TO COLLECTORS.

In Coin sales buyers very frequently receive from two to twenty orders for the same lot, each from a different collector. In such cases the buyer, (if he succeeds in purchasing the lot), gives it to the collector who has sent him the highest bid, even if bought for a sum less than the lowest bid, but the advanced price is openly announced in the auction room and accrues to the owner of the collection.

If A. offers $5, B. $10, and C. $15 for a certain lot, (one buyer receiving all the orders), and the lot is sold for $4.50, the buyer directs it to be knocked down to C. at $10.10, a sum which eliminates A. and B. from the contest, and the lot is consequently sold at the price which C. would have paid for it if the bid had been in his own hands or in those of some other buyer. This explanation is made in order to explain what is sometimes apparently unfair bidding on the part of those executing orders, and thus to relieve them from the imputation of double-dealing. In no case can the buyer be personally benefitted by such advancing of prices.
