

Picturesque
New Orleans

The text is enclosed in a decorative, hand-drawn white border with a wavy, irregular edge. There are stylized, calligraphic flourishes in the corners of the frame: a flourish in the top right corner and another in the bottom left corner, both resembling elegant, flowing lines.

UCSB LIBRARY

X-44242

PICTURESQUE

... NEW ORLEANS ...

... Photo-Gravures ...

COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY
A. WITTEMAN,
PUBLISHER OF AMERICAN VIEWS,
250 ADAMS STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

F. F. HANBELL & BRO., LTD.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

IN order to see and appreciate New Orleans, it is necessary to learn something of her history, much the same as the chief charm of some of Old World cities depends upon their past associations. Three great political changes left their mark upon New Orleans, and each relegated the preceding era into the domain of history.

French New Orleans, as founded by the Sicur de Bienville in 1718, was a totally different place from Spanish New Orleans, as moulded by the iron hand of Don Alexander O'Reilly; and American New Orleans, developed after the cession of Louisiana to the United States in 1803, differs altogether from either. Again the war of the Union threw the wealthy gay ante-bellum New Orleans—the "petit Paris," with its gigantic commerce and aristocratic habits—into the irrevocable past.

The first French colony was founded by Iberville at Biloxi, but Bienville, his successor, selected the present site near the mouth of the Mississippi and left fifty men to clear the grounds and erect the buildings. In 1723 a party of German emigrants, having abandoned the lauds granted to John Law in Arkansas, descended the Mississippi to New Orleans. They hoped to find a passage here back to Europe, but failed in this and settled on what is known as the "German Coast" in St. Charles parish. Small tracts of land were apportioned among them, and for a long time they supplied the city with vegetables. Many of their descendants remain on the lands inherited.

In 1727 came the Jesuits and the Ursulines. The latter's convent is now the Archbishop's palace, near St. Louis Cathedral. The Jesuits, in 1763, underwent the edict of expulsion by the King of France, but a few years after the decree was reversed, the Jesuits returned to Louisiana and have ever since been strongly identified with its religious and educational progress.

France ceded the colony to Spain in 1763, and Don Antonia de Ulca took possession in 1766. The French colonists strongly opposed the cession and rose in arms against the Governor. They gave him three days in which to leave New Orleans, and he embarked for Havana; but, in 1769, the Spanish King sent Don Alexander O'Reilly with considerable military force to take possession of the city. Still the residents remained loyal to their mother country, and there existed continual friction between them and the new Governor.

The cultivation of sugar cane had been introduced by the Jesuits as far back as 1751, but it was not until 1794 that a planter succeeded in making the syrup granulate and so convert it into sugar. The honor of this belongs to Etienne de Bore, whose portrait hangs in the sugar exchange.

The colonial city walls and fortifications enclosed the "vieux carré," or the area between Canal, Rampart, Explanade Streets and the river. The city's growth beyond Canal Street dates within the nineteenth century.

In 1800 the colony had been retroceded by Spain to France. After the purchase by the United States in 1803, Claiborne was appointed Governor of the territory, and in 1812 it entered the Union as a state; in 1814 the British army under Pakenham sailed from Jamaica to attack New Orleans. General Andrew Jackson met the invaders at Chalmette, on January 8, 1815, and inflicted a severe defeat.

The next important event in the history of the city was the secession of Louisiana from the Union in January in 1861, by which, for the fourth time it changed masters. In April, 1862, a federal fleet under Farragut forced the passage of Forts St. Philip and Jackson. The city surrendered and was held by U. S. troops till the close of hostilities. New Orleans suffered severely during the war, her commerce was virtually destroyed and the population impoverished. The revival began only some twenty years ago, and every year now fast advances prosperity.

As far back as 1730 Governor Perier devised a plan for protecting the town by levees, and the first embankments were built. At the present day the levee system has been perfected to a degree that incites the admiration of engineers. The city is also surrounded by large earth walls the height of which along the river front averages 20 to 25 feet.

It is this peculiarity of a city lying on ground lower than the river level that has shaped the cemeteries of New Orleans into objects of the highest interest to strangers. As water collects at a depth of a few feet, the tombs have been built of brick and marble above ground. They extend in solid rows along the avenues of the older cemeteries and consist mostly of two vaults with a crypt below. They are hermetically cemented, and the law forbids the opening of a tomb before a certain time. After a year or two, if a vault is required for another person, the slab is removed, the wooden coffin is broken up and burned and the remains, if there be any, deposited in the crypt. In this manner a long series of burials may take place in a single tomb. Metairie Cemetery is renowned for its beauty of landscape and of sculpture, and should not be missed by any sightseer. Girod is the most characteristic of the old French cemeteries.

A visit to St. Roch's Cemetery, with its exquisite mortuary chapel, belongs to the indispensable of a knowing tourist. One of the Canal Street electric cars bears the legend "To St. Rochs," and brings you near to the entrance of the cemetery on Derbigny Street. What so attracts the gentler sex to the spot is the firmly-grounded belief that a prayer for a husband before the shrine never fails of a favorable answer. Otherwise St. Roch is the patron of health. During the dreadful yellow fever and cholera epidemics of 1866 and 1867 a devout parish priest vowed to St. Roch that if the members of his flock were spared from the scourge he would build a chapel in the saint's honor. Not one of the congregation died, and when the plague ceased, with his own hands, brick by brick, the priest erected the chapel. For this reason it is a favorite shrine with many pilgrims, and thank offerings are to be seen on every hand.

Turning from the pious to the most distinct social feature, the Mardi Gras festivities, we trace the first Carnival parade back to 1827, when a number of young French gentlemen organized a street procession of maskers after the fashion of Paris. A second procession, on a grander scale, took place in 1837. The vicissitudes of crops and commerce brought many lapses and a gradual change from the old Italian carnival of individual masqueraders to the Parisian method of tableaux on floats with grand day and night pageants and bal masqué—the whole fathered by sundry Carnival associations, but working in mystic unison to make Mardi Gras attractive to the great concourse of visitors from all parts of the Union.

New Orleans, with her Southern homes, her gorgeous blooms, her rose gardens, her French-Spanish quarter, her picturesque localities, her traditions and superstitions, her remnants of Creole grandeur, her generous life and hospitality, is not for the tourist who does a city between the rising and setting of the sun. She does not readily reveal herself to an importunate one, but rather to the idler and patient observer. It is he who will see, beside her gayeties, how sweet and sunny and genial she can be.

General Jackson Statue.
ST. LOUIS CATHEDRAL AND PONTALBA BUILDINGS.

Hennen Building, Carondelet and Common Sts

*New
St. Charles Hotel.*

The Liverpool & London and Globe Insurance Co.

CITY HALL.

NEW COURT HOUSE AND JAIL

ST. CHARLES ST. AND FORMER ST. CHARLES HOTEL.

Henry Clay Statue.

CANAL STREET

FRENCH OPERA HOUSE.

THE PARISH PRISON Now Demolished.

OLD COURT BUILDING

LOADING COTTON

*Tree Monument
Dix Place*

Esplanade

Margaret Monument

Esplanade

Howard Memorial Library

Jackson Avenue

HARMONY CLUB—ST. CHARLES AVENUE.

GAYARRE PLACE

LOUISIANA JOCKEY CLUB.

U. S. MINT—ESPLANADE

VIEW OF RIVER IRON

A CREOLE NURSE.

A NEGRO WOOD SAWYER

JOHN'S LEGACY.
70 DUMAINE STREET.

OLD BANK, TOULOUSE STREET—Now D. m.

OLD HOUSE CHARLES AND URSULINE STREETS

FRANKLIN STATUE—LAFAYETTE SQUARE

City Hall

ST. CHARLES AVENUE.

A FLOAT.

Canal Street.

Robert R. Taylor Hall

MARDI GRAS.

TULANE UNIVERSITY SEEN FROM CITY PARK

THE CANAL, NEAR WEST END

THE BASIN WEST END

TULANE UNIVERSITY—MEDICAL COLLEGE—CANAL STREET

Entrance

Melrose Cemetery.

Live Oak.

CHRIST CHURCH—ST. CHARLES AVENUE.

CONFEDERATE MONUMENT—Army of Northern Virginia

Louisiana Bayou

Live Oaks - Lake Pontchartrain

A River Steamboat

SUNSET IN THE MARSH.

MISSISSIPPI JETTIES

Casino.

The Basin.

Restaurant.

The Old Gate.

The Naad.

Lovers Walk.

CONFEDERATE MONUMENT—GREENWOOD CEMETERY

*Trigge (Pineapple)
banding*

*Fruit Steamer
Unloading
Borabua*

CUTTING SUGAR CANE.

LOADING CANE CARTS

GREAT LIVE OAK—AUDUBON PARK

MARTHA WASHINGTON OAK, AUDUBON PARK

UCSB LIBRARY

X-44242

JK SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

D 000 294 796 8

