FOREWORD

This is a book of surfaces. A collection of images and sensations, in an attempt to retain the immediacy, the intensity, the color of Chapel Hill.

Recent changes in the size and orientation of the University have stirred this "sleepy little village touched by a strange magic," transforming it into a community without boundaries. No longer a primarily regional institution, UNC's faculty is international and its student body diverse. As its interests broaden, the purpose and duty of the University is constantly being called into question.

Yet the Tar Heel spirit has not changed. In many North Carolinians, it is instilled at birth and carried to the grave. The true Carolina Blue remains as varied as the people who profess it, however. Found in the most unexpected places, in even less expected forms, the countenance of Carolina has engaged us here. Not only the sky, but everything in this part of the state seems to be tinted a light shade of blue.

Surfaces? Yes, we did go deeper.

Each one of us sees UNC before a different background of ideas, attitudes, and experiences—these cannot be isolated from the University itself. This variety of interpretation fascinated us, and we sought to retain it. Therefore, do not expect our descriptions to be totally impartial—strong impressions and opinions cannot exist without some degree of bias. It is the associations of the images within this book that made them important to the individual artists.

You will not find the University conveniently packaged. You may not agree with everything you see here, but do not ignore it; remember where it came from. It is up to you to draw the conclusions. Go to the source—the University, the town—and decide for yourself what is real, here, on "the cutting edge of tomorrow." Y

Am I imagining things or could one not ask for a more beautiful morning and place to be than in Chapel Hill? How could I express it more than in that thought? The blues, the greens, the quiet people moving about.

I have seen every kind of beautiful today. The starry night, the campfire: now here, mute, absorbing the beauty. I wave to people but do not talk. Right now, I am not one of them. I am not a part of this academic functioning. Yes, I do have my DTH, but look at the way he watches her shake. Mmmm. I see why—but it is a friend who got crutches yesterday and is walking at warp speed today. I say my first words of the morning, "Very good." I am comfortable.

At 9:30, I will be student again, catching up with responsibilities, but till then . . . I'll still walk on the sidewalks. Yes, watch the dogs playing, wrestling, sniffing, standing off and advancing. No Thornton Wilder, there is not enough time to dental floss. It is 8:30 Tuesday in the year of our Lord something. I am not going to deal with people until the last possible moment.

Except maybe Kitty; what a beautiful day for a mellow girlfriend, like Kitty. Yes, this is a letter to you Kitty, ok. That makes it less personal.

Forget it, sorry Kitty.

Trees, birds, cars on Franklin Street, buildings, roofs, squirrels hiding nuts. Birdcalls 1,2,3, must be mockingbirds up there.

I would be just waking up now.  Ebeling

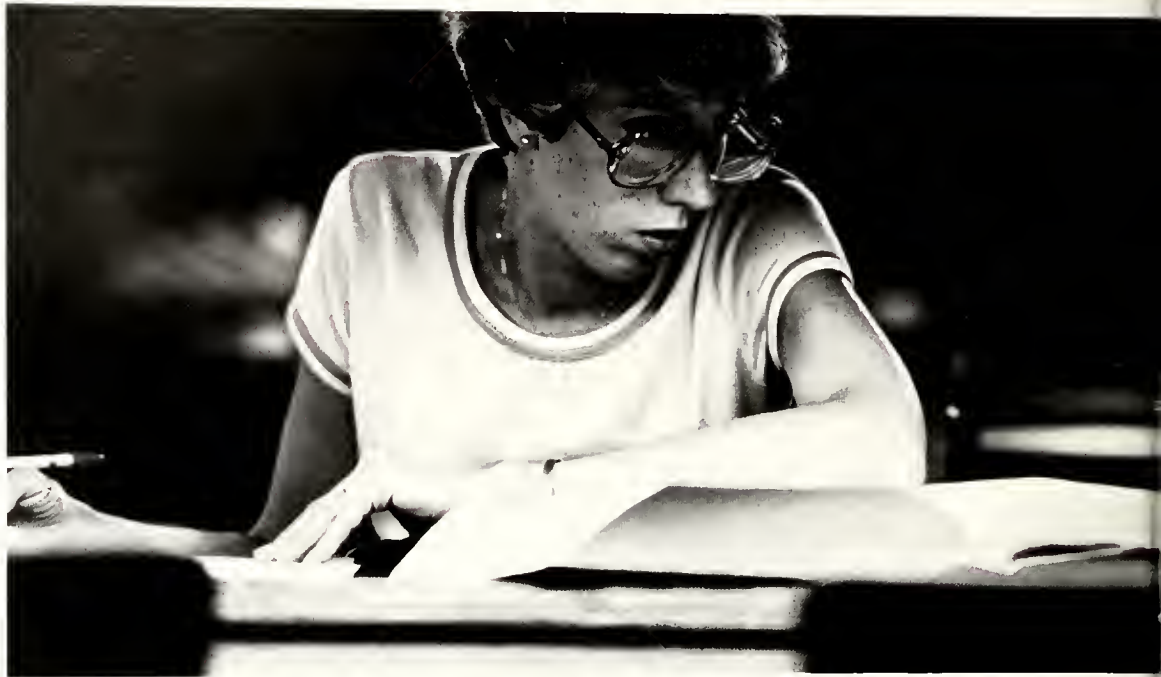

"It never ceases to amaze me," Hank told me one time, "the way they all come back."

We were sitting on the steps of the Ackland eating Blimpies and watching the alums come in. The Alums Come Slumming he called it that year, the year he would finally graduate.

"How many Carolina Blue Lincolns can you count?" Leaning back on his elbows with his eyes half closed, he looked like a swamp turtle sunning on a log. "Jesus!" He sat up and dropped a tomato on his tennis shoe. "Look at that Jag. Must be a Rams-header."

And so every home game we'd eat Blimpies and watch them drive in. Then we'd walk around the parking lots trying to decide which tail-gate picnic looked the best that morning. One time we actually spotted a pair of crystal candelabra on the hood of a blue and white LTD.

"Chandeliers on the front of a limousine." He raved about it for weeks.

"I just can't figure it out. Can you?" he asked, and so began our pre-game catechism —

"What?"

"Why they do it."

"Do what?"

"Get all dressed up like they were going to a wedding, cram into a car full of pimento cheese and chicken legs, ride God only knows how far to sit in the rain or the hot sun — one or the other — and inevitably get ripped?" He shook his head and poured bourbon into my Coke. "Then they go stand around at the court party hoping they'll run into that great guy what's-his-name, or at least see someone who looks kind of familiar. Somehow they always reminded me of the pigeons in the pit. They know they belong here, but they can't quite figure it out. What's the purpose anyway?"

Although I never said so, I wasn't at all sure they needed one.

He swore he'd never do it himself, become one of the True Blue. But that was three years ago. Now he's back for the game.

At eleven I meet him at the Coffee Shoppe. He leans against the cigarette machine just inside the door.

"Well, you do look nice, sir," I say. I have seen him in a coat and tie only once before. He grins and pins a mum onto the collar of my coat.

"Got to go all out for the sake of the Blue and White, you know. What'll it be?" He looks at the menu and whistles "Hark the Sound" softly through his teeth.

We have good seats, right on the 45 and even though the umbrellas go up and down throughout the game, it is a good one. Lots of action, lots of noise, lots of liquor. "... across the field our foe has fled."

"Go Heels! Jesus, Lizzie, did you see that pass?" He jostles my elbow. "They're hot! God, look at that son of a bitch run." Bourbon and Coke on the mum. "TD! All right!" He grabs me around the neck nearly knocking me off the bench, and all the while we are singing, "I'm a Tar Heel born, I'm a Tar Heel bred . . ." And when we leave Kenan Stadium I steer him through the yellow trees and around the wet spots in the pine straw.

The sun is out bright now and the water on the trees makes them sparkle. He pulls a leaf off a maple limb and sticks it in his button-hole.

"Do you know what I like best about ball games?"

"The majorettes?"

"Nope."

"The big blue plastic cups?"

"Nope."

"Okay, so tell me."

"I love the way everything gets a glow about it. The sun's out and the sky's blue and the leaves look like they ought to feel warm when you touch them."

"That's the glow in you." I pull the empty pint bottle out of my coat pocket.

"No, really. Nothing else glows quite the way a Carolina home game Saturday glows." We stop and look up. Through the thin yellow leaves and pine needles the sky is solid blue.

"The perfect color of October," he says softly, still gazing up through the branches. "Now I see why." He pulls my arm through his and winks.

"Shall we go to the court party?"

Y Cooley

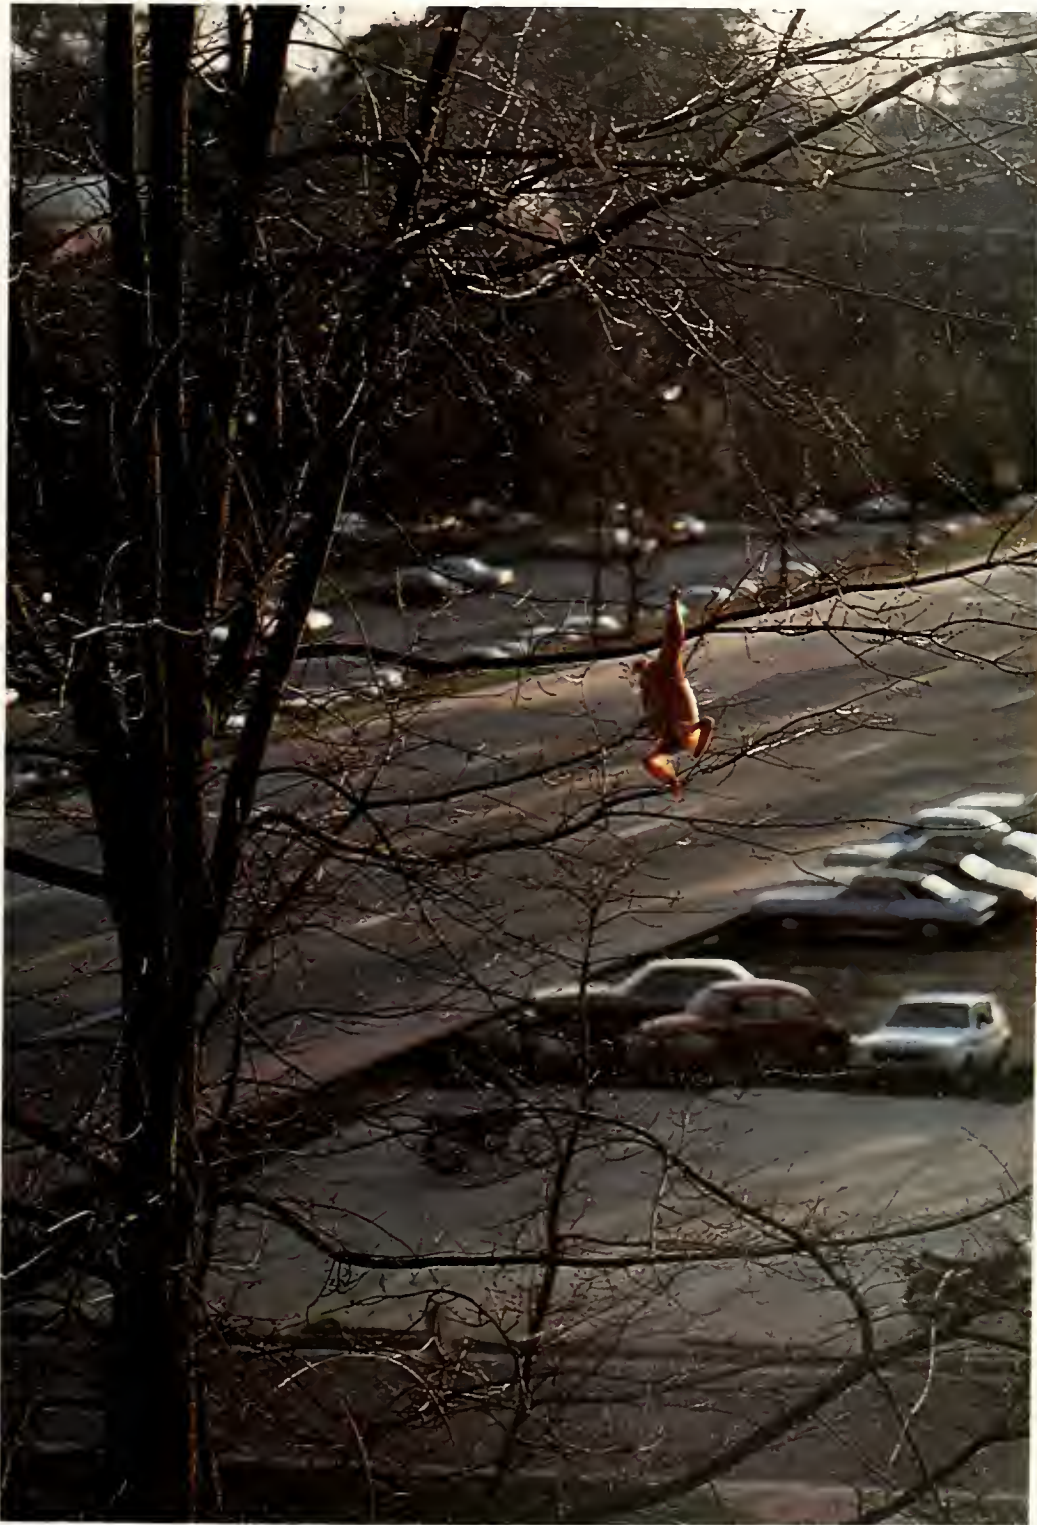

As soon as the phone rang, Marleen jumped on her bed and pulled the blue and white afgan over her head.

"If that's a guy, I'm in the shower. Find out who it is and . . ."

Sally held the receiver out to her, balancing it on two fingers. "It's female," she said, and opened the bottle of "Luscious Rose" nail polish she had just gotten out of Marleen's top drawer. She folded herself neatly knees-to-chin on my desk top and began to paint her toe nails. Her feet looked like two slices of spice cake, sweetly tan; a nice smooth wedge from arch to toe. I had never met anyone with perfect feet before I met Sally. Crunching on stale sunflower seeds I reflected—perfect knees, perfect thumbs, perfect earlobes . . .

"Anyway, the reason we don't want to go to the mixer tonight is because that dorm is full of Geeks." She found the conversation where she had left it when the phone rang and picked it up again. "Now what we ought to do is go to that All-Campus Party out on Finley. There definitely will be some Hunks there." For almost two semesters she had been trying to impress upon Marleen and me the vast difference between Nerds, Geeks and Wimps as opposed to Hunks, Bods and Real Cauties. He is so-o-o-o ca-ute she would say, sighing and looking at the sky. And Marleen would sigh too, and chew on one of her gold necklaces. Marleen caught on to things quickly.

"But we haven't a way out there," I reminded them, mumbling slightly. I'd just taken a big bite of banana.

"I'll get us a ride, don't worry about that!" She swung her smooth bare legs off the desk and casually inspected her gum-drop toes. "You two just be ready in a couple of hours. Get really spiffed. No jeans tonight." She looked at me smiling, "And God, don't wear that purple print skirt, okay?" Smiling still she walked out of our room with Marleen's bottle of "Luscious Rose."

In two hours we still didn't have a ride.

"What's wrong with this hall? Nobody here knows how to party!" Sally slouched gracefully on her bed, pouting among her cross-stitch pillows and stuffed rabbits.

"Did you tell Kathy about it?" Marleen asked.

"She's playing student tonight."

"Becky?"

"Went to the library to see if she could find that cute lacrosse player."

"Lois?"

"Got a date." Sally went to her mirror and put on her mascara for the third time since we'd been in there.

"There's got to be a car somewhere!" She reminded me vaguely of a late-night movie actress.

"We could always just go on down to the basement here and drink a couple of beers . . ." I should have known better. Sally turned from the mirror and pointed her mascara wand at me.

"If you think, after I had to drag that ironing board all the way from Second East, just to press my skirt, I'm going to go down and waste my Thursday evening with a bunch of Nerds—"

"Really," Marleen echoed, and made sure all the clasps of her necklaces were in the back. I couldn't figure out what she was so upset about. She hadn't spent any time ironing her skirt.

"If Daddy had just let me bring my car back . . ." Sally put an album on her stereo and turned up the volume. Marleen sat on the bed with her arms crossed and stared at the floor.

"Well . . ." I stood up and stretched my arms assertively.

"Well?"

"Well, suit yourselves." I slipped the tan skirt Sally had told me to borrow over my head and dropped it on the bed. I was in the mood to wear weird purple. "I'm going down to get a beer." On the way out I took Marleen's nail polish off Sally's dresser and carried it back to our room.

The next afternoon Sally came into our room with a carton of yogurt and a Tab.

"Oh, I'm in love!"

"Really?" Marleen was on the floor in front of the TV. The Young and the Restless was on and I knew she hadn't heard a word of what Sally said.

"He is so-o-o-o ca-ute!"

"Really?"

"His name is Jim. He's a junior and in accounting, and he's going to rush about three of the really good fraternities this spring; and oh, he's such a Bod . . ."

"So where did you meet him?" I asked, since Marleen still couldn't hear anyone but Chris and Snapper.

"Downstairs last night." She pulled the cardboard box out from under my bed and began rummaging through the cans of chicken noodle soup and tuna fish. "Have you got any popcorn?"

"Yeah, the popper's in the closet." She was waiting for me to ask more. "So the party wasn't that bad?"

"Well Jim is definitely an exception. An exception to the dorm-rat rule, I mean." She set the corn popper in the middle of the floor and plugged it in.

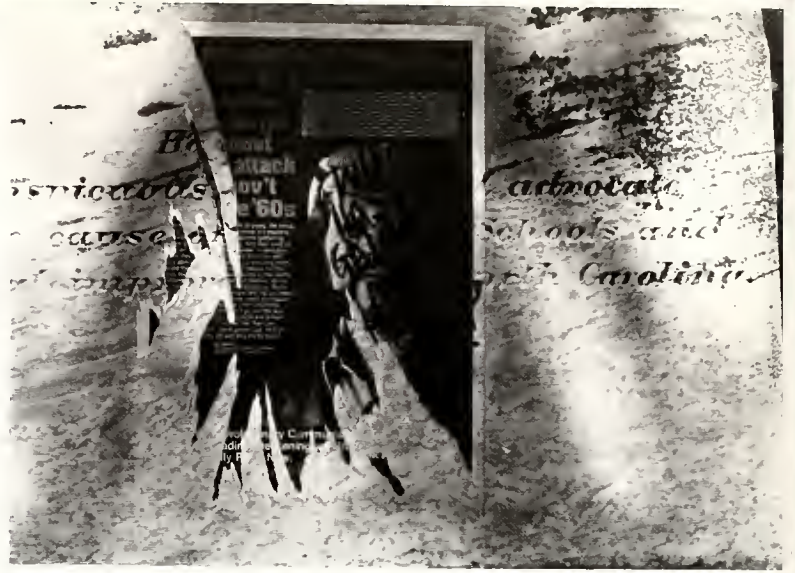

"He'll call?"

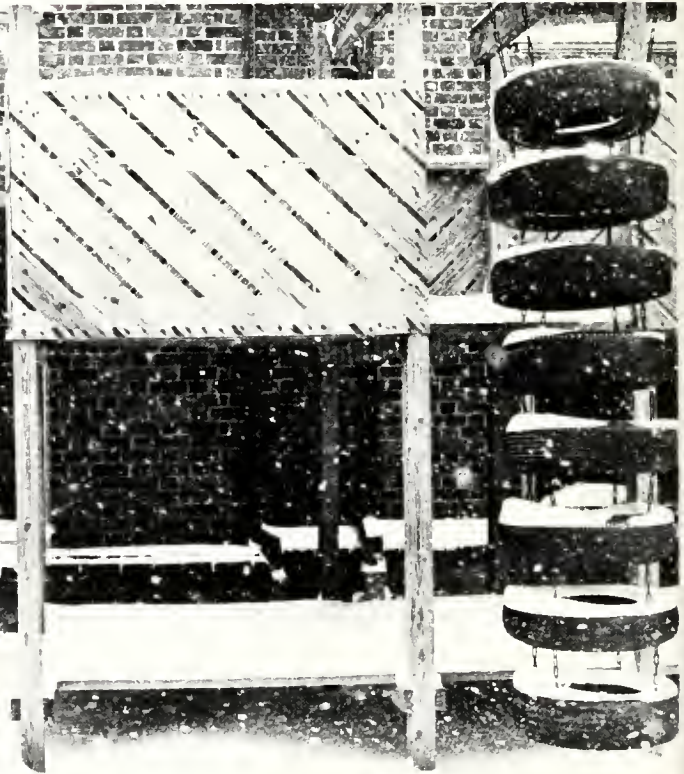

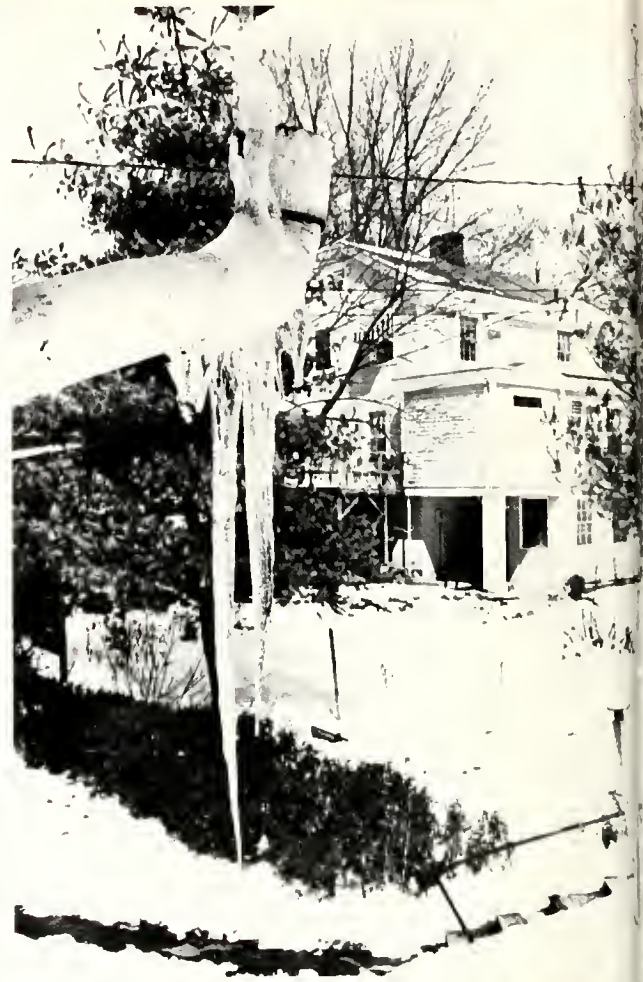

She wrapped herself around the popcorn popper like a slick Siamese Cat. "Oh yes, I'm sure of it," and watched the corn burst into rigid little clouds inside the plastic dome.

I know I have studied too much History 77 when the words of Theodore Ropp's War in the Modern World begin to float off the page into the air. This is the fourth straight hour of reading, but only now is it beginning to make sense.

"I don't care if Ropp was Leutze's teacher. This book is junk. . . . Actually it is quite a convenient little volume. If you'll notice, the pages come loose from the Elmer's glue binding. Scan a page and then — "I pull the next page and send it sailing into the trash.

Kevin looks up from his chemistry. "You shouldn't treat your books that way."

"Tis a better fate than this one deserves. It was banned in Boston and everyone's grades rose."

"You should try spontaneous reactions, or something else important."

"Bruce Springsteen," I yell, running onto the balcony. "I'm a teenage werewolf!"

"And they shouldn't have let you out of your cage." I turn around. Waynard, wearing a crumpled black cowboy hat and a dirty leather jacket, is grinning through his red beard.

Gary sticks his head out of the suite door. "Waynard, they tell me you're not taking any exams."

Waynard laughs. "I'm protesting grade inflation."

Gary steps out onto the balcony. "That's the stupidest thing I have ever heard." He grabs the cowboy hat and sends it flying down ten stories to the volleyball court.

Waynard seizes him by the shoulder. "Okay, Gary, we're going to get that hat."

Kevin comes out of his room still holding his chem book. "Great opportunity for a water balloon. Where's the hat?"

I point to it and we position ourselves for the drop. A few minutes later two shadows appear on the court and Kevin flips the balloon. A scream echoes between the wings.

I point to it and we position ourselves for the drop. A few minutes later two shadows appear on the court and Kevin flips the balloon. A scream echoes between the wings.

"Come on, Kevin," I say, picking up the trash can just inside our door. "Let's dampen their spirits." We fill it and two others with water and lean them against the elevator doors. "We're covered."

From the lounge, we hear an elevator open and a girl scream, "My sneakers!" Waynard's and Gary's laughter follows.

We walk into the hall to find our RA with wet feet; Gary and Waynard are waiting with the other two cans and vengeful grins. Gary throws at Kevin, but he slips and hits me instead. Waynard dumps the other can on Kevin to even the score—for tonight at least.

The four of us retreat to our respective suites. "Are you going to do any more studying?" Kevin asks.

"No, I'd go crazy. I've put in my time and if it isn't enough, then it's just too bad."

"Hey," he jumps off his bed and runs to the window. "Gary is at the door. Wonder what he's up to?"

I scare him away, but find a note attached to the black cowboy hat:

*Death to all members of this suite.
Hawg Hall will reap revenge in a waterfight*

tomorrow at 6:00 p.m.

Be There and Die!!!

Incredibly I forget my glasses for the exam the next morning, so the maps Dr. Leutze projects onto Hamilton 100's screen look like Jackson Pollack drip paintings. Upon finishing, I turn in the exam and then sprint back to Morrison. There I ceremoniously pour rubbing alcohol on the remainder of Ropp's pages; they make a wonderful blaze.

Kevin and I skip dinner at Chase to prepare for the battle. We are at a disadvantage: our suitemates are too smart to get involved, and the guys of the BUZ suite next door are still at the training table. Alone, at 6 p.m. we face the ranks of Hawg Hall, heavily armed and chewing Skoal. Outnumbered six to two, Kevin and I do what any smart Yankee would do—run. All the way down to the second floor before taking an elevator back to the tenth. This is a mistake. Gary and his cousin are waiting in the hallway.

"To the lounge!" Kevin shouts. The lounge is a designated demilitarized zone, but the Hawks like to ignore the complexities of limited warfare. Waynard and Gary grab us as the rest line up single file to dump their cans. When they finish, Kevin and I are soaked and the lounge is flooded.

"Don't panic." Kevin's tone isn't reassuring. "It ain't over til it's over. Fill up a can and don't turn back until you've hit someone."

We have plenty of targets. Nearly everyone on the two wings joins the chaos. A few of the girls battle in shower caps and raincoats, those soon run back screaming to their rooms. A small waterfall forms outside our suite, ending in a puddle ten stories down.

When everyone is drenched, we turn on the crowd of spectators below. This continues past the 7 o'clock deadline and stops only when members of the ninth floor notice that areas of the tenth floor are leaking.

Silently mops and brooms are brought out and carpets flung over the balconies to dry. Night brings peace to Morrison.

Finding it impossible to study amidst the silence, I take my math book to the lounge. Kevin is already there, sailing a Coke cup in the water. I wade across the pond and sit next to him.

"We ruined a lot of people today," Kevin says.

"And a few stereos," I add.

"Yeah, that's too bad. Mine was off the ground, but most of my clothes got wet."

"That will teach you not to throw them on the floor."

"That will teach me not to live in a front room."

Hours later I walk back to the suite and find the door locked by rope, tied securely to the railing. A sign hangs from the doorknob: Hawg Hall Strikes Again!

Too tired to laugh, I untie the rope and go to bed. Y Mock

She wore a light blue pullover this time. I'd seen her the night before and the one before that and even, I believe and say, last week, and each time, I say and believe, the male companion was new. She always made sure that the help noticed her versatility. Don't ask why. I'm as sober as dishwater by law and inclination. There's a permanent pot of mud behind the bar. I make regular calls. By the devil's heart, women who frequent my place with as frequent changes of venue catch my eye when they enter, while they're making Lothario's fingertips burn in their palms, and when they set their course for the street four sheets to the wind. They respect my right to notice.

She was foaming blond, skirted, sweet as a dancer from the School of the Arts. Her preferences, however, were clear as gin: tall, fair, moustached — male. The routine: drink after summer drink way past the time this week's is hanging onto the edge of the seat with his free hand, white-knuckled. That far and further she would trace him, round on round and derry down 'till time to lead him out the door wavering; were his goal to be attained (I know not whether not or so) it was assuredly sloppy in execution. Such is life among the laity.

And she, of course, totters not, as sober as Silent Sam.

So tonight I ruled a modification in the ground rules. The ticket arrived via barmaid and commanded two gins and tonics; he got the standard 1.5 ounces of gin. She got 2.0.

The dishwasher smoked at the bar and snickered.

"Practice your specialty," I said.

"Wash a dish?"

"Maybe two."

Another Camel came to light in his eggsplattered paw. "I'd rather watch." He stepped behind the bar, pilfered a cup of coffee and shoved a Led Zepelin tape into the stereo. Your time is gonna come.

Their left and right hands were respectively laced together and her Pearl Drop teeth reflected his eyes. He seemed all her world. From time to time his eyes dropped to her cashmere bosom and eye contact broke off.

Then she would give me and the dishwasher an unsmiling look, turning when she saw us looking back.

I began to watch them in the mirror. Rounds two and three demanded my licensed attention: 1.5 and 2.0.

Footsie broke out beneath the board and a run ravaged her stocking. He unfastened his top button. She doffed the pullover: white blouse, quilted white bra beneath even whiter. Red face and ruffled hair. Round four and out. Dazed and confused, she let him help her up. Three soundings helped them to the cash register and out the door.

She paid the check. She left no tip. Y Deal

What else is new? It's raining because I didn't bring my umbrella and the bus is late. That's the way it always is and by the time I find a seat, my Shakespeare notebook is soaking wet and I try not to even get a glimpse of my reflection in the window. The only time waterproof mascara works is when you try to take it off.

It doesn't faze the bus driver that it is raining or that the road is still under construction. He is a frustrated demolition derby driver who gets his practice with the transit company. We zoom down the roads, over hills and I know where all of the familiar faces get off. Finally it is my turn to ring the bell and I have to push up and between all of those unfortunates who didn't get a seat. I step in several puddles but by that time I really don't care; I always wear tennis shoes on rainy days just like I never carry an umbrella. Where the hell is that blue sky everyone always talks about?

People run up to their apartments or cars but I really don't mind getting wet. As a matter of fact it's the best thing that has happened to me all day. I really can't help hoping that no one is in the apartment but good things like that just don't happen; they have to be planned. Besides, it's three o'clock so there is no question as to whether or not Jenny is watching General Hospital; she's practically on staff and more than likely, yep there's Brad's car. He will either be in the kitchen watching Clare fix him something to eat or they will be in her bedroom with the stereo full blast so that no other sounds can be detected. I would almost rather see the scene full force in technicolor than to know exactly what's going on and pretend that I am completely ignorant when they come out and say, "We have an econ exam." They accomplish a lot, or so Clare admits when she drinks a few too many, but I know that it is not related to economics. Jenny loves to get in on those conversations and I can't figure out why Jenny and Clare don't decide to share a room and leave me out of it.

Jenny is sitting on the couch in her bathrobe eating an ice cream sandwich. "God, you look awful." She looks back at the TV. "You must have had a bad day." She always knows the right thing to say.

"Where's Clare?" I go into the kitchen with my heart set on an ice cream sandwich and as usual, the last one is at that minute being devoured. No cheese, no bread, no peanut butter—just one Budweiser and a can of cream style corn. Thank goodness I have an emergency stash under my bed except that it is hard to smuggle things into the kitchen since Jenny is always on patrol in the living room.

"Where do you think?" She gets up and moves around during the commercial to do a few exercises — "No sense wasting time," she always says. "I'm so sick of him being over all the time."

I just shrug because Jenny is always sick of something.

"I mean he ought to pay rent." She is touching her toes and I have a strong urge to kick her over. "I think we ought to say something about it."

"You say something." I go into our room and pull my box out from under the bed. Jenny's dirty clothes are all over the floor and her bed is unmade. I hate it but what I hate worse is that someone has discovered my box and everything is either stale or gone. A can of chicken noodle soup is the only thing worthwhile and I figure that I better go ahead and eat it before Jenny gets tuned into the Tuesday Night Movie.

"What are you going to do?" she asks.

"Eat."

"God I'm so mad. There's nothing to eat." She follows me into the kitchen. "That's another thing, Brad should help pay for our groceries, too." She hops up on the counter and rubs the toe of her athletic sock around the sink of dishes. "Where did you get that?"

"You must know." I say and watch her face turn red while she asks, "How should I know?"

"I did the dishes last week." I say. "Whose turn is it."

"I'm sure it's Clare's," she says. "Clare can't think about anything except Brad these days. She used to be a good roommate."

"Yeah," I say and almost envy Clare locked away in the room of her own. Of course she does pay a little bit more rent but who wouldn't? I pour some of the soup into a bowl while Jenny watches to see how much is going to be left in the pot. "Would you like some?" I ask.

"Oh no, I hate to eat your food. I mean only if you decide you don't want it."

"I don't" I say, "I don't even want this." I shove the bowl over to where she is sitting. "I'm going to take a bath."

"Is something wrong? You can tell me." She stops with the spoon aimed for her mouth. I can also call the radio station or just open the window and tell the complex, stomp it out to the people below in Morse code — and what would I say? Leave me alone.

"You take more baths than anyone I know." She says and it's true. I learned a long time ago that more than likely, you can be in the bathroom alone.

I'll take a hot bath, use every bit of hot water. The lock on the side that runs into Clare's bathroom area is broken but she's not going to be out for awhile. Again — hair in the tub and there is nothing that I hate worse than having to touch someone else's hair especially when it is that unwanted hair that is no longer attached to anything except the drain. I equally hate having to flush for someone and it seems that I am becoming a full time hair picker, commode flusher. Nobody cares.

"Telephone!" Jenny sticks her head in the tub area.

"I'm not here."

"But it's a guy!"

"Find out who it is and I'll call back."

"You're so boring. Aren't you curious?" Jenny is fanning the door back and forth and the air causes the hairs on my legs to bristle and Jenny makes me bristle all over. I face her full technicolor. "Do you mind?"

"Okay. Okay. You don't have to be so bitchy." She slams the door and keeps talking. "I was just trying to do you a favor," and I know that I would rather that no one ever did me a favor — no thank you — no favors.

The water is so hot and feels so good that I decide to sit there until I am totally shriveled. Then I'll take a nap before studying and try to forget that I share a room with Jenny. I will try to forget that Clare's bed squeaks spasmodically through the night and I will forget that I have a very important exam in two days and I'll forget that

"Whoops!" Surprised Brad, in the nude steps back from the room. "Sorry, I was going to take a quick shower."

"It's all right." I say and I think I'll spend the night.  McCorkle

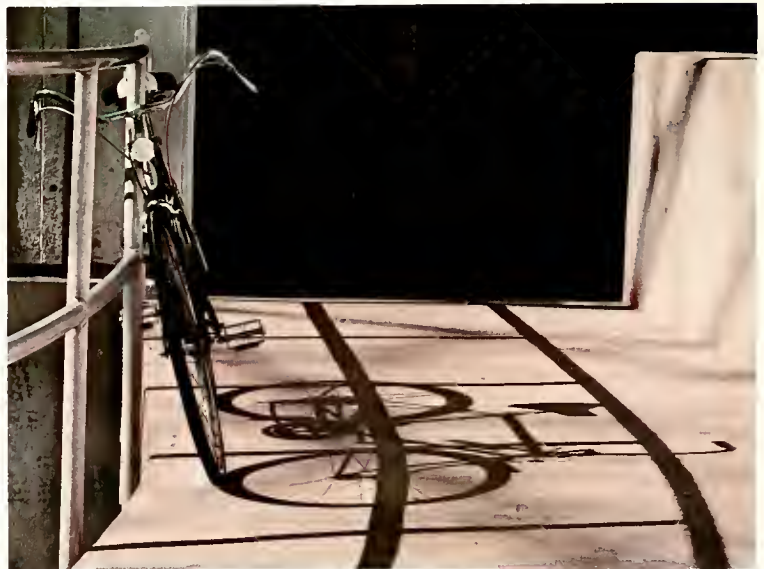

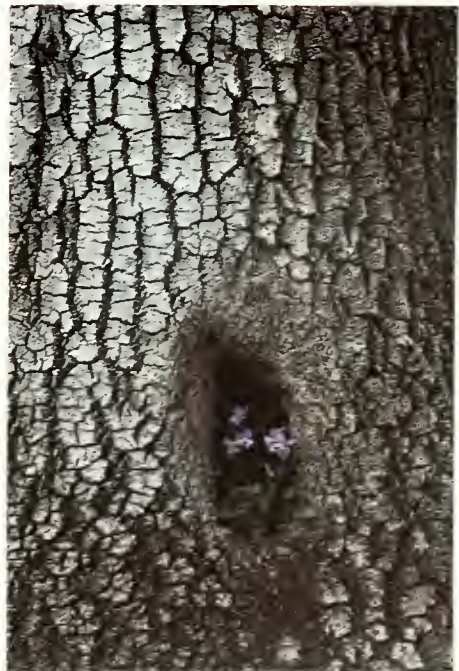

I don't appreciate being called Sugar by a female nurse when I myself am a female, thank you. That's nice, bang my arm on the bed railing there. Oh, I'm plenty warm — you just make me glow. I can hardly wait for my EEG — will you escort me? I guess we'll both be wearing basic hospital white. The only thing I would really like is . . . you got it. Bye-bye Sugar.

Even heaven couldn't be as white as this room — it's incredible. I've never seen a place so clean and disinfected; you would never guess the messy things that go on in here. The light shines through the window and reflects off the top light to the bed railing and sparkles into my eyes. I wonder if any elementary school pupil has ever bothered to count the dots in this ceiling. Ah, there's a trace of color out in the hallway — bright green and orange stripes. Thank God it's out there. I'll take my whiteness any day, thank you, at least it doesn't scream at you like the stripes. The whiteness is neat and tidy, and everything's germ-free and in its place. If I sneeze I might ruin it all. Better just to sit and not move and blend in with the sanctified environment and God, my mind is really going. This room definitely needs a touch of darkness and disorder to bring it down to earth. Let's see what we can do.

There, that's perfect. Nothing like a little graffiti to make a place more comfortable. You see, I couldn't write it about my mother, because it's not really true. So I wrote it about your mother — you don't mind, do you? I mean, I know your mother doesn't usually wear combat boots, but somebody's mother does. Maybe that nurse's mother does and maybe someday she'll find this note and know it was meant for her.

Obviously if I am in the student infirmary, I go to Carolina, right? If I knew why I fainted, then I wouldn't be here. Probably an emotional reaction to the lecture — supply versus demand is pretty upsetting stuff. Do they send nurses like you to charm school? Well, I guess Michigan Blue Cross cards have different numbers or something from North Carolina cards. Forms aren't your forte, eh? Oh, you have heard of the state of Michigan then? Yes, I said I was a junior — an old, corrupted, cynical junior. Bye-bye, Glucose.

This is not the part of the world for a diabetic, I'll tell you that. At first I was overwhelmed by the sweet smiles and long, drawn-out "heys" and just loving someone "to death." And the make-up globs and mixers. I feel a definite repugnance for the word "mixer." Not only does it sound like something from 1910, but it always makes me think of chocolate chip cookies. If we're really going to a mixer, we should all come out in one big glob of doughy flesh. Sounds a lot more interesting than some of the mixers I've been to. Everything overwhelmed me at first; it all seemed so appropriate for a fluffy pillow. Even the iced tea had sugar, whether you asked for it or not. That's kind of how the whole campus struck me.

Isn't that a polite euphemism, "to lose control of one's bladder?" Must we explore all the gory details? Even if I did remember, I'm not sure I'd tell you, honey. Well, what do you know, it's EEG time. OK, how about if you let me get out of bed by myself so we both don't end up in a heap on the floor. Thank you. It's you and me together now, Sugar, we're a team. Over the linoleum and through the halls . . . So tell me, was your mother ever in ROTC?

I used to think the ROTC people looked so official and out-of-place in their neat, creased uniforms and hats. But enough afternoons spent procrastinating on Greenlaw Wall changed my mind. I slowly realized Carolina wasn't just a sugar mountain; there are more than just a few odd raisins thrown in. I kept a mental score of passers-by — on some days the '60s holdovers with long hair and defiant expressions numbered the most. Once in a while the guys with letter jackets and slow, respectable walks won out. More often, the winners were the big conglomerations of pink, and khaki, and add-a-beads, and top-siders. Of course, there were always those who must have posed for the "Are You A Nerd?" poster. My favorite category was always the dogs — they never won in numbers but they had the most character.

Oh no, these pins piercing my skull don't hurt a bit. Relax my jaw and teeth? OK, if you explain to me how to relax my teeth, I'll make us both millionaires. My name's Nancy but you can call me Sugar, and I'm a callous, bitter junior. Oh please, you're not really going to blink lights in my face, are you? Oh, come on. This makes the funniest black and orange patterns. God, this is driving me crazy. If you don't slow it down, I'm going to lose it all in a minute. Oh God, I'm trying to relax my eyeballs, it's not easy, you know. Oh Lord — oh boy. There we go, slow it down a touch. That's it, oh, that's better. Fewer and fewer flashes — there we go. Slower, slower. Now just turn it off. All black, no more orange. Don't worry, there's nothing I would rather do than rest. This kid's had enough.

I've never liked blinking lights in discos or old movies or when your little brother is annoying you when you're trying to fall asleep. It's funny because sunlight fascinates me — the patterns of light and shade on the sidewalk beneath the trees. Like in McCorkle Place on a late Friday afternoon in the spring. The sun dapples you, and plays on the face of whomever you're walking with, spotting on and off slowly. The deep greens and browns of the trees alternate light and dark. Two or three stereos are blasting through windows; frisbees glide overhead. There's a faint scent of magnolia blossoms at one spot. The next step smells like barbeque, the next like cut grass — the odor alternates like the sunlight. And you walk slowly and inhale this Chapel Hill because there are no papers due tomorrow and there is nothing to do right now but relax. Rush hour traffic is speeding and jerking stopped in the streets, and there's nowhere you have to be or you'd rather be. Runners and sweat fly past and you resolve once more that you've got to start running again. Some people are reading outside and some are coming back from the library and some are already on their way downtown for the evening. And you don't care who's in which category or how they're all dressing and acting, because nobody else cares. This Chapel Hill doesn't care if you drink plain or sugared iced tea or whether you like mixers or think they're trivial. Or whether you spend your Friday afternoons studying or playing frisbee or dancing nude on a table. Or even whether your mother wears combat boots. Because in Chapel Hill there are few white walls, neat categories or sanitized wastebaskets. And everything is not in its place and everything is not clear-cut, but it deserves to be tasted and rolled over the tongue and savored. And doggone it, please don't wake me up now, I'm in the middle of a beautifully corny, philosophical dreamworld and I don't want to come back to Tuesday morning. Well, you've done it now, it's too late, I've been restored to reality. Oh yes — I enjoyed it immensely having flashing lights zonk my brain. The wit in this place overwhelms me. No, my head isn't stinging, just aching and throbbing with pain. OK, you run down the hall for a minute; I don't mind waiting at all. This wall is just too white — I think it's violating some sort of law. The problem is, this isn't really true about my brother, so I've got to write it about yours, OK? I mean, don't be offended. Joe Namath wore them.

That was your usual grace in helping me up, Sugar, thanks for another bruise. Oh boy — back to my warm sterile room that has probably been re-sprayed with disinfectant three times since I left. We're off, Sugar, watch out for those striped walls. Graffiti? I think it's an abomination. Y Plant

It was like almost being killed by a falling rafter (which mixed the coke with plaster dust so thoroughly that there was just no way) but for having gone to Psych 26 for once

CONCERNS

What America needs is an Educational Creed . . . a schooling concretely conscious of its aims . . . Our state universities must envision a much larger role, quantitatively, as well as qualitatively, for higher education in the life of the state and nation . . . They must be instruments by which every citizen, youth and adult, is enabled and encouraged to carry his formal and informal education as far as his inherent capabilities permit. We simply cannot afford to let our precious human resources go undiscovered and undeveloped . . . We must teach our people how to live, as well as how to make a living.

—Dr. Frank Porter Graham, 1948

In the critical light of history, Frank Porter Graham shines out as perhaps the University's most farsighted leader in this century, a concerned and articulate individual a generation ahead of his time. But his vision of the University, of education, of progressive leadership, has not been sustained by his successors.

Undeniably, the University today is very different from what it was thirty years ago. The student body, faculty, and facilities are many times larger; the primarily regional institution of Dr. Graham's time has grown to national prominence. Yet in its rapid growth has the University lost sight of its traditional responsibility as a progressive force in the state and nation?

It seems that the University, in expanding its concerns, has lost much of its cogency. UNC was once a powerful force in major issues affecting the southeastern United States. Committed to the pursuit of truth, the University provided support and protection for those who did not agree with the social and political majority. It often spoke out against established practices of this region, and the University Press produced controversial books that had been denied publication elsewhere.

Today, the University is recognized nationally for its participation in research and government consultation, but its faculty seem immersed in their individual publications and contributions. Without strong native ties, it seems that the University's international faculty no longer has the time, nor the inclination, to address the immediate problems of the state and region.

The social role much in evidence during Dr. Graham's days earned this University recognition as a progressive institution. The state once looked to the University, as the proving ground for new ideas, for leadership in all areas of life; it now must be content with statistical excellence based on individual publications and discoveries. The University, still considered the center for the great minds of this state, is no longer willing to transfer its insight and knowledge directly to the people.

During the 1970s, the University administration seemed to focus more upon the business of education than upon education itself, insuring its future with new buildings rather than new ideas. The University became a year-round construction site, with financial stability assured as the administration carefully avoided controversy, and commitment.

The University seems content to live on past accomplishments rather than living up to them. In 1968, at the suggestion of a faculty advisory committee, the University pledged its commitment to increased recruitment and retention of minority students. This commitment has been periodically reaffirmed, but the dedication has not been accompanied by much tangible progress. Recent University decisions raise the disturbing possibility that, on such a faculty of international caliber, women still do not receive equal opportunity for tenure.

The past ten years saw the realities of the marketplace challenge UNC's traditional role as the state's premier liberal arts institution. As the economy lurched from one crisis to another, a large number of students shifted away from the liberal arts in pursuit of more "practical" degrees, such as business administration, nursing and pharmacy.

Concern with the quality of undergraduate education grew as did the University's stated priorities as a research institution. University incentives for excellence in teaching were felt to be inadequate, as many feared that committed researchers were not equally concerned with their roles as instructors. However, this soon proved to be an unnecessary conflict.

Evaluation continued with a prolonged study of UNC's undergraduate curriculum. The proposed curricular reforms stressed a tightening of basic skills requirements in English composition, foreign language, and mathematics, as well as a greater emphasis on general education and the development of new courses.

Yet the rudimentary problem remains virtually untouched. Preparation for living, as well as making a living, would require a radical shift in educational methods and curricular planning, but also a reevaluation of the concept of education itself. Priority must be given to analysis over memorization. Graduates must be able to do more than repeat information; they must have the ability to use this information logically to solve daily problems. Students have begun to view the right answer as the one that will earn them an A from a given professor on the final exam. Unchallenged, they learn with little questioning, confident that they need only return to their notebooks for the solution of future problems.

The University's misguided emphasis on measurable success is perhaps more evident in its athletic program. Athletes are intensely recruited, and those admitted with substandard academic credentials receive tutorial assistance throughout their University careers. With carefully monitored schedules, one wonders whether this additional assistance succeeds in aiding the students' rise to Carolina's standards, or merely in compromising these standards.

Athletic competition often appears to overshadow education, but the generation of revenue and national prominence seems even more important. While the men's basketball team was awash in money and facilities, the women's team was forced to beg for money to attend an international tournament in London, where they finished first — a showing considerably better than that of their male counterparts. Despite Title IX, inequities persist in athletic funding.

One wonders why alumni are not recruited to the cause of education as much as they are to the cause of athletics. Solicitation of the three million dollars required for the proposed student activities center began in July 1980; its 22,000 seat basketball arena is the fourth largest University facility of its kind in the nation, and the largest to be built through private funding. Perhaps the University is not entirely at fault. The Carolina Challenge, a three-year program to increase the University's endowment, recently ended far short of its originally targeted goal, despite a single donation of 11 million dollars. The satisfaction of a winning football or basketball team seems far greater than the satisfaction of educating young men and women, with Carolina Fever regulating priorities even after the last seat is sold . . .

There are more blacks and women in the University's student body than at any time in its history, certainly this represents a change for the better. Yet the diversity they could introduce remains potential. Only one in five black students participate in the Black Student Movement. At the 1980 Black Arts and Women's Festivals, performers often outnumbered the spectators.

So many of today's students look the same; does their conformity of dress reflect conformity of thought, or the lack of thought altogether? The Greek system is definitely on the rebound, although almost completely segregated racially. Brown v. The Board of Education has yet to influence some corners of the campus; both students and administration seem unconcerned.

Important legal victories for civil rights seem to have changed little more than laws. Self-satisfied reformers turned to celebration, ignoring the deeply rooted prejudices that continue to plague society. The students of the '70s seemed to recognize little need for change; what student activism that remains is "properly channelled" into campus organizations and "properly" reflected on an individual's resume. The majority of student interest in social and political issues seems to have been replaced by narrow self-interest, not inconsistent with the "me" generation, and its pursuit of material success and immediate gratification. The resumption of student protest during the past year is heartening, yet it remains to be seen whether the cause or the novelty of these small scale marches inflamed participants.

As we enter the 1980s, the University's spirit and vision seem weakened by a lack of strong leadership, misguided priorities, and complacency at all levels. It is hoped that under the guidance of newly-appointed Chancellor Fordham, the University will once again realize its responsibilities to itself, the state, Y and the nation.

Speakers 1979

September 11
Sir Harold Wilson

"There's a 'goodies and baddies' formula and it goes like this: The Russians are the enemies so they are the baddies. The Russians hate the Chinese and the Chinese hate the Russians. Since Western countries also hate the Russians, they reason that the Chinese must be the goodies Many take Chinese expansion too softly, however, I don't trust them; they are Communists."

September 27
Howard Morland

"Dissemination of information will allow us to take meaningful steps toward disarmament What I wanted to do was make the H-bomb real, to explain how the mystique concerning nuclear weapons started with the trial of the Rosenbergs and continued through McCarthyism to today."

Sir Harold Wilson is the former prime minister of Great Britain.

Through writing his article on the hydrogen bomb for The Progressive magazine, freelance writer Howard Morland caused a federal court to issue an injunction for prior restraint for the first time in U.S. history.

October 9
Edward Villela

"Great art is a series of simplicities juxtaposed to create complexity. To be clear, logical, and simple is for a dancer to make great art.

"There is nothing like the stage. You are in conversation with the audience. There is nothing like the spontaneity and immediacy of it; I dance for the sheer joy of it."

October 31
Howard Jarvis

"People who vote for bond issues today are crazy; they are supplying the money for everybody and the people who own property are paying for it.

"The state has got to arrange for money for schools. Everybody who wants free education should put his money where his mouth is.

"Private employment is how you have a strong economy, a strong country."

December 3
Coretta Scott King

"Involvement is important because it is not the acts of bad people that are so frightening but the appalling silence of good people.

"In the 80's human rights will focus on economic justice ... [which] will be a more difficult struggle because it will cost the nation.

"You can vote and be blind and not meet the changes needed to be made ... we should watch the voting records of our representatives and senators in our districts and if not representative of our point of view, let them know"

Edward Villela has been the principal dancer for the New York City Ballet since 1959.

Howard Jarvis is a California tax revolt leader and was chief proponent of that state's controversial bill to cut taxes, Proposition 13.

Coretta Scott King, president of the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Social Change, was a public delegate to the fall 1977 session of the United Nations General Assembly and is a leading spokesperson for minorities.

January 30
Andrew Young

"In the 1960's I thought this whole state of North Carolina was in the Klan. Now this region of the U.S. far surpasses in race relations that of any other part of the nation.

"I think the Soviets went into Afghanistan because they thought we had sense enough to know we shouldn't go to war Whatever the Russians think, they cannot bury us; however, they can annoy us terribly."

February 15
Marilyn French

"All our lives are a prison. You choose a form to live in, and all forms are constraining. Some prisons are worse than others . . . men usually get to choose theirs more than women do."

Former United Nations ambassador Andrew Young delivered the third annual Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Lecture.

Marilyn French is a best-selling feminist author whose books include The Women's Room and The Bleeding Heart.

March 19
Jill Godmilow

"It is difficult to make a good documentary today because people are so media conscious. It is hard to find people who will be honest in front of a camera. Usually they are more concerned with putting on airs that will impress the viewer. My goal as a filmmaker is to put a clear, less sold-out picture of the world on the screen without becoming lost in the industry or too political. The quality of the subject presentation and the script is more important than the cause or political theory it supports."

April 14
Robert F. Kennedy Jr.

"The Carter administration thinks that the country's problems are a matter of statistics, but the problems are more than just statistics. They represent the broken aspirations of his presidency. Concerning matters of state Carter has never drawn a line on the ground and stood by it; his foreign policy depends on what side of bed he gets up on in the morning."

Freelance film producer and editor Jill Godmilow was nominated for an Oscar for her documentary Antonia, Portrait of a Woman.

The son of the late Senator Robert F. Kennedy and a law student of the University of Virginia, Robert F. Kennedy Jr. was an ardent campaigner in his uncle Edward M. Kennedy's 1980 presidential bid.

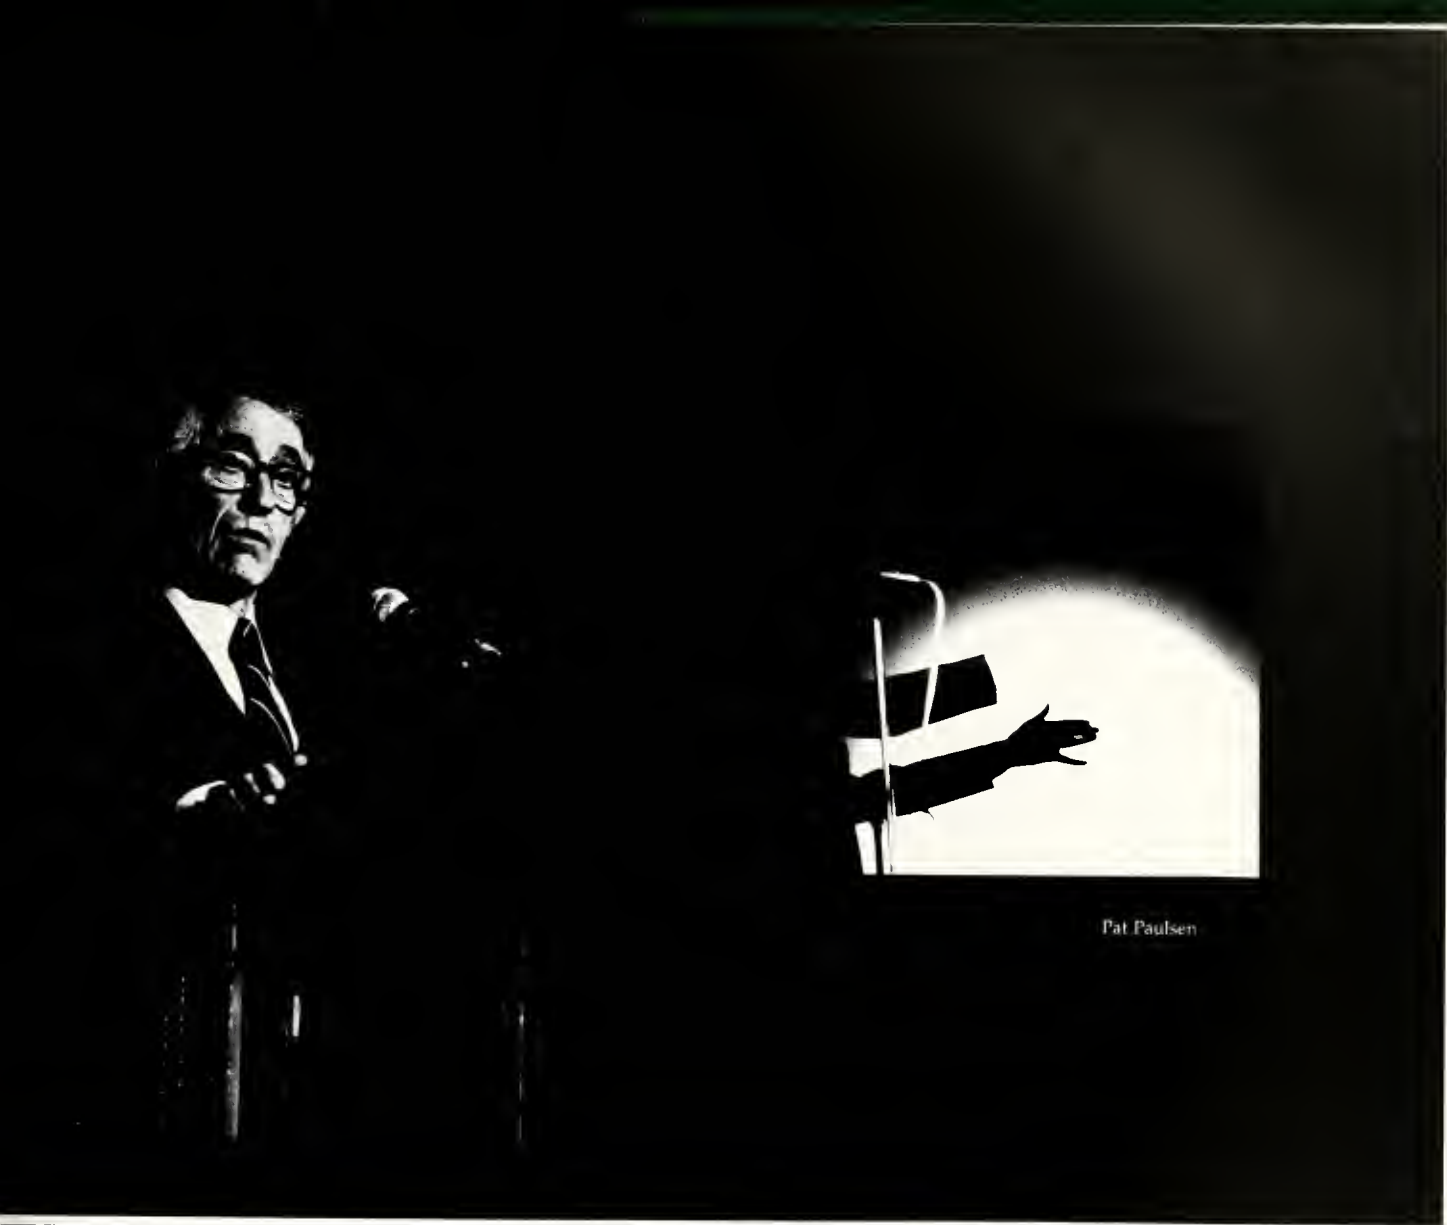

William J. Bennett

"America was not established principally for the development of moral excellence but for liberty, equality, and the promotion of self-preservation; not for human perfection, but for improving the lot of man politically, spiritually, and materially."

William J. Bennett, director of the National Humanities Center in Research Triangle Park, delivered the Keynote address in the 1980 Carolina Symposium.

"Universities are not democratic and are not supposed to sound democratic — it's a question of truth and taking a vote is not the best way to determine truth. Students don't come to college because they are educated, but because they are deficient. Consequently, by virtue of ignorance and immaturity, students stand in need of enhancement by the institution. Universities are not, and should not be, any more democratic than hospitals."

John Silber is President of Boston University.

Pat Paulsen

A CRISIS IN AMERICAN VALUES

"I am neither right-wing nor left-wing, I'm middle-of-the-bird. If you tend to the right or the left too much you fly around in circles.

"Solutions are not the answer; what this country needs from its politicians are more promises.

"As far as I'm concerned, the future lies ahead of us; it always has, and it will in the future."

During the presidential campaigns of 1968 and 1972 Pat Paulsen made frequent television appearances as the "Almost President of the United States."

Richard Munson

"Energy is indeed an ethical issue because it concerns future generations; if only for the sake of their safety, we should oppose nuclear power.

"The predictions that nuclear power would be cheap and efficient have not come true; nuclear power is a dangerous, expensive and unnecessary way to essentially boil water."

Richard Munson is coordinator for the Center for Reusable Resources and staff member of the Washington-based solar lobby.

"The challenge is not to find a single source of energy or to detect a winner, but to choose one. One of the most difficult problems in the coming years will be finding an energy source that makes sense and using it sensibly."

Dr. Thomas Elleman is vice president of Nuclear Safety and Research for Carolina Power and Light and former head of the nuclear engineering department at North Carolina State University.

Thomas Elleman

SYMPOSIUM '80

"The new mode of consciousness is the realization that the world isn't made of matter; it's made of concepts.

"Each individual is a holograph of the universe; every microcosm mirrors the macrocosm.

"To see the moment in which you are living, you must look to the subconscious expressions of that moment, such as art and mythology. Artists are an early warning system of a culture, and are much fuller vehicles for expressing trends than historians."

The Lindisfarne Institute, of which Dr. William Irwin Thompson is the founder, has been influential in the thinking of Governor Jerry Brown and others concerned with symbolism and political change.

"In America now, women earn 59 cents for every dollar earned by a male worker. In the 1980's, the standard should be equal pay for work of equal value.

"We women cannot ask for equality and then ask to be let out of the responsibility of military jobs that we already do well.

"There is no person whose life is unaffected by the women's movement.

"Sexism is a dangerous disease, and you can catch it in the public schools."

Sarah Weddington is assistant to the president on women's affairs.

Arthur Laffer

"What is needed is a reduction in the rewards associated with success and the punishment associated with failure. The moral level of society would be tremendously increased if we took decisions away from the necessity of the purse.

"I think our challenge is finding an ethic for the 21st century; in this matter, we have no other choice than to look to human solidarity."

Michael Harrington is a professor of political science at Queens College and Chairman of the Democratic Socialist Party of America.

"The policy of redistribution of wealth from the rich to the poor through a progressive income tax is defeating its own purpose. The rich will find ways to avoid paying taxes, using more expensive methods of production, which will increase the price of goods and services for rich and poor alike.

"A decrease in the tax rate leads to an increase in the tax base, which leads to greater output, employment and production."

University of Southern California economics professor, Arthur Laffer has served as an economist with the Office of Budget and Management and the U.S. Treasury Department.

Michael Harrington

"The policies most important for a great society are those that minimize the threat of force and interference in the freedom of individuals. The coercion possible through the economy is nothing compared to that of the government.

"Capitalism everywhere has helped the poorest the most; the miracle of capitalism is that it channels man's strongest individual motives for the common good."

Allen Wallis is chancellor of Rochester University and former dean of the University of Chicago Business School.

"In the 1960's we believed that the government cared about this country's needs. We believed that our politicians were fair, but they let us down. The point where college students felt it was up to them to save America. The government used every means it had to try and stop the peace movement among the youth. The bullets that were fired at Kent State University were fired at the next generation.

"The American economy today is our Vietnam.

"In the 80's, we can combine the solidarity and unity of the 60's with the openness of the 70's, so that we can once again realize that we as individuals can make a difference, and that each of us matters.

"This generation will be the one to decide whether or not the world survives."

Former political activist, ex-Yippie, and Chicago Seven defendant Jerry Rubin is currently working on a book dealing with male-female relations.

Whither goest thou, Carolina?

In four years, we grow from the vision of Carolina as a maze of registration forms and lines snaking from every building to a newer maze of buildings that spurt up around us.

C'mon . . . really. We all know Carolina isn't really changing; it's not going anywhere. We just think it is. We're the ones changing; we're the ones that are goesting whither.

Terrible and awesome is the pact we've made to keep this University the same, older but ageless, different but not changed. We consume gallons of strange brew; we perform mystifying rituals in sanctuary of Kenan or Carmichael; we congregate daily (well, almost) in the conclaves of classrooms.

All as part of our pact with the powers that be.

Thomas (O-great-Carolina-alumnus-and-writer-who-never-won-the-Nobel-Prize) Wolfe wrote that you can't go home again.

Sure we can. We can go any time; it's just that it's never the same as when we left.

Try though they might, universities can't defy that principle. They grow slowly, but they grow.

Oh, C'mon . . . is it really all that ominous?

A cursory glance at the decade past would probably result in a resounding "Yes!" Not to be melodramatic or anything such as that, but Chapel Hill has done some quixotic flip-flops in the past 10 years.

Chapel Hill, the famed "sleepy little village touched by a strange magic," had managed to stay mostly unchanged since William R. Davie found his way to sit under The Poplar Tree. The town, and the University that gave it so much life, grew quietly. It was so quiet that the paving of a road as late as the '60's drew big crowds that marveled at all the noise.

The noise got louder by the end of the decade — Vietnam, student strikes and other trifles — and by the '70's, noise was a way of life. To most people, the sleepy little village looked like paradise, a haven from the outside world. During the '70's, people came to Chapel Hill and Carolina in droves; the ripple of change of the '60's became a floodtide, and some fool forgot to shut the gates of the city.

City? Did we say city? Afraid we did. The flood of people that came to Carolina in the '70's didn't just rush through; it settled here and then dribbled over the campus walls into the town. A lot of those people in that deluge thought they would clean up the few things they didn't like. They didn't want to go home again; they wanted to stay here and make it a little more like their native habitat.

Vile creatures, those.

The town had been so sleepily peaceful, locals never heard them coming. When the interlopers first came in the '60's, Chapel Hillians thought they'd just go away. No such luck. The '70's newcomers succeeded in sweeping Chapel Hill clean of some of its more enchanting traditions.

Off-campus housing changed from small houses to gargantuan apartment complexes. The award-winning Chapel Hill Weekly metamorphosed to the simple Newspaper. Flower Ladies on Franklin looked so happy and secure, other vendors decided to camp out next to them, and got everybody thrown off the street.

And since the University was inseparable from the village, Carolina also had to change. Jubilee, the annual spring festival of music, grew too large to handle and died like a dinosaur. Classes, formerly the quiet rooms of learning, became lecture halls of 450 students, with professors using microphones to be heard. Dorms, the blessed isles of social life and study, became triple-packed tiers.

The '70's influx created the unthinkable. (No, they didn't convert the Old Well into a deuterium plant.) Chapel Hill finally cut the umbilical cord from Carolina. In past years, you could tell people you were going to Chapel Hill and they knew you were going to Carolina. In the '70's if you told people that you were going to Chapel Hill, they thought you were going just for a drink.

It's almost impossible to assess at what discrete point that severing came; Chapel Hill-sans-Carolina just seemed to appear, springing full-grown as if from someone's brain.

We just awoke one day to the whoosh of the departing '60's sweeping the '70's into town. Maybe it was the resignation of Richard Nixon; maybe it was the fall of Vietnam, but something made the townspeople as irritable as a drunk the morning after a bender.

The townspeople did not like what they saw through bleary eyes. Unlike their beer-drinking predecessors, students that went to the early '70's Jubilees smoked dope and threw rocks at the campus rent-a-cops. Peaceful protesters became militant marchers; karma and vibrations gave way to demands for space and alternative life-styles. So, somewhere in that cacophony of the '70's, Chapel Hill broke away.

The town, like the University, had its own toys to play with: a bus system, liquor-by-the-drink, white wine with a twist, condominiums. It continued to play for most of the '70's, while people continued to pour into Chapel Hill.

Eventually, the '70's had to end and there was no more room to play. Chapel Hill became so filled that people had to prepare for the end of the decade and the limitation of space. They were finally ready to shut the city gates on the immigrants trying to squeeze in.

There was "just one thing" that needed to be changed as we entered the hard-line '80's from the soft '70's. Townspeople and Carolina students finally realized that changing things for the sake of change altered the little paradise we had found.

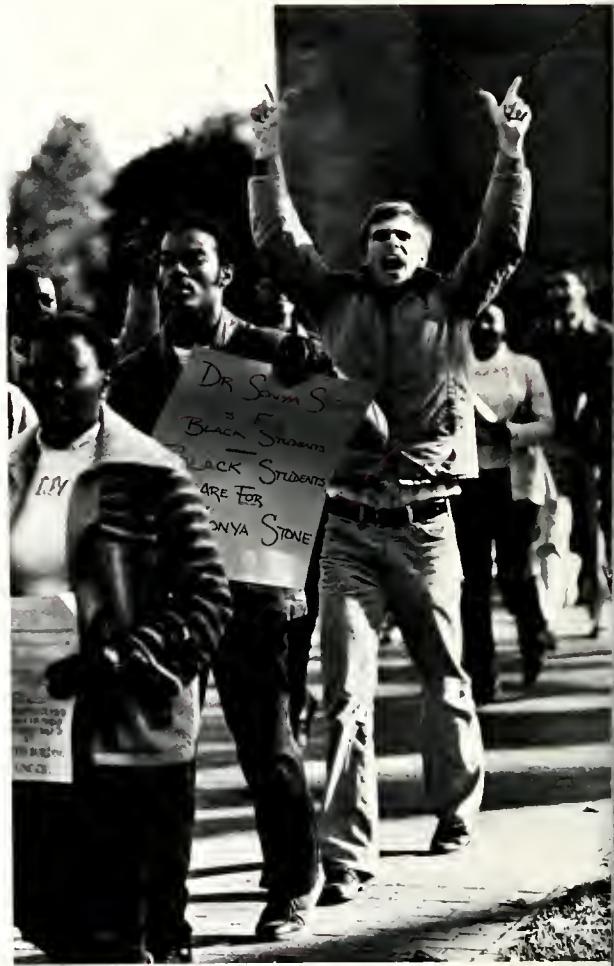

We suspected that Carolina was better the way it was, where it changed and taught us, not where we had the naivete to think we were changing it. Springfest bore resemblance to the Jubilee of old, not the '70's. Enforced noise ordinances required us to find our diversions at lower decibels. Proposed changes in the curriculum would give students a classical education much more than a "progressive" one.

And we decided we like the old, sleepy Chapel Hill. We have liquor-by-the-drink, but we're still drinking beer. We have apartment complexes, but we'd rather live in small houses.

We're educated enough to know that years from now we'll want to be able to come home again to Carolina. Y Warnock

An Office for Minorities

It is exceedingly difficult for individuals of the majority to empathize with those of the minority. This continued lack of understanding has prevented the institution of an Office of Minority Affairs at UNC.

Such an office is crucial to the development of minority students, who are often in need of problem-solvers aware of their unique situation and frustrations. This office would also provide necessary services which are currently inadequate or unavailable, ranging from the coordination of campus events and activities to the establishment of sound methods of consistent minority recruitment and retention.

An advisory committee to the Chancellor recommended in 1968 that an office be established to help "increase minority enrollment and presence." For 12 years, minority students at this University have petitioned, demanded, and protested in favor of the creation of an office that would address the special needs of those living in an environment in which 90% of the culture is different from their own.

In 1980, action has finally been taken. A new Vice-Chancellor of University Affairs will serve to "advise and assist the Chancellor on means to increase minority presence and enrollment." Although belated, this is a commendable attempt to insure successful matriculation of minority students. Unfortunately, it may not be enough to solve the diverse problems of high attrition rates, cultural shock, and psychological stress facing minority students.

The continued absence of an office specifically designed and sufficiently empowered to meet the needs of the minorities can only be attributed to a pervasive lack of understanding. Most students do not face the statistical average of 17% attrition, nor do they expect to face a roommate's parents' demands that they move out because of their skin color. Similarly, few acknowledge, much less care, that less than ten black students belong to fraternities that have houses.

Currently, no branch of the University dedicates itself to remedying problems and hardships plaguing minorities. Nor does any office concern itself foremost with increasing and improving racial interaction. Finally, no office adequately counsels students in matters of racial prejudice and bigotry.

The functions of an Office of Minority Affairs would only be limited by the willingness of the office itself to improve and increase race relations. Through the establishment of this office, the University has an opportunity to answer the rapidly compounding needs of minority students.

Within 20 years, the aggregate minorities in this nation will comprise over 50% of the total population. It is therefore imperative that we, as members of society, become more sensitive towards the needs of all people. An Office of Minority Affairs is not just something desirable for minorities, it is a necessity for us all.

Undergraduate Curriculum Review

The Report of the Committee to Review the Undergraduate Curriculum, better known as the Thornton Report, is a proposal for undergraduate curriculum reform at UNC. The report was presented to College of Arts and Sciences Dean, Samuel R. Williamson, in June 1979. Early in the fall semester the report, which was generally perceived as a "tightening up" of General College requirements, emerged as the focus of campus wide debate among students, faculty and administrators.

In the beginning, Student Government took an active role in studying, critiqueing and publicizing the content of the report. Individual proposals, such as the four semester foreign language requirement, were analyzed for their educational purpose as well as their practicality of implementation. In the spring of 1980, Dean Williamson appointed nine faculty subcommittees to study various aspects of the Thornton Report with particular attention to implementation and resource questions. Student Government protested the failure of the dean to systematically include student input in the deliberations of these committees. This was to be the beginning of continued pressure to slow down the review of the report, in order to include more student input and to allow time for a campus wide consensus to develop.

By the end of the spring semester, Student Government's position on the Thornton Report was one of caution. Any academic policy change that would tend to restrict student freedom would have to be very carefully scrutinized by the current administration, which had been elected on a platform that the University should function as an advisor to the student rather than as a supervisor.

This is not to say that nothing positive was seen in the Report. First, an acceptable rationale for the current General College requirements (English, a math/foreign language option, and divisional distribution requirements) did not exist. Certainly a justification of any required curriculum was desirable. Second, the Thornton Report grouped courses into "perspectives" based on approach and subject matter, rather than categorizing courses along departmental lines, thus implying that the development of multi- and inter-disciplinary courses would be encouraged and that such courses would fulfill the Perspective requirements. The new curriculum would encourage departments to create much needed general education courses for non-majors. Finally, so-called "capstone" courses—small group special interest seminars for seniors—would be developed and offered as part of the upper division curriculum. All these innovations would merit student support, especially if freedom of choice within each category were maintained.

But the promise of a fundamental education, through the Thornton Report, is a potential threat to student freedom. At the most basic level, a requirement is a requirement, and will be viewed as such by students. Courses taken to fulfill requirements elicit less than optimal student enthusiasm, somewhat lessening course quality. Second, there is the danger that any set of requirements can evolve into a meaningless obstacle course, circumvented by motivated students aware of the courses they need to take. This would be intensified by students in specialized degree programs who have additional prerequisite courses. Further, students admitted with academic deficiencies would be hard pressed to complete both remedial work and general education requirements in eight semesters.

Finally, the imposition of new requirements does not guarantee the creation of an adequate number of desirable courses to fulfill such requirements. For example, what assurance is there that departments will voluntarily shift from their majors and graduate students to provide quality general education courses?

Student Government realizes the students' responsibility in the development of quality undergraduate education, and will continue to solicit response in representing the student interest.

Apathetic Studenticus Voteras:

A large, swift-footed, gutless bird living both on and off campus. This ratite, small-brained fowl will run 30mph when threatened by registration.

If attending Carolina is supposed to be a practice scrimmage for the game of life, then perhaps the Class of 1980 entered the real world slightly confused.

Why? Simple explanation: the '79-'80 year at Carolina was as varied and filled with disparate events as any student could ever dare hope or fully understand. Some standards faded away while others withstood attempts to change them.

Some students noticed changes at the University by the first football game — the Athletic Department had decided to ban all metal and glass containers from Kenan Stadium. The intent of the order was to eliminate the Carolina tradition of heavy drinking at football games, but fans simply revived the old standby of sneaking alcohol past ushers. By the way, those of you who might have been a bit tipsy during the Homecoming game, and cared enough to notice — there was indeed a dog named Space, sponsored by the TEP fraternity, on the Homecoming Court.

The Town Board of Chapel Hill, not to be outdone by the UNC Athletic Department, revived obscure local laws concerning public displays of alcohol. Why anyone would really want to flagrantly drink beer in the middle of Franklin Street was lost on most Carolinians. Nevertheless, it couldn't be done anymore.

Many other changes in downtown Chapel Hill seemed more important. The fate of the Crook's Barbeque glowing pink pig hung in the balance between good taste and good advertising. (Good advertising won out — the pig stayed.) A cinder block wall sprang up overnight, separating the disco-dancers of Mayo's from the hard-core consumers at He's Not Here. Four Corners, a new bar and restaurant, soon became so crowded that even Dean Smith was sometimes turned away. Mad Hatter (a.k.a. Town Hall) died. In the midst of a confusion about who was fooling around with whom, and on whose land, Elliot's Nest was moved to a new location.

Trivialities galore of civic nature were enough to dominate any student's thoughts, but campus frivolities provided amusement aplenty for the less venturesome. The Personals of the DTH classified ads topped UNC students' reading list; messages both cryptic and crass were featured daily. But the DTH Letters section remained required reading. Reactions and responses to reactions, and reactions to responses regarding a Mademoiselle magazine sponsored evening of make-up and fashion for Carolina females filled the Letters pages.

Other, more administrative concerns vied for students' attentions. Ferebee Taylor resigned as UNC Chancellor because of waning health, replaced by Christopher Fordham of the medical school. (Late in 1980, Fordham was hospitalized with what doctors termed "a slight stroke.") James Weaver, head waiter of the Carolina Inn, retired in May. Having worked at the Inn through the terms of six chancellors and four University presidents, he was honored by nearly as many dinners and interviews as the retiring Chancellor.

Fordham's first months in the post went as smoothly as any honeymoon, and he soon acted with the assuredness of a man born to the role. In the wake of Hayden Renwick's charges of University discrimination against minority students, and amidst the hulabaloo between UNC and HEW, Fordham announced the creation of an Office of University Affairs. Name notwithstanding, the office seemed intended to be the Office of Minority Affairs long called for by the Black Student Movement and several University administrators. Sonja Stone eventually won her fight for tenure.

The University finally got wise to the old student ploy of signing up for 21 hours of courses during pre-registration, then dropping the undesired, extra courses during the semester. South Building's solution was to limit individuals to 17 hours of pre-registration. Students weren't to worry however — the drop period was extended from four weeks to six.

With proposed curriculum changes of the Thornton Report, dropping certain courses equated with dropping the idea of graduation. Seniors in 1980 could still breathe easy; the math-foreign language option was still viable for the Class of '80.

Clouds from outside storms often created discussions within the confines of Carolina's walls, but usually nothing more. A proposed nuclear power plant near Raleigh compelled some students to congregate into protest groups, but most paid little notice. Neither did the protesters of draft registration give much pause to the young men of Carolina, who filed into post offices to fill out forms. Some did listen to Revolutionary Communist Party members, ranting from the steps of Lenior Hall; raised eyebrows and occasional laughter met the revolutionary dogma. The laughter was drowned out by gunshots of Nazi and KKK members who loathsomely took the law into their hands, killing five Communist Workers Party organizers in Greensboro.

Clouds from more distant storms were even darker. The taking of American hostages by Iranians was a world away, but it still dimmed Carolina's mood, and moved students to react with a fury unseen since the early seventies. Afghanistan's invasion by the Soviet Union did nothing to lift Carolina's spirits.

Not every real-world intrusion garnered such attention, and the University's own were more than capable of creating problems themselves. Some amusing characters found it diverting to phone in bomb threats, particularly on days tests were pending. Other fun types, thinking toga parties weren't nearly enough to liven up slow nights, decided to reinstitute hazing. (The administration decided to reinstitute censure and suspensions.)

Rationality often seemed to be taking a holiday, so students often seemed to be taking no notice of campus concerns. Despite escort services for women wishing to foil would-be rapists, the number of reported assaults continued to rise. Accusations of racism within the fraternity system circulated the campus for a time; IFC president Tim Lucido advised minority students wishing to pledge exclusively white fraternities that they were merely "barking up a dead end wall." The matter soon died. Arguments about 24-hour visitation rights in dorms achieved some note, but no substantial policy change was affected. End result — visits between friends would still have to be carried on . . . well . . . undercover.

Special prizes in the field of apathy should have been awarded to the Campus Governing Council. Voters stayed away in droves from the CGC spring elections. Upon initial declaration, roughly a third of the council seats were sought by only one candidate, and a comparable number of offices had no seekers at all. Despite this, the CGC audaciously continued to exist, and persevered in making mincemeat out of several organizations' budget requests. Some forgiveness of sins was happily granted to the council, however, when enough money remained to revive Jubilee on an apparently permanent basis. The name was changed to Chapel Thrill to protect the guilty.

Ahh, yes. Money. Now there was a real-world concern. Was there enough money to increase the number of city bus routes for students? Sure. Was there enough money to send the women's varsity basketball team to London, so they could join the men's team for a tournament? Yes, but only after a protracted debate, with the women having earned a large portion themselves.

Carolina students found enough money in their own pockets to buy escape from collegiate worries. Roller-skate rentals did a booming business, as did the village's new toy, liquor by the drink bars — although authorities frowned on mixing drinking and skating. Computer games sold nearly as fast as beer; so did copies of Dungeons and Dragons. Cable television finally burrowed its way into town, and a lot of quarters intended for laundry paid for Home Box Office movies.

In the end, however, the greatest escapism for Carolina students could be found in the cheapest show in town — UNC athletics. Carolina blasted both N.C. State and Duke at football, then went on to stun Michigan and just about everybody else in the Gator Bowl. The Tar Heels glided through another 20-win season of basketball before falling to Texas A&M in the NCAA playoffs. As long as Carolina was playing, there was always an escape.

Uh-oh. There was the glitch in the programming. Carolina couldn't play forever. The world continued to spin, no matter how spasmodically or how slowly, and the clock continued to run. For seniors who had spent four years circling calmly within Carolina's walls, final seconds ticked away. A few last classes. A finished incomplete. A final final exam. A graduation diploma . . . and the scrimmage was over.

The real game had to begin. YWarnock

On November 2, the cancer-stricken Shah of Iran was admitted to a New York hospital for treatment. Two days later militant Iranian students stormed the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and took its personnel hostage. Although the students released most of the black and female hostages, they vowed to hold the remaining 53 captive until the United States returned the Shah to Iran and apologized for interfering with Iran's internal affairs. Despite constant negotiations and an aborted military rescue attempt, the fate of the 53 American hostages remained uncertain when the semester ended.

Pope John Paul II celebrated Mass in Yankee Stadium in early October. During his tour, he spoke to enthusiastic crowds in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Iowa, and Washington D.C. Although the Pope's message of world peace, faith and anti-materialism was welcomed by Americans, many Catholics were disturbed by the Pope's conservatism on issues such as sexual freedom, contraception and the ordination of women.

On November 4, an anti-Ku Klux Klan rally in Greensboro resulted in the shooting deaths of five persons and drew approximately 100 participants. The march was organized by the Communist Workers Viewpoint Organization. The rally was interrupted by a carful of Klansmen who opened fire on the marchers. One woman and three men were killed, and 10 were wounded. Police arrested two marchers and charged 12 Klansmen with murder.

Deteriorating Soviet-American relations resulted in an arousal of national and international anxiety. During a crucial moment in the Senate's SALT II debates, President Carter learned there were 2,000 to 3,000 Soviet combat troops in Cuba. Premier Fidel Castro claimed the troops were for training purposes only; American intelligence officials indicated otherwise, but the troops were not removed at President Carter's demand. In December, 50,000 Soviet troops invaded Afghanistan and replaced one Soviet puppet ruler with another. Although the Soviets claimed their invasion was merely military intervention, it was condemned by the United Nations. At home, the Afghanistan crisis killed SALT II and prompted President Carter to reinstate draft registration and declare a boycott of the Summer Olympics in Moscow.

News occasionally focused on the Cambodia famine. Chronic food shortages were caused by internal troubles following the expulsion of the despotic ruler, Pol Pat. Pol Pat had executed most of Cambodia's educated citizens; at the onset of the famine, there was only one pediatrician left alive in Phnom Penh. The United Nations and the United States jointly sponsored a massive rice lift, and many other nations responded with doctors, medicine and food.

The 1980 presidential primaries started with a heated battle for delegates among the 10 initial candidates and ended with Ronald Reagan and President Jimmy Carter virtually uncontested for their parties' nominations. The primaries still held many surprises, however. Senator Edward Kennedy had a large lead in the polls prior to the New Hampshire primary, but failed to win any of the key early states. After a strong start in Iowa, former CIA director George Bush fell behind as Ronald Reagan swept the South and the West. Dark horse Republican John Anderson gained media attention when he decided to run as an independent. Although many voters had expressed dissatisfaction with their choice of candidates, Reagan seemed to have strong support from GOP members. After an unsuccessful attempt to get Gerald Ford as his running mate, Reagan chose George Bush. The Democratic Party, however, went divided to its convention. Although President Carter won enough delegates to receive the nomination, Senator Kennedy refused to withdraw his candidacy and vowed to battle Carter for the nomination on the convention floor.

The economy was a major campaign issue throughout the 1980 presidential primary elections. In March the inflation rate hit 19%, causing near-panic among economic advisers. The prime interest rate peaked at 20%, and credit was tightened in hopes of halting the inflationary spiral. Lack of confidence in currency pushed gold prices to a record $835 per ounce in early 1980. President Carter asked Congress for a balanced budget and proposed a ten cent per gallon tax on gasoline, already at $1.20 a gallon. The federal government granted a $1.5 billion loan guarantee to the fading Chrysler Corporation. Despite a slowing inflation rate, rising unemployment had plunged the nation into a mild recession by the end of the semester.

SPORTS

The University of North Carolina's basketball and football teams have been making money and making headlines across the country for a number of years. Recently, however, increased participation and performance in the non-revenue sports has made Tar Heel Athletics "seasonless." On almost any given day in Chapel Hill, we may expect to walk to an event and see an exciting contest, not to mention a Carolina victory. Tar Heel Athletics in 1979-80 was no exception.

If you measure success by the margin of victories over losses, you will be happy to know that against all opponents Tar Heel teams won 312 games, matches, meets and tournaments, lost 108, and tied 7. That's a winning percentage of a little better than 73 percent, Ooo and Ahh! If you measure success by the Carmichael Cup, a visit to the trophy case in Carmichael Auditorium (appropriately enough) will bring a smile to your face. For the fourth straight year Carolina has proven its overall excellence in sports in the Atlantic Coast Conference race; the cup has now been in Tar Heel possession for nearly half of its twenty-year existence.

The following teams were named ACC champions: men's cross country, women's tennis, wrestling, men's fencing (ranked 19th nationally), and women's fencing (13th nationally). Capturing the state titles were: field hockey, women's cross country, women's golf, women's soccer, women's tennis, and gymnastics. The baseball team was named the regular season champions, while the lacrosse team made it to the NCAA semifinals. The women's swimming team, as the most successful women's sport, ranked seventh nationally, having stayed within the top ten for the past five years. The women's basketball team went to the first round of the National Invitational Tournament, and came away with first place in the London Invitational. And, of course, the football team defeated Michigan in the Gator Bowl, 17-15.

The following 18 Tar Heels were on the All-America rolls: Gary Hofstetter, the outstanding cross-country and distance runner was an All-America; Frank Fuhrer, the individual medalist of the Iron Duke Classic was an honorable mention All-America; Ken Ireland, the school record holder in virtually every swimming event he specialized in, was an All-America; as was Bonnie Brown, winner of the Patterson Medal for the outstanding senior athlete, and eight other women on the swimming team: Lauren Dupree, Barb Harris, Nancy Huddoch, Cindy Shirey, Nance Thompson, Cynthia Chilcott, Gayle Hegel and Liz Mesmer. Standout slugger Scott Bradley was on the baseball All-America second team; Kevin Griswold paced the lacrosse team with a spot on the first team All-America squad, while teammates Gary Burns, Pete Voelkel, Terrence Murray and Mike Burnett gained honorable mention.

But if you are a hedonist, an action freak, a total Tar Heel, you measure the success of this year's teams by the excitement, the release, and the many opportunities for celebration they yielded. Why nothing could be finer than the post-card sunny, fall afternoons in the student section of Kenan Stadium, with libation in your hand and spectacle on the field . . . a breathing-room-only crowd in Carmichael, the heart-stopping overtimes of conference games, a 2,000 decibel cheer . . . catching the rays with a six-pack and a chaw in Boshamer Stadium, the body-spelling of T-A-R-H-E-E-L-S by UNC's edition of Wild Bill, and eliminating Duke from the tournament . . . a hot spring afternoon at Fetzer Field, acting knowledgeable about lacrosse until asked what the ref just called, loving it because it's fast and we're damn good, icing down joggers and cheering for the dog with the ball . . . Carolina Athletics is a good time.

This year's success can also be measured by the skill of individuals who make their sport their art: Matt Kupec in the pocket passing deep to Phil Farris who dives for a circus catch into the end-zone for six; Gary Hofstetter accelerating through the woods to lead a tight group of Tar Heels to another cross country win; David Blum deftly intercepting a midfield pass, driving to the goal and booting the ball past the goalie's outstretched hands into the net; Ann Donio controlling a pass, speeding past a defenders stick, and slapping the ball to a teammate for an assist; Jackie Kimbro diving to dig a spike out of the floor then perfectly setting up an unreturnable Terri Wallace spike; Nancy Radford running doggedly on the heels of another harrier; Rosemary Carbery booting a corner kick that curves nicely toward the goal mouth; a lashing serve and cross-court winner by Jennifer Balent; a lightning quick reversal and pin by the amazing C.D. Mock; a backcourt steal by Mike O'Koren followed by a left-handed dunk; Bernie McGlade wrenching down a rebound, forcing it back up, and drawing the foul; a flowing parry-touch by the quick wrist of Stan Shulman; the graceful lunge of Mary Beth Forsyth; the powerful stroke and strong kick of Ken Ireland as he swims to a backstroke victory; a fast, yet smooth, backhandspring on the beam in a typically strong Tia Walker exercise; the fluid motion of Bonny Brown in all four strokes of the individual medley; Scott Bradley punishing a baseball over the right field wall, again; Kevin Griswold running across the goal mouth, spinning 360° on his heel around a defender, and whipping the ball into the lax goal with the snap of his wrists; Frank Fuhrer pounding a drive high into the middle of the fairway while maintaining the tournament lead; a hard topspin backhand right down the line to break service for Gary Taxman; Lee Shuler hoisting his body into the air and clearing the bar as he snaps his feet over by an inch; Stephanie Kornegay blasting out of a trap to within inches of the cup; the swift release of Sharon Speer sending the softball in a high arc that catches the outside corner of the plate; and the graceful power of Lisa Staton thrusting her body out of the blocks toward the tape in record time. All are representative of the men and women who contribute to the splendid spectacle of Carolina sports. They share credit with their teammates, coaches, the Athletic Department staffs . . . and thousands of Carolina fans whose proud support brings superiority to the colors Carolina blue and white. YMoazed

Football

Chapel Hill in the fall is a town full of expectations. The calm and quiet of a deflated summer population is soon replaced by long lines, parking tickets, and the more serious aspects of the season — football weekends.

Pound a few beers and last year's losses to Miami and Richmond are ancient history; and the disappointment of the 5-6 record is negligible. Thoughts are consumed by the two-touchdown, record-setting, four-minute classic finale over Dook. Pound another one and the mind swims in anticipation.

PARTY BEVERAGE SELVES R READY FOR YOUR VISIT TONITE OR ANYTIME

Following the incubation period of Dick Crum's debut season, he hatches a team he can call his own. No longer will the players bear the stamp of the Dooley mold, no longer will coach-player relations be uncomfortable, and, after a year of Civil War, there would be unity in the players' ranks. Proven talent, youthful speed, strong senior leadership, and pride will be the strong suits. One more beer and, staggering out of Troll's, you can hardly wait for the season opener.

On September 7, the Tar Heel football team proved that they couldn't wait either. Against a pre-season top 20 ranked, revenge-seeking South Carolina football team, the Heels put on a well-balanced gridiron show that was two penalties and one fumble from being perfect. Against 18 returning USC starters, Carolina ran up 332 total yards (a 5.0 yard per play average) and four touchdowns while holding the Gamecocks scoreless. The game's standouts were many: Buddy Curry led the spirited defense and had 16 tackles; Ricky Barden set up a touchdown with an interception, recovered a fumble, and had 5 tackles (including a sack) on his way to being named ACC player of the week; Amos Lawrence carried the ball 26 times for 139 yards and two touchdowns, and Matt Kupec threw nine completions in 14 tries for 94 yards, including a 43 yard touchdown strike to Phil Farris. Remember that. Kupec's statistics don't show it, but he was the difference, leading the team with such poise, skill and confidence that USC coach Jim Carlen called him "the best quarterback in the South." With an open date the following Saturday, Dick Crum's second season premier was one sweet win to be savored for two weeks.

While fans toasted the victory, the team was working hard, preparing for the 13th-ranked Pittsburgh Panthers who had thrashed Kansas 24-0 in an opening victory of their own. Rain fell throughout the morning of the 21st. When the sun finally broke through, it cooked Kenan Stadium into a massive, muggy, hot tub, which was just what Pitt coach Jackie Sherrill didn't want. His team was to rely on speed and passing, and his boys were not used to balmy Chapel Hill. Fittingly, it was Carolina that supplied the speed and passing. Remember the play that scored against USC in the fourth quarter? Well, Kupec loaded up another perfect 43-yard bomb to Phil Farris that put the Heels on top for good. Following a Jeff Gray P.A.T. the tone of the game became defensive. Buddy Curry had a super-deluxe-fantastic game. He corralled one of Pittsburgh's five fumbles, he snared two of the four interceptions that ruined the usually golden armed Rick Trocano's day, he had nine solo tackles, five assists, and was named the National Defensive player of the week by Sports Illustrated. All in a day's work; Carolina 17 - Pitt 7, 'nuff said.

The following weekend the offensive unit stole the show and everybody got into the act. Kelvin Bryant, the leading rusher the week before, ran well in his third game until he injured his shoulder, ending a promising freshman season; Doug Paschal gained 90 yards on the ground and 32 in the air to stay the leading receiver as a fullback; Kupec was 10 of 16 for 125 yards passing; and Famous Amos picked up 214 yards in just 29 carries for two touchdowns. That yardage gave him a 141.3 yard average per game which made him the leading rusher in the nation. Ron Wooten, Rick Donnalley, and the rest of the offensive line had a picnic on the field while opening mammoth holes for the backs. When it was over Carolina had made 27 first downs and amassed 534 total yards for a classy 41-3 victory. Already scouts from the Liberty and Garden State bowls were in attendance.

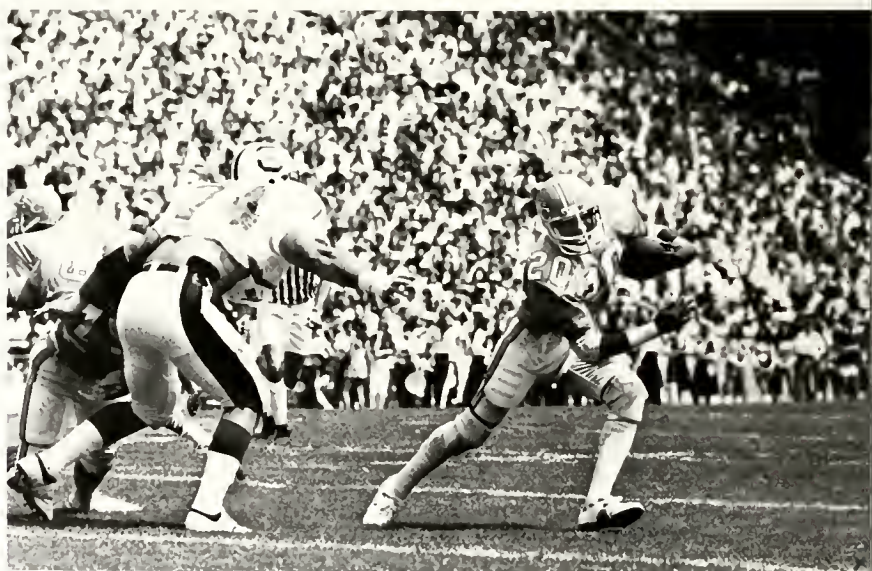

On October 5, the University of Cincinnati ventured into Kenan Stadium to face the nation's leading rusher and one of the top scoring defenses in the country. When they left, the Bearcats knew they had faced a very solid ball club. Famous Amos scored three touchdowns for the first time in his career; tight-end Mike Chatham, in his last game as a "reserve" pulled down three catches for 75 yards and his first TD (a 58-yarder); and Doug Paschal got his first 100-yard game of the season. As the Kupec-guided offense was rushing and bombing for yardage and points, a crowd of 49,000-plus soaked up the plays, the rays and the beverages as if the fun would never end. Four games into the season we were undefeated and ranked 14th in the nation; just a year ago we were 1-3 and looking for another head coach.

At this high point in Crum's career at Carolina, the coach himself was characteristically a tad less than ebullient. "Football is a game of mistakes," he said. "The team that makes the fewest, wins."

This was right before Wake Forest, when the Tar Heels gave up four fumbles, an interception and 101 yards in penalties on their way to losing 19-24 in a gruelling rainsoaked game. Error-prone as we were, Carolina still gained more yardage and seven more first downs than the Deacs, who later won a bowl bid and celebrated their best year in a very long time. Against a passing team, Kupec showed his aerial prowess and set a Carolina record by completing 24 passes in 41 attempts for an impressive 267 yards and two TDs. Ten of his completions, 144 of his yards, and both of his scores were made possible by the sure hands of budding star Mike Chatham. Despite the heroics, the Heels learned early in the conference schedule that ACC teams were having a banner year in football.

The next week the team travelled to Raleigh for the annual showdown with N.C. State. This regionally televised game proved a very tough win for Carolina, despite a lead of 28-7 at the half. Doug Paschal, shifted to halfback because of Amos Lawrence's ailing hamstring muscle, still performed spectacularly. He rushed for three touchdowns and a career-high 117 yards on his way to being picked as the ACC player of the week. Aside from some lapses in the secondary, the defense played exceptionally. After two unanswered Wolfpack touchdowns in the third quarter, when outside linebacker Lawrence Taylor broke through the line and nailed State's QB Scott Smith hard enough to cause a fumble, Tar Heel Jeff Pierce landed on the ball and five plays later Paschal dove in from one yard out to

At College Park, Md., the Tar Heels' lackluster, mistake-ridden performance caused them to lose 14-17 and "make" the Terps' season. With six seconds left in the game we had the ball on the Terp 21 yard line, third down and two to go. Kupec dropped back to pass deep but saw good coverage and dumped off a short pass to Billy "the Horse" Johnson who ran out of bounds at the 14 yard line with 1½ seconds left. In a classic case of the homefield advantage, the timekeeper let the clock run out. Bummer.

The Clemson game yielded no alibis and left us 1-3 in the conference race. The Tar Heels dropped passes, jumped offside, and turned the ball over five times, making Homecoming the low point of the year. Tossing cups at pigeons was found to be more fun than watching the players on the field. Most had given up hope for any howl invitation.

Then came the Virginia game and a dominating win that wasn't reflected in the 13-7 final score. More important than the conference win was the post-game bid to the Gator Bowl, which the team voted to accept: 92-0. That turned an already heated rivalry between Duke and Carolina into a proving ground for doubters, and a clincher for three players destined for the record books. Matt Kupec connected with Mike Chatham in the second quarter for his 18th TD pass and new ACC record. The catch was Chatham's eighth TD, which tied the conference mark and set a school record. And a healed Amos Lawrence ran for 19 yards more than he needed to complete his third 1,000 yard season, giving the rising senior a chance to join Tony Dorsett as the only men to have four consecutive kiloyard years.

steal the win 35-21. The victory in the sixth game put the Tar Heels at a comfortable 5-1 record and 1-1 in the ACC, leaving only conference games and LEast Carolina. ECU has always been a tough opponent for ACC teams and October 27 was no exception. In a game with few mistakes the Pirates took the lead in the fourth quarter after trailing the Heels throughout the first three. After two stalled drives we regained possession on our 30-yard line with 1:11 remaining. With half a minute left, Kupec hit Paschal (who had a career-high 151 yards rushing) with a pass at the EC 31. Three incomplete passes later Jeff Gray was sent in to kick the three points to tie. Embarrassing and disappointing, yes, but a loss would have felt much worse, as we found out the next two games.

Nina Ford, homecoming queen

December 28, 1979, Carolina vs. Michigan.

Ranked 14th nationally, Michigan had been the only team in the country to finish in the AP top 10 final poll in each of the last 10 seasons. They were big, fast, well-coached, and hungry, after having lost in six straight bowl appearances. Make that seven, Carolina was hungrier. After a week of practice and sight-seeing, the Tar Heels entered the Gator Bowl with composure, a relaxed intensity. Using a jazzy version of the basic I formation we'd seen all year, the Heels fought back from a nine point deficit to beat the Wolverines 17-15 in front of 70,407 fans, most of whom sported Carolina Blue pompoms. Co-MVPs Matt Kupec and Amos Lawrence sparkled in both halves. Kupec was 19 of 28 passing, and guided the motion offense with expert precision. A TD strike to Phil Farris may well have been the most exciting play of the year, as he made a one-handed circus catch. Famous Amos, the first player of the season to gain more than 100 yards against Michigan, had 23 carries for 118 yards and made five pass receptions. The offense appeared to dominate the field but the defense was equally magnificent. When Carolina went ahead 14-9 in the 4th quarter, the defensive unit forced four straight turnovers to frustrate a Michigan come back, leaving the way clear for an offensive clincher: a 33-yard Jeff Hayes field goal with 7:31 left in the game. Jeff had missed 6 of 12 during the season and two in the first half of the bowl game, but his toe put the ball dead through the uprights with yards to spare when it counted most. When the fat lady had sung, Carolina had thoroughly outplayed Michigan and replaced them as the 14th ranked team in the final poll. How sweet it is!

Tar Heel fans celebrated across the nation, and in Jacksonville we painted the town blue. Both students and alumni hailed it as Carolina's finest win, but Coach Crum modestly called it "a very good win." That must mean he's planning something bigger, and I like the idea. Y Moazed

Basketball

It would have been a good season anywhere else—but not in Chapel Hill. Twenty-one victories, eight losses and a second place finish in the regular season conference race were not enough. By Carolina standards, the season was OK at best. But that only showed how great the past has been.

Only two of Carolina's eight ACC tournament championships have come in even numbered years (1968 and 1972), and this was, after all, 1980. But it was the first season since 1974 that a Carolina team did not add at least one trophy to the glitter in Carmichael, and it was the first time ever that the boys in blue began the ACC season 0 and 2.

The Associated Press's pre-season poll had ranked Carolina sixth in the nation. Returning from the 1979 ACC championship team were 11 lettermen, five seniors, and four starters. Secretary of Defense Dudley Bradley had been drafted in the first round of the NBA. Carolina was shooting for an unprecedented fifth consecutive first-place finish in the always tough Atlantic Coast Conference.

Tar Heel fans expected great things from All-American Mike O'Koren, the total cager; Al Wood, the smoothest-shooting forward in the South; and James Worthy, the ballyhooed freshman from Gastonia. Seniors Dave Colescott, John Virgil, Jeff Wolf, and Rich "Chickee" Yonakor were to provide experience and consistency—valuable assets in the Dean Smith basketball system. Rumors were rampant. It would be another great season.

After an Athlete's-in-Action appetizer in Anaheim, California, the entree was soon served. The Big Four Tournament arrived amid rumors that it was being killed to stop the cancer of too many games among the Big Four schools. The fact that three of the four teams had to lose at least one game early in the season was a minor consideration.

Carolina waited until the championship game to become one of those teams. The Heels handled State easily the first night, winning by thirteen. James Worthy debuted with 12 points and ten rebounds. The next evening, however, not even the team's new blue high-topped shoes could stem the tide as Duke flooded Carolina in the second half to win 86-74. It would be the closest the team came to winning a championship the entire season.

Three more games against non-ACC opponents exposed both strengths and weaknesses, but a winning edge in all.

The fans and the team had been looking ahead to a nationally televised match with Bobby Knight's "Hoosiers". Sports Illustrated had picked Indiana to win the national championship. On 22 December, they had slipped to fourth and lost two of their starters. Carolina had dropped to eighth in the country, and as Mike O'Koren admitted, "Nothing had been accomplished before the Indiana game. We wanted to prove some things to ourselves." The game was a classic chess match. With a crowd of 17,311 "Hoosier Hysteria" fans cheering against them, the Tar Heels battled to a 31-31 halftime score. Defense was the name of the game. Carolina surged slightly ahead midway through the second half. Dean Smith raised four fingers. An exotic version of cut and pass four corners bloomed as Worthy worked his way to 18 points and nine rebounds. Another chapter of the King James version of Carolina basketball was written. Dave Colescott provided the moral to the story as the former "Mr. Basketball" of Indiana hit two free throws with 30 seconds left to push the Heels to a 61-57 victory.

The tide changed again, this time along the River Thames. The Heels dropped one of three exhibition games while vacationing in London during the Christmas holidays, as injuries dropped several players. The return to the colonies resulted in jet lag and two quick losses to Clemson and Virginia.

The march began anew in Georgia. Mercer proved to be a timely win which primed Tar Heels for Wake Forest two nights later. A resounding 15-point blowout of Duke left that Durham "Cuckoo's Nest" looking like 8,000 lobotomy patients. A one-point squeaker over Georgia Tech in the first meeting as conference opponents and another satisfying victory over State put the Heels back in the race with a 4-2 record.

Carolina, having defeated Maryland in the nine previous meetings, needed to keep the league-leading Terps honest in the ACC. Maryland was much improved, as was their player-coach, Albert King. The Heels, however, could not stop King's brilliant passing and shooting. As Carolina's own king, James Worthy, looked to be leading the Heels on a come back, he slipped on a wet spot. The fast-break failed, and so did the bones in his ankle, abruptly ending James' season.

Adversity tends to breed success in Blue Heaven, and it appeared to do the trick once more. A tougher defense and more deliberate offense carried the Heels through the next seven games with a string of six wins before a disappointing one-point loss to Maryland in College Park.

Carolina slashed through Georgia Tech in Atlanta, then beat Rutgers in Madison Square Garden on the strength of O'Koren's overall play and Mike Pepper's clutch shooting. The game typified Mike O'Koren's years at Carolina. Upon leaving Chapel Hill, he joined his good friend Walter Davis as the second Tar Heel to rank among the top ten in career scoring, rebounding and assists.

Jeff Wolf, O'Koren's roommate, welcomed Ralph Sampson and Virginia to Chapel Hill. Carolina applied relentless pressure on the Cavaliers, with O'Koren shutting down high-scoring Jeff Lamp. Meanwhile, Wolf was getting down and throwing down. Carmichael rocked and the Tar Heel bench rolled as "Wolfie" raced around Sampson and rammed home two thunderous dunks. Terry Holland put his wunderkind on the bench after Wolf had collected 12 points, six rebounds, two assists, and the Holly Farms' MVP award in less than 30 minutes of play.

The only thunder four nights later came from Hawkeye Whitney in Raleigh as he and Clyde Austin closed out their careers with a 13 point win over the Heels.

Carolina's seniors got their chance on 23 February 1980 as Colescott, Virgil, O'Koren, Wolf, and Yonakor helmed Duke in a 96-71 rout. Virgil set the pace with the first three buckets of the game. The Heels were hot, and they smoked North Carolina's Yankee Day-Care Center (Duke) by 20 in the first half. The last game in Blue Heaven is always a special moment, and this one was destined to become one of the most memorable.

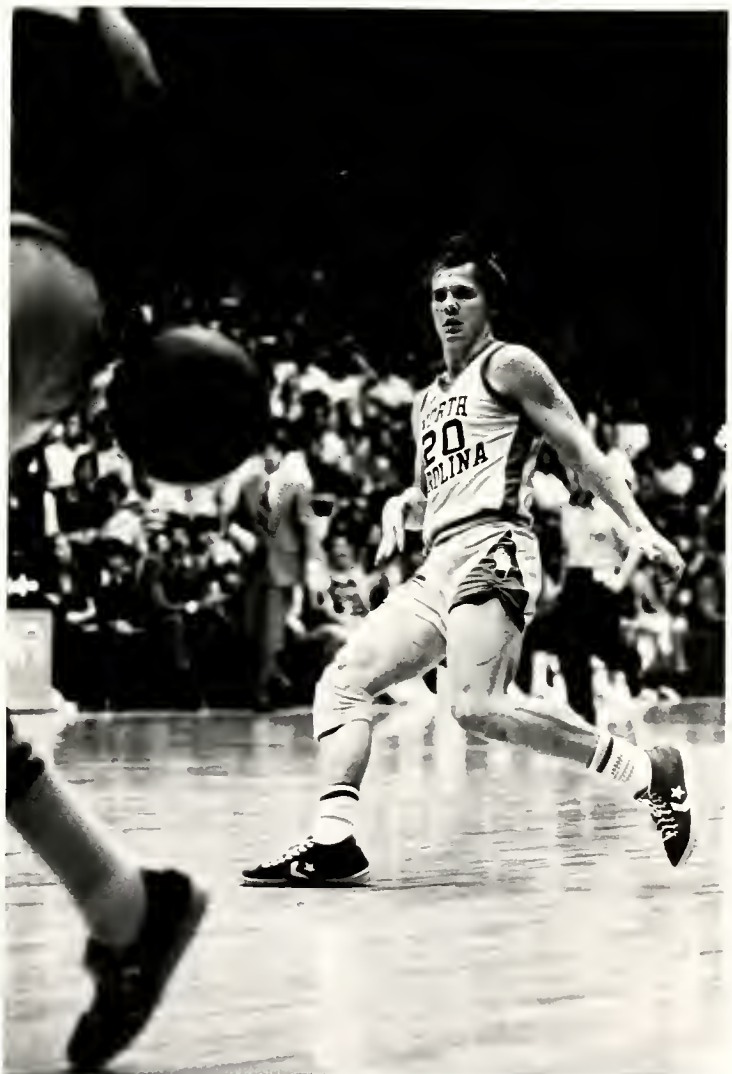

The Heels opened the ACC tournament as if they planned to atone for the inconsistent season. A 13-point victory over Wake Forest provided hope that Carolina was on the right track. The team had struggled all season to put together two great games. Duke, however, had not forgotten the humiliation at Carmichael six days earlier. Mike Gminski and Gene Banks led Duke to a hellacious 75-61 victory over Carolina in the semifinals. The Heels were forced to depend upon an at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament, in Carolina's sixth straight invitation to compete for the national championship.

The tournament slate pitted Carolina against Texas A&M in Denton, Texas, on 9 March. In their tenth appearance in that NCAA field in 14 years, the Heels faced a team they had never played before. Carolina was 10-0 for the season against non-ACC teams, and Mike O'Koren led a thrilling come back as the Heels tied the Red Raiders late in the game. Jimmy Black missed a 21 foot shot at the buzzer. Two overtimes later, Carolina lost by 17. The season ended.

"If anything, we tried too hard," Coach Smith explained after the game. If anything, the fans expected too much. But then, in Chapel Hill, it is always reasonable to expect.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT

J.B. Kelly, president

Bob Saunders, president-elect

Student Body President J.B. Kelly, this sneaker of a different color, humming his own tunes, has raised student government to its position as a vocal and respected mediator and activator, in touch with students and establishing contact with administrators. He described his job simply as that of the students' advocate, with goals of improving student input on campus issues and improving student life by representing their concerns.

An initial improvement of communication was Action Line — an airing of student gripes, aiming at positive results.

Students' interest was faithfully served as Kelly and his staff voiced strong opposition to increases in students' expenses, gaining a 25% relief from a $20 per semester increase for health services.

Multiplying the working ears and hands of the Suite C bureaucracy, J.B. and his expanded cabinet were able to respond more effectively to a wider range of campus activities and issues:

The uncertain heaved a collective sigh of relief as an extended drop/add period afforded them another two weeks of hopeful indecision.

Sardined students received increased rent rebates as canning benefits for living tripled in dorm rooms. Chapel Hill Town Council housing proposals were squelched in an attempt to maintain student habitation of its shaded streets.

Credit vs. load odds-makers had a better opportunity for preparation and anxiety by previewing exam schedules before making the commitment of preregistration.

Perspectives of the Thornton Report, the proposed curriculum revision, were given a thorough airing, and the increased student input was guaranteed to be heard.

Kelly broadcast common opinions on a larger scale as he organized a meeting between student body presidents and officials of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, to discuss desegregation disputes.

And the quality of Tar Heel student life?

It must be admitted that he gave the group some class when he passed out kazooos as a satisfying and unique alternative to Duke's "bleacher banshee-ism."

HOUSES

Greeks

Growing interest in the Greek way of life has been accompanied by increasing concern over the racism and sexism evidenced in its operation. It is debatable whether the Greek system is fostering a regression into the ways of the Old South, or is simply "reflecting the times." Calling to mind the undenied racial discrimination within its rush procedures, the withdrawal of University recognition of one fraternity resulting from its crude treatment of women guests, and the recent reinstatement of hazing, however, one is forced to wonder just what is beneath the neatly starched surface.

These two pages have been sponsored by the Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils.

The Campus Chest, sponsored by the brothers of Alpha Phi Omega, raised $3,500 during 1979-80. Fund raising events of the fall semester centered around the Christmas Stocking Raffle, which was held in conjunction with APO's Christmas tree lighting on December 3. The spring Campus Chest drive began with thousands of balloons for the ZBT Mile of Pennies, and continued with the annual auction featuring Woody Durham and Ron Stutts of WCHL at the podium. The Campus Chest Carnival brought everyone out on April 17, for 50 kegs of beer and an afternoon of philanthropy.

The $3,500 raised was distributed within the community. Campus leaders, faculty, and community representatives chose NEEDS, Campus Y, North Town, Janus House, Interfaith Council, Women's Health Counseling Center, Golden Age Happy Circle, Rape Crisis Center, Victory Village Day Care Center, Community School for People Under Six, International Student's Emergency Fund, Chapel Hill Library, Tree House, and Golden Fleece Scholarship to receive assistance.

"... It is my ardent desire to perpetuate as far as possible the great service which that institution (The University of North Carolina) has rendered to the State of North Carolina, the South and the Nation, and I can think of no better way of extending its influence and increasing its prestige than by attracting youth of the character and ability I have mentioned to become students thereat. In this way I feel I will render a service not only to the students themselves and to the University, but also to the people of the State and Nation through the accomplishments and leadership of these students ..."

The following people cannot go unrecognized for their unique contributions to "Yackness": Thaddeus, foremost, for his gracious development and distribution of the factor; Aaron, for his confidence, but also for his boldness and quick action in the face of sizeable annoyances (pickup trucks notwithstanding); Greg, for his mellow grooviness; Peter, who taught us the art of giving without receiving; Trey, for his sincerity, and for his appreciation of quality; Joe, for his expert advice, coupled with his innate ability to mix his chemicals; Cathy, for keeping us all Carolina Blue; and Elise, for reminding us all what it is like on the other side. Outside the inner staff, but nonetheless influential: Dick and Steve, for their infectious modesty; Chrisann, for her unselfishness; Lisa, for proving once again that, if you want something done right, you should ask a busy person; and the 1979 Campus Governing Council, for honing our forensic and documentary skills in their judicious attempts to establish us as volunteer, full-time fund raisers.

This book begins with the surface, that which immediately activates the senses—it is only through attention to this sensory detail that one may go deeper.

We began with the surface of Carolina, intense, fragmented shades of blue, which at close range seem to have no strong relation or order. At a distance, they seem to blend into the Carolina Blue so familiar to those outside the University. Somewhere between these two points the University breathes. It is the interaction of individuals that gives Carolina its personality; only by taking into consideration both the individuals and the whole can it begin to be understood.

This can be likened to the technique of the Impressionist painter, who, fascinated by properties of light and intent on recreating them, painted with strokes of pure color. When viewed at a specific distance, the two stable states of fragmented color and blended tones achieve a precarious balance. At this point, as the painting topples between the two states, the viewer is involved and the image becomes more than a representation.

It was through this approach that we felt best equipped to portray the intense variety of Carolina life. In expressing what we as individuals have seen, we supplied the canvas, the colors, but we cannot supply the viewer. Y

This edition of the Yackety Yack has been an uphill battle since its beginning—these pages are the result of the stubbornness of each of the central staff members, who refused to quit until his part was done. Also instrumental were the many staff members who knocked on doors, dialed telephones, and stuffed envelopes to raise the $88,000 necessary for publication.

A few people deserve special recognition for their realization of what the Yackety Yack should be: Debbie, whose infinite enthusiasm fueled us all; Elise, whose critical and exacting nature convinced me that I did not have to do everything myself; Cathy, who consistently did more than was required; and those photographers whose dedication carried the staff, and later the book. Other members of the staff who set high standards for themselves, and went out of their way: Amy Sharpe, who had no more time than the rest of us, but managed to create it; Earl Black; Beth Cooley; Danny Kester; Paula Rasor; Penny Mann; Jonathan Watson; Howard Ray; Lee Anne Baer; Jennifer Dykes; Jeff Bowers; and Kim Ray.

The Yackety Yack would sincerely like to thank Dot and Bill Harrison, Don Nelson, Dr. and Mrs. Krogh, Bruce Buckley, Chip Hoover, Howard Henry, Charlie Davis, Dave Bianci, Bill LaPier, Andrew Vanore, and Dottie Bernholtz (unofficially). We would also like to thank, and remember, Jimmy Everhart, who made CGC budget hearings more bearable, the future of the Media Board more promising, and life in general a bit more fun.

The extent of our indebtedness to Hunter Publishing Company, and Rod, should be evident; its professional standards of excellence have realized the quality that we worked so hard to achieve, and his capability and personal interest provided the missing link.

Personal thanks are owed to those of my professors to whom accomplishment meant much more than scheduled due dates; my father, who, after eighteen months of accusing me of compulsive perfectionism, proved that it was hereditary; Jackie, who always listened, and worried, and said a lot through what she didn't say; and Anthony, who brought back the mountains when I thought I didn't have the time.

And finally, Allen Ollove deserves a marked place within Yackdom; his continuing concern and assistance has been invaluable in the development of the photojournalistic potential of this publication.
