EDITOR'S PREFACE

It gives me pleasure to get the catalogue of Historical Maps in the custody of National Archives of India in print. The catalogue contains 7,949 maps, the oldest dating around 1700 is that of the Island of Sri Lanka, while the last ones are those of 1900, though the major bulk relates to the period between 1800-1900. Some maps, mostly post-1860, however, still remain in the custody of Survey of India, and these could not be included here. The catalogue contains maps not only of India and parts of it now forming our neighbouring countries of Pakistan and Bangladesh, but also maps of more than 30 other countries. In these maps are to be found various detailed boundary surveys, large-scale maps of forts, cities, cantonments, harbours, etc.

To quote Col. Phillimore: 'The historical value of these maps is considerable, though uneven. Many of them make definite reference to interesting historical events, persons and dates ... Generally speaking, these maps may be taken as good evidence as to the face of the country at the actual time of survey, specially as to roads, towns and villages, and boundaries also where these are definitely indicated ...' These maps, earlier preserved by the Survey of India, were transferred to National Archives of India in 1954 along with their lists, which were the only reference aids then available to this important and large collection. These lists, having been originally prepared mainly for administrative use, were naturally found very inadequate by the scholars, and these have been therefore, revised and edited. A detailed index prepared by us has also been added at the end. The need for such a catalogue had long been felt and it is hoped that its printing will greatly facilitate reference work in the archival repositories and libraries.

In accomplishing this task, our thanks are due to Col. J.A.F. Dalal, Dy. Surveyor General of India, who agreed to our request to write out the Introduction to the catalogue. I am also grateful to my colleagues in the National Archives, specially Shri P.L. Madan, who took great pains in this work.

INTRODUCTION

I am greatly honoured at having been asked to write the introduction to the Catalogue of Historical Maps which has been produced by the National Archives of India. The production of the Catalogue has entailed considerable labour. It is a work that has required great patience, thoroughness and hard work; and, though it will not be a 'best-seller' in the context of modern phraseology, it will outlive many a 'best-seller' and be consulted by students, scholars, teachers, research workers, professors and others, who want to know what historical maps are available, for many years to come.

How did this catalogue come about? The idea was that of the National Archives of India. But, the idea of sending the material to the National Archives was that of the late Col. R.H. Phillimore, C.I.E., D.S.O. (late Royal Engineers and Survey of India). While giving this suggestion Col. Phillimore gave due credit to the officer who sorted out this collection writing as follows:—

"The existence of this collection of maps in its present form is due to the work of the late Lieut. (or Captain, as he may have been at the time) Fredk. Fraser Hunter, of the Indian Army, who was placed on special duty at the Map Record Office, then located in Wood Street, Calcutta, probably between 1913 and 1915, tho' I am not at all sure as to the date.

He found the collection of old maps in a state of complete chaos, stacked together regardless of geographical areas, or periods, or value. He spent at least six months in their arrangement, and "weeding", for he found a great many that appeared to him to be of no interest whatever, and there were many that were in such shocking condition that he had to destroy them.

I heard something of this from him personally, but the exact period at which he did this work could be ascertained in official files; either of M.R.I.O.; or the S.G.O.; when Fraser Hunter was either as "in charge" or as "on special duty" with the Map Record & Issue Office".

Col. Phillimore was compiling the Historical Records of the Survey of India and collecting data for these records. In the course of collecting data, he collected several maps, some of which were falling apart. The only organisation who would ensure their preservation and make them available to interested persons was the National Archives of India. Col. Phillimore's suggestion of sending them to the National Archives was agreed to by the higher authorities and later Col. Gambhir Singh (then Director, Map Publication and subsequently the first Indian Surveyor General of India) had to implement the decision. Large boxes were constructed and these invaluable, unique maps, carefully packed and invoiced, were sent to the National Archives where they were equally carefully and thoroughly checked against the invoices. My job in those days was to deal with routine correspondence on the subject. I was surprised to see letters signed by myself, more than twenty years ago when I visited the National Archives, and when the Director of the National Archives asked me to write this introduction with the remark that "You are the best person to write the introduction since you know all about these maps."

Let us have a look at some of these maps which are more than eight thousand in number. The oldest is the one listed as 'F.106/12 - Ceylon'. It is a map of the island of Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) and is in French. The scale is 1" = 10 miles (approx.) and the date 1700. It is in an excellent state of preservation.

The most modern map in this collection is dated 1900. There are quite a few with this date.

The bulk of the maps belong to the period 1800 to 1900 which is quite natural, because as development progresses, the interest in maps or acquiring maps grows in the same proportion. For the period 1700-1800, there are only 547 maps, whereas the rest viz. 7376 maps are of the period 1800-1900. Some of the maps are not dated and scholars, students and research workers can have some fun ascertaining the date from a study of the pictures accompanying the map, pencil markings or other indications. But they certainly do belong to this period, 1700-1900.

The custody of maps and their distribution has always presented a problem, particularly in the early period of the development and organisation of the country. The Survey of India who was responsible for the making of maps, often had its senior officers treating them as private property, even to the extent of handing them over to map publishers before the official copies had reached the India House.

As a precaution it was recommended in 1768 that

"as the Hon'ble Company have been at a very heavy expense in procuring different surveys in Bengal, they be from time to time collected and deposited under the Governor's care in a public Plan Chest, and a regular list of them to be registered in the Secretary's Office".²

This system was maintained for some years but found inconvenient as pointed out by the Surveyor General in 1787.

"the inconvenience of many of the Plans, Routes and Journals of Surveyors, being kept in the Secretary's office [and asked that] they may all be collected in the Surveyor General's Office, or at any rate a list of those retained by the Secretary supplied to the Surveyor General."³

The Surveyor General appears to have held charge of all maps which reached him and to have issued no copies except to the Governor, but other maps slipped away, especially through commanding officers who thought that they had first claim on the work of their officers. Closer control was, however, established in due course and the regulations of 1779 threatened the Surveyor General with dismissal if he allowed copies of any map to leave his control without proper authority.

The concern for the custody of maps was the more justified since nearly all were manuscript.

And what a collection of maps this is, not only of India and parts of it now Pakistan and Bangladesh, but maps of more than 30 countries which include Afghanistan, Mongolia, China, Siam, Ethiopia, Egypt, Arabia, Iran (Persia), Iraq, France, Malaya, Indonesia, Australia, to name a few. It is difficult to trace the history of this varied collection of maps from other countries. But it is satisfying to see that they have been preserved by the Survey of India and are now carefully lodged in the National Archives.

And what about the men who surveyed the country and drew the maps? The maps contain the names of the authors who took pride in their work. They do not have only the imprint or name of the Surveyor General as is the practice now.

It will be impossible to mention all the names of the Surveyors and Cartographers whose maps have been mentioned in this catalogue. However, the names of some deserve mention.

Take the case of Lt. J.L.D. Sturt. He was employed as a Surveyor north of Kabul and was killed in action on 8 Jan. 1842 during the retreat from Kabul. Fanny Parks writes of him at Nussoorie on 12 September 1838.

"Capt. Sturt who is an excellent draughtsman promised me a sketch of the Hills ere my departure".

and later:

"How often after the death of Captain Sturt, who distinguished himself so highly, did I regret never having received the promised sketches, and concluded they were lost during the disastrous retreat from Kabul."⁴

Subsequently the portfolio was discovered and given to Lady Sale, his mother-in-law, who was the wife of Gen. Sir Robert Sale.

Another stalwart was Colebrooke who was Surveyor General of Bengal from 1794 to 1808. His sketch of the road from Chittra to Jalde which is mentioned in this catalogue carries a note as follows:-

"by Lt. R.H. Colebrooke when marching with a company in 1786. The distances were measured with a wheel of 7' diameter, the same as he used in his other surveys..... This was done for his own private amusement."5

We are fortunate that the sketch done for his private amusement is preserved.

William Webbe, an Assistant Surveyor who accompanied General Malcolm and sailed with his mission to Persia, surveyed the route to Tehran in 1810. Malcolm reporting about Webbe in 1811 stated that he "is the only person now with me that can aid in constructing (on a large scale) a new Map of Persia for the Supreme Government."6

Webbe was kept on till the beginning of Jan. 1812 to complete this map of Persia.

Another Surveyor on foreign assignment was John McCluer who was sent to survey Pelew islands and New Guinea in 1790. After the survey he submitted his resignation and wished to stay on amongst the Pelew islanders but

"After two years he wearied of the life and asked to be reinstated in the service, but was lost at sea on his journey towards India."7

Among the Indians, whose maps are listed in this catalogue, there is Abdul Subhan, the explorer who, starting from Kashgar in 1874 passed through Tashkurghan and reached Punjab in Wakhan, from where he followed the Oxus River. There are a few other Indians too whose maps are mentioned in the catalogue but their number is small as surveying was carried out in those days by mostly British Officers.

We also have map drawn by Thomas Wood who left in his will to his son James, the house and lands purchased and situated in Camac Street in Chowringhee and to his son Robert, the adjoining estate. From these estates, the present Wood Street derives its name making it a most appropriate situation for the Headquarters Office of the Survey of India, where the Surveyor General's Office remained till 1940 and where there still is the office of the Director, Eastern Circle of the Survey of India.

No account would be complete without a word about Rennell, many of whose maps find a place in this catalogue. He was Surveyor General of Bengal, appointed in Jan.

No account would be complete without a word about Rennell, many of whose maps find a place in this catalogue. He was the first Surveyor General of Bengal appointed in Jan. 1767 by Lord Clive which appointment he held till April 1777, having resigned on account of ill health. Nevertheless, he died at the ripe age of 88 full of honours and is now referred to as the 'Father of Indian Surveys' in honour of his contributions to that subject.
