

Hubble Space Telescope has been used to measure distance to two neighboring clusters of galaxies, the Fornax and Virgo cluster, which are in nearly opposite directions on the sky. The clusters are named after the constellation regions of the sky they are found in.