THE SLAVE-SHIP.

BY THOMAS PRINGLE.

There was no sound upon the deep,
For many a day had heled there.

Reckoned on that Atlantic plain;
A Spanish ship had been;
She stopped at once upon the main,

And the watch-dog dreary days, in vain,
For the storm-bird's fearful cry.

But the storm came not, and still the ray
Of the sun shone bright and clear;
Till the crew saw and the sail,

And the dim eyes wept, half tears half blood,
But still they stood upright.

And there they stood, the quick and dead,
Propped by that dangerous wall—
And the dying mother bent her head

On her child,—but she could not fall—
In one dread night the life had fled.

The morning came, and the sleepless crew
Threw the hatchways open wide;
Then the sickening fumes of death up-rose,

And spread upon every side;
And there they lay, the young and fair,
Full twenty souls had died.

They died, the pale and the slave—
They died with the selfsame pain—
They were equal then, for no cry could be heard,

And there they lay, the young and fair,
Full twenty souls had died.

They died, the pale and the slave—
They died with the selfsame pain—
They were equal then, for no cry could be heard,

THE DUEL.

BY THE EDITOR OF THE DUEL AND JOURNAL.

The Rev. Mr. M. was a veteran itinerant preacher of the West. He was a man of his itinerant life. Among them, was the following,

About four miles from N. is an extensive grove, well known as the scene of several fatal tragedies. As I passed one morning, on my way

At the opposite extremity, stood the principals, each with a sword drawn, and their eyes fixed

I advanced immediately to the seconds, and declared to them, for no cry could be heard,

Under any circumstances, in any place, gentlemen are equal then, for no cry could be heard,

I pressed immediately to the oldest of them. His countenance was pale, and his eyes were fixed

I referred to the youth and his friend, the youngest of the principals. He replied, with

They seemed to be in doubt, and I could get

"My brother! my dear brother! it is he—O, can it be he?" The attendants bore away. I shall never forget the scene. The young man, who
