

LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

.

ı

NAPOLEON LEAVING THE FRENCH ARMY AT SMORGONI.

LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

Ŧ

BY

WILLIAM MILLIGAN SLOANE,

Рн. D., L. H. D.

PROFESSOR OF HISTORY IN PRINCETON UNIVERSITY

VOLUME IV

NEW YORK The Century Co. 1906 Copyright, 1896, 1897, By The Century Co.

THE DE VINNE PRESS.

.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

₩

CHAPTER I. THE RETREAT FROM RUSSIA

State of Napoleon's Mind — Destruction Imminent — The Affair at Wiazma — Kutusoff's Timidity — Napoleon's Despair — Arrival at Smolensk — The Army Reorganized — Napoleon's Daring at Krasnoi — Ney's Great Feat — Sufferings of the Army — The Russian Plan — Tchitehagoff's Capture of Borrissoff . . . 1

CHAPTER II. THE HORRORS OF THE BERESINA

Napoleon at Bay — The Enemy at Fault — The Crossing of the Beresina — The Carnage — End of the Tragedy — Napoleon's Departure — The Remnants of the Army at Vilna — The Russian Generals — Napoleon's Journey — Malet's Conspiracy — The Emperor's Anxiety — The State of France — Affairs in Spain . .

CHAPTER III. THE PRODIGAL'S RETURN

War between Great Britain and the United States — Napoleon Renews his Strength — His Administrative Measures — Social Forces and Political Results — Ideas of Peace — The Military Situation — The Czar's Resolutions — The Convention of Tauroggen — Defection of Prussia — Supreme Exertions of France in Napoleon's Cause — Napoleon as a Wonder-Worker . . . . . . . . . . . .

CHAPTER IV. THE REVOLT OF THE NATIONS

24

33

CHAPTER V. THE FIRST CAMPAIGN IN SAXONY

PAGE

9

CHAPTER VI. THE NATIONS IN GRAND ARRAY

CHAPTER VII. THE LAST IMPERIAL VICTORY

Napoleon's Prospects — The Preparations and Plans of the Coalition — Cross Purposes of the Combatants — Condition of Napoleon's Mind — Strength and Weakness of the Allies — Renewal of Hostilities — The Feint in Silesia — Napoleon at Dresden — First Day's Fighting — The Vietory Won on the Second Day 51

CHAPTER VIII. POLITICS AND STRATEGY

Napoleon's Conduct after Dresden — Military Considerations Overrnled by Political Schemes — Probable Explanation of Napoleon's Failure — Prussian Victories at Grossbeeren and on the Katzbach — Vandamme Overwhelmed at Kulm — Napoleon's Responsibility — Political Considerations again Ascendant — The System of "Hither and Thither" — The Battle of Dennewitz — Its Disastrous Consequences — Napoleon's Vacillation — Strategy Thwarted by Diplomacy

CHAPTER IX. THE END OF THE GRAND ARMY

Plans for Conducting the Retreat-Napoleon's Health-Blücher's Brilliant Idea - Napoleon under Compulsion - His Skilful Concentration - The Battlefield around Leipsic-The Attack-Results of the First Day's Fighting-Attempt to Negotiate - Napoleon's Apathy - The Positions of the Third Day
- The Grand Army Defcated-The Disaster at the Elster Bridge-Dissolution of the Grand Army	67

CHAPTER X. THE FRANKFORT PROPOSALS

CHAPTER XI. THE INVASION OF FRANCE

PAGE

58

84

TABLE OF CONTENTS

CHAPTER XII. NAPOLEON'S SUPREME EFFORT

The Fertility of Genins-The Battles of Brienne and La Rothière-The French Retreat Vietory at Champaubert Vietory at Montmirail Vietory at Vau ehamps-Success Engenders Delusion-Insincerity of the Allies-Their Clashing Interests-The Congress of Châtillon-Napoleon's Procrastination-
French Victory and French Diplomaey	93

CHAPTER XIII. THE GREAT CAPTAIN AT BAY

Victor's Failure at Montereau — Schwarzenberg's Ruse — The French Advance and the Austrian Retreat — Napoleon's Effort to Divide the Coalition — Vain Negotiations — The Treaty of Chaumont — Blücher's Narrow Escape — The Prussians Defeated at Craonne — Napoleon's Determination to Fight — His Misfortunes at Laon — Dissensions at Blücher's Headquarters — Napoleon at Soissons — Rheims Recaptured — Another Phase in Napoleon's Eclipse . . . . . 102

CHAPTER XIV. THE STRUGGLES OF EXHAUSTION

CHAPTER XV. THE BEGINNING OF THE END

Napoleon's Problem - The Military Situation - A Council of War and State -
The Return to Paris - Prostrating News - The Empress-Regent and her Advisers - Traitors Within - Talleyrand - The Defenders of the Capital - The Flight of the Court — The Allies before the City

CHAPTER XVI. THE FALL OF PARIS

The Battle before Paris — The Armistice — The Position of Marmont — Legitimacy and the Bourbons — The Provisional Government — Napoleon's Fury — Suggestions of Abdication — Napoleon's New Policy Foreshadowed — His Troops and Officers — The Treason of Marmont — The Marshals at Fontainebleau — Napoleon's Despair

CHAPTER XVII. NAPOLEON'S FIRST ABDICATION

PAGE

TABLE OF CONTENTS

CHAPTER XVIII. THE EMPEROR OF ELBA

Napoleon and the Popular Frenzy-Serious Dangers Incurred - The Exile under the British Flag - The Voyage to Elba - The Napoleonic Court at Porto Ferrajo – Mysterions Visitors – Estrangement of Maria Louisa – Napoleon's
"Isle of Repose" - The Congress of Vienna - Its Violation of Treaty Agreement - Discontent in France - Revival of Imperialism - Bitterness of the Army - Intrigues against the Bourbons - Napoleon's Behavior - His Fears of Assassination

PAGE

CHAPTER XIX. NAPOLEON THE LIBERATOR

CHAPTER XX. THE DYNASTIES IMPLACABLE

CHAPTER XXI. LIGNY AND QUATRE BRAS

Napoleon's Orders — Ney's Failure to Seize Quatre Bras — Wellington Surprised — Napoleon's Fine Strategy — The Meeting at Ligny — Blücher's Defeat — The Hostile Forces at Quatre Bras — Wellington Withdraws — Napoleon's Over-confidence — His Instructions to Grouchy — His Advance from Quatre Bras 178

CHAPTER XXII. THE EVE OF WATERLOO

Wellington's Choice of Position — State of the Two Armies — The Orders of Napoleon to Grouchy — Grouchy's Interpretation of them — Napoleon Surprised by the Prussian Movements — His Inactivity — The Battle-field — Wellington's Position — Napoleon's Battle Array — His Personal Health — His Plan . . . . 187

CHAPTER XXIII. WATERLOO

CHAPTER XXIV. THE SURRENDER

Nature of Napoleon's Defeat — Its Political Consequences — Napoleon's Fatal Resolution — The State of Paris — Napoleon at the Élysée — His Departure for Rochefort — Thoughts of Return — Procrastination — Wild Schemes of Flight — A Refuge in England — His Only Resource — The White Terror and the Allies 204

viii

CHAPTER XXV. ST. HELENA

Embarrassment of the English Ministry—A Strange Embassy—Napoleon's Attitude—The Transportation—The Prison—And its Governor—Oceupations of the Prisoner—Napoleon's Historical Writings—Failing Health and Preparations for Death—His Last Will and Testament—The End . . . . . 212

CHAPTER XXVI. SOLDIER, STATESMAN, DESPOT

CHAPTER XXVII. NAPOLEON'S PLACE IN HISTORY

Exhaustion — The Change in Napoleon's Views — Intermitting Powers — Their Extinction — Common Sense and Idealism — The Man and the World — The Philosophy of Expediency — A Mediating Work — French Institutions — Trans- formation of France — Napoleon and English Policy — His Work in Germany — French Influence in Italy and Eastern Europe — Napoleon and the Western World
HISTORICAL SOURCES	249
Index	263

PAGE

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

Ŧ

VOLUME IV

NAPOLEON LEAVING THE FRENCH ARMY AT SMORGONI
RUSSIAN PEASANTS ATTACKING FRENCH STRAGGLERS	зе 1
MARBOT'S SOLDIERS FORAGING ON THE RETREAT	5
	8
	.2
	6
	21
	25
NAPOLEON AND PIUS VII AT FONTAINEBLEAU	29
EUGÈNE DE BEAUHARNAIS (PRINCE EUGÈNE) DUKE OF LEUCHTENBERG, PRINCE OF •	32
	36
Marshal Jean-Baptiste Bessières, Duke of Istria	1
	4
	18
	53
	56
Marshal Édouard-Adolphe-Casimir-Joseph Mortier, Duke of Treviso 6	60
MARSHAL JEAN-BAPTISTE-JULES BERNADOTTE, PRINCE OF PONTE CORVO, CHARLES
XIV OF SWEDEN	55
Marshal Nicolas-Charles Oudinot, Duke of Reggio	69
	3
THE FRENCH ARMY LEAVING LEIPSIC	75
NAPOLEON AND HIS STAFF	6
THE BATTLE OF HANAU, OCTOBER 30, 1813	80
MARIE-ANNUNCIADE-CAROLINE BONAPARTE, WIFE OF JOACHIM MURAT; QUEEN OF NAPLES, COUNTESS LIPONA; AND HER CHILDREN, ACHILLE, LAETITIA, LUCIEN,
AND LOUISE	35
NAPOLEON-FRANÇOIS-CHARLES-JOSEPH, PRINCE IMPERIAL; KING OF ROME; DUKE
OF REICHSTADT	88
, , ,	)2
THE GUARD — CAMPAIGN OF FRANCE	94
STAFF-OFFICER RECONNOITERING	1
"1814" — CAMPAIGN OF FRANCE	5
PRINCE CLEMENS WENZEL NEPOMUK LOTHAR VON METTERNICH-WINNEBURG 10	8

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

FACING P	AGE
FRIEDRICH WILHELM VON BÜLOW
"Captive"	116
HENRI-JACQUES-GUILLAUME CLARKE, COUNT D'HUNEBOURG, DUKE OF FELTRE
(Marshal of France under Louis XVIII)
MARSHAL ÉTIENNE-JACQUES-JOSEPH-ALEXANDRE MACDONALD, DUKE OF TARENTUM	125
MAP OF THE FIELD OF OPERATIONS IN 1814	126
Marshal August-Frédéric-Louis Viesse De Marmont, Duke of Ragusa	129
THE BARRIÈRE DE CLICHY, OR THE DEFENSE OF PARIS IN 1814	133
MARSHAL MICHEL NEY, DUKE OF ELCHINGEN, PRINCE OF THE MOSKWA
CHARLES-MAURICE-ÉLIE, DUKE OF TALLEYRAND-PERIGORD, PRINCE OF BENEVENTO
NAPOLEON'S FAREWELL TO THE IMPERIAL GUARD AT FONTAINEBLEAU, APRIL 20, 1814
	148
	1 1 0 152
	156
	161
	169
	172
	176
	180
,	185
Marshal Emmanuel, Marquis De Grouchy	188
Map of Campaign of 1815, June 15th to 19th	192
NAPOLEON AND THE OLD GUARD BEFORE WATERLOO	193
"WATERLOO"	194
Sir Thomas Picton	197
	201
	203
	204
AN EPISODE OF THE "WHITE TERROR," 1815
	209
	203 213
	213
Les Claus and Manuel-Augustin Dieudonne De Las Cases	218
Las Cases and his Son Writing the History of Napoleon under his Dictation 2
	223
Cardinal Joseph Fesch	225
MARIE-LAETITIA RAMOLINO BONAPARTE — "MADAME MÈRE" — MOTHER OF 229
Marie-Pauline Bonaparte, Madame Leclerc, Princess Borghese 2	232
	234
	236
	241
THE FUNERAL CORTÈGE OF NAPOLEON IN THE PLACE DE LA CONCORDE,
December 15, 1840	244
NAPOLEON I

xii

· · ·

* ,

*

*

RUSSIAN PEASANTS ATTACKING FRENCH STRAGGLERS

FROM THE AQUARCLEE DY MAURICE ORANDE

LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

Ŷ

CHAPTER I

THE RETREAT FROM RUSSIA

STATE OF NAPOLEON'S MIND—DESTRUCTION IMMINENT—THE ÅFFAIR AT WIAZMA—KUTUSOFF'S TIMIDITY—NAPOLEON'S DESPAIR—ARRI-VAL AT SMOLENSK—THE ARMY REORGANIZED—NAPOLEON'S DAR-ING AT KRASNOI—NEY'S GREAT FEAT—SUFFERINGS OF THE ARMY— THE RUSSIAN PLAN—TCHITCHAGOFF'S CAPTURE OF BORRISSOFF.

CHAP. I

1812

FOR nine days the retreat went steadily on. Mortier came in on October twenty-seventh; Davout was assigned to keep the rear. Napoleon was no longer seen on horseback; sometimes he drove, but generally he trudged among the men, to all outward appearance as spiritless as any one. To Junot he wrote that he had taken his decision in consequence of the cold and in order to provide for his wounded from the depot at Mozhaisk. There was as yet no severe cold, and there was a far shorter road to Smolensk. The writer's mind was chaotic, confusing what he knew soon would be with present realities. His maps were worthless, and clinging to experience, he showed none of his accustomed venturesomeness. The well-worn summer uniforms of his men were no protection even against the coolness of autumn nights. What a prospect when winter's cold should come! It was enough to stun even a Napoleon.

VOL. IV.-1.

CHAP. I

But the present was bad enough, and momentarily grew worse. The road was lined with charred ruins and devastated fields, and the waysides were dotted with groups of listless, desperate soldiers who fell out and sank on the ground as the straggling ranks of their comrades tramped on. Skirting the battle-field of Borodino, the marching battalions looked askance on the ghastly heaps of unburied corpses; but the wounded survivors were dragged from field hospitals and other cavernous shelters to be carried onward with the departing army. They were a sight which in some cases turned melancholy into madness. In order to transport them the wagons were lightened by throwing the spoils of Moscow into the pond at Semlino. On the thirtieth despatches of grave import reached the Emperor, informing him that Schwarzenberg had retreated behind the Bug, leaving an open road from Brest for Tchitchagoff's veterans to attack the right flauk of the columns flying from Moscow. Victor, learning of Napoleon's straits, had left fifteen thousand men in Smolensk, and was advancing to join Saint-Cyr on the Dwina in order to assure the safety of the main army from that side. To him came the dismal news that Wittgenstein had resumed the offensive against Saint-Cyr, and that the line of attack on the French left was as open from the north as was that on the other side from the south. Davout's rear-guard was steadily disintegrating under hardships and before the harassing attacks of the Russian riders under Platoff. Partizan warfare was assuming alarming dimensions. In a single swoop two thousand French recruits under Baraguey d'Hilliers had been made prisoners, and similar events were growing all too frequent. In consequence of these crushing discouragements the whole army was rearrayed. "We must march as we did in Egypt," ran the order: "the baggage in the middle, as densely surrounded as the road will permit with a half battalion in front, a half battalion behind, battalions right and left, so that when we face we can fire in every direction." Ney's corps was then assigned to the place of danger in the rear-a place he kept with desperate gallantry until he earned the title "bravest of the brave."

The early promise of substantially reinforcing Kutusoff's army had not been fulfilled. The fanatic zeal at first displayed soon effervesced, the new levies were untrustworthy, and the long marches of the Russians told almost as terribly upon them as the retreat did upon their enemies. Kutusoff's army therefore, though available for defense, was a poor weapon for attack, especially when the object was a French army under the dreaded Napoleon. The Russian commander was only half-hearted in his pursuit; and when, having taken the short cut which was unknown to his enemy, his van came in contact with the French line at Wiazma on November third, the Russian soldiers had little heart to fight. The circumstances offered every chance for a powerful if not a decisive blow on the flying column from flank and rear; but the onset was feeble, the commander-in-chief held back his main force in anxious timidity, and a second time the opportunity was lost for annihilating the retreating foe, now reduced in number to about sixty thousand. Napoleon was far away on the front when Kutusoff attacked, and the battle was conducted on the French side by the marshals in consultation with Eugène and Poniatowski. The rear-guard was momentarily severed from the line, but these two generals wheeled and fiercely attacked the advancing Russians, engaging all within reach until Davout was able to evade the mêlée and rejoin the main army.

The French lost about four thousand, the Russians about half as many. Neither of the two armies had any courage to renew the struggle next morning, and each kept its way as best it could, both of them exhausted, both shrinking hourly in vigor and numbers. Kutusoff's conduct both at Malojaroslavetz and at Wiazma has been explained by his fixed resolution to leave the destruction of the invaders to his gaunt allies, want and winter. If, however, as was possible at either place, he had annihilated the retreating army, this might have been the last Napoleonic war, since it was not for a new army that the Emperor of the French appealed to his people, but for something quite different, namely, men to recruit the old one. As it was Napoleon first learned of the conflict at Wiazma on the fourth, and contemplated a movement which might lead his pursuers into an ambush. But he found the three columns which had been engaged so pitifully disintegrated that he gave up in despair — a feeling heightened when, for the first time, snowflakes came ominously fluttering through the frosty air.

The weary march was therefore resumed, and there was some semblance of order in it, although Ney wrote Berthier that already on the fourth there were without exaggeration four thousand men of the grand army who refused to march in rank. The number was increasing daily. On the sixth Napoleon was informed that Victor, having effected a junction with Saint-Cyr, had checked Wittgenstein in a series of gallant CHAP. I struggles, but that step by step the two divisions had been driven back until now they were only thirty miles distant, having abandoned the line of the Dwina, including the depot of Vitebsk. "Seize the offensive; the safety of the army depends on it," was Napoleon's desperate reply. Terrible as this news was to the general, it was eclipsed in horror for the Emperor by the accounts he received at the same time from Paris describing Malet's conspiracy, a movement to overthrow the Empire based on the false rumor of his own death. "And Napoleon II., did no one think of him?" he cried in anguish. Grand army, reputation, personal prestige — all these he might lose and survive; but to lose France, that were ruin indeed.

4

CHAP. I

1812

That night a heavy frost fell; then, and no sooner, did the relentless severity of the Russian winter begin. This is proved by Napoleon's famous twenty-ninth bulletin, and by the journal of Castellane, the aide-de-camp who made the final copy of it; in spite of assertions put forth later to sustain the legend of an army conquered by the elements, the autumn had dallied far beyond its time. Next day the weary march began again; scarcely a word escaped the Emperor. He was pale, but his countenance gave no sign of panic; there was merely a grim, persistent silence. The enemy hung on flank and rear, harassing the demoralized column until it was more like a horde than an army. With numbed limbs and in the gnawing misery of bitter cold, the French straggled on. Men and horses died by the score; the survivors cut strips of carrion wherewith to sustain life, and desperately pressed forward, for all who left the highway fell into the enemy's hands. In some bivouacs three hundred died overnight; there are statements in the papers of officials which seem to indicate that in the struggle for life the weaker often perished at the hands of their own comrades. The half-crazed, frost-bitten, disorderly soldiers of the French van reached Smolensk on the ninth, and on the thirteenth the remnants of the rear, with many stragglers, came up and encamped. The heroes of the hour were Eugène and Ney. Ney's division had well-nigh vanished in their glory. Fighting without fear, and dying undaunted, they had saved the moiety of the grand army which reached Smolensk; the other half had perished by the way. Eugène had taken a long eircuit, but his division had lost fewer and was less demoralized than those of his Murat's recklessness in fighting the Cossacks had resulted colleagues. in the loss of nearly all his horses; his men arrived on foot.

•

.

.

MARBOT'S SOLDIERS FORAGING ON THE RETREAT.

Æт. 43]

The scenes in Smolensk were shameful. At first the garrison shut the gates in the very faces of the human wolves who clamored for food and shelter. Discipline having been restored, the guard was admitted. The stores were ample for a fortnight's rations to all survivors; but the ravening mob could not be restrained, and the distribution was so irregular that precious supplies were tumbled into the streets; in the end it was found that the guard had secured sustenance for a fortnight, while the line had scarcely sufficient for a week. However, the sick and wounded were housed and made fairly comfortable. These sickening tumults over, the Emperor seemed to regain much of his bodily vigor, and with it returned his skill and ingenuity: stragglers were reincorporated into regiments; supply-wagons were destroyed in large numbers and the horses assigned to the artillery, many of the guns being abandoned so that the service of the remainder might be more efficient; the army was rearrayed in four divisions, under the Emperor, Eugène, Davout, and Ney respectively; and the French made ready to leave Smolensk with a bold front. Napoleon's contempt for his enemy was matched only by their palpitating fear of him. Most men would have abandoned hope in such a crisis. Napoleon was fertile not merely in strategic expedients, but in devices for realizing his plans. Accordingly he arranged that the four columns should move on parallel lines toward Lithuania, a day's march distant from each other, he with six thousand of the guard in the van; Ney, taking the other four thousand to strengthen his own line, was to keep the The movement began on the twelfth, that is, before the last rear. stragglers had come in; on the fourteenth Napoleon took his departure; and three days later, on the seventeenth, the towers of the ramparts having been blown up, the last of the newly ordered ranks marched out. The sick and wounded had found shelter in houses adjacent to the walls; many were killed by the explosions, the rest were abandoned to the foe and found humane treatment. Disorderly and mutinous French soldiers remained in considerable numbers to plunder; these were for the most part caught by the entering Russians, and inhumanly done to death. In all these days the cold had not abated, and at times the thermometer marked fifteen degrees below zero.

The further line of retreat was through Krasnoi, Borrissoff, and Minsk, the Emperor expecting Schwarzenberg, reinforced by fourteen thousand German recruits, to cover the crossing of the Beresina at CHAP. I Borrissoff. The Russians followed doggedly on their parallel line of CHAP. I pursuit, harassing the French rear and flanks. On the fifteenth their 1812 van eame in touch with Napoleon's division near Krasnoi almost as he himself passed, and their artillery opened fire. The balls yelled as they sped by, and there was great excitement. Lebrun called attention to the fact as if it were remarkable. "Bah!" said Napoleon, as he pressed forward; "bullets have been flying about our legs these twenty years." He well knew that his anxious foe would not seriously attack him and his guard; but, justly considering that the case would be different in regard to his rear, he halted to await their arrival. Early on the morning of the seventeenth he sent out a reconnoitering party, as if about to wheel and give battle; Kutusoff, who for the moment was considerably inferior in numbers, fell instantly into the snare, and drawing back his van, as Napoleon had foreseen and desired, made ready for battle.

Eugène and Davout were within reach, but Ney's position was terrible: he was only then leaving Smolensk. Was he to be left to his fate? Around and behind his six thousand troops were swarming almost as many stragglers; and on the eighteenth the Russians, in spite of their momentary halt, threw forward their van with the hope of cutting off his hampered and sore-pressed division. But the short delay had been precious: Ney rose to the occasion, and on the nineteenth crossed the Dnieper over the ice, hoping to follow the right bank westward and rejoin the main army at Oreha. This was one of his most daring feats, perhaps his most brilliant deed of arms. Summoned by a flag of truce to surrender, he replied : "A marshal of the Empire has never surrendered !" Platoff and the Cossacks were hard on his heels; but fighting and marching throughout the weary, bitter day, at night the undaunted marshal found himself in touch with Eugène, who had turned out on the highway from Vitebsk to Orcha to meet him. When, on the twentieth, they effected a junction, Nev had only eight hundred men in the ranks with him; perhaps two thousand more were trudging behind in disorder.

On the eighteenth a thaw had set in ; it had begun to rain, the crust broke under the men's feet, and the roads were lines of iey clods. The soldiers had no foot-gear but rags; every step was an agony, and thousands who had so far endured now gave up, and flung away their guns and equipments. There were not more than twenty-five thousand regularly marching. Already on the previous day the guard had shown signs of demoralization. The Emperor alone seemed impassive. For days he had shared the common hardships; clad in a long Polish coat of marten fur, a stout birch staff in his hand, without a sign of either physical or nervous exhaustion he had marched silently for long distances among his suffering men. If we picture him standing at Krasnoi, weighing how long he dared to brave an enemy which if consolidated and hurled upon his lines would have annihilated them, we must feel that collapse was prevented then only by his nerve and by the terror of his name. Once more he threw the influence of his presence into the scale, and, stepping before the guard on this dreadful day, he said simply: "You see the disorganization of my army. In unhappy infatuation most of the soldiers have thrown away their guns. If you follow this dangerous example no hope remains." The state of the men was, if possible, worse than ever; in fact, it was indescribable. Night after night they had bivouacked in the snow. What with the wet, the dazzling glitter, and the insufficient food, -- for at best they had only a broth of horse-flesh thickened with flour, - some were attacked with blindness, some with acute mania, and some with a prostrating insensibility. Those who now remained in the ranks were elad in rags and searcely recognizable as soldiers. It seemed, therefore, as if such an appeal could only awaken an echo in an empty vault; but such was the French character that, desperate as were the circumstances, the ery The response was grim and sullen, but the call was not in was heard. vain; and reaching Orcha on the nineteenth, there was still an army. As yet, however, there was no news of Ney.

THE RETREAT FROM RUSSIA

The sky seemed dark and the prospect blank when it was learned that both Victor and Schwarzenberg had been steadily thrown back. The Russian plan was for Wittgenstein and Tchitchagoff to drive in the extreme left and right divisions respectively of Napoleon's attenuated line, and then to concentrate at Borrissoff and attack the main French army retreating before Kutusoff. So far the various parts of this scheme had been successfully executed. Borrissoff and its bridge were still in possession of a Polish regiment; but the garrison was very small, and could not repulse the attack of the converging Russian columns or of any portion of them. It behooved Napoleon, therefore, to move swiftly if his few remaining troops were to cross the Beresina in safety. It was in this frightful dilemma that Ney at last appeared. Снар. I 1812 Снар. I 1812 Said Napoleon, when the news was brought to him: "If an hour ago I had been asked for the three millions I have in the Tuileries vaults as the price of this event, I would have handed them over." The marshal's presence was in itself a splendid encouragement.

Purchasing such stores as Jewish contractors offered, abandoning the heavy pontoons, and hitching the horses to a few field-pieces found in park, the undaunted Emperor sent orders to both Victor and Oudinot, enjoining them to make forced marches and meet him at Borrissoff. On the twenty-first, amid the slush, mud, and broken cakes of crust, he started his own army on a swift despairing rush for that crucial point. It was too late; that very day Tchitchagoff's van, after a stubborn and bloody struggle, occupied the town and captured the all-important bridge. The thaw had opened the river, and its overflowing stream, more than sixty yards in width, was full of floating ice. To the Russians it seemed as if Napoleon were already taken in their snare, and Tchitchagoff issued a general order that all captives below medium stature should be brought to him. "He is short, stout, pale; has a short, thick neck, and black hair," ran his description of the "author of Europe's miseries." By a special decree of the Czar, all the French prisoners of war were kindly treated, each being furnished with warm clothing at an expense of about twenty dollars.

[Æт. 43

IN THE MUSEUM OF VERSAULLES

MARSHAL LAURENT GOUVION-SAINT-CYR

CHAPTER II

THE HORRORS OF THE BERESINA

NAPOLEON AT BAY — THE ENEMY AT FAULT — THE CROSSING OF THE BERESINA — THE CARNAGE — END OF THE TRAGEDY — NAPOLEON'S DE-PARTURE — THE REMNANTS OF THE ARMY AT VILNA — THE RUSSIAN GENERALS — NAPOLEON'S JOURNEY — MALET'S CONSPIRACY — THE EMPEROR'S ANXIETY — THE STATE OF FRANCE — AFFAIRS IN SPAIN.

THE situation of the French was desperate indeed. With a relent-Снар. П L less foe behind, on each side, and now in front protected by the 1812 rampart of a swollen river, which was overflowing its banks and was bordered on both sides by dense forests, the army seemed doomed. A single overmastering thought began to take possession of Napoleon's mind — that of his personal safety. He appeared to take a momentous decision — the determination to sacrifice his army bit by bit that he This resolution once formed, he became strong might save its head. and courageous, his head was clear, and his invention active. Oudinot was summoned, with his eight thousand men, to drive out Tchitchagoff; and orders were sent to Victor, commanding him to take the eleven thousand which he had, and at any hazard cut off Wittgenstein from the Schwarzenberg had been temporarily checked by a division Beresina. of Russians under Sacken, and was no longer a factor in the problem. Oudinot accomplished his task, but the Russians fired the bridge as they fled.

Napoleon was scarcely consoled by news that his cavalry had found a ford at Studjenka. Early on the twenty-third the French bridge-builders, with all available assistants and material, were on their way up the river. The remnants of the army were reorganized, and the baggagetrain was reduced to the smallest possible dimensions. Unfortunately, Victor had not received his orders in time, and, ignorant of the Emperor's plans, had changed his line of march to one more southerly, thus leav-CHAP. II ing the road to Studjenka open for Wittgenstein, who abandoned the 1812 pursuit and marched direct to that spot. The latter's advance was, however, slow; Tchitchagoff was completely deceived, as many of the French believe, by a feint of Oudinot's, but, as he himself declared, both by false information concerning the movements of Schwarzenberg, and by misrepresentations concerning Napoleon's march as communicated through both Kutusoff and Wittgenstein. Be this as it may, the veterans from the Danube marched a whole day down the stream to guard against an imaginary danger. The French therefore worked at Studjenka without disturbance, and, as the frost set in once more, the swampy shores were hardened enough to make easy the approach to their works. By the twenty-sixth two bridges were completed-a light one for infantry early in the morning, and late in the afternoon another considered strong enough for artillery and wagons. At one o'clock Oudinot's foot-soldiers began to cross, and a body of cavalry successfully swam their horses over the stream, which owing to the freshet was now in places five feet deep instead of three and a half as when the ford was first discovered; a few hours later artillery followed, and the opposite shore was cleared of the enemy sufficiently to open the bridgehead entirely, and control the direct road to Vilna, which leaves Minsk This great success was due partly to unparalleled good to the south. fortune, but ehiefly to the gallant fellows who worked for hours without a murmur in the freezing water, amid cakes of grinding ice.

VOL. IV.-2

With two short interruptions, of three and four hours respectively, due to the breaking of the heavier bridge, the erossing went forward irregularly, at times almost intermitting, until the morning of the twentyeighth. About noon on the twenty-seventh the Emperor passed; having superintended certain repairs to the bridge, he started next morning for Zembin. The same afternoon, Victor's van reached Borrissoff somewhat in advance of Wittgenstein, who eame up a few hours later, and attacking the former's rear, eaptured two thousand men. Tchitchagoff, having finally learned the truth, appeared that night opposite Borrissoff; communication with the opposite shore was quickly established, and after a conference the two belated Russian generals agreed to march up-stream, on the right and left banks respectively. At eight next morning Tchitehagoff attacked Oudinot and Ney—twenty-six thousand men against seventeen thousand; two hours later Wittgenstein, with Æт. 43] twenty-five thousand fell upon Victor, who now had about seven thousand. Yet the French kept the bridges.

Throughout the day a bloody fight went on; it was rendered uncertain and disorderly by the thousands of stragglers present, and by the intensity of the steadily increasing cold. Behind the two heroic combats scenes were occurring which beggar description. Incredible numbers of stragglers cumbered the roadways and approaches; the vast mob of camp-followers held stubbornly to their possessions, and, with loud imprecations, lashed their tired horses while they put their own shoulders to the wagon wheels. Hundreds were trampled under foot; families were torn asunder amid wails and shrieks that filled the air; the weak were pushed from the bridges into the dark flood now thickening under the fierce cold. Toward midday a cutting wind began to blow, and by three it was a hurricane. At that instant the heavier bridge gave way, and all upon it were engulfed. An onlooker declared that above storm and battle a yell of mortal agony rose which rang in his ears for weeks.

The mob on the river-bank was momentarily sobered, and for a time there was order in crossing the remaining bridge; but as dusk fell both wind and battle raged more fiercely, and groups began to surge out on right and left to pass those in front. Many dashed headlong into the angry river; others, finding no opening, seated themselves in dumb despair to wait the event. At nine the remnant of Victor's ranks began to cross, and the Russians commenced cannonading the bridge. Soon the beams were covered with corpses, laid like the transverse logs on a corduroy road; but the frightful transit went on until all the soldiers The heavy bridge was temporarily repaired, but at last had passed. neither was safe; little knots gathered from the rabble at intervals and rushed recklessly over the toppling structures, until at eight next morning the French, not daring to wait longer, set fire to both, leaving seven thousand of their followers in Studjenka. They burned also the wooden track they had constructed through the swamps. The Russian accounts of what was seen in the morning light portray scenes unparalleled in history: a thousand or more charred corpses were frozen fast on the surface of the river, many of the ghastly heads being those of women and children; the huts of the town were packed with the dead. Twenty-four thousand bodies were burned in one holocaust, and it is solemnly stated that in the spring thaws twelve thousand more were

CHAP. II

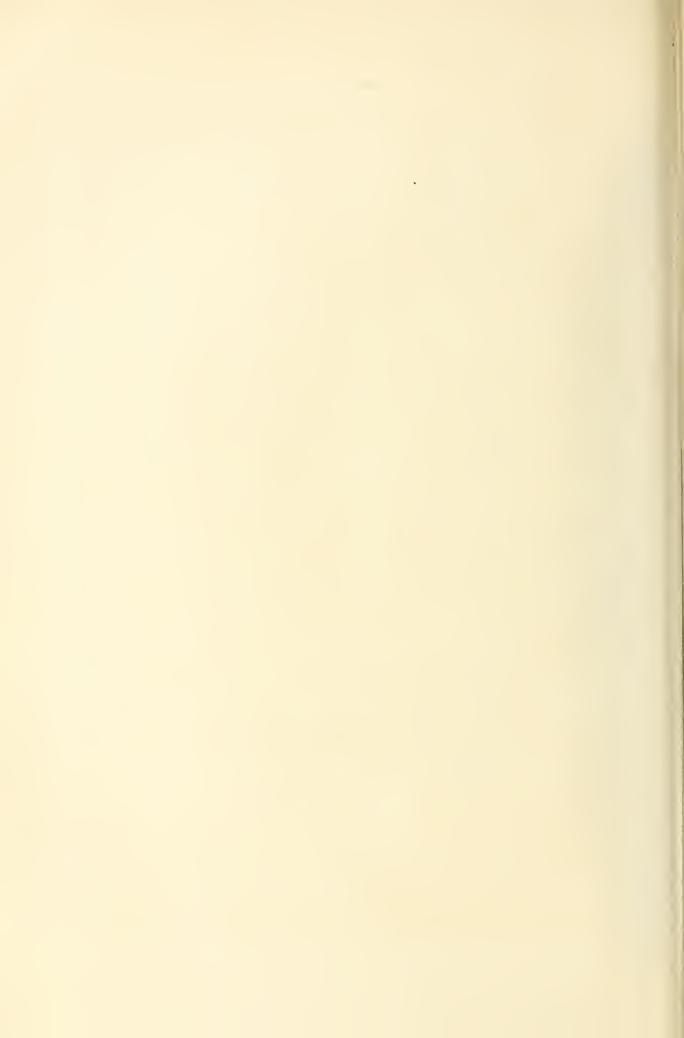

Снар. П 1812 brought to light. Ten years afterward there were still islets in the shallows of the stream covered with forget-me-nots which decked the moldering bones of those who had perished during that awful night of November twenty-eighth, 1812.

Next day the Emperor wrote to Maret confessing the truth. "The army is numerous, but shockingly disorganized," he declared. "A fortnight would be necessary to bring it once more under the standards; and how can we find a fortnight? Cold and privation have disorganized it. We may reach Vilna-can we maintain ourselves there? If we only could! even for the first eight days. But suppose we were attacked within that time, it is doubtful if we should be able to remain. Food! food! food!-without that there are no atrocities which this unruly throng would not commit against the town. In this situation I may regard my presence in Paris as essential for France, for the Empireyes, even for the army." He also composed on the same day a bulletin, since famous, which was dated December third. It speciously declared that until November sixth the Emperor had been everywhere successful; thereafter the elements had done their fell work. The only complete truth it contained was the closing sentence: "The health of his Majesty was never better." As the sorry remnants of the grand army moved toward Vilna, they grew scantier and scantier. Many were delirious from hunger and cold, many were in the agonies of typhus fever. On December third there were still nine thousand in the ranks; on the fifth the marshals were assembled to hear Napoleon explain his determination to leave at once for Paris, and immediately afterward he took his departure.

It was not a very "grand army" which was left behind under Murat's command, with orders to form behind the Niemen. On the eighth the thermometer marked twenty-five degrees below zero, and a few unarmed wretches, perhaps five hundred in all, trailed after their leader into Vilna. Their ears and throats, their legs and feet, were swathed in rags; their bodies were wrapped in the threadbare garments of their dead comrades, or in such cast-off woman's apparel as they had been able to secure by the way. They were followed by Ney with four hundred, Wrede with two thousand, and finally by two or three thousand stragglers. After a few half-hearted and ineffectual efforts to organize this mob into the semblance of an army, Murat abandoned the attempt and posted away to his kingdom of Naples — a course severely censured AQUARELLE MADE FOR THE CENTURY CO.

TYPOGRAVURE BOUSSOD, VALADON & CO., PARIS.

by the Emperor. This was the closing scene of Napoleon's great drama of invasion. His men and horses had succumbed to summer heats as rapidly and extensively as to winter frosts; he had brought ruin to his enterprise by miscalculating the proportions of inanimate nature and human strategy, and by fatal indecision at critical moments when the statesman's delay was the soldier's ruin. Russia, like Spain, had the strength of low organisms; her vigor was not centralized in one member, the destruction of which would be the destruction of the whole; Moscow was not the Russian empire, as Berlin was the Prussian kingdom.

Yet justice requires the consideration of certain undoubted facts. Making all due allowance, it is true that the elements were Napoleon's worst foe when once his retreat was fairly under way, and it was not the least of Napoleon's magnificent achievements that after the crossing of the Beresina there was still the framework of an army which within a few months was again that marvelous instrument with which the campaigns of 1813 and 1814 were fought. This miracle was due to the shortsightedness and timidity of the Russian generals. Tchitchagoff is inexcusable both for the indifference he displayed regarding the various points at which the Beresina might be crossed, and for the ignorance which made him the easy dupe of feints and misleading reports. As to Wittgenstein, the caution which he exercised because operating alone was near in its character to cowardice; his snail-like movements prevented any efficient coöperation in the general plan, and he failed in grasping a situation of affairs which left open but a single line of retreat for Napoleon. Neither of these two had any adequate conception of the losses suffered by the French, and they permitted the last opportunity for annihilating the invaders to escape. As to Kutusoff, who was fully informed concerning the utter disintegration of the "grand army," his conduct in holding back the main Russian force at the crucial moment is utterly indefensible; he saved thousands of his troops, perhaps, but he has passed into history as the man who is indirectly responsible for the rivers of blood which were still to drench the continent of Europe. Both he and Wittgenstein unloaded all the blame on Admiral Tchitchagoff, and contemporary opinion sustained them. "Had it not been for the admiral," said the commander-in-chief, replying to a toast proposed to the conqueror of Napoleon, "the plain gentleman of Pskoff (namely, himself) could have said : Europe breathes free again." This opinion is one which history must reject as utterly CHAP. II false.

Снар. Ц

1812

When the soldiers heard that their Emperor had departed there was an almost universal outburst of frenzied wrath. "He flies," they shrieked, "as in Egypt! He abandons us after he has sacrificed us!" As has been remarked, this despair was natural, but the accusation was unjust. Napoleon's abandonment of the grand army at Smorgoni was not a desertion like the secret flight from Egypt; for now he was chief and not subordinate, his own judgment was the court of final appeal. Moreover it was necessary for the very existence of the army that its general should once more be emperor, the head of the state. Traveling incognito, he passed through Vilna, Warsaw, and Dresden. Maret was left in charge of matters in Lithuania, De Pradt was carefully instructed how to treat the Poles, and on December fourteenth, at Dresden, despatches were written to both Francis and Frederick William in order to assure their continued adhesion. The King of Saxony was firmly bound in the fetters of a personal fascination never entirely dispelled. Twice on the long, swift journey efforts were made by disenchanted German officers to assassinate Napoleon, but he escaped by the secrecy of his flight. Such conspiracies were the presage of what was soon to happen in Germany. They were trivial, however, when compared with the state of public opinion in Paris as displayed by the Malet conspiracy. In spite of all that he had done to establish a settled society, France was not yet cured of its revolutionary habits; it was only too clear that the constitution, codes, and admirable administrative system were operative not from political habit but by personal impulsion. This was the real sore; the conspiracy itself was a grotesque affair, the work of a brain-sick enthusiast, lightly formed and easily crushed.

Malet was a fiery nobleman who, having run the gamut between royalist and radical, had turned conspirator, having, in 1800, plotted to seize the First Consul on his way to Marengo, and again, in 1807, having been imprisoned in the penitentiary of La Force for attempting to overthrow the Empire. Feigning madness, he succeeded in being transferred to an asylum, where he successfully reknit his conspiracies, and finally escaped. On October twenty-third, 1812, he presented himself to the commander of the Paris guard, announcing Napoleon's death on the seventh; by the use of a forged decree of the senate purporting to establish a provisional republican government, and by the display of an amazing effrontery he secured the adhesion of both men and officers. Marching at their head, he liberated his accomplices, Lahorie and Guidal, from La Force, seized both Savary and Pasquier, minister and prefect of police respectively, and wounded Hulin, commandant of the city, in a similar attempt. But Doucet, Hulin's assistant, seized and overpowered the daring conspirator, Savary and Pasquier were at once released, and almost before the facts were known throughout the city the accomplices of the plot were all arrested. Malet and twelve of his associates were tried and executed.

The Paris wits declared that the police had made a great "tour de force," and as far as the city was concerned the affair appeared to have ended in a laugh. But Napoleon was dismayed, for he saw deeper. "It is a massacre," he exclaimed, on hearing of the number shot.

If the Russian campaign had been successful, it would have put the capstone on imperial splendor. But already its failure was known among the French masses, and ghastly rumors were rife; the Emperor himself was far distant; the Empress was not beloved; the little heir was scarcely a personage; the imperial administration was much criticized; the "system" was raising prices, depressing industry, and increasing the privations of every household. Pius VII. was now living in comfort at Fontainebleau, but he was a prisoner, and earnest Catholics were troubled; perhaps heaven was visiting France with retribution. Worst of all, ever since the nations at both extremities of Europe had risen in arms against Napoleon's tyranny French youth had perished under the imperial eagles in appalling numbers, and throughout the districts of France which were at heart royalist there was a rising tide of bitter vindictiveness.

What had occurred in Spain did not allay the general uneasiness. Marmont, having outmanœuvered Wellington until July twenty-second, had on that fatal day extended his left too far at Salamanca, and had suffered overwhelming defeat; southern Spain was lost to France. Suchet, having taken and held Tarragona, concentrated to the eastward, so that by his holding Aragon and Catalonia for Napoleon, Joseph could set up a government temporarily at Valencia. Wellington, hampered by the distracted condition of English politics, had felt bound, in spite of victory, to withdraw to the Portugal frontier. CHAP. II

CHAPTER III

THE PRODIGAL'S RETURN

WAR BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES — NAPOLEON RENEWS HIS STRENGTH — HIS ADMINISTRATIVE MEASURES — SOCIAL FORCES AND POLITICAL RESULTS — IDEAS OF PEACE — THE MILI-TARY SITUATION — THE CZAR'S RESOLUTIONS — THE CONVENTION OF TAUROGGEN — DEFECTION OF PRUSSIA — SUPREME EXERTIONS OF FRANCE IN NAPOLEON'S CAUSE — NAPOLEON AS A WONDER-WORKER.

Снар. III 1813

DY stringently enforcing the orders in council Canning had seriously injured Great Britain. It was in some sense the outcome of gen-D eral exasperation that early in May, 1812, Perceval, the Tory premier, was assassinated in the lobby of the House of Commons by Bellingham, a bankrupt of disordered mind. In the consequent reconstruction of the cabinet Castlereagh had succeeded the Marquis of Wellesley. On May thirteenth the disastrous orders were repealed, but the United States had already declared war. By land the Americans failed dismally at the outset; but at sea they were five times victorious in as many different engagements, two English frigates striking their flags to what was then considered as fairly equal force. This was a moral victory of immense importance. It was disproportionate of course to the actual English loss, which was easily reparable, but it was an appalling novelty to the British, who unwillingly realized that the sons had shown a seamanship of the highest quality and were not unworthy of their sires. The anxiety of Wellington and the maritime successes of the Americans were not unweleome lights in the otherwise dark picture of European affairs upon which Napoleon was forced to look after his return from Moscow.

The prodigal Emperor was undismayed; as he had recuperated his physical powers under incredible hardships, so he sharpened those of his mind amid the greatest difficulties. His first care was to make sure of France. To a deputation of the servile senate he roundly denounced all faint-hearted civil officials as menacing the authority of law. "Timid and cowardly soldiers," he said, "may cost a nation its independence; faint-hearted officials, however, destroy the authority of the laws. The finest death would be that of the soldier on the field of honor, were not that of the official who dies to defend his monarch, the throne, and the laws still more glorious." To the council of state he scored all such as had continued to attribute to the people a sovereignty which it was incapable of exercising; who derived authority, not from the principles of justice nor from the nature of things nor from civil rights, but from the caprice of persons who understood neither legislation nor administration. The meaning of such language was clear, and the words of the master sufficed to bring the entire machine into perfect order. The great officers of state were not slow in their response — from the police, from the university, from the courts came protestation after protestation of loyalty; the vocabulary of the French language was ransacked for terms to express the most fulsome adulation. Napoleon's firm front was in itself an inspiration, and such unanimity of devotion in high quarters confirmed the people in their changed tendency. Soon not merely the French nation but the whole Empire was once again under the magician's spell. Deputations began to arrive, not only from all parts of France itself, but from the great cities of central and western Europe, from Rome, Florence, Turin, and Milan, from Hamburg, Mainz, and Amsterdam, and the expressions of devotion uttered by the deputies were limited only by the possibilities of ex-Scoffing wits recalled the famous scene from Molière, in pression. which the infatuated Orgon displays indifference to his faithful wife and shows interest only in Tartufe.

TYPOGRAVURE DOUSSOD, VALADON & CO., PARIS

AQUARELLE MADE FOR THE CENTURY CO.

*

But in spite of this trenchant joke, Napoleonic government stood firm in France, and soon, this all-important point having been gained, there was not a little infectious enthusiasm, which grew in proportion as the Emperor deployed with every day and hour his marvelous faculties of administration. Reduced as the appropriations were, the public works in Paris went on; the naval station of Brest was completed; the veterans received their Emperor's minutest care; the destitute families of soldiers who had perished for France were relieved : the imperial pair were everywhere conspicuous when a good work was vot. IV.-3

CHAP. III

18

Снар. ПІ

1813

to be done. Finally, when a plan of regency for Maria Louisa was divulged, the praiseworthy, genuine sentiment which underlay these public activities was found to have reinforced their dramatic effect sufficiently to make the scheme acceptable. This plan, while giving to the Empress all the splendors of imperial sovereignty throughout both the Empire and the vassal states, was carefully constructed with wholesome checks. What she could not do was, however, less evident and less important than what she could do. In the hands of an able, devoted wife the regency might have been a tower of strength to an absent husband battling for the existence of his Empire; worked by a vain, flabby, and perhaps already disloyal nature, it had, with all its strength and display, but little value as a safeguard against the complots of the Talleyrand set, who desired the erash of the Empire that, amid the ruins, they might further pillage on their own account.

That the schemers were not sooner successful than they were is due to a combination of small things - each perhaps trivial in itself but the whole most efficacious in perpetuating Napoleon's hold on the French. During his presence in Paris all the old inquisitiveness and boundless concern for detail seemed to return without diminution of Before his last departure he had won the popular heart by the force. model family life of the Tuileries, which, though never ostentatiously displayed, was yet seen and widely discussed. In the thick of Russian horrors he had found time to correspond with his infant's governess concerning the difficulties and dangers of teething; it was felt that while the emperor and general was warring on the steppes of Muscovy, the husband and father was present in spirit on the banks of the Seine. On his return it was generally remarked that his reception into the bosom of his family was tender and affectionate, and that parental pride in a thriving child was paramount to the ruler's ambition for an established dynasty. The imperial pair were seen in company alike on the throughd thorough fares, and on the outer boulevards of Paris. They were always greeted with enthusiasm, sometimes there was a display of passionate loyalty. When the Emperor visited his invalid veterans, he tasted their food and would have the Empress taste it too; she graciously assented and there was universal delight. In short the domestic bliss of the Tuileries radiated happiness into the plain homes of the nation, and made the common people not merely tolerant but fond of such a paternal despotism.

Æт. 43]

Napoleon returned from Russia sincerely protesting that what he most desired was peace. Yes, peace; but of what kind? The answer was inclusive of the whole European question. It was easy to believe that Spain was nearly exhausted, that if the process of devastation could be continued three years longer, her shattered society would finally accept the gentle Joseph as its regenerator. It was not unnatural for the Emperor to regard his Confederation of the Rhine as safe and loyal; yet, just as in the Moscow campaign his superlative strategy far outran the remainder of his system, so he had failed, embodiment of the new social order as he believed himself to be, in fully estimating the creative force of the revolution in middle and south Germany. Some inkling of the national movement he must have had, for Schwarzenberg's lukewarmness had awakened suspicions of Austria, and Prussia's new strength could not be entirely concealed. Soon after reaching Paris he learned with dismay that his Prussian auxiliaries had made terms with the Czar. This was done in defiance of their king; but it indicated the national temper, which, seeing the hand of God in the disasters of the monster who after humiliating Prussia had dared to invade Russia, made it impossible for Prussian troops to serve again in the ranks of a French army. The bolts of divine wrath had fallen on the French and the French dependants, the Prussian and the Austrian contingents had escaped unscathed; both German armies must surely have been spared for a special purpose.

In his interview at Warsaw with De Pradt Napoleon had predicted that he would speedily have another army of three hundred thousand men afoot. In this rough calculation he had included both Prussians and Austrians. With a spirit of bravado, he there referred to the narrow escapes of his life : defeated at Marengo until six, next morning he had been master of Italy; at Essling, the rise of the Danube by sixteen feet in one night had alone prevented the annihilation of Austria; having defeated the Russians in every battle, he had expected peace; was it possible, he asked, for him to have foreseen the Russian character, or have foretold their heroic sacrifice of Moscow, for which doubtless he himself would catch the blame? So now, if his allies stood firm, he would have another great army, and still conquer. All this was not bluster, for his figures were in the main correct. Moreover, Russia's strength was steadily diminishing, a fact of which he was dimly aware. Of Kutusoff's two hundred thousand men only forty thousand remained when he entered Vilna after the Napoleonic forces had left it; Wittgenstein's army had suffered proportionately, and the troops from the Danube still worse. Kutusoff wanted peace quite as much as did Napoleon, and the ineffective Russian pursuit was intrusted to Yermoloff, an untried officer, to Wittgenstein, and to the incapable Tchitchagoff. The bickerings and insubordination of the French marshals had now become notorious, but they were fully offset by the discord and inefficiency of the Russian generals.

CHAP. III

CHAP. III

Alexander, however, was not for peace. Out of the rude experiences he had been undergoing there had been formed two fixed ideas; that Napoleon could not, even if he would, surrender his preponderance in Europe, and that he, himself, might hope to appear as the liberator of European nationality. For a moment it appeared possible for the Czar to establish himself as king of Poland by the aid of the Jesuits and of Czartorysky's friends. But the Jesuit leader knew that Napoleon's strength was far from exhausted, and fled to Spain. Czartorysky entertained the idea that in case of Napoleon's overthrow he might unite Poland under his own leadership and demand a truly liberal constitution, such as could not be worked by a Russian autocrat with three hundred thousand Russian soldiers at his back. Should the virtual independence of Poland be wrung from Alexander, and not secured by the French alliance, then the only available constitutional ruler would, he thought, be a member of his own princely family and not one of the rival Poniatowskis. The autocrat did not clearly understand the drift of his boyhood friend, but he saw enough to render the notion of reconstructing Poland in any form distasteful, and finally abandoned He then took the sensible resolution to recruit his strength, not by it. emptying his own lean purse, but by securing the coöperation with his forces of the strong armies built up by Prussia and Austria. It was therefore with a fairly definite purpose that, on December eighteenth, he left St. Petersburg for Vilna. He had in mind first to secure the fruits of victory by energetic pursuit, then to sound the temper of Prussia and Austria.

Murat had led the remnant of the grand army over the Niemen on December fourteenth; on the nineteenth he entered Königsberg. The day before Macdonald had learned by a despatch from Berthier of the final disasters to the Russian expedition, and on the twenty-eighth his van reached Tilsit. The Prussian auxiliaries were in the rear under COSSACKS AWAITING A FRENCH CAVALRY CHARGE PRONT THE AQCANLILE BY JAN V. CHELMISSEL York, who had been for nearly two months in regular communication with the Czar, and knew the details of Napoleon's rout, as Macdonald's did not. Wittgenstein had been despatched to cut off Macdonald's retreat. But with the dilatoriness which characterized all the Russian movements he came too late, a single detachment under Diebitsch falling in with the Prussians on their own territory. The Prussian general was in a quandary; he was quite strong enough to have beaten Diebitsch, but his soldiers were friendly to Russia and embittered against Napoleon. His own sympathies being identical with those of his men, and considering that he might in extremity plead his isolation, he therefore, on December thirtieth, concluded the convention of Tauroggen, in which he agreed to neutralize the district of Prussia which he occupied, and await orders from Berlin. Six days later an envoy arrived from Frederick William, nominally to degrade York, in reality to conclude a treaty of alliance with Russia.

By the assistance of Stein, who had been called from Vienna to counsel the Czar, such a document was finally composed and signed at Kalish on February twenty-eighth, 1813. Prussia and Germany were thus born again under the auspices of Russia. It was by the Czar's authorization that Stein began the reorganization of the provinces held by the Prussian troops. These circumstances left Murat's positions at Dantzic and on the Vistula untenable. Throughout the campaign he had been vastly more concerned for his personal prestige than for Napoleon's cause, and he was only too ready to leave a sinking ship. On January fifteenth, as has already been told, after surrendering his command to Eugène at Posen he left for Naples. He was in haste, for on the twelfth the Russians had entered the grand duchy of Warsaw on their way to its capital. Schwarzenberg, with his own and the remnants of two other corps, — those of Reynier and Poniatowski, — could easily have checked the foe; but the convention of Tauroggen had quickened the Austrian memory of Russia's friendly lukewarmness in 1809, Francis was in no humor to bolster the falling cause of his terrible son-in-law, and after some show of negotiation a temporary neutrality was arranged. When a few Cossacks appeared before Warsaw, on February sixth, the Austrian general evacuated the city as if yielding to superior force, and withdrew across the Vistula toward the frontier.

These blows seemed to fall lightly on the armor of Napoleon's intrepidity. So far from feeling any dismay the Emperor did not contemplate curtailing his ambition. Perhaps he was not entirely deceived; CHAP. III quite possibly, by the slightest exhibition of diminished activity, he 1813 might have weakened his influence in the great land which formed the heart of his dominions. As one piece of bad news after another reached Paris, each in turn seemed only a goad to new exertion for Emperor and people. France was by that time not merely enthusiastic; she was fascinated and adoring. The ordinary conscription of 1813 yielded a hundred and forty thousand recruits; four regiments were formed for artillery service from the idle sailors, three thousand men were taken from the gendarmerie, some even from the national guard. On January thirteenth the senate decreed a further draft of a hundred thousand from the lists of 1813, and ordered that the conscription for 1814 should be forestalled in order that the hundred and fifty thousand boys thus collected might be hardened by a year's camp life, and rendered available for immediate use when their time arrived. There is truth in the charge that Napoleon robbed the cradic and the grave. In order to officer this mighty host, which included about a third of the able-bodied men of France between seventeen and forty-five, such commanders as could be spared were called home from Spain, and the rabble of non-commissioned and commissioned officers which began to straggle in from Russia was drawn back into the service. These survivors were treated like conquerors, being praised and promoted until the nation became bewildered, and thought of the Russian campaign as a series of victories. Foreign visitors wrote that the Emperor had but to stamp his foot and armed men sprang up on every side like Æetes' corps of Colchian warriors on the field of Mars.

Æт. 43]

Снар. III 1813

The comparison halted—Napoleon was Æetes and Jason combined; he yoked the bulls that snorted fire and trod the fields with brazen hoofs, he held the plow and harrowed the field, he sowed the teeth and reaped the harvest. We have abundant proof that literally every department of administration felt the impulse of his will, while to the organization of the army, to the arrangement of uniforms, to the designing of gun-carriages, to questions concerning straps, buckles, and commissary stores, to the temper of the common soldier, to the opinion of the nation, to each and all these matters he gave such attention as left nothing for others to do. By this exhibition of giant strength there was created a true national impulse. With this behind them, the senate in April called out another body of a hundred and eighty thousand men, partly from the national guard and partly from those not ordinarily taken as recruits. By this time the farmsteads of France and western Germany had yielded up all their available horses, a number sufficient to make a brave show of both cavalry and artillery. Allowing for sickness, desertion, and malingering,— and of all three there was much,— France and her wizard Emperor had ready on May first a fairly effective force of nearly half a million armed men. This was exclusive of the Spanish contingent, and there were a hundred thousand more if the levies of Bavaria, Saxony, and the Rhenish confederation be reckoned. At the time men said a miracle had been wrought: it was the miracle of an iron will, a majestic capacity, and a restless persistence such as have been combined in few if any other men besides Napoleon Bonaparte. All that he could do was done,— equipment, drill, organization,— but even he could not supply the one thing lacking to make soldiers of his boys—two years of age and experience.

CHAP. III

CHAPTER IV

THE REVOLT OF THE NATIONS

- NAPOLEON AS A FINANCIER—FAILURE TO SECURE AID FROM THE ARIS-TOCRACY—THE FONTAINEBLEAU CONCORDAT—NAPOLEON DEFIANT— HIS PROJECT FOR THE COMING CAMPAIGN—STATE OF THE MINOR GERMAN POWERS—METTERNICH'S POLICY—ITS EFFECT IN PRUSSIA —PRUSSIA AND HER KING—THE NEW NATION—THE TREATY OF KALISH—THE SIXTH COALITION.
- HIS magic was wrought, moreover, without any assistance from CHAP. IV the precious army lists which Napoleon delighted to call his 1813 library, for those volumes had either been lost, destroyed, or left behind in distant headquarters: it was not merely by recalling his old powers, but by a supreme effort of memory so comprehensive that not even superlatives can describe it, that the great captain brought order into his military estate. No wonder that under such a strain the other tasks which demanded consideration were not so perfectly performed. The financial situation, the social uncertainty, the religious problem, none of these could be overlooked, and each in turn was elamorous for attention. In the methods employed to meet these emergencies the revolutionary training of the Emperor comes to light. To cover the enormous expense of his new army, contributions were "invited" from the rich corporations and financiers, and it was announced that any private person who was disposed to maintain a horse and rider for the imperial service would earn the Emperor's special gratitude. To any increase of the direct taxes the despot would not listen; "Credit," he said, "is but a dispensation from paying eash." In spite of Mollien's protest, however, a new issue of paper money was ordered, but for this there was collateral security. It was found in certain plots of land or domains belonging respectively to each of many thousand communes,

æ , -

MARSHAL NEY SUSTAINING THE REAR-GUARD OF THE GRAND ARMY

FROM THE PAINTING BY ADOLPHE YVON

THE REVOLT OF THE NATIONS

by the rentals of which they severally diminished their direct local taxes. Worth three hundred and seventy million francs, these properties yielded only nine millions, although their prospective returns would be far larger. With government five per cents. selling at seventy-five, an investment of a hundred and thirty-five millions would yield the interest actually received. This step was taken, the lands were seized, and the government eleared two hundred and thirty-five millions; a hundred and forty millions of the five per cents. were set aside to cover the income charges, and used simultaneously as collateral for notes to pay current expenses until the lands could be sold. These last were kept at a fair price by taking seventy-one millions of treasure from the Tuileries vaults for their purchase. Throughout the previous year the moribund legislature had been left inert, the budget being decreed without its consent, and the Emperor told Metternich at Dresden that he contemplated its abolition. In a crisis like this latest one, however, its aid was not to be despised; it was now galvanized, and made to stamp these puerile measures with the "popular" approval.

There has always been "a mystery in the soul of state." When men ceased to invest government with a supernatural character, they did not for all that dispel the mystery. Modern statesmen by the score have chosen to believe the occult doctrine that the state's promise to pay is payment, and Napoleon was one of these. He was equally childish in regard to the knotty social question which confronted him, apparently believing that his personal volition, as the expression of political power, was or ought to be equivalent to popular spontaneity. The mixture of the old and new aristocracies had, in spite of all efforts, been mechanical rather than chemical, except so far as that the former was rather the preponderating influence giving color to the compound. In order to make the blending real, the Emperor proposed a "spontaneous" rising of those high-born youth who had somehow escaped the conscrip-They were to be formed into four regiments, and designated tion. "guards of honor." The measure was found to be so utterly unpopular that it was for the moment abandoned; the young men had no stomach even for fancy campaigning, and their relatives no mind to deliver them up as hostages. The guard, moreover, displayed a violent jealousy.

There remained the ecclesiastical question, that, namely, of canonical institution. Pius VII. had lost much of his obstinacy since his removal to Fontainebleau, for the Austrian alliance was now the sheet-

VOL. IV.-4

Æт. 43]

CHAP, IV

CHAP. IV

anchor of France; the French ecclesiastics had threatened to depose the Pope; but the Roman Catholics of Bavaria, Italy, and Austria were loyal, and they were important factors in Napoleon's problem. After an exchange of New Year's compliments, negotiations between the temporal and the spiritual powers were reopened. At first the Emperor was exacting, and the Pope unyielding. Finally, on January eighteenth, Napoleon appeared in person at Fontainebleau, accompanied by Maria Louisa, and unannounced they entered the prisoner's apartment. The Pope started up in pleased surprise. "My father," eried his visitor. "My son," came the response. The Emperor caught the old man to his arms and kissed him. Next morning began a series of personal conferences lasting five days. What happened or what was said was never divulged by either participant, but on January twenty-third the terms of a new concordat were settled. Pius VII. was to reside at Avignon with his cardinals in the enjoyment of an ample revenue, and institute in due form the bishops selected by the council. There was to be amnesty for all prelates in disgrace, the sees of the Roman bishops were to be reëstablished, and the Pope was to have the nominations for ten bishoprics either in France or in Italy at his choice; his sequestered Roman domains were likewise to be restored. The document was not to be published without the consent of the cardinals, and Napoleon was actively to promote the innumerable interests of the Church. The Emperor and the Pope had scarcely separated before the former began to profess chagrin that he had gained so little, and the latter became a victim to real remorse. The cardinals were no sooner informed of the new treaty than they displayed bitter resentment, and Napoleon, foreseeing trouble, violated his promise, publishing the text of the Fontainebleau Concordat on February fourteenth as an imperial decree. On March twenty-fourth the Pope retracted even his qualified assent. The Emperor had gained a temporary advantage, and had asserted a sound position in antagonism to the temporal sovereignty of the Pope; but he had won no permanent support either from France or from the Roman see, with which he had dealt either too severely or too leniently.

In the previous July a treaty between the Czar and the Spanish nation, as represented by the Cortes, had been negotiated through the intermediation of Great Britain. The recent conduct of York was sufficient indication of how the Prussian people felt. Napoleon therefore knew that he was face to face with a virtual coalition, comprising Great Britain, Russia, Sweden, Turkey, Spain, and Prussia. Since his return from Russia he had displayed in private life the utmost good sense. But in public life he seemed incapable of accepting the situation in which he must have known himself to be, holding the loftiest and most pretentious language both to the French nation and to the world. In his address on the opening of the legislature he dwelt on Wellington's reverses in the peninsula, and offered peace to Great Britain on the old terms of "uti possidetis" in Spain. In a less public way he had it thoroughly understood throughout Europe that he would take no steps toward peace with Russia; that he would not yield an inch with reference to the grand-duchy of Warsaw, or regarding the annexed lands of Italy, Holland, and the Hanseatic league. It was as if the whole world must see that ordinary human concessions could not be expected from one who had been conquered only by act of Providence, and was, now as ever, invincible so far as men were concerned. He did. however, allow the hint to escape him that Prussia, which was still bound by her treaty, might hope for some territorial increase, and that Austria might expect Illyria. Such ideas, expressed in grandiloquent phrase, could not be regarded as indicating a pacific feeling. Everv social class in France had a grievance; yet amid the din of arms, and in the dazzling splendors of military preparation, even the retraction of the Concordat attracted little attention, and a few riots in Dutch cities, which were the only open manifestation of discontent throughout the whole Empire, aroused no interest at all. The report of Napoleon's conciliatory attitude had gone abroad, there was money in the treasury, a vast armament was prepared, the peace so ardently desired was evidently to be such as is made by the lion with his prey. On April fifteenth the still haughty Emperor of the West started for the seat of war.

Around the skeleton abandoned by Murat at Posen Eugène built up out of the stragglers an army of fourteen thousand men, which he hoped would enable him to make a stand; but with York deserting at one end of the line, and Schwarzenberg seeking shelter in Cracow at the other, he was compelled to withdraw to Berlin. Finding his reception too chilly for endurance, and being again menaced by the Russian advance, he fell back thence beyond the Elbe, and early in March had established his headquarters at Leipsic. By that time new forces had arrived from France and the various garrison towns, so that on the CHAP. IV eurving line from Bremen by Magdeburg, Bernburg, Wittenberg, Meissen, and Dresden, there stood a force of about seventy-five thousand men in six divisions, under Vandamme, Lauriston, Victor, Grenier, Davout, and Reynier. Napoleon charged Eugène to take a position before Magdeburg, whence he could protect Holland and keep Dresden. The Emperor's general plan was to assemble an Army of the Elbe on the line of Magdeburg, Havelberg, Wittenberg, and an Army of the Main on the line of Würzburg, Erfurt, Leipsic; then, despatching the former through Havelberg toward Stettin, to hurry the latter on its heels, relieve Dantzic, and seize the lower Vistula.

28

CHAP. IV

1813

This would have been a plan worthy of Napoleon's genius but for one fact. "In war," he had written four years earlier, "the moral element and public opinion are half the battle." If he had understood these factors in 1813, and if a sound judgment had developed his ideas, the projected campaign would have become famous for the boldness of its conception and for its careful estimate of natural advantages. But human nature as the conquering Napoleon had known it-at least Prussian human nature-had changed, and of this change the defeated Napoleon took no account. He was no longer fighting absolute monarchs with hireling armies, but uprisen nations which were themselves armies instinct with capacity and energy. On March twenty-first Eugène began to carry out his stepfather's directions. But for the new feeling in Prussia they might have been fully executed. The vassal princes of the Rhine Confederacy had received the imperial behests concerning new levies. The Duke of Meeklenburg-Schwerin, aware of the German national movement and furthest removed from French influence, refused to obey. King Jerome of Westphalia pleaded poverty, and procrastinated until he dared do so no longer. Bavaria dreamed for an instant of asserting her neutrality, but the menace of French armaments wrung an unwilling compliance from her. Wurtemberg and Frankfurt were too near France to hesitate at all. Saxony was in a position far different from that of any other state in the confederation, the predicament of Frederick Augustus her king being peculiar and exceptional. After his interview with Napoleon on the latter's flight through Dresden he felt how precarious was the future. Warsaw, the gem of his crown, was gone, and the Prussian people were in revolt against the Emperor of the French; he turned perforce toward Austria. But Austria also was uneasy; the people were again hostile to Napoleon, and Francis, in

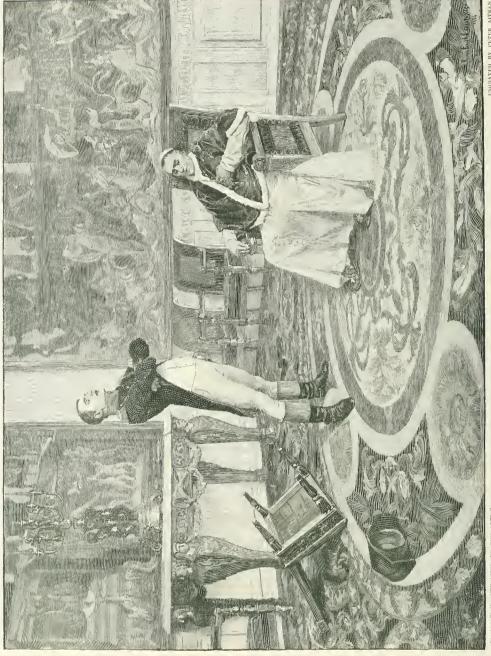

[ÆT. 43

.

· · ·

NAPOLEON AND PIUS VII AT FONTAINEBLEAU

BUCATION AUTHORIZED BY THE ART

an agony of uncertainty, could only temporize. With Saxony in this CHAP. IV attitude, Metternich gave full course to his ingenuity.

For a year past that minister had been playing a double game. Seeking through his envoy at Stockholm to embroil Bernadotte with the Czar, he told Hardenberg almost simultaneously that it was all up with Russia, that England was worn out, and that Austria was about to assume the rôle of mediator. It was with this purpose that, on the other hand, he promised to treat Russia as Russia had treated Austria in 1809. When, in his despair, Napoleon wrote to Francis from Dresden demanding an increase of the Austrian contingent to check Kutusoff's advance through Poland, Metternich suffered his master to give no answer, but sent a special peace embassy to London, and despatched Bubna, a favorite with Napoleon, to seek the same end at Paris. The Emperor of the French laid down his old ultimatum, but offered a subsidy to Austria if she would double the number of her auxiliaries. Thereupon Metternich prepared to desert Napoleon, refused to furnish the auxiliaries, ordered Schwarzenburg "to save his troops for the next campaign," and secretly advised Prussia to join her cause with that of Russia. Careful not to formulate any definite terms for the peace he so clamorously invoked, he refused to intervene with Russia for the restoration of Prussian Poland, thus avoiding an open rupture with France, assuring that the seat of war would be in Saxony, and gaining time to secure Austria's dignity as a mediator by the preparations of armaments strong enough to enforce her suggestions.

This attitude compelled Prussia to make a decision. Frederick William could no longer wage a sham warfare nor cover hostile intentions by a pretense of disinterestedness. A decision must be taken, and the conduct of General York had indicated what the painful conclusion must be. The convention of Tauroggen had been duly disavowed; but an envoy was at Russian headquarters, and Alexander had entered Prussian territory in his advance against Eugène; Napoleon was demanding an increased auxiliary force. The temporizer could temporize no longer. He firmly believed that nothing short of a coalition between Austria, Russia, and Prussia could annihilate France, and Austria had virtually refused to enter such a combination. Russia, moreover, was under no engagement in regard to Prussian Poland. What was to be done? The king's first instinct led him to seek refuge with Napoleon, and he despatched an envoy, offering his continued al-

[ÆT. 43

Снар. 1V 1813 liance for either an increase of territory, or for ninety million franes in payment of the commissary supplies furnished during 1812. With every day, however, the Prussian people grew more Russian in feeling, and on January twenty-second, 1813, before the return of the ambassador the court was forced by popular opinion to withdraw from Berlin to Bresłau, out of the sphere of French influence. Napoleon's answer soon arrived; there was no word of payment, and no binding engagement as to territory—merely a repetition of vague promises. Frederick William was disappointed, and reluctantly eonsented to the mobilization of his now regenerated and splendid army. He cherished the hope of keeping Alexander behind the Vistula, and forcing Napoleon to an armistice before he could cross the Elbe.

But Hardenberg, Stein, and Schamhorst were all convinced that there could be no peace in Europe without restoring the aneient balance of power and annihilating Napoleon's preponderance, especially since, from every class in the nation, came addresses and petitions expressing detestation of French rule. Moreover, the long, difficult process of German unification was, in a sense, complete. "I have but one fatherland, and that is Germany," wrote Stein, in December, 1812; "the dynasties are indifferent to me in this moment of mighty development." A born and consistent liberal, he abhorred alike the tyranny of Napoleon, of Francis, of Alexander, and of his own king. But the Czar loved him, since a united Germany would be indifferent to those Polish provinces about which Prussia eared so much. Certain, therefore, of the Russian monarch, the great statesman determined to join Frederick William at Breslau, and urge on the work of mobilizing troops. Already, by Alexander's authority, he had induced the estates of eastern Prussia to sanction York's action, and to provide for arming the militia and reserves. Their ready compliance was the more significant because the German patriot had to some extent been out of touch with the general movement, having consistently and from principle refused to work through the popular League of Virtue, or any secret association whatsoever, and having become in his long exile a virtual stranger among the Prussians.

It is scareely possible within moderate limits to give the faintest conception of Prussia at the opening of 1813. The popular hatred of Napoleon was defiant; the death of Queen Louisa had made the King sullen There was a splendid army of a hundred and fifty thousand Æт. 43] men, and the statesmen had managed so well that there were arms for every able-bodied male between seventeen and twenty-four. Of these searcely any shirked; most volunteered, numbers paid, many did both. The women sold their hair and their gold ornaments, wearing iron trinkets as a stimulus to patriotism. In some cases the stout German maidens served the guns of their artillery, and one of them, disguised in a uniform, fought in the ranks until seriously wounded. The peasantry saw their homesteads destroyed with equanimity when told that it would weaken France. Körner sang and fought; Arndt sounded the trumpet of German unity; Lützow gathered his famous "black troop," and the universities were so fervid that Professor Steffens of Breslau issued the first call for war against Napoleon, a summons which swept the students of that university, as well as those of Berlin, Königsberg, Halle, Jena, and Göttingen into the ranks. Wherever the Russians appeared they were hailed as deliverers, not merely in the Prussian army, but among the citizens.

This was the impelling power which Frederick William could not Step by step he went forward, postponing his plans for getting resist. back his Polish provinces and accepting instead contingent promises. By the treaty of Kalish, already mentioned in another connection, Old Prussia was definitely guaranteed to him, and he was to have a strip connecting it with Silesia, but the territorial aggrandizement of the kingdom was to await the eonquest of North Germany, all of which except Hanover might under certain eircumstances be incorporated under his erown. Both parties agreed to use their best endeavors to win Austria for the evalition, Russia promising likewise to seek a subsidy from Great Britain for her impoverished ally. Another stipulation was fulfilled when on March seventeenth Frederick William called out all the successive services of the national army and, summoning his people to emancipate their country from a foreign yoke, declared war. Two days later a ringing proclamation was issued which summoned to arms not merely Prussians but even the Germans of the Rhine Confederation. Hesitating princes were threatened with loss of their domains, and what was a very pointed hint-Stein was made head of an administrative committee to erect new governments in all occupied lands. Kutusoff's last public act was to issue a manifesto declaring that those German princes who were untrue to the German cause were ripe for destruction by the power of public opinion and the might of righteous arms.

CHAP. IV

- CHAP. IV
- 1813

Such a situation was terrible for the King of Saxony. Russia already had his grand duchy, Prussia coveted his kingdom; in fact the Czar was currently and correctly reported to have said that Saxony was better suited than Poland to round out Frederick William's dominions. Dresden welcomed the Russian and Prussian sovereigns because the citizens were smarting under the trials of military occupation. But when the King turned to Austria, and marching with his cavalry to Ratisbon virtually put his army at Metternich's disposal, the Saxons in general supported him. On April twentieth was signed a secret agreement between Saxony and Austria whereby the former in return for thirty thousand troops secured the integrity of her dominions. This was a triumph for the Austrian minister, but not the only one, because European diplomacy in general soon joined hands with the national uprisings. Napoleon, determining too late on the dismemberment of Prussia, made a last attempt to win back his old comrade in arms, and in February offered Bernadotte not merely Pomerania, but the lands between the Elbe and the Weser. But the crafty Gascon had studied the Prussian movement, and, putting aside the rather indefinite promises of Napoleon, preferred to join the coalition for the safer, easier prize of Norway. Great Britain abandoned her scheme for a Hanover expanded to stretch from the Scheldt to the Elbe, and, subsidizing both Sweden and Prussia, cemented the new coalition. This was a return to Pitt's policy of restoring the old balance of power in the old Europe. Bernadotte, promising thirty thousand men, transported twelve thousand across to Germany, and joined Bülow to cover Berlin. This force soon became the Russian right. Kutusoff died in April, and Barclay was ultimately restored to the chief command, having Blücher and a second Prussian army as part of the Russian center. Metternich saw that the coalition did not intend to conclude such a peace as would leave Napoleon the preponderance in Europe; to secure any peace at all'he would be compelled, as Talleyrand said, to become king of France. Accordingly a new turn was quickly given to Austrian diplomacy, and the French emperor's definite offer of Silesia for a hundred thousand men was rejected. With the thirty thousand which Saxony had put at his disposal, and with such an army as Austria herself could raise, the minister felt sure that at some critical moment she would be able, as a well-armed mediator, to command a peace in terms restoring to his country the prestige of immemorial empire.

EUGÈNE DE BEAUHARNAIS (PRINCE EUGÈNE) DUKE OF LEUCHTENBERG, PRINCE OF EICHSTÄDT

FROM THE PAINTING BY HENRI SCHEFFER

.

29.

.

.

CHAPTER V

THE FIRST CAMPAIGN IN SAXONY

NAPOLEON OVER HASTY — WEAKNESS OF HIS ARMY — THE LOW CON-DITION OF THE ALLIES — NAPOLEON'S PLAN THWARTED — THE FIRST MEETING A SURPRISE — THE BATTLE OF LÜTZEN — AN ORDINARY VICTORY — THE MEDIATION OF AUSTRIA — NAPOLEON'S EFFORT TO APPROACH RUSSIA — THE BATTLE OF BAUTZEN — DEATH OF DUROC — NAPOLEON'S GREATEST BLUNDER.

CHAP. V

1813

THE grim determination of Napoleon to rule or ruin can be read in L a line of conduct which might almost be called foolhardy, inasmuch as when he arrived at Mainz, on April seventeenth, he knew little or nothing of the enemy's position, force, or plans. Desirous of preventing his foe in opening the campaign he spent a week of fruitless endeavor at that place, and then started for Erfurt to obtain a nearer The general aspect of his soldiers was not reassuring, for the view. young recruits were still raw and the immaturity of his preparations was evident in a lack of trained horses and riders. He had stolen three weeks from the enemy, but he had robbed himself of all that his indefatigable energy might have accomplished in that time. His recklessness in diplomacy, his refusal of all concessions, and his exaggerated cleverness in anticipating his opponents were to prove his undoing from the military point of view. The other elements of his failure were the political factors already mentioned.

At the first appearance of Tettenborn's Cossacks, Hamburg rose and drove out the French, remaining in possession of the allies until the end of May; but the trusty French garrisons in Dantzic, Stettin, Küstrin, Glogau, Modlin, and Zamosc, having been reinforced by Eugène, held their respective strongholds, and were left to do so. The absence of these much-needed veterans was the first element of weakness

VOL. IV.-5.

CHAP. V in Napoleon's army. A second was the insufficiency of real eavalry, brave as had been the parade of horses in France. It was the great captain's firm conviction, repeatedly and emphatically expressed, that without active cavalry, armed with long-range guns, offensive warfare was not possible. This defect he had hoped to remedy in the last three weeks before opening the campaign. The third element in a fatal triad was the temper of his generals, which was restless and insubordinate almost from the outset. They were his mightiest men: Berthier as chief of staff; Mortier commanding the guard; Davout, Ney, Bertrand, Lauriston, Marmont, Reynier, Macdonald, and Oudinot, each in readiness with a corps, Victor coming up with another; Augereau preparing to lead the Bavarians, Rapp at Dantzic, Poniatowski in Galicia —twelve corps in all.

> The French soldiers formed a great army: two hundred and thirtyfive thousand men on paper, actually two hundred thousand, of whom a hundred and thirty-five thousand were mobile and in readiness when the Emperor took command. Eugène had forty-seven thousand more. Consequently when Napoleon, troubled by the exaggerated reports of his enemy being stronger and more forward in preparation than he had believed possible, set out for Saxony three weeks earlier than the day originally fixed by him for the beginning of hostilities, he was already a victim of his own nervous apprehensions. In colder phlegm he would have foreseen the truth. Russia had become apathetic as soon as the seat of war was transferred beyond her borders; strenuous as were the efforts of Prussia, Scharnhorst's means were slender, and he could not work miraeles. All told, the allies had at the moment only seventy thousand men ready for the field. Wittgenstein was for the moment commander-in-chief. The monarchs, utterly uncongenial, were struggling to act in harmony, but double weakness is not strength. Thev had only a single advantage - excellent horses in abundance for both eavalry and artillery. "The worse the troops, the greater the need of artillery"; "Great battles are won with artillery"; these were two of Napoleon's aphorisms. The great strategist had lost his reconnoitering arm in Russia and Poland, the artillery specialist must have seorned the antiquated guns which now replaced the splendid field-pieces that rested on the bottom of ponds and rivers whither he had flung them on his disastrous retreat. With his high officers sullen, his ranks untried, his eavalry feeble, his artillery hastily collected from arsenal stores, his staff incomplete, and his prestige waning, the Emperor might well abdicate temporarily and exclaim, as he did, "I shall conduct this war as General Bonaparte." This resolution was sacredly kept.

The premature opening of the campaign was certain to make Austria pivotal in European polities once again. Her preparations were not well advanced, but her strength was growing daily, while that of her rivals was sure to diminish until in the end the coalition would be powerless This Napoleon saw, and he arranged his strategy to without her. checkmate what he now felt to be a hostile neutrality. Believing that the enemy would meet him half way his first plan showed all the marks of greatness which characterized the similar one he had so successfully executed at Jena. Its central idea was a mass formation with Eugène to break through the enemy's line, then by a wheel toward the south to annihilate their left, and finally to present himself victorious before Austria. If successful he might dictate his own terms. But the enemy did not advance; it was perhaps well for the Emperor of the French that they did not. An eye-witness declared that on what was supposed to be the very eve of battle there was little real discipline outside the sphere of the commander's personal observation, that the officers had no confidence in their men and the men but little in their officers, that the superiors were absorbed in securing some measure of physical comfort, that the inferiors were listless and disobedient. The forward movement was successful, and the union with Eugène was effected on April twenty-eighth. Two whole days elapsed, however, before the enemy was found, and it was May first when the French van drove in the Russian outposts from Lützen, ever famous as the scene of Wallenstein's overthrow by Gustavus Adolphus a hundred and eighty-one years earlier. The Russian center was concentrated between the Elster and the Pleisse; Napoleon's line was more extended, overlapping his enemy's both right and left. In a preliminary skirmish at the pass of Rippach, Bessières, rashly exposing himself at the head of the cavalry of the guard, was killed. His loss in such a crisis was like the ruin of a great cohort on the eve of a close battle. Marmont, forgiven for his failure in Spain, was near; but close to Napoleon as he was, even he could not replace the gallant, trusted cavahy leader who for nearly seventeen years had scareely quitted his Emperor's side.

Owing probably to the inadequate scouting force of Napoleon, the battle of Lützen was in the nature of a surprise. Wittgenstein had CHAP. V detached five thousand men as if to cover Leipsic, toward which the 1813 French line was advancing; then, concentrating the mass of his center and left, he crossed the Elster early on May second in order to attack Ney's corps on the Emperor's right. About nine Lauriston's corps, with which Napoleon was, came upon the enemy, and was fiercely engaged — so hotly, indeed, that it seemed as if it must be the Russian right wing which barred the way. A messenger was immediately despatched to bring in Nev, who arrived about eleven. The marshal and his emperor at once advanced to reconnoiter, and were just remarking that there was only a small force between them and the city, which through their field-glasses they could dimly discern in the background, its roofs crowded with curious onlookers, when behind, on the right, was heard the sound of heavy cannonading. General Bonaparte was himself at once. No movement is considered more difficult than that by which an army marching in columns wheels when attacked on its flank, so as in turn to outflank the assailants. In a flash, and apparently without a thought, the Emperor issued minute orders for this intricate manœuver, and his generals accomplished it with a masterly dexterity. Napoleon then galloped forward toward Lützen to carry the guard behind the center as a reserve, and Ney dashed into the thickest of the fight to take command of his boy conscripts, who were beginning to yield.

Æт. 43]

Спар. V 1813

> The conflict raged all day, with varying results, along the line from Great and Little Görschen to Starsiedel, the latter hamlet being the scene of terrific fighting. At five the Prussians withdrew from Kaja, and began to yield along the whole line as far as the Görschens, which they had so far held. Napoleon had from the outset been reckless, cheering his boys by presence and example until they fought like veterans. As the Prussians gave signs of weakness, he brought in his artillery, poor as it was, with the old grand style, and ordered the young guard into the gap he felt sure of making. A Russian reserve arrived, however, at the crucial instant, and stayed his onset until seven. At that hour Macdonald bore down his opponents at Eisdorf, and attacked the Russo-Prussian line on the flank; the second column was then hurled against its center, and the battle was ended. The Russian reserve was strong enough to prevent the retreat from becoming a rout, but since Lauriston had occupied Leipsic

IN THE MUSEUM OF VERSAILLES

GÉRARD-CHRISTOPHE-MICHEL DUROC DUKE OF FRIULI

FROM THE FAINTING BY AN UNKNOWN ABTIST

.

*

THE FIRST CAMPAIGN IN SAXONY

as early as two in the afternoon there was but one course open for the allies: to withdraw behind the Elbe. Napoleon gathered his army into three columns and followed; but slowly and circumspectly, because without cavalry he could not harass them. When, on May eighth, the French reached Dresden, they found that their enemy had blown up the bridges, and were entrenched in the Neustadt on the right, or north, shore. Thus the victory of Lützen was, after all, indecisive.

And yet the utmost skill and bravery had been shown by the combatants on both sides. The field was strewn with the corpses, not of such rude and stalwart peasants as had hitherto filled the ranks of opposing armies, but of gentle youth from French lyceums and Prussian universities. There were forty thousand in all, an equal number from each army, who remained dead or wounded on the hard-contested field. They had fallen to little purpose. The victor captured neither prisoners nor guns in important numbers, and to him it was slight compensation for the loss of Bessières that Scharnhorst was killed. The allies, though beaten, were undismayed; long experience had sharpened their wits and toughened their purpose; there was already much strategical ability at their headquarters, and there was about to be more, since Moreau, summoned from America, was soon to take service with his splendid powers against his country. Great as the battle was, it must therefore be reckoned as an ordinary victory; it served to prolong existing conditions, but it did not decide an issue. It was, however, something that it gave the French a self-confidence bordering on enthusiasm, and it was more that after Napoleon had commenced to rebuild the Dresden bridges, Frederick Augustus, the King of Saxony declared himself favorable to the French. Abandoning Austria, he summoned his forces from Torgau, and the allies retreated eastward behind the Spree. The lower Elbe was also recovered. The King of Denmark had despatched an auxiliary force to Hamburg. Their commander, believing Napoleon's fortunes submerged already, at first assisted the Russians: but after Lützen he turned his arms to Vandamme's assistance. The city was retaken, three thousand of Bernadotte's force marched out, and on May thirtieth Davout, with fifteen thousand of his own men and three thousand Danes, marched in.

Napoleon's chief purpose, however, was unfulfilled, for Austria was neither panic-stricken nor dismayed. On the contrary she still stood forth as a mediator, and now with armaments to enforce her demands.

Æт. 43]

Снар. V

Immediately after Lützen, Stadion, sometime Austrian minister of war, CHAP. V was sent to the camp of the allies. He stated that the minimum terms 1813 of peace would be the dismemberment of Warsaw, the restoration of Prussia, the surrender by France of Holland, Oldenburg, and the Hanseatic lands, the abandonment of the protectorate over the Confederation of the Rhine by Napoleon, and the surrender to Austria of Illyria and Dalmatia, with a rectification of her western frontier. Almost simultaneously Bubna appeared at Napoleon's headquarters with suggestions for a general armistice, during which peace negotiations should be carried on as rapidly as possible by a congress of the powers. Dwelling on the necessity of territorial concessions by France for the sake of a general pacification of the Continent, the envoy declared that if this were accomplished, Great Britain, finding herself isolated, must yield, and grant to Napoleon a substantial indemnification from her vast colonial system. The propositions of Austria were received by the allies with open eagerness, by the Emperor of the French with apparent hesitancy. Next to the establishment of his Continental empire, the humiliation of Great Britain was Napoleon's highest ambition. Compromise with her meant defeat. With a mixture of proud determination and anxiety, he therefore replied to Francis that he desired a pacification as ardently as any one; that he was ready for such a congress as was suggested; that he would even go further, and admit to it delegates from the insurgent Spaniards; that he would still further consent to a truce during its sessions : but that he would rather die at the head of his high-spirited Frenchmen than make himself ridiculous before England. Never was the writer's statecraft unfolded to greater daring. Long consultations were held with the King of Saxony, a man of gentleness and refinement, who was completely won by Napoleon's almost filial attentions, and Bubna was often kept at the council-table until after midnight. Eugène, however, was instantly despatched to raise a new army in Italy, with orders not to conceal his movements from Austria.

> But Napoleon's chief efforts were put forth in the direction of Russia. The adroit Caulaincourt was chosen as a fitting envoy, and instructed not merely to reknit his personal relations with the Czar, but also to surrender every point which had been contested in the previous negotiations. He was to offer first the surrender of the Continental system as far as Russia was concerned, and second such a reconstruction of the map of eastern Europe as would put an end to the grand duchy of Warsaw forever. This mushroom state, with the domain of Dantzic, was to be divided between the Duke of Oldenburg, Alexander's near kinsman, and the King of Prussia; Prussia itself was to be a border state under Russian influence, with a capital at either Königsburg, Dantzie, or Warsaw. Brandenburg, with Berlin, would fall to Jerome, and Saxony would doubtless get the territory around Krossen. No surrender could have been more complete. "Your chief concern," ran the final instruction, written on May seventeenth, "will be to secure a conversation with the Emperor Alexander. My intention is to build a golden bridge to save him from the intrigues of Metternich." Alas for such vain hopes! A new diplomatic star had risen at the Russian court in the person of the young Count Nesselrode, and the personal interview so earnestly desired by Caulaincourt was steadily refused; Napoleon's proposals, the envoy was informed, must be made through the Austrian cabinet, or not at all.

During the parleyings of Austria Napoleon won a second great victory, which was utterly ineffectual because he had no cavalry force wherewith to pursue. For some days after the occupation of Dresden, for the same reason, he had been ignorant of his enemy's whereabouts. Learning at last that the allies had not been separated, as he had hoped, but were standing at Bautzen in a strong defensive position behind the Spree, he left Dresden at noon on the eighteenth of May, determined to strike a decisive blow. His enemy, having been reinforced by Barclay with sixteen thousand Russians, and by Kleist with eleven thousand Prussians, was about ninety thousand strong. On the nineteenth both Barclay and York advanced from Bautzen; the former was defeated by Bertrand in a sharp struggle, the latter by Lauriston in a protracted fight; and at nightfall the French were before the place. In front was the unimportant stream, and beyond it were the allies in a double line, their front on the bank, their rear on the heights behind. About midday of the twentieth the French attacked. Macdonald stormed the bridge, Marmont and Bertrand crossed by pontoons; at three their footing was won, and the assault of the place began. For three hours the fighting was terrific, but at six a portion of the defenders withdrew behind the town to the second line; at eight the rest did likewise. Next morning at five, Napoleon, after a sleepless night, issued his orders; at eight the conflict opened all along the line. Then first, the Mameluke body-servant having spread a couch of skins, the Emperor sought repose; he slept to the lullaby of cannon and musketry for several hours, calmly assured of his combinations working perfectly. By one Ney had rolled up the Russian right under Barelay, and Napoleon, waking, sent Marmont and Bertrand around the right of the enemy's center. By four the allied armies were in full retreat. Then would have been the moment for artillery to crash and cavalry to pursue; but neither was efficient, and while the French army did what men could do, at best they could only follow at equal speed with the foe, and could not throw his ranks into disorder. "What! no results from such carnage?" said Napoleon. "Not a gun? not a prisoner?"

Снар. V 1813

[ÆT. 43

Снар. V

There was worse to come. From time to time the flying columns wheeled and poured a heavy artillery fire into their pursuers. Near Reichenbach, Bruvères was killed by a ball; then Kirchener by another, which, ricochetting from a tree, mortally wounded Duroc, the commander's faithful aid, his second self. Such a blow was stupefying indeed, for it was the loss of his closest confidant, of one who through every vicissitude had been a near, true friend, almost the only companion of a man reduced to solitude by his great elevation. Napoleon was stricken to the heart, and, halting, gave way until nightfall to his despair. "Poor man!" said the troopers one to another, "he has lost his children." "Everything to-morrow," was the sorrowing ruler's one reply to all suggestions. From time to time he betook himself to the bedside of the dying man; at last Duroc himself could no longer endure his Emperor's prostration, and besought him to rejoin the soldiers. The friends parted in a long embrace. Thereupon the pursuit was continued, but without ardor and without success.

The nature of Napoleon's victory at Bautzen was his undoing. Had it been a second Friedland, Caulaincourt no doubt would have met Alexander; but, as it was, the allies had saved their army, and Austria's accession to the coalition would still insure their success. Nesselrode was convinced that Metternich would assent, and, dark as was the hour, persisted in refusing to communicate with France except by way of Austria. Wittgenstein lost his command, Barelay was fully reinstated as commander-in-chief, and, to gain time for Austria to try her vaunted mediation, a short armistice was proposed to Napoleon. Had the latter known the weakness, the discord, the exhaustion of his foe, wretched as was the state of his own army and depressed as were his

IN THE MUSEUM OF VERSAILLES

ENGRAVED DY CHARLES STATE

MARSHAL JEAN-BAPTISTE BESSIÈRES DUKE OF ISTRIA

FROM THE PAINTING BY EDMOND HÉDOURN, AFTER MIESENER

ÆT. 43]

spirits, he might have refused, and even the monumental error of 1812 might now have been made good. As it was, the year 1813 is the date of his one irreparable blunder, the initiation of his final disaster. Other mistakes he had made, but they were all petty compared with the great one to which he was now tempted. But his faithful officers were falling like standing grain under a hail-storm; his boy soldiers, though fighting like veterans, inspired little confidence, for there was the same uncasiness among the humble privates as among the great officers; he had neither cavalry nor artillery, and his available force was reduced to a hundred and twenty thousand, men and boys; Barclay might, as for a moment he contemplated doing, draw off into the Russian steppes; the traitors in Paris were already stirring; in short, the Emperor felt that he must at least consider. This was the monumental blunder of his life because it put him at Austria's merey without her being forced to reveal her policy.

CHAP. V

CHAPTER VI

THE NATIONS IN GRAND ARRAY

Condition of Affairs after Bautzen — The Armistice of Poischwitz — Austria's New Terms — Napoleon's Reliance on his Dynastic Influence — Intervention of British Agents — Napoleon's Interview with Metternich — The Emperor's Wrath — Metternich's Determination — Wellington's Victories — Napoleon at Mainz — The Coalition Completed — Diplomatic Fencing — Renewal of Hostilities — The Responsibility.

CHAP. VI 1813

NAPOLEON determined, however, to deliberate on the strongest possible vantage-ground, and for this reason continued his pursuit as far as Breslau, which was occupied by the end of the month. Simultaneously Berlin was threatened by Oudinot, Victor had relieved Glogau, and Vandamme was marching to Davout's assistance, so that Hamburg was safely in hand. The allied forces stood behind Schweidnitz, and by the same marvelous strategy as of old the various corps of the French army were disposed, under Ney, Lauriston, Reynier, Macdonald, and Bertrand, so as virtually to engirdle the enemy. Napoleon was at Neumarkt with the guard; a single bold dash southward toward the Eulen Mountains with his concentering force, and he would have crushed his opponents. But another victory like Lützen and Bautzen would reduce his army still further, and then in his weakness he would be confronted by the hundred thousand Austrians which, according to the best advices, his father-in-law had assembled in Bohemia. In that juncture Francis might risk a battle, and if successful he could dictate not merely an armistice, but the terms of peace-a contingency more terrible than any other. Time, moreover, seemed quite as valuable to the Emperor of the French as to his foe: while they were calling in reserves and strengthening their ranks, his hundred and eighty thousand conscripts of 1814 could be marched to the Elbe, and Eugène could complete his work in Italy. Ignorant of the panic at his enemy's headquarters, the uneasy conqueror decided therefore that his best course was, by exhibiting a desire for peace and assenting to an armistice, to avoid the general reprobation of Europe. Accordingly, he took another disastrous step, and accepted the proposal of the allies for a conference.

How earnestly Napoleon desired peace appears from his spontaneous concessions. He would agree to the evacuation of Breslau for the sake of harmony, and would consent to such a truce as the majesty of a ruler and the rights of a successful general might alike exact; but he would not be treated like a besieged commander, Hamburg should remain as it was at the conclusion of negotiations, and the duration of the armistice must be longer than the term proposed — six weeks at the least. On these two points he took his stand. The fatal armistice of Poischwitz was signed at that village on June fourth by three commissioners, Shuvaloff for Russia, Kleist for Prussia, and Caulaincourt for France. It was a compromise providing for a neutral zone, stretching from the mouth of the Elbe southeastward to Bohemia, which was to separate the combatants until July twentieth. Hostilities might not be renewed until August first. Breslau was to be evacuated; Hamburg was to remain as the truce found it. These terms were reached only after much bluster, the allies, weak and disorganized as they were, demanding at first the evacuation of both Breslau and Hamburg, with a cessation of arms for a month. This stand they took in reliance partly on England, partly on Austria. The compromise, as mutually accepted, was reached in spite of British influence, when Francis, apparently nervous and anxious, arrived at Gitschin, near the Bohemian frontier, and opened a conference with Nesselrode.

At Vienna men had said, when the news of Bautzen came, that the conqueror was perhaps an angel, perhaps a devil — certainly not a man. The cabinet had seen with alarm his attempt to negotiate directly with the Czar. Success in winning Russia would put Austria again at Napoleon's mercy; Alexander must be kept in warlike humor at all hazards. Nesselrode demanded nothing less than Austria's adherence to the coalition; Francis was still unready to fight; and Metternich, displaying all his adroitness, finally wrung from Nesselrode a basis for mediation comprising six articles: the extinction of Warsaw, the enCHAP. VI largement of Prussia by her Polish provinces and Dantzic, the restoration of Illyria to Austria, the independence of the Hanseatic towns, the dissolution of the Rhenish Confederacy, and the restoration of Prussia's western boundaries to the lines of 1806. This was a "minimum" considerably smaller than that proposed before Bautzen; but the allies could well accept it if Austria would promise never to take sides with France, as Metternich is said to have verbally assured the Czar in a secret meeting would be the case. On June twenty-seventh it was formally arranged that a congress to pacify the Continent on this basis should be held preliminary to a general peace including England; and the treaty binding Russia, Prussia, and Austria to alliance in case of Napoleon's refusal was signed that day in secret at Reichenbach. Should Napoleon reject Austria's articles of mediation, she was, on July twentieth, to join the coalition, and fight not only until he was driven behind the Rhine, but until the fortresses on the Oder and the Vistula were evacuated, Italy liberated, Spain restored to the Bourbons, and Austria reënlarged to her boundaries of 1805. "If the allies do not in good faith desire peace," said Napoleon on June fifth, as he left his headquarters for Dresden, "this armistice may prove fatal to us." Late in life he believed that if he had in his great crisis marched right on, Austria would not have declared against him. Shrewd as he was, he was a tyro in dynastic politics. Austria has been made, aggrandized, and saved by marriages; but no conception of the duty imposed on families by that relation as understood in private life has ever controlled her politics. Francis was never unwilling to use his daughter for public ends, and seems to have delighted in the construction of family feeling formed in his son-in-law's mind by homely sentiment. It is preposterous to suppose that Napoleon really entertained such a view of his marriage as that of the Parisian bourgeois; but viewing himself as an established dynastic ruler, he could well imagine that when Austria had her choice between two purely dynastic alliances, she would, for the sake of Maria Louisa, have chosen that with France. This rather simple conception he seems to have entertained for a time, because when Maret and Metternich met, the former urged the matrimonial bond as a consideration. "The marriage," rejoined the latter, with a cough—"yes, the marriage; it was a match founded on political considerations, but-" and the conclusion of the sentence was a significant wag of the head.

CHAP. VI

BARON HENRI JOMINI

Napoleon's first instinct of treachery was that of the general, and it was sound. His suspicions were fully aroused as soon as he reached Dresden; for Bubna began at once to stickle for antiquated formalities in negotiation, and stung Napoleon to exasperation by his evident determination to procrastinate. Accordingly the Emperor summoned Metternich to a personal meeting. The minister could not well explain. Since Castlereagh's return to power in January, 1812, Great Britain had kept at Berlin, St. Petersburg, and Vienna able diplomats ready, with purse in hand, to pay almost any sum for a strong coalition. It had been the appearance of Sir Charles Stewart from Berlin, and of Lord Cathcart from St. Petersburg, at the allied headquarters which accounted for the arrogant firmness of Shuvaloff and Kleist, and determined the character of the armistice. On June fourteenth and fifteenth those envoys further concluded treaties with Prussia and Russia respectively which explain the performances of Bubna at Dresden, and of the congress which later met at Prague. Prussia promised, in return for a subsidy of two thirds of a million pounds sterling, to cede a certain portion of lower Saxony, with the bishopric of Hildesheim, to the electorate of Hanover, and agreed to keep on foot eighty thousand men; Russia was to maintain a hundred and sixty thousand men, in return for one and a third million pounds, and for the care of English vessels in her harbors she was to receive a further sum of half a million. Great Britain and Russia were in conjunction to emit an issue of paper money to the amount of five millions sterling, and this loan was to be guaranteed by England, Prussia, and Russia conjointly. In conclusion it was solemnly stipulated that neither Russia nor Great Britain should negotiate separately with France.

In view of the successive stages of Napoleon's isolation,—namely, the armistice, these two subsidy treaties, and the secret treaty of June twenty-seventh signed at Reichenbach,—it seems futile to discuss the question whether or not Napoleon really wished peace in his famous interview with Metternich on June twenty-seventh—an interview which lasted from a quarter before twelve at midday until nearly nine at night, and has improperly been considered as the turning-point in Napoleon's career. Up to that moment Metternich's intervention had amounted to nothing short of selfish double-dealing. Of this Napoleon had written evidence. No wonder the shifty minister described his interview as "a most curious mixture of most heterogeneous subjects, of intermitting Vol. IV. -7. CHAP. VI friendliness with the most passionate outbreaks," and strove in his account to deepen the shadows of his picture by discreet silence as to certain points — a trick he may have learned from Whitworth. The unfriendly narrator declares that Napoleon, when told that his soldiers were only boys, flung his hat into a corner, and hissed, "You do not know what passes in a soldier's mind; I grew up in the field, and a man like me troubles himself little about a million men." The Austrian statesman further reported the French emperor to have characterized his second marriage as a piece of stupidity, and to have charged his princely interlocutor with venality !

1813

Æт. 43]

Снар. VI

Probably all this is true: the professional soldier's point of view is terrible to the laity. Kossuth declared to a trustworthy witness that he had seen the letters of Maria Louisa which betrayed her husband to her father; and no one has ever denied that Napoleon was a fair judge of character, and called a spade a spade when he was angry. And angry he was. Here was the man who had plumed himself on the Bonaparte-Hapsburg alliance, who had hitherto professed the most ardent personal esteem for Napoleon himself, and who had so far found Austria's highest welfare in supporting the Napoleonic system. And what was his conduct? A complete and sudden reversal of his previous behavior, personal insolence, and public scorn. Then and there he demanded the suspension, at least temporarily, of the treaty of alliance between Austria and France—a paper solemnly negotiated by himself but little more than one short year earlier; then, too, he demanded a further prolongation of the armistice while the peace congress held its sessions, and coldly throwing every other consideration to the winds, gave his victim to understand that Austria was no longer a mediator, but an armed arbiter, determined to regain her glory by the line of least resistance-that is, by alliance with Russia, in order to secure a Continental peace, to which Great Britain should not be a party.

Is it wonderful that under such provocation Napoleon's hot Corsican blood boiled over, or that his unruly tongue uttered startling language? The time had come when he must recognize masters and laws, and it was not easy. At thirty, as he liked to boast, he had gained victories, appeased a popular storm, fused parties, and rallied a nation. Further, for years he had made sport of European dynasties, and in particular had found that of Austria both double-faced and time-serving. Having taken a leaf from her book, he had become her dupe, and it was hard to Æт. 43] bear the consequences. The stormy side of the famous interview is therefore unimportant historically; its only significance is that it marks the last stage in the evolution of Austrian diplomacy. Being now strong enough to reassert equality with France in the councils of Europe, the Hapsburg empire was about to act. Metternich believed that Alexander's aid would be more valuable than Napoleon's, and in a letter to his master, written two days after the famous interview, he explained that through a Continental peace lay the line of least resistance. The arrangement he suggested to Napoleon would leave England and France to renew the struggle and fight until exhausted, while Austria, Russia, and Prussia were recuperating. Napoleon's one weapon against England was his Continental system; on the morrow of a victorious eampaign he could not so easily throw it down. If there was to be a Continental peace, and not a general one, it must be made after a final decisive victory; and to assemble his troops for a grand battle with Austria, Russia, and Prussia, he needed time. The Poischwitz armistice was his first fatal blunder; before the close of the interview he consented to its prolongation until August tenth, ostensibly that the Congress of Prague might arrange terms for a Continental peace; and this was his undoing.

The Congress of Prague was a puppet-show, and has no place in history except as it displayed the character of Metternich, deceiving himself to its close with the belief that he was what he professed to be — an armed mediator turning the course of European politics back into dynastie channels. In reality it was as Napoleon said - he believed himself to be directing everybody, when everything was direct-Behind the puppets were Alexander's fatalism. Prussia's ing him. regenerated nationality, the half-awakened sensibility of Austria, and lastly, British gold with British victories. Wellington had finally focused the national power of Spain, and was actually menacing the soil of France. His famous "march to Vitoria," as it has been ealled because of the decisive battle fought at that place on June twentyfirst, 1813, forced Napoleon finally to abandon Spain. Already the Emperor had withdrawn his choicest veterans thence, and he was well aware how futile any further struggles for Joseph's throne must be. His conduct, therefore, was perfectly consistent; with a bold front he laid down the ultimatum of uti possidetis for the congress, and left for Mainz, where he remained from July twenty-fifth to

CHAP. VI

CHAP. VI August first, arranging his military plans for the defense of the 1813 Pyrenees, and despatching Soult, who went against his will, for the campaign which sealed the marshal's reputation as a great soldier. Doubtless, too, Napoleon felt that distance from the absurd congress would absolve him from the guilt of its empty pretense.

> There, too, he met his empress; perhaps he fondly dreamed that she might intercede with her sire; in the long interviews they held he was probably drilling her in the functions of a regent chosen to sustain in Paris the tottering cause of her consort and her child. Fouché, too, was recalled from his suspicious retirement to untangle the thread of Austrian duplicity. But the long hours of consultation, arrangement, and execution were mainly concerned, we may suppose, with the hurrying in of new levies, the raising of cavalry, the creation of artillery, and the general preparation for the life-and-death struggle which was soon to take place. The Danish alliance was strengthened, and Murat by strenuous efforts was kept within the shadowy lines of the vanishing Napoleonic system. Beugnot, then head of the French regency of Berg, was one day called at a moment's notice to act as amanuensis, and in a flurry twice took his Emperor's chair. "So you are determined to sit in my seat," was Napoleon's simple remark; "you have chosen a bad time for it." The mayor of Mainz was St. André, a stanch conventional of the old school; another day he and Beugnot, with the Prince of Nassau, accompanied the visitor on a river excursion, and the Emperor, scanning with intense interest the castle of Biberich, leaned far over the boat. "What a curious attitude," whispered the veteran revolutionary to the terrified Beugnot; "the fate of the world depends on a kick or two."

> The fate of the world was not in jeopardy, and the seat of Napoleon as Emperor of the West was not to be occupied by another; but the affairs of the Continent were to be readjusted, the beneficient work of the Revolution was to be transferred to other hands, and the notion of Western empire was to vanish like other baseless fabrics. The diplomacy of Lord Aberdeen, Castlereagh's envoy at Vienna, had succeeded before Napoleon returned to Dresden, and the treaty of eventual triple alliance, signed at Reichenbach on June twenty-seventh, was made good on August first by Francis, who agreed, in return for an enormous subsidy from Great Britain, to join Russia and Prussia with two hundred thousand men. The rosters of Austria's army had been

MARSHAL CLAUDE-VICTOR PERRIN DUKE OF BELLUNO

DRAWING BY ERIC PAPE FROM THE PORTRAIT BY ANTOINE-JEAN GROS-

Æт. 43]

surreptitiously obtained by French agents in Prague. Napoleon was aghast as he read the proof of her gigantic efforts. At once he redoubled his own, and began to unfold a marvelous diplomatic shrewdness. With Poland's three despoilers thus united in England's pay, his isolation would be complete; a few days only remained until the expiration of the armistice; he had but one arrow left in his quiver, and he determined to speed it: to bribe Austria into neutrality by accepting her conditions and restoring the national equilibrium of Europe.

The proposition was made, and staggered Francis; for two days he dallied, and then made a counter-proposition with a new clause, which secured, not the emancipation of states, but dynastic independence for the sovereigns of the Rhine Confederation. This drew the veil from Metternich's policy. Afraid of a German nationality in which Prussia would inevitably secure the hegemony, he was determined to perpetuate the rivalries of petty potentates, and regain Austria's ascendancy in Germany as well as in Italy. This, too, would strip Napoleon of his German troops, and confine France to the west shore of the Rhine, even though it left Westphalia and Berg under French rulers. Such a contingency was abhorrent to one still pretending to Western empire, and Napoleon in turn procrastinated until the evening of the ninth, when, as a final compromise, he offered the dismemberment of Warsaw, the freedom of Dantzic and Illyria, including Fiume, but retaining Triest. But by this time dynastic jealousy had done its work at Prague, and when these terms were communicated to the plenipotentiaries unofficially, Catheart's bellicose humor, which was heightened by the news from Wellington, served to complement Alexander's jealousy of Austria's rising power. The Prussian nationalists, too, saw their emancipation indefinitely postponed; and since the communication of Napoleon's ultimatum was unofficial, and an official notification had not arrived at midnight on the tenth, the commissioners of Russia and Prussia rose at the stroke of the clock, and informed Metternich that, their powers having expired, he was bound by the terms of Reichenbach.

Metternich kept up his mask, and continued to discuss with Caulaincourt the items of Napoleon's proposition, but the other diplomats gave vent to their delight. Humboldt lingered until Austria's formal declaration of war was under way to Dresden; simultaneously beacons, preCHAP. VI

Снар. VI 1813 arranged for the purpose on Bohemian hills, flashed the welcome news to the expectant armies of Russia and Prussia. Napoleon still stood undismayed by forms, for under the terms of the armistice a week's notice must be given before the renewal of hostilities. On the thirteenth he offered Austria everything except Hamburg and Triest; on the fifteenth he offered even these great ports. But technical right was on the side of war, and his proposals were refused.

Where the blame or merit for the renewal of hostilities rests will ever remain a matter of opinion. Amid the tangles of negotiation, it must be remembered that on March twenty-fourth, 1812, Russia and Sweden began the coalition; that Russia and Prussia were forced into union on February twenty-eighth, 1813, by the element of interest common to Alexander's dynasty and the Prussian people; that Great Britain entered on the scene in her commercial agreement with Sweden on March third, 1813; and that English diplomacy combined with the interests of Austrian diplomacy to complete and cement the coalition with the necessary subsidies. If we view the negotiations of Poischwitz and Prague in connection with Napoleon's whole career, they appear to have run in a channel prepared by his boundless ambition; if we isolate them and scrutinize their course, we must think him the moral victor. Whatever he may have been before, he was now eager for peace, and sincere in his professions. Believing himself to have acted generously when Austria was under his feet, he was outraged when he saw that he had been duped by her subsequent course. The concessions to which he was forced appear to have been made slowly, because what he desired was not a Continental peace in the interests of the Hapsburgs, but a general peace in the interest of all Europe as represented by the Empire and the dynasty which he had founded. At this distance of time, and in the light of intervening history, some credit should be given to his insight, which convinced him that strengthened nationality, as well as renewed dynastic influence, might retard the liberalizing influences of the Revolution, which he falsely believed himself still to represent. For the duration of the Holy Alliance this was to a certain extent true. It will be noticed that throughout the closing negotiations no mention was made of the "Continental system." That malign concept of the revolutionary epoch perished in Napoleon's decline, and history knows its name no more.

[ÆT. 43

CHAPTER VII

THE LAST IMPERIAL VICTORY

NAPOLEON'S PROSPECTS — THE PREPARATIONS AND PLANS OF THE COA-LITION — CROSS PURPOSES OF THE COMBATANTS — CONDITION OF NAPOLEON'S MIND — STRENGTH AND WEAKNESS OF THE ALLIES — RENEWAL OF HOSTILITIES — THE FEINT IN SILESIA — NAPOLEON AT DRESDEN — FIRST DAY'S FIGHTING — THE VICTORY WON•ON THE SECOND DAY.

CHAP. VII

1813

TN later years Napoleon confessed that during the interval between L the first and second Saxon campaigns he had been outwitted. His antagonists had, in his own language, "changed for the better"; at least they secured the war they so earnestly desired under conditions vastly more favorable to themselves than to their opponent. Both parties had been arming with might and main during the prolonged truce, but each member of the dynastic coalition now had the backing of a growing national enthusiasm, while Napoleon had to deal with waning zeal and an exhausted people. Thus, then, at the opening of the second campaign in Saxony the allies had four hundred and thirty-five thousand men, and Napoleon but three hundred and fifty thousand. With this inferiority, it behooved the Emperor to use all his strategic powers, and he did so with a brilliancy never surpassed by him. Choosing the Elbe as his natural defensive line, Hamburg stood almost impregnable at one end, flanked to the southward by Magdeburg, Wittenberg, and Torgau, three mighty fortresses. Dresden, which was necessarily the focal point, was intrenched and palisaded for the protection of the army which was to be its main bulwark. Davout and Oudinot, with seventy thousand men, were to threaten Berlin, and, thereby drawing off as many as possible of the enemy, liberate the garrisons of Stettin and Küstrin; they were then to beleaguer Spandau, push the foe across Снар. VII the Oder, and stand ready to fall on the flank of the coalition army. Napoleon himself, with the remaining two hundred and eighty thousand, was to await the onset of the combined Russian, Prussian, and Austrian forces.

1813

The allies now had in their camp two mighty strategists-Jomini, the well-known Swiss adventurer and military historian, and Moreau, who had returned from the United States. The former, pleading that he had lost a merited promotion by Berthier's ill-will, and that as a foreigner he had the right of choice, had gone over to the enemies of his employer; the latter, yielding to the specious pleas of his silly and ambitious wife that he might fight Napoleon without fighting France, had taken service with the Czar. The arrow which penetrated Napoleon's vitals was indeed feathered from his own pinions, since these two, with another of Napoleon's pupils-Bernadotte, the Crown Prince of Sweden - were virtually the council of war. Two of them, the latter and Moreau, saw the specter of French sovereignty beckoning them on. They dreamed of the chief magistracy in some shape, imperial, monarchical, consular, or presidential, and were more devoted to their personal interests than to those of the coalition. In the service of their ambition was formed the plan by which not only was Napoleon overwhelmed, but the fields of France were drenched with blood. Under their advice, three great armies were arrayed: that of the North, in Brandenburg, was composed of Prussians, Swedes, and a few Russians, its generals being Bülow, Bernadotte, and Tchernicheff; that of the East was the Prusso-Russian army in Silesia, now under Blücher, that astounding young cavalryman of seventy, and Wittgenstein; finally, that of the South was the new Austrian force under Schwarzenberg, with an adjunct force of Russian troops under Barclay, and the Russian guard under the Grand Duke Constantine. Bülow was in and near Berlin with about a hundred and fifty-six thousand men; Blücher had ninety-five thousand, and, having violated the armistice, was on August fourteenth already within the neutral zone at Striegau, before Breslau; the Austro-Russian force of almost two hundred and fifty thousand was in northern Bohemia, near Melnik; Bennigsen was in Poland building up a strong reserve. Schwarzenberg, though commander of the main army, was reduced to virtual impotence by the presence at his headquarters of all the sovereigns and of Moreau. Divided counsels spring from diverse interests; there was at the outset

IN THE COLLECTION OF THE COUNTESS HOCQUART DE TERTOT

ENGRAVED BY T. JOHNSON

JACQUES-ALEXANDRE-BERNARD LAW MARQUIS OF LAURISTON

FROM THE PAINTING BY FRANÇOIS OFRARD

a pitiful caution and inefficiency on the part of the allies, while at Napoleon's headquarters there was unity of design at least.

Both contestants were apparently under serious misappreliensions. The allies certainly were, because Francis believed that, as so often before, Napoleon's goal would be Vienna. The plan adopted by them was therefore very simple: each division of the allied army was to stand expectant; if assailed it was to yield, draw on the French columns, and expose their flank or rear to the attacks of the other two allied armies; then by superior force the invaders were to be surrounded. The allies divined, or believed they divined, that Napoleon would hold his guard in reserve, throw it behind any portion of his line opposite which they were vulnerable, break through, and defeat them in detachments. Their idea was keen, and displayed a thorough grasp both of the principles on which their opponent had hitherto acted and of his normal character. But nevertheless they were deceived. Napoleon discarded all his old principles, and behaved most abnormally. In his conduct there are evidences of a curious self-deception, and his decisions contradicted his language. Perpetually minimizing in conversation the disparity between the two forces, and sometimes even asserting his own superiority, he nevertheless almost for the first time assumed the defensive. This unheard-of course may have been due to misapprehension and exaggeration, but it produced for the moment a powerful moral effect on his generals, who, without exception, had hitherto been elamorous for peace, and likewise upon his new boy recruits; both classes began to have a realizing sense that they were now fighting, not for aggression, but for life. If the Emperor had any such confidence as he expressed, it must have been due to the fact that boys had fought like veterans at Lützen and Bautzen, and that at last there were eavalry and artillery in fair proportion. Possibly, likewise, he may have been desperate; fully aware that he was about to east the dice for a last stake, he may have been at once braggart and timid. If he should win in a common defensive battle, he believed, as his subsequent conduct goes to show, that he was safe indefinitely; and if he lost - the vision must have been too dreadful, enough to distract the sanest mind: an exhausted treasury, an exhausted nation, an empty throne, vanished hopes, ruin.

Yet at the time no one remarked any trace of nervousness in Napoleon. Long afterward the traitorous Marmont, whose name, like  $VOL_{1V,-8}$ that of Moreau, was to be execrated by succeeding generations of CHAP. VII honorable Frenchmen, recalled that the Emperor had contemptuously 1813 designated the enemy as a rabble, and that he had likewise overestimated the strategic value of Berlin. The malignant annalist asserted, too, that Napoleon's motive was personal spite against Prussia. It has also been studiously emphasized by others that the "children" of Napoleon's army were perishing like flowers under an untimely frost, forty thousand French and German boys being in the hospitals; that corruption was rife in every department of administration; and that the soldiers' pay was shamefully in arrears. An eye-witness saw Peyrusse, the paymaster, to whom Napoleon had just handed four thousand frances for a monument to Duroc, coolly pocket a quarter of the sum, with the remark that such was the custom. He would be rash indeed who dared to assert that there was no basis for this criticism. It is true that the instructions to Davout and Oudinot made light of Bülow's army, and that Berlin had vastly less strategic value than those instructions seemed to indicate. But, on the other hand, both generals and men were sadly in need of self-reliance, and to see their capitals occupied or endangered had still a tremendous moral effect upon dynastic sovereigns. As to the defects in his army, Napoleon could not have been blind; but in all these directions matters had been nearly, if not quite, as bad in 1809, and a victory had set them all in order.

CHAP. VII

1813

Æт. 44]

What nervousness there was existed rather among the allies. Never before in her history, not even under the great Frederick, had Prussia possessed such an army; the Austrians were well drilled and well equipped; the Russians were of fair quality, numerous, and with the reserves from Poland would be a powerful army in themselves. Yet in spite of their strength, the allies were not really able. Austria was the head, but her commander, Schwarzenberg, was not even mediocre, and among her generals there was only one who was first-rate, namely, Radetsky. Frederick William and Alexander were of incongruous natures; their alliance was artificial, and in such plans as they evolved there was an indefiniteness which left to the generals in their respective forces a large margin for independence. The latter were quick to take advantage of the chance, and this fact accounts for the generally lame and feeble beginning of hostilities.

For example, it was through Blücher's wilfulness that the moral advantage lay with Napoleon in the opening of the struggle. On July ninth Bernadotte, Frederick William, and the Czar had met at Trachenberg to lay out a plan of eampaign. In this conference, which first opened Napoleon's eyes to the determination of the allies, Blücher had secured for himself an independent command. The accession of Austria rendered the agreement of Trachenberg null, but Blücher did not abandon his ambition. Impatient of orders or good faith, he broke into the neutral zone at Striegau on August fourteenth, apparently without any very definite plan. Napoleon, hearing that forty thousand Russians from this army were marching toward Bohemia, advanced from Dresden on August fifteenth, to be within reach of the passes of the Iser Mountains on the Upper Elbe, and halted at Zittan as a central point, where he could easily collect about a hundred and eighty thousand men, and whence, according to circumstances, he could either strike Blücher, cut off the Russians, or return to Dresden in case of need. That city was to be held by Saint-Cyr. On August twentieth Blücher reached the banks of the Bober at Bunzlau; owing to Napoleon's nice ealculation, Ney, Marmont, Lauriston, and Macdonald were assembled on the other side to check the advance, he himself being at Lauban with the guard. Had Blücher stood, the Russo-Prussians would have been annihilated, for their inferiority was as two to one. But the headstrong general did not stand; on the contrary, retreating by preconcerted arrangement behind the Deichsel, he led his antagonist to the false conclusion that he lacked confidence in his army.

Ær. 44]

Napoleon was not generally over-credulous, but this mistake was probably engendered in his mind by the steady stream of uneasy reports he was receiving from his own generals. On the twenty-third he wrote to Maret that his division commanders seemed to have no selfreliance except in his presence; "the enemy's strength seems great to them wherever I am not." Marmont was the chief offender, having severely criticized a plan of operations which would require one or more of the marshals to act independently in Brandenburg or Silesia or both, expressing the fear that on the day when the Emperor believed himself to have won a decisive battle he would discover that he had lost two. Seventeen years of campaigning had apparently turned the great generals of Napoleon's army into puppets, capable of acting only on their leader's impulse. Whatever the cause, Napoleon was set in his idea, and pressed on in pursuit. On the twenty-second Blücher was beyond the Katzbach, with the French van close behind, when word arrived at

CHAP. VII

CHAP. VII 1813 Napoleon's headquarters that the Austro-Russians had entered Saxony and were menacing Dresden. How alert and sane the Emperor was, how thoroughly he foresaw every contingency, appears from the minute directions he wrote for Macdonald, who was left to block the road for Blücher into Saxony, while Lauriston was to outflank and shut off the perfervid veteran from both Berlin and Zittau.

These instructions having been written, Napoleon at first contemplated crossing the Elbe above Dresden to take Schwarzenberg on the flank and rear in the passes of the Ore Mountains. This would not only cut off the Austrian general from the Saxon capital, but prevent his swerving to the left for an advance on Leipsic. But finding that his enemy was moving swiftly, the Emperor resolved to meet him before Dresden. It would never do to lose his ally's capital at the outset, or to suffer defeat at the very head of his defensive line. Giving orders, therefore, for the corps of Marmont, Vandamme, and Victor, together with Latour-Maubourg's cavalry and the guard, to wheel, he hastened back to reinforce Saint-Cyr at Dresden. On the twenty-fifth, as he passed Bautzen, he learned that Oudinot had been defeated at Luckau; but he gave no heed to the report, and next day reached Dresden at nine in the morning. An hour later the guard came up, having performed the almost incredible feat of marching seventy-six miles in three days. Vandamme, with forty thousand men, had arrived at Pirna, a few miles above, and Saint-Cyr was drawing in behind the temporary fortifications of the city itself.

The enemy, too, was at hand, but he had no plan. In a council of war held by him the same morning there was protracted debate, and finally Moreau's advice to advance in six columns was taken. He refused "to fight against his country," but explained that the French could never be conquered in mass, and that if one assailing column were crushed, the rest could still push on. This long deliberation cost the allies their opportunity; for at four in the afternoon, when they attacked, the mass of the French army had crossed the Elbe and had thus completed the garrison of the city. For two hours the fighting was fierce and stubborn; from three different sides Russians, Austrians, and Prussians each made substantial gains; at six Napoleon determined to make a general sally and throw in his guard. With fine promptness Mortier, at the head of two divisions of the young guard, attacked the Russians, and fighting until midnight, drove them beyond

NAPOLEON IN 1813 FROM THE PAINTING BY AMABLE-DUIS-CLAUDE PAGNEST

.

· · ·

· ·

the hamlet of Striefen. Saint-Cyr dislodged the Prussians, and pushed them to Strehla; while Ney, with two divisions of the young guard, threw a portion of the Austrians into Plauen, and Murat, with two divisions of infantry and Latour-Maubourg's cavalry, cleared the suburb Friedrichstadt of the rest. Napoleon, alert and ubiquitous, then made his usual round, and knew when he retired to rest in the royal palace that with seventy thousand men, or rather boys, he had repulsed a hundred and fifty thousand of his foe. His inspiriting personal work might be calculated as worth eighty thousand of his opponents' best men. That night both Marmont and Victor, with their corps, entered the city; and Vandamme in the early dawn began to bombard Pirna, thus threatening the allies' connection with Bohemia and drawing away forces from them to hold that outpost.

The second day's fighting was more disastrous to the allies than the The morning opened in a tempest, but at six both sides were arfirst. rayed. On the French right were Victor and Latour-Maubourg; then Marmont; then the old guard and Ney with two divisions of the young guard; next Saint-Cyr, with Mortier on the left. Opposite stood Russians, Prussians, and Austrians, in the same relative positions, on higher ground, encircling the French all the way westward and around by the south to Plauen; but between their center and left was reserved a gap for Klenau's Austrians, who were coming up from Tharandt in the blinding storm, and were overdue. At seven began the artillery fire of the young guard; but before long it ceased for an instant, since the gunners found the enemy's line too high for the elevation of their guns. "Continue," came swiftly the Emperor's order; "we must occupy the attention of the enemy on that spot." The ruse succeeded, and the gap was left open; at ten Murat dashed through it, and turning westward, killed or captured all who composed the enemy's extreme left. The garrison of Pirna then retreated toward Peterswald. Elsewhere the French merely held their own. Napoleon lounged all day in a curious apathy before his camp-fire, his condition being apparently due to the incipient stages of a digestive disorder. Early in the afternoon Schwarzenberg heard of Murat's great charge, but he held firm until at five the flight from Pirna was announced, when he abandoned the conflict. By six Napoleon was aware that the battle was over, and, mounting his horse, he trotted listlessly to the palace, his old gray overcoat and hood streaming with rain.

Снар. VII 1813

CHAPTER VIII

POLITICS AND STRATEGY

NAPOLEON'S CONDUCT AFTER DRESDEN — MILITARY CONSIDERATIONS OVER-RULED BY POLITICAL SCHEMES — PROBABLE EXPLANATION OF NAPO-LEON'S FAILURE — PRUSSIAN VICTORIES AT GROSSBEEREN AND ON THE KATZBACH — VANDAMME OVERWHELMED AT KULM — NAPOLEON'S RE-SPONSIBILITY — POLITICAL CONSIDERATIONS AGAIN ASCENDANT — THE SYSTEM OF "HITHER AND THITHER" — THE BATTLE OF DENNEWITZ — ITS DISASTROUS CONSEQUENCES — NAPOLEON'S VACILLATION — STRAT-EGY THWARTED BY DIPLOMACY.

Снар. VIII 1813

HROUGHOUT the night after the victory at Dresden, Napoleon believed that the enemy would return again to battle on the mor-This is conclusively shown by the notes which he made for Berrow. thier during the evening. These were based on the stated hypothesis that the enemy was not really in retreat, but would on the morrow by a great battle strive to retrieve his failure. But the Emperor was altogether mistaken. To be sure, the council of the disheartened allies debated far into the small hours whether an advantageous stand could not still be made on the heights of Dippoldiswalde, but the decision was adverse because the coalition army was sadly shattered, having lost a third of its numbers. Crippled on its left and threatened on its rear, it began next morning to retreat in fair order toward the Ore Mountains, and so continued until it became known that Vandamme was directly in the path, when a large proportion of the troops literally took to the hills, and retreat became flight. Then first, at four in the afternoon, Napoleon began to realize what had actually occurred. And what did he do? Having ridden almost to Pirna before taking measures of any kind to reap the fruits of victory, he there issued orders for the single corps of Vandamme, slightly reinforced, to begin the pursuit! Thereupon, leaving directions for Mortier to hold Pirna, he entered a carriage CHAP. VIII and drove quietly back to Dresden!

These are the almost incredible facts: no terrific onslaught after the first night, no well-ordered pursuit after the second, a mere pretense of seizing the advantage on the third day! In fact, Napoleon, having set his plan in operation at the very beginning of the battle, sank, to all outward appearances, into a state of lassitude, the only sign of alert interest he displayed throughout the conflict being shown when he was told that Moreau had been mortally wounded. The cause may have been physical or it may have been moral, but it was probably a political miscalculation. If we may believe Captain Coignet, the talk of the staff on the night of the twenty-seventh revealed a perfect knowledge of the enemy's rout; they knew that the retreat of their opponents had been precipitate, and they had credible information of disordered bands seen hurrying through byways or rushing headlong through mountain defiles. Yet for all this, they were thoroughly discontented, and the burden of their conversation was execration of the Emperor. "He's a ----who will ruin us all," was the repeated malediction. If we may believe Napoleon himself, he had a violent attack of vomiting near Pirna, and was compelled to leave everything on that fateful day to others. This is possible, but unlikely; the day before, though listless, he was well enough to chat and take snuff as he stood in a redoubt observing the course of events through his field-glass; the day after he was perfectly well, and exercised unusual self-control when tidings of serious import were brought from the north. The sequel goes to show that neither his own sickness nor the bad temper of the army sufficiently accounts for Napoleon's unmilitary conduct on the twenty-eighth; it appears, on the contrary, as if he refrained of set purpose from annihilating the Austrian army in order to rekuit the Austrian alliance and destroy the This he never was willing to admit; but no man likes to coalition. confess himself a dupe.

Had Oudinot and Macdonald succeeded in their offensive operations against Berlin, and had Napoleon himself done nothing more than hold Dresden, a place which we must remember he considered from the outset as a defensive point, it would have sufficed, in order to obtain the most favorable terms of peace, to throw back the main army of the coalition, humiliated and dispirited, through Bohemia to Prague. But, as we have repeatedly seen, long service under the Empire had destroyed all initiative in the French marshals: in Spain one mighty general after CHAP. VIII another had been brought low; those who were serving in Germany seemed stricken with the same palsy. It is true that in the days of their greatness they had commanded choice troops, and that now the flower of the army was reserved for the Emperor; but it is likewise true that then they had fought for wealth, advancement, and power. Now they vearned to enjoy their gains, and were embittered because Napoleon had not accepted Austria's terms of mediation until it was too late. Moreover, Bernadotte, one of their opponents, had been trained in their own school, and was fighting for a crown. To Blücher, untamed and untrustworthy in temper, had been given in the person of Gneisenau an efficient check on all headlong impulses, and Bülow was a commander far above mediocrity. Such considerations go far to account for three disasters-those, namely, of Grossbeeren, Katzbach, and Kulm -which made it insufficient for Napoleon to hold Dresden and throw back the main army of the allies, and which thwarted all his strategy, military and political.

Æт. 44]

1813

The first of these affairs was scarcely a defeat. Oudinot, advancing with seventy thousand men by way of Wittenberg to seize Berlin, found himself confronted by Bernadotte with eighty thousand. The latter, with his eye on the crown of France, naturally feared to defeat a French army; at first he thought of retreating across the Spree and abandoning the Prussian capital. But the Prussians were outraged at the possibility of such conduct, and the schemer was convinced that a show of resistance was imperative. On August twenty-second a few skirmishes occurred, and the next day Bülow, disobeying his orders, brought on a pitched battle at Grossbeeren, which was waged, with varying success, until nightfall left the village in French hands. Oudinot, however, discouraged alike by the superior force of the enemy, by the obstinate courage of the Prussians, and by the dismal weather, lost heart, and retreated to Wittenberg. The heavy rains prevented an effective pursuit, but the Prussians followed as far as Treuenbrietzen. On August twenty-first, Blücher, aware of the circumstances which kept Napoleon at Dresden, had finally determined to attack Macdonald. The French marshal, by a strange coincidence, almost simultaneously abandoned the defensive position he had been ordered to hold, and advanced to give battle. It was therefore a mere chance when on the twenty-fifth the two armies came together, amid rain and fog, at the

IN THE MUSEUM OF VERSAILLES

ENGRAVED BY F. HEINEMANN

MARSHAL ÉDOUARD-ADOLPHE-CASIMIR-JOSEPH MORTIER DUKE OF TREVISO

FROM THE PAINTING BY MARIE-NICOLAS PONCE-CAMUS

• . 4 ſ Katzbach. After a bitter struggle the French were routed with frightful CHAP. VIII loss. A terrific rain-storm set in, and the whole country was turned into a marsh. For five days Blücher continued the pursuit, until he reached Naumburg, on the right bank of the Queiss, where he halted, having eaptured eighteen thousand prisoners with a hundred and three guns.

To these misfortunes the affair at Kulm was a fitting climax. No worse leader for a delicate independent movement could have been selected than the reekless Vandamme. He was so rash, conceited, and brutish that Napoleon once exclaimed in sheer desperation: "If there were two Vandammes in my army, nothing could be done until one had killed the other." As might have been expected, the headlong general far outstripped the columns of Marmont, Saint-Cyr, and Murat, which had been tardily sent to support him. Descending without eircumspeetion into the plain of Kulm, he found himself, on the twenty-ninth, confronted by the Russian guard; and next morning, when attacked by them in superior force, he was compelled to retreat through a mountain defile toward Peterswald, whence he had eome. At the mouth of the gorge he was unexpectedly met by the Prussian corps of Kleist. Each side thought the other moving to cut it off. They therefore rushed one upon the other in despair, with no other hope than that of breaking through to rejoin their respective armies. The shoek was terrible, and for a time the confusion seemed inextricable. But the Russians soon came up, and Vandamme, with seven thousand men, was eaptured, the loss in slain and wounded being about five thousand. Saint-Cyr, Marmont, and Murat halted and held the mountain passes.

This was the elimax of disaster in Napoleon's great strategic plan. In no way responsible for Grossbeeren, nor for Macdonald's defeat on the Katzbach, he was eulpable both for the selection of Vandamme and for failure to support him in the pursuit of Schwarzenberg. At St. Helena the Emperor strove in three ways to account for the erash under which he was buried after Dresden: by the siekness which made him unable to give attention to the situation, by the inundation which rendered Macdonald helpless at the crossing of the Bober, and by the arrival of a notification from the King of Bavaria that, after a certain date, he too would join the coalition. This was not history, but an appeal to public sentiment, earefully calculated for untrained readers.

The fact was that at Dresden the gradual transformation of the VOL. IV.--9

Ær. 44]

strategist into the politician, which had long been going on, was com-CHAP. VIII plete. The latter misapprehended the moment for diplomatic nego-1813 tiations, conceiving the former's victory to have been determinative, when in reality it was rendered partial and contingent by failure to follow it up. Great as Napoleon was in other respects, he was supremely great as a strategist; it is therefore his psychological development and decline in this respect which are essential to the determination of the moment in which he became bankrupt in ability. This instant was that of course in which his strategic failures became no longer intermittent, but regular; and after Dresden such was the case. As to conception and tactics there never was a failure — the year 1814 is the wonder-year of his theoretical genius; but after Dresden there is continuous failure in the practical combination of concept and means, in other words, of strategic mastery. This contention as to the clouding of Napoleon's vision by the interference of political and military considerations is proved by his next step. Hitherto his basal principle had been to mass all his force for a determinative blow, his combinations all turning about hostile armies and their annihilation, or at least about producing situations which would make annihilation possible. Now he was concerned, not with armies, but with capital cities. Claiming that to extend his line toward Prague would weaken it, in order to resume a strong defensive he chose the old plan of an advance to Berlin, and Ney was sent to supersede Oudinot, Schwarzenberg being left to recuperate unmolested. The inchoate idea of political victory which turned him back from Pirna was fully developed; by a blow at Berlin and a general northward movement he could not merely punish Prussia, but alarm Russia, separate the latter's army from that of the other allies, and then plead with Austria his consideration in not invading her territories. In spite of all that has been written to the contrary, there was some strength in this idea, unworthy as it was of the author's strategic ability. Ney was to advance immediately, while he himself pressed on to Hoyerswerda, where he hoped to establish connections for a common advance.

> Such a concentration would have been possible if for a fortnight Macdonald had been able to hold Blücher, and Murat had succeeded in checking Schwarzenberg. But the news of Macdonald's plight compelled Napoleon to march first toward Bautzen, in order to prevent Blücher from annihilating the army in Silesia. Exasperated by this unexpected diversion, the Emperor started in a reckless, embittered CHAP. VIII temper. On September fifth it became evident that Blücher would not stand, and Napoleon prepared to wheel in the direction of Berlin; but the orders were almost immediately recalled, for news arrived that Schwarzenberg was marching to Dresden. At once Napoleon returned to the Saxon capital. By September tenth he had drawn in his forces, ready for a second defense of the city; but learning that sixty thousand Austrians had been sent over the Elbe to take on its flank any French army sent after Blücher, he ordered the young guard to Bautzen for the reinforcement of Macdonald. Thereupon Schwarzenberg, on the fourteenth, made a feint to advance. On the fifteenth Napoleon replied by a countermove on Pirna, where pontoons were thrown over the river to establish connection with Macdonald. On the sixteenth Napoleon reconnoitered, on the seventeenth there was a skirmish, and on the eighteenth there were again a push and counterpush. These movements convinced Napoleon that Schwarzenberg was really on the defensive, and he returned to Dresden, determined to let feint and counterfeint, the "system of hither and thither," as he called it, go on until the golden opportunity for a crushing blow should be offered. Blücher meantime had turned again on Macdonald, who was now on the heights of Fischbach with Poniatowski on his right. Mortier was again at Pirna; Victor, Saint-Cyr, and Lobau were guarding the mountain passes from Bohemia.

ÆT. 44]

This was virtually the situation of a month previous, before the Schwarzenberg might feel that he had prevented the invasion battle. of Austria, Napoleon that he had regained his strong defensive. While the victory of Dresden had gone for nothing, yet this situation was nevertheless a double triumph for Napoleon. Ney, in obedience to orders, had advanced on the fifth. Bernadotte lay at Jüterbog, his right being westerly at Dennewitz, under Tauenzien. Bertrand was to make a demonstration on the sixth against the latter, so that behind this movement the rest of the army should pass by unnoticed. But Ney started three hours late, so that the skirmish between Tauenzien and Bertrand lasted long enough to give the alarm to Bülow, who hurried in, attacked Reynier's division, and turned the affair into a general engagement. At first the advantage was with the Prussians; then Ney, at an opportune moment, began to throw in Oudinot's corps-a move which seemed likely to decide the struggle in favor of the French.

CHAP. VIII But Borstell, who had been Bülow's lieutenant at Grossbeeren, brought up his men in disobedience to Bernadotte's orders, and threw them into the thickest of the conflict. Hitherto the Saxons had been fighting gallantly on the French side; soon they began to waver, and now, falling back, they took up many of Oudinot's men in their flight. The Prussians poured into the gap left by the Saxons, and when Bernadotte came up with his Swedes and Russians the battle was over. Ney was driven into Torgau, with a loss of fifteen thousand men, besides eighty guns and four hundred train-wagons. The Prussians lost about nine thousand killed and wounded.

> This affair concentrated into one movement the moral effects of all the minor defeats, an influence which far outweighed the importance of The French still fought superbly in Napoleon's presence, but Dresden. only then, for they were heartily sick of the war. Nor was this all: the Bavarians and Saxons were coming to feel that their obligations to France had been fully discharged. They were infected with the same national spirit which made heroes of the Prussians. These, to be sure, were defending their homes and firesides; but seeing the great French generals successively defeated, and that largely by their own efforts, they were animated to fresh exertions by their victories; even the reserves and the home guard displayed the heroism of veterans. On September seventh Ney wrote to Napoleon: "Your left flank is exhausted -take heed; I think it is time to leave the Elbe and withdraw to the Saale"; and his opinion was that of all the division commanders. Throughout the country-side partizans were seizing the supply-trains; Davout had found his Dutch and Flemings to be mediocre soldiers, unfit at crucial moments to take the offensive; the army had shrunk to about two hundred and fifty thousand men all told; straggling was increasing, and the country was virtually devastated. To this last fact the plain people, sufferers as they were, remained in their larger patriotism amazingly indifferent: the "hither-and-thither" system tickled their fancy, and they dubbed Napoleon the "Bautzen Messenger-Boy." Uneasiness pervaded every French encampment; on the other side timidity was replaced by courage, dissension by unity.

> This transformation of German society seemed further to entangle the political threads which had already debased the quality of Napoleon's strategy. Technically no fault can be found with his prompt changes of plan to meet emergencies, or with the details of movements which led to his prolonged inaction. Yet, largely considered, the result CHAP. VIII was disastrous. The great medical specialist refrains from the immediate treatment of a sickly organ until the general health is sufficiently recuperated to assure success; the medicaster makes a direct attack on evident disease. Napoleon conceived a great general plan for concentrating about Dresden to recuperate his forces; but when Blücher prepared to advance he grew impatient, saw only his immediate trouble, and ordered Macdonald to make a grand dash. Driving in the hostile outposts to Förstgen, he then spent a whole day hesitating whether to go on or to turn westward and disperse another detachment of his ubiquitous foe, which, as he heard from Ney, had bridged the Elbe at the mouth of the Black Elster. It was the twenty-third before he turned back to do neither, but to secure needed rest on the left bank of the Elbe. But if Napoleon's own definition of a truly great man be accurate,—namely, one who can command the situations he creates, he was himself no longer great. The enemy not only had bridges over the Elbe at the mouth of the Elster, but at Acken and Rosslau. The left bank was as untenable for the French as the right, and it was of stern necessity that the various detachments of the army were called in to hold a line far westward, to the north of Leipsic. Oudinot, restored to partial favor, was left to keep the rear at Dresden with part of the young guard. On October first it was learned that Schwarzenberg was manœuvering on the left to surround the invaders if possible by the south, and that Blücher, with like aim, was moving to the north. It was evident that the allies had formed a great resolution, and Napoleon confessed to Marmont that his "game of chess was becoming confused."

MARSHAL JEAN-BAPTISTE-JULES BERNADOTTE PRINCE OF PONTE CORVO, CHARLES XIV OF SWEDEN

FROM THE FAINTING BY FRANÇOIS KINBON

POLITICS AND STRATEGY

The fact was, the Emperor's diplomacy had far outstripped the general's strategy. It was blazoned abroad that on September twentyseventh a hundred and sixty thousand new conscripts from the class of 1815, with a hundred and twenty thousand from the arrears of the seven previous classes, would be assembled at the military depots in France. Boys like these had won Lützen, Bautzen, and Dresden, and a large minority would be able-bodied men, late in maturing, perhaps, but strong. With this preliminary blare of trumpets, a letter for the Emperor Francis was sent to General Bubna. The bearer was instructed to say that Napoleon would make great sacrifices both for Austria and Prussia if only he could get a hearing. It was too late: already, on

ÆT. 44]

65

CHAP. VIII

September ninth, the three powers had concluded an offensive and defensive alliance for the purpose of liberating the Rhenish princes, of making sovereign and independent the states of southern and western Germany, and of restoring both Prussia and Austria to their limits of This was the treaty which beguiled Bavaria from the French 1805. alliance, and made the German contingents in the French armies, the Saxons among the rest, wild for emancipation from a hated service. It explained the notification previously received from the King of Bavaria, who, in return for the recognition of his complete autonomy, formally joined the coalition on October eighth, with an army of thirty-six thousand men. How much of all this the French spies and emissaries made known to Napoleon does not appear. One thing only is certain, that Napoleon's flag of truce was sent back with his message undelivered. This ominous fact had to be considered in connection with the movements of the enemy. They had learned one of Napoleon's own secrets. In a bulletin of 1805 are the words: "It rains hard, but that does not stop the march of the grand army." In 1806 he boasted concerning Prussia: "While people are deliberating, the French army is marching." In 1813, while he himself was vacillating, his foes were stirring. On October third, Blücher, having accomplished a superb strategic march, drove Bertrand to Bitterfeld, and stood before Kemberg, west of the Elbe, with sixty-four thousand men; Bernadotte, with eighty thousand, was crossing at Acken and Rosslau; and Schwarzenberg, with a hundred and seventy thousand, was already south of Leipsic; Bennigsen, with fifty thousand reserves, had reached Teplitz. The enemy would clearly concentrate at Leipsic and cut off Napoleon's base unless he retreated. But it was October fifth before the bitter resolution to do so was taken, and then the movement began under compulsion. Murat was sent, with three infantry corps and one of cavalry, to hold Schwarzenberg until the necessary manœuvers could be completed.

CHAPTER IX

THE END OF THE GRAND ARMY

PLANS FOR CONDUCTING THE RETREAT — NAPOLEON'S HEALTH — BLÜ-CHER'S BRILLIANT IDEA — NAPOLEON UNDER COMPULSION — HIS SKIL-FUL CONCENTRATION — THE BATTLE-FIELD AROUND LEIPSIC — THE ATTACK — RESULTS OF THE FIRST DAY'S FIGHTING — ATTEMPT TO NEGOTIATE — NAPOLEON'S APATHY — THE POSITIONS OF THE THIRD DAY — THE GRAND ARMY DEFEATED — THE DISASTER AT THE ELSTER BRIDGE — DISSOLUTION OF THE GRAND ARMY.

CHAP. IX

1813

BUT how should the retreat be conducted? Napoleon's habit of reducing his thoughts to writing for the sake of clearness remained strong upon him to the last, and in the painstaking notes which he made with regard to this important move he outlined two alternatives: to garrison Dresden with two corps, send three to reconnoiter about Chemnitz, and then march, with five and the guard, to attack Schwarzenberg; or else to strengthen Murat, place him between Schwarzenberg and Leipsic, and then advance to drive Bernadotte and Blücher behind the Elbe. But in winter the frozen Elbe with its flat shores would be no rampart. Both plans were abandoned, and on the seventh orders were issued for a retreat behind the Saale, the precipitous banks of which were a natural fortification. Behind this line of defense he could rest in safety during the winter, with his right at Erfurt and his left at Magdeburg. Dresden must, he concluded, be evacuated. This would deprive the allies of the easy refuge behind the Saxon and Bohemian mountains which they had sought at every onset, but it might leave them complete masters of Saxony. To avoid this he must take one of three courses: either halt behind the Mulde for one blow at the armies of the North and of Silesia, or join Murat for a decisive bat68

1813

tle with the Austrian general, or else concentrate at Leipsic, and meet CHAP. IX the onset of the united allies, now much stronger than he was.

> The night of the seventh was spent in indecision as to any one or all of these ideas, but in active preparation for the actual movements of the retreat, however it should be conducted; any contingency might be met or a resolve taken when the necessity arose. During that night the Emperor took two warm baths. The habit of drinking strong coffee to prevent drowsiness had induced attacks of nervousness, and these were not diminished by his load of care. To allay these and other ailments, he had had recourse for some time to frequent tepid baths. Much has been written about a mysterious malady which had been steadily increasing, but the burden of testimony from the Emperor's closest associates at this time indicates that in the main he had enjoyed excellent health throughout the second Saxon campaign. He was on the whole ealm and self-reliant, exhibiting signs of profound emotion only in connection with important decisions. He was certainly capable of clear insight and of severe application in a crisis; he could still endure exhausting physical exertion, and rode without discomfort, sitting his horse in the same stiff, awkward manner as of old. There were certainly intervals of self-indulgence and of lassitude, of excessive emotion and depressing self-examination, which seemed to require the offset of a physical stimulus; but on the whole there do not appear to have been such sharp attacks of illness, or even of morbid depression, as amount to providential interference; natural causes, complex but not inexplicable, sufficiently account for the subsequent disasters.

> For instance, considerations of personal friendship having in earlier days often led him to unwise decisions, a like cause may be said to have brought on his coming disaster. It was the affection of the Saxon king for his beantiful capital which at the very last instant, on October eighth, induced Napoleon to cast all his well-weighed scheme to the winds, and - fatal decision - leave Saint-Cyr and Lobau, with three corps, in Dresden. A decisive battle was imminent; the commander was untrue to his maxim that every division should be under the colors. But with or without his full force, the master-strategist was outwitted: the expected meeting did not take place as he finally reckoned. On the tenth his headquarters were at Düben, and his divisions well forward on the Elbe, ready for Bernadotte and Blücher; but there was no foe. Both these generals had been disconcerted by

IN THE MUSPPM OF VERSALLES

LNGRAVED BY HENRY WOLF

MARSHAL NICOLAS-CHARLES OUDINOT DUKE OF REGGIO

FROM THE PAINTING BY ROBERT APPEVRE

the unexpected swiftness of the French movements; the former actually contemplated recrossing the river to avoid a pitched battle with those whom he hoped before long to secure as his subjects. But the enthusiastic old Prussian shamed his ally into action, persuading him at least to march south from Acken, effect a junction with the army of Silesia, and cross the Saale to threaten Napoleon from the rear. This was a brilliant and daring plan, for if successful both armies might possibly unite with Schwarzenberg's; but even if unsuccessful in that, they would at least reproduce the situation in Silesia, and reduce the French to the "hither-and-thither" system, which, rendering a decisive battle impossible, had thwarted the Napoleonic strategy.

Napoleon spent a weary day of waiting in Duben, yawning and scribbling, but keeping his geographer and secretary in readiness. It was said at the time, and has since been repeated, that throughout this portion of the campaign Napoleon was not recognizable as himself; that he ruminated when he should have been active; that he consulted when he should have given orders; that he was no longer ubiquitous as of old, but sluggish, and rooted to one spot. But it is hard to see what he left undone, his judgment being mistaken as it was. When rumors of Bernadotte's movements began to arrive, he dismissed the idea suggested by them as preposterous; when finally, on the twelfth, he heard that Blücher was actually advancing to Halle, and no possible doubt remained, he gave instant orders for a march on Leipsic. Critics have suggested that again delay had been his ruin; but this is not true. An advance over the Elbe toward Berlin in search of the enemy would merely have enabled Blücher and Bernadotte to join forces sooner, and have rendered their union with Schwarzenberg easier. No stricture is just but one: that Napoleon, knowing how impossible it was to obtain such exact information as he seemed determined to have, should have divined the enemy's plan, and acted sooner. The accurate information necessary for such foresight was not obtainable; in fact, it seldom is, and some allowance may be made if the general lingered before rushing into the "tube of a funnel," as Marmont expressed it. On the morning of the thirteenth, while the final arrangements for marching to Leipsic were making, came the news of Bavaria's defection. It spread throughout the army like wildfire, but its effect was less than might be imagined, and it served for the priming of a bulletin, issued on the fifteenth, announcing the approaching battle.

Vol. IV.-10

Æт. 44]

CHAP. IX

CHAP. IX

On the fifteenth, Murat, who had been steadily withdrawing before the allied army of the South, was overtaken at Wachau by Schwarzenberg's van. He fought all day with magnificent courage, and successfully, hurling the hostile cavalry skirmishers back on the main column. Within sound of his guns, Napoleon was reconnoitering his chosen battle-field in and about Leipsic; and when, after nightfall, the brothers-in-law met, the necessary arrangements were virtually complete. Those who were present at the council thought the Emperor inexplicably calm and composed — they said indifferent or stolid. But he had reasons to be confident rather than desperate, for by a touch of his old energy he had concentrated more swiftly than his foe, having a hundred and seventy thousand men in array. Reynier, with fourteen thousand more, was near; if Saint-Cyr and Lobau, with their thirty thousand, had been present instead of sitting idly in Dresden, the French would actually have outnumbered any army the coalition could have assembled for battle. The allies could hope at best to produce two hundred thousand men; Bernadotte was still near Merseburg; Blücher, though coming in from Halle, was not within striking-distance. In spite of his vacillation and final failure to evacuate Dresden, Napoleon had an excellent fighting chance.

The city of Leipsic, engirdled by numerous villages, lies in a low plain watered by the Parthe, Pleisse, and Elster, the last of which to the westward has several arms, with swampy banks. Across these runs the highway to Frankfort, elevated on a dike, and spanning the deep, central stream of the Elster by a single bridge. Eastward by Connewitz the land is higher, there being considerable swells, and even hills, to the south and southeast. This rolling country was that chosen by Napoleon for the main battle against Schwarzenberg; Marmont was stationed north of the city, near Möckern, to observe Blücher; Bernadotte, the cautious, was still at Oppin with his Swedes. On the evening of the fiftcenth, his dispositions being complete, Napoleon made the tour of all his posts. At dusk three white rockets were seen to rise in the southern sky; they were promptly answered by four red ones in These were probably signals between Schwarzenberg and the north. Napoleon's watch-fire was kindled behind the old guard, be-Blücher. tween Reudnitz and Crottendorf.

The battle began early next morning. Napoleon waited until nine, and then advanced at the head of his guards to Liebertwolkwitz, near Æт. 44]

Wachau, on the right bank of the Pleisse, where the decisive struggle was sure to occur, since the mass of the enemy, under Barclay, with Wittgenstein as second in command, had attacked in four columns at that point. Between the Pleisse and the Elster, near Connewitz, stood Poniatowski, opposed to Schwarzenberg and Meerveldt; westward of the Elster, near Lindenau, stood Bertrand, covering the single line of retreat, the Frankfort highway, and his antagonist was Gyulay. Thus there were four divisions in the mighty conflict, which began by an onset of the allies along the entire front. The main engagement was stubborn and bloody, the allies attacking with little skill, but great bravery. Until near midday Napoleon more than held his own. Victor at Wachau, and Lauriston at Liebertwolkwitz, had each successfully resisted six desperate assaults; between them were massed the artillery, a hundred and fifty guns, under Drouot, and behind, all the eavalry except that of Sebastiani. The great artillery captain was about to give the last splendid exhibition of what his arm can do under favorable eircumstances—that is, when strongly posted in the right position and powerfully supported by cavalry. He intended, with an awful shock and swift pursuit, to break through the enemy's center at Güldengossa and surround his right. So great was his genius for combinations that while the allies were that moment using three hundred and twenty-five thousand effective men all told to his two hundred and fourteen thousand, yet in the decisive spot he had actually concentrated a hundred and fifteen thousand to their hundred and fourteen thousand. This was because Schwarzenberg, having attempted to outflank the French, was floundering to no avail in the swampy meadows between the Pleisse and the Elster, and was no longer a factor in the contest.

When, at midday, all was in readiness and the order was given, the artillery fire was so rapid that the successive shots were heard, not separately, but in a long, sullen note. By two, Victor and Oudinot on the right, with Mortier and Maedonald on the left, were well forward of Güldengossa, but the place itself still held out. At three the cavalry, under Murat, Latour-Maubourg, and Kellermann, were sped direct upon it. With awful effort they broke through, and the bells of Leipsie began to ring in triumph — prematurely. The Czar had peremptorily summoned from Schwarzenberg's command the Austro-Russian reserve, and at four these, with the Cossaek guard, charged the Freneh cavalry, hurling them back to Markkleeberg. Nightfall found Vietor

CHAP. IX

Снар. IX 1813 again at Wachau, and Macdonald holding Liebertwolkwitz. Simultaneously with the great eharge of the allies Meerveldt had dashed out from Connewitz toward Dölitz, but his force was nearly annihilated, and he himself was captured. At Möckern, Marmont, after gallant work with inferior numbers, had been beaten on his left, and then compelled for safety to draw in his right. While he still held Gohlis and Eutritzsch, the mass of his army had been thrown back into Leipsic. Throughout the day Bertrand made a gallant and successful resistance to superior numbers, and drove that portion of the allied forces opposed to him away from Lindenau as far as Plagwitz. At nightfall three blank shots announced the cessation of hostilities all around.

In the face of superior numbers, the French had not lost a single important position, and whatever military science had been displayed was all theirs; Blücher made the solitary advance move of the allies, the seizure of Möckern by York's corps; Schwarzenberg had been literally mired in his attempt to outflank his enemy, and but for Alexander's peremptory recall of the reserves destined for the same task, the day would have been one of irretrievable disaster to the coalition. Yet Napoleon knew that he was lost unless he could retreat. Clearly he had expected a triumph, for in the city nothing was ready, and over the Elster was but one crossing, the solitary bridge on the Frankfort The seventeenth was the first day of the week; both sides were road. exhausted, and the Emperor of the French seems to have felt that at all hazards he must gain time. During the previous night long consultations had been held, and the French divisions to the south had been slightly compacted. In the morning Meerveldt, the captured Austrian general, the same man who after Austerlitz had solicited and obtained on the part of Francis an interview from Napoleon, was paroled, and sent into his own lines to ask an armistice, together with the intervention of Francis on the terms of Prague: renunciation of Poland and Illyria by Napoleon, the absolute independence of Holland, of the Hanse towns, of Spain, and of a united Italy. When we remember that England was paymaster to the coalition, and was fighting for her influence in Holland, and that Austria's ambition was for predominance in a disunited Italy, we feel that apparently Napoleon wanted time rather than hoped for a successful plea to his father-in-law.

This would be the inevitable conclusion except for the fact that he withdrew quietly to his tent and there remained; the resourceful

[Æт. 44

*

IN THE COLLECTION OF PRINCE PONIATOWSEI

ENGRAVED BY CHARLES STATE

MARSHAL JOZEF ANTON, PRINCE PONIATOWSKI

Æт. 44]

general was completely apathetic, being either over-confident in his diplomatic mission or stunned by calamity. The day passed without incident except a momentary attack on Marmont, and the arrival of Bernadotte, who had been spurred to movement by a hint from Gneisenau concerning the terms on which Great Britain was to pay her It was asserted at the time that Napoleon gave orders subsidies. early in the morning for building numerous bridges over the western streams. If so, they were not executed, only a single flimsy structure being built, and that on the road leading from the town, not on the lines westward from his positions in the suburbs. His subordinates should have acted in so serious a matter even without orders; but like the drivers of trains which run at lightning speed, they had, after years of high-pressure service, lost their nerve. Marmont asserts that even Napoleon was nerveless. "We were occupied," he wrote, "in restoring order among our troops; we should either have commenced our retreat, or at least have prepared the means to commence it at nightfall. But a certain carelessness on the part of Napoleon, which it is impossible to explain and difficult to describe, filled the cup of our sorrows." Considering who wrote these words, they must be taken with allowance; but they indicate a truth, that in his decadence this hitherto many-sided man could not be both general and Emperor. No answer from Francis was received; the allies agreed on this course, and determined, according to their agreement with England, not to cease fighting till the last French soldier was over the Rhine. It was midnight when Napoleon finally drew in his posts and gave preliminary orders to dispose his troops in readiness either to fight or to retreat.

When day dawned on October eighteenth the French army occupied an entirely new position: the right wing, under Murat, lying between Connewitz and Dölitz; the center at Probstheida in a salient angle; the left, under Ney, with front toward the north between Paunsdorf and Gohlis. Within this arc, and close about the city, stood all the well-tried corps, infantry, artillery, and cavalry, under their various leaders of renown—Poniatowski, Augereau, Victor, Drouot, Kellermann, Oudinot, Latour-Maubourg, Macdonald, Marmont, Reynier, and Souham; Napoleon was on a hillock at Thonberg, with the old guard in reserve. His chief concern was the line of retreat, which was still open when, at seven, the fighting began. Schwarzenberg, with the left, could get no farther than Connewitz.

CHAP. IX

[ÆT. 44

Снар. IX

Bennigsen, with the right, started to feel Bernadotte and complete the investment. Neither was entirely successful, but Marmont withdrew from before Blücher, and Ney from before Bernadotte and Bennigsen, in order to avoid being surrounded; so that the two French armies were united before nightfall on the western outskirts of the town, where Bertrand had routed Gyulay, and had kept open the all-important line of retreat, over which, since noon, trains of wagons had been passing. But magnificent as was the work of all these doughty champions on both sides, it was far surpassed in the center, where during the entire day, under Napoleon's eye, advance and resistance had been desperate. Men fell like grass before the scythe, and surging lines of their comrades moved on from behind. Such were the numbers and such the carnage that men have compared the conflict to that of the nations at Armageddon.

At Victor's stand, near Probstheida, the fighting was fiercer than the fiercest. The allied troops charged with fixed bayonets, rank after rank, column following on column; cannon roared while grape and shrapnel sped to meet the assailants; men said the air was full of human limbs; ten times Russians and Prussians came on, only to be driven ten times back. The very soil on which the assailants trod was human flesh. Hour after hour the slaughter continued. Occasionally the French attempted a rally, but only to be thrown back by musket fire and cavalry charge. It was the same at Stötteritz, where no one seemed to pause for breath. Woe to him who fell in fatigue: he was soon but another corpse in the piles over which new reinforcements came on to the assault or countercharge. At last there was scarcely a semblance of order; in hand-to-hand conflict men shouted, struggled, wrestled, thrust, advanced, and withdrew, and in neither combatants nor onlookers was there any sense of reality. Bv dusk the heated cannon were almost useless, the muskets entirely so, and, as darkness came down, the survivors fell asleep where they stood, riders in their saddles, horses in their tracks. Napoleon learned that thirty-five thousand Saxons on the left had gone over to the enemy, and some one of his staff handing him a wooden chair, he dropped into it and sank into a stupor almost as he touched it. For half an hour he sat in oblivion, while in the thickening darkness the marshals and generals gathered about the watch-fires, and stood with sullen mien to abide his awakening. The moon came slowly up, Napo.

AQUINFILE MADE FOR THE CENTURY CO.

TYPOGRAVURE ROUSSOD, VALADON & CO., FYRIS.

THE FRENCH ARMY LEAVING LEPPSIC.

FROM THE AQUADERLE BY F. DE MYREACH.

Æт. 44]

leon awoke, orders were given to complete the dispositions for retreat CHAP. IX already taken, and, there being nothing left to do, the Emperor, with inscrutable emotions, passed inside the walls of Leipsic to take shelter in an inn on the creaking sign-board of which were depicted the arms of Prussia!

Throughout the night French troops streamed over the stone bridge across the Elster; in the early morning the enemy began to advance, and ever-increasing numbers hurried away to gain the single avenue of retreat. Until midday Napoleon wandered aimlessly about the inner town, giving unimportant commands to stem the ever-growing confusion and disorder. Haggard, and with his clothing in disarray, he was not recognized by his own men, being sometimes rudely jostled. After an affecting farewell to the King of Saxony, in which his unhappy ally was instructed to make the best terms he could for himself, the Emperor finally fell into the throng and moved with it toward Lindenan. Halting near the Elster, a French general began to seek information from the roughly clad onlooker who, without a suite or even a single attendant, stood apparently indifferent, softly whistling, "Malbrook s'en va t'en guerre." Of course the officer started as he recognized the Emperor, but the conquered sovereign took no notice. Bystanders thought his heart was turned to stone. Still the rush of retreat went on, successfully also, in spite of some confusion, until at two some one blundered. By the incredible mistake of a French subaltern, as is now proven, the permanent Elster bridge was blown up, and the temporary one had long since fallen. Almost simultaneously with this irreparable disaster the allies had stormed the city, and the French rear-guard came thundering on, hoping to find safety in flight. Plunging into the deep stream, many, like Poniatowski, were drowned; some, like the wounded Macdonald, swam safely across. The scene was heartrending as horses, riders, and footmen rolled senseless in the dark flood, while others scrambled over their writhing forms in mad despair. Revnier and Lauriston, with twenty thousand men, were captured, the King of Saxony was sent a prisoner to Berlin and Stein prepared to govern his domains by commission from the allies. By ten in the evening Bertrand was in possession of Weissenfels; Oudinot wheeled at Lindenau, and held the unready pursuers in check.

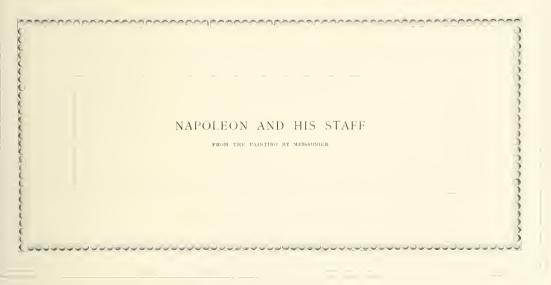

Next morning, the twentieth, Napoleon was alert and active; retreat began again, but only in tolerable order. Although he could not control Снар. IX 1813 the great attendant rabble of eamp-followers and stragglers, he had nevertheless about a hundred and twenty thousand men under his standards; as many more, and those his finest veterans, were besieged and held in the fortresses of the Elbe, Oder, and Vistula by local militia. These places, he knew, would no longer be tenable; in fact, they began to surrender almost immediately, and the survivors of Leipsic were soon in a desperate plight from hunger and fatigue. Yet the commander gave no sign of sensibility. "'T was thus he left Russia," said the surly men in the ranks. Hunger-typhus appeared, and spread with awful rapidity; the country swarmed with partizans; the columns of the allies were behind and on each flank; fifty-six thousand Bavarians were approaching from Ansbach, under Wrede; at Erfurt all the Saxons and Bavarians still remaining under the French eagles marched The only foreign troops who kept true were those who had no away. country and no refuge, the unhappy Poles, who, though disappointed in their hopes, were yet faithful to him whom they wrongly believed to have been their sincere friend. Though stricken by all his woes, the Emperor was undaunted; the retreat from Germany was indeed perilous, but it was marked by splendid courage and unsurpassed skill. At Kösen and at Eisenach the allies were outwitted, and at Hanau, on the twenty-ninth, the Bavarians were overwhelmed in a pitched fight by an exhibition of personal pluck and calmness on Napoleon's part paralleled only by his similar conduct at Krasnoi in the previous year. At the head of less than six thousand men, he held in check nearly fifty thousand until the rest of his columns came up, when he fell with the old fire upon a hostile line posted with the river Kinzig in its rear, and not only disorganized it utterly, but inflicted on it a loss of ten thousand men, more than double the number which fell in his own ranks. But in spite of this brilliant success, the ravages of disease continued, and only seventy thousand men of the imperial army crossed the Rhine to Mainz. Soon the houses of that city were packed, and the streets were strewn with victims of the terrible hunger-typhus. They died by hundreds, and corpses lay for days unburied; before the plague was stayed thousands found an inglorious grave.

÷

PUBLICATION AUTIIORIZED

,

CHAPTER X

THE FRANKFORT PROPOSALS

IMPORTANCE OF THE BATTLE OF LEIPSIC — DECLINE OF NAPOLEON'S POWERS — HIS GENTLER SIDE — DISINTEGRATION OF NAPOLEON'S EMPIRE — THE COALITION AND THE SENTIMENT OF NATIONALITY — REASONS FOR THE PARLEY AT FRANKFORT — INSINCERITY OF THE PROPOSALS — NAPOLEON AND FRANCE — THE REVOLUTION AND THE EMPIRE — HOLLOW DIPLOMACY.

CHAP. X

1813

THE battle of Leipsic is one of the most important in general history. Apparently it was only the offset to Austerlitz, as the Beresina had been to Friedland. In reality it was far more, because it gave the hegemony of continental Europe to Prussia. French imperialism in its death-throes wiped out the score of royal France against the Hapsburgs; Austria was not yet banished from central Europe to the lower courses of the Danube, but, what was much the same thing, Prussia was launched upon her career of military aggrandizement. Three dynasties seemed in that battle to have celebrated a joint triumph; as a matter of fact, the free national spirit of Germany, having narrowly escaped being smothered by Napoleonic imperialism, had chosen a national dynasty as its refuge. The conflict is well designated by German historians as "the battle of the nations," but the language has a different sense from that which is generally attributed to it. The seeds of Italian unity had been sown, but they were not yet to The battle of Leipsic seemed to check them, yet it was germinate. the process there begun under which they sprang up and bore fruit. France was destined to become for a time the sport of an antiquated The liberties which men of English blood had been dynastic system. painfully developing for a century she sought to seize in an instant; she was to see them elude her grasp for sixty years still, until her VOL. IV.-11

LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

78

CHAP. X

1813

democratic life, having assumed consistency, should find expression in institutions essentially and peculiarly her own. Though the conquering monarchs believed that revolutionary liberalism had been quenched at Leipsie, its ultimate triumph was really assured, since it was consigned to its natural guardianship, that of national commonwealths. The imperial agglomeration of races and nationalities was altogether amorphous and had been found impossible; that form of union was not again attempted after Leipsie, while another — that, namely, of constitutional organic nationalities — was made operative. The successive stages of advance are marked by 1813, 1848, and 1870.

The Saxon campaigns display the completion of the process in which the great strategist, stifled by political anxieties, became the creature of circumstances both as general and statesman. The Russian campaign was nieely calculated, but its proportions and aim were those of the Oriental theoerat, not of the prosaic European soldier. With the aid of the railroad and the electric telegraph, they might possibly have been wrought into a workable problem, but that does not excuse the errors of premature and misplaced ambition. The Saxon campaigns, again, are marked by a boldness of design and a skill in combination characteristic of the best strategy; but again the proportions are monstrous, and, what is worse, the execution is intermittent and feeble. As in Russia, the war organism was insufficient for the numbers and distances involved, while the subordinates of every grade, though supple instruments, seemed mercenary, self-seeking, and destitute of devotion. Bonaparte had ruled men's hearts by his use of a cause, securing devotion to it and to himself by rude bonhomie, by success, and by sufficient rewards; Napoleon, on the other hand, quenehed devotion by a lavishness which sated the greediest, and lost the affections of his associates by the demands of his gigantic plans.

As the world-conqueror felt the foundations of his greatness quivering, he became less eallous and more human. Early in 1813 he said: "I have a sympathetic heart, like another, but since earliest childhood I have accustomed myself to keep that string silent, and now it is altogether dumb." His judgment of himself was mistaken: throughout the entire season he was strangely and exceptionally moved by the horrors of war; his purse was ever open for the suffering; he released the King of Saxony from his entangling engagements; in spite of his hard-set expression on the retreat from Leipsic, he forbade his men to fire the suburbs of the city in order to retard the pursuit of their foes, and before he left Mainz for St. Cloud he showed the deepest concern, and put forth the strongest effort, in behalf of the dying soldiery.

[Æт. 44

Æт. 44]

The immediate effects of Leipsic were the full display of that national spirit which had been refined, if not created, in the fires of Napoleon's imperious career. An Austrian army under Hiller drove Eugène over the Adige. The Italians, not unsusceptible to the power in the air, felt their humiliation, and, turning on their imperial King in bitter hate, determined under the influence of feelings most powerfully expressed by Alfieri, that they would emulate northern Europe. But though they had for years been subject to the new influences, enjoying the equal administration of the Code Napoléon, and freed from the interference of petty local tyrants, they were neither united nor enlightened in sufficient degree. After an outburst of hatred to France, they were erushed by their old despots, and the land relapsed into the direst confusion. The Confederation of the Rhine was, however, resolved into its elements: the Mecklenburgs reasserted their independence; King Jerome fled to France; Würtemberg, Hesse-Darmstadt, and Baden followed Bavaria's example; Cassel, Brunswick, Hanover, and Oldenburg were craftily restored to their former rulers before Stein's bureau could establish an administration. Holland recalled the Prince of Orange, Spain rose to support Wellington, and Soult was not merely driven over the Pyrenees — he was defeated on French soil, and shut up in Bayonne.

Even the three monarchs, as they sedately moved across Germany with their exhausted and battered armies, were aware of nationality as a controlling force in the future. In a direct movement on Paris they could, as Ney said, "have marked out their days in advance," but they halted at Frankfort for a parley. There were several reasons why they should pause. They had seen France rise in her might; they did not care to assist at the spectacle again. Moreover, the coalition had accomplished its task and earned its pay; not a Frenchman, except real or virtual prisoners, was left east of the Rhine. From that point the interests of the three monarchs were divergent. As Gentz, the Austrian statesman, said, "The war for the emancipation of states bids fair to become one for the emancipation of the people." Alexander, Frederick William, and Francis were each and all anxious for the future of absolutism, but otherwise there was mutual distrust. AusСпар. Х

Снар. Х 1813 tria was suspicious of Prussia, and desired immediate peace. In the restoration of Holland under English auspices, Russia saw the perpetuation of British maritime and commercial supremacy, to the disadvantage of her Oriental aspirations, and the old Russian party demanded peace. On the other hand, Alexander wished to avenge Napoleon's march to Moscow by an advance to Paris; and though Frederick William distrusted what he called the Czar's Jacobinism, his own soldiers, thirsting for further revenge, also desired to prosecute the war; even the most enlightened Prussian statesmen believed that nothing short of a complete cataclysm in France could shake Napoleon's hold on that people and destroy his power. Offsetting these conflicting tendencies against one another, Metternich was able to secure military inaction for a time, while the coalition formulated a series of proposals calculated to woo the French people, and thus to bring Napoleon at once to terms.

Ostensibly the Frankfort proposals, adopted on November ninth, were only a slight advance on the ultimatum of Prague; Austria was to have enough Italian territory to secure her preponderance in that peninsula; France was to keep Savoy, with Nice; the rest of Italy was to be independent. Holland and Spain liberated, France was to have her "natural" boundaries, the Alps, the Pyrenees, the ocean, and the Rhine. Napoleon was to retain a slight preponderance in Germany, and the hope was held out that in a congress to settle details for a general pacification, Great Britain, content with the "maritime rights" which had caused the war, would hand back the captured French colo-The various ministers present at Frankfort assented to these nies. proposals for Great Britain, Austria, Russia, and Prussia respectively; but Alexander and Frederick William were dissatisfied with them, and when Castlereagh heard them, he was as furious as his cold blood would permit at the thought of France retaining control of the Netherlands, Antwerp being the commercial key to central Europe.

Such a humor in three of the high contracting parties makes it doubtful whether the Frankfort proposals had any reality, and this doubt is further increased by the circumstances of the so-called negotiation. St. Aignan, the French envoy to the Saxon duchies, had in violation of international law and courtesy been seized at Gotha and held as a prisoner. He was now set free and instructed to urge upon Napoleon the necessity of an immediate settlement. To his brother-in-law,

IN THE COLLECTION OF LADY WALLACE.

THE BATTLE OF HANAU, OCTOBER 30, 1813.

TYPOGRAVURE HOUSSOD, VALADON & CO., PARIS.

Æт. 44]

the pacific Caulaincourt, who was soon to displace Maret as minister of foreign affairs, he was to hand a private and personal letter from Metternich. In the course of this epistle the writer expresses his conviction that any effort to conclude a peace would come to nothing. Not only, therefore, were the pretended negotiations entirely destitute of form, they were prejudged from the outset. Still further, the allies refused what Napoleon had granted after Bautzen, an armistice, and insisted that hostilities were to proceed during negotiation. All possible doubt as to the sincerity of the proposals is turned into assurance by Metternich's admission in his memoirs that they were intended to divorce Napoleon from the French nation, and in particular to work on the feelings of the army. He says that neither Alexander nor Frederick William would have assented to them had they not been convinced that Napoleon would "never in the world of his own accord" resolve to accept them. Yet the world has long believed that Napoleon, as he himself expressed it, lost his crown for Antwerp; that had he believed the honeyed words of the Austrian minister, and opened negotiations on an indefinite basis without delay, he might have kept France with its revolutionary boundaries intact for himself and his dynasty, and by the sacrifice of his imperial ambitions have retained for her, if not preponderance, at least importance, in the councils of Europe.

Neither Napoleon nor the French nation was deceived; a peace made under such circumstances could result only in a dishonorable tutelage to the allied sovereigns. France abhorred the dynasties and all their works, believing that dynastic rule could never mean anything except absolutism and feudalism. The experiment of popular sovereignty wielded by a democracy had been a failure; but the liberal French, like men of the same intelligence throughout Europe, did not, for all that, lose faith in popular sovereignty; they knew there must be some channel for its exercise. Outside of France, as in it, the most enlightened opinion of the time regarded Napoleon as the savior of society. The Queen of Saxony bitterly reproached Metternich for having deserted Napoleon's "sacred cause." This was because the Emperor of the French seemed to have used the people's power for the people's good. His giant arm alone could wield the popular majesty. It is said that the great mass of the French nation, on hearing of the Frankfort proposals, groaned and laughed by turns. Being profoundly, devotedly imperialist and therefore idealistic, they were outraged at the

Снар. Х

1813

CHAP. X

* 1813

thought of Hapsburgs, Romanoffs, or Hohenzollerns, the very inearnations of German feudality, as leaders of the new Europe. It seemed the irony of fate that eivil and political rights on the basis, not of privilege, but of manhood, the prize for which the world had been turned upside down, should be intrusted to such keepers. Welded into a homogeneous nationality themselves, the Freneh could not understand that the inchoate nationalities in other states had as yet nothing but dynastic forms of expression, or foresee that during a century to eome the old dynasties would find safety only in adapting royalty to national needs.

Napoleon seems to have been fully aware of French sentiment. In addition, he understood that not merely for this sufficient reason could he never be king of France in name or fact, but also that, having elsewhere harried and humiliated both peoples and dynasties in the name of revolutionary ideals, the masses had found him out, and were as much embittered as their rulers, believing him to be a charlatan using dazzling principles as a cloak for personal ambition. In May, 1813, the Emperor Francis, anxious to salve the lacerated pride of the Hapsburgs, produced a bundle of papers purporting to prove that the Bonapartes had once been ruling princes at Treviso. "My nobility," was Napoleon's stinging reply, "dates only from Marengo." He well knew that when the battle should be fought that would undo Marengo, his nobility would end. In other words, without solid French support he was nothing, and that support he was fully aware he could never have as king of France. If the influence of what France improperly believed to be solely the French Revolution were to be confined to her boundaries, revolutionary or otherwise, not only was Napoleon's prestige destroyed, but along with it would go French leadership in Europe. An imperial throne there must be, exerting French influence far abroad. What happened at Paris, therefore, may be regarded as a counter-feint to Metternieh's effort at securing an advantageous peace from the French nation when it should have renounced Napoleon. It was merely an attempt to collect the remaining national strength, not now for aggressive warfare, but for the expulsion of hated invaders.

Having received no formulated proposition for acceptance or rejection, and desiring to force one, the Emperor of the French virtually disregarded the letter of Metternich's communication, and sent a carefully considered message to the allies. Making no mention in this of the terms brought by St. Aignan, he suggested Caulaincourt as plenipotentiary to an international congress which should meet somewhere on the Rhine, say at Mannheim. Further, he declared that his object had always been the independence of all the nations, "from the Continental as well as from the maritime point of view." This communication reached Frankfort on November sixteenth, and, whether wilfully or not, was misinterpreted to mean that the writer would persist in questioning England's maritime rights. Thereupon Metternich replied by accepting Mannheim as the place for the proposed conference, and promised to communicate the language of Napoleon's letter to his co-allies. How far these co-allies were from a sincere desire for peace is proven by their next step, taken almost on the date of Metternich's reply. A proclamation was widely posted in the cities of France, which stated, in a cant borrowed from Napoleon's own practice, that the allies desired France "to be great, strong, and prosperous"; they were making war, it was asserted, not "on France, but on that preponderance which Napoleon had too long exercised, to the misfortune of Europe and of France herself, to which they guaranteed in advance an extent of territory such as she never had under her kings." Napoleon's riposte was to despatch a swarm of trusty emissaries throughout France in order to compose all quarrels of the people with the government, to strengthen popular devotion in every possible way—in short, to counteract the possible effects of this call. The messengers found public opinion thoroughly imperial, but profoundly embittered against Maret as the supposed instigator of disastrous wars. Maret was transferred to the Department of State, and the pacific Caulaincourt was made minister of foreign affairs. On December second, at the earliest possible moment, the new minister addressed a note to Metternich, accepting the terms of the "general and summary basis." This, said the despatch, would involve great sacrifices; but Napoleon would feel no regret if only by a similar abnegation England would provide the means for a general, honorable peace. Metternich replied that nothing now stood in the way of convening a congress, and that he would notify England to send a plenipotentiary. There, however, the matter ended, and Metternich's record of those Frankfort days scarcely notices the subject, so interested is he in the squabbles of the sovereigns over the opening of a new campaign. It was the end of the year when they reached an agreement

[Æт. 44

Æт. 44]

83

Спар. Х

1813

CHAPTER XI

THE INVASION OF FRANCE

Amazing Schemes of Napoleon for New Levies — Attitude of the People toward the Empire — The Disaffected Elements — Napoleon's Armament — Activity of the Imperialists — Release of Ferdinand and the Pope — Napoleon's Farewell to Paris — His Strategic Plan — France against Europe — The Conduct of Bernadotte — Murat's Defection — Conflicting Interests of the Allies — Positions of the Opponents at the Outbreak of Hostilities.

Снар. XI 1813-14

 $\mathcal{T}$ HAT happened in France between the first days of November, 1813, when Napoleon reached St. Cloud, and the close of the year, is so incredible that it scarcely seems to belong in the pages of sober history. Of five hundred and seventy-five thousand Frenchmen, strictly excluding Germans and Poles, who had been sent to war during 1812 and 1813, about three hundred thousand were prisoners or shut up in distant garrisons, and a hundred and seventy-five thousand were dead or missing; therefore a hundred thousand or thereabouts remained under arms and ready for active service. By various decrees of the Emperor and the senate, nine hundred and thirty-six thousand more were called to arms : a hundred and sixty thousand from the elasses between 1804 and 1814, whether they had once served or not; a hundred and sixty thousand from the elass of 1815; a hundred and seventy-six thousand five hundred were to be enrolled in the regular national guard, and a hundred and forty thousand in a home guard; finally, in a comprehensive sweep from all the classes between 1804 and 1814 inclusive, every possible man was to be drawn. This, it was estimated, would produce three hundred thousand more.

It is easy to exaggerate the significance of these enormous figures,

IN THE COLLECTION OF PRINCE MURAT

NURAVED BY A. F. ANDERSON

MARIE-ANNUNCIADE-CAROLINE BONAPARTE

WIFE OF JOACHIM MURAT; QUEEN OF NAPLES, COUNTESS LIPONA; AND HER CHILDREN, ACHILLE, LAETITIA, LUCIEN AND LOUISE

FROM THE PAINTING BY FRANÇOIS GÉRARD

for to the layman they would seem to mean that every male capable of bearing arms was to be taken. But this was far from being the case; contrary to the general impression, the population of France had been and was steadily increasing. In spite of all the butcheries of foreign and civil wars, the number of inhabitants was growing at the rate of half a million yearly, and the country could probably have furnished three times the number called out. Moreover, less than a third of the nine hundred and thirty-six thousand were ever organized, and not more than an eighth of them fought. This disproportion between plan and fulfilment was due partly to official incapacity or worse, partly to a popular resistance which was not due to disaffection. It speaks volumes for the state of the country that even the hated flying columns, with their thorough procedure, could not find the men, especially the fathers, husbands, and only sons, who were the solitary supports of many families. The fields were tilled by the spades of women and children, for there were neither horses to draw nor men to hold the plows. Government pawn-shops were gorged, and the government storehouses were bursting with manufactured wares for which there was no market; government securities were worth less than half their face, the currency had disappeared, and usury was rampant. Yet it seems certain that four fifths of the people associated none of these miseries with Napoleonic empire. The generation which had grown to maturity under Napoleon saw only one side of his activities: the majestic public works he had inaugurated, the glories of France and the splendors of empire during the intervals of peace, the exhaustion and abasement of her foes in a long series of splendid campaigns-all this they associated with the imperial rule, and desired what they supposed was a simple thing, the Empire and peace.

The other fifth was, however, thoroughly aroused. When the legislature convened on December nineteenth, and the diplomatic correspondence was so eleverly arranged and presented as to make the allies appear implacable, an address to the throne was passed, amid thunderous applause and by a large majority, which virtually called for a return to constitutional government as the price of additional war supplies. In sober moments even the most ardent liberals were ashamed, feeling that this was not an opportune moment for disorganizing such administration as there was by calls for the reform of the constitution. Only one question was imperative, the awful responsibility Vol. IV.-12 they had for the national identity. The general public was so outraged CHAP. XI by the spectacle that the deputies reconsidered their action, and by a vote of two hundred and fifty-four to two hundred and twenty-three struck out the obnoxious clause. But this did not appease Napoleon, who made no attempt to conceal his rage, and prorogued the chamber in scorn. His support was ample in the almost universal conviction that at such a moment there was no time for parleying about abstract questions of political rights; but every cavilling deputy had some friends at home, and in a crisis where the very existence of France was jeopardized there were agitations by the reactionary radicals. The royalists kept silent then, and for months later, contenting themselves with biting innuendos or witty double meanings; drinking, for instance, to "the Emperor's last victory," when the newspapers announced "the last victory of the Emperor."

Спар. ХІ

1813-14

1813-14

The first conscription from the classes of 1808–1814 was thoroughly successful, the second attempt to glean from them was an utter failure; the effort to forestall the draft of 1815 met with resistance, and was abandoned. It was impossible to organize the home guards and reserves, for they rebelled or escaped, and local danger had to be averted by local volunteers who were designated as "sedentary" because they could not be ordered away. By the end of January not more than twenty thousand men had been secured for general service from all classes other than the first—at least that was approximately the number in the various camps of instruction. In order to arm and equip the recruits, Napoleon had recourse to his private treasure, drawing fifty-five million francs from the vaults of the Tuileries for that purpose. The remaining ten were transferred at intervals to Blois. But all his treasure could not buy what did not exist. The best military stores were in the heart of Europe; the French arsenals could afford only antiquated and almost useless supplies. The recruits were armed, some with shot-guns and knives, some with old muskets the use of which they did not know; they were for the most part without uniforms, and wore bonnets, blouses, and sabots. There were not half enough horses for the scanty artillery and cavalry. Worse than all, there was no time for instruction in the manual and tactics. On one occasion a boy conscript was found standing inactive under a fierce musketry fire; with artless intrepidity he remarked that he believed he could aim as well as anybody if he only knew how to load his gun!

[ÆT. 44

The disaffected, though few, were powerful and active, suborning the prefects and civic authorities by every device, issuing proclamations which promised anything and everything, and procuring plans of fortified places for the allies. Talleyrand began to utter oracular innuendos about the vindictiveness of the allies, the desertion of Murat, the sack of Paris, and various half-truths more dangerous even than lies. The air was so full of rumors that, although there was no wide-spread revolutionary movement, there were now and then serious panies; the town of Chaumont surrendered to a solitary Würtemberg horseman. But when the populace of the country at large began to wonder who the coming Bourbon might be, and what he would take back from the present possessors of royal and ecclesiastical estates, they were staggered. People in the cities heard with some satisfaction the strains of the "Marseillaise," which by order of imperial agents were once again ground out around the streets by the hand-organs. Napoleon walked the avenues of Paris without escort, and was wildly cheered; the Empress and her little son were produced on public occasions with dramatic success, and popular wit dubbed the boy conscripts by the name of "Marie Louises." The little men showed a grim determination and eventually a sublime courage, but they never could acquire the veteran steadfastness which wins battles. Journals, theaters, music-halls, and public balls were all managed in the interest of imperial patriotism; imperial tyranny dealt ruthlessly with suspicious characters. Yet the imperialists had their doubts, and many, like Savary, threw an anchor to windward by storing treasure at distant points, and sending their families to safe retreats. On the whole, the balance of public opinion at the opening of 1814 was overwhelmingly imperialist both in the cities and in the country. Men ardently desired peace, but they wanted it with honor and under the Empire.

That the Empire desired peace seemed to be proved by steps for the release of its two most important prisoners, the King of Spain and the Pope. Wellington thought that if the former had been despatched directly into his kingdom on December eighth, the day on which the conditions between himself and the Emperor were signed, England would have found the further conduct of the war impossible. Talleyrand, already deep in royalist plots, must have been of the same opinion, for he did not advise haste, but craftily suggested to his prisoner that the provisional government of Spain might refuse to accept him CHAP. XI

1813-14

CHAP. XI 1813-14 as king unless the treaty of release had been previously ratified by the Cortes. Accordingly, it was referred to them, and, since the liberals desired the assent to their new constitution of a king not under duress, by their influence it was rejected. It was not until March, 1814, that Ferdinand was unconditionally released, and this delay proved fatal to Napoleon's interests in Spain. The liberals could no longer fight for Napoleon's interests in Spain. The liberals could no longer fight for free institutions, because it was then clear that the dynastic conservatism of Europe was to win a temporary victory. In about six months King Ferdinand undid the progressive work of six years, and Spain relapsed into absolutism and ecclesiasticism, with all their attendant evils. Nevertheless, France interpreted the conduct of the Emperor as indicating an earnest desire for peace, and this feeling had been strengthened by the absolutely unconditional release of the Pope on January twenty-second. This apparently gracious concession was effective among the masses, who did not know, as the Emperor did, that the allies were already on French soil.

The very next day Napoleon performed his last official act, which was one of great courage both physical and moral. The national guard in Paris had been reorganized, but its leaders had never been thoroughly loyal, many of them being royalists, some radical republicans, and the disaffection of both classes had been heightened by recent events. But the officers were nevertheless summoned to the Tuileries; the risk was doubled by the fact that they came armed. Drawn up in the vast chamber known as that of the marshals, they stood expectant; the great doors were thrown open, and there entered the Emperor, accompanied only by his consort and their child in the arms of his governess, Madame de Montesquiou. Napoleon announced simply that he was about to put himself at the head of his army, hoping, by the aid of God and the valor of his troops, to drive the enemy beyond the fron-There was silence. Then taking in one hand that of the Emtiers. press, and leading forward his child by the other, he continued, "I intrust the Empress and the King of Rome to the courage of the national guard." Still silence. After a moment, with suppressed emotion, he concluded, "My wife and my son." No generous-hearted Frenchman could withstand such an appeal; breaking ranks by a spontaneous impulse, the listeners started forward in a mass, and shook the very walls with their cry, "Long live the Emperor!" Many shed tears, and felt, as they withdrew in respectful silence, a new sense of devotion welling up in their hearts. On the eve of his departure, the Emperor CHAP. XI received a numerously signed address from the very men whose loyalty 1813-14 he had hitherto had just reason to suspect.

NAPOLEON-FRANÇOIS-CHARLES-JOSEPH LRINGL DEPURIAL: KING OF ROME: DUKL OF REFERISTADE

 $\mathbf{FROM} = \mathrm{JH}_{\mathbb{C}}(\mathbf{PAINTING})^{\frac{1}{2}} \mathbf{Y}_{\mathbb{C}} \mathbf{X} = \mathbf{THOMAS}_{\mathbb{C}}(\mathbf{LAWRFN})^{\frac{1}{2}}$

It was four in the morning of January twenty-fifth when Napoleon left for Châlons. From that moment he was no longer Emperor. During the long winter nights just past he had wrought with an intensity and a feverish activity which he had never surpassed, sparing neither himself nor others, displaying no consideration for prejudice or honest opposition, calling on every Frenchman to sacrifice everything for France, to which, as he vehemently asserted, he himself was more necessary than she to him. If he had come honestly to believe what millions of others believed, it was little wonder; he had thenceforth but one aim — to prove that he was, as of yore, the first general of France, the only one able to save the country in an hour when all her glories were falling in wreck about her. His strategic plans, immense and intricate as was his task, were complete and excellent. The first was intended to prevent invasion by way of Liège, the most direct line and that which Prussia preferred. The second, which was partly defensive, was the one eventually used against the clumsy form of advance actually chosen by the invaders. Of the two, the former was the more brilliant, but the second was almost as clever. By it the Rhine bank was divided into three parts for purposes of defense. Macdonald was stationed at Cologne to protect the lower course; Marmont was to guard the central stretch, and they two divided between them the remnants of the army which had been swept out of Germany; Victor was stationed on the upper course to command the garrisons of the great frontier fortifications and strengthen himself by the new levies; Bertrand remained as a sort of rear post on the right bank of the river at Kastel, opposite Mainz. All told, these generals had at first only fifty thousand men.

The allies no sooner obtained possession of central Europe than they outdid its recent master in every species of exaction. The countries which had formed the Confederacy of the Rhine were compelled almost to double the number of the contingents they had raised for France, and to organize every fencible man into either the first or second line of reserves, called by the old feudal terms of ban and arrière-ban. At the same time the allies demanded and obtained new subsidies both of money and arms from Great Britain. In the three armies of Austria,

90

CHAP. XI Prussia, and Russia, as they stood on the Rhine, there were ready by January first about two hundred and eighty-five thousand men. By the end of February the army-lists of France, excluding the national guards, displayed a total of six hundred and fifty thousand men; the coalition, including England, had enregistered nearly a million. Deducting forty per cent. as ample to cover all shortcomings, we may say that France, with three hundred and ninety thousand in the ranks, men and boys, faced Europe with six hundred thousand full-grown men. These figures include the French armies of Catalonia, of the Pyrenees, of Italy, and of the Netherlands, together with the garrisons in all the strong places then held by France on both sides of the Rhine; they also include the Russian, Austrian, and Prussian reserves, with the national armies of Holland, Spain, and Italy.

> Aside from the centrifugal forces inherent in the coalition, there was one which threatened its disintegration: the erratic character of the great Gascon who represented Sweden. Bernadotte's first care, after the battle of Leipsic, was to move north and secure the longcoveted prize of Norway. Ever mindful of the hint about a French crown, which Alexander had thrown out as still another bait at Åbo, he gave as his parting admonition the transparent advice that the coming campaign should be confined to a frontier invasion of France, and at Hamburg he actually offered Davout, as the price of surrender, a safe return for himself and his army to their native land! This was too much; Alexander was furious, and the schemer was peremptorily ordered to leave a sufficient investing force before the city and return with the rest of his army to the lower Rhine. There he was suffered to remain in idleness, the task assigned to him being that of watching the Netherlands; two of his best corps were withdrawn from him and assigned to Blücher.

> Nor was Napoleon free from his thorn in the flesh. In a bulletin published by him after the retreat from Moscow was a passage which implied some censure of Murat for his lack of stability. This both the King of Naples and his spouse bitterly resented, the latter roundly abusing her brother in their correspondence. This was an excellent pretext for desertion when the general crash appeared imminent, and at Erfurt the dashing and gallant, but weak and testy monarch decamped. Hastening south, he entered at once into alliance with Austria, and then, putting himself at the head of eighty thousand Neapolitans, set out for Rome, waging a terrific warfare of proclamations. Eugène, too,—and this was an elemental disaster,—was virtually checkmated by the defection of his father-in-law, the King of Bavaria, which opened the Tyrol to the allies. All Italy was consequently lost. Augereau, whose feeble loyalty to Napoleon was already at the vanishingpoint, had been appointed to take forty thousand conscripts, collect any straggling soldiers he could find in southeastern France, and keep open the door out of Italy for some or all of Eugène's veterans, with whose assistance it was hoped the marshal could form an army for the defense of the Vosges Mountains. But Eugène, having fought the indecisive battle of Roverbello, and finding himself in a sorry plight from both the military and political points of view, could send no reinforcements until April, when finally he concluded an armistice releasing his army. Augereau therefore found himself opposite Bubna at Geneva with an ineffective force, and with very little heart to wield what he This ended Napoleon's grand scheme for uniting the forces of had. Italy, Naples, Switzerland, and France.

THE INVASION OF FRANCE

Prussia was now the ablest as well as the bitterest of Napoleon's foes, Stein, Blücher, Gneisenau, and their friends aiming at nothing short of annihilating the Napoleonic power. This was, no doubt, due in part to a thirst for revenge; but in the main it was due to the longing for such a leadership in Germany as would spread abroad the new doctrines of liberal and constitutional monarchy, in order to restrain Austria's ever-increasing influence. The councils of the allies presented an amusing spectacle. The Prussians urged an immediate advance by the best line for invasion, that, namely, from Liège and Brussels; but the Austrians, except Radetzky, drew back, fearing Prussia almost equally with France. The Czar held the balance, but his scales were very sensitive, inclining often toward Prussia, but settling in the end to a compromise suggested by Schwarzenberg and Metternich. Having imitated Napoleon in his practice of war requisitions, the allies now determined to imitate him in contempt for international law, and to violate Swiss neutrality. The plan which they adopted was to throw their main army into France by way of Basel, and thus turn the line of frowning fortresses behind the Rhine, as well as the Vosges Mountains. Blücher was to cross the middle Rhine, and Bülow, with thirty thousand men, was to coöperate with the English troops under Graham in the Netherlands. The whole scheme was unmilitary, but it exactly

CHAP. XI

1813-14

Æт. 44]

CHAP. XI suited Metternich, who, having on January thirteenth first learned of Bernadotte's understanding with the Czar about the crown of France, was very uneasy. Both he and Schwarzenberg desired to end the war on the frontier, if possible; Prussia's power and Alexander's ambitions for European preponderance were far more dangerous to Austria than a Napoleonic empire confined to France.

Blücher, leaving twenty-eight thousand men before Mainz, crossed the Saar on January ninth, with forty-seven thousand; Schwarzenberg, with the main army arrayed in four columns, two hundred and nine thousand strong, crossed the Rhine at or near Basel and moved toward Langres. The thin, straggling French columns began to retreat concentrically toward Châlons on the Marne. At the opening of the second stage in the campaign Blücher had invested the Mosel fortresses, and was advancing, with less than thirty thousand men, toward Arcis on the Aube; Schwarzenberg was in and about Langres; and the French were concentrated on a line from Vitry-le-François to St. Dizier. Napoleon reached Châlons on the twenty-sixth, having left Joseph to represent him in Paris. The wily strategist, feeble as was his strength, had momentarily secured the advantage over his unwieldy foe, having wedged himself between the invading armies, and being quite strong enough, with the forty thousand persons in his ranks, to cope with Blücher.

IN THE MUSLUM OF VERSAULES

ENGRAVED BY T. JOUNSON

MARSHAL CHARLES-PIERRE-FRANÇOIS AUGEREAU DUKE OF CASTIGLIONE

FROM THE PAINTING BY RUBERT LEFEVRE

CHAPTER XII

NAPOLEON'S SUPREME EFFORT

THE FERTILITY OF GENIUS — THE BATTLES OF BRIENNE AND LA ROTHIÈRE — THE FRENCH RETREAT — VICTORY AT CHAMPAUBERT — VICTORY AT MONTMIRAIL — VICTORY AT VAUCHAMPS — SUCCESS EN-GENDERS DELUSION — INSINCERITY OF THE ALLIES — THEIR CLASH-ING INTERESTS — THE CONGRESS OF CHÂTILLON — NAPOLEON'S PRO-CRASTINATION — FRENCH VICTORY AND FRENCH DIPLOMACY.

> Снар. XII 1814

THE year 1814 is the most astonishing of Napoleon's military life. L He first conceived a plan for combining the resources of Italy, Switzerland, Naples, and France. This failed by Augereau's sloth and Murat's ingratitude. Nothing daunted, the fertile brain then outlined schemes for meeting the quick advance of the allies through the Netherlands, for defending the Rhine frontier, and for a levy en masse of the French people to hurl back invasion under the walls of Paris. After taking the field, the daring of his conceptions, the rapidity of his movements, the surprises he prepared for his enemy, the support he wrung from an exhausted land, the devotion he received from a panting, illclothed army at bay — all are so uncommon that by contrast the allies appear to be a lumbering, stupid mass. With another antagonist they would have appeared in a very different light; Gneisenau's clear head, Blücher's daring, Radetzky's good sense and courage, together with the valor of the forces at their back, would have won the goal far more easily with an ordinary, or even an extraordinary, combatant in Napoleon's plight. The Emperor of the French had not merely a prestige worth a hundred thousand men, as he was foud of reckoning: he had an activity of mind and body, a reservoir of resources, which made his single blade cover the whole circumference of defense like the whirling spokes of a fiery wheel.

VOL. IV.-13

Снар. XII 1814

After a skirmish for the possession of St. Dizier, the campaign opened at Brienne, where Blücher, hurrying to gain touch with the main army of the allies, was caught on January twenty-ninth. The conflict probably did not recall to Napoleon his mock conflicts when a school-boy near the same spot. The terrific struggle began late in the afternoon, and lasted in full fury until midnight, when the Prussian general, narrowly escaping capture, abandoned the town and hurried toward Trannes. Thoroughly beaten, he needed not touch alone, but actual union with the Austrians, and this he gained near Bar on the Aube, whence Schwarzenberg was passing on toward Auxerre. Ignorant of this success, Napoleon now drew up his line with its center at La Rothière, hoping in the first place to hold the bridge over the Aube at Lesmont, and thus secure the moral effect of his victory at Brienne, and in the second to bring on another engagement with Blücher, whom he believed to be still isolated. Marmont was at Montierender, Mortier was summoned from before Troyes. This stand of Napoleon's was a desperate attempt to overawe the allied sovereigns, for strategically it was fatal, since in the case of either victory or defeat the French army was in danger of being outflanked by Schwarzenberg's advance, and thus cut off from Paris. On February first, Blücher, reinforced by twelve thousand of the Russian guard, attacked. The battle lasted, with fluctuating success for the allies, during two days, and at its close Napoleon safely retreated over the Aube to make another stand at Troyes. The various conflicts were terrific; in the end Blücher lost six thousand dead and wounded, the French about four thousand. The odds against the latter were never less than two to one, sometimes more. Had the allies first thrown their full strength into the contest, and had they then followed up their victory by a well-organized pursuit, the campaign would have ended there. As it was, they paused, permitted a disorganized, feeble enemy to escape, and gained nothing from the bloody conflict except an ill-founded self-confidence. Blücher wrote on the evening of the battle that they would be in Paris within eight days. To General Reynier, who was to be liberated by an exchange of prisoners, the Czar said: "We shall be in Paris before you." A council of war was called which decided for an advance on the French capital in two columns; to Blücher, as the conqueror of La Rothière, was assigned the shortest line, that down the Marne.

For several days the allied lines moved onward, slowly, widely scattered, and carelessly. Napoleon was as calm and undaunted as if he had been the victor. Retreating on the defensive with careful deliberation, he strengthened his forces by well-chosen periods of rest, and by hurrying in reinforcements from the various depots about and beyond On the afternoon of February ninth, when leaving Nogent for Paris. Sézanne, he wrote to his brother Joseph, whom he had left to represent his interests at Paris, that he could now reekon, all told, on between sixty and seventy thousand men, including engineers and artillery; that he estimated the Silesian army under Blücher at forty-five thousand, and the main army under Schwarzenberg at a hundred and fifty thousand, including Bubna and the Cossacks. "If I gain a victory over the Silesian army, and put it out of account for some days, I can turn against Schwarzenberg, reckoning on the reinforcements you will send, with from seventy to eighty thousand men, and I think he cannot oppose me at once with more than from a hundred and ten to a hundred and twenty thousand. If I find myself too weak to attack, I shall be at least strong enough to hold him in check for a fortnight or three weeks, and this would give me the opportunity for new combinations." To hold Schwarzenberg temporarily, Oudinot with twenty-five thousand men was stationed on the line from Provins to Sens, and Victor with fourteen thousand was sent to Nogent. The Emperor himself, with the old guard, about eight thousand strong, with Ney and Marmont each commanding six thousand infantry, and with ten thousand eavalry under Nansouty and Doumerc, set out from Sézanne to try his fortunes with Blücher.

Æт. 44]

CHAP. XII

1814

This was the last of Napoleon's great strategic schemes which was destined to be crowned with success. It had but a single drawback. While Napoleon was still the boldest man in war that ever lived, as at St. Helena he declared himself to be, his marshals were uneasy and depressed; Marmont, in this moment of infinite chance, as it seemed to him, fell into a panic. The marshal's fears were not justified, for his Emperor's daring was not foolhardy. It was calculated on the myriad chances of his enemy's opportunity and his enemy's ability, and in this case it was perfectly calculated. Blücher, in spite of Gneisenau's continuous warnings, was over-confident. Having dispersed his detachments more than ever, he had for two days been moving swiftly in the hope of cutting off Macdonald by a dashing feat of arms. In his haste he had not taken up two Russian corps which had been separated from Снар. ХП 1814 his main line, but on the contrary he had left them so far out that they were beyond support. By a blunder of the Czar's, reinforcements which had been promised were still a long distance in the rear. Schwarzenberg's movements were marked by an over-confident deliberation as characteristic of him as overhaste was of Blücher. Accordingly when on the tenth Marmont advanced from Sézanne, he found the corps of Olsusieff, about forty-five hundred strong, virtually isolated at Champaubert. His own numbers were slightly superior, and with a swift rush he annihilated the unready Russians. Napoleon was beside himself with joy, and began to talk of the Vistula once more; but he stopped when he saw how sour the visages of Marmont and the other marshals grew at the very mention of such an idea. Nevertheless, if the process begun at Champaubert could be continued, victory and ultimate recovery of something more than French empire were assured. He therefore hurried Nansouty and Macdonald on toward Montmirail for a second stroke of the same kind.

The affair at Montmirail was more of a battle than that at Champaubert, for Blücher had been able to gather in the divisions of Sacken, York, Kleist, and Kapzewitch. The battle opened about an hour before noon on the eleventh by a fierce artillery fire from the French, behind which Napoleon manœuvered so as to concentrate his own force against the Russians, and separate them from York with his Prussians. At two o'clock Napoleon attacked the Russians, Mortier engaging the Prussians separately. The plan succeeded, and by nightfall the enemy was in full retreat for Château-Thierry, where was the nearest bridge over the Marne. Napoleon had hoped that Macdonald would arrive from La Ferté-sous-Jouarre in time to seize the bridge, cut off the retreat, and make the victory decisive. But in spite of heroic exertion, that marshal could not or did not move with sufficient rapidity over the heavy dirt roads. The flying allies sacked the town with awful cruelty, and destroyed the bridge without any molestation except from the inhabitants, who wreaked their vengeance on numerous stragglers. On the thirteenth the French occupied the place, repaired the bridge, and crossed to the right bank. Next morning Marmont started in pursuit of Blücher.

Somewhat flushed by such success, Napoleon deliberated whether he should not now turn and attack Schwarzenberg. The Emperor thought these victories might give pause to a mediocre Austrian, ever mindful of the terrific blows his country had received once and again from France. He was mistaken; Schwarzenberg had moved, though slowly, vet steadily forward. On the twelfth Victor abandoned the bridge at Nogent, and Napoleon sent Macdonald with twelve thousand men to join Victor at Montereau. Early on the fourteenth came news that Blücher had driven Marmont back to Fromentières. By noon Napoleon had effected a junction with this marshal near Étoges, making a famous and successful flank march over a marshy country, a manœuver which is justly considered worthy of his great genius. Advancing then to the neighborhood of Vauchamps, his infantry attacked in front, while the cavalry, under Grouchy, outflanked the enemy's line and fell on the rear. Blücher was apparently doomed, for he had only three regiments of cavalry, and while facing one powerful enemy he would be forced to break the ranks of another in order to open a line of retreat. He solved the problem, but at enormous cost. Forming his troops into a line of solid squares, one stood to support the artillery and receive the onset in front, while the others dashed at Grouchy's horsemen, each square standing and retreating behind the next alternately as the bloody retreat went on. At last the butchery ceased, and Blücher fled to Bergères. The French pursued only as far as Étoges. Napoleon had hoped to follow all the way to Châlons, annihilate what was left of Blücher's army, and then to return and throw himself on Schwarzenberg. He was arrested by the news that the Seine valley, as far as Montereau, was in the hands of the Austro-Russians; that Oudinot and Victor had been driven back to Nangis; in short, that Paris was seriously menaced.

Æт. 44]

It was long asserted that in the three actions just recorded the French far outnumbered their opponents, and that Napoleon's generalship was consequently inferior to his high average. The sufficient answer to this is in the facts now universally accepted. At Champaubert there were four thousand eight hundred and fifty French against four thousand seven hundred Russians; at Montmirail there were twentytwo thousand seven hundred Russians and Prussians against twelve thousand eight hundred French; and in the third engagement, near Étoges, Blücher had twenty-one thousand five hundred to ten thousand three hundred. It is therefore natural to compare these three victories with those at Montenotte, Millesimo, and Dego. But they were far greater. At forty-four Napoleon displayed exactly the same boldness, Vol. IV.-I4

CHAP. XII

1814

Снар. XII 1814 steadfastness, and skill which he had displayed in youth; but in addition he overcame the stolid enmity of winter, of variable weather, of roads almost impassable, of swampy fields that were almost impassable by reason of overflowing ditches and half-frozen morasses. He overcame, too, the resisting power created by his own example; for here were the choicest soldiers of the Continent, commanded by men inured for eighteen years to the hardships, the shifts, the rapidity of warfare as he himself had taught the art. Momentarily Napoleon seems to have wondered whether allied and co-allied Europe had learned nothing in half a generation, and whether an army twice and a half larger than his own, under veteran generals, was to withdraw again behind the Rhine, the Elbe, the Oder, perhaps the Vistula. It is hard to believe that he dreamed such dreams as we read the prosaic, scientific, hard common sense of his military correspondence between January twentysixth and February fourteenth. Yet there is certainly an appearance of self-deception and vacillation in his political and diplomatic plans, due apparently to the intoxication of success, as when he spoke of the Vistula to Marmont after Champaubert.

The innermost thoughts of Metternich, and of the diplomats associated with him, are very hard to fathom. For two generations the world believed that after Leipsie, Napoleon, in his sanguine conceit, rejected offer after offer from the allies, and finally perished utterly because of a folly which made him believe he could recover his predominance. There is now every reason to believe the contrary, and to suppose that Napoleon elearly understood the situation. The war was one of extermination on the part of the allies; in the interest of their dynasties they intended not only to destroy Napoleon, but also thereby to root out the ideas for which he was supposed to stand. By the light of recent memoirs, especially those of Metternich himself, we seem forced to the conclusion that in all the offers after Leipsie there was, if anything, far less of reality and sincerity than in those between the armistice of Poischwitz and the battle. When Castlereagh arrived at the allied headquarters early in January, 1814, he found them established in Basel. Schwarzenberg had found no difficulty in crossing Switzerland. Geneva surrendered its keys without a struggle, and generally the Swiss seemed indifferent to the violation of their neutrality. As the advance continued, it appeared that the French were equally apathetic. Bubna was driven from before Lyons by Augereau, but Dijon surrendered to a squad of cavalrymen which, at the request of the con- CHAP. XII scientious mayor, made a show of force to oblige him. It was not 1814 difficult under such eircumstances for the sovereigns and their ministers to convince themselves that any peace with Napoleon would be nothing but a "ridiculous armistice," and that the Emperor of the French must, in any case, be utterly overthrown.

Æт. 44]

In response to the Frankfort proposals, the pacific Caulaincourt had promptly arrived to conduct negotiations. The invaders had almost at once suggested that they must abandon the Frankfort proposals, and confine France to her royal limits; that is, refuse her Belgium with the great port of Antwerp. So far they were agreed, but there the unanimity ceased. The Czar desired first to conquer France, and then leave her to choose her own government; he intended to take the whole of Poland, and give Alsace to Francis in return for Galicia, thus checking Austria by both Prussia and France, so that he could work his will in the Orient. Metternich wished the old balance of power, and had determined on the restoration of the Bourbons. Francis was writing to his daughter that he would never separate her eause and that of her son from France. The Prussian king and ministers desired only such an arrangement as would seeure to their country what she had regained. Stein and his associates wished the utter humiliation of their foe. Castlereagh spoke with the authority of a paymaster; he was determined to keep the Netherlands from falling under French influence, to restore the Bourbons, and to establish so nice an equilibrium in Europe that Great Britain would be unhampered elsewhere in the There was to be no mention of colonial restitution or neutral world. Being a second-rate statesman, he was much influenced by rights. Metternieh, and the two sought to form an impossible alliance between constitutional liberty and feudal absolutism.

A so-called congress was opened at Châtillon on February fifth. It must be remembered that the treaty of Reichenbach was still a secret. That agreement was the reality behind the congress of Prague, the Frankfort proposals, and the meeting at Mannheim. None of those gatherings consequently was serious; that at Châtillon was even less so. The memoirs of Metternich explain all the facts : Swiss neutrality was violated by Austrian influence in order to restore the aristocratic constitution of Bern and the ascendancy of that canton; Alexander, posing still as a liberal, was angry at this violation of international law, 100 and forbade the restoration of Vaud to its old master. Schwarzenberg's CHAP. XII deliberate movements were due primarily to timidity, but they stood in good stead Metternich's desire to restore the Bourbons. It has been asserted, and there is much probability in the conjecture, that not only the plan adopted for invading France, but the slowness of the Austrians in advancing toward Langres, toward Troyes, across into the Seine valley, together with the spurious activity they displayed before Montereau, Sens, and Fontainebleau, was part of a scheme to wear out but not to exhaust France, and then compel her to take back her dynastie rulers. Blücher, who wanted glory and revenge, and the Prussian liberals, who desired so to crush France that Prussia might be free to slough off her militarism and build up a constitutional government, were alike furious at being chained to the frontier. All these crosspurposes and bitternesses were mirrored in the ostentatious proceedings of the congress of Châtillon. Napoleon, either divining the facts, or, more probably, informed by spies, seemed indifferent, and refused at first to give full powers to Caulaincourt; finally the marshals, terrified at the prospect of indefinite war opened by the unlucky mention of the Vistula, made their influence so felt that the Emperor yielded.

1814

Maret's name was long held up to detestation as the instigator of Napoleon's procrastinating policy at Dresden, the line of conduct which seemed to have made it possible for Austria to join the coalition. Among the papers of that minister is an account of his relations with Napoleon during the congress at Châtillon, which displays the evident motive of an attempt to prove how pacific his nature really was. Hedeclares that after the defeat at La Rothière, Caulaincourt wrote a panic-stricken letter demanding full authority to treat. Maret handed it to the Emperor, beseeching him to yield. Napoleon seemed scarcely to heed, but indicated a passage in Montesquieu's "Grandeur and Fall of the Romans," which he happened to be reading: "I know nothing more magnanimous than the resolution taken by a monarch who ruled in our time, to bury himself under the ruins of the throne rather than accept proposals which a king may not entertain. He had a soul too lofty to descend lower than his misfortunes had hurled him." "But I, sire," rejoined the secretary—"I know something more magnanimous to cast aside your glory in order to close the abyss into which France would fall along with you." "Well, then, gentlemen, make your peace," came the reply. "Let Caulaincourt make it; let him sign

[ÆT. 44

·

.

ANDORATION STREET

everything necessary to obtain it. I can support the disgrace, but do not expect me to dietate my own humiliation." Maret informed Caulaineourt, but the latter recoiled before the responsibility, and asked for particular instructions. The Emperor persistently refused, but wrote giving the minister "carte blanche" to take any measure which would save the capital. Again Caulaincourt begged for details, and again Napoleon refused, persisting until Bertrand joined his supplications to those of Maret, whereupon he consented to abandon Belgium, and even the left bank of the Rhine.

The formal despatch containing these concessions was to be signed next morning, on February eighth, but in the interval came news of Blücher's movements. Maret found the Emperor buried in the study of his map. "I have an entirely different matter in hand," was the greeting; "I am at present occupied in dealing Blücher a blow in the eye." The signature was indefinitely postponed. On the tenth Alexander suspended the congress on the plea of Caulaincourt's refusal to state his own or accept the offered terms. Then followed the three victories, and Napoleon, on the night of the twelfth, wrote to Chatillon demanding the Frankfort proposals. Caulaincourt urgently besought the allies for an armistice, and begged Napoleon to be less exacting. Prussia and Austria were eager for the armistice, but Alexander obstinately refused to reopen the congress until the eighteenth, when everything seemed changed, and all the allies really desired peace. Caulaincourt, warned by Napoleon's letter of the twelfth, refused to treat without full instructions, and as he had none he began to procrastinate. In the end he bore the blame for not having used the carte blanche when he had it in order to save his country, for subsequently he had no opportunity.

Æт. 44]

CHAP, XII

1814

CHAPTER XIII

THE GREAT CAPTAIN AT BAY

VICTOR'S FAILURE AT MONTEREAU—SCHWARZENBERG'S RUSE—THE FRENCH ADVANCE AND THE AUSTRIAN RETREAT—Napoleon's Effort to Divide the Coalition—Vain Negotiations—The Treaty of Chaumont—Blücher's Narrow Escape—The Prussians Defeated at Craonne—Napoleon's Determination to Fight—His Misfortunes at Laon—Dissensions at Blücher's Headquarters— Napoleon at Soissons—Rheims Recaptured—Another Phase in Napoleon's Eclipse.

Снар. XIII 1814

THE eagerness of the Prussians and the Austrians to grant an ar-I mistice was at first due to the belief that Caulaincourt's request was a confession of exhaustion; the Czar's assent to reopening the congress on the eighteenth was wrung from him by the military operations between the fourteenth and that date. Convinced that Paris was menaced, Napoleon left Marmont to hold Blücher, and starting for La Ferté-sous-Jouarre on the fifteenth, covered fifty miles with his army in a marvelous march of thirty-six hours, arriving on the evening of the sixteenth with his men comparatively fresh. Next morning the French began to advance, and the Austrians to withdraw toward the Seine. Victor was to seize Montereau that same day and hold the bridge. Compelled to drive an Austrian corps out of Valjouan, the marshal did not reach his goal until six or seven in the evening, and finding it beset by the Crown Prince of Würtemberg with fourteen thousand Germans, he merely drove in the outposts and then halted for the night. His ardor was far from intense, and though like Macdonald at Château-Thierry, he might feel that he had done all that could be demanded, yet he lost the opportunity of annihilating a considerable portion of the enemy's force. Simultaneously Macdonald had now advanced until he stood before Bray, while Oudinot on the left CHAP. XIII was before Provins. Thus far Napoleon's advance had been a front movement to eover Paris, but that same day, the seventeenth, he drove Wittgenstein from Nangis, and then expected by a rush over the bridge at Montereau to prevent Schwarzenberg from extending his flank to Fontainebleau, a move which would surround the French right. As a matter of fact, strange riders speaking eurious outlandish tongues, Cossaek scouts in other words, had appeared for the first time that very day in Nemours and Fontainebleau, terrifying the inhabitants. It seems highly probable that if Napoleon's force could have made a quick push from Montereau early on the eighteenth, it would have cut off a considerable portion of Schwarzenberg's left. In any ease the Emperor was deeply incensed by what he considered Victor's slackness, and degraded him. The humbled marshal confessed his fault, displaying profound contrition, and was speedily restored to partial favor, being intrusted with the command, under Ney, of a portion of the young guard.

This was the third of the marshals - Augereau, Macdonald, Victor, each in turn-who since the opening of the eampaign had shown a physical and moral exhaustion disabling them from rising to the heights of Napoleon's expectation. "We must pull on the boots and the resolution of '93," wrote the Emperor to Augereau; he was quite right: nothing short of the unsapped revolutionary vigor of France could have saved his cause. On the eighteenth, after a six hours' struggle, the French under Gérard and Pajol seized Montereau. Napoleon had halted at Nangis, and there Berthier received by a flag of truce a letter from Schwarzenberg, declaring that he had ceased his offensive march in consequence of news that preliminaries of peace had been signed the day previous at Châtillon. This was probably as base a ruse as any ever practised by Napoleon's generals. It is likely that all the Austrian marches and countermarches for ten days past had been but a bustling semblance calculated for diplomatic effect. Be that as it may, before Napoleon's advance the Austrian commander had quailed, and, with the French at Montereau, his columns were already moving back to Troyes, where they were drawn up in battle array. Napoleon wrote indignantly to Joseph that the ruse was probably preliminary to a request for an armistice, and that he would now accept nothing short of the Frankfort proposals. "At the first check the wretched creatures

1814

Æт. 441

4,

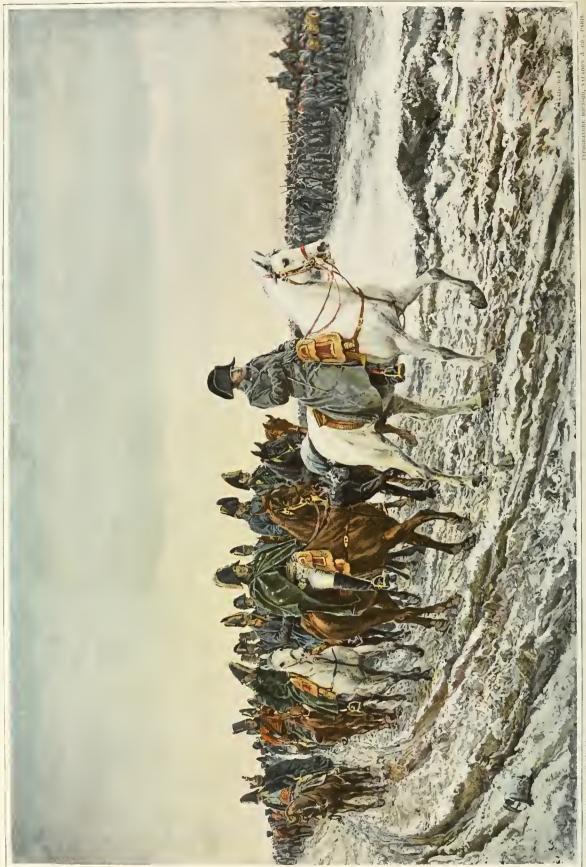

104

CHAP. XIII fall on their knees." Meanwhile he led his army over the river to No-1814 gent, and prepared to attack Schwarzenberg.

> But Blücher had not been idle; by superhuman exertions he had collected and strengthened his army at Châlons, and on the twentyfirst he appeared at Méry on the Seine, threatening Napoleon's left flank in case of an advance toward Troyes. By this time the flames of French patriotism were rekindled in town and country, and, the soldiers being flushed with victory, it was clearly the hour to strike at any hazard. Oudinot was despatched with ten thousand men to hold Blücher, and this task he actually accomplished, capturing that portion of Méry which lay on the left bank of the river, and fortifying the bridge-head against all comers. Marmont being at Sézanne with eight thousand men to cover Paris, and Mortier at Soissons with ten thousand to prevent the advance of York and Sacken, Napoleon marched on Troves. It was late in the evening when his main army was drawn up, and in order to leave time for his rear to come in, he postponed operations until the morning. Schwarzenberg had seventy thousand in line, but at four in the early dawn of the twenty-second, leaving in place a front formation sufficient to mask his movements, he decamped with his main force and withdrew behind the Aube.

> Arrived at Bar, the Austrian commander wrote on the twenty-sixth an admirable letter of justification for the course he had taken. Defeat would have meant a retreat, not behind the Aube, but the Rhine. "To offer a decisive battle to an army fighting with all the confidence gained in small affairs, manœuvering on its own territory, with provisions and munitions within reach, and with the aid of a peasantry in arms, would be an undertaking to which nothing but extreme necessity could drive me." This retreat put a new aspect on the diplomacy of Châtillon. On the nineteenth Caulaincourt received a despatch from Napoleon revoking the earte blanche entirely; the same day Napoleon received an ultimatum from the congress, written several days before, to the effect that he was to renounce all the acquisitions of France since 1792, and take no share in the arrangements subsequent to the peace. This last clause being a covert suggestion of abdication, the recipient flew into a passion; when finally he was soothed by the pleadings of Berthier and Maret, he gave such a meaningless reply as would enable negotiations to proceed, but his counter-project he addressed directly to the Emperor Francis. It was a refusal to give up Antwerp and Belgium, and an emphatic recurrence to the Frankfort proposals. CHAP. XIII "If we are not to lay down our arms except on the offensive conditions 1814 proposed at the congress, the genius of France and Providence will be on our side."

.

Napoleon's missive suggested to his father-in-law, as was its intention, that a Continental peace on the Frankfort basis would leave France free to recuperate her sea power and continue the war with England alone. This was, the wedge which for some time past the writer had been proposing to drive into the coalition so as to separate Austria from Russia. Castlereagh was very uneasy as to the possible effect of the message, and there was much anxiety among all the diplomats. Their first step was to send a pacific reply and renew their request for an armistice. Napoleon consented, but stipulated that hostilities should proceed during the preliminary pourparlers, and that in the protocol a clause should be inserted declaring that the plenipotentiaries were reassembled at Châtillon to discuss a peace on the basis proposed at Frankfort. A commission to arrange the terms of the armistice met on the twenty-fourth. That they were not in earnest is shown by Frederick William's despatch of the twenty-sixth to Blücher, saying, "The suspension of arms will not take place." That very day also, in a council of war held by the allied generals, it was determined to form an invading army of the south. Blücher was authorized to make a diversion in favor of the main army - a move which he had really begun the day before by a march to the right. Napoleon, leaving Macdonald and Oudinot, with forty thousand men, to follow Schwarzenberg, hurried after Blücher with his remaining force. On the twenty-eighth the commission adjourned its sessions with a formal reiteration of the ultimatum already made by the allied powers.

The reason was that by that time its members believed Napoleon to be elsewhere engaged. Schwarzenberg's army had checked Oudinot, and as his troops recuperated their strength the leader recovered partial confidence. Blücher being off for Paris, with Napoleon on his heels, the main army of the allies had then turned on the forces of Macdonald and Oudinot, and had driven them westward until in the pursuit it reached Troyes, where it halted, ready, in case of Blücher's defeat, to recross the Rhine. The congress of Châtillon was formally reopened on March first, and continued its useless sessions until the nineteenth, when it closed. During this second period none of the im-Vol. IV.-15 portant dignitaries, except Schwarzenberg and the King of Prussia, CHAP. XIII attended: the rest withdrew to Chaumont, where, on March ninth, the three powers signed a treaty with England, dated back to March first, binding themselves, in return for an annual subsidy of five million pounds sterling equally divided, that each would keep a hundred and fifty thousand men in the field, for twenty years if necessary, provided Napoleon would not accept the boundaries of royal France — a futile stipulation. This treaty was the precursor of that iniquitous triple alliance between Russia, Austria, and Prussia which was destined not merely to hamper England herself so seriously in the subsequent period of history, but to stop for some time the progress of liberal ideas throughout Europe.

ÆT. 44]

106

1814

> Blücher crossed the Marne on February twenty-seventh with half his force, and then attempted to cross the Ourcq in order to attack Meaux from the north. But he was checked by Marmont and Mortier, with the sixteen thousand men they already had, and then, after six thousand new recruits came in from Paris, he was forced to retreat. Should Napoleon arrive in time he would be annihilated. Accordingly he hastened up the valley of the Ourcq with his entire force. Napoleon arrived on the Marne too late to attack Blücher's rear, and after some hesitation as to whether he should not return to complete his work with Schwarzenberg, he finally determined that, inasmuch as the fortress of Soissons was secure, and Blücher must therefore retreat to the eastward, he could himself deliver an easy but staggering blow on the Prussian flank when they should cross the Aisne at Fismes. Accordingly, on March third the worn-out columns of the French passed over Unfortunately, Soissons had been left by Marmont in the Marne. charge of an inexperienced commander, who had surrendered almost without resistance when, on March second, Bülow and Wintzengerode, having come in from the Netherlands, suddenly appeared before the place. This stroke of good fortune enabled Blücher not merely to find a city of refuge for his exhausted and disorganized force, but to recruit it by the two victorious and elated corps which theneeforth served him as an invaluable rear-guard. Napoleon, thwarted again, gave no outward sign of the despair he must have felt, but crossed the Aisne on March fifth, and occupied Rheims, in order at least to cut Blücher off from any connection with Schwarzenberg. He then turned to join Marmont and Mortier in order to drive Blücher still farther north, so that, as he wrote to Joseph, he might gain time sufficient to return by CHAP. XIII Châlons and attack Schwarzenberg.

[ÆT. 44

Æт. 44]

In spite of all his discouragements, Blücher had no intention of retreating without a blow. There was constant friction between the Prussian commander and his subordinates, so that dissension prevented prompt action. Nevertheless, after much delay the army was got in motion to resume the offensive, the general plan being to move eastward instead of withdrawing due north, to cross the plateau of Craonne, and, descending into the plain north of Berry, to attack the French in force as they advanced to Laon. Napoleon had expected to meet his foe under the walls of that city; his quick advance was as much of a surprise to Blücher as Blücher's was to him. The first shock of battle, therefore, occurred at Craonne on the sixth, when neither army was in readiness. But Blücher secured the advantage of position. Though he had only a portion of his force, the troops he did have were on a commanding plateau above the enemy when the action began. The skirmishes of the first day, however, were indecisive. Napoleon's knowledge of the district being defective, he sought to secure the best possible information from the inhabitants. Some one mentioning incidentally that the mayor of a neighboring town was named De Bussy, Napoleon recalled, with his astounding memory, that in the regiment of La Fère he had had a comrade so named. The mayor turned out to be the sometime lieutenant, and, with superserviceable zeal, the former friend poured out worthless information which led the Emperor to believe that on the morrow there would be only Blücher's rear-guard to disperse. But it was not so. Blücher struggled with his utmost might to gather in his eavalry and artillery, while Sacken, with the Russians, stood like a wall, repelling the successive surges of Ney and Victor the whole day through. At nightfall the Prussian commander, finding it impossible to assemble guns or horsemen over the icy fields, gave orders for retreat, and his army passed on to Laon.

Though Craonne was a victory, the losses of the French were proportionately greater than those of the enemy, and the pursuit, though spirited, gained no advantage. "The young guard melts like snow; the old guard stands; my mounted guards likewise are much reduced," were the words of Napoleon's private letter. Yet he pressed on. The night of the seventh he spent in a roadside inn under the sign of "The Guardian Angel." There Caulaincourt's last messenger from Châtillon

1814

CHAP. XIII found him. The congress was still sitting, but the warrior knew the fact meant and could mean nothing to him; though the allies had increased their demands in proportion to their victories, they had not lessened them in proportion to their defeats. Whatever terms he might accept, and whatever Metternich might say, this war he felt sure was one for his extermination. As he said then and there, it was a bottomless chasm, and he added, "I am determined to be the last it shall swallow up." So he made no answer, and spent the night completing his plans for battle at Laon.

That place stands on a terraced hill rising somewhat abruptly from the plain, and throughout the eighth Blücher arrayed his army in and on both sides of the city, which itself was of course the key. Napoleon, being a firm believer in such movements when on friendly soil, made a long night march. He reached the enemy's fore posts early on the ninth, and drove them in. At seven Ney and Mortier began the battle under cover of a mist, and captured two hamlets at the foot of the hill. Marmont was on the right, and had already been cut off from the center by a body of Cossacks; but he attacked the village of Athies. After a long day's hard fighting, he succeeded in capturing a portion of it. Further exertion being impossible, his men bivouacked, while he himself withdrew to the comforts of Eppes, a château three miles distant. It was noon when Napoleon learned that Marmont had been severed from the line; at once he renewed his attack on Laon, but though he gained Clacy on his left, he lost Ardon, and was thus more completely eut off from Marmont. That night York fell upon Marmont's men unawares, and routed them utterly.

Napoleon heard of this disaster shortly after midnight. He was, of course, deeply agitated—did he dare risk being infolded on both sides, or should he brave his fate in order to mislead the enemy? He chose the desperate course, and when day broke stood apparently undismayed. Even when two fugitive dragoons arrived and confirmed in all its details the terrible news from Athies, he issued orders as bold as if his army were still entire. This was a desperate ruse, but it succeeded, for the pursuit of Marmont's men was stayed. At four the main French army began its retreat, and the next morning saw it at Soissons; six thousand had been killed and wounded. Again Napoleon's name had stiffened the allies into inactive horror, for they did not pursue. York was so disgusted with the dissensions at Blücher's headquarters that he

PRINCE CLEMENS WENZEL NEPOMUK LOTHAR VON METTERNICH-WINNEBURG

(23)

FROM THE LITHOGRAPH BY MAUGIN

1. 1.

threw up his command and left for Brussels. Blücher was literally at Снар. ХПІ the end of his powers. "For heaven's sake," said Langeron, a French refugee in the Russian service, on whom the command would have devolved, "whatever happens, let us take the corpse along." "The corpse," with dimmed eyes and trembling hands, traced in great rude letters an epistle beseeching York to return, and this, indorsed by another from the Prince Royal of Prussia, brought back the able but testy refugee.

Meantime Rheims, intrusted to a feeble garrison, had been taken by Langeron's rear-guard under St. Priest, another French emigrant in the service of the allies. By this disaster communication between Schwarzenberg and Blücher had been reëstablished. In the short day Napoleon could spend at Soissons, he took up twenty-five hundred new cavalrymen, a new line regiment of infantry, a veteran regiment of the same, and some artillery detachments. It is not easy to conceive of recuperative power more remarkable than that which was thus exhibited both by France and her Emperor. These men had been sent forward from Paris in spite of the profound gloom now prevalent there. The truth was at last known in the capital; Joseph was hopeless; the Empress and her court were preparing for extremities. News had come that in the south Soult had been thrown back on Toulouse; that in the southwest royalist plots were thickening; that in the southeast Augereau had been forced back to Lyons; Macdonald was ready to abandon Provins at the first sign of advance by Schwarzenberg; and the sorry tale of Laon was early unfolded. Yet the administrative machinery was still running, and soldiers were being manufactured from the available materials. Those who had been sent to Soissons had been hastily gathered, equipped, and drilled almost without hope, but they were precious since they enabled Napoleon to refit his shattered battalions.

Marmont had unwisely abandoned Berry-au-Bac, and that in disregard of orders. But otherwise he had done his best to make good a temporary lapse, and had got together about eight thousand men at Fismes. His narrative gives a graphic picture of the situation—of disorder, confusion, chaos among his troops, of artillery served by inexperienced sailors, of undrilled companies whose members had neither hats, clothes, nor shoes. There were plenty of captured uniforms and head-coverings, but they were so infested with vermin that the French, sorry as was their plight, refused to wear them, and clung to their old CHAP. XIII tatters. Marmont's men were heroes, he himself was not yet a traitor. Though overborne by a sense of Napoleon's recklessness, and therefore 1814 unfit for the desperate self-sacrifice which would have made him a fit coadjutor for his chief, he was prepared to atone for his disgrace at Early in the morning of the thirteenth the main French Athies. army moved from Soissons; at four in the afternoon Marmont opened the attack on Rheims. Napoleon himself had arrived, but his troops were slow in coming up, and there was no heavy artillery wherewith to batter in the gates. The struggle went on with desperate courage and gallantry on both sides. St. Priest was killed by the same gunner whose aim had been fatal to Moreau. "We may well say, O Providence! O Providence!" wrote Napoleon to his brother. At ten the beleaguered garrison began to sally and flee. Napoleon rose from the bearskin on which he had been resting before a bivouac fire, and storming with rage lest his prey should escape, hurried in the guns, which were finally within reach. Amid awful tumult and carnage the place fell; three thousand of the enemy were slain, and about the same number were captured. The burghers were frenzied with delight as the Emperor marched in, and the whole city burst into an illumination.

Next morning Napoleon and Marmont met. The culprit was loaded with reproaches for the affair at Athies, and treated as a stern father might treat a careless child. No better evidence of the Emperor's low state is needed. Marmont was now the hero of the hour; his peccadillos might well have been forgotten for the sake of securing his continued faithfulness. With Napoleon at his best, this would surely have been the case; but aware that at most the war could be a matter of only a few weeks, the desperate man overdid his rôle of self-confidence, being too rash, too severe, too haughty. Not that he was without some hope. Although for two years the shadow had been declining on the dial of Napoleon's fortunes, and although under adverse conditions one brilliant combination after another had crumbled, yet his ideas were as great as ever, the adjustment of plans to changing conditions was never more admirable. The trouble was that effort and result did not correspond, and this being so, what would have been triffing misdemeanors in prosperity seemed to him in adversity to be dangerous faults. The great officers of state and army, imitating their master's ambitions, had acquired his weaknesses, but had failed in securing either his strength or his advoitness. With him they had lost that fire of youth which had carried them and him always just over the line of human expectation, CHAP. XIII and so his nice adjustments failed in exasperating ways at the very turn of necessity. Hard words and stinging reproofs are soon forgotten in generous youth; they rankle in middle life; and even the invigorating address or inspiring word, when heard too often for twenty years, fails The beginning of the end was the loss of Soissons at the of effect. critical instant. Napoleon was uncertain and touchy; his marshals were honeycombed with disaffection; the populations, though flashing like powder at his touch, had nowhere risen en masse. Thereafter the great captain was no longer waging a well-ordered warfare. Like an exhausted swordsman, he lunged here and there in the grand style; but his brain was troubled, his blade broken. Some untapped reservoirs of strength were yet to be opened, some untried expedients were to be essayed, but the end was inevitable. The movement on Rheims was the spasmodic stroke of the dying gladiator.

THE GREAT CAPTAIN AT BAY

111

1814

ÆT. 44]

CHAPTER XIV

THE STRUGGLES OF EXHAUSTION

THE ALLIES DEMORALIZED—NAPOLEON'S DESPERATE CHOICE—THE BATTLE AT ARCIS—THE CORRESPONDENCE OF CAULAINCOURT AND NAPOLEON—PANIC AT SCHWARZENBERG'S HEADQUARTERS—CROSS-PURPOSES OF THE ALLIES—NAPOLEON'S DETERMINATION CONFIRMED —HIS OVER-CONFIDENCE—THE RESOLUTION TO ABANDON PARIS— THE FRENCH BROUGHT TO A STAND—THEIR MASKED RETREAT —INEFFICIENCY OF MARMONT AND AUGEREAU—NAPOLEON'S MARCH TOWARD ST. DIZIER—HIS TERRIBLE DISENCHANTMENT—HOW THE ALLIES HAD DISCOVERED NAPOLEON'S PLANS—THEIR DETERMINA-TION TO PURSUE—THE CZAR'S RESOLUTION TO MARCH ON PARIS— SUCCESSFUL RETURN OF THE INVADERS.

CHAP. XIV HOUGH unscientific as a military move and futile as to the ulti-1814 L mate result of the war, the capture of Rheims was, nevertheless, a telling thrust. On receipt of the news from Laon, Schwarzenberg had immediately set his army in motion against Macdonald, and Blücher, after waiting two days to restore order among his worried troops and insubordinate lieutenants, had advanced and laid siege to Compiègne. The capture of Rheims checked the movements of both Austrians and Prussians; dismay prevailed in both eamps, and both armies began to draw back. The French halted at Nangis in their retreat before Schwarzenberg, and the people of Compiègne were released from the terrors of a siege. "This terrible Napoleon," wrote Langeron in his memoirs, "they thought they saw him everywhere. He had beaten us all, one after the other; we were always frightened by the daring of his enterprises, the swiftness of his movements, and his clever combinations. Searcely had we formed a plan when it was disconcerted by Besides this, in obedience to Napoleon's call, the peasantry behim."

FRIEDRICH WILHELM VON BÜLOW

gan an organized guerrilla warfare, avenging the pillage, incendiarism, CHAP. XIV and military executions of the allies by a brutal retaliation in kind which made the marauding invaders quake. Finally the momentary consternation of the latter verged on panic when the report reached headquarters that Bernadotte, lying inactive at Liège with twentythree thousand Swedes, had permitted a flag of truce from Joseph to enter his presence. Could it be that the sly schemer, for the furtherance of his ambition to govern France, was about to turn traitor and betray the coalition?

But the consternation of the allies was the least important effect of the capture of Rheims by Napoleon. It initiated certain ideas and purposes in his own mind about which there has been endless discussion. Many see in them the immediate cause of his ruin, a few consider them the most splendid offspring of his mind. Reinforcements from Paris, slender as they were, flowed steadily into his camp; and when he learned that both Schwarzenberg and Blücher had virtually retreated, he believed himself able to cope once more with the former. Accordingly he dictated to his secretary an outline of three possible movements: to Arcis on the Aube, by way of Sézanne to Provins, and to Meaux for the defense of Paris. The first was the most daring; the second would cut the enemy off from the right bank of the Seine, but it had the disadvantage of keeping the troops on miry cross-roads; the third was the safest. Of course he chose the course of desperation-all or nothing. Leaving Marmont with seven thousand men at Berry-au-Bac, and Mortier with ten thousand at Rheims and Soissons, he enjoined them both to hold the line toward Paris against Blücher at all hazards, and himself set out, on March seventeenth, for Arcis on the This he did, instead of marching direct to Meaux for the de-Aube. fense of Paris, because it would, in his own words, "give the enemy a great shock, and result in unforeseen circumstances."

Schwarzenberg's movements during the next three days awakened in Napoleon the suspicion, which he was only too glad to accept as a certainty, that the Austro-Russian army was on the point of retreating into the Vosges or beyond; and on the twentieth he announced his decision of marching farther eastward, past Troyes, toward the frontier forts still in French hands. This idea of a final stand on the confines of France and Germany haunted him to the end, and was the "will-o'the-wisp" which intermittently tempted him to folly. But for the VOL. IV.-16 present its execution was necessarily postponed. That very day news CHAP. XIV was received within the lines he had established about Areis that the 1814 enemy, far from retreating, was advancing. Soon the French cavalry skirmishers appeared galloping in flight, and were brought to a halt only when the Emperor, with drawn sword, threw himself across their path. A short, sharp struggle ensued-sixteen thousand French with twenty-four thousand five hundred of their foe. It was irregular and indecisive, but Napoleon held his own. The neighboring hamlet of Torey had also been attacked by the allies, and before their onset the French had at first yielded. But the defenders were rallied, and at nightfall the position was recaptured. This sudden exhibition by Schwarzenberg of what looked like courage puzzled Napoleon; after long deliberation he concluded that the hostile troops were in all probability only a rear-guard covering the enemy's retreat. He was not very far wrong, but far enough to make all the difference to him. The circumstances require a full explanation.

> Thanks to Caulaincourt's sturdy persistence, the congress at Châtillon was still sitting, and on the thirteenth the French delegate wrote a last despairing appeal to the Emperor. His messenger was delayed three days by the military operations; but when he arrived, on the sixteenth, Maret wrung from Napoleon concessions which included Antwerp, Mainz, and even Alessandria. In the despatch announcing this, and written on the seventeenth to Caulaincourt, Maret made no reservation except one: that Napoleon intended, after signing the treaty, to secure for himself whatever the military situation at the close of the war might entitle him to retain. The return of the messenger was likewise delayed for three days, and it was the twenty-first before he reached the outskirts of Châtillon. He arrived to find Caulaincourt departing; the second "carte blanche" had arrived too late. With all his skill, the persistent and adroit minister had been unable to protract negotiations longer than the eighteenth. His appeal having brought no immediate response, he had, several days earlier, despatched a faithful warning, and this reached Napoleon at Fère-Champenoise simultaneously with the departure of the messenger for Châtillon. The day previous the Emperor had received bad news from southern France: that Bordeaux had opened its gates to a small detachment of English under Hill, and that the Duke of Angoulême had been cheered by the people as he publicly proclaimed Louis XVIII King of France. Apparently neither this information nor Caulaineourt's warning pro- CHAP. XIV foundly impressed Napoleon; he knew his Gaseons well, his "carte blanche" he must have believed to be in Châtillon, and it had been in high spirits that he hastened on to Areis, determined to make the most of the time intervening until the close of negotiations.

Æт. 44]

When news of Napoleon's advance reached Schwarzenberg's headquarters in Troyes, there had at first been nothing short of panic; the commander himself was on a siek-bed, having entirely succumbed to the hardships of winter warfare. No sooner had he ordered the first backward step than his army had displayed a feverish anxiety for farther retreat. As things were going, it appeared as if the different corps would, for lack of judicious leadership, be permitted to withdraw still farther in such a way as to separate the various divisions ever more widely, and expose them successively to annihilating blows from Napoleon, like those which had overwhelmed the scattered segments of the Silesian army. The Czar and many others immediately perceived the danger. With faculties unnerved by fear, the officers foreboded a repetition with the Bohemian army of Montmirail, Champaubert, and Vauchamps. Rumors filled the air: the peasantry of the Vosges were rising, the Swiss were ready to follow their example; the army must withdraw before it was utterly surrounded and eut off. There was even a report—and so firmly was it believed that it long passed for history—of Alexander's having expressed a desire to reopen the eongress.

Schwarzenberg's strange hesitancy in the initial stages of the invasion has been explained. Beyond his natural timidity, it was almost certainly due to Metternich's polities, which displayed a desire to ruin Napoleon's imperial power, but to save Franee either for the Bourbons or possibly for his Emperor's son-in-law. If the Austrian minister could accomplish this, he could thereby checkmate Prussian ambitions for leadership in Germany. But during the movements of February and March the actions of the Austrian general appear to have been due almost exclusively to cowardice. The papers of Castlereagh, of Metternieh, and of Schwarzenberg himself aim to give the impression that during all the events which had occurred since the congress of Prague, everything had been straightforward, and that Austria had no thought of sparing Napoleon or acting otherwise than she did in the end. Yet the indications of the time are quite the other way: the Russians in Schwarzenberg's army were furious, and, as one of them wrote, suspicious "of what we are doing and what we are not doing." Alexander, CHAP. XIV in this crisis, was deeply concerned, not for peace, but for an orderly, concentrated retreat. With stubborn fatalism, he never doubted the final outcome; and during his stay in Châtillon he had spent his leisure hours in excogitating a careful plan for the grand entry into Paris, whereby the honors were to be his own.

116

1814

Consequently, when on the nineteenth he hastened to Schwarzenberg's bedside, it was with the object of persuading the Austrian commander to make a stand long enough to secure concentration in retreat. This idea originated with the Russian general Toll, and the place he suggested for concentration was the line between Troyes and Pougy. But the council was terror-stricken, and though willing to heed Alexander's urgent warning, they at first selected a position farther in the rear, on the heights of Trannes. With this the Czar was content, but on second thought such a course appeared to the more daring among the Austrian staff as if it smacked of pusillanimity. Schwarzenberg felt the force of this opinion, and by the influence of some one, probably Radetzky, it was determined, without consulting the Czar, to concentrate near Arcis on the left bank of the Aube, in order to assume the offensive at Plancy. This independent resolution of Schwarzenberg's staff explains the presence of allied troops near Arcis and at Torcy. Alexander was much incensed by the news of the meeting, and declared that Napoleon's real purpose was to hold them while cutting off their connections on the extreme right at Bar and Chaumont. This was in fact a close conjecture. Napoleon, though surprised into action, was naturally confirmed in his surmise that the hostile troops were a retreating rear-guard; and in consequence he had definitely adopted the most desperate scheme of his life-the plan of hurrying toward the Vosges, of summoning the peasantry to rise en masse, and of calling out the garrison troops from the frontier fortresses to reinforce his army and enable him to strike the invaders from behind.

By his retreat to Troyes on February twenty-second, Schwarzenberg had avoided a decisive conflict, saving his own army, and leaving Napoleon to exhaust himself against the army of Silesia; by his decision of March nineteenth he had confirmed Napoleon in the conviction that the allies were overawed, and had thus led his desperate foe into the greatest blunder conceivable - this chimerical scheme of concentrating his slender, scattered force on the confines of France, and leaving open

PUBLICATION AUTHORIZED BY B., V. & CO.

TYPOGRAVURE BOUSSOD, VALADON & CO., PARIS

"CAPTIVE."

FROM THE PAINTING BY ALBERT PIERRE DAWANT

.

Æт. 44]

a way for the great army of invaders to march direct on Paris. Of CHAP. XIV such stuff are contemporary reputations sometimes constructed. 1814 But this was not enough : a third time the Austrian general was to stumble on greatness. Napoleon's movements of concentration had thus far met with no resistance, in spite of their temerity; and throughout the nineteenth the enemy's outposts, wherever found, fled incontinently. It appeared a certainty that the allies were abandoning the line of the Seine in order to avoid a blow on their flank. That evening Napoleon began to vacillate, gradually abandoning his notion of an offensive move near Troyes, and deliberating how best to reach Vitry for a further advance toward his eastern fortresses. To avoid any appearance of retreat, he rejected the safer route by way of Fère-Champenoise to Sommesous, and determined to follow the course of the Aube for a while before turning northward to Sommepuis. He might run across the enemy's rear-guard, but he counted on their pusillanimity for the probable retreat of the very last man to Troyes. When Ney and Sebastiani began on the twentieth to push up the south bank of the Aube, they expected no opposition. That very morning Napoleon had announced to his minister of war, "I shall neglect Troyes, and betake myself in all haste to my fortresses."

So far the Emperor had made no exhibition of the temerity about which so much was later to be said. But he had deceived himself and had taken a wild resolution. Moreover, it is amazing that he should have felt a baseless confidence in Blücher's remaining inert. This hallucination is, however, clearly expressed in a despatch to Marmont of the very same date. Yet, nevertheless, the alternative is not left out of consideration, for he ordered that marshal, in case Blücher should resume the offensive, to abandon Paris and hasten to Châlons. This fatal decision was not taken suddenly: the contingency had been mentioned in a letter of February eighth to Joseph, and again from Rheims emphatic injunctions to keep the Empress and the King of Rome from falling into Austrian hands were issued to the same correspondent. "Do not abandon my son," the Emperor pleaded; "and remember that I would rather see him in the Seine than in the hands of the enemies of France. The fate of Astyanax, prisoner to the Greeks, has always seemed to me the unhappiest in history." The messenger had been gone but a few hours when word was brought that Blücher had resumed the offensive, and a swift courier was despatched Снар. XIV 1814 summoning Marmont to Châlons. In this ultimate decision Napoleon showed how cosmopolitan he had grown: he had forgotten, if he had ever understood, the extreme centralization of France; he should have known that, Paris lost, the head of the country was gone, and that the dwarfed limbs could develop little or no national vitality.

This bitter lesson he was soon to learn. On the momentous afternoon of the twentieth, as has been related, about sixteen thousand French confronted nearly twenty-five thousand of the allies in the sharp but indecisive skirmishes before Areis; the loss of the former was eighteen hundred, that of the allies twenty-seven hundred. In spite of the dimensions which these conflicts had assumed, Napoleon remained firm in the belief that he had to do with his retreating enemy's rearguard; Schwarzenberg, on the other hand, was convinced that the French had a strength far beyond the reality. During the night both armies were strongly reinforced, and in the early morning Napoleon had twenty-seven thousand five hundred men-quite enough, he believed, to demoralize the retreating Austrians. It was ten o'clock when he ordered the attack, Ney and Sebastiani being directed to the plateau behind the town. What was their surprise and dismay to find Schwarzenberg's entire army, which numbered not less than a hundred thousand, drawn up in battle array on the plain to the eastward, the infantry in three dense columns, cavalry to right and left, with three hundred and seventy pieces of artillery on the central front! The spectacle would have been dazzling to any but a soldier: the bright array of gay accoutrements, the glittering bayonets, the waving banners, and the serried ranks. As it was, the audacious French skirmishers instinctively felt the incapacity of a general who could thus assemble an army as if on purpose to display its numbers and expose it to destruction. Without a thought they began a sort of challenging rencounter with horse-artillery and eavalry.

But the Emperor's hopes were dashed when he learned the truth; with equal numbers he would have been exultant; a battle with odds of four to one he dared not risk. Sebastiani was kept on the heights to mask the retreat which was instantly determined upon, and at halfpast one it began. This ruse was so successful, by reason of the alarms and crossings incident to the withdrawal of the French, that the allies were again terror-stricken; even the Czar rejected every suggestion of attack; again force was demoralized by genius. At last, however, Æт. 44] scouts brought word that columns of French soldiers were debouching CHAP. XIV beyond the Aube, and the facts were plain. Even then the paralyzed <sup>1814</sup> invaders feared to attack, and it was not until two thirds of Napoleon's force was behind the stream that, after fierce fighting, the French rear was driven from the town. Oudinot's corps was the last to cross the river, and, standing until sappers had destroyed the bridge, it hurried away to follow the main column toward Vitry. The divisions of Gérard and Macdonald joined the march, and there were then forty-five thousand men in line.

While Napoleon was thus neutralizing the efforts of armies and generals by the renown of his name, two of of his marshals were finally discredited. Enfeebled as Blücher appeared to be, he was no sooner freed from the awe of Napoleon's proximity than he began to move. On the eighteenth he passed the Aisne, and Marmont, disobeying the explicit instructions of Napoleon to keep open a line of retreat toward Châlons, began to withdraw toward Fismes, where he effected a junction with Mortier. His intention was to keep Blücher from Paris by false manœuvers. Rheims and Épernay at once fell into hostile hands; there was no way left open toward Châlons except the long detour by Château-Thierry and Étoges; and Blücher, it was found, was hurrying to effect a connection with Schwarzenberg. This was an assured checkmate. Meantime Augereau had displayed a similar incapacity. On the eighth he had begun a number of feeble, futile movements intended to prevent the allies from forming their Army of the South. But after a few aimless marches he returned to Lyons, and stood there in idleness until his opponents had completed their organization. On the twentieth the place was assaulted. The French general had twenty-one thousand five hundred men under his immediate command, six thousand eight hundred Catalonian veterans were on their way from Perpignan, and at Chambéry were seven thousand more from the armies of Tuscany and The assailants had thirty-two thousand, mostly raw troops. Piedmont. With a stout heart in its commander, Lyons could have been held until the reinforcements arrived, when the army of the allies would probably have been annihilated. But there was no stout heart in any of the authorities; not a spade had been used to throw up fortifications; the siege-guns ready at Avignon had not been brought up. Augereau, at the very height of the battle, summoned the civil authorities to a consultation, and the unwarlike burghers assented without a murmur to CHAP. XIV 1814 his suggestion of evacuation. The great capital of eastern France was delivered as a prize to those who had not earned it. Had Suchet been substituted for Augereau some weeks earlier, the course of history might have been diverted. But although Napoleon had contemplated such a change, he shrank from disgracing an old servant, and again, as before Leipsic, displayed a kindly spirit destructive to his cause.

> The night after his retreat from Arcis, Napoleon sent out a reconnaissance to Vitry, and finding it garrisoned by Prussians, swerved toward St. Dizier, which, after a smart combat, he entered on the This placed him midway between the lines of his twenty-third. enemy's communication both from Strasburg and from Basel; which of the two, he asked himself, would Schwarzenberg return to defend? Thinking only how best to bait his foe, he set his army in motion northward; the anxious Austrian would certainly struggle to retain the line in greatest danger. This illusion continued, French cavalry scoured the country, some of the Châtillon diplomats were captured, and the Emperor of Austria had a narrow escape at Bar. It seemed strange that the country-side as far as Langres was deserted, but the fact was apparently explained when the news came that the enemy were in force at Vitry; probably they had abandoned Troyes and had disregarded Brienne for the purpose of diverting him from his purpose.

> Alas for the self-deception of a ruined man! The enemy at Vitry were a body of eight thousand Russian cavalry from the Silesian army, sent, under Wintzengerode, to dog Napoleon's heels and deceive him, just as they actually did. Having left Vitry on the twenty-eighth, they were moving toward St. Dizier when Napoleon, believing that they formed the head of a powerful hostile column, fell upon them with needless fury, and all too easily put them to flight; two thousand were captured and five hundred killed. Thanks to Marmont's disobedience and bad judgment, Blücher had opened communications with Schwarzenberg, and both were marching as swiftly as possible direct to Paris. Of this Napoleon remained ignorant until the twenty-eighth. From his prisoners the Emperor first gained a hint of the appalling truth. It was impossible to believe such reports. Orders were issued for an immediate return to Vitry in order to secure reliable information. Arrived before the place, Napoleon called a council of war to decide whether an attempt to storm it should be made. In the moment of deliberation news began to arrive in abundance: captured despatches and bulletins of the enemy, confirmed by definite information from the CHAP. XIV inhabitants of the surrounding country. There could no longer be any doubt: the enemy, with an advantage of three days' march, was on his way to Paris. The futility of his eastward movement appears to have struck Napoleon like a thunderbolt. Paris abandoned in theory was one thing; France virtually decapitated by the actual loss of its capital was quite another. The thought was unendurable. Mounting his horse, the unhappy man spurred back to St. Dizier, and closeted himself in silent communing with his maps.

HENRI-JACQUES-GUILLAUME CLARKE COUNT D'HUNEBOURG, DUKE OF FELTRE (MARSHAL OF FRANCE UNDER LOUIS XVIII)

FROM THE PAINTING BY GUILLAUME-DESTRÉ-JOSEPH DESCAMPS

The allies had not at first divined Napoleon's purpose. Indeed, their movements in passing the Aube and on the day following were little better than random efforts to fathom it. But on the morning of the twenty-third two important messengers were captured—one a courier from Berthier to Macdonald with despatches stating exactly where Napoleon was; the other a rider with a short note from Napoleon to his Empress, containing a statement of its writer's plans. This famous paper was lost, for Blücher, after having read it, let the rider go. But the extant German translation is doubtless accurate. It runs: "My friend, I have been all day in the saddle. On the twentieth I took Arcis on the Aube. The enemy attacked at eight in the evening. I beat him, killed four thousand men, and captured four eannon. On the twenty-first the enemy engaged in order to protect the march of his columns toward Brienne and Bar on the Aube. I have resolved to betake myself to the Marne in order to draw off the enemy from Paris and to approach my fortifications. I shall be this evening in St. Dizier. Adieu, my friend; kiss my boy." Savary declares that there was a final phrase: "This movement makes or mars me."

The menace to their lines of communication at first produced consternation in the council of the allies. The first proposition laid before them was that they should return on parallel lines and recover their old bases. Had this scheme been adopted, Napoleon's strategy would have been justified completely instead of partially as it was; nothing but a miracle could have prevented the evacuation of France by the invaders. But a second, calmer thought determined the invaders to abandon both the old lines, and, opening a new one by way of Châlons into the Netherlands, to make the necessary detour and fall on Napoleon's rear. Francis, for the sake of keeping close touch with his own domains, was to join the Army of the South at Lyons. Although there is no proof to support the conjecture, it seems as if the Czar and the CHAP. XIV King of Prussia had suggested this so that both Francis and Metter-1814 nich might be removed from the military councils of the allies in order that the more warlike party might in their absence take decisive mea-That night a package of letters to Napoleon from the imperial sures. dignitaries at Paris fell into the hands of the invaders. The writers. each and all, expressed a profound despondency, Savary in particular asserting that everything was to be feared should the enemy approach the capital. Next morning, the twenty-fourth, the junction between Blücher and Schwarzenberg was completed. Francis and Metternich being absent, Schwarzenberg, listening to warlike advice, determined to start immediately in pursuit of Napoleon and seek a battle. The march was begun, and it seemed as if Napoleon's wild scheme was to be completely justified. He had certainly displayed profound insight.

VOL. IV.-17

[Æт. 44

> Alexander, however, had been steadily hardening his purpose to annihilate Napoleon. For a week past Vitrolles, the well-known royalist agent, had been at his headquarters; the accounts of a steady growth in royalist strength, the efforts of Napoleon's lifelong foe, Pozzo di Borgo, and the budget of despondent letters from the Paris officials, combined to temper the Czar's mystical humor into a determination of steel. Accordingly, on the same day he summoned his personal military advisers, Barelay, Wolkonsky, Diebitsch, and Toll; then, pointing out on a map the various positions of the troops engaged in the campaign, he asked, significantly and impressively, whether it were best to pursue Napoleon or march on Paris. Barelay supported the former alternative; Diebitsch advised dividing the army and doing both; but Toll, with powerful emphasis, declared himself for the second course. The Czar listened enthusiastically to what was near his own heart, and expressed himself strongly as favoring it; the others yielded with the eagerness of courtiers, and Alexander, mounting his horse, spurred after Frederick William and Schwarzenberg. The new plan was unfolded; the Prussian king supported it; Schwarzenberg hesitated, but yielded. That night orders were issued for an about-face, a long explanatory despatch was sent to Blücher, and on the twenty-fifth the combined armies of Bohemia and Silesia were hurrying with measured tramp toward Paris. For the first time there was general enthusiasm in their ranks. Blücher, who from his unremitted ardor had won the name of Marshal Forward, was transported with joy.

Æт. 44]

The two armies marched on parallel lines, and met with no resist- CHAP. XIV ance of any importance, except as the various skirmishes enabled the irregular French soldiers to display a desperate courage, not only the untried "Marie Louises" coming out from Paris, but various bodies of the national guard convoying provision-trains. It was the twenty-fifth before Marmont and Mortier effected their junction, and then, although about sixteen thousand strong, they were steadily forced back through Fère-Champenoise and Allemant toward Charenton, which was under the very walls of Paris. Marmont displayed neither energy nor common sense on the retreat: his outlying companies were cut off, and strategic points which might have been held were utterly neglected. The army with which he reached Paris on the twenty-ninth should have formed an invaluable nucleus for the formation and incorporation of the numerous volunteers and irregular companies which were available; but, like its leader, it was entirely demoralized. Ledru des Essarts, commander of Meaux, was obliged on the twenty-seventh to abandon his charge, a military depot full of ammunition and supplies, which was essential to the safety of Paris. The garrison consisted of six thousand men, but among them were not more than eight hundred veterans, hastily collected from Marmont's stragglers, and the new conscripts were ill-conditioned and badly commanded. Although the generals drew up their men with a bold front to defend the passage of the Marne, the undisciplined columns were overwhelmed with terror at the sight of Blücher's army, and, standing only long enough to blow up the magazines, fled. They fought gallantly, however, on their retreat throughout the twenty-eighth, but to no avail; one position after another was lost, and they too bivouacked on the evening of the twentyninth before the gates of the capital. It is a weak curiosity, possibly, but we must wonder what would have occurred had Marmont, instead of retreating to Fismes on the eighteenth, withdrawn to Rheims, where he and Mortier could at least have checked Blücher's unauthorized advance, and perhaps have held the army of Silesia for a time, when the moral effect would probably have been to justify Schwarzenberg and confirm his project for the pursuit of Napoleon. In that case, moreover, the precious information of Napoleon's letter to his consort would not have fallen into his enemies' hands. Would destiny have paused in its career?

CHAPTER XV

THE BEGINNING OF THE END

NAPOLEON'S PROBLEM — THE MILITARY SITUATION — A COUNCIL OF WAR AND STATE — THE RETURN TO PARIS — PROSTRATING NEWS — THE EMPRESS-REGENT AND HER ADVISERS — TRAITORS WITHIN — TALLEYRAND — THE DEFENDERS OF THE CAPITAL — THE FLIGHT OF THE COURT — THE ALLIES BEFORE THE CITY.

Снар. XV 1814 THE pallid, silent Emperor at St. Dizier was closeted with considerations like these. He knew of the defeat which forced Marmont and Mortier back on Paris; the loss of the capital was imminent; parties were in a dangerous state; his marshals were growing more and more slack; he had failed in transferring the seat of war to Lorraine; the information he had so far received was almost certainly colored by the medium of scheming followers through which it came. What single mind could grapple with such affairs? It was not because the thwarted man had lost his nerve, but because he was calm and clearminded, that he felt the need of frank, dispassionate advice on all these matters. On the other hand, there stood forth in the clearest light a single fact about which there could be no doubt, and it alone might counterbalance all the rest: the peoples of northern and eastern France were at last arcused in behalf of his cause. For years all Europe had rung with outcries against the outrages of Napoleon's soldiery; the allied armies no sooner became invaders in their turn than they began to outstrip their foe in every deed of shame; in particular, the savage bands from Russian Asia indulged their inhuman passions to the full, while the French peasantry, rigid with horror, looked on for the moment in paralysis. Now they had begun to rise in mass, and from the twenty-fifth to the twenty-eighth their volunteer companies brought in The depots, trains, and impedimenta of every a thousand prisoners.

IN THE COLLECTION OF M. ROTHAN

MARSHAL ÉTIENNE-JACQUES-JOSEPH-ALEXANDRE MACDONALD DUKE OF TARENTUM

FROM THE PAINTING BY JACQUES-LOFIS DAVID

Æт. 44]

sort which the allies abandoned on turning westward fell into the hands CHAP. XV of a peasant soldiery, many of whom were armed with shot-guns. The rising for Napoleon was comparable only to that which earlier years had seen in the Vendée on behalf of the Bourbons.

Besides, all the chief cities of the district were now in the hands of more or less regular troops; Dunette was marching from Metz with four thousand men; Broussier, from Strasburg with five thousand; Verdun could furnish two thousand, and several other fortresses a like number. Souham was at Nogent with his division, Allix at Auxerre with his; the army at the Emperor's disposal could easily be reckoned at seventy thousand. Assisted by the partizan bands which now hung in a passion of hatred on the skirts of the invaders, and by the national uprising now fairly under way, could not the Emperor-general hope for another successful stand? He well knew that the fear of what had happened was the specter of his enemy's council-board; they would, he reckoned, be rendered over-cautious, and give him at least a fortnight in which to manœuver before the fall of Paris could be expected. Counting the men about Vitry and the garrison reinforcements at only sixty thousand, the combined armies of Suchet, Soult, and Augereau at the same number, that of Marmont at fourteen thousand, and the men in the various depots at sixteen thousand, he would have a total of a hundred and fifty thousand, from which he could easily spare fifty thousand to cut off every line of retreat from his foe, and still have left a hundred thousand wherewith to meet their concentrated force on a basis of something like equality. From the purely strategic point of view, the march of the allies to Paris was sheer madness unless they could count on the exhaustion of the population right, left, and behind. If the national uprising could be organized, they would be cut off from all reinforcement and entrapped. Already their numbers had been reduced to a hundred and ten thousand men. Napoleon with a hundred thousand, and the nation to support him, had a fair chance of annihilating them.

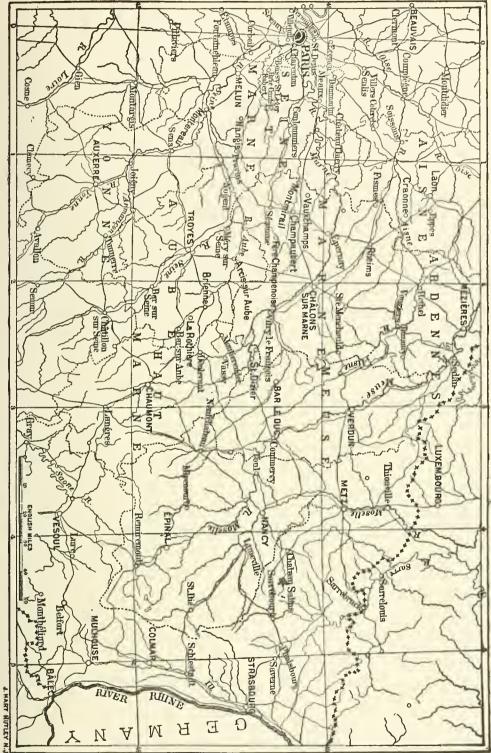

It was, therefore, not a mere hallucination which led him to hope that once again the tangled web of affairs might be severed by a sweep of the soldier's saber. But of course in the crisis of his great decision he could not stand alone; he must be sure of his lieutenants. Accordingly, after a few hours of secret communing, he summoned a council, and laid before it his considerations substantially as enumerated. Those v present were Berthier, Ney, Lefebvre, Caulaincourt, and Maret; Oudinot and Macdonald, at Bar on the Ornain and Perthes respectively, were too distant to arrive in time, but he believed that he knew their opinion, which was that the war should be continued either in Lorraine or from a center of operations to be established at Sens. From this conclusion Macdonald did not once waver; Oudinot had begun to hedge: their absence, therefore, was unimportant. Berthier was verging on desperation, and so was Caulaincourt, who, since leaving Châtillon, had been vainly struggling to reopen negotiations for peace on any terms; Ney, though physically brave, was not the stuff from which martyrs are made, and Lefebvre, naturally weak, was laboring under a momentary attack of senility. The council was imperative for peace at any price; the Emperor, having foreseen its temper, had little difficulty in taking the military steps for carrying out its behests.

Снар. XV 1814

Early in the morning of March twenty-eighth the army was set in motion toward Paris. The line of march was to be through Bar on the Aube, Troyes, and Fontainebleau, a somewhat circuitous route, chosen apparently for three reasons: because the region to be traversed would still afford sustenance to the men, because the Seine would protect its right flank, and because the dangerous point of Meaux was thus avoided. Such a conclusion is significant of the clearest judgment and the nicest ealculation. Pages have been written about Napoleon's hallucinations at the close of his career; neither here nor in any of the courses he adopted is there aught to sustain the charge. At breakfast-time a squad of jubilant peasants brought in a prisoner whom they believed to be no less a person than the Comte d'Artois. In reality it was Weissenberg, an Austrian ambassador on his way to London. He was promptly liberated on parole and despatched with letters to Francis and Metternich. By a curious adventure, Vitrolles was in the minister's suite disguised as a serving-man, but he was not detected.

At Doulevant Napoleon received cipher despatches from La Valette, the postmaster-general in Paris, a trusted friend. These were the first communications since the twenty-second; the writer said not a moment must be wasted, the Emperor must come quickly or all would be lost. His decision once taken, Napoleon had grown more feverish with every hour; this message gave wings to his impatience. With some regard for such measures as would preclude his capture by wandering bands of Cossaeks, he began almost to fly. New couriers were met at Doulain-court with despatches which contained a full history of the past few days; in consequence the troops were spurred to fresh exertions, their marches were doubled, and at nightfall of the twenty-ninth Troyes was Snatching a few brief hours of sleep, Napoleon at dawn next reached. morning threw discretion to the winds, and started with an insufficient escort, determined to reach Villeneuve on the Vanne before night. The task was performed, but no sooner had he arrived than at once he flung himself into a post-chaise, and, with Caulaincourt at his side, sped toward Paris; a second vehicle, with three adjutants, followed as best it might; and a third, containing Gourgaud and Lefebvre, brought up the rear. It will be remembered that Gourgaud was an able artillerist; Lefebvre, it was hoped, could rouse the suburban populations for the defense of Paris. At Sens Napoleon heard that the enemy was ready to attack; at Fontainebleau that the Empress had fled toward the Loire; at Essonnes he was told that the decisive battle was raging; and about ten miles from the capital, at the wretched posting-station of La Cour de France, deep in the night, fell the fatal blow. Paris had surrendered. The terrible certainty was assured by the bearer of the tidings, Belliard, a cavalry officer despatched with his troop by Mortier to prepare quarters for his own and Marmont's men.

MAP OF THE FIELD OF OPERATIONS IN 1814.

LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

CHAP. XV

Maria Louisa had played her rôle of Empress-regent as well as might be expected from a woman of twenty-three with slender abilities; only once in his letters did the Emperor chide her, and that was for a fault venial in European royalty: receiving a high official, in this case the arch-chancellor, in her bedchamber. On the whole, she had been dignified and conciliatory; once she rose to a considerable height, pronouncing before the senate with great effect a stirring speech composed by her husband and forwarded from his headquarters. About her were grouped a motley council: Joseph, gentle but efficient; Savary, underhanded and unwarlike; Clarke, working in the war ministry like a machine; Talleyrand, secretly plotting against Napoleon, whose title of vice-grand elector he wore with outward suavity; Cambacérès, wise but unready; Montalivet, adroit but cautious. Yet, while there was no one combining ability, enthusiasm, and energy, the equipment of troops had gone on with great regularity, and each day regiments of half-drilled, half-equipped recruits had departed for the seat of war. The national guards who & risoned the city, some twelve thousand in all, had forgotten their imperialism, having grown very sensitive to the

1,5

.

-

MARSHAL AUGUST-FRÉDÉRIC-LOUIS VIESSE DE MARMONT DUKE OF RAGUSA

FROM THE PAINTING BY JEAN-BAPTISTE-PAULIN GUINA

IN THE MUSEUM OF ALREATLES

shafts of royalist wit; yet they held their peace and had performed the round of their duties. Everything had outwardly been so quiet and regular that Napoleon actually contemplated a new levy, but the emptiness of the arsenals compelled him to dismiss the idea. Theoretically a fortified military depot, Paris was really an antiquated fortress with arsenals of useless weapons. Spasmodic efforts had been made to throw up redoubts before the walls, but they had failed from lack of energy in the military administration.

A close examination of what lay beneath the surface of Parisian society revealed much that was dangerous. Talleyrand's house was a nest of intrigue. Imperial prefects like Pasquier and Chabrol were calm but perfunctory. The Talleyrand circle grew larger and bolder every day. Moreover, it had influential members - De Pradt, Louis, Vitrolles, Royer-Collard, Lambrecht, Grégoire, and Garat, together with other high functionaries in all departments. Bourrienne developed great activity as an extortioner and briber; the great royalist irreconcilables, Montmorency, Noailles, Denfort, Fitz-James, and Montesquiou, were less and less careful to conceal their activity. Jaucourt, one of Joseph's chamberlains, was a spy carrying the latest news from headquarters to the plotters. "If the Emperor were killed," he wrote on March seventeenth, "we should then have the King of Rome and the regency of his mother. . . . The Emperor dead, we could appoint a council which would satisfy all opinions. Burn this letter." The program is clear when we recall that the little King of Rome was not three years old. Napoleon was well aware of the increasing chaos, and smartly reproved Savary from Rheims.

But Talleyrand was undaunted. At first he appears to have desired a violent death for Napoleon, in the hope of furthering his own schemes during a long imperial regency. At all events, he ardently opposed the departure of the Empress and the King of Rome from Paris. Nevertheless it was he who despatched Vitrolles, the passionate royalist, to Nessehode with a letter in invisible ink which, when deciphered, turned out to be an inscrutable riddle capable of two interpretations. "The bearer of this deserves all confidence. Hear him and know me. It is time to be plain. You are walking on crutches; use your legs and will to do what you can." Lannes had long before stigmatized the unfrocked bishop as a mess of filth in a silk stocking; Murat said he could take a kick from behind without showing it in his face; in the last meeting

Vol. IV.-18

CHAP. XV

1814

ÆT. 44]

of the council of state before the renewal of hostilities, Napoleon fixed his eyes on the sphinx-like cripple and said: "I know I am leaving in Paris other enemies than those I am going to fight." His fellow-conspirators were scarcely less bitter in their dislike than his avowed ene-spirators were scarcely less bitter in their dislike than his avowed enemies. "You don't know the monkey," said Dalberg to Vitrolles; "he would not risk burning the tip of his paw even if all the chestnuts were for himself." Yet, master of intrigue, he pursued the even tenor of his course, scattering innuendos, distributing showers of anonymous pamphlets, smuggling English newspapers into the city, in fact working every wire of conspiracy. Surprised by the Minister of Police in an equivocal meeting with De Pradt, he burst out into hollow laughter, his companion joined in the peal, and even Savary himself found the merriment infectious.

Toward the close of March the populace displayed a perilous sensitiveness to all these influences. The London "Times" of March fifteenth, which was read by many in the capital, asked what pity Blücher and the Cossacks would show to Paris on the day of their vengeance, the editor suggesting that possibly as he wrote the famous town was already in ashes. Such suggestions created something very like a panic, and a week later the climax was reached. When the fugitive peasants from the surrounding country began to take refuge in the capital they found business at a standstill, the shops closed, the streets deserted, the householders preparing for flight. From the twenty-third to the twenty-eighth there was no news from Napoleon; the Empress and council heard only of Marmont's defeat. They felt that a decision must be taken, and finally on the twenty-eighth the imperial officials held a council. The facts were plainly stated by Clarke; he had but fortythree thousand men, all told, wherewith to defend the capital, and in consequence it was determined to send the Empress and her son to Rambouillet on the very next day. This fatal decision was taken partly through fear, but largely in deference to Napoleon's letter containing the classical allusion to Astyanax. The very men who took it believed that the Parisian masses would have died for the young Napoleon, and deplored the decision they had reached. "Behold what a fall in history!" said Talleyrand to Savary on parting. "To attach one's name to a few adventures instead of affixing it to an age. . . . But it is not for everybody to be engulfed in the ruins of this edifice." From that hour the restoration of the Bourbons was a certainty.

CHAP. XV

Æт. 44]

It was a mournful procession of imperial carriages which next morning filed slowly through the city, attracting slight attention from a few silent onlookers, and passed on toward Rambouillet. The baby king had shrieked and elutehed at the doors as he was torn away from his apartments in the Tuilcries, and would not be appeased; his mother and attendants were in consternation at the omen, and all thoughtful persons who considered the situation were convinced that the dissolution of the Empire was at hand. A deputation from the national guard had sought in vain to dissuade the Empress from her course; their failure and the distant booming of cannon produced wide-spread depression throughout the city, which was not removed by a spirited proclamation from Joseph declaring that his brother was on the heels of the invaders. All the public functionaries seemed inert, and everybody knew that, even though the populace should rise, there was no adequate means of resistance either in men or in arms or in proper fortifications.

Clarke alone began to display energy; with Joseph's assistance, what preparations were possible at so late an hour were made; six companies were formed from the recruits at hand, the national guard was put under arms, the students of the polytechnic school were called out for service, communication with Marmont was secured, and by late afternoon Montmartre, Belleville, and St. Denis were feebly fortified. The allies had been well aware that what was to be done must be done before the dreaded Emperor should arrive, and on that same morning their vanguard had summoned the town; but during the parley their generals began to feel the need of greater strength, and further asked an armistice of four hours. This was granted on the usual condition that within its duration no troops should be moved; but the implied promise was perfidiously broken, and at nightfall both Alexander and Frederick William, accompanied by their forces, were in sight of the far-famed Dangers, hardships, bygone insults and humiliations, all were city. forgotten in a general tumult of joy, wrote Danilevsky, a Russian offi-Alexander alone was pensive, well knowing that, should the city cer. hold out two days, reinforcements from the west might make its capture impossible until Napoleon should arrive. Accordingly he took virtual command, and issued stringent orders preparatory for the assault early next morning.

CHAP. XV

CHAPTER XVI

THE FALL OF PARIS

THE BATTLE BEFORE PARIS—THE ARMISTICE—THE POSITION OF MAR-MONT—LEGITIMACY AND THE BOURBONS—THE PROVISIONAL GOV-ERNMENT—NAPOLEON'S FURY—SUGGESTIONS OF ABDICATION—NAPO-LEON'S NEW POLICY FORESHADOWED—HIS TROOPS AND OFFICERS— THE TREASON OF MARMONT—THE MARSHALS AT FONTAINEBLEAU —NAPOLEON'S DESPAIR.

CHAP. XVI NROM early dawn until midday on March thirtieth the fighting be-1814 fore Paris was almost continuous, the assailants displaying an assurance of victory, the defenders showing the courage of despair. Marmont and Mortier kept their ranks in order, and the soldiers fought gallantly; elsewhere the militia and the boys emulated each other and the regulars in steadfastness. But when, shortly after noon, it became evident that Paris was doomed to fall before superior force, Joseph, as deputy emperor, issued to Marmont full powers to treat, and followed the Empress, whom he overtook at Chartres, far beyond Rambouillet, where she had expected to halt. She had determined, for greater safety, to cross the Loire. At four in the afternoon the Prussians eaptured Montmartre, and prepared to bombard from that height; at the same moment the last ranks of the allied armies came up.

> Marmont felt further resistance to be useless; his line of retreat was endangered, and he had special directions not to expose the eity to a sack. There was still abundant eourage in the eitizens, who stood behind the barricades within the gates elamorous for arms and ammunition. A messenger came galloping in with the news that Napoleon was but half a day distant. The lookouts now and then espied some general riding a white horse, and called, "'T is he!" But for all the enthusiasm, the expected "he" did not appear. Further carnage seemed useless, since French honor had been vindicated, and when the war-worn Marmont withdrew into the town he was received as one who had done what man could do. Negotiations once fairly begun, the allies abandoned the hard conditions with which they opened the parley, and displayed a sense of great relief. Their chief representative, Count Orloff, behaved with much consideration. Recognizing the force of the French plea that their army was quite strong enough, if not to defend the eity another twenty-four hours, at least to contest it street by street until, arrived at last on the left bank of the Seine, they could regain Fontainebleau in safety, Orloff assented to what were virtually the stipulations of Marmont and Mortier. The terms adopted made provision for an armistice, assured kind treatment to the eity, and permitted the withdrawal of the troops.

THE BARRIÈRE DE CLICHY, OR THE DEFENSE OF PARIS IN 1814

Throughout the afternoon and evening Marmont's house was the rendezvous of the negotiators and of the few political personages left in the city. There was the freest talk: "Bonaparte" was conquered; the Bourbons would be restored; what a splendid man was this Marmont! Some weeks earlier the marshal had been significantly informed by his brother-in-law Perregaux, a chamberlain of Napoleon's, that in case of a restoration he and Macdonald would be spared, whatever happened to the other great imperial leaders. Talleyrand had ostensibly taken flight with his colleagues, but by an interesting coincidence his coachman had sought the wrong exit from the eity, and had been That night he appeared in Marmont's presence with turned back. direct overtures from the Bourbons. His interview was short, and he seemed to have gained nothing; but he had an air of victory as he withdrew. He saw that Marmont was consumed with vanity, feeling that the destinies of France, of Napoleon, of all Europe, perhaps, were in his hands alone. This was much. Passing through the corridors, the sly diplomatist respectfully greeted Prince Orloff, and begged to lay his profound respects at the feet of the Czar. "I shall not forget to lay this blank check before his majesty," was the stinging retort. Talleyrand smiled almost imperceptibly with his lips, and went his way. But Alexander said on hearing the facts: "As yet this is but aneedote; it may become history."

The triumphal entry of the allies into Paris began next morning, March thirty-first, 1814, at seven o'clock. It was headed by Alexander and Frederick William, now universally regarded as the Czar's satellite king. Francis was in Dijon; he was represented by Schwarzenberg. CHAP. XVI The three leaders, with their respective staff officers, were solemnly re-1814 ceived by a deputation of the municipal authorities. Their soldiers were orderly, and there was no pillage or license. Crowds of royalists thronged the streets acclaiming the conquerors and shouting for Louis Throughout the afternoon Talleyrand and Nessehode were XVIII. closeted in the former's palace; and when, toward evening, they were joined by the Czar and the King, both of whom had devoted the day to ceremony, the diplomats had already agreed that France must have the The sovereigns had actually been deceived by the noisy Bourbons. royalist manifestations into believing that France welcomed her invaders, and they assented to the conclusion of the ministers. A formal meeting was instantly arranged; there were present, besides the monarchs and their ministers, Schwarzenberg, Lichtenstein, Dalberg, and Pozzo di Borgo. Alexander assumed the presidency, but Talleyrand, with consummate skill, monopolized the deliberations. The Czar suggested, as various bases for peace, Napoleon under all guaranties, Maria Louisa as regent for the King of Rome, the Bourbons, and, it is believed, hinted at Bernadotte or the republic as possibilities. Of all these courses there was but one which represented the notion of legitimacy with which Alexander had in the coalition identified himself, and by which alone he, with his shady title, could hope to assert authority in western Europe. This was expounded and emphasized by the wily Talleyrand with tremendous effect. The idea of the republic was of course relegated to oblivion; of Bernadotte there could not well be a serious question. If France wanted a mere soldier, she already had the foremost in the world. Napoleon still alive, the regency would be only another name for his continued rule; the Bourbons, and they alone, represented a principle. There was little difficulty, therefore, in reaching the decision not to treat with Napoleon Bonaparte or with any member of his family.

Æт. 44]

Chap. XVI

This was the great schemer's first stroke; his second was equally brilliant: the servile senate was appointed to create a provisional government and to construct a new constitution, to be guaranteed by the allies. That body, however obsequious, was still French; even the extreme radicals, as represented by Lainé of Bordeaux, had to acknowledge this. The new and subservient administration was at work within twenty-four hours; Talleyrand, with his two creatures, Dalberg and Jaucourt, Montesquiou the royalist, and Beurnonville, a recalcitrant CHAP. XVI imperialist, constituting the executive commission. Two days later the legislature was summoned, and seventy-nine deputies responded. After considerable debate they pronounced Napoleon overthrown for having violated the constitution. The municipal council and the great imperial offices, with their magistrates, gave their assent. The heart of the city appeared to have been transformed : on the street, at the theater, everywhere, the white Bourbon cockades and ribbons burst forth like blossoms in a premature spring. But outside the focus of agitation, and in the suburbs, the populace murmured, and sometimes exhibited open discontent. In proportion to the distance west and south, the country was correspondingly imperial, obeying the imperial regency now established at Blois, which was summoning recruits, issuing stirring proclamations, and keeping up a brave show. In a way, therefore, France for the moment had three governments, that of the allies, that of the regency, and that of Napoleon himself.

THE FALL OF PARIS

When, in the latest hours of March thirtieth, Napoleon met Belliard, and heard the disastrous report of what had happened, he gave full vent to a frightful outburst of wrath. As he said himself in calmer moments, such was his anger at that time, that he never seemed to have known anger before. Forgetful of all his own shortcomings, he raged against others with a fury bordering on insanity, and could find no language vile or blasphemous enough wherewith to stigmatize Joseph In utter self-abandonment, he demanded a carriage. and Clarke. There were noise and bustle in the stable. With a choked, hoarse voice the seeming maniac called peremptorily for haste. No vehicle ap-Probably Caulaincourt had dared to cross his Emperor's peared. command for the sake of his Emperor's safety. Finally Napoleon strode forth into the darkness toward Paris. Questioning and storming as he walked, he denounced his two marshals for their haste in surrendering. His attendants reasoned in vain until, a mile beyond La Cour de France, Mortier's vanguard was met marching away under the terms of the convention, and Napoleon knew that he was face to face with doom; to advance farther would mean imprisonment or worse. General Flahaut was therefore sent to seek Marmont's advice, and Caulaincourt hurried away to secure an audience with the Czar. There were still wild hopes which would not die. Perhaps the capitulation was not yet signed, perhaps Caulaincourt could gain time if nothing else, perhaps by sounding the tocsin and illuminating the town the populace and national guard would be led to rise and aid the army. The reply from Marmont came as swiftly as only discouraging news can come; the situation, he said, was hopeless, the public depressed by the flight of the court, the national guard worthless; he was coming in with the twenty thousand troops still left to himself and Mortier. Napoleon, now calm and collected, issued careful orders for the two marshals to take position between the Essonne and the Seine, their left on the former stream, their right on the latter, the whole position protected by these rivers on the flanks, and by the Yonne in the rear. It was clear there was to be a great battle under the walls of Paris. Macdonald was the only general who advised it; Berthier, Drouot, Belliard, Flahaut, and Gourgaud all wished to return into Lorraine; but the divisions were coming in swiftly, and in the short midnight hour before returning to Fontainebleau, Napoleon's decision was taken.

Ær. 44]

Снар. XVI 1814

On the afternoon of April first the Emperor rode from Fontainebleau to Marmont's headquarters. While he was in the very act of congratulating Marmont on his gallantry, the commissioners who had signed the capitulation arrived and opened their budget of news. They told of the formal entry by the allies, of their resolution not to treat with Napoleon, and declared that the white cockade of the Bourbons was everywhere visible. Napoleon grew pensive and somber as he listened, and then, almost without speaking, rode sadly back to Fontainebleau. Next morning he was cheerful again, and as he stepped into the White Horse court of the palace at the hour of guard-mounting two battalions cheered him enthusiastically. His step was elastic, his countenance lighted with the old fire; the onlookers said, "It is the Napoleon of Potsdam and Schönbrunn." But in the afternoon Caulaincourt returned, and the sky seemed darkened; the Czar had listened to the envoy's eloquence only so far as to take into consideration once again the question of peace with the Empire under a regency; as a condition antecedent, Napoleon must abdicate.

The stricken man could not hear his faithful servant's report with equanimity. He restrained his violent impulses, but used harsh words. Soon it seemed as if ideas of a strange and awful form were mastering him, the gloomy interview was ended, and the Emperor dismissed his minister. For such a disease as his there was no remedy but action; next morning two divisions, one each of the old and young guard, ar-

IN THE POSSESSION OF GEORGE CLINTON GENET

ENGRAVED BY R. G. TIETZE

MARSHAL MICHEL NEY DUKE OF ELCHINGEN, PRINCE OF THE MOSKWA

FROM COPY OF THE PAINTING BY FRANÇOIS GÉRARD

THE FALL OF PARIS

rived, and they were drawn up for review. Napoleon, in splendid garb CHAP. XVI and with a brilliant suite, in which were two marshals, Ney and Monccy, went through the ceremony. At its close he gathered the officers present into a group, and explained the situation in his old incisive phrase and vibrating tones, closing with the words: "In a few days I am going to attack Paris; can I count on you?" There was dead silence. "Am I right?" rang out, in a final exhausting effort, the moving call of the great actor. Then at last came the hearty, ringing response so breathlessly expected. "They were silent," said General Petit in gentle tones, "because it seemed needless to reply." Napoleon continued: "We will show them if the French nation be master in their own house, that if we have long been masters in the dwellings of others we will always be so in our own." As the officers scattered to their posts and repeated the "little corporal's" words, the old "growlers," as men had come to call the veterans of the Empire, gave another cheer. The bands played the two great hymns of victory, the "Marseillaise " and the " Chant du Départ," as the ranks moved away.

Napoleon must now have certain clear conceptions. Except Mortier, Drouot, and Gérard, his great officers were disaffected; but the ambitious minor generals were still his devoted slaves. The army was thoroughly imperialist, partly because they represented the nation as a whole, partly because they were under the Emperor's spell. Of such troops he appeared to have at hand sixty thousand, distributed as follows: Marmont, twelve thousand five hundred; Mortier, six thousand; Macdonald, two thousand seven hundred; Oudinot, five thousand five hundred; Gérard, three thousand; Ney, two thousand three hundred; Drouot, nine thousand; and about eleven thousand six hundred guard and other cavalry. Besides these, there were sixteen hundred Poles, two thousand two hundred and fifty recruits, and fifteen hundred men in the garrisons of Fontainebleau and Mélun. Farther away were considerable forces in Sens, Tours, Blois, and Orléans, eight thousand in all; and still farther the armies of Soult, Suchet, Augereau, and Maison. Although the allies had lost nine thousand men before Paris, they had quickly called up reinforcements, and had about a hundred and forty thousand men in readiness to fight. This situation may not have been entirely discouraging to the devotee of a dark destiny, to which as a hapless worshiper he had lately commenced to give the name of Providence. Be that as it may, when Macdonald arrived on the morning of the fourth the dispositions for battle had been carefully studied and CHAP. XVI arranged; every corps was ordered to its station. As usual, Napoleon appeared about noon for the ceremony of guard-mounting, and the troops acclaimed him as usual. But a few paces distant from him stood the marshals and higher generals in a little knot, their heads close bunched, their tongues running, their glances averted. From out of this group rang the thunderous voice of Ney: "Nothing but the abdication can draw us out of this." Napoleon started, regained his self-control, pretended not to hear the crushing menace, and withdrew to his work-room. Concurrent with the resolve of the marshals at Fontainebleau ran the actual treason of one who alone was more important to Napoleon's cause than all of them. "I am ready to leave, with my troops, the army of the Emperor Napoleon on the following conditions, of which I demand from you a written guaranty," are the startling words from a letter of Marmont to the Czar, dated the previous day. On April first agents of the provisional government had made arrangements with a discredited nobleman named Maubreuil for the assassination of Napoleon; the next day Schwarzenberg introduced into the French lines newspapers and copies of a proclamation explaining that the action of the senate and of all France had released the soldiers from their oaths. Marmont forwarded the documents he received to Berthier, and while most of the officers flung their copies away in contemptuous scorn, some read and pondered. On April third an emissary from Schwarzenberg appeared at Marmont's headquarters, and what he said was spoken to willing ears. Still under the influence of the homage he had received in Paris, the vain marshal saw himself repeating the rôle of Monk; he beheld France at peace, prosperity restored, social order reëstablished, and himself extolled as a true patriot—all this if only he pursued the easy line of self-interest, whereby he would not merely retain his duchy, but also secure the new honors and emoluments which would be showered on him. So he yielded on condition that his troops should withdraw honorably into Normandy, and that Napoleon should be allowed to enjoy life and liberty within circumscribed limits fixed by the allied powers and France. Next morning, the fourth, came Schwarzenberg's assent, and Marmont at once set about suborning his officers; at four in the afternoon arrived an embassy from Fontainebleau on its way to Paris. The officers composing it desired to see Marmont.

VOL. IV.- 19

ÆT. 44]

The informal meeting held in the courtyard at Fontainebleau was CHAP. XVI a historical event. Its members chatted about the course taken by the senate, about Caulaincourt's mission, and discussed in particular the suggestion of abdication. The marshals and great generals, long since disgusted with campaigning, wounded in their dignity by the Emperor's rebukes, and attributing their recent failures to the wretched quality of the troops assigned to them, were eager for peace, and yearned to enjoy their hard-carned fortunes. They caught at the seductive idea presented by Caulaincourt. The abdication of Napoleon would mean the perpetuation of the Empire. The Empire would be not merely peace, but peace with what war had gained; to wit, the imperial court and society, the preservation and enjoyment of estates, the continuity of processes which had done so much to regenerate France and make her a modern nation. The prospect was irresistible, and Ney only expressed the grim determination of his colleagues when he gave the watchword so unexpectedly at the mounting of the guard. When Napoleon entered his cabinet he found there Berthier, Maret, Caulaincourt, and Bertrand. Concealing his agitation, he began the routine of such familiar labors as impend on the eve of battle. Almost instantly hurrying footsteps were heard in the corridor, the door was burst open, and on the threshold stood Ney, Lefebvre, Oudinot, and The leader of the company quailed an instant under the Macdonald. Emperor's gaze, and then gruffly demanded if there were news from Paris. No, was the reply - a deliberate falsehood, since the decree of the senate had arrived the night before. "Well, then, I have some," roared Ney, and told the familiar facts.

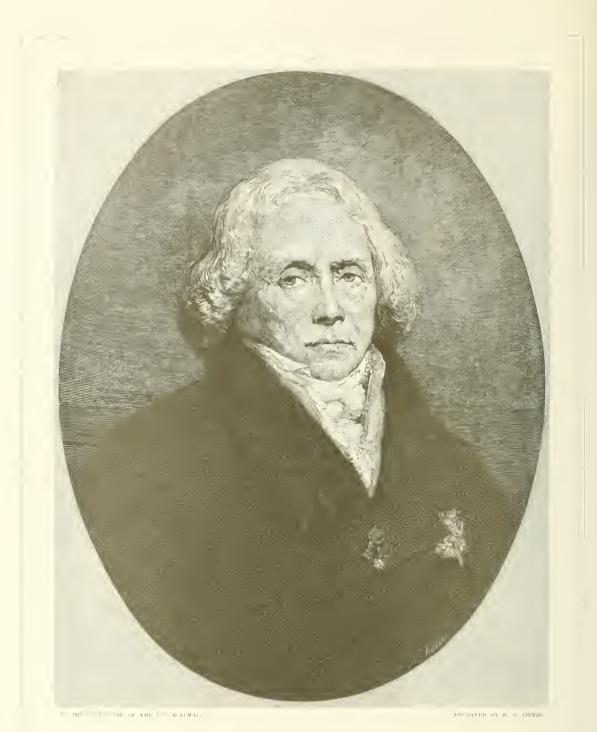

At Nogent, six weeks earlier, Ney and Oudinot had endeavored to bully Napoleon in a similar way; then they were easily cowed. But now Napoleon's manner was conciliatory and his speech argumentative. Long and eloquently he set forth his situation. Enumerating all the forces immediately and remotely at his disposal, describing minutely the plan of attack which Macdonald had stamped with his approval, explaining the folly of the course pursued by the allies, contrasting the perils of their situation with the advantages of his own, he sought to justify his assurance of victory. The eloquence of a Napoleon, calm, collected, clear, but pleading for the power which was dearer to him than life, can only be imagined. But his arguments fell on deaf ears; not one of his audience gave any sign of emotion. Macdonald was the - CHAP. XVI only one present not openly committed, and he too was sullen; during the last twenty-four hours he had received, through Marmont, a letter from Beurnonville, the contents of which, though read to Napoleon then and there, have not been transmitted to posterity. What happened or what was said thereafter is far from certain, so conflicting and so biased are the accounts of those present. Contemporaries thought that in this crisis, when Ney declared the army would obey its officers and would not march to Paris in obedience to the Emperor, there were menacing gestures which betrayed a more or less complete purpose of assassination on the part of some. If so, Napoleon was never greater; for, commanding a calm by his dignified self-restraint, he dismissed the faithless officers one and all. They went, and he was left alone with Caulaincourt to draw up the form of his abdication.

Æт. 44]

- [ÆT. 44

2

•

CHARLES-MAURICE-ÉLIE, DUKE OF TALLEYRAND-PERIGORD

PRINCE OF BENEVENTO. TROM THE PAINTING BY ARY SCHEEFER

CHAPTER XVII

NAPOLEON'S FIRST ABDICATION

The Meaning of Napoleon's Abdication — The Paper and its Bearers — Progress of Marmont's Conspiracy — Alexander Influenced by Napoleon's Embassy — Marmont's Soldiers Betrayed — Marmont's Reputation and Fate — Napoleon's Scheme for a Last Stroke — Revolt of the Marshals — Napoleon's First Attempt at Suicide — Unconditional Abdication — Restoration of the Bourbons — Napoleon's New Realm — Flight of the Napoleons — Good-by to France, but not Farewell.

THERE is no doubt that Napoleon sincerely and dearly loved his CHAP. XVII "growlers"; there is no doubt that with grim humor he constantly 1814 circumvented and used them for his own ends; even in his agony he contemplated a course which, leaving them convinced of their success, would yet render their action of no effect. After a short conference with his minister he took a pen and wrote : "The allied powers having declared the Emperor Napoleon to be the sole obstacle to the establishment of peace in Europe, and since the Emperor cannot assuredly, without violating his oath, surrender any one of the departments which were united with France when he ascended the throne, the Emperor Napoleon declares himself ready to abdicate and leave France, even to lay down his life for the welfare of his country and for the preservation of the rights of his son the king, of the Empress-regent, and of the laws and institutions, which shall be subject to no change until the definite conclusion of peace and while foreign armies stand upon our soil."

But these words carried too plainly a meaning which was not intended to be conspicuous, and the paper, as finally written and executed, runs as follows: "The allied powers having declared the Emperor Napoleon to be the sole obstacle to the reëstablishment of peace in Europe, CHAP. XVII the Emperor Napoleon, faithful to his oath, declares that he is ready to descend from the throne, to leave France, and even to lay down his life for the good of the country, [which is] inseparable from the rights of his son, from those of the Empress's regency, and from the laws of the Empire." Who should constitute the embassy to present the document to the Czar? Caulaincourt, of course, would necessarily be one; Ney, dangerous if thwarted, must be the second; and the third? Marmont certainly, was Napoleon's first thought, and he ordered full powers to be made out for him. But on second thought he felt that his aide-decamp in Egypt, his trusted friend from then onward, his confidential adviser, "brought up in his tent," as he said, might injure the cause as being too certainly influenced by personal considerations. Macdonald, therefore, was named in his stead. The embassy should, however, pass by Essonnes, and if Marmont desired to go he might send back for his credentials.

This was the company which, arriving about four in the afternoon at Marmont's headquarters, presented Napoleon's message. The busy conspirator was stunned, but he had already won at least five of his generals - Souham, Merlin, Digeon, Ledru des Essarts, and Megnadier, his chief of staff; the tide of treason was in full flow, and could not be stemmed. Should the Czar assent to the regency, where would Marmont be? Or, on the other hand, should Napoleon learn the truth, there was no question but that a few hours might see the emulator of Monk a corpse. In quick decision, the traitorous marshal confessed the steps already taken, and then at the loud cry of reprobation with which his statement was met, he falsely asserted that he was not yet committed, and demanded to join the embassy. The others, willing to remove their colleague from further temptation, assented; and Souham was left in command, with strict injunctions to inform the troops of Napoleon's abdication, but to take no further steps. At Schwarzenberg's headquarters Marmont found means to betray the situation to that general. The Austrian, by Marmont's own account, absolved his fellow-intriguer from all engagements so far made; but somehow that very evening about nine Talleyrand knew the whole story, and hastening, pale with terror, to Alexander's presence, poured out a bitter remonstrance against the regency. The Czar listened, but contemptuously dismissed the petitioner with the non-committal remark that no one would repent having trusted him.

Æт. 44]

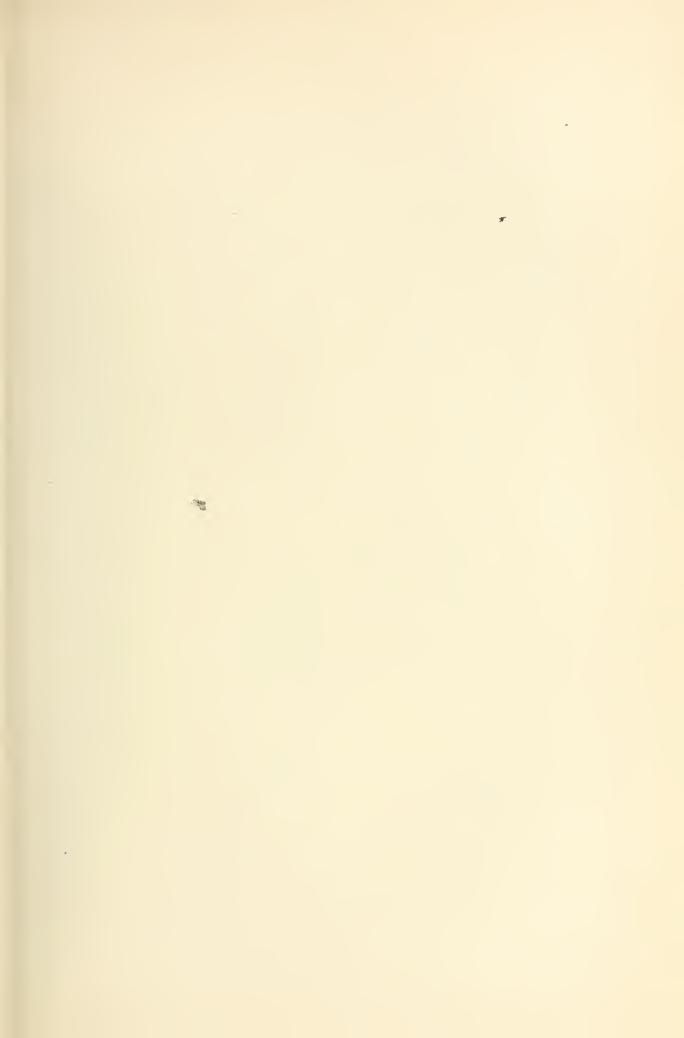

It was almost midnight when Alexander gave audience to the em- CHAP. XVII bassy. Marmont was not of the number, having slunk away in guilty uneasiness to await the event at Ney's house. To Caulaincourt, as the spokesman of the Empire, the Czar listened attentively and sympathetically. He now felt himself to have taken a false step when, five days earlier, he had virtually assented to the restoration of the Bourbons. In the interval their cause had steadily grown more and more unpopular; neither people nor soldiers, not even the national guard, would give any declaration of adherence to the acts of the provisional government; the imperial army, on the other hand, stood firm. His own and Russia's honor having been redeemed, the earlier instincts of hatred for absolutism had returned; the feeling that the Empire was better for his purposes than any dynasty welled up as he listened to Caulaincourt's powerful argument that France as a nation, and her undivided army, alike desired the regency. In fact, the listener wavered so much that, two days later, Ney and Macdonald asserted their belief that at a certain instant their eause had been won.

But at two in the morning an aide-de-camp entered and spoke a few words in Russian. The Czar gave a startled attention, and the officer repeated his words. "Gentlemen," said the monarch, "you base your claim on the unshaken attachment of the army to the imperial govern-The vanguard of Napoleon's army has just deserted. It is at ment. this moment within our lines." The news was true. The announcement of Napoleon's abdication had spread consternation among Marmont's men, and they were seriously demoralized. When a routine message came from Fontainebleau requiring Souham's presence there, his guilty conscience made him tremble; and when Gourgaud requested an interview the uneasy general foresaw his own arrest and was terrorstricken. Summoning the others who, like himself, were partly committed, he told his fears, and the soldiers were ordered under arms. Toward midnight the march began. Ignorant at first of whither they were going, the men were silent; but finding themselves before long between two Austrian lines, they hooted their officers. Thereupon they were told that they were to fight beside these same Austrians in defense of the Empire, and, believing the lie, were reconciled.

Arriving finally at Versailles, and learning the truth, they mutinied; but Marmont soon appeared, and partly cowed them, partly persuaded them to bend before necessity. After learning of Souham's deed he CHAP. XVII had hurried to the Czar's antechamber. In an adjoining room were assembled the members of the provisional government. Like Mar-1814 mont, they had learned the result of Souham's efforts and had regained their equanimity. After grasping the appalling fact that twelve thousand men, the whole sixth corps, with arms and baggage, were prisoners within the Austrian lines, of course there had been nothing left for Caulaincourt and the marshals but to withdraw. With much embarrassment the Czar promised an answer to their request on the following afternoon. All knew that the knell of the Empire had struck. To the waiting royalists it seemed a fit moment for pleasantry as the members of the embassy came filing out with stony gaze. The thwarted imperialists sternly repulsed their tormentors. Marmont breathed hard as his colleagues passed without a glimpse of recognition, and murmured: "I would give an arm if this had not happened." "An arm? Sir, say your head," rejoined Macdonald, bitterly. For some time after the first Restoration Marmont was a hero, but soon his vanity and true character combined to bring out his conduct into clear view, and from his title of Ragusa was coined the word "ragusade" as a synonym for treason. During the "Hundred Days" his name was of course stricken from the list of marshals. Loaded with honors in the second Restoration, he proved a second time faithless, and in 1830 betrayed his trust to the republicans. The people called him Judas, and he died in exile, honored by nobody.

There can be little doubt of Napoleon's conviction that his offer to abdicate would be rejected by Alexander. No sooner was it signed than, with his characteristic astuteness, he set about preparing an alternative course. At once he despatched a messenger requesting the Empress to send Champagny immediately to Dijon as an ambassador to intercede with her father. Then, on April fourth, he summoned a conclave of his officers to secure their assent to the battle which he believed inevitable. It was the call to this meeting which had stampeded Souham and his colleagues in desertion. The greater officers being absent from Fontainebleau, the minor ones were unanimous and hearty in their support of Napoleon's plans. But at the very close of the session came the news of what had happened at Essonnes. When finally assured of every detail, Napoleon took measures at once to repair as best he could the breaches in his defense, saying of Marmont quictly and without a sign of panie: "Unhappy man, he will be more unhappy than I." Only a few days before he had declared to Caulaincourt: CHAP. XVII "There are no longer any who play fair except my poor soldiers and 1814 their officers that are neither princes nor dukes nor counts. It is an awful thing to say, but it is true. Do you know what I ought to do? Send all these noble lords of yesterday to sleep in their beds of down, to strut about in their castles. I ought to rid myself of these frondeurs, and begin the war once more with men of youthful, unsullied courage." He was partly prepared, therefore, even for the defection of Marmont. Next morning, on the fifth, was issued, the ablest proclamation ever penned by him; at noon the veterans from Spain were reviewed, and in the afternoon began the movements necessary to array beyond the Loire what remained of the army and rally it about the seat of imperial But at nine the embassy returned from Paris with its government. news --- the Czar had refused to accept the abdication; the senate was about to proclaim Louis XVIII.; Napoleon was to reign thereafter over the little isle of Elba. To this the undaunted Emperor calmly rejoined that war henceforth offered nothing worse than peace, and began at once to explain his plans.

NAPOLEON'S FAREWELL TO THE IMPERIAL GUARD AT FONTAINEBLEAU, APRIL 20, 1814

IN THE MUSEUM OF VERSAILLES

Æт. 44]

But he was interrupted — exactly how we cannot tell; for, though the embassy returned as it left, in a body, the memoirs of each member strive to convey the impression that it was he alone who said and did everything. If only the narrative attributed to Caulaincourt were of undoubted authenticity, cumulative evidence might create certitude; but it is not. The sorry tale of what probably occurred makes clear that all three were now royalists more or less ardent, for in passing they had concluded a truce with Schwarzenberg on that basis. Maedonald asserts that his was the short and brutal response to Napoleon's exhibition of his plans; to wit, that they must have an abdication without conditions. Ney was quite as savage, declaring that the confidence of the army was gone. Napoleon at first denounced such mutiny, but then, with seeming resignation, promised an answer next day. He did not yet know that in secret convention the generals were resolving not to obey the orders issued for the morrow; but as the door closed behind the marshals the mind so far clear seemed suddenly eclipsed, and murmuring, "These men have neither heart nor bowels; I am conquered less by fortune than by the egotism and ingratitude of my companions in arms," the great, homeless eitizen of the world sank into utter dejection.

VOL. IV.-20

It appears to have been a fixed purpose with Napoleon never to fall CHAP, XVII alive into his enemy's hands. Although they acted under legal forms, 1814 yet some European monarchs of the eighteenth century were no more trustworthy in dealing with foes than their great prototype Julius Cæsar in his faithlessness to a certain canton of the Helvetians. They did not display sufficient surprise when enemies were assassinated. Since 1808 the European colossus had worn about his neck as a kind of amulet a little bag which was said to contain a deadly poison, one of the salts of prussic acid. During the night, when the terrors of a shaken reason overpowered him, he swallowed the drug. Whether it had lost its efficacy, or whether the agitated victim of melancholy did not take the entire dose, in either case the effects were imperfect. Instead of oblivion came agony, and his valet, rushing to his master's bedside at the sound of a bitter cry, claimed to catch the words: "Marmont has struck me the final blow! Unhappy man, I loved him! Berthier's desertion has broken my heart! My old friends, my comrades in arms!" Ivan, the Emperor's body physician, was summoned, and administered an antidote; the spasm was allayed, and after a short sleep reason resumed her seat. It is related in the memoirs of Caulaincourt, and probably with a sort of Homeric truth, that when the minister was admitted in the early morning, Napoleon's "wan and sunken eves seemed struggling to recall the objects round about; a universe of torture was revealed in the vaguely desolate look." Napoleon is reported as saying: "God did not will it. I could not die. Why did they not let me die? It is not the loss of the throne that makes existence unendurable; my military career suffices for the glory of a single man. Do you know what is more difficult to bear than the reverses of fortune? It is the baseness, the horrible ingratitude, of men. Before such acts of cowardice, before the shamelessness of their egotism, I have turned away my head in disgust and have come to regard my life with horror. . . . Death is rest. . . . Rest at last. . . . What I have suffered for twenty days no one can understand."

What throws some shadow on this account is the fact that on the following morning Napoleon appeared outwardly well and perfectly calm when he assembled his marshals and made a final appeal. It is certain, from the testimony of his secretary and his physician, that he had been violently ill, but the sobriety of the remaining chronicle is to be doubted. Possibly, too, the empty sachet had contained a preparaÆт. 44]

tion of opium intended to relieve sharp attacks like that at Pirna; but CHAP. XVII in view of the second attempt at suicide made after Waterloo, this is not likely. Yet the circumstances may easily have been exaggerated; for the evident motive of what has been called the imperial legend is to heighten all the effects in the Napoleonic picture. Whatever was the truth as to that gloomy night, Napoleon's appeal next morning, though eloquent, was in vain; the marshals were unshaken in their determination, though less bitter and violent in their language. "You deserve repose," were the Emperor's last words to them; "well, then, take it." Thereupon the act of unconditional abdication was written in these words: "The allied powers having declared the Emperor Napoleon to be the sole obstacle to the reëstablishment of peace in Europe, the Emperor Napoleon, faithful to his oath, declares that for himself and his heirs he renounces the thrones of France and of Italy, because there is no personal sacrifice which he is not ready to make for the welfare of the nation." These last words were, after some consideration, erased, and the phrase "in the interest of France" was substituted for them. Some think, and it may well be true, that this change of form, taken in connection with Napoleon's calmness, was another proof of his deep purpose. Unable to thwart his "growlers," he may have recollected that once before he had crossed the Mediterranean to give a feeble government full scope for its own destruction. France might easily recall her favorite son in her own interest. He was scarcely more than forty-four, a young man still, and this he probably recalled as he made ready to play a new rôle.

Armed with the document necessary to secure his pardon, Ney hurried back to the capital. The elderly, well-meaning, but obtuse Louis XVIII. was immediately proclaimed king by the senate. Having "learned nothing, and forgotten nothing," he accepted the throne, making certain concessions to the new France, sufficient, as he hoped, to seeure at least the momentary support of the people. The haste to join the white standard made by men on whom Napoleon's adventurous career had heaped honor and wealth is unparalleled in history. Jourdan, Augereau, Maison, Lagrange, Nansouty, Oudinot, Kellermann, Lefebvre, Hulin, Milhaud, Latour-Maubourg, Ségur, Berthier, Belliard - such were the earliest names. Among the soldiers near by some bowed to the new order, but among the garrisons there was such wide-spread mutiny that royalist hate was kindled again and fanned to white heat by the scoffs and jeers of the outraged men. Their behavior was the CHAP. XVII outward sign of a temper not universal, of course, but very common 1814 among the people. At Paris both the King and the King's brother were cheered on their formal entry, but many discriminating onlookers prophesied that the Bourbons could not remain long.

Fully aware that Napoleon was yet a power in France, and challenged by the marshals to display a chivabric spirit in providing for the welfare of their former monarch, Alexander gave full play to his generous impulses. His first suggestion was that his fallen foe should accept a home and complete establishment in Russia; but this would have been to ignore the other members of the coalition. It was determined finally to provide the semblance of an empire, the forms of state, and an imperial income, and to make the former Emperor the guest of all Europe. The idea was quixotic, but Napoleon was not a prisoner; he had done nothing worthy of degradation, and throughout the civilized world he was still regarded by vast numbers as the savior of European society, who had fallen into the hands of cruel oppressors. The paper which was finally drawn up was a treaty between Napoleon, for the time and purposes of the instrument a private citizen, as one party, and the four sovereign states of Austria, Prussia, Russia, and England as the other. It had, therefore, no sanction except the public opinion of France and the good faith of those who executed it, the former being bound by her allies to a contract made by them. It was France which was to pay Napoleon two millions of francs a year, and leave him to reign undisturbed over Elba; the allies granted Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla as a realm in perpetuity to Maria Louisa and her heirs, through the King of Rome, as her successors. The agreement was unique, but so were the circumstances which brought it to pass. There was but one important protest, and that was made by Castlereagh in regard to the word Napoleon and the imperial style! His protest was vain, but to this day many among the greatest of his countrymen persistently employ "Bonaparte" in speaking of the greater, and "Napoleon" in designating the lesser, of the two men who have ruled France as emperors.

Four commissioners, one from each of the powers, proceeded to Fontaineblean. They were careful to treat Napoleon with the consideration due to an emperor. To all he was courteous, except to the representative of Prussia, Count Truchsess-Waldburg, whose presence he declared unnecessary, since there were to be no Prussian troops on the southern road toward Elba. With Colonel Campbell, the British commissioner, he was most friendly, conversing enthusiastically with CHAP. XVII the Scotch officer about the Scotch poet known as Ossian. What was 1814 particularly admired in his remarkable outpourings was their warlike tone. As the preparations for departure went forward, it became clear that of all the imperial dignitaries only Bertrand and Drouot would accompany the exile. The others he dismissed with characteristic and appropriate farewells: to Caulaincourt he assigned a gift of five hundred thousand frances from the treasure at Blois; Constant, the valet, and Roustan, the Mameluke, were dismissed at their own desire, but not empty-handed. For his line of travel, and for a hundred baggage-wagons loaded with books, furniture, and objects of art, Napoleon stipulated with the utmost nieety and persistence. With every hour he showed greater and greater anxiety for his personal safety. Indifferent to life but a few short days before, he was now timid and over-anxious. If he had been playing a part and pondering what in a few years, perhaps months, his life and person might again be worth in European politics, he could not have been more painstaking as to measures for his personal safety. The stoic could have recourse to the bowl, the eighteenth-century enthusiast must live and hope to the last. Napoleon seems to have struggled for the union of both characters. "They blame me that I can outlive my fall," he remarked. "Wrongfully.... It is much more courageous to survive unmerited bad fortune." Only once he seemed overpowered, being observed, as he sat at table, to strike his forehead and murmur: "God, is it possible?" Sometimes, too, he appeared to be lost in reverie, and when addressed started like one awakened from a dream. All was ready on the twentieth; but the Empress, who by the terms of the "treaty" was to accompany her consort as far as the harbor of St. Tropez, did not appear. Napoleon declared that she had been kidnapped, and refused to stir, threatening to withdraw his abdication. Koller, the Austrian commissioner, assured him of the truth, that she had resolved of her free will not to be present. In the certainty that all was over, the Empress had determined to take refuge with her father, and the imperial government at Blois had dispersed, Joseph and Jerome flying to Switzerland.

PUBLICATION AUTRORIZED BY THE ARTIST.

THE ABDICATION. FONTAINEBLEAU, APRIL 6, 1814.

The announcement staggered Napoleon, but he replied with words destined to have great significance: "Very well; I shall remain faithful to my promise; but if I have new reasons to complain, I shall consider myself absolved." Further, he touched on various topics as if seeking

[Æт. 44

CHAP. XVII to talk against time, remarking that Francis had impiously sought the dissolution of his daughter's marriage; that Russia and Prussia had 1814 made Austria's position dangerous; that the Czar and Frederick William had shown little delicacy in visiting Maria Louisa at Rambouillet: that he himself was no usurper; and that he had been wrong not to make peace at Prague or Dresden. Then, suddenly changing tone and topic, he asked with interest what would occur if Elba refused to accept him. Koller thought he might still take refuge in England. Napoleon rejoined that he had thought of that; but, having always sought to do England harm, would the English make him welcome? Koller replied that, as all the projects against her welfare had come to naught, England would feel no bitterness. Finally, about noon Napoleon descended into the courtvard, where the few grenadiers of the old guard The officers, commissioned and non-commissioned, were drawn up. were called forward, and in a few touching words their former leader thanked all who had remained true for their loyalty. With their aid he could have continued the war beyond the Loire, but he had preferred to sacrifice his personal interests to those of France. "Continue to serve France," runs the Napoleonic text of this fine address: but the commissioners thought they heard "to serve the sovereign which the nation has chosen." He could have ended his life, he went on to say, but he wished to live and record for posterity the great deeds of his Then he embraced Petit, the commanding officer, and, warriors. snatching to his breast the imperial eagle, his standard in so many glorious battles, he pressed it to his lips, and entered the waiting carriage. A swelling sob burst from the ranks, and tears bedewed the weather-beaten cheeks of men who had not wept for years.

CHAPTER XVIII

THE EMPEROR OF ELBA

NAPOLEON AND THE POPULAR FRENZY— SERIOUS DANGERS INCURRED— THE EXILE UNDER THE BRITISH FLAG—THE VOYAGE TO ELBA— THE NAPOLEONIC COURT AT PORTO FERRAJO—MYSTERIOUS VISI-TORS—ESTRANGEMENT OF MARIA LOUISA—NAPOLEON'S "ISLE OF RE-POSE"—THE CONGRESS OF VIENNA—ITS VIOLATION OF TREATY AGREEMENT—DISCONTENT IN FRANCE—REVIVAL OF IMPERIALISM— BITTERNESS OF THE ARMY—INTRIGUES AGAINST THE BOURBONS —NAPOLEON'S BEHAVIOR—HIS FEARS OF ASSASSINATION.

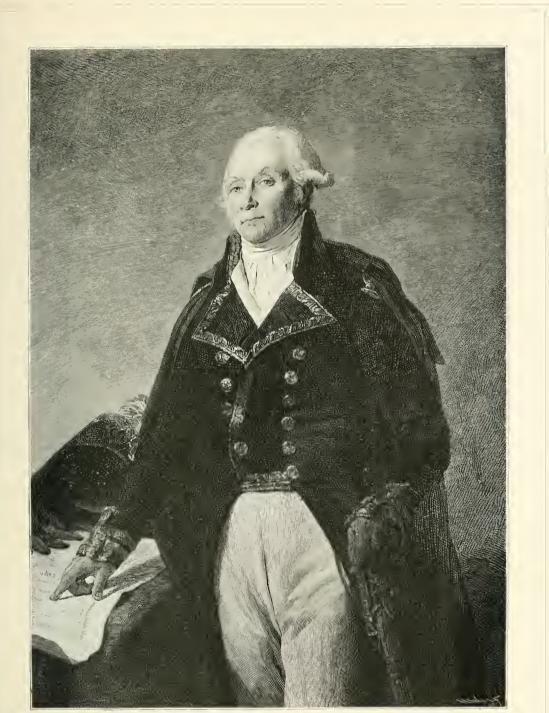

NAPOLEON'S journey to Elba was a series of disenchantments. CHAP. XVIII As has been said, he had stipulated in his "treaty" that the Em- 1814-15 press should accompany him to St. Tropez, where he was to embark. Her absence, he persisted in declaring, was explicable only by forced detention; and he again talked of withdrawing his abdication at this breach of the engagements made by the allies. But he grew more composed, and the journey was sufficiently comfortable as far as Lyons. Occasionally during that portion of it there were outbursts of good feeling from those who stopped to see his train pass by. But in descending the Rhone there was a marked change. As the Provençals had been the radicals of the Revolution, so now they were the devotees of the Restoration. The flood of disreputable calumny had broken loose : men said the Emperor's mother was a loose woman, his father a butcher, he himself but a bastard, his true name Nicholas. "Down with Bonaparte! down with Nicholas!" was too often the derisive shout as he traversed the villages. Maubreuil, the hired assassin, was hurrying from Paris with a desperate band, ostensibly to recover crown jewels or government funds which might be among Napoleon's effects. Recalling Alexander's boast that his best servants had been found among the nich for Napoleon's exile to a far-distant land, Elba being too near to 1814-15 France and to Europe, it is conceivable that Talleyrand might reckon on the moral support of the dynasties in conniving at Napoleon's assas-Had he forgotten the murder of Enghien? Probably not; sination. but his conscience was not over-tender. Near Valence, on April twentyfourth, the imperial procession met Augereau's carriage. The archrepublican of Napoleon's earlier career had given in his adhesion to the new government, and had been retained in office. He alighted, the ex-Emperor likewise : the latter exhibited all the ordinary forms of politeness, the former studiously disdained them. Napoleon, with nice irony, asked if the general were on his way to court. The thrust went home, but in a gruff retort Augereau, using the insulting "thou," declared with considerable embarrassment that he cared no more for the Bourbons than for Napoleon; that he had had no motive for his conduct except love of his country.

[ÆT. 44-45

CHAP. XVIII assassins of his father, and recollecting that Francis sighed to Metter-

> Partly by good fortune, partly by good management, the cortège avoided the infuriated bands who, in various places, had sworn to take the fallen Emperor's life. At Avignon his escape was almost miraculous. Near Orgon a mob of royalists beset the carriage, and Napoleon shrank in pallid terror behind Bertrand, cowering there until the immediate danger was removed by his Russian escort. A few miles out he donned a postilion's uniform and rode post through the town. At Saint-Cannat he would not touch a morsel of food for fear of poison. Rumors of the bitter feeling prevalent at Aix led him for further protection to clothe one of his aides in his own too familiar garb. In that town he was violently ill, somewhat as he had been at Fontainebleau. The attack yielded easily to remedies, and the Prussian commissioner asserted that it was due to a loathsome disease. Thereafter the hounded fugitive wore an Austrian uniform, and sat in the Austrian commissioner's earriage; thus disguised, the Emperor of Elba seemed to feel secure. From Luc onward the company was protected by Austrian hussars; but in spite of these military jailers, mob violence became stronger from day to day in each successive town. Napoleon grew morbid, and the line of travel was changed from the direction of St. Tropez to that of Fréjus in order to avoid the ever-increasing danger. The only alleviation in the long line of ills was a visit from his light and giddy but affectionate sister Pauline, the Princess Borghese, who comforted him

IN THE MUSEUM OF VERSAILLES

ENGRAVED BY HENRY WOLF

MARSHAL FRANÇOIS-CHRISTOPHE KELLERMANN DUKE OF VALMY

FROM THE PAINTING BY GEORGES BOUGET

Æт. 41-45]

and promised to share his exile. At length Fréjus was reached, and CHAP. XVIII Napoleon resumed his composure as he saw an English frigate and a 1814-15 French brig lying in the harbor. Perhaps the beautiful view recalled to an outcast monarch the return, in 1799, of one General Bonaparte, who had landed on the same shore to overthrow the Directory. If not, it must have been due to unwonted dejection or dark despair.

Again Napoleon remarked a breach of his treaty. He was to have sailed from St. Tropez in a corvette; here was only a brig. Accordingly, as if to mark an intentional slight, in reality for his safety and comfort, he asked and obtained permission to embark on the English frigate, the Undaunted, as the guest of her captain. The promised corvette was at St. Tropez awaiting its passenger, but the hasty change of plan had made it impossible to bring her around in time. Possibly for this reason, too, the baggage of Napoleon had been much diminished in quantity; and of this he complained also, as being a breach of his treaty. His farewell to the Russian and Prussian commissioners was brief and dignified; the Austrian hussars paid full military honors to the party; and as the Emperor, accompanied by the English and Austrian commissioners, embarked, a salvo of twenty-four guns rang out from the Undaunted. Already he had begun to eulogize England and her civilization, and to behave as if throwing himself on the good faith of an English gentleman, exactly as a defeated knight would throw himself on the chivabic courtesy of his conqueror. This appearance of distinguished treatment heightened his self-satisfaction. His attendants said that once again he was "all emperor."

It was a serious blow when, on passing aboard ship, he discovered that the salutes had been in recognition of the commissioners, and that the polite but decided Captain Ussher was determined to treat his illustrious guest with the courtesy due to a private gentleman, and with that alone. Although chafing at times during the voyage against the restrictions of naval discipline, Napoleon submitted gracefully, and wore a subdued air. This was his first contact with English customs : sometimes they interested him; frequently, as in the matter of afterdinner amusements and Sunday observance, they irritated him, and then with a contemptuous petulance he withdrew to his cabin. In conversation with Koller, the Austrian commissioner, he once referred to his conduct in disguising himself on the road to Fréjus as pusillanimous, and admitted in vulgar language that he had made an indecent

VOL. IV.-21

[ÆT. 44-45

CHAP. XVIII display of himself. He was convinced that all the dreadful scenes 1814-15 through which he had passed were the work of Bourbon emissaries. In general his talk was a running commentary on the past, a well-calculated prattle in which, with apparent spontaneity and ingenuousness, interpretations were placed on his conduct which were thoroughly novel. This was the beginning of a series of historical commentaries lasting, with interruptions, to the end of his life. There is throughout a unity of purpose in the explication and embellishment of history which will be considered later. On May fourth the Undaunted cast anchor in the harbor of Porto Ferrajo.

> Elba was an island divided against itself, there being both imperialists and royalists among its inhabitants, and a considerable party which desired independence. By representing that Napoleon had brought with him fabulous sums, the Austrian and English commissioners easily won the Elbans to a fervor of loyalty for their new emperor. Before nightfall of the fourth the court was established, and the new administration began its labors. After mastering the resources and needs of his pygmy realm, the Emperor began at once to deploy all his powers, mending the highways, fortifying the strategic points, and creating about the nucleus of four hundred guards which were sent from Fontainebleau an efficient little army of sixteen hundred men. His expenses were regulated to the minutest detail, the salt-works and ironmines, which were the bulwarks of Elban prosperity, began at once to increase their output, and taxation was regulated with scrupulous nicety. By that supereminent virtue of the French burgher, good management, the island was made almost independent of the remnants of the Tuileries treasure, the sum of about five million francs, which Napoleon had brought from France. The same powers which had swayed a world operated with equal success in a sphere almost microscopic by compari-To many this appeared a sorry commentary on human grandeur, son. but the great exile did not intend to sink into a contemptible lethargy. If the future had aught in store for him, his capacities must have exercise and their bearings be kept smooth by use. The Princess Borghese had been separated from her second husband soon after the marriage, and since 1810 she had lived an exile from Paris, having been banished for impertinent conduct to the Empress. But she cherished no malice, and before long, according to promise, she arrived and took up her abode as her brother's companion. Madame Mère, though distant in prosperity, came likewise to soothe her son in adversity. The intercepted let- CHAP. XVIII ters of the former prove her to have been at least as loose in her life at 1814-15 Elba as ever before, but they do not afford a sufficient basis for the scandals concerning her relations with Napoleon which were founded upon them and industriously circulated at the court of Louis XVIII. The shameful charge, though recently revived and ingeniously supported, appears to have no adequate foundation.

Æт. 44-45]

Napoleon's economies were rendered not merely expedient, but imperative, by the fact that none of the moneys from France were forthcoming which had been promised in his treaty with the powers. After a short stay Koller frankly stated that in his opinion they never would be paid, and departed. The island swarmed with Bourbon spies, and the only conversation in which Napoleon could indulge himself unguardedly was with Sir Neil Campbell, the English representative, or with the titled English gentlemen who gratified their curiosity by visiting him. During the summer heat, when the court was encamped on the heights at Marciana for refreshment, there appeared a mysterious lady with her child. Both were well received and kindly treated, but they withdrew themselves entirely from the public gaze. Common rumor said it was the Empress, but this was not true; it was the Countess Walewska, with one of the two sons she bore her host, whom she still adored. They remained but a few days, and departed as mysteriously as they had come. Base females thronged the precincts of the imperial residence, openly struggling for Napoleon's favor as they had so far never dared to do; success too frequently attended their efforts.

But the one woman who should have been at his side was absent. It is certain that she made an honest effort to eome, and apartments were prepared for her reception in the little palace at Porto Ferrajo. Her father, however, thwarted her at every turn, and finally she was a virtual prisoner at Schönbrunn. So manifest was the restraint that her grandmother Caroline, Queen of the Two Sicilies, cried out in indignation: "If I were in the place of Maria Louisa, I would tie the sheets of my bed to the window-frame and flee." Committed to the charge of the elegant and subtle Neipperg, a favorite chamberlain whom she had first seen at Dresden, she was plied with such insidious wiles that at last her slender moral fiber was entirely broken down, and she fell a victim to his charms. As late as August, Napoleon received impassioned letters from her; then she grew formal and cold; at last, under MetterCHAP. XVIII nich's urgency, she ceased to write at all. Her French attendant, 1814–15 Meneval, managed to convey the whole sad story to her husband; but the Emperor was incredulous, and hoped against hope until December. Then only he ceased from his incressant and urgent appeals.

The number of visitors to Elba was sometimes as high as three hundred in a single day. Among these were a few English, fewer French, As time passed the heaviness of the Austrian but many Italians. voke had begun to gall the people of Napoleon's former kingdom, and considerable numbers from among them, remembering the mild Eugène with longing, joined in an extensive though feeble conspiracy to restore Napoleon to the throne of Italy. Lucien returned to Rome in order to foster the movement, and Murat, observing with unease the general faithlessness of the great powers in small matters, began to tremble for the security of his own seat. With them and others Napoleon appears to have corresponded regularly. He felt himself entirely freed from the obligations he had taken at Fontainebleau, for he was sure the people of southern France had been instigated to take his life by royalist agents, and while one term after another passed, not a cent was paid of the promised pension; his own fortune, therefore, was steadily melting away. For months he behaved as if really determined to make Elba his "isle of repose," as he designated it just before landing; but under such provocations his temper changed. The corner-stone of his treaty was his complete sovereignty; otherwise the paper was merely a promise without any sanction, not even that of international law. This perfect sovereignty had been recognized by the withdrawal of all the commissioners as such, Campbell insisting that he remained merely as an ambassador.

In a treaty concluded on May thirtieth between Louis XVIII. and the powers of the coalition, the boundaries of France were fixed substantially as they had been in 1792, and the destiny of the lands brought under her sway by the Revolution and by Napoleon was to be determined by a European congress. This body met on November first, 1814, at Vienna. It was soon evident that the four powers of the coalition were to outdo Napoleon's extreme endeavors in their reckless disposition of European territories. Before the close of the month, however, Talleyrand, by his adroit manipulations and his conjurings with the sacrosanct word "legitimacy," had made himself the moving spirit of the congress, and had so inflamed the temper of both Metternich and Castlereagh against the dictatorial attitude of Russia and Prussia as to induce Austria and Great Britain to sign, on January third, 1815, a secret CHAP. XVIII treaty with France whereby the parties of the first part bound themselves to resist the aggressiveness of the Northern powers, and that by force if necessary. This restored France to the position of a great power. By the middle of February the Northern allies were brought to terms, and in return for their concessions it was agreed that Murat was to be deposed. This spirit of compromise menaced, or rather finally destroyed, the sovercignty of Napoleon, petty as it was. On the charge of conspiring with Murat, he could easily be removed from Elba, and deported to some more remote spot from which he could exert no influence on European polities.

PUBLICATION AUTHORIZED BY THE ARTIST.

FROM THE PAINTING BY REALIER-DUMAS

Æт. 44-45]

From the opening sessions of the congress there had been a general consensus of opinion as to this course. As to the place opinions varied. Castlereagh favored the Azores, but others the Cape Verd islands; St. Helena, then well known as a place of call on the long voyage to the Cape, had been suggested much earlier, even before Elba was chosen, but when or by whom is not known. It is quite possible that Wellington, who succeeded Castlercagh as English plenipotentiary in February, may have mentioned the name; he had been there, and knew it as almost the remotest spot of land in the world. The formal proposition to that effect appears to have been made by the Prussian cabinet. The congress took no definite action in the matter, but the understanding was so clear and general that a proclamation to the national guard was printed in the "Moniteur" of March eighth, 1815, stating that measures had been taken at the Congress of Vienna to remove Napoleon farther away. It was easy for everybody, including the captive himself, to believe that, all the other articles of the agreement at Fontainebleau having been violated, that which guaranteed the sovereignty of Elba was equally worthless.

It cannot be doubted that Napoleon was fully aware of whatever was proposed at Vienna, and it is absolutely certain that he was thoroughly informed as to the changed state of public opinion in France. Having promised a fairly liberal constitution as the price of his throne, Louis XVIII., with colossal stupidity, undertook to ignore the past, and promulgated the charter as his own gracious act, done in the nineteenth year of his reign! The upper chamber, or House of Peers, was his creature, since he could create members at will. Feeble in mind and body, he was unable to check the reactionary assumptions of his

[ÆT. 41-45

CHAP. XVIII family, who, having deserted their country, had returned to it by the 1814-15 aid of invaders despised and feared by the nation. These and the returning emigrants were provided with rich sineeures, and began to talk of restoring estates to their rightful owners; in some cases the possessors, on their death-beds, were intimidated into making such restitution. The extreme clerical party began even to hamper the ministry in its efforts to grant the freedom of worship guaranteed by the constitution. Secular business was forbidden on certain holy days, and funeral masses were celebrated for Pichegru, Moreau, and Cadoudal, that for the latter at the King's expense. When, finally, Christian burial was refused to an actress there were riots in Paris.

> But the government continued its suicidal course; even the Vendée grew disaffected, and, the suffrage having been greatly restricted, there were murmurings about oligarchies and tyrants. At Nîmes the Protestants feared another St. Bartholomew, and said so. Even moderate royalists grew troubled, and could not retort when they heard the new order stigmatized by the fitting name of "paternal anarchy." Both veterans and conscripts deserted in great numbers from the army as they saw their officers discharged by the score to make places for the young aristocracy, or their comrades retired, nominally on half-pay, in reality to eke out a subsistence as best they could. It was not long before men showed each other pocket-pieces bearing Napoleon's effigy, whispering as watchwords, "Courage and hope," or "He has been and will be," or "Frenchmen, awake; the Emperor is waking." As early as July, 1814, rumors of his return were rife in country districts, and by autumn the longing for it was outspoken and general. In Paris there was greater caution, but as Marmont was called Judas for having betrayed his master, so Berthier was known as Peter in that he had denied him, and it was a common joke to tie a white cockade to the tail of a dog. Before the chamber met the various factions openly avowed themselves as either royalists, Bonapartists, liberals, or Jacobins. The money estimates presented made it clear that a king was more expensive than an emperor, and when the peers not only voted to indemnify the emigrants for the lands held by their families, but likewise passed a bill establishing the censorship of the press, it was eommon talk that the present state of things could not last.

> The number of French prisoners of war and of soldiers released from the besieged fortresses in central Europe was about three hundred thousand, of whom a third were veterans of the Empire. To these CHAP. XVIII must be added the army which Soult, ignorant of Napoleon's abdica-1814-15 tion, had led to defeat at Toulouse, and the soldiers who had served in Italy. These men, long accustomed to much consideration, found themselves on their return to be persons of no consequence. They learned that the great officers of the Empire were everywhere treated with seant courtesy, and that the great ladies of the imperial court were now virtually driven from the Tuileries by the significant questions and loud asides of the royal personages who had supplanted them. It was told in all public resorts how Ney had resented the rude affronts put on his wife by the Duchess of Angoulême. The welltrained subordinate officers of these contingents were turned adrift by thousands on the same terms as those of Napoleon's own army, halfpay if they showed themselves good Catholics, otherwise nothing. For the most part, again, this promise was empty; young royalists were put in their places, the pay of the old guard was reduced, a new noble guard was organized, promotion was refused to those who had received commissions during the operations of war, and the asylums established for the orphans of those who had belonged to the Legion of Honor were abolished. So bitter was the outcry that the King felt compelled to dismiss his minister of war, and, not daring to substitute Marmont, who demanded the place, appointed Soult. He too was speedily discredited for harshness to Exelmans, a subordinate who was discovered to have been in correspondence with Napoleon; and by the middle of February, 1815, nearly all the soldiers were at heart Bonapartists, their friends for the most part abetting them.

Æт. 41–45]

In less than two months after Louis XVIII. took his seat, Talleyrand and Fouché were deep in their element of plot and intrigue. They thought of the son of Philippe Égalité as a possible constitutional ruler; they talked of reëstablishing the imperial regency; with Napoleon placed beyond the possibility of returning, the latter course would be safe. During the succeeding months they continued to juggle with this double intrigue, and around their plots clustered minor ones in mass. Lord Liverpool actually called Wellington to London for fear the duke should be seized, and Marmont put the Paris garrison under arms. On January twenty-first, 1815, the death of Louis XVI. was commemorated by the royalists with the wildest talk; and such was the general fury over Exelmans's treatment that Fouché at last stepped CHAP. XVIII forward to give his conspiracy some form. Carnot and Davout were 1814-15 both expected to coöperate; but although they refused, enough officers of influence were secured to make a plan for an extended insurrection entirely feasible. For this all parties were willing to unite; no one knew or cared what was to supplant the existing government—anything was better than "paternal anarchy."

How accurate the information was which reached Napoleon at Elba we cannot ascertain, for his feelings were masked and his conduct was non-committal. He had entirely recovered his health, and though old in experience, he was only forty-five years of age, and still appeared like one in the prime of life. He was apparently vigorous, being short, thick-necked, and inclined to corpulence. His cheeks were somewhat heavy and sensuous, his hair receded far back on the temples, his limbs were powerful, his hands and feet were delicately formed and noticeably small. His movements were nervous and well controlled, his eye was clear and bright, his passions were strong, his self-control was apparent, and the coördination of his powers was easy. To the Elban peasant he was gracious; with his subordinates he was dignified; among his many visitors he moved with good humor and tact; his kindness to his mother and sister made both of them devoted and happy.

The only anxiety he displayed was in regard to assassination and kidnapping: the former he said he could meet like a soldier; of the latter he spoke with anxious foreboding. He had reason to fear both. Every week, either in France or Italy or both, there was a plot among fanatical royalists and priests to kill him; and though the Barbary pirates were eager to seize him and win a great ransom, they were excelled in their zeal both by Mariotte, Talleyrand's agent in Leghorn, and by Bruslart, a bitter and ancient enemy, who had been appointed governor of Corsica for the purpose. For these reasons, probably, the Emperor of Elba lived as far as possible in seclusion. As time passed he grew less intimate with Campbell, but the Scotch gentleman did not attribute the fact to discontent. Before leaving Elba, on February sixteenth, to reside for a time in Florence and perform the duties of English envoy in that place, he gave it as his opinion that if Napoleon received the pension stipulated for in the treaty he would remain tranquilly where he was.

THE "FIELD OF MAY."

AQUARELLE MADA FOR THE CENTURY CO.

CHAPTER XIX

NAPOLEON THE LIBERATOR

NAPOLEON READY TO REAPPEAR-REASONS FOR HIS DETERMINATION-THE RETURN TO FRANCE-THE NORTHWARD MARCH-GRENOBLE OPENS ITS GATES - THE LYONS PROCLAMATIONS - THE EMPEROR IN THE TUILERIES - THE EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH - THE ADDI-TIONAL ACT - EFFECTS OF THE RETURN IN FRANCE AND ELSEWHERE -THE CONGRESS OF VIENNA DENOUNCES NAPOLEON.

T has lately been recalled that as early as July, 1814, the Emperor of Elba remarked to an English visitor that Louis XVIII., being sur-CHAP. XIX 1814-15 rounded by those who had betrayed the Empire, would in turn probably be himself betrayed by them. For the ensuing four months, however, the exile gave no sign of any deep purpose; to those who wished to leave him he gave a hearty good-by. In December, however, he remarked to one of his old soldiers, pointedly, as the man thought: "Well, grenadier, you are bored; . . . take the weather as it comes." Slipping a gold piece into the veteran's hand, he then turned away, humming to a simple air the words, "This will not last forever." Thereafter he dissuaded all who sought to depart, saying: "Be patient. We'll pass these few winter days as best we may; then we'll try to spend the spring in another fashion." This vague language may possibly have referred to the Italian scheme, but on February tenth he received a clear account of what had happened at Vienna, and on the evening of the twelfth Fleury de Chaboulon, a confidential friend of Maret, arrived in the disguise of a sailor, and revealed in the fullest and most authentic way the state of France. When he heard of the plan to reëstablish the regency, Napoleon burst out hotly: "A regency! What for? Am I, then, dead?" Two days later, after long conferences, the emissary VOL. IV.-22 161 was despatched to do what he could at Naples, and the Emperor began CHAP. XIX his preparations.

[ÆT. 45

1814-15

This was soon known on the mainland, and three days later a personage whose identity has never been revealed arrived in the guise of a Marseillaise merchant, declaring that, except the rich and the emigrants, every human being in France longed for the Emperor's return. If he would but set up his hat on the shores of Provence, it would draw all men toward it. When Napoleon turned pseudo-historian he declared in one place that the breaches of the Fontainebleau treaty and his fears of deportation had nothing to do with his return from Elba; in another he states the reverse. Since the legend he was then studiously constructing required the unbroken devotion of the French to the standard-bearer of the Revolution for the sake of consistency, he probably recalled only the feelings awakened by Fleury's report that opportunity was ripe, and that, too, earlier than had been expected. But there were other motives at the time, for Peyrusse, keeper of Napoleon's purse during the Elban sojourn, heard his master asseverate that it would be more dangerous to remain in Porto Ferrajo than to return to France. In any case, so far as France and the world at large were concerned, the contemptuous indifference of Louis and his ministers to their obligations under the treaty powerfully justified Napoleon's course. Even Alexander and Castlereagh had early made an indignant protest to Talleyrand; but the latter, already deep in conspiracy, turned them off with a flippant rejoinder.

With great adroitness and secrecy Napoleon collected and fitted out his little flotilla, which consisted of the Inconstant, a stout brig assigned to him at Fontainebleau, and seven smaller craft. During the preparations the French and English war-vessels patrolling the neighboring waters came and went, but their captains suspected nothing. Campbell's departure created a false rumor among the islanders that England was favoring some expedition on which the Emperor was about to embark, thus allaying all suspicion. When, on the twenty-sixth, a little army of eleven hundred men found itself afloat, with eighty horses and a number of cannon, no one seemed to realize what had happened; except Drouot, who pleaded against Napoleon's rashness, all were enthusiastic. To avoid suspicion, each captain steered his own course, and the various craft dotting the sea at irregular intervals looked no way unlike the other boats which plied those waters. Several men-of-war were sighted, but they kept their course. As one dan- CHAP. XIX ger after another was averted, the great adventurer's spirits rose until he was exuberant with joy, and talked of Austerlitz. It was March first when land was finally sighted from the Inconstant; as if by magic, the other vessels hove in sight immediately, and by four the men were all ashore on the strand of the Gulf of Jouan. Cambronne, a colonel of the imperial guards, was sent to requisition horses at Cannes, with the strict injunction that not a drop of blood be shed. As the great actor had theatrically said on board his brig, he was "about to produce a great novelty," and he counted upon dazzling the beholders into an enthusiasm they had ceased to feel for the old plays. Among others brought to Napoleon's bivouac that night was the Prince of Monaco, who had been found by Cambronne at St. Pierre traveling in a fourhorse carriage, and had been taken as a prisoner into Napoleon's pres-"Where are you going?" was, according to tradition, the greetence. ing of Napoleon. "I am returning to my domains," came the reply. "Indeed! and I too," was the merry retort.

162

ÆT. 45]

Recalling the mortal agony he had endured on the highway through Aix but a short year before, and its causes, and having been informed how bitter was the anti-royalist feeling in the Dauphiné, Napoleon set his little army in march direct toward Grenoble. At Cannes there was general indifference; at Grasse it was found that the division general in command had fled, and there were a few timid shouts of "Long live the Emperor!" Thence to Digne on the Grenoble highway was a mountain track over a ridge twelve thousand feet above the sea. In twenty The "growlers" hours the slender column marched thirty-five miles. joked about the "little corporal" who trudged at their side, the Alpine hamlets provided abundant rations, and the government officials furnished blank passports which enabled Napoleon to send emissaries both to Grenoble and to Marseilles, where Masséna was in command. The little garrison of Digne was Bonapartist in feeling, but it was not yet ready to join Napoleon, and withdrew; that at Sisteron was kept from meddling by a body of troops which had been despatched as a corps of observation from Marseilles, while the populace shouted heartily for the Emperor. At Gap the officials strove to organize resistance, but they desisted before the menaces of the people. By this time the peasantry were coming in by hundreds. So far Napoleon's enterprise had received but four recruits: two soldiers from Antibes, a tanner from Grasse, and a gendarme. Now he was so confident that he dismissed the peasantry, assuring them that the soldiers in front would join his standards. 1814-15

1814-15

CHAP. XIX

On March seventh the head of the column of imperial adventurers reached La Mure, a short day's march from Grenoble. They were received with enthusiasm, and a bucket of the poor native wine was brought for the refreshment of the men. When all had been served Napoleon reached out for the cheap little glass, and swallowed his ra-There was wild delight among both his men and the tion like the rest. onlookers as the "army" set out for Laffray, the next hamlet, where was a small detachment sent from Grenoble to destroy a bridge over the Drac. With inscrutable faces they stood across the highway, lances set and muskets charged, under orders to fire on Napoleon the moment he should appear. At length the critical moment arrived. "There he is! Fire!" cried a royalist officer. The soldiers clutched their arms, their faces blanched, their knees shook, and they-disobeyed. Napoleon, walking slowly, advanced within pistol-shot. He wore the old familiar gray surtout, the well-known cocked hat, and a tricolor cockade. "Soldiers of the Fifth," he said in a strong, calm voice, "behold me!" Then advancing a few paces farther, he threw open his coat and displaying the familiar uniform, he called: "If there be one soldier among you who wishes to kill his Emperor, he can. I come to offer myself to your assaults." In an instant the opposing ranks melted into a mob of sobbing, cheering men, kissing Napoleon's shoes, struggling to touch the skirts of his shabby garments. The surrounding throng crowded near in sympathy. "Soldiers," cried the magician, "I come with a handful of brave men because I count on you and the people. The throne of the Bourbons is illegitimate because it was not erected by the nation. Your fathers are threatened by a restoration of titles, of privilege, and of feudal rights; is it not so?" "Yes, yes," should the multitude. At that instant appeared a rider arrayed in the uniform of the national guard, but wearing a huge tricolor cockade. Alighting at Napoleon's feet, he said: "Sire, I am Jean Dumoulin the glove-maker; I bring to your majesty a hundred thousand francs and my arm." At that instant likewise an imperial proclamation denouncing traitors, and promising that under the old standards victory would return like the storm-wind, was passing from hand to hand in the garrison of Grenoble. Labédoyère, the colonel of the Seventh of the line, first announced his purpose to support his Emperor, and the royalist officers saw the imperialist feeling spread with dismay. They arranged to evacuate the place next morning. At seven in the evening Napoleon summoned the town; the commandant, unable to resist the pressure of both soldiers and populace, fled with a few adherents, and at ten the gates were opened. The reception of the returning exile was hearty and impressive. It was with an army of seven thousand men that, after a rest of thirty-six hours, he started for Lyons.

"As far as Grenoble I was an adventurer; at Grenoble I was a prince," wrote Napoleon at St. Helena. If this were true, at Lyons he was an Emperor in fact as well as in name, that great city receiving him with plaudits as energetic as were the executions with which they dismissed Artois and Macdonald. Recalling the lessons of his youth, some learned in Corsica, some in the Rhone valley, the returning Emperor carefully felt the pulse of public opinion as he journeyed. He found the longing for peace to be universal, and even before entering Lyons he began to promise peace with honor. But this he quickly found was not enough : it must be peace with liberty as well. The sole task before him, therefore, he declared to be that of protecting the interests and principles of the Revolution against the returning emigrants. France, restored to her glory, was to live in harmony with other European powers as long as they minded their own affairs. Napoleon, the liberator of France! To terrify foreign invaders and intestine foes a great united nation was to speak in trumpet notes. From Lyons, therefore, second city of the Empire, was summoned a popular assembly to revise the constitution. To convey the impression that Austria was in secret accord with the Emperor's course, three delegates from the eastern capital were summoned to assist at a significant ceremony which was to occur almost immediately, the coronation of the Empress and the King of Rome. Still further, a decree was issued which banished the returned emigrants and swept away the pretensions of the arrogant nobles. Talleyrand, Marmont, Augereau, and Dalberg were attainted, and the noble guard of the King was abolished. Under these influences Bonapartist feeling grew so intense and spread so widely that the army of Soult, which had been assembled in the southeast to oppose Murat, turned imperialist almost to a man. Masséna, who seems to have followed the lead of Fouché, waited to see what was coming, and remained neutral. Ney fell in with the general movement, and joined Napoleon at Auxerre. "Embrace me, my dear

Æт. 45]

CHAP. XIX

1814-15

166

[Æт. 45

CHAP. XIX general," were the Emperor's words of greeting. "I am glad to see 1814-15 you; and I want neither explanations nor justifications."

All resistance disappeared before Napoleon's advance as he passed Autun and descended the Yonne valley toward Paris. Everywhere there were dissensions among the populace, but the enthusiasm of the soldiers and their sympathizers triumphed. The troops despatched by the King's government to overpower the "usurper" sooner or later went over to the "usurper's" standards. One morning a placard was found on the railing around the Vendôme column : "Napoleon to Louis XVIII. My good brother, it is useless to send me any more troops; I have enough." Paris was in a storm of suppressed excitement. The measures of resistance were half-hearted; the King made lavish concessions and the chambers passed excellent laws without attracting any attention or sympathy; volunteers were raised, but there was no energy in their organization. When Napoleon reached Fontaineblean on the eighteenth, the reserves stationed in and near Paris on the south came over to him in a body. On the nineteenth Louis issued a despairing address to the army, and fled to Lille; on the morning of the twentieth the capital found itself without any vestige of government. The streets were thronged with people, but there was no disorder until a band of royalists attacked a half-pay officer wearing the imperial cockade. At once the city guard formed and intervened to quell the disturbance. Thereupon the imperialists endeavored to seize the Tuileries; they, too, were checked, and a double force, royalist and imperial, was set to defend that important spot. Over other public buildings the imperial colors waved alone and undisturbed. During the afternoon the crowds dispersed and the imperial officials quietly resumed their places. At nine in the evening a post-chaise rolled up to the Tuileries gate, Napoleon alighted, and the observers thought his smile was like that of one walking in a dream. At once he was caught in the brawny arms of his admirers, and handed upward from step to step, from landing to landing: so fierce was the affection of his friends that his life seemed to be in danger from their embraces, and it was with relief that he entered his cabinet and closed the door, to find himself among a few of his old stanch and tried servants, with Caulaincourt at their head. This reception had been in sharp contrast to the apathy displayed on the streets, where the people were few in number, unenthusiastic, and indifferent. "They let me come," said Napoleon to Mollien, "as they let the other go." Finding himself unable to endure the loneliness of CHAP. XIX the Tuileries, and depressed by the associations of the familiar scenes, 1814-15 he withdrew in a few days to the comparative seclusion of the Élysée, then a suburban mansion dubbed by courtesy a palace.

Some portion of Napoleon's leisure in Elba had been devoted, as was mentioned in another connection, to sketching the outline of a treatise intended to prove that his dynasty was quite as legitimate as any other which had ruled over France. His illusions of European empire were dismissed either permanently or temporarily, and for the moment he was the apostle of nationality and popular sovereignty in France. Before laying his head on his pillow in the Tuileries he displayed this fact to the world in the constitution of his cabinet, which would in our day be designated as a cabinet of concentration, representative of various shades of opinion. Maret, Davout, Cambacérès, Gaudin, Mollien, Decrès, Caulaincourt, Fouché, and Carnot accepted the various portfolios; most surprising of all, Benjamin Constant, the constitutional republican, became president of a reconstructed council of state. In connection with the announcement of these names, the nation was informed that the constitution was to be revised, and that the censorship of the press was abolished. In reference to the latter, Napoleon remarked that, since everything possible had been said about him during the past year, he could himself be no worse off than he was, but the editors could still find much to say about his enemies. To Constant he frankly explained what he meant by revision. The common people had welcomed his return because he was one of themselves, and at a signal he could have the nobles murdered. But he wanted no peasants' war, and, as the taste had returned for unrestricted discussion, public trials, emancipated elections, responsible ministers, and all the paraphernalia of constitutional government, the public must be gratified. For all this he was ready, and with it for peace. But peace he could win only by victory, for, although in his conduct, in the Lyons decrees, and in casual talk, he hinted at negotiations with foreign powers, those negotiations were purely imaginary.

With a clear comprehension of the situation, the ministers went to work. On April twenty-third was promulgated the Additional Act, whereby the franchise was extended, the state church abolished, liberty of worship guaranteed, and every wretched remnant of privilege or divine right expunged. The two chambers were retained, many imperial dignitaries being assigned to the House of Peers, the Bonaparte CHAP. XIX brothers, Lucien, Joseph, and Jerome, among the number. It was, as 1814-15 Chateaubriand sarcastically said, a revised and improved edition of Louis's constitution. The preamble, however, was new; it set forth that Napoleon, having been long engaged in constructing a great European federal system suited to the spirit of the time and favorable to the spirit of eivilization, had now abandoned it, and would heneeforth devote himself to a single aim, the perfect security of public liberty. This specious representation, half true and half false, awakened no enthusiasm in France; it was accepted along with the Additional Act, by a plebiscite, but by only a million three hundred thousand votes less than half the number east for the Consulate and the Empire. This was largely due to a eurious apathy, induced by a still more eurious but firm conviction that at last France had secured peace with honor. Reference has been made to a military conspiracy fomented by Fouché in the North; before the hostile public feeling thus engendered in that quarter Louis fled to Ghent within five days after Napoleon reached Paris, and, though the royal princes were able to carry on civil war in the South a little longer, it was generally felt that the nation now had a ruler of its own choosing, and that if they attended strictly to their own affairs they would be left in peace. For considerable time there was little news from abroad, and so swift was the rush of internal affairs that no heed was given to what there was.

Æт. 45]

This was suddenly changed in April, when it was brought home to the nation that the specter of war had again been raised, and that the dynasties were finally a unit in their determination to extirpate the Napoleonic régime as a measure of self-defense. Every man with any means saw himself beggared, and every mother felt her son slipping from her arms to swim onee more that sea of blood in which for a generation the hope of the nation had been submerged. The depression was general and terrible, for the prospect was appalling. England, entangled with dynastic alliances in order to preserve her prosperity and dignity, had lost most of her serious and trusted leaders, and the few who survived were so panie-stricken as to have little perspicacity. The King's illness having at last removed him from public life, he had been succeeded by the most profligate and frivolous of all the line of English kings, the Prince Regent, who was later George IV. Pereival and Liverpool were not merely conservative from principle; they were negative

* .

LNGRAVED BY H. DAVIDSON

JOSEPH FOUCHÉ DUKL OF OTRANTO FROM THE PAINTING BY CLAPDE-MARIE DUBLEE from the love of negatives. Already they had laid the basis, in their CHAP. XIX mismanagement of domestic affairs, for the social turbulence which within a short time was to compel the most sweeping reforms. Castlereagh had not even an inkling of what the treaty of Chaumont might mean to Great Britain in the end. To destroy Napoleon he was perfectly content that his own free country should support a system of dynastic politics destructive of every principle of liberty.

The Congress of Vienna represented, not a confederation of states, but a league of dynasties posing as nations and banded for mutual selfpreservation. To them the permanent restoration of Napoleon could mean only one thing, the recognition of a nation's right to choose its own rulers, and that would be the end of absolutism in Europe. To Great Britain it would mean the destruction of her prosperity, or at least a serious diminution of both power and prestige. The late coalition, therefore, was re-cemented without difficulty, but on a basis entirely new. The account of Napoleon's escape reached Vienna on March sixth. Within the week Maria Louisa, now entirely under Neipperg's influence, wrote declaring herself a stranger to all Napoleon's schemes, and a few days later the French attendants of the little King of Rome were dismissed; the child's last words to Meneval were a message of affection to his father. At that time negotiations among the powers were progressing famously, each having secured its main object; on March thirteenth the Congress, under Castlereagh's instigation, publicly denounced Napoleon as the "enemy and disturber of the world's peace," and proclaimed him an outlaw. The Whigs stigmatized the paper in parliament as provocative of assassination and a disgrace to the English character, but, of all the important journals, the "Morning Chronicle" alone was courageous enough to sustain them, asserting that it was a matter of complete indifference to England whether a Bourbon or a Bonaparte reigned in France. These manly protests were unheeded, and by the twenty-fifth all Europe, except Naples, was united against France alone.

Ær. 45]

1814-15

CHAPTER XX

THE DYNASTIES IMPLACABLE

THE VIENNA COALITION — ITS PURPOSE — NAPOLEON AS A LIBERAL — THE FLASCO — FRANCE ON THE DEFENSIVE — NAPOLEON'S HEALTH — WAR PREPARATIONS OF THE COMBATANTS — THEIR RESPECTIVE FORCES — QUALITIES AND ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE FRENCH — THE ARMIES OF BLÜCHER AND WELLINGTON — THE FRENCH STRATEGY — NAPOLEON'S FIRST MISFORTUNE.

CHAP. XX 1815 THE supreme effort of the dynasties to outlaw Napoleon, and restore France to the Bourbons, was made by what was nominally an alliance of eight members — Austria, Great Britain, Prussia, Russia, France, Spain, Portugal, and Sweden. The last was, however, absorbed in her struggle with Norway, and, though Spain and Portugal were signatories, the real strength of the coalition arranged at Vienna lay in a virtual renewal of the treaty of Chaumont: Austria, Prussia, and Russia were each to put a hundred and eighty thousand men in the field, and Great Britain was to continue her subsidies.

> On April fourth, the sovereigns of Europe were notified that the Empire meant peace; they retorted by the mobilization of their forces, and by denouncing in a joint protocol the treaty of Paris. In his extremity Napoleon appealed to Talleyrand, but that minister knew too well the temper of the Congress at Vienna, and refused to coöperate. The versatile Fouché thereupon initiated a new plot, this time against Napoleon, and sounded Metternich; but Metternich was dumb. The other diplomats asseverated that they did not wish to interfere with the domestic affairs of France; but they prevaricated, intending nothing less than the complete restoration of the Bourbons.

> Under the shadow of this storm-cloud Napoleon regulated his domestic affairs of state with intrepid calmness. He had no easy task. It was the revived hatred of the masses for priests and nobles to which he had appealed on his progress from Grenoble, and, observing the wild outbursts of the populace at Lyons, he had whispered, "This is It was with studied deliberation, therefore, that in Paris madness." he cast himself completely upon the moderate liberals. This alienated the Jacobin elements throughout the country, and they, in turn, stirred up the royalists. When it became clear that neither Maria Louisa nor the King of Rome was to be crowned, and that there was no help in Austria, even the imperialists displayed a dangerous temper. Such was the general uneasiness about war that the first measures of army reorganization were taken almost stealthily. It was easy enough to establish the skeleton of formation, and not very difficult to find trustworthy officers, commissioned and non-commissioned; but to summon recruits was to announce the coming war. Of the three hundred thousand veterans now returned home, less than one fifth responded to the call for volunteers; the Emperor had reckoned on four fifths at least. The National Guard was so surly that many felt it would be bravado for Napoleon to review them. But he was determined to do so, and on April sixteenth the hazardous ceremony took place. Until at least half the companies had been reviewed not a cheer was heard; then there were a few scattering shouts here and there in the ranks; finally there was some genuine enthusiasm.

THE DYNASTIES IMPLACABLE

By the middle of May the national deputies summoned at Lyons began to arrive. They were to meet, after the fashion of Charles the Great's assemblies, in the open field. Their task was to be the making of a new constitution. It was not reassuring news that they brought from their various homes, and their accounts disturbed public opinion in Paris sadly. Before long it was known that civil war had again broken out in Vendée; the consequences would have been most disastrous had not La Rochejaquelein, the insurgent leader, been killed on June fourth. As it was, the ignoble slaughter of one of their order intensified the bitterness of the nobles. Worse still, it had been found that of the six hundred and twenty-nine deputies five hundred were ardent constitutionalists indifferent to Napoleon, and that only fifty were his devoted personal friends; there were even between thirty and forty who were Jacobins, and at Fouché's command. Under these circumstances the Emperor dared not hold the promised national congress. What could be substituted for it? The great dramatic artist was not long at a loss. He determined to summon the electoral deputies to

171

CHAP. XX

1815

Æт. 45]

a gorgeous open-air ceremony cn June first, and have them stamp with CHAP. XX their approval the Additional Act. A truly impressive spectacle would 1815 pass muster for the promised "field of May," and profoundly affect the minds of all present. But, unfortunately, though Ségur made the plan, and though every detail was carefully studied by Napoleon, the affair was not impressive. About eighteen thousand persons assembled on the benches, and there was a vast crowd in the field. The cannon roared their welcome, and the people cheered the imperial carriage, the marshals, the body-guard, and the procession. But when Napoleon and his brothers stepped forth, clad like actors in theatrical costumes of white velvet, wearing Spanish cloaks embroidered with the imperial device of golden bees, and with great plumed hats on their heads, there was a hush of disappointment. The populace had expected a soldier in a soldier's uniform : many had felt sure "he" would wear that of the National Guard.

There was, however, no sign of disrespect while the ministers and the reconstituted corps of marshals filed to their places. Among the latter were familiar faces - Ney, Moncey, Kellermann, Sérurier, Lefebvre, Grouchy, Oudinot, Jourdan, Soult, and Masséna. A committee of the deputies then stood forth, and their chairman read an address declaring that France desired a ruler of her own selection, and promising loyalty in the coming war. Napoleon arose, and in spite of his absurd clothes commanded attention while he set forth his reasons for offering a ready-made constitution instead of risking interminable debate. Although he declared that what was offered could, of course, be amended, there was no applause, except from a few soldiers. When the chambers met, a week later, Lanjuinais, one of Napoleon's lifelong opponents, was chosen president of the House of Deputies. The speech from the throne was clever and conciliatory, and in spite of evident distrust both houses promised all the strength of France for defense but for defense only. The peers declared that under her new institutions France could never be swept away by the temptations of victory; the deputies asserted that nothing could carry the nation beyond the bounds of its own defense, not even the will of a victorious prince.

The anxieties and exertions of two months were manifest in Napoleon's appearance. His features, though impressive, were drawn, and his long jaws grew prominent. He lost flesh everywhere except around the waist, so that his belly, hitherto inconspicuous, looked almost pen-

BY PERMISSION OF PAUL AND DOMINIC COLNAGHI, LONDON

ENGRAVED BY R. O. TIETZE

FIELD-MARSHAL ARTHUR WELLESLEY DUKE OF WELLINGTON

FROM THE UNGRAVING BY NAMUEL COUSINS, OF THE PAINTING BY SUR THOMAS LAWRENCE.

.

ÆT. 45]

dulous. When standing, he folded his hands sometimes in front, some-Снар. ХХ times behind, but separated them frequently to take snuff or rub his nose. Sometimes he heaved a mechanical sigh, swallowing as if to calm inward agitation. Often he scowled, and looked out through halfclosed lids as if growing far-sighted; the twitching of his eye and ear on the left side grew more frequent. With thickening difficulties and increasing annoyance, serious urinary and stomach troubles set in; there was also a persistent hacking cough. Recourse was again had to protracted warm baths in order to alleviate the accompanying nervousness; but as the ailments were refractory, a mystery soon attached to the malady, and his enemies said it was a loathsome disease. In spite of the statements both of the Prussian commissioner at Fontainebleau, Count Truchsess-Waldburg, and of Sir Hudson Lowe, it is highly improbable that Napoleon's health was undermined by sexual infection. He was surrounded all his life by malignant attendants, and among the sweepings of their minds, which in recent years have been scattered before the public, there would be some proof of the fact. In the utter absence of any reliable information, some have guessed that the trouble was the preliminary stage in the disease of which he died; and others, again, in view of his quick changes of mood, his depressions, exaltations, sharpened sensibilities, and abrupt rudeness, have explained all his peculiarities in disease and health by attributing them to a recondite form of epilepsy. Exhausted and nervous, the sufferer might well, as was the case, be found in tears before the portrait of his son; he might well lift up his voice, as he was heard to do, against the destiny which had played him false. But he was quite shrewd enough to see that during his absence no regency could be trusted, and he arranged to conduct affairs by special messengers. Joseph was to preside and give the casting-vote in the council of state; to Lucien was given a seat in the same body; but the supreme power rested in Napoleon.

When Wellington replaced Castlereagh at the Congress of Vienna, it was quickly apparent that he was greater in the field than at the council-board. Both he and Bl cher desired to assume the offensive quickly; but inasmuch as Alexander was determined to retain his ascendancy in the coalition, and as each power insisted on its due share in the struggle, it was arranged to begin hostilities on June twentyseventh, the earliest date at which the Russian troops could reach the confines of France. There were to be three armies; Schwarzenberg, with two hundred and fifty thousand men, comprising the Austrian, Russian, and Bavarian contingents, was to attack across the upper Rhine; Blücher, with one hundred and fifty thousand Prussians, was to advance across the lower Rhine; and Wellington in the Netherlands was to collect an army of one hundred and fifty thousand, compounded of Dutch, Belgians, Hanoverians, and some thirty-eight thousand British, who could be there assembled. The two latter armies were in existence by the first of June, but Wellington was dissatisfied with the quality of his motley force; even the English contingent was not the best possible, for his Peninsular veterans had been sent to find their match in Jackson's riflemen at the battle of New Orleans.

1815

CHAP. XX

On the eve of hostilities Napoleon had one hundred and twenty-four thousand effectives, with three thousand five hundred in his camp train; Wellington had one hundred and six thousand, but of these, four thousand Hanoverians were left in garrison; Blücher had about one hundred and seventeen thousand. Neither of the two allied generals dreamed that Napoleon would choose the daring form of attack upon which he decided,—that of a wedge driven into the broken line nearly a hundred miles in length upon which his enemy lay,— for to do so he must pass the Ardennes. But he did choose it, and selected for the purpose the valleys of the Sambre and the Meuse. Allowing for the differences in topography, the idea was identical with that which, nineteen years before, he had executed splendidly in Piedmont.

The opening of the campaign was sufficiently auspicious. By a superb march during the night of June thirteenth, Napoleon's army had gained a most advantageous position. The first corps under d'Erlon was at Solre on the Sambre, the second under Reille was at Leers. The guard, the sixth corps under Lobau, the line cavalry and the third corps under Vandamme, stood in that order on a line northeasterly from Beaumont, and due east of that place were four cavalry corps; to the south lay the guard cavalry and the reserve artillery under Grouchy. In front was Charleroi, whence a broad turnpike led almost direct to Brussels, thirty-four miles due north; another turned eastward toward Liège. Thirteen miles distant on this was Sombreffe, somewhat farther on that, Quatre Bras, both on the highway running east and west between Namur and Nivelles. To have accomplished such marches as it did the French army must have been fine; to have secured such a brilliant strategic position its general must have been almost inspired. He commanded the operating lines of both Wellington and Blücher, while they were far distant from each other, separated by serious obstacles, and instinct with a centrifugal tendency. The same high qualities which shone in their general distinguished the subordinate French commanders. Though many of the famous names are absent from the list,— Mortier, for instance, having fallen ill on the frontier,— yet Soult was present as chief of staff, and Ney was coming up to take command of the left wing. Reille, d'Erlon, and Foy were veterans of the Peninsular war; what twenty-two years of service had done for the "wild Hun," Vandamme, is known. Kellermann was made famous by Marengo, Lobau was noted for daring. Gérard had earned distinction in Russia, and though Grouchy's merit has been the theme of much discussion, yet he had been famous under Jourdan and Moreau, and nothing had occurred in the long interval to tarnish his reputation.

Æт. 45]

Nearly half of Blücher's troops were irregular reserves, and many of the regulars were recruits, but all were thoroughly drilled and well equipped. The passion of hatred which animated them was comparable only to the "French fury" with which Napoleon's army would fight for national existence. Such was the reverence for routine among the Prussian officers, and so bitter were the jealousies of the petty aristocracy from which they sprang, that the King dared not promote on any basis except that of seniority. In order to make Gneisenau second in command, York, Kleist, and Tauenzien were stationed elsewhere, and Bülow was put in command of a reserve to hold Belgium when Blücher should advance to Paris. The aged but fiery marshal had not mended his health by the self-indulgence of a year; the three division generals, Ziethen, Pirch, and Thielemann, were capable men of local renown. Gneisenau and Bülow were the only first-rate men among the Prussian commanders, but for rousing enthusiasm Blücher's name was a word to conjure with. Wellington was felt by his officers and soldiers to be a man of real power; his British recruits were well drilled, and his veterans were good. His associate generals were no more famous than those of Gneisenau, but they were, for the most part, English gentlemen with a high sense of duty and much executive ability. One of his corps was commanded by the Prince of Orange, a respectable soldier, whose name, however, was more valuable than the experience he had gained in the Peninsula as aide-de-camp; the other corps was under

175

Снар. XX 1815 CHAP. XX

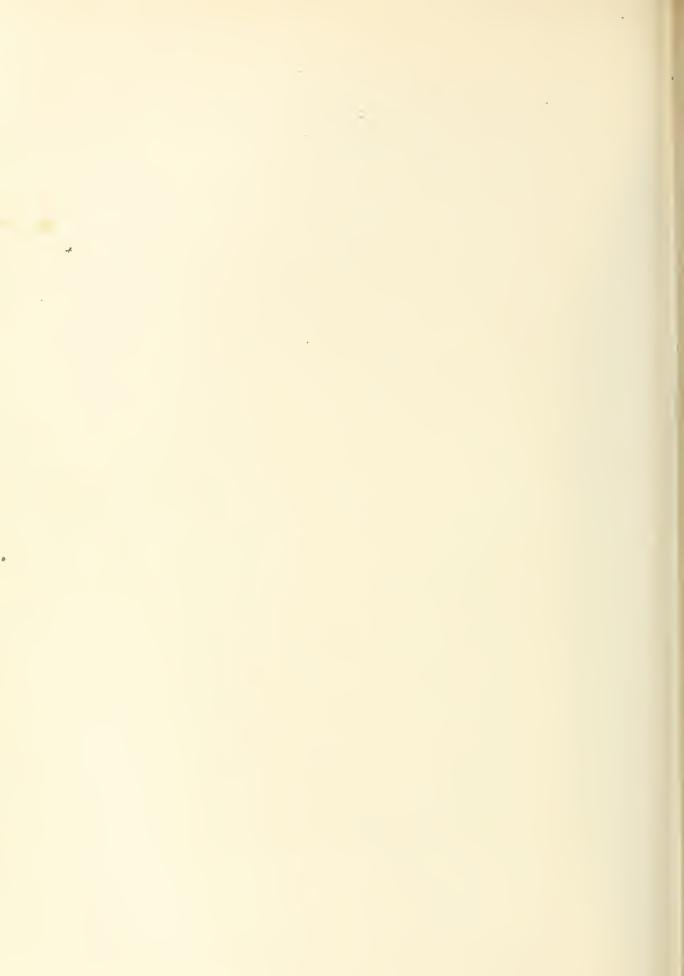

Lord Hill, an admirable subordinate and an excellent commander. The only English general whose name is a familiar one abroad was Picton, who died on the field. As to the quality of the respective armies, it has become the fashion of each nation to decry that of its own and overrate that of the other two. Thus they condone their own blunders, and yet heighten the renown of victory. Napoleon was superior in organization, in cavalry, and in artillery to either Wellington or Blücher, but he was inferior to both in infantry. He was in wretched health, and he had a desperate cause. Taking fully into account his consummate ability and personal prestige, it yet remains true that the odds against him were high, certainly as eight to five.

Ziethen's posts before Charleroi saw the French camp-fires in the early hours of June fourteenth; that evening they began to withdraw toward Fleurus, whither the remainder of the Prussian army was gradually set in motion. It seems incredible that this should have been the first move of the allies toward concentrating their widely scattered forces, for neither Wellington nor Blücher was completely surprised. Both commanders had for two days been aware, in a general way, of Napoleon's movements, but they were awaiting developments. It was Wellington's opinion, carefully set forth in his old age, that it would have been better strategy for the French to advance so as to turn his right, seize his munitions, and cut off his base; but as this would have rolled up the entire allied force, ready to deliver battle with odds of two to one, the statement may perhaps be accepted as an explanation, but certainly not as a justification.

In the dawn of the fifteenth a ringing, rousing proclamation, like those of the olden time, was read to the French soldiers, and it was in high spirits that the three columns began their march. The left, under Reille, dislodged the Prussian outposts from Thuin, and, forcing them back through Marchiennes, seized the bridge at that place, and crossed to the left bank of the Sambre. The movement was complete by ten in the morning. The center under Napoleon comprised the mass of the army; Pajol, Vandamme, Lobau, the guard, Excelmans, Kellermann, and Milhaud. Soult despatched his orders by a solitary aide, who broke his leg by a fall from his horse, and failed to deliver them. Though at equally critical moments before both Eylau and Wagram, Berthier had done as Soult did, with identical results, yet the latter was justly and severely blamed. Had Vandamme been found, the movements of the center would have been greatly accelerated, the speedy CHAP. XX capture of Charleroi would have enabled the third corps to reach Fleurus in time to intercept Ziethen, and thus the whole course of events would have been changed. The marshal's ill success was, therefore, as Napoleon called it, a "deplorable mischance," and it was high noon before Pajol, with the van, reached Charleroi and, after a smart engagement, drove out the Prussians. The right wing, under Gérard, was in motion at five in the morning, but it also was detained by a serious disaster. Shortly after starting it was found that Bourmont, the commander of its best division, a man who had been Chouan, imperialist, and royalist by turns, had deserted with his chief of staff and eight soldiers. Having been at the council of war, he had the latest information of Napoleon's secret plans, and his treason demoralized the troops he so basely abandoned. It was long before confidence could be restored; the crossing at Charleroi had been delayed too long, and it was nightfall when Gérard at last reached Châtelet, four miles below, secured the bridge, and crossed with only half his men. The campaign opened, if not in disaster, at least with only partial success.

COUNT MAXIMILIEN-SÉBASTIEN FOY

Æт. 45]

1815

CHAPTER XXI

LIGNY AND QUATRE BRAS

- Napoleon's Orders Ney's Failure to Seize Quatre Bras Wellington Surprised — Napoleon's Fine Strategy — The Meeting at Ligny — Blücher's Defeat — The Hostile Forces at Quatre Bras — Wellington Withdraws — Napoleon's Over-confidence — His Instructions to Grouchy — His Advance from Quatre Bras.
- CHAP. XXI DOR four hours after his arrival at Charleroi, Napoleon, uneasy as 1815 to the whereabouts of his detachments, stood in idleness waiting for news. During this interval the Prussians reached Fleurus unmolested, all except a small body, which gathered at Gosselies, on the Brussels road, but was easily dispersed by Reille. It seemed as if the road to Quatre Bras was open, and when, at half-past four, Ney appeared, he was put in command of the left, with verbal instructions. as Napoleon asserted some years later, to seize that strategic point. Within these limits he was to act independently. If Quatre Bras were surprised, the second move could be attempted, the surprise likewise of Sombreffe. Since the highway between the two was the only line by which the allied armies could quickly unite, the possibility of attacking them separately would be assured even if the successive attacks should follow each other so closely as to be substantially one battle. Either Ney misunderstood, or Napoleon recorded what he intended to say, not what he actually said. Colonel Heymès, Ney's chief of staff, declared that the Emperor's final words were, "Go, and drive back the enemy"; the Emperor asserted that his orders were positive, to go and hold Quatre Bras.

It is also a matter of dispute whether or not Napoleon had hoped, after seizing the bridges and crossing the Sambre, to complete his moveÆт. 45] ment by surprising both Quatre Bras and Sombreffe on that same day, CHAP. XXI the fifteenth. Had he done so Blücher might possibly have withdrawn 1815 to effect a junction with Wellington for the decisive conflict, and have thus thwarted Napoleon's strategy; but it is not likely, for that move, as finally executed, was the work not of Blücher but of Gneisenau; at this stage of the campaign the Prussians would probably have retreated toward Namur. Whatever may have been Napoleon's intention, Ney hurried to Gosselies, stationed Reille to hold the place, and then, despatching one division to pursue the Prussians, and another, with Piré's cavalry, toward Quatre Bras, put himself at the head of the cavalry of the guard to help in seizing this latter important point. But at seven his force, to their astonishment, was confronted by a strong body of Nassauers from Wellington's army, who, having passed Quatre Bras, had seized Frasnes, a village two and a half miles in advance. These made no stand, but Ney, instead of proceeding immediately to attack Quatre Bras itself, left his men to hold the position at Frasnes, and hurried away to consult his superior. For this he had excellent reasons: his staff was not yet organized, and d'Erlon's corps was not within call; he was therefore too weak for the movement contemplated by his orders. At the same moment Napoleon, who had been in the saddle since three in the morning, and who had become convinced that the retreating Prussians would not halt at Fleurus, but would rejoin their main army, turned back to Charleroi, and, on reaching his quarters an hour later, flung himself in utter exhaustion upon his couch. In fact, he was in exquisite torture from the complication of urinary, hemorrhoidal, and other troubles which his long day's ride had aggravated, and, as he declared at St. Helena, probably with truth, he had lost his The day had been fairly successful, but at assurance of final success. what a cost of energy! No one, he least of all, could feel that there had been any buoyancy in the movements, or favoring fate in the combinations of his armies.

Throughout the day Blücher had displayed a fiery zeal. Since early in May he had had no serious consultation with Wellington, and in a general conversation held at that time there had been merely a vague understanding as to a union at some point south of Sombreffe. That town was accordingly selected by him for concentration, and in general his orders had been well executed. Why the bridges of Marchiennes and Châtelet were not undermined and blown up by the Prussians has CHAP. XXI never been explained. Moreover, the language of Gneisenau's orders to Bülow being vague, the latter misinterpreted it, and his much-needed 1815 force was not brought in as expected. Wellington's conduct is a riddle. About the middle of the afternoon he was informed, through the Prince of Orange, as to his enemy's movements. With perfect calm, he commanded that his troops should be ready in their cantonments; at five he issued orders for the divisions to march with a view to concentration at Nivelles, the easternmost point that he intended to occupy; at ten, just as he was setting out for the Duchess of Richmond's ball, he gave definite instructions for the concentration to begin. These were his very first steps toward concentration, although twentyseven years later he made the unsupported assertion that he had ordered the Anglo-allied army to concentrate to the left, as Blücher had ordered the Prussians to concentrate to the right. As a matter of fact he was twenty-four hours behind Blücher in ordering his first defensive movements. This is not excused by the fact that his movement of concentration was completed somewhat earlier than Blücher's. About twenty minutes after the Prince of Orange had reached the ball-room Wellington sent him away quietly, and then, summoning the Duke of Richmond, who was to have command of the reserve when completely formed, he asked for a map. The two withdrew to an adjoining room. Wellington closed the door, and said, with an oath, "Napoleon has humbugged me." He then explained that he had ordered his army to concentrate at Quatre Bras, adding, "But we shall not stop him there; and if so, I must fight him here," marking Waterloo with his thumb-nail on the map as he spoke. It was not until the next morning that he left for the front. Though Napoleon, on the evening of the fifteenth, had neither Quatre Bras nor Sombreffe, he held all the debatable ground; and if, next morning, he could seize the two towns simultaneously, the first move in his great game would be won. It seems as if he must risk everything to that end.

What passed between Napoleon and Ney from midnight until two in the morning is unknown. There is no evidence that the Emperor expressed serious dissatisfaction, although he may have been exasperated. He was not exactly in a position to give his feelings vent. Whatever was the nature of their conversation, Ney was again at his post long before dawn, and not a soldier moved from Charleroi until nearly noon! It seems that Napoleon, or Ney, or both, must have been stubbornly con-

IN THE LOUVID.

TYPOGRAVERE BOUSSOD, VALADON & CO , PARIS.

OFFICER OF THE MOUNTED CHASSEURS CHARGING. (IMPERIAL GUARD).

TROM THE PAINING BY GEBICATIE.

vinced that Wellington could not concentrate within twenty-four hours. CHAP. XXI That Napoleon was not incapacitated by prostration is proved by his acts: about five he sent a preliminary order to Ney; very early, also, he took measures to complete Gérard's crossing at Châtelet; and then, having considered at length the alternatives of pushing straight on to Brussels, or of taking the course he did, he had reached a decision as early as seven o'clock. It seems almost certain that he delayed chiefly to get his troops well in hand, partly to give them a much needed rest. They had been seventeen hours afoot the previous day. Toward nine, believing that more of Ney's command was assembled than was yet the case, he sent a fretful order commanding the marshal to seize Quatre Bras, and stating that a semi-independent command, under Grouchy, would stand at Sombreffe, while he himself would hold Gembloux. This done, he settled into apparent lethargy. To Grouchy he wrote that he intended to attack the enemy at Sombreffe, and "even at Gembloux," and then to operate immediately with Ney "against the English." His scheme was able, for if at either salient angle, Quatre Bras or Sombreffe, his presence should be necessary, he could, at need, quickly join either Ney or Grouchy; but his senses must have been dulled. When informed that the enemy was at Fleurus in force, he hesitated long before resolving to move, behaving as if sure that the soldiers there were only a single corps of Blücher's army, which he could sweep away at his convenience. Meanwhile Vandamme had advanced. The Prussians withdrew from Fleurus, and deployed at the foot of the hillock on which the village of Ligny stands. When, about midday, Napoleon arrived at Fleurus, he had to experience the unpleasant surprise of finding a strong force ready to oppose him. Eighty-seven thousand men, all Blücher's army, except Bülow's corps and a part of Ziethen's, were drawn up in battle array to oppose him, and he was not yet ready to meet them, much as he had desired just such a contingency. He was not aware of the full strength of his enemy, but he was not sure of annihilating even those he believed to be in presence, for he had left ten thousand men at Charleroi, under Lobau, as a reserve, and the troops most available for strengthening his line were moving toward Quatre Bras.

By the independent action of their own generals a substantial force of several thousand Dutch-Belgians, virtually the whole of Perponcher's division, was concentrated at Quatre Bras early that same morn-

[ÆT. 45

CHAP. XXI ing. To be sure Wellington had simultaneously determined on the same step, but it was taken long before his orders arrived. Indeed, he 1815 seems to have reached Quatre Bras before his orderly. Searcely halting, he rapidly surveyed the situation and, leaving the troops in command of the Prince of Orange, rode away to visit Blücher. The two commanders met at about one o'clock in the windmill of Bry. They parted in the firm conviction that the mass of the French army was at Ligny, and with the verbal understanding that Wellington, if not himself attacked, would come to Blücher's support. On leaving, the English commander sharply criticized the tactical disposition of his ally's army; but Blücher, with the fixed idea that, in any case, the Duke was coming to his aid, determined to stand as he was. With similar obstinacy, Napoleon, still certain that what he had before him, although a great force, was only a screen for the retreat of the main army of the allies, now despatched an order (the second) for Ney to combine Reille, d'Erlon, and Kellermann, in order to destroy whatever force was in opposition at Quatre Bras. This was at two. The French attack was opened at half-past two by Gérard and Vandamme; the resistance was such as to leave no doubt of the real Prussian strength. This being clear, Napoleon immediately wrote two despatches of the same tenor-one he sent to Ney by an aide, and one to d'Erlon by a sub-officer of the guard. The former (the third for the same destination) urged Nev to come for the sake of France; the other summoned d'Erlon from Ney's command to the Emperor's own immediate assistance: "You will save France, and cover yourself with glory," were its closing words. This last order, the original of which has but lately been revealed, came nigh to ruining the whole day's work. Before Wellington could return to Quatre Bras, Ney's force was engaged with the Prince of Orange, and before three o'clock a fierce conflict was raging at that place. D'Erlon appears to have been in a frightful quandary as to his duty, and in his dilemma he detached his best division, that of Durutte, which did nothing to any purpose, neither assisting Ney, who did not literally obey his orders in consequence, nor coming to Napoleon's aid in time.

Blücher, who was determined to fight, come what would, had held in as long as his impatient temper permitted; but when no reinforcement from Wellington appeared, he first fumed, and then about six gave his fatal orders to prepare for the offensive. The nature of the ground was such as necessarily to weaken his center by the initial CHAP. XXI movements. Napoleon marked this at once, and summoned his guard in order to break through. For a moment the Emperor hesitated: a mysterious force had appeared on the left; perhaps they were foes. But when once assured that they were d'Erlon's men, he waited not an instant longer; at eight the erash came, and the Prussian line was shattered. Retreat was turned into a momentary rout so quickly that Blücher could not even exchange his wounded horse for another, and in the first mad rush he was so stunned and overwhelmed that his staff The few moments before he was found were the gave him up for lost. most precious for the allies of the whole campaign, since Gneisenau directed the flight northward on the line to Wavre, a route parallel with that on which Wellington, whatever his success, must now necessarily withdraw. This move, which abandoned the line to Namur, is Gneisenau's title to fame. The lines were quickly formed to carry it out, and the rest of the retrograde march went on with great steadiness. Napoleon did not wait until d'Erlon arrived and thereupon order an immediate, annihilating pursuit, but came to the conclusion that the Prussians were sufficiently disorganized, and would seek to reorganize on the old line to the eastward. They were thus, he thought, completely and finally cut off from Wellington. It was not until early next morning that he despatched Pajol, with his single cavalry corps, to follow the foe, for he was confirmed in his fatal conjecture by the false report of five thousand Prussians having been seen on the Namur road, and exerting themselves to hold it. The Prussians seen were merely a horde of stragglers. The truth was not known until next day.

Almost simultaneously with the battle of Ligny was fought that of Quatre Bras. At eleven Ney received orders outlining a general plan for the day; about half an hour later came the specific command to unite the forces of d'Erlon, Reille, and Kellermann, and carry Quatre Bras; at five arrived in hot haste the messenger with the third order. At two o'clock there were not quite seven thousand Anglo-Belgians in Quatre Bras, but, successive bodies arriving in swift succession, by halfpast six o'clock there were over thirty thousand. At two Ney had seventeen thousand men, and though he sought to recall d'Erlon, yet, owing to the withdrawal of Durutte, and to d'Erlon's indecision, he had at half-past six not more than twenty thousand. Not one of d'Erlon's men had reached him, and Gérard's division of Reille's corps had been Снар. XXI 1815 kept at Ligny. Had he advanced on the position the previous evening, or had he attacked between eleven and two on the sixteenth, the event of the campaign might have been different from what it was. But if he really believed, as Heymès afterward asseverated was the case, namely, that his orders were merely to push and hold the enemy, then his conduct throughout was gallant and correct. The weight of evidence favors the claim of Napoleon that the marshal was perverse in his refusal to take Quatre Bras according to verbal orders. Whatever the truth, the behavior of Ney's men was admirable when they did advance, but they were forced back to Frasnes before superior numbers.

Next morning Wellington was conversing with Colonel Bowles when a staff officer drew up, his horse flecked with foam, and whispered the news of Ligny. Without a change of countenance, the commander said to his companion : "Old Blücher has had a ---- good licking, and gone back to Wavre, eighteen miles. As he has gone back, we must go, too. I suppose in England they will say we have been licked. I can't help it; as they have gone back, we must go, too." Accordingly, he issued his orders, and his army began to march at ten. On the whole, therefore, the events of June sixteenth seemed favorable to Napoleon, since, fighting at two points with inferior numbers, he had been victorious at one, and had thereby secured the other also. We, of course, know that by Gneisenau's move this apparent success was rendered nugatory. It is useless to surmise what would have happened had Bülow been with Blücher, and d'Erlon and Lobau with Napoleon, or if either of these possibilities had happened without the other; as it was, Napoleon's strategy gained both Quatre Bras and Sombreffe.

The Prussians had lost twenty thousand men, missing, wounded, and dead, and it required vigorous treatment to restore Blücher. But all night the army marched, and in the morning Bülow, having found his direction, was near Beauderet and Sauvinières, within easy reach at Gembloux. The retreat continued throughout the seventeenth. It was a move of the greatest daring, since the line was over a broken country almost destitute of roads, and, the old base of supplies having been abandoned, the men had to starve until Gneisenau could secure another by way of Louvain. The army bore its hardships well; there was no straggling or demoralization, and the splendor of success makes doubly brilliant the move which confounded Napoleon's plans. Never dreaming at first that his foe had withdrawn elsewhere than

7

[ÆT. 45

, •

GEBHARD LEBERECHT VON BLÜCHER PRINCE OF WAHLSTADT along his natural line of supply toward Liège, the Emperor considered the separation of the two allies as complete, and after carefully deliberating throughout the long interval he allowed for collecting his troops and giving them a thorough rest, he determined to wheel, join Ney, and attack Wellington, wherever found. It was serious and inexplicable slackness which he showed in not taking effective measures to determine immediately where his defeated enemy was. Being, nevertheless, well aware of the Prussian resources and character, he made up his mind to detail Grouchy, with thirty-three thousand men, for the purpose of scouring the country toward Liège at least as far as Namur. Then, to provide for what he considered a possible contingency,— viz., that which had actually occurred,— this adjunct army was to turn north, and hasten to Gembloux, in order to assure absolutely the isolation of Wellington; in any and every case the general was to keep his communications with Napoleon open.

It was eight in the morning of the seventeenth when Napoleon issued from his quarters at Fleurus. Flahaut was waiting for the reply to an inquiry which he had just brought from Ney concerning the details The Emperor at once dictated a despatch, the most famous of Ligny. in the controversial literature of Waterloo, in which his own achievements were told and Ney was blamed for the disconnected action of his subordinates the previous day; in particular the marshal was instructed to take position at Quatre Bras, "as you were ordered," and d'Erlon was criticized for his failure to move on St. Amand. The wording of the hastily scribbled order to the latter he had probably forgotten; it was: "Portez-vous . . . à la hauteur de Ligny, et fondez sur St. Amand — ou vice versa; c'est ce que je ne sais bien." ("Betake yourself . . . to the heights of Ligny, pounce on St. Amand - or the reverse; I am not quite sure which.") Further, the Emperor now declared that, had Ney kept d'Erlon and Reille together, not an Englishman would have escaped, and that, had d'Erlon obeyed his orders, the Prussian army would have been destroyed. In case it were still impossible to seize Quatre Bras with the force at hand, Napoleon would himself move thither. Then, entering a carriage, he drove to Ligny; Lobau was ordered at once to Marbais, on the road to Quatre Bras. After haranguing the troops and prisoners, Napoleon was informed, about noon, that Wellington was still in position. At once a second order was sent, commanding Ney to attack; the Emperor, it ran, was

VOL. IV.- 25

CHAP. XXI

1815

Æт. 45]

CHAP. XXI 1815

already under way to Marbais. This was not quite true, for while he was giving detailed instructions to Grouchy before parting, that general had seemed uneasy, and had finally pleaded that it would be impossible further to disorganize the Prussians, since they had so long a start. These scruples were peremptorily put down, and the chief parted amicably from his subordinate, but with a sense of uneasiness, lest he had left nice and difficult work in unwilling hands. Scouts soon overtook him, and expressed doubt as to the Prussians having gone to Namur-In case they had not, Grouchy must act cautiously. Accordingly, positive instructions were then dictated to Bertrand, and sent to Grouchy, whose movements were now doubly important. The latter general was to reconnoiter toward Namur, but march direct to Gembloux; his chief task was to discover whether Blücher was seeking to join Wellington or not. For the rest, he was free to act on his own discretion.

Napoleon then entered his carriage, and drove to Quatre Bras. Mounting his horse, he led the pursuit of the English rear. Indignant that Ney had lost the opportunity to overwhelm at least a portion of Wellington's force, he exclaimed to d'Erlon, "They have ruined France !" But he said nothing to Ney himself. So active and energetic was the Emperor that he actually exposed himself to the artillery fire with which the English gunners sought to retard the pursuit. Tt was not an easy matter for Grouchy to carry out his instructions; at two o'clock began a steady downpour, which lasted well into the next morning; the roads to Gembloux were lanes, and the rain turned them into sticky mud. Not until that night was Grouchy's command assembled at Gembloux; it was ten o'clock before the leader gained an inkling of where the Prussians were, and then, though uncertain as to their exact movements, he immediately despatched a letter, received by Napoleon at two in the morning. The marshal explained that he would pursue as far as Wavre, so as to cut off Blücher from Brussels, and to separate him from Wellington. Some hours later, when finally convinced that the Prussians were retiring on Wavre, Grouchy set his columns in motion in a straight line toward that place by Sart-à-Walhain, choosing, with very poor judgment, to advance by the right bank of the Dyle, and thus jeopardizing the precious connections he had been repeatedly and urgently instructed to keep open.

CHAPTER XXII

THE EVE OF WATERLOO

Wellington's Choice of Position — State of the Two Armies — The Orders of Napoleon to Grouchy — Grouchy's Interpretation of Them — Napoleon Surprised by the Prussian Movements — His Inactivity — The Battle-Field — Wellington's Position — Napoleon's Battle Array — His Personal Health — His Plan.

N the night of June seventeenth Wellington's army reached the CHAP. XXII heights at Mont St. Jean, on the northern edge of what was des-1815 tined to be the most-talked-of battle-field in modern times. His retreat, masked by a strong body of cavalry, with some horse-artillery, and a single infantry division, had been slow and regular, being retarded somewhat by the heavy rain. Ney had held his position at Frasnes, well aware that what was before him was far more than a rear-guard-in fact, owing to the arrival of strong reinforcements during the night, it was the larger portion of the Anglo-Belgian army. But the instant the French marshal was informed of his enemy's retrograde movements he threw forward a strong force of cavalry to coöperate with Napoleon. When reunited, the French army numbered seventy-one thousand five hundred men, and two hundred and forty guns, excluding Gérard's division of the second corps, which had been left at Ligny to coöperate with That Wellington was far on his way to the defensive posi-Grouchy. tion chosen by himself was probably in accord with Napoleon's calculations; his only fear was lest his foe should have withdrawn behind the forest of Soignes, where free communication with Blücher and the junction of the two allied armies would be assured, as would not be the case at Mont St. Jean.

This anxiety was set at rest by a cavalry reconnaissance, and at dusk the French van bivouacked at Belle Alliance, separated by a CHAP. XXII broad, shallow vale from their foe. The rest of the army followed with 1815 great difficulty, some by the road, some through plowed or swampy fields, wading the swollen tributaries of the Dyle, and floundering through the meadows on their banks. The army of Wellington had seized, in passing, what provisions and forage they found, and they had camp-fires to comfort them in the steady rain. The French had scanty or no rations, and lay throughout the night in the grain-fields, without fire or shelter. All told, Wellington had sixty-eight thousand men; ten miles on his right, at Hal, lay eighteen thousand more; ten miles on his left, twelve from his headquarters at Waterloo, was Blü-Wellington, who had informed the Prussian commander that cher. unless support reached him he would fall back to Brussels, at two o'clock in the morning had assurance of Blucher's coöperation. There is an unsupported statement of Napoleon's that he twice sent to Grouchy on the night of the seventeenth, by two separate officers, a definite order to detach seven thousand men from his camp at Wavre (where the Emperor affected to believe that Grouchy was), and make connection by St. Lambert with the right of the main army. This would entirely cut off Blücher from Wellington. The motive of this statement is transparent — with the allies separated, they were outmanœuvered; with the possibility of their union, and an understanding between them to that effect, he was himself outmanœuvered.

Grouchy denied having received this order; neither of the officers intrusted with it ever revealed himself; the original of it has never been found; and in subsequent orders issued next day there is no mention of, or reference to, any such message. Either the declaration, twice made at St. Helena, was due to forgetfulness, being an account of intentions not carried out, or else it was put forward to explain the result of the campaign as due to his lieutenant's inefficiency. Grouchy must have had an uneasy conscience, since for thirty years he suppressed the text of the Bertrand order, which was not on the order-book because it had not been dictated to Soult; and when, after falsely claiming for the duration of an entire generation that he had acted under verbal instructions, he did publish it, he gave, at the same time, a mutilated version of his own report from Gembloux, sent on the night of the seventeenth, changing his original language so as to show that he had never looked upon the separation of the allies as his chief task, but that what was uppermost in his mind was an attack on the CHAP. XXII Prussians.

MARSHAL EMMANUEL, MARQUIS DE GROUCHY

FROM THE FAINTING BY JEAN-SÉBASTIEN BOULLARD

It was two in the morning of the eighteenth when the letter of Grouchy, written about four hours earlier, arrived at Napoleon's headquarters. Both the Emperor and Soult knew by that time that the whole of Blücher's army was moving to Wavre; yet they did not give this information, nor any minute directions, to the returning messenger. Grouchy, therefore, was left to act on his own discretion, his superior doubtless believing that the inferior would by that time himself be fully informed, and would hasten to throw himself, like an impenetrable wall, between the Prussians and the Anglo-Belgian army. By the defenders of Napoleon Grouchy is severely criticized for not having marched early in the morning of the eighteenth to Moustier, where, if energetic, he could have carried over his army to the left bank of the river by eleven o'clock, thus placing his force within the sphere of Napoleon's operations. Perhaps he would have been able to prevent the union of the opposing armies, or, if not that, to strengthen Napoleon in his struggle. It is proved by Marbot's memoirs that this is what Napoleon expected. On the other hand, excellent critics present other very important considerations: the line to Moustier was over a country so rough and miry that after a torrential rain the artillery would have been seriously delayed, and Prussian scouts might well have brought down a strong Prussian column in time to oppose the crossing there or elsewhere. Grouchy, moreover, could not know that Wellington would offer battle in front of the forest of Soignes - a resolution which, in the opinion of Napoleon and many lesser experts, was a serious blunder. He appears to have been positive that the two armies were aiming to combine for the defense of Brussels; finally, when from Walhain the sound of the firing at Waterloo was distinctly heard, and Gérard fiercely urged an immediate march toward the field of battle, Grouchy was acting strictly within the limits of the Bertrand order, and according to what he then held to be explicit instructions, when he pressed on to concentrate at Wavre, and thus, if Napoleon had already defeated Wellington, to prevent any union between Wellington and the Prussian army. It is almost certain that Grouchy would in no way have changed the event by marching direct to Mont St. Jean, for the cross-roads were soaked, his troops were already exhausted, and the distance was approximately fourteen and a half miles as the crow flies; the previous

VOL. IV.- 26

1815

CHAP. XXII day he had been able to make somewhat less than half that distance in nine hours.

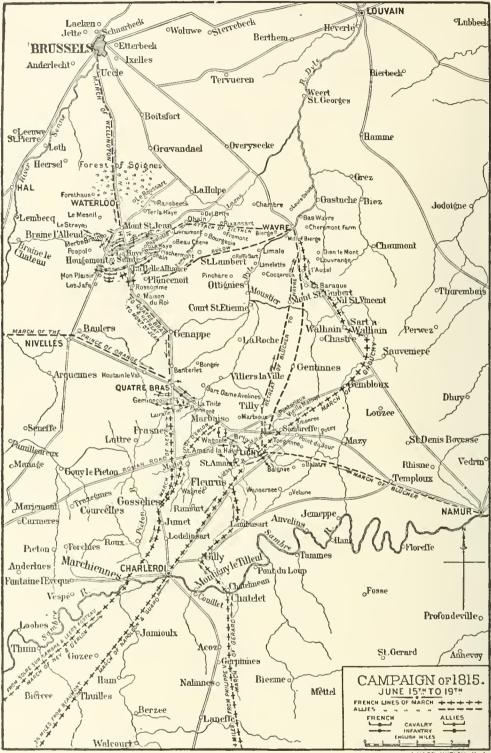

Napoleon himself did not apparently expect the Prussians to rally as they did. He spent the hours from dawn, when the rain ceased, in careful reconnoitering. The mud was so thick in places that he required help to draw his feet out of his own tracks. At breakfast, according to a contemporary anecdote, he expressed himself as having never been more favored by fortune; and when reminded that Blücher might effect a union with the English, he replied that the Prussians would need three days to form again. This opinion is in accord with his exaggerated but reiterated estimates of the disaster produced in Blücher's ranks after Ligny, and taken in connection with the difficulty of moving artillery, which is not a sufficient explanation in itself, affords the only conceivable reason for his delay in attacking on the eighteenth. It also explains his remissness in leaving Grouchy to exercise full discretion as to his movements. At eight the plan of battle was sketched; at nine the orders for the day were despatched throughout the lines; about ten the weary but self-confident Emperor threw himself down and slept for an hour; at eleven he mounted, and rode by the Brussels highway to the farm of Belle Alliance. It was probably during the Emperor's nap that Soult forwarded to Grouchy a despatch, marked ten in the morning, instructing that general to manœuver toward the main army by way of Wavre. Although, according to Marbot, Napoleon expected Grouchy in the afternoon by way of Moustier, at one o'clock a second despatch, of which the Emperor certainly had cognizance, was forwarded to Grouchy, expressing approval of his intention to move on Wavre by Sart-à-Walhain, but instructing him "always to manœuver in our direction." The postscript of this second order enjoins haste, since it was thought Bülow was already on the heights of St. Lambert.

The one central idea of Napoleon and Soult was clearly to leave a wide discretion for Grouchy, provided always that he kept his communications with the main army open, and that his general direction was one which would insure easy connection, in order either to cut off or check the Prussians. But, however this may be, the hours of Napoleon's inactivity were precious to his enemies; by twelve Bülow was at St. Lambert, and at the same hour two other Prussian corps were leaving Wavre. These movements were apparently tardy, but Gneisenau, feeling that Wellington had been a poor reliance at Ligny, and CHAP. XXII very much doubting whether he really intended to stand at Waterloo, was unwilling that Blücher should despatch his troops until it was certain that the Prussian army would not again be left in the lurch. Should the Anglo-Dutch retreat to Brussels, the Prussians must either retreat by Louvain, or be again defeated. Anxiety was not dispelled until the roar of cannon was heard between eleven and twelve. Then the Prussians first exerted themselves to the utmost; it was about four when they were within striking distance, ready to take Napoleon's army on its flank. When Grouchy reached Wavre, at the same hour, he found there but one of Blücher's corps, the rear under Thielemann.

From Belle Alliance Napoleon returned, and took his station on the height of Rossomme. In front was a vale something less than a mile in width. The highway stretched before him in a straight line until it skirted the large farmstead of La Haye Sainte on the opposite side; then, ascending by a slant to the first crest, it passed the hamlet of Mont St. Jean, only to ascend still higher to the top of the ridge before falling again into a second depression. At Mont St. Jean was Wellington's center. The road from Nivelles to Brussels crosses the valley about a quarter of a mile westward, and on it, midway between the two slopes, lay another farmhouse, with its barns, that of Hougomont. More than half a mile eastward, in the direction from which the Prussians were expected, lay scattered the farm buildings of Papelotte, La Haye, Smohain, and Frischermont. The valley was covered with rich crops. Unobstructed by ditches or hedges, it was eut longitudinally about the middle by a cruciform ridge, with spurs reaching toward Belle Alliance on one side, and past Hougomont on the other; the road passed by a cut through the longitudinal arm. Hougomont was almost a fortress, having strong brick walls and a moat; it stood in a large orchard, which was surrounded by a thick hedge. The house at La Have Sainte was brick also, and formed one side of a quadrangle, inclosed further by two brick barns and a strong wall of the same material; though not as large or solid as Hougomont, it was a strong advance redoubt for Mont St. Jean.

The right and center of Wellington were thus well protected, the left was admirably screened by the places already enumerated. His army was deployed in three lines, the front plainly visible to the French, the second partly concealed by the crest of the hill, and the ad-.

ÆT. 45]

J. HART NUTLEY N. J.

· ·

NAPOLEON AND THE OLD GUARD BEFORE WATERLOO

THE EVE OF WATERLOO

third entirely so. His headquarters were two miles north, at Water- CHAP. XXII loo; his lines of retreat, though broken by the forest of Soignes, were open either toward Wavre or toward the sea. The latter line was well protected by the troops at Hal. Uneasy about the character of his Dutch-Belgian troops, the duke had carefully disposed them among the reliable English and Germans, in order to preclude the possibility of a panic.

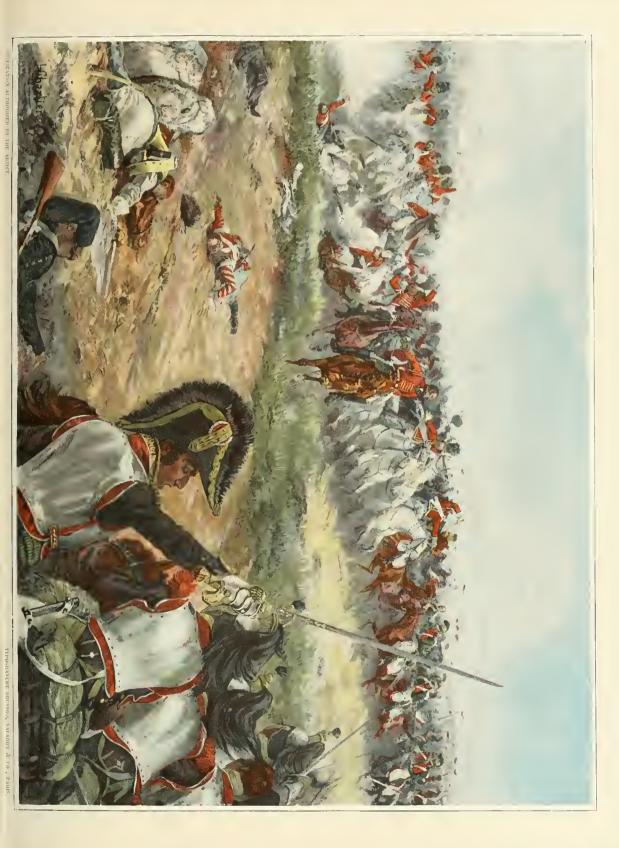

In the foreground of Napoleon's position was the French army, also deployed in three lines. The front, extending from the mansion of Frischermont to the Nivelles road, consisted of two infantry corps, one on each side of Belle Alliance, and of two corps of cavalry, one on the extreme right wing, one on the left; of this line Ney had command. The second was shorter, its wings being cavalry, and its center in two divisions, of cavalry and infantry respectively. The third, or reserve, was the guard. Each of the lines had its due proportion of artillery, stationed in all three along the road. This disposition gave the French array, as seen from beyond, a fan-like appearance, the sticks, or columns, converging toward the rear. The array was brilliant; every man and horse was in sight; the number was superior by about four thousand to that of the enemy; the ground was, by eleven, almost dry enough to secure the fullest advantage from superiority in artillery; deserters from the foe came in from to time. Surely the moral effect of such a scene upon the somewhat motley throng across the valley must be very powerful. Yet the road to Charleroi was the single available line of retreat, and it passed through a deep cut; the soldiers were tired and not really first-rate, fifty per cent. of the line being recruits, and nearly a quarter of the guard untrained men; the tried officers had all been promoted, and those who replaced them needed such careful watching that deep formations had been adopted, and these must not merely diminish the volume of fire, but present vulnerable targets; the cavalry had been hastily gathered, and was far from being as efficient as the British veterans or the German legion.

For some moments after reaching his position Napoleon stood impassive. He was clad in his familiar costume of cocked hat and gray Throughout his lines he had been received with enthusiasm, surtout. and his presence was clearly magnetic, as of old. The direction of affairs in this momentous crisis was his, and he dreamed of two implacable enemies routed, of appeasing the two who were less directly

ÆT. 45]

CHAP. XXII interested, of glory won, of empire regained. Reason must have told 1815 him how empty was such a vision; for, since the armistice of Poischwitz, Austria and Russia had been quite as bitter, and more tortuous, than the other powers. His expression mirrored pain, both physical and intellectual; his over-confidence and consequent delay were signs of degenerate power; his exertions for three days past had been beyond any human strength, especially when the faculties of body and mind had previously been harassed for more than two months, as his had been.

> It was the first day of the week, but there was a calm more profound than that of the Sabbath; the sky was dull, the misty air was heavy with summer heat; but there was the expectant silence of a great host, the deep determination of two grim and obstinate armies. Wellington, with his western lines protected, would be safe when the Prussian army should appear where he knew its van already was, and he must manœuver eastward to keep in touch. Napoleon must crush the British center and left, and roll up the line to its right, in order to separate the parts of his dual foe. To this end he had determined to make a feint against Hougomont; should Wellington throw in his reserves at that point on his right, one strong push might create confusion among the rest, and hurl the whole force westward, away from Brussels. It was a simple plan, great in its simplicity, as had been every strategic conception of Napoleon from the opening of the campaign. But its execution was like that of every other movement attempted since the first great march of concentration — tardy, slack, and feeble. Personal bravery was abundant among the French, but the orderly coöperation of regiment, division, and corps in all the arms, the courage of self-restraint, and the self-sacrifice of individuals in organized movement, with the invigorating ubiquity of a master mindthese were lacking from the first.

CHAPTER XXIII

WATERLOO

HOUGOMONT-LA HAYE SAINTE-D'ERLON REPULSED-NEY'S CAVALRY ATTACK-NAPOLEON'S ONE CHANCE LOST-PLANCENOIT-UNION OF Wellington and Blücher-Napoleon's Convulsive Effort-Charge of the Guard-The Rout-Napoleon's Flight.

APOLEON'S salute to Wellington was a cannonade from a hun- CHAP. XXIII dred and twenty guns. The fire was directed toward the enemy's 1815 center and left, but it was ineffectual, except as the smoke partially masked the first French movement, which was the attack on Hougomont by their left, the corps of Reille. This was in three divisions, commanded respectively by Bachelu, Foy, and the Emperor's brother Jerome, whose director was Guillemenot. Preceded by skirmishers, the column of Jerome gained partial shelter in a wood to the southwest of their goal, but the resistance to their advance was vigorous; on the skirts of the grove were Nassauers, Hanoverians, and a detachment of the English guards, all picked men, and behind, on higher ground, was an English battery. The two other divisions pressed on behind, and for a time their gains were apparently substantial. But. checked in front by artillery fire, and by a murderous fusillade from loopholes cut in the walls of Hougomont, the besiegers hesitated. Their fiery energy was not scientifically directed; but such was their zeal, and so great were their numbers, that one brigade doubled on the rear of the fortalice, drove back the English guards from before the entrance to the courtyard on the north, and charged for the opening. Some of the French actually forced a passage, and the success of Napoleon's first move was in sight when five gallant Englishmen, by sheer physical strength, shut the stout gate in the face of the assailants. A fearless French grenadier scaled the wall, but he and his CHAP. XXIII comrades within were killed. A second assault on the same spot 1815 failed; so, too, a third from the west, and still another from the east, all of which were repelled by the Euglish guards, who moved down from above, and drove the French into the wood, where they held their own. These close and bloody encounters were contrary to Reille's orders, but in the thick of combat his various detachments could not be restrained.

> The second division of the battle was the main attack on Wellington's left by d'Erlon's corps. Between twelve and one a Prussian hussar was captured with a message from Blücher to Wellington announcing the Prussian advance. At once the postscript was added to the second despatch to Grouchy, already mentioned, and Napoleon made ready for his great effort. Unable to sit his horse, he had dismounted, and, seated at the table on which his map was spread, had been frequently seen to nod and doze. Ney and d'Erlon, left to their own judgment, had evolved a scheme of formation so complex that when tried, as it now was, it proved unworkable. The confusion was veiled by a terrific, continuous, and destructive artillery fire. After some delay, and a readjustment involving preparations against the possible flank attack of the Prussians, d'Erlon's corps advanced in four columns, under Donzelot, Allix, Marcognet, and Durutte respectively. Opposed was Picton's decimated corps, with Bylandt's Dutch-Belgian brigade, which had been all along a target for the strongest French battery, one of seventy-eight guns, and was now to bear the first onset of the French troops. Bylandt's men had stood firm under the awful artillery fire, but their uniforms were like those of the French, and in a mêlée this fact might draw upon them the fire of their own associates, as later in the day at Hougomont it actually did, and they grew very uneasy. Durutte, on the extreme right, seized Papelotte, but lost it almost immediately. The conflict then focused about La Haye Sainte, where the garden and orehard were seized by an overwhelming force. The buildings had been inadequately fortified, but Major Baring, with his garrison, displayed prodigies of valor, and held them.

> The assailants, supported hitherto by batteries firing over their heads, now charged up the hill; as they reached the crest, their own guns were silenced, but their yells of defiance rent the air. The Dutch-Belgians of the first rank harkened an instant, and, followed by the jeers and menaces of the British grenadiers and Royal Scots, fled

·

·

-

-

SIR THOMAS PICTON From the enorating by P, termer of the poptraip by M, A, BHER

WATERLOO

incontinently until they reached a place of safety, when they reformed CHAP. XXIII and stood. Picton was thus left unsupported, but at that decisive 1815 moment Donzelot tried the new tactics again, and his ranks fell into momentary confusion. Picton charged, the British artillery opened, and though the English general fell, mortally wounded, his men hurled back This first success enabled Wellington to bring in his the French. infantry, and to throw in his cavalry against a body of French riders, under Roussel, which; having swept the fields around La Have Sainte, was now coming on. His order was for Somerset and Ponsonby to The shock was terrific, the French cavalry yielded, and the charge. whole of d'Erlon's line rolled back in disorder. Efforts were made by the daring Englishmen to create complete confusion, but they were not entirely successful, for Durutte's column maintained its formation. This ended the effort upon which Napoleon had based his hope of success; there was still desultory fighting at Hougomont, and the Prussians, though not visible, were forming behind the forest of Paris.

There was a long and ominous pause before the next renewal of conflict. Wellington used it to repair his shattered left, Napoleon to form a corps, under Lobau, intended to repel the flank attack of the Prussians. Ney was determined to redeem his repulse by a second front attack, and Napoleon, either by word or silence, gave consent. While the batteries kept up their fire, the marshal gathered in the center the largest mass of horsemen which had ever charged on a European battle-field — twelve thousand men, light and heavy cavalry. His aim was to supplement Reille, still engaged at Hougomont, and dash in upon the allied right center. Donzelot's column, now reformed, was hurled directly against La Haye Sainte, and the mass of the cavalry surged up the hill. The gunners of Wellington's artillery, unprotected even by breastworks, stood to their pieces until the attacking line was within forty yards; then they delivered their final salvo, and fled. Wavering for an instant, the French advanced with a cheer. Before them stood the enemy in hollow squares, four ranks deep, the front kneeling, the second at the charge, the two others ready to fire. The horsemen dared not rush on those bristling lines. In and out among the serried ranks they flowed and foamed, discharging their pistols and slashing with their sabers, until, discouraged by losses and exhausted by useless exertion, their efforts grew feeble. Dubois's brigade, according to a doubtful tradition, dashed in ignorance over the VOL. IV.-27

Æт. 45]

CHAP. XXIII brow of a certain shallow ravine, men and horses rolling in horrid confusion into the unsuspected pit. The hollow was undoubtedly there 1815 at the time, although it has since been filled up, and, it is believed, was likewise the grave of the fifteen hundred men and two thousand horses that were eventually collected from round about. The British reserve cavalry, supported by the infantry fire and a few hastily collected batteries, completed the defeat of Ney's first charge. A second was repulsed in the same way. The undaunted marshal then waited for reinforcements. No fewer than thirty-seven squadrons came in, Napoleon sending Kellermann's heavy dragoons as a last resort. Guyot's division of the heavy cavalry of the guard was also there — some say they had been summoned by Ney, others that they came of their own accord; the question arises because, in the next stage of the battle, their absence from the station assigned to them was a serious matter. Another time, and still another, this mighty force moved against the foe. Pouring in and out, backward and forward, among the squares, they lost cohesion and force until, in the very moment of Wellington's extremity, they withdrew, as before, exhausted and spent.

The energy and zeal of the English commander were in strange contrast to Napoleon's growing apathy; but Wellington was now at the end of his resources. It was six, and to his repeated messages calling for Blücher's aid there had been no response. He was face to face with defeat. Baring had held La Haye Sainte with unsurpassed gallantry; his calls for men had been answered, but his requisitions for ammunition were strangely neglected. Ney, seeing how vain his cavalry charges were, withdrew before the last one took place, arrayed Bachelu's division, collected a number of field-pieces, and fell furiously, with cannonade and bayonet charge, upon the farm-house. His success was complete; the garrison fled, his pursuit was hot, and, leading in person, he broke through the opposing line at its very heart. Had he been supported by a strong reserve, the battle would have been won. Müffling, Wellington's Prussian aide, dashed away to the Prussian lines, and as he drew near the head of Ziethen's division shouted : "The battle is lost if the corps do not press on and at once support the English army." Ney's adjutant, demanding infantry to complete the breach he had made, was received by Napoleon with petulance. One brigade from Bülow's corps had attacked at about half-past four; repulsed at first, their onset was growing fiereer, for two other brigades had come in.

WATERLOO

Soult had opposed Ney's waste of cavalry. But the latter was des- CHAP. XXIII perate, and with the other generals was displaying a wilfulness bordering on insubordination. A portion of the guard had just been detached for Lobau's support. To Ney's demand for infantry the Emperor replied : "Where do you expect me to get them from? Am I to make them?" Had the old Bonaparte spirit moved the chieftain to put himself at the head of what remained of the guard infantry, and to make a desperate dash for Ney's support, a temporary advantage would almost certainly have been won; then, with a remnant flushed by victory, he could have turned to Lobau's assistance before the main Prussian army came in. Thus was lost Napoleon's one chance to deal Wellington a decisive blow.

It was to prevent a dangerous flank movement of the enemy-the advance, namely, of Bülow, with the cavalry corps of Prince William, upon Plancenoit — that Napoleon had detached the young guard, under Duhesme, a third of his precious reserve, for the support of Lobau's right; Durutte being in the rear of his left, that portion was already as strong as it could be made. Nevertheless the Prussians seized Plancenoit; at once the French rallied, and drove them out; Blücher threw in eight fresh battalions, and these, with the six already engaged, dashed for the ravine leading to the village. The passage was lined with French, and for a time it was like the valley of Hinnom; but the Prussians pressed on, and the young guard reeled. Napoleon sent in two battalions of the old guard, under Morand; their firmness restored that of their comrades, and the place was cleared, two thousand dead remaining as the victims of that furious charge and countercharge. At seven Bülow was back again in his first position, awaiting the arrival of Pirch's corps to restore his riddled ranks. Napoleon had now left only twelve of the twenty-three battalions of the guard reserve, less than six thousand men. Wellington had repaired the breach made by Ney, and, though still hard pressed on his right, Ziethen had made good the strength of his left, some of his cavalry having been detached to repair other weak spots in the line. At this moment Ziethen conceived that Bülow was further giving way, and hesitated in his advance. The brief interval was noted by Durutte, and with a last desperate effort he carried Papelotte, La Haye, and Smohain, hoping to prevent the fatal juncture. It was half an hour before Ziethen retrieved his loss, and thus probably saved Wellington's left. By that time Pirch had

199

CHAP. XXIII come up, and with this reinforcement Bülow, behind the heavy fire of his powerful batteries, charged Lobau, and advanced on the guard at Plancenoit. Lobau, the hero of Aspern, stood like a rock until Durutte's men and the remnants of d'Erlon's corps, flying past his flank, induced a panic in his ranks. Thereupon the whole French right fell into confusion: all except the guard, who stood in the churchyard of Plancenoit until surrounded and reduced in number to about two hundred and fifty men; then, under Pelet's command, they formed a square, placed their eagle in the midst, drove off the cavalry which blocked their path, and reached the main line of retreat with scarcely enough men to keep their formation.

Before the combined armies of Wellington and Blücher the French could not stand; but, in spite of inferior numbers and the manifest signs of defeat, General Bonaparte might have conducted an orderly The case was different with Napoleon the Emperor, even retreat. though he were now a liberator; to retreat would have been merely a postponement of the day of reckoning. Accordingly, the great adventurer, facing his destiny on the height at Rossomme, determined, in a last desperate effort, to retrieve the day, and stake all on a last cast of the dice. For an instant he appears to have contemplated a change of front, wheeling for that purpose by Hougomont, where his resistance was still strong; but he finally decided to crush the Anglo-Belgian right, if possible; roll up both armies into a confused mass, so that, perchance, they might weaken rather than strengthen each other; and then, with Grouchy's aid, strike for victory. Though indifferent to Nev's demands, he had set in array against Bülow the very choicest troops of his army; surely they might stand firm while his blow elsewhere was delivered. But he did not reckon in this with Wellington's reserve power; though the dramatic stories of the Duke's mortal anxiety rest on slight foundation, there is no doubt that he felt a great relief when the Prussians entered the combat, for immediately he turned his attention, not to rest, but to the reforming of his line. Officers and men, English or German, knew nothing of Bülow's or Blücher's whereabouts when Napoleon took his resolution; but, sensible of having been strengthened, they displayed at half-past seven that evening the same grim determination they had shown at eleven in the morning. Though Wellington's task of standing firm until Blücher's arrival was accomplished, and though, perhaps, his soldiers

[ÆT. 45

THE RAVINE AT WATERLOO PROM THE PARTING IN V. CHECA

PUBLICATION AUTHORIZED BY THE A

WATERLOO

heard the distant firing of the Prussian guns, yet nothing could be CHAP. XXIII scen across the long interval, the noise attracted little attention, and 1815 neither he nor they could know what was yet before them. It was, therefore, splendid courage in general and army which kept them ever ready for any exertion, however desperate.

Against this army, in this temper, Napoleon despatched what was left of that force which was the peculiar product of his life and genius, the old and middle guard. Most of its members were the children of peasants, and had been born in ante-Revolution days. Neither intelligent in appearance nor graceful in bearing, they nevertheless had the look of perfect fighting-machines. Their huge bearskin caps and long mustaches did not diminish the fierceness of their aspect. They had been selected for size, docility, and strength; they had been well paid, well fed, and well drilled; they had, therefore, no ties but those to their Emperor, no homes but their barracks, and no enthusiasm but their passion for imperial France. They would have followed no leader unless he were distinguished in their system of life; accordingly, Ney was selected for that honor; and as they came in proud confidence up the Charleroi road, their Emperor passed them in review. Like every other division, they had been told that the distant roar was from Grouchy's guns; when informed that all was ready for the finishing-stroke, that there was to be a general advance along the whole line, and that no man was to be denied his share in certain victory, even the sick, it is said, rose up, and hurried into the ranks. The air seemed rent with their hoarse cheers as their columns swung in measured tread diagonally across the northern spur of the cruciform elevation which divided the surface of the valley.

Wellington, informed of the French movement, as it is thought by a deserter, issued hurried orders to the center, ordered Maitland's brigade to where the charge must be met, and posted himself, with Napier's battery, somewhat to its right. While yet his words of warning were scarcely uttered, the head of the French column appeared. The English batteries belched forth a welcome; but although Ney's horse, the fifth that day, was shot, the men he led suffered little, and with him on foot at their side they came steadily onward. The British guards were lying behind the hill-crest, and the French could discern no foe —only a few mounted officers, of whom Wellington was one. Astonished and incredulous, the assailants pressed steadily on until within

Æт. 45]

CHAP. XXIII twenty yards of the English line. "Up, guards! make ready!" rang out

<sup>1815</sup> the duke's well-known call. The British jumped up and fired · about three hundred of Ney's gallant soldiers fell. But there was no confusion; on both sides volley succeeded volley, and this lasted until the British charged. Then, and then only, the French withdrew. Simultaneously Donzelot had fallen upon Alten's division; but he was leading a forlorn hope, and making no impression.

As Ney fell back, a body of French cuirassiers advanced upon the English batteries. Their success was partial, and behind them a second column of the guard was formed. Again the assault was renewed; but the second attempt fared worse than the first. To the right of Maitland, Adam's brigade, with the Fifty-second regiment, had taken stand; wheeling now, these drove a deadly flank fire into the advaneing French, while the others poured in a devastating hail of bullets The front ranks of the French replied with spirit, but from the front. when the British had completed their manœuver, Colborne gave the order, his men cheered in response, and the countercharge began. "Vive l'Empereur!" came the responsive cheer from the thinning ranks of the assailants, and still they came on. But in the awful crash they reeled, confusion followed, and almost in the twinkling of an eye the rout began. A division of the old guard, the two battalions under Cambronne, retreated in fair order to the center of the valley, where they made their last gallant stand against the overwhelming numbers of Hugh Halkett's German brigade. They fought until but a hundred and fifty survived. From far away the despairing cry of "Sauve qui peut!" seemed to ring on their ears. To the first summons of surrender the leader had replied with dogged defiance; the second was made soon after, about three in the afternoon, and to this he yielded. He and his men filed to the English rear without a murmur, but in deep dejection. This occurrence has passed into tradition as an epic event; what Cambronne might well have said, "The guard dies, but never surrenders," was not uttered by him, but it epitomizes their character, and in the phrase which seems to have been shouted by the men themselves in their last desperate struggle, they and their leader have found immortality.

The last charge of what remained of the guard took place almost at the moment when Durutte was finally routed. Wellington then sent in the fresh eavalry brigades of Vivian and Vandeleur against the column of Donzelot and the remnants of the French cavalry. CHAP. XXIII These swept all before them, and then the duke gave the order for a 1815 general advance. The French left fell into panie, and fled toward Belle Alliance. Before La Haye Sainte stood two squares of French soldiers, the favored legion chosen to protect the imperial headquarters. In the fatal hour it splendidly vindicated the choice, and amid the chaos stood in perfect order. Throughout the famous charge of his devoted men Napoleon rode hither and thither, from Rossomme to Belle Alliance. His looks grew dark, but at the very last he called hoarsely to the masses of disorganized troops that came whirling by, bidding them to stand fast. All in vain; and as the last square came on he pressed inside its serried wall. It was not too soon, for the Prussians had now joined the forward movement, and in the supreme disorder consequent the other square dissolved. Napoleon's convoy withstood the shock of a charge from the Twelfth British light dragoons, and again of a Prussian charge at Rossomme, where Gneisenau took up the fierce pursuit. Though assaulted, and hard beset by musketry, the square moved silently on. There were no words except an occasional remark addressed by Napoleon to his brother Jerome, or to one of the officers. At eleven Genappe was reached; there, such was the activity of the pursuers, all hope of an orderly retreat vanished, and the square melted away. Napoleon had become an object of pity - his eyes set, his frame collapsed, his great head rolling in a drowsy stupor. Monthyon and Bertrand set him as best they could upon a horse, and, one on each side, supported him as they rode. They had an escort of forty men. At Quatre Bras they despatched a messenger to summon Grouchy, bidding him to retire on Namur. The Prussians were only one hour behind. At daybreak the hunted Emperor reached Charleroi, but his attendants dared not delay; two rickety carriages were secured, and it was not until the wretched caravan reached Philippeville that the fugitives obtained a few hours' repose.

.

•

WATERLOO

Æт 45]

CHAPTER XXIV

THE SURRENDER

NATURE OF NAPOLEON'S DEFEAT—ITS POLITICAL CONSEQUENCES—NA-POLEON'S FATAL RESOLUTION—THE STATE OF PARIS—NAPOLEON AT THE ÉLYSÉE—HIS DEPARTURE FOR ROCHEFORT—THOUGHTS OF RE-TURN—PROCRASTINATION—WILD SCHEMES OF FLIGHT—A REFUGE IN ENGLAND—HIS ONLY RESOURCE—THE WHITE TERROR AND THE ALLIES.

CHAP. XXIV THE battle of Waterloo is so called because Wellington's despatch to England was dated from his headquarters at that place. 1815 Tt was not great by reason of the numbers engaged, for on the side of the allies were about a hundred and thirty thousand men, on the other seventy-two thousand approximately; nor was there any special brilliancy in its conduct. Wellington defended a strong position well and carefully selected. But he wilfully left himself with inferior numbers; he did not heartily coöperate with Blücher; both were unready; Gneisenau was suspicious; and the battle of Ligny was a Prussian blunder. Napoleon committed, between dawn and dusk of June eighteenth, a series of petty mistakes, each of which can be explained, but not excused. He began too late; he did not follow up his assaults; he did not retreat when beaten; he could attend to only one thing at a time; he failed in control of his subordinates; he was neither calm nor alert. His return from Elba had made him the idol of the majority in France, but his conduct throughout the Hundred Days was that of a broken man. His genius seemed bright at the opening of his last campaign, but every day saw the day's task delayed. His great lieutenants grew uneasy and untrustworthy, though, like his patient, enduring, and gallant men, they displayed prodigies of personal valor. Ney and Grouchy used their discretion, but it was the discretion of caution, most unlike

IN THE MUSEUM OF VERSAULLES

ENGRAVED BY E. HEINEMANN

MARSHAL GUILLAUME-MARIE-ANNE, COUNT DE BRUNE FROM FRE PORTRAIT EN BATTAILLE, AFTER MME, DENDIST

.

THE SURRENDER

that of Desaix at Marengo, or of Ney himself at Eylau. Their igno- CHAP. XXIV rance cannot be condoned; Grouchy's decision at Walhain, though jus-1815 tified in a measure by Soult's later order, was possibly the immediate cause of final disaster. But such considerations do not excuse Napoleon's failure to give explicit orders, nor his nervous interference with Nev's formation before Quatre Bras, nor his deliberate iterations during his captivity that he had expected Grouchy throughout the battle. Moreover, the interest of Waterloo is connected with its immediate and dramatic consequences rather than with its decisive character. If Napoleon had won on that day, the allies would have been far from annihilation; both Wellington and Blücher had kept open their respective lines of retreat. The national uprising of Europe would have been more determined than ever: 1815 would have been but a repetition Finally, the losses, though terrible, were not unparalleled. of 1814. Grouchy won at Wavre, and, hearing of the disaster at Mont St. Jean, first contemplated falling on the Prussian rear as they swept onward in pursuit. But he quickly abandoned this chimerical idea, and on receipt of Napoleon's order from Quatre Bras, withdrew to Namur, and thence, by a masterly retreat, conducted his army back into France. Including those who fell at Wavre, the allies lost about twenty-two thousand five hundred men, of whom seven thousand were British and a like number Prussians. The records at Paris are very imperfect, but they indicate that the French losses were about thirty-one thousand.

The booty captured after Waterloo was unimportant; but the political spoils were immense, and they belonged to the Prussians. Their high expectation of seizing Napoleon's person was disappointed; but the one great result—the realization, namely, of all the tyrannical plans formed at Vienna for the humiliation of liberal France—that, they secured by their instant, hot pursuit. It is hard to discern the facts in the dust of controversy. Prussia, Austria, Russia, and Great Britain have each the national conviction of having laid the Corsican specter; France is still busy explaining the facts of her defeat; the most conspicuous monument on the battle-field is that to the Dutch-Belgians!

After a short rest at Philippeville, Napoleon composed the customary bulletins concerning his campaign, and despatched them to the capital, together with a letter counseling Joseph to stand firm and keep the legislature in hand. If Grouchy had escaped, he wrote, he could already array fifty thousand men on the spot; with the means at hand, Vol. IV.-28

Æт. 45]

CHAP. XXIV he could soon organize a hundred and fifty thousand; the troops in regimental depots, together with the national guard, would raise the 1815 number to three hundred thousand. These representations were based on a habit of mind, and not on genuine conviction. He believed Grouchy's force to have been annihilated, and though he paused at Laon as if to reorganize an army, he went through the form of consulting such officers as he could collect, and then, under their advice, pressed on to The officers urged that the army and the majority of the peo-Paris. ple were loyal, but that the aristocracy, the royalists, and the liberal deputies were utterly untrustworthy. "My real place is here," was the response. "I shall go to Paris, but you drive me to a foolish course." This was the voice of reason, but he obeyed the behest of inclination. Yet he halted at the threshold, and, entering the city on the night of June twenty-first, made no public announcement of his presence. On the contrary, he almost slunk into the silent halls of the Élysée, where a sleepy attendant or two received the unexpected guest without realizing what had happened. He must have felt that the moral effect of Waterloo had been his undoing; unlike any other of his defeats, it had not ruined him as general alone, nor as ruler alone: his prestige as both monarch and soldier was gone.

The news of Ligny had been received in the city with jubilations; at the instant of Napoleon's arrival the truth about Mont St. Jean was passing all too swiftly on the thousand tongues of rumor from quarter to quarter throughout the town, creating consternation everywhere. Early in the morning, Davout, fully aware of public sentiment, and true to his instincts, advised the shrinking Emperor to prorogue the chambers, and throw himself on the army; Carnot believed the public safety required a dictatorship, and urged it; Lucien was strongly of the same opinion. But the old Napoleon was no more; vacillating almost as if in partial catalepsy, murmuring empty phrases in quick, indistinct utterance, he refused to decide. Members of the Council began to gain admittance, and, waxing bolder as Napoleon grew more silent, the word "abdication" was soon on every tongue. At last a decision was taken, and such a one! Lucien was sent to parley with the enambers, and Fouché was summoned. The latter, with insidious eloquence, argued that in the legislature alone could Napoleon find a support to his throne. The talk was reported, as if by magic, in the assembly halls, and Lafavette, supported by Constant, put through a .

.

AN EPISODE OF THE "WHITE TERROR," 1815

Æт. 45]

THE SURRENDER

motion that any attempt to dissolve the chambers would be considered  $C_{\text{MAP}}$ . XXIV treason. Lucien pleaded in vain for a commission to treat with the invaders in his brother's name; the deputies appointed a committee of public safety, and adjourned.

Broken in spirit, Napoleon spent the evening in moody speculation, weighing and balancing, but never deciding. Should he appear at dawn before the Tuileries, summon the troops already in Paris, and prorogue the hated chambers, or should he not? The notion remained a dream. Early in June the court apothecary, Cadet de Gassicourt, had been ordered by the Emperor to prepare an infallible poison. This was done, and during this night of terrible vacillation the dose was swallowed by the desperate fugitive. But as before at Fontainebleau, the theory of the philosopher was weaker than his instincts. In dreadful physical and mental agony, the would-be suicide summoned his pharmacist, and was furnished with the necessary antidotes. But the morning brought no courage, and when the chambers met at their accustomed hour, on the motion of an obscure member they demanded the Emperor's abdication. The message was borne by the military commander of the Palais Bourbon, where the legislature, which had now usurped the supreme power, was sitting, and he asserted of his own motion, that, if compliance were refused, the chambers would declare Napoleon outlawed. The Emperor at first made a show of fierce wrath, but in the afternoon he dictated his final abdication to Lucien. No sooner was this paper received than the wild excitement of the deputies and peers subsided, and at once a new Directory, consisting of Carnot, Fouché, Caulaincourt, and Quinette, took up the reins of government. The city acquiesced, and hour after hour nothing interrupted the deep seclusion of the Elysée, except occasional shouts from passing groups of working-men, calling for Napoleon as dictator.

But there was a change as the stragglers from Waterloo began to arrive, vowing that they still had an arm for the Emperor, and denouncing those whom they believed to have betrayed him. The notion of sustaining Napoleon by force began to spread, and when the soldiers who were coming in, after suppressing the insurrection in Vendée, added their voices to those of their comrades from Waterloo, the new authorities feared Napoleon's presence as a menace to their power. Davout had been the first to suggest an appeal to force, but when Napoleon recurred at last to the idea, the marshal opposed it. On June CHAP. XXIV twenty-fifth, therefore, the fallen man withdrew to Malmaison; where, in the society of Queen Hortense and a few faithful friends, during 1815 three days he abandoned himself for long intervals to the sad memories of the place. But he also wrote a farewell address to the army, and, in constant communication with a committee of the government, completed a plan for escaping to the United States, "there to fulfil his destiny" as he himself said. For this purpose two frigates were put at the disposal of "him who had lately been Emperor." All was ready on the twenty-ninth. That day a passing regiment should, "Long life to the Emperor," and, in a last despairing effort, Napoleon sent an offer of his services, as a simple general, to save Paris, and defeat the allies, who, though approaching the capital, were now separated. Fouché returned an insulting answer to the effect that the government could no longer be responsible for the petitioner's safety. Then. at last, Napoleon knew that all was over in that quarter. Clad in civilians' clothing, and accompanied by Bertrand, Savary, and Gourgaud, he immediately set out for Rochefort. General Becker led the party as commissioner for the provisional government.

It was the exile's intention to hurry onward, but at Rambouillet he halted, and spent the evening composing two requests, one for a supply of furniture from Paris, the other for the library in the Petit Trianon, together with copies of Visconti's "Greek Iconography," and the great work on Egypt compiled from materials gathered during his ill-starred sojourn in that country. Next morning a courier arrived from Paris with news. "It is all up with France," he exclaimed, and set out once more. Crowds lined the highways; sometimes they cheered, and they were always respectful. Such was the enthusiasm of two cavalry regiments at Niort that Becker was induced to send a despatch to the government, pleading that an army, rallied in Napoleon's name, might still exert an important influence in public affairs. Just as the general was closing the document there arrived the news of the cannonade heard before the capital on the thirtieth. Napoleon dictated a postscript: "We hope the enemy will give you time to cover Paris and bring your negotiations to an issue. If, in that case, an English cruiser stops the Emperor's departure, you can dispose of him as a common soldier."

By a strange coincidence, English cruisers had, as a matter of fact, appeared within a few days in the offing before Rochefort. Whatever the relation between this circumstance and his suggestion, Napoleon

THE LAST DAYS OF NAPOLEON

FROM THE STATUE BY VINCENZO VELA

Æт. 45]

studied every possible means of delaying his journey, and actually CHAP. XXIV opened a correspondence with the commanders in Bordeaux and the 1815 Vendée, with a view to overthrowing the "traitorous" government. It was July third when he finally reached Rochefort. Again for five days he procrastinated. But the allies were entering Paris; Wellington was bringing Louis XVIII. back to his throne; in forty-eight hours the monarchs of the coalition would arrive. Blücher had commissioned a Prussian detachment to seize and shoot his hated opponent, wherever found. On the eighth, therefore, the outcast Emperor embarked; but for two days the frigates were detained by unfavorable winds. On the tenth, English cruisers hove in sight, and on the eleventh Las Cases, who had been appointed Napoleon's private secretary, was sent to interview Captain Maitland, of the Bellerophon, concerning his instructions from the British government. The envoy returned, and stated that the English commander would always be ready to receive Napoleon, and conduct him to England, but he could not guarantee that the ex-Emperor could settle there, or be free to betake himself to America.

This language was almost fatal to the notion of a final refuge in England, which Napoleon had begun to discuss and consider during the days spent in Rochefort, and Las Cases sought a second interview. According to his account, Maitland then changed his tone, remarking that in England the monarch and his ministers had no arbitrary power; that the generosity of the English people, and their liberal views, were superior to those entertained by sovereigns. To the speaker this was a platitude; to the listeners it was a weighty remark. A prey to uncertainty, Napoleon entertained various schemes. He bought two small, half-decked fishing-boats, with a view to boarding a Danish ship that lay outside, but the project was quickly dropped. Two young officers of the French frigate suggested sailing all the way to New York in the little craft. Napoleon seriously considered the possibility, but recalling that such vessels must get their final supplies on the coasts of Spain or Portugal, rejected the plan, for he dared not risk falling into the hands of embittered foes. Word was brought that an American ship lay near-by, in the Gironde. General Lallemand galloped in hot haste to see whether an asylum for the outlawed party could be secured under her flag. He returned with a reply that the captain would be "proud and happy to grant it."

But in the interim Napoleon had determined to throw himself on  $_{\rm VoL,\ IV.-29}$

CHAP. XXIV the "generosity of England." On the thirteenth Gourgaud was sent to London, with a request to the Prince Regent that the Emperor should be 1815 permitted to live unknown in some provincial English place, under the name of General Duroc. On the fifteenth Napoleon embarked on the Bellerophon, where he was received with all honors; next day the vessel sailed, and on the twenty-fourth she cast anchor in Torbay. During the voyage the passenger was often somnolent, and seemed exhausted; but he was affable in his intercourse with the officers, and to Maitland, who unwisely yielded the expected precedence. To his kindly keeper, in a sort of beseeching confidence, the prisoner showed portraits of his wife and child, lamenting with tender sensibility his enforced separation from them. The scenes in Torbay were curious. Crowds from far and near lined the shores, and boats of all descriptions thronged the waters; the sight-seers dared everything to eatch a glimpse of the awful monster under the terrors of whose power a generation had reached manhood. If, perchance, they succeeded, the air was rent with cheers. After two days the ship was ordered round into Plymouth Sound, but the reckless sensation-seekers gathered there in still greater numbers.

Many have wondered at Napoleon's surrender of his person to the English. There was no other course open which seemed feasible to a broken-spirited man in his position. His admirers are correct in thinking that it was more noble for him to have survived his great ness than to have taken his own life. To have entered on a series of romantic adventures such as were suggested—concealment on the Danish vessel, flight in open boats, concealment in a water-cask on an American merchantman, and the like-would have been merely the addition of ignominy to his capture; for his presence under the Ameriean flag would have been reported by spies, and at that day the standard of the United States would have afforded him little immunity. It is possible that on the morrow of Waterloo Napoleon might, with Grouchy's army, the other survivors, and the men from Vendée, have reassembled an army in Paris, but it is doubtful. Nothing in Revolutionary annals can equal in horror the royalist frenzy, known as the White Terror, which broke out in Provence and southern France on receipt of the news from Waterloo. The ghastly distemper spread swiftly, and when Napoleon embarked the tricolor was floating only at Rochefort, Nantes, and Bordeaux; his family was proscribed, Ney and Labedoyère were imprisoned and doomed to execution. To have CHAP, XXIV surrendered either to Wellington or Blücher would have been seeking 1815 instant death; to have collected such desperate soldiers as could be got together would have been an attempt at guerrilla warfare. To take refuge with the officers of England's navy was the only dignified course with any element of safety in it, since Great Britain was the only land in Europe which afforded the privileges of asylum to certain classes of political offenders. Naturally, the negotiators did not proclaim their extremity. Considering the date of Gourgaud's embassy, it is clear they were in no position to demand formal terms, and Maitland's character forbids the conclusion that he made them. It is unfortunate that he did not commit to writing all his transactions with Lallemand, Savary, and Las Cases; perhaps he was injudiciously polite, but it is certain that, contrary to their representations, he made no promise, even by implication, that under England's flag Napoleon should find a refuge, and not a prison.

ÆT. 45]

THE SURRENDER

CHAPTER XXV

ST. HELENA

EMBARRASSMENT OF THE ENGLISH MINISTRY — A STRANGE EMBASSY — NAPOLEON'S ATTITUDE — THE TRANSPORTATION — THE PRISON — AND ITS GOVERNOR — OCCUPATIONS OF THE PRISONER — NAPOLEON'S HIS-TORICAL WRITINGS — FAILING HEALTH AND PREPARATIONS FOR DEATH — HIS LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT — THE END.

CHAP. XXV THE ministry of Lord Liverpool, though ultra-Tory, was nevertheless 1815-21 embarrassed by the course of affairs. On June twentieth the premier wrote to Castlereagh that he wished Napoleon had been captured by Louis XVIII., and executed as a rebel. This amazing suggestion was the result of the progress made within a year by the doctrine of Although Talleyrand had observed the Hundred Days legitimacy. from the safe seclusion of Carlsbad, and was coldly received by his "legitimate" sovereign when he returned to Paris under Wellington's ægis, yet there was no one equally able to restore a "legitimate" government, and, with the aid of Wellington, who assumed without question the chief place in reconstructing France, he was soon in full activity. In strict logic, the allies reasoned that Napoleon was their common prisoner, and, as the chief malefactor, he should meet the fate which was to be Ney's, and later that of Murat. By long familiarity with such notions, the Czar had finally been converted to the once abhorrent idea of legitimacy, and was hatching the scheme of the Holy Alliance; even he would have made no objection. But English opinion, however irritated, would not tolerate the idea of death as a penalty for political offenses. Whatever ministers felt or said, they dared consider no alternative in dealing with Napoleon, except that of imprisonment. Accordingly, St. Helena, the spot suggested at Vienna as being the most remote in the habitable world, was designated; the island was

,

NAPOLEON ON BOARD H.M.S. BELLEROPHON, JULY, 1815.

Æт. 45–46]

ST. HELENA

borrowed from the East India Company, and acts of Parliament were CHAP. XXV passed which established a special government for it, and cut it off 1815 from all outside communication, "for the better detaining in custody Napoleon Bonaparte." The Continental allies, therefore, on August second, declared the sometime Emperor to be their common prisoner. To England they yielded the right to determine his place of detention, but to each of themselves — Austria, Russia, and Prussia — was reserved the right of sending thither a commissioner who should determine the fact of actual imprisonment.

It was in Torbay that the newspapers brought on board the Bellerophon first announced what was under consideration. On July thirtyfirst, with inconsistent ceremony, the determination was formally announced by an embassy consisting of Lord Keith, the admiral; Sir Henry Bunbury, an under-secretary of state, and Mr. Meike, secretary to the admiral. To whom did this highest official authority address itself? To General Bonaparte, a private citizen! Their message was read in French, and Napoleon displayed perfect self-control. Asked if he had anything to say, the ex-Emperor, without temper or bitterness, appealed against the judgment both to posterity and to the British people. He was, he said, a voluntary guest; he wished to be received as such under the law of nations, and to be domiciled as an English citizen (sic). During the interval before naturalization he would dwell under superintendence anywhere in England, thirty leagues from any seaport. He could not live in St. Helena; he was accustomed to ride twenty miles a day; what could he do on that little rock at the end of the world? He could have gone to his father-in-law, or to the Czar, but while the tricolor was still flying he had confided in British hospitality. Though defeated, he was still a sovereign, and deserved to be treated as such. With emphasis he declared that he preferred death to St. Helena.

The embassy withdrew in silence from the moving scene. Lord Keith had previously expressed gratitude to Napoleon for personal attentions to a young relative who had been captured at Waterloo. Him, therefore, the imperial prisoner now recalled, and asked if there were any tribunal to which appeal might be made. The answer was a polite negative, with the assurance that the British government would mitigate the situation as far as prudence would permit. "How so?" said Napoleon. "Surely St. Helena is preferable to a smaller space in England," answered Keith, "or being sent to France, or perhaps to CHAP. XXV Russia," "Russia!" exclaimed Napoleon, taken off his guard. "God 1815 preserve me from it!" This was the only moment of excitement; the witnesses of the long and trying scene have left on record the profound impression made on them by Napoleon's dignity and admirable conduct throughout. Subsequently the prisoner composed a written protest appealing to history. An enemy who for twenty years had waged war against the English people had come voluntarily to seek an asylum under English laws; how did England respond to such magnanimity? In his own mind, at least, he instituted a comparison between himself and Themistocles, who took refuge with the Persians, and was kindly treated. The parallel broke down in that the great Greek had never forced his enemy into entangling alliances, as Napoleon had forced England into successive coalitions for self-preservation. Moreover, his surrender was not voluntary: his life would not have been worth a moment's purchase either in France or elsewhere on the Continent; to have fled by sea would have been to invite capture. "Wherever," as he himself repeatedly said—"wherever there was water to float a ship, there was to be found a British standard." Still there were many in England who took his view; much sympathy was aroused, and some futile efforts for his release were made.

> For the journey to St. Helena Napoleon was transferred to Admiral Cockburn's ship, the Northumberland. The suite numbered thirty, and was chosen by Napoleon himself. Its members were Bertrand, Montholon, and Las Cases, with their families, together with Gourgaud and a Polish adjutant, Prowtowski. There were sixteen servants, of whom twelve were Napoleon's. The voyage was tedious and uneventful. The admiral adhered to English customs, and discarded the etiquette observed toward crowned heads; but he remained on the best of terms with his illustrious prisoner. There were occasional misunderstandings, and sometimes ill-natured gossip, in which the admiral was denounced behind his back as a "shark"; but such little gusts of temper passed without permanent cousequences. Napoleon had secured the excellent library he desired, and every day read or wrote during most of the morning; the evenings he devoted to games of hazard for low stakes, or to chess, which he played very badly. He was careful as to his diet, took abundant regular exercise, and, since his health was excellent, he appeared in the main cheerful and resigned.

Æт. 46]

ST. HELENA

The island of St. Helena is the craggy summit of an ancient volcano, CHAP. XXV rising two thousand seven hundred feet above the sea, and contains forty-five square miles. Its shores are precipitous, but it has an excellent harbor, that of Jamestown, which was then a port of call on the voyage from England, by the Cape of Good Hope, to India, four thousand miles from London, one thousand one hundred and forty from the coast of Africa, one thousand one hundred and eighty from the nearest point in South America. There were a few thousand inhabitants of mixed race, and the climate, though moist and enervating, Under the act passed by Parliament, England is fairly salubrious. increased the territorial waters around the island to a ring three times the usual size, and policed them by "hovering" vessels, which made the approach of suspicious craft virtually impossible. This, with numerous other precautionary measures of minor importance, made St. Helena an impenetrable jail. It was October sixteenth, 1815, when Napoleon landed on its shores.

The residence provided for the imperial captive was a substantial farm-house in the center of the island, on a plateau two thousand feet high. The grounds were level, and bounded by natural limits, so that they were easy to guard, and could be observed in all their extent by sentries; eventually a circuit of twelve miles was marked out, and within this the prisoner might move at will; if he wished to pass the line, he must be attended by an English officer. Considering the conceptions of state and chivalry then prevalent, the place was mean; even now, when enlarged and repaired, the house is thought not unsuitable for the entertainment of an imprisoned Zulu chieftain. Longwood, for this is the familiar name, might at a pinch have sufficed for the lodging of General Bonaparte; it was certainly better than a dungeon; but its modest comfort was far from the luxurious elegance which had become a second nature to the Emperor Napoleon. Such as it was to be, however, it was still uninhabitable in October, and its destined occupant was, until December ninth, the guest of a hospitable merchant, Mr. Balcombe, at his villa known as The Briars. The sentinels and patrols remained six hundred paces from the door during the day; at night the cordon of guards was drawn close around the house; twice in twenty-four hours the orderly must assure himself of the prisoner's actual presence, and human ingenuity could devise no precaution which was not taken by land and sea to make impossible any

[Æт. 46

CHAP. XXV secret communication, inward or outward. Cockburn's serene goodnature rendered it out of the question for the captive to do more than declare his policy of protest and exasperation, until April, 1816, when the admiral departed, and was replaced by Sir Hudson Lowe. The latter was a vulnerable foe. A creature of routine, and fresh from a two years' residence as English commissioner in Blücher's camp, he had thoroughly absorbed the temper both of the Tory ministry and of the Continental reactionaries. Neither irascible, severe, nor illnatured, he was yet punctilious, and in no sense a match for the brilliant genius of his antagonist. With the arrival of this unfortunate official properly begins the St. Helena period of Napoleon's life—a period psychologically as instructive as any other, but, as regards its futile calculations, comparable only to that of his ineffectual agitations in Corsica.

Napoleon, the prisoner, had a double object — release and self-justification. The former he hoped to gain by working on the feelings of the English Liberals; the latter by writing an autobiography which, in order to win back the lost confidence of France, should emphasize the democratic, progressive, and beneficent side of his career, and consign to oblivion his tyrannies and inordinate personal ambitions. The dreary chronicle of the quarrel between a disarmed giant and a potent pygmy is uninteresting in detail, but very illuminating in its large outlines. The routine of a court was instituted and for a time was rigidly observed at Longwood. The powerless monarch so successfully simulated the wisdom and judgment of a chastened soul that the accounts. which reached the distant world awakened a great pity among the disinterested. As on shipboard and at The Briars, he gave his mornings to literature, clad in a studied, picturesque dishabille. The afternoon he devoted to amusement and exercise; but a distaste for more physical exertion than was actually essential to health grew steadily, until he became sluggish and corpulent. At table he was always abstemious; his sleep was irregular and disturbed. The evenings he spent with favorite authors, Voltaire, Corneille, and Ossian; frequently, also, in reading the Bible. The opinions he expressed were in the main those of his pseudoscientific days; among other questions discussed was that of polygamy, which he upheld as an excellent institution theoretically. Much time was spent by the household in abusing Longwood, and so effectually, that a wooden mansion was constructed in England, and erected near-by; but the prisoner made difficulties about every particular, and never occu- CHAP. XXV pied it. There were continuous schemings for direct intercourse with friends in France, and partial success ended in the dismissal of Las Cases. Gourgaud, too, departed, ostensibly because of a quarrel with Montholon, really to agitate with Alexander, Francis, and Maria Louisa for Napoleon's release. The exile confessed, in an unguarded moment, that no man alive could have satisfied him in the relation of governor of St. Helena, but yet he was adroit and indefatigable in his efforts to discredit Lowe. The "Letters from the Cape of Good Hope," published in England anonymously, but now incorporated in the official edition of Napoleon's works as the thirty-first volume, abuse the climate of St. Helena, depict the injustice of the imprisonment, and heap scorn on the governor. The book was widely read, and furnished the Whigs in Parliament with many shafts of criticism. This success emboldened the author, and further compositions by his hand were mysteriously published in Europe.

Æт. 46-51]

ST. HELENA

For three years Napoleon's self-appointed task as a historian was unremittingly pursued, and the results, while he had the assistance of Las Cases and Gourgaud, were voluminous; thereafter the output was a slender rill. Most of the volumes which record his observations and opinions bear the names of the respective amanuenses, Montholon, Las Cases, Gourgaud, O'Meara, and Antommarchi, the two latter his attendant physicians. The period he took pains to elucidate most fully in these writings was that between Toulon and Marengo. Over his own name appeared monographs on Elba, the Hundred Days, and Waterloo. His professional ability is shown by short studies on the "Art and History of War," on "Army Organization," and on "Fortification"; likewise by his full analyses of the wars waged by Cæsar, Turenne, and Frederick the Great. These are not unworthy of the author's reputation; his versatility is displayed in a few commonplace notes - some on Voltaire's "Mahomet," some on suicide, and others on the second book of the Æneid. A widely circulated treatise, the "Manuscrit de Ste. Hélène," which warped the facts of history much in his style, and was long attributed to him, he repudiated. It was written in the Bourbon interest, by an unknown hand.

For nearly four years Napoleon's health was fair. O'Meara, the physician appointed to attend him, was assiduous and skilful, but when he became his patient's devoted slave he was dismissed by Lowe. VOL. IV.- 30

1815-21

[Æт. 46-51

Thereupon certain disquieting symptoms, which had been noted from CHAP. XXV time to time, became more pronounced, and the prisoner began to brood 1815-21 and mope in seclusion. In the autumn of 1819, Dr. Antommarchi, a Corsican physician chosen by Fesch, was installed at Longwood. For a time he had some success in ameliorating the ex-Emperor's condition, and to their confidential talks we owe our knowledge of Napoleon's infancy. But from month to month the patient's strength diminished, and the ravages of his mysterious disease at length became very appar-The obstinacy of Lowe in carrying out the letter of his instrucent. tions, by intruding on the sufferer to secure material for a daily report, seriously aggravated Napoleon's miseries. Two priests accompanied Antommarchi, and after their arrival mass was celebrated almost every morning in the chapel adjoining the sick-room. "Not every man is an atheist who would like to be," was a remark Napoleon dropped to Montholon. Yet, though preparing for death, he was making ready simultaneously to speed his Parthian arrow.

His testament displays his qualities in their entirety. The language sounds simple and sincere; there is a hidden meaning in almost every line. His religion had been, at best, that of a deist; at the last he professed a piety which he never felt or practised. During his life France had been caressed and used as a skilful artificer caresses and uses his tools; the last words of his will suggest a passionate devotion. To his son he recommended the "love of right, which alone can incite to the performance of great deeds"; for his faithless wife he expressed the tenderest sentiments, and probably felt them. It was his hope that the English people would avenge itself on the English oligarchy, and that France would forgive the traitors who betrayed her - Marmont, Augereau, Talleyrand, and Lafayette—as he forgave them. Louis he pardoned in the same spirit for the "libel published in 1820; it is full of falsehoods and falsified documents." The blame for Englien's murder he took to himself. The second portion of the document is a series of munificent-sounding bequests to a list of legatees which includes every one who had done the testator any important service since his earliest childhood. France under the Bourbons confiscated the imperial domain of about a hundred and eighty millions, which Napoleon had estimated at over two hundred and twenty. When the nation passed again under the Bonapartes it appropriated eight millions toward the unpaid legacies. In the end his executors collected three and a half millions of frances wherewith to pay bequests amounting on CHAP, XXY their face to over nine and a half. In a codicil he remembers a certain Cautillon, who had undergone trial for an alleged attempt to as-"Cautillon had as much right to assassinate sassinate Wellington. that oligarch as he [Wellington] to send me to the rock of St. Helena to perish there." Such was the nature and substance of an appeal to a generous, forgiving nation, and to posterity, by one who wrote in the same document that he wished to die in the bosom of the Christian church, whose central doctrine is love, and whose ethic is forgiveness of enemies.

COUNT EMMANUEL-AUGUSTIN DIEUDONNÉ DE LAS CASES PRIM THE LITHOUGHPH ST. 48 ILTER ST. JARNED.

ST. HELENA

"I closed the abyss of anarchy and brought order out of chaos. I cleansed the Revolution, ennobled the people, and made the kings strong. I have awakened all ambitions, rewarded all merit, and enlarged the borders of glory." These were the words of Napoleon in 1816; he lived in this hallucination to the end. In the autumn of 1820 he realized his condition, and throughout the winter he was feeble and depressed. In February, 1821, he began to fail rapidly, and the symptoms of his disease, cancer in the stomach, multiplied; but, in spite of feebleness, he faced death with courage. On May third two English physicians, recently arrived, came in for consultation; they could only recommend palliatives, and under the influence of that treatment the imperial patient kept an uncertain hold on his faculties. Two days later a violent storm of wind and rain set in. A spreading willow, under which Napoleon had spent many hours, was overturned; the trees planted by his hands were uprooted; and a whirlwind devastated the garden in which he had worked for exercise. The death of the sufferer was coincident, and scarcely less violent. The last words uttered were caught by listening ears as the sun rose; they were "Tête . . . armée." Mme. Bertrand and her children were present; at the sight of their friend's suffering the boy fainted and the little girls broke into loud lamentation. At eleven in the morning the supreme agonies began; a little before six in the evening the heart put forth its last convulsive effort, and ceased to beat. The mournful band of watchers within bowed their heads. Without the door another watch was set-that of the orderly. During the first outburst of grief among those at the bedside two officers entered silently, felt the cold limbs, marked the absence of life, and left without a word. England's prisoner had escaped.

1815-21

CHAPTER XXVI

SOLDIER, STATESMAN, DESPOT

QUESTIONINGS — THE INDUSTRIOUS BURGHER — THE INDUSTRIOUS SOV-EREIGN — END OF THE MARVELOUS — PUBLIC VIRTUE AND PRIVATE WEAKNESS — THE MAN AND THE AGE — LATIN AND GERMAN — FIRST STRUGGLES — USURPATION OF POWER — POLITICAL THEORIES — THE NAPOLEONIC SYSTEM — ITS FOUNDATION — STIMULUS TO DESPOTISM — THE SURRENDER OF FRANCE — THE MASTER SOLDIER.

CHAP. XXVI THE tomb of Erasmus in Basel is marked by a stone slab on which L are an epitaph, an effigy and then the pathetic word "Terminus." Review Should these fateful syllables be written over the mortal remains of Napoleon Bonaparte? No. Beyond his death there was more; far more than the work he wrought during his life. Men ever love a seeming mystery, and while they do, a favorite theme of speculation will be the career of the great Corsican in its historical aspect. Before our long study can be brought to a close two questions must be considered, or rather two sides of one question must be viewed. Why did he rise, and what did he accomplish? The answers will be as various as the investigators who give them. But the man as seen in the preceding pages certainly displays these recognizable characteristics: he was a man of the people, he had a transcendent military genius, he was indefatigable, and he had unsurpassed energy.

> No mere man, even the most remarkable, can climb without supports of some kind, however unstable they may be. Napoleon Bonaparte did not soar, he rose on the ladder of power by stages easily traceable: first by the protection of the Robespierres; then by the necessities and velleities of Barras and the Directory; afterward by the encouragement of all France, which was sick of the inefficient Directory; and still later by the army, which adored a leader who frankly repaid devotion in the hard cash of booty, and bravery in the CHAP. XXVI splendid rewards of that glory which was a national passion. With Review such opportunities Bonaparte unfolded what was certainly his supereminent quality-the quality which endeared him to the French masses as did no other, the quality which above all others distinguished him from the hated tyrants under whom they had so long suffered, the quality which even the meanest intellect could mark as distinctively middle-class, in opposition to its negation in the upper class — the quality, namely, of untiring industry; laborious, self-initiated, self-guided, self-improving industry. This burgher quality Napoleon possessed as no burgher ever did. It was no exaggeration, but the simple truth, when he said to Roederer: "I am always working. I think much. If I appear always ready to meet every emergency, to confront every problem, it is because, before undertaking any enterprise, I have long considered it, and have thus foreseen what could possibly occur. It is no genius which suddenly and secretly reveals to me what I have to say or do in some circumstance unforeseen by others: it is my own meditation and reflection. I am always working-when dining, when at the theater; I waken at night in order to work." How profoundly this was impressed upon those intimately associated with Napoleon ean be traced in their memoirs on many a page. It was Soult who said, most sapiently: "What we call an inspiration is nothing but a calculation made with rapidity."

INTED ITS DICTITION

Generally there is no mystery in the power of domination : he rules who is indispensable. The Jacobins needed a man, they found him in the unserupulous Bonaparte : the Directory needed a man, they found him in the expert artillerist : France needed a man, she found him in the conqueror of Italy. And having risen, he did not intermit his industry for a moment. Rehearsing his coronation by means of puppets, or studying with painful care the complicated accounts of his fiscal officers, or absorbing himself in whatever else it might be, he was always the man who knew more about everything than any one else. Throughout his reign he was the fountain-head of every governmental activity : the council of state sharpened not their own, but his thoughts; his secretaries were his pocket note-book; his ministers were the executors of his personal designs; pensions and presents were given by him to his friends, and not to those who served the state as they themselves thought best; every French community received his CHAP. XXVI personal attention, and every Frenchman who came to his general re-Review ceptions was treated with rude jocularity. In all this he was perfectly natural. At times, however, he felt compelled to attitudinize; perhaps, in the theatrical poses which he assumed for self-protection or for the sake of representing a personified, unapproachable imperial majesty, he copied Talma, with whom he cultivated a sort of intimacy. Possibly, too, his violent sallies were considered dramatic by himself. "Otherwise," he once said, "they would have slapped me on the shoulder every day." "It is sad," remarked Roederer, apropos of a certain event. "Yes, like greatness," was Napoleon's rejoinder.

> Napoleon's preëminence lasted just as long as this effective personal supremacy continued. When his faculties refused to perform their continuous, unceasing task, he began to decline; when the material of his calculations transcended all human power, even his own, the descent grew swifter; and the crash came when his abilities worked either intermittently or not at all. Ruin was the consequence of feebleness; the imagination of the world had clothed him with demoniac qualities, but it ceased so to do just in proportion as his superiority to others in plan and execution began to diminish. "There is no empire not founded on the marvelous, and here the marvelous is the truth." These were the words of Talleyrand, addressed to the First Consul on June twentyfirst, 1800, just after the news of Marengo had reached Paris. The marvel of the absolute monarchy was the divine right of kings: when men ceased to hold the doctrine, the days of absolutism were numbered. The marvel of Napoleon was his unquestioned human supremacy: when that declined his empire fell.

> In the truest sense of that word so dear to modern times, Napoleon was a self-made man. By his extraordinary energy he made a deficient education do double duty; and those of his natural gifts which, in a sluggish man, would have been mediocre, he paraded so often, and in such swift succession, that they appeared miraculous. This fiery energy, it cannot too often be repeated, was the man's most distinctive characteristic; when it failed he was undone. Was consistency, as generally understood, to be expected in this personage; is it, indeed, found in most great men? Nowhere does the theory of evolution writhe to sustain itself more than in psychology; nowhere does it discover a greater complexity—a complexity which makes doubtful its sufficiency. Admitting that Napoleon was selfish; that he was lustful;

222

.

.

•

LILL FROM A PHOTOGRAPH LUNT BY L. 0, BILLINGS イチョン 1 ţ, T 1 DRAWING MADE FOR THE CENTURY CO. 10 34

KNRA ARBER AG DNIMVEG REL WORA

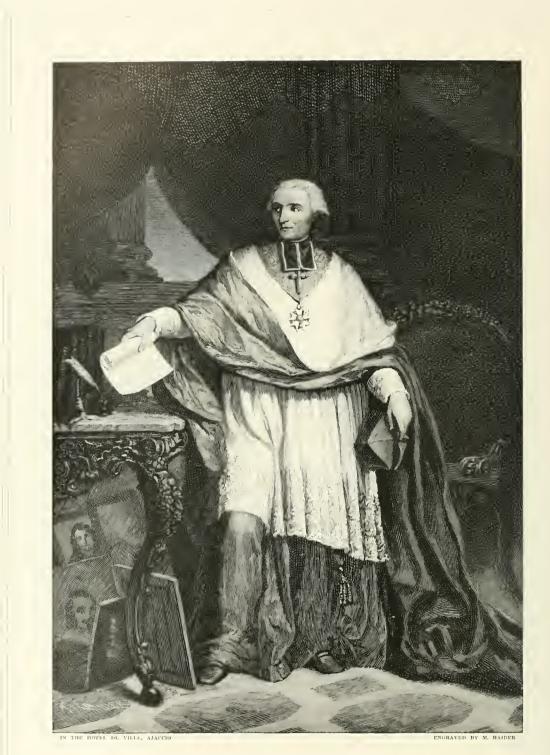

", LONGWOOD," NAPOLEON'S RESIDENCE AT ST. HELENA

that once, at least, he was criminal; that at various times—yes, even CHAP. XXVI frequently-he was unpopular, and dared not in extremity call for a na-Review tional uprising to sustain his cause; that he had the most pitiful limitations in dealing with religion, polities, and finance; supposing him to have displayed on occasion the qualities of a resurrected medieval freelance, or of the Borgias, or of other historical monsters; confessing that he was launched upon the fiery lake of revolution by the madness of extreme Jacobinism; sustaining the awful indictment in each detail - was there no reverse to the medal, no light to the shadow, no general result except negations? Was the work of Alexander the Great worthless because of his debaucheries? Was Catharine II. of Russia a mere damned soul because of her harlotries? Did Talleyrand's duplicity and meanness render less valuable or permanent the work he did in thwarting the coalition at Vienna? The answer of history is plain: what the great of the earth have wrought for others or against them is to be recorded and judged with impartiality; how they sinned against themselves is to be told as an awful warning, and then to be left for the decision of the Modern philosophy requires such complicated and Great Tribunal. yet such minute knowledge in every department of science that the specialist has supplanted the general scholar and the system-maker; the man who aspires to create a plan displaying the unity of either the objective or the subjective world, or any harmony of one with the other, is generally regarded as either an antiquated imbecile or a charlatan. Yet in the examination of historical characters a symmetrical consistency capable of being grasped by the meanest intellect is imperiously demanded by all readers and critics. This is natural, but not altogether reasonable: symmetry cannot be found in the commonest human being on our globe, much less in those who rise supereminent. The greater the man, the more impossible to connect in a mathematical diagram the different phases of his conduct. The search for mediocre consistency in the character of Napoleon is like the Cynic philosopher's quest for a man.

This personage strove, and with considerable success, to think and act for an entire nation—ay, more, for western Europe. In order to render this conceivable, he first took command of his own body—sleeping at will, and never more than six hours; eating when and what he would, but always with extreme moderation; waking from profound slumber and rousing his mind instantaneously to the highest pitch, so CHAP XXVI that he then composed as incisively as in the midst of active ratioeination. He was able to train his secretaries and servants into instru-Review ments destitute of personal volition-even his great generals, who were taught to act for themselves within certain limits, never transcended the fixed boundary, and grew inefficient when deprived of his impulse. He never failed to reward merit or to gratify ambition for the sake of securing an able lieutenant, and nascent devotion he quickened into passion by the display of suitable familiarity. A thoughtful, selfcontained, self-sufficient worker, he was sometimes a trifle uneasy in social intercourse, perhaps always so at bottom; but he played his various rôles in public with consummate skill, except that he made nervous movements with his eyes, hands, and ears. His little tricks of rolling his right shoulder, tugging at his cuffs, and the like; his inability to write, and his generally clumsy movements when irritated, were due to deficient training in early childhood. Forbidding in his intercourse with ambitious women and other self-seekers, he was considerate with the suffering, and found it difficult, if not impossible, to refuse the petitions of the needy. Loving rough ways in those busied about his person-as, for instance, when his valet rubbed him down of a morning with a coarse towel,—he was yet so sensitive that he had to have his hats worn by others before he could set them on his own head. It is useless to seek even homely physical consistency in a man thus constituted.

> It is equally useless to ask whether Napoleon could have been as great a man in another epoch as he was in his own. In any epoch of warfare he would have been great; it is likely that in any epoch of peace he would have reached eminence as a legislator and administrator. The real historical question is this: How did he, being what he was, and his age, being what it was, interact one upon the other; and what was the resultant? There was as little consistency in his age as in himself; the sinuosities of each fitted strangely into those of the other, and the result was a period of twenty years on which common consent fixes the name of the Napoleonic age. Does his personality throw any light on the antecedent period — does his career influence the succeeding years?

> The age of the Revolution has such intimate connection with the movements of French society that it is very generally called in other countries the French Revolution. But while the movement developed itself more easily and took more radical forms in France than else- CHAP. XXVI where, it was due to the condition of civilization the world around. Review France has been in a peculiar sense the teacher of Europe; for in language, literature, laws, and institutions she is the heir of Rome. In spite of Roman Catholicism, or perhaps in consequence of the Roman hierarchy, her inheritance has been pagan rather than Christian; her ethics have been Hellenic, her literature Augustan, her laws imperial, her temperament a combination of the Stoic and Epicurean which is essentially Latin, her language elegant, elliptical, and precise like that of Livy or Tacitus. The Teuton in general, the Anglo-Saxon in particular, may give his days and nights to classical studies: he is never so imbued with their spirit as the Gaul. "It is with his Bible in one pocket and his Shakspere in another," said an eminent Frenchman not long since, "that the Anglo-Saxon goes forth to reduce the world in the interests of his commerce, his civilization, and his religion. The most enlightened has neither the cold worldliness of Horace nor the calculating zeal of Cæsar, but he has the persistency of faith in himself and his nation which, whatever may be his personal belief, is a constituent element in his blood, or, better still, the controlling member of that complex organism to which he belongs." I venture to believe, on the other hand, that the Frenchman espouses his cause from an unselfish impulse begotten of pure reason, an ethereal ichor percolating through society by channels of sympathy, which diminishes the historic pressure for continuous national consistency and natural unity, but emphasizes the great uplifting movements of society. The French armies of the Revolution went forth to scour Europe for its deliverance from feudalism, absolutism, and ecclesiasticism, because the French people had renewed their youthful and pristine vigor in their enthusiasm for pure principle without regard to experience or expediency. Napoleon Bonaparte had all their doctrine, with something more: a consuming ardor unconscious of any physical limitations to the nervous strength of himself or others, and a readiness for any fate which would transmute his dull, unsuccessful, commonplace existence into excitement. When he found his opportunity to heap Pelion upon Ossa, to supplement himself by the splendors of French devotion, he did indeed come near to transcending even the Olympians and storming the seat of Kronos.

CARDINAL JOSEPH FESCH

It was a long, discouraging, heartbreaking struggle by which he VOL. IV.-31

CHAP. XXVI gained his first vantage-ground. This was no exceptional experience; for every adventurer knows that it is more troublesome to make the Review start than to continue the advance. It is harder to save the first small capital than to conduct a prosperous business. It is more difficult, apparently, in human life to overcome the inertia of immobility than that of motion; at least psychological laws seem in this respect to contravene those of physics. It is not true that the armies of the Republic were those of the Bourbons: the transition may have been gradual, but it was radical. It is also untrue that the armies of Napoleon were those of the Revolution: they differed as the zenith from the nadir, being recruited on a new principle, animated by new motives, and led by an entirely different class of men. A supreme command having been attained by means curiously compounded of chivalric romance and base scheming, the man of action did not hesitate a moment to put every power in motion. Throwing off all superior control, he set himself to every task in the revolution of Italy -- conquest, political and religious; constructive politics and administration; social and financial transformation. Winning the devotion of his troops by intoxicating successes, as a leveler he was permanently successful; but this typical burgher had no permanent success in building up a democratic-imperial society out of the royal, princely, and aristocratic elements which had so long monopolized the ability of the peninsula; what he wrought outlasted his time, but the country had to undergo another revolution before its middle classes were ready for the heavy burden of independence and self-government. Yet the struggle for what was accomplished appears to have created a climacteric in the doer. Before the days of Italy his ambitions were petty enough : employment in the service of Russia or England, supremacy in Corsica or military promotion in France; but afterward they enlarged by leaps and bounds: Italian principalities, Austrian dukedoms, Lombard confederations, the primacy of France in some form, Oriental dominionone such concept took form in the morning, to be swept away at night and replaced by ever more luxurious growths of fantasy. The realization of these dreams was still more amazing than their misty forma-The Revolutionary doctrines of the passing age had stimulated tion. France to over-exertion; her leaders were discredited, her people exhausted. The same agitation had stupefied the Italians; but whatever their political disintegration may have been, the Roman chair and throne retained its moral influence as the bond and mainspring of SO- CHAP. XXVI ciety throughout the whole peninsula: and now the successor of St. Peter was humbled to the dust, willing to escape with the mere semblance of either secular or ecclesiastical independence. It was an exceptional moment, a vacillating, retrogressive hour in the history of Austria, of France, and of Italy. The exceptional man, the vigorous citizen of a new political epoch, the inspired strategist of a new military epoch, the unscrupulous doubter of a new religious epoch-this typical personage was at hand to take advantage of the situation; and he did so, hastening the disintegrating processes already at work, seizing every advantage revealed by the crumbling of old systems, and reaping the harvest of French heedlessness. The opportunity gave the man his chance, but the chance once seized, the man enlarged his sphere with each successive year.

This he did by means which were as remarkable as the personage who devised them - and remarkable, too, not for their negative, but for their constructive quality. Broadly stated, the Revolution utterly expunged all the governmental and social guarantees of the preceding monarchy, destroying not merely the absolute power of one man with its sanction of divine right, but all the checks upon it to be found either in the ancient traditions of the people or in their ancient institution of parliaments. It will be clear to the careful student of the Revolutionary governments that while there was a gradual clarifying of opinion antecedent to the Consulate, and a vague longing for guarantees of individual rights higher than the acts of any assembly, however representative it claimed to be, nevertheless great ideas, great conceptions, great outlines, had all remained in their inchoate state, and that of the several succeeding constitutions each had been more worthless than the one before. Almost any kind of a constitution will serve an enlightened nation which has confirmed political habits, if it chooses to support a fundamental law not hostile to them; and none, however ingenious, can stand before recalcitrant populations. The Revolutionary constitutions of France, excepting perhaps that of 1791, were alike feeble; and in the stress applied to the one democratic land of Europe by her dynastic enemies all around, they were not worth the paper and ink used to record them. Under each had developed a pure despotism of one kind or another, on the plea that in war there must be a single head, either an executive committee or an executive

Review

CHAP. XXVI man. These persons or person had, on pleas of necessity or expedi-Review ency, gradually arrogated to the executive all the powers of government, befooling the people more or less completely by the specious formalities of various kinds through which the popular will was supposed to find expression. No one understood this fact better than Napoleon Bonaparte; and since it seemed that the supreme power had to be in the hands of some one man or clique, he was easily tempted to grasp it for himself when it became clear that the profligate and dishonest Directory had run its course. He did not make the situation, but he used it. History does not record that the French nation was shocked or discouraged by the events of the eighteenth of Brumaire; on the contrary, the occurrences in Paris and at St. Cloud seemed commonplace to a storm-tossed people, and the results were welcomed by the majority in every class.

> The reasons for this general satisfaction varied, of course; for the conservative and progressive royalists, the conservative and radical republicans of every stripe, had widely different expectations as to the next act in the drama. But the chief actor was concerned only for himself and the nation; partizans he neither honored nor feared, except as he was anxious not to be identified with them. To him, as a man of the people, it seemed that in the Revolution the third estate had asserted itself; that the third estate must be pacified; that the third estate must be prosperous; that the third estate, for all these purposes, needed only to be confirmed in their simple theory of government, which was that the power could be delegated by them to any one fit to wield it, and this once done, the delegate might without harm to the state be left undisturbed to manage the public business, while the people gave their undivided attention to their private affairs. How successful the Consulate was in this respect is universally known and admitted. With consummate eleverness the First Consul summoned to his assistance all the giants of his time, whether they were scholars with their theories and knowledge, administrators with their tact and experience, political managers with their easy consciences and oiled feathers, or skilful demagogues with their greedy followers and insatiate self-interest. These he either enticed or bullied into his service, according as he read their characters; a few — a very few — like Barère, he found obdurate, and drove into provincial exile. At no time did he make a finer display of his astounding capacity for molding strong men by his still stronger will than during the early days of the Con- CHAP. XXVI sulate; and the manifest reason for his success was that he had a fine Review instinct for character and for putting the right man in the right place.

MARIE-LAETITIA RAMOLINO BONAPARTE

What he thus accomplished has been told. The foundations he then laid rest solid to-day; the now antiquated edifice he erected on them, though altered and repaired, still retains its identity. The Revolution had overthrown the old régime completely, and the ruins of society were without form and void. From this chaos Napoleon painfully gathered the substantial materials of a new structure, and out of these reconstructed the family, the state, and the church. He revived the domestic spirit, made marriage a solid institution, and reëstablished parental authority while destroying parental despotism. In civil society he restored the right of property and fixed the sanctity of contract, thus assuring respect for the individual and the ascendancy of the law. The finances he reformed by an equitable system of taxation, and by the establishment of an ingenious treasury system comparable to that devised by Alexander Hamilton for the United States. In the Concordat he went as far, probably, as France could then go in emancipating religion and the church; Protestantism has prospered under the regulations he laid down, and by his treatment of the Jews they have been changed from despised and down-trodden social freebooters into prosperous and patriotic citizens. Upon every class of men then living he imposed by an iron will a system of his own. The leading survivors of Jacobinism, extreme royalists, moderate republicans, proscribers and proscribed, men of the bourgeoisie-all bowed to his sway and accepted his rewards. It is said that they yielded to the superior force of his police and his pretorians. Be it so. The fivefold police system he established was a system of checks and counter-checks within itself, within the administration, and even within the army — a body without which, as he firmly believed, the beginnings of social transformation could not be made. He professed, and no doubt honestly, that he would divest himself of this police service as opportunity served, and deluded both himself and his followers into the belief that the process was almost complete before the close of his era. Through the perspective of a century we can see the faults of Napoleon's plan. The Gallic Church is still Roman, in spite of his intention that the Roman Church should become French; the extreme centralization of his administrative system still CHAP. XXVI throttles local free government and makes both oligarchic rule and political revolution easier in France than in any other free land; the Review educational scheme which he formed, although more fully changed than any other of his institutions, and but recently embarked, let us hope, on a course for ultimate independence, nevertheless suffers in its present complete dependence on state support, and in the consequent absence of private personal enthusiasm which might make its separate universities and schools rich in opportunities and strong in the loyalty of their sons. But we must remember that the Consulate was a hundred years since, and that for its day it wrought so beneficently that Bonaparte, First Consul, remains one of the foremost among all lawgivers and statesmen. And that, too, precisely for the reasons which some cite as his condemnation. He took the Revolutionary ideas of political, civil, and religious emancipation: with these he commingled both his own sound sense and the experience of advisers from every class, realizing as much of civil liberty and good order as appears to have been practical at the moment.

> But in one respect he failed miserably, and that failure vitiated much of the substantive gain which seemed to have been made. He failed in curbing his own ambition. The majestic ridge of his achievement was the verge of the precipice over which he fell. In the first place, his signal success as a lawgiver was due entirely to the dazzling splendors of his victories. Marengo was the climax to a series of such achievements as had not so far been wrought on the tented field within the bounds of French history. It is easy to assert that the French were intoxicated because they were French: there is not the slightest reason to suppose that any other nation under similar circumstances would have behaved differently. The Seven Years' War turned the heads of the English people completely, and they lost their American colonies in consequence; Rome lost her political liberty when she became mistress not only of the Latin, but of the Greek and Oriental shores of the Mediterranean; the distant military expeditions of Alexander the Great prepared the fall of his ill-assorted empire. In each case the careful student will admit that social exaltation was the forerunner of division and of subsequent despotism in some form. Even in the little states of Greece and southern Italy the tyrants always arose from the disintegration of legal government, and by the assertion of some form of power-mind, money, or military force.

It was, therefore, as a military despot that the First Consul promul- CHAP. XXVI gated beneficent codes, founded an enduring jurisprudence, created an Review efficient magistracy, and established social order. In this process he completed the work of the Revolution by exalting the third estate to ascendancy in the nation. The whole work, therefore, was not only recognized as his in the house of every French burgher; he was considered at every fireside to be the consummator of the Revolution for which France had so long suffered in an agony of bloody sweat. Was it therefore any wonder that not only he himself, but even the most enlightened leaders of European thought, considered the safety and renovation of European society to depend upon the extension of his work? It is hard for us to appreciate this, because in France Napoleon's institutions have remained almost as he left them, and wellnigh stationary, while for a century the processes of ruthless reform have been continuously working in other European lands, and some neighboring peoples have outstripped the French in the matter of a national unity consistent with local freedom. The First Consul felt that in order to become great he had been forced to become strong; we can understand that he could easily deceive himself into concluding that in order to be greater he must become stronger. It was in these days that he exclaimed, in the intimacy of familiar intercourse : "I feel the infinite in me." Thereafter democracy in any form, even the mildest, was offensive. Such men as Roederer were sent to Naples, Berg-anywhere out of France. The times were not far removed from those of the beneficent despots, except that this one ruled, not by hereditary divine right, but by military force. Bonaparte's imperfect training in politics and history made it possible for such visions as those which now arose to haunt his brain. The beneficence he had displayed already; for despotism he had had the finest conceivable training, first among the sluggish populations of the Italian states which he had reorganized, then in the myth of Egyptian conquest which he had created and felt bound to maintain, and lastly in the national disorders of a France shuddering at the possibility of a return either to the hideous excesses of the Terror or to the intolerable abuses of ecclesiasticism and absolute monarchy.

Among other dreadful curses incident to revolution and civil war is the stimulation of fanaticism. In his seizure of the supreme power the purpose of the First Consul was justified to himself, and his proCHAP. XXVI cedure was rendered tolerable to the nation at large by the scandalous intrigues and complets which were hatched like cockatrices' eggs in Review every foul cranny of the land. The conspirators stopped at nothing: bad faith, subornation, murder of every variety, from the dagger to the bowl. This gave the First Consul his chance to become himself the arch-intriguer, and as such he overmatched all his opponents, ultramontanes, radicals, and royalists. Finally only a few unreconstructed reactionaries were left from each of these classes, who, though exhausted and panting, still had the strength to be noisy, and occasionally to make a feint of activity. But in the various localities and classes of France each of the factions had numerous silent and inactive sympathizers who had surrendered only as they felt unable to keep up the uneven conflict. The flames of the volcano were quenched, and the gulf of the crater was bridged by a crust, but the lava of sedition boiled and seethed below. It is a well-known nostrum for civil dissension to stir up foreign conflict, and then to call upon the patriotism of men from all parties. To this the First Consul dared not openly resort. In fact, the indications are that if his enemies in France and his foes abroad had consented peaceably to the fulfilment of his now manifest ambitions, he would himself have been glad enough to secure without further fighting what he had gained by war, and to extend the influence of a Bonapartist France by steady encroachments rather than by exhausting hostilities. The word of every man has exactly the value which his character gives it, and treaties are worth the good faith of those who make them, not a tittle more. Neither of the parties to the general peace was exhausted, neither was really earnest. It was a bellicose age: war was then in the air, as peace is now. The rupture of the treaty made at Amiens was quite as much the work of George III. as it was of Bonaparte the First Cousul, and the two nations over which they ruled were easily led to renew the struggle. Nothing goes to prove that there was long premeditation on the part of either; but at the time and since, were it not for the wide-spread distrust in Bonaparte's character, popular opinion would have put the blame of renewed war more upon his opponent than on him. Thus far the angel and devil which struggle for possession of every man had waged a fairly even conflict, and the blame and praise of what is stigmatized as Bonaparte's conduct must be meted out to his foes in even measure. He and

IN THE MUSEUM OF VERSAILLES

ENGRAVED BY M. HAIDIR

MARIE-PAULINE BONAPARTE MADAME LECLERC, PRINCESS BORGHESE

FROM THE PAINTING BY ROBERT LEFEVRE

х.

his times had interacted one upon the other to a remarkably even CHAP. XXVI degree. But once launched on the carcer of personal aggrandizement, every hindrance to consuming ambition was ruthlessly east aside. Until 1812 the responsibility for inordinate bloodshed is all his own.

It is needless to dwell upon the period of the Empire in order to study Napoleon's character. It shines forth effulgent, but noxious. He remained personally what he had always been - imperious, laborious, unprincipled; but, on the other hand, kindly, generous, sensitive to the popular movements. His thirst for power became predominant; his lavish contempt for men and money displayed the abandon of a desperate parvenu; his passion for war burst all its bounds. Personal ambition eclipsed principle, expediency, shrewdness — in short, every quality which makes for self-preservation. The reason was not conscious despair, but unconscious desperation. Politically he had fought and won an easy but a decisive battle. Imperialism was firmly seated. The behavior of the French people was natural enough, but they lent themselves to his purposes with complete surrender. In this the world learned a lesson which should never be forgotten : that democracy is an excellent work-horse, but a poor charger; a good hack, but an untrustworthy racer. The interest of the plain man is in his daily life, his family, his business, his advancement. He cannot be an expert in foreign or domestic politics, in public law, or in warfare; expertness requires the exclusive devotion of a lifetime. Make the common person a theorist, and he is an ardent democrat, but a poor administrator. Hence the necessity in transition epochs for a wise constitution. It was not difficult to convince the French burgher that, all other forms of democratic administration having had a chance and having failed in times of war, the only one so far untried-that of delegating power to a single superior man-should have a fair trial, the more as the excellent man was at hand. Even in times of peace the hard-worked citizen either neglects his political duties altogether, or, performing them in a thoughtless routine, longs for some one he can trust to do his thinking and acting; in war, as far as we have had the opportunity to observe in ancient and modern times, his imperialism is avowed, and he demands a dictator. We have no reason to suppose that there is any democracy which could outlast twenty years of a herculean struggle for national life or death,

VOL. IV.-32

234

CHAP. XXVI and such the Franco-English wars which introduced this century Review seemed to the Frenchman of that time to be.

From the soldier's point of view, Napoleon had likewise such an easy triumph as has fallen to the lot of few commanders. His opponents were so conservative that their ideas were antiquated, his own strategy was so new and revolutionary that it dumfounded them. A favorite method of detraction is illustrated by the familiar story of Columbus's egg. What is once done, anybody can do. The strategic reputation of Frederick the Great is in our day first attacked by the so-called comparative method — that is, by comparing it with the achievements and system, not of his contemporaries, but of Napoleon, his successor; and then the strategic reputation of Napoleon is diminished by sneering at that of Frederick, with whose antiquated method the new one came into comparison and contact, to the complete disaster of the former. This vicious circle may be dismissed with contempt. Napoleon's strategic genius was, unlike any other talent he possessed, constructive and original. No doubt he studied Cæsar; no doubt he studied Maillebois; no doubt he studied the work of Turenne and of the great Frederick; no doubt he was a pupil of the giant soldiers who inaugurated and carried on the wars of the Revolution; but while others had pursued the same studies, it remained for him to devise and put into operation a strategy based upon past experience, but subversive of accepted dogmas, new, adapted to its ends, and founded on theories which, though modified in practice by the discoveries of an intervening century, have, when properly understood, never, not even to-day, been shaken in principle. His triumphs as a soldier, therefore, are his own; and it was not until all Europe had learned the lessons which he taught her generals by a series of object demonstrations lasting twenty years, that the teacher began to diminish in success and splendor. The persistent critics of Frederick have been asking and reiterating questions such as these: Why did not the king begin early in July, 1756? Why did he not storm the camp of Pirna? Why did he not continue the war in October? Why did he not renew hostilities the following year until forced to it? And so on, and so on. By this method they have shrunk the horizon to their own dimensions, and have imprisoned their victim within the pale of his faults; but a wider view and the historic background display his strategy in large outline, as illuminated by the light of his age; and thus the defeats of

PUBLICATION AUTHORIZED BY THE ARTIST.

NAPOLEON AT ST. HELENA.

FROM THE PAINTING BY L. KRATAE.

TYPOGRAVURE BOUSSOD, VALADON & CO., PARIS.

Kolin and Kunersdorf, as well as the victories of Leuthen, Rossbach, CHAP. XXVI Zorndorf, and Torgau, exhibit the Prussian general as the great genius which he was. It was not until Napoleon had taught his rivals what fighting ought to be that men could also pick and nag at him by asking why Waterloo did not begin four hours earlier, why more explicit directions were not given to Grouchy, why in 1814 the desperate man chose to cut off the line of his enemies' communications rather than withdraw into Paris and call the nation to arms; and so on, to infinity. Judged either historically or theoretically, the strategy of Napoleon is original, unique, and unexcelled. It is his greatest achievement, because his most creative.

CHAPTER XXVII

NAPOLEON'S PLACE IN HISTORY

EXHAUSTION—THE CHANGE IN NAPOLEON'S VIEWS—INTERMITTING POW-ERS—THEIR EXTINCTION—COMMON SENSE AND IDEALISM—THE MAN AND THE WORLD—THE PHILOSOPHY OF EXPEDIENCY—A MEDIAT-ING WORK—FRENCH INSTITUTIONS—TRANSFORMATION OF FRANCE— NAPOLEON AND ENGLISH POLICY—HIS WORK IN GERMANY—FRENCH INFLUENCE IN ITALY AND EASTERN EUROPE—NAPOLEON AND THE WESTERN WORLD.

CH. XXVII Summary

I F Napoleon's qualities as usurper, statesman, and warrior be as remarkable as they appear, why was his time so short, what were the causes of his decline, and what is his place in history? The causes of his decline may be summed up in a single word-exhaustion. There exists no record of human activity more complete than is that of Napoleon Bonaparte's life. In its beginnings we can see this worshiper of power stimulating his immature abilities in vain until, with reckless desperation, he closed the period of training and made his scandalous bargain with Barras; then, grown suddenly, inexplicably rich, becoming with better clothing, food, and lodging physically more vigorous, he seems mercilessly to drive the rowels into his own flanks until initiative, ingenuity, and ruthlessness are displayed with apparently superhuman dimensions. The period of achievement is short, but glorious in politics; the age of domination is long and exciting. Throughout both there is the same reckless physical excess and intellectual dissipation. Then comes the turn. Every human age has in it the germs of the next; we begin to die at birth, and the characteristic qualities and powers of one period diminish as those of the next increase. So it was with Napoleon. He compressed so much, both as regards the number and importance of events, 236

DEATH OF NAPOLEON I

ENGRAVED BY HINRY WOLD

into so short a space that his times are like those wrinkled Japanese CH. XXVII pictures which are made by shriveling a large print into a small compass — intense and deep, but unreal. To change the metaphor, he found the ship of state dashing onward, with her helm lashed and no one daring to take the task of the steersman in hand. He cut the lashings and laid hold. His unassisted efforts as a pilot gave the vessel a new course; but he had no steam or other mechanical power, no deus ex machina, to aid him; and as exhaustion followed, he seemed to be steering when, in reality, his actions were under the compulsion of events he was not controlling; and this continued until the wreck.

But the inertia of his powers resembled their rise so perfectly as to represent continuous growth, and thus to deceive observers: in a few years he had ordered the Revolutionary chaos of Western Europe to his liking, and the resultant organization worked by the principles he had infused into it. As he saw his imperfect and shallow theories of society successively confounded, he had no vigor left to reconstruct them and adapt himself to new situations. His efforts at the rôle of liberator throughout the Hundred Days deserve careful study. He simply could not yield or adapt himself, except in non-essentials. The shifts to which he had resort would have been ridiculous had they not been The governmental forms attempted by the Revolution had pathetic. been successively destroyed by the furious energy of Jacobinism: the Directory was but a compromise, and when it took refuge for safety in the army its performances seemed to the masses sure to bring back the Terror; the Consulate was only a disguised monarchy founded on military force; and as royalism was impossible, there seemed to vast numbers no other alternative than the Empire. That there was no other alternative was due to Napoleon's imperious character, now developed to its utmost extent. He was selfish, hardened, and, though active like his symbolic bee, without capacity for further development. His mother knew that he could not hold out; she said it, and saved money for a rainy day. He himself had haunting premonitions of this truth. His passion to perpetuate himself by founding a dynasty was the real basis for his warlike ardor. Profoundly moved, in fact awe-stricken, by the imperishable hatred of the older dynasties, and yet reveling in his military genius, he waged war ruthlessly and with zest, enjoying the discomfiture of his foes, and delighting in the

237

Summary

CH. XXVII exercise of his powers. But, after all, war was but a means. He frequently dwelt on the advantages of hereditary succession; he lingered with suspicious frequency over the satisfaction a dynastic ruler must feel in the devotion or, if not that, in the submissiveness of his people; he was hypersensitive to the slightest popular disturbance: and he must have foreboded his own fall, since he was accustomed to wear poison in an amulet around his neck, so that when the great crisis should arrive he might take his own life. "Ah! why am I not my grandson?" he longingly ejaculated.

This single cause of Napoleon's fall can be better seen in the record of his second captivity than in any other portion of his life. There is no such thing as absolute exhaustion short of death. But intermittent and flickering exertion is symptomatic of failing powers in a jaded horse; it forebodes the end in a worn-out man. Cheerful and busy at first, because recruited by a long and favorable sea-voyage, he set out in St. Helena at a racing gait to write history and mold the public opinion of Europe. Playful and energetic, he caught together the scanty remnants of his momentary grandeur, and emulated the masters of ceremony at the Tuileries in organizing a court and issuing edicts for the conduct of its little affairs. His life was to be that of a caged lion -caged, but yet a lion. The plan would not work. In the affairs of Longwood there were, as everywhere, hitches and irregularities. To Napoleon these soon became not the incidents, but the substance of life. With the departure of his secretaries the business of biographical composition became first irksome, then impossible, and the poor muse of history was finally turned out of doors. To regular exercise succeeded spasmodic over-exertion; complaint became the subject-matter for the exercise of both mind and tongue; daily association with kindly but second-rate persons checked the flow of great ideas; the combinations of Austerlitz and Wagram gave place to the small moves in a game of spite with a bureaucratic British governor. From the days of his boyhood until his alliance with Barras the exile had been a dreamy, vague, indefinite, unsuccessful fellow; his powers were not quickly developed. While he had France and Europe to work upon, he showed the extraordinary qualities repeatedly outlined, mind and hand, thought and deed, working together. Already jaded, his stupendous capacity became intermittent after the fatal armistice of Poischwitz; but it worked, for it still had the raw material of grand strategy and great politics to work on. This continued until after CH. XXVII Waterloo. That battle, not a great one in itself, was nevertheless epic, Summary both in its effects upon the world and in its ruin of the brains which had swayed the destinies of Europe for twenty years. Between the flight to Charleroi and the escape to the Bellerophon, Napoleon shows no pluck and no brains.

In actual captivity his mind was without a sufficient task and under no pressure from necessity. It consequently, though somewhat invigorated at first, intermitted more and more toward the close, working, when it did work, awkwardly and with friction, until the physical collapse came, and the end was reached. The attempts to remodel history, the efforts to delineate his own and others' motives, the specious summaries of his career and its epochs, the fragmentary expositions of his philosophy in ethics, politics, and psychology—all the stately volumes which bear his name, his literary remains, in fact, present a pitiful sight when closely examined. They are but the scoriæ of a burnt-out mind, but dust and ashes; a splendid mass, but an extinct volcano. It was only natural that his successors and admirers should seek to erect a more enduring foundation for his fame by collecting and carefully editing what he had written when at his best, when acting according to his momentary, normal impulse, and when, therefore, he had the least pose and the greatest sincerity. But it is a proof of their shrewdness that they selected and published less and less after Erfurt, and that out of the voluminous pen-product of St. Helena they chose a hundred and fifty pages which the "Correspondence," intended to be the most splendid monument to the Emperor's glory, could present as authentic biographical material.

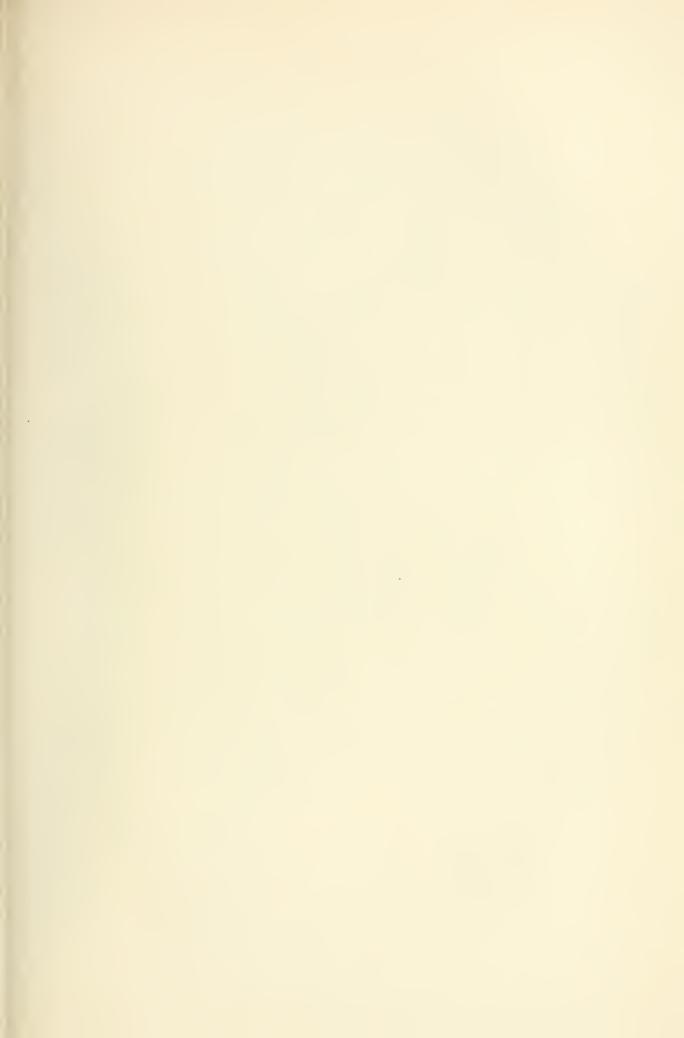

If, then, Napoleon was after all but a plain man, how did he become a personage? Simply because he was the typical man of his day, less the personal mediocrity; the typical burgher in personal character, the typical soldier in war, the typical despot in peace, and the typical idealist in politics; capable in all these qualities of analysis; capable, consequently, of being understood; capable of exhaustion and of being overwhelmed by combinations. In other words, he was really great because he was the shrewd common-sense personage of his age, considering the ideal social structure as a level of comfort in money, in shelter, in food, in clothes, in religion, in morality, in decency, in domestic good-nature, in the commonplace good things fairly divided as

[ÆT. 51

Summary

CH. XXVII far as they would go round. This was the side of his nature which in a period of social exhaustion planted him four-square as a social force, presented him to France as the rock against which the "red foolfury" of Jacobinism had dashed itself to pieces, and gave him for a time command of all hearts. Thus established, he at once fell heir to French tradition—that is, to the continuous policy of the nation in foreign and domestic affairs; which was that France should be the Jupiter in the Olympus of European nations by reason of her excellence both in beauty and in strength. Here was a temptation not to be resisted, the superlative temptation like that of the serpent and the woman, the chance to transcend by knowledge, the opportunity to "hitch his wagon to a star," to commingle the glory of France with his own until the elements were no longer separable. Into this snare, great as he was in his representative plainness, he fell, and in the ensuing confusion he not only destroyed himself, but brought the proud and splendid nation which had cherished him to the very verge of destruction. He could not sway one emancipated people without swaying an emancipated Europe, and this after Austerlitz he determined to do. Then he lost his head: his wisdom turned out to be nothing but adoration of mere expediency; his strength proved weakness when, with his imperial idealism, he braved in Spain the idealism of a true nation; his vaunted physical endurance disappeared with self-indulgence, the golden head and brazen loins fell in a crash as the feet of clay disintegrated before the storm of national uprisings.

This being true, we have in his career every element of epic greatness: a colossal man, a chaotic age, the triumph of principle, the reestablishment of historical equilibrium by means of a giant cast away when no longer needed. And this epic quality, which is not in the man alone nor in the age alone, appears when the two are combined, and then only. Looking at him in our cold light, he has every attribute of the commonplace adventurer; looking at the France of 1786 with our perspective, the people and the times appear almost mad in their frantic efforts to accomplish the work of ages in the moments of a single lifetime. Yet combine the two, and behold the man of the -third estate rising, advancing, reflecting, and then planting himself in the foreground as the most dramatic figure of public life, and you have a scene, a stage, and actors which cannot be surpassed in the range of history. To the end of the Consulate the action is powerful, because it represents reality: a nation unified, a people restored to wholesome CH. XXVII influences, peace inaugurated, constitutional government established. There is so far no tawdry decoration, no fine clothes, no posing, no But with the next scene, that of the Empire, the spectator berant. comes aware of all these annoyances, and more. The leading actor grows self-conscious, identifies himself with the public interest for personal ends and to the detriment of the nation, displays no moral or artistic self-restraint, and soon arranges every element so as to make his studied personal ambitions appear like the resultants of ominous forces which act from without, and against which he is donning the armor of despotism for the public good. The play becomes a human tragicomedy, and, verging to its close, ends like the tragedies of the Greeks, with a people betrayed and the force of the age chained to a horrid rock as the sport of the elements.

HENRI-GRATIEN, COUNT BERTRAND from the painting by paulsinppolate dilaroche

Was this the end, and did Napoleon have no place in history, as many historians have lately been contending? Far from it. From his couch of porphyry beneath the gilded dome on the banks of the Seine, "the" Emperor, though "dead and turned to clay," still exercises a powerful sway. The actual Napoleonic Empire had, as we have before remarked, a striking resemblance to those of Alexander and Charlemagne. Based, as were these, upon conquest, and continued for a little life by the idealism of a single person, it seemed like a brilliant bubble on the stream of time. But Alexander hellenized the civilization of his day, and prepared the world for Christianity; Charlemagne plowed, harrowed, and sowed the soil of barbarie Europe, making it receptive for the most superb of all secular ideals, that of nationality; Napoleon tore up the system of absolutism by the roots, propagated in the most distant lands of Europe the modern conception of individual rights, overthrew the rotten structure of the German-Roman empire, and in spite of himself regenerated the long-abused ideas of nationality and fatherland. It must be confessed that his own shallow political science, the second-hand Rousseauism he had learned from his desultory reading, had little to do with this, except negatively. One by one he saw his faiths made ridiculous by the violent phases of Jacobinism after it took control of the Revolutionary movement. His heart, his conscience, his intellect, all undisciplined, then revolted against the metaphysic which had misled him, and "ideologist" became his most contemptuous epithet. Controlled by

VOL. IV.-33

Summary

LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

Summary

CH. XXVII instinct and ambition, he nevertheless remained throughout his period the one thorough idealist among the men of action, Goethe being the superlative, transcendent genius of idealism among the thinkers. Each successive day saw his scorn of physical limitations increase, his impatience of language, customs, laws, of local attachment, personal fidelity, and national patriotism grow. The result was a fixed conviction that for humanity at large all these were naught. At last he planted himself upon the burgher philosophy of utility and expediency, putting his faith in the loyalty of his family, in homely dependence upon matrimonial alliance, in the passion of humanity for physical ease and earthly well-being. This was the concert by which he sought to create a federation of beneficent kingdoms that would win all men to the prime mover. Space and time rebelled; the lofty ideals of humanity and philosophy would not down; selfishness proved impotent as a support; the dreamer recognized that again he had been deceived. Haggard and exhausted, he finally turned, in the rôle of Napoleon Liberator, to the notion of nationality and of government swaved by popular will in all its phases. But it was too late. Instead of being the leader of a van, he had forgotten, in his own phrase, to keep pace with the march of ideas, and was a straggler in the rear, without a moral status or a devoted following.

All this is true; but it is equally true that much of his work endured both in France and in the eivilized world. In France, indeed, the work he did has been in some details only too enduring. History is there to tell us that the test of high civilization is not necessarily in great dimensions. Those histories of the ancient world in which humanity seems strange and distasteful, of Egypt, Phenicia, Babylon, and Assyria, were wide in extent and long in duration: those of Greece and Rome, whose poets, statesmen, legislators, and warriors are our despair, were small in proportion and comparatively short in duration, while they were normal and healthy; the world-empires of both were neither natural nor admirable. It will not do, therefore, to judge Napoleon by the length of his career, or by the standards of other times and different eircumstances. The centralization of administration in the commonwealth which he resented from the elutches of anarchy was probably essential to the rescue; the expediency which he deliberately cultivated in the Concordat, in the laws of the family and inheritance, and in the fatal Continental system, was possibly a statesman's palliative for momentary political disease. His artificial CH. XXVII aristocracy, his system of great fiefs, his financial shifts-who dares to say that these institutions did not meet a temporary want? Moreover, it is worth considering whether a direct reaction to moderate, sane republicanism from extreme and furious Jacobinism was possible at all, and whether a reaction from Napoleon's imperial democracy was not easier and the results more permanent. In other words, is it likely that the third French republic could have been the direct successor of the first? The question is certainly debatable. No pen can delineate the sufferings of France under Napoleonic institutions as that of Taine has so ably and scathingly done; his wonderful etching powerfully exhibits painful truths. But who is to blame if a nation is hampered by its administration, by a centralization it no longer needs, by social regulations which it has outgrown, by political habits which do not suit the age? Not alone the man who inaugurated them, for ends partly selfish but also partly statesmanlike; the people who timidly endure are responsible for the doom which will certainly overtake any nation living in a social and political structure antiquated and unsuitable.

One thing at least the new France has done with magisterial style: she has introduced into her political machinery respect for political habit. The French government of to-day is distinctly an outgrowth of conditions, and not of theories. Its constitution has none of the fatal marks of completeness which her other republican constitutions have borne; on the contrary, there never was a period in modern times when to the outsider French institutions seemed as crescive as they do to-day. And they have abundant material on which to work. There are signs that the system of nations as armed camps, for which Napoleon set the example, is breaking by its own weight; modern armies are mostly national schools controlled by scientific inquisitiveness and permeated by a civic spirit; the pacific federal system of the great European powers sometimes seems feeble and rickety, but it is in existence. Alliances are now federations for peace; the Triple Alliance is or was a federation for peace; so too the Sextuple Alliance, so energetic and persistent in its support of Turkey, has been a federation for peace. Perhaps the day is nearer than we think when a working system of international understandings, without appeal to war, whatever name be given to the practice, will be devised. Then

Summary

Summarv

CH. XXVII certainly, but long before, let us hope, France may anchor her liberties in a bill of rights, destroy judicial inquisition, begin to slacken the bonds of her prefectoral system, emancipate her universities and academies, regenerate public feeling as to the increase of population by modifying her laws of the family, and go on not only to populate her own fertile fields, but to make the magnificent colonies which she has acquired the future homes of countless children, a field for exerting her superfluous energy—in short, when she may slough off her now superfluous Napoleonic institutions.

It would be utterly unjust, however, to plead a justification of Napoleon solely by such a monumental fact as that he was in all likelihood the forerunner of modern France. Even when the country adopted him, his positive, direct influence for good was great. The Concordat, whatever its faults, partly secured a free church and a free state, separating thus what God had never joined together in holy wedlock; his splendid codes - for no matter who pondered and shaped them, they were his in execution — have guaranteed the perpetuity of civil equality not only in France, but, as the sequel has shown, throughout great expanses of Europe; the questions of a nation's right to its chosen ruler and government, agitated in a new form during the Hundred Days, were those with which succeeding generations were concerned until they were answered in the affirmative. The difference between the France of 1802 and that of 1815 is on one side painful, but on another side it is remarkably significant. The former was transitional and chaotic; the latter had that amazing but completed social union, stronger than any ever known in history, which has saved the country in succeeding storm-periods. In it there was respect for persons, for contract, for property; the administration was unitary, homogeneous, and active; the finances, though not regulated, were restored to vigor; and the processes were inaugurated by which the great cities of France have become healthful and beautiful, while at the same time the internal improvements of the country have been systematized and rendered splendid in their efficiency. Revolutionary concepts were so modified and assimilated that the efforts of the dynasties, when put to the test of public opinion, failed because they were felt to be absurd by the masses. It was one of Napoleon's aphorisms that "to have the right of using nations, you must begin by serving them well." Like a good burgher, he made his servants comfortable and happy. His example, moreover, was reflected abroad throughout Europe; and to the CH. XXVII millions of plain and not very shrewd inhabitants of other lands, the Revolution, as Napoleon had shaped it, lost many of the horrors with which Jacobinism, to the everlasting damnation of both the thing and its name, had clothed it. It is a question whether there was in existence a strong liberal France, such as idealists depict, that could pacifically have done this wonderful work. Examining and duly weighing the desperation of dynastic absolutism, it looks as if nothing but the counter-poison of Napoleon's militarism could have prevented its annihilating French liberalism. Without Napoleon the conservative liberalism of to-day would have been impossible.

THE FUNERAL CORTÈGE OF NAPOLEON IN THE PLACE DE LA CONCORDE,

Turning to the field of general history, there are certain facts, admittedly Napoleon's doing, which quite as certainly are among the most important factors of contemporary politics. Of themselves these would suffice to give him a high place in constructive history. In the first place, he deprived England of the monopoly in what had long been essentially and peculiarly her political ideal. What was the basis of the long conflict between England and France to which Napoleon fell heir? Was the struggle of these two glorious and enlightened sister nations a struggle for territorial ascendancy in Europe? Not entirely. Was it a life-and-death struggle for ascendancy in the Western World? No. The Seven Years' War had decided that question against France, and the American war for independence had in a sense evened the score in its decision against England; for the prize had been awarded to a new people. No; the conflict did not rage over this. What, then, was the Nothing less than a passion for the ascendancy of one of cause? these highest forms of civilization throughout the globe, including both Europe and America. This Anglo-Saxon, political, commercial religious, and social conception was after the Napoleonic wars no longer confined to Great Britain. Thence onward the great powers of Europe have been chiefly concerned, aside from their care for selfpreservation, in partitioning Africa and Asia among themselves; and this process is no sooner complete than they begin to murmur about the Monroe doctrine and to cast longing eyes toward Central and The state system which was once European has South America. become coextensive with the sphere on which we live, and this notion of world-domination so denounced when held by Napoleon has become the motive-power of every great modern civilization.

Summary

LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

CH. XXVII

Summary

If we consider the national politics of Europe beyond the boundaries of France, history again becomes a record of influences started by Napoleon's works, either of commission or of omission. Russia's grandeur as a European power appears to be largely due to the temporary extinction of Poland's hope for national resurrection. Had Napoleon, instead of playing his doubtful game with the grand duchy of Warsaw, turned into an autonomous permanency the scarcely known provisional government of Poland, which he actually inaugurated and which worked for a considerable time, and had he restored to its sway both the Prussian and Austrian shares in the shameless partition, we might have seen quite another result to the military migration of 1812. We can scarcely doubt, moreover, that Poland, restored under French protection, would have been a buffer state between Russia, Prussia, and Austria, rendering the crushing coalition an impossibility in 1813, while in 1814 the allies could probably never have crossed the French frontier, if indeed they had dared to go even so far in their march across Europe. But his positive achievement was quite as important. The Germany of to-day is a great federal state guided, but not dominated, by Prussia. What are its other important members? Bavaria, Würtemberg, and Baden - all three in their present extent and influence the creations of Napoleon; the nice balance of powers in the German Empire is due to his arrangement of the map. There is even a sense in which all Germany, as we know it, sprang full armed from his head. He not merely taught the peoples of central Europe their strategy, tacties, and military organization: it was he who carried the standard of enlightenment (in his own interest, of course, but still he carried it) through the length and breadth of their territories, and made its significance clear to the meanest intellect of their teeming millions. Thereafter the longings for German unity, for German fatherland, for the organization of German strength into one movement, could never be checked. The swarm of petty tyrants who had modeled their life and conduct on the example of Louis XIV., and who in struggling to vie with his villainies had debauched themselves and their peoples, was swept away by Napoleon's ruthlessness, to give place to the larger, more wholesome nationality of this century, which was destined in the end to inspire the surrounding nations with the new concept of respect, not alone for one's own nationality, but for that of others.

What French influence effected in Italy is a topic so recondite as to require separate discussion; for the results were not so immediate or CH. XXVII so dramatic as they were in Germany. But the destruction of petty governments was as ruthless as in the north; the ideas which marched in Bonaparte's ranks found at least a large minority of intelligent admirers among the invaded; and Italian unity, though won by a family he feared and abused, is in no doubtful sense indebted for its existence, not merely to Napoleon's age, but to the ideas he disseminated and to the efforts at a practical beginning which he made. As to Austria-Hungary, the new historical epoch which makes her essentially the empire of the lower Danube takes its rise from Napoleon's time and influence. The relaxation of her grasp on Italy has thrown her across the Adriatic for the territorial expansion essential to her position as a great power. It has been her mission to rescue by moral influence some of the fairest lands in the Balkan peninsula from waste and anarchy. Mere proximity is a powerful factor; the turbulence of Austrian local patriotism has been the seed of wholesome discontent among the Christian populations of Turkey, whose first awakening was largely due to the emissaries sent by Napoleon to fire the hearts of the oppressed and suffering subjects of that distracted land. Servia is one example of this; and in a sense the national awakening of Greece began with the hopes similarly aroused.

Another page of history which remains to be written is that which shall record the influence of Napoleon, direct and indirect, upon the destinies of the United States. The astounding magic of his name in our country is partly due to a quality of the American mind which makes its possessor the passionate and indiscriminating adorer of greatness in every form. The Americans are more French than the French in their admiration of power. But after all this is not the main reason for their interest in Napoleon. They are, dimly at least, aware of certain facts which have determined their history and made them an independent nation. Their first war for independence left them tributary to the mother-country both industrially and commercially. It was Napoleon who pitilessly, though slyly and indirectly, launched them into the second war with Great Britain, from which they emerged with some glory and some sense of defeat, but, after all, with the tremendous and permanent gain of absolute commercial independence. In the second place, their purchase of Louisiana, though understood by only a few at the moment, revolutionized their system both inside and outside.

Summary

CH. XXVII Summary

That momentous step destroyed the literal interpretation of the constitution, hitherto enslaving a congeries of jarring little commonwealths in the bondage of verbalism, because, though manifestly beneficent and necessary, it could be justified before the law only by an appeal to the spirit and not to the letter. Thenceforward Americans have steadily been enlarging their constitutional law by interpretation, and the apparent timidity of amendment which they display is simply due to the absence of necessity for revision as long as expansion by interpretation continues. But certainly quite as important as this was also the displacement, by the acquisition of that vast territory, of what may be called the national center of gravity. Until then the aspirations of Americans had been toward Europe; the public opinion of the country had until then demanded the largest possible intercourse with that continent compatible with freedom from political entanglement. Thereafter there was a change in their spirit: a continent of their own was open to their energies. For two generations their history has been concerned with exploration, with mechanical invention, and with solving the great problem of how to prevent an extension of slavery corresponding to the extension of territory. But nevertheless, steadily and vigorously two correlated concepts were propagating themselves: neglect of Europe, in order to expand and assimilate their recent acquisition; industrial exclusiveness, for the sake of this great home market which immigration, settlement, and the formation of new commonwealths was creating, not at the front door, but in the rear of the States stretching along the Atlantic. This resulted in a temporary "about-face" of the nation; and it is only now, when the prize of material greatness and of territorial unity has been secured, that the nation turns once more toward the rising sun, in order to get from older lands everything germane to its own civilization, and to assimilate these acquisitions, if possible, in realizing its own ideals of moral grandeur.

THE END.

NAPOLEON I FROM THE BUST BY CHAUDET, AFTER THE DEATH-MASK

The bust marks the place where stood the bed on which Napoleon died

HISTORICAL SOURCES

In making this book I have had access to the following original sources:

I. Unpublished Documents: a, The papers of the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs during the years of Napoleon's life, including those of the "Fonds Napoléon." b, The unpublished correspondence of Napoleon kept in the French Ministry of War, including the "Volumes Rouges" and the "Dossier de l'Empereur." This is as voluminous at least as the published correspondence, but of personal and technical rather than political interest. I have also consulted the archives of the General Staff in the same building concerning many events connected with Napoleon's career. c, The papers of Napoleon's youth known as the Ashburnham papers, but now owned by the Italian government, and kept in the Laurentian library at Florence. Since I used them they have been published by Masson and Biagi, but the editors have corrected the text to an extent which is in our day not considered scientific. d, The despatches of American diplomatists resident abroad during Napoleon's career. e, Certain papers from the Record Office in London relating to Napoleon's surrender and his life in St. Helena. f, Certain papers of Henri Beyle containing characterizations of Napoleon and contemporary anecdotes concerning him. These were translated by Jean de Mitty from a cipher manuscript in the public library at Grenoble. g, A considerable number of Napoleon's letters kindly put at my disposal by various collectors.

II. Published Official Papers. Within the last few years original documents concerning the Napoleonic epoch have been printed very extensively. Nearly all the important books are based on archival research, and the respective authors generally print a certain number of despatches or reports in justification of their conclusions. The following collections are the most important: a, The Correspondence of Napoleon. b, Official Papers of the Helvetic Republic. c, Diplomatic Correspondence between Prussia and France, 1795–97. d, Lord Whitworth's despatches. e, Ducasse's Supplement to Napoleon's Correspondence. f, The Papers of Gentz and Schwarzenberg. g, The Papers of Metternich. h, Napoleon's Letters to Caulaincourt.

i, Napoleon's Letters to King Joseph. j, The Letters of King Jerome, Queen Catharine, and King Frederick of Würtemberg. k, The Papers of Castlereagh, Banks, Jackson, and other English statesmen of the time. 7. Diplomatic Correspondence between Russia and France. m. The Archives of Count Woronzoff. n, Diplomatic Correspondence of the Sardinian ambassadors at St. Petersburg. o, Diplomatic Correspondence of the ministers of the republic and kingdom of Italy. p, Lecestre's Unpublished Letters of Napoleon. This list might be extended almost indefinitely by adding such collections as Ducasse's Memoirs of King Joseph, Napoleon's Letters to Josephine, the Correspondence of Eugène, etc., etc.; but these older books are too well known to require enumeration, and, though authentic, are only semiofficial or personal publications.

III. Contemporary Memoirs. Those titles given in the bibliography are, with a few exceptions, the most valuable. The positive, literal truth of the so-called memoirs attributed to Bourrienne, Constant, Caulaincourt, Barras, Fouché, and Avrillon is very slender. They are all made by skilful patchwork, and must be read with the utmost caution. In fact, it is doubtful whether, with the exception of Barras's scandalous record, they have, strictly speaking, any right to the names they bear. This much negative value they have: that they show how history can be falsified in one interest or another. In this they resemble what was Napoleon's own literary bequest, the Memorial and other dictations written down at St. Helena.

The list of books appended makes no pretense to completeness. It contains, however, the titles of such volumes as will assure the reader a complete view of Napoleon and his times from the best sources.

My thanks for special courtesies are due to the officers of the Bibliothèque Nationale of France, to Messrs. Girard de Rialle and Louis Farge of the French Foreign Office, to Commander Margueron and M. Brun of the French War Department, to Mr. Hubert Hall of the Record Office in London, and to Mr. Albert Vignaud, Secretary of the American Embassy in Paris. To Mr. Eustis and Mr. Bayard, American ambassadors in Paris and London respectively, I am indebted for the courtesies shown me by the French and English officials, unknown to me either personally or by name, who opened the doors of their archives to a stranger.

It will be understood that the absence of references, notes, and discussions throughout the preceding pages is due to the publishers' plan, which, in deference to what seems to be the present taste of the reading public, excluded them as interfering with the course of the narrative.

Princeton, August 1, 1897.

- Abdurrahman Gabarti. Journal pendant l'occupstion fran-caise en Egypte, suivi d'un l'récis de la méme campagne psr Mou'allem Nicolss-El-Turki, tr. de l'arabe par A. Cardin. Par.,
- Mou' allem Nicolss-El-Turki, tr. de l'arabe par A. Cardin. Par., 1338. 8°.
  Abell, Mrs. L. E. B. Recollections of the emperor Napoleon during the first three years of his captivity. Lond., 1845. 12°.
  Abell, Mrs. L. E. B. Recollections of the emperor Napoleon on the Island of St. Helens. 3d ed., rev. by her daughter, Mrs. C. Johnston. Lond., 1873. 12°.
  Adam, A. Aus dem Leben eines Schlachtenmalere, Selbstbiographie nebste. Anh. Hrsg. v. H. Holland. Stuttg., 1886. 8°.
  Adolphus, J. History of England from the accession to the decease of king George III. Lond., 1840.45. 7 v. 8°.
  Alison, Sir A. History of Carlope from the commencement of the French Revolution, in 1789, to the Restorstion of the Burbons, in 1815. Par., 1841-42. 10 v. 8°.
  Alison, Sir A. Liscoil Lord Castlercagh and Sir Charles Stewart, the 2d and 3d marquesses of Londonderry ; with snnals of contemporsry events. Edinb., 1861. 3 v. 5° Allonville, Comte d', Mémoires secrets de 1770 à 1830. Par., 1839-45. 6 v. 8°.

- 1838-45. 6 v. 8°.
  Amthiche Sammlung der Acten aus d. Zeit d. Helvetischen Republik (1798-1803) im Anschluss sn d. Sammlung d. ältern. eidg. abschiede. Hrsg. auf Anordnz, d. Bundesbehörden. Besrh.
  v. J. Strickler. Bern., 1886-89. 3 Bde. 4°.
  Angeberg, d. Le Congrès de Vlenne et les traités de 1815, pré-cédé et suivi des actes diplomatiques, avec intr. hist. par M. Capefigue. Psr., 1864. 2 v.
  Angiemont, E. d'. Le Duc d'Enghien, histoire-drame. Par., 1832. 8°.

- Anti-Jacobin, or Weekly Examiner. 1st ed. Lond., 1797-98.
- Arnault, A. V. Sonvenirs d'un sexsgénaire. Par., 1833. 4 v.
- Artaud de Montor, F. Histoire des souverains pontifes ro-msins. Per., 1347-49. 8 v. 12°. Ashton, J. English earicature and sstire on Nspoleon I. Lond., 1884. 2 v. New ed., 1885.

- msins. Per., 1847-49. 8 v. 12°.
  Ashton, J. English earicature and satire on Napoleon I. Lond., 1884. 2 v. New ed., 1885.
  Antommarchi, F. Mémoires: ou, Les deroiers moments de Napoléon. Brux, 1825. 2 v. 8°.
  Aster, K. H. Gefechte u. Schlachten bei Leipzig im October, 1813. 2 Ausg. Dread., 1852-53. 2 Bde. 8°.
  Aster, K. H. D. Kriegsereignisse zwischen Peterswalde, Pirna, Königstein u. Priesten im Aug., 1813, u. die Schlacht bei Kulm. Dresd., 1845. 8°.
  Aster, K. H. Schilderung d. Kriegsereignisse in und vor Dresden, vom 7 März bis 28 August, 1813. 2 Ausg. Lpz., 1856. 8°.
  Auckland. Journal and correspondence of Willism, Lord Auckland. Lond., 1861. 4 v. 8°.
  Aucoc, L. Conférences sur l'administration et le droit sdministratif, faites à l'École des ponts et chsussées. 3 éd. Par., 1885-86. 2 v. 8°.
  Aucos, L. Le conseil d'Etst sysnt et depuis 1789, ses transformations, ses travanx et son personnel: Etnde hist. et bibliographique. Par., 1876. 8°.
  Audiffret-Pasquier, E. D., Duc d'. Histoire de mon temps: mémoires publ, par le Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier. 5 éd. Par., 1894. 6 v. 8°.

- Audiffret-Pasquier, E. D., Duc d'. History of my time, me-moirs: ed. by the Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier, tr. by C. E. Roche The Revolution, the Consulate, the Empire. N. Y., 1893-94.
- 3. V. S. A. Le Directoire exécutif, in Rambaud et Lavisse, Histoire générale. t. VIII. Par., 1898. 3°.
   Avrillon, Mme. Mémoires sur la vie privée de l'Imp. José-phine, sa famille, et sa cour. Par., 1833. 2 v. 12°.
- Baader, J. Streiflichter auf die Zeit d. tlefsten erniedrigung Dentschlande oder die Reichsstadt Nürnberg in d. Jøhren 1801-1806. Nürnberg, 1878.
  Ballac, J. B. Nouvelle chronique de la ville de Bayonne, par un Bayonnais. Bayonne, 1827-28. 2v. 8°.
  Bailleu, P. Preussen und Frankreich von 1795 bis 1807 : diplo-matische Correspondenzen. Lpz., 1881-87. 2 v. 8°. (Publ. a. d. K. preuss. Stattsarchiv. Bdc. 8, 29.)
  Barante, A. C. P. Burglère de, Etudes historiques et blo-grøphiques. Nouv. éd. Par., 1858. 2 v. 18°.

WM. M. SLOANE.

- Barante, A. G. P. Brugière de, Histoire du Directoire de la République française, Par., 1855. 3 v. S*.
  Barante, A. G. P. Brugière de, Souvenirs, 1782-1866. Publ. par son petit-fils C. de Barante. Par., 1890-95. 5 v. S*.
  Barbé Marbois, F. de. Journal d'un déporté non jugé, on Dé-portation, en violation des lois, decrétée le 18 Fructidor an V. (4 Sept., 1797). Par., 1834. 2 v. S*.
  Barni, J. Napoléon 1. et son historien M. Thiers. Par., 1865. 12*.
- Barral, Georges, L'épopée de Waterloo: narration nouvelle des cent jours et de la campagne de Belgique en 1815. Par., 1895. 8°.
- 1895. 8°.
  Barral-Montferrat, Marquis de, Dix ans de psix armée entre la France et l'Angleterre 1783-1793. 1er v. Par., 1893. 8°.
  Barras, P. F. J. N., Comte de. Mémoires; pub. avec une in-troduction générsle, des préfaces et des appendices par G. Duruy. Par., 1895. 4 v. 8°.
  Batjin, N. Histoire de l'Empereur Napoléon Ier. Lond., 1867.
- Batjin, N. Histoire de l'Empereur Napoléon Ier. Lond., 1867. 2 v. 8.
  Baudouin, A. Ancedotes historiques du temps de la Restaura-tion, suivies de recherches sur l'origine de la presse, son dé-veloppement, son influence sur les ceprits, ses rapports avec l'opinion publique, les mesures restrictives apportées à son ex-ercice. Par., 1853. 12.
  Baungarten, H. Geschichte Spaniens von Ausbruch d. fran-zösisch. Revolution his suf unsere Tage. Lpz., 1865-71. 3 v. 8°.
  Baungarten, H. Geschichte Spaniens von Ausbruch d. fran-zösisch. Revolution his suf unsere Tage. Lpz., 1865-71. 3 v. 8°.
  Baunset, L. F. J. de, Mémoires ancedotiques sur l'intérieur du palais, 1805-14. 2 éd. Par., 1827. 4 v. 8°.
  Beauchampe, A. de. Histoire des campagnes de 1814-15. Par., 1816-17. 4 v. 8°.
  Beaunampe, A. de. Histoire des campagnes de 1814-15. Par., 1816-17. 4 v. 8°.
  Beaunartale, le prince Eugène de. Mémoires et corre-spondance politique et militaire. Publ., annotés et mis en ordre par A. Du Casse. Par., 1858-60. 10 v. 8°.
  Beauleu-Marconnav, Karl Frhr. v. Karl v. Dalberg n. seine Zeit, zur Charakteristik d. Fursten Frimas. Weimar, 1879. 2 Bde. 8°.
  Beer, A., Geschichte des Weithandels im XIX Jahrhunderte, Wien 1964. 26. 28 de
- Beer, A., Geschichte des Welthandels im X1X Jahrhunderte, Wien, 1864-84. 2 Bde.
   Beer, A. Zehn Jahre österreichischer Politik. 1801-1810. Lpz., 1877. 8°.
- Beer, A. D. Orientalische Politik Oesterreichs seit 1774. Prag. 1883. 8°.
- Beiträge zur Gesch. d. Feldzüge v. 1813-14, von e. Offizier d. sl-

- 1883. 8°.
  Beiträge zur Gesch. d. Feldzüge v. 1813-14, von e. Offizier d. sl-liirten Armee. Berl., 1815. 8°.
  Beiträge zur Gesch. d. Feldzüge 1814-15 in Frsnkreich, in be-sond. Beziehung suf d. Commando d. Kronprinzen v. Wür-temberg, herausg. v. d. Offizieren d. Würtemb. Gen. Quart. Staahs. Stuttg., 1818. 3 Hefte, mit 12 plän.
  Beiträge zur Gesch. d. Franzos-russ. Feldzugs im Jähre 1812. Bresl., 1814. 8°.
  Beiträge zur Geschichte d. Jähres 1813, von einem höhern Offizier d. Freuss. Armee. Potsdan, 1843. 2 Bde. mit Beilagen.
  Beiträge zur Geschichte d. Jähres 1813, von einem höhern Offizier d. Freuss. Armee. Potsdan, 1843. 2 Bde. mit Beilagen.
  Beiträge zur Geschichte d. Jähres 1813, von einem höhern Offizier derung in Frankreich unter Ludwig XVI., etc. Berl., 1834.
  Beiträge zur Geschichte d. Krieges vom Jähre 1806 u. 07. oder Bemerkk. Berichtigungen u. Zusätze zu d. in Theile des Werkes, etc. Breslau, 1836. (Contains the memoirs of Oginski, Engen's von Würtemberg., and Bennigsen.)
  Beiträge zur Geschichte d. Ruckzugs d. Franzosen nach d. Schlacht bei Leipziz. [Lzz., 1815. 8°.
  Beiträge zur Geschichte d. deutschen Freiheitskriege in den Jahren 1813-14. 4 neu hearb. Aufl. v. P. Ooldschmidt. Bre-men, 1833. 2 Bde. 8°.
  Beiltard, A. D. Mémoires (1792-1831), recueillis et mis en ordre par M. Vinet. Par., 1842. 3 v. 8°.
  Belluard, A. D. Mémoires (1792-1831), recueillis et mis en ordre par M. Vinet. Par., 1842. 3 v. 8°.
  Belluard, A. D. Mémoires (1792-1831), recueillis et mis en ordre par M. Vinet. Par., 1842. 3 v. 8°.

- 1826. 8°.
  Bellune, Claude Victor Perrin, duc de, pair et maréchal de France. Mémoires mis en ordre par son fils atné, Victor St. Ferrin. Par., 1847. v. 1. (No niore publ.)
  Béranger, P. J. de. Mis biographie, suivie d'un appendice 3 éd. Par., 1859. 12°.
  Bernays, Guillaume. Schickssle d. Grossherzogth. Frankfurt u. seiner Truppen. Eine kulturhistor. u. militär. Studie sus der Zeit d. Rheinbundes. Berl., 1882. 8°.

Bernhardi, Th. v. Denkwürdigkeiten a. d. Leben des Kaiserl. russ. Generals v. d. Infanterie Carl Frdr. Grafen v. Toll. 2 verm. Aufl. Lpz., 1865. 4 Bde.
Bernhardi, Th. v. Geschichte Busslands n. der europäisth. Politik, 1814 bis 1831. Lpz. 1863-77. 3 v. 8<sup>2</sup>. (Staatengesch. d. neuesten Zeit. Bde. 7, 21, 23.)
Berthezène, P. Souvenirs militaires de la République et de l'Empire (1798-1815); publ. par son fils. Par., 1855. 2 v. 8<sup>2</sup>.
Bertin, G. La campagne de 1812, d'après des témoins oculaires. Par. o. d. 8<sup>2</sup>.
Bertrand, G. La campagne de 1813, d'après des témoins oculaires. Par. (1896). 8<sup>2</sup>.
Bertrand, A. L'organisation frao;aise; le gouvernement, l'ad-ministration. Par., 1882. 12<sup>2</sup>.
Bertrand, Général H. G., Ed. Guerre d'Orieot. Campagnes d'Egypte et de Syrie. Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire de Napoléon dictés par lui-même à Sainte-Hélène et publiés par le Gen. Bertrand. Par., 1847. 2 v. 8<sup>2</sup>. Atlas fol.
Besancenet, A. de. Le Général Dommartin en Italie et en Egypte. Ordres de service. Correspondauce, 1789-1799. Par., 1880. 12<sup>2</sup>.
Beugnot, Comte, J. C. Mémoires (1783-1815), publ. par le comte A Renguet son patie file. 9 del Der 1990.

- 1880. 12°.
  Beugnot, Comte, J. C. Mémoires (1783-1815), publ. par le comte A. Beugnot, com petit-fils. 3 éd. Par, 1889. 8°.
  Beyle, H. (Stendhal, pseud.). Vie de Napoléon : fragments. 2 éd. Par, 1877. 12°.
  Bingham, Gen, G. R. Diary of Napoleon's voyage to St. Helens. Bigarré, Général. Ménoires 1775-1813. Par, 1893. 8°.
  Biggnon, L. P. Histoire de France sous Napoléon : redigée et terminée par A. Ernouf. Par., 1838-50. 14 v. 8°.
  Biggnon, L. P. Souvenirs d'un diplomate, La Pologne, (1811-13), précédéa d'une notice hist, sur la vie de l'auteur par M. Miguet. Fur., 1864.
- Précédés d'une notice filst, sur la transforme de la précédés d'une notice filst, sur la transforme de la Baset, R. The History of the Reign of George III to the ter-mination of the late War. Lond., 1803. 6 v. 8° Blanc, L. Histoire de la Révolution française. Par., 1847-62. 12 v. 8°.
- 12 v. 8-.
  Nouvelle éd. ornée de 600 gravurea. Par., 1881. 2 v. 4<sup>o</sup>.
  Blanc, A. E. Napoléon Ier : Ses institutions civiles et admioiatratives. Par., 1880. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  Blocqueville, A. L. d'Eckmühl. Le Maréchal Davout, Prince d'Eckmuhl, raconté par les siena et par lui-même. Par., 1879-80. 4 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
- Blocqueville, A. L. d'Eckminh, Le Maréchal Davout, Frince d' Eckmuhl, racouté par les siena et par lui-même. Par., 1879-80. 4v. 8°.
  Bockenheimer, C. E. Erinnerungen an die Geschichte d. Stadt Mainz in d. Jahren 1813 u. '14. Mainz, 1863. 8°.
  Bogdanowitsch, M. Geschichte dea Feldzuges im Jahre 1812, mach den zuverlassigsten Quellen. Ans d. Russ. v. G. Baumgarten. Lpz., 1862-63. 3 Bde. 8°.
  Bogdanowitsch, M. Geschichte dea Krieges im Jahre 1813 für Deutschlands Unabhängigkeit. Ausd. Russ. mit Geoehmigung d. Autors von A. S. St. Petersb., 1863-69. 2 Bde.
  Bogdanowitsch, M. Geschichte d. Krieges 1814 in Frankreich u. d. Sturzes Napoleons I., nach d. zuverlassigsten Quellen. Ans d. Russ. von G. Baumgarten. Lpz., 1866. 8°.
  Böhtlingk, A. Napoléon Booaparte: seine Jugend und sein Emporkommen (1769-1801). 2 Ausg. Lpz., 1853. 2 v. 8°.
  Böhtlingk, A. Napoléon Enopaparte u. d. Rastatter Gesandtenmord: ein Wort an meine Herren Kritiker. Lpz., 1883. 8°.
  Bonaparte, J. F. Critique littéraire aous le premier Empire. Publ. park. Colincamp. Paris, 1863. 2 v. 8°.
  Bonaparte, Louis. Documents historiques et Réflexions sur le gouvernement de la Hollande. (Nouv. éd.) Par., 1820. 3 v. 8°.

- Bonaparte, Lucien. Réponse aux Mémoires du général La-marque sur les faits relatifs à 1815. Lond., 1835. 8°. Bonaparte, Lucien, et ses mémoires (1775-1840), ed. by T. Jung.
- Bonnal, Edm. 8°. Bonnal, Edm. 8°. Bonnal, Edm. Chute d'une république: Venise, d'après les archives secrètes de la République. Par., 1885. 12°. Bonnal de Ganges. La génie de Napoléou. Par., 1896. 2 v.

- Bonnal de Gunges. La gune de Imperied 1 any recti en la la serbie 12.
  Boppe, A. Documents inédita sur les relations de la Serbie avec Napoléon 1, 1809-14. Extrait de l'Otatebbina, livres xix et xx. Belgr, 1888. 8°.
  Borcke, J. v. Kriegerleben, 1806-15. Nach dessen Aufzeichng. bearb. von Leszczynski. Berl., 1888. 8°.
  Bosse, R. H. B. von. Übersicht d. französischen Staatswirthschaft. Brauns-lww, 1806. 2 Thie.
  Botta, C. Storia d'Italia dal 1789 al 1814. Torino, 1824. 8 v.
  Boulay de 13 Maurthe, Counte. Le Directoire et l'expédition d'Expite: Étude sur les tentatives du Directoire pour communiquer avec Bonaparte, le secourir et le ramener. Par., 1885. 12°.

- Instant d'avec bonnparte, le secontri et la ramener. Far, 1885. 12°.
  Boulay de la Meurthe, Comte de. Les dernières années du Duc d'Enchien. (1801-1804.) Par, 1886. 12°.
  Boulay de la Meurthe, Comte de., F.d. Documents sur la négociation du concordat. Par., 1891-95. 4 v. 8°.
  Bourgeois, R. Relation fid le et détaillée de la dernière campagne de Bonaparte terminée par la bataille de Mont Saint Jean, ditte de Waterloo ou de la Belle Allianee, par un témoin oculaire, Par., 1815. 8°.
  Bourgeois, R. Tableau de la campagne de Moscou en 1812. Par., 1814. 8°.
  Bourgeois, R. Tableau de la campagne de Moscou en 1812. Par., 1814. 8°.
  Bourgoing, P. de. Hinéraire de Napoléon I. de Smorgoni à Paria, épisode de la guerre de 1812. Premier extrait dea mém. militaires et politiques inédits. Par., 1862.
  Bourrienne, I. A. F. de. Mémoires sur Napoléon, le Directoire, le Conanlat, l'Empire, et la Restauration. Paris, 1829-31.

- toire, le Conanlat, l'Empire, et la Restanration. Paris, 1829-31. 8 v. 8°.
  Bourrienne, L. A. F. de, Memoirs of Napoleon Bonaparte, ed. with prel, and notes by R. W. Phipps. N. Y., 1889. 4 v. 8°.
  Bouvrier, F. Les premiers combats de 1814. Prologue de la campagne de France dans les Vosgez, Par., 1836. 8°.
  Boygen, H. v. Erinnerungen aus dem Leben d. Gen. Feld-marschalls H. v. B. ausseinen Nachlass im Auftrage d. Familie, hrag. v. F. Nippold. 3 Thie. Lpz., 1889-90. 8°.
  Brandt, Heinrich. Aus dem Leben des Generals der Infan-terie von Brandt. 2° Auftage. 3 Thie. Berl., 1870-82.
  Bréaut, J. des Marlots. 1812. Lettre d'un capitaine de eui-rassiers sur la campagne de Russie. Publiée par J. A. Léher. Par., 1885. 18°.
  Broglie, A. C. L. V., Duc de. Souvenira. 1785-1870. Par., 1886-87. 4 v. 8°.
  Brougham. Historical sketches of atatesmen who figurished in the time of George 111. Par., 1839.
  Browning, O. England and Napoleon in 1803, being the de-spatches of Lord Whitworth and othera, now first printed. Lood., 1887. 8°.
  Brunetlère, F. Etudes critiques sur l'histoire de la littérature française. Paris, 1830-30. 5 v. 12°.
  Buchez, P. B. J., et Roux-Lavergne. P. C. Histoire parlemen-taire de la Révolution française, ou Journal dee assemblées nationales, depuis 1789 juaqu'eo 1815. Par., 1833-1838. 40 v. 8°.
  Buchez, P. J. B. Histoire parlementaire de la Révolution fran-caise. 2 éd., revue et entièrement remaniée par l'auteur, eu collaboration avec MM Jules Baatide, E. S. de Bois-le-Comte et Q. Ott. Par., 1845-47. 6 v. 12°.
  Buchergham. Memoirs of the court and esbinets of George 111. by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos. Lond., 1853-55. 4 v. 8°.
  Bulchz, A., Éd. Bourrienne et ses ereurs volontaires et involon-tures; eu, Obs. sur acs mémoires; par Eellaard, Gourgand, ustres; eu, Obs. sur acs mémoires; par Eellaard, Gourgand,
- 4 v. 8°. Buloz, A., Éd. Bourrienne et ses erreurs volontaires et involon-taires; on, Obs. sur ses mémoires: par Belliard, Gourgaud, d'Aure, de Survilliers, Meneval, Bonacossi, d'Eckmühl, Mas-sias, Boulay de la Meurthe, de Stein, Cambacérès. Par., 1830. 2 v. 2
- alss, boung de la Mentale, de Stein, Cambacter, Fail, Four-2 v. 8.
  Burghersh, Lord. (John Fane, Earl of Westmoreland). Memoir of the Operations of the Allied Armies under Prince Schwarzenberg and Marshal Blücher, 1813-14. Lond., 1822. 8*.
  Burghersh, Lord. Memoiren üb. d. Operationen d. Verbün-deten heere nuter dem Fürsten Schwarzenberg u. dem Feld-marshall Elineher wahrend des endes 1813 u. 1814. Aus d. Engl. von J. W. Schreiber. Berl., 1844, 8*.
  Burkersroda, v. D. Sachsen in Russland: ein Beitrag z. Ges-chichte des russ. Feldzugs im Jahre 1812, besond. im Bezuga. d. Schicksal d. K. Sächs, Truppen-Abtheil bei d. grossen fraozös. Armee. Naumburg, 1846. 8*.
  Buturlin, Hist. militaire de la campagne de Russie en 1812. Par., 1824. 2 v. 8*. Atlas, 4*.
  Buturlin, Tableau de la campagne d'antompe de 1813 eo Alle-magne. 2<sup>e</sup> éd. rev. Par., 1818. 8*.

- Cadet de Gassicourt, Ch. L. Voyage en Autriche, en Mora-vie et en Bavière, fait à la suite de l'armée française en 1809. Paris, 1818. 8°.

- Taria 1818. 8.
  Cadoudal, S. G. de. Georgea Cadoudal et la Chouannerie. Par, 1837. 8°.
  Campbell, Sir N. Napoleon at Fontaineblean and Elba. 1814– 1815. Lond., 1869. 8°.
  Cantu, C., Ed. Corrispondenze di diplomatici della repubblica, e del regno di Italia 1796-1814. Compilazione archivistica. Vol. 1°. Milano, 1884. 8°.
  Carnot, S. H. Mémoires, par son fils. Par., 1861-64. 2 v. 8°.
  Castellane, B. E. V. E., le Maréchal de. Journal . . . 1804-62. 2 éd. Par., 1895-97. 5 v. 8°
  Castero, Milano durante la dominazione napoleonita. Milano, 1850. 8°.

- Castro. Milano durante la dominazione napeleonita. Milano, 1880. 8°.
  Castro. Storia d'Italia dal 1799 al 1814. Milano, 1881. 8°.
  Caulaincourt. Souvenirs du duc de Vicence. Recuellis et publiés par Charlotte de Sor (Mme. Oilleaux-Désormeaux). 4 éd. Par., 1837. 2 v. 8°.
  Cerini, Cl. F. X. v. D. Feldzüge d. Sachsen la d. Jahre 1812 u. 1813. Aus d. bewährt. Quellen gezogen u. dargestellt von e. Stabsofizier. Dresden, 1821. 8°.
  Chabot-Arnault. Histoire des flottes militaires. Par., 1889. 8°.
  Chandray, G. Histoire de flottes militaires. Par., 1889. 8°.
  Channbray, G. Histoire de l'expédition de Russie, 1812. 3 éd. Par., 1839. 8°.
  Channing, W. E. Remarks on the life and character of Napoleon Bonaparte. Edinb., 1837. 16°.
  Chaptal, J. A., Conte de Chanteloup. Mes sonvenirs aur Napoléon; publ. par A. Chaptal. Par., 1893. 8°.
  Charras, J. B. A. Histoire de la guerre de 1815. Waterloo avec un atlas. 6 éd. Par., 1869. 3 v. 8°.
  Charras, J. B. A. Histoire de la guerre de 1813. en Allemagne. Jordence. Loud., 1894. 2 v. 8°.
  Charras, J. B. A. Histoire de la guerre de 1813. en Allemagne. 2 éd. Par., 1870. 8°.
  Charras, J. B. A. Histoire de la guerre de 1813. en Allemagne. 2 éd. Par., 1870. 8°.
- Chateauhriand, F. A. de. Mémoires de Bonaparte. Par., 1800. 8°. (Œuvrea, v. 3.)

- Cobbett, W. Facts and observations relative to the peace with Bonuparte. Phil., 1802. 8°. Cochburn, Henry. Memorials of his time. New cd. Edinb.,
- 1874. 16<sup>5</sup>. Coignet, Capt. Les cahiers (1799–1815) publ. d'après le MS. orig, par le Larchey. Nouv. éd., rev. et cor. Par., 1889. 12<sup>5</sup>. Coletta, P. Storia dei reame di Napoli dai 1734–1825. Par.,
- Colomb, E. v. Blücher in Briefen aus den Feldzügen 1813-15. Stattig., 1876. S<sup>o</sup>.
- Stattg., 1876. S°.
  Colomb, F. A. von. Aus dem Tagebuche. Streifzuge, 1813–14.
  Berl., 1854. 8°.
  Consalvi, H., Cardinal. Mémoires, avec une intr. et des notes par J. Crétineau-Joly. Ces méun, publ. pour la première foia sont enrichts du fac-simile de 8 antographes précieux. Pur., 1864. 9°.
- 1864. Constant de Rebecque, H. B. Cours de politique const., on, Coll des ouvrages publ. sur le gonvernement représentatif, avec une intr. et des notes par Ed. Laboulaye. Par., 1861. 2 V.
- Constant de Rebecque, B. Mémoires sur les Cent-Jours.
- Constant de Rebecuto, 2.
  Par, 1820-22. 2. v. 8<sup>2</sup>.
  Copies of original letters from the army of Gen. Bonaparte in Exypt, with an eng. tr. Lond., 1798-1800. 3 pts. 12<sup>5</sup>.
  Coppi. Annali d'Italia dal 1750-1807. Rom., 1849. 8<sup>2</sup>.
  Cornwallis. Correspondence ed. by Charles Ross. Lond., 1859. 8 v. 8<sup>5</sup>.

- 1850. 3 v. 8°.
  Correspondance de l'armée française en Egypte, interceptée par l'escadre de Nelson. Trad. en franç., suivie d'observations par E. T. Simon. Par., an vii. 8°.
  Corte. Battaglie di S. Michele e Mondovi. Torino, 1846.
  Coston, F. G., Baron de, Elographie des premières années de Napoléon Bonaparte, c'està-dire depuis sa naissance jusqu'à l'époque de son commandement-en-chel de l'armée d'Italie, avec un appendice renfermant des documents inédits on peu connus postérieurs à cette époque. Par., 1840. 2 v. 8°.
  Courier, P. L. Collection des lettres et articles publ. jusqu'à ce jour. Par., 1824. 8°.
  Czartoryski, A. G., Prince. Mémoires et correspondance avec l'empcreur Alexandre I. Préf. de Ch. de Mazade. Par., 1887. 2 v. 8°.

- Tempereur Alexandre 1. Then do on a correspondence, with 2 v. 8°.
   Czartoryski, A. G., Prince. Memoirs and correspondence, with documents relative to the Prince's negotiations with Pitt, Fox, and Brougham, and an account of his conversations with Lord Palmerston and other Eng. statesmen in London, 1832. Ed. by A. Gielgud. 2 ed. Lond., 1838. 2 v. 8°.
- hy A. Gielgud. 2 ed. Lond., 1888. 2 v. 8°.
  Dahlmann, F. C. Waitz, G. Quellenkunde d. deutschen Geschichte. 5° Aufl. Quellen und Bearbeitungen der Deutschen Geschichte neu Zusanmengestellt von G. Waitz. 3° Aufl. Gotting. 1883. 8°.
  Damitz, K., von. Geschichte des Feldzugs von 1815 in den Niederlanden u. Frankreich. Ber., 1837-38. 2 v. 8°.
  Dandolo, G. La cadnta della republica di Venezia. ed i suoi ultimi cinquant'anni. Studii, storici, ed appendice. Venezia. 1855-57. 2 v. 8°.
  Danllewsky, M. Darstellung d. Feldzuges in Frankreich im Jahre 1814. In'a deutsche ubertr. v. C. v. Kotzebue. Riga, 1837-38. 2 Bde.
  Danllewsky, M. Geschichte des Krieges in Jahre 1812. Mit 33 Planen. Riga, 1840. 8°.
  Danllewsky, M. Geschichte des Vaterland. Krieges im Jahre 1812. Mit 181 Allerhöhsten befehl des Kaisera von Russland verfasst. Aus d. Russ. uhersetzt von C. R. Goldhammer. Riga, 1840. 4 Thle.
  Danilewsky, M. Relation de la campagne de 1805 (Austerlitz). Tr. du russe par le gén. L. Narischkine. Par., 1846. 8°, 1 carte et 1 plan.
  Dayout, L., Prince d'Eckmühl. Memeire au Rei. Par., 1844.

- Davout, L., Prince d'Eckmühl. Memeire au Rei. Par., 1814.
- 8°, Davout, L., Prince d'Eckmühl. Correspondance: sea com-mandements, sen ministère, 1801-1815. Avec intr. et notes par Ch. de Mazade. Par, 1885. 4 v. 8°. Davout, L., Prince d'Eckmühl. Opérations du 3° corps, 1806-07. Rapport publié par son neven le général Davont, duc d'Auerstaedt. Par., 1898. 8°. Dayot, A. Napoléon racenté par l'image. Par., 1894. 4°.

- Chateaubriand, M., ie Vicomte de, Mémoires d'outre-tombe Par, n. d. 6 v. 8'. (Chuvres.) Chesney, C. C. Edude de la campagne de 1815; Waterloo, Brux, 1870. 8'.
  Chesney, C. C. Waterloo lectures. 2 ed. Lond., 1860. 8'.
  Chevalier, Ed. Histoire de la marine françulse sous le Consu-lat et l'Empire. Par, 1880. 8.
  Choiseul-Gouffler, Comtesse de. Reminiscences sur l'empi-reur Alexandre 1., et sur l'empereur Napoléon 1. Par, 1862. 8'.
  Chotard, H. Le Pape Pie VH. à Savone, d'après les minute des lettres inéd. du gén. Berthier au prime Borghèse et d'ambasade autrichien. Par, 1887. 12'.
  Chotard, H. Le Pape Pie VH. à Savone, d'après les minute des lettres inéd. du gén. Berthier au prime Borghèse et d'ambasade autrichien. Par, 1887. 12'.
  Chausewitz, C. v. Machrichten über Preussen in seiner gros-sen Katastrophe. Bert, 1885. 2 v.
  Clausewitz, C. v. Nachrichten über Treussen in seiner gros-sen Katastrophe. Bert, 1885. 2 v.
  Clair, C. Andre Hofer et l'insurrection du Tyrol en 1809. 3 cd. Par, 1880. 8'.
  Clercq, A. de, Recneil des traités de la France. Publ. som les anspices du ministre des affaires étrangères. Par, 1864-72. 10 v. 8'.
  Cobbett, W. Facts and observations relative to the peace with Purcue. Public, Par, 1844. 2'.
  Cobbett, W. Facts and observations relative to the peace with Purcue. Public 1900.
  Chaird C. M. de Villargennes, A. J. Reminiscences of army life punder Nancho, Lex, 125. 2'.

  - contingente. Marb., 1887. Doisy de Villargennes, A. J. Reminiscences of army life under Napoleon Bonuparte. Cin., 1884. 12°. Dorr, J. D. Schlacht von Hanau um 30 Oktbr., 1813. Cassei, 1851. 8°.
  - Boublet, P. J. L. O. Mémoires historiques sur l'invasion et l'occupation de Malte par une armée française en 1708. Publ. pour la première fois par le comte de l'anisse-Passis. Par., 1.5 1883

  - pour la première fois par le comte de l'anisse-Passia, Par., 1883. 127.
    Droysen, J. G. D. Leben d. Feldmarschalls Grafen Yerk v. Wartenburg. 10 aufl. Lpz., 1890. 2 Thie.
    Du Casse, P. E. A. Le Général Arrighi de Casanova, duc de l'adoue. Par., 1866. 2 v. 8°.
    Du Casse, P. E. A. Le Général Vandamme et sa correspondance. Par., 1870. 2 v. 8°.
    Du Casse, P. E. A. Histoire des négociations diplomatiques relatives aux traités de Mortfontaine, de Lunéville et d'Anniens. Par., 1855. 3 v. 8°.
    Du Casse, P. E. A. Ménoires et correspondance du prince Eugène. Par., 1858-60. 10 v. 8°.
    Du Casse, P. E. A. Les orierés de Napoléon I.; documents inédits relatifs au premier Empire. Par., 1883. 8°.
    Du Casse, P. E. A. Supplément à la correspondance de Napoléon I.: lettres curienses omiaes par le comité de publication, rectifications. Par., 1857. 12°.
    Ducerst. Ménoires sur l'anyonne. 1897. 8°.
    Ducerst. Ménoires sur les règnes de Louis XV, et Louis VVII our la Ménoires le la la correspondance de la super la destative par. 187. 12°.

  - 2 v. 8°.
    Dufort, J. N. Mémoires sur les règnes de Louis XV. et Louis XVI. et sur la Révolution. Publ. avec une intr. et des netes par R. de Crévecuen. Par., 1886. 2 v. 8°.
    Dumas, C. Memoirs of his own time, including the Revolution, the Empire, and the Restoration. Philadelphia, 1839. 2 v. 12°.

  - Dumas, M. Précis des événements militaires; ou, cssai historique sur les campagnes de 1799 à 1814. Par., 1816-26. 19
     v. 8°.
  - v. S.
     Dumoulin. Procès du maréchal Ney. Par., 1815. 2 v.
     Dumouriez, C. F. D. Jugement sur Bonaparte. (In his Mé-moires. v. 4.)
     Duncker, M. W. Abhandhuogeo aus der neueren Geschichte.

  - Duncker, M. W. Abhandluogeo aus der neueren Geschichte, Lpz., 1887. 8°.
    Durand, Mme. Napoleon and Marie-Louise (1810-14): a me-nioir. Lond., 1886. 12°.
    Durdent, R. J. Campagne de Mosceu en 1812. Par., 1814. 8°.
    Duruy, A. Etudes d'histoire militaire sur la Révolution et l'Empire. Par., 1888. 8°. (First chapter is La conspiration du Gén. Malet.)
    Dury, A. L'iustruction publique et la Révolution. Par., 1882. 20

  - Duvergier de Hauranne, P. Histoire du gouvernement par-lementaire en France, 1814-1848; précédée d'une intr. Par., 1857-65. 7 v. 8°.
  - Eckardt, J. Yorck u. Paulncci, Aktenstücke u. Beiträge z. Geschichte d. Convention von Tanroggen (18-20 Decbr., 1812). Lpz., 1865. 8<sup>4</sup>.
    Egger, Jos. Geschichte Tirols von den ältesten Zeiten bis in die Neuzeit. Innstruck, 1871-76. 3 v. 8<sup>a</sup>.
    Einsiedel, A. A., Die Feldzige d. Oestreicher in Italien im Jahre 1805. Mit I Schlachtplan u. 1 Karte. Weimar, 1812. 8<sup>a</sup>.
    Elchingen, Duc d. See Ney, M. L. F.
    Elliot, Sir G., Earl of Minto. Life and letters, 1751-1806, Ed. by the Counters of Minto. Lond., 1874. 3 v. 8<sup>a</sup>.
    Ernouf, A. A. Lee Français en Franse (1807-08), d'après des documents contemporains recueillis en Altemagne. Par., 1872. 18<sup>a</sup>. Eckardt, J. Yorcku. Paulucci, Aktenstückeu. Beiträge z. Ges-chichte d. Convention von Tauroggen (18-20 Decbr., 1812).

  - Brouf, A. A. Le Gén. Kléber : Mayence et Vendée, Allemagne, expédition d'Egypte. 2 éd. Par., 1870. 12°.
    Ernouf, A. A. Maret, Duc de Bassano. 2 éd. Paris, 1854. S°.
    Escoiquiz, Don Juan. Wahrhafte darstell d. Grunde, welche den König Ferdinand VII. im April d. Jahre 1808, zur Keise nach Bayonne bewogen haben. Aus d. Span. übersetzt. Wien, 1898. 1816
  - Eugen, Herzog v. Württemberg. Memoiren. Frankfurt-a-O.,
  - 1862. 3v. 8°. Euler, C. Friedrich Ludwig Jahn; sein Leben u. Wirken. Stuttg., 1881. 8°.

- Eyssenhardt, F. Bartheld Georg Niebuhr : ein hieg. Versuch. Gotha, 1886. 8°.
  Faber, T. Notices sur l'intérieur de la France, écrites en .806. St. Fétersbourg, 1807. 8°. (La paix de Tilsitt srréta la public action d'un second vol. qui devait paraltre. Le premier Vance, G. de. Histoire gérérale des traités de paix et autres transactiona principales entre les puissances de l'Europe de puis la paix de Westphalie. Par., 1848-59. 14 v. 8°.
  Gardner, D. Quatre-Bras, Ligny, Waterloe : Narrative of the campaign in Belgium, 1815. Lond., 1882. 8°.
  Gardner, T. de. Dépéches inéditez du chevalier de Gentz aux hospodars de Valachie, peur servir à l'histoire de la politique européenne (1813 à 1828), publiées par le comte Prokesch-Osten fils. Par., 1877. 3 v. 8°.
  Faguet, E. Politiques et moralistes du le précis des évènements de cette année pour servir à l'histoire de Napoléon. Jant, 1829. 2 v. 8°.
  Fain, A. J. F. Manuscrit de 1813, pour servir à l'histoire de Napoléon. Je d. Par., 1829. 2 v. 8°.
  Fain, A. J. F. Manuscrit of 1814 ; a history of events which led to the abdication of Napoleon. Lond., 1823. 8°.
  Fauchille, P. La question juive en France sous le premier Empire. Joeune de Suéde, Danemark et Norvège. Faurchille, P. La question juive en France sous le premier Empire. Javes des ducuments inéed. Par., 1882. 8°.
  Gentz, F. de. Déterreicher. Aus dem Nachlass Varnhagen's v. Ense. Lpz., 1873-74. 4 v. 8°.
  Geffroy, A. Notices et extraits des manuscrits concernant l'histoire de la litterature de France qui sont conservés dans les archives ou bibliothéques de Suéde, Danemark et Norvège. Far., 1856, 8°.
  Gentor, F. de Statter et suite de Suéde, Danemark et Norvège. Far., 1856, 8°.

- Fain, A. J. F. Manuscrit de 1812, contenant le précis des événements de cette année pour servir à l'histoire de Napeléon. Par., 1827. 2 v. 8<sup>2</sup>.
  Fain, A. J. F. Manuscrit de 1813, pour servir à l'histoire de l'empereur Napeléon. 3 éd. Par., 1829. 2 v. 8<sup>2</sup>.
  Pain, A. J. F. Manuscript of 1814; a history of events which led to the abdication of Napoleon. Lond., 1823. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Fanchille, P. Du blocus maritime. Par., 1882. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Fanchille, P. Du blocus maritime. Par., 1882. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Fanchille, P. La questien juive en France sous le premier Empire, d'après des documents inéd. Par., 1884. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Fauriel, C. Les derniers jours du Consulat, manuscrit inéd. Publ. et annoté par L. Lalanne. Par., 1885.
  Fescourt. Histoire de la double-conspiration de 1800, contre le gouvernement consulaire et de la déportation qui ent lieu dans la deuxième année du Consulat; contenant des détails authentiques et curieux sur la machine infernale et les déportés. Par., 1818. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Fezensac, R. E. F. J. de Montesquiou, duc de. Souvenirs militaires de 1804 à 1814. 4 éd. Par., 1801. 18<sup>6</sup>.
  Flérke, Der geschlossene Handelstadt. Wein, 1801. 16<sup>8</sup>.
  Flérke, J. Correspondance polit. et administrative, commencée au mois de Mai, 1814. 3 v. Par., 1815-28. 12<sup>2</sup>.
  Fieury de Chaboulon, P. A. E., Ménora autore de Napeléon et al.

- Fleury de Chaboulon, P. A. E., Baren. 1815.

Forest E.

- Foresi, E. Napoleone I, all'isola dell'Elba. Firenze, 1884. 8°.
  Forneron, H. Hist, générale des émigrés pendant la Révolution française. 4 éd. rev. et corr. Par., 1884. 2 v. 8°.
  Förster, F. Geschichte d. Betreiungskriege, 1813-15. Nach Theilweise ungedruckten Quellen u. mündlichen Aufschlussen bedeutender Zeitgenossen. Leip., 1856-58. 2 v. 8°.
  Förster, F. Napoleon I. russischer Feldzug, 1812. 3 Aufl. 1857.
  Forsyth, W. History of the captivity of Napoleon at St. He-lena: from the letters and journals of Sir H. Lowe. Lond., 1853. 3 v. 8°.
  Fortescue. The manuscripts of J. B. Fortescue, Esq. Pre-served at Dropmore. Lond., 1894. In course of publication.
  Foucart, P. La campagne de Pologne; Pultusk et Golymin. Nov. 1806-Jan. 1807, daprès les archives de la guerre. Par., 1882. 2 v. 12°.

- Nov. 1506-Jan. 1807, d'après les archives de la guerre. Par., 1882. 2 v. 12°.
  Foucart. P. Campagne de Prusse (1806), d'après les archives de la guerre, Jena. Par., 1887. 5°.
  Foucart, P. Campagne de Prusse (1806), d'après les archives de la guerre. Prenzlow-Lubeck. Par., 1890. 8°.
  Foucart, P. Bautzen (une bataille de 2 jours) 20-21 Mai, 1813. Par., 1897. 8°.
  Fouché, F. Duc d'Otrante. Mémoires. Par., 1824. 2 v. 8°.
  Fouché, F. Memoirs of his public life, comprising letters to Napoleon, Wellington. Blücher, etc., Lond., 1818. 8°.
  Fournier, A. Gentz u. Cohenzl. Geschichte d. österreich. Diplomatie iu den Jahre 1801-05. Nach neuen Quellen. Wien, 1880. 8°.

- Diplomatie iu den Jahre 1801-05. Nach neuen Quellen, Wien, 1880. 8°.
  Fournier, A. Mistorische Studien u. Skizzen. Prag., 1885. 8°.
  Fournier, A. Napoleon I. Eine Biographie. Lpz., 1888-89. 3 v. 8°. (Das wissen d. Gegenwart, vols. 67, 71, 72.)
  Fox, C. F. Memorials and correspondence. Ed. by Lord J. Russell. Lend, 1853-57. 4 v. 8°.
  Fox, Henry R., Lord Holland. Foreign reminiacences. Ed. by Misson. N. Y., 1851. 12°.
  Französleche Armee im Jahre 1813, ein Beitrag zur Geschichte d. Befreiungs Kriege. Berl, 1889. 8°.
  Friant, Comte. Vie militaire du Beutenant-général comte Friant. Par., 1857. 8°.
  Friccius, C. Geschichte des Krieges in den Jahren 1813 u. '14. Mit hesond. Rücksicht auf Ostpreussen u. d. Königaberg'sche Landwehrbatällon. Berl, 1843. 8°.
  Funck, K. W. F. Erinnerungeu aus d. Feldzüge des Sächalachen Corps unter d. Gen. Reynier im Jahre 1812, aus Papieren d. Verstorbenen. Dread., 1829.
- Gaëte, Buc de. Mémoires, souvenira, opinions, et écrits. Par.,

- Gaete, Jule de, Menores, souvenirs, opinious, everies, Fair, 1826. 2v. 8°.
   Gaffarel, Paul. Bonaparte et les républiques italiennes 1796-1799. Par., 1895. 8°.
   Gagern, F. H. E. Mein Antheil an der Politik. 1: Unter Napoleons Herrschaft. 11: Nach Napoleons Fall-d. Congress zu Wien. 111: b Bundestag. Stuttg., 1822-30.
   Gallois, Léon. Histoire de Napoléon d'après lui-inême. 5° ed. Par., 1829. 8°.
   Garnot. Edution, en ca qui concerne le Mel Ney de L'ou-
- Far., 1829. 8°.
  Gamot. Rédutation, en ce qui concerne le Mal Ney de l'ouvrage ayant pour titre "Campagne de IS15... par le Gal Gourgaud." Par., 1818. 8°.
  Garat. Eloge funèlre des généraux Kléher et Desaix, prononcé le ler vendémlaire an 9 à la place des Victoires. Par., an IX. 8°.

- Par, 1856, 8°. Geoffroy de Grandmaison. Napeléen et les cardinaux neirs, 1810-14. Far, 1895, 16°. Gérando, M. A. de Rathsamhausen, baronne de. Lettrea, auvies de fragments d'un journal écrit par elle de 1800 à 1804. Par., 1880. 12°
- Par., 1880. 12<sup>2</sup>.
  Gérard, E. M., Comte. Quelques documents aur la bataille de Waterloo, propres à éclairer la question portée devaut le pu-blic par M. le Marquis de Grouchy. Par., 1829. 8*.
  Germond de Lavigne, L. A. G. Les pamphlets de la fin de l'Empire, des cent jours, et de la Restauration : Catalogue rai-sonné. Par., 1879. 12*.
  Gildemeister, J. K. F. Fink's u. Berger's Ermordung. Beitr. zur Charakteristik d. Französ. Herrschaft in Deutschland. Puenen 1914

- zur Charakteristik d. Französ. Herrschaft in Deuitschland. Bremen, 1814.
  Giraud, P. F. F. J. Campagne de Paris, en 1814, précédée d'un coup d'œil sur celle de 1813, eu, précis historique et impartial des événements, depuis l'invasion de la France par les arméea étrangères jusqu'à la capitulation de Paris, la déchéance et l'abdication de Buonaparte inclusivement. Par., 1814. 8°.
  Gleig, G. R. Story of the battle of Waterloe. N. Y., 1847.
  Goecke, R. Das Grossherzorth. Berg unter Jeachim Murat, Napeleon I. u. Louis Napoleon, 1806-1813. Ein Beitrag zur-gesch. der französ. Fremdherrschaft auf dem rechten Rhein-ufer. Meist nach den Acten d. Düsseldorfer Staats-Archivs. Kölb, 1877. 8°.

- uter. Melss mach den Acten d. Datactorie balactorie beiden.
  Köln, 1877. 8°.
  Goecke, R. D. Königr. Westphalen. 7 Jahre französ. Fremd-herrschaft im Herzen Deutschlanda, 1807-1813. Nach den Quellen dargestellt. vollendet u. hrsg. von Th. Ilgen. Düs-seldorf, 1888. 8°.
  Goethe, Thdr. Aus d. Leben eines sächsischen Husaren u. aus dessen Feldzugen, 1809, 1812-13 in Polen u. Russland. Lpz., Vero e<sup>a</sup>

- dessen Feldzugen, 1809, 1812-13 in Polen u. Russland. Lpz., 1853. 8°.
  Goldsmitt, L. Secret hlstory of the cabinet of Bonaparte. Lond., 1810. 8°.
  Goltz, Colmar, Frhr. v. Rosabach u. Jena: Studlen üb. die Zustande u. das geistige Leben in der preuss. Armee während der Uebergangszeit vom XVIII zum XIX Jahrh. Berl., 1883.
  Goncourt, E. et J. de. Histoire de la Société française pendant le Directoire. Nouv. éd. Par., 1892. 12°.
  Gourgaud, G. Campagne de 1815, ou relation des opérations militaires qui ont eu lieu en France et en Belgique pendant les centique de l'ouvrage de M. le Comte Fh. de Ségut. 4° éd. Par., 1828. 8°.
  Gourgaud, G. Napoléon, et la grande armée en Russie, eu examen critique de l'ouvrage de M. le Comte Fh. de Ségut. 4° éd. Par., 1827. 2 V. 8°.
  Gourgiaud, G. Napoléon, et la grande armée en Russie, eu examen critique de l'ouvrage de M. le Comte Fh. de Ségut. 4° éd. Par., 1827. 2 V. 8°.
  Groupin Saint-Cyr, L., Marquis de. Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire militaire sou ale Directoire, le Consulat et l'Empire, 1798-1813. Par., 1831. 4 V. 8°.
  Grolmann, E. V. Geschichte des Feldzuges von 1814 in dem ostlichen u. nördlichen Frankreich bis z. Einnahue v. Faris, als Beitrag z. neueren Kriegsgeschichte. Hrsg. von Majer v. Damitz. Berl., 1824-3. 4 V. 8°.
  Grolmann, E. von. Geschichte des Feldzugs von 1815 in den Niederlanden u. Frankreich, als Beitrag z. Kriegsgeschichte d. neuereu Kriegsgeschichte. Hrsg. von Majer v. Damitz. Berl., 1824-3. 4 V. 8°.
  Grolmann, E. v. Tagebuch eines deutschen Officier üb. aeinen
- Grolmann, E. v. Tagebuch eines deutschen Officier üb. aeinen Feldzug in Spanlen, 1808. Hrsg. v. P. T. Rehfues. Nurnb., 1814
- 1814.
  Grouchy, Gén. Observations sur la relation de la campagne de 1815, pub. par le Gén. Gourgaud; et réfutation de quel-ques-unes des assertions d'autres écrits relatifs à la bataille de Waterloo. Par., 1819. 8°.
  Grouchy, Gén. Fragments historiques relatifs à la campagne de 1815 et à la bataille de Waterloo. Par., 1829. 8°.
  Grouchy, Marquis de. Le Mai de Grouchy, du lé au 19 Juin 1815, avec documents historiques inédits et réfutation de M. Thisse Par 1864 18

- Thiera. Par., 1864. 18. Grouchy, Marquia de. Memoires du Mal de Grouchy. Par.,
- Guillaume, F., dit Guillaume de Vaudoncourt. Histoire des campagnes de 1814 et 1815, en France. Par, 1826. 5 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
   Guillaume, F., dit Guillaume de Vaudoncourt. Mémoirea pour servir à l'histoire de la guerre entre la france et la Rus-aie, en 1812. Lond. et Par., 1816 & 1817. 4<sup>o</sup>, et un petit vol. de planches.

- Guillois, A. Napeléen : l'homme, le politique, l'orateur, d'après
- Guriols, A. Mapfield, I. Holmine, le pointque, l'oracett, d'afrès sa corresp. et ses œuvres. Par, 1880. 2 v. 8°.
   Guretzky-Cornitz, H. v. Geschichto d. Ersten Brandenburg-ischen Ulanen-Regimenta (Kaiser v. Russland) vom Jahre 1809-1859. Berlin, 1806. 8°.

- Hahn, L. D. Unterrichtawcsen in Frankreich mit elner Geschichte der Pariaer Universität. Breslau, 1848. 8°.
  Hamel, E. Hist. des deux conspirations du Gén. Malet. Nouv. éd. rev., corr. et augu. d'une nouvelle préface. Par., 1873. 8°.
  Hamilton, Captain Thomas. Annals of the Peninsular campaigna from 1808 to 1816. Edinburgh, 1829. 3 v. 18°.
  Hassel, P. Goschichte d. preussischen Politik, 1807-1815. 1er. theil. 1807-8. Lpz., 1831. (Publ. a. d. K. Preuss. Staataarchiven. Ed. 6.)
- chiven. Bd. 6.) Hausser, L. Deutsche Geschichte vom Tode Friedriche des Grossen bis zur Grondung des deutschen Bundes. Berl., 1854-57. 4 Thle. 2 veranderte u. vermehrte Aufl. Berl., 1858. Haussonville, J.O. B. de Cleron d'. L'Eglise romaine et le premier Empire, 1800-1814; avec notes, correspondences dipl.
- et pièces justificatives, entièrement inédites. 30 éd. Parls, 1870 5 1
- Havemann, Wilh, D. Kurförstenthum Hannover unter Zehnjahnger Frendherrschaft, 1803-1813. Jeua, 1867. 8°. Hazlitt, W. Life of Napoleon Buenaparte. 2 cd. Lond., 1852.

- 4V. S.
  4V. S.
  Hellmann J. Feldmarschall Furst Wrede. Lpz., 1881. 8°.
  Helfert, D. Schlacht bei Kulun, 1813. Wien, 1863. gr. 8°.
  Hellert, J. A. Maria Louise Erzherzogiu v. Oesterreich, Kaiserin d. Franzosen. Mit Benützg, v. Briefen an ihre Altern u. v. Schriftstücken d. K. K. Haus-Hof-u. Staats Archivs. Prag., 1970. 8°.
- Helfert, J. A. Napoleon I. fahrt von Fontainebleau nach Elba, April Mai, 1814. Mit Benützung der amtlichen Reisebe-richte des kaiserlich österreichischen Commissars Gen. Koller.
- richte des kaiserlich österreichischen Commissars Gen. Koller. Wien, 1874. 8°.
  Helfert, J. A. Joachim Murat, seine letzten Kämpfe u. sein Ende. Wien, 1878. 8°.
  Helfert, J. A. Konigin Karolina von Neapel u. Sicilien im Kämpfe gegen die französische Weltherrschaft 1790-1814. Mit Benutzung von Schriftstückeu des K. K. Haus- Hof- u. Staats-Archivs. Wien, 1878. 8°.
  Helfert, J. A. Maria Karolina v. Oesterreich, Königin v. Nea-pel u. Sicilien. Anklagen u. Vertheidigg., mit Benutzg. v. Schriftstücken d. K. K. Haus- Hof- u. Staats Archivs. Wien, 1884. 8°.
- 84.
- 1884. 8°. Hélie F. A. Les constitutions de la France. Ouvrage conte-naut, outre les constitutions, les principales lois relatives au culte, à la magistrature, aux électious, à la liberté de la presse, de réunion et d'association, à l'organisation des départuents et des communes, avec un commentaire. Par., 1875-79. 4 fasc. Helldorf. Ans dem Leben des kaiserlich russischen Gener-als d. Infanterie, Prinzen Eugen v. Wurttemberg, aus deasen eigenhändigen Aufzeichnungen so wie aus dem achriftlichen Nachlass aciner Adiuanten gesanunelt. b frag. Berl. 1861-62.
- Nachlass seiner Adjuanten gesammelt u. hrsg. Berl., 1861-62.
- Berley Andream Adjuanten gesammelt u. hrsg. Berl., 1861-62.
  4 vols. 8°.
  Helldorff. Zur Geschichte d. Schlacht bei Kulm. Aufklärung verschiedener bis jetzt unrichtig darg. Thatsachen über die Tage vom 25-30, August 1813. Berl., 1856. 8°.
  Henckel von Donersmark, W. L. V., Graf. Erinnerungen ans meinem Leben. Zerbst, 1847. 8°.
  Henry, W. Events of a military life. Lond., 1843. 2 v. 8°.
  Herrisson, M., Comte de, Le cabinet noir : Louis XVII, Napoléon, Marie-Louise. 14 éd. Par., 1887. 12°.
  Heymiss. Relation de la campugne de 1815, dite de Waterloo, pour servir à l'histoire du Maréchal Ney. Par., no date. 8°.
  Histoire des sociétés secrètes de l'armée et des conspiratious militaires qui ont en pour objet la destruction du gouvernement de Bonaparte. Par., 1815. [Anon.]
  Hochschild, C. F. L. Désirée, reine de Suède et de Norvège. Par., 1838. 16°.

- Hofmann, G. W. v. Zur Geschichte des Feldzuges von 1813.
  2 neu. bearb, u. verm. Anfl. Berl., 1843. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  Hofmann, G. W. v. Zur Geschichte des Feldzuges von 1815.
  bis nach d. Schlacht von Belle-Alliance. Koblenz, 1849. 2

- Aufi. Berl., 1851. Hofmann, G. W. v. Die Schlacht bei Borodeno mit einer Ueber-sicht des Feldzugs von 1812. Koblenz, 1846. 8°. Home, G. Memoirs of an aristocrat and Reminiscences of the Emperor Napoleon. Lon., 1838. 8°. Hooper, G. Waterloo, the downfall of the first Napoleon. Lond 1900. 18°
- Emperor Napoleon. Lon., 1838. S*.
  Hooper, G. Waterloo, the downfall of the first Napoleon. Lond., 1890. 16*.
  Höpfner, Ed. v. D. Krieg von 1906 u. 1807. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte d. preuss. Armee nach d. Quellen d. Kriegs-Ar-chivs bearb. Berl., 1850-51. 4 v. S*. Mit Schlacht u. Geiechts Planen u. Beilagen.
  Hormayr, J. F. D. Heer von Inneröstreich unter den Befehlen d. Erzherzogs Johann im Kriege von 1809 in Italien, Tyrol u. Ungarn. Durchgehenda aus Officiellen Quellen, aus d. erlass. Befehlen, Operations Journalen. Lpz., 1848. S*.
  Hormayr, H. v. Lebensbilder aus dem Befreiuugskriege. Piece aus den "Politischen Predigten des Dr. Faber." Lpz., 1844. S*.
- 1844. - 8°.
- 1844. S.
  Horn, G. Das Buch der Königin Luise. Mit Portraits u. Illustr. nach Gleichzeit, originalen. 2 Auft. Berl., 1884. Fol.
  Houssaye, H. 1814. 7 éd. Par., 1888. 10°.
  Houssaye, H. 1815, la première Restantation, le retour de l'île d'Elbe, les cent jours. 15 éd., rev. Par., 1894. 12°.

- Hüffer, H. Ocstreich u. Preussen gegenüber der Französischen Revolution bis zum Abschluss des Friedens von Campo For-mio. Vornehnlich nach ungedr, Urkunden d. Archive in Ber-lin, Wien u. Paris, Bonn, 1868, 8°. (Dipl. Verhandlungen n. d. Zeit d. Franzosisch. Rev. Bd. 1.)
  Hüffer, H. Die Politik der deutschen Mächte im Revolutions-kriege bis zum Abschluss des Friedens von Campo-Formio. (Dipl. Verhandlungen a. d. Zeit d. Franzosisch. Rev. Bd. 1).
  Hüffer, H. D. Rastatter Congress u. d. Zweite Coalition. Ronn, 1878-70. 2 v. 8°. (Dipl. Verhandlungen a. d. Zeit d. Französisch. Rev. Bd. 1.)
- Jackeon, Sir G. Diarles and letters from the peace of Amlens to the battle of Talavera. Ed. by Lady Jackson. Par., 1872.
- Jackson, Sir G. The Bath Archives. A further selection from [his] Dinries and Letters from 1809-1810. Ed. by Lady Jack-son, Lond., 1873. 2 v. 8<sup>2</sup>. James, W. Naval history of Great Britain. Lond., 1860. 6 v.
- Jomini, H. de. Histoire crit. et militaire des guerres de la Ré-volution, 1792-1803. Nouv. éd. Par., 1820-24. 15 v. 8° and atlas fol
- atias ioi. Jomini, H. de. Vie politique et militaire de Napoléon. Par., 1827. 4 v. 8<sup>5</sup>. Jomini, H. de. Précis politique et militaire de la campagne de 1815, pour servir de supplément et de rectification à la vie politique et militaire de Napoléon, racentée par lui-méme, Par., 1839. 8<sup>5</sup>.
- Par., 1839. 8°.
  Jomini, H. de. Portable atlas of the fields of Waterloo and Ligny. Brussels, 1851. 8°.
  Jomini, H. de. Frécis politique et militaire des campagnes de 1812 à 1814, extr. des aouvenirs inéd, avec une notice blog, et des cartes, plans et légendes, publ. F. Lecomte. Lausanne, 1866 or v. 20
- 1886. 2 v. 8°.
  Joaeph Napoléon, King of Spain. Mémeires et correspondance politique et militaire, publ., annot., et mis en ordre par A. du Casae. 2 éd. Par., 1854-55. 10 v. 8°.
  Jorissen, T. Napoléon I. et le roi de Hollande, 1806-1813, d'après des documents authentiques et inédits. (La Haye, M. Nighoff.) Par., 1868. 8°.
- d'après des documents authentiques et inédita. (La Haye, M. Nighoff.) Par., 1868. 8°.
  Joyneville, C. Life and times of Alexander I., Emperor of all the Russias. Lond., 1875. 3 v. 12°.
  Jullien, B. Histoire de la poésie française à l'époque impériale. Par., 1844. 2 v. 8°.
  Jullien, M. A. Eutretien politique sur la situation actuelle de la France et sur les plans du nouveau gouvernement. Par., av. 197.
- an VIII (1800). 8° 1800). 8°. Bonaparte et sou temps (1769–1799) d'après les docu-
- an VIII (1900). c. Jung, Th. Bonaparte et sou temps (1769-1709) d'après les docu-ments inédits. Par, 1880-81. 3 v. 12°. Junot, L. P., Duchesse d'Abrantes. Mémoires : ou, Souvenirs historiques sur Napoléon et la Revolution, le Directoire, le Con-sulat, l'Empire et la Restauration. 2 cd. Par, 1835. 12 v. 8°. Junot, L. P., Duchesse d'Abrantes. Mémoirs. Lond., 1831-35. 8 v. 8°.
- Jurien de la Gravière, J. B. E. Guerres maritimes sous la République et l'Empire; avec les plans des batailles nuvales ... et une carte du Sund... 3º éd. Par., uo date. 2 v. 12°.
- Kampen, van. Geschichte der Niederlande. Hamb., 1831-3.
- Kiesselbach, W. D. Continentalsperre in ihrer Ockonomisch-Polit. Bedeutung. Ein Beitrag z. Handelsgeschichte. Stuttg.
- Non-Determing. En Dertrag Z. Handelsgeschichte. Stuttg., 1850. 8°.
  Kleist, Heinr. v. Politische Schriften und andere Nachtrage zu seinen Werken. Mit einer Einleitung zum ersten Male herausg. von R. Kopke. Berl., 1862. 8°.
  Klinkowström, Clem. v. Aus d. alten Registratur d. Staats-kanzlei. Briefe Polit. huladts von u. an Frdr. v. Gentz, aus den Jahren 17:99-1827. Wien, 1870. 8°.
  Kneseheck, E. v. Lehen des Freiherrn Hugh v. Halkett, k. Hannoverischer General d. Infanterie. Stuttg., 1865. 8°.
  Koberstein, K., Preussisches Bildenbuch. Lpz., 1887. 8°.
  Koberko, D. La jeunesse d'un Tsar. Paul Fr et Catherine II. ed. Dimitri de Benckendorff. Par., 1896. 8°.
  Koczebue, A. F. F. v. Erinnerungen aus Paris im Jahre 1804. Berl., 1:04. 2°.
  Kotzebue, A. F. F. v. Souvenirs de Paris en 1804. Trad. de

- Berl, 1:04. 2 v.
  Kotzebue, A. F. F. v. Souvenirs de Paris en 1804. Trad. de l'all. avec des notes. Par., 1:05. 2 v. 12<sup>2</sup>.
  Krauss, Th. Ge-chichte d. bayerischen Heeresabtheilung im Feldzug gegen Russland, 1:12. Augsburg, 1857. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Krones, R. v. Marchland, Frz. Zur Geschichte Oesterreichs im Zeitalter d. französischen Kriege u. d. Restauration, 1702– 1816. Mit besond. Rücksicht auf das Berufsleben d. Staats-mannes Frhru. Ant. v. Baldacci. Gotha, 1886. 8<sup>3</sup>.
- Histoire de la chute de l'empire de Napoléon. Labaume, E.
- Labaume, E. Histoire de la chute de l'empire de Napoléon, ornée de huit plans ou cartes pour servir an récit des principales batailles livrées en 1815-16. Par., 1820. 2 v. 8°.
  Labaume, E. Relation circonstantiée de la campagne de Russie en 1812. Ouvrage orné des plans de la bataille de la Moscowa et du combat de Malo-Jaroslavetz. Par., 1814. 8°.
  Labaume, E. Circumstantial narrative of the campaign in Russia, with plans of the battle of Moskwa and Malo-Jaroslavitz, 1812. Tr. E. Boyce. 7 ed. Lond., 1816. 8°.
  Lacombe, P. Essai d'une bibliographie des ouvrages relatifs à l'histoire religieuse de Paris pendant la Révolution (1789-1802). Par., 1854. 8°.
- Par., 1884. 8°

- Lacretelle, C. J. D., de. Dix années d'épreuves pendant la Révolution. Par., 1842. 8°.
  Lafayette G. de M. de. Mémoires, correspondance et manuscrits. Paris, 1838. 6 v. 8°.
  Lafayette, G. de M. de. Memoirs, correspondence and manuscripts. Publ. by his family. Lood., 1837. 3 v. 8°.
  Lafayette, G. de M. de. Mes rapports avec le premier Consul (1797-1805). (v. 5 of his Mémoires.)
  La Folle, C. J. [Coraccio], pseud.] Hiatoire de l'administration du royaume d'Italie pendant la domination française. Par., 1823. 8°.
- tion du royanne d'italie pendant la domination française.
   Par, 1323. 8<sup>3</sup>.
   La Folie, C. J. [Coraccioi, pseud.] Storia dell'amministrazione del regno d'Italia durante il dominio francese. Lugano, 1823.
   Lafon, J. B. H. Hist, de la conjuration du Gén. Malet, avec des détails officiels aur cette affaire. 2 éd., rev., corr. et augm. des pièces offic. des procea ; recneilles à la com. militaire, etc. 1814
- Lafuente y Zamálloa, M. Historia-general de España, deade los tiempos mas remotos hasta nuestros dias. Madrid, 1850-67.

- 130 v. 8<sup>o</sup>. M. Mémoires et souvenirs. Par., 1835-36. 3 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  Lamarque, M. Mémoires et souvenirs. Par., 1835-36. 3 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  Lamartine, A. M. L. de. Histoire de la Restauration. Par., 1851-52. 8 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  Lamartine, A. M. L. de. History of the restoration of monarchy in France. N. Y., 1851-53. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  Lamothe-Langon, Baron E. L. de. Les après-dinera de S. A. S. Cambacèrés, second consul, ou révélationa de plusieurs grands personages sur l'ancien régime, le Directoire, l'Empire et la Restauration, recueillies et publiées par le b<sup>on</sup> E. L. de Lamothe-Langon, Par., 1837. 4 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  Lamothe-Langon, Baron E. L. de, Mémoires et souvenirs d'une femme de qualité sur le Consulat et l'Empire. Par., 1830. 4 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
- d'une l'ennière d'autre sur le containe et l'implie, Fair, 1830. 4 v. 8°.
  Lamothe-Langon, B<sup>on</sup> E. L. de. Napoléon, sa famile, ses amis, ses généraux, ses ministres et ses contemporains, ou aoirées secrêtes du Luxembourg, des Tuileries, de Saint-Cloud, de la Malmaison, de Fontainebleau, etc. par M. le * * exministre de S. M. Impériale et Royale. Par, 1840, 5 v. 8°.
  Lancelotti, Napoleon auf Elba. Dresd., 1815.
  Landrieux, J. Mémoires, 1795-97, avec une intr. biog, et hist. par L. Grasilier. Tome le-, Par., 1893. 8°.
  Lanfrey, P. Histoire de Napoléon I. Paris, 1867-75, 5 v. 12°.
  Lanzac de Laborie, de. La domination française en Belgique, 1795-1814. Par., 1895. 2 v. 8°.

- 1865. 8°.
  Larevellière Lepeaux, L. M. Mémoires. Publ. par son fils, sur le MS, autographe de l'auteur, et snivis des pièces justi-catives et de corresp. Inédites. Par., 1895. 3v. 8°.
  Larrey, D. J. Mémoires de chirurgie militaire et campagnes. (In his Mém. de méd. et de chur, militaire. 4v. 8°. Paris, 1813-18.)
- Las Cases, E. A. D. M. J., Marquis de. Mémorial de Sainte Hélène; ou, Jour. où se trouve consigné, jour par jour, ce qui a dit et fait Napoléon durant dix-huit mois. Par., 1523-24.

- a un et al. Papieon durant divenut hous. Fat., 1825-24.
  Sv. S<sup>5</sup>.
  Laskey, J. C. Description of the series of medals struck by order of Napoleon Bonaparte. Lond., 1818. S<sup>6</sup>.
  Laughton, J. K. The Nelson Memorial. Nelson and his companions in arms. Lond., 1896. S<sup>6</sup>.
  La Tour d'Auvergne, E. de. Waterloo. Etude de la campagne de 1815. Avec cartes et plans. Par., 1870. S<sup>6</sup>.
  Laurent de l'Ardèche, P. M. Histoire de l'Empereur Napoléon. Illustrée par II. Vernet. Par., 1849. gr. S<sup>6</sup>.
  Lavalette, Comte de. Mémoires et souvenirs. Publ. par sa famille et sur ses manuscrits. 1789-1829. Par., 1831. 2 v. S<sup>6</sup>.
  Lavalette, J. Histoire de l'Origine, du progrès et de la décadence des diverses factions qui ont agité la France depnis le 14 Juillet, 1789, jusqu'à l'abdication de Napoléon. Lond., 1816. 3 v. S<sup>6</sup>.
- Lavisse, E., et Rambaud, A. Histoire Générale du IV<sup>o</sup> siècle jusqu'à nos jours. Ouvrage publié sous la direction de. Par., 1893-97. Sv. 8.
   Lecène, P. Les marins français, 1793-1815. Nouv. éd. Par.,

- 1855, 8°.
  Lecestre, Léon. Lettres inédites aur Napoléon ler (An VIII-1815, Par., 1897, 2 v. 8°.
  Ledebur, A. L. v. Erlebnisse aus den Kriegsjahren 1806-07. Ein Zeit u. Lebensbild zusammengestellt aus den hinterlassenen Papieren, etc. Nebst einigen kurzen Notizen über das Leben des Verewigten. Berlin, 1855.
  Lefebure A. Histoire des cabinets de l'Europe nendant le
- des Verewigten. Berlin, 1855. Lefebvre, A. Histoire des cabinets de l'Europe pendant le Consult et l'Europe, 1800-1815 : prec. d'une notice par C. A. Sainte-Beuve, et complétée par E. Lefebvre de Béhaine. 2 éd. Par., 1866-69. 5 v. 8<sup>a</sup>.
- Legler, Th. Denkwürdickeiten a. d. russischen Feldzuge, vom Jahr 1812. "Jahrb. des hist Vereine der Vereine Jahr Blazz, Jahrb. des hist, Vereins des Kantona (Harus, 1868, Léher, J. A., Ed. de Bréaut des Marlots, J. Lettre d'un capi-taine de cuirasslers sur la campagne de Russie, 1812. Par,
- 19
- Lehmann, M. Knesebek u. Schön; Beiträge zur Gesch. d. Freiheitskriege. Leip., 1875, 8°. Lehmann, M. Scharnhorst. 2 Thl. seit dem Tilsiter frieden.
- Leissnig, W. S. Marachen. Kriegsereignisse, Terrain Bemerkungen, u. s. w., chus Königl. Sichs. Dragoner Offiziers bei d. französ. Armee auf dem Zuge nach Moskau in Jahre 1812, I. Th. Marsch aus Lausitz, durch Polen, Preussen, Litthauen his Moskau. Leip., 1828. 8*.

- Lejeune, L. F., Baron, général. Mémoires publiés par M. G. Bapst. Par., 1895. 2 v. 16°.
   Léouzon-le-Duc, L. A., Éd. Correspondance diplomatique du baron de Stael-Holstein et de son successeur le baron Brinkman: documenta inéd. sur la Révolution (1783-90), recueillis aux archives royales de Suède et publiés avec une introduction par L. Léouzon-le-Duc. Par., 1881. 9°.
   Lettow-Vorbeck, O. v. D. Krieg v. 1806-1807. Berl., 1891-96.
- 4 v. 8°. Le Vasseur. Commentaires de Napoléon; suivis d'un résumé des principes de atratégie du Prince Charlea. Par., 1851-2. 2 v.
- Lévy, A. Napoléon intime. 5 éd. Par., 1893. 8°. Libri-Carrucci. Souvenira de la jeunease de Napoléon. Par.,

- 1842. 8°.
  1842. 8°.
  Liebenstein, T. E. F. v. D. Krieg Napoleons gegen Rusaland in d. Jahre 1812 n. 13. Frank.-a-M., 1888, 2 Thle.
  Litta Biumi, A. Della Battaglia di Montenotte. Milano, 1846. 8°.
  Livrepool, Earl of (R. B. Jenkinson). Memoira. Lond., 1827.
  Livr, G. Napoleone all' isola d' Elba. Milano, 1888.
  Livre IX. Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire de France en 1815, avec le plan de la hatuille de Mont Saint Jean. Par., 1820. 8°. This is the "Second Manuscrit venn de Sainte Hélène." It was attributed to Napoleon and not repudiated by him. by him
- Loben Sels, E. von. Précis de la campagne de 1815, dans les Paya-Bas. La Haye, 1849.
   Lockhart, J. G. History of Napoleon Bonaparte. 3 ed. Lond., 1835. 2 v. 16°.

- 1835. 2 v. 16°.
  Lorré de Roissy, J. G., Baron de. Procès-verhaux du conseil d'état, cont. la discussion du projet de code civil. Années IX-X11. Par, an X11. (1803-4). 5 v. 4°.
  Loir, M. Gloires et Souvenirs maritimes. Par., 1895. 4°.
  Lombard, J. G. Matériaux pour servir à l'histoire des années 1805-7. dédiés aux Prussiens par un anciea compatricte. Par., 1808. 12°.
- Lombard, J. G.
   1805-7. dédiés aux Prussiena par un anosce
   Par., 1805. 12°.
   Lossau, v. Charakteristik der Kriege Napoleona. (Mit Plänen u. Karten.) Karlsnuhe, 1843-47. 3 v. 8°, Atlas fol.
   Lossberg, H. v. Briefe in d. Heimat geschrieben während des Feldzages 1812 in Russland: ein Beitrag z. Geschichte dieses Feldzages. Cassel, 1844. 8°.
- Feldzuges (assel, 1844, 8°,
  Lubis, F. P. Histoire de la Restauration (1814–1830). 2 éd.
  Par., 1848, 6 v. 8°,
  Lubis, F. P. Résumé de l'histoire des Cent Jours. Par. 1843, 12°.
  Lucchesini, Historische Entwickelung der Ursachen und Wirkungen des Rheinbundes. Ana dem Italieniachen. Lpz., 1822, 2. Thle. 8°.
- Kunstein des Anternomites. Aus dem Franchizetten. 1922., 1822. 2. Thie, S<sup>2</sup>. Luginbühl, R. Ph. Alb. Stapfer, helvetischer Minister d. Kunste n. Wissenschaften (1766–1840). Ein Lebens u. Kultur-bild. Basel, 1887. S<sup>2</sup>.
- bild. Basel, 1887. 8°.
  Lullin de Châteauvieux, J. F. Manuscripts transmitted from St. Helena by an nøknown channel. N. Y., 1817. 12°.
  Lullin de Châteauvieux, J. F. Manuscrit venu de Sainte Helène d'nne manière inconne. 4 éd. Lond., 1817. 8°.
  Lumbroso, A. Saggio di una bibliografia ragionata per servire alla storia dell'epoca Napoleonica. Modena, 1894-6. Pta. 1-5.
  Lumbroso, A. Miscellanea Napoleonica. Roma, 1895, 1896, 1897.

- Lumbrosc, A. Napoleone I. e l'Inghilterra. Roma, 1897. 8°. Luitzow, Adf. Freikorps in den Jahre 1813 n. 1814 von K. v. L. gegenüber d. in d. preuss. Jahrbücher, hrsg. v. H. v. Treitschke, auf genommenen Darstellung v. A. Koberstein. Berl., 1884. 8°.
- Macdonald, E. J. J. A., Duc de Tarente. Souvenirs avec une introduction par M. C. Rousset. Par., 1892.
   8<sup>a</sup>, Mahan, A. T. Influence of Sea Power upon History. Lond., 1889.
   8<sup>a</sup>.

- Manan, A. T. Influence of Sea Power upon History. Lond., 1889. 8°.
  Mahan, A. T. Influence of Sea Power upon the French Revolution and Empire, 1793-1812. Lond., 1893. 2 v. 8°.
  Mahan, A. T. Life of Nelson. Lond., 1897. 2 v. 8°.
  Mahan, A. T. Life of Nelson. Lond., 1897. 2 v. 8°.
  Maistre, J. de. Currespondance diplomatique, 1811-17. Éd. par A. Blanc. Par., 1897. 8°.
  Maistre, J. de. Currespondance diplomatique, 1811-17. Éd. par A. Blanc. Par., 1860. 2 v. 8°.
  Maistre, J. de. Mémoires politiques et correspondance diplomatique. Avec explications et commentaires historiques, par A. Blanc. 2 e éd. 1859. 8°.
  Maitland, Sir F. L. Narrative of the surrender of Buonaparte and of his residence on board the Bellerophon. 2 ed. Lond., 1820. 5°.
- 1826. S°. Maitland, Sir F. L. Relation concernant l'embarquement et le aéjonr de l'Emperenr Nappléon à bord du Bellérophon. Par., 1826. 8°.
- Malachowski, v. Üb. die Entwickelung der Leitenden Ge-danken zur ersten Campagne Bonapartes. Ein Vortrag. Berl.,
- danken 2n ersten Campagne Bonapartes. Ent vortrag. Der., 1831.
  Mallet du Pan, J. Correspondance inédite avec la cour de Vienne (1734-98), publ. d'après les MSS. conservés aux archives de Vienne par A. Michel; avec une préface de II. Taine. Par., 1884. 2 v. 8°.
  Malmesbury, Lord. Diaries and Correspondence. Lond., 1844. 4 v. 8°.
  Malouet, P. V. Mémoires. Publ. par son petit-fils. 2 éd. augm. de lettres inédites. Par., 1874. 2 v. 8°.
  Marbet, Baron M. de, Mémoires. Publ. 3 v. 8°.
  Marbet, Louise. Correspondance, 1799-1847. Lettres intimes et inédites à la comtesse de Colloredo et à Mile. de Poutet depuis 1810 contesse de Crenneville. Par., 1887. 18°.
  Marmont, A. F. L. Viesse de, Duc de Raguse. Mémoires. 1792-1841. Par., 1857. 9 v. 8°.

- Marmottan, P. Bonaparte et la république de Lucques. Par.
- Martel, Comte A. de. Historiens fantalsistes (M. Thiers). Par.,
- 1896, 12".
  1897, 12" and provide the principal of the darket. Fur., 1883, 2 v. 18".
  Martel, Comte A. de, Historiens fantalsistes (M. Thiers). Pur., 1883, 2 v. 18".
  Martens, G. F. de, Recneil des principanx traités d'alliance, de paix de trève, etc., conclus par les puissances de l'Enrope, tant entre elles qu'avec les puissances et États dans d'autres parties du monde depuis 1701 jusqu'à présent, 1801. Pur., 1701-1801. 7 v. 8". Supple. to 1807. Pur., 1802-98.
  2d éd. Par., 1817-35. 8 v. 8". (Continued by his nephew to the present time.)
  Martha-Beker, F., Comte de Mons. Études historiques sur le général Desaix. Clermont-Ferrand, 1852, 8".
  Masséne, A., Duc de Rivoll. Prince d'Essling, Maréchal de France. Mémoires, rédigés d'après les documents qu'il a laissés et sur ceux du dépôt de la guerre et du dépôt des fortifications, par le général des d'attres england during the reign of George III. Lond., 1855-63. 4 v. 8".
  Masson, F. Napoléon et les femmes. I. L'Amonr. Par., 1894. 8".
  Masson, F. Napoléon et les ling. Jaurnée de l'Empereur aux Tuileries. Par., 1894. 8".
  Masson, F. Napoléon et es ling. Ar., 1895. Fol.
  Masson, F. Napoléon et des Bard. Par., 1895. 40.
  Masson, F. Napoléon et des Bard. Acompagnés de notes sur la jennesse de Napoléon et des Bard. Accompagnés de notes sur la jennesse de Napoléon et de Bard. Accompagnés de notes sur la jennesse de Napoléon et des Bard. Accompagnés de notes sur la jennesse de Napoléon et a fang. Accompagnés House. 1894. 8".
  Masson, F. Napoléon et des Bard. Accompagnés de notes sur la jennesse de Napoléon et a fang. Accompagnés de notes sur la jennesse de Napoléon et sa famile. 1. (1769-1802). Par., 1895. 2 v. 8".

- Masson, F. Napoléon et sa famille, 1. (1763-1802). Par., 1896. S<sup>5</sup>
  Matériaux pour servir à l'histoire de la hataille d'Austerlitz, recueillis par un militaire. Weimar, 1806. S<sup>8</sup>. (With a map of the battle-field.)
  Manduit, H. de. Les derniers jours de la grande armée, on souvenirs, doemnents et correspondance inédite de Napoléon en 1814 et 1815. 2 éd. Par., 1847-48. 2 v. 8<sup>6</sup>.
  Maxwell, W. H. Life of the Duke of Weilington. 4th ed. 1845. 3 v. 8<sup>8</sup>.
  Meerheim, R. v. Erlehnisse eines Veteranen d. grosseo Armee wahrend des Feldzuges in Russland in 1812. Herausg.v. dessen Sohne K. v. Meerheim. Dresden, 1860. S<sup>8</sup>.
  Meerheimb, F. v. Die Schlachten bei Eantzen am 20 u. 21 Mai, 1813. Vortrag geh. in d. Militär Gesellschaft zu Berlin am 2 Novbr., 1872. Berl., 1873. 8<sup>8</sup>.
  Mellis, J. C. St. Helena; a phys. hist. and topog. description of the Island, incl. its geology, fauna, flora, and meteorology. Lond., 1875. 4<sup>8</sup>.
  Melzi, J. Erri, P., Duca di Lodi. Memorie, documenti e lettere, inedite di Napoleone I<sup>o</sup> e Beanharnisis. Ed. G. Melzi. Milano, 1865. v. 8<sup>8</sup>.

- medute di Napoleone Iº e Beauharnais. Ed. G. Melzi. Milano, 1865. 2v. 8°.
  Mémoires sur l'impératrice Joséphine, ses contemporains, la cour de Navarre et de la Malmaison (par Mme. G. D. Boehsa, nièce de Mme. de Genlis.] Par., 1828. 3v. 8°. (Attribués par M. Delacont à Mme. Durand.)
  Mémoires et souvenirs d'un pair de France, ex-membre du Sénat conservateur. Par., 1829-30. 4v. 8°.
  Mémoires un l'Egypte publiés pendant les campagnes du général Bonaparte dans les années VI et VII. Par., 4v. 8°.
  Mémoires trivés des papiers d'un homme d'Etat, sur les campagnes du général Bonaparte dans les années VI et VII. Par., 4v. 8°.
  Mémoires trivés des papiers d'un homme d'Etat, sur les cames secrètes qui ont determiné la politique des cabinets dans la guerre de la Révolution, depuis 1792 jusqu'en 1815. Par., 1828-38. 13 v. 8°. (Par le comte A. F. d'Allooville, A. de Beauchamp et A. Schubart.]
  Méneval, C. F. Baron de. Mapoléon et Marie-Louise: souvenirs historiques. 2 éd., cor. et augm. Par., 1844-45. 3v. 12°.
  Méneval, C. F. Baron de, Memoirs illustrating the history of Napoleon I. from 1802 to 1815; ed. by his grandson, Napoleon Joseph de Méneval (tr. by Rohert H. Sherard). N. V., 1894. 3v. 8°.

- Joseph de Méneval (tr. by Rohert H. Sherard). N. Y., 1894.
  Joseph de Méneval (tr. by Rohert H. Sherard). N. Y., 1894.
  Werlet, G. Tablean de la littérature française (1800-1815).
  Paris, 1877-84. 3 v. 8'.
  Metternich, C. W. N. L., Fürst v. Metternich-Winneburg.
  An nachgelassenen Papieren (1773-1859). Hrsg. von R. Metternich-Winneburg; geord. von A. v. Klinkowström. Wien, 1880-84. 8 v. ñ 7. 8'.
  Metternich-Winneburg, R., Éd. Österreichs Theilnahme an den Beireiungskriegen : ein Beitrag z. Gesch. d. Jahre 1813-15 nach aufzeichngn. von. Frdr. v. Gentz, nebst e. Anh.: Briefwechsel zwischen den Fursten Schwarzenberg u Metternich. Geordnet u. zusammeogestellt von A. v. Klinkowström. Wien, 1887. 8'.
  Meyer, F. J. L. Briefe aus d. Haupstadt u. dem innern Frankreichs unt. d. Consular-regierung. Stuttg., 1802. 2 Thie. 8'.
  Millutin. Geschichte des Krieges Russlands mit Frankreich im Jahre 1790. Münch., 1856. 3 v. 8'.
  Miller, M. v. Darstellung d. Feldzugs d. Französ, verbundeten Armee gegen d. Russ. im Jahre 1522, mit besond. Rucksleht au d. Theinhahme 4. K. Würtembergischen Truppen. Stuttg., 1832. 2 Thie. 4.
  Yoo, IV.-35

- VOL. IV. 35

Schlachtfelde d. Schlacht an der Moskwa am 7 Sept. 1812.

- Dresden, 1879. 8*. Miot de Melito, Mémoires (1788-1815). 2 éd. Par. 1-73. 3 v. 8*. Mirus, R. D. Treiten bel Wartenburg am 3 Okt., 1813. Berl.,
- 1863.
  Mollien, N. F., Comte. Mémoires d'un ministre du trésor public. 1780-1815. Par., 1815. 4 v. 8'.
  Mönckeberg, C. Hamburg anter dem Drucke d'Franzosen, 1800-1814. Hist. Denkwurdigkeiten. Hamb., 1863. 8'
  Monier, A. Une nunée de la vie de l'Emp reur Napoléon ou précis historique de tout ce qui s'est passé depuis le l'Avril, 1814, jusqu'au 21 Mars, 1815. . . . par A. D. B. M. 3 ed. rev. Paris, 1815. 12'.
- Montchenu, Marquis de, La captivité de Sainte Héléne, d'après les rapports inédits, par G. Firmin Didot. Par., 1894 8°. Montégut, E. Le Maréchal Davout, son caractère et son génie.
- Montesquiou, Abbé de, Le Divorce de Napoléon et l'abbé de Montesquiou. Auch. 1805.
   8°.
   Montgaillard, J. G. M. Rocques de, De la France et de l'En-rope sons le gouvernement de Bonaparte. Puris et Lyon, An
- rope sons XII (1804)
- XII (1804).
   Montgatliard, J. G. M. Roques, known as Conte de. Mé-moires diplomatiques 1805-1819, extraits du ministere de l'in-terieur et publics, avec une introduction et des notes, par Clément de Lacroise. Par. 1896.
   Montgelas, Max, Graf v. Denkwurdigkeiten (1799-1817) im Auszug aus dem Franzos. Original ula ers. von Max Frihrn. v. Freyberg-Eisenberg u. hrsg. v. Ludg. Grafen v. Montgelas.
- Montglave, G. de. Les souvenirs d'un grognard de la vieille.
- Par, 1842. 8.
   Par, 1842. 8.
   Par, 1842. 8.
   Panpereur Napoleon a Suinte Hélene. Par, 1847 29. 8<sup>3</sup>.
   Montholon-Sémonville, C. T. de. History of the captivity of Napoleon at St. Ilelena. Lond., 1846-47. 4 v. 8<sup>a</sup>. Am. ed.,
- Napoleon at St. Helenai. Lond., 1846-47. 4 v. 8°. Am. ed., Phil., 1847. 8°. Moore, J. Narrative of the campaign of the British army in Spain, commanded by Sir John Moore. 2d ed. Lond., 1809. 4°. Morris, Gouverneur. Diary and Letters. N. Y., 1883. 2 v. 8°. Morris, W. O'C. Napoleon, warrior and ruler, and the mil-tary supremacy of revolutionary France. N. Y., 1893. 8°. Mortimer-Pernaux. Histoire de In Terreur (1702-1704). Paris, 1892-1881. 8 v. 8°.

- Mortimer-Ternaux. Ilistoire de la Terreur (1792–1794). Paris, 1862–1881. 8 v. 8.
   Mudford, W. Historical account of the battle of Waterloo. Lond., 1817. 4<sup>4</sup>.
   Müffling, F. C. F., Frhr. v. [sonst Weiss genannt.] Aus meinem Leben. 2 Thle. Berlin, 1851. 8<sup>5</sup>. Aus meinem Leben. Berl, 1855. 2 Thle. 8<sup>5</sup>. (Untrustworthy) Müffling, C. v. Geschichte d. Feldzuges d. Armee unter Wellington u. Blücher, im Jahre 1815. Nebst d. Planen d. Schlachten von Ligny, Quatrebras u. Belle-Alliance. Stattg., 1817. 8<sup>5</sup>.
   Müffling, C. v. D. Preussisch-russische Campagne, im Jahre 1815. Ist. Müffling, S. Müffling, D. Operstionsplan der Preussisch-sachsischen Armee. 1806. Schlacht von Auerstädt, Ruckzug bis Lubeck. Weimar, 1807. 8<sup>5</sup>.
- 1807.
- 1807. 8°.
  Müller, F. v. Erinnerungen aus den Kriegszeiten v. 1806-1813, Brnuuschw., 1851. 8°.
  Muralt, C. v. Hans v. Reinhard, Bürgermeister d. Eidgenos-sischen Standes Zurich u. Landsminisun d. Schweiz, Beitrag z. Gesch. d. Schweiz während d. letzten Jahrzehnte; bearb, nach Reinhards nachgelassenen Denkschriften, Tagebüchern u. Briefwechsel. Zurich, 1838.

Histoire de l'expédition des Français en

- n. Briefwechsel. Zurich, 1838.
  Nakoula-el-turk. Histoire de l'expédition des Français en Égypte. Tr. et publ. par Desgranges. Par., 1830 8*.
  Nani-Mocenigo, Conte. Venezia durante la dominazione Napoleonica, Venezia, 1896. 8*.
  Napoléon I. Collection générale et complète de lettres, produment en la dominazione du temps 1796-1807. Accompagnée de notes historiques, publiée par C. A. Fischer. Lpz., 1808-18. 2 v. 8*.
  Napoléon I. Contentaires. Par., 1867. 6 v. 4*.
  Napoléon I. Correspondance. Publ. par ordre de l'Empereur Napoléon I. Correspondance. Nucl. 2 v. 8*.
  Napoléon I. Correspondance avec le ministre de la marine depuis 1804 jusqu'en avril 1815. Extraite d'un portefeuille de Ste Ul-lene. Par., 1876-77. 10 v. 12*.
  Napoléon I. Correspondance militaire, extraite de la corresp. generale. Par., 1876-77. 10 v. 12*.
  Napoléon I. Correspondance incidite officielle et confidentielle, avec les cours étrangères, etc., mise en ordre et publ. par le gén. C. F. Beauvais. Par., 1800-20. 7 v. 8*.
  Napoléon I. Lettres to Cantaincourt. Published by A. Vandal in the "Revne Blene." Mars-avril, 1805.
  Napoléon I. Lettres à Josephne. et lettres de Joséphine à Napoléon I. Lettres à Josephne. et lettres de Joséphine à Napoléon I. Mariers pour servir à l'histoire de France sous le regne de Napoléon derits à Sainte-Hélène, par les generaux Gourgaud et Montholon, qui out partagé sa captivité. 2<sup>o</sup> ed. disposée dans un nouvel ordre, et sugmentée de chapitres inédits, etc. Par., 1830. 9 v. 8*.

Napoléon I. Memoirs of the history of France during the reign of Napoleon, dictated by him at St. Helena. Lond., reign of 1823-4.

reign of Aq. S. 1823-4 Av. S. Napoléon L. Memoirs of the history of France. Hist. mis-cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond., 1823. 3 v. S°. (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond.) (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond.) (Dictated to the Count de cellanies. Lond.) (Dictated to the Count de) Napoléon L. Memoirs of the history of France. First, misciellanies, Lond., 1823. 3 v. S<sup>o</sup>. (Dictated to the Count de Montholon.) Napoléon I. (Euvres litt, et politiques, Nouvelle éd. (Éd. par P. Laeroix.) Par., 1840. 18<sup>o</sup>.
Napoléon I. (Euvres littéraires. Publ. d'après les originaux et les meilleurs textes, avec une intr., des notes historiques et litteraires et un index par T. Martel. Par., 1888. 4 v. 12<sup>o</sup>.
Napoléon I. Opinions sur divers sujets de politique et d'administration recuenliles par an membre de son conseil d'Etat.

- [ Ro Pelet] et récit de quelques événements de l'époque. Par.,
- 1833. S<sup>2</sup>. Napoléon I. Recueil, par ordre chronologique, de ses lettres, proclamatioos, bulletins, discours sur les matières civiles et politiques, etc., formant une histoire de son règne, écrite par lui-même et accompagnée de notes historiques par M. Ker-moyson. Par., 1853-1865. 4 v. 12<sup>2</sup>.
- Napoléon I. Lettres inédites de. (Au VII-1815.) Par., 1897.

- 2 v. 8°. Nasica, T. Memoires sur l'enfance et la jeunesse de Napoléon I. jusqu'a l'áge de 23 ans. Paris, 1852. 8°. 2° édit., 1865. 12°. Natzmer, G. E. Aus dem Leben der Gen. Oldwig v. Natzmer : Ein Beitrag z. Preuss. Geschichte. Berl., 1876. Naumann, R. D. Völkerschlacht bei Leipzig. Nebst Nachrieh-ten von Zeitgenossen u. Augenzeugen über Dieselbe. Karte des Schlachtfeldes v. Plaue d. Stadt Leipzig von 1813. Lpz., 1969.
- 1863. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Neumann, L., et Plason, A. de. Recueil des traités et conventions conclus par l'Autriche avec les puissances étrangères depuis 1763 jusqu'à nos jours. Lpz., 1855-50. 6 v. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Nouvelle suite. Vienne, 1877-91. 12 v. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Neuville, J. G. Hyde de. Mémoires et souvenirs. Par., 1888-00. J. C<sup>2</sup>.

- 90. 2 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  91. 2 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  92. 2 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  93. 2 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  94. 3 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  95. 3 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  96. 3 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  96. 4 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  97. 4 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  98. 4 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  99. 4 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  99. 4 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  90. 4 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
- 36. 4 v. 8. Nösfelt, F. A., und Löbell, J. W. Kriegsgeschichten aus d. Jahren 1812 u. 13, oder Darstellungen a. d. Feldzügen d.
- Janren 1812 u. 13, otter Darstellungen a. d. Feldzügen d. Franzosen u. verbündeten Truppen, u. s. w. mit dem Plau d. Schlacht bei Leipzig. Bresl., 1814-16. 4 v. S.
  Nougarède de Fayet, A. Notice sur la vie et les travaux de M. le comte Bigot de Préameneu, ministre des cultes sous l'Empire, l'un des trois rédacteurs du Projet de Code Civil. Par., 1813. S.
- Nougarède de Fayet, A. Recberches hist. sur le procès et la condamnation du Duc d'Engbien. Par., 1844. 2 v. 8°.
- Odeleben, E. O. I., Freiherr von. Napoleon's Feldzug in Sachsen, im Jahre 1813. 3 Aufl. Dresslen, 1840. 8°.
  Oginski, M. v. Denkwürdigkeiten üh. Polen u. die Polen im Jahre 1788-1815. Dentsch v. F. Gleich. Lpz., 1827. 2 Thle, 8°.
  Oginski, M. v. Memoires sur la Pologue et les Folonais depuis 1788 jusqu' à la fin de 1816. Par., 1826-27. 4 v. 8°.
  Ollech, K. R. von. Geschichte des Feldzuges von 1815 nach Archivalischen-Quellen. Berl., 1876. 8°.
  O'Meara, B. E. Napoléon dans l'exil, ou une voix de Sainte Hélène. Trad. par A. Roy. Lond., 1823. 2 v. 8°.
  O'Meara, F. v. Zur deutschen Gesch in dem Jahrzehnt vor den Bereinugskriegen.
  I. D. Überwältigung Hannovers durch die Franzosen. Eine hist. polit. Studie. Hann., 1866.

- D. Doerwandgung Hannovers durch die Französen. Eine hist, polit Studie. Hann., 1866.
   H. u. 111. Politischer Nachlass des hannoverschen Staats u. Cabinet-ministers Ludw, von Ompteda aus den Jahren 1804-1813. Veröffentlicht von F. v. Ompteda. Jena, 1869.
   Incken, W. Oesterreich vnd Preussen im Befreiungskriege : untwinn die Aufgehören und der schlichen. Geschlichte Aufgehörten
- Cabinet-ministers Ender, r.v. Ompteda. Jena, 1869, 1813. Veröffentlicht von F. v. Ompteda. Jena, 1869, Oncken, W. Oesterreich vnd Preussen im Befreiungskriege : urkundliche Autschlüsse über d. politische Geschichte des Jahres 1813. Berlin, 1876-79. 2 v. 8°. Oncken, W. D. Zeitalter d. Revolution d. Kaiserreiches u. d. Befreiungskriege. Berl., 1884-86. 2 v. 5°.
- Paget, Sir Arthur. The Paget Papers. Lond., 1896. 2 v. 8°. Pajol, C. P. V., cte. Kleber, sa vie, sa correspondance. Par., 1877. 8°.
- 1877. 8°.
  Pajol, etc. Pajol, général en chef, par le gén. de division cte.
  Tajol, son fils ainé. Par., 1874. 3 v. 8°.
  Panckoucke, P. La République considérée dans ses divers gouvernements, ou la France comme elle est après ce qu'elle a cté. Essai d'observations impartiales et instructives sur les événements et les hommes pendant la Révolution. Faris, an IV (1801). (1801).
- IV (1801). 8°.
  Paquet, Syphorien. Voyage historique et pittoresque fait dans les Pays-Eas et dans quelques départements voisins pen-dant les années 1811, 1812 et 1813. Par., 1813. 2 vol. 12.
  Paris zur Zeit d. Kaiserkrönung. Nebst e Schilderung d. Haupt-personen bei deisem Merkwurd. Feste u. Napoleons Bildn. Lpz., 1805. 8°.
- Parliamentary History. Vols. xxxvi et seq. Lond., 1803 et seq.

- Pascallet, E. Notice biog. sur M. le maréchal marquis de Grouchy, pair de France, avec des éclaircissements et des détails hist. sur la campagne de 1815... et sur la bataille de Waterloo. 2 éd. Par., 1842. 8°.
  Passy, L. Frochot, prétet de la Seine. Hist. administrative, 1789-1815. Par., 1807. 8°.
  Pelet, J. G. Tableau de la grande armée eu sept. et oct. 1813. (Extrait du Spectateur militaire.)
  Pelet, J. G., Mém. sur la guerra de 1800 en Allemagne, avec les opérations particulieres des corps d'Halie, de Pologne, de Saxe, de Naples et de Walcheren. Par., 1824-26. 4 v. S°.
  Pelet, J. G. G., Mém. Sur la guerra de Isono de Allemagne, avec les opérations particulières des corps d'Halie, de Pologne, de Saxe, de Naples et de Walcheren. Par., 1824-26. 4 v. S°.
  Pelet, de la Lozère, J. Opinions de Napoléon sur divers

- iaïre.)
  Pelet de la Lozère, J. Opinions de Napoléon sur divers sujets de politique et d'administration, recueillies par un membre de son conseil d'État et récit de quelques événe-ments de l'époque. Paris, 1833. 8°.
  Pelleport, le gén. vicomte Pierre de. Souvenirs militaires et intimes de 1793 à 1853. Publ. par son fils sur manuscrits ori-ginaux, lettres, notes, et documents officiels laissés par l'au-teur. Bordeaux, 1857. 2 v. 8°.
  Pellet, E. A. M. Napoléon à l'île d'Elbe; Mélanges historiques. Part, 1858. 12°.

- Bellet, E. A. M. Napoléon à l'he d'Elbe: Mélanges historiques. Part, 1888. 12°.
  Pellet, E. A. M. Bonaparte en Toscane en 1796. Par., 1887. 12°. (Extrait de la Revue Bleue).
  Péronse, H. Napoléon I. et les lois civiles du Consulat et de l'Empire. Par., 1866. S°.
  Perthes, C. T. Politische Zustande u. Personen in Deutsch-land z. Zeit d. franz. Herrschaft. Das sudliche u. westliche Deutschland. 2 Aufl. Gotha, 1863. S°.
  Pertz, G. H. D. Leben den Feldmarschalls Grafen Neithardt v. Gneisenau, 1700-1815. Schluss Bd. von H. Delbruck. Berl., 1864-81. 5 Bde. S°.
  Pertz, G. H. D. Leben den Kinisters Freiherrn von Stein, 1767-1831. Berl., 1849-55. 6 v. S°.
  Pertz, G. J. Essai d'une statistique générsle de la France. Paris, 1802. 4°.
  Peyre, R. Napoléon I. et son temps: histoire militaire, gouver-nement intérieur, lettres, sciences et ats. Par., 1888. 4°.
  Peyrusse, G. J. R., Baron. 1809-15: Mémorial et archives de M. le Bon Peyrusse, trésorier-général de la couronne pendant les Cent Jours. Vienne, Moscou, ile d'Elhe, Carcassonue, 1869. S°.

- res Cent Jours. Vienne, Moscou, ile d'Elhe. Carcassonne, 1869. S*.
  Pfuel, E. v. D. Rückzug der Franzosen aus Russland. Hrsg. von F. Förster. Berl., 1867. S*.
  Picaud, A. Carnot: l'organisateur de la victoire, 1753-1823. Nouv. cd. Paris, no date. S*.
  Pichot, A. Napoléon à l'ile d'Elhe : chronique des événements de 1814-15, d'après le journal du Col. Sir Neil Camplell, le journal d'un détenu et autres doc, incédits ou peu connus, pour servir à l'hist. du premier Empire et de la Restauration, ac-compagné d'une gravure en taille douce. Par., 1873. S*.
  Pièces diverses relatives aux opérations militaires et politiques du général Bonaparte. Par., an VIII. S*.
  Pièces officielles de l'armée d'Egypte. 2<sup>n</sup> partie. Par., an IX. S*.

- Pictes onlines de fainte d'Egyptet à partie l'init, an IX. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Pingaud, L. Un agent secret sous la Révolution et l'Empire : le conte d'Antrajues. Par, 1893. S<sup>3</sup>.
  Pion des Loches, A. A. F. Mes campagnes (1792-1815). Notes et correspondance, misse en ordre et publiées par M. Chipon et L. Pingaud. Par., 1899. S<sup>3</sup>.
  Pisani, Abbé P. La Dalmatie de 1797 à 1815. Episode des conquétes Napoléoniennes. Par., 1893. gr. S<sup>3</sup>.
  Plotho, C. v. D. Krieg in Deutschland u. Frankreich in d. Jahren 1813-15. Berl, 1817. 4 Thie. S<sup>4</sup>.
  Plotho, C. v. Der Krieg des Verbündet. Europas gegen Frankreich in Jahre 1815. Berl, 1818. S<sup>6</sup>.
  Plotho, C. v. Tagebuch wahrend d. Krieges zwisch. Russland u. Preussen in d. Jahren 1806 u. 7. Mit 2 Plan. Berlin, 1811. S<sup>4</sup>. 1811
- Pohl, J. G. v. Deukwiirdigkeiten a. meinen Leben u. aus meiner Zeit. 1840.
- Zeit. 1940.
  Pölitz, K. H. L. D. Europäischen Verfassungen seit d. Jahre
  I789 bis auf die neueste Zeit. Mit geschichtl. Einleit, u. Er-lauter. 2<sup>te</sup> neu geordn., herichtigte u. erganzte Aufl. Lpz., 1700 läuter. 200 3 v. - 8'
- Pointz, C. E. Militarische Briefe eines Verstorbenen, an seine noch lebenden Freunde; historischen, wissenschaftlichen, kritischen u. humoristischen Inhalts. Zur unterhaltenden Belchrung f. Eingeweihte und Laien im Kriegswesen. Adorf,

- Belchrung I. Eingeweihte und Laien im Kriegswesen. Adorf, 1841-45. 5 v. 8°.
  Pons, André, Comte de Rio. Known as Pons de l'Hérault. Le Congrès de Chátillon. Par., 1825. 8°.
  Pontécoulant, L. G. D., Comte de. Souvenirs historiques et parlementaires, extraits de ses papiers et de sa correspon-dance, 1764-1848. Par., 1861-65. 4 v. 8°.
  Porter, Sir R. Ker. Narrative of the campaign in Russia dur-ing 1812. Lond., 1815.
  Porter, Sir R. Ker. Nitst. de la campagne de Russie pendant L'année 1812, contenant des d'étails puisés dans des sources of fleielles on provenant de récits français interceptés et inconnus jusqu'a ce four, traduit de l'auglais sur la 6° d. M. * * * avec des notes. Par., 1817. 8°.
  Poullet, P. La Beleique et la chute de Napoléon I. Extrait de la "Revne générale." Erux, 1895. 8°.
  Pozzo di Borgo, Contc. Correspondance diplomatique du Cte Pozzo di Borgo et du Cte de Nesselrode depuis la Restauration des Bourbons jusqu'au congrès d'Aix-la-Chapelle 1811-18.

Publicé par le Cto Ch. Pozzo di Borgo, Par., 1890-97. 2 v. 8°.
Pradt, D. D. de. Histoire de l'ambassade dans le grand duché de Varsovie en 1812. 5 éd., rev. et corr. Par., 1815. 8°.
Pradt, D. D. de. Kécit histoirque sur la restannation de la royauté en France le 31 Mars, 1814. Par l'auteur du "Congrès de Vienne," etc. 2° ed. Par., 1822. 8°.
Pradt, D. D. de. Les quatre concordats ; suivis de considérations sur le gouvernement de l'Église en général et sur l'Église de France en particulier de puis 1515. Par., 1815. 3 v. 8°.
Procès instruit par la cour de justice criminelle contre Georges, Pichegeu, Moreau et autres prévenus de conspiration contre la personne du premier Consul, Par., 1804. 8 v. 8°.
Prokesch, A. v. Denkwürdigkeiten aus dem Leben des Feldmarschalls Fürsten Carl zu Schwarzenberg. Neue Ausg. Wien, 1801. 8°.

- Wien, 1861.
  S*.
  Pulhusque, L. G. Lettres sur la guerre de Russie en 1812, sur la ville de St. Pétersbourg, les nœurs et les usages des habit-ants de la Russie et de la Pologne.
  2 éd. Par., 1817.
  8°.

Ouinet, E. Histoire de la campagne de 1815, Par., 1862, 8*,

- Quinet, E. Histoire de la campagne de 1815. Par., 1862. 8'.
  Radetzky, Graf. Denkschriften militárisch politischen Iahata ans d. handschriftlichen Nachlass. Stuttz., 1858.
  Rambaud, A., et Lavisse, E. Histoire Génerale. v. Lavisse, Rambaud, A., et Lavisse, E. Histoire Génerale. v. Lavisse, T. Banke, L. von. Hardenberg u. d. Gesch. d. Preussischen Staates, von 1792-1813. 2 Aufl. Lpz., 1879-81. 3 v. 8'. (Sämmt. Worke. Bde. 46-48.)
  Rapetti, P. N. La défection de Marmont en 1814, ouvrage suivi d'un précis des jugemeuts de Napoléon 1est sur le méme sujet, etc. Par., 1858. 8'.
  Rapetti, P. N. La défection de Marmont en 1814, ouvrage suivi d'un précis des contemporains pour servir à l'histoire de la Képublique et de l'Empire. 1<sup>ere</sup> livraison. Mémoires du gón. Rap. Publiés par sa famille. Par., 1823. 8'.
  Récamier, J. F. J. A. B. Memoirs and correspondence. Tr. and ed. by 1. M. Luyster. Lond., 1867. 12'.
  Recueil de pièces authentiques sur le captif de Sainte-Hédène, de mémoires et documents écrits ou dictés par l'Empireur Nameléon, suivis de lettres de M. le grand noard-chal C'e Bertrand, le C'e de Las Cases, le gen. B'endere de Manden, le C'e de Las Cases, le gen. Bane 16:6: 18:00. 2''. 8''.
  Refnerg, A. W. Über den Code Napoleon n. dessen Einführung is 20. 2''. 8'.
  Refnerg, A. W. Über den Code Napoleon n. dessen Einführung is 20. 2''. 8'.
  Reinherg, M. Uber den Code Napoleon n. dessen Einführung is 20. 2''. 8'.
  Reinherg, A. W. Über den Code Napoleon n. dessen Einführung is 20. 2''. 8'.
  Reinherg, A. W. Über den Code Napoleon n. dessen Einführung is 20. 2''. 8'.
  Reinherg, A. W. Über den Code Napoleon n. dessen Einführung is 20. 2''. 8'.
  Reinherg, A. W. Uber den Code Napoleon n. dessen Einführung is eutschland. Haunover, 1814. 8'.
  Reinherg, A. W. Uber den Code Napoleon n. dessen Einführung is eutschland. Haunover, 1814. 8'.
  Reinherg, P. J. Spanien nach eigner Ansicht in Jahre 1802.

- Reiche, L. V. Memoiren, hrsg. von L. v. Weltzien. Lpz., 1857. 2 Thle. S°
  Rémusat, C. E. J. G. de V. de. Mémoires, 1802-08. Publiés par Paul de Rémusat. Par., 1880. 3 v. S°.
  Rémusat, C. E. J. G. de V. de. Lettres, 1804-14. Publiés par Paul de Rémusat. Par., 1880. 2 v. S°.
  Remmont, A. v. Beiträge zur Italienischen Geschichte. Berl., 1853-57. 6 Bde.
  Richardot, C. Nouveaux mémoires sur l'armée française en Egypte et en Syrie, ou la vérité mise au jour sur les princi-paux faits et évenements de cette armée, la statistique du pays, les usages et les mœurs des habitants, avec le plan de la côte d'Aboukir à Alexandrie et à la tour des Arabes. Par., 1848. S°.
  Rieu, J. L. Mémoires. Genève, 1871. 18°.
  Riols, J. de. Napoléon peint par lui-méme, anecdotes, souvenirs, caractère, appréciations, etc. Par., 1955. 18°.
  Rist, J. G. Lebecserinnerungen, herausg. von G. Poel. Gotha, 1850. 2 Th.
  Rochechouart, Général Comte de. Souvenirs an la Récolu-

- Rist, J. G. Lébeaserinnerungen, herausg. von G. Poel. Gotha, 1850. 2 Th.
  Rochechouart, Général Conte de. Souvenirs sur la Révolution, l'Empire et la Restauration. Mémoires inédits publiés par son fils. Par. 1859. 8'.
  Rocke, P. Die Kontinentalsperre, Naumb., 1894. 8'.
  Rocquain, F. Etat de la France au 18 Brunaire d'après les rapports des conseillers d'État chargés d'une enquête sur la situation de la République, avec pièces inédites, de la fio du Directotier, publiés pour la première fois et précedées d'une préface et d'une introduction par. Par., 1874. 12'.
  Rocquain, F. Napoléon I. et le Roi Louis, d'après les documents conservés aux archives nationales. Par., 1875. 8'.
  Rocque, T. D. Kriegszug Napoleous gegen Russlaud im Jahre 1812. Nach den besten Quellen u. seinen cigenen Tagebuchern Dargestellt, nach d. ZeitOlge d. Begebenheiten, hrsg. v. K. Röder, Fpz., 1848. 8'.
  Rodriguez, J. A. Relation historique de ce qui s'est passé A Paris à la mémorable époque de la dechénne de Napoléon par des au einen offizier des Generalstabes. Lapz, 1816. 2 Thle. 8'.
  Roederer, P. L., Comte. Eurres, publ. par son fils, A. M. Roederer, Par., 1814. 8'.
  Roederer, P. L., Comte. deures, publ. par, 1845.

Romanin, F. Storla documentata di Venezia. Ven., 1853-61.

- Romilly, Sir Samuel. Memoirs and Correspondence. Lond.,

- Romilly, Sir Samuel. Memoirs and Correspondence. Lond., 1817. 5 v. 8'.
  Roos, H. U. L. v. Ein Jahr ans meinem Leben, oder Reise von den westl. Ufern d. bonau an die Nara, südl. von Moskwa u. zuruck an die Beresina mit d. grossen Armee Napoleon's im Jahre 1812. St. Petersb., 1832. 8'.
  Ropes, J. C. Campaign of Waterloo: a military history: 2d ed. with atlas. N. Y., 1893. S'. Atlas fol.
  Ropes, J. C. First Napoleon : A sketch political and military. Hoston, 1895. 8''.
  Robe, G. Diarles and correspondence. Ed. by L. V. Harcourt. Loud., 1859. 2 v. 8''.
  Roston, C. Diarles and correspondence. Ed. by L. V. Harcourt. Loud., 1859. 2 v. 8''.
  Roston, 1895. 4''.
  Roston, 1895. 8''. Atlas fol.
  Roston, 1895. 8''. Atlas fol.
  Roston, 1895. 8''. Rostoptchine, F. Vérité sur l'incendie de Moscou. Far., 1823.
  Roth v. Screckenstein, D. Kavallerle in d. Schlacht an der Moskwa (von d. Russen Schlacht bel Borodho genanot) am 7 Sopt. 1812. Nobst einigen ausführlichen Nuchrichten u. d. Leistungen des 4 Kavallerie corps unter d. Anfubrang d. Gen. Latour-Maubourg. Münst., 1858. 8''.
  Rousset, C. Les volontaires, 1791-04. Par., 1870. 8'.
  Rühle v. Lilienstern, Th. Jak. Bericht von Augenzengen v. d. Feidzug im 0ct. 1506. 2 File. Tubing, 1890.
  Rühle v. Lilienstern, J. J. v. Reise eines Malers mit der Armee in Jahre 1809. Rudolst., 1809-11. 3 v.
  Riintov, W. D. Krieg ven 1805 in Deutschard u. Italien. Als Anleitung zu kriegshistorlschen Studien Bearb. Fraun(eld, 1853. 8''.
  Rüstow, W. D. Krieg gegen Russland. Politisch-militarisch

- Rüstow, W. D. Krieg gegen Russland, Politisch-militarisch Bearb. Zür., 1885. 2 Bde. 8°.
- Saint-Elme, Ida. Mémoires d'une contemporaine, on Souve-nirs d'une femme sur les principaux personnages de la Répu-blique, du Consulat, de l'Empire, etc. [1792-1824]. Par., 1827-
- Salnte-Beuve, C. A. Chateaubriand et son groupe littéraire sons l'empire. Nouv. éd., cor. Par., 1889. 2 v. 12°.
   Saint-Hilaire, Marco. Histoire populaire, anecdotique et pittoresque de Napoléon et la grande armée. Par., 1813.

- gr. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Sassenay, Marquis de, Napoléon L et la fondation de la République Argentine. Jacques de Liniers et le marquis de Sassenay (Mos-1810). Par., 1892. 12<sup>2</sup>.
  Savary, A. J. M. R., Due de Rovigo. Mémoires pour servir à l'hinst de l'Empereur Napoléon. Par., 1828. 8 v. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Schaeffner, W. Geschichte d. Rechtsverfassung Frankreichs. 2 Ausg. Fr.-a-M., 1850. 4 v. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Schimpff, G. v. 1813. Napoleon in Sachsen. Nach des Kaisers Korrespondenz. Dread., 1894. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Schinkel, B. v. Mionen nr Sveriges nyare historia. 1<sup>ra</sup> afd. Bihang, 1, 2, 3. Upsala, 1881-83. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Schlabrendorf, G. v. Napoleon n. das französische Volk unter seinem Consulate. Hrsg. von J. F. Reichardt. Germaniee, 1804. 8<sup>3</sup>.

- nico, 1804. 8°. Schlarendorf, G. V. Booaparte and the French people under his consulate. 5 Am. ed. N. Y., 1804. 8°. Schlegel, A. W. Über d. Continentalsystem u. d. Einfluss des-selben auf Schweden. Lpz., 1814. 8°. Schleiffer, A. D. Schlacht bei Hohenlinden am 3 Dezbr. 1800 u. d. vorausgegangenen Heeresbewegungen. Nach d. besten Quellen bearb. Mit e. Legende n. color. Karte. Rathenow, 1885. 8°. 8
- Guenen Berlor Bilt et hegende in color. Karte: Rathenow, 1885.
  Schlitter, H. D. Berichte d. K. K. Commissärs Bartholomäus v. Sturmer aus St. Helena zur Zeit d. dortigen Interniruog Napoleon Bonaparte's, 1816-18.
  Schlitter, H. Kaiser Frauz I. u. die Napoleoniden vom Sturze Napoleon's bis zu dessen Tode. Wien, 1888.
  Schmidt, A. Paris pendant la Révolution d'après les rapports de la police scorète IT39-1800. Trad. franç, accompagnée d'une préface par P. Viollet. Par., 1880-90.
  Schmidt, A. Parizer Zustände wahrend d. Revolutionszeit von 1784-1800. Jena, 1874-76.
  Schmidt, A. Tableaux de la Révolution française. Publ. sur les papiers incidits du département de la police secrète de Paris. Lpz., 1867-70.
  Schmidt, Fr. Schweden unter Karl XIV. Johann. Heidelb., 1842.
  St. M. K. M. K. M. K. M. K. M. K. M. K. M. M. M. 1997.

1842. 8°.
Schoelcher, V. Vie de Toussaint Louverture. Par., 1889. 12°.
Schoell, F. Recueil de pièces officielles sur les évènements qui se sont passés depuis quelques annéés. Par., 1814. 4 v. 8°.
Schlossberger, A. v., Ed. Politische u. militarische Correspondeoz Konig Friedrichs von Wurttemberg nit Kaiser Napoleon I. 1805-1813. Stutter, 1889.

- pondeoz Konig Friedrichs von Württemberg nit Kaiser Napoleon I. 1805–1813.
  Stuttg., 1859.
  Schlossberger, A. v., Ed. Briefwechsel der Königin Katharina n. d. Koniga Jérome v. Westphalen, sowie d. Kaisers Napoleon I. to, dem Konig Friedrich v. Wurttemberg, vom 8 Oktbr., 1801. bis 22 Dezbr., 1810.
  Schulz, K. G. Geschichte d. Kriege in Europa seit dem Jahre 1792.
  Berl, 1827–53.
  16 Binde in 23 Theilen.
  Scott, Sir Walter. Vie de Napoléon Buonsparte, précédée d'un tableau preliminaire sur la Révolution franç. Far., 1827.
  9 v. 8°.
- S.
  Scott, Sir Walter. Life of Napoleon Bonnparte; with a preliminary view of the French Revolution. Edim, 1827. 9 v. 12<sup>2</sup>.
  Séché, L. Les origines du Concordat. I. Pie VI. et le Directoire. 11. Pie VI. et le Consulat. Par., 1894. 2 v. 8<sup>2</sup>.

Seeley, J. R. Courte histoire; de Napoléon I, suivie d'un Essai sur sa personnalité et sa carrière. Trad. par J. B. Baille. Par., 1887.
Seeley, J. R. The life and times of Stein, or Germany and Irussia in the Napoleonic age. Camb., 1878. 3 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
Seeley, J. R. Short history of Napoleon I. Lond., 1886. 8<sup>o</sup>.
Ségur, P. P. de. Geschichte Napoleons und der grossen Ar-mee im Jahre 1812. Stuttg., 1841. 2 v. 16<sup>o</sup>.
Ségur, P. P., comte de. Mapoleon et de la grande armée pendant l'année 1812. 16<sup>o</sup> éd. Par., 1852. 2 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
Ségur, P. R., comte de. Histoire et mémoires. Par., 1873. 7 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.

- Ségur, P. P. de. History of the expedition to Russia in 1812.

- Ségur, P. P. de. History of the expedition to Russia in 1812. Thil., 1825. S.
  Ségur, P. P., comte de. Mélauges. Par., 1873. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Ségur, P. P., comte de. Napoléon à Moscou, un Passage de la Berésina. (From : Hist. de Napoléon et de la grande armée pendant l'année 1812. Comment by A. Henme.)
  Senfft, F. C. L., eomte de. Ménoires : organisation politique de la Suisse, 1800-1813. Lpz., 1863. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Sepet, M. Napoléon, son caractère, son génie, son rôle histo-rique. Par., 1894. 16<sup>6</sup>.
  Séruzier, Baron. Mémoires militaires, mis en ordre et rédigés par aon ami M. Le Miere de Corvey. Avec uoe introduction de J. Turquan. (1894.) Par. 18<sup>6</sup>.
  Séruzier, G., Edd. Sull' occupazione di Massa di Lunigiana da Francesi nel 1796, lettere d'un Giacobino. Lucca, 1880. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Siborne, W. History of the war in France aod Belgium in 1815. 3d ed. Lond., 1848. S<sup>2</sup>. Atlas fel.
  Simonuth. Life and correspondence of Henry Addington, first Viscount Sidmouth. Ed, by G. Pellew. Lond., 1847. 3 v. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Simon, T. Correspondance de Nator. Trad. en franç. Par., an VII. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Sin Clairy, Sir J. Correspondence, with reminiscences of the
- VII. 5°.
  Sinclair, Sir J. Correspondence, with reminiscences of the most distinguished characters in Great Britain and io foreign conntries during the last fifty years. Lond., 1831. 2 v. 8°.
  Soltyk, Comte R., Napoléon en 1812. Mém. hist. et militaires aur la campagne de Russie. Par., 1836. 8°.
  Sorel, A. L'Europe et la Révolution française. Par., 1893-95.
  Sorel, S°.

- Sorel, A. Bonaparte et Hoche en 1797. Par., 1896. 8°. Southey, R. Hist. of the Peninsular War. Lond., 1823-32.
- 3 v. 4 Souvenirs militaires. Napoléon à Waterloo ou précis rectifié de la campagne de 1815, avec des documents nouveaux et des pièces incdites, par un ancien officier de la garde impériale qui est resté près de Napoléon pendant toute la campagne. Par., 1866. 8°.
- Staël-Holstein, Madame de. Considérations sur la Révolution

- Staël-Holstein, Madame de, Censidérations sur la Révolution Irançaise: Ouvrage posthume publ. eo 1818, par M. de Broglie et M. de Staël. Nouv. éd. Par., 1861. 2 v. 12°.
  Stanhope, Life of the right honourable William Pitt. Lond., 1861-62. 4 v. 12°.
  Staps, Fr. Erschossen zu Schönbrunn bei Wien, auf Napoleons Befehl im October, 1809. Eine Broch. aus d. hinterlass. papieren seines Vatera... Berl., 1843. 8°.
  Stedingk, C. B. L. C., econte de. Mémoires posthumes: rédigés aur des lettres, dépéches et autres pièces authentiques, lais-sées à sa famille, par le Gén. de Bjornstjerna. Par., 1845-48. 3 v. 8°.

- 3 v. 8<sup>3</sup>.
  Steffens, H. Zur Erinnerung : aus Briefen au seinen Verleger. Hrsg. v. M. Tietzen. Lpz., 1871. 8<sup>5</sup>.
  Steffens, H. Was ich erlebte. Aus d. Erinnerung niederge-schrieben. Breslau, 1840-44. 10 v. 8<sup>5</sup>.
  Stern, Alfr. Abhandhumen n. Aktenstnicke zur Geschichte d. preusälschen Reformszeit 1807-1815. Lpz., 1885. 8<sup>5</sup>.
  Stewart, C. W. V., first earl Vane and third marquis of Lon-donderry. Narrative of the war in Germany and France in 1813-14. Lond., 1830. 4<sup>5</sup>.
  Stewart, C. W. V. Histoire de la guerre de 1813 et 1814 en Allemagne et en France. Par., 1833. 8<sup>5</sup>.
  Stewarton. Secret history of the court and cabinet of St. Cloud. In a series of letters. Anon. 4th Am. ed. N. Y., 1807. 12<sup>5</sup>.
- 12 1807

- 1807. 12<sup>5</sup>.
  1807. 18<sup>5</sup>.
  1807. 18<sup>5</sup>.<
- atlas
- atlas, Surruges (Abbé). Lettres sur l'incendie de Moscon, écrites de cette ville au R. P. Bouvet. 2 éd. Par., 1823. 8° Swederns, G. Schwedens Politik u. Kriege in den Jahre 1808-Is14 vorzuglich unter Leitung des Kronprinzen Carl Johan. Deutsche, von dem verf. ganzlich umgenrb. Ausg. aus dem Schwed. von C. F. Frisch. Lpz., 1806, 2 Thic. 8°. Sybel, H. von. Geschichte d. Revolutionszeit, von 1789-1800. Nene Ausg. Stuttg., 1882. 5 v. 8°. Sybel, H. von. Histoire de l'Europe pendant la Révolution française. Tr. de l'Allemand par Mme. Dosquet. Éd. revue par l'auteur et précédée d'une préf. écrite pour l'éd. française. Par., 1869-87. 6 v. 8°.

- Taine, H. Les origines de la France contemporaine. Par.,
- ISIO-93. DV. S. Talleyrand-Périgord, C. M. de, Prince de Bénévent. Extraits des Mémoires de, Recueillis et mis en ordre par Madiame la comtesse 0... du C... (le haron Lamothe Laogon) Au-teur des Mémoires d'une Femme de Qualité. Paris. IS38.
- teur des Mémoires d'une Fèmme de Qualité. Paris. 1538. 2 v. 8°.
  Talleyrand-Périgord, C. M. Correspondance inédite du prince de Talleyrand et du roi Louis XVIII. pendant le congres de Vienne, publiée sur les manuscrits conservés au dépôt des affaires étrangères, avec préface, cclaircissements et notes par G. Pallain. Par., 1881. 8°.
  Talleyrand-Périgord, C. M. de, Prince de Bénévent. Lettres inedites à Napoléon (1800-1809), publ. d'apres les originaux conservés aux archives des affaires étrangères. Avec une intr. et des notes par P. Bertrand. 2º (d. Par., 1889. 8°.
  Talleyrand-Périgord, C. M. de, Prince de Bénévent. Mé-moires, publ. avec une préf. et des notes par le Bénévent. Mé-moires, publ. avec une préf. et des notes par le Due de Broglie. Par., 1891. 4 v. 8°.
  Talleyrand-Périgord, C. M. de, Prince de Bénévent. Corre-spondance diplomatique : le ministère de Talleyrand sous le Directoire. Avec intr. et notes par G. Pallain. Par., 1891. 8'.
  Talleyrand-Périgord, C. M. de, Prince de Bénévent. Corres-pondance avec le Fremier Consul pendant la campagne de Marengo. Fubliée par le Comte Boulay de la Meurthe. Ex-trait de la "Revne d'histoire diplomatique," Laval, 1892. 8°.
  Tatistcheff, S. Alexandre 1. et Napoléon d'après leur corre-spondance inédite. 1801-12. Par., 1891. 8'.
  Tchitchagof, P. Mémoires inédits. Campagnes de la Russie 1812 contre la Turquie, l'Autriche et la France. Berlin, 1855. 8'.

- 8.
  Theiner, A. Hist, des deux Concordats de la République française et de la République et alpine conclus en 1801-1803 entre Napoléon Bonaparte et le Saint-Siège ; suivie d'une relation de son couronnement comme empereur des Français par Pie VII., d'après des doc. inód. extraits des archives du Vaticsn et de celles de France. Paris, 1869-70. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Thézard, L. De l'influence des travaux de Pothier et du chancelier d'Aguesseau sur le droit civil moderne. Par., 1866, S<sup>2</sup>.
  Thibaudeau, A. C. Mémoires sur la Convention et le Directoire, 2e éd. Par., 1827. 2v. S<sup>2</sup>.
  Thibaudeau, A. C. Histoire générale de Napoléon Bonaparte, de sa vie privée et publique, de sa carrière politique et militaire, de son administration et de son gouvernement. Par., 1827-28. 6 v. 8<sup>2</sup>.

- Taire, de sou administration en la sou en l
- France et dé Napoléon Bonaparte de 1789 à 1sí5. Par., 1834-35. 10 v. 8°.
  Thiebault, P. C. F. A. H. D., baron. Mémoires, publ. sous les auspices de sa fille, Mile. C. Thiebault, d'après le MS. orig. par F. Calmettes, 1760-1813. Par., 1893-65. 5 v. 8°.
  Thielen, M. v. Erionerungen aus dem Kriegerleben eines 82 Jahrigen Veteranen d. Oesterreichischen Armee, mit besonderer Bezugnahme auf die Feldzüge d. Jahre 1805, 1809, 1813-15; nebst einem Anhang d. Politik Oesterreichs vom Jahre 1809-1814 betr. Wien, 1863. 8°.
  Thielen, M. F. D. Feldzug d. verbündeten Heere Europa's 1814 in Fraokreich unter dem Oberbefeble des K. K. Feldmarschalls Fürsten Carl zu Schwarzenberg. Wien, 1856. 8°.
  Thiers, A. Histoire du Consulat et de l'Empire (1799-1816). Par, 1845-62. 20 v. 8°. Atlas fol.
  Thiers, A. Histoiry of the Consulate and the Empire of Fraoce under Napoleon, Tr. by D. F. Campbell. Lond, 1845-62. 20 v. 4læs Atlas fol. 1859.
  Thournet, 1872. 2 v. 8°.
  Thugut, Frhr. v. Vertrauliche Briefe. Hrsg. v. A. v. Vivento, Wien, 1872. 2 v. 8°.
  Thierheim, A. Ludwig Fürst Starhemberg, Ehemaliger K. K. a. o. Gesandter an den Hofen in Haag, London u. Turin, etc. Graz, 1889. 8°.

- Graz, 1889, S. Tolstof, L. Physiologie de la guerre. Napoléon et la campagne de Russie. Tr. par M. Delinea. Far., 1887. 12°. Touchard-Lafosse, G. Histoire de Charles XIV. (Jenn Berna-dotte), rei de Suéde et de Norvège. Par., 1838. 3 v. 8°. Toulongeon, F. E. Histoire de France depuis la Révolution de 1789. Par., 1801-06. 4 v. 4°. Tratchefski, A. Relations diplomatiques de la Russie avec la France à l'époque de Napoléon I. Saint-Pétersbourg, 1890-03. 4 v. 8° 02  $\Delta v$
- Treuenfeld, v. D. Tage von Ligny u. Belle-Alliance. Hann.,
- 1880. 8°, Trolard, E. Pélerinage nux champs de bataille français d'Italie, v. 1. De Montenotte au pont d'Arcole, v. 2, 8. De Rivoli à Marengo et à Solferino. l'ar., 1893. 4 v. 12°. Turquan, J. Souveraines et grandes dames. L'Impératrice Joséphine d'après les témoignages des contemporains. Par., vere
- 1896.  $-16^{\circ}$ .
- Vandal, A. Napoléon et Alexandre 1<sup>ee</sup>: l'alliance russe sous le premier Empire. Par., 1893-96. 3 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
  Vaulabelle, A. T. de. Histoire de deux Restaurations jusqu'à l'avènement de Louis-Philippe de Jan. 1815, à Oct. 1830. Nouv. éd. Par., 1874. 11 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.

- Vauthier, G. Essai sur la vie et les œuvres de Népomucèno Lemercier. Toul., 1886. 8".
  Véron, L. D. Mémoires d'un hourgeois de Paris, comprenant la fin de l'Empire, la Restauration, la Monarchie de Jullict, la République jusqu'au rétablissement de l'Empire. Far., 1856-57. 5 v. 16°.
- 1856-57. 5 v. 16-. Villele, Comte de. Mémoires et correspondance. Par., 1888-90. Villemain, A. F. Souvenirs contemporains d'histoire et de
- Villemain, A. F. Souvening contemporating a natoric et de littérature. Par., 1855-56. 2 pts. 8°.
   Vitrolles, E. d'Arnaud, baron de, Mémoires et relations poli-tiques: publ. par E. Forgues, 1814-1830. Par., 184. 3 v. 8°.
   Vivenot, A. v. Thugut, Clerfayt und Wurnser, Original-Dokumente aus dem K. K. Haus-Hof- und Staats-Archiv in Wien vom Juli 1794 bis Februar 1797. Wien, 1869. 8°.
- Vivenot, A. v. Zur geschichte des Rastadter congresses. Wien, 1871.
- 1871. S.
   Voss, Sophie Marie, Gräfin v. 69 Jahre am Preussischen Hofe. Aus den Erinnergo. Lpz., 1876.
   Vührer, A. Histoire de la dette publique en France. Par., 1886. 2 v.
- 1886. 2 v. Vulliemin, L. Geschichte der Schweizerischen Eidgenossen-schntt. Deutsch v. J. Keller. Aarau., 1877. 8°. Vulliemin, L. Histoire de la confédération suisse. Éd. revue et corrigee. Laus., 1879. 2 v. 8°.
- Waldburg, G. T. v., Ed. Napoleon Buonaparte's Reise von Fontaine deau nach Fréjns, vom 17 bis 29 April 1814. Einzig-rechtmassig. Ausg. Berl., 1815. 16<sup>5</sup>.
   Waldburg, G. T. v. Nouvelle relation de l'itinéraire de Napo-leon de Fontainebleau à l'île d'Elbe. Trad. de l'allemand. Den 1816. 0<sup>6</sup>
- Par., 1815. 8°. (alsh, R. Letter on the genlus and dispositions of the French Walsh, R.

- Walsh, R. Letter on the genius and dispositions of the French government. Phila, 1810. S<sup>o</sup>.
  Warden, W. Conduct and conversations of Napoleon Buonaparte and his suite during the voyage to St. Helena, and some months there. Albany, 1817. 12<sup>o</sup>.
  Welden, L. V. D. Feldzug d. Österreicher gegen Russland im Jahre 1812. Wien, 1870.
  Welden, L. F. v. D. Krieg v. 1809 zwischen Österreich u. Frankreich von Anfaog Mai bis zuna Friedensschlusse. Aus officiellen Quellen. Mit e. (ith.) Übersichtskarte d. Marchfeldes (in np. fol.). Wien, 1872.
  Wellesley, A., Duke of Wellington. Despatches from 1790-1818. New ed. Lond., 1837-38. 9 v. s<sup>o</sup>. (Vols. 4-12 of Coll. Despatches).
  Wellesley, A., Duke of Wellington. Civil Correspondence
- Wellesley, A., Duke of Wellington, Civil Correspondence and Memoranda. Lond., 1860. 5 v. 8°. Welschinger, H. La censure sous le premier Empire. Par., 1882. 1 v. 8°.
- Welschinger, H. Le Duc d'Enghien, 1772-1894. Par., 1888. 8°.

- Welschinger, H. Le divorce de Napoléon. Par., 1889, 12°.
  Welschinger, H. Le Maréchal Ney, 1815, 2º éd. Par., 1893, 8°,
  Welschinger, H. Le Rol de Rome 1811-32. Par., 1897, 8°.
  Wertheimer, E. Die Heirat der Erzherzogin Marie Louise mit Napoleon I. Wien, 1882.
  Wertheimer, E. Geschichte Osterreichs u. Ungarns im ersten Jahrschnt d. 19<sup>6</sup>m Jahrh. Nach ungedr. Quellen. L<sub>1</sub>/2., 1884-1830, 2 v. 8°.
  Whately, R. Historic doubts relative to Napoleon Buona-parte : with intr. by H. Morley. N. Y., no date. 16°.
  Wichr, E. Napoleon und Bernadotte in Herbstieldzuge 1813. Eerl, 1893. 8°.
- Hert, 1893. 87. Wigger, F. Geschichte d. Familie v. Blücher. Schwerin, 1870-79. 2 Bde. 8°.
- Wigger, F. Geschichte d. Funilie v. Elucher. Schwerin, 1870-79. 2 Ede. 8°.
  Williams, H. M. Narrative of the events which have taken place in France; with an account of the present state of so-ciety and public opinion. 2 ed. Lond., 1816. 8°.
  Wilson, Sir R. T. Hustory of the Brit. expedition to Egypt. 2 ed. Lond., 1803. 4°.
  Wilson, Sir R. Arrative of events during the invasion of Rus-sia by Napoleon Bonaparte, and the retreat of the French army 1812. Ed. by G. H. Randolph. Lond., 1800. 8°.
  Wilson, Sir R. T. Private diary during the campsigns of 1812-14; from the invasion of Russia to the capture of Paris; ed. by H. Randolph. Lond., 1863. 2 v.
  Windham, W. The diary of William Windham, 1784-1810. Ed. by Mrs. Henry Baring. Lond., 1866. 8°.
  Winkopp, P. A., Ed. D. Rheinische Bund. Frankfurt, 1806-12.
  Wohlwill, A. D. Ecfreiung Hamburgs am 18 Marz, 1813. Hanh., 1888.
  Wohlwill, A. Weltbürgerthum u. Vaterlandsliebe d. Schwaben, inabesondere von 1789 bis 1815. Ebend., 1875. 8°.
  Wolzogen, L. v. Memoiren, aus dessen Nachlass noter Bei-fugung officieller militer. Denkechriften mitgetheilt v. A. v. Wolzogen. L. S. R., Comte de, Arkhiv kuiazia Vorontsova, vili, ix. Boumagi gr. S. R., Comtaova. Moskva, 1876. 3 t. 8°.
  Woutke, H. D. Volkerschlacht bei Leipzig. Berl., 1863. 8°.

- Yonge, C. D. Life and administration of Robert Banks, 2d carl of Liverpool (1736-1820). Lond., 1868. 3 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
   Yorek v. Wartenburg. Napoleon als Feldherr. 2 Aufl. Berl., 1887-88. 2 v. 8<sup>o</sup>.
- Ziehlberg, A. v. Ferdinande v. Schmettau. Eine Erinnerg. aus dem Jahre 1813. Dessan, 1886. 8°.
  Zinkeisen. Geschichte des osmanischen Reiches. Gotha, 1859, 8°.
  Zwiedineck-Südenhorst, H. v. Erzherzog Johann v. Österareich im Feldzuge v. 1800. Mit Benütz, der v. ihm hinterlassenen Acten u. Aufzeichngn., amtl. u. privat-correspondenzen dargestellt. Mit 3 Plan-Skizzen. Graz, 1829. 8°.

INDEX

A.

- A Aachen, N.'s court at, ii. 210, 217, 224 Aalen, the French position at, ii. 234 Abdullah Pasha, routed at Esdraelon, ii. 48, 49 Aben, River, military operations on the, iii. 161 Abensberg, Lefchvre defeats the Austrians at, iii. 161: Oudinot ordered to, 162: battle of, 163 Aberdeen, Lord, English envoy at Vienna, ii. 48 Abo, Alexander's hint te Bernadette at, iv. 90 Aboukir, battle of, ii. 63-56, 66: trophics from, deposited at the Invalides, 97 Aboukir Bay, battle of, ii. 42, 43 Abrantés, Junot at, iii. 96 Abrantés, Junot at, jii. 98 Abrantés,

- tion, 55-57. (4, 86; iv., 160, 222, 241
  Academy, The, ordered to occupy itself with literary criticism, iii. 23
  Acken, military operations near, iv. 65, 66, 69
  Acqui, military operations at, i. 215
  Acre, Phélippeaux at, i. 33: siege of, ii. 32, 48-51: the key of Palestine, 49: reliet expedition from Constantineple to, 50, 61: parley between Phélippeaux and N. at, 64: compared with Smotensk, iii. 248
  Act of Mediation, the, ii. 150
  Acton, Sir J. F. E., rule of, in Naples, ii. 229
  Adam, Albrecht, on the French advance into Russia, iii. 256
  Adam, Sir F., in battle of Waterloo, iv. 202
  Adda, River, military operations on the, i. 218, 233; ii. 113
  Addington, Henry, succeeds Pitt in the ministry, ii. 134: negotistes for peace, 136: helief in the peace of Amiens, 137: holds Englaud to be arbiter of the Continent, 169: Continental policy, 169, 171: appoints Lord Whitworth ambassador to Paris, 171: bis influence undermined by Pitt, 186: driven from power, 216
  Addison, Joseph, on England's insular position, ii. 169
  Addison, Joseph, on England's insular position, ii. 169
  Addison, Joseph, on Austria in Italy, 125, 126: Eugene to collect troops on, 232'
  Adrai, M., member of the council of state, ii. 143: reviser of the Code, 143
  Adriatic Sea, N. threatens to seize, i. 248: French fleet in, ii. 12: cression to Austria in Italy, 125, 126: Eugene to collect troops on, 232'
  Adriati, M., momber of the seize, i. 248: French fleet in, ii. 12: cression to Austria in Italy, 125, 126: Eugene to collect troops on, 232'
  Adriatic Sea, N. threatens to seize, i. 248: French fleet in, ii. 12: cression to Austria in Italy, 125, 126: Eugene to collect troops on, 232'
  Adriatic Sea, N. threatens to seize, i. 248: French fleet in, ii. 12: cression to Austria of lands on, 14: marriage of, 16: N.'s control of, iii. 88: the highway for India, 89
  Eetes, N. thkende to, iv.

- "Again of the set single of Bastia, i. 164; ii. 42
  "Againon," iii. 136
  "Agricultural laborars, condition at outbreak of the Revelution, i. 53, 54, 57
  "Agricultural laborars, condition at outbreak of the Revelution, i. 53, 54, 57
  "Agriculture, encouragement of, ii. 141
  "Agains, River, military movements on the, iv. 106, 116.
  Tase, River, military movements on the, iv. 106, 116.
  "Against, N. at, 152, 163
  "Account of the set of the set

<text>

264 IND
Alexander 1.—continued.
293: prepares for war. 293: proves an untrustworthy ally 203: determines on defensive warfare, 240: position as to the Continental system, 240: 210: Avarnshim of his military preparations, 241: hints an offer of the French crown to Bernadotte, 243: makes untrustal and the evaluation of Prussia, 243: effect of his policy on Prussia, 243: makes terms with Turkey, 244: personal connection with the war of 180, 240: concessions by, 240: ultimatum to France, 249, 250: proposes counter-terms to X, 260: channeds better terms of Sweden, 251: demands the evacuation of Prussia, 250: ukase of Dec., 1810, 250: his German and viscrs blanked, 255: allays trouble at St. Petersburg, 255: financial difficulties, 255: relification of Prussia, 241: bit germanic and viscrs blanked, 255: allays trouble at St. Petersburg, 265: relations and Austria, 260: ambition to pose as liberator of events prisoners; v. 8: makes terms with Prus and 20: ambition to pose as liberator of Pruch, 260: project to lecome king of Pohand, 20: ambition to pose as liberator of Merch and Austria, 20: alternative preparation of the pruch prisoners; v. 8: makes terms with Prus and Austria, 20: alternative preparation of the prisoners; v. 8: makes terms with Prus and 20: anexes alliances with Prus 25: interdement of Pruch, 250: project to lecome king of Pohand, 20: ambition to pose as liberator of the pruch and anstrin, 20: alternative preparation of the pruch and Austria, 20: alternative preparation of the pruch and anstrin, 20: alternative preparation of the preparation of

- tion of, 93 Alle, River, military operations on the, iii. 29-32 Allemand, retreat of the French through, iv. 123 Allemhurg, Bennigsen collects his troops at, iii. 32 Allix, J. A. F., at Auxerre, iv. 125; hattle of Waterloo, 196 "All the Talents," the ministry of, iii. 41 Almeida, aiege and capture of, iii. 218; retaken by the English, 201

- Almeida, alege and capture of, int. 218: retaken by the English, 221
  Alpon, River, military operations on the, i. 238, 239
  Alps, the, military operations in, i. 123, 253, 263, 267; ii. 105-113, 120, 121; the keys of, i. 206, 215: French supremacy in, ii. 66; Suvarolf'a disasters in, 93: Hamibal'a passage of, 110: road across the simplon, 149: France's "natural boundary," iv. 80
  Alsace, Austria driven out of, i. 163: royalists in, ii. 192: Due d'Enghien's conspiracy in, 192, 155: regulations for Jews in, iii. 64: proposed cession of, to Austria, iv. 99
  Alten, K. A. von, in battle of Waterloo, iv. 202
  Altenktrehen, battle of, i. 235
  Alvinczy, Gen. Joseph, N.'s operations against, i. 211: commanding Austriau forces for relief of Mantua, 236-240: defeats Masséna at Bassano and Caldiero, 237: operations against Verona, 237-240: retreats from Caldiero, 238: operations on the Adige, 250-254: the Rivoli campaign, 250 et seq.: defeat at Rivoli, 254

- possessions in, 179: scheme for a Bourbon monarchy in, fil. 106, 111 American Emhargo Act of 1807, iii. 82, 83, 210, 211 Americas, Emperor of the Two, iii. 96 Amiens, the treaty of ii. 135, 149-151, 157, 167-169, 171-177, 179, 181, 183, 212, 225, 258; iii. 42; iv. 232 Amsterdam, asked for loan of ten millions, ii. 102: smugpled commerce of, iii. 203, 204: Louis permitted to return to, 207: removal of the capital to, 212: march of French troops to, 212: sends deputation to Paris, iv. 17 Amurrio, Gen. Victor at, iii. 142 Anarchists, in France, ii. 88: assassination schemes among, 164 Anarchy, the seed of "a pure democracy," i. 244 Ancients, Council of the, represent public sentiment, ii. 2: members of, proscribed, 5: Sieyès president of, 23: join the Bonapartist ranks, 68: give banquet to X. in St. Supice, 68: share in Bonapartist plots, 69: plots of the 18th Brumaire, 69 et seq.: endeavor to postpone N.'s dictatorship, 76, 77: pass vote of confidence in N., 78: adopts the Consulte, 83 Ancona, capture of, i. 260: importance of, 262: N. at, 262: N. proposes to seize, 277: rise of, 277: fall of, ii. 93: Austrian oc-cupation of, 119: aeized by French troops, 256: annexed to Italy, ii. 58, 94

- Italy, ili. 38, 94
  Andalusia, Dupont advances toward, ili. 122: withdrawal of troops from, 146: Soult ordered to, 219
  Andernach, alteration of boundary at, il. 14
  Andréossy, Gen. A. F., service in Egypt, il. 36: accompaniea N. on his return from Alexandria, 56: action on the 18th Brumaire, 71: ambassador to London, 177: despatch from N. to, 181: French ambassador at Vienna, ili. 8: reports Austrian activity, 24: influence in Vienna, 25
  Angély, Regnault de St. Jean d', dreads a new Terror, il. 64: member of the conocil of state, 100: prophesies the undoing of France, ili. 247

- Angerburg, Lestocq at, iii. 14 Anghiari, Provera crosses the Adige at, i. 251, 254 Anglas, Boissy d', quells riot at the National Convention, i.
- Anglo-Saxon spirit of civilization, iv. 225 Angoulême, Duchess of, affronts Madame Ney, iv. 159 Angoulême, Duke of, proclaims Louis XVIII. at Bordeaux, iv.
- Angoulème, Duke of, proclaims Louis XVIII. at Bordeaux, iv. 114
  Anne, Grand Duchess, mentioned for marriage with N., iii. 139, 140: N. seeks her hand in marriage, 191, 192
  Anshach, Bernadotte's movements in, ii. 234, 242: ceded to Bavaria, 251: Angereau commanding in, 270: French violation of territory, iii. 60: military movements near, iv. 76
  Anselme, Gen., i. 113
  Anttihes, recruits for N.'s army from, iv. 163
  Anttihes, recruits for N.'s army from, iv. 163
  Anttilles, acheme for population of the ii. 161, 152
  Antommarchi, Dr. F., assists N. on his history, iv. 217: N.'s physician, 217, 218
  Antonelli, Cardinal, diplomatic duel with Portalis, ii. 221
  Antraigues, Comte d', exposes Pichegru's treachery, ii. 3, 4: furnishes pen-portrait of N., 18, 19
  Antwerp, commercial key to central Europe, iv. 80: N. "loses his crown for," 81: refused to France by the allies, 99: N. refuses to give up, 104, 105: N. concedes, tothe allies, 114
  Aposta, artival of Lannes at, ii. 111
  Apennines, military operations in the, i. 143, 213, 228; ii. 63
  Apollonius of Tyana, N. compares Jeaus Christ with, ii. 133
  Aqua tofana, plot to poison N. with, i. 258
  Arabia, N.'s attention turned toward, i. 40, 49
  Aragon, I'rench occupation of, iii. 122: military government of, 213: captared by Suchet, 221: French possession of, iv. 15
  Aranjuez, the revolution at, iii. 106-113: Charles IV.'s court at, 106, 107, 109

- Arch-Chancellor of state, creation of the office of, il. 206 Arch-Chancellor of state, creation of the office of, il. 206 Arch-Chancellor of the Empire, creation of the office of, il.
- "Archive Russe," cited, i. 129
- Archive KUSSC," cited, 1, 129 Arch-Treasurer, creation of the office of, il. 206 Arcis-sur-Aube, Blücher advances on, iv. 92: N. moves to, 113-115: battle of, 114, 118, 119: proposed concentration of the allies at, 116: retreat of the French from, 118, 119: N.'s retreat from, 120: French capture of, 121 Arcole, N. at, i. 241: the lessons of, 242: battle of, 238, 239, 246; ii. 92
- n. 92 Ardennes Mountains, proposed houndaries for Germany, iii. 243: military operations in the, iv. 174 Ardon, loss of, iv. 108 Aremherg, Duke of, marrics Mile. Tascher de la Pagerie, iii.
- 104
- 104 Arena, Joseph, success of, in Isola Rossa, i. 64: member of the National Assembly, 73: hauished to Italy, 94: influence of, 138: charged with conspiracy, ii. 151: execution of, 155 Arenberg, member of the Confederation of the Rhine, ii. 260 Argenson, Comte d', suggests the Sucz Canal, ii. 31 Argenteau, Gen., defeated at Dego and Montenotte, i. 215 Aristocrats, guillotining the, i. 148: under the regime of the First Consul, ii. 165 Armed neutrality. the, ii. 134-136: Russia abandons the, 168

- Armed neutrality, the, ii. 134-136 : Russia abandons the, 168

Army (French), its relation to the throne, I. 34 : demoralization and discontent in, and descritions from, 34, 35, 49, 59, 80, 101; iii. 11, 2, 173, 222, 223. 245, 247, 252; iv. 8, 7, 12, 20, 34, 35, 40, 41, 53-55, 50, 60, 64, 66, 76, 95, 96, 100, 103, 111, 123, 124, 137, 140, 158 : changes in the, i. 79-81 : compulsory service, 80, 81, 128 : recreganization of the, 84, 91, 92, 95 : regulations, 171; political sentiments in, and influence of, 183, 200, 263; ii. 2, 3, 69, 70, 151; iv. 137, 143 : N's relations with, care for, and relinnee on, i. 200, 223; ii. 19, 92, 104, 128, 160, 203, 229, 224, 265; 1ii. 2, 3, 44, 247; iv. 17, 22, 23, 86, 93, 141, 147, 148, 206, 220, 224, 265; 210; yearstice weakened by 18th Fractislor, ii. 15: its mainsprings of action, 25: importance of N.'s scenaring its adhesion, 69; v.'s manifestos to, 104, 105: contempt for the Concordat, 139; quartered in foreign countries, 141: disappearance of discontent in the, 206; creation of marshals of France, 206; conclisating the, 206, 207: its leaders, 234: effect of Tratalgar on, 242; effect of Ansterlitz on, 254: the army-closel, 264, 266; iii. 226; subsisting on conquered Trussia, 2: clange in the personnel of the, 11: venality of contractors, 11, 13: improving the commissary, 13: strengthening the, 24: censorship of correspondence from the, 27: founding of military factories, 27: morate after by N's exhibitions of, to the Car, 41: pension system, 11: military schools, 74: its hast loweds for the Russian campaign of 1812, 253: N's address to, hefore the Russian campaign of 1812, 253: Si sufferings in Russia, 255; iv. 1 et seq.: vitaility, 13: wrath at N's desertion, 14: scheme for supporting, 24: quality of the new (1813), 33: juverile soldiers in, 53, 54, 65: corruption in the, 54: lack or pay for, 64: effect of long campaigning on 1812, 253: M's address to, hefore the Russian campaign of 1812, 253: M's address to, hefore the Russian campaign of 1812, 253: discipline in the, 54: lack or pay for, 64: effect of long campaigning on 18

Egypt, 55 : Å plight, 65, 56

Army of England, the, creation of, ii. 16: N. general of, 16, 23: on the watch at Bonlogne, 32, 33: the right wing of, 34: strength, 185: ordered to march to the castward, 232 Army of Helvetia, incorporated into the Army of the Rhine, ii.

Army of Helvetia, incorporated into the Army of the Rhine, ii. 92
Army of Holland, freed for active service, ii. 97
Army of Italy, equipment of the, i. 116: campaign in the Alps, 128: N.'s service with and command of, 129, 134, 140, 151, 193–195, 206: question of its sustenance, 141: strength and organization, 142: N.'s plans for the, 144: Corsicans in the, 149: N.'s monograph on, 172: promised booty, 204, 205, 208: the question of its employment, 206, 207: joined to that of the Pyrenees, 207: destitution of, 208: strength and organizations, as to further employment, 21: restrined from pithage, 28: Moreau's service with, 49: division of, and disaster, 60: frands in, 62: commanded by Masséna, 92, 120: scheme for raising money for, 102: N.'s manifesto to, 104, 105: its line of operations, 105: service on the Rhine, iv. 90
Army of the Danube, under command of Jourdau, ii. 49
Army of the Elbe, formation of, v. 28

- 11. 4 Army of the Main, formation of the, iv. 28 Army of the Netherlands, service on the Rhine, iv. 90 Army of the North, conquers the Austrian Netherlands, i. 163: in 1796, 209: operations on the Rhine, 268: Barras's schemes in regard to, ii. 4

- in Tysé, 200: operations on the Rhine, 268: Barras's schemes in regard to, ii. 4
  Army of the North (Allies), in Brandenburg, iv. 52: contemplated movement against the, 67
  Army of the Prenees, transferred to Maritime Alps, i. 206: joined to that of Italy, 207: service on the Rhine, iv. 90
  Army of the Renew, ordered to Italy, ii. 106-108: expected to attack Melas, 110: crosses the Alps, 110-113
  Army of the Rhine, the (French), N. seeks to join, i. 129: N. fails of admission, 134: commanded by Citizen Beauharnais, 190: the question of its employment, 206: fails to support N. in Italy, 289: destitution of, ii. 4: Angereau commander of, 5: disbanded, 23: Morean commanding, 92: N.'s manifesto to, 104: contempt for the Concordat in, 151: the San Domingo expedition selected from, 152: N.'s method of quelling opposition in, 151-153: weakened to ensure success in Italy, 188
  Army of the Sambre and Meuse, wins battle of Fleurus, i. 163: campaigning in the Alps, 263: brought to Faris, ii. 4
  Army of the South (Allies), iv. 52: pursues Murat, 70: Augereau attempts to hinder, 119: Francis joios, at Lyons, 121
  Army of the South (Allies), iv. 52: pursues Murat, 70: Augereau attempts to hinder, 119: Francis joios, at Lyons, 121
  Army of the West, the, N. ordered to join, 1. 66: N. refuses to serve in, 166; 177: nucler Hockne, 208, 209: reinforces the Army of the West, the, N. ordered to join, 1. 66: N. refuses to serve in, 166; 177: nucler Hockne, 208, 209: reinforces the Army of Law, 236: freed for active service, ii. 96, 97
  You. IV.-36

VOL. IV.-36

- <text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text>

N. at, 72 Austerlitz, Bridge of, in Paris, iii, 62 Austin, John, on the Napoleonic Code, ii, 143 Austria, hampered by alliances, i, 9: campaign against France, 33: France declares war against, 100, 110: relations (alliances and negotiations for mutual support) with Prussia, 102; ii. 251, 268; iii. 174, 181, 243, 251: captures Lafavette, i. 105: effect of military successes, 115: military operations against, in Pied-

Austria – continued. mont, 128: pertition of Poland, 131, 262: Masséna's campsign against, 143: opening of hostilities against, 143: enters Genoge territory, 145: cessation of operations against, 153: defeated at Weissenburg and Flenrus, 163: driven out of Alsace, 163: rela-tions with Excland (alliances and neodial function), and the set sidies from, 164, 268; ii. 105, 106, 117, 127, 228, 229, 201, 108, 94 Prassit, 197: hostility to France, 197: relations (alliances and negotiations for mutual support) with Russia, 189, 262; ii. 30, 42, 49, 109, 229, 229, 231, 233: iii. 138, 237, 249, 251; iv. 21, 46, 47: question of military operations against, i. 260: operations in Piedmont in 1794, 206: plans for overthrow of, 200: lorces of, genarated from Sardialans, 211: A. dictates terms to, at Leo-ben, 211: military operations for obscillities between France and, 200: France's interest in the humiliation of, 245: military enthusiason of Mantua, 222: losses in campaign before Mantua, 234: temporary esparated from Piedmotse, 215: respined at Leid, 263: arcsillities between France and, 200: France's interest in the humiliation of, 245: military enthusiason in 250: fourth attempt to relative between France and, 200: France's laterest in the humiliation of, 245: military enthusiason in 250: fourth attempt to relative between France and, 200: transe, 263: cortest V-neitine terverse and Yiame, 263: cortest V-neitine terverse for exposition to France's laterest of the coalition with Eegland, 271: V. defeated blaned to relative tween France and, 200: tracaty of Lando Y, 271: defeated blacked and Yiame, 273: relative the theorem france and, 200: tracaty of Campo Fornio, 12–14: Camots desire for paced with, 13: Y-acquiding the Y-271: defeated blacked and Yiame, 273: defeated blacked to relative the four-parated on the Halancee, 271: defeated blacked and Yiame, 271: defeated blacked to relative shifts and Yiame, 281, 284, 283, 301; Gen. Clarke's mis-sion to, i. 280: releates Lafayette, 283: M.

Anstria — continued.
 meditor, 25: showd attitude of, 25: throws troops on frontier of Galicia, 25: onitted from the Continental Olympus, 38: X: so object to humilitat, 39: interest in Poland, 40: partition of, 44: the position after Tilsit, 44: proposed commercial war against England, 44: offended dignity of, 55: treaty of Fontenet, 128, 130, 154: proposed neutralistion of, 91: the situation in 94: awakening of the national spirit in, 108: encouraged to revolt, 124, 130, 154: proposed neutralistion of, 91: the situation in 94: awakening of the national spirit in, 108: encouraged to revolt, 124, 130, 153, 154: proposed neutralistion of, 91: the situation of, 91: et as, thereditary rivalry with France, 128: bellicerent tone in, 125, 138, 150, 161: necessity for her repression, 130: x. and Alexander remonstrate with, 130-132: X. proposes alliance with, 130: to be held in cleck by Russian JX, 151: failure of merowital isos with France, 153: change of plan of campaign, 154; 158: Napoleonic Ideas in, 155: archubuts K. 151: failure of merowital isos with France, 155: change of plan of campaign, 154; 158: Napoleonic Ideas in, 155: archubuts Charles's proclamation, 159: intoxicated with success, 156: the fifth war with, 137: etsension, 165: exiting lishmet of Her Topes in Halv, 157: etsension, 165: exiting lishmet of Her Topes in Halv, 157: etsension, 166: exiting to assessinate X. Io, 185: pool feeling to ward France, 198: chococs an attrimonial allance with the Horse of, 189: necessity of placating, 195: joost feeling to ward France, 198: chococs and the Tow of a 200: chore to ward Stage and Prance, 249, 241: seeks territorial agrandizment at expense of Tarky, 241: content to fortice is in 166: distribution of the lands taken fram, 204: isoupties with France, 249, 241: seeks territorial distribution agrandizment, 243: furnishies troops for Russian campaign of Hellands taken fram, 204: isoupties with Prance, 249, 241: seeks territoris agrandizment endormal distributis distributions, 243: stopu

Azara, Chevalier J. N. de, represents Spalu at Amiens, ii. 168: at the Tuileries, March 13, 1803, 181 Azores, proposition to deport the Emperor to, iv. 157

B

- Babylon, the history of, iv. 242
  Bacciocchi, Mme, literary coterie, ii. 164 : sequires the duchy of Lucea, 227. See also BUONAPARTE, MARLE-ANNE-ELISA Bacciocchi, Pasquale, marries Elisa Buonaparte, i. 195
  Bacon, Francia, X.'s study of, ii. 36
  Badajoz, Soult's capture of, iii. 219 : English siege and storming of, 221, 222, 242
  Baden, violation of her neutrality, i. 105 ; ii. 211, 233 : makes peace with France (1796), i. 235, 279 : relations with Russia, li. 170 : strengthening of, 170 : residence of the Duc d'Enghien's arrest in, 195 : friendly relations with France, 243 : acquires arrest in, 195 : friendly relations with France, 243 : acquires arrest in, 195 : friendly relations with France, 243 : acquires arrest in, 195 : friendly relations with France, 243 : acquires arrest from X. to the allies, iv. 79 : position in Cermany, 264
  Bartatlon, Gen, Peter, holds Murat at Hollabrunn, ii. 244 : in battle of Austerlitz, 250 : in campaign of Eylan, iii. 19 : called in y Barclay de Tolly, 264 : movements on the Duicer and Pripet, 254 : contemplated junction with Barclay, 255 : establishes communication with Drissa, 255 : drive east by Davout, 265 : increte of Austerlity, 256 : battle of Suport, 256 : increte of Junce, 257 : distantion of Austerlity, 256 : battle of Suport, 256 : increte of Austerlity, 100 : prise, 255 : drive east by Davout, 266 : increte mither and pripet, 254 : contemplated junction with Barclay, 255 : establishes communication with Drissa, 255 : drive east by Davout, 266 : increte of Austerlity, 256 : battle of Suport, 256 : pripet, 254 : contemplated junction with Barclay, 255 : establishes communication with Drissa, 255 : drive east by Davout, 266 : increte of Suport, 266 : increte of Austerlity, 266 : battle of Suport, 266 : increte of Austerlity, 266 : battle of Suport, 266 : increte of austerlity, 266 : battle of Suport, 266 : increte of the Coule, 266 : battle of Suport, 266 : increte of the Coule, 266 : battle of Suport, 266 : battle of S

- Balkan Peninsula, Russia's ambitions in, iii. 236; rescue of the people of, iv. 247
  Baltic Sea, the, England'a operations in and on, ii. 135; iii. 26, 34, 35, 79, 80, 93; gateway of, 58: Spanish military movementa on, 116; N.'s mastery of ports on, 203; efficient blockade of, impossible, 214
  Baltimore, Jerome Bonaparte'a residence in, ii. 164
  Banberg, Austrian troops at, ii. 234: N.'s military route through, 274; concentration of troops in, iii. 158
  Bank of England, suspends specie payments, i. 283: acarcity of money in, iii. 232

- Damberg, Austran troops as, it. 254: N. Similarly Fonte through, 274: concentration of troops in, it. 153
  Bank of England, suspends specie payments, i. 283: acarcity of money in, iti. 323
  Bank of France, organization ef, it. 89, 140, 141: the Récamiers and the, 266, 267: compelled to lower its rate, iii. 61, 62: plethora of silver in, 232
  Barbary, plets of the pirates to seize N., iv. 160
  Barhef Marbois, F., proscribed, ii, 5: minister of finance, 137: State treasurer, 141: minister of the treasury, 265
  Barclay de Tolly, M. A., proposed movement against, iii, 264: calls in Bagration, 254: retreats to Drissa, 264: junction with Bagration at Smoleusk, 255, 256: plane to meet Bagration at Vitebsk, 266: hattle of Smoleusk, 256-258: takea stand behind the Uscha, 267: retreats toward Moscow, 257: charged with German bias, 260: succeeded by Kutusoff, 260: retained as military adviser, 260: restored to chief command, iv. 32, 40: battle of Bantzen, 39-41: with the Army of the South, 52: hattle of Leipsic, 71: advises pursuit of N., 122
  Barrham, Adm., naval administration of, ii. 238
  Barnabe, declares Brumaire illegal, ii. 151
  Barras, Jean-Paul-Francois-Nicollas, relations with N, and influence on his career, i. 135, 139, 173, 175, 177, 179, 193, 199; ii. 15, 20, 23; iv. 220, 236, 238: in stege of Toulon, i. 136, 137: opposes Robespierre, 148: influence anong the Thermiderians, 151: leader of military committee of the Convention, 162: a Dantoniat, 173: in social life, 173, 199: commander-in-chief of Convention, 162: a bands, 182: resigns his command, 183: member of the Directory, 186, 202: character, 186, 199, 200; ii. 23, 62: intimacy with Josephine Beauharnais, i, 191: connection with N.'s and Influence on his career, i, 713: his or 272: disarisified with treaty of Leoben, 272: learns of Pichegru's treachery, ii. 4: plan to bring troops to Paris, 4: clamors for prace, 13: derides Carnot's suggestions, 13: responsibility for the 181 Fructio
- 77, 78 Barry, Mme. du, relations with Talleyrand, ii. 22 Barsur-Aube, military movements near, iv. 94, 104, 116, 121, 126: narrow escape of Francisat, 120: N.'s march through, 126 Bar-sur-Ornain, Oudinot at, iv. 126 Bartenstein, French occupation of, iii. 17: military movements near, 19: trenty of, iii. 24, 25, 35 Barthélemy, F., member of the Directory, ii. 1: imprisonment of, 5

 Azanza, M. J. de, King Joseph's Spanish minister at Parls, iii.
 216
 Basel, treaty of, i. 164; ii. 131; iii. 98; alteration of boundary at it. 141; republican propagnada In, 27; invasion of France vin, it. 141; republican propagnada In, 27; invasion of France vin, it. 141; republican propagnada In, 27; invasion of France vin, it. 99; headquarters of the allies at, 98; Schwarzenberg's ecommunications with, threatened, 120, 121; tomb of Linamus ln, 220

- communications with, threatened, 120, 121; tomb of Frasmus In, 220
  Bassano, detent of Wurnwer at, i, 235; Alvinezy defeats Masséna af, 237; battle of, 237; creation of hereditary duchy of, ii. 255; Marct created Duke of, ii. 71. See also MARET
  Basseville, N. J. H., killed in Rome, i, 155, 229, 260
  Bastla, made a sent of government, i. 11; N. at, 46; radical influences in, 62; patriot success in, 64; tradition concerning N.'s connection with events at, 64; share in annexation of Corsies to France, 66; Paol's return to, 65; revolutionary movements in, 72; declared the capital of Corsiea, 74; disorders in, 94; N. sails from, May 2, 1792, 100; N. Hees to, 120; moder domination of Salicetti, 121; French power in, 123; inprisonment of Corsies at 1, 149; English capture of, 154; Nelson at, ii. 42
  Bastlile, the, destruction of, i. 56; 57, 91; celebrations of the atoming of, 102; ii. 127
  Bastavian Republic, the, formation of, i. 164; an acpanage of France, 197; naval defeat at Camperdown, ii. 25; dependence on France, 25; levy of troops and war material on, 25, 26; Anglo-Russian force forced to evacuate, 53; loyalty to N., 97; a new constitution for, 150; regains celonles, 150, 168; English efforts to diazerdit France in, 169. See also HoLLAND; NETHERLANDS

"Battle of Dorking," ii. 185 Battle of Five Days, iii. 163 "Battle of the Nations," iv. 77 Bautzen, battle of, iv. 39, 40, 53: fatal results of the French victory at, 40, 41: N. moves toward, 62: the Young Gnard ordered to, 63: N. oicknamed from, 64: boy-addiers at, 65: the armistice often $1 after 81 to, 63: N. nicknamed from, 64: boy-soldiers at, 65: the armistice after, 81

"Bautzen Messenger-Boy," the, iv. 64
Bayaria, treaty with France (1796), i. 279: Austria's gaze on, 198; ii. 126, 230, 233: Austria's acheme to dismeniber, 61: Suvaroff driven from Italy to, 93: Moreau ordered to drive the Austriana into, 107: the campaign in, 124 et seq.: negotiations with France, 136: acquires Passau, 170: relations with Russia, 170: Alexander I.'s scheme of giving to Austria, 228: N. threatens to enlarge, 232, 251: Austrian troops in, 234: the Elector driven from Munich by Anstria, 243: friendly relations with, aubscrivence and military support to France, ii. 243, 254, 260, 261, 274; iii. 11, 151, 152, 158, 214, 245, 246; iv. 23: acquires Ansbach, ii. 261: created a separate kinglom, 251, 252, 257: acquires Ansbach, ii. 261: created a separate kinglom, 251, 252, 257: acquires Ansbach, ii. 261: created a separate kinglom, 251, 252, 257: acquires territory after Austerlitz, 252: member of the Confederation of the Khine, 260, 261; joins in the war against Prussia, 274: defeated at Ionsbruck, iii. 136: N.'s success in, 174: Maria Louisa'a progress through, 197: allotment of Austrian lands to, 204: losses of her soldiers in Russia, 255: Roman Catholic influence in, iv. 26: hesitates to furnish new levies, 28: Augereau commanding troops of, 34: national spirit in, 64: revulsion of feeling against France, 64, 66, 69, 79, 91: part in the campaign at Leipsic, 76: position in Germany, 246: battle of Hanau, 76: the campaign of Waterloo, 174 et acq.
Bayanne, Cardinal, at Paris, iii. 58: his demands on behalf of the Pope, 94

Bayanne, Cardinal, at Paris, iii. 58; his demands on behalf of Hanau, 76; the campaign of Waterloo, 174 et acq.
Bayanne, Cardinal, at Paris, iii. 58; his demands on behalf of the Pope, 94
Baylen, capitulation of, Dupont at, iii. 122, 124, 130
Bayonne, formation of new French army at, iii. 96, 100, 104; N. goes to, 111, 112; Ferdinand VII. at, 113; trial of Ferdinand at, 114; end of negotiations at, 115; convocation of Spanish notables at, 117; ultimate failure of N.'s work at, 118; N. at, Nov. 3, 1808, 143; effect of negotiations at, 144; the decree of 1808, 210; Soult shut up in, iv. 79
Bayreuth, N. at, ii, 275; Ney at, 278; Davout's force in, iii, 167
Beauderet, military movements near, iv. 184
Beauderet, military movements near, iv. 184
Beauderet, and exceution, 190
Beauharnais, Marquits Alexandre de, marriage to Josephine de la Pagerie, i. 189; service in America, 189; separated from his wife, 189; commander of the Army of the Rhine, 190; partial reconciliation with Josephine, 190; elected to States-General, 190; president of National Assembly, 190; denunciation, imprisonment, and exceution, 190
Beauharnais, Kugène de, birth of, i. 180; early life, 101; interposes to reconcile Josephine and N., ii. 58; viceroy at Mila, 229; orderle I to organize troopa on the Adige, 232; marries Augusta of Bavaria, 257; expels the English from Legnorm, 165; risetter from N. to, 57, 58; presents ultimatum to Pins VII. 57, 58; formally adopted by X., 103; viceroy of Italy, 103; defeated by Archduke John, 156; letter from N. to, 169; at Bruck, 174; drives Archduke John into Hungary, 175; battle of Wagram, 176, 177; cuards the Marcheld, 181; executes Hofer's sentence, 186; offers annesty to the Tyroleans 186; informs Josephine of the impending divorce, 189; share in the Austrian marriage negotiations, 194; acquires principality of Frankfort, 204; viceroy of Italy, 214; a grand duchy created for, 244; strength of his corps, March, 1812, 246

- Beauharnais, François de —continued. nection with Ferdinand's conspiracy, iii. 100, 101; conducts intrigues for the Portnguese throne, 102; opens the cyes of Godoy, 104: advises Ferdinand to go to Bayonne, 111
  Beauharnais, Hortense, birth of, i. 189: early life, 191: in-terposes to reconcile Josephine and N., ii. 68: narries Louis Bonaparte, 164; iii. 206. See also BUONAPARTE, HORTENSE
  Beauharnais, Josephine, social life in Paris, i. 173: N.'s in-fatuation for, and marriage, 183-196; ii. 218: birth and early life, i. 189-191: characteristics, 189-194: imprisonment, 190; returns to Martinique, 190; returns to France, 190; intimacy with Barras, 191. See also BONAPARTE, JOSEPHINE
  Beauharnais family, proposed alliance between Ferdinand VII. and, ii. 99-101: share in the Austrian marriage negotiations, 194
  Beauharnais tahare in the Austrian marriage negotiations, 194, 213-219: attacks Laharpe at Voltri, 213, 215: falls back on Acqui, 215: N.'s operations against, 216-220: military genins, 217: defense of Milan, 217-219: onttlanked at Piacenza, 218: retreats to the Mincio, 219: seizes Peschiera, 219, 226: thwarts N.'s plan, 219: violates Venetian neutrality, 226: his army scattered, 231
  Beaumont, military operations near, iv. 174
  Becker, Gen., accompanies N. to Rochelort, iv. 208: urges N.'s value as a general, 208
  Beet-root sugar, production encouraged, iii. 65: N.'s interest in, 232

Beet-root sugar, production encouraged, iii. 65: N.'s interest

- Beet-root sugar, production encouraged, iii. 65: N.s interest in, 232
  Belce, Canon, vice-president of the Directory of Corsica, i. 73
  Belgium, proposals to establish a republic in, i. 115: plunder of works of art from, 225: N.'s policy concerning, 265: ceded to France by treaty of Leoben, 271: England's efforts to release, 279: France's interest in, 279: England's concessions as to, ii. 8: iocorporated with France, 101: the Code Napoléon in, 143: public works in, 224: visit of N, and Maria Louisa to, iii. 200: mediocrity of soldiers of, iv. 64: the alties refuse to give up, 104, 105: campaign of Waterloo, 174 et seq.: provisions for defense of, 175: weakness of her troops, 193, 196, 197. See also AUSTRIAN NETHERLANDS
  Belle Alliance, French van at, iv. 188: N. at, 190, 191, 193: topography, 191: the French position at, 132: fighting at, 203
  Bellegarde, Gen. H. de, supersedes Melas, ii. 122: on the Mincio, 122.

- Belle Alliance, French van at, iv. 1881: N. at, 190, 191, 1931: topography, 1911: the French position at, 1932. fighting at, 203
  Bellegarde, Gen, H. de, supersedes McIas, ii. 1221: on the Mincio, 1221
  "Eellerophon," the, Napoleon embarks on, iv. 209, 210, 2391 sails for Torbay, 210; goes to Plymouth Sonnd, 2101: in Torbay, 213
  Bellesca, organizes rebellion in favor of Don John, iii. 97
  Bellegard, Gen, A. D., carries the news of surrender of Paris to the Emperor, iv. 128, 1351 atvises a return to Lorraine, 1361: transfers his allegiance to Louis XVIII, 147
  Bellingham, John, assassinates Mr. Perceval, iv. 16
  Bellingham, John, assassinates Mr. Perceval, iv. 16
  Bellingtona, Asstrian force at, ii. 1111: Moncey arrives at, 113
  Bellowitz, military operations near, ii. 249
  Belluno, Lasignan driven beyond, i. 2671: creation of hereditary duchy of, ii. 2551: Victor created Dake of, iii. 711. See Victor Belt, the, difficulties of Bernadotte's crossing the, iii. 93
  Bervedere, Gen, forces near Eurgos, iii. 143
  Bennigsen, Gen, L. A. T., assassin of Paul I., ii. 2451: commanding Rassian forces at Breslau, 2451: battle of Pultusk, iii. 12, 141; seneral-in-chief of the Russian army, 14, 151: position at Sznczyn, 141: turns back Ney from Königsberg, 141: attempts to reach Danzie, 151: attempts to destroy Ney, 151: defeated at Mohrungen, 151: military genius, 15, 281: campaign of Eylau, 171 et seq.: captures French courier at Eylan, 191: retreats to Königsberg, 21: handred Friedland, 31, 32: abandons Heilsberg, 32: reinforcements for, 32: proposes an armistice, 34, 351: commanding in Poland, iv. 52: reaches Teplitz, 661: in battle of Ericidland, iv. 77
  Beresina, Battle of, compared with that of Friedland, iv. 77
  Beresina, River, the erossing of the, iv. 5, 7-43
  Berg, Grand Duchy go, quota of men, ii. 261: French seizure of lands neary, 73: vasalage to France recognized at Tilsif, iii. 47: the Gran

- DEX
  Berlin Decree, the, iii. 5, 6, 40, 42, 43, 82, 95, 209, 244
  Bern, treaty of Leoben to be ratified at, i. 271: proposed concress at, ii. 33, 14: capture of the city. 27: French initiary arrogance in, 28:
  attempt to restore the constitution of, iv. 99
  Bernadotte, Gen. J. B. J., military successes of, i. 163: a product of Cannot's system, 202: commanding Army of the Sambra and Meuse, 203: storms Gradisca, 267: communicates lichegru's treachery to Barras, ii. 4: ambassador to Austria, 28, 29, 35: characteristics, 29, 63; iii. 241: iv. 62, 90: marries Désiree
  Clary, ii. 29: iii. 216: ordered to the mildle Rhine, ii. 60: develops the conscription schemes of Carnot, 63, 64: secretary of war, 63, 64: counterplots on the 18th Brumatire, 74: plans to bead a force at 5t. Cloud, 74: created marshal, 207: ordered to Gottingen, 232: contacter plots on the 18th Brumatire, 74: plans to head a force at 5t. Cloud, 74: created marshal, 207: ordered to Gottingen, 232: commanding in Germany, 234: marches to Inpolstadi, 234: watches the Russian army, 235: violates Prassian neutrality at Ansbach, 242: in battle of Austerlitz, 247, 249: created Prince of Ponte Corvo, 226: iii. 71: at Lobensttin, ii, 778: defeats Hoheelohe at Schleiz, 279: at Nammburg, 280: absence from Jena and Auerstad, 282: relations with M, 282; iii, 11: at Lobensttin, at Ething, 14: action at Mohrungen, 15: escapes to Giligenburg, 15: threatens Denmark, 58: Denmark yields to, 59: in, 28: threatens Denmark, 58: Denmark yields to, 59: in, 29: thereaten Sonish bergentions on the Battle, 116: nose, 15: index and 13: position at Ething, 14: action at Mohrungen, 15: escapes to Giligenburg, 16: threatens Konissherg, 15: in compation of K, 18: 18: advance-gnard of Spanish troops, 124: troops in Bremen, Hatmatry, and Linkek, 157: to concentate in Dresden, 158: ondered to Xurgan, 176, 175: i Gorgenet at Wagram, 176, 178: installation at Stockholu, 215: sabure of bis relevent of his relevent by Magrams, 215: popularity in Swed

- seph, 113 : the allies dread betrayal by, 113 Bernadotte, Mme. i. 176 Bernburg, French forces at, iv. 28 Berneck, defeat of Junot by the Black Legion at, iii. 180 Berner Klause, the, i. 252 Berry, military movements near, iv. 107 Berry, Charles Ferdinand, Duc de, doubtful conrage of, ii. 192: refrains from entering France, 192: suspected of plotting in Brittany, 193 Berry, Rag abandoned by Marmont iv. 109: Marmont at
- Berry-au-Bac, abandoned by Marmont, iv. 109 : Marmont at,
- Berry-au-Bac, abandoned by Marmont, iv. 109: Marmont at, 113
  Berthier, Gen. Alexandre, a product of Carnot's system, i. 202: service in the Alps, 209: at Lodi, 219: in the Rivoli campaign, 253: carries treaty of Campo Formio to the Directory, ii. 16: planders Venetia, 26: proclaims the Roman Republic, 26: ordered to kill hostile tribesmen, 47: ordered to prepare for triumphal entry into Cairo, 52: accompanies N, on his return from Alexandria, 56: action on the 18th Brunaire, 71: forms the army of reserve, 92: sent to Geneva, 92: method of computing his army, 110: plans for crossing the Alps, 110: nrges capture of Fort Bard, 111: created marshal, 207: Master of the Honnds, 207: muzzles the press in Prussia, 270, 271: letter from N., Aug. 96, 1806, 73: personal attendance on N., 276, 277: in battle of Eylan, iii. 20; iv. 176: at Tilsit, iii, 46, 61: in come, 71, 226: created Prince of Neufchatcl, 71, 78, 214: appointed vice-constable, 78: at Baycane, 113: chief of staff, 157, 246; iv. 34: orders to, iii. 158: deficiency of military knowledge, 159: fails in execution of his orders, 159, 160: charged with treachery, 160: on N.'s habit of work, 163: discovers attempt to assassinate N., 185: N.'s proxy to marry Maria Louisa, 195-197: created Prince of Wagran, 197: letter from Ney to, Nov, 5, 1812, iv. 3: informs Macdonald of the Russian disasters, 20: alleged hostility to Jonini, 52: battle of Dresden, 68: at Nangis, 103: receives dag of truce from Schwarzenheig, 103: personales V, to resume necotiations. 104: computer of one of his 20: alleged hostility to Jomini, 52: battle of Dresden, 68: at Nangle, 103: receives dag of true from Schwarzenberg, 103: persuades N. to resume negotiations, 104: capture of one of his contriers, 121: at connell at St. Dizler, 126: advises a return to Lorraine, 136: Marmont sends treasouable documents to, 138: at the abdication scene, 139: transfers his allegiance to Louis XVIII., 147: micknamed "Peter," 158: faults at Eylau and Wagram, 176
  Berthollet, C. L., plunders Italian scientific collections, i. 225: accompanies N. on his return from Alexandria, ii. 56: member of the senate, 100
  Berton, L. S., i. 31
  Bertrand, Gen, H. G., base conduct at Vienua, ii. 237: in campaign of 1813, iv. 34: in battle of Bautzen, 39, 40: beleaguers

- Bertrand, Gen. II, G.—continued.
  Schweidnitz, 42: battle of Demewitz, 63: driven by Blücher to Bitterfeld, 66: haitle of Leipsic, 71, 72, 74, 75: takes Weissen-fels, 75: defends the tLinne at Kasfel, 89: begs N. to abandon Belgium and the left bank of the Rhine, 101: at the abdication scene, 139: accompanies N. to Elha, 149, 152: sends positive in-structions to Grouchy, 186, 189: escorts N. trom the field of Waterloo, 203: accompanies N. to Elha, 149, 152: sends positive in-structions to Grouchy, 186, 189: escorts N. trom the field Pertrand, Mme, present at N.'s deathbed, iv. 219
  Berstand, Mme, present at N.'s deathbed, iv. 219
  Bessières, Gen. J. B., service in Egypt, Ii. 36: created marshal, 207: in battle of Austerlitz, 250: in Eylau campaign, iii. 19, 20: created Duke of Istria, 70, 71: income, 71: character, 75: N.'s opinion of, 75: iovades Spain, 105, 106; 112: instructions to, concerning Spanish policy, 110: ordered to strest Ferdinand, 113: besicges Sandander, 122: defeats the Spaniaris at Median de Rio Seco, 122: occupies Old Castile and Aragon, 122: or dered to connect with Junot, 123: at Miranda, 142: pursues Huller, 162: battle of Essing, 170, 171: commanding the Young Guard, 246: killed at Rippach, iv. 35, 37: importance of his less to X., 35
  Bethencourt, Gen., crosses the Simplon, ii. 113: near Domo
- biast of N., 35
  Bethencourt, Gen., crosses the Simplon, ii. 113: near Domo d'Ossola, 113
  Beugnot, regent of Berg, iv. 48: anecdote concerning, 48
  Beurnonville, Marquis de, N.'s envoy to Prussia, ii. 103: royalist intrigues of, iv. 135, 140
  Beberch, battle of, ii. 109
  Biberach, battle of N. at the castle of, iv. 48
  Bible, N.'s study of the, iv. 216
  Biblet, N.'s study of the, iv. 216
  Biblet, S. Study of the art, iii. 42
  Bisamberg, junction of Archduke Charles and Hiller at, iii. 164, 167: military operations near, 176, 177
  Biscay, N.'s contemplated movements in, iii. 143: military government of, 213

PEA 269
Blitcher, Marshal G. L. von - continued.
Paris, 122: "Marshal Forward," 122: crosses the Marne, 123: fears of, in Paris, 130: captures Montmartre, 132: desires to take the field, 173: plan of the campaign of Waterloo, 174: quality of his troops, 176: N's position with regard to Wellington and, 175: relative strength in Waterloo campaign, 176: awaits developments, 176: relations with Wellington, 179: possible change of strategy, 179: defensive movements, 180: a Fleurus, 181: refree from Fleurus, 181: his tactics criticized by Wellington, 182: meeting with Wellington, 179: possible change of strategy, 179: defensive movements, 180: a Fleurus, 181: refree from Fleurus, 181: his tactics criticized by Wellington, 182: meeting with Wellington, 183: Issi and the of Ligny, 184: Grouchy's pursait of, 186: apprechended an ovement to join Wellington, 186: promises support to Wellington is assistance, 198: Wenniton's faint-hearted cooperation with, 200: the actory aims to prevent union helween Wellington is assistance, 198: Wellington's assistance, 198: Wellington's assistance, 198: Wellington's faint-hearted cooperation with, 200: the adstrong temper, iv, 54, 55, 60: inflnence, 175
Bober, River, military movements on the iv, 55, 61
Bocognano, A. in Hiding near, 6, 120
Bochemia, Archduke Ferdinand escapes into, 163: gathering of Anstrian troops in, iv, 42: boundary of a neartal zone, 43: beacons fash the declaration of war through, 49, 50: Anstro-Russian troops in, 52: gathering of Anstrian troops in, iv, 42: 22: boundary of a neartal zone, 43: beacons fash the declaration of war through, 49, 50: Anstro-Russian troops in, 59: surface of Egypt, 11: 31
Bohemia, Forest, military movements in the, iii, 158; 163, 167
Boiognano, A. in Hiding near, 6: 120
Bohemia, Forest, military movements in the, iii, 158; 163, 167
Boiognano, S. in Hiding Near Strane of Egypt, 11: 31
Bohemian Forest, military movements in the, iii, 158; 16

- at Rastatt, 61 Bontemps, ML, arrest of, ii. 17 Bordeaux, condition in 1793, i. 133: exempt from legislation concerning Jews, iii. 64: opens its gates to English troops, iv. 114: proclamation of Louis XVIII., 114: N. seeks to rouse imperial feeling in, 209: immunity from the White Terror, 910
- 210 Borghese, Prince, marries Fauline (Buonaparte) Leclerc, ii. 164: separates from Pauline, iv. 154 Borghese, Princes Pauline (Buonaparte), looseness of hcr life, iv. 155, 164: acquires the duchy of Lucca, 227: dismissed from Paris, 164: accompanies N, to Elba, 152-155: alleged scan-dalous relations with N, 155. See also BUONAPARTE, PAULINE Borgehetto, battle of, i. 227 Borgo, Pozzo dI. See POZZO DI BORGO Bormida, River, road to Italy opened through the valley of, i. 152: the country of, ii. 116, 117: Melas crosses, 117: military operations on the, 119 Borodino, Bonaparte at, ii. 253: battle of, iii. 260, 261, 263, 264: rescuing the wounded from the field of, iv. 2 Borrissoff, the French retreat through, iv. 5-8, 10: Russian plan of operations at, 7: captured by Tchitchagoff, 8, 9: battles at, 10, 11.

- 10 11

- b) optimized as, it. capitien by reintenagon, s, s. battles as, 10, 11
  Borstell, Gen., battle of Dennewitz, iv. 64
  Bosporus, proposed expedition to the, ii. 91
  Botanical Garden, lecture system of the, i, 167
  Bothnia, repulse of the Russians from, iii. 93
  Bou, Mme, i. 108
  Boudet, Gen. Jean in battle of Essling, iii. 109, 170
  Boulay de la Meurthe, Antoine, presents temporary plan of the Consulate, ii. 83: member of the conneil of state, 100: reviser of the Code, 143
  Boulogne, the Army of England, flotilla, and military preparations at, ii. 32, 3155, 186, ed., 213, 213, 213, 213, 213, 214: distribution of Legion of Honor crosses at, 231: the army ordered east from, 232. ast from, 232
- Bourbon-Condé, Louis-Antoine-Henri de, See ENGHIEN,
- Bourbon-Gonde, Louis-Antoine-Heini ut, see Lawinz, Due of Bourbon-Hapsburg alliance, Corsica joins the, i. 9
  Bourbons, the, infloence of i. 9: N.'s attitude toward, 103; ii. 19, 126, 132, 174, 192, 199, 228; iv. 164: discredit royalty, i. 159: their motto, 178: France's demands on Austria concerning, ii. 29: hopes and rumors of restoration of, and plots therefor, 65, 82, 104, 126, 162, 203; iv. 87, 99, 100, 133, 134, 170: Talleyrand's predilection for, ii. 82: England's attitude toward, 94, 95, 174, 228; iv. 91: a blow at the, ii. 133: X. complains of England's protection, 191: responsibility for the execution of Ney, 191: the Due d'Enghien, 192: intrigues against N.'s life, 194; iv. 154, 156; N.'s attempt to fx death of Due d'Enghien on, ii. 199: causes of the French disfike for, 202, 203: their fuivne right," 203: their founder, 225: scheme to establish a monarchy in America, iii. 106, 111: Metteroich's desire to restore the, iv. 99, 100: rising in Vendee, 125: restoration of, 130, 134. 135,

Bourbons, the - continued.

- Bourbons, the continued.
  148, 158: enthusiasm for, in Paris, 135: revulsion of feeling in France and by Alexander against, 143: flekke imperialists sup-port Louis XVIII., 147: maintain spices in Elba, 155: N. on the identimacy of their throne, 164
  The Neapolitan, impending downfall, ii. 229: hanished, 252, 255, 259; iii. 166: proposal that they retain power in Sicily, ii. 259

252, 255, 255, 251, iii. 166: proposal that they retain power in Sicily, ii. 259
The Spanish, scheme to emancipate Spain from rule of, ii. 30: incapacity and degradation, ii. 59: N.'s attitude toward, 111: deposed, 113-115, 117, 128: proposals to restore the throne to, 208; iv. 44
Bourgeoisie, the, at outbreak of the Revolution, i. 53, 66: N. seeks the support of, ii. 178
Bourmont, Gen., describ before Charleroi, iv. 177
Bourrmont, Gen., describ before Charleroi, iv. 177
Bourrmont, Gen., describ before Charleroi, iv. 177
Bourriene, L. A. F. de, ou the question of M.'s birth, i. 18: shares mathematical honors with N., 28: shares N.'s poverty io Paris, 100, 102: obtains diplomatic position at Stattgart, 102: anecdotes of N. by, 103: describes N.'s personality, 169: N.'s fieldship for, 116: improved fortunes of, 176: N. sconfidences with, ii. 34, 35: on N.'s plans of escaping from Egypt, 57: N. expresses hia satiafaction to, concerning the 18th Brumandre, 75: rebukes N. at St. Cloud, 77: character, 177: dismissed, 177: on Mme, de Stael, iii. 227: venality of, iv. 129
Bourles, Col. Geo., conversation with Wellimeton, iv. 184
Boyer, Gen. J. P., prepares a "triumphal" return to Cairo, ii. 52
Brabant, visit of N. and Maria Louisa to, iif. 206: French occupation of, 207: N.'s offer to exchange it for Hanseatic towns, 207

Braganza, House of, decline of, iii. 95: flight to Brazil, 106:

- <sup>207</sup>
  <sup>207</sup>
  Braganza, House of, decline of, iii. 95: flight to Brazil, 106: N. proposes to restore Portugal to, 242
  Brandenburg, proposed allotment of, to Jerome, iv. 39: the Army of the North in, 52: contemplated operations in, 55
  Brandenburg, House of, the imperial crown for the, ii. 273: owes its safety to the Car, ii. 61
  Braunau, the Austrian camp at, ii. 234: captured by Lannea, 236: Russian troops at, 236: French occupation of, 262
  Braz, Macdonald before, iv. 102, 103
  Brazil, Don John embarks for, iii. 96, 97
  Breisgau, grant to Grand Duke of Tuscany in, ii. 125: Duc d'Enghien prepares to retire to the, 193: part of, acquired by Baden, 232: Wurtenheng acquires part of, 252
  Breitenlee, Austrian advance through, iii. 170
  Bremen, closed to British comoerce, ii. 183: laid ander con-tribution, 183: proposalt ogive it to Fraesia, 258: Bernaldetes force in, iii. 157: scheme to incorporate with France, 204: position in the French empire, 214: French forces at, iv. 28
  Brentz, River, military operations on the, i. 234, 235, 238-249, 250

- position in the French empire, 214: French forces at, 17, 28
  Brenta, River, military operations on the, i. 234, 235, 238-240, 250
  Brescia, selzed by France, i. 226: the French position at, 232: captured by Quasdanowich, 232: evacuated by the enemy, 233: the revolutionary movement in, 265, 269
  Breslau, Russian troops at, ii. 245: the Prussian court moves from Berlin to, iv. 30: patriotism in the university, 31: French occupation of, 42: pursuit of the allies to, 42: French evacuation of, 43: military movements near, 52
  Brest, naval preparations at, ii. 33, 46, 213: blockade of, 213, 230, 231: iii. 6, 42: junction of Nelson and Cornwallis before, ii. 230: the fleet ordered to the English Channel from, 230: Villeneuve's mission to relieve, 231: the squadron ordered to the Mediterranean, iii. 89: imprisonment of Schill's followera in, 180: naval station at, iv. 17
  Brest-Litovski, military operations near, iii. 268
  "Briars, The," N. a guest at, iv. 215, 216
  Brienen, N. at, 1. 18, 22-30, 83, 125; iv. 94: N.'s mock battles at, i. 27; iv. 94: Lucien Buonaparte at, i. 42: Lucien quits, and Louis remains at, 45: Louis fails of admission to, 49: N.'s garden at, 125: N.'s contemporaries at, 129: battle of, iv. 94: military movements near, 120, 121
  Brienne, Mme, Loménie de, N.'s early friend, i. 26, 27, 54
  Brigandage, suppression of, in Corsica, i. 4
  Brigido, Col., at battle of Arcole, i. 238
  Brinkmann, on N.'s influence in France, ii. 88
  Brinkmann, on N.'s influence in France, ii. 88
  Brissot, J. P., level-or of the Girondists, i. 111
  Brittary, foundation of the Jacobin Club in, i. 66: violence and civil war in, 122, 133, 164, 182: ii. 62, 94, 96: N. conciliates, 96: suspected plot of the Duc de Berry in, 193
  Brixken, Joubert at, i. 268: apportioned to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, ii. 170: ceded to Bavaria, 252
  Broglie, Duc de, on the Emperor's court at Fontainebleau, iii. 18

- Broussier, Gen., marches to relief of Paris, iv. 125
- Bruck, Frince Eugene at, iii. 174 Bruck, Frince Eugene at, iii. 174 Brueys d'Aigalliers, Vice-Adm. François-Paul, commanding French fleet in the Adriatic, ii. 12: ordered to Corfu, 42: or-dered to Alexandria, 42: in the battle of the Nile, 42-44 Bruix, Adm. E., sent to conquer the Mediterranean, ii. 55: in-terview with Barras, 73: argument in favor of the slave trade, 159
- Brumaire, the plot of the 18th of, ii. 69 et seq., 81 et seq., 201,
- 202; 17, 228 Brunc, Gen, G. M. A., plunders Bern, ii. 27; military genius, 60; campaign in Holland, 60, 63, 66, 207; battle of lergen, 63; supersedes Masséna in Italy, 124; advances to Trent, 125; cre-ated marshal, 207; venality of, ili, 67

- Brunet, Gen., commanding the army of Italy, i. 128
  Brünn, military operations near, ii. 236, 237, 245, 247-249; iii. 177; N. establishes headquarters at, ii. 245
  Brunswick, French occupation of, iii. 7: organization of the Black Legion, 180: the Black Legion'a escape through, 181: restored to its former ruler, iv. 79
  Brunswick, Charles F. W., Duke of, commander-in-chief of the Prassian army, ii. 272, 276, 278; at Naunberg, 276; decline of his influence, 278: at Erfurt, 278; rlan of opposition to the French, 270: in battle of Jena, 280-282: death of, 282; ii. 7: proclamation against the French republic, 7: appeals to N.'s mercy. 7
- Brunswick, Frederick W., Duke of, deprived of his throne, iii. 180: organizes the Black Legion, 180: exploits with the Black Legion, 180, 181: escapes to England, 181
   Brunswick, House of, Sieyès snspected of plotting with the, ii.

- Brunswick, House of, Sieyès anspected of plotting with the, ii. 65
  Brunswick, House of, Sieyès anspected of plotting with the, ii. 65
  Brussels, proposed invasion of France via, iv. 91: York retires to, 109: military operations near, 174 et acq., 181, 188, 189, 191: topography of, 191
  Brutus, statue at the Tnileries, ii. 97
  Bruyeres, killed at Reichenbach, iv. 40
  Bryyeres, Killed at Reichenbach, iv. 40
  Bryyeres, Kalled at Reichenbach, iv. 40
  Bryyeres, Kalled at Reichenbach, iv. 40
  Bry, meeting of Wellington and Blueher at, iv. 182
  Butona, Gen., emissary from Francis to N., iii, 183, 184; iv. 29, 65: suggests an armistice, 38: prograshinates, 45: confronting Augerean at Geneva, 91: in the campaign of 1814, 95: driven from Lyons by Augerean, 98
  "Bucentaure," the, destruction of, ii. 16
  "Bucentaure," the, at Trafalgar, ii. 240, 241
  Budberg, Russian councilor, iii. 45
  Budyers, Archduke Charles at, iii. 167
  Buenos Ayres, English expedition against, iii. 81
  "Buffer" states, ii. 260; iii. 48
  Bull-fights, N. proposes to introduce them into Paris, ii. 265
  Bullow, Gen. F. W. von, junction of Bernadotte with, iv. 32: commanding Army of the North, 52: holding Berlin, 52: strength, 52: belittled by N., 54: military ability, 60: battle of Grossbeeren, 60: battle of Dennewitz, 63: cooperates with Graham in the Netherlands, 91: capturea Soissons, 106: commanding reserve forces, 175: in Waterloo campaign, 180: near Beauderet, 184: at St. Lambert, 190: battle of Waterloo, 198-200
  Buubury, Sir Henry, on commission to notify N. of his sentence,
- Bunbury, Sir Henry, on commission to notify N. of his sentence,

- Beauderet, 184: at St. Lambert, 190: battle of Waterloo, 198-200
  Bunbury, Sir Henry, on commission to notify N. of his sentence, iv. 213
  Bunzlau, Blücher at, iv. 65
  Buonaparte, Carlo Maria di (father of N.), early life of, i. 13, 14; ennobled, 13: marriage 14: submission and Freuch naturalization, 15: character, 15, 22: death, 16, 32: ambitiuns and advancements, 21-24, 29, 32: mission to Versailles, 22-24: claim against the Jesuits, 24, 32: breaks down, 29: his "infamy," 50: N. renounces the royalist principles of, 76: his paternity of N. denied, iv. 151
  Buonaparte, Caroline (sister of N.), birth, i. 16: at Nice, 144: early life, 195: gift to her brother on departure for Egypt, ii. 36: married to Murat, 127, 164, 166: resents N.'s abuse of Murat, iv. 90. See also MURAT, MMZ.
  Buonaparte, Princess Charlotte, proposal to marry her to the Prince of Asturias, iii, 102: sent to Madame Mere, 103
  Buonaparte, Hortense, Hie in Holland, iii. 27: death of her eldest son, 45: quarrels with the Grand Duchess of Berg, 139: share in the Austrian marriage negotiations, 194: Louia compalais of, 207: criticized by Mure, de Stael, 227. See also BEAT-HARNAIS, HORTENSE
  Buonaparte, Jerome (brother of N.), birth, i. 16, 33: sent to school in Paris, 185: marriage to Elizabeth Patterson, ii. 164: residence in the United States, 164: fails to secure divorce from his American wite, 256: marries Catherine of Wirtemmanding corps of Wirtembergers and Bavarians, 11: king of Westphalia, 40, 218, 214: lius VII. refuses to annul his marriage, 67: assumes the title of Napoleon, 67: relations with N., 67, 68: ordered to raise levies in Westphalia, 100: deprived of part of Hanover, 213: supplies quota to N.'s army, 244, 245: in the Russian canepaign, 254: at Grono, 254: at the Ern fur conference, 133: defeated by the Black Legion, 180: deprived of part of Hanover, 213: supplies quota to N.'s army, 245, 545: in the Russian canepaign, 254: at Grono, 254: at ministary bunders and

- Buonaparte, Louis continued.
  N., 207; permitted to return to Amsterdam, 207; opens negotiations with England, 207, 208; continues to oppose N., 211; ilight to Teplitz, 212
  Buonaparte, Louis Napoleon (nephew of N., son of Louis; crown prince of Holland), created Grand Duke of Berg, ili.
  213
- Buenaparte, Lucien (great-unele of  $N_{*,1}$ ) condition, l. 20: affection for his family, 33: Illness of, 41, 43-45: political opinions, 61: death, 94
- Buonaparte, Lucien (great-uncle of N.,) condition, I. 20: affection for his family, 33: Illness of, 41, 43-45: political ophilons, 61: death, 94
  Buonaparte, Lucien (brother of N.), birth, i. 16: goes to Antun, 22: relations with N., 28, 46, 61: advancement for, 20: at Brienne, 42: turns toward the priesthood, 42: leaves Brienne, 45, 61: dearts to enter at Aix, 49: memoirs of N., 50, 123, 191-193; ii. 172: independence of i. 79: radical leader at Ajacedo, 108: letter to Costa, 110: in diplomatic service, 117: denomices Paoli, 117: at Toulon, 123: appropriates N.'s birth certificate, 124: in commissary department, 124, 135: "the little Robespierre," 140: marriago, 151: deprived of employment, 169: destitution of, 171, 172: impropriates N.'s birth certificate, 185: foments quarrels in Italy, ii. 59: political and social preferment, 65: member and president of the Five Hundred, 55, 66, 72, 78-80: on the 19th Brumaire, 78-80: makes a dramatic scene at St. Cloud, 79, 80: summons Boanjartist members of the Five Hundred to meet, 80, 81: harangues the mutilated chambers, 83: minister of the interior, 87: suggests plebiscite on the guestion of life cosmilship, 158: declines to marry the queen of Etruria, 164: cxiled, 164: asomit of his career, 164: thereary society, 164: at summit of his career, 164: the recown of Etruria, 169: concerning marriage of, 197: the savior of N.'s fortunes on the 18th Brunnaire, 202: the right of inperial succession in his family, 206: created an imperial prince, 206: at Rome during N.'s coronation, 219: proposal that he take the crown of Etruria, 169: salis to the United States, 212: captured by the English, 212: Mine, de State's complatint of N. to, 228: fosters revolution in Rome, iv, 156: assigned to the House of Pervis, 168: member of the council of states, 173: advises a dictarship after Waterloo, 206, 207: N. dictates his addication to, 207
- the difficulties after Waterloo, 206, 207; A. dictates ins addica-tion to, 207 Buonaparte, Marie-Anne (sister of N.), i. 16 Buonaparte, Marie-Anne-Elisa (sister of N.), birth, i. 16 : edu-cated at Saint-Cyr, 28, 31, 32, 36 : defective education, 36, 107 : N. visits at St. Cyr, 103; quits St. Cyr and returns to Corsica, 107, 108; at Nice, 144 : suitor for, 174 : marriage to Felice Bacclocchi. 195 ; il. 164 : acquires Massa-e-Carrara and Garfagnana, 255 : ereated Grand Duchess of Tuscany and Princess of Lucca and Fiombino, ili, 213. See also Bacclocctuf, FRINCESS Buonaparte, Nabulione, i. 16, 17 : forms of the name, 18, 19 Buonaparte, Nabulione, i. 16, 17 : forms of the name, 18, 19 Buonaparte, Napoleon. See NAPOLEON Buonaparte, Napoleon Louis Charles (nephew of N., son of Louis), N.'s partiality for, ii. 180; iii. 206 : proposal to create him king of Italy, ii. 226 : death of, iii. 45, 125, 206 Buenaparte, Pauline (sister of N.), birth of, i. 16 : at Nice, 144 : suitor for, 174 : Ilirtation with Fréron, 195 : marries Gea-talla, 255 : adviser to Maria Louisa, iii, 197 : created Duchess of Guastalla, 213. See also LECLERC, MME ; EORGHESE, PRINCESS

- or Guastafia, 213. See also LECLERG, MME.; BORGHESE, PRINCESS Buonaparte family, the, i. 2, 8-16: enuobling and coat arnor of, 13, 22: vicissitudes of fortune, 17, 30, 32, 33, 41, 43-46, 49, 60, 61, 74, 94, 95, 108, 109, 121, 129, 139, 169, 171, 172, 174, 195; N. regards himself as head of, 45, 94, 125, 185, 195; claim against the government, 46, 61: the "infamy" of, 60 : Salicett's influence over, 62: influence in Corsica, 78, 119; N.'s devotion to, 79, 33, 94, 143, 144; outburst against, in Ajaccio, 121: driven from their estates, 121: leave Corsica for Tuilon, 123: residence in Toulon, 124, 127; flight to Marseilles, 127, 134; driven from Toulon, 129: social diplomacy of, 155; news of N.'s return from Egypt brought to, ii. 57; political prefer-ment among members of, 65; incetting to consider the heredi-tary consulship, 157, 158; the women of, 164, 165; donestic life, 178; relations with the First Consul, 178; social triumph of, iii, 75; urge diverce from Josephine, 99; allotment of crowns among, 105, 109; consolidation of Italy under, 167; agree on the Austrian marriage, 195; arrogance of its members, 206, 207, 213: fratemus linstincts, 244, 245; Austrian discovery of their royal descent, iv. 82; proseribed, 210; France again un-der, 218 Burgget Murget assume social action of the france again un-der, 218

- Ineir royal descent, N. 82: proserioed, 210. France again the der, 218
  Burggau, ceded to Bavaria, ii. 252
  Burggos, Murat assumes command at, iii. 106: Ferdinand VII. at, 112: siege and fall of, 141, 144: French movement toward, 143: failure of Marmont to cspture, 222
  Burgundy, N. visits, i. 82
  Burke, Edmund, influence of his oratory, i. 115, 116: on Malmesbury's mission to Paris, 279
  Burrard, Gen. H., defeats Wellesley's plans at Vimeiro, iii. 123: retired from active service, 144
  Busace, battle of, iii. 218: the cantinière of, 223
  Buttafueco, Matteo, treachery of, i. 5, 6, 9, 10: invites Rousseau to Corsicen, 7: relations with Choiseul, 9: represents Corsica at Versailles, 61: attitude toward Corsican patriots, 63: popular hatred of, 65, 74, 75: succeeded by Salicetti, 73, 76: N.'s diatribe agaiost, 75, 76: N.'s "Letters" to, 82: his marriage condemned by N., 187

- gent's council, iv. 128: character, 128: member of N.'s new abinet, 167

- Cabinet, 167
  Cambronne, Gen., P. J. E., aids in N.'s escape from Elba, iv. 163; in battle of Waterloo, 202
  Campan, Mme., appointment in the imperial court, ii. 207
  Camphell, Sir Neil, British commissioner at Fontainebleau, iv. 148, 149; N.'s relations with, 148, 149, 155, 160; accompanies N. to Elba, 153; andbasador to N.'s court at Elba, 156; leaves Elba for Florence, 160, 162
  Camperdown, battle of, ii. 25
  Camperdown, battle of, ii. 283; ii. 12-14, 16, 20, 24, 28, 95, 98, 121; iii. 250

- Canova, Antonio, makes statue of Empress Maria Louisa, iii.
- 229
  Cantonal assemblies, ii. 159
  Cape of Good Hope, taken by England from the Dutch, ii. 8, 25: ceded to the Batavian Republic by treaty of Amiens, 150: England's rights in, 168: N.'s ambitions concerning, 184; iii. 235
  Cape St. Vincent, lattle of, i. 283; ii. 42
  Caprera, expedition against, i 114
  Captrino, battle at, i. 253
  "Captain," Nelson's ship in hattle of Cape St. Vincent, ii. 42
  Captain," Nelson's ship in hattle of Cape St. Vincent, ii. 42
  Captain," Nelson's ship in hattle of Cape St. Vincent, ii. 42
  Captain," Nelson's ship in hattle of Cape St. Vincent, ii. 42
  Captain, "Nelson's ship in hattle of Tance, iii. 198, 202
  Cardinals, the College of, transplanted to France, iii, 198, 202
  Carinthia, N. in. i. 268: revolutionary sentiment in, ii. 28: part of, ceded to France, iii. 184

- Carinthian Mountains, pursuit of Archduke John across the,

- Euxhöwden, Gen., advance of Russian troops under, ii. 236: Joins Khutusoff at Wischath, 245

  Bylandt, Count de, advises Holland to dely France, iii. 207: in battle of Waterloo, iv. 196

  Cabarris, influence on the Consulate, i. 127

  Cabarris, Jeanne M. I. T., i. 190. See also FONTENATE, MME, DE; TALLIEN, MME.

  Cadiz, Nelson lose an eye at, ii. 421: Villeneuve makes for, 231, 238, 239: Collingwood blockades, 239: Nelson's fleet off, 240: interest and excursion by Eneland, iii. 105, 121: scizure of a French fleet at, 121, 122: Soult before, 219, 221: Soult abara dons, 222: becomes the capital of the nationalists, 222

  Cadourd, Georges, complaints of England'a harboring of, ii. 174: conspiratory to seize N., 189 et seq.; i.ender of the Chotanas 189: arrest and excution, 190, 193: X,'s elemency toward his co-conspirators, 200: funcations of admiration for, resemblance between N. and i. 94, 242, 292: ii. 97, 106, 104, 148, 149; iii. 242; vi. 46, 217, 234: N. disclaims the role od, ii. 77, 80: his work for civilization, 103, 104: iii. 232

  Caffarelli, Gen, bevor of N.'s letter to Pius VII, ii. 217: to battle of Ansterifiz, 250

  Caffarelli, Gen, bevor of M.'s letter to Pius VII, ii. 217: to battle of Ansterifiz, 250

  Caffarelli, Gen, bevor of M.'s letter to Pius VII, ii. 217: to battle of Ansterifiz, 250

  Caffarelli, Gen, bevor of M.'s letter to Pius VII, ii. 217: to battle of Ansterifiz, 250

  Caffarelli, Gen, bevor of M.'s letter to Pius VII, ii. 217: to battle of Ansterifiz, 250

  Caffarelli, Gen, bevor of M.'s letter to Pius VII, ii. 217: to battle of Ansterifiz, 250

  Caffarelli, Gen, bevor of M.'s letter to Pius VII, ii. 217: to battle of Ansterifiz, 250

  Caffarelli, Gen, bevor of M.'s letter to Pius VII, ii. 217: to battle of Ansterifiz, 250

  Caffarelli, Gen, bevor of M.'s letter to Pius VII, ii. 217: to battle of Ansterifiz, 250

  Caffarelli, Gen, bevo

  - Cassel, Blucher's military movements in, ii. 278: restored to ita

  - mand, 135
    Cassel, Blucher's military movements in, ii. 278: restored to its former ruler, iv. 79
    Castaños, Gen. F. X. de, causes Dupont's surrender at Baylen, iii. 122: position on the Ebro, 143, 144: concerted French movement against, 144: collects his troops at Siguenza, 144
    Casteggio, battle of, ii. 116
    Castellane, journal of, iv. 4
    Castellane, journal of, iv. 4
    Castellione, hattle of, i. 234; ii. 92: Augereau's victory at, 207; celebration of the battle of, 288: Augereau created Duke of, iii. 71. See AUGEREAU
    Castle, French occupation of, iii. 219: weakness of French forces in, 221: reinforcements for Masséna ordered from, 221
    Castlereggh, Lord, sceretary for war in Portland cabinet, iii. 58: policy of action and bitterness against N., 217; iv. 157, 169: prime midister of England, iii. 249: inspires action by Bernadotte, 266: becomes foreign accretary, iv. 16, 45, 48: disatisfied with the Frankfort terms 80: character, 50, 99: at headquarters of Francis, 105: on the European oplicy of 1814, 115: protests against the use of the imperial style by N., 148: negotiates against the use of the imperial style by N., 148: negotiates as eacer treaty between England, Austria, and France, 166, 157: protests to Talleyrand against violation of treaty obligations, 162: retires from Congress of Vienna, 173: letter from Lord Liverpool, June 20, 1815, 212
    Cathcart, Gen. W. S., besieges Copenhagen, iii. 59: heads English embasy to Russia, 267: influences the armitice of

  - Cathcart, Gen. W. S., besieges Copenhagen, iii. 59: heads English embassy to Russia, 267: influences the armistice of Poischwitz, iv. 45: English minister at St. Petersburg, 45: at Congress of Prague, 49
    Catherine II., policy of, i. 9: iii. 44, 235: death of, i. 262, 280: N. shatters a gilt of, ii. 14: N.'s admiration for, 222: share in partition of Poland, iii. 235: her life and work, iv. 223
    Catherine, Grand Duchess (of Russia), mentioned for marriage with N., iii. 139, 140: marries the Duke of Oldenburg, 140, 213, 236

  - 236
  - Catholic Emancipation, the question of, ii. 134

  - 236
    Catholic Emancipation, the question of, ii. 134
    Cato, statue at the Tuileries, ii. 97
    Cattaro, Alexander 1.'s scheme for acquiring, ii. 228: Russian occupation of, 262: compensation for, iii. 49
    Caulaincourt, A. A. L. de, leads expedition to Offenburg, ii. 194: Master of the Horse, 207, 276: relations with N., 276; iii. 56; iv. 114, 115, 128, 135, 136, 149, 166: conducts negotiations with Russia, iii. 71, 86–88, 91, 93, 94, 129, 131, 188, 236, 230, 241; iv. 38–40: connection with the d'Enghien nurder, ii. 86: N.'s Instructions to, 92: discusses partition of Turkey, 93: explains Bernadotte's dilatorines, 93: reproved by X., 129: friendship with the Car, 129, 131; ordered to ventilate the divorce question, 140: conducts X.'s matrimonial negotiations in Russia, 169, 191: explains the Austrian marriage to Alexander, 196: recalled, 241, 247; knowledge of Russia, 247; French commissioner at Poischwitz, iv. 43: at Congress of France, 49; letter from Metternich, Nov., 1813, 81, 82; Minister of Foreign Affairs, 81, 83; letter to Metternich, Dec. 2, 1813, 83; conducts negotiations at Châtillon, 101: letter from Maret, 114: at council at 8t. Dizier, 126: seeks peace at any price, 126: seeks and/encu with Alexander, 135, 136: at the addication scene, 139, 140; or commission to present alsolication to Alexander, 142, 143; urges the regeney, 113; transfers his allegiance, 145: X.'s declaration to, concerning his generals, 146: member of N.'s new cabinet, 167: member of the new Directory, 207

- Champagny, L. A., created Duke of Cadore, iii. 71: appointed Minister of External Relations, 78, 104: plenipotentiary at Altenburg, 183, 184: succeeded in the Foreign Office by Maret, 241, 252: mission to Francis at Dijon, iv. 144
  Champaubert, battle of, iv. 96-98
  Championnet, Gen., overthrows the Neapolitan throne, ii. 59, 60: disgraceful conduct at Naples, 63
  Channel tunnel, the, ii. 185
  "Chant du Départ," the, iv. 137
  Chaptal, J. A., member of the council of state, ii. 100
  Chardon, Abbé, on N.'s boyhood, i. 23
  Charette, iostitutes royalist retaliation on republicau prisoners, i. 164

- Charentón, Marnont aod Mortier driven back to, iv. 123
  Charette, iostitutes royalist retaliation on republican prisoners, i. 164
  Charleroi, military operations near, iv. 174, 176-178, 180, 181, 193, 201; N. at, 178, 179, 203, 239
  Charles, Archduke, defeats Jourdan, i. 235: defeated by Moreau, 235: campaign in the Tyrol, 263, 264: ordiered into Friuli, 263, 266: military genus, 263; iii, 167: guards Carniola, i. 267: battle on the Tagliannento, 267: on the river Mur., 268: cut off from succor, 269: letter from N., 269: defeats Jourdan at Ostrach and Stockach, ii. 60: effect of his successes, 61: defeats Masséan at Zurich, 63: defeated by Masséan at Zurich, 63: defeated by Masséan at Zurich, 93: withdraws temporarily from service, 105: resumes command after Hohenlinden, 125, 230: commanding Austrian army in Italy, 233: reaches Marburg, 236: position on the Adige, 236: oonnaanding Austrian troops from Italy, 245: the throne of Spain offered to, iii. 130: reorganizes the Austrian army, 163, 154: declares war against France, 154: to operate in Bohenia, 154: offensive movement in the Danube valley, 168: N.'s plan for meeting, 168: mistakes in the campaign of Eckmühl, 168-160: crosses the Isar, 169, 160: a lost opportunity, 159: plan of offense, 159: marches against Davout, 169: marches on net at the danusdorf and Rohr, 160: force at Moosburg, 161: retires to Ratisbon, 162: in battle of Eckmühl, 162: retires before Davout, 162: N.'s reasons for not pursuing, after Eckmühl, 163: crosses the Danuhe, 163: makes a stand at Chan, 163, 167: sues for peace, 163, 167: albed way and the Sisanherg, 164, 171: eciders X, 's differs, 173: indecision of, 167: his line on the Danube, 168: advance toward Wagram, 169: atternets to break X.'s tridges, 170: in battles of Aspern and Essling, 170-172: conduct after Aspern, 173, 174: seeks the effices of diplomacy, 174: battle of Wagram, 169: atternets to Erach X.'s tridges, 170: in battles of Aspern and Essling, 170-172: conduct after Aspern, 173, 174:
- Charles Ludwig Frederic, of Baden, marries Stephanie Na-
- Charles Ludwig Frederic, of Baden, marries Stephanie Napoleone, ii. 257
  Charles the Great, his work for civilization, ii. 103, 104: N.'s emulation of, 103, 104; iii. 231, 233: French longings for a modern, ii. 138: restoring the empire of, 149: reversion to state and titles of the reign of, 200; 207: coronation of, 203: gift to the Papacy, 222: his system of "marches," iii. 48: N. resumes the grant of, 94: magnificence of his empire, 104: Spanish territory of, 105: his donation to Hadrian I. revoked by N., 166: his ideal, 242: N. compared with, 242; iv. 241: the second, iii. 250: imitation of his times, iv. 171: lufthence on Europe, 241
  Charles IV. (of Spain), attachment to Godoy, ii. 131: king of spain, 184: subserviency to France, and relations with N., iii. 69, 60, 100, 101, 110: conspires against his son's succession, 60: unites with N. 101: 104: his son's conspiracy, 100: blames the French minister at Madrid, 100: correspondence with N. 101: 04: 105: parona Ferdinand, 101: proposes to cut off Ferdinand's succession, 101: N. reveals his policy to, 104: Vol., IV.-37

- Cautilion, attempt to assassinate Wellington, iv. 219: N.'s hequest to, 219
  Cavallos, defends Ferdinand's position, iii. 112
  Cavalry, N.'s views on, and use of, i. 30; ii. 117
  Cayenne, wholesale deportations to, ii. 6
  Ceibacy, N. on, i. 77
  Cerzoni, i. 137, 138
  Cerzon, ii. 133, 215, 216
  Ceryon, retained by Enzhaul, ii. 135, 168; France guarantees Its return to Holland, 184
  Chabcalon, Theury de, sent to Naples, iv. 161, 162; reveals the state of France to N., 161, 162
  Chabrol, inpetial prefect, iv. 129
  Chabrol, is gramming Blucher to, 97: Bincher col, for Allis sequence weaks, 165: cenvoy to Rome, 165: a disciple of Bornor the french thronges, 42: N. plans to attack Schwarzenberg at 17
  Chambery, N. et al. 17, 19: reinforcements for Augereau at, 119
  Chambery, N. et al. 17, 19: reinforcements for Augereau at, 119
  Chambery, K. et al. 17, 19: reinforcements for Augereau at, 119
  Chambery, R. S. 164: succeeded bit of Cadore, iii. 11: appointed Minister of External Relations, 78, 104: pleuphetentiary at the theorements of Augereau at, the enburg, 183, 184: succeeded bit of the frequence to fillion, Congress of, for 99-105, 107, 108, 114, 115: Caulander at the plane at 109
  Chablede, at 1001, 104: puncored preliminaries cours searced

  - France, ii. 134 Châtillon, Congress of, iv 99-105, 107, 108, 114, 115: Caulain-court's carte blanche at, 100, 101, 104: rumored preliminaries of peace at, 103: sends ultimatum to N., 104, 105: closes, 105, 106: capture of some of the diplomats of, 120 Chaumont, surrenders to one Wurtemberg horseman, iv. 87: treaty of, 106, 167, 170: military operations near, 116 Chemnitz, the Saxon army at, ii. 276: contemplated movements at, iv. 67

  - Chemier, André, il, 225 Chemier, André, il, 225 Chemier, M. J., driven from the tribunate, il. 156: "Cyrus," 225: suppresses his writings, ill. 72: rewards for his literary work, 227: opposes the empire, 229; made inspector-general of the University 200 University, 229

  - suppresses his writings, in. 72: rewards for his literary work, 227: opposes the empire, 229; made inspector-general of the University, 229
    Cheops, Pyramid of, N. in the, li. 45
    Cherasco, capture of, i. 216, 216
    Chevreuse, Mine, de, pert remark to N., and hanishment, iii. 76
    Chimag, N.'s attention turned toward, i. 40
    Chinas, N.'s attention turned toward, i. 40
    Choiseul, C. A. G., refuses protectorate to Corsica, i. 6: his policy toward Corsica, 8, 9: disgrace of, 22: N.'s hatred for, 26: scheme of Egyptian conquest, ii. 31
    Chouans, the, rebellion of, i. 164, 197, 278: legislation against, ii. 64: the Cadoual conspiracy, 189 et seq.
    Christian VII, imbeeility of, iii. 59
    Christian Ity, N.'s confusion of ideas concerning, i. 39
    Church, the, N.'s attitude toward, and relations with, i. 39, 83, 167; ii. 104, 113, 132, 133, 138, 139, 166, 165, 169, 170, 257, 263, 167; iii. 104, 113, 132, 133, 136, 136, 165, 169, 170, 257, 263, 264; iii. 67, 58, 70, 72, 73, 94, 95, 121, 147, 166, 186, 187, 192, 198, 199, 201, 202, 232, 233, 240; iv. 15, 25: demands for reform of, in Corsica, i. 62: enforced contributions by, at Ajaccio, 70: attitude of the French governments toward, and relations with the nation, 70, 144; ii. 62, 87, 139, 165, 208 et seq.: N.'s study of the Gallican, i. 86: reorganization of its property, 87: changes in, 94: sequestration of lands of, 94, 160: Louis XVI.'s support of, 160: N.'s speculation in sequestered hands of, 172: plotting in, 178: question of allegiance of the clergy, 247: relation to education, iii H5-147: influence in Austria and Germany, 169: reconstruction in France, 203: scheme for unity of, in Germany, 260: archibishops court pronounces N.'s first marriage null, 194: a titude toward N.'s second marriage, 189, 190: the College of Cardinals transplanted from Rome to Paris, 198, 202
    Cicero, Statue at the Tuilettice is i. 97
    Cintra, Junot surrenders at, iii. 123, 124, 144

- lege of Cardinals transplanted from Rome to Paris, 198, 202 Cicero, statue at the Tuileries, ii. 97 Cintra, Junot surrenders at, iii. 123 124, 144 Cisalpine Republic, the, formation of, ii. 6, 14: pillage of, 26: treaty with France, March, 1798, 26: the Valtellina incorpor-ated with, 27: recognized by Prussia, 29: dissolution of, 57: picks a quarrel with Sardinia, 59: reëstablishment of, 113, 120, 149: tribute levied on, 120: question of a president for, 149: English efforts to discredit France in, 169 Cispadane Republic, the, i. 247: question of a constitution for, ii. 6

- ii. 6 Gitadella, battle of, i. 237 "Citizen," use of the term in France, ii. 127 Citizenship, liberty, equality, and fraternity in, l. 57: the primary duty of, 183 Ciudad Rodrigo, Spanish defense of, iii. 218: storming of, 222,

- 242
  242
  243
  244
  244
  244
  244
  244
  244
  244
  244
  245
  246
  246
  246
  246
  247
  246
  246
  247
  246
  246
  247
  246
  246
  246
  247
  246
  246
  246
  247
  246
  246
  247
  246
  246
  247
  246
  246
  246
  247
  246
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  246
  247
  246
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  246
  247
  247
  246
  247
  247
  246
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247
  247

Clarke, Gen.—continued. harbors, 183: created Duke of Feltre, iii. 71; ordered to fortify the Spanish frontier, 100: minister of war, iv. 128: member of the Empress-Regent's council, 128, 130: advises the flight of the Empress, 130: prepares for defense of Paris, 131: N.'s rage

Clary, Eugénie-Bernardine-Désirée proposal to wed N. to, i. 176, 187, 188: affianced to Duphot, ii. 26, 29: marries Berna-closed and the set of th

261

- Cockburn, Adm. Sir George, conveys N. to St. Helena, iv. 214, 216
  Code Civil, its contravention by Jewish legislation, iii. 64
  Code O Napoléon, the, ii. 142-144; iv. 244: introduced into Parma and Piacenza, ii. 227: sobolition of the law of entail and primogeniture, iii. 69: N.'s excuse for overruling, 70: introduced into Holland, 212: in Italy, iv. 79
  Code of Commerce, the, ii. 144; iii. 61
  Code of Criminal Procedure, the, ii. 144
  Coignet, Writes of the entry into Berlin, iii. 3: on the march to Russia, 248: reports demoralization after Dreaden, iv. 69
  Coigny, Mlle, de, married to Savary, ii. 267
  Coliborne, Sir J., in battle of Waterloo, iv. 202
  Col di Tenda, the French line at, ii. 105
  College of Cardinals, increased French representation in the, iii. 94

- College of France, the, ii. 145
- College of France, the, ii. 145
  Colli, Gen., commanding Piedmontese troops, i. 213, 215: reinforcements for, defeated, 215
  Collingwood, Adm. Cuthbert, his knowledge of the enemy's movements, ii. 238: blockades Cadiz, 239: at Trafalgar, 240
  Cologne, Macdonald entrusted with defense of, iv. 89
  Colombier, Caroline du, N.'s first love, i. 40, 85
  Colonization, Talleyrand's views on, ii. 22
  Colonna, represents Corsica in the National Assembly, i. 62, 63: member of the Directory of Corsica, 73
  Colonna-Cesari, leads Corsican expedition against Sardinia, i. 114

- Colomna-Cesari, leads Corstean expedition against Sardinia, 1. 114
  Column of Vendôme, erection of the, iii. 62
  Comédie Française, members accompany N. to Erfurt, iii. 135
  Commerce, condition of, at outbreak of the Revolution, i. 63: influence on the social life of the world, ii. 31: encouragement of, 141: revived by the Peace of Amiens, 151: improved condition of, 165: the scope of British, 173
  Committee of Public Safety, usurps supreme power, i. 123: aided by Carnot, 133: Corsicans denounced in, 149: keeps N. under surveillance, 152: plans expedition against Rome, 155: abolished, 165, 172: the new, 174, 175, 178: appoints N. on military commission, 175: proposes to transfer N. to Constantionple, 178: considers policy of excluding English goods from the Continent, iii. 5: difficulties with Mme. de Stael, 227
  Comminal list, the, ii. 84
  Complègne, Spanish royal exiles at, iii. 116: meeting of the Emperor with his Austrian bride at, 197, 198, 200, 206: Blücher besieges, iv, 112
- sieges, iv. 112
- Compignano, Countess of. See BUONAPARTE, MARIE-ANNE-

Compulsory loans, ii. 88

- Compulsory loans, ii. 88 Compulsory military service, i. 128 Concordat, the, ii. 133, 138, 192, 208 et seq., 260; iv. 229, 242, 244: service in hour of, ii. 138, 139: its effect in France, 139: "the vaccine of religion," 139: contempt of the Army of the Rhine for, 151: the suppesed sponsor for, 166: effect in Germany, 169: extension to Venice refused by Pius VII., iii. 67: Venetia ad-mitted to, 94: undoing the work of, 96: rupture of, 233 Concordat of Fontainebleau, the, iv. 26, 27 Conde, evacuation of, i. 133 Conde, the Great, ii. 199 Condorcet, J. A. N. de C., heliever in equality of the sexes, ii. 145

- ii 14!
- <sup>11</sup>, <sup>145</sup> Conegliano, creation of hereditary duchy of, il. 256: Moncey created Duke of, 71. See MONCEY Confederation of the Rhine, the, organization of, il. 259-262 271: Hesse-Cassel refused admission to, iii. 7: levies of troops for France in, 24, 152, 157, 158, 244, 245; iv. 23, 28: recognized at Til-it, ili. 47: Saxony united with, 48: relations with France, Confederation of the Bhine — continued.

61, 62, 214; iv. 19: additions to, iii. 184: called to arms by Prussia, iv. 31: proposed abandonment of French protectorate over, 38: proposed dissolution of, 44: proposed dynastic inde-pendence for sovereigns of, 49: purpose of the alles to free, 66: resolved into its elements, 79: forced by allies to raise military contingents, 89
Confiscation, opposition to the reintroduction of, ii. 156: prin-ciple of punishment by, iii. 225, 226
Consalviz, military operations near, iv. 70-73
Consalvi, Cardinal, negotiates the Concordat, ii. 133: memo-rialist of Pius VII., 222: dismissed from the Papal service, 256

- 956
- 256 Conscription, the, i, 163, 232; ii. 60, 63, 64, 160, 195, 233, 255, 265, 274; iii. 11, 24, 26, 27, 63, 64, 100, 104, 153, 222, 245, 248; iv. 15, 22, 23, 25, 43, 65, 84-87, 123, 153, 171; development of Carnot's scheme, ii. 63, 64: N.'s influence on the laws of, 100: how enforced, 195: Jewish evasions of the, iii. 63: Jews made subject to 64

- how enforced, 195: Jewish evasions of the, iii. 63: Jews made subject to, 64
  Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers, founded, i. 167
  Constable, creation of the office of, ii. 206
  Constabulary, abolition of the . i. 80
  Constance, city of, ceded to Baden, ii. 252
  Constant, N.'s valet, iv. 149
  Constant, K.'s valet, iv. 149
  Constantine, city of, ceded to Baden, ii. 234
  Constant, N.'s valet, iv. 149
  Constantine, Grand Duke, in battle of Austerlitz, ii. 249, 250:
  Bennigsen writes to, after Friedland, iii. 32: leader of the peace party, 32, 34: at Tilsit, 45: with the Arnay of the South, iv. 62
  Constantine, Degread to send N. to, i. 177: N.'s eye on, 262: proposed mission for Talleyrand to, ii. 49: fixes to to relief of Acer from, 65, 51: Russian ambition to acquire, 228; ii. 29, 54: st. 718
  Constatine of, 95: N. givenish fleer the Site for the relief of the center of the sent to relief of Acer from, 60, 51: Russian ambition to acquire, 228; iii. 29, 64, 87, 91: a British fleet at 23: French influence at, 33, 81: proposed disposition of, after Tilsit, 48: revolution in, 127: England threatens to hombard, 244
  Constitutional checks, i. 56
  Constitution of 1799, prohibition against First Consul's military leadership, ii. 106
  Consulate, proposed formation of a, ii. 69: a disgnised mon-

- Consulate, proposed formation of a, ii. 69: a disguised mon-
- arcoy, iv. 23' Continental System, the, ii. 183, 242, 258; iii. 80-82, 125, 128, 153, 185, 192, 196, 201-215, 217, 220, 225, 231, 232, 236, 240, 245, 249, 250; iv. 15, 38, 47, 60, 242: England's policy against, iii.
- Copenhagen, hattle of, ii. 135: hombardment of, iii. 69, 79-81,

249, 250; iv. 15, 38, 47, 80, 222; Edgiand's policy egains, in. 81, 82
Copenhagen, hattle of, ii. 135; bombardment of, iii. 69, 79-81, 214
Coppet, Mme. de Staël's residence at, ii. 267; iii. 227
Corday, Charlotte, assassination of Marat, i. 138
Cordova, French capture and abandoument of, iii. 122
Corfit, N. proposes to seize, i. 277; France's jealous care of, ii. 21; Adn. Brueys ordered to, 42; Ulockade of, 46; Russian occupation of, 226, 228, 229, 262; French occupation of, iii. 81, 88, 89; English naval watch on, 90; proposed expedition to Egypt from, 91
Corrizier, wounded at Acre, ii. 52
Cornwallis, Lord Charles, character, ii. 168; negotintes the treaty of Amiens, 168
Corneggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Correggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 225, 228
Corrieggio, A. A., plunder of the works of, i. 228, 200; N. slove for, residences in, schemes concerning, and peculiar relations for 6, 511, 41, 65, 66, 69, 89, 96, 119-123, 155, 206, 248, 260; N. slove for, 7, 26, 27, 30, 42, 45-47, 49, 69, 62, 66, 66, 74, 93-99, 107-110, 124-125, 138, 150, 151, 153, 205, 206; ii. 104, 161; Montesquire Briska, 81, 50, 151, 153, 205, 206; iii. 104, 161; Montesquire Briska, 81, 50, 151, 153, 205, 206; iii

Corsica - continued.

Corsica — continued.
cause of, 119: N. appointed inspector-general of artillery for, 119: new commissioners sent to, 121: the Buonapartes leavo, 123: success of revolt against the Convention, 129: Convention commission for, 131: N.'s expedition against, 139, 162, 153, 155: employment of refugees from, 149: Salicetti Ilaaned for insurrection in, 151: wretched internal plicht, 154: charges against refugees from, 156: N.'s last visit to, if. 57
Corsican Feuillants, the, i. 95
Corso, Cape, Paoli's landing at, i. 68
Corts, the town of, i. 4: removal of scat of government from, 11: Carlo Buonaparte at, 13-15: a Paolist center, 62: Joseph Buonaparte at, 94: N. ordered to, 109, 120: meeting between Paoli and N. at, 112: N. a suspect at, 120
Corsand, the junta of, iii. 123: Moore's retreat to, and death at, 145, 147: England's tardiness at, 149
Cossacks, military achievements of, iii. 14, 15, 19, 23: harass the retreating French army, iv. 4, 6: relieve Hamburg, 33: in battle of Leipsie, 71: in the campaign of 1814, 95: advaace to Nemours and Fontainebleau, 163: at the battle of Laon, 108: fears of, in Paris, 130
Costa, letter from N. to, i. 100, 110: letter from Lucien to, 110
Council of Juniors, the, i. 161
Council of Juniors, the, i. 44
"Council of State, the, i. 44
"Council of London, publishes Spanish manifesto of N., 163.

- functions, iii. 68 "Count of Essex," the, i. 44 "Courier," the London, publishes Spanish manifesto of N., ili.
- 915
- 217
  Constou, Abbé, attends Carlo Bnonaparte's deathbed, i. 32
  Coxe's "Travels in Switzerland," N.'s study of, 1. 85
  Cracow, ceded to the grand duchy of Warsaw, iii. 184: Schwarzeuberg seeks shelter in, iv. 27
  Crancé, Dubois de, i. 133: reorganization of the Freuch armies by 198: organizes national conscription, 232
  Craone, battle of, iv. 107
  Creane, withdrawal of the Austrians from Milan to, ii. 113
  Craone, duction cormuting in it. 262: not of odd to Energy

- Croatia, Austrian recruiting in, i. 236: part of, ceded to France,

- Groatia, Austran recruiting in, i. 236: part of, ceded to France, iii. 134
  Gromwell, Ollver, N. disclaims the role of, ii. 77, 80: the need of a second, io France, 81: N. compared with, 148
  Grostradt, Alexaoder fears for, iii. 80
  Grostendorf, military operations near, iv. 70
  Grusades, the, ii. 31
  Guneo, associated with N. in Corsica, i. 62
  Gustine, Gen. A. P., occupies Frankfort, i. 115: defeat of, 115
  Gyprus, Sir Sidney Smith puts into, ii. 56
  "Gyrus," by Chénier, ii. 225
  Czarloryski, A. G., memoirs of, ii. 228: Russian minister of foreign affairs, 228: on the Russian policy in 1805, 246: friendship with Alexander I., iii, 9, 235; iv. 20: on the hereditary disease of the Romanoffs, iii. 44: retirement of, 235: schemes in regard to restoration of Poland, 235, 240; iv. 20: transfers faith from Alexander to N., iii. 240
  Czernicheff, Count, aide-de-camp to Alexander I., iii. 250: N. offers terms to, 250

D

- D Dagobert, N. in the iron chair of, ii. 209 Dalberg, Architshop, scheme to unify the German Church, ii. 259, 260: Prince-Primate, 260: at the Erfurt conference, iii. 133: receives Ratishon in exchange for Frankfort principality, 204: his territory erected into a grand duchy for Eugene, 244: estimate of N.'s influence, 245: characterization of Talleyrand, iv. 130: at peace council in Paris, 134: member of the executive commission, 134, 135: attainted, 165 Dalmatia, ceded to Austria at Leoben, i. 271: alterations of houndarise near, ii. 14: ceded by Austria to Italy, 262: crea-tion of hereditary duchy of, 255: assigned by N. to Italy, 262: crea-tion of hereditary duchy of, 275: assigned by N. to Italy, 262: N. offers to exchange, iii. 24: French dominion recognized at Tilsit, 47: Soult created duke of, 70 (see SOULT): French strength in, 91: proposed surrender of, to Austria, iv. 38 Dalrymple, Sir H, W., retired from active service, iii. 144 Damascus, garrisen of El Arish ordered to, ii. 47: reinforce-meots for Acre from, 48 Dauican, Auguste, royalist leader, i. 178: the Thirteenth Ven-

- Damascus, garrison of El Arish ordered to, it. 47; Feinforcements for Acre from, 48
  Danican, Auguste, royalist leader, i. 178: the Thirteenth Vendémiaire, 181
  Danilevsky, on the allies reaching Paris, iv. 131
  Danton, G. J., becomes head of the Jacoblu commune, i. 110: member of the National Convention, 111: dictator of France, 115: overawes the Girondists, 133: murder of, 148
  Dantzic, military movements near, iii. 13, 15, 17: siege of, 17, 23: surreader of, 24, 29: freedom restored to, 99: independence of, 61: Lefebvre created Duke of, 71 (see LEFEEVRE): Davout ordered to hold, 204: French military stores in, 255: Murat's position at, untenable, iv. 21: measures for the relief of, 28: held by the French, 33: Rapp commanding at, 34: proposed new capital for Prussia, 39: proposed Idvision of the domain of, 39: proposed cession of, to Frussia, 44, 49
  Dantext to graving operations on, 233, 235, 236; iii. 5, 85, 91, 93, 127, 155, 158, 160, 163, 164, 167-169, 171, 175, 239: Mack essays to cross at Günzburg, ii. 235: the French march from the Rhine to, 242: annihilation of Mortler on, 243: N.'s line of retreat to, 276:

- Danuhe River, the continued. Russian successes on the lower, ill. 23: N. plans redistribution of territories on, 41: proposed Russian acquisitions on, 48: topographical features, 168: the crossing at Lobau, 168, 169, 171, 175: defeat of Russians by Turks on, 191: Russia warned not to cross, 230: Russian successes on, 243: withdrawal of Russian troops from, 244: effect of the rising of, at Essling, iv 19
- IV. 19
   Danubian Principalities, preposed partition of, iii, 44: Alexander's ambition to acquire, 85, 87, 92, 93; N. offers to exchange them for Silesia, 86, 87, 90. See also MOLDAVIA; WALLACHIA
   Dardanelles, the, Alexander I.'s scheme for scizing, ii. 228
   Darmagnac, Gen., invades Navarre, iii. 105; seizes Pampiona, 105

- Darmagnac, Gen., invades Navarre, in. 105; serzes rampiona, 105
  Darmstadt, relations with Russia, il. 170; strengthening of, 170; quota of men, 261
  Daru, P. A. N., advises wintering in Moseow, ili. 267
  Daunou, P. C. F., dreads a new Terror, ii. 64; ideas of government, 85; named as consul, 86; member of the tribunate, 166; attempt to admit him to the senate, 156; upholds Machiavelli's theses concerning the Church of Rome, iii. 201
  Dauphiny, the peasantry of, i. 79-81; N. travels in, 79; revolutionary feeling among the clergy of, 81, 87; anti-royalist feeling ia, iv. 163
  David, Abbé, arcst of, ii. 189
  David, Machi, 236; defeats Vanbois, 236, 237, 240; retreats to the Tyrol, 230; defeats Vanbois, 236, 237, 240; retreats to the Tyrol, 240
  Davout, Gen. L. N., service in Egypt, ii. 36, 207; service in the

- Davidowich, Gen. P., dctated at Koverede, 1. 234, 255: strength in the Tyrol, 240
  Davout, Gen. L. N., service in Egypt, ii. 36, 207: service in the Army of England, 185: created marshal, 207: character, 234; iii. 75: watches the Russian army, ii. 235: in battle of Ansterlitz, 542, 547, 249, 250: at Nordhalben, 278: at Naumburg, 280: in battle of Jéna, 280-283: captures Wittenberg, iii. 2: sacks Poland, 4: at Golynin, 12: strength in Poland, 13: in the Eylau campaign, 17, 19-21: in battle of Ileifsberg, 29, 30: pursues Lestocq from Friedland, 32-34: created Duke of Anerstädt, 171: income, 71: N.'s opinion of, 75: recalled from Poland to Silesia, 129: commanding in Saxony, 154: Archduke Charles plans to attack, 154: his command in the fifth Austrian war, 157: forces in Stettin, Bayreuth, Hanover, and Magdeburg, 157: to concentrate at Bamberg, 158: commanding on the Isar, 159: Archduke Charles marches against, 159: to concentrate at lagolstadt, 159-161: movements before Ratisbon, 161: on the Laber, 161: in battle of Ecknühl, 162: forces back Archduko Charles, 162: battles of Aspern and Essling, 171, 172: battle of Wagran, 177, 178: ordered to hold Baltic positions, 204: revenue of, 226: occupies Swedish Pomerania, 244: letter from N., 246: strength, March, 1812, 245: reproved for his reports of Prussia, 248: slowness of action at opening of the Russian campaign, 254: drives Bagration enstward, 256: battle of Borodino, 261: on the retrest from Moscow, iv. 1, 2, 5: battle of Wagrang, 254: drives Bagration enstward, 256: battle of Borodino, 261: on the retrest from Moscow, iv. 1, 2, 5: battle of Wagrang, 254: drives Bagration enstward, 256: battle of Borodino, 261: on the retrest from Moscow, iv. 1, 2, 5: battle of Wagrang, 254: drives Bagration enstward, 256: battle of Borodino, 261: on the setsiance, 42: to threaten Berlin, 51: N.'s instructions to, 54: mediocrity of his troops, 64: besieged in Hanburg, 90: invited to join in insurrection, 160: member of N.'s use of force, 207
  "Day of the

  - against, 61

- Debry, J. A. J., N. 8 Intendsmip with, 1. 16; in. 61: member of Congress of Rastat, 61: wounded at Rastatt, 61: accusations against, 61
  De Bussy, in the La Fère regiment, iv. 107: gives N. worthless information at Craonne, 107
  Décadi, decadence of the festival, ii. 165
  Decrès, Adm., French minister of marine, ii. 185: letter from N., Sept. 13, 1805, 185: warns N. against his career of conquest, iii. 247: member of N.'s new cabinet, iv. 167
  Defermon J., ii. 137
  Dego, battle of, i. 213, 215, 216; iv. 97
  Delender, Bincher retreats behind the, iv. 55
  Delacroix, French minister of foreign affairs, i. 279: French agent in the Netherlands, ii. 26
  Demmagogues, disgust with, in France, ii. 88
  De Maistre, N. refutes his theory of social order, iii. 72, 73: on the supineness of Pins VII., 202
  Democracy, a pure, i. 72, 244: Germany's opposition to, 146: its good and bad qualities, iv. 233
  Denfort, royalist intrigues of, iv. 129
  Demmerial & against England, 58: Eogland offers to seize her fields the distin, 59: yields to England, 59: huniliation of, 59: vassalage to France, 59, 214: England, 58: bogland offers to seize her fields of Norway, Schleswig, and Holstin, 59: yields to England, 59: huniliation of, 59: vassalage to France, 59, 214: England seeks to coaciliate, 80: bombardment of Copenhagen, 81: Alexander I. demands reparation for, 81: N. urges Englands to Gentaries, 124: seizure of American ships by, 211: hostility to Eogland, 214: holds Norway, 214, 215: friendly to France, 422: despatches troops to Hamburg, iv. 37: shifts her assistance from Russia to France, 37: strengthening the alliance between France and, 48
  Dennewitz, battle of, iv. 63, 64

Denonewitz, battle of, iv. 63, 64 Denon, D. V., accompanies N. on his return from Alexandria, ii. 56

Departmental list, the, il. 84

- 276 JND
  9.276 JND
  9.276 JND
  9.276 JND
  9.276 JND
  9.276 JND
  9.277 JND
  9.277 JND
  9.277 JND
  9.277 JND
  9.277 JND
  9.277 JND
  9.278 JND
  9.27

a new, 1V. 207 Divine right, kings by, ii. 264: abolition of, in France, iv. 227 Divorce, N's share in codifying the law of, ii. 143: under the Code, 144: N's advocacy of easy, 164 Dnieper River, military operations on the, iii. 240, 254, 256, 257, 2500 ir.

- Dnieper River, military operations on the, iii. 240, 254, 256, 257, 259; iv. 6
  Dniester River, Turkish movements on the, iii. 5
  Doctoroff, Gen., in battle of Austerlitz, ii. 250: in hattle of Eylan, iii. 19
  Dôlge, publications of N.'s literary work at, i. 82
  Dolgoruki, Princes, nission from Alexander I. to N., ii. 247
  Dolgoruki, Princess, on N.'s receptions, ii. 128
  Dôlmination, the power of, iv. 221
  Domn d'Ossola, Bethencourt near, ii. 113
  Don, River, pronosed Indian expeditions via, ii. 134; the Cos-

- Dong River, proposed Indian expeditioos via, ii. 134: the Cos-aacks of the, iii. 14 Donaueschingen, the Austrian headquarters at, ii. 105: aban-doned by Kray, 108 Donauworth, military movements near, fii. 158: N. reaches, 150.
- 159
  Donzelot, Gen. F. X., in battle of Waterloo, iv. 196, 197, 202, 203
  Dora Baltea River, Austrian force on the, ii. 111
  Dora Ridaria River, Austrian force on the, ii. 111
  Dora Ridaria River, Austrian force on the, ii. 111
  Dora Ridaria River, Austrian force on the, ii. 111
  Dora Ridaria River, Austrian force on the, ii. 111
  Dora Ridaria River, Austrian force on the, ii. 111
  Dora Ridaria River, Austrian force on the, iii. 111
  Dora Ridaria River, Austrian force on the, iii. 111
  Dorothea, Empress-Dowager of Russia, disapproves N.'s proposed marriage to Anne, iii. 191: hatred of N., 191
  Douay, N. ordered to, i. 41, 42
  Doulevant, N. at, iv. 126, 128
  Doulevant, N. at, iv. 126
  Doumerc, Gen. J. P., moves from Sézanne against Blücher, iv. 95

- Dover, scheme of naval demonstration off, ii. 212 Drac, River, iv. 164

- Draft, use of, in France, ii. 64
  Drave, River, military movements on the, i. 268; iii. 163
  Dresden, death of Moreau before, ii. 191: N. at, iii. 55, 56; iv. 14, 25, 28, 39, 44, 45, 49, 55, 67, 59, 63, 65; Bernadotte to concentrate in, iii. 158; Saxon troops in, 158: N.'s strategy at, 167; seized by the Duke of Brnnswick, 181; meeting of the allied sovereigns at, 250, 251; the climax of the Napoleonic drama, 261; iv. 62: N.'s incognito journey through, 14; interview between N. and Metternich at, 25; interview between N. and Frederick Augustus at, 28; French forces at, 28; Engene to hold, 28; welcomes Alexander and Frederick William III., 32; discontent at military occupation, 32; retreat of the allies behind, 37; destruction and rebuilding of the bridges at, 37; French cocupation of, 37, 39; defense of, 51, 59, 63; held by Saint-Cyr, 55; French advance to Zittau from, 55; menaced by the allies, 56; battle of, 56-59, 63; demoralization of the army after, 69; N.'s mistakes after, 60, 61; N.'s physical aliments at, 61; N.'s successea at, 63; Schwarzenberg moves on, 63; Oudinod at, 65; Blucher advances on, 65; boy-soldiers at, 65; N.'s retreat from, 55, 57; N.'s celeme to hold, 67; Frederick's love fur, 68; French garrison in 68, 70; Maret's influence over N at, 100; N. acknowledges his mistake in not making peace at, 150
  Drissa, weakness of, iii. 255; Bagration establisbes communication.
- at, 150 Drissa, weakness of, iii. 255: Bagration establishes communica-tion with, 266 Drouot, Gen. A., in battle of Austerlitz, ii. 250: battle of Leipsic, iv. 71, 73: advises a return to Lorraine, 136: attach-ment to N., 137: strength after the surrender of Paris, 137: ac-companies N. to Elba, 149: advises against the escape from Uker Jos

- Markey H. 1., 10: avvises a return to Lorraine, 135: attachment to N., 137: strength after the surrender of Paris, 137: accompanies N. to Elba, 149: advises against the escape from Elba, 162
  Düben, N. at, iv. 68, 69
  Dubois, Gen., in battle of Waterloo, iv. 197
  Duclos's "Memoirs of the Reigns of Louis XIV. and Louis XV., " N.'s study of, i. 85
  Duero, River, military novements on the, iii. 123, 124, 222
  Durroene, ii. 137
  Duggommier, Gen. J. F., appointed commander-in-chief before Toulon, i. 135, 136: influence at Toulon, 137
  Duggommier, Gen. P. G., invades Spain, iii. 105: at Barceloos, 105: occupies Catalonia, 122: evacuates Catalonia, 122: besieged in Barcelona, 142: in hattle of Waterloo, iv. 199
  Dulaure's "History of the Nobility," N.'s study of, i. 85
  Dumouries, den. P. G., invades Spain, iii. 105: at Barceloos, 105: occupies Catalonia, 122: evacuates Catalonia, 123: besieged in Barcelona, 142: in hattle of Waterloo, iv. 199
  Dulaure's "History of the Nobility," N.'s study of, i. 85
  Dumouriez, Charles F., takes part in the computer of Corsica, i. 65' on the northeastern frontier, 108: wins battle of Jemmapse, 115: defection of, 117: correspondence with Nelson, ii. 193: suspected of royalist plots, 193, 195
  Düncan, Adm. Adam, wins the battle of Camperdown, ii. 25
  Duncan, Adm. Adam, wins the battle of Camperdown, ii. 25
  Duncan, Adm. Adam, wins the battle of Camperdown, ii. 26
  Dunnott, Gen. L., afiaaced to Désirée Clay, ii. 26, 29: killed at Kome, 26
  Dupont, Gen. Pierre, in battle of Friedland, iii. 31: ordered to invade Spain, 101, 102: invades Spain, 105: advances on Andelin

- Bone, 20 Dupont, Gen. Pierre, in battle of Friedland, iii. 31: ordered to in-vade Spain, 101, 102: invades Spain, 105: advances on Andalu-sia, 122: holds the Tagus, 122: capitulates at Baylen, 122, 124, 130
- and the set of lag as, the completion of Depicts, the term of the set of the se

- Düsseldorf, Jourdan's army at, i. 209: Jourdan croases the Rhine at, 235
  Dutch Flanders, ceded to France, i. 164
  Duteil, N.'s acquaintance with, i. 49: N. seeks ald from, 90: grants N. permission to sail for Corsica, 106
  Duteil, Gen. J., general of artillery before Toulon, l. 136: ou N.'s ability, 137
  Dutheil, N. F., devises plan of campaign for Austria and Eug-land, i. 206
  Dutot, takes N.'s place in the West, l. 175
  Duval's "William the Conqueror," ii. 225
  Duvernet's "History of the Sorbonne," N.'s study of, l. 85
  Dwina, River, fortifactions on the, ii. 240: military movements on the, 255, 256, 259; iv. 2, 4
  Dyle, River, military movements on the, iv. 186, 188

Ε

- East, the, N.'s attention turned toward, i. 40: N.'s comparison of Europe with, ii. 31: N.'s dreams of empire in, see NAPO-LEON
- East Friesland, scheme to incorporate it with France, ili. 204 East Galicia, part of, ceded to Warsaw, ili. 184

East India Company, lends the island of St. Helena to the gev-

East India Company, lends the island of St. Helena to the gev-erament, iv. 213 East Indies, England watches French policy concerning, il. 171 East Prussia, Ney moves on, ili, 14 Ebelsberg, hattle of, ili, 164 Ebrington, Lord, N.'s characterization of Cornwallis to, il. 168: N.'s declaration to, concerning the Dne d'Enghien, 199 Ebro, River, military movements on, ili, 165, 123, 124, 132: pro-posed exchange of territory on, 105: boundary of French an-nexed territory, 213 Ecclesiastical princes, N. on the status of, il. 18 Ecclesiastical principalities, secularization of, on the Rhine, ii, 125, 126

- Ecclesiastical principalities, sectialization of, on the failing, ii, 125, 126 Ecclesiasticism, N.'s confusion of ideas concerning, i. 39 Eckmühl, the campaign of, iii. 157 et seq. Education, demands for, in Corsica, i. 62 : N.'s interest in, sys-tem and reforms of, 103 ; ii. 144–147, 203, 264 ; iii. 28, 72–74 ; iv.

Eckmühl, the campaign of, iii. 157 et seq.
Education, demands for, in Corsica, i. 62: N.'s interest in, system and reforms of, 103; ii. 144-147, 203, 264; iii. 28, 72-74; iv. 230
Egalité, Phillip, member of the National Convention, i. 111
Egk, Mme., guardias of the Beauharnais children, i. 180
Egypt, N.'s plans of conquest ji. 21; ii. 11, 22, 131-36, 184; iii. 85; scandals of Maneluke administration in, ii. 11, 32; if. et al. 21, 31-36, 184; iii. 85; scandals of the expedition, 36; plunder of, 36-38, 45; departure of expedition from Toulon, 37; character of the population, 38-41; the Manuelukes, 40; terrors of the campaign, 40, 41; the army disheartened, 41; Nelson follows the French fleet to, 42; N.'s rule in, 44, 45; N.'s religious masquerading in, 44, 45; establishment of an Institute in, 45; dearth of news from France, Feb, 1709, 49; N. given leave to remain in, 49; importance of A, 's conquering, 56; Turkish preparations for the relief of, 51; attempted risings in, 52; Adn. Bruix sent to relieve the army in, 55; N. relurns from, 65-38; the colonial idea, 66; the turningpoint of success in, 56; Kléber prepares to evacute, 94; Desaix recalled from, 116; despatch sin After of the S1; question of Refers administration in, 123; assassination of Kléber, 135; French diasters in, 135; restored to Turkey, 135; England to evacuate, 168; Turkey's suzerainty over, 168; question of restablishing French colonial idea, 52; M.'s fue tactics of the army in, indepted in Russia, in 181, 234, 236; the tactics of the army in, indepted in Russia, in 181, 234, 236; the tactics of the army in, indepted in Russia, in 181, 234, 236; the tactics of the army in, indepted in Russia, in 21; N.'s desertion of the army in, indepted in Russia, in 21; N.'s desertion of the army in, indepted in Russia, in 134, 234, 236; the tactics of the army in, indepted in Russia, in 134, 234, 236; the tactics of the army in, indepted in Russia, in 134, 234, 236; the tactics of the army in, indepted in Russia,

- dary of a neutral zone, 43: exhaustion of the French on, 64: French garrisons on, 76 Elbing, military movements near, iii. 14, 17 Elchingen, Ney created Duke of, iii. 71. See NEX "Electore Affinities," iii. 134 Electoreal Colleges, ii. 159 Elitot, Sir Gilbert, viceroy of Corsica, i. 154 Elitott, killed at Arcole, i. 246 Elsfleth, escape of the Black Legion to, iii. 181 Elsfleth, escape of the Black Legion to, iii. 181 Elsfleth, River, the, military operations on, iv. 35, 36, 65, 70-72, 75

- Emigration, the, i. 67, 80, 87, 90, 160, 160
  Emptre, M. French, use of the term, it. 360
  Emptre, M. Bernch, use of the term, it. 166
  Emptre, M. Bernch, Use of the term, it. 165, 164–175
  Engen, halte of, it. 167, 161, 927, 111, 857, 187, 1227, innumrchical schemen and plots of, it. 163, 163, 192–194; character, 1227, innumrchical schemen and plots of, it. 163, 163, 192–194; character, 1227, innumrchical schemen and plots of, it. 163, 163, 192–194; character, 1227, innumrchical schemen and the schemen and the

England

England — continued.
occupation of Alexandria, 179: suspects France's war preparations, 179, 180; N.* treatment of her representative, 179: the proval message of March 8, 1805, 190: the milital called out, March 10, 1803, 180, diplomatic rupture with Prome, 182: publication of Lord Whitworth's despatches in, 182: declares war against France, May 15, 1805, 182: declares war against France, May 15, 1805, 182: declares the state of the

England — continued.
States declares war against, 16: assassination of Mr. Perceval, 16: negotiates treaty between Russia and Spain, July, 1812, 26: in grand Enropean coalition against N., 27: Metternich's negotiations with, 29: returns to Fitt's policy, 32: abandons Hanoverian schences, 32: proposal to bleed her colonies, 38: proposed isolation oi, 38: the alligs' reliance on, 43: guarantees a war loan, 45: treaty with Prussia, June 14, 1813, 45: treaty with Russia, June 16, 1813, 45: issnes paper money, 45: to be kept out of the Confluental peace, 46: Metternich's proposed that she continue the war, 47: conmercial agreement with Sweden, 50: influence in Holland, 72, 80, 99: determination to crush France, 73: at the Congress of Frankfort, 80: proposal that she hand back French colories, 80: "maritime rights," 80, 83: prolongation of the war in Spain, 87: desire to establish equilibrium in Europe, 99: signs freaty of Chaumont, 166: effect of the triple alliance on, 166: troops occupy Bordeaux, 114: party to the treaty of Fontainelleau (April, 1814), 148: distinction in, between the two Napoleons, 148: N. contemplates taking refuge in, 150: N.'s culogy of her civilization and chivalry, 153: negotiates secret treaty with Austria and France, 157: regency in, 168: lack of suitable leaders in, 168: her dynastic alliances, 168, 169: effects of N.'s restoration on, 169: member of the Vienna Coalition, 170: campaign of Waterloo, 174-176: losses at Waterloo, 205: clains the glory of annihilating N., 205: watches the harbor of Rochefort, 208, 209: N. throws himself on the generosity of 200, 201: reasons for N.'s surrender to, 210, 211, 214: asylum for political refugees, 211: intolerance of death penalty for political refugees, 212: intolerance of death penalty for political refugees, 213: witholerance of death penalty for seizing 213: Villeneuve ordered to, 230: 435: wars with the funce, 233: 234: N.'s struggles with, 245: wars with the funce, 233: 241, N.'s struggles with, 245: wars with the strue and of, 69 Enzersdorf, military operations near, iii. 169, 170, 176 Enzersfeld, military movements near, iii. 168 Epernay, captured by the allies, iv. 119 "Epochs of My Life," i. 42 Eppes, Marmont at, iv. 108 Equality, N.'s affectation of love for, ii. 20: one of the meanings of the word, 142 Equality of attranchin deered i. 57

Equality, N. s affectation of love for, if. 20: one of the meanings of the word, 142 Equality of citizenship, decreed, i. 57 Erasmus, tomb of, iv. 220 Erding, battle of, iii. 164 Erfurt, military movements near, ii. 276: the Duke of Bruns-wick at, 278: fall of, iii. 2: meeting of N. and Alexander at, 132 et seq.: treaty of, 137, 138, 182, 188, 191, 239: N.'s mala-droitness at, 138: N.'s vacillation at, 140: the conference at, 130: Alexander redeems his promise made at, 182: offered to Alexander and refused by him, 220: the throne of, offered to the Duke of Oldenburg, 234: Alexander offers to exchange Oldenburg for, 249: French troops ordered to, 249: French forces at, iv. 28: N. goes to, 33: plan of winter quarters at, 67: Saxon and Bavarian troops at, 76: Murat deserts at, 90 Erlon, Gen. d', in the Waterloo campaign, iv. 174, 175, 185: hattle of Quarte Eras, 182-186: N.'s expression of indignation at Ney to, 186: battle of Waterloo, 196, 197, 200 Erskine, Lord, on England's attitude with regard to France, ii. 25

<sup>35</sup> Escoiguiz, Canon, tutor to Ferdinand VII., jii. 99: letter to N., Oct. 12, 1808, 99, 100: defends Ferdinand's position, 112: notified by N. of Ferdinand's deposition, 113, 114: infamy of, notified by X, of Ferdiband's deposition, 113, 114; infainly 61, 117

Escorial, Godoy's intrigues at the, iii. 100: Charles IV. a virtual prisoner in, 111
Escudier, J. F., commissioner of the National Convention, i. 131
Esda, River, military movements on the, iii. 146
Espagne, Gen. J. L. B., in battle of Aspern, iii. 170
Espinosa, deteat of Blake at, iii. 144
Essarts, Ledru des, evacnates Meaux, iv. 123: seduced by Marmont, 142
"Essen y on Revolutions" (Chateaubriand's), ii. 165, 166
Essen, Gen. H. H., in campaign of Eylan, iii. 168
Essenbach, military operations near, iii. 160
Essling, battle of, iii. 169-172, 174-176, 179: N. exposes himself at, 185: effect of rising of the river at, iv. 19
Essonne, River, military operations on the, iv. 136
Essonne, R., N. at, iv. 128: Marmont at, 142: Marmont's defection at, 144

Establishment of St. Louis, the female academy at St. Cyr, l.

Establishment of St. Louis, the female academy at St. Cyr, I. 107. See also Sr. Cyr.
Estates, the meetings at Versailles, i. 49, 56
Estates, the three, i. 22: in the seventeenth century, 55
Estates-General, meetings of the, i. 44, 45, 55, 56: fusion of the three hodies, 56: troops ordered to control the, 56
Esteptazy, Prince, at the marriage of Maria Louisa, iil. 197
Etoges, batle of, iv. 97: military movements near, 97, 119
Etruria, ereation of the kingdom of, ii. 152: death of King Louis, 149, 150: (iii. 57: exchanged for Louisiana, iii. 174: under French protection, 229: N. calls for alliance with, iii. 58: neutrality of, 56: scheme to incorporate in Italy, 56: proposal

- Etruria continued, that Lucien take the crown of, 102: abdication of the queen regent, 102: incorporated into the kingdom of Italy, 102: the crown offcred to Ferdinand VII., 114: N.'s disposition of, 128 Ettenheim, residence of the Duc d'Enghien at, ii. 192-194: re-puted emigrant conspiracy at, 103: Ordener's expedition to, 194; arrest of the Duc d'Enghien at, 194: Caulaincourt's mis-sion to, iii. 86

<text><text><text><text><text><text>

F

- Family relations, under the Code, ii. 144
  Fanaticism, iv. 231, 232
  Fauvelet, M.'s school friend, i. 104
  Faypoult, G. C., French political agent in Genoa, ii. 7
  Feitre, creation of hereditary duchy of, ii. 255: Clarke created Duke of, iii. 71. See CLARKE

Feraud, murder of, 1, 168 Ferdinand, Archduke, commanding Austrian army in Ger-manding II. Solar: escapes into Bohenia, 235; at Ulm, 235; com-manding In Bohenia, 245; invades Poland and captures War-saw, i65; on the way to Charles's assistance, 174 Ferdinand of Parma, ii. 132 Ferdinand I, King of Naples, ii. 229; lii. 242. See also FER-DIAND IV.

- Ferdinand IV., Ring of Naples, R. 229; R. 229; R. 229; See also FERDINARD IV.
  Ferdinand IV., position in 1797, J. 260; evacuates the Papal States, 131; compelled to restore plunder, 131
  Ferdinand VI. (see also ASTURIAS, PRINCE oF), letters to N., iii, 108, 112, 116; seeks N.'s favor, 108, 117; enters Madrid, 109; doubtful recognition of his throne, 110; hinted order that he go to Bayonne, 111, 112; nt Vitoria, 112; revulsion of Spanish feeling against, 112; goes to Bayonne, 112; 113; N.'s attitude toward, 112-118; orders for his arrest, 113; deposed, 113-115; character, 114, 116, 117; offers to surrender his grown, 114; the crown of Etroria oftered to, 114; trial at Bayonne, 114; popularity in Spaha, 114, 121; pension and grant to, 115; in virtual custody of Talleyrand, 115, 116; cowed into submission, 115, 118; asks N.'s adoption and permission to appear at court, 200; release of, iv. 87, 88; relapses into absolutism and ecclessinsticism, 88 insticism
- Fère-Champenolse, the Emperor at. iv. 114: military move-
- Fere-champenoise, the Emperor at. iv. 114: multary move-ments near, 117: retreat of the French through, 123 Fermo, consolidated with the kingdom of Italy, iii. 94 Ferrara, the Pope prepares to recover, i. 245: new scheme of government for, 247: surrendered to France, 260: coded to Venice at Leoben, 271: incorporated in the Cissipine Republic,
- II. 14 Ferrol, reported junction of French and Spanish flects at, II. 230: blockade of, 231: Villeneuve's retreat to, 239: supposed Eng-lish schenes at, iii. 145, 146 Fersen, Count, essays to represent Sweden at Congress of Ras-tatt, ii. 18
- Persen, Count, essays to represent Sweden at Congress of Rastatt, ii. 18
  Fesch, Joseph, I. 15: childhood with N., 20: appointed to seminary at Aix, 22: N.'s correspondence with, 28, 41, 79, 80: enters the priesthood, 32: returns to Corsica, 59: literary collaborator with N., 67, 83: member of the constituent assembly at Orczza, 72: custodian of N.'s papers, 77: supplanted as head of family by N., 94: radical leader at Ajaccio, 108: leaves Corsica for Toulon, 123: in commissary department, 135: escapes arrest, 151: at Aix, 174: conforms to the civil constitution, ii. 132: archbishop of Lyons and cardinal, 165: refeaters the church, 165: Grand Almoner, 207: selects a physician for N., iv, 218
  Feudal system, in Corsica, i. 3, 7: remnants of the, 34: absorption of its power in the French crown, 52: abolition of, 67, 87, 114; ii. 144; iii. 70, 147; iv. 225: the oath of the Legion of Honor coucerning, ii. 159: N.'s influence on, iii. 245: French hatred of, iv. 81, 82
  Feuillants, the, i. 88: form a ministry, 102: fall of the ministry, 105

- Fichte, J. G., member of the reform party in Prussia, ii. 270: influence on Prussian regeneration, iii. 83 Fifth Regiment (French) N. offers himself to the bullets of the,
- v. 164

- iv. 164 Fifty-second Regiment (English), in battle of Waterloo, iv. 202 Figueras, captured by the French, iii. 105 Filangieri, Gaëtano, N.'s study of, i. 40 Finance, an occult doctrine of, iv. 25 Finisterre, Cape, Calder encounters Villeneuve off, ii. 230 Finkenstein, N. at, iii. 22, 23, 26: Persian envoy at, 23 Finland, Russian ambition to acquire, iii. 35, 80, 91, 131, 137: Russia's claims to, recognized at Tilsit. 47: acquired by Russia, 54, 182, 191, 205, 215, 236, 240: Russian invasion of, 92, 93: Russia threatoned with the loss of, 239: offered to Sweden by N. 243

- Russia threatoned with the loss of, 239: offered to Sweden by N, 243 Fioravente, Gen., captured at Verona, i. 273 First Consul, the other of the, ii. 85 Fischbach, additary movements neur, iv. 63 Fischbach, additary movements neur, iv. 63 Fismes, N. aims to strike the Prussians at, iv. 106: Marmont and Mor-tier at, 119: Marmont retreats to, 123 Fitz-James, Edward, royalist intrigues of, iv. 129 Fiurne, reoccupied by Austria, i. 268: seized by N., 268: N. pro-poses to cede, iv. 49 Five Hundred, the, i. 161: their representation of public senti-ment, ii. 1: inquiry in, ss to N.'s independence, 2: its mem-bers proseribed, 5: Jacobin majority in, 64, 66: Bonapartes among, 65: Jancien Bonaparte elected president, 66, 72: N. at the meetings of, 18th and 19th Brumaire, 72, 76-81: counter-plots against N. anong, 74: opposition by, 75-80: neeting of Bonapartist members, 64: rewards among, for complacency, 84
- Reposition of inclusivity of retwards analysis for completingly, 84
  Flahaut, Gen. A. C. J., sent to seek Marmont's advice, iv. 135: advises a return to Lorraine, 136: bearer of despatch from N. to Ney, 185
  Flanders, N. in, i. 41. 42: N.'s journey to, iii. 237. See AUSTRIAN NETHERLANDS: EATAVIAN REPUBLIC; DUTCH FLANDERS: HOLLAND: NETHERLANDS
  Fleurus, battle of, i. 163: Jourdan's victory at, ii. 206: military operations near, iv. 176-178, 181: N. at, 181, 185
  Florence, the Buonaparte family in, i. 12, 14, 22, 23, 41: position in the French empire, iii. 214: sends deputation to Paris, iv. 17
  Flushing, Holland's indemnity for, ii. 102: English capture of, iii. 182: N. builds ships at, 183

- Fombio, battle of, i. 218
  Fontainebleau, Pius VII. at, ii. 218: treaty of, iii. 69: social vices at, 75: treaty of (Oct. 10, 1807), 84: N.'s court at, 87, 489, 230: diplomatic negotiations at, 94: treaty of (Oct. 28, 1807), for partition of Portugal, 95, 96, 104, 105, 116, 118: N.'s harsh treatment of Josephine at, 139: imprisonment of Pius VII. at, 187; iv. 15, 25; 26: the decree (of Oct. 18, 1810), iii. 214: the Concordat of, iv. 26, 27: military movements near, 100, 103, 126: N. at, 128, 136; 166: N. reviews the Guard at, 136, 137: treasonable utterances of the marshals at, 137, 138: scene of A.'s abd(cation, 139, 140; concol of war at, 144: treaty of (April, 1814), 148, 150, 151, 153, 155-157, 162: N. leaves, for Elba, 150
  Fontanes, Marquis de, oration on Washington by, ii: 97, 98: retires from presidency of the senate, iii. 225: grand maater of the university, 225
  Fontenaye, Mme. de, i. 190. See also TALLIEN, MME.

- 1814), 148, 150, 151, 153, 155-157, 162: N. leaves, for Elba, 150
  Fontanes, Marquis de, oration on Washington by, ii. 97, 98: retires from presidency of the senate, iii. 225: grand master of the university, 225
  Fontenaye, Mme. de, i. 190. See also TALLIEN, MME.
  Forchheim, N.'s base, ii. 275, 276
  Forez Regiment, the, i. 81
  Fortfait, F. A. L., Secretary of the Navy, ii. 87
  Förstgen, military operations near, iv. 65
  Fort Carre, N.'s confinement in, i. 150-162
  Fort Luco, fires on French ship at Porto di Lido, I. 273, 276
  Fort Luco, fires on French ship at Porto di Lido, I. 273, 276
  Fort Mulgrave, capture of, i. 136
  Fouché, Joseph, describes atrocities at Toulon, i. 137: opposes
  Robespierre, 148: Minister of Police, ii. 63, 206, 267: joins the Bouspartist ranks, 72: detection of plots by, 74: N. s confidence in, 92: attitude toward the conspirators of Nivõse, 154, 155: usspected of Jacobinism, 155: disgraced, degraded, and banished, 155, 177; iii. 199, 211: character, ii. 177; iii. 149, 195, 204, 208; iv. 169: instigates Moreau's letter to N., ii. 191: urgea action azainst Bourbon plotters, 194: ordered to supervise correspondence from the army, ii. 27: created Duke of Otranto, 71: licenses vice in Faris, 76: whips in the nobility to the imperial cont, 76: favors Ferdinand VIL, 99, 100: share in the matter of Josephine's divorce, 139, 140: raises national guards for service in the Netherlanda, 183: on the second marriage of N., 195: advocates alliance with Russia, 195: nember of extraordinary council on N.'s second marriage, 195: raises troops to repel the Walcheren expedition, 195: the superserviceable Mephistopheles of the empire, 206: intervenes in Holland's negotiations with England, 208: enclish-Dutch conspiracy, 211: returns from exile in Italy, 247, 248: menorializes against war, 248: warns N. of the iate of Charles XIL, 248: recalled to active service, iv, 48: double intrigues of, 152: nenther

- of, 259: upholds the claims of existing sovereignties in Europe, 261: compelled to adopt Pitt's program, 262: death, 262; iii. 41
  Foy, Gen, M. S., Masséna's envoy to Paris, iii. 220, 221: brings orders for reinforcements, 221: in the Waterloo campaign, iv. 175: battle of Waterloo, 195
  France, convention with Genoa regarding Corsica, i. 6, 8: emplation of England, 9: her colonial ambitions, possessions, and losses, 9, 279; ii. 2, 153, 174, 179; iii. 48, 69; iv. 244: precedent for her aid to American colonies, i. 10: relation of the army to the throne, 34: N. studies her history and politics, 40, 49, 103: N. 's bitterness against, 41, 42, 44, 47, 66, 75, 76: outbreak of the Revolution of 1789 in, 52 et seq.: social conditions and enstoms, the domestic relations, etc. 62-57, 114, 158, 173; iii. 30, 127, 129, 130, 137, 144, 203; iii. 63, 65-71, 73, 125; iv. 24, 25, 27, 85, 229, 231, 244: financial troubles, issues of paper money, financial policies and reforms, i. 54, 172, 198; ii. 32, 88, 89, 120, 140, 141, 148, 203, 265, 266; iii. 27, 61, 62, 65, 153, 225, 232; iv. 24, 25, 229, 29, 261, 244: financial troubles, issues of paper money, financial policies and reforms, i. 54, 172, 198; ii. 32, 88, 89, 120, 140, 141, 148, 203, 265, 266; iii. 27, 61, 62, 65, 153, 225, 232; iv. 24, 25, 299; declared a limited monarchy, i. 55; the rise of popular government, 57: destruction of feudalism, 67; iii. 70, 245: adoption of the tricolor, i. 57: the end of absolutism, 64: the title and position of the king, 64, 86, 91: Corsica and Navarre joined to, 65: disorganization of the army, 79: changes in, 79-81: patriotisms, spirit of mational unity, military enthneistam, etc., 79, 89, 91, 92, 116, 158-160, 198; ii. 96, 103, 145, 204; iii. 13, 153, 246, 246; iv. 22, 23, 104, 175: the first stage of transformation in, i. 86 famine, 86: the problem of government, 86-88, 91, 92, 92, 92, 91, 92, 116, 158-160, 198; ii. 96, 103, 145, 204; iii. 13, 153, 246, 246; iv. 22, 23, 104, 175: the first stage of transformatio

France — continued.
establishment of an executive council, 111: political parties, 111: the republican calendar, 111; ii 165, 222, 222; it defines wara against Eukabed, 116: 5, 25: personal relations with and infinence on the backs control in the intervence of the backs control in the intervence of the backs control intervence of the back control i

France - continued.

<text><text><text><text>

- Franconia, treaty with France, 1796, i. 279: French occupation of, ii. 262; iii. 129: the campaign in, 18: exploits of the Black Legion in, 180, 181
- Legion in, 180, 181 Frankfort on the Main, occupied by Custine, i. 115: member of the Confederation of the Ehine, ii. 260: French demonstra-tions near, 276: the principality transferred from Dalherg to Prince Eugène, iii. 204: furnishes new levies, iv. 28: parley of the allies at, 79-83, 99, 101: N. adheres to the proposals of, 101, view of the statement of the statement of the proposals of the proposa 103.105

- the antes at, 19-53, 55, 101. 14. anteres to the proposals 61, 101, 103, 105
  Frasmes, military operations at, iv. 179, 184, 187
  Frederick VI., signs treaty of Fontainebleau, iii. 59: hopes to acquire Sweden, 214: assi-ts in the Continental System, 214
  Frederick August I., Elector of Saxony, accepts French terms after Jena, iii. 7: proposed exchange of Poland for Suxony. 44: made king of Saxony, 48: acquires the grand duchy of Warsaw, 48: interview with X, at Dresden, iv. 25: peculiar relations toward X, 14, 28, 29, 38: offers his troops to Anstria, 32: difficult position of, 32: declares himself favorable to France, 37: love for his capital, 68: sent prisoner to Berlin, 75: released by X. from his engagements, 78

282 JND
Prederick the Great, opinion of Paoli, i. 6: defeats Austria, 197: has military genins and principles of warfare, 210, 292, 242; ii. 277.4; iv. 234, 235: contrasted with N., i 210, 242; ii. 177: attitude toward Austria, 27: statue at the Tuileries, 97: territorial acquisitions, 208: N.'s visit to, and spoliation of the tomb of, iii, 3: self-coronation, 36: end of his system, 33: N. repudiates the military ideas of, 120: N.'s analysis of the wars of, 217: N.'s study of, 234
Prederick William IL, his civil and military administration, ii. 268: school system of, 260.
Prederick William IL, Sieyes's mission to, ii. 28: N. offers the friendship of France to, 102: character and personality, 102, 253, 268, 274; iii. 7, 39, 40, 45, 49, 50, 53; iv. 54: refuses to make alliance with N., ii. 126: neutrality of, 126, 199, 232, 268: motive in joining the "armed neutrality," 126; N.'s threatening message to, 180: friendly to France, 22: letter to N., May, 1805, 228: swears friendship with Alexander I., 243: joins the Third Coalition, 242, 243: sigos away Prussian independence, 255: threatens to abdicate, 271: proposes the organization of a North German Confederation, 271, 272: mobilizes the army, 273; declares war, 274: at Naumburg, 276: reluctance for war, 778, 274: declares war, 274: at Naumburg, 276: reluctance for war, 778, 279: military blunders, 279: in hattle of Auerstadt, 282, 283; sues for peace, iii. 1: flight from Jéna, 1, 2: refuses to accept an armistice 7: desperation of, 7: preearions situation at Konigsberg, 15: N. opens negotiations with, 21: refuses at Songestation, 38: selecter at Jenned, 87: in need of comforts, 87: sequestration of his Westphalian estates, 126: friendly to decerpt an armistice, 7: desperation of, 7: preearions, 74: selected at hot, 51: residence at Jenned, 87: in need to confort, 87: sequestration of his Westphalian estates, 126: friendly to the System, 39: grief at death of the Queen, 30: mobilizes of the ward, 49: spoils intervice between N. a his visit to the Empress at Rambouillet, 150: system of pro-motion in the army, 175 Frederick William IV. (crown prince), a suitor for a Napoleo-nie princess, iii. 251: persuades York to rejoin Blucher, iv. 109 Frederick, king of Würtemberg, at the Erfurt conference, iii. 133: marries his daughter to Jerome Buonaparte, 257 Free trade, demand lor, in Corsica, i. 62 Freiburg, Due d'Enghien prepares to retire to, ii. 193: military movements near, ii. 280 Fréjug, N. lands at, ii. 57; iv. 153: N.'s triumphant progress to Paris from, ii. 58: place of N.'s embarkation changed from St. Tropez to, iv. 152, 153: arrival of N. at, 153 "French Citizen," the, change of name to "French Courier," iii. 72

Til. 72
"French Courier," the, iii. 72
"French Empire, the, the Emperor the head of, ii. 255: distinguished from France, 261
French Language, N.'s use of the, i. 44
Frère, Gen., success at Segovia, iii. 122
Fréron, Louis S., in siege of Toulon, i. 136, 137: bloodthirsty character, 137: N.'s friendship with, 139: opposes Robespierre, 148: influence among the Thermidorians, 151: social life in Paris, 173: a Dantonist, 173: ness influence in N.'s behalf, 175, 177: filtration with Pauline Buonaparte, 195: commissioner at Marsoilles, 195

Marseilles, 195
Friant, Gen., marches toward Ingelstadt, iii. 161: in hattle of Borodino, 261
Fribourg, the plundering of, ii. 27
Frick Valley, to be ceded to Anstria, ii. 27
Frick Valley, to be ceded to Anstria, ii. 27
Friedland, battle of, iii. 31-33: the eannaign reviewed, 32-35: Alexander's pliableness after, 266: hattle of, compared with that at Beresina, iv. 77
Friedrichstadt, tighting at, iv. 57
Friescharmont, the farms of, iv. 191: the French position at, 193
Friischarmont, the farms of, iv. 191: the French position at, 193
Friischarmont, the farms of, iv. 191: the French position at, 193
Friult, retreat of Wurmser's troops through i. 236: Quasdanownch's strength in, 236: Archeduke Charles in, 263: campaign in, 266 et seq.: ceded by Anstria to Italy, ii. 252: creation of hereditary duchy of, 255: Durace created Duke of, iii. 71. See DUR00

DURGO Fromentières, nuilitary operations near, iv. 97 Fructidor, the 18th of, ii. 5: N.'s responsibility for, 15, 21, 95: Talleyrand's views of, 23: counterstroke to, 63: annesty for the victims of, 87: ruptures negotiations at Lille, 95 Fructidorians, attitude toward N., ii. 15: the radical wing of the 20

Fuenterrabia, N. seeks information concerning, iil. 101 Fulton, Robert, tries to interest N. in steam, ii. 214 Fuentes de Onoro, battle of, ii. 221 Fusina, the French srmy at, i. 274

G

Gaëta, creation of hereditary dueby of, ii. 255

- Gaeta, creation of here-ditary duchy of, ii, 255 Gaffori, i. 61; fails to arouse enthusiasm in Ajaccio, 63 Galicia, Russian troops in, ii. 233: Austria's forces on the from-tier of, iii. 25; Russian invasion of, 182; N. demands cession of, 184: part of, ceded to Russia, 184: territory of, ceded to grand duchy of Warsaw, 184, 236, 237: Austria stipulates for acquisition of, 243: ceded to Austria, 251: Pointatowski com-manding in, iv. 34: Alexander proposes to exchange Alsace, for. 99 for 99

manding in, iv. 34: Alexander proposes to exchange Alsace, for, 99
Galitzin, Prince, in battle of Eylan, iii. 19, 20: invades Galicia, 182: letter from Alexander I., 237: Alexander's friendship with, 207: character, 267
Galilcan Church, the, N.'s study of, i. 86: s voluntary, ii. 132: N.'s threat to liberate it from Rome, 86: regulation of its relations with Rome, 201, 202: N.'s failure to change, iv. 229
Gallo, Antstrian plenipotentiary at Leoben, i. 270: Austrian pleoipotentiary in treaty of Campo Formio, ii. 13: briked by N., 13
Gambling, suppression of, iii. 75
Ganteaume, Adm., member of the council of state, ii. 100: commanding at Brest, 213: plan of naval operations for, 213: fails to run the blockade of Brest, 213
Garat, D. J., Bonapartist agent in Naples, ii. 61: royalist intrigues of, iv. 129
Garda, Lake, military operations near, i. 226, 232-234, 252-254
Garana, given to Elisa (Buonaparte), ii. 255
Gasparin, A. E., member of Covention commission for Corsica, i. 131

Garfagriania, giveo to Elias (Buonaparte), ii. 255
Gasparin, A. E., member of Convention commission for Corsica, i. 131
Gassendi, N.'s host in Nuits, i. 83
Gassicourt, Cadet de, story of Lannes's deathbed, iii. 173: prepares poison for N., iv. 207
Gaudin, M. M. C., appointed to the tressury, ii. 87, 141: member of N.'s new cabinet, iv. 167
Gaza, capture of, ii. 47
Gembloux, N. at, iv., 181: military movements near, 184: Groueby ordered to, 185, 186, 188
Genappe, N.'s flight through, iv. 203
Gendarmerie, formatioo of the system of, i. 80
Geneva, N. in, ii. 17: to be ceded to France, 27: Berthier sent to, 92: Mine. de Staël's exile in, iii. 27: Augereau confronting Bubna at, iv. 91: surrenders to the allies, 98
Geneva, Lake of, French forces on the, ii. 110
"Genius of Christianity" (Chateaubriaod's), ii. 166
Genoa, relation of Corsica to, i. 3, 4: losses its hold ou Corsiea, 4-6, 8: cedes Corsica to France, 9, 10: the Buonaparte family in, 13: Paolis fears concerning, 62: claims to Corsica, 64, 65, 60: X.'s relations with France e; 1143: 43-45: English influence in, 143: seizure of French vessel in harbor of parations against Sardinia and, 146: neutrality, 147: the road opened to, 152: reopening of commerce with Marseilles, 153: political status in 1796, 207: levy of enforced contributions from, 208, 229; ii. 102: military operations against (1796). i. 217: French proposition to revolutioniz, 277: guerrillas from, 282: cocive: measures against, 282: makes alliance with the Directory, 243: disposition by treaty of Leoben, 271: French intervention in, ii. 7: sends an embasy to Montebello, 7: revolution in, 7: disappearance of Genoa the Superb, 7: commercial greatness, 105: hours dy france, in 143: surrender of, 114: N. learns of Masséna's disaster tria y plans against, 105: English expedition aeainst, 105; Assena forced back into, 108: siege of, 108, 110, 113, 114: the key of, 113: surrender of, 114:

Gentili, member of the Directory of Corsica, i. 73: delegate to the National Assembly, 74: places Ionian Islands under French protection, ii. 11

Gentz, Friedrich von, manifesto against N., iii. 155: on the

- Gentz, Friedrich von, manifesto against N., iii. 155: an the campaign of 1813, iv. 79
  George III, recalls Paoli to England, i. 154: incurs the ill will of Paul 1., ii. 93: receives personal letter from N., 94: pag-quinades on, 96: quarrel with Pitt over Catholic enancipation, 134: character, 173: fears for absolutism. 173: on tready of Amiens. 177: message to Parliament, March 8, 1803, 180: Elector of Hanover, 183: effect of his imbecility, 210: letter from N., Jan. 2, 1805, 225: negotiations for the return of Hanover to, 258, 259, 271, 273: use of German troops in the American colonies, 272: ousts the "All the Talents" ministry, iii. 41: joint letter from N. and Alexander to (1808), 140: retherement of, iv. 168: required of, iv. 168: character, 168: besought for asylum for N., 210
  Georgel V. (Prince Recent), attitude toward France (1795), i. 178: regency of, iv. 168: character, 168: besought for asylum for N., 210
  Georgela, France undertakes to drive the Russlans from, iii. 24
  George, and the state of the ready of the Russlans from, iii. 24

Gera, military movements near, ii. 281

- Gérard, Gen. E. M., created baron, iii. 227: hattle of Borodino, 261: soizes Montercui, Vi. 103: moves toward Vitry, 119; at-tachment to N., 137: strength after the surrender of Paris, 137; in the Waterloo campaign, 175 et seq: at Châtclet, 177; crosses the Sambre, 177, 181: battle of Ligny, 182, 183, 187; at Walhain,
- Gerasdorf, military operations near, iii. 176: Archduke Charles

German Empire, N.'s scheme to rival the, ii. 215: abolished,

- rectory, 161; infinence on the first first state of the first state of

- Gneisenan, Gen. Angust continued. ain, ill. 83; military ability, iv. 60, 93, 183, 184; apurs up Ber-nadotte at Leipsie, 73; aims to annihilate N., 91; warns Blu-cher against over-confidence, 95; in Waterloo campaign, 175, 170, 180; orders the Prussian retreat to Wavre, 183, 184; his title to fame, 183, 184; holds Blucher's troops, 191; doubts Wellington's ability to stand at Waterloo, 191; in battle of Waterloo, 203, 204 Waterloo, 203, 204
- Weilington's ability to stand at Waterloo, 191; in battle of Waterloo, 203, 204
  Godoy, Manuel de, prime minister of Spain, if. 131, 132, 184; relations with Queen Lonisa, 131, 184, 212; iii. 60, 98, 99, 112; 117; the "Prince of the Peace," ii. 184; 1ii. 98; proposed kingdom for, in Portugal, 57, 96; Spanish revolt against, 59; treachery to X, 59, 60; ill-gotten wealth, 98, 99; relations with N, 98, 99, 104; waning power and downfail of, 99, 101, 106, 107, 114; enuses arrest of Ferdinand, 100; Ferdinsmod's charges against, 100; becomes aware of N.'s policy, 104; skill in diplomacy, 104; refuses to assent to French selzure of Portugal, 105; appalled at the French invasion, 105; contemplates a Bourbon monarchy in America, 106; clamor for his death, 106, 107; enplane of, 106, 107; seeks protection of Ferdinand, 107; lestmetion of his property, 107; proposed trial of, 107, 112; hinted order that he come to France, 110, 111; summoned to Bayonne, 114; popular hatred of, 114; at Complegne, 116; infany of, 117
  Goethe, Johann W. von, meetings with N., iii, 134; decorated at Eriturt, 137; on N., 2412, 245; the idealist aoong thinkers, iv, 242
- 242
- iv. 242 Gohier, M., member of the Directory, ii 63: represents Ja-cubin element in the Directory, 64: falls under Josephine's influence, 66: president of the Directory, 66: joins the Bons-partist ranks, 66, 67: proposed resignation of, 63: seeks counsel with Barras, 72, 73: refuses to resign, 73: imprisonment of, 74, 70:

- with Barras, 72, 73; refuses to resign, 73; imprisonment of, 74, 78 Gohlis, military operations near, iv. 72, 73 Goldbach, River, military operations on the, ii. 248-250, 253 Golden Book, the. See VENICE Goltz, at Tibait, iii. 43, 49; interview with N., 51 Golty, and the see VENICE Gorz, eeded to france, iii. 184 Göss, castle of, treaty of Leoben signed in, i. 270 Gosselies, military operations near, iv. 178, 179 Gotha, imprisonment of St. Aignan at, iv. 30 Göttingen, Bernadotte ordered to, ii. 232; patriotism in the uni-versity. iv. 31
- Göttingen, Bernadotte ordered to, ii. 232: patriotism in the university, iv. 31
   Gourgaud, Gen, accompanies N. to Paris, iv. 128: advises a return to Lorraine, 136: requests interview with Sonham, 143: accompanies N. to Rochefort, 208: goes to London to seek English asylum for N., 210, 211: neompanies N. to St. Helena, 214: mission to secure N.'s release, 217: assists N. on his history, 217 Government, Rousseau's views on. i. 2: the centralization of.
- Government, Rousseau's views on, i. 2: the centralization of,
- ii. 139: the mystery of, iv. 25 Gradisca, storming of, i. 267 Gradam, Gen., commanding English troops in the Netherlands. iv. 91

- Graham, Gen., commanding English troops in the Netherlands-iv, 91 Grain, monopoly of trade in, i. 54 Grand army, the, N.'s distrust of, iii. 40: passes from Prussia to Spain, 141: Murat commanding the remnants of, iv. 12: demoralization of, 13: crosses the Niemen, 20 Grandmalson, charges plots among the Five Hundred, ii. 79 Granyelle, Lord, on affairs in France, i. 178 Grasse, N.'s march through, on return from Elba, iv. 163 Graudenz, precarious situation of the garrison of, iii. 15: Ben-nigsen attempts to succor, 15: demanded by N. as a pledge, 35 Great Britain, the modern empire of, ii. 37. See also ENOLAND "Great Elector," the office of, ii. 85, 206 Great Greschen, fighting at, iv. 36 Great Science, the pass, the passage of the, ii. 110, 111 "Great Terror," the, i. 148 Greece (ancient), influence on French art, iii. 72: effects of ambition in, iv. 230: the history of, 242 Greece, Nelson seeks the French fleet at, ii. 42: proposal that France take, iii. 44: N. plans the liberation of, 44: the national awakening of, iv. 247 Greegorian calendar, restoration of the, ii. 222 Greegorian calendar, restoration of the, ii. 222 Greegorian calendar, restoration of the, ii. 222

- intrigués of, 129 Gregorian calendar, restoration of the, ii. 222 Gregory VII, ii. 218 Grenadler Guards, in battle of Waterloo, iv. 196 Grenier, Gen, in battle of Hohenlinden, ii. 125: division com-mander under Eugéne, iv. 28 Grenoble, Pius VII. a prisoner at, iii. 95, 187: N.'s march to, on return from Elba, iv. 163: imperial proclamation at, 164: obeys N.'s summons to surrender, 165: N.'s welcome at, 165: N. at, 171 Grenville. Lord. letter to Talleyrand from ii. 0(tr on N's
- N. at, 171 Grenville, Lord, letter to Talleyrand from, ii. 94: on N.'s wickchness, 95 Grisons, the, quarrel between the Valtellina and, ii. 7: Aus-trian violation of neutrality in, 49: Kray's communications via, to be cut, 107 Grodno, Jerome at, iii. 254 Gross, A. J., painter, ii. 225: created a baron, 227 Grossbois, residence of Burras, ii. 81 Grossbeeren, battle of, iv. 60, 61, 64 Grouchy, Gen. E. in battle of Hoheolindeo, ii. 125: st Tilsit, iii. 45: commanding cavalry in Russian campaign of 1812, 246: in battle of Vauchamps, iv. 97: recreated marshal, 172: move-

- Grouchy, Gen. E. continued. ments and orders in the Waterloo campaign, 174 et seq., 181, 185, 186, 188-190, 196, 204, 205, 235: letter to N., June 17, 1915, 186, 189: suspected unwillingness of, 186: Gérard to cooperate with, 187: uneasy conscience of, 188: garbled account of Wa-terloo by, 188, 189: at Walhain, 189, 205: ordired to retire on Namur, 203, 205: responsibility for disaster at Waterloo, 205: victory at Warre, 205: lends bia army back to France, 205 Guadarrama Mountains, N. crosses the, iii. 145, 146 Guadeloupe, French plans to strengthen, ii. 213 "Guardian Angel, The," near Graonne, the Emperor's night at, iv. 107, 108

- iv. 107, 108

- iv. 107, 108 "Guard of honor," the proposed, iv. 25 Guards (English), in battle of Waterloo, iv. 201, 202 Guastalla, given to Pauline (Bnonaparte) ii. 255: granted to Maria Louisa, iv. 148 Guastalla, Duchess of, Pauline created, iii. 213 Gudin, Gen., in battle of Pultusk, iii. 12: in the Eckmühl cam-vation 25.

- Guilt, 61, 161 Guérnie, 161 Guérniev, Russian soldiers transported to, ii. 93 Guinaa, Pichegru escapes from, ii. 105 Guidal, engaged in Male's conspiracy, iv, 16 Guildal, engaged in Male's conspiracy, iv, 16 Guilleminot, Gen., mediator between Russia and Turkey, iii. 86: in battle of Waterloo, iv, 105 Guillotine, the, the work of, i. 148 Guillotine, the, the work of, i. 148 Guildengossa, military operations near, iv, 71 Günzburg, Mack essays to cross the Danube at, ii. 236 Gustavus Adolphus, scene of his defeat of Wallenstein, iv, 35 Gustavus IV., king of Sweden, hated by his subjects, iii. 34: in Pomerania, 35: weakness of, 35: gives place to Charles XIII., 215
- Guyot, battle of Waterloo, iv. 198 Gyuläi, Austrian diplomatic agent, ii. 246 Gyulay, Gen., battle of Leipsic, iv. 71, 74
- - н

Hadrian I., Charles the Great's donation to, revoked by N., iii.

- Hadrian I., Charles the Great's donation to, revoked by N., iii. 166
  Hague, The, removal of the capital to Amsterdam from, iii. 212
  Hai, Wellington's troops at, iv. 188, 193
  Halberstadt, the Black Legion's escape through, iii. 181
  Halkett, Hugh, in battle of Waterloo, iv. 202
  Halle, Bernadotte's victory at, iii. 1: the Black Legion's escape through, 181: patriotism in the university, iv. 31: Blücher's advance to, 69, 70
  Hamburg, negotiations between France and Prussia concerning, ii. 102: laid under contribution, 183: closed to British commerce, 183: seizure of Rumbold at, 211: proposal to give it to Prussia, 258: French occupation of, iii, 7: Spanish troops in, 124: Bernadotte's force in, 157: snuggled commerce of, 203: acheme to incorporate with France, 204: position in the French empire, 214: sends deputation to Paris, iv. 17: rising against the French garrison, 33: captured by Vandanne, 37: Danish troops sent to, 37: occupied by Davout, 42: the status quo to be maintained in, 43: N. offers the city to Anstria, 50: end of N.'s defensive line, 51: Davout besieged at, 90
  Hameln, attempt to besiege, ii. 270: capitulation of, iii. 2
  Hamilton, Alexander, U. S. trassury system, iv. 229
  Hanau, Oudinot's command in, iii. 157: battle of, iv. 76: compared to Kraanol, 76
  Hannibal, N.'s allnsion to, i. 217: his passage of the Alps, ii.

- Hannibal, N.'s allusion to, i. 217: his passage of the Alps, ü.
- Hannibal, N.'s allnsion to, i. 217: his passage of the Alps, ii. 110, 120
  Hannover, N. threatens to seize, ii. 180: George III., Elector of, 183: French occupations of, 183, 211, 271; iii. 7, 167, 204: Prussian acgotiates with France for, ii. 228, 229, 232: the French garrison replaced by Prussians, 252: ceded to Prussia, 251, 258, 261: negotiations for its return to George III., 258, 259, 271, 273: attempt to drive the French from, 270: troops in Pomerania, iii. 35: allotted to Jerome, 204: Jerome deprived of part of, 213: excepted from the scheme of Prussian aggrandizement, iv. 31: England abandons scheme for exteosion of, 32: Prussia promises to cede part of Saxony to, 45: proposed cession of Hildesheim to, 45: restored to its former ruler, 79: campaign of the Hundred Days, 174 et seq.
  Hanover, the House of, ii. 202, 203
  Hanseatic towns, free cities, ii. 261: Joachim I.'s aspirations concerning, 270: proposal to include in North German Confederation, 272: hesitate to reply to Prussia, 273: neutrality of, iii. 41: virtual dependence on France, 66: smuggled commerce of, 203: scheme to incorporate them with France, 204: N. offers to evacuate, 208: offered to Louis for Brahant and Zealand, 207: England threatened with loss of trade with, 208: N. refuses to cede points concerning, iv. 27: proposal that Fraoce evacuate the, 38: proposed independence of the, 44, 72
  Happiness, N. on, i. 77
  Hapsburg, House of, end of its policy of territorial expansion, ii. 125: effect of the Bayonne negotiations on, iii. 127 et seq.: seeks indemnity for lost domains, 151: hopes of regaining lost territory, 154: demoralization iii, 167: matrimonial alliance with N., 189, 193; Iv. 82: democratic blows at the dignity of, iii. 40: iv. 77: withdrawa from the leadership of Germany, iii. 250
  Harcourt, on affalrs in France, i. 178

- Harcourt, on affairs in France, i. 178
- Hardenberg, Prince K. A. von, aims at consolidation of Prus-sia, ii. 229: dismissal of, 258; iii. 38, 44: Prussian minister, ii.

- Hardenberg, Prince K. A. von continued. 269; in. 36: at Tilsit, 44: proposes the partition of Turkey, 44: seeks refuge in Vienna, 138: effect of his reforma, 243: Metter-nich's negotiations with, iv. 29: hostility to N., 30 Harel, share in the execution of d'Enghien, ii. 198

- accast retuge in therma, 1951, effect of fils Fetorins, 2431 Stelfter-nich's negotiations with, iv. 291; hostility to N., 30
  Harsel, share in the execution of d'Enghien, ii. 198
  Hassenhausen, engagement at, ii. 282
  Hatzieldt, Prince, cont-martialed and sentenced to death, iii. 3: the sentence commuted, 3
  Haugwitz, Count, Prussian envoy to France, ii. 246, 258; pol-icy after Austerlitz, 251; concludes treaty with France, 268; demand for the disgrace of, 271
  Hauterive, Duhoux d', royalist leader, i. 178; reviews French situation in 1801, ii. 138
  Havelburg, French troops at, iv. 28
  Haver, France's alleged naval preparations at, ii. 182
  Hebert, J. R., leader of the Exagérés, i. 138; terrorist, 148
  Heddersdorf, defeat of the Austrians by Hoche at, i. 272
  Heilsberg, Ney retreats from, iii. 15: Bennigsen reaches, 15, 19; battle of, 29, 300; N. concentrates his army at, 30; the Russians abandon, 32: N.'s peril at, 34
  Heinrichsdorf, engagement near, iii. 31
  Heilvetian Republic, the, alliance with France, ii. 27; forma-tion of, 27, 59; neutrality violated by Austria, 49; N. Grand Mediator of the, 150; English efforts to discredit France in, 169; in vassalage to France, iii. 216
  Henry JIV., heads the Bourhon dynasty, i. 103; N. discerns like-neas to himself, ii. 225; N. enultats in uxoriousness, iii, 198
  Herbois, Collet d', member of the National Convention, i. 111, 187
  Herrolies, Pillars of, "the new," iii, 236

- 137 Hereditzy nobility, abolished, ii. 143 Hereditzy nobility, abolished, ii. 144 Hereditzy nobility, abolished, ii. 144 Heredity, N. on, i. 77 Herodotus, N.'s study of, i. 40 Hesse, French march through, ii. 233: furnishes contingent to N.'s army, iii, 246 Hesse-Cassel, excluded from the Confederation of the Rhine, ii. 260; iii. 7: proposal to include in the Confederation, ii. 272: hesitates to reply to Prussia, 273: French occupation of, iii. 7: neutrality of, 7: organized into the kingdom of Westphalia, 49 Hesse-Cassel, House of, extinction of, iii. 7 Hesse-Darmstadt, member of the Confederation of the Rhine, ii. 260, 261: quota of men, 261: turns from N. to the allies, iv. 79
- 70
- Heymès, Col., records N.'s orders to Ney at Quatre Bras, iv. 178,

- High Admiral, creation of the office of, ii. 206 Highways, N.'s scheme of, ii. 178 Hildesheim, apportioned to Prussia, ii. 170: proposed cession
- Hildesheim, aportioned to Prussia, ii. 170: proposed cession of, to Hanover, iv. 45
  Hill, Lord, joins Wellington in the Peninsula, iii. 217: occupies Bordeaux, iv. 114: in Waterloo campaign, 176
  Hiller, Gen, military operations on the Inn, iii. 154: movements to support, 158: movements before Ratisbon, 161: driven back to Landshut, 162: flees to Neumarkt, 162: Bessières pursues, 162: crosses the Danube at Mautern, 164: battle of Ebelsberg, 164: defcats Wrede at Erding, 164: effects junction with Charles at Bisanberg, 164, 167: drives Eugène over the Adige, iv. 79 79
- Hilliers, Baraguey d', capture of his command in Russia,

- iv. 2 History, the functions and study of, i. 1, 2; iv. 223: N.'s study and theory of, i. 40, 70, 85, 86 "History of Corsica," i. 47, 48, 67, 69, 70 Hoche, Gen, Lazare, defeats Wurmser at Weissenburg, i. 163: commanding Army of the West, 209: military genius, 211; ii. 122: campaigu in the Netherlands, i. 263: defeats Anstria on the Rhine, 271, 272: expedition to Ireland, 278, 279: considered for minister of war, ii. 4: distrusted by the people, 4: death of, 5.6

- 5, 6 Hofer, Andreas, exploits in the Tyrol, iii. 181: capture, trial, and death of. 186: his family ennobled, 186: his patriotism and fame, 186: compared to Tell, 186 Hohenems, acquired by Wurtemberg, ii. 252 Hohenlinden, battle of, ii. 124-126 Hohenlinden, pattle of, commanding at Chemnitz, ii. 276: at Blankenhain, 278: defeated by Bernadotte at Schleiz, 279: in battle of Jéna, 280, 281, 283: retreats to Prenzlau, 283: anrren-der of, iii. 2 Hohen-Thann, military movements near, iii. 160 Hohenzollern, member of the Confederation of the Rhine, fi. 260

- Holenzollern, hender of the contextration of the nume, in 260
  Hohenzollern, House of, ii. 202, 203 : N. in the palace of the, iii. 3: its territories, 6: N. contemplates its extinction, 6: provisions for French evacuation of its lands, 53 : N.'s attitude toward, 86, 243 : humiliation of, 127, 128
  Holitsch, interview between Francis I. and N. near, ii. 251
  Hollabrunn, Bagration's stand at, ii. 244 : Sould at, 244
  Holland, honors to Paoli in, 1. 10: N.'s study of the history of, 90 : expected enmity of, 110 : closes the Scheldt, 115 : becomes the Batavian Republic, 164 : conquest and occupation by France, 197; ii. 3, 156 ; iii. 212 : republican achemes for, i. 200 : plunder of works of art from, 225 : organization of the Orange party in, 278, 279 : efforts to check democracy in, 278, 279 : English conquests of colonies from, ii. 8: proposal to make her a dependency of France, 8: loss of colonies by, 25 : compulsory cnrol-

Hollaud — continued.
ment in the republican system, 25: Brune's campaign in, 60, 62, 63, 207: loyalty to N., 97: indemnity for Finshna, 102: the Code Napoléon In, 143; iii. 212: a new constitution imposed on, ii. 150: indemnity to Honse of Orange, 168: French guarantees to, 184: share in the war of 1803, 184: independence of, 227: N.'s claim to, 227: Prussia hound to secure the libertics of 243: Louis made king, 266; iii. 78, 206: enlistments from, under the French cagles, 11: Louis's reign in, 27, 206, 207, 212, 213: vassalage to France recognized at Tilsit, 47: relations of France with, 61: smuggled commerce of, 110, 263, 204: Lonis's loyalty to the Dutch, 116: Oudinot ordered to cacre, 204: England's paper blockade of, 205: visit of N. to, 206: violates the Continental System, 206, 207: N. reduces Louis to the position of a French governor, 207: geographically a part of France, 267, 216: N.'s scheme for the annexation of, 207, 208: England threatened with loss of trade with, 208: N. olders to evacuate, 208: opposition to N. in, 211: seizures of American ships in, 211: Fouche's English-Dutch conspiracy, 211: Louis soliteates, 212: renoval of the capital to Amsterdam, 212: annexed to France, 212: popharity of Louis in, 212: prosperity under French rule, 212, 213: the national movement in, 213: "the ulluvium of France," 216: English expedition to, 224: incorporated into the French empre, 225: N. refuses to cede any papt of, iv. 27: riots in, 27: Eugène to gnard, 28: proposal that France evacuate, 38: mediocrity of soldiers of, 64: N. offers to restore independence of 07: 21: English influence in, 72, 80: recalls the Prince of Orange, 73: proposed independence of, 80
Holtstein, threatened French invasion of, iii, 58: Denmark's loss of, 59
Holy Alliance, the, iv. 50, 212

- of, 59 Holy Alliance, the, iv. 50, 212 Holy Inquisition, abolished in Spain, iii. 147 Holy League, the, i. 103 Holy Roman Empire, dismemberment of the, ii. 170: abolition of, 272: desire to substitute a Western Empire for, 255: title of the heir to, iii. 200 Hood, Lord, seizure at Toulon, i. 132 Hortense, Queen, at Malmaison, iv. 208. See BEAUMARNATS, HestENSE DE Hostage Law, the, ii. 64, 88, 89 Hougomont, the farm-house of, iv. 191, 194: fighting at, 195– 197, 200

- 197, 200

- Hougomont, the farm-house of, iv. 194; hghting at, 195-197, 200
  Hoyverswerda, N. moves toward, iv. 62
  Hugo, Victor, on N., i. 230; at school in Madrid, iii. 223
  Humanity, the cause of, i. 158
  Hydres, retreat of the Corsican expedition to, i. 155
  Hulin, Gen. P. A., presides at trial of Due d'Enghien, ii. 196-198; transfers his allegiance to Louis XVIII., iv. 147
  Humbeldt, William von, member of Prossian reform party, ii. 269: reorganizes the educational system of Prussia, iii. 83; at Congress of Pragne, iv. 49
  Hundred Days, the campaign of the, iv. 174 et seq.: N.'s monograph on, 217: the political question of the, 244
  Hungary, Francis I. prepares for flight into, i. 270; French machinations in, iii. 28; importance of securing to the allies, 246: Archduke John in, iii. 165, 168, 174, 175, 178; X.'s policy of winning the people of, 166; Leopold 11.'a reign, 166; Francis I.'s treatment of, 166

T

- <page-header><text><text><text><text><text><text><text>

Infantado, Duke del, leader of Ferdinand VII.'s party, lii. 99: commissioned governor of New Castlle, 160
 Infantry, N.'s early views concerning, i. 28, 30
 "Influence of the Passions," N.'s study of Mme. de Stacl's, li.

- Ingolstadt, Bernadotte marches to, il. 234 : Davont to concentrate

- Ingolstadt, Bernadotte marches to, il. 234 : Davout to concentrate at, ili, 159-161
  Inn Quarter, ceded to Austria, il. 27: embodied in the Confederation of the Rhine, ili, 184
  Inn, River, the, military movements on, il. 124, 233, 236 ; ili, 154, 159, 164, 181
  Innocent II., contrasted with Pius VII., 202
  Innsbruck, seized by the Tyroleas, ili, 156 ; garrisoned by Austrians, 156 : Lefebvre drives Tyroleans from, 165
  Inquisition, the Holy, blamed for disorders in Spain, ili, 124
  Institute of France, reorganization of, i. 167 : Talleyrand a member of, il. 22, 32 : elects N, a member, 67, 214 : part of the educational system of France, 145
  Institutions, N.'s study of, i. 40
  International Law, the law of colonial trade, ili, 41, 42 : neutral ships and neutral goods, 41-43 : the "rate of 1756, "41, 42 : right of search, 42, 81 : contraband of war, 42 : sanctity of all algas on high sear, 48 : the law of neutrals, 203, 205, 214 : use of "simulated papers," 205, 210
  International understandings, a hoped-for system of, iv, 243
  Invalides, Hespital of the, trophies from Aboukir deposited at, ii, 97 : inaugmation of the curine at, 209 : distribution of Legion of Honor crosses at, 231 : relice of Frederick the Great seat to, iil, 3
- at, 1. 97; inalignation of the empire at, 207; distribution of Legion of Honor crosses at, 231; relies of Frederick the Great sent to, iii. 3 Ionian Islands, taken under French protection, ii. 11; worship of N, in, 11; France retains, 14; suzerannty of Turkey over, 168; occupied by Russia, 211; compensation for, iii. 49; Eng-land's naval watchfulness over, 90; military government of, 213 Ireland, Hoche's expedition to, i. 278, 279; plans of French inva-sion of, ii. 33, 46, 213, 214, 238; arrest and dismissal of French inva-sion of, ii. 33, 46, 213, 214, 238; arrest and dismissal of French inva-rest of the expedition against (1811), 234, 235 Iron Mask, the Man in the, i. 12 Isar, River, military movements on the, ii. 124; lii. 159-162 Isenburg, member of the Confederation of the Khlne, ii. 260 Iser Mountains, military movements near, iv. 55 Islam, N, professes the religion of, ii. 45 Isola Rossa, patriot success at, i. 64 Isonzo, River, military operations on the, i. 267; proposed boun-dary for Italy, ii. 16 Istria, ceded to Austria at Leoben, i. 271; Austrian forces in, ii. 111; ceded to Austria to Italy, 252; creation of hereditary duchy 3ft, 255; Bessieres created Duke of, iii. 70, 71. See BES-siRhes

- ISERIA, Cedeu to Austria at Leoben, 1, 271 : Anstrian forces in, il. 111 : ceded by Austria to Italy, 252 : creation of hereiditary duchy 6f, 255 : Bessieres created Duke of, iii. 70, 71. See BESSIERES
  Italian Church, N.'s threat to liberate it from Itome, iii. 58
  Italy affinity with Corsica, i. 2, 3, 11, 12 : the root of the Buonaparte family in, 12, 13 : expected ennity of, 110 : movements of the French fleet against, 113 : N.'s plan of campaign in, 141, 144–146 : suspension of offensive operations in, 152 : opening the roads into, 152, 208 : uncasiness in, at English proximity, 155 : French schemes against English influence in, 155 : grow th of liberal ideas in, 164 : N. claims the honors of the campaign in, in, 174 : adoption of N.'s plan of campaign against (1796), 175, 176 : Austria's gaze oo, 198 : N.'s peculiar relations to, and knowledge of, 206–207, 225 : the battle-field of rival dynasties, 207 : status in 1796, 207 : revolutionary spirit in, 207 : wealth, 207, 226, 229 : cost of the war in, 211 : N.'s successes in (1796), 211 : French pilage in, 211, 261, 276 ; ii. 8, 12, 21 : the destilies of Europe dependent on take of, i. 212 : "an artichoke," 213 : the gaden of, 216, 217 : crushed at Lodi, 219, 220 : levying contributions in, 219, 220, 223–225, 228, 229 : the fate ot Europe dependent on campaign in, 250 et here, of 252 : North strais fourth stempt to retrieve position m, 250 : the key of, 252 : North's mastery of, 260 : Austria's gread of the revolutionary in paign in, 264 : 265 : N.'s schemes to master, 61 : lands in, ceded to Amstria, 14 : attitude of the Directory toward, 25 : Keeping open gateways into, 27 : Polish troops in, 273 : N. has free hand in rearrangement of, 25 : France's policy toward, 26 : keeping open gateways into, 27 : Polish troops in, 273 : N. has free hand in rearrangement of, 25 : France's policy toward, 26 : keeping open gateways into, 27 : Polish troops in, 273 : N. has free hand in rearrangement of, 25 : France's policy toward, 26 : keeping open gatewa

<text><text><text><text><text><text>

- J Jackson, Andrew, at New Orleans, iv. 174 Jacobin Club, the, foundation of, i. 55: influence, 87, 88, 91: letter from X. to, 103, 104: closing of, 161 Jacobinism, in X.'s early life, i. 81: N. renounces, 150: its de-cline in France, ii. 1: French hatred of, 24: rising tide of (1799), 64: Pitt's delusion concerning N. and, 94: decadence and ob-literation of, 127, 151, 165, 167: effect on N., iv, 223 Jacobins, the, deciare open hostility to Louis XVI., i. 100, 115: Danton's leadership in, 110: struggle between the Girondists and, 111: position in the National Convention, 111, 158: con-nection of the Buonapartes with, 127: supremacy of, 127, 139: defeated by the Girondists in Marseilles, 128: intensity of their movement, 131: disorders of their rule, 147: decline of their power, 158, 159, 178; ii. 1: military successes, i. 159: influence among the Theinulorians, 161: tyranny of, 162, 163: strive for the mastery, 165: reaction in favor of, 168: N.'s relations with, 108, 182: influence in the Directory, ii. 33: activity in May elec-tions (1799), 62: political faith, 64: influence in the Five Hun-dred, 66: suppression of their section of the press, 66: attitude on the 19th Brummire, 78, 79: end of the party, 81, 84: financial effects of their rule, 88, 80: lecislation against, 89: attitude to-ward the Church, 132: assassination schemes among, 154, 155: reputhed rising in France, 180: England fosters the spirit of in-surrection among the, 191: alienated from N., iv. 171: subser-vient to N's will 000. reputed rising in France, 189: England fosters the spirit of in-surrection among the, 191: alienated from N., iv. 171: subser-vient to N.'s will, 229 Jaffa, hombardment of, ii. 47: massacre and license at, 47, 48: the French hospitals at, 50, 51: stories of N.'s inhumanity at, 51: the retreat from, 51 Jamestown, St. Helena, iv. 216 Janina, Pasha of, rebellious spirit of, ii. 11 Janzaries, rebellion of the, iii. 33, 127 Jason, N. likened to, iv. 22 Jauberthon, Mme, de, marries Lucien Buonaparte, iii. 102 Jaucourt, ——, royalist intrigues of, iv. 129: letter of, March 17, 1814, 120: member of the executive commission, 136 Jav treaty, the, ii. 136

17, 1814, 120: member of the executive commission, 135
Jay treaty, the, ii. 136
Jemmapes, battle of, i. 115
Jefferson, Thomas, his embargo policy, iii. 82, 83
Jéna, battle of, ii. 279-283: moral effect upon Prussia, iii. 1: practical results to the French, 2: Prussia's humiliation at, 49: a royal hare-hunt on the field of, 138: immediate effects of the battle, 147: patriotism in the university, iv. 31: the strategy of, 35 of, 35 Jéna, the hridge of, in Paris, iii. 62 Jerome (king of Westphalia), violates the Continental System, iii. 204: acquires Hanovor and Magdeburg, 204: hesitates about furnishing new levles, iv. 28. See also BUONAPARTE, JEROME

- Jesuits, Carlo Buonaparte's claims against the, l. 15, 21, 24, 32: Alexander seeks their influence in Poland, iv. 20 Jesus Christ, N. compares Apollonius of Tyans with, ii. 133 Jews, in Corsica, i. 5: Paoli's relations with the, 5: rights and duties under the Code, ii. 144: the Semitic question in France, iii. 62-64: general Sanhedrim of, 63, 64: N.'s legislation con-cerning, 69: liable to military service, 64: regulations for Al-sace, 64: present standing in France, 64; iv. 229 Jezzar, commanding Turkish troops in Syris, ii. 46-48: N. reports his massacres to, 47: reinforcements from Damascus for, 48 Joachim L, grand duke of Cleves and Berg, ii. 261. See also MICRAT

- Joezzar, commanding Turkish troops in Syris, il. 40-48: N. reports his massacres to, 47: reinforcements from Damascus for, 48
  Joachim I., grand duke of Cleves and Berg, ii. 261. See also MURAT
  John, Archduke, succeeds Kray in command, ii. 122: forces of, 122: position on the Inn, 124: battle of Hohenlinden, 124, 125: reaches Marburg, 236: to excite revolt in the Tyrol, 163: escapes from Macdon.id into Hungary, 165: ordered to Linz, 167: at Volkermarkt, 168: in Hungary, 174: driven into Hungary by Eugene, 175: repearations to oppose, 176: advances toward Raab, 175: in Presburg, 175, 176, 178: turns to guard Hungary, 178: ordered to Styria, 178: proposes to continue the war, 181: quarrels with Churles, 182
  John, Don, regent of Portugal, iii. 95: character, 95: yields to demands of France, 95: plan to capture, 96: Bellesca organizes rebellion in favor of, 97
  Jomini, Henri, on the Eckmühl campaign, iii. 163: records N.'s warlike spirit, 248: N.'s military confidences and conversations with, 253, 256: alleged hostility of Berthier to, iv. 52: goes over to the allies, 52: military genius, 52
  Jounett, Gen. B. C., in Rivoli campaign, i. 261-254: occupies Rivoli, 251: military operations in the Tyrol, 266, 268, 269: joins N. v. 551: statue at the Tyrol, 269, 273: French agent in the Netherlands, ii. 26: to succeed M. in Italy, 49: defeated and killed at Novi, 57, 63: 66: succeed Sucreau, 63: relations with Sieyès, 63: statue at the Tuileries, 97
  Jourdan, Gen, J. B., defeat the Austrians at Fleurus, i. 163: suspected of intrigue, 165: a product of Carnot's system, 202: saved from defeat at Manbeuge, 202: commanding forces at Duisseldorf. 209: military reenins, 21: seizes Wurzburg, 235: meets with disaster in Germany, 25: disfaced, 279: member of the Five Hundred, ii. 49: commanding Army of the Danube, 49: ordered to central Germany, 60: defeated and stockach, 60: succeed by Lenonf, 60: carries out conscription measures, 63: Jacobin candidate for supreme comma

- Joux, imprisonment and death of Toussaint Louverture in castle of, ii. 152 Judicial administration, the, ii. 99-101 Judiciary, reform of the, i. 87 July 14, celebration of, ii. 127 Junot, Gen, Andoche, N. wins the admiration of, i. 139: letters from N., 151; iii. 270; iv. 1: accompanies N. to Paris, i. 166: delivers N.'s terms to Venice, 270: escorts Josephine to Monte-hello, 282: formulates demand on the Venetian senate, ii. 7: service in Egypt, 36: in hattle of Esdraelon, 49: ordered to leave Egypt, 56: ordered with "corps of observation" to Por-tugal, iii. 57: his venality and greed, 67, 97: ordered to invade Portugal, 95, 96: reaches Abrantès, 96: garrisons Portuguese fortresses, 96: prepares for invasion of Npain, 96: resches Lis-bon, 97: anjires to the crown of Portugal, 97, 219: revulsion of feel-ing in Portugal against, 97: appointed governor of Portugal, 104: strength in Portugal, 122: Bessières ordered to connect with, 123: precarious situation, 123: escapes to Clintra, 123, 124, 144: returns to France, 123: forces in Spsin, 143: defeated by the Black Legion at Berneck, 180: in Leon, 217: battle of Boro-dino, 261 Junot, Mime, i. 168: opinions of N., ii. 128, 129: sncient lineage of, ii. 97 Jura Mountolins, proposed boundary for Germany, iii. 243

Jura Mountains, proposed boundary for Germany, iii. 243 Jüterbog, Bernadotte at, iv. 63

ĸ

Kaja, fighting at, iv. 36 Kalatscha, River, military operations on the, iii. 260, 261 Kalish, treaty of, Feb. 28, 1813, iv. 21, 31 Kalikreuth, Gen., Funssian commander, ii. 272: defense of Dant-zie, iii. 24: at Tilsit, 43: agreement to evacuate Prussia, 81 Kaluga, extension of the Russian lines toward, iii. 266: French retreat toward, 268 Commental Gen. Eussion general-In-chief iii. 14: mistake st retreat toward, 268 Kamenski, Gen., Russian general-In-chief, ili. 14: mistake at battle of Pultusk, 14: retired, 14 Kandahar, projected rising against England in, ili. 24 Kapzewitch, Gen., reinforces Blucher at Montmirail, iv. 96 Karl August, Duke of Saxe-Weimar, accepts French terms after John ili 7,

Karlings, the, the legitimacy of, ll. 208

<sup>.1</sup>

- IN D
  Kastel, Bertrand stationed at, iv, 89
  Katzbach, River, Blucher crossea the, iv, 55: battle of, 60, 61
  Kehl, Moreau crossea the Rhine at, 1, 235
  Reith, Adm. G. K. E., expedition against Genoa, il. 105; gratitude to N, for favors, iv, 213: announces the sentence of imprisonment to N., 213
  Kellermann, Gen. F. C., defeats the allies at Vaimy, I, 115; commanding forces in the Alps, 128, 209; plana of the Directory regarding, 221: in Savoy, 222: receives aubsidy from N., 222: proposition that he organize republics in tally, 227
  Kellermann, Gen. F. E., in battle of Murenço, ii, 118, 119, 175; battle of Leipsie, iv, 71, 73: transfers his allegiance to Louis XVIII., 147; recreated marshal, 172; in the Waterloo campaign, 175, 176, 182, 183, 198; battle of Quatre Braz, 182, 183
  Kemberg, Blucher's march to, iv, 66
  Keralio, M. de, commends N.'s ability, i. 28, 29
  Khirva, proposed Franco-Russian expedition via, ii. 126
  King of the French, 'or '' King of France,'' i. 64
  Kings, divine right of, iv, 222
  Kinzde, River, neilitary operations on the, iv, 76
  Kirchener, Gen., J., watcher S Venice', i. 266
  "King of the French, 'or '' King of France,'' i. 64
  Kings, divine right of, iv, 222
  Kinzig, River, neilitary operations on the, iv, 76
  Kirchener, Gen., J. B., military successes of, i. 103: a product of Camota system, 202: service in Egypt, ii. 36 et seq.; marches on Syria, 46, 47: in battle of Estracion, 48, 49: at the siege of Acre, 50: in the battle of Aboukin, 54: appointed to chief command of army in Egypt, 51: instructions for evacuating Egypt, 53: since-eided by Menou, 123 sasassination of, 123, 135: since-eided by Menou, 123 sasassination of, 124, 135: shatt

- ii. 12
  Knights of St. John of Malta, the, corruption among, ii. 38: wars against the 'Inrks, 40: Paul I. seeks to head, 102: Malta restored to, 167, 171
  Kobentz, military operations near, ii. 249
  Kolberg, Bennigsen attempts to succor, iii. 15: siege abandoned, 23: N. demands, as a pledge, 35
  Kolin, battle of, iv. 235
  Koller, Gen, Austrian commissioner at Fontainebleau, iv. 149: suggests an asylum for N. in England, 150: accompanies N. to Elba, 153: quits Elba, 155
  Kollowrath, Gen., in battle of Austerlitz, ii. 249: ordered to seize Linz, iii. 167

- Eiba, 153: quits Eiba, 155
  Kollowrath, Gen., in battle of Austerlitz, ii. 249: ordered to seize Linz, ii. 167
  Königsberg, Leatooq's retreat to, iii. 1: Ney's false move toward, 14: Prederick William shut up in, 15: Bennigsen's defense of, 19: Bennigsen's detrost to 21: Russian retreat toward, 31: Lestoeq driven into, 32: reinforcements for Bennigsen's defense of, 19: Bennigsen's devention, 52: reinforcements for Bennigsen's devention, 12: N. Jeaves Tilait for, 55: the League of Virtue in, 53: popularity of Stein's measures at, 150: Alexander I. at, 150, 151: Murat enters, iv. 20: patriotism in the noiversity, 31: proposed new capital for Prussia, 39
  Korner, Theodor, incites Prussia patriotism, iv. 31
  Korneuburg, military operations near, iii. 89
  Korsakoff, Gen., defeated by Masséna at Zurich, ii. 63, 93
  Kossuth, Louis, charges treachery against Maria Louisa, iv. 46
  Kottburg, eded to Saxou, ii. 53
  Kourakine, Count, at Tilsit, iii. 43: Russian ambassador to Prance, 238: injured by fire, 238: leaves Paris for St. Petersburg, 239: takes N.'s messages to Alexander, 239
  Krasnoi, the French retreat through, iv. 5-7: N.'s coolness at, 6, 7: compared to Hanau, 76
  Krasnoi, the French retreat the Danube, 109: defeated at Messifict, 109: superseded by Archake John, 122
  Kremiin, the, iii. 262: 964: French occupation of, 262, 265: pillaged, 265: failure to destroy, 269, 270
  Krems, Kutusuf crosses the Danube at, ii. 236
  Kronach, the Imperial Guard at, ii. 278
  Krosnach, de Imperial Guard at, ii. 278
  Krosnach, the Imperial Guard at, ii. 278
  Krosnach, the Imperial Guard at, ii. 278
  Krossen, proposed allotment of, to Saxon, v. 39
  Kuim, battle of, iv. 205. 11
  Kutusoff, Gen M, L. G., moors toward Brinn, ii. 236: crosses the Danube at Krems, 236: escapes from Marat, 243: pursued by the French, 244: at Schrattenthal, 244: outwits Marat at Hollabrann, 244: j

Kutusoff, Gen. -- continued.

Intusoff, Gen. — continued. refers Lauriston to St. Petersburg, 266 : extends his line toward Kaluga, 266 : felgmed movement against, 268–270 ; defeated at Malojaroslavetz, 269, 270 : Russian fuilure to reinforce, iv. 2, 3 :  $N_c$  plans an anohush for, 3 : battle of Wiazna, 3 : his allies Want and Winter, 3, 12 : at Krasnol, 6 : pursuit of the French arroy, 7 : nustake as to  $N_c s$  nove ments, 10 : responsibility for further bloodshed, 13 : "the plain gentleman of Pskoff," 13 : bad general-hip of, 13, 20 : losses in the campaign, 19, 20 : en-ters Vilma, 20 : desires peace, 20 : advance through Foland, 29 :  $N_c$  seeks Austrian aid to check, 29 : fasnes proclamation to Ger-man princes, 31 : death, 32 man princes, 31 : death, 32

Labanoff, Prince, comes to Bennigsen's aid after Friedland, ii. Labanon, Frince, comes to be migsen's aid after Friedmand, n. 32: conducts negotiations with N., 35: at 7181, 43
 Labedoyère, Gen. C. A. H., determines to support N., lv. 164: imprisoned and condemned to death, 211
 Laber, River, military operations on the, inl. 161, 162
 Laborde, Alexandre de, N.'s confidential agent in the treaty of Schonbrunn, in. 193: suggests the matriage of N. and Marla Louise 199.

- Louisa, 193
- Labouchère, Henry, mission from Holland to England, Ili. 208 Labouchère, Henry, mission from Holland to England, Ili. 208 La Carolina, defeatof Dupont at, ili. 122 Lacombe-Saint-Michel, J. P., secures N.'s appointment to the Army of the West, I. 156: member of Committee of Safety,

- 156
  La Cour de France, N. at, iv. 128, 135
  La Cuesta, Gen., defcated at Medina de Rio Seco, iii. 122
  La Avorita, battle of, i. 254, 256
  Lafayette, Marquis de, commands the National Guard, i. 57: endeavors to calm the National Assembly, 102, 103: N. on, 103: commanding armics in the North, 105: pronouncea against popular excesses, 105: flight, and capture by the Austrians, 105: released from Austrian prison, 283; il. 98, 159: possible auccessor to N., 120: influence on the Consulate, 127: remoa-strates argainst N.'s life consulably, 159: supports the cham-hers, iv. 206, 207: N.'s forgiveness for, 218
  La Fère, the regiment of, i. 34: the regiment at Donay, 42: or-dered on special service, 44: N.'s service in, 48, 79, 81: mutiny in, 59: transformed into the First Regiment, 85
  La Ferte-sous-Jouarre, military movements near, iv. 96: N.'s rapid march to, 102

- La Ferte-sous-Jouarre, military movements near, iv. 96: N.'s rapid march to, 102 Laffont, royalist leader, i. 178: on the Thirteenth Vendémiaire, 181, 182: excented, 182 Laffray, dramatic welcome to the returned Emporer at, iv. 164: N. offers himself to the bullets of the Fifth Regiment at, 164 La Flèche, the military school at, i. 25 Lagrange, Gen., moves against Castaños, iii. 144: transfers his allegiance to Louis XVIII., iv. 147 Lagrange, Gen., general of division, Army of Italy, i. 208: attacked by Beanlieu at Voltri, 213, 215: retreats to Savona, 215: killed at Fombio, 218: tutor to Alexander I., iii. 94 La Haye, the farms of, iv. 191: fighting at, 199 La Haye 30
- 198 903

- La Haye Sainte, the farm-house of, iv. 191: hghting at, 196-198, 203 Lahorie, Gen, V., engaged in Malet's conspiracy, iv. 15 Laine, J. H. J., radical member of the Senate, iv. 134 Lajolais, Gen, P., plots of, in the Cadoudal conspiracy, ii. 189, 190: implicates Moreau, 189 La Junquera, Saint-Cyr at, iii. 142 Laltanal, Joseph, provides for mixed schools, ii. 145 Lake Constance, Kray's communications via, to be cut, ii. 107 Lallemand, Gen, C. F. A., proposes asylum for N. on an Ameri-ean ship, iv. 209: negotiations with Capt. Maitland, 211 Lallemant, M., French republican agent in Venice, i. 276: ii. 7 "L'Amblgu," published in London, ii. 174: N. Iampooned in, 174 Lambrecht, royalist intrigues of, iv. 129 La Mortilla, N. prepares plans for its defense, i. 46 La Mure, N.: swelcome at, on return from Elba, iv. 164 Land, teure at outbreak of the Revolution, i. 5, 5, 54, 57 Landes, Department of the, exempt from legislation concern-ing Jews, iii. 64 Landyrenberg, military operations at, ii. 279

- ing Jews, 11. 64 Landsberg, engagement at, iii, 19 Landsberg, engagement at, iii, 19 Landshut, military movements near, iii, 160-162, 167; N. at, 162: battle of, 163: Archduke Charles's military mistake at, 167

- 162: battle of, 163: Archduke Charles s minitary mistake al, 167
  Langeron, Gen, Andrault, in battle of Austerlitz, ii. 250: captures Rheims, iv. 169: on the discensions in Blacher's army, 109: on the terror of N.'s name, 112
  Langres, military movements near, iv. 92, 100, 120
  Lanjuinais, Jean D., president of House of Deputies, iv. 172
  Lannes, Gen, Jean, recommended for promotion, i. 217: threatens Genoa, 223: service in Ergypt, ii. 36: wounded at Acre, 52: hattle of Aboukir, 54: accompanics N. on his return from Alexandria, 56: action on the 18th Brumaire, 71: commanding at the Tulieries, 74: crosses the 8t. Bernard, 110, 111: attacks Ivrea, 111: hesitates at Fort Bard, 111: reaches Aosta, 111: defeats Ott at Castegrio, 116: commanding corps at Marengo, 116-118: battle of Montebello, 128: restored to favor, 178: created marshal, 207: character, 234; iii 161, 172, 173: captures Braunan, ii. 236: pursues the Russians, 244: in battle of Austerlitz, 249, 250: at Coburg, 278: In battle of Jéna, 279, 280: siezes Dessu, iii. 2: pursues Hobenlohe, 2: ordered to the Narew, 11: battle of Pultusk, 12: strength in Poland, 13: sickness, 17: battle of Heilsberg, 29: battle of Friedland, 31,

- Lannes, Gen. Jean continued.
  32: created Duke of Montebello, 71: familiarity with N., 75: moves against Castaños, 144: movements before Ratisbon, 151, 162: in battle of Eckmuhl, 162: at the crossing of the Danube at Lobau, 168: battle of Eskilng, 170, 172: mortally wounded, 172: N.'s grief at loss of, 172, 173: reproaches N. for his ambition, 173: N. saves him from drowning, 185: warns N. against treachery, 247: characterization of Talleyrand, iv, 129
  Lanusse, Gen. F., recommended for pr-motion, i. 217
  Laon, battle of, iv, 107-109, 112: N. at, 206
  Laplace, P. S., Minister of the Interior, ii. 87: anceceded by Lucien Bionaparte, 87: created baron, iii. 227
  Lapoype, Gen. J. F., feeling against, in Marseillea, i. 142: acquitted by the Convention, 142
  Larevellière-Lépeaux, Louis-Marie de, member of the Directory, 62
  La Rochej aquelein, Gen. L. du V., killed, iv, 171

- the Directory, 62 La Rochejaquelein, Gen. L. du V., killed, iv. 171 La Romana, Gen. P. C., revolts in Denmark, iii. 124: at Val-maseda, 143: at Santander, 143: joined by Blake, 144 La Rothiere, hattle at, iv. 94, 100 Lasalle, Gen. A. C., captures Stettin, iii. 2: success near Valla-dolid, 122: in battle of Asperu, 170: killed at Wagram, 177 Las Cases, E. A. D., N.'s intimacy with, i. 82: memoirs of N., 137: recounts the story of the "day of the sections," 184: N.'s conversations with ii. 186: N.'s declaration to, concerning the Due d'Enghien, 199: appointed private sceretary to N., iv. 2009: negotiates with Capt. Maitland for N.'s passage to England, 209, 211: accompanies N. to St. Helena, 214: assists N. on his history, 217: dismissed, 217 Latouche-Tréville, Adm. L., scheme of naval operations for, ii.
- Latouche-Tréville, Adm. L., scheme of naval operations for, ii.
- 212: death of, 212 Latour-Maubourg, Gen. M., commanding cavalry in Russian campaign of 1812, iii. 246: battle of Dresden, iv. 56, 57: battle of Leipsic, 71, 73: transfers his allegiance to Louis XVIII., 147 Lauban, N. at, iv. 55
- Lauderdale, Lord, British envoy to France, ii. 261, 262; demands his passports, 273; reopens negotiations, 274 Laudon, Gen. G. E., commanding forces in the Tyrof, i. 268; at
- Lauriston, Gen. A. J., aplendid artillery work at Wagram, iii. 177: replaces Caulaincourt at St. Petersburg, 241; mission to 177: replaces Caulaincourt at St. Petersburg, 241; mission to Knutssoff's camp, 266: commanding division under Eugene, iv, 28: in campaign of 1813, 34: occupies Leipsic, 36: battle of Lutzen, 36: battle of Bautzen, 39: beleaguers Schweidnitz, 42: confronts Blucher at the Bober, 55: detailed to block Blucher's road to Berlin, 66: battle of Leipsic, 71, 75: captured at Leip-tie at Leipsic. 7?

- sic, 75
  Lausanne, ovation to N. at, ii. 17: French forces near, 110: N. at, May 40, 1800, 110
  La Valette, Gen., formulatea demands on the Genoese senate, ii. 7: postmaster-general at Paris, letter to N., March, 1814, iv. 126
  Lawyers, status at outbreak of the Revolution, i. 53
  Lazaref, Russian grenadier, decorated by N. at Tilsit, iii. 54
  League of Virtue, the, iii. 83; iv. 30
  Lehrun, Charles F., appointed third consul, ii. 86, 143: revises the Code, 143: evades responsibility concerning the Duc d'Engliein, 194: Treasurer of France, 206: at N.'s coronation, 219: created Duke of Piacenza, iii. 71: Arch-Treasurer, 78: salary of, 78: at Krasnol, iv. 6
  Lechr, Kiver, military operations on the, ii. 107; iii. 158, 159
  Leclerc, Victor-Emmanuel, conducts expedition against San Domingo, ii. 152, 153: marries Pauline Buonaparte, 152: death of, 153
- 153
- b), 165
   Leclerc, Mme., accompanies her husband to San Domingo, ii.
   152: marries Prince Borghese, 164
   Lecourbe, Gen. C. J., commanding in the Alps, ii. 107: captures Memmingen, 109: captures Stockach, 109: ordered to 1taly, 110
- Litaly, 110 Litaly, 110 Lerrs, Gen. Reille at, iv. 174 Lefebyre, Gen. F. G., commander of the Paris garrison, ii. 71: joins the Bonapartist ranks, 71: in battle of Jona, 280, 281: strength in Poland, iii. 14: besieges Dantzic, 23, 24: created Duke of Dantzic, 71: besieges Saragossa, 122: success at Tudela, 122: near Bilbao, 142: rash movements by, 143: in movement against Madrid, 145: commanding Bayarian troops at Munich, 158: in campaign of Lekmuhl, 160: defeats the Austrians at Aben-berg, 161: at Salzburg, 164: drives Tyroleans from Inns-bruck, 165: relieves Vandamme at Lioz, 174: withdrawn from the Tyrol, 181: commanding the Ohl Gnard, 246: a momentary attack of senility, vi. 126: at council at St. Dizier, 126: accom-panies the Emperor to Paris, 128: at the abdication scene, 139: transfers his allegiance to Lonis XVIIf., 147: recreated mar-abal, 172 ahal, 172
- anal, 172
  Lefebvre-Desnouettes, Col. Charles, service in Egypt, ii. 36
  Lefebvre-Desnouettes, Col. Charles, service in Egypt, ii. 36
  Leghorn, N. plans to meet Joseph at, i. 175 : the English fleet driven from, 228 : levy of enforced contributions from, 229 :
  England gains entrance into, iii. 57 : expulsion of the English from, 57 : position in the French empire, 214 : plots against
  N. in, iv, 160
- N. in, iv. 160
  Legion of Honor, establishment of the, ii. 158, 159; distribution of crosses, 231; trist Russian member of the, iii, 54; Freuch pride in, 70; new members of, 227; abolition of the orphan asylums of the, iv, 159
  Legislature, the, ii. 85, 99-101; constitution of, 155; new methods of electing to, 159; N. opens, Ang. 16, 1807, iii, 61; iis functions, 63; distribution of titles annong heads of, 71; N. contemplates its abolition, iv, 25; demands constitutional government, 85; prorogued, 86; overthrows N., 136

Legnago, French occupation of, i. 227, 232: military operations

- Legrand, Gen. C. J., in battle of Ansterlitz, ii. 249; in battle of Aspern, iii. 170, 171 Lebraiz, G. W. von, advocates French conquest of Egypt,
- Leipsic, seized by the Duke of Brunswick, iii, 181; Eugène es
- n. 31
  Leipsic, seized by the Duke of Brunswick, iif. 181: Eugène establishes headquarters at, iv. 27: French forces at, 28, 36: military movements near, 36, 56, 65, 66, 69: battle of, 70 et seq.: topography, 70, 71: N. in, 75: importance of the battle of, 70 et seq.: topography, 70, 71: N. in, 75: importance of the battle in history, 77: triumph of revolutionary liberalism at, 78: N. sparea the city from fire, 78, 79: effects of the battle of, 79: mistaken ideas concerning N.'s attitude after, 98
  Le Noble's "Spirit of Gerson," N.'s study of, i. 85
  Lenouf, Gen. succeeds Jourdan in command, ii. 60: retreats behind the Rhine, 60
  Leo III, crowns Charles the Great, ii. 208
  Leoben, the French at, i. 211: seized by Masséna, 269: N.'s position at, 269, 270: treaty of, 269-272, 274, 276, 280, 283; ii. 8, 9, 13, 14: alleged duplicity by N. at, i. 270, 271: French march to, ii. 28: Ney's victory at, 236
  Leopold II., acknowledges Hungarian rights, iii. 166
  Lepelletier, the section of, i. 179
  Lesseps, J. B. B., French consul-general at St. Petersburg, iii. 79, 80

- 79, 80 Lestocg, Gen, retreats to Konigaberg, iii, 1: joina the Prussian army, 10: at Neidenburg, 12: at Angerburg, 14: opposes Ney's march to Konigsberg, 14: relieves the garrison of Grandeuz, 15: in campaign of Eyiau, 19, 20: in battle of Heilsberg, 29-31: in Friedland campaign, 31-34: pursued by Davout, 33, 34 Leszcynski, Maria, N.'s imitation of her marriage to Louis XV., iii no her the set of the
- iii 196

- Letourneur, C. L. member of the Directory, i. 200, 202: character, 200: retires from the Directory, ii. 1
  "Letters from the Cape of Good Hope," iv. 217
  "Letters of Buonaparte to Buttafnoco," i. 82
  Leuthen, battle of, iv. 235
  Levant, the, France occupies Venetian possessions in, i. 277: Genoa's commerce with, ii. 10: French plots for disturbances in, 11: France's jealons care for possessions in, 21, 179: England aspires to control, 94: Sehastian's mission to, 174–176: question of establishing French colonies in, 176: Perturuese naval operations in, 212: plaus for redistribution of lands on, iii. 44: the control of, 89: efficient blockade of, impossible, 214
  Leveson-Gower, Lord, English ambassador at St. Petersburg, iii. 81
- iii. 81 Leyen, Von der, member of the Confederation of the Rhine, ii.
- Liberty, Paoli on, i. 5: the recognized colors of, 67
- Liberty, Fach on, i. 5: the recognized colors of, 52 Liberty, fraternity, and equality, i. 57 "Liberty of the Seas," ii. 11 Lichtenstein, member of the Confederation of the Rhine, ii. 260 Lichtenstein, Prince John of, in battle of Austerlitz, ii. 249– 251: negotiates for an armistice, 251: in battle of Aspern, iii. 173: Anstrian peace commissioner, 184–186: at peace council in Paris in 124

- Paris, iv. 134
  Lido, Porto di, Venetians fire on French vessel in, i. 273
  Liebertwolkwitz, military operations near, iv. 70-72
  Liege, fight of Lafayette to, i. 105; military operations near, 115;
  ii. 89, 113, 174, 185
  Liewe held of the 101 185; C(acad et 107; Dlichor's disector

- ii. 89, 113, 174, 185
  Ligny, battle of, iv. 181-185: Gérard at, 187: Blücher's disaster at, 190: a Prussian blunder, 204: the news of, in Paris, 206
  Liguria, ecclesiastical reforms and confiscations in, iii. 202
  Ligurian Alps, guerillas in the, i. 228
  Ligurian Republic, the formation of, ii. 7, 14: French control over, 26: Piedmont added to, 26: reorganized, 120: tribute levied on, 120: English efforta to discredit France in, 169: incorporated with France, 227
  Lille, prace negotiations at, ii. 8, 59, 95: flight of Louis XVIII. to, iv. 166

- Lille, peace negotiations at, ii. 8, 59, 95: flight of Louis XVIII. to, iv. 166
  Lindau, ceded to Bavaria, ii. 252
  Lindau, ceded to Bavaria, ii. 252
  Lindau, ceded to Bavaria, ii. 252
  Lindau, seized by the Duke of Brunswick, iii. 181: military operations mear, iv. 71, 72, 76
  Linz, military novements near, iii. 158-160, 167, 172
  Lisbon, recall of the French envoy from, iii. 95: democracy in, 96: Junot's narret, to, 96, 97: fraternization of the people with Junot's army, 97: Russian squadron sent to, 130: French scheme to seize, 203: Masséna's march to, 218, 219: Masséna's precari-ous situation hefore, 219, 220: Wellington's difficult position at, 220: filled with fugitives, 220
  Litsle, Rouget de, composes the "Marseillaise," i. 102
  Literature, revival of, ii. 165: censorship of, iii. 72
  Lithwania, Poniatowski's doubts of, iii. 247: impaasivity of its people, 252: the march from Smolensk toward, iv. 5: Maret in charge of affairs in, 14
  Littawa, River, military operations on the, ii. 247
  "Little Corporal," the, i. 220: iv. 137, 163
  Little Gorschen, lighting at, iv. 36
  "Little Napoleon" iii. 45
  Little K. Bernard Pass, the crossing of the, ii. 110, 111
  Liverpool, Lord, attacks Wellington, iii. 221: recalls Wellington, iv. 159: mismanagement of English atfairs, 168, 169: embarrass-ment of, 212: views as to the disposition of N., 212: letter to Castiereagh, June 20, 1815, 212
  Lobau, crossing the Danube at, iii. 168, 169, 173, 176

- Lobau, Gen., guarding roads from Bohemia, iv. 63: holds Dresden, 68, 70: in the Waterloo campaign, 174-176: at Charleroi, 181: ordered to Marbais, 185: buttle of Waterloo, 197, 129, 200
  Lobau, River, military movements on the, iii, 169, 171, 175
  Lobenstein, Bernadotte at, ii. 278
  Lodd, battle of, i. 218-220; ii. 92: N.'s narrow escape at, i. 241: withdrawal of the Austrians from Milan to, ii. 113
  Logrofio, French success at, iii. 122; Ney at, 142
  Loire, River, the Empress flees across the, iv. 128: military movements on the, 145
  Loison, Gen, L. H., at Pincenza, ii. 116
  Lombardy, French troops in, i. 70: military operations against, 128, 143, 207, 208, 213, 215: favors the French Revolution, 155: the military gate to, 206: N.'s successes in, 211: expected partition of, 213: richness of the country, 216, 217; ii. 117: N.'s influence in, 246: revolutionary movement in, 265: France's interest in, 270, 280: incorporated in the Cisalpine Republic, ii. 14: held by Austria, 95: N, aims to scence, 113: the iron crown of, 226: N.'s royal progress through, ii. 88
  Lonado, battle of, i. 232-234, 241: N.'s narrow escape at, 233, 234, 241
- 241 London, Talleyrand diplomatic agent in, ii. 22: Talleyrand ex-pelled from, 22: publication of "L'Ambigu" in, 174: Irish rad-ical paper in, subsidized by N., 174: reception of the Duke of Perpendick in 111 101
- Brunswick in, iii. 181 Longwood, N.'s residence at, i. 20; iv. 215–219, 238 Longwy, garrison of, capitulates to Prussia, i. 105: abandoned by the enemy, 110 Loretto, capture of, i. 260, 261: the image of the Lady of, 261 L'Orlent, the squadron ordered to the Mediterranean from, iii.

- Loreut, the square 01, 1:200, 201; the linking of the Lady of, 201
  E'Orlent, the square on, 1:200, 201; the linking of the Lady of, 201
  Lorraine, proposal to continue the war in, iv. 124, 126, 136
  Lothair, N. contrasted with, iii. 202
  Louis, royalist intrigues of, iv. 129
  Louis, king of Elruria, attendant in N.'s ante-chamher, ii. 132: death of, 149, 150; iii. 57
  Louis Capet," i. 116
  Louis Capet," i. 116
  Louis Capet," i. 116
  Louis Capet," i. 116
  Louis V., torgarces Vauban, i. 202: schemes of world-conquest, ii. 31: "abolishes" the Pyrenees, iii. 59: N. not the successor of, 201: influence of bis villatines, iv. 246
  Louis XV, refuses protectorate to Corsica, i. 5: death of, 22: N.'s imitation of his marriage to Maria Leszoynski, iii. 196: N. not the successor of, 201: influence of his hand; store, 57: entest with the Parliament of Paris, 54, 55: alienation of, from the people, 54-56: attempted reforms by, 54-57; abandoned by the nobles, 67: entrailment of his hundirg-grounds, 57: takes up residence in Paris, 57: title under the new constitution, 87: the full of the Bastille, 102: takes refuge in the National Assembly, 102: the National Assembly dismisses his body-guard, 102: Marseilles demands dethronement of 102: ioprisoued in the fault of the Bastille, 102: takes refuge in the National Assembly 102: the National Assembly dismisses his body-guard, 102: Marseilles demands dethronement of, 102: ioprisoued in the Temple, 102: N's views concerning, 104: condomnation and execution, 115: causes of his death, ii. 127; iv. 169
  Louis XVII, t. 159
  Louis XVII, recognized by the powers, ii 173: relationship to the successor of his death, ii. 127; iv. 169

VOL. IV .- 39

Louvain, Gneisenau opens fresh communications via, iv. 184: possible retreat of the Prusslans via, 191 Louverture, Toussaint, defense of San Doningo, il. 152: or-ganizes a consular government, 152: capture and death of,

Louvre, the, N.'s second marriage in, ii. 198-200 Love, N. on, I. 40 Low Countries. See AUSTRIAN NETHERIANS

- ow Countries, See Austrian Netherlands; Batavian Republic; Belgium; Dutch Flanders; Holland; Nether-
- Lowe, Sir Hudson, allegations about N.'s physical silments, iv. 153: character, 216: his custody of N., 216-218: A.'s disputes with 238
- Lübeck, proposal to give it to Prussia, il. 258: surrender of, ill.

Lübeck, proposal to give it to Prussia, il. 258; surrender of, ill.
2: sack of, 4: Bermadotte's force in, 157; extension of the French empire to, 213
Lucc, N. at, iv. 152
Lucca, given to Fnuline (Buonaparte) Borghese, il. 227, 229; given to Elisa, 255; creation of hereditary duchy of, 255
Lucca and Piombino, Prince of. See BACCIOCCH, F. P. Lucca and Piombino, Princess of. See BUONAPARTE, MARIE-ANNE-ELISA
Luckau, defeat of Oudinot at, iv. 56
Lucmannsdorf, Archduke Charles's force at, iii. 160
Lunéville, negotiations between Cobenzi and Joseph Bonaparte at, ii. 122, 125; the Feace of, 125, 126, 131, 132, 168, 171, 193, 229, 230, 259
Luskaz, River, military movements on the, iii, 269

- 229, 230, 259
  Lusha, River, military movements on the, iii, 269
  Lusha, River, military operations on the Piave, 1, 266, 267
  Luitzen, lattle of, iv. 35-38, 53, 65
  Luitzew, Baron L. A. W., raises the "black troop," iv. 31
  Luxembourg, the, Barras's social life in, i. 173: Gohier and Moulins withdraw to, ii. 73: Moreau commoding guard at, 74: the First Consul installed at, 84: residence of the Bonapartea at, 127

Lyceums, the, ii. 146, 147; iii. 73, 74 Lyceums, the, ii. 146, 147; iii. 73, 74 Lyceums, the, iii. 146, 147; iii. 73, 74 Lyceums, N.'s memoir to the Academy at, i. 40: the "Two-cent Re-volt" in, 41: N. at, 41, 108, 134; ii. 58; iv. 151, 165, 171: honors to Paoli in, i. 68 · massacres and anarchy in, 111, 123, 128, 138: Girondist success at, 128: siege of, 133: fall of, 135: recapture of, 148: reorganization of the Cisalpine Republic at, ii. 149: Fesch hecomes archibishop of, 165: repulse of Bubna from be-fore, iv. 98: Angereau driven back to, 109: assaulted hy the allies, 119: evacuated by Angereau, 119, 120: Francis I. at, 121: constitutional assembly summoned to, 165: reception of Artois and Macdonald at, 165: national assembly at, 171 Lyons Academy, the, N.'s essay before, i. 76-78: N.'s competi-tion for prize of, 96

M

Macdonald, Gen, E, J. J. A., commanding Army of the North, i. 2005: a product of Carnot's system, 2021: ordered to command in Naples, ii. 601: succeeds Championnet, 631: defeated on the Trebus, 631: action on the 18th Brunnaire, 111: commanding yuard at Versailles, 741: commanding in the Grisons, 1241: crosses the Spligen, 1251: created Duke of Taranto, iii. 711: commanding in Italy, 1641: pursues Archduke John into Hun-gary, 1651: at Villach, 1681: battle of Jutzen, 361: battle of Warran, 1812, 2461: in Russian campaign, 2561: reaches Tilsit, Warch, 1812, 2461: in Russian campaign, 2561: reaches Tilsit, Warch, 1812, 2461: in Russian campaign, 2561: reaches Tilsit, Warch, 56, 611: detailed to block Blücher's road into Saxony, 661: fails in his movement against Berlin, 59-631: hattle of Katz-bach, 60, 611: reinforcements for, 631: attacked by Blücher's that the Bober, 55, 611: detailed to block Blücher's alvance, 661: battle of Leipsic, 71-73, 751: at crossing of the Elster, 751: defends the Khine at Cologne, 891; Ellicher attempts to cut off, 951: fails to infern the subtration scene, 1931: advises endeavious to redered to join Victor at Montereau, 971: his failure at Château fuerry, 102: before Bray, 102; 1031: moral exhaustion of, 1081: opposed 60 Schwarzenberg, 105; 1121: thirty beyond Troyes, 1051: demoralized at Provins, 1091: moves toward Wintrial, 961: of a first, 1361: strength after the surrender of Paris Att a Fontainebleau, 137, 1381: approves plan of attack on paris at Sontainebleau, 137, 1381: approves plan of attack of paris, 1391: at the abdication scene, 149, 1431: rebuke to Marmona, 141: transfers his allegiance, 1451: reception in the communities, 1455. The standard, Martereu, 1457, 1458 attacked of Aris, 1458; 145

- iii. 201
  Mack, Gen. K., leads Neapolitan army against Rome, ii. 49: mobilizes the Austrian army, 230: quartermaster-general with Archduke Ferdinand in Germany, 233: N.'s opinion of, 233: essays to cross the Danube at Gunzburg, 255: misled concern-ing N.'s movements, 235: interview with N., 235, 236: result of his capitulation, 236
  "Madame Mère," i. 16. See also BUONAPARTE, LETIZIA Madeleine Islands, N. writes of their strategic importance, i. 46

- i. 46 Madison, Jannes, policy of non-intervention, iii. 83: declares war against England, 244 Madirid, effect of Marengo at, ii. 131: Lucien Buonaparte minister at, 164: the land-owning class in. 98: culmination of intrigues at, iii. 100: the queen regreat of Etruria sent to, 102: irritation against France in, 104: Murat advances on, 106: riotiog in, 107, 118: entry of Ferdinand VII. into, 109: Murat enters, 109-111:

- Madrid continued. proposed visit of N. to, 110, 112: N. disapproves the seizure of, 110: Charles IV. a virtual prisoner at, 111: placed under .d-ministration of a junta, 112: announcement of the Bourbons' deposition in, 114: revolt against Murat's tyranny in, 114, 115: Joseph assumes the government at, 117, 121: Murat commanding at, 122: the French possession of, in danger, 122: the French possession of, in danger, 122: the French evacuate, 123, 124: Sir John Moore's aupposed movement on, 144, 145: the French exacts prisoners of war, 145: French troops leave, 146: chilly reception of N. in, 147: French evacuation of, 145: N. makes officers prisoners of war, 145: French troops leave, 146: chilly reception of N. in, 147: French evacuation of, 145: Wellington moves against, 222: Victor Hugo at school io, 223: George stand in, 223
  Magdalena, Islands, expedition against the, i. 114
  Magdalena Islands, expedition against the, i. 114
  Magnaloo, battle of, ii. 60
  Mahmud IL, proclaimed sultan, iii. 127: makes treaty with Russia, 244
  Main, Ri

- BISIOP Maison, Gen., available forces of, iv. 137: transfers his allegi-ance to Lomis XVIII., 147 Maistre, Joseph de, on social order, iii. 72 Maitland, Sir P., in battle of Waterloo, iv. 201, 202 Maitland, Capt. F. L. takes N. on board the "Bellerophon," iv. 209: relations with N., 209-211 "Malbrook s'en va'ten guerre," iv. 75 Malet, C. F. de, conspiracy to overthrow the empire, iv. 4, 14, 15: his career and execution, 14, 15 Malmalson, N. at, ii. 133, 163, 195; iii. 152; iv. 208: social vices at, iii. 75: Josephine withdraws to, 190: N. visits Josephine at, 197

- Malmesbury, Earl of, mission to Paris (1796), i. 278, 279 : views concerning France, 279 : resumes peace negotiations at Lille, ii. 8
- Malta, N. plans acizure of, i. 260, 270; iv. 3
  Malta, N. plans acizure of, i. 262; ii. 11, 2, 21: rival claimants of, 12: French intrignes in, 38: the citadel of the Mediterraneau, 38: N.'s expedition against, 38: capture of, 38: the Knights of St. John, 38, 40: blockade of, 46: besicged by England, 93: Paul I. seeks control of, 93, 102, 126: French capture of, 102: captured by England, 126: proposed cession of, to Russia, 126: England withdraws from, 135, 168: Russia waives claim to, 135: restored to the Knights of St. John, 167: proposed cession by England, 171: France pushes England for declaration concerning, 175, 176: England soccupation of, 179, 182, 184, 225, 226, 228: England refuses to admit the Neapolitan garrison, 182: N. suggests Austrian or Russian occupation, 182: England insists on ten years' occupancy of, 182: N.'s ambition concerning, 184: proposal that England keep, 259: importance of, iii, 89 of. iii
- Mamelukes, scandals concerning, ii. 11, 40: usurpation of Egypt by, 32 : foundation of the military organization of, 39, 40 : at-tack the French at Shebreket, 40 : in the battle of the Pyra-mids, 41 : enlisted in French army, 45 : the last of the, 53
- Manche, Letourneaux de la, member of the Directory, i. 186 Manhood suffrage, i. 110 Manin, last doge of Venice, death of, ii. 16 Manin, last doge of Venice, death of, ii. 16 Mann, Admiral, driven from the Mediterranean, i. 260 Mannheim, N.'s line of retreat via, ii. 276 : proposed conference (a, iv. 83, 99)

- Mannheim, N.'s line of retreat via, ii. 276: proposed conference at, iv. 83, 99
  "Man of destiny," the, i. 195
  "Man on horseback," the, i. 180, 182
  Mansilla, Soult ordered to, iii. 146
  Mantua, capture of, i. 211: imitary operations around, 218, 219, 226, 227, 231: siege of, 227 et seq., 236: garrison, 231: impor-tance, 232: the siege raised, 232: reholeckaded by the French, 234: Wurmser relieves, 234, 235: Austria's efforts to relieve, 236 et seq., 250-258: N.'s critical position before, 237: Wurmser's ineffectual sally from, 240: bids define to France, 247: Wurm-ser'a defense and surrender of, 254-258: disposition by treaty of Leoben, 271: capture of, 280: incorporated in the Cisalpine Re-public, ii. 14: tost to France, 63: interview between N. and Lu-cien at, iii. 102, 103: trial and execution of Hofer at, 186
  Manufactures, condition of, at outbreak of the Revolution, i. 53: encouragement of, ii. 141; 1ii. 27, 234
  "Manuscrit de Yfie d'Elbe," the, i. 103
  "Manuscrit de Ste. Hélène," repudiated by N., iv. 217

- Marat, J. P., head of the committee of snrveillance, i. 110: crimes and assassination of, 138
   Marbais, military movements near, iv. 185, 186
   Marbeuf, Marquis de, tradition concerning his paternity of N., i. 14: influences N.'s education, 21, 22, 26: marriage of, 32:
- death, 41, 61

- death, 41, 61 Marbeuf, Mgr. Y. A. de, bishop of Autan, social influence of, i. 35: disgrace of, 47: literary patron of N., 47 Marbot, Gen., denies the story of Lanne's deathbed, jii. 173: relates anecdote of the cantinier of Busaco, 223: memoira of, iv. 189, 190: on Grouchy's blunders, 189, 190 Marburg, junction of Austrian troops at, ii. 236 Marceau, Gen. F. S. in battle of Flenrus, i. 163: statne at the Tuileries, ii. 97 March, River, military operations on the, iii. 178 Marcheld, the, lighting in, iii. 169: military operations on, 173, 174: Prince Eugene left to guard, 181: Eernadotte's failure on, 216

- 174: Prince Eagene left to guard, 181: Eernadotte's failure on, 216
  Marchiennes, military operations near, iv. 176, 179
  Marciana, N. at, iv. 155
  Marcognet, Gen., in battle of Waterloo, iv. 196
  Marengo, N's over-confidence at, ii. 116: topography of country near, 117: battle of, 116-120; iii. 152, 228: N's trimmphant return from, ii. 120: N's desire for peace after, 122: effect of the battle at Madrid, 131: Moreau's troops employed at, 188: celebration on the field of, 228: statements concerning N.'s movements after, 152: X.'s narrow escape at, iv. 19: a nobility dating framework, 82: in the left of, 28: increased activity of, 28: created Duke of Bassano, 71: report from Laborde to, 193, 194: member of extraordinary council on N.'s second marriage, 195: succeeds Champagny in the Foreign Office, 242: warlike zeal of, 248: eletter from N., Sept. 10, 1812, 264: letter from N., Nov. 29, 1812. V. Aug. 23, 1813, 55: Minister of Foreign Affairs, 81, 83: succeeded by Caulaincourt, 81, 83: influence over A. at Dresden, 100: on the Gongress of Chatillon, 100. 101: records anecdote of Caulaincourt, 81, 83: influence over A. at Dresden, 100: cultaincourt, 81, 83: influence over A. at Dresden, 100: cultaincourt, 81, 83: influence, 100: 101: records anecdote of Caulaincourt, 81, 82: Nings concessions from N., 114: letter to Caulaincourt, March 17, 1814, 114: at council at 84. Dizler, 126: at the abdication scene, 139; member of N.'s new cabinet, 167
- Maria, Queen of Portugal, mental alienation of, iii. 95 : em-barks for Brazil, 97
- Maria Amelia, princess of Saxony, mentioned for marriage with N., iii. 139 Maria Amelia, queen of Saxony, reproaches Metternich for descritog N., iv. 81 Maria Antonietta Theresa, wife of Ferdinand VII., death of,

- meserting A., iv. 81
  Maria Antonietta Theresa, wife of Ferdinand VII., death of, iii. 99
  Maria Carolina, queen of Naples, alleged intrigues of, ii. 229: approaching downfall. 229: breaks her compact with N., 256
  Maria Louisa, of Austria, at Compiègne, iii. 116: proposed marriage with N., 139, 193. 194: preparations for her marriage. 194-197: marriage in Vienna, 195-197: progress from Vienna to Paris, 197, 198: meeting with N. at Compiègne, 197, 198: civil marriage, 198: induction into her imperial court, 198-200: personality and character, 199, 200, 248, 249, 251; iv. 18: visit to Holland, iii. 206: statue by Canova, 229: birth of the King of Rome, 230: abandonment of N., 230; iv. 149, 155, 156, 169: N.'s affection for, iii. 230, 245, 248, 249; iv. 18, 218: accompanies N. to Dresden, iii. 250, 251: returns from Dresden to Paris, 251: at Prague, 251: married to Neipperg, 251: lack of affection for, io France, iv. 15: plan of regency for, 18, 48, 134, 141, 142: visits Pins VII., 26: Metternich on her marriage. 44: political ends subserved through, 44: her marriage "a piece of stupidity," 46: charged with treachery, 46: meets N. at Mainz, 48: dramatic appearances before the people, 87, 88: entrusted to the care of the National Guard, 88: Francis I. to, on the situation, 99: prepares for extremities, 109: Joseph enjoined to preserve her from Anatian capture, 117: letter from N., March 23, 1814, 121, 123: character as Empress-regent, 128: her council, 128: rebuked by N., 128: flight for, 136: N. seeks her intervention with her father, 144: declines to accompany N, to Elba, 149, X, *a sniety for, 149-151; takes refuge with her father, 149, 155: at Rambouillet, 150: N. breaks offreidtimes with, 155: succumbs to Neipperg's wiles, 155: proposed coronation of, 165: release, 217: N.'s sentiments toward, 218
  Marie 4.218
  Marie
- toward, 218 Marie Louise, queen of Etrnria, Lucien refuses to marry, ii. 164: abdicates and goes to Madrid, iii, 102: interview with N., 102: supports Charles IV., 108: ordered to Bayonne, 116 Maria Theresa, character, iii. 36
- Marie Antoinette, tradition concerning, I. 22 "Marie Louises," in the defense of Paris, iv. 123 Mariotte, Talleyrand's agent in Leghorn, iv. 160: plots to seize 160
- Maritime Alps, war in the, i. 116, 206, 208

- Martenne Alps, var m (ne, t. 116, 206, 208
   Markgrafneusiedl, military operations near, iii. 175-177
   Markkleeberg, fighting near, iv. 71
   Markkoff, Count, Russian ambasador at Paris, il. 168, 211 : at the Tuilerica, March 13, 1803, 180, 181
   Marlborough, Duke of, military genins, i. 210 : N. compared with, 210

- IN D Marmont, Gen. A. F. L., N. visits, i. 82: records N.*merey, 137: high at Nihau, 223: records utreamces of A. at Milau, 223: service in Egypt, ii. 36: N. tells him of intention to return from Egypt, K. on bis return from Alexandria, 56: commanding at the unli-tory school, 74: passes Fort Bard, 111, 113: in battle of Ma-renge, 118: ordered from the Texel to Main, 222: at Neuburg, 244: character, 234; iv. 144: letter from X. to, Nov. 15, 1905, hi 244: character, 234; iv. 144: letter from X. to, Nov. 15, 1905, hi 244: character, 234; iv. 144: letter from X. to, Nov. 15, 1905, hi 244: character, 234; iv. 144: letter from X. to, Nov. 15, 1905, hi 244: character, 234; iv. 144: letter from X. to, Nov. 15, 1905, hi 244: character, 234; iv. 144: letter from X. to, Nov. 15, 1905, hi 244: character, 234; iv. 144: letter from X. to, Nov. 15, 1905, hi 244: character, 234; iv. 144: letter from X. to, Nov. 15, 1905, hi 244: character, 234; iv. 144: letter from X. to, Nov. 15, 1905, hi 244: character, 234; iv. 144: letter from X. to, Nov. 15, 1905, hi 244: character, 234; iv. 144: not for the start the boler, 54: character, 234; iv. 144: not for the start the forester, 55; critication of X. at the of 24: at Nature, 18: replace to the start the forester, 56; 51: settle 74: proves anamating, 51: battle of Bautzen, 59, 90: annihilates Obs-reprives from Sézanne against Blücher, 59, 90: annihilates Obs-reprives from Sézanne against Blücher, 59, 90: annihilates Obs-reprives from Sézanne, 19: loss Solssons, 106: innetion with N. 1 10: checke Blucher at the Ource, 10: baster at Ather Ather, 19: tells 10: checke Blucher at the Ource, 10: baster at Ather, 19: tells 10: checke Blucher, 19: coleration of A. and, norr 10: checke Blucher, 19: coleration santers Blücher, 19: tells 10: checke Blucher, 19: colerations anters Blücher, 19: tells 10: checke Blucher, 19: colerations anters Blücher, 19: tells 10: checke Blucher, 19: colerations anters Blücher, 19: tells 10: checke Blucher, 19: coleration of A
- Marne, River, military operations on the, iv. 92, 94, 96, 106, 121,

- nesš for, 218
  Marne, River, military operations on the, iv. 92, 94, 96, 106, 121, 123
  Marriage, onder the Code, ii. 143, 144
  Marseillais, the, in the riots of August 10, 1792, 1, 104, 105
  "Marseillais, the, in the riots of August 10, 1792, 1, 104, 105
  "Marseillais, the, in the riots of August 10, 1792, 1, 104, 105
  "Marseillais, V. at, 1, 42, 61, 79, 108, 134, 156, 184, 195; sends depintation to Paris, 102; demands abolition of monarchy, 102; equipment of Saridinian expedition from, 113; anarchy and massacres in, 123, 127, 128, 131, 138; the Buonapartes in, 127, 148, 185; defeat of the Jacobins in, 128; movement of Marseillais on Paris, 128; captured by Carteaux, 131; refugees from, at Toulon, 132; the 'Bastille' of, 141; X's views of the fortifications, 141, 142; feeling against N. in, 141, 142; circulation of counterfeit money in, 145; news of the Terror in, 140; reopening of commerce with Genoa, 153; forced military loans in, 208; Masséna commanding at, iv. 183; N. sends emissaries to, 163
  "Marshall, John, Talleyrand attempts to corrupt, ii. 23; Martial law, reforms of, 1. 30
  "Marthal Forward," iv. 122, See also ELCHEE
  Marshall, John, Talleyrand attempts to strengther, 213 marty, Queen (of England), likened to Queen Louisa, iii. 63
  "Massen-Carrara, incorporated in the Cisalpine Republic, II. 14; given to Eliss (Buonaparte), 255
  Massa-e-Carrara, incorporated in the Anennines, 143; on the courage of his troops, 143, 144; defeats Austrians at Millesion, 215; at Lodi, 219; defeated at Bassuno, 237; battle of Citadella, 237; defeated at Bassuno, 237; battle of Citadella, 237; defeated at Contractions on the Piave, 237, 257; attacked at St. Michel, 251; in the Rivoll campaign, 253, 254, 256; ii. 207; operations in the Halia Ing., 1267; captures Chinas Veneta, 237; bittle of Citadella, 237; defeated of Citadella, 237; defeated at Bassuno, 237; battle, 251; in the Rivoll campaign, 253, 254, 256; ii. 20

Masseria, Joseph, associated with N. in Corsica, 1. 62: success

- Masseria, Joseph, associated with N. in Corsica, l. 62: success of his agitation, 64
  Massias, Baron N., French minister at Karlsruhe, il. 195
  Matra, M. E., a rival of Paoli, i. 5
  Maubreuil, Comte de, arranges for the assassination of the Emperor, iv. 138, 151
  Mauter, Ililler crosses the Danube at, ili. 164
  Maximilian, Archduke, evacuates Vienna, ili. 163
  Maximilian Joseph, king of Bavaria, gives his daughter to Engene de Beanharnais, il. 257: at the Erfurt conference, ili. 133: his reforms in the Tyrol, 155: threatens to join the coalition, iv. 61: dises de ignes for the atomory of de detection iv. 61: joins the allies, 66: grant of autonomy to, 66: defection
- Meaux, prison massacres in, i. 111 : Blücher moves on, iv. 106 :
- Meakly prison massarrs in, if 113: evacuation of, 123 M's plan of movement via, 113: evacuation of, 123 Mecklenburg, territory restored to the reigning house, iii. 43 Mecklenburg-Schwerin, proposal to include in North German infederation, ii. 979
- Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Duke of, refuses to furnish levics, iv.
- Mecklenburg-Strelitz, proposal to include in North German

- 28
  Mecklenburg-Strelitz, proposal to include in North German Coofederation, ii. 272
  Mecklenburgs, the, assert their independence, iv. 79
  Medical School, lecture system of the, i. 167
  Medical School, lecture system of the, i. 167
  Medital School, lecture system of the, i. 167
  Meditaranean, the, English naval operations in, and power on, i. 123, 132, 153; ii. 10, 11, 35, 38, 67; iii. 89; in aval operations in the, i. 260, 262; departure of the English fleet from, 262; N. a child of, ii. 10; Fraoce's ambition for conquest ol, 11; the citadel of the, 12, 38; N.'s schences on, 12, 103; iii. 89, 90; elaboration of plans for operations in, ii. 21; importance, 31; N. calls for ships in, 46; Adm, Bruix sent to conquer, 55; European jealousy regarding control of, 90; English cessions in, 135, 167, 168; Villeneuve's orders for operation in, 239; attempt to unite French fleets in, 89; N.'s mastery of, 203; English trade with, 214; Roman dominico of, 230
  Meerveldt, Gen, Austrian plenipotentiary at Lcobeo, i. 270; atstrian plenipotentiary in treaty of Campo Fornio, ii, 13; defeated at Leoben, 236; battle of Leipsic, iv. 71, 72; at Austerlitz, 72; sent to ask an armistice, 72; captured at Leipsie, 72
  Mehermet Ali, accession to power, ii, 53

- detected at Leoben, 250; natice of Leipsic, Y. 11, 12; all Anster-litz, 72; sent to ask an arnisite, 72; captured at Leipsic, 72
  Megnadier, Gen., seduced by Marmont, iv. 142
  Meinsent All, accession to power, it. 53
  Meike, on commission to notify N. of his sentence, iv. 213
  Meissen, French forces at, iv. 28
  Melas, Gen., coomanding Anstrian army in Italy, ii. 105; drives Suchet aeross the Var, 108; forces Masséna back into Genoa, 108; millitary tastics, 108; cuts of communication with Massena, 110; position on the Var, 110; hurries to Turio, 110, 111, 114; N.'s plans for the defeat of, 110, 113; reinforcements for, 111; rallies his army at Alessandria, 114, 116; capture of one of his couriers, 116; military characteristics, 117; crosses the Bornida, 117; in battle of Marengo, 117-119; retires to Ales-sandria, 118; superscient of Marengo, 117-119; retires to Ales-sandria, 118; superscient of the Cisalpine Re-public, ii. 149; letter from N. to, March 6, 1804, 191
  Memel, Queeo Louisa at, iii. 36; proposal that Russia seize, 53; Tolstoi visits Frederick William and Louisa at, 87
  Memmingen, captured hy Lecourbe, ii. 109; seized by Soult, 235
  Méneval, Claude F. de, statement of N. to, concerning the Duc d'Enghien, ii. 200; reveals Maria Louisa's defection to N. iv. 156; dismissed from the service of the King of Rome, 169
  Mentone, Re, 123; surrenders in Egypt, 123; disasters in Egypt, 135
  Mentone, N. in, i. 141
  Mercine, P. A., member of the Directory, 16, 23, 35; interferes to prevent N.'s resignation as commander of Egyptian expedition, 35; resigns from the Directory, 62; seduced by Marmout, iv. 142

INDEX

Mersehurg, Bernadotte at, iv. 70 Méry, Blucher at, iv. 104: captured by Oudinot, 104 Messkirch, battle of, ii. 109

Mersehurg, Bernadotte at, iv. 70
Méry, Blucher at, iv. 104: captured by Oudinot, 104
Mestkirch, battle of, ii. 109
Metternich, Prince von, churacter, ii. 87; iv. 45-47: on N.'s designs of 1804-5; ii. 216: on the treaty of Tilsit, iii. 60: allusions to N.'s tenure of power, 84: letter to Stadion, July 26; 1807, 84: N.'s conversations and confidences with, 88, 213, 237, 253; iv. 25, 45: at St. Cloud levee, Aug. 15, 1808, 812: deceived by the clique of Talleyrand and Fouchf, 149, 150: goes to Vieooa, 150: plenipotentiary at Altenburg, 183: suggests a noisen between N. and Maria Louisa, 193, 194: succeeds Stadion as foreign minister, 194: reports France's financial condition, 282: stirs up strife hetween France and Russia, 238: reports the Russian army on the Danube, 230: character of his negotiations with France, 241: on the Russian war of 1812, 249: interview with N. at Dresden, iv, 25: holds back Schwarzeuberg, 29: negotiations with England, 29: prepares to desert N., 29: seeks to embroil Russia and Sweden, 29: negotiations with Nesselrode, 43: meeting with Maret, 44: on the France-Austria meriage, 44: secret meeting with Alexader, 44: oulledealing of, 45, 46: interview with N., 45-47: demands suspension of the Franco-Austrian treaty of 1811, 46: charged by N. with venality, 46: poses as armed mediator, 47: interview with N., June 27, 1813, 45-47: letter to Francis, June 29, 1813, 47: advocates a Continental peace, 47: encourages rivalries of pety potentates, 49: at Coogress of Prague, 49: his policy exposed, 49: diplomacy during the Frankfort parley, 80-63: reprorached for deserting N., 51: letter to Canlaincourt, Nov. 9, 1813, 81, 82: letter from Caulaincourt, Dec. 2, 1813, 83: suggests compromise plan of invasion of France, 91, 92: his meniors, 98, 99: position in European policy of 1814, 115: relations with the allies, 122: letter from X., March 28, 163, 83: suggests in policy concerning France, 115: strives tocheck Prussian ambition, 115: on the European diplomacy, 99-100

Methernich, Countess, share in the Austrian marriage negotia-tions, iii. 194

Metz, imprisonment of the Prince of Hesse-Cassel in, iii. 7: sends men to relief of Paris, iv. 125 Meuse, River, a French river, iii. 207: military movements on

Sends men to relief of Paris, iv. 125
Mense, River, a French river, iii. 207: military movements on the, iv. 171
Mexico, scheme of a Bourbon monarchy in, iii. 106, 111
Middle Guard, in battle of Waterloo, iv. 201
Milan, under foreign yoks, i. 207: N.'s entry into and subsequent visits to, 211, 220, 224, 246; ii. 114, 120; iii. 83, 102, 104: defense of, by Beaulieu, i. 213-220: fight of the Archduke from, 218: coerciou applied to, 219, 220: provisional government for, 214: plundered of works of art, 225: levy of enforced contributions from, 229: N.'s influence in, 264: N.'s residence at Montebello, 277, 278, 280, 282, 288: Gen. Clarke at, 280: celebration of July 14 in (1797), ii. 2: troops moved to Picardy from, 16: Morean ordered to cut Kray's communication with, 107: plan of march to, abandoned, 110: festival at, 113: French entry into (June 2, 1800), 113: N.'s care for the cathedral, 113: asstrian evacuation of, 113: Count of St. Julien sent to, 121: coronation of N. at, 226, 227: Prince Eugène Beauharnais viceroy at, 229: sends deputation to Paris, iv. 17
Milandecree, the, pii. 82, 88, 95, 244
Milanese, the, provisional government for, i. 224: scheme to organize republie in, 227: isposition by treaty of Leobeo, 271: question of restoring to Austria, 280
Milhand, Gen, J. B., transfers his allegiance to Louis XVIII., iv. 1/1; in Waterloo campain, 176
Military courts, reconstitution of, i. 80
Milhardy discipline, reforms in, i. 80-82
Milhardy strategy, N.'s skill in, ii. 107: the art of, 119

Military strategy, N.'s skill in, ii. 107 : the art of, 119 Millell, N.'s summer house and grotto, i. 75, 125 Millesimo, military operations at, i. 213, 215, 216 : hattle of, iv.

<sup>30</sup> Mincio, River, the, military operations on, i. 219, 226, 232, 234; ii, 60, 122: boundary of Austrian holdings in Italy, ii, 119 Minsk, N.'s scheme to seize, iii, 253: the French retreat through, iv, 5, 10

- iv. 5, 10 Miollis, Gen. S. A. F., occupies the city of Rome, iii. 186 Miot de Melito, i. 224: conversations with N., ii. 106: on the demonstration against England, 215: "Memoirs" of, quoted, iii. 103
- 103 Mirabeau, H. G. R., activity at the meeting of the Estates Gen-cral, i. 56; on position of the Navarrese, 65; plea for Corsiea in the National Assembly, 65; share in the conquest of Cor-sica, 65; inspires annexty to Paoli, 65, 68; leads the National Assembly against Buttafnoco, 75; military reforms of, 80; succeeds Necker, 88; death, 88; opinion of Talleyrand, ii. 22; statue at the Tuileries, 97; his polities to be ignored, iii. 28 Miranda, Bessieres at, ii. 142 Miranda, Bessieres the United States acquires control of

Mississippi, River, the, the United States acquires control of, 184

Mittau, Louis XVIII. at, iii. 45

Mlawa, military operations near, iii, 18 Möckern, military operations near, iv, 70, 72

Modena, intrigue in the court of, i. 207: held to ransem, 228, 229: the armistice with, broken, 247: Austria's protectorate over, 262: Austria seeks to retain, 270: disposition by treaty of Theorem, 262: Austria seeks to retain, 270: disposition by treaty of Leoben, 270, 271: incorporated into the Cisalpine Republic, ii. 14: N.'s bad faith with, 95 Modena, Duke of, attempts to bribe N., i. 223, 275, 276: destruc-tion of his government, 228: driven from his throne, 247 Modlin, French military stores in, iii. 253: held by the French,

- Mohring, French ministry stores in, in, 253: neud by the French, iv. 33
  Mohringen, skirouish at, iii. 15
  Molayria, Russian ambition to possess, ii. 223; iii. 80, 85, 92, 93, 137, 191, 236: dismissal of the Turkish viceroy of, 5: alleged concession of, to Russia, 48: Russian evacuation of, 54: N. offers to offset Silesia against Wallachia and, 86, 87, 90: Russia threatened with the loss of, 239
  Molitor, Gen, G. J. J., in battle of Aspern, iii. 170
  Molitor, Gen, R. J. H., Prussian commander, ii. 272
  Mollien, N. F., director of public debt, ii. 141: keeper of the army-chest, 264, 266: minister of the treasury, 265, 266: advises against war, iii. 235: protests against issue of paper money, iv. 24: remark of N. to, 166, 167: member of N.'s new cabinet, 167

- 167

- 24: remark of N. to, 166, 167: member of N.'s new cabinet, 167
  Monaco, Prince of, brought as prisoner to N., iv, 163
  Moncey, Gen., crosses the St. Gotthard, ii. 110, 113: created marshal, 207: created Duke of Conegliano, iii. 71: invades Spain, 105: defeated at Valencia, 121: advances on Valencia, 122: at Madrid, 122: at Tatalla, 142: moves against Castaños, 144: besieges Saragossa, 145: at review of the Gnard at Fontainelleau, iv. 137: recreated marshal, 172
  Mondego, River, Wellington retreats down the, iii. 218
  Mondovi, battle of, i. 215, 216
  Monge, Gaspard, N.'s hatred for, ii. 83
  Monfalcone, ceded to France, iii. 184
  Monge, Gaspard, N.'s mathematical teacher, i. 107: minister of the navy, 107: founds the Polytechnic School, 167: plunders Italian scientific collections, 225: carries treaty of Campo Formio to the Directory, ii. 16: warlike declaration against England, 21: elaborates plan for operations in the Mediterranean, 21: accompanies N. on his return from Alexandria, 56: member of the senate, 100: N.'s friendship with, 214: created baron, iii. 227
- ber of the senate, 100: N.'s friendship with, 214: created baron, iii. 227 "Moniteur," the, records "Buona Parte's" action at Toulon, i. 136: records N.'s daily life, ii. 20: on the events of the 18th Brumaire, 72: excites warlike feeling in France, (1800), 96: at-tacks England, 174, 187: publishes Sebastian's report, 176: on the imperial court at Aachen, 217: threatens Austria, 229: on the field of Ansterlitz, 252: insults Prussia, 258: announces the position of the Napoleonic princes, iii. 67, 68: announces the fall of the House of Braganza, 96: justifies French invasion of Spain, 105: publishes "authorized" reports of the Spanish failure, 153: on Anstrian aggressions, 165: announces the an-nexation of Holland, 212: N. offers Alexander the use of, 239: proclamation to the National Guard, March 8, 1815, iv. 187 Monk, Gen, George, N. is offered the rôle of, ii. 6: Masséna fitted for the rôle, 65: N, compared with, 148: Marmont emu-lates the rôle, iv. 138, 142 Monroe, James, President of United States, understanding with England, iii. 42 Monroe Doctrine, the, iv. 245 Montalivet, Comte J. P. B., member of the Empress-Regeot's council, iv. 128 Mont Blanc, Department of, i. 133 Montrou Gan. J. P.

Mont Blanc, Department of, i. 133 Montbrun, Gen. L. P., commanding cavalry in Russian cam-paign of, 1812, iii. 246

- Mont Cenis pass, the, crossed by N., ii. 18: crossed by Tur-reau, 110, 113: Austrian watch on, 111: the road over, 223; iii. 62

Tean, 110, 113: Austrian watch on, 111: the road over, 223; iii. 62
Monte Albaredo, the French pass over, ii. 111
Monte Baldo, military operations near, i. 232, 237, 251-254
Montebello, the Austrian retreat toward, i. 239: N.'s residence at, 277, 278, 280, 282, 283: Josephine at, 281, 282: Genoese embassy to, ii. 7: engagements near, 116: battle of, 128: Lannes created Duke of, iii. 71. See LANNES
Montebello, the Austrian retreat toward, i. 239: N.'s residence at, 270, 278, 280, 282, 283: Josephine at, 281, 282: Genoese embassy to, ii. 7: engagements near, 116: battle of, 128: Lannes created Duke of, iii. 71. See LANNES
Montenotte, hattle of, i. 215; iv. 97
Montereau, military movements near, iv. 97, 100: Victor ordered to seize, 102: battle of, 103: captured by the French, 103
Monte Rotondo, Carlo Buonaparte at, 1. 5
Montesquieu, C. de S., views on Corsica, I. 7: N.'s views on his political speculations, ii. 33, 34: N's study of, 36: on human ambition, iii. 67: N.'s admiration for, 136: "Grandeur and Fall of the Romans," iv. 100
Montesquiou, A. A., royalist intrigues of, iv. 129: member of the executive commission, 135
Montesquiou, M. G., Bavarian minister of state, iii. 139
Mont Genèvre, building a road over, it. 233
Montholo, Charles, the "Manuscrit del'file d'Elbe " attributed to, i, 108: N.'s declaration to, concerning the Dnc d'Enghien, ii. 199: accompanies N. to St, Helena, 214: residence on the island, 217: assists N. on his history, 217: remark of N. to, 218

Monthyon, Gen., escorts N. from the field of Waterloo, iv. 203 Montiereuder, military movements at, iv. 94 Montmartre, defense of, iv. 131: captured by the Prussians, 132

Montmirail, battle of, iv. 96, 97 Montmorency, royalist intrigues of, iv. 129 Montpellier, death of Carlo Buonaparte at, i. 32 Mont St. Jean, Wellington's retreat to, iv. 184, 187 : possibility of Grouchy reaching, 189 : topography of, 191 : Wellington's center at, 191 : fighting at, 205 Moore, Sir John, commanding English troops in the Peninsula, iif. 144 : at Sahumanea, 144 : at Astorga, 145, 146 : French search for, 145 : prepares to attack Soult, 146 : crosses the Esla, 146 : destroys magazhees at Benevento, 146 : croshes Coranna, 146 his retreat, death, and example, 146, 147 : defact of Soult, 219

Moosburg, Archduke Charles's force at, iii. 161: Masséna at,

- nrated for, 158 Moreau, Mime, ambition of, ii. 190, 191 Morlaix, Villeneuve at, ii. 241 "Morning Journal," on England's indifference to French af-fairs, iv. 169 Morsbach, military movements near, iii. 160
- tarts, iv. 109
  Morsbach, military movements near, iii. 160
  Morsbach, military movements near, iii. 160
  Mortier, Gen, E. A., a product of Carnot's system, i. 202: occupies Hanover, ii. 183: created marshal, 207: destruction of his division, 236: annihilated at Durrenstein, 243: in the Auster-litz campaign, 245: occupies Mainz, 276; iii. 7: seizes the Prince of Hesse-Cassel, 7: threatens Stralsund, 23: battle of Heilsberg, 20: battle of Friedland, 31: created Duke of Treviso, 70: yearly income, 71: reinforcements for, 129: occupies Franconia, 129: forces in Spain, 143: ordered to blow up the Kremlin, 269, 270: in the retreat from Moscow, iv. 1: commanding the Guard, campaign of 1813, 34: battle of Uresden, 56, 67: holds Pirna, 59, 63: battle of Leipsic, 71: at Troyes, 94: battle of Montmirail, 96: at Soissons, 104: junction with M. 106: checks Blücher at the Ourcq, 106: battle of Laon, 108: defends the Paris line against Elücher, 113: at Rheims, 113: at Soissons, 112; junction with Marnont, 123: chriven back to Charenton, 123: junction with Marnont, 123: chriven back to Charenton, 124; idenounced by N., 135: ordered to take position under the walls of Paris, 136: strength after surrender of Paris, 136; 317: attachment to N., 137: absent from the Waterloo campaign, 175
- 137: attachment to N., 137: absent from the Waterloo campaign, 175
  Moscow, N. threatens to march to, iii. 232: military enthusiasm in, 255: Russian retreat from Smolensk toward. 257: N.'s line from the Niemen to, 259: defense of, 260-262: agreement of the opposing generals as to its capture, 261, 265: the Kremlin, 262, 264: capture and burning, 262-265: N. expects Alexander to save, 263: N.'s political and military blunders at, 260, 264: topography, bnildings, monnments, etc., 264: fountain of Russian inspiration, 264: Russian abadonment of, 265: disputed honor of the conformation, 265: pillage of, 265; 266: the French army in, 266-267: N.'s dissipation in, 267: N.'s intention to be crowned in, 267: French retreat from, 267-270; iv. 1 et seq.: throwing away the spoils of, 2: destruction of, 19: Alexander's desire to avenge the French seizure of, 80
  Mosel, River, military movements on the, iii, 261, 264
  Monlins, J. F. A., member of the Directory, ii. 63: represents Jacobin element in the Directory, 64: proposed resignation of, 69: refuses to resign, 73: imprisonment of, 74, 78: N.'s charges against, before the Ancients, 77, 78

<text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text>

N

- N, Napoleon's monogram, iii. 37 Namur, military operations near, iv. 174, 179, 183, 185, 186, 203 Nangis, Victor and Ondinot driven back to, iv. 97: Wittgemetein driven from, 103: N. at, 103: Berthier at, 103: French retreat stopped at, 112 Nansouty, Gen, in the Eckmühl campaign, iii. 161: commund-ing cavalry in Russian campaign of 1812, 246: moves from Sé-zanne against Blücher, iv. 95, 96: ordered toward Montmirail, 96: transfers his allegiance to Louis XVIII., 147

Papeleen Buomaparte – continued.
Formatic, 69: critical moment in Talleyrand's house, 70: temporary dictator, 72: speech to Barrak's messenger, 19th Brive, 77, 79, 82: the arbitrer of French desing, 82: reports of his weakli, 83: First Consul, 83, 84, 86: royalist predilections for, 88: the choice of two policies, 9: the evolution of the connect of state his, 100: aims at centralization of government, 101: hendlent effects of his regime on the world, 101: controls are britter and the general of seven and the general of the connect of the induced two policy, 103, 104: makes centralization of covernment, 101: hendlent effects of his regime on the world, 101: controls are britter, distinction between the statesonal and the general, 119, 120: violation of the constitution in assuming command, 202 undisputed mastery of France, 120: sprive tricks with old quastises of Europe, 126: period of his greatest removal, 129, 100: narried life, 129, 130, 163, 164: malhest effects of his seven the statesonal and the general, 119, 120: violation of the constitution in assuming command, 202 undisputed mastery of France, 120: sprive tricks with old quastises of Europe, 126: period of his greatest removal, 129, 100: narried life, 129, 130, 163, 164: malhest life, 154, 156, 255; joilty 104, 157, 160: joilty toward his energies, 155, populatin, 157, 160: joilty toward his energies, 155, populatin, 157, 160: populatin, 161, 153, 130, 156; populatin, 167, 169; populatin, 161, 150; angreans of the tool of fate and architeet of his own fortanes, 161: his first marring, 161: a solider of fortune, 161: a that multiply, 161; is first marring, 163, 160; indicate and regime and architee or parts, 200; portuge and parts and part regulning the government by force, 207, 208: abdicates for the second time, 207: adopts civilian's clothing, 208: the covernment column prisoner of the attes (2), 208: connunt cachenes, and private cibic and bonaparte.

<text>

Napoleon Euonaparte - continued.

Napeleon Buonaparto — continued.
 a private cibican, 213: appeals against like sentence, 213, 211: the connuose with friends in France, 217: farewell message to hisson, 218: bit settement, 218: bit releases, 210: 417: and private cibican, 220: 418: bit settement, 218: bit settement, 218: private cibican, 220: 418: private cibican, 220: 418: private cibican, 220: 418: private cibican, 220: 418: private cibican, 220: 420: 108: private, 220: 418: private, 221: private, 222: private, 221: private, 221: private, 221: private, 221: private, 222: private, 221: private, 221: private, 222: private, 221: private, 222: private, 223: priva

293 The second seco

Napoleone, Stephanie, marries Prince Charles of Baden, ii. 257:

- gency for, 48 Napoleone, Stephanie, marries Prince Charles of Baden, ii. 257: N's liaison with, 257 Napoleon's Mount, ii. 247, 249 Narbonne, Comte de, uission from Dresden to Russia, iil. 251 Narew, River, military movements on the, iii. 11, 18, 23 Nassau, member of the Confederation of the Rhine, ii. 260, 261 Nassau, Prince of, ancedote of, iv. 48 National Assembly, the, Corsican affairs in, i. 62-66: persuades Paoli to return to Corsica, 68: condenns Buttafuoce, 75: refuses to create Corsican National Guard, 78: debates on the unilitary power, 80: difficulties of its work, 86-88, 91, 92: self-effacement of, 88: ecclesiastical legislation by, 98: the King takes refuge in, 102: dismisses the King's hody-guard, 102: aloishes the king-ship. 102: Lafayette endeavors to calm, 102, 103: disperses, 111 National Convention, the, election of a, i. 110: meeting of, Sept. 21, 1792, 111: the King summoned before, 115: enforces its decrees in Corsica, 117: Paoli summoned to appear before, 117, 121: appeal to, by X, in Paoli's behalf, 18: denounces Paoli, 119: sanda new commissioners to Corsica, 121: promises indemnity to Corsican sufferers, 123, 124: supremacy of, 124: Corsica's successful revolt against, 129: popular support of, 134: effect of the "Treason of Toulon" on, 133: receives news of eapture of Toulon, 137: vengeance on Toulon, 137, 138: overthrow of the Girondists, 138: X, and Gen, Lapoype sum-noned before, 142: ctroristis in, 148: turns on Robesplere, 149: downfall, 149, 158: Jacobins In, 158: question of reélece-

- National Convention, the continued. tion of members, 161, 166, 167, 178 : rebellion and riots against, 162, 168, 179 et seq. : proclaims annesty, 164 : royalist intrigues in, 165 : popular hatred of, 167 : prepares for conflict, 168, 179 : adopts N.'s plan for Italian campaign, 175 : distrusts N., 179 : triumph on the Thirteenth Vendémiaire, 182-185 : its plans thwarted by violence, 183 : N.'s peculiar relations to, 205, 206 : financial maladministration, ii. 140 : plans for invad-ing England, 185 : scheme of revolutionary extension, iii, 249 National Guard, the, organization and reorganization of, i. 57, 80, 81, 92, 162, 182, 185 : calling in officers of, 95, 96 : N. adju-tant-major in, 96 : feeling against the Convention among, 168, 178 : defense of the Tuileries, 179 : oppose the Convention forces, 180-182 : the Thirteenth Vendémiaire, 180-182 : N. ap-pointed commander of, ii. 70, 71 : drafts for the imperial army from, iv, 22, 23 : in defense of Paris, 123, 128 : decay of imper-ialism among, 128 : fails to persuade the Empress to stay, 131 : N. hopes to raise, 135 : refuses to obey the provisional govern-ment, 143 : proclamation to, March 8, 1815, 157 : reviewed by N., 171 : surfly spirit among, 171 National Guard of Corsica, N.'s schemes to form, i. 66 : N. appointed adjutant-major in, 96 National Library, lecture system of the, i. 167 National Library lecture system of the, i. 167 Natural Library government of, 131 Navyre, question of the sovereignty of, i. 54, 65 : incorporated with France, 65 : French invasion of, iii. 105 : the chatesu of, granted to Ferdinand VII, 115 : N.'s contemplated movements in, 143 : military government of, 213 Navyr, N.'s aptitude for the, i. 29 : suicide anong officers of the French, i. 2 : preparations at Toulon, 27 Nazareth, skirmish at, ii. 48, 40 Necker, Jacquees, schemes of, i. 22 : N.'s study of, 40 : minister of futance, 50 : problems of taxation, 50, 54 : flight from France, 51 : banishment, 56 : fall, 88 : Mme, de Stael's inh

- ni. 225 Negroes, arguments in favor of enslaving, ii. 152 Neidenburg, military operations near, iii. 12, 14 Neipperg, Count A. A., relations with Maria Louisa, iii. 251; iv. 155, 169 Nelsse, stege of, iii. 23 Nelsson, Adm. Horatio, csplures Bastia, i. 154; ii. 42: expected cooperation with Anstria at Savana i. 415 ; sole from Galicia
- Ne' Is5, Te9
  Ne'sse, siege of, iii. 23
  Nelson, Adm. Horatlo, explures Bastia, i. 154; ii. 42: expected cooperation with Anstria at Savona, i. 215: sails from Cadiz in chase of the Egyptian expedition, ii. 38: returns to Sicily, 42: seeks the French fleet in Greece, 42: follows to Egypt, 42: losses an eye at Cadiz, 42: battle of Cape St. Vincent, 42: battle of the Nile, 42, 43, 56: battle of Cape St. Vincent, 42: battle of the Nile, 42, 43, 56: battle of Cape St. Vincent, 42: battle of the Nile, 42, 43, 56: battle of Cape St. Vincent, 42: battle of Egypt, 212: villeneuve avoids, 213: enticed to the West Indies, 230: joins Cornwallis before Brest, 230: sails for Portsmouth, 230: pursnes Villeneuve to Gibraltar, 230: chases Villeneuve to the West Indies, and back, 238: arrives off Cadiz, 239: his ambition, 239: battle of Trafalgar, 240-242: his death, 241
  Nemours, Cossacks advance to, iv. 103
  Nesselrode, Count, appearance in Russian diplomacy, iv. 39: refnees to treat with France, 39, 40: conference with Francis, 43: demands Anstria's adherence to the coalition, 43: agrees to basis of Anstrian mediation, 43: letter from Talleyrand to, 129: approves the restoration of the Bourbons, 134: negotiates with Talleyrand, 134
  Netherlands, French defeats in, i. 100: Hoche's campsign in, 263: England's interest in, 270; iv. 99: the enlighteoment of, ii. 25: cornes of afairs (1797-98), 25; St: French agents in the, 26: English expedition to destroy the dock-yards of, iii, 183: French influence in, iv. 80: Bernadotte assigned to watch, 90; English troops in the, 91: the allice' invasion of France via, 93, 191: campaign of the Hundred Days, 174 et seq.: weakness of the troops of, 183, 195, 197. See also AUSTRIAN NETHERLANDS; BELGIUM; Marnont at, ii. 234
  Neutral, JUTCH FLANDERS; HOLLAND
  Neuburg, Marnont at, ii. 234
  Neutral, JUTCH FLANDERS; HOLLAND
  Neutral, JOTCH FLANDERS; HOLLAND
  Neutraley, deperimeter of the Directory, ii. 5, 23:

- New Castile, Duke del Infantado comnissioned governor of, iii. 100 New England, commercial greed, iii. 82, 83 Newfoundland, proposed French expedition to, ii. 213 New Galicia, annexed to the grand duchy of Warsaw, iii. 184 New Gelans, battle of, iv. 174 New York, proposal that N. sail to, iv. 209 Ney, Marshal Michel, a product of Carnot's system, i. 202 : in battle of Hohenlinden, ii. 125 : occupies Switzerland, 150, 175 : service in the Army of England, 185 : execution of, 191 : joins N. at Waterloo, 191 : created marshal, 201 : plan for his inva-sion of Ireland, 214 : character, 234 ; iii. 75 ; iv. 126 : holds the bridge at Gunzburg, ii. 235 : victory at Leoben, 236 : clears the enemy from the Tyrol, 245 : at Rayrenth, 278 : in battle of Jóna, 280, 281 : invests Magdeburg, ii. 2 : st Neidenburg, 12 : strength in Poland, 13 : threatens Konigsberg, 14, 15 : repri-manded by N., 14 : retreats from Heilsberg, 15 : pursued by Bennigsen, 15 : escapes to Gilgenburg, 15 : in Eylau eampaign

- <page-header><text><text><text><text><text><text><text>

- Nordingen, the French position at, it. 234 : capture of werneck's division at, 235
  Normandy, nnrest in, i. 133 : Marmont's troops to withdraw into, iv. 138
  North, proposed League of the, ii. 271
  North Gape, a boundary of the Continental System, iii. 214
  North German Confederation, proposed organization of, ii. 271-273, 275. See also CONFEDERATION OF THE RHINK
  North Sea, proposed French expedition to, ii. 138; part of the coast incorporated into the French Empire, iii. 213, 220, 225
  "Northmberland," the, conveys X. to St. Helena, iv. 214
  Norway, lost to Denmark, iii. 59: subordination to Denmark, 214: in vassalage to France, 214: offered by Alexander to Sweden, 125, 239, 243, 246: Bernadotte's ambition to acquire, 215; iv. 32, 90: in possession of Denmark, iii. 216: Russian troops for the conquest of, 266: struggle with Sweden, iv. 170
  Nossen, defeat of the Saxons by the Black Legion at, iii. 180
  Notre Dame Cathedral, service in honor of the Concordat at, ii. 138, 139: N's coronation in, 218-221
  Novi, battle of, ii. 57, 63, 66: military operations near, ii. 117
  Nuits, N. visits, i. 82, 83: society in, 82, 83
  Nyon, Carnot's concealment at, ii. 17

0

- O "Oberon," iii. 136 Ocana, battle of, iii. 219, 221 Ochs, Peter, republican propagandist in Switzerland, ii. 27 Oder, River, the, proposed surrender to N. of forta on, iii. 138: threatened expulsion of the French from, iv. 44; military move-ments on, 52: French garrisons on, 76 VOL. IV.--40

" Edipe," performed at Erfurt, lil, 134

- "Edipe," performed at Erfurt, iil. 134
  Offenburg, reputed emigrant complexitors in, il. 193: Canlain-cont's expedition to, 194
  Officialdom, popular hatred of, i. 54
  Offingen, the French position at, il. 235
  Oglio, River, the, Beanlieu retrents behind, i. 219: Anstria's boundary in Venetia, 271: Scherer driven behind, il. 60
  O'Hara, Gen, captured before Tonlon, i. 136
  Old Castille, French occupation of, ili, 122
  Oldenburg, proposal to include in North German Confederation, ii. 272: scheme to incorporate with France, ili. 204: Alexander offers to exchange, for Erfurt, 220: incorporated in the French empire, 236, 249: proposal that France evacuate, iv. 38: restored to its former ruler, 7
  Oldenburg, Duke of, marries Grand Duchess Catherine, ili. 140, 213: dethroued, 213; 234: proposed allotment of territory to, iv. 39
  Old Guard, the, battle of Leipsic, ii. 70, 73: moves against Bluicher from Sézanne, 95: N. reviews them at Fontstinebleau, 136, 137: N. takes leave of, 150: reduction of the pay of, 159: in battle of Waterloo, 199, 201. See also IMPERIAL GUARD
  Ollioules, capture and recapture of, a. 134
  Olmitiz, military operations neng, ii. 245, 247
  Olsusieff, Gen, annihilated by Marmont ut Champaubert, iv. 96
  O'Meara, Edward, publisher of an Elban MS, i. 103: N.'s declaration to, concerning the Duc d'Englien, il. 199: N.'s conversations with, iii. 6: physician to N., 217: assists N. on his history, 217: diamissed by Lowe, 217
  Oneglia, Massóna's advance through, i. 143: French troops in the valley of, 144: N.'s service at 144, 151
  Oporto, selzure of the French governor of, iii. 97: bishop of, applies to England for help, 97: cocupied by Soult, 212
  Oppin, Bernadotte at, iv. 70
  Orange, the Prince of, recalled to Holland, iv. 79: in Waterloo campaign, 175, 180: at the Duchess of Biohmond's ball, 180: battle of Quatre Braa, 182
  Orcha, milikary movementa

- Orezza, N. at, i. 69, 93: meeting of the constituent assembly at, 72-74
  Orgon, attempt to assassinate N. at, iv. 152
  Orizoni, Combe B., N.'s statement to, i. 226
  "Orient," the, stutk in Aboukir Bay, it. 43
  Oriental question, the, ii. 168
  Orleans, prison massacres in, i. 111: French garrison at, iv. 137
  Ornea, Masséna's advance through, i. 143
  Orscha, French garrison in, iii. 259
  Ortenau, ceded to Eaden, ii. 252
  Osnabrück, position in the French empire, iii. 214
  Ossian, N.'s acquaintance with and study of, ii. 36; iv. 149, 216
  Ostermann-Tolstol, Gen, in battle of Eylan, iii. 19, 20: character, 86: conducts negotiations with N.', 86, 87, 90, 91: reception at Paris, 87: quartel with Ney, 87: N.'s opinion of, 91: at # St. Cloud levee, Ang. 16, 1908, 132
  Osterode, N.'s headquartera at, iii. 22, 26
  Ostrolenka, Russian retreat to, iii. 12: Russiana driven out of, 23
  Ostarolenka, Russian retreat at, iii. 27
  Ottranto, enharge on, ii. 183: creation of hereditary duchy of, 255: Fouché created Duke of, iii. 71. See FOUCHÉ
  Ott, Gen., besieges Genoa, ii. 108, 110, 113, 114: defeated by Laurea at Casteggio, 116: reaches Alesandria, 116: in battle of Marengo, 118, 119

- of Marenzo, 118, 19 Otto, Comte L. G., annhassador to England, ii. 176 : letter from N., Oct. 23, 1802, 175, 185 : recalled from London, 177 Otto the Great, N. likened to, ii. 218 Otto man Empire, proposed partition of, ii. 32. See also EOYPT:

- Ottoman Empire, proposed partition of, ii. 32. See also EOYPT: TURKEY
  Oubril, his treaty rejected by Alexander I., ii. 272, 273: Eussian envoy to Paris, 259, 262, 271, 272
  Oudlnot, Gen, C. N., in buttle of Ansterlitz, ii. 249: created Dake of Reggio, iii. 71: N.'s opinion of, 75: character, 75: com-manding in Hanau, 157: ordered to Angsburg, 158: ordered to Abensherg, 162: battle of Wagram, 176, 177: ordered to coorce Holland, 204: strength, March, 1812, 246: at the crossing of the Beresina, iv. 8-10: in campaign of 1813, 34: threatens Berlin, 42, 61: N.'s instructions to, 54: defeated at Luckau, 66: fails in his movement against Berlin, 59-61: battle of Grossbeeren, 60: retreats to Wittenberg, 60: superseded by Ney, 62: battle of Dennewitz, 63, 64: at Dresden, 65: battle of Leipsic, 71, 73: checks pursuits at Lindenan, 75: opposes Schwarzeoberg, 95: driven back to Nangis, 97: hefore Provins, 103: captures Méry, 104: ordered to hold Elicher, 104: checked by Schwarzenberg, 105: driven beyond Troyes, 105: retreats from Arcis, 119: at Bar-sur-Ornain, 126: strength after the surrender of Paris, 137: at the abdication scene, 139: transfers his allegiance to Louis XVIII., 147: recreated marshal, 172
  Ourca, River, nilitary operations on the, iv. 106
  Ouvrard, G. J., sent by Fonché on mission to England, iii. 208

Pachra, River, French crossing of the, iii. 269 Pacific Ocean, influence of the United States on the, ii. 184

Paderborn, appartioned to Prussia, ii. 170

Padua, military operations near, i. 251: creation of hereditary duchy of, ii. 255 Pagerie, Marie-Josephe-Rose Tascher de la. See BEAL-HARNAIS, JOSEPHINE

HARNAIS, JOSEPHINE Pagerie, MIIe, Tascher de la, sought in marriage by Ferdinsnd VII., ili 99, 100: marries the Duke of Aremberg, ii. 104 Pagerie, Tascher de la, father of Josephine Beauharnais, i. 189: death of, 190 Paine, Thomas, on financial condition of England, ii. 21 Pajol, Gen., seizes Montereau, iv. 103: in the Waterloo cam-paire, 176: engagement at Charleroi, 177: battle of Ligny, 183 Palace of the Government, the, ii. 97 Palafox, Gen. José de, military ability, iii. 122: at Saragossa, 143, 144

Palais Royal, headquarters of the tribunate, ii. 100: a refuge for the disreputable, 100 Palestine, the key of, ii. 49: importance of N.'s conquering, 49,

<sup>50</sup> Palm, J. P., bookseller of Nuremberg, execution of, ii. 271 Palma, N. advances to, i. 274 Pamplona, N. secks information conceruing, iii. 101: seized hy Darmagnac, 105

- Paima, N. advances to, i. 274
  Parmplona, N. seeks information conceruing, iii. 101: seized by Darmagnac, 105
  Pan, Mallet du, criticizes Mme. de Staël, iii. 227
  Panatheri, secretary of Directory of Corsica, i. 73
  Pantheon Club, closing of the, i. 186
  Paoli, Pascal his share in the bistory of Corsica, i. 4 et seq.: relations with the Jews and with the Vatican, 5: compared with Washington, 6: his character and renown, 6, 7: offers asylum to Ronssean, 7: hoodwinked by Choiseul, 8, 9: defeat and escape, 10: appeals to the Powers, 10: aspirations for Corsica, 12, 13, 62: N.'s address to, 19: his conciliation sought by France, 21: N. a supporter and admirer of, 27, 47, 48, 77, 118, 125: the "History of Corsica, "dedicated to, 47, 48; N7, scorrespondence with, 49-51: his return to Corsica, 62-68, 70, 72: activity of his agents, 63: directs Corsican agitation, 64: amnesty granted to, 65, 67: quits England, 68: honored by Louis XVI. and the National Assembly, 68: misrepresented in Paris, 68: opoularity in Corsica, 73: agitation in his behalf in Corsica, 94, 99: interferes in riots in Ajaccio, 99: difficulties of his situation, 99: displeasure at N., 99, 100: N. seeks reconciliation with, 109: despair of, 109: commander-in-chief in Corsica, 109: lieutenant-general in the French army, 110: opposes Sardinian invasion scheme, 111, 112, 114, 117: N.'s instruction on declaration of war against England, 116, 117: denomiced by Lucien Buomaparte, 117: summoned to appear before the National Convention, 117, 121: N. antagonizes, 118-120; 143: denounced by the National Convention, 119: synamone N. to Corte, 120: offers to leave Corsica, 211: seeks English protection for Corsica, 121-123: views of condition of France, 122: declared an outlaw, 123: fails to fortify Ajaccio, 183: seeks aid from England, 154: recalled to England, 164
  Paolists, the, i. 62
- France, 122: declared all outlaw, 123: fails to ferfuly Afacelo, 153: seeks aid from England, 154: recalled to England, 164
  Paolists, the, i. 62
  Papacy, the, French feeling against the, i. 229: the Directory desires its overthrow, 259, 261: N.'s alliance with, 261: N. proposes negotiations with the, ii. 7: relations of N. and France with, 132, 133, 139. See also CHUKCH; PTUS VII.; ROME
  Papal States, the, French proposition to revolutionize, i. 227: French seizures and ranson in, 228, 229: N. protects clergy in, 261: nuder French influence, 271: scheme to conquer, ii. 12: held by Austria, 95, 105: evacuated by Ferdinand IV., 131: N. demands expulsion of Russians, English, and Sardinians from, 256: N.'s influence over, recognized at Tilsit, iii. 47: N. demands banishment of bostile agents from, and closing of ports to England, 57: French invasion of, 94: demands for the inviolability of, 94: annexed to France, 201
  Paradomania, iii. 44
  "Parallel between Cœsar, Cromwell, and Bonaparte," ii. 148, 149

** Parabalai between Cæsar, Cromwell, and Bonaparte," ii. 148, 149
** Parabadorf, military operations near, iii. 176, 177
** Parbasdorf, military school at, i. 25, 30, 31 : N's sojourn in (1787), 44, 451 the Parliament banished from, 555 base elements of population flock to, 56 : encounter in the Place Vendôme, 66 : humning of the barriers, 56 : destruction of the Bastille, 56, 57 : Louis XVI, takes up residence in, 57 : famine, 86 : return of the cont to, 86 : municipal reform, 88 : N, returns to (May 28, 1792), 101 : N's impoverished condition in, 101, 102 : great outburst of sedition, fo2: Marseilles sends a deputation to, 102 : the barrierades on August 10, 1792, 104, 105 : N. and Elisa in, 107 : N.'s residences in (Holland Patriots Hotel) 107, (Fossés Montmartre) 166, (Michodière Strect) 176, (Chantereine Street) ii, 18, (Victor Street), 51 : massacres of royalist prisoners, i. 108 : overturn of municipal government, 110 : committee of surveillance, 110, 111 : prison massacres in (Sett. 2-6, 1792), 111 : representation in the National Convention, 111 : condemnation and execution of Louis XVI, 115 : establishment of the revolutionary tribunal, 123 : N, at (1793), 134 : scenes of the Terror, 149 : N's sojourn in (1795), 156, 166 et seq., 173, 176 : influence in political movements, 158 : bread ricks, 169 : Jacobin plots, 162 : ericical condition of affairs, 168, 178, 179 : royalist plots against, 178 : critical condition of affairs, 178, 178, 179 : royalist plots against, 178 : reidical condition of affairs, 178, 178, 179 : royalist plots against, 178 : reidical condition in, 179 et seq. : the Thirteenth Vendômiare, 180-182 : restoration of order, 182 : N. cows the low elements in, 185 : projek : for formatices encesses, 221 : glofification of N. in (1796), 222 : receptacle for plundered works of art, 225 :

PEX Parts — continued. The complete distribution of afficient 2 293 (spatial intrinsic and the first distribution of afficient 2 203 (spatial intrinsic and the first distribution of afficient 2 203 (spatial intrinsic and the first distribution of afficient 2 203 (spatial intrinsic and the first distribution of afficient 2 203 (spatial interest distribution of a distribution of distribution of a distribution of a

- safety, 207 : N. offers to defend, 208 : possibility of reassembling an army in, 210
  Paris, Forest of, formation of the Prussians behind, iv. 197
  Paris, Marquis de, leads the Parisian mob. 1. 86
  Paris sections, the day of the. i. 181-188
  Parker, Sir Hyde, at battle of Copenhagen, it. 135
  Parma, intrigue in the court of i. 207 : plundered of works of art, 225 : N's leniency to 260 : N's influence in, 278 : N's vio-lation of neutrality of, ii. 95 : secured to France, 132 : adopts the French Code, 227 : creation of hereditary duchy of, 255 : Cambacérès created Duke of, iii, 71 (see CAMBACÉRÉS): eccle-siastical reforms and confiscations in, 202 : position in the French empire, 214 : granted to Maria Louisa, iv, 148
  Parma, Duke of, submission of, 1.218 : plan to give the Papal States to, ii. 12 : N.'s promises to, 212
  Parthe, River, military movements on the, ii. 69 : ahandonment of, 131, 132 : fate of its admiral, Caraccioli, 191
  Parthians, Roman campaigna sagainst the, iii. 247
  Pasquier, Baron de, attitude toward N., ii. 65 : prefeet of po-lice, iv. 15: episode of the Malet conspiracy, 15 : imperial pre-fect, 129
  Pastare, River, military operations on the, iii, 22, 24, 26, 29

Passarge, River, military operations on the, iii. 22, 24, 26, 29 Passariano, N.* headquarters at, ii. 13, 15, 16 Passau, apportioned to Bavarla, ii. 170, 252 : N.'s line of retreat to 253 to, 253 Passeyr, the estates of, conferred upon Hofer's family, iii. 186 Patterson, Elizabeth, married to Jerome Buonaparte, ii. 164 Paul I, succeeds Catherine II., i. 262: institutes the second coalition, ii. 59: incensed at George III., 93: demands Thugut's dismissal, 93: incensed at Austria, 93, 102: withdraws from the coalition, 93, 94: seeks control of Malta, 93, 102, 126: friendship with N. and France, 94, 102, 126, 168 : plan for invasion of India and partition of Asia, 102 : receives the sword of Valetta from N., 102 : ains to destroy Austria's power, 126 : accuses England and Austria of treachery, 126 : concludes alliance with N., 134 : asassinated, 135, 211, 245 ; iii, 35, 36 : effect of his death on France, ii. 135 : antipathy to Great Britain, 168 : supports the Honse of Savoy, 149. See also RUSSIA

Paul I.—continued.
"Paul and Virginia," iii. 227
Paunsdorf, military operations near, iv. 73
Pavia, the sack of, i. 220 ; iii. 3 : military operations near, ii. 114
Pawnbrokerage in France, iii. 64

- Pavna, the sack of, 1. 220; in. 3: minitary operations hear, ii. 114
  Pawmbrokerage in France, iii. 64
  Peasant proprietors, at outbreak of the Revolution, 1. 53, 64
  Peccadeuc, Floot de, N.'s eneny, i. 33
  Pelet, Gen., charges Berthier with treachery, iii. 160: on the battle of Aspern, 170: deniea the story of Lannes's deathbed, 173: in battle of Waterloo, iv. 200
  Pelham, Thomas, employs Mchee de la Touche, ii. 189
  Peletier, J. G., publishes "L'Ambign," ii. 173, 174: prosecuted for libeling N., 174
  Penal Code, the, iii. 225, 226
  Pensions, reforms in French, i. 80
  Peraidi, associated with N. in Corsica, 4. 62: seeks election in National Guard of Corsics, 97: becomes an eneny of N., 97, 100: ordered to prepare flect at Toulon, 110: seeks to arrest N., 120
  Perceval, Spencer, assassination of, iv. 16: mismanagement of

- N., 120 Perceval, Spencer, assassination of, iv. 16: mismanagement of English affairs, 168, 169 Peretti, his name reprobated in Corsica, i. 65: vote of censure on, 74: seeks election in National Gnard of Corsica, 96 Permon, Mime, N.'s friendship with, i. 31, 32, 104, 168-170: friendship with Salicetti, 168-170: correspondence with N., 169, 170: declines N.'s matrimonial offer, 187: notable saying of, ii. 86

- 169, 170: declines N.'s matrimonial offer, 187: notable saying of, ii. 86
  Perpignan, reinforcements for Augereau from, iv. 119
  Perponcher, Gen. G. H., in battle of Quatre Bras, iv. 181
  Perregaux, Comte de, royalis intrigues of, iv. 133
  Persia, proposed Indian expeditions via, ii. 134: Sebastiani's mission to, 174-176: treaty with France, iii. 23, 244: N. arranges treaty between Turkey and, 23, 244: incide to invade India, 24; proposed rupture with Eogland, 24: N. studies the history of, 130: N.'s intercourse with, 239: Themistocles's refuge in, iv. 214
  Perthes, Macdooald at, iv. 126
  Pert, scheme of a Bourbon monarchy in, iii. 106, 111
  Peschiera, seized by Beaulien, i. 219, 226: French occupation of, 227, 232: the revolutionary movement in, 265: disarmament of, 273

- of, 227, 232: the revolutionary movement in, 265: disarmament of, 273 "Peter the Great," by Carrion-Nisas, ii. 225 Peterswald, military movements near, iv. 57, 61 Petit, Gen, at review of the Guard at Fontainebleau, iv. 137: N.'s farewell to, 150 Petit Trianon, N. secures the library from, iv. 208, 214 Peyrusse, corruption of, iv. 54: keeper of N.'s purse at Elba, 162 Pfaffenhofen, military movements near, iii. 160 Phoflippeaux, A. de, N.'s enemy, i. 33: superintends the de-fense of Acre, ii. 45, 50: parley with N. at Acre, 54 Phenicia, the history of, iv. 242 Philip, Don, of Spain, ii. 132 Philippe "Egalité," despicable actions of, i. 86: scheme for his son, 200 Philippeville, N. at, iv. 203, 205 "Philosophical and Political History of the Two Indies," N.'s study of, ii. 31 "Philosophic Visions" (Mercier), N.'s study of, ii. 36 Phrases:

- Phrases

- Philosophic Visions" (Mercier), N. 8 study 61, R. 36
  Alferi:
  "Italia virtuosa, magnanima, libera, et una," ii. 149
  Anonynous or unassigned: (See also Popular, infra)
  [A hady] "fond of men when they are polite," iii. 139
  "A mystery in the soul of state," iv. 25
  "Democracy an excellent work-horse, but s poor charger; a good hack, but an untrustworthy racer," iv. 233
  "Everything has been restored except the two million Frenchmen who died for liberty," ii. 139
  "Frequent of the seas and the invasion of England," ii. 231
  [Bonaparte] "his consular majesty," ii. 187
  A Paris actor:
  "J'ai fist des rois, madame, et n'ai pas vouln l'être," ii. 132
  "Legislative emnchs," ii. 100
  [Lonis XVIII.] "a French Providence, which made the laurel a fortile tree, the fruits of which had nourished the brave whom its branches covered," iii. 226

Arndt: "Freedom and Austria," iii. 151

Berthier : "By general's reckoning, not that of the office," il. 110

- "By general s recooning, not that of the other," Cambronne: "The guard dies but never surrenders," iv. 202 Charles IV.: A king "who had nothing further to live for than his Louise and his Emmanuel," iii. 129 Coignet: "Providence and courage never abandon the good soldier," iii. 219
- iii. 248

- Phrases continued.
  - Congress of Vienna : [Napoleon] " the enemy and disturber of the world's peace," iv. 169 Czartoruski
  - Paradomania," ili. 44

- Datherg:
  "The monkey [Talleyrand] would not risk burning the tip of his paw even if all the chestnuts were for himself," iv. 130
  Princess Dolgoruki: [The First Consul's residence] " is not exactly a court, but it is no longer a camp," ii. 128
  Gentz:
  "The way for the more than 100 metrics."
- "The war for the cmancipation of states bids fair to become one for the cmancipation of the people," iv. 79 Goethe :

A great man can be recognized only by his peers," lv. 134

- Kuturoff: "The plain gentleman of Pskoff," iv. 13
- Machiavelli ; "Friends must be treated as if one day they might be ene-mies," li, 163
- Marmont : "The tube of a funnel," iv. 69
- "The tube of a funnel," iv. 69
  Napoleon;
  "About to produce a great novelty," iv. 163
  "A great man—one who can command the situations he creates," iv. 65
  "A kind of veroin which I have in my clothes," ii. 156
  "A man like me troubles himself little about a million men,"

  - 46
  - "A thing must needs be done before the announcement of your plan," iii. 56 "Bullets have been flying about our legs these tweaty years,"
  - 17.6 "Credit is bott a dispensation from paying cash," iv. 24 "Emperor of the Continent," iii. 234 "Enemy's lands make enemy's goods," iil. 5 [England a] "nation of traders," ii. 186 "Everything to-morrow," iv. 40
- ("Everything to-morrow," iv. 40
  "Fortune is a woman; the more she does for me, the more I shall exact from her," i. 223
  "Forty eenturies look down upon you from . . . the Pyramids," ii. 41
  "Gathered to strike; separated to live," ii. 236. See also p. 2014

- "Gathered to strike; separated to live," ii. 236. See also p. 244
  "Generals who save troops for the next day are alwaya beaten," iii. 263
  "God hath given it [the crown of Italy] to me; let him beware who touches it," ii. 226
  "Great battles are won with artillery," iv. 34
  "I am conquered less by fortune than by the egotism and ingratitude of my companions in arms," iv, 145
  "I am determined to be the last [the bottomless chasm] shall swallow up," iv. 108
  "I and the god of the day," ii. 80
  "I cannot be everywhere," ii. 242. (Cf. "The enemy's strength, "infra)
  "I deologist," iv. 241
  "I there he one soldier among you who wishes to kill his Emperor, he can. I come to offer myself to your assaults," iv. 163
  "I have destroyed the enemy merely by marches," ii. 235.
  "I have often algorithm the infinite of my capacity for work," iii. 163
- 163
- "I have often slept two in a bed, but never three," ill. 38 "I leave my army to come and share the national perils," ii. 66
- ii. 66
  ''I may find in Spain the Pillars of Herenles, but not the limits of my power," iii. 124
  ''In our day no one has conceived anything great; it falls to me to give the example," i. 223
  ''In war, the moral element and public opinion are half the battle," iv. 28
  ''In war you see your own troubles; those of the enemy you cannot see. You must show confidence," iii. 161
  ''I pray God to have you in his holy keeping," ii. 264
  ''I shall conduct this war [Saxon campaign] as General Bonaparte," iv. 35

- parte, 1V. 35 "It is . . . courageous to survive unmerited bad for-tune," iv. 149 "It rsins bard, but that does not stop the march of the grand arony," iv. 66. (Cf. "While others," etc., infrs) "I walk with the goddess of fortune, accompanied by the god of were "it 77

- "I walk with the goddess of fortune, accompanied by the god of war," ii. 77
  "Liberty and equality . . . put beyond caprice of chance and uncertainty of the future," ii. 159
  "Mssters of the Channel for six hours, we are masters of the world," ii. 212
  "My generals are a parcel of post inspectors," iii. 124
  "My generals are a parcel of noly to be drowned," ii. 156
  "My master has no bowels, and that master is the nature of things," iii. 89
  [Napoleon determined to] " conquer the sea by land," iii. 11
  [Napoleon] "shows himself terrible at the first momeot," iii. 3 iii. 3

Phrases -

300

- rases continued.
  [Napoleon] "the minister of the power of God, and his image on earth," ii. 264
  [Napoleon's] "library," iv. 24
  [Ney] "the bravest of the brave," iv. 2
  "Perildious and tyraonical Great Britain," iii. 117
  [Singing the tupe of Tilsit] "according to the written score,"

- iii. 55
  "Spurred and booted ruler," ii. 96
  "Tête . . armée," iv. 219
  "The art of war is to gain time when your strength is inferior," ii. 108
  [The Concordat] "the vaccine of religion," ii. 139
  "The Ebro is nothing but a line," iii. 124
  "The enwy's strength seems great (to the division commanders] wherever I am not," iv. 55. (Cf. "I cannot," etc., supro-

- ders] wherever I am not," iv, 55. (Cf. "I cannot," etc., supra)
  "The innances are falling into disorder, and . . . need war," iii, 235
  "The game of chess is becoming coofused," iv, 65
  "The genus of France and Providence will be on our side," iv, 105
  "The growlers," iv, 137, 141, 147
  "The new Pillars of Hercules," iii. 235
  "The pear is not yet ripe," ii. 35. (For the ripening of the pear, see ii. 67, 148)
  "The Spanish ulcer," iii. 203
  "The system of hither and thither," iv, 63, 64, 69
  "The worse the troops the greater the need of artillery," iv, 34
  "This movement when characters of a superior sort assert themselves," ii. 44
  "This movement makes or mars me," iv, 121
  "To have the tight of using nations, you must hegin by serving them well," iv, 244

- Ing them well, 'iv, 244 "To benor and serve the Emperor is to honor and serve God," ii. 264 "To strike a salutary terror into others," ii. 199 "Victor of Austerlitz," ii. 253 "Vons étes un homme," iii. 134 "War is like governmeot, a matter of tact.," i. 222 [War with Russia] "a scene in an opera," iii. 241 "We 'll pass these few winter daya as best we may; then we 'll try to spend the spring in another fashion," iv, 161 "We must pull on the hoots and the resolution of 93," iv, 103 "Wherever... water to float a ship, there ... a British standard," iv, 214 "Which has been the happiest age of humanity?" iii, 136 "Which chers were taking counsel the French army was marching," ii. 283. (Cf. "It rains hard," supra) "Why an 1 not my grandson?" iv, 238 «'Yon manage men with toys," ii, 159 Velson:

- "Yon manage men with copy," in 240
  "England expects every man to do his duty," ii. 240
  "In case signals cannot be seen or clearly understood, no captain can do wrong if he places his ship alongside that of an enemy," ii. 240
  "Westminster Abbey or Victory," ii. 43
- Ney: "A marshal of the Empire has never surrendered," iv. 6 Mme. Permon : "The pike is eating the other two fish," ii. 86

- Pitt (concerning): The "Austerlitz look," ii. 254 Pius VII. :

- The "Ansterlitz look," ii. 254
  Pits VII.:
  [Bonaparts the Pope's] "son in Christ Jesus," ii. 217
  Popular:
  "Armed nen spring up at the stamp of his foot," iv. 22
  "Ban," and "arrière ban" (feudal terms), iv. 89
  "Bautzen Messenger-Boy," the, iv. 64
  [Blücher] "Marshal Forward " iv. 122
  "Enperor of the Gauls," ii. 204
  "Encyr's slips make enemy's goods," iii. 5
  "Equality," ii. 142
  "France the most beautiful land next to the kingdom of heaven," iii. 13
  "French fury," iv. 175. (Cf. "Furia francesca," ii. 252)
  "French fury," iv. 175. (Cf. "Furia francesca," ii. 252)
  "French fury," iv. 155.
  (He has been and will be," iv. 158
  "His acred Majesty," ii. 263
  "Mother Moscow," "the holy city," iii. 264
  "Napoleon, by the grace of God Emperor," ii. 264
  [Napoleon] "perhaps an angel, perhaps a devil,—certainly not a man," iv. 43
  "Napoleon the Great," ii. 263
  "Neutral flap, metrial goods," ii. 168
  "Neutral flap, metrial goods," ii. 68
  "Neutral ships make neutral goods; free ships, free goods," ii. 136

  - ii. 136 "Paternal anarchy," iv. 158, 160 "Ragusade," iv. 144 "Robbing the cradle and the grave," iv. 22 "Sauve qui pent," iv. 202 "The Emperor's last victory," iv. 86

- Phrases continued.
  "The fountain of honor," ii, 159
  "The liberator of Poland," iii. 8
  "The liberator of Poland," iii. 8
  "The liberator of Poland," iii. 8
  "The man of God, the anointed of the Lord," ii. 263
  "The Napoleon of Potsdam and Schonbruno, iv. 136
  "The return of the hero," ii. 66
  Regnaud de St.-Jean d'Angely:
  "The unhappy man [Napoleon] will undo himself, undo us all, undo everything," ii. 247
  Revolution, Motto of the: France, "one and indivisible," ii. 221

  - St. André : "The fate of the world depends on a kick or two," iv. 48
  - [The Code Napoléon] "a political malady," ii. 143

  - Sieules : "Une poire pour la soif," li. 86 Soult :
  - "Au inspiration is nothing hut a calculation made with ra-pidity," iv. 221 Talleyrand :
  - "alleyrand:
    "Italy the fank of France; Spain its natural continuation; and Holland its allavium," iii. 216
    "Napoleon's civilization that of Roman history," iii. 139
    "Pleasure will not nove at the drum-tap," iii. 76
    "Society will pardon much to a man of the world, but cheating at cards never," iii. 118
    "There is no empire not founded on the marvelous, and here the marvelous is the truth," iv. 222
  - Vandamm

- "That devil of a man," iii. 75 "Undatevil of a man," iii. 75 Villeneure: "Any captain not under fire is not at his post, and a signal to recall him would be a disgrace," ii. 240 Wellington:
- "I must fight him here [Waterloo]," iv. 180 "Old Blücher has had a _____good licking," iv. 184 "Up, Guards! make ready i" iv. 202

- Weltington:
  ** Tamust fight him here [Waterlool," iv, 180
  ** Tamust fight him here [Waterlool," iv, 180
  ** Up, Guards! make ready !" iv. 202
  Zacharias, Poge:
  ** "He is king who has the power," ii. 208
  Piacenza, military operations nearh, i. 217, 218; ii. 114: Loison at, 116: adopts the French Code, 227: creation of hereditary duchy of, 255: Lebrun created Duke of, iii. 71. See LEBRUN
  Piacenza, Duke of, submission of, i. 218
  Piarve Kiver, military operations on the, i. 336, 237, 266, 267
  Picchegru, Gen. Charles, N. 's early acquaintance with, i. 129: called to command Paris troops, 162: compares the Austrian schemes of, 173; ii. 105, 190: a product of Carnot's system, i. 202: conquest of Holland, i. 3: plans a coup d'état, 3: exposure of his treachery in 1795; 3, 4: proscribed, 5: implicated with Moreau, 49, 100; 180: escapes from Guiana, 105: heads royalist piot, 190: Savary suspected of complicity in death of, 207; finneral mass celebrated for, iv. 158
  Picton, Sir T., in Waterloo campaign, iv. 176: hattle of Waterloo, 196; killed, 197
  Piddmont, military operations in, i. 123, 152, 209, 213 et seq.: troops of, enter Savoy, 133: French movement against, 145: N. Advises against advancing into, 146: Austro-Sardinian operations in (1734), 206: revolutionary spirit in, 207: conquest of, 213-220, 228: army separated from Austrians, 215: successes is aland of St. Peter, ii. 8: incorporated with the Ligurina Republic, 26: Morean's last stand in, 57: held by Savarof, 98: held by Austria, 95, 105: tribute levied on, 120: incorporated with France, 149, 171, 173, 179: Jourian's stary at, 61
  "Piltaryönen, Freech servoice, ii. 9:
  Piltayönen, C., C., Talleyrand attempts to corropt, ii. 23: eccleatastic and the france, 149, 171, 173, 199; Jourian's stary at, 61
  "Piltaryönen, Freecherks William and Hardenberg at, iii. 38: artederick William's stary at, 61
  "Piltaryönen, Freecherks Willia

- Plus VI., signs treaty of Tolentino, i. 211: ransoms Bologna, 228,
- Pius VI., signs treaty of Tolentino, i. 211: ransoms Bologna, 228, 229: prepares to recover lost territory, 245: quarrel with France, 247: N.'s problem concerning, 249: hostilities by, 251: campaign against, 259-263: his army dispersed, 260: expresses gratinde to N., 261: N.'s comquest of ki. 6: iil Health, 7: persecution of, 26: withdraws to Siena, 26: stripped of his possessions, 20: death, buriat, and memorial services, 26, 87, 133, 139
  Pius VII., election of, ii. 133: resumes temporal power, 153: removes the ban from Talleyrand, 139: relations with N., 139, 217 et zet, iii. 57, 58, 94, 95; iv. 26: the natter of N.'s coronation, ii. 208 et seq., 217-221: refuses to receive Mme, Talleyrand, 209: his demands for the Church, 209: 1: H Fontainchlean, 218: bis humiliation and return to Rome, 221, 222: refuses a divore to J-crome Buomparte, 256; iii. 7: neutrality in the Ansterflux to to J-crome Buomparte, 256; iii. 7: neutrality in the Ansterflux to to, 55: refuses to join the French federation against England, 94: his demands on N., 94: concessions to N.'s demands, 94: prisoner at Grenohle, 95, 187: dishandment of the Noble Guard, 95: a fanchaat prince in the Quirinal, 95: issues built, June 10, 1800; 95: wearing effect of N.'s quarrel with, 95: indemnity for, 166: deposed from the temporal power, 166, 186, 187, 192: retains his ecclesinstical position, 186: eccongrazo N.'s divorce, 199: provision of residence and revenue for, 201: the ascond quarrel of investitures, 201: relations with the Galliean Church, 202: curtasted with hunceen the second quarrel of investitures, 201: relations, 201: contrasted with hunceen 17: 202: partial submission of, 233: refuses to institute N.'s domand, 187; 243: removed from Rome to Fontainchleau, 187: refuses to benome the sequence power, 186: interviews with N. at Fontaine-bleau, 187: refuses to bis possed from the temporal power, 187: refuses to bis possed from the temporal power, 187: refuses to bis possed from the domination, 201; possed from the temporal po
- ation of, 227 Pizzighettone, French occupation of, i. 227 Pizzighettone, French occupation of, i. 227 Piazentia, ecclesiastical reforms and confiscations in, iii. 202: granted to Maria Louisa, iv. 148 Plagwitz, fighting near, iv. 72 "Plain," the, position in the National Convention, i. 111 Plancenoit, fighting at, iv. 199, 200 Plancy, military movements near, iv. 116 Platof, Count M. I., harasses the French retreat from Mos-cov, iv. 2, 6

- cow, iv. 2, 6 Plauen, fighting near, iv. 57: Anstrians driven into, 57 Plauen, fighting near, iv. 57: Anstrians driven into, 57 Plebiscites, of Dec. 15, 1799, ii. 86, 90: of May, 1802, 158, 159: of
- Pleisse, River, military operations on the, iv. 35, 70, 71

- Piebiscites, of Dec. 16, 1799, ii. 86, 00: of May, 1802, 158, 159: of 1804, 207
  Pielsse, River, military operations on the, iv. 35, 70, 71
  Plombieres, Josephine's coterie at, ii. 58
  Plutarch, M's study of, i. 40; ii. 31
  Plymouth Sound, the "Bellerophon" in, iv. 210
  Po, River, the country of the, i. 216; ii. 116, 117: military operations on the, i. 217, 218, 233, 272; ii. 113, 114, 116, 119
  Point-du-Jour, Sermier's gnard at the, ii. 74
  Poischwitz, armistice of, iv. 43-45, 47, 50, 98, 194, 238
  Poland, partition of, i. 131, 259, 262; ii. 227, 268; iii. 8, 25, 44: Austria's gaze on, i. 198: French schemes for the reconstruction of, ii. 28-30: Alexander retreats to, ii. 252: extension of the French engine in, 256: sack of, iii. 4: N's opportunity to save, 8, 9: pro-Napoleon enthmsiasm in, 8, 9, 16, 251: dissensions in, 9: N's Policy concerning, 10, 14, 22, 40, 48, 166, 188, 239, 252; iv. 72: French occupation of, iii. 11, 13: emlistments from, under the French cagles, 11, 157, 246: N. organizes government for, 14: N. "the liberator of, 'i6: herrors of the winter campaign in, 22: a new field of warfare for N., 22: new levies ordered in, 23: morale of the French army in, 40: proposed transfer to the King of Saxony, 44: proposed new kingdom of, 48: Frussian provinees ceded to Warsaw, 55: possible restoration of, 55, 87, 188, 237-239, 244: iv. 246: war indemnity exacted from, ii. 66: French nobility endowed with lands in, 71: strengthening the French forces in, 93: dangers of withdrawing Russian troops from, 93: Davout recalled from, 129: reliance on N., 152, 240: invaded by Archduke Ferdinand, 156: concentration of troops at Warsaw, 158: Archduke Ferdinand, 156: concentration of troops at Warsaw, 158: Archduke Ferdinand, 250: justicker in other storing, 251: Abbé de Prad's mission from Dresden to, 251: the Diet of Warsaw begs for the reconstruction of, 251, 252: possible eschences of French anneystin in, 52: N. offers to renounce, 72: the

- Polygamy, forhidden by the French Sanhedrini, iii. 63: N. up-
- holds, iv. 216 Polytechnic School, founding of the, i. 167; ii. 145, 146: calling out the students of, iv. 131

- Pomerania, Prussia recommended to seize, ii. 273 : Guslavus IV. commanding in, ill, 35: Prusia retains her strongholds in, 35: N. promises to restore to Sweden, 205: Bernadotte's kindly treatment of, 215: Davont occupies Swedish, 244: offered to Bernadotte, iv, 32 Bernadotte, iv. 32 Pomerania, Duke of, seeks representation at Congress of Ras-
- tatt. ii. 18
- Ponieraina, Duke 61, scens representation at congress of Ristati, i. 18
  Pompei, member of the directory of Corslea, i. 73
  Poniatowski, Prince J. A., relies on N.'s good will, iii. 9: Arch-duke Ferdmand's pursuit of, 161: reoccupies Warsaw, 165: strength of his corps, March, 1812, 246: doubts Lithuanla's rising, 201: battle of Borollino, 201: battle of Warsaw, 14, 3: claims to the Polish throne, 20: falls to keep Russia out of Warsaw, 21: commanding in Galicia, 34: at Fischbach, 63: battle of Leipsie, 71, 73, 75: drowned in the Elster, 75
  Ponsonby, Sir W., in battle of Waterloo, iv. 197
  Pont des Arts, ii. 62
  Pont d' Jéna, ii. 62
  Ponte Corvo, Bernadotte created Prince of, ii. 256: lii. 71. See also BERNADOTE
  Pontécoulant, Doulcet de, uses influence on N.'s behalf, 4

- Pontécoulant, Doulcet de, uses influence on N.'s behalf, i 175: retired from the central committee, 177: N.'s relations with. 2
- With, H. 2 Ponte-Nuovo, battle of, I. 10: N. visits the battle-ground at, 73 Pont Royal, the mclée at the, i. 181 Popular government, the rise of, I. 57 Popular representation without eyes, ears, or power, ii.

- <sup>84</sup> Porcil, military operations near, i 239 Porcalis, J. E. M., councilor of state, ii. 137: on committee to draft the Code, 142: minister of public worship, 221 Portland, Duke of, prime minister of England, iii. 41, 58
- Port Mano, but of, france families and the second secon

- Port Malle, Duke O., princ minister of England, In. 41, 58
  Porto Ferrajo, seized by England, I. 245; arrival of the cvile al, iv. 154; N.* residence at, 155; danger of N.*s remaining in, 162
  Porto Royal, chucation of Josephine de la Pagerie at, i. 189
  Portugal, growth of liberal ideas in, i. 164; war with Spain, I. 12; joins the second coalition, 62; France offers puece to, 102; alliances with England, 102, 212; N.*s problems in, 131 et seq.; forced contribution levied on, 122; ii. 55; abandous English alliance; i. 132; compelled to close her harbors to English ships, 132; iii. 57; France guarantees integrily of, ii. 136; nea-traitive, ii. 52; compelled to close her harbors to English ships, 132; iii. 57; France guarantees integrily of, ii. 135; rear-entralition, evilt, 56; roposed acquisition by Spain, 57, 96; morement of English frogots into, 89, 59; 7; the situation in, 94; French invasion of, 95 et seq., 118; obeys the Berlin and Milan decrees, 95; closing of the harbors, 95; rupture of diplomatic relations between France and, 95; proposed partition of, 95; starte of the harbors, 95; rupture of diplomatic relations between France, 96; fight of Don John from, 96, 97; escape of the fleet from the Tazus, 96, 97; the secare, 97; Junot's military administration in, 97; applies to Lingland for help, 97; insurrections against French rule, 97; N. Offers the crown of L02; intrigues for the throne of, 102; Junot's appointness as proper to a council of regency, 97; Junot's military administration in, 97; applies to Lingland for help, 97; insurrections against French rule, 97; N. Offers the crown of L02; intrigues for the throne of, 102; Junot's appointed governor of, 104; to be given to a Bonaparte prince, 105; France proposed english acheme to abandon, 145; Wellesey enters, 123; intensity of the releable in, 91; Massénai turades, 203; Proposed English acheme to abandon, 145; Wellesey enters, 123; intensity of the releable in a 14; sympathy with Spain, 144; supposed English acheme t

Pregel, River, military mevements on the, it. 31
Prenzlau, Hohenlohe's retreat to, ii. 283: Hohenlohe driven from, ii. 2
Presburg, treaty of, ii. 252, 262; iii. 48, 88, 151, 155: military operations near, 174, 176, 178. Archduke John at, 175, 176, 178
Press, the, freedom of, decreed, i. 57: demand for freedom of, in Corsica, 62: condition in France, 167: members of, proscribed, ii. 5: abolition of liberty of, 5, 96: N. and the liberty of, 15: muzzling of, 24, 162, 174: suppression of Jacobin papers, 66: N.'s use of, 120: ii. 27: servility to N., ii. 149-151: censorship of, 150, 151, 187, 224, 225, 233, 256, 271; iii. 27, 72, 125, 227, 229; iv. 158: in modern France, ii. 162: N.'s reason for repression of , 162: liberty of, in England, 174: N. attempts to muzzle the English, 228: supervision of the, iv. 87: abolition of censorship promised, 167
Press-gang, employment of, in France, ii. 212
Pretender, the. See LOUIS XVIII.
Pressich-Eylau. See EYLAU
Préval, Gen., refuses service on d'Enghieu court martial, ii. 196
Primogeniture, N. on, i. 77: abolished, ii. 144; iii. 69: its advantages and decay. 69.
Prince of the Peace, the, See GODY
Prince of the Peace, the, See GODY
Princy enducid, creation of a, ii. 159
Provence, a tempeston of a, ii. 159
Provence, a tempeston of fuely for the, i. 27, 73, 74
Provence, a tempeston of fuely for the, i. 27, 74.
Provera, Gen, in Rivoli campaign, ii. 260-254: called to reorgen provence of the Eugence of the Eugence of seture in equation for the eugence of a constrained of the terror in 20.

Provence, a tempestaous time in, i. 127: royalist rising in, ii. 105: royalist sentiment in, iv. 131: X.'s reception in, 131, 156: longing in, for the Emperor's return, 162: the White Terror in, 210
Provera, Gen., in Rivoli campaign, i. 250-254: called to reorganize the Konna array, ii. 22
Provins, military movements near, iv. 95, 103, 109, 113
Prowtowski, Gen., accompanies v. to st. Helena, iv. 214
Pruzihron, Pierre, painter, ii. 225
Prussia, rolationes, etc.
Prussia, rola

<text><text><text><text><text><text>

0

Quasdanowich, Gen., N.'s operations against, i. 211 : captures Brescia, 232 : battle of Lonato, 233, 234 : strength in Friuli, 236 Quatre Bras, military operations near, iv. 174, 178-180 : battle of, 181-186 : N.'s flight through, 203 : Ney at, 205 Quedimburg, apportioned to Prussia, ii. 170 Queiss, River, military operations on the, iv. 61 Quenza, CoL, elected lieutenant-colonel in National Guard of Corsica, i. 97 : commanding Corsican volunteers, 99 : conduct at Ajaccio condemmed. 101 : his command under Dumouriez, 108 Quinette, N. M., member of the new Directory, iv. 207 Quirinal, the, Fius VII. a fainéant prince in, iii. 95 : foreible en-try into, 187

R

Raab, Archduke John advances toward, iii. 175 Radetsky, Count J. J. W., military genius, iv. 54: favors inva-sion of France, 91: courage, 93: advises concentration of the allies at Arcis, 116

- Radziwill, Princess, member of Prusslan reform party, H. 269 Raguaa, creation of hereditary duchy of, ii. 255: N. offers the territory to England, 261, 262: Marmont created Duke of, iii. 71.

- Ragusa, creation of hereditary duchy of, ii, 255; N, offers the territory to England, 261, 262; Marmont created Duke of, iii, 71. See MARMONT
  "Ragusade," the word, iv. 144
  Rahmaniyeh, Mameluke retreat toward, ll. 47
  Ragusade,", here word, iv. 144
  Rambouillet, the imperial court at, iii, 229; flight of the Empress to, iv. 130-132, 150; N, at, 208
  Rambouillet, the imperial court at, iii, 229; flight of the Empress to, iv. 130-132, 150; N, at, 208
  Rambouillet, the imperial court at, iii, 229; flight of the Empress to, iv. 130-132, 150; N, at, 208
  Rambouillet, the imperial court at, iii, 229; flight of the Empress to, iv. 130-132, 150; N, at, 208
  Ramoline, Letizia (mother of N.), matriage, i. 14; character, 14-16. See also BOOMAPARTE, LEFIXIA
  Rampon, Gen., holds Argenteau in check, i. 215, 216; his stand at Monte Legino, 216, 241
  Rappo, Count Jean, on N.'s desire for peace, ii. 172; in battle of Ansterlitz, 250; seizes a would-be assussin of N., iii, 185; recounts the horrors of the Russian campaign, 258; hegs N, to desist at Smolensk, 258; commanding at Dantzle, iv. 34
  Rastatt, Congress of, ii. 13, 14, 17, 182, 25, 285, 57, 47, 60, 61, 169; nentralization of, 14; the nurrlers at, 61, 191
  Ratisbon, Jourdan's defeat neary, i. 235; selected as N.'s head-quarters, iii, 157, 158; military movements near, 158, 159, 162, 163, 167; hathe of, 163; selexed by Archuke Charles, 167; N. wounded at, 185; given to Dalberg, 204; Saxon troops offered to Anstria at, iv. 39
- 163, 167: hattle of, 163; serzen by Architke Charles, tof: A. wounded at, 185; given to Dalberg, 204; Saxon treops offered to Anstria at, iv. 32
  Raynal, Abbé G. T. F., N. a disciple of, i. 36, 38-40, 42, 60, 61, 70, 77; ii. 31, 91; his works and opinions, i. 38-40; the "History of Corsica" addressed to, 47, 67, 70; founds prize for essay on America. 76
  Raynouard, F. J. M., "The Templars," ii. 225
  Réad, P. F., urges action against Bourbon plotters, ii. 194; po-lice-agent, 195; share in the trial of d'Enghien, 195-198
  Reason, the party of, i. 148
  Récamier, Mine, social life in Paris, i. 173; ii. 266, 267; instigates Moreau's letter to N., 191; N.'s differences with, 266, 267; relations with Mme, de Stael, 265, 267; exiled, 267
  Rédoubtable," the, at Trafalgar, ii. 241
  Reflections on the State of Nature," i. 82
  Reflections, new scheme of government for, i. 247; disposition by

- BON Reggio, new scheme of government for, i. 247: disposition by treaty of Leoben, 271: creation of hereditary duchy of, ii. 255: Oudinot created Duke of, iii, 71. See OUDINOT Regnand, M. L. E., ii. 137 Regnier, C. A., moves the appointment of N. as commander of the Paris garrison, ii. 70, 71: in Leon, iii. 217: strength, March, 1812, 246

- 1812, 246
  Reich, Baronne de, imprisonment of, ii. 194
  Reich, Baronne de, imprisonment of, ii. 194
  Reichenbach, French generals killed at, iv. 40: secret treaty of, 44, 45, 48, 49, 90
  Reille, Gen., service in Spain, iii. 217: at Leers, iv. 174: in the Waterloo campaign, 174, 175: seizes Marchiennes, 176: crosses the Sambre, 176: at Thuin, 176: disperses the Prussians at Gosselies, 178, 179: battle of Quatre Bras, 182, 183, 185: battle of Waterloo, 190-197
  Religion, N.'s attitude toward, i. 83; ii. 132, 133, 158, 139, 144, 146, 158, 165, 165; iii. 135, 136: influence on the social life of the world, ii. 31

- the world, h. 31 Religious opinion, freedom of, decreed, i. 67 Rémusat, Mme, de, N.'s relations with, i. 99; ii. 6, 37, 81, 128, 129, 163, 274; iii. 22, 28, 66: confidences with Josephine, ii. 196: re-ports N.'s answers to Josephine's charges, iii. 28: couversations

- Rhine, River, the, the boundary question and struggles for, i.
   164, 198, 203, 277, 279; ii, 14, 25, 27, 28, 35, 125, 165, 228; iv, 44, 49, 73, 80; royalist plots on, 1.178; military operations on, 206, 209, 235, 268, 271, 272; ii, 32, 60, 105, 108, 109, 124, 233, 231; iv, 76, 79, 89–33, 101, 174; plundering on, h. 25; iii, 63; French supremacy on, li, 66; N.'ssche me of petty states on, 170; French march to the Daoube from, 212; Louis ordered to hold, 276; a French river, lii, 207; N.'s exemption on, lv, 48
   Rhodes, Turkish naval preparations at, li, 51; expedition to Egypt from, 51, 53, 54
- Rhone, River, the, French acquisitions on, i. 260: N.'s reception
- on, iv. 151 Rhone Valley, the, the Revolution in, 1, 84-92; N. Miniuence in, 104; evul war in, 127; to be eeded to France, ii. 27 Richelieu, Cardinal, scheme of intervention in Gernany, iL 136; policy at close of the Thirty Years' War, 169 Richepanse, Gen., success on the Mettenberg, ii. 109; in battle of Hohenlinden, 125 Richmond, Duchess of, ball on the eve of Waterloo, iv. 180 Richmond, Ducke of, interview between Wellington and, at the ball in 180
- hall, iv. 180 Ricord, commissioner of the National Convention, I. 131 : in slege of Toulon, 136, 137 : in charge of movements against Genoa, 146, 147

- 146, 147
  146, 147
  Ricord, Mme, N.'s attentions to, i. 152
  Riga, N. threatens to march to, iii. 252; pre-parations for the sloge of, 253; Prussian froops at, 256; military operations near, 268
  Rippach, skiranish at, iv, 35; death of Bessleres at, 35
  Rivera, Austrian garrison for the, ii. 110, 11
  Rivoli, the starting-point of N.'s public career, i. 84; battle of, 232, 236, 237, 251–256; ii. 92, 207; N.'s estimate of, i. 256, 259; effect of the campaign on European history, 256; Masséna created Duke of, iii. 71. See MassEvA
  Road-work, French popular harred of, i. 54
  Roberjot, member of Congress of Kastatt, ii. 61; killed at Rastatt, 61

- Roberjot, Mme., accuses Debry of murder, ii. 61
- Robespierre, Augustin, commissioner of the National Conven-tion, i. 131: in stege of Toulon, 136, 137: N.'s friendship with, 139, 142, 143, 146, 150, 172: leadership of, 142: describes the French ampaign in Lombardy, 144: execution, 149: influence on N.'s

- 109, 142, 143, 140, 100, 1727 (cattership of, 142) (describes the French campagn in Lombardy, 144; excettion, 149; influence on N.'s life, iv. 220
  Robespierre, Charlotte, N.'s attentions to, i. 152
  Robespierre, Maximilien, member of the National Convention, 111; dictator of France, 116; fall and excettion, 146-149, 158; religious decrees, 148; N.'s characterization of, 140; hatred of the Church, 200; dread of Carnot, 202; influence on N.'s life, iv. 220
  "Robespierre, the Little," i. 140
  Rochambeau, Gen, succeeds Lectere in San Domingo, ii. 152; surrenders to an English fleet, 163
  Rochefort, naval expedition from, 230; Villeneuve's mission to relieve, 231; the squadron ordered to the Mediterranean, iii. 89; N.'s cohefort, naval expedition from, 230; Villeneuve's mission to relieve, 231; the squadron ordered to the Mediterranean, iii. 89; N.'s cohefort, in 25, 137; dreads a new Terror, 64; joins the Bonapartist ranks, 66; an opportunist, 67; on the necessity of renewing the constitution, 72; the 18th Brumaire, 73; momber of the contact of state, 100; on Funercoy's educational measures, 146; advocates the Legion of Honor, 158; suggests hereditary consulship, 153; dismissed, 177; character, 177; reforms Neapolitan finance, iii, 163; interviews and conversations with N., 152; iv. 221, 222; sent out of France, 231
  Reger-Duces, member of the Directory, ii, 63; sucheme to make him consul, 69; proposed resignation of, 69; resigns from the Directory, 72, 78, 80; consul of France, 83
  Rohan-Rochefort, Princess Charlotte of, married to Duc d'Englien, ii, 192; the Duc d'Englien's last message to, 198
  Rohan, Archuke Charles's force at, iii. 160
  Reland, J. M., forms a ministry, i. 100; leader of the Girondists, 111

- 111
  Romagna, surrendered to France, i. 260: ceded to Venice at Leoben, 271: incorporated in the Cisalpine Republic, ii. 14: Austrian forces in, 111
  Roman Catholic Church, N.'s views concerning the, i. 39: in-fluence in Corsica, 70, 71: opposition to the French republic, 164: the Pope shorn of his temporal power, iii. 186, 187: in-fluence on France, iv. 225
  Roman Catholics, disturbances among, in Corsica, i. 97, 98
  Roman Enupire, the, ii. 210: compared with Napoleonic France, ii. 143, 161
- ii 143, 181
- Roman Republic, the, organization and proclamation of ii. 26, 59: Neapolitan invasion of, 59: abandonment of, 132 Remanoff, House of, N. proposes matrimonial alliances with,
- iii. 76
  Rome, maritime expedition against, 1 152, 155: difficulties of an attack on, 155: murder of French minister (Basseville) in, 155, 229, 260: N.'s hostility toward the central power at, 157: temporal power of the Pope, 207: plunder of, 225; ii. 26: plan to eapture, i. 229: N.'s plans concerning, 247, 249, 261: quared between France and, 247, 259: influence dt, 248: proposition to hand her over to Spain, 259: campaign against Pius VL, 259-261: dispersal of the Papal army, 260: Victor's military watch on, 266: N.'s influence in, 278: N.'s operations against, ii. 6: Joseph Buouaparte minister at, 18: Berthier proclaims

- Rome continued.
  the Roman Republic iu, 26: calls Provera to reorganize her army, 26: liberal rising in, 26: Austria to he restrained from interference in, 23: Neapolitan invasion of, 46, 49, 59: recognition of the Pope's temporal power in, 133: restrictions ou residence in, 139: remains of Fins VL sent to, 139: Chatean-briand French representative at, 166: Fracee to evacuate, 168: Madanoe Mêre and Lucien at, 219: N. demands recognition as Emperor of, 256: ports of, closed to enemics of France, 256: French occupation of, iii, 94, 95: excommunication for the invaders of, 95: disbandment of the Noble Guard, 96: Pius VII.'s idle state in, 95: severing of the spiritual and temporal powers, 166, 186, 187: the city incorporated with Italy, 186: occupied by Gen, Miolis, 186: the College of Cardinals and ecclesiastical courts transported to France, 198, 202: the department of, accester, 201, 202, 214: secularization of the convents, 2022: dispersal of the rejer domains, 26: Mirat marches on, 91: Lucien fosters revolution in, 156: France the beir of, 225: influence throughout Italy, 226, 227
  Rome (ancient), governmental systems of, adopted in France, i. 160, 161; ii. 83: influence on French art, iii. 72: the territorial expansion of, 124: loss of her political liberty, iv. 230: the history of, 242 - continued.
- Crypinka on, 1125 roses in the posterial neuropy for 205 the the list fory of, 242
  Rome, the King of, Schwarzenberg's toast to, iii. 200: the title, 201: birth of, 230, 249: birliliancy of his future, 230: address of the Pavis Chamber of Commerce on the birth of, 231: bis portrait at Borodino, 260: entrasted to care of the National Gnard, iv. 88: Joceph enjoined to preserve him from Austrian capture, 117: likened to Astyanax, 117, 130: chances of his succession, 129: flight from Paris, 129-131: an ill omen for, 131: proposed regency for, 134: N. declares for his succession of, 141, 142: territory granted to, 148: proposed coronation of, 165: dismissal of his French attendants, 169: sends message to his father, 169: fisilure of the attempt to crown, 171: N.'s fare-well message to, 218
  Roncesvalles, French military movements at, iii. 105
  Ronco, military operations at, i. 238, 239

- Wein message to, 218
  Roncesvalles, French military movements at, iii. 105
  Roncox, military operations at, i. 238, 239
  Rosily, Adm., ordered to supresede Villeoeuve, ii. 239
  Rossbach, battle of, iv. 235
  Rosslau, military operations near, iii. 19
  Rossbach, battle of, iv. 235
  Rosslau, military operations near, iv. 65, 66
  Rossonime, N. at, iv. 191, 200, 203: fighting at, 203
  Rostino, meeting of N. and Paoli at, 72, 73
  Rousseau, Jean Jacques, views on Corsica, i. 2, 7: offered asylum by Paoli, 7: N.'s study of, and admiration for, 33, 36-40, 60, 82, 156; ii. 91, 163; iv. 241; N.'s style compared with that of, 76: on man in a state of nature, 82: influence of, in France, 158, 159; theory of natural boundaries, 198: Chateaubriand a disciple of, ii. 166
  Roussel, Gen, in battle of Waterloo, iv. 197
  Roverbello, battle of, i, 234, 235: abandoned by Vaubois, 236
  Rovigo, creation of hereditary duchy of, ii. 255: Savary created Duke of, iii. 70. Nee SAVARY
  Royal Growic, indication and the Tenule, i. 102

Boyal Corsican Regiment, refuses to fight against its native island, i. 10.
Royal Corsican Regiment, refuses to fight against its native island, i. 10.
Royal family, imprisoned in the Temple, i. 102
Royal family, imprisoned in the Terror," i. 164, 165: plots and infrom France, 144
Royalists, institute the "White Terror," i. 164, 165: plots and intrigues of, 165, 178, 199; ii. 2, 3, 5, 24, 155, 189–191; iv. 100; English subsidies for, i. 197: banished from Sardinia, 216: the Clichy faction, ii. 2, 3, 5, relations and negotiations between N. and, ii. 2, 3, 2, 3, 3, 45; iv. 129; extended influence in 1798, ii. 3: events of the 18th of Fructidor, 4, 6, 15: Austria seeks their triumph in Paris, 12: proscription of, 5, 16; attitude of the Directory toward, 24: claims concerning the murders at Rastatt, 61: Moreau's tendency toward, 64: sigh for a second Bichelieu, 81: views of the results of the 18th Brunaire, 82: encouraged to return to France, 87: dissensions among, 164, 155: publish "L'Ambign," 174: the Cadondal conspiracy, 189 et seq.: in Alsace, 192: argument in their favor, 223: growing strength of, iv, 122: display their enthusiasm to Paris, 134: their hour of triumph, 144: coposition to, by the army, 147: supported in Provence, 151: plots argainst N's life, 152, 156: commenorate the death of Louis XVI., 159: defend the Tuileries, 166: stirred up by Jacobin ennity to N., 171.
Royal Scots Pusileers, in battle of Waterloo, iv, 196
"Royal Scots Pusileers, in battle of Waterloo, iv, 196
"Royal Scots Pusileers, in battle of Waterloo, iv, 129
Rue de Paix, the, jii. 62

Rue de Paix, the, iii. 62 Rue Rivoli, the, iii. 62 Rully, Gen., commands expedition to Corsica, i. 69: killed at St. Floreut, 69

- Florent, 69
  Rumbold, seized by French agents at Hamburg, ii. 211
  Rumelia, proposed disposition of after Tilsit, iii. 48
  Rumelia, proposed disposition of after Tilsit, iii. 48
  Rumanzoff, Count, Russian minister, iii. 81, 91: discusses partition of Turkey, 93: at the Erfurt conterence, 133: foresess danger to the Franco-Russian alliance, 188: adviser to Alexander L, 266: lends the pence party of Russia, 266
  Russbach, River, military operations on the, iii. 170, 175–177
  Russia, aggrandizement of, I. 9: N.'s ambition to serve, 129, 192; ii. 10; iv. 226: share in the partition of, and relations with,

Totada, i. 131, 262, ili, 40, 240, 241; relations and alliances with Austria, i. 189, 262; ii. 202; Jac 201, 259; iv. 21, 46, 47, 105, 106; death of Catherine H, ... 262; ioreign policy (177), 262; J. J. terepts despatches from the Cars to Malta, 262; weakness of revolutionary sentiment (l., 60; alliances and relations with, ess. 44, 46, 46, 46, 46, 41; st. and er. J. Nith J 107, 263, 471, 105; desta of Catherine H, ... 202; ioreign J, 202; J. J. 107, 202; J. J. 107, plans military operations in Holland, 62 (23, 53; defated all Zurich by Massena, 63; successes on the Trebbia, 63; defated all Zurich by Massena, 63; successes on the Trebbia, 63; defated all Zurich by Massena, 63; successes on Oriential Cather, 44, 56, 67, 86, 59, 120, 137, 138, 188, 195, 260; organizes the "armed nea-trality, "in 126, 134, 135; schemes of Oriential Catherasion and conjuest, 126, 134, 135; schemes of Oriential Catherasion and conjuest, 126, 134, 135; schemes of Oriential Catherasion and conjuest, 126, 134, 135; schemes of Oriential Catherasion and Catherasian and the armed neutrality, "165; hostile and general universal catherasis and and accession of Alexander 1, 135; abaudoons the "armed neutrality," 165; hostile and general universal catherasis and material categories of Alexander 1, 135; abaudoons the "armed neutrality," 165; hostile and general universal catherasis and material categories of Alexander 1, 135; abaudoons the "armed neutrality," 165; hostile and general universal versal catherasis and and accession of Alexander 1, 135; abaudoons the "armed neutrality," 165; hostile and general universal versal catherasis and and accession of Alexander 1, 135; abaudoons the "armed neutrality," 165; hostile and general universal versal catherasis and the accession of Alexander 1, 135; abaudoons the "armed neutrality," 165; hostile and general universal versal catherasis and the accession of Alexander 1, 135; abaudoons the "armed neutrality," 165; hostile and general universal versal versal versal versal versal versal the death

<text><text><text><text><text><text>

Saalburg, military operations at, li. 278 Saale, River, military operations on the, ii. 279-282; iv. 64, 67, 69

- 69
  Saar, River, military operations on the, iv. 92
  Sachsen, Gen., Iada, Ncapolitan army against Rome, ii. 49
  Sacken, Gen., in battle of Eylan, iii. 19: checks Schwarzenberg, iv. 9: reinforces Blücher at Montmirail, 96: held by Mortier, 104: battle of Craomore, 107
  St, Algman, French envoy to Saxon duchies, iv. 80: imprisoned at Gotha, 80: conducts negotiations with N., 80, 82, 83
  St. Amand, d'Erlon ordered to move on, iv. 185
  St. André, mayor of Mainz, anecdote concerning N. and, iv. 48
  St. Bartholomew's Day, fears of a repetition of the massacre of, iv. 158

- of, iv. 158
  "St. Bartholomew of privilege," the, i. 57
  St. Bartholomew of privilege," the, i. 57
  St. Bernard range, Austrian watch on the, ii. 111. See also GREAT ST. BERNARD; LITTLE ST. BERNARD
  Saint-Cannat, N. at, iv. 152
  St. Clond, proposed councils at, ii. 69, 70, 72, 74 et seq. : Bernadotte plans to head a force at, 74: Murat commanding guard at, 74: the 18th and 19th Brumaire at, 76 et seq.; iv. 228: N. declines a gift of, ii. 157: promulgation of the decree creating the empire from, 205: return of N. from Tilait to, iii. 61: social vices at, 75: important levee at, Aug. 15, 1808, 131, 132: N. and Maria Louisa at, 198: the imperial court at, 229: N. returns to, iv. 79, 84

- vices at, 75: important levee at, Aug. 15, 1808, 131, 132: N. and Maria Lonisa at, 198: the imperial court at, 229: N. returns to, iv. 79, 84
  Saint-Cyr, Elisa Buonaparte educated at, i. 28, 103, 107: the Academy at, 103, 107
  Saint-Cyr, Carra, in battle of Aspern, iii. 170, 171
  Saint-Cyr, Gen., military successes of. i. 163: at battle of Biberach, ii. 109: engagement on the Mettenberr, 109: fails to come up at Messkirch, 109: reinforces Moreau at Engen, 109: enters Naples, 183: ordered to occupy Naples, 292: Villeneave ordered to cooperate with, 239: at La Junquera, iii. 142
  Saint-Cyr, Gouvion, strength of his corps, March, 1812, iii. 246: losses of his Bavarian corps in Russia, 255: Wittgenstein reames offensive against, iv. 2: junction with Victor, 2, 3: checks Wittgenstein, 5: holds Dresden, 55, 66, 87, 70: battle of Dreaden, 55, 57: sent to support Vandamme at Kulm, 61: guarding roads from Bohemia, 63
  St. Denis, tumults at, i. 44: restoration of the cathedral at, iii. 62: defense of, iv. 131
  St. Dizer, military movements near, iv. 92, 94, 120: N. at, 120, 121, 124: military movements near, iv. 92, 94, 120: N. at, 120, 121, 124: military movements for its defense, i. 46: French fleet at, 69: disorders at, 60, 113: expedition against Ajaccio Irom, 120-123: French power in, 123: English capture of, 154
  St. Gotthard Pass, Suvaroff's disaster in, i. 93: French passage of, 110, 114: Austrian watch on, 111
  St. Helena, N.'s will made at, i. 70: N.'s reminiscent statements made at, 82, 137, 173, 184; ii. 32, 51, 54, 56, 81, 96, 133, 186, 199: iii. 70, 95, 163, 212; iv. 61, 95, 162, 215; v. 56, 165, 179, 184: N.'s death at, ii, 57; iv. 219: N.'s ambition concerning, ii. 184: early proposi-Vol., IV.-41.

VOL. IV.-41.

- St. Helena continued.
  Iton to deport N. to, iv. 157: chosen as the place of exile, 212-215: N's objections to the rock, 213: special form of government for, 213, 215: the voyage to, 214, 238: landing of N. at, 215: topography, climate, etc., 215, 217: N's life on, 215-219: violent storm in, 219: the exile's contral, 238
  Saint-Hilaire, Gen., in battle of Austerlitz, H. 249, 250: In Evian campaign, iii. 19, 20
  St. Ildefonso, the treaties of, ii. 131, 132, 184
  St. Jean d'Acre. See ACRE
  St. Jorome, " Correggio's, 1. 228
  St. Julien, Count, blundering negotiations hy, ii. 121, 122: Imprisonment of, 152
  St. Lambert, Grouchy ordered to, iv. 188: Bulow at, 190
  St. Leu, proposal that Louis withudraw to, iii. 212
  St. Maximin, Lucien Buonsparte in, i. 140
  St. Michel, scizure of, by Masséna, i. 269
  Michel, scizure of, ivy Masséna, i. 269
  Michel, Jattle of, i. 251
  St. Peter', Island of, capture, H. 8
  St. Peter', Bland of, capture, H. 8
  St. Peter', Bernen Convoltants cornation in, H. 256
  St. Peter', Bernen Convoltants cornation in, S. 78: contrinutive in, 92: terror of the Cast from Tilait to, ii. 54: the pace of Europe in, 55: the French ambassador at, 71: diplomatic intrigues at, 79: Alexander fears for, 80: diplomatic crists in, 87, 88: contrinutive in, 92: terror of the British fleet in, 93: situation at, 94: social and diplomatic life in, 129: Cauniaton at the Austrian marriage at, 196: N. threatens to march to, 232: Lauriston sent to replace Caulancourt sension to, 129, 131: Frederick William 111, at, 161: news of the Austrian marriage at, 196: N. threatens to march to, 232: Lauriston sent to replace Caulaincourt at, 241: defense of, 254: demoralization at, 255: military enthusiasm in, 255: founding of the Ruessian Bible Society in, 267: England's diplomacy in, iv, 45. See also ALEXANDER I.; PAUL I.; RUSSIA
  St. Pierre, Bernardin de, rewards to, for iiterary w

- Saint-Ruff, Abbé de, N.'s aocial relations with, I. 35, 42: death of, 85
  St. Stephen, sttack on, I. 114
  St. Stupice, banquet to N. in church of, ii. 68, 69
  St. Tropez, N.'s embarkation from, iv. 149, 151, 153: place of N.'s embarkation changed to Fréjua, 152, 153
  Saladin, founds the military organization of Mamelukes, II. 39, 40
  Salaadin, founds the military organization of Mamelukes, II. 39, 40
  Saladin, founds the military organization of Mamelukes, II. 39, 40
  Saladin, founds the military organization of Mamelukes, II. 39, 40
  Saladin, I. Christopher, representa Corsica in the National Assembly, i. 62-66: succeeds Buttafnoco, 73: influence in Corsica, 109, 117, 121: plans invasion of Sardinia, 110, 111: adheres to France, 119: arrivea in Corsica, 119: relations with N. and influence on his career, 119, 122-124, 131, 134, 135, 149-152: i. effect ends the Corsican commission, 122: arrivea in Paris, 123: heads a commission to Corsica, 131: in siege of Toulon, 136, 137: influence in France, 138: plans expedition to Corsica, 138: ambition, 140: influence among the Thermidorians, 151: blamed for insurrection in Corsica, 51: eeka bia own asfety, 151: friend-ship with Mme, Permon, 168: concealed by Mme, Permon, 169, 170: N.'s address to, 170: levies forced contributions in Genoa, 208: plans of the Directory concerning, 221: rapacity, 230: duplicity, ii. 74: gives Genoa a consular constitution, 149
  Salm, member of the Confederation of the Rhine, ii. 260
  Salo, the revolutionary movement in, i. 269: engagement at, 270, 272
- Salo, the revolutionary movement in, i. 269 : engagement at, 270,

- Salm, member of the Confederation of the Rhine, ii. 260
  Salo, the revolutionary movement in, i. 269: engagement at, 270, 272
  Salzburg, apportioned to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, ii. 170: ceded to Anstria, 252: Lefebvre at, iii. 164: embodied in the Confederation of the Rhine, 184
  Sambre, River, military movements on the, iv. 174, 176-178, 181
  Samplero, i. 4: resemblance to N., 12: N.'a sketch of, 47
  Sand, George, h Madrid during the war, iii. 233
  San Domingo, influence of Lowerture ia, ii. 152: declares ita independence, 152: nnsuccessful attempt to conquer, 152: failure of N.'s ambition concerning, 184: plan for French recovery of, 213
  Sandoz-Rollin, Prussian minister in Paris, ii. 21
  Sandzoz-Rollin, Prussian minister in Paris, ii. 118
  San Miniato, the Buonaparte family in, i. 14
  Sansculottles, the, i. 147, 165
  Sansculottes, the, i. 147, 165
  Santander, besieged by Bessières, iii. 122
  Santarner, Massén avithdraws toward, iii.'210: "Marshal Stockpot's '' deserters at, 223
  Santerre, A. J., leader of the mob of Aug. 10, 1792, i. 105: favored by N., 105: N.'s threat against, ii. 73
  "Santjissima Trinidad," the, at Trafalgar, ii. 241
  Sandria, weakness of, i. 51
  Sardzosa, siege of, iii. 121-124, 143-145
  Sardinia, weakness of, i. 51
  coorgio, N. at taking of, i. 151
  Saragossa, siege of, iii. 121-124, 143-145
  Sardinia, weakness of, iii. 9: compared with Corsica, 12: hostilities between France and, 110-114, 116, 122, 122, 143, 146, 155: 126: Victor Amadeus, king of, 213. 216: Victor Amadeus, king of, 213. 216: Victor Amadeus, king of, 213. 216: Victor Amadeus, king of, 213. 221, 245: N. aba flaith with, 95: Russia demands indemnity for the king of, 211, 271: Prussia bound to secure indemnity for king of, 243

Sardinia, island of, Charles Emmanuel king of, i. 216: Charles Emmanuel retires to, 26, 93: Nelson seeks shelter at, 38
Sart-à-Walhain, Grouchy's movements via, iv. 186, 190
Sartzana, the Buonaparte family in, i. 12
Satschan Lake, Russian disaters at, ii. 250
Sauwinières, military movements near, iv. 184
Savary, Gen., aide-de-camp to N., ii. 195: share in Duc d'Enghien's trial and execution, 195, 197, 198: mission to Alexander I. with N., 251: unsavory career, 267: marries Mile, de Coigny, 267: in Eylan campaign, 1ii. 18: on X.'s mental and personal vigor, 267: in Eylan campaign, 1ii. 18: on X.'s mental and personal vigor, 27: held back by M companies the Czar to St. Petersburg, 54: French ambassador to Bussia, 80, 85: influence over the Czar, 64: disliked in Russia, 52: military ince orongaies Ferdinand to kerg, 15: resords M.'s correspondence, 121: encourages Ferdinand to rely on N., 112, 113: notifies Ferdinand to kerd Bayonne, 112, 113: notifies Ferdinand to ward Bayonne, 12, 113: notifies Ferdinand to kerd to France, iti, 184
Save, River, terribry on, ceded to France, iti, 184
Savo, military operations at, i. 150, 213, 215; ii. 105: imprisoment of Pius VII. 41, iii. 187, 233
Savoy, House of, the, French schemes against, i. 110: importance of Funcy C. the, French schemes against, i. 110: importance of Funcy enditions gainst, in Piedmont, i. 228: captured by trance of Funcy enditions against, i. 110: importance of Funcy enditions against, i. 110: important of proces against, i. 110: importante of Pius VII. 41, iii. 18

- claims to, 198: lost to Sardinia, 213: Kellermann in, 222: Chabran's forces in, ii. 110: proposal that France should keep, iv. 80
  Savoy, House of, the, French schemes against, i. 110: importance of France gaining over, 200: its system of government, 207: vicissitudes, 213: Francis I.'s hostility to, ii. 93: loses the support of Paul I., 149: lineage, 202, 203: N.'s ennity to, iv. 247
  Saxe-Gotha, accepts French terms after Jéna, iii. 7: spread of liberal ideas in, 7
  Saxony, withdraws from the Coalition, i. 235: neutrality of, 1796, 235: scizure of the English minister to, ii. 211: excluded from the Confederation, 272: reported French herms after Jéna, 7: spread of liberal ideas in, 7
  Saxony, withdraws from the Coalition, 123: reported French advance on, 273: proposed independence for, 273: military movements in, 276: alliance with Prussia, 279: takes part in the Jéna campaign, iii. 7: spread of liberal ideas in, 7: abandons Prussia and adopts neutrality, 7: proposed exchange of territories, 14: united with the Rhine Confederation, 48: acquires Kottbus, 53: independence, 61: the Archduke Charles proposes to march Into, 154: furnishes troops to France, 157: troops in Dresden, 158, 246: defeated at Nossen by the Black Legion, 180: in vasslage to France, 21: supparts./x, 244: the levies in, iv. 23: peculiar relations toward N., 28, 29: turns to Austria, 29: threatened war in, 29: secret agreement with Austria, 29: reveate in favor of France, 37: proposed allotment of territory to, 39: Prussia promises to cede part of, to Hanoveria, 14: declared in roops, 56: national spirit in, 64: revulsion of France, 64: 66: refuge of the allies in, 67: defection ef troops at Leipsic, 74: character of the campaigns in, 78
  Say, J. B., member of the tribunate, ii. 100
  Schafthausen, N. plans operations at, ii. 106
  Scharnhorst, Gen, plan of the Prussia campaign, ii. 278, 279: in battle of Eylau, iii. 20: institutes military reforms in Prussia, 83, 126: mission to

- Scherer, Gen., commanding the Army of Italy, i. 208: ordered to upper Italy, ii. 60: driven behind the Mincio and Oglio, 60: defeated at Magnano, 60: succeeded by Moreau, 60: incom-petency, 60, 62
- Schill, F. von, N.'s abuse of, iii, 165: final stand and death at Stralsund, 165, 180: attempts to rouse the German spirit, 165: helps insurrection in Westphalia, 174: denounced by Frederick 'illiam, 180

Meijs insuit 180
Schimmelpenninck, R. J., Grand Pensionary of the Batavian Republic, it. 150: represents the Batavian Republic at Amiens, 168: intrigues to make Louis Buonaparte king of Holland, 256
Schlapanitz, unilitary operations near, it. 248, 249
Schleiermacher, F. E. D., member of the zeform party in Prus-sla, it. 270: influence on Prussian regeneration, itl. 83
Schleiz, engacement at, it. 279
Schleswig, Denmark's loss of, itt. 59
Schloditten, utilitary operations near, iti. 19
Schönditten, utilitary operations near, iti. 19
Schönditten, utilitary operations near, iti. 19
Schönditten, 165: interview between N. and Hangwitz at, it. 258: treaties of, 271: iti. 186, 188, 193: N.'s prochamations from, 166: N. leaves for the Lobau, 175: Prince Liechtenstein at, 181: accident to N. near, 185: attempt to assassinate N. at,

Naria Louisa at, iv. 155
 Schrattenthal, Kutusofi at, ii. 244

Schönbrunn - continued.
185: N. returns to Paris from, 189: virtual imprisonment of Maria Louisa at, iv. 155
Schrattenthal, Kutusofi at, ii. 244
Schwarzenberg, Prince, reliance on Peccadeuc, i. 33: Anstrian minister to France, ii. 194: suggests the marriage of N. and Maria Louisa, 194: toasts the King of Rome, 200: commands Austrian contingent in Russian campaigu of 1812, 246: in Voltynia, 256: holds back Tormassoff, 259: opposed by Tormassoff and Tchitchagoff, 266: retreats behind the Bug, iv. 2: expected to cover the crossing of the Beresina, 5: driven back, 7: checked by Sacken, 9: lukewarmness, 19: retreats across the Vistula, 21: evacuates Warsaw, 21: seeks shelter in Cracow, 27: held back by Metternich, 29: commanding the Army of the South, 62: hampered by presence of the allied sovereigns, 52: military incapacity, cowardice, and reputation, iv. 54, 96, 100, 115, 117-119: N. moves against, 56: battle of Dresden, 57: Vandamme's pursuit of, 61: Murat fails to check, 62: protects Austria from invasion, 63: moves on Dresden, 55: southern movement by, 65: gets to southward of Leipsic, 66: Murat ordered to hold, 66, 67: contemplated attack on, 67: proposed junction of Blucher and Bernadotte with, 69: battle of Wachan, 70, 71: battle of Leipsic, 70-73: suggests compromise plan of invasion, 67: rocsses the Rhine at Basel, 92: movement toward Auxerre, 94: junction with Blücher, 94: strength, Feb, 9, 1814, 95: N.'s contemplated movement against, 35-67: steady advance of, 97: crosses Switzerland, 98: danger of his advancing to Fontainebleau, 103: enders Marke, 104: justifies his course, 104: at Bar-sur-Aube, 104: N. prepares to attack, 104: Macdonald and Oudinot in pursuit of, 105: checks Oudlinot, 105: at Congress of Châtillon, 106: Elücher cut of from, 106, 107: N. plans to attack him at Châlons, 107: regains communication with Blücher, 109: moves against fact, 104: Macdonald and Oudinot in pursuit of, 105: checks Oudlinot, 105: at cengres, 115: 116: 0. 113: enterests to Troyes,

- Science, J., advises encouragement of, ii. 222
  Scrivia, River, the, Ott driven back to, ii. 116: the country of, 116, 117
  Sebastiani, Gen, F. H. B., mission to Persia and the Levant, ii. 174-176: obtains thorough knowledge of the East, iii. 4: strategy and diplomacy at Constantinople, 23: end of his influence in Turkey, 33: defeats a Spanish division, 183: moves up the Aube, iv. 117: battle of Arcis-sur-Aube, 118
  Secret police, license vice, iii. 75
  Segovia, French success at, iii. 122
  Segur, Count, minister to Russia, ii. 207: appointed master of ceremonies at the Tuilerice, 207, 209: foresees France's discontent, iii. 247: transfers his allegiance to Louis XVIII., iv. 147: plans the ratification of the Additional Act, 172
  Seine, River, the, the quays of, iii. 62: military movements on the, iv. 37, 100, 102, 104, 113, 117, 126, 133, 135
  Selim III., dismisses viceroys of Moldavia and Wallachia, iii. 5: moves against Russia, 6: declares war against England, 23: overthrow of, 33, 44, 85, 127: held prisoner in the Seragiio, 127: murdered by Mustapha IV, 127
  Semaphore, use of, in warfare, iii. 169
  Semino, disposition of the spoils of Moscow at, iv. 2
  Semancour, S. P. de, "Obermann," ii. 225
  Senarcour, S. P. de, "Obermann," ii. 225
  Senarmont, Gen., in battle of Friedland, iii. 52
  Senarmont, Gen., in battle of Friedland, iii. 52
  Senarmont, Gen., in battle of Ispowers, 159: the tool of the First Consul, 204: steps toward creating the empire, 204, 205: changes in, unnler the constitution of a hereditary house for the elective, iii. 67: its members eucoled, 71: confirms the divorce, 190: decrees the annexation of the 1804, 206: announces the result of the plebiscite, 218: substitution of a hereditary house for the elective, iii. 67: its members eucoled, 71: confirms the divorce, 190: decrees the annexation of the Frial States, 201: decadence of constitutional forms in, 225: speech of Mar

- at, 137 "Sentimental Journey to Nuits," N.'s, 1, 82 September 22, celebration of, ii. 127 Serfdom, at ontbreak of the Revolution, i. 63 : abolished in War-saw, iii. 56 Serpalten, military operations near, iii. 19 Serurier, Gen., gencral of division, Army of Italy, i. 208 : at siege of Mantua, 254, 256, 257 : storms Gradisce, 267 : delivers Venice to Austria, ii. 16 : action on the 18th Brumaire, 71 : command-ing at the Point-du-Jour, 74 : excites the soldiery at St. Cloud, 79 : recreated marshal, iv. 172

Serves, N. visits, i. 79 Servia, the rise of, iv. 247 Seurre, disorders in, i. 49 Seventh Regiment of the Line, supports N. on his return frem Seventh Regiment of the Line, supports N. on his return from Elba, iv. 164 Seven Years' War, the, i. 6, 9; iv. 230, 245 Sextuple Alliance, the, iv. 243 Seychelles, deportation of suspects to the, ii. 155 Sezanne, N. at, iv. 95: Marmont at, 104: N.'s plan of movement vio 112

Shebreket, Mameiuke attack on the French at. ii, 40; action at, 41

Shipping, harassing regulations by France, ii. 13
Shipping, harassing regulations by France, ii. 13
Shuvaloff, Count, Russian commissioner at Poischwitz, iv. 43, 45
Sicily, Ferdinand IV. king of, i. 260; iii. 242: Nelson seeks the Egyptian expedition at, ii. 38: Nelson retorms to, 42: Joseph made king of, 255, 259: proposal that the Bourbons retain power in, 259: N. ofters England territory as substitute for, 261, 262: Bogisad demands the surrender of, 202: withdrawal of English troops from, iii. 80: proposed French seizure of, 89, 90: English troops sent to Portugal from, 97: England threatened with loss of trade with, 208: English expedition to, 217, 224: French expedition against, 234
Siena, Pias VI, withdraws to, ii. 26: position in the French empire, iii, 214.

Noss of trade with, 2081; English expedition to, 217, 224; French expedition against, 234
Siena, Fius VI. withdraws to, ii. 26: position in the French empire, ii. 214.
Sierra Morena, defeat of Dupont io, iii. 122
Sieyds, Ahbé, pamphlet on the Third Estate, i. 56, 200: character, 200; ii. 63: declines service in the Directory, i. 200, 201: relations with X., 200; ii. 23, 33, 64, 68, 69: [president of the Ancients, 23: venality, 23: mission to Berlin, 28: checkmates, 29: charged with tampering with Bernadotte, 29: theories of government, constitution-building, etc., 33, 66, 68, 69, 80, 81, 84, 85, 99, 205: member of the Directory, 57, 63: relations with Jouhert, 63: schemes for a dictatorship, 64, 65: asspected of plotting with the House of Brunswick, 65: brought into the Bonapartist ranks, 66, 67: surrenders his leadership, 68: proposed resignation of, 69; scheme to make him consul, 69: difficulty of holding him in the traces, 69, 70: resigns from the Directory, 72, 78: at St. Cloud, 19th Brumaire, 76: consult of France, 83: preceedings for election of First Consul, 86: accepts the estate of Crosne, 86: chief of the Senate, 86: keeper of the Directory's secret funds, 86: negotiations and intrigues in Prussia, 103: relations with the Directory, 103: menarcheal schemes for France, 103
Siguenza, Castaños collects his troops at, iii. 144
Silesia, wrested from Anstria by Prussia, i. 197: Austria seeks compensation for, 197, 198: Austria's ambition concerning, ii. 230: offer of part of, to Austria, iii. 31: military operations in, 23; iv. 62: N. offers it to Austria, iii. 24: N's reserve forces in, 24: Prussia retains her strougholds in, 38: position in Burope, 48: remains Prussian, 48, 49: N. offers to offset the Daruotian principalities against, 86, 87, 90: French coccupation, 93: Alexander demands relinquishment of designs on, 93: Davout ordered to, 129: Austria situlates for acquisition of, 243: to be connected with Old Prussia, V. 31: Austria rejects N.'s offe

Brazil, 36 Smohain, the farms of, iv, 191; fighting at, 199 Smolensk, N.'s plan to seize, lii. 253; military movements near, 253, 255-267, 266, 269, 270; iv. 4-6; enthusiasm among the Russians at, iii. 266; strategical position, 256, 257; battle of, 266-268; N.'s military blunder at, 257-260; the shrine at, 257, 260; compared with Acre, 268; French garrison in, 259; iv. 2; concentration of French troops at, iii. 264; guerrilla warfare around, 266; arrival of the French sarry at, in its retreat, iv. 4: abaudonment of wounded at, 5: the march to Lithuanis from, 6; reorganization of the army at, 5: massacre of French stragglers in, 6: shameful scenes in, 5: destruction of the forti-fications of, 5: Ney's perilous retreat from, 6 Smorgoni, N.'s desertion of his army at, iv. 12, 14 Social contract, N.'s views concerning the, i. 39, 169 Social customs, privileges, etc., i. 62, 63: N.'s study of, 77, 82, 86

Södermannland, Duke of, attempts the siege of Hameln, ii.

270
Solgnes, fears of Wellington's withdrawal hehind, iv. 187 : Weilington's positiou in front of, 189, 193
Soissons, Maria Louisa's progress through, iii. 197, 198 : Mortier at, iv. 104, 113 : Blächer recruits his forces at, 106 : surrenders to the allies, 106, 111 : French retreat to, 108 : N. at, 109 : the French army leaves, 110
Sokolnitz, fighting at, ii. 248-250
Solano, Gen, makes ineffectual movement against the French, iii. 116

Solothurn, the plandering of, 11:27
 Solr, Gen, d'Erlon at, Iv. 174
 Sombreffe, Millary movements near, Iv. 174, 178-181
 Sombreffe, Millary movements near, Iv. 117
 Sombreffe, Millary movements near, Iv. 117
 Sombreffe, J., H., in battle of Waterloo, Iv. 197
 Sophia Dorbhea, with of Joronn, 111, 245
 Sortlack, Forest of, millary movements in the, III. 31
 Souham, Gen, In battle of Leipsie, IV. 31: at Nogen, 1255: 164
 Sortlack, Forest of, millary movements in the, III. 31
 Souham, Gen, In battle of Leipsie, IV. 31: at Nogen, 1255: 164
 Souham, Mershal, commanding force at Tarentum, il. 131: servee in the Austriams, 143, 144
 Souha, Marshal, commanding, 1250: reacted by Marmont, M2: summonet to Fontaincheau, 133: cellvers his army following, 142: strength in Orbida, 185: creates following, 144: strength in Orbida, 185: creates of non-Friedmand Science, 29: jursues Lestocq from Friedmand, 20: strength in Orbida, 18: cennels, not Science, 144: strengther to Bahmal, 70: gently lucome, 71, 225: movement against Elake, 143, 144: lack of vigor of movement, 144: strengther to Bahmal, 71: orderet to Annalasis, 29: spatiet of Moore, 169: battle of Corinna, 146: crosses the Eda, 146: defeated by Collag, 210: captered to Gana, 210; 211: shearing to Coll, 210: captered to Gana, 210; 211: shearing to Coll and 210: 211: spatiet of Moore, 210: appurent stadyoz, 210: defeated in Athwern, 221: inarche to Annalasis, 211: marche Massen, 210: appurent stadyoz, 210: captered to Gana, 210; 22: lickerings, vill doseph, 210: spatiet provide the south coast, 211: internet to Coll and 210: spatiet provide and 220: appurent stadyoz, 210: chertens to and 16: south coast, 211: returns to Gala, 212: state and the abutt coast, 211: returns to Gala, 212: state and 200: captel stadyoz, 210: chertens to and 200: spatiet provide and 221: state and Albuern, 221: intercents to Gada, 221: state

308 Style
Styl

Stage, censorship of the, ii. 224 Standing armies, i. 34 Staps, attempts to assassinate N., iii. 185 Starhemberg, Count, Austrian ambassador to London, iii. 84: leaves London, 84 Starsiedel, fighting at, iv. 36 State, N.'s conceptions of the, i. 40 State system, the, iv. 245 States of the Church, Fins VII. strives to augment the, ii. 222 Steffens, Prof., summons German students into the ranks, iv. 31

Stein, Baron H. F. C., Pruasian statesman, ii. 269; iii. 83 : frees Stein, Baron H. F. C. Prussian statesman, ii. 269; iii. 83: freea the serfs. 83: introduces military reforms in Prussia, 126: reasigns his ministry, 126: N. demanda his dismissal, 126, 138: aceks refuge in Vienna, 138: exile from Prussia, 150: effect of his reforms, 243: adviser to Alexander I., 266: reorganizes Prussian provinces, iv. 21: formulates the treaty of Kalish, 21: relations with Alexander, 21, 30: hostility to N., 30, 91, 99: joins Prederick William at Breslau, 30: on the unification of Germany, 30: charscter, 30: leading part in Prussia's awakenlux, 30: charscter, 30: leading part in Prussia's awakenlux, 30: charscter, 30: leading part in Prussia's awakenlux, 30: adviser to govern the conquered territories, 76
Sterling, Adm., naval operations of, ii. 231
Stettin, capitulation of, iii. 2: Davont's force in, 167: proposed French movement on, iv. 28: held by the French, 33: relief of the French in, 51

the French in, 51 Stewart, Sir Charles, English minister at Berlin, iv. 45: influ-ences the armistice of Poischwitz, 45 Steyser, armistice signed at, ii. 125 Stockach, battle of, ii. 60: captured by Lecourhe, 109 Stockholm, installation of Bernadotte at, iii. 216

- "Stockpot, Marshal," iii, 223 Stötteritz, fighting at, iv. 74 Strabo, N.'s study of, i. 40 Stradella, Desaix commanding corps at, ii, 116: fortified camp at, 116: military operations near, 119 Stralsund, threatened by Mortier, iii, 23: Schill's final stand at, 165, 180: capture of, 180 Strasburg, Moreau'a army at, i. 209: Morean and Desaix cross the Rhine near, 72: retirement of Cardinal Rohan from, ii. 199: imprisonment of Duc d'Enghien at, 194: French expedi-tiona to, 194; iii. 158: Caulaincont's mission to, 86: Maria Lonisa's progress through, 197: Schwarzenberg's communica-tions with, threatened, iv. 120, 121: sends troops to relief of Paris, 125

Strebersdorf, military operations near, iii. 168, 169

- Strebersdorf, military operations near, iii. 168, 169 Street of Peace, the, iii. 62 Street of Rivoll, the, iii. 62 Strehla, fighting near, iv. 57 Striegau, Blucher at, iv. 57 Striegau, Blucher at, iv. 52, 55 Stuart, British envoy to Vienna, ii. 192 "Study in Politics, A," projected by N., i. 172 Studjenka, the passage of the Beresina at, iv. 9-11 Stura, River, the, Masséna's advance through valley of, i. 143: Anstrian force on, ii. 11 Stuttgart, Bourrienne in diplomacy at, i. 102: machinations of Méhée de la Tonche in, ii. 189: expulsion of the English envoy at, 211

- Sturiz, River, the, Massen's advance through valley of, i. 143: Austrian force on, ii. 111
  Stuttgart, Bourrienne in diplomacy at, i. 102: machinations of Methe de la Tonche in, ii. 189: explision of the English envoy at, 211
  Sturta, Junction of Anstrian troops in, ii. 230: Prince Engène in, ii. 174: Archaluke John banished to, 173
  Stuchet, Marshal Louis-Gabriel, extrasts before Melas, ii. 108: expected to stack Melas, 10: military operations on the Var, the instances of the Statistical Science (Science) (

Syria, Nelson seeks the Egyptian expedition off the coast of, il. 38: N.'s achemics of conquest in, 42: Turkish movements in, 46, 47: the French advance into, 46, 47 Szuczyn, Russian retreat to, iii. 14.

77

<text><text><text><text><text><text>

VOL. IV.-41*

- Talleyrand, Mme., Fins VII. refuses to receive, ii. 200
  Tallien, J. L., opposes Robespierre, L. 148: social life in Paris, 173: luithchee for N, 177: favors appointment of N. as Convention general, 179: marriage, 190
  Tallien, Mme., "the goddess of Thermidor," i. 173: N.'s social intercourse with, 174: matrimonial experiences, 190
  Talma, F. J., L. 193: accompanies N. to Erfurt, iii. 135: N.'s intimacy with, iv. 222
  Tanaro, N. at taking of. 1. 151
  Taranto, River, the country of the, il. 117
  Taranto, embargo on, li. 183: creation of hereditary duchy of, 255: Macdonald created Duke of, ili. 71. See MACDONALD
  Tarragona, captured by Suchet, iv. 15
  Tarution, Kutusent takes on the, iii. 166
  Tarvis, capture of, 1, 268
  Tatars, N. studies the history of, 1, 49
  Tauenzien, Gon, battle of Dennewitz, iv. 63: during the Waterloo Company.

- Tatary, N. studies the history of, i. 49
  Tauenzien, Gen., battle of Dennewitz, iv, 63: during the Water-loo campaign, 175
  Tauroggen, Convention of, iv. 21, 29
  Taxation, Necker's problems of. i. 50: exemption of privileged classea from, 50, 52, 51: conditions of, at outbreak of the Revo-Intion, 53-55: the stamp-tax, 54: the land-tax, 54: outbreak against, at Auxonne, 58: d-meand for equality of, in Corsica, 62: reform of the system of, ii. 89, 141
  Tchitchagoff, Adm., joins Tormassoff, iii. 266: pursuit of the French army by, iv. 2, 7, 20: hopes of capturing X., 8: descrip-tion of X., 8: captures Borrissolf, 8: 9: driven out of Borrissoff, 9: at the crossing of the B-resina, 10: blamed by Kutusoff and Wittgenstein, 13, 14: ibad generaliship of, 13, 20
  Tchentheff, Gen, commanding Army of the North, iv. 52
  Telnitz, fielding at, ii. 248, 249
  "Temple, the, the royal family imprisoned in the, i. 102
  Temple, the, the royal family imprisoned in the, i. 102
  Tentor, field to ill. 212: Bennigsen reaches, iv. 66
  Terrori, the, i. 148, 149, 155, 162, 190, 202; iv. 231: fears of a re-vival of, ii. 63
  Terrorists, the, growing influence of, ii. 64: assassination schenes among, 154
  Testamentary rights, under the Code, ii. 144
  Tettenhorm, Gen., relieves Hamburg, iv. 33
  Taxat, the, Marmont ordered to Mainz from, ii. 232
  Tham, battle of, iii. 163
  Tharmidorians, the, i. 149: prominent members of, 151: adopt Roman systema, 160, 161: establish the Directory, 161: auger the people of Paris, 163
  Thielemann, Gen., in Waterloo campaign, iv. 175: at Wavre, 191

- 191 Third Coalition, the, ii. 227 et seq.: Prussia induced to join, 242, 243: rout of the allies at Ansterlitz, 251: destruction of its strength and norale, 251 Third Estate, the, at outbreak of the Revolution, i. 53: coasti-tution of 55: courses to represent the nation, 56: foreas a

- steneth and norme, 201
  Third Estate, the, at outbreak of the Revolution, i. 53: coostitution of, 56: assumes to represent the nation, 56: forces a junction with the two upper Estates, 56: Sicyès's pamphlet on the, 66: N.'s care for, iv. 228, 231
  Third Republic, the constitution of the, i. 158
  Thirdy Years' War, Richelieu's policy at close of the, it. 169
  Thomé, alleges attempt to stab N., ii. 79
  Thonherg, N. at, iv. 73
  Thorn, siege of, iii. 10: French occupation of, 17: military movements near, 18: N. in. 251: French military stores in. 253
  Thought, influence on the social life of the world, ii. 31
  Thourenot, Gen., service in Spain, iii. 217
  Three Emperors, Fight of the, ii. 252
  Thugut, Count, greed for territorial aggrandizement, i. 198: determines on Italian conquest, 262, 263: opens negotiationa at Leoben, 269: wars Gen. Clarke to keep away from Vienna, 280; ii. 28: not deceived by treaty of Campo Fornio, 14: Faul I. demands his dismissal, 39: repudiates St. Julien's negotiations, 122: overthrow of, 122

- demands his dismissal, 93; repudiates St. Julien's negotiations, 122; overthrow of, 122 Thuin, military operations at, iv. 176 Thuringia, military novements in, ii. 278 Ther, River, military operations on the, i. 260 Ticino, River, military operations on the, i. 217; ii. 113 Tierney, G., on England's attitude toward France, ii. 95 Tilly, Gount, N's letter to, Aug. 7, 1794, i. 150 Tillsit, Bennigsen crosses the Niemen at, iii. 32: meeting of the Emperors at, 34-55, 76; treaty of, 34, 35, 47, 51, 33-56, 58, 60, 77, 79, 80, 84-88, 93-95, 104, 129-134, 138, 189, 191, 196, 203, 225, 232, 236, 238, 239, 249; neutralization of, 38; reasons leading to the peace of, 40 et seq.; Queen Louisa at, 40, 49-53; French repre-sentatives at, 43; frateruizing of Russia and France at, 43-46; decoration of the Russian grenadicr at, 54; N's position at, 139; Macdonald reaches, iv. 20 "Times," the (London), on the allies' capture of Paris, iv. 130 Tissot, Dupont's forces near, iii, 122 Toledo, Dupont's forces near, ii, 128 Tolentino, treaty of, i. 211, 260; ii. 208 Toll, Gen, meets Alexander 1, after Anaterlitz, ii. 251; proposes concentration of the allied forces, iv. 116; advises movement on Faris, 122

- Tolosa, French forces at, iii. 142

- Tolstoi, Gen. See OSTERMANN-TOLSTOI
  Torcy battle at, iv. 114: military operations at, 116
  Torcy battle at, iv. 114: military operations at, 116
  Torgan, Saxon troops withdrawn from, iv. 37: French occupation of 51: Ney driven into. 64: battle of, 235
  Torrmassoff, Gen., confronted by Schwarzenberg, iii. 259: joined by Tchitchagoff, 266
  Torres Vedras, the lines of, iil. 218, 219
  Tortona, surrendered to France, i. 215: N. at, 281: scheme to relieve Masséna via, ii. 110: the key of Genoa, 113: topography of the country, 116, 117: the Consudar Guard at, 117
  Tortugas, the, death of Leclerc in, ii. 153
  Tonche, Méhee de la, contrives Moreau's ruin, ii. 189: English plots with, 211
  Toulon, the recovery of, for the Convention, i. 84: military and naval preparations at, 110, 131, 132, 155: ii. 27, 32, 38, 212: return of the Sardinian expedition to, i. 117: anarchy in, 123, 128: the Buonapartes in, 127: the Buonapartes driven from, 129: siege of, 131-337, 173: Marseilles refugees st, 132: Lord Hood's scizure at, 132: the "treason" of, 132, 138: N. at, 144, 142, 161, 163, 173, 184: N's plans for capture of, 136: N. seeks mercy for rehels at, 137: the Sarional Convention's vengeance on, 137, 188: massacres in, 138: British occupation of, 141: recapture of, 148: news of the Terror in, 149: English fleet driven from, 151: the Corsican expedition leaves, 155: N. at siege of, 133: M. catles for gaptian expedition at, 38: N. sails from Alexandria for, 56: failure of Villeneuve's expedition from, 131: N. orders the Spanish fleet to, 116. 60
  Toulouse, Soult thrown back on, iv. 109: defent of Soult at, 159
  Tordenberg, military ocuncil at, iv. 55
  Trade, condition at outbreak of the Revolution, i. 63
  Trafalgar, N's reception of the news of, ii. 214: battle of, 240-242: iii. 42: etch in France, ii. 255: N.'s reply to, iii. 6: the brason of, 202, 203
  Trannes, military movements near, iv. 94, 116

- Trannes, military movements near, iv, 94, 116 Trannes, military movements near, iv, 94, 116 Trasimenus, creation of the department of, iii. 201, 202 Traum, River, military movements on the, iii. 164 Treaties, the value of, iv, 232. For specific treaties see the names of parties signatory (countries or rulers) and of the places at which signed Treibias, River, French disasters on the, ii. 57, 63 Treilhard, M., member of the Directory, ii. 62 Trent, military operations near, i: 234, 235, 250, 254 : ahandoned hy Vaubois, 236 : Brune advances to, ii. 125 : apportioned to the Grand Duke of Thesany, 170 : ceded to Bavaria, 252 Treuenbrietzen, Frussian pursuit of Oudinot to, iv, 60 Treviso, creation of hereditary ducby of, ii. 255 : Mortier created Duke of, iii. 70 (see MORTIER): the Buonaparte family princes of, iv, 82

- Duke of, in. 70 (see MORTER): the Buonaparte family princes of, iv. 82
  Trianon, N., retires to, after the divorce, iii. 197: the imperial court at, 230
  Trianon Decree, the, iii. 214
  Tribunate, the, ii. 85, 99-101: constitution of, 165: opposition to N. in, 155, 156: secret sessions of, 159: new method of electing to, 159: form of addressing the First Consul in, 187: Carnot remonstrates in, against adulation of N., 188: independence of, 204: initiates the imperial movement, 205: condition under the imperial constitution of 1804, 206: destruction of, iii. 67, 68: compared with the English Parliament, 68: its functions, 68
  Tricolor, Lonis XVI. adopts the, i. 57: N.'s scheme to unfurl, in Corsica, 66: insult to, in Naples, 113
  Triest, M. threatens to seize, i. 248: seized by N., 268: reoccupied by Anstria, 268: rise of, 277: importations of English goods at, iii. 128: ceded to France, 184: England's loss of trade with, 208: basis of possible Oriental operations, 522: French occupation of, iv. 49: N. offers the city to Austria, 50
  Trindad, retained by England, ii. 135, 168: ceded to England, 212

- <sup>212</sup>
   <sup>212</sup>
   Triple Alliance, the, iv. 66, 106, 243
   Triumphal Arch, Paris, erection of the, iii. 62
   Tronchet, on committee to draft the Code, ii. 142
   Tropes, recall of the Parliament to Paris from, i. 66: battle of, iv. 94: military movements near, 94, 100, 103–105, 113, 115–117, 100, 100, 100

- iv. 94: military movements near, 94, 100, 103-105, 113, 115-117, 120, 126, 128
  Truchess-Waldburg, Count, Prussian commissioner at Fontainebleau, iv. 148: A.'s attitude toward, 148: allegations cuncerning N.'s physical ailments, 152, 173
  Tudela, French success at, iii. 122: scheme of operations at, 124: Spanish forces near, 143, 144
  Tuilleries, the, the mob at, i. 103: the carnage at, 104: Robespierce orders the destruction of, 149: storning of, Aug. 10, 1792, 163: defense of, 179-182: X. at, on the 18th Brunafre, ii. 71, 72: Lannes's guard at, 74: decoration of, 97: recluistenced "the palace of the Buonapartes at, 128: X. at, on the 18th Brunafre, ii. 71, 78, 200, 263: consular levee of March 13, 1803, 179, 180: scene between Whitworth and N., March 13, 1803, 179, 180: scene between Whitworth and N., March 13, 1803, 180: the imperial court at, 207, 209: refurnishing the, iii. 27: social vinces at, 75: X. at, as 8: the divorce scandal in, 140: the divorce dor the Buorce of the Buorce of and and y. March 13, 1803, 180: the imperial court denored in, 190: imperial family life at, 245; iv, 18: depository of the Emperor's funds, 8, 25, 86, 154: the officers of the Buarder's fund, 8, 25, 86, 154: the officers of the Buorce's funds. 134: changes ln the court at, 159: N. reenters, 166: struggle between royalists and imperialists at, 166: loneliness of, 167

- JEX
  Turas, military operations near, ii. 248, 249
  Turenne, Marshal, military genias, i. 210: N. compared with, 210: N.'s analysis of the wars of, iv. 217, 234
  Turin, military operations around, i. 213, 215: N.'s influence in, 278: Gen. Clarke's mission to, 290: N. in, ii. 17: revolutionary movements in, 26: Bonapartist agency in, 61: Charles Emmanuel IV, invited to roturn to, 93: Melas liastens to, 110, 111, 114: topography of country near, 117: sends deputation to Paris, iv. 17
  Turkey, N. studies the history of, i. 49: seeks to organize its armics, 175: France seeks alliance with, 175: N.'s plans for service in, 176, 177, 178: Austria's gaze on, 198: N.'s eye on, 202: France's influence on, 202: disaffection in, ii. 11: schemest for the dismemberment of, 11. 19, 21, 28-30, 244, 206: alliance with, 22: refuses alliance with France, 45: negotiations and alliances with Russia and Austria, 49: inilitary activity, 1799, 62: joins the second coalition, 62: 90, 93: checked by Franco Russian treaty of peace (1800, 102: defeat of, at Heliopolis, 123: Egypt restored to, 135: treaty between France and (1801), 136: integrity of her boundaries: 168: suzerainty over Ionia and Egypt, 168: N. on her policy, 222: source of discord between France and Russia, 271: Oubril undertakes to guarantee her integrity, 272: X. resolves to assert supremacy over, iii, 4, 5: declares war against England, 23: N. Jerken with Susian acquistions in, 54: French influence in, 33: Russian acquistions in, 54: 17: rench of the agriarize is 3: alliance with France, 33: end of Sebastianl's influence in, 33: Russian acquistions in, 54: 17: rench influence in, 31: X. Intervenes hetween Russia and, 81: terms of the agriarize, 33: alliance with France, 33: end of Sebastianl's influence in, 33: Russian acquistion to acquire territory of, 87: ustradies of Mathemeter in aggrandizement at expense of, 25: Austria seeks territorial aggrandizement at expense of, 26: invorts the methem bethere the faggrandizement at exp
- Turreau, Uen, at Mone Cents Pass, in 100 closes more characterial
  Turreau, Mime, N.'s ghastly entertainment for, i. 152
  Tuscany, the Biomaparte family in, i. 12, 13: favors the French Revolution, 155: peace between France and, 155: withdrives from the coalition (1795), 197: military operations against, 217, 260: French proposition to revolutionize, 227: treaty with France, Jan. 11, 1797, 251: plunder of, ii. 11: involved in It-lian quarrels, 59: France acquires temporary possession of, 60: N.'s bad faith with, 95: Austrian occupation of, 105, 111, 119: reinforcements for Melas from, 111: creation of kingdom of, 132: British ships driven from harbors of, 183: the situation in, iii. 94: ecclesiastical reforms and confiscations in, 202: Elisa created Grand Duchess of, 213. See BUONAPARTE, MARIE-ANNE-LISA created Grand Inchess of, 213. See EUONAPARTE, MARIE-ANNE-ELISA Tuscany, the Grand Duke of, i. 207 : flees to Vienna, ii. 59, 60 : loses his territory, 125 : territories acquired by, 170 Tutschkoff, Gen., in battle of Eylau, iii. 19 Tweifth Light Dragoons, at the battle of Waterloo, iv. 203 Two-Cent Revolt, the, i. 41 Two Stollies, the, i. 260 Tyrol, the, the road to Vienna through, i. 206 : military opera-tions in, 296, 227, 234–236, 240, 254, 266, 268, 269 ; ii. 236, 245 ; iii. 155, 164, 165, 181 : X.'s unsuccessful attempt to concil-iate its people, i. 235 : loyalty to Austria, 250 : the insurrec-tion in, 268 : Kray's retreat to, cut off, ii. 109 : Iller commanding in the, 122 : Soult cuts off the Austrian retrest to, 235 : Ney sweeps the Austrians from, 245 : X. threatens to seize, 251 eded by Austria to Bavaria, 252 : insurrection ripe in, 115 : 151 Archduke John to excite revolt in, 154 : repression of pricstly tyranny in, 155 : revolution against bondage in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155: Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of its people, 155 : Maximilian's reforms in, 155 : character-istics of the armistice of Znain, 186 : reduced to sub-mission i, 186 : amnesty offered by Prince Eugène, 186 : opened to the allies, i

Ucciani, N.'s escape to, i. 120

- Ucciani, N. & scape to, 1. 120 Udine, congress at, ii. 13 Ulim, Austrian retreat to, ii. 109: Austrian troops in sight of, 233; the French at, 233, 234 : the capitulation at, 235, 236 : con-centration of troops in, iii. 158 "Undaunted," the, N. sails for Ellon on, iv. 153, 154 United Irishmen, misunderstanding between the Directory and the, ii. 46

- the, ii. 46 nited States, the, constitutional government in, i. 87: the French idea of the system of government in, 160: Talleyrand's residence in, ii. 22: Talleyrand's views on, 22: mission concern-ing protection of commerce, 23: treaty of commerce with England, 1794, 136: arrogance of the Directory toward, 136; im-broght with France, 136: suspension of diplomatic relations with France, 136: commercial convention with France, 136: neu-United

- United States, the continued.
  traity declaration, 1793, 136; Jerome Buonaparte's residence in, 164; events leading to the war of 1812, 184; ili, 210; purchased Louisiana, il. 184, 212; iv. 247, 248; N.'s relations with, and influence on, ii. 184; ili, 206; Moreau's banishment to, 191; counsercial rivality with England, ili. 14; British claim of right of search, 42; effect of British 'orders in council' upon, 42; ocean commerce, 42; authorizes reprisals, 42; French attacks on commerce of, scizures of vessels, etc., 43, 209, 210, 226, 244; rising naval power, 43; ilberty of testamentary disposition in, 69; English provisions concerning the carrying trade of, 81, 82; permitted to frade direct with 8 weden, 81, 82; N. attempts to force them into the French system, 82; decline of trade with England, 82; Jefferaon's attainistration, 82, 83; narieolitural policy of the Democrats, 82, 83; the cubargo, 82, 83; 210, 211; the war of 1812, 83, 944; policy of the Federalists, 83; the Non-Intervention Act, 83; indispensability of cotton in Enrope, 204; "nentiral" commerce of, 205; proposal that Louis XVIII, acquire a kingdom in, 208; alleged seizure of French vessela by, 210; the Non-Intervention Act, 83; indispensability of commerce, 242; crippied commerce of signal, 211; Lucien attempts to escape to, 212; chafting under restrictions of commerce, 242; crippied commerce of, 244; declares war against England, iv. 16; naval successes of, 16; Moreau summond from, 37, 52; N. plans eacape to, 208, 209; Hamilton's treasury system, 220; the independence, 247; popular interest in N. in, 247, 248; N.'s infhence in, 248; the slavery question in, 248; See also AMERIOA
  University of Farnce, ii, 147; ili, 73
  Ural Mountains, proposed Indian expeditions via, ii, 134
  Urbino, annexed to Hay, ii, 58, 94
  Uscha, River, military operations on the, iii, 257
  Ussher, Capi, conveya N. to Elba in the "Undannted," iv. 153, 154

- Usury, the curse and its cure in France, ii. 140; iii. 63, 64 Utizy, military movements near, iii. 261

77

- Valais declared an independent commonwealth, ii, 149; Cha-
- Valais, declared an independent commonwealth, ii. 149: Chateaubriand French representative in, 166: scheme to incorporate it with France, iii. 204: separated from Switzerland, 213: independence of, 213: annexed to the French empire, 213
  Valeggio, N.'s narrow escape at, i. 241
  Valence, M. joins his regiment at, i. 34: N.'s life at, and visits to, i. 34-42, 68, 74, 79, 82, 85, 89-91, 108, 134: the garrison at, and people of, 81: obsculies of Mirabeau at, 88: Friends of the Constitution in, 89: reception of N. and Elisa at, 108: occupied by Carteaux, 128: death of Pins VI. at, ii. 26, 27: burial of Pius VI. at, 139: neeting of N. and Augereau near, iv. 152
  Valencia, massacre of the French at, iii, 121: Moncey advances on, 122: French defeat before, 124: captured by Suchet, 221: temporary French government at, iv. 15
  Valenzia, military operations near, i. 217
  Valenzia, French plot to seize, ii. 12: the sword of, given to Paul 1., 102

- Valenciennes, evacuation of, i. 133
  Valenza, military operations near, i. 217
  Valenza, military operations near, i. 217
  Valenza, military operations near, i. 217
  Valenza, French plot to seize, ii. 12: the sword of, given to Paul 1. 102
  Vallodolid, captured by the French, iii. 105: French auccess near, 122: French communications at, 123: X. at, Jan. 6, 1809, 146
  Valmaseda, Blake driven back to, iii. 143
  Valmaseda, Ilake driven, 174: stength of his corps, March, 181, 246: commanding division in Eugène's army, iv. 28: junctiou of Danish troops with, 37: captures Hamburg. 37: goes to Davout assistance, 42: in battle of Dreadea, 56-68: at Firna, 56-68: at Pirna, 56-68: at Firna, 56-68: at Firna,

- Venetia, neutrality violated by Reaulleu, 1. 219: jealousy between Venice and other towns of, 264: coveted by Austria, 265: the revolutionary movement in, 209: the analitand ceded to Austria, 270-273: the oligarchy of, 275: French military operations in, il. 8: France's acquisitions in, 14: incorporated in the Cisalpine Republic, 14: plunder of, 26: surrender to Austria, 270-273: the oligarchy of, 276: French military operations in, il. 8: France's acquisitions in, 14: incorporated in the Cisalpine Republic, 14: plunder of, 26: surrender to Austria, 26: admitted to the Concordat, ili. 94. See also VENICE
  Venetian Alps, road to Vhenna through the, 1. 206
  Venetian Republic, political status in 1796, 1. 207
  Venice, N. atudies the history of, 1. 49: Austria's ambitions in, 198, 262; fi. 229, 233: military operations against (1796, 1. 217: Beaufile violates neutrality of, 226, 290: at N.'s wicery, 228: resents violations of territory, 247: N.'s violation of neutrality of, 264, 265 the Golden Rook of, 264, 265, 269: pillage in, 264, 276; fill 11: Kilmalne's military watch on, 4. 266: revolution in, 268, 276; 17: concludes negotiations with N., 269, 270: acquires Bolocus, Ferrara, and the Romagua, 271: N. forbidden to interfere with, 272: loss of independence, 272-276; fires on French bip, 273: N.' an Artilat. of, 273, 274: N. declares war against, 274: the oligarchy of, 275: attempts to hribe N., 275: Iteraty between France and (1797), 276: the new republic of, 276: loses independence, 276, 277: Y. otheraterization of the Yenetians, 271: N. distras the republic to Austria, 277: N. reproached for the overthrow of, ii. 3: Lalemant's propagnadia, ii, 7: Junot's demands on the sente, 7: dismemberment of, 11: the Directory's ambition for the conquest of, 11: ceded to Austria, 16: destruction on aval atores at, 16: secks to continue war with Austria, 16: destruction on aval atores at, 16: secks to continue war with Austria, 16: dragged info war by N., 95: clection of Fins VII. at 1.33: N
- Verhuel, Dutch commissioner to Paris, ii, 256

Verdier, success at Logrobo, iii. 122: occupies Aragon, 122
Verdun, abaudoned by the eneny, i. 110: imperial troops at, iv. 125
VerDuel, Dutch commissioner to Paris, ii. 256
Verona, N. at, i. 246: French occupation of, 227: military operations near, 232, 237-240, 251 et acq.: insurrection in, 269, 273: disarmainent of, 273
Versones Vespers, the, i. 269, 273
Veronese Vespers, the, i. 269, 273
Veronese Vespers, the, i. 269, 273
Versailles, meetings of the Estates at, i. 49, 56: huxury in, 86: the Pariaian mob at, 86: prison massacres in, 111: Macdonald'a gnard at, ii. 74: N. retires to, after his divorce, iii. 197: Souham delivers his army prisoners at, iv. 143, 144
Vicenza, military operations before, i. 236: creation of hereditary duchy of, ii. 255
Victor, Gen, C. P., attacks Provera at La Favorita, i. 254: watchea Rome, 266: reinforces Lannes at Castegrio, ii. 116: commanding corps at Marengo, 116-110: service in the Army of Eogland, 185: battle of Heilsherg, iii. 29: battle of Friedland, 31, 32: created Duke of Bellnno, 71: yearly income, 71: character, 75: x1.<sup>3</sup> opinion of, 75: at Anuurrio, 142: defeated by Wellesley at Talavera, 182: therethol his corps, March, 1812, 246: ordered to advance cast from the Niemen, 264: in refreat from Moscow, iv. 2 et acq.: effects junction with Saint-Cyr, 2, 3: checks Wittgenstein, 3: abandons Yitcbisk, 4: driven back, 7: at the crossing of the Beresina, 8-11: ordered to holdback Wittgenstein, 9: defeated by Wittgenstein at Borrissof, 10: division commander under Engèhe, 28: in campaign of 1813, 34: relieves Glogau, 42: battle of Dersden, 66, 57: guarding roads from Bohemia, 63: battle of Leipsic, 71, 73, 74: assigned to defense of the Rhine, 89: ordered to Nogent, 95: junction with Macdonald at Monterean, 90: abardons Nogent, 97: driven back, 00: degraded, but restored to favor, 103: commanding portion of the Young Guard, 103: battle of Craonne, 107
Victor Amadeus, king of Sa

- Vienna continued.
  characterization of N. in, iv. 43: England's diplomacy in, 45:
  Francis fears a French invasion of, 53: Congress of, 156, 157, 169, 170; news of N.'s escape in, 169
  Yienna Coalition, the, iv. 170, 223
  Vigo, Vilheneuve al, ii. 230
  Villach, N. enters Germany at, i. 268: Eugène and Macdonald at, iii. 168

- 254. the Pithelin Pite Kutusoff enters, 20: Alexander goes to, 20
  Vimeiro, defeat of Junot at, iii, 123, 124
  Vincente, the trial and execution of the Duc d'Enghien at, ii, 195, 197, 198; iii, 152
  Vincent, Gen., Austrian representative at Erfurt, iii, 138, 150
  Vistula, River, the, N.'s conquests west of, iii. 2: plan of campaign on, 5: bridging of, 10, 11: French positions on, 13: attempt to drive the French across, 29: proposed boundary line on, 35: military operations on, 93 ; iv. 28, 30: Alexander prousises assistance to Prussia on, iii, 243: the French army reaches, 250: French advance to the Niemen from, 25: Mirat's position on, untenable, iv. 21: Schwarzenberg retreats across, 21: threat-oned expulsion of the French from, 44: French garrisons on, 76: N. entertains hopes of returning to, 96, 98, 100
  Vitcehsk, its strategical position, iii. 226: N. at, 256: military movements near, 256; iv. 6: French garrison in, 259: the French abandon, iv. 4
  Vitoria, Dupont ordered to, iii. 102: Ferdinand VII. at, 112: French forces at, 142: battle of, iv. 47
  Vitry military movements near, iv. 92, 117, 119, 120: Prussian occupation of, 120: French troops at, 125
  Virtes, Gen, besieres Barcelona, iii. 143
  Vivan, Gen, in battle of Waterloo, iv. 902
  Volga, River, the, proposed Indian expeditions via, ii. 134: Cossacks of, iii. 14

- Volhynia, Austrian troops in, iii. 252, 256: Bagration's position 54
- Wölkermarkt, Archduke John at, iii. 168 Völkermarkt, Archduke John at, iii. 168 Volney, Constantin F. C., espouses the Corsican cause, i. 64, 65: A.'s friendship with, 95; ii. 67, 214: memher of the senate, 100
- Voltaire, on the character of Paoli, i. 6: N.'s study of, 40; ii. 163; iv. 216, 217: his "Essay on Manners," i. 85: on the Hohen-zollern territories, iii. 6: performance of his "Edipe" at Erfurt,
- Voltri, military operations at, 1. 216 Vorariberg, Kray's retreat via, cut off, ii. 109: ceded to Bavaria,
- <sup>252</sup> Vosges Mountains, the, proposed boundary for Germany, iii. 243: the allies turn the line of, iv. 91, 92: supposed retreat of Schwarzenberg to, 113: reported rising in, 115: N. urges guerrilla risings in, 116
- Voss, Countess, attendant on Queen Louisa, iii. 51

W

- Wachau, battle of, iv. 70-72
- Wachau, battle of, 1v. 70-72
   Wagram, Charles's advance toward, iii. 169: battle of, 174-179; iv. 176: French demoralization after, iii. 178: doubtful honors of, 178, 179: N.* position after, 179: position of Francis after, 179: Erthicr created Prince of, 197. See BERTHER
   Walcheren, the English expedition to, iii. 183, 195, 207, 208, 217, advanced by the second second
- Walewska, Countess, N.'s amours with, iii. 16: visits N. at
- Wallewska, Countess, A. e anone end, as the start of the star
- War, N.'s aphorisms, theories and plans of, i. 209, 210; ii. 172; iii. 157: barbarlty ln, ii. 48: thirst for, in France, 64: the art of, 119

- Warens, Mme. de, memoirs of, i. 39
  Wartare, progress in methods of, i. 242: in Napoleonic times, ii. 117, 118
  WarSaW (city), Louis XVIII. living in, ii. 154: Polish national movement io, iii. 8: the Russians driven from, 10: French occupation of, 13-16: frivolity in, 16: N. 's amours in, 16: N. of fers to evacuate, 130: proposition that Russia occupy, 138: Archduke Ferdinand to march against, 154: captured by Poniatowski, 165: otlered to Prussia, 174: attitude of the Poles in, 233: Jesuit influence in, 240: proposition to make it capital of a Saxon province, 249: N. in, 251: the Die begs the restoration of Poland, 251, 252: Schwarzenberg evacuates, iv, 21: Russian occupation of, 21: proposed new capital for Prussia, 39
- 39 Warsaw, Grand Duchy of, creation of, iii. 48, 54, 61: acquires Prussian territory, 53: new constitution for, 56: N. seeks to add Silesia to, 86, 87, 90: Alexander's jealousy of, 87: N. pro-mises to evacuate, 90: fortification of, 93, 129: acquires New Galicia, 184: territorial acquisitions, 188, 236: pro-Russian party in, 237: Alexander proposes to accept the crown of, 237: inilitary operations in, 244: open to invasion, 250: N.'s incog-nito journey throngh, it. 14: interview between N, and De Fradt at, 14, 19: Rossian invasion of, 21: N. refuses to give up, 27: reft from Saxony, 28: in Russian possession, 32: threatened dismemberment of, 38, 39, 49: proposed extinction of, 43: N. s scheme in, 346 scheme in, 246
- distributering of the second second
- Wavre, military operations at, iv. 183, 184, 186, 189-191, 193, 205

- lay at, 235: epic character of, 229: effect on the world, 229
  Waterloo Campaign, parallel between campaign in Piedmont and, iv. 173
  Wayre, military operations at, iv. 183, 184. 186, 180-191, 193, 205
  Wealth, X. ou, i. 77
  Weapons of War in 1796, i. 210
  Wehlau, military movenneuks near, iii. 31
  Weimar, dissension in the Prinssian camp at, ii. 280: flexing at, 281: meetings of X. with Goethe and Wieland at, iii. 134-136
  Weimar, Grand Duchess of, entertains X., iii. 135
  Weissenberg, Gen, captured near St. Dizier, iv. 126
  Weissenberg, Gen, captured near St. Dizier, iv. 126
  Weissenberg, Gen, captured near St. Dizier, iv. 127
  Weissensee, narrow escape of Frederick William III. at, iii. 24
  Weilsenberg, Gen, Captured near St. Dizier, iv. 126
  Weissensee, narrow escape of Frederick William III. at, iii. 24
  Weilegley, Sir Arthur, takes ommand of operations in Portugal, 182: prepares for invasion of Spain, 182: hathe of Talavera, 182: withdraws before Souli, 183: created Duke of Wellington, 203. See WELLINOTON, DUKE 07
  Wellington, 203. See WELLINOTON, DUKE 07
  Wellington, Duke of (see also WELLESLEY, Str. ARTHUR), effect of Moore's spirit on 147: holds Portugal, 217: reinforces the army in Portural, 182: inther of Talavera, 217, 219: battle of Dissaco, 218: retreatdown the Mondego, 218: constructs the lines of Torres Vedras, 218, 219: hattle of Constructs the lines of Torres Vedras, 218, 219: hattle of Constructs the of Standard, 221: advances into Spain, 221: summons famine to his ad, 221: advances into Spain, 221: summons famine to his add, 221: advances into Spain, 221: summons famine to his add, 221: advances into Spain, 221: summons famine to his add, 221: advances into Spain, 221: summons famine to his addie 21: advances fronter, 220, 221: summons famine to his addie 21: advances fronter, 221: summons famine to his addie 21: advances fronter, 25: moves adjust Madrid, 2

- Wellington, Duke of continued.
  strength at Waterloo, 188: Blucher promises support, 188: Grouedy alms to prevent union between Blucher and, 189: his resolution to give hattle in front of Solgnes, 189: his center at Mont St. Jean, 191: Gneisenau's doubt of his standing at Waterloo, 191: Inck of confidence in the Dutch-Belgian troops, 193: headquarters at Waterloo, 193: lines of retreat, 195, 205: the plan of Waterloo, 193: lines of retreat, 195, 205: the plan of Waterloo, 194: hattle of Waterloo, 195 et say; respeated calls for Blucher, 198: stories of his anxiety, 200: his conduct of the Waterloo, 194: faint-hearted cooperation with Blicher, 204: restores Louis XVIII, 203: danger of N.'s surrender to, 211: share in the reconstruction of France, 212: alleged attempt to assassinate, 219
  Wels, Russian troops at, ii. 236
  Wereher, N. compared to, i. 42
  Wessel, ceded to France, ii. 251: French garrison at, 261, 270, 273, 276: demand for its restoration to Prussia, 274
  Wesser, River, French occupition of N.'s dream of, iii. 61: an end to the dreams of, iv. 48
  West Indies, the, scheme for populating, ii. 152: English block-ade of the French floet in, 164: Jerone Buonaparter in, 104: flop, and watches French policy concerning, 171: France koks to her power in, 179: N.'s ambitions in, 184: French squadrons ordered to, 213: Nelson enticed to, 230: N.'s ambitions in, iii, 235

- Westphalia, military movements in, ii, 276: organization of the

- Burtor B, B. S. Solson Contents 10, 2007. N.* a functions in, inf. 235
  Westphalia, military movements in, if. 276: organization of the kingdom of, iii, 49, 537. Jerome king of, 61, 213, 214: war indemnity exacted from, 65: levy of troops in, 105, 244-246: sequestration of Frederick William's estates in, 126: insurrection in, 174: Schill's failure in, 180: scheme to incorporate part with France, 204: French occupation of, 234: French influence in, iv, 49: flight of Jerome to France, 79
  West Prussia, Lestocq's retreat through, iii. 1
  Whitbread, Samuel, on the French Revolution, ii. 94, 95
  "White Terror," the, i. 165; iv, 210
  Whitworth, Lord, character, i. 171: ambassador to Paris, 171, 177: evales declaration of Encland's Maltese policy, 175: summoned to the Thileries, Feb. 17, 1803, 179, 180: at consular levee of March 13, 1803, 179, 180: this attitude, 182: on N.'s reception of April 4. 182: reports on France's naval preparations, 182: publication of bis despatches in England, 182: A.'s declaration of Visada and the france, 245
  Wilazma, battle of, iv, 3
  Wieland, C. M., Interview with N. at Wiemar, iii, 135: decorated at Erfurt, 137: estimate of N.'s influence, 245
  Willach (Carinthia), ceded to France, iii. 184
  Willaum, Prince (of Prussia), mission to Paris, iii. 138: in battle of Waterleo, iv, 199
  "William, the Conqueror," by Duval, ii. 225
  Willot, Gen., proposes to destroy the Directory, ii. 5: suspected of ploting against X., 193
  Wilson, Sir Rohert, endeavors to reorganize the Russian army, iii. 207

- Wintzengerode, captures Soissons, iv. 106: defeated near St.

- wintzeingeroue, captures soussons, iv. 106: defeated near St. Dizier, 120
  Wischau, Junction of Austrian and Russian troops at, ii. 245
  Wittenberg, captured by Davout, iii. 21: French forces at, iv. 28: French occupation of, 51: military movements near, 60
  Wittegestein, Gen., in the Russian campaign, iii. 259: menaces the French left, 266: resumes offensive sgainst Saint-Cyr, iv. 2; checked by Vietor and Saint-Cyr, 3: pursuit of the French army, 7, 20: Vietor ordered to hold back, 9: at the passage of the Beresina, 10: defeats Victor at Borrissoff, 10: bad general-ship of, 13, 20, 21: losses in the Russian campaign, 20: citot ordered the Russian campaign, 20: fails to cut off Macdonald's retreat, 21: commanding the alied army, 34: the battle of Lützen, 36: losse bis command, 40: commanding Mary, 103
  Wkra, River, bridging of the, iii. 10, 11

Wolkonsky, Prince P. M., in military council with Alexander

- L, iv. 122 Women, N.'s attitude toward, and ideas concerning, 1. 77, 81, 152, 187, 192, 278; il. 129, 153; ill. 248; education of, il. 145; demands of German social custom on, ill. 199 Wrede, Gen., in campaign of Ecknuchi, ill. 150; movements be-fore Ratisbon, 162; defcated by Hilter at Erding, 164; battle of Wagman, 177; reaches Vilna, iv. 12; commanding Bavarian traves 76.

- of Wagram, 177: reaches VIInå, iv. 12: commanding Bavarian troops, 76
  Wright, Capt., lands the Cudoudal conspirators in France, II. 189, 190: Savary suspected of complicity in death of, 267
  Wurmser, Gen, N.'s operations against, 1211: sent to reinforce Beaulien, 217: military genus, 231: marches to reflef of Mantua, 231 et seq. coperations on Lake Garda, 233, 234: operations on the brenth, 234, 235: advance-guard captured at trimolano, 235: defented at Eassano, 235: defented at Eassano, 235: defented at Eassano, 235: defented at Eastano, 235: controlization of his array, 235: markes interfectual sally from Mantua, 240: besieged in Mantua, his defense and saurender, 250-258: N.'s generosity to, 257, 258
  Würtemberg, makes peace with France (1796), 1.235, 279: grants to the Grand Duke of, H. 170: relations with and subservience to France, 243, 260; iii. 214: created an independent kingdom, ii. 252: 373: acquires territory after Austerlit2, 252: member of the Confederation of the Rhine, 260, 261: supplies contingents to N.'s armies, ii. 261; iii. 117: allotiment of Austrian funds to, 204: turns from N. to the allies, iv. 79: position in Germany, 246
  Würztemberg, Princess Catherine of, marries Jerome Napoleon, iii. 75, 76
  Würzburg, seized by Jourdan, i. 235: reported French occupation of, ii. 273: N.'s base, 275, 276: French forces at, iv. 28

- Y "Yamacks," the, iii. 127 Yarmouth, Lord, negotiates for peace, ii. 259, 261 Yelin, author of "Germany in her Deepest Humiliation," ii. 271 Yermoloff, Gen., pursuit of the French army by, iv. 20 Yonne, River, military operations on the, iv. 136, 166 York, Duke of, besieges Dunkirk, 1. 133: defeated by Brune at Bergen, ii. 63, 207: capitulates at Alkunar, 63 York, Gen., in correspondence with Alexander I., iv. 21; con-cludes convention of Tauroggen, 21, 26, 29: nominally degraded, 21: desertion of the French canse, 27: his action approved by the Estates of Eastern Prussia, 30: battle of Bautzen, 39: battle of Leipsic, 72: reinforces Blucher at Montmirail, 96: held by Mortier, 104: routs Marmont at Athies, 108: quits Blucher's army, but returns, 108, 100 "Young Guard," the, iii, 172: hattle of Latzen, iv. 36: hattle of Dresden, 56, 57: ordered to Bautzen, 65: auder 65: under command of Ney, 103: Victor commanding portion of, 103: "melts like snow," 107: N. reviews, 136, 137: battle of Waterloo, 199
- Waterloo, 199

$\mathbf{Z}$

- Z Zaborowski, N. seeks service with, i. 129 Zach, Gen., in battle of Marengo, ii. 118 Zacharias, Pope, on kingly power, ii. 208 Zampaglini, Corsican patriot brigand, i. 78 Zampaglini, Corsican patriot brigand, i. 78 Zante, France's jealons care of, ii. 21 Zealand, French occupation of, iii. 207: N.'s offer to exchange it for Hanseatic towns, 207 Zembin, the Emperor's retreat through, iv. 10 Ziethen, Gen. J. J., in Waterloo campaign, iv. 175: at Charlerol, 176: at Fleurus, 176, 177: battle of Waterloo, 198, 199 Zittau, French advance from Dresden to, iv. 55: Elucher's road to, blocked by Lauriston, 55 Znaim, military operations near, ii. 236: Kutusof's retrest to, 244: Charles withdraws toward, iii. 177: fighting at, 178: French repuise at, 181: the armistice of, 186, 193 Zorndorf, battle of, iv. 235 Zurich, the plundering of, ii. 27: battles of, 63, 93: Army of the Reserve ordered to, 108, 110: Masséna's victory at, 207

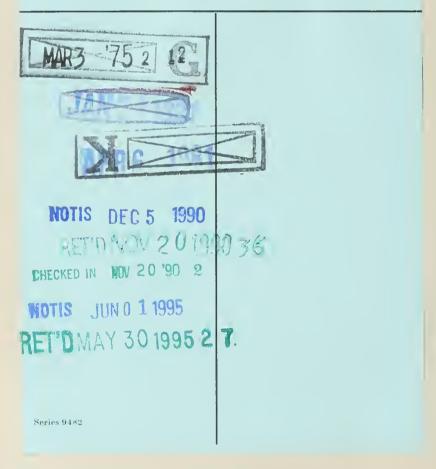

.

.

THE LIBRARY UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA Santa Barbara

THIS BOOK IS DUE ON THE LAST DATE STAMPED BELOW.

÷

.

