 1567. He was the son of a goldsmith, who, perceiving his disposition for drawing, placed him under the care of Jerome Wierix, with the intention of his becoming an engraver. When he was twelve years of age he executed a plate of 'Christ and the Woman of Samaria'; and soon afterwards another of 'Judith with the Head of Holofernes.' These juvenile performances attracted the attention of Anthonie van Montfoort, called Blocklandt, who persuaded him to apply himself to painting, and offered to receive him into his school at Utrecht. This induced him to quit the graver for the pencil, and for some years he studied historical painting under that master. His first productions on leaving the school of Blocklandt were some altar-pieces for the churches at Delft; but having painted the portraits of some of the princes of the house of Nassau, they were so universally admired, that he afterwards met with continual employment in that branch, and as he lived to an advanced age, he is supposed to have painted a greater number of portraits than any other artist of his country. He is said, by Descamps, to have been invited to England by Charles I., and to have declined the proposal on account of the plague, which at that time raged in London. Mierevelt entered the Guild of St. Luke at the Hague in 1625, and died at Delft in 1641.

MIREVELT, JAN, the son of Michiel Mierevelt, also a portrait painter, died insane in 1633.

MIREVELT, PIETER, the son and pupil of Michiel J. Mierevelt, was born at Delft in 1595, and practised portrait painting in the style of his father. One of his most esteemed works is a large picture in the Hall of the Surgeons at Delft, containing the portraits of the principal members of that society at the time; other productions of his are at Brunswick, Copenhagen, and Dresden. He died young, at Delft, in 1632.

MIERIS, FRANS VAN, was born at Delft in 1635. He was one of twenty-three children of his father, who was a lapidary. In early youth he was apprenticed to the glass painter, Abraham Torenvliet, whose studio he soon abandoned for that of Gerard Dou, who called him the prince of his pupils. Later on he studied historical painting under Abraham Tempel. He painted genre pictures, and loved to represent silks and satins, plate and jewels. He was painter to the Prince, and in every way he enjoyed the unusual good fortune of being thoroughly appreciated during his life. His best pictures, on the rare occasions of their changing hands, fetch enormous prices. He died at Leyden in 1681. Among his pictures are:

MIERIS, FRANS VAN, 'the younger,' the son of Willem van Mieris, was born at Leyden in 1689, and was instructed by his father. He painted portraits and conversation pieces, but was inferior to his father in every respect, as became very evident when he attempted to copy his works. He died at Leyden in 1763. He has left an etching of 'The Muse Erato,' and in the capacity of a numismatist and historical writer he prepared and furnished the medal-illustrations for a book on the privileges of the Counts of Holland, &c., and for some similar works.

MIERIS, JAN, the elder son of Frans Mieris the elder, was born at Leyden in 1660, and received his first instruction in art from his father. Despairing of being able to equal him in the minuteness and delicacy of his finishing, he devoted himself to a different pursuit, and attempted historical painting and portraits as large as life. After the death of his father he went to Italy, and on his arrival at Rome applied himself to his studies with an assiduity which proved fatal to him. He died in 1690.

MIERIS, WILLEM VAN, the younger son of Frans Mieris the elder, was born at Leyden in 1662. He studied under his father, whose style he adopted so far as he could. At the age of nineteen, when his father died, he was already an able artist. His best pictures represent subjects taken from ordinary life, such as confectioners' shops, women selling game or vegetables, the interiors of apartments, and conversations. In these, every minute object is finished with painful care. The works of Gérard de Lairese had at that time excited universal admiration; and Mieris was encouraged by his friend and patron, M. de la Court, to aim at a more elevated style, and to paint landscapes with historical or fabulous subjects. One of the best attempts in the style thus forced upon him is in the collection of Sir R. Wallace. His pictures of domestic subjects are to be found in the best collections. In his last years he became blind. He died at Leyden in 1747. The following list includes most of his more important works:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	The Poulterer.
"	"	An Arcadian Landscape.

Few large collections are without examples of this painter. Mieris etched one plate, which is very rare; the subject is 'The fate of Æsculapius.'

MIEROP, FRANS VAN CUYCK VAN, a Flemish painter, was born in Bruges in 1640. He settled in Ghent where he painted many historical pictures, introducing portraits of the leading merchants of the town. He particularly distinguished himself by his pictures of animals, and of fish, many of which are scarcely inferior to those of Snyders.

MIERS, E. H., a Dutch landscape painter, who settled in London, where he died in 1793.

MIETSCH, CHRISTIAN GOTTLIEB, painter and etcher, was born at Dresden in 1742. In 1756 he entered the Academy at Dresden, and studied under Silvestre and Hutin, and in 1763 became a teacher himself. Among his etchings are:

The Pool of Bethesda.
Christ healing the Sick.
Luna and Antheus.
The Sleeping Endymion.

He died in 1800.

MIGER, SIMON CHARLES, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1747. He was a pupil of Charles Nicolas Cochin, the younger, and has engraved several plates of historical subjects and portraits. He was a member of the old 'Académie Royale.' He died in 1805. The following are some of his best plates:

MIGLIARA, GIOVANNI, Cavaliere, was born at Alessandria in 1785, and studied decoration and perspective under Albertolli and Levati, and theatrical painting under Galeari at the Brera at Milan. He painted a considerable number of scenes for the theatre, pictures of genre, and views of Milan Cathedral. He was painter to the Sardinian Court and member of several academies. He died at Milan in 1837. Works:

Munich. Gallery. Cloisters of San Maurizio, Milan.
" " Cloisters of Sant' Ambrogio, Milan.
Hamburg. Gallery. Church Interior.

MIGLIARA, THEODELINDA, an Italian painter, flourished at Milan at the beginning of the present century. She painted city views, one of the best a view of the Piazza del Duomo, at Como (Vienna).

MIGLIONICO, ANDREA, according to Dominici, was a native of Naples, and a pupil of Luca Giordano. He painted historical subjects, and there are several of his works in the churches of his native city, the best, perhaps, a 'Descent of the Holy Ghost,' in the SS. Nunziata. He died soon after Luca Giordano (1705).

MIGLIORI, FRANCESCO, an historical painter, born at Venice in 1684. He died in 1734. In the Dresden Gallery are the following pictures by him:

Joseph interpreting Dreams in Prison.
Bacchus and Ariadne.
Cain and Abel.
Europa.
Roman Piety.
Lot and his Daughters.
The Sacrifice of Abraham.

MIGNARD, NICOLAS, called MIGNARD D'AVIGNON, was born at Troyes, in Champagne, in 1605 or 1608. He received his first instruction in art from an obscure painter of his native city; but he soon afterwards went to Fontainebleau, where he had the advantage of studying the works of Primaticcio, Fréminet, Il Rosso, and others, and the antique statues which had been collected by Francis I.

He afterwards visited Italy, and passed two years at Rome, where he studied Albani and Annibale Carracci. On his return to France he passed some time at Avignon, where he married, and from his long residence in that city was called 'Mignard d'Avignon,' to distinguish him from his brother Pierre Mignard, called 'Le Romain.' By the recommendation of Cardinal Mazarin, he was in 1660 invited to the court of Louis XIV., and employed in several works for the palace of the Tuileries, among which were 'Apollo crowning the Muses of Poetry, Painting, and Music'; 'Apollo and Daphne'; and 'Mercury presenting a Lyre to Apollo.' He was also much employed as a portrait painter; some of his best works in that genre have been admirably engraved by Antoine Masson. His own portrait is in the Museum at Lyons. Mignard was a member of the Paris Academy. He died in that city in 1668. Mignard etched eight plates after Annibale and Agostino Carracci's works in the Farnesina.

MIGNARD, PAUL, portrait painter and engraver, was a son of Nicolas Mignard. He was born at Avignon in 1639, became a member of the Lyons Academy, and died there in 1691.

MIGNARD, PIERRE, a French historical and portrait painter, born at Troyes in 1610. Intended by his father for the medical profession, he showed so strong a predilection for art, that at the age of twelve he was placed for a year with a painter named Boucher, who enjoyed a considerable local reputation at Bourges. He then spent two years in study amongst the treasures of art which had been collected at Fontainebleau. Returning to Troyes, he began the practice of his profession by painting some decorative works for the Maréchal de Vitry in the chapel of his chateau at Coubert-en-Brie. The promise he showed in the execution of this commission was such that the Maréchal sent him to Paris to complete his art education in the studio of Vouet, the nursery of French art in the 17th century. That the master had a high opinion of Mignard's future is shown by the fact that he offered him his daughter in marriage. But the pupil's desires were centred on Italy, and in 1635 he set out for Rome. Here he renewed acquaintance with his fellow-student Du Fresnoy, and the two painters henceforth became inseparable, living and studying together on terms of the closest friendship. Twenty-two years of Mignard's life were spent in Italy: chiefly in Rome, whence he acquired the cognomen of 'Le Romain,' to distinguish him from his elder brother, Nicolas Mignard, d'Avignon. During this Italian sojourn he diligently studied the antique, and gradually obtained a great reputation. His practice as a portrait painter was very large: three successive popes, Urban VIII., Innocent X., and Alexander VII., sat to him. In 1653 his friend Du Fresnoy left him to return to France. Taking a circuitous route, he was joined at Venice by Mignard, who embraced the opportunity to make a lengthened tour through some of the chief cities of Italy. After this excursion he again settled down in Rome, and in 1656 married the daughter of an architect. At this period he produced many pictures of the Virgin and Child, in which he reproduced the features of his wife, whence such Madonnas were called "Mignardes." His reputation had now spread so widely that in 1657 he received a royal command to return to France. On his journey he was struck down by a dangerous illness, which necessitated a sojourn of some months with his brother at Avignon, where he formed an intimacy with Molière. Arrived in Paris, he settled down again with his old friend Du Fresnoy, and obtained a large practice as a portrait painter. He was patronized by royalty, and was especially regarded as the painter of the court beauties. But he aimed at higher things than portraiture, and undertook various decorative works. The chief of these were the great frescoes representing Paradise in the dome of the Val-de-Grâce, which he painted for Anne of Austria, and some works at the palaces of St. Cloud and Versailles. On the completion of the Val-de-Grâce commission, he felt his status sufficiently assured to send to Italy for his wife and children to rejoin him. For many years a keen rivalry existed between him and Le Brun. So great was the jealousy, that Mignard declined to become a member of the Academy, as he would have had to occupy an inferior position to his rival. He joined the Académie de St. Luc, of which he became the head, and thence led the opposing faction. The death of Colbert, and the accession of Louvois to power, at length enabled Mignard to outstrip his rival; and after Le Brun's death he was received into the Academy, all the honours of that body being conferred on him at a single sitting. He had now no competitor to fear, and during the remaining years of his life his supremacy in French art was unquestioned. The last great work on which he was engaged was a design for the decoration of the dome of the Invalides, but he did not live to carry it out. He continued painting till the year of his death, which took place in Paris in 1695. There are many specimens of Mignard's art in the French provincial galleries. The following is a list of his works in some of the chief public collections of Europe:

MIGNON, ABRAHAM, (or MINJON,) was born at Frankfort in 1639. He was the son of a merchant, who designed him for his own profession, but in view of his inclination for art, placed him under the tuition of Jacob Marel, a painter of still-life, with whom he continued till he was seventeen years of age. Marel carried on a considerable commerce in works of art, and his business leading him to Holland, he was accompanied by his pupil, whom he recommended to the care of Jan Davidsz de Heem, at Utrecht. Mignon soon became popular, and with the greatest industry scarcely managed to keep pace with the demand for his works. He died at Wedzlar in 1697. He was the instructor of Maria Sibylla Merian, whose mother, the widow of Matthaüs Merian, he had married.

She was clever in reproducing the characteristics of the old masters, as in copies of a 'Christ,' by Bellini, and a 'Madonna,' after Annibale Carracci (both at Dresden). She lithographed 'The Adoration of the Holy Trinity,' after Albrecht Dürer.

MILANI, AURELIANO, the nephew of Giulio Cesare Milani, was born at Bologna in 1675, and was a scholar of Cesare Gennari, and afterwards of Lorenzo Pasinelli. He did not, however, attach himself to their manner, but devoted himself to an attentive study of the style of the Carracci. His principal works at Bologna are, his 'San Girolamo,' in Santa Maria della Vita; 'The Stoning of Stephen,' in Santa Maria Mascarella; and 'The Resurrection,' in La Purita. He died in 1749.

Several of his frescoes are in the churches at Pisa.

MILANO, BRAMANTE DA, is the name given to an artist stated to have been born at Milan towards the end of the 14th century. His very existence has been denied by some, but those who have accepted it assert that he was a painter and architect at the above town, and that he executed a 'Pietà,' in the church of Sant' Angelo there in 1418, and afterwards a 'Martyrdom of St. Sebastian,' and two large frescoes in other Milanese churches. His latest work was that of 'Christ in the Tomb,' over the door of San Sepolcro, which Philip II. had copied for the Escorial. His death is said to have occurred about 1470.

After some years in London he returned to the family home, Millerfield, near Edinburgh, and settled down to the practice of his art. The great bulk of his work is after Turner. Ruskin speaks of him as the best of Turner's engravers. In the last half of his life he travelled a good deal, and also practised painting in water-colour. He was an honorary member of the Royal Scottish Academy, and occasionally sent water-colour drawings to its exhibition. MILLER, WILLIAM, an English portrait and historical painter, born about 1740. He was employed on the Shakespeare Gallery for Alderman Boydell, whose portrait he painted. His works were exhibited at the Academy from 1790 to 1803. He died about 1810.

MILLET, FRANÇOIS, (or MILÉ,) sometimes known as FRANCISQUE. The family of this artist was originally French, though he was born at Antwerp in 1644. His father was a turner of ivory, born at Dijon, and accompanied the Prince de Condé, to whom he was attached, into the Netherlands, at the time of the revolt, and settled at Antwerp. Having shown an early inclination for art, the young Millet was placed as a pupil of Laurent Franck. His father dying when he was still young, he had no other resource than the exercise of his talents; and when he was eighteen years of age, he had acquired sufficient reputation to induce his master to give him his daughter in marriage. He soon afterwards went to Paris, where he painted history and heroic landscapes, with figures representing some historical or fabulous subject. He is stated by M. d'Argenville to have visited Holland and England, in both of which countries he left proofs of his ability. On his return to Paris he was received into the Academy, and his works were held in high estimation. Millet died in 1680. His sons HENRI and JEAN FRANÇOIS were also painters. The latter died in 1723. Among Millet's works are :

- |             |          |   |

We have a few etchings by this artist; among them, the following :

Another Landscape, with the History of Cephalus and Procris.

A Mountainous Landscape, with figures, and a town in the middle.

MILLET, FRÉDÉRIC, a French miniature painter, born at Charlieu (Loire) in 1786. His art instruction was due to F. Aubry, Pernot, and Isabey. He first exhibited at the Salon in 1806, and received medals in 1817, 1824, and 1827. His practice was very extensive: almost all the eminent personages of the time were his sitters. He died in Paris in 1859. His son AIMÉ was also an artist.

MILLET, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French painter of landscape and peasant life, born at Gruchy, near Cherbourg, in 1814. His parents were Norman peasants, who industriously cultivated a small farm. Amid these rustic surroundings he received a simple yet sound education from his grandmother and his great-uncle, a priest without cure of souls, who both lived under the family roof. A taste for art early developed itself in him, and his first systematic instruction was received from Langlois at Cherbourg, where he was sent in 1834. His progress was such that he was granted a small pension by the Municipal Council to enable him to pursue his studies in Paris. Thither he went in 1837, and entered the studio of Delaroche, where Diaz, Rousseau, and Corot were among his fellow-pupils. During the period of student life he frequently suffered great privations through the slenderness of his resources. His first appearance at the Salon was in 1840, when he exhibited a portrait. In the same year he returned to his native country, and for some time earned a living by painting sign-boards at Cherbourg. While thus engaged he met his first wife, whom he married in 1841. He went back to Paris in the next year to renew his struggles, which were increased by the ill-health of his wife, who died after a short married life of three years. Returning once more to Normandy, he entered the married state again, and his second wife proved a devoted companion. The newly-married couple spent some time at Havre, where he earned a scanty subsistence by painting portraits, small genre pictures, &c. He sought Paris again in December 1845, and during the next few years his struggle for existence was very arduous: he and his family being frequently in need of the barest necessities of life. This was an important period in the development of his art. Still under the influence of the Delaroche studio, he wavered for some time between historical and landscape painting. The appearance of his 'Winnower' in 1848 and of 'The Sower' in the following year showed his true vocation, and henceforth he adhered strictly to subjects taken from peasant life. In 1849 he removed from Paris to Barbizon, a village in the beautiful Fontainebleau country with which his name became inseparably connected. He settled in a peasant's cottage of three rooms, which he gradually enlarged to meet the requirements of his growing family. Here, in the midst of the scenery and peasant life so dear to him, he found no lack of congenial subjects. His circumstances for many years still continued straitened. His pictures only brought small prices, and were but little appreciated, save by a few. Although he was awarded medals at the Salons of 1853 and 1864, it was not until 1867 that his means began to improve. In that year he was awarded a first class medal at the Paris Universal Exhibition, and he also received the unasked-for distinction of the Legion of Honour. During the remainder of his career he felt less of the carking cares of poverty, but he continued his same simple rustic life at Barbizon, where he died on the 20th January, 1875. Since his death his works have fetched enormous prices, but his widow and family were left comparatively poor, and were granted a pension of 1200 francs by the State. MILLIN-DUPERREUX, ALEXANDRE LOUIS ROBERT, a French landscape painter, born in Paris in 1764. He studied under Huet and Valenciennes, and devoted himself to "historic" landscape. Excursions to the south of France, Switzerland, Italy, and Spain furnished subjects for his brush. The Pyrenees had an especial attraction for him, and he spent nearly seven years amidst their rugged scenery. In some of his pictures the figures were introduced by a Flemish painter named De Masne. He died in 1843.

MILLINGTON, JAMES HEATH, a subject and miniature painter, born at Cork early in the 19th century. He entered in 1826 the schools of the Academy, where in his later years he became Curator of the Painting School. He exhibited up to 1870, and died in 1873.

MINANA, Fray JOSEF, of the Order of the Trinity, was born at Valencia in 1671, and successfully cultivated both art and literature. He studied painting at Naples, and executed for his convent, at Murviedro, two pictures for the high altar commended by Ceán Bermudez. Besides several letters and papers on Valencian antiquities, he wrote a Latin continuation of Mariana's 'History of Spain.' In 1704 he obtained the chair of rhetoric at Valencia University, and died in the monastery of Our Lady of Succour in 1730.

MIND, GODFRIED, a Swiss painter, was born at Berne in 1768. He was a pupil of Freudenberger. He painted chiefly in water-colours, and his subjects were mostly cats, for which he had an extraordinary affection. His body was diseased, his character eccentric, and his conduct not that of a good citizen, but his talent as an artist was considerable. He died in 1814.

MINDERHOUT, HENDRIK VAN, a painter and etcher, was born at Rotterdam in 1632. At an early period of his life he removed to Bruges, where he married in 1664, and where he was received into the Society of Painters in 1663, and where there are several of his pictures in the public edifices and in private collections. In 1672 he settled at Antwerp, where he entered the Guild, and in 1696 he died. The works of this master generally represent marines and seaports, frequently those of Antwerp and Bruges. They are usually of a large size, but very unequal in execution, and towards the latter part of his life they seem to have been painted with negligence and haste. His best works are, however, to be found in the principal collections in Flanders. The Museums of Antwerp and Christiania each possess a 'Harbour of the Levant' by him.

MINDERHOUT, WILLEM AUGUST VAN, son of Hendrik van Minderhout, was born at Antwerp in 1680. As his father died when he was sixteen, he set out on his travels, and finally settled in Moravia, where he died in 1752.

MINGACCINO. See SANTI, DOM.

MINGOT, TEODOSIO, was a native of Catalonia, born in 1551, and was a disciple of Gaspar Becerra. He is erroneously stated by Palomino to have studied at Rome under Michelangelo, who died when he was only thirteen years of age. He is believed, however, to have visited Italy. He was employed by Philip II. in the palace of the Pardo, where his principal works perished in the conflagration by which that edifice was destroyed. He died in 1590.

MINTROP, THEODOR, a German historical painter, born at Barkenhofen, near Verden, on the Ruhr, in 1814. Being drawn for the army he visited Münster and Cologne, where for the first time his real bent was betrayed by the effect worked upon him by the works of art in those cities. By the help of E. Geselschap, he entered the Dusseldorf Academy and studied under Sohn. The subjects he treated were chiefly of a religious and monumental class, but in Cologne he carried out several decorative works in private houses. Unfortunately his early life in the country had unfitted him for the sedentary habits of a painter, and both his art and his health suffered in consequence. He died in 1870. Among his better works we may name :

Düsseldorf. Gallery. Virgin and Child, and St. John. Verden. Church. A Holy Conversation.

Christ and St. John with Angels.

MINZOCCHI, FRANCESCO, called IL VECCHIO DI SAN BERNARDO, was born at Forli about 1513. He formed his first manner by studying the works of Marco Palmezzano, whose stiffness and formality are visible in his first productions, particularly in his picture of the 'Crucifixion,' at the Osservanti. He afterwards took Girolamo Genga and Pordenone for his models. Among his best works are the 'Sacrifice of Melchizedek' and the 'Miracle of the Manna,' in a chapel at Loretto; a fresco in the church of Santa Maria della Grata, at Forli, is too vulgar in conception to be pleasing. Minzocchi died in 1574. He left two sons, PIETRO PAOLO and SEBASTIANO, who painted history, but were far inferior to their father.

MIO, GIOVANNI DE, called FRATINA, was an historical painter of Vicenza, who flourished in 1556.

After learning the first principles of art in his native city, he went to Cremona about the beginning of the 17th century, where he studied after the works of Panfilo Nuvolone. He afterwards adopted a style which bears some resemblance to that of the Carracci. His works are highly esteemed throughout Lombardy, particularly at Cremona, where he chiefly resided. He frequently made choice of, and was the most successful in, the most terrific subjects he could select. Among his most esteemed works are :

Cremona. S. Clemente. St. John Damascenus.

Milan. Casa Borry. Punishment of Conspirators.

Piacenza. Merch. Guild. Pietà.

MIRE. See LEMIRE.

MIRETI (or MIRETTO), GIROLAMO, was a portrait and historical painter of Padua, who flourished in the 15th century.

MIRETTO, GIOVANNI, is the reputed author of some frescoes in the Sala della Ragione, at Padua, representing the months and planets, treated allegorically, the apostles, and other personages, mythical and real—making in all nearly 400 pictures of wonderful incomprehensibility. They are supposed to have been executed in the early half of the 15th century. This Giovanni may have been a brother or other relation of Girolamo, who is called Moreto by Vasari.

MIRI, LUDOVICO, a designer, painter, and engraver of Rome in the 18th century, made drawings about 1778 of the wall paintings discovered in the Baths of Titus, which he afterwards etched, besides several ceiling pieces after Raphael in the Villa Madama, and others in the Villa Hadriana, in the Baths of Livia, and in the Farnese Garden.

MIRICENYS. See MERICA.

MIRON, ANTON, (MIROV, or MIRULEUS), is a Flemish painter, whose works are extremely rare. Those in existence display much merit; they are, for the most part, landscapes ornamented with scenes from sacred history, and occasionally with subjects of a sporting character, or in the style of Jan Brueghel. Mention may be made of a landscape with the conversion of St. Paul in the Vienna Gallery, and a landscape with a duck-hunting scene, dated 1653, in the Berlin Gallery. Several of his views in the neighbourhood of the Schwabach Spa have been engraved by M. Merian. The following among his works may also be mentioned :

Berlin. Museum. A scene in a Forest with Duck-

Hunters. 1653.

Copenhagen. Gallery. A Landscape.

MITELLI, AGOSTINO, (or METELLI,) was born at Battidizzo, near Bologna, in 1609. He received his first education at the school of the Carracci in Bologna, and studied perspective and architecture under Falchetta, and afterwards painting under Miniati and Dentone. With this last artist he visited Parma in 1627, and painted for the theatre at Bologna. After the death of Dentone he attached himself to Michelangelo Colonna, in conjunction with whom he painted the decorations of the archiepiscopal palace at Ravenna, sometimes designing the figures, and sometimes the perspectives; but he afterwards devoted himself entirely to the latter. His intimacy with Colonna lasted twenty-four years, and was only terminated by his death. Of the numerous works of the pair at Bologna, the most admired are the Capella del Rosario and the saloon in the Palazzo Caprara. They equally distinguished themselves at Parma, Modena, and Genoa. In 1674 they were invited to the court of Spain by Philip IV., where they ornamented the palaces with some of their finest works, particularly a grand saloon, in which Colonna introduced the fable of Pandora. Mitelli died at Madrid in 1660. We have twenty-four spirited vignettes by this master, consisting chiefly of architectural ornaments; and a set of forty-eight friezes, dated 1645.

MITELLI, GIUSEPPE MARIA, (METELLI,) the son of Agostino Mitelli, was born at Bologna in 1634. After receiving some instruction from his father, he entered the school of Flaminio Torre. He painted historical subjects, and occasionally introduced figures into the perspective views of Agostino. There are several of his pictures in the churches at Bologna, of which the most worthy of notice are, 'St. Riniero healing the Sick,' in Santa Maria della Vita; a 'Pietà' in the Annunziata; and 'Christ taken in the Garden' at the Cappuccini. He was more distinguished as an engraver than as a painter, and has etched a great variety of plates from his own designs and after some of the most celebrated of the Italian masters. He died in 1718. Bartsch describes 162 pieces by him, and Nagler has increased the number.

The following are his principal works :

A set of twelve plates, after the most esteemed pictures in the churches at Bologna.

Roma, 1767.' He with his sister THERESA MOGALLI engraved some plates for the 'Museo Fiorentino,' and for the 'Cabinetto di Portici.'

MOGFORD, JOHN, was descended from an old Devonshire family, and born in London, 15th October, 1821. His father Thomas Mogford was a painter, in water-colours, of picturesque architecture, and an F.S.A. At the age of eleven years he was placed at a school in France. On his return to England he entered the School of Design, at Somerset House, where he studied for two years under Mr. Dyce, becoming eventually a member of the Royal Academy School, where, being very persevering and enthusiastic, he obtained several prizes. At this time, his means being small, he found it difficult to follow his artistic studies, and was obliged, in order to earn a living, to set himself to the restoration of old pictures for three days in each week. Thus, having gained the confidence and friendship of Mr. Buchanan and other connoisseurs, he frequently had the works of the great masters on his easel. At the age of twenty-one he married the daughter of Francis Danby, A.R.A., landscape painter. In 1846 he exhibited his first picture in oils at the Royal Academy, and from then to the year 1865 he had always one or more pictures in the exhibition. In 1866 he was elected a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours. In 1879 he was awarded a first prize at the Sydney International Exhibition, and many of his pictures are in the National Galleries of New South Wales and Victoria. Mogford died in 1885.

MOHEDANO, ANTONIO, a Spanish historical painter in fresco, and considered one of the best painters of Andalusia, was born at Antequerra in 1561. He studied under the celebrated Pablo de Céspedes, but preferring fresco to painting in oil, he devoted himself to that, and became the most eminent artist of his time. He painted fruit and ornaments with equal skill, and successfully imitated the grotesques in the Loggie of the Vatican by Giovanni da Udine. He left many proofs of his merit as a painter, particularly in four pictures for the convent of San Francisco de Sevilla, and in the frescoes painted at the same place in conjunction with Alonso Vazquez. In the latter part of his life he returned to Lucena, where he finished the pictures for the great altar of the cathedral of that city, and died there in 1625. Moledano had also a talent for poetry, of which specimens may be seen in 'Flores de poetas ilustres de Espana,' published by his friend Pedro Espinosa in 1605.

MOIJART (or MOEYAERT), NICOLAES CORNELISZ, a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam (?) shortly before 1600. He was enrolled in the guild in that city in 1624. He may be looked upon as one of those who prepared the way for Rembrandt, for he painted with a full brush and with much vigour of light and shade. His subjects are portraits, landscapes, animals and genre. Among his direct pupils must be reckoned Berchem, J. van der Does, and Solomon Koninck. Moijart visited Italy, where he came for a time under the influence of Elzheimer. His death is thought to have taken place in 1669. Among his pictures we may name :

MOL, PIETER VAN, a portrait and historical painter, born at Antwerp in 1599. He was a pupil of Siger van den Grave, and received lessons from A. Wolfaerts. In 1622 he was received into the Corporation of St. Luke in Antwerp. In 1631 he was in Paris, where he was appointed painter to the Queen, Anne of Austria. In 1640 he married, in Paris, Anna van der Burch, the daughter of a Flemish engraver, and by her had eight children in eight years. In 1648 he was one of the founders of the Royal Academy of Painting and Sculpture of France. He died in 1660. There is a portrait by Mol in the La Caze collection in the Louvre. At Lille there is a 'Descent from the Cross.'

MOLA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA DI FRANCIA, (MOLLO, or MOLLY,) painter and etcher, was born at Besançon in 1616. He studied in Paris under Vouet, and executed with Pietro Francesco Mola a copy for Cardinal Bichi of a painting by Paolo Veronese at Venice. After this he went to Rome, where he became a disciple of Albani in 1650. He composed in the style of that master, but his colouring is more vigorous and bolder. He died at Rome in 1661. Of his paintings these were engraved:

The Portrait of Albani; by St. Picart.

A Landscape with the history of Hagar and Ishmael; by J. Prou.

He himself etched among others:

Judith with the Head of Holofernes.

Susannah in the Bath; after Ann. Carracci.
Atalanta.

MOLA, PIETRO FRANCESCO, was born at Coldre, in the Milanese, in 1612. He was the son of an architect, who placed him under the tuition of Prospero Orsi and Giuseppe Cesari d'Arpino, at Rome; but on his father going to Bologna on business, he accompanied him, and became a disciple of Francesco Albani. He afterwards went to Venice, where he studied the best productions of the great masters of the Venetian school. He returned to Rome in the pontificate of Innocent X., by whom he was employed in several considerable works, particularly a chapel in the church Del Gesù, where he painted in fresco 'St. Peter delivered from Prison,' and the 'Conversion of St. Paul,' which gained him great reputation. He was not less patronized by Alexander VII., for whom he painted a 'Joseph making himself known to his Brethren,' in the pontifical palace of Monte Cavallo. Afterwards he became President of the Academy of St. Luke, and worked for Queen Christina. Two of his best pictures are a 'St. John in the Wilderness,' and a 'St. Paul the Hermit,' in Santa Maria della Vita, at Milan. Mola died at Rome in 1668. Paintings by him are at Copenhagen, Dublin (National Gallery), London (the National Gallery), Munich, St. Petersburg, and Venice; also the following:

We have a few engravings by P. F. Mola, executed in a spirited style; the following are among them:

The Virgin suckling the Infant Jesus; after his own design.

The Holy Family, with Angels. This plate was first etched by Mola, and was afterwards finished with the graver by a clumsy, unskilful hand.

Joseph discovering himself to his Brethren. This print has been sometimes attributed to Carlo Maratti.

The Holy Family, with Angels presenting Flowers to the Infant Jesus; after Albani.

The Satyr's Family.

MOLENAER, JAN MIENSE, born at Haarlem, early in the 17th century. He painted country scenes in the style of Steen and Brauwer. He was the best of the Molenaers. His landscapes, both in oil and in water-colours, were much admired and sought for by amateurs and connoisseurs. He was a Knight of the Order of Leopold, custos of the royal court library, and a member of the Academy of Vienna. Some of his designs, representing cattle and sheep, have been engraved by Gabet, Dnttenhofer, and Bartsch; these are distinguished by their initials, in addition to M. M. with which he marked his etchings; as for example, *M. M. inv. A. Btch f.—M. M. d. G. MOLTENI, GIUSEPPE, an Italian historical and portrait painter, born in 1800 at Alferi near Milan. He was a pupil of the Milan Academy, where he exhibited, as well as at Venice and Vienna. He gained a gold medal at Milan in 1836, and was decorated with several foreign orders. In his later years he held the post of curator of the Brera Gallery. He died in 1867. Molteni's reputation now rests more upon his labours as a restorer than upon his original pictures. In that more humble line of art he did much good work, and no doubt some mischief. The famous 'Pisanello' in the National Gallery was restored by him under Sir C. Eastlake's supervision.

MOLYN, PIETER, the elder, was born in London some time before the year 1600. He left England and went to Haarlem, where in 1616 he entered the Guild, of which he became president in 1633. He married in 1624. He died at Haarlem in 1661. He painted landscapes in a very pleasing style, his foregrounds being enriched with buildings and ruins in the style of Jan van Goyen. He was also a good figure painter. His pictures, which are very rare, comprise the following:

We have several spirited etchings by this artist, which are incorrectly attributed by Strutt to his son, Peter Molyn, called Tempesta. They are executed in the style of Jan van de Velde. His prints are generally signed with his name, the P. and M. being joined thus M. Among others are the following:

- A set of four Landscapes; inscribed, P. de Molyn fec. et exc. 1626.
- Another set of four Landscapes; P. Molyn fecit. 1626.
- Several Candle-light pieces and dark subjects.

MOLYN, PIETER, the younger, or PIETRO MULLER, called also TEMPESTA and PETRUS DE MULLERIBUS, was the son of Pieter Molyn the elder, and was born at Haarlem in 1632. He learned the principles of art from his father, but having seen some of the hunting-pieces of Frans Snyders he applied himself to imitate the style of that master. He did not confine his talents to huntings and animals, but equally excelled in painting sea-storms and tempests. When he was twenty-five years of age he went to Italy, where his ability in such subjects acquired him the name of 'Il Tempesta.' At Rome he was so popular that he was under the necessity of calling in an assistant, whose sister he married. His reputation reached Genoa, whither he went in an unlucky moment for himself. He there conceived a violent attachment to a Genoese lady, and finding it vain to hope for a return while his wife lived, he summoned her to Genoa, and had her murdered on the way. His crime, however, was discovered, and it was only by the intercession of his powerful friends that he escaped death. He spent sixteen years in prison, where many of his pictures were painted, and died in 1701. After his release he passed under the name of Pietro Müller. One of his best performances is the 'Ark of Noah,' in possession of Count Algarotti. We may also name:

MOMAL, JACQUES FRANÇOIS, a French historical painter and engraver, born at Lewarde near Douai in 1754. He was a pupil of Durameau. In 1785 he was appointed Professor of the Academy of Valenciennes. He died in 1832.

MOMMERS, HENDRIK, was born at Haarlem in 1623, and studied at Rome, where he was called by the associated artists 'Meleager.' His subjects are Italian vegetable markets with peasants, landscapes and animals, seldom without an ass; occasionally sea-ports. He imitated the style of Berchem. In 1647 he entered the Guild of his native town. On his return to his native country he received scholars, some of whom proved respectable painters; Brackenburgh, Bernard van Schendel, and Thierry Maes were of the number. He signed his pictures with his initials, H. M., and sometimes in full. He died at Haarlem in 1697. His designs of Italian buildings are rare. Examples of his work are to be seen at Berlin, Rotterdam, and Stockholm.

MOMPER, FRANS DE, supposed to have been a son of Josse de Momper, was born at Antwerp, and inscribed in the books of St. Luke in 1629-30. He died at Antwerp in 1660-1 (?). Pictures by him are to be seen in the galleries of Berlin and Amsterdam.

MOMPER, JOSSE DE, a landscape and marine painter and etcher, was born at Antwerp in 1564. His father, BARTOLOME DE MOMPER, was also a painter. Josse was inscribed in the guild as early as 1581. He died in 1634. Pictures by him are to be found in the Galleries of Amsterdam, Bruges, Berlin, Copenhagen, and St. Petersburg, but he can best be studied at Dresden, where there are seven of his pictures, and at Madrid, where there are twelve.

MONA, DOMENICO, (or MONNA,) was born at Ferrara about 1550, and was a disciple of Giuseppe Mazzuoli. He possessed a prompt and ready invention, and an astonishing facility of execution, which accounts for the extraordinary number and magnitude of the works he has left at Ferrara, where there is scarcely a church or public edifice which does not possess something of his hand. There is, however, great inequality in his works; and in viewing his best performances, such as the 'Birth of the Virgin,' and the 'Nativity of our Saviour,' in Santa Maria in Vado, and the 'Entombment of Christ,' at the Servi, it appears unaccountable that he could be so negligent of his fame as to expose to public view the slight and imbecile productions which form the majority of his works. Lanzi attributes this incoherence to occasional derangement of mind, and reports that in a fit of insanity he killed an officer of the household of Cardinal Aldobrandini, and was consequently obliged to take refuge in the duchy of Parma. He died at Modena in 1602. Others of his best works are as under:

- The Battle of Constantine; after Rubens.
- The Triumph of Constantine; after the same.
- A set of Ornaments for goldsmiths.
- A small etching of Rabbits; in the style of Hollar.

MONDINI, FULGENZIO, was a native of Bologna, and flourished about the year 1658. He was a scholar of Guercino, and painted historical subjects. Malvasia asserts that he was one of the most promising young painters of his period, and would have reached a distinguished rank in the art, if his talents had been permitted a longer career. He died young, in 1664, at Florence, where he had been employed by the court. There are several of his works in the churches at Bologna, of which the following are the most worthy of notice. In the Annunziata the 'Angel appearing to St. Joseph in his Dream,' and the 'Repose of the Holy Family in Egypt.' In San Petronio two frescoes of subjects from the life of St. Antony of Padua.

His talents recommended him to the notice of Urban VIII., who took him into his service with a liberal establishment, and employed him in several important works during his residence at Rome. He painted the most remarkable views in that capital—the Colosseum, the Columns of Trajan and Vespasian, the Campo Vaccino, &c. The works of this master are almost entirely confined to Italy, where he passed the greater part of his life. He did not return to Holland until he was upwards of seventy, and died at Bois-le-Duc in 1686.

MONNIER. See MOSNIER.

MONNIES, D., a Danish still-life painter, who died in 1856. Two works of his are to be found at Copenhagen.

MONNOYER, ANTOINE, called 'Young Baptiste,' was the son and scholar of Jean Baptiste Monnoyer, and painted still-life and flower-pieces in the style of his father, which, though not destitute of merit, were greatly inferior to his. He became a member of the Academy in Paris in 1704.

MONNOYER, JEAN BAPTISTE, (or MONOYER,) called BAPTISTE, a flower painter, was born at Lisle in 1636. He studied at Antwerp, and for some time applied himself to historical painting; but afterwards took to painting flowers and fruit. He went young to Paris, and in 1663 was received into the Academy with distinction. He was employed by Le Brun in ornamenting the palaces of Versailles, Trianon, Marly, Vincennes, and Meudon. This flattering encouragement did not prevent him from accepting the invitation of the Duke of Montague, then our ambassador to France, to accompany him to England. His first performances were several pictures of flowers and fruit, for the embellishment of Montague House, afterwards the British Museum, which were among the finest of his works. During a residence of nearly twenty years in London he painted an immense number of pictures, which decorate the mansions of the nobility and the collections of individuals. He exercised his talent at Burlington House, at Lord Carlisle's, at Hampton Court, at the Duke of St. Alban's, at Windsor, at Kedleston Hall, and at Kensington Palace, where he painted a looking-glass for Queen Mary II., and flower and fruit pieces for Queen Anne. He also etched a few plates from his own designs, representing vases with flowers, which are executed in a tasteful and spirited style. Others have been engraved to the number of eighty, forming a folio volume. He died in London in 1699.

MONNOYER, JEAN BAPTISTE, called BAPTISTE LE ROMAIN, was a French historical painter of the 17th century. He was received into the Academy in 1648, and is supposed to have been related to the better known artist of the same name.

MONOSILIO, SALVATORE, was born at Messina about the year 1700, and studied at Rome under Sebastiano Conca, whose style he followed. There are several of his works in the public buildings of Rome. He painted the ceiling of one of the chapels in S. Paolino della Regola; and several pictures in the church of SS. Quaranta.

MONREALESE, IL. See NOVELLI, PIETRO.

MONRO, HENRY, an English portrait and subject painter, born in London in 1791. He was the son of Dr. Monro, the well-known patron of water-colour painters. He entered the schools of the Academy, and exhibited a few pictures, his 'Disgrace of Wolsey' obtaining a premium of one hundred guineas at the British Institution. His works showed considerable promise, but his career was cut short by death in 1814.

MONSALBE. See AGUIRRE Y MONSALBE.

MONSIAU, NICOLAS ANDRÉ, a French historical and portrait painter, born in Paris in 1754. He studied under Peyron, and was elected a member of the Academy in 1789. Much of his time was employed in book-illustration. From 1787 to 1833 he was a steady exhibitor at the Salon, and a great number of engravers were employed upon his work. He died in Paris in 1837. Amongst his works are:

- Amiens. Museum. Philoctetes in the island of Lemnos. 1791.
- St. Denis. Cathedral. St. Denis preaching. 1814.
- Marseilles. Museum. Iphigenia. 1817.
- Versailles. Trianon. Establishment of the Order of St. Bruno at Paris.
- Lille. Museum. Fulvia discovering to Cicero the Conspiracy of Catiline. 1822.
- Orleans. Museum. Magdalen in the Desert.
- Versailles. Gallery. Louis XVI. giving instructions to Perouse. 1817.

MONSIGNORI. See BONSIGNORI.

MONSIGNORI, ALBERT, an amateur of Verona, who cultivated art with some success in the 15th century. His son GIROLAMO, a Franciscan monk, painted miniatures, and was a good calligraphist. He was commonly known as FRA CHERUBINO.

MONT, DEL or VAN DER. See DELMONT.

MONTABERT, JACQUES NICOLAS PAILLOT DE, a French historical and portrait painter, born at Troyes in 1771. He was a pupil of David, and invented a process of encaustic painting. He is better known as a writer on art, and published a complete treatise on painting in ten volumes, and other works. He died in 1849.

MONTAGNA, BARTOLOMMEO, was born at Orzo Novi, in Brescia, between the years 1450 and 1460, and commenced painting on his own account as early as 1483, when he was living at Vicenza. A 'Madonna and Child between SS. Sebastian and Roch,' of 1487, in the Locchis Carrara Gallery, Bergamo; a 'Madonna between SS. Monica and Mary Magdalene,' in the Gallery of Vicenza; and a 'Virgin and Child between SS. Anthony and John the Baptist,' in the church of San Giovanni Ilarione, and formerly in San Lorenzo, Vicenza, may all be reckoned among his early works. In 1490 the records of Vicenza speak of him as "celeberrimus pictor"; and it was probably in that year that he visited Padua, where he painted the altar-piece at Santa Maria in Vanzo, representing the 'Virgin and Child between SS. Peter, John the Baptist, Catherine, and Paul.' From there he went to Verona, where he had been asked to decorate the oratory of San Biagio, which he probably commenced in 1493. These frescoes, which are now much injured, represent scenes from that saint's life. The altar-piece he painted for the church has since been divided: one of its panels, which represents the Saviour entombed, supported by angels and saints, and others with SS. John the Baptist, Benedict, Nazaro, and Celso, are in the church of S. Nazaro, Verona; whilst Dr. Bernasconi, of the same city, has the two remaining, with S. Biagio and another saint upon them. In 1496 Montagna returned to his house in Vicenza, and devoted two years to the chapel of the Squarzi family at San Michele, where he painted an 'Enthroned Madonna and Child, with SS. Andrew, Sigismund, Monica, and Ursula,' now in the Brera of Milan. In 1500 he executed the 'Pietà,' now in the Berlin Gallery; and in 1502 the Madonna ordered by Cardinal Zeno for the cathedral of Vicenza. From this date, until his death in October, 1523, he was constantly occupied in painting altarpieces and half-length Madonnas. Among the fairly numerous examples of this master we may name:

Bergamo.	Museum.	Virgin, with SS. Roch and Sebastian. 1487.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Virgin and Child between SS. Omobuono, Francis, and Catharine.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	Madonna and Child (No. 1098).
Milan.	Breva.	Virgin, with Saints and Angels. 1499.
Modena.	Marchese Cam- pori.	Virgin and Child, dated 1503.
Paris.	Louvre.	Ecce Homo.

Vicenza.	Cathedral.	Virgin between SS. Magdalene and Lucia.
"	Gallery.	The Presentation.

MONTAGNA, BENEDETTO, was the son of Bartolommeo Montagna, and was probably born in Vicenza. During his father's life he seems to have worked under him, though showing far less ability. He became a master in his Guild in 1490. No paintings signed by him are known previous to 1523, the date of Bartolommeo's death; and of the dates of his own birth or death nothing certain can be stated further than that he was living up to 1548. The following paintings of his exist:

Milan.	Brera.	Virgin and Child between SS. Peter, Paul, Francis, and Anthony of Padua.
Modena.	Gallery.	Virgin and Child, with Angels and St. John the Baptist. 1548.
Stuttgart.	Musée.	Marriage of St. Catharine.
Vicenza.	Cathedral.	Madonna and Child between two Saints. 1535.

He also illustrated Cicero's 'de Officiis' with woodcuts, and he has left fifty-six plates of very unequal merit, which are executed in the style of various artists, as:

St. Benedict.	} ( In the style of his father. )
Virgin and six Angels.
Virgin Adoring the Child.	} ( In the style of Giovanni A Holy Family. )
A Holy Family.
Orpheus charming the Animals.	} ( In the style of Giorgione. )

MONTAGNA, MARCO TULLIO, according to Baglione, was a native of Rome, and flourished in the pontificate of Clement VIII. He was a disciple of Federigo Zuccaro, and painted history both in oil and in fresco. In the church of Santa Cecilia the ceiling is painted by this master; and in San Niccolò in Carcere is an altar-piece by him, representing a subject from the life of St. Nicolas.

MONTAGNA, MATT. See PLATTENBERG.

MONTAGNA, RINALDO DELLA, (OF IL MONTAGNA,) a sea and landscape painter, a native of Holland. He went to Italy when young, and died at Padua in 1644. His pictures are found at Florence, Padua, Venice, and Bologna.

MONTAGNANA, JACOPO, was a Paduan, who entered the Guild in 1469, and, according to Vasari, was a disciple of Giovanni Bellini. In 1475 he painted some frescoes in the town hall of Cividale, which are not now in existence; and in 1476, in competition with Calzetta, Matteo del Pozzo, and Agnolo Zoto, he executed the frescoes in the Gattamelata Chapel, in the cathedral of Padua; in the latter church he was very constantly employed in later years. The town hall of Belluno was decorated by him in 1490 with classic subjects drawn from the story of the Horatii and Curiatii. Unfortunately, when rebuilding the hall some years ago, these frescoes were nearly all destroyed. Conte Agostino Agosti and Signor Bucchi, both of Belluno, have in their possession some of their fragments. In different portions of the Episcopal Palace, Padua, many frescoes by Montagnana still remain, some of them being dated 1495. In the church of Santa Maria di Mont' Ortone, near Padua, are a series of frescoes representing various subjects drawn from sacred and legendary sources, executed by this artist in 1497. Many of the private and public galleries of his native city possess paintings by him, and a 'Coronation of the Virgin' is in the Gallery of Bassano. His works have often been ascribed to Mantegna. His will was made in 1499, his death occurring not long after.

MONTAGNANI, PIETRO PAOLO, engraver, was born at Rome in 1740. With P. Ducros he engraved twenty-four views of Sicily and Malta.

MONTAGNY, ELIE HONORÉ, a French historical painter, born in Paris. He was a pupil of David, and afterwards studied at Rome. In 1805 he went as painter to the Queen of Naples, but after the Restoration of the Bourbons he returned to Paris where he died some time after 1815.

MONTAGU, D., was a native of France, and flourished about 1760. He engraved several architectural subjects and views in Rome.

MONTALTO. See DANEDI.

MONTALVO, BARTOLOMEO, a Spanish painter of still life, born at Sangarcia, near Segovia, in 1769. He was a pupil of Zachary Velazquez, and was appointed court painter in 1816. He died in 1846. In the Madrid Gallery there are four good examples of his art.

MONTANARI, FRANCESCO, an historical and portrait painter, born at Lugo in 1750. He was a pupil of Gandolfi and Cignaroli. He painted in many Italian towns, but most of his pictures are now in his native district. He died in 1786.

MONTANI, GIUSEPPE, a landscape painter, born at Pesaro in 1641. He lived some time at Venice. He wrote a history, now lost, of the painters of Pesaro, and restored pictures. He died after 1678.

MONTANINI, PIETRO, called PETRUCCIO PERUGINO, was born at Perugia in 1626. He was first a scholar of Ciro Ferri, but on taking to landscape painting he left that master, and became a disciple of Salvator Rosa. There are many of his works in the private collections at Perugia. He died in 1689.

MONTANO D'AREZZO. See AREZZO.

MONTE, GIOVANNI DA, a native of Crema, who flourished at Milan about 1580. He is said to have been a pupil of Titian, but his work had much in common with that of Polidoro Caravaggio, whose pupil Aurelio Buso was in Milan during Giovanni's youth, and may have influenced him.

Monte painted landscapes as well as historical subjects.

MONTÉ PULCIANO, IL. See MOROSINI.

MONTÉLATI, FRANCESCO, called IL CECCO BRAVO, was born, according to Orlandi, at Florence about the year 1600, and was a scholar of Jan Bilivert. He did not, however, attach himself entirely to the style of that master, but blended it with that of Domenico Cresti, called Passignano. The name of 'Il Cecco Bravo' was given him on account of his touchy and quarrelsome disposition. Of his works at Florence the most remarkable are, the 'Fall of Lucifer,' in the church of the Teatini; and a fine picture of 'St. Niccolò Vescovo,' in San Simone. He was invited to Innsbruck by the Archduke Ferdinand, and died there, painter to the court, in 1661.

MONTÉMAU Y CUSENS, LORENZO, a Sicilian by birth, had a considerable share in the improvement of Spanish engraving in the 18th century. After learning engraving at Rome and serving in the Imperial army during the War of Succession, he married and settled at Salamanca. There he established, in partnership with one Agostini, a manufactory of tin tobacco-boxes, adorned with devices engraved or worked in relief, which becoming popular and lucrative, he practised as a silversmith, receiving many scholars into his house, and employing ten or twelve artisans and their families. At one time he was accused of coining false money, through a mistake as to the nature of his engraving tools; and at another was charged with impiety by the Holy Office, in consequence of having accidentally broken a wax model of the Annunciation. Making his escape into Portugal he died at Almeida, aged sixty-four. Amongst his engravings was a portrait of Philip V. with the royal arms.

MONTÉMEZZANO, FRANCESCO, was born at Verona about the year 1555, and was brought up in the school of Paolo Veronese. His most respectable performances are, his picture of the 'Annunciation,' in the church of the Osservanti alla Vigna, at Venice; and 'Christ appearing to the Magdalen,' in the church of San Giorgio, at Verona. He died in 1600, in the prime of life.

MONTEN, HEINRICH MARIA DIETRICH, battle painter, was born at Düsseldorf in 1799. He showed from his earliest youth a great love for accounts of wars and battles, and Homer, Tasso, and Ariosto were his favourite authors. He first studied science, and entered the Bonn University in 1816; but in order that he might have some practical knowledge in military matters, he enlisted as a volunteer in the Prussian army, and served for twelve months. At the expiration of this term he entered the Academy of Arts at Düsseldorf, and after studying there for two years, removed to Munich, in order to benefit by the instruction of Peter Hess. He soon attracted the attention of Cornelius, then at the head of the painters at Munich, who entrusted him with the execution of three of the frescoes in the arcade of the Hofgarten; namely, the 'Storming of the Turkish Entrenchment by the Bavarians, at Belgrade in 1717,' the 'Battles of Arcis sur Aube,' and the 'Granting of the Bavarian Constitution by Maximilian Joseph in 1818.' He painted many other large battle-pieces, in which the Germans figure as the victors; and also many smaller pictures. He died at Munich in 1843. Two of his pictures are in the Berlin National Gallery.

MONTENAT, J., was an engraver on wood, and, according to Papillon, executed several cuts from the designs of Simon Vouet. Dumesnil mentions a print by him of the 'Virgin and Child.'

MONTERO, LORENZO, born at Seville in 1656, excelled in architectural decorations, landscapes, fruit and flowers, which he painted in water-colours. He was much employed in 1684 at the Retiro, but his works there have perished. In the chapel of St. Martha, in the church of St. Jerome at Madrid, are still to be seen traces of his skill in ornamental design. He was not equally successful in oil painting; the only work worthy of notice, in this way, being the portrait of Philip V., which is dated 1701, and is now in the convent at Paular. He died at Madrid in 1710.

MONTERO DE ROXAS, JUAN DE, a Spanish painter, was born at Madrid in 1613. He was a pupil of Pedro de las Cuevas, and studied in Italy. He died at Madrid in 1688. Of his pictures in the churches at Madrid, Palomino particularly commends the 'Assumption of the Virgin,' in the church of the Atocha; the 'Angel appearing to St. Joseph,' in San Juan de Alarcon; and the 'Destruction of Pharaoh's Host,' in the sacristy of the convent de la Merced. He copied and imitated the pictures of Caravaggio.

MONTESSUY, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French historical painter, born at Lyons in 1804. He was a pupil of Ingres and Hersent. He died in 1876.

MONTEVARCHI, an obscure pupil of Perugino, born at Monteverchi about 1460. Pictures by him are to be found at Perugia and Borgo San Sepulcro.

MONTEZUMA, PEDRO DE, CONDE DE TULA, a Spanish noble, who enjoyed some repute as an amateur painter at Madrid. He died about 1670.

MONTFOORT, ANTONIS VAN, was a Dutch painter, born at Montfort in 1532. His real name was VAN BLOKLANDT, and he seems to have been called Montfort from his possession of an estate near Montfort. He was a pupil of Franz Floris, in whose style he painted historical pictures. He married at the age of nineteen, and settled at Delft. In 1572 he went to Italy, and on his return he settled at Utrecht. He was much employed in the churches of Holland. In the great church at Utrecht were three pictures by him, representing 'The Birth of the Virgin Mary,' 'The Annunciation,' and 'The Assumption.' At Gouda he painted 'The beheading of John the Baptist,' and at Dordrecht several pictures of the Passion. He died at Utrecht in 1583.

MONTFOORT, PIETER GERARD, a Dutch painter, perhaps an amateur. He worked at Delft early in the 17th century and was a pupil of Michael Mierevelt. Van Mander speaks highly of his powers.

MONTHELLIER, ALEXANDRE JULES, an obscure French painter of still-life and interiors. He was a pupil of Bouton. He died in 1824.

MONTI, FRANCESCO, called IL BOLOGNESE, was born at Bologna in 1685, and was brought up in the school of Giovanni Gioseffo dal Sole. On leaving that master he was taken under the protection of the Conti Ranzzi, for whom he painted a 'Rape of the Sabinas.' He was afterwards employed at the court of Turin, where he painted the 'Triumph of Mordecai.' Of his numerous works in the churches at Bologna the most esteemed are, 'Christ with the Disciples at Emmans,' at the Osservanti; the 'Virgin in Glory, with St. Barbara and St. Filippo Neri,' in the Madonna di Galeria; and the 'Martyrdom of St. Fedele,' at the Cappuccini. He died in 1768.

MONTI, FRANCESCO, called IL BRESCIANINO DELLE BATTAGLIE, was born at Brescia in 1646, and was a scholar of Pietro Ricchi and Jacques Courtois (Il Borgognone). He excelled in painting horses and battles, which he designed in a spirited and masterly style. There are many of his works at Rome, Genoa, Venice, Naples, Parma, and in Germany. He died at Parma in 1712.

MONTI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, according to Soprani, was the son of a poor mendicant, and was born at Genoa about the year 1610. When a boy he discovered an uncommon disposition for art, by sketching on the walls of the houses, which being noticed by a Genoese nobleman, he charitably took him under his protection, and placed him as a pupil under Luciano Borzone. His progress under that master was very rapid, and he became a respectable painter of history, but still more distinguished in portraits. He died of the plague in 1657.

MONTI, GIOVANNI GIACOMO, an Italian battle and ornament painter, born at Bologna in 1621. He was a pupil of Metelli, and in company with Bianchi and Caccioli he painted in the villa of the Duke of Modena. He died in 1692.

MONTI, INNOCENZO, a native of Imola, was a pupil of Cignani. He has left several pictures in his native district, but he succeeded better in Germany and Poland than in his own country. A 'Circumcision' painted for the Jesuits' church at Mirandola was the subject of a contemporary poem. It was painted in 1690. Innocenzo died about the end of the 17th century.

MONTICELLI, ANDREA, according to Orlandi, was born at Bologna in 1640, and studied perspective under Agostino Mitelli. He designed some architectural views in imitation of that master, but he chiefly excelled in painting flowers, fruit, vases, and other still-life. He died in 1716.

MONTICELLI, MICHELANGELO, was born at Bologna in 1670, and was first a scholar of Marc Antonio Franceschini, but afterwards studied under Domenico Viani. He excelled in painting landscapes and battles. In the midst of a promising career he had the misfortune to lose his sight. He died in 1748.

MONTIGNY. See LITTRET.

MONTMIRAL, Le Marquis DE, is said by Basan to have etched several plates of landscapes from his own designs, and others after Albert. They are dated from the year 1720 to 1740.

MONTORFANO, GIOVANNI DONATO, was a Milanese artist living in the 15th century, who painted in 1495 the 'Crucifixion' which faces Da Vinci's 'Last Supper' in the refectory of Santa Maria delle Grazie, Milan. He is said to have been a pupil of Foppa. Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle have assigned to this artist the frescoes in the church of Santa Maria della Rosa, as well as those of the legend of St. Anthony in one of the chapels in San Pietro in Gessate, both in Milan. The dates of Montorfano's birth and death are alike unknown. He was in all probability identical with the Giov. Battista Montorfano who helped Foppa to value some frescoes in the Castello of Porta Giovia between 1467 and 1476.

MONTPETIT, ARMAND VINCENT DE, a French painter, was born at Macon in 1713. In his early days he was a student of jurisprudence and mechanics. By the time he reached middle age, he had lost all his fortune, and thenceforward applied himself to painting, especially to miniature. For this art he invented a new process, which he called éludorique. He died in Paris in 1800.

MONVERT, LUCA, was born at Udine in 1491, and died in 1529. He was a pupil of Pellegrino, and painted the altar-piece of the church of Santa Maria delle Grazie, Udine, which represents the 'Virgin and Child between SS. Roch, Gervase, Protase, and Sebastian.' He is known likewise to have painted several banners for churches, although nothing now remains of his labours. Crowe and Cavalcaselle quote a number of documents relating to his family affairs.

MONVOISIN, RAIMOND AUGUSTE QUINSAC, was born at Bordeaux in 1795, and first studied under Lacour, and then came to Paris and entered the studio of Guérin, and obtained the second prize for Rome in 1831. He died at Boulogne-sur-Seine in 1870. His wife, DOMENICA, née FESTA, painted also. Among his best pictures may be mentioned:

Jane of Castile at the Death-bed of her Husband. 1834.

The Death of Charles IX. 1835.

Sixtus V. throwing away the Crutch.

Death of Gilbert in the Hôtel Dieu. (Nancy.)

MONZA, Fra ANTONIO DA, a minorite, who flourished about 1500, is the author of some miniature paintings of merit, now in the Albertina Collection, in Vienna—executed in imitation of the manner of Leonardo da Vinci. The 'Descent of the Holy Ghost' is noteworthy alike for colour and design.

MONZA, NOLFO DA, a painter of Milan who flourished about 1500. He was a pupil of Bramante.

MONZA, TROSO DA, or TROSO DI GIOVANNI JACOBI, of Milan, the painter of the frescoes bearing the signature of the Zavattari in the cathedral of Monza, was born about 1450 at Lomazzo. In 1477 he was at work in Bergamo with one Scannardi d'Averara. In 1490 he was commissioned to paint in the Porta Giovia palace by Lodovico Sforza. He afterwards decorated the façade of the Mendoza palace at Milan with designs much belauded by Lomazzo. Troso was still alive in 1500.

MOONS, LUDWIG FRANZ, historical and still-life painter, was born at Antwerp in 1769. He first studied under A. de Quertemont. In 1792 he received the first medal of the Academy, after which he went to Düsseldorf to study the works of the old masters. In 1798 he went to Dresden, where he remained till 1805, and then went to St. Petersburg, returning afterwards to Antwerp, and becoming a Fellow of the Academy. In 1820 he went to Italy, where he stayed three years, returning home through Switzerland, Munich, and Stuttgart. He died in 1844. In the Church of St. Jacques, Antwerp, there is a 'Disciples at Emman's' by him.

MOOR, KAREL DE. See DE MOOR.

MOORE, GEORGE BOLTON, an English landscape painter, born in 1806. He was much employed as a teacher of drawing at University College, London, and at the Royal Military Academy. The elaborate perspective of Frith's railway station is said to be his work. His pictures frequently appeared at the Royal Academy up to 1859. He published works on the theory of perspective and colour. He died in 1875.

MOORE, J. C., who was born at Gainsborough in 1829, was the son of William Moore, a portrait painter. He became a student in the Royal Academy in 1851, and at first devoted himself to portraiture. He subsequently spent a great part of his time in Italy, making sketches of Florence and Rome and their neighbourhoods. He painted both in oil and water-colour. He died in 1880. His Italian scenes were deservedly popular.

MOORE, JACOB, a Scottish landscape painter, generally known as 'Moore of Rome,' was born at Edinburgh in 1740. His first instruction in art was gained in Runciman's School of Design, but his style was chiefly formed on the model of Claude after he went to Italy in 1773. He acquired considerable reputation, and was much patronized by Prince Borghese. Several landscapes of an ambitious character were sent by him between 1784 and 1789 to the Exhibition of the Royal Academy. Notices of him occur in the works of Miss Berry and Goethe, who both visited his studio at Rome. He died in that city in 1793. The following examples of his work may be named :

Dorking. Deepdene House. } View in the Campagna.
 Rome. Villa Borghese. } Vale of Tempe and Metamorphosis of Daphne.
 Florence. Uffizi. Portrait of himself.

MOORE, JAMES, an English engraver, born before the middle of the 18th century, who was in 1763 a member of the Free Society of Artists. Amongst his plates are :

Cupid; after Vanloo.
 Portrait of Whitfield; after Jenkins.
 The Four Quarters of the World.
 Joseph and Potiphar's Wife.

MOORE, MARY, an English portrait painter who lived towards the middle of the 17th century. She is mentioned by Walpole, and in the Bodleian there is a portrait by her of Cromwell, Earl of Essex, which is, of course, a copy from the work of some one else.

MOORE, SAMUEL, was, according to Lord Orford, a gentleman who held a situation in the Custom-house. He flourished about the year 1715, and appears to have dedicated much of his time to drawing and engraving. His prints are coarsely etched, and retouched with the graver. Among other plates, he engraved the 'Coronation Procession of King William III. and Queen Mary,' which, as it is without the name of the designer, may be presumed to be from his own composition.

MOORREES, CHRISTIAN WILLEM, a Dutch amateur who painted horses with some success at the beginning of the present century. He was a native of Nimeguen, and held a post there under government.

MOORTELE, JAN, (or MORTEL,) was born at Leyden in 1650, and was a painter of fruit, flowers, and still-life. He died at Leyden in 1719. His works are chiefly confined to Holland. He copied the works of De Heem and Mignon so skilfully as to deceive the amateurs of his time, and no doubt many of his copies pass now for the works of those masters.

MOR, ANTONIS, (or MOOR,) called in England Sir ANTONIO MORE (in Spain MORO), was born at Utrecht in 1512, and in the early part of his life was a scholar of Jan van Scorel. He afterwards went to Italy, where he passed some time in studying the works of Michelangelo and Raphael. On his return to Holland he devoted himself to an imitation of the style of Holbein, in which he was more successful. He was recommended to the protection of the Emperor Charles V. by his countryman Cardinal Granvella, and in 1552 arrived at the court of Spain, where Prince Philip (afterwards King Philip II.) sat to him, and was sent into Portugal to paint the portrait of Philip's first wife, Donna Maria, when he also painted those of John III. and Catharine of Austria, his queen, sister to Charles, which were executed so much to the satisfaction of the Emperor, that he was two years afterwards sent to England to paint that of Queen Mary, previous to her becoming the second wife of Philip. He returned with Philip to Spain, who treated him with an intimacy and familiarity which had nearly proved fatal to him. Philip was accustomed to honour him frequently with a visit when he was painting, and in a moment of condescension and admiration, slapped him jocosely on the shoulder, when the painter indiscreetly drew his brush across the King's fingers, smearing them with carmine. The jest was rash, and the King was not of a disposition to be played on with impunity. The attendant courtiers stared with amazement, but Philip passed it over with a smile. The artist threw himself on his knees, begged pardon, and everything appeared to be forgotten; but he was secretly advised to withdraw himself from Spain, and he lost no time in returning to the Netherlands, where he was afterwards patronized by the Duke of Alva. The talents of Sir Antonio More were not confined to portraits; he painted several historical subjects for the royal collection in Spain, most of which perished in the conflagration of the palace of the Pardo. He died at Antwerp before 1582. Among his better works we may name :

Berlin. Gallery. Three Male Portraits.
 Brunswick. " The man with the Gloves.
 Brussels. " Portrait of Hubert Goltzius.
 " " Portrait of the Duke of Alva.
 " " Portrait unknown.

MORA, DIEGO DE, a painter who accompanied Pizarro to the conquest of Peru. He made a drawing of the Emperor Atahualpa. He died after 1535.

MORA, GERONIMO, was a Spanish artist, born about 1540, employed among others by Philip III. to paint the frescoes in the palace of the Pardo. He was a pupil of A. S. Coello. He died in 1599.

MORACE, KARL FRIEDRICH, was born at Naples in 1766 or 1767, and studied at Stuttgart under Johann Gotthard von Müller. He became court engraver in 1790, and visited Italy in 1792. He engraved several of the prints in the 'Galerie de Florence,' 'Musée Français,' and 'Galerie d'Orléans.' He died in 1820. Among others he also engraved the following portraits :

Schubart; after Oelenhainz.
 Johann Gotthard Müller; after Tischbein.
 Angelica Kauffmann; after Reynolds.

MORALES, FRANCISCO DE, a painter, born at Terceira, one of the Azores, in 1660, was a friend and pupil of Palomino. He was a Carthusian. At Padua there are works by him. He died in 1720.

MORALES, LUIS DE, called EL DIVINO, was born at Badajoz, in Estremadura, in the beginning of the 16th century. The name of his instructor in art is not known. He formed his style by the study of Michelangelo and Leonardo da Vinci. His pictures generally represent the head of our Saviour crowned with thorns, or that of the Virgin in grief; and it is said there are few instances of his having drawn the figure at length. His heads are pathetic, and are finished with great care, but it must be allowed that he was an artist of a contracted genius and of a barren invention. He died at Badajoz in 1586. Whatever may have been the motive for calling him El Divino, he must not be judged, however, by the execrable pictures so often assigned to him. His larger works are confined to the churches, and even his smaller are rarely seen out of Spain. The latter are painted either on wood or copper, and seldom extend to more than a bust. For an account of the pictures he left behind him see Cean Bermudez, tom. iii. The following are some of his principal works:

Badajoz.	Church of the Conception.	} Virgin and Child. 1546.
"	"	Christ carrying the Cross.

MORAN, BARTOLOMÉ, an obscure Spanish painter, who was in 1664 a trustee of the Seville Academy.

MORAN, SANTIAGO, a Spanish historical and landscape painter, was living and practising at Madrid about 1640. Bermudez mentions three pictures by him, one a 'St. Jerome,' in the possession of an amateur of the name of the Baron de Casa-Davalillo; another, the head of St. Jerome, in the possession of D. Nicholas Lameyra, which Le Brun mistook for the work of Albani; a third, St. Jerome on his knees, and quite naked, has been engraved; but the engraver, not being acquainted with Moran's works, has put the name of Guercino to the print. Moran designed a set of the Muses for the beautiful work of Quevedo, edition 1670, and produced many fine landscapes.

MORANDI, GIOVANNI MARIA, according to Lanzi, was born at Florence in 1622. He was a disciple of Giovanni Bilivert, and, on leaving that master, visited Venice. He afterwards went to Rome, where he painted several altar-pieces for the churches, and was also employed for private collections. Of his works at Rome, the most deserving of notice are his 'Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elizabeth,' in the church of Santa Maria del Popolo; and the 'Death of the Virgin,' in La Pace. The latter is considered his masterpiece, and has been engraved by Pietro Aquila. He was also much employed as a portrait painter, and in that capacity was invited to Vienna by Leopold I., where he painted the family of the Emperor, and the portraits of many of the most distinguished personages of Germany. He lived to the advanced age of ninety-five, and died at Rome in 1717.

MORANDINI, FRANCESCO, called IL POPPI, was born at Poppi, a small town in the Florentine state, in 1544. He was a scholar of Giorgio Vasari, whose style he followed, though more minute in detail and more addicted to the gay and festive in his compositions. Of his works in the churches at Florence, Vasari particularly notices his 'Conception,' in San Michelino, and his 'Visitation,' in San Niccolò. There is a 'Death of St. Peter Martyr' by him in the Vienna Gallery. He died about 1584.

MORANDO, PAOLO, usually called CAVAZZOLA (or CAVAZZUOLA), after his father, was born in Verona in 1486. He was the son of Thaddeus Cavazzola, who was the son of Jacopo di Morando. He painted some of the frescoes in the library of San Bernardino, Verona, having been probably employed there by Francesco Morone. In private hands in Italy there is a half-length 'Virgin and Child,' dated by him in 1509; and in SS. Nazaro e Celso are frescoes by him, dated 1510, representing an 'Annunciation' and two saints; and a 'Baptism of Christ,' in a chapel of Santa Maria della Vittoria Nuova, is of about the same date. In the Verona Museum are four canvases with saints, and five with scenes from the Passion (one with the date 1517), all formerly in San Bernardino. His last painting was the 'Virgin in Glory and eight Saints,' formerly the altar-piece of San Bernardino, and now in the gallery of Verona; it is dated 1522. In that same year Morando died, as recorded in the registers of the fraternity of SS. Siro e Libera, to which he belonged. Among his best works we may also name:

London.	Nat. Gallery.	St. Roch, with the Angel. 1518.
"	"	Madonna and Child, with St. John the Baptist and an Angel.
Verona.	Museum.	Christ bearing the Cross.
"	"	A Deposition. 1517.
"	"	Christ crowned with Thorns.

MORASCH, CHRISTIAN GOTTFRIED, a painter and engraver, was born at Dresden in 1749. He painted miniatures, portraits, and etched several views of Dresden and the neighbourhood. He died in 1813.

MORAVA, MATTHIAS, a Polish painter and etcher who flourished about 1650.

MORAZONE, GIACOMO, (or GIROLAMO), a painter of the Venetian school who flourished in 1441. Vasari calls him the rival of Jacobello del Fiore, but at present no work of his can be identified.

MORAZONE, IL (or MORANZONE). See MAZZUCHELLI.

MORE, JOHANN CASPAR, engraver, was a native of Zurich, and flourished about the year 1694. He was principally employed in engraving portraits for the booksellers.

MOREAU, EDMÉ, engraver, according to Florent le Comte, was a native of Rheims, and worked in Paris from 1617 to 1660. He engraved several plates from his own designs, and from those of St. Igny and others.

MOREAU, JEAN MICHEL, called MOREAU LE JEUNE, painter, designer, and engraver, was born in Paris in March 1741. He was the son of a wig-maker, and although he early showed his love for art, it was long before he won any facility with his pencil, so long that, we are told, he was called 'Le Boëuf' by his fellow-students. At the age of seventeen he went to St. Petersburg with Louis Joseph le Lorrain, but as that artist died two years later, Moreau returned to Paris, where he abandoned painting to enter the studio of Le Bas. There he practised design, and learnt a delicate and vivacious style of engraving. Even yet, however, he was not at home as a draughtsman, and it was not until 1769, when he was twenty-eight years of age, that he produced the 'Plaine de Sablons,' the first original work in which his peculiar gift made itself clearly felt. This drawing, which was engraved by Le Bas, led to Moreau's appointment as "Dessinateur des menus plaisirs," and, five years later, as "Dessinateur du Cabinet du Roi." In 1785 Moreau visited Italy, and, like Wilkie, came back with a style quite different, and, to modern eyes, far inferior to that of his former productions. In 1793 he became a member of the Commission for Art, in 1797 a professor at the Ecole-Centrale in Paris. Towards the end of his life he seems to have fallen into poverty, for in 1814 we find him writing to Renouard, the publisher, that he was without a penny. But on the restoration of Louis XVIII. he was appointed to his old office of "Dessinateur du Cabinet du Roi," a post, however, which he did not long enjoy, for he died on the 30th November in the same year. The designs left by Moreau amount to more than 2000: of these about 200 are in illustration of Voltaire and Rousseau; others are in editions of Ovid, Molière, Lafontaine, Regnard, Marmontel, Delille, Barthélemy, Laborde, &c., and a very large number were made and afterwards fitted with text, by Restif de la Bretonne and others. Of these by far the most important are contained in the 'Suite d'Estampes pour servir à l'histoire des Mœurs et du Costume dans le Dix-huitième Siècle,' the publication of which was begun in 1775, Moreau's work in it, however, only commencing with the second part. The following prints by him may be specially noted:

- The Crowning of Voltaire.
- The Bath of Bathsheba; after Rembrandt.
- The Consecration of Louis XVI. at Rheims.
- Four plates, forming a large print of the Fête given at Paris in 1782 for the Birth of the Dauphin.
- The Tomb of J. J. Rousseau; J. M. Moreau, fec. 1778.
- A set of twenty-five small plates for the first volume of the 'Chansons de la Borde.'
- Plates to the Nouvelle Héloïse.
- Plates for an edition of Voltaire's 'Pucelle.'
- Series of plates for the illustration of manners and costume in the 18th century.

MOREAU, LOUIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris about 1712. He was chiefly employed in engraving ornaments, but he also produced the following plates from pictures:

- Portrait of the Jesuit Ludovicus de Ponte.
- Portrait of J. B. Babel; after Watteau.
- The Raising of Jairus's Daughter; after La Tasse.

MOREAU, LOUIS GABRIEL, known as MOREAU L'AINÉ, born in Paris in 1740, was a brother of 'Moreau le Jeune.' He painted landscape and architecture with considerable success. He lived for a time in London, but died in Paris in 1806.

MOREAU, P., a French architect and engraver, flourished from 1750 to 1760. He designed with great taste, and etched some plates of architectural subjects from his own compositions.

MOREELSE, PAULUS, (or MOREELZE, MOREELSEN,) was born at Utrecht in 1571, and is distinguished by Van Mander as a painter, an architect, and an engraver. At first he practised portrait painting under Michiel Mierevelt, but he afterwards went to Rome, where he studied some time. On his return to Holland he painted some historical subjects and architectural views, which were not without merit, though he was more employed in portraiture. He died at Utrecht in 1638. The following pictures by him may be named:

- |            |                   |  |
|------------|-------------------|--|
| Amsterdam. | R. Museum. | Portrait of Maria V., Utrecht.                     |

| Hague.     | Museum.    | Portrait of the Princess of Nassau and of Holland. |
| Rotterdam. | Museum.    | Seven portraits, including that of Coen.           |
| "          | "                 | Three Religious Subjects.                          |
| "          | "                 | Two Idyls.   |

As an engraver we have three capital etchings by him, executed in chiaroscuro; they are designed in a masterly style, and by being printed in three tints, produce a very pleasing effect. They are now become scarce. He sometimes signed with his name at length, the P. of the baptismal name being joined to the M., and sometimes with his initials only. Plates:

- Cupid led by two Females, dancing; P. Moreelze. 1612
- The Death of Lucretia; the same mark and date.
- Cupid contemplating a Landscape.

MOREL. This name was borne by a family of decorative and still-life painters at Liège, in the last century. Of these Jean Baptiste (died about 1754), Jean Remi (died 1739), and Jean Pierre (born 1702; died 1764) seem to have been the more notable.

MOREL, ANTOINE ALEXANDRE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1765, and became a scholar of Massard, and more especially of David. He engraved several of the plates for the 'Musée François' and for the 'Galerie de Florence,' and many detached pieces after David, Ingres, Giraud, and other contemporary painters. He died in 1829. Nagler gives an account of about thirty of his principal pieces.

MOREL, FRANCESCO, (MORELLI,) an engraver, was born in 1768. He worked chiefly at Rome, and executed several engravings after Cl. Lorrain, Carracci, and also several views of Rome after his own designs.

MOREL, FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, born about 1768, was a pupil of Volpato. He worked chiefly in Italy, and he has left some landscapes after P. Hackert.

MOREL, JAN EVERT, a painter of fruit and flowers, was born at Amsterdam in 1777, and was a scholar of Linthorst. He had previously studied under Troost van Groenendoelen, and at the Hague with F. van der Aa. On his return to his native city he studied the works of Jan van Huysum. There is a vase of flowers by him in the Museum at Amsterdam. He died in 1808.

MOREL-FATIO, ANTOINE LEON, who was born at Rouen in 1804 or 1810, distinguished himself as a painter of landscapes and marines, and brought himself first into notice by his 'Bombardment of Algiers,' at which he was personally present. He obtained several medals, was a knight and officer of the Legion of Honour, and conservator of the Louvre. In 1854 he was in the expedition to the Black Sea, and published several views of its coast scenery on his return. He died in Paris in 1871. Other important paintings by him are:

- A Panorama of Algiers (since engraved). 1836.
- The Bombardment of Tangier.

The French Fleet during a Storm. 1846.
View of Bomarsund, and the Attack upon it. 1854.

MORELL, GERHARD, a painter, was born at Copenhagen in 1729. He was appointed art-inspector by the Danish government, and died in 1769.

MORELL, JAKOB (or MOREL, MORREL, MORREELS). See MAREL.

MORELL, NICOLAS, was born at Antwerp in 1664, and was a scholar of N. Verendaël, a painter of flowers and fruit. He painted similar subjects to those of his instructor, and also excelled in painting vases with bas-reliefs, and other objects of still-life, for which he acquired a celebrity which occasioned him to be invited to the court of Brussels, where he was engaged in ornamenting the palaces, and in painting for the collections of the principal nobility. He died at Brussels in 1732.

MORELLAN DE LA CAVE, F., a French engraver, was the pupil of Bernard Picart, and flourished about the year 1730. He lived for some time in England, and engraved some portraits, chiefly for the booksellers. We have by him:

William Augustus, Duke of Cumberland.

John Locke.

Dr. Edward Pococke. (Prefixed to his Theological Works.)

Frederick IV. of Denmark.

Machiavelli.

A. Vivaldi. 1725.

His own Portrait.

Alexander and Roxana; after Coypel.

MORELLI, BARTOLOMMEO, called IL PIANORO, was born at Pianoro, a small town in the Bolognese state, about the year 1629, and studied at Bologna under Francesco Albani. He painted history with great success, particularly in fresco. Among his numerous pictures at Bologna the most remarkable are, his 'St. Teresa,' in the church of La Madonna delle Grazie, and the 'Resurrection,' in the Buon Gesù. But his most admired performance is the chapel of the Casa Pepoli, in San Bartolommeo di Porta. He died in 1683.

MORENO, JOSEF, a Spanish painter, born at Burgos in 1642. He was a pupil of De Solis. He was made court painter by Charles II. He was called "Painter of the Virgins," as his pictures chiefly represent 'Madonnas,' 'Conceptions,' 'Assumptions,' &c. He died in 1674.

MORENO, LORENZO, a Genoese Carmelite, who lived about 1544. His work is praised by Soprani. He was the author of a fresco of the 'Annunciation,' in the Carmine, which was afterwards cut out of the wall and placed in the church.

MORETO, NICCOLO, a Paduan, who is said by Vasari to have 'lived eighty years, and always exercised his art.' He is probably identical with Giovanni Miretto (q. v.).

MORETTI, BARTOLOMMEO, painter, a native of Bologna, was a pupil and nephew of Pasinello. He was a priest of St. Philip Neri, and died in 1703.

MORETTI, CRISTOFORO, called RIVELLO, born at Cremona, flourished about 1460. According to Lomazzo, he worked at the ducal palace of Milan in company with Bembo, and painted there a 'Passion,' which gained for him a high reputation. For S. Aquilino he painted a 'Madonna and Saints,' on which Lanzi deciphered the inscription Christophorus de Moretis de Cremona, which seems to contradict the assertion of Cremonese writers, that he was the son of Galeazzo Rivello.

MORETTI, PIETRO and GIOVANNI JACOPO, were brothers, who flourished at Cremona between 1480 and 1498.

MORETTO, FAUSTINO, an obscure Brescian artist, who was at work in Venice in the 17th century.

MORETTO, GIOSEFFO, a native of Friuli, who married the daughter of Pomponio Amalteo, Quintilia (herself an able painter), and assisted his father-in-law. At San Vito there is an altarpiece signed 'Inchoavit Pomponius Amalteus, perfect Joseph Moretius, anno 1588.'

MORETTO DA BRESCIA, IL. See BONVICINO.

MOREY, —, was a painter of Majorca, born at Palma, in Majorca, in 1696. His best known work was an immense composition of 'Our Lord's Tomb surrounded by the Host of Heaven,' painted on a curtain fifty-four palms square, which was exposed during Holy Week in the church of Santa Eulalia, at Palma, and known as 'The Veil of the Temple.' Others of his works were in the same church. He died in 1750.

MORF, JOHANN CASPAR, an engraver of Zurich, who worked from 1680 to 1695.

MORFF, GOTTLÖB WILHELM, portrait painter, was born at Stuttgart in 1771. He was court painter to King Friedrich of Wurtemberg. His best portraits are those of Professors Haug, Seubert, and André, and of Chancellor König. He died at Stuttgart in 1857.

MORGENSTERN, CHRISTIAN ERNST BERNHARD, was born at Hamburg in 1805, and was placed in 1813 under the tuition of Suhr, a panorama painter, whom he had to accompany on his tours in Germany, Denmark, and, in 1822, in Russia, under very harsh treatment. Under Bendixen, his second instructor, he began really to study painting, and afterwards visited Norway, where he collected sketches of which he afterwards made use at Copenhagen, where he attended the Academy until 1828. He went to Hamburg in 1829, and soon after established himself at Munich. From 1832 to 1842 he spent much of his time in travelling. Morgenstern represented flat regions with especial skill, but was also successful in painting scenes from the Alps. He was a member of the Academy at Munich. He died at Munich in 1867. We have eleven etchings by him. Among his best pictures are:

The Waterfall of Houg-Foss.

The Cobalt Mine, Fosum.

The plain of Munich. 1830.

The Zehmgrund in the Tyrol.

Torment between two Rocks. 1835.

A Rocky Heath near St. Hippolyte, Alsace. (Munich Pinakothek.)

The Rising Moon.

Moonlight Night on the Elbe.

MORGENSTERN, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, painter and etcher, was born at Frankfurt in 1778. He was first instructed by his father, Johann Ludwig Ernst Morgenstern, and afterwards went to Dresden to study. He painted chiefly landscapes and animals.

MORGENSTERN, JOHANN LUDWIG ERNST, was a painter of landscapes, houses, and church interiors, as also an etcher, and was born at Rudolstadt in 1738. In 1766 he entered the Academy at Salztdalen; he then went to Hamburg, where he was employed by a restorer of pictures in 1768. After a sojourn first at Frankfurt and then Darmstadt, he finally returned to Frankfurt, where he died in 1819. In conjunction with his son he made some 200 copies from the old masters, which were sold in England. Some of his pictures are in the Städel Gallery at Frankfurt.

MORGHEN, ANTONIO, engraver, and younger brother of the famous Rafaello Morghen, has engraved:

The Transfiguration; after Raphael.

Winter; after Michau.

A Holy Family; after Raphael.

Adam and Eve; after Reni.

MORGHEN, FILIPPO, who was born in Italy about 1730, distinguished himself as a designer and engraver. After having studied for seven years at Rome, he was employed at Naples, where he carried on a trade as printseller, and received the title of engraver to the King of the Two Sicilies. The date of his death is unknown. He was the father of Rafaello, and the brother of Giovanni Elia, Morghen. He executed a considerable number of plates for the 'Antiquities of Herculaneum,' published at Naples in 1757, but his most important plates are:

A set of the Twelve Apostles, after the statues by Baccio Bandinelli at Florence.

Thirty-one Landscapes and Views of Ruins in the Environs of Naples.

MORGHEN, GIOVANNI ELIA, was born at Florence in 1721, and was for a time a scholar of D. Ferretti. He engraved for the Marchese Gerini the greatest part of the plates of 'Pittura del Salone Imperiale del Palazzo di Firenze,' after the paintings of Giovanni Manzoni, Balthasar Franceschini, and other artists. In 1767 he published six plates of the 'Antiquities of Pæstum,' after Antonio Joly. He signed his works G. M. R. (Regius) d.; Gio. Morg. R. dis. or a monogram.

MORGHEN, RAFAELLO, one of the most celebrated engravers of modern times, was born at Florence in 1758. By his father, Filippo, and his uncle Giovanni Elia, who were both engravers, he was very early instructed in the first principles of his art, and even in his twelfth year he executed a plate after the Prophets of Baccio Bandinelli, at Florence. His first engravings, however, of consequence, were seven plates from the Masks of the Carnival of 1778, the Pilgrimage of the Grand Signior to Mecca; a work of such extraordinary merit for a youth of twenty, that his father was desirous he should receive the best instruction that could be procured, and sent him accordingly to Volpato, at Rome. His first employment was copying a print of E. Sadeler, 'Christ and Mary Magdalene in the Garden,' and shortly after Gavin Hamilton's allegoric figure of 'Painting,' for the brothers Hackert. In 1781 he engraved Raphael's figures of 'Poetry' and 'Theology,' in the Vatican. In this same year he married Volpato's only daughter, Dominica, and afterwards worked in conjunction with his father-in-law, assisting him in his 'Parnassus,' after Raphael. In 1787 he engraved the 'Aurora' of Guido, in the Respigliosi Palace, which for some time was considered his finest plate. Many other important works followed, among which, 'The Last Supper,' after Leonardo da Vinci; 'The Transfiguration,' and the 'Madonna della Sedia,' after Raphael; the 'Duke de Montcada,' after Van Dyck; the Portraits of Raphael, the Fornarina, Leonardo da Vinci, the Five great Writers of Italy—Dante, Boccaccio, Petrarch, Ariosto, and Tasso—are brilliant examples. The whole of his works have been fully described by his scholar, Palmerini, to whom it was his custom to give an impression, in every state of the plate, from the first outline to the finished proof. The whole of this collection was purchased by the Duke of Buckingham for £1200. In 1793 Morghen was appointed Professor of the Academy at Florence, by the Grand Duke Ferdinand III. He was a member of several academies, and a corresponding member of the French Institute. Morghen died at Florence in 1833. The following list is taken from Palmerini:

MORIER, DAVID, was born at Berne, in Switzerland, in 1705. He came to England in 1743, soon after the battle of Dettingen, and was presented by Sir Edward Faulkener to the Duke of Cumberland, who settled on him a pension of two hundred pounds a year. He distinguished himself as a painter of battles, horses, dogs, &c., and also of portraits, on which he was extensively employed. The first two Georges both sat to him. He died in London in 1770, and was buried in St. James's, Clerkenwell. He was a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists.

MORILLAS, CECILIA. See SOBRINO.

MORIN, JEAN, a French painter and engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1609, and died in the same city in 1666. He was a disciple of Philip de Champagne, and for some time practised painting, which he afterwards abandoned, to apply himself entirely to engraving. His plates are executed in a mixed style, being partly burin-work and partly etching; but they produce a very pleasing effect. His best prints are his portraits in the style of Van Dyck, many of which are executed in a masterly manner. His landscapes in the style of Plattenberg are of equal repute. We have 108 plates by him; the following are the best:

MORIN, ROBERT. In 1506 an artist of this name painted a pavilion in the Château Gaillon for the Cardinal d'Amboise.

MORINA, GIULIO, according to Malvasia, was a native of Bologna and a scholar of Lorenzo Sabbatini; but he owed his best improvement to an attentive study of the works of the Carracci. He painted history, and there are many of his works in the churches at Bologna, of which the most worthy of notice are, the 'Crucifixion,' in SS. Sebastiano e Rocco; the 'Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elisabeth,' in Sant' Uomobono; and the 'Presentation in the Temple,' at the Servi.

MORINELLO, ANDREA, a native of Genoa, and pupil of Lodovico Brea. He flourished at the beginning of the 16th century. The church of San Martino di Albaro at one time contained an altar-piece by him, dated 1516, which Soprani commends. The Scottish National Gallery possesses a picture of a 'Piping Shepherd' by him, and the catalogue asserts that he was born in 1490. The date of his death is unknown.

MORINI, GIOVANNI, an obscure Italian painter, a native of Imola, and a pupil of Giuseppe Maria Crespi. He died about 1780.

MORIOT, NICOLAS MARIE, a French miniature painter, and native of Versailles, where he was at work in 1788. He was a pupil of Soiron père.

MORIS, R., a scholar of Godfried Schalcken, has left a cabinet picture, representing an old Man holding a small Owl in his hand. He died young.

MORISON, DOUGLAS, an English water colour painter, born about 1820. He studied under F. Tayler, and was elected an Associate of the Water Colour Society in 1843. He died in 1847. He published the following works:

- 'Views of Haddon Hall.' 1842.
 'Views of the Ducal Palaces of Saxe Coburg.' 1846.

MORITZ, LOUIS, born at the Hague in 1773, at first studied science, which he subsequently deserted for painting. His instructor was Dirk van der Aa, but he was largely indebted to his observation of nature. He was a member of the Dutch Institute and of the Academy at Brussels, and distinguished himself also as a modeller, sculptor, and machinist. He died in 1850. Among his best works are:

- The Imprisonment of Cleopatra by Proculus.
 The Battle at Nieuwpoort.
 The Council of War of the National Guard at Amsterdam.
 The Death of Antoninus Pius (Amsterdam Museum).

Moritz's wife, ANNE REYERMANS, was a painter of flowers and fruits.

MORLAND, GEORGE, painter, was born in London 26th June, 1763. He was the son of Henry Robert, and the grandson of George Henry Morland (q. v.). There was a tradition in his family that it was in the line of succession to a baronetcy created in the time of Charles II., and some of Morland's biographers go so far as to say that there could be no doubt as to his pedigree, and that he had only to claim the title to get it. The usual tales of youthful precocity are told of the painter's childhood. He drew on dusty tables when he was three. At four he was surprised at work in the parental studio by Benjamin West, when his father sent him off with a kick, and the remark that he would either be hanged or a genius. At ten he had mastered the anatomy of mice and various other small animals. At twelve he modelled ships. At eighteen he taught himself the violin. His father, who was a stern man, like the fathers of most prodigals, gave him a fair general education, and then, when his artistic powers began to unmistakably show themselves, did his best to turn them to his own advantage. He shut the boy up in an attic, first to paint and draw from pictures and casts, afterwards to make copies, which the father sold to the dealers. Even then, however, the son managed to trade on his own account. He used to make bargains with friendly Jews, and paint pictures for them on boards, which he concealed during the day in a drawer of his colour-box, and at nightfall lowered by a string to the waiting clients below. To the rigour of his youthful discipline Morland owed, no doubt, much of the extraordinary facility which distinguished him in later life, and the inevitable rebound from such a state of tension may also count for something in the influences that made of him the debauchee into which he had degenerated at the time of his death.

It is said that at the expiration of his apprenticeship to his father, Romney offered to take him into his own house in Cavendish Square, with an annual salary of £300, on condition of his signing articles for three years. This offer Morland refused. He had probably had enough of apprenticeship! He now removed to an independent lodging at the house of a picture-dealer, where he first fell into idle and dissipated habits, and became the prey of his unscrupulous landlord. Escaping at last, he went to Margate, where he painted miniatures for a time, and thence to France. Returning to London, he settled at Kensal Green, and here he painted the pair of pictures by which his name was first brought prominently before the world. These were 'The Idle' and 'The Industrious Mechanic,' afterwards engraved by John Raphael Smith. Here too he made the acquaintance of William Ward, the engraver, whose sister Anne or Nancy he married in 1785. William Ward not long afterwards married Morland's sister Maria, and for a time they all lived together, but disputes arising between the wives, the friends agreed to part, and Morland established himself first in Great Portland Street, and afterwards in Camden Town. Here, we are told by his friend William Collins, he lived beyond his means, spending large sums on dress, on expensive wines, and other luxuries. From this time forth he seems never to have been free from pressing difficulties. He continually changed his home to elude his creditors. Surrounded by a body-guard of boon companions, and by a gang of unscrupulous dealers, who paid him a small fixed rate a day, and took their chance of what they could get for their money before the carouse of the evening began, he flitted from one haunt to another, working as hard as ever in the intervals of hard drinking. About this time he lived successively at Lambeth, East Sheen, Queen Anne Street, the Minories, Kennington, and Hackney. At Hackney a strange adventure befell him. The neighbours had their suspicions aroused by his secluded habits, and made up their minds that he was a forger of bank-notes. They reported his proceedings to the Bank directors, with the result that presently some officers from Bow Street came and overhauled the premises, the painter, who had taken them for sheriff's officers, making off across the fields at the back. When the matter was cleared up, the directors sent Morland two notes for £20 each as a solatium.

Many of Morland's best pictures were painted in the "rules" of the King's Bench prison. In these circumstances he generally received four guineas a day and his drink from the dealers who exploited him. One spunging-house keeper fitted up a regular studio for him in the attic of his house, and at one time the collection of "Morlands" he was thus enabled to accumulate was reputed the best in London. It is probable, however, that many of the stories told of Morland's dissipation are either untrue or grossly exaggerated. No man who was perpetually drunk could have turned out such a mass of good work as Morland produced in his short life. His best period was about the year 1790. His worst excesses seem to have been committed after that date. Before then he appears to have been a spendthrift rather than a drunkard; a weak, sanguine, shy, and vain man rather than a hopelessly vicious one. In 1804 he was arrested at the suit of a publican, and taken to a spunging-house kept by a man named Atwell, in Eyre Street, Clerkenwell. There he died on the 29th October, in his forty-second year. His much-tried wife died three days later, and they were laid in one grave in the burial-ground attached to St. James's Chapel, in the Hampstead Road.

It is difficult to understand the extraordinary popularity of Morland's work during his lifetime. The demand for it must have been almost inexhaustible, for, if one may believe the stories told by his intimate friends, he was able not only to get whatever he wished for his pictures, and that at a moment's notice, but also to abuse the patience of his clients in the most outrageous fashion without driving them away. More than one dishonest dealer found it profitable to keep a staff of copyists at work, multiplying the pictures Morland would dash off at a sitting, and completing their daubs with the initials "G. M." Morland's good work now stands very high in the estimation of connoisseurs, and especially for those qualities of technique to which the buyers of his pictures eighty years ago must have been, for the most part, blind. Among his pictures of animals, the 'Stable,' in the National Gallery, is perhaps the finest. Among his scenes from the life of his time, the series of six pictures known as 'Letitia' deserves, perhaps, the first place. To make an exhaustive list of his works would be impossible. Those mentioned below are in public collections:

Glasgow.	Gallery.	River Scene.
"	"	Three Sea-coast landscapes.
London.	Nat. Gall.	Interior of a Stable. ( Said to be that of an old inn, the "White Lion," at Paddington. )
"	South Kensington Museum.	The Reckoning.
"	"	A Stable.
"	"	Coast scene with figures.
"	"	Ditto.
"	"	Girl in a landscape, with a dove.
"	(Jones) Collection.	Johnnie going to the Fair.

A very large number, not far short of two hundred and fifty, of Morland's pictures have been engraved. Among those who executed plates after him, the most notable were William Ward, his brother-in-law, John Raphael Smith, and S. W. Reynolds.

MORLAND, GEORGE HENRY, painter, was born early in the eighteenth century. He was the grandfather of George Morland. His art was popular in its time, but in 1760 he was assisted by a grant from the Incorporated Society of Artists. He died in 1789. In the Glasgow Gallery there is a picture by him, 'An Oyster-seller,' which was engraved by Philip Dawe. Watson and others also engraved after him.

MORLAND, HENRY ROBERT, son and pupil of the last-named, and father of George Morland, was born about 1730. He painted portraits in oil and drew them in pastel; he scraped a few mezzotints; he was a picture-dealer and a picture-cleaner; but in spite of all these various means of earning a competency, he was always in difficulties, and more than once a bankrupt. His work is unambitious, but by no means without merit. He painted a portrait of George III., which was engraved by Houston; a portrait of Garrick as Richard III., which is in the Garrick Club. Lord Mansfield has a fancy portrait of two young ladies as laundry-maids, by him. He died in a street off Rathbone Place, November 30th, 1797. His age is sometimes given as eighty-five, which must be a mistake, as his father was not born till after the commencement of the 18th century. His wife, MARIA MORLAND, was an exhibitor at the Academy in 1785-6.

MÖRNER, CARL GUSTAF HJALMAR, a Swedish painter, was born in 1794. His pictures, of which there are two in the Stockholm Gallery, belong mostly to the higher genre and to history. He died in 1837.

MORO, ANT. See MOR.

MORO, DEL. See ANGOLO DEL MORO.

MORO, IL. See TURBIDO.

MORO, LORENZO DEL, a Florentine painter, who died in 1725. He was a pupil of Jacopo Chiavistelli, and at one period of his life was employed on frescoes in Rome.

MOROLINI, MARCO VALERIO, a painter of the Bolognese school, was born at Forlì, and flourished in the early part of the 16th century. He was probably a pupil of Melozzo, and has left several pictures in his native city, the chief of which is a 'Madonna and Saints.' It is dated 1503.

MORONE, DOMENICO, called by his townsmen PELACANE, because his father was a tanner, was born at Verona in 1442. His register as Burgess of that city is dated 1491, and in 1493 he was one of the masters deputed to report on the merit of certain statues ordered for the Council Hall. In 1503 he was appointed to paint the library of the convent of San Bernardino: these frescoes can be still seen, and consist of pictures of the Virgin and Child and Saints, with bust figures of three of the Popes. In these he was assisted by his son Francesco and other artists. In 1508 he finished the frescoes in Santa Maria in Organo, which have since perished. In the Cappella of Sant' Antonio at San Bernardino are many frescoes that can be doubtless assigned to Morone, but they are too much damaged to decide which subjects are by him. The date of his death is uncertain. Two decorative panels by him have been lately (1886) added to the National Gallery.

MORONE, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, son of Domenico Morone, was born at Verona in 1473. He assisted his father for some years. One of his earliest paintings is an arched panel with the 'Crucifixion,' dated 1498, in the Cappella della Croce of San Bernardino; the side panels of which, containing SS. Bartholomew and Francis, are in the Verona Museum. At Santa Maria in Organo is a large altar-piece with the 'Virgin and Child between SS. Augustine and Martin,' commissioned in 1503; and a similar subject dated 1504 is in the Brera of Milan. In the sacristy of Santa Maria in Organo are his finest frescoes; they were probably executed in the first years of the 16th century. In 1515 Morone and Girolamo dai Libri painted the organ shutters for the same church, which are now in the parish church of Marcellise, near Verona. On the wall of a house near the Ponte del Navi, Verona, a fresco representing the 'Madonna, Child, and Saints,' painted in 1515, is still to be seen. Amongst his latest works are the 'Virgin and Child between SS. Joseph, Anne, Vincent, and Francis,' dated 1520, in the Locchis-Carrara Gallery, Bergamo, and the 'Virgin and Child between SS. Elizabeth and James,' outside the lateral portal of San Fermo, Verona. Morone died in Verona on the 16th of May, 1529. In the churches and collections in Verona many other paintings by him are to be seen. The following may also be cited:

Berlin.	Museum.	Virgin and Child.
London.	Nat. Gall.	Madonna and Child.
Padua.	Communal Gall.	Virgin and Child, with two heads of Angels.

MORONI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Bondio, near Albino, in the Bergamese territory, about 1520. He was a scholar of Alessandro Bonvicino, called Il Moretto, whose studio he probably entered about 1535. As a subject painter Moroni never became the equal of his master. In that genre his best works, perhaps, are the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' in the Church of the Trinity, Bergamo, and 'The Last Judgment,' painted for the parish church of Gozzago, near Bergamo. As a portraitist, however, Moroni has seldom been equalled. His portraits are sufficiently numerous, but many of them pass under other names. The earliest dated picture by him known to 'Lermolieff' is the Berlin portrait of a young man, which is signed Settembre XX. MDLIII. Moroni acquired a wide fame in his own lifetime, and it is said that Titian used to send clients who came to him for portraits from the province of Bergamo back to their own country, to be painted by their own man. Moroni died at Bergamo on the 5th of February, 1578. Among his better works we may name:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Portrait of a young man. 1553.
"	"	Portrait of the painter.
"	"	Portrait of a savant.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Portrait of a man. 1557.
Dubliu.	Nat. Gall.	Portraits of a gentleman and his two children.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Portrait of a scholar.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	'Il Tagliapanni' (portrait of a tailor).
"	"	Portrait of a lawyer.
"	"	Portrait of an Italian noble.
"	"	Portrait of an Italian lady.
"	"	Portrait of an ecclesiastic (the Canon Ludovico Terzi of Bergamo).
"	Stafford House.	'The Jesuit' (portrait of Ercole Tasso).
Madrid.	Museo.	Portrait of a Venetian captain.
Munich.	Gallery.	Portrait of a lady.
Petersburg.	Her-	Portrait of a man (inscribed be-

Vienna.	Belvedere.	Two male portraits.

Among the pupils of Paul Veronese there was one PIETRO MORONI, whom Orlandi calls a descendant of Giambattista Moroni. W.A.

MOROSINI, FRANCESCO, called IL MONTE PULCIANO, was, according to Baldinucci, a Florentine, and a scholar of Orazio Fidano, in whose style he painted a picture of the 'Conversion of St. Paul,' for the church of San Stefano at Florence.

MORREALESE, IL. See NOVELLI, PIETRO.

MORRIS, THOMAS, an English engraver, flourished in the second half of the 18th century. He received instruction from Woollett, and worked for Boydell. Amongst the plates he engraved we may name:

Landscape and River; after R. Wilson.
La femme rusée; after Collet.
Skiddaw; after Loutherboung.
View of St. Paul's; after W. Marlow.
View of the Monument; after the same.
Hawking and Fox-hunting; after Gulpin.

MORTEL, JAN. See MOORTEL.

MORTELEQUE, FERDINAND HENRI, a Flemish artist, born about 1775, who painted mostly on glass. He was much employed by Charles X. and the Duc de Berry.

MORTEN, THOMAS, was born at Uxbridge in 1836. He entered the art school of Mr. Leigh in Newman Street at an early age, and devoted himself to the study of drawing on wood. His chief work consisted of contributions to the illustrated periodicals and other publications, among them 'Gulliver's Travels,' but he did not confine himself entirely to black and white, as is proved by two pictures, 'Pleading to see the Prisoner,' and 'Conquered, but not Subdued,' which were exhibited in the Royal Academy in 1866. In the autumn of the same year he died, it is said by his own hand, on account of pecuniary difficulties.

MORTIMER, JOHN HAMILTON, was born at Eastbourne, in Sussex, in 1741. His father was collector of customs at that port, and his uncle is said to have been a painter of some talent. As he was frequently admitted into the painting-room of his relation, he conceived an early inclination for art. It is not improbable that he originally imbibed his taste for the terrific from the romantic scenery which was the haunt of his youth, and the savage hardihood which marked the countenances of the bands of reckless smugglers by which the place was infested. He was sent to London, and placed as a pupil under Hudson, from whose instruction a mind of his cast could derive no advantage, and he owed his greatest improvement to his constant attendance in the Duke of Richmond's gallery. He was encouraged and assisted in his studies also by the benevolent Cipriani, who recommended him to the particular patronage of the duke, who was desirous of detaining him in his house, but the offer was rejected. Soon afterwards he gained, in competition with Romney, the premium of one hundred guineas given by the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, for the best historical picture, which was adjudged to his painting of 'St. Paul converting the Britons,' which in 1770 was presented by Dr. Bates to the church of Chipping Wycombe in Buckinghamshire. The reputation of Mortimer was now established, and he successively increased his celebrity by the production of his picture of 'King John granting Magna Charta,' the 'Battle of Agincourt,' 'Vortigern and Rowena,' and other admired works. He designed the 'Elevation of the Brazen Serpent' for the great window of Salisbury Cathedral, and the cartoons for the stained glass at Brazenose College, Oxford. For some years he was a member of the Society of Artists, who exhibited at a room on the site of the Lyceum, in the Strand. In the year 1779, without solicitation or expectation, he was created a royal academician, by the especial grant of His Majesty, but he did not live to receive his diploma. After an illness of a few days, he died at his house in Norfolk Street, in 1779. In the South Kensington Museum is a picture of 'Hercules slaying the Hydra,' and two water-colours. We have several etchings by Mortimer, mostly from his own designs, which are executed in a bold, free style. We may name the following :

The Virgin teaching St. John to read; after Guercino.
Twelve circular plates of characters from Shakespeare.
Nature and Genius introducing Garrick into the Temple of Shakespeare.

MORTO DA FELTRE. See LUZZI.

MORTON, ANDREW, painter, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1802. He was a student in the schools of the Royal Academy, where he was preminated in 1821. He was patronized by the family of William IV., of whom he painted a good portrait, which is in the Painted Hall at Greenwich. Morton died in 1845.

MOSBRUGGER, FRIEDRICH, (or MOOSBRUGGER,) was born at Constance in 1804, and after being instructed by his father Wendelin, entered the Academy at Munich in 1821. He visited Rome in 1827, Naples in 1828, and in 1830 St. Petersburg, where he died the same year. There was much humour and naïveté in his works, among which we may name :

The Neapolitan Improvisatore.
An Artist's atelier.
The Bust of a Roman lady.
A Landscape near Civitella.

MOSCA, FRANCESCO, was probably a pupil of Giulio Romano, as Cadioli in his 'Descrizione' mentions two pictures as being at Mantua in 1763, one of which he describes thus: "The altar-piece of the church in the convent of the Franciscan nuns represents Christ going to Calvary, a crowd of people who buffet and persecute Him, and the Maries who follow Him grieving and weeping. This is a picture which in reality appears to have been designed and begun by Giulio Romano, and finished by Francesco Mosca, and thus by two hands, but, nevertheless, is well composed and harmonious, and although it has been much injured, it merits consideration and praise." The other picture was the altar-piece of the oratory of the monastery of San Marco. The subject was similar, but Cadioli does not say if the composition was the same. Possibly it was a repetition entirely by Mosca of the other picture. Into one he introduced his own portrait, and placed a fly upon the hand. One of these pictures is now in the Academy of Mantua, and is quite Raphaellesque in character. As Giulio Romano died in 1546, Mosca painted in the latter half of the 16th century. He must not be confounded with any of the sculptors of the same name.

MOSER, GEORG MICHAEL, was born at Schaffhausen in 1704 or 1707, and first studied at Geneva. He came to England very young, to follow the profession of a chaser in gold. He likewise painted in enamel with considerable success, executing among other works the portraits of the two eldest sons of King George III. for the decoration of His Majesty's watch. He took an active part in the foundation of the Royal Academy in 1768, and became its first keeper, whose duty principally consists in superintending and instructing the students, who draw and model from the antique. Moser continued to fill that place till his death, which happened in 1783. He had previously been manager of the St. Martin's Lane Academy, and a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists. As a medallist, he designed the king's great seal.

MOSER, LUCAS. An altar-piece in the church at Tiefenbronn in Swabia is signed with this name. It represents scenes from the lives of the Magdalen, Martha, and Lazarus, and also the parable of the Wise and Foolish Virgins. It is executed with much care, and displays an unusual amount of expression in the faces for the period at which it was executed—1431. The colouring is tender, and the modelling of the hands and feet skilful. The signature runs: "Lucas Moser, Maler, von Wil. maister des werk." For Wil. some read Weil, a neighbouring place.

MOSER, MARY, afterwards Mrs. Lloyd, an English flower painter, the only child of G. M. Moser, R.A. She was awarded premiums by the Society of Arts in 1758 and 1759, and was an exhibitor at Spring Gardens. Elected a foundation member of the Royal Academy, she exhibited there from 1768 to 1802. Royal patronage was accorded her, and she decorated a room at Frogmore. She is credited with a strong liking for Fuseli, but between 1792 and 1798 she married a Captain Hugh Lloyd. After marriage she retired from the profession, and painted only as an amateur. She died in 1819. In the South Kensington Museum there is a 'Vase of Flowers' by her.

MOSES, called 'Little Moses.' See ULTENBRUCK.

MOSIN. See MOUZIEN.

MOSLEY, CHARLES, was an English engraver, who resided in London in the middle of the 18th century, and was chiefly employed by the booksellers. He assisted Hogarth in engraving 'The Gate of Calais,' and in 1745 he produced some political caricatures from his own design. His death occurred about 1770. His best prints are his portraits, of which the following are the most worthy of notice :

Charles I. on horseback ; from the picture by Van Dyck at Windsor.

Marshal Belleisle on horseback.

MOSNIER, JEAN, was born at Blois in 1600. His father and his grandfather were painters on glass, and from the former he received his early lessons. When only sixteen or seventeen years of age he made a copy of Andrea Solario's 'Vierge à l'oreiller vert' for Queen Marie de Medicis, then exiled at Blois ; the copy still exists in the possession of M. Chambert, President of the Tribunal de Commerce of Blois. On the strength of this work the queen sent him to Italy with a pension and a recommendation to the Archbishop of Pisa, in whose suite he went to Florence. At Florence he studied three years, at Rome five ; in the latter city gaining the friendship of Poussin. On his return to France he executed a number of decorative paintings for Queen Marie de Medicis, in the Luxembourg Palace ; thirteen of these are mentioned in Bailly's inventory of 1709-10, but none are now known to exist. For Léonor d'Étampes, Bishop of Chartres, he painted the vaulted roof of his library with the four Œcumenical Councils ; a life of the Virgin in the chapel, and the history of Theagenes and Chariclea in the apartments. He executed several works at Chinon, Saumur, Tours, Nogent-le-Rotrou, in the châteaux de Valençay and de Cheverny, and in the churches of Blois. He died, according to Felibien, at Blois in 1656. He had two sons, the eldest of whom, Michel, was a sculptor.

MOSNIER, JEAN LAURENT, a French portrait painter, born in Paris in 1746. He was elected a member of the French Academy in 1786, and was received in 1788. On the Revolution he fled to England, and, settling in London, obtained a good practice. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1792 to 1795. There is a portrait of Lagrenée (senior) by him at the École des Beaux Arts, Paris.

MOSNIER, PIERRE, (or MONNIER, as he himself wrote his name,) was born at Blois in 1639, and was the second son of Jean Mosnier. He early entered Bourdon's studio in Paris, and assisted his master in painting the gallery of the Hôtel de Bretonvilliers in 1664. In the same year he gained a prize with his picture of 'The Winning of the Golden Fleece by Jason,' and was one of the first pensioned scholars whom Errard took with him to the newly-founded school at Rome. In Rome he copied in oil the works of Raphael and the Carracci, and made studies from antique sculpture, which were afterwards exhibited in the school of the Paris Academy in 1670. He was made an academician in 1674, and became assistant professor in 1676, and professor in 1686. His discourses at the Academy he published in Paris in 1698, under the title of 'Histoire des Arts qui ont rapport au dessin, divisée en trois livres,' etc. He exhibited at the Salon of 1699. For the church of Notre Dame de Paris he executed a picture of the 'Parliament sitting in Judgment ;' for the church of St. Sulpice a 'Virgin adored by Angels.' He died in 1703.

MOSS, WILLIAM, was a student of the Royal Academy soon after its foundation. In 1778 he received the gold medal for a design for a church, and four years later attracted notice by one for a cathedral. But he was also a painter, exhibiting several landscapes, and an etcher. Two views of Somerset House and the Thames by him were acquainted by F. Jukes.

MOSSCHER, JACQUES DE, pupil of Karl van Mander, entered the Haarlem Guild in 1593.

MÖSSMER, JOSEPH, (MÖSMER, or MESMER,) painter and engraver, was born at Vienna in 1780. He studied under Molitor, and became in 1815 professor and councillor at the Academy of his native city. He was a landscape painter in oil and water-colour ; the Belvedere contains a mountain view by him. He engraved a landscape after Molitor. His death occurred at Vienna in 1846. RAIMUND MÖSSMER, his son, born in 1813, was also a landscape painter. He died in 1874.

MOSTAERT, FRANS, born at Halst, near Antwerp, about the year 1525, was a painter and etcher, and was instructed by Herri de Bles. In 1553 he was received a member of the Guild at Antwerp, and died in 1555. In his latter works the figures in his landscapes were painted by other artists. He engraved the plate, 'The Virgin on the Clouds,' after A. Carracci. Among his paintings may be mentioned :

A Rocky Landscape, with a Town on a River. (At Vienna.)

A Landscape by Moonlight, with Water and Fishermen. Twelve Landscapes in the Netherlands. (Engraved by Jul. Goltzius.)

MOSTAERT, GILLIS, born in 1525, was a twin brother of Frans Mostaert. He was instructed in painting by Jan Mandyn, and became a member of the Guild at Antwerp in 1553. He died in 1598 or 1601. There remain by him :

Antwerp. Museum. Christ on the Cross.

Copenhagen. Roy. Gall. The same.

Götha. Ducal Coll. The Creation of Eve.

MOSTAERT JAN, (or MOSTERT,) was born at Haarlem in 1474. He was a disciple of Jacob van Haarlem, under whom he became a painter of history and portraits, producing works which remind one of Horebouts. His talents recommended him to the patronage of Margaret, sister to Philip I. of Spain, in whose service he remained till his death. He was not less successful in portraits than in historical subjects, and painted that of his patroness, and the principal personages of his time. He also excelled in his landscape backgrounds. Unfortunately a large number of his works perished in the great fire at Haarlem in 1571. He died in that city in 1555. Of his remaining paintings there are :

Antwerp. Museum. A Virgin with the Child.

Two portraits.

Bruges. Notre-Dame. Mater Dolorosa (one of his best productions).

Brussels. Museum. Two Scenes in the Life of St. Benedict.

Dresden. Gallery. A Magdalene.

London. Nat. Gall. A Virgin with the Child.

Munich. Old Pina- } kothek. } The Adoration of the Magi.

Petersburg. Hermitage. The Marriage of St. Catharine.

MOTTA, RAFFAELLO, called RAFAELLINO DI REGGIO, painter, was born at Reggio in 1550. He was a pupil of Lelio Ozza de Novellara and of Frederigo Zuccari, but followed chiefly his own style. The subjects from the history of Hercules and the New Testament painted in the Vatican were executed with great skill, and the Cardinal Farnese invited him to paint his villa of Caprarola in conjunction with Zuccari and Giovanni de Vecchi; but the subsequent ill-treatment of the Cardinal caused by the jealousy of Vecchi, coupled with Roman fever, caused the artist's death at the early age of twenty-eight. He died at Rome in 1578. Bonifacii Fantini published in 1657, at Reggio, a 'Life of Motta.' Many of his pictures have been engraved.

MOTTI. See DE' MOTTI.

MOUCHERON, FREDERIK, (or DE MOUCHERON,) was born at Embden in 1663. At an early age he showed a strong inclination for art, in consequence of which he was placed as a pupil with Jan Asselyn. When he was little more than twenty years of age, he found himself able, on the produce of his talents, to undertake a journey to France, where he passed some years, and met with the most flattering encouragement. It was his intention to have visited Italy, by the advice of his instructor, who had studied at Rome; but his works were so much admired at Paris that he abandoned his project. After a residence of several years in that capital he returned to Antwerp, and afterwards settled at Amsterdam, where his pictures were held in equal estimation. He had now the advantage of having his pictures embellished with figures by A. Vandevelde and Lingelbach; and his best productions are those which he painted in the latter part of his life. The year of his death is not known, but there is a picture by him at Dresden with the date 1713 upon it. His pictures are not rare. Good examples are to be met with in most large galleries. Among the more accessible we may name:

Dublin.	Nat. Gall.	Landscape with sheep.
"	"	Landscape with muleteers.
Glasgow.	Gallery.	Landscape with round tower.
"	"	Landscape with hawking party.
London.	Nat. Gall.	Garden scene with figures.
"	S. Kensington Museum (Jones Collection).	Two landscapes, with figures by A. Vandevelde.

MOUCHERON, ISAAC, called ORDONNANCE on account of his cleverness in composition, the son and scholar of Frederik Moucheron, was born at Antwerp in 1670. When only sixteen years of age he lost his father, but he was already sufficiently advanced to be able to dispense with any other assistance than that of study from nature. In 1694 he visited Rome, and its environs became the object of his study, particularly the vicinity of Tivoli, of which he made a number of designs; and after a residence of four years in Italy returned to Holland, with a rich assemblage of drawings. On his return to Amsterdam he was chiefly employed in painting large landscapes for the ornaments of saloons, in which the figures were generally introduced by Nicolas Verkolee, Jakob de Wit, and others. In the scenery, as well as the style of his landscapes, he appears to have emulated the manner of Gaspard Poussin. His pictures are to be met with at Augsburg, Cassel, Christiania, Copenhagen, and Dresden (eight). He signed his works either with his full name or with M.f. He died at Amsterdam in 1744.

Isaac Moucheron etched many plates, among them a set of nineteen views of Heemstede, in the province of Utrecht, from his own designs. We have also the following by him:

A set of four Views of Gardens, with Buildings and Figures, inscribed J. Moucheron inv. pinx. et fec.

Another set of four Views of Gardens and Buildings, inscribed J. Moucheron inv. et fec.
Ten landscapes, with Figures; after Gaspard Poussin; inscribed Einige Landschapen, geschildert door G. Poussin, &c.

MOUCHY, MARTIN DE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1746. He was a pupil of Augustin de St. Aubine, and engraved several plates for the booksellers; among which are sixteen prints for the 'History of Telemachus,' after the designs of Monnet and Cochin. We have also the following by him:

A pair of Views in the environs of Triel; after Hackert.
A View of Marienberg, near Stockholm; after the same.
Another View in Sweden; after the same.

MOUNT, SHEPARD ALONZO, painter, born in 1804 at Setanket, Long Island. Member of the National Academy of Design, New York, in 1842. Died in 1868. His best pictures are a portrait of Admiral Bailey, U. S. N., and a portrait of himself, now in the possession of the National Academy.

MOUNT, WILLIAM SIDNEY, painter, brother of the above, was born at Setanket, Long Island, in 1806. At the age of seventeen he was apprenticed to his brother, a sign-painter in New York. In 1826 he went to the school of the Academy of Design, and in 1820 produced his first picture, a portrait of himself. In 1829 he established himself in New York as a portrait painter, and painted several humorous scenes and scenes of negro life. In 1832 he was elected a member of the National Academy. His 'Bargaining for a Horse' is in the possession of the New York Historical Society. He died at Setanket in 1868.

MOUZIJN, MICHAEL, (or MOSIN,) a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1630. He endeavoured to unite the point with the graver in the execution of his plates, but with no great success. We have, among others, the following prints by him:

PORTRAITS.

MOYA, PEDRO DE, a Spanish painter, was born at Granada in 1610. He was for some time a disciple of Juan del Castillo at Seville. A desire to see the works of Rubens and other distinguished painters of the Flemish school induced him to enlist as a foot-soldier in the army of Flanders and visit Antwerp, where he was particularly captivated with the works of Van Dyck, who was at that time for the purpose of becoming his pupil, but his intentions were frustrated by the death of Van Dyck within six months after Moya arrived in England. He returned to Spain, where Murillo, who was then about twenty-four, profited by his experience and advice. He ultimately settled at Granada, where he painted several pictures for the churches, of which the most esteemed is an altar-piece of the 'Conception,' in the church of Nuestra Señora de Gracia. He died at Granada in 1666. Other paintings by him are:

Granada.	Cathedral.	Madonna and Child; also a Bishop.
"	Trinity Conv.	Legends of St. John de Mata.

Vienna.	Czernin Coll.	A male portrait.

MOYREAU, JEAN, a French engraver, was born at Orleans in 1690. He studied painting under Boullongne, but soon devoted his time to engraving. He came to Paris, and in 1738 was admitted into L'Académie Royale, with the uncommon distinction that he was not required to engrave a portrait according to the rules. His principal works are his plates after Philips Wouwerman, consisting of eighty-nine prints. He engraved various prints after other masters, among which are the following:

- Rebecca receiving the Servant of Abraham; after Paolo Veronese; for the 'Croizat Gallery.'
- The Resurrection of Lazarus; after Bon de Boullongne.
- The Parting of Hector and Andromache; after the same.
- Bacchus and Ariadne; after the same.
- A Halt of Hunters; after Van Valens.
- A Hunting Rendezvous; after the same.

(The last two plates were engraved for his reception into the Academy in 1736, and are among his best prints.)

- A Sea-port; after Claude.

- A Waterfall; after the same.

Of his best prints after Wouwerman may be mentioned those entitled:

- Le Colombier du Maréchal.

- La Fontaine du Dauphin.
- La Fontaine de Neptune.

There was another French engraver, J. A. M. or M. A. M. Moyreau, who engraved some plates between 1761 and 1770. It is supposed he was a son of Jean Moyreau.

MOZART, ANTON, was a landscape painter who worked from about 1595 to 1624 at Augsburg. There remain of his works:

Augsburg.	Gallery.	The Miracle of the Loaves. 1624.

MUCCIOLI, BARTOLOMMEO and BENEDETTO, father and son, who were painting at Urbino towards the end of the 15th century. They were apparently natives of Ferrara. A picture signed 'Benedictus quondam Bartolomæi de Fer. Pictor, 1492,' is described by Lanzi as being "in the chapel of the Muccioli, their descendants," in S. Domenico, at Urbino.

MÜCKE, HEINRICH KARL ANTON, painter, designer, and etcher, was born at Breslau, April 9th, 1806. In 1824 he was a student at the Berlin Academy, and in 1826 a scholar under W. Schadow, at Düsseldorf. While still very young he painted a series of frescoes in the Schloss Heltorf, near Düsseldorf, which dealt with the career of the Emperor Barbarossa. In 1833-4 he travelled in Italy and Sicily, and in 1850 he paid a visit to England. In 1844 he became Professor of Anatomy in the Düsseldorf Academy. He went to Rome in 1852, and painted for the prelate Lichnowsky a 'Mass in the Sixtine Chapel.' Subsequently he spent almost every winter at Rome until 1858, returning periodically to Berlin; but finally he settled at Munich, where he died in 1865. His portraits are rare; the Munich Gallery has two, one dated 1540; and they are occasionally seen in the private collections of Germany. Mülich also painted miniatures with some skill. He held for a time the post of court painter to Duke Albert V. of Bavaria. He died in 1572 in his native city. Among his remaining works we find:

MULIER, or DE MULIERIBUS. See MOLYN.

MULINARI, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, called IL CARRACCINO, was born at Savigliano, Piedmont, in 1577. His best paintings are at his native place, but there is also one at Turin, in San Dalmasio, representing the 'Deposition from the Cross.' Though called 'Il Carraccino,' his style bore no relationship to that of the Carracci. He died in 1640.

MULINARI, MICHELE DE, a native of Milan, who flourished in the 14th and 15th centuries. He studied at Florence under Agnolo Gaddi, and became director of the Academy at Milan in 1366.

MULINARI, STEFANO, (or MOLINARI,) was an Italian engraver, known for his numerous prints after drawings by the early Italian masters. He was born at Florence about 1741, and was a pupil of A. Scacciati, whom he assisted in a series of engravings after the most beautiful drawings in the Florentine Collection. Forty-one only were executed during Scacciati's life; the remaining fifty-nine were engraved entirely by Mulinari. These were succeeded in 1775 by a series of fifty prints after drawings of the earliest masters, from Cimabue to Pietro Perugino, under the title 'Istoria pratica dell' Incamminamento e Progressi della Pittura.' This was followed in 1780 by a still more interesting work on the great Italian schools of painting up to Francesco Rustici, 'Saggio delle cinque Scuole di Pittura Italiana.' Mulinari died near the close of the 18th century, aged about fifty-five. Among the above-mentioned works are four after Leonardo da Vinci, five after Michelangelo, twenty-two after Raphael, eight after Giulio Romano, six after Polidoro da Caravaggio, twenty-six after Parmigiano, five after Daniele da Volterra, eight after Barocci, seven after Giulio Cesare Procaccini, three after Guido, three after Andrea Sacchi, thirteen after Guercino, and many others.

Nagler gives a list of about 200 of them in his 'Künstler-Lexicon.'

MÜLLENER, JOHANN KARL, called MÜLLER, was a Swiss painter of landscapes, born at Gesse-nay, in the canton of Berne, in 1768. He was his own instructor, but went early to Italy, and after having stayed some time with Angiolini at Serravezza, he established himself at Florence, where he died in 1832. His landscapes, mostly Italian scenes, are picturesque and lively.

MÜLLER, ACHILLES, a painter chiefly on glass, who was employed by the King of Poland and by the Elector of Bavaria between 1580 and 1615. He was a native of Munich.

After having been several times at Frankfurt, Aschaffenburg, Eisenach, and Cassel, he became court painter to the Prince of Waldeck in 1807, and did much good work for him. Subsequently he visited Hamburg, Moscow, and St. Petersburg, and then settled at Frankfurt. In 1817 he became inspector of the Gallery at Darmstadt. He painted portraits and history, and for his work in St. Catherine's Church at Oppenheim he obtained the title of doctor. He died in 1835.

He was instructed in art at Mannheim, after which he became court painter and etcher at Zweibrücken, and in 1778 went to Rome, where he imitated the style of Michelangelo, and died in 1825. MÜLLER, FRIEDRICH, a painter, was born at Kirchditmold, near Cassel, in 1801. His works are more concerned with colour than was usual in his time in Germany. He was a professor in the Cassel Academy. He retired into private life in 1875.

MÜLLER, FRIEDRICH, a painter, was born at Cassel in 1811. He lived much in Italy, but his sojourn there did not have the effect upon his style that might have been expected. His best picture is a 'Wooded landscape with Knights at a meal.' He died in Munich, May 30, 1859.

MÜLLER, G. A., was born at Vienna about the year 1700. He was a contemporary of Andreas and Joseph Schmutzer, and in conjunction with them executed a part of the plates to the 'Life of Decius,' from the designs by Rubens, in the possession of the Prince of Liechtenstein. We have also the following portraits by him:

Prince Ludwig, Count von Sintzendorf, Minister of State.

Jacob van Schuppen, Director of the Academy at Vienna.

The two Children of Rubens; from the picture by that master in the Liechtenstein Collection.

The date of his death is not known, but it occurred after 1762.

MÜLLER, HEINRICH KARL, born at Strasburg in 1784, was an engraver, and instructed by Ch. Guérin. His best plate is 'Psyche,' after Prud'hon. He obtained several medals, was a member of the Academy at Berlin, and a Knight of the Legion of Honour. He died in Paris in 1846.

MÜLLER, HERMANN, is said by Huber to have been a native of Amsterdam, though he resided the greater part of his life at Antwerp, where he engraved several plates, in conjunction with Cornelis Cort, for Jerome Cock. He flourished about the year 1585, and is supposed to have been a disciple of the two artists named, and to have studied afterwards in Italy. The plates of Hermann Müller are executed entirely with the graver, in the laboured, formal style which distinguished the Flemish school at that period. In conjunction with the Galles, the Sadeliers, and others, he engraved several subjects from the Bible, after Van der Straet, Martin de Vos, and other masters. We have also the following by him:

The Fates; after Cornelis van Haarlem.

A set of seven plates of the Creation; after H. Goltzius.

MÜLLER, HERMANN MARTIN CHRISTOFFER, painter, was born at Hamburg, in 1806. He was a pupil of Siegfried Bendixen, but in 1828 was a student in the Munich Academy. The subjects of his pictures were mostly taken from the Nibelungenlied. He died at Munich in 1837.

MÜLLER, JACOB, is the name affixed to the frontispiece and plans in a book on Gardening, from the designs of Georg Hatzel, published at Augsburg by Jeremiah Wolf. The same engraver produced some landscapes in the style of Perelle.

MÜLLER, JAN, an engraver, is supposed to have been of the same family with Hermann Müller. He was born at Amsterdam about the year 1570, and was a disciple of Hendrik Goltzius, whose style he followed with enthusiasm. His last works are dated 1625. He engraved several portraits, which are highly esteemed. The following are among his most admired works:

MÜLLER, JOHANN BAPTIST, born at Geratsried in Bavaria, in 1809, was a painter of history, and attended the Academy at Munich, where he studied under Konrad Eberhard and H. Hess. He assisted the latter of these in his frescoes in All Saints' Chapel, and in the decoration of the Basilica; and with Führich he in 1837 executed the works on the Laurentiusberg at Prague. From 1842 to 1849 he was occupied with glass-painting. His altar-pieces and easel-pictures are to be met with at Obertingen, Erkheim, Scheideck, and Kösching near Ingolstadt. His best picture is 'St. Jerome on the Ruins of Jerusalem.' He died at Munich in 1869. Many of his works have been lithographed and printed in colours.

MÜLLER, JOHANN CHRISTIAN ERNST, engraver, was born at Troistedt, in the Grand Duchy of Weimar. He studied under Lips, at Zurich, and in 1820 became professor in the drawing school at Weimar. He died in 1824. Works:

Profile portrait of Bonaparte as First Consul.

Portrait of the Grand Duke of Weimar.

Portrait of the Emperor Alexander I. of Russia.

MÜLLER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH WILHELM, son of Johann Gotthard von Müller, was born at Stuttgart in 1782. He was carefully educated by his father in all the branches of art essential to constitute an excellent engraver; and in 1802 he migrated to Paris to complete his studies. In 1805 Müller engraved the Crown Prince of Würtemberg's portrait, and 'St. John about to write his Revelation,' after Domenichino, in which the eagle brings him his pen; and 'Adam and Eve under Temptation,' after Raphael. In 1809 he went to Italy, and on his return became engraver to the court at Stuttgart, and in 1814 professor of engraving at Dresden. There he was commissioned by Rittner, a printseller, to engrave his last and greatest plate, the Madonna di San Sisto of Raphael in the Dresden Gallery. He was occupied for the remainder of his life on this plate, which he just lived to complete, but he never saw a finished print from it. His existence seems to have been almost wrapped up in its execution; he was occupied with it day and night; and being of a sickly constitution, the infallible result of such constant application and excitement soon made its appearance. He completed the plate and sent it to Paris to be printed; but with it the artificial excitement which supported him departed also: he had just strength enough left to admit of his being carried to the Sonnenstein, near Pirna, where he died May 3, 1816, only a few days before the proof of his plate arrived from Paris. It was suspended over the head of his bier as he lay dead. This plate was retouched in 1827. J. F. Müller engraved only eighteen plates, but the Madonna di San Sisto is in itself a host; his other works are nearly all portraits.

MÜLLER, JOHANN GOTTHARD VON, a German engraver, was born at Bernhausen, in the duchy of Würtemberg, in 1747. He was favoured with the protection of the Duke Karl Eugen, by whose aid he for six years studied painting and design, and was sent to Paris in 1770, where he became a pupil of J. G. Wille, and began to engrave. His talents procured him his reception into the Academy in Paris in 1776. He soon afterwards returned to Stuttgart, where, by order of the duke, he founded an Academy of Design, of which he was a professor during 1776-94, and subsequently director. He was awarded the Würtemberg Order of the Crown in 1818, and was a member of the Academies of Berlin, Copenhagen, Munich, and Vienna. He died at Stuttgart in 1830. His engraving of the 'Madonna della Seggiola, executed in 1804 for the Musée Français, is considered by many persons superior to that of Raphael Morghen of the same subject. We have by him several plates, engraved in the style of his instructor, among which are the following :

PORTRAITS.

- Louisa XVI. full-length; after Duplessis; one of his finest plates.
 Jean George Wille, Engraver; after Greuze.

MÜLLER, JOHANN JAKOB, called 'Müller of Riga,' was born at Riga in 1765. He was first a preacher, but afterwards studied painting at Dresden under Klengel and at Rome, and particularly the manner in which Claude Lorraine treated distances in his works. After having in 1817 visited Italy for a second time, he settled at Stuttgart, where he became court painter to King Friedrich, and died in 1831. There are by him several views of Pompeii (two of them in possession of the King of Bavaria), and a 'Landscape near Salerno,' in the Gallery at Stuttgart.

MÜLLER, JOHANN SEBASTIAN, (or MILLER,) a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg about the year 1720. He came with his brother to England in 1744, resided in London in 1760, and engraved several plates for the collection of Boydell; he is generally known in this country under the name of Miller. We have, among others, the following prints by him :

The Holy Family; after Federigo Baroccio.

Another Holy Family; after Murillo.

Nero depositing the Ashes of Britannicus; after Le Sueur.

A Landscape, with Apollo and Marsyas; after Claude.

MÜLLER, JOHN PETER, a Danish landscape painter, born in 1783. He had a good reputation in his native country. Many of his subjects are scenes in Sweden and Norway, and have been engraved and lithographed. He died in 1854. In the Royal Gallery at Copenhagen there are two of his landscapes, a 'View of the Wetterhorn,' and a 'Forest Road near Elsinore.'

MÜLLER, MORITZ. See STEINLA.

MÜLLER, MORITZ KARL FRIEDRICH, called 'Fire Müller,' from his occasional fondness for artificial illuminations, was a painter of portraits, history, and genre, who was born at Dresden in 1807, and studied art at the Academy there under Matthäi. In 1829 he went to Zittau, where there are some of his altar-pieces, and in 1830 to Munich, where he died in 1865. He was a member of the Academy at Dresden. Some of his best paintings are :

The sulky Boy. (Berlin National Gallery.)

Consecration of a Church.

Christmas Eve.

Lovers at the Fireside of a Shepherd's Cottage.

The Tyrolese marching out under Haspinger.

Return Home of a Wounded Soldier in the Tyrol.

MULLER, PIETRO. See MOLYN.

MÜLLER, SALOMON, was probably of the same family as Hermann and Jan Müller, and flourished about the year 1610. From the style of his engraving, it is probable he was brought up in the school of the Wierixes. He engraved a set of small prints of sacred subjects, which, as they are without the name of the painter, are probably from his own designs.

MÜLLER, VICTOR, was born at Frankfort in 1829, and studied at the Städel Institute in that city. In 1849 he went to Antwerp, and afterwards to Paris, where he continued his studies under Couture. On his return to Frankfort in 1838, he brought himself into notice by the 'Forest Nymphs,' 'Diana and Endymion,' and 'Hero and Leander.' In 1865 he went to Munich, where he died in 1871; there he chiefly painted portraits and scenes in the life of Hartmuth of Kronenberg. Among his other paintings the most important are :

Faust and Wagner.

Hamlet and the Grave-digger.

Ophelia.

Romeo and Juliet.

MÜLLER, WILLIAM JAMES, an English landscape and figure painter, was born at Bristol in 1812; his father, of German extraction, was curator of the Bristol Museum, and from him he acquired a taste for science, especially botany and natural history. He was at first designed for an engineer, but his predilection for art soon made itself manifest. From J. B. Pyne he received the primary instructions in painting; and in 1833 he for the first time exhibited at the Royal Academy, his picture being 'The Destruction of Old London Bridge—Morning?' Soon after he made the tour of Germany, Switzerland, and Italy, studying from nature, and hence his works bear the impress of originality in a greater degree than those of most modern landscape painters. On his return to his native city he pursued his profession, but with very partial success. In 1838 he visited Greece and Egypt, enriching his portfolio with a large number of sketches of the most interesting objects. About the end of 1839 he settled in London, where his pictures found ready purchasers. Two years afterwards he published 'Picturesque Sketches of the Age of Francis I.,' which extended his fame beyond his own country. He next, in 1841, at his own expense, joined the expedition to Lycia, projected by the government, and from the valuable sketches he made there, produced the pictures which were exhibited at the Royal Academy and British Institution during the last three years of his life. Of the treatment his work received at both places he complained with bitterness, and, it must be admitted, with justice. In 1836-7-8 he also sent pictures to the Suffolk Street Exhibitions. In 1845 Müller left London for Bristol for the benefit of his health; but his strength gradually failed, and he died on the 8th September of that year of disease of the heart. At the sale of his oil pictures, finished and unfinished, and of the series of sketches made by him in Lycia (which took place in the following year), competition to possess them was extreme; the sketches sold at prices varying from £20 to £60 for each, and the total amount of the three days' sale was about £4600. These were not factitious prices, for the dealers reaped a rich harvest by the purchases they made at the sale. In 1875 his Memoir was brought out, by the pen of N. N. Soley, and his works have greatly increased in value since. Müller is very scantily represented in public collections. In the National Gallery there are a fine Welsh landscape and a clever Lycian sketch, both in oil. In the South Kensington Museum there are eight of his water-colour drawings.

MULLINARI. See MULINARI.

MULREADY, WILLIAM, the son of a leather-breeches maker, was born at Ennis, County Clare, Ireland, on the 1st of April, 1786. When William was about eighteen months old the family removed to Dublin, and after remaining there about four years came to London, where they settled near Leicester Square. After picking up as much of art as he could gather from old books and prints, and from an artist named Graham, Mulready was permitted to study in the studio of Banks, the sculptor, and in October 1800 he became a student of the Royal Academy. Two years later he obtained the silver palette of the Society of Arts. From the age of fifteen Mulready was no longer dependent upon his parents for subsistence. It is not exactly known how he managed to support himself at first;

but, according to Marcliffe, he drew illustrations for books, and perhaps tried his hand at scene painting, as he used to say in after-life, "I drew on a very large scale when I was young." Teaching drawing, which he continued throughout his life, was also another resource in his early days; he became tutor to several persons of note, one of whom was Miss Isabella Milbanke, afterwards Lady Byron. In 1803, when scarcely more than seventeen years of age, he married the elder sister of John Varley, the famous water-colour painter, whose pupil he is generally supposed to have been; and before he was nineteen he became a father. The lady, who was a year older than her husband, was also an artist, and exhibited several paintings at the Royal Academy Exhibitions. The union, however, was a very unhappy one, and occasioned much of the trouble of the artist's life, for after they had been married barely six years they separated, and never afterwards resided together. In 1804, when only eighteen, Mulready exhibited three pictures at the Royal Academy, two views of Kirkstall, and a cottage at Knaresborough in Yorkshire. In 1807 the artist's first figure picture, 'Old Kaspar,' appeared at the Academy, and was succeeded in the following year by 'The Rattle;' from the extreme finish of these works, it is evident that Mulready carefully studied the Dutch School, and to a great extent imitated it. In 1809, stimulated no doubt by the success which Wilkie had achieved by the production of his 'Blind Fiddler' and 'Rent-Day,' Mulready executed his first large work, 'The Carpenter's Shop,' which he sent to the British Institution to compete for the prizes offered by that Society, and two years later painted another picture, 'The Barber's Shop,' in the same style. In 1815 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy; and in the beginning of the next year, before the Academy Exhibition was opened, he obtained the full honours of a member. Thus his name never appeared in the Catalogue under the lesser title; such a rapid rise had never before, nor has since, occurred in the Academy. 'The Fight Interrupted' was exhibited this year, and fully justified the Academy's choice. This work, considered to be the most perfect picture in his first manner, is now in the Sheepshanks Collection, at the South Kensington Museum. From this time Mulready no longer imitated the Dutch School, or endeavoured to rival Wilkie in his style, but gradually changed to a manner peculiar to himself. He produced between the years 1820 and 1836, some of his most humorous pictures, chiefly of boy life and village incidents. It was not, however, until after 1838, when Mulready was more than fifty years of age, that he produced those works of fine colour, and consummate refinement and variety of execution in which his art culminated: 'The Sonnet,' 'Train up a Child,' 'The Whistonian Controversy.' Mulready was ever a faithful member of the Academy, ever preferring his professional duties to his private and personal interests; from the time he first became a student until within two days of his death he was a constant attendant at the Life School, not only as a willing "visitor," giving advice to the young students, but also as a diligent worker, producing there many of those excellent life-studies for which he was distinguished. He was one of the founders and most active members of the Society for the Management and Distribution of the Artists' Fund, of which he held the office of President as early as 1815; and it may be mentioned to his honour that he surrendered the right to engrave and sell prints of 'The Wolf and the Lamb' to the fund: this act of charity realized the sum of one thousand pounds. During his last years Mulready lived a very secluded life at his residence in Linden Grove, Bayswater. On the morning of the 7th of July, 1863, he died of heart disease, and was buried in Kensal Green Cemetery. In the following year there was a loan collection of his works in the South Kensington Museum. His illustrations to an edition of the 'Vicar of Wakefield,' published in 1843, were very successful, and led to his being employed to paint several of the subjects — e. g. the 'Whistonian Controversy,' 'Choosing the Wedding Gown,' &c. MULTZ, ANDREAS PAUL, painter and engraver, a native of Oberschönfeld, was at Nuremberg from about 1650 to 1680. We have by him a considerable number of early portraits in mezzotint; among them:

- Rudolphus Buchner.
 J. G. Beil.
 Stephan Behaim.
 Friedrich Behaim.

He generally signed with the full initials A. P. M.

MULVANY, GEORGE, son of the above, was born in Dublin in 1809, and studied in the Academy there. In 1832 he became an Associate, and succeeded his father as keeper; was afterwards director of the National Gallery in Dublin. He exhibited at the Royal Academy at London in 1836 and 1839. He died in Dublin, 6th February, 1869. Among his works are:

- The White Man cast on the Red Man's shore.
 The Peasant's Grave, &c.

MULVANY, THOMAS JAMES, an Irish landscape painter. He contributed to the Dublin Exhibition in 1809, and was one of the members of the Royal Hibernian Academy, when it was incorporated in 1823, and keeper in 1841. He died about 1845-6. The 'Life of James Gandon,' the architect, was edited by him.

MUNARI, PELLEGRINO. See ARETUSI.

MUNCH, JACOB, an obscure German painter, who flourished between 1776 and 1839.

MUND, ELISE, (or ELIZABETHA). See COENTGEN.

MUNIER, JEAN, a French engraver on wood, resided at Toulouse about the year 1553. He executed several woodcuts in conjunction with Jean Perrin. Among others, we have by these artists the prints for a small octavo volume of emblems, entitled 'La Morosophie de Guillaume de la Perrière Tolsain, contenant cent Emblèmes,' published at Lyons in 1553.

MUNN, JAMES, probably a relative of Paul Sandby Munn, exhibited water-colour landscapes with the Incorporated and the Free Societies, between 1767 and 1773.

MUNN, PAUL SANDBY, an English water-colour landscape painter, born in 1773. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1798 to 1805, and from 1805 to 1815 at the Water-colour Society, of which he was an Associate. He died at Margate in 1845. Three of his water-colour drawings are at South Kensington.

MUNNICKHUIJSEN, JAN, a Flemish engraver, flourished about the year 1680. We have several plates by him, executed with the burin; among them, the following portraits:

- Hendrik Dirksen Spiegel, Burgomaster; after Limburg.
 Frans Burmann, Professor of Theology; after C. Maas.
 Hendrik van der Graff.
 Cornelis van Tromp, Admiral of Holland; after D. van der Plaas.
 Pieter van Staveren, of Amsterdam; after W. Mieris.
 Pieter Zurendonk, Rector of the Latin School at Amsterdam.

He also engraved an upright plate of two boys, emblematical of Autumn and Winter, after Gerard de Lairese.

MUNNIKS, HENDRIK, a Dutch painter of portraits and history, who flourished at Utrecht in 1627. In that year he was regent of the hospital of St. Job, Utrecht, and united with some of his fellow-artists to found a new Academy of St. Luke. He was still working there in 1640. In 1644 a certain HENDRIK MUNNEKENS was inscribed in the Society of Painters, at the Hague, who may have been identical with Munniks. He is described as having painted, in 1643, a 'Venus' which the Prince of Orange bought for 120 florins. About 1620 he had presented a picture to the Hospital of St. Job.

MUÑOZ, EVARISTO, born at Valencia, 1671, studied painting under Juan Conchilles Falco. Without much artistic merit, his productions patronage of Bishop Malaquilla. Nothing is known of his early life; he left several sons, likewise painters. Cean Bermudez praises his works in the Franciscan, Augustine, and Carmelite convents, especially a picture of St. Francis de Paula in the church of the Observant fathers.

MURILLO, BARTOLOMÉ ESTÉBAN, was born at Seville, probably in the last days of December 1617, as he was baptized on the 1st of January, 1618. His father was Gaspar Estéban Murillo, a mechanic, and his mother Maria Perez. He lost both his parents before he was ten years old, and was left to the care of an uncle by marriage. Soon afterwards he was apprenticed to his relation, Juan del Castillo, who taught him the elementary details of an artist's education, and gave him instruction in drawing. In 1640 del Castillo left Seville, and Murillo, who was then two-and-twenty, had to struggle for existence. The first subjects he painted were country people and beggar boys, in which he displayed an accurate attention to nature, and a charming simplicity of character peculiar to himself. His pictures of this description are vigorously coloured, though without the softness which afterwards distinguished his works. At this time it was customary for young artists to expose their pictures for sale at the Feria, or weekly market, and many of his earliest were purchased there, and thence exported to Spanish America, thus probably giving rise to the false tradition that he visited that country. In 1642 Pedro de Moya, who had been a pupil of J. del Castillo, returned from his campaign in Flanders and his study under Van Dyck in England. His account of the glories of the Flemish school of painting raised Murillo's ambition, and the young artist conceived the idea of going at least to Madrid, perhaps to Rome. He went to the Spanish capital in 1643, and on his arrival applied for advice to Velazquez, his fellow-townsmen, then at the height of his reputation. That artist not only admitted him into his painting-room, but treated him with the greatest kindness and liberality. He procured for him access to the rich treasures of art deposited in the Royal Collections, and gave him instruction. Murillo's attention was particularly directed to the works of Ribera, Van Dyck, and Velazquez, which he studied and copied, thus greatly improving his colouring. After having had, during nearly three years, the advantage of the advice of Velazquez and the patronage of Olivarez, Murillo, not caring any longer to go to Rome, returned in 1645 or early in 1646 to Seville. There, in that year, he undertook to paint for a very small sum his first great work, the series of eleven pictures for the Franciscan convent within the walls of Seville, ten of which pictures were afterwards carried off by Marshal Soult to France, and the eleventh sold to Mr. Ford. And here it is necessary to observe that in the former editions of this Dictionary it was assumed that a picture of 'The Charity of St. Thomas de Villanueva,' which formed one of this series, was the celebrated one Murillo prized so highly that he always spoke of it as "his picture." This latter was not painted until between 1670-80 for the Franciscan convent, called the "Capuchins," without the walls of Seville. Standish, writing about 1840, tells us that it was then in the chapel of Santa Ana in the cathedral. It is now said to be in the Public Gallery of Seville. Murillo painted the subject several times. The pictures painted for the other convent in 1647 placed Murillo in the front rank of the painters at Seville, and he was soon busily employed on sacred and other subjects. In 1648 he married a wealthy lady, Doña Beatriz de Cabrera y Sotomayor, of Pilas, near Seville, who is thought to have been the model whose face appears in many of his beautiful Madonnas. In 1654, on the death of Pacheco, Murillo became the legitimate head of the Sevillian school; and his house was the resort of many distinguished persons in the city. He was now much employed by the cathedral authorities and other ecclesiastical bodies. In 1655 he painted 'St. Isidor' and 'St. Leander' by order of the Archdeacon of Carmona. In 1656 he produced 'St. Anthony of Padua' for the cathedral chapter, and in the same year the four large pictures—two of which represent the legend of Our Lady of the Snow, and are now in Madrid—for his friend the Canon Justino Neve y Yevenes. The first of January 1669 saw the foundation by Murillo of the Academy of Seville, started under many difficulties through the half-heartedness of his rivals in art, the younger Herrera and Valdés Leal. The former and Murillo were elected joint presidents; but Murillo left it in its second year, and, owing to personal jealousies and quarrels, the Academy never really succeeded. In 1668 Murillo executed a 'Virgin of the Conception,' and eight oval half-length figures of saints for the chapter-house of the cathedral. In 1671 to him was entrusted the decoration of the All Saints' chapel on the occasion of the festival held in honour of the canonization of Ferdinand III., and his work was most highly praised by the poet La Torre Farfan. In 1671 Murillo commenced one of his most celebrated works, the series of paintings for the church of the Hospital of La Caridad. They are eleven in number, and occupied him four years. Six still remain in the hospital. Marshal Soult carried off the other five. Cean Bermudez, who saw all these paintings when still together, awarded the palm to 'St. Elizabeth' and 'The Prodigal's Return.' In 1674, the date of their completion, Murillo received 78,115 reals in payment for his works. From 1674 till 1680 Murillo was employed by his friends the Franciscans to decorate their Capuchin convent outside Seville. It is said that for three years he remained entirely within its walls, and executed upwards of twenty important works (seventeen of them are now in the Seville Museum). Of these, the most celebrated is that of 'St. Thomas of Villanueva distributing alms.'

The subject of 'The Immaculate Conception' was one which Murillo painted many times. The picture in the Louvre is the best known, but it is difficult to dissent from the opinion of Madrazo, who asserts that the example in the Madrid Museum is the finest of all these pictures. Stirling doubts whether Murillo painted his last work, 'The Marriage of St. Catherine,' at Cadiz, and his contention that the picture was executed at Seville appears very reasonable. Be this as it may, it is agreed on all hands that Murillo died at Seville in 1682, from the consequences of a fall while painting this picture, which was finished by his pupil, Meneses Osorio. Murillo left three children. The second, GASPARESTEBAN, was a priest, but painted in the style of his father. As a landscape painter Murillo had great merit, as may be seen in the backgrounds of the series of pictures, 'The Life of Joseph,' painted for the Marquis of Villamanrique. He is said to have etched one plate, a small half-figure of St. Francis.

MURPHY, JOHN, a designer and engraver, was born in Ireland about the year 1748, and flourished till the early part of the present century. He worked in London, and followed both the mezzotint and dot systems. He engraved some plates in the Houghton Collection, and also some after other works of Italian masters; and also after Reynolds, Northcote, Romney, Stothard, Rainberg, and B. West. All his productions are good, but perhaps the following are the best:

Mark Antony's Oration over the body of Cæsar; after West.

Elisha restoring the Widow's Son; after Northcote.

The Tiger; after the same.

The Royal Family; after Stothard. 1787.

The brothers of Joseph showing his bloody Garment to Jacob; after Guercino.

Joseph's interpreting Pharaoh's dream; after the same.

MURR, HANS VON, an obscure German painter, who lived from about 1644 to about 1713. There is a 'Sibyl' by him at Copenhagen.

MURRAY, ELIZABETH, was the daughter of Thomas Heaphy, a painter in water-colours and the first President of the Society of British Artists. As Miss Heaphy she exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1838 and in subsequent exhibitions, a portrait of a lady and other works. After her marriage with Mr. Henry John Murray, H. B. M. Consul at Tangiers, she frequently contributed, from 1846, subjects of an Oriental character. In 1863 she became a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-colours. She died on the 8th December, 1882, at St. Remo.

MURRAY, JOHN. In the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' for 1735, there is a short notice of the death of an artist of this name in Southampton Row: "a famous face-painter, worth £40,000, died June 1".

MURRAY, R—, a portrait and subject painter, practised in London about the middle of the 18th century. J. Watson mezzotinted a picture by him called 'The Enchantress.'

MURRAY, THOMAS, portrait painter, a native of Scotland, was born in 1666, and coming early to London, became a scholar of John Riley, at the time when that master was painter to William and Mary. He was esteemed in his own time, and was employed to paint the portraits of the royal family and many of the principal nobility. He died in 1724. The portrait of Murray, painted by himself, is among those of the great artists in the Florentine Gallery. Several other works by him are at Oxford; his portraits of William and Mary are at the Fishmongers' Hall, and those of Halley and Sir Hans Sloane at the Royal Society and the College of Physicians respectively.

MURRER, JOHANN, painter and etcher, was a native of Nuremberg, where he was born in 1644. He was a pupil successively of Haberlein, J. F. Heinsel, and Luca Giordano. At Copenhagen there is a 'Sibyl' by him; at Nuremberg a 'Samson and Delilah.' He etched a 'Diogenes and Alexander,' and a 'Silenus with Bacchantes.' Murrer died in 1713. His daughter ANNA BARBARA was scarcely inferior to himself as an artist.

MURRI, JACQUES, a French miniaturist, who worked in Paris with some repute about 1490.

MUSI, AGOSTINO DE', or AGOSTINO DE MUSIS, called AGOSTINO VENEZIANO, an eminent engraver, was born at Venice about the year 1490, and was pupil of G. Campagnola, and afterwards formed his style on a study of Albrecht Dürer. He was also a disciple of Marc Antonio Raimondi, of whose fine style he was one of the most successful followers. Several of his earliest plates were executed in conjunction with Marco da Ravenna, who had been his fellow-student under Marc Antonio.

After the death of Raphael, in 1520, they separated, and each of them worked on his own account. On the sacking of Rome, in 1527, the artists resident in that capital sought refuge in the other cities of Italy; and Agostino went to Florence, where he applied to Andrea del Sarto for employment. But having engraved, in 1516, a plate from a picture by him, representing a dead Christ, supported by Angels, which did not meet with the painter's approbation, he would not permit any more of his pictures to be engraved. The earliest dated print by Agostino is in 1509; and as none of his works bear a later date than 1536, it may be presumed, that he did not long survive that period; and he is said by Huber to have died at Rome about the year 1540. This artist holds a distinguished rank among the engravers of his time. His burin is scarcely less neat and finished than that of Marc Antonio; but he is very inferior to that celebrated artist in the purity and correctness of his drawing, and in the tasteful expression of his heads. The prints of Agostino de Musis are extremely scarce, particularly fine impressions. He sometimes marked them with a tablet similar to that used by Marc Antonio, but more frequently with the initials A. V. with the date. The following are the best:

PORTRAITS.

- Pope Paul III., in profile; inscribed Paulus III. Pon. Max. 1534.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

- The Burying-place, an assemblage of emaciated figures with skeletons, and a figure of Death holding a book; after Baccio Bandinelli; inscribed Augustinus Venetus de Musis faciebat. 1518.
 A large print, called the Climbers; after the famous cartoon of Pisa, by Michelangelo Buonarroti, dated 1523. This print is very different from that of the same subject engraved by Marc Antonio, which consists of many more figures. It is marked with the name of the painter on a tablet, and dated 1524.
 The Academy of Baccio Bandinelli, in which that artist is represented in the midst of his disciples. 1531.
 The Battle of the Sabre, so called from a sword which lies on the ground, fallen from the hand of a warrior, who is represented as dead, on the right-hand side of the print.
 An Emperor on horseback, with attendants, called by some the Triumph of Marcus Aurelius. This print is marked with the tablet used by Marc Antonio, who is supposed to have partly engraved it.
 An old Philosopher or Magician, seated on the ground, measuring, with his compasses, a circle in which are seen the sun and moon; dated 1509; after Dom. Campagnola.

He also engraved a variety of plates after arabesques by Raphael, and several busts and antique vases.

MUSI, GIULIO DE', probably a relation of Agostino de' Musi. He engraved some plates of antiquities, after drawings by Phyrro Ligorio, which bear the dates 1553 and 1554.

MUSI, LORENZO DE', also supposed to be a relation of Agostino. He engraved a portrait of 'Barbarossa, Re de Algieri,' dated 1535, and perhaps a female figure called 'Peace,' on which are the letters L. M.

MUSIANA. See MUZIANO.

MUSLER, GERARD VAN, a Flemish painter of little importance. He was inscribed on the register of the Guild of St. Luke at Bruges, in 1470.

MUSNIER. See MEUNIER.

MUSS, CHARLES, enamel and glass painter, was born in 1779, and was the son of Bonifacio Musso, an Italian. Among some enamels produced for Georges III. and IV., there is a 'Holy Family,' after Parmigiano. In St. Bride's Church is his glass-painting, the 'Descent of Christ from the Cross,' after Rubens. Between 1802 and 1823 he contributed many enamel reproductions of pictures to the Academy exhibitions, among them one after Wilkie's 'Duncan Grey.' He produced thirty-three plates of designs and etchings for 'Gay's Fables.' He died in 1824.

MUSSCHER, MICHIEL VAN, a Dutch painter and etcher, was born at Rotterdam in 1645. He was first placed under the tuition of Martin Zaagmoolen, an obscure artist, with whom he did not continue long, and was afterwards successively the scholar of Abraham van den Tempel, Gabriel Metsu, and Adrian van Ostade. He did not, however, exactly follow the style of either of his instructors, but adopted one more resembling that of Frans Mieris. He painted conversations, views of towns, and small portraits. His best picture is that of his own family; and according to M. Descamps, he occasionally attempted historical subjects. His execution was thin and laboured, and his colour poor. His principal residence was at Amsterdam, where his pictures are to be met with in many collections. They are little known out of his own country. He died there in 1705. The following of his works remain :

Amsterdam.	Van der Hoop Collection.	} A Family.
Brussels.	Arenburg Gal.
Hague.		The Good Mother.
		His own Family. 1681.
London.	Lord Northbrook's.	} Willem van de Velde in his atelier.
Rotterdam.	Museum.
		Three Children. 1690.

A. Blooteling, I. van Gunst, and others, have engraved after him. He scraped his own portrait in mezzotint, and engraved, Portrait of Johann Moritz of Nassau.

Portrait of the Physician Galenus Abrahamsz.

MUSSINI, CESARE, was born at Berlin about 1797. His artistic education was mainly received in the Academy of Florence. He was afterwards named court painter to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, and professor in the Academy. His best pictures, 'Tasso reading his Poems,' and 'Atala,' are at Florence.

MUSSO, BONIFACIO, an Italian artist, who was settled at Newcastle-on-Tyne at the end of the 18th century. He was the father of Charles Muss.

MUSSO, NICCOLÒ, was a native of Casalmonferrato, and flourished about the year 1618. According to Orlandi, he went to Rome when he was very young, and entered the school of Michelangelo da Caravaggio. After passing ten years at Rome, he returned to his native city, where he painted several altar-pieces for the churches, of which Lanzi particularly mentions a picture of 'St. Francis kneeling before the crucified Saviour,' in the church dedicated to that Saint. His style is a mild edition of Caravaggio's.

MUSSON, MATHIEU, a Flemish painter, of whom little is known. He was received into the corporation of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1647-8, together with MATHIEU MUSSON THE YOUNGER, who is pretty sure to have been his son, as he was received as the 'son of a master.' One of the two died in 1678.

MUTINA. See MODENA.

MUTTENTHALER, ANTON, (TONY,) a German painter of history and genre, was born at Höchstädt in 1820. He studied under Kaulbach, at Munich. A 'Battle of Ampfing,' in the Bavarian National Museum, is one of his best works; he also designed many illustrations for German books. He died at Leipzig, March 21, 1870.

MUTTONI, PIETRO DE', a Venetian painter, called Pietro della Vecchia, from his skill in restoring, copying, and imitating old pictures, was born in Venice in 1605. He was a pupil of Varotari, but did not resemble him in style. Some of his pictures are found in the Church of Ogni Santa at Venice, and at Verona; and in the National Gallery at Dublin is a picture of 'Timoclea brought before Alexander.' He died about 1678.

MUX, JACOB, a Flemish painter, who was employed at Lorrain in 1468. Nothing is known of his life.

MUXEL, JOHANN NEPOMUK, brother of Joseph Muxel, was born at Munich in 1790. He studied theology, but afterwards devoted his time to painting under Mannlich and Langen. He taught the Princes of Leuchtenburg drawing, and published the 'Leuchtenburg Gallery,' between 1835-40. There is a fine picture by him, 'The Holy Family by Night,' at Augsburg. He also engraved a number of plates, among which is 'Christ and the Little Children,' after Van Langen.

MUXEL, JOSEPH, was born in 1786, and the son of a sculptor of the same name in Munich, who taught him to draw; otherwise he was almost self-taught, but rose to eminence as a portrait painter. In 1819 he painted the portrait of King Maximilian I., and was appointed court-painter in the following year. There is an 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' by him at Aunsburg.

MUYLTJES, ADRIAAN, a little known painter of Haarlem, who was inscribed on the guild in 1640. He was one of the signatories of the petition of 1642. He died in 1649.

MUYNCK, ADRIAAN VAN, a Flemish painter of history, was born at Bruges about 1738. He was a pupil of M. de Visch. After a visit to France, he settled in Rome, where he became director of a Flemish hospital, and died in 1814.

MUYS, NICHOLAS, son of Willem Muys, was born at Rotterdam in 1740. He was instructed by his father, and also by Aart Schouman at the Hague. He painted portraits and cabinet pictures, chiefly interiors. He died in 1808.

MUYS, R., a Dutch engraver, has left, among others, a portrait of William, Prince of Orange.

MUYS, WILLEM, was born at Schiedam in 1712, and resided at Rotterdam. He painted portraits and other subjects of large dimensions; and also cabinet pictures in the taste of Mieris and Van der Werf. He died at Rotterdam in 1763.

MUZIANO, IL CAVALIERE GIROLAMO, (or MUSIANA,) called GIROLAMO BRESSANO, and Messer GIROLAMO BRESCIANINO, ('Il Giovane de' Paesi,') was born at Acquafredda, in the territory of Brescia, in 1528. After receiving some instruction in art in his native city, under Girolamo Romanino and Vasari Mosciano, he went to Venice, where he studied the works of Titian, Giorgione, and the other great masters. When he was about twenty years of age he visited Rome, accompanied by Federigo Zuccaro, where it was not long before his abilities recommended him to the notice of Gregory XIII., who employed him in the Capella Gregoriana, and commissioned him to paint two pictures for the church of St. Peter, representing 'St. Jerome' and 'St. Basil.' He was appointed Superintendent of the works at the Vatican. Muziano distinguished himself also as a landscape painter, and acquired at Rome the appellation of 'Il Giovane de' Paesi.' Cardinal Farnese employed him to decorate his villa at Tivoli, in conjunction with Federigo Zuccaro and Tempesta, and he here evinced the superiority of his talents over both his competitors. About this time he produced his picture of the 'Resurrection of Lazarus,' painted for the church of Santa Maria Maggiore, afterwards removed to the pontifical palace of the Quirinal. This capital production excited the admiration and procured him the esteem of Michelangelo, who assisted him with his instruction and advice, and presented him to the Cardinal Hippolyte d'Este, who employed him to decorate his palace at Tivoli. The backgrounds of Muziano's pictures are frequently embellished with landscapes which remind us of the style of Titian. According to Vasari he was employed at Orvieto in the cathedral. He was also much employed in designing after the antique ; and to him we are indebted for the completion of the drawing from the design of the bas-reliefs of the Trajan Column, which had been begun by Giulio Romano, and was afterwards engraved. Muziano was the founder of the Academy of Saint Luke in Rome ; and contributed to it a part of the money he had acquired by his art. He died at Rome in 1592. Cornelis Cort, Niccolò Beatrizet, and others have engraved about thirty of his works. Among others he has left :

Florence.	Uffizi.	Male Portrait.
Naples.	Museum.	St. Francis of Assisi.
Paris.	Louvre.	Incredulity of St. Thomas.
	"	The Raising of Lazarus.
Rheims.	Cathedral.	Christ washing the Disciples' feet.
Rome.	S. Maria d. Angeli.	Christ delivering the Keys to St. Peter.
"	Ara Cæli.	The Ascension.
"	Colonna.	Portrait of Vittoria Colonna ( another in Doria Pamfili Gallery ).
"	S. Paolo.	The Assumption.
"	St. Peter.	Christ in the Garden.
	"	The Scourging of Christ.
Stockholm.	"	St. Jerome.

MYNDE, J., resided in London about the year 1760, and engraved several plates for the booksellers. We have by him some anatomical figures, and a few portraits, among which are, Roger, Earl of Orrery, and William Harris, D.D.

MYTENS, AART IZAAK, a portrait painter of great merit, resided at the Hague from 1612 to 1640, but there is no record of him except in his works. He painted the portraits of the eminent Dutch poet and painter, Jacob Cats, and of his house-keeper, named Havius ; also of the Prince of Orange-Nassau. At the Hague is 'The Celebration of the Marriage of the Elector of Brandenburg with the daughter of Frederic Henri, Prince of Orange,' by A. I. Mytens (formerly in the Lormier Collection). See also MELISSENS, JAN, who appears to have been confused with this artist.

MYTENS, ARNOLD, was born at Brussels in 1541. After receiving some instruction in his native country, he travelled to Italy, in company with Anthonie de Santvoort, and studied under his direction some years at Rome. He afterwards visited Naples, where he became a pupil of Cornelis Tijp, and painted an altar-piece representing the Assumption of the Virgin, with the Apostles ; and in the church of San Lodovico, a picture of the 'Miraculous Conception.' On his return to Rome he was employed on some considerable works in the church of St. Peter, and died in that city in 1602. Other works of his are :

Amsterdam.	The Crowning with Thorns.
Cassel.	Jupiter and Calisto.

MYTENS, CORN. and JAN. See MELISSENS.

MYTENS, DANIEL, the elder, was born at the Hague at the end of the 16th century. He came to England in the reign of James I., and in that of Charles I. was painter to the king. His patent to that effect is dated 30th May, 1625. He had studied the works of Rubens previous to his coming. His landscape, in the backgrounds of his portraits, is evidently in the style of that school ; and some of his works have been taken for those of Van Dyck. At Hampton Court are several whole-lengths of the princes and princesses of the House of Brunswick-Luneburg, and the portrait of Charles Howard, Earl of Nottingham. At Kensington is a Head of himself ; and at St. James's is a fine picture by Mytens, of Hudson, the dwarf, holding a dog with a string, in a landscape, warmly coloured and painted freely, like Rubens or Snyder. Mytens remained in great reputation till the arrival of Van Dyck, who being appointed the king's principal painter, the former, in disgust, asked his Majesty's leave to retire to his own country ; but the king, learning the cause of his dissatisfaction, treated him with much kindness, and told him that he could find sufficient employment both for him and Van Dyck. Mytens consented to stay, and even grew intimate with his rival ; for the head of Mytens is one of those painted by that great master. Whether the same jealousy operated again, or real decline of business influenced him, Mytens did not stay much longer in England. At Blenheim Palace there used to be three magnificent examples of Mytens : full-length portraits of the first Duke of Buckingham, of the first Earl of Holland, and of the second Duke of Hamilton. The last-named was not born, however, until 1616, and as in his picture he is a man of at least twenty, either the date of Mytens's departure from England cannot have been so early as that usually given, namely 1630, or the portrait must have been wrongly identified. In his own country Mytens lived many years beyond this date, and died about 1656. Houbraken quotes a register at the Hague, dated in 1656, at which time Mytens painted part of the ceiling of the town-hall there. Works :

Chatsworth.	Sir F. Walsingham. 1626.
Copenhagen.	Charles I. as Prince of Wales.
Dresden.	Charles I. and his Consort.
Hague.	Town-hall. A ceiling.
London.	Copies after Raphael's Cartoons.
"	Buckingham Pal. Portraits of Charles I. and Henrietta Maria.
Serlby.	Lord Galway's. The Duke of Portland.
	The Duke of Newcastle with his two Wives.
	The Earl of Craven.

MYTENS, DANIEL, the younger, called BONTEKRAALJ, was born at the Hague in 1644. He was the son of Jan Mytens, and the grandson of Daniel the elder. He was the pupil of his father, and was more than once at the head of the Pictura Society, at the Hague. He worked for some years in Rome. His death took place in 1688.

MYTENS, ISAAC, son of Daniel the elder. He was active about 1640-65, at the Hague. He was one of the founders of the Pictura Society, to which he still belonged in 1665.

MYTENS, JAN A., son of Daniel the elder. He flourished at the Hague between 1630 and 1672. He was one of the founders of the Pictura Society, and in 1656 one of its two chiefs. He has sometimes been confused with Isaac Mytens, but M. Kramm had a picture signed Jan Mytens pinx. 1649. Several portraits by him are in the Amsterdam Museum.

MYTENS, MARTIN VAN, son of Aart Isaak Mytens. He was a member of the painters' brotherhood at the Hague in the middle of the 17th century. He was appointed court-painter to Queen Christina of Sweden, and died in that country, where he left descendants who were also painters (see MEYTENS). There is a portrait of himself in the Amsterdam Gallery.

N

NABHOLZ, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a painter and engraver, born at Regensburg in 1752, died in 1796. He painted principally portraits, among them those of the Czarina Catherine II.; and of many of her nobility. Some of his portraits and other subjects he engraved himself.

NACHENIUS, JAN VAN, a native of the Hague, who painted about 1812. He was a pupil of Mathieu Terwesten. He lived first at Amsterdam, afterwards in the Dutch Indies, where he died.

NACHTEGAELE, PIETER, an obscure Flemish painter, who flourished at Bruges in 1450.

NACHTMANN, FRANZ XAVIER, painter and lithographer, was born at Bodenmais, in Lower Bavaria, in 1799. He studied in the Academy at Munich, and was employed in 1823 as flower and fruit painter at the Royal China Manufactory of that city. In 1827 he quitted this employment to devote himself to portraiture in water-colour and miniature, and the study of architectural perspective. His portraits of the royal family are finely executed, while among his perspective views may be mentioned, the 'Interior of the Court Church at Munich.' He signed his works X. N. Nachtmann died in 1846.

NADAT. See DATI, NATALE.

NADORP, FRANZ, a painter, etcher, and lithographer, also a sculptor and modeller, was born at Anholt, Rhenish-Prussia, in 1794. He began to learn painting under Bergler at Prague in 1814. Afterwards he spent some time at Dresden, Vienna, and Rome, where he died in 1876. Nadorp painted landscapes of large dimensions, as well as portraits and other subjects. Among them:

The Villa Raphael.

The Villa d' Este.

The Forum of Pompeii.

The Murder of King Edward's Children.

Dante.

Francesca da Rimini.

He also etched thirteen plates, among which is 'The Barberini Triton.'

NAECKE, GUSTAV HEINRICH, was born at Frauenstein in Saxony in 1786, and was instructed by Grasse, whom, however, he followed only in his colouring. After having lived at Rome for some years, he, in 1825, became a professor at the School of Art at Dresden, where he died in 1835. Among his paintings are:

St. Genovefa. 1816. (The Grand Duke of Coburg.)

St. Elizabeth. 1826. (Naumburg Cathedral.)

Christ and his Disciples. 1830.

NAEUWINCX, (or NAIWINCX,) HENDRIK. The birthplace of this Dutch painter and etcher is uncertain; but it was either Utrecht, or more probably Schoonhoven, and the date of his birth about 1619-20, as he was contemporary with Jan Asselyn, who was born in 1610, died in 1660, and painted figures and animals in landscapes by Naeuwincx; so that the pictures by him may have been confounded with those of Asselyn. Immerzeel quotes very high prices as having been paid for pictures by Naeuwincx, which consist of landscapes, towns, villages, etc. One in the style of Waterloo, in which sportsmen are introduced, is dated 1651. He is, however, more generally known by his drawings and etchings, in which the point is used with great delicacy. They are rare, and were published in two sets of eight each; of which Nagler gives a full description. The date of the death of Naeuwincx has not been ascertained.

NAGEL, JAN, an unimportant Dutch painter of the 17th century. He was born at Haarlem. He imitated Cornelius Molenaer, and died at the Hague in 1602 (?).

NAGEL, PETER, a Flemish engraver, who flourished at Antwerp about 1569-84. He is said to have been a pupil of Philip Galle, and he engraved many subjects after Flemish masters. Among other prints he has left, 'The Seven Works of Mercy'; after M. Heemskerck.

NAGLI, FRANCESCO, called IL CENTINO, an Italian painter of the 17th century. He was born at Cento, and was a pupil of Guercino. Most of his active life was passed at Rimini, where, in the Church of Santa Maria degli Angeli, his best work is to be found.

NAGTEGEL, ARNOLD, engraver. He worked in 1690, probably at Amsterdam. His name is affixed to prints in mezzotint, after portraits of Ishach Aboab Rahin and of the English surgeon, Thomas Sydenham.

NAHL, JOHANN AUGUST, one of a family of artists, mostly sculptors, established at Ausbach. He was born in 1752 at Channe, near Bern, on a property belonging to his father, who gave him his first instruction in art. As his taste inclined rather towards painting than to sculpture, he became a scholar of Tischbein at Cassel, then of Tannesch at Strasburg, of the landscape painter Bommel, and of Handmann at Bern. At the age of twenty Nahl went to Paris, and studied Le Sueur so ardently as to assimilate his style. In 1774 Nahl proceeded to Rome, where he passed seven years in drawing from antiques, and copying the works of Raphael and Guido. He there painted his fine picture 'An Offering to Venus,' one of his richest and most highly-finished works. The illness of his father induced him, in 1781, to return to Cassel, where, shortly afterwards, his father died. Nahl did not remain long in that place, but went to England. There he remained fifteen months, and after visiting Holland, returned to his native place. In 1786 and 1787 he was again in Rome and Naples; and in 1792 returned to Cassel. There he became a professor in the Academy, and in 1815 'Professor of Painting.' He died at Cassel in 1825. Twice Nahl gained prizes given by Goethe for pictorial composition. In 1799-1800 by his 'Parting of Hector and Andromache,' and, in 1801, by his 'Hercules at the Court of Lycomedes.' Nahl's works include history, portraits, and landscapes. He also etched several mythological subjects.

NAIGEON, JEAN, a French historical and portrait painter, and relative of the French philosopher, Jacques André Naigeon, who himself began life as an artist. Jean Naigeon was a scholar of Devosge, at the Dijon Academy, and of David. His principal pictures are, 'The infant Pyrrhus presented at the Court of Glaucias;' 'Æneas going to Batle;' 'Numa Pompilius consulting the Nymph Egeria;’ two bas-reliefs in the gallery of the Luxembourg, being allegories (en grisaille) of the glory of Rubens and Le Sueur; the design for the Vignette engraved by Roger for the official documents of the Government of the French Republic. He also painted theatrical decorations, and portraits of distinguished persons of the time, among them Monge and Laplace. He was instrumental in saving many works of art from destruction in 1793, and was conservator of the Museum of the Luxembourg, and a member of the Legion of Honour. He was born at Beaune (Côte d’Or) in 1757, and died in 1832.

NAIGEON, JEAN GUILLAUME ELZIDOR, a French historical and portrait painter, born in Paris in 1797. He studied under his father, Jean Naigeon, and also under David and Gros. He entered the ‘École des Beaux Arts’ in 1815, and having gained the second grand-prize in 1827, went to Italy. In 1832 he succeeded his father as curator of the Luxembourg Gallery. He died in Paris in 1867. Amongst his works are :

The Magdalen in the Desert. 1836.
The Adoration of the Shepherds. 1845.
Gleaners near Naples.
The Vintage at Amalfi.
Several Portraits. (Versailles Gallery.)

NAISH, WILLIAM, an English miniature painter of the 18th century. He was a native of Axbridge, Somersetshire, and practised in London. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1783 to 1800, in which year he died. His brother, JOHN NAISH, was also an artist.

NAIVEU. See NEVEU.

NÄKE, GUSTAV HEINRICH, a German painter of history and portraits, who flourished between 1784 and 1834. Works :

Faust and Marguerite.
St. Elizabeth of Hungary distributing Alms.

NALDINI, BATTISTA DI MATTEO, called BATTISTA DEGLI INNOCENTI, was born at Florence in 1537, and spent the greater part of his youth with the superintendent of the Foundling Hospital. He was first a scholar of Jacopo Carrucci, but afterwards studied under Angelo Bronzino. According to Baglione he visited Rome in the pontificate of Gregory XIII., where he painted several altar-pieces for the churches, and on his return to Florence he was engaged by Giorgio Vasari as his coadjutor in the works in which he was employed in the Palazzo Vecchio, where he was occupied fourteen years. His pictures of the Purification and Entombment in Santa Maria Novella, at Florence, are extolled by Borghini. Other works of his are the ‘Pietà’ over the tomb of Michelangelo, and Adorations ‘of the Shepherds,’ and ‘of the Magi’ in the Dresden Gallery. He was living in 1590. Zani supposes that he died about 1600.

NAMEUR, LOUIS DE, a French historical painter, was born in 1629, and received into the Academy in 1665. None of his works can now be identified.

NANGIS, GENEVIÈVE. See under REGNAULT, NIC. FR.

NANI, JACOPO, (or GIACOMO,) an unimportant Italian painter, of the 18th century. He was employed at the Neapolitan Court, where he painted landscapes, flowers, and fruit. Lanzi says he was a scholar of Belvidere.

NANINI (MATTEO). An obscure pupil of Carlo Cignani.

NANNI, GIOVANNI, (or NANI,) called GIOVANNI DA UDINE, GIOV. DE NANIS, and DE RECAMATORI, of the Embriverero, was born at Udine on the 15th October, 1487, and having discovered an early disposition for art, by making drawings from the animals and birds killed in the chase by his father, Francesco Recamatore, he was sent to Venice, where he was placed under the tuition of Giorgione. The fame of Raphael had reached Venice, and inspired Nanni with an ardent desire to visit Rome. His protector, the patriarch Grimani, desirous of promoting his wishes, furnished him with letters of recommendation to Baldassare Castiglione, by whom he was introduced to Raphael, who admitted him into his school. He was there employed in painting the ornamental accessories. While he was in Raphael’s studio the discovery was made of the remains of antiquity in the baths of Titus. Nanni was selected by Raphael to make designs from the beautiful grotesques on stucco, found in the different apartments. He not only succeeded in his commission to the entire satisfaction of his master, but discovered a process of compounding a stucco, which had the same appearance, and probably the same durability, as that used by the Romans. He was now employed by Raphael to execute the greatest part of the grotesques in the Loggie and Stanze of the Vatican, a commission he discharged so well as to link his name indissolubly with that of his master. The grotesques in the lower Loggia were entirely from the brush of Giovanni, but in 1867 they were much painted over by Mantovani. After the death of Raphael he was employed by Clement VII., in conjunction with Pierino del Vaga, to ornament that part of the Vatican called La Torre di Borgia, where they represented the Seven Planets; the emblematical figures were designed by del Vaga, but the grotesques and symbolical decorations were executed by Nanni. The festoons of the ‘History of Psyche,’ in the Farnesina Palace, were also by him, and he decorated the vestibule of the Villa Madama, now in ruins, and prepared the designs for the windows of the Laurentian Library. In 1527 he was compelled, by the sacking of Rome, to fly from that city, and he took refuge at Udine, where he was for some time employed. He was afterwards engaged at Florence, by the family of the Medici, in several considerable works. He returned to Rome in the pontificate of Pius IV., and there he died in 1564. He was buried in the Pantheon, near the tomb of his master Raphael.

NANNI, GIROLAMO, was a native of Rome, and flourished about the year 1642, during the pontificate of Sixtus V., by whom he was employed in several considerable works. He was generally known by the name of “poco e buono,” from the following circumstance. Being of a very studious disposition, and rather slow in his operations, he was reproached for his tardiness by Giovanni da Modena, a contemporary artist, when he replied, “Faccio poco e buono;” and he bore that name ever afterwards. His works are to be seen in several of the public buildings of Rome. In the church of the Madonna dell’ Animà there is an ‘Annunciation;’ and in San Bartolomeo dell’ Isola, two subjects from the life of St. Bonaventura.

NANNUCCIO, or NANNOCCIO, was a Florentine painter, and a pupil of Andrea del Sarto; he flourished about 1540. He went to France with the Cardinal Tournon, and spent a large part of his life there.

NANTEUIL, CELESTIN LEBŒUF, a French historical and genre painter and lithographer, born at Rome in 1813. He was brought to France when only two years old, and studied under J. M. Langlois and Ingres. In 1829 he entered the École des Beaux Arts, but was expelled for heading a student's disturbance. Much of his time was occupied in illustrating books by Victor Hugo, Dumas, and others, for which he made an immense number of drawings. He obtained medals in 1837 and 1848. In his later years he held the post of Director of the Dijon Academy. He died in 1873. Amongst his pictures are:

A Ray of Sunshine. 1848. (Valenciennes Museum.)
The Temptation. 1851. (Havre Museum.)
Souvenirs of the Past.
Scene from Don Quixote. (Lille Museum.)
Hunting-dogs reposing. (Luxembourg, Paris.)
The Fawn. (The same.)

His chief lithographs are:

The 'Behedores'; after Velazquez.
The Studio of Velazquez; after the same.
The Toper; after Teniers.
Souvenirs.
Expectations.

NANTEUIL, ROBERT. This celebrated French engraver and draughtsman in crayons, was born at Rheims about 1623, according to the 'Mercure Galant' of December 1678, or in 1630 as stated by other authorities. There is an engraving by him dated 1645, and it was not the first he did. He was the son of a merchant, who gave him a classical education, but a decided inclination for the art of design induced him to adopt it as a profession. He was instructed in engraving by his brother-in-law, Nicolas Regnesson, whose sister he married in 1647, and then went to Paris, where he received further instruction from Abraham Boke and Philippe de Champagne. He acquired considerable reputation as a maker of portraits in crayons, and his talent in that branch recommended him to the protection of Louis XIV., whose portrait he painted, and after this was appointed designer and engraver to the Royal cabinet, with a pension. In 1648 he applied himself more to engraving in the style of C. Mellan and others, but in 1650 he adopted one infinitely superior, which in clearness and beauty of effect has never been surpassed. The portraits by him will ever hold a rank among the most admired productions of the art. Nanteuil died in Paris in December 1678, and it appears extraordinary that in so short a life, if he was born in 1630, he could accomplish so many plates in so finished a style. Mariette possessed two hundred and eighty prints by this artist. The following are among his most esteemed portraits:

Anne of Austria, Queen of France; after Mignard.
Several Portraits of Louis XIV.; from his own designs, and after Mignard, and others.
Louis, Dauphin; son of Louis XIV. 1677.
Louis Bourbon, Prince de Condé; after his own design. 1662.
Henri Jules de Bourbon, Duke d'Engheiu; after Mignard. 1661.
Christina, Queen of Sweden; after S. Bourdon. 1654.
Louisa Maria, Queen of Poland; after Juste. 1653.
Charles Emmanuel, Duke of Savoy. 1668.
Charles, Duke of Lorraine. 1660.
Johann Friedrich, Duke of Brunswick Luneburg. 1674.
Charles II., Duke of Mantua. 1652.
Antonio Barberini, Cardinal, and Archbishop of Rheims. 1663.
Emanuel Théodore, Duke of Bouillon, Cardinal. 1670.

Pomponne de Bellièvre.

Two Plates; one after P. de Champagne; dated 1653.

The other, an oval, after C. le Brun. The latter is one of Nanteuil's best engravings.

Robert Nanteuil was also a poet, and the verses he addressed to Louis XIV., begging for more time to finish his portrait, are graceful.

NAPPI, FRANCESCO, was born at Milan about 1573, and after studying for some time both there and at Venice, visited Rome during the pontificate of Urban VIII. He was employed for some of the public edifices at Rome; but his works do not rank above mediocrity. His best productions are, his pictures of the 'Resurrection' and the 'Assumption of the Virgin,' in the cloister of Santa Maria sopra Minerva; and the 'Annunciation' in the Monasterio dell' Umilità. He died in 1638.

NARCISO, JOSÉ ANTONIO, a Spanish painter of the 18th century, no details of whose life are known.

NARCISSUS. See PERSIJN.

NARDI, ANGELO, was born at Florence about 1601, and after studying the works of Paolo Veronese, visited Spain in the reign of Philip IV., whose court-painter he became in 1625, and whom he assisted with advice in the purchase of Italian paintings. He was a favourite of the Archbishop of Toledo, and executed for him seven altar-pieces for the Bernardin Nuns at Alcalá de Heneares, eleven for those at Jaen, and eight in the Atocha Church at Madrid. Nardi died at Madrid in 1660.

NARDINI, TOMASO, an Italian painter, was born at Ascoli about 1658. He painted figures in the perspectives of Collaceroni. He died in 1718.

NARDOIS, J. GALIOTH, a French painter of the 17th century. He is quoted in Nagler's 'Monogramisten,' where he is said to have painted in the style of Claude, and to have engraved some plates.

NARDUCCI, (or NARDUCK,) GIOVANNI, afterwards 'Fray Juan de la Misericordia,' an Italian painter, was born in Molica about 1526. He acquired some knowledge of painting in the Schools of Naples, whence, being of a pious disposition, he made pilgrimages to all parts of Italy, and at last left his native country for the shrine of Santiago at Compostella. Proceeding afterwards to Madrid, he entered the school of Sanchez Coello, where his piety recommended him to the devout sister of Philip II. In 1560 he entered one of the reformed Carmelite convents at Pastraña. There he painted an 'Ecce Homo,' and two portraits of Santa Teresa de Jesus. It is doubtful whether any of his works still exist. He painted also portraits of St. Luis Beltran and of Fray Nicolas Factor, the artist, of Valencia. He closed a long life of devotion at Madrid in 1616.

NASELLI, FRANCESCO, was born at Ferrara, and flourished about the year 1610. When young, he studied the works of the Carracci and Guercino, which he copied with surprising success, but afterwards devoted himself to the manner of his countryman Giuseppe Mazzola. He was employed for several of the churches in Ferrara. In the cathedral there is an altar-piece by him, representing the 'Nativity;' in the church of Santa Maria de'

Servi, a large picture of the 'Last Supper;' and in the church of Santa Francesca, the 'Assumption of the Virgin.' Naselli died at Ferrara about 1630.

NASH, EDWARD, an English miniature painter, born in 1778. He exhibited at the Academy from 1811 to 1820. In his later years he practised in India, sending his works home to be exhibited. He died in England in 1821.

NASH, FREDERICK, an English water-colour painter and draughtsman, born in 1782 at Lambeth. His instruction in art was due to Malton. His works first appeared at the Academy in 1800, and he occasionally exhibited there till 1847. In 1808 he was elected a member of the Water-Colour Society, where he exhibited with some intermissions till 1856. To show his facility and industry, it may be stated that his contributions to the latter Society amounted to nearly five hundred works. He was also draftsman to the Society of Antiquaries, and made several tours in France, Switzerland, Germany, &c. In 1834 he retired to Brighton, where he spent the remainder of his life, and died there in 1856. There are water-colour drawings by him of 'Tintern Abbey,' and the 'Versailles Fountains,' at the Kensington Museum. Amongst the works which he illustrated are:

- 'Views of St. George's Chapel, Windsor.' 1805.
- 'Twelve Views of the Antiquities of London.' 1810.
- Ackerman's 'History of Westminster Abbey.'
- 'History of the University of Oxford.' 1814.
- 'Picturesque views of the City of Paris and its Environs.' 1823.

NASH, JOSEPH, an English water-colour painter and draughtsman, born in 1808. He became a member of the old Water-Colour Society, where he first exhibited in 1835. His forte was the depiction of mediæval buildings and scenes. He published 'Architecture of the Middle Ages' (1838); 'Mansions of England in the Olden Time' (1839-49); and 'Views of Windsor Castle' (1848). He also contributed illustrations to Lawson's 'Scotia delineata' (1847); E. MacDermott's 'Merrie Days of England' (1859); and 'Old English Ballads' (1864); and he drew on stone Sir D. Wilkie's 'Oriental Sketches.' At the Paris Exhibition of 1855 he exhibited six water-colour drawings, and was awarded an "honourable mention." He died at Bayswater in 1878.

NASINI, ANTONIO, a brother of Guiseppe Niccolò, by whom he was trained in art. He afterwards became a monk, and worked for the churches of Siena. He died in 1716.

NASINI, Cavaliere GIUSEPPE NICCOLÒ, was born at Siena, probably in 1664. His father, FRANCESCO NASINI, an artist little known, instructed him in the first rudiments of art; but he afterwards went to Rome, and became one of the ablest disciples of Ciro Ferri. By the recommendation of this master he was employed by the Grand Duke of Tuscany, to paint, from the designs of Pietro da Cortona, the 'Four Ages of Man,' in emblematical subjects, in the Palazzo Pitti at Florence. On his return to Rome he was commissioned to paint the ceiling of the Capella Bracciana, in the church de SS. Apostoli; and his picture of the 'Prophet Amos,' in the Basilico of St. John of Lateran. He died at Siena in 1736. Among his pictures are:

- |          |                              |                                    |

| Siena.   | Conventuale.          | Death, Judgment, Heaven, and Hell. |

He etched a print of the Virgin and the Infants Jesus and St. John in a landscape, with Cherubs flying in the air, in the taste of Ciro Ferri, and also engraved in the manner of P. S. Bartoli.

NASINI, FRANCESCO, an obscure painter of Siena, who in the 17th century painted in fresco in the refectory of the Monasterio del Carmine of that city.

NASMYTH, ALEXANDER, a Scotch landscape painter, was born at Edinburgh in 1758. He went early to London, and was a pupil of Allan Ramsay. Afterwards he went to Rome, where he remained several years, and studied historical painting, landscape, and portraiture. On his return to Edinburgh, he commenced practice as a portrait painter, and had Robert Burns as one of his sitters. His portrait of the poet is now in the National Gallery of Scotland; a replica is in the National Portrait Gallery, London. He was a member of the original Society of Scottish Artists, and an Associate of the Royal Institution. His inclination, however, being towards landscape painting, he ultimately confined himself to that branch; but much of his time was occupied in teaching, in which he was very successful. He exhibited landscapes occasionally at the Royal Academy in London, from 1813 to 1826. In 1822 he published sixteen views of places described in the 'Waverley Novels.' He died at Edinburgh, April 10, 1840.

NASMYTH, PETER, commonly called by himself and others, PATRICK, was the son of Alexander Nasmyth, and was born at Edinburgh in 1787. He showed an early and decided predilection for landscape painting; and his zeal in pursuit of his favourite art left him little opportunity of acquiring any other instruction. Early in life he injured his right hand, and learned to paint with his left, and owing to an illness he became deaf. At the age of twenty he went to London, and his productions became very popular, obtaining for him the designation of 'the English Hobbema,' which was about as well justified as such soubriquets usually are. He improved on the style of his father, and his pictures have less of the spotted chalky character which, from its having been followed by several other members of this clever family, is considered as a chief feature of "the Nasmyth school." In 1809 he first exhibited at the Royal Academy, and in 1824 he became one of the original members of the Society of British Artists. He often painted Scottish scenes, but the character of his landscapes is entirely English. His style was not sufficiently massive to represent properly the wild mountainous character and striking atmospheric peculiarities of Scotland. Light clouds, sunshine, smooth water, or small pattering brooks, meadows, gently rising grounds, and green trees, are the objects which his pencil was best qualified to represent. Nasmyth died at Lambeth, on the 17th of August, 1831, during a thunder-storm, which, at his own desire, he was raised in his bed to behold. His pictures are signed Patk. Nasmyth. Among Nasmyth's better works we may name:

NASOCCHIO, GIUSEPPE, a native of Bassano, who painted in the style of the quattrocentisti, but, according to Lanzi, left a picture dated 1529. Two more artists of this name, FRANCESCO and BARTOLOMMEO NASOCCHIO, were active in Bassano in the 16th century.

NASON, PIETER, painter, was born early in the 17th century at Amsterdam, or The Hague. He was a member of the Guild of Painters of the latter place, and in 1656 was one of the forty-seven members who established the 'Pictura' Society. From a MS. by Pieter Terwesten, it appears not improbable that Nason was a pupil of Jan van Ravensteyn; and it is believed that his name has been effaced from pictures since attributed to Mierevelt, Moreelse, and above all to Ravensteyn. It is certain that he painted the portrait of Prince Mauritz, Governor of the Brazils, engraved by Houbraken, and those of Charles the Second of England, engraved by C. Van Dalen and Sandrart, and of the Grand Elector. At Berlin there is a full-length portrait, dated 1667, of the latter, by Nason; also a fine picture of still life, representing gold, silver, and glass vessels, &c.; likewise a portrait by him signed and dated 1670. There are others at Copenhagen and at Rotterdam. The date of his death is not known, but his life was long. Redgrave gives the initial of his Christian name wrongly as R.

NATALE. See SCHIAVONI.

NATALI, CARLO, called IL GUARDOLINO, was born at Cremona about the year 1590. He was first a disciple of Andrea Mainardi, but afterwards studied at Bologna, under Guido Reni. There are several of his works at Genoa and Cremona, where he also distinguished himself as an architect. One of his best works, as a painter, is a picture of 'St. Francesca Romagna,' in the church of San Gismondo at Cremona. He lived to above the age of ninety-three, for he was still alive in 1683.

NATALI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, the son of Carlo Natali, was born at Cremona about the year 1630, and distinguished himself as a painter and engraver. After receiving some instruction from his father, he went to Rome, where he entered the school of Pietro da Cortona. On his return to Cremona, he painted several pictures for the churches, and established an academy in which he cultivated the principles of Cortona, though without many followers. In the church of the P. P. Predicatori, is a large picture by him, embellished with architecture, representing 'St. Patriarca burning the Books of the Heretics.' He died about the year 1700.

NATALI, GIUSEPPE, was the head of a family established at Casal Maggiore, in the Cremonese, many members of which were employed in architectural and decorative painting. Giuseppe was born in 1652, and died in 1722. His brothers FRANCESCO, PIETRO, and LORENZO worked with him. His son Giambattista died young, and Francesco's son of the same name, after being appointed court painter to the King of Naples, died before the middle of the 18th century. Giovanni Battista Zaist, who wrote the memoirs of the painters of Cremona, was a pupil of Giuseppe Natali.

NATALINO DA MURANO. See MURANO.

NATALIS, MICHAEL, was born at Liege in 1606 or 1609, and first instructed in engraving by his father, who was medallist to the Bishop, and by Carl de Mallery. He afterwards went to Paris and Rome, where he was introduced by Sandrart to Prince Giustiniani, for whom, in conjunction with Theodor Metham, Regnier Persyn, and others, he engraved the antique statues in his gallery. In 1653 he was court-engraver to the Elector Maximilian Heinrich at Cologne, and engraved in 1658 the portrait of the Emperor Leopold. He was still alive in 1670. He engraved a few portraits, which are among the best of his prints. We have, among others, the following by him:

PORTRAITS.

NATHE, CHRISTOPH, a landscape painter and etcher, born at Niederberlau in Upper Lusatia in 1753. He studied under Oeser at Leipsic, and travelled in Silesia and Switzerland. Of his etchings may be mentioned a collection of forty-eight landscapes, heads, and portraits. He painted in oils and water-colours, and made drawings in sepia. Nathe died at Schadewalde, near Marklissa, in 1808.

NATKER, (or NOTKER,) a monk of St. Gall, who painted miniatures in the 10th century.

NATOIRE, CHARLES JOSEPH, painter and engraver, was born at Nimes in 1700. He was instructed by Louis Galloche and Lemoine. Having obtained, in 1721, the first prize for painting, by his picture of 'The mother of Samson offering a sacrifice to God,' which is the oldest of the competition pictures preserved in the Académie des Beaux Arts, he then went to Rome, where the Academy of Saint Luke, having proposed the subject of 'Moses delivering the Law to the Israelites,' he gained the first prize. In 1751 he became Director of the French Academy at Rome, and, after he had painted the dome of the church of Saint Louis des Français, was, in 1756, made a Knight of the Order of St. Michael. He retired in 1774, and died at Castel Gandolfo in 1777. His best works as a painter are 'St. Sebastian, with an Angel taking an Arrow from his body;' and the fresco paintings (now much damaged) in the chapel of Les Enfants trouvés, engraved by Desplaces, Fessard, and others. His works are signed C. N., or with his full name. The Louvre possesses the three following works from his brush :

Venus demanding arms for Æneas from Vulcan.

The Three Graces.

Junó.

He etched the following plates, but most of the impressions remaining of the 'Crucifixion' and the 'Four Seasons' have been finished with the burin :

The Crucifixion, with Mary Magdalene at the foot of the Cross.

The Adoration of the Magi.

The Martyrdom of St. Fereol.

Two, of the Sports of Children.

Spring and Winter; etched by Natoire, and finished with the burin by P. Aveline.

His sister, Mademoiselle NATOIRE, who went to Italy with him, worked in pastel.

NATTES, JOHN CLAUDE, an English water-colour painter, of the early tinted school, was born about 1765. He studied under Hugh Deane, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1782 to 1814. He joined the Old Water-colour Society on its foundation in 1804, but was expelled in 1807 for exhibiting another man's drawings as his own, in order to increase his share in the profits of the exhibition. Among the illustrated works which he published are :

Scotia Depicta. 1804.

Hibernia Depicta. 1802.

Select views of Bath, Bristol, Malvern, &c. 1805.

Bath illustrated. 1806.

NATTIER, JEAN BAPTISTE, elder son of Jean Marc Nattier, the elder. He was a painter of history of small merit. Received into the Academy in 1712, he became involved in a disgraceful scandal, was committed to the Bastille, and there put an end to his own life in 1726.

NATTIER, JEAN MARC, commonly called MARC NATTIER, was born in Paris in 1642. He painted some excellent portraits, and was the father and first master of Jean Marc Nattier, the younger.

NATTIER, JEAN MARC, son of the last-named and of Marie Courtois, a distinguished miniaturist, was born in Paris in 1685. He was instructed by his father, and afterwards studied at the Academy, and in the Gallery of the Luxembourg. He distinguished himself as a portrait painter, in which capacity he was much employed. The drawings for the engravings from the pictures painted by Rubens for Marie de' Medici were by Nattier. About 1716 he accompanied M. Le Fort, the minister of Peter the Great, to Amsterdam, where the Czar then was. There he painted the Czar, several members of the Russian court, and a picture of the 'Battle of Pultawa.' He afterwards began, at the Hague, a portrait of the 'Empress Catherine,' which was never finished. In 1718, Nattier was received into the Paris Academy on the strength of a 'Perseus bringing the Medusa's head to the marriage feast of Phineus.' In 1720, having lost his accumulations through the schemes of Law, he resolved to confine himself to portraiture, which he practised with success for the rest of his life. He died in Paris in 1766. His life, by Madame Torgal, his daughter, has been published. Among his pictures we may also name :

Dresden. Gallery. Portrait of Marshal Saxe.

Nantes. Gallery. Portrait of the famous dansreuse, M. A. Cuppi, called La Carmayo.

NAUDET, THOMAS CHARLES, a French landscape draughtsman, and pupil of Hubert Robert. He flourished between 1774 and 1810.

NAUDI, ANGELO, an obscure Italian of the 16th century, who imitated the style of Paolo Veronese, and was employed at the court of Philip IV.

NAUMANN, FRIEDRICH, was born at Blasewitz, near Dresden, in 1750, and studied five years under Casanova at the Academy there. He then went to Venice, and stayed seven years at Rome, where he was a disciple of Mengs. He studied principally the works of Raphael, Guido Reni, and Titian. The Margrave of Anspach appointed him his court-painter; and he was also a member of the Academy at Berlin. There is by him, besides 'The Hermit,' and 'The portrait of Mengs' (engraved by Cunego), an altar-piece in the Krenz-kirche at Dresden. F. Naumann was alive in 1815.

NAUBORGO, MICHAEL, a Bolognese painter, who, it is believed, was a pupil of Guido Reni.

NAUINX, or NAVINX, a landscape painter, who lived at Hamburg in the 17th century, and who is often confounded with Naeuwinx or Nauwinck. He painted Alpine scenery in his larger works. In the smaller, more tranquil scenes somewhat in the style of Waterloo, but his colouring runs into a bluish green, or into grey. J. M. Weyer painted figures for him in good keeping with his landscapes. He died in Hamburg, but the date is uncertain.

NAVA, LUIS DE, a Spanish knight of Santiago, who practised art as an amateur about 1753, and was a member of the Seville Academy.

NAVARO, JUAN, a Spanish engraver, is stated by Strutt to have resided at Seville about the year 1598. He engraved several frontispieces for books.

NAVARRETE. See FERNANDEZ NAVARRETE.

NAVARRO, FRANCISCO, a Spanish engraver, who executed the title-page and a large plate of arms, for a descriptive account of an auto-da-fé held at Madrid in 1632, and the title-page of a book called 'The Church Militant,' published by Fray Fernando Carmayo y Salgado in 1642. In the same year he engraved an architectural title-page with the effigies of Horace, Persius, and Juvenal arranged like saints in a retablo, for Don Diego Lopez's 'Dissertation' on the two latter satirists.

NAVARRO, JUAN JOSE, a Spanish admiral who practised painting and designing, was born in 1687. He executed some very clever pen-and-ink drawings in the style of Callot.

NAVARRO, JUAN SIMON, an historical and flower painter, lived at Madrid about the middle of the 17th century. A somewhat mediocre historical picture by him bears the date 1654, and represents the Virgin, of the size of life, employed in the workshop of Joseph, who is sawing a board, while the Infant Jesus is forming a cross in the midst of a group of angels. As a painter of flowers he holds a more respectable rank. In the convent of the Shod Carmelites at Madrid, are a 'Nativity' and an 'Epiphany' by him, which were formerly in the convent of the same order at Valdemoro.

NAVEZ, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, a Belgian historical, genre, and portrait painter, born at Charleroi in 1787. He first studied under Joseph François, and obtained several prizes at the Brussels and Ghent Academies. He was thus enabled to complete his studies in Paris under David, with whom, when exiled from France, he returned to Belgium. From 1817 to 1822 Navez was at Rome, and subsequently settled at Brussels. There his fame was already well established, and he was much employed. During many years he held a foremost position among Belgian artists, and was Director of the Brussels Academy. Many pupils passed through his studio, and honours were freely bestowed on him. He died at Brussels in 1869. Among his works are:

Amsterdam.	Jesuits' Ch.	Incredulity of St. Thomas.
"	"	The Holy Family.
"	"	The Marriage of the Virgin.
Brussels.	Museum.	Hagar and Ishmael in the Desert.
"	"	Athaliah and Joash.

"	"	The Rich Man before Christ.
"	St. Gudule.	The Assumption of the Virgin.
"	"	The Raising of Lazarus.
Haarlem.	Pavilion.	Raising the Shunamite's Son.
"	"	The Meeting of Isaac and Rebecca.
Munich.	New Pinakothek.	'Spinsters' of Fondi.

NAVOIS, J. S., who lived in the second half of the 17th century, was a painter of landscapes and marines in the manner of Bakhuisen. His paintings have often been confounded with the works of that master.

NAYS, —, was a Flemish landscape painter who lived towards the end of the 17th century. In some of his pictures, which are very numerous in Belgium but of small merit, the figures are painted by Nicolay.

NAZZARI, BARTOLOMMEO, (or NAZARI,) was born at or near Bergamo in 1699, and was first a scholar of Vittore Ghislandi and Angelo Trevisano at Venice. Afterwards he studied at Rome under Francesco Trevisani, and then settled at Venice. He was a painter of history and portraits, but particularly excelled in the latter, in which he was much employed at the different courts in Germany. One of the most esteemed of his historical pictures is a 'Holy Family, with St. Anne,' at Pontremoli. He died at Venice or Milan in 1758. He etched the portrait of F. M. Molza, at Modena. Bartolozzi and A. Faldoni have engraved after him.

NEAGLE, JOHN, an English line engraver, born in London about 1760. Amongst his plates are:

The Royal Procession to St. Paul's. 1789.
Several plates for the Shakespeare Gallery; after Wheatley and Smirke.
The illustrations to Murphy's 'Arabic Antiquities of Spain.' 1816.

NEAL, ELIZABETH, a still-life painter of the 18th century. It is said that she lived in Holland, and painted flowers which rivalled those by Seghers. None of her works, however, can be identified.

NEALE, JOHN PRESTON, a very eminent English architectural designer and engraver, was born in 1771. His father is believed to have been a painter of insects. He himself began his career as a clerk in the Post Office, but he soon left clerical work for topographical draughtsmanship. He painted a few works in oil, but his favourite method was to draw with the pen and finish with washes of water-colour. In 1818 he published the first portion of the 'History and Antiquities of the Abbey church at Westminster,' and in 1823 the second part, forming together two volumes royal quarto, containing sixty-one beautiful engravings. The literary part, consisting of notices and Biographical Memoirs of the Abbots and Deans of that foundation, was written by E. W. Brayley. Together with the second portion of this work, he published six volumes, royal quarto, of 'The Seats of Noblemen and Gentlemen of England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland;' and in 1829 a second series in five vols., containing, in the whole, seven hundred and thirty-seven plates. The labour of producing two such important works in the period would have been sufficient employment for the most industrious designer; but Neale was indefatigable. During the years 1824 and 1825 he published, in conjunction with Le Keux, 'Views of the most interesting Collegiate and Parochial Churches of Great Britain, including Screens, Fonts, Monuments, &c., with historical and architectural descriptions,' containing ninety-eight plates, in which the talents of both artists appear to the greatest advantage. He was a frequent exhibitor between 1797 and 1844. In the earlier part of his artistic career he painted many architectural subjects in oil, with views of their several localities, in which he exhibited the feeling and power of a true landscape painter. A larger number of his works were, however, in water-colours, and in 1817 and 1818 he exhibited at the Water-colour Society. But the success that attended his publications induced him to abandon the palette altogether, and devote his energies and skill to a class of work in which he particularly delighted, and in which, for a long time, he stood unrivalled. Many detached pieces were designed and executed by him for the embellishment of other publications. He died near Ipswich in 1847.

NEALE, THOMAS, was an English engraver, who flourished about the year 1650. He is supposed to have been a disciple of Hollar. He engraved after him twenty-four subjects from Holbein's 'Dance of Death,' the first of which is marked, Paris, 1657. He signed his prints with his name in full, or with the letters T. N. He etched several plates of birds after Barlow; these were executed at Paris in 1659. It is very probable, too, that he engraved some of the plates for the eighth edition of Ogilby's 'Æsop.'

NEALKES, one of the later painters of ancient Greece, lived probably at Sicyon about 252 B.C. He is regarded as the principal representative of the later Sicyonian school. He is said to have possessed a lively genius, and an accurate judgment. Being engaged to paint a picture of a combat between the Persians and Egyptians on the Nile, and being apprehensive that the river might be mistaken for the sea, he introduced a mule drinking on the border of the Nile, and a crocodile ready to attack it, thus rendering the scene of the action quite unmistakable!

NEAPOLI, FRANCISCO, a Spanish historical painter, was born at Madrid in the 15th century, and is supposed, from the style of his works, to have been a scholar of Leonardo de Vinci. In conjunction with Pablo de Aregio, it is said that he painted the doors that enclose the great altar of the cathedral of Valencia. They represent scenes from the life of the Virgin Mary. This work was finished in 1506, and for it the artists received 3000 ducats. Neapoli was the founder of the Valencian school.

NEBBIA, CESARE, was born at Orvieto about the year 1536, and was the ablest scholar of Girolamo Muziano, whose style he adopted, and whom he assisted in the works he executed for Gregory XIII., in the Vatican and the Capella Gregoriana. He was himself employed by Gregory's successor, Sixtus V., in superintending the works undertaken by order of that pontiff in the palaces of St. John Lateran and Monte Cavallo, in the library of the Vatican, and at the Scala Santa, in which he was assisted by Giovanni Guerra da Modena. He painted several pictures for the churches in Rome, of which the most important are the 'Resurrection,' in San Giacomo degli Spagnuoli; some subjects from the life of the Virgin, painted in fresco, in the Capella Borghese, in Santa Maria Maggiore; and the 'Crowning of the Virgin,' in Santa Maria de' Monti. He died at Rome about the year 1614.

NEBEA, GALBOTTO, the author of two altar-pieces in the church of S. Brigida, at Genoa. He was a native of Castellaccio, near Alessandria, and the two pictures in question are dated respectively 1481 and 1484.

NEBOT, B., painted the portrait of Captain Thomas Coram, the founder of the Foundling Hospital, which was in the possession of D. Nesbit, and engraved by Brooke in 1751.

NECK, JAN VAN, was born at Naarden in 1636. He was the son of a physician, who destined him for his own profession, but yielded to the marked disposition his son evinced for art, and placed him under the tuition of Jacob de Backer, whose style he followed with great success. Houbraken speaks of his talents as an historical painter in the most flattering terms, and particularly commends a picture by him representing the 'Presentation in the Temple,' in the French church at Amsterdam. He was still more successful in painting fabulous subjects, and was also an eminent portrait painter. He resided chiefly at Amsterdam, where he died in 1714. The following works by him have been engraved:

Alpheus and Arethusa; by A. Blooteling.

The Bath of Diana; by the same.

The portrait of the theologian, Groeuwey; by C. Hagens.

NECKER. See DE NECKER.

NEDEK, PIETER, born at Amsterdam in 1616, was a scholar of P. Lastman, and a painter of history, portraits, and landscapes. He died in 1678.

NÉE, DENIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1732, and died in 1818. He was a pupil of J. P. le Bas, has engraved several plates in the style of that artist, and first brought himself into notice by a new edition of the 'Recueil des Peintures antiques' of Caylus and Mariette. Among others, he executed several vignettes for Ovid's Metamorphoses, published in Paris, and engraved several landscapes after A. Van de Velde and other Dutch masters. In conjunction with Masquelier he engraved 'Les Tableaux pittoresques de la Suisse' and 'Le Voyage pittoresque de la France.' He left some fifty-two plates, including the following:

The Massacre of St. Bartholomew; after Gravelot.

Three Views in Martinique; after the Chevalier d'Épernay.

Benjamin Franklin; after Charmontel.

A View of the City of Lyons; after Lallemand.

The Environs of Frascati; after the same.

A View of Tivoli; after the same.

NEEFFS, (misspelt NEEFS, NEEF, and NEFS,) JACOBUS. This Flemish engraver, a member of a large family of artists, was born early in the 17th century. He was probably the grandson of the elder Pieter Neeffs, the painter, and distinguished himself by the plates he engraved after Rubens, Van Dyck, and the other celebrated painters of the Flemish school. His works, which are dated from 1632 to 1645, are principally executed with the burin. The year of his death is not known. The following are some of his best plates:

NEEFFS, PIETER, the elder, was born at Antwerp in 1577 or 1578. He was the scholar of Hendrik van Steenwyck the elder. He painted the interiors of the churches in Antwerp and its neighbourhood, often introducing candle-light effects. His mechanical skill was great, but his hand was heavier than that of Steenwyck, and his colour less pleasing. The figures in his pictures were painted by F. Francken, Van Thulden, Teniers, and Velvet Breughel. Neeffs died between 1657 and 1661. Many of his best pictures are in England, but the museums of Paris, Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Brunswick, Cassel, Munich, Geneva, Vienna, and St. Petersburg are also rich in his works.

NEEFFS, PIETER, the younger, the son and scholar of Pieter Neeffs the elder, was born at Antwerp in 1601, and died after 1675. He painted similar subjects to those of his father, but they are greatly inferior, both in the neatness of the finishing and the correctness of the perspective. Several of his paintings are in the possession of the Marquis of Hertford, and others at the Hague, in the Vienna Academy, and the Liechtenstein Gallery.

NEEL, SCHEELEN. See MOLENAER, CORN.

NEELE, SAMUEL JOHN, an English engraver, who was born in 1758, and died in 1824. His employment was principally illustrating antiquarian works and engraving maps; but he contrived to do well for himself in a pecuniary sense.

NEESSA, ALONZO DE, a Spanish painter born in the neighbourhood of Madrid in 1628. There are pictures by him in the Monastery of the Observants in that city. He died in 1668.

NEFF, TIMOTHEUS CARL VON, a Russian painter, born in 1805 at Korkulla, in Esthonia. He studied at Dresden under Hartmann, and at Rome. In 1826 he returned to Russia and settled at St. Petersburg. He became court painter in 1832, and in 1839 a member of the Academy, in which he was appointed professor in 1865. From 1842 he was much employed on the decorations of St. Isaac's Cathedral, and his picture of the patron saint there is one of his best works. Many members of the Imperial family sat to him for their portraits. He died at St. Petersburg in 1877. Some of his works recall those of Leopold Robert. At the Hermitage there are the following by him :

La Baigneuse. 1858.

Two Girls in a Grotto. 1859.

NEGKER (NECKER). See DE NECKER.

NEGRE, MATTHIEU VAN, was an historical and architectural painter, who lived about 1620 or 1630. In the cathedral of Tournay there is a 'Holy Family' by him, with a glory of angels, dated 1623. Descamps mentions him, but there are no particulars of his life.

NEGRE, NICHOLAS VAN, an excellent Flemish portrait painter; perhaps the son of Matthieu. He flourished about 1645. Snyderhoef engraved his portrait of Salmasius in 1641; C. van Dalen that of Spanheim in 1644; and there are other plates after his work.

NEGRI, GIANFRANCESCO, also called FRANCESCO DE' RITRATTI, from the excellence of his portraits, was born at Bologna in 1593. He was instructed by Odoardo Fialetti at Venice, and was the founder of an academy of arts, called Degl' Indomiti, in his own house. He was also a poet, translated parts of Tasso's works into the Bolognese dialect, and wrote other books. His eldest son PIETRO NEGRI painted in the style of his instructor Zanchi. There is by him in the Gallery at Dresden, 'The Death of the Empress Agrippina in the presence of Nero.' He died at Bologna in 1659. His son Bianco, who was a Canon of St. Petronio, and an author, also painted.

NEGRI, PIER MARTIRE, was a native of Cremona, and flourished about the year 1600. According to Zaist, he was a disciple of Giovanni Battista Trotti, and distinguished himself as a painter of history and portraits. He afterwards studied at Rome, and was received into the Academy of St. Luke. Pictures by him exist at Cremona and Pavia.

NEGRON, LUCIAN CARLOS DE, a Spanish genre painter, who flourished about 1660. He was one of the founders of the Seville Academy.

NEGRONE, (or NIGRONE,) PIETRO, a native of Calabria, was born about the year 1500. According to Dominici, he was a disciple of Giovanni Antonio d'Amato, and also studied under Marco Calabrese. At Naples, in the church of Santa Maria Donna Romata, are two pictures by him, representing the 'Adoration of the Magi,' and the 'Scourging of Christ,' painted in the year 1541; also in the church of Santa Agnello a picture representing the Virgin Mary and Infant Christ in the clouds, with a glory of angels, and below St. Catharine, St. Jerome, and St. Onofrio. Negrone died in 1565. He was sometimes called 'Il giovane Zingaro,' the young gipsy.

NEGRONI. See NERONI.

NEGROPONTE, FRA ANTONIO, an early Venetian, and contemporary with Jacobello del Fiore. In the church of San Francesco della Vigna, Venice, there is a colossal 'Virgin in adoration' by him which is inscribed "Frater Antonius da Negropoñ pinxit," so that Boschini and Sansovino are mistaken in calling him Fra Francesco. To Fra Antonio Crowe and Cavalcaselle also ascribe tentatively a 'Madonna' at Legnano, in the oratory of the Disciplina.

NEHER, JOSEPH, a decorative painter, born at Buchan in Wurtemberg in 1788. He painted at Stuttgart, and must not be confounded with an artist of the same name, the father of Michael Neher.

NEHER, MICHAEL, was born at Munich in 1798, and the son of JOSEPH NEHER, a citizen and painter of that city, but of a family from Biberach. Michael received a classical education, and was instructed in the rudiments of painting by Mitterer, and in 1813 entered the Academy at Munich. From 1816 to 1818 he studied under Matthias Klotz, and was then employed by Angelo Quaglio in his theatrical work. After having worked for some time as scene-painter at the Court Theatre, he went to Trent, Milan, and Trieste, and painted portraits. In 1819 he was encouraged by Hieronymus Hess, at Rome, to devote himself to genre painting. On his return to Munich in 1823 he became Conservator of the Art Union. In 1839 he painted several saloons in the Hohenschwangen Schloss, after sketches of Schwind, Gasner, and Schwanthaler. He, however, in 1837 devoted himself entirely to architectural painting, and travelled for improvement on the Rhine, and in Belgium. He was received an honorary member of the Academy at Munich in 1876, and died there in the same year. His best performances are the following views:

The Cathedral of Magdeburg.

The Minster at Fribourg.

The Town-hall and St. Peter's Church at Löwen.

The Cathedrals at Frankfurt, Prague, and Mechlin.

NEIDLINGER, (or NEYDLINGER,) MICHAEL, a painter of Nürnberg, and a pupil of G. Strauch, and at Amsterdam of J. de Backer. He went into Italy and lived long at Venice, where he painted for the Monasterio di Santa Anna 'The Apparition of Jan Lorenzo Giustiniani;' and there are other pictures by him in that city. Neidlinger died at Venice in 1700.

NELLI, NICCOLÒ, was a native of Venice, and flourished about the middle or latter half of the 16th century. From the style of his engraving he is supposed to have been a disciple of Marco da Ravenna. He engraved an architectural frontispiece, with figures, for a book of plans and views of cities and fortresses, published in 1568 (it is inscribed Niccolo Nelli Veneziano f.), also other subjects and portraits.

NELLI, OTTAVIANO DI MARTINO, (or DE MARTIS,) was the son of Martino Nelli of Gubbio, and flourished at the commencement of the 15th century. In the church of Santa Maria Nuova at Gubbio is preserved under glass a fresco representing the Madonna and Saints, which is signed and dated M.C.C.C.III., Morelli says IV., and has been chromolithographed and published by the Arundel Society. He also worked for Gian Galeazzo, Duke of Milan, at Perugia in 1403-4, and moved to Urbino in 1420; his death took place between 1445 and 1450. The chapel of the Palace of Corrado de' Trinci, now called the Palazzo del Governo, was decorated by him in 1424, and the work can still be seen at Foligno.

NELLI, PIETRO, was born at Massa in 1672, and was instructed by Morandi, whose style he imitated in his paintings for several churches at Rome. He was alive in 1730, and distinguished himself greatly as a painter of portraits, among which are :

- Cardinal Lodovico Pico (engraved by Frey).
 Andrea Giuseppe Rossi (engraved by Billy).
 Bishop Giovanni Francesco Tenderini (engraved by Giovanni Rossi).

NELLI, Suor PLAUTILLA, a lady of a noble family, was born at Florence in 1523, and probably instructed by Fra Paolino of Pistoja. She became in 1537 an inmate, and afterwards prioress, of the Dominican convent of St. Catherine at Florence, and painted for their church a 'Descent from the Cross,' which is said to have been from a design by Andrea del Sarto, and is probably the same as that now to be seen at the Florence Academy; also a picture of the 'Adoration of the Magi.' In Vasari's time a large collection of drawings by Fra Bartolommeo was in her possession, and at Dresden is a drawing by her of 'St. Anthony tempted by a beautiful woman,' which appears to be an imitation of the Frate's work. She died in 1588. There are by her :

- Berlin. Mag. of Mus. A painting of 1524.
 Florence. Academy. A Descent from the Cross.
 „ S. M. Novella. A Last Supper.

NELLO DE DINO, an unimportant Tuscan painter of the 14th century. He was a friend of Buffalmacco.

NELLO DI GIOVANNI FALCONE, BERNARDO, a painter of the 14th century, who is known by report only, as no authentic work by him is in existence. He studied under Orcagna, and painted much in Pisa, in the cathedral and in the Campo Santo, where there is a fresco said, by some, to be by him. Lanzi says he is supposed to be the same artist as Nello di Vanni.

NENCI, FRANCESCO, was born about 1782, and studied at the Academy at Florence. He at first painted portraits, but abandoned that branch of art for historical painting. His chief performance is at Florence in the Villa Poggio, and represents the 'Assumption of the Virgin.' In 1821 he made a series of designs for Dante's 'Divina Commedia.' He was for a time director of the Academy at Siena.

NEPVEU, LAURENS THEODOR, was born at Utrecht in 1782. He was a politician, and only practised painting as an amateur. His master in art was B. van Straaten. Nepveu died in 1839.

NERANUS, A., painter, flourished about the middle of the 17th century, and imitated the manner of Rembrandt. In Cardinal Fesch's collection there was a picture by him representing 'Pilate washing his hands.'

NERENZ, WILHELM, genre painter, was born at Berlin in 1804, first studied under Wilhelm von Schadow, until the removal of the latter to Düsseldorf. In the next year he was employed as picture-restorer in the Royal Museum, but in 1833 followed his master, von Schadow, to Düsseldorf, where he remained three years. He then returned to Berlin, where he resided for the remainder of his life, with the exception of a short time in Dresden and Italy. He died at Berlin in 1871. Of his works may be mentioned :

- Berlin. Nat. Gallery. At the Armourer's. 1840.
 The Goldsmith's Daughter (from Uhland).
 Kathchen von Heilbronn (from Kleist).
 The end of the Wanderyahre.

NERI, GIOVANNI, called NERI DEGLI UCCELLI, a Bolognese artist, celebrated for his paintings in miniature of animals, birds, and fishes. Ulysses Aldrovandi had seven books full of his works. He died in the year 1575.

NERI, PAOLO DEL MAESTRO. See PAOLO.

NERI DI BICCI. See BICCI.

NERITO, JACOPO DI, lived early in the 14th century. He was probably born at Padua, and a pupil of Gentile da Fabriano. According to Rossetti, he painted a 'St. Michael and Lucifer' of gigantic proportions, once in the church of San Michele, Padua. In the Communal Gallery of that city there are some panels by him. No dates can be given of his birth or death.

NERONI, BARTOLOMMEO, or NEGRONI, called Maestro RICCIO, was a native of Siena, and flourished from 1550 to 1573. He was a pupil, and afterwards son-in-law and assistant, of Bazzi (Sodoma). He painted history, but was more celebrated for his perspective and architectural views. At the Osservanti at Siena is a Crucifixion, with a great number of figures; and in the church of the Derelitte, a 'Descent from the Cross,' which is painted entirely in the style of his master. Two large paintings by him in the Academy of that city are Florentine in style. He was also distinguished as a sculptor, architect, and painter of scenery. One of his scenes has been engraved by Andreani.

NERROCIO DI BARTOLOMMEO. See LANDI.

NERVESA, GASPARO, painter, a native of Friuli, and, according to Ridolfi, a pupil of Titian. No picture by him can now be pointed out, but he is known to have painted at Spilimbergo, and perhaps at Treviso, about the middle of the 16th century.

NES, JAN VAN, (or NEES,) was born at Delft probably about the year 1600, and was one of the best scholars of Michiel J. van Mierevelt. He travelled in France and Italy, and studied some time at Rome and at Venice. On his return to Holland he painted some historical pictures, which were deservedly admired; and he would probably have distinguished himself in that branch of the art, had not the general demand for his portraits induced him, for the sake of emolument, to devote himself entirely to them. The date of his death is uncertain, but he is said to have worked as late as 1670.

NESBITT, CHARLTON, an English wood-engraver, born in 1775, at Swalwell, Durham. He was apprenticed when fourteen to Beilby and Bewick, and gained two premiums at the Society of Arts. Specimens of the work done by him while with Bewick are to be found in the tail-pieces of 'British Birds,' and in the edition of Goldsmith and Parnell of 1795. At the end of his apprenticeship he engraved a block 15 inches by 12 from a drawing by his fellow-pupil Robert Johnson. About 1799 he moved to London, where he obtained an extensive practice. Among the works he illustrated were editions of 'Hudibras' and of 'Shakespeare,' Sir Egerton Bridges' works, Ackerman's 'Religious Emblems,' Northcote's 'Fables,' &c. From 1815 to 1830 he lived at Swalwell, and then returned to London. He died at Brompton in 1838.

NESFIELD, WILLIAM ANDREW. This artist, the father of the well-known architect of the same name, was the son of the rector of Brancepeth, and was educated at Winchester, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He entered the army at Woolwich in 1809, served in the Peninsula under Wellington, and was afterwards aide-de-camp to Sir Gordon Drummond in Canada. On retiring from the army he devoted his talents to painting in water-colours, and was elected an associate exhibitor of the Society of Painters in Water-colours in 1828. The following year he became a member of the Society and one of its most constant contributors. A drawing of 'Bamborough Castle' at South Kensington is a good example of his style. Later in life he gave his chief attention to landscape gardening, and many of the improvements in the Horticultural Gardens at South Kensington, Kew Gardens, and in St. James's Park are due to his skill. He died in 1881, at the age of 87, in London.

NETO, ESTEVÃO GONSALVES, a Portuguese architect and painter in miniature. Nothing is known of his birth, but he was chaplain to the Bishop of Vizen and a canon in 1622. A missal, beautifully illuminated by him between 1610 and 1622, is preserved in the Academy of Sciences at Lisbon. He died the 29th of July, 1627.

NETSCHER, CASPAR, was born at Heidelberg in 1639, and died at the Hague in 1684. His father was a sculptor, and an engineer in the Polish service, who died in Prague when he was only two years of age, leaving a widow with three children, of whom Caspar was the youngest. The calamities of war obliged her to fly from Germany, and make the best of her way towards Holland. Two of her children died on the road, and she arrived at Arnheim in Guelderland in a state of the utmost destitution. There an opulent physician, named Tullekens, took pity on her, and adopted the young Netscher. He educated him with the intention of his following the medical profession, but his genius strongly inclining to the art of painting, it was judged best to give way to it; he was in consequence placed under Koster, a painter of dead game and still-life, but he did not remain long with him, as these were not subjects suited to his powers. He became a disciple of Gerard Terburg, and his progress under that master was great. On leaving Terburg, he determined to visit Italy, and with that intention embarked at Amsterdam for Bordeaux, where he was induced to remain some time, by the encouragement he received as a painter of portraits, as well as by an attachment he conceived for Marie Godin, the niece of the person at whose house he lodged. They were married, and this union prevented his proceeding to Italy, he returned to Holland, where his talents promised him a more certain success. The pictures of Netscher usually represent domestic subjects and conversations, which are treated in a style reminding us of the productions of Frans Mieris and Terburg. His handling is a little woolly and wanting in life, but like his master, he particularly excelled in painting white satin, silk, ermine, &c. He sometimes painted historical and fabulous subjects, but they were not favourable to his powers; he was more successful in portraits of a small size, in which he was much employed. Walpole says he visited England on the invitation of Sir William Temple, in the reign of Charles II., but did not remain here long. The following list includes most of Netscher's more accessible works:—

NETSCHER, CONSTANTINE, the younger son of Caspar Netscher, was born at the Hague in 1669 or 1670. He learned the first principles of art from his father, but when he had reached the age of fourteen, death deprived him of that instructor. It does not appear that he studied under any other master, but contented himself by imitating the pictures left by his father. He was very extensively employed in painting portraits, and was encouraged by the principal personages of his time. Among his other patrons, were the families of Wassenaer and Duivenvoorden, whose portraits he painted, with those of the Earl and Countess of Portland. Descamps reports, that the earl used every persuasion to prevail on him to visit England, but he declined, on account of the infirm state of his health. His talents were not confined to portraits, as he occasionally painted domestic subjects and conversations; but in these he was very inferior to his father. He was received into the Society of Painters at the Hague in 1699, and was afterwards appointed the Director. His 'Children of Baron Suasso' may be mentioned as one of his best portraits. His works are to be found at Rotterdam, St. Petersburg, Copenhagen, and in the La Caze collection in the Louvre. He died at the Hague in 1722.

NETSCHER, THEODOR, the elder son and scholar of Caspar Netscher, was born at Bordeaux in 1661. At the age of eighteen he visited Paris, under the patronage of Count Davaux, who had been ambassador from France to Holland. He here received great encouragement as a portrait painter during a residence of twenty years, which caused him to be known at home as 'The Frenchman.' He, however, returned at last to Holland, fixed his residence at the Hague, and was employed by the principal personages of the court. Descamps says he visited England in 1715, as paymaster to the Dutch auxiliaries. He died at Hulst in 1732. A portrait by him, dated 1681, is in the Rotterdam Museum. In his larger pictures he introduced fruit, flowers, Turkey carpets, and other decorations, and he was particularly successful in representing grapes and peaches.

NEUBERGHE, CHRISTOPHER, a Tyrolese, who painted historical pictures in the Vatican and at the Palazzo Borghese. He was employed by the Empress of Russia to copy all the most beautiful pictures in the Vatican, and was living at Rome in 1776.

NEUCHATEL, NICHOLAS, also known as LUCIDEL, and, in the Antwerp guild books as COLYN VAN NIEN-CASTEEL, a German-Flemish painter, was born at Mons about 1520. He entered the studio of Pieter Coucke, at Alost, while the elder Breughel was a pupil there, namely in 1539. Soon after 1540, however, he left Alost for Mons, and some years later took up his residence finally at Nuremberg, where he died at the end of the century. He signed himself NICOLAUS DE NOVO CASTELLO. His portraits are simple, life-like, well drawn, and sober in colour. Among them we may name the following :

Berlin.	Gallery.	Portrait of a young man.
Munich.	Gallery.	Portrait of the Mathematician Johann Neudorfer and his son.
"	"	Two male portraits.
"	"	A female portrait.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	A male portrait.

And portraits at Darmstadt, Prague, Pesth, and Schleissheim.

NEUE (NEVE). See DE NEVE.

NEURATTER, AUGUSTIN, was a German engraver, who resided at Prague about the year 1715. He engraved a set of figures, entitled 'Statuæ Pontis Pragensis,' published in that year. He worked from 1704 to 1749, when he died. His plates are found in many books, some of which it is said he published at his own expense.

NEUVEL, SIMON, (or NEUVELT,) who usually went by the name of NOVELLANUS, was a designer and engraver of Cologne towards the close of the 16th century. In conjunction with Franz Hogenberg he etched twenty-one plates of 'The Funeral Poms of Frederick II. of Denmark,' published in 1592. He also etched several of the plates for Braun's 'Civitates Orbis Terrarum,' published at Cologne in 1572; as well as 'The History of Tobias,' in eight plates, and 'The Good Samaritan,' (with Hogenberg,) in six. His son, ÆGIIDIUS NEUVEL, also engraved at Cologne in the early part of the 17th century; one of his plates is a 'Christ on the Cross.'

NEUVILLE, ALPHONSE MARIE DE, was born at Saint Omer in 1836. His family was "noble" and well to do in the world, and they wished him to embark on an official career. But he had set his heart on the army as a profession, and he was therefore sent to the preparatory school at Lorient. The drawing-master at Lorient is said to have at once discovered his unusual talent with the pencil, and to have prophesied his future success. After he left Lorient he entered a law school in Paris, to please his family. There he staid three years, passing most of his time in picking up such knowledge of military life as he could. After this he finally made up his mind to be a painter, and after a year of contention with his family, his father consented to consult various well-known artists on his chances. They all discouraged the idea, but Neuville, nothing daunted, took a small studio and set to work. He made the acquaintance of Delacroix, then in his decline, and was very kindly treated by him. In 1859 he won a medal for his first exhibited picture, and a year later he was commissioned by the "Cercle Artistique," to paint them 'Garibaldi taking Naples.' This picture was a failure. In 1861, however, he took a second-class medal at the Salon with a 'Chasseurs de la Garde,' and from that time onward his work attracted notice. His great opportunity came with the war of 1870-71. His weak constitution prevented him from bearing an important part in it, but he became its chronicler in paint. From the time that he exhibited his picture, 'The Last Cartridge,' there was scarcely a better known artist in Europe. Neuville made a great many designs for woodcuts, and at his death was occupied with the drawings for an important work in illustration of the incidents of a hard-fought campaign. He died in Paris in 1885. Among his works we may name :

Fighting in the Streets of Magenta. 1864.
Chasseurs-à-Pied crossing the Tchernaija (Lille Museum). 1868.
Bivouac before Le Bourget (Dijon Museum). 1872.
The Last Cartridge. 1873.
Attack on a Barricaded House at Villersexel. 1874.
Surprise near Metz. 1875.
Battle of Forbach. 1877.
Cemetery of St. Privat.
Le Bourget.
Defence of Rorke's Drift.
Cuirassiers at Rezonville.
The Storming of Tel-el-Kebir.
Le Parlementaire (his last picture).

NEVE, CORNELIUS, an English portrait painter, who practised in the reign of Charles I. He painted a group of himself and his family, which is now at Petworth. He painted also Lord Buckhurst and Mr. Edward Sackville in one piece in 1637. It is at Knoke. In 1664 he painted Mr. Ashmole in his herald's coat.

NEVE, (or NEUE,) FRANS VAN. There were several painters of this name, probably father, son, and grandson. The first was inscribed in the books of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1630, and the third in 1691. It was therefore probably the second who was born, according to Balkema, at Antwerp in 1625, and died in 1681. He studied the works of Rubens and Vandyck, and at Rome those of Raphael, and became a better designer and colourist than many of his contemporaries. There are many of his pictures at Antwerp. At Vienna are the portraits of the Archduke Leopold, Governor of the Netherlands, and Charles II. of Spain, with the Archduchess Maria Anna. In the Lichtenstein Gallery are 'The Judgment of Solomon' and 'The Massacre of the Innocents.' There are a number of etchings signed 'F de Neve, inv et fecit.' Probably they are by the second Van Neve, as the figures are well drawn, and in the landscapes the foliage particularly well expressed.

NEVEU, MATHIJS, (or NAIVEU,) was born at Leyden in 1647, and was first a scholar of Abraham Torenvliet, but he had afterwards the advantage of being instructed by Gerard Dou. He painted domestic subjects and conversations, and Houbraken highly commends a picture by him at Amsterdam, representing the 'Works of Mercy,' a composition of a great number of figures ingeniously grouped. He died at Amsterdam in 1721. Some of his pictures have been imported into England, but for the most part they are confined to his own country. There is a 'St. Jerome' by him in the Amsterdam Museum.

NEVEU, NOEL; a painter of this name won the second 'Grand Prix' of the Paris Academy in 1692, with an 'Abraham dismissing Hagar.'

NEWCOURT, RICHARD, an English draughtsman in the 17th century, who drew some of the illustrations for Dugdale's 'Monasticon Anglicanum.'

NEWENHAM, FREDERICK, an English portrait and subject painter. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1844 to 1855. There is a portrait of H. M. Queen Victoria by him at the Junior United Service Club. Newenham was born in 1807, and died in 1859.

NEWMAN, ALFRED. He was a pupil of George Hawkins, and drew architectural subjects on stone, illustrating a valuable series of works, principally on Gothic Architecture. Among these are 'Beverley Minster,' 'Johnson's Relics of English Architecture,' 'W. E. Nesfield's Mediæval Architecture,' &c. Alfred Newman died in London, 13th March, 1866, aged 39.

NEWTON, ALFRED P., painter in water-colours. He was born in 1830. In 1858 he was elected an associate, and in 1879 a full member of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-colours. He died in 1883 at Rock Ferry. He was a prolific exhibitor in the rooms in Pall Mall East, sending in the last year of his life no less than sixteen drawings, the records of a visit to Greece. His work was remarkable for its delicacy, and for a certain poetry of expression rather than for its vigour.

NEWTON, EDWARD, is the name of an engraver affixed to a portrait of William Tansur, the musician, published with his 'Melodia Sacra.'

NEWTON, FRANCIS MILNER, was born in London in 1720, and was a pupil of Marcus Tuscher. He confined himself to portrait painting, in which he was considerably employed, though by no means an able artist. At the foundation of the Royal Academy he was chosen a member, and was appointed the first secretary to that institution, which situation he filled until 1788, when he resigned. He held for some time the office of 'Muster Master' for England, and generally wore the Windsor uniform. He died in 1794, upon an estate which had been left him, near Taunton.

NEWTON, GILBERT STUART, was born at Halifax, in Nova Scotia, in 1795. He commenced his studies with Gilbert Stuart, who was his maternal uncle, at Boston. He made a tour in Italy in 1817, and then visited Paris, and in the course of the same year he came to England and entered as a student of the Royal Academy. He at first adopted Watteau as his model, and produced several small pictures much in the style of that master. His first works that attracted notice were 'The Forsaken,' exhibited at the British Institution in 1821, and 'The Lovers' Quarrel,' engraved for the 'Literary Souvenir' of 1826. The 'Prince of Spain's Visit to Catalina' was engraved in the same annual in 1831, and he received 500 guineas from the Duke of Bedford for the picture. His other works, best known to the public by the engravings, are 'Shylock and Jessica,' 'Yorick and the Grisette,' in the National Gallery; 'The Abbot Boniface,' 'Portia and Bassanio,' in the South Kensington Museum; and 'Lear attended by Cordelia and the Physician.' He also painted a small picture of 'Abelard in his Study,' which he deposited as his diploma work on his election as R.A.; 'The Vicar of Wakefield restoring his Daughter to her Mother;' 'The Poet, reading his Verses to an impatient Gallant,' a piece of genuine humour; 'Macheath,' and a few portraits. The 'Macheath' was purchased by the Marquis of Lansdowne for 500 guineas. His last picture, 'Abelard' was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1833, and it was about this time that he evinced signs of aberration of mind, and these were followed by unequivocal insanity, from which he recovered only four days before his death. This occurred on the 5th of August, 1835, at Chelsea. He was a member of the Royal Academy from 1832. It is said that he was irritable and capricious; but he enjoyed the steady friendship and esteem of Washington Irving and Charles R. Leslie. His pictures are weak in drawing, but many of them are very fine in colour.

NEWTON, JAMES, an engraver, resided in London about the year 1778. He was the son of an engraver, EDWARD NEWTON, of whom nothing is known. We have, among others, the following prints by him:

PORTRAITS.

Sidney Parkinson, Draughtsman on board the Endeavour, Capt. Cook.
William Newton, Clerk of the Works at Greenwich Hospital.
Edward Sargeant, Secretary to the Protestant Association in 1780.

LANDSCAPES.

NEWTON, MARY (MRS. CHARLES T.). She was the daughter of Joseph Severn, the artist and H.M. Consul at Rome, and studied figure painting under Mr. G. Richmond, R.A. Her earlier works are in crayons and water-colours, her later in oils. Her contributions to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy include pictures named 'Chess,' dated 1855; 'Summer' and 'Winter,' 1864; and the portrait of herself in 1863. She married, in 1861, Mr. C. T. Newton, superintendent of Greek and Roman Antiquities at the British Museum, and turned her attention to painting from the sculptures, vases, &c., in that institution. In that branch of art she attained remarkable skill. Mrs. Newton was born in 1832, and died in January, 1866.

NEWTON, RICHARD, a caricaturist, and painter in miniature. His works generally represent convivial scenes. 'The Blue Devils,' 1795, drawn and etched by himself, is perhaps his best production. He died in London when only 21, the 9th December, 1798.

NEWTON, Sir WILLIAM JOHN, Kt., was the son of James Newton the engraver, and was born in London in 1785. He was a successful painter in miniature, and exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1808, and subsequently. He was miniature painter to Queen Adelaide, and was knighted in 1837. He died in London the 22nd January, 1869.

NEYTS, ÆGIDIUS or GILLIS, a Flemish painter, who flourished at Antwerp from about 1647, in which year he was named a master of the Painters' Guild, to 1690. He was a disciple of Lucas van Leyden, but next to nothing is known of his life. In the Dresden Gallery there are two pictures by him, a 'Mountain Landscape with Figures,' signed N. Neyts, f. 1681; and a 'Mountain Landscape with Ruins,' signed G. Neyts f. He has left the following etchings:

The Wooden Bridge.
Man and Dog.
View of Lille.
A Peasant's Cottage.

Besides the above signatures he also made use of the annexed monogram:

NICHOLLS, SUTTON, an English engraver, resided in London early in the 18th century. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, for whom he executed a considerable number of plates. His best prints are slight etchings of shells, and other trifling subjects; when he made use of the burin, his productions were very poor. In 1725 he published 'Prospects of the most considerable Buildings about London;' he also engraved the metropolitan views for Stowe's 'Survey.'

NICHOLS, JOSEPH, an English painter, who is remembered by two pictures painted in 1738, 'A View of the Fountain in the Temple,' and 'The Stocks' Market in the City.' The latter is an excellent work, and was for some time attributed to Hogarth.

NICHOLSON, ALFRED, an English landscape painter in water-colours, born at Whitby in 1788. He was the son of Francis Nicholson, and passed his early years in the navy. Devoting himself to art, he went to Ireland in 1813, and spent some years in sketching there. He settled in London as a teacher of drawing about 1818. The greater part of 1821 and 1822 were spent by him in sketching tours. He died in London in 1833.

NICHOLSON, FRANCIS, an English landscape painter in water-colours, born at Pickering in Yorkshire in 1753. His art instruction was confined to a few lessons from an artist at Scarborough. He settled at Whitby in 1783, where he married, and practised painting animals, birds, &c., and taught. In 1792 he went to Knaresborough, Ripon, Weybridge, finally settling in London. He had exhibited for the first time at the Royal Academy in 1789, and in 1804 he became one of the original members of the Water-colour Society, where he exhibited till 1815. In his later years he devoted his time to lithography, made above 800 drawings on stone, and did much to advance that art. After he retired from the practice of his art, he amused himself with experiments on colours, &c. In 1820 he published 'The Practice of Drawing and Painting Landscape from Nature.' He died in London in 1844. There are several of his water-colour drawings at the Kensington Museum.

NICHOLSON, ISAAC, an English wood engraver, born at Melmerby, Cumberland, in 1789. He was one of Bewick's apprentices, and imbibed a large share of his master's style. He died in 1848. Specimens of his work will be found in:

Sharp's 'History of the Rebellion.'
Flower and Grover's 'Visitation of Durham.' 1820.
'Robinson Crusoe.'
Watts's 'Hymns,' &c., &c.

NICHOLSON, JAMES, glass painter, was one of the four who contracted to execute eighteen windows for King's College Chapel, Cambridge, in the reign of Henry VIII.

NICHOLSON, WILLIAM, a portrait painter and etcher, born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1784. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1813. About 1820 he removed to Edinburgh, where he obtained a good practice, and had a great share in the foundation of the Royal Scottish Academy, of which he was an original member, and afterwards secretary. His forte was in water-colour portraits, and he also etched a series of portraits. He died at Edinburgh in 1844. There is a portrait by him of 'Grecian' Williams in the Scottish National Gallery. In 1816 he painted the portrait of W. Bewick, which was exhibited at the Academy. A series of his portraits was published with short Biographical Notices.

NICIAS, an ancient Greek painter, mostly in encaustic, was a native of Athens, and flourished from 348 to 308 before Christ. He was instructed by Antidotus, and his works were distinguished for their excellent light and shade. Praxiteles, whose statues he painted, declared that those were the best upon which Nicias had rendered assistance. He particularly insisted upon nobility in the choice of subjects for pictures. He painted women with great success, as well as dogs! One of his admired works represented 'Ulysses invoking the Shades of the Dead,' from the Odyssey. For this picture, Attalus, King of Pergamus, offered him sixty talents, but such was the patriotism of the painter, that he refused the offer, and presented the picture to his country. The liberality of his fellow-citizens had, however, enabled him thus to indulge his patriotism, as he had become extremely rich by the bountiful remuneration he received for his works. In the time of Pliny, a picture of Bacchus, by Nicias, was preserved in the Temple of Concord at Rome.

NICOLUCCIO CALABRESE, a Calabrian pupil of Lorenzo Costa, who is said to have made an attack on his master with a knife, in revenge for a supposed caricature in one of Costa's pictures.

NICOMACHUS, a painter of about 400 B.C., was a native of Thebes, and the brother of Aristides. He was instructed by his father Aristæus. Of all the painters of antiquity, he was the most remarkable for the extraordinary facility of his pencil, a promptness which did not, however, diminish the beauty of his productions; and Plutarch compares the readiness with which he worked to that of Homer in the composition of his verses. Aristatus, the tyrant of Sicily, having engaged him to decorate with his paintings a monument he intended to consecrate to the memory of the poet Telestus, a particular day was fixed when it was expected to be finished. The period had nearly elapsed before the painter had commenced his work, when Aristatus, irritated by his apparent neglect, threatened to punish him severely; but Nicomachus satisfactorily accomplished his undertaking within the limit of time. Among his principal works was a picture of the 'Rape of Proserpine,' which was for a long time preserved in the Capitol at Rome. At the time of his death he left imperfect a picture of Helen.

NICOPHANES, a painter of the school of Sicily, who is reckoned by Pliny among the most eminent of his time. He lived about 316 B.C., and studied under Pausias. He was called 'The Courtesan Painter,' for his models were usually members of the class of hetairæ.

NICOTERA, MARCANTONIO, a painter of the school of Naples, scholar of P. Crisnolo, flourished about 1590-1600. In the church of S. Nicola alla Dogana at Naples, there is a picture by him representing 'The Virgin and Child, St. Jerome, and St. Blaise.' The title-page of O. Boldoni's 'Epigraphica,' Augusto Perugia 1600, signed M. NIC. M. and containing the portrait of Cosmo de' Medici, is said to be by him.

NIEMANN, EDMUND JOHN, a landscape painter of German extraction, born at Islington in 1813. In his early years he was employed at Lloyds, where he remained till 1839. He then devoted himself to art, settling in High Wycombe, in the neighbourhood of which he found many subjects for his brush. His works first appeared at the Royal Academy in 1844. About 1850 he spent a few years in London, through his connection with the short-lived National Institution, of which he was Secretary and Trustee. He then lived in England Lane, near Hampstead, on a site now swarming with artists. He died of apoplexy at Brixton in 1876. A collection of forty-one of his works was exhibited at Nottingham Castle in 1878. Specimens of his art are to be seen in the Kensington Museum and the Liverpool Gallery.

NIEULANDT, ADRIAEN VAN, painter, was born at Antwerp in 1590. It has often been said that the date of this painter's birth is unknown; but underneath a portrait of Nienlandt, published in 1649, we find this inscription: "A very good painter of small figures and landscapes; he has also painted many scenes from the Old Testament; he is a native of Antwerp; he began as an artist at Amsterdam under Pieter Isaacsz and Franz Badens, and is still established in that city. He is fifty-nine years of age." Adriaen was possibly the brother of William van Nieulandt, who acquired a reputation as a playwright. Adriaen passed most of his life at Amsterdam, but from the picture mentioned below as in the Brussels Gallery, he seems to have revisited his native town at least once. The date of his death is unknown, but he was still living in 1657. Works:

Brunswick.	Gallery.	Diana and nymphs in a landscape.
"	"	Diana and Callisto.
"	"	Landscape with Hunters.
"	"	Still-life.
Brussels.	Gallery.	A carnival scene at Antwerp.
"	"	( Skaters on the ice in the town ditch. ) At Madrid a replica of this picture, with some variations, is ascribed to Denis van Alslot.
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	Entry of Christ into Jerusalem.
"	"	Triumph of Bacchus.

NIEULANT, JAN, born at Antwerp in 1569, painted historical pictures and landscapes, of small dimensions, often on marble. He died in 1628.

NIEULANT, WILLEM VAN, (or NIEUWLAND,) was born at Antwerp in 1584. After being instructed in the first principles of art by Jacob Savery, he went to Rome, where he became the scholar of Paul Bril, under whom he studied three years, and for some time followed the style of that master; but he afterwards adopted one more bold and expeditions. On his return to Holland he established himself at Amsterdam, where he was much employed in painting views of the ruins of ancient architecture in the vicinity of Rome, from the designs he had made during his residence in Italy. He was still alive in 1635. The following paintings remain from his hand:

Antwerp.	Museum.	View of the Campo Vaccino at Rome. 1611. ( A replica is in the Vienna Belvedere. )
Copenhagen.	"	Roman Cattle-Market.

Willem van Nieulant etched about sixty plates of landscapes and ruins, from his own designs, and from those of Paul Bril; they are occasionally strengthened by the burin. Among others, we have the following by him:

- A Mountainous Landscape, with Tobit and the Angel; the same.
- Two Views of the Sea Coast; the same.

NIKKELEN, ISAAK VAN, (or NIKKELE,) architectural painter, was born at Haarlem in the 17th century. He entered the guild in that city in 1660. In the Six Collection, at Amsterdam, there is an 'Interior of a Gothic church at Haarlem' by him. Other productions of his are to be met with at Brunswick, Brussels, Copenhagen, St. Petersburg, and Stockholm. He died at Haarlem in 1703.

NIKKELEN, JAN VAN, was born at Haarlem in 1649, and instructed by his father or elder brother Isaak. He did not pursue the same branch of art, but applied himself to the painting of landscapes and game, in which he followed the style of Karel du Jardin. He passed some time at the court of the Elector Palatine, for whom he painted several pictures, and was afterwards made painter at the court of Cassel, where he died in 1716. The Gallery there contains a 'Roebuck in a Forest' by him. His daughter, JAKOBEA NIKKELEN, born in 1690, was a pupil of Herman van der Myn, and excelled in painting fruit and flowers. She married Willem Troost, a portrait painter. The pictures she painted at Düsseldorf have been erroneously ascribed to her father. See TROOST.

NILSON, F. CHRISTIAN, painter, was born at Augsburg in 1811. He worked chiefly at Munich, and is principally known by his frescoes of scenes from the Greek "War of Liberation," executed after designs by Peter von Hess, in the "Hofgarten;" and by the decorative pictures, from his own designs, on the staircase of the State Library at Munich. His paintings in illustration of Schiller's 'Song of the Bell' have been engraved by Adrian Schleich. In his later years he abandoned painting for drawing and engraving. Nilson died at Munich the 19th December, 1879.

NILSON, JOHANN ESAJAS, a German miniature painter and engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1721. He engraved and etched several portraits, and a number of figure scenes in borders, which are good examples of the decorative art of the 18th century. He became Director of the Academy at Augsburg, and died there in 1788. His plates appeared in series of two, four, six, or twelve, and are signed either Nilson, E. N., J. E. N., or with a monogram. Among others are the following:

time in England, and with much success. He won the orthodox honours at the Salon, and was "decorated" in 1878. He died suddenly in 1884. Among his works we may name:

NIVOLSTELLA, (? JOHANN GEORG,) was a wood-engraver of Mayence, who was at work towards the end of the 16th century. He is known by a set of borders after the designs of B. Castelli for the first Genoa edition of Tasso's 'Gerusalemme liberata.' His son, Johann Georg, was born in Genoa in 1594, and was also a wood-engraver, but his works are inferior to those by his father. He produced a set of wood-cuts for an edition of the 'Æneid,' and another after Anton Tempesta's 'Patriarchs.' He died at Rome in 1624.

NIXON, JAMES, an English miniature painter. He was a member of the Incorporated Society, studied in the Royal Academy, where he first exhibited in 1772, and was elected an Associate in 1778. Nixon received court patronage, and held appointments to the Prince of Wales and the Duchess of York. He was born in 1741, and died at Tiverton in 1812.

NIXON, JOHN, an English engraver, who was born in 1706, and was still at work about 1760. His best prints are small portraits, in which the faces are entirely finished in stipple. Among others we have the following portraits by him:

- Frederick, Prince of Wales.
- William Augustus, Duke of Cumberland; two plates.
- Archbishop Tillotson.
- John, Earl of Granville.

NOBLE, JOHN, an English painter, born in 1797. He was a member of the Society of British Artists, and occasionally painted Italian landscapes. He died in 1879.

NOBLE, WILLIAM BONNEAU, an English landscape painter, was born in 1780. He taught drawing, and exhibited a few works at the Royal Academy in 1809-11. Having lapsed into irregular habits, through disappointment in love and art, he attempted suicide in 1825, and died in Somers Town in 1831. He left a MS. poem called, 'The Artist.'

NOBLESSE, (or NOBLET), FRANÇOIS, according to Nagler was born at Cahors in 1652, and resided in Paris, where he died in 1730. He excelled in drawing with a pen, and appears to have formed his taste by studying the works of Callot. He etched a few small landscapes.

NOBILI, ANTONIO, named STRAFORO, was an excellent landscape painter of Verona. He died young in 1696.

NOBILI, DURANTE DE', an Italian painter, who flourished at Caldarola about 1571, and formed himself on the style of Michelangelo. At S. Pier di Castello, Ascoli, there is a 'Madonna' inscribed with his name, birthplace, and the above date.

NOCHER, J. E., a French engraver, born in Paris about the year 1736. He was a pupil of Etienne Fessard, and has engraved several book-ornaments, and a few portraits; among the latter a 'J. J. Rousseau,' after Ramsay, dated 1766.

NOCRET, JEAN, (or NOGROIT), a French painter and engraver, was born at Nancy in 1618, and became a scholar of Jean Leclerc, but finished his studies in Italy under the direction of Poussin. On his return to France he was much employed at St. Cloud and the Tuileries. He painted the portraits of several of the royal family of France, among them the Queen of Louis XIV. as 'Minerva.' He engraved several plates after his own designs; the best is 'L'hommage du petit St. Jean.' He was principal painter to the Duke of Orleans, and Rector of the Royal Academy of Painting and Sculpture in Paris, where he died in 1671. P. Sylvestre engraved his portrait of himself, and Nanteuil that of the Duke of Beaufort. His son CHARLES (born 1647, died 1719) painted portraits with some success, and was known as NOCRET JEUNE.

NODDER, R. P., an English painter of horses and other animals, exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1786 to 1820. He was appointed botanic painter to George III., and after that exhibited a few flower pictures. Nothing is known of his life.

NOË, AMÉDÉE CHARLES HENRI, Vicomte de. This brilliant draughtsman and caricaturist was the second son of Jude-Amédée, Comte de Noë, a peer of France. The name of the family, whose nobility dates from the time of the Carolingian kings, is that of a small island near Mirande. There Amédée Charles was born the 20th of January, 1819. The date and place of his birth are thus given by Gérôme, who no doubt knew the facts. His mother was an Englishwoman, and as he grew up he combined in his manners the most striking characteristics of the two nations from which he derived his origin; the calmness of the Englishman with the vivacity of the Frenchman. It was to this singular union of very different qualities, and to his ever ready wit that he owed his great popularity. Although his talent for design had, from his childhood, been known to his friends, and had led to his abandoning the military career for which he had been educated, to study under Paul Delaroche, Charlet, and Lanny, it was only in 1842 that his first "album" appeared. It is entitled 'Calembours, bêtises, jeux de mots tirés par les cheveux. Paris, 1842. Par Cham de N**,' and affords, it is said, the only instance in which the name of 'Cham,' that he rendered so famous, is combined with any hint at the de Noë. Between that year and 1879, when he died, de Noë produced at least forty thousand designs, illustrating every phase of life in France and Algeria. They are to be found in so many different publications, that want of space will not permit us to name them separately. Although 'Cham' dealt so many hard blows, they were always so fair and honest that de Noë was a man esteemed alike by friends and foes. One of the former proposed to inscribe upon his tomb, "Quarante ans d'esprit, et pas un de mechanceté." His wife, the Comtesse de Noë, died in 1880, six months after her gifted husband.

NOEL, ACHILLE JULES, a French landscape and marine painter, born at Quimper in 1815. His works first appeared at the Salon in 1840, and he was awarded a medal in 1853. He died in Paris in 1881. As one of his best works we may name 'The Arrival of the Diligence at Quimper in the time of the Directory.' The following pictures are in the French public collections:

- Besaçon. Museum. View of Brest Harbour. 1840.
- Bordeaux. Museum. Two landscapes.
- Nantes. Museum. Sea-piece. 1840.

NOËL, ALEXIS NICOLAS, designer, lithographer, and painter, was born at Clichy-la-Garenne in 1792. He studied in Paris under David, and his sketches in oil and water-colours represent landscapes, military scenes, hunts, and architectural views. He published a 'Voyage Pittoresque et Militaire en France et en Allemagne, dessiné d'après nature, par A. Noël: 'most of the plates in this work were lithographed by himself. He died in 1848.

NOËL, ALPHONSE LÉON, a lithographer, born in Paris in 1807, who studied under Gros, Hersent, and Girodet. He began his career as a painter, but acquiring great skill in lithography, he devoted his time almost exclusively to that branch of art. Among a great number of works by him we may name a set of lithographs from the more remarkable pictures in the Gallery at Dresden. He reproduced a number of Winterhalter's portraits of royalty. He died in 1879.

NOËL, JEAN ALEXANDRE, a French marine painter, was born in 1750, and became a scholar of Joseph Vernet. He visited California in 1768-70, and afterwards Spain and Portugal, and painted storms, fogs, conflagrations, moonlights, and falls of snow, principally in water-colours. He also made sketches of the combat of the French corvette, La Bayonnaise, with the English frigate, L'Embuscade, and of a French frigate passing Alexandria by night. He painted views of Gibraltar and Lisbon; and was an industrious exhibitor till the year 1822. His views of Gibraltar and Cadiz have been engraved by F. Hegl. He was still living in 1831.

NOËL, PETER PAUL JOSEPH, was born at Wan-sort sur Meuse, near Dinant, in 1789, and was there instructed in the rudiments of art. At Antwerp he studied under Herreyns and Regemorter, and obtained several prizes there and at Brussels. In Paris he became a disciple of Schwebach; and after visiting Rome, went to Brussels, where he for a time painted landscapes with animals and figures, and then devoted himself entirely to genre subjects. He died at Sosoye in 1822. There are by him:

A Peasant falling from a Tree, and upsetting a Basket of Fruit.

Halt of Bavarian Cavalry.

Postilion before an Inn.

The Market-place of Amsterdam. (Amsterdam Museum.)

Girl with grapes. (The same.)

A Cavalry Outpost. (Brussels Museum.)

Rest of the Shepherds. (The same.)

NOFERI, MICHELE, a Florentine painter, of whom little is known. He worked in the 17th century, and was a pupil of Vincenzo Dandini.

NOGARI, GIUSEPPE, a Venetian painter, was born in 1699, and became a scholar of J. B. Pittoni and Antonio Balestra. He especially devoted himself to the painting of half-length figures, and from the numerous heads by him which have been brought to England, it may be concluded that he was an excellent portrait painter. He was Director of the Academy at Venice, where he died in 1763. We are indebted to him for the excellent copies of the 'Madonna de San Sisto,' after Raphael, at Piacenza, and the 'Notte,' after Correggio, at Modena. T. Cattini and T. E. Hayd have engraved after him. Among his better works we may name:

Dresden. Royal Gall. An old Man.

" " The Bust of an old Woman.

" " St. Peter.

Stockholm. Gallery. An old Man.

" " An old Woman with a Spindle.

NOGARI, PARIS, (called ROMANO,) a painter and engraver of Rome, who flourished during the pontificates of Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., and Clement

VIII. He imitated the manner of Raffaello Motta, and was employed in the Loggie of the Vatican, and in the library and church of the Lateran. He also painted several pictures for other churches, both in oil and fresco. In the church of the Madonna de Monti is a picture by this master representing our 'Saviour bearing his Cross;' in San Spirito in Sassia, the 'Circumcision;' and in the Trinità de' Monti, the 'Taking down from the Cross.' In later years he painted in miniature and practised engraving; his best plate is considered to be 'The Battle of King Ramirez with the Moors' (1588). He died at Rome in 1596.

NOLLIN. See NOLLIN.

NOLLEKENS, JOSEPH FRANCIS, (called OLD NOLLEKENS,) was born at Antwerp in 1702. He came to England in 1733, and was for some time a scholar of Pieter Tillemans. He painted landscapes and domestic subjects, and was much employed in copying the works of Watteau, and the architectural views of Giovanni Paolo Pannini. Lord Cobham employed him in several ornamental works at Stowe; and he was also patronized by the Earl of Tilney. Nollekens died in London in 1748. He was the father of the sculptor, Joseph Nollekens. His subjects, like Watteau's, were often musical and fashionable conversations al fresco, but they are not imitations of that master: the scene is generally the gardens at Wanstead, the seat of Lord Tilney. There is a painting at Windsor by him containing portraits of Frederick Prince of Wales and his sisters.

NOLLET, DOMINIQUE, was born at Bruges in 1640, and was a scholar of Frans van der Meulen in Paris. He painted history, but was more distinguished for his landscapes, battles, and sieges. His talents recommended him to the patronage of Maximilian, Duke of Bavaria, who sent him to accompany the Duchess to Venice; the governor of the Low Countries also appointed him his principal painter. He was made a member of the Society of Painters at Bruges in 1687. In the church of the Carmelites at Bruges is an altar-piece representing 'St. Louis embarking for the Holy Land.' There are several of his battle-pieces and landscapes in private collections in Belgium. He died in Paris in 1736. His pictures on close inspection have more the appearance of crude sketches than finished works, but viewed at a proper distance, the colours become warm, and the arrangement harmonious.

NOLLI, CARLO, painter and engraver, was a native of Como, a son of Giovanni Battista Nolli the architect, and a scholar of Agostino Masucci and Corradi. He engraved after Guercino, Primaticcio, Parmigianino, and others. He was employed by command of the King of Naples, on the 'Antichità d'Ercolano' (Napoli, 1757-62), and engraved also for Hamilton's works on Greek, Etruscan, and Roman Antiquities. He died at Naples in 1770.

NOLLI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, the father of Carlo Nolli, was a native of Italy, and flourished about the year 1755. He was an architect by profession, but he engraved nineteen sheets of plans and views of buildings in Rome in 1748.

NOLLIN, (or NOLLIN,) J. B., a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1657. He studied in Paris under N. de Poilly, and in Italy, where he executed some plates after Annibale Carracci, Nicholas Poussin, and other masters. He engraved several of the prints in a work entitled, 'Vues, plans, coupes et élévations de Versailles.' He died in 1725.

NOLPE, PIETER, a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at the Hague about 1601. Of his works as a painter little is known apparently beyond a 'Dutch Landscape' in the Copenhagen Gallery; but we have several prints by him. They are usually begun with the point, and finished with the burin. His best productions are his landscapes. He usually signed his prints with his name at length, joining the initials P. and N. together, and in a few instances with this monogram N. or N., only. He is said to have engraved as early as 1616, and as late as 1670. The following are esteemed his best works:

The Portrait of Johann Adler Salvius, Swedish Minister Plenipotentiary.

A set of eight Cavaliers; etched.

A set of eighteen etchings of Beggars; in the style of P. Quast.

St. Peter delivered from prison; after J. V. Vucht. Judah and Tamar, in a large landscape; from his own design. The same figures were afterwards introduced into another landscape, of a smaller size.

NON, DOM. VIV. DE. See DENON.

NON, J. C. R. DE SAINT. See SAINT NON.

NONOTTE, (or NONNOTTE,) DONAT. This painter was born at Besançon in 1707, and became a favourite pupil of Lemoine, who employed him on many of his works, and whose biography he eventually wrote. The death of his protector, the Duke d'Antin, prevented his accomplishing a long-desired journey to Rome. He was made painter to the King, and a member of the Academy of Paris in 1741. In 1754 he was appointed painter to the city of Lyons, where he established a free school of design, the model of all subsequent institutions of the kind in France. He published a 'Complete Treatise on Painting,' in four parts, and was in a literary capacity Associate of the Academies of Rouen and Lyons. He died at the latter city in 1785. His historical pictures are of the style of his age, displaying an abuse of allegory. One of them is the 'Taking of Besançon by the Protestants.' But after the earlier portion of his career, he abandoned this branch of art for portraiture. Among his portraits we may name:

Robert le Lorrain, sculptor (engraved by J. N. Tardieu).

Gentil Bernard, (engraved by Daullé).

NONZIO, (or ANNUNZIO,) an Italian miniaturist, was born at Trent, but lived and worked at Milan in the last half of the 18th century. His daughter, Fede Galizia (q.v.), was born at Trent in 1575.

NOOMS, RENIER, (or REMIGIUS,) commonly called ZEEMAN, was born at Amsterdam about 1612. Very little is known of his life. It is supposed that at one time he worked with the elder Willem van de Velde. He resided for a long time in Berlin, where he was painter to the Elector Frederick William; he also visited England and France. On etchings published by him in Amsterdam, we find the dates 1652, 1654, and 1656; on others published in Paris, 1650 and 1652. He also etched three plates of the naval fights between the English, French, and Dutch, which took place in 1673. The paintings of Nooms betray the influence chiefly of Backhuysen and Claude. The date of his death is not known, but it must have been later than 1673. Isaak and Enoch Zeeman, who were working in London about the middle of the 18th century, were most likely related to Nooms. Paul Zeeman was the son of Enoch. (See ZEEMAN.) Among the better works of Nooms we may name:

Amsterdam. Museum. Sea-fight near Leghorn, 14th March, 1653.

View of Amsterdam.

Berlin. Museum. A Quiet Sea.

Seashore with Boats.

Paris. Louvre. View of the old Louvre, from the South bank of the Seine (a masterpiece; etched by Méryon).

Vienna. Belvedere. A Sea-piece.

The following is a list of his plates:

Two plates of Block-houses.

Landscape with Canal and Boats.

The Dutch Herring Fleet.

A set of eight plates of Shipping; designed and engraved by Remy Zeeman. 1632.

A set of four Views in Amsterdam. 1636.

A set of four Sea-ports in Holland; published at Amsterdam in 1656.

The Four Elements; in four plates; Reinier Seeman, fecit. Two Views in Paris, one of the Faubourg St. Marceau, the other of the Gate of St. Bernard.

A set of twelve Views of Shipping; published in London by Ar Tooker.

NOORDE, CORNELIS VAN, painter and engraver, was born at Haarlem in 1731. He was the scholar successively of F. Decker and F. H. Jalgersma, and afterwards became master of the Haarlem school of design. He died in 1795. Among his works may be named:

His own portrait, in chalk and Indian ink.

" " a woodcut.

Portrait of Frans Hals, a mezzotint.

A View of Haarlem, engraving after J. Van Eyck.

A Landscape with Cow (etching).

Van Noorde signed himself C. V. N.

NOORDERWIEL, HENDRIK, a painter on glass, who was one of the founders of the 'Pictura' fraternity at the Hague in 1656.

NOORDT, JAN VAN, was a painter of the 17th century, who produced emblematical subjects, bathing nymphs, and also portraits, some of which have been engraved. Strutt cites him as an engraver, on account of an etching dated 1645, of a 'Landscape with Ruins,' probably after P. Lastmann. Bartsch mentions another after P. van Laer; and the portrait of Prince Baltazar Carlos of Spain, inscribed, 'Juan de Noort fecit,' is probably by him.

NOORT, ADAM VAN, painter, was born at Antwerp in 1557. He was the son of Lambert van Noort, and shares with Otho Van Veen and others the honour of guiding the youthful steps of Rubens. The facts of his life are obscure. He has sometimes been represented as a brutalized victim of dissipation, but considerable doubt hangs about many of the traditions to that effect. He is said to be the author of the 'Tribute of St. Peter,' in the church of St. James at Antwerp, in which case he must have had a genius for colour only inferior to that of Rubens. Van Noort's daughter became the wife of Jordaens, who was his pupil. Pictures under the name of Van Noort are very rare, although in his long life he must have produced a great number. They pass, no doubt, as a rule, under the names of his various pupils. Van Noort died at Antwerp in 1641. Among his works we may name:

Brussels.	Gallery.	Christ blessing the Children.
Ghent.	St. Michael's Church.	The Cure of the Lame Man.

A 'Standard-bearer' at Munich, now tentatively ascribed to Hendrik Goltzius, is perhaps by Adam van Noort.

NOORT, ARTHUS VAN, a painter on glass, who flourished at Nymegen in the 16th century.

NOORT, LAMBERT VAN, historical painter, was born at Amersfort about 1520, and became a master of the guild at Antwerp in 1547. He was the father of Adam van Noort. He died in 1571. In the Antwerp Museum there is a 'Nativity' by him, signed Lambertus a Noort, Inven: pingebat Ao. 1555, as well as fifteen other pictures. At Brussels the Museum possesses an 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' and a 'Descent from the Cross.' Lambert designed the windows in St. John's Church at Gouda, and himself painted two of them, which were dated 1551 and 1559. He also practised with success as an architect.

NOORT, PIETER VAN, a little known Dutch painter of the 17th century, who painted fish and still-life.

NOORTIG, JAN, (or NOORTIJS), a native of Friesland, and painter of genre subjects in the manner of Bega. According to Kramm he was an amateur. He flourished about 1660.

NOOTT, WEMMER, a native of Arnhem, who flourished between 1670 and 1750. He lived chiefly at Emmerik, where he painted perspectives, and excelled in the imitation of sculptured surfaces.

NOP, GERRIT, an obscure painter, who was born at Haarlem late in the 16th century. He lived for a time in Germany and Italy, where he painted history and portraits. He died in 1622.

NORBERT, PATER. See BAUMGARTNER, JOH.

NORBLIN DE LA GOURDAINE, JEAN-PIERRE, a painter and etcher, was born at Misy, near Sens, in Burgundy, in 1745. He was a pupil of Casanova. In 1774 he visited Poland, and founded a school for painters at Warsaw; he also became court-painter to King Stanislaus, by whom he was subsequently knighted. He returned to France in 1804, and died in 1830. His most important works, seventy-seven etchings of scenes from the Bible, heads, and landscapes, are in the style of Rembrandt. He signed his plates with the initials N; N. f.; N. 1776. W. (that is Warsowiae), or a monogram.

NORBLIN DE LA GOURDAINE, SEBASTIEN LOUIS GUILLAUME, the son of Jean-Pierre and an historical painter, was born at Warsaw in 1796. Taken to Paris when young, he studied under Regnault and Blondel, and in the Ecole des Beaux Arts. In 1823 he obtained the second, and in 1825 the first, grand prix; which enabled him to pursue his studies in Rome. He returned to France in 1882. There are several of his works in the church of St. Louis en l'Isle, in Paris, and the Orleans Museum possesses his 'Death of Ugolino.'

NORCINO (or NORCINI). See PARASOLE.

NORDEN, FREDERICK LUDWIG, a Danish naval captain and draughtsman, was born at Glückstadt in 1708. He travelled for Christian VI. in Egypt and Nubia, and coming to England, he published with his illustrations, 'Travels in Egypt and Nubia,' and 'Ruins at Thebes' (1741). He died in 1742. There is another edition in French (Copenhagen; 1755), in which the plates are engraved by M. Tycher.

NORDEN, JOHN, an English artist, was an eminent engraver of topographical subjects. Anthony Wood conjectures, with great probability, that he was the author of several tracts which he enumerates, and thinks he was born in Wiltshire, about the year 1546. He was a commoner of Hart Hall, Oxford, in 1564, and took the degree of Master of Arts in 1573. He resided at Hendon, in Middlesex, was patronized by Lord Burleigh, and his son, Robert, Earl of Salisbury, and was surveyor of the King's lands in 1614. He died about 1626. His principal work, as an engraver, was his 'Speculum Britanniae,' or an Historical and Topographical Description of Middlesex and Hertfordshire, with a frontispiece and maps. He also engraved a 'View of London' in 1609, with a representation of the Lord Mayor's Show; and a series of costumes.

NORGATE, EDWARD, "limner," was the son of Dr. Robert Norgate, master of Bennet College, Cambridge, where he was born. He was brought up by Nicholas Felton, Bishop of Ely, who married his mother. He showed early a strong inclination for Heraldry and Illumination. As he became not only one of the best artists in the latter branch of art, but also an excellent judge of pictures by the old masters, he was sent to Italy by the Earl of Arundel to make purchases for him in that country. Fuller speaks of him as the best illuminator of his time, and he became Windsor Herald and Clerk of the Signet. Fuller says that he died at the Herald's Office the 23rd December, 1650, but Dalway says that his 'Miniature, or the Art of Limning,' in his own hand, is dated 1654. Among his best works were a letter from James I. to the 'Sophy' of Persia, and the letters-patent appointing the Earl of Stirling Governor of Nova Scotia. The latter was found in the last century, and was at first attributed to Van Dyck.

NORIEGA, PEDRO, a Spanish historical painter of little note, who was living at Madrid in 1658.

NORMAND, CHARLES PIERRE JOSEPH, designer, engraver, and architect, was born at Goyencourt (Lourme) in 1765. He was instructed by M. Thierry and Gizors, and in 1792 obtained a prize and went to Rome, where he pursued his studies. He exhibited in the Louvre in 1800 and 1802, published a number of works with plates, and prepared others for the 'Annales du Musée,' 'Les vies des peintres, par Landon,' and 'Nouveau parallèle des ordres d'architecture des Grecs, des Romains, et des auteurs modernes' (1819). Among his other plates may be mentioned:

The Miracle of the Loaves; after Raphael.

The Ceiling of the Sistine Chapel; after Michelangelo.

He died in Paris in 1840.

NORMAND, LOUIS MARIE, son of the above, was taught design by Lafitte, and engraving by his father. He was born in Paris in 1789. Besides the plates for a large number of books, he engraved the 'Marriage at Cana,' after Paul Veronese, and other important works.

NORSINI (or NORSINO). See PARASOLE.

NORTHCOTE, JAMES, an English historical and portrait painter, was born at Plymouth in 1746. His father was a watchmaker, and he for some time assisted in the same business, but with his whole mind bent upon being a painter. The fame of his countryman, Joshua Reynolds, inflamed his desire; and the kind view that some of his townsmen took of his attempts in art, and their friendship or acquaintance with the President, introduced Northcote to his notice. In his 25th year he was permitted to enter the studio of Sir Joshua, and he remained in the employment of that master for about five years. In 1777 he went to Rome, to see, as his biographer says, 'if fame reported truly of the prime works of the chiefs of the calling.' The journey at least enabled him to talk of Michelangelo, Raphael, and Titian. This he never ceased doing, and his productions served as commentaries. Northcote returned to England in 1780, and applied himself to the long life's work which did not come to an end till more than fifty years had passed. Among his best pictures may be named, 'The Death of Wat Tyler' (City of London Gallery); 'The Murder of the Children in the Tower'; 'The Entry of Bolingbroke and Richard II. ;' 'Hubert and Arthur'; 'The Earl of Argyll asleep'; 'Lady Jane Grey'; 'Prospero and Miranda'; 'A Vulture and Snake'; 'A Lion Hunt,' and some others of the like kind, in which he showed a considerable gift for animal painting. His portraits are numerous; but whatever veneration he felt for Titian, or for his master Sir Joshua, he failed to emulate their works. In 1796 he published a series of ten engravings from his own pictures, the subject being the contrasted careers of 'A Diligent' and 'A Dissipated Mayservant,' a sort of female version of Hogarth's 'Idle and Industrious Apprentice.' It is a very feeble performance. There is a portrait of Northcote, by himself, in the National Portrait Gallery, and another in the gallery of Haarlem. In the former collection there are also portraits by him of Jenner and Lord Exmouth. Northcote was elected A.R.A. in 1786; R.A. in 1787; and died in 1831.

Northcote exercised the pen as well as the pencil. His earliest known literary productions are some papers published in 'The Artist,' entitled 'Originality of Painting'; 'Imitators and Collectors'; 'A Letter from a discontented Genius'; 'Character of John Opie'; 'Second Letter of a discontented Genius'; 'On the Imitation of the Stage in Painting'; 'The History of the Slighted Beauty'; 'The Dream of a Painter, an allegory.' His most important performances as a writer, are his 'Life of Sir Joshua Reynolds,' containing anecdotes of many distinguished personages, and a brief analysis; to which are added, 'Varieties on Art,' published in 1813, in quarto. A supplement appeared in 1815; and an octavo edition in 1819, with considerable additions. In 1828 he published an octavo volume of 'One hundred Fables,' original and selected, with engravings on wood from his own designs. In 1830 appeared the 'Life of Titian,' and, after his decease, a second volume of Fables, published under the title of 'The Artists' Book of Fables,' and illustrated with numerous woodcuts, executed under the direction of Harvey. The curious process Northcote made use of in designing these cuts has been often described. He clipped figures of animals out of all kinds of books, papers, &c., and selecting such as fitted the fable to be embellished, pasted them down to paper in the required places, filling in backgrounds with his pencil. The designs thus made were freely interpreted by the engraver.

NORTHEN, ADOLF, battle painter, was born at Münden in Hanover, in 1828, studied from 1847 to 1851 at the Academy of Düsseldorf. In his first productions he painted scenes from the wars of Napoleon I., and brought himself especially into notice by his 'Battle of Waterloo' (1855), which is in possession of the King of Hanover, and at a later date he executed several lively and characteristic sketches from the Franco-German war. He died at Düsseldorf in 1876. The following are some of his best pictures:

Guerillas with captured French Soldiers. 1852.
The Skirmish on the Gôhrde. Hildesheim Mus. 1852.
Napoleon's Retreat from Russia.
Episode at Gravelotte.
The Prussian Guards at Königgrätz.
Attack of the 16th Uhlán Regiment, near Vionville.

NORTON, CHRISTOPHER, an English engraver in the latter half of the 18th century. He studied in the St. Martin's Lane Academy, and at Rome in 1769, gaining a Society of Arts' premium the same year. There are plates by him after Pillement, Vaudevelde, Canot, &c.

NOTER. See DE NOTER.

NOTER, AUGUSTE HERMAN DE, the son of P. F. Noter, was born at Ghent in 1806. He painted landscapes and scenery in winter in the style of the Wouvermans. He died in 1839.

NOTER, PIERRE FRANÇOIS DE, was born at Walhem, near Malines. He was the son of an architect and a pupil of Van Ghele the sculptor, but in 1811 devoted himself entirely to painting, in which he rose to some eminence. His pictures represent landscapes, shipping, and above all streets and the interiors of churches. In 1824 he was a member of the Academy of Amsterdam, and Professor in that of Ghent. In most of the Museums of Belgium, Holland, and the north of France his pictures are to be found. He died in 1842.

NOTERMANN, EMANUEL, animal and genre painter, was born at Oudenarde in 1808, and studied in the Academy at Ghent, but in 1830 he became a scholar of Maes-Canini, and finished his art education under Peter Kremer. His paintings represent domestic scenes by day- and candle-light, consecrations of churches, carnivals, &c. He died in 1863. His best known works are: 'A Spaniel,' and 'A Poacher bewailing the Loss of his Dog.' Among his etchings, which are rare, 'The Death of Anton Van Dyck,' after P. Kremer, is the best.

NOTHNAGEL, JOHANN ANDREAS BENJAMIN, a German painter and engraver, was born at Buch, in the principality of Saxe-Coburg, in 1729. He resided at Frankfort, and worked at the manufacture of wall-papers under Lentzner, after whose death he married his widow and continued the business himself. He acquired considerable reputation as a painter of landscapes with merry-makings, in the style of Teniers; but he is now more known as an engraver. His best productions are a number of heads and busts, in which he has imitated the style of Rembrandt with great success. His plates amount to sixty-five, marked with N. and a nail, or B.N.F. He died at Frankfort in 1804.

NOTTI, GHERARDO DALLE. See HONTHORST.

NOUAILHIER, (or NOYLIER,) was the name of a family of enamel painters of Limoges from the 16th to the 19th century:—COULY, or COLIN, was burgomaster from 1513-31. JACQUES was born in 1605, and flourished under Louis XIV.; he painted the 'Adoration of the Magi,' after Van Aken, in the Louvre at Paris. PIERRE, was born in 1657, and flourished 1686—1717. JEAN-BAPTISTE was born in 1752, and died in 1804. A collection of the works of these artists is in possession of M. de Lille-Loture at Orleans.

NOVA, PECINO DE. There were several artists at Bergamo of this name. Tassi quotes documents which prove that Pecino and PIERO DE NOVA were two different men. The former was the son of ALBERTO DE NOVA, a painter. Pecino worked at intervals at Santa Maria Maggiore, Bergamo, from 1363 to 1381. In 1375 Piero, who was probably the brother of Pecino, Pecino, and Michele de Roncho, a Milanese, were all working in conjunction at the above church. Fragments of frescoes by one of the Novas can still be seen in the belfry, together with a 'Virgin and Saints,' 'The Epiphany,' and other Scripture subjects. On the front of a house in the Contrada Sant' Andrea, Bergamo, some remains of frescoes by one of the Novas can also be seen. We may also name two altar-pieces at Bergamo:

Virgin and Child, with SS. Catharine, Francis, and donors.

Virgin and Child, with SS. Bartholomew and Agatha.

There are other works of theirs in the Locchis Carrara Gallery.

Pecino de Nova was still working at Bergamo in 1399, and was buried there 6th June, 1403.

NOVARA. See RICCÌ.

NOVELIERS, PIERRE. In 1605, a painter of this name was appointed conservator of the pictures in the palaces of Brussels and Tervueren.

NOVELIERS, SALOMON, son of the last-named. In 1618 he succeeded to the office of his father, and was also named painter to the court. In 1613 he was commissioned to catalogue the pictures left by Charles de Croy, Duc d'Arsohot. A certain DAVID NOVELIERS is supposed to have been a second son of Pierre.

NOVELLANUS. See NEUVEL.

NOVELLARA. See ORSI.

NOVELLI, FRANCESCO, the elder, an engraver, was born at Venice in 1764. After learning the principles of his art under his father, he attended the Academy of his native place for some time, and then went to Rome. In conjunction with Cumano he etched the works of Rembrandt with such skill that his copies have been often mistaken for the originals; he also imitated the designs of Mantegna with success, and engraved that artist's 'Madonna della Vittoria' (about 1800). The date of his death is not recorded. He was a member of several academies. He signed his prints with a monogram in a circle. His son of the same name was also an engraver.

NOVELLI, PIETRO, painter and engraver, called, from his birthplace, MONREALESE, or MORREALESE, was born in 1603. He resided for a long time in Palermo, but in later life, it is said, he visited Rome, which city, as well as the former, possesses several pictures from his hand. He was living up to 1660. His masterpiece is the 'Marriage at Cana,' in the refectory of the Benedictines at Mon-reale. Novelli's style is a little like that of Caravaggio. His life was published by Agostino Gallo (Palermo: 1829).

NOVELLO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, a painter of Castelfranco, and pupil of the younger Palma. In the neighbourhood of Castelfranco are some good altar-pieces by him. He was the master of Pietro Domini. He was born in 1578, and died in 1652.

NOYLIER. See NOUAILHIER.

NUERI, AVANZIO, painter, was born at Castello, near Rome, studied under Pomerancio, and was employed by Sixtus V. His works are to be found in the churches of Rome. He was born in 1562, and died in 1629.

NUIJEN, WILJANAND JAN JOSEPH, (NUYEN,) painter and designer, a scholar of A. Schelfhout, was born in 1813, and died at the Hague in 1839. In his sixteenth year he exhibited a landscape at Ghent, for which he received a prize; some time after he obtained a first prize from the Felix Meritis society at Amsterdam. In 1838 a winter scene, which he exhibited at Ghent, attracted attention, and led to his nomination as a member of the Academy of the Fine Arts at the Hague. He was also a member of that of Antwerp and of the Netherlands Institute. His premature death prevented the full development of his talents. There is a laudspace with ruins by him in the Amsterdam Museum, which is considered one of his finest works.

NUMAN, HERMANUS, painter and etcher, was born at Ezingen, near Groeningen, in 1744. He first designed and painted birds and landscapes, but devoted himself later on to portraiture in oil and pastel, and studied engraving under Le Bas at Paris. He produced many portraits at Amsterdam, and published in 1797 a series of etchings representing Dutch country houses. He died in 1820.

NUNEHAM, SIMON HARCOURT, Viscount, was an amateur etcher. There are various landscape plates by him, some after Paul Sandby, and some 'Views of the Ruins at Stanton Harcourt.' He became the second Earl Harcourt, and died in 1809.

NUNES, PHILIP, (or FRA PHILIPPE DAS CHAZAS,) a Portuguese artist, born at Villa Real de Tras-os-montes. He entered holy orders in 1591, and took the name of Fra Philippe das Chazas (of the wounds). He was one of the most celebrated artists in Portugal in his time, and author of 'Arte de pintura, symetria e perspectiva,' 1615.

NUÑEZ, JUAN, one of the earliest of the painters of Seville, lived at the commencement of the 16th century, and was a scholar of Sanchez de Castro, and married Ana de Castro, a relation of that master. The greater number of his works have been destroyed. In the cathedral of Seville there is still a picture by him representing the 'Virgin with the dead Christ in her arms, accompanied by St. Michael and St. Vincent Martyr;' in the foreground are several figures on their knees adoring the Virgin. This picture Cean Bermudez compares to the work of Albert Dürer.

NUÑEZ, PEDRO, was born at Madrid early in the 17th century. He studied under Juan de Soto, and afterwards at Rome, it is said under Guercino. On his return he painted a series of the Spanish sovereigns for the theatre of the Alcazar at Madrid. In 1625, by command of Prieto, General of the Order of Mercy, he executed some works for the cloister of the convent of the order. He died at Madrid in 1654, having unsuccessfully competed with Angelo Nardi for the post of King's painter.

NUÑEZ DE VILLAVICENCIO, PEDRO, a chevalier of the order of St. John, was born at Seville in 1635, of an illustrious family. He studied painting for amusement, and placed himself under the direction of Murillo, to whom he became the most attached friend. Such was his progress in the art, that from an amusement it became his constant occupation. As a knight of the order of St. John, he was obliged to perform the usual expedition (las carabanas); and on his arrival at Malta he placed himself under Matteo Preti, called il Calabrese, who was also a knight of the same order; and with him he increased his knowledge, particularly in chiaroscuro. On his return to Spain he rejoined Murillo, who loved him tenderly, and for whom he felt such attachment and veneration that he always resided with him. The two conjointly founded the Academy of Seville. The master died in the arms of his scholar. Villavicencio, like Antolinez, Tobar, and Meneses Osorio, approached so near to the manner of Murillo in painting children, that it is sometimes difficult to decide between the two; he was also an excellent portrait painter. He died at Seville in 1700. There is a picture by him at Alton Towers, the seat of Lord Shrewsbury, partaking of the dark manner of Calabrese. It represents the Virgin sewing, and Joseph embracing the child Jesus. The Madrid Museum contains a picture by him of 'Boys playing with Dice;' and the Suermond Gallery at Cologne had a 'Child Jesus, in a Landscape.' The Carmen Calzado, at Seville, has also some genre pictures and portraits by him, including his own portrait.

NUNZIATA, TOTO (or ANTONIO DEL), painter, was a pupil of Ridolfo Ghirlandaio. He is said to have visited England in 1531.

NUSBIEGEL, JOHANN, (or NUSSBIEGEL), an engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1740, was a son and scholar of GEORG PAUL NUSBIEGEL (who died 1776). He studied perspective under Stettner, and attended the Academy at Nuremberg under Preissler. He engraved several plates and portraits for Lavater's works, and executed some others after the designs of Chodowiecki. One of his best plates is the 'Death of Schwerio,' after Berger. He died in 1818.

NUTI, GIULIA. See under MARINI, ANT.

NUTSCHIDEL. See NEUFCHATEL.

NUTTER, WILLIAM, an English engraver, who studied under J. Smith and Bartolozzi, and practised in the stippled manner. He was born in 1754. There are plates by him after Reynolds, Morland, Westall, Hoppner, Wheatley, and Russell. He died in Somers Town in 1802.

NUTTING, JOSEPH, was an English engraver, who resided in London at the beginning of the 17th century. He was principally employed by the booksellers, and executed among others the following portraits:

Charles I., with the persons who suffered in his cause.

Mary Capel, Duchess of Beaufort; after Walker.

Matthew Mead, father of Dr. Mead.

Sir John Cheke.

Lucius Cary, Viscount Falkland.

Robert Pierpoint, Earl of Kingston.

George St. Loo, Commissioner for the Navy.

Henry Sacheverel, D.D.

Johu Locke.

Aaron Hill.

G. Parker, the Almanack-maker.

Johannes Jacobus Scheuchzerus; after Melchior Fuslinus.

William Elder, Engraver; after Faithorne.

Dr. Monk, Bishop of Hereford, who died in 1661.

NUVOLONE, CARLO FRANCESCO, (called PANFILO), was the eldest son of Panfilo Nuvolone, and was born at Milan in 1608. He received his first instruction from his father, but was afterwards a scholar of Giulio Cesare Procaccini. He abandoned the principles of that master to imitate the works of Guido Reni, and some of his pictures, particularly those of the Virgin, approach so near to the style of the latter, that he acquired the soubriquet of 'the Guido of Lombardy.' In the oratory adjoining the church of San Vincenzio at Piacenza is his 'Purification of the Virgin,' considered his best work. In the church of San Vittore, at Milan, is a fine picture by him of 'St. Peter's Miracle at the Gate of the Temple.' Other works of his are in public buildings at Parma and Cremona. He also painted portraits with great success. In the year 1649, when the Queen of Spain visited Milan, he was selected to paint her portrait. He died in 1661.

NUVOLONE, GIUSEPPE, also called PANFILO, was the younger brother of Carlo Francesco Nuvolone, and was born at Milan in 1619. Possessed of a fervid imagination, and great facility of hand, his works form a striking contrast to those of his brother. During a long life, he painted many altar-pieces for the churches at Brescia, and other cities in the states of Venice. A 'St. Jerome' in the church of San Tommaso at Piacenza is regarded as one of his best productions. Towards the latter part of his life his powers became languid and feeble, which is not extraordinary, as he continued to paint till his eighty-fourth year. He died in 1703.

NUVOLONE, PANFILO, was a native of Cremona, and flourished about the year 1608. He was one of the ablest disciples of Giovanni Battista Trotti, and painted history in the style of that master. In the church of the monastery of SS. Domenico and Lazzaro at Milan, is one of his principal works, representing the 'Rich Man and Lazarus;' and in the cupola of the church of La Passione, the 'Assumption of the Virgin.' Zani places his death in 1651.

NUYEN. See NUJEN.

NUZI, ALLEGRETTO, (or NUCCI DI NUZIO), called ALLEGRETTO, or GRITTO, DA FABRIANO, was born at Fabriano in the 14th century, and first appears on the Register of Florence in 1346, at which date he may be said to have brought to that city the manner of the Umbrian school. Nothing is known of the details of his life, and the earliest picture signed and dated by him is a 'Madonna and Child, between the Archangel Michael and St. Ursula,' with the six donors kneeling on each side of the throne, which bears the date of 1365. In 1369 he executed the altar-piece now in the sacristy of the cathedral of Macerata; and in 1372 he completed the 'Virgin and Child,' now in the possession of Signor Romaldo Fornari, of Fabriano; the same gentleman also possesses an 'Ecce Homo' that can be assigned to Allegretto. In the Gallery at Berlin are two panels by this artist, viz., a 'Virgin and Child, between SS. Catherine and Bartholomew,' and a 'Crucifixion.' Crowe and Cavalcaselle have attributed to this artist an altar-piece now in the sacristy of the Fabriano cathedral, containing the 'Virgin and Child, with SS. Bartholomew, John the Evangelist, and Mary Magdalene;' as also the 'St. Augustine between SS. Nicholas of Tolentino and Stephen,' in the sacristy of Sant' Agostino, in the same city. According to Ricci, Allegretto is the author of the frescoes in Santa Lucia of Fabriano, which represent the 'Death and Coronation of the Virgin,' the 'Crucifixion,' and other sacred subjects, executed between 1345 and 1349. Other paintings by him are to be found at Cancelli, near Fabriano, in which church he was buried in 1385. He signed his pictures, Allegrettus Nutii de Fabriano.

NUZZI, MARIO, called MARIO DA' FIORI, or MARIO DELLA PENNA, was born at Penna, in the diocese of Fermo, in 1603, and was a scholar of his uncle Tommaso Salini, a flower painter. He chiefly resided at Rome, where his pictures of fruit and flowers were held in the highest estimation. But from using something of a noxious quality in the preparation of his colours, his works soon lost their original freshness, and many of them have almost entirely perished. He was in 1657 made a member of the Academy of St. Luke, and died at Rome in 1673. He was much employed in painting garlands to decorate figures of the Virgin, Saints, and other religious subjects. The church of Sant' Andrea della Valle at Rome contains a wreath of flowers painted by him round Andrea Camassei's portrait of St. Cajetan. A 'Bird Concert' was engraved after him in mezzotint by Earlom.

NYMEGEN, (or NIMEGEN, or NIMWEGEN,) DIONIJS VAN, son and scholar of Elias, was born at Rotterdam in 1705. He painted similar subjects to those by his father, and also excelled in portraiture. It is related that at the age of eighty-one he painted, without the aid of spectacles, a perfect likeness of a young lady. His crayon drawings are also much esteemed. He died in 1798 or 1799.

NYMEGEN, ELIAS VAN, was born at Nymegen in 1667, and was taught the first elements of the art by his elder brother, who was an indifferent painter of flowers and portraits; but on the death of his instructor, when he was little more than fourteen years of age, he resolved to dispense with further assistance, and applied himself to the study of nature till he became a tolerably correct designer of the figure, and acquired a competent acquaintance with perspective and architecture. He also excelled in painting landscapes and flowers. His principal occupation was ornamenting the ceilings and saloons of mansions in Holland, with emblematical and historical subjects, embellished with bas-reliefs and other accessories. His talents recommended him to the patronage of the Princess of Orange, who employed him in adorning the apartments of her different palaces, in which he was occupied several years. He died at Rotterdam in 1755.

NYMEGEN, GERARD VAN, was the son of Dionijs, and was born at Rotterdam in 1735. He was instructed by his father, and at a very early age painted the portrait of Prince William V., which was engraved by Beauvarlet; but he applied himself more particularly to landscape, in which he made the works of Ruysdael, Everdingen, and Pynacker his models. His best pieces are mountainous landscapes, and forest scenery with rivulets, ornamented with animals and figures. He painted many portraits, and made drawings and copies after Jacob Ruysdael, Wynants, Hackaert, and Hobbema. There exist twenty-one etchings of landscapes by him. He died at Rotterdam in 1808.

NYMEGEN, SUSANNA CATHARINA VAN, born VIJGH, the wife of Gerard van Nymegen, has left several drawings of landscape of some merit. She died in 1805.

NYMEGEN, TOBIAS VAN, the younger brother of Elias van Nymegen, was born at Nymegen about the year 1670. His technical education was similar to that of Elias; and he pursued the same branch of the art. He was invited to the court of the Elector Palatine, in whose service he remained till his death, the date of which is not ascertained.

NYMEGEN, (or NIMWEGEN,) WILLEM VAN, of Haarlem, was admitted as master into the Guild of St. Luke, at Delft, in 1684. He was celebrated for imitating engravings with the pen. He died in 1698.

NYPOORT, JUSTUS VAN (or VAN DER), painter and etcher, a little-known artist, who is, nevertheless, of some importance. He painted scenes of peasant life, often humorous, several of which he etched in the style of Ostade. He flourished about 1680. Plates:

OAKLEY, OCTAVIUS, a painter in water-colours, was born in 1800. After having practised as a portrait painter at Leamington and at Derby, he came to London in 1842, was elected an Associate of the Water-colour Society, and a full member in 1844. His pictures consist chiefly of rustic figures, groups of gypsies, &c., and in his later years of landscapes. He began to exhibit at the Royal Academy in 1826, and ceased in 1860. Most of his contributions to that exhibition were portraits. Oakley died at Bayswater in March, 1867.

OAKMAN, JOHN, an English wood engraver, born at Hendon, who practised about the middle of the 18th century. He was chiefly employed on illustrations for children's books. In his later years he turned ballad and novel writer, and died in indigence in 1793.

OBACH, KASPAR, painter, engraver, and lithographer, was born at Zurich in 1807, and was a pupil of Füssli. He went to Stuttgart in 1825, and made many landscape sketches in pencil, which he reproduced in water-colours or lithographed. He died at Stuttgart in 1865.

OBEEET. A good Flemish picture of still-life (fruit, oysters, and goblets) in the Madrid Museum bears this name.

OBERMANN, ANTONIS, painter and etcher, was born at Amsterdam in 1781, and died in the same city in 1850. He painted landscapes, horses and cattle, flowers and fruit, and was a member of the Academy of his native place. At Haarlem there is a 'Vase of Flowers' by him. He etched a series of twenty 'Studies of cattle, sheep,' &c.

OBERTO, FRANCESCO DA, an artist who painted at Genoa in 1368. His name appears in the Register of Painters of Genoa immediately before that of Lodovico Brea, but nothing is known of his life.

OBIDOS, JOSEPHA DE, a Portuguese artist, was the daughter of Balthazar Gomes Figuiera, said to have also been a painter, and was born at Seville about 1630. She must have studied painting and other arts in Spain; but she was still young when her father returned to Obidos, in Portugal, taking her with him. She painted in that country a number of pictures in oil for the churches; also a portrait of Marie Françoise Isabell de Savoie, which was sent to Victor Amedée, Duc de Savoie, before their marriage. She likewise painted flowers, fruit, &c., and engraved; for in the 'Statutes of the University of Coimbra, 1654,' there is an engraving signed 'Josepha Ayala (her mother's name) Obidos, 1653.' In the church of Saint Peter at Obidos, where she died, and in which she was buried in 1684, there are many of her pictures; also in the Academy at Lishon, at Evora, &c. A 'St. John,' described as being in the manner of Velvet Breughel, is dated 1680.

OBREGON, PEDRO DE, the younger, was born at Madrid about 1597. He was a disciple of Vincencio Carducho, and proved a reputable painter of history and genre subjects, particularly in pictures of an easel size, of which there are several in the private collections of Madrid. Of his larger works, Palomino particularly notices his picture of 'The Trinity,' in the convent of La Merced, and 'The Immaculate Conception,' in the church of Santa Cruz. He died at Madrid in 1659. He was an excellent engraver; as were also his two sons DIEGO and MARCOS OBREGON, the former of whom, in 1683-4, prepared thirty-six plates of Birds and Beasts to illustrate a work by Andres de Valdecebro; also other engravings in 1687 and 1699. PEDRO DE OBREGON, 'the elder,' was a miniaturist and illuminator of books of devotion, who worked for the cathedral of Toledo, in 1564; but there are no further particulars of him. He may have been the father of the younger Pedro. Marcos de Obregon became priest, and lived until 1720.

OBRY, ADRIEN, a French designer and painter of windows, who was at work in the year 1532 at the Chateau d'Anxy.

OBRY, JEAN, was a French miniaturist of some talent, who embellished many manuscripts about the year 1484. He was a native of Amiens.

OCCHIALI, DAGLI. See FERRANTINI; also WITTEL.

OCH, GEORGES, an obscure French landscape painter, who flourished at the beginning of the 19th century. He was a pupil of Ciceri. His chief work was a view of Paris from the towers of Notre Dame.

OCHLICH, JOHANN CONRAD, a painter of landscapes, animals, and portraits, who flourished at Nuremberg at the end of the 18th century. His education was partly gained at Munich. His works were mostly copies from the old masters.

* OCHOA, FRANCISCO, a painter of Seville and pupil of Murillo. He is believed to be identical with Francisco Antolinez y Sarbia (q. v.).

OCHS, FRIEDRICH, was born in Basle, and studied in Paris under Augustin. He migrated to St. Petersburg, where, about 1812, he had a considerable reputation. His miniatures were good and expressive likenesses, and agreeable in colour. The date of his birth and death are unknown.

OCHTERVELT, JACOB, (sometimes wrongly called JAN, and UCHTERVELT or ACHTERVELT,) was born perhaps at Rotterdam. In 1667 he was a candidate for the presidency of the Brotherhood of St. Luke in that city. In 1672 he was still working there. In 1674 he painted the portraits of the Regents of the lepers' hospital at Amsterdam. He died before 1710. He formed himself on the examples of Metsu and Terburg, more especially of the latter. In some respects his best work does not fall far below the level of the last-named artist. Good pictures by Ochtervelt, in good condition, are, however, very scarce. The following list includes most of them:

O'CONNOR, JAMES A., an Irish landscape painter, born at Dublin in 1793. He was brought up as an engraver by his father, who followed that profession. In 1813 he came to London with his friend, Francis Danby, but his means were soon exhausted, and he made his way on foot to Bristol, whence he contrived to get a passage back to Dublin. In 1822 he returned to England, and from that time he chiefly resided in London, with the exception of visits to Brussels, Paris, and Rhenish Prussia. But his abilities were not recognized, and he had a hard struggle for existence. He occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1822; also at Suffolk Street. He died, in embarrassed circumstances, at Brompton in 1841. There are eight of his pictures in the Kensington Museum. In style they may be classed with the work of Richard Wilson.

OCTAVIEN, FRANÇOIS, a French painter, was born at Rome about 1695. He was received into the Paris Academy in 1725, as a genre painter. His reception picture, 'The Fair at Vesoul,' is now in the Louvre. He died in Paris in 1736. No further particulars of his life are known.

ODAM, GIROLAMO, was an artist who resided at Rome, and distinguished himself at the beginning of the 18th century as a painter, sculptor, and architect. He was born in 1681, and was a pupil of Carlo Maratti. He drew portraits in crayons, engraved on copper, and copied small cameos on a larger scale. He was made a Knight of St. George by the Duke of Parma, and was a member of the Accademia degli Arcadi.

ODASI, GIOVANNI, (or ODAZZI,) was born at Rome in 1663, and studied for some time under Bloemart and Ciro Ferri, but afterwards was a scholar of Giovanni Battista Gaulli. Of his works at Rome, the most creditable are his picture of the 'Prophet Hosea,' in San Giovanni in Laterano; 'St. Bruno,' in Santa Maria degli Angeli; and an altar-piece, representing 'The Fall of Lucifer,' in the church of the Santi Apostoli. He also executed some paintings in the cupola of the cathedral of Velletri. He died at Milan in 1731.

ODDI, GIUSEPPE, a native of Pesaro and pupil of Carlo Maratti. No details of his life are known.

ODDI, MAURO, a painter, designer, etcher, and architect, who was born in 1639 at Parma, where he was instructed in the first principles of art. He went afterwards to Rome, where he studied six years, under Pietro da Cortona. On his return to his native city his talents recommended him to the patronage of the Duke of Parma, who employed him in ornamenting the ducal palace, and the Villa di Colorno; giving him also the appointments of court painter and builder. He drew two thousand medals in the ducal cabinet of coins, and painted some altar-pieces for the churches of Parma, Piacenza, and Modena. Küsel, N. Dorigny, and others have engraved after his works. Two etchings by him are also known, 'The Adoration of the Shepherds,' after Parmigiano and Caraglio, and 'The Rape of Europa,' after Agostino Carracci. His death occurred in 1702 or 1703. He signed his works with a monogram composed of a Maltese cross between M. and O.

ODEBRECHT, OTTO FRIEDRICH HERMANN, landscape painter, was born in Greifswald in 1833. He was principally formed in the studio of Prof. Ang. Weber at Dusseldorf, where he died in 1860, from the effects of a poisonous sting. In the Berlin National Gallery there is a 'Moonlight View on the Königs-See, with a ferryman,' by him.

ODEKERKEN, WILLEM, a painter of Delft, who lived about the middle of the 17th century. His wife was one Maria Sasbouts van der Dussen. His works are very scarce. He is said to have very accurately copied a picture by Metsu which represents a 'Cook in her Kitchen, surrounded by culinary utensils.' A work of that class by him has lately (1885) been added to the collection in the Rijks Museum, Amsterdam. He also painted still-life. His activity extended from 1642 to 1677.

ODERICO DA SIENA, flourished about 1213. He was a canon of Siena, and painted miniatures in the Byzantine manner.

ODERICO, GIOVANNI PAOLO, was born in 1613, of a noble family of Genoa. According to Soprani he was a scholar of Domenico Fiasella, and painted history with some success, but was more distinguished for his portraits. Of his historical works, the most esteemed is his picture of the 'Guardian Angel,' in the church of the Padri Scolopi at Genoa. He died in 1657.

ODERIGI DA GUBBIO, (ODERISCO, ODERISIO,) was born at Gubbio, in 1240. His only known works are two mass-books of the Virgin and St. George; but some miniatures in the Archivio de' Canonici di San Pietro, at Rome, are supposed to be by him. He is said to have painted at Gubbio in 1264, at Bologna in 1268, and in 1295 at Rome, where Vasari says he made the acquaintance of Giotto. Oderigi died in Rome in 1299. He is mentioned by Dante, who represents him as expiating in Purgatory the pride with which his skill inspired him.

ODERISIO, ROBERTUS DI, was a Neapolitan, and the author of a 'Crucifixion' in the church of San Francesco d'Assisi, at Eboli. He lived in the 14th century, and is said to have been a pupil of Giotto.

ODEVAERE, JOSEPH DIONISIUS, an historical painter and critic, was born at Bruges in 1778. After receiving a good scholastic education at the college of the Augustins, and obtaining several prizes at the Academy of Design, he was sent in 1728 to Paris to study painting under Suvée and David. In 1804 he obtained the prix de Rome for his picture of the 'Death of Phocion.' On his return to Bruges he was received in triumph, and treated with every mark of distinction by the Academy, the municipality, and the public. Shortly afterwards he returned to Paris; and the following year, 1805, went to Italy, where he remained for about eight years, and executed several pictures of large dimensions. In 1814 he was again in Bruges, and painted for William I., King of the Netherlands, the picture of 'The Peace of Utrecht;' and, after the battle of Waterloo, another representing that action at the time the Prince of Orange received his wounds. For this and others relating to the history of the country he received special marks of the Royal favour. His pictures are numerous, and are to be found at Paris, Brussels, Ghent, and Bruges. They are 221.

generally large, one painted for the King of the Netherlands measuring twenty-four feet long and sixteen feet high. Odevaere while in Italy collected materials for a history of the state of the arts in that country from the revival of painting to the time of Raphael; his MS. still lies in the Royal Library at Brussels. He died at Brussels in 1830.

ODIEUVRE, MICHEL, was a French engraver and printseller, who resided at Paris about the year 1735. He began life as a tailor. He etched and published in 1738 a set of portraits entitled, 'Portraits des Personages illustres de l'un et de l'autre Sexe.' These are usually found in the large paper quarto editions of the 'Mémoires de Sully' and 'Mémoires de Commines.' Odieuvre died at Rouen in 1756.

He studied under his brother, ANTON OECHS, at Ratisbon, under Frost in Nuremberg, and under A. Graff and Klengel in Dresden. In 1804 he went to Courland, and was in 1824 made drawing-master in the Gymnasium at Mitau. His principal works were portraits, and the Provincial Museum of Courland possesses a complete set in oil by him of the Dukes and Duchesses of that province. He died at Mitau in 1836.

OEDING, PHILIPP WILHELM, painter and designer, was born at Benzigerode, near Blankenburg, in 1697. Having studied under Huber at Halberstadt, and Busch at Brunswick, he was in 1722 sent by Duke Ludwig Rudolph to Nuremberg, where he worked under Preisler, Desmarées, and Kupetzki, and chiefly adopted the style of the last-named master. In 1729 he married Preisler's daughter, BARBARA HELENA, who, in addition to painting, practised engraving, embroidery, and working in wax and alabaster. About 1741 he painted among other pictures a large 'View of Altona,' the 'Adoration of the Magi,' and the 'Institution of the Last Supper,' for the Lutheran Church at that place; where also he painted portraits and taught drawing. Subsequently he was appointed a professor in the 'Karolinum' at Brunswick. Preisler engraved after him the portrait of his wife, and Tyrof and others some drawings of antique vases. Oeding died in 1781.

OËFELE, FRANZ IGNAZ, called BAVARESE, was born at Posen in 1721, and studied under various masters at Landsberg, Augsburg, and Munich, until he went to Venice, where he placed himself under Giuseppe Nogari, and remained with him six years. Subsequently he went to Rome, and studied under Giovanni Barca for two years. Returning to Munich, he was made painter to the Elector Maximilian III., as well as professor in the School of Design. Of his works the principal are, 'Joseph and Potiphar's Wife,' the portrait of the Electress Adelhaid in the Court Chapel of Munich, and his own portrait in the Schliessheim Gallery. Of his etchings the best are, 'The Woman of Samaria,' and 'The Daughter of Dibutades,' both after his own designs. He died in 1797.

OEHME, ERNST FRIEDRICH, was born at Dresden in 1797, and after studying under Professor Friedrich, and travelling from 1819-25 in Italy, became court-painter at Dresden, and died there in 1854. He painted chiefly landscapes, and signed his works with an E in a circle. Among them are:

The Mountain Chapel.
View of the "Jagdschloss" of Moritzburg.
Autumn Landscape (H. Pietsch, Dresden).

OELENHAINZ, AUGUST FRIEDRICH, (OEHLENHAINZ, &c.,) was born at Endingen, near Balingen, in 1749, and after commencing the study of theology at Tübingen, prepared himself as an artist in the same place, under Meyer, and then under Baier at Stuttgart. In 1766 he went for further improvement to Vienna, where he painted the portraits of the Royal Family, of several courtiers, and of the poet Blumauer. In 1789 he was made a member of the Academy, and he died at Falzburg in 1804. His portraits were flattering, and thereby ensured him patronage. Durmer, about 1796, engraved two plates after him for the Fraenholz Collection: 'The Maiden of the Black Forest,' and 'The Bernese Girl;' and Pfeifer, the portrait of Lavater.

OERI, HANS JAKOB, was an historical and portrait painter, also a draughtsman and lithographer, who was born at Kyburg in Switzerland, in 1782, and studied under Kuster and David. He travelled a great deal, principally in Russia. As an artist he distinguished himself by the truth of his portraits, and above all as a lithographer. He died in 1843 (?). 'Dædalus and Icarus' and 'Chloe,' are two of his best paintings. Noticeable among his lithographs are:

The Marriage of the Virgin; after Raphael.
Joseph sold by his Brethren; after Overbeck.
Madonna with Sleeping Child; after Catarini.
Christ in the House of Martha; after Overbeck, dated 1826.

OERI, PETER, a Swiss artist, and a native of Zurich. He appears to be the man of whom Nagler says that he was born in 1737, and died in 1792. After studying six years in Italy, he returned to Switzerland, where, probably for want of employment, he abandoned painting, to follow the occupation of a chaser and working goldsmith.

OESER, ADAM FRIEDRICH, a German painter, modeller, and engraver, was born at Presburg in 1717. He was sent at thirteen years of age to Vienna, but was compelled to return home for want of means, and then found employment at the country-seats of Hungarian noblemen. In 1735, however, when eighteen years of age, he returned to Vienna, and gained the gold medal at the Academy. His talent was noticed and encouraged by Raphael Donner, a sculptor, who taught him to model. Dresden was at that time the residence of several artists of eminence, and in 1739 he visited that city, where his abilities procured him the esteem and friendship of its most distinguished residents. Here also he practised enamel and miniature painting. In 1749 he decorated the ceilings and walls of the Hubertsburg Schloss. He formed an intimate acquaintance with Winkelmann, whom he assisted in his first studies of the antique, and who makes mention of him in his first literary work as "the successor of the Theban Aristides." In 1756 he proceeded to Dahlen, where he painted in the Bünau'sche Schloss; and thence removed to Leipsic, where, in 1763, he became Director of the Academy. He settled in that city, and during a residence of many years he painted some important works for public buildings and private collections, both in oil and fresco. He was also Professor of the Academy at Dresden and court painter. He died at Leipsic in 1799. Among his chief productions are the frescoes in the church of St. Nicholas, at Leipsic. There is a portrait group of his own children in the Dresden Gallery. Oeser etched a variety of plates from his own compositions and after other masters; among many others are the following:

A variety of vignettes and frontispieces for books, designed and etched by F. Oeser.

The Circumcision; after G. van den Eeckhout.
Saul and the Witch of Endor; after Rembrandt.
The Presentation in the Temple; after the same.
Christ brought forth by Pilate; after the same.
Cupid and Psyche; probably after Guercino.

OESER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH LUDWIG, son of Adam Friedrich Oeser, was born at Dresden in 1751, and was a landscape painter and engraver. He was for seven years a teacher in the Academy of Leipsic, and in 1774 became professor of historical and landscape painting at Dresden, and in 1780 a member of the Academy there. He executed numerous drawings in Indian ink and colours, together with oil paintings, representing views in the neighbourhood of Dresden, and chiefly in Ruisdael's style. His principal etchings are after Rembrandt, Rubens, and Salvator Rosa. He died in 1791 or 1792.

OESTERREICH, MATHIAS, a German designer and etcher, was born at Hamburg in 1716. He learnt the art of design under J. B. Groni at Dresden, and twice travelled in Italy, where he gained a knowledge of art which enabled him to take the position of superintendent of the Electoral Gallery at Dresden. In 1757 he became Director of the Gallery of Sans Souci at Potsdam. He died at Berlin in 1778. His principal productions are a set of twenty-four caricatures, etched from the designs of P. L. Ghezzi, and published at Dresden in 1750, entitled 'Raccolta di XXIV. Caricature, disegnatte colla penna dal celebre Cavaliere P. L. Ghezzi'; these plates were republished at Potsdam in 1776, with the addition of eighteen from the designs of Giovanni Battista Internari, and others. Oesterreich also engraved a set of forty plates from drawings in the collection of Count von Bruhl, published at Dresden in 1752, under the title of 'Recueil de quelques dessins de plusieurs habiles maîtres, &c. Several of the plates in 'The Dresden Gallery' were engraved by Oesterreich. He marked his plates M. O. Amburgese fecit, with a monogram composed of two interlacing triangles, or with his initials. He has left descriptive accounts of several collections of paintings.

OEVER, ALBERTINE TEN, born ROELSEMA, was an amateur of some ability. She was a native of Holland, and flourished early in the 19th century.

OEVER, HENDRIK TEN, a Dutch painter, who flourished about 1690. No details of his life are known. A portrait group of regents by him still hangs in the church of St. Michael, at Zwolle. It is signed and dated HENDRIK TEN OEVER, pinxit, 1690.

OFFERMANS, ANTONIS JACOB, a Dutch animal painter, was a pupil of D. van Donge, and was painting at Rotterdam about 1800.

OFFERMANS, JAN, born at Dordrecht in 1646, painted landscapes for some time; but failing to succeed, became a house painter.

OFHUYS, JAN, a Flemish glass painter, who flourished in the first half of the 16th century.

OGBORNE, JOHN, an English designer and engraver, was born in London about the year 1725.

He was a scholar of Bartolozzi, and engraved in the dot manner. Several of the large plates for Boydell's Shakspeare Gallery are among his best works. He was chiefly employed on the pictures of the painters of that time; Smirke, Stothard, W. Hamilton, A. Kauffmann, Westall, and Romney; and he also engraved some subjects from his own designs. In his later plates line is combined with stipple. He died about 1795. MARY OGBORNE assisted him on some of his plates.

OGGIONNO, MARCO D', was born at Oggionno, near Milan, probably about 1470. He was one of the chief pupils of Leonardo da Vinci, whose famous wall picture, 'The Last Supper,' he copied more than once. The best of these copies is now in the possession of the English Royal Academy of Arts. Among his most important works were a series of frescoes in the church of S. Maria della Pace, at Milan. The two best, a 'Marriage at Cana,' and an 'Assumption,' are now in the Brera. Marco died in 1549. Works:

OHME, ERNST FRIEDRICH, an obscure German painter of landscape, who was active in Dresden in the first years of the 19th century.

O'KEEFE, (OR KEEFE), DANIEL, was a painter in miniature, who practised in London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1771 to 1783. He died at Brompton, 1787.

O'KEEFE, JOHN, painted in miniature, and was the brother of Daniel. He was born in Dublin in 1748. After studying in the Academy of Dublin, and in London under Hudson, he made a number of humorous designs. Subsequently relinquishing painting, he became an actor of low comedy in London and Dublin, and was also the author of some successful dramatic pieces. He died at Southampton in 1833. There is a portrait of him by Lawranson in the National Portrait Gallery.

OKEY, SAMUEL, an English mezzotint engraver, in the second half of the 18th century. He gained Society of Arts' premiums in 1765-7. About 1771 he emigrated to America, and settled in Rhode Island, where he continued to practise. Amongst his engravings are:

Nelly O'Brien; after Reynolds.
Old Man with Scroll; after the same.

OLAGNON, PIERRE VICTOR, a French painter of genre and portrait, flourished about 1786. He was a pupil of Regnault. His best works are a 'Vintage at Mâcon,' and 'Toilet in the Mansarde.'

OLANDA, ALBERTO D'. See OUWATER.

OLANDA, ANTONIO and FRANCISCO D', two Portuguese artists of the 16th century who are famous for their illuminations. Francisco, who was Antonio's son, made a voyage to Italy, and on his return in 1549 presented a petition to John XI., which by protesting against the influence of Flemish art in Portugal, prepared the way for that of Italy.

OLANDA, GUGLIELMO D'. See AELST, WILLEM VAN.

OLDENDORP, CHRISTIAN JOHANN, a landscape painter, born in 1772 at the Castle of Marienborn in the Wetterau. He was almost self-taught, and studied the works of Berghem, but distinguished himself most by his firelight pictures, which were exhibited at Weimar in 1802, such as the burning of Magdeburg, Gorlitz, Moscow, &c. Some of his other landscapes, views in Saxony, were engraved; and in 1826 two appeared in lithography.

OLDERMAN, ERNST FRIEDRICH, or FRITZ, a German engraver, was born in the village of Werther, near Bielefeld, in 1802, and was the son of a merchant, who intended him for his own business. His love of drawing induced him to devote to it all his leisure time, and he was encouraged by a drawing-master whose acquaintance he made. Convinced that he could never settle to business, he left his home and travelled to Dusseldorf and Berlin, where he endeavoured to improve himself, but was obliged from want of money to enlist for a time as a soldier. After this he entered the service of a lithographer, and commenced as an engraver in mezzotint. He died at Berlin in 1874. Among his best mezzotints we may name :

Jubal; after Klöbers.

The Compromise of the Dutch Nobles; after Biefve.

OLDONI, BONIFORTE DE, belonged to a family of artists which appears to have moved to Vercelli from Milan in the middle of the 15th century. Boniforte worked from 1463 to 1510. He had three sons, ERCOLE, GIOSUÈ, and ELEAZAR, all painters. In the parish church of Verrone, near Biella, is a fresco signed by Giosuè; and in the possession of the Countess Castelnova, at Turin, is a small 'Adoration of the Infant Christ,' signed by Eleazar, 'Eleazar de Oldonibus.'

OLESZCZYNSKI, ANTHONY, a Polish engraver and painter, born in 1796 at Krasnystow (Lublin). He at first studied law at Warsaw, and then spent six years in the School of Fine Arts at St. Petersburg. With government aid he further prosecuted his studies at Paris, under Regnault and Richomme. He then passed some time at Florence, in the Academy of which city he was appointed a Professor. His patriotic tendencies at length lost him the support of the Russian Government, and he then produced the series of plates known as 'Polish Varieties.' Among the best are :

The Hungarian Ambassadors offering the Crown to the Son of Ladislaus Jagello.

The German Emperor begs the assistance of John Sobieski.

The Entry of Boleslaw into Kief.

Bogdan Schmielnicki.

The Shoemaker Kilinski.

The Enehantment of Twardowski.

Portrait of Kosciusko.

OLGIATI, GIROLAMO, an Italian engraver, who flourished in the latter part of the 16th century. He formed his style of engraving by studying the works of Cornelis Cort. Among other plates by him is an etched print representing the 'Trinity,' with a number of saints and angels, after Federigo Zuccaro, inscribed Hieronymus Olgiatus f. 1572; the 'Entombment,' after Guido Clovis, and others.

OLIS, JAN, a Dutch painter, born in 1610, at Dordrecht (?). He painted 'Corps-de-gardes,' corporation groups, and a few single portraits. He died in 1665, most likely in Amsterdam, where most of his life was passed. In the Rijks Museum there is a 'Kitchen Interior' by him. Though signed J. Olis fecit. 1645., it used to be ascribed to Sorgh. A landscape with figures in the Darmstadt Gallery, given in the Catalogue to Jan Lis, is most likely the work of Olis.

OLIVA, IGNAZIO, a Neapolitan painter and scholar of Domenico Gargiulo, called Micco Spadaro. The latter was the fellow-pupil of Salvator Rosa under Aniello Falcone, and they all painted landscapes and marine views much in the same style in the latter half of the 17th century.

OLIVA, PHILIP, a native of Middleburg, was admitted a bourgeois of Antwerp in 1642, and a free member of the Society of St. Luke in 1655 or 1656. He died at Antwerp about 1659. In 1648-9 an ANDREAS OLIVA was also inscribed on the guild books, and in 1667-8 a MICHAEL and a second PHILIP, all described as sons of a master.

OLIVA, PIERO, painter, a native of Messina, and pupil of Antonello, flourished about 1490.

OLIVEIRA-BERNARES, IGNACIO DE, belongs to a family of artists in Portugal who bore this name. The first mentioned is Manoel Rodriguez, a painter who seems to have been known also as Oliveira Bernares. He had a son Antonio, and three grandsons, Ignacio, Fra Jose de Santa-Maria, a monk, and Polycarp, all painters. Ignacio, who was born at Lisbon in 1695, was one of the young artists whom John the Fifth of Portugal sent to Rome, where he wished to establish a Portuguese Academy of Painting. At Rome Ignacio studied painting and architecture under Benedetto Luti and Paolo de Matteis. On his return to Lisbon he was admitted into the Brotherhood of St. Luke, and afterwards made a professor of the Academy. He died in 1781. At Lisbon many of his works, both in architecture and in painting, are to be seen. His son Joás Pedro de Oliveira, born at Lisbon in 1752, was also an artist, and there are pictures by him in the Lisbon churches.

OLIVER, ARCHER JAMES, an English portrait painter, was born in 1774. He studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, of which he was elected an Associate in 1803. For some years he had a wide and fashionable circle of sitters at his studio in New Bond Street, and he exhibited largely from 1800 to 1820. In 1835 he was appointed curator of the painting school in the Academy. Through ill health in his latter years his means were reduced, and he became a pensioner of the Academy. He died in 1842.

OLIVER, D., supposed by Füssli to have been a French painter, resided in London in the 17th century. The portrait of the painter P. Sevin, by D. Oliverus was engraved by De La Croix in 1692.

OLIVER, ISAAC, an English mezzotint engraver, in the latter part of the 17th century. He was the son of John Oliver, glass painter. Amongst his engravings are :

The Seven Bishops.
Charles II.
George, Prince of Denmark.
E. van Heemskerck.

OLIVER, ISAAC, an English miniature painter, was born in 1556. He studied some time under Nicholas Hilliard, and afterwards under Federigo Zuccaro. It is probable, from the variety of his drawings after the great masters, particularly Parmigiano, that he visited Italy. In the particular branch of art he adopted he has perhaps never been surpassed. In our country few artists can be said to compete with him. His son Peter approached nearer than any one else to the beautiful finishing of his father. The miniatures of Isaac Oliver are now very highly prized. He died at his house in Blackfriars in 1617 (?), and was buried there in St. Anne's Church. His monument was destroyed in the great fire. The following are among his best works :

London. South Kensington- Museum.	} set. ( Full-length; one of Oliver's finest works. )	Richard Sackville, Earl of Dor-
" "		A portrait of himself.
" "	" "	Henry, Prince of Wales.
" "	" "	Sir Philip Sidney ( full-length ).
" "	" "	Ben Jonson.
" "	" "	Queen Elizabeth.
" "	" "	James I.
" "	" "	A head said to be that of Mary, Queen of Scots.

Oliver rarely attempted subject pictures, but a few miniatures of that description are mentioned by Horace Walpole; among them a 'Magdalen,' a 'Head of Christ,' a 'Massacre of the Innocents,' and an 'Entombment.' Oliver died at Blackfriars in 1617. He usually signed his drawings Olivier, and his miniatures with a monogram exactly resembling the Greek  $\Phi$ . He wrote a treatise on limning.

OLIVER, JOHN, the nephew of Peter Oliver, was born in London in 1616. He was an eminent painter on glass, and practised until he was far advanced in years, as appears from the inscription on a painted window, executed by him, in Christ Church, Oxford, J. Oliver ætat. suæ 84, anno 1700, pinxit deditque; the subject is the angel delivering St. Peter from prison. He died in 1701. He is said to have engraved a few plates of portraits and other subjects, some of which are etched, and others executed in mezzotint; the following are among them :

PORTRAITS.

King James II. in mezzotint.
Judge Jeffries, styled Earl of Flint.
Thomas White, Bishop of Peterborough.
John Woremburg, the Dutch Dwarf.

SUBJECTS.

A Boy sleeping, with a Skull by him; after Art. Gentileschi.
A View of Tangiers; J. Oliver fec. 1676.
A View of the Hot Wells at Bath; J. Oliver fec aqua forti. 1676.

OLIVER, PETER, the eldest son of Isaac Oliver, was born in London in 1601, and was instructed in miniature painting by his father. He did not confine his talents to portraits, but was employed in copying in water-colours several of the finest pictures in the collection of Charles I., and it appears by the catalogues of that monarch and of James II., that there were thirteen historical miniatures by him in the royal collection, several of which are preserved in the palace at Kensington. At Burleigh there is a picture by Peter Oliver, of 'Venus and Adonis,' dated in 1631. One of his finest portraits is a picture of his wife, which was in the collection of the Duchess of Portland; it is doubted whether his father ever surpassed this excellent miniature. His copy of Van Dyck's 'Sir Kenelm Digby, with his Wife and two Sons,' is perhaps the finest miniature known of the size. He also executed some fine drawings in Indian-ink, among which are 'The Infant John kneeling before the Virgin, and handing a cross to the Child Jesus,' after Raphael; and the portrait of Edward VI. when a child, at Chiswick, signed P. O. In the British Museum there is an etching by him of a woman reading. It too is signed with his initials. It is stated that he also etched some small historical subjects. He died in 1660.

OLIVER, WILLIAM, an English landscape painter, born in 1805. He chiefly practised in water-colours, exhibiting at the New Water-colour Society, of which he was a member. His subjects were mainly taken from foreign scenery. He died in 1853. There is an oil-painting of Foligno, in the Papal States, by him, in the Kensington Museum.

OLIVERUS, a skilful French miniaturist of the 12th century. He worked in Paris. The library of Douai possesses a fine MS. illustrated by him.

OLIVES, FRANCISCO, a Spanish painter, who flourished at Tarragona about 1557. He filled for a time the post of valuer of works of art for the province.

OLIVIER, AUBIN, a die-sinker and engraver on wood, was born at Roie, in Picardy, in the first half of the 16th century; and was Director of the Mint, under Henri II., in 1553. As a wood-engraver, in conjunction with Jean le Royer, his brother-in-law, he engraved the sixty figures which illustrate the 'Lievre de Perspective de Jehan Cousin,' the celebrated French artist, which was published in Paris in 1560 by Jehan le Royer, in a large folio. The date of Aubin Olivier's death is not known.

OLIVIER, HEINRICH, elder brother of Johann H. Ferdinand Olivier, was born at Dessau in 1783. He underwent the same course of study as his brother, and ultimately became a teacher of drawing and of languages in Berlin, where he died in 1848. In Vienna he executed a copy of Pordenone's 'St. Justina,' and also produced original paintings for the churches of his native town.

OLIVIER, JOHANN HEINRICH FERDINAND, painter and lithographer, was born at Dessau in 1785. His first instructions were received from K. W. Kolbe and Haldenwang, but in 1804 he went to Dresden, and studied under Jakob Mechau. In 1807 he accompanied his brother Heinrich to Paris, and together they painted a portrait of Napoleon I. on horseback, as well as 'The Baptism of Christ' and a 'Last Supper' for the church of Wörlitz. In 1811 he proceeded to Vienna, and in 1828 published a series of lithographs at Salzburg. His oil pictures are for the most part either purely historical, or historical landscapes. In 1833 he became professor of art history and general secretary to the Academy at Munich, where he died in 1841. His last and best painting is a landscape in the possession of Fräulein Linder of that city. He usually signed his work with a monogram of F. O.

OLIVIER, MICHEL BARTHÉLEMY, was born at Marseilles in 1712, and died in Paris in 1784. He was received into the Academy as painter of landscape and genre, and became painter to the Prince du Conti. His style is that of his time, the execution neat, and colour undecided.

OLIVIER, WOLDEMAR FRIEDRICH, younger brother of Heinrich and Ferdinand Olivier, was born at Dessau in 1791. From 1811 he studied under his brother Ferdinand: but in 1813-14 he served as an officer in the Lutzow volunteer corps, and as such obtained the iron cross and the Order of St. Anne and St. George. In 1815 he travelled in England and the Netherlands, and proceeded in 1818 to Rome, where he studied under Overbeck and Cornelius. He here painted his picture of 'Christ with the Tribute Money,' together with landscapes with historical figures. In 1824 he returned to Vienna and practised as a portrait painter, but removed in 1829 to Munich, where he worked upon the frescoes in the Königsbau, in the Nibelungen and Homer Saloons, and also designed a 'Pictorial Bible' with fifty illustrations from the New Testament. He died at Dessau in 1859.

OLIVIERI, DOMENICO, was born at Turin in 1679. He particularly excelled in painting droll scenes, fairs, and merry-makings, in imitation of the style of Peter van Laer, in which he displayed infinite humour, and a talent for caricature. In the gallery of the court of Turin were two of his best pictures, in one of which he has represented a fair, with an immense assemblage of figures, of quack-doctors, and groups of peasants, sporting or quarrelling. Though chiefly employed in painting what are called Bambocciate, he was not incapable of historical painting, as appears in his picture of 'The Miracle of the Sacrament,' in the sacristy of Corpus Domini, at Turin. He died in 1755. Boni says that he had a pupil who painted in the same style, and of whom he speaks as N. Graneri of London.

OLIVIERI, DOMENICO, called SALVATORIELLO, a Neapolitan, born in the last half of the 17th century. He was the best of Solimena's pupils, and painted, in fresco, 'The Virgin and Child,' in S. Maria delle Grazie; 'Rinaldo and Armida,' and other pictures on a large scale. He died in 1718.

OLIVIERS, JACOB FRANS and ADRIAEN, two obscure painters of Haaren, who flourished in the 17th and 18th centuries. Jacob was inscribed on the Guild in 1632. In 1650 he received, from the military authorities, a sum of 150 florins for restoring pictures, and in 1667 a requisition was made for a tomb for him in the church of St. Bavon. Adriaen was inscribed on the Guild in 1707.

OLLMÜTZ, WENZEL or WENCESLAUS VON, (OLMÜTZ, or OLOMUCZ,) was a painter and engraver of the 15th century, who produced several extremely good copies, as well as original plates. By Bartsch he was supposed to be identical with the "Master signing W," while some have endeavoured to identify him with Michael Wolgemut. The more recent opinion is that the plates with W upon them are the work of Wolgemut, and that instead of being copies from Dürer, Dürer copied them. For a fuller discussion of the question see Wolgemut. The name of Wenceslaus von Olomucz appears on a copy from Schongauer's 'Death of the Virgin,' dated 1481. He was still working as late as the beginning of the 16th century. The best of his plates are in the above-mentioned copy from Schongauer's famous engraving.

OLMDORF, HANS VON, (or OLMENDORF,) a Bavarian artist, who painted between 1460 and 1518. He was court painter to the Duke Sigmund. He painted at Munich and at Blutenburg, where it is thought he made the designs for the windows painted by Hans Hebenstreit. To him is ascribed also the picture of 'God the Father with the dead Christ on His knees,' the engraving from which is attributed to The Master of 1466. Some of his pictures, on panels with gold backgrounds, are at Schleissheim. One of his best works is the 'Crowning of the Virgin,' in which the Duke Sigmund is introduced on his knee.

OLMO, GIOVANNI PAOLO. Siret speaks of a Bergamese painter of this name, and of a 'Vierge Glorieuse,' at Berlin, signed Jo. Paulus Olmus.

OLMO, MARCO. Born in 1683, of a noble family in the territory of Bergamo, Marco Olmo showed early such a strong inclination for painting that he was sent to Bologna, and studied for some years under Gio. Gioseffe dal Sole. On his return he painted a great number of pictures for the churches in his native country, and many portraits. He died in 1753.

OMER, ROWLAND, a draughtsman, born in Ireland, who worked about 1750. He drew many public buildings in Dublin and other parts of Ireland, which were engraved.

OMINO, L'. See LOMBARDI.

OMME, H. VAN, a mediocre painter, who was active at Oudewater in 1651. In the orphanage of that town there is a large picture of 'Orphans at Dinner,' by him.

OMMEGANCK, BALTHAZAR PAUL, a distinguished painter of landscapes and animals, was born at Antwerp in 1755, and studied under Hendricus Josephus Antonissen from 1767. In 1789 he became dean of the Guild of St. Luke in his native city, and in 1796 professor in the Academy there. In 1799 he won the first prize for landscapes in Paris, and in 1809 became a corresponding member of the Institute. He was also a member of the Academies of Amsterdam, Brussels, Ghent, Munich, and Vienna. He died at Antwerp in 1826. He was one of the commissioners of 1815, appointed by Belgium to reclaim from France the objects of art which she had acquired by force of arms during the great war. During his life his works were in such request that only the rich could obtain them, and they are therefore seldom to be found but in the finest modern collections of England, France, and Holland. And yet in handling they were soft, weak, and oversmooth, in conception confused, and in colour poor. It is in fact greatly to the example of Ommeganck that the poor work done by Belgian landscape and animal painters in the early part of the present century is to be traced, especially their shortcomings in the matter of colour. Carpentero, J. F. Lenzen, and some of the more recent Belgian painters, have imitated his manner; a female painter, long resident in Holland and Belgium, has copied several of his pictures very successfully; and others in England and elsewhere, under the auspices of the dealers, have made it a very profitable speculation. He executed some admired drawings, and also clay models of sheep and cows. Among his oil-paintings there are (besides some at Antwerp, Brussels, and Cassel):

Frankfort. Städel Inst. Landscape with sheep and goats.

London. Stafford House. Cows in the water.

Paris. Louvre. Landscape with sheep.

OMMEGANCK, MARIA JACOBA. See BAESTEN.
 OMPHALION, a painter of the 4th century B.C., who, as Pausanias tells us, was a pupil and friend of Nicias.

ONA, (or ONNA,) PEDRO DE, a Spanish painter, born in Spain about 1550, son-in-law to Esteban Jordan, sculptor to Philip II. He painted in 1590 the principal altar-piece in the parish church of Santa Maria de Rioseco.

ONATAS, an early Greek sculptor of Ægina, practised painting also to some small extent, and was employed in conjunction with Polygnotus in the temple of Athene at Plataea.

OÑATE, MIGUEL, a Spanish portrait painter, was born at Seville in 1535, and studied under Antony Mor, who was in Spain in 1551. He accompanied his instructor to Portugal, where he was sent to paint the portrait of the first consort of Philip II. He then returned with him to Madrid, where he died in 1606, leaving to his heirs a considerable fortune acquired by his profession.

O'NEAL, JEFFREY HAMET, was born in Ireland, practised in London for many years, and died early in the 19th century. He painted landscapes, birds, flowers, small conversations, and miniatures; and contributed several years to the Spring Gardens' Exhibition.

O'NEIL, HENRY NELSON, was born at St. Petersburg in 1817; came to England and entered the Royal Academy schools in 1833. Some years afterwards he started on a journey to Italy with Mr. Elmore, with whom he contracted a friendship while in the schools. On his return to England he rapidly rose to fame as a contributor to the Exhibitions of the Royal Academy. He was elected an Associate in 1860. He died on the 13th of March, 1880. The following are a few of his best works; they were very popular at the time they were painted: 'By the rivers of Babylon,' 'Ahasuerus and the Scribes,' 'Eastward Ho!' and 'Home Again,' 'The Wreck of the Royal Charter,' and 'The Death of Raffaele.' The last is considered his best picture. Besides these, he executed a number of landscapes and portraits. He was also the author of various treatises on art.

O'NEILL, HUGH, an English draughtsman, born in London in 1784. He was helped by Dr. Munro, and afterwards taught drawing in Oxford, Edinburgh, Bath, and Bristol. His subjects were architectural antiquities, and his sketches of Christ Church, Oxford, and of Bristol were published. He died at Bristol in 1824. There are three water-colour drawings by him in the South Kensington Museum. Fifty of his sketches of antiquities in Bristol were etched by J. Skelton, and published in 1826.

ONGARO, MICHELE, an artist of the middle of the 15th century, a native of Ferrara. A picture of the 'Virgin and Child' discovered there in 1842, is supposed to be by him.

ONGHERS, JACOB, a Dutch painter established at Prague in 1691. In 1714 he became chief of the corporation of painters in that city, and died there about 1730.

ONGHERS, OSWALD, painter, was born at Mechlin in 1628, and died at Würzburg in 1706. He studied mainly after Van Dyck, and in 1660 settled at Würzburg as painter to the Prince Bishop. He here produced an 'Assumption of the Virgin' for the Haug Church, and a 'Mocking of Christ' and 'Martyrdom of St. Kilian' for the cathedral.

ONOFRI, FRANCESCO, a Roman knight and engraver of the 18th century, who published a set of twelve etchings, with a title, after the works of G. L. Bernini.

ONOFRIO DA FABRIANO, a painter of the Umbrian school, who is said to have been contemporary with Gentile da Fabriano, and to have painted in 1460 the 'Life of St. Benedict,' in one of the cloisters of St. Michele at Bologna.

ONOFRIO, CRESCENTIO, (HONOPHRIJS, or HONOPHRIIS,) landscape painter and etcher, was born at Rome most likely some years later than 1613, the date usually given. He was a scholar of Gaspar Poussin, and painted landscapes in the style of that master. He resided chiefly at Florence, where he was much employed by the court and for private collections. He died at Florence. Lanzi and Zani say he was living in 1712, which is more probable than that he died in 1688, as he etched a fine series of twelve plates of landscapes, after his own designs, which are dated 1696!

OORT, VAN. See NOORT, ADAM VAN.

OORTMAN, JOACHIM JAN, an engraver, of Dutch parentage, but, from his long residence in Paris, reckoned among French artists, was born at Weesp in 1777, and studied successively under W. Koch, C. H. Hodges, and Claessens. He engraved after Rembrandt, Gerard Dou, A. Ostade, Jan Steen, and other eminent Dutch masters; also after Titian, Giulio Romano, Caravaggio, and Valentino: and some French painters of more modern date. He died in Paris in 1818. In addition to two plates in illustration of the 'Lusiad,' he supplied the following to Filhol's 'Musée Français:'

Portrait of Rembrandt; after that artist.
 The Death of the Virgin; after Caravaggio.
 Martyrdom of St. Laurence; after Titian.
 Human Life; after J. Steen.

OOST, JAKOB VAN, the elder, was born at Bruges about 1600, of an ancient and opulent family. It is not known under whom he studied, but in 1621 he painted an altar-piece for one of the churches in his native city, which excited great admiration. This success led him to visit Italy in search of further improvement. On his arrival at Rome he especially studied the works of Annibale Carracci; and during his residence in that capital he painted some pictures of his own composition, so entirely in the style of that distinguished artist, that they astonished the most intelligent judges. After a sojourn of five years he returned to his own country, where he was immediately loaded with commissions. He was equally successful in altar-pieces, portraits, and pictures for private collections. During a long life he continued to be one of the most employed and most popular painters of his country. The number of altar-pieces he painted for the churches in Flanders, particularly at Bruges, is almost incredible, and proves the readiness of his invention, and the extraordinary facility of his hand. The backgrounds of his pictures are generally embellished with architecture, which he perfectly understood. He gave peculiar dignity to his portraits, by representing his sitters in the exercise of their profession. Van Oost died at Bruges in 1671. Of his numerous works, the following are the most deserving of notice:

Bruges.	Jesuits' Church.	The Deposition from the Cross.
"	St. Saviour's.	The Baptism of Christ.
"	Notre Dame.	The Nativity.
"	S. Jacques.	Presentation of the Virgin.
"	S. Truyen.	Descent of the Holy Ghost.

Bruges. Academy. A Churchman dictating a Letter to a young Clerk.
 „ St. John's Hospital. A Philosopher in Meditation.
 Petersburg. Hermilage. The Virgin, with Donors.

OOST, JAKOB VAN, the younger, the son and scholar of Jakob van Oost the elder, was born at Bruges in 1639. He studied under his father until he was twenty, and then went to Paris and Rome for improvement. He returned, after some years, to Bruges. After painting there some pictures for the churches, he established himself at Lille, where the greater part of his works are now. He died at Bruges in 1713. He painted history and portraits, and was so eminent in the latter, that his partisans ventured to compare his work with that of Van Dyck. His historical pictures partake more of the Roman than of the Flemish school. Works :

Brussels. Gallery. Male Portrait. Signed J. v. Oost de ionghe.
 Lille. S. Etienne. Martyrdom of St. Barbara.
 „ Capuchin Ch. The Child Jesus shown the Instruments of His martyrdom.
 „ Museum. Two male portraits. 1688 and 1693.

OOSTEN, J. VAN, was an artist who painted small landscapes, with figures and animals, in the manner of Jan Breughel, to whom they are usually ascribed when they appear in sales. There are no particulars of him recorded. There is a good example of his work, a 'Paradise,' in the Liechtenstein Collection, at Vienna. It is signed J. van Oosten, fecit.

OOSTERHOUDT, THIERRY VAN, was born at Tiel, in Guelderland, in 1756. He was a scholar of R. van Eynder, and frequented the Electoral Academy at Düsseldorf. After several years' study of the pictures of Raphael, Carlo Dolci, Rubens, Van Dyck, and other masters there, he returned to his native city, and painted portraits, and finished numerous compositions. Some of his subjects are scenes in private life, and are to be met with at Tiel and Utrecht. He painted also in water-colours. He died in 1830.

OOSTERWIJCK, MARIA VAN, a celebrated painter of flowers and fruit, was born at Nootdorp, a small town near Delft, in 1627 or 1630. She was the daughter of a clergyman, who encouraged the disposition she evinced for art by placing her under the tuition of the flower painter, Jan Davidsz de Heem, whose works she in a few years almost equalled. Her pictures of fruit, flowers, and still-life found their way into the choicest collections, and she received commissions from many of the princes and sovereigns of Europe. The Emperor Leopold I. engaged her to paint a picture for his collection, and on its completion sent her the portrait of the Empress and his own, set with diamonds, as a mark of his approbation. William III. and Louis XIV. were among her most magnificent patrons. Maria van Oosterwijck died at Entdam in 1693. Her works are extremely scarce, from the care she bestowed upon them. Among them we may note :

Dresden. Gallery. Glass filled with Flowers in great variety.
 „ „ Fruit-piece, with Clusters of Grapes.
 Vienna. Schönborn Gall. The same subject.
 „ Ambrase Coll. Still-life subject.

OPIE, (or OPPEY,) a portrait painter, was born in Cornwall, but is said to have been in no way connected with John Opie. He is believed to have been self-taught. In the catalogue of the Exhibition held in London in 1780, by the Incorporated Society of Artists, he and his works are thus described, 'Master Oppey, Penryn. 'A Boy's Head.' An instance of genius, not having seen a picture." This head is said to have been expressive, well coloured, and to have attracted notice on its merits. Oppey died young, in London, 25th Nov. 1785.

OPIE, JOHN, painter, was born in the village of St. Agnes, about seven miles from Truro, in 1761. He was the son of a master carpenter, who was very desirous of bringing him up to his own business, but the love of drawing appears to have given an early bent to his inclinations, and as his propensity was encouraged by an uncle, who had instructed him in arithmetic and the elements of mathematics, his desire of becoming a painter gained an entire dominion over his mind, and nothing could divert him from it. He had already acquired some practice in portrait-painting, when his talent was accidentally discovered by Dr. Wolcott, 'Peter Pindar,' who at that time resided at Truro. He interested himself in his advancement, and lent him some of his pictures to study and copy. By Wolcott's assistance and recommendation, the talents of young Opie soon became known throughout the county, and he met with considerable employment as a portrait painter. His earliest efforts, though not distinguished by taste, or a graceful disposition of the figure, were extraordinary productions for an artist reared in so remote and secluded a situation. About the year 1777 he was introduced to Lord Bateman, who employed him in painting old men, beggars, &c., which he designed with uncommon vigour and great truth of expression. In 1780 he visited London under the auspices of Dr. Wolcott, where his merit and the extraordinary circumstances of his early artistic life, made him the object of widespread interest. Commissions crowded upon him, his partisans were zealous in his praise, and for some time 'the Cornish wonder' was the rage.

The powers of Opie were not calculated to flatter the frivolity of fashion; he was not very susceptible to female grace, and his portraits of men were rather distinguished by identity and truth, than by dignity. Thus it was not long before the curiosity excited on his arrival in London in a great degree subsided, but as his talents were not confined to portraiture, he continued to meet with employment in painting domestic or rustic subjects. The great undertakings which were in hand at this time, such as Boydell's 'Shakespeare,' Bowyer's 'English History,' Macklin's 'Poets and Bible,' opened a new field to Opie, and perhaps his most popular performances were his pictures of the 'Murder of James I. of Scotland,' the 'Death of Rizzio,' 'Jephtha's Vow,' the 'Presentation in the Temple,' and 'Arthur supplicating Hubert.' In the best of these he shows not only vigour, but also a curious sense of style which is hardly to be found in any other English historical pictures of the time.

On Fuseli's appointment to the office of Keeper of the Royal Academy, in 1806, Opie became a candidate for the vacant professorship of painting, and was elected. In that capacity he read four lectures at Somerset House, which bear testimony to the extent of his powers, and to his acquaintance with the theory of his art. He died in 1807, and his remains were interred in St. Paul's Cathedral, near those of Sir Joshua Reynolds. A catalogue of his paintings was published in 1878. There are in public collections :

London.	National Portrait Gallery.	Portrait of Himself.
"	"	" Bartolozzi.
"	National Gallery.	" Th. Holcroft.
"	"	" William Siddons.
"	"	" Mary Wollstonecraft-Godwin.
"	City Art Gallery.	" Daniel Pinder.
"	"	Murder of James I., of Scotland.
"	"	Murder of Rizzio.
Dulwich.	Gallery.	Portrait of Himself.
Manchester.	Gallery.	Troilus, Cressida, and Pandarus. (Lent by the National Gallery.)

OPITZ, GEORG EMANUEL, was born at Prague in 1775, and studied under Casanova in Dresden. Up to 1807 he painted portraits in oil and miniature, but then commenced painting popular scenes, character sketches, costume figures, and so forth. In 1813 he followed the Duchess of Courland to Paris, where he found a rich source of such subjects. Afterwards he lived at Heidelberg and Altenburg, and finally settled at Leipsic, where he died in 1841. He was also successful in aquarelle and gouache painting, and as an engraver.

OPPENORD, GILLES MARIE, (or OPPENORT,) a draughtsman and architect, was born in Paris in 1672, and was sent with a pension from the king to Rome, where he spent eight years. He died in Paris in 1742. He prepared the designs for the high altars of St. Germain des Prés and St. Sulpice. Huquière engraved some ornaments after him.

OPPERDOES, JAN PIETERSZ, a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1631 or 1632. In 1648 he was bound apprentice to Govaert Camphuysen. Little is known of him. In the Rijks-Museum there is a landscape by him, signed Opperdoes.

OPPERMANN, C. There is a miniature of the Czar, Alexander I., in the Dresden Gallery, signed with this name, and dated 1809.

OPPI, BERNARDINO, a designer and engraver, who worked at Rome in 1590. He helped to engrave a collection of sixteen plates representing the 'Virtues,' after designs by Lanfranco, which are dedicated to Cardinal Piccolomini.

OPSTAL, ANTONY VAN, a Flemish painter, who was in the service of the Archduke Charles of Austria, in 1624. Nagler says that Van Opstal lived at Brussels, and that Van Dyck painted his portrait. Jan Meyssens was his pupil and engraved after him.

OPSTAL, GASPAR JACOB VAN, the younger, was born at Antwerp in 1654. He was probably a pupil of his father. In 1676 he entered the guild, of which in 1698-9 he was dean. He painted history and portraits, and there are several of his works in the churches in Flanders and Brabant; but the defective pigments which he used have caused them to darken. In 1714 he was employed by Marshal Villeroy to copy the celebrated altar-piece by Rubens, in the cathedral at Antwerp, representing the 'Descent from the Cross,' together with the shutters of the organ. The commissions which he received were so numerous that he frequently had to entrust them to his pupils. He died at Antwerp in 1717. Of his other works we may name :

Antwerp.	Museum.	A Portrait. 1699.
"	Jesuits' Ch.	The Child Jesus addressed by Angels. 1693.
Darmstadt.	Gallery.	The Holy Family resting near a classic ruin.
St. Omer.	Cathedral.	The Fathers of the Church.

OPSTAL, GASPAR VAN, the elder, a painter of Antwerp, who studied under Simon de Vos in 1632. He was admitted a master in 1644. His son, Gaspar Jacob, was a better painter than he.

ORAM, EDWARD, an English landscape painter in the latter half of the 18th century. He was the son of William Oram, and acted as assistant to Louthenbourg. He exhibited at the Incorporated Society in 1766, and at the Academy from 1775 to 1799. A work of his, apparently posthumous, 'Precepts and Observations on the Art of Colouring in Landscape Painting,' was published in 1810.

ORAM, WILLIAM, called 'Old Oram,' was brought up as an architect, but taking to landscape painting, arrived at success in that branch of art, and was, in 1748, made superintendent of the Board of Works by the interest of Sir Edward Walpole, who had several of his pictures and drawings. There is a picture by him in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg; it probably went there with the Houghton Collection. Oram was much employed in decorating halls, staircases, and the panels over chimney-pieces. Walker has engraved the triumphal arch erected by him for the coronation of George III., at Westminster Hall, and has introduced the entrance of the Champion and the Lord Chancellor.

ORAZI, (or ORAZI,) ALESSANDRO, painted about the middle of the 15th century, at Bologna. Malvasia speaks of a picture of the Virgin by him, which he found over the Macchiavellin altar in the church of San Francesco.

ORAZI, ANDREA ANTONIO, painted in fresco and in oil. He was born about 1630, and was a pupil of L. Garzi and C. Ferri in Rome. In the Crozat collection was a drawing by him, 'The Angel and Gideon's Fleece,' which was etched by Caylus, and engraved by N le Sueur. He died about 1690. GIUSEPPE ORAZI, who painted the vault of St. Maria del Orto, is believed to have been a relation of Andrea Antonio.

ORAZZI, NICCOLÒ, was an Italian engraver, who flourished about the year 1760. He was employed to execute part of the plates for the 'Antiquities of Herculaneum,' published by the authority of the King of Naples.

ORBETTO, L'. See TURCHI.

ORCAGNA. See CIONE.

ORDE-POWLETT, THOMAS, an English amateur etcher, born in 1746. His plates are chiefly caricatures and portraits. There is a burlesque portrait of Voltaire by him, signed 'T. O. fecit, 1772.' He was raised to the peerage as Lord Bolton in 1797, and died in 1807.

ORDONNANCE. See MOUCHERON, IS.

ORELLI, ANTONIO BALDASSARE, an obscure painter of the Milanese. There is a large altar-piece by him in the 'Calvary' Church at Domo-Dossola.

ORELLI, GIUSEPPE ANTONIO FELICE, was born in 1700, in the Milanese, and received his first instruction in art from his father, Antonio Baldassare. He also worked under Baptista Sassi for eight years, but Tiepolo having been called to Milan by Count Archinti, Orelli had the good fortune to be employed by him, and afterwards accompanied him to Venice. There he remained six years. He then went to Bergamo, where he executed several works for the convents and churches, also at Milan for Count Brentato. He also painted a few portraits. He died in 1774.

ORFELIN. See L'HORFELIN.

ORIENT, JOSEPH, was born at Burbach, near Eisenstadt, in Hungary, in 1677, and was a pupil of Anton Feistenberger. He became sub-director of the Academy at Vienna, and died there in 1737. It is said that he made use of a concave mirror in the painting of his landscapes, in which Ferg, Canton, and Janneck used to supply the figures. Among them are :

Landscape with a Hunt. (Liechtenstein Col.)
A Flat Landscape. (The same.)
Two Tyrolese Landscapes. (Belvedere.)
Forest, with Game (engraved by Rösel.)
Mountain Landscape, with river. (Town Gallery, Stuttgart.)

ORIENTE, JOSÉ, a Spanish painter, born in or near Villareal in Valencia, who painted in the capital of that province about 1680-9. Among other works by him, are 'Virgin of the Rosary,' in the church of S. Felipe Neri, and a portrait of Domingo Sarrío, which was engraved by Crisostomo Martinez.

ORIOLO, BARTOLOMEO, was of Treviso, and painted there about 1616. His principal work is a large picture painted for the church of Santa Croce, in which there is a procession of the inhabitants of Treviso, all portraits.

ORIOLO, GIUSEPPE, painted at Mantua. His best picture is 'The Last Supper,' in the Refectory of the Carmine in that place. He died in 1750.

ORIOLO, GIOVANNI, of Ferrara, is known only by a portrait of Leonello d'Este, in the National Gallery; it is signed Opus Johannis Orioli, and was formerly in the Costabili Gallery at Ferrara. Oriolo painted in the middle of the 15th century. He is supposed to have been a pupil of Vittor Pisano of Verona, called Pisanello, because this Leonello d'Este is a free copy from one of that master's medals.

ORIZONTE. See BLOEMEN, J. F. VAN.

ORLANDI, DEODATO, lived at the close of the 13th century, and is the author of a 'Crucifix' now in the Palace of Parma, and bearing the date 1288. In the Pisa Gallery there is a 'Virgin enthroned between SS. James, Damian, Peter, and Paul,' painted by him in 1301. No certain dates can be given for his birth or death.

ORLANDI, FRANCESCO, the son of Stefano Orlandi, was born in 1725, and educated by his father. He painted in the same style for theatres at Leghorn and a chapel at Cente, and was Professor of Architecture in the Clementine Academy at Bologna. He was also a good musician. He died at Bologna in 1769.

ORLANDI, GIOVANNI, an engraver and publisher of prints in Rome between 1590 and 1640. He followed the style of Cornelius Cort. The number of engravings executed or published by him is considerable. Among them are 'The Last Judgment,' after Michelangelo, and 'The Transfiguration,' after Raphael; also from forty to fifty portraits, and a plan and view of Genoa, dated 1637.

ORLANDI, ODOARDO, an obscure Bolognese painter, and pupil of Pasinelli. He was born in 1660, and died in 1736.

ORLANDI, STEFANO, was the son of Odoardo Orlandi. Stefano was born in 1681, and studied under Pompeo Aldrovandini, with whom he went to Rome. In 1684, in conjunction with Giuseppe Orsoni, he painted in many theatres in Italy, in the Saloon of the Palazzo Ranuzzi, and, with Francesco Monti, for the Martinengo family at Brescia. He died in 1760.

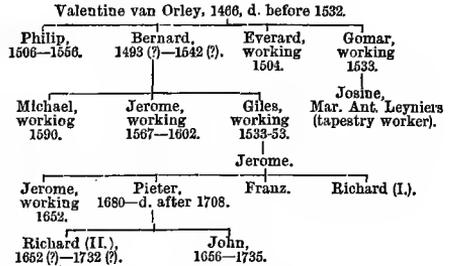

ORLANDINI, GIULIO, painted in Parma in the middle of the 17th century.

ORLANDO, BERNARDO, was appointed court painter at Turin in 1617.

ORLANDO OF PERUGIA, was one of the followers of Perugino. In 1509 he was painting in conjunction with Sinibaldo Ibi, at Gubbio, of which place he was made a citizen between 1502 and 1506.

ORLEANS, FRANÇOIS D', a French artist, who was born at the end of the 15th century, and worked at Fontainebleau under Il Rosso.

ORLEY, VAN (or ORLAY). The important artistic family of the Van Orleys flourished in Brussels for three centuries. The following pedigree is given by Alphonse Wauters :

BERNARD, (or BAREND,) VAN ORLEY, as will be seen from this table, was born about 1493. At an early age he quitted Brussels for Rome, and studied in the school of Raphael, becoming, it is said, a great favourite with his master. He returned while still very young to his native country, where he was appointed painter to Margaret of Austria, Governess of the Netherlands. Together with Michael Coxie, he superintended the making of the tapestries from Raphael's cartoons, which were actually woven by Pieter Van Aelst, in Brussels. Following his master's example, he made, too, a large number of designs for tapestry, among the most famous of which are 'The Life of Abraham,' at Hampton Court, and 'Maximilian's Hunt,' in the Louvre. He also made designs for windows. Those on which the portraits of Francis I., Charles V., and Mary of Hungary appear, in the church of St. Gudule at Brussels, are from his cartoons. Bernard married as his first wife, Agnes Seghers, by whom he had seven children; and, as his second, Catherine Hellinckx, who bore him two. In 1527, the whole family of Van Orley, together with many of their connections, among the latter Jan Van Conninxlo, were arrested for being present at secret services of the Reformed Church. There is no evidence beyond that, however, to show that Bernard was a Protestant. In his pictures he combined a superficial resemblance to various Italian masters with his more deeply seated Flemish tastes. Among the best we may name :

Antwerp. Ch. of S. James.	The Last Judgment.
Brussels.	Museum.	The dead Child, with Virgin and Saints ( a triptych ).
"	"	The Patience of Joh ( a triptych; elaborately signed and dated ).
"	"	Portrait of George van Zelle, a doctor of the 16th century.
"	"	Portrait of Guillaume de Ncrman.
"	"	Episode in the life of the Virgin. ( The detached wings of a triptych. )
"	"	A Holy Family.

Dresden.	Gallery.	A Holy Family ( bought in London in 1875 ).
Dublin.	Nat. Gall.	The Magdalen Reading.
London.	Nat. Gall.	The Magdalen reading. ( Similar to the picture at Dublin. )
Lubeck.	Cathedral.	The Trinity worshipped by Saints.
Madrid.	Museo.	Two groups of Supplicants before Saints.
Paris.	Lowre.	Marriage of the Virgin.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	The Descent from the Cross.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	Christ on the Cross.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	A Diptych with scenes from Jewish History.
		A 'Riposo.'
	" Liechtenstein's Coll.	Two portraits, male and female.

A great number of pictures referable to the school of Van Orley are extant, among them the so-called Leonardo da Vinci at Gattou Park, the 'Vierge, au bas-relief,' which seems to be a copy from a picture by Cesare da Sesto, now in the Brera, which is itself a compilation from various sources. W.A.

ORLEY, (OR ORLAY,) RICHARD VAN, was the eldest son of Peter van Orley, of the same family as Bernard. Peter was a landscape painter, and had two sons—Richard, who died in 1732, and Jean, who died in 1735. They were each then from twenty to twenty-two years of age. Their first master was their father, but he soon placed them under the guidance of his brother, who was a monk and artist. Richard painted in the Italian style, and engraved a number of plates after different masters. The uncle, Richard, painted some fine pictures for the church of his order, 'The Recollets,' but Jean was the most able of them all, as he painted a number of pictures for churches, and made many fine designs for tapestry. They are mostly done on blue paper with the pen, and shaded with Indian-ink. Those by Richard are miniatures or designs for book-illustrations in Indian-ink, and were much admired by Picart le Romain.

ORLOWSKY, ALEXANDER OSSIPOWITSCH, a painter, designer, etcher, and lithographer, who was born at Warsaw in 1777. He studied under Norblin, and at the Academy of St. Petersburg, after which he travelled in France, Germany, and Italy. He distinguished himself at this period chiefly by his battle-pieces. In 1812 he was named court painter to the Czar, Alexander I., an appointment which the next Czar, Nicholas, continued. He died at St. Petersburg in 1832. His best pictures of battles are in the possession of the Russian Emperors, but others, together with sketches from Russian popular life, historical pictures, and portraits, are in the collections of the nobility of that country. Eight hunting and rural pieces are in the Hermitage. He also executed a number of drawings which either himself or others reproduced in lithography, among them the humorous 'Cat Court.' Four original lithographs by him represent military subjects, and his own portrait. There is also a scarce etching of a 'Race-horse and Jockey' from his hand.

ORME, ANTON DE L'. See DE LORME.

ORME, DANIEL, an engraver and miniature painter. He worked about 1800, and exhibited many portraits in miniature, and one or two in oils at the Royal Academy, between 1797 and 1801. He engraved in stipple many portraits of persons celebrated at the time, some battle-pieces, and a picture of 'Alexander and Thais,' from a picture painted by himself. There is a water-colour drawing of Margate New Pier by him in the South Kensington Museum, dated 1799.

ORMEA, MARC, a painter of Utrecht, who was dean of the College of painters from 1621 to 1625. He painted sea-pieces.

ORMEA, WILLEM, son of Marc, was a painter of still-life. In 1638 he presented to the Hospital of St. Job (Utrecht) a picture of various kinds of fish.

ORMIS, LÉONARD, an obscure Burgundian, who painted at Liège in the 16th century.

ORO, IL MONACO DEL' ISOLA D', a painter, poet, and historian, was born in Genoa about 1346. He became a monk in the monastery of the Isola d'Oro (Stecati), and subsequently librarian there. He wrote several books which he embellished with miniatures, and presented to the Queen of Aragon. He died in 1408.

OROZCO, MÁRCOS DE, a Spanish priest and engraver, who resided at Madrid in the 17th century, and executed many title-pages to books printed in his time. The title-page to Ortiz de Zuniga's 'Annals of Seville,' published in 1677, is probably the best work from Orozco's burin. There are many devotional prints by his hand. Among them portraits of St. Francis de Sales; of the Bishop Crespi di Borja, executed in 1664; in 1680 the title-page bearing the royal arms, and a curious folding plan for the authorized history of the great auto-da-fé at Madrid; in 1682, a 'Crucifix and angels bearing shields charged with episcopal devices,' designed by Ximenez Donoso, and prefixed to an official account of the synod held at Toledo that year; in 1696, a title-page containing effigies of the seven first canonized bishops of Spain, for Don Pedro Juarez's 'History of the united sees of Guadix and Baza;' and in 1597, an 'Our Lady of the Forsaken,' and the arms of the Archbishop Rocaberti of Valencia, for Don Felipe Firmin's treatise on minor benefices.

ORRENTE, PEDRO, was a Spanish painter, born at Montealegre, in Murcia, about the year 1560. He was probably a scholar of Il Greco's, at Toledo, but he subsequently visited Italy, where he became a follower of the Venetian school, and an imitator of Titian, Giorgione, and Bassano. He was favoured with the protection of the Duke of Olivarez, who employed him in painting several pictures for the palace of the Buen Retiro at Madrid. Soon after 1611 he painted for the Vizconde de Huesca, in Murcia, eight pictures on 'The History of the Creation;' and in 1616 he produced a 'St. Sebastian,' for the cathedral at Valencia, where also he established a school in which Pontons and March were among his pupils. He next proceeded to Cuença, where he founded another school, in which he had Salmeron for a scholar. Many of his works are in the churches and convents at Valencia and Cordova. In the cathedral at Toledo, over the door of the sacristy, is a fine picture representing 'Santa Leocadia coming out of the sepulchre, before St. Ildefonso;' and in the Reyes Nuevos, in the same church, was a 'Nativity' painted by him, which has been since removed into the royal collection. Another picture by this master representing 'Orpheus playing to the brute Creation' hangs in the Royal Palace. There are also in the king's possession four landscapes, whilst the Madrid Gallery has eight of his paintings, including 'The Adoration of the Shepherds,' and 'The Repose of Lot's Family.' A 'St. John in the Wilderness' was in the Suermondt Collection at Aix-la-Chapelle, and other works of his are at Dresden, Paris, and St. Petersburg. Being especially successful with animals and landscapes, he made choice of such Biblical subjects as permitted the introduction of these. His last years were spent at Seville and at Toledo, where he died in 1644, and was buried in the same church as Il Greco.

ORSAY, COMTE D', the son of General d'Orsay, an officer of the French Republic and Empire, was born in Paris at the beginning of the present century. When about twenty years of age he entered the French military service, and whilst with his regiment at Valence, became acquainted with the Earl of Blessington and his Countess. After that he threw up his commission and travelled with them on a tour in Italy, eventually marrying Lord Blessington's daughter by his first wife. He was appointed Superintendent of the Fine Arts by Louis Napoleon, but shortly afterwards (1852) he died of disease of the lungs. There is a half-length by him of the Duke of Wellington in the National Portrait Gallery, and the South Kensington Museum possesses some of his pencil caricatures. D'Orsay also practised sculpture.

ORSEL, VICTOR, a French historical painter, born at Lyons in 1795. He went to Rome, where, about 1825, he came under the influence of Overbeck, but he also studied from the antique, and was a close observer of nature; his object being, as he said, 'to baptize Greek art.' In Paris he was one of the artists employed in the chapel of the Virgin in the church of Notre Dame de Lorette. Orsel died in 1850. Among his other works are:

La Charité. 1822. (Lyons Hospital)
Adam and Eve with the body of Abel. 1824.
Moses, with a child, presented to Pharaoh. 1839.
(Exhibited in the Capitol at Rome.)
Good and Evil. 1833. (Engraved by Vibert.)

ORSI, BENEDETTO, was a native of Pescia, and flourished about the year 1660. Lanzi numbers this artist among the disciples of Baldassare Franceschini, and mentions in favourable terms a picture by him in the church of San Stefano, at Pescia, representing 'St. John the Evangelist.' He also painted the 'Seven Works of Mercy,' for La Compagnia dei Nobili, and a large lunette at Pistoja, in S. Maria del Letto, which was long attributed to Volterrano. He died about 1680.

ORSI, LELIO, called LELIO DA NOVELLARA, was a painter, designer, and architect, and was born at Reggio in 1511. Having been banished from his native city, for some unknown reason, he first proceeded to Rome, and subsequently established himself at Novellara, whence his common appellation. From the similarity of his style to that of Correggio, he has been supposed to have been a disciple of that master, with whom he was certainly on terms of friendship. That he studied Correggio's works attentively is evident, from his having occasionally copied his pictures, of which one of the most remarkable is a fine copy of the famous 'Notte,' in the Casa Gazzola, at Verona. Others have stated him to have been a scholar of Michelangelo; but this tradition is suspected, although Tiraboschi asserts that he resided at Rome in the time when that artist was painting some pictures for the churches. There were many of his fresco works in the churches at Reggio and Novellara, which are now nearly all perished: Orsi died in 1587. Italian writers say he was "in pittura grande, in architettura ottimo, e in disegno massimo" (in painting great, in architecture best, and in drawing greatest).

ORSI, PROSPERO, was born at Rome, apparently about 1560. He lived during the pontificate of Sixtus V., who employed him in the palace of S. Giovanni Laterano, where he painted two of the ceilings, one representing 'Moses with the Children of Israel passing the Red Sea;' the other, 'Jacob receiving the Blessing from Isaac.' He was the particular friend of Giuseppe Cesare d'Arpino, whose manner of painting he imitated. He died at Rome in 1635.

ORSI, TRANQUILLO, was a painter and architect of Venice in the present century, who died, in 1844, while professor of perspective there. He produced views of churches, palaces, and public buildings, and some of his works are in the Venice Academy.

ORSINI, ANTONIO, a native of Ferrara, who engraved there about 1730.

ORSOLONI, CARLO, an Italian engraver, was born at Venice about the year 1724. He carried on a considerable commerce in prints, and was employed in engraving some of the plates for the 'Museo Fiorentino.' Among others, we have the following by him:

St. Jerome in Meditation; after Ant. Balestra.
St. Francis de Sales; after the same.
The Virgin with several Saints; after Pietro Ricchi.

ORSONI, GIUSEPPE, (or ORSINI,) a Bolognese painter, born 1691, died 1755. He was a pupil of Pompeo Aldrovandini, and worked much with Stefano Orlandi at ornamental painting in theatres and private houses.

ORTIGA, BONANT DE, painter to the deputies of Aragon, was living in 1457. He painted an altar-piece with figures of St. Simon and St. Jude for the church of St. Francis, in Saragossa.

ORTO, DIEGO DE, was a miniature painter of Seville, son of BERNARDO DE ORTO. Between 1540 and 1575 he decorated a number of choir-books, &c. In some of these his brothers assisted him.

ORTOLANO, DEL'. See BENVENUTI, GIOV. BATT.

ORVIETANI, ANDREA and BARTOLOMMEO, were two painters who worked at Orvieto between 1405 and 1457.

ORVIETANO, UGOLINO, a painter, who was employed in the cathedral of Orvieto about 1321.

OS, GREGORIUS JACOBUS JOHANNES VAN, flower painter, was the second son of Jan van Os, and was born at the Hague in 1782. He gained a prize at Amsterdam in 1809, and on going to Paris in 1812 he won a gold medal, and was employed on designs for Sèvres. Here he spent the greater part of the next fifty years, painting flowers after the manner of Van Huysum, and now and then exhibiting landscapes. Two of his best flower-pieces are now in the Hague Museum. Van Os died in Paris in 1861. He was a member of the Academy of Amsterdam. Among his works we may also name:

Amsterdam. R. Museum. Flowers.
Rotterdam. Museum. Flowers.
" " Fruit and Flowers.
" " Landscape in Guelders.

OS, JAN VAN, a painter of fruit, flowers, and marine subjects, was born at Middelharnis, in Holland, in 1744, and was a scholar of Aart Schonman, at the Hague. His marine-pieces are only fair, but his fruit and flowers are in great request, and approach those of Jan van Huysum.

He died at the Hague in 1808. A good 'Vase of Flowers' by him is in the possession of Cremer of Rotterdam. Jan van Os was also a poet. Among his works may be included :

Frankfort. Stadel Gal. A Sea-piece.
 London. Nat. Gal. Flowers, Fruit, and Dead Birds.
 Paris. Louvre. Flowers and Fruit.
 Petersburg. Hermitage. Flowers and Fruit.

OS, PIETER GERARDUS VAN, the eldest son of Jan van Os, was born at the Hague in 1776, and was instructed in the elements of art by his father, but devoted himself mainly to cattle painting, and made the works of Paul Potter and Karel du Jardin his models. His etchings, consisting of cattle, sheep, &c., from his own designs, and also after Paul Potter, Berchem, and Ruisdael, are valuable. His prints are sometimes signed P. G. van Os fec. et exc., and sometimes with his initials only, P. G. V. O. f. He died at the Hague in 1839. There is a good 'Landscape with Cattle' by him in the Rotterdam Museum.

OSBORNE, JOHN, an English portrait painter, who practised at Amsterdam in the 17th century. There is a portrait of Frederick Prince of Orange by him.

OSELLO, GASPAR, called GASPAR AB AVIDUS CITADELENSIS, or GASPAR PATAVINUS, or PADOVANO, was an engraver, born at Padua in 1530. He imitated the style of Giorgio Ghisi Mantuano, whose pupil he may possibly have been. He lived until 1585. He has left sixty-six plates of 'Portraits of the Archdukes of Austria;' also that of the Physician Andreas Mattioli Sinensis, and a 'Marriage of the Virgin,' after Paolo Veronese. He signed his prints with a monogram composed of the letters, C.A.P.

OSSENBEECK, JAN (or JOSSE VAN), a painter and etcher, was a native of Rotterdam, born about 1627. After having received some instruction in his native city, he went to Italy, and distinguished himself at Rome as a painter of landscapes, with animals, fairs, and huntings, in the style of Peter van Laar, whose works were then greatly admired. Thence he proceeded to Vienna, where he became court painter; next to Frankfort; and, lastly, to Ratisbon, where he died in 1678. He usually embellished his pictures with waterfalls, grottoes, ruins, and architecture, designed from the remains of antiquity in and near Rome. Pictures :

We have by this artist sixty-two etchings, executed in a firm and free style, twenty-seven of which are from his own designs, and thirty-two after other masters. He engraved part of the plates for the collection called the 'Gallery of Teniers.' Among his plates the following may be particularized :

OSSENBEECK, W., a Dutch painter, of whom scarcely anything is known. He flourished about 1632, and may have been the father of Jan van Ossenbeeck. In the Rijks Museum, Amsterdam, there is a picture by him of 'Mercury and Io.' It is signed W. Ossenbeeck, F. 1632.

OSTADE, ADRIAEN JANSZON VAN, a celebrated and prolific painter of scenes from Dutch peasant life, was born at Haarlem on the 10th of December, 1610. His father, Jan Hendrik, was probably a weaver, and had retired before the religious persecutions from the town of Eyndthoven. His mother's name was Janneck Hendrik, and the children adopted the name of Ostade, from a small hamlet of that name near Eyndthoven, which may have been the birthplace of their father. Adriaen and his younger brother Isack became artists, and the former, entering the school of Frans Hals, was there the fellow-student of Adriaen Brauwer. On leaving Hals, Adriaen set up as a painter in Haarlem, and his name as Ostade is first mentioned in 1636, when he is recorded under it as a member of the Schutterij or civic guard. In 1638 he married Machtelgen Pietersen, who died in 1640; and his father in the following year. His own portrait, painted by himself in middle life, presents a grave and melancholy face. His costume is that of a Puritan; and altogether the portrait is not that of the loose and jovial man we should expect from the riotous scenes that he selected for the subjects of his pictures. It has been ascertained that he married a second time, but the name of this wife is not known. She died in 1666, and Adriaen himself, on the 27th of April, 1685, in the Nieuwe Kruysstraet. On the 2nd of May he was buried in the church of St. Bavon, where he had previously laid the remains of his two wives. The sale-list of the works of art he left included two hundred pictures by his own hand, and a collection of his etchings, drawings, &c. Smith's catalogue mentions nearly four hundred of Adriaen van Ostade's oil pictures. He executed besides an unknown number in water-colours, and a vast quantity of pencil drawings and etchings. Of the latter Bartsch has enumerated fifty. The Teyler Museum at Haarlem contains a fine collection. Besides his younger brother Isack, Adriaen had the following pupils: Cornelis Dysart, Cornelis Bega, Michiel van Musscher, R. Brackenburgh, and Jan Steen. These all adopted more or less of Adriaen's manner. The following are some of Adriaen Ostade's more important works :

OSTENDORFER, HANS, probably the son of Martin Ostendorfer, prepared a Tilt-book for Duke William IV. of Bavaria, in conjunction with the maître d'armes, Hans Schenk. It is now in the Royal Library at Munich.

OSTENDORFER, MARTIN, was court painter to the Duke William IV., in the first half of the 16th century; he belonged to the school of Landshut. He painted the portraits of his master and his wife, Maria Jacobâa. Two pictures of his are in the Moritz Chapel at Nuremberg, viz. :

The Martyrdom of St. Andrew.
The Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew.

OSTENDORFER, MICHAEL, painter, sculptor, and wood engraver, flourished in the first half of the 16th century, and formed himself mainly upon A. Altdorfer. He worked in Ratisbon from 1519 to 1559, and died there in the latter year. Among his pictures we may specify :

In the Munich Gallery there is also a small 'Hilly Landscape,' which was formerly in the Wallerstein collection, and is now ascribed to Alt-dorfer, but is much more probably the work of Ostendorfer. He engraved on wood a genealogical tree of the Turkish Sultans, with their busts.

He then travelled in Germany, Holland, and France, and returned in 1805 to his native place, where he devoted himself to the painting of hattle-pieces, in which he evinced much acquaintance both with military matters and with horses. He died at Zurich in 1808. Among his works we may mention :

Patrol of Hussars.
A Horse dragging a dead Chasseur.
Brother Nikolaus von der Flüte at the fatal Meeting at Stanz in 1481 (left incomplete at Ott's death).

OTTAVIANI, GIOVANNI, an Italian designer and engraver, was born at Rome about 1735, and died in 1808. He was a pupil of Wagner at Venice, and on his return to Rome engraved several plates after some of the most distinguished masters. The following are among the best of his works :

St. Jerome with a Crucifix; after Guercino.
St. Cecilia; after the same.

OTTENS, FREDERIK and JAN, two little known engravers, who flourished at Delft early in the 18th century.

OTTEVAERE, AUGUSTE, a native of Everghem, Flanders, who painted from 1809 to 1856. He lived chiefly in Paris, but died at Ghent in the latter year mentioned. He was a pupil of E. Verboeckhoven, and painted similar subjects.

OTTINI, FELICE, called FILICETTO DI BRANDI, was one of the best scholars of H. Brandi. In the churches of Rome there are but a few pictures by him, for he died young in 1697. He also etched from his own designs and from the works of other Italian masters. He signed his etchings F. O. F.

OTTINI, PASQUALE, (called PASQUALOTTO,) was born at Verona about 1570, and died in the same city, of the plague, in 1630. He was a disciple of Felice Ricci, whose manner he imitated so happily that he was employed, after that artist's death, in conjunction with Turchi, to complete several pictures which Ricci had left unfinished. A study of the works of Raphael added much to the improvement of his talent. A good example of his workmanship is 'The Slaughter of the Innocents,' in San Stefano; and he appears to still more advantage at San Giorgio in the picture of St. Nicholas, with St. Bernard and several fathers of the Church. A single etching is known by him; it is an 'Entombment,' and is signed Pasq. Otti. Ver. inv.

OTTLEY, WILLIAM YOUNG, an English writer, and artist, was born near Thatcham (Berks.), in 1771. He was of a good family, and cultivated art as an amateur. Having studied under Cuit, and in the schools of the Academy, he went, in 1791, to Italy, where he remained ten years, studying and collecting works of art. He is mainly known as an author, but he illustrated many of his books himself. In 1833 he was appointed Keeper of the Prints in the British Museum. He died in London in 1836. His chief works are :

- Inquiry into the Origin and Early History of Engraving.' 1816.
- 'The Stafford Gallery.' 1818.
- 'The Italian School of Design' (with etchings by himself.) 1823.
- 'A series of plates after the early Florentine School.' 1826.
- 'Fac-similes (by himself) of Prints of early Italian, German, and Flemish Schools.' 1826.
- 'Fac-similes (by himself) of rare Etchings after Italian, Flemish, and Dutch Schools.' 1828.
- 'Notices of Engravers and their Works.' 1831.
- 'An Inquiry into the Invention of Printing.' 1863.

In 1823 Ottley exhibited a spirited design at the Royal Academy, of 'The Battle of the Angels.'

OTTMER, KARL THEODOR, an architect and painter, was born at Brunswick in 1800, and after having attended the Carolinum there during 1816-19, he in 1822 went to Berlin, seven years later to Paris, and thence to Italy, where he first devoted himself to painting, although throughout his life he was more engaged in building. He died at Berlin in 1843. He was a member of the Architectural Union of Great Britain, and an honorary member of the Berlin Academy.

OTTO, H. F., an obscure German engraver, said to have been a native of Berlin. He resided at Frankfort in 1707, and engraved part of the heads for a work entitled, 'Notitia Universitatis Francofurtianæ,' published in that year. His plates consist chiefly of book ornaments.

OTTO, JOHANNES SAMUEL, was born at Unruhstadt, in the province of Posen, in 1798. He visited the Berlin Academy, where he was much occupied in etching after the architectural drawings of Schinkel. He also painted several altar-pieces, as well as many portraits; some of his portraits of royal personages he reproduced by lithography.

He also worked in facsimile after Holbein's 'Dance of Death.' In 1844 he was named a Royal Professor. He was a great friend of Kiss the sculptor. Otto died in Berlin in 1878. There is a portrait of Kiss by him in the National Gallery at Berlin. We may also name :

- Portrait of the Opera singer, Lehmann.

OUDENDIJK, ADRIAEN, a landscape painter, was born at Haarlem about 1648, and instructed by his father. He painted landscapes and views of towns, some of which are enriched with figures by Dirck Maas, probably when he was young; but his chief skill lay in copying, or rather pillaging, the works of Adriaen van de Velde and Thomas Wyck, for which he was surnamed 'Rapiansus.' The time of his death is not known, but he was living in 1696.

OUDENDIJK, EVERT, a painter at Haarlem, who was admitted into the guild in 1640. He was the father of Adriaen Oudendijk. He painted landscapes enlivened with stag-hunts and similar subjects.

OUDENROGGE, JOHANNES DIRCKSZ, a painter of whose life few particulars are known, but in the Museum at Amsterdam there is a picture, 'The Workshop of a Weaver,' signed by him, and dated 1652. Oudenrogge visited France in 1651 and died two years later, in 1653, at Haarlem.

OUDRY, JACQUES CHARLES, animal painter, was the son of Jean Baptiste Oudry, and the pupil of his father. He was born in Paris in 1720. He was received into the Academy in 1748. He travelled much; he lived for a time at Brussels, where he was painter-in-chief to Prince Charles of Lorraine; and died at Lausanne in 1778.

OUDRY, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French painter and engraver, born in Paris in 1686. His first art instruction was received from his father, an artist who combined the trade of picture-dealing with painting. He also studied in the old 'maitrise' of St. Luke, and under de Surre, the king's painter at Marseilles, whom he accompanied to that city. On his return to Paris he became a pupil of Largillière, under whom he studied five years, and who bestowed great care on his training, and fully recognized the peculiar bent of his genius. In 1717 he had already risen to such repute, that when Peter the Great came to Paris in that year, he had his portrait painted by Oudry. He was elected a member of the 'maitrise' in 1708, and subsequently filled in it the offices of assistant and professor. Oudry was received into the Académie des Beaux Arts as an historical painter in 1717, on his picture of 'Abundance.' For many years his practice consisted of portraits and votive pictures for churches: in fact, whatever came to him. Among these works, the most noteworthy were the 'Nativity' in the church of St. Len, and the 'Adoration of the Magi' in St. Martin-des-Champs. At one time he was disposed to seek better fortunes in Russia, whither he was invited by the Czar, whose portrait he had painted. A commission to paint some hunting-scenes for the Duke d'Antin, however, turned the scale in favour of his native country, and induced him to remain in France. But it was not until he was presented to Louis XV. that he was enabled to devote himself entirely to the class of work on which his reputation rests. He became a great favourite with the king, and was assigned apartments in the Louvre. His brush was in constant requisition to portray the royal dogs and hunts, as well as any additions to the king's collection of wild animals. Basking in the sunshine of court patronage, there was now no lack of commissions to paint his favourite subjects. One of his chief patrons was Fagon, the finance minister, for whom he executed many decorative works. By him he was appointed, in 1734, to the superintendence of the manufactory at Beauvais, and his success in this undertaking obtained him the like appointment at the Gobelins. In producing designs for execution at these establishments, he worked assiduously, and for some time single-handed, until he summoned Boucher and Natoire to his aid. Notwithstanding these labours he found time to paint a great number of pictures. Moreover, his appreciation of La Fontaine led him to produce illustrations for the fine edition of that poet's fables which was published in 1755. In the same year he was struck with apoplexy. He removed to Beauvais, in the hopes of obtaining benefit from the change; and there he died on the 30th April, 1755. The following is a list of his better works:

OUVRIER, JEAN, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1725, and died in 1754. We have by him a variety of vignettes, landscapes, and other subjects, of which the following are considered the best:

The Villagers of the Apennines; after Pierre.

A View in the Apennines; after the same.

OUWATER, ALBERT VAN, an early Dutch painter whose life and works are involved in great obscurity, and, presumably, a native of the town of Ouwater, or Oudewater. He is the first painter mentioned by Van Mander as having been a native of Holland, and must therefore, in a sense, be called the founder of the Dutch school. No picture, however, can be certainly pointed to as his. The old biographers tell us that he acquired a well-deserved reputation by his skill in the treatment of landscape, and in the painting of hands and feet. In the 16th century the gallery of Cardinal Grimani possessed a few landscapes which were said to be his, but they have disappeared. They are mentioned by Morelli's 'Arconimo' as the work of 'Alberto d'Olanda.' Van Mander ascribes to Albert an altar-piece in the great church of Haarlem, representing St. Peter and St. Paul, life-size, and, on a predella, pilgrims on the way to Rome in a finely painted landscape. A 'Descent from the Cross,' in the Cologne Museum, which has also been ascribed to Ouwater, is of a totally different character. It bears, too, the year 1480, which may well be later than Ouwater's true date. Of that, however, we know nothing positive, as Van Mander tells us the year neither of his birth nor his death. A 'Descent from the Cross,' at Vienna, which Passavant gives to Ouwater, is in a different manner again. Perhaps Ouwater's true style is to be traced in such works as the 'Adoration of the Kings,' which is No. 1079 in the National Gallery. On this panel the word OUWATER has been written, probably with the butt-end of a brush, while the paint was still wet, so that the reddish under-painting shows through the letters. This seems at least to connect the picture in some way with the town of Ouwater. Supposing it to be Albert's work it would make him the fountain-head from which the styles of Gheerardt David and Patinir were derived, and would give him much affinity with Dirck Bouts. W. A.

OUWATER, GHEERARDT VAN. See DAVID.

OUWATER, ISAAC, an artist, born in 1747, at Amsterdam. He painted there, at Utrecht, and at Haarlem. His subjects were views of or in towns, into which he introduced figures and animals. He died at Amsterdam in 1793. Six pictures by him were sold, in 1814, at the sale of J. C. van Hall ; and there are in the Museum at Amsterdam, two views of that city by him.

OUWATER, JAKOB, was a Dutch painter of fruit, flowers, insects, birds, &c., of whom little is known. He lived long, however, at the Hague, where he was inscribed, in 1754, on the registers of the 'Pictura' brotherhood. He afterwards worked for a time at Middelburg.

OUWERKERK, JAN VAN, an unimportant Dutch painter, was established at Middelburg in 1774, where he painted marine views. He was a pupil of Marinus Piepers.

OVENS, JURIAEN, a Dutch painter and etcher, was born at Amsterdam in 1623. He has been supposed to have been brought up in the school of Rembrandt. Whether this be correct or not, he certainly excelled in painting night-pieces and subjects by torch-light ; he was also eminent as a portrait painter. There are some of his works in the Stadt-house at Amsterdam, representing subjects from Dutch history. In 1675 he was invited to Friedrichstadt, to the court of the Duke of Holstein, in whose service he remained till his death, which occurred on the 7th December, 1678. There has been some confusion as to the dates of Juriaen Ovens, in consequence of a mistaken assertion, supported by Nagler, that on a portrait of himself, painted by him in 1666, the words anno ætatis 66, were to be read. Pictures of his are to be found as under :

Amsterdam. Town Hall.	The Conspiracy of Claudius Civilis.

Among his etchings there are :

- The Whale. 1659.
- Inauguration of Kiel University. 1666.
- Portrait of Chancellor Kielmann.

OVERBECK, BONAVENTURA VAN, called 'Romulus,' a painter, engraver, and author ; was born in 1660 at Amsterdam. He was probably a pupil of Gerard Lairesse, and went three times to Rome, many of the antiquities of which city he drew and engraved. He painted there also a picture for the Bentvogel Society, which was engraved by Van Pool. Schenk engraved his 'Mars and Apollo,' and C. Vermeulen his portrait by C. le Blon. He died in 1706. After his death, his work, 'Reliquiæ antiquæ urbis Romæ,' was published in 1708, and remarks upon it, by P. Rolli, in 1739.

OVERBECK, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, the leader of the modern religious movement in German art, was born at Lubeck on the 4th of July, 1789. His ancestors for three generations were Protestant ministers ; his father was doctor of laws, a poet, and Burgomaster of his native city. After a general education conducted mostly at home, Overbeck was sent, in 1806, to prosecute his art studies at Vienna, in the Academy. The method there in force soon awakened strong opposition in his peculiar temperament, which led to his expulsion with several of his sympathizers. In 1810 he went to Rome, where, with his friend Cornelius, he founded the school of German pre-Raphaelites ; the home of the brotherhood being the disused monastery of Sant' Isidoro, on the Pincian. The first important commission Overbeck received was one from Queen Caroline of Bavaria for an 'Adoration of the Kings.' This was in 1811 : two years later he deserted the faith of his fathers, and was received into the Roman Church. This change, which can hardly have failed to distress the parents at home, must no doubt be taken as the explanation of Overbeck's deliberate avoidance of his native place on his several visits to Germany. After his parting with them in 1806, he never again saw his mother and father, although they did not die until 1820 and 1821 respectively. In 1819, an exhibition of German pictures, painted in Rome, was held in the Palazzo Cafarelli, and the chief interest centred in the works of Overbeck, Cornelius, Veit, and Schadow. One of Overbeck's contributions was a 'Madonna' which showed an almost slavish deference to Raphael. The other was a 'Flight into Egypt,' in which little of his own ascetic bent could be perceived. In 1819 Overbeck married a lady, a native of Vienna, whose Christian name was Nina, and who, we are told, had no right to a surname, for she was the illegitimate daughter of a Viennese noble, from whom she received a dowry. By her he had two children, a girl who died young, and a boy, Alfons Maria, who only lived long enough to give promise of considerable powers. In 1831 Overbeck paid a visit to Germany. In 1833 he was present at the opening of Raphael's tomb in the Pantheon. In 1840 occurred the death of his son, which was followed thirteen years later by that of his wife. In 1855 he visited Germany for the last time. Two years later he was honoured by a visit in his studio from Pius IX., on the 7th of February, and on the 12th November, 1869, he died at the age of eighty. The following list includes most of his important works :

OVERBECK, (or OVERBEECK,) LEENDERT, a Dutch landscape painter and engraver, born at Haarlem in 1750. He was a pupil of H. Meyer, and at first designed tapestry and ornaments, but afterwards turned his attention to drawing and etching, in which latter he became very skilful. In the year 1775 he was Moderator in the Academy at Haarlem, and gave the following year a discourse which was printed. He worked in Amsterdam and at Weesp, and died at Haarlem in 1815. He engraved a number of Dutch landscapes with figures, among which are views in the neighbourhood of Haarlem, dated 1791-93, and two of Leyden, dated 1807.

OVERLAET, ANTON, a designer and etcher, who lived at Antwerp in the latter half of the 18th century, and had at first been a journeyman haker. He was admired for his pen-and-ink drawings from portraits, historical pictures, landscapes, and genre scenes. Among his copies we may name :

Beggar and his Wife; after Rembrandt. 1760.

Dutch Village, with Castle and Canal; after the same. 1761.

Two drawings of Male and Female Peasants; in A. Ostade's manner.

OWEN, The Rev. EDWARD PRYCE, an English etcher and painter, born in 1788. He graduated at Oxford, took orders in the Church of England, and cultivated art as an amateur. He published some etchings of ancient buildings in Shrewsbury, 1820-21, and another volume of etchings in 1826. He died at Cheltenham in 1863.

OWEN, SAMUEL, marine painter in water-colours, was born in 1768. His subjects were generally shipping, which he executed in a correct and skilful manner. He exhibited for the first time at the Royal Academy in 1794, and again in 1797, when his subject was the 'British and Spanish Fleets, commanded by Sir John Jarvis.' He was a member of the 'Associated Artists in Water-Colours,' a defunct society, which was founded in 1808. For several years before his death (which occurred at Sunbury in 1857) he had given up painting. He made the eighty-three drawings illustrating Bernard Cooke's 'The Thames.'

OWEN, WILLIAM, an eminent painter of portraits and fancy subjects, was born at Ludlow in 1769, and was educated at the grammar-school of that town. It is not known that he received any instruction in painting until he reached his seventeenth year, although he had as a boy exhibited a strong inclination for art. About 1786 he was sent to London and placed under Catton, who had been a coach-painter, but was then a Royal Academician; and soon afterwards a copy Owen made of Reynolds's picture of Perdita, introduced him to the notice of the President and to the benefit of his instruction. In the year 1792 he made his first appearance as an exhibitor at Somerset House, with the 'Portrait of a Gentleman,' and a view of Ludford Bridge, Ludlow; each succeeding year his practice as a portrait painter increased, till in the year 1798 he exhibited no less than ten. This may be considered good evidence of his artistic skill, for he had no advantage of patronage like Reynolds, Beechey, Lawrence, and Hoppner, who divided the world of fashion between them. And among those who sat to him were some of the most distinguished men of the day; such as William Pitt, Lord Grenville, Sir William Scott, Cyril Jackson, Vicary Gibbs, Chief Justice Abbot, the Marquis of Stafford, the Earl of Bridgewater, John Soane the architect, Viscount Exmouth, and many others. The 'Blind Beggar's Daughter of Bethnal Green,' 'The Sleeping Girl,' 'The Schoolmistress,' 'The Girl at the Spring,' 'The Road-side,' 'The Cottage Door,' 'The Children in the Wood,' are among his subject pictures. In 1804 he became an Associate, and in 1806 a full member of the Royal Academy; in 1810 he was appointed portrait painter to the Prince of Wales. The Prince Regent offered to knight him, an honour which he refused. For the last five years of his life he was in a state of almost utter helplessness, but his sufferings were at last put an end to in 1825 by the mistake of a chemist's boy, who sent him a bottle of opium instead of a harmless draught. Owen died on the 11th of February, 1825. Besides the pictures already named the following may be noted :

OZANNE, JEANNE FRANÇOISE, and MARIE JEANNE, were the sisters of Nicolas Ozanne, and were instructed in engraving by Aliamet. We have by them several prints of sea-ports, &c., among which are the following :

A View of the Port of Dieppe; J. F. Ozanne; after Hackert.

A View of St. Vallery; the same.

Two Views of the Port of Leghorn; M. J. Ozanne; after Vernet.

A Calm; the same; after the same.

Two Pastoral subjects; after Phil. Wouwerman; M. J. Ozanne.

OZANNE, NICOLAS, a French engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1724. He engraved from his own drawings a number of plates of marines and sea-ports, which are esteemed for their neatness. We have, among others, the following by him :

A set of four Landscapes and Marines; Ozanne fec.

Two Views of the Port of Brest.

OZANNE, PIERRE, designer and engraver, was born in Paris in 1725, who produced four sets of etchings of shipping. He was probably a brother of Nicholas.

PAAR, WENZEL, COUNT VON, executed some drawings and etchings. His son LOUIS, born at Vienna in 1772, and died in 1819, also painted several landscapes.

PAAS, CORNELIUS, a German engraver, born in 1740. He settled in London about 1765, and became engraver to George III. He died in London in 1806.

PABLO, PEDRO, was a Catalonian, who in 1563, in conjunction with Pedro Serafin, a Greek, painted the doors of the great organ in Tarragona cathedral. The artists received three hundred Catalonian pounds for this performance, and were employed in various works by the chapter.

PABST, PAUL, a Dutch gentleman, who was Burgomaster of Rochlit, Leipsic, in 1490, and built the church of St. Peter there. He decorated its interior with pictures, and was still living in 1524. He was also called Pabst van Ohorn, or Oham.

PACCHIA. See DEL PACCHIA.

PACCHIAROTTO, JACOPO (or GIACOMO), was born at Siena in 1464, and resided there until 1535, when, joining a conspiracy of the people against the government, he was obliged to leave the country; he took refuge in France, where he became acquainted with Il Rosso; and it is said that he executed paintings for Francis I. at Fontainebleau. He appears to have returned to Siena in 1536; but three years afterwards he was again in trouble with the government, when he was outlawed. By the intercession of his wife Girolama, however, he was pardoned, and in 1540 restored to his family. No record has been found of him after this date. Owing to the fact that Pacchiarotto is not mentioned by Vasari, great confusion has arisen regarding him. Many of his works have been attributed to Perugino, but, on the other hand, many pictures by Girolamo del Pacchia have been ascribed to Pacchiarotto. The fresco in Santa Caterina at Siena, representing 'The Visit of St. Catharine to the body of St. Agnes at Montepulciano,' long attributed to Pacchiarotto, has now been proved to be by Del Pacchia. Among other pictures by the latter which have been attributed to the former, may be mentioned a 'Madonna and Child,' in the National Gallery. Two pictures in the Pinakothek at Munich—a 'St. Francis of Assisi,' and a 'Madonna and Child'—both formerly in San Bernardino at Siena, are attributed to Pacchiarotto, as are also several works in the Academy of Siena. Speth, in speaking of this artist, terms him "the second hero of the Sienese school"—Bazzi being the first—and says that to designate him as of the school of Perugino, is only to magnify the injustice he has already undergone in having many of his best works attributed to that master; adding, "what Perugino supplied was only the spark which in Pacchiarotto grew into a flame." But Speth himself evidently attributed works by Del Pacchia to the latter, for he praises as Pacchiarotto's the above-mentioned 'Visit of St. Catharine.'

PACE DA FAENZA, painter, flourished at that town in the 14th century. His works were of a grotesque character.

PACE, DOMENICO DI. See BECCAFUMI.

PACE, MICHELANGELO, called DI CAMPIDOGGIO, a painter of fruit and flowers, was born at Rome in 1610. He was a scholar of Fioravanti, and was called 'Di Campidoglio' from an office he held in the Campidoglio, or Capitol, at Rome. There was a fine picture by him in the collection of the Duke of Marlborough at Blenheim, and many others are to be found in England. He died in 1670.

PACELLI, MATTEO, a native of the Basilicata, and a pupil of Luca Giordano, whom he followed into Spain. He died in 1731.

PACHECO, CRISTOBAL, a Spanish portrait and history painter, who flourished about 1568. He was a protégé of the Duke of Alva, for whom he painted many pictures, including several portraits.

PACHECO, FRANCISCO, a painter, was born at Seville in 1571. He was a pupil of Luis Fernandez, and his first recorded works were the Standards of the Fleets which sailed in 1594. In 1598 he executed the paintings for the Monument erected for the funeral honours of Philip II. In 1600 he painted for the Convent of Mercy some scenes from the life of St. Raymond, and in 1603 the fable of 'Daedalus and Icarus' for the Duke of Alcalá. In 1611 he visited Madrid, and on his return to Seville established a school of painting in his own house. In 1612 he painted for the nuns of St. Isabel his greatest work, the 'Last Judgment.' In 1618 he was appointed inspector of pictures. In 1620 he painted 'The Baptism of our Lord,' and 'His Banquet served by Angels in the Desert,' for the high altar of the college of St. Hermengild. In 1623 he visited Madrid with his son-in-law Velasquez, where he resided till 1625. On his return he devoted himself chiefly to the pen, and wrote the 'Treatise of Painting,' which was published in 1649. He died at Seville in 1654. The Madrid Museo possesses the following examples of his work:

St. Inés.

St. Catalina.

St. John the Evangelist.

St. John the Baptist.

PACHELBLIN, AMALIA, a German flower-painter, who was working at Nuremberg between 1686 and 1723. The details of her life are unknown.

PACHER, MICHAEL, a painter who flourished in the latter part of the 15th century. He was a native of Bruneck in the Tyrol, and his chief work is an altar-piece at Wolfgang in Salzkamegut, dated 1481.

PACHMANN. See BACHMANN.

PACICCO. See ROSA, FRANCISCO DI.

PACINI, BIAGIO DI FRANCESCO, a Florentine painter, who was living in 1525, according to the Ruolo de' Pittori. Signor Milanese suggests that he was identical with the Biagio, a pupil of Sandro Botticelli, of whom Vasari tells an absurd story in connection with the sale of a picture by him to a citizen.

PACINI, SANTI, an obscure Florentine, who lived towards the end of the eighteenth century. He made the copy which took the place of Andrea del Sarto's 'Deposition' in the convent of S. Pietro in Mugello, when the original picture was removed to the Pitti Palace.

PACK, CHRISTOPHER, an English portrait painter, born at Norwich, in 1750. Brought up to trade, he suffered some losses, and then devoted himself to art. He came to London, and was introduced to Sir J. Reynolds, whose pictures he copied. Subsequently he practised as a portrait painter at Norwich, Liverpool, Dublin, and London, where he is last heard of in 1796.

PACOT, was a native of France, and flourished about the year 1690. He engraved some plates of battles and sea-fights, which are etched and finished with the graver.

PACUVIUS, the Roman tragic poet, practised painting by way of amusement in his old age, and executed some much-admired works in the Temple of Hercules, about 150 B.C. After his time, Pliny tells us, no worthy painter arose among the Romans. The art, in fact, fell into disrepute, and scarcely any but slaves and foreigners were found to practise it at all.

PADER, HILAIRE, painter and engraver, flourished at Toulouse in the middle of the 17th century. He was a pupil of Chalette, and painted several views of Toulouse.

PADERNA, GIOVANNI, was born at Bologna about the year 1600, and was a scholar of Girolamo Curti (Dentone), under whom he became an eminent painter of perspectives and architecture. After the death of Dentone he was much employed, and his success was such as to excite the jealousy of Agostino Mitelli, one of the ablest artists in that branch. Of his numerous works at Bologna, the decorations of the Capella Zagoni, in the church of La Madonna della Libertà, are considered among his best performances. He died, according to some, in 1640; but Zani says he was living in 1647.

PADERNA, PAOLO ANTONIO, was born at Bologna in 1649, and for some time studied under Guercino. On the death of that master he entered the school of Carlo Cignani. Although he acquired some celebrity as an historical painter, he was more distinguished for his landscapes, which are in the style of his first instructor. He died in 1708.

PADERNI, CAMILLO, a Neapolitan painter, who flourished in the 18th century. He came to England, where he made several drawings from old pictures. He died about 1770.

PADOVA, GIROLAMO DA. See SORDO.

PADOVA, GIUSTO DA. See MENABUOI.

PADOVANINO, FRANCESCO, was born at Padua in 1561. It is not known by whom he was instructed in the art, but he painted history with some success. One of the most esteemed of his works is a picture representing a Saint interceding for two criminals condemned to death, in the church of La Madonna del Carmine, at Venice. He also was much employed in painting portraits. He died in 1617.

PADOVANINO, IL (ALESSANDRO). See VARTARI.

PADOVANINO, IL (OTTAVIO, son of Ludovico). See LEONI.

PADOVANINO, OTTAVIO, the son of Francesco Padovanino, was born at Padua about the year 1582. After studying some time under his father, he was sent to Rome for improvement. He acquired some celebrity as an historical painter, but was chiefly engaged in portrait painting, in which he was more successful. He died in 1634.

PADOVANO, GASPARO. See OSTELLO.

PADOVANO, GIROLAMO. See SORDO.

PADOVANO, LAURO. In the 'Venezia Descritta,' by Sansovino, this painter is said to have been a native of Padua, and a scholar of Francesco Squarcione. He was a successful imitator of the style of Andrea Mantegna, and painted for the church of La Carità at Venice some subjects from the life of St. John, which rank among the most creditable productions of the time. He is stated by the above author to have flourished about the year 1420. It is expected, however, that he is one with Lauro, or Laura da Padova, who lived to a much later period: Zani says he was at work from 1470 to 1500.

PADRO y PEDRET, TOMÁS, designer and painter, was born at Barcelona in 1840, and died there in 1877. He was a pupil of the school of art in that city, and of the Academy of San Fernando, studying under Madrazo and Riviera, and being specially distinguished for his caricatures.

PADTBRUGGE, H. L., was a native of Stockholm, and flourished about the year 1700. He engraved the greater part of the plates for a work entitled 'Suetta Antiqua et Hodierna,' published in three vols. folio; the first in 1693, the last in 1714. It contains about three hundred and fifty plates, consisting of bird's eye views and maps.

PAELINCK, JOSEPH, an historical painter, was born at Oostacker, near Ghent, in 1781. He commenced his artistic studies under Verhaegen, the professor of painting at the Academy of Ghent; after this he went to Paris, and enrolled himself among the scholars of David. In 1804 he obtained a prize offered by the Academy at Ghent, with his picture of 'The Judgment of Paris,' and was also named Professor of Design to the Academy. He shortly after vacated this appointment, and went to Italy in order to study the works of the great masters. Here he corrected much of the academic manner which he had imbibed in the school of David, and produced what is considered his best picture, 'The Finding of the Cross,' which is now in the church of St. Michel at Ghent. He remained at Rome for about five years, and during that time he painted a large picture for the palace of the Pope at Monte-Cavallo, representing the embellishments of Rome by Augustus. In 1815 he became court painter to the queen, and a member of the Netherlands Institute. In 1820 he obtained the great prize at Ghent for his 'Anthia.' Finally he became professor at the Academy of Brussels. He died in that city in 1839. His principal pictures, in addition to the above, are:

The Adoration of the Shepherds. (Convent of La Trappe, near Antwerp.)

The Flight into Egypt. (At Malines.)

The Departure of Tobit. (Opraekel, near Oudenarde.)

The Return of Tobit. (For Maria Oudenhove.)

PAESI, IL GIOVANE DE. See MUZIANO.

PAEST, HENRY, a portrait painter and copyist, who practised in England in the latter half of the 17th century. He worked under Henry Stone and Francis Barlow. There was a copy by him of Luca Giordano's 'Cyclops' at St. James's Palace. He died in 1697.

PAGANELLI, NICCOLO, a painter of Faenza born in 1538. He worked chiefly at Rome, but executed a famous picture of 'St. Martin' for the cathedral of Faenza, which has been ascribed to Luca Longhi. He died in 1620. Paganelli signed his pictures N + P.

PAGANI, FRANCESCO, was born, according to Baldinucci, at Florence in 1531. After learning the first rudiments of art in his native city he went to Rome, where he studied the works of Polidoro da Caravaggio and Maturino. He returned to Florence at the age of twenty-one, where he soon produced some works which procured him a reputation. He was considered one of the most promising artists of his time, but died young at Castelflorentino in 1561.

PAGANI, GREGORIO, the son of Francesco Pagani, was born in 1568. His father dying when he was an infant, he was placed as a disciple of Santo di Titi, and afterwards improved his style by the instruction of Lodovico Cardi, called Cigoli. In imitation of the style of that master, he painted a picture of 'The Finding of the Cross,' for the church of the Carmelites, of which a print by Cecchi is the only record. The church was destroyed by fire. Some of his fresco works remain in the cloister of Santa Maria Novella, Florence, including a 'Nativity.' His own portrait by himself is in the Riccardi Gallery of the same city, and in the Uffizi there is a 'Family of Tobit' by him. Baldinucci dates his death in 1605.

PAGANI, PAOLO, was born at Valsolda, in the Milanese state, in 1661. He formed his manner by studying, at Venice, the works of the best masters, and, according to Zanetti, established there an academy, where he introduced a style of designing the nude, which, though occasionally surcharged and extravagant, is bold and effective. After a residence of some years at Venice, where he painted several pictures for the churches, he returned to Milan, and was much employed for the public edifices and for private collections. One of his best works is in the Dresden Gallery. He died in 1716.

PAGANINI, GUGLIELMO CAPODORO, was born, according to Orlandi, at Mantua in 1670, and was a scholar of Antonio Calza. His genius led him to paint battles and encampments, but having seen some of the pictures of Borgognone at Florence, he attached himself to the study and imitation of that artist's works. No particulars as to his individual works appear to be recorded.

PAGGI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, (or PAGI,) was born at Genoa in 1554 or 1556. He was first a scholar of Luca Cambiaso, and improved himself in design by studying antique statues and bas-reliefs. He had acquired some reputation as a painter of history, when he unhappily killed an antagonist in a quarrel, which obliged him to leave Genoa, and he took refuge at Florence, where he resided twenty years, and was employed by Francesco and Ferdinando de' Medici. Florence was at that time the residence of several artists of distinction, who, with Lodovico Cardi, contributed to lift the Florentine school out of the languid state into which it had fallen, by introducing the more vigorous and effective style which was at that period established in Lombardy. His first productions were rather distinguished by grace than energy, as his 'Holy Family' in the church Degli Angeli, at Florence, proves. He afterwards adopted a manner more robust and masculine; and his large work of the 'Transfiguration,' in the church of San Marco, is painted with such vigour and effect, that it does not appear to be by the same hand. Another of his earlier works is his 'St. Catherine of Siena,' in Santa Maria Novella of the same city. Lanzi mentions as his finest works, three subjects from the Passion of our Saviour, at the Certosa at Pavia. In 1600 he was invited to return to Genoa, where he was much employed for the public edifices and private collections. His best performances at Genoa are two pictures in the church of St. Bartolommeo, and 'The Murder of the Innocents,' in the Palazzo Doria, painted in 1606, in competition with Rubens. He died in 1627. He was also a sculptor, architect, and writer on art.

PAGHOLO. See BARTOLOMMEO DI PAGHOLO.

PAGLIA, ANTONIO, a native of Brescia, born in 1680, was a son and pupil of Francesco Paglia. He died in 1747. His brother ANGELO was born in 1681, and died in 1763. Antonio was in the habit of painting from groups of little clay figures modelled by himself, by which means he obtained a piquant chiaroscuro. In colour he was akin to the second-rate Venetians.

PAGLIA, FRANCESCO, was born at Brescia in 1636, and was brought up in the school of Guercino. He painted some pictures for the public edifices at Brescia, of which the most distinguished is an altar-piece, in the church of La Carità. His best productions are his portraits. According to Zani he died in 1713.

PAGLIARI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, a painter of Cremona, was born in 1641. He died in 1717.

PAGNEST, LOUIS CLAUDE, a French portrait painter, born in 1790. His portrait of M. de Nanteuil, painted in 1817, gained him a good deal of reputation. He died in 1819.

PAGNI, BENEDETTO, was a native of Pescia, and was brought up at Rome in the school of Giulio Romano. He followed that master to Mantua, where he distinguished himself as a painter of history. In the church of Sant' Andrea is an altar-piece by him of the Martyrdom of St. Lorenzo; and at the Collegiati, a picture of the Marriage of Cana. Zani says he was at work from 1525 to 1570.

PAIGEOLINE (or PAIGELOINE). The name of this engraver is affixed to a slight etching from a picture by Paolo Veronese, representing the 'Mother of Moses brought to Pharaoh's Daughter.'

PAILLET, ANTOINE, a pupil of Bourdon, was born in Paris in 1659, and died in 1739. He was a portrait and historical painter, and professor of the Royal Academy of Paris. In 1659 he was rector of that institution.

PAINE, JAMES, a water-colour draughtsman, was a son of James Paine, the architect. He exhibited at the Spring Gardens Exhibitions in 1761-64-70, and was a member of the St. Martin's Lane Academy.

PAIOT, —, was a French engraver of little note, who appears to have been chiefly employed by the booksellers. Among others, there is a print by him of 'David,' a half-length figure, after Vignon. He lived about 1627.

PAJOU, AUGUSTE Désiré, was the son of Jacques Augustin Pajou. He was born in 1800, and studied under his father and Baron Gros. His best work is 'Las Casas and his Guides attacked by a Tiger.'

PAJOU, JACQUES AUGUSTIN, historical painter, was born in Paris in 1766. His father was the famous sculptor, Augustin Pajou. He was instructed in painting by Vincent. At first he painted portraits, among which were those of the Emperor Napoleon and several of his Marshals. He afterwards took to historical scenes, among which an 'Edipus and Polyneices,' at Fontainebleau, may be named.

PALACIOS, FRANCISCO, a Spanish painter, was born at Madrid about 1640. He entered the school of Velasquez, and early gave indications of a talent for portraiture, but the death of his master in 1660 appears to have put a limit to his progress. Jean Bermudez notices his picture of 'St. Onophrius,' in the church of the female penitentiary. He died in 1676.

PALADINI, ARCANGELA, was born at Pisa in 1599. She was the daughter of FILIPPO PALADINI, a portrait painter, by whom she was instructed in the rudiments of the art. Her talents were not confined to painting, for she excelled in music, and above all in embroidery. Her portrait, painted by herself, was placed in the gallery of artists at Florence. She died in 1622.

PALADINI, LITTERIO. In the 'Memorie de' Messinesi Pittore,' by Hackert, this painter is said to have been born at Messina in 1691. He worked at Rome, in the school of Sebastiano Conca, but studied largely from the antique. On his return to Messina, he was engaged in several considerable works in fresco, of which the most esteemed is the ceiling of the church of Monte Vergine. He died of the plague in 1743.

PALADINO, FILIPPO, a native of Florence, was born in 1544. He was a pupil of Allori. He lived in Rome and Milan, but chiefly in Sicily, where most of his works are to be found. He died at Mazzarino in 1614.

PALAGI, PELAGIO, historical painter, was born at Bologna in 1775, and was a pupil of Appiani. In the time of Napoleon he was director of the Academy at Rome, and later on a professor in that at Milan, and member of that of San Luca. He died at Turin in 1860. There are by him :

Columbus before Ferdinand and Isabella. 1829. (Signor Paloso's, Genoa.)

Coriolanus before the Gates of Rome.

Gustavus Adolphus ordering the Legislative Assembly to swear fealty to his Daughter.

A Sibyl.

PALAIS. See PELAIS.

PALAMEDES. See STIEVENS.

PALAVICINI, GIACOMO, called IL GIANNOLO, was born at Caspen in the Veltlin, in 1640. Altarpieces by this artist are found at Cremona, Verona, and Milan. He also painted a few portraits. He died in 1729.

PALCKO, FRANZ KABL, son of ANTON PALCKO (who died at Presburg in 1754), was born at Breslau in 1724. He was first a pupil of his elder brother, Franz Anton, at Presburg, and then attended the Vienna Academy and travelled in Italy. In 1752 he became court painter at Dresden, and in 1764 at Munich. He died in 1767, apparently at Prague. Among his paintings are :

Judith and Holofernes.

Deliverance of Captives. (Trinitarians, Presburg.)
St. John. (Dresden Court Chapel.)

Two etchings by him are known :

Christ and the Samaritan Woman.

Adam and Eve hiding themselves in Fear.

His brother, FRANZ ANTON PALCKO, was a pupil of his father, and became court painter to Prince Esterhazy. He has left altar-pieces in the cathedral and in the Salvatorskirche, at Vienna.

PALISSY, BERNARD, was born about 1510, at La Chapelle Biron, a village in Perigord. He was brought up to his father's trade of a glazier, but having a taste for drawing, design, and decoration, he turned it to account in painting glass for churches in the district. At the age of twenty-one he set out on his travels. He first went into the country of the Pyrenees, and after settling for a time at Tarbes, he went through France, Switzerland, and Southern Germany to Belgium and Flanders. He returned to France in 1539, and settled at Saintonge in the south-west, where he married, and pursued his manifold callings of portrait painting, glass painting, and land-measuring. While thus engaged he was seized with the desire to produce enamelled faience, and his ardour in prosecuting his researches is well known. His fame as a potter spread, and he soon attracted the notice of the Duke of Montmorency, Constable of France, who by using his influence with Catharine de' Medicis, saved Palissy from being burnt as a Huguenot. After his release from imprisonment he removed from Saintonge to the Tuileries at Paris, where he long continued to carry on the manufacture of his famous pottery. At the age of seventy-six he was again arrested as a heretic and imprisoned in the Bastille, where he died after about a year's imprisonment, in the year 1588. His life belongs rather to the history of an art with which this book is not supposed to deal, but the fact that he did once work as a painter prevents our passing his name in silence.

PALLADINO, ADRIANO, according to Orlandi, was born at Cortona in 1610, and was a scholar of Berrettini (Pietro de Cortona). He painted history in the style of his master, and executed several works for the public edifices of his native city. He died in 1680.

PALLAVICINI, LEO, appears to have resided at Milan in the early part of the 17th century. He is said to have published some prints marked with the initials L. P. f.

PALLIÈRE, ARMAND JULIEN, a painter of Bordeaux, was born in 1783. He was a brother of Louis Pallière, and was also instructed by Vincent. He painted mythological and historical pictures, such as 'The Death of Epaminondas,' 'Love,' and others.

PALLIÈRE, LOUIS-VINCENT-LÉON, a French historical painter, was born at Bordeaux in 1787. He was a scholar first of his father, who was an engraver and draughtsman, and then of Vincent, and gave early promise of arriving at excellence in the art. In 1809 he obtained a second prize for his 'Priam kneeling before Achilles,' and in 1812 the Prix de Rome for his 'Ulysses slaying the Suitors of Penelope.' At Rome, where he remained five years, he painted 'Argus slain by Mercury,' 'Prometheus tormented by the Vulture,' 'The Flagellation of Christ' (for which Louis XVIII. awarded him a gold medal: it was painted for the church of the Trinità de' Monti); and 'Juno borrowing the Girdle of Venus.' In 1819 he exhibited at the Musée 'St. Peter curing the Lame Man;' 'Tobit restoring Sight to his Father' (now in the Bordeaux Museum); 'A Shepherd in Repose;' 'A Nymph coming from the Bath;' 'Preaching at Rome during the Night;' and other subjects. He died in 1820.

PALMA, JACOPO, called PALMA VECCHIO, to distinguish him from his grand-nephew, Palma Giovine, was born at Serinalta about 1480. Very little is known of his life. His will, which has been discovered within the last few years, was made on the 28th July, 1528, and he is known to have died a few days afterwards, it is said at the age of forty-eight. In the collection of the Duc d'Aumale there is a 'Holy Conversation' with the following inscription, JACOBUS PALMA MD. This inscription Crowe and Cavalcaselle accept, and partly, at least, upon its evidence base their belief that Palma shared with Giorgione and Titian "the honour of modernizing and regenerating Venetian art." For the picture on which it occurs is entirely in the free manner of the cinquecentists. Morelli, on the other hand, refuses to accept this cartellino as genuine, or the theory of Palma's forceful originality as well founded. He contends that it was not until much later that Palma became capable of such work. At present the question must remain open. The birthplace of Palma is in the province of Bergamo, and throughout his pictures a Bergamasque feeling can be traced. We have no authentic information as to his pupilage. Giovanni Bellini, Cima, and Carpaccio seem to have been his chief models, and from the whole drift of his art we must credit him with an important share in the creation of what is too often called the Giorgionesque innovation in painting. His portraits especially are broad, luminous, and intensely human. So far as can be discovered, the brush of Palma was never officially employed, which takes away one important source of information as to his life. Like other men of his time, he was often asked for semi-allegorical pictures of heathen gods and demi-gods. Of these the records of a 'Ceres,' of a 'Rape of Ganymede,' of a canvas with Juno, Venus, and Minerva upon it, have come down to us, as well as one picture, a recumbent 'Venus,' now at Dresden. An 'Adam and Eve,' too, at Brunswick, is a fair example of his only mediocre skill in the nude. His more important pictures are enumerated below. Of Palma's last days more is known than of the rest of his life. We gather from his will that he was never married, and that consequently he had no legitimate children. The famous Violante must have been illegitimate. In his will he mentions a niece Margarita, and two nephews besides Antonio, who afterwards became famous as the father of Palma Giovine. All these were the children of a brother, Bartolommeo. Palma died in the odour of sanctity within a few days after the signing of his will, for on August 8th, 1528, his executors made an inventory of his goods, which included forty-four unfinished pictures. He was a member of the San Spirito brotherhood, and was buried in their vaults at San Gregorio, Venice.

PALMA, JACOPO, called 'IL GIOVINE,' was born at Venice in 1544. His father, Antonio, nephew of Palma Vecchio, was also his instructor. At the age of fifteen he was taken by the Duke of Urbino to Rome, where he studied chiefly the works of Polydoro Caravaggio. His manner, though mechanical, shows much talent, especially in the treatment of heads. Some of his best pictures are in the palace of the Doge, and in the Academy. After the death of Tintoretto and Paolo Veronese he seems to have displayed less care, as many of his later pictures are very inferior. He died in 1628. A good 'Madonna, with Saints,' is in the church of S. Francesco della Vigna; and a 'St. Catharine rescued from the Wheel' at S. Frari in Venice. The following examples of his art may also be named:

PALMAROLI, PIETRO, was an Italian painter and picture restorer, to whom the world is indebted for the preservation of the famous 'Descent from the Cross,' by Daniele da Volterra, which in 1809 he transferred from the wall, on which it was painted in fresco, to canvas. This was the first work of the kind, and he afterwards transferred and restored several other pictures in Rome, and, in 1826, in Dresden; among the latter the celebrated 'Madonna di San Sisto,' by Raphael. He also freed Raphael's 'Sibyls,' in the church of Santa Maria della Pace, from the destructive restorations in oil made by order of Alexander VII. His feats, however, were not all as beneficial as these. Palmaroli died at Rome in 1828.

PALMASANUS (or PALMEGGIANI). See PALMEZZANO.

PALMER, SIR JAMES, was a member of the household of Charles I., and was employed by him in the purchase of pictures. He made copies of several works in the Royal Collection, among them Titian's 'Tarquin and Lucretia.' He is also said to have painted a feast of Bacchus.

PALMER, SAMUEL, water-colour painter, was born in 1805. He early showed a taste for art, and at the age of fourteen he exhibited at the British Institution, 'Bridge Scene' and 'Landscape,' and at the Royal Academy, 'Cottage Scene, Banks of the Thames, Battersea,' 'Landscape with Ruins,' and 'A Study.' By the advice of his father-in-law, John Linnell, he underwent a course of figure drawing at the British Museum, during which time he was introduced to W. Blake. He then went to live at Shoreham with his father, and we find him exhibiting at the Academy and British Institution. In 1839 he married, and for his wedding tour spent two years in Italy. He then returned to London, and lived in Kensington till 1851, when he removed to Furze Hill, near Reigate, where he spent the remainder of his life. His last appearance at the Academy was in 1842. He was elected an Associate Exhibitor of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1843, and a full member in 1855. He was chosen a member of the Etching Club in 1853. A translation of Virgil's 'Eclogues' by him was published after his death, with plates designed and partly etched by himself. The subjects of his finest drawings were mostly from Milton. He died at Reigate in 1881. The following is a complete list of his etchings:

PALMERUCCJ, GUIDO., was born at Gubbio in 1280, and is known to have executed frescoes in the church of Santa Maria de' Laici, Gubbio, previous to 1337, and to have painted at the Town Hall in 1342. In the former of these buildings, on an exterior wall, are the remains of a figure of St. Anthony; and in the latter is a colossal 'Enthroned Virgin and Child, with Saints and a kneeling Gonfaloniere.' Many other of the churches in Gubbio possess frescoes of a similar character to those mentioned above, which may be by Guido, but there are no recorded evidences to prove the fact. His death occurred about 1345.

PALMEZZANO, MARCO (DI ANTONIO), was born at Forli, probably about the year 1456, and lived up to 1537. He was a pupil of Melozzo da Forli, and was in the habit of signing his early productions Marcus de Melotius, a fact which has occasioned many of his best paintings to be attributed to his master. He closely followed Melozzo's teachings, and his frescoes exhibit a sculpturesque hardness of style. In a chapel of San Biagio in San Girolamo, at Forli, are some frescoes representing secular scenes which are signed, Marcus Palmezzanus Victor foroliviensis M. . ., which, according to Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle, closely resemble, both in style and colour, a fresco representing eight of the prophets, painted on the dome of the Capella Tesoro in the church of Loretto. In 1497 Palmezzano executed, by order of the Prior of the Company of San Michelino of Faenza, an altar-piece representing the Virgin and Child, enthroned between SS. Michael and James the Less. The church of the Zocolanti, at Matelica near Fabriano, contains an altar-piece, 'An enthroned Virgin and Child, with a Pietà and Saints,' etc., signed Marcus de Melotius Foroliviensis fatebat, al temp. de frate Zorzo Guardiano del MoC.C.C.C.C.I., with a curious monogram. The church of the Carmine at Forli possesses a 'Glory of St. Anthony, between SS. John the Baptist and Sebastian,' with a similar inscription. The exact date of Palmezzano's death is unknown. A portrait of the artist, painted by himself in 1536, is now in the Pinacoteca of Forli. Examples of Palmezzano are also to be found as below:

PALMIERI, GIOSEFFO, (or GIUSEPPE,) was born at Genoa in 1674. Although he acquired some reputation as a painter of history, he is chiefly celebrated for his pictures of animals. One of the best of his historical works is his picture in the church of San Domenico, at Genoa, representing the 'Resurrection.' He died in 1740.

PALMIERI, PIETRO, painter and engraver, was born at Parma in 1740. He learnt the elements of art in his own city, and then went to Paris. He painted chiefly landscapes and genre subjects. After several years' residence in Paris, he was appointed a Professor in the Academy at Parma. He died at Turin in 1804.

PALMIERI, PIETRO JACOPO, engraver, was born at Bologna in 1720. He engraved landscapes and battle scenes, the latter chiefly after Simonetti.

PALOMBO, BARTOLOMEO, was born at Rome about the year 1612, and was a scholar of Pietro da Cortona. In the church of St. Joseph, at Rome, is an altar-piece by him, representing the death of that Saint; and in the church of the Carmelites of St. Martino de' Monti, a picture of 'Mary Magdalene.' He was still living in 1666.

PALOMBO, ONORIO, a painter who flourished at Naples about 1640. He was a pupil of J. B. Carraccioli and Artemisia Gentileschi, and painted chiefly for the churches.

PALOMBO, PIETRO PAOLO, an engraver of Navarra, who lived at Rome about the middle of the 16th century. Among his plates were the following :

- The Last Supper; after Raphael.
- A Holy Family; after the same.
- The Entombment; after Michelangelo.
- The Crucifixion; after the same.
- A Drawing-School; after the same.

PALOMINO, JUAN BERNABÉ, was born at Cordova in 1692, and studied painting under his uncle Antonio Palomino at Madrid, until the death of that artist in 1726. He practised engraving also, and executed the second title-page and some plates for his uncle's great work. Returning to Cordova, he devoted himself to the burin, executing a portrait of Louis XV. of France of such merit as to induce Philip V. to recall him to court. On the establishment of the Academy of San Fernando in 1752, he was made director of the engraving school, and Ferdinand VI. appointed him engraver-in-ordinary. He died at Madrid in 1777. He executed a large number of prints, some of considerable merit: 'Dionysius the Carthusian,' after Carducho; 'San Bruno,' from the statue by Pereira; 'A Miracle of St. Isidro,' after Carreño; 'St. Peter in Prison,' from a picture by Roelas, in the church of that saint at Seville; portraits of Queen Isabella, the Nuncio Cardinal Gonzaga, his own nephew, Nicolas Palomino, the Jesuit Alonzo Rodriguez, the controversialist Bishop Juan de Palafox, and many other worthies of his time. He furnished titles and frontispieces to many books. He left a son, JUAN FERNANDO PALOMINO, likewise an engraver, who died at Madrid in 1793.

PALOMINO DE CASTRO Y VELASCO, DON ACISCLO ANTONIO, the Vasari of Spain, was born at Bujalance, near Cordova, in 1653. His parents were Bernabé Palomino and Maria Andrea Lozano, who, being in good circumstances, transferred their residence to Cordova, in order to bestow an education on their son suitable to his rank. Here he studied grammar, philosophy, theology, and jurisprudence; but his ruling passion discovered itself by his devoting his leisure hours to copying prints. In 1672, the painter Juan de Valdes Leal, returned from Seville to Cordova, and was shown some of Palomino's productions; he gave him encouragement to proceed, and taught him the fundamental rules of painting. This decided his course, and he acknowledged Valdes Leal as his master. He, however, did not abandon his literary studies, and was ordained for the Church. In 1675 he received some further instruction and encouragement from Juan de Alfaro, who recommended him to visit Madrid, and study the works of the great masters there. But he stayed at Cordova till 1678, when Alfaro returned to Madrid, and Palomino accompanied him. He found employment at the court, and gave so much satisfaction to his friend Alfaro, that the latter appointed him by his will to finish some pictures which he had commenced, but had been unable to complete. Palomino next formed a friendship with Juan Carreño and Coello, and was chosen by the latter to assist in painting the ceiling of the queen's gallery at the Alcazar; he executed his part so much to the satisfaction of his coadjutor, that Coello, having other engagements at the Escorial, left him to finish the ceiling. On the marriage of Charles II. in 1690, Palomino designed the decorations for the state entry. In 1692, the arrival of Luca Giordano caused some consternation among the Spanish painters; but Palomino maintained his position. Luca was probably not so well versed in Christian as in heathen mythology, and Palomino was able to instruct him in the subjects he was called upon to paint. This he did with such delicacy and perspicacity, that Giordano, embracing him warmly, exclaimed, "The work is done!"

In 1697 he went to Valencia, where he painted the frescoes from the lives of the two St. Johns, in the presbytery of the church of San Juan-del Mercado, and remained there for three years, with the exception of a short period passed at Madrid, and painted several important pictures. While at the latter city, in 1701, he produced his 'Confession of Peter,' in Nuestra Señora Desamparados. In 1705 he went to Salamanca, to paint frescoes in the convent of San Esteban. On his return to Madrid he produced many other pictures; and in 1715 published the first volume of his 'Museo Pictórico,' on which he had been employed for many years. He had in 1712 painted the sacristy of the Carthusian monastery at Granada, with a 'St. Bruno supporting the World, amid a glory of saints and angels;' as well as five pictures for the grand altar at Cordova. He published the second volume of the 'Museo Pictórico' in 1724. From this time his health began to decline; and his wife having died in 1725, he was ordained a priest. He died in the following year, and was buried with great pomp in the same grave as his wife, in the church of San Francesco, at Madrid.

As an artist he was more successful in oil-paintings than in frescoes. He is, however, best known by his writings upon art. In his two folio volumes he notices upwards of two hundred painters and sculptors, who flourished in Spain from the time of Ferdinand the Catholic to the end of the reign of Philip IV. Of this work there was an abridgment, in Spanish, published in London in 1742, entitled, 'Las Vidæa de los Pintores y statuarios eminentes Españoles,' of which there is an English translation. The original volumes, though containing plenty of mistakes, afford a vast store of good material, and until the more exact work of Ceán Bermudez appeared, were the only source worth consulting for a knowledge of the arts and artists of Spain.

Palomino's sister, FRANCESCA ISABEL, also practised painting.

PALOUN, JOHN, a painter, was a native of Dumfries in Scotland. In 1730 he came to London, but died in the following year.

PALTHE, ADRIAAN, son of Gerard Palthe. He painted a few portraits, and copied many pictures in gouache.

PALTHE, ANTONIS, son of Gerard Palthe, and a portrait painter of little note. His widow married Willem Hendriks, of Haarlem.

PALTHE, GERARD JAN, born at Degenkamp, in Overysse, in 1681, was a scholar of Jurriaan Pool. He painted portraits, family subjects, and interiors, by candle or torch-light, in the manner of G. Schalken. He died about 1750.

PALTHE, JAN, portrait painter, a son and pupil of Gerard Jan Palthe, was born at Deventer in 1719, and resided at Leyden, where he acquired considerable reputation, and where he died in 1769. There were two other painters of the same name, who may be considered as amateurs. Works: Amsterdam. R. Museum. Portrait of Pieter Cypriaan Testart.

PALTRONIERI, PIETRO, (or PALTRINIERI,) called IL MIRANDOLESE DALLE PROSPETTIVE, was born, according to Oretti, at Bologna in 1673. He distinguished himself as a painter of perspective and architectural views. There are many of his works in the public edifices at Bologna, also at Vienna; the figures in these are frequently painted by Ercole Graziani. He died in 1741.

PALUDANUS, HEINRICH, a painter, was a native of Malines, and flourished about the middle of the 16th century. He was a pupil of F. Floria, and afterwards went to Italy, where he spent some time at the Ducal Court of Florence, and some time at Rome, eventually returning to his own country.

PALUSELLI, IGNAZ, called PADUELLO, was a native of Heimeerthale in the Tyrol, and painted several Bacchanalian pieces. He died young at Roveredo in 1778.

PAMPHILUS was a native of Amphipolia, in Macedonia, and a disciple of Eupompus. He flourished from about 390 to 350 B.C., principally in the reign of Philip, the father of Alexander the Great, and has the reputation of being the first artist who united painting with the study of the Belles Lettres. He was well acquainted with mathematics, which he considered necessary to art, employing them doubtless in calculating proportions in fore-shortening. He in fact held the opinion that a painter ought to be versed in every department of knowledge, and conversely that no education was complete that did not comprise an acquaintance with painting. Such was the lustre and dignity to which he elevated the art, that by his influence an ordinance was first published at Sicyon, and afterwards made general throughout Greece, by which painting was placed in the first rank among the liberal arts, was forbidden to be practised by slaves, and was only to be studied by persons of education and distinction. It was indeed as a teacher and theorist that he won so high a reputation, that the young men of the noblest families became his disciples. Their course of study occupied ten years, and the fee for it was a talent (£250). He distinguished himself among the painters of his time by a superior skill in composition. His pictures were usually of large dimensions, and more crowded with figures than was customary with Greek artists. One of his best represented the Battle of Phlius; another, Ulysses in his Galley. It is stated that he also practised encaustic painting. He had the credit of having been the instructor of Apellea, while Melanthis and Pausias were certainly his pupils.

PAMPLONA, PEDRO DE, scribe and miniature painter. About the middle of the 13th century he wrote and illuminated a Bible for King Alonso the Wise, of Spain. This MS. is now in the library of Seville Cathedral. The miniatures are poorly drawn and designed, but are brilliant in colour.

PAMPURINI, ALESSANDRO, a Cremonese painter of historical and religious subjects. He flourished in 1511, in which year he was at work in the cathedral of Cremona.

PAN. See LIS, JAN.

PANCALDI, PIETRO FRANCESCO, called MOLA, was a native of Ancona, but flourished as a painter at Bologna about 1780. He painted portraits and historical pieces.

PANCHET, called BELLEROSE, an obscure French painter of portraits and landscape, who was at work at Bayeux early in the present century.

PANCORBO, FRANCISCO, a little known Spanish historical painter, who was at work at Jaën about the middle of the 18th century.

PANCOTTO, PIETRO, was a native of Bologna, and flourished about the year 1590. He was brought up in the school of Carracci, and, according to Malvasia, was one of the most eccentric and enterprising artists of the Bolognese school. His principal work is the 'Last Judgment,' painted in fresco, in the church of La Madonna di San Colombano, at Bologna.

PANDEREN, EGBERT VAN, a Dutch engraver, was born at Haarlem in 1606 (according to Nagler 1575). He resided at Antwerp, where he engraved a considerable number of plates, executed with the burin in a formal style. Among others, we have the following:

The Virgin interceding with Christ for the salvation of mankind; after Rubens.

The Four Evangelists; after Pieter de Jode.

St. Louis, with a border representing his Miracles; after the same.

Three circular plates of Minerva, Juno, and Venus; after Spranger.

The Portrait of Maurice, Prince of Orange, on horseback, with a battle in the background; after Tempesta.

Four plates of the Sick Man and the Doctor; after Goltzius; scarce.

Part of the Plates for the 'Académie de l'Espée'; by G. Thibault.

PANDINO, ANTONIO DA, lived in Milan in the middle of the 15th century, and painted the Apostles in the pendentives of the cupola of San Satiro, Milan. He is also the author of a window in the Certosa of Pavia, representing 'St. Michael overcoming the Dragon.' His master was probably a glass painter, known as PANDINO MILANO.

PANDOLFI, GIANGIACOMO, was a native of Pesaro, and flourished early in the 17th century. He was a scholar of Federigo Zuccaro, of whose style he was one of the most successful followers. He painted in fresco in the Oratorio de Nome di Dio, where he treated several subjects from the Old and New Testaments. His picture of 'San Giorgio and San Carlo,' in Pesaro cathedral, is considered by Lanzi as little inferior to the works of Zuccaro.

PANEELS. See PANNEELS.

PANETTI, DOMENICO, was the son of Gasparo de Panetis of Ferrara, and was probably born about 1460. He was a contemporary of Costa, and, according to Vasari, the master of Garofalo. His early paintings show him to have been a disciple of Bono da Ferrara. The Berlin Museum possesses a 'Dead Christ wept over by the three Maries;' and the sacristy of the cathedral at Ferrara, a 'Virgin and Child enthroned,' which may be counted among his earlier productions. In 1503 he painted a 'St. Job,' and a 'Virgin and Child between four saints.' In 1509 he executed the frescoes in the chapel of San Maurelio, at San Giorgio extra Muros di Ferrara, by order of Alphonso I. In 1511 he received payment for a banner, representing on one side the Virgin and Child, and on the other a skeleton, painted for the brotherhood 'della Morte,' of Ferrara. His death occurred before 1513. Many of the private and public galleries of his native city contain pictures by Panetti; the Costabili Collection alone possesses eight. The following may also be named:

PANFI, ROMOLO, was born at Carnignano, near Pistoja, in 1632. He was instructed in the art of painting by G. Vignali, and at first painted small portraits, but afterwards took to landscapes and battle-pieces. He died about 1700.

PANFILO. See NUVOLONE.

PANHUIJS, LUISE FRIEDRIKE AUGUSTE VON, was born at Frankfort in 1763. She was the daughter of the designer and painter Helene Elisabeth von Barkhaus-Wiesenhütten (who lived from 1736 to 1804), and married van Panhuijs, the Dutch governor-general of Surinam, and resided with him at Paramaribo during 1810-16. She visited that place a second time, and on both occasions painted landscapes, plants, and butterflies from nature. She was a pupil of Gerard C. H. Schütz, and painted landscapes after Waterloo, Moucheron, and also after her own designs. She died at Frankfort in 1844.

PANICALE. See FINI.

PANICO, ANTONIO MARIA, was, according to Bellori, a native of Bologna, and a disciple of Annibale Carracci. He accompanied that master to Rome when he was very young, and was taken under the protection of Signor Mario Farnese, who employed him in ornamenting his country-seats of Castro and Latera. In the cathedral at Farnese he painted a picture of the Mass, in which he is supposed to have been assisted by Annibale Carracci.

PANINI. See PANNINI.

PANNEELS, HERMAN, a Fleming, was the engraver of two plates for a book to vindicate Philip IV.'s claim to the title of 'the Great,' published by Don Juan Antonio Sapia y Roleles at Madrid in 1638. He also engraved a portrait of Philip IV. in armour wearing the order of the Golden Fleece, inscribed 'A Religione Magnus,' and an excellent head of Olivarez, the minister, with the cross of Calatrava, both framed in tasteful borders, and taken from pictures by Velasquez.

PANNEELS, WILLEM VAN, a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Antwerp about the year 1600. He was a disciple of Rubens, as appears from the inscription on one of his prints. He worked at Cologne and Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and one of his plates is dated 1636. The year of his death is unknown. Of his work as a painter little is known, and from the number of his prints he appears to have been chiefly employed in etching after Rubens and from his own designs. The following are his principal plates:

AFTER RUBENS.

PANNI, an obscure Italian decorative painter. He was a relative and pupil of Gio. Bat. Zaist.
PANNICCIATI, JACOPO, according to Baruffaldi, was born at Ferrara about the year 1510. He was a disciple of Dosso Dossi, and painted history much in the style of that master. He died young, in 1540.

PANNINI, Cavalière GIOVANNI PAOLO, or GIAMPOLO, (or PANINI,) was born at Piacenza in 1691, or 1695. He went early to Rome, where he became a scholar of Andrea Locatelli and Benedetto Luti. He also partly adopted the style of Salvator Rosa. He applied himself to designing the remaining monuments of ancient architecture in the Roman vicinity. His merit, however, is not confined to architecture; he decorated his pictures with figures, gracefully designed, and grouped with taste. Although he usually confined himself to pictures of an easel size, he was not incapable of succeeding in works on a larger scale; and Lanzi speaks in very favourable terms of a 'Christ clearing the Temple,' with life-size figures, in the church of the Signori della Missione, at Piacenza. Works of Pannini are to be found in most large collections in England, and several decorate the palaces of Rome. Two of the finest are in the gallery of the royal palace of Monte Cavallo. Pannini died in 1764. He was a member of the Academies of San Luca, at Rome, and of Paris. Many of his pictures have been engraved by Lempereur, Le Bas, J. S. Müller, Vivares, Benazech, Bartolozzi, and other eminent engravers. The following are among those that remain :

PANNINI, GIUSEPPE, painter, was born at Rome about 1745. He was instructed by his father, Giovanni Paolo Pannini. He painted chiefly landscape and marine pictures, and travelled in Italy, France, and England. He died about 1812.

PANÆNUS, a distinguished painter of ancient Greece, was the nephew of the great sculptor, Phidias, and probably some years younger than Polygnotus and Micon. He exercised his talents in conjunction with his uncle, in adorning the temple of the Olympian Jupiter, where he painted 'Atlas supporting the World,' and 'Hercules, accompanied by Theseus and Peirithoüs, preparing to relieve him of his burden.' He also painted 'Hercules combating the Nemean Lion;' 'Hippodamia, the daughter of Ænomaus, with her mother;' 'Prometheus chained to the Rock, whom Hercules is about to deliver;' and 'Penthesilea killed by Achilles.' But the work which most contributed to the establishment of his fame, was the 'Battle of Marathon,' with which, assisted by Micon, he decorated the Pœcile at Athens.

PANTALEO, a Byzantine miniaturist of the 10th century, by whom several of the miniatures in a missal sent to Luigi Sforza, Duke of Milan, by the Emperor Basilius Porphyrogenitus, were painted.

PANTOJA DE LA CRUZ, JUAN, was born at Madrid in 1551, and was a scholar of Alfonso Sanchez Coello, in whose school he so greatly distinguished himself that Philip II. named him one of his painters and valets-de-chambre. He became very eminent both as an historical and portrait painter. Palomino possessed the original designs by him for the beautiful tombs of Charles V. and Philip II. in the Escorial, which he painted in oil, together with two escutcheons of the Arms of Austria, en grisaille, which were used at the funeral ceremony of the great Emperor. He painted a great number of portraits of the family of Philip

II., of which many exist at the Escorial, the Retiro, and in the tower of the Paradass. Several were destroyed at the burning of the Prado. At the death of Philip, he continued in favour with his successor, Philip III., who commanded him to paint his portrait on horseback, as a model for the famous sculptor, Giovanni de Bologna, then at Florence, to form the equestrian group in bronze placed in the garden of La Casa del Campo; Tacca also executed a statue from it. He painted also two magnificent portraits of Philip III. and his Queen, which are dated 1606, and are still preserved in the palace of the Dukes d'Uceda at Montalvan. Bermudez lays particular stress upon the portrait of the councillor Ruiz Perez de Ribera, which is in the monastery of Santa Maria de Naxera. It is dated in 1596. Mention is further made of a picture of the 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' in which the portraits of Philip II. and his family are introduced. Among the other notable persons whom he portrayed, we find the Empress Maria and the Princess Juana in the Descalzas Reales, and the same Empress with the Princess Margarita of Austria and Isabel de Valois in the Madrid Gallery. He was also a successful painter of animals. After a laborious life he died at Madrid in 1609. The Spanish parallel to the story of Zenxis is attached to a work by this master. It is related that a superb eagle having been captured near the Prado, the king gave orders to Pantoja to paint its likeness; which he did with so much truth, that the royal bird on seeing it mistook it for a real eagle, and notwithstanding all their efforts to control it, attacked the picture with impetuosity and tore it to pieces. The Madrid Musco possesses the following examples of his work:

- Portrait of Donna Maria, daughter of Philip II., and wife of the Emperor Maximilian II.
- Portrait of Isabel of Valois, third wife of Philip II.
- Ditto. ditto.
- Portrait of Margaret of Austria, wife of Philip III.
- Portrait of the Emperor Charles V.
- Portrait of the Infanta Juana, daughter of Philip II.
- Portrait of Philip II.
- The Birth of the Virgin.
- The Birth of Jesus Christ.
- Two female portraits.
- One male portrait.

PANTOT. A French painter of this name, a native of Lyons, was the intimate friend of Thomas Blanchet during the latter's stay in Rome, about the middle of the 17th century.

PANVINUS, ONULPH, is stated to have been a native of Antwerp. He flourished in the latter part of the 16th century. He engraved and published a set of twenty-seven portraits from his own designs, entitled 'Elogiæ et Imagines Pont. Max. ad. viv. delin.' 1568. He painted a fine picture of the Martyrdom of St. Andrew, for the church of San Michele at Lucca; and his large work in the library of San Frediano, representing Pope Gregory entertaining the Pilgrims, is in the style of Paolo Veronese. He invented an instrument for taking perspective views, and designing them in their due proportions: perhaps the Camera lucida.

PAPILLON, JEAN, 'the elder,' a French engraver on wood, was born at Rouen in 1639. He was instructed by Du Bellay, but his design was not equal to his engraving. He died in Paris in 1710.

PAPILLON, JEAN BAPTISTE, 'the younger,' the son of Jean Papillon, was born at St. Quentin in 1661. After receiving some instruction in drawing from his father, he was sent to Paris, where he was placed under the tuition of Noel Cochin. His first pursuit was drawing with a pen. He afterwards turned his attention to engraving on wood, and his cuts possess considerable merit. He executed a great variety of vignettes and book ornaments, and is said to have been the inventor, about the year 1688, of paper-hangings for rooms. He died in Paris in 1723. Among his cuts were the portraits of Popes Paul III., Julius III., and Pius IV., also of King James II. of England. His most famous work was a 'Mass-book' in chiaroscuro after Leclerc.

Among his best performances are the cuts he executed in conjunction with N. le Sueur, from the designs of J. J. Bachelier, for the fine edition of 'Les Fables de la Fontaine,' in four volumes folio. He also furnished 217 plates to the Amsterdam Historical Bible. He published a history of the art of engraving on wood, in two volumes, entitled, 'Traité Historique et Pratique de la Gravure en Bois,' in which, however, he was guilty of many mistakes, while the appearance of more recent works on the subject has destroyed its value. He died in Paris in 1776.

A set of twelve large and eight small Sea-pieces.

A set of twelve plates of the different Shipping used in Holland, with a Latin inscription. 1627.

PARCELLES, JULIUS, the son and scholar of Jan Parcelles, was born at Leyerdorp in 1628. He painted similar subjects to those of his father, whose style he imitated with some success. P.* Good examples of their work are to be seen in the galleries of Berlin, Frankfort, and Vienna.

PAREDES, JUAN DE, was a Spanish painter, who studied under Miguel Menendez at Madrid, and afterwards with Evaristo Muñoz at Valencia. According to Cean Bermudez his drawing and colouring excelled many of his contemporaries. His best works are in the convent of the Shod Trinitarians and in the College of Augustines, at Valencia.

PAREJA, JUAN DE, known as the Slave of Velasquez, was born at Seville in 1606. He accompanied Velasquez to Madrid in 1623, and remained in his service till he died. Being employed in the menial work of the studio he took every opportunity to perfect himself as an artist, but kept his ambition studiously concealed from his master. At length he painted a picture which he placed in his master's studio in such a position as to attract the attention of Philip IV. The king was so pleased with the work that he asked for the author, whereupon Pareja owned that it was himself, and in return received his liberty. Velasquez promoted him to the rank of a pupil, but he remained in his master's service till the latter died, and afterwards served his daughter till his own death in 1670. The Madrid Gallery possesses a single work of Pareja, 'The Calling of St. Matthew,' and the Gallery of St. Petersburg the portrait of a Provincial of some religious order. He excelled in portraiture.

He was an imitator of Squarcione, and his earliest production is a Religious Allegory in the Gallery of Modena, representing the Saviour carrying His Cross, St. Jerome penitent before a crucifix, and a kneeling bishop in a landscape. The Doria Gallery, in Rome, possesses three panels by him, with scenes from the life of St. Anthony, which show a Mantegnesque feeling. His latest work consists of some unfinished frescoes of scenes from the life of St. Benedict, in the cloisters of San Giustina, Padua.

PARET y ALCAZAR, LUIS, painter, designer, and etcher, was born at Madrid in 1747. He received a liberal education, and becoming a scholar of Antonio Gonzalez Velasquez, he obtained in 1760-6 prizes at the Academy of St. Ferdinand. Having finished his artistic education, he applied himself to studying oriental and other languages and history. Returning to Madrid he became a member of the Academy, and was employed by Charles III. to paint views of the various harbours of Spain on the Atlantic coast. He held the post of vice-secretary to the Academy, and secretary to a board of architecture for the purpose of examining works to be constructed at the state expense. He died at Madrid in 1799. He painted a large picture representing the 'Estates of the kingdom taking the oath of allegiance to the Prince of Asturias, afterwards Charles IV.' According to Cean Bermudez, his best work was a series of drawings made by request of Don Gabriel Sancha, to illustrate 'Don Quixote:' unfortunately they were never engraved. King William sent Parmentier to Holland, to ornament his palace at Loo, but he quarrelled with Marot, the superintendent of the works, and returned to London. Not finding much employment on his arrival, he went into Yorkshire, and was engaged in several historical subjects as well as portraits. He painted an altar-piece for the principal church at Hull, and a picture of 'Moses receiving the Law,' for St. Peter's church in Leeds. His best performance was the staircase at Work-sop. He gave a picture of 'Diana and Endymion' to Painters' Hall. On the death of Laguerre, in 1721, he returned to London, where he died in 1730.

He died in 1600.

PARODI, DOMENICO, (or PARRODI,) was born at Genoa in 1668. He was the son of Giacomo Filippo Parodi, an eminent sculptor, who bestowed on him an excellent education. He acquired the first elements of design under his father, and for some time applied himself to the pursuit of sculpture; but a partiality for painting prevailed, and he was sent to Venice, where he entered the school of Bombelli, and became an excellent colourist by studying the works of Tintoretto and Paolo Veronese. He also visited Rome, where he attached himself to the manner of Carlo Maratti. His 'S. Francesco di Sales,' in the church of San Filippo Neri at Genoa, is in the style of that master. He further painted 'The Holy Trinity, with SS. Stephen and Leonard,' in Santa Vergine delle Vigne, and representations of the deeds of the Negroni family in their palace in the same city. He died in 1740.

PARODI, OTTAVIO, was born at Pavia in 1659, and was a scholar of Andrea Lanzano. He afterwards visited Rome, where he studied some years. His father dying when he was only five years of age, he was taken under the protection of a maternal uncle, who perceiving his disposition for art, placed him with the Cavaliere Peruzzini at Turin, with whom he remained until he was sixteen, when he visited Bologna, and entered the school of Carlo Cignani. He returned to Ferrara in 1699, and finished some pictures left imperfect by M. Aurelio Scannavini, who had been his fellow-student under Cignani. He was successful in the design of his female figures and children, and his bacchanals and festive dances remind us of Albani. His pictures of those subjects are to be found in almost every collection in Ferrara. Of his historical works the most considerable are, the 'Last Supper,' in the cathedral at Ferrara; and a fresco representing 'St. Sebastian with a glory of angels,' in the church dedicated to that Saint at Verona. He was the last eminent painter of his country, and "with him," says Lanzi, "was buried the glory of the Ferrarese school." He died at Ferrara in 1733.

PAROLINI, PIO, was, according to Titi, a native of Udine, though he chiefly resided at Rome, where he was received into the Academy in 1678. He painted an allegorical subject on the ceiling of one of the chapels in San Carlo al Corso.

PARONE, FRANCESCO, was born, according to Baglione, at Milan, near the end of the 16th century. He was the son of an obscure artist; but at an early age he visited Rome, where he had the good fortune to be taken under the protection of the Marquis of Giustiniani, who enabled him to study the works of art in his own collection and elsewhere. In the church of the monastery of San Romualdo, is an altar-piece by him, representing the 'Martyrdom of a Saint.' Parone died at Rome in the prime of life, in the year 1634.

PAROY, JACQUES DE, glass painter, was born at Saint Pourcain sur Allier, Auvergne, towards the end of the 16th century. He studied in Rome under Domenichino. He painted the choir windows in St. Méry, Paris; he designed the story of Susanna for another set of windows in the same church, and also the four 'Fathers of the Church.' Paroy died at the end of the 17th century, aged 102.

PAROY, JEAN PHILIPPE GUY, a French painter and engraver, was born in Brittany in 1750. In his youth he showed great talent for art, in spite of the opposition of his father. In 1800 he produced his engraving of the 'Modern Antigone,' which had great success. He wrote a history of the Royal Academy of Painting, and other works. He died in 1822.

PARR, REMI, (or REMIGIUS,) an architectural designer and engraver, was born at Rochester in 1723, and in 1737 published a View of London from Westminster Bridge, with other plates of a similar kind. He was, however, chiefly employed by the booksellers in portraits, book-plates, and humorous subjects. He was still living in 1750. Among others, we have the following engraved portraits by him:

Maria Louisa, daughter of Charles II.

John Fisher, Bishop of Rochester.

William Becket, prefixed to his Chirurgical Observations. 1740.

PARRASIO, ANGELO, a Siennese painter, who was employed at the court of the Marquis Leonardo d'Este, in the middle of the 15th century.

PARRASIO, MICHELE, a painter of the 16th century, was a pupil of Titian and of Paolo Veronese. He was a man of wealth, and continued through life in intimate correspondence with Titian. There remain by him:

Madrid.	Escorial.	The Marys at the Sepulchre.
"	"	Adoration of the Kings.
"	Museum.	The Dead Christ adored by Pius V.
Venice.	Academy.	Deposition from the Cross.
"	"	Male Portrait.

PARRE, MATHIEU, a Dutch painter of the present century, who was at work in Amsterdam from 1811 to 1849. He was a pupil of J. Van der Stok.

PARREU, JOSÉ, was born at Busafa, Valencia, in 1694. He was a pupil of D. Vidal, and executed several works for the churches in Valencia. He died in 1766.

PARRHASIUS, the younger contemporary and rival of Zeuxis, was a native of Ephesus, and a disciple of Euenor. He was in the fulness of his reputation about 400 B.C. According to Pliny, he was the first who arrived at perfect symmetry in the proportion of his figures, and Quintilian terms him "the legislator of art," from the canon which he established on this point having been accepted by succeeding artists. He gave to his forms more relief and roundness, more life and motion, than were known before his time. He was also particularly successful in the treatment of the hair, and in the expression of his female figures. This characteristic he carried so far as to impart to his pictures some of the soft and sensuous quality of the Asiatic school, and this not to the female figures only, for Euphranor remarked that the 'Theseus' of Parrhasius had been fed on roses, while his own was fed upon beef. The painter, moreover, was voluptuous in his own habits, and used to add to his signature the epithet, ἀβροδιατός, 'the luxurious.' Parrhasius was remarkable, too, for vanity and arrogance. He styled himself the prince of painters, and asserted that he had carried the art to the highest possible perfection. He was always clothed in sumptuous attire, and claimed to be descended from Apollo. He pretended to have painted Hercules from a revelation of his form in a vision; and when defeated by Timanthes in a contest for a picture upon the 'Strife of Ajax and Ulysses,' he declared that Ajax was a second time overcome by an unworthy rival. The story versified by the American poet Willis, of his putting a slave to the rack in order to furnish himself with a model for the expression of intense agony, whether it be founded upon fact or not, is too much in accordance with his nature:

"I'd rack thee though a thousand lives were thine;
What were ten thousand to a fame like mine!"

Notwithstanding these serious personal defects, Parrhasius cannot be denied the glory of having been one of the most accomplished painters of Greece. The well-known story of Pliny in reference to the contest between him and Zeuxis is related in the article upon the latter artist. One of his principal works, representing a 'High Priest of the goddess Cybele,' was afterwards purchased by the Emperor Tiberius, for sixty thousand sesterces. Pliny highly commends two pictures by Parrhasius, one representing a warrior rushing to the combat, the other a soldier taking off his armour. His celebrated picture of 'Theseus' was in that historian's time preserved in the Capitol at Rome; and another representing Meleager, Hercules, and Perseus, in one group, was formerly at Rhodes. Yet another of his most notable productions was his picture of 'The Athenian People,' in which he appears to have caught and expressed all the varying modes and passions of the populace. Some of his subjects were lascivious.

PARRIS, EDMUND THOMAS, portrait and historical painter, was born in 1793. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1816. From 1825 to 1829 he was engaged in painting the panorama of London at the Coliseum. In 1838 he was appointed painter to Queen Adelaide. In 1839 he painted a portrait of Queen Victoria, and a picture of the Coronation. In 1843 he won a prize at the Guildhall competition for a cartoon of 'Joseph of Arimathea converting the Jews.' From 1853 to 1856 he was employed in restoring Sir James Thornhill's pictures in the dome of St. Paul's. He died in 1873.

PARROCEL, CHARLES, the son of Joseph Parrocel, was born in Paris in 1688, and was first instructed by his father, who dying when he was only sixteen years of age, he was placed under the tuition of Charles de la Fosse, and on leaving that master, travelled to Italy, where he studied some years in Rome. On his return to France he acquired considerable reputation as a painter of battle-pieces, and though these and his hunting-pieces are inferior to those of his father, they possessed sufficient merit to procure his reception into the Academy at Paris, of which in 1745 he further became professor. He was in the same year appointed to accompany the king to Flanders, to depict his victories. Among his best paintings are those of 'The Turkish Ambassador before and after his audience in the Tuilleries,' now at the Gobelins. Parrocel has left thirty-seven etchings, from his own designs, representing horse and foot soldiers, among them six in the style of Salvator Rosa. He died in Paris in 1752.

PARROCEL, ETIENNE, was the son of Pierre Parrocel. He was born in Paris about the year 1720, and is stated to have been a painter, perhaps also an engraver.

PARROCEL, BARTHÉLEMY, a native of Brignolles, father and first instructor of Joseph Parrocel. He was of no repute as an artist, and died about 1660.

PARROCEL, IGNACE, the nephew of Joseph Parrocel, was born in Paris in 1668. He was apparently the scholar of his uncle, as he painted similar subjects, battles and huntings, and in a closely similar style. He died in Paris in 1722. A 'Turkish Battle' and a 'Field Encampment' by him are in the Belvedere of Vienna.

PARROCEL, JOSEPH, an eminent painter of battles, was born at Brignolles, in Provence, in 1648. He was the son of Barthélemy Parrocel, a painter of little note, who, together with his elder son Louis, instructed Joseph in the first elements of the art. Without the help of any other teaching, the latter went to Paris, where he obtained the notice of some distinguished artists, who recommended him to visit Italy. On his arrival at Rome, he found the works of Borgognone in the highest estimation; and he entered the school of that artist. After a residence of some years at Rome, he visited Venice, where he rapidly improved his colour by studying the works of the best Venetian masters. The encouragement he experienced in Venice led him to think of establishing himself there, when one evening he was assailed on the Rialto by several assassins, posted, it was believed, by persons jealous of his success, and it was only by his courage and personal vigour that he escaped. In 1675 he returned to Paris, and immediately met with public favour. He was made a member of the Academy the following year, on which occasion he painted the 'Siege of Maestricht' for his reception picture. He was commissioned by the Marquis de Louvois, to decorate one of the four refectories of the Invalides, with the conquests of Louis XIV., and after this he was employed on some of the works at Versailles and Marly. He became one of the favourite painters of Louis XIV., in whose service he remained until his death, which occurred in Paris in 1704. He painted several historical subjects for the Hôtel de Toulouse, and an admirable picture of 'St. John in the Wilderness,' for the church of Notre Dame de Paris. The Museum of Lyons possesses a 'Horsemen Resting' by him. We have ninety etchings by Parrocel from his own designs: among which are the following:

The Four Parts of the Day; J. Parrocel inv. et. fec.

Four Battles; the same inscription.

A set of forty-eight prints from the Life of Christ.

PARROCEL, LOUIS, a painter, the eldest son of Barthélemy Parrocel, was born at Avignon in 1640. He was instructed by his father, and painted chiefly historical pictures.

PARROCEL, PIERRE, nephew of Joseph and son of Louis Parrocel, was born at Avignon in 1664, and died in Paris in 1739. He was first instructed by his uncle, and afterwards entered the school of Carlo Maratti at Rome, and in 1730 became a member of the Academy there. His principal work, as a painter, was in the gallery of the Hôtel de Noailles, at St. Germain-en-Laye, where he represented the history of Tobit in thirteen pictures; but the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' in the church of St. Mary at Marseilles, is considered his chef-d'œuvre. He also etched and engraved. His etchings are executed with dexterity and spirit, in a style analogous to that of A. Rivalz; but he was not equally successful with the graver. Of the fourteen etchings left by him, 'The Triumph of Amphitrite' is perhaps the most noteworthy.

PARROCEL, PIERRE IGNACE, was born at Avignon in 1702, and was at Rome in 1739-40. He was afterwards director of the school of art there. He etched thirty-six plates, comprising among them a series of Bernini's statues.

PARRODI. See PARODI.

PARRY, WILLIAM, was born in London in 1742. He was the son of Parry, the celebrated blind performer on the Welsh harp, and received his first instructions in design in Shipley's drawing-school. He afterwards studied from the plaster-casts in the Duke of Richmond's gallery, and became a pupil of Sir Joshua Reynolds; about which time he also entered the academy in St. Martin's Lane. He was considered at that time a very promising artist, and obtained several premiums from the Society of Arts, and in 1766 he became a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists. On leaving Sir Joshua he was favoured with the patronage of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, by whose liberality he was enabled, in 1770, to visit Italy, where he remained four years, and among other things he painted for his protector a copy of Raphael's 'Transfiguration,' at that time in the church of San Pietro in Montorio. He returned to London in 1775, and in 1776 was chosen an Associate of the Royal Academy; he then exhibited some portraits, as he did again in 1778, 1779, and 1788. Not meeting with the employment he expected, he removed to Wales, and on the death of his wife, in 1788, revisited Rome, where he found sufficient encouragement to induce him, with the help of a small fortune acquired through his wife, to remain several years. His ill state of health obliged him to return to his native country at the commencement of the year 1791; but he only survived his arrival a few days, and died on February 13th.

There is a small etching by Parry, prepared as a ticket for a benefit concert on behalf of his father, whom it represents playing on the harp.

PARS, HENRY, an English draughtsman, born in 1734. He was the elder brother of W. Pars, A. R. A., and was brought up as a chaser. His chief claim to remembrance is in connection with the St. Martin's Lane School, of which he was master so long that it became known by his name. He died in 1806.

PARS, WILLIAM, was born in London in 1742, and was educated in the rudiments of art in Shipley's drawing-school. He afterwards frequented the St. Martin's Lane school, and the Duke of Richmond's Gallery. He exhibited at the Society of Arts in 1761, and in 1764 obtained from them the third premium of twenty guineas, for historic painting. Shortly afterwards he went as draughtsman with the expedition sent into Ionia by the Dilettanti Society, with Dr. Chandler and W. Revett as his colleagues. On this expedition he was absent over two years, and some time after his return he was engaged by the second Lord Palmerston, to accompany him in a tour through Switzerland and Italy, to make drawings of the most remarkable views and antiquities. In 1770 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy; and in 1774 the Dilettanti Society having determined to send an artist to Rome, for a certain number of years, upon a pension, to complete his studies as a painter, Pars was made choice of, and arrived at Rome in 1775. He continued his studies in Italy until the autumn of the year 1782, when he died of a fever. He had exhibited at the Royal Academy constantly from its establishment until 1776, producing both small and life-size portraits, as well as drawings and stained views of temples in Asia Minor and Greece. Several of the views he made in Greece have been engraved by Byrne; and some of those in Switzerland and Italy were reproduced in aquatint by Paul Sandby. Woollet also engraved five Swiss views after Pars.

PARSON, WILLIAM, an amateur architectural, landscape, and fruit painter, was born in London in 1736. His father was a builder, and at fourteen he was apprenticed to an architect. He afterwards went on the stage, and became a popular comic actor, but never relinquished his art. He died in 1795.

PARSONS, FRANCIS, an English portrait painter, in the second half of the 18th century. He was taught in the St. Martin's Lane school, and became a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists. In his later years he became a picture-dealer.

Portrait of Brindley, the Engineer. Engraved by Dunkarton.

PARTRIDGE, JOHN, a portrait painter, was born in 1790. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1815 to 1846. In 1843 he exhibited portraits of the Queen and Prince Albert, which were engraved and became very popular. Two years later he was appointed portrait painter extraordinary to the Queen. For thirty years he held a good position in the second rank as a portrait painter, exhibiting for the last time in 1846. On two occasions only, in 1830 and 1836, did he send a subject picture to the Academy; these were respectively, 'Titania, Puck, and Bottom,' and 'A Sketching Society, the Critical Moment.' Partridge died November 25, 1872. The National Portrait Gallery possesses a large picture by him of a meeting of the Fine Arts Commission of 1841 at Gwydyr House, Whitehall; and the National Gallery of Ireland a portrait of Sir T. Wyse, K.C.B.

PASENA, ROG. DE. See VAN DER WEYDEN.

PASINELLI, LORENZO, was born at Bologna in 1629, and was first a scholar of A. Baroni and Simone Cantarini, but afterwards studied under Flaminio Torre, whose school he left at an early age. He then visited Turin, Mantua, and Rome, and spent some time at Venice, where the style of Paolo Veronese exercised great influence over him. On leaving Venice he returned to Bologna, where he died in 1700. Among his best paintings are: 'Christ's Entry into Jerusalem,' and 'The Return of Christ from Limbus,' in the Certosa of Bologna; 'St. Francis raising a Dead Man to Life,' at San Francesco in the same city; and the 'History of Coriolanus,' in the Palazzo Ranuzzi. We have the following etchings by Pasinelli from his own designs:

St. John preaching in the Wilderness.
 The Martyrdom of several Saints.
 The Murder of the Innocents; after Guido Reni.

PASQUALI, FILIPPO, was a native of Forli, and a scholar of Carlo Cignani. He flourished about the year 1680, and in conjunction with Marc Antonio Franceschini, painted several fresco works at Bologna and Rimini. There are some of his paintings in the portico of the Serviti at Bologna; and Lanzi makes honourable mention of his pictures in the church of San Vittore, at Ravenna.

PASQUALINI, FELICE, a pupil of Sabbatini; some of his works are still extant in Bologna and its neighbourhood.

PASQUALINI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, (OR PASCALINI,) an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Cento, near Bologna, about the year 1600. He frequented for some time the school of Ciro Ferri; but it does not appear that he arrived at great eminence as a painter. We have several etchings by him, principally after Guercino, his countryman, in which he endeavoured, not very successfully, to imitate with the point the masterly pen drawings of that master. The earliest is dated 1619, and the latest 1630. He frequently signed his plates J. B. Centensis. We have, among others, the following prints by him:

St. Felix kneeling before the Virgin and Infant; after L. Carracci, PASQUALINO, an imitator of Bellini and Cima, who lived in the latter part of the 15th century. In the Correr Museum, Venice, there is a 'Virgin and Child, with St. Mary Magdalene,' dated and signed by him in 1496. Nothing is known of his birth or death.

PASQUALOTTO. See OTTINI.

PASQUETTI, FORTUNATO, portrait and historical painter, was a pupil of N. Cassana. In 1741 he was director of the Academy at Venice, and died about 1770.

PASQUIER, JEAN JACQUES, a French engraver, was born in the early part of the 17th century, and was a pupil of Laurent Cars. He has engraved several plates after French painters, and a variety of vignettes and other illustrations for books. We may name the following by him:

PASSAVANT, JOHANN DAVID, a German historical painter, born at Frankfurt in 1787. His art studies were carried on under David, Gros, and Overbeck. But he chiefly devoted himself to the literature and criticism of art, publishing works on Raphael (by which he is best known), engraving, art in England, &c. He died in 1861. At Frankfurt there is a portrait of the Emperor Henry II. by him, and a picture of St. Hubert. We give the titles and dates of publication of his books:

 'Die Christliche Kunst in Spanien.' 1853.
 'Le Peintre Graveur.' 1860-1864.

PASSE, DE (PASS). See VAN DE PASS.

PASSERI, ANDREA, was a native of Como, in the Milanese. In the year 1505 he painted in the cathedral of his native city a picture of the Virgin surrounded by the Apostles.

PASSERI, BERNARDINO, (PASSARI, or PASSERO,) an Italian engraver, flourished at Rome about the year 1580. He is doubtfully stated to have been also a painter, and to have adopted the style of Taddeo Zuccaro. Among others we have the following prints by him :

The Holy Family in which the Virgin is attired as a Bohemian.

A set of several plates of the Life of St. Bruno. Several Madonnas, and other subjects.

PASSERI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Rome about the year 1610, and is reported by Lanzi to have been a friend of Domenichino, and a follower of his style. He was employed by Canini, in the Villa Aldobrandini, in 1635, and was president of the Academy of St. Luke, in 1641, when Domenichino died. At the close of his life Passeri entered into holy orders, and in 1675 obtained a benefice in the college of Sta. Maria in Via Lata. He died in 1679. In the church of San Giovanni della Malva, at Rome, is a picture by him of the Crucifixion; but his works are more frequent in private collections than in public edifices. He sometimes painted pictures of dead game, birds, &c., of which there are several in the Palazzo Mattei. In the Academy of St. Luke there is a portrait of Domenichino, painted by him, and placed there at the death of his friend, whose funeral oration Passeri pronounced. Passeri was one of the chief Italian writers on art. His principal work is entitled 'Vite de' Pittori, Scultori, e Architetti, che hanno lavorato in Roma, e che son morti dal 1641 al 1673.' It was published in full for the first time in 1772, in Rome.

PASSERI, GIUSEPPE, the nephew of Giovanni Battista Passeri, was born at Rome in 1654, and, according to Pascoli, was a favourite disciple of Carlo Maratti, of whose style he was one of the most successful followers. His principal works at Rome are his picture of the Conception, in the church of San Tommaso in Parione; and one of the wings to the picture of the Baptism, by Maratti, in the Vatican, in which he has represented St. Peter baptizing the Centurion, which was executed in mosaic, and the original placed in the church of the Conventuali at Urbino. At Pesaro there is one of his best works, representing St. Jerome meditating on the Last Judgment. Passeri died in 1714.

PASSEROTTI, BARTOLOMEO, (or PASSAROTTI,) was born at Bologna about the year 1520 or 1530. He was first a scholar of Giacomo Barocccio da Vignola, but afterwards he became the disciple and coadjutor of Taddeo Zuccaro, at Rome, where he resided in the early part of his life. For the public buildings here he painted some pictures of which the most esteemed is the Martyrdom of St. Paul, in the church of San Paolo alle Tre Fontane. On his return to Bologna he painted a great number of altar-pieces for the churches, of which the most celebrated are the Adoration of the Magi, in San Pietro; the Annunciation, in San Martino Maggiore; and the Virgin on a throne, surrounded by St. John the Baptist and other Saints, in San Giacomo Maggiore. The last-named was painted in competition with the Carracci, and excited their admiration. He died at Bologna the 3rd June, 1592. His works are very unequal, as he frequently sacrificed correctness and refinement to his desire of gain and to the indulgence of an uncommon facility of hand. He was the founder of a respectable academy at Bologna, and counted among his disciples, Francesco Vanni, Agostino Carracci, and other distinguished artists. He particularly excelled in portrait painting. Among the personages whom he portrayed were Popes Pius V., Gregory XIII., and Sixtus V., and Cardinal Guastavillani. Bartsch, who speaks highly of his ability as a designer with the pen, and of the freedom and boldness of his work with the burin, mentions the first fifteen of the following etchings :

The Chastity of Joseph; after Parmigiano.

The Visitation; after F. Salviati.

PASSEROTTI, TIBURZIO, the eldest son and the disciple of Bartolommeo Passerotti, was born at Bologna in 1575. He painted history and portraits, in the style of his father. Of his works in the public edifices at Bologna, the following are the most deserving of notice. In the church of Santa Maria Mascarella, a picture of the 'Assumption'; in Santa Cecilia, 'St. Francis and St. Jerome kneeling before the Virgin'; in Santa Cristina, the 'Annunciation'; and in San Giacomo Maggiore, the 'Martyrdom of St. Catharine,' his best performance. He died at Bologna, in the prime of life, in 1612. Zani calls him an amateur.

PASSEROTTI, VENTURA, the fourth son of Bartolommeo Passerotti, was born at Bologna about 1586. He was instructed by his father, and assisted by his brother Tiburzio. He, however, chiefly delighted in making pen drawings. His practice as a professed painter was confined to portraiture, in which he won much success. There is no account of any public work by him. He died in 1630.

PASSIGNANO, IL. See CRESTI.

PASSINI, JOHANN, engraver and painter, was born at Vienna in 1798 or 1799, and studied at the Academy there under Seipp, and afterwards under J. G. Mansfeld. He was a member of the Academy of Vienna, and professor in the Ober Realschule at Gratz. His death occurred at Gratz, on January 14th, 1874. He painted landscapes in oil and aquarelle, but was best known by his engravings, many of which are in Pezzel's 'Sketches of Vienna,' and Lichnowsky's 'Memorials of Old German Architecture.' Besides these we may name the following :

'La Notte'; after Correggio.

PASTI, MATTEO, (PASTINO, PASTO, DE PASTIS, or DE PRATIS,) an Italian artist. He was a native of Verona, and flourished from 1446. He was a wood-engraver, a painter in miniature, a sculptor in bronze and marble, a medallist, and a gem engraver. Neither the year of his birth nor of his death is correctly ascertained. He worked in the above year upon the Breviary of the Marchese Leonardo da Ferrara, and executed a set of prints for a folio volume, entitled 'De Re Militare,' by R. Valturius, which was published at Verona in 1472. In that he signed his work: O M D P V (Opus Matthæi de Pastis Veronensis).

PASTILL, J. DE, was a French engraver, who appears to have been chiefly employed in copying the prints of other artists. Among other plates we have the 'Murder of the Innocents,' from the engraving by Louis Audran, after Le Brun.

PASTORINI, BENEDETTO, was an Italian engraver, who resided in London in the latter part of the 18th century, and was one of the governors of the Society of Engravers, founded in 1803. He engraved some plates in imitation of the style of Bartolozzi, and with his assistance. We have, among others, the following by him :

L'Allegro; Angel. Kauffman pinx. B. Pastorini fec.
 Il Penseroso; the companion.

A View of London; from his own design.

Guntherus and Griselda; J. F. Rigaud pinx. B. Pastorini fec.

Griselda returning to her Family; the companion.

PASTORINI, J., a miniature painter, born in 1773. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1812 to 1826, and died in London in 1839.

PASTORINO, GIOVANNI MICHELE, a glass painter and medallist of Siena, who worked frequently from designs furnished by Pierino del Vaga. In 1549 he painted the 'Last Supper' on glass in the cathedral of Siena. In this art he is said to have been taught by Claude of Marseilles.

PASTÛRE, ROGIER DE LA. See VAN DER WEYDEN.

PATANAZZI, a painter whose "vigorous brush and consummate powers of invention" are extolled in the 'Galleria de' Pittori Urbinati.' He was probably a pupil of Claudio Ridolfi.

PATAROL, LAWRENCE, engraved some book illustrations, among which was a frontispiece for a book on coins, published at Venice in 1702.

PATAS, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French designer and engraver, was born in Paris in 1744 or 1748, and died in 1817. He engraved some of the plates for the 'Galleries' of Florence and Orleans, the 'Musée Français,' the 'Cabinet Poullain,' and other works of the same class; also several small plates after various French painters, and from his own designs; among which are the following :

The Judgment of Paris; after Queverdo.

The dangerous Model; after the same.

Henry IV. permitting Provisions to enter Paris whilst he was besieging it; after Carême.

An allegorical subject on the Accession of Louis XVI. to the Throne of France; from his own design.

PATAVINUS. See OTHELLO.

PATCH, COZENS, At Petworth there is a picture by this artist, in the style and of the same period as Hogarth.

PATCH, THOMAS, was an English engraver, who flourished about 1770. In that year he engraved a set of twenty-six plates, from the frescoes in the Brancacci Chapel; a series of caricatures and two landscapes after Poussin were published in 1768-70. He worked also after Giotto, Frà Bartolommeo, and other old Italian masters. He practised landscape and figure painting to some slight extent, and two pictures by him are at Hampton Court, a 'View of the Arno, Florence, by Day,' and a view of the same place by Night. Patch went to Italy with Sir Joshua Reynolds, and probably died there after 1772.

PATEL, the name of two French landscape painters, father and son, who flourished in the 17th century. But little is known of them. Beyond the fact that some of the earlier pictures which are assigned to the father are signed 'P. Patel,' and that some later works assigned to the son bear a monogram before the surname, composed apparently of the letters A. P. T., their Christian names are unknown.

The elder painter, who is generally known as 'Patel le père,' appears to have been born in Picardy, shortly before the year 1620. It is surmised that he, like many of the French artists of his time, owed his training to Vouet, and that he completed his art education by a visit to Italy. The latter surmise is founded on the fact that several of his works are evidently inspired by scenes in the neighbourhood of Rome. It is also stated that he painted the landscape backgrounds in some of Le Sueur's pictures. With greater certainty he is included amongst the illustrious band of painters who in 1649 were engaged on the decorations of the mansion of the President Lambert de Thorigny on the Island of Notre Dame in Paris. His brush was also employed in decorating the apartments of Anne of Austria in the Louvre. He was received into the Guild of Master Painters in 1635, and became a director in 1650. In the following year he was one of the elders who signed the agreement amalgamating the Guild with the newly-founded Academy. His death occurred in Paris on the 5th August, 1676. The elder Patel ranks amongst the most able imitators of Claude Lorrain, whose aerial effects he imitates with considerable success. Like his model he delights in the ruins of ancient architecture, which form a prominent feature in his compositions. Not many pictures have survived under his name. This is due to two causes. First, that he probably executed but few easel works, owing to his having been much employed on decorations. Second, that many of his pictures have doubtless been passed off under the greater name of Claude.

Concerning the younger painter, 'Patel le fils,' even less is known than concerning his father, with whom he is often confounded. He appears to have been born shortly before the middle of the 17th century, as it is expressly stated that he assisted his parent in the decoration of the apartments of Anne of Austria. He is also said to have painted twelve pictures representing the months, for the church of St. Louis-la-Culture, in Paris, four of which are now in the Louvre. His career was prolonged to the beginning of the 18th century, as there are two pictures at Marseilles bearing his monogram, which are dated 1705. He was killed in a duel: hence he is by some writers called 'Patel le tué,' which cognomen is sometimes wrongly applied to his father. Two etchings by him are known, described by Dumesnil as 'Architectural Ruins' and 'View of a Forest.' His art is not equal to that of his father, whose style he followed slavishly.

The following is a list of pictures by the two Patels. It is frequently doubtful whether a work should be ascribed to the father or to the son. In the cases in which some degree of certainty exists, * is placed against the pictures of the elder, and † against those of the younger painter.

A BENOÎT NICOLAS PATEL, a painter of the 18th century, was of the same family, but very little is known about him.

PATENIER. See PATINIR.

PATER, JEAN BAPTISTE JOSEPH, a French painter of fêtes galantes, was born at Valenciennes on the 29th December, 1695. He early showed artistic predilections, and his father, a sculptor, having grounded him in the first principles of art, sent him, while still young, to continue his studies in Paris. There he became a pupil of his fellow-countryman Watteau, but the difficult temperament of the master caused a separation. When, however, Watteau felt his end approaching in 1721, he sent for Pater to come to him at Nogent-sur-Marne. For a short time the pupil painted daily under the eye of the master, receiving his latest inspiration. This instruction thoroughly imbued him with the spirit of the chief of his school, and he ever gratefully acknowledged his obligation. In 1728, he was received into the Academy as a member of the new class of 'peintres de sujets modernes.' There are but few incidents to record in the short career of Pater. He did not cultivate friendships, and rarely went out of his studio. His time was entirely devoted to art: the whole day was occupied in painting, and the evening brought no relaxation to his labours. This feverish industry was caused by an ever-haunting fear of poverty, which led him to stint himself to provide for his latter days. His health at length gave way under such a strain, and he died in Paris in 1736, before he could enjoy the provision which he had laid up. Pater was a good colourist, but his drawing is without the precision of Watteau, and his handling often soft and woolly. He followed Watteau not only in choice of subject, but also in composition. The following are some of his more accessible works:

PATICINA. See ADLER, PHILIP.

PATIGNY, JEAN, a French engraver, flourished from 1650 to about 1670. He executed a few plates, in which he appears to have imitated the style of Agostino Carracci, but with little success. A print of the 'Virgin and Infant Christ, with St. John,' after Annibale Carracci, may be named.

PATIN, JACQUES, was painter in ordinary to Henry III. of France, and to his Queen, Louise de Lorraine. He was employed by the Queen to paint the scenes for a masque, or ballet, given by her on the marriage of her sister Marguerite de Vandemont with the Duke de Joyeuse, in 1581, on which occasion the king's valet-de-chambre, Baltazarini Beaujoyeux, prepared the book. This book is illustrated with twenty-seven etchings by Patin.

PATINIR, JOACHIM D., (or PATINIER,) was born either at Dinant or at Bouvignes, on the opposite bank of the Meuse, about 1490. He became a member of the Antwerp Guild of Painters in 1515. He contracted a first marriage with Françoise Buyst, and a second, in 1521, with Jeanne Noyis. At this second marriage Albrecht Dürer was present; he saw Patinir's work with admiration, and he drew his portrait. Patinir must have died before the 5th October, 1524, because on that date his widow and children sold the house he had bought on the 30th March, 1519. Patinir left a son, HERRI PATINIR, who also devoted himself to painting, but with slight success. Patinir has been called the inventor of landscape painting so far as the North is concerned, but that is an exaggeration. It would be truer to say that he was the first Fleming to make his landscapes distinctly more important than the figures with which they are peopled. His style may be placed between those of Gerard David and of Jerom Bosch. His pictures are not numerous, but most of the important galleries have good examples to show. Among these we may name :

Antwerp.	Museum.	The Flight into Egypt ( signed OPVS. JOACHIM. D. PATINIR, in a cartouch ). ( This same gallery possesses two pictures on which Patinir is said to have collaborated with Bernard van Orley. )

PATON, (or PATTON,) DAVID, a Scottish portrait and miniature painter, who worked with some success about the middle of the 17th century. A portrait of General Thomas Dalzell, still in the possession of the Dalzell family, is ascribed to him.

PATON, RICHARD, an English painter of marines and combats by sea, was born in London in 1717. He was found in the streets as a poor boy by Admiral Knowles, and by him sent to sea. He exhibited largely at the Royal Academy from 1776 to 1780. He held an appointment in the excise for a great part of his life. He died in London in 1791. His works were very popular, as he painted most of the great sea-fights that occurred during his time. Many of them have been engraved by Woollet, Fittler, Lerpeniere, and Canot. Among his paintings we may name :

Engagement of the Monmouth and Foudroyant by Moonlight (etched by himself). 1758.

Attack upon Gibraltar. 1782.

The Lord Mayor's Show by Water (Guildhall; figures by Wheatley).

Four pictures of Dockyards, at Hampton Court.

We have also a few etchings by him. Among others, the following :

The Victory gained by the English over the French 21st September, 1757.

The Engagement of the Monmouth and Foudroyant (as above).

The Engagement between the Buckingham and the Florissant, supported by two Frigates, 3rd Nov. 1758.

PATOUR, JEAN AUGUSTIN, a French engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1730, and flourished till 1784. He was a pupil of Halle and Flipart, and has engraved several plates in a neat style, among which are the following :

The little Lyar; after Albrecht Dürer.

Le doux Sommeil; after Hallé.

Le doux Repos; after the same.

Hercules and Omphale; after the same.

Two Views of La Rochelle; after Lallemant.

PATTE, PIERRE, a French architect and engraver, was born in Paris in 1723. He is stated by Basan to have engraved several plates of architectural ornaments. He also engraved some of the plates for Blondel's 'Architecture Française;' 'Perspective Views;' after Piranesi; and the 'Temple of Venus;' after Claude. He died in 1812, at Mantes.

PATTEN, GEORGE, an English portrait and historical painter, born in 1801. His first instruction in art was received from his father, a miniature painter. In 1816, he entered the schools of the Academy, where he first exhibited in 1819. Up to 1830, he practised miniature painting, after which he devoted himself to oil portraiture. He made a tour in Italy in 1837, to study its art treasures, and in the same year was elected an Associate of the Academy. The Prince Consort, whose portrait he painted in Germany in 1840, appointed him his portrait painter, and he obtained a large practice in presentation portraits. His art, however, did not fulfil its early promise, and he never reached the front rank. In the latter part of his life he lived at Ross, Herefordshire. He died in London in 1865.

PATTON. See PATON.

PAU DE SAINT MARTIN, ALEXANDRE, a French landscape painter, born at Mortagne in the second half of the 18th century. He studied under Le Prince and Vernet, and exhibited (chiefly views in Normandy) at the Salon from 1791 to 1838.

PAU DE SAINT MARTIN, PIERRE ALEXANDRE, a French landscape painter and son of the above, was born in Paris towards the close of the 18th century. He studied under his father, and exhibited at the Salon from 1810 to 1834. His 'Entrance of the Elysée' was awarded a gold medal in 1824.

PAUDITZ, CHRISTOPH, (PAUISS, PUDISS, PAUDIES, &c.,) was born in Lower Saxony about the year 1582. After receiving some instruction in design, from an obscure German painter, he visited Amsterdam, where he entered the school of Rembrandt. On his return to Germany he was taken under the protection of Albert Sigismund, Duke of Bavaria, in whose employment he remained several years. He was also favoured with the patronage of the Duke of Ratisbon, and distinguished himself as a painter of history and portraits. Sandrart reports that his death was hastened by his failure in a contest he had accepted with a contemporary artist, who had challenged him to paint a picture in competition. Although the production of Pauditz was greatly superior to that of his rival, the decision was against him, and he did not long survive it. This occurred at Freising in 1666. Among his best works may be mentioned :

Augsburg.	Gallery.	Diogenes and the Drunken Old Woman.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Lady Conversing with a Gentleman engaged in writing.
Freising.	Cathedral.	Christ clearing the Temple.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	Wolf Tearing a Lamb.
Nuremberg.	Landau } Brotherhood. }	A Male Portrait.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	St. Jerome.
"	Gsell Coll.	Still-life subject.

PAUELSEN, ERIK, painter and engraver, was born at Bygom, near Viborg, in 1749, and studied in the Copenhagen Academy, where in 1777 he won the large gold medal with a 'Judgment of Solomon.' In 1780-83 he visited France and Italy, and after his return was received into the Academy with an 'Allegory of the Union of the three Northern Kingdoms' (1784). After this he travelled in Norway, and painted views, some of which were preserved at Frederiksberg Castle. His death occurred at Copenhagen in 1790, by his throwing himself from a window in a fit of melancholy. He painted a few good portraits, some of which he engraved, together with a few vignettes; he also etched 'Canute's Reproof to his Courtiers.' The following historical pictures were executed by him in grisaille :

Murder of Canute the Holy in St. Alban's Church (St. Knud's Church, Odense).

The Priest Madsen bringing news of the Enemy to Rantzau (engraved by J. G. Freisler).

Anne Colbjørnsen in the Parsonage Court of Norderboug (engraved by M. Haas).

Rolf Krage (engraved by the same).

The Royal Gallery of Copenhagen possesses two genre pictures by Pauelsen.

PAUL, ANDRIAAN, (OR DE PAULIS,) a Dutch or Flemish engraver, flourished about the year 1640. He engraved several plates, among which are the following :

Peter denying Christ; after Gerard Segers.

Titian and his Mistress; after the etching by Van Dyck.

The Tooth-drawer; after Theodor Roelants.

PAUL, J. S., an English mezzotint engraver, flourished about the year 1760, and has left a few portraits, among them that of Mrs. Barry, the actress, after Kettle; and Lady Georgiana Spenser and her daughter, after Reynolds. He also engraved a 'Conversation' piece after Jan Steen. His plates show much ability.

PAUL, ROBERT, was probably a native of Scotland. He resided at Glasgow in the latter part of the last century, and studied in the Academy there. He engraved some views of that city, and one representing the Cathedral is dated 1762.

PAULINI, BERTO DI GIOVANNI, (OR PAOLINI,) an obscure painter of Citta della Fieve, who flourished early in the 16th century.

PAULINI, GIACOMO, (OR PAOLINI,) was an Italian engraver, a native of Naples, who flourished about 1600, and apparently resided at Venice. We have a few prints by him, among which are the following :

St. Peter; probably from his own design.

A View of the Ponte di Rialto, Venice.

An Alphabet.

PAULINI, PIETRO. See PAOLINI.

PAULUTY, ZACHARIE, portrait painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1600, and died in 1657.

PAULUS, JACOBUS. This name is found on part of an altar-piece in the Santa Croce chapel of San Giacomo, Bologna. It is of no great merit.

PAULUZZI, STEFANO, a Venetian painter who enjoyed some repute about the middle of the 17th century. Lanzi says his pictures had greatly deteriorated in his time owing to the badness of his grounds.

PAULY, NICOLAS, a miniature painter, was born at Antwerp in 1660, and died at Brussels in 1748. Very little is known of his life.

PAULYN, HORATIUS, is introduced by M. Descamps among the artists born about the year 1643. He was a native of Amsterdam, but it is not said under whom he studied. According to Balkema he died in 1686. Some of his pictures are in the manner of Rembrandt. He excelled in painting conversations and 'gallant' subjects, but too often outraged decorum. He affected piety and exhibited all the outward signs of devotion, while he painted subjects which caused libertines to blush. At one time he set out for the Holy Land with a number of companions, but they broke up en route. In the Uffizi, Florence, there is a picture by him, 'The Miser.'

PAULYN, IZAAK, called by Lord Orford, PALING, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1630, and was a pupil of Abraham van den Temple. He was an eminent portrait painter, and in that capacity he visited England in the reign of Charles II., and there resided many years. In 1682 he returned to Holland, and established himself at the Hague, where he met with great encouragement, and where he died. He also painted conversation pieces in the style of his master.

PAUPELIER, PIERRE, a French miniature painter, was born at Troyes in 1621. He became a member of the Academy in Paris in 1664, and died in 1665 (?).

PAUQUET, JEAN LOUIS CHARLES, engraver, was born in Paris in 1759. He was instructed by Gauchet, and engraved after Van Dyck, Le Sueur, Teniers, Barbier, Moreau, and others. He died about 1820.

PAUSIAS, one of the ancient Greek painters, was a native of Sicyon, and was first instructed in the art by his father, Brietes, but afterwards became a disciple of Pamphilus. He was the first artist of antiquity who painted ceilings. He also painted small pictures, and was particularly successful in the representation of children. Some of his rival artists pretended that he made use of those subjects as best suited to the slow and laboured style of his execution. To contradict the calumny, and to prove that he was capable of more spirited exertions, he finished in one day a large picture representing the infant Hercules, which picture obtained from this circumstance the title of ἡμερήσιος, "the day's work." In his youth he became enamoured of Glycera, the beautiful garland-maker; and one of his most admired works was a portrait of his mistress holding a garland. A copy of this picture was purchased at Athens, by Lucius Lucullus, for two talents. Pausias also excelled in painting animals.

PAUSON, another Greek painter, lived at about the same time as Polygnotus and Micon. He is mentioned by Aristotle. "Polygnotus," says that philosopher, "drew men more perfect than they were, Pauson worse than they were, and Dionysius such as they were." Whence we may infer that Polygnotus improved upon ordinary nature, that Pauson degraded her by a selection of her more vulgar forms, and that Dionysius contented himself with representing her as she usually appears.

PAVESE, EL. See SACCHI, FRANCESCO.

PAVIA, GIACOMO, was born at Bologna the 18th February 1655, and is said to have been a scholar of Antonio CRESPI. He painted historical subjects, and was employed in several works for the churches in his native city; the most esteemed being his picture of 'St. Anne teaching the Virgin to read,' in San Silvestro; and the 'Nativity' in San Ginseppe. Lanzi states that he visited Spain. He died in 1750.

PAVIA, GIOVANNI DA. Lanzi ascribes several pictures in the churches at Pavia to an artist of this name. He was a pupil of Lorenzo Costa.

PAVIA, LORENZO DA. There is a picture in the church at Savona signed Laurentius Papiensis. Its apparent date is about 1550.

PAVON, IGNATIUS, was a scholar of Raphael Morghen. He imitated the manner and copied several of the fine engravings of his master. The dates of his birth and death are not known. The following are his principal works:

Mater Amabilis; after Sassoferato.

The Virgin and Infant Christ, with St. John, in a landscape; after Raphael; but copied from the engraving by R. Morghen.

La Madonna del Trono; after Raphael.

La Madonna di Foligno; after the same.

La Vierge à l'Oiseau; after the same; copied after R. Morghen.

The Transfiguration; after the same; copied after R. Morghen.

The Communion of St. Jerome; after Domenichino.

St. John Writing; after the same.

The Magdalene; after Schidone.

Leda; after Correggio; and several others after Carracci, N. Poussin, &c.

PAVONA, FRANCESCO, a painter, was born at Udine in 1682. He was instructed by A. Carnio and G. dal Sole, and painted portraits and historical subjects. He travelled through Italy, Germany, Spain, and Portugal, painting for the different courts, but settling eventually at Bologna. He died at Venice in 1773 or 1777.

PAXINO. See NOVA, PECINO DE.

PAXTON, JOHN, a Scotch portrait and historical painter, born in the first half of the 18th century. He was taught at Foulis's Academy, Glasgow, and coming to London, became in 1766 a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, where he exhibited as well as at the Royal Academy. He spent some time at Rome, and finally went to India, dying at Bombay in 1780.

PAY, JAN VAN, (OR PEY,) a painter of history and portraits, was born at Reidlingen in 1589. He was painter to the Elector of Bavaria, and portraits by him are to be found in Munich and the neighbourhood. He died in 1660 (?).

PAYE, MISS, an English miniature painter, who was probably the daughter of R. M. Paye. She exhibited at the Academy from 1798 to 1807, and appears to have had a fair practice. Among other people, Mrs. Siddons sat to her.

PAYE, RICHARD MORTON, an English subject painter, born at Botley, Kent, about the middle of the 18th century. He was brought up as a chaser, but his art tastes induced him to become a painter, and he produced some works which rapidly brought him into repute. For some time he was on terms of intimacy with 'Peter Pindar,' but the connection did not last long, and ended in a quarrel. Paye was an unfortunate genius. Two pictures of his are said to have been sold respectively as works of Velasquez and of Wright of Derby. But his work did not find a market, and he suffered much from ill-health. Poverty overtook him, and he sunk into obscurity. He is believed to have died in 1821. Many of Paye's pictures were engraved by J. Young, who was a friend of his; Valentine Green engraved his 'Child of Sorrow,' and three others, while he himself engraved 'Puss in Durance,' and 'No Danoe, No Supper.'

PAYEN, ANTOINE A. J., a Flemish landscape painter, born at Tournai towards the close of the 18th century. He resided for a long time in the East Indies. He obtained the prize for landscape in 1815 at Brussels. Amongst his pictures are:

Brussels. Museum. Landscape: moonlight.

Haarlem. Museum. Views in Java.

PAYNE, JOHN, an English engraver, was born about the year 1607. He was a disciple of Simon van de Pass, and is considered the first artist of this country who distinguished himself with the burin. Had his application been equal to his genius, he would have ranked among the first of his profession; but he was indolent and dissipated, and though recommended to King Charles I., he neglected his fortune and his fame, and died in indigence before he was forty, in 1647. He engraved portraits, frontispieces, and other plates for books, as well as a variety of other subjects, such as landscapes, flowers, fruit, birds, beasts, &c., but his portraits are the most esteemed of his prints. They are executed entirely with the graver, in a free, open style, and produce a very pleasing effect. One is dated as early as 1620. In Evelyn's 'Sculptura,' he is commended for his engraving of a ship, which Vertue informs us was the 'Royal Sovereign,' built in 1637, by Phineas Pett. It was engraved on two plates, and when joined, was three feet long, by two feet two inches high. The following are his most esteemed portraits:

Henry VII., prefixed to his Life by Lord Bacon.

Henry VIII.

Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex, with a hat and feather.

Sir Benjamin Rudyard; after Mytens.

Doctor Alabaster; after Cornelis Jansen.

Hugh Broughton.

Alderman Leate; after C. Jansen.

Roger Bolton. 1632.

Arthur Lake, Bishop of Chichester.

Sir Edward Coke. 1629.

He then returned to his own country, and died at the Hague in 1747 or 1750.

PEETERS, BONAVENTURA, a Flemish painter of battles and sea-pieces, was born at Antwerp in 1614. His favourite subject was a stormy sea with lightning flashing above, and a ship in danger. PELEGRET, TOMAS, a Spanish historical painter in fresco and en grisaille, was born at Toledo, where he studied the elements of his art, but afterwards went to Italy and placed himself under Baldassare da Siena, and Polidoro da Caravaggio, from whom he derived his knowledge of chiaroscuro; and whom he made his model. He returned to Spain, in the time of Charles V., and established himself at Saragossa, where he acquired considerable reputation. His drawings were highly prized, not only by amateurs, but by artists. They were purchased with avidity by painters, sculptors, decorators, and goldsmiths. Unfortunately few or none of his works in fresco exist, and the only examples of his ability that can be mentioned with certainty, are some pictures in the manner of Polidoro Caravaggio in the Monastery of Santa Eugracia, in Saragossa. He died at the age of 84. He had many scholars; among them was Cuevas, who assisted him in painting the sacristy of the cathedral of Huesca, and some other works.

He distinguished himself among the modern Venetians, by a ready and ingenious invention, and an unusual facility of execution, though the effect of his works is impoverished by a feeble and languid colouring, and a total neglect of the principles of chiaroscuro. The reputation he had acquired at Venice, and afterwards in Paris, recommended him to the notice of the Duke of Manchester, who invited him to England, where he resided some years, until 1712, in which year he entered the service of the Elector of Saxony at Dresden, and finally returned to Venice. He died in 1741. He executed several ornamental works for the mansions of the English nobility. He is noticed in the 'Guida di Venezia,' with this addition, 'Fu pittore più di fortuna che di merito' ('he was a painter rather by favour than by merit'). Some of his pictures have been engraved by V. Green, J. B. Cathelin, P. Simon, and T. Park. The following are preserved :

He painted several pictures for Perugia, in the churches of Sant' Antonio, in the Chiesa Nuova, and in other places. He was called 'Il Pittor Bello' for the beauty of his person. He died in 1612.

PEN, HISEL, (or PENN). Strutt has fallen into error with respect to a supposed artist of this name; it is now satisfactorily ascertained, that the prints assigned to him ought to be included in the works of Beham.

PEN, JACOB, was a Dutch painter, mentioned by Balkema as being particularly employed by Charles II. He says that he composed with intelligence, and added beautiful colour to correct drawing; but he says nothing of his subjects, and adds, "All his pictures are in England." Pen died in 1678.

PEÑA. See DIAZ DE LA PEÑA.

PENAL. See LA PENAL.

PENALOSA, JUAN DE, an historical painter of the school of Seville, was born at Baeza in 1581. He was one of the best scholars of Pablo de Cespedes, whose works he assiduously imitated, as is evinced in the magnificent picture in the cathedral of Cordova, representing St. Barbe. He also painted a 'St. Jago' for the convent of Arizafa; several pictures for the Minimes, and many others for private collections in Cordova, where he died in 1636.

PENCHARD, J., was a Dutch engraver, who resided at Leyden about the year 1678. His plates are chiefly confined to frontispieces, and other book ornaments; but he engraved the anatomical plates for the works of Reg. de Graaf, with the portrait of the author, published at Leyden in 1678.

PENCZ, GEORG, a native of Nuremberg, was born at or before the beginning of the 16th century. He was admitted into the Guild of Painters in 1523, after he had been, if not under the instruction, at least under the influence, of Albrecht Dürer. He was associated with the Behams, and with them in 1524 underwent the sentence of banishment for heresy. His sentence, however, seems to have been allowed to drop, as we find frequent notices of his presence in Nuremberg, though he was deprived of his citizen-right, and in 1525 he was permitted to settle in Windsheim, a place within the city's jurisdiction. About 1532 he probably returned to Nuremberg altogether. Before his trial we find him engaged on the work of restoring pictures, but he was afterwards appointed painter to the Rath. There is no proof that he paid much attention to engraving till 1635, the first date on any of his plates. He seems to have visited Italy on several occasions, and the dates of those visits have unusual importance from the fact that Passavant confidently ascribes to him one of the finest of the plates, which the world has been in the habit of giving to Marc-Antonio. In the fourth volume of the 'Peintre-Graveur,' Passavant says: "Pencz left his home to frequent the school of Marc-Antonio. This is put beyond a doubt by the style of his words at the time. The influence of the Italian school is clearly present. . . . Above all is it visible in the 'Massacre of the Innocents (au Chicot), Bartsch, 18,' hitherto considered the original plate by Raimondi himself." Passavant goes on to say that this Massacre au Chicot is finer and firmer in drawing than the one by Marc-Antonio, but rather less graceful and life-like. To quote his words; "On carefully comparing these two masterpieces of engraving on copper, No. 18 appears neater and firmer in drawing, but differs not only in the burin line, which is slightly thinner and stiffer than that of so consummate an artist as Marc-Antonio, but the expression of the heads has less life, and the hatchings sometimes have that horizontal direction which is never found among the Italian engravers. No. 20 (Bartsch), which undoubtedly belongs to Marc-Antonio, is of freer line, and fuller outline, and of greater vivacity in the heads. Everything considered, we are fully convinced that the print, No. 18, 'Au Chicot,' was executed by George Pencz after the original drawing of Raphael" (vol. iv. p. 101). To all this the champions of Raimondi oppose an alibi, asserting that Pencz did not practise engraving until after the deaths both of Raphael and Raimondi. It is difficult to see how this can be conclusive, and there certainly is much in common between the work in the disputed plate and that in the 'Triumphs of Petrarch,' which are without doubt by Pencz. In 1539 Pencz was certainly in Rome, and at this time executed a large print after Giulio Romano, called 'The Taking of Carthage,' and to this period is also assigned by Passavant, 'The Prisoners,' a print generally ascribed to Ghisi. Pencz executed several plates in miniature from the Old and New Testaments; also many scenes from ancient history and mythology. In 1544 he was commissioned to paint a 'S. Jerome' at Nuremberg, where he was also successful in portrait painting. He died at Breslau in 1550. Most of the pictures ascribed to Pencz are merely copies from his plates, but the following may be considered authentic:

Berlin.	Museum.	Portrait of the painter Erhard Schwetzer (signed with a monogram and dated 1544).
"	"	Portrait of Schwetzer's wife. 1545.
Carlsruhe.	"	Portrait of a Young Man. 1534.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Mathematician.
"	"	Three fragments from an 'Adoration of the Magi,' signed G. P. in a monogram.
"	"	Two Male Portraits (?).
Glasgow.	"	Female portrait (formerly ascribed to Holbein, whose name appears upon it.)
Gotha.	"	A Portrait.
Hampton Court.	"	Portrait of an Italian Gentleman.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	A Portrait.
		Copies of Holbein's Erasmus, at Windsor, Brunswick, and in the Bruderhaus at Nuremberg.

His engravings of Bible subjects are notable for their secular spirit, and his work as a whole for its combination of Italian refinement in execution with northern thoroughness. The following list includes all his more important plates :

- The six triumphs of Petrarch.
 The Massacre of the Innocents (au Chicot).
 The taking of Carthage (signed Georgino Pencz pictor, Nürnberg, Faciebat, Anno MDXXXIX); after Giulio Romano.
 The Prisoners. (Generally ascribed to G. Ghisi).
 Scenes from the Old Testament.

PENGUILLY L'HARIDON, OCTAVE, a French historical, landscape, and still-life painter, was born in Paris in 1811. He was a pupil of Charlet, and among his works was a picture of the death of Judas. He died in 1870.

PÉNICAUD. This was the name of a family of artists of the 15th and 16th centuries. It comprised:

LÉONARD or NARDON PÉNICAUD, an enameller of Limoges (1495—1513).

JEAN PÉNICAUD, the elder, also an enameller of Limoges (beginning of the 16th century).

JEAN PÉNICAUD, the younger, a painter (1531-47), has left a portrait of Luther and several other works in Paris, and in private collections.

JEAN PÉNICAUD, the youngest, called 'The Glory of Limoges,' was a follower of Parmigiano in style. The Louvre has a fine collection of his enamels.

PIERRE PÉNICAUD, probably a brother of the last (born 1515), is the painter of some draped figures in the Gateaux Collection, and of a mythological subject on porcelain at Berlin. For a more detailed account of the Pénicauds see Laborde, 'Notice des Émaux du Louvre.'

PENLEY, AARON EDWIN, a water-colour painter, born in 1806, first appears in 1835 as an exhibitor at the Royal Academy, to which he continued to contribute occasionally till 1857. In 1838 he was elected a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-colours, but withdrew in 1856 on the ground that justice was not done to his works when sent for exhibition. In 1859 he was, at his own solicitation, re-elected an Associate. From 1851 till its dissolution he was Professor of Drawing at the Addiscombe East India College, and he held a similar post at Woolwich till his death. He was water-colour painter to William IV. and Queen Adelaide. He was the author of 'Elements of Perspective,' 'The English School of Painting in Water-colours,' and 'Sketching from Nature in Water-colours.' He died at Lewisham in 1870.

PENNA, DELLA. See NUZZI.

PENNACCHI, GIROLAMO DI PIER-MARIA, (called GIROLAMO DA TREVISO,) was the son of Pietro Maria Pennacchi, and born in 1497 at Treviso, in which city a house known as that of Pier Maria Pennacchi still exists, its façade covered with a fresco by Girolamo of the 'Judgment of Solomon,' together with medallions, playing children, and similar designs. In early life Girolamo went to Venice, and from thence to Genoa, but nothing authentic now remains of his labours in either city. In 1532 he was employed by Cardinal Glöss to paint several frescoes in the Castello at Trent; remains of these still exist. In 1533 Sabba da Castiglione employed him to paint at the church of the Commenda of Faenza a votive fresco of the 'Virgin and Child, with Saints,' and a kneeling portrait of himself, that still remains over the high altar. At about this period in his life he paid a visit to Bologna, where several of the churches possess frescoes and paintings by him. Between the years 1535 and 1538 he returned to Venice, and became intimate with Titian, Sansovino, and Aretino. During this visit he painted many frescoes in different palaces of the nobility; those executed by him in the Palazzo Andrea Odone still remain. In 1542 he came to England, and became architect and engineer to Henry VIII., and was employed by that monarch at the siege of Boulogne, where he was killed by a cannon-ball in 1544. The mode of his death is described in a letter from Aretino to Sansovino, dated in July 1545. Works: London. Nat. Gal. Virgin and Child, with SS. Joseph, James, and Paul, and patron.

(The best example extant. It came originally from the Boccaferri Chapel in San Domenico, Bologna.)

Rome. Colonna Pal. Portrait of a Man holding a medal.
 Treviso. Onigo Coll. Virgin and Child, with St. Joseph.
 " " " Two bust portraits of Men.

PENNACCHI, PIETRO MARIA, was the son of Giovanni di Daniele Pennacchi, and born in 1464. He probably spent his early years in Treviso, and went to Venice in after-life. In the church of San Francesco della Vigna, Venice, there is an 'Annunciation' by him; and Santa Maria della Salute, Santa Maria della Misericordia, and La Madonna de' Miracoli have each ceilings panelled in relief with sacred subjects in the panels, which are ascribed to this artist. On the front of a house in the Via Ognissanti, Treviso, are various sacred and profane frescoes, said to have been painted by Pietro in 1528, in which year he died. The following works by him may also be mentioned:

Berlin. Museum. Christ in the Tomb, between two Angels.
 Treviso. Cathedral. The Assumption of the Virgin.

PENNE, JAN VAN, a Dutch still-life painter, was settled at Antwerp about 1680. He was born about 1652, and died after 1700. He was the teacher of J. J. Horemans the elder. Perhaps identical with J. van Pee.

PENNEMAKERS, THE RECOLLET, was, according to Balkema, a scholar of Rubens. In the Museum at Antwerp there is an 'Ascension of Christ' attributed to him.

PENNENSUS, F., who was probably a painter, and a native of Italy, has left a few slight etchings, the following among them:

The Holy Family, with St. Catharine, and an Angel in the air; after Parmigiano.
 The Marriage of St. Catharine; from his own design.

PENNEVILLE, JAN, a Flemish historical painter, was a native of Bruges. He was Master of the Corporation of St. Luke in 1639, and died in 1681.

PENNEY, N., a French engraver, has left some plates of devout subjects, executed with the graver. Among others is 'The Virgin appearing to St. Bartholomew,' which is apparently from his own design, as he adds fecit to his name.

PENNI, BARTOLOMEO, was an Italian portrait and historical painter of the 16th century. He was engaged in England by Henry VIII. at the same time as Antonio Toto.

PENNI, GIANFRANCESCO, called IL FATTORE, was a painter of Florence, born about 1488. He went to Rome when he was very young, and was received into the school of Raphael, of whom he became a favourite disciple; and being entrusted by that artist with the management of his domestic affairs, he acquired the appellation of 'Il Fattore.' Raphael employed him in many of his most important works, particularly in painting upon the cartoons for Leo X., and in the Loggie of the Vatican. Taja informs us that the histories of Abraham and Isaac were executed by Penni. In these important undertakings, he acquitted himself so much to the satisfaction of Raphael, that he was appointed joint executor with Giulio Romano. He was employed by Clement VII., in conjunction with Giulio, to finish the frescoes of the 'History of Constantine,' which had been begun in the Saloon now called after them. 'Constantine's Vision of the Cross,' and his 'Battle with Maxentius,' were painted by Giulio; his 'Baptism by St. Silvester,' and his 'Donation of Rome to that pontiff,' by Penni; so in 'The Assumption of the Virgin,' at Monte Luce, Perugia, Penni painted the lower half. He had also a principal share in the 'History of Cupid and Psyche,' in the Farnesina. After this he fell into disagreement with Giulio, and made a tour through Lombardy, settling afterwards at Rome. The marriage of his sister with Perino del Vaga led him to working in conjunction with this artist also. Of his own compositions, those executed in fresco have now almost entirely perished; and he painted so few pictures in oil, that they are rarely to be met with. He particularly excelled in landscapes, and was well acquainted with the beauties of architecture. In 1525 he was invited to Naples by the Marquis del Vasto, and took with him an admirable copy he had made of the 'Transfiguration,' by Raphael, which he sold to that nobleman, for whom he executed some considerable works. This copy is now in the Sciarra Colonna Palace, at Rome. He died in 1528. Pictures by him are in the Vatican, the Museum of Naples, and the galleries of Dresden and Stuttgart. According to some authorities the picture in the Bridgewater Gallery, known as 'The Madonna del Passeggio,' is painted by him.

PENNI, LUCA, called ROMANO, the brother of Gianfrancesco Penni, was born about the year 1500. He is said to have frequented, for a short time, the studio of Raphael; and after the death of that master to have attached himself to Perino del Vaga. After painting some pictures for the churches at Lucca and Genoa, he visited England, in the reign of Henry VIII., by whom he was for some time employed, and afterwards went to France, where he painted at Fontainebleau, in conjunction with Il Rosso. On his return to Italy he applied himself to engraving, and executed several plates, both with the point and the graver. Among his designs are 'Diana borne on the shoulders of Orion' (engraved by Giorgio Ghisi); 'Apollo with the Muses upon Parnassus' (engraved by G. Mantovano); and a 'Scourging of Christ' (engraved by H. Wierix). His prints are chiefly from the works of Il Rosso and Primaticcio; the following are the best:

The Death of Lucretia.

Two Satyrs presenting Wine to Bacchus; after Il Rosso.
Leda drawing Arrows from Cupid's Quiver; after the same.

Susauna and the Elders; after the same.

The Sacrifice of Isaac; after Primaticcio.

The Marriage of St. Catharine; after the same.
Penelope at work, surrounded by her Women; after the same.

PENNING, NICOLAAS LODEWILK, born at the Hague in 1764, was a scholar of Dirk van der Aa, and painted landscapes, interiors of stables, and marine subjects. He died at the Hague in 1818. His drawings are held in some esteem.

PENNY, EDWARD, was born at Knutsford, in Cheshire, in 1714, and having, at an early period of his life, discovered an inclination to painting, he was sent to London, where he was placed under the tuition of Hudson, who was at that time eminent. He afterwards went to Rome, where he studied some time under Marco Benefial. On his return to England, some time before 1748, Penny became a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists of Great Britain, of which he was for some time vice-president. At the foundation of the Royal Academy he was one of the original members, and was appointed their first Professor of Painting. He continued in that situation, and read an annual course of lectures, which were well received, until the year 1783, when, in consequence of declining health, he was obliged to resign the professorship, and was succeeded by Barry. About this period he went to reside at Chiswick, and having married a lady of property, lived in quiet retirement until his death, which happened in 1791.

Penny was principally employed in painting small portraits in oil, which were very generally admired. He also painted sentimental and historical subjects, many of which were publicly exhibited. Among others, were the 'Death of General Wolfe,' from which a mezzotint print was published by Sayer, and met with a very extensive sale; the portrait of the 'Marquis of Granby relieving a sick Soldier,' from which there is a print; 'Virtue rewarded,' and 'Profligacy punished,' two pictures which are also engraved. In 1782 he exhibited for the last time. The pictures then shown included 'The Benevolent Physician,' 'The Rapacious Quack,' and 'The Distraint of the Widow's Cow.'

PENOZZI, B., is mentioned by Papillon as an engraver on wood, but he has not specified any of his prints.

PENS. See PENCZ.

PENSABENE, Fra MARCO, and Fra MARCO MARAVEIA, his assistant, both of the order of the Dominicans at Venice, painted at Treviso in 1520 and 1521. The former was born at Venice about 1486, and entered his religious order in 1502. Lanzi, enumerating the scholars, followers, and imitators of Giovanni Bellini, mentions the altar-piece in the Dominican church at Treviso, painted by Marco Pensabene and his assistant, in which the cupola, the columns, and the perspective, with the throne of the Virgin seated with the infant Jesus, and surrounded by saints standing, the steps ornamented with an angel playing on the guitar, are all modelled on similar things by Bellini. Crowe and Cavalcaselle conjecture that this altar-piece may have been finished by Savoldo. In 1520 Pensabene began a painting of 'The Madonna with Saints,' for San Niccolò, in Treviso, but for some unknown reason fled secretly from his convent in 1521, before it was completed. It still, however, evinces such merit that it has been ascribed to Titian, Giorgione, and Sebastiano del Piombo. In 1524 Pensabene was again a Dominican friar in Venice, where he died in 1529. Two portraits by him are in the monastery at Treviso, and a 'Madonna with Saints' in possession of the Conte Lochis Carrara.

PENZEL, JOHANN GEORG, a painter and engraver, was born at Hersbruck, near Nuremberg, in 1764, according to Brulliot (Zani and Nagler say in 1754), and died at Leipsic in 1809. He commenced with Schellenberg at Winterthur, and afterwards studied at Dresden, where he entirely devoted himself to engraving. He worked much for the publishers there, and engraved many of Chodowiecki's designs.

PEPIJN, MARTIN, (PEPIN, or PEPYN,) was born at Antwerp in 1575. It is not known under whom he studied, but he went when young to Italy, where he remained several years. Such was the reputation he acquired at Rome, that when Rubens, who was then in the zenith of his fame at Antwerp, heard of Pepijn's intention to return to his native country, it occasioned him some uneasiness. Pepijn became a member of the Guild at Antwerp about 1600, and died in 1642 or 1643. In the church of the hospital at Antwerp there are two admirable works by him; they are both triptychs. In the centre picture of one he has represented the Baptism of St. Augustine; on one of the wings, that Saint giving alms to the poor; on the other, St. Augustine curing the Sick. The centre picture of the other triptych represents St. Elisabeth giving charity to a group of miserable objects, who are struggling to approach her. On one of the wings is the death of that Saint, and on the other her Ascension to heaven, with a choir of angels. The Museum of the same city possesses a 'Preaching of St. Luke,' and 'The Passage of the Red Sea' (1626), by him; the cathedral a 'St. Norbert,' and the Arenberg Gallery at Brussels a 'Female Head.' Most of the works of Pepijn are, however, in Italy. His daughter, KATHARINA PEPIJN, also a painter, was born in 1619, and became a member of the Guild in 1653.

PEQUIGNOT, an obscure French landscape painter of the 18th century. He is chiefly remembered as the friend of Girodet Trioson, with whom he travelled.

PERE, ANT. VAN DE. See VANDEPERE.

PEREA, —. A Spanish painter mentioned by Espinosa de los Monteros among the artists employed at Seville in the decoration of the funeral monument of Philip II. Perhaps identical with Pereira (q. v.).

PEREÁ, BLAS DE, was a Portuguese painter, who settled in Castile about 1550. He was a friend of the painter Francisco de Holanda.

PEREDA, ANTONIO, (or PEREA,) a Spanish historical painter, was born at Valladolid in 1599. He was a scholar of Pedro de las Cuevas, and gave early proofs of his ability in art. After making considerable progress in the school of Cuevas he was placed by his patron, Don Francisco de Texada, with Juan Bautista Crescenzi, Marquis de la Torre, who had been a pupil of Pomerancio. At the age of eighteen he produced and exhibited to the public a picture of the 'Immaculate Conception,' in which the Virgin appeared on a throne of clouds supported by angels. The reputation he acquired by this performance induced the 'Conde-Duque,' Olivarez, who was then occupied in filling the palace of the Buen Retiro with the works of the best Spanish painters, to place Pereda among those of the highest rank. He performed his part to the satisfaction of his patron, and was munificently rewarded. Pereda's works were much in request, and he exercised his talent on a great variety of subjects. History, social scenes, still-life, vases, tapestry, musical instruments; all were within the compass of his versatile brush. He died at Madrid in 1669. His works were formerly to be found in all the palaces and churches of Madrid, Toledo, Alcala, Cuenca, Valladolid, and in many private collections. At present there are two in the Madrid Gallery, one of which is a 'St. Jerome meditating on the last Judgment;' in the church of San Tomas is a 'St. Domingo and God the Father' (1640), and in the Academy of San Fernando 'The Dream of Life;' in Marshal Soult's collection there was a 'Christ asleep on the Cross,' with flowers and skulls about Him; in the Esterhazy Gallery, at Pesth, there is a 'St. Anthony and the Infant Christ' (the same subject is among the Suermondt pictures at Berlin); a still-life subject (1621) is at St. Petersburg; and three or four in the Gallery at Munich. Formerly it was considered that no Spanish collection was complete without an example of Pereda.

PEREDA Y DUARTE, TOMAS DE, a Spanish artist, who became a member of the Academy of San Fernando in 1757. He died in 1770.

PEREGRINI DA CESENA, an Italian engraver of the 15th century. Duchesne enumerates sixty-six plates by his hand, which he calls nielli. More recent critics, however, see in these not proofs of goldsmith's work, but impressions from plates expressly engraved for printing. The facts in favour of this view are, in the first place, the number of these so-called nielli, and, secondly, the occurrence of the artist's signature upon the prints with the letters the right way. Peregrini's most important plate is a 'Resurrection,' which is signed De Opus Peregrini Ce. The rest of the plates ascribed to him are signed either P or O.P.D.C.

PEREIRA, VASCO, (PEREYRA, or PREIRA,) was a Portuguese painter, who resided at Seville, in great credit, at the end of the 16th century. He was employed in 1594 to repair the fine fresco of 'Christ of the Criminals,' painted only thirty years previously by Luis de Vargas. He was one of the artists employed in the cathedral of Seville in 1598, to prepare the magnificent decorations for the funeral service of Philip II. He painted the 'Decollation of St. Paul' for the convent of that order, in competition with Moledano and Vazquez. He executed many other works which have ceased to exist in Spain, though some are to be found in Portugal. He was reckoned a skilful draughtsman, but dry and hard as a colourist, as may be noted in the 'Four Doctors of the Church' painted by him for the library of the Carthusians of Santa Maria de las Cuevas, and an 'Annunciation' in the college of San Hermenegildo. He died at the commencement of the 17th century. The Dresden Gallery possesses a 'St. Onofrius' by him. In the case of the 'Crucifixion' in the Misericordia of Oporto, it is undecided whether it was the work of Pereira, or of Vasco Fernandez. The Museum of Seville possesses a 'Nativity' dated 1579.

PERELLE, GABRIEL, an eminent French designer and engraver, was born at Vernon-sur-Seine at the beginning of the 17th century, and died in Paris in 1675. He was instructed by Daniel Rabel, whom he soon surpassed. He excelled in drawing and engraving landscapes and views, of which he left a prodigious number. He usually enriched them with ruins and other objects, which give an agreeable variety to his scenery. Although by far the greater part of his plates are from his own compositions, he also engraved from the designs of several other masters, particularly Paul Bril, Gaspar Poussin, Asselyn, and above all, Silvestre. His best works are comprised in the two collections, 'Délices de Paris,' and 'Délices de Versailles.' He was assisted in his numerous works by his sons, NICOLAS and ADAM PERELLE, who, after his death, engraved a great number of plates of architectural views, landscapes, &c., which are inferior to those of their father. Nicolas is stated to have engraved 'The Four Seasons,' and 'The Four Elements,' and to have died at Orleans; Adam, to have been born in 1638, and died in Paris in 1695. The Perelles worked both with the point and the graver. Their works from their own designs are multifarious, and frequently to be met with. The following are the principal plates they engraved after other artists:

A set of four Views, the Church of St. Michel at Dijon, the Palace in that City, the Bridge of Grenoble, and the Porte Royale at Marseilles; after Silvestre.

Four Views in Paris, the Arsenal du Mail, the Pontneuf, the Louvre, the Mail, and surrounding country; after the same.

A set of four Views, the Baths of Bourbon d'Archambaud, the Castle of Bourbon Lancy, with the Baths of Julius Cæsar; and the great Chartreuse near Grenoble; after the same.

Six Views of the Jardin de Ruel; after Israel Silvestre. Two Mountainous Landscapes, with biblical subjects; after P. Bril.

Six Views in Rome and its Environs; after J. Asselyn. A View of Ruins, with the Adoration of the Magi; after Poelenberg.

PÉREZ, ANDRES, a Spanish historical and flower painter, was born at Seville in 1660; and was instructed by his father, Francisco Pérez de Pineda one of the members of the Society of Professors who established the Academy in that city, and who was himself a scholar of Murillo. In the sanctuary of Santa Lucia, at Seville, there were three Scriptural subjects relating to the holy sacrament, signed Andres Pérez, 1707; and in the sacristy of the Capuchins of the same city another with the date 1713, representing the 'Last Judgment,' taken in part from that of Michelangelo. Pérez was, however, most successful in painting flowers and other objects after nature. His historical works show a great falling off from the good rules Murillo had endeavoured to establish. Andres Pérez died in 1727.

PÉREZ, ANTONIO, a Spanish historical painter, born in a village of Andalusia. In 1548 he was employed to paint chosen subjects for the old sanctuary of Seville cathedral. In 1550 he finished three pictures for the church of Nuestra Señora; in 1553 he painted the altar of San Ibo, and in 1555 restored that of the church of San Francisco. He died about 1580. His son Antonio worked with him.

PÉREZ, ANTONIO and NICOLAS, painters, were two brothers living at Seville from 1654 to 1668, who devoted considerable time and money to the foundation of the Academy in that city.

PÉREZ, BARTOLOMÉ, was a Spanish painter, born at Madrid in 1634, and appointed painter to the king in 1689. He was the scholar and son-in-law of the flower-painter Arellano, whom he excelled as a draughtsman, and sometimes assisted by painting the figures in his works. He was particularly successful in rendering curtains and drapery, on which he was much employed for the theatre at Buen Retiro. His flower-pieces too were much esteemed. He died in 1693 from a fall from some scaffolding whilst painting a ceiling in the palace of the Duke of Monteleon. He painted a 'St. Rosa of Lima,' a 'Virgin praying to the Child,' and many flower paintings, of which there are four good examples in the Madrid Museum.

PÉREZ, FLORIAN JUAN, a Spanish nobleman, and amateur painter of genre subjects, was born in the neighbourhood of Madrid in the first half of the 16th century. He was a knight of a religious order; in 1566 was appointed valet to Philip II. He died at the commencement of the 17th century.

PÉREZ, JOAQUIN, a Spanish historical painter, was born at Alcoy. In 1773 he gained the prize from the Academy of San Carlos at Valencia. He died in 1779.

PÉREZ, MATTEO. See ALESIO.

PÉREZ DE PINEDA, FRANCISCO, was a pupil of Murillo. His son, who bore the same name, went at his father's death to the school of Luca de Valdés, and died at Seville in 1732. Bermudez says that his pictures were as bad as the doggerel verse in which he wrote the life of Fernando de Contreras.

PERFETTI, ANTONIO, an engraver, was born at Florence in 1792, and from 1818 onwards was a pupil of Rafael Morghen. In 1828 he obtained the prize at the Florence Academy with his 'Sibyl of Cumæ,' after Guercino, but obtained wider renown through his 'Presentation in the Temple,' after Fra Bartolommeo. He and his pupils completed the engraved collection of the Gallery of Florence. He died in that city in 1872. Other plates by him are:

The Madonnas 'della Sedia' and 'del Granduca'; after Raphael.

PERGER, ANTON VON, a painter, born at Vienna in 1809. He was a son and pupil of Sigmund von Perger. In 1830-33 he was travelling in Italy, and on his return to Vienna he was appointed Professor of Anatomy, and in 1872 Director of the Court Library. He painted chiefly still-life scenes. He died in 1876.

PERGER, SIGMUND FERDINAND VON, historical painter and engraver, was born at Vienna in 1778, and studied at the Academy there. In 1816 he became Court painter, and in 1825 assistant custodian of the Belvedere Gallery. He died in the same city in 1841. As a painter on porcelain he showed himself especially skilful, working eleven years at the Imperial factory. Among his works we may name:

Horse-race at Kopcsan (afterwards engraved by himself). The Herald bringing the News of the Victory of Marathon to Athens.

The Rape of Ganymede.

Romulus and Remus with the She-wolf. (Etching.)

PERICCIOLI, GIULIO, (or PERICCIOLI,) designer and etcher, was born at Siena about 1600, and after receiving some instruction from his uncle Francesco, an ecclesiastic and calligraphist, completed his studies in Rome and Venice. He subsequently visited Constantinople, Egypt, Malta, Sicily, and Spain, where Philip III. appointed him drawing-master to the prince, his son. He next went to Holland, and was similarly employed on behalf of the Princess Louise; then to England, where he painted Charles I.; and finally returned to his own country, where he entered the service of the Grand Duke of Tuscany. He died after 1660. He produced numerous pen-and-ink drawings, several of which he etched. Two plates by him after Vanni represent a 'King writing,' and a 'Warrior on horseback.'

PERIER, FRANÇOIS, an obscure French painter and engraver, who died about 1655. He was a native of Saint-Jean-de-Laure. He was a member of the maîtrise.

PERIGAL, ARTHUR, an English historical painter of some promise, who gained the Academy gold medal in 1811 for his 'Themistocles taking refuge with Admetus.' He occasionally exhibited at the Academy up to 1821, after which there is no further trace of him. In that year he was living at Northampton.

PERIGAL, ARTHUR, a landscape painter of Highland scenery, was born in London in 1816. In 1864 he published 'Tuscan Sculptors,' in two volumes; in 1867, 'Italian Sculptors,' in one volume, and in 1878, 'Raphael and Michael Angelo.' PEROLA, JUAN, FRANCISCO, and ESTÉFANO, painters, sculptors, and architects, were three brothers, natives of Almagro, in La Mancha, who are supposed to have studied in the school of Becerra. In 1586 they were employed by the Marquis of Santa Cruz, with Cesare Arbasia, an Italian, to paint in fresco the staircase, halls, and court of his palace at El Viso. In the adjacent conventual church of the Franciscans were some oil pictures and various marble tombs attributed to the Perolas; they also assisted Mohedano in painting frescoes for Cordova cathedral.

PERON, DAL. See CUSIGHER.

PERONI, GIUSEPPE, according to Abate Affo, was born at Parma about the year 1700. He first studied at Bologna, under Felice Torelli and Donato Creti, and afterwards went to Rome, where he became a scholar of Agostino Masucci. He was a tolerably correct designer, and, in his best performances, imitates the style of Carlo Maratti. Such are his pictures in the church of San Satiro, at Milan; and the 'Conception,' at the Padri dell' Oratorio, at Turin. In competition with Pompeo Batoni, he painted in fresco for the church of Sant' Antonio Abate, 'The Crucifixion,' which places him among the most respectable artists of his time. He died in 1776.

PEROTTI, PIETRO ANTONIO, portrait painter, was born at Verona in 1712, and died there in 1793. He was a pupil of Balestra, and painted pastel portraits at Venice, Rome, and London. He married ANGELICA LEGRU (born 1719, died 1776), who executed works of a similar class.

PEROU, ANTOINE, an obscure painter, who was appointed concierge to the Académie in Paris, in the time of Louis Testelin, whose pupil he had been.

PEROUX, JOSEPH NICOLAUS, was born at Ludwigsburg in 1771, and after studying at Stuttgart, became the first teacher of Overbeck, and came in 1806 to Frankfort, where he died in 1849. He painted portraits in oil and miniature, an allegorical Reformation picture, and a 'Christ as the Children's Friend' (now in the City Collection at Frankfort).

PEROXINO, GIOVANNI, a painter who was active at Alba, in Piedmont, in the year 1517. He painted an altar-piece for the conventuali, in that town.

PERRACINI, GIUSEPPE, an historical painter, called Il Mirandolese. He was born in 1672, and died in 1754. His talent was very slight, and he should not be confounded with Pietro Paltronieri, who was also called Il Mirandolese.

PERRE, JAN. See VAN DER PERRE.

PERREAL, JEHAN, called JEAN DE PARIS, was court painter to Charles VIII., Louis XII., and Francis I., from 1483 to 1528, and produced numerous pictures of battles and sieges. His father, CLAUDE DE PERREAL, painter and poet, in whose honour Clément Marsh wrote some verses, was valet to Louis XI. in 1474. Jean's name occurs for the first time in 1483, as that of a valet-de-chambre to Charlotte, the wife of Louis XI. He followed the French army into Italy, and was commissioned to paint some of its feats. Jean was employed by the municipality of Lyons in 1489 and 1493 to organize the fêtes given by the town in honour of the visit of Charles VIII. In 1496 he was the first to sign the act of incorporation of the Lyons artists. He was the friend and protector of the poet, Jean Lemaire, whom he presented to Anne of Brittany. After Anne's death Perreal was charged to paint her portrait, which he did, from the corpse. The miniatures in a manuscript relating to the Queen's obsequies are also ascribed to him. Perreal, who was an engineer and architect as well as a painter, died in 1528 or 1529.

PERRET, PIETER, (or PEDRO PERET,) an engraver, was born about 1550: it is uncertain whether he was a native of France or of the Low Countries. He studied at Rome under Cornelis Cort, and was engraver to the Duke of Bavaria and the Elector of Cologne. In 1589 he settled at Antwerp, where he engraved some views of the monastery of San Lorenzo in the Escorial, from drawings by Juan de Herrera, which gave so much satisfaction to Philip II. that he invited him to Spain, and appointed him his engraver; an office which he retained under Philip III. and IV. He was called to Madrid in 1595, and resided there till his death in 1637. His chief performance was a set of portraits of the Kings of Portugal, published in 1603, which he inscribed Pedro Perret sculptor Regis fecit. He also engraved several plates of historical subjects, among which are:

The Woman taken in Adultery; after Brueghel.

The Chastity of Joseph; after Speeckaert.

Four subjects from the Life of Ignatius Loyola, with his portrait.

PERRIER, FRANÇOIS, called LE BOURGUIGNON, was a French painter and engraver, who was born either at Saint Jean de Losne or at Macon, in Burgundy, about the year 1584. He was the son of a goldsmith, who had him instructed in the elements of design; but as he opposed his desire of becoming a painter, the young Perrier secretly left his home, and, without the means of subsistence, associated himself with a blind mendicant, who was on his way to Italy, and by this means arrived at Rome. He accidentally became acquainted with Lanfranco, who encouraged him in his pursuit, and admitted him into his school. After a residence of several years at Rome, he returned in 1630 to France, and passed some time at Lyons, where he painted a set of pictures for the cloister of the Carthusians. He then visited Paris, where Simon Vouet, who was then in possession of every commission of importance, employed him in painting the chapel of the chateau of Chilly, from his design. Finding little employment in Paris, he returned to Rome in 1635, where he applied himself to engraving the principal antique statues and bas-reliefs, and executed several plates after the Italian masters, as well as from his own designs. After the death of Simon Vouet, he returned to Paris in 1645, when he was employed to paint the gallery of the Hôtel de la Vrillière, and was one of the twelve professors who in 1648 founded the Academy. He died in Paris in 1650. Some of his best paintings are the frescoes in the above hotel, and his pictures of 'Apollo in the Chariot of the Sun,' 'The Temptation of St. Anthony,' and 'Acis and Galatea'—this last in the Louvre. We have by him also a considerable number of etchings, from his own designs, and after other masters. He sometimes signed his name Paria. The following are his principal plates:

A set of one hundred prints from antique statues, published at Rome.

A set of fifty, from ancient bas-reliefs.

Ten plates of Angels from the Farnesina; after Raphael.

Two plates of the Assembly of the Gods, and the Marriage of Cupid and Psyche; after the paintings by Raphael, in the Farnesina.

The Communion of St. Jerome; after Agost. Carracci.

The Flight into Egypt; after the same.

The Nativity; after S. Vouet.

The portrait of Simon Vouet; F. Perrier fecit. 1632.

AFTER HIS OWN DESIGNS.

The Holy Family, with St. John playing with a Lamb.

The Crucifixion; inscribed Franciscus Perrier, Burgundius, pinx. et scul.

St. Roch curing the Plague-stricken.

The Body of St. Sebastian, supported by two Saints.

Venus and the Graces.

Time clipping the Wings of Love, engraved in chiar-oscuro.

PERRIER, GUILLAUME, born at Macon about 1600, was the nephew and scholar of François Perrier, whose style he followed. Of his works as a painter the most considerable are his pictures in the sacristy of the Minimes at Lyons, where he took refuge, having killed a man in a duel. We have by this artist several etchings, executed in the style of his uncle. He died in 1655. Among his best plates we may name:

A Holy Family.

The Death of the Magdalene.

Portrait of Lazarus Meyssonier.

Au allegorical subject.

PERRIN, JEAN, was an obscure engraver on wood, who, conjointly with Jean Munier, executed a set of cuts for a work entitled 'La Morosophie de Guillaume de la Perrière Tolsain, contenant cent Emblemes,' published in 1553.

PERRIN, JEAN CHARLES NICAISE, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1754. He was a pupil of Doyen and Durameau. In 1787 he was elected a member of the Academy of Painting. Among his works are, 'Venus healing the Wound of Æneas,' 'The Sacrifice of Cyanippus,' and an 'Assumption.' He died in 1831.

PERRIN, OLIVIER STANISLAS, a French painter, born at Rostrenen in 1761. He first studied at the Academy of Rennes, but afterwards, through the kindness of the Duke of Charost, he entered the studio of Doyen. He then worked with the engraver Massard, after which he went on two or three campaigns. He then obtained a Government post at Quimper, and painted several pictures illustrating Breton life. He died at Quimper in 1832.

PERRIN, THOMAS, a miniaturist, who flourished at Dijon about 1400. He worked for the Duke of Burgundy.

PERRISSIM, JACQUES, (PERSIN, or PERSINUS,) was an old French engraver, who flourished about the year 1570. In conjunction with J. Tortorel, he designed and engraved, partly on wood and partly on copper, a set of twenty-four large prints, representing subjects from the Huguenot war, 1559 to 1570. His copper-plates are etched in a coarse, incorrect style; the woodcuts are executed with more attention. He sometimes signed his prints J. Perrissim fecit, or J. Persinus fecit, and sometimes marked them with the monogram Ɔ. Zani thinks that he was a German by birth, an opinion in which Nagler seems to concur. The latter says he was born in 1530, and quotes the work referred to as being published in 1567 and 1574. Brulliot has given his monogram thus Ɔ which agrees with Nagler, who calls him C. Jakob. When he engraved conjointly with Tortorel the monogram is

Ɔ. See also TORTOREL.

PERRONEAU, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French engraver, was born in 1731, and died in 1796. He was instructed by L. Cars. He engraved also after Boucher, Van Loo, and Bouchardon. He was a painter in crayons, and was for a short time in England, where he exhibited some portraits in that medium. Among other prints, he has left two of the elements, 'Air' and 'Earth,' after Nateire; the companions, 'Fire' and 'Water,' are engraved by P. Aveline. Perroneau is said by Siret to have died at Amsterdam in 1783.

PERROT, ANTOINE MARIE, a French landscape and architectural painter, born in Paris in 1787. He was a pupil of Watelet and Michallon. Among his landscapes are views of Clisson and Messina.

PERROT, CATHERINE, a French miniature, flower, and animal painter, who flourished in the 17th century. She was a pupil of Nicolas Robert, and was received into the Academy in 1682. She published some works on painting in miniature. She married one Claude Horry, a notary.

PERROT, FERDINAND VICTOR, a French painter, born at Paimbœuf in 1808. At the age of nineteen he painted for the small church of Ploudaniel an 'Assumption,' which attracted a great deal of attention. He then went to Paris to study, and there executed for M. Gudin a large number of lithographs. He painted several sea-pieces, and in 1836 went to Italy, where he produced a picture of 'Susannah and the Elders' which made some sensation. In 1840 he went to St. Petersburg, and was just about to be admitted into the Academy, when, yielding to the severity of the climate, he died in 1841.

PERRY, FRANCIS, an English engraver, was born at Abingdon in Berkshire, and was a pupil of one of the Vanderbanks. He was for some time under Richardson, but made little progress as a painter. He afterwards set up as an engraver, and for some time worked for the magazines. He died in London in 1765. His best plates are coins and medals, which he copied with neatness and precision. He also engraved some portraits, among which we have the following:

Dr. Ducarrel, affixed to his Anglo-Norman Antiquities.

Matthew Hutton, Bishop of Durham.

Alexander Pope, Poet.

He also etched a series of drawings, by himself, of Lichfield Cathedral.

PERSECOUTER (or PERSECUTEUR). See SERWOUTER.

PERSEUS, an ancient Greek painter, who flourished more than three hundred years before Christ. He was a disciple of Apelles, and though greatly inferior to his master, he may be presumed to have possessed considerable talents, as he was favoured with the particular esteem of that painter, who addressed a treatise on art to him.

PERSEVAL, —, a French portrait painter, born at Chamery in 1745. He was a Professor of Drawing at the Royal College of Pont-le-Voy. In the Museum at Rheims there is an old woman's portrait by him. He died in 1837.

PERSIJN, KENIER DE, (PERSEYN, PERZYN, &c.), called NARCISSUS, was a painter and engraver, born at Amsterdam about the year 1600. He went to Rome, where, in conjunction with Cornelis Bloemaert, Theodor Matham, and M. Natalis, he engraved the statues in the Palazzo Giustiniani. He married the daughter of the glass-painter, Theodor Crabeth, who brought him a fortune which enabled him to drop the profession. He worked with the burin in a neat, clear style. We have also the following plates by him:

The Portrait of Ariosto; after Titian.
Baldassare, Count Castiglione; after Raphael.
S. Coster, Physician; after Sandrart.
Admiral Meppel; after Pierson.
Old Age; after Rubens.

PERSINUS. See PERRISSIM.

PERSON, NICOLAUS, a German engraver, flourished about the year 1700. He executed a set of indifferent prints after portraits of German Archbishops; these were published in 1696.

PERSYN, JAN, a Dutch portrait painter, born at The Hague in 1708. He was a pupil of Constantine Netscher. He afterwards entered the Artillery, and became an engineer in the service of the Dutch Republic.

PERTUS, RAPHAEL, a Spanish painter of history and landscape, who flourished at Saragossa about 1680. His landscapes were graceful in composition and pleasant in colour.

PERUCCI, ORAZIO, an Italian historical painter, born at Reggio in 1548. He was a pupil of Lelio Orsi, and was also an architect. In the church of S. Giovanni in Reggio there is a picture of S. Albert by him. He died in 1624. His son FRANCESCO was also an artist.

PERUGIA, BERNARDINO DA, was a painter living in Perugia in the early part of the 16th century, who has been often confounded with Pinturicchio. He established himself in San Severino in 1509, and in 1524 he painted an altar-piece, now in San Domenico of that city, representing a 'Virgin and Child, with four Saints.' Several paintings ascribed to him are to be seen in Perugia. In London, at Dudley House, is 'A Virgin holding a bird by a string, with the Child in her grasp.' At the Louvre, a 'Crucifixion,' with numerous figures, is generally attributed to him.

PERUGIA, MARIANO DA, or MARIANO DI DER EUSTERIO DA, an obscure scholar of Perugia, to whom Vasari refers as the author of a picture 'of slight interest' in S. Agostino, at Ancona. Mariotti, however, ascribes to him a better work in S. Domenico, at Perugia.

PERUGINI, a landscape painter of Milan, to whose pictures figures were added by Alessandro Magnasco.

PERUGINO, ALOISI (or LUIGI). See SCARAMUCCIA.

PERUGINO, DOMENICO, an obscure painter, who died in Rome about 1590, aged 70 years. He is supposed to have been also the engraver mentioned by Vasari as the author of certain excellent plates after Roman antiques (see vol. v. p. 431 [Milanese]).

PERUGINO, IL. See SANTI, PIETRO.

PERUGINO, IL CAVALIERE. See CERRINI.

PERUGINO, PAOLO. See GISMONDI.

PERUGINO, PETRUCCIO. See MONTANINI.

PERUGINO, PIETRO. See VANUCCI.

PERUGINO, POLIDORO, a goldsmith, who was living about 1550 at Perugia, and who may have also engraved. It has been suggested that he may be the Perugino alluded to by Vasari in the life of Marc-Antonio (vol. v. p. 431 [Milanese]).

PERUZZI, BALDASSARE, painter and architect, was born at Siena, March 7, 1481; he was the son of a weaver, who had settled there. In 1501 he was employed in the chapel of S. Giovanni, in the cathedral, receiving 42 lire for his work. His chief instructors appear to have been Bazzi and Pinturicchio. About 1504 he went to Rome, where he settled and soon obtained a good position. His chief work in his earlier years at Rome was the decoration of S. Onofrio. In the semi-dome and tribune there are an 'Eternal,' a 'Coronation of the Virgin,' a 'Virgin amongst Saints,' an 'Epiphany,' and a 'Massacre of the Innocents,' by him. At S. Croce in Gerusalemme the vaulting of a crypt, dedicated to S. Elena, is inlaid with mosaics after designs by Peruzzi. In the Camera dell' Eliodoro at the Vatican the ceiling is assigned to Peruzzi. It was at this period that, from the study of perspective, Peruzzi was led to architecture, and we find him employed by Agostino Chigi to erect a palace on the banks of the Tiber. In the flat roof of the garden lodge of this palace Peruzzi drew several mythological subjects, as also in other parts of the palace. In 1517 he painted in a semi-dome of the Ponzetti chapel, in S. Maria della Pace, a series of Biblical subjects, such as 'The Creation,' 'Deluge,' 'Sacrifice of Isaac,' 'Virgin and Child,' and others. From 1517 till 1520, when he succeeded Raphael as architect of St. Peter's, and from 1520 till 1527, he did little that has not perished. From 1521-3 he was in Bologna, but returned to Rome, and was engaged at the festival given in honour of Clement VII.'s coronation. In 1527, on the occasion of the sack of Rome, he was captured and ransomed by the Spaniards, and plundered of all he possessed. He then went to Siena, where he was employed by the Government in planning fortresses. About this time he also painted a fresco in the little church of the Madonna di Fontegiusta, at Siena; the subject is the 'Sibyl announcing the Nativity to Augustus.' He remained in Siena till 1535, when he returned to Rome, and devoted himself entirely to architecture. He was a good mathematician, and a master of perspective. He died in Rome, on Jan. 6, 1537. Of his principal works we may name a figure of 'Charity with three children,' in the Berlin Gallery; an 'Adoration of the Magi,' in the Bridgewater Gallery; and a fine cartoon of the same subject in the National Gallery in London, where, too, there is a picture from the cartoon, but not by Baldassare.

PERUZZINI, DOMENICO, an engraver, born at Pesaro, supposed to have been the elder brother of Giovanni Peruzzini. He appears to have lived mostly at Ancona, and flourished from 1640 to 1661, according to the dates on the prints attributed to him by Bartsch. These prints had been previously ascribed to Domenico Piola, but the style is entirely different, both in design and execution. It is supposed that, like his brother Giovanni, he was a scholar of Simone Cantarini da Pesaro, and his etchings resemble those of that master, and of Guido Reni. Subjoined is a list of their titles:

The Holy Virgin, half-length, with the infant Jesus. D. P. 1661.

The Virgin seated, with the Infant on her knees. D. P. 1661.

Christ tempted by the Devil, in the form of an old man. D. P. 1642.

Christ bearing his Cross, with other figures, half-lengths. D. P. P. F. engraved on the cross (circular).

The Holy Family and Saints. Dom<sup>us</sup>. Per<sup>mus</sup>. Anconae, 1661.

St. Anthony of Padua praying, and the Infant Jesus appearing to him on a cloud supported by three cherubim. Dom P. F.

The Assassination. A man in his shirt on a bed, assailed by three soldiers, one of whom thrusts a lance into his body. D. P. 1640.

Four landscapes. The first is signed D. P. f. Anconae; the others, D. P. only.

St. Jerome doing Penance in the Desert. The letters D. P. F. are on a plant to the right. (Considered doubtful.)

PERUZZINI, GIOVANNI, was born at Ancona, or at Pesaro, in 1629, and was a scholar of Simone Cantarini. There are several of his pictures in the churches of his native city, of which the most esteemed are the 'Decollation of St. John,' at the Spedale; and a picture of 'St. Teresa,' at the Carmelitani. He resided some time at Bologna, where there are some of his works in the public edifices, particularly the 'Descent of the Holy Ghost,' in the church of SS. Vitale ed Agricola; and a picture of 'St. Cecilia,' in the church dedicated to that Saint. He was invited to the court of Turin, where he executed several works, both in oil and in fresco, so much to the satisfaction of his patron, that he was made a knight of the order of St. Maurice. He died at Milan in 1694. He was vain of his facility of execution, and inscribed on one of the lunettes of the Portico de' Servi in Bologna, "Opus 24 Hor. Eq. Jo. P." (the work of twenty-four hours by Gio. Peruzzini, knight). Carlo Cignani, on reading it, observed, "Leminchionerie si fanno presto" (trifles are soon done). Giovanni's son PAOLO, and his brother, DOMENICO, were also painters.

PÉRY, NICOLAS, an obscure historical painter of the seventeenth century. He was received into the Guild of St. Luke, at Brussels, in 1736.

PERZYN. See PERSIJN.

PESARESE, IL (or SIMONE DA PESARO). See CANTARINI.

PESARI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian historical painter, was a native of Modena. He lived some time at Venice, where he died after 1650.

PESARO, NICCOLÒ. See TROMETTO.

PESCHEL, KARL GOTTLIEB, a German historical painter, born at Dresden in 1798. He was a pupil of Vogel, and studied in the Dresden Academy. In 1825 he went to Rome, where he remained about a year. On his return he assisted his master Vogel on frescoes at Pilitz. About 1830 he was appointed a Professor in the Dresden Academy. Considerable attention was devoted by him to mural decoration, and good examples of his work are to be seen in the Roman House, Leipsic; and at the Royal Palace at Dresden. He died in 1879. Amongst his chief pictures are:

Rebecca at the Well. (Leipsic Museum.)

'Come unto Me, all ye that labour.' 1851. (Dresden Gallery.)

The Crucifixion. (Leipsic Museum.)

Ezekiel in Babylon.

Angels appearing to Jacob. 1845. (Dresden Gallery.)

Holy Family. (Leipsic Museum.)

PESCI, GASPARO, a Bolognese painter of architectural perspectives who flourished about 1776. No details of his life are known.

PESCIA, MARIANO DA, also called GRAZIADEI, was an Italian painter the time of whose birth and death is uncertain; Zani says he died about 1520; others, that he was born in 1525, and died in 1550. It is also said that he was a scholar of Domenico Ghirlandajo, and assisted him in his works; but in that case he must have been born much earlier, as Ghirlandajo died in 1494. Perhaps it was Ridolfo Ghirlandajo. In the chapel della Signoria, in the Palazzo Vecchio at Florence, there is an altar-piece by him; and, in the Gallery, the 'Virgin and Infant Jesus, with Elizabeth and the young St. John.' It is agreed by all that he died young, and his known works are very few.

PESELLO and PESELLINO. See GIUOCHI.

PESENTI, GALEAZZO, called IL SABBIONETA, a painter and sculptor of Cremona, who flourished in the 15th century. A MARTIRE PESENTI, also called IL SABBIONETA, lived at Cremona at the end of the 16th century.

PESNE, ANTOINE, the son of THOMAS PESNE, (a portrait painter, and brother of Jean Pesne,) was born in Paris in 1684 (?). He studied under his father and under his uncle Charles de la Fosse, and afterwards spent some time at Venice for further improvement. After having been received a member of the Paris Academy he settled at Berlin, where he became court painter to Frederick the Great, as well as Director of the Academy. He died at Berlin in 1757. He painted history and portraits, and his works were much admired by the connoisseurs of the court. The Galleries of the Berlin 'Schloss,' and of Potsdam and Sans-souci, contain many of his works, and some elegant genre pictures are in the Dresden Gallery. Pesne painted figures in the pictures of his friends C. S. Dubois and P. C. Leygebe. The following are among the best known of his own pictures:

PESNE, JEAN, a French engraver, was born at Rouen in 1623, and died in Paris in 1700. It is not ascertained by whom he was instructed, but he attained some success as an artist, particularly as a designer. He produced 168 plates, of which some are executed with the burin alone, and others in combination with the point. His principal plates are from the pictures of Nicolas Poussin, with which he succeeded admirably; others are after Raphael, Titian, the Carracci, Guercino, Giulio Romano, and others. The following are perhaps the best:

PESZKA, JOSEPH, was born at Cracow in 1767, and studied principally in Warsaw under Lampi and Smuglewicz, the latter of whom he accompanied in 1797 to Wilna, and in 1800 St. Petersburg. He remained in Russia till 1813, when he returned to Warsaw, where two years later he became Professor of Painting at the University. He died at Cracow in 1831. His works are principally portraits and scenes from Polish history.

PETÉ, SIMON, an obscure painter of Valladolid, who flourished about 1661.

PETER, EMM., a German miniature painter, born at Jägerndorf in Silesia, in 1799. He died at Vienna in 1873.

PETER, WENCESLAUS, animal painter, was born at Carlsbad in Bohemia in 1742. He applied himself successively to metal working, chasing, and sculpture before settling to the art which he at last adopted. He became Professor at the Academy of San Luca in Rome, and his best work is 'The Terrestrial Paradise.' A 'Hen and Chickens' by him is in the Borghese Gallery. He died at Rome in 1829.

PETERS, ANTON DE. See DE PETERS.

PETERS, BONAVENTURA and JAN. See PEETERS.

PETERS, FRANS LUCAS, was born at Mechlin in 1606. He was the son of an obscure painter, from whom he learned the elements of design, but he afterwards entered the school of Gerard Segers. He did not, however, follow the style of that master, but abandoned historical painting to devote himself to landscapes. He was taken into the service of the Archduke Leopold, in whose employment he passed the greater part of his life. He died at Brussels in 1654.

PETERS, GERRIT. See PIETERSZEN.

PETERS, MATTHIAS, flourished at Amsterdam about the year 1660, and, in conjunction with his brother NICOLAAS PETERS, engraved the plates for the 'Atlas Major,' published by Blaeu, in that city, from drawings by the publisher.

PETERS, the Reverend MATTHEW WILLIAM, was born in the Isle of Wight in the first half of the 18th century. His parents very early removed to Ireland, where his father held a post in the Customs at Dublin. The son became pupil of Robert West, the master of the school of design there, and in 1759 he obtained a premium from the Society of Arts. He was brought up, however, for the Church, and came to hold the appointments of Prebendary of Lincoln and chaplain to the Prince Regent. In the pursuit of art as an amateur he travelled in Italy, and when at Parma he copied the 'St. Jerome,' and his copy is now in the church at Saffron Walden.

In 1782 he also copied, for the Duke of Rutland, a picture by Le Brun in the Carmelite church at Paris. In 1771 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1777 a full Academician. He resigned in 1790, and died in 1814, at Brasted Place, in Kent. He is better known by the prints engraved for Boydell and Macklin than by his paintings, though some of his pictures have almost the impasto of Sir Joshua Reynolds. His 'Resurrection of a Pious Family,' the 'Guardian Angel,' 'Cherubs,' and the 'Spirit of a Child,' his scenes from the 'Merry Wives of Windsor,' and from 'Much Ado about Nothing,' and other theatrical subjects, were very popular. He painted many fancy subjects and also portraits with much taste and elegance. He was patronized by some of the nobility of his day, for whom he painted subjects very different from his 'Resurrection of a Pious Family.' There are engravings of several of his fancy pieces and portraits by Bartolozzi, Marcuard, Simon, Thew, Dickinson, and J. R. Smith. He was severely satirized by 'Peter Pindar.'

PETERSEN, HEINRICH LUDWIG, a Danish engraver, was born at Altona in 1806. In 1824 he entered the Academy of Dresden, and in 1827 the atelier of Rossmäßster. In the two following years he engraved some landscapes and portraits at Heidelberg for the Ehrenhalle, and in 1835 several plates for the Bibliographical Institute at Hildburghausen, and for the Austrian Lloyd's Company some small landscapes after Rothbart and David. In 1838 he settled at Nuremberg, where he executed his principal plates—the 'Madonna della Sedia,' after Raphael; 'The Tribute Money,' after Titian; 'The Children in the Wood,' after Von der Embde, and 'Charles IX. on the Night of St. Bartholomew.' From 1840 to the end of his life he etched extensively for Hefner's work on costumes, and produced numerous facsimiles from drawings by the old masters. He became conservator of the art collections at Nuremberg, and died there in 1874. He was also a restorer of engravings and pictures.

PETERSEN, JOHANN ERIC CHRISTIAN, marine painter, was born at Copenhagen in 1839. He studied at the Academy of his birthplace, and then under Melbye and Dahl. He was engaged in the war as a Danish officer in 1864, and in the following year went to America, where he died at Boston in 1874.

PETERSON, FREDERIC, enamel painter, was a pupil of Boit, and died in London in 1729.

PETERZANO, SIMONE, (PRETERZONO,) was a native of Venice, and was brought up in the school of Titian. He flourished about the year 1590. His 'Pietà,' in the church of San Fedele, at Milan, is signed with his name, to which he has added Titiani discipulus. In the church of San Barnaba, at Milan, he painted some frescoes from the life of St. Paul. There is a fine 'Assumption,' in the Chiesa di Brera, at Milan by him.

PETHER, ABRAHAM, the son of William Pether, was born at Chichester in 1756. In the early part of his life he applied himself to the study of music, and at the age of nine years, is said to have occasionally performed as organist in his native city. He afterwards turned his thoughts to painting, in which he was instructed by George Smith, and attained a considerable rank in the art as a landscape painter, particularly by his moonlight effects, whence he has obtained the sobriquet of 'Moonlight Pether.' A 'Harvest Moon' by him met with special admiration. His moonlight pieces are notable for their astronomical accuracy. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1784, his subject being 'Moonlight.' In 1789 he followed this with 'A Ship on Fire at Night,' and at intervals with others, till in 1811 he sent a second 'Eruption of Vesuvius.' Pether not only distinguished himself as painter and musician; his philosophical and mathematical researches were of some value. He also showed skill as a mechanic, and constructed various optical instruments, such as telescopes, microscopes, air-pumps, and electric instruments. Pether died April 13th, 1812.

PETHER, SEBASTIAN, the eldest son of Abraham Pether, was born about 1790, and was probably instructed by his father, as he painted similar subjects. His pictures consist of moonlights, conflagrations, and sunsets, and exhibit fine feeling; but the narrowness of his circumstances, and the largeness of his family, reduced him to the necessity of working for picture-dealers, and beyond them it does not appear that he ever had a patron, except in one instance. That patron was Sir John F. Leicester, Bart., who commissioned him to paint 'A Caravan overtaken by a Whirlwind,' which was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1826, together with 'The Destruction of a City by a Volcano.' His first and almost his only previous contributions had been in 1814, when his subjects were 'A View from Chelsea Bridge,' and 'The Burning of Drury Lane Theatre.' He had considerable knowledge in the mechanical arts, and, it is said, was the first that suggested the idea and construction of the stomach-pump to Mr. Jukes, the surgeon who introduced it to the medical profession. His pictures are not numerous; but they were a source of great emolument to his friends the dealers, as they could be readily copied, and the copies disposed of to country gentlemen; whence it is that his name so frequently appears in catalogues. His real works have considerable merit. He died at Battersea in 1844.

PETHER, WILLIAM, painter and mezzotint engraver, was the cousin of Abraham Pether, and was born at Carlisle in 1731. He painted portraits in oil and miniature, and studied engraving under Thomas Frye. He was admitted into the Royal Academy in 1778, and exhibited occasionally between 1781 and 1794. He died in London about 1795. He engraved several fine plates after Rembrandt and other masters, as well as a few from his own works. Among others, we have the following prints by him:

He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1823 as a senior optime, and afterwards took holy orders. Antiquarian pursuits were his delight, and he drew the illustrations for his works and papers. He was a member of the Institute of British Architects, and of the Archæological Institute. He also produced a few good etchings. He died at Lichfield in 1868. Amongst his publications were:

'Remarks on Church Architecture, with Illustrations.' 1841-5.

PETIT, LOUIS, a designer and engraver, was born in Paris in 1760, and was a scholar of N. Ponce. He was much employed in designing vignettes and other book illustrations, which he etched with considerable ability. He died about 1812. Among his detached engravings the following are most deserving of notice:

PETIT, LOUIS MARIE, a French water-colour painter of still-life and miniatures, flourished at Fontainebleau at the end of the 18th century. He was a pupil of David and De Meitte. Works:

The School-boy and the Arts.
Landscape with Mill.

PETITOT, JEAN, the elder, enameller and miniature painter, was born at Geneva in 1607. He was the son of a sculptor and architect, who designed him for a jeweller, and having frequent occasion to make use of enamel in that trade, he attained such skill in colour, that he was advised to apply himself to portrait painting. He was patronized by Charles I. and Louis XIV., and his extraordinary ability was deserving of their protection. In company with Pierre Bordier, who afterwards became his brother-in-law, he visited Italy, where they both resided some years. Petitot painted the heads and hands, and Bordier the draperies and backgrounds. In this division of labour they visited England, and had the good fortune to form the acquaintance of Sir Theodore Turquet de Mayerne, physician to the king, who had, by experiment, discovered how to get super-excellent colour in enamel. Mayerne introduced Petitot to King Charles I., who retained him in his service, and gave him apartments at Whitehall. He painted the portraits of that monarch and of his family, several times. He copied several pictures after Van Dyck, who assisted him with his advice. King Charles often went to see him at work, as he took great pleasure both in painting and chemical experiments. The death of his royal protector was a misfortune for Petitot, who did not quit the exiled family, but followed them in their flight to Paris, where he was looked upon as one of their most faithful adherents. Charles II., during his abode in France, took great notice of Petitot, and introduced him to Louis XIV., who appointed him his painter in enamel, and gave him apartments in the Louvre. He painted that monarch several times, Anne of Austria, his mother, and Maria Theresa, his queen. Being a zealous Protestant, and dreading the consequences of the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685, Petitot begged the king's permission to retire to Geneva. Louis, unwilling to part with so favourite an artist, for some time evaded the demand, and employed the celebrated Bossuet, bishop of Meaux, to endeavour to convert him. This not succeeding, Petitot was at length allowed to leave France, after a residence of thirty-six years, and he returned to Switzerland. He settled at Geneva, but the crowd of admirers who came to see him was so great, that he was obliged to quit Geneva and retire to Vevay, where he continued to exercise his art till he had reached the age of 84. He died in 1691.

Petitot was the first artist to bring enamel painting to complete technical perfection. In the South Kensington Museum (Jones Collection) there are fifty-two enamel portraits which are certainly by Petitot, while some eight or ten more are ascribed to him with more or less justice. Among the former several are scarcely to be equalled, certainly not to be excelled, elsewhere. Among them we may name six portraits of Louis XIV., and portraits of Sully, La Vallière, Vendome, Olympia and Hortense Mancini, Richelieu, Mazarin, Mme. de Sévigné, Molière, 'La Grande Mademoiselle,' Mme. de Montespan, the Duke of Orleans, Armand de Meilleraye, Turenne, and Ninon de l'Enclos. In the Apollo Gallery of the Louvre are about sixty of Jean Petitot's finest enamels, consisting of portraits of Louis XIV., of his family, of ladies of the Court, and of the statesmen and military commanders of France.

PETITOT, JEAN LOUIS, the younger, the son of Jean Petitot the elder, was born in or about 1650. He was instructed in enamelling by his father, but studied further under Samuel Cooper. He settled in London, where he exercised his art with considerable success, and painted for Charles II. up to 1682, when he removed to Paris. In 1695 he returned to London, where eventually he died. His works are very inferior to those of his father, though they possess great merit. A few of the best are in the South Kensington Museum. Among others he painted:

Charles II.
Peter the Great.
Queen Catherine.
The Duc de Berry.
The Duc d'Anjou.

PETRAZZI, ASTOLFO, was a native of Siena, and flourished about the year 1635. He was a scholar of Ventura Salimbeni and Pietro Sorri, and, according to Baldinucci, painted some pictures for the public edifices and private collections at Siena. One of his principal works is the 'Communion of St. Jerome,' at the Agostiniani at Siena, in which he exhibits something of the style of the Carracci. He excelled in painting children, whom he introduced very happily into his emblematical subjects. Such are his 'Four Seasons' in the Villa Chigi, at Volte, which are admired for the playfulness and ingenuity of the groups. He died in 1665.

PETRI, HEINRICH, was born at Gottingen in 1835. At the age of seventeen he entered the Academy in Düsseldorf. In 1854 his first paid work was a copy of a 'Madonna' after Deger. He was for a short time at Munich in 1857, and in the following year proceeded to Rome, where he studied the masters of the early Renaissance and Overbeck. After his return he, in 1861-2, painted in encaustic in the convent chapel of Nonnenwerth, particularly a 'Descent from the Cross,' which attracted general attention. In 1868 he paid a second visit to Rome, in order to paint an altar-piece for Lisbon. In 1870 we find him at Düsseldorf producing a 'Virgin and St. John weeping over the Body of Christ,' and in 1871 his chef d'œuvre, 'The Virgin as the Protectress of poor Children.' He died at Düsseldorf in February 1872.

PETRI, PIETRO DE, was born, according to Orlandi, at Premia, in the Novarese state, in 1671; Zani, however, says he was born in 1663, and died in 1716. He studied at Rome, in the school of Carlo Maratti. He painted history, and united with the style of Maratti somewhat of the taste of Pietro da Cortona. One of his principal works at Rome is a picture of the 'Crucifixion,' in the church of SS. Vincento ed Anastasio: he also painted some frescoes in the tribune of San Clemente. We have a few etchings by this artist from his own designs, executed in the style of a painter, among which are:

The Assumption of the Virgin.
San Lorenzo Giustiniano.

Zani distinguishes him from PIETRO ANTONIO DE PETRI, or PITRI, to whom Bartsch has assigned four engravings in addition to the two above named. Zani says the latter was born at Rome.

PETRIE, GEORGE, a landscape painter, the son of James Petrie, was born at Dublin in 1789. His art-training was gained in the school of the Dublin Society. He was much devoted to antiquarian pursuits, and furnished many drawings for the illustration of works on Ireland. In 1810 he visited Wales, and in 1813 London, in company with Danby and O'Connor. In 1816 he exhibited at the Royal Academy. In 1826 he was elected an associate of the Hibernian Academy, becoming a full member in 1828, and subsequently president. From 1833 to 1839 he was entirely employed on the Ordnance Survey of Ireland, and took charge of the topographical and antiquarian branch of the work. In 1845 he visited Scotland. In 1847 he received the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Dublin, and in 1849, a pension on the Civil List. He resigned the presidency of the R.H.A. in 1859, and died at Dublin in 1866. He published much relating to archæology; his magnum opus is 'On the Ecclesiastical Architecture of Ireland;' but in early life he contributed many papers to the 'Dublin Examiner,' and similar publications.

PETRIE, JAMES, a Scotch portrait painter of the 18th century, born at Aberdeen. About 1780 he settled in Dublin, and obtained a good practice there. In the troubled times of the Irish Rebellion he was a firm loyalist, but nevertheless he painted several members of the 'patriot' party, among them Emmet, Curran, and Lord Edward Fitzgerald.

PETRINI, CAV. GIUSEPPE, an Italian painter, born at Carono, in the Luganese, about 1700. He was a pupil of Strozzi, and painted historical subjects. He died about 1780.

PETTER, ANTON, was born at Vienna in April, 1781. In 1808 he visited Rome, and in 1814 obtained admission to the Vienna Academy with his 'Meleager murdered by his mother in his wife's arms.' In 1820 he became professor to the Academy, and in 1828 director. He died at Vienna in 1858. His principal historical pictures are:

PETZOLDT, ERNST CHRISTIAN FREDERIK, landscape painter, was born at Copenhagen in 1805, and studied from 1825 at the Academy and under Eckersberg. He won medals in 1827 and 1828, and in the following year travelled in the Harz mountains. From 1830 to 1835 he was occupied in a visit to Italy and Sicily, and went in 1836 to Munich, and thence to Italy a second time, and to Greece, where he died suddenly at Patras in 1839. Among his best paintings are:

PETZL, JOSEPH, genre painter, was born at Munich in 1803. After studying under Langer in the Munich Academy, he placed himself under Begas in Berlin, and afterwards set off on a journey through Bohemia, Saxony, Hanover, Schleswig, and Sweden. In 1832-4 he went to Rome, and, in the suite of the King of Greece, to Constantinople. He afterwards spent two years at Venice. He died at Munich in 1871. His principal pictures are:

PEUTEMAN, PIETER, (or NICOLAAS), was born at Rotterdam in 1650 or 1657. He excelled in painting objects of still-life, such as musical instruments, books, vases, &c. Balkema attributes historical works also to him. His death is said to have been occasioned by terror. One day in 1692 Peuteman fell asleep in the dissecting room of the Rotterdam Hospital, where he was studying anatomy. He was awakened by a movement among the bones and skeletons in the room, which had been set in motion by a sudden earthquake. From the fright thus caused he never recovered. Peuteman engraved many of his own works.

PEYNAUD, JACQUES FRANÇOIS, was born at La Ferté St. Aubin in 1771. He was a pupil of the Academy of Orleans, and of Girodet and Aubry, and for eighteen years was director of the free school of design at St. Malo. His principal works are, the 'Martyrdom of St. Clement,' at Caucales; 'Souls in Purgatory,' at Pleustuis; and a portrait of Maupertuis, now at St. Malo. He died at St. Malo in 1829.

PEYRON, JEAN FRANÇOIS PIERRE, a French historical painter and engraver, was born at Aix in 1744, and died in Paris in 1820. He was a scholar of Arnulfi and of the elder Lagrenée. His subjects are from the ancient poets, and from Greek and Roman history, occasionally also from events occurring in his own time, such as the death of General Walhubert at the battle of Ansterlitz. In 1773 he obtained with his 'Death of Seneca' the Grand Prix de Rome, and accordingly went to that city, where he studied from the antique and from nature; painting also his picture of 'Cimon allowing himself to be taken Prisoner in order to see after his Father's Funeral.' In 1781 he returned to Paris, and was in 1787 admitted a member of the Academy, with a picture of 'Dentatus,' now at Fontainebleau. The greater number of his pictures were executed between 1780 and 1800, but he continued to exhibit till 1812. He engraved several subjects after Raphael, Poussin, and after his own designs. He was director of the Gobelins Manufactory in 1787, and executed many cartoons for that establishment. The Revolution caused him much privation and suffering, which he bore with exemplary patience. Works:

The Funeral of Miltiades. (Paris.)

Alcestis and Admetus.

Paul Emilius, the conqueror of Perseus.

PFANSTILL, LUDWIG, (PFANSTIL, or PFANNENSTIL,) a painter and engraver who was born at Vienna at the beginning of the 17th century, and died at Frankfort in 1665. He painted portraits and allegories, and engraved a 'Pietà' in mezzotint.

PFEFFEL, JOHANN ANDREAS, a German engraver, was born at Bischoffingen in 1674. He resided at Vienna, where he produced among other plates a portrait of the Emperor Leopold. He afterwards removed to Augsburg, where he followed the business of a printseller. His works, as an engraver, were chiefly confined to architecture and ornamental foliage, which he executed in a neat style. In conjunction with C. Engelbrecht, he engraved a set of plates of jewellery ornaments, from the designs of A. Morison; and executed part of the plates for the 'History of Architecture,' published at Vienna in 1721 by John Henhard Fischers. Scheuchzer's Bible was one of the works issued from his establishment at Augsburg. Finally he became Court engraver at Vienna, where he died in 1750. His son JOHANN ANDREAS PFEFFEL the younger was born at Augsburg in 1715, and died in 1768. He also worked upon the plates of Scheuchzer's Bible.

PFEIFFER, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, a portrait painter and engraver, born at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1741. He practised for many years at Amsterdam, but late in life he settled at Brussels, where he died in 1807.

He worked with point and burin, in the English manner, and was a very industrious artist. He died at Vienna in 1829. His engravings are numerous, particularly of portraits, which are chiefly of German nobility, and persons of science and letters, of his time. He also engraved after some of the older Italian and other painters, such as Raphael, Correggio, Fra Bartolommeo, Giuliano da Parma, Sassoferrato, Rubens, Lampi, Oelenhainz, and Füger. Among his plates we may mention:

Virgin with the Child and St. John; after Raphael.

PFENNINGER, ELIZABETH, the niece of Heinrich Pfenninger, was born at Zurich in 1772, and died after 1836. She was a miniature painter, and 282 studied in Geneva under Boileau and Bouvier, and in Paris under Renault and Augustin. Her miniatures are well-handled.

PFENNINGER, HEINRICH, a Swiss painter and engraver, born at Zurich in 1749. He was a scholar of Jan Balthasar Bullinger, under whom he spent five years, and afterwards went to Dresden, where he worked under Zingg and Graf, and by virtue of his access to the Electoral Gallery, devoted himself to a study of the best masters, particularly Van Dyck and Rembrandt. On his return to Switzerland, he was engaged by Lavater to make the designs and engrave some of the plates for his work on Physiognomy. In 1795 he visited Paris, and in 1808 Hungary. He died in 1815. He was much employed as a portrait painter, and has etched a great number of plates of portraits and views in Switzerland. He engraved some of the portraits for Füssli's 'Supplement to the Lives of the Swiss Painters.' We have also the following by him:

A set of seventy-five Portraits of Illustrious Personages of Switzerland, accompanied with an abridged history of their lives by Leonard Meister. 1781.

Thirty-four Portraits of the most celebrated German Poets, with their characters, by L. Meister. 1785.

A set of six Views in Switzerland.

After this he returned to Zurich and occupied himself on portraits, principally miniatures in water-colour. He died at Zurich in 1825. Among his works are:

The first Navigator (engraved by Hegi).

The Laocoon Group, in septa.

The Dismissal of Hagar; the same.

PFLUG, JOHANN BAPTIST, genre painter, was born at Biberach in 1785, and studied at the Munich Academy in 1805-9. After this he became a teacher of drawing in his native town, and devoted himself to painting humorous scenes from the popular life of Upper Swabia, and also military pictures and a few portraits. He died at Biberach in 1865. Several of his works are at the Rosenstein, near Stuttgart. Noticeable among his productions are:

A Peasants' Wedding.

The Gipsy Family.

The Gamblers.

PFORR, FRANZ, historical painter, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Maine in 1788. He was the son of the better known Johann Georg Pforr. His first master was his uncle, Tischbein, the inspector of the Cassel Gallery. In 1805 he went to the Academy of Vienna, and studied under Füger, and it was there that he made the acquaintance of Overbeck. In 1810 he went to Rome. Cornelius, too, entered into friendship with Overbeck and Pforr, and both of these artists, who outlived Pforr, spoke in high terms of his talent, and confessed themselves indebted to the taste which he always displayed in his works. Pforr died at Albano in 1812. His subjects were taken from Scripture, from German legends, or from his own fancy. The Städel Institute has a picture by him entitled 'Rudolf of Hapsburg presenting his Horse to an Ecclesiastic.'

PFFOR, JOHANN GEORG, animal painter and etcher, was born at Upfen, near Eisenach, in 1745. He was working at the mine at Richelsdorf, when the Hessian minister, Waitz, discovered his talent, and placed him in his own porcelain factory. In 1777 he entered the Academy at Cassel, where in the following year he obtained the first prize, and in the next year was admitted a member. In 1781 he settled in Frankfort, where he died in 1798. He had a passionate fondness for horses, which led him to paint them with a success hardly surpassed. He worked well in sepia and Indian ink, and was a good etcher; but he could not render the human figure with freedom. The Städel Institute at Frankfort possesses eight of his pictures.

PFRÜNDT, GEORG, (or PFRÜND,) was born at Flachslanden, in Bavaria, in 1603, and died at Durlach in 1663. According to Sandrart, he engraved a considerable number of architectural and geographical subjects. He was an engineer, sculptor, modeller in wax, and steel engraver, and served the Duke of Weimar in the first of these capacities.

PHEIDIAS, the celebrated sculptor, who was born at Athens about 500 B.C., and died about 430, is said by Pliny to have painted at Athens a picture of Pericles as the Olympian Jupiter.

PHHELPS, RICHARD, a portrait painter who practised in England in the first half of the 18th century. J. Faber engraved after him a portrait of Bampffield Moore Carew.

PHILESIUS, RIGMANN, a German engraver on wood, resided, according to Papillon, at Strasburg in the beginning of the 16th century. He executed a set of twenty-five cuts of the Life and Passion of our Saviour, published at Strasburg, by John Knoblauch, in 1508. He was also a carver of wood. Zani notices him under the names Rigman, Philisus, and Philery, or Phillery.

PHILIP IV. of Spain (1605-1665) was an amateur painter. He produced among other pictures a 'St. James with the Lamb,' 'Jesus with St. John,' and a 'Magdalen in the Desert.' PHILIP V. (1683-1746), according to Palomino, was also an amateur artist, drawing in pen and ink with skill and facility.

PHILIPPE, JEAN B. C. See CHATELAIN.

PHILIPPE, PIETER, was a Dutch engraver, who flourished at the Hague about the year 1660. We have by him a few plates of portraits and festivals, among which are the following:

PORTRAITS.

PHILIPPI, HEINRICH, was born at Cleves in 1838, and studied in Düsseldorf, Munich, and Rome. He joined the German forces in 1866 and 1870-1 as a Landwehr officer, and at Königgrätz was wounded in the foot. After leaving the army he devoted himself entirely to art, and produced historical, genre, and animal pictures. An early death at Düsseldorf in 1874 interrupted his successful career. Among his best compositions are:

Thunelda in the Triumph of Germanicus.
Scenes from the Peasant War.
Scenes from the Life of the Romans and Pompeians.
Soldiers of the Landwehr returning home.

PHILIPPOTEAUX, HENRI EMMANUEL FELIX, a French battle painter, was born in Paris in 1815. He studied art under Leon Cogniet. Chassurs d'Afrique at Balaclava.
Rivoli.
Montebello.

PHILIPS, CHARLES, an English portrait painter, the son of Richard Philips, was born in 1708. His practice was among the nobility, and he had a large clientèle at an early age. He married in 1738, and lived in Great Queen Street, St. Giles's. His portraits are generally of a small size, and though well painted and good likenesses, do not show him to have been possessed of any high art qualities. This is especially evident in his portrait groups. Several of his portraits have been engraved. He died in 1747. Works:

Knole Park.	Lady Betty Germaine. 1731.
Knowsley Hall.	Wilson, Bishop of Sodor and Man.
London.	Warburton, Bishop of Gloucester.
Portrait Gallery.	Duke of Cumberland and Lord Cathcart.
Thornton-le-Street.	The Family of Lord A. Hamilton. 1731.

PHILIPS, RICHARD, an English portrait painter, born in 1681, who enjoyed a large practice in the early part of the 18th century. He died in 1741. Amongst his works are:

London.	Ironmongers' Hall.	Sir R. Geffry.
Woburn Abbey.		Unknown male Portrait. 1731.

PHILLERY, ANTON, an old engraver on wood, lived at Antwerp about 1530, and has left a middle-sized print representing two soldiers standing before a woman, who is seated, holding a dog upon her lap. It bears the following inscription in old Flemish characters, Gheprint t'Antwerpen by my Phillery de figuresnyder, printed at Antwerp, by me Phillery, the figure-cutter. There is also known a 'Genealogia illustrissimæ Domus Austriæ' by him.

PHILLIP, JOHN, was born at Aberdeen April 19th, 1817. His parents were of humble condition, but from his youngest days he showed a strong inclination for art. He was apprenticed early in life to a house painter, where he made his first effort in art by trying to copy a portrait of Wallace from a sign-board which hung on the opposite side of the street. He is said to have received some instruction from Mr. Forbes, a local portrait painter, but in 1834 he went to London as a stow-away on a brig belonging to a friend of his father. On arriving in London he was kept hard at work, but contrived to visit the exhibition of the Royal Academy at Somerset House. He attracted the notice of a Major Pryse Gordon, who recommended him to Lord Panmure, by whose generosity he was placed as a pupil with T. M. Joy. In 1837 he entered the Academy as a student, and in 1839 he exhibited two pictures, 'A Moor' and a portrait. In 1840 he exhibited his first subject picture, 'Tasso in disguise, relating his persecutions to his Sister,' and in the same year he returned to Aberdeen, where he was principally employed in painting portraits. In 1846 he again sought London, where he continued to have his domicile till his death. In 1847 he exhibited at the Academy 'A Presbyterian Catechising,' and at the British Institution 'Courtship' and 'The Grandfather.' In 1848 he exhibited a 'Scotch Fair'; in 1849, 'Drawing for the Militia'; in 1850, 'Baptism in Scotland,' and in 1851, 'Scotch Washing,' 'The Spae Wife,' and 'A Sunbeam.' In this year he went to Spain and lived for a time at Seville, where he made numerous sketches, and began several pictures, one of which, 'The Spanish Gipsy Mother,' was purchased by the Queen on the recommendation of Sir E. Landseer. He also painted for Her Majesty 'The Letter-Writer of Seville.' In 1856-57, in company with his friend Richard Ansdell, he made a tour through Spain, and in 1857 sent home to the Academy 'Charity' and 'The Prison Window'; and in the same year he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy. In the year 1858 he painted 'Spanish Contrabandistas' for the Queen, a portrait of the Prince Consort for the city of Aberdeen, 'El Cortejo,' and 'Youth in Seville.' In 1859 he became a full Academician, and exhibited 'Huff,' and a portrait of A. L. Egg, R.A. In 1860 was exhibited his picture of 'The Marriage of the Princess Royal,' ordered by the Queen, and 'Prayer,' his diploma picture; and in the autumn of the same year he was again in Spain. In 1861 he exhibited 'Gossips at a Well'; in 1862 'Doubtful Fortune,' or 'The Fortune-Teller,' 'A Spanish Volunteer,' 'Water Drinkers,' and 'Dolores.' In 1863 was exhibited his 'House of Commons,' painted for the Speaker, Mr. Denison, afterwards Viscount Ossington, representing a debate on the French Treaty, 1860; and 'Agua Bendita.' In 1864 appeared 'La Gloria—a Spanish Wake,' and a portrait of the Earl of Dalhousie; and in 1865 'The Early Career of Murillo, 1634.' In 1866 he produced a portrait of Duncan McNeill, of Colonsay, Lord Justice of Scotland, and 'A Chat round the Brasiero.' In the spring of this year he went to Rome, for the winter, but ill health brought him back to London, where he was attacked by paralysis, and died February 27, 1867. Phillip married a sister of Mr. Richard Dadd. A large collection of his works was exhibited at the London International Exhibition in 1873. Besides those already mentioned we may name:

The Brig Manly. 1834.

PHILLIPS, CHARLES, a mezzotint engraver, was born in 1737. He studied in London, and was in 1765 employed by Boydell. The latest date known on his works is 1770. He worked also in the dot manner. We have, among others, the following prints by him:

PHILLIPS, GILES FIRMAN, an English landscape painter, born in 1780. His practice was confined to river scenes, and, living at Greenwich, these were chiefly furnished by the Thames. He exhibited at the Academy from 1836 to 1858, and published 'Principles of Effect and Colour' (1838), and 'Practical Treatise on Drawing' (1839). He died March 31, 1867.

PHILLIPS, HENRY WYNDHAM, an English portrait painter, born in 1820. He received his art instruction from his father, T. Phillips, R.A., and exhibited at the Academy from 1839 to 1868. Though his works were chiefly portraits and he had a large circle of sitters, he painted a few Scriptural subjects. For several years he was secretary to the Artists' Benevolent Institution. He died December 5, 1868. Amongst his works are:

London. Garrick Club. Charles Kean as Louis XI.

PHILLIPS, THOMAS, a well-known portrait painter, was born at Dudley, in Warwickshire, in 1770. He was placed with Egington, the glass painter, at Birmingham, and came to London in 1790 with a letter of introduction to Benjamin West, who employed him on the windows in St. George's Chapel at Windsor. In 1792 he commenced as an exhibitor, with a 'View of Windsor Castle'; and in the two following years he exhibited the 'Death of Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, at the battle of Cassillon,' 'Ruth and Naomi,' 'Elijah restoring the Widow's Son,' 'Cupid disarmed by Euphrosyne,' and other subject pictures. Soon afterwards he devoted himself chiefly to portrait painting. Notwithstanding that he had to compete with Hoppner, Owen, Jackson, Lawrence, and Beechey, he kept steadily progressing in public favour, and seemed to be the selected painter for men of genius and talent. In 1804 he was elected an Associate of the Academy. In 1806 he painted the Prince of Wales, Lord Egremont, the Marquis of Stafford, and the Stafford Family. In 1808 he became an R.A., and in 1824 succeeded Henry Fuseli in the professorship of painting, which office he held till 1832. On his appointment to the professorship he made a tour in Italy, in the company of Hilton, in order to enable him to discharge the duties of the office more efficiently. He delivered ten 'Lectures on the History and Principles of Painting,' which he afterwards published in one volume (in 1833). These lectures are clear and simple in their style, and instructive in substance and arrangement, especially in those parts where he gives an exposition of his views of the principles of art. He died in London, April 20, 1845. In 1802 he painted by stealth, but with the connivance of Josephine, a portrait of Napoleon which is now at Petworth; it has been engraved. Phillips wrote many of the articles on the fine arts in Rees's Cyclopædia, and in other publications. He was one of the great promoters of the Artists' General Benevolent Institution. His Diploma picture at Burlington House is a 'Venus and Adonis.' The following portraits were painted nearly in the order in which we give them.

Lord Thurlow.
 William Blake (engraved by Schiavonetti).

PHILOCHARES, a brother of the orator Æschines, was one of the last of the Greek painters previous to the decline of the art in the 3rd century B.C. Another painter of the same name is mentioned by Pliny as the author, about 50 B.C., of a 'Glaucou and his Son,' for the comitia.

PHILOXENES, a native of Eretria, was a disciple of Nicomachus, and adopted the expeditious style of his instructor. According to Pliny, he painted for Cassander a picture representing the 'Defeat of Darius by Alexander,' which was considered one of his most important works.

PHRYLUS, an ancient Greek painter of some repute, is mentioned by Pliny as a contemporary of Aglaophon the younger, Cephisodotus, and Evenor. He flourished about 420 B.C.

PIACENZA, BARTOLINO DA. This name is found on some wall-paintings, executed in the 14th century, in the Baptistery at Parma. The town of Piacenza also possesses some works attributed to the same man.

PIAGALI, FRANCESCO, a native of Saragossa, who flourished in the 17th century, and is placed by Palomino among the good Valencian painters.

PIAGGIA, TERAMO, (or ERASMO DA ZOAGLI,) was a native of Zoagli, in the Genoese state, and flourished about the year 1547. He was a disciple of Lodovico Brea. In conjunction with Antonio Semini, he painted several works for the churches at Genoa, of which one of the best was a 'Martyrdom of St. Andrew.'

PIANE, GIOVANNI MARIA DALLE, a painter called Molinareto, was born at Genoa in 1660. He studied at Rome under G. B. Gaulli, and painted historical pictures and portraits. He visited Parma and Piacenza, and Charles Bourbon of Naples appointed him court painter. He died in 1745.

PIANORO, IL. See MORELLI, BARTOLOMMEO.

PIASTRINI, GIOVANNI DOMENICO, was an historical painter of Pistoia, and flourished at the beginning of the 18th century. He was a pupil of Luti. He painted several frescoes in the porch of the Madonna della Umiltà, at Pistoia, and also worked in S. Maria in Via Lata, at Rome.

PIATTI, FRANCESCO, is said by Fuessli, in his Supplement, to have been born at Teglio, in the Valteline, in 1650. He does not acquaint us by whom he was instructed, but informs us that he painted a great number of altar-pieces and pictures for the churches and galleries of the neighbourhood, and highly commends a picture of 'Cleopatra,' by him, in the possession of a noble family at Delebio. Zani says he was living in 1690.

PIATTOLI, GAETANO, a Florentine painter, was born in 1703. He was a pupil of Rivière, a French painter, and painted portraits and mythological scenes. He died about 1770. His wife ANNA was also a portrait painter, and died in 1788.

PIAZZA, ALBERTINO, commonly called TOCCAGNI, was living at Lodi in the 16th century, and died there in 1529. He was the father of Calisto Piazza, commonly called Calisto da Lodi, and had a brother called MARTINO PIAZZA, with whose co-operation he painted all his pictures. Their first authentic altar-piece is in the Berinzaghi Chapel, in the church of the Incoronati, at Lodi. It is in two stages, and represents the 'Virgin and Child, between Saint Anthony and the patron'; and the 'Crucifixion, between SS. Roch, Sebastian, James, and John Baptist'; the predella contains the twelve apostles. The two brothers likewise are the authors of the fresco decorations in the same chapel. Martino is said to have died in 1527. The following are also their works:

Castiglione	S. M. In-}	} Virgin and Child between SS.
d'Adda.	coronata.
Lodi.	S. Agnese.	St. Augustine in Glory, and other subjects.

In the National Gallery there is an example of Martino Piazza, a 'St. John the Baptist in the Wilderness,' which is signed with the painter's monogram.

PIAZZA, Cavaliere ANDREA, was the nephew of Cosimo Piazza, by whom he was instructed in the art, and he accompanied his uncle to Rome, where he had the advantage of studying after the great masters. He passed some years in the service of the Duke of Lorraine, and on his return to Venice painted a large picture of the 'Marriage at Cana,' for the church of Santa Maria, which, according to Lanzi, is his most celebrated work. He died at Venice in 1670. There is a picture by him dated 1649.

PIAZZA, BERNARDINO, a painter of Lodi, and father of Albertino and Martino Piazza. No work of his is known to exist.

PIAZZA, CALISTO, called CALISTO DA LODI, was the son of Albertino Piazza, and a pupil of Romanino. He practised his profession at Brescia, and paintings by him are known that were executed between 1521 and 1556. In 1529, after his father's death, he went to Lodi, where he joined in partnership with his brothers, and with their united aid finished the altar-piece in the cathedral of Lodi, representing the 'Massacre of the Innocents,' and other subjects, left incomplete by Albertino's death. He also worked in the churches at Breno, Erzano, Edolo, and Crenna, all of which possess altar-pieces by him. In 1544 he went to Milan, and decorated the monastery of San Maurizio with a series of frescoes showing great power and freedom. Many of the churches and private collections in Brescia possess examples by this master. The following also remain:

Milan.	Breva.	Marriage of Cana in Galilee. Madonna, Child, and Saints.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Decollation of St. John the Baptist.

PIAZZA, MARTINO. See PIAZZA, ALBERTINO.

PIAZZA, PAOLO PIAZZA, called Padre COSIMO, was born at Castel Franco, in the Venetian territory, in 1557, or, according to Zani, in 1547. He was a scholar of the younger Palma, although he did not imitate the style of that master, but formed a manner of his own. He had acquired considerable reputation as a painter of history, when he became a Capuchin friar, and took the name of Padre Cosimo. He continued, however, to exercise his talents as a painter, and in the pontificate of Paul V. visited Rome, where he executed several considerable works for the churches and public edifices, particularly a picture of the 'Deposition from the Cross,' in the Capitol, and the 'History of Antony and Cleopatra,' in a saloon of the Palazzo Borghese. He was invited to the court of Germany by Rodolph II., by whom he was employed for some years, and on his return to Venice was patronized by the Doge Antonio Priuli. He died at Venice in 1621.

PIAZZETTA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Venice in 1632. He was the son of a sculptor in wood, by whom he was taught the rudiments of design, and then studied under G. B. Molinari. On visiting Bologna he was so struck with the extraordinary effect of the works of Guercino, that he adopted him as his model. He became first director of the Academy of Venice in 1750, and was enrolled an honorary member of the Clementina Academy of Bologna. He died at Venice in 1754. One of his best pictures is the 'Decollation of St. John,' in the church dedicated to that saint, at Padua. His pictures partake of the fluttered manner of his contemporary, Tiepolo. He is best known in England by his chalk drawings of heads, which are not held in great estimation. He was successful, however, in caricature. He may be reckoned among the last of the Venetian painters of any note. Pitteri and others have engraved after him, and mention is made by Nagler of two etchings by himself.

PICARD, ALEXANDRE NOËL, a French painter, born in Paris in 1813. He chiefly painted landscapes. He died in 1869.

PICART, BERNARD, an engraver, and the son of Etienne Picart, was born in Paris in 1673. He was instructed in design and engraving by his father, but obtained further help from Le Brun and Jouvenet. At the age of sixteen he gained honours at the Academy of Paris. He distinguished himself both as designer and engraver, and executed a vast number of plates. He used both the point and the burin; but in his larger plates the execution was not equal to the drawing, and his later productions were inferior to his earlier ones. His works chiefly consist of plates for books, and other ornamental engravings. In 1710 he left Paris, and settled at Amsterdam, where he was greatly employed by the booksellers, and died there in 1733. He engraved a set of seventy-eight plates in imitation of the different styles of the old engravers, which were published after his death, in 1738, in one volume, entitled 'Les Impostures Innocentes.' The following are his most esteemed works:

PICART, CHARLES, an English engraver and draughtsman, born about 1780. He practised in London, and died about 1837. Specimens of his work will be found in:

- Dibdin's 'Decameron.'
- 'Description of the Ancient Marbles in the British Museum.'
- Lodge's 'Portraits.'

He also engraved several dramatic portraits after Clint and Wivell.

PICART, ETIENNE, called 'Le Romain,' was born in Paris in 1632. After a long sojourn in Rome he was employed, with several other artists, to engrave the pictures in the King of France's collection. His plates are sometimes executed with the burin only, in the style of Poilly; but he also engraved a few in which the point is predominant. He died at Amsterdam in 1721. His prints are extremely numerous; the following are the most deserving of notice:

PICART, JEAN, was a French engraver, who resided in Paris about the year 1640. He is supposed to have been a pupil of Crispin van de Pass, as he engraved from the designs of that master, and imitated his style, though not very successfully. He appears to have been principally employed in engraving ornaments for books, and a few portraits. We have by him a portrait of Edward, prince of Portugal, a half-length, with emblems; that of Erasmus, a whole-length, forming the frontispiece to an edition of part of his works, published in Paris in 1639; and several other plates for books, &c.

PICART, JEAN MICHEL, was a Flemish painter, born about 1600. He painted flowers and landscapes, but his chief employment was selling pictures. He established himself in Paris, where he employed many young artists to make copies which he sold as originals. He died in 1682.

PICAULT, PIERRE, a French engraver, was born at Blois in 1680. It is probable that he was a pupil of Gerard Audran, as he copied, on a small scale, the celebrated 'Battles of Alexander,' from the plates engraved by that artist, after Le Brun. He also engraved some portraits, and the 'Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elisabeth,' after Carlo Maratti. He died young in 1711. He usually signed his plates P. Picault, Blesensis, sculp.

PICCHI, GIORGIO, a painter of Castel-Durante, who flourished about 1559. He sojourned for a time in Rome, where he was employed in the Vatican. He worked in the manner of Baroccio.

PICCHIANTI, GIOVANNI DOMENICO, an Italian designer and engraver, was born at Florence about 1670. He was taught the rudiments of drawing by G. B. Foggini, a sculptor, and applied himself to engraving, both with the point and the burin. In conjunction with Lorenzini, Mogalli, and other artists, he executed several plates from the pictures in the Gallery of Florence. We have, among others, the following prints by him:

PORTRAITS.

Sebastiano del Piombo; after Titian.

PICCINI, GIACOMO, an engraver, was born at Venice in 1617, but it is not known by what master he was instructed. Zani says he was still working in 1669; but the latest date on his prints is 1655. We have several plates by him, executed in a stiff, disagreeable style; among them a set of thirty portraits of the principal painters of the Venetian school for the account of their Lives published by Ridolfi in 1648. We have also the following prints by him:

The Portrait of Alessandro Farnese.
Diogenes, with his Lantern; after P. Liberi.
The Holy Family; after the same.
Judith, with the Head of Holofernes at her feet; after Titian.
The Holy Family; after the same.

PICCINI, GUGLIELMO, was the brother of Giacomo Piccini, and among other prints etched a plate after a 'Pietà,' by Rubens. He had a daughter, ISABELLA PICCINI, who was a nun, and engraved a set of portraits of the illustrious personages of Italy, for the 'Concilia Celeste' of G. B. Fabri.

PICCININO, NICCOLÒ, an obscure Milanese painter, who was at work at Milan about 1500.

PICCIONI, MATTEO, an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Ancona probably in or about 1615. Of his works as a painter little is known; but he was made a member of the Academy of St. Luke in 1655. We have a few spirited etchings by him, two of which are dated 1641. The following are among them:

St. Luke painting the Virgin; after Raphael.
The Adoration of the Shepherds; after Paolo Veronese.
The Holy Family; after the same.
The Virgin and the Infant Jesus, with St. John; after A. Cassassei.

PICCOLA, NICCOLA LA, a native of Crotona, in Calabria. He was born in 1730, and worked in Rome, where he painted some decorative pictures in the Vatican, which have since been copied in mosaic. Some of his work is also to be seen at Velletri.

PICENARDI, CARLO. Two artists of this name painted in Cremona early in the 17th century. One was a pupil of Lodovico Carracci, and painted church pictures and burlesque histories. These were imitated by the other Picenardi, who, however, died young.

PICHLER, JOHANN, gem-cutter, painter and engraver, was born at Naples in 1734. He was a pupil of his father, Anton Pichler, and the painter Corvi. In 1761 he painted several pictures for the Franciscans and Augustinians, and made experiments in encaustic and mosaic. In 1763 he joined his father in Rome, after which he visited England, returning to Rome in 1775. Most of his time was given to gem-cutting, in which he rose to such excellence, that many of his intaglios were sold as antiques. It is said that even Winkelmann was deceived by them. He died in Rome in 1791.

PICHLER, JOHANN PETER, mezzotint engraver, was born at Botzen in 1765, and studied at Vienna under Professor Jakobé. He worked for the Prince of Anhalt Dessau in Dresden, and died at Vienna in 1806. Among his best plates are :

Portrait of the King of Poland; after Lampi.
The Fruit Girl; after Murillo.
Venus; after Titian.
Omphale; after Domenichino.
Perseus and Andromeda.
Magdalene and St. John; after Batoni.
Rembrandt's portrait of himself.

PICKAERT, PIETER, who was probably a native of Holland, has left a set of coarse etchings, published in Holland, and representing the flight of James II. from England. They are probably from his own designs, as he adds the word fecit to his name. Neither the time of his birth or death are recorded, but he must apparently have been living in 1688.

PICKEN, ANDREW, an English lithographer, born in 1815. He was a pupil of Louis Haghe, and had much employment in illustrating books of travel. Through ill-health he made two sojourns in Madeira, and published a fine work, 'Madeira Illustrated.' In 1835 he exhibited at the Academy a 'Tomb in Narbonne Cathedral.' He died in London, amid much promise, in 1845.

PICKERING, HENRY, an English portrait painter in the early part of the 18th century. He was a follower of Kneller, and painted portraits "in character."

PICKERSGILL, HENRY HALL, an English subject and portrait painter, the eldest son of H. W. Pickersgill, R.A. His studies were completed in the Netherlands and Italy, and he first exhibited at the Academy in 1834. About 1844 he spent two years in Russia, which furnished him with subjects for some pictures. On his return he practised as a portrait painter in the midland counties. He died in 1861. His picture 'The Right of Sanctuary' is in the South Kensington Museum. Other works :

The Troubadours.
Holy Water.
Charity.
Fishermen of Rabatsky, on the Neva.
Ferry on the Neva.
Cupid and Psyche.
Fruiting of Moses.
Romeo and Juliet.

PICKERSGILL, HENRY WILLIAM, an English portrait and subject painter, born in London in 1782. He was originally intended for a silk manufacturer. Preferring art, he became a pupil of George Arnald, A.R.A., and in 1805 entered the schools of the Academy. Here he first exhibited in the following year, and was elected an Associate in 1822, and a full member in 1826. His practice became very large, and most of the eminent persons of the day sat to him. Up to 1872, when he retired from work, he exhibited no less than 363 pictures at the Academy. These were chiefly portraits, with the exception of a few landscapes and fancy subjects. He died at Barnes April 21, 1875. Amongst his works are :

Bowood. Lady playing Guitar.
London. Nat. Gallery. Portrait of R. Vernon. 1846.
" " A Syrian Maid. 1837.

Windsor Castle. Portrait of second Marquis of Bath.
Portrait of Lord Hill.

PICOLET, CORNELIS, a painter of portraits and conversations, flourished at Rotterdam from about 1670 to 1690. His reputation rests rather on the circumstance of his having been the first instructor of Adrian van der Werf than on any particular work that can be with certainty ascribed to himself.

PICOT, FRANÇOIS EDOUARD, a French historical painter, born in Paris in 1786. He studied under Vincent, and in 1811 obtained the second 'Prix de Rome' for his 'Lycurgus.' In 1813 he obtained the same award by his 'Death of Jacob.' As he could not be sent to Rome, he was awarded a prize of 3000 francs. Many commissions for decorative works were entrusted to him: the chief of these were for the Louvre, for Versailles, and for the churches of St. Vincent de Paul (in conjunction with Flandrín) and St. Clotilde. He was elected to the Institute in 1856. He died in Paris in 1868. Amongst his works are :

Amiens. Museum. Cephalus and Procris. 1824.
Brussels. Museum. Æneas and Venus. 1815.
Grenoble. Museum. The Plague at Florence. 1839.

" N. D. de Lorette. Coronation of the Virgin.
" S. Sulpice. Death of Sapphira. 1819.
Versailles. Siege of Calais. 1838.

PICOT, VICTOR MARIE, a French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1744, and studied in Paris. He came to London in the year 1766 with Wynne Ryland, and about 1770 he was living with Ravenet, whose only daughter, Angelica, he married. In 1766 he was elected a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists. He engraved several plates after Serres, Barralet, Louthembourg, and others, some of which were for the collection of Boydell. He returned to France in 1790, and died about 1805. We have, among others, the following prints by him :

The Four Evangelists; after Rubens.
Diana and her Nymphs; after the same.
The Nurse and Child; after Schedone.
A young Man holding a Flute; after B. Luti.
Apollo holding a Branch of Laurel; after S. Cantarini.
A Landscape and Figures; after Zuccarelli.
Two Sea-pieces; after D. Serres.
Two Landscapes, Morning and Evening; after Barralet.
Several other subjects; after the same.

PICOU, ROBERT, (or PIQUOT), a French engraver, was, according to Marolles, a native of Tours, and flourished about the year 1630. He enjoyed the title of Peintre du Roi: he visited Italy, and remained some time at Rome. Dumesnil describes seven rare prints by him, of which the last, executed from a picture by Jacopo Bassano, is the best; the others are evidently from his own designs. They are executed partly with the point, partly with the burin. We have also several frontispieces and other book ornaments by him, from his own designs. The following are the titles of the seven plates above alluded to :

Love asleep; R. Picou. fe.
Two Cupids caressing; R. Picou. fe. Rome.
Two Infants; R. Picou. fe. Rome.
Three Infants; R. Picou. fe.
The little Wrestlers; R. Picou. fecit.
Two couples of Infants; R. P. &c.
Jesus Christ delivered to His Enemies. On the margin to the left inscribed Jacobus de poto Bassan pinxit, R. Picou sculpit; and on the right, Ciartres formis Cum Privilegio. In a second impression, Ciartres formis is erased, and Mariette Excudit substituted.

PICQUÉ, CHARLES, a Flemish painter, born at Deynze in 1799. He painted portraits, still-life, and historical pictures. He died at Brussels in 1869.

PICQUET, J. In Dubrayet's drawing-book there is a print by this artist, representing 'Juno, Pallas, and Venus,' half-length figures, executed with the graver. It is inscribed Joan Picquet ft.

PICQUET, THOMAS, a French painter of the 17th century, quoted by Marolles.

PICQUOT, HENRI, supposed to be the brother of Thomas Piquot, was a scholar of Simon Vouet, at Paris, and flourished about 1640, as appears by that date on one of his prints. Dumesnil describes three prints by him; the first two after Chapron, etched with the point in a style analogous to that of Michel Dorigny, the other from his own design, also with the point, in a very light and spirited manner.

The young Virgin ascending the steps of the Temple; a composition of many figures, with a glory of angels and oherubim above; Chapron jnuen. et pinxit; H. Picquot incidit Cum Privilegio Regis. 1640. In a second impression, Coypel, &c. avec privilege, was substituted.

The Virgin giving the breast to the Infant Jesus; Joseph, Elisabeth, and the infant St. John are introduced. Although this print bears the name of Guerrinon, and not of H. Picquot, Dumesnil is of opinion that it is by the latter.

A sick Frog attended by others; one acts as a physician, two seem to pray, another is bringing a potion, and four frogs are dancing to the sound of a violin. In the margin are six lines of French verse, moralizing on the brutalizing propensities of man. H. Picquot jnuen. et fecit. F. L. D. Ciartres excudit avec Privilege du Roy.

PICQUOT, THOMAS, an engraver of goldsmiths' work, designs for embroidery, damascening, and other ornaments, flourished, according to Zani, from 1623 to 1645. Dumesnil conjectures that he was a scholar of Marin le Bourgeois, painter and valet de chambre to Henry IV. and Louis XIII., and describes fourteen prints by him, the first of which is a portrait of the aforesaid Marin le Bourgeois; the others consist of arabesque designs for goldsmiths' and armourers' work, book and other decorations. The portrait is etched in the manner of a painter, and is the best piece; the ornaments are etched with an extremely delicate point, and appear in white on a dark ground.

PIDDING, HENRY J., an English subject painter, born in 1797. He was the son of a Cornish lottery-office keeper, and studied under Aglio. His works appeared at the Academy from 1824 onwards, and also at the Society of British Artists, of which latter body he was elected a member in 1843. He frequently chose humorous subjects, and some of his pictures enjoyed considerable popularity. He died at Greenwich in 1864. His best-known works are :

The Gaming Room at Homburg. 1860.
The Fair Penitent.
Negro in the Stocks.
Greenwich Pensioners refighting the battle of the Nile. (Woburn Abbey.)

The two last-named were engraved by himself.

PIDGEON, H. CLARK, painter in water-colours, was born in 1807. Originally intended for the Church, he at first directed his attention to literature, but subsequently adopted art as a profession. He was for a time Professor of the School of Drawing at the Liverpool Institute; and was at the time of his death one of the oldest members of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours. He was elected an Associate in 1846, and a full member in 1861. He was also President of the Sketching Club. Pidgeon was a constant exhibitor at the Institute, and was also successful as a draughtsman on wood. He died in 1880.

PIEMANS, an obscure Dutch artist of the 17th century. He painted somewhat in the manner of Velvet Breughel, and formed one pupil, his nephew, Jan de Baan.

PIEMONT, NICOLAAS, called OPGANG, was born at Amsterdam in 1659. He at first passed some time under Marten Zaagmolen, an obscure artist, but he afterwards became a scholar of Nicolaas Molenaer. He visited Italy, where he passed seventeen years, and improved his talents for landscape painting, by designing from nature in that country. From Rome he returned to Holland, where he painted pictures from his Italian sketches and gained a great reputation. His landscapes bear a strong resemblance to the works of Jan Both. He died at Vollenhove in 1709. The sobriquet 'Opgang' (up-going) was bestowed upon him in consequence of his marriage with the landlady of the Guild.

PIENE, A. DE, a French engraver, produced, among other plates, a portrait of the 'Duchess of Savoy,' after Sacchetti, for a book published in 1672.

PIENEMAN, JAN WILLEM, a Dutch historical, portrait, and landscape painter, born at Abcoude in 1779. He was a pupil of the Amsterdam Academy, and subsequently taught drawing in the military school at Delft. The appointments of Director of the Hague Museum and of the Amsterdam Academy were afterwards conferred upon him. He died at Amsterdam in 1853. The following pictures by him are in the Rijks Museum, Amsterdam :

An Arcadian Landscape.
Portrait of Joanna Cornelia Ziesenis.
" " " as Agrippina.
" Andries Snoek.
" Albertus Bernardus Roothaan and Louis Roger.
Battle of Waterloo. (Signed J. W. Pieneman, a.d. 1824.)

PIENEMAN, NICOLAS, a Dutch historical painter, the son and pupil of J. W. Pieneman, was born at Amersfoort in 1809. He died at Amsterdam in 1860. Amongst his chief works are :

The Death of Admiral De Ruyter.
William I. of Orange wounded by Jaurequi.
The Condemnation of Barneveldt.
Portrait of J. W. Pieneman. (Haarlem Pavilion.)
J. S. de Ryk in presence of Requesens.
The Death of Archimedes.
Portrait of William III.
Portrait of C. J. Fodor. (Fodor Museum, Amsterdam.)

PIEPENHAGEN, AUGUST, landscape painter, was born at Soldin, in Prussia, in 1792. He was originally a button-maker, but raised himself, by no other assistance than the diligent study of nature, to a distinguished rank in art. He died at Prague in 1868. Three of his best pictures are :

Winter Landscape.
Landscape in a Storm.
Sketch of Forest Scenery.

PIERA, P., a Dutch painter, and a native of Amsterdam. He painted landscapes and portraits, and had two sons who followed in their father's steps. He died in 1784.

PIERCE, EDWARD, was an English artist, who flourished in the reigns of Charles I. and II. He was eminent as a painter both of history and of landscapes, and also excelled in architectural and perspective views. For some time he was an assistant to Van Dyck, and after the Restoration he was employed to repair the altar-pieces and ceilings in London churches, damaged by the Puritans. He died soon afterwards, and was buried at Stamford. Few of Pierce's works now remain, the far greater part being destroyed in the fire of London in 1666. Lord Orford attributes to him a set of friezes, in eight plates, etched in 1640. His son JOHN is said to have attained some eminence. Another son, Edward, became a successful sculptor.

PIERI, ANTONIO DI, called Lo Toppo, was a native of Vicenza. He worked about 1738, and painted landscapes and frescoes.

PIERI, STEFANO, was a native of Florence, and a disciple of Battista Naldini. Zani places his birth in 1513, and his death in 1600. According to Baglione, he visited Rome in the pontificate of Clement VIII., and was taken under the protection of Cardinal Alessandro de' Medici, by whom he was employed in the church of San Prassede, where he painted some pictures of the Apostles, and an 'Annunciation.' In Santa Maria in Via Lata is a picture by him of the 'Assumption of the Virgin.' He assisted Giorgio Vasari in the Cupola of Santa Maria del Fiore, at Florence, and painted for the Palazzo Pitti the 'Sacrifice of Isaac,' one of his best works.

PIERO, GIOVANNI DI. See GIOVANNI.

PIERO DI LORENZO, the son of Lorenzo di Piero, was born at Florence in 1462. He became an assistant to Cosimo Roselli, and accompanied the latter when he was summoned to Rome by Sixtus IV. Hence the name PIERO DI COSIMO, by which he is known. In 1485 he returned to Florence, and was employed with Fra Bartolommeo in the Convent of Sant Ambrogio. The connection with Roselli, however, seems to have lasted till the death of the latter, which took place in 1506, and so Piero may be considered to have taken a share in several altar-pieces in S. Spirito at Florence, and other works of Roselli. Piero did not confine himself to sacred subjects, but took pleasure in classic fable, especially when he was able to display animal life in natural or fantastic shapes. This may be seen in 'The Wedding of Perseus disturbed,' 'Sacrifice to Jove for the Safety of Andromeda,' and two 'Rescues of Andromeda,' in the Uffizi, and in a splendid 'Death of Procris' in the National Gallery. A picture by him of 'Venus playing with Cupid and a sleeping Mars' is in the Berlin Museum. He was the inventor of the strange masque called 'The Triumph of Death,' which became the fashion in the Carnival at Florence. Besides the picture already named, which is, perhaps, Piero's master-piece, the National Gallery possesses, according to the best connoisseurs, a second example of him, in a picture now ascribed to Lorenzo Costa, and called the portrait of Francesco Ferrucci. This is a work of much power, and besides its undoubted affinity with the acknowledged productions of Piero, it offers a curious confirmation of his asserted authorship, in the introduction of the Palazzo Vecchio, with Michelangelo's David at its portal, into the background. For Piero di Cosimo was a member of the committee appointed in 1504 by the Signory of Florence to choose a site for that statue. Many of his pictures, most of them, perhaps, pass under other names. The 'Vierge au Pigeon,' in the Louvre, and two fine Holy Families, both 'tondos,' at Dresden and in the Borghese Gallery, Rome, are among the best of these. Piero was a man of curious interests and habits, caring much more for the strange traditions of the pagan mythology than for the tales of his own Church. He was the master of Andrea del Sarto. He died at Florence in 1521.

PIERO DA PERUGIA, a miniaturist of the 15th century, many of whose works are preserved in the Duomo at Siena.

PIERO DI RIDOLFO, an obscure painter who flourished in Tuscany at the close of the 16th century.

PIERON, GUSTAVE, a Flemish landscape painter, who studied at the Antwerp Academy, and resided in that city. He died in 1864.

PIERONI, ADOLFO, painter, engraver, and medalist, was born at Lucca in 1832. He studied under Onestini and Casale, though he was best known as a medalist. He died at Florence in 1875.

PIERRE, a native of Troyes, who designed and painted the fine series of windows in the cathedral dealing with the parable of the Prodigal Son.

PIERRE. A painter of this name is mentioned in the Belgian archives as the author of a portrait, painted in 1417 or 1418, of Margaret of Burgundy, the eldest daughter of Philip the Bold and the wife of William IV., Count of Hainault. In 1418 this portrait was placed in the Chapel of St. Anthony in Barbefosse, near Mons.

PIERRE, maître, a painter of this name was at work in 1486 in the Monastery of the Cordeliers, at Nancy. He was a native of Strasbourg.

PIERRE, ANDRÉ, a native of Blois, who, in 1472, painted a large 'Nativity' for the chapel of the Chateau de Montilz.

PIERRE DE COMPIÈGNE, a native of Compiègne, (?) who was at work on miniatures and illuminations for the Chapter of Troyes in the year 1387.

PIERRE DE COPIAC, a glass-painter, who painted the windows in the Cathedral of Montpellier, his native place.

PIERRE DE ST. CATHERINE, a native of Lille, who painted in the year 1365 an altar-piece for the church of St. Maurice in that city.

PIERRE, DIEUDONNÉ, the son of ÉTIENNE PIERRE, a fruit and flower painter, was born at Nancy in 1807. He was a pupil of Hersent, and painted historical subjects. In the Museum of Nancy there is a 'Christ in the Garden of Olives' by him. He died in 1838.

PIERRE, JEAN BAPTISTE MARIE, was born in Paris in 1714 (or 1713). He was at first a pupil of Natoire, but went to Italy when young, and studied some years at Rome under De Troy. On his return to Paris he distinguished himself as a painter of history, and was employed for some of the public buildings, particularly on a large ceiling in the chapel of the Virgin at St. Roch. He painted an excellent picture of 'St. Nicholas and St. Francis,' for the church of St. Sulpice, which has been engraved by Nicolas Dupuis. He was made director of the Academy in Paris, and was appointed principal painter to the Duke of Orleans and to the king. He died in Paris in 1789. Among his best paintings are, 'Peter curing the Lame Man,' and 'The Death of Herod' (in St. Germain des Prés). Pierre left several etchings, among which we may name the following :

The Village Entertainment; after his own design.
 Several Studies of Heads; made by him in Italy.
 Some Plates of subjects from 'Fontaine's Fables'; after designs by Subleyras.

PIERSON, CHRISTOPH, was born at the Hague in 1631, and was destined by his parents for mercantile pursuits, but became a scholar of Bartholomäus Meyburg, whom after some time he accompanied to Germany, but after an absence of three years returned to Holland, and established himself at Gouda, where he met with immediate employment as a painter of history and portraits. Notwithstanding the reputation he had acquired, the encouragement given to the pictures of Leemans, a painter of dead game, guns, &c., induced him to adopt similar subjects, in which he surpassed his model. He died at Gorcum in 1714.

PIET, —, was a native of the Low Countries, and flourished about the year 1600. He engraved the plates for a work entitled 'Le Maniement d'Armes de Nassau,' &c., by Adam V. Brien, published in 1608.

PIETERS, GEERTJE, or GERTRUDE, was a fruit and flower painter, and was working at Delft at the beginning of the 18th century. She was a pupil of Maria van Oosterwyck, and was of good repute in her day, though most of her productions have been attributed to De Heem. The Snermond Collection had a 'Plate of Fruit' by her, dated 1680.

PIETERS, GÉRARD, a Flemish historical painter, who was a native of Bruges. He was received as master painter in 1562, but in 1590 he left Bruges and settled at Ghent, where he was often employed by the town authorities. He died in 1612. His son Pierre worked with his father.

PIETERS, JAN, or JOHN, was born at Antwerp in 1667, and was a scholar of Pieter Eyckens. He came to England in 1685, when he was eighteen years of age, and finding no employment for a painter of history, he offered his services to Sir Godfrey Kneller, who employed him to paint the draperies and backgrounds of his portraits. He excelled in copying the works of Rubens. He died in London in 1727, and was buried in the churchyard of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields.

PIETERS, PIERRE, the son of Gérard Pieters, accompanied his father to Ghent in 1590, and was admitted to the freedom of that city. In 1609 he was at work for the magistracy of Ghent, but must have been already dead in 1612, for in that year his wife is spoken of as a widow, in a document still preserved.

PIETERS, SIMON, a Flemish historical painter, received as master painter at Bruges in 1521. He was Dean of St. Luke's Guild in 1549. In 1553 he restored the 'Last Judgment' of Walens, and painted several pictures for the city. He died in 1556.

PIETERSZ, ROELOF, an obscure painter who worked at Utrecht about 1517.

PIETERZEN, ABRAHAM, a Dutch painter who flourished at Middelburg early in the present century. He was a pupil of Van Regemorter, at Antwerp.

PIETERSZEN, AËRT, the son of Pieter Aertszen (known as Lange Peer), was born at Amsterdam in 1550. He deserves great praise for his picture of the 'Lesson of Anatomy,' which hangs in the same room as the world-famous picture of the same subject by Rembrandt, in the Surgeons' Guild-Hall at the Hague. It represents the professor Sebastiaen Egberts lecturing over a dead body to twenty-eight eager listeners, much in the same way as Rembrandt has depicted Tulp. It is now in the Rijks Museum, Amsterdam. Pieterszen's picture is vigorously executed in a brown tone, and exhibits, more especially in the countenances, much vivacity, facility of drawing, and general truth to nature. It bears the painter's monogram of A. P. and the date 1603, which is twenty-nine years earlier than Rembrandt's work. Besides this, the Rijks Museum possesses two more excellent examples of Pieterszen, both groups of portraits. Pieterszen died at Amsterdam, and was buried there on the 12th June, 1612.

PIETERSZEN, GERRIT, (PIETERS, or PEETERS,) was a painter and etcher, who flourished at Amsterdam at the end of the 16th century and beginning of the 17th. He was first instructed by Jacob Lenartszen and Cornelis van Haarlem, and afterwards went to Antwerp and Rome. After a residence of some years in the latter city he returned to Amsterdam, where he distinguished himself as one of the ablest artists of his time. Unfortunately he devoted himself principally to portraiture, and the rapid production of small pictures, but his talents fitted him for higher efforts. He was particularly successful with the nude, and is also celebrated as a painter of gallant assemblies and conversations, which he composed in a very agreeable style, and finished with great neatness and delicacy. According to Balkema he died in 1626. There is a beautiful landscape drawing by him in the cabinet at Munich. He etched several plates, among them :

St. Cecilia, with Angels.
 St. John in the Wilderness.
 The three Theological Virtues.

PIETERSZON, PIETER, a glass-painter of Haarlem, who was received into the Guild of St. Luke in 1619, and formed a large class of scholars.

PIETRASANTA, ANGELO, a painter, was born at Milan in 1837. He was a pupil of Hayez, and worked from 1859 to 1861 in Rome and Florence, where he won a considerable reputation as a fresco painter. He painted 'The Rucellai Gardens,' the 'Borgia Family,' and figures of 'Europe' and 'Science' in the Galleria Vittorio Emmanuele, at Milan. His last work was the decoration of the Sanctuary of the Incoronata, at Lodi. He died in 1876.

PIETRO BORGHESE. See DEI FRANCESCHI.

PIETRO DI PIETRI, an Italian painter, born at Novara in 1671. He was a pupil of Carlo Maratti, and painted historical subjects. He died in 1716.

PIETRO, GIOVANNI DI. See GIOVANNI.

PIETRO DI BENEDETTO. See DEI FRANCESCHI.

PIETROLINO, an Italian painter of the 12th century, who was at work at Rome, with Guido Guiduccio, between 1110 and 1120. In a MS. preserved at Venice it is stated that Pietrolino's home was at Siena. Some remains of his work are said to be visible in the Church of the Santi Quattri Coronati, in Rome.

PIETROWSKI. See PIOTROWSKY.

PIGAL, EDMÉ JEAN, a French painter of still-life, was born in Paris in 1794. He was a pupil of Gros. Among his works is a 'Consultation of Doctors.' He died in 1872.

PIGEON, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Flemish painter, born at Bure in 1823. He was a pupil of Marinus Van der Haert and Mathieu, and painted portraits and historical subjects. His chief work is the 'Institution of the Rosary,' in the Church of Anbée, near Dinant. He died in 1868.

PIGNATELLI, VICENTE, a Spanish amateur landscape painter, born about 1700. He was a noble. He showed a decided inclination for the arts, and took a prominent part in founding an Academy at Saragossa, of which he became the first President. He died in 1770.

PIGNE, NICOLAS, a French engraver, was born at Chalons in 1690, and is said to have been a pupil of Bernard Picart. He appears to have been in England, as there is a portrait with his name, of Richard Fiddes, B.D., prefixed to 'Divinity,' by the latter, and dated 1718. We have by this artist a few plates in line, among which are the following :

The Virgin, with the Infant sleeping in a cradle, with St. John standing by her side, attended by four angels; after F. Trevisant; for the 'Crozat Collection.'
The Woman of Canaan kneeling at the feet of Christ; after Ann. Carracci.

PIGNONE, SIMONE, was born at Florence, according to Oretti, in 1614. After being instructed in the elements of art by Domenico Cresti, he became a scholar of Francesco Furini. He afterwards lived for a time in Venice, where he improved his colour by studying the works of Titian and Tintoretto. On his return to Florence he painted several pictures for the churches, of which the most admired are the pictures of 'St. Michael discomfiting the Evil Spirit,' in the church of the Nunziata; and 'St. Louis distributing his Wealth to the Poor,' in Santa Felicità. He also excelled in painting mythological subjects, which, however, he sometimes treated with too much licentiousness. He died in 1698.

PIJNACKER, ADAM, sometimes erroneously called ADRIAEN, was born at Pijnacker, near Delft, in 1621, and went when young to Rome, where for three years he studied the works of the most distinguished landscape painters, and made designs of the most picturesque objects in the environs of that capital. On his return to Holland he soon gave proof of how much he had profited by his travels, and became one of the most admired and best employed artists of his country. It was at that time the practice to ornament the apartments of important houses with the works of the most eminent landscape painters; and Pijnacker was much engaged in works of that description. His style has something in common with that of Jan Both. It is, however, at once more decorative and less true to nature. His composition is excellent, but his colour too cold, and his texture metallic. In the Gotha Gallery there is a 'Landscape with a Ruin' by him, which is signed with the initials A. V. P. P. He was a fine draughtsman of trees. Almost all of his pictures contain men and animals. Pijnacker died at Amsterdam, where he was buried on March 28, 1673. Among his best works we may name :

Amsterdam. Museum. Four Landscapes.
Berlin. " Landscape with Shepherds.
Cassel. " Cows and Cowherds.

Dulwich. Gallery. An Italian Landscape.
" " Landscape, with Sportsmen. (A first-rate example.)
Hague. Museum. A Torrent. (Very fine.)
St. Petersburg. Hermitage. } Sea-coast.
Vienna. Academy. } Mountainous Landscape.

PILAJA, PAOLO, an Italian engraver, flourished at Rome from 1727 to 1747. He executed a set of plates for a book entitled 'Storia di Volsena,' by the Abate Adami, published at Rome in 1737. We have also, among others, the following prints by him :

The Portrait of Pope Benedict XIII.; after Brughi.
The Martyrdom of St. Fedele; after S. Conca.
A Miracle wrought by St. Thoribio; after the same.
S. Liberale, with two Children; after the same.
Statue of the Prophet Elijah; after the sculpture by Agost. Cornacchini, in St. Peter's at Rome.

PILEN, HANS, an unimportant Dutch landscape painter, flourished toward the close of the 16th century. He painted somewhat in the style of Pieter Lastmann.

PILES, ROGER DE, painter, etcher, and writer on art, was born at Clamecy (Nièvre) in 1635, and died in Paris in 1709. He was a pupil of Claude François, and travelled in Italy and Holland. His fame depends chiefly on his voluminous writings on art.

PILGRIM, J. U. See WECHTLIN.

PILKINGTON, SIR WILLIAM, Bart., an English amateur landscape painter, born in 1775. He succeeded to the title as eighth baronet in 1811. His style was founded on that of the classic school, and especially that of Richard Wilson. He was also an amateur architect and a good scholar. Butterton Hall, Staffordshire, was built from his designs. He died at Chevet Hall, Wakefield, in 1850.

PILLANS, R., an English marine painter, who practised in the second part of the 18th century.

PILLEMENT, JEAN, was born at Lyons about 1728 (some say 1719), and after receiving his education in that city, went to Paris and Vienna, and after 1763 to London. He painted in oil or pastel a few pictures of landscapes and fancy subjects, which were composed and coloured in a theatrical, gaudy style; he treated similar subjects in pencil drawings and water-colours, which were finished with great neatness and labour. Between 1773 and 1780 he occasionally exhibited at the Free Society of Artists, but in the former year he dropped for a time the practice of his art on account of ill health, and returned to Avignon. He became painter to Marie Antoinette and to the last king of Poland, but finally settled again at Lyons, where (?) he died early in the present century (? 1808). Several of his designs have been engraved by Canot, Ravenet, Woollet, Mason, Elliot, and other eminent engravers. He himself etched a few plates of flowers, &c.

PILLEMENT, VICTOR, designer and engraver, was born at Vienna in 1767. He was a son and pupil of Jean Pillement, and worked with the graver and point combined. He died in Paris in 1814. Among his best plates may be mentioned :

The Banks of the Bosphorus; after Melling.
Travels in Egypt; after Denon.
Œdipus Colonneus; after Valenciennes.

PILO, CARL GUSTAV, a Swedish painter, was born near Runtuna, in Südermanland, in 1712 or 1713. He first studied under his father, OLUF PILO (a portrait painter), then under Crisman at Stockholm, and was at Vienna from 1734 to 1736. He next travelled widely in Germany, and on returning to his own country settled for a time at Schonen, where he successfully practised portrait painting. In 1741 he went to Copenhagen, and was appointed drawing-master to the Cadet Corps, and after painting the Crown Princess Louise, was in 1745 made court-painter, and three years later professor at the old Academy. In 1771 he became director, but by accepting the Order of Vasa from his own sovereign, Gustavus III., he fell into disfavour with the Danes, and returned to Sweden. Here, too, he was chosen a director of the Academy. He died at Stockholm in 1792. Among his best pictures we may note :

Frederik V. of Denmark on Horseback.
Karoline Mathilde, his Consort.
Coronation of Gustavus III.
Portrait of Lieut.-General Lerche.

PILOTTO, GIROLAMO, was a native of Venice, and flourished about the year 1590. He was a scholar of the younger Palma, and, according to Zanotti, a faithful follower of his style. One of his best performances is a 'St. Biagio,' over the high altar of the Fraglia at Rovigo; but his most celebrated work is the 'Marriage of the Adriatic by the Doge,' in the grand saloon in the ducal palace at Venice. Zani places his death in 1649.

PILOTY, CARL THEODOR VON, a Bavarian painter, was born at Munich in 1826. After studying under his father he entered the Munich Academy, and became the pupil of his brother-in-law, Carl Schorn. In early manhood he visited Paris, England, and Brussels, and soon after his return to Bavaria, was commissioned by the king to paint, for the Maximilianum, 'The Elector Max adhering to the Catholic League in 1609.' This was completed in 1854. Piloty formed a large class of pupils, and for the greater part of his life was both a member and a professor of the Munich Academy. Lenbach, Defregger, and Hans Makart were among his scholars. He died in 1886. Works :

Death of Wallenstein.
Semi before Wallenstein's corpse.
Battle of the White Mountain, Prague.
Galilee in Prison.
Wallenstein marching against Egger.
Discovery of America.
Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn.
Nero among the ruins of Rome.
Thusnelda at the Triumph of Germanicus. (New Pinacothek, Munich.)

PILOTY, FERDINAND, lithographer, was born at Homburg in 1785. He was instructed in painting, but after the invention of lithography he devoted himself exclusively to that art. In 1836 he associated himself with Joseph Löhle for the production of a series of copies from the Munich Pinacothek and the Schleissheim Gallery. After the death of Gottlieb Bodmer the two artists continued the publication of his works, and the lithographic establishment of Piloty and Löhle is still one of repute in Germany. Piloty died at Munich in 1844.

PILS, ISIDORE ALEXANDRE AUGUSTE, a French historical painter, born in Paris in 1813. He studied in the École des Beaux Arts, and was a pupil of Lethière and Picot. In 1838 he gained the Grand Prix de Rome for his 'St. Peter healing the lame man at the gate of the Temple.' For some years his attention was chiefly devoted to Scriptural subjects, and he spent much time in travel. The Russian War gave a new turn to his art, and he henceforth painted those military subjects on which his reputation rests. He went to the Crimea, and depicted several incidents of the campaign for Napoleon III. Besides medals in 1846, 1855, 1857, and 1861, he received the Legion of Honour in 1857, becoming an officer of the order in 1867. He became Professor of Painting at the École des Beaux Arts in 1863, and was elected a member of the Institute in 1868. There are decorative paintings by him at the churches of Ste. Clotilde and St. Eustache in Paris; but his greatest work of this kind is the ceiling over the grand staircase in the New Opera House. Pils died of chest disease at Donarnenez (Brittany) in 1875. Amongst his chief pictures are :

Christ preaching in Simon's Boat. 1846.
Death of the Magdalen. (1847.)
Bacchantes and Satyrs. (1848.)
Rouget de l'Isle singing the Marseillaise. 1849.

Battle of the Alma. 1861. (Versailles Gallery.)
Fête to the Emperor and Empress in Algiers in 1860. (1867.)

Fame crowning Wisdom.

Portraits of Leconte and Castelnau.

His brother, EDOUARD AISNÉ PILS, born 1823, died 1852, was a pupil of the School of Arts, and from 1845 onwards painted religious and military subjects with some success.

PILSEN, FRANS, was born at Ghent in 1700, and died in 1786. He studied painting and engraving under Robert van Auden-Aerd. We have among others, the following prints by him :

The Virgin and Infant Jesus; after Rubens.
The Conversion of St. Bavon; after the same.
The Judgment of Midas; after the same.
The Martyrdom of St. Blaize; after G. de Crayer.
St. Francis; after Rubens; inscribed F. Pilsen, sculp. G. 1770.

PINACCI, GIUSEPPE, an obscure Italian painter, a native of Siena, flourished about 1642. He was a pupil of Borgognone, and painted historical and battle scenes. He resided at Naples, and afterwards at Florence, at the Court of Prince Ferdinand.

PINAIGRIER, THOMAS, a French landscape painter, born in Paris in 1616. He was received into the Academy in 1648, and died in 1658.

PINAS, JACOB, was the younger brother of Jan Pinas, and was instructed by his brother, whose style he imitated.

PINAS, JAN, was an historical painter of Haarlem early in the 17th century. It is not known under whom he learned the rudiments of the art, but in 1605 he travelled, in company with Pieter Lastman, to Italy, where he studied some years. On his return to Holland he distinguished himself as a painter of history and portraits. Of his historical productions, one of the most esteemed was a picture in the great church at Haarlem of 'Joseph and his Brethren.' He was living in that city up to at least 1621, and in 1623 a landscape by him, with the story of Salmacis and Hermaproditus, was engraved by Magdalen van de Pass.

PINCHARD, P., is said by Strutt to have resided at Genoa, where he engraved several plates for books, about the year 1687.

PINE, JOHN, an engraver, and a man of letters, was born in 1690. He kept a printshop in St. Martin's Lane, and became intimate with Hogarth, who introduced his portrait as the friar in his picture of 'Calais Gate,' from which circumstance he went often by the name of 'Friar Pine.' He brought out several handsome works illustrated with plates of his own engraving. The principal of them were a series representing the ceremonies used at the revival of the order of the Bath, by King George I. (published in 1725); also his prints from the tapestry in the House of Lords, representing the 'Destruction of the Spanish Armada'; and a superb edition of 'Horace,' the text engraved, and illustrated with ancient bas-reliefs and gems. The 'Pastorals' and 'Georgics' of Virgil were published by his son, after his death, ornamented in a similar manner, with a printed type. Pine also engraved a few portraits, among which are an etching of himself and a mezzotint bust of Garrick, taken from a cast. He received the appointment of Blue Mantle in the Heralds' College, and there died May 4, 1756. Pine was one of the committee of artists who attempted, in 1755, to found a Royal Academy.

PINE, ROBERT EDGE, son of John Pine, was born in London in 1742. It is not known by whom he was instructed, but he gained the premium for the best historic design, given by the Society of Arts, with his 'Surrender of Calais' in 1760, and again with 'Canute and his Courtiers' in 1763. He afterwards practised as a portrait painter, and occasionally exhibited at Spring Gardens and the Royal Academy. In 1782 he exhibited a series of pictures of scenes from Shakespeare. He afterwards went to America, and portrayed Washington and other leaders of the revolution. He died at Philadelphia in 1790. His principal works are subjects from Shakespeare, and theatrical portraits, which have been engraved by M'Ardell, V. Green, C. Watson, Aliamet, Lomax, and Dickinson. His 'Surrender of Calais' was preserved in the Town-hall of Newbury, and mention may be made of the following portraits:

George II. (at Audley End).

The Duke of Northumberland (Middlesex Hospital).

Garrick (National Portrait Gallery).

PINE, SIMON, an English miniature painter in the 18th century, the son of John Pine. He practised in Ireland and at Bath, and exhibited at Spring Gardens, and at the Academy. He died in 1772.

PINEDA, FRANCISCO PEREZ DE, a Spanish painter, was born at Seville about the year 1640. He was a scholar of Murillo, whose style he followed, and there are several of his works in the churches and convents at Seville. There was also an ANTONIO PEREZ DE PINEDA, who lived about 100 years previously.

PINELLI, ANTONIA BERTUCCI. See BERTUCCI-PINELLI.

PINELLI, BARTOLOMMEO, an Italian painter, etcher, and modeller, was born at Rome in 1781. He studied when young at the Academy of Saint Luke, and then went to Bologna, where he obtained honours, after which he returned to Rome. He was very successful with his sketches from popular life, and then took to painting views at Rome and Tivoli in aquarelle. He also etched (1810-22) a number of plates illustrating Italian life and costumes, as well as Grecian and Roman history and the works of classic authors. Besides these original designs he engraved after other artists. His drawings in chalk and in water-colours are much esteemed. The works by which he is best known are, 'Istoria degli Imperatori, inventata ed incisa in cento rami'; 'Raccolta di Costumi pittoreschi'; 'Nuova Raccolta di cinquanta Costumi pittoreschi'; 'Istoria Greca,' with 100 etchings; 'Istoria Romana,' 152 etchings; Illustrations to Virgil, Dante, Tasso, Aretino, and Cervantes; and some others, of which the plates were brought to England, and printed here. He also engraved the frescoes painted by Pinturicchio in the cathedral of Santa Maria Maggiore; the illustrations of the 'Life and Miracles of St. Francis di Paula,' after Marco da Faenza and others; the friezes by Giulio Romano in the Farnesina; Picturesque Views of Tivoli, &c.; and lithographed illustrations to Manzoni. He died at Rome in 1835.

PINGRET, EDOUARD HENRI THÉOPHILE, a French painter, and native of St. Quentin, who flourished about 1785. He was a pupil of David and also of Regnault. Works:

Louis XIV. and Molière.

Siege of Courtraï. (Versailles.)

PINO, MARCA DA, (or MARCO DA SIENA,) a painter and architect, is stated to have been born at Siena about the year 1520. He was a pupil of Buonaccorsi and Ricciarelli, but chiefly followed the style of Michelangelo. He painted some pictures for the churches at Rome, of which one of the most esteemed was a 'Dead Christ, with the Virgin and St. John,' in Santa Maria di Ara Cœli. Much of his work in Rome was done in collaboration with Daniele da Volterra. From Rome he proceeded to Monte Cassino, where, in 1557-8, he painted for the church of the Benedictines some large frescoes from the Lives of Christ and of SS. Maurus and Placidus. But the chief scene of his activity was Naples, where he established himself in 1560. During a residence of twenty-seven years, he decorated the principal churches with several of his finest works. Of these, the most famous and perhaps the best is a 'Deposition from the Cross,' in the church of San Giovanni de' Fiorentini, painted in 1577. In the same church is a fine picture of the 'Annunciation,' and in the cathedral an 'Incredulity of St. Thomas' (1573). A 'Christ on the Cross,' an 'Assumption of the Virgin,' and an 'Adoration of the Magi,' in the church of San Severino, may also be named. Pino died in 1587. His art has much that is clever and energetic about it, but it has also the affectation and insipidity of the decadence.

PINO, PAOLO, an unimportant Venetian painter, who flourished about 1565. His style was founded on the followers of Bellini. There is a portrait of the physician Coignati by him, in the Uffizi, at Florence.

PINO DA MESSINA. See MESSINA.

PINSON, NICOLAS, was born at Valence, in the Drôme, about the year 1640. He studied at Rome, where he remained a considerable time, and imitated the manner of Pietro da Cortona. Scarcely anything more of his history, or of his works, is known, except that Coelemans has engraved his picture of 'Tobit and the Angel,' which was in the collection of Boyer d'Agulles; and that he etched two prints, a 'Dead Christ' and the 'Assumption of the Virgin,' which are both of extreme rarity. The first is marked N. P. In. f., and the second N. Pinson. Inuent. et Sculp.

PINSSIO, SEBASTIANO, who was born in Paris in 1721, and flourished in 1755, is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a few portraits.

PINTURICCHIO. See BRAGIO, BERNARDINO.

PINUS, CORNELIUS, a Roman painter of the reign of Vespasian, was engaged with Accius Priscus in the Temple of Virtue and Honour.

PINWELL, GEORGE JOHN, an English draughtsman and water-colour painter, born in London in 1842. He studied in Heatherley's Art School, Newman Street. In the early part of his career he practised much as a book-illustrator, and specimens of his work are to be found in 'London Society,' 'Good Words,' 'Once a Week,' 'Sunday Magazine,' Dalziel's 'Vicar of Wakefield,' &c. His first appearance in water-colours was at the Dudley Gallery in 1865, but his best pictures were exhibited at the Water-Colour Society, of which he was elected an Associate in 1869, and a member in 1871. He died of lung disease in 1875, in the midst of great promise, and was buried at Highgate. Since his death his work has increased enormously in popularity. Together with Frederick Walker, who also died young, and Mason he may be considered the leader of one of the most interesting of the modern developments in British painting. Pinwell was an honorary member of the Belgian Society of Water-Colour Painters. Amongst his best works are:

The Pied Piper of Hamelin. 1869.

The Great Lady.

A Seat in the Park. 1869.

At the Foot of the Quantocks.

The Elixir of Love. 1870.

The Strolling Player. 1872.

Gilbert à Beckett's Troth. (1872.)

The Beggar's Roost, Tangier. (1874.)

We fell out, my Wife and I. (1875.)

Many of Pinwell's best works have been etched by R. W. Macbeth, A.R.A.

PINZ, JOHANN GEORG, (or PINTZ,) was an engraver of Augsburg, who died in 1767, at the age of 70. He is said to have been chiefly employed by the booksellers, for whom he engraved several prints, in the style of those which ornament the numerous publications of Van der Aa. He engraved, among others, an emblematical print, entitled 'Gallus and Germanus,' in honour of the King of France, after P. Decker.

PIO, GIOV. DEL. See BONATTI.

PIOLA, DOMENICO, the younger brother of Pellegrino Piola, was born at Genoa in 1628. He received his first education in art from his brother, but after his death he became a scholar of Giovanni Domenico Capellini. In conjunction with Valerio Castelli, he executed some works for the public edifices in Genoa and the state. For some time he followed the style of Castiglione, and afterwards that of Pietro da Cortona. He was particularly happy in the representation of children, which he designed from the casts of Fiammingo. One of his best productions is the 'Miracle of St. Peter at the gate of the Temple,' at Carignano, which is not degraded by its vicinity to an admirable picture by Guercino. He died in 1703. He is known to have produced the following etchings: two 'Nativities'; 'The Virgin on the throne with the Infant Jesus on her knees, and St. John kneeling'; 'Paris holding the Apple'; and an 'Old Man with a long beard.' Domenico Piola had three sons, AN-

TONIO, who abandoned painting in early life after showing some promise, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, who never developed any original talent, and PABLO GERONIMO.

PIOLA, DOMENICO, the younger, was a grandson of Domenico Piola, the elder, and was born in 1748. He painted historical subjects with mediocre talent, and was the last of the family. He died in 1774.

PIOLA, GIOVANNI GREGORIO, a successful miniature painter, born at Genoa in 1583. He died at Marseilles in 1625.

PIOLA, PABLO GERONIMO, historical painter, son of Domenico Piola, the elder, was born in 1666. He was a pupil of his father, but imitated the style of Carlo Maratti and the Carracci. He died in 1724.

PIOLA, PELLEORO, or PELLEGRINO, was born at Genoa in 1617. He is supposed to have been a pupil of Capellino. Though the world was deprived of his talents at the premature age of twenty-three, when he was assassinated, a 'Madonna,' painted by him, which was in the collection of the Marchese Brignole, was thought by Franceschini to have been painted by Andrea del Sarto; and his picture of St. Elogio, in one of the churches of Genoa, was mistaken by Mengs for a work of Lodovico Carracci. He died in 1640.

PIOLA, PIETRO FRANCESCO, historical and portrait painter, was born in 1565. He was a pupil of Sofonisba Anguisciola, and a successful imitator of Cambiaso. He died in 1600.

PIOMBO, SEB. DEL. See LUCIANI.

PIORT, V., an obscure artist, mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a plate from Rubens, representing an old woman holding a pot on a fire from which a boy is taking a lighted coal.

PIOTROWSKY, MAXIMILIAN ANTON, (or PIETROWSKI,) was born at Bromberg in 1814, and studied at the Berlin Academy under Hensel. He afterwards became Professor in the Academy at Königsberg. He at first painted romantic subjects from Polish history, and other historical pieces, one of which was 'Marie Antoinette in the Temple.' Later on he took to genre painting from Polish popular life. He died at Königsberg, the 29th November, 1875.

PIQUOT. See PICOU.

PIRANESI, FRANCESCO, son and pupil of Giambattista Piranesi, was born at Rome in 1756, and was instructed in design and architecture by his father. The Revolution drove him to Paris, where, with his brother Pietro, he essayed in vain to found an Academy, and to start a terra-cotta manufactory. He died in 1810. We have by him several plates of architectural views, and also of antique statues; among them, the following:

Jupiter enthroned; from the statue in the Capitoline Museum; after a drawing by Piroli.

The Venus of Medici; after the same.

Cupid and Psyche; from the Group in the Capitol.

Papirius and his Mother; from the group in the Villa Ludovisi.

The Illumination of the Chapel of St. Paul in St. Peter's. (See also the list of plates by G. B. PIRANESI.)

PIRANESI, GIAMBATTISTA, etcher and architect, was born at Venice in 1720, and having there studied drawing and architecture, went to Rome, where he at first devoted himself to theatrical painting under Valerian, and in 1738 received instructions in engraving from Giuseppe Vasi, a Sicilian. After twice attempting to start as an architect at Venice, he returned both times to Rome, and settled down to engraving. He died in that city on Nov. 9, 1778, having in 1761 been admitted a member of the Academy of San Luca. He also held the Order of Christ, and was an honorary member of the Society of Antiquaries, in London, a distinction of which he seems to have been proud, as he always carefully added that title to his name. He was also a member of the Academy of the Arcadi, by the name of 'Salcindio Tiseio,' as he has given it in one of his frontispieces, according to the fantastic custom of that Society of giving new names to the persons admitted. All who knew him agree that he was of a fiery and impetuous temper, but full of genius. As a practical architect it is only stated that he was employed to repair and ornament, at the particular desire of Clement XIII., the church of Santa Maria del Popolo, and the priory of Malta, at Rome; in the latter of which his son erected a statue to his memory, which was executed by Angolini. His portrait, engraved by Polanzani, in 1750, in the style of a mutilated statue, is prefixed to some of his works. Piranesi was made 'Cavaliere' by Clement XIII.

Piranesi was one of the best draughtsmen and engravers of architecture and ancient ruins of his time. His skill in combining objects from different localities, and the force and vigour which he gave to the most important, obtained for him the sobriquet of 'The Rembrandt of Architecture.' His works fill upwards of twenty folio volumes, mostly published during his life, but a few subsequently by his son, Francesco Piranesi, who had an establishment at Rome for the express purpose. The following list of his works is taken from Mr. Henry Bohn's Catalogue. The differences which occur in some of the titles, or frontispieces, to copies of his Antichità Romane, arise from a disagreement that occurred between Piranesi and Lord Charlemont, who was to have been his patron.

PIRANESI, LAURA, the daughter of Giambattista Piranesi, was born at Rome in 1750. She carried on business with her brother at Rome, and her etchings bear a strong resemblance to those of her father. She probably retired to Paris with her brother. There is no account of her death. She engraved some views of the remarkable buildings in Rome; among others, the following:

The Capitol.
 The Ponte Salario.
 The Temple of Peace.
 The Arch of Septimius Severus.

PIRINGER, BENEDIKT, a designer and engraver, was born at Vienna in 1780, and died in Paris, where he had resided for some time, in 1826. He studied at the Vienna Academy under F. A. Brand and Herzinger, and was afterwards admitted to membership. He worked in aquatint and with the graver, and his productions are chiefly landscapes, romantic scenery, and views of cities after old and modern masters, some of which were published collectively. His pieces are rather numerous, and include among the best:

The four Parts of the Day; four plates, after Claude Lorrain.
 The Waterfall; after Molitor.
 The Rocky Pyramid; after the same.
 Landscapes; after Poussin and Locatelli.

PIRINI, LOUIS DE, a French engraver, by whom we have a plate representing two Men playing at Cards, and a Woman holding a Mirror behind one of them, to discover his hand to the other; after Cornelis van Tienen.

PIRNBAUM, ALEXIS, was, according to Papillon, who calls him PIRNBAUM, an engraver on wood, and resided at Basle about the year 1545. Papillon supposes him to have been a disciple of Hans Holbein, but does not specify any of his works. Nagler is of opinion that he is identical with Adam Petri, a bookseller of Basle.

PIROLI, TOMMASO, an Italian designer and engraver, was born at Rome in 1750, and received his instruction in Florence. In 1806 he returned to Rome, in which city, after passing some years in Paris, he finally settled, and died in 1824. His prints are numerous, etched in outline and in the chalk manner. The following are considered as the most interesting: 'The Deposition from the Cross,' after Caravaggio; Bronzes, &c., from Herculaneum; a set of Bas-reliefs, after Canova; the Prophets and Sibyls of Michelangelo in the Cappella Sistina; a copy of Metz's prints of the 'Last Judgment,' in the same chapel; the story of Cupid and Psyche, from the frescoes of Raphael in the Farnesina; Massacio's frescoes in the Brancacci chapel at Florence; and the outlines for original editions of Flaxman's illustrations to Homer, Hesiod, Æschylus, and Dante, engraved under Flaxman's own supervision, and published at Rome. There are also several sets of engravings, from remains of ancient art, by Piroli, part of which were published at Rome and part at Paris by Francesco and Pietro Piranesi, the sons of the celebrated Giambattista.

PIROTTE, OLIVIER, a Flemish historical painter, born at Liège in 1699. He was a pupil of B. Luti at Rome, and afterwards of Coypel at Paris. He painted several pictures for the churches in Liège. He died in 1742.

PISANO, GIUNTA, (or GIUNTA DA PISA,) lived in the first half of the 13th century, and was born, if the old chronicles are to be believed, in 1202. Among the existing works attributed to him, are a 'Crucifixion' in San Ranieri at Pisa; a picture of Saints in the chapel of the Campo Santo; a 'Destruction of Simon Magus,' and a 'Martyrdom of St. Peter,' both in San Francesco at Assisi, where there was formerly a picture of the Crucifixion, with Father Elias, the first General of the Franciscans, embracing the Cross. This was inscribed with Giunta's name and the date, 1236, but is now lost. Giunta died in or about 1258. Though still constrained in design, he made some advance beyond the conventionality of the Byzantine painters who immediately preceded him.

PISANO, VITTORE, usually called PISANELLO, a painter, and the greatest of Italian medallists, was born in North Italy late in the 14th century, but neither the place nor the date of his birth are known. Neither do we know who was his master, but he was probably much influenced by Altichiero and by Arangi, and later in life he may have received hints from Domenico Veneziano. Of all the works with the brush that he carried out in Verona, Venice, and elsewhere, scarcely anything now remains. He painted a fresco in the hall of the Great Council, at Venice, but his picture was overlaid by one from the brush of Luigi Vivarini. In connection with his medals (of which twenty-eight have been preserved), he probably painted portraits, and one of Leonello d'Este, in the collection of the late Mr. Barker, was ascribed to him, but without certain grounds. About 1436 Vittore was in Rome, where he painted on the frescoes left unfinished by Gentile da Fabriano in San Giovanni Laterano. Thence he most likely accompanied Pope Eugenius IV. to Ferrara, where, in 1438, John Palæologus sat to him for his medal. In 1439 he was working at medals for the court of Mantua. He was at Ferrara between 1441 and 1444, at Rimini in 1445, at Milan before 1447, at Mantua again in 1447, and at Naples in 1448-9. Of his works in colour the most important relic that can now be identified is a little panel in the National Gallery, with a vision of the Virgin and Child hovering over the figures of St. Anthony and St. George. This picture was carefully restored by Professor Molteni after it came into the possession of Sir Charles Eastlake; it was presented to the National Gallery by Lady Eastlake. It is inscribed Pisanus Pi. The Berlin catalogue ascribes an 'Adoration of the Magi,' formerly in the Barker collection, to Pisano, on the strength of its resemblance to his drawings, good examples of which are to be seen in the British Museum, and in the Louvre. Vittore died, probably at Rome, in March 1456. For the sake of convenience we subjoin a list of his medals:

PISBOLICA, JACOPO, a Venetian painter, mentioned by Vasari in his Life of Sansovino as the author of a good picture of 'Christ with Angels,' in Santa Maria Maggiore, Venice.

PISTOIA, GERINO DA, is described by Vasari as the friend of Pinturicchio, a diligent colourist, and a follower of Perugino. For his birth or death no dates can be given. In 1505 he painted some designs in the cathedral of his native city; and in the church of San Pietro Maggiore an altar-piece of his still remains. In the refectory of the convent of Santa Lucchese, near Poggibonsi, now turned into a canteen, there are two scenes from the life of Christ by him.

PISTORIUS, EDUARD KARL GUSTAV LEBRECHT, a genre painter, was born at Berlin in 1796. He was originally a pupil of the portrait painter Willich, and copied many pictures in the Gallery of Sans-Souci. In 1818-19 he lived in Dresden, where he chiefly busied himself with genre-painting. In 1827 he visited the Netherlands, and stayed in Düsseldorf on his way back. He returned in 1830 to Berlin, and was elected member of the Academy in 1833. He died at Kissingen in 1862. The National Gallery at Berlin possesses the following pictures by him:

- An Old Man and an Old Woman; a pair (marked in cipher, E. P.). 1824.
- The Geography Class.
- The Toilet. 1827.
- The Village Fiddler. 1831.
- The Artist's Studio. 1828.
- A Sound Sleep. 1839.

PITAU, NICOLAAS, the elder, an engraver, was born at Antwerp about 1633, and first studied under his father JOHANN PITAU, but in 1660 went to Paris and became a pupil of François de Poilly, or at least partially adopted his style. Pitau died in Paris in or about 1676. He engraved a variety of historical subjects after different masters, and a considerable number of portraits. The following are considered to be his best plates:

PORTRAITS.

PITAU, NICOLAAS, the younger, son of the last named, worked from 1695 to 1745, and has left a few engraved portraits, including :

Louis Alexandre de Bourbon, Count de Toulouse ; inscribed Covert pinax. 1701. N. Pitau Junior. Oliver Cromwell.

PITI, a Spanish historical painter, born at Salamanca. He was a pupil of Giordano, on whose return to Italy Piti received a commission to work in the cathedral of Valladolid. He also painted for the chapel of the Marquis of Cerralvo at Salamanca.

PITLOO, ANTON S., a Dutch landscape painter, born at Arnheim in 1791. He was a pupil of H. J. van Ameron. In 1816 he went to Italy, where he painted several views, among which were a view of Rome, and one of the Capitol from the Campo Vaccino. He died in 1837.

PITOCCHI, MATTEO DA, a native of the Venetian state, who painted bambocciati, and also some religious pictures for the churches of Padua. He died about 1700.

PITONUS. See PITTONI.

PITRI. See PETRI.

PITTERI, GIOVANNI MARCO, designer and engraver, was born at Venice in 1703, and died there in 1786. He was a pupil of J. Baroni and Antonio Faldoni, but adopted an original style, with single strokes which run from the top to the bottom, his shadows being produced by strengthening these as the occasion requires. The effect he produced by this whimsical operation is neither unpleasing nor unharmonious, and his prints possess considerable merit. Some of his works are marked M. P. fecit. He engraved several plates for the collection of the Dresden Gallery, and others after various masters ; among them the following :

PORTRAITS.

PITTONI, BATTISTA, called VICENTINO, an engraver, was born at Vicenza probably in 1520, and was living in 1585. His engravings consist of landscapes with ancient ruins, mythological subjects, and arabesques. Some of them bear date from 1561 to 1585. A work formerly in the possession of a late collector (Mr. Lloyd) was entitled 'Imagini favolosi, &c., intagliati in Rami da M. (Messor) Battista Pittoni.' Venice, 1585. In conjunction with Battista Angolo del Moro he engraved a set of fifty landscapes from Titian and others. These plates are very boldly and freely executed. Vicentino usually marked his prints Battista P. V. F., and appended a Latin inscription descriptive of the subjects.

PITTONI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, a painter, was born at Vicenza in 1690, and received his first instructions in the art from his uncle FRANCESCO PITTONI ; but his greatest improvement was derived from study of the works of the best masters of the Venetian school. His figures are generally smaller than life ; and he was less successful when he attempted to work on a larger scale. Two of his finest pictures are the 'Martyrdom of St. Thomas,' in the church of Sant' Eustacio, at Venice, and the 'Miracle of the Loaves,' in San Cosmo della Giudecca. He died at Venice in 1767. The existence of two etchings by him is recorded—a 'Giov. Nep. Canonico de Praga,' and a 'St. John.'

PITTORI DA MACERATA, LORENZO, an Italian painter, flourished about 1533 at Macerata, where he painted a 'Christ,' in the Church of the Virgin, in the antico-moderno manner.

PITTORINI, PADRE. See BISI, FRA B.

PIXELL, (MISS) MARIA, an English landscape painter in oil and water-colours, born in the latter part of the 18th century. She studied under Sawrey Gilpin, and obtained a considerable, but transient, reputation. Her works appeared at the Academy between 1796 and 1811.

PIZZARO, ANTONIO, a Spanish historical painter, was a scholar of El Greco, and resided at Toledo at the commencement of the 17th century. He painted the 'Foundation of the order of Los Trinitarios' for their convent ; several pictures in the churches of SS. Justo and Pastor ; and the 'Nativity of the Virgin' in the church of Santa Maria, at Casarrubios. He also designed the three subjects engraved by Alardo Popma for the 'Life of St. Ildefonso' by Salazar de Mendoza, published in 1618. Neither the date of his birth, nor of his death, is recorded.

PIZZOLI, GIOVACCHINO, a decorative and landscape painter, born at Bologna in 1651. He was instructed by Borboni, Pasinelli, and Michelangelo Colonna, whom he afterwards assisted. He died in 1733.

PIZZOLO, NICCOLÒ, was one of the most important of Squarcione's pupils, and aided him in the decoration of the Eremitani Chapel at Padua. According to Vasari, the 'Eternal,' in the semi-dome of the chapel, the 'Virgin in Glory, with Cherubim,' and the figures of SS. Paul, Christopher, Peter, and James, are all by him. In these works there is much to remind us of Mantegna, who is said to have been much influenced by Pizzolo. He also assisted Fra Filippo in the chapel of the Podesta, Florence, and Donatello in the church of S. Antonio, Padua, in 1446 to 1448. He is said to have perished early in life in a street brawl.

PLAAS. See VAN DER PLAAS.

PLACE, FRANCIS, was the younger son of Rowland Place, of Dinsdale, in the county of Durham, but was himself born in Yorkshire. His father, intending him for the profession of the law, placed him as a clerk to a solicitor in London, under whom he continued until the year 1665, when he was obliged to quit the metropolis on account of the plague, and he took this opportunity of abandoning a pursuit which was never agreeable to his inclination, and of indulging his propensity for drawing. He painted, designed, etched, and engraved in mezzotint, and also drew with the pen, shading the fore-grounds with Indian ink; but as he practised art for amusement only, his works are very scarce. They prove him to have been a man of genius, and it is to be regretted that his application was not equal to his abilities. He is said to have refused a pension of five hundred pounds a year, which was offered him in the reign of Charles II., to draw the royal navy, as he could not endure confinement or dependence. He was intimate with Hollar, and with Ralph Thoresby, the antiquary. He died at York in 1728, and his widow disposed of his paintings, among which were one of fowls, and others of flowers and fish. Most of his engravings appear to have been private plates, and this may account for their scarcity. They were executed not later than about 1683, and among them the following are the chief:

PORTRAITS.

Charles I.; after Van Dyck.
Catharine, Countess of Middleton; after Lely.
Major-General John Lambert.
Richard Sterne, Archbishop of York.

Pearce Tempest, printerseller; after Heemskerk.
James Naylor, the Quaker.

A Dutch Family.
A Monk Reading; after Van Dyck.
A View of Tynemouth Castle and Lighthouse.

PLACE, GEORGE, an Irish miniature painter, born in Dublin in the latter half of the 18th century. He studied in the Schools of the Irish Academy, and practised in London, exhibiting at the Royal Academy from 1791 to 1797. He afterwards practised in Yorkshire. The date of his death has eluded research.

PLANER, CHRISTIAN JULIUS GUSTAV, a German engraver, was born at Leipsic in 1818. He attended the Academy of his birthplace, and at first designed himself for a lithographer, but in 1840 he visited Italy, and afterwards studied engraving at Dresden under Steinla. There, in 1873, not being able to find a publisher for his drawing of Leonardo's 'Last Supper,' he put an end to his life by shooting himself. His principal plates are:

The Saviour; after Cima da Conegliano.
Christ blessing the Bread; after Carlo Dolci.
The Virgin Mary; after Steinbruck.
The Repentant Magdalene; after Correggio.

PLANES, LUIS, 'the elder,' was born in Valencia about 1732. He was Director of the Royal Academy of S. Carlos, and died about 1810.

PLANES, LUIS ANTONIO, a painter, was born in Valencia in 1765. He was instructed by his father Luis Planes, and then went to Madrid, where he studied under Francisco Bayeu, and gained the gold medal of San Fernando. He died young, in 1799. One of his best pictures is an 'Immaculate Conception,' in the Church of Albalat.

PLANO, FRANCISCO, a Spanish painter, was born at Daroca, and resided at Saragossa towards the end of the 17th century. He had a great reputation as a painter and architect, especially for decorative works. Palomino places him beside Colona and Mitelli; and the works he has left in the sanctuary of Nuestra Señora del Portillo, at Saragossa, and other churches, would seem to justify the assertion.

PLAS, PIETER, a Dutch painter, was at work at Alkmaar in 1810. He was a pupil of J. van Ravenswaay, and G. Bodeman, and painted landscapes and animals. He died at Alkmaar in 1853.

PLAS. See VAN DER PLAS.

PLASSARD, VINCENT, was a French engraver of the 17th century, of whom there are no particulars. His only known print represents the 'Holy Family,' in a mountainous landscape, and is signed V. Plassard in. et fe. 1650. It is in the style of the Carracci.

PLATEAU, ANTOINE, a flower and decorative painter, was born at Tournai in 1759, and died in 1815. Several pictures by this artist are in the 'Temple of the Sun' at Laeken, and in the house of M. Walkiers.

PLATNER, ERNST ZACHARIAS, painter and writer on art, was born at Leipsic in 1773, and was a son of the philosopher, Ernst Platner. He studied at the Academy of his birthplace under Oeser, and sought further improvement at Dresden from 1790, at Vienna from 1797, and from 1800 at Rome. In 1823 he became Saxon consul at Rome, where he died in 1855. He worked in conjunction with Bunsen, Gerhard, and Röstel on their 'Description of the City of Rome.' Among his best plates are:

Lucretia.
The Dismissal of Hagar.
Hagar and Ishmael.

PLATTE-MONTAGNE, MATHEUS DE, (PLATTENBERG, or VAN PLATTEN-BERCH,) was born at Antwerp about 1608. Having acquired the first rudiments of art in his native city, he went to Italy, and resided some time at Florence, where, in conjunction with his countryman, Jan Asselyn, called Crabetje, he painted several sea-pieces and landscapes, which were greatly admired. He afterwards visited Paris, where his works were not less esteemed, and he met with sufficient encouragement to induce him to settle there for some time. From a singular caprice, he Frenchified his name of Platten-Berch into that of Platte-Montagne, which he sometimes signed to his pictures and prints, and sometimes Montagne only. He died in Paris in 1660. His landscapes are highly finished, and exhibit very pleasing scenery. A 'Storm at Sea,' by him, is in the Augsburg Gallery. We have a few etchings, executed in a very spirited style. They represent landscapes and marines, and resemble the works of Fouquieres, under whom he learnt engraving. They are usually inscribed M. Montagne in. et f. He was the brother-in-law of Jean Morin, and the larger number have the addition, Morin ex. cum priv. Re.

PLATTE-MONTAGNE, NICOLAS DE, (PLATTENBERG, or VAN PLATTEN-BERGE,) was born in Paris in 1631, and studied painting under Philip de Champagne. He was instructed in engraving by Jean Morin, whom he surpassed. His principal works as a painter are in the churches of Notre Dame, St. Sacrament, St. Sulpice, and St. Nicolas des Champs, in Paris. He was also a reputable portrait painter. In 1681 he became professor of history to the Academy, and died in Paris in 1706. From 1651 to 1694 he executed twenty-eight plates with the point and graver, in addition to ten portraits. Among other prints we have the following by him:

The Portrait of Olivier de Castellan, general, killed at the siege of Tarragona in 1644.

St. Génévieve; after P. de Champagne.

Christ in the Tomb; after the same.

The Penitent Magdalene; after the same.

The Sudarium of St. Veronica; after the same.

PLATTEL, HENRI DANIEL, a French historical and landscape painter, was born at Geneva in 1803. He was a pupil of N. Berlin and of Rémond, and died in 1859.

PLATTNER, ANDREAS, painter, a native of Nuremberg, was a pupil of his father Alexander. In 1595 he went to Munich in the train of Duke Ferdinand, where he remained till 1601. He died about 1617.

PLATZER, JOHANN GEORG, (or PLAZER,) was born, according to Füssli, at Epan, in the Tyrol, in 1702, and studied under his step-father Kessler, and with his uncle on the father's side, who was a painter at Passau. In 1721 he went to Vienna, and there became intimate with an artist of the name of Jannek. They adopted the same style of painting, but it did not weaken their friendship, and the public were benefited by their rivalry. Platzer returned to his native country, where he was living in 1755. The cities of Breslau and Glogau possess many good specimens of his finer work.

PLATZER, JOHANN VICTOR, is called by Nagler a sculptor, though it does not appear that he exercised that art. The same writer says that he was born in Vintschgau, probably at Mals, in 1704, and was a scholar of Kessler at Inspruck, until the court-painter, Christoph Platzer, took him under his care at Passau. He afterwards established himself at Vienna, and painted small pictures, mostly with many figures, which were received with much applause both at home and abroad. His application was such that he weakened his sight, and diminished the firmness of his hand, so that in painting he was obliged to use a machine to steady it. In the year 1755 Platzer returned to the place of his nativity, and died in 1767. His garish pictures have nothing to recommend them but manual dexterity. Among the best are:

Dresden. Gallery. The Four Elements.

Vienna. Belvedere. Men and Women Drinking and making Music.

PLATZER, JOSEPH, a painter of architecture, theatrical decorations, moonlights, and small historical subjects, was the son of the celebrated sculptor, Ignaz Platzer, and was born at Prague in 1752. After the completion of his scholastic studies he devoted six years to drawing, chiefly architecture, under the direction of F. Wolf. In oil painting he was his own master, and while still young, was favoured by the patronage of Prince Kaunitz. Thus encouraged, he went to the Vienna Academy, and was afterwards selected by the emperor Joseph II. to embellish the royal theatre. During these operations he encountered many obstacles, and was obliged to maintain his reputation by painting moonlights, historical compositions, and small theatrical designs. On the accession of Leopold II. he was promoted at court, became a member of the Vienna Academy in 1796, and died in 1810. One of his pictures, 'The Murder of Semiramis,' is in the Academy building. He also painted in aquarelle.

PLAYTER, CHARLES GAUTHIER, was an English engraver, who flourished in the latter part of the 18th century, and worked for Boydell on the Shakespeare Gallery. He died at Lewisham in 1809. Amongst his plates are:

Scene from the 'Comedy of Errors;' after Rigaud.

Lady Godiva; after W. Hamilton.

PLEGINCK, MARTIN, was a German engraver on wood and on copper, who flourished about the year 1590. He engraved a set of copper-plates representing figures fighting, entitled 'Fechter-Büchlein,' in a style resembling that of Virgilius Solis. His woodcuts are in the manner of Jost Amman. Bartsch and Passavant describe fifty-three prints by this master, which are of small size, and represent ecclesiastical orders and dignities, cavalry and foot soldiers (after J. De Gheyn), animals, and goldsmiths' work: the date 1594 is on some of them. Zani says he was working in 1606.

PLEISTEINETUS, a brother of Pheidias, is stated to have been a painter, but nothing more than this is known of him.

PLEYDENWURFF, WILHELM, one of the early engravers on wood, was a native of Germany, and flourished about the year 1493. Conjointly with Michel Wolgemut, he is said to have executed the cuts for the Nuremberg 'Chronicle,' compiled by Hermann Schedel, and printed in 1493. They represent views of towns, &c., and figures of various kinds.

PLEYSIER, A., a Dutch marine painter, born at Naardingen in 1809. He died in 1879. In the Bruges Academy there is a 'Coast Scene' by him.

PLIMER, ANDREW, an English miniature painter, born at Bridgewater in 1763. He practised at Exeter, and exhibited at the Academy from 1786 to 1819. His works possess many excellent qualities. He occasionally painted subject pictures in oil. He died at Brighton in 1837. There are two miniatures of the statesman Windham by him in the South Kensington Museum.

PLIMER, NATHANIEL, an English miniature painter, born at Wellington in 1751. He was the elder brother of Andrew Plimer, but did not possess his artistic power. His works occasionally appeared at the Academy from 1787. He died in 1822.

PLIN, E., was a native of France, who flourished about the year 1780. He engraved some plates representing conversations and domestic subjects, which are etched, and finished with the graver.

PLOEGSMA, DIRK JACOBS, a painter, was born at Leeuwarden in 1769. He was a pupil of Accama and chiefly painted portraits, though there were some historical scenes and genre pictures executed by him, among which we may name 'The Disciples plucking Corn on the Sabbath Day.' He died in 1791.

PLOETZ, HEINRICH, a miniature painter, was born at Holstein in 1748. He was instructed by Marsinhe of Ghent, after which he entered the house of the famous naturalist Bonnet, and made drawings of insects, till 1795, when he went to Italy. There he visited Leghorn, Corsica, and Genoa, and afterwards went to Germany, painting portraits in Hamburg and Berlin. He finally settled in Copenhagen, where he died about 1810.

PLOOS VAN AMSTEL, JACOB CORNELIS, who was born at Amsterdam in 1726, and died there in 1798, was a collector of drawings and an amateur engraver. The following is a list of the more important :

PLOTT, JOHN, was born at Winchester in 1732. In the early part of his life he was articled to an attorney, but he did not long follow the profession. In 1756 he came to London, and having shown an inclination for painting, he became a pupil of Richard Wilson, the landscape painter; but his genius directing him to portraiture rather than landscape, he quitted that master, and placed himself under the tuition of Nathaniel Hone. He afterwards distinguished himself as a miniature painter, both in enamel and water-colours, though he sometimes painted in oil. He had a taste for natural history, and executed several drawings in that branch. Whilst in London in 1777 he exhibited at the Academy. Towards the latter part of his life he resided at Winchester, and some years before his death became a member of the corporation of that city. He began a history of 'Land Snails,' and had made some beautiful drawings for it when interrupted by death. He died at Stoke, near Winchester, in 1803. Bromley mentions a mezzotint portrait of Plott, scraped by himself.

PLÜDDEMANN, HERMANN FREIHOLD, historical painter, was born at Colberg in 1809. His first master was Seig in Magdeburg, and in 1828 he entered the studio of K. Begas in Berlin, and went in 1831 to Düsseldorf, to the atelier of W. von Schadow, with whom he remained six years. In company with H. Mücke he completed a number of frescoes for Count Spee in his schloss at Heltdorf, and in 1843 he painted a wall in the Rath-haus of Elberfeld. He went in 1848 to reside at Dresden, where he died in 1868. Among his pictures we may name :

- Loreley. 1833.
- The Death of Roland. 1834.
- Columbus catching sight of Land. 1836. (Berlin Nat. Gallery.)
- The Battle of Iconium (fresco); after Lessing. 1839. (Schloss Heltdorf.)

PLUMIER, EDMOND, painter, was born at Liège in 1694. He was a pupil of Fisen and Largillière at Paris. He then went to Italy, and entered the atelier of Masucci. He had a son, JACQUES THEODOR, also a painter, who died in 1766. In the church of S. Remacle at Liège is a 'Descent from the Cross' by this artist. He died in 1733.

POCCI, FRANZ, GRAF VON, draughtsman, etcher, poet, and musician, was born at Munich, March 7, 1807. He owed such teaching in art as he had to the example of his mother, AMALIA FRANZISKA XAVERIA (born in Dresden, 1776; died, 1849). From 1825 to 1828 he studied jurisprudence, and then became a member of the Bavarian Government. In 1830 he was named a master of the ceremonies at the court, and shortly afterwards accompanied King Ludwig and the Crown Prince to Italy. Pocci's best works as an artist are his etchings for Grimm's 'Volksmärchen' and for Schreiber's 'Märchen.' He died May 7, 1876.

POCH, TOBIAS, (POCK,) a German historical and still-life painter, who flourished at Constance in the 17th century. He was living at Vienna in 1662.

POCHMANN, TRAUOTT LEBERRECHT, portrait painter, was born at Dresden in 1762. He was a Professor of the Dresden Academy, and died in 1830. His own portrait is in the Dresden Gallery.

POCOCK, ISAAC, an English portrait and historical painter, the son of Nicholas Pocock, was born at Bristol in 1782. He studied under Romney and Beechey, and in 1807 was awarded a prize of £100 by the British Institution for his 'Murder of St. Thomas à Becket.' His works occasionally appeared at the Academy between 1800 and 1819, and he also exhibited at the Liverpool Academy, of which he was a member. Inheriting property, he retired from the practice of art, and amused himself by writing for the stage. He died at Maidenhead in 1835. There is a portrait of Bartley as Hamlet by him at the Garrick Club, London.

POCOCK, NICHOLAS, an English marine painter, born at Bristol in 1741. His family were merchants, and in his younger years he commanded a vessel. During his voyages he was enabled to exercise his talent for sketching, and he at length devoted himself entirely to art. He attracted the favourable notice of Sir J. Reynolds, and first exhibited at the Academy in 1782. Seven years later he moved to the wider sphere of London, and was much engaged in depicting the naval battles of the period. He was one of the original members of the Water-Colour Society, where he exhibited up to 1817. He died at Maidenhead in 1821. The following are some of his works:

Greenwich.	Hospital.	Defeat of the French Fleet at St. Kitt's, 1782.
"	"	H.M.S. Triton.
"	"	H.M.S. Defence.

PODESTA, GIACOMO ANDREA, was born at Genoa about the year 1620, and went early in life to Rome, where he became a scholar of Giovanni Andrea Ferrari. The year of his death is not ascertained. It does not appear that he reached any celebrity as a painter; but we have some very spirited etchings by him, which prove him to have been an artist of considerable ability. He usually marked his plates AND. P. or And. P. in. et fec. One of his prints is marked 1636, and four others 1640, which was probably his best time. Bartsch describes eight engravings by him, of which five are bacchanalian subjects, two amatory, and one a St. Francis performing a miracle. The following are also by him:

An Allegorical Subject, representing Boys cultivating the Arts, and a Phoenix in the Flames; after his own design.

The Triumph of Bacchus; after Titian.

Bacchus and Ariadne; after the same.

Silenus Drunk, supported by Satyrs and Bacchanals; after the same.

POELENBURGH, CORNELIS VAN, (or POELEM-BURG,) called also BRUSCO and SATYRO, was born at Utrecht in 1586. He received his first instruction from Abraham Bloemaert, and then travelled to Italy in search of improvement. On his arrival at Rome, he attached himself to the style of Adam Elsheimer. He adopted a pleasing style of painting small landscapes, distinguished by suavity and delicacy of colouring, and an agreeable choice of scenery, enriched with architecture, into which he introduced figures remarkable for the fusion of their handling, their clear carnations, and mediocre drawing. He quitted Rome with some reluctance, after a sojourn of several years; and on his arrival at Florence, where the reputation of his talents had preceded him, he was received with favour and distinction by the Grand Duke, for whom he painted several pictures. On his return to Utrecht, the impatience of his countrymen to possess his works loaded him with commissions. In 1607 Charles I. invited him to London, where he remained some time, and painted several pictures for the king and the nobility. He frequently ornamented with figures the architectural views of Steenwyck, and the landscapes of Keirrinckx. In King Charles's catalogue are mentioned the portraits of his Majesty, and of the children of the King of Bohemia, by Poelenburgh; and in that of James II. there are sixteen pictures by him. But the success he met with did not induce him to remain in England. He returned to Utrecht, where in 1649 he was made President of the Painters' Guild, and where he died, August 12, 1667. Descamps and M. Watelet assert that Poelenburgh etched some prints from his own designs, and that the plates being soon afterwards destroyed, they are now extremely scarce. Possibly the prints thus attributed to Poelenburgh are those etched by J. G. Bronkhorst after his designs. Jan van der Lys was an imitator of his style. Poelenburgh's pictures are in nearly all the Galleries of Europe; among them the following may be named:

Cassel.	Gallery.	The Virgin.
"	"	Christ borne to Heaven by Angels.
Dresden.	Gallery.	The Assumption of the Virgin.
"	"	Diana at the Chase.
Dulwich.	Gallery.	Nymph and Satyr dancing.

POERSON, CHARLES, who was born at Metz in 1609, and died in Paris in 1667, was a pupil of Simon Vouet, and became painter-in-ordinary to the king and Rector of the Royal Academy of Painting.

POERSON, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, a French painter, was born in Lorraine in 1652. He was a son of Charles Poerson, and a pupil of Noel Coypel, in whose style he painted history. Through the patronage of M. Mansard, he was introduced to the notice of Louis XIV., and was employed on some historical subjects for the Hospital of the Invalids; these, however, were soon afterwards destroyed, and replaced by some frescoes by Bon de Boullogne. He was subsequently appointed director of the French Academy at Rome, where he died in 1725.

POESEL, WOLFGANG, a painter, was born at Amberg in 1736. He painted for several of the churches in his native district, and died in 1797.

POGET, JEAN, a miniature painter, who flourished early in the 16th century. Some of his work is in the 'Livre d'heurs,' of Anne of Brittany, in the Musée des Souverains of the Louvre.

POGGETTI. See BARBATELLI.

POGGI, CESARE, historical painter, was born at Milan in 1803. He was a pupil of Sabatelli, but after 1824 studied in Venice and Rome. He died at Milan in 1859, a member of the Academy there. Besides a large number of pictures by him in the churches of Lombardy, we may name the following:

The Adulteress before Christ. (Marchese Busca.)

POILLY, FRANÇOIS DE, the elder, an eminent French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1622 or 1623. He was the son of a goldsmith and engraver, who instructed him in the rudiments of art. He afterwards went to Paris, where he became a pupil of Pierre Daret, under whom he remained three years, and afterwards visited Rome, where he took Cornelis Bloemaert as his model. During a residence in Rome of seven years, he greatly improved his design, and engraved several plates after the works of the great Italian masters. In 1656 he returned to Paris, where he became one of the most celebrated engravers of his time, and country. In 1664 he was appointed engraver in ordinary to the king. He died in Paris in 1693. His plates are executed entirely with the burin, which he handled with uncommon firmness and dexterity. Though he had the assistance of some able pupils, it is surprising that he could have finished so many plates. About 400 prints bear his name, and Nagler describes 107 as entirely by him. The following are among his best:

POILLY, FRANÇOIS DE, the younger, the younger son of Nicolas de Poilly, was born in Paris in 1671, and was instructed in engraving by his father. He afterwards travelled with his brother to Rome, where he engraved a plate representing 'St. Cecilia distributing her wealth to the Poor,' after Domenichino, a companion print to the Martyrdom of that Saint, by Jean Baptiste de Poilly.

POILLY, JEAN BAPTISTE DE, the son and pupil of Nicolas de Poilly, was born in Paris in 1669. Having made some progress in engraving under his father, he went to Rome, where he studied some years. On his return to Paris he executed several plates, by which he gained a considerable reputation, and was made a member of the Academy in 1714. He died in Paris in 1728. His style of engraving differs greatly from those of his father and uncle. He forwarded his plates with the point, and finished them with the burin, in a pleasing and picturesque style. We have several portraits and historical subjects by him, of which the following are the most deserving of notice :

PORTRAITS.

POILLY, NICOLAS DE, was born at Abbeville in 1626. He was the younger brother of François the elder, by whom he was instructed in the art of engraving. He executed several plates in the style of his brother. He died in Paris in 1696. He has left several plates from portraits and from historical subjects, executed with the burin, in a neat, clear manner. The following are perhaps the best:

POILLY, NICOLAS DE, the younger, was born in Paris in 1675. He was the third son of Nicolas the elder, and studied painting under Mignard and Jouvenet. Among his pictures are 'Calvary,' engraved by himself, and 'Jesus waited on by Angels,' painted for the Refectory of the Abbey of S. Martin des Champs. He died in 1747.

POILLY, NICOLAS JEAN BAPTISTE DE, the son of Jean Baptiste de Poilly, was born, according to Nagler, in Paris in 1712. He was intended by his father for an engraver, but he did not long follow that branch of art. He engraved a few portraits, after C. N. Cochin, some of which are dated 1753; one of his prints bears the date 1758.

POINDRE, JACOB DE, a portrait painter of Malines, was born at Malines in 1527, and was a scholar of his brother-in-law, Marc Willems. He painted a few historical pictures, but attached himself more particularly to portraiture. He went to Denmark, and painted imaginary portraits of some of the kings. He died in Denmark in 1570.

POINSART, J., a French engraver, flourished about the year 1630. He was principally employed by the booksellers, for whom he executed several plates of views of cities, castles, &c. Among other prints by him is the 'Entry of Charles II. into Rheims.'

POL, —, of Limburg, is the author of some miniatures executed in 1409 in a prayer-book of the Duke of Berri, in the Bibliothèque Ste. Geneviève, and in a 'Josephus' of the year 1410 in the public library of Paris. Of these miniatures Mr. J. A. Crowe says, "They remind us of later productions of the Van Eycks in the originality of conception, the peculiar embodiments of form, and the remarkable tendency to realism which they display."

POL, CHRISTIAAN VAN, a flower and arabesque painter, was born at Berkenrode, near Haarlem, in 1752. In 1782 he went to Paris, where he obtained a great reputation for his paintings in arabesque. He ornamented in this manner the chateaux of Bellevue, Chantilly, and St. Cloud. He also painted flower-pieces in oil, and occupied himself occasionally in painting groups of flowers on snuff-boxes, which are of considerable merit. He died in 1813.

POLACK, SOLOMON, a miniature painter, born at the Hague in 1757, who settled in England, and exhibited at the Academy almost every year from 1790 to 1835. He practised for a time in Ireland, about 1795. He designed and etched the plates for a Hebrew edition of the Bible. He died at Chelsea in 1839.

POLACK, MARTIN THEOPHILUS, a Pole by birth, who gained his reputation in the Tyrol, where he was painter to Duke Leopold, and after his death in 1632 to Cardinal van Madruz. His masterpiece is to be found in the church of the Servites at Innsbruck, and a few of his works are at Trent.

POLANCO, —. Two brothers of this name are mentioned among Spanish historical painters. Scarcely anything is recorded of them, except that they studied under Francisco Zurbaran, and flourished at Seville about 1646. It is said that their works were so like those of Zurbaran, that they were often mistaken for his. This is borne out by the pictures in the church of San Esteban, at Seville, where Zurbaran painted the 'St. Peter and St. Stephen,' but where the 'Martyrdom of the Patron Saint,' the 'Nativity,' and the 'St. Fernando,' are by the brothers Polanco. They also painted several large pictures for the sacristy of the convent of St. Paul, in the same city; and 'The Angels appearing to Abraham,' 'Tobit and the Angel,' 'Jacob wrestling with the Angel,' 'Joseph's Dream,' and 'St. Teresa conducted by Angels,' the last for the church of the Guardian Angel, belonging to the Barefooted Carmelites and the Franciscan Friars.

POLANZANI, FELICE, (or POLANZI), an engraver, was born at Andale, near Venice, about the year 1700, and is believed to have been living up to 1771. He chiefly resided at Rome, where he engraved a set of twenty-two plates, representing the 'Life of the Virgin,' from designs which are by some attributed to N. Poussin; but from their resemblance to the style of J. Stella, they are more probably after the works of that painter. He also engraved after Van Dyck and various other masters. The following prints are perhaps his best:

- The Bust of a Woman; after C. Cignani.
- The Bust of a blind Musician; after Marco Benefiali.
- The Virgin and Infant Christ; after G. Nogari.
- An old Man holding a Money-bag; after the same.
- An old Woman warming her hands; after the same.

POLAZZO, FRANCESCO, a Venetian painter, born in 1683. He was a pupil of Piazzetta, and painted portraits and historical subjects, though he was better known as a restorer of pictures. He died in 1753.

POLESTANUS, ANDREA, who was a native of Italy, and apparently a painter, has left a slight etching of a Bacchanalian subject, a composition of many figures, from his own design. It is signed with his name, and dated 1640.

POLETNICH, J. F., an engraver, resided in Paris about the year 1760, and was still living in 1780. He executed several plates after the works of Van Dyck, Boucher, La Grenée, and others.

POLLACK, LEOPOLD, a still-life and genre painter, born at Lodenitz in Bohemia about 1806 or 1809. He studied in Prague, Munich, and, in 1833, in Rome. He painted scenes of Italian life, in which he took Riedel for his model. Some of his pictures have been engraved by Mandel, Straucher, and others. He died in 1880. Works:

- The Shepherd Boy.
- Shepherdess with Lamb.
- Zuleika (from Byron).
- Maternal Love.

POLLARD, ROBERT, an English engraver, born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1755. He began life as a silversmith; then, after receiving some instruction from Richard Wilson, he painted landscapes and sea-pieces. He finally devoted himself to engraving, working in various manners, and frequently reproducing his own designs. His latter years were passed in poverty, and shortly before his death he handed over to the Royal Academy the records of the Incorporated Society of Artists, of which he was the last surviving member. He died in 1838. Amongst the plates after his own designs the best are:

- Aglaia.
- Euphrosyne.
- The Blind Beggar of Bethnal Green.
- At Fault (a hunting scene).
- Lieut. Moody escaping from the Americans.
- Childish Sports.

POLLASTRINI, ENRICO, was born at Leghorn in 1817. He was a pupil of Bezzuoli, but was also a diligent student of the old masters, as his paintings bear witness. He had, however, much originality of conception; he was a good draughtsman and a fair colourist. He was first professor and afterwards president of the Academy of Florence. He died in that city in 1876. Works:

- The Raising of the Widow of Nain's Son. (Church of the Soccorso, Leghorn.)

- The Death of Ferruccio.
- Death of Duke Alexis of Melici.
- Inundation of the Serchio. (Modern Gallery, Florence.)
- Pia dei Polomei.
- Death of St. Joseph.
- St. Lorenzo giving Alms.
- The Battle of Legnano.
- The Exiles of Siena.

POLLET, VICTOR FLORENCE, painter and engraver, was born in Paris, November 22, 1811. He was a pupil of Paul Delaroche and of Richomme. In 1838 he won the grand prize of Rome and went to Italy, where at first he painted more in water-colours than he engraved. Later on, however, he completed several excellent plates. He gained honours at the Salon both as painter and engraver, being decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1855. He died in 1883. Works:

WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS.

POLLINGER, FELIX, an animal painter, born at Munich in 1817. His pictures of birds had some merit. He died at Fünfhaus, near Vienna, in 1877.

POLMARES. See SANTIAGO PALOMARES.

POLO, BERNARDO, a painter of fruit and flower pieces, resided near Saragossa towards the end of the 17th century. He painted his subjects from nature, and his pictures were highly esteemed both at Saragossa and Madrid. According to Zani, he worked in 1680 and died about 1700.

POLO, DIEGO, 'the elder,' was born, according to Palomino, at Burgos in 1560. He studied at Madrid, under Patricio Caxes, and was a reputable painter of history. There are some of his works in the Escorial, and in the palace at Madrid, in which city he died in 1600. The pictures by which he gained his reputation are the portraits of the kings of the Goths; a painting of 'St. Jerome chastised by an Angel for taking too much pleasure in reading Cicero'; and a 'Penitent Magdalene.'

POLO, DIEGO, 'the younger,' the nephew of the elder Diego, was born at Burgos in 1620, and was a scholar of Antonio Lanchares. He acquired an admirable style of colouring by studying the works of Titian, in the royal collection; and painted several pictures for the churches at Madrid, of which the most esteemed are the 'Baptism of Christ,' in the church of the Carmelites; and the 'Annunciation' in Santa Maria. He also excelled in portraiture. He died in 1655.

POLONY, ZAKARIA, was an obscure engraver, who resided in Paris about the year 1615. Among other prints we have by him a slight etching, representing 'Queen Margaret lying in state, in the Faubourg St. Germain,' Paris.

POLYDOR. See GLAUBER, JOH.

POLYGNOTUS, the earliest of the greater masters of ancient Greek painting, was a native of the island of Thasos, and a younger contemporary of Panæus. He flourished from 480 to 430 B.C., and came to reside at Athens about 463. He was the son and pupil of Aglaophon the elder, and was the first painter who raised the art into an independent position, instead of one of subordination to architecture and sculpture. Endowed with a taste for poetry as well as painting, he had not only stored his mind with the beauties of the 'Iliad' and the 'Odyssey,' but had studied all the epic poems then extant, which furnished him with the mythological subjects with which he adorned the temples and porticoes of Athens, Delphi, and other cities of Greece. The Amphictyonic Council decreed by way of recompense that Polygnotus should be maintained at the public expense whenever he came; and the Athenians voted him their citizenship.

Pliny is lavish in his eulogies on the powers of this painter. According to that writer, he was the first artist who gave an air of ease and grace to his figures, dressed his females in rich and elegant vestments, and, above all, characterized his heads with an expression which was entirely unknown before him. There undoubtedly remained in his work much crudity and deficiency as compared with the freedom of nature; but his style was idealistic and grand, and Aristotle assigns to him a similar position in art to that occupied by Homer in poetry. He repeats the designation ἠθογράφος ('mind-painter'), which had already been applied to him, and says that he painted men better than they are. He gave proof of his extraordinary capacity in vanquishing difficulties in his celebrated picture of 'Cassandra.' He represented the daughter of Priam at the moment she had been brutally outraged by the Telamonian Ajax. The face of the unfortunate captive was partially covered with a veil, but the glowing blush of confusion was visible in her countenance, which displayed all the symptoms of insulted modesty. This performance is alluded to by Lucian in discussing the features of his perfect woman. "Polygnotus," he says, "shall open and spread her eyebrows, and give her that warm, glowing, decent blush which so inimitably beautifies his 'Cassandra.' He likewise shall give her an easy, tasteful, flowing dress, with all its tender and delicate folds, partly clinging to her body, and partly fluttering in the wind." The picture in question was the part of a larger one, or perhaps of a series, representing the 'Trial of Ajax by the Greeks'; it adorned the Pœcile (ποικίλη στοά, or 'painted portico') of the Agora at Athens.

The particular work which induced the Athenians to receive Polygnotus into citizenship has been conjectured to have been a portion of the decoration of the Temple of Theseus. In that of the Dioscuri (Castor and Pollux) he depicted 'The Story of the Daughters of Leucippus.' But the works which brought him the greatest renown were those representing scenes from the 'Iliad' and 'Odyssey,' which he painted in the Temple of Apollo at Delphi, which Pausanias so admired six hundred years after, and which have gone by the name of 'The Iliad and Odyssey of Polygnotus.'

In the Pœcile at Athens he painted also the 'Battle of Marathon.' In the foreground of the picture the Greeks and Persians were represented combating with equal valour; but in the middle distance, the barbarians were seen flying to the Phœnician ships, which were visible in the distance. In this painting Polygnotus allowed himself all the license of the Grecian poets. Minerva, the tutelary goddess of the Athenians, and Hercules, are made to descend from heaven; the town of Marathon is personified by a genius, and Theseus is drawn from the shades of death to witness the battle. This master was fond of compositions which admitted of a great concourse of figures. It was probably the taste of the period at which he lived, a taste which did not long survive.

POLZONE, SCIPIO, a painter born at Gaeta in 1556. He studied at Naples, and then went to Rome, where he gained some repute as a portrait painter. Among his portraits were those of Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., and many of the Cardinals. He died at Rome in 1594.

POMARANCE, CRISTOFORO DALLE. See RONCALLI.

POMARANCE, NICCOLÒ and ANTONIO, (or IL POMARANCIO). See CIRCOIGNANO.

POMAREDE, SILVIO, was a native of Italy, who flourished from 1736 to 1768, and engraved some plates, which he marked with his initials. Among them were four of the 'Triumphs' of Petrarch, viz. those of 'Time,' 'Fame,' 'Death,' and 'Religion,' after Bonifazio Veneziano; and some of the portraits of painters for the Florence Gallery. He engraved also some plates for the 'Museo Capitolino,' and many of those for Ficoroni's 'Maschere sceniche e Figure comiche d'antichi Romani,' published at Rome in 1736.

POMEDELLO, GIOVANNI MARIA, who was a goldsmith and medallist, besides painter and engraver, belonged to the school of Vittore Pisano, and lived at Verona from 1519 to 1534. He painted a 'Virgin before the Cross,' in the Church of San Tommaso in that city (1524), and there is a pen-and-ink sketch by him of 'The Ruins of the Coliseum,' in the Vienna Belvedere. Among his engravings are 'Hercules strangling the Lion,' and 'The Abduction of Deianeira.'

POMMAYRAC, PIERRE PAUL DE, a miniature portrait painter, was born in 1818 at Porto Rico, of French parents. He was a pupil of Gros, and also studied miniature painting under Mme. Lizinska de Mirbel. He died in 1880. Among his portrait miniatures the following may be named:

- Napoleon III.
- The Empress Eugénie.
- The Prince Imperial.
- General Trochu.
- The Princesse Mathilde.
- Queen Isabella of Spain.
- Berlioz.
- Isabey.
- Cardinal Guibert (oil).
- Mdlle. Chancy (oil).

POMMERENCKE, HEINRICH, was a successful portrait painter of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. He was born and brought up in poverty, but exercised his talent for art so ably that he was enabled to pursue his studies at Berlin. He went to Paris also, and had the good fortune to paint the portrait of Helena, Duchess of Orleans, by which he gained the protection of the reigning Royal Family. After the Revolution of 1848 he returned to Schwerin, where he painted many excellent pictures for the Grand Duke. He died in 1873.

POMPADOUR, JEANNE ANTOINETTE POISSON, Marchioness of, was born in Paris in 1721, and in 1741 married M. Le Normand d'Étiolles. In 1745 she became the mistress of Louis XV., who created her Marchioness of Pompadour, and over whom her influence was paramount until her death, which took place at Versailles in 1764. She was one of the most accomplished amateur etchers of the 18th century. Having commissioned Jacques Guay to engrave from the designs of Vien and Boucher a series of gems with symbolical and allegorical subjects commemorative of the victories of Louis XV., she etched them for distribution among her friends. The original series consists of fifty-two plates, entitled 'Suite d'Estampes gravées par Madame la Marquise de Pompadour, d'après les pierres gravées de Guay,' and includes the portrait of Louis XV., and that of Madame de Pompadour as 'Minerve protectrice de la gravure en pierres précieuses.' To the collection was afterwards added 'Les petits Buveurs de lait,' 'Le petit Faiseur de boules de savon,' and 'La petite Mendicante,' after the designs of Boucher, three plates of ivories, and a frontispiece to an edition of Corneille's tragedy of 'Rodogune,' which was printed in 1759 in her apartments in the palace of Versailles. This last was designed by Boucher, and the plate was retouched by C. N. Cochin. The whole of the plates afterwards passed into the hands of Basan, and were published in 1782, after having been touched probably by Cochin. They are fully described in Leturcq's 'Notice sur Jacques Guay,' Paris, 1873.

PONCE-CAMUS, MARIE NICOLAS, was born in Paris in 1778. He was instructed by David, and painted historical subjects, among which were 'Napoleon at Ostend' in 1810; 'Napoleon and Prince Charles,' 1812, now at Versailles; 'Alexander and Apelles,' and others. He died in 1839.

PONCE, NICOLAS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1746, and died there in 1831. He was a pupil of M. Pierre, the painter, and of Fessard and Delamay, the engravers. His works are rather numerous, as he was employed on several of those grand publications which do honour to the French nation: such as 'Le Musée Laurent,' 'Le Cabinet de Choiseul,' 'La Galerie du Palais Royal,' 'Les Campagnes d'Italie,' the folio edition of 'Racine,' by Didot; 'Les Illustres Français,' with fifty-six plates; 'Les Bains de Titus et de Livie,' in seventy-five plates; and 'La Guerre d'Amérique,' conjointly with Godefroy. He was the editor of the Bible with 300 engravings after Marillier; and dedicated to Louis XVIII. the beautiful edition in quarto of the 'Charter.' He also wrote and translated several works relative to the arts. Besides the plates for the above-mentioned works the following may be specially mentioned:

L' Enlèvement nocturne; after Baudouin. (His chef-d'œuvre.)

La Toilette; after the same.

Répertoire des Spectacles de la Cour; after Moreau.

Vignettes (44) to D'Ussieux's translation of Ariosto's 'Orlando Furioso,' 1775-83; after Cochin.

Vignettes to 'Adonis,' a poem by Fréron and Colbert d'Estouteville, 1775; after Eisen.

Vignettes to Billardon de Tauvigny's 'Parnasse des Dames,' 1773; after Marillier.

Vignettes (4) to Rousseau's 'Pygmalion,' 1775; after the same.

PONCE, ROQUE, a Spanish landscape painter, was a scholar of Juan de la Corte, at Madrid. He flourished about the year 1690, and painted landscapes, which he embellished with suitable incidents. In some of his pictures the figures are by Antonio Castrejon, but those are most esteemed in which the latter had no hand.

PONCHINO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, called IL BOZZATO DI CASTELFRANCO, was born at Castelfranco

in 1500. He has also been called Bazzacco and Brazzacco. He was also a disciple of Titian, and, according to Lanzi, was a reputable painter of history. His picture of 'Limbo,' in the church of San Liberale, at Castelfranco, is an excellent work of art. He also painted several altar-pieces for the churches of Venice and Vicenza. He died in 1570. According to Zani, he was a prelate with the title of Monsignore.

POND, ARTHUR, an English painter and engraver, was born about 1705. He was educated in London, and afterwards travelled to Rome in company with the sculptor Roubilliac. He painted portraits in oil and drew them in crayons, and also etched and engraved in the chalk and crayon manner. By a combination of etching and aquatint he produced plates in imitation of Salvator Rosa, the Poussins, and others, and after these brought out his 'Imitations of the Italian Masters' (1734-5), and, in conjunction with George Knapton, the collection of 'Heads of Illustrious Persons,' engraved by Houbraken and Vertue. They also engraved a set of ninety plates from the drawings of the great masters, in imitation of the originals, and a set of twenty-five caricatures, after Cavaliere Ghezzi, and other masters. He painted numerous portraits, including those of the Duke of Cumberland, Alexander Pope, and Peg Woffington (now in the National Portrait Gallery); and he engraved after Raphael, Parmigiano, and others. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society and the Society of Antiquaries in 1752, and died in 1758. He etched several portraits, in a style resembling that of Rembrandt, among them the following:

His own Por ait.

Lord Bolingbroke.

Alexander Pope.

Dr. Mead.

Thomas Sadler, antiquary.

PONSE, JORIS, a painter of birds, fruit, and flowers, was born at Dordrecht in 1723. He was a scholar of A. Schouman. He passed through many vicissitudes, being at one time reduced to gain a livelihood by house-painting. In middle life he was established at Amsterdam, where he had some pupils. His pictures are very scarce. He died at Dordrecht in 1783.

PONTE, DA. The genealogy of the north Italian family of DA PONTE, commonly called the BASSANI, is as follows:

PONTE, FRANCESCO DA, the elder, was born at Vicenza about 1475. After receiving his technical education at Venice he established himself at Bassano, a small town on the Brenta. If not an actual pupil of Bellini he was at all events a follower of his style. Among his best works we may name a 'St. Bartholomew,' in the cathedral of Bassano, an altar-piece, in the church of San Giovanni, and a 'Descent of the Holy Ghost,' in the village church of Oliero. Francesco died at Bassano in 1530.

PONTE, FRANCESCO DA, the younger, the son of Jacopo da Ponte, was born 26th January, 1549, at Bassano, and was educated in his father's studio. He afterwards migrated to Venice, where he was employed to paint a series of historical pictures in the Doge's Palace. He also worked much for the Venetian churches, and his pictures, though less vigorous and rich in colour than those of his father, are among the treasures of the Venetian School. He was subject to hypochondriacal attacks, in one of which he committed suicide by throwing himself from a window. This was on the 4th July, 1492. Many of the pictures by Francesco which occur in European galleries are assigned to his father, Jacopo. Among those ascribed to himself we may name the following in the Vienna Gallery :

- St. Francis.
- St. Clara.
- Boy with a Flute (signed FRANC BASS, FEC).

PONTE, GIOVANNI BATTISTA DA, the second son of Jacopo da Ponte, was born at Bassano in 1553. He was the least distinguished of the family, and was chiefly known as a copyist of his father's works. Many of his productions now figure, no doubt, under Jacopo's name. He died in 1613.

PONTE, GIROLAMO DA, the youngest of Jacopo's sons, was born at Bassano in 1560. He also copied his father's pictures, and like his brother Giambattista, must take his share in the blame or credit which attaches to their wide diffusion. He also painted original works of his own, however, and one of these, an 'Apparition of the Virgin to St. Barbara,' is in existence at Bassano. Girolamo died in 1622.

PONTE, JACOPO DA, 'IL BASSANO' par excellence, was born in 1510, in the city from which he takes his sobriquet. His training in art took place first under his father Francesco, at Bassano, afterwards at Venice in the studio of Bonifazio Veneziano. His mature style, however, was mainly formed on the example of Titian. His earlier subjects were of an ambitious class, such as 'Samson slaying the Philistines,' the remains of which are still to be seen on the outside of the Casa Michieli at Venice. But this energy was not of long duration, and he turned his attention mainly to portraits, and to those Biblical scenes which lend themselves to a genre treatment. Among his sitters were Sebastiano Venerio, Doge of Venice, Tasso, Ariosto, and other distinguished men. Jacopo had already acquired a position at Venice when the death of his father compelled him to return to Bassano, where he chiefly resided for the rest of his life. The family home was picturesquely placed on the riverbank, and Jacopo was quickly led to devoting most of his time to subjects which allowed him to treat the scenes before his eyes, and the living things by which they were peopled. The 'Entry of the animals into the ark,' the 'History of Jacob,' the 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' the 'Expulsion of the Dealers from the Temple,' were painted by him again and again. Jacopo's knowledge of the nude and power of design were small, but his brush was extraordinarily facile. With the help of his sons, he produced an inexhaustible stream of pictures, which, it is said, were put up to auction at the neighbouring fairs when no buyer had been secured beforehand. At one time he was invited to the court of the Emperor Rodolph II., but he refused to leave his beloved Bassano, where he died in 1592. One of his best pictures is the 'Good Samaritan,' in the National Gallery. We may also name :

PONTE, LEANDRO DA, the third son of Jacopo, was born at Bassano in 1558. He was a pupil of his father. His fame was won chiefly by his portraits. He put the finishing touches to his brother Francesco's pictures in the Ducal Palace at Venice, and has left a vast number of canvasses, many of which are ascribed to his father. Leandro was created a Knight of the Order of St. Mark, by the Doge Grimani. In the latter part of his life he lived in great state at Venice, where he died in 1623. Among his acknowledged works we may name :

- Dresden. Gallery. Christ healing the Blind.

PONTE, GIOVANNI DA SANTO STEFANO DA, a painter, was born at Florence in 1306. He was a pupil of Buffalmacco, and painted portraits and historical subjects. He worked at Florence and Assisi. He died in 1365.

PONTE, OCTAVIO DEL, a marine and dead game painter of Utrecht. He was governor of the Hospital of St. Job at Utrecht from 1639 to 1645. In 1638 he was master of the guild of St. Luke. He died in 1645.

PONTE, PEDRO DE. See APONTE.

PONTEAU, MICHEL, called IL PONTIANO, was born at Liege about 1588. He was first instructed by Bertin Hoyoux, but at an early age he went to Italy, where he resided till his death in 1650. He painted portraits and historical subjects. He painted a series of portraits of the Roman Emperors on the windows of his house at Liège.

PONTONS, PABLO, a Spanish painter, was born at Valencia in 1606. He was a scholar of Pedro Orrente, and followed the style of his instructor, who had been a scholar of Bassano. His colouring bears the character of the Venetian school. There are several of his works in the churches and convents of his native city, of which the most important is a series of subjects from the life of San Pedro Nolasco, in the church and cloisters of the convent of La Merced. He also painted some altar-pieces for the monastery of La Cartuja del Puche; and in the church of Santa Maria de Morella, two pictures, representing the Nativity, and the Adoration of the Magi. He was also a reputable painter of portraits. He died in 1670.

PONTORMO, JACOPO DA. See CARRUCCI.

PONZ, ANTONIO, a Spanish painter, born at Bexix in 1725. He was a pupil of Richart at Valencia, and then went in 1746 to Madrid, where he studied for five years. He then went to Rome for a short time, but soon returned to his own country, where he was soon engaged in painting at the Escorial. In 1771 he made a journey through Spain. In 1776 he was appointed secretary of the Academy of San Fernando. He was a member of nearly every academy in the Peninsula. He made some excellent copies after Raphael, Guido, and Paolo Veronese. He also wrote 'Comentarios de la Pintura,' and several other works. He died in 1792.

PONZ, MOSEN JAYME, was born at Valls, near Tarragona, and studied in the school of the Juncosas at Barcelona. In 1722 he painted a number of pictures for the Carthusians of Scala Dei. In 1723 he painted some frescoes on the dome of the Hermitage of Nuestra Señora de Misericordia, without the walls of Reus. The parish church of Valls had some frescoes by Ponz, and that of Altafulla one of 'St. Michael,' after Raphael.

PONZONE, MATTEO, was born in Dalmatia, and lived between 1630 and 1700. He was a scholar of Santo Peranda, and, after acting for a time as his master's assistant, became a painter of history on his own account. Several of his works are in the churches and public buildings of Venice, particularly in Santa Maria Maggiore, and in the church of the Padri Crociferi. A 'Holy Family' by him, in the Houghton Gallery, was engraved by Valentine Green.

POOL, JURIAEN, was born at Amsterdam in 1666. He distinguished himself as a portrait painter, and passed the early part of his life at the court of the Elector Palatine, by whom his works were much esteemed. After the death of his patron he returned to Holland, where he abandoned painting, and applied himself to mercantile pursuits. He was the husband of Rachel Ruysch, the celebrated painter of flowers and fruit. He died in 1745. His works are rare. There is a portrait group of C. Bockelman, president of the Surgeons' guild of Amsterdam, and his colleague, J. Six, in the Rijks Museum of that city.

POOL, MATTY, a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1670. He was instructed in the art in Paris, and on his return to Holland engraved several plates after various masters, in a style resembling that of Bernard Picart. The date of his death is not recorded, but he engraved in 1727, as appears by a work published in that year. Among others the following prints are by him:

Portrait of Barend Graat, painter.

The Infancy of Jupiter; after B. Graat.

Cupid taken in a Net by Time; after Guercino.

POOLE, PAUL FALCONER, an English historical painter, born at Bristol in 1810. He was almost entirely self-taught in art, but came to London early, and first appeared at the Royal Academy in 1830 with a picture of 'The Well, Naples.' He attracted notice in 1843 by his picture of 'Solomon Eagle,' and in 1846 was elected an Associate of the Academy, of which he did not, however, become a full member till 1861. At the Westminster Hall competition of 1847 he won a prize of £300, and he was awarded a medal at the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1855. His success was chiefly due to the poetry of his conceptions, but he was a fine colourist, and in his best works contrived, with much skill, to conceal the weakness of his drawing. He led a very retired life, and died at Hampstead in 1879. Amongst his chief works are:

The Farewell. 1837.

The Emigrant's Departure. 1838.

The Surrender of Syon House. 1846.

Job receiving the news of his disasters. 1847.

The Goths in Italy. 1851.

POPE, ALEXANDER, younger brother of Somerville Stevens Pope, was well known for his performances in the characters of Othello, Henry VIII., &c. He was born at Cork, and was a student of the Dublin Art School under West. In 1783 he came to London, and made his first appearance in Covent Garden Theatre. He exhibited at the Academy from 1790 to 1821. He died in London in 1835. He painted a portrait of Michael Bryan, the first compiler of this Dictionary, which was engraved as a frontispiece for the original quarto edition.

POPE, ALEXANDER, the English poet, born in London in 1688, died at Twickenham in 1744, deserves mention as an amateur painter. He studied under Jervas for eighteen months, and frequently worked very assiduously at art, making many copies of portraits. Lord Mansfield has a specimen of his work as a copyist.

POPE, CLARA MARIA, an English painter of portraits, miniatures, and flowers, born about the middle of the 18th century. She was the daughter of Jared Leigh, an amateur artist, and married first Francis Wheatley, and subsequently Alexander Pope, the miniature painter. Her works frequently appeared at the Academy from 1796, and her flower pictures were in good repute. She painted the portrait of Mme. Catalani. She died in 1838.

POPE, SOMERVILLE STEVENS, an amateur miniature painter, was born in Ireland in the first half of the 18th century. His chief instructors were his father and Thomas Roberts. He is chiefly known as a copyist of Vernet. He became High Sheriff of Dublin, and afterwards worked at art as an amateur.

POPELS, JEAN, was born at Tournay about the year 1630. He engraved some plates from the copies in the gallery of the Archduke Leopold at Brussels, for the collection of prints called 'The Cabinet of Teniers'; among them the following:

Hagar and Ishmael; after Titian.

St. George and St. Stephen; after Giovanni Bellini.

St. John the Baptist and St. Roch; after Palma Vecchio.

The Virgin and Infact Christ, with St. John and St. Catharine; after Palma Giovine.

A Dead Christ, supported by Joseph of Arimathea; after Schiavone.

The Triumph of Bacchus; after Rubens.

At Göttingen there is a picture by this artist of 'The Deliverance of Andromeda.'

POPMA, ALARDO DE, was a Spanish engraver, who worked at Madrid in the early years of the 17th century. He executed a fine title-page for the 'Historia de las Ordenes Militares de Santiago, Calatrava y Alcantara' (Madrid, 1629); also one for Navarrete's 'Conservacion de las Monarquias y Discursos politicos' (Madrid, 1626).

POPOLI, GIACINTO DE', an Italian painter, born at Orta. He was a pupil of Massimo Stanzioni, and painted mostly in churches. He died in 1682.

POPP, HEINRICH, a German painter, born at Nuremberg in 1637. He was a pupil of Reisler, and painted portraits and historical subjects. He died in 1682.

PORCELLI, ANTONIO, an Italian painter of the present century, born in 1800. He painted both landscape and figures. Among his best pictures may be named the 'Fontana dell' Acqua Autosa,' the 'Pine Forests of Ravenna,' and the 'Cobbler's Monday.' The last is in the Collection of the Czar. Porcelli died in 1870.

PORCELLIS (or PORCELLES). See PARCELLES.

PORCELLO, GIOVANNI, a little-known painter of Messina. He studied under Solimena.

PORCIA, FRANCESCO DI, a painter of Friuli, who flourished about 1606. His surname is believed to have been APOLLODORO. He worked chiefly at portraits.

PORDENONE. See LICINIO.

PORETTANO, PIER-MARIA, an obscure Bolognese, who lived and painted about 1600. He was a pupil of Lod. Carracci.

PORIDEO, GREGORIO, a forgotten pupil of Titian, whose name was signed, says Lanzi, on a little oblong picture formerly in the Casa Pisani, at Venice.

PORLETTI, CARLO. See PORTELLI.

PORPORA, PAOLO, a Neapolitan painter, was a pupil of Falcone, and a member of the Academy of St. Luke in the year 1656. He excelled chiefly in battle scenes, animals, and in such still-life as shells, dead fish, flowers and fruit. He died about 1680.

PORPORATI, CARLO ANTONIO, an engraver and painter, was born at Volvera, near Turin, in 1741.

He went to Paris when he was young, and became a pupil of Chevillet and of Beauvarlet. In 1773 he was made a member of the Academy at Paris, and engraved for his reception plate 'Susannah at the Bath,' after Santerre. In the same year he was admitted to membership of the Turin Academy, and in 1797 appointed conservator of the gallery there. In 1793, commissioned by the king, he founded at Naples a school of engraving, and spent in that city the four years previous to his last-mentioned appointment. He died at Turin in 1816. He painted some good portraits, but engraving was his forte. The following prints are by him, some of which are executed in a finished and beautiful style:

Susannah at the Bath; after Santerre. (His chef-d'œuvre.)

PORRI, DANIELO, (or DANIELE,) called also DE POR, DE PORR, DE PORRO, and DA PARMA, a portrait and historical painter, was born at Parma in the early years of the 16th century. His family was Milanese by origin. He worked under both Correggio and Parmigiano, and afterwards in collaboration with Taddeo Zucchero in the church of Santa Maria d'Alvito. Of their combined work nothing remains but a single 'Holy Conversation,' in which the Madonna is seated with the child between St. Francis and St. Nicholas of Bari. Porri died at home in 1566.

PORRO, GIROLAMO, an Italian engraver on wood and on copper, was born at Padua about the year 1520, but worked during the greater part of his life at Venice. He engraved in a tasteful and delicate style the vignettes, amounting to nearly one hundred, for a book entitled 'Imprese illustri di diversi,' published by Camillo Camilli in 1535. He also executed the plates for the 'Orlando Furioso' of Ariosto, published at Venice in 1548; for the 'Funerali antichi di diversi Popoli et Nationi,' by Tommaso Porcacchi, published in 1574; and the portraits for the 'Sommario delle Vite de' Duchi di Milano,' by Scipione Barbuo, 1574. The maps in Ruscelli's translation of the 'Geographia' of Ptolemy, 1574, and the views in Porcacchi's 'Isole più famose del Mondo,' 1575, are likewise by him. After this there is no account of Porro; but Zani says he was working in 1604.

PORRO, MASO, a native of Cortona, and painter on glass, who was active shortly before 1568.

PORTA, ANDREA, a Milanese painter, born in 1566. Orlandi mentions him as still alive in 1718.

PORTA, B. DELLA. See BARTOLOMMEO DI PAGHOLO.

PORTA, FERDINANDO, a painter of Milan, born 1689, died about 1767. He was an industrious imitator of Correggio.

PORTA, GIUSEPPE, called SALVIATI, was born at Castel Nuovo, in the Grafagnana, in 1520 or 1518. He was sent to Rome when he was young, and placed in the school of Francesco Salviati (Rossi), whose character of design he followed, and acquired the name of 'the younger Salviati,' by which he is more generally known than his own. When his instructor was invited to Venice he was accompanied by his pupil, whose works were sufficiently admired in that capital to induce him to establish himself there. He was employed by the senate, in conjunction with some of the most distinguished artists of his time, in ornamenting the palace and library of St. Mark, where he painted 'The Sibyls, the Prophets, and the Cardinal Virtues'; and for the chapel, the 'Dead Christ with the Marys.' From 1541 to 1552 he worked at Padua, painting in particular a series of 'Scenes from the Life of John the Baptist,' in the Selvatico Palace. His reputation reached Rome, whither in 1563, he was invited by Pius IV. Here he was employed in the Sala Regia, and painted the 'Emperor Frederick I. doing homage to Alexander III.' Having finished these and other works for that pontiff, for which he was munificently rewarded, he returned in 1565 to Venice, where he painted several pictures for the churches and public edifices, particularly a 'Purification,' for the Church of the Padri Servi; and the 'Annunciation,' in the chapel of the Incurabili. In the Church Degli Angeli, at Murano, is one of his best works, a 'Descent from the Cross, with the Virgin, Mary Magdalene, and St. John.' The date of his death is uncertain, but it probably occurred between 1570 and 1585.

Papillon mentions Porta as an excellent engraver on wood. That writer asserts that he had seen, in the possession of M. Villayer, at Paris, about a dozen woodcuts by him, representing 'Prophets and Sibyls,' and a print of 'Cupid and Psyche.' He himself possessed a print of the 'Crucifixion, with the Virgin, Mary Magdalene, and St. John,' signed Giuseppe Salviati; and another representing the 'Academy of Arts and Sciences,' signed Joseph Porta Grafagninus. Others are the title-page to the 'Sorti' of Marcolini (1540) and a 'Lucretia.' Zani, however, is of opinion, in spite of the above inscription, that though designed by Porta, they are executed by an anonymous hand.

PORTA, ORAZIO, a native of Monte S. Savino, who was painting in 1568.

PORTAIL, JACQUES ANDRÉ, a French fruit and flower painter. In 1742 he was appointed custodian of the king's pictures, and in 1746 he was admitted to the Academy. He died in 1759.

PORTANA. See LOPEZ Y PORTANA.

PORTE, H. H. R. DE LA. See ROLLAND DE LA PORTE.

PORTELLI, CARLO, (or PORTEGLI), an Italian painter, and native of Loro, in the Valdarno. He was a pupil of Ridolfo del Ghirlandajo. Vassari speaks of him as an artist of ability. He painted several pictures for the churches of Florence, especially for Santa Maria Maggiore. On October 15th, 1574, one Carlo di Galeotto Partelli da Loro was buried in San Pancrazio.

PORTENGEN, PIERRE, a painter of Utrecht, and scholar of Paul Moreelse, flourished about 1638.

He painted landscapes in the manner of Jan Both, but in handling is very inferior to that master.

PORTER, SIR ROBERT KIR, was born at Durham in 1777, and passed his boyhood in Edinburgh, whither his mother had moved on the death of her husband, an officer in the army. Here he made the acquaintance of the famous Flora Macdonald. In consequence of his admiration for a battle-piece in that lady's possession, representing some action in the affair of '45, which she explained to him in animated language, he determined on becoming himself a painter of battles. This occurred when he was only nine or ten years old. From this time he was continually sketching similar subjects, which induced his mother in 1790 to take him to West, the President of the Royal Academy, who, struck with the spirit of his sketches, immediately procured him admission as a student. His progress was rapid, and in 1793 he was commissioned to paint an altar-piece for Shoreditch Church. In the following year he painted a picture of 'Christ allaying the Storm,' which he presented to the Roman Catholic chapel at Portsea; and in 1798 'St. John preaching,' for St. John's College at Cambridge. These pictures showed wonderful precocity; but in 1800 he astonished the public by the exhibition of 'The Storming of Seringapatam,' a picture 120 feet in length, representing with much animation the details of an exploit never surpassed in its way. It is said that he was only ten weeks employed on the work. Unfortunately this picture was destroyed by fire, but the sketches exist, and the engravings by Vendramini preserve some evidence of its merits. He painted several other fights, among which are the 'Battle of Agincourt,' for the city of London; the 'Battle of Alexandria,' and the 'Death of Sir Ralph Abercrombie.' In 1804 he went to Russia, and was appointed historical painter to the emperor. He then travelled in Finland and Sweden, where the king knighted him. In 1808 he accompanied Sir John Moore to the Peninsula, and attended that hero to his end at the Battle of Corunna. After this he paid a second visit to Russia, where he married the Princess Mary, the daughter of Prince Theodore de Schertkoff. After his return to England he published, in 1813, an 'Account of the Russian Campaign,' and was re-knighted, by the Prince Regent, in the same year. In the course of 1817-20 he travelled in the East, where he made numerous sketches, which are now in the British Museum. He afterwards published an account of his travels in Georgia, Persia, America, Ancient Babylon, and other places, with numerous engravings of portraits, costumes, and antiquities. In this work are excellent designs, in outline, from the fine characteristic sculptures of Nakshi Roustan, Nakshi Rajab, Shiraz, and Persepolis. The book is extremely valuable, as in many cases it corrects the statements of preceding travellers. Being in 1826 appointed British consul at Venezuela, he resided at Caracas until 1841, and continued to employ his pencil. He painted while there three pictures of sacred subjects: 'Christ instituting the Eucharist,' 'Christ blessing a little Child,' and an 'Ecce Homo.' He also painted the portrait of Bolivar. In 1841 he paid his last visit to St. Petersburg, where the cold proved too intense for his constitution, after being inured to the warmth of Venezuela. He was preparing for his return to England when he was struck by a fit of apoplexy, and expired on the 2nd of May, 1842.

PORTIO, ANIELLO, was an engraver, who worked at Naples from 1690 to 1700. His name is affixed to a few portraits and other plates for books.

PORTO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA DEL. See DEL PORTO.

PORTUCAL, —, according to Strutt, was the engraver of a small upright plate, representing a female figure weeping, and pouring water from a cup.

PORZEL, ELIAS, (or PORCELUS,) a German engraver on wood, was born at Isny, in Swabia, in 1662. He was a pupil of Jakob Enderlein, and about 1682 was working in Switzerland, after which he travelled in Italy, and finally settled at Nuremberg, where he died in 1722. He executed several plates for Enderlein's 'Picture Bible,' after designs by Sandrart.

POSADAS, MIGUEL, a Spanish painter, was born in Aragon in 1711. He was a Dominican monk living at Valencia, and painted historical pictures. He died in 1753.

POSCH, LAURENZ, a Swedish portrait painter, was born in 1733, and died in 1786. At Stockholm there is a portrait by him of Gustavus IV. as a child, in uniform.

POSE, EDUARD WILHELM, was born at Düsseldorf in 1812. He entered the Academy at Düsseldorf, where after studying for some time he went with And. Achenbach to Munich, and in 1836 to Frankfurt, whence he visited Italy. He painted landscapes and figure pictures of a serious cast. His care for details was great. He died in 1878. Among his works we may name:

Castle Eltz. (Stadel M. Frankfurt.)
 Castle in Tyrol. (King of the Belgians.)
 The Königssee. (Grand Duke of Hesse.)
 The Falls at Tivoli. (H. Hauck, Frankfurt.)
 The Theatre at Taormina. (Prague Gallery.)
 The Temples of Passtum. (Heydt collection, Elberfeld.)
 The Homburg Forest.

POSSENTI, BENEDETTO, was, according to Malvasia, a native of Bologna, and was brought up in the school of the Carracci. He excelled in painting landscapes, seaports, embarkations, fairs, festivals, and battle-pieces.

POSSENTI, GIOVANNI PIETRO, the son and scholar of Benedetto Possenti, was born at Bologna in 1618. He painted battles and attacks of cavalry, in which he not only surpassed his father, but was regarded as one of the ablest painters of his time in that genre. His talents were not confined to such subjects, and he acquired some reputation by altar-pieces for the churches at Bologna and Padua. One of his best productions is a picture in the church of San Lorenzo, in the latter city, representing the martyrdom of that saint. Possenti died in 1659.

POST, FRANS, (or POOST,) was born at Haarlem about the year 1612. He was the son of JAN POST, a glass-stainer of some celebrity, who died while he was still young. It is not known how Frans was taught, but before he was twenty years of age he discovered sufficient ability to recommend him to the protection of Count Maurice of Nassau-Siegen, who took him into his service, and he accompanied that prince in the voyage he undertook to the West Indies and South America. During a residence of two years, he made numerous drawings of the most interesting views in these countries, from which, on his return to Holland, he painted several large pictures for the palace of Ryksdorp, near Wassenaer. He died at Haarlem, and was buried there on the 16th February, 1680. Among his works we may name:

Portrait of Count Maurice of Nassau-Siegen. (Amsterdam Museum.)
 View in Brazil. (The same.)
 View of a Native Village in Brazil. (Hampton Court.)

There are also several etchings by him, among which are the following:

A set of Views in Brazil; from designs made by himself.
 A View of the Gulf of All Saints; Fr. Poost fec. 1645.
 A View of Cape St. Augustine; the same inscription.
 A View of the Isle of Thamaraca; the same.

POST, KARL BORROMÄUS, an engraver, was born at Prague in 1834. He studied at the Academy at Prague in 1852 under Haushofer, and at Vienna in 1853 under Stöber. He engraved after Marko, Achenbach, and Pausinger landscapes and animal pieces. He was custodian of the Emperor's private library at Vienna, where he died in 1877.

POSTL, KARL, a painter and etcher, who was a teacher of landscape painting at the Prague Academy, and painted panoramas, &c., was born in 1768, and died after 1815.

POT, HENDRIK GERRITSZ, was born at Haarlem in 1600. It is not known under whom he studied, but it is supposed that he received some instruction from Frans Hals. He died in 1656. Houbraken praises a picture by this master, representing 'Judith with the Head of Holofernes;' and mentions in very favourable terms a large picture of a 'Triumphal Car of one of the Princes of Orange,' which is now in the gallery at Haarlem as the 'Apotheosis of William the Silent.' The frame is the work of a well-known sculptor, Dom. Janss. Pot was also a distinguished portrait painter, of which he has given proof in a large picture in the Hall of the Archers, at Haarlem, in which he has represented the principal officers of that society. At Hampton Court there is a curious picture by him called 'A Startling Introduction.' It seems to represent Charles I. making his court to a lady into whose room he has made his way by the chimney. Various explanations have been offered of it, but none quite satisfactory. In the Louvre there is a portrait of Charles I. by Pot. It is signed and dated HP. FESIT., 1632, but was nevertheless ascribed formerly to a mythical N. Conning.

POTENZANO, FRANCESCO, painter, poet, and improvisatore, called 'The Great,' was a native of Palermo. He travelled to Rome, Naples, Malta, and through a large part of Spain. He died in 1599.

POTERLET, a French painter, born at Epernay in 1802. He was a pupil of Hersent and a student of the Flemish School. He painted historical and still-life subjects, but devoted most of his time to making sketches from the most remarkable pictures in European collections. He died in Paris in 1835. The Louvre possesses a 'Dispute of Trissotin and Vadius,' from the 'Femmes Savantes,' by him.

POTHEUCK, JAN, was a member of a Protestant family, which left Verviers and settled at Leyden at the beginning of the 17th century. Born in 1626, he was admitted in 1652 into the Guild of St. Luke at Leyden, of which he became the head. He died in 1669. His portraits of the 'Four Regents of the Pesthuis,' in the Leyden Museum, is perhaps his best work. (See Obreen's 'Archief voor Nederlandsche Kunstgeschiedenis.')

POTHOVEN, HENDRIK, was born at Amsterdam in 1725, and was a scholar of Philip van Dyk.

He painted portraits and cabinet pictures in the manner of his master. He imitated satin, velvet, lace, and carpets very successfully, and the other accessories which he introduced in his small family pictures. It is said that as late as 1791 he painted the portrait of Professor David Ruhnkenius. He also engraved, in mezzotint, an 'Old Man reading a Book by the light of a Candle;' and, if Balkema is correct, many other plates. He died about 1795.

POTLEPEL. See JORDAENS, JAN.

POTMA, JACOB, was born at Workum, in Friesland, about the year 1610, and was a scholar of Wybrandt de Gheest. He painted history and portraits, but was most successful in the latter. The greater part of his life was passed at the different courts in Germany, where he was much employed as a portrait painter. He died at Vienna in 1684.

POTRELLE, JEAN LOUIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1788, and was a scholar of David, Tardieu, and Desnoyers. He gave early proof of his talents, and in 1806 obtained the second grand prize for engraving. He exhibited for the last time at the Salon of 1824, and died probably about that date. He has produced several plates of subjects by the Italian masters, and also of portraits of distinguished persons. Among them are:

Portrait of Giulio Romano; after himself.

Portrait of Michelangelo.

Louis XVIII.; after Gérard.

Cupids; after the same.

Portraits of Raphael and N. Poussin.

Portrait of David; after Navet.

Prince Schwartzberg; after Gérard.

Cupid and Pysche; after David.

Portrait of Dr. Dubois.

The Course of Love, in six plates; after Gérard.

POTT, JOHN, is said to have been a mezzotint engraver, who practised in London towards the end of the 18th century. There is a good plate of Lady Charles Spencer after Sir Joshua Reynolds, which bears his name, but as it is very similar to that by Finlayson, Mr. Chaloner Smith suggests that it may be a retouched plate, and that the engraver's name may be fictitious. This suspicion is strengthened by the fact that the name of Pond has been found substituted for that of Benjamin Green upon later impressions of that engraver's plate of Miss Baldwin after Kettle.

POTTER, PAULUS, was born at Enkhuizen on Nov. 20, 1625. In 1631 Pieter Potter, his father, left Enkhuizen and settled at Amsterdam, where he bought the right of citizenship. He seems to have instructed his son, though the latter is supposed to have also studied at Haarlem under Jacob de Wet the elder. To 1643 belongs his first signed picture, called 'The Herdsman.' It was to a constant study of nature that Potter chiefly owed his success, and he devoted himself especially to the study of animals. In 1646 Paul Potter went to Delft, where he was received as a member of the Corporation of S. Luke. There he seems to have studied to the utmost of his power, and in 1647 he produced 'The Young Bull.' In 1649 he removed to the Hague, as appears from the registers of that town. There his pictures were so much sought after, that he could with difficulty keep pace with the demand. In 1650 he married Adriana Balcheneynde, the daughter of an architect in the Hague. To this period belong 'Orpheus,' and the 'Shepherds and their Flocks.' In 1652, having cause, it is said, to mistrust the fidelity of his wife, he suddenly left the Hague and returned to Amsterdam. This and the following year saw the production of many famous works, but his unremitting attention to his art exhausted a constitution naturally weak, and he died in 1654, in the twenty-ninth year of his age. As an artist Paul Potter by no means deserves the universal fame he has won. But as a sincere and patient student of nature few men can be placed before him. The best collection of his works is that in the Hermitage, at St. Petersburg. But his art at its best is to be seen in a picture in the Peel Collection, in the National Gallery. He seldom painted on a large scale, but his Bull, more famous than fine, is almost life-size, and in the Six Collection there is an equestrian portrait of Tulp on the same scale.

The works of this artist have been engraved by Bartolozzi, Le Bas, Danckerts, Visscher, Huygens, Couché, Zeeland, and others. We have some charming etchings by Potter, drawn with great spirit and correctness, and executed in a very masterly style; they are as follows:

- A set of eight plates of Cows, Oxen, and other animals, with a Bull on the title; Paulus Potter, f.
- A set of five plates of Horses; the same inscription.
- A Mountainous Landscape, with cattle and a herdsman; Paulus Potter, in et f. 1649.

POTTER, PIETER, was born at Enkhuizen in 1587, and died about 1655, at Amsterdam. He painted landscapes, soldiers, animals, and still-life, and at first betrayed the influence of F. Hals, afterwards of Rembrandt. Little is known of this artist. He painted a series of landscapes, with figures, which, if we may judge from the prints engraved from them by Peter Nolpe, must have possessed considerable merit. They represent the 'Four Seasons' and the 'Four Elements,' the 'Prophet Elias speaking to the Woman of Sarepta,' and 'St. Paul the Hermit nourished in the Desert by an Eagle.' Among his better pictures we may also note:

- Amsterdam. Museum. Strawcutters.
- Berlin. Museum. Still Life. (P. POTTER, 1636.)
- Copenhagen. Gallery. Players at Tric-trac. (P. POTTER, 1629.)
- London. Nat. Gallery. Stag Hunt. (P. POTTER, 165-)

POTTEY, JAN, a Dutch portrait and historical painter, born at Haarlem in 1615. In 1641 he came to England, but seems to have returned to Haarlem in the following year. He was also an engraver, and one plate by him is known.

POTTGIESSER, JOHANN WILHELM, probably a son and pupil of DIETRICH POTTGIESSER, was working at Cologne in the second half of the 17th century, being in 1656 upon the Guild, and in 1683 a town councillor. There remain by him:

- A young Woman handing an Orange to her Child. (J. J. Merda's, Cologne.)
- Alexander's Visit to Diogenes. (Leuchtenberg Gallery.)
- Hagar; after Post. (Wallraf Museum.)
- The Finding of the Cross. (Formerly in the Dominican Church, Cologne.)

POTUIL, HENRI, was a painter who, it is said, imitated Gerard Dou with much skill. Only one picture, however, is recorded as by him, and that in the catalogue of Hoet and Terwesten, who say it represents an animated 'Conversation of Peasants.'

POUGENS, MARIE CHARLES JOSEPH DE, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1755. He was chiefly devoted to literature and philology, and was a member of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres. In 1784 he published Recreation de Philosophie et de Morale, and, in 1821-5, Archéologie Française. He died in 1833.

POULLEAU, —, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1749. He engraved several plates of ruins and architecture, among which are the following:

- Ruins of a Temple; after De Machy.
- A View of the Interior of the Church of the Magdalene, at Ville l'Évêque; after Contau d'Ivry.

POUNCY, B. T., an English engraver, flourished in the latter part of the 18th century. He was the brother-in-law of Woollett, by whom he was taught. Antiquarian work first engaged his attention, but he subsequently devoted himself to landscape, in which he produced some excellent plates. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1782 to 1789, and died in Lambeth in 1799.

POURBUS, FRANS, the elder, (or POERBUSSE,) the son of Pieter Pourbus, was born at Bruges in 1545, and was first instructed by his father, but he afterwards had the advantage of studying under Frans Floris. He painted history, landscapes, and animals, and was one of the most distinguished portrait painters of his time. There are several of his works in the churches at Antwerp, where he chiefly resided, and where he was received into the Academy in 1564. In the cathedral is an altar-piece representing the 'Circumcision,' with two shutters, on which he painted the portraits of the donors of the picture. One of his most esteemed works is the 'Adoration of the Magi,' in the church of the convent at Oudenarde. He died at Antwerp in 1581. His widow married the painter Hans Jordaens. There are portraits by him in various private collections in England; particularly at Castle Howard and at Luton. Other works by him are as under:

POURBUS, FRANS, the younger, was born at Antwerp in 1569, and was the son of Frans Pourbus the elder. As to who his instructor was is unknown, but in 1591 he became a master in the Guild of St. Luke. In 1600 he was employed by the Archduke Albert at Brussels, where he resided for some time before undertaking a journey into Italy. From Italy he went to Paris, where he resided for the remainder of his life. In 1611 he was appointed painter to Marie de' Medici. He was also painter to the Duke of Mantua, and accompanied Eleanor of Mantua, sister of Marie de' Medici, in her progress through France. In 1609 he left the court of Mantua, and died in Paris in 1622.

POURBUS, PIETER, (or POERBUSSE,) the younger, was born at Gouda about 1510. He came early to Bruges, where he probably studied under Lancelot Blondeel, whose daughter he married. Like his father-in-law, Pourbus gave some attention to engraving, architecture, and topography. He was also a good geometrician. He painted for the magistrates of Bruges a large chart or picture, on canvas and in oil, of the whole of the territory within their jurisdiction, in which he represented the minutest details. This immense work still exists in the Hôtel de Ville. Pourbus was originally a mason; and when he became eminent as a painter and architect, marked his works with a trowel. He was President of the Corporation of Painters at Bruges, where he died in 1584. By some writers it is stated that he died at Antwerp. He painted many altar-pieces in that city for the churches, particularly the 'Crucifixion,' still preserved, in the church of Notre Dame. In the great church at Gouda was a picture by him representing 'St. Hubert.' His portraits are of a rare perfection; the Academy at Bruges possesses two painted in 1551. There are three pictures by him in the private collection of the King of Holland, and pictures also exist in the churches of St. Saviour and St. James at Bruges. To these may be added:

Bruges.	Convent of the Annunciata.	Portrait of Charles V.; upon glass. 1551.
"	"	The Annunciation.
"	"	The Nativity.
"	Town Hall.	The Last Judgment.

POURBUS, PIETER (or POERBUSSE), the elder, is supposed to have been born at Gouda in 1463, and to have been the father of Pieter Pourbus. Nothing is known of his life.

POUSSIN, NICOLAS, painter, who has been called the head of the French school, was born in June, 1594, at Villers, a hamlet in the district of Les Andelys, in Normandy. It was at one time supposed that his father, Jean Poussin, was of gentle birth, and had served in the wars of the League, but recent researches have thrown much doubt upon that idea. Although not encouraged by his parents, the young Nicolas early showed a predilection for art. After some opposition he succeeded in obtaining their consent to his receiving instruction from an artist named Quentin Varin. This painter, a native of Beauvais, passed some time, about 1610, at Les Andelys, where he left a reminiscence of his sojourn in two pictures, still to be seen at the church of Le Grand Andely. From him Poussin learnt to paint in distemper, and also in oils. This instruction only served to whet his appetite for art, and to render him desirous of continuing his studies in Paris. Accordingly, at the age of eighteen, he quitted his home secretly, and managed to reach the capital, unaided by friends, and with the slenderest resources.

In Paris he continued his training under Ferdinand Elle, a Flemish portrait painter, and afterwards under L'Allemand, a Lorrainer. Though doubtless he received some assistance from these masters, his progress was due rather to the study of Marc Antonio's engravings after Raphael and Giulio Romano. These belonged to an amateur, to whom he was introduced by a young Poitevin, of good family, with whom he had formed a friendship. His studies were interrupted for a short time by a trip to Poitou with his friend; but his reception by his friend's mother, who treated him as a domestic, disgusted him, and he painted his way on foot back to Paris. There he stayed but a short time, for an illness, brought on apparently by the fatigues of his journey, compelled him to seek his home at Les Andelys, where he remained for about a year. On his return to Paris, the desire to visit Rome, which he had always entertained, increased so much that in 1620 he resolved to make the attempt. But he only got as far as Florence, when he was compelled to turn back. Settling again in Paris, he formed an acquaintance with Philippe de Champaigne, like himself a pupil of L'Allemand, and the two worked for some time under Duchesne on the decorations of the Luxembourg. But this employment soon became irksome, and Poussin again endeavoured to reach Rome. On this occasion his resources failed him by the time he arrived at Lyons, and he had to exercise his brush to procure the means to return to Paris. Here a series of pictures which he executed for the Jesuits attracted the notice of the Italian poet, the Cavaliere Marini, then in Paris. This patron gave him lodgings in his house, and on Marini's return to Rome Poussin followed him there in the year 1624, having remained in Paris to complete a picture, 'The Death of the Virgin,' commissioned by the Goldsmiths for Notre Dame.

He now began a course of study of the classic remains around him, which continued during the whole of his life, and rendered him the best interpreter of antiquity among the painters of his country. He became intimate with Duquesnoy, the Flemish sculptor, 'il Fiammingo,' and the two artists worked together with a congenial ardour in their study of ancient art. The rules of perspective Poussin studied in the treatises of Matteo Zoccolino and others. His knowledge of anatomy he improved under the guidance of Nicholas Larcher, a surgeon then practising in Rome. Among modern painters Raphael perhaps exercised the greatest influence over him, but he also received very substantial profit from working in the studio of Domenichino. So great was his ardour for work, that his friends could with difficulty lure him away from his studio even on holidays. His sojourn in Rome opened brightly and with good promise. Besides the patronage of Marini, he was also introduced to Cardinal Barberini, the nephew of the reigning Pontiff. But the death of the first, and the departure of the Cardinal from Rome, wrought a change in his prospects, and he had to fight a hard struggle for the bare necessities of existence. The prices he received for his works at this time scarcely sufficed to procure his daily bread. He has left it on record that he sold two battle-pieces for fourteen crowns, and a 'Prophet' for less than two. And his troubles were not confined to narrow means. The national jealousy between the Italians and the French was just then at fever-heat, and his French costume caused him to be attacked by some wandering swash-bucklers in the street. He was fortunate enough to escape with a wound in the hand, and thenceforth adopted the Italian dress. Shortly afterwards he was prostrated by a serious illness. Thanks to the care of a compatriot, Jacques Dughet, by whose family he was carefully nursed, his recovery was complete. The gratitude of the painter was not evanescent. In 1630 he married Anna Maria, the eldest daughter of his host. Having no children, he subsequently adopted his wife's brothers, Jean and Gaspard, the former of whom became an engraver, and the latter, under his fostering care, more than rivalled him in pure landscape. With his wife's marriage portion Poussin bought the house on the Pincian which became his home, and with which his name is inseparably connected. On the return of Cardinal Barberini to Rome, the star of the painter began to be in the ascendant. For this patron he painted 'The Death of Germanicus,' and 'The Taking of Jerusalem by Titus.' Through him he also obtained the commission to paint 'The Martyrdom of St. Erasmus,' for St. Peter's. For the Commander Cassiano del Pozzo, of Turin, who was among the first to recognize his genius, and who always continued one of his chief friends and patrons, he produced many works, notably the first series of the 'Seven Sacraments.' To this period of his career belong several other important works, such as 'The Sabines,' 'The Philistines struck by the Plague,' 'The Manna,' 'Moses striking the Rock,' &c.

Poussin's reputation was by this time so well established in his own country that in 1639 M. de Noyers, the superintendent of the royal buildings, made overtures to induce him to come to Paris. The painter hesitated; he preferred the serene artistic atmosphere of Rome to the intrigue and disquietude of a court. Then Louis XIII. expressed his royal wishes, and although Poussin yielded, it was not until 1640 that he arrived in France, in the train of his friend De Chantelou, who had taken a leading part in the negotiations. At first all went well. He was presented to the great Richelieu and to the king, and was received with great favour. His travelling expenses were paid, a pension was bestowed on him, a residence was assigned him for life in the garden of the Tuileries, and he was appointed first painter in ordinary. In spite of these advantages the reluctance which he had shown to quit Italy again appears in the fact that he would not bind himself for a longer period than five years. His sojourn in France was marked by great activity. He produced eight cartoons, founded on sacred subjects, for tapestry, pictures for the chapels of the palaces at Fontainebleau and St. Germain, and an important series of works illustrating the 'Labours of Hercules,' for the great gallery at the Louvre, besides designs for book illustrations, &c. But the two years passed by the painter in Paris were a period of much disquiet. The advent of such a star into the artistic firmament of Paris could not fail to excite much jealousy amongst those whose light was in danger of eclipse. Poussin had to suffer many annoyances from their intrigues. His chief opponents were the hitherto all-powerful Vouet, Feuchères, and the architect Lemercier. Wearied at last of their cabals, he obtained leave, under the pretence of fetching his wife, to return to Rome. Thither he set out in the autumn of 1642, and never returned to his native country.

The remainder of his life was spent in Italy, in the tranquil pursuit of his beloved art. His subsequent career contains no events of importance to record. It might be summed up in a list of the works which he produced. Of these, the following are some of the most important. In 1648 he completed a second series of pictures of the 'Seven Sacraments,' which had occupied him since 1644, for his friend De Chantelou. At the repeated request of his old friend, he painted, in his fifty-sixth year, his own portrait, now in the Louvre. Amongst other works executed during what is called his middle period, when he was in the maturity of his power, are the well-known 'Shepherds of Arcadia,' 'Diogenes,' 'Eliezer and Rebecca,' 'The Judgment of Solomon,' and 'The Vision of St. Paul.' Of works produced in his third and latest period, mention should be made of 'The Woman taken in Adultery,' 'The Adoration of the Magi,' and the series of pictures of the 'Seasons,' painted for the Duke of Richelieu in 1660-64. In the year which saw the completion of this commission he lost his faithful wife, after an illness of nine months. He touchingly expresses his grief and bewails his lonely condition in a letter to De Chantelou, with whom he had maintained an intimate correspondence for nearly thirty years. He did not long survive her loss; he died in Rome the 19th November 1665, and was buried in the church of S. Lorenzo in Lucina. His property, amounting to 10,000 crowns, was left to his poor relations in Normandy.

The most striking characteristic of Poussin is his intimate knowledge and appreciation of classic art. His composition and drawing are but little obnoxious to criticism, though it must be owned that there is an occasional stiffness in the latter, the result of incessant study of statues and friezes. His colour, especially in his later works, is the point in which he is most open to reproach. It is generally heavy in tone, and the flesh tints are frequently painfully hot. His failure as a colourist is to be largely ascribed, however, to his practice of painting upon a red ground. With the passage of time this ground begins to assert itself through the pigments laid upon it, and to produce heat and opacity even in works that, when painted, were good enough in colour. The etching, 'Children Playing,' attributed to him, dates, most likely, from the 18th century. There is a fine collection of Poussin's drawings in the Royal Collection at Windsor.

POWELL, C. M., an English marine painter, flourished during the first twenty years of the present century. His works are numerous, as he was principally employed by the dealers, but little of his history is known, further than that he was originally a sailor, and self-taught in the art of painting. Many of his pictures are injured from being varnished imprudently. Powell was a clever artist, but a careless man; hence he was always in a state of thralldom, and had frequently the mortification of seeing his pictures sold at once by his 'patrons' for five times the sum he had received. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1809, and repeatedly afterwards up to 1820. He died in 1824.

POWELL, GEORGE WILLIAM H., a portrait and historical painter, was born in the State of Ohio, U.S., in 1824. He was an associate member of the National Academy, and worked in New York, where he died in 1879. Among his works are :

- The Discovery of the Mississippi by De Soto (Rotunda of the Capitol, Washington).
 The Battle of Lake Erie. (Painted for the State of Ohio.)
 The Landing of the Pilgrims.
 Portraits of General McClellan, Major Anderson, and Washington Irving.

POWELL, JOHN, an English portrait painter and copyist of Reynolds, of whom he was an assistant. He exhibited at the Academy from 1778 to 1785. There is a portrait of the Duke of Cumberland by him in the National Portrait Gallery. It is a copy from Reynolds.

POWELL, JOHN, an English landscape painter, chiefly in water-colours, born about 1780. On the foundation of the old Water-Colour Society, he was an unsuccessful candidate for membership. He had a large practice as a drawing-master, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1797 to 1829. There are some landscape and tree etchings by him, and the South Kensington Museum possesses four of his water-colour drawings.

POWELL, JOSEPH JOHN, an English historical painter, born in 1834 at Douai, where, and at Lille, he received his first instruction in art. Coming to England in 1851, he entered the schools of the Academy and obtained various honours, culminating in 1855 with the gold medal for his 'Death of Alcibiades.' He suffered much from poverty and ill-health, and his career was cut short in the midst of much promise. He died at Southampton in 1856.

POWIS, WILLIAM HENRY, an English wood-engraver, was born in 1808. He rapidly made himself a position; but his unremitting labour sapped his health, and he died in 1836. Specimens of his work are to be found in:

'Illustrations of the Bible.' 1833.
Scott's Bible. 1834.
'Solace of Song.'

POWLE, GEORGE, was an English engraver, who flourished in the middle of the 18th century. He was a pupil of Worlidge, and has engraved portraits, some of which he exhibited in 1776 with the Free Society of Artists. Among them, in the style of his instructor, is that of Sir Robert Berkeley, Chief Justice of the King's Bench. His only known mezzotint plate is a portrait of Mrs. Worlidge, after a painting by her husband. He also designed some views of the City of Hereford, which have been engraved by James Ross.

POZO, PEDRO, an historical Spanish painter, born at Lucena in 1700. He studied under Luis Cancino, and afterwards went to Rome. He, however, eventually abandoned painting for literature. His son PEDRO, also an artist, died in America about 1810.

POZZI, ANDREA, an historical painter, born at Rome in 1778. He painted several mythological subjects, but one of his chief works was a 'Virgin and Saints,' painted for the City of Camerino. In 1820 he painted for a chapel of S. Maria Rotondo, in Rome, a 'Martyrdom of St. Stephen.' He was President of the Academy of St. Luke at Rome for many years.

POZZI, DOMENICO, a painter, was born at Castel St. Pietro in 1742. After receiving instruction from his father and Baldighi he entered the Academy of Milan. After some time he went to Rome and then to Germany, where at Mannheim, in the Library of Count von Castelli, he executed several paintings. He afterwards worked in Solothurn, Mendrisio, and in the Palace of the Marquis Odescalchi. He died at Milan in 1796.
